After an apprenticeship in the late 1910s making two-reel comedies that starred his friend Fatty Arbuckle, and after service in France in 1918, Keaton starred in a series of his own two-reel comedies beginning in 1920. Those films displayed Keaton’s comic and visual inventiveness: the delight in bizarrely complicated mechanical gadgets (The Scarecrow; The Haunted House); the realization that the cinema itself was an intriguing mechanical toy (his use of split-screen in The Playhouse of 1921 allows Buster to play all members of the orchestra and audience, as well as all nine members of a minstrel troupe); the games with framing and composition (The Balloonatic is a comic disquisition on the surprises one can generate merely by entering, falling out of, or suppressing information in the frame); the breathtaking physical stunts and chases (Daydreams, Cops); and the underlying falsity when his exuberant efforts produce ultimately disastrous results (Cops, One Week, The Boat).

In 1923 Keaton’s producer, Joseph M. Schenck, decided to launch the comic star in a series of feature films, to replace a previously slatted series of features starring Schenck’s other comic star, the now scandal-ruined Fatty Arbuckle. Between 1923 and 1929, Keaton made an even dozen feature films on a regular schedule of two a year—always leaving Keaton free in the early autumn to travel east for the World Series. This regular pattern of Keaton’s work—as opposed to Chaplin’s lengthy laboring and devoted concentration on each individual project—reveals the way Keaton saw his film work. He was not making artistic masterpieces but knocking out everyday entertainment, like the vaudevillian playing the two-a-day. Despite the casualness of this regular routine (which would be echoed decades later by Woody Allen’s regular one-a-year rhythm), many of those dozen silent features are comic masterpieces, ranking alongside the best of Chaplin’s comic work.

Most of those films begin with a parodic premise—the desire to parody some serious and familiar form of stage or screen melodrama, such as the Civil War romance (The General), the mountain feud (Our Hospitality), the Sherlock Holmes detective story (Sherlock Jr.), the Mississippi riverboat race (Steamboat Bill Jr.), or the western (Go West). Two of the features were built around athletics (boxing in Battling Butler and every sport but football in College), and one was built around the business of motion picture photography itself (The Cameraman). The narrative lines of these films were thin but fast-paced, usually based on the Keaton character’s desire to satisfy the demands of his highly conventional lady love. The film’s narrative

Cott, Jeremy, “The Limits of Silent Film Comedy,” in Literature/ Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), Spring 1975.
“Buster Keaton,” in Film Dope (London), March 1984.
Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1985.

* * *
primarily served to allow the film to build to its extended comic sequences, which, in Keaton’s films, continue to amaze with their cinematic ingenuity, their dazzling physical stunts, and their hypnotic visual rhythms. Those sequences usually forced the tiny but dexterous Keaton into combat with immense and elemental antagonists—a rockslide in Seven Chances; an entire ocean liner in The Navigator; a herd of cattle in Go West; a waterfall in Our Hospitality. Perhaps the cleverest and most astonishing of his elemental foes appears in Sherlock Jr. when the enemy becomes cinema itself—or, rather, cinematic time and space. Buster, a dreaming movie projectionist, becomes imprisoned in the film he is projecting, subject to its inexplicable laws of montage, of shifting spaces and times, as opposed to the expected continuity of space and time in the natural universe. Perhaps Keaton’s most satisfyingly whole film is The General, virtually an extended chase from start to finish, as the Keaton character chases north, in pursuit of his stolen locomotive, then races back south with it, fleeing his Union pursuers. The film combines comic narrative, the rhythms of the chase, Keaton’s physical stunts, and his fondness for mechanical gadgets into what may be the greatest comic epic of the cinema.

Unlike Chaplin, Keaton’s stardom and comic brilliance did not survive Hollywood’s conversion to synchronized sound. It was not simply a case of a voice’s failing to suit the demands of both physical comedy and the microphone. Keaton’s personal life was in shreds, after a bitter divorce from Natalie Talmadge. Always a heavy social drinker, Keaton’s drinking increased in direct proportion to his personal troubles. Neither a comic spirit nor an acrobatic physical instrument could survive so much alcoholic abuse. In addition, Keaton’s contract had been sold by Joseph Schenck to MGM (conveniently controlled by his brother, Nicholas Schenck, head of Loew’s Inc., MGM’s parent company). Between 1929 and 1933, MGM assigned Keaton to a series of dreary situation comedies—in many of them as Jimmy Durante’s co-star and straight man. For the next two decades, Keaton survived on cheap two-reel sound comedies and occasional public appearances, until his major role in Chaplin’s Limelight led to a comeback. Keaton remarried, went on the wagon, and made stage, television, and film appearances in featured roles. In 1965 he played the embodiment of existential consciousness in Samuel Beckett’s only film work, Film, followed shortly by his final screen appearance in Richard Lester’s A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum.

—Gerald Mast

KIAROSTAMI, Abbas

Films as Director:

1970 Nan va Koutcheh (Bread and Alley) (+ sc)
1972 Zang-e Tafrih (Breaktime) (+ sc)
1973 Tadjrebeh (The Experience) (+ sc, ed)
1974 Mossafer (The Traveller) (+sc)
1975 Man ham Mitoumam (So I Can) (+sc, ed)
1975 Dow Ruhehal Baraye yek Massaleh (Two Solutions for One Problem) (+ sc, ed)
1976 Randha (The Colours) (+ sc, ed)
1976 Lebasi Baraye Arossi (A Suit for Wedding) (+ sc, ed)
1977 Gozaresh (The Report); Bozorgdashti-e mo’alem (Tribute to the Teachers) (+sc); Az Oghat-e Faraghat-e Khod Chegouneh Estefadeh Konim? (How to Make Use of Our Leisure Time?) (+sc)
1978 Rah Hal-e Yek (Solution No. 1) (+ sc, ed)
1979 Ghazieh-e Shekl-e Aval, Ghazieh-e Shekl-e Dou Wom (First Case, Second Case) (+ sc, ed)
1980 Behdashti-e Dandan (Dental Hygiene) (+sc, ed)
1981 Be Tartib ya Bedoun-e Tartib (Orderly or Unorderly/Regularly or Irregularly) (+sc, ed)
1982 Hanssarayan (The Chorus) (+sc, ed)
1983 Hanshahri (Fellow Citizen) (+sc, ed); Dandan Dard (Toothache) (+ sc)
1984 Avaliha (First Graders) (+sc, ed)
1987 Khane-ye Doust Kodjast? (Where Is the Friend’s House?) (+ sc, ed)
1989 Mashgh-e Shab (Homework) (+ sc, ed, ro as himself)
1991 Zendegi Edame Darad (And Life Goes On... Life, and Nothing More) (+ sc, ed)
1994 Zire darakhshan zeyton (Through the Olive Trees/Under the Olive Trees) (+ sc, ed)
1995 "Repérages," segment of À propos de Nice, la suite; segment of Lumière et compagnie (Lumière and Company)
1997 Ta’am e guilass (Taste of Cherry) (+ sc, ed)
1999 Bad ma ra khabad bord (The Wind Will Carry Us) (+ sc, ed)

Other Films:

1993 Kelid (The Key) (sc); Sarari be Diare Mosaser (Journey to the Land of the Traveller) (ro)
1994 Safar (The Journey) (sc)
1995 Badkonake sefid (The White Balloon) (sc)
1999 Volte sempre, Abbas! (sc); Beed-o Baad (sc)
Publications:

By KIAROSTAMI; articles—

Interview with Farah Nayeri, in Sight and Sound (London), December 1993.

‘‘Kiarostami Close Up,’’ interview with Phillip Lopate, in Film Comment (New York), July-August 1996.

On KIAROSTAMI; articles—

Murphy, Kathleen, “Festivals: Toronto,” in Film Comment (New York), November-December 1999.

* * *

At the beginning of the 1990s, even the most ardent filmgoer could be forgiven for never having heard of Abbas Kiarostami. The Iranian filmmaker, fifty years old in 1990, had worked for two decades for his country’s Institute for the Intellectual Development of Children and Young Adults. Most of his films had been about children, and thanks to some European film festivals in 1989, one of them—Where Is the Friend’s House?—had finally attracted attention outside Iran.

By the end of the 1990s, Abbas Kiarostami had been widely and passionately acclaimed as the director of the decade. Polls in Film Comment magazine and the Village Voice argued over whether Through the Olive Trees or Taste of Cherry—or perhaps the late-arriving The Wind Will Carry Us—were the best film of the preceding ten years. Jean-Luc Godard, no stranger to quotable epigrams, declared that “Cinema starts with Griffith and ends with Kiarostami.” Even if one’s enthusiasm did not go that far, Kiarostami unarguably (along with his protégés, and his younger, more explosive compatriot Mohsen Makhmalbaf) pulled the cinema of Iran onto the world stage, both inducing and capitalizing on the gradual thaw in Islamic custom. The conversations, the parched, dun-colored locale, the constant movement, become hypnotizing.

The 1997 Cannes Film Festival agreed, naming Taste of Cherry the co-recipient of its top award, an official benediction for the Iranian unvarnished plots and homely settings. “I always think,” Kiarostami told Sight and Sound magazine, “that directors who look for stories in books are like those Iranians who live next to a stream full of fish, but eat out of tins.”

For all the sincerity of his philosophy, Kiarostami is also a formally challenging filmmaker—and much of his “naturalism” is carefully planned. Most of his latter-day movies include glimpses of the filmmaking crew, as though to remind the audience of the artifice of what they are watching; Taste of Cherry actually ends with a video sequence of the camera crew on location, dispelling the force of the mesmerizing story we have been watching. Film, Kiarostami has declared, is not “the manipulation of the audience’s emotions. It’s not educational, it’s not entertainment. The best form of cinema is one which poses questions for the audience. So if we distance the audience from the film and even film from itself, it helps to understand the subject matter better.”

The success of Where Is the Friend’s House? led Kiarostami out of his period of making children’s films and into more daring territory. At the moment of his international breakthrough, real life handed him the material for five years’ worth of remarkable pictures. First, his attention was captured by a news story involving a Teheran man who was arrested for hoodwinking a well-to-do family by pretending to be filmmaker Mohsen Makhmalbaf. In Close-Up (1989), Kiarostami re-constructs the events of the story, but his method is unconventional: the swindler plays himself, and so do the family members (whose enthusiasm for movies created their gullibility in the first place). Makhmalbaf and Kiarostami also play themselves onscreen—according to critic Godfrey Cheshire, setting aside their personal animosity for the purpose of the film. The fascinating result was something beyond fiction or realism—call it a third dimension somewhere between the two—and a signpost for the director’s subsequent films.

Reality intruded again with the earthquake in northern Iran in 1991. The rural area in which Kiarostami had shot Where Is the Friend’s House? was devastated; And Life Goes On... (1992) is the story of a film director who searches the region for the young stars of that earlier film. The boys are not found, although the real-life kids had indeed survived the quake. What Kiarostami reveals instead is the indomitable adaptability of the human spirit, shaken but not demolished. Two years later, Kiarostami returned to the region to round out this unplanned trilogy, with Through the Olive Trees (1994). It recounts a small but charming romance, set against the filming of And Life Goes On... With both films, Kiarostami bobbles ideas like a master juggler: in one hand a playful blurring of the fuzzy line between movies and life, in the other hand a deep feeling for the triumph of staying human despite unthinkable hardship.

All three films in the trilogy featured a Kiarostami trademark, the obsession with journeys, and with the image of people or cars traversing long roads. The repetition of this image reached its culmination in Taste of Cherry (1997), much of which takes place across an oft-traveled stretch of road outside Teheran. A suicidal man picks up a series of strangers and drives around with them, hoping to convince someone to return to a certain spot the following morning and cover his dead body with dirt (a prompt burial being part of Islamic custom). The conversations, the parched, dun-colored locale, the constant movement, become hypnotizing.

518
film industry (although the film was banned from public screening in Iran, thanks to fundamentalist criticism of the taboo subject of suicide). Indeed, the rapturous response to Kiarostami among critics and festival programmers has been of a kind not seen much since the heyday of the French New Wave, but without the corresponding enthusiasm of the public at large (or at least the segment of the public that can be expected to frequent the arthouse). In the light of the unanimity of critical acclaim, it was intriguing to read Film Comment’s Kathleen Murphy sound a note of caution, if not exasperation, with the sometimes “trying” repetitions and metaphysical imagery of Kiarostami’s 1999 release The Wind Will Carry Us, “raising questions,’’ she suggests, “of directorial self-indulgence.’’

Despite the demur, Kiarostami’s accomplishment over the course of the preceding dozen years was formidable. Like Hou Hsiao-hsien, his Taiwanese counterpart, he had maintained an incredibly prolific string of artistic successes, and had stretched the definition of what his Polish Ministry of Foreign Affairs, 1979; Special Jury Prize, Cannes Film Festival, and Academy Award for Best Foreign Feature Film, for A Short Film about Killing, 1988.

Died: Of a heart attack, 13 March 1996.

Films as Director:

(Documentary shorts, unless otherwise stated)

1967 Urząd (The Job)
1968 Zdjecie (The Photograph) (for TV)
1969 Z miasta Łodzi (From the City of Lodz)
1970 Byłem żołnierzem (I Was a Soldier); Przed rajdem (Before the Rally); Fabryka (Factory)
1972 Gospodarze (Workers) (co-d); Miedzy Wrocławiem a Zielona Góra (Between Wroclaw and Zielona Gora); Podstawy BHP w kopalni miedzi (The Degree of Hygiene and Safety in a Copper Mine); Robotnicy 71 nic o nas bez nas (Workers 71) (co-d); Refer (Referat)
1973 Murarz (Bricklayer); Dziecko (Child); Pierwsza miłość (First Love) (for TV); Prześwietlenie (X-Ray); Przysięgi podziemne (Pedestrian Subway) (feature for TV)
1975 Zyciorys (Life Story); Personel (Personnel) (feature for TV)
1976 Klaps (Slate); Szpital (Hospital); Spokój (Stillness) (feature for TV); Blizna (The Scar) (feature)
1977 Nie wiem (I Don’t Know); Z punktu widzenia nocnego portiera (Night Porter’s Point of View)
1978 Siedem kobiet w różnym wieku (Seven Women of Various Ages)
1979 Amator (Camera Buff) (feature)
1980 Dworzec (The Station); Gadajace głowy (Talking Heads)
1981 Krótki dzień pracy (A Short Working Day) (feature for TV); Przypadek (Blind Chance) (feature, released 1987)
1984 Bez końca (No End) (feature)
1988 Krótki film o zabi janiu (A Short Film about Killing) (feature); Krótki film o miłości (A Short Film about Love) (feature)
1989 Dekalog (Decalogue) (10 episodes for TV)
1990 City Life (Episode in Netherlands) (feature)
1991 Podwójne życie Weroniki (La Double vie de Véronique; The Double Life of Véronique) (feature) (+ sc)
1993 Trois couleurs Bleu (Three Colours: Blue) (feature) (+ sc); Trois couleurs Blanc (Three Colours: White) (feature) (+ sc); Trois couleurs Rouge (Three Colours: Red) (feature) (+ sc)

Publications

By KIEŚLOWSKI: book—

By KIEŚLOWSKI: articles—

Interview, in Jeune Cinéma (Paris), December 1979.
Interview with H. Samsonowska, in Kino (Warsaw), October 1981.
Interview with S. Magela and C. Gœldenboog, in Filmfaust (Frankfurt), April/May 1983.
Interview with Marszalek, in Kino (Warsaw), August 1987.
"Un cinéma au-delà du pessimisme” (interview), in Revue du Cinéma, no. 443, November 1988.
Interview with B. Fornara, in Cinema Forum, April 1990.
Interview with P. Cargin, in Film, May/June 1990.
Interview with T. Sobolewski, in Kino, June 1990.
Interview with V. Ostria, in Kino, August 1992.
Interview with Steven Gaydos, in Variety, 8 August 1994.

On KIEŚLOWSKI: articles—

Zaoral, F., “’Krzysztof Kieślowski,'” in Film a Doba (Prague), September 1985.
Kieslowski Section of Positif (Paris), December 1989.
"Special Issue,” Kino (Warsaw), vol. 30, no. 5, May 1996.

* * *

In the late 1970s, when the conflict between the State and the citizens of Poland was imminent, a new trend emerged in cinematography—the"cinema of moral unrest.” All the films in this trend have one common denominator: an unusually cutting critical view of the state of the society and its morals, human relationships in the work process, public and private life. It is more than logical that Krzysztof Kieslowski would have belonged to this trend; he had long been concerned with the moral problems of the society, and paid attention to them throughout his film career with increasing urgency. The direction of his artistic course was anticipated by his graduation film From the City of Lodz, in which he sketched the problems of workers, and by his participation in the stormy protest meeting of young filmmakers in Cracow in 1971, who warned against a total devaluation of basic human values.

A broad scale of problems can be found in the documentary films Kieślowski made between shooting feature films: disintegration of the economic structure, criticism of executive work, and the relationship of institutions and individuals. These documentaries are not a mere recording of events, phenomena, or a description of people and their behaviour, but always attempt instead to look underneath the surface. The director often used non-traditional means. Sometimes the word dominates the image, or he may have borrowed the stylistics of slapstick or satire, or he interfered with the reality in front of the camera by a staged element. Kieślowski did not emphasize the aesthetic function of the image, but stressed its real and literal meaning.

His feature films have a similar orientation: he concentrated on the explication of an individual’s situation in the society and politics, on the outer and inner bonds of man with the objectively existing world, and on the search for connections between the individual and the general. He often placed his heroes in situations where they have to make a vital decision (in his TV films The Staff and The Calm, and in his films for theatrical release).

The Amateur is the synthesis of his attitudes and artistic search of the 1970s, and is also one of the most significant films of the "cinema of moral unrest.” In the story of a man who buys a camera to follow the growth of a newborn daughter, and who gradually, thanks to this film instrument, begins to realize his responsibility for what is happening around him, the director placed a profound importance on the role of the artist in the world, on his morality, courage, and active approach to life. Here Kieślowski surpassed, to a large extent, the formulaic restrictions of the “cinema of moral unrest” resulting from the outside-the-art essence of this trend. These restrictions are also eliminated in his following films. In The Accident (made in 1981, released in 1987) he extended his exploration of man and his actions by introducing the category of the accidental. The hero experiences the same events (Poland in 1981) three times, and therefore is given three destinies, but each time on a different side. Two destinies are more or less given by accident, the third one he chooses himself, but even this choice is affected by the accidental element. The transcendental factor appears in No End (a dead man intervenes in worldly events), but the film is not an exploration of supernatural phenomena so much as a ruthless revelation of the tragic period after the declaration of the state of emergency in December 1981, and a demonstration of the professed truth that private life cannot be lived in isolation from the public sphere.

In the 1980s Kieślowski’s work culminated in a TV cycle and two films with subjects from the Ten Commandments. A Short Film about Killing is based on the fifth commandment (Thou shalt not kill), while A Short Film about Love comes from the sixth. Both films and the TV cycle are anchored in the present and express the necessity of a moral revival, both of the individual and the society, in a world which may be determined by accidentality, but which does not deliver us from the right and duty of moral choice.

After the fall of communism when, as a consequence of changes in economic conditions, the production of films experienced a sharp fall in all of Eastern Europe, some Polish directors sought a solution to the ensuing crisis in work for foreign studios and in co-productions. This was the road taken by Kieślowski, and so all his films made in the 1990s were created with the participation of French producers: The Double Life of Véronique and the trilogy Three Colours: Blue, Three Colours: White, and Three Colours: Red—loosely linked to the noble motto of the French Revolution: liberty, equality, fraternity. In these films Kieślowski followed up on his films from the 1980s, in which his heroes struggle with the duality of reason and feelings, haphazardness and necessity, reality and mystery. Even in these films made abroad we can also trace certain irony and sarcasm which first appeared in his films made in the 1970s in Poland.

—Blažena Urgošková

KING Hu

Nationality: Chinese. Born: Hu Chin-Ch’üan (as actor known as Chin Ch’üan; name in pinyin: Hun Jinguan) in Peking, 29 April 1931.

Films as Director:

1962 Yu T’ang Ch’un (The Story of Sue San) (credited as exec d, disowned)
1963 Liang Shan-po yü Chu Ying T’ai (Eternal Love) (co-d)
1964 Ta Ti Erh Nü (Children of the Good Earth; Sons and Daughters of the Good Earth)
1965 Ta Tsai Hsia (Come Drink with Me) (+ co-sc, lyrics)
1967 Lung Men Fêng Yun (Dragon Gate) (Ou-yang Chun) (sc)
1970 Hsia Nü (A Touch of Zen) (+ sc, ed); ‘‘Nu’’ (‘‘Anger’’) episode of Hsi Nu Ai Le (Four Moods) (+ sc)
1973 Ying Ch’un Ko Chih Fêng Po (The Fate of Lee Han; Trouble at Spring Inn) (+ co-sc, pr)
1974 Chung Lieh T’u (The Valiant Ones; Portrait of the Patriotic Heroes) (+ sc, pr)
1978 Shan Chung Ch’uan Chi (Legend of the Mountain) (+ pr)
1979 K’ung Shan Ling Yu (Raining in the Mountain) (+ sc, pr)
1981 Chang Shên Ta Shih (The Juvenizer) (+ pr)
1983 Episode of Ta Lun Hui (The Wheel of Life)
1989 Hsiao Ao Chiang Hu (The Swordsman) (co-d)
1992 Hua Pi Zhi Yinyang Fawang (Painted Skin)

Other Films:

1958 Hung Hu-Tzu (Red Beard) (P’an Lei) (sc)
1961 Hua T’ien-T’sao (Bridenapping) (Yen Chun) (sc)
1976 Lung Men Fêng Yun (Dragon Gate) (Ou-yang Chun) (sc)

Publications

By KING HU: articles—

Interview with Michel Ciment, in Positif (Paris), May 1975.
Interview with Jean Marc de Vos and others, in Film en Televisie + Video (Brussels), no. 272, January 1980.

On KING HU: articles—

Rayns, Tony, “‘Director: King Hu,’” in Sight and Sound (London), Winter 1975/76.
Tessier, Max, “‘King Hu dans les montagnes,’” in Ecran (Paris), July 1978.
Vos, J. M., and others, “‘King Hu,’” in Film en Televisie (Brussels), January 1980.
Kennedy, Harlan, “‘Beyond Kung-Fu: Seven Hong-Kong Firecrackers,’” in Film Comment (New York), September/October 1983.
“‘King Hu Section’” of Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), September 1984.
Niogret, Hubert, and others, “‘Adieu ma concubine de Chen Kaige,’” in Positif (Paris), November 1993.
Douin, Jean-Luc, “‘Hong Kong Stars,’” in Télérama (Paris), 3 November 1993.
Niogret, Hubert, “‘King Hu et Li Han-hsiang,’” an obituary, in Positif (Paris), April 1997.
Obituary, in Sight and Sound (London), March 1998.

*    *    *
King Hu was not only a master in the historical martial art film genre (known in Chinese as Wu Hsia P’ien or Wu Xia Pian), but a revolutionary of the form as well. One of the most popular genres in Chinese film history, it reached its peak in the 1970s in Hong Kong. In fact, the very first film made in China was an historical martial art film documenting Peking Opera performer T’an Hsin P’ei, who performed some fighting scenes from the opera婷春上 in 1906.

Influenced by Peking opera, King Hu always presented his main characters clearly and vividly in their first appearances on screen and lets the characters’ interactions occur within a limited space. The presentations provide the audience with an early introduction of the main characters’ backgrounds, personalities, motives, and duties, giving a clear indication of where everyone fits in the moral landscape. This restricted realm creates denser and more intensive emotional developments, paving the way to a higher dramatic climax. Such structuring can be observed at the temple in Raining in the Mountain, and the inn in both The Dragon Gate Inn and The Fate of Lee Khan. Most filmmakers in this genre tend to focus on fighting scenes and on displaying various styles of kung fu. In many cases the plots are constructed simply to support the fighting, which itself is given over to such elaborate special effects as to resemble more closely a supernatural force than a manifestation of human struggle. History itself loses its meaning: it simply provides an excuse for making another “historical” martial art film. This destruction of referentiality becomes all the balder when a character from the Han dynasty wears a hat from the Ming dynasty to go with his Han dynasty robe, goes into an inn that is a mess of Tang architecture and Ching furniture. As a result, the historical martial art film genre’s main function is to create an imaginary and mystical world for the audience to escape to. But King Hu’s work stood out with its professionalism in art direction and the director’s personal philosophy in historical backgrounding.

The Ming dynasty (1386–1644 A.D.) was King Hu’s favorite historical period, reflecting as it does two major issues of the contemporary Chinese political situation. First of all, the legitimacy of the Chinese government—should it belong to the Nationalist Party, founded by Dr. Sun Yat-sen, or the Chinese Communist Party, which enjoys the support of the majority of Chinese? King Hu never gave an answer, but he surely did not hesitate to take a Han-centric viewpoint of the Ming dynasty. In Chinese history, it is commonly perceived as an act of legitimization of authority when Chu Yuan-chang, the founding emperor of the Ming dynasty, started a revolution to overthrow the Yuan dynasty, founded by Mongolian “invaders.” Chu is a Han, the majority ethnic group of China. In The Fate of Lee Khan, the revolutionaries led by Chu are brave, intelligent, united, self-sacrificing, and virtuous, while the Mongolians are cowardly, stupid, selfish, and morally corrupted. Although it seems to be an exception that the Mongolian lord and princess are equally brave, smart, and know the secrets of kung fu, they are cruel to their people. They even attempt to kill a traitor to Chu who offers them secret information about Chu’s military power. In the end, the Mongolian lord, princess, and the traitor are killed by the revolutionaries.

Another parallel to contemporary times is the Ming dynasty’s power struggles. The rivalries among corrupt officers, ministers, and eunuchs not only deceived the emperors, but ruined the welfare of the Chinese people. Facing a chaotic era like this, King Hu’s solution seems to be found in A Touch of Zen, which won the Grand Prix de Technique Superieur at Cannes in 1975, marking a milestone in his career. King Hu expresses the limitations of scholarly and chivalric life in the first half of A Touch of Zen, while in the other half he initiates the audience into a surrealistic visionary world—the realm of Zen metaphysics: a monk bleeds gold and possesses extraordinary powers that seem to stem from the sun and other natural forces.

However, one may find a different philosophy in The Swordsman, which he co-directed with Tsui Hark, a leading figure of the Hong Kong New Wave and director of Peking Opera Blues. Although the artistic disputes between Tsui Hark and King Hu caused the latter to leave in the middle of production, The Swordsman surprisingly ends up being a combination of several filmmakers’ virtues. Stylistically, there are kung fu scenes from martial art director Chen Hsiao Tung (director of Chinese Ghost Story), visionary special effects from Tsui Hark, and art design from King Hu, who eventually set the story in his preferred Ming dynasty. Its pace is one of the contemporary commercial Hong Kong film, much faster than King Hu’s normal work. It employs Tsui Hark’s cynical view of life, showing almost none of the characters to be trustworthy: they all have their own selfish ambitions, the fact of which breaks down the easy formulation of hero and villain. King Hu’s specialty—the power struggles within intensive circumstances—is still in evidence, while a rather forced romantic relationship is evidence of Chen’s hand.

King Hu’s metaphysical Zen and the sublimation of the spiritual are not themes in The Swordsman. They are replaced by the nihilism of Tsui Hark, as seen when the protagonist and his girlfriend ride without a clear direction on an uncultivated field after they both encounter some of the complexities of life. Somehow more rooted in reality, King Hu subsequently prepared a film about the Chinese railroad workers’ early U.S. history following immigration in the nineteenth century.

—Vivian Huang

KINOSHITA, Keisuke

Films as Director:

1943 Hanasakura minato (The Blossoming Port); Ikite-ira Magoroku (The Living Magoroku) (+ sc)
1944 Kanko no machi (Jubilation Street; Cheering Town); Rikugun (The Army)
1946 Osone-ke no asa (Morning for the Osone Family); Waga koi koso ni oto (The Girl I Loved) (+ sc)
1947 Kekkon (Marriage) (+ story); Fujicho (Phoenix) (+ sc)
1948 Onna (Woman) (+ sc); Shozo (The Portrait); Hakai (Apostasy)
1949 Ojusan kanpai (A Toast to the Young Miss; Here’s to the Girls); Yotsuya kaidan, I-II (The Yotsuya Ghost Story, Parts I and II; Yabure daiko (Broken Drum) (+ co-sc)
1950 Konyaku yubiwa (Engagement Ring) (+ sc)
1951 Zemma (The Good Fairy) (+ co-sc); Karumen kokyo ni kaeru (Carmen Comes Home) (+ sc); Shonen ki (A Record of Youth) (+ co-sc); Umi no hanabi (Fireworks over the Sea) (+ sc)
1952 Karumen junjo su (Carmen’s Pure Love) (+ sc)
1953 Nihon no higeki (A Japanese Tragedy) (+ sc)
1954 Onna no sono (The Garden of Women) (+ sc); Nijushi no hitomi (Twenty-four Eyes) (+ sc)
1955 Toi kumo (Distant Clouds) (+ co-sc); Nogiku no gotoki kimi (You Were like a Wild Chrysanthemum) (+ sc)
1956 Yayake-gumo (Clouds at Twilight); Taiyo to bara (The Rose on His Arm) (+ sc)
1957 Yorokobi mo kanashimi mo ikutoshitsuki (Times of Joy and Sorrow; The Lighthouse) (+ sc); Facen no tomoshibi (A Candle in the Wind; Danger Stalks Near) (+ sc)
1958 Narayama bushi-ko (The Ballad of the Narayama) (+ sc); Kono ten no niji (The Eternal Rainbow; The Rainbow of This Sky) (+ sc)
1959 Kazabana (Snow Flurry) (+ sc); Sekishun-cho (The Bird of Springs Past) (+ sc); Kyo mo mata kakute ariran (Thus Another Day) (+ sc)
1960 Haru no yume (Spring Dreams) (+ sc); Fuefuiki-gawa (The River Fuefuki) (+ sc)
1961 Ein no hito (The Bitter Spirit; Immortal Love) (+ sc)
1962 Kotoshi no koi (This Year’s Love) (+ sc); Futaari de aruita iku-haru-aki (The Seasons We Walked Together) (+ sc)
1963 Utae, wakodo-tachi (Sing, Young People!); Shito no densetsu (Legend of a Duel to the Death) (+ sc)
1964 Koge (The Scent of Incense) (+ sc)
1967 Natsukashiki fue ya taiko (Lovely Flute and Drum) (+ pr, sc)
1976 Suri Lanka no ai to wakare (Love and Separation in Sri Lanka) (+ sc)
1979 Shodo satsujin: Musukoyo (My Son) (+ sc)
1983 Kono ko o nokoshite (The Children of Nagasaki; These Children Survive Me)
1986 Yorokobi mo kanashima mo ikutoshitsuki (Times of Joy and Sorrow; Big Joys, Small Sorrows)

Publications

By KINOSHITA: articles—

Interview with P. Vecchi, in Cineforum (Bergamo), August 1984.

On KINOSHITA: books—

On KINOSHITA: articles—

“Keisuke Kinoshita,” in Film Dope (London), September 1984.
National Film Theatre Programme (London), March 1987.

---

Keisuke Kinoshita’s films are characteristic of the Shochiku Studio’s work: healthy home drama and melodrama as conventionalized by the studio’s two masters, Shimazu and Ozu, who specialized in depicting everyday family life. Kinoshita gravitated toward sentimentalism and a belief in the eventual triumph of good will and sincere efforts. It was against this ‘‘planned unity’’ that the new generation of Shochiku directors (for example, Oshima and his group) reacted.

Kinoshita was skilled in various genres. His light satiric comedies began with his first film, The Blossoming Port. Although ostensibly it illustrated the patriotism of two con men in a small port town, this film demonstrated Kinoshita’s extraordinary talent for witty mise-en-scène and briskly-paced storytelling. His postwar comedies include Broken Drum, Carmen Comes Home, Carmen’s Pure Love and A Candle in the Wind, which captured the liberated spirit of postwar democratization. A Toast to the Young Miss was a kind of situation comedy that became unusually successful due to its excellent cast.

Among Kinoshita’s popular romantic melodramas, Marriage and Phoenix surprised audiences with bold and sophisticated expressions of love, helping pioneer the new social morality in Japanese film. You Were like a Wild Chrysanthemum is a romantic, sentimental love story. The sentimental human drama became Kinoshita’s most characteristic film. It is typified by 24 Eye’s, which deftly appeals to the Japanese audience’s sentimentality, depicting the life of a female teacher on a small island. This was followed by such films as Times of Joy and Sorrow, The Seasons We Walked Together, and Lovely Flute and Drum. The Shochiku Studio was proud that these films could attract ‘‘women coming with handkerchiefs to wipe away their tears.’’

Films of rather straightforward social criticism include Morning for the Osone Family, Apostasy, A Japanese Tragedy, The Garden of Women, The Ballad of the Narayama, and Snow Flurry. These vary from rather crude ‘‘postwar democratization’’ films to films that deal with such topics as the world of folklore, struggles against the feudalistic system, and current social problems. Kinoshita was adventurous in his technical experimentation. Carmen Comes Home is the first Japanese color film and is sophisticated in its use of the new technology. In its sequel, Carmen’s Pure Love, he employed tilting compositions throughout the film, producing a wry comic atmosphere. In A Japanese Tragedy, newsreel footage was inserted to connect the historical background with the narrative. You Were like a Wild Chrysanthemum, a film presented as an old man’s memory of his youth, creates a nostalgic effect by vignetting with an oval shape and with misty images. The Ballad of the Narayama, except for the last outdoor sequence, takes place on a set that accentuates artificiality and theatricality, with the added effect of a peculiar use of color. Kabuki-style acting, music, and storytelling create the fable-like ambience of this film. The River Fuefuki is entirely tinted in colors that correspond to the sentiment of each scene (e.g., red for fighting, blue for funerals, and green for peaceful village life).

After the Japanese film industry sank into a depression in the 1960s, Kinoshita successfully continued his career in TV for a long period. His skill at entertaining and his sense of experimentation kept him popular with television audiences as well.

—Kyoko Hirano

KINUGASA, Teinosuke

Nationality: Japanese. Born: Teinosuke Kogame in Mie Prefecture, 1 January 1896. Education: Sasayama Private School. Career: Ran away to Nagoya, began theatrical apprenticeship, 1913; stage debut, 1915; oyama actor (playing female roles), Nikkatsu Mukojima studio, 1918; wrote and directed first film, 1921; moved to Makino Kinema, 1922; contract director for Shochiku Company, formed Kinugasa Motion Picture League, became involved with new actors’ and technicians’ union, led mass walkout over plan to replace oyama actors with female performers, mid-1920s; travelled to Russia and Germany, 1928; returned to Japan, 1929; began association with kabuki actor Hasegawa, 1935; moved to Toho Company, 1939; moved to Daiei Company, 1949, (appointed to board of directors, 1958). Awards: Best Film, Cannes Festival, Academy Award for Best Foreign Film, and Best Foreign Film, New York Film Critics, for Gate of Hell, 1954; Purple Ribbon Medal, Japan, for distinguished cultural service, 1958. Died: 26 February 1982.

Films as Director:

1921 Imoto no shi (The Death of My Sister) (+ sc, role)
1922 Niwa no kotori (Two Little Birds) (+ sc); Hibana (Spark) (+ sc)
1923 Hanasake jijii 1923–1934; Kutsukate tokijiro 1924–1930; Gate of Hell; kabuki actor Hasegawa, 1935; moved to Toho Company, 1939; moved to Germany, 1928; returned to Japan, 1929; began association with actors with female performers, mid-1920s; travelled to Russia and Germany, 1928; returned to Japan, 1929; began association with actors with female performers, mid-1920s; travelled to Russia and 1924 Choraku no kanata (Beyond Decay) (+ sc); Kanojo to ummei (She Has Lived Her Destiny) (in two parts) (+ sc); Kire no ame (Fog and Rain) (+ sc); Kishin yuri keiji (+ sc); Kyoren no bato (Dance Training) (+ sc); Mirsu (Love) (+ sc); Shohin (Shuto) (+ sc); Shohin (Shasoku) (+ sc); Jashunon no onna (A Woman’s Heresy) (+ sc); Tsuma no himitu (Secret of a Wife); Koi (Love); Sabishi mura (Lonely Village)
1925 Nichirin (The Sun); Koi to bashi (Love and a Warrior) (+ sc); Shinju yoimachigusa; Tsukigata hanpeita; Wakaki hi no chujii
1926 Kurutta ippeiji (A Page of Madness); Kirihi; Teru hi kamoru (Shining Sun Becomes Clouded); Hikaidori (Cassowary); Ojo Kichiza; Oni azami; Kinno jidai (Epoch of Loyalty); Meoto boshi (Star of Married Couples); Groyzen; Dochu sugoruku bune; Dochu sugoruku kago (The Palanquin); Akatsumi no yushi (A Brave Soldier at Dawn); Gekka no kyojin (Moonlight Madness)
1928 Jujiro (Crossroads) (+ sc); Benten Kozo (Gay Masquerade); Keiraku hicchu; Kaikokake (Tales from a Country by the Sea); Chokon yusa (Female Demon)
1931 Reimeien (Before Dawn) (+ sc); Tojin okichi
1932 Ikinokata Shinshengumi (The Surviving Shinshengumi) (+ sc); Chushingura (The Loyal 47 Ronin; The Vengeance of the 47 Ronin) (+ sc)
1933 Tenichibo to ikanosuke (+ sc); Futatsu doro (Two Stone Lanterns) (+ sc); Toha no Ginepi (Ginepi from Koina) (+ sc)
1934 Kutsukate tokijiro (+ sc); Fayaki shinju (+ sc); Ippan gatana dohyoiri (A Sword and the Sumo Ring) (+ sc); Nagurareta kochiyama (+ sc)
1935 Yukinomigen (The Revenge of Yukinobai); Yukinono’s Revenge (co-sc) (in 3 parts, part 3 released 1936); Karayama no ushimitatsu (+ sc)
1937 Hito hada Kannon (The Sacred Protector) (+ sc) (in 5 parts); Osaka natsu no jin (The Summer Battle of Osaka) (+ sc)
1938 Kuroda seichuroku (+ sc)
1940 Hebi himesama (The Snake Princess) (+ sc) (in two parts)
1941 Kawanakajima kassen (The Battle of Kawanakajima) (+ sc)
1943 Sasumekokuritsu (Forward Flag of Independence)
1945 Umibara (Rose of the Sea)
1946 Aru yo no tonosama (Lord for a Night)
1947 ‘‘Koi no sakasu (The Love Circus)’’ section of Yotsu no koi no monogatari (The Story of Four Loves); Joyu (Actress) (+ co-sc)
1949 Kobanzame (part 2) (+ sc); Koga yashiki (Koga Mansion) (+ sc); Satsujinsha no kaku (The Face of a Murderer)
1951 Bouri tan; Tsuki no watari-dori (Migratory Birds under the Moon) (+ sc); Meigatsusama (Lantern Under a Full Moon) (+ sc)
1952 Daibutsu kaigen (Saga of the Great Buddha; The Dedication of the Great Buddha) (+ sc); Shuraga hanpeita (in 2 parts) (+ sc)
1953 Jigokumon (Gate of Hell) (+ sc)
1954 Yuki no yo koto (Duel of a Snowy Night) (+ sc); Hana no nagadosu (End of a Prolonged Journey) (+ sc); Tekka bugyo (+ sc)
1957 Yoshinaka no shirame (The Romance of Yushima; White Sea of Yushima) (+ sc); Kawa no aru shitamachi no hanashi (It Happened in Tokyo) (+ sc); Bara ikutabi (A Girl Isn’t Allowed to Love) (+ sc)
1961 Yoshinaka no meiguru samuin onna (Three Women around Yoshinaka) (+ sc); Hibana (Spark) (+ sc); Tsukigata hanpeita (in 2 parts) (+ sc)
1957 Shirasagi (White Heron; The Snowy Heron) (+ sc); Ukifune (Flying Vessel) (+ sc); Naruto hicho (A Fantastic Tale of Naruto) (+ sc)
1958 Haru koro no hana no en (A Spring Banquet) (+ sc); Osaka no onna (A Woman of Osaka) (+ sc)
1959 Joen (Tormentened Flame) (+ sc); Kagero ezu (Stop the Old Fox) (+ sc)
1960 Uta andon (The Old Lantern) (+ sc)
1961 Midegam-i (Dishevelled Hair) (+ sc); Okoto to susake (Okoto and Susake) (+ sc)
1962 Yoso (Priest and Empress; The Sorcerer) (+ sc); *episode of Uso (When Women Lie; Lies)
1967 Chisana toshokan (The Little Runaway) (co-d)
1968 Tsumiki no hako

Other Films: (incomplete listing)

1918 Nanairo yubi wa (The Seven-Colored Ring) (Oguchi) (film acting debut)
1920 Ikeru shikabane (Tanaka) (role)

Publications

By KINUGASA: articles—

525
On KINUGASA: book—

On KINUGASA: articles—

Tessier, Max, “‘Yasujiro Ozu et le cinéma japonais à la fin du muet,’” in Ecran (Paris), December 1979.

Tessier, Max, obituary, in Image et Son (Paris), April 1982.

* * *

Teinosuke Kinugasa made two of the most famous films ever to come out of Japan, and was, historically, the first of his country’s directors known in the West. Rashomon brought wider interest and admiration for Japanese cinema, but some observers fondly recall Crossroads, which had some showings in Europe in 1929 and in New York in 1930, under the title The Slums of Tokyo. On one hand, Crossroads is the Japanese equivalent of the German ‘street’ films, and on the other it is the oft-told local tale of a hard-working, self-sacrificing woman suffering on behalf of her idle younger brother, who is in love with an unvirtuous woman. The pace is slow, but the film is the work of a master. As in his earlier surrealistic and experimental film, A Page of Madness, which made a late, freak appearance in the West in 1973, he intercuts furiously to express mental agitation and to move backwards and forwards in time in a way seldom used in Western cinema until the Nouvelle Vague in the 1960s.

Kinugasa’s films of the 1930s confirm the impression that he did not regard the camera as a mere recorder: we may be astonished by the number of glides, of overhead shots, of sudden close-ups—each correctly juxtaposed against the images on either side. It is clear that Kinugasa, along with his peers, used this ‘decorative’ approach rather more freely with historical subjects: if you compare his most popular film, The Revenge of Yukinojo with Ichikawa’s 1963 remake, An Actor’s Revenge, you will find many of the shots duplicated, despite the stunning addition of colour and wide screen. (The same actor, Kazuo Hasegawa, appeared in both, but here under the pseudonym Chojiro Hayashi.)

The two films are too far apart, chronologically, to make further comparisons, but in 1947 Kinugasa directed Actress, while Mizoguchi tackled the same subject, based on fact, in The Love of Sumako the Actress. Mizoguchi’s version has an intensity lacking in Kinugasa’s film, which is more subtle. Gate of Hell (1953) was the first Japanese colour film seen in the West, and only one other film had preceded it, after Rashomon. It bowled over almost everyone who saw it: the gold, scarlet, beige, white, and green of the costumes; the mists, the moon, the sea, the distant hills. We did not know then how many Japanese films start this way, with an exposition of a country torn apart by war and revolution, nor how many concerned murderous and amorous intrigues among feudal warlords and their courtesans. Gate of Hell is an exquisite picture, but it remains overshadowed by Mizoguchi’s (black-and-white) historical films of this period. It lacks their power and tension, their breadth and their sheer craftsmanship.

It was in this decade and into the 1960s that the Japanese cinema flowered, with a series of masterpieces by Kurosawa, Kobayashi, Ichikawa, and others. Some of the older directors, including Kinugasa, continued to make films of integrity and skill; but many of their films look a little plodding beside those made by the younger generation.

—David Shipman

KLUGE, Alexander

Films as Director:

1960 Brutalität in Stein (Die Ewigkeit von gestern; Brutality in Stone; Yesterday Goes on for Ever) (co-d) (short)
1961 Rennen (Racing) (co-d) (short)
1963 Lehrer im Wandel (Teachers in Transformation) (co-d) (short)
1964 Porträt einer Bewährung (Portrait of One Who Proved His Mettle) (short)
1966 Pokerspiel (short); Abschied von gestern (Yesterday Girl)
1967 Frau Blackburn, geb. 5 Jan. 1872, wird gefilmt (Frau Blackburn, Born 5 Jan. 1872, Is Filmed) (short); Die Arbeiten der Zirkuskuppel: ratlos (Artistes at the Top of the Big Top—Disoriented) (short)
1968 Feuerlöschers E. A. Winterstein (Fireman E. A. Winterstein) (short)
1969  Die unbezähmbare Leni Peickert (The Indomitable Leni Peickert); Ein Arzt aus Halberstadt (A Doctor from Halberstadt) (short)
1970  Der grosse Verhau (The Big Dust-up)
1971  Wir verbauen 3 x 27 Milliarden Dollar in einen Angriffs- schlachter (Der Angriffsschlachter; We’ll Blow 3 x 27 Billion Dollars on a Destroyer; The Destroyer) (short); Willi Tobler und der Untergang der sechste Flotte (Willi Tobler and the Wreck of the Sixth Fleet)
1972  Besitzbürgerin, Jahrgang 1908 (A Woman from the Property- owning Middle Class, Born 1908) (short)
1973  Gelegenheitsarbeit einer Sklavin (Occasional Work of a Female Slave)
1974  In Gefahr und grösster Not bringt der Mittelweg den Tod (The Middle of the Road Is a Very Dead End)
1975  Der starke Ferdinand (Strongman Ferdinand); Augen aus einem anderen Land
1977  Die Menschen, die die Staufer-Austellung vorbereiten (Die Menschen, die das Stauferjahr vorbereiten; The People Who Are Preparing the Year of the Hohenstaufens) (co-d) (short); ‘Zu böser Schlacht schleich’ ich heut’ Nacht so bang’ (In Such Trepidation I Creep off Tonight to the Evil Battle) (revised version of Willi Tobler and the Wreck of the Sixth Fleet)
1979  Die Patriotin (The Patriotic Woman)
1980  Der Kandidat (co-d)
1983  Krieg und Frieden (co-d); Die Macht der Gefühle (The Power of Emotions)
1985  Der Angriff der Gegenwart auf die Ubrige Zeit (The Blind Director)
1987  Vermischte Nachrichten (+ sc, pr)

Other Films:
1965  Unendliche Fahrt—aber begrenzt (Reitz) (feature) (text)
1973  Die Reise nach Wien (Reitz) (sc)
1978  Deutschland im Herbst (Germany in Autumn) (Schlöndorff) (contribution)
1986  There Must Be a Way Out: The Film World of Alexander Kluge (Buchka) (addl d)
1989  Schweinegeld, Ein Marchen der Gebruder Nimm (pr)
Publications

By KLUGE: books—

Abschied von gestern, Frankfurt am Main, n.d.
Der Untergang der sechsten Armee—Schlachbeschreibung, Munich, 1969.
Filmwirtschaft in der Bundesrepublik Deutschland und in Europa.
Götterdämmerung in Raten, with Florian Hopf and Michael Dost, Munich, 1973.
Geschichte und Eigensinn, with Oskar Negt, 1982.
Der Angriff de Gegenwart auf die übrige zeit, Frankfurt, 1985.
Public Sphere and Experience: Toward an Analysis of the Bourgeois and Proletarian Public Sphere, with Oskar Negt, University of Minnesota Press, 1993.

By KLUGE: articles—

Interview with J. Dawson, in Film Comment (New York), November/December 1974.
“Film ist das natürliche Tauschverhältnis der Arbeit. . . .” interview with B. Steinborn, in Filmfaust (Frankfurt), December 1977.
Eine realistische Haltung müsste der Zuschauer haben, müsste ich jaben, müsste der Film Haben,” with R. Frey, in Filmfaust (Frankfurt), November 1980.
“On Film and the Public Sphere,” in New German Critique, Fall 1981-Winter 1982.

Interviews with B. Steinborn in Filmfaust (Frankfurt), February/March 1982 and February/March 1983.
“Film Digression,” in Writing in the Film Age: Essays by Contemporary Novelists, University of Colorado Press, 1991.

ON KLUGE: books—

Franklin, James, New German Cinema: From Oberhausen to Hamburg, Boston, 1983.
O’Kane, John Russell, Film and Cultural Politics after the Avantgarde, University of Minnesota, 1988.
On KLUGE: articles—

“Kluge Issue” of Filmkritik (Munich), December 1976.
Bruck, J., “Kluge’s Antagonistic Concept of Realism,” in Australian Journal of Screen Theory (Kensington, New South Wales), no. 13/14, 1983.
“Kluge Issue” of October, Fall 1988.
Kaes, Anton, “History and Film: Public Memory in the Age of Electronic Dissemination,” in History and Memory, no. 1, 1990.

* * *

Alexander Kluge, the chief ideologue of the new German cinema, is the author of various books in the areas of sociology, contemporary philosophy, and social theory. In 1962 he helped initiate, and was the spokesman for, the “Oberhausen Manifesto,” in which “Das Opas Kino” (“grandpa’s cinema”) was declared dead.

At the same time Kluge published his first book, Lebensläufe, a collection of stories that presented a comprehensive cross-section of contemporary life along with its deeply rooted historical causes. His method is grounded in a rich and representative mosaic of sources: fiction, public records and reports, essays, actual occurrences, news, quotations, observations, ideas, and free associations. The method is used by Kluge as a principle of construction in his best films, such as Ahschied von gestern, Die Artisten in der Zirkuskuppel: ratslos, In Gefahr und grösster Not bringt der Mittelweg den Tod, and in the series of collective films: Deutschland im Herbst, Der Kandidat, and Krieg und Frieden. The theme of war, in particular the Second World War, appears in all his works.

Kluge views filmmaking as another form of writing since it essentially continues the recording of his participation in the development of society and in everyday life. His unifying creative trait could be called verbal concentration, or image concentration. His filmic activity is a living extension of his comprehensive epistemological and sociological researches, which he has published, together with Oskar Negt (associated with the “Frankfurt School” of Adorno and Horkheimer), as Öffentlichkeit und Erfahrung (1972) and Geschichte und Eigensinn (1982).

Kluge’s films probe reality—not by way of the fantastic fictions of Fassbinder, or film school pictures as with Wenders—but through establishing oppositions and connections between facts, artifacts, reflections, and bits of performance. The protagonists of his feature films are mostly women who seek to grasp and come to terms with their experiences. For the sake of continuity these women are played either by Alexandra Kluge, his sister, or by Hannelore Hoger. They move through the jungle of contemporary life, watching and witnessing, suffering and fighting. The director mirrors their experiences.

As a filmmaker, Kluge is unique, but not isolated. The three collective films, which together with Volker Schlöndorff, Fassbinder, Stephan Aust, and others he has devoted to the most pressing contemporary events, are something new and original in the history of world cinema. Without Kluge these would be inconceivable, since it is he who pulls together and organizes, aesthetically and ideologically, the fragments filmed by the others. He creates film forms and image structures to transform the various narrative modes and artistic conceptions into a new, conscious, mobilized art of cinema, free of fantasy. This cinema is not only non-traditional, but conveys a socio-historical content.

Without Kluge a new German cinema would be scarcely conceivable, since creative inspiration needs to be supported by a strong film-political foundation. It is thanks to him, above all, that film was officially promoted in the Federal Republic, and that film in Germany has been taken seriously in the last two decades. An uniring fighter for the interests of his colleagues, Kluge gets involved whenever the fate of the new German cinema is at stake.

Since the late 1980s, Kluge has become involved in the production of alternative programming for German television. Like the overtly political aims of his filmmaking, Kluge hopes that his efforts in the television industry will help to assemble and sustain a public sphere where open critical discourse concerning German and European politics may occur. Kluge, by means of his “Development Company for Television Producers,” has been instrumental in arranging for magazines such as Der Spiegel and Stern to purchase air time on German commercial television in order for each of them to produce and broadcast independent news programs. It is Kluge’s hope that “the complete editorial independence” of these productions will “offer diversity” on television, a medium that typically seeks, in formal and thematic ways, to deny the existence of a heterogeneous viewing audience. In a 1988 interview Kluge remarked: “You only need one percent of alternative television, of calmness within the television set. If you have it, people will accept that this TV world isn’t the only one.”

In addition to his efforts in television, in 1993 Kluge co-authored another book with Oskar Negt, Public Sphere and Experience: Toward an Analysis of the Bourgeois Public and Proletarian Public Sphere (1993), in which he continues his interrogations of late-twentieth-century culture. Indeed, the proliferation of articles, books, and dissertations examining Kluge’s artistic and theoretical contributions continue to suggest his impact on several cultural fronts.
Whether on the screen or the page, the accomplishments of Alexander Kluge continue to distinguish him as a figure sincerely committed to social and political change.

—Maria Racheva, updated by Kevin J. Costa

KOBAYASHI, Masaki

Films as Director:

1952 Musuko no seishun (My Sons’ Youth)
1953 Magokoro (Sincerity; Sincere Heart)
1954 Mittsu no ai (Three Loves) (+ sc); Kono hiroi sora no dokoran ni (Somewhere under the Broad Sky)
1955 Urushashi gaitsutsu (Beautiful Days)
1956 Kabe atsuki heya (The Thick-walled Room) (completed 1953); Izumi (The Spring; The Fountainhead); Anata kaimasu (I’ll Buy You)
1957 Kuroi kawa (Black River)
1959 Ningen no joken I (The Human Condition Part I: No Greater Love) (+ co-sc); Ningen no joken II (The Human Condition Part II: Road to Eternity) (+ co-sc)
1961 Ningen no joken III (The Human Condition Part III: A Soldier’s Prayer) (+ co-sc)
1962 Karamai-ai (The Entanglement; The Inheritance); Seppuku (Harakiri)
1964 Kwaidan (Kaidan)
1967 Joujutsu (Rebellion)
1968 Nihon no seishun (The Youth of Japan; Hymn to a Tired Man)
1971 Inochi bo ni furo (Inn of Evil; At the Risk of My Life)
1975 Kaseki (Fossils) (originally made for TV as 8-part series)
1983 Tokyo saiban (The Tokyo Trials) (documentary)
1985 Shokutaku no nai ie (The Empty Table)

Publications

By KOBAYASHI: articles—

Interview with G. Bechtold and A. Meyer, in Filmfaust (Frankfurt am Main), January-February 1987.

On KOBAYASHI: books—

On KOBAYASHI: articles—

Iwabuchi, M., “Kobayashi’s Trilogy,” in Film Culture (New York), Spring 1962.
Kobayashi Section of Cinéma Québec (Montreal), February/March 1974.
Obituary, in Séquences (Haute-Ville), November/December 1996.
Obituary, in EPD Film (Frankfurt), December 1996.
Obituary, in Film en Televisie + Video (Brussels), December 1996.

The dilemma of the dissenter—the individual who finds himself irrevocably at odds with his society—is the overriding preoccupation of Kobayashi’s films, and one which grew directly from his own experience. In 1942, only months after starting his career at Shochiku studios, Kobayashi was drafted into the Imperial Japanese Army and sent to Manchuria. A reluctant conscript, he refused promotion above the rank of private and was later a prisoner of war. Released in 1946, he returned to filmmaking, becoming assistant to Keisuke Kinoshita, whose flair for lyrical composition clearly influenced Kobayashi’s own style—though he succeeded, fortunately, in shaking off the older director’s penchant for excessive sentimentiality.

Initially, Kobayashi’s concern with social justice, and the clash between society and the individual, expressed itself in direct treatment of specific current issues: war criminals in Kabe atsuki heya—a subject so sensitive that the film’s release was delayed three years; corruption in sport in Anata kaimasu; and, in Kuroi kawa, organized crime and prostitution rampant around U.S. bases in Japan. This phase of Kobayashi’s career culminated in his towering three-part, nine-hour epic, Ningen no joken, a powerful and moving indictment of systematized brutality inherent in a militaristic society.

The ordeal of the pacifist Kaji, hero of Ningen no joken (played by Tatsuya Nakadai, Kobayashi’s favorite actor), closely parallels the director’s own experiences during the war. Kaji is the archetypal Kobayashi hero, who protests, struggles, and is finally killed by an oppressive and inhumane system. His death changes nothing and will not even be recorded; yet the mere fact of it stands as an assertion of indomitable humanity. Similarly, the heroes of Kobayashi’s two finest films, Seppuku and Joiuchi, revolt, make their stand, and die—to no apparent avail. In these films Kobayashi turned the conventions of the jidai-geki (period movie) genre to his own ends, using historical settings to universalize his focus on the dissident individual. The masterly blend of style and content, with the unbending ritual of samurai convention perfectly matched by cool, reticent camera movement and elegantly geometric composition, marks in these two films the peak of Kobayashi’s art.

By Japanese standards, Kobayashi made few films, working slowly and painstakingly with careful attention to detail. From Seppuku onwards, an increasing concern with formal beauty characterized his work, most notably in Kaidan. This film, based on four of Lafcadio Hearn’s ghost stories, carried for once no social message, but developed a strikingly original use of color and exquisitely stylized visual composition. The crisis that overtook Japanese cinema in the late 1960s hit Kobayashi’s career especially hard. His uncompromising seriousness of purpose and the measured cadences of his style held little appeal for an industry geared increasingly to flashy exploitation movies. Few of his projects came to fruition, and Kaseki had to be made first for television, a medium he disliked. He refused to watch the eight-hour TV transmission, regarding it merely as rough footage for his 213-minute cinema version.

Kaseki, in which a middle-aged businessman confronts the prospect of incurable cancer, seemed to mark a move away from Kobayashi’s wider social concerns—as did the far weaker Moeru aki. Tokyo saiban, though, found him back on more characteristic ground. A tour-de-force of editing, it used archive and newsreel footage to make compelling drama of the Allied trials of Japanese wartime leaders. With Shokutaku no nai ie, his final film, Kobayashi returned... to his central preoccupation, with a principled individual (Nakadai once again) standing out against daunting social pressures. Though lacking the impact of Ningen no joken or Seppuku, it evinced his undiminished skill in exploiting the tension between outward formality and inner turmoil and reaffirmed the austere integrity that informed all his work.

—Philip Kemp

KOPPLE, Barbara

Nationality: American. Born: New York City, 30 July 1946. Education: Graduated from Northeastern University with degree in psychology. Career: Assisted documentary filmmakers as an editor, sound recordist, and camerawoman; spent four years in coal fields of Harlan County, Kentucky, recording struggles of unionized miners for documentary Harlan County, U.S.A., 1972–76. Awards: Critic’s Choice Award, Cannes Film Festival, 1972, for Winter Soldier; Academy Award for Best Feature Documentary, designation by Congress as American Film Classic in National Film Registry, Blue Ribbon, Grierson Award, and Emily Award at the American Film Festival, all 1977, for Harlan County, U.S.A.; Christopher Award, 1977; Mademoiselle Award, 1977; National Endowment for the Arts fellowships, 1970s and 1980s; Blue Ribbon, American Film and Video Festival, 1990, for Out of Darkness; Academy Award for Best Feature Documentary, Grand Jury Prize, Audience Award, and Filmmaker’s Trophy at the Sundance Film Festival, Golden Gate Award at the San Francisco International Film Festival, Blue Ribbon at the American Film and Video Festival, Outstanding Achievement from the International Documentary Association, Los Angeles Film Critics Award, and National Society of Film Critics Award, all 1991, all for American Dream; Best Feature Documentary, Director’s Guild of America, 1992, for American Dream; Metro Labor Council Award, 1992; Cine Golden Eagle, 1992; John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Fellowship, 1992; Dorothy Arzner Directing Award, Women in Film, 1993; Outstanding Directorial Achievement from Director’s Guild of America, Alfred I. duPont-Columbia University Award, and Best Special Award from Television Critics Association, all 1993, all for Fallen Champ.

Films as Director:

- 1972 Winter Soldier (co-d)
- 1976 Harlan County, U.S.A. (+ sound, pr)
- 1981 No Nukes (co-d)
- 1983 Keeping On (+ exec pr)
- 1989 Civil Rights: The Struggle Continues (+ pr)
- 1990 Out of Darkness (co-d)
- 1991 American Dream (+ sound, co-pr)
- 1992 Beyond JFK: The Question of Conspiracy (co-d); Locked Out: Ravenswood
- 1993 Fallen Champ: The Untold Story of Mike Tyson (+ pr)
- 1994 Century of Women (segment d)
- 1995 Prisoners of Hope (co-d)
- 1998 Woodstock ’94 (+ pr); Wild Man Blues
- 1999 A Conversation with Gregory Peck
- 2000 My Generation

Other Films:

- 1974 Richard III (pr, sound, ed)
- 1986 Hurricane Irene (pr)
- 1995 Nails (segment pr)

Publications

On KOPPLE: books—

On KOPPLE: articles—

Barbara Kopple
Feaster, Felicia, “Fallen Champ,” in Film Quarterly, Winter 1993/94.

* * *

533
Barbara Kopple got her start in film working for Albert and David Maysles. In order to make films, she decided it was necessary to learn all aspects of their production. At the Maysles’ studio, she became familiar with the craft—from getting coffee to reconstituting trims, no job was trivialized. She became an assistant editor for the Maysles and began working as editor and sound recordist for other producers.

After gaining enough experience and confidence, Kopple decided it was time to direct her own films. Her crews consisted of a camera operator and sound recordist, of which she was the sound recordist. As with most documentaries, such a small crew was an economic necessity, but it also enhanced the filmmaker’s intimacy with the subject. According to Kopple, recording sound brought her “deeper into what was happening”; she was “hearing” and participating in the filmic process on multiple levels. As a technician, interviewer, and director, she is both observer and participant. In supervising post-production she becomes the storyteller.

Most of Kopple’s independent films require her constant attention to fundraising. Winning the Academy Award for Best Feature-length Documentary for Harlan County, U.S.A. did not ensure funds for another project. While shooting American Dream, rather than process film, she bought freezers to store the exposed rolls until money could be raised for lab expenses. Kopple thinks “small crews are great, but sometimes it’s better to have money and hire a sound recordist.”

Kopple was influenced by the Maysles brothers and D. A. Pennebaker, exponents of Direct Cinema. Her method of filmmaking, though owing much to her predecessors, is very much a result of form following content. Though her style may differ slightly from film to film because of the organic strategy she employs for each story, there is an overriding consistency to her work. She gives those not normally heard a voice—the audience of most films are her subjects. Her documentaries have become emblematic of social change films.

Most of Kopple’s films have no simple beginning—we enter a story that has already begun. The audience may know the outcome, yet we are engaged in the suspense of how we arrived at that point. Her films examine the antecedents of power relationships, how people are affected, respond, and make sense of their own actions and those of others. Though the chronology of a film may shift through history, intercutting past events with the contemporary, we experience the action in the present tense. Her endings are never clean, sometimes with story updates occurring under the end credits. Kopple’s films create a discourse that cuts through historical time in an attempt to understand where we are today.

Kopple’s films create such intimacy of identity that we feel sure she lived the experience. However, Harlan County, U.S.A. took only thirteen months to make. After reading about the death of Joseph Yablonski, his wife, and daughter, and the formation of Miners for Democracy, she decided to make the film and secured a $10,000 loan from Tom Brandon. The film develops small stories to contextualize a larger narrative.

The Consolidation Coal Mannington Mine Disaster of 1968, the Yablonski family murder in 1970, and the union election places the Harlan strike in a national relationship. History is seen as a growing organism and montage moves the discourse through time. John L. Lewis is cut against Carl Horn, president of Duke Power, as though they were engaged in debate. Yet the film is faithful to and references the chronology of the Harlan strike.

Kopple uses music to remind the audience of our folk storytelling tradition. In geographically isolated regions such as Harlan, music has been a way of sharing experience, creating a unifying identity. In the film music functions to evoke cultural memory and meaning. Though we may be thousands of miles from Harlan, we share a common heritage of labor struggle. The voice of the film is the voice of many. There is no one hero, but a common chorus of purpose uniting gender and race. “Which Side Are You On?” functions as Harlan County, U.S.A.’s theme song. The film is about choice. Kopple is asked by Duke Power’s thugs to identify herself; there is no question of her allegiance. Kopple thinks that being a woman may have contributed to the local police letting her film in jail. They did not consider her a threat. There is no question that the film threatened Duke Power; the camera is beaten. And the film is very much about violence: everyday life seems harsh, and the strike heightens the brutality. The audience must look at the conflict’s viscera—pieces of lung and brains in the dirt—and ultimately the death of striker Lawrence Jones. The strike may be won, but it is a momentary victory. The struggle continues without end through the credits.

Kopple continues themes developed in Harlan County, U.S.A. in American Dream, but the story and issues have become more complicated. Again she films a strike, a labor crisis, and documents the crisis of labor. At issue is whether the union movement will be destroyed by Reaganism, or whether it will transform and once again play an active role in the American drama. The film follows Local P-9 of the United Food and Commercial Workers International Union as the rank and file struggles with the International leadership and dissidents among its own membership, as well as labor’s traditional antagonist, in this case Hormel and Company.

Again the strike is the motivating force for communality. But because labor is divided—brother pitted against brother—American Dream evokes the heartbreak of the Civil War. The labor movement has lost its innocence, yet Local P-9 seems naive. They lack an historical perspective to labor negotiations. When the strike is going well they are enthusiastic, but they succumb to moral self-righteousness when frustrated. Recognizing stasis in the International, they hire an outside labor consultant, Ray Rogers of “Corporate Campaign,” whose strategy is to effect economic distress on Hormel, build solidarity with other locals, and make the strike “newsworthy.” He packages the strike for television, but we are not sure which side of the camera he prefers to be on; as he seems to be playing a role from Norma Rae (Rogers was the organizer at J. P. Stevens). Authenticity becomes problematic.

As in Harlan County, U.S.A., there is no doubt that Kopple’s camera is on the side of labor. However, in American Dream the camera re-positions itself to show the conflicting points-of-view within the labor movement. The camera is with Local P-9 leader Jim Guyette, then with Lewie Anderson, director of the International Union’s Meatpacking Division. It is in a car with dissidents as they defy the Local and go back to work. But the camera does not cross the picket line with them; it watches the dissidents go through the gate from the vantage point of the strikers.

In American Dream, Kopple utilizes various documentary styles. Direct Cinema techniques are combined with conventional sit-down interviews and narration. The voice of the film is that of labor, but unlike Harlan County, U.S.A., American Dream employs narration. Guyette and Anderson provide commentary for their own stories. And Kopple personally announces voice-over information necessary to move the story forward. As the film proceeds to its end, we are aware of a distance and dislocation of voice and character not experienced in Harlan County, U.S.A. The grand narrative of American labor is fractured, and we wonder if the Dream can ever be reconstructed. The film ends with an American Graffiti-style montage of character updates. But it is the 1980s, and although there may be personal change, one story remains the same: company profits continue to grow while workers are paid less.

Kopple thinks of herself as a filmmaker of traditional dramas, examining how people behave in moments of crisis and change. Her films question the construct of the “American Dream” and the price we pay in its attainment; how this “Dream” influences and informs our collective and individual identity and what we value; and how we are equipped to deal with and interpret issues of justice and change.

—Judy Hoffman

KORDA, Alexander

Films as Director:

1914 A becsapott újságíró (The Duped Journalist) (co-d); Tutyo és Totoy (Tutyo and Totoyo) (co-d)
1915 Lyon Lea (Lea Lyon) (co-d); A tiszti kardbojt (The Officer’s Swordknot) (+ sc)
1916 Fehér éjszakák (White Nights) or Fedora (+ sc); A nagymama (The Grandmother) (+ sc); Mesék az írógépről (Tales of the Typewriter) (+ sc); A készvízi férfi (The Man with Two Hearts); Az egymillió fontos bankó (The One–Million–Pound Note) (+ sc); Ciklámen (Cyclamen); Vergődő szívek (Struggling Hearts); A nevető Szaszka (The Laughing Saskia); Mágna Miska (Miska the Magnate)
1917 Szent Péter esernyője (St. Peter’s Umbrella) (+ pr); A gőlyokalifa (The Stork Caliph) (+ pr); Má gia (Magic) (+ pr); Harrison és Barrison (Harrison and Barrison) (+ pr)
1918 Faun (+ pr); Az aranyember (The Man with the Golden Touch) (+ pr); Mary Ann (+ pr)

1919 Ave Caesar! (+ pr); Fehér rózsa (White Rose) (+ pr); Yamata (+ pr); Se ki, se be (Neither in Nor Out) (+ pr); A 111-es (Number 111) (+ pr)
1920 Seine Majestät das Bettelkind (Prinz und Bettelknabe; The Prince and the Pauper)
1922 Heeren der Meere (Masters of the Sea); Eine Versunkene Welt (Die Tragödie eines Verschollenen Fürstensohnes) (A Vanished World); Samson und Delilah (Samson and Delilah) (+ pr)
1923 Das unbekannte Morgen (The Unknown Tomorrow) (+ pr)
1924 Jedermanns Frau (Jedermanns Weib) (Everybody’s Woman) (+ pr); Tragödie im Hause Habsburg (Das Drama von Mayerling) (Tragedy in the House of Hapsburg) (+ pr)
1925 Der Tänzer meiner Frau (Dancing Mad)
1926 Madame wünscht keine Kinder (Madame Wants No Children)
1927 Eine Dubarry von heute (A Modern Dubarry); The Stolen Bride; The Private Life of Helen of Troy
1928 Yellow Lily; Night Watch
1929 Love and the Devil; The Squall; Her Private Life
1930 Lilies of the Field; Women Everywhere; The Princess and the Plumber
1931 Die Manner um Lucie (+ pr); Rive Gauche (French version of Die Manner um Lucie) (+ pr); Marius; Zum Goldenen Anker (German version of Marius)
1932 Service for Ladies (Reserved for Ladies) (+ pr)
1933 Wedding Rehearsal (+ pr); The Private Life of Henry VIII (+ pr); The Girl from Maxim’s (+ co-pr)
1934 La Dame de Chez Maxim (French version) (+ pr); The Private Life of Don Juan (+ pr)
1936 Rembrandt (+ pr)
1941 That Hamilton Woman (Lady Hamilton) (+ pr)
1945 Perfect Strangers (Vacation from Marriage) (+ pr)
1947 An Ideal Husband (+ pr)

Publications

On KORDA: books—

On KORDA: articles—

Price, Peter, ‘‘The Impresario Urge,’’ in Sight and Sound (London), November 1950.
Gilliat, Sidney, and others, ‘‘Sir Alexander Korda,’’ in Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1956.
Street, Sarah, ‘‘AlexKorda, Prudential Assurance and British Film Finance in the 1930s,’’ in Historical Journal of Film, Radio and TV (Abingdon, Oxon), October 1986.
Wilinsky, Barbara, ‘‘First and Finest: British Films on U.S. Television in the Late 1940s,’’ in Velvet Light Trap (Austin, Texas), no. 40, Fall 1997.

On KORDA: films—

* * *

Alexander Korda may be Britain’s most controversial film figure, but there is no doubt that his name stands everywhere for the most splendid vision of cinema as it could be, if one had money and power. Both of these Korda had, although several times he was close to bankruptcy, living on pure Hungarian charm and know-how. He at least had a dream that came near reality on several occasions.

Korda had two younger brothers, Zoltan, who worked with him as a director, and Vincent, who was an art director; both were outstanding in their fields. Alexander worked as a journalist and film magazine editor before he directed his first film in Hungary in 1914. He had labored long in the cinematic fields of Vienna and Berlin when finally in 1926 his film production of A Modern Dubarry earned him a contract in Hollywood with First National, where his initial film was the extravagantly beautiful The Private Life of Helen of Troy, starring his wife Maria Corda as Helen. It brought him instant recognition. He directed four features starring Billie Dove (who should have played Helen of Troy for him): The Stolen Bride, The Night Watch, The Yellow Lily, and Her Private Life, a remake of Zoë Akins’s play, which Corinne Griffith had filmed earlier under its stage title, Declasse. Korda also directed a sound feature starring Griffith, Lilies of the Field. Alexander Korda could soon write his own ticket.

He did just that in 1931, leaving Hollywood to return to England where he set up his own production company, London Film Productions. There he was almost fully occupied with production details, and only directed eight of the many films which his company produced. It was an exciting era for an ambitious producer like Korda. His company’s product was so lavish that he seemed in a fair way not only to rival Hollywood but to surpass it. His first big success was The Private Life of Henry VIII, starring Charles Laughton as Henry and with Merle Oberon making her debut as the unfortunate Anne Boleyn. Korda then married Oberon and started to set the stage for her stardom. Hers was not the only career Korda established, for he had much to do with the film careers of Laurence Olivier, Vivian Leigh, Robert Donat, and Leslie Howard, among others. He was the power behind it all, the man who set up financial deals for pictures that starred these actors.

While the pictures he directed, like Rembrandt, That Hamilton Woman, and Vacation from Marriage, were done in exquisite taste, Korda was also involved in the production of such pictures as Catherine the Great, The Scarlet Pimpernel, Elephant Boy, The Ghost Goes West, Drums, The Four Feathers, The Thief of Bagdad, The Fallen Idol, and The Third Man. Three times Korda built and rebuilt his company, and the third time it was with national aid. Even after the Korda empire collapsed he was able to secure new financial alliances which allowed him to keep producing until his death in 1956. His name stood for glory, and when, after 1947, his name ceased to appear as part of the film credits, the lustre surrounding a London Films production vanished.

—DeWitt Bodeen

KORDA, Zoltan

Nationality: Hungarian. Born: Zoltan Kellner, Turkeve, 3 June 1895; brother of directors Alexander and Vincent Korda; adopted the surname Korda after his older brother Alexander had done so. Military Service: Served in Hungarian cavalry. Career: Worked as a camera operator and an editor; became director with London Films, run by brother Alexander Korda. Awards: Best Director (with Robert J. Flaherty), Venice Film Festival, for Elephant Boy, 1937; Best Overall Artistic Contribution (with Jean Renoir), Venice Film Festival, for La Grande illusion, 1937; Best Screenplay (with Sacha Guitry and Christian-Jaque), Venice Film Festival, for Les Perles de la couronne, 1937; Best Director (with Carl Froelich), Venice Film Festival, for Heimat, 1938; Grand Biennale Art Trophy (with Walt Disney), Venice Film Festival, for Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs, 1938; Bronze Berlin Bear, Berlin International Film Festival, for Cry, the Beloved Country, 1952. Died: Hollywood, California, 13 October 1961.

Films as Director:

- 1918 Károly bakák
- 1927 Die Elf Teufel (Eleven Devils)
- 1920 A Csodagyerek (+ sc)
- 1933 Men of Tomorrow
- 1933 Cash (For Love or Money) (If I Were Rich)
- 1935 Sanders of the River
- 1936 Forget Me Not (Forever Yours) (The Magic Voice)
- 1937 Revolt in the Desert; Elephant Boy
- 1938 The Drum (Drums)
- 1939 The Four Feathers (+ sc)
- 1940 The Thief of Bagdad (Bergen, Powell, Whelan) (uncredited d; + assoc pr); Conquest of the Air
- 1942 Jungle Book
- 1943 Sahara (+ sc)
- 1945 Counter-Attack (One against Seven) (+ pr)
- 1947 The Macomber Affair
- 1948 A Woman’s Vengeance (The Gioconda Smile) (+ pr)
1951  Cry, the Beloved Country (African Fury) (+ pr)
1955  Storm over the Nile (The Four Feathers) (+ pr)

Other Films:

1930  Women Everywhere (story)

Publications

On KORDA: books—

Cripps, T.  Slow Fade to Black, 1977.

On KORDA: articles—

‘Zoltan Korda,’’ in  Film Dope (Nottingham), no. 31, January 1985.

* * *

Along with older brother Alexander and younger brother Vincent, director Zoltan Korda played an important role in the revitalization of British cinema in the 1930s, after the passage of the Cinematographic Act in 1927 created financial conditions favorable for domestic production that could compete with Hollywood. Assimilated Hungarian Jews of immense artistic talent, the Kordas seem unlikely candidates for such a role, but turbulent social and commercial conditions within their own country, as well as a lack of good fortune with production in Austria, Germany, and the United States, brought them to Britain. Alexander founded London Films in 1931, and it remained an important center of production until his death in 1956. Though Zoltan directed films for other producers, sometimes with little success, he did his best work in partnership with his forceful and flamboyant older brother, Vincent, who became one of the most noted art directors of the period, contributed importantly to a number of Zoltan’s films.

Service during World War I with the Austro-Hungarian army meant that Zoltan was away while Alexander was founding the Hungarian film industry virtually single-handed and beginning publication of that country’s first serious film journal. In addition to the army after being wounded in a gas attack, Zoltan joined Alexander’s production team at Budapest’s Corvin studios and worked as an editor. It was at that point that he adopted Alexander’s new surname, adopted from the Latin motto sursum corda or ‘raise up your hearts.’ Though not communists themselves, Alexander and Zoltan cooperated enthusiastically in the nationalization of the film industry during Hungary’s brief flirtation with state communism in 1919. The right wing coup that toppled the communists and the establishment of the anti-Semitic Horthy regime led initially to Alexander’s arrest, but Zoltan, a wounded former officer, was able to obtain his release. Fleeing the country, the Kordas tried their hands in Vienna and then Berlin, where Alexander achieved a modest success producing a few films, one of which, Die Elf Teufel (Eleven Devils), Zoltan directed in 1927. Alexander soon left Germany for Hollywood, followed by Zoltan, but the brothers made little impression on the American film industry.

Established in Britain, Alexander, soon joined there by Zoltan, initially turned his hand to the making of ‘quotas quickies,’ low-budget programmers designed to fulfill the terms of the 1927 act, which required exhibitors to screen a certain percentage of domestically produced films. Alexander, however, was not content merely to fill such a niche. His bawdy costume drama, The Private Life of Henry VIII, made a modest fortune and, more important, was the first British film in many years to be exhibited profitably on the other side of the Atlantic. The evolving Korda formula, soon taken up in earnest by Zoltan, was simple enough: an almost jingoistic celebration of the empire and aristocratic British traditions, with an emphasis on engaging, exotic spectacle.

With Sanders of the River, Zoltan proved that he could oversee as successful a film as Alexander. Appropriately derived from an Edgar Wallace story (Wallace was perhaps Britain’s most popular middlebrow novelist at the time), Sanders portrays the success of an undergunned and outnumbered British district commissioner in putting down an incipient tribal rebellion in colonial Nigeria. Though many of its interiors, shot in England, have a stagy look, the film is in fact a semi-documentary. Korda traveled to Nigeria with a crew of twelve to spend four months filming authentic exteriors and, especially, native dances and other ceremonies. The plot hinges on the rivalry between a ‘good’ chief (that is, one loyal to the British) and a ‘bad’ chief (that is, one who resents colonial rule). Paul Robeson is, perhaps strangely, cast as the semi-articulate good chief, whose obeisance to Sanders was seen as somewhat excessive by some even at the time. Robeson eventually condemned his participation in the project, protesting, somewhat disingenuously, that the resulting film surprised him with its unflinching support of colonialism and the paternalistic racism upon which it depends. Sanders, no doubt, provided unquestioning support of empire and the necessity for the European stewardship of Africa. Audiences in Britain and the United States, however, were probably more intrigued by its generous portrayal of exotic animals and peoples, including unabashedly bare-breasted women. The film is less political tract and more adventurous romance in the tradition not only of Wallace, but also of H. Rider Haggard and Rudyard Kipling (one of Korda’s favorite authors).

Zoltan’s next solo projects were in the same vein; they made London Films a good deal of money and helped establish the British film industry, if only briefly, as an international rival to Hollywood, formerly the world’s sole supplier of such spectacular fluff. Elephant Boy, adapted from a Kipling short story, skillfully blends actual footage of the Indian jungle (footage shot by Robert Flaherty, the famed documentarian) with a flimsy plot and studio interiors. The film’s star is the adolescent boy Sabu, a kind of Indian Tarzan who communicates with the animals and aids in the capture of wild elephants for white hunter Peterson, whose livelihood depends on their successful trapping. The formula, including a central role played by Sabu, was recycled in Drum, where the young man plays a youthful satrap who is nearly destroyed by the maneuverings of his anti-British uncle. As in Sanders, it is British authority that intervenes to save the legitimate government that is conveniently friendly to them. Once again, authentic Indian exteriors lend the film a contemporary
KOZINTSEV, Grigori

Films as Director:

1924 Pokhozdeniya Oktyabrina (The Adventures of Octyabrina) (co-d with Leonid Trauberg, co-sc)
1925 Michki protiv Youdenitsa (Mishka against Yudenitch) (co-d with Trauberg, co-sc)
1926 Chyortovo Koleso (The Devil’s Wheel) (co-d with Trauberg); Shinel (The Cloak) (co-d with Trauberg)
1927 Bratichka (Little Brother) (co-d with Trauberg, co-sc); S.V.D. (Soyuz Velikogo Dela) (The Club of the Big Deed) (co-d with Trauberg)
1929 Novyi Vavilon (The New Babylon) (co-d with Trauberg)
1931 Odna (Alone) (co-d with Trauberg, co-sc)
1935 Yunost Maksima (The Youth of Maxim) (co-d with Trauberg, co-sc)
1937 Vozvrashcheniye Maksima (The Return of Maxim) (co-d with Trauberg, co-sc)
1939 Vyborgskaya storona (The Vyborg Side) (co-d with Trauberg, co-sc)
1945 Prostye Lyudi (Plain People) (released in re-edited version 1956, which Kozintsev disowned) (co-d with Trauberg, co-sc)
1947 Pirogov
1953 Belinski (+ co-sc)
1957 Don Quixote
1963 Hamlet (+ sc)
1971 Korol Lir (King Lear) (+ sc)

Publications

By KOZINTSEV: books—

Glbokie ekran, Moscow, 1971.
King Lear: The Space of Tragedy, Berkeley, California, 1977.

By KOZINTSEV: articles—

“The Hamlet within Me,” in Films and Filming (London), September 1962.
“Prostrantsvo tragedii,” in Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), January, April, June, August, and November 1972, and January 1973.

—R. Barton Palmer

KOZINTSEV, Directors, 4th Edition

semi-documentary look that is only somewhat at odds with its archly conservative politics and evocation of a Kipling esque past.

More successful was Korda’s version of the imperialist classic Four Feathers, which had already been filmed several times previously. Four Feathers is a meditation on the loyalty and responsibility demanded of the ruling classes; it simply assumes the rightness of British rule in Africa, which forms the exciting background to what is essentially a morality play. Refusing to sail with his regiment to the Sudan, a young officer, the scion of a military family, overcomes his disgrace by traveling to Africa, disguising himself as a native, and helping out his regiment and friends as they defeat the Khalifa and his “fuzzy wuzzies.” Novelist A.E.W. Mason’s story depends on a seemingly unending series of implausibilities, but the film manages an impressive realism through its reliance on authentic exteriors; even the London sequences are startlingly unstagy. Battle scenes, making use of native extras, are especially striking and well integrated within the story; unlike Drum, the film achieves a nice balance between plot and spectacle, for which it was nearly universally praised.

At the close of the thirties, the boom in British production came to an end, a finale symbolized perhaps by the overblown The Flag of Baghdad, which Zoltan directed with a number of others. Here Kipling’s story was overloaded with an ineffective subplot and a surfeit of spectacle in which Sabu, sometimes reduced to miniature proportions, seems lost.

Zoltan Korda’s contribution to film history rests primarily on his role in London Film’s imperialist epics, though he showed no little talent in projects not overseen by his brother Alexander. Sahara, a wartime Hollywood production, demonstrates Korda’s ability to elicit and manage effective performances from a varied ensemble cast; it is a suspenseful, well-paced film, with action sequences, benefiting from U.S. Army assistance, that are nearly up to the high proportions, seems lost.

At the close of the thirties, the boom in British production came to an end, a finale symbolized perhaps by the overblown The Flag of Baghdad, which Zoltan directed with a number of others. Here Kipling’s story was overloaded with an ineffective subplot and a surfeit of spectacle in which Sabu, sometimes reduced to miniature proportions, seems lost.

Zoltan Korda’s contribution to film history rests primarily on his role in London Film’s imperialist epics, though he showed no little talent in projects not overseen by his brother Alexander. Sahara, a wartime Hollywood production, demonstrates Korda’s ability to elicit and manage effective performances from a varied ensemble cast; it is a suspenseful, well-paced film, with action sequences, benefiting from U.S. Army assistance, that are nearly up to the high

Films as Director:

1924 Pokhozdeniya Oktyabrina (The Adventures of Octyabrina) (co-d with Leonid Trauberg, co-sc)
1925 Michki protiv Youdenitsa (Mishka against Yudenitch) (co-d with Trauberg, co-sc)
1926 Chyortovo Koleso (The Devil’s Wheel) (co-d with Trauberg); Shinel (The Cloak) (co-d with Trauberg)
1927 Bratichka (Little Brother) (co-d with Trauberg, co-sc); S.V.D. (Soyuz Velikogo Dela) (The Club of the Big Deed) (co-d with Trauberg)
1929 Novyi Vavilon (The New Babylon) (co-d with Trauberg)
1931 Odna (Alone) (co-d with Trauberg, co-sc)
1935 Yunost Maksima (The Youth of Maxim) (co-d with Trauberg, co-sc)
1937 Vozvrashcheniye Maksima (The Return of Maxim) (co-d with Trauberg, co-sc)
1939 Vyborgskaya storona (The Vyborg Side) (co-d with Trauberg, co-sc)
1945 Prostye Lyudi (Plain People) (released in re-edited version 1956, which Kozintsev disowned) (co-d with Trauberg, co-sc)
1947 Pirogov
1953 Belinski (+ co-sc)
1957 Don Quixote
1963 Hamlet (+ sc)
1971 Korol Lir (King Lear) (+ sc)

Publications

By KOZINTSEV: books—

Glbokie ekran, Moscow, 1971.
King Lear: The Space of Tragedy, Berkeley, California, 1977.

By KOZINTSEV: articles—

“The Hamlet within Me,” in Films and Filming (London), September 1962.
“Prostrantsvo tragedii,” in Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), January, April, June, August, and November 1972, and January 1973.

—R. Barton Palmer

“Gogoliada,” in Isskustvo Kino (Moscow), May, June and July 1974.

“‘Iz pisem raznyh let,’” in Isskustvo Kino (Moscow), May 1983.

“Gody s Ejzenštejnom,” in Isskustvo Kino (Moscow), no. 8, August 1994.

“Iz pisem kinematografistam’” (letters), in Isskustvo Kino (Moscow), no. 7, July 1995.

On KOZINTSEV: books—

Verdone, Mario, and Barthelemy Amengual, La Feks, Paris, 1970.

Leaming, Barbara, Grigori Kozintsev, Boston, 1980.

On KOZINTSEV: articles—

Barteneva, Yevgentiya, “‘One Day with King Lear,’” in Soviet Film (Moscow), no. 9, 1969.

Obituaries, in Isskustvo Kino (Moscow), October 1973.

Hejtic, L., and others, “‘G.M. Kozincev, kakim my ego znali . . . ,’” in Isskustvo Kino (Moscow), November 1974.

Shklovsky, V., and others, “‘Iz myslej o G.M. Kozinceve,’” in Isskustvo Kino (Moscow), April 1980.

Gerasimov, Sergei, and Iosif Heifitz, “‘Licnost’ mastera,’” in Isskustvo Kino (Moscow), March 1985.

* * *

A man of enormous enthusiasms, bursting with theories which were always intended to be put into practice as soon as possible, Kozintsev started his career at the age of fifteen by giving public performances of plays in his family’s sitting room in Kiev. When he went to art school in Petrograd he met Sergei Yutkevich, and the two boys joined with Leonid Trauberg to found FEKS, the Factory of the Eccentric Actor. They produced a book on Eccentrism, “published in Eccentropolis (formerly Petrograd),” and they produced all sorts of street theater, an amalgam of music hall, jazz, circus, and posters, meanwhile exhibiting their paintings at avant-garde shows.

Kozintsev was barely nineteen when he and Trauberg brought all this flashy modernism, their love of tricks and devices, their commitment to a new society, and their boundless energy together in their first film, The Adventures of Oktyabrina. Through their next few productions the two young directors perfected their art, learned how to control the fireworks, and developed a mature style which, however, never lost its distinctive FEKS flavor.

In The New Babylon, a story about the Paris Commune of 1870, largely set in a fantastic department store, they reached that standard of excellence only achieved by the greatest silent films: in complete control of the medium, using Enei’s brilliant art direction to the full, but peopling a gripping story with human characters only the correct degree larger than life that the medium demanded. A young composer, Shostakovich, was commissioned to write the accompanying score.

Kozintsev and Trauberg were themselves a little disappointed with their first sound film, Alone, a contemporary subject, although it was by no means a failure and it at least brought Shostakovich to the notice of the world at large. For the Maxim Trilogy they returned to an “‘historical-revolutionary’” subject with tremendous success, building on their own experience with New Babylon, but completely integrating sound and dialogue rather than merely adding them to the previous recipe.

Sadly, the trilogy was really the last work of this highly successful partnership: their Plain People, about the wartime evacuation of a Leningrad factory to Central Asia, ran into serious official trouble and, although completed in 1945, was not released until 1956 in a version that Kozintsev refused to acknowledge.

For the rest of his independent career he remained loyal to the Leningrad studios and, perhaps because of the troubles with Plain People, devoted himself exclusively to historical or literary themes. After two “biopics”—Pirogov and Belinski—he turned to Don Quixote, which was well received at home and abroad. His Hamlet, with its brooding Scandinavian background, superb photography, and beautifully handled acting, won even wider international acclaim, as did his even more brooding and original King Lear. These films were not merely very accomplished interpretations of Shakespeare’s plays: they were the result of Kozintsev’s own “brooding,” years of deep research and careful thought, electrified, however, by equally profound emotions—the final flowering, in fact, of that enthusiastic fifteen-year-old in Kiev.

Kozintsev himself wrote to Yutkevich after King Lear, “‘I am certain that every one of us . . . in the course of his whole life, shoots a single film of his own. This film of one’s own is made . . . in your head, through other work, on paper . . . in conversation: but it lives, breathes, somehow prolongs into old age something that began its existence in childhood!’” And indeed King Lear still combines Kozintsev’s original emotionalism with his commitment to a cause; it is no accident that, despite its humanistic values, the film can be analyzed in terms of dialectical materialism.

Kozintsev’s enthusiasm never deserted him. Not long before his death, after a private London showing of King Lear, the director was asked a question about which translation of the play he had used. Kozintsev, waving his arms in excitement, his eyes flashing, his voice rising several octaves, launched himself into a passionate eulogy and defense of the officially discredited poet Boris Pasternak. So Kozintsev was an “‘eccentric actor’” to the last—but, as always, with a deep concern for humanity and truth, regardless of any personal consequences.

—Robert Dunbar

KRAMER, Stanley

Films as Director:

1954 Not as a Stranger (+ pr)
1957 The Pride and the Passion (+ pr)
1958 The Defiant Ones (+ pr)
1959 On the Beach (+ pr)
1960 Inherit the Wind (+ pr)
1961 Judgement at Nuremberg (+ pr)
1963 It's a Mad Mad Mad Mad World (+ pr)
1965 Ship of Fools (+ pr)
1967 Guess Who's Coming to Dinner? (+ pr)
1969 The Secret of Santa Vittoria (+ pr)
1970 RPM (+ pr)
1971 Bless the Beasts and Children (+ pr)
1973 Oklahoma Crude (+ pr)
1976 The Domino Principle (+ pr)
1979 The Runner Stumbles (+ pr)

Other Films:

1948 So This Is New York (Fleischer) (pr)
1949 Champion (Robson) (pr); Home of the Brave (Robson) (pr)
1950 The Men (Zinnemann) (pr); Cyrano de Bergerac (Gordon) (pr)
1951 Death of a Salesman (Benedek) (pr)
1952 My Six Convicts (Fregonese) (pr); The Sniper (Dmytryk) (pr); High Noon (Zinnemann) (pr); The Happy Time (Fleischer) (pr); The Four Poster (Reis) (pr); Eight Iron Men (Dmytryk) (pr); The Member of the Wedding (Zinnemann) (pr)
1953 The Juggler (Dmytryk) (pr); The Five Thousand Fingers of Dr. T (Rowland) (pr)
1954 The Wild One (Benedek) (pr); The Caine Mutiny (Dmytryk) (pr)
1956 Pressure Point (Cornfield) (pr)
1963 A Child Is Waiting (Cassavetes) (pr)
1964 Invitation to a Gunfighter (Wilson) (pr)

Publications

By KRAMER: books—

By KRAMER: articles—

“Sending Myself the Message,” in Films and Filming (London), February 1964.
Interview, in Directors at Work, edited by Bernard Kantor and others, New York, 1970.

On KRAMER: books—

On KRAMER: articles—

Omatsu, Mary, “Guess Who Came to Lunch?,” in Take One (Montreal), vol. 1, no. 9, 1968.
“A Recipe for Greatness,” in Films and Filming (London), March 1968.
Levy, S., “Save This Film,” in American Film, April 1991.
Nosferatu (San Sebastian), February 1994.

***

Stanley Kramer was among the first of the successful, postwar independent producers in Hollywood. His work offers testimony to the virtues of such a position in controlling subject matter, while also confirming the power of the tacit constraints that limit social criticism in Hollywood. Films produced, or produced and directed, by Stanley Kramer remain close to the typical styles of postwar Hollywood narrative: location realism in The Sniper, The Juggler, On the Beach, and Judgment at Nuremberg; a clean narrative trajectory, except for somewhat “preachy” scenes when characters discuss the overt issues confronting them (medical care for the psychopath in The Sniper and Pressure Point, the need to support those with legal authority in High Noon or The Caine Mutiny); and a stress on the dilemmas of particular individuals via the mechanisms of psychological realism, although Kramer’s characters bear a greater than average burden of representing social types and prominent social attitudes or beliefs.

Frequent attention to topical social issues gives Kramer’s work its greatest distinction. These issues include criminality vs. mental illness, G.I. rehabilitation, racism, campus unrest in the sixties, juvenile delinquency, the need for and limits to legitimate authority, and the hazard of nuclear war. However, some of Kramer’s work is only obliquely issue-related (The Four Poster, Cyrano de Bergerac, It’s a Mad Mad Mad Mad World, and The 5000 Fingers of Dr. T). Even as fewer and fewer topical, social-issue films were being produced during the 1950s, Kramer continued to bring such fare to the screen. His films are not radical or revolutionary by any means. They tend to plead for a respect for the existing institutions of law and authority, although they do point to serious flaws in need of redress. They lack the idiosyncratic, more stylistically expressive sensibility of filmmakers less overtly socially conscious who nevertheless raise similar issues, such as Samuel Fuller or John Cassavetes. Even so, Kramer’s films continue a long-standing Hollywood tradition of marrying topical issues to dramatic forms, a tradition in which we find many of Hollywood’s more openly progressive films.

In many ways, Kramer’s films address the issues those who were blacklisted during the 1950s hoped to confront. Kramer himself was not blacklisted, though he was and is still regarded as a socially concerned liberal.

In fact, Stanley Kramer’s career is ripe for reinvestigation. Criticized or dismissed by the left for failing to support black-listed individuals or for not taking a sufficiently critical view of existing institutions, Kramer has also been criticized and dismissed by auteurist critics for failing to evince a personal-enough stylistic signature (or the kind of fascination evoked by the romantic individualism of a Fuller or Ray). Structuralists have also overlooked his oeuvre and so it remains a scarcely studied, poorly assessed body of very significant work—as revealing of the limits of critical approaches as it may be of Kramer’s own artistic or political sensibilities.

—Bill Nichols

KUBRICK, Stanley

Films as Director:

1952 Day of the Fight (doc) (+ pr, sc, ph, ed); Flying Padre (doc) (+ sc, ph)
1953 The Seafarers (+ ph); Fear and Desire (+ pr, co-sc, ph, ed)
1955 Killer’s Kiss (+ co-pr, co-sc, ph, ed)
1956 The Killing (+ co-pr, sc)
1957 Paths of Glory (+ co-pr, co-sc)
1960 Spartacus
1962 Lolita

Publications

By KUBRICK: books—

By KUBRICK: articles—

“Kubrick Reveals All,” in Cinéaste (New York), Summer 1968.
Interview with Phillip Strick and Penelope Houston, in Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1972.

1964 Dr. Strangelove: Or, How I Learned to Stop Worrying and Love the Bomb (+ pr, co-sc)
1968 2001: A Space Odyssey (+ pr, co-sc, special effects designer)
1971 A Clockwork Orange (+ pr, sc)
1975 Barry Lyndon (+ pr, sc)
1980 The Shining (+ pr, co-sc)
1987 Full Metal Jacket (+ pr, co-sc)
1999 Eyes Wide Shut (+ pr, co-sc)
Interview with Michel Ciment, in Positif (Paris), June 1972.

On KUBRICK: books—

On KUBRICK: articles—

Burgess, Jackson, “The Antimilitarism of Stanley Kubrick,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Fall 1964.

Feldmann, Hans, “Kubrick and His Discontents,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Fall 1976.

“Full Metal Jacket Section” of Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), vol. 16, no. 4, 1988.

Combs, Richard, “Kubrick Talks!” in Film Comment (New York), September-October 1996.

* * *

Few American directors were able to work within the studio system of the American film industry with the independence that Stanley Kubrick achieved. By steadily building a reputation as a filmmaker of international importance, he gained full artistic control over his films, guiding the production of each of them from the earliest stages of planning and scripting through post-production. Kubrick was able to capitalize on the wide artistic freedom that the major studios have accorded him because he learned the business of filmmaking from the ground up.

In the early 1950s he turned out two documentary shorts for RKO; he was then able to secure financing for two low-budget features which he said were “crucial in helping me to learn my craft,” but which he would otherwise have preferred to forget. He made both films almost singlehandedly, doing his own camerawork, sound, and editing, besides directing the films. Then, in 1955, he met James Harris, an aspiring producer; together they made The Killing, about a group of small-time crooks who rob a race track. The Killing not only turned a modest profit but prompted the now-legendary remark of Time magazine that Kubrick “has shown more imagination with dialogue and camera than Hollywood has seen since the obstreperous Orson Welles went riding out of town.”

Kubrick next acquired the rights to Humphrey Cobb’s 1935 novel The Paths of Glory, and in 1957 turned it into one of the most uncompromising antiwar films ever made. Peter Cowie is cited in Major Film Directors of the American and British Cinema as saying that Kubrick uses his camera in the film “unflinchingly, like a weapon,” as it sweeps across the slopes to record the wholesale slaughter of a division.

Spartacus, a spectacle about slavery in pre-Christian Rome, Kubrick recalled as “the only film over which I did not have absolute control,” because the star, Kirk Douglas, was also the movie’s producer. Although Spartacus turned out to be one of the better spear-and-sandal epics, Kubrick vowed never to make another film unless he was assured of total artistic freedom, and he never did. Lolita, about a middle-aged man’s obsessive infatuation with his pre-teen step-daughter, was the director’s first comedy. “The surprising thing about Lolita,” Pauline Kael wrote in For Keeps, “is how enjoyable it is. It’s the first new American comedy since those great days in the 1940s when Preston Sturges re-created comedy with verbal slapstick. Lolita is black slapstick and at times it’s so far out that you gasp as you laugh.”

For those who appreciate the dark humor of Lolita, it is not hard to see that it was just a short step from that film to Kubrick’s masterpiece in that genre, Dr. Strangelove: Or How I Learned to Stop Worrying and Love the Bomb, concerning a lunatic American general’s decision to launch an attack inside Russia. The theme implicit in the film is man’s final capitulation to his own machines of destruction. Kubrick further examined his dark vision of man in a mechanistic age in 2001: A Space Odyssey. Kubrick’s view of life, as it is reflected in 2001, seems to be somewhat more optimistic than it was in his previous pictures. 2001 holds out hope for the progress of mankind through man’s creative encounters with the universe. In A Clockwork Orange, however, the future appears to be less promising than it did in 2001; in the earlier film Kubrick showed (in the “person” of the talking computer, Hal) the machine becoming human, whereas in A Clockwork Orange he shows man becoming a machine through brainwashing and thought control.

Ultimately, however, the latter film only reiterates in somewhat darker terms a repeated theme in all of Kubrick’s previous work: man must retain his humanity if he is to survive in a dehumanized, highly mechanized world. Moreover, A Clockwork Orange echoes the warning of Dr. Strangelove and 2001 that man must strive to gain mastery over himself if he is to master the machines of his own invention.

After a trio of films set in the future, Kubrick reached back into the past and adapted Thackeray’s historical novel Barry Lyndon to the screen in 1975. Kubrick portrayed Barry, an eighteen-century rogue, and his times in the same critical fashion as Thackeray did before him. The film echoes a theme which appears in much of the director’s best work, that through human error the best-laid plans often go awry; and hence man is often thwarted in his efforts to achieve his goals. The central character in Lolita fails to possess a nymphet exclusively; the “balance of terror” between nations designed to halt the nuclear arms race in Dr. Strangelove does not succeed in averting global destruction; and modern technology turns against its human instigators in Dr. Strangelove, 2001, and A Clockwork Orange. In this list of films about human failure the story of Barry Lyndon easily finds a place, for its hero’s lifelong schemes to become a rich nobleman in the end come to nothing. And the same can be said for the frustrated writing aspirations of the emotionally disturbed hero of Kubrick’s provocative “thinking man’s thriller,” The Shining, derived from the horror novel by Stephen King.

It is clear, therefore, that Kubrick could make any source material fit comfortably into the fabric of his work as a whole, whether it be a remote and almost forgotten Thackeray novel, or a disturbing story about the Vietnam war by a contemporary writer, as with Full Metal Jacket, based on the book by Gustav Hasford.

Kubrick’s last film, Eyes Wide Shut, derived from a controversial novella by Arthur Schnitzler called Dream Story, focuses on Dr. William Harford (Tom Cruise), who jeopardizes his marriage by making a foray into the unsavory netherworld of the decadent rich in New York City. Released shortly after Kubrick’s death in 1999, Kubrick’s last film indicates that he was still intent on taking the temperature of a sick society. It is evident that Kubrick continued right to the end of his career to create films that would stimulate his audience to think about serious human problems, as his pictures did from the beginning. His canon of films testifies that Kubrick valued the artistic freedom which worked so hard to win and used so well.

—Gene D. Phillips

KULESHOV, Lev

Films as Director:

1918 Proyekt inzhenera Praita (Engineer Prite’s Project) (+ art d)
1919 The Unfinished Love Song (co-d, art d); Newsreels: Vskrytiye moschi dei Sergiia Radonezhskogo (The Exhumation of the Holy Remains of St. Sergius of Radonezh) (co-d); Reviziya VTiSK v Tverskoi Gubernii (The VTiSK Inspection in the Tver Province); Ural (+ sc); Pervoe maya 1920 v Moskve (May 1, 1920 in Moscow)

1920 Na krasnom fronte (On the Red Front) (+ sc, role)
1924 Kavkazskie mineralniye vody (Mineral Waters of the Caucasus); Neobychnyi priklyucheniyamistera Vesta v stranye bolshevikov (The Extraordinary Adventures of Mr. West in the Land of the Bolsheviks) (+ art d)

1925 Luch smerti (Death Ray) (+ role)
1926 Po zakonu (By the Law)
1927 Vasha znakomaya (Your Acquaintance)
1929 Vesolaya kanareika (The Happy Canary); Dva-Buldi-Dva (The Two Buldiz) (co-d); Parovoz B-1000 (Locomotive No. B-1000) (unreleased)

1930 Sorok serdets (Forty Hearts)
1933 GORIZONT (Horizon) (+ co-sc); Velikii uteshitel (The Great Consoler) (+ co-sc, art d)
1935 Dokhunda (unreleased)
1940 Sibirianki (The Siberians)
1942 Klyatva Timura (Timur’s Oath); Uchitelnitsa Kartashova (The Teacher Kartashova) (unreleased)
1944 My s Urala (We Are from the Urals) (co-d)

Other Films:

1917 Nabat (The Alarm) (Bauer) (co-art d); Za schastiem (For Happiness) (Bauer) (art d, role); Teni lyubvi (Shadows of Love) (Gromov) (art d); Zhizn’treh dnei (Three Days’ Life) (Gromov) (art d); Korol’ Parizha (King of Paris) (Bauer and Rakmanova) (art d); Chernaya lyubov (Black King) (Strizhevsky) (art d, role)

1918 Vdova (The Widow) (Komiessarzhewsky) (art d); Miss Meri (Miss Mary) (Tchaikovsky) (art d); Slyakov’ bulvaruyna (Boulevard Slush) (Tchaikovsky) (art d)
1919 Thérese Raquin (Tchaikovsky) (art d) (unreleased); Son Tarasa (Taras’ Dream) (Zhelyabuzhsky) (short) (ed); Smelchak (Daredevil) (Narakov and Turkin) (co-ed)

1930 Sasha (Khokhlova) (co-sc)
1934 Krazha zreniya (Theft of Sight) (Obolensky) (artistic supervisor)
1940 Sluchai v vulkane (Incident in a Volcano) (Schneider) (directorial advisor)

Publications

By KULESHOV: books—

Eisenstein: Potiemkine, with V. Shlovsky and E. Tisse, Moscow, 1926.
The Art of Cinema [in Russian], Moscow, 1929.
Fundamentals of Film Direction [in Russian], Moscow, 1941.

Sobranie sochinenii v trekh tomakh [Collected Works in Three Volumes], Moscow, 1987–89.

By KULESHOV: articles—

Interview with André Labarthe and Bertrand Tavernier, in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), May/June 1970.

On KULESHOV: books—

On KULESHOV: articles—

Hill, Steven, “Kuleshov—Prophet without Honor?,” in Film Culture (New York), Spring 1967.
Gromov, E., in Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), September and October 1982.

Soviet Film (Moscow), no. 1, 1985.

* * *

546
Lev Kuleshov is known to Russian filmmakers quite simply as the “father of Soviet cinema.” He began his career in cinema before the Revolution working with Evgeni Bauer and became one of Soviet cinema’s leading film directors and theorists. Vsevolod Pudovkin, who was one of his pupils, once wrote, “We make films, Kuleshov made cinema.”

It was the desire to establish a theoretical foundation for the legitimacy of cinema as an art form independent of theatre that led Kuleshov to be the first to distinguish montage as the key element specific to cinema in an article written in 1917. This idea was to be taken up and developed by various schools of Soviet filmmaking, above all by Eisenstein and Vertov, but the distinctive feature of Kuleshov’s theory was a belief in serial montage, a brick-by-brick construction of a filmic narrative.

In the early post-Revolutionary period, when there was a desperate shortage of everything, including film stock, Kuleshov worked at the new State Film School with a small workshop of actors, refining his techniques in the so-called “films without film.” Central to these was the experiment that has become known as the “Kuleshov effect,” which demonstrated that the viewer’s interpretation of an individual shot is determined by the context (or sequence) in which that shot is seen. The same shot could be interpreted differently in different contexts. But Kuleshov also appreciated the importance of acting and was responsible for developing the notion of the actor as naturshchik or “model,” deriving from the Delsartian school of acting technique. By economical and stylised gestures, refined during an intensive period of rehearsal, the naturshchik could convey precise meanings to the audience in accordance with the director’s plan. Kuleshov would produce an “action score” for every movement in his films.

These techniques were first applied on a large scale in Kuleshov’s first feature film, the highly original satirical comedy The Extraordinary Adventures of Mr. West in the Land of the Bolsheviks (1924), in which Pudovkin played one of the criminals. The apotheosis of the naturshchik was the role of “the Countess,” played by Kuleshov’s wife, the extraordinary actress Alexandra Khokhlova. The film’s technique also demonstrated one of Kuleshov’s other preoccupations of the period, an obsession with the characteristic features of American cinema, which he dubbed amerikanshchina, “Americanism” or “Americanitis,” and which included fast action, stylised gesture and, above all, rapid cutting and maximum economy. There are no lacunae in a Kuleshov film.

His next film, The Death Ray, a thriller, was popular with audiences but not with officialdom. On the other hand, By the Law, set in the Yukon during the Gold Rush and based on a story by Jack London, was a great critical success. But his next three films were variously regarded as failures: Your Acquaintance, The Happy Canary and The Two Bulldogs. The end of the 1920s was no time for experimentation: filmmakers were increasingly expected to fulfill the “social command” associated with the First Five-Year Plan by making films that were “accessible to the millions.”

After this, Kuleshov came under increasingly frequent attack from the authorities for his alleged Formalism and his apparent inability (widely shared) to produce a film on a contemporary theme. His subsequent films include at least one further masterpiece, The Great Consoled, which can be understood on many different, but sometimes overlapping, levels. It confronts the problem of differing layers of reality at a time when the doctrine of socialist realism was being promulgated and a single officially inspired version of reality held up as a paradigm. The Great Consoled was Kuleshov’s first sound film, again starring Khokhlova, and still demonstrating a fascination with experimenting to push cinema to its limits. His other, later films were less distinguished, and he complained vociferously about his treatment at the hands of the authorities. Nevertheless, in 1935 he received the title of Merited Artist of the RSFSR.

Throughout his career Kuleshov was an eminent teacher; in 1939 he was made a professor at the State Institute of Cinema, and in 1944 he became its director. His theories of cinema are expounded in Russian in his publications The Art of Cinema (1929), The Rehearsal Method in Cinema and The Practice of Film Direction (both 1935), and The Foundations of Film Direction (1941). The importance of his role as teacher can be measured by the fact that almost all these books were published at a time when he was no longer able to make films himself.

Kuleshov’s career and influence have been much under-appreciated in the West. This is mainly because so much of his significance lies in his scarcely translated theoretical work, known largely by indirect repute, and in his teaching, the impact of which is almost impossible to quantify. But any Russian film scholar asked to list the most important figures in the history of Soviet-era cinema will almost certainly begin with Kuleshov, whether as filmmaker, theorist, or teacher.

—Richard Taylor

KUROSAWA, Akira

Nationality: Japanese. Born: Tokyo, 23 March 1910. Education: Kuroda Primary School, Edogawa; Keika High School; studied at Doshusha School of Western Painting, 1927. Family: Married Yoko Yaguchi, 1945 (died, 1985), one son (producer Hisao Kurosawa), one daughter. Career: Painter, illustrator, and member, Japan Proletariat Artists’ Group, from late 1920s; assistant director, P.C.L. Studios (Photo-Chemical Laboratory, later Toho Motion Picture Co.), studying in Kajiro Yamamoto’s production group, from 1936; also scriptwriter, from late 1930s; directed first film, Sagata Sanshiro, 1943; began association with actor Toshiro Mifune on Yoidore tenshi, and founder, with Yamamoto and others, Motion Picture Artists Association (Eiga Gei jutsuka Kyokai), 1948; formed Kurosawa Productions, 1959; signed contract with producer Joseph E. Levine to work in United States, 1966 (engaged in several aborted projects through 1968); with directors Keisuke Kinoshita, Kon Ichikawa, and Masaki Kobayashi, formed Yonki no Kai production company, 1971. Awards: Oscar for Best Foreign Language Film, and Grand Prix, Venice Festival, for Rashomon, 1951; Golden Bear Award for Best Direction and International Critics Prize, Berlin Festival, for The Hidden Fortress, 1959; Oscar for Best Foreign Language Film, for Dersu Uzala, 1976; European Film Academy Award, for “humanistic contribution to society in film production,” 1978; Best Director, British Academy Award, and Palm d’Or, Cannes Festival, for Akira Kurosawa

Films as Director:

1943 Sugata Sanshiro (Sanshiro Sugata, Judo Saga) (remade as same title by Shigeo Tanaka, 1955, and by Seiichiro Uchikawa, 1965, and edited by Kurosawa) (+ sc)
1944 Ichiban utsukushiku (The Most Beautiful) (+ sc)
1945 Zoku Sugata Sanshiro (Sanshiro Sugata—Part 2; Judo Saga—II) (+ sc); Tora no o o fumu ototach (Men Who Tread on the Tiger’s Tail) (+ sc)
1946 Asu o tsukuru hitobito (Those Who Make Tomorrow); Waga seishun ni kuinashi (No Regrets for Our Youth) (+ co-sc)
1947 Sabarashiki nichiyobi (One Wonderful Sunday) (+ co-sc)
1948 Yoidore tenshi (Drunken Angel) (+ co-sc)
1949 Shizukamaru kette (A Silent Duel) (+ co-sc); Nora inu (Stray Dog) (+ co-sc)
1950 Shubun (Scandal) (+ co-sc); Rashomon (+ co-sc)
1951 Hakuchi (The Idiot) (+ co-sc)
1952 Ikiru (To Live, Doomed) (+ co-sc)
1954 Shichinin no samurai (Seven Samurai) (+ co-sc)
1955 Ikimono no kiroku (Record of a Living Being; I Live in Fear; What the Birds Knew) (+ co-sc)
1957 Kumonosu-jo (The Throne of Blood; The Castle of the Spider’s Web) (+ co-sc, co-pr); Donzoko (The Lower Depths) (+ co-sc, co-pr)
1958 Kakushi toride no san-akunin (The Hidden Fortress; Three Bad Men in a Hidden Fortress) (+ co-sc, co-pr)
1960 Warui yatsu hodo yoku nemuru (The Worse You Are the Better You Sleep; The Rose in the Mud) (+ co-sc, co-pr); Yojimbo (The Bodyguard) (+ co-sc)
1962 Sanjuro (+ co-sc)
1963 Tengoku to jigoku (High and Low; Heaven and Hell; The Ransom) (+ co-sc)
1965 Akahige (Red Beard) (+ co-sc)
1970 Dodesukaden (Dodeskaden) (+ co-sc, co-pr)
1975 Dersu Uzala (+ co-sc)
1980 Kagemusha (The Shadow Warrior) (+ co-sc, co-pr)
1985  Ran (+ sc)
1990 Dreams (Akira Kurosawa’s Dreams) (+ sc)
1991 Hachigatsu No Kyohshikyoku (Rhapsody in August) (+ sc)
1993 Madadayo (+ sc, ed)

Other Films:
1937 Sengoku gunto den (Sage of the Vagabond) (sc, asst dir)
1941 Uma (Horses) (Yamamoto) (co-sc)
1942 Seishun no kiru (Currents of Youth) (Fushimiz) (sc); Tsubasa no gaika (A Triumph of Wings) (Yamamoto) (sc)
1944 Dohyo-matsuri (Wrestling-Ring Festival) (Marune) (sc)
1945 Appare Isshin Tsukibe (Bravo, Tsukibe Isshin!) (Saeki) (sc)
1947 Ginrei no hate (To the End of the Silver Mountains) (Taniguchi) (co-sc); Hatsukoi (First Love) segment of Yottsu no koi no monogatari (Four Love Stories) (Toyoda) (sc)
1948 Shojo (The Portrait) (Kinoshita) (sc)
1949 Yakoman to Tetsu (Yakoman and Tetsu) (Taniguchi) (sc); Jigoku no kijin (The Lady from Hell) (Oda) (sc)
1950 Akatsuki no dasso (Escape at Dawn) (Taniguchi) (sc); Jiruba no Tetsu (Tetsu ‘Jilba’) (Kosugi) (sc); Tateshi danpei (Fencing Master) (Makino) (sc)
1951 Ai to nikushimi no kanata e (Beyond Love and Hate) (Taniguchi) (sc); Kedamono no yado (The Den of Beasts) (Osome) (sc); Ketto Kaguya no tsuji (The Duel at Kaguya Corner) (Mori) (sc)
1957 Tekichu odan sanbyakuri (Three Hundred Miles through Enemy Lines) (Mori) (sc)
1960 Sengoku gunton den (The Saga of the Vagabond) (Sugie) (sc)
1999 Ame agara (After the Rain) (co-sc)

Publications

By KUROSAWA: books—
Ikiru, with Shinobu Hashimoto and Hideo Oguni, edited by Donald Richie, New York, 1968.
The Seven Samurai, New York, 1970.
Kurosawa Akira eiga taikei [Complete Works of Akira Kurosawa], edited by Takamori Shimaji, in 12 volumes, Tokyo, 1970/72.

By KUROSAWA: articles—
“Waga eiga jinsei no ki,” [Diary of My Movie Life], in Kinema jumpo (Tokyo), April 1963.
Interview with Donald Richie, in Interviews with Film Directors, edited by Andrew Sarris, New York, 1967.

Interview with Kyoko Hirano, in Cineaste (New York), May 1986.

On KUROSAWA: books—
Sato, Tadao, Kurosawa Akira no sekai [The World of Akira Kurosawa], Tokyo, 1968.
Goodwin, James, editor, Perspectives on Akira Kurosawa, New York, 1994.

On KUROSAWA: articles—
Anderson, Lindsay, “Two Inches off the Ground,” in Sight and Sound (London), Winter 1957.
Anderson, Joseph, and Donald Richie, “Traditional Theater and the Film in Japan,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Fall 1958.

549
Despite numerous battles with wartime censors, Kurosawa managed to get production approval for three more of his scripts before the Pacific War ended in 1945. By this time he was fully established with a star and director Kurosawa as a powerful new force in the film world.

Despite numerous battles with wartime censors, Kurosawa managed to get production approval for three more of his scripts before the Pacific War ended in 1945. By this time he was fully established with a star and director Kurosawa as a powerful new force in the film world. his studio and his audience as a writer-director. His films were so successful commercially that he would, until late in his career, receive a free creative hand from his producers, ever-increasing budgets, and extended schedules. In addition, he was never subjected to a project that was not of his own initiation and his own writing.

In the pro-documentary, female emancipation atmosphere that reigned briefly under the Allied Occupation of Japan, Kurosawa created his strongest woman protagonist and produced his most explicit pro-left message in No Regrets for Our Youth. But internal political struggles at Toho left bitterness and creative disarray in the wake of a series of strikes. As a result, Kurosawa’s 1947 One Wonderful Sunday is perhaps his weakest film, an innocuous and sentimental story of a young couple who are too poor to get married.

The mature Kurosawa appeared in the 1948 Drunken Angel. Here he displays not only a full command of black-and-white filmmaking technique with his characteristic variety of pacing, lighting, and camera angles for maximum editorial effect, but his first use of sound-image counterpoints in the “Cuckoo Waltz” scene, where lively music contrasts with the dying gangster’s dark mood. Here too is the full-blown appearance of the typical Kurosawan master-disciple relationship first suggested in Sanshiro Sugata, as well as an overriding humanitarian message despite the story’s tragic outcome. The master-disciple roles assume great depth in Takashi Shimura’s portrayal of the blustering alcoholic doctor and Toshiro Mifune’s characterization of the vain, hotheaded young gangster. The film’s tension is generated by Shimura’s questionable worthiness as a mentor and Mifune’s violent unwillingness as a pupil. These two actors would recreate similar testy relationships in numerous Kurosawa films from the late 1940s through the mid-1950s, including the noir police drama Stray Dog, the doctor dilemma film Quiet Duel, and the all-time classic Seven Samurai. In the 1960s Yuzo Kayama would assume the disciple role to Mifune’s master in the feudal comedy Sanjuro and in Red Beard, a work about humanity’s struggle to modernize.

Kurosawa’s films of the 1990s were minor asterisks to the career of this formidable, legendary director. Dreams (Akira Kurosawa’s Dreams) is a disappointingly uneven recreation of eight of the director’s dreams; Hachigatsu No Kyohshikyoku (Rhapsody in August) is a slight account of the recollection of a grandmother who remembers the bombing of Nagasaki.

These films are linked to Madadayo, Kurosawa’s last film, in that all are deeply personal and reflective. Madadayo, released when Kurosawa was 83 years old, is an account of 17 years in the retirement of a beloved teacher who is respected by the generations of his former students. As he ages into a “genuine old man,” he remains as feisty and vigorous as ever; his favorite phrase is the film’s title, the English translation of which is “not yet.” But he is as equally vulnerable to the ravages of time and life’s losses, as illustrated by his grieving upon the disappearance of his pet cat. Madadayo is a flawed film, if only because one too many sequences ramble. While it most decidedly is the work of an old man, it and his other latter-period work do not negate the vitality of Kurosawa’s many all-time classics.

Part of Kurosawa’s characteristic technique throughout his career involved the typical Japanese studio practice of using the same crew or “group” on each production. He consistently worked with cinematographer Asakazu Nakai and composer Fumio Hayasaka, for example. Kurosawa’s group became a kind of family that extended to actors as well. Mifune and Shimura were the most prominent names of the virtual private repertory company that, through lifetime studio contracts, could survive protracted months of production on a Kurosawa film and fill in with more normal four-to-eight-week shoots in between. Kurosawa was thus assured of getting the performance he wanted every time.

Kurosawa’s own studio contract and consistent box-office record enabled him to exercise creativity never permitted lesser talents in Japan. He was responsible for numerous technical innovations as a result. He pioneered the use of long lenses and multiple cameras in the famous final battle scenes in the driving rain and splashing mud of Seven Samurai. He introduced the first use of widescreen in Japan in the 1958 samurai entertainment classic Hidden Fortress. To the dismay of leftist critics and the delight of audiences, he invented realistic portrayals of swordfighting and other violence in such extravagant confrontations as those of Yojimbo, which spawned the entire Clint Eastwood spaghetti western genre in Italy. Kurosawa further experimented with long lenses on the set in Red Beard, and accomplished breathtaking work with his first color film Dodeskaden, now no longer restorable. A firm believer in the importance of motion picture science, Kurosawa pioneered the use of Panavision and multi-track Dolby sound in Japan with Kagemusha. His only reactionary practice was his editing, which he did entirely himself on an antique Moviola, better and faster than anyone else in the world.

Western critics often chastised Kurosawa for using symphonic music in his films. His reply to this is to point out that he and his entire generation grew up on music that was more Western in quality than native Japanese. As a result, native Japanese music can sound artificially exotic to a contemporary audience. Nevertheless, he succeeded in his films in adapting not only boleros and elements of Beethoven, but snatches of Japanese popular songs and musical instrumentation from Noh theater and folk song.

Perhaps most startling of Kurosawa’s achievements in a Japanese context, however, was his innate grasp of a story-telling technique that is not culture bound, and his flair for adapting Western classical literature to the screen. No other Japanese director would have dared to set Dostoevski’s Idiot, Gorki’s Lower Depths, or Shakespeare’s Macbeth (Throne of Blood) and King Lear (Ran) in Japan. But he also adapted works from the Japanese Kabuki theater (Men Who Tread on the Tiger’s Tail) and used Noh staging techniques and music in both Throne of Blood and Kagemusha. Like his counterparts and most admired models, Jean Renoir, John Ford, and Kenji Mizoguchi, Kurosawa took his cinematic inspirations from the full store of world film, literature, and music. And yet the completely original screenplays of his two greatest films, Ikiru, the story of a bureaucrat dying of cancer who at last finds purpose in life, and Seven Samurai, the saga of seven hungry warriors who pit their wits and lives against marauding bandits in the defense of a poor farming village, reveal that his natural story-telling ability and humanistic convictions transcended all limitations of genre, period, and nationality.

—Audie Bock, updated by Rob Edelman

KURYS, Diane

1970; first feature film, Diabolo Menthe, becomes the year’s largest-grossing film in France, 1977. Awards: Prix Louis Delluc, Best Picture, 1977, for Diabolo Menthe; San Sebastián International Film Festival FIPRESCI Award, for Coup de foudre, 1983. Address: William Morris Agency, 151 El Camino Drive, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Director and Scriptwriter:

1977  Diabolo Menthe (Peppermint Soda)
1980  Cocktail Molotov (Molotov Cocktail)
1983  Coup de foudre (Entre Nous; Between Us; At First Sight)
1987  A Man in Love (Un homme amoureux) (+ pr)
1990  La Baule-les-Pins (C’est la vie) (+ pr)
1992  Après l’amour (Love after Love)
1994  À la folie (Alice and Elsa; Six Days, Six Nights)
1999  Les Enfants du siècle (Children of the Century)

Other Films:

1972  Poil de carotte (Carrot Top) (Graziani) (to as Agathe); Elle court, elle court la banlieue (Pirès) (to)

Publications:

By KURYS: article—

On KURYS: books—

On KURYS: articles—

Lipman, Amanda, “‘Après l’amour,’” in Sight and Sound (London), September 1993.

* * *

It is not unusual for young independent filmmakers to create an autobiographical first or second feature: perhaps a tale of struggling adolescence on the model of Truffaut’s Les Quatres cents coups. But Diabolo menthe, Diane Kurys’ first film, a resounding critical and box-office success in France, was highly unusual in 1977 for having a female perspective on teenage rites of passage. It also initiated a remarkable group of films—one that does not follow the same characters through a series of sequels, à la Truffaut’s Antoine Doinel cycle, but focuses upon essentially the same family (with slightly different names and played by different actors), rather the way some novelists and playwrights have circled around the same traumatic event, catching it from different angles, different characters’ viewpoints, in work after work. Though her recent films have been more occupied with adult family struggles, Kurys’ most enduring works may turn out to be those directly linked to a divorce in a French-Jewish family and the children who witness the breakup.

The title of that first film refers to the “grown up” drink young Anne Weber orders in a café—until Frédérique, her older sister and sometime confederate, humiliatingly sends her home. This and many other painful moments of budding youth are presented—sometimes with heartfelt intensity, sometimes with a cool comic edge—in vignettes that take us into the sisters’ Paris lycée (schoolyard secrets, wretched teachers) and their lives outside it (mother-daughter conflicts, reluctant encounters with the divorced father, and most disturbingly, Frédérique’s near-seduction by a school friend’s father). Politics intersect with private life (the year is 1963, marked by Kennedy’s assassination): a girl tells of witnessing a police riot, and Frédérique’s antifascist student group is disparaged by her principal as well as attacked by neo-Nazi thugs. Quiet observations of character, sudden explosions of emotion, unexpected turns of plot, touches of ironic humor: such hallmarks of Kurys’ later work are already evident in this first feature.

Cocktail Molotov is marked as a sequel of sorts by the title’s ironic echo of the first film’s less potent concoction, and by the name Anne, though now applied to the older of two sisters (whose boyfriend is named Frederic!). We are now in May 1968, but Anne seems completely apolitical, as do her boyfriend and his best friend; she is exclusively concerned with discovering her own sexuality and running away from her hated mother and stepfather, while the other two follow along. Her notion of joining a kibbutz takes them as far as Venice, but when Bruno’s car and most of their money is “appropriated” by an anarchist girlfriend, the trio are forced to hitchhike back to Paris, hearing about the explosive turmoil in the capital via radio and conversations—more often monologues, since the youths don’t talk to older people much. Considering that Kurys herself was an activist in 1968, and did get to a kibbutz, Cocktail Molotov is fascinating in its detached viewpoint: though she seems to have an affectionate eye for the three young people’s energy and misery in their voyage of discovery, she also shows them having no idea of what is going on politically; and while she satirizes a few bourgeois types, she doesn’t seem to mark any of the more opinionated characters as the director’s mouthpiece. Anne is more concerned with getting her father to help her get an abortion than interested in his views, and when Bruno comes across a real Molotov cocktail he just lights and tosses it off the side of a country road for kicks as the three run off like little kids.

Kurys’ third film, Coup de foudre (Entre Nous in the United States), is a kind of prequel to Diabolo menthe, but centered upon the girls’ mother and her intense friendship with another woman, with the subsequent breakups of both their marriages. The film became Kurys’ greatest international success to date and certainly remains her most controversial film. It has been admired by some as a superbly powerful and subtle drama, gorgeously realized, while others have dismissed it as too vague in its sexual politics, too chic, too conservative in its filmmaking style. Much of the debate over the film centered upon the question of whether it should be categorized as a “lesbian film.” The original title (“stroke of lightning” is an idiom for love at first sight) may suggest as much, and several scenes between Lena and Madeleine certainly have an erotic charge, though the women are never shown to make love. Lena’s husband accuses her of leaving him for a “dyke,” but his outrage is colored by Madeleine’s earlier rejection of his sexual advances.

A sympathetic reading of the film—or more, an argument that it is a major achievement in French cinema of the last two decades—might stress its refusal to reduce love relationships to the binary “sexual/nonsexual,” or to make characters simply likable or unlikable. Lena’s husband is heroic in rescuing her from probable death in a concentration camp, tender with his daughters, and quite vicious with Madeleine. The women, memorably played by Isabelle Huppert and Miou-Miou, are seen as both admirable in their quest for independence and selfish—or curiously absent-minded—in their consideration of others; sometimes the viewer’s sympathies seem intended to shift not just from scene to scene but from shot to shot. (Consider the episode of Lena losing little Sophie on the bus, or her encounter with the soldiers on the train and later confession to Madeleine.) The dramatic canvas is broad, with its wartime prologue, crosscutting between Michel’s rescue of Lena (which has its comic moments) and the violent death of Madeleine’s first husband; the women’s first meeting in the 1950s and ultimate decision to move to Paris; and the startling shift to an autobiographical mode (Lena’s daughter’s point of view) in the film’s last moments. Kurys’ consistently brilliant use of widescreen Panavision, whether in the epic views of a Pyrenees prison camp or the languid reclining of the two women, is essential to the film’s overall effect, as is the attention to period detail, particularly fashions and music, as a way of dramatizing the 1950s context (the war years seemingly long past, but the possibilities for women’s independence largely in the future) and underlining the women’s interest in fashion as a career. Perhaps most striking, though difficult to pinpoint, is the film’s ability to present scenes with a full sense of immediacy and yet as if we were watching a reenactment of family legendaries from a distance.

This story is told once again in La Baules-les-Pins, named after the seaside resort where the entire film takes place. This time, the daughters are again the central characters; the mother is still named Lena, but she is having an affair with another man, while Madeleine has metamorphosed into a stepsister (whose husband is played by the same actor as in Coup de foudre, the one carryover). The film records the usual lazy amusements of a long summer at the beach, but also the girls’ growing anxiety over their parents’ impending separation. Lena is cruelly distant (literally and figuratively) at some times, warmly affectionate at others. The eruption of violence in this film, when Michel attacks his wife, is truly shocking in its suddenness and brutality (i.e., in the staging of the scene, the editing, the performances); yet the placidities of beach life continue for the children, for some weeks/scenes to come, as they might indeed in life.

A Man in Love, made in between Coup de foudre and Les Baules-les-Pins, is equally interested in passion at first sight, adultery, and flares of temper, and has a similar eye for widescreen compositions, but this international co-production has quite a different setting: the glamorous world of international filmmaking, where an American movie star, hired to play Cesare Pavese in an Italian biopic, has a steamy affair with his co-star, who abandons her French lover though the American will not give up his wife. The film has a great many fine moments which, however, do not add up to a coherent whole, and the American actor remains uninterestingly egocentric, thanks to some combination of the screenwriting (including an almost complete shift in focus toward the actress and away from the title character) and Peter Coyote’s wooden performance. A more successful, though certainly peculiar, tale of people involved in ludicrously neurotic love relationships is Après l’amour, in which a cluster of affluent Parisians make themselves miserable by oscillating between their old and new lovers. One can only assume the tone is one of detached amusement. Again parental neglect and affection are an important concern of the drama, and the director has not hesitated to say that the Isabelle Huppert character, a writer, is modeled after herself in certain ways.

À la folie returns us to the relationship of sisters, but now a pair of adults in an extremely dysfunctional relationship, with implied sadomasochistic and lesbian elements. The tale is strongly reminiscent of Strindberg plays in which a meticulously realistic portrayal of characters at odds with one another, with an underlying sexual current, becomes gradually more expressionistic, reaching toward nightmare violence. Here an older sister, Elsa, leaves her husband and children and essentially takes over the apartment of Anne, a successful Parisian artist (successful because she has broken away from her manipulative family, the film implies) who is already having to adjust to a new life with a live-in boyfriend (whom Elsa will eventually try to seduce). The performances of Béatrice Dalle as the vampirish Elsa and Anne Parillaud as the near-fatally unassertive Alice are harrowing to watch, though the film’s shift from subtle observations of psychological cruelty to diabolical scheming—the territory of thrillers like Barbet Schroeder’s 1992 Single White Female—is problematic, as is the conventional ending.

Kurys’ Les Enfants du siècle is a considerable departure in being a biography of George Sand and Frederic Chopin, though obviously Sand, as an independent woman artist who defied a number of gender conventions, should be a subject suited to Kurys’ interests. But whatever her future choices, Kurys has already created a half dozen important films, of which Diabolo menthe and Coup de foudre remain among the very significant contributions to French women’s filmmaking.

—Joseph Milicia

KUSTURICA, Emir

Nationality: Yugoslavian (Bosnia-Herzegovina). Born: Sarajevo, Yugoslavia (Bosnia-Herzegovina), 24 November 1955. Education: Studied film direction at FAMU (Prague Film School) in Czechoslovakia. Career: Produced amateur films while attending secondary school; moved to Czechoslovakia to study film, 1973; directed Guernica, his diploma film, 1978; directed two television films and played guitar in a rock band, late 1970s; directed first feature, Do You Remember Dolly Bell?, 1981; earned international acclaim with When Father Was away on Business, 1985; came to the United States and began teaching a film directing course at Columbia University, 1988. Awards: Venice Film Festival Golden Lion and FIPRESCI Award, Sao Paolo International Film Festival Critics Award, for Do You Remember Dolly Bell?, 1981; Cannes Film Festival Palme d’Or and FIPRESCI Award, for When Father Was away on Business, 1985; Cannes Film Festival Best Director and Roberto Rossellini Career Achievement Award, for Time of the Gypsies, 1988; Berlin Film Festival Silver Berlin Bear, for Arizona Dream, 1993; Cannes Film Festival Palme d’Or, for Underground, 1995; Venice Film Festival Lernaeta Magica Prize, Little Golden Lion and Silver Lion, for Black Cat, White Cat, 1998. Agent: Creative Artists Agency, 9830 Wilshire Blvd., Beverly Hills, CA 90212.

Films as Director:

1978  Guernica; Nevjestes dolaze (The Brides Are Coming) (for TV)
1980  Bife Titanic (The Titanic Bar) (for TV) (+ sc)
1981  Sjecas li se Dolly Bell? (Do You Remember Dolly Bell?)
1985  Otac na sluzbenoh putu (When Father Was away on Business)
1988  Dom za vesanje (Time of the Gypsies) (+ co-sc)
1993  Arizona Dream
1995  Underground (+ co-sc, ro)
1998  Crna macka, beli macor (Black Cat, White Cat) (+ co-sc)
2000  The White Hotel

Other Films:

1982  13.jul (Saranovic) (uncredited ro)
1987  Strategija svrake (The Magpie Strategy) (Lavanic) (sc); Zivot Radina (sc)
2000  La Veuve de Saint-Pierre (Leconte) (ro)

Publications

By KUSTURICA: articles—

Interview with P. Elhem in Visions (Brussels), Summer 1985.
Interview with A. Crespì in Cineforum (Bergamo), June 1989.
On KUSTURICA: articles—

Downey, M., article in Chaplin (Stockholm), vol. 28, no. 1, 1986.

Cade, Michel, article in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), March 1987.

Williams, Michael, and Deborah Young, “‘Iron Curtain Alums Test West’s Mettle,’” Variety (New York), 29 June 1992.

* * *

Emir Kusturica’s films radiate a universal humanism. While they come out of a specific part of the world—in which the political situation plays no small role in affecting his characters’ lives—they are timeless stories in that they deal with basic human needs, desires, feelings, and experiences.

Do You Remember Dolly Bell?, Kusturica’s first feature, is an insightful, bittersweet comedy about Dino (Slavko Stimac), an adolescent who goes about losing his virginity and experiencing first love. There may be political and social implications within the story: Dino’s father is a Muslim-Marxist who fervently believes in a communist utopia even though he and his family reside in one crowded room; and the scenario is rife with jabs at Communist Party bureaucracy. During the course of the story Dino’s father dies, which symbolically mirrors Kusturica’s conviction that the failure of communism to improve peoples’ lives is irrevocable. Still, the film mainly is a coming-of-age comedy not dissimilar to scores of other cinematic rite-of-passage chronicles. Undoubtedly, its gently ironic style was influenced by Kusturica’s having attended the Prague Film School, where he studied with Jiri Menzel.

Kusturica was to emerge as a force on the international film scene with his next feature, When Father Was away on Business, which won him a Cannes Film Festival Palme d’Or. It is the fresh, winning account of what happens when a philandering, indiscreet Yugoslavian man, Mesha Malkoc (Miki Manojlovic), is sent into exile for three years, with the scenario unraveling through the eyes and perceptions of Malik (Moreno D’E Bartolli), his six-year-old son. Politics and history impact on the story, which is set in the early 1950s after Marshal Tito, Yugoslavia’s ruler, had split with Stalin. This resulted in the country’s expulsion from the Soviet Socialist Bloc. In Yugoslavia, individual loyalties were harshly divided between Tito and Stalin, leading to mass denunciations and betrayals that often had nothing to do with political leanings. Such is the case with the father in When Father Was away on Business. The spitefulness of one of Mesha’s girlfriends, along with that of his brother-in-law, results in his arrest during a family party. But all Malik knows is that his father has been whisked away from the family, and his mother is left to struggle along as a seamstress in order to feed and clothe her children.

The scenario eventually takes Malik and his family to the salt mine where Mesha is being held. The camp is filled with prisoners who, like Mesha, have been incarcerated for reasons having nothing to do with political ideology. There, Malik also comes of age, but in an altogether different manner than depicted in Do You Remember Dolly Bell? Primarily, his maturation results from his interaction with an incurably ill young girl. When Father Was away on Business is a major work, one of the finest films of the 1980s.

Kusturica’s next feature, Time of the Gypsies, is another coming-of-age story as well as a flavorful account of gypsy life. It tells of an innocent young boy (Davor Dujmovic) who wishes to make a better life for himself, but finds he can only accomplish this by becoming involved in a criminal lifestyle. In telling his story, Kusturica offers a bitter condemnation of a society’s exploitation of children. Arizona Dream, Kusturica’s first American film, was a major disappointment. It features Johnny Depp as a recently orphaned young man who returns to his Arizona hometown for the wedding of his uncle (Jerry Lewis). The movie only received a limited theatrical distribution in the United States.

The civil war that had bitterly divided his homeland was bound to influence Kusturica’s work. In 1995 he won a second Cannes Palme d’Or for Underground, a French-German-Hungarian-produced allegorical epic of Yugoslavia between 1941 and 1992. As he charts the camaraderie and conflict between two Belgrade men, Marko and Blacky (Miki Manojlovic, Lazar Ristovski), Kusturica bitterly senses the postwar communist domination of his homeland and the bloody present-day civil war in which, in his view, all sides are culpable.

Underground was one of an increasing number of humanist-oriented films that focused on the politics and tragedy of the war. Joining it were Srdjan Dragojevic’s Pretty Village, Pretty Flame (the story of a Serb and Muslim who once were childhood friends but now are adversaries in battle) and Michael Winterbottom’s Welcome to Sarajevo (a reverie on the random brutality of the war, and the manner in which violent conflicts are covered by the media). All three are sobering, heartbreaking films that serve as formidable reminders of what the war in Bosnia was—and of what any war is.

However, Underground was the object of much contention in France, where leftists alleged that it was, at its core, pro-Serbian. And so, in his follow-up feature, Black Cat, White Cat, Kusturica eschewed in-your-face politics in favor of a spirited romp that, like Time of the Gypsies, offers a vivid portrait of gypsy life. The film spotlights two clans whose members become entangled in a frenetic scenario involving love and arranged marriages, family responsibilities, and conspiracies and double-dealing.

Given Kusturica’s predilection for examining regional politics, one might see within this tale of feuding families a parable that reflects on the greater conflict in his homeland. The film concludes with the title ‘‘Happy End,’’ which also may be viewed as the filmmaker’s wish for the resolution of that conflict.

—Rob Edelman
LA CAVA, Gregory

Nationality: American. Born: Towanda, Pennsylvania, 10 March 1892. Education: Educated in Rochester, New York; Art Institute of Chicago; Art Students League and National Academy of Design, New York. Family: Married (second time) Grace Carland, 1941, one son. Career: Cartoonist for American Press Association, New York, then head of animated cartoon unit, Hearst Enterprises, 1917; worked on Mutt and Jeff series, then Torchy stories for Johnny Hines, from 1921; director, from 1922, then writer and director for Paramount, from 1924 (moved to Hollywood 1929); director for First National, 1929, then Pathé, 1930; signed with 20th Century Pictures, 1933, then freelance, from 1934; hired by Mary Pickford company to direct One Touch of Venus, then left set after dispute, 1948. Awards: New York Film Critics Circle Award, for Stage Door, 1937. Died: In 1952.

Films as Director:

(partial list)

1917 Der Kaptain Discovers the North Pole (“Katzenjammer Kids” series) (co-d) (animated short)
1920 Smokey Smokes (and) Lampoons (“Judge Rummy Cartoons” series) (animated short); Judge Rummy in Bear Facts (animated short); Kats Is Kats (“Krazy Kat Cartoon”) (animated short)
1922 His Nibs (5 reels); Faint Heart (2 reels); A Social Error (2 reels)
1923 The Four Orphans (2 reels); The Life of Reilly (2 reels); The Busybody (2 reels); The Pill Pounder (2 reels); So This Is Hamlet? (2 reels); Helpful Hogan (2 reels); Wild and Wicked (2 reels); Beware of the Dog (2 reels); The Fiddling Fool (2 reels)
1924 The New School Teacher (+ co-sc); Restless Wives
1925 Womanhandled
1926 Let’s Get Married; So’s Your Old Man; Say It Again
1927 Paradise for Two (+ pr); Running Wild; Tell It to Sweeney (+ pr); The Gay Defender (+ pr)
1928 Feel My Pulse (+ pr); Half a Bride
1929 Saturday’s Children; Big News
1930 His First Command (+ co-sc)
1931 Laugh and Get Rich (+ sc, co-dialogue); Smart Woman
1932 Symphony of Six Million; Age of Consent; The Half Naked Truth (+ co-sc)
1933 Gabriel over the White House; Bid of Roses (+ co-dialogue); Gallant Lady
1934 Affairs of Cellini; What Every Woman Knows (+ pr)
1935 Private Worlds (+ co-sc); She Married Her Boss
1936 My Man Godfrey (+ pr, co-sc)
1937 Stage Door
1939 Fifth Avenue Girl (+ pr)
1940 Primrose Path (+ pr, co-sc)
1941 Unfinished Business (+ pr)
1942 Lady in a Jam (+ pr)
1947 Living in a Big Way (+ story, co-sc)

Publications

On LA CAVA: articles—

Article in Life (New York), 15 September 1941.
Sarris, Andrew, “Esoterica,” in Film Culture (New York), Spring 1963.
“Gregory La Cava,” in Film Dope (London), March 1985.

* * *

Although many of his individual films are periodically reviewed and reassessed by film scholars, Gregory La Cava remains today a relatively under-appreciated director of some of the best “screwball comedies” of the 1930s. Perhaps his apparent inability to transcend the screwball form or his failure with a number of straight dramas contributed to this lack of critical recognition. Yet, at his best, he imposed a vitality and sparkle on his screen comedies that overcame their often weak scripts and some occasionally pedestrian performances from his actors.

The great majority of La Cava’s films reflect an instinctive comic sense undoubtedly gained during his early years as a newspaper cartoonist and as an animator with Walter Lantz on such fast and La Cava’s “screwball comedies” of the 1930s were characterized by improbable plots and brilliantly foolish dialogue but also by a dichotomous social view that seemed to delight in establishing satirical contrasts between the views of themselves held by the rich and by the poor. Although treated in varying degrees in Fifth Avenue Girl, She Married Her Boss, and Stage Door, La Cava’s classic treatment of this subject remains My Man Godfrey. Made during the depths of the Depression, it juxtaposes the world of the rich and frivolous with the plight of the real victims of the economic disaster through the sharply satiric device of a scavenger hunt. When one of the hunt’s objectives turns out to be “a forgotten man,” in this case a hobo named Godfrey Parke (William Powell), it provides a platform for one of the Depression’s victims to lash out at the upper class as being composed of frivolous “nitwits.” The film seemingly pulls its punches at the end, however, when one socialite, Irene Bullock (Carole Lombard), achieves some realization of the plight of the less fortunate, and the hobo Godfrey turns out to be a formerly wealthy Harvard man who actually renews his fortune through his association with her, although he has been somewhat tempered by his experience with the hoboes.

La Cava, perhaps more than other directors working in the screwball genre, was able, by virtue of doing much of the writing on his scripts, to impose his philosophical imprint upon the majority of his films. While he was often required to keep a foot in both the conservative and the liberal camps, his films do not suffer. On the contrary, they maintain an objectivity that has allowed them to grow in stature with the passage of years. My Man Godfrey, Stage Door, and Gabriel over the White House, which is only now being recognized as a political fantasy of great merit, give overwhelming evidence that critical recognition of Gregory La Cava is considerably overdue.

—Stephen L. Hanson
LANDIS, John

Films as Director:

1971 Schlock (The Banana Monster) (+ sc, ro as Schlock)
1977 The Kentucky Fried Movie (+ ro as TV technician fighting with a gorilla)
1980 The Blues Brothers (+ sc, ro as Trooper La Fong)
1981 An American Werewolf in London (+ sc, ro as man being smashed into a window)
1982 Coming Soon (+ sc)
1983 Twilight Zone: The Movie (prologue and segment 1) (+ sc, pr); Trading Places; Thriller (+ sc, pr); Michael Jackson: Making Michael Jackson's 'Thriller'
1985 Spies Like Us; Into the Night (+ ro as Savak)
1986 Three Amigos!
1987 Amazon Women on the Moon (segments "Mondo Condo," "Hospital," "Blacks without Souls," "Don 'No Soul" Simmons," and "Video Date") (+ exec pr)
1988 Coming to America
1990 Dream On (TV Series)
1991 Oscar
1992 Innocent Blood (A French Vampire in America)
1994 Beverly Hills Cop III
1996 The Stupids
1998 Blues Brothers 2000 (+ sc, pr, music exec pr); Susan's Plan (+ sc, pr)

Films as Actor:

1973 Battle for the Planet of the Apes (Thompson) (as Jake's friend)
1975 Death Race 2000 (Bartel) (as Mechanic)
1979 1941 (Spielberg) (as Corporal Mizenerany)
1982 Eating Raoul (Bartel) (uncredited)
1984 The Muppets Take Manhattan (Oz) (as Surprise Cameo)
1989 Spontaneous Combustion (Hooper) (as Radio Technician)
1990 Darkman (Raimi) (as Physician)
1991 Psycho IV: The Beginning (Garris—for TV) (as Mike)
1992 Body Chemistry II: The Voice of a Stranger (Simon) (as Dr. Edwards/Voice of a Stranger); Sleepwalkers (Garris) (as Lab Technician); Venice/Venice (Jaglom) (as John Landis)
1994 The Stand (Garris—mini, for TV) (as Russ Dorr); Il Silenzio dei prosciutti (The Silence of the Hams) (Greggio) (as FBI Agent)
1996 Who Is Henry Jaglom? (Rubin and Workman) (as himself); Vampirella (Wynorski) (as Astronaut vml/Beard)
1997 Quicksilver Highway (Garris—for TV) (as Surgical Assistant); Mad City (Costa-Gavras) (as Doctor)
1999 Diamonds (Asher) (as Gambler); Freeway II: Confessions of a Trickbaby (Bright) (as Judge)

Other Films:

1985 Clue (Lynn) (exec pr, sc)
1995 Here Come the Munsters (Ginty—for TV) (pr)
1996 The Munsters Scary Little Christmas (Emes—for TV) (exec pr)
1997 Hollywood Rated "R" (doc) (narrator)
1998 The Lost World (Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's The Lost World) (Keen) (exec pr)

Publications

By LANDIS: articles—

On LANDIS: books—

On LANDIS: articles—

Ansen, David, "'Gross Out,'" in Newsweek, 7 August 1978.

"John Landis,'" in Film Dope (Nottingham), no. 32, March 1985.

* * *

Through his work on National Lampoon's Animal House and Twilight Zone: The Movie, John Landis has the dual distinction of being co-creator of one of Hollywood's most successful genres, and being associated with one of Hollywood's most embarrassing catastrophes. His credits include such successes as Trading Places, The Blues Brothers, and Coming to America, but he will probably be best remembered for directing the first real gross-out comedy and for his association with the deaths of Vic Morrow and two Asian children for which he was charged with involuntary manslaughter.

Landis has always been known for his love of movies. He grew up in Westwood, a section of Los Angeles housing 17 movie screens within a five-block radius. After raising financing for and directing Schlock (1971) and Kentucky Fried Movie (1977), Landis's true breakthrough film was the enormously popular, enormously entertaining National Lampoon's Animal House. David Ansen in Newsweek called the film “low humor of a high order.” The film made John Belushi a major film star, established the toga party as the epitome of college decadence, and began the genre of “slob comedies,” a term which later evolved into “gross-out comedies,” with There's Something about Mary (1998) being a direct descendant.

Landis’ next film, The Blues Brothers (1980), starred Belushi and Dan Aykroyd as Jake and Elwood Blues, characters they originally created for Saturday Night Live. This movie was a financial success, though not nearly as successful as its predecessor, and the reviewers were less than kind. Janet Maslin in The New York Times said, “There isn’t a moment of The Blues Brothers that wouldn’t have been more enjoyable if it had been mounted on a simpler scale.” For Landis, it wasn’t enough to stage a car crash; he had to stage the most car-filled, most expensive pileup in cinema history. Landis responded to his critics by saying, “I will never apologize for spending money to entertain.”

But this propensity for “bigger/louder/more” may be exactly the mindset that doomed him—or more precisely, doomed three of his actors—when he agreed to direct a segment of Twilight Zone—The Movie (1983). The film contained four segments, and the Landis segment, which he also wrote and produced, told the story of a bigot who spouts off against Jews, blacks, and Vietnamese before finding himself “in a dimension not only of sight and sound but of mind,” as the oppressed in Nazi-occupied France, at a Klan lynching, and in Vietnam. Because of his recent successes, Landis was given final cut, on condition that he finish shooting on schedule. But he was behind schedule during the filming of a scene where Morrow was to dive into a swampy bog while the banana plants behind him were ripped apart by gunfire. When Landis didn’t like the effect produced by a marble gun and was told that rigging the plants with squibs would put them even further behind schedule, he opted to reshoot the scene using three Remington shotguns and live ammunition, an extremely dangerous decision.

Then, in the early morning hours of 23 July 1982, Landis began filming a scene where Morrow’s character rescues two Vietnamese children from a hut just before it explodes. Landis refused to substitute dummies for children in the shot. As Landis told the helicopter pilot to fly lower and signaled for the explosions to begin, Morrow scooped up six-year-old Renee Chen and seven-year-old My-Ca Le from a hut and began running across a river. The children had been... hired without the requisite permits and on-location social worker. Suddenly a tremendous fireball engulfed the helicopter, melting off the tail rotor, and the helicopter came crashing down, crushing Chen under its right skid and decapitating Morrow and Le. Morrow never got to deliver his final line: “I’ll keep you safe, kids. I swear to God.”

Landis appeared at Morrow’s funeral and, appropriately, said, “Tragedy strikes in an instant, but film is immortal.” After years of taking credit for his films, he refused to take responsibility for the accident, calling it everything from an act of God to the fault of his special effects crew. OSHA cited 36 violations on the set and levied fines, the three wrongful-death lawsuits filed by the actors’ families were settled out of court, and the criminal case dragged on for months, receiving much media attention. Finally Landis and his co-defendants were able to lay the blame on a special effects technician who had already been granted immunity, and all were found not guilty. The film failed financially, and Richard Corliss in Time said Landis’s segment “hardly looks worth shooting, let alone dying for.”

Though some would never forgive Landis for the black eye he gave the film community, his ‘not guilty’ verdict, and especially his next film, went a long way towards restoring his reputation. For Trading Places (1983), Landis reined in his tendency toward excess in the service of a film reminiscent of the socially aware comedies of the 1930s. To settle a nature-nurture argument, the wealthy Duke brothers (Ralph Bellamy and Don Ameche) make a bet about what will happen if they cause the wealthy Louis Winthrope III (Dan Aykroyd) and street hustler Billy Ray Valentine (Eddie Murphy) to, in effect, trade places. The laugh-filled movie was a financial and commercial success, despite any negative publicity about the director that may have lingered in the minds of moviegoers. After several flops, Landis would strike gold again with Coming to America (1988), the story of an African prince who goes to America to sow his wild oats before accepting his responsibilities back in Africa. The film’s tone is uneven, but it contains many humorous bits and was generally well received.

—Bob Sullivan

LANG, Fritz

Nationality: German/American. Born: Vienna, 5 December 1890, became U.S. citizen, 1935. Education: Studied engineering at the Technische Hochschule, Vienna. Family: Married (second time) writer Thea von Harbou, 1924 (separated 1933). Career: Cartoonist, fashion designer, and painter in Paris, 1913; returned to Vienna, served in army, 1914–16; after discharge, worked as scriptwriter and actor, then moved to Berlin, 1918; reader and story editor for Decla, then wrote and directed first film, Halbblut, 1919; worked with von Harbou, from 1920; visited Hollywood, 1924; Das Testament des Dr. Mabuse banned by Nazis, 1933; offered post as supervisor of Nazi film productions by Goebbels, but fled Germany; after working in Paris and London, went to Hollywood, 1934; signed with Paramount, 1940; co-founder, then president, Diana Productions, 1945; quit Hollywood, citing continuing disputes with producers, 1956; directed two films in India, 1958–59, before last film, directed in Germany, 1960. Awards: Officier d’Art et des Lettres, France. Died: In Beverly Hills, 2 August 1976.

Films as Director:

- 1919 Halbblut (Half Caste) (+ sc); Der Herr der Liebe (The Master of Love) (+ role); Hara-Kiri; Die Spinnen (The Spiders) Part I: Der Goldene See (The Golden Lake) (+ sc)
- 1920 Die Spinnen (The Spiders) Part II: Das Brillantenschiff (The Diamond Ship) (+ sc); Das Wandernde Bild (The Wandering Image) (+ co-sc); Kämpfende Herzen (Die Vier um die Frau; Four around a Woman) (+ co-sc)
- 1921 Der müde Tod: Ein Deutches Volkstilied in Sechs Versen (The Weary Death; Between Two Worlds; Beyond the Wall; Destiny) (+ co-sc)
- 1921/22 Dr. Mabuse, der Spieler (Dr. Mabuse, the Gambler; The Fatal Passions) in two parts: Ein Bild der Zeit (Player aus Leidenschaft; A Picture of the Time) and Inferno—Menschen der Zeit (Inferno des Verbrechens; Inferno—Men of the Time) (+ co-sc)
- 1924 Die Nibelungen in two parts: Siegfrieds Tod (Death of Siegfried) and Kriemhilds Rache (Kriemhild’s Revenge) (+ co-sc, uncredited)
- 1927 Metropolis (+ co-sc, uncredited)
- 1928 Spione (Spies) (+ pr, co-sc, uncredited)
- 1929 Die Frau im Mond (By Rocket to the Moon; The Girl in the Moon) (+ pr, co-sc, uncredited)
- 1931 M, Mörder unter Uns (M) (+ co-sc, uncredited)
- 1933 Das Testament des Dr. Mabuse (The Testament of Dr. Mabuse; The Last Will of Dr. Mabuse) (+ co-sc, uncredited) (German and French versions)
- 1934 Liliom (+ co-sc, uncredited)
- 1936 Fury (+ co-sc)
- 1937 You Only Live Once
- 1938 You and Me (+ pr)
- 1940 The Return of Frank James
- 1941 Western Union; Man Hunt; Confirm or Deny (co-d, uncredited)
- 1942 Moon tide (co-d, uncredited)
- 1943 Hangmen Also Die! (+ pr, co-sc)
- 1944 Ministry of Fear; The Woman in the Window
- 1945 Scarlet Street (+ pr)
- 1946 Cloak and Dagger
- 1948 Secret beyond the Door (+ co-pr)
- 1950 House by the River; An American Guerrilla in the Philippines
- 1952 Rancho Notorious; Clash by Night
- 1953 The Blue Gardenia; The Big Heat
- 1954 Human Desire
- 1955 Moonfleet
Fritz Lang (seated below camera) on the set of Metropolis

1956 While the City Sleeps; Beyond a Reasonable Doubt
1959 Der Tiger von Eschnapur (The Tiger of Bengal) and Das Indische Grabmal (The Hindu Tomb) (+ co-sc) (released in cut version as Journey to the Lost City)
1960 Die Tausend Augen des Dr. Mabuse (The Thousand Eyes of Dr. Mabuse) (+ pr, co-sc)

Other Films:

1917 Die Hochzeit im Ekzentrik Klub (The Wedding in the Eccentric Club) (May) (sc); Hilde Warren und der Tod (Hilde Warren and Death) (May) (sc, four roles); Joe Debs (series) (sc)
1918 Die Rache ist mein (Revenge Is Mine) (Neub) (sc); Herrin der Welt (Men of the World) (May) (asst d); Bettler GmbH (sc)
1919 Wolkenbau und Flimmerstern (Castles in the Sky and Rhine- stones) (d unknown, co-sc); Totentanz (Dance of Death) (Rippert) (sc); Die Pest in Florenz (Plague in Florence) (Rippert) (sc); Die Frau mit den Orchiden (The Woman with the Orchid) (Rippert) (sc); Lilith und Ly (sc)
1921 Das Indische Grabmal (in 2 parts: Die Sendung des Yoghi and Der Tiger von Eschnapur) (co-sc)
1963 Le Mépris (Contempt) (Godard) (role as himself)

Publications

By LANG: articles—

“Happily Ever After,” 1948 (collected in Film Makers on Film Making, edited by Harry Geduld, Bloomington, Indiana, 1969).
“The Impact of Television on Motion Pictures,” interview with G. Bachmann, in Film Culture (New York), December 1957.
Interview with Jean Domarchi and Jacques Rivette, in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), September 1959.

“Was bin ich, was sind wir?,” in Filmkritik (Munich), no.7, 1963.

Interview with Axel Madsen, in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1967.

Interview with Gene Phillips, in Focus on Film (London), Spring 1975.

On LANG: books—

On LANG: articles—

Wilson, Harry, “The Genius of Fritz Lang,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Summer 1947.

Lambert, Gavin, “Fritz Lang’s America,” in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1955.

Sarris, Andrew, “Fritz Lang,” in Film Culture (New York), Spring 1963.

Willis, Don, “Fritz Lang: Only Melodrama,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Winter 1979/80.

‘Special Section,’ in Positif (Paris), no. 405, November 1994.

On LANG: films—

Luft, Friedrich, and Guido Schütte, Künstlerporträt: Fritz Lang, for TV, Germany, 1959.

Fleischmann, Peter, Begegnung mit Fritz Lang, Germany, 1963.

Leiser, Erwin, Das war die Ufa, Germany, 1964.

Leiser, Erwin, Zum Beispiel Fritz Lang, for TV, Germany, 1968.

Dütsch, Werner, Die Schweren Träume des Fritz Lang, for TV, Germany, 1974.

* * *

Fritz Lang’s career can be divided conveniently into three parts: the first German period, 1919–1933, from Faustblau to the second Mabuse film, Das Testament des Dr. Mabuse; the American period, 1936–1956, from Fury to Beyond a Reasonable Doubt; and the second German period, 1959–60, which includes the two films made in India and his last film, Die tausend Augen des Dr. Mabuse. Lang’s apprentice years as a scriptwriter and director were spent in the studios in Berlin where he adopted certain elements of expressionism and was imbued with the artistic seriousness with which the Germans went about making their films. In Hollywood this seriousness would earn Lang a reputation for unnecessary perfectionism, a criticism also thrown at fellow émigrés von Stroheim and von Sternberg. Except for several films for Twentieth Century-Fox, Lang never worked long for a single studio in the United States, and he often preferred to work on underbudgeted projects which he could produce, and therefore control, himself. The rather radical dissimilarities between the two studio worlds within which Lang spent most of his creative years not surprisingly resulted in products which look quite different from one another, and it is the difference in look or image which has produced the critical confusion most often associated with an assessment of Lang’s films.

One critical approach to Lang’s work, most recently articulated by Gavin Lambert, argues that Lang produced very little of artistic interest after he left Germany; the Cahiers du Cinéma auteurs argue the opposite, namely that Lang’s films made in America are superior to his European films because the former were clogged with self-conscious artistry and romantic didacticism which the leaness of his American studio work eliminated. A third approach, suggested by Robin Wood and others, examines Lang’s films as a whole, avoiding the German-American division by looking at characteristic thematic and visual motifs. Lang’s films can be discussed as exhibiting certain distinguishing features—economy, functional precision, detachment—and as containing basic motifs such as the trap, a suppressed underworld, the revenge motive, and the abuse of power. Investigating the films from this perspective reveals a more consistent development of Lang as a creative artist and helps to minimize the superficial anomalies shaped by his career.

In spite of the narrowness of examining only half of a filmmaker’s creative output, the sheer number of Lang’s German movies which have received substantial critical attention as “classic” films has tended to submerge the critical attempt at breadth and comprehensiveness. Not only did these earlier films form an important intellectual center for the German film industry during the years between the wars, as Siegfried Kracauer later pointed out, but they had a wide international impact as well and were extensively reviewed in the Anglo-American press. Lang’s reputation preceded him to America, and although it had little effect ultimately on his working relationship, such as it was, with the Hollywood moguls, it has affected Lang’s subsequent treatment by film critics.

If Lang is a “flawed genius,” as one critic has described him, it is less a wonder that he is “flawed” than that his genius had a chance to develop at all. The working conditions Lang survived after his defection would have daunted a less dedicated director. Lang, however, not only survived but flourished, producing films of undisputed quality: the four war movies, Man Hunt, Hangmen Also Die!, Ministry of Fear, and Cloak and Dagger, and the urban crime films of the 1950s, Clash by Night, The Blue Gardenia, The Big Heat, Human Desire, and While the City Sleeps. These American films reflect a more mature director, tighter mise-en-scène, and more control as a result of Lang’s American experience. The films also reveal continuity. As Robin Wood has written, the formal symmetry of his individual films is mirrored in the symmetry of his career, beginning and ending in Germany. All through his life, Lang adjusted his talent to meet the changes in his environment, and in so doing produced a body of creative work of unquestionable importance in the development of the history of cinema.

—Charles L.P. Silet

LANZMANN, Claude

Nationality: French. Born: Paris, France, 1925. Education: Studied philosophy in Paris and in Germany. Military Service: Member of French Resistance in World War II. Career: Journalist for Le Monde; author of Shoah: An Oral History of the Holocaust, 1985; director of journal Les Temps Modernes. Awards: Decorated by French government for resistance efforts during World War II; New York Film Critics Circle Award, 1985, Los Angeles Film Critics Award, 1985, and Peabody Award, 1987, for Shoah. Address: Aleph Films, 18 rue Marbeuf, 75008 Paris, France.
Films as Director and Writer:

1973  Pourquoi, Israel? (Israel, Why?) (doc)
1985  Shoah (doc)
1995  Tsahal (doc)
1997  A Visitor from the Living (doc)

Publications

By LANZMANN: books—

By LANZMANN: articles—

On LANZMANN: articles—

Claude Lanzmann has turned to extreme and difficult topics such as the Holocaust in order to address questions of Jewish identity. Perhaps some of his motivation is biographical. Although his family did not practice Judaism, they still suffered on behalf of their heritage. When the Nazis invaded France, Lanzmann’s family moved to the French town of Clermont-Ferrand, where they hid from the German occupiers. As a young adult, Lanzmann joined the French communist party and resisted the Nazis, which caused him to be pursued by the Gestapo, the Nazi secret police.

Despite these extreme experiences of his youth, Lanzmann continued his study of philosophy in Germany after the end of World War II. While there, he began his career as a journalist. His first piece unmasked the persistence of Nazism in Germany’s supposedly de-Nazified university system. He then wrote for the French newspaper Le Monde as the first French man to travel through East Germany, which he did (illegally) after being denied a visa. Later, Lanzmann befriended Jean-Paul Sartre and Simone de Beauvoir and edited Sartre’s left-wing periodical, Les Temps Modernes.

Lanzmann’s 1973 film, Pourquoi Israel (Why Israel?), linked Jewish identity in Israel to the recent history of the Holocaust. It premiered three days after the Yom Kippur War broke out in Israel. During the making of this film, Lanzmann met his wife, a German-Jewish writer to whom the film is dedicated. In 1995, he made a film about the Israeli army, Tsahal. A Visitor from the Living (1997) is a 65-minute documentary about Maurice Rossel, the only International Red Cross member who visited the death camps in 1943. In interview footage shot while filming Shoah, Rossel, who visited the death camps of Auschwitz and Treblinka and reported that nothing was wrong, insists that he would write the same report today. He did not look deeply then, and he still refuses to assume any guilt for his position of apathy and blindness.

Lanzmann is best known for his critically acclaimed masterpiece Shoah (1985), a complex and powerful cinematic oral history of the Nazi genocide. The title is the Hebrew word for annihilation or catastrophe. Shoah is composed of approximately fifteen first-person testimonial from former Nazis, Polish peasants, and survivors of the death camps (many of whom only survived because they worked as Kapos, assisting the smooth execution of the Nazi death machinery). Shoah is both a film about the relation between witnessing a catastrophe and a systematic refusal to historicize the subject. One sees this refusal in the absence of documentary film footage of the liberation of the camps by the Allies. “Image kills imagination,” Lanzmann has said in an interview, to explain the sparsity of his choice of presentation.

In the place of archival images, the film chronicles the memories of those who lived through the Holocaust and the simultaneous incompatibility of the bystanders’ and victims’ points of view. In 1974, Lanzmann began the research for Shoah, a film that Roger Ebert describes as a 550-minute “howl of pain” about the systematic murder of six million European Jews by the Nazis. Lanzmann accumulated more than 350 hours of testimony. Despite the enormity of the topic and breadth of atrocity, there are only two types of scenes: faces of witnesses, and the tranquil contemporary landscapes under which are buried mass graves.

The film points out the presence of the past in the places where Jews once lived in Poland, in the haunted ground of Auschwitz and Treblinka, and in the memories of those who survived. The director conducted his interviews with the belief that “one has to talk and be silent at the same time.” The testimonies are given in various languages, underscoring their foreignness. An on-screen translator interprets the words, but they are not dubbed. The spectator can hear but cannot understand the language of testimony. The survivors remember their experience of the camps in heart-breaking detail. Throughout Shoah, Lanzmann takes survivors back to the sites of the death camps and the spectator watches as they relive past traumas. The film opens with a disturbing reenactment. Simon Srebnik, one of only two survivors of the Polish village of Chelmno, follows Lanzmann’s command to sing as they float down a river in a boat, just as he was forced to as a thirteen-year-old by Nazis. The peasants only remember him as a young singing lad, completely erasing the circumstances in which he was forced to sing. In perhaps the film’s most powerful scene, Abraham Bomba, situated in a barbershop for the interview, is asked minute questions about the details of his routine as the barber of women about to be gassed at Treblinka. Bomba, still today a barber in Tel Aviv, insists that in Treblinka, all feeling was impossible; yet, in the face of Lanzmann’s relentless questioning, he breaks down and cries.

Contrasted to the survivors are the perpetrators, ex-Nazis who remain unrepentant in their focus on the horrifying efficiency of the camps. Lanzmann painstakingly recorded the details of the mass extermination of the Jews from the mouth of the murderers, all of whom deny actually doing or seeing the killing. Using duplicity, pseudonyms, false identification papers, and a concealed camera, Lanzmann secretly filmed these former Nazis without disclosing the true nature of his project. At one point in the process, a former Nazi discovered Lanzmann’s video equipment, took the film footage, and beat Lanzmann so badly that he was hospitalized for a month. Such responses to his relentless questioning revealed the persistence of anti-Semitism in Europe.

When the film premiered in New York in 1985, it met with rave critical reviews, including a statement of praise from Pope John Paul II. Gene Siskel called Shoah “the greatest use of film in motion picture history, taking movies to their highest moral value.” Kevin Thomas in the Los Angeles Times declared that “Lanzmann has accomplished the seemingly impossible: He has brought such beauty to his recounting of the horror of the Holocaust that he has made it accessible and comprehensible.’’ And according to Roger Ebert, ‘‘What is so important about Shoah is that the voices are heard of people who did see, who did understand, who did comprehend, who were there, who knew that the Holocaust happened, who tell us with their voices and with their eyes that genocide occurred in our time, in our civilization.’’

Despite the focus of his magnus opus on an historical atrocity, Lanzmann is against building bridges with the past. He is an adamant critic of the film industry’s commodification of the Holocaust with films such as Spielberg’s Schindler’s List and Roberto Benigni’s Life Is Beautiful. Lanzmann insists that ‘‘the Holocaust is not a fairy-tale, it is not digestible.’’ In keeping with this dictum, Lanzmann’s films present contradictions of the past that remain unresolved.

—Jill Gillespie

LATTUADA, Alberto

Films as Director and Co-Scriptwriter:

1942 Giacomo l’idealist
1945 La freccia nel fianco; La nostra guerra (documentary)
1946 Il bandito
1947 Il delitto di Giovanni Episcopo (Flesh Will Surrender)
1948 Senza pietà (Without Pity)
1949 Il mulino del Po (The Mill on the Po)
1950 Luci del varietà (Variety Lights) (co-d, co-pr)
1952 Anna; Il cappotto (The Overcoat)
1953 La lupa (The She-Wolf); ‘‘Gli italiani si voltano’’ episode of Amore in città (Love in the City)
1954 La spiaggia (The Beach); Scuola elementare
1956 Guendalina
1958 La tempesta (Tempest)
1960 I dolci inganni; Lettere di una novizia (Rita)
1961 L’imprevisto
1962 Mafioso; La steppa
1965 La mandragola (The Love Root)
1966 Matchless
1967 Don Giovanni in Sicilia (+ co-pr)
1968 Fräulein Doktor
1969 L’amica
1970 Venga a prendere il caffè . . . da noi (Come Have Coffee with Us)
1971 Bianco, rosso e . . . (White Sister)
1973 Sono stato io
1974 Le farò da padre . . . (Bambina)
1976 Cuore di cane; Bruciati da cocente passione (Oh Serafina!)
1978 Così come sei
1980 La cicala
1983 Cristoforo Colombo (Christopher Columbus)
1987 Una spina nel cuore (+ sc)
1988 Fratelli

Other Films:

1935 Il museo dell’amore (asst d)
1936 La danza delle lancette (collaborator on experimental short)
1941 Piccolo mondo antico (Soldati) (asst d)
1942 Si signora (asst d, co-sc)
1958 Un eroe dei nostri tempi (Monicelli) (role)
1994 Il Toro (The Bull) (Mazzaacurati) (role)

Publications

By LATTUADA: books—

Occhio quadrati, album of photos, Milan, 1941.
La tempesta, Bologna, 1958.
La steppa, Bologna, 1962.
Cuore di cane, Bari, 1975.

Alberto Lattuada
His main films during the neorealist period, which he claims never to have taken part in, succeeded in further establishing the Italian cinema in the international market and, unlike many of his colleagues’ works, also proved popular in the domestic market. Il bandito and Il mulino del Po, for example, combined progressive ideology, realistic detail (due to location shooting and attention to quotidian activities), and tight narrative structure through careful attention to editing. In fact, Lattuada’s entire career has demonstrated an ongoing interest in editing, which he considers more fundamental than the script and which gives his films a strictly controlled rhythm with no wasted footage. He shoots brief scenes that, he claims, are more attractive to an audience and that can be easily manipulated at the editing stage.

Lattuada’s background stressed the arts, and his films display a sophisticated cultural appreciation. As a boy, he took an active interest in his father’s musicianship in the orchestra of La Scala in Milan. As a young man, Lattuada worked as a film critic, wrote essays on contemporary painters, co-founded cultural magazines, and worked as an assistant director and scriptwriter. Lattuada co-scripts most of his films and occasionally produces them. He also co-founded what became the Milan film archive, the Cineteca Italiana.

As a director, Lattuada is often called eclectic because of his openness to projects and his ability to handle a wide variety of subject matter. His major commercial successes have been Bianco, rosso e . . ., which he wrote especially for Sophia Loren; Matchless, a parody of the spy genre; Anna, the first Italian film to gross over one billion lire in its national distribution; La spiaggia, a bitter satire of bourgeois realism; and Mafioso, starring Alberto Sordi and filmed in New York, Sicily, and Milan.

Lattuada has also filmed many adaptations of literary works that remain faithful to the original but are never simply static reenactments. These range from the comically grotesque Venga a prendere . . .; a version of Brancati’s satirical Don Giovanni in Sicilia; the horror film Cuore di cane, taken from a Bulgakov novel; the spectacular big-budget La tempesta, from two Pushkin stories; and Chekhov’s metaphorical journey in La steppa. His 1952 version of The Overcoat is considered his masterpiece for its portrayal of psychological states and the excellence of Renato Rascel’s performance. Lattuada is famous for his handling of actors, and has launched the career of many an actress, including Catherine Spaak, Giulietta Masina and Nastassia Kinski.

Notwithstanding the diversity of subject matter he has directed, Lattuada’s main interest has been pubescent sexuality, the passage of a girl into womanhood, and the sexual relationship of a couple as the primary attraction they have for each other. Thus, his films deal with eroticism as a central theme and he chooses actresses whose physical beauty and sensuousness are immediately apparent. This motif appeared in Lattuada’s work as early as his second feature and has been his main preoccupation in his films since 1974.

His films have been critically well received in Italy, although rarely given the attention enjoyed by some of his contemporaries. In France, however, his work is highly acclaimed; Il bandito and Il cappotto received much praise at the Cannes festivals when they were shown. With a few exceptions, his more recent work is little known in Britain and the United States, although when Come Have Coffee with Us was released commercially in the United States ten years after it was made, it enjoyed a fair success at the box office and highly favorable reviews.

—Elaine Mancini
LAUNDER, Frank, and Sidney GILLIAT

Films Directed, Produced, and Written by Launder and Gilliat:

1943 Millions like Us (Launder and Gilliat)
1944 Two Thousand Women (Launder)
1945 The rake’s Progress (The Notorious Gentleman) (Gilliat)
1946 Green for Danger (Gilliat); I See a Dark Stranger (Launder)
1947 Captain Boycott (Launder)
1948 The Blue Lagoon (Launder); London Belongs to Me (Dulcimer Street) (Gilliat)
1950 State Secret (The Great Manhunt) (Gilliat); The Happiest Days of Your Life (Launder)
1951 Lady Godiva Rides Again (Launder)
1952 Folly to Be Wise (Launder)
1953 The Story of Gilbert and Sullivan (The Great Gilbert and Sullivan) (Gilliat)
1954 The Constant Husband (Gilliat); The Belles of St. Trinian’s (Launder)
1955 Geordie (Wee Geordie) (Launder)
1956 Fortune Is a Woman (She Played with Fire) (Gilliat)
1957 Blue Murder at St. Trinian’s (Launder)
1959 The Bridal Path (Launder); Left, Right, and Centre (Gilliat)
1960 The Pure Hell of St. Trinian’s (Launder)
1961 Only Two Can Play (Gilliat)
1965 Joey Boy (Launder)
1966 The Great St. Trinian’s Train Robbery (Launder and Gilliat)

Films Written by Launder and Gilliat:

1936 Seven Sinners (de Courville); Twelve Good Men (Ince)
1938 The Lady Vanishes (Hitchcock)
1939 Inspector Hornleigh on Holiday (Forde)
1940 They Came by Night (Lachman); Night Train to Munich (Reed)
1942 The Young Mr. Pitt (Reed)
1956 The Green Man (Day) (+ pr)

Other Films—Launder:

1928 Cocktails (Banks) (titles)
1929 Under the Greenwood Tree (Lachman) (co-sc)
1930 The Compulsory Husband (Banks) (dialogue/dubbing); Song of Soho (Lachman) (co-sc); Harmony Heaven (Bentley) (additional dialogue); The W Plan (Saville) (additional dialogue); The Middle Watch (Walker) (co-sc); Children of Change (Eway) (co-sc); How He Lied to Her Husband (Lewis) (sc)
1931 Keepers of Youth (Bentley) (sc); Hobson’s Choice (Bentley) (co-sc); A Gentleman of Paris (Hill) (co-sc); The Woman Between (Mander) (co-sc)
1932 After Office Hours (Bentley) (co-sc); The Last Coupon (Bentley) (co-sc); Arms and the Man (Lewis) (co-sc, uncredited); Joss in the Army (Lee) (sc)
1935 Emil and the Detectives (Rosmer) (co-sc); Rolling Home (R. Ince) (sc); So You Won’t Talk (Beaudine) (co-sc); Mr. What’s His Name (Ince) (co-sc); Educated Evans (Beaudine) (co-sc); Windbag the Sailor (Beaudine) (sc editor)
1937 Good Morning Boys (Varnel) (sc editor); Bank Holiday (Reed) (sc editor); O-Kay for Sound (Varnel) (sc editor); Doctor Syn (Neill) (sc editor); Oh, Mr. Porter! (Varnel) (story)
1938 Owed Bob (Stevenson) (sc editor); Strange Boarders (Mason) (sc editor); Convict 99 (Varnel) (sc editor); Alf’s Button Afloat (Varnel) (sc editor); Hey! Hey! U.S.A.! (Varnel) (sc editor); Old Bones of the River (Varnel) (sc editor)
1939 Ask a Policeman (Varnel) (sc editor); A Girl Must Live (Reed) (sc); The Frozen Limits (Varnel) (sc editor)
1940 Inspector Hornleigh Goes to It (Forde) (story)
1946 An Elephant Called Slowly (Hill) (sc uncredited)
1980 Wildcats of St. Trinian’s (d, sc)

Other Films—Gilliat:

1928 Toni (Maude) (titles); Champagne (Hitchcock) (titles); Adams’s Apple (Whelan) (titles); Weekend Wives (Lachman) (titles); The Maxman (Hitchcock) (research)
1929 The Tryst (short) (co-d); Would You Believe It? (Forde) (asst d, + role)
1930 Red Pearls (Forde) (asst d); You’d Be Surprised (Forde) (asst d, + role); The Last Hour (Forde) (asst d); Lord Richard in the Pantry (Forde) (sc); Bed’s Breakfast (Forde) (sc)
1931 3rd Time Lucky (Ford) (additional dialogue); The Ghost Train (Forde) (additional dialogue); A Gentleman of Paris (Hill) (sc); The Happy Ending (Webb) (co-sc, uncredited); A Night in Marseilles (Night Shadows) (de Courville) (sc); Two Way Street (King) (sc)
1932 Lord Babes (Forde) (additional dialogue); Jack’s the Boy (Forde) (sc continuity); Rome Express (Forde) (sc); For the Love of Mike (Banks) (co-sc)
1933 Sign Please (Rawlins—short) (sc); Post haste (Cadman—short) (sc); Facing the Music (Hughes) (co-story); Falling for You (Hulbert and Stevenson) (story); Orders Is Orders (Forde) (co-sc); Friday the Thirteenth (Saville) (co-story)

569
Sidney Gilliat and Frank Launder

1934
 Jack Ahoy! (Forde) (co-sc); Chu-Chin-Chow (Forde) (co-sc); My Heart Is Calling (Gallone) (adapt/dialogue)

1935
 Bulldog Jack (Alias Bulldog Drummond) (Forde) (co-sc); King of the Damned (Forde) (co-sc)

1936
 Tudor Rose (Stevenson) (assoc pr); Where There’s a Will (Beaudine) (sc); The Man Who Changed His Mind (The Man Who Lived Again) (Stevenson) (co-sc, assoc pr); Strangers on a Honeymoon (de Courville) (co-sc)

1937
 Take My Tip (Mason) (co-sc); A Yank at Oxford (Conway) (story)

1938
 Strange Boarders (Mason) (co-sc); The Gaunt Stranger (The Phantom Strikes) (Forde) (sc)

1939
 Ask a Policeman (Varnel) (story); Jamaica Inn (Hitchcock) (sc)

1940
 The Girl in the News (Reed) (sc)

1941
 The Ghost Train (Forde) (additional dialogue); Kipps (The Remarkable Mr. Kipps) (Reed) (sc); Mr. Proudfoot Shows a Light (Mason—short) (story); You’re Telling Me! (Peak—short) (sc); From the Four Corners (Havelock-Allan—short) (sc, uncredited)

1942
 Unpublished Story (French) (co-sc); Partners in Crime (short) (co-d, sc)

1944
 Waterloo Road (d, sc)

1957
 The Smallest Show on Earth (Dearden) (pr)

1972
 Ooh . . . You Are Awful! (Get Charlie Tully) (Owen) (co-exec pr); Endless Night (d, sc)

Publications

On LAUNDER AND GILLIAT: books—

On LAUNDER AND GILLIAT: articles—

“Frank Launder,” in Film Dope (London), November 1985.

* * *

Frank Launder and Gilliat’s chosen specialty was intelligent entertainment with a distinctive British flavor. Each had their individual style and preferences. Launder favored the breezy implausibilities of farce (The Happiest Days of Your Life, the St. Trinian’s films), tempered with a dose of Celtic whimsy (Geordie, The Bridal Path, parts of I See a Dark Stranger). Gilliat leaned more towards caustic social comedy (The Rake’s Progress, Only Two Can Play) and rigorously detailed thrillers (State Secret). But they functioned admirably as a team: first as screenwriters (working in tandem from 1935), then, from 1943, as writer-producer-directors—though only on their first feature, Millions like Us, did they attempt joint direction, side by side.

Both separately entered the industry in lowly capacities in 1928, and gradually worked up the ladder during the 1930s, serving in various studio script departments. As a team they earned their reputation with thrillers. Seven Sinners, their first collaboration, established their talent for concocting ingenious plot twists, expertly balancing comedy with suspense, and stamping even the most minor character with individuality. Subsequent films refined the formula: The Lady Vanishes, for instance (their script was substantially written before Hitchcock came on board as director), and Night Train to Munich, one of several scripts directed by Carol Reed. Both these films featured Charters and Caldicott—comic, imperturbable Englishmen, played by Basil Radford and Naunton Wayne, who bumbled obliviously round a jittery Europe, babbling about cricket scores and picking up Mein Kampf at a German station bookstall only after a fruitless request for Punch. Charters and Caldicott make an appearance in Millions like Us, laying beach mines. But this was only for old times’ sake: the film belonged firmly to the women factory workers, whose hopes and problems were explored in a rich tapestry of individual plot-lines. Few other British feature films of World War II evoke the Home Front’s daily round with quite the same nose for detail or emotional pull. Gilliat’s next production, Waterloo Road, slipped into melodrama at times, but still maintained a strong realistic atmosphere in its triangular drama of an AWOL soldier, the soldier’s roving wife, and a muscle-flexing local spiv.

In 1944 Launder and Gilliat launched their own company, Individual Pictures. They began on a high level, working from their own original scripts. Gilliat’s The Rake’s Progress offered a biting satirical treatment of a profligate charmer (Rex Harrison, ideally cast) washed up on the rocks of the 1930s. Launder’s marvelous I See a Dark Stranger wrapped up its far-fetched story about a naive Irish girl persuaded to spy for Germany with Hitchcockian panache. Subsequent films followed a more obviously commercial path, though Gilliat’s Green for Danger and State Secret demonstrated his witty way with thriller conventions, while The Happiest Days of Your Life, adapted from John Dighton’s popular play, displayed Launder’s happy ability to keep the wildest farce on an even keel.

Artistically, the 1950s and 1960s proved less rewarding. The St. Trinian’s series, inspired by the hideous schoolgirls featured in Ronald Searle’s cartoons, began briskly enough within The Belles of St. Trinian’s, but the formula and humor coarsened drastically as the sequels followed. The pleasant whimsy of Geordie—Launder’s tale of the amazing growth of an undersized Scot and his exploitation by others—was no match for the barbed blarney that lit up I See a Dark Stranger, while Gilliat’s gift for social comedy appeared stunted in The Constant Husband and Left, Right, and Centre. Much of their energies were by this time being spent in boardroom activities: as directors of British Lion, they nursed several films by other filmmakers through the production process, including the lively prison comedy Two-Way Stretch. But Gilliat managed a confident return to form in Only Two Can Play, a lively version of Kingsley Amis’s novel about a philandering Welsh librarian, fully alert to the comic drabness of provincial life.

After Endless Night, an elegant diversion adapted from Agatha Christie, was unfairly mauled by the critics, Gilliat retired from filmmaking in the early 1970s. Launder, however, unwisely returned in 1980 with The Wildcats of St. Trinian’s—one of the few films in the team’s long career which seemed out of step with audience’s tastes.

—Geoff Brown

LEACOCK, Richard

Nationality: British. Born: the Canary Islands, 18 July 1921. Education: Educated in England; then studied physics at Harvard University, graduated 1943. Career: Began making documentaries in the Canaries, 1935; moved to U.S., 1938; served as combat photographer, World War II; worked on documentaries with Robert Flaherty, Louis de Rochemont, John Ferno, and Willard Van Dyke, among others, from late 1940s; worked with Robert Drew of Time-Life, then formed partnership with D.A. Pennebaker, 1960s; founder then Head of Department of Film at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, from 1969.

Films as Director and Cinematographer:

1935 Canary Bananas
1938 Galápagos Islands
1944/49 Pelileo Earthquake
1951 The Lonely Boat
1954 Toby and the Tall Corn
1955 How the F-100 Got Its Tail
1958 Bernstein in Israel
1959 Bernstein in Moscow; Coulomb’s Law; Crystals; Magnet Laboratory; Points of Reference
1960 Primary (co-d, co-ph, ed); On the Pole (co-d, co-ph, co-ed); Yanqui No (co-d, co-ph)
1961 Petey and Johnny (co-d, co-ph); The Children Were Watching (co-d, co-ph)
1962 The Chair (co-d, co-ph); Kenya, South Africa (co-d, co-ph)
1963 Crisis (co-d, co-ph); Happy Mother’s Day (co-d, co-ph, co-ed)
1964 A Stravinsky Portrait (+ ed); Portrait of Geza Anda (+ ed); Portrait of Paul Burkhard (+ ed); Republicans—The New Breed (co-d, co-ph)
1965 The Anatomy of Cindy Fink (co-d, co-ph); Ku Klux Klan—The Invisible Empire
1966 Old Age—The Wasted Years; Portrait of Van Cliburn (+ ed)
1967 Monterey Pop (+ co-ph); Lulu
1968 Who’s Afraid of the Avant-Garde (co-d, co-ph, co-ed); Hickory Hill
1969 Chiefs (+ ed)
1970 Queen of Apollo (+ ed)
1986 Impressions de L’Ile des Morts (co-d)

Other Films:

1940 To Hear Your Banjo Play (Van Dyke, W.) (ph)
1946 Louisiana Story (Flaherty) (ph, assoc pr)
1944/49 Geography Films Series (ph)
1950 New Frontier (Years of Change) (ph, ed)
1951 The Lonely Night (ph)
1952 Head of the House (ph)
1954 New York (ph)
1958 Bullfight at Málaga (ph)
1959 Balloon (co-ph)
1968 Maidstone (co-ph)
1971 Sweet Toronto (co-ph); One P.M. (co-ph); Keep On Rockin’ (co-ph)
1984 Ein Film für Bossak und Leacock (Wildenhalm) (for TV) (role as himself)
1986 Working Girls (Borden) (role as Joseph)
1995 Le Fils de Gascogne (Aubier) (role)
1999 Der Letzte Dokumentarfilm (Sebening and Sponsel) (role); Cinéma Vérité: Defining the Moment (Wintonick) (role as himself)

“For an Uncontrolled Cinema,” in Film Culture (New York), Summer 1961.
Interview, in Movie (London), April 1963.
“Ricky Leacock on Stravinsky Film,” in Film Culture (New York), Fall 1966.
Interview with H. Naficy, in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), vol. 10, no. 4, October 1982.
Interview with M. Petrutiina, in Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), July 1989.
Interview with Louis Marcorelles, in 24 Images (Montreal), November-December 1989.

On LEACOCK: books—

On LEACOCK: articles—
Callenbach, Ernest, “Going out to the Subject,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1961.
Blue, James, “One Man’s Truth,” in Film Comment (New York), Spring 1965.

On LEACOCK: articles—

By LEACOCK: books—
Richard Leacock: An American Film Institute Seminar on His Work, American Film Institute.

By LEACOCK: articles—

Publications

By LEACOCK: books—

Richard Leacock: An American Film Institute Seminar on His Work, American Film Institute.

By LEACOCK: articles—

Trenczak, Heinz, “Leacock und Frank in Augsburg,” in EPD Film (Frankfurt), May 1991.

* * *

As cinematographer, producer, director, and editor, Richard Leacock has been an important contributor to the development of the documentary film, specifically in cinéma vérité, now often called direct cinema. For direct cinema filming, the lightweight 16-millimeter camera, handheld and synced to a quiet recorder, allows the filmmaker to intrude as little as possible into the lives of those being filmed. From the very beginning of his interest in this kind of filming, Leacock has been an active experimenter and an inventor of mobile 16-millimeter equipment for filming events, lifestyles, ongoing problematic situations, and other varieties of live history. At Massachusetts Institute of Technology, where he heads the department of film, he has developed super-8 sync-sound equipment and related technology. As a patient, courteous and informative lecturer to hundreds of teachers in many workshops, he has demonstrated this equipment and its use for TV, shown his films, and indirectly taught many youngsters who went on to work in film, TV, and related fields.

At fourteen, Leacock, already an active still photographer, impressed his schoolmates in England with a 16-minute film made on his home island. An indicator, perhaps, of his later concentration on non-subjective filming, his 1935 Canary Bananas is still a good, straightforward silent film about what workers do on a banana plantation. Leacock’s later work on diverse topics, including the life of a traveling tent show entertainer, communism and democracy in South America, excitement about quintuplets in South Dakota, the mind and work of an artist, and opera attest to the breadth of his interests.

Leacock treasures his experience as photographer with poetic filmmaker/explorer Robert Flaherty on Louisiana Story, which was commissioned by Standard Oil to show preliminary steps in searching and drilling for oil, but emerged as a film poem about a boy in the bayou. Leacock stated that he learned from Flaherty how to discover with a camera. But having realized how difficult Flaherty’s ponderous un-synced equipment had made direct shooting, Leacock later joined a group, led by Robert Drew of Time-Life in 1960, committed to making direct cinema films for TV.

An example of the Drew unit’s work was Primary, an account of the campaign of Democratic senators John F. Kennedy and Hubert Humphrey in the Wisconsin presidential primary that Leacock worked on with Donn Alan Pennebaker, Robert Drew, and Terry Filgat. Critics called this film an excellent report on the inner workings of a political campaign as well as an appealing glimpse of the personal lives of candidates and their families. But Leacock was dissatisfied because the camera people could never get in to film such vital behind-the-scenes activities as public relations methods.

Leacock has frequently indicated his own and other documentarists concerns about obstacles to achieving direct cinema. Leacock, always critical of his own work, is concerned about distribution problems and thoughtful about the role of films in effecting social change. He has dedicated his life to creating less expensive, more manageable apparatus, to portraying art and artists, to experimenting, to letting situation and event tell their own story, and to teaching.

—Lillian Schiff

LEAN, David

Nationality: British. Born: Croydon, Surrey, 25 March 1908. Education: Leighton Park Quaker School, Reading. Family: Married 1) Kay Walsh, 1940 (divorced 1949); 2) Ann Todd, 1949 (divorced 1957); 3) Leila Matkar, 1960 (divorced 1978); 4) Sandra Hotz, 1981 (marriage dissolved 1985). Career: Clapperboard boy at Lime Grove Studios under Maurice Elvey, 1926; camera assistant, then cutting room assistant, 1928; chief editor for Gaumont-British Sound News, 1930, then for British Movietone News, from 1931; editor for British Paramount, from 1934; invited by Noel Coward to co-direct In Which We Serve, 1942; co-founder, with Ronald Neame and Anthony Havelock-Allan, Cineguild, 1943 (dissolved 1950); began association with producer Sam Spiegel, 1956; returned to filmmaking after fourteen-year absence to make A Passage to India, 1984. Awards: British Film Academy Award for The Sound Barrier, 1952; Commander Order of the British Empire, 1953; Best Direction, New York Film Critics, 1955; Oscar for Best Director, and Best Direction, New York Film Critics, for The Bridge on the River Kwai, 1957; Oscars for Best Director and Best Film, for Lawrence of Arabia, 1962; Officier des Arts et des Lettres, France, 1968; Fellow of the British Film Institute, 1974. Death: Leighton Park Quaker School, Reading, England, 15 November 1981.

Films as Director:

1942 In Which We Serve (co-d)
1944 This Happy Breed (+ co-adapt)
1945 Blithe Spirit (+ co-adapt); Brief Encounter (+ co-sc)
1946 Great Expectations (+ co-sc)
1948 Oliver Twist (+ co-sc)
1949 The Passionate Friends (One Woman’s Story) (+ co-adapt)
1950 Madeleine
1952 The Sound Barrier (Breaking the Sound Barrier) (+ pr)
1954 Hobson’s Choice (+ pr, co-sc)
1955 Summer Madness (Summertime) (+ co-sc)
1957 The Bridge on the River Kwai
1962 Lawrence of Arabia
1965 Doctor Zhivago
1970 Ryan’s Daughter
1984 A Passage to India

Other Films:

1935 Escape Me Never (Czinner) (ed)
1936 As You Like It (Czinner) (ed)
1937 Dreaming Lips (Czinner) (ed)
1938 Pygmalion (Asquith and Howard) (ed)
1939 French without Tears (Asquith) (ed)
1941 Major Barbara (Pascal) (ed)
1942 49th Parallel (Powell) (ed); One of Our Aircraft Is Missing (Powell) (ed)

Publications

By LEAN: articles—

Interview, in Interviews with Film Directors, edited by Andrew Sarris, New York, 1967.

Interview with S. Ross, in Take One (Montreal), November 1973.

Interview with Graham Fuller and Nick Kent, in Stills (London), March 1985.

On LEAN: books—

On LEAN: articles—

Lightman, Herb, ‘‘On Location with Ryan’s Daughter’’, in American Cinematographer (Los Angeles), August 1968.

Andrews, George, ‘‘A Cinematographic Adventure with David Lean,’’ in American Cinematographer (Los Angeles), March 1979.

Kennedy, Harlan, and M. Sragow, ‘‘David Lean’s Right of Passage,’’ in Film Comment (New York), January/February 1985.

Levine, J.P., ‘‘Passage to the Odeon: Too Lean,’’ in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), vol. 14, no. 3, 1986.

‘‘David Lean,’’ in Film Dope (London), March 1986.

McInerney, J.M., ‘‘Lean’s Zhivago: A Re-Appraisal,’’ in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), vol. 15, no. 1, 1987.

Horton, Robert, ‘‘Jungle Fever,’’ in Film Comment (New York), September/October 1991.

McFarlane, B., ‘‘David Lean’s ‘Great Expectations’: Meeting Two Challenges,’’ in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), vol. 20, no. 1, 1992.

Brownlow, Kevin, ‘‘The Making of David Lean’s Film of The Bridge on the River Kwai’’, in Cineaste (New York), vol. 22, no. 2, June 1996.

* * *

There is a trajectory that emerges from the shape of David Lean’s career, and it is a misleading one. Lean first achieved fame as
LECONTE, Patrice

Nationality: French. Born: Paris, France, 12 November 1947. Education: Studied at the Institute des Hautes Etudes Cinematographiques. Career: Directed first feature, Les veces etoient fermes de l'intérieur, 1976; often worked with producer Christian Fechner, and actors from the Cafe Splendide, the famed Parisian comedy cafe theater; cemented his international reputation with Monsieur Hire, 1989; has directed many commercials for French television, including ads for Peugeot and Carlsberg beer. Address: French Film Office, 745 Fifth Avenue, New York, NY 10151.

Films as Director and Screenwriter:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1976</td>
<td>Les veces etoient fermes de l'intérieur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1978</td>
<td>Les bronzes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1981</td>
<td>Viens chez moi, j’habite chez une copine (Come to My Place, I’m Living at My Girlfriend’s)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1982</td>
<td>Ma femme’s appelle reviens (Singles)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

...and so he became a director of seemingly intimate films, closely based on plays of Noel Coward. His first directorial credit was shared with Coward, for In Which We Serve. In the 1960s he was responsible for extraordinarily ambitious projects, for an epic cinema of grandiose effects, difficult location shooting, and high cultural, even literary, pretension. But, in fact, Lean’s essential approach to the movies never changed. All of his films, no matter how small or large their dimensions, demonstrate an obsessive cultivation of craft, a fastidious concern with production detail that defines the “quality” postwar British cinema. That craft and concern are as hyperbolic in their devices as is the medium itself. Viewers surprised at the attention to detail and composition in Ryan’s Daughter, a work whose scope would appear to call for a more modest approach, had really not paid attention to the truly enormous dimensions of Brief Encounter, a film that defines, for many, intimist cinema.

Lean learned about the movies during long years of apprenticeship, gaining particularly important experience as an editor. It is clear, even in the first films he directed (and then for) Coward, that his vision was not bound to the playwright’s West End proscenium. This Happy Breed, a lower class version of Cavalcade, makes full use of the modest terraced house that is the film’s prime locus. The nearly palpable patterns of the mise-en-scène are animated by the highly professional acting characteristic of Lean’s early films. Watching the working out of those patterns created by the relationship between camera, decor, and actor is like watching choreography at the ballet, where the audience is made aware of the abstract forms of placement on the stage even as that placement is vitalized by the individual quality of the dancer. The grief of Celia Johnson and Robert Newton is first expressed by the empty room that they are about to enter, then by the way the camera’s oblique backward movement respects their silence.

It is in Brief Encounter that the fullness of the director’s talent becomes clear. This story of chance meeting, love, and renunciation is as apparently mediocre, conventional, and echoless as Flaubert’s Madame Bovary. What could be more boringly middle-class than the romantic longings of a nineteenth-century French provincial housewife or the oh-so-tasteful near adultery of two “decent” Britishes? In both cases, the authorial interventions are massive. Lean conveys the film’s passion through the juxtaposition of the trite situation against the expressionistic violence of passing express trains and the wrenching departure of locals, against the decadent romanticism of the Rachmaninoff score, and most emphatically against one of the most grandiose and hyperbolic exposures of an actress in the history of film. The size of Celia Johnson’s eyes finally becomes the measure of Brief Encounter, eyes whose scope is no less expansive than Lawrence’s desert or Zhivago’s tundra.

Lean’s next two successes were his adaptations (with Ronald Neame) of Charles Dickens novels, Great Expectations and Oliver Twist. Again, intimacy on the screen becomes the moment of gigantic display. The greatness of Pip’s expectations are set by the magnitude of his frightful encounter with an escaped convict who, when he emerges into the frame, reminds us all what it is like to be a small child in a world of oversized, menacing adults. A variation of this scale is also seen in Pip’s meeting with mad Miss Havisham, in all her gothic splendor.

Lean’s next few films seem to have more modest ambitions, but they continue to demonstrate the director’s concern with expressive placement. Of his three films with his then-wife Ann Todd, Madeleine most fully exploits her cool blond beauty.

A significant change then took place in the development of his career. Lean’s reputation as a “location” director with a taste for the picturesque was made by Summertime, an adaptation of the play The Time of the Cuckoo, in which the city of Venice vies with Katharine Hepburn for the viewer’s attention. It is from this point that Lean must be identified as an international rather than an English director. The subsequent international packages that resulted perhaps explain the widespread (and unjust) opinion that Lean is more of an executive than a creator with a personal vision.

The personality of Lean is in his compulsive drive to the perfectly composed shot, whatever the cost in time, energy, and money. In this there is some affinity between the director and his heroes. The Colonel (Alec Guinness) in The Bridge on the River Kwai must drive his men to build a good bridge, even if it is for the enemy. Lawrence (Peter O’Toole) crosses desert after desert in his quest for a self purified through physical ordeal, and viewers must wonder about the ordeals suffered by the filmmakers to photograph those deserts. The same wonder is elicited by the snowy trek of Dr. Zhivago (Omar Sharif) and the representation of life in early twentieth-century Russia.

That perfectly composed shot is emblemized by the principal advertising image used for Ryan’s Daughter—an umbrella floating in air, suspended over an oceanside cliff. This is a celebration of composition per se, composition that holds unlikely elements in likely array. Composition is an expressive tension, accessible to viewers as it simultaneously captures the familiar and the unfamiliar. It is the combination that makes so many viewers sensitive to Brief Encounter, where middle-class lives (the lives of filmgoers) are filled with overwhelming passion and overwhelming style. Laura and Alex fall in love when they go to the movies.

—Charles Affron
Patrice Leconte

1983  Circulez y a rien a voir (Move Along, There’s Nothing to See)
1985  Les specialistes (The Specialists)
1986  Tandem
1989  Monsieur Hire
1990  Le mari de la coiffeuse (The Hairdresser’s Husband)
1991  Contre l’oubli (Against Oblivion) (co-d)
1992  Le batteur du bolero
1993  Le tango (Tango); Yvonne’s Perfume
1995  Lumière et compagnie (Lumière and Company) (short Lumiere film)
1996  Les grands ducs (The Grand Dukes); Ridicule
1998  Une chance sur deux (Half a Chance) (co-sc)
1999  La fille sur le pont (The Girl on the Bridge)
2000  La veuve de Saint-Pierre (Widow of Saint-Pierre)

Other Films:
1984  Moi vouloir toi (Me Want You) (Dewolf) (co-sc)
1994  The Son of Gascogne (role)

Publications

By LECONTE: articles—

Interview with F. Aude in Positif (Paris), May 1991.
Interview with F. Aude in Positif (Paris), March 1993.
“Ridicule,” an interview with Michel Sineux and Yann Tobin, in Positif (Paris), May 1996.

Interview with M. Roudevitch, in Bref (Paris), Summer 1997.

On LECONTE: articles—

* * *

In 1989 Patrice Leconte earned international acclaim upon the release of Monsieur Hire, a sharp, clever thriller. Yet for almost a decade and a half, he had been thriving as a director of light, strictly commercial satires—smashingly successful at home but little-known outside France—which were crammed with physical slapstick, plays-on-words, and other assorted shenanigans. These films were amusing and nonsensical, with his casts including Josiane Balasko, Michel Blanc, Bernard Giraudeau, and other prominent actors from the French theater and cinema. A typical Leconte film of this period is Les Bronzes, a farce that chides Club Med-style vacation villages by contrasting two single males. One (Blanc) is hopelessly unsuccessful with the opposite sex, even in such ready-made surroundings. The other (Thierry Lhermitte) is a stud who finds it all too easy to seduce women.

So it seemed astonishing when Leconte directed Monsieur Hire, a film that was anything but funny. It is a psychological thriller, based on the same Georges Simenon novel that inspired Duvivier’s Panique, in which Blanc appears as the title character—a bald, eccentric, middle-aged loner. The film is a revealing portrait of French-style provincialism in that M. Hire resides in a Parisian suburb where the status quo reigns, and where anyone who is different is viewed with suspicion. And M. Hire is different indeed. So he is the logical suspect after a young girl is brutally murdered, and is summarily and mercilessly hounded by the cop on the case. Monsieur Hire may be linked to a film like Les Bronzes in that both deal with men who obsess over women, seeing them not as human beings but as objects. Here, M. Hire has a voyeuristic obsession with Alice (Sandrine Bonnaire), his pretty young neighbor. But M. Hire is no comically inept male; rather, he is a lonely, affection-starved skull who eventually strikes up a friendship with the free-spirited Alice. Of course, M. Hire is not the kind of man to attract such a woman. Because he is blinded by his feelings for Alice and oblivious to her true nature, he ends up being manipulated and victimized.

Leconte’s follow-up, The Hairdresser’s Husband, works as a companion piece to Monsieur Hire. It is the deceptively simple story of Antoine, who as a young boy on the edge of puberty does not spend his time with other kids, riding bicycles or indulging in sports. Instead, he is constantly at the town barbershop, where he is smitten with the buxom haircutter. As a middle-aged man, Antoine (Jean Rochefort) can describe the woman in minute detail. Back when he was a boy, he decided that his sole goal in life would be to marry a hairdresser. And so he does. He proposes to the beautiful Mathilde (Anna Galiena) while she cuts his hair for the first time. She accepts, and they are wed. Both are content and the days pass, one after the other, as if in a dream. If all of this sounds slight, it is not. The film, as it focuses on Antoine and Mathilde’s love and their attempt to shelter themselves from all that is bad in life, is crammed with profoundly deep layers of emotion. Like Monsieur Hire, it is a concise, knowing allegory about romantic obsession and how a man can be fascinated by a woman. The difference between the two films is that, here, love brings him peace. But how fragile is that peace? All lovers are destined to be separated by death, if not by cruel fate. In Monsieur Hire, a man is thwarted in his attempt to find his idealized love, to the point where his life becomes enveloped by tragedy. While a different (yet not dissimilar) man does find love in The Hairdresser’s Husband, Leconte is worldly enough to know that, because of the very nature of human existence, such happiness is fated to be only temporary.

In Tango, a third Leconte feature, the filmmaker returned to his comic roots, but with a devilish twist. Tango is the story of a woman-hater (Philippe Noiret) who believes that “wife-killing isn’t really murder.” Via blackmail, he coerces another man (Richard Bohringer), who had killed his own wife and her lover, into murdering the mate of his nephew (Thierry Lhermitte), who is tired of married life and wants the freedom to play around. What sounds like a thriller actually is a freewheeling, ingeniously structured, pitch-black comedy about the manner in which men are endlessly fascinated by women but dislike being tied down by them. In this regard, Tango is an extension of the characters and themes explored in Monsieur Hire and The Hairdresser’s Husband. These three films are evidence that Leconte has matured as a filmmaker, and that his days making frivolous farces are forever past.

—Rob Edelman

LEDUC, Paul

Nationality: Mexican. Born: Mexico City, 11 March 1942. Education: Studied architecture and theatre, Universidad Nacional Autónoma de México; attended Institut des hautes études cinématographiques (IDHEC), Paris, 1965–66. Career: Film critic in Mexico, early 1960s; worked for French TV, then returned to Mexico, 1967.

Films as Director:

1968 Comunicados del comité nacional de huelga (3 shorts)
1969 Parto psicoprofiláctico (doc short)
1973 Reed: México insurgente (Reed: Insurgent Mexico)
1974 Sur, sureste 2604 (short); El mar
1975 Bach y sus intérpretes
1978 Enocidio; notas sobre el Mezquital; Estudios para un retrato (Francis Bacon) (doc short); Puebla hoy (doc); Monjas coronadas (doc short)
1979 Historias prohibidas de Pulgarcito
1981 Complot petrolero; La cabeza de la hidra
1982 Como ves? (Whaddya Think?)
1984 Frida: Naturaleza viva (Frida)
1989 Barroco (Baroque)
1990 Latino Bar
1993 Dollar Mambo
1995 Los Animales 1850–1950

Publications

By LEDUC: articles—

Interview with Nelson Carro, in Imagenes (Mexico City), October 1979.
Interview with Enrique Pineda Barnet, in Cine Cubano (Havana), no. 104, 1983.

On LEDUC: books—

Blanco, Jorge Ayala, La búsqueda del cine mexicano, Mexico City, 1974.
Sánchez, Alberto Ruy, Mitología de un cine en crisis, Mexico City, 1981.
Blanco, Jorge Ayala, La condición del cine mexicano, Mexico City, 1986.
Paranagua, Paulo Antonio, editor, Mexican Cinema, British Film Institute, 1996.

On LEDUC: articles—

* * *

Generally acknowledged as the most talented and socially conscious of contemporary Mexican directors, Paul Leduc has been forced to make his films on the margins of commercial cinema. Leduc began his career in a university department of film studies, an initiation increasingly prevalent among the younger generation of Mexican filmmakers. His first films were documentaries, a typical beginning for directors of the “New Latin American Cinema.” Then Leduc was able to take some advantage of a novel situation: during the reign of President Luis Echeverria (1970–76) the Mexican government actively intervened as a producer of cinema, the only time since the 1930s (e.g., Redes) that it has attempted to create some sort of alternative to the wretched fare provided by the country’s commercial film industry. The government paid for the amplification of Reed: Insurgent Mexico to 35mm and co-produced Mezquital with the Canadian National Film Board. Since that time, however, Leduc has funded his films independently, through universities and unions, and with collective efforts.

Reed: Insurgent Mexico is perhaps Leduc’s most accomplished fiction film, and was the first really distinctive work of the “New Cinema” movement in Mexico. Although the film was shot on a minuscule budget in 16mm, it has an exquisite sepia tone which reproduces the ambience of antique revolutionary photographs. Deliberately undramatic, Reed demystified the Mexican revolution (1910–17) in a way that had not been seen since Fernando De Fuentes’s masterpieces of 1933–35. One Mexican critic, Jorge Ayala Blanco, described Reed as “raging against, incinerating, and annihilating the spider web that had been knitted over the once-living image of the revolution, while briefly illuminating the nocturnal ruins of our temporal and cultural distance from the men who participated in that upheaval.” The film is a dramatization of John Reed’s famous account of the revolution, Insurgent Mexico, with Reed as the main protagonist. Although the film is a beautiful and important work, it does not really rise above the level of a vignette (perhaps too greatly influenced by the book’s form), nor does it achieve the heights of De Fuentes’s films.

Leduc’s subsequent works reflected his concern for actuality. Etnocidio: notas sobre el Mezquital is probably the best documentary on the extermination of the native peoples in Latin America, allowing the Otomi Indians of the Mezquital region in Mexico to relate their experiences with “civilization.” The film is an interesting example of collaborative effort, for the “script” was written by Roger Bartra, Mexico’s leading rural sociologist, who based it on his years of research in the area. Historias prohibidas is a flawed work that Leduc made in a collective, but it does contain a lively analysis of El Salvador’s history. Complot petrolero is a made-for-TV thriller about an attempt by right-wing elements (including the CIA and anti-Castro Cubans) to take over the oil and uranium resources of Mexico. Actually a mini-series totaling three-and-one-half hours, it has never been shown on Mexican television, which is largely dominated by series and made-for-TV movies imported from the United States. Just when it appeared that Leduc was firmly settled in the aesthetic of realism, he directed a highly expressionist, lyrical work on the painter Frida Kahlo, Frida: Naturaleza viva. An experimental film which keeps words, whether spoken or written, to an absolute minimum, the movie has been most controversial. And, while one must admire Leduc for risking a break with traditional cinematographic styles, the absence of dialogue reduces pivotal figures of history and culture such as Diego Rivera, Leon Trotsky, David Alfaro Siqueiros, Andre Breton, and Frida Kahlo to caricatures of themselves. Instead of using the film to develop these characters in political or personal terms, Leduc takes the easy way out, allowing them to remain at the lowest common denominator of the popular stereotypes fomented in mass culture.

Other critical views of Leduc’s Frida, however, suggest a different reading: objects such as Frida’s dress become political iconography that proposes “a self-conscious affirmation of a mestizo identity but also a specifically Mexican rearrangement of the indigenous. From this perspective, as Pick observes, ‘the ‘alternative modernism’ . . . intimated by Frida Kahlo’s dress, its effect as representation and self-representation, embodies a distinctly Latin American way to affirm cultural identity.’” It is exactly in such a retainment of “the political problematic that has characterized the last three decades of Latin American filmmaking.” Leduc’s rejection of social realism may thus be viewed as a step forward, towards a realm of expressionism that crystallizes the political by ways of, according to Jean Franco, “a struggle over meanings and the history of meanings, histories that have been acquired and stored with unofficial institutions.”

In general, Mexico has proven to be a difficult context for Leduc, who appropriately describes cinema there as “a perfect disaster, composed of churros—vulgar, cheap, and badly made films.” Dominated by the “fastbuck” mentality typical of dependent capitalism, Mexican commercial cinema has offered few opportunities for Leduc to direct the kind of films which interest him.

—John Mraz, updated by Guo-Juin Hong

LEE, Ang

Nationality: Taiwanese. Born: Taiwan; moved to United States, 1978. Education: Attended theater program, University of Illinois. Career: Directed first two features in the United States, 1991–93; returned to Taiwan to direct Eat Drink Man Woman, 1994. Awards: Golden Bear Award at Berlin Film Festival, 1993, for The Wedding Banquet; Golden Bear Award at Berlin Film Festival, Best Director from New York Film Critics, and Best Director and Best Picture from National Board of Review, all 1995, all for Sense and Sensibility.

Films as Director:

1991 Pushing Hands
1993 Hsi Yen (The Wedding Banquet)

Publications

By LEE: books—

By LEE: articles—

“Ang Lee Returned to His Native Taiwan to Make Eat Drink Man Woman,” an interview with Steven Rea, in Knight-Ridder/Tribune News Service, 19 August 1994.
“Ang Lee on Directing in an Ice Storm,” in DGA (Los Angeles), vol. 22, no. 4, September-October 1997.

On LEE: articles—

In the space of only five years, beginning in 1991, and on the strength of four films, Taiwanese film director Ang Lee grew from art-house phenomenon to major studio director. Lee’s first three films, a sort of trilogy of charming family dramas, established him as a talented director with a particularly deft hand at creating character-driven studies of human nature. His fourth film, Sense and Sensibility (1995), adapted from Jane Austen’s novel, and the winner of a number of well-deserved awards, including Best Director from the New York Film Critics, and Best Director and Best Picture from the National Board of Review (it was also nominated for seven Oscars), marked his emergence from relative anonymity into the film world spotlight.

Lee’s first feature was Pushing Hands, a 1991 film in which an aging Chinese martial arts master moves into the New York City home of his son and daughter-in-law. The relationship between the old man, who speaks no English, and his daughter-in-law, who speaks no Chinese, is a difficult one, full of resentment and misunderstanding, but both try to make the arrangement work. A languidly paced comedy drama that displayed Lee’s fondness for scenes in which food figures prominently, it was followed by The Wedding Banquet, a film that widened Lee’s public somewhat and which also explored family relationships, this time in the context of sexual as well as cultural differences. It focuses on a successful young Chinese professional living in America, whose equilibrium is upset by the impending visit of his parents, whose arrival finds him engaged in an elaborate marital charade to mask his homosexuality. Beautifully observed, charming, humorous, and very poignant, The Wedding Banquet was rewarded with an Oscar nomination.

Released in 1994, Eat Drink Man Woman, the first of Lee’s movies to be shot entirely in Taiwan, confirmed the originality and subtle understanding of his domestic vision and expanded on his iconic approach to food. It concerns an elderly, widowed master chef at a Taipei hotel and his relationship with his three adult daughters, all of whom are grappling with one problem or another. The action centers around the immense, sumptuous Sunday feasts that he lovingly prepares for his daughters; Stanley Kauffmann remarks that "the preparation of these dishes, their wonderful appearance, their almost tasteable succulence are the film’s true base and being. The stories, the hassle and hustle of the characters’ troubles, are just garnish around the dishes."

* * *

Managing to be at once highly enjoyable and very moving, one might, with respect, argue with Kauffmann that the old man’s gourmet rituals and his pride in them provide the only mechanism by which he can communicate his love and concern for the daughters, who are so thoughtlessly—and humanly—caught up in their own concerns.

Next came Sense and Sensibility, actress Emma Thompson’s adaptation of Jane Austen’s nineteenth-century novel about the reduced circumstances in which Mrs. Dashwood (Gemma Jones) and her daughters find themselves after the death of Mr. Dashwood, and their attempts to survive in upper-class English society and find romantic happiness for the two elder girls (Thompson, Kate Winslet).
With its impeccable screenplay and a cast of top-rank British actors (including Hugh Grant and Alan Rickman), the film is a fine meld of comedy, drama, and sentiment, held seamlessly together by Lee’s finely tuned direction, and his accurate ear for the nuances of a social and domestic order both British and long past. Sense and Sensibility whisked away the veil of comparative anonymity that had previously covered Lee. As Richard Schickel commented, “You certainly won-ner how a Taiwan-born director like Lee has managed to reach across time and cultures to deliver these delicate goods undamaged. Maybe some of that whoosh of delight one feels at the end of Sense and Sensibility is for him, and his emergence as a world-class director.”

It is this unique ability acutely to grasp the essence of multicultural customs, combined with his professional polish, that distinguishes Lee from his peers. After the success of Sense and Sensibility, he entered the Hollywood mainstream with The Ice Storm, released in 1997, and examining with awesome accuracy a particular social stratum in American society, that of wealthy, middle-class professionals and their families whose affluence seems to have brought only discontented malaise, disputing infidelity, and difficult relationships with their children, conditions that come to a head in an ice-bound Connecticut winter. With a cast led by Kevin Kline, Joan Allen, and Sigourney Weaver, this heavyweight domestic drama (leavened with lighter moments), dissects the weaknesses of its protagonists with uncompromising and often disturbing honesty, and attracted a large number of award nominations at home and abroad.

During 1999, the same year that the director returned to the Orient to branch out with a crime film called Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon, almost entirely unseen in the West to that date, Ride with the Devil was released. While evidencing yet another area of interest, the American Civil War, for Lee, it proved his least successful film to date. Highly original in treating the war as subsidiary to a small, close band of Southerners, including a freed slave, caught up in it almost, as it were, by accident, and in attempting to depict their inner psychology, the work is ambitious but overlong, too slow and too opaque to grasp the interest.

Early in the first year of the new millennium, Ang Lee, striking out yet again, was at work on Berlin Diaries 1940–45, eagerly awaited and certain to emphasize the unique eclecticism, sharp observation, and underlying humanity that are this filmmaker’s trademarks.

—Kevin Hillstrom, updated by Robyn Karney

LEE, Spike

Nationality: American. Born: Shelton Jackson Lee in Atlanta,
Georgia, 20 March 1957; son of jazz musician Bill Lee. Education:
Morehouse College, B.A., 1979; New York University, M.A. in Filmmaking; studying with Martin Scorsese. Family: Married lawyer
Tonya Linette Lewis, 1993; one son, Satchel. Career: Set up production company 40 Acres and a Mule; directed first feature, She’s Gotta
Have It, 1986; also directs music videos and commercials for Nike/ Air
Jordan; Trustee of Morehouse College, 1992. Awards: Student Directors Academy Award, for Joe’s Bed-Stuy Barbershop: We Cut
Heads, 1980; U.S. Independent Spirit Award for First Film, New Generation Award, Los Angeles Film Critics Association, and Prix de
Jeunesse, Cannes Film Festival, all for She’s Gotta Have It, 1986; U.S. Independent Spirit Award, Best Picture, L.A. Film Critics, and Best Picture, Chicago Film Festival, all for Do the Right Thing, 1989;
Essence Award, 1994. Address: 40 Acres and a Mule, 124 Dekalb
Avenue, Suite 2, Brooklyn, NY 11217–1201, U.S.A.

Films as Director, Scriptwriter, and Editor:

1977 Last Hustle in Brooklyn (Super-8 short)
1980 The Answer (short)
1981 Sarah (short)
1982 Joe’s Bed-Stuy Barbershop: We Cut Heads (+ role, pr)
1986 She’s Gotta Have It (+ role as Mars Blackmon, pr)
1988 School Daze (+ role as Half Pint, pr)
1989 Do the Right Thing (+ role as Mookie, pr)
1990 Mo’ Better Blues (+ role as Giant)
1991 Jungle Fever (+ role as Cyrus, pr)
1992 Malcolm X (+ role as Shorty, pr)
1994 Crooklyn (+ role as Snuffy, pr)
1995 Clockers (+ role as Chucky)
1996 Girl 6 (+ role as Jimmy; pr); Get on the Bus (+ exec pr)
1997 4 Little Girls
1998 He Got Game (+ pr); Freak
1999 Summer of Sam (+ role as John Jeffries, pr)
2000 The Original Kings of Comedy; Bamboozled

Other Films:

1993 The Last Party (Youth for Truth) (doc) (appearance); Seven Songs for Malcolm X (doc) (appearance); Hoop Dreams
(doc) (appearance)
1994 DROP Squad (exec pr, appearance)
Spike Lee

1995  New Jersey Drive (exec pr); Tales from the Hood (exec pr)
1999  The Best Man (pr)
2000  Famous (Dunne) (role as himself); Michael Jordan to the Max (Kempf and Stern) (role as himself); Love & Basketball (Gina Prince) (pr)
2001  3 A.M. (Lee Davis) (pr)

Publications

By LEE: books—

By LEE: articles—

Interview with Mike Wilmington, in Empire (London), October 1990.

“Our Film Is Only a Starting Point,” an interview with George Crowduis and Dan Georgakas, in Cineaste, no. 4, 1993.

Interview with N.O. Saeveras, in Film & Kino (Oslo), no. 1, 1996.

On LEE: books—

Patterson, Alex, Spike Lee, New York, 1992.

Hardy, James Earl, Spike Lee, New York, 1996.

On LEE: articles—

Spike Lee is the most famous African American to have succeeded in breaking through industry obstacles to create a notable career for himself as a major director. What makes this all the more notable is that he is not a comedian—the one role in which Hollywood has usually allowed blacks to excel—but a prodigious, creative, multifaceted talent who writes, directs, edits, and acts, a filmmaker who invites comparisons with American titans like Woody Allen, John Cassavetes, and Orson Welles.

His films, which deal with different facets of the black experience, are innovative and controversial even within the black community. Spike Lee refuses to be content with presenting blacks in their ‘‘acceptable’’ stereotypes: noble Poitiers demonstrating simple moral righteousness are nowhere to be found. Lee’s characters are three-dimensional and often vulnerable to moral criticism. His first feature film, _She’s Gotta Have It_ , dealt with black sexuality, unapologetically supporting the heroine’s promiscuity. His second film, _School Daze_ , drawing heavily upon Lee’s own experiences at Morehouse College, examined the black university experience and dealt with discrimination within the black community based on relative skin colors. His third film, _Do the Right Thing_ , dealt with urban racial tensions and violence. His fourth film, _Mo’ Better Blues_ , dealt with black jazz and its milieu. His fifth film, _Jungle Fever_ , dealt with interracial sexual relationships and their political implications, by no means taking the traditional, white liberal position that love should be color blind. His sixth film, _Malcolm X_ , attempted no less than a panoramic portrait of the entire racial struggle in the United States, as seen through the life story of the controversial activist. Not until his seventh film, _Crooklyn_ , primarily an autobiographical family remembrance of growing up in Brooklyn, did Spike Lee take a breath to deal with a simpler subject and theme.

Lee’s breakthrough feature was _She’s Gotta Have It_ , an independent film budgeted at $175,000 and a striking box-office success: a film made by blacks for blacks which also attracted white audiences. _She’s Gotta Have It_ reflects the sensibilities of an already sophisticated filmmaker and harks back to the early French New Wave in its exuberant embracing of bravura technique—interruptilets, black-and-white cinematography, a sense of improvisation, characters directly addressing the camera—all wedded nevertheless to serious philosophical/sociological examination. The considerable comedy in _She’s Gotta Have It_ caused many critics to call Spike Lee the ‘‘black Woody Allen,’’ a label which would increasingly reveal itself as a rather simplistic, muddle-headed approbation, particularly as Lee’s career developed. (Indeed, in his work’s energy, style, eclecticism, and social commitment, he more resembles Martin Scorsese, a Lee mentor at the NYU film school.) Even to categorize Spike Lee as a black filmmaker is to denigrate his talent, since there are today virtually no American filmmakers (except Allen) with the ambitiousness and talent to write, direct, and perform in their own films. And Lee edits as well.

_Do the Right Thing_ , Lee’s third full-length feature, is one of the director’s most daring and controversial achievements, presenting one sweltering day which culminates in a riot in the Bedford Stuyvesant section of Brooklyn. From its first images—assailing jump cuts of a woman dancing frenetically to the rap ‘‘Fight the Power’’ while colored lights stylistically flash on a location ghetto block upon which Lee has constructed his set—we know we are about to witness something deeply disturbing. The film’s sound design is incredibly dense and complex, and the volume alarmingly high, as the film continues to assail us with tight close-ups, extreme angles, moving camera, colored lights, distorting lenses, and individual scenes directed like high operatic arias.

Impressive, too, is the well-constructed screenplay, particularly the perpectively drawn Italian family at the center of the film who feel so besieged by the changing, predominantly black neighborhood around them. A variety of ethnic characters are drawn sympathetically, if unsentimentally; perhaps never in American cinema has a director so accurately presented the relationships among the American urban underclasses. Particularly shocking and honest is a scene in which catalogs of racial and ethnic epithets are shouted directly into the camera. The key scene in _Do the Right Thing_ has the character of Mookie, played by Spike Lee, throwing a garbage can through a pizzeria window as a moral gesture which works to make the riot inevitable. The film ends with two quotations: one from Martin Luther King Jr., eschewing violence; the other from Malcolm X, rationalizing violence in certain circumstances.

_Do the Right Thing_ was one of the most controversial films of the last twenty years. Politically conservative commentators denounced the film, fearful it would incite inner-city violence. Despite widespread acclaim the film was snubbed at the Cannes Film Festival, outraging certain Cannes judges; despite the accolades of many critics’ groups, the film was also largely snubbed by the Motion Picture Academy, receiving a nomination only for Spike Lee’s screenplay and Danny Aiello’s performance as the pizzeria owner.

Both _Mo’ Better Blues_ and the much underrated _Crooklyn_ owe a lot to Spike Lee’s appreciation of music, particularly as handed down to him by his father, the musician Bill Lee. _Crooklyn_ is by far the gentler film, presenting Lee and his siblings’ memories of growing up with Bill Lee and his mother. Typical of Spike Lee, the vision in _Crooklyn_ is by no means a sentimental one, and the father comes across as a proud, if weak, man; talented, if failing in his musical career; loving his children, if not always strong enough to do the right thing for them. The mother, played masterfully by Alfre Woodard, is the stronger of the two personalities; and the film—ending as it does with grief—seems Spike Lee’s version of Fellini’s _Amarcord_. For a white audience, _Crooklyn_ came as a revelation: the sight of black children watching cartoons, eating Trix cereal, playing hopscotch, and singing along with the Partridge family, seemed strange—because the American cinema had so rarely (if ever?) shown a struggling black family so rooted in the popular-culture iconography to which all Americans could relate. Scene after scene is filled with humility, such as the little girl stealing groceries rather than be embarrassed by using her mother’s food stamps. Crooklyn’s soundtrack, like so many other Spike Lee films, is unusually cacophonous, with everyone talking at once, and its improvisational style suggests Cassavetes or Scorsese. Lee’s 1995 film, Clockers, which deals with drug dealing, disadvantage, and the young “gangsta,” was actually produced in conjunction with Scorsese, whose own work, particularly the seminal Meant streets, Lee’s work often recalls.

Another underrated film from Lee is Jungle Fever (1991). Taken for granted is how well the film communicates the African-American experience; more surprising is how persuasively and perceptively the film communicates the Italian-American experience, particularly working-class attitudes. Indeed, one looks in vain in the Hollywood cinema for an American director with a European background who presents blacks with as many insights as Lee presents his Italians. And certainly unforgettable, filmed expressively with nightmarish imagery, is the film’s set-piece in which we enter a crack house and come to understand profoundly and horrifyingly the tremendous damage being done to a component of the African-American community by this plague. Jungle Fever, like Do the Right Thing, basically culminates in images of Ruby Dee screaming in horror and pain, a metaphor for black martyrdom and suffering.

Nevertheless, the most important film in the Spike Lee oeuvre (if not his best) is probably Malcolm X—important because Lee himself campaigned for the film when it seemed it would be given to a white director, creating then an epic with the sweep and majesty of a David Lean and a clear political message of black empowerment. If the film on the whole seems less interesting than many of Lee’s films (because there is less Lee there), the most typical Lee touches (such as the triumphant coda which enlists South African President Nelson Mandela to play himself and teach young blacks about racism and their future) seem among the film’s most inspired and creative scenes. If more cautious and conservative, in some ways the film is also Lee’s most ambitious: with dozens of characters, historical reconstructions, and the biggest budget in his entire career. Malcolm X proved definitively to fiscally conservative Hollywood studio executives that an African-American director could be trusted to direct a high-budget “A film.” The success of Malcolm X, coupled with the publicity machine supporting Spike Lee, helped a variety of young black directors—like John Singleton, the Wayans brothers, and Mario Van Peebles—all break through into mainstream Hollywood features.

And indeed, Lee seems often to be virtually everywhere. On television interview shows he is called upon to comment on every issue relevant to black America: from the O. J. Simpson verdict to fiscally conservative Hollywood studio executives that an African-American director could be trusted to direct a high-budget “A film.” The success of Malcolm X, coupled with the publicity machine supporting Spike Lee, helped a variety of young black directors—like John Singleton, the Wayans brothers, and Mario Van Peebles—all break through into mainstream Hollywood features.

Get on the Bus, like many of Lee’s films, takes a real historical event as its inspiration: the Million Man March organized by Louis Farrakhan. A beautifully evocative credit sequence of a black man in chains cuts to a cross on a church in South Central Los Angeles—certainly an ambiguous juxtaposition. In Get on the Bus, a variety of black men—each representative of a different strain of the black experience—must share a long, cross-country bus ride on their way to the Washington, D.C. march, a conception which recalls the classic American film à thèse of the fifties (for instance, the Sidney Lumet/Reginald Rose Twelve Angry Men), where each metaphorical character is respectively given the spotlight, often through a moving monologue or dramatic scene, thus allowing the narrative to accrue a variety of psychological/sociological insights. Notably for the Lee oeuvre, Get on the Bus includes black gay lovers who are treated three-dimensionally (tellingly, only the black Republican is treated with total derision, thrown off the bus in a scene of comic relief). Like much of Lee’s work, this film has a continuous impulse for music.
And there is one stunning montage of beautiful ebony faces. Nevertheless, the ending of the film seems anti-climactic, because the characters never quite make it to the Million Man March—a disappointing narrative choice perhaps dictated by Lee’s low budget.

He Got Game, like many Lee films, seems meandering and a bit undisciplined, if with important themes: here, of father/son reconciliation, and the meaning of basketball within black culture. Indeed, never have basketball images been photographed so expressively; and as in parallel scenes of one-on-one father/son competition highlighted in the film. Like Accatone, where Pasolini used Bach on his soundtrack to ennoble his lower-class youth, Lee brilliantly uses the most American composer of all, the lyrical Aaron Copland. Summer of Sam likewise has some extraordinary elements, particularly Lee’s perceptive anatomizing of the complicated sex lives of his Italian and African-American characters. Rarely, too, has a film so expressively evoked such a precise sense of place and time—that chaotic summer when New York City was obsessed and terrified by the Son of Sam serial killer. Unfortunately, audiences were largely indifferent to Lee’s interest in character and texture, disappointed that Summer of Sam did not offer a more traditional narrative focused on the killer and his sadism, in the typical Hollywood style.

Curiously, one notes that Lee’s documentary for HBO, 4 Little Girls, reveals some of the same problems as Lee’s recent fiction career. A documentary on a powerfully compelling subject—the four little girls killed in a church bombing in Birmingham, Alabama in 1963—4 Little Girls, though politically fascinating, is curiously slack, with its narrative as its weakest link, Lee failing to clearly differentiate his characters and not building suspensefully to a clear climax. Stronger are the film’s individual parts: such as the killer’s attorney characterizing Birmingham as “a wonderful place to live and raise a family,” while Lee shows us an image of a little child in full Klan regalia, hand-in-hand with a parent; or one parent’s the memory of Martin Luther King Jr.’s memorable oration at the funeral—“Life is as hard as steel!”

As Lee’s career progresses, it becomes increasingly clear that his interest in political insight and the veracity of historical details is what impedes his ability to tell a story in the way the popular audience expects. Whereas Lee once seemed the most likely minority filmmaker to transform the Hollywood establishment, he now seems the filmmaker (like, perhaps Woody Allen) most perpetually in danger of losing his core audience. Do the Right Thing and Malcolm X were successful precisely because Lee was able to fuse popular forms and audience-pleasing entertainment with significant cultural commentary. Lee seems now to be making films which—despite his ambitious subjects and sophisticated points-of-view—disappear almost entirely off the cultural radar screen.

Interesting, almost as an aside, is Lee’s canny ability, particularly in his earlier films, to use certain catch phrases which helped both to attract and delight audiences. In She’s Gotta Have It, there was the constant refrain uttered by Spike Lee as Mars Blackmon, “Please baby, please baby, please baby, baby, baby, please... ”; in Do the Right Thing, the disc jockey’s “And that’s the truth, Ruth.” Notable also is the director’s assembly—in the style of Bergman and Chabrol and Woody Allen in their prime—of a consistent stable of very talented collaborators, including his father, Bill Lee, as musical composer, production designer Wynn Thomas, producer Monty Ross, and cinematographer Ernest Dickerson, among others. Lee has also used many of the same actors from one film to another, including his sister Joie Lee, Wesley Snipes, Denzel Washington, John Turturro, Samuel L. Jackson, Ossie Davis, and Ruby Dee, helping to create a climate which propelled several to stardom and inspired a new wave of high-level attention to a variety of breakout African-American performers.

—Charles Derry

LEFEBVRE, Jean-Pierre

Films as Director and Scriptwriter:

1964 L’Homoman (short) (+ pr, ph)
1965 Le Révolutionnaire (+ pr)
1966 Patricia et Jean-Baptiste (+ pr); Mon Oeil (My Eye) (unrealized)
1967 Il ne faut pas mourir pour ça (Don’t Let It Kill You) (+ pr); Mon Amie Pierrette
1968 Un Jeu sans dieu (+ pr)
1969 La Chambre blanche (House of Light)
1970 Le Jour ‘S...’
1971 Les Maudits sauvages (Those Damned Savages); Ultimatum
1973 On n’engraisse pas les cochons à l’eau claire; Les Dernières Fiançailles (The Last Betrothal)
1975 Le Gars des vues; L’Amour blessé
1977 Le Vieux PAYS au Rimbaud est mort
1978 Avoir 16 ans
1982 Les Fleurs sauvages (The Wild Flowers)
1983 Au Rythme de mon cœur (To the Rhythm of My Heart) (+ ro, ed, ph)
1984 Le Jour ‘S...’
1987 Laliberté (Alfred Laliberté, sculpteur)
1988 La Boîte à soleil (The Box of Sun)
1991 Le Fabuleux voyage de l’ange
1998 Aujourd’hui ou jamais (+ ed)

Other Films:

1973 Réjeanne Padovani (role as Jean-Pierre Caron)
1975 L’ Île jaune (role as Le journaliste)
1997 City of Dark (role as Henry)

Publications

By LEFEBVRE: book—

Parfois quand je vis (poems), Montreal, 1970.
Jean-Pierre Lefebvre

By Lefebvre: articles—

“Complexes d’une technique,” in Objectif (Montreal), March 1961.
“L’Equipe française souffre-t-elle de Roucheole?,” with Jean-Claude Pilon, in Objectif (Montreal), August 1962.

“Les Années folles de la critique ou petite histoire des revues de cinéma au Québec,” in Objectif (Montreal), October/November 1964.

“La Crise du language et le cinéma canadien,” in Objectif (Montreal), April/May 1965.

Interview with M. Amiel, in Cinéma (Paris), December 1972.

Interviews with B. Samuels and S. Barrowclough, in Cinema Canada (Montreal), May 1982.

“Table ronde sur le cinéma indépendant,” a discussion with Marie-Claude Loiselle and Claude Racine, in 24 Images (Montreal), September-October 1994.
On LEFEBVRE: books—

Cinéastes de Québec 3: Jean-Pierre Lefebvre, Ottawa, 1970.

Bérubé, Renald, and Yvan Patry, editors, Jean-Pierre Lefebvre, Montreal, 1971.

Harcourt, Peter, Jean-Pierre Lefebvre, Ottawa, 1981.

On LEFEBVRE: articles—

* * *

There is a filmmaker who has been invited to present his work at the Cannes Film Festival Director’s Fortnight more often than any other filmmaker in the world. His career began, not in film school or under the aegis of a state-funded film organization, but instead as a poet, a critic and as a student and then professor of French literature. The filmmaker is Jean Pierre Lefebvre, a French Canadian, born and educated in Montreal, Quebec, respected and lauded by Francophone film audiences and critics, and yet still relatively unknown in the English–language film world and in the world of commercial cinema.

In many ways Lefebvre is the archetypal Francophone intellectual. His large film oeuvre is stamped with the imprint of a philosopher, a humourist, a poet, an observer, and a humble yet assured commentator on the state of things. Lefebvre’s films play with the idea of relationships: relationships among individuals, between individuals and their surroundings, and between individuals and the language they use and personalize through poetic and colloquial misuse. He is concerned also with the relationship of the elements of film language and the relationship between the film spectator and what is projected on the screen. Lefebvre plays with sound, words and images, succeeding in drawing the spectator’s attention to the possibilities contained within language, film language, and the situation in which we confront these vehicles for communication. As the Canadian film critic Peter Harcourt observed of Lefebvre’s technique, “‘the extended takes give us time not only to experience an action but also to think about what we may be feeling.’” The work of Lefebvre is also indicative of an intellectual and artistic movement endemic to French Canadians of Quebecois origin, and in particular to those who came of age during the 1960s.

Quebecois culture, which had been colonized, both literally and metaphorically, by the French, the English, the Church, and the Americans, made its voice heard at home and on the international front through demonstrations, civil disobedience, and the radical presence of the Front de Liberation du Quebec. Quebecois culture began to assert itself through its vocal and visible difference, a difference that hinged greatly on the language of the Quebecois population. Lefebvre describes the role of film in this historic situation: “In the late 1950s and 1960s, cinema was terribly important for naming our society, for making it exist in people’s mind.”

Working within the constraints of small budgets, Lefebvre has constructed film works that speak of a specific political time and place, just as they speak of the universal, philosophical, and humourous personal and sexual conditions. Lefebvre’s wife and collaborator, the late Marguerite Duparc, acted as editor and producer on many of Lefebvre’s works as well as co-directing Cinak, the production company set up by Lefebvre in the late 1960s. Duparc was known to sacrifice her own creative projects in order to ensure that monetary assistance would be concentrated on Lefebvre’s own works. The situation for fiction filmmakers in Quebec during the 1970s and 1980s was economically difficult.

Lefebvre’s work is “political” in the personal, formal, and aesthetic sense and not always in the easily identifiable party political sense. His style varies with the subject matter he tackles, as he adapts the structure of his features to the nature of the narratives and the queries they pose. Similar in some ways to Godard and Bresson, two filmmakers to whose work Lefebvre’s has been compared, Lefebvre often experiments with sound and image. At the same time, he stands apart from his contemporaries in the Quebecois film industry and cannot be grouped with any particular indigenous movement. Nevertheless, the film work of Lefebvre continues to attract critical and public attention for its continuing commitment to the politics and the beauty of language, of Quebecois culture, and of the fine art of cinema.

—Clea H. Notar

LEIGH, Mike

Films as Director:

(Feature films)

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1971</td>
<td>Bleak Moments</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1988</td>
<td>High Hopes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1990</td>
<td>Life Is Sweet</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1993</td>
<td>Naked</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1996</td>
<td>Secrets and Lies</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1997</td>
<td>Career Girls</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1999</td>
<td>Topsy-Turvy</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

(Television films)

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1972</td>
<td>A Mugs Game; Hard Labour</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1975</td>
<td>The Permissive Society; group of five 5-minute films: The Birth of the 2001 FA Cup Final Goalie; Old Chums; Probation; A Light Snack; Afternoon</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1976</td>
<td>Nuts in May; Plays for Britain (title sequence only); Knock for Knock; The Kiss of Death</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1977</td>
<td>Abigail’s Party</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1978</td>
<td>Who’s Who</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1980</td>
<td>Grown-Ups</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1982</td>
<td>Home Sweet Home</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1983</td>
<td>Meantime</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1985</td>
<td>Four Days in July</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1987</td>
<td>The Short and Curly</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1992</td>
<td>A Sense of History</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Publications

By LEIGH: books—

Mike Leigh, Interviews: Interviews (Conversations with Filmmakers), edited by Howie Movshovitz, Jackson, 2000.

On LEIGH: books—

By LEIGH: articles—

‘‘Mike Leigh, miniaturiste du social,’’ an interview with Isabelle Ruchti, in Positif (Paris), April 1989.

‘‘Life Is Sweet/A Conversation with Mike Leigh,’’ an interview with Barbara Quart, Leonard Quart, and J. Bloch, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1992.

‘‘Mike Leigh: Chaos in der Vorstadt,’’ an interview with Robert Fischer, in EPD Film (Frankfurt), February 1994.

‘‘Gloom with a View,’’ an interview with Steve Grant, in Time Out (London), 22 May 1996.

‘‘A Conversation with Mike Leigh,’’ an interview with S.B. Katz, in Written By: Journal: The Writers Guild of America, West (Los Angeles), October 1996.

‘‘Exposures & Truths,’’ an interview with A. White, in Variety’s On Production (Los Angeles), no. 10, 1996.

‘‘Life by Mike Leigh,’’ an interview with S. Johnston, in Interview, November 1996.

‘‘How to Direct a DGA-nominated Feature: Jeremy Kagan Interviews Four Who Did,’’ in DGA Magazine (Los Angeles), May-June 1997.

Interview with P. Malone, in Film en Televisie + Video (Brussels), September 1997.

On LEIGH: articles—

Ruchti, Isabelle, ‘‘Mike Leigh, miniaturiste du social,’’ in Positif, April 1989.

Cieutat, Michel, ‘‘Glaucues esperances,’’ in Positif, September 1991.

Kennedy, Harlan, ‘‘Mike Leigh about His Stuff,’’ in Film Comment, September/October 1991.

Adams, Mark, ‘‘A Long Weekend with Mike Leigh,’’ in National Film Theatre Programme, May 1993.

Naked Issue of L’Avant-Scene du Cinéma, November 1993.

Berthin-Scaillet, Agnes, ‘‘Lignes de fuite,’’ in Positif, November 1993.

Smith, Gavin, ‘‘Worlds Apart,’’ in Film Comment, September/October 1994.

Paletz, Gabriel M., and David L. Paletz, ‘‘Mike Leigh’s Naked Truth,’’ in Film Criticism, Winter 1994/95.

Herpe, Noël and O’Neill, Eithne and Ciment, Michel, ‘‘Secrets et mensonges,’’ in Positif (Paris), September 1996.

Kino (Warsaw), February 1998.

* * *

The international success, both critical and popular, of Secrets and Lies in 1996 brought British director Mike Leigh his widest recognition to date and almost drew him into the mainstream. However, this fiercely independent minded, and individualistically creative director chose to continue along the same road he had been traveling for some 25 years. Like his compatriots Ken Loach and Stephen Frears, Mike Leigh had built up a remarkable body of television work years before he became known to a wider international audience with his film High Hopes. As early as 1982 the BBC screened a retrospective of his work, as well as devoting a whole edition of its arts programme Arena to him. By contrast, Americans had to wait another ten years to see what had led up to High Hopes, when the New York Museum of Modern Art staged a retrospective in 1992. In fact, High Hopes was only Leigh’s second feature in seventeen years, the first being Bleak Moments, which was largely funded by Albert Finney’s company Memorial Enterprises (also behind Stephen Frears’s Gumshoe in 1971) at a time when the British cinema had almost ceased to exist— or, as Leigh puts it, ‘‘was alive and well and hiding-out in television, mostly at the BBC.’’

So, as the critic Sean French wrote in an article on the director in the Observer: ‘‘For years Leigh has been making better and more penetrating films than anyone else about the class system (Nuts in May and Grown-Ups), unemployment (Meantime), Northern Ireland (Four Days in July), and family life under Thatcher (High Hopes). By almost any reckoning Leigh should be considered one of our major film directors, yet he is virtually ignored in most considerations of British cinema.’’ With the release of Naked this situation improved somewhat, but it is hard to avoid the conclusion that although Leigh is better known in Britain than he was formerly, he remains, like Ken Loach, generally more highly regarded abroad than in his own country.

That Leigh has found it difficult to make feature films is certainly a sad comment on the often sickly state of the British film industry. But as he himself admits, his approach to filmmaking could seem off-putting even to the most sympathetic of financiers: ‘‘I only accept a project if nobody else wants to know what it’s going to be. I come along and say ‘I’ve got no script, I really don’t know what I’m going to do, just give me the money and I’ll bugger off and do it.’’’ And doing it is time-consuming—the rehearsals for High Hopes took a not untypical fifteen weeks.

It is impossible to discuss Leigh’s work without discussing his working methods, even though there’s an unfortunate tendency amongst critics to fetishise these to the point of ignoring what the resulting films are actually all about. Leigh himself has referred to such writings as ‘an albatross, a media preoccupation,’ but since misunderstandings abound and are often used as a basis on which to attack his work, it is important to understand what he is doing. In fact, his methods have changed little since he developed them in the theatre in the mid-1960s. As he said in 1973: ‘I begin with a general area which I want to investigate. I choose my actors and tell them that I don’t want to talk to them about the play. (There is no play at this stage.) I ask them to think of several people of their own age. Then we discuss these people till we find the character I want.’ Each actor then builds up his or her own character through a lengthy process of research and improvisation, both in the rehearsal room and in real locations. Only when the actors have fully ‘found’ their characters are they brought together and the all-important relationships are formed between the characters: the play is what happens to the characters, what they make for themselves. Behaviour dictates situation.’

For Leigh there is no great mystique about improvisation; as he described it in 1980: ‘Improvisation is actually a practical way of investigating real-life going on the way real life actually operates. That’s all.’ At the same time, however, he is utterly opposed to the notion of improvisation as ‘some kind of all-in anarchic democracy.’ To quote from the same 1980 interview: ‘It is a question of discovering what the film or play is about by making the film. It isn’t a committee job nor is it ‘let’s just see what happens and go along with it.’ Nor is it a question of shooting a lot of footage in which actors improvise. In my films 98 percent is structured.’ The main work, therefore, is done in research, improvisation, and rehearsal long before the cameras appear; by that time ‘there’s very much a script. It just so happens that I don’t start with a document, that’s all. What finally appears on screen is only very, very rarely improvised in front of the camera. For the most part it’s arrived at through a long process, and it’s finally pinned down and rehearsed and very disciplined, while the quality of the language and the imagery is heightened... Improvisation and research are simply tactics, a means to an end and not an end in themselves.” It is for these reasons that most of his television films carry the unique credit ‘devised and directed by Mike Leigh,’ and the theater critic Benedict Nightingale once described him as ‘part composer, part conductor, part catalyst.’ And whatever the critical misunderstandings surrounding Leigh’s method, it certainly brings results. His cast lists have included some of Britain’s finest younger actors, such as Alison Steadman, Anthony Sher, Jim Broadbent, Gary Oldman, Tim Roth, Lindsay Duncan, David Thewlis, Frances Barber, and Jane Horrocks, many of whom have done some of their best work for him.

Given Leigh’s improvisatory methods, it is no surprise to find that films such as On the Waterfront, Rebel without a Cause, and Shadows were early influences. Rather more interesting, however, is his citing of the playwrights Beckett and Pinter and the artists Hogarth, Gilray, and Rowlandson as major inspirations. This points us towards a central fact of Leigh’s oeuvre: that it is absolutely not naturalistic, and not Marxist solutions—something else which has hardly endeared him to the Left in Britain. Or as he puts it: “For me the whole experience of making films is one of discovery. What is important, it seems to me, is that you share questions with the audience, and they have to go away with things to work on. That’s not a cop out. It is my instinctive, instinctive way of story-telling and sharing ideas, predicaments, feelings and emotions.” On the other hand, as a perceptive article in Cineaste remarked: “Although Leigh resolutely refuses to engage in sloganeering, his films are acutely political since they consistently articulate an often hilarious critique of everyday life. This critique is always rooted in the idiosyncrasies of individual characters.”

If anything could sum up Leigh’s vision it might be Thoreau’s famous remark about the mass of people living ‘lives of quiet desperation,’ and one is also reminded of Chekov in the way his films seem constantly to hover between comedy and tragedy, with despair lurking never very far beneath the surface. As he himself once remarked, ‘there’s no piece that isn’t, somewhere along the way, a lamentation for the awfulness of life.’ In more specifically English terms other reference points might be Alan Ayckbourn (however much Leigh would disagree), Alan Bennett, and Victoria Wood. Although his films are often taken to be about ‘Englishness’—or even more specifically, about life under the appalling social experiment commonly known as Thatcherism (although much of Leigh’s work actually predates the egregious regime)—their success abroad suggests that they tap into rather more universal doubts and fears about the human condition. This is certainly the case with Naked, which, through Johnny’s rantings and ravings about chaos theory, Nostradamus, Revelations, and God knows what else, achieves much more than a particularly rancid glimpse of a squalid corner of this septic isle and exudes an imminent, all-pervasive sense of geopolitical doom.

Yet there is something quintessentially English about Leigh’s films, and maybe that is why certain English people do not like them. As the novelist William Boyd observed in a piece on Leigh in the New Statesman, on the occasion of the above-mentioned BBC retrospective: “Any edginess or unease prompted by his observations can only be a sign that certain truths are too uncomfortable for some critics to acknowledge. Ostrich complexes are easily fostered; complacency is a very tolerable frame of mind.” And for nothing did Vincent Canby once describe Leigh as not only “the most innovative of contemporary English filmmakers” but “also the most subversive.” Whether it’s the cruelly, painfully funny examination of preternatural shyness and sexual ineptitude of Bleak Moments, the suburban...
Strindberg of Abigail’s Party, or the excruciating family row into which High Hopes gradually boils up, the vision of England that emerges, though leavened by absurdity, humour, and moments of human warmth and togetherness, is hardly an attractive one. As Andy Medhurst remarked in one of the better British pieces on Leigh: ‘‘This England is specific, palpable and dire, though aspects of it are at the same time liable to inspire a kind of wry resignation... If anything, Englishness is revealed as a kind of pathological condition, emotionally warping and stunting, to which the only response can be a kind of damage limitation. What many of Leigh’s films suggest is that to be English is to be locked in a prison where politeness, gaucheness and anxiety about status form the bars across the window... His best films (Bleak Moments, Grown-Ups, Meantime) exemplify his skills as a choreographer of awkwardness, a geometrician of embarrassments, able to orchestrate layers of accumulated tiny cruelties and failures of communication until they swell into a crescendo of extra-}

The elements synthesised in a perfectly orchestrated exposition of racial bigotry and trumped-up suburban pretension in Secrets and Lies which, though profoundly “English” in its locales and modes of spoken expression, cut through cultural barriers to touch a universal nerve. Combining humor with its sly attack on value systems and its overt critique of racist misperceptions, Secrets and Lies offers an unusually (for Leigh) clear redemptive ending to the upheavals caused when a young black woman (Marianne Jean-Baptiste), given up for adoption at birth, seeks out her real mother (Brenda Blethyn) only to discover that she is white. Garlanded with honors, awards, and Oscar nominations, the film made Mike Leigh more bankable than he had ever been and he embarked on his next feature film with unprecedented speed.

However, Career Girls, released to eagerly expectant critics and audiences the following year, seemed to puzzle rather than please, and was not a success. It is difficult to account for this reaction. The film, which cuts back and forth between the present—when two young women who shared a flat in their college years meet up again for a weekend in London—and their shared past, certainly deviates from its maker’s previous work in the close focus on the protagonists, each trapped in her own private disillusion, rather than observing a broad canvas of interaction. However, it’s beautifully observed, well-played, and very accessible. Perhaps audiences, post-Secrets and Lies, were more interested in at least the promise of a happy ending than in the unmistakably bleak emotional territory occupied by Career Girls.

Mike Leigh ended the 20th century by striking out in a most unexpected direction with Topsy-Turvy, dealing with the relationship between Gilbert and Sullivan and the genesis and first production of The Mikado. It is in many ways a surprising departure: at heart, an old-fashioned backstage story, realised as a visually accurate period piece, and offering sumptuous and joyous extracts from The Mikado. The film points to Leigh’s particular sensibility in the threads of unhappiness that run through several of the characters’ lives, but, it’s something of a rag-bag of ideas that never quite fuse into a successful vision. If nothing else, though, Topsy-Turvy demonstrates and confirms that Mike Leigh’s imagination is not static and that he is undeniably very much an “auteur,” while the number of awards and nominations it garnered, including those from the British critics and BAFTA, might indicate that appreciation of his gifts in his home country is increasing.

—Julian Petley, updated by Robyn Karney

---

LELOUCH, Claude

FILMS AS DIRECTOR:

1953 Le Mal du siècle (+ pr, sc, ed); USA en vrac (+ pr, sc, ed)
1957 Quand le rideau se lève (+ pr, sc, ed)
1959 La Guerre du silence (+ pr, sc, ed); Les Mécaniciens de l’armée de l’air (+ pr, sc, ed); S.O.S. hélicoptère (+ pr, sc, ed)
1960 Le Propre de l’homme (The Right of Man) (+ pr, sc, role as Claude); La Femme spectacle (Night Women) (+ pr, sc)
1964 Une Fille et des fusils (To Be a Crook) (+ pr, sc, ph); Vingt-quatre heures d’amant (+ pr, sc)
1965 Les Grands Moments (+ pr, sc, ph); Jean-Paul Belmondo (+ pr, sc); Pour un maillot jaune (+ pr, sc)
1966 Un Homme et une femme (A Man and a Woman) (+ co-ed, ph, sc)
1967 Vivre pour vivre (Live for Life) (+ pr, sc); episode of Loin du Vietnam (Far from Vietnam)
1968 Treize jours en France (Grenoble) (+ co-ph, pr, sc); La Vie, l’amour, la mort (Life Love Death) (+ co-sc, pr)
1969 Un Homme qui me plaît (Love Is a Funny Thing) (+ co-pr, co-sc)
1970 Le Voyou (The Crook) (+ pr, sc)
1971 Smic Smac Smoc (+ ph, pr, sc); Glories of Iran
1972 L’Aventure c’est l’aventure (The Crook) (+ co-sc, pr); Pour un maillot jaune (+ pr, sc)
1973 Les Mécaniciens de l’armée de l’air (+ pr, sc, ed); La Bonne année (Happy New Year) (+ co-pr, co-sc, ph)
1974 ‘‘The Losers’’ episode in Visions of Eight (+ co-sc, pr)
1975 Toute une vie (And Now My Love) (+ pr, sc); Mariage (Marriage) (+ co-sc, pr)
1976 Le Chat et la souris (Cat and Mouse) (+ pr, sc); Le Bon et les méchants (The Good and the Bad) (+ pr, sc)
1977 Rendez-vous (+ pr, sc); Si c’était à refaire (If I Had to Do It All over Again) (+ ph, pr, sc)
1978 Another Man, Another Chance (+ co-pr, sc)
1979 Robert et Robert (+ pr, sc)
1980 À nous deux (An Adventure for Two; Us Two) (+ pr, sc)
1981 Les Uns et les autres (+ pr, sc)
1982 Edith et Marcel (Edith and Marcel) (+ pr, sc); Bolero
1984 Vive la Vie!
1985 Partir, revenir (Going and Coming Back) (+ pr, sc)
1986 Un Homme et une femme: Vingt ans déjà (A Man and a Woman: Twenty Years Later)
1987 Attention Bandits (Bandits)
1988 L’Itinéraire d’un enfant gâté (Itinerary of a Spoiled Child) (+ co-pr, sc)

---

LELOUCH DIRECTORS, 4th EDITION
592
1990  Il y a des Jours . . . et des Lunes (There Were Days and Moons) (+ co-pr, sc)
1992  La belle histoire (The Beautiful Story) (+ pr, sc)
1993  Tout ca ... pour ca! (All That . . . for This?!?) (+ pr, sc)
1995  Les miserables (+ sc, pr, co-ph)
1996  Hommes, femmes, mode d’emploi (Men, Women: A User’s Manual) (+ sc, pr)
1998  Hasards ou coincidences (Chances and Coincidences) (+ sc)
1999  Une pour toutes (One 4 All) (+ sc, pr, ph, ro)

Other Films:

1988  Happy New Year (Avildsen) (role)

Publications

By LELOUCH: books—

Ma vie pour un film, with Yonnick Flot, Paris, 1986.

By LELOUCH: articles—

“Claude Lelouch at the Olympic Games,’’ an interview, in American Cinematographer (Los Angeles), November 1972.
Interview with J. Craven, in Filmmakers Newsletter (Ward Hill, Massachusetts), March 1974.
Interview with P. Lev, in Take One (Montreal), August 1977.
Interview with S. McMillin, in Filmmakers Newsletter (Ward Hill, Massachusetts), February 1978.
Interview with Tim Pulleine, in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1983.
Interview with P. Carcassonne, in Cinématographe (Paris), May 1984.
Interview with M. Elia, in Séquences (Montreal), March 1989.
Interview in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), May 1990.
Interview with E. Libiot, in Cinéforum (Bergamo), November 1996.

On LELOUCH: books—

Ronchetti, Pierluigi, Claude Lelouch, Citta di Castello, Italy, 1979.
Lev, Peter, Claude Lelouch, Film Director, New York, 1983.

On LELOUCH: articles—

Eyles, A., “And Now My Love,’’ in Focus on Film (London), Summer 1975.
Profile in Millimeter (New York), October 1982.
“Claude Lelouch,’’ in Film Dope (London), March 1986.

* * * *

The films of Claude Lelouch may be classified under three diverse headings: romance, crime, and liberal politics. Occasionally, they focus on one specific area; more often, the categories will be combined.

A Man and a Woman is a pure and simple love story. Despite Lelouch’s many commercial successes, he is most identified with this glossy, gimmicky, tremendously popular tale of script girl Anouk Aimée, a widow, and her widower counterpart, race car driver Jean-Louis Trintignant. A Man and a Woman became one of the most beloved romantic films of its time, a favorite of young couples. The scenario may be a soap opera, photographed on what some critics perceive as postcard-pretty locations; still, it is emotionally touching and truthful. Most significantly, there is refreshingly flexible camera work. Lelouch, who also served as photographer for the film (besides co-editing the film and co-authoring the screenplay), uses his camera like a paintbrush, with total ease and freedom.

More typically, Lelouch mixes several genres together in his work. He combines love and politics in Live for Life, the story of television journalist Yves Montand, whose work takes him to Vietnam and Africa; this character leaves devoted wife Annie Girardot for television journalist Yves Montand, whose work takes him to Viet-of women one wouldn’t like to marry,’’ in the hope of earning a financial success. His first box office hit, however, was To Be a Crook, the story of four men and a deaf-and-dumb girl who become kidnappers and murderers; highlighted are gunfights and a striptease.

...

Lelouch does have political concerns: he participated (with Alain Resnais, Jean-Luc Godard, Joris Ivens, William Klein, and Agnes Varda) in the anti-war compilation film Far from Vietnam. And he has made quite a few delightfully clever entertainments: Happy New Year; Money, Money, Money; and Cat and Mouse, a mystery-comedy about a police inspector’s efforts to uncover a rich philanderer’s killer. Other films include The Crook and And Now My Love, which utilizes comedy, music, and drama to unite lovers Marthe Keller and Andre Dussollier. Yet he will all too often repeat himself, with uninspired results. For example, Live for Life, the follow-up to A Man and a Woman, is just too frilly, a slickly photographed soap opera and a Woman utilizes comedy, music, and drama to unite lovers Marthe Keller and a police inspector has an affair with an equally married woman lawyer.

None of Lelouch’s recent films have in any way upgraded his status in the pantheon of filmmakers. Un Homme et une Femme: Vingt ans deja (A Man and a Woman: Twenty Years Later) is an uninspired attempt to capture the spark of its predecessor. L’Itinéraire d’un enfant gâté (Itinerary of a Spoiled Child) is the contrived tale of an industrialist who sets off on a sailing trip around the world, while Attention Bandits (Bandits) is the by-the-numbers account of a young woman who learns that her father, with whom she’s been corresponding for years, is in prison for a crime he did not commit. Il y a des Jours . . . et des lunes (There Were Days and Moons) has a clever premise—the lives of various people are controlled by time reversing itself—but the result is instantly forgettable. La Belle histoire is an ambitious but muddled epic, whose scenario covers the biblical era in ancient Rome to the present. In the equally unimpressive Tout Ca . . . pour Ca! (All That . . . for This?!), a woman attorney attempts to discern the truth from three jailed working-class crooks, whose problems stem from the women in their lives; in a parallel story, a married judge has an affair with an equally married woman lawyer. Conversely, Les miserables, an ambitious, three-hour-long epic “freely adapted” from the Victor Hugo novel, was Lelouch’s best film in years. Despite his many successes, however, Claude Lelouch ultimately cannot be ranked with the top filmmakers of his generation.

—Rob Edelman

LENI, Paul

Nationality: German. Born: Stuttgart, 8 July 1885. Career: Painter and stage designer, and member of avant-garde movement associated with publication Der Sturm, Berlin, 1900s; production designer, from 1914; directed first film, 1916; also worked as scenarist and actor; hired for Universal in Hollywood by Carl Laemmle, 1927. Died: Of blood poisoning, 2 September 1929.

Films as Director:

1916 Das Tagebuch des Dr. Hart
1917 Dormröschchen (+ sc)
1919 Platonische Ehe (+ co-prod des); Prinz Kuckuck (+ co-prod des)
1920 Patience (+ sc, prod des)
1921 Fiesco (Die Verschwörung zu Genua) (+ co-prod des); Das Gespensterschiff (+ prod des); Hintertreppe (Backstairs) (co-d, prod des); Komödie der Leidenschaften (+ prod des)
1924 Das Wachsfigurenkabinett (Waxworks) (+ prod des)
1927 The Cat and the Canary (in US); The Chinese Parrot (in US)
1928 The Man Who Laughs (in US)
1929 The Last Warning (in US)

Other Films:

1914 Das Panzergewölbe (May) (prod des)
1915 Der Katzenstieg (Mack) (prod des); Das achte Gebot (Mack) (prod des)
1917 Das Rätsel von Bangalor (assoc d, co-sc)
1920 Der weisse Pfau (Dupont) (co-prod des, co-sc); Die Schuld der Lavinia Morland (May) (co-prod des, role); Veritas Vincit (May) (co-prod des)
1921 Die Geier Wally (Dupont) (prod des); Kinder der Finsternis (Dupont) (prod des)
1922 Frauenopfer (Grüne) (prod des)
1923 Tragödie der Liebe (May) (prod des)
1925 Die Frau von vierzig Jahren (Oswald) (prod des); Der Farmer aux Texas (May) (prod des); Der Tänzer meiner Frau (Korda) (prod des)
1926 Manon Lescaut (Robinson) (costumes); Fiaker Nr. 13 (Kertesz) (prod des); Wie einst im Mai (Wolff) (prod des); Der goldene Schmetterling (Kertesz) (prod des)

Publications

By LENI: article—“L’image comme action,’’ in Cinématographe (Paris), February 1982.

On LENI: books—

Kracauer, Siegfried, From Caligari to Hitler, Princeton, 1947.

On LENI: articles—

“Paul Leni,’’ in Film Dope (London), March 1986.
Brandlmayer, Thomas, “Paul Leni,’’ in EPD Film (Frankfurt), vol. 3, no. 12, December 1986.
Siegfried Kracauer, in From Caligari to Hitler, calls Paul Leni “one of the outstanding film directors of the post-World War I era,” and refers to the Jack-the-Ripper episode of Waxworks as being “among the greatest achievements of film art.” Yet Leni’s name is familiar only to film scholars today.

Leni predates Hitchcock as a maker of thrillers; the screen clichés of trembling hands intent on murdering unsuspecting innocents, and corpses falling from opened doors, were first presented in his The Cat and the Canary. Excluding the films of Lon Chaney, he was the foremost practitioner of utilizing make-up to create grotesque creatures, silent-screen monsters who terrified audiences by looks alone.

Leni’s death from blood poisoning at age forty-four denied the cinema what might have developed into a major career. Leni commenced his work in the German cinema as a painter, set designer, and art director, most notably collaborating with Max Reinhardt. These concerns carry through into his own films: his sets are strikingly stylized, dreamlike, and expressionistic.

Leni’s attempt to go beyond the limits of photographed reality utilizing set and costume design was never more successfully realized than in Das Wachsfigurenkabinett (Waxworks). The film, with its distorted sets and ingenious lighting, is as profound an example of surreal cinematic madness as The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari. Three of the best-known actors in the post-World War I German cinema starred as the wax-work villains: Emil Jannings, Conrad Veidt, and Werner Krauss. Each appears in a separate episode as, respectively, Haroun-al-Raschid, Ivan the Terrible (who places hourglasses near each of his poison victims, so that they will know the exact moment of their deaths), and Jack the Ripper (a sequence that, in its dreaminess, is extremely Caligari-like). Veidt’s Ivan allegedly influenced Sergei Eisenstein’s conception of the character.

Like many foreign talents of the period, Leni ended up in Hollywood. As a result of his success with Waxworks, he was signed by Universal’s Carl Laemmle. His first project was The Cat and the Canary, the original haunted-house movie and quite unlike its successor: here, heiress Laura La Plante and her nervous cronies spend a night in an old dark house. To his credit, Leni did not sensationalize the material. The film’s chills result from atmosphere, from stylized, expressionistic set design. The mansion, seen in the distance, is eerily gothic; inside are long, winding corridors and staircases. The Cat and the Canary is not just a chiller, in that Leni adds charming touches of humor to the scenario. Paul Leni made only four features in Hollywood. His final one, prophetically titled The Last Warning, was his only talkie.

—Rob Edelman

LEONE, Sergio

Nationality: Italian. Born: Rome, 3 January 1929. Education: Attended law school, Rome. Family: Son of director Vincenzo Leone; married Carla (Leone), 1960, three daughters. Career: Assistant to, then second unit director for, Italian filmmakers and American directors working in Italy, such as LeRoy, Walsh, and Wyler, 1947–56; screenwriter, from late 1950s; directed first feature, Il colosso di Rodi, 1961; headed own production company, Rafran Cinematografica, 1970s. Died: In Rome, April 1989.

Films as Director:

1961 Il colosso di Rodi (The Colossus of Rhodes) (+ co-sc)
1964 Per un pugno di dollari (A Fistful of Dollars) (+ co-sc)
1965 Per qualche dollaro in più (For a Few Dollars More) (+ co-sc)
1966 Il buono il brutto il cattivo (The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly) (+ co-sc)
1968 C’era una volta il West (Once upon a Time in the West) (+ co-sc)
1972 Giù la testa (Duck, You Sucker; Il était une fois la révolution) (+ co-sc)
1975 Un genio due compari e un pollo (+ co-sc)
1984 Once upon a Time in America (+ co-sc)

Other Films:

1958 Nel segno di Roma (Sign of the Gladiator) (co-sc)
1959 Gli ultimi giorni di Pompeii (The Last Days of Pompeii) (Bonnard) (co-sc, uncredited co-d)
1961 Sodoma e Gomororra (Sodom and Gomorrah) (Aldrich) (2nd unit d, co-d according to some sources)
1973 My Name Is Nobody (story idea)
1978 Il gatto (pr)

Publications

By LEONE: book—

By LEONE: articles—

Interview, in Take One (Montreal), January/February 1972.
Interview with M. Chion and others, in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), May 1984.
Interview with M. Corliss and E. Lomenzo, in Film Comment (New York), July/August 1984.
Interview with G. Graziani, in Filmcritica (Florence), October/November 1984.
Interview in Segnocinema (Vicenza), vol. 4, no. 12, March 1984.

On LEONE: books—

De Fornari, Oreste, Tutti i Film di Sergio Leone, Milan, 1984.
De Cornare, Oreste, Sergio Leone: The Great American Dream of Legendary America, Rome, 1997

On LEONE: articles—

Kaminsky, Stuart, in Take One (Montreal), January/February 1972.
“Sergio Leone,” in Film Dope (London), March 1986.
Bertolucci, Bernardo, obituary in Film Comment (New York), July/August 1989.
“Il Leone sorride: qu’est ce que le cinema?” in Segnocinema (Vicenza), vol. 10, no. 43, May 1990.

Not since Franz Kafka’s America has a European artist turned himself with such intensity to the meaning of American culture and mythology. Sergio Leone’s career is remarkable in its unrelenting attention to both America and American genre film. In France, Truffaut, Godard, and Chabrol have used American film as a touchstone for their own vision, but Leone, an Italian, a Roman who began to learn English only after five films about the United States, devoted most of his creative life to this examination.

Leone’s films are not realistic or naturalistic visions of the American nightmare or fairy tale, but comic nightmares about existence. The feeling of unreality is central to Leone’s work. His is a world of magic and horror. Religion is meaningless, a sham which hides honest emotions; civilization is an extension of man’s need to dominate and survive by exploiting others. The Leone world, while not womanless, is set up as one in which men face the horror of existence. In this, Leone is very like Howard Hawks: as in Hawks’s films, death erases a man. A man who dies is a loser, and the measure of a man is his ability to survive, to laugh or sneer at death. This is not a bitter point in Leone films. There are few lingering deaths and very little blood. Even the death of Ramon (Gian Maria Volonte) in Fistful of Dollars takes place rather quickly and with far less blood than the comparable death in Yojimbo. A man’s death is less important than how he faces it. The only thing worth preserving in Leone’s world is the family—and his world of American violence is such a terrible place that few families survive. In Fistful of Dollars, Clint Eastwood’s primary emotional reaction is to attempt to destroy the family of the woman Ramon has taken. In the later films, The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly and Once upon a Time in the West, Duck, You Sucker and Once upon a Time in America, family life is minimal and destroyed by self-serving evil, not out of hatred but by a cold, passionless commitment to self-interest. Leone’s visual obsessions contribute to his thematic interests. Many directors could work with and develop the same themes and characters, but Leone’s forte lies in the development of these themes and characters in a personal world. No director, with the possible exception of Sam Fuller, makes as extensive use of the close-up as does Leone, and Leone’s close-ups often show only a portion of the face, usually the eyes of one of the main characters. It is the eyes of these men that reveal what they are feeling—if they are feeling anything.

Such characters almost never define their actions in words. Plot is of minimal interest to Leone. What is important is examination of the characters, watching how they react, what makes them tick. It appears almost as if everything is, indeed, happening randomly, as if we are trying to read meaning in the slightest flick of an eyelid. The visual impact of water dripping on Woody Strode’s hat, or Jack Elam’s annoyed reaction to a fly, is of greater interest to Leone than the impact of water dripping on Woody Strode’s hat, or Jack Elam’s annoyed reaction to a fly, is of greater interest to Leone than the visual impact of water dripping on Woody Strode’s hat, or Jack Elam’s annoyed reaction to a fly, is of greater interest to Leone than the

The use of the pan in Leone films is also remarkable. The pan from the gunfight in which the two appear in Once Upon a Time in the West. The use of the pan in Leone films is also remarkable. The pan from the firing squad past the church and to the poster of the governor, behind which Rod Steiger watches in bewilderment through the eyes of the governor’s image, is a prime example in Duck, You Sucker. The shot ties the execution to the indifferent church, to the non-seeing poster, and to Steiger’s reaction in one movement.

The apparent joy and even comedy of destruction and battle in Leone films is often followed immediately by some intimate horror, some personal touch that underlines the real meaning of the horror which moments before had been amusing. The death of Dominick and his final words, “I slipped,” in Once Upon a Time in America undercut the comedy and zest for battle. There is little dialogue; the vision of the youthful dead dominates as it does in the cave scene in Duck, You Sucker, in which Juan’s family lies massacred.

At the same time, Leone’s fascination with spontaneous living, his zeal for existence in the midst of his morality films, can be seen in his handling of details. For example, food in his films is always colorful and appetizing and people eat it ravenously.

The obsession of Leone protagonists and villains, major and minor, with the attainment of wealth can be seen as growing out of a dominant strain within American genres, particularly western and gangster films. The desire for wealth and power turns men into ruthless creatures who violate land and family.

Leone’s films are explorations of the mythic America he created. Unlike many directors, he did not simply repeat the same convention in a variety of ways. Each successive film takes the same characters and explores them in greater depth, and Leone’s involvement with this exploration is intense.

—Stuart M. Kaminsky

LeROY, Mervyn

Films as Director:

1927  No Place to Go
1928  Flying Romeo; Harold Teen; Oh, Kay!
1929  Naughty Baby (Reckless Rosie); Hot Stuff; Broadway Babies (Broadway Daddies); Little Johnny Jones
1930  Playing Around; Showgirl in Hollywood; Numbered Men; Top Speed; Little Caesar; Too Young to Marry; Broad- Minded; Five-Star Final (One Fatal Hour); Tonight or Never 1932  High Pressure; Heart of New York; Two Seconds; Big City Blues; Three on a Match; I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang
1933  Hard to Handle; Tugboat Annie; Elmer the Great; Gold Diggers of 1933; The World Changes
1934  Heat Lightning; Hi, Nellie!; Happiness Ahead
1935  Oil for the Lamps of China; Page Miss Glory; I Found Stella Parish; Sweet Adeline
1936  Anthony Adverse; Three Men on a Horse
1937  The King and the Chorus Girl; They Won’t Forget
1938  Fools for Scandal
1940  Waterloo Bridge; Escape (+ pr)
1941  Blossoms in the Dust (+ pr); Unholy Partners; Johnny Eager 1942  Random Harvest
1944  Madame Curie
1945  Thirty Seconds over Tokyo
1946  Without Reservations
1948  Homecoming
1949  Little Women (+ pr); Any Number Can Play
1950  East Side, West Side; Quo Vadis?
1952  Lovely to Look At; Million-Dollar Mermaid (The One-Piece Bathing Suit)
1953  Latin Lovers
1954  Rose Marie (+ pr)
1955  Strange Lady in Town (+ pr); Mister Roberts (co-d)
1956  The Bad Seed (+ pr); Toward the Unknown (Brink of Hell) (+ pr)
1958  No Time for Sergeants (+ pr); Home before Dark (+ pr)
1959  The FBI Story (+ pr)
1960  Wake Me When It’s Over (+ pr)
1961  The Devil at Four O’Clock (+ pr); A Majority of One (+ pr)
1962  Gypsy (+ pr)
1963  Mary, Mary (+ pr)
1965  Moment to Moment (+ pr)
Mervyn LeRoy (right) on the set of Madame Curie

Other Films: (partial list)

1920 Double Speed (Wood) (role as juvenile)
1922 The Ghost Breaker (Green) (role as a ghost)
1923 Little Johnny Jones (Rosson and Hines) (role as George Nelson); Going Up (Ingraham) (role as bellboy); The Call of the Canyon (Fleming) (role as Jack Rawlins)
1924 In Hollywood with Potash and Perlmutter (So This Is Hollywood) (gag-writer); Broadway After Dark (Bell) (role as Carl Fisher); The Chorus Lady (Ralph Ince) (role as Duke)
1925 Sally (gag-writer); The Desert Flower (gag-writer); The Pace That Thrills (gag-writer); We Moderns (gag-writer)
1926 Irene (gag-writer); Ella Cinders (gag-writer); It Must Be Love (gag-writer); Twinkletoes (gag-writer)
1927 Orchids and Ermines (gag-writer)
1932 The Dark Horse (Green) (uncredited help)
1937 The Great Garrick (Whale) (pr)
1938 Stand up and Fight (W.S. Van Dyke) (pr); Dramatic School (pr); At the Circus (pr)
1939 The Wizard of Oz (Fleming) (pr)
1945 The House I Live In (pr)
1947 Desire Me (Cukor) (uncredited direction)
1949 The Great Sinner (Siodmak) (uncredited direction and editing)
1968 The Green Berets (Wayne and Kellogg) (assisted Wayne)

Publications

By LeROY: books—

By LeROY: articles—

On LeROY: articles—

Surtees, Robert, “The Filming of Quo Vadis in Italy,” in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), October 1951.
Sarris, Andrew, “Likable, but Elusive,” in Film Culture (New York), Spring 1963.
“Should Directors Produce?,” in Action (Los Angeles), July/August
1968.
Campbell, Russell, “I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang,” in Velvet
Light Trap (Madison, Wisconsin), June 1971.
Kaminsky, Stuart, “Little Caesar and Its Role in the Gangster Film Genre,” in Journal of Popular Film (Bowling Green, Ohio),
Summer 1972.
Canham, Kingsley, “Mervyn LeRoy: Star-making, Studio Systems,
Veillon, O.R., “Mervyn LeRoy à la Warner,” in Cinématographe
“Mervyn Le Roy revisited,” in Image et Son (Paris), December
1982.
“Mervyn Leroy,” in Film Dope (London), September 1986.
Monder, Eric, “Mervyn LeRoy’s Little Caesar Salad Days,” in DGA
(Los Angeles), vol. 21, no. 3, July-August 1996.

* * *

The career of Mervyn LeRoy, one of the most successful in the heyday of the studio system, is a reflection of that system. When at Warner Brothers, through most of the 1930s, LeRoy was a master of the style dominant at that studio, demonstrated in the fast-paced toughness of films like his Little Caesar and I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang. As producer-director at MGM until the mid-1950s, he presided over lushly romantic vehicles for Greer Garson and Vivien Leigh. Prolific, versatile (at home in action films, women’s films, musicals, historical spectacles), LeRoy’s fluency marks him as the kind of director who validates collaborative creativity. Sensitive to the particular individuals with whom he works, and to the wide-ranging needs of the various materials he treats, LeRoy offers us an image of the Hollywood technique during the development of the classic Hollywood narrative.

This often makes it difficult to locate that which is LeRoy’s specific contribution to films as dissimilar as the taut courtroom drama They Won’t Forget (that featured the memorable debut of Lana Turner, the “sweater girl” under personal contract to the director) and the colossal pageantry of Quo Vadis?, where decor completely submerges character. But if LeRoy lacks the recognizable visual and thematic coherence we notice in the works of “auteurs” (Welles, Ford, Griffith), it would be incorrect to characterize him as a director without a personal vision, or at least an affinity for specific subjects.
Some of his best-remembered films contain narrative configurations that display the protagonists in situations of pathetic isolation. It is as if the director’s eye and the spectator’s eye spied a character in a state of embarrassing vulnerability. At the end of I Am a Fugitive, a film about a man wrongly charged with a crime and perpetually hounded by the police, the hero confesses that he must now steal to live. Staged in a dark alley, the last words emerge from total blackness that ironically hides the speaker’s face in this moment of painful revelation. (It has been said that the blackout was due to a power failure on the set. This in no way lessens the significance of the decision to leave the scene in, as shot.) In Random Harvest, one of the most popular films LeRoy made at MGM, the director repeatedly finds ways to underscore the pain of the wife who “plays” at being the secretary of her husband, an amnesia victim who has forgotten her identity. Here, as in Waterloo Bridge, where the heroine represents one thing to the audience (a prostitute) and another to the hero (his long-lost fiancée), the staging exploits this ironic brand of double identity.

In a film made at Warners in 1958, Home before Dark, the dual representation of character is extended into the figure of the schizophrenic (Jean Simmons) who, wishing to be like her sister, appears in a crowded nightclub wearing an oversized gown and garishly inappropriate makeup. This sort of embarrassing exposure reaches a theatrical peak in Gypsy, where the mother of the striptease artists does her own “turn” on the bare stage of an empty theater, stripping down to her raw ambition and envy.

—Charles Affron

LESTER, Richard

tion: William Penn Charter School, Germantown, Pennsylvania;
University of Pennsylvania, B.S. in Clinical Psychology, 1951.
Family: Married dancer and choreographer Deirdre Vivian Smith, 1956, one son, one daughter. Career: Music editor, assistant director, then director, CBS-TV, Philadelphia, 1951–54; director and composer, ITV, London, 1955–57, then producer, 1958; director, Courtyard Films, Ltd., from 1967; also composer, musician, and, from 1960, director of TV commercials. Awards: Palme d’Or, Cannes
Festival, for The Knack, 1965; Gandhi Peace Prize, Berlin Festival, for The Bed Sitting Room, 1969. Address: c/o Twickenham Studios, St. Margarets, Middlesex, England.

Films as Director:

1959 The Running, Jumping, and Standing Still Film (+ ph, mu, co-ed)
1962 It’s Trad, Dad (Ring-a-Ding Rhythm)
1963 The Mouse on the Moon
1964 A Hard Day’s Night
1965 The Knack—and How to Get It; Help!
1966 A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum 1967 Mondo Teeno (Teenage Rebellion) (doc) (co-d); How I Won the War (+ pr)
1968 Petulia
1969 The Bed Sitting Room (+ co-pr)
1974 The Three Musketeers (The Queen’s Diamonds); Juggernaut
1975 The Four Musketeers (The Revenge of Milady); Royal Flash
Richard Lester

1976  Robin and Marian (+ co-pr); The Ritz
1979  Butch and Sundance: The Early Days; Cuba
1980  Superman II (U.S. release 1981)
1983  Superman III
1984  Finders Keepers (+ exec pr)
1989  Return of the Musketeers
1991  Get Back (doc)

Other Films:

1998  Richard Lester! (Cochran—doc) (as himself)

Publications

By LESTER: book—

Beatles at the Movies, with Roy Carr, New York, 1996.

By LESTER: articles—

“Lunch with Lester,” with George Bluestone, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Summer 1966.
“Richard Lester and the Art of Comedy,” in Film (London), Spring 1967.
Interview with Ian Cameron and Mark Shivas, in Movie (London), Winter 1968/69.
“Richard Lester: Doing the Best He Can,” interview with Gerald Pratley, in Film (London), February 1975.
Interview with J. Brosnan, in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1983.
Interview with E. Vincent, in Cinématographe (Paris), July/August 1986.

On LESTER: books—

On LESTER: articles—
Monaco, James, “Some Late Clues to the Lester Direction,” in Film Comment (New York), May 1974.
“Richard Lester,” in Film Dope (London), September 1986.

It is ironic that A Hard Days Night, the one film guaranteed to ensure Richard Lester his place in cinema history, should in many ways reflect his weaknesses rather than his strengths. If the film successfully captures the socio-historical phenomenon that was the Beatles at the beginning of their superstardom, it is as much due to Alan Owen’s “day in the life”-style script, which provides the ideal complement to (and restraint on) Lester’s anarchic mixture of absurd surreal humour, accelerated motion, and cinema verité, to name but a few ingredients. Lester made a mark on cinema through his innovative utilisation of the techniques of television advertisements and pop shows. His inability to entirely dispense with these methods, regardless of the subject matter to which they were applied, wrecked too many of his later projects.

The Knack stands as a supreme example of style (or styles) obliterating content. Bleached imagery, choruses of schoolboys reciting the litany of the “knack,” disapproving members of the older generation talking straight to the camera, seem randomly assembled to no apparent end. Worse is the lack of taste. Can the sight of Rita Tushingham running down a street crying “rape” to an assortment of indifferent individuals have ever seemed funny? How I Won the War fails along similar lines. Realistic battlefields and bloodshed clash with a ridiculous plot (soldiers sent to construct a cricket pitch on enemy territory) and characters who are peculiar rather than likeable. One does not doubt Lester’s sincerity in his aim of making his audience ashamed of watching men die for their entertainment, but his lack of judgement is disconcerting. Even the more controlled Petulia is afflicted by a surfeit of flashbacks and flashforwards, its often intriguing examination of unhappy relationships in an out-of-control society weighed down by a relentless determination to Say Something Important. All this is a far cry from the skillfully orchestrated physical comedy of A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum or the opening section of Superman III, both free from a desire to preach.

Where Lester’s major strength as a director lies is in his ability to produce personal works within the confines of an established genre, such as the swashbuckler (The Three Musketeers/The Four Musketeers), the western (Butch and Sundance: The Early Days), and the fantasy (Superman II). If we wish to seek out underlying themes in his work these later films provide fertile ground (the mythical hero surrendering his power for human love in Superman II, Robin Hood attempting to regain his heroic status in a world no longer interested in heroes in Robin and Marian) while avoiding the collapse into uneasy self-importance or significance suffered by earlier work. Occasional lapses into heavy-handedness (the priest blessing the cannons for use in a religious war while muttering to himself in Latin in The Four Musketeers, the overly bloody beating inflicted on the mortal Clark Kent in Superman II) can be discounted as minor flaws.

It is this talent for creating something original out of conventional material that gives Lester his distinction, rather than his misguided, if bold attempts at “serious” comedy (with all the accompanying cinematic tricks which ultimately produce only weariness in the viewer). Though it may seem paradoxical, Lester is a director who needs a firm foundation to work from before his imagination can be let loose. Sadly, he has had little opportunity to demonstrate this since the high-profile Superman films, following the misfiring farce Finders Keepers with two slightly threadbare attempts at recapturing former glories. Return of the Musketeers appears to have been illated from the start, with the accidental death of Lester regular Roy Kinnear during filming. Moments of inspired action and slapstick could not disguise an overall feeling of deja vu (the film went straight to cable television in the United States). Get Back amounts to little more than an adequate, if staid record of Paul McCartney’s 1989–90 world tour, though Lester’s use of footage from the Beatles’ heyday serves as a poignant reminder of both the overall 1960s cultural explosion and his own emergence as one of the cinema’s most outstanding frontrunners.

—Daniel O’Brien

LEVINSON, Barry

Nationality: American. Born: Baltimore, Maryland, 1942. Education: Studied Broadcast Journalism, American University, Washington, D.C. Family: Married 1) screenwriter and actress Valerie Curtin (divorced, 1982); 2) Diana Mona; three sons, one daughter. Career: Comedy performer and writer, Los Angeles, from mid-1960s; writer for TV, including Carol Burnett Show and Marty Feldman Show, winning three Emmy awards, from 1970; directed first feature, Diner, 1982; executive producer and director, for Homicide: Life on the Street, television series, 1993—; executive producer, Oz, HBO series, 1997—.
Barry Levinson

Awards: Emmy Award, for Television Comedy Writing for Carol Burnett Show, 1975; Academy Award for Best Director, Directors Guild Award for Best Director, for Rain Man, 1988; Writers Guild Award for Best Screenplay, for Avalon, 1990; Associated Foreign Press Award for Best Picture, Golden Globe Award for Best Picture, for Bugsy, 1991; Academy of Television Arts and Sciences Emmy Award for Best Director, 1993, Peabody Awards, 1993, 1995, Writers Guild Awards, 1994, 1995, Excellence in Quality Television Founders Award, 1994, 1995, Nancy Susan Reynolds Award for Outstanding Portrayal of Sexual Responsibility in a Dramatic Series, 1996, all for Homicide: Life on the Street.

Films as Director:

1982 Diner (+ sc)
1984 The Natural
1985 Young Sherlock Holmes
1987 Tin Men (+sc)
1988 Good Morning, Vietnam; Rain Man
1990 Avalon (+sc)
1991 Bugsy (+ co-pr)
1992 Toys (+ co-pr)
1994 Jimmy Hollywood (+ co-pr, sc, role); Disclosure (+ co-pr)
1996 Sleepers (+ co-pr, sc)
1997 Wag the Dog (+ co-pr)
1998 Sphere (+co-pr)
1999 Liberty Heights (+co-pr, sc)

Other Films:

1974 Street Girls (Miller) (co-sc, asst ph)
1976 Silent Movie (Brooks) (co-sc, role as executive)
1978 High Anxiety (Brooks) (co-sc, role as bellhop)
1979 ... And Justice for All (Jewison) (co-sc)
1980 Inside Moves (Donner) (co-sc)
1981 History of the World, Part I (Brooks) (role as column salesman)
1982 Best Friends (Jewison) (co-sc)
1984 Unfaithfully Yours (Zieff) (co-sc)
1993 Wilder Napalm (pr)
1994 Quiz Show (Redford) (role as Dave Garway)
1997 The Second Civil War (HBO) (+co-pr); Oz (exec. pr); Donnie Brasco (co-pr); Home Fries (co-pr)
2000 The Perfect Storm (exec pr)

Publications

By LEVINSON: books—

By LEVINSON: articles—

Interview in Inter/View (New York), July 1984.

Interview in Screen International (London), 27 October 1984.

Interview with M. Chyb, in Filmowy Serwis Prasowy, vol. 36, no. 5/6, 1990.

On LEVINSON: articles—

“Barry Levinson,” in Film Dope (London), September 1986.

* * *

Although his Oscar-winning, and most lucrative, film, Rain Man, was set in conservative Cincinnati, Los Angeles, Las Vegas, and several points in between, Barry Levinson has never forgotten his roots and is still regarded by Marylanders as the ultimate Baltimore filmmaker. Diner, the film that launched his directing career in 1982, was based in the Baltimore suburb of Forest Park, where he grew up. So was Tin Men, made five years later. And in 1989, at the age of forty-seven, following the success of Rain Man and Good Morning, Vietnam, Levinson was back again in Baltimore, to the delight of the Maryland Film Commission, shooting Avalon. It could not have been otherwise, since Avalon is based upon Levinson’s own family, who emigrated from Russia to Baltimore in 1914. Baltimore is his city and his most personal films have focused upon ordinary people he might have met there while growing up during the 1940s and 1950s—the youngsters of Diner, the aluminum-siding hucksters of Tin Men. Levinson has internalized the values of middle-America and has succeeded most brilliantly when filming stories about characters who live by those values.

If some of the critics were disturbed that Robert Redford’s Roy Hobbs was not as seriously flawed as the original character in Bernard Malamud’s The Natural, it is perhaps because Levinson’s interpretation of the character is governed by assumptions different from Malamud’s and because Levinson’s orientation is decidedly more optimistic. The fidelity of Levinson’s The Natural can be, and has been, challenged on pedantic grounds. The film might better be regarded not as an adaptation but as an interpretation, able to stand on its own regardless of its source.

Levinson told the New York Times Magazine that he does not consider himself as a writer or a “writer-director.” As Alex Ward rightly suggested, however, Levinson can be considered an American auteur who will leave his personal imprint on any project he touches, through sentimental touches (in The Natural or Tin Men, for example), quirky casting, or inspired comedic improvisation. He has an unfailling sense of what might constitute the right touch in a given dramatic situation. “I don’t like other people directing what I write,” Levinson told Ward, “but I don’t mind directing something somebody else wrote.”

In fact, after moving to the West Coast from American University in Washington, D.C., Levinson worked for over two years as a writer for Mel Brooks on two pictures, Silent Movie and High Anxiety (also making his screen debut as an insane bellhop in the Psycho parody scene). While working with Brooks on High Anxiety he first met Mark Johnson, who later became the executive producer of Diner. At that point Levinson had already won three Emmy Awards, writing for the Tim Conway and Carol Burnett shows on network television, and went on to collaborate with Valerie Curtin (whom he met at the Comedy Store in Los Angeles) on two feature film scripts, . . . And Justice for All (for Norman Jewison) and Inside Moves (for Richard Donner), before writing the script for Diner. His debut film as director is about young men “hanging out” in Baltimore over Christmas of 1959, one of them (Steve Guttenberg) enjoying his last days of bachelorhood before his approaching wedding. Mel Brooks told Levinson that the script idea resembled I Vitelloni, but the writer-director had not even seen Fellini’s film. He told Stephen Farber of the New York Times that the Guttenberg character was based upon his cousin Eddie, who “loved fried bologna sandwiches” and “slept until 2:30 in the afternoon.” The cast also featured Mickey Rourke and talented newcomers Kevin Bacon and Ellen Barkin. It was the lowest-budgeted “sleeper” produced by MGM that year, and started slowly, but after reviews in Rolling Stone and the New Yorker, the movie built a following and acquired staying power. (The president for distribution at MGM/UA referred to it as “Lazarus.”) Vincent Canby in the New York Times called it the “happiest surprise of the year to date,” and Levinson was “discovered.”

Levinson also collaborated with Valerie Curtin in writing Best Friends (starring Burt Reynolds and Goldie Hawn) and a remake of the Preston Sturges classic Unfaithfully Yours. The screenplay for . . . And Justice for All, meanwhile, was nominated for an Academy Award, demonstrating the quality of the Levinson-Curtin team. Levinson also directed the high-spirited fantasy Young Sherlock Holmes, but aside, perhaps, from Rain Man and The Natural, Levinson will best be remembered for his Baltimore pictures, drawn from his own experience and marked with his own special brand of compassionate humor and nostalgia. As a personal filmmaker he is perhaps the nearest American equivalent to François Truffaut.

During the 1990s Levinson scored a popular and critical success working with author James Toback on Bugsy, starring Warren Beatty as larger-than-life gangster Benjamin (Bugsy) Siegel and Annette Bening as Virginia Hill. The film was much admired for its snappy dialogue and was named best picture of 1991 by the Los Angeles Film Critics, who also voted Levinson Best Director and Toback Best Screenwriter. Bugsy later earned ten Academy Award nominations, including Best Picture and Best Director.

In 1992 Levinson misfired with Toys, an odd antiwar fable written by Levinson and Valerie Curtin, starring Robin Williams, Joan Cusack, and Michael Gambon. Levinson had had the project in mind for years and was able to direct it after the success of Bugsy, but although the idea that children can be conditioned by the kinds of toys they are given seemed viable, the resulting fantasy was too bizarre to be taken seriously. He misfired again in 1994 with Jimmy Hollywood, starring Joe Pesci as a loser and hustler, which was described in Variety as “an oddball attempt to mix offbeat comedy with social commentary.”

In 1994 Levinson reclaimed his Hollywood clout with his expert direction of Disclosure, starring Michael Douglas and Demi Moore and adapted by Paul Attanasio from the popular novel by Michael Crichton, who also worked with Levinson as producer. The controversial novel, concerning sexual harassment in the workplace, helped to generate interest in the film. But a far more important collaboration between Levinson and Paul Attanasio started in 1993 on the NBC television police series Homicide: Life on the Street, adapted from Baltimore Sun reporter David Simon’s published memoir about policework in Levinson’s hometown. The series was hailed by critics as the best police drama on television, giving it prominence over the flashier but more conventional NYPD Blue. As executive producer of the series Levinson also directed the pilot in 1993 and the season finale in 1995, thus helping Homicide to establish and maintain its quality and authenticity as an outstanding reality-based detective drama. The series, rated among the director’s best work since Avalon and setting a new standard for television police drama, continued until 1999, with a feature film version under Levinson’s executive producership, in the pipeline in 2000.

During the Homicide years Levinson also produced the acclaimed prison-set series, Oz and The Second Civil War for HBO, but was far from neglectful of the big screen, directing at least one picture per year and having a hand in the production of Donnie Brasco, Analyse This, and The Perfect Storm. His directorial efforts, however, have remained eclectic, variable, and variably received, with Wag the Dog, filmed as light relief between the harrowing abuse and revenge drama Sleepers and the second-rate Michael Crichton sci-fi saga Sphere, tickling the fancy with its pungent, astonishingly timely political satire and the delicious pairing of Levinson favorite Dustin Hoffman with Robert De Niro. After a hectic decade, Levinson capped his achievements with a long-awaited return to his more personal, semi-autobiographical Baltimore films with Liberty Heights. The fourth in the cycle that began with Diner, and something of a companion piece to Avalon, it is set at the social crossroads of the mid-1950s and explores themes of race, class, and religious division from the perspective of a Jewish family.

Once again, Barry Levinson’s affectionate evocations of period, family, and coming of age sit well in the gritty atmosphere of his home town and its people, confirming that he is most at ease and continues to draw his happiest inspiration from simply chronicling the passage of ordinary life.

—James M. Welsh, updated by Robyn Karney

LEWIN, Albert

Films as Director:

1942 The Moon and Sixpence (+ co-exec pr, sc)
1945 The Picture of Dorian Gray (+ sc)
1947 The Private Affairs of Bel-Ami (+ co-exec pr, sc)
1951 Pandora and the Flying Dutchman (+ co-pr, sc)
1954 Saadia (+ pr, sc)
1957 The Living Idol (+ co-pr, sc)

Other Films:

1924 Bread (continuity)
1925 The Fate of a Flirt (continuity)
1926 Ladies of Leisure (story, continuity); Blarney (co-scenarist); Tin Hats (continuity)
1927 A Little Journey (scenarist); Altars of Desire (continuity); Spring Fever (co-scenarist); Quality Street (co-scenarist, co-adapter)
1928 The Actress (co-scenarist)
1929 The Kiss (production supervisor, uncredited); Devil-May-Care (production supervisor, uncredited)
1931 The Guardsman (production supervisor, uncredited); The Cuban Love Song (production supervisor, uncredited)
1932 Red-headed Woman (production supervisor, uncredited); Smilin’ Through (production supervisor, uncredited)
1934 What Every Woman Knows (production supervisor, uncredited)
1935 China Seas (assoc pr); Mutiny on the Bounty (assoc pr)
1937 The Good Earth (assoc pr); True Confession (pr)
1938 Spawn of the North (pr)
1939 Zaza (pr)
1940 So Ends Our Night (co-exec pr)

Publications

By LEWIN: book—

The Unaltered Cat (novel), Charles Scribner’s Sons, 1967.

By LEWIN: articles—

“Peccavi!: The True Confession of a Movie Producer,” in Theatre Arts, September 1941.
A genuine Hollywood highbrow, Albert Lewin trod the line between the commercially viable and the artistically daring in his own inimitable way. Friends with the likes of writers Djuna Barnes and Robert Graves, artist Man Ray, and director Jean Renoir, Lewin had given up a nascent career as scholar and critic to pursue the grail of movies. Impressed especially by the most stylized and fantastic aspects of silent cinema, from Sjöström to Stroheim, Caligari to Keaton, Lewin left New York for Hollywood in 1922 and—just prior to Sam Goldwyn and Louis B. Mayer—joined Metro Pictures early in 1924. He impressed Irving Thalberg with his combination of erudition and sense and soon made himself indispensable at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer (MGM) story department, where he came to be known as Thalberg’s story brain. He thrived first as a writer, then a producer at MGM until Thalberg’s death. After a brief and unhappy stint as a producer at Paramount, he embarked upon his career as a director, he claimed, out of financial necessity. Lewin and his college fraternity brother, David Loew, had founded their own independent production company, and Loew urged Lewin to direct his own adaptation of W. Somerset Maugham’s The Moon and Sixpence (1942) as an economic measure.

The result was a commercial and critical success. Lewin’s adaptation of Maugham’s strange novel about a milquetoast English stockbroker and family man turned passionate painter and fierce misanthrope (his protagonist, Charles Strickland, was based on the French painter Paul Gauguin) was made on the cheap, but includes several original turns and stylistic and thematic signatures that would return faithfully in Lewin’s films, particularly his next two, more lavish productions: The Picture of Dorian Gray (1945) and The Private Affairs of Bel Ami (1947). All three films feature suave, cynical George Sanders, who clearly represented a kind of ego ideal for Lewin, in variations on what would become his standard film persona.

The three black-and-white films from the 1940s are united not only by Sanders and their fin-de-siècle European settings, but also by the fact that all are essentially morality plays—albeit rather perverse and ambiguous ones—in which art, decadence, and sexual thrill are viewed through the prism of a very pictorial, complex, and studied mise-en-scène. The Picture of Dorian Gray, the most elaborate of the three, is a film of stunning self-consciousness and density—a psychosexual horror film, enacted with choreographic precision in exquisite and mannered late-Victorian interiors. Hurd Hatfield plays the eponymous protagonist with chilling circumspection and Sanders is persuasive uttering the Wildean epigrams of Lord Henry Wotton. Harry Stradling’s cinematography won the film’s only Academy Award; it along with the sets and costumes realizes Lewin’s Beardsleyesque visual conception perfectly, while Herbert Stothart’s score employs Chopin’s Twenty-fourth Prelude evocatively.

The musical score, this time by Darius Milhaud, was also a strength of Lewin’s next film, The Private Affairs of Bel Ami, based on Guy de Maupassant’s novel Bel-Ami. This story of a narcissistic and calculating Parisian bounder whose successes are achieved through a series of sexual liaisons secured Lewin’s reputation, according to the Times, for achieving “censor-proof depravity.” Subtly feminist, this film revolves around a (rather wooden) male object of female desire (Sanders, again, as Georges Duroy, a.k.a. bel ami) and features impressive performances from its female cast, including Ann Dvorak, Angela Lansbury, and Katherine Emery. Russell Metty’s cinematography and Gordon Wiles’s set design contribute to Bel Ami’s measured, almost anaesthetic contemplation of desire and duplicity. Here, as in Dorian Gray, the characters move—or are moved—around on patterned floors like chessmen on a checkerboard. The metaphysical implications of this trope are reiterated in Bel Ami by a host of symbols: Punch and Judy, dolls and games, and by a somewhat heavy-handed moral coda.

Notably, these films each include the revelation in color insert of an painting. In the original prints of The Moon and Sixpence black-and-white photography changed to sepia when the scene changed from Europe to Tahiti and then, momentarily, to color when the painter Strickland’s “masterpiece” (in fact a mediocre Gauguenesque pastiche) was revealed near the end. In Bel Ami it is a shockingly anachronistic painting of The Temptation of St. Anthony by surrealist Max Ernst that erupts from the screen in color. The technique is put more in the service of the narrative in The Picture of Dorian Gray, where Technicolor enhances the vivid senescence and putrefaction of Ivan Albright’s rendition of the titular portrait.

Lewin continued to highlight art works in his color films of the 1950s, including in what is arguably his masterpiece, the singular Pandora and the Flying Dutchman (1951), a heady melange of Greek myth, German legend, Shakespearean and Jacobean drama, Romantic poetry, and Surrealist imagery, all spiced up with bullfighting, flamenco dancing, jazz combos, and speed-racing! From an original story, this dazzling film, often deliberately surrealistic and sometimes inadvertently camp, was shot on Spain’s Costa Brava and features Ava Gardner (divinely beautiful as costumed by Beatrice Dawson and photographed by Jack Cardiff) and James Mason in the title roles. Its uneven reception—most Anglo-American critics cringed, while the French swooned—is a testimony to its audacity.

Lewin’s last two films, made under considerable budget and casting restraints by MGM, were almost unanimously (and fairly) deemed failures. Saadia (1954), based on a minor French novel of colonial Morocco, despite the authenticity and beauty of its location ambience, is an awkward blend of romantic cliché and intellectual speculation. The Living Idol (1957), from an original script, like Lewin’s later novel The Unaltered Cat, is an even unessayist formulation of formulaic romance, sensational supernaturalism, and almost laughable pedantry, in which the plot seems a flimsy armature upon which its director’s pet intellectual obsessions are top-heavily disposed.

Albert Lewin was a dilettante in the fullest sense of the word. His profound enthusiasms for the other arts are manifest in his films, several of which have artist-protagonists and all of which incorporate literary allusion, scenes of song and dance (e.g., Tahitian, Indonesian, Parisian, Andalusian, Moroccan, and Mexican), and manifold art objects. But Lewin’s (real and anticipated) battles with the Hays Office and his sense of popular taste seem to have led him to add, as sops to the censors and the box office, plot elements and characters for their strictly comedic, sentimental, or moralizing values. Even his best films are thus occasionally weakened by an anomalous scene or banal figure. And, especially in his original scripts, his literary and dilettantish impulses were wont to run amok. But his efforts resulted in a few films of real distinction, of proto-Godardian reflexivity, visual intricacy, and literary pith. In the United States, where critics and audiences are often alienated by such qualities, Lewin’s reputation has languored, while in Europe, where his influence on directors like Godard and Antonioni has been claimed, it has borne up rather better.

—Susan Felleman

LEWIS, Jerry

Nationality: American. Born: Joseph Levitch in Newark, New Jersey, 16 March 1926. Education: Irvington High School, New Jersey, through tenth grade. Family: Married 1) singer Patti Palmer, 1944 (divorced 1982), five sons; 2) Sandra Pit nick, 1983, one adopted daughter. Career: Stage debut in 1931; developed comic routines and attracted Irving Kaye as manager, 1942; began working with Dean Martin at Atlantic City club, 1946; with Martin, signed by Hal Wallis for Paramount, 1948; acted in first feature, also founded production company to direct series of pastiches of Hollywood films (later Jerry Lewis Productions), 1949; chairman of Muscular Dystrophy Association of America, raising funds from annual telethons, from 1952; started solo career, 1956; signed seven-year contract with Paramount-York, 1959; after abandonment of The Day the Clown Cried, left films for eight years, 1972; appeared on Broadway as the devil in revival of Damn Yankees, 1995. Awards: Commander of the Order of Arts and Letters, and Commander of the Legion of Honour, France, 1984; Nobel Peace Prize nomination, 1978, for work for the Muscular Dystrophy Association. Agent: Jeff Witjas, William Morris Agency, 151 El Camino Drive, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A. Address: Jerry Lewis Films Inc., 3160 W. Sahara Avenue #16-C, Las Vegas, NV 89102, U.S.A.
Jerry Lewis

Films as Director:

(partial list)

1949 Fairfax Avenue (short pastiche of Sunset Boulevard); A Spot in the Shade (short pastiche of A Place in the Sun); Watch on the Line (pastiche); Come Back, Little Shicksa (pastiche); Son of Lifeboat (pastiche); The Re-Inforcer (pastiche); Son of Spellbound (pastiche); Melvin’s Revenge (pastiche); I Should Have Stood in Bedlam (pastiche of From Here to Eternity); The Whistler (pastiche)

1950 The Bellboy (+ sc, pr, role as Stanley)

1960 The Ladies’ Man (+ sc, pr, roles as Herbert H. Heebert and his mother, Mrs. Heebert); The Errand Boy (+ sc, role as Morty S. Tachman)

1963 The Nutty Professor (+ sc, roles as Julius F. Kelp and Buddy Love)

1964 The Patsy (+ sc, role as Stanley Belt)

1965 The Family Jewels (+ pr, sc, roles as Willard Woodward, Uncle James Peyton, Uncle Eddie Peyton, Uncle Julius Peyton, Uncle Shylock Peyton, Uncle Bugs Peyton)

1966 Three on a Couch (+ pr, roles as Christopher Prise, Warren, Ringo Raintree, Rutherford, Heather)

1967 The Big Mouth (+ pr, sc, roles as Gerald Clamson, Sid Valentine)

1970 One More Time; Which Way to the Front? (+ pr, roles as Brendan Byers III, Kesselring)

1972 The Day the Clown Cried (+ principal role) (not released)

1980 Hardly Working (+ sc, principal role)

1982 Cracking Up (Smorgasbord) (+ sc, principal role)

1990 Good Grief (series for TV)

1993 Super Force (series for TV)

Other Films:

1949 My Friend Irma (Marshall) (role as Seymour)

1950 My Friend Irma Goes West (Walker) (role as Seymour)

1951 At War with the Army (Walker) (role as Soldier Korwin); That’s My Boy (Walker) (role as “Junior” Jackson)

1952 Sailor Beware (Walker) (role as Melvin Jones); Jumping Jacks (Taurog) (role as Hop Smith)

1953 The Stooge (Taurog) (role as Ted Rogers); Scared Stiff (Marshall) (role as Myron Myron Mertz); The Caddy (Taurog) (role as Harvey Miller)

1954 Money from Home (Marshall) (role as Virgil Yokum); Living It Up (Taurog) (role as Homer Flagg); Three Ring Circus (Pevney) (role as Jerry Hotchkiss)

1955 You’re Never Too Young (Taurog) (role as Wilbur Hoolick); Artists and Models (Tashlin) (role as Eugene Fullstack)

1956 Pardners (Taurog) (role as Wade Kingsley Jr.); Hollywood or Bust (Tashlin) (role as Malcolm Smith)

1957 The Delicate Delinquent (McGuire) (pr, role as Sidney Pythias); The Sad Sack (Marshall) (role as Meredith T. Bixby); The Geisha Boy (Tashlin) (pr, role as Gilbert Wooley)

1958 Rock-a-Bye Baby (Tashlin) (pr, role as Clayton Poole)

1959 Don’t Give up the Ship (Taurog) (role as John Paul Steckley VII)

1960 Visit to a Small Planet (Taurog) (role as Kerton); Cinderella (Tashlin) (pr, role as Fella); Li’l Abner (Frank) (brief appearance)

1962 It’s Only Money (Tashlin) (role as Lester March)

1963 It’s a Mad, Mad, Mad, World (Kramer) (role as man who drives over Culpepper’s hat); Who’s Minding the Store? (Tashlin) (role as Raymond Phifffer)

1964 The Disorderly Orderly (Tashlin) (role as Jerome Littlefield)

1965 Boeing Boeing (Rich) (role as Robert Reed)

1966 Way Way Out (Douglas) (role as Peter Matamore)

1967 Don’t Raise the Bridge, Lower the River (Paris) (role as George Lester)

1969 Hook, Line, and Sinker (Marshall) (pr, role as Peter Ingersoll, alias Dobbs)

1981 Rascal Dazzle (doc) (narration)

1982 The King of Comedy (Scorsese) (role as Jerry Langford); Slapstick (Paul) (role)

1984 Retenex-moi . . . ou je fais un malheur (To Catch a Cop) (Gerard) (role as Jerry Logan); Par ou t’est rentré? On t’a pas vu sortir (Clair) (role); Slapstick of Another Kind (Paul) (role)
1989  Cookie (Seidelman) (role)
1992  American Dreamers (role); Mr. Saturday Night (role); Arizona Dream (role as Leo Sweetie)
1995  Funny Bones (Chelsom) (role as George Fawkes)
1996  The Nutty Professor (exec pr)
2000  Nutty Professor II: The Klumps (exec pr)

Publications

By LEWIS: books—

By LEWIS: articles—

- “Mr. Lewis Is a Pussycat,” interview with Peter Bogdanovich, in Esquire (New York), November 1962.
- Interview in Directors at Work, edited by Bernard Kantor and others, New York, 1970.
- Interview with Serge Daney, in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), May 1983.
- “Jerry Lewis on Writing, Directing, and Starring in the Original Version of The Nutty Professor,” with S. Biodrowski, in Cinématastique (Forest Park), no. 3, 1996.

On LEWIS: books—

On LEWIS: articles—

- Hume, Rod, “Martin and Lewis—are Their Critics Wrong?,” in Films and Filming (London), March 1956.
- Jerry Lewis Section of Casablanca (Madrid), June 1983.
- “Jerry Lewis,” in Film Dope (London), September 1986.
- Bukatman, S., “Paralysis in Motion: Jerry Lewis’s Life as a Man,” in Camera Obscura, May 1988.
- Selig, Michael, “The Nutty Professor: A ‘Problem’ in Film Scholarship,” in Velvet Light Trap, Fall 1990.
Bennetts, Leslie, “‘Letter from Las Vegas: Jerry vs. the Kids’” in Vanity Fair, September 1993.

Stars (Mariembourg), Autumn 1995.

Seesslen, Georg, “‘Cinderfella & Big Mouth. Jerry Lewis and Dean Martin,’” in EPD Film (Frankfurt), April 1996.

Mago (Max Goldstein), “‘Souvenirs d’un film qui n’est jamais sorti,’” in Positif (Paris), May 1998.

* * *

In France, Jerry Lewis is called “‘Le Roi de Crazy’” and adulated as a genius by filmmakers as respectable as Alain Resnais, Jean-Luc Godard, and Claude Chabrol. In America, Jerry Lewis is still an embarrassing and unexplained paradox, often ridiculed, awaiting a persuasive critical champion. This incredible gulf can in part be explained by American access, on television talk shows and Lewis’s annual muscular dystrophy telethon, to Lewis’s contradictory public persona: egotistical yet insecure, insulting yet sentimental, juvenile yet adult, emotionally naked yet defensive. Were not the real Lewis apparently so hard to love, the celluloid Lewis might be loved all the more. And yet a Lewis cult thrives among American cinephiles; and certainly The Bellboy, The Errand Boy, The Nutty Professor, and Which Way to the Front? appear today to be among the most interesting and ambitious American films of the 1960s.

Lewis’s career can be divided into four periods: first, the partnership with singer Dean Martin, which resulted in a successful nightclub act and popular series of comedies, including My Friend Irma and At War with the Army, as well as several highly regarded films directed by former cartoonist and Lewis mentor Frank Tashlin; second (after professional and personal tensions fueled by Lewis’s artistic ambitions irrevocably destroyed the partnership), an apprenticeship as a solo comedy star, beginning with The Delicate Delinquent and continuing through Tashlin’s Cinderfella; third, the period as the self-professed “‘total filmmaker,’” inaugurated in 1960 with The Bellboy and followed by a decade of Lewis films directed by and starring Lewis, which attracted the attention of auteurist critics in France and overwhelming box-office response in America, culminating with a string of well-publicized financial failures, including Which Way to the Front? and the unreleased, near-mythical The Day the Clown Cried, in which clown Lewis leads Jewish children to Nazi ovens; and finally, the period as valorized, if martyred auteur, exemplified by Lewis’s work as an actor in Martin Scorsese’s The King of Comedy and Lewis’s sporadic, unsuccessful attempts to re-establish his own directorial career. Lewis’s appeal is significantly rooted in the American silent film tradition of the individual comedian: like Chaplin, Lewis is interested in pathos and sentiment; like Keaton, Lewis is fascinated by the comic gag which could only exist on celluloid; like Harry Langdon, Lewis exhibits, within an adult persona, childish behavior which is often disturbing and embarrassing; like Stan Laurel, whose first name Lewis adopts as an homage in several of his films, Lewis is the lovable innocent often endowed with almost magical qualities. What Lewis brings uniquely to this tradition, however, is his obsession with the concept of the schizophrenic self; his typical cinema character has so many anxieties and tensions that it must take on other personalities in order to survive. Often, the schizophrenia becomes overtly autobiographical, with the innocent, gawky kid escaping his stigmatized existence by literally becoming “‘Jerry Lewis,’” beloved and successful comedian (as in The Bellboy and The Errand Boy) or romantic leading man, perhaps representing the now absent Dean Martin (as in The Nutty Professor). Jerry Lewis’s physical presence on screen in his idiot persona emphasizes movement disorders in a way which relates provocatively to his highly publicized work for the Muscular Dystrophy Association. Schizophrenia is compounded in The Family Jewels: what Jean-Pierre Coursodon calls Lewis’s “‘yearning for self-obliteration’” is manifested in seven distinct personalities. Ultimately, Lewis escapes by turning himself into his cinema, as evidenced by the credits in his failed comeback film, which proudly announce: “‘Jerry Lewis is . . . Hardly Working.’” This element of cinematic escape and schizophrenia is especially valued by the French, who politicize it as a manifestation of the human condition as influenced by American capitalism.

Much must also be said about the strong avant-garde qualities to Lewis’s work: his interest in surrealism; his experimentalism and fascination with self-conscious stylistic devices; his movement away from conventional gags toward structures apparently purposely deformed; his interest in plotlessness and ellipsis; the reflexivity of his narrative; his studied use of extended silence and gibberish in a sound cinema; the ambiguous sexual subtext of his work; and finally, his use of film as personal revelation.

The last decade has seen a slight diminution of Lewis’s reputation as a director (Lewis having directed television situation comedies, but no features), but an augmentation of his reputation as an actor and icon. His King of Comedy appearance now seems definitely a major performance in the American cinema, as does the Scorsese film a major statement about the American lust for celebrity. Ever since that film, a variety of younger directors have used Lewis as icon and/or as reflexive comment on the Lewis career. Perhaps Lewis’s most interesting showcase is his 1995 performance as a Las Vegas clown in Funny Bones, directed by Peter Chelsom. It is hard not to see Funny Bones as a deadly look at the Las Vegas side of the Lewis persona, complete with the jazzy Sinatra score and the institutional insincerity: Lewis is the funny father who overshadows his psychologically wounded and relatively untalented son, his own celebrity having a dark, depressing underside and a deleterious effect on family life.

Lewis as George Fawkes admits that he was not true to his talent and confesses, “‘It kills me that I used writers, instead of using me.’” The film’s philosophy—“‘I never saw anything funny that wasn’t terrible, that didn’t cause pain’”—seems a natural segue to other recent events in the Lewis life: his autobiography, written in 1982, chronicled, among other things, his addiction to Percodan and his driven personality. His ex-wife, Patti Lewis, followed with her own autobiography—whose title tells it all: I Laffed ’til I Cried: Thirty-six Years of Marriage to Jerry Lewis. And although Lewis has dedicated his life to raising hundreds of millions of dollars for the Muscular Dystrophy Association, he has been virulently attacked by many adults with the disease—particularly in 1992 and 1993—who claim he publicly demonstrates a patronizing, demeaning attitude and exploits them with a pity which makes their lives in society harder, not easier. Lewis responded by attacking his accusers equally virulently, thus creating great pathos and bitterness all around: yet another fold in that seamless garment which is Lewis’s life and art. Comic performances in films by younger French directors added little to Lewis’s reputation, but a recurring role in the TV series Wiseguy in 1989 and a triumphant Broadway appearance as the devil in Damn Yankees in 1995, which reprised all his “Jerry Lewis” shtick, have been well received. Perhaps only Lewis’s death will allow any definitive American evaluation of his substantial career.

—Charles Derry

L’HERBIER, Marcel

Nationality: French. Born: Paris, 23 April 1888. Education: Lycée Voltaire, Sainte-Marie de Monceau; University of Paris. Military Service: Served with Service Auxiliaire, 1914–17, and with Section Cinématographique de l’Armée, 1917–18. Career: Scriptwriter, from 1917; directed first film, Rose-France, 1918; organized Cinégraphic production company, 1922; secretary general of Association des Auteurs de Films, 1929; co-founder, Cinémathèque Française, 1936; co-founder (1937) then president, Syndicat des Techniciens, from 1938; founder and president of Institut des Hautes Études Cinématographiques (IDHEC), French film school, 1943; president of Comité de Défense du Cinéma Français, 1947; producer for television, 1952–62. Awards: Commandeur de Légion d’Honneur et des Arts et Lettres. Died: 26 November 1979.

Films as Director:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1918</td>
<td>Phantasmes (+ sc) (incomplete); Rose-France (+ sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1919</td>
<td>Le Berceau (+ sc); Le Carnaval des vérités (+ sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1920</td>
<td>L’Homme du large (+ sc); Villa Destin (+ sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1921</td>
<td>El Dorado (+ sc); Prométhée . . . banqueter</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1922</td>
<td>Don Juan et Faust (+ sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1923</td>
<td>Résurrection (+ sc) (incomplete)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1924</td>
<td>L’Inhumaine (The New Enchantment) (+ co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1925</td>
<td>Feu Mathias Pascal (The Late Mathias Pascal) (+ sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1926</td>
<td>Le Vertige (+ sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1927</td>
<td>Le Diable au coeur (L’Ex-Voto) (+ sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1928</td>
<td>Nuits de Prince (+ sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1929</td>
<td>L’Argent (+ sc); L’Enfant de l’amour (+ sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>La Femme d’une nuit (La donna d’una notte) (+ sc); La Mystère de la chambre jaune (+ sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>Le Parfum de la dame en noir (+ sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>Le Epevier (Les Amoureux; Bird of Prey) (+ sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>Le Scandale; L’Aventurier (+ sc); Le Bonheur (+ sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>La Route impériale (+ sc); Veille d’armes (Sacrifice d’honneur) (+ co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>Les Hommes nouveaux (+ sc); La Porte du large (The Great Temptation) (+ sc); Nuits de feu (The Living Corpse) (+ co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>La Citadelle du silence (The Citadel of Silence) (+ sc); Forfaiture (+ sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>La Tragédie impériale (Rasputin) (+ sc); Adrienne Lecouvreur, Terre de feu; La Brigade sauvage (Savage Brigade) (completed by J. Dreville)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Entente cordiale; Children’s Corner (short); La Mode rêvée (short) (+ sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>La Comédie du bonheur (+ sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>Histoire de rire (Foolish Husbands)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>La Nuit fantastique; L’Honorabile Catherine</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1942</td>
<td>La Vie de Bohème</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>Au petit bonheur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1944</td>
<td>L’Affaire du collier de la Reine (The Queen’s Necklace)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1945</td>
<td>La Révolutee (Stolen Affections) (+ sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1946</td>
<td>Les Derniers Jours de Pompei (The Last Days of Pompeii) (+ co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>Le Père de mademoiselle (co-d)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1948</td>
<td>Hommage à Debussy (short)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>Le Cinéma du diable (anthology film)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>Other Films:</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>Le Torrent (Hervil) (sc); Bouclette (L’Ange de minuit) (Mercanton and Hervil) (sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Le Martyre de l’Obèse (Chenal) (supervisor)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1953</td>
<td>La Bataille (Farkas) (supervisor)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1954</td>
<td>Terra di fuoco (Ferroni) (Italian version of Terre de feu) (supervisor)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Other Films:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1917</td>
<td>Le Torrent (Hervil) (sc); Bouclette (L’Ange de minuit) (Mercanton and Hervil) (sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>Le Martyre de l’Obèse (Chenal) (supervisor)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>La Bataille (Farkas) (supervisor)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Terra di fuoco (Ferroni) (Italian version of Terre de feu) (supervisor)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
1943  Le Loup des Malveneur (Radot) (supervisor)
1947  Une Grande Fille tout simple (Manuel) (supervisor)

Publications

By L’HERBIER: books—

By L’HERBIER: articles—

On L’HERBIER: books—

Brossard, Jean-Pierre, editor, Marcel L’Herbier et son temps, La Chaux-de-Fonds, Switzerland, 1980.
Canosa, Michele, Marcel L’Herbier, Parma, 1985.

On L’HERBIER: articles—

‘‘The Big Screens,’’ in Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1955.
Roud, Richard, ‘‘Memories of Resnais,’’ in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1969.
Article on five films of L’Herbier, in Ecran (Paris), no. 43, 1976.
Milani, R., ‘‘Il cinema di Marcel L’Herbier,’’ in Filmcritica (Montepulciano), vol. 37, no. 364, May 1986.
‘‘Marcel L’Herbier,’’ in Film Dope (London), September 1986.

Marcel L’Herbier was one of the most prominent members of the French 1920s avant-garde. His direct involvement with filmmaking extended into the 1950s and he made important contributions to the organization of the industry, to the foundation of the film school, the IDHEC, and to early television drama.

Like so many of his generation L’Herbier turned to cinema after an early enthusiasm for literature and the theatre, and in his case it was Cecil B. DeMille’s The Cheat with Sessue Hayakawa that opened his eyes to the unrealized potential of the new medium. He came to prominence in the years 1919–22 with a series of films made for Léon Gaumont’s “Pax” series. Among the half-dozen films made for Gaumont, two at least stand out as artistic and commercial successes: L’Homme du large, a melodrama shot partly on location on the Brittany coast, where the director’s interest in visual effects and symbolism is very apparent; and El Dorado, a Spanish drama in which L’Herbier’s use of cinema to convey the mental and psychological states of characters finds perfect expression. El Dorado achieved a success to match that of Gance’s La Roue the following year.

Difficulties with Gaumont over the production of the ambitious Don Juan et Faust led L’Herbier to set up his own company, Cinégraphic, in 1922. He was able to assist the debuts of young filmmakers such as Jacque Catelain and Claude Autant-Lara as well as produce the last film of Louis Delluc, L’Inondation. His own films were made largely in co-production and ranged widely in style and approach. The celebrated but controversial L’Inhumaine, partly financed by its star the singer Georgette Leblanc, aimed to offer a mosaic of the decorative modern art of 1925, with sets produced by four very individual designers, including Fernand Léger and Robert Mallet-Stevens. In total contrast, Feu Matthias Pascal was essentially an experiment with complex narrative structures, co-produced with the Albatros company which had been set up by Russian exiles and starring the great silent actor, Ivan Mosjoukine. L’Herbier’s eclectic approach and love of juxtapositions are very apparent in these films, together with his immense visual refinement. After a couple of commercial works he made his silent masterpiece, an updating of Zola’s L’Argent, in 1929. Inspired by the scope of Gance’s Napoléon, L’Herbier created a strikingly modern work marked by its opulent, oversized sets and a complex, multi-camera shooting style.

L’Herbier was in no way hostile to the coming of sound, but despite a pair of interesting adaptations of comic thrillers by Gaston Leroux, Le Mystère de la chambre jaune and Le Parfum de la dame en noir, L’Herbier was largely reduced to the role of efficient but uninspired adaptor of stage plays in the 1930s. During the occupation years L’Herbier again came to prominence with his delicately handled, dreamlike La Nuit fantastique, but his subsequent work, which included a spectacular version of Les Derniers Jours de Pompei in 1948, attracted little critical favor. In more recent years, however, L’Herbier’s reputation has benefitted from the revival of interest in the experimental aspects of French 1920s cinema. Though to some extent overshadowed by the towering figure of Abel Gance, L’Herbier emerges as a figure of considerable interest. In particular the work of the critic and theorist Noël Burch has emphasized the modernity of the approach to shooting and to narrative construction displayed in his ambitious L’Argent. There seems little doubt that French 1920s cinema offers a rich and largely unexplored area for future film studies and that L’Herbier’s reputation can only benefit from fresh investigation of his varied 1920s oeuvre.

—Roy Armes

Films as Director:

1988 It's Impossible to Learn to Plow by Reading Books
1991 Slacker (+ pr, sc, role)
1993 Dazed and Confused (+ pr, sc)
1995 Before Sunrise (+ sc)
1997 SubUrbia
1998 The Newton Boys (+ sc)
2000 Waking Life (+ sc)

Other Films:

1995 The Underneath (role as Ember Doorman)

Publications

By LINKLATER: books—

By LINKLATER: articles—

‘‘The (Not So) Dazed and Confused Richard Linklater,’’ an interview, in Suspect Culture (Toronto), Fall 1994.
Griffin, D., ‘‘Slackjawing,’’ in Film Threat (Beverly Hills), April 1995.
‘‘Q & A: Richard Linklater on the Independent Film Scene,’’ an interview with J.A. Waltz, in Boxoffice (Chicago), April 1997.

On LINKLATER: articles—

Horton, R., ‘‘Stranger than Texas,’’ in Film Comment, July-August 1990.

Speed, Lesley, ‘‘Tuesday’s Gone: the Nostalgic Teen Film,’’ in Journal of Popular Film and Television (Washington, D.C.), Spring 1998.

* * *

Once, in Hollywood, directors were anonymous (despite the fact that their names appeared on many films): I was not aware of Howard Hawks or Leo McCarey until very late in their careers, despite the fact that I had seen a number of their films. Then, in the brief heyday of the Auteur theory, directors became briefly important: some filmgoers, at least, became aware of their names. In contemporary Hollywood, directors are largely superfluous. Aside from one or two tenacious auteurs like Scorsese, what does it matter anymore who directed what? Hollywood films today are, for the most part, produced by cine-illiterate corporations and directed (apparently) by anyone who happens to wander onto the set. They are made by technicians, the directors of ‘‘stunts,’’ and the special-effects department.

It is in this context that the careers of several courageous young independent filmmakers, with the nerve to reveal certain seemingly obsolete or unwelcome qualities like integrity, conscience, and personal vision, have to be considered: I have in mind especially Todd Haynes, Gregg Araki, and Richard Linklater. All three are clearly auteurs in that their films are thematically and stylistically consistent and recognizable; but the same could be said of Ken Russell or David Lynch, so that one should add that their work is also distinguished by real intelligence. It is certainly arguable that Safe (Haynes), The Doom Generation (Araki), and Before Sunrise (Linklater) are, Scorsese aside, the three best American films of the 1990s. Each now has a following, and so long as their living arrangements don’t require a house in Beverly Hills and more than one swimming pool, there seems no reason why they should not continue to make the finest American films currently being produced.

One may begin at (so far) the end, with Before Sunrise, an oasis in the desert of contemporary Hollywood where one may again breathe fresh air and drink unpolluted water. A film built upon the long take, a film that expresses, by a director who trusts and works with his actors for character and nuance, instead of relying on TV-style editing; a film that begins with Purcell (Dido and Aeneas) and (almost) ends with Bach (the Goldberg Variations): one could not predict such a film, not only from the Hollywood context, but from Linklater’s previous work, intelligent and distinctive as that is. One also wonders whether anything like it can be done again, given the feebleness of public response and the half-hearted polite interest of most reviewers. At least it was honored at the Berlin Film Festival, but I have not found it on a single critic’s list of the best films of 1995 (except my own private one, where it has first place).

With its Vienna setting, including a visit to the Prater, and its overriding concern with the redefinition of romantic love, it seems inevitable to compare it with an earlier masterpiece, a film of equal delicacy, subtlety, and emotional fineness, Ophuls’s Letter from an Unknown Woman—the differences being, of course, more important than the parallels. In Letter, “romantic love” entailed lifetime commitment (even when unreciprocated), an existence sustained solely by illusion, and ultimate tragedy; but the basis for that was the subordinate position of women, their complementary options of wife or prostitute, both selling their services. “Romantic love,” as fantasy, represented the heroine’s only means of transcending the ignominy of her situation. Before Sunrise redefines romantic love in a world where the lovers meet on a level of full equality, where permanence of any kind and on either side is uncertain and no longer necessarily desirable. Everyone with whom I have discussed the film asks what is implied by the ending: Will they or won’t they keep their date in Vienna six months later? I think the more interesting question the film raises implicitly is, Would it be better if they did or if they didn’t? Is it better to imprison yourself in the still-dominant conventions of “the couple” (marriage, family, permanence), or to keep fresh the memory of one perfect, magical night, and go on from there? The film’s refusal to answer either question perhaps accounts for its commercial failure: audiences still seem to resent being left in a state of uncertainty, even though most of their members live in one.

Despite its extreme difference, Before Sunrise has certain aspects in common with its two predecessors, Slacker and Dazed and Confused. All three take place in less than twenty-four hours; each presents a world in which nothing is certain anymore and where no future is guaranteed; although each is situated within a single town or city, all three are about wandering; in all three, the characters are essentially or literally homeless, if only for the time period of the film. In Slacker, the only home besides cheap, impermanent apartments is that of the first character (aside from Linklater himself, the stranger whose arrival in town initiates the chain of interlocking, overlapping episodes), who is arrested and removed from it for deliberately running down and killing his own mother. In Dazed and Confused, home is something to be escaped from, and in Before Sunrise two people, strangers without money in a foreign city, spend the night wandering the streets. Their attraction to each other clearly has little to do with any possible domestic future.
All three films are distinguished by Linklater’s complex relationship to the characters and the action, delicately poised between sympathy and critical distance. His characters are neither indulged nor held up to ridicule, they are presented generously but quite unsentimentally. The various “slackers” of the first film are frequently bizarre and slightly absurd, but this is understood in terms of their alienation from a culture that offers them no hope and breeds paranoia. Dazed and Confused (the least unconventional of the three, and the one commercial success) is at once modeled on and an antidote to American Graffiti, without a vestige of that film’s condescending, audience-flattering “cuteness.” It also never descends into nostalgia for “the best days of your life.” It depicts quite uncompromisingly the brutality and stupidity of initiation rituals, the variously corrupted and brutalized seniors using the (relatively) innocent young as the victims of their own frustrations, their acquired sadism, the physical cruelty of the males echoed in the females’ desire to humiliate their juniors. Indeed, “initiation,” in a very real sense, is enacted in one of the plot-threads, wherein a freshman learns, as a way to “belonging,” the destructive behavior of his elders. One character, despite severe pressures from both his coach and his peers, manages to preserve his integrity—by refusing to sign a paper promising to forswear drugs and alcohol. In the context Linklater creates, it is a heroic gesture.

Finally, one must acknowledge Linklater’s brilliant work with actors, whether the huge cast of non-professionals in Slacker, the multiple narratives of Dazed and Confused, or the marvelously subtle, flexible and nuanced performances of Ethan Hawke and Julie Delpy in Before Sunrise.

—Robin Wood

LITTIN, Miguel

Nationality: Chilean. Born: Palmilla (Colchagua), Chile, 9 August 1942. Education: Theatre School of the University of Chile, Santiago. Family: Married Eli Menz. Career: TV director and producer, 1963; stage director and actor, and assistant on several films, 1964–67; founding member, Committee of the Popular Unity Filmmakers, 1969; named director of national production company Chile Films by Salvador Allende, 1970; made weekly newsreels for Chile Films, 1970–71; emigrated to Mexico following coup d’état, 1973; member of Executive Committee of Latin American Filmmakers, 1974. Awards: Chilean Critics Prize, for El Chacal de Nahueltoro, 1970.

Films as Director and Scriptwriter:

1968 Por la tierra ajena (On Foreign Land)
1969 El chacal de Nahueltoro (The Jackal of Nahueltoro)
1971 Compañero Presidente
1973 La tierra prometida (The Promised Land)
1975 El recurso del método (Viva el Presidente; Reasons of State)
(co-sc)
1980 La viuda de Montiel (Montiel’s Widow)
1982 Alsino y el cóndor (Alsino and the Condor)
1985 Actas de Marusia (Letters from Marusia)
1986 Acta General de Chile (General Statement on Chile)
1990 Sandino (+ sc)

1994 Los Naufragos
1999 Tierra del Fuego

Other Films:

1965 Yo tenía un camarada (I Had a Comrade) (Soto) (role)
1966 Mundo mágico (Magic World) (Soto) (role); ABC do amor (The ABC of Love) (role)

Publications

By LITTIN: books—

By LITTIN: articles—

“Film in Chile,” an interview in Cineaste (New York), Spring 1971.
Interview with M. Torres, in Cine Cubano (Havana), no. 76/77, 1972.
Interview with Marcel Martin, in Ecran (Paris), November 1977.
Interview with Emilia Palma, in Cine Cubano (Havana), no. 100, 1981.

On LITTIN: books—

On LITTIN: articles—

Burton, Julianne, “The Promised Land,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Fall 1975.
Kovacs, K.S., “Miguel Littin’s Recurso del método: the aftermath of Allende.,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1980.
“Each of my movies corresponds to a moment in Chilean political life.” From this manifesto-like stance in his earlier career, Miguel Littin’s cinematic concerns have widened geographically but maintained their political orientation. Certainly it is an attitude that has earned him detractors. But it is fair to say that his best work has been provoked by contradicções offered to socialist ideals through the lessons of history. Squaring this circle, or for Littin, seeing how imperialism, dictatorship, and subjugation are self-perpetuating, allows us to trace the fine line in his work between political sentimentality and genuine cinematic ingenuity. El chalac de Nahuel Toro courageously addresses the notion of ideology in the true story of an illiterate peasant who murders his common-law wife and her five children. Taking this popular personification of Evil, Littin shows the irony of a peasant who only achieves self-enlightenment at the point of judicial persecution, only becomes literate to sign his death warrant, and only becomes a good Catholic in time to die one. But the film seeks to avoid the perpetuation of bourgeois forms itself: flashbacks culminate at a point midway through the film when the crime is actually committed; the real dialogue of the peasant is used; and handheld camera shots and journalistic techniques simultaneously invoke sensations of authenticity and manipulation.

The film pitched Littin into the leading ranks of Latin American directors, an achievement he followed with La tierra prometida. Again closely historically detailed, it tells the story of a popular revolt that is finally massacred by the army. But it moved to a larger cinematic scope, starring the peasants of the Santa Cruz region, and invoked the ambiguity of folk symbolism in an allegory of the weaknesses in Allende’s Popular Unity. Two months after it was made a similar military coup put an end to Allende’s government.

After the coup, Littin went to Mexico and looked back on Chile’s recent, violent history in Actas de Marusia. This film documents the roots of right-wing domination in an English Mining Company’s exploitation of a small Chilean town at the start of the century, ending in torture, hostage-taking, and mass-murder. For some, however, the film was too one-sided, one critic calling it “nothing so much as a Stalinist hymn to the glories of suicidal sacrifice.” Nonetheless its ochre-toned intensity gained it an Academy Award nomination as Best Foreign Film.

From here his career took a different turn. The emerging fashion for Latin American “magic realism” in European and American literary tastes saw Littin making a parallel rapprochement with “western” intellectual culture—the previous agent of cultural contamination. El recurso del método, based on a Carpenter novel, was archly thoughtful, quoting from Descartes in its portrayal of an exiled Latin American dictator. But again it detailed Littin’s concern with the forms of ideology that condone dictatorship—here in the delusion of subjectivity: “The dictator can seem nice and understandable in his behaviour, but at the same time he reveals the extent to which he himself has been destroyed by the ideology of imperialism… Therefore I didn’t want to stress the individual.” Mirrors, paintings, and lamps refract the lighting, rendering illumination and identification uncertain: “It is a play of reflections between truths, lies, ambiguities, and from the joining of all these elements, the spectator will be able to draw a conclusion, to become aware of what a dictatorship is.” El recurso del método struck the plangent note of the exiled Littin’s own political pessimism, a note that was echoed in La viuda de Montiel, which showed the widow of a local tyrant gradually becoming aware of her previous self-delusions. In spite of García Márquez providing the story, the film failed to take off.

But Alsino y el cóndor, taking as its subject a boy’s dream of flying, did take off, showing Littin’s return to contemporary Latin American realities in the context of Somoza’s Nicaragua of 1979. Some saw the film’s clear political sympathies as hampering it at the Academy Awards where it was nominated for Best Foreign Film. But the film cinematically transcended its political objectives in a powerful, emotive vision of a country torn by civil war, seen through the eyes of a crippled child. That innocent eye is one Littin tried to capture when he surreptitiously returned to Chile after twelve years in exile to secretly film life under Pinochet. He was disguised as an Uruguayan businessman and covertly directed four film crews. The resulting four-part documentary, Acta General de Chile, is a testament to Littin’s flexibility and bravado.

Littin’s place in Latin American film history is ensured, for reasons that go beyond the aesthetic. Paradoxically, what has earned him posteriority has often cost him aesthetically. Responsiveness to a changing political climate renders him an unpredictable director, but nonetheless bodes well for the future.

—Saul Frampton

LOACH, Ken

Nationality: British. Born: Kenneth Loach in Nuneaton, Warwickshire, 17 June 1937. Education: Studied law at Oxford University. Military Service: Served two years in the Royal Air Force. Family: Married Lesley Ashton (Loach), three sons (one deceased), two daughters. Career: Acted with a repertory company in Birmingham, then joined the BBC, 1961; director of Z Cars for TV, 1962; directed episodes in the BBC’s Wednesday Play series, including Cathy Come Home, Three Clear Sundays, Up the Junction, The End of Arthur’s Marriage, Coming Out Party, In Two Minds, and The Big Flame, 1965–69; directed his first feature, Poor Cow, 1967; with producer Tony Garnett, set up Kestrel Films production company, 1969; freelanced, though working mainly for Britain’s Central TV, 1970s. Awards: British TV Guild TV Director of the Year Award, 1965; Berlin Film Festival OCIC Award, Interfilm Award, and FIPRESCI Award, for Family Life, 1972; Cannes Film Festival Young Cinema Award, for Looks and Smiles, 1976; Cannes Film Festival Jury Prize, for Hidden Agenda, 1999; Cannes Film Festival FIPRESCI Award, Best Film European Film Award, for Riff-Raff, 1999; Cannes Film Festival Jury Prize, for Raining Stones, 1993; Berlin Film Festival Prize of the Ecumenical Jury, for Ladybird Ladybird, 1994; British Academy Award Michael Balcon Award, 1994; Venice Film Festival Golden Lion of Career Achievement, 1994; Best Foreign ilm Cesar Award, Cannes Film Festival FIPRESCI Award, Best Film European Film Awards, for Land and Freedom, 1995; Venice Film Festival The President of the Italian Senate’s Gold Medal, Havana Film Festival Coral for Best Work of a Non-Latin American Director
Films as Director:

1967  Poor Cow (+ co-sc)
1969  Kes (+ co-sc)
1971  The Save the Children Fund Film (short);
1972  Family Life (Wednesday’s Child)
1979  Black Jack (+ sc)
1981  Looks and Smiles
1986  Fatherland (Singing the Blues in Red)
1990  Hidden Agenda; Riff-Raff

1993  Raining Stones
1994  Ladybird Ladybird
1995  Land and Freedom
1996  Carla’s Song
1998  My Name Is Joe
2000  Bread and Roses

Films for Television:

1964  Catherine; Profit by Their Example; The Whole Truth; The Diary of a Young Man
1965  Tap on the Shoulder; Wear a Very Big Hat; Three Clear Sundays; Up the Junction; The End of Arthur’s Marriage; The Coming out Party
1966  Cathy Come Home
1967  In Two Minds
1968  The Golden Vision
1969  The Big Flame; In Black and White (not transmitted)
1971  The Rank and File Film; After a Lifetime
1973  A Misfortune

on a Latin American Subject, for Carla’s Song, 1996; Leipzig DOK Festival Prize of the trade union IG Medien, Marseilles Festival of the Documentary Film Special Mention, for The Flickering Flame, 1997; British Independent Film Award Best British Director of an Independent Film, Valladolid International Film Festival Audience Award and Golden Spike, Robert Festival Best Non-American Film, Bodil Festival Best Non-American Film, for My Name Is Joe, 1998; Torino International Film Festival of Young Cinema Cipputi Carrer Award, 1998; Evening Standard British Film Award Special Award, 1999.
1976  Days of Hope (in four parts)
1977  The Price of Coal
1979  The Gamekeeper
1980  Auditions
1981  A Question of Leadership
1983  The Red and the Blue; Questions of Leadership (in four parts, not transmitted)
1984  Which Side Are You On? (+ pr)
1985  Diverse Reports: We Should Have Won
1989  Split Screen: Peace in Northern Ireland
1997  The Flickering Flame (doc)

Publications

By LOACH: articles—

Interview with M. Amiel, in Cinéma (Paris), December 1972.
“A Fidelity to the Real,” interview with Leonard Quart, in Cineaste (New York), Fall 1980.
Interview in Film Dope (London), February 1987.
Interview in Cinéma (Paris), June 1990.
Interview with Geoffroy McNab, in Sight and Sound (London), November 1994.
Interview with Marcel Meeus and Ronnie Pede, in Film en Televisie + Video (Brussels), December 1996.
Interview with Judith Waldner and Peter Krobath, in Zoom (Zürich), April 1997.

On LOACH: book—

On LOACH: articles—

*  *  *

Ken Loach is not only Britain’s most political filmmaker, he is also its most censored—and the two are not entirely unconnected. Loach’s career illustrates all too clearly the immense difficulties facing the radical filmmaker in Britain today: the broadcasting organisations’ position within the state makes them extraordinarily sensitive sites from which to tackle certain fundamental political questions (about labour relations, “national security,” or Northern Ireland, for example), while the film industry, though less subject to political interference and self-censorship, simply finds Loach’s projects too “uncommercial,” thanks to its habitually poverty-stricken state. And what other filmmaker, British or otherwise, has found one of his films the subject of vitriolic attacks by sections of his own country’s press at a major international film festival—as happened at Cannes in 1990 with Hidden Agenda?
For all the obvious political differences with Grierson, Loach is the chief standard bearer of the British cinematic tradition that started with the documentary movement in the 1930s. His quintessentially naturalistic approach was apparent even in his earliest works (in his contributions to the seminal BBC police series Z Cars, for instance) but really came to the fore with Up the Junction and Cathy Come Home. In the days when television drama was still finding its way beyond the prosenium arch and out from under the blanket of middle-brow, middle-class, literary-based classics, Cathy's portrayal of a homeless family hounded by the forces of a pitiless bureaucracy caused a sensation and led directly to the founding of the housing charity Shelter. Indeed, one critic described it as "effecting massive, visceral change in millions of viewers in a single evening." Typically, however, Loach himself has been far more circumspect, arguing that the film was socially as opposed to politically conscious, that it made people aware of a problem without giving them any indication of what they might do about it. He concludes that "ideally I should have liked Cathy to lead to the nationalisation of the building industry and home ownership. Only political action can do anything in the end"—a point of view to which he has remained faithful throughout his career.

Accordingly, in The Big Flame, The Rank and File, and the four-part series Days of Hope, Loach turned to more directly political subjects. It is in these dramas that Loach begins his project of giving voice to the politically silenced and marginalised. As he put it, "I think it's a very important function to let people speak who are usually disqualified from speaking or who've become non-persons—activists, militants, or people who really have any developed political ideas. One after the other in different industries, there have been people who've developed very coherent political analyses, who are really just excluded. They're vilified—called extremists and then put beyond the pale."

Such views made enemies across the spectrum of political ideologies but, typically, Loach's critics cloaked what were basically political objections in apparently aesthetic rhetoric. In particular, Loach was dragged into the much-rehearsed argument that the "documentary-drama" form dishonestly and misleadingly blurs the line between fact and fiction and, in particular, presents the latter as the former. Loach himself dismisses such criticisms as "ludicrous" and a "smokescreen," citing the numerous uncontroversial disintergings of Churchill, Edward VII, and others and concluding that "it's an argument that's always dragged out selectively when there's a view of history, a view of events, that the Establishment doesn't agree with—it's not really the form which worries them at all. It's such an intellectual fraud that it doesn't bear serious consideration."

Loach's work, especially Days of Hope, was also drawn into a more serious debate which raged at one time in the pages of Screen about whether films with "progressive" political content can be truly "progressive" if they utilise the allegedly outworn and ideologically dubious conventions of realism. Loach's response was to accuse such critics of "not seeing the woods for the trees. The big issue which we tried to make plain to ordinary folks who aren't film critics was that the Labour leadership had betrayed them fifty years ago and were about to do so again. That's the important thing to tell people. It surprised me that critics didn't take the political point, but a rather abstruse cinematic point. . . . Even the more serious critics always avoid confronting the content of the film and deciding if they think it is truthful. They'll skirt around it by talking about realism and the Function of Film or they'll do a little paragraph while devoting all their space to some commercial film they pretend to dislike."

With the coming of the 1980s Loach began to shift increasingly into documentary proper, abandoning dramatic devices altogether. This was partly a result of the increasing difficulty, both economic and political, that he had in making the kind of films in which he was most interested, but was also related to the advent of Thatcherism in 1979. As he himself explained, "There were things we wanted to say head on and not wrapped up in fiction, things that should be said as directly as one can say them. Thatcherism just felt so urgent that I thought that doing a fictional piece for TV, which would take a year just to get commissioned and at least another year to make, was just too slow. Documentaries can tackle things head on, and you can make them faster than dramas too—though with hindsight it's just as hard, if not harder, to get them transmitted."

Indeed, Loach had major problems with his analysis of the relationship between trade union leaders and the rank and file in A Question of Leadership and the series Questions of Leadership, the first of which was cut in order to include a final "balancing" discussion and broadcast in only one ITV region, while the second was never broadcast at all after numerous legal wrangles over alleged defamation. Similarly, Loach's coal dispute film, Which Side Are You On?, was banned by the company (London Weekend Television) which commissioned it. It was finally televised, but only after it could be "balanced" by a programme less sympathetic to the striking miners than Loach's. It says a great deal about the system of film and television programme making in Britain that one of the country's most experienced and politically conscious directors was, and remains, unable to produce a full-scale work about one of the most momentous political events in the country's recent history.

Exactly the same could be said about Loach and Northern Ireland. Revealingly, the initial idea for what was to become Hidden Agenda came from David Puttnam when he was studio boss at Columbia, after two of Loach's long-cherished Irish projects, one with the BBC and the other with Channel 4, had run aground. However, Loach has borne his treatment at the hands of the British establishment with remarkable fortitude. With his particular political outlook he would presumably be surprised if things were otherwise. Nor does he have an inflated view of the role of film and the filmmaker. As his remarks about Cathy clearly testify, Loach is a great believer in the primacy of the political. And, as he himself concludes, "filmmakers have a very soft life really, in comparison to people who have to work for a living. And so it's easy to be a radical filmmaker. The people who really are on the front line aren't filmmakers. We're in a very privileged position, very free and good wages—if you can keep working."

As Ken Loach ages, his films remain consistently provocative and politically savvy, with a deep respect for and understanding of his struggling, working class characters. Riff-Raff features a prototypical Loach hero: an unemployed blue collar worker who comes to London and lands a job on a construction site. However, the film is no dry, pedantic political tract. While it is never less than pointed in its depiction of the eternal conflict between the classes, it also is piercingly funny. Comic asides also highlight Raining Stones, an otherwise intense drama depicting the efforts of an out-of-work laborer to scrimp together funds to feed his family. He is a proud man, who will not accept charity; complications arise when he unwittingly borrows money from a loan shark to pay for his daughter's communion dress. With vivid irony, Loach graphically portrays the sense of hopelessness of honorable laborers who desire nothing more than the right to a suitable job, for suitable pay. And he offers another realistic slice-of-working-class life in My Name Is Joe, the story of a jobless alcoholic who attends AA meetings, coaches soccer, falls for a social worker, and finds himself in deep trouble while attempting to aid a recovering junkie and his dope-addicted wife.

Loach’s concerns are not solely with the male working class. Ladybird Ladybird is a trenchant, based-on-fact drama about a profoundly distressed single mother with a sad history of being exploited by men. He also is interested in the impact of history on the individual. In Land and Freedom, he abandons his usual British working-class setting to tell the story of a jobless but passionate Liverpudlian communist who treks to Barcelona during the Spanish Civil War to do battle for ‘‘land and freedom.’’ The film works best as a potent look at political idealism in the face of the reality of a heartless, brutal enemy.

A strong female character and a non-British setting unite in Carla’s Song, an unusual drama-love story. Carla’s Song is set in 1987 and opens in Glasgow, where a bus driver becomes involved with a beautiful, elusive, deeply distressed Nicaraguan refugee. Eventually, the two travel to her homeland to find her former boyfriend, who already may be a casualty of the war between the Contras and Sandanistas. While the first section is not as dramatically involving as it might be, the final part, in which the bus driver finds himself thrust into a war zone, is poignant and heartbreaking. Here are some of the film’s best scenes, which follow what happens as the driver crosses cultures and language barriers and befriends Sandanista soldiers and Nicaraguan villagers.

Unsurprisingly, Loach had difficulty finding an American distributor for Carla’s Song, and it was not released in the United States until two years after its completion. Shadow Distribution, the company that picked it up, is far from a high-profile distributor. Loach’s predicament may be linked to his film’s Nicaraguan section, which includes political rhetoric that is distinctly anti-CIA. Here, the filmmaker points out how the CIA backed the Contras in Nicaragua—and sponsored atrocities committed against the Nicaraguan people. All of this is revealed by an ex-CIA operative who underwent a crisis of conscience, and is shown to be toiling for a human rights organization.

And Loach has not completely abandoned the documentary. In 1997 he directed The Flickering Flame, the chronicle of a Liverpool dockworkers’ strike in which he spotlights the political struggles of the workers.

—Julian Petley, updated by Rob Edelman

LORENTZ, Pare

Films as Director and Scriptwriter:
1936 The Plow That Broke the Plains
1937 The River
1940 The Fight for Life
1946 Nuremberg Trials

Other Films:
1939 The City (Steiner and Van Dyke) (co-sc)

Publications

By Lorentz: books—

By LORENTZ: article—
‘‘The Narration of The River,’’ in Film Comment (New York), Spring 1965.

On LORENTZ: books—
Snyder, Robert L., Pare Lorentz and the Documentary Film, Norman, Oklahoma, 1968; republished Reno, Nevada, with new preface, 1993.

On LORENTZ: articles—
White, W.L., ‘‘Pare Lorentz,’’ in Scribner’s (New York), January 1939.
Black, C.M., ‘‘He Serves up America: Pare Lorentz,’’ in Collier’s (New York), 3 August 1940.
Van Dyke, Willard, ‘‘Letter from The River,’’ in Film Comment (New York), Spring 1965.
‘‘Conscience of the Thirties,’’ in Newsweek (New York), 5 August 1968.
In the United States it was Pare Lorentz who was in a position for leadership in relation to documentary film comparable to that of John Grierson in Britain and later in Canada. Lorentz was founding head and leader of the short-lived government program, which began in 1935, became the United States Film Service in 1938, and ended in 1940. He established American precedent for the government use of documentaries, which would be continued during World War II (by the Armed Forces and the Office of War Information) and afterwards (by the United States Information Agency, now International Communication Agency). From Lorentz’s efforts five large and important documentaries, which would be continued during World War II (by the United States Film Service) and afterwards (by the United States Information Agency, now International Communication Agency). From Lorentz’s efforts five large and important films resulted, the first three of which he directed: The Plow That Broke the Plains, The River, The Fight for Life, Power and the Land (directed by Joris Ivens), and The Land (directed by Robert Flaherty).

In The Plow That Broke the Plains and The River, Lorentz developed an original, personal style of documentary that also became a national style. In his two mosaic patterns of sight (carefully composed images shot silent) and sound (symphonic music, spoken words, noises), no one element says much by itself. Together they offer form and content that resemble epic poems. They seem close to the attitudes of American populism and are rooted in frontier tradition. The sweeping views of a big country, the free verse commentaries with their chanted litany of place names and allusions to historic events, make one think of Walt Whitman. The use of music is quite special, with composer Virgil Thomson sharing more fully than usual in the filmmaking process; a sort of operatic balance is achieved between the musical score and the other elements. Thomson made his scores for these two films into concert suites which have become part of the standard orchestral repertoire.

In The Fight for Life, Lorentz is much less sure in his control of its narrative form than he was of the poetic form of the two preceding films. He seems to have been much more comfortable with landscape and rivers than with people. Fight for Life is about the work of the Chicago Maternity Center delivering babies among the impoverished. It is an interesting film, if curiously flawed by melodramatic excesses. It is important in its innovations and might be regarded as a prototype for the postwar Hollywood semi-documentaries; for example, The House on 92nd Street, Boomerang, Call Northside 777. In contributing two lasting masterpieces to the history of documentary—The Plow and, especially, The River—Lorentz joins a very select company of the artists of documentary. (Flaherty and Jennings would be other members of that company.) Some would argue that The River is the finest American documentary to date—aesthetically and in terms of expressing aspects of the American spirit.

However, Lorentz had major limitations, politically, if not artistically. First, he relied on the impermanent partisan backing of the party in power. Lorentz had the support of President Franklin Roosevelt and the films were associated with Democratic policies. When the balance in Congress shifted to Republican in 1940, the United States Film Service was not allowed to continue. Second, even within the New Deal context Lorentz opted for a few big films sponsored by agencies related to one department (four of the five films were on agricultural subjects), rather than many smaller films from various departments that would have broadened the base of sponsorship and made for a steady flow of film communication. Third, he was creating art at public expense—making personal films à la Flaherty—with no real commitment to public service. (Lorentz disliked the term documentary and considered much of Grierson’s work in England too school-teacherish; instead Lorentz was trying to create, he said, “films of merit.”) Finally, Lorentz remained aloof in Washington. He made no efforts to seek sponsorship for documentary filmmaking outside the government; he had no real connection with the New York City filmmakers responsible for the nongovernmental documentaries of the 1930s (though some of them had worked with him on the government films).

However one chooses to look at the matter, it would be generally agreed that documentary in the United States remained a nonmovement of individual rivalries, competitiveness, and political differences. The closing down of the U.S. Film Service proved a great waste. Shortly after its demise the United States entered World War II and government filmmaking on a vast scale had to be started from scratch. It was the Hollywood filmmakers, without documentary experience, who assumed leadership in the wartime government production. Lorentz spent the war making films as guides to navigation for the U.S. Air Corps. His film on the Nuremberg war-crimes trials became his last, as he chose to work instead mainly as a “film consultant.”

—Jack C. Ellis

LOSEY, Joseph

Films as Director:

1939 Pete Roleum and His Cousins (short) (+ p, sc)
1941 A Child Went Forth (short) (+ co-p, sc); Youth Gets a Break (short) (+ sc)
Joseph Losey

1945  A Gun in His Hand (short)
1949  The Boy with Green Hair
1950  The Lawless
1951  The Prowler; M; The Big Night (+ co-sc)
1952  Stranger on the Prowl (Encounter) (d as “Andrea Forzano”)
1954  The Sleeping Tiger (d as “Victor Hanbury”)
1955  A Man on the Beach
1956  The Intimate Stranger (Finger of Guilt) (d as “Joseph Walton”)
1957  Time without Pity
1958  The Gypsy and the Gentleman
1959  Blind Date (Chance Meeting)
1960  The Criminal (The Concrete Jungle)
1962  Eve
1963  The Damned (These Are the Damned); The Servant (+ co-p)
1964  King and Country (+ co-p)
1966  Modesty Blaise
1967  Accident (+ co-p)
1968  Boom!; Secret Ceremony
1970  Figures in a Landscape; The Go-Between 1972  The Assassination of Trotsky (+ co-p)
1973  A Doll’s House
1975  Galileo (+ co-sc); The Romantic Englishwoman
1977  Mr. Klein
1979  Don Giovanni
1982  The Trout
1985  Steaming

Publications

By LOSEY: books—

By LOSEY: articles—

Interview with Penelope Houston and John Gillett, in Sight and Sound (London), Autumn 1961.

“Speak, Think, Stand Up,” in Film Culture (New York), Fall/Winter 1970.

Interview with Allen Eyles, in Stills (London), May 1985.

On LOSEY: books—

On LOSEY: articles—

Ross, T.J., “Notes on an Early Losey,” in Film Culture (New York), Spring 1966.

Houston, B., and Marcia Kinder, “The Losey-Pinter Collaboration,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Fall 1978.

“Losey Section” of Positif (Paris), July/August 1985.

* * *

Joseph Losey’s career spanned five decades and included work in both theater and film. Latterly an American expatriate living in Europe, the early years of his life as a director were spent in the very different milieus of New Deal political theater projects and the paranoia of the Hollywood studio system during the McCarthy era. He was blacklisted in 1951 and left America for England where he continued making films, at first under a variety of pseudonyms. His work is both controversial and critically acclaimed, and Losey has long been recognized as a director with a distinctive and highly personal cinematic style.

Although Losey rarely wrote his own screenplays, preferring instead to work closely with other authors, there are nevertheless several distinct thematic concerns which recur throughout his work. It is his emphasis on human interaction and the complexity of interior thought and emotion that makes a Losey film an intellectual challenge, and his interest has always lain with detailed character studies rather than with so-called “action” pictures. Losey’s domain is interior action and his depiction of the physical world centers on those events which are an outgrowth or reflection of his characters’ inner lives. From The Boy with Green Hair to The Trout, his films focus on individuals and their relationships to themselves, to those around them, and to their society as a whole.

One of Losey’s frequent subjects is the intruder who enters a pre-existing situation and irrevocably alters its patterns. In his earlier films, this situation often takes the form of a community reacting with violence to an individual its members perceive as a threat. The “boy with green hair” is ostracized and finally forced to shave his head by the inhabitants of the town in which he lives; the young Mexican-American in The Lawless becomes the object of a vicious manhunt after a racially motivated fight; and the child-murderer in Losey’s 1951 version of M inspires a lynch mob mentality in the community he has been terrorizing. In each of these cases, the social outsider who, for good or evil, does not conform to the standards of the community evokes a response of mass rage and suspicion. And as the members of the group forsake their individuality and rational behavior in favor of mob rule, they also forfeit any hope of future self-deception regarding their own capacity for unthinking brutality.

In Losey’s later films, the scope of the “intruder” theme is often narrowed to explore the effect of a newcomer on the relationship of a husband and wife. The Sleeping Tiger, Eve, Accident, The Romantic Englishwoman, and The Trout all feature married couples whose lives are disrupted and whose relationships are shattered or redefined by the arrival of a third figure. In each of these films, either the husband or the wife is strongly attracted to the outsider. In The Sleeping Tiger, Eve, and The Trout, this attraction leads to tragedy and death for one of the partners, while the couples in Accident and The Romantic Englishwoman are forced to confront a serious rift in a seemingly untroubled relationship. A further level of conflict is added by the fact that the intruder in all of the films is either of a different social class (The Sleeping Tiger, Eve, The Trout) or a different nationality (Accident, The Romantic Englishwoman) than the couple, representing not only a sexual threat but a threat to the bourgeois status quo as well.

This underlying theme of class conflict is one which runs throughout Losey’s work, emerging as an essential part of the framework of films as different as The Lawless, The Servant, and The Go-Between. Losey’s consistent use of film as a means of social criticism has its roots in his theatrical work of the 1930s and his association with Bertolt Brecht. The two collaborated on the 1947 staging of Brecht’s Galileo Galilei, starring Charles Laughton—a play which twenty-seven years later Losey would bring to the screen—and Brecht’s influence on Losey’s own career is enormous. In addition to his interest in utilizing film as an expression of social and political opinions, Losey has adapted many of Brecht’s theatrical devices to the medium as well. The sense of distance and reserve in Brechtian theatre is a keynote to Losey’s filmic style, and Brecht’s use of a heightened dramatic reality is also present in Losey’s work. The characters in a Losey film are very much of the “real” world, but their depiction is never achieved through a documentary-style approach. We are always aware that it is a drama that is unfolding, as Losey makes use of carefully chosen music on the soundtrack, or photography that borders on expressionism, or deliberately evokes an atmosphere of memory to comment on the characters and their state of mind. It is this approach to the intellect rather than the emotions of the viewer that ties Losey’s work so closely to Brecht.

Losey’s films are also an examination of illusion and reality, with the true nature of people or events often bearing little resemblance to their outer appearances. The friendly community that gives way to mob violence, the “happy” marriage that unravels when one thread is plucked; these images of actual versus surface reality abound in Losey’s work. One aspect of this theme manifests itself in Losey’s fascination with characters who discover themselves through a relationship which poses a potential threat to their position in society. Tyvian, in Eve, can only acknowledge through his affair with a high-class prostitute that his fame as a writer is actually the result of plagiarism, while Marian, in The Go-Between, finds her true sexual nature, which her class and breeding urge her to repress, in her affair with a local farmer.

Several of Losey’s films carry this theme a step further, offering characters who find their own sense of identity becoming inextricably bound up in someone else. In The Servant, the complex, enigmatic relationship between Tony and his manservant, Barrett, becomes both a class struggle and a battle of wills as the idle young aristocrat slowly loses control of his life to the ambitious Barrett. This is an idea Losey pursues in both Secret Ceremony and Mr. Klein. In the former, a wealthy, unbalanced young girl draws a prostitute into a destructive fantasy in which the two are mother and daughter, and the prostitute finds her initial desire for money becoming a desperate need to believe the fantasy. Alain Delon in Mr. Klein portrays a man in occupied France who becomes obsessed with finding a hunted Jew who shares his name. At the film’s conclusion, he boards a train bound for the death camps rather than abandon his search, in effect becoming the other Mr. Klein. Losey emphasizes his characters’ identity confusion cinematically, frequently showing them reflected in mirrors, their images fragmented, prism-like, or only partially revealed.

Losey’s choice of subject led to his successful collaboration with playwright Harold Pinter on The Servant, Accident, and The Go-Between, and Losey once hoped to film Pinter’s screenplay of Proust’s Remembrance of Things Past. Their parallel dramatic interests served both men well, and their work together is among the finest in their careers. Yet if Losey found his most nearly perfect voice in Pinter’s screenplays, his films with a wide variety of other writers have still resulted in a body of work remarkably consistent in theme and purpose. His absorbing, sometimes difficult films represent a unique and uncompromising approach to cinema, and guarantee Losey’s place among the world’s most intriguing directors.

—Janet E. Lorenz

LUBITSCH, Ernst

Nationality: German/American. Born: Berlin, 28 January 1892; became U.S. citizen, 1936. Education: Attended the Sophien Gymnasium. Family: Married 1) Irni (Helene) Kraus, 1922 (divorced 1930); 2) Sania Bezencenet (Vivian Gaye), 1935 (divorced 1943), one daughter. Career: Taken into Max Reinhardt Theater Company, 1911; actor, writer, then director of short films, from 1913; member of Ernst Lubitsch

Films as Director:

1914 Fräulein Seifenschaum (+ role); Blindkuh (+ role); Aufs Eis geführt (+ role)
1915 Zucker und Zimt (co-d, co-sc, role)
1916 Wo ist mein Schatz? (+ role); Schuhpalast Pinkus (+ role as Sally Pinkus); Der gemischte Frauenchor (+ role); Der G.m.b.H. Tenor (+ role); Der Krafteimer (+ role); Leutnant auf Befehl (+ role); Das schönste Geschenk (+ role); Seine neue Nase (+ role)
1917 Wenn vier dasselbe Tun (+ co-sc, role); Der Blusenkönig (+ role); *Ossis Tagebuch
1918 Prinz Sani (+ role); Ein fideles Gefängnis; Der Fall Rosentopf (+ role); Der Rodelkavalier (+ co-sc); Die Augen der Mumie Mä; Das Müdel vom Ballett; *Carmen
1919 Meine Frau, die Filmschauspielerin; Meyer aus Berlin (+ role as apprentice); Das Schwabemädle; Die Austernprinzessin; Rausch; Madame DuBarry; Der lustige Ehemann (+ sc); Die Puppe (+ co-sc)
1920 Ich möchte kein Mann sein! (+ co-sc); Kohlhiesels Töchter (+ co-sc); Romeo und Julia im Schnee (+ co-sc); Sumurun (+ co-sc); *Anna Boleyn
1921 Die Bergkatze (+ co-sc)
1922 *Das Weib des Pharao
1923 *Die Flamme; Rosita
1924 The Marriage Circle; Three Women; Forbidden Paradise (+ co-sc)
1925 Kiss Me Again (+ pr); Lady Windermere’s Fan (+ pr)
1926 So This Is Paris (+ pr)
1927 The Student Prince in Old Heidelberg (+ pr)
1928 The Patriot (+ pr)
1929 Eternal Love (+ pr); The Love Parade (+ pr)
1930 Paramount on Parade (anthology film); Monte Carlo (+ pr)
1931 The Smiling Lieutenant (+ pr)
1932 The Man I Killed (Broken Lullaby) (+ pr); One Hour with You (+ pr); Trouble in Paradise (+ pr); If I Had a Million (anthology film)
1933 Design for Living (+ pr)
1934 The Merry Widow (+ pr)
1936 Desire (co-d, pr)
1937 Angel (+ pr)
1938 Bluebeard’s Eighth Wife (+ pr)
1939 Ninotchka (+ pr)
1940 The Shop around the Corner (+ pr)
1941 That Uncertain Feeling (+ co-pr)
1942 To Be or Not to Be (co-source, co-pr)
1943 Heaven Can Wait (+ pr)
1946 Cluny Brown (+ pr)
1948 That Lady in Ermine (co-d)

Other Films:

1913 Meyer auf der Alm (role as Meyer)
1914 Die Firma Heiratet (Wilhelm) (role as Moritz Abramowski); Der Stolz, der Firma (Wilhelm) (role as Siegmund Lachmann); Fräulein Piccolo (Hofer) (role); Arne Marie (Mack) (role); Bedingung—Kein Anhang! (Rye) (role); Die Ideale Gattin (role); Meyer als Soldat (role as Meyer)
1915 Robert und Bertram (Mack) (role); Wie Ich Ermordert Wurde (Ralph) (role); Der Schwarze Moritz (Taufstein and Berg) (role); Doktor Satansohn (Edel) (role as Dr. Satansohn); Hans Tratz im Schlaraffenland (Wegener) (role as Devil)

Publications

By LUBITSCH: articles—

“American Cinematographers Superior Artists,’” in American Cinematographer (Los Angeles), December 1923.

“Concerning Cinematography . . . as Told to William Stull,” in American Cinematographer (Los Angeles), November 1929.

“Lubitsch’s Analysis of Pictures Minimizes Director’s Importance,” in Variety (New York), 1 March 1932.

Letter to Herman Weinberg (10 July 1947), in Film Culture (New York), Summer 1962.

On LUBITSCH: books—

Ernst Lubitsch's varied career is often broken down into periods to emphasize the spectrum of his talents—from an actor in Max Reinhardt's Berlin Theater Company to head of production at Paramount. Each of these periods could well provide enough material for a sizeable book. It is probably most convenient to divide Lubitsch's output into three phases: his German films between 1913 and 1922; his Hollywood films from 1923 to 1934; and his Hollywood productions from 1935 till his death in 1947.

During the first half of Lubitsch's filmmaking decade in Germany he completed about nineteen shorts. They were predominantly ethnic slapsticks in which he played a "Dummkopf" character by the name of Meyer. Only three of these one- to five-reelers still exist. He directed eighteen more films during his last five years in Germany, of Meyer. Only three of these one- to five-reelers still exist. He directed eighteen more films during his last five years in Germany, and the concerns of his Hollywood works—and epic costume dramas. Pola Negri starred in most of these historical spectacles, and the quality of Lubitsch's productions brought them both international acclaim. Their Madame Dubarry (retitled Passion in the United States) was not only one of the films responsible for breaking the American blockade on imported German films after World War I, but it also began the "invasion" of Hollywood by German talent.

Lubitsch came to Hollywood at Mary Pickford's invitation. He had hoped to direct her in Faust, but they finally agreed upon Rosita, a costume romance very similar to those he had done in Germany. After joining Warner Brothers, he directed five films that firmly established his thematic interests. The films were small in scale, dealt openly with sexual and psychological relationships in and out of marriage, refrained from offering conventional moral judgments, and demystified women. As Molly Haskell and Marjorie Rosen point out, Lubitsch created complex female characters who were aggressive, unsentimental, and able to express their sexual desires without constraint. As Nancy Holtz points out, Lubitsch also established a thematic concern for the "urban woman" who is, in her words, "in a paradoxical position, only partly a woman, and partly a man."
suffering the usual pains of banishment or death. Even though Lubitsch provided a new and healthy perspective on sex and increased America’s understanding of a woman’s role in society, he did so only in a superficial way. His women ultimately affirmed the status quo. America’s understanding of a woman’s role in society, he did so only

Lubitsch provided a new and healthy perspective on sex and increased

The late 1920s were years of turmoil as every studio tried to adapt to sound recording. Lubitsch, apparently, was not troubled at all; he considered the sound booths nothing more than an inconvenience, something readily overcome. Seven of his ten films from 1929 to 1934 were musicals, but not of the proscenium-bound “all-singing, all-dancing” variety. Musicals were produced with such prolific abandon during this time (what better way to exploit the new technology?) that the public began avoiding them. Film histories tend to view the period from 1930 to 1933 as a musical void, yet it was the precise time that Lubitsch was making significant contributions to the genre. As Arthur Knight notes, “He was the first to be concerned with the ‘natural’ introduction of songs into the development of a musical-comedy plot.” Starting with The Love Parade, Lubitsch eliminated the staginess that was characteristic of most musicals by employing a moving camera, clever editing, and the judicial use of integrated musical performance, and in doing so constructed a seminal film musical format.

In 1932 Lubitsch directed his first non-musical sound comedy, Trouble in Paradise. Most critics consider this film to be, if not his best, then at least the complete embodiment of everything that has been associated with Lubitsch: sparkling dialogue, interesting plots, witty and sophisticated characters, and an air of urbanity—all part of the well-known “Lubitsch Touch.” What constitutes the “Lubitsch Touch” is open to continual debate, the majority of the definitions being couched in poetic terms of idolization. Andrew Sarris comments that the “Lubitsch Touch” is a counterpoint of poignant sadness during a film’s gayest moments. Leland A. Poague sees Lubitsch’s style as being gracefully charming and fluid, with an “ingenious ability to suggest more than he showed. . . .” Observations like this last one earned Lubitsch the unfortunate moniker of “director of doors,” since a number of his jokes relied on what unseen activity was being implied behind a closed door.

Regardless of which romantic description one chooses, the “Lubitsch Touch” can be most concretely seen as deriving from a standard narrative device of the silent film: interrupting the dramatic interchange by focusing on objects or small details that make a witty comment on or surprising revelation about the main action. Whatever the explanation, Lubitsch’s style was exceptionally popular with critics and audiences alike. Ten years after arriving in the United States he had directed eighteen features, parts of two anthologies, and was recognized as one of Hollywood’s top directors.

Lubitsch’s final phase began when he was appointed head of production at Paramount in 1935, a position that lasted only one year. Accustomed to pouring all his energies into one project at a time, he was ineffective juggling numerous projects simultaneously. Accused of being out of step with the times, Lubitsch updated his themes in his first political satire, Ninotchka, today probably his most famous film. He continued using parody and satire in his blackest comedy, To Be or Not to Be, a film well liked by his contemporaries, and today receiving much reinvestigation. If Lubitsch’s greatest talent was his ability to make us laugh at the most serious events and anxieties, to use comedy to make us more aware of ourselves, then To Be or Not to Be might be considered the consummate work of his career.

Lubitsch, whom Gerald Mast terms the greatest technician in American cinema after Griffith, completed only two more films. At his funeral in 1947, Mervyn LeRoy presented a fitting eulogy: “he advanced the techniques of screen comedy as no one else has ever done. Suddenly the pratfall and the double-take were left behind and the sources of deep inner laughter were tapped.”

—Greg S. Faller

LUCAS, George

THX-1138, 1971; established special effects company, Industrial Light and Magic, at San Rafael, California, 1976; formed production company Lucasfilm, Ltd., 1979; founded post production company Sprocket Systems, 1980; built Skywalker Ranch, then executive producer for Disneyland’s 3-D music space adventure, Captain EO, 1980s. Awards: Locarno International Film Festival Bronze Leopard Award, and National Society of Film Critics Awards, U.S.A., NSFC Award for Best Screenplay, and New York Film Critics Circle Awards, NYFCC Award for Best Screenplay (with Gloria Katz and Willard Huyck) for American Graffiti, 1973; ShoWest Convention Showest Award for Director of the Year, 1978; Academy Awards Irving G. Thalberg Memorial Award, 1992. Address: c/o Lucasfilm, Ltd., P.O. Box 2009, San Rafael, California 94912, U.S.A.

Films as Director and Scriptwriter:

(Short student films)

1965–67 Look at Life; Freiheit, 1.42.08; Herbie (co-d); Anyone Lived in a Pretty How Town (co-sc); 6.18.67 (doc); The Emperor (doc); THX 1138:4EB

1968 Filmmaker (doc)

(Feature films)

1971 THX 1138 (co-sc, ed)
1973 American Graffiti (co-sc)
1977 Star Wars (+ exec pr)
1999 Star Wars: Episode I—The Phantom Menace (+sc, exec pr)
2002 Star Wars: Episode II (+sc, exec pr)
2005 Star Wars: Episode III (+sc, pr)

Films as Executive Producer:

1979 More American Graffiti (Norton) (+ story)
1980 The Empire Strikes Back (Kershner) (+ story); Kagemusha (The Shadow Warrior) (Kurosawa) (of int’l version)
1981 Raiders of the Lost Ark (Spielberg) (+ story); Body Heat (Kasdan) (uncredited)
1982 Twice upon a Time (Korty and Swenson)
1983 Return of the Jedi (Marquand) (+ co-sc, story)
1984 Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom (Spielberg) (+ story)
1985 Mishima (Schrader)
1986 Howard the Duck (Huyck); Labyrinth (Henson); Captain EO (Coppola) (+ sc)
1988 Willow (Howard) (+ story); Tucker: The Man and His Dream (Coppola); The Land before Time
1989 Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade (Spielberg) (+ story)
1994 Radioland Murders (Mel Smith) (+ story)

Publications

By LUCAS: books—

George Lucas: Interviews (Conversations with Filmmakers Series), edited by Sally Kline, Mississippi, 1999.

By LUCAS: articles—

“THX-1138,” in American Cinematographer (Los Angeles), October 1971.

Interview with Audie Bock, in Take One (Montreal), no. 6, 1979.

Interview with M. Tuchman and A. Thompson, in Film Comment (New York), July/August 1981.

“30 Minutes with the Godfather of Digital Camera,” interview with Don Shay, in Cinefex (Riverside), March 1996.

Interview with Anne Thompson, in Premiere (New York), May 1999.

On LUCAS: books—

White, Dana, George Lucas, Toronto, 1999.

On LUCAS: articles—

Farber, Steven, “George Lucas: The Stinky Kid Hits the Big Time,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1974.

“Behind the Scenes of Star Wars,” in American Cinematographer (Los Angeles), July 1977.

Star Wars Section of Variety (New York), 3 June 1987.

Uram, S., “Use the Force, Lucas,” in Cinefantastique (Forest Park), no. 6, 1996.

* * *

In whatever capacity George Lucas works—director, writer, producer—the films in which he is involved are a mixture of the familiar and the fantastic. Thematically, Lucas’s work is often familiar, but the presentation of the material usually carries his unique mark. His earliest commercial science-fiction film, THX 1138, is not very different in plot from previous stories of futuristic totalitarian societies in which humans are subordinate to technology. What is distinctive about the film is its visual impact. The extreme close-ups, bleak sets, and crowds of “properly sedated” shaven-headed people moving mechanically through hallways effectively produce the physical environment of this cold, well-ordered society. The endless whiteness of the vast detention center without bars could not be more oppressive.

Although not a special effects film, American Graffiti, Lucas’s second feature, does show his attention to detail and his interest in archetypal themes. Within the 24-hour period of the film, the heroic potential is brought forth from within the main characters, either through courageous action or the making of courageous decisions. The film captures America on the verge of transition from the 1950s to the brave new world of the 1960s. Lucas does this visually by recreating the 1950s on screen down to the smallest detail, but he also communicates through his characters the feeling that their lives will never be the same again.

The combination of convention, archetype, and fantasy comes together fully in Lucas’s subsequent films—the Star Wars and Indiana Jones series. On one level the Star Wars saga is a fairy tale set in outer space, as suggested in the opening title: “A long time ago in a galaxy far, far away...” The basic plot conventions of the fairy tale are present: a princess in distress, a powerful evil ruler, and courageous knights. The saga is also a tale of the emergence of the hero within and the quest by which individuals realize their true selves, for the princess is really a Shaman, the evil ruler a self divided in need of healing, and the knights latent heroes who do not realize themselves as such at the beginning of the tale.

Scenes, especially from Star Wars and The Empire Strikes Back, look and sound like Flash Gordon episodes. Members of the Empire—the Emperor, Darth Vader, the storm troopers—are an easily identifiable evil in their dark, drab clothing and cloaked or helmeted faces. Their movements are accompanied by a menacing, martial film score of the type that ushered Ming the Merciless on screen. Another reference that associates the Empire with a great evil is that the storm troopers in several scenes resemble the rows of assembled storm troopers on review in Triumph of the Will. In contrast to these images of darkness, the rebel forces and their habitats are colorful and full of life.

The Star Wars saga is also very much science fiction. The special effects developed to realize Lucas’s futuristic vision brought about technological advances in motion picture photography. The workshop formed for the production of Star Wars, Industrial Light and Magic, continues on as an independent special effects production company. While working on Star Wars, John Dykstra developed the Dykstraflex camera, for which he received an Academy Award. The camera was used in conjunction with a computer to achieve the accuracy necessary in photographing multiple-exposure visual effects. Another advancement in motion-control photography was developed for The Empire Strikes Back—Brian Edlund’s Empireflex camera.

Lucas and Steven Spielberg then set out to make a film based on the romantic action/adventure movies of the 1940s. The successful result was Raiders of the Lost Ark. Indiana Jones, based on the rough-edged, worldly wise screen heroes of those earlier adventure films, is set to such mythic tasks as the quest for the Ark of the Covenant and the quest for the Holy Grail. Jones’s enemies on these quests (which occur in the first and the last films of the series), the Nazis, are representatives of the dark side of this universe and carry legendary status of their own. As in the Star Wars saga, the main characters, including the extraordinary Indiana, face challenges that will bring forth qualities and strengths they had not yet realized. The dialogue in Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade especially emphasizes the theme of the hero within. At one point the senior Jones tells Indiana that “The search for the cup of Christ is the search for the divine in all of us”; later in the film Indiana is challenged to look within himself by the enemy as he is told, “It’s time to ask yourself what you believe.”

Radioland Murders is set in the world of live radio broadcasts of the late 1930s. All the conventional character types are here—from the inept director and his highly competent assistant to the golden-voiced booth announcer to the ever-creative sound-effects man. This romantic comedy/murder mystery was directed by Mel Smith, produced by Lucas, and based on an original story by Lucas. The narrative contains all the heroic challenges to spirit and character of more epic films condensed into a much smaller space and a much shorter time period. The action takes place within a few prime-time hours as a new radio network premieres. The broadcast carries on to a successful completion in spite of the murders of cast and crew, the police investigation, set breakdowns, and ego clashes. This universe of carefully contained chaos sometimes appears to be on the verge of spinning out of control, but it never does. The narrative, the broadcast, and the main characters persevere to the finish.

In 1999, Lucas returned to directing with the first film in the Star Wars saga, Episode I—The Phantom Menace, which he also scripted. The film contains all the Lucas hallmarks, but he was perhaps ill-advised to take on the project himself. The prequel lacks much of the subtlety of Star Wars: Episode IV—A New Hope, the only other film in the sequence he has so far directed, and was nominated in 2000 for ‘‘Razzie’’ awards for Worst Direction and Worst Screenplay. Such is Lucas’s following, however, that Phantom Menace became the third-highest grossing movie of all time, and Lucas has announced his intention to make at least two further episodes. The simple story of a conflict between good and evil (essentially left over from the classic Western) continues to be carried by impressive special effects, but it remains to be seen how long general audiences will remain satisfied by a moral structure indicated by the color of the protagonists’ clothing.

Lucas’s films are self-conscious about genre conventions and often refer back to earlier films. Also familiar in his work are the archetypal figures from myths and legends. At the same time, the films are fantastic and unfamiliar, filled with strange creatures and exotic settings. However, the narrative weaknesses of Phantom Menace suggest he is somewhat less adept with the processes of storytelling than with realizing ambitious action sequences and inventive special effects.

—Marie Saeli, updated by Chris Routledge

LUMET, Sidney

Nationality: American. Born: Philadelphia, 25 June 1924. Education: Professional Children’s School, New York; Columbia University extension school. Military Service: Served in Signal Corps, U.S. Army, 1942–46. Family: Married 1) Rita Gam (divorced); 2) Gloria Vanderbilt, 1956 (divorced, 1963); 3) Gail Jones, 1963 (divorced, 1978); 4) Mary Gimbel, 1980; two daughters. Career: Acting debut in Yiddish Theatre production, New York, 1928; Broadway debut in Dead End, 1935; film actor, from 1939; stage director, off-Broadway, from 1947; assistant director, then director, for TV, from 1950. Awards: Directors Guild Awards, for Twelve Angry Men, 1957, and Long Day’s Journey into Night, 1962; D.W. Griffith Award of the Directors Guild of America, 1993. Address: c/o LAH Film Corporation, 1775 Broadway, New York, NY 10019, U.S.A.

Films as Director:

1957  Twelve Angry Men
1958  Stage Struck
1959  That Kind of Woman
1960  The Fugitive Kind

1962  A View from the Bridge; Long Day’s Journey into Night
1964  Fail Safe
1965  Pawnbroker; Up from the Beach; The Hill
1966  The Group (+ pr)
1967  The Deadly Affair (+ pr)
1968  Bye Bye Braverman (+ pr); The Seagull (+ pr)
1969  Blood Kin (doc) (co-d, co-pr)
1970  King: A Filmed Record . . . Montgomery to Memphis (doc) (co-d, co-pr); The Appointment; The Last of the Mobile Hot Shots
1971  The Anderson Tapes
1972  Child’s Play
1973  The Oﬀense; Serpico
1974  Lovin’ Molly; Murder on the Orient Express
1975  Dog Day Afternoon
1977  Equus; Network
1978  The Wiz
1980  Just Tell Me What You Want (+ pr)
1981  Prince of the City
1982  Deathtrap; The Verdict
1983  Daniel
1984  Garbo Talks
1986  Power; The Morning After
1988  Running on Empty
1989  Family Business
1990  Q & A (+ sc)
1992  A Stranger among Us
1993  Guilty as Sin
1997 Night Falls on Manhattan (+ sc); Critical Care (+ pr)
1999 Gloria
2000 Whistle

Other Films:
1939 One Third of a Nation (Murphy) (role as Joey Rogers)
1940 Journey to Jerusalem (role as youthful Jesus)
1990 Listen Up! The Lives of Quincy Jones (role)

Publications
By LUMET: book—

By LUMET: articles—
Interview with Peter Bogdanovich, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Winter 1960.
Interview with Luciano Dale, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Fall 1971.
Interviews with Gordon Gow, in Films and Filming (London), May 1975 and May 1978.
Interview with Dan Yakir, in Film Comment (New York), December 1978.
Interview with Michel Ciment and O. Eyquem, in Positif (Paris), February 1982.
Interview with M. Burke, in Stills (London), February 1987.
“Sidney Lumet: Lion on the Left,” an interview with G. Smith, in Film Comment (New York), July/August 1988.
“That’s the Way It Happens,” an interview with Gavin Smith, in Film Comment (New York), September/October 1992.
Interview with Heike-Melba Fendel, in EPD Film (Frankfurt), May 1993.

On LUMET: books—

On LUMET: articles—
Sidney Lumet Section of Cinémato graphe (Paris), January 1982.
“TV to Film: A History, a Map, and a Family Tree,” in Monthly Film Bulletin (London), February 1983.
Wickbom, Kaj, in Filmrutan (Sundsvall), Winter 1998.

* * *

Although Sidney Lumet has applied his talents to a variety of genres (drama, comedy, satire, caper, romance, and even a musical), he has proven himself most comfortable and effective as a director of serious psychodramas and was most vulnerable when attempting light entertainments. His Academy Award nominations, for example, have all been for character studies of men in crisis, from his first film, Twelve Angry Men, to The Verdict. Lumet was, literally, a child of the drama. At the age of four he was appearing in productions of the highly popular and acclaimed Yiddish Theatre in New York. He continued to act for the next two decades but increasingly gravitated toward directing. At twenty-six he was offered a position as an assistant director with CBS television. Along with John Frankenheimer, Robert Mulligan, Martin Ritt, Delbert Mann, George Roy Hill, Franklin Schaffner, and others, Lumet quickly won recognition as a competent and reliable director in a medium where many faltered under the pressures of producing live programs. It was in this environment that Lumet learned many of the skills that would serve him so well in his subsequent career in films: working closely with performers, rapid preparation for production, and working within tight schedules and budgets.

Because the quality of many of the television dramas was so impressive, several of them were adapted as motion pictures. Reginald Rose’s Twelve Angry Men brought Lumet to the cinema. Although Lumet did not direct the television production, his expertise made him the ideal director for this low-budget film venture.
Twelve Angry Men was an auspicious beginning for Lumet. It was a critical and commercial success and established Lumet as a director skilled at adapting theatrical properties to motion pictures. Fully half of Lumet’s complement of films have originated in the theater. Another precedent set by Twelve Angry Men was Lumet’s career-long disdain for Hollywood.

Lumet prefers to work in contemporary urban settings, especially New York. Within this context, Lumet is consistently attracted to situations in which crime provides the occasion for a group of characters to come together. Typically these characters are caught in a vortex of events they can neither understand nor control but which they must work to resolve.

Twelve Angry Men explores the interaction of a group of jurors debating the innocence or guilt of a man being tried for murder; The Hill concerns a rough group of military men who have been sentenced to prison; The Deadly Affair involves espionage in Britain; The Anderson Tapes revolves around the robbery of a luxury apartment building; Child’s Play, about murder at a boy’s school, conveys an almost supernatural atmosphere of menace; Murder on the Orient Express, Dog Day Afternoon, and The Verdict all involve attempts to find the solution to a crime, while Serpico and Prince of the City are probing examinations of men who have rejected graft practices as police officers.

Lumet’s protagonists tend to be isolated, unexceptional men who oppose a group or institution. Whether the protagonist is a member of a jury or party to a bungled robbery, he follows his instincts and intuition in an effort to find solutions. Lumet’s most important criterion is not whether the actions of these men are right or wrong but whether the actions are genuine. If these actions are justified by the individual’s conscience, this gives his heroes uncommon strength and courage to endure the pressures, abuses, and injustices of others. Frank Serpico, for example, is the quintessential Lumet hero in his defiance of peer group authority and the assertion of his own code of moral values.

Nearly all the characters in Lumet’s gallery are driven by obsessions or passions that range from the pursuit of justice, honesty, and truth to the clutches of jealousy, memory, or guilt. It is not so much the object of their fixations but the obsessive condition itself that intrigues Lumet. In films like The Fugitive Kind, A View from the Bridge, Long Day’s Journey into Night, The Pawnbroker, The Seagull, The Appointment, The Offense, Lovin’ Molly, Network, Just Tell Me What You Want, and many of the others, the protagonists, as a result of their complex fixations, are lonely, often disillusioned individuals. Consequently, most of Lumet’s central characters are not likable or pleasant, and sometimes not admirable figures. And, typically, their fixations result in tragic or unhappy consequences.

Lumet’s fortunes have been up and down at the box office. One explanation seems to be his own fixation with uncompromising studies of men in crisis. His most intense characters present a grim vision of idealists broken by realities. From Val in A View from the Bridge and Sol Nazerman in The Pawnbroker to Danny Ciello in Prince of the City, Lumet’s introspective characters seek to penetrate the deepest regions of the psyche.

Lumet’s recently published memoir about his life in film, Making Movies, is extremely lighthearted and infectious in its enthusiasm for the craft of moviemaking itself. This stands in marked contrast to the tone and style of most of his films. Perhaps Lumet’s signature as a director is his work with actors—and his exceptional ability to draw high-quality, sometimes extraordinary performances from even the most unexpected quarters: Melanie Griffith’s believable undercover policewoman in A Stranger among Us and Don Johnson’s smooth-talking sociopath in Guilty as Sin. These two latest examples of the “Lumet touch” with actors demonstrate that he has not lost it.

—Stephen E. Bowles, updated by John McCarty

LUMIÈRE, Louis

Louis Lumière
Films as Director:

1896–1897  Inauguration de l’Exposition universelle
1894 or 95  La Sortie des usines
1896–97  La Sortie des usines

1896–97  Directed about 60 films and produced about 2000, mostly documentaries

Lumière initially specialised in outdoor photography. This experience, coupled with an appreciation of framing, perspective, and light values in a composition, informed his pioneering films.

1896–1900  Directed about 60 films and produced about 2000, mostly documentaries

Publications

By LUMIÈRE: books—

Catalogue des vues pour cinématographe, Lyon, 1907.

By LUMIÈRE: articles—

‘Lumière—The Last Interview,’ with Georges Sadoul, in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1948.

‘Bellecour—Monplaisir,’ with H. Bitomsky, in Filmkritik (Munich), August 1978.

On LUMIÈRE: books—

few directors since Louis Lumière have enjoyed such total control over their films. As inventor of the cinématographe, the first camera-cum-projector, he determined not only the subjects but also the aesthetics of early cinema. A scientist devoted to the plastic arts, Lumière initially specialised in outdoor photography. This experience, coupled with an appreciation of framing, perspective, and light values in a composition, informed his pioneering films.
To promote the cinématographe, he made demonstration shorts which, because of the camera’s limited spool capacity, lasted less than a minute. If art refines itself through constraint, Lumière’s films are excellent models. He overcame the cinématographe’s technical limitations to achieve tightly structured views of contemporary life, both public and private.

Though Lumière’s role in establishing the cinema has been dutifully recorded together with the audience’s thrilled disbelief at his moving images, his contribution to film practice deserves more recognition. His first film, La Sortie des usines, pictures employees leaving his photographic factory. Framed by the open gates, they disperse before the camera set at a medium close-up distance, and with the closure of the gates the sequence ends. The film does not result from a casual pointing of the camera at the chosen subject: all has been pre-planned, from the placing of the hidden camera to the squaring of the action’s duration with the available footage.

Over the next two years or so, Lumière experimented with diverse subjects and filming techniques. His themes reflect an unquestioning confidence in the permanence of contemporary political and social structures. Whether recording aspects of city life or the calmer pleasures of the seaside, the work of the artisan, fireman, or soldier, more personal family subjects or rehearsed comic episodes, his films imply a well-ordered, contented society where individuals cheerfully perform their allotted roles. Images of social deprivation or discontent are noticeably absent.

Scenes featuring family or friends are often filmed in medium close-up, with the single framing here reinforcing the intimacy and denning a world outside. Immaculate children, invariably in white, are shown feeding (Repas de bébé), learning to walk (Premiers pas de bébé), playing with toys (Enfants aux jouets), arguing (Querelle enfantine), dancing (Bal d’enfants), or delightfully trying to catch goldfish (Pêche aux poissons rouges). In Concert, Madame Lumière plays a violin, while card games involve family friends (Partie d’écarté and Partie de tric-trac). A cat lapping milk (Déjeuner du chat) is filmed in close-up and in Aquarium the fish tank fills the frame to create the illusion of underwater photography.

In films such as Place des Cordeliers and Place Bellecour the atmosphere of public squares alive with horse-drawn carriages and bustling crowds is captured, while in films such as Baignade en mer the novelties of sea-bathing are recorded. Other films prefigure newsreels by documenting particular events. The first of these, Débarquement, records photographers arriving for their conference and was projected the next day. Similar events include a street sack race (Course en sac), the demolition of a wall (Démolition d’un mur), the launching of a ship (Lancement d’un navire à La Ciotat), and various arrivals or departures, such as Touristes revenant d’une excursion, or Arrivée d’un bateau à vapeur. An early triumph was Barque sortant du port, where glistening waves and a sudden swell rocking the boat impressed themselves on a public familiar only with static images. Sequences capturing movement were an immediate attraction.

Lumière’s most celebrated arrival subject was the train entering La Ciotat station (Arrivée d’un train à la Ciotat). Here the dramatic resources of depth of field are exploited, with the platform and the track forming strong diagonals reaching into the distance. The train, first pictured in longshot, thrusts itself towards the camera to create a dynamic close-up. So powerful was the illusion of the train’s immanence that the first audiences reportedly feared for their safety. The creative use of perspective was also fundamental to the depiction of ploughing in Labourage and to the sack race in Course en sac.

To promote the cinématographe, he made demonstration shorts which, because of the camera’s limited spool capacity, lasted less than a minute. If art refines itself through constraint, Lumière’s films are excellent models. He overcame the cinématographe’s technical limitations to achieve tightly structured views of contemporary life, both public and private.

Though Lumière’s role in establishing the cinema has been dutifully recorded together with the audience’s thrilled disbelief at his moving images, his contribution to film practice deserves more recognition. His first film, La Sortie des usines, pictures employees leaving his photographic factory. Framed by the open gates, they disperse before the camera set at a medium close-up distance, and with the closure of the gates the sequence ends. The film does not result from a casual pointing of the camera at the chosen subject: all has been pre-planned, from the placing of the hidden camera to the squaring of the action’s duration with the available footage.

Over the next two years or so, Lumière experimented with diverse subjects and filming techniques. His themes reflect an unquestioning confidence in the permanence of contemporary political and social structures. Whether recording aspects of city life or the calmer pleasures of the seaside, the work of the artisan, fireman, or soldier, more personal family subjects or rehearsed comic episodes, his films imply a well-ordered, contented society where individuals cheerfully perform their allotted roles. Images of social deprivation or discontent are noticeably absent.

Scenes featuring family or friends are often filmed in medium close-up, with the single framing here reinforcing the intimacy and denning a world outside. Immaculate children, invariably in white, are shown feeding (Repas de bébé), learning to walk (Premiers pas de bébé), playing with toys (Enfants aux jouets), arguing (Querelle enfantine), dancing (Bal d’enfants), or delightfully trying to catch goldfish (Pêche aux poissons rouges). In Concert, Madame Lumière plays a violin, while card games involve family friends (Partie d’écarté and Partie de tric-trac). A cat lapping milk (Déjeuner du chat) is filmed in close-up and in Aquarium the fish tank fills the frame to create the illusion of underwater photography.

In films such as Place des Cordeliers and Place Bellecour the atmosphere of public squares alive with horse-drawn carriages and bustling crowds is captured, while in films such as Baignade en mer the novelties of sea-bathing are recorded. Other films prefigure newsreels by documenting particular events. The first of these, Débarquement, records photographers arriving for their conference and was projected the next day. Similar events include a street sack race (Course en sac), the demolition of a wall (Démolition d’un mur), the launching of a ship (Lancement d’un navire à La Ciotat), and various arrivals or departures, such as Touristes revenant d’une excursion, or Arrivée d’un bateau à vapeur. An early triumph was Barque sortant du port, where glistening waves and a sudden swell rocking the boat impressed themselves on a public familiar only with static images. Sequences capturing movement were an immediate attraction.

Lumière’s most celebrated arrival subject was the train entering La Ciotat station (Arrivée d’un train à la Ciotat). Here the dramatic resources of depth of field are exploited, with the platform and the track forming strong diagonals reaching into the distance. The train, first pictured in longshot, thrusts itself towards the camera to create a dynamic close-up. So powerful was the illusion of the train’s immanence that the first audiences reportedly feared for their safety. The creative use of perspective was also fundamental to the depiction of ploughing in Labourage and to the sack race in Course en sac.

Documents concerning artisans or the military reveal a studied composition. The camera is positioned to make actions comprehensible, whether in terms of shoeing horses (Maréchal-ferrant), shaping iron bars (Forgeurs), or horsemanship (Voltige). Cooperation with the fire service produced a more substantial documentary. Recognising the dramatic potential of his subject, Lumière portrayed a full-scale fire practice in four linked films: Sortie de la Pompe, Mise en Batterie, Attaque du feu, and Sauvetage. Comic sketches required careful preparation. In L’Arroseur arrosé a young prankster soaks an unsuspecting gardener by interrupting, then releasing, the water supply to a hose. All is tightly organized in time and space to meet the limitations of the fixed camera. In Photographe the innocent subject is again drenched, while in Charcuterie mécanique (which ridicules American mechanisation long before Tati’s postman in Jour de fête) a pig is converted into sausages which then magically transform themselves into a pig again. Although Lumière renounced filmmaking, he extended his influence through trained operators, such as Promio, Mesguish, and Doublier. His impact on early cinema is evident in the way others, notably Méliès, imitated his subjects. His abiding presence in French film culture is witnessed in various homages: in Les Mistons Truffaut affectionately alludes to L’Arroseur arrosé, while in Les Carabiniers Godard parodies L’arrivée d’un train à la Ciotat and Le Repas de bébé.

—R. F. Cousins

LYNCH, David

Career: Spent five years making Eraserhead, Los Angeles, 1971–76; worked as paperboy and shed-builder, late 1970s; invited by Mel Brooks to direct The Elephant Man, 1980; with Mark Frost, made Twin Peaks for video (two-hour version) and as TV series, 1989. Executive producer and writer of the CD-rom video game Woodcutters from Fiery Ships, 2000. Awards: National Society of Film Critics Awards for Best Film and Best Director, for Blue Velvet, 1986; Palme d’Or, Cannes Festival, for Wild at Heart, 1990.

Films as Director:

1968 The Alphabet (short) (sc)
1970 The Grandmother (short) (sc)
1978 Eraserhead (sc)
1980 The Elephant Man (co-sc)
1984 Dune (sc)
1986 Blue Velvet (sc)
1988 episode in Les Français vus par . . .
1990 Wild at Heart (sc)
1992 Twin Peaks: Fire Walk with Me (co-sc + co-pr, role as Gordon Cole)
1995 episode in Lumière et compagnie
David Lynch

1997  Lost Highway (sc)
1999  The Straight Story (+ mus)
2001  Mulholland Drive (co-sc, exec pr)

Other Films:

1988  Zelly and Me (role as Willie)
1991  The Cabinet of Dr. Ramirez (exec pr)
1994  Nadja (exec pr, role as Morgue Attendant)
1997  Pretty as a Picture: The Art of David Lynch (for TV) (as himself)

Publications

By LYNCH: books—

By LYNCH: articles—

Interview with D. Chute, in Film Comment (New York), September/October 1986.
Interview with A. Caron and M. Girard, in Séquences (Montreal), February 1987.
Interview with D. Marsh and A. Missler, in Cinema Papers (Melbourne), March 1987.
Interview with Jane Root, in Monthly Film Bulletin (London), April 1987.
Interview with D. Breskin, in Rolling Stone, September 6, 1990.
Interview with M. Ciment and H. Niogret, in Positif, October 1990.

On LYNCH: books—

On LYNCH: articles—
Woodward, Robert B., “Wild at Heart... Weird on Top,” in Empire (London), September 1990.
Rastelli, D., “Non toccate la mia giacca,” in Cineforum (Bergamo), July-August 1996.
Wyatt, J., “David Lynch Keeps His Head,” in Premiere (Boulder), September 1996.
Dossier, in Filmihullu (Helsinki), no. 4–5, 1997.

* * *

The undoubted perversity that runs throughout the works of David Lynch extends to his repeated and unexpected career turns: coming off the semi-underground Eraserhead to make the semi-respectable The Elephant Man with a distinguished British cast; then bouncing into a Dino de Laurentis mega-budget science-fiction fiasco, Dune; creeping back with the seductive and elusive small-town mystery of Blue Velvet; capping that by transferring his uncompromising vision of lurking sexual violence to American network television in Twin Peaks; and alienating the viewers of that bizarre soap with the rambling, intermittently stupefying, road movie Wild at Heart. Although there are recognisable Lynchian elements, with both Eraserhead and Blue Velvet—his two most commercially and critically successful movies—leaking images and ideas into the pairs of movies that followed them up, Lynch has proved surprisingly difficult to pin down. Given one Lynch movie, it has been—until the slightly too self-plagiaristic Wild at Heart—almost impossible to predict the next step. A painter and animator—his first films are Svankmajer-style shorts The Grandmother and Alphabet—Lynch came into the film industry through the back door, converting his thesis movie into Eraserhead on a shooting schedule that stretched over some years and required the eternal soliciting of money from friends, like Sissy Spacek, who had gone on to do well. Eraserhead is one of the rare cult movies that deserves its cult reputation, although it is a hard movie to sit still through for a second time around. Set in a monochrome fantasy world that suggests the slums of Oz, it follows a pompadoured drudge, Henry (John Nance), through his awful life in a decaying apartment building, with occasional bursts of light relief from the fungus-cheeked songstress behind the radiator, and winds up with two extraordinarily bizarre and horrid fantasy sequences, one in which Henry’s head falls off and is minced for indiarubber to be used in pencil erasers, and the other in which he cuts apart his skinned fetus of a mutant child and is deluged with a literal tide of excrement. Without really being profound, the film manages to worm its way into the hearts of the college crowd, cannily appealing—in one of Lynch’s trademarks—to intellectuals who relish the multiple allusions and evasive “meanings” of the film, and to horror movie fans who just like to go along with the extreme imagery. It was this combination, perhaps, that caught the eye of Mel Brooks’ Brooksfilms, which was looking to branch into more serious work and tapped Lynch to bring its first foray, The Elephant Man, to the screen. This true story had been the basis of a successful Broadway play. But Lunch was given free reign to mine the historical record for inspiration instead as the film was not drawn from the play. With The Elephant Man, also in black and white and laden with the steamy industrial imagery of Eraserhead, Lynch, cued perhaps by the poignant of John Hurt’s under-the-rubber performance and the presence of the sort of cast (Anthony Hopkins, John Gielgud, Freddie Jones, Michael Elphick) one would expect from some BBC-TV Masterpiece Theatre serial, opts for a more humanist approach, mollowing the sheer nastiness of the first film. In the finale, as the mutant John Merrick attends a lovingly recreated Victorian magic show, Lynch even pays homage to the gentle magician whose The Man with the Indiarubber Head might be cited as a precursor to Eraserhead, Georges Méliès.

Dune is a folly by anyone’s standards, and the re-cut television version—which Lynch opted to sign with the Director’s Guild pseudonym Allan Smithhee—is no help in sorting out the multiple plot confusions of Frank Herbert’s pretentious and unfilmable science-fiction epic. Hoping for a fusion of Star Wars and Lawrence of Arabia, De Laurentiis—who stuck by Lynch throughout the troubled $40 million production—wound up with a turgid mess, overloaded with talented performers in nothing roles, that only spottily seems to have engaged Lynch’s interest, mostly when there are monsters on screen or when Kenneth McMillan is campily overdoing his perverse and evil emperor act. Dune landed Lynch in the doldrums, and his comeback movie, also for the forgiving De Laurentiis, was very carefully crafted to evoke the virtues and cult commercial appeal of Eraserhead without seeming a throwback. Drawing on Shadow of a Doubt, Lynch made a small-town mystery that deigns to work on a plot level, and then shot it through with his own cruel insights into the teeming, insectoid nightmare that exists beneath the red, white, and blue prettiness of the setting, coaxing sinister meaning out of resonant pop songs like “Blue Velvet” and “In Dreams,” and establishing the core of a repertory company—Kyle MacLachlan of Dune, Isabella Rossellini, Laura Dern—who would recur in his next projects. Blue Velvet, far more than the muddied Dune, established Lynch as a master of colour in addition to his black and white skills, and also, through his handling of human monster Dennis Hopper’s abuse of Rossellini, as a chronicler of extreme emotions, often combining sex and violence in one disturbing, yet undeniably appealing package.

Twin Peaks, a television series Lynch devised and for which he directed the pilot film, is a strange offshoot of Blue Velvet, set in a similar town and with MacLachlan again the odd investigator of a crime the nature of which is hard to define. Although it lacks the explicit tone of the earlier film, in which Dennis Hopper is given to basic outbursts like “baby wants to fuck!,” Twin Peaks is also insidiously fascinating, using the labyrinthine plot convolutions of the typical soap opera—among other things, the show is a linear descendant of Peyton Place—in addition to the puzzle-solving twists of the murder mystery to probe under the surface of a folksy America of junk food and picket fences. As a reaction to the eerie restraint of Twin Peaks, Wild at Heart is an undisguised road film which evokes Elvis in Nicolas Cage’s subtly overwrought performance and struggles along towards its Wizard of Oz finale, passing by the high points of Lynch’s career (featuring players and jokes from all his earlier movies) as it plays out its couple-on-the-run storyline in a surprisingly straightforward and above-board manner. With Willem Dafoe’s dirty-teeth monster replacing Dennis Hopper’s gas-sniffing gangster, Wild at Heart echoes the violent and sexual excesses of Blue Velvet, including one exploding head stunt out of The Evil Dead and many heavy-metal-scored, heavy-duty sex scenes, but suffers from its superficiality, predictability, and a cast of characters so unlikeable that we don’t give a damn about the fates of any of them. Notes critic Hen Hanke: ‘‘Wild at Heart is nothing but a con game—a filmic Emperor’s New Clothes. At least that’s what we hope it is, because of this is truly how Lynch views the world, he must be one of the most unhappy people on the planet.’’

Both a genuine artist (say his supporters) and a cunning commercial survivor, Lynch appeared—in the minds of many critics—to be one of the best hopes for cinema in the 1990s. As of 1995, however, his promise as a savior had yet to be fulfilled. Unable to get the ill-fated Twin Peaks out of his system after it went unceremoniosly off the air without a resolution, Lynch launched a theatrical version of his TV show, Twin Peaks: Fire Walk with Me. Ironically, it turned out to be a prequel to the events portrayed in the series rather than a sequel, so to date we are still left without a resolution to the labyrinthine mysteries surrounding the puzzle of ‘‘who killed Laura Palmer?’’ Overlong and oddly underheated, it was a commercial bomb, even with hardcore Peaks fans.

Not just inclined to listen to the supporters who extol him as an artist but heed them as well, Lynch made his next film, Lost Highway, expressly for this rabid group, it seems. Based on a dream of Lynch’s, the film unfolds with the logic of a dream — which to say, no logic at all. It’s about a man who may or may not be an escapee from prison, who may or may not have killed his wife, and who may or may not be being pursued by the authorities, gangsters, and a host of bizarro Lynchian characters. As self-indulgent as many of Lynch’s previous works, it’s artsy-fartsy pretentiousness is a whole lot more difficult to defend, however.

By contrast, Lynch’s next film, The Straight Story, seems almost like a rejection of everything his most rabid supporters hold dear about him. Superficially at least, it is the most un-Lynch-like film in the director’s body of work: A gentle, life-affirming, straight-from-the-heart, family-oriented tribute to the honesty, ideals, and tenacity of Middle America with a G rating and not a baroque or pretentious bone in its warm and fuzzy body.

—Kim Newman, updated by John McCarty
MACKENDRICK, Alexander

Films as Director:
1949 Whisky Galore (Tight Little Island) (+ co-sc)
1951 The Man in the White Suit (+ co-sc)

1952 Mandy (The Story of Mandy; Crash of Silence)
1954 The Maggie (High and Dry) (+ story)
1955 The Ladykillers
1957 Sweet Smell of Success
1963 Sammy Going South (A Boy Ten Feet Tall)
1965 A High Wind in Jamaica
1967 Oh Dad, Poor Dad, Mamma’s Hung You in the Closet and I’m Feelin’ So Sad (Quine) (d add’l scenes); Don’t Make Waves

Other Films:
1950 The Blue Lamp (Dearden) (add’l dialogue)

Publications

By MACKENDRICK: article—

Interview with Bernard Cohn, in Positif (Paris), February 1968.
Interview with Kate Buford, in Film Comment (Los Angeles), May-June 1994.

On MACKENDRICK: books—

On MACKENDRICK articles—

Cutts, John, “Mackendrick Finds the Sweet Smell of Success,” in Films and Filming (London), June 1957.
Sarris, Andrew, “Oddities and One-Shots,” in Film Culture (New York), Spring 1963.
Obituary, in EPD Film (Frankfurt), February 1994.
Obituary, in Classic Images (Muscatine), March 1994.

* * *

In 1955 Alexander Mackendrick made The Ladykillers, the last of his four Ealing comedies. Two years later, in Hollywood, came his brilliantly acid study of corruption and betrayal, Sweet Smell of Success. At first glance, the gulf is prodigious. Yet on closer examination, it narrows considerably: the apparent contrast between the two films becomes little more than a matter of surface tone. For behind the comedies that Mackendrick made for Ealing can be detected a morbid humor, a pessimism, and even an instinct for cruelty that sets them apart from the gentle sentimentality of their stablemates (Hamer’s Kind Hearts and Coronets always excepted). The mainstream of Ealing comedy, even including such classics as Passport to Pimlico and The Lavender Hill Mob, presents (as Charles Barr has pointed out) “a whimsical daydream of how things might be.” There is little of that daydream about Mackendrick’s films; at times—as in The Ladykillers—they edge closer to surrealist nightmare.

In Whisky Galore the English outsider, Captain Waggett, is subjected by islanders to continual humiliation, unalleviated even in their triumph by the slightest friendly gesture. Similarly Marshall, the American tycoon in The Maggie, is abused, exploited, and physically assaulted by the Scots he encounters. Both workers and bosses in The Man in the White Suit turn violently upon Sidney Stratton, the idealistic inventor; and The Ladykillers culminates in a whole string of brutal murders. Not that this blackness detracts in the least from the effectiveness of the comedy. Rather, it lends the films a biting edge that makes them all the funnier, and may well explain why they have dated far less than most other Ealing movies.

A constant theme of Mackendrick’s films is the clash between innocence and experience. Innocence connotes integrity, but also blindness to the interests of others; experience brings shrewdness, but also corruption. Generally, innocence is defeated, but not always: in The Ladykillers it is serenely innocent Mrs. Wilberforce who survives—as does Susan Hunsecker in Sweet Smell of Success, albeit at a price. Children feature prominently in Mackendrick’s films—especially Mandy, Sammy Going South, The Maggie—and often embody the principle of innocence, though again not always. In A High Wind in Jamaica, against all audience expectations, it is the pirates, not the children they capture, who prove to be the innocents and who suffer death for it. As so often with Mackendrick’s characters, they are doomed by their lack of perception; trapped, like the deaf heroine of Mandy, in a private world, they see only what they expect to see.

Mackendrick established a reputation as an exacting and perfectionist director, bringing to his films a visual acuteness and a flair for complex fluid composition to support the tight dramatic structure. After Sweet Smell of Success, though, the quality of his work is generally considered to have declined, and he has made no films since 1967. A planned project on Mary Queen of Scots (intriguingly outlined by Mackendrick as “a sophisticated French lady landed in Boot Hill”) never materialised. From 1969 to 1978 he headed an outstanding film department at the California Institute of the Arts; but the withdrawal of such a subtle and individual director from active filmmaking is greatly to be regretted.

—Philip Kemp

MAKAVEJEV, Dušan

Nationality: Yugoslavian. Born: Belgrade, 13 October 1932. Education: Studied psychology at Belgrade University, graduated 1955; studied direction at the Academy for Theatre, Radio, Film, and Television, Belgrade. Military Service: 1959–60. Family: Married Bojana Marijan, 1964. Career: Experimental filmmaker for Kino-Club, 1955–58; joined Zagreb Films, 1958; worked for Avala films, 1961; went to United States on Ford Foundation Grant, 1968; worked in United States, since 1974; instructor of film at various universities, including Columbia, Harvard, and New York. Awards: FIPRESCI Award and Silver Bear Award, Berlin Film Festival, for Nevinost bez zastite, 1968; FIPRESCI Award, special mention, Berlin Film Festival, for W.R.—Misterije organizma, 1971; Mostra Special Award, Sao Paolo International Film Festival, 1998.

!Dušan Makavejev
Films as Director:

(shorts and documentaries):

1953 Jatagan Mala (+ sc)
1955 Pečat (The Seal) (+ sc)
1957 Antonijevski razbijeno ogledalo (Anthony’s Broken Mirror) (+ sc)
1958 Spomenicima ne treba verovati (Don’t Believe in Monuments) (+ sc); Slikovnica pčelara (Beekeeper’s Scrapbook) (+ sc); Prokleti praznik (Dammed Holiday) (+ sc); Boje sanjaju (Colors Are Dreaming) (+ sc)
1959 Sto je radnički savjet? (What Is a Workers’ Council?)
1961 Eci, pec, pec (One Potato, Two Potato . . . ) (+ sc); Pedagoška bajka (Educational Fairy Tale) (+ sc); Osmješ 61 (Smile 61) (+ sc)
1962 Parada (Parade) (+ sc); Dole plotovi (Down with the Fences) (+ sc); Ljepotica 62 (Miss Yugoslavia 62) (+ sc); Film o knjizi A.B.C. (Film about the Book) (+ sc)
1964 Nova igračka (New Toy) (+ sc); Nova domaća zivotinja (New Domestic Animal) (+ sc)

(feature films):

1966 Cvek nije tica (Man Is Not a Bird) (+ sc)
1967 Ljubavni Slučaj, tragedija slazbenice PTT (Love Affair; Switchboard Operator; An Affair of the Heart) (+ sc)
1968 Nevinost bez zaštitite (Innocence Unprotected) (+ sc)
1971 WR—Misterije organizma (WR—Mysteries of the Organism) (+ sc)
1974 Sweet Movie (+ co-sc)
1981 Montenegro (Or Pigs and Pearls) (+ sc)
1985 The Coca-Cola Kid
1989 Manifesto (For a Night of Love)
1993 The Gorilla Bathes at Noon
1995 A Hole in the Soul (+ sc, role as himself)
1996 Danske piger viser alt (Danish Girls Show Everything) (co-d)

Interview with Edgardo Cozarinsky and Carlos Clares, in Film Comment (New York), May/June 1975.
“Film Censorship in Yugoslavia,” in Film Comment (New York), July/August 1975.
Interview with F. La Polla, in Cineforum (Bergamo), June/July 1986.
“La vie en tant que ‘remake’,” an article in Positif, June 1994.

On MAKAVEJEV: book—
Taylor, John, Directors and Directions, New York, 1975.

On MAKAVEJEV: articles—
MacBean, J. R., “Sex and Politics,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1972.
“Dušan Makavejev,” in Film Dope (London), December 1987.

Before making his first feature film, Man Is Not a Bird, Dušan Makavejev had developed his filmmaking skills and formulated his chief thematic and formal concerns by producing a number of 35mm experimental shorts and documentaries. His second feature, Love Affair, furthered Makavejev’s reputation and situated him within a growing community of Eastern European filmmakers committed to exploring the potential of the film medium by opening it up to new subject matter and experimenting with non-conventional narrative forms. Love Affair deals with the romance between a Hungarian-born switchboard operator, Isabella, and Ahmed, an Arab sanitation engineer, and the breakdown of the relationship, Isabella’s death, and Ahmed’s arrest for her murder. However, this straightforward plot is only the skeleton which supports the rest of the film. Influenced by Eisenstein and Godard, Makavejev builds an elaborate, Brechtian amalgam of documentary-like examinations of rat extermination, interviews with a sexologist and criminologist, actual stock footage of the destruction of church spires during the October Revolution, as well as almost quaint digressions on how mattress stuffing is combed and how strudel is made. Makavejev questions the nature of sexual relationships in a changing, post-revolutionary, but still puritanical society by juxtaposing ostensibly unrelated images. For example, the razing of the church spires is intercut with and comments on Isabella’s seduction of Ahmed and the destruction of his archaic sexual inhibitions.

639
MAKAVEJEV

Innocence Unprotected also manifests Makavejev’s interest in the dialectics of montage, the ability to create new ideas by juxtaposing incongruous or contradictory images. In this film, Makavejev rescues a little bit of “unprotected innocence” from oblivion by incorporating the original Innocence Unprotected, the first Serbian “all-talking” feature, into a new cinematic context. This 1940s romance-adventure—filmed by a well-known local strongman-daredevil during the Nazi Occupation, censored by the occupation government, and ironically later denounced as being Nazi-inspired—is intercut with interviews Makavejev conducted with members of the original production crew as well as newsreel footage from the period of the occupation. Moreover, Makavejev hand-tints portions of the original film to contribute to the critical distance created by the archaic quality of the footage. Perhaps more than any of his other films, Innocence Unprotected shows Makavejev’s loving interest in traditional Yugoslavian folk culture and humor.

WR—Mysteries of the Organism deals with the sexuality of politics and the politics of sexuality. A radical condemnation of both the sterility of Stalinism and the superficial commercialism of Western capitalism, WR is certainly a document of its time—of Yugoslavia attempting to follow its “other road” to socialism while America fights in Vietnam and Moscow invades Czechoslovakia. Makavejev looks to Wilhelm Reich (the “WR” of the title) for enlightenment. Reich was, early in his career, one of the first to recognize the profound interconnections between socio-political structure and the individual psyche. His radical sexual ideas alienated the psychoanalytic profession and his unorthodox medical theories and practices eventually led to his imprisonment in the United States.

Although elaborate cross-cutting blends the two sections of the film, roughly the first half of WR is devoted to a documentary study of Wilhelm Reich’s life in the United States. Interviews with Reich’s therapists, Reich’s relatives, even people who knew him casually, including his barber, are intercut with an examination of American sexual mores circa 1970 via interviews with Jackie Curtis, Barbara Dobson, one of the editors of Screw magazine, and others. The second half of the film is primarily a fictional narrative set in Belgrade, which concerns the love affair between a young female admirer of Reich (Milena) and a rather priggish and prudish Soviet ice skater named Vladimir Ilyich. Freed of his inhibitions by Milena’s persistence, Vladimir makes love to her and then, unable to deal with his sexuality, decapitates her with his ice skate. However, after death, Milena’s severed head continues to speak. Vladimir sings a song with a lyric written by a Soviet citizen critical of his government. WR ends with a photo of the smiling Reich—a sign of hope, a contradictory indication of the possibility for change and new beginnings.

WR was never released in Yugoslavia, and Makavejev made his two subsequent films, Sweet Movie and Montenegro, in the United States and Europe. Like WR, Sweet Movie has two parts. In the first a beauty contestant, Miss World, is wedded to and violated by Mr. Kapital and, after other humiliations, ends up in Otto Muehl’s radical therapy commune. Miss World is taken in and nurtured by actual commune members who engage in various types of infantile regressions (including carrying their excrement displayed on dinner plates) as therapy. The second part of the film is an allegorical commentary on the East. A ship, with a figurehead of Karl Marx, sails about under the command of Anna Planeta, who seduces and murders young men and boys, while providing for their rebirth out of a hold filled with white sugar and corpses.

Montenegro continues this development of allegory in favor of Makavejev’s earlier documentary interests. Marilyn, an American-born Swedish housewife, is lured into a world peopled by earthy and sexually active Yugoslavian immigrants who run a club called Zanzibar as an almost anarchistic communal venture. Like the heroes and heroines of Makavejev’s earlier films, Marilyn cannot deal with her newly acquired sexual freedom, and she—like Ahmed, Vladimir Ilyich, and Anna Planeta—kills her lovers. Montenegro’s linear plot contrasts sharply with the convoluted narrative structure and elaborate montage techniques characteristic of Makavejev’s earlier works. While being accused of making needlessly ambiguous films with scenes of gratuitous violence and sexuality, Makavejev has consistently explored the interrelationship of sexual life and socioeconomic structure while experimenting with narrative forms that challenge traditional notions of Hollywood filmmaking.

Makavejev’s seventeen years as a “knapsack director,” during his exile following WR, were echoed in films about displaced persons, immigrants, and “nowhere men in nowhere lands.” As one of his characters says, “The place which is nowhere is a true home.” Another character similarly notes, “Everyone has to come from somewhere,” prompting a third to reply, “Not me! I come from here!” After Sweet Movie, several promising projects founded in the choppy sea of international co-financing, until Swedish producer Bo Jonsson, visiting Makavejev at Harvard University, proposed a “high-quality comedy with a popular appeal and measured eroticism,” in which the director could add his “little somethings.” They soon grew into the rich ethnic-socio-political dimensions of Montenegro (Or Pigs and Pearls). The pearl necklace of its Swedish-American heroine (Susan Ansprach) symbolizes her ego and commodity fetishism; “pigs” emblemise the funky, ego-depouiling, unbridled instincts of work-immigrants from Southeast Europe (promptly polluted by consumerism’s “teasing” of real, biological, desire).

Makavejev’s second comedy in the genre (comedy with psycho-political infill) came four years later, from Australia. The Coca-Cola Kid, not sponsored by that corporation’s marketing division, concerns an enterprising young salesman who succeeds in prising open a tiny regional market, a sort of “last valley,” lithereto monopolised by a local dynasty’s soft drink; but himself succumbs to its values. Though ten years in preparation with Australian novelist Frank Moorhouse, its Local Hero-type story and backwoods setting inspired less intricate detail, and a thinner intellectual texture, than the culturally mixed settings of Makavejev’s richest films.

His long exile ended with Manifesto (For a Night of Love), by far the best of the art-house films funded, through the good offices of American Zoetrope’s Tom Luddy, by Cannon-Globus (others were by Godard and Norman Mailer). As Bolsheviks of different classes and ideologies fumble their Revolution in 1920 Ruturitania, Makavejev hilariously re-explores his abiding subject matter, shared with the Yugoslavian Praxis group of Marxist-humanist writers. His characters can only steer erratically between the four cardinal points of a spiritual compass: True Socialism (which Marxist bureaucratic classes too easily make oppressive), individualism (which Western capitalism makes smugly rapacious); man’s bodily instincts (commonly selfish and barbaric, pace Wilhelm Reich); and idealism (which may only camouflage the cold, abstract logic of power).

Whereas “idealistic” Freudians (whether bourgeois or radical, or, like Reich, both) claim love and sex are natural but deny egoism and power, Makavejev understands that both instinct and idealism may spread, not just love and desire, but terror and violence. And after all, Mother Nature, like Anna Planeta, is a serial murderer: whatever lives will be killed, by something. Similarly, biological instincts involve, as much as sex, food; whence much play on bodies and nourishment. In WR, egg yolks, transferred unbroken from hand to hand, suggest an optimum of “communal kindness”; but even food may be over-refined (like, in Sweet Movie, consumerist chocolate, and the white sugar of revolutionary purity). Hence political history weighs like a nightmare on the minds of the living. And subsequent “tribal” massacres, in the former Yugoslavia and around the world, weighs like a nightmare on the minds of the living. And subsequent and the white sugar of revolutionary purity). Hence political history may be over-refined (like, in Eisenstein’s look prehistoric. Where Godard faltered and fell, the Nowhere Man from ex-communist former Yugoslavia continues to blaze new trails of “philosophical cinema.”

— Gina Marchetti, updated by Raymond Durgnat

MAKHMALBAF, Mohsen

Education: Left school at age fifteen to provide for his family.

Career: Sentenced to death by firing squad at age 17 for stabbing a policeman, 1974; freed with Islamic revolution against Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi’s regime, 1979; one of the founders of the Islamic Propagation Organization; earliest films screened in mosques; shifted from supporter of clerical control in Iran to an opponent of their control; five of his films have been banned in his own country.

Awards: Special Jury Prize, Istanbul International Film Festival, for Nasseroddin Shah, hactore Cinema, 1993; Best Director and Prize of the Screenwriter’s Critic and Writer’s Catalan Association, Catalanion International Film Festival (Spain), and Best Artistic Contribution Award, Tokyo International Film Festival, for Gabbeh, 1996; Special Mention, Locarno International Film Festival, for Nun va Goldoon, 1996; “CinemAvvenire” Award and Sergio Trasatti Award (Special Mention), Venice Film Festival, for Sokhout, 1998; and many other awards.

Address: c/o Green Film House. 98 Mirdamad Boulevard, PO Box 19395/8466, Téhéran, Iran; c/o MK2 Diffusion, 55 rue Traversière, 75012 Paris, France.

Films as Director and Writer:

1982 Tobeh Nosuh (Nasooh’s Repentance)
1984 Do Cheshman Beesa (Two Sightless Eyes); Este’aze (Seeking Refuge in God) (+ ed)
1985 Baycot (Boycott) (+ ed)
1987 Dastfrooush (The Peddler) (+ ed)
1988 Bicycleran (The Cyclist) (+ prod des)
1989 Arousi-ye Khouban (The Marriage of the Blessed) (+ ed)
1990 Nobat e Asheqi (Time of Love) (+ ed)
1991 Shabbaye Zayendeh-Rood (Nights of Zaendeh-Rood) (+ ed)
1992 Nasseroddin Shah, hactore Cinema (Once upon a Time, Cinema) (+ ed)
1993 Honarpisheh (The Actor) (+ ed); Gozideh tassir dar doran-e Qajar (Images from the Ghajar Dynasty) (doc)
1994 Salaam Cinema (+ ed, ro as himself); Sang-o shisheh (Stone and Glass) (doc)
1996 Gabbeh (+ ed); Nun va Goldoon (A Moment of Innocence) (+ ed, ro as himself)
1998 Sokhout (The Silence) (+ ed)
1999 Ghessé hayé kish (Tales of Kish; Kish Tales) (+ ed)

Other Films:

1981 Towjeh (Haghaniparast) (sc)
1982 Marg Deegari (Honarmand) (sc); Hesar dar Hesar (Honarmand) (sc)
1985 Zangha (Honarmand) (sc)
1989 Nema-ye Nazidk (Close-Up) (Kiarostami) (ro as himself)
1990 Deedeh-Ban (Hatamikia) (ed)
1998 Sib (The Apple) (Samirah Makhmalbaf) (sc, ed)
2000 Takhte Siah (Blackboard) (Samira Makhmalbaf) (sc, ed)
Publications

On MAKHMALBAF: articles—

White, Armond, “18th New Directors/New Film Festival,” in Film Comment (New York), May-June 1989.
Cheshire, Godfrey, “Makhmalbaf: The Figure in the Carpet,” in Film Quarterly (New York), July-Aug. 1997.
Johnson, William, “Gabbeh,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Fall 1997.

On MAKHMALBAF: films—

* * *

One of the indelible images of Mohsen Makhmalbaf comes not from his own work as director but from an onscreen appearance. In Close-Up, a 1989 film by his Iranian compatriot Abbas Kiarostami, Makhmalbaf enters the film in its final minutes, playing himself. Close-Up is an ingeniously layered story, based on fact, about a small-time swindler who convinced a Tehran family he was the famous film director Mohsen Makhmalbaf. In a prime example of Iranian cinema’s tendency to turn its fiction in on itself, the real people in the case also play themselves in the film. Makhmalbaf arrives as a surprisingly benevolent presence, considering the particulars of the case, a sympathetic and interested artist, not so much angry as curious.

All of those words—curious, angry, sympathetic, artist—describe stages of Makhmalbaf’s unusual career. Like the American Paul Schrader, he was raised in a fundamentalist religious household (Islamic, in Makhmalbaf’s case) and did not see a movie until after adolescence. Like the Russian Sergei Eisenstein, he began his career as a maker of revolutionary propaganda, only to run afoul of the authorities (many of his 1990s films have been banned in Iran) when his outlook broadened.

In 1974 Makhmalbaf was arrested for terrorist activities aimed at the Shah’s government, and was spared the death penalty by virtue of his youth. These experiences inspired his films Boycott (1985) and the remarkable A Moment of Innocence (1996). Released from prison at the time of the Islamic revolution, Makhmalbaf turned to militant politics, which led to the didactic nature of his early features. A turning point came with The Peddler (1986), a scorching collection of three stories that would not be out of place as Persian episodes of The Twilight Zone. One is a horrific tale of poverty-stricken parents trying to leave a newborn infant with an upper-class family; another depicts the madness of a goony-bird son, part Anthony Perkins of Psycho and part Jerry Lewis, “caring” for his immobile mother; the last is a street-level gangster quasi-parody that anticipates Quentin Tarantino by a decade. Utterly unsparring, The Peddler initiated a cycle of social-comment films that made Makhmalbaf a significant cultural observer in Iran.

With Once upon a Time, Cinema (1992), the director turned his attention to film itself. A larky mix of Arabian Nights exotica and film history, the picture cleverly weaves clips from landmark Iranian cinema into a story about an early 20th century ruler. Its references, both cinematic and historical, may not translate in full to an international audience, but its technical playfulness—not so far from the trickery of Zelig or Dead Men Don’t Wear Plaid—is ingenious.

Once upon a Time was conceived to mark the 100th anniversary of film, as was the very different Salaam Cinema. The event captured in Salaam Cinema was originally intended as a casting call for non-professional actors, a call that brought out thousands more acting hopefuls than Makhmalbaf expected. These auditions, the interplay between director and inexperienced performers, became the film. The result is, in the words of Film Comment’s Gavin Smith, “A strange, hybrid document of an experiment-happening.… The auditions range from harmless make-believe exercises in play-acting to emotionally manipulative and humiliating challenges that stop just short of abusive.” Makhmalbaf “plays” himself in the film, but as an exaggerated dictator, an example of bullying authority. In the middle of the decade, having already gained popularity in his homeland and a certain amount of international notice, Makhmalbaf kept changing and evolving. “When I started making films,” he told Sight and Sound, “my focus was political. But now I understand that life is larger than politics. … (N)ow I think that the best approach to save humanity is through going back to the beauty and the poetry of everyday life.” Two of the truly extraordinary films of the decade, both initially banned in Iran, were the result. Gabbeh (1996), a tale of love and storytelling amongst the nomads of the remote countryside, has a lush visual beauty new to Makhmalbaf’s work. A gabbeh is a densely woven rug, and the film itself is a tapestry of myth, nature, and cultural tradition—with a strong sympathy for the unfair place of women in its world.

A Moment of Innocence (1996) returns to Makhmalbaf’s arrest in the 1970s. But it is not a simple dramatic re-creation of a provocative incident (the young Makhmalbaf stabbed a policeman outside a police station, and was himself shot). At the beginning of the film, the policeman stabbed by Makhmalbaf shows up at the director’s house, looking for work in movies—an incident that actually occurred some years earlier. We then watch director and cop cast actors as their younger selves, to play out the 1974 incident on film. Some of the principals, including Makhmalbaf, play themselves, in a device recalling Close-Up. The film flips back and forth between filmmaking process and the 1970s story, leading to an uncannily moving ending that seems to operate on a half-dozen different levels at once. (At about this time, the director’s daughter Samira had an international success with her own directing debut, The Apple.)

Makhmalbaf’s 1998 film The Silence has the shape of a typical Iranian film: a 10-year-old boy, blind, earns money as a guitar-tuner so his mother won’t be evicted from their home. But the movie upends expectations, as the boy becomes increasingly obsessed with the opening notes of Beethoven’s Fifth Symphony, which thrum inside his head. The vibrant colors of the film raise the question of whether the director is becoming self-consciously “exotic” after the success of Gabbeh, but the film’s ideas are tantalizing and powerful.

Describing the artisans of Gabbeh, Makhmalbaf has said, “They weave patterns spontaneously, without planning. They are inspired by reality around them... And they also weave their dreams into the carpet... No two carpets are alike. Each is a unique reflection of the weaver’s life.” The parallel with his own films is a powerful one, and stands as a statement of the unique experience—and willingness to change and grow—this director brings to the screen.

—Robert Horton

MALICK, Terrence

Nationality: American. Born: Waco, Texas, 30 November 1943. Education: Harvard University, B.A., 1966; Oxford University on Rhodes Scholarship; Center for Advanced Film Studies, American Film Institute, 1969. Career: Journalist for Newsweek, Life, and the New Yorker, late 1960s; lecturer in philosophy, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, 1968; directed first feature, Badlands, 1973. Awards: Best Director Awards, National Society of Film Critics and New York Film Critics, 1978, and Cannes Festival, 1979, for Days of Heaven. Agent: c/o Evarts Ziegler Associates, Inc., 9255 W. Sunset Boulevard, Los Angeles, CA 90069, U.S.A.

Films as Director and Screenwriter:

- 1973 Badlands (+ pr, role as architect)
- 1978 Days of Heaven
- 1998 The Thin Red Line (d only)

Other Films:

- 1969 Lanton Mills (short) (sc)
- 1972 Pocket Money (Rosenberg) (sc)
- 1974 The Gravy Train (co-sc, under pseudonym David Whitney)
- 1982 Deadhead Miles (Zimmerman) (co-sc) (filmed 1970)

Publications

By MALICK: articles—

On MALICK: articles—

- Johnson, William, “‘Badlands,’” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1974.
- Fox, Terry Curtis, “The Last Ray of Light,” in Film Comment (New York), September/October 1978.

* * *

Though in the first two decades of his career he directed only two feature films, Terrence Malick has received the kind of critical attention normally reserved for more experienced and prolific directors.
filmmakers. His career reflects a commitment to quality instead of quantity—an unusual and not always profitable gamble in the film industry.

In 1972, Malick wrote the screenplay for Pocket Money, which starred Paul Newman and Lee Marvin, a film memorable more for character study than story. The following year, Malick made his first feature, Badlands. The film was an amazing debut. Based loosely on the sensational Starkweather-Furgate murder spree, Badlands concerns Kit Carruthers, a twenty-five-year-old James Dean look-alike, and Holly Sargis, his fifteen-year-old girlfriend. After murdering Holly’s father, they begin a flight across the northeastern United States, killing five others along the way.

This disturbing and beautiful film is narrated by Holly (Sissy Spacek), who unemotionally describes the couple’s actions and feelings. Her partner in crime, Kit (Martin Sheen), is a likeable, unpredictable, and romantic killer who is so confident of his place in American history as a celebrity that he marks the spot where he is arrested, and gives away his possessions as souvenirs to police officers.

Days of Heaven, Malick’s long-awaited second feature, was released five years later. The film was critically acclaimed in the United States, and Malick was named best director at the Cannes Film Festival. Days of Heaven is a homage to silent films (the director even includes a glimpse of Chaplin’s work), with stunning visual images and little dialogue. Moving very slowly at first, the film’s pace gradually accelerates as the tension heightens. Its plot and style elaborate on that of Badlands: the flight of two lovers following a murder, and the use of unemotional narration and off-beat characterizations.

For years Malick then took up residence in Paris, while critics awaited his next project. Some wondered how the director would remain profitable to any studio with his lapses between projects, his aversion to interviews, and his refusal to help in the marketing of his films. Paramount, however, remained confident of Malick’s value and continued to send the director scripts plus a yearly stipend. Unlike Welles, whose lack of productivity must be traced in large measure to studio hostility to his methods and work, Malick could not blame anyone but himself for a talent and interests that bore no fruit for almost twenty years.

Malick’s inactivity, however, came to a surprising end as the decade and century drew to a close. He revived his career with a brilliant film, arguably among the most cinematic and profound the postwar American cinema has produced. Malick’s version of James Jones’s The Thin Red Line, written in the 1950s and brought to the screen for the first time in the 1960s, is a moving, poetic meditation on the contradictions of human nature: man’s compulsive self-destruction yet hunger for life and love. Released not long after Steven Spielberg’s conventional and much acclaimed war story, Saving Private Ryan, Malick’s film disappointed those who expected an exultation at American victory in the bitter battle for Guadalcanal (the island goes unnamed in both Jones’s novel and Malick’s film). Instead, the film is pervaded by a profound sadness at the inalterable fact of organized violence, a sadness transformed into resignation as the main character, a cynical nonconformist, ultimately accepts the hero’s burden of self-sacrifice. Like Jones, Malick fragments the narrative, exploring the use of voice-over to identify and deepen subjective experience. Yet the final result is not hard to follow, as Malick demonstrates the same talent for designing compelling narrative that was evident in his early career. The film world can only hope that he does not wait another twenty years before executing yet another cinematic masterpiece.

—Alexa Foreman, updated by R. Barton Palmer

MALLE, Louis

Prix Raoul Levy and Prix Méliès for Lacombe, Lucien, 1974; five Academy Award nominations, including best picture and best director, for Atlantic City, 1980; Golden Lion, Venice Festival, and Prix Louis Delluc, for Au revoir les enfants, 1987; British Academy of Film and Television Arts Awards nomination, best director, and Felix Award, European Film Awards, for Au revoir les enfants, 1988; elected Film Academy Fellow, British Academy of Film and Television Arts, 1991. Died: Of lymphoma, in Beverly Hills, California, 23 November 1995.

Films as Director:

1956 Le Monde du silence (The Silent World) (co-d, ph)
1958 Ascenseur pour l'échafaud (Elevator to the Gallows; Frantic) (+ pr, co-sc); Les Amants (The Lovers) (+ pr, co-sc)
1960 Zazie dans le Métro (Zazie) (+ pr, co-sc)
1962 Vie privée (A Very Private Affair) (+ pr, co-sc)
1963 Le Feu follet (The Fire Within; A Time to Live, a Time to Die) (+ pr, sc)
1965 Viva Maria (+ co-pr, co-sc)
1967 Le Voleur (The Thief of Paris) (+ pr, co-sc)
1968 “William Wilson” episode of Histoires extraordinaires (Spirits of the Dead) (+ pr, sc)
1969 Calcutta (+ pr, sc); L'Inde fantôme (Phantom India) (+ pr, sc)

Six-hour feature presentation of TV documentary

1971 Le Souffle au cœur (Murmur of the Heart) (+ pr, sc)
1972 Humain trop humain (+ pr, sc)
1973 Lacombe, Lucien (+ pr, co-sc)
1975 Black Moon (+ pr, co-sc)
1978 La Petite (+ pr, sc); Pretty Baby (+ pr, co-story)
1980 Atlantic City (+ pr, sc)
1981 My Dinner with Andre (+ pr, sc)
1984 Crackers (+ pr, sc)
1985 Alamo Bay (+ pr, sc); God's Country (+ pr, sc)
1986 And the Pursuit of Happiness (+ pr, sc)
1987 Au Revoir les enfants (Goodbye, Children) (+ pr, sc)
1990 Milou en Mai (May Fools) (+ pr, sc)
1992 Damage
1994 Vanya on 42nd Street

Other Films:

1969 La Fiancée du pirate (Kaplan) (role)

Publications

By MALLE: books—

By MALLE: articles—

“Louis Malle on Lacombe Lucien,” in Film Comment (New York), September/October 1974.
“From The Lovers to Pretty Baby,” interview with Dan Yakir, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Summer 1978.
Interview with P. Carcassonne and J. Fieschi, in Cinémagraphe (Paris), March/April 1981.
Interview in Post Script (Jacksonville, Florida), Autumn 1982 and Winter 1983.
Interview in Cineforum (Bergamo), June/July 1987.
Interview with Candice Bergen in Interview (New York), June 1990.
Interview with Andre Gregory in Vogue, November 1994.

On MALLE: books—

On MALLE: articles—

Road, Richard, “‘Malle x 4,’” in Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1989.
“Louis Malle” (special section), in Positif (Paris), no. 419, January 1996.

Re-viewing reveals Ascenseur as clumsy and improbable, a failure redeemed only by the Moreau and Maurice Ronet performances. A flair for coaxing the unexpected from his stars had often saved Malle from the consequences of too-reverent respect for production values, a penchant for burnished low-lit interiors being his most galling stylistic weakness. But playing Bardot against type in Vie privée as a parody of the harried star, and using Moreau as one of a pair of comic Western trollops (in Viva Maria) provided an indication of the irony that was to make his name.

Thereafter Malle became a gleeful chronicler of the polymorphously perverse. Moreau’s hand falling eloquently open on the sheet in Les Amants as she accepts the joy of cunnilingus is precisely echoed in her genuflection to fellate a yoked George Hamilton in Viva Maria. Incest in Souffle au coeur, child prostitution in Pretty Baby, and, in particular, the erotic and sadomasochistic overtones of Nazism in Lacombe, Lucien found in Malle a skillful, committed, and sensual celebrant.

Malle’s Indian documentaries of 1969 belong more to the literature of the mid-life crisis than to film history. Black Moon likewise explores an arid emotional couloir. Malle returned to his richest sources with the U.S.-based films of the late 1970s and after. Pretty Baby, Atlantic City, My Dinner with Andre, and Alamo Bay delight in overturning the stones under which closed communities seethe in moist darkness. The ostensible source material of the first, Belloq’s New Orleans brothel photographs, receives short shrift in favour of a lingering interest in the pre-pubescent Brooke Shields. Atlantic City relishes the delights of post-climactic potency, giving Burt Lancaster one of his richest roles as the fading ex-strong-arm man, dubbed “Numb Nuts” by his derisive colleagues. He seizes a last chance for sexual passion and effective action as the friend and protector of Susan Sarandon’s character, an ambitious nightclub croupier.

My Dinner with Andre focuses with equal originality on the social eroticism of urban intellectuals. A globe-trotting theatrical volupturnary reviews his thespian conquests to the grudging admiration of his stay-at-home colleague. An account of theatrical high-jinks in a Polish wood with Jerzy Grotowski and friends becomes in Andre Gregory’s fruity re-telling, and with Malle’s lingering attention, something very like an orgy. Again, production values intrude on, even dominate the action; mirrors, table settings, the intrusive old waiter, and even the food itself provide a rich, decorated background that adds considerably to the sense of occasion. Malle sends his audiences out of the cinema conscious of having taken part in an event as filling as a five-course meal.

Given this general richness, it may be by contrast that certain of Malle’s quieter, less vivid works shine. Zazie dans le Métro, his fevered version of Queneau’s farce, marked his first break with the stable pattern of the new wave. Compared with Godard’s Une Femme est une femme, it shows Malle as the more skillful of the two at remaking the genre film. The terse Le Feu follet, a vehicle for Maurice Ronet adapted from F. Scott Fitzgerald’s Babylon Revisited, showed Malle moving towards what had become by then the standard ‘new’ French film, characterized by the work of the so-called “Left Bank” group of Resnais, Varda, Rivette, and Rohmer. But again Malle found in the character a plump, opulent self-regard that turned Le Feu follet, despite its black and white cinematography and solemn style, into a celebration of self-pity, with Ronet at one point caressing the gun with which he proposes to put an end to his life. Like the relish with which Belmondo’s gentleman thief in Le Voleur savours the objects the stealing of Malle’s love of physicality, of weight and color and texture, seems so deeply rooted as to be almost religious. (And Malle did, after all, work as assistant to Bresson on Un Condamné à mort s’est échappé.)

The latter stages of Malle’s career included one well-publicized fiasco and two very different but equally brilliant films. The former is Damage, a boring adaptation of Josephine Hart’s best-seller, crammed with boring sex footage of Jeremy Irons (as a British politician) and Juliette Binoche (as his son’s girlfriend, with whom he commences an affair). The film is of note only for the hubbub created when Malle was forced to edit footage to earn the film an R (rather than NC-17) rating, and for Miranda Richardson’s brief but riveting presence as Irons’ rejected wife.

Au revoir les enfants, on the other hand, is as fine a film as Malle ever has made. It is set at that point in time, in which a moment can be measured, in which childhood inevitably and irrevocably ends. The film is a heartbreaking autobiographical drama which tells the story of Julien Quentin, a universal 11-year-old: a spirited prankster who, in the setting and view of life and loyalty in Occupied France, Julien senses something unusual about a new classmate, a sweet-faced, bushy-haired, exceptionally intelligent boy called Jean Bonnet. Jean really is a Jew, in hiding at Julien’s school. And Julien is oblivious to what Jean knows all to well: In Occupied France, it’s highly dangerous—and nearly always fatal—to be Jewish. The film, ultimately, is a story of heroes and villains, of those who will risk their all to shelter the needy and those who will collaborate with the enemy to fill their pockets or gain a false sense of power. Malle slowly, carefully introduces you to his characters, so the resulting impact of the unfolding events is that much more profound. One example of Malle’s mastery: Julien and Jean become lost in a forest, and are come upon by German soldiers. Jean’s sense of all-encompassing terror, revealed in a split second as he panics and runs, is explicitly real. Additionally, there is a sequence in which the students come together for some entertainment and laugh at Chaplin cavorting in The Immigrant. Here, Malle communicates how film can be a true universal language, how the genius of an artist such as Chaplin is revealed in a split second as he panics and runs, is explicitly real. Additionally, there is a sequence in which the students come together for some entertainment and laugh at Chaplin cavorting in The Immigrant. Here, Malle communicates how film can be a true universal language, how the genius of an artist such as Chaplin is timeless. In its overall setting and view of life and loyalty in Occupied France, Au revoir les enfants is related thematically to Lacombe, Lucien. Julien’s feelings for his mother, as personified by his sniffing for her scent after reading one of her letters, mirrors the intense mother-son relationship in Murmur of the Heart, Uncle Vanya on 42nd Street, which reunites Wallace Shawn and Andre Gregory, the entire cast of My Dinner with Andre, is as stunningly original as the earlier film. The setting is a crumbling theater in midtown Manhattan that once was home to the Ziegfeld Follies. The film opens with actors converging on the theater, where they will rehearse a stage production of an adaptation by David Mamet of Chekhov’s Uncle Vanya. Gregory is the director, while Shawn plays the title role. As the rehearsal proceeds, Vanya on 42nd Street becomes at once a highly cinematic example of filmed theater and an intimate look at the illusion that is the theater.

Sensual and perverse, Malle is an unlikely artist to have sprung from the reconstructed film-buffs of the nouvelle vague. It is with his early mentors—Bresson, Cousteau, Tati—that he seems, artistically and spiritually, to belong, rather than with Melville, spiritual hero of the Cahiers group, and there is a strong flavour of essentially French autobiographical soul searching in his Au revoir les enfants.

---

MALMROS, Nils

Nationality: Danish. Born: Born Nils Sigurd Malmros, Aarhus, Denmark, 5 October 1944. Education: Student at Aarhus Katedralskole, 1964; studies in medicine, Aarhus University, 1964–1987. Family: Married Marianne Tromholt, 5 June 1982. Career: Doctor at Aarhus kommune hospital neurosurgical department. Awards: Danish Film Critics Bodil Award for Best Film, for Lars-Ole 5C, 1974; Krebs’ School Award, 1975; Danish Film Critics Bodil Award for Best Film, for Drence, 1977; Preben Franks Memorial Award, 1982; Gjest Baardsen Award, Olso, 1982; Audience Prize of the “Lübecker Nachrichten,” Lübeck Nordic Film Days, for Kundskabens træ, 1982; Niels Matthiassens Memorial Award, 1983; Albertslunds Cultural Fond’s Honorary Award, 1983; Danish Film Academy Robert Award for Best Film and Best Screenplay, and Danish Film Critics Bodil Award for Best Film, for Skønheden og udyret, 1984; Otto Rungs Authors Award, 1990; Danish Playwriter’s Organization Honorable Award, 1993; Danish Film Critics Bodil Award for Best Film, and Danish Film Academy Robert Award for Best Film, for Kærlighedens smerte, 1993; National Art Council’s Lifetime Award, 1995; Danish Film Academy Robert Award for Best Film, and Rouen Nordic Film Festival Audience Award, for Barbara, 1998; Hartmann Award, 1998.

Films as Director:

1968 En mærkelig kærlighed (+sc, pr)
1973 Lars Ole, 5C (+sc, pr)
1977 Drence (Boys) (+sc, pr)
1978 Kammersjukul (short—for TV)
1981 Kundskabens træ (The Tree of Knowledge) (+sc)
1983 Skønheden og udyret (Beauty and the Beast) (+sc)
1989 Århus by Night (+sc)
1992 Kærlighedens smerte (Pain of Love) (+sc)
1997 Barbara (+sc)

Publications

By MALMROS: articles—

On MALMROS: books—

On Malmros: articles—

* * *

It is quite characteristic of Nils Malmros that he planned to shoot his major work, Kuldskabens træ (1981), over a period of four years so that his leading characters would experience for themselves the adolescence that the film portrays. For financial reasons the period turned out to be two years, but persistent insistence on realistic detail is one of the Århus director’s trade marks; this is also why all his films turned out to be two years, but persistent insistence on realistic detail is one of the Århus director’s trade marks; this is also why all his films until Barbara (1996) were set in the city where he grew up and has spent most of his life, and why most of his films are not only set in the city but also in the social conditions and the time when the director himself was the same age as his protagonists: the Århus of the 1950s and 1960s. Malmros’s canon is a unique example of the local, personal aspects of an artist’s touch achieving universal applicability.

Malmros is an autodidact who describes the loss of innocence with extreme consistency. He was a medical student when his great interest in film led him to his encounter with Truffaut’s Jules et Jim (1961). This experience, and the analysis by the Danish writer Klaus Rifbjerg, inspired Malmros to try to make a Danish counterpart to Truffaut’s masterpiece; a borrowed camera and money contributed by his parents, friends, and night duties at a hospital resulted in En mærkelig kærlighed, released in 1968. He had to struggle equally hard to persuade a cinema to screen the film. It was on the boards for two days and was cut to pieces by the critics.

The adolescent, unresolved plot and devastating reviews did not dissuade Malmros, and five years later came the release of Lars Ole, 5C (1973) about the everyday life of a twelve year old at school and at home, set in Århus in the 1950s. This film was also produced and financed privately, and only received public subsidies after it had been released and shown at Cannes. The following year it received the Copenhagen Film Critics’ Bodil Award as the best Danish film of the year. It is composed as an apparently casual, impressionist chain of individual scenes using the art of suggestion to illustrate with extreme precision the complicated social and psychological interplay at work in 5C. Lars Ole’s class at school. In the film Malmros demonstrates for the first time his unique ability to entice an arresting sincerity of acting, expression, and movement from his non-professional child actors and adolescents that not only allows viewers to perceive the laughter, but also the vulnerability. Lars Ole, 5C is a keen-edged, emotionally precise masterpiece of psychological realism.

His next films, Drenge (1977) and Kuldskabens træ (1981), completed the trilogy on the vulnerable years and up through the 1970s and 1980s the medical student became one of the most important auteurs of Danish cinema. The titles reveal a development of his perspective from the specific to the non-specific to the mythological loss of innocence. In the latter, his self-awareness is clear. If anything, again and again Malmros’s films are about the loss of innocence and thereby the fall of man. Drenge is sui generis a triptych: child, youth, and young adult, with emotionally inflamed, problem-packed relationships with the opposite sex at its center.

Malmros returns to Drenge in his metamovie Århus by Night (1989)—a salute to Truffaut’s La nuit américaine (1973)—about the amateur director from Århus who is given a professional film unit to work with for the first time and thereby encounters not only Copenhageners but hardened pros who take every opportunity to make a fool of the amateur and his dispirited love affair. The loss of innocence is once again the focal point, but this time with self-reflecting humour. In Kuldskabe’s træ the director tackles the years of adolescent proper, with its burgeoning sexuality, when emotions really come to a head and sensitivity is most pronounced. As in Lars Ole, 5C a school class is the pivotal point, but this time it is a class of 14- and 15-year-olds, and the cohesive story of development has a girl, Elin, at its center, who matures early and goes from being the leader of the class to its scapegoat. The director’s alter ego is now christened Niels Ole. Elin’s fall is due merely to the fact that she stands out from the crowd because of her early puberty and consequent desire to dance cheek-to-cheek; when she chooses older boys and rejects Helge, the most popular boy in the class, the bullying starts. The meticulous depiction of the lost years of childhood and the loss of innocence becomes magic realism borne by bittersweet insight and keen, but gentle psychological analysis. In its entire approach it is a film about childhood, but for adults.

After this trilogy Malmros partly abandoned autobiography in Skønheden og udyret (1983), which portrays a father’s custody of his daughter’s virtue with a suggestion of incestuous jealousy towards her friends and potential lovers. He then discovers that what he has guarded was lost long ago—to the person he would have least expected. If one wishes to pursue the semi-autobiographical angle it might be the adult director’s relationship with his young cast, particularly in adolescence when they subconsciously know the difference between child and adult that children unconsciously transgress. In Kærlighedens smerte (1992) Malmros returns to the theme of Skønheden og udyret, this time with the father-daughter relationship as a teacher-pupil one, initiated by the young female pupil. It begins as a flirt, but turns into mutual relationship and marriage until Kirsten displays the manic-depressive characteristics that lead to the inevitable tragic suicidal conclusion. For a director who has cultivated suggestion and shrunk from grand passion, this is a film of unusually powerful emotional depth, an intense, deeply tragic film about a person who is “in her own pocket,” as she says. We recall the director’s medical background, but the film is not a psychiatric case study; on the contrary, it is a portrayal of the unfathomable pain and the ecstatic happiness that may both be part of being a human being.

With Barbara (1997), Malmros leaves Århus for the first time, and thus the stuff of which all his memories are made, to base a film on a Danish literary classic set in the Faeroe Islands in the eighteenth century. The Barbara of the title is the sensual, irresistible focal point of the islands, a woman who obeys her desires and sets men’s hearts ablaze, including that of the young pastor, who marries her, well aware that she is more than he can manage. We rediscover the encounter of innocence with another universe, along with echoes of visual and narrative features from Nils Malmros’s two previous films. But Malmros is not on home ground, and the loss of innocence does not quite possess the same painful sincerity and resonance of knowledge that we have grown accustomed to.

—Dan Nissen

MAMBETY, Djibril Diop

Films as Director:

1969 Contras City (A City of Contrasts); Badou Boy (Bad Boy)
1973 Touki Bouki (Journey of the Hyena)
1989 Parlons, grand-mère (Let’s Speak, Grandmother)
1992 Hyènes (Hyenas)
1994 Le Franc (The Franc)
1998 La petite vendeuse de soleil (The Little Girl Who Sold the Sun)

Publications

By MAMBETY: articles—

On MAMBETY: books—

On MAMBETY: articles—

Djibril Diop Mambety’s work is among the most enigmatic and imaginative in African cinema. This is partially due to his complex use of sound and imagery, which has inspired a wide variety of interpretations. Mambety’s employment of visual and auditory symbols reveals both a worldly perspective and a deep concern for marginalized people in his home country. Ultimately, the meanings of Mambety’s films are left to the viewers. As Mambety explains, “when a story ends, or ‘falls into the ocean,’ as we say—it creates dreams.”

Mambety’s best-known works are two trilogies. The first is a trilogy of feature films, which includes Touki Bouki (Journey of the Hyena) and Hyènes (Hyenas). The second is a series of short films titled Tales of Ordinary People, including Le Franc (The Franc) and La petite vendeuse de soleil (The Little Girl Who Sold the Sun). Mambety died before completing his work.

Mambety’s first trilogy centers around the themes of power and madness. Touki Bouki recounts the journey of two Senegalese youths, Mori and Anta, who dream of finding riches in Europe. The pair make comic attempts to steal money in order to pay for a trip to Paris. The characters’ escapades are combined with dream sequences in which Mori and Anta throw money from a luxurious car, and wave to cheering crowds. While the rebels are portrayed affectionately, Mambety reveals that the Promised Land of Paris is an illusion. As Mori fantasizes about the happiness France will bring him, French visitors in a yacht offshore discuss their racist beliefs about the childishness of Africans. The film’s images suggest that Mori and Anta’s generation have been sacrificed; the horns Mori attaches to his motorcycle remind viewers of the cattle slaughtered at the beginning of the film. Mambety’s compelling story is made even more fascinating by his editing strategy, which “subverts spacial, temporal, and graphic continuity: disjunctive editing, jump cuts, and calculated disparities between sound and image violate dominant patterns of representation within both Western and African cinema,” writes Nwachuku Frank Ukadike.

Mambety’s Hyènes, an adaptation of Swiss writer Friedrich Dürrenmatt’s play The Visit, delves into the theme of how the influence of Western materialism and neocolonial power has corrupted African societies. Lingère Ramatou, an African woman who is “richer than the World Bank,” tempts the Senegalese town of Colobane with her abundant wealth. In a carnivalesque atmosphere reminiscent of an American amusement park, she persuades the town that she is the answer to their economic troubles with a spectacle of fireworks, firing ranges, fast rides, and luxurious prizes. She offers to share her wealth, provided that her former lover, Draman Drameh, be killed. Mambety comically portrays Draman Drameh’s alarm when the townspeople start buying things from his shop that they cannot afford. Lingère Ramatou succeeds in buying the town’s court, in addition to its soul. Mambety’s political message is clear: neocolonial powers such as the World Bank dictate to African governments how to manage their funds, and people suffer devastating consequences.
Mambety’s trilogy of shorts is a tribute to the courage of marginalized Africans who are in a state of continuous struggle. Le Franc appreciates the imagination of a poor musician while offering an incisive commentary on the devaluation of the African franc (CFA). La petite vendeuse de soleil is Mambety’s most optimistic work. A courageous young girl, Sili, breaks into the male-dominated business of hawking newspapers, despite her physical handicap. She speaks in positive tones, hoping that one day the Senegalese government will draw nearer to people living in the street. Mambety does not romanticize her position, but creates what he calls “a hymn to street children.” Sili’s face is often illuminated by sunshine, suggesting that Mambety left the world with an optimistic vision of Senegal’s future.

—Ellie Higgins

MAMOULIAN, Rouben

Nationality: American. Born: Tiflis, Caucasia, Russia, 8 October 1897; became U.S. citizen, 1930. Education: Lycée Montaigne, Paris; gymnasium in Tiflis; University of Moscow; Vakhtangov Studio Theatre, Moscow. Family: Married Azadia Newman, 1945. Career: Stage director in London, from 1920; production director of Eastman Theater, Rochester, New York, 1923–26; directed Porgy on Broadway, 1927; signed to Paramount, directed first film, 1929; stage director, especially of musicals, through the 1940s. Awards: Best Direction, New York Film Critics, for The Gay Desperado, 1936; Award of Excellence, Armenian American Bicentennial Celebration, 1976. Died: In Los Angeles, 4 December 1987.

Films as Director:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1929</td>
<td>Applause</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>City Streets</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (+ pr); Love Me Tonight (+ pr)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>Song of Songs (+ pr); Queen Christina</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>We Live Again</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>Becky Sharp</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>The Gay Desperado</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>High, Wide, and Handsome</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>Golden Boy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>The Mark of Zorro</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>Blood and Sand</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1942</td>
<td>Rings on Her Fingers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1948</td>
<td>Summer Holiday</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1957</td>
<td>Silk Stockings</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

By MAMOULIAN: books—

By MAMOULIAN: articles—

- Article in Interviews with Film Directors, by Andrew Sarris, Indianapolis, 1967.
- Interview with H.A. Hargrave, in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), vol. 10, no. 4, October 1982.
On MAMOULIAN: books—

On MAMOULIAN: articles—

* * *

Rouben Mamoulian is certainly one of the finest directors in American film history. While not considered strictly an auteur with a unifying theme running through his films, the importance of each of his movies on an individual basis is significant. Mamoulian did not have a large output, having completed only sixteen assignments in his twenty-year career in motion pictures, principally because he was also very active in the theater. His most famous stage successes were the highly innovative productions of Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein II’s musicals Oklahoma! and Carousel in the mid-1940s.

Mamoulian’s first film, Applause, is a poignant story of a third-rate vaudevillian played by the popular singer Helen Morgan. The first film to utilize two sound tracks instead of one to produce a better quality sound, Applause is also noteworthy for its innovative use of a moving camera.

Mamoulian’s third film, Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, is still regarded by most historians as the definitive film version of the Robert Louis Stevenson novella, as well as being one of the best horror films of all time. Yet it would be doing the film a disservice to call it “just” a horror movie. The use of light and shadows, the depth of emotion expressed by the main character, and the evocation of the evil hidden in all men make it a classic. For the time it was a very sensual film. Miriam Hopkins as Ivy Pearson is not just a girl from the lower strata of society, as the character was in other versions. In Mamoulian’s film she is deliberately sensual. Fredric March, in a truly magnificent performance, is troubled by his desire for Ivy long before he turns into Hyde, which is especially evident in the erotic dream sequence. What Mamoulian was able to do in this film is show the simultaneous existence of good and evil in Jekyll before it erupts into the drug-induced schizophrenic manifestation of Mr. Hyde.

Becky Sharp, although not particularly noteworthy for its dramatic style, is today remembered as being the first film in the three-strip Technicolor process. Unusually for a director more closely associated with the stage than film, Mamoulian tried to learn and perfect virtually all of the techniques of filmmaking, and he could be accomplished in almost any genre: horror, musical, swashbuckler, or historical drama. Perhaps the only genre at which he was not successful was light comedy. His only real comedy, Rings on Her Fingers, is entertaining, but does not live up to the standards which he set in his other films. The three previous films, Golden Boy, The Mark of Zorro, and Blood and Sand, were all very successful films which are still applauded by critics and audiences alike.

Mamoulian’s last film, Silk Stockings, was a very popular adaption of the musical play derived from Ninotchka, with a lively score by Cole Porter. The combination of Cyd Charisse and Fred Astaire in the lead roles was naturally responsible for a great part of the movie’s success, and Mamoulian’s direction and staging allowed their talents to be shown to their best advantage. Silk Stockings has a variety of delightful “specialty” numbers which do not detract from the main action, notably “Stereophonic Sound,” as well as some charming character roles played by Peter Lorre, Jules Munshin, and George Tobias.

Rouben Mamoulian was one of the most talented, creative filmmakers of all time, and while his films are few, virtually every one is a tribute to his genius.

—Patricia King Hanson

MANKIEWICZ, Joseph L.

Nationality: American. Born: Joseph Leo Mankiewicz in Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, 11 February 1909. Education: Stuyvesant High School, New York; Columbia University, B.A., 1928. Family: Married 1) Elizabeth Young, 1934 (divorced 1937), one son; 2) Rosa Stradner, 1939 (died 1958), two sons; 3) Rosemary Matthews, 1962, one daughter. Career: Reporter for Chicago Tribune, and stringer for

!Joseph L. Mankiewicz
Variety in Berlin, 1928; with help of brother Herman, became junior writer at Paramount, 1929; writer for MGM, 1933, then producer, from 1935; contract taken over by Twentieth Century-Fox, 1943; directed La Bohème for Metropolitan Opera, New York, 1952; formed Figaro Inc., independent production company, 1953. Awards: Academy Awards for Best Director and Best Screenplay, for A Letter to Three Wives, 1949, and for Best Director and Best Screenplay, for All about Eve, 1950. Died: 5 February 1993.

Films as Director:

1946 Dragonwyck (+ sc); Somewhere in the Night (+ co-sc)
1947 The Late George Apley; The Ghost and Mrs. Muir
1948 Escape
1949 A Letter to Three Wives (+ sc); House of Strangers (+ co-sc, uncredited)
1950 No Way Out (+ co-sc); All about Eve (+ sc)
1951 People Will Talk (+ sc)
1952 Five Fingers (+ dialogue, uncredited)
1953 Julius Caesar (+ sc)
1954 The Barefoot Contessa (+ sc)
1955 Guys and Dolls (+ sc)
1958 The Quiet American (+ sc)
1959 Suddenly, Last Summer
1963 Cleopatra (+ co-sc)
1967 The Honey Pot (+ co-p, sc)
1970 There Was a Crooked Man . . . (+ pr)
1972 Sleuth

Other Films:

1929 Fast Company (Sutherland) (sc, dialogue)
1930 Slightly Scarlet (co-sc); The Social Lion (Sutherland) (sc, adaptation and dialogue); Only Saps Work (Gardner and Knopf) (sc, dialogue)
1931 The Gang Buster (Sutherland) (sc, dialogue); Finn and Hattie (Taurog) (sc, dialogue); June Moon (Sutherland) (co-sc); Skippy (Taurog) (co-sc); Newly Rich (Forbidden Adventure) (co-sc); Sooky (Taurog) (co-sc)
1932 This Reckless Age (sc); Sky Bride (co-sc); Million Dollar Legs (Cline) (co-sc); “Rollo and the Roadhogs” and “The Three Marines” sketches of If I Had a Million (sc)
1933 Diplomaniacs (co-sc); Emergency Call (co-sc); Too Much Harmony (Sutherland) (sc); Alice in Wonderland (McLeod) (co-sc)
1934 Manhattan Melodrama (Van Dyke, W.S.) (co-sc); Our Daily Bread (Vidor) (sc, dialogue); Forsaking All Others (Van Dyke, W.S.) (sc)
1935 I Live My Life (Van Dyke, W.S.) (sc)
1936 Three Godfathers (pr); Fury (Lang) (pr, co-story, uncredited); The Gorgeous Hussy (Brown) (pr); Love on the Run (Van Dyke, W.S.) (pr)
1937 The Bride Wore Red (Arzner) (pr); Double Wedding (pr)
1938 Mannequin (Borzage) (pr); Three Comrades (Borzage) (pr); The Shopworn Angel (pr); The Shining Hour (Borzage) (pr); A Christmas Carol (pr)
1939 The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn (Huckleberry Finn) (pr)

1940 Strange Cargo (Borzage) (pr); The Philadelphia Story (Cukor) (pr)
1941 The Wild Man of Borneo (pr); The Feminine Touch (Van Dyke, W.S.) (pr)
1942 Woman of the Year (Stevens) (pr); Cairo (Van Dyke, W.S.) (pr); Reunion in France (pr)
1944 The Keys of the Kingdom (Stahl) (pr, co-sc)

Publications

By MANKIEWICZ: books—

By MANKIEWICZ: articles—

By MANKIEWICZ: books—

By MANKIEWICZ: articles—

Few of Joseph Mankiewicz’s contemporaries experimented so radically with narrative form. In The Barefoot Contessa, Mankiewicz (who wrote most of the films he directed) let a half-dozen voice-over narrators tell the Contessa’s story, included flashbacks within flashbacks, and even showed one event twice (the slapping scene in the restaurant) from two different points of view. Multiple narrators tell the story in All about Eve, too, and in the non-narrated framing story for that film, Mankiewicz uses slow motion to make it seem as if the elapsing time between the beginning of the film and the end is only a few seconds. For much of the film, The Quiet American also has a narrator, and he seems almost totally omniscient. Apparently, he looks back at events with a firm understanding of their development and of the motivation of the people involved. But in the end, we find out that the narrator was wrong about practically everything, and so gave us an inaccurate account of things. A Letter to Three Wives is made up, primarily, of several lengthy flashbacks, and hallucinogenic flashback sequences provide the payoff to the story in Mankiewicz’s adaption of the Tennessee Williams play Suddenly Last Summer. Mankiewicz’s films, then, stand out in part because of the way they tell their stories. But there are also thematic motifs that turn up again and again, and one of the most important is the impact of the dead upon the living. Frequently, a dead character is more important in a Mankiewicz film than any living one. The Late George Apley, of course, concerns someone who has already died. Understanding a mother’s dead son is the key for the psychiatrist in Suddenly Last Summer. In The Ghost and Mrs. Muir, it is the presence of the non-corporeal sea captain that makes the film so entertaining. The Barefoot Contessa opens with the Contessa’s funeral, and then various mourners tell us what they know about the woman who has just been buried. And, of course, a famous funeral scene forms the centerpiece of another Mankiewicz film: Mark Antony’s oration in Julius Caesar. It is Antony’s stirring performance as a eulogist that turns his countrymen against Brutus.

Indeed, Mankiewicz’s films deal constantly with the notion of effective and highly theatrical performance. All about Eve, for instance, is all about performing, since it concerns people who work on the Broadway stage. The barefoot contessa goes from cabaret dancer to Hollywood star. In The Honey Pot, an aging man pretends to be dying, to see how it affects his mistress. And in Sleuth, one marvels at the number of disguises worn by one man in his attempt to gain revenge on another.

Perhaps because he began as a screenwriter, Mankiewicz has often been thought of as a scenarist first and a director only second. But not only was he an eloquent scriptwriter, he was also an elegant visual stylist whose talents as a director far exceeded his reputation. He is one of the few major American directors who was more appreciated during the early years of his career than during the later stages. He won consecutive Best Director Academy Awards in 1949 and 1950 (for A Letter to Three Wives and All about Eve), but after the 1963 disaster Cleopatra, Mankiewicz’s standing as a filmmaker declined rapidly.

—Eric Smoodin

MANN, Anthony

Nationality: American. Born: Anton or Emil Bundsmann in Point Loma or San Diego, California, 1907. Education: Educated in New York City public schools. Family: Married 1) Mildred Kenyon, 1931 (divorced 1956), one son, one daughter; 2) Sarita Montiel, 1957 (marriage annulled 1963); 3) Anna (Mann), one son. Career: Began work in theatre following father’s death, 1923; production manager for Theater Guild, New York, from late 1920s, then director, 1933;

Films as Director:

- 1942 Dr. Broadway; Moonlight in Havana
- 1943 Nobody’s Darling
- 1944 My Best Gal; Strangers in the Night
- 1945 The Great Flamarion; Two o’Clock Courage; Sing Your Way Home
- 1946 Strange Impersonation; The Bamboo Blonde
- 1947 Desperate; Railroaded
- 1948 T-Men (+ co-sc, uncredited); Raw Deal; He Walked by Night (co-d, uncredited)
- 1949 Reign of Terror (The Black Book); Border Incident
- 1950 Side Street; Devil’s Doorway; The Furies; Winchester ‘73
- 1951 The Tall Target
- 1952 Bend of the River
- 1953 The Naked Spur; Thunder Bay
- 1954 The Glenn Miller Story
- 1955 The Far Country; Strategic Air Command; The Man from Laramie; The Last Frontier
- 1956 Serenade
- 1957 Men in War; The Tin Star
- 1958 God’s Little Acre; Man of the West
- 1961 Cimarron; El Cid
- 1964 The Fall of the Roman Empire
- 1965 The Heroes of Telemark
- 1968 A Dandy in Aspic (co-d)

Publications

By MANN: articles—

Interview, in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), March 1957.

Interview with Christopher Wicking and Barrie Pattison, in Screen (London), July/October 1969.

On MANN: books—

Kitses, Jim, Horizons West, Bloomington, Indiana, 1970.

Wright, Will, Sixguns and Society, Berkeley, California, 1975.

Basinger, Jeanine, Anthony Mann, Boston, 1979.

On MANN: articles—

Reid, J.H., ‘‘Mann and His Environment,’’ in Films and Filming (London), January 1962.

Reid, J.H., ‘‘Tension at Twilight,’’ in Films and Filming (London), February 1962.

Handzo, Stephen, ‘‘Through the Devil’s Doorway: The Early Westerns of Anthony Mann,’’ in Bright Lights (Los Angeles), Summer 1976.

Smith, Robert, ‘‘Mann in the Dark,’’ in Bright Lights (Los Angeles), Fall 1976.

‘‘Special Mann Double Issue’’ of Movietone News (Seattle), Fall 1978.

Miller, Don, ‘‘Eagle-Lion: The Violent Years,’’ in Focus on Film (London), November 1978.

Pulleine, Tim, ‘‘History, Drama, Abstraction: Mann’s Route to Madrid,’’ and ‘‘Mann’s Route to Madrid, Part II,’’ in Monthly Film Bulletin (London), March and April 1982.

‘‘Anthony Mann,’’ in Film Dope (London), December 1987.

Everschor, Franz, ‘‘On Some Men It Shows,’’ in Film-Dienst (Cologne), vol. 49, no. 3, June 1996.

Kemp, Philip, ‘‘The Story of All Wars: Anthony Mann’s Men in War,’’ in Film Comment (New York), vol. 32, no. 4, July-August 1996.

* * *

Though he incidentally directed films in various genres (the musical, the war movie, the spy drama), Anthony Mann’s career falls into three clearly marked phases: the early period of low-budget, B-feature films noir; the central, most celebrated period of westerns, mostly with James Stewart; and his involvement in the epic (with Samuel Bronston as producer). All three periods produced distinguished work (in particular, El Cid has strong claims to be considered the finest of all the wide-screen historical epics of the 1950s and 1960s, and the first half of The Fall of the Roman Empire matches it), but it is the body of work from the middle period in which Mann’s achievement is most consistent and on which his reputation largely depends.

The first of the Stewart westerns, Winchester ’73, contains most of the major components Mann was to develop in the series that followed. There is the characteristic use of landscape—never for the superficial beauty or mere pictorial effect that is a cliché of the genre, nor to ennoble the human figures through monumental grandeur and harmonious man-in-nature compositions, as in the classical westerns of Ford. In Mann, the function of landscape is primarily dramatic, and nature is felt as inhospitable, indifferent, or hostile. If there is a mountain, it will have to be climbed, arduously and painfully; barren rocks provide a favourite location for a shoot-out, offering partial cover but also the continued danger of the ricochet. The preferred narrative structure of the films is the journey, and its stages are often marked by a symbolic progression in landscape, from fertile valley to bare rock or snow-covered peak, corresponding to a stripping-away of the trappings of civilization and civilized behavior. Bend of the River represents the most systematic treatment of this prior to Man of the West. Winchester '73 also establishes the Mann hero (“protagonist” might be a better word): neurotic, obsessive, driven, usually motivated by a desire for revenge that reduces him emotionally and morally to a brutalized condition scarcely superior to that of the villain. Hero and villain, indeed, become mirror reflections of one another: in Winchester '73 they are actually brothers (one has murdered the father, the other seeks revenge); in Bend of the River, both are ex-gunfighters, Stewart bearing the mark around his neck of the hangman’s noose from which, at the beginning of the film, he saves Arthur Kennedy. Violence in Mann’s westerns is never glorified: it is invariably represented as ugly, disturbing, and painful (emotionally as much as physically), and this is true as much when it is inflicted by the heroes as by the villains.

Mann’s supreme achievement is certainly Man of the West, the culmination of the Stewart series despite the fact that the Stewart role is taken over by Gary Cooper. It remains one of the great American films and one of the great films about America. It carries to their fullest development all the components described above, offering a magnificently complete realization of their significance. Cooper plays Link Jones (the “link” between the old West and the new), a reformed outlaw stranded in the wilderness while on a mission to hire a teacher for the first school in the new township of Good Hope. Link is sucked back into involvement with his old gang of “brother,” “cousins,” and monstrous adoptive father Dock Tobin (Lee J. Cobb), and forced into more and more excessive violence, as he destroys his doubles in order finally to detach himself, drained and compromised, from his own roots.

—Robin Wood

MANN, Michael

Nationality: American. Born: Chicago, Illinois, 5 February 1943. Education: University of Wisconsin, 1965; London Film School, 1967. Family: Married to artist Summer Mann. Career: Directed shorts, commercials, and documentaries in England, 1967–72; wrote episodes for television series Starsky and Hutch and Police Story and created Vega$ and Miami Vice; directorial debut, The Jericho Mile (TV movie), 1979; screen debut, Thief, 1981. Awards: Directors Guild of America Best Director Award, 1980, for The Jericho Mile; Emmy Award for Outstanding Writing in a Limited Series or Special, 1980, for The Jericho Mile; Cognac Festival du Film Policier Critics Award, for Manhunter, 1987; National Board of Review Freedom of Expression Award, 1999, Golden Satellite Award for Best Director, 2000, and Writers Guild of America Paul Selvin Honorary Award (with Eric Roth), 2000, all for The Insider. Agent: Jeff Berg, International Creative Management, 8899 Beverly Blvd., Los Angeles, CA 90048, U.S.A.

Films as Director:

- 1979 The Jericho Mile (for TV) (+ sc, exex-pr)
- 1981 Thief (+ co-sc + exec-pr)
- 1983 The Keep (+ co-sc)
- 1986 Manhunter (+ sc, pr)
- 1989 L.A. Takedown (for TV) (+ exec-pr)
- 1992 The Last of the Mohicans (+ co-sc, pr)
- 1995 Heat (+ co-sc, pr)
- 1999 The Insider (+ co-sc, pr)

Other Films:

- 1978 Vega$ (for TV) (sc); Straight Time (sc, uncredited)
- 1980 Swan Song (for TV) (sc)
- 1986 Band of the Hand (exec-pr)
- 1990 Drug Wars: The Camarena Story (TV mini-series) (exec-pr, co-sc)
- 1992 Drug Wars: The Cocaine Cartel (TV mini-series) (exec-pr)

Publications

By MANN: articles—

“An Interview with the Director of Thief,” in Rolling Stone, 1981.

“Castle Keep,” in Film Comment, 1983.

On MANN: articles—

Greco, M., “‘Up and Coming: Michael Mann,’” in Film Comment, 1980.

Murphy, K., “‘Communion,’” in Film Comment, 1991.

Smith, G., “‘Mann Hunters,’” in Film Comment, 1992.

Combs, Richard, “‘Michael Mann: Becoming,’” in Film Comment (New York), March-April 1996.

Schnelle, F., in EPD Film (Frankfurt), March 1996.

“‘Bob and Al in the Coffee Shop,’” in Sight and Sound (London), March 1996.

* * *

Michael Mann’s cinematic landscape is the mean streets of urban neo-noir. His stylistic signature is a hip, almost neon look, the images sharply edited and backed by adrenalin-pumping music. Given the razzle-dazzle MTV approach he brings to his craft, it is ironic that he started out wanting to be a writer. However, while attending the University of Wisconsin and majoring in English literature, he took a film course for a fast A and got hooked on moviemaking instead.

Mann transferred to the London Film School in 1965 for training and graduated two years later. Like a number of contemporary directors, he got his start making television commercials, and he has carried over many of the stylistic ingredients of commercials into his subsequent film work.

Mann paid his dues in Hollywood writing episodes for TV cop shows of the 1970s, such as Starsky and Hutch and Joseph Wambaugh’s Police Story; for the ABC network he wrote the pilot episode of Vega$, a short-lived Robert Urich private-eye series whose setting lent itself naturally to Mann’s “neon look.” By this time a specialist in the genre the French call roman policier, Mann had little difficulty convincing the network to give him a shot at writing and directing a feature film in a similar vein for its growing made-for-TV movie division. The result was The Jericho Mile (1979), which replaced the sun-drenched mean streets of Starsky and Hutch and the often rain-slicked ones of Police Story with the pallid walls of Folsom Prison. A hard-hitting drama about a convicted murderer (Peter Strauss) who survives the brutality of his surroundings and regains his self-respect by striving to become an Olympic runner, the well-received film added considerable luster to the often maligned TV movie form and won Mann an Emmy award. It also landed him a contract to make his theatrical film debut.

Turning again to his chosen milieu—the seedy world of crime and criminals—Mann wrote and directed Thief (1981), the gritty tale (with echoes of the classic Dassin film Rififi) of a safecracker who tries to make one last score and go straight, only to dig himself in even deeper. James Caan played the title role in the doom-laden thriller, a thematic and stylistic throwback to the classic films noir of the 1940s, but updated with the hip look and, especially, sound (courtesy here of Tangerine Dream) that are Mann’s trademark.

Mann segued from Thief to The Keep (1983), based on F. Paul Wilson’s novel about German soldiers who encounter a vampiric presence in the title fortress during World War II. Mann again brought considerable stylistic verve to the fantastic drama, but perhaps because he was in unfamiliar territory—the Carpathian mountains rather than the streets of L.A. and Chicago—the film failed to come together. Critics and audiences found it to be incomprehensible. It went belly-up at the box office and Mann went back to TV to create Miami Vice, one of the most influential cop series of the 1980s, and Crime Story. The former was a glitzy roman policier aimed at the MTV generation, while the latter was a period noir series with a neo-noir look aimed at older viewers. Mann also directed a mini-series docudrama about the murder of narcotics agent Enrique Camarena called The Drug Wars (1990).

In between his TV work, Mann returned to the big screen to make one of his best and most underrated films, Manhunter (1986), based on the novel Red Dragon by Thomas Harris, in which the author introduced his master serial killer character Hannibal “the Cannibal” Lecter to the public. He is played in the film by Brian Cox.)

Produced by Dino De Laurentis’s DEG Entertainment, Manhunter failed to get much of a promotional boost due to DEG’s financial collapse and went nowhere at the box office. It was left to director Jonathan Demme and star Anthony Hopkins to make “Hannibal the Cannibal,” a household name with Silence of the Lambs (1991), their Academy Award-winning screen version of Harris’s sequel to Red Dragon.

Mann partisans as well as many thriller fans consider Manhunter to be the superior work, however.

As he had done with The Keep, Mann shifted gears entirely with The Last of the Mohicans (1992), this time more successfully. It is a harshly beautiful—and definitive—version of James Fenimore Cooper’s oft-filmed novel about the French and Indian War. Mann refused to take the politically correct route of making his Native American characters helpless, long-suffering victims. Instead, the film restores their dignity by restoring their historical fearsomeness as warriors, something the movies have been timid about doing for decades. In fact, Wes Studi’s ferocious and very human villain Magua—who hungers as much for self-respect as for revenge—lingers in the memory more than does the film’s hero, Hawkeye, played by Daniel Day-Lewis. Though the film’s period milieu (with the mountains of North Carolina making a convincing stand-in for the 18th-century Adirondacks) is atypical of Mann, its kinetic mixture of sight and sound (the music score is remarkable) is all Mann. A moving saga of America’s past, it is one of the most exciting adventure movies of recent times.

Heat returned Mann to the mean streets of urban America. The film is notable for its first-time pairing of gangster movie icons Al Pacino and Robert De Niro as the drama’s opposing forces (although this dynamic duo shares little screen time together). A sprawling, almost three-hour crime drama, it was hailed by many critics as Mann’s most ambitious study of his traditional milieu to date. Despite some high-powered set pieces (an intense shoot-out on a busy New York City street is a particular stand-out), the film, by contrast to many other Mann crime dramas, is turgid and melodramatic in its overall effect, capped by an ending that resolves the plot not with a bang but a whimper.

Not so Mann’s next film, The Insider, wherein the director cast his eye not on street crime but on corporate crime. The film is based on the true story of Jeffrey Wigand (Russell Crowe), a former researcher and executive for the Brown & Williamson tobacco company who blows the whistle on the industry’s awareness of the addictiveness of cigarettes—and covert research to increase that addictiveness (which Wigand took part in)—to 60 Minutes producer Lowell Bergman (Al Pacino). Typical of many Mann heroes, Wigand exposes this public health issue in part to regain his self-respect, an act that comes at great personal cost to him when 60 Minutes bows to pressure from Big Tobacco as well as its own corporate interests, shelves the interview, and Wigand’s life and career crumble as he’s hung out to dry—until the truth finally comes out in the print press.

Mann was rewarded for this rich and compelling docudrama—which unlike most big-budget Hollywood product of recent times has more on its mind than just a hat—with the best reviews of his career. Neither the tobacco industry nor 60 Minutes were among those lavishing kudos, however.

—John McCarty

MARKER, Chris

Films as Director:

1952  Olympia 52 (+ sc, co-ph)
1953  Les Statues meurent aussi (co-d, co-sc)
1956  Dimanche à Pekin (+ sc, ph)
1958  Lettre de Sibérie (Letter from Siberia) (+ sc)
1960  Description d’un combat (+ sc); Les Astronautes (co-d, sc)
1961  Cuba Si! (+ sc, ph)
1963  Le Joli Mai (+ sc)
1964  La Jetée (completed 1962) (+ sc)
1965  Le Mystère Koumiko (The Koumiko Mystery) (+ sc)
1966  Si j’avais quatre dromadaires (+ sc)
1968  La Sixième Face du Pentagone (collaboration with Francois Reichenbach) (+ sc)
1969  A bientôt j’espère (+ sc)
1970  La Bataille des dix millions (Cuba: Battle of the Ten Million) (+ sc); Les Mots ont un sens (+ sc)
1973  Le Train en marche (+ sc)
1977  Le Fond de l’air est rouge (in 2 parts) (+ sc)
1983  Sans soleil (Sunless)
1984  2084 (+ sc)
1986  Hommage à Simone Signoret (+ sc)
1989  L’Héritage de la Chouette (for TV, 13-part series) (+ sc, pr)
1993  Le Dernier Bolchevik (The Last Bolshevik) (+ sc)
1997  Level Five (+ ph)

Other Films:

1957  Le Mystère de l’atelier (commentary, collaborator on production)
1967  Loin du Vietnam (Far from Vietnam) (Resnais) (pr, ed)
1970  L’Aveu (The Confession) (Costa-Gavras) (asst ph)
1973  Kashima Paradise (commentary)
1975/76  La batalla de Chile (The Battle of Chile) (Guzmán) (co-pr)
1976  La Spirale (contributor)
1988  Les Pyramides bleues (artistic advisor)
1995  Twelve Monkeys (co-sc)

Publications

By MARKER: books—

Le Coeur net, Lausanne, 1950.

By MARKER: articles—

On MARKER: articles—

Graham, Peter, “Cinéma Vérité in France,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Summer 1964.
Smith, Gavin, “Straight to Film,” in Film Comment (New York), July-August 1997.

* * *

Chris Marker’s principal distinction may be to have developed a form of personal essay within the documentary mode. Aside from his work little is known about him; he is elusive bordering on mysterious. Born in a suburb of Paris, he has allowed a legend to grow up about his birth in a “far-off country.” Marker is not his name; it is one of a half-dozen aliases he has used. He chose “Marker,” it is thought, in reference to the Magic Marker pen.

He began his career as a writer (publishing poems, a novel, and various essays and translations) and journalist (whose travels took him all over the world). He is the writer of all his films and cinematographer on many of them. Their verbal and visual wit almost conceal the philosophical speculation and erudition they contain. Their commentaries are a kind of stream of consciousness; their poetry is about himself as well as about the subjects—he reactions to what he and we are seeing and hearing.

Marker is the foreign correspondent and inquiring reporter. He is especially interested in transitional societies, in “Life in the process of becoming history,” as he has put it. His films are not only set in specific places, they are about the cultures of those places. Though he has tended to work in socialist countries more than most Western filmmakers, he is also fascinated by Japan. Concerned with leftist issues, he remains a member of the intellectual Left, politically committed but not doctrinaire. “Involved objectivity” is his own phrase for his approach.

In Le Joli Mai, for example, Marker interviews Parisians about their ambitions, their political views, their understanding of the society they live in. His sample is a cross-section—a street-corner clothing salesman, a clerk, a house painter, a young couple wanting to get married, an Algerian worker—with a substantial working-class representation. The interviewees find that work offers no satisfaction. Its goal is money; what happiness money will bring is by no means certain. Marker insists to one interviewee who opts for material success that his view of life is “a trifle limited.” “No interest in other things?” Marker asks. This exchange is characteristic. Marker’s tone is frequently ironical and implicitly judgmental. He engages in argument with the interviewees and makes known his disappointment in some of their answers. The interviews assume the form of a dialectic.

In the second half of Le Joli Mai Marker breaks away from individuals and interviews altogether. Instead he deals with news events—a police charge which crushed eight people to death in the Métro, the half-million mourners at their funeral, violent responses to the acquittal of General Salan (former commander-in-chief of French forces in Algeria), massive railroad and Renault strikes—interscut with nightclub revelry. The events refer back to those interviewed in the first half who felt themselves “unfree” to alter or even to question the social system.
The Koumiko Mystery, set amidst the 1964 Tokyo Olympics, begins but never stays with them for long. Its real subject is a young Japanese woman named Koumiko Moroaka, her city (Tokyo), her country, and the Far East as a whole. If, in a sense, Koumiko is protagonist, there is also an antagonist of sorts. The Western world and its influences are seen again and again in images on television screens, in the tastes evident in department store windows. Part of the film is photographed directly off black-and-white television screens. In this way the concerns and attitudes of the larger world are isolated. The rest of the film, which is in color, is wholly personal. Marker’s fascination with foreign, particularly Japanese, cultures is evident in the making of Sans soleil and A.K. The former is an idiosyncratic travelogue about Japan, narrated by a fictional cameraman, while the latter is a documentary about Akira Kurosawa’s (arguably Japan’s most renowned filmmaker) making of Ran. In both films, Marker’s point of view remains that of an observer, a bystander. It is exactly through such deliberate distance and distanciation that the filmmaker contemplates issues that have dominated his work to date: How do various cultures perceive and sustain themselves and each other in the increasingly intermingled modern age? How, on the other hand, can one find the space of him/herself when time, place, and memory are obscured, constructed, and forgotten? In the case of Sans soleil, not only are images of Japan—purposefully inserted with those of Guinea Bissau, Ireland, Iceland, and elsewhere—robbed of any consistency and specificity, but memories and perceptions are also fictionalized and therefore called into ultimate question.

Following the failure of communism, as most brutally indicated by the disintegration of the former Soviet Union, comes ‘‘one of the most trenchant commentaries Marker has ever allowed himself,’’ according to David Thomson, in his 1993 film most famous commentaries Marker has ever allowed himself, ‘‘involved objectivity’’ stylistically, it also may suggest a stark disillusionment of a sort in Marker, the Marxist-inspired documentarian. There is, however, no reason to stop anticipating further works by Marker that demonstrate the willingness to impose his own shaping intelligence and imagination on his materials. His films will continue to be most valued for what he perceives and understands about what he is observing, and for their whimsical juggling of forms, their tweaking of conventions and expectations, and their idiosyncratic style.

—Jack C. Ellis, updated by Guo-Juin Hong

MARKOPOULOS, Gregory

Nationality: American. Born: Toledo, Ohio, 12 March 1928. Education: University of Southern California. Career: Completed first experimental films, 1948; lecturer on film at University of Athens, Greece, 1954–55; worked on Serenity, 1955–60; writer on film, from early 1960s. Died: 13 November 1992.

Films as Director:

1947 Du sang de la volupté et de la mort (trilogy comprising Psyche, Lysis, and Charmides)
1948 The Dead Ones

1949 Flowers of Asphalt
1950 Swain
1951 Arbres aux champignons
1953 Eldora
1955–61 Serenity
1963 Twice a Man
1965 The Death of Hemingway
1966 Galaxie; Through a Lens Brightly: Mark Turbyfill; Ming Green
1967 Himself as Herself; Eros, O Basileus; The Iliac Passion; Bliss; The Divine Damnation; Gammelton
1968 Mysteries
1969 Index Hans Richter
1970 Genius
1971 Doldertal 7; Hagiographia; 35 Boulevard General Koenig

Publications

By MARKOPOULOS: books—

By MARKOPOULOS: articles—

‘‘On Serenity,’’ in Film Culture (New York), Summer 1961.

‘‘Toward a New Narrative Form in Motion Pictures,’’ in Film Comment (New York), Fall 1963.

Interview with Robert Brown, in Film Culture (New York), Spring 1964.

‘‘Random Notes during a Two-Week Lecture Tour of the United States,’’ in Film Culture (New York), Fall 1964.

‘‘The Driving Rhythm,’’ in Film Culture (New York), Spring 1966.

‘‘From ‘Fanshawe’ to ‘Swain,’’ in Film Culture (New York), Summer 1966.

‘‘Galaxie’ (Production and Critical Notes),’’ in Film Culture (New York), Fall 1966.

‘‘The Film-maker as Physician of the Future,’’ in Film Culture (New York), Spring 1967.

‘‘Correspondences of Smells and Visuals,’’ in Film Culture (New York), Autumn 1967.

‘‘Index to the Work of Gregory Markopoulos, Years 1967/70,’’ with Jonas Mekas, in Film Culture (New York), Spring 1971.

‘‘The Adamantine Bridge,’’ in Film Culture (New York), Spring 1972.

On MARKOPOULOS: book—

On MARKOPOULOS: articles—

Filmwise 3 & 4: Gregory Markopoulos, Spring 1963.

* * *

Gregory J. Markopoulos made his first film (a version of A Christmas Carol) in 1940 with a borrowed 8-millimeter silent movie camera. By the time he left the University of Southern California in 1947, he completed a trilogy titled Du sang de la volupté et de la mort (comprising Psyche, Lysis, and Charmides). His first 35-millimeter film was The Dead Ones in 1948. With these beginnings, Markopoulos became one of the best-known of the avant-garde of the post-World War II period, although his output in the 1950s was limited to four films—Flowers of Asphalt, Arbres aux champignons, Eldora, and Serenity. Elements of homoeroticism pervade many of the Markopoulos experiments and they are as audacious and outrageous as the works of Adolfo and Jonas Mekas. In his trilogy, a battering ram becomes a phallic symbol. When the film was shown to a class at New York University in 1951, it caused Henry Hart, then the far-right editor of Films in Review magazine, to berate professor George Amberg for allowing it to be shown. Hart described some of the images included in the film—“...a male nipple, a painted and coiffured male head, a buttock...and quite a few suggestions that abnormal perceptions and moods are desirable.” Markopoulos soon became a much talked-about and controversial filmmaker.

The first Markopoulos film of the 1960s was Serenity, a drama about the Greco-Turkish War of 1921–22, shot in Greece and released in 1962. This was followed by Twice a Man, a recreation of the Greek myths of Hippolytus, Phaedra, and Asclepius dealing openly for the first time (for Markopoulos) with male homosexuality.

Galaxie consisted of 30 three-minute 16-millimeter silent clips of his friends (Parker Tyler, Jonas Mekas, W. H. Auden, Allen Ginsberg, Shirley Clarke, Maurice Sendak, Susan Sontag, and Gian Carlo Menotti, among others) with an electronic “clang” ending each segment as the only sound on the film. Markopoulos’s subsequent films are in 16-millimeter.

Single-frame editing and superimpositions were used in Himself as Herself, a strange film about a half man/half woman shot in and around Boston and released in 1967. In March of that year, Eros, O Basileus appeared, consisting of nine sequences involving a young man representing Eros. The Markopoulos Passion, a dramatic movie filmed over a three-year period, was finally released in 1968 as The Iliac Passion, a version of the Prometheus legend set in New York City.

—James L. Limbacher

---

MARSHALL, John Kennedy

Nationality: American. Born: Cambridge, Massachusetts, 12 November 1932. Education: Harvard University, B.A. in Anthropology, 1957; Yale University, G.S.A.S. in Anthropology, 1960; Harvard University, M.A. in Anthropology, 1966. Military Service: None

Awards: First Prize, Festival de Popoli, Italy, for Inside/Outside Station 9, 1970; CINE Golden Eagle, Flaherty Award, First Prize Festival de Popoli, Salerno International Festival Prize, Athens International Film Festival Prize, and Philadelphia International Festival of Short Films Prize, all for Bitter Melons, 1971; American Film Festival Finalist, for 4th and 5th and the Exclusionary Rule, 1973; American Film Festival Finalist for If It Fits, 1978; American Film Festival Blue Ribbon, CINE Golden Eagle, Gold Medal, International Film and Television Festival of New York, Grand Prize Cinema du Reel, Paris, Grand Prize International News Coverage Festival, Luchon, France, all for N!ai, the Story of a! Kung Woman, 1981; Honorary M.F.A. in Film, Rhode Island School of Design, 1995. Agent: Documentary Educational Resources, 101 Morse Street, Watertown, Massachusetts 02472, USA.
Films as Director and Cinematographer:

!Kung Series

1957 The Hunters
1961 A Group of Women
1962 A Joking Relationship
1969 An Argument about a Marriage; A Curing Ceremony; N\'um Tchai: The Ceremonial Curing Dance of the !Kung Bushmen
1970 Lion Game; The (Nlowa T'ama) Melon Tossing Game
1971 Bitter Melons
1972 Debe's Tantrum; !Kung Bushmen Hunting Equipment; Playing with Scorpions; A Rite of Passage; The Wasp Next
1973 Men Bathing
1974 Baobab Play; Children Throw Toy Assegais; The Meat Fight; Bushmen Tag of War
1980 N\'ai, the Story of a !Kung Woman
1985 Pull Ourselves up or Die Out
1987 !Kung San Traditional Life
1988 !Kung San: Resettlement; Fighting Tooth, (Nail) and the Government
1990 To Hold Our Ground
1991 !Kung San Exhibit/Peabody Museum
2000 A Kalahari Family

“Pittsburgh Police Series” (20 films shot in black and white from 1968–69 and released from 1970–73)

1970 Inside/Outside Station 9
1971 Three Domestics; Vagrant Woman
1972 Investigation of A Hit and Run; 35 minutes; 901/904
1973 After the Game; $40 Misunderstanding; The Informant; A Legal Discussion of a Hit and Run; Manifold Controversy; Nothing Hurt but My Pride; $21 or 21 Days; Two Brothers; Wrong Kid; You Wasn’t Loitering; Youth and the Man of Property; Henry Is Drunk; Appitsch and the Drunk; T-Group; The 4th, 5th, & Exclusionary Rule

Other Films:

1967 Titicut Follies (camera + co-d with Frederick Wiseman)
1974 Bushmen of the Kalahari (camera + ro)
1976 Festival of American Folklife
1978 If It Fits

Publications:

By MARSHALL: articles—

“Man as a Hunter,” in Natural History Magazine, 1958.

On MARSHALL: books—

* * *

In 1950, Laurence Marshall, John Marshall’s father, retired as president of Raytheon Corp., the giant electronics firm he founded before World War II. Laurence was not one to waste his time on frivolous pursuits so retirement provided an opportunity for him to get to know his son better. As a young boy, John always wanted to go to Africa. He read books about exploring in Africa like Jock of the Bushveld by Percy Fitzpatrick. The Marshalls had heard about an interest in looking for a lost city in the Kalahari Desert and contacted the Peabody Museum at Harvard University and the Smithsonian Institution to see if there might be some interest in a Kalahari expedition. The director of the Peabody at that time, J.O. Brew, suggested that they go look for some “wild Bushmen” while they searched for a lost city.

In 1950, the entire Marshall family went off on the first of many expeditions to the Kalahari desert in South West Africa (now Namibia). Laurence Marshall assigned the jobs. Lorna Marshall, John’s mother, was to do the ethnography, Elizabeth (later, Elizabeth Marshall Thomas) was to write a book, and John was to make the movies. On their second expedition they did indeed encounter a group of Bushmen living deep in the desert, who had had no direct contact with whites. They were still living by their ancient hunting and gathering ways. These Bushmen began a relationship with the Marshalls that has continued through three generations.

John began working with a little hand-held Bell and Howell camera and loads of Kodak film in 100-foot-rolls. The film came with a few instructions on how to make a movie, and John had a shopping list of subject areas for anthropologists in the field, but this was all the direction he had as he launched into what became a lifetime work: filming the Bushmen of the Kalahari.

Marshall was a teenager in the 1950 and he became captivated by hunting. His first film, The Hunters (1957), which he shot from 1950–52, became a classic and it enjoyed phenomenal success. It was shown in theaters and was purchased by every major American and European university with a film collection. For many years John has repudiated The Hunters on the grounds that it is an artistic creation, a product of his own imagination and that consequently, it misrepresents the real nature of the culture. Throughout his career he has used this to argue for a more meaningful collaboration between anthropology and documentary film.

The general stylistic principle guiding most of John Marshall’s filmmaking has been cinéma vérité, further elaborated by him with the concepts of “sequence” and “slot.” He argues that his method and product are merely “reporting” and that true meaning comes from “immersing” the viewer in the ordinary life of the people through “sequences,” snatches of reality. Given this strong commitment to what he sees as a scientific or journalistic endeavor, it is interesting that John’s personal commitment to the Ju/hoansi (Bushman) people and his views of how films may be used in development work on their behalf, are essentially humanistic, relativistic, and postmodern.

Marshall continued his film documentation of the Ju/hoansi throughout the 1950s. Due in part to the political ramifications of apartheid, Marshall was not allowed to enter South Africa from the early 1960s and throughout much of the 1970s, for his close relationship with the Bushmen was seen as a threat to the status quo. By 1960 John was working with D.A. Pennebaker and Ricky Leacock to further the development of cinéma vérité. By this time, Marshall was recognized as a gifted cameraman. Never one to shy away from danger, he went to work for NBC, shooting the civil war in Cyprus.

From 1969 to 1971 Marshall shot and produced his groundbreaking “Pittsburgh Police Series.” Seen against the background of the civil rights upheaval, and filmed in gritty black and white cinéma vérité, these films were precursors to such TV programs as Hill Street Blues and “reality” TV shows like Cops. In 1978 Marshall returned to South Africa to make the television movie N!ai, The Story of a !Kung Woman. After a nearly twenty year absence he was shocked by the devastation of the people and culture he had recorded in his youth. At this point his film style changed. He lived and worked with the people he had previously filmed throughout the 1980s and 1990s. While continuing to document events on film and later video, he became an advocate and political activist with and for the subjects of his film.

The work of John Marshall with the Ju/hoansi (Bushmen) continues in the twenty-first century. A three part series for television, A Kalahari Family, is being edited from the 2 million feet of 16mm film and thousands of hours of video tape that now comprise the Marshall/Africa archive. The original film materials were used to establish the Human Studies Film Archive at the Smithsonian Institution. A Kalahari Family is scheduled for release in December 2000.

—Cynthia Close

MAYSLES, Albert and David Paul

Nationality: American. Born: Albert born in Brookline, Massachusetts, 26 November 1926; David Paul born in Brookline, 10 January 1932. Education: Albert attended Brookline High School; Syracuse University, New York, degree in psychology; Boston University, M.A. in psychology. David attended Brookline High School; Boston University, degree in psychology. Military Service: During World War II, Albert served in U.S. Army Tank Corps, David served in the Army at Headquarters, Military Intelligence school, Oberammergau, Germany. Family: David married Judy (Maysles), one son, one daughter. Career: Albert taught psychology at Boston University, from late 1940s, then travelled to Russia to make first film, 1955; David worked as production assistant on Bus Stop and The Prince and the Showgirl, 1956; they make first film together, 1957; David worked as reporter on Adventures on the New Frontier for TV, late 1950s and early 1960s; Albert worked as cameraman for Richard Leacock, 1960; formed production company together and made first film, 1962; Albert worked as cameraman on one section of Godard’s

Films as Directors:

1955 Psychiatry in Russia (Albert only)
1957 Youth in Poland
1960 Primary (Albert only, co-d)
1962 Showman
1964 What’s Happening: The Beatles in the USA (Yeah Yeah Yeah, The Beatles! The First U.S. Visit)
1965 Meet Marlon Brando
1966 With Love from Truman
1969 Salesman (co-d)
1970 Gimme Shelter (co-d)
1972 Christo’s Valley Curtain (co-d)
1975 Grey Gardens (co-d)
1977 Running Fence (co-d)
1980 Muhammad and Larry
1984 Islands (co-d)
1986 Vladimir Horowitz: The Last Romantic; Ozawa (co-d)
1987 Horowitz Plays Mozart (Albert only, co-d)
1989  Jessye Norman Sings Carmen (Albert only, co-d)
1991  Christo in Paris (Albert only)
1992  Baroque Diet (Albert only), Sports Illustrated: Swimsuit ’92 (Albert only)
1993  Abortion: Desperate Choices (Albert only, co-d)
1994  Umbrellas (Albert only, co-d)

Publications

By the MAYSLES: articles—

Interview, in Movie (London), April 1963.
Interview with Bob Sitton, in Film Library Quarterly (New York), Summer 1969.
“‘Truthful Witness’: An Interview with Albert Maysles,” with H. Naficy, in Quarterly Review of Film Studies (Pleasantville, New York), Spring 1981.

On the MAYSLES: books—

On the MAYSLES: articles—

Blue, James, “Thoughts on Cinéma Vérité and a Discussion with the Maysles Brothers,” in Film Comment (New York), no. 4, 1964.
“Maysles Brothers,” in Film Culture (New York), Fall 1966.
Steele, Robert, “Meet Marlon Brando,” in Film Heritage (Dayton, Ohio), Fall 1966.

Biofilmmography, in Film Dope (London), March 1989.
Owen, D., “‘The Maysles Brothers,’” in Film Dope (Nottingham), no. 41, March 1989.

* * *

Shooting unobtrusively in sync sound with no instructions to the subject, the Maysles brothers made films in what they preferred to call “direct cinema.” Albert, gifted photographer and director of all their projects, carried the lightweight, silent camera that he perched on his shoulder, its accessories built in and ready for adjustment. Maysles characters, who occasionally talk to the filmmakers on screen, seem astonishingly unaware that strangers and apparatus are in the room.

David, the soundman, carried a sensitive directional mike and a Nagra recorder unattached to the camera. He was often involved in the editing and as producer had final say. During the shooting a story might become apparent, or a dominant character may surface. These elements may become clear only as the editors examine, cut, and structure the vast amounts of footage that they receive in the dailies.

In 1962, a time when Albert had acquired brief experience in documentary filmmaking and David had garnered a similar amount of experience in Hollywood feature films, they formed a partnership committed to direct cinema. Commercials and industrial filmmaking supported their preferred activity from time to time.

The company’s production of two feature documentaries (which they distributed commercially), Salesman, a study of four bible salesmen, and Grey Gardens, an essay on two eccentric women, fed the constant discussions between documentarists and critics about whether objectivity is at all possible in documentaries. Both films were charged with dishonesty, exploitation, and tastelessness, but other quarters praised the Maysles’ sensitivity, rapport with their subjects, and choice of situations that viewers could identify with.

The Maysles sought to answer the criticism and describe their philosophy and working methods at screenings of their films, in articles, and in letters to editors. Their instinct took them, they said, to situations related to closeness between human beings, and pointed out that they could not do films about people they dislike. They looked on their work as a discovery of how people really are, first spending time with them to get acquainted, then filming their lives as lived. All their subjects agreed to the project under consideration beforehand, and several have spoken of their satisfaction with the finished film and their good relationship with Albert and David, whom they trusted.

The Maysles did not deny that their choices affected their creation in some way. Their methodology, for example, meant that much footage must be discarded. They emphasized that nothing was staged, a structure that eventually emerges from the material. In their own work they saw a relationship to Truman Capote’s concepts and methods for his “non-fiction novel”: discarding preconceptions about their subjects, while concentrating on learning about them and understanding their motivations and feelings.

Albert and David Maysles have an important place in the history of the documentary for many reasons. They produced a large, varied, evocative body of work in their chosen style, as very active members of their own small company. Despite some severe criticism of their work, they are admired, and probably envied for qualities that Americans value. Directly influential or not on documentaries today, their work is certainly part of the flow of films that aim to show the truth about contemporary problems. While many other filmmakers’ reports and studies embrace large communities, or even whole countries, Maysles productions are about individuals and their concerns, which often illuminate larger aspects of society as well as its general attitudes toward non-traditional behavior.

Since David Maysles’ death, Albert has continued turning out documentaries, mostly collaborating with Susan Froemke, Charlotte Zwerin, and Deborah Dickson. His subjects are as varied as when he worked with his brother, ranging from classical music (Horowitz Plays Mozart, Jessye Norman Sings Carmen) to social issues (Abortion: Desperate Choices, which traces the history of abortion in America) to attempts by artists to realize their visions. One of these efforts, Christo in Paris, chronicles the artist Christo’s efforts to wrap Paris’ Pont-Neuf Bridge; two decades earlier, Albert and David had made Christo’s Valley Curtain, in which the artist tried to hang an orange curtain over a valley.

—Lillian Schiff, updated by Rob Edelman

McCAREY, Leo

Films as Director:

1921 Society Secrets (+ pr)
1924 Publicity Pays (+ co-sc); Young Oldfield (+ co-sc); Stolen Goods (+ co-sc); Jeffries Jr. (+ co-sc); Why Husbands Go Mad (+ co-sc); A Ten-Minutes Egg (+ co-sc); Seeing Nellie Home (+ co-sc); Sweet Daddy (+ co-sc); Why Men Work (+ co-sc); Outdoor Pajamas (+ co-sc); Sittin’ Pretty (+ co-sc); Too Many Mamas (+ co-sc); Bungalow Boobs (+ co-sc); Accidental Accidents (+ co-sc); All Wet (+ co-sc); The Poor Fish (+ co-sc); The Royal Raz ( + co-sc)
1925 Hello Baby (+ co-sc); Fighting Fluid (+ co-sc); The Family Entrance (+ co-sc); Plain and Fancy Girls (+ co-sc); Should Husbands Be Watched? (+ co-sc); Hard Boiled (+ co-sc); Is Marriage the Bunk? (+ co-sc); Bad Boy (+ co-sc); Big Red Riding Hood (+ co-sc); Looking for Sally (+ co-sc); What Price Goofy? (+ co-sc); Isn’t Life Terrible (+ co-sc); Innocent Husbands (+ co-sc); No Father to Guide Him (+ co-sc); The Caretaker’s Daughter (+ co-sc); The Uneasy Three (+ co-sc); His Wooden Wedding (+ co-sc)
1926 Charley My Boy (+ co-sc); Mama Behave (+ co-sc); Dog Shy (+ co-sc); Mum’s the Word (+ co-sc); Long Live the King (+ co-sc); Mighty like a Moose (+ co-sc); Crazy like a Fox (+ co-sc); Bromo and Juliet (+ co-sc); Tell ’em Nothing (+ co-sc); Be Your Age (+ co-sc)
1928 We Faw Down (We Slip Up); Should Married Men Go Home? (+ co-sc, supervisor); Two Tars (+ story, supervisor); Should Women Drive? (+ co-sc); A Pair of Tights (+ co-sc); Blow By Blow (+ co-sc); The Boy Friend (+ co-sc); Came the Dawn (+ co-sc); Do Gentlemen Snore? (+ co-sc); Dumb Daddies (+ co-sc); Going Ga-ga (+ co-sc); Pass the Gravy (+ co-sc); Tell It to the Judge (+ co-sc); That Night (+ co-sc)
1929 Liberty (+ co-sc); Wrong Again (+ co-sc); Dad’s Day (+ co-sc); Freed ‘em and Weep (+ co-sc); Hurdy Gurdy (+ co-sc); Madame Q (+ co-sc); Sky Boy (+ co-sc); The Unkissed Man (+ co-sc); When Money Comes (+ co-sc); Why Is Plumber (+ co-sc)
1929 The Sophomore (+ co-sc); Red Hot Rhythm (+ co-sc)
1930 Wild Company; Part Time Wife (+ co-sc)
1931 Indiscreet
1932 The Kid from Spain
1933 Duck Soup
1934 Six of a Kind; Belle of the Nineties (It Ain’t No Sin); Ruggles of Red Gap
1935 The Milky Way
1937 Make Way for Tomorrow (The Years Are So Long; When the Wind Blows) (+ pr); The Awful Truth
1938 Love Affair
1940 My Favorite Wife (+ co-sc)

Leo McCarey
Leo McCarey has always presented auteur criticism with one of its greatest challenges and one that has never been convincingly met. The failure to do so should be seen as casting doubt on the validity of auteurism (in its cruder and simpler forms) rather than on the value of the McCarey oeuvre. He worked consistently (and apparently quite uncomplainingly) within the dominant codes of shooting and editing that comprise the anonymous "classical Hollywood" style; the films that bear his name as director, ranging from Duck Soup to The Bells of St. Mary's, from Laurel and Hardy shorts to My Son John, from The Awful Truth to Make Way for Tomorrow (made the same year!), resist reduction to a coherent thematic interpretation. Yet his name is on some of the best—and best-loved—Hollywood films (as well as on some that embarrass many of even his most fervent defenders).

In fact, it might be argued that McCarey's work validates a more sophisticated and circumspect auteur approach: not the author as divinely inspired individual creative genius, but the author as the animating presence in a project within which multiple determinants—collaborative, generic, ideological—complexly interact. The only adequate approach to a McCarey film would involve the systematic analysis of that interaction. A few notes can be offered, however, towards defining the "animating presence."

McCarey's formative years as an artist were spent working with the great clowns of the late silent/early sound period: Harold Lloyd, Mae West, W.C. Fields, the Marx Brothers and (especially) Laurel and Hardy, for whom he was "supervising manager" for many years, personally directing two of their greatest shorts (Liberty and Wrong Again). His subsequent career spans (with equal success) the entire range of American comedy from screwball (The Awful Truth) to romantic (An Affair to Remember). The director's congenial characteristic seems to have been a commitment to a spontaneous, individualist anarchic which he never entirely abandoned, accompanied by a consistent skepticism about institutions and restrictive forms of social organization, a skepticism which produces friction and contradiction even within the most seemingly innocuous, conservative projects. Going My Way and The Bells of St. Mary's are usually rejected outright by the intelligentsia as merely pious and sentimental, but their presentation of Catholicism is neither simple, straightforward, nor uncritical, and it is easy to mistake for sentimentality, in contexts where you expect to find it anyway (such as Hollywood movies about singing priests), qualities such as tenderness and generosity. The celebration of individualism is of course a mainspring of American ideology, yet, pushed far enough in certain directions, it can expose contradictions within that ideology: its oppressive response to many forms of individuality, for example.

Make Way for Tomorrow (which, understandably, remained McCarey's favorite among his own films) is exemplary in this respect. Taking as its starting point an apparently reformable social problem (with Lee Grant's Tell Me a Riddle it is one of the only important Hollywood films about the aged), and opening with an unassailably respectable Biblical text ("Honor thy father and thy mother"), it proceeds to elaborate what amounts to a systematic radical analysis of the constraints, oppression, and divisiveness produced by capitalist culture, lending itself to a thoroughgoing Marxist reading that would certainly have surprised its director. Typically, the film (merely very good for its first three-quarters) suddenly takes off into greatness at the moment when Victor Moore asks the ultimate anarchic question “Why not?” and proceeds to repudiate his family in favour of rediscovering the original relationship with his wife before they become absorbed into the norms of democratic-capitalist domesticity. The process is only completed when, in one of the Hollywood cinema’s most poignant and subversive moments, he “unmarries” them as they say their last farewell at the train station: “It’s been a pleasure knowing you, Miss Breckenridge.”

—Robin Wood

MEHBOOB Khan

Nationality: Indian. Born: Mehboob Khan Ramzan Khan in Bilmora, in the Gandevi Taluka of Baroda State, India, 1909. Family: Married 1925, one son. Career: Extra at Imperial Film Studio, Bombay, from 1927; actor of “bit” parts for subsidiary, Sagar Movietone, from 1931; directed first film, for Sagar Film Co., 1935; established Mehboob Productions, 1943; built Mehboob Studios, 1952. Died: Of a heart attack, on hearing of Nehru’s death, 27 May 1964.

Films as Director:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>Judgement of Allah (Alhilal) (+ sc)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>Deccan Queen; Mannmohan</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>Jagirdar</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Hum Tum Aur Woh (We Three); Watan</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>Ek Hi Rasta (The Only Way)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>Alibaba; Aurat (Woman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>Bahen (Sister)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1942</td>
<td>Roti (Bread)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>Najma (+ pr); Taqdeer (+ pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1945</td>
<td>Humayun (+ pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1946</td>
<td>Anmol Ghadi (Priceless Watch) (+ pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>Elan (+ pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1948</td>
<td>Anokhi Ada (A Special Charm) (+ pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>Andaz (Style) (+ pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Aan (Pride) (+ pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1954</td>
<td>Amar (+ pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1957</td>
<td>Bharat Mata (Mother India) (+ pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1962</td>
<td>Son of India (+ pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Other Films:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1927</td>
<td>Alibaba and Forty Thieves (Misra) (role as thief)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1929</td>
<td>Maurya Patan (Fall of Mauryas) (Choudhury) (role)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Mewad No Mawali (Rogues of Rajasthan) (Vakil) (role)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>Dilawar (Torney) (role); Abul Hasan (Ghosh) (role)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>Romantic Prince (Meri Juan) (Ghosh)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>Premi Pagal (Mad Cap) (Mir) (role); Bulbule Baghdad (Vakil) (role)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>Grijhalaxmi (Badami) (role); Nautch Girl (Dancing Girl) (Desai) (role); Sati Anjana (Rathodi) (role)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>Awaz (Sarhady) (pr); Paisa Hi Paisa (Mehrish) (pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

On MEHBOOB: books—

On MEHBOOB: articles—

Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Autumn 1960.

* * *

The urbane director K.A. Abbas once referred to Khan Mehboob as the “great rustic” of the Hindi cinema. Indeed, a certain mythology developed around Mehboob—that of the man with popular roots. This image owed much to stories about his origins (the small-town boy who worked his way up through the Bombay studios), and to certain films which dwelt on the travails of the poor and the destitute, such as Aurat (Woman) and Roti (Bread). In fact, however, Mehboob’s output as director was quite varied. After he founded his own company, Mehboob Productions, in 1943, he made historical works (Humayun) and fantasy spectacles (Aan/Pride,). Even films such as Anmol Ghadi (Priceless Watch) and Anokhi Ada (A Special Charm), which appeared to address the class divide, were variations of the triangular love story, the favoured convention of the Hindi cinema.

In these films social representation becomes incidental to the basic plot because the narrative spaces of a simple rural life or of urban destitution are constructed in an idealised rather than in a realistic way. The lighting style of such scenes show them as composed of smooth studio surfaces, and there is an indifference to the more squalid details of characterisation. The emphasis lies in the fullness of melodramatic sentiments—of loss and of romantic longing—which occasion the use of lushly orchestrated songs. All this is a pleasurable closing off of the cinema and its audience from social references, a tendency in Mehboob’s work best represented by his venture into the swashbuckling colour film Aan. Elements of this romantic mode are observable even in Mehboob’s “social” films. In Aurat and its
MEKAS, Jonas

Nationality: Lithuanian. Born: Semeniskiai, 24 December 1922. Education: Gymnasium, Birzai, Lithuania, graduated 1942; studied philosophy and literature, Johannes Gutenberg University, Mainz, and University of Tübingen. Family: Married Hollis Melton, 1974; children: Oona and Sebastian. Career: During German occupation, taken, with brother Adolfas, to forced labor camp near Hamburg, 1944; they escaped, 1945; lived in displaced persons camps, 1945–49; while studying in Germany, edited Lithuanian emigré literary magazine Zvilgsniai (Glimpses), and wrote collections of short stories and poetry; moved to New York, 1949; worked in factories and shops in various capacities, through 1950s; founded Film Culture magazine, 1955, remains editor-in-chief; began “Movie Journal” column for Village Voice, 1958; shot first film, Guns of the Trees, and helped organize New American Cinema Group, 1960; organized The Film-Makers Cooperative, 1961; organized the Film-Makers Cinematheque, arrested and charged with showing obscene film (Jack Smith’s Flaming Creatures), given six-month suspended sentence, 1964; co-founder with P. Adams Sitney, then acting director, Anthology Film Archives, 1970. Awards: Documentary Award, Venice Festival, for The Brig, 1965. Address: c/o Anthology Film Archives, 32 Second Avenue, New York, NY 10003, U.S.A.

Films as Director:

1961 Guns of the Trees
1963 Film Magazine of the Arts
1964 The Brig; Award Presentation to Andy Warhol
1966 Report from Millbrook; Hare Krishna; Notes on the Circus; Cassis
1968 Walden (Diaries, Notes, and Sketches)
1969 Time & Fortune Vietnam Newsreel
1972 Reminiscences of a Journey to Lithuania
1976 Lost, Lost, Lost
1978 In Between
1980 Paradise Not Yet Lost, or Oona’s Fifth Year
1981 Notes for Jerome
1986 He Stands in the Desert Counting the Seconds of His Life
1990 Self-Portrait; Scenes from the Life of Andy Warhol

later colour version, Mother India, rural life is often conveyed as a series of spectacularly choreographed scenes of harvesting, festivals, and the romantic engagement of its characters. Andaz (Style), on the other hand, invites the audience to soak in the luxuries of the modern, upper-class settings in which its characters live.

In this sense, Mehboob was not simply a popularly rooted “rustic” artist, but engaged in creations of high artifice and escapism. However, these elements were often integrated with quite powerful constructions of meaning. Aurat, for example, achieves an almost anthropological view of gender roles. This is accomplished not by the accuracy of its observations about rural life, but by using the grim struggles of rural life as a way of drawing out the role performed by Indian women. This provides the basis for the film’s main interest, the melodrama of the unrelieved suffering of a woman (Sardar Akhtar) on behalf of her sons (Surendra and Yakub). The subsequent version of this film, Mother India, is an interesting contrast. The focus is still on the suffering of the mother (Nargis); but this capacity to suffer is transformed into a distinctly mythical power which moves beyond her immediate family to inspire the whole village community. In both films the woman is the bearer of a patriarchal inheritance for her son, but Mother India may have represented a new, mythicised role model for women, one whose power often co-exists uneasily with its conservative functions.

Perhaps most interesting is Andaz, a drama, at least implicitly, of illicit desire. The story is about Nina (Nargis) who, while faithful to her absent fiancé (Raj Kapoor), relates vivaciously to an attractive young man (Dilip Kumar). The heroine is shown to be a naive innocent who cannot perceive that relaxed social relations between men and women can lead to misunderstanding, and this generates the tragic events that follow. Yet the narration moves beyond, or perhaps deeper into, its own fascination with the settings and mores of its upper class characters, introducing an interesting, fantastical ambiguity. Nina’s denials that she is attracted to a man other than her husband are put into doubt for the audience through scenes depicting the hallucinations and dreams that assail the heroine. In this way the “rustic” Mehboob was surprisingly well equipped to convey certain strikingly modern problems of sexuality and desire.

—Ravi Vasudevan

Jonas Mekas

Village Voice, 1958; shot first film, Guns of the Trees, and helped organize New American Cinema Group, 1960; organized The Film-Makers Cooperative, 1961; organized the Film-Makers Cinematheque, arrested and charged with showing obscene film (Jack Smith’s Flaming Creatures), given six-month suspended sentence, 1964; co-founder with P. Adams Sitney, then acting director, Anthology Film Archives, 1970. Awards: Documentary Award, Venice Festival, for The Brig, 1965. Address: c/o Anthology Film Archives, 32 Second Avenue, New York, NY 10003, U.S.A.
1993 Jonas in the Desert
1996 Happy Birthday to John (+ pr)

Publications

By MEKAS: books—

There is No Ithaca: Idylls of Seminis Ki ã & Reminiscences, translated by Vyt Bakaitis, New York, 1996.

By MEKAS: articles—

Founder of Film Culture magazine, 1955, contributes regularly and remains its editor-in-chief.
Statement, in Film Comment (New York), Winter 1964.
Interview with B. L. Kevles, in Film Culture (New York), Fall 1965.
Interview with Gerald Barrett, in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), Spring 1973.
Interview with Antonin Liehm, in Thousand Eyes (New York), October 1976.
Interview with A. Artjuh, in Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), November 1996.

On MEKAS: books—

On MEKAS: articles—

“Preservation and Scholarship Award: Jonas Mekas,” in International Documentary (Los Angeles), November 1997.

* * *

Born in Lithuania in 1922, Jonas Mekas was a poet and resistance worker against both the German and Soviet occupations during the Second World War. After some years in a German camp for displaced persons, he and his brother, Adolfs, also a filmmaker, immigrated to New York, where they later founded the journal Film Culture. Initially hostile to the American avant-garde, Mekas became its champion and spokesman in the 1960s. Throughout that decade he exerted great influence through Film Culture, his “Movie Journal” column in the Village Voice, and his founding of the Film-makers Cooperative (in 1962) to distribute independent films, and the Film-makers Cinematheque (in 1963) as a New York showcase.

His first film, Guns of the Trees, a 35-millimeter feature, describes aspects of Beat culture in New York through the lives of four fictional characters. It reflects his hopes, at that time, for the establishment of a feature-length narrative cinema on the model of the French and Polish “New Waves.” By the time he made The Brig with his brother, directly filming Ken Brown’s stage play in the Living Theatre Production as if it were a documentary, he had already shifted his energies to his ongoing cinematic diary. The diary had actually begun in the mid-1950s when he reached the United States, but it took the liberating inspiration of Stan Brakhage and Marie Menken for Mekas to acknowledge that his artistic talent was focused outside of the feature film tradition he had been espousing.

The first installment of his Diaries, Notes, and Sketches, the nearly three-hour-long Walden, records his life, with numerous portraits of his friends and colleagues, in the mid-1960s. Its techniques are characteristic of the filmmaker’s mature work: staccato, single-frame flashes, composed directly in the camera, are counterpointed to longer sketches of weddings, trips to the circus, meetings. Printed intertitles often occur. Long passages have musical accompaniment. The filmmaker repeatedly breaks in on the soundtrack to offer private reflections and aphorisms.

In 1976 Mekas released Lost, Lost, Lost, another three-hour section of the megadiary. This time, he went back to his initial experiments with the camera, in a more conventional and leisurely style, to document the aspirations and frustrations of his life as an exile dreaming of the re-establishment of an independent Lithuanian republic. Bits of this material had already appeared in his masterly and moving Reminiscences of a Journey to Lithuania, a three-part film made with the help of German television. The middle section of that film describes the emotional reunion of both brothers with their mother, then almost ninety years old, when they returned home for their first visit since the war. The film opens with a summary of Mekas’s initial experiences in America and ends with a recognition of the impossibility of recovering the past, as he joins a group of his friends, mostly artists, in Vienna.

That elegiac tone is sustained and refined in Notes for Jerome, the record of his visits to the estate of Jerome Hill, in Cassis, France, in the late 1960s, and edited after Hill’s death in 1972. Mekas married Hollis Melton in 1974; their first child, Oona, was born the next year. Paradise Not Yet Lost, or Oona’s Fifth Year deals with his family life, but continues the theme of lost childhood that permeates Mekas’s vision. It is filmed in the style of Walden, as is In Between, which records the years between Lost, Lost, Lost and Walden.

—P. Adams Sitney

MELVILLE, Jean-Pierre

Films as Director:

1946 Vingt quatre heures de la vie d’un clown (+ sc, pr)
1948 Le Silence de la mer (+ pr, sc)
1950 Les Enfants terribles (+ co-sc, pr, art d)
1953 Quand tu liras cette lettre (+ sc)
1956 Bob le flameloup (+ pr, co-art d, sc)
1959 Deux hommes dans Manhattan (+ pr, sc, role as Moreau)
1963 Léon Morin, prêtre (+ sc); Le Doulos (+ sc); L’Ainé des Ferchaux (+ sc)
1966 Le Deuxième Souffle (+ sc)
1967 Le Samourai (+ sc)
1969 L’Armée des ombres (+ sc)
1972 Le Cercle rouge (+ sc); Un Flic (+ sc)

Other Films:

1948 Les Dames du Bois de Boulogne (Bresson) (role)
1949 Orphée (Cocteau) (role as hotel director)
1957 Un Amour de poche (role as police commissioner)
1960 A bout de souffle (Godard) (role as the writer Parvulesco)
1962 Landru (Chabrol) (role as Georges Mandel)

Publications

By MELVILLE: articles—

Interview with Claude Beylie and Bertrand Tavernier, in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), October 1961.

Interview with Eric Briehart, in Film Culture (New York), Winter 1964/65.

Interview with Michel Dancourt, in Arts (Paris), 25 April 1966.

On MELVILLE: books—

On MELVILLE: articles—

The career of Jean-Pierre Melville is one of the most independent in modern French cinema. The tone was set with his first feature film, Le Silence de la mer, made quite outside the confines of the French film industry. Without union recognition or even the rights to the novel by Vercors which he was adapting, Melville proceeded to make a film which, in its counterpointing of images and a spoken text, set the pattern for a whole area of French literary filmmaking extending from Bresson and Resnais down to Duras in the 1980s.

* * *

terribles, made in close collaboration with Jean Cocteau, was an equally interesting amalgam of literature and film, but more influential was Bob le flambeur, a first variation on gangster film themes which emerged as a striking study of loyalty and betrayal.

But by the time that the New Wave directors were drawing from Bob le flambeur a set of stylistic lessons which were to be crucial to their own breakthrough—economical location shooting, use of natural light, improvisatory approaches, and use of character actors in place of stars—Melville himself had moved in quite a different direction. Léon Morin, prêtre marks Melville’s decision to leave this directly personal world of low-budget filmmaking for a mature style of solidly commercial genre filmmaking that used major stars and tightly wrought scripts to capture a wide audience.

This style is perfectly embodied in the trio of mid-1960s gangster films which constitute the core of Melville’s achievement in cinema. Melville’s concern with the film as a narrative spectacle is totally vindicated in these films, each of which was built around a star performance: Jean-Paul Belmondo in Le Doulos, Lino Ventura in Le Deuxième Souffle, and Alain Delon in Le Samouraï. Drawing on his 1930s viewing and his adolescent reading of American thrillers, Melville manipulated the whole mythology of the gangster film, casting aside all pretence of offering a social study. His criminals are idealized figures, their appearance stylized with emphasis on the belted raincoat, soft hat, and ever-present handgun. Their behavior oddly blends violence and ritualized politeness, and lifts them out from their settings. Melville had no interest in the realistic portrayal of life. He disregarded both psychological depth and accuracy of location and costume. The director instead used his stars to portray timeless, tragic figures caught up in ambiguous conflicts and patterns of deceit, relying on the actor’s personality and certainty of gesture to fill the intentional void.

Le Samourai, a perfect distillation of the cinematic myth of the gangster, remains Melville’s masterpiece. Subsequent attempts to widen his range included an effort to transpose his characters into the world of Occupation and Resistance in L’Armée des ombres, as well as a film—Le Cercle rouge—that combined his particular gift for atmosphere with a Rififi-style presentation of the mechanics of a robbery. These films are interesting but flawed works. Melville’s frustration and dissatisfaction was reflected in his last work, Un Flic, which completed the passage towards abstraction begun in the mid-1960s. It offers a derisory world lacking even the human warmth of loyalty and friendship which the director had earlier celebrated. In retrospect, it seems likely that Melville’s reputation will rest largely on his ability, almost unique in French cinema, to contain deeply felt personal attitudes within the tight confines of commercial genre production. Certainly his thrillers are unequalled in European cinema.

—Roy Armes

MENZEL, Jirí

Nationality: Czech. Born: Prague, 23 February 1938. Education: Film Academy (FAMU), Prague, 1957–62. Career: Assistant director on Vera Chytilová’s Something Different, 1963; director at Barrandov Studios, from 1965; also stage director for Drama Club and Semafor Theatre, Prague, from 1967. Awards: Academy Award for Best Foreign Film, for Closely Watched Trains, 1967; Grand Prize, Karlovy Vary Festival, for Capricious Summer, 1968. Address: Solidarita E/31, 100 00 Praha 10, Czechoslovakia.

Films as Director:

1965 Zločin v dívčí škole (Crime at a Girls’ School) (+ co-sc); Smrt pana Baltsbergra (The Death of Mr. Baltsberger) (+ co-sc)
1966 Ostre sledované vlaky (Closely Watched Trains) (+ co-sc, role as the doctor)
1968 Rozmarné leto (Capricious Summer) (+ co-sc, role as the magician Arnoštěk); Zločin v šantánu (Crime in a Night Club) (+ co-sc)
1969 Skrivánci na niti (Larks on a String) (+ co-sc)
1975 Kdo hledá zlaté dno (Who Seeks the Gold Bottom)
1977 Na samote u lesa (Seclusion Near a Forest) (+ co-sc)
1979 Báječni muži s klikou (Magicians of the Silver Screen) (+ co-sc, role as the director)
1980 Postríženy (Short Cut; Cutting It Short) (+ co-sc)
1983 Slavnosti sneženek
1985 Prague, Vesmicko ma strediskova (My Sweet Little Village)
1989 Koneč starych casu (The End of the Good Old Days)

Other Films (incomplete listing):

1964 Courage for Every Day (role as guest in a pub); If One Thousand Clarinets (role as soldier Schulze); A Place in a Crowd (role as a secretary of the SCM); The Defendant (role as the young defense lawyer)
1965 Wandering (role as Dohnal); Nobody Shall Be Laughing (role as a bicyclist)
1967 Dita Saxová (role as the shy suitor)
1977 The Apple Game (Chytilová) (role as the doctor)
1981 Upír z Feratu (Herz) (as Dr. Marek)
1989 Hard Bodies (as Pfarrer)
1990 Tender Barbarian (Koliha) (as Doctor)
1995 Jak si zaslouzit princeznu (Schmidt) (as Painter)
1997 Hanna’s Ragtime (Svarcova) (as Pfarrer)

Publications

By MENZEL: book—

Closely Watched Trains (script), with Bohumil Hrabal, New York, 1977.
By MENZEL: articles—

‘O režii a herectvi, o filmu a dicadle—Rozhovor s Jirim Menzelem,’” interview with K. Pošová, in Film a Doba (Prague), December 1977.

Interview with M. Buruiana and J. Beaulieu, in Séquences (Montreal), September 1988.

‘Med smilet som vapen,’’ an interview with K. Lochen, in Film & Kino, no. 8, 1990.

Interview with J. Varden, in Filmkultura (Budapest), January 1994.

Interview with Christina Stojanova, in Ciné-Bulles (Montreal), vol. 15, no. 1, Spring 1996.

Interview with Jan Lučeš, in Iluminate (Prague), vol. 9, no. 1, 1997.

‘Setak, a Doktor Urral,’’ in Filmvilag (Budapest), no. 4, 1997.

On MENZEL: books—

Skvorecký, Josef, All the Bright Young Men and Women, Toronto, 1971.

On MENZEL: articles—

Crick, P., ‘‘Three East European Directors,’’ in Screen (London), March–April 1970.

Bluestone, George, ‘‘Jirí Menzel and the Second Prague Spring,’’ in Film Quarterly, Fall 1990.

Turcsanyi, S., ‘‘Mit tehet a kolto,’’ in Filmvilag (Budapest), no. 5, 1995.

* * *

Jirí Menzel’s chief claim to a firm place in the history of the Czech cinema to date is his masterpiece, Closely Watched Trains. He received an Oscar for it in 1967, and the film was the biggest box-office success of all the works of the New Wave in Czechoslovakia. Banned from the industry after the Soviet invasion of 1968, Menzel eventually saved his career by recanting and publicly dissociating himself from his pre-invasion films, including Closely Watched Trains. However, even in his humiliation he scored one important point against the establishment: he refused to return his Oscar to Hollywood as the authorities had demanded (he was supposed to explain that he ‘‘did not accept awards from Zionists’’) and merely made a repentance movie, Who Seeks the Gold Bottom, a social realist formula story about workers building a huge dam.

Like Milos Forman, Menzel was influenced by Czech novelists rather than by Western filmmakers, and for a considerable time worked under the tutelage of his teacher from the Film Academy, Otakar Váňa, and his admired older colleague Véra Chytilová.

Except for Crime in a Night Club, which was based on an original idea by novelist Josef Skvorecký, his pre-invasion films are adaptations of novels and short stories by Czech authors, either modern classics (Capricious Summer from a novella by Vladislav Vančura), or his contemporaries (Bohumil Hrabal’s Closely Watched Trains, The Death of Mr. Baltsberger, and Larks on a String, and Skvorecký’s Crime at a Girls’ School). Except for Capricious Summer, all these films were banned, Larks on a String even before release. After three hesitant efforts following his recantation, all developed from original ideas, Menzel found his old self in another adaption of Hrabal, Short Cut. An even less subliminal anti-establishment message is contained in The Snowdrop Festival, whose hero sacrifices his life for a pot of tripe soup. Menzel’s recent, very amusing comedy My Sweet Little Village, and another adaptation of Vančura, The End of Old Times, though largely apolitical, show him as the supreme craftsman of contemporary Czech cinema.

Except in his black comedies (Crime at a Girls’ School, Crime in a Night Club), Menzel is essentially a realist whose method could, perhaps, be described by the theories of André Bazin: he reveals rather than describes reality. There is very little of the formalist elements of movie making, and if, occasionally, there are some (for example, the opening montage in Closely Watched Trains), they are used mainly for comic effect. Menzel even dropped the achronological structure of the novella from which he made Closely Watched Trains, and replaced it with linear narrative. However, there is inventive use of subtle symbolism (for example, the clocks and their chiming in Closely Watched Trains), excellent work with actors, both professional and non-professional, and superb editing. The trend towards subtle symbolism culminates in Short Cut, a Rabelaisian tribute to elan vital which, however, hides a caustic, encoded comment on ‘‘goulash socialism,’’ on the Marxist refutation of Freud (the commanding image of the pretty girl sitting on a high chimney), and on various smaller malpractices of ‘‘Realsozialismus’’ such as jamming foreign broadcasts. The nearly subliminal nature of such satirical stabs, apparent also in The Snowdrop Festival, is a nut too hard for the censors to crack.
Unlike his mentor Chytilová’s crude defensive moral statements, the messages of Menzel’s pre-1968 works (and of Short Cut and The Snowdrop Festival) are—in the light of establishment philosophy—extremely provocative. In a way, his entire oeuvre is one continuous eulogy of sex—a subject at best tolerated by Marxist aestheticians in Czechoslovakia. The shock value of Closely Watched Trains is the combination of commendable resistance heroism with an embarrassing sexual problem: an anathema in socialist realism. Similarly, the “crime” in Crime at a Girls’ School turns out to be not murder but loss of virginity, and the “philosophical” ruminations of the three elderly Don Juans in Capricious Summer concentrate on a young artiste. The main theme of Short Cut—characterized by the phallic symbolism of the chimney which dominates the small central Bohemian Sodom—is simply the joy of sex. Considering that sex has always been the most dangerous enemy of puritanical revolutions, Menzel’s message is clear. It is a much less acceptable one than the moralizing of Chytilová, whose eccentric form and merciless vision, on the other hand, stand against everything the government watchdogs would like to see. The two artists, taken together, represent the two basic headaches any repressive aesthetic necessarily faces—the objectionable form, and the objectionable content. The survival of Menzel and Chytilová in a national cinema so full of victims demonstrates that, with perseverance, intelligence, cunning, and good luck, art can occasionally triumph over censorship.

—Josef Skvorecký

MÉSZÁROS, Mártá

Films as Director:

(short films in Hungary):
1954 Ujra mosolyognak (Smiling Again)
1955 Albertfalvai történet (A History of Albertfalva); Tul a Kálvin-téren (Beyond the Square); Mindennapi történetek (Everyday Stories)
1956 Országutak vándora (Wandering on Highways)
1957 Sa zimbeasca toti copii
1958 Femeile zilelor noastre; Popas in tabara de vara
1959 Schimbul de mine

(short films in Romania):
1957 Sa zimbeasca toti copii
1958 Femeile zilelor noastre; Popas in tabara de vara
1959 Schimbul de mine

(short films in Hungary):
1959 Az élet megy tovább (Life Goes On)
1960 Az eladás művészete (Salesmanship); Riport egy TSZ-elnökről (Report on the Chairman of a Farmers’ Co-Operative); Rajtunk is mulik (It Depends on Us Too . . . )
1961 Szívdobogás (Heartbeat); Vásárhelyi színek (Colors of Vásárhely); Danulon gyártás (Danulon Production); A szár és a gyökér fejlődése (The Development of the Stalk and the Root)
1962 Tornyai János (János Tornyai); Gyermekek, könyvek (Children, Books); Kamaszváros (A Town in the Awkward Age); Nagyüzemi tojástermelés (Mass Production of Eggs); A labda varázsa (The Spell of the Ball)
1963 1963.julius 27.szombat (Saturday, July 27, 1963); Munka vagy hivatás? (Work or Profession?); Szeretet (Care and Affection)
1964  Festök városa—Szentendre (Szentendre—Town of Painters); Bóbita (Blow-Ball); Kültöl (Proclamation)
1965  15 perc 15 évről (Fifteen Minutes on Fifteen Years)
1966  Borsós Miklós (Miklós Borsós); Harangok városa—Veszprém (Veszprém—Town of Bells)

(feature films):
1968  Elnévozott nap (The Girl) (+ sc); Mészáros László emlékére (In Memoriam László Mészáros) (short); A "heldudvar" (Binding Sentiments) (+ sc)
1970  Szép lányok, ne sirjatok (Don't Cry, Pretty Girls)
1971  A lóvinci fonóban (At the Lóvinc Spinnery) (short)
1973  Szabad lélegzet (Riddance, Free Breathing) (+ sc)
1975  Örökbefogadás (Adoption) (+ co-sc)
1976  Kilenc hónap (Nine Months)
1977  Ök ketten (The Two of Them)
1978  Olyan, mint otthon (Just like at Home)
1979  Utiközben (En cours de route)
1980  Örökseg (The Heiresses)
1981  Anya és leánya (Mother and Daughter) (+ co-sc)
1982  Nema Kiáltás (Silent Cry) (+ sc); Napló gyermekimnek (Diary for My Children)
1983  Délíbábok országa (The Land of Mirages)
1987  Napló szeremmenek (Diary for My Loves) (+ sc)
1988  Piroska és a farkas (Bye-Bye Red Riding Hood)
1989  Utinapló (docu)
1990  Napló apámnak, anyámnak (Diary for My Father and My Mother)
1992  Edith és Marlene (for TV)
1993  A Magazit (A Fetus)
1997  Siódyne Pokój (The Seventh Room, La Settima Stanza) (+ sc)
1998  A Szentecz Lányai (+ sc)
2000  Kisvilma: Az Utolso Naplo (Little Vilma: The Last Diary) (+ sc)

Publications

By MÉSZÁROS: articles—

Interviews in Filmkultura (Budapest), November/December 1972 and March/April 1977.
Interview with L. Bonneville, in Séquences (Montreal), September 1988.
Interview with A. Troshin, in Film und Fernsehen (Berlin), vol. 18, no. 9, 1990.

On MÉSZÁROS: books—

On MÉSZÁROS: articles—

Martineau, B.H., “The Films of Marta Mészáros, or, the Importance of Being Banal,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Fall 1980.
“Hungarian Film Section” of Filmfaust (Frankfurt), January/February 1984.

*M * *

Márta Mészáros is one of few contemporary woman filmmakers consistently making films both critically and commercially successful for an international audience. Her eight feature films made from 1968 to 1979 are concerned with the social oppression, economic constraints, and emotional challenges faced by Hungarian women. Mészáros explains: “I tell banal, commonplace stories, and then in them the leads are women—I portray things from a woman’s angle.”

Trained in filmmaking on a scholarship at Moscow’s film school, she worked at Newsreel Studios in Budapest, made four short films at the Bucharest Documentary Studios, married a Romanian citizen in 1957, and was divorced in 1959. She returned to Budapest, where she made more than 30 documentaries before attempting a feature. Mészáros’s documentaries deal with subjects as diverse as science (Mass Production of Eggs), a Hungarian hero (Saturday, July 27th, 1963), orphans (Care and Affection), and artists (Szentendre—Town of Painters), which she considers her best documentary.

In the mid-1960s Mészáros joined Mafilm Group 4, where she met Miklós Jancsó, whom she later married. She wrote and directed her first feature, The Girl, in 1968. A hopeless mood pervades this story of the quest by an orphan girl for her biological parents, who had abandoned her. The girl leaves her textile factory job to comfort her mother, who introduces her as her niece to her husband and relatives. The girl meets a man whom she believes is her father. The man neither confirms nor denies this. The girl returns home and attends a factory dance where she meets a young man who is interested in her. As with most Mészáros features the film is open-ended, lacking a conventional plot. Dialogue is sparse. Derek Elley asserts that The Girl is a model to which Mészáros adheres in her subsequent features; her visual compositions are “carefully composed, rarely showy,” and “characterisation never remains static.”

In Binding Sentiments the conflicts between an aging mother and her son’s fiancée are delineated with understated solemnity and subtle humor. A semi-musical, Don’t Cry, Pretty Girls, lightheartedly captures the romance between a rural girl and a city musician in a hostel and youth camp setting. Mészáros’s short Woman in the Spinnery studies the working status and conditions of the factory worker, the same subjects that she explores in Riddance. In this generation gap tale, a pair of lovers must decease the young man’s parents, who object to his love for a girl who was raised in a children’s home with no family. Riddance urges assertiveness and truth to oneself, and shows little sympathy for the older generation.

A fortieth woman wants a child from her unmarried lover in Adoption. She meets a teenager raised by the state who wants to marry her boyfriend. The relationship which develops between these two women and the man in their lives becomes the subject of Mészáros’s most illuminating work.

A factory woman with one child has an affair with an engineer in Nine Months. The conflicts in their relationship are never resolved; they cannot agree on the terms and conditions of a life together; neither can surrender enough self to form a partnership. The woman leaves him to bear her second child alone. The actual birth of Lila Monari’s child was photographed for the film.

The aptly titled Two Women depicts a friendship. Juli has a daughter and a husband attempting to find a cure for his alcoholism. Mari directs a hostel for working women, and tolerates a lackluster husband. Juli and Mari enjoy a greater rapport with each other than with the men in their lives. Situations depicting humiliation of and discrimination against women recur. The subject of Mészáros’s next film, about a young man’s attraction to a little girl, makes Just like at Home a departure from her focus on women. In this film, Andras returns to Budapest after study in the U.S. and strikes up a friendship with a ten-year-old Zsuzsi, whose parents agree that she live with Andras in Budapest and be educated there. Their chaste friendship endures despite the intrusion of Andras’s lady friend. Andras learns more from Zsuzsi than she learns from him, to the bewilderment of their parents.

In The Heiresses Mészáros used a period setting for the first time. A young, sterile woman marries a military officer during the World War II era. Because she needs an heir to inherit her father’s money, she persuades a Jewish woman to bear a child sired by her husband. After the birth, the woman and her husband become deeply attached, and a second child is born. Then the wife “turns in” the Jewish woman (Jews were deported from Hungary in 1944), the husband is arrested, and the wife is given custody of the second child.

The semi-autobiographical “diary” series of films include Diary for My Children, Diary for My Loves, Diary for My Father and My Mother, and, last in the series, the prequel, Little Vilma: The Last Diary. In these films, Mészáros continues her quest to link the personal with the political by showing world events through the eyes of the women living through them. Though critics often call Diary for My Children the best of the group and many complain that the films grow weaker and blander with each installment, the diary series represents Mészáros’s mostly deeply felt political dissent. The films follow the traumatic effects of Stalinism on Mészáros and her family. Especially in Little Vilma, which is both the last and the first film, see-sawing from past to present, Mészáros explores the wide and often tragic gaps between ideals and realities, and between parents and their children.

Mészáros’s films deal with realities usually ignored in Eastern European cinema: the subordination of women, conflicts of urban and rural cultures, antagonism between the bureaucracy and its employees, alcoholism, the generation gap, dissolution of traditional family structures, and the plight of state-reared children. In her unpretentious works, she creates a composite picture of life in Hungary today.

In Derek Elley’s words, she “has created a body of feature work which, for sheer thematic and stylistic homogeneity, ranks among the best in current world cinema.” Her features examine emotional struggles “in the search for human warmth and companionship in a present-day, industrialised society.”

—Louise Heck-Rabi, updated by Tina Gianoulis

MEYER, Russ

Military Service: Served in U.S. Army Signal Corps, World War II.
Family: Married 1) Betty Meyel (divorced); 2) Eve Meyer (divorced); 3) Edy Williams (divorced). Career: Made prize-winning amateur films in his early teens; spent World War II in Europe as a combat photographer; returned to United States and worked as an industrial filmmaker for Standard Oil and other companies; worked for Playboy magazine as a centerfold photographer; became commercial filmmaker, 1959. Office: c/o RM Films International, P.O. Box 3748, Hollywood, CA 90078–3748, U.S.A.

Russ Meyer
Films as Director:

1959 The Immoral Teas (Mr. Teas and His Playthings; Steam Heat) (+ sc, ed, ro)
1960 The Naked Camera (+ sc, ph)
1961 Eve and the Handyman (+ sc, pr, ph, ed); Erotica (Eroticon) (+ sc, pr, ph, ed, ro)
1962 Wild Gals of the Naked West! (Immoral Girls of the Naked West; Naked Gals of the Golden West) (+ sc, pr, ed, ro)
1963 Heavenly Bodies! (Heavenly Assignment) (+ sc, pr, ph, ed, ro); Europe in the Raw (+ sc, pr, ph, ed); Skyscrapers and Brassieres (+ sc, ph)
1964 Lorna (+ sc, pr, ph); Fanny Hill (Romp of Fanny Hill)
1965 Mudhoney (Rope; Rope of Flesh) (pr, ed, ro as man in lynching crowd); Motorpsycho (Motor Mods and Rockers; Rio Vengeance) (+ sc, pr, ph, ed, ro as sheriff); Faster Pussycat! Kill! Kill! (The Leather Girls; The Mankillers; Pussycat) (+ sc, ph)
1966 Mondo Topless (Mondo Girls) (pr, ph, ed)
1967 Good Morning . . . and Goodbye! (The Last Seekers) (+ ph, ed); Common Law Cabin (Big Six; Conjugal Cabin; How Much Loving Does a Normal Couple Need?) (+ sc, pr, ed)
1968 Finders Keepers, Lovers Weepers! (+ sc, ph, ed); Vixen! (Russ Meyer's Vixen) (+ sc, pr, ed)
1969 Cherry, Harry, and Raquel! (Megavixens; Three Ways to Love) (+ sc, pr, ph, ed)
1970 Beyond the Valley of the Dolls (Hollywood Vixens) (+ sc, pr)
1971 The Seven Minutes
1973 Blacksnake! (Duchess of Doom; Slaves; Sweet Suzy) (+ sc, pr)
1975 SuperVixens (SuperVixens Eruption; Vixens) (+ sc, pr, ph, ed, ro as motel manager)
1976 Up! (Over, under, and up!; Up! Smokey) (+ sc [as B. Callum], pr, ph, ed, uncredited ro)
1979 Beneath the Valley of the Ultra-Vixens (+ sc [as B. Callum], pr, ph, ed, ro as himself)

Other Films:

1973 That's Sexploitation (doc) (ro as himself)
1987 Amazon Women on the Moon (Dante) (ro as Video Salesman)
1989 Cult People (doc) (ro as himself)
1997 Hollywood Rated 'R' (doc) (ro as himself); Playboy's Voluptuous Vixens (Allen) (ro as himself)
1998 The Story of X (doc) (ro as himself); Voluptuous Vixens II (doc) (ro as himself)

Publications

By MEYER: books—

On MEYER: books—

On MEYER: articles—

* * *

Sleaze merchant or misunderstood artist? Glorified pornographer or directorial genius? Such questions have haunted Russ Meyer throughout his career. But regardless of the debates and critical misperceptions surrounding the man’s work, his place in cinema history is secure, and with four of his films a part of the Museum of Modern Art’s permanent collection, it cannot be denied that Russ Meyer’s corpus forms an indelible part of America’s cultural landscape.

Born March 21, 1922, in Oakland, California, Meyer’s father was a policeman and his mother a nurse. While in his early teens, the young Russ began making amateur films, winning prizes in contests by the age of fifteen. At the start of World War II, Meyer joined the army, and was assigned to the 166th Signal Photographic Corps, where he was to film General Omar Bradley’s First Army and General George S. Patton’s Third Army throughout Germany and France. Some of Meyer’s amazing war footage turned up later in Franklin Schaffner’s 1970 film, Patton. Returning home after his stint as a newsreel cameraman, Meyer began shooting industrial pictures for companies such as Standard Oil. An interest in commercial filmmaking was temporarily put on hold when he found that Hollywood had no interest in his radical/raunchy ideas. So instead, the well-trained photographer with a passion for well-endowed females turned to Playboy, where he is credited with shooting some of the magazine’s earliest centerfolds.

In 1959, Meyer joined forces with producer Peter DeCenzie, owner of the El Ray Burlesque Theatre in Oakland. Given a budget of only $76,000 to work with, Meyer filmed The Immoral Mr. Teas in a mere five days. The first soft-core porn film to earn a substantial profit (over a million dollars), Mr. Teas was a huge success and inspired a “nudie-flick” craze which resulted in approximately 150 substandard endeavors within a three-year period, including five by Meyer himself. Not surprisingly, this craze led to a great deal of controversy, with Hollywood condemning the films in question as “sleaze” and “smut.” The censorship debates which followed, however, eventually resulted in a more tolerant policy towards the presentation of sexually explicit content on the big screen.

With the money earned from Mr. Teas, Meyers began to self-finance a string of low-budget drive-in features (all of which he directed, and many of which he wrote, edited, and/or photographed), features which became increasingly bizarre, violent, and cartoonish. In 1964–65, during his so-called “Gothic Period,” Meyer established himself as both a cinematic visionary and a commercially successful auteur. The quartet of stark black-and-white films released during this period—Lorna, Mudhoney (a.k.a. Rope of Flesh), Motorpsycho, and Faster Pussycat! Kill! Kill!—are considered by many to be his best work, as he downplayed the bawdy voyeurism in favor of more sinister, narrative-driven films. Lorna tells the story of a young, beautiful, sexually frustrated housewife who temporarily falls for an escaped convict. By the time she realizes the error of her ways, it is too late, as she winds up dead following a tussle with her former lover. Among the many surprises of this erotic morality play is the acting of Hal Hopper, utterly convincing as a vulgar rapist with a hankering for Lorna. Hopper also stars in Mudhoney (based on the Friday Locke novel, Streets Paved with Gold), this time as a drunken scoundrel who winds up seeing a girlfriend after going insane and burning down his wife’s barn. Like so many of Meyer’s films, Mudhoney exudes a visual, as well as a dietic, pleasure in assertive, big-breasted women. But as Stephanie Watson and Jack Sargeant point out, unlike the other films “it both resonates with, and examines the construction of, the American Dream, in a way which goes beyond kitsch parody.”

With Faster Pussycat! Kill! Kill!, Meyer reached the height of his creative powers. This proto-feminist tale of kidnapping, cat-fighting, and drag-racing stars a trio of ample-chested butch outlaws who let off steam any way they want to out in the middle of the desert. Called a “head-on collision of respectable art and worthless trash” by one critic, Faster Pussycat! was made at the suggestion of Meyer’s wife Eve, and provided a welcome alternative to the often-misogynistic male action films of the era. Though Meyer focuses as much as ever on the gigantic breasts of his lead actresses, these are not dumb bimbos but canny women with a penchant for sadism and an insatiable need for action and excitement.

After the blockbuster success of Vixen! in 1968, Meyer was hired by 20th Century-Fox to make big-budget studio pictures. The first of these, Beyond the Valley of the Dolls (1970), was a huge hit, combining Meyer’s trademark directorial style with 1960’s subculture jargon provided by a young Roger Ebert. This “sex-n-sleaze” masterpiece was followed the next year by an uncharacteristically serious production, The Seven Minutes, which garnered only a lukewarm reception amongst both audiences and critics.

With Blainsnake! (1973), Meyer returned to the kind of filmmaking he did best, and continued in the sex-and-violence vein until his directorial career reached its logical (or rather, absurd) conclusion in 1979 with Beneath the Valley of the Ultra-Vixens. Since then, in addition to appearing as himself in a number of X-rated documentaries, and overseeing the distribution of his films in Europe and around the world, Meyer has spent his time working on various autobiographies—both in print (A Clean Breast) and in film (the uncompleted Breast of Russ Meyers). Fitting occupations for a man who, in the words of historian David Gebro, “unleashed a slew of epic Freudian fantasies upon the silver screen of the drive-in,” a man who has spent his entire professional life “rewriting history though the perspective of the overflowing bust.”

—Steven Schneider

MICHEAUX, Oscar

Films as Director, Producer, Scriptwriter and Editor:

(partial list)

1919 The Homesteader; Circumstantial Evidence
1920 Within Our Gates
1921 Deceit; The Gunsaulus Mystery
1922 The Dungeon
1924 Son of Satan; Birthright
1925 Body and Soul
mid-1920s The House behind the Cedars
1928 Easy Street
1930 A Daughter of the Congo
1931 The Exile
1932 Ten Minutes to Live; The Girl from Chicago
1936 Swing; Underworld; Temptation
1937 Miracle in Harlem
1938 God’s Stepchildren
1939 Lying Lips; Birthright (sound version)
1940 The Notorious Elinor Lee
1948 The Betrayal

Publications

By MICHEAUX: article—

Article in Philadelphia Afro-American, 24 January 1925.

On MICHEAUX: books—

On MICHEAUX: articles—

Gehr, R., ‘‘One-man Show,’’ in American Film (Marion, Ohio), vol. 16, no. 5, May 1991.

Green, J. Ronald, ‘‘Oscar Micheaux’s Interrogation of Caricature as Entertainment,’’ in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), vol. 51, no. 3, Spring 1998.

* * *

Until the late 1940s, film roles for blacks in Hollywood were clichéd and demeaning: mammys, butlers, maids, Pullman porters, all decimating the English language while happily, mindlessly serving their white masters. As a result, independent filmmakers—a majority of whom were white—produced approximately three hundred ‘‘race’’ films especially for ghetto audiences. Easily the most famous and prolific of these filmmakers was a black man, Oscar Micheaux, a one-man production and distribution company who shot over thirty features between 1918 and 1948.

Micheaux’s origins—and even an accurate list of his films—cannot be clearly determined, at least from existing volumes on the black cinema, but several facts are certain. Micheaux was a vigorous promoter who toured the nation’s black ghettos, establishing contact with community leaders and convincing theater owners to screen his films. He would then dispatch his actors for personal appearances.

Micheaux’s budgets were meager, between $10,000 and $20,000 per feature, and he economized on sets, shooting schedules, and behind-the-scenes personnel. He often filmed a complete feature on a single set, which may have been a private home or office. Scenes were rarely shot in more than one take; if an actor blew his lines, he just recovered his composure and completed his business. As a result, production values and performances were generally dreadful.

Some of Micheaux’s films do attempt to address serious issues. Within Our Gates features a sequence in which a black is lynched. Birthright (the 1939 version) is the tale of a black Harvard graduate who experiences opposition from those of his own race as well as whites. God's Stepchildren centers on a light-skinned black who tries to pass for white. Because of this subject matter, Micheaux was occasionally threatened by local censors.

However, the filmmaker was concerned mostly with entertaining and earning profits, not with controversy. Actors’ screen personas were modelled after those of contemporary Hollywood stars: Lorenzo Tucker was the ‘‘Black Valenino’’ and, after the advent of sound, the ‘‘colored William Powell’’; Bee Freeman became the ‘‘sepia Mae West’’; Slick Chester the ‘‘colored Cagney’’; Ethel Moses the ‘‘negro Harlow.’’ Plotlines also mirrored those of Hollywood products: The Underworld is a gangster film; Temptation, a De Mille-like sex epic; Daughter of the Congo, a melodrama set in Africa. Micheaux also directed the first all-talking black independent feature, The Exile, and 26-year-old Paul Robeson made his screen debut in a Micheaux melodrama, Body and Soul.

—Rob Edelman

MIKHALKOV, Nikita

Nationality: Russian. Born: Nikita Sergeyevich Mikhailkov-Konchalovskiy in Moscow, 21 October 1945. Education: Studied acting at the Stanislavsky Theater Children’s Studio and the Chuksin School of the Vakhtangov Theater; studied directing under Mikhail Romm at VGIK, the State Film Institute in Moscow. Family: Married 1) Anastasya Vertinskaya (divorced), 2) Tatyana Mikhalovka; two sons, two daughters; Mikhailov’s great-grandfather is the painter Sourikov; his grandfather is the painter Konchalovskiy; his father is Sergei Mikhailov, a writer and former chairman of the USSR Writers Union; his mother is poet Natalia Konchalovskia; his brother is director Andrei Konchalovskiy. Career: Began performing on stage and screen, making his movie debut in 1964; directed first short film, I’m Coming Home, 1968; submitted his VGIK diploma film, A Quiet Day at the End of the War, 1970; secured his international reputation with A Slave of Love, 1976. Awards: Grand Prix, San Sebastian Festival, for An Unfinished Piece for Mechanical Piano, 1977; Oscar nomination, Best Foreign Film, and Prize at Venice Festival, for Uruga, 1990; Oscar, Best Foreign Language Film, and Jury Prize, Cannes Festival, for Burnt by the Sun, 1994. Address: Malaya Gruzinskaya 28, Apt. 10, 123557 Moscow, Russia.

Films as Director and Screenwriter:

1968 I’m Coming Home (short)
1970 A Quiet Day at the End of the War (diploma film)
1974 Svoi sriedi chougikh (At Home among Strangers; A Stranger among His Own People) (+ role)
1976 Raba lubvi (A Slave of Love) (+ role)
1977 Neokontchennaya piesa dlia mekhanitcheskogo pianino (An Unfinished Piece for Mechanical Piano) (+ role)
1979 Pyat vecheroc (Five Evenings) (d only)
1980 Oblomov (Several Days in the Life of I. I. Oblomov)
1982 Rodnya (Family Relations; Family Ties; Kinfolk) (d only) (+ role)
1983 Bes svideteley (Without Witness; A Private Conversation)
1987 *Oci ciornie (Dark Eyes)
Nikita Mikhalkov

1990  Urga (Close to Eden)
1993  Anna: 6–18 (+ co-pr, appearance)
1994  Outomliionnye solntsem (Burnt by the Sun) (+ co-pr, role)
1998  Sibirskij isirulyunik (The Barber of Siberia) (+ role as Czar Alexander II, co-sc, co-pr)

Other Films (incomplete listing):

1964  Ya shagayu po Moskve (Meet Me in Moscow; I’m Wandering through Moscow) (Danelia) (role as Kolka)
1967  Czillagosok, katonak (The Red and the White) (Jancso) (role as White Officer)
1969  Dvorianckoe gnezdo (A Nest of Gentry; A Nest of Noblemen) (Konchalovskii) (role as Prince Nelidov)
1971  Krasnaya palatka (The Red Tent) (Kalatozov) (role as Chuknovsky, Icebreaker Pilot); Sport Sport Sport (Klimov) (appearance); Pesnya Manshuk (Song of Manchuk) (Begalin)

1978  Siberiade (Konchalovskii) (role as Alexei); Nenavist (Hatred) (Gasparov) (co-sc)
1983  Polioty vo sne naia vou (Flights of Fancy; Dream Flight) (Balayan) (role as Director); Vokzal dla dvoish (Station for Two) (Ryazanov) (role as Vera’s Boyfriend)
1984  Jestoki romans (Cruel Romance; Ruthless Romance) (Ryazanov) (role as Sergei Paratov)
1990  Pod severnym siyaniem (Aurora) (role)
1991  Unizhennye I oskorbyonnye (The Insulted and the Injured) (role)
1996  Revizor (role as Inspector)
2000  Vera, nadezhda, krov’ (Dubrovina) (role)

Publications

By MIKHALKOV: books—

By MIKHALKOV: articles—

Interview with A. Lipkow in Film und Fernsehen (Berlin), vol. 5, no. 7, 1977.
Interview with L. Bajer and J. Plazewski in Kino (Warsaw), February 1977.
Interview with P. Hoff in Film und Fernsehen (Berlin), vol. 8, nos. 2/3, 1980.
Interview with Z. Kiraly in Filmvilág (Hungary), vol. 28, no. 9, 1985.
Interview with P. Taggi in Segnocinema (Vicenza, Italy), May 1987.
Interview in Film und Fernsehen (Berlin), vol. 17, no. 5, 1989.
Interview with J. Houdek and K. Rihova in Film A Doba (Prague), August 1990.
Interview with U. Koch in Film Bulletin (Winterthur, Switzerland), vol. 33, nos. 5/6, 1991.
Interview with J. Gazda in Kino (Warsaw), March 1991.
Interview with L. Joris, in Film en Televisie + Video (Brussels), October 1994.
“Volt egyszer egy Oblomov?,” an interview with P. Vail’, in Filmvilág (Budapest), no. 6, 1996.

On MIKHALKOV: books—

On MIKHALKOV: articles—

Jaehne, K., “Rehabilitating the Superfluous Man: The Films in the Life of Nikita Mikhalkov,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley, California), Summer 1981.
Kopanevova, G., article in Film A Doba (Prague), July 1981.
Forgacs, I., article in Filmkultura (Budapest), vol. 22, no. 11, 1986.
Lipkow, A., article in Filmkultura (Budapest), vol. 22, no. 11, 1986.
Bilkova, M., article in Film A Doba (Prague), October 1986.
Amiel, V., article in Positif (Paris), September 1987.
Biography-filmography in Film Dope (London), January 1990.
Gazda, J., article in Kino (Warsaw), March 1991.
Haviarova, M., article in Kino (Warsaw), March 1991.
Kopanevova, G., article in Kino (Warsaw), March 1991.
Sorensen, E., article in Chaplin (Stockholm), vol. 34, no. 1, 1992.

* * *
Although he did not come to prominence as a director until the mid-1970s, Nikita Mikhalkov ranks among the most gifted Russian filmmakers of the entire post-World War II era. His films are highly emotional examinations of what it means to be Russian amid the swirl of politics and turmoil that has characterized his homeland during the twentieth century. In fact, he presently finds himself one of the few Russian directors whose career has flourished since the disintegration of the USSR. While Mikhalkov’s equally celebrated brother, director Andrei Konchalovsky, decided to leave their homeland in the early 1980s and work in the West, Mikhalkov chose to remain in Russia. From that vantage point he watched his international reputation expand while steadfastly continuing to make films that are uniquely Russian in subject matter and flavor.

_Burnt by the Sun_ serves as a high point of Mikhalkov’s career in that it earned him a Cannes Film Festival prize and an Academy Award. It also is the work of an artist completely freed from censorial restriction; the film is dedicated to all those who were “burnt by the betraying sun of the revolution.” The year is 1936, and the filmmaker himself (who began his career as an actor) stars as Sergei Kotov, aging hero of the Bolshevik Revolution. Sergei and his family enjoy an idyllic existence at their country house. The fact of Joseph Stalin’s tyranny seems a fantasy. But all of this is certain to change upon the arrival of Dimitri, the ex-lover of Sergei’s young wife, Maroussia. He begins enticing Sergei and Maroussia’s daughter, Nadia (played by Nadia Mikhalkov, the director’s real-life offspring). The fact that Dimitri is employed by Stalin’s governmental police does not bode well for Sergei. Ultimately, _Burnt by the Sun_ is the statement of an artist attempting to explore and understand the unpleasantities in the not-too-distant political past of his cherished homeland.

A number of Mikhalkov’s other films deal directly with the political history of post-revolutionary Russia. _At Home among Strangers_, his very first effort out of film school, is set in the 1920s, during a civil war which occurred directly after the revolution. It is a “Russian Western” about some brigands who steal gold that is meant to be used for the purchase of wheat to feed the hungry. The hero is a revolutionary who is thought to be disloyal to the cause, and who infiltrates the gang.

Mikhalkov firmed up his international reputation with his third feature, _A Slave of Love_. It is set in Southern Russia in the late teens of the twentieth century, during the filming of an inconsequential movie melodrama. The story involves the transformation of Olga, a spoiled, class-conscious actress, as she falls in love with a Bolshevik cameraman. This funny and poignant film is effective as a reflection of both the early years of movie-making and the 1917 Bolshevik Revolution.

_At Home among Strangers_ and _A Slave of Love_ make for a fascinating contrast to _Burnt by the Sun_. The first two—made when the Soviets were still in power—depict the heroics of the revolution, and characters who become inspired by the revolutionary spirit; the latter spotlights the cruel reality of life under Stalin, and the plight and fate of one once-heroic but now-deluded revolutionary. Meanwhile, other Mikhalkov films are set in pre-Revolutionary times. _Oblomov (A Few Days in the Life of I. I. Oblomov)_—arguably his most deeply layered and emotionally complex film—is a lyrical adaptation of the famous Russian novel written by Ivan Goncharov in 1858. The title character is a thirtyish civil servant and absentee landlord who decides to retire to a listless existence in bed. The flashback sequences of Oblomov as a boy in his mother’s arms are nothing short of wonderful. Mikhalkov has adapted other works from literary sources, most especially Chekhov; in fact, _A Slave of Love_ was praised by critics for its Chekhovian cleverness. _An Unfinished Piece for Player Piano_ is an affecting account of the various goings-on one lazy summer afternoon at the country estate of a general’s widow. The many guests include husbands, wives, and former lovers, and the film—an adaptation of Platonov, Chekhov’s first play—is noteworthy for its gallery of finely realized characterizations.

Despite his loyalty to Russia, Mikhalkov has not worked exclusively in his homeland. He went to Italy to film _Dark Eyes_, featuring Marcello Mastroianni in a role he was born to play: Romano, a likably charming but lazy lothario whose soul is sadly hollow, and who cannot comprehend that he has allowed life to pass him by. The scenario is loosely based on several Chekhov short stories. And _Close to Eden_ is a bright comedy set in a contemporary China where ancient customs conflict with modern values. The story concerns a peasant couple who reside in a small village amid the expansive steppes of Inner Mongolia. They are the parents of three children. Chinese law forbids them to have a fourth, so the husband—a shepherd who reveres Genghis Khan—sets out to procure birth control.

Regarding his affinity for Chekhov’s works, Mikhalkov once observed that the writer “feels very close to me because he offers no answers to the questions he poses. Chekhov’s characters seek an answer which they never find. I too don’t know the answer. I’m not even sure that knowing it would make me any happier. What is important is the search for the truth; that is happiness.” This statement relates not just to Chekhov but to the manner in which Mikhalkov has attempted to depict and, ultimately, understand the changing face of Russia.

—Rob Edelman

---

MILESTONE, Lewis

Nationality: American. Born: Family name Milstein; born in Chisinau near Odessa, Russia, 30 September 1895, became U.S. citizen and changed name to Milestone, 1919. Education: Jewish schools in Kishinev, Russia; University of Ghent, Belgium; engineering college in Mitweide, Germany. Family: Married Kendall Lee Glaezner, 1935 (died 1978). Military Service: Served in U.S. Army Signal Corps photography section, 1917–19. Career: Immigrated to United States, 1913; photographer’s assistant, 1915; after military service, became assistant to Henry King, Hollywood, 1919; worked at Ince and Sennett studios, 1920–21; assistant editor at Fox, 1922; editor at Warner Brothers, 1923; signed contract with Howard Hughes’s Caddo Company, 1927; production head for United Artists, 1932; compiled documentary with Joris Ivens, _Our Russian Front_, 1942; appeared as unfriendly witness before House Un-American Activities Committee, 1946; directed series for television, 1957–58. Awards: Oscar for Best Comedy Direction, for _Two Arabian Knights_, 1927;
Lewis Milestone

Oscar for Best Direction, for All Quiet on the Western Front, 1930.

Films as Director:

1925 Seven Sinners (+ co-sc)
1926 The Caveman; The New Klondike
1927 Two Arabian Knights
1928 The Garden of Eden; The Racket
1929 Betrayal; New York Nights
1930 All Quiet on the Western Front
1931 The Front Page
1932 Rain
1933 Hallelujah, I’m a Bum
1934 The Captain Hates the Sea
1935 Paris in the Spring
1936 Anything Goes; The General Died at Dawn
1939 The Night of Nights
1940 Of Mice and Men (+ pr); Lucky Partners
1941 My Life with Caroline
1942 Our Russian Front (co-d, co-pr, ed)
1943 Edge of Darkness; The North Star
1944 The Purple Heart
1946 A Walk in the Sun (+ pr); The Strange Love of Martha Ivers
1948 Arch of Triumph (+ co-sc); No Minor Vices (+ pr)
1949 The Red Pony (+ pr)
1951 Halls of Montezuma
1952 Kangaroo; Les Miserables
1953 Melba; They Who Dare
1957 La Vedova (The Widow)
1959 Pork Chop Hill
1960 Ocean’s Eleven (+ pr)
1962 Mutiny on the Bounty

Publications

By MILESTONE: articles—

Interview with Herbert Feinstein, in Film Culture (New York), September 1964.
Interview with Digby Diehl, in Action (Los Angeles), July/August 1972.

On MILESTONE: books—

Millichap, Joseph, Lewis Milestone, Boston, 1981.

On MILESTONE: articles—

Jameson, R.T., “‘Style vs. ‘Style’,” in Film Comment (New York), March/April 1980.
Mitchell, G.J., “Making All Quiet on the Western Front,” in American Cinematographer (Los Angeles), September 1985.
“Lewis Milestone,” in Film Dope (Nottingham), no. 43, January 1990.
Hanisch, Michael, “Sein Thema war der Krieg,” in Film-Dienst (Cologne), vol. 48, no. 20, 26 September 1995.

Lewis Milestone is undoubtedly best remembered for his classic statement against the horrors of war, All Quiet on the Western Front, for which he won an Academy Award. The film, coming so early in his career, raised high hopes that subsequent efforts would expand upon the brilliant potential exhibited in his first effort. In the minds of many, his following work, with the exception of 1931’s The Front Page, failed to live up to this early promise.

Through films like Rain, Of Mice and Men, Pork Chop Hill, and Mutiny on the Bounty, Milestone achieved a lesser reputation. He came to be known as a competent journeyman director and an excellent craftsman who, with good actors and a strong script, was capable of producing solid, entertaining films. The fundamental charge leveled against him by most critics was that he maintained a lackadaisical attitude toward run-of-the-mill projects.

Such assessments, however, overlook the outstanding achievement of at least one film, the much undervalued A Walk in the Sun. In this film the director’s inspired use of sound, coupled with some shifts in perspective, turned a routine war drama into a small classic that compares favorably with his best work. Stylistically and thematically, it expands on the innovations of All Quiet on the Western Front and, at the same time, represents perhaps the most creative use of sound since it was introduced to films.

Milestone’s experimentation with what the audience hears began with a unique approach to the film’s narration; he added a brooding, recurring ballad as accompaniment. The ballad functions much like a chorus in a Greek play by introducing and commenting on the action. The sentiments of the song are then fleshed out through the audible thoughts and the dialogues and monologues of individual soldiers. The war is perceived through sound, allowing the audience to experience it as the fighting men do. Modern war is fought against an enemy that the average soldier rarely sees. Instead, bomb blasts, strafing from the air, and mortar fire are heard as soldiers crouch in foxholes, fearing to lift their eyes. A Walk in the Sun, by its very refusal to gratify the eye with images of battle and by its emphasis on the small talk of soldiers, creates a microcosm of war that effectively epitomizes the men who must fight all wars. Through Milestone’s inspired use of previously overlooked audio techniques, he achieves the sensitivity of treatment in delineating his characters that many critics had found lacking in his work.

Milestone has yet to receive the critical reassessment that he undoubtedly deserves. Films as diverse as A Walk in the Sun and The Strange Love of Martha Ivers indicate that his later films contain moments of high achievement comparable to his two great early efforts. They also suggest a greater correlation between his technical innovations and his sensitively handled theme of men in groups than many scholars give him credit for.

—Stephen L. Hanson

---

MILLER, Claude

Nationality: French. Born: Paris, 20 February 1942. Education: IDHEC Film School, Paris, 1962–63. Military Service: National service in Le Service cinématographique de l’armée, 1964. Family: Married writer Annie Miller. Career: Worked in various capacities for other directors, including René Allio, Robert Bresson, Marcel Carné, Jacques Demy, Jean-Luc Godard, and François Truffaut, from 1965; directed six-part series Traits de mémoire for TV, 1974; directed first feature, 1976; also director of TV advertisements; president of ARP (Association des Réalisateurs Producteurs), 1999. Awards: Best Screenplay, Montreal, for Garde à vue, 1981; César for Best Scenario, for Garde à vue, 1982; Special Jury Prize of Fipresci Award, Istanbul, for L’Accompagnatrice, 1993; Jury Prize, Cannes Film Festival, for La Classe de neige, 1998; Fipresci Award, Berlin, for La Chambre des magiciennes, 2000.

Films as Director and Co-Scriptwriter:

1967 Juliette dans Paris (short)
1969 La Question ordinaire (short)
1971 Camille ou la Comédie catastrophique (short)
1976 La meilleure façon de marcher (The Best Way of Walking) (+ co-adapt, co-dialog)
1977 Dites-lui que je l’aime (This Sweet Sickness) (+ co-adapt, co-dialog)
1981 Garde à vue (Under Suspicion) (co-adapt)
1983 Mortelle randonnée (Deadly Circuit)
1985 L’Effrontée (An Impudent Girl) (+ co-dialog)
1988 La Petite Voleuse (The Little Thief) (+ co-adapt, co-dialog)
1992 L’Accompagnatrice (The Accompanist) (+ co-adapt, co-dialog)
1994 Le Sourire (The Smile) (+ co-exe pr)
1995 Les Enfants de Lumière (The Children of Lumière) (co-d);
Lumière et Compagnie (Lumière and Company) (co-d)
1998 La Classe de neige (The Class Trip) (+ co-adapt)
2000 La Chambre des magiciennes (+ co-adapt)

---

!Claude Miller
Other Films:

1964 Patrouille en zone minée (short) (for the Service Cinématographique de l’armée); Transmission de la division 59 (short; co-directed with Bernard Stora) (for the Service Cinématographique de l’armée)
1965 Trois Chambres à Manhattan (Carné) (asst d); Nick Carter et la trêfle rouge (Savignac) (asst d); Le Dimanche de la vie (Herman) (asst d)
1966 Au Hasard, Balthazar (Bresson) (asst d); Martin Soldat (Deville) (asst d)
1967 Les Demoiselles de Rochefort (Demy) (asst d); 2 ou 3 Choses que je sais d’elle (Godard) (asst d, role); “Anticipation” episode of Le Plus vieux métier du monde (Godard) (asst d); La Chinoise ou plutôt à la chinoise (Godard) (asst d); Weekend (Godard) (asst d)
1968 L’Écume des jours (Belmont) (production manager); Baisers volés (Truffaut) (production manager); Pierre et Paul (Allio) (production manager)
1969 La Sirène du Mississipi (Truffaut) (production manager); L’Enfant sauvage (Truffaut) (production manager, role)
1970 Domicile conjugal (Truffaut) (production manager)
1971 Les Deux Anglaises et le continent (Truffaut) (production manager); La Voix du large (short) (Porcile) (production manager)
1972 Une Belle fille comme moi (Truffaut) (production manager)
1973 Elle court, elle court la banlieue (Pirès) (asst d); La Nuit américaine (Truffaut) (production manager); Les Gaspards (Tchernia) (production manager)
1975 L’Histoire d’Adèle H. (Truffaut) (production manager)
1976 L’Ordinateur des pompes funèbres (Pirès) (role)
1978 La Torture sur le dos (Béraud) (co-sc, co-dialogue, role)
1979 Félicité (Pascal) (role)
1981 Plein Sud (Béraud) (co-sc, co-dialogue, role)
1987 Vent de panique (Stora) (co-sc)
2000 Under Suspicion (Hopkins) (co-sc)

Publications

By MILLER: articles—

Interview with L. Bonneville, in Séquences (Montreal), April 1986.
Interview in American Film, vol. 15, no. 1, October 1989.
Interview with O. Curchod, in Positif (Paris), no. 419, January 1996.
Interview in Le Film Français (Paris), no. 2740, 25 September 1998.

On MILLER: articles—

Claude Miller Section of Positif (Paris), January 1986.
Article in Film Comment, July/August 1989.
“Claude Miller,” in Film Dope (Nottingham, England), no. 43, January 1990.
Article in Positif, no. 403, September 1994.

* * *

In character-centred films that sympathetically portray the tribulations of insecure or emotionally disturbed individuals, Claude Miller reveals close affinities with his former mentor François Truffaut. He shares not only Truffaut’s humanitarian vision and refusal to moralise, but also his concern for carefully wrought narratives with an economical, resonant style.

After theoretical studies at IDHEC and work with the army film unit, Miller pursued his training under Carné, Bresson, and Demy. However, the most formative experiences came as assistant to Godard (from 2 ou 3 Choses que je sais d’elle to Weekend) and as production manager for Truffaut (from Baisers volés to L’Histoire d’Adèle H.). Godardian aesthetics and political perspectives distinguish Miller’s two early shorts: Juliette dans Paris and La Question ordinaire. The first portrays, in deliberately disquieting detail, the feline vampirism of a seemingly demure female; the second confronts Fascism by counterposing ideological statements and shocking images of torture.
Miller’s third short, Camille ou la Comédie catastrophique, signals the emergence of a less self-conscious and more personal style. Primarily an exploration of sexual attitudes, the film exposes the inadequacies of two salacious seducers humiliated by the willing Camille. This debunking of male posturing anticipates Miller’s first feature, La Meilleure façon de marcher. It is the feature films which reveal striking similarities with Truffaut’s cinema. Miller’s preference for working with a team of trusted collaborators (photographer Bruno Nuyttens, scriptwriter Luc Béraud), or a given actress (Charlotte Gainsbourg), is much in the Truffaut tradition. Film as a form of personal statement is likewise common to Miller’s conceptions. Thus, where the adaptation of a thriller is involved (Dites-lui que je l’aime, Garde à vue, Mortelle randonnée, La Classe de neige), the narrative is refocused to provide insight into the novel’s tortured souls rather than a simple illustration of their evil deeds. This emphasis on the psychological aligns these adaptations with Miller’s more self-evidently personal works: La Meilleure façon de marcher, L’Effrontée, Le Sourire, and, from Truffaut’s unrealized scenario, La Petite Voleuse. For Miller no individual is unredeemable, and his portrayal of human frailties eschews facile condemnation. In La Meilleure façon de marcher, a moral Fascism is seen as the defence mechanism of males insecure about their own sexual orientation. Highsmith’s psychotic murderer David becomes the pitiful, emotionally inadequate, and humiliated individual of Dites-lui que je l’aime. In Garde à vue, the rape investigation transforms itself into an examination of the personal relationships of detective and suspect alike, and both, in their common humanity, are found wanting. A more extreme case of symbiotic pairing, which again blurs traditional moralities, occurs in Mortelle randonnée, where the detective colludes with a multiple murderer who resembles his dead daughter. In La Petite Voleuse, as in Truffaut’s 400 Coups, social circumstances largely determine the main character’s descent into crime. Throughout Miller invites understanding of the misfit.

Frequently, the nature or expression of sexuality lies at the core of the narrative matrix. For Miller’s male characters sex is either a clumsy or a violent act, a humiliating fiasco, or for the sexagenarian of Le Sourire, a final assertion of self. In La Classe de neige, the world of the emotionally scarred adolescent Nicolas is filled with sexual fantasies while his dysfunctional father’s suppressed pedophilia is associated with obsessive images of dismemberment. By contrast the director’s females are more at ease with their sexuality. In L’Effrontée and La Petite Voleuse, where the delicately observed transitional stages of adolescence are thematic, the heroines readily anticipate their first sexual experiences, disastrous though they are. In L’Accompagnatrice, Sophie similarly accepts the disappointment of her first brief love affair as part of a maturing awareness of the fickle nature of adult relationships.

With the exception of his early self-conscious shorts, the flashy Mortelle Randonnée, and the more assertive style of Le Sourire, Miller’s work is characterised by understatement and stylistic sobriety: his films are concerned with sentiment rather than sensation. Acts of violence such as the murders of Dites-lui que je l’aime and La Classe de neige, or the knife incident in La Meilleure Façon de marcher are dramatically necessary, but not dramatised for effect. Self-effacing camerawork is the norm, with close-ups used unemphatically and special effects more generally confined to his advertising work. Music, however, forms an integral part of Miller’s creation and assumes a particular importance both in mood and structure, perhaps no more so than in L’Accompagnatrice, Le Sourire and La Classe de neige. Economy is the hallmark of Miller’s expositions and narrative development: subject, characters, and locations are succinctly established through juxtaposed scenes of symbolic resonance. The ensuing narrative is often constructed elliptically and is non-linear in form, with flash-backs and fantasies merging with actual events as meaning is gradually evolved. Since the primary purpose of narrative incident is the revelation of abnormal or antisocial behavior, once this goal has been achieved, closure often follows swiftly, and even summarily, as in the photomontage ending of Garde à vue. Locations are rarely specific. Indeed there is often a deliberate amalgamation of settings, as in L’Effrontée, to achieve generality. Places have importance not as geographical references but as symbolic elements in the exploration of character. The contrastive locations, ordinary house/luxurious mansion, of L’Effrontée represent the pubescent heroine’s reality and her dream; in L’Accompagnatrice, the protagonist is dazzled by the glamorous life-style of wealthy Nazi sympathizers and, rejecting her own modest background, plays along with their values; in Dites-lui que je l’aime, the dark, rainy streets are metaphorical expressions of David’s desperate mood; in La Classe de neige the purity of the snow-covered mountains contrasts the disturbed emotions of the sleep-walking Nicholas and the darker recesses of his father’s mind. The presence of water in a Miller film is frequently associated with sexuality, has connotations of evil, and is invariably a harbinger of fatalities. The lake in Le Sourire and the swimming pools of La Meilleure Façon de marcher, Dites-lui que je l’aime, and L’Effrontée become synonymous with humiliation and death.

Period settings are left equally vague to suggest universality, and in this respect, Miller’s uncommon use of epilogues (La Meilleure Façon de marcher, Dites-lui que je l’aime) constitutes a distancing from the immediate events with a prolongation of the temporal perspective. La Petite Voleuse and L’Accompagnatrice are exceptions: the moral dilemmas posed by the Occupation are integral to the theatics of L’Accompagnatrice, while the moral climate of the postwar years is essential to the dynamics of La Petite Voleuse. The director’s films of the last decade may be seen as works of transition and renewal. L’Accompagnatrice testifies to enduring thematic concerns with personal values in a morally fluid society which challenges notions of integrity, fidelity, and compromise. However, Miller’s customary freshness is lacking and the film comes close to cliché and dullness. A new directness marks the referential Le Sourire, which, entirely scripted by Miller, signals a return to the more personal statements of La Meilleure Façon de marcher or L’Effrontée, and through its obsessional phobic images of blood and vomiting to the early Godardian short Juliet dans Paris. The opening, contrastive locations—the clinic representing order and the fairground social disruption—and the constant mood switches through alternating jazz and classical scores recall Miller at his most accomplished. After two features without children as their subject matter, La Classe de neige marks a successful return to more familiar territory: exploring though the crime genre, formative childhood years corrupted by the murkier realities of the adult world. Produced by his wife Annie, the film was the first to be backed by Warner in France and was awarded the Jury’s Prize at the 1998 Cannes Festival.

Although Claude Miller emerged as one of the most promising new French directors of the 1980s, he has directed only three feature films in the last decade, partly due to poor health, but largely because of funding difficulties. In 1997 ambitious plans for a new version of Zola’s Nana with Emmanuelle Seigneur as the free-spending actrescum-courtesan failed to attract sufficient financial backing, and most recently Miller has turned to experimenting with digital video cameras for La Chambre des magiciennes, adapted from Les Yeux bandés, Siri Hustvedt’s intimate novel about two hospitalised women sharing their stories. Nevertheless, in 1995, along with forty other well-known directors, Miller marked his enduring commitment to traditional cinema by contributing to compilation films honoring the pioneering work of the Lumière brothers (Lumière et compagnie and Les Enfants de Lumière).

Miller’s cinema is a gallery of perceptively drawn portraits, in which delicately observed details register the elusive complexities of human nature. His vulnerable, often misguided and dysfunctional characters, existing in societies where difference is barely tolerated, are invariably bruised and humiliated in their progress towards mature self-knowledge and self-sufficiency. Yet the director’s optimism determines that, for the most part, they grow in strength through their experiences, securing their individuality in a world that seeks to deny it.

—R. F. Cousins

MILLER, George

Nationality: Australian. Born: Brisbane, Australia, 3 March 1945. Education: University of New South Wales, M.D. Family: Married Sandy Gore, 1985, one daughter. Career: Physician, St. Vincent’s Hospital, Sydney; began collaboration with writer/producer Byron Kennedy, 1971; directed first feature, Mad Max, 1979; producer/director of The Dismissal for TV, 1982. Awards: Best Director, Australian Film Institute, 1982; Best Foreign Film, Los Angeles Film Critics, 1983. Address: 30 Orwell Street, King’s Cross, Sydney, New South Wales 2011, Australia.

Films as Director:

1971 Violence in the Cinema: Part I (short) (+ co-sc)
1973 Devil in Evening Dress (doc) (+ sc)
1979 Mad Max
1981 Mad Max II (The Road Warrior)
1983 ‘‘Nightmare at 20,000 Feet’’ episode in Twilight Zone—The Movie
1985 Mad Max III: Beyond Thunderdome (co-d, + co-sc, pr)
1987 The Witches of Eastwick
1992 Lorenzo’s Oil (+ co-sc, co-pr)
1995 40,000 Years of Dreaming (+ sc, co-pr, ro as narrator)
1995 Babe: Pig in the City (+ co-sc, co-pr)

Publications

By MILLER: articles—

‘‘Lorenzo’s Oil,’’ an interview with S. Murray, in Cinema Papers, April 1993.

‘‘Life Lessons: Babe the Gallant Sheep-Pig/Scoring Babe,’’ in Cinema Papers (Fitzroy), December 1995.

On MILLER: book—

Mathews, Sue, 35mm Dreams, Ringwood, Victoria, 1984.
On MILLER: articles—

George Miller Section of Positif (Paris), December 1985.

* * *

Along with contemporaries Peter Weir, Bruce Beresford, and Gillian Armstrong, George Miller helped to bring Australian film to the international forefront by the mid-1980s with his brilliant trilogy of Mad Max, Mad Max II (The Road Warrior in the United States), and Mad Max: Beyond Thunderdome. In a desolate Australian space, sometime in the future, the police have their hands full trying to keep the roads safe from suicidal, maniacal gangs. Cop Mel Gibson quits, but then seeks revenge when his wife and child are murdered. Mad Max was almost lost when it was released in the late 1970s, but with the success of the sequel, the style and bleak outlook were seen to represent a tour de force of genre filmmaking. We have little doubt what will happen; but the way the story unspools is what attracted audiences around the world. George Miller made Mad Max and made fellow countryman Mel Gibson an international star.

The greatness of the Mad Max films come from the images of burnt out men and women in a post-apocalyptic world of desolate highways. Characters are dressed in what was left after the “end of the world,” including football uniform parts from American-style teams and other assorted bits and pieces of clothing. Miller seems to have patterned his hero after a Japanese samurai, but more insight can be gained by comparing these three films with the westerns of Sergio Leone, such as Once upon a Time in the West. The director’s inventions make mundane stories into something altogether new and fresh.

For audiences the trilogy was Dirty Harry thrown into a desert of madness. Miller’s style of directing has been called mathematical in nature, building a movie in the same manner prescribed by the early Sergei Eisenstein and utilized by the mature Hitchcock. Many argued that Miller, an Australian, outdid Steven Spielberg, the Hollywood wunderkind. And in the early 1980s Mad Max became a pop cult craze.

With the third installment Miller moved into mainstream Hollywood. Thus while it had the usual cast of unknown character actors and actresses placed in the sweeping, endless desert of the Australian outback, Tina Turner was cast as the ruler of Bartertown, a primitive community in the bleak futuristic post-Atomic world. Mel Gibson, again as Max, battled to the death in the Roman-style arena of Thunderdome. Miller proved he could continue the Mad Max appeal even though his partner of the first two, Byron Kennedy, died in 1983.

And although Miller was chosen by Spielberg for a segment of Twilight Zone: The Movie, he continued to work in Australia, on mini-series such as “The Dismissal.” In the late 1980s Miller changed courses and directed the hit The Witches of Eastwick for Warner Bros. With Jack Nicholson and Cher, The Witches of Eastwick offered a lively, colorful fantasy set in a New England town. This was a popular film, far from the visceral violence of Mad Max. Miller’s segment for Twilight Zone: The Movie, “Nightmare at 20,000 Feet,” was the ultimate white-knucklers’ airplane paranoid fantasy, with a computer technician staring out the window seeing a gremlin sabotaging the engines. John Lithgow turned in a bravura performance in a role originally played by William Shatner. The Miller segment, of the four, was the one most often praised in a movie now most associated with the grim tragedy of the filming of the John Landis episode.

In 1992 Miller directed the acclaimed film Lorenzo’s Oil, a tear-jerker starring Susan Sarandon as a mother fighting to save her terminally ill son. Praised at the time, this film seemed tired and too formulaic a decade later. Then Miller did a course change again in 1998 with the comedic Babe: Pig in the City. This sequel was stunning visually but disappointing at the box office. It has become a cult favorite, but seemed only to indicate that the 50-something Miller may have lost his direction.

Miller took a strange path to directorial success, but once one sees and analyzes the Mad Max trilogy, it makes sense. After graduating with a degree in medicine from the University of New South Wales in 1970, this “self-confessed movie freak” spent eighteen months in the emergency room of a large city hospital dealing with auto accident victims. Perhaps this is where he developed his strange view of the world. It worked for Mad Max, but thereafter Miller seemed to drop into the “almost forgotten” category of promising movie makers who never could develop a unified, long term body of creative output. Finally, no essay should end without noting that this George Miller is not the same George Miller, also an Australian, who made a reputation as the director of The Man from Snowy River (1982).

—Douglas Gomery

MINNELLI, Vincente

Vincente Minnelli with Cyd Charisse

Films as Director:

1942 Cabin in the Sky
1943 I Dood It (By Hook or by Crook)
1944 Meet Me in St. Louis
1945 The Clock (Under the Clock); Yolanda and the Thief
1946 Ziegfeld Follies (co-d); Undercurrent
1947 Till the Clouds Roll By (Whorf) (Judy Garland sequences only)
1948 The Pirate
1949 Madame Bovary
1950 Father of the Bride
1951 An American in Paris; Father’s Little Dividend
1952 Lovely to Look At (LeRoy) (fashion show sequence only)
1953 “Mademoiselle” episode of The Story of Three Loves; The Bad and the Beautiful; The Band Wagon
1954 The Long, Long Trailer; Brigadoon
1955 The Cobweb; Kismet
1956 Lust for Life; Tea and Sympathy
1957 Designing Woman; The Seventh Sin (Neame: replaced Neame as director, refused credit)
1958 Gigi; The Reluctant Debutante
1959 Some Came Running
1960 Home from the Hill; Bells Are Ringing
1962 The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse; Two Weeks in Another Town
1963 The Courtship of Eddie’s Father
1964 Goodbye Charlie

1965 The Sandpiper
1970 On a Clear Day You Can See Forever
1976 A Matter of Time

Publications

By MINNELLI: book—

I Remember It Well, with Hector Arce, New York, 1974.

By MINNELLI: articles—

Interview with Charles Bitsch and Jean Domarchi, in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), August/September 1957.
“‘So We Changed It,’” in Films and Filming (London), November 1958.
“‘On the Relationship of Style to Content in The Sandpiper,’” in Cinema (Los Angeles), July/August 1965.
“‘Vincente Minnelli and Gigi,’” interview with Digby Diehl, in Action (Los Angeles), September/October 1972.
“‘The Nostalgia Express,’” interview with Gideon Bachmann, in Film Comment (New York), November/December 1976.
“‘Two Weeks in Another Town,’” interview with P. Lehman and others, in Wide Angle (Athens, Ohio), no. 1, 1979.

On MINNELLI: books—

On MINNELLI: articles—

Harcourt-Smith, Simon, “‘Vincente Minnelli,’” in Sight and Sound (London), January/March 1952.
Johnson, Albert, “‘The Films of Vincente Minnelli,’” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Winter 1958 and Spring 1959.
Torok, Jean-Paul, and Jacques Quincey, “‘V.M. ou Le Peintre de la vie rêvée,’” in Positif (Paris), March 1963.
Harvey, S., obituary in Film Comment (New York), September/October 1986.
“Vincente Minnelli,” in Film Dope (Nottingham), no. 43, January 1990.

Between 1942 and 1962, Vincente Minnelli directed twenty-nine films (and parts of several others) at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, eventually becoming the studio’s longest-tenured director. Brought to Hollywood following a tremendously successful career as a Broadway set designer and director of musicals, he was immediately placed at the helm of MGM’s biggest musical productions, beginning with the all-black Cabin in the Sky. Over the next decade-and-a-half, he gained a reputation as the premiere director at work in the genre. This reputation was based on a remarkable series of productions, including Meet Me in St. Louis, The Pirate, An American in Paris, and The Band Wagon, and culminating with a Best Director’s Academy Award for Gigi. Yet Minnelli’s career was by no means restricted to musicals. Between 1942 and 1962, Vincente Minnelli directed twenty-nine films (and parts of several others) at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, eventually becoming the studio’s longest-tenured director. Brought to Hollywood following a tremendously successful career as a Broadway set designer and director of musicals, he was immediately placed at the helm of MGM’s biggest musical productions, beginning with the all-black Cabin in the Sky. Over the next decade-and-a-half, he gained a reputation as the premiere director at work in the genre. This reputation was based on a remarkable series of productions, including Meet Me in St. Louis, The Pirate, An American in Paris, and The Band Wagon, and culminating with a Best Director’s Academy Award for Gigi. Yet Minnelli’s career was by no means restricted to musicals.

Minnelli also utilized a fluid mobile camera suited to the filming of dance, mounting and preserving performance spatially, even as the camera involved the audience in the choreographed movement. Yet it also informs the non-musical sequences of Minnelli’s films with the same kind of liberal sensibility associated with contemporaries like Otto Preminger and Nicholas Ray, one that allows both the characters and the eyes of the audience a certain freedom of movement within a nearly seamless time and space. An accompanying theatricality (resulting from a tendency to shoot scenes from a fourth-wall position) blends with Minnelli’s specifically cinematic flourishes in a clever realization of the themes of art and artificiality, themes which run throughout his films.

Stylization and artifice are necessarily addressed by musical films in general, and Minnelli’s films do so with great verve—most thoroughly in the baroque otherworldliness of Yolanda and the Thief, and most brilliantly in the interplay of character and actor, stage and screen in The Band Wagon. But an equal concern with levels of unreality informs most of his films. This is perhaps most evident in the Pirandellian meditation on Hollywood, The Bad and the Beautiful, and its bizarre, Cinecitta-made quasi-sequel, Two Weeks in Another Town. This exploration surely reaches a kind of limit in Minnelli’s last film, A Matter of Time. This story of an aspiring actress, played by Liza Minnelli, becomes an examination of his own daughter’s talents and persona (haunted by the ghost of Judy Garland), making the film into the director’s own Vertigo, a fitting conclusion to a career devoted to the interplay of various levels of fantasy.

Filmic fantasy is almost always present in Minnelli’s films, even when they address the most mundane human problems in basically realistic settings. Virtually every Minnelli film contains a fantasy sequence, a moment in which the narrative recedes in order to allow a free play of symbols on an almost exclusively formal level. In Minnelli’s musicals, this is invariably an extended “ballet.” The most memorable of these ballets may be the twenty-minute number which concludes An American in Paris, but the most powerful example might be Judy Garland’s erotic fantasy of Gene Kelly as “Mack the Black” in The Pirate. In Meet Me in St. Louis, the burst of pure style occurs in the non-musical, and surprisingly horrific, Halloween sequence. In the comedy Father of the Bride, it is a tour-de-force dream sequence in which all of Spencer Tracy’s fatherly anxieties are unleashed. The position is filled by a hallucinatory chase through a carnival in Some Came Running, by fantastic visions of the title figures in The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse, and by mad car rides in both The Bad and the Beautiful and Two Weeks in Another Town. Such extra-narrative sequences serve to condense and resolve plot elements on a visual/emotional plane, providing the only escape routes from the exigencies of a world which Minnelli otherwise depicts as emotionally frustrating, overly complex, and terribly delicate.

Indeed, Andrew Sarris quite rightly noted that “Minnelli had an unusual, sombre outlook for musical comedy,” a fact which seems responsible for the unexpected depth of most of his films. Certainly one of the factors responsible for the continued interest in Meet Me in St. Louis is the overt morbidity of its nostalgic tone. Yet Minnelli’s troubled perspective is probably most evident in the existential isolation of his characters, and in the humanistic, yet stoic, attitude he adopts in treating equally their petty jealousies and their moral fears. A genuinely pained sense of the virtual impossibility of meaningful human contact informs the machinations of such stylized melodramas as Some Came Running, Home from the Hill, and The Four Horsemen. And the tenuousness of love and power is nowhere more artfully rendered than in his generic masterpiece, The Cobweb, where an argument over drapes for the rec room of a mental hospital reveals a network of neuroses amongst the staff and their families that is as deep-seated as the disorders of the patients.

At worst, Minnelli has been cited as the epitome of Hollywood’s ‘middletow’ aspirations toward making art accessible to the mass audience. At best, he was championed by the British critics at Movie during the early 1960s as one of Hollywood’s consummate auteurs. For one such critic, V. F. Perkins, Minnelli’s films provided some of the best examples of classical narrative style, which naturalized meaning through understated flourishes of mise-en-scène. It is certainly this capacity which enabled Minnelli to employ a forty-foot trailer as an effortless metaphor for the marriage of newlyweds Lucille Ball and Desi Arnaz (The Long, Long Trailer), to critique the manipulations of parental love by consumer culture through depiction of an increasingly overblown wedding (Father of the Bride), and to displace a child’s incapacity to deal with his mother’s death onto his horror at the discovery of his dead goldfish (The Courtship of Eddie’s Father).

We must certainly categorize Minnelli as something more than a decorative artist, for the stylistic devices of his films are informed with a remarkably resilient intelligence. Even if we are finally to conclude that, throughout his work, there is a dominance of style over theme, it ultimately serves only to confirm his contribution to the refinement of those techniques by which Hollywood translates meanings into style and presents both as entertainment.

—Ed Lowry

MIZOGUCHI, Kenji

Nationality: Japanese. Born: Tokyo, 16 May 1898. Education: Aohashi Western Painting Research Institute, Tokyo, enrolled 1914. Career: Apprentice to textile designer, 1913; newspaper illustrator, Kobe, 1916; assistant director to Osamu Wakayama, 1922; directed first film, 1923; began association with art director Hiroshi Mizutani on Gio matsuri, 1933; began collaboration with writer Yoshikata Yoda on Naniwa ereji, 1936; member of Cabinet Film Committee, from 1940; elected president of Japanese directors association, 1949; signed to Daiei Company, 1952. Awards: International Prize, Venice 1925 Kyoibadan no joo (Queen of the Circus); Gakuso o idete (Out of College) (+ sc); Shirayuri wa nageku (The White Lily Laments); Daichi wa hohomu (The Earth Smiles); Akai yuhi ni terasu rete (Shining in the Red Sunset); Furusato no uta (The Song of Home); Ningen (The Human Being); Gaijo no suketchi (Street Sketches). 1926 Nogi Taisho to Kuma-san (General Nogi and Kuma-san); Doka o (The Copper Coin King) (+ story); Kaminningyo haru no sayaki (A Paper Doll’s Whisper of Spring); Shin ono ga tsuni (My Fault, New Version); Kyoren no onna shisho (The Passion of a Woman Teacher); Kaikoku danji (The Boy of the Sea); Kane (Money) (+ story). 1927 Kon-on (The Imperial Grace); Jibi shincho (The Cuckoo). 1928 Hito no issho (A Man’s Life). 1929 Nihombashi (+ sc); Tokyo koshinkyoku (Tokyo March); Asahi wa kagayaku (The Morning Sun Shines); Tokai kokyogaku (Metropolitan Symphony). 1930 Furusato (Home Town); Tojin okichi (Mistress of a Foreigner). 1931 Shikano karera wa yuku (And Yet They Go). 1932 Toki no uta (The Man of the Moment); Mamho Kenkoku (The Dawn of Manchukuo and Mongolia). 1933 Toki no Shiraito (Taki no Shiraito, the Water-Magician); Gion matsuri (Gion Festival) (+ sc); Jimpuren (The Jimpu Group). + sc

Films as Director:

1923 Ai ni yomigaeru hi (The Resurrection of Love); Furusato (Hometown) (+ sc); Seishun no yumeji (The Dream Path of Youth) (+ sc); Joen no chimata (City of Desire) (+ sc); Hatzen no uta wa kanashi (Failure’s Song Is Sad) (+ sc); 813 (813: The Adventures of Arsene Lupin); Kiri no minato (Foggy Harbor); Chi to rei (Blood and Soul) (+ sc); Yora (The Night) (+ sc); Haikyo no naka (In the Ruins). 1924 Toge no uta (The Song of the Mountain Pass) (+ sc); Kanashiki hakuchii (The Sad Idiot) (+ story); Gendai no joo (The Queen of Modern Times); Josei wa tsuyoshi (Women Are Strong); Jinkyu (This Dusty World); Shichimencho no okin (This Dusty World) (+ sc). 1925 Gaijo no suketchi (Street Sketches). 1926 Kiri no minato (This Dusty World); Nihombashi (+ sc); Tokyo March; The Cuckoo’s Song; Furusato; Ningen; The Jimpu Group (+ sc). 1927 Mamho Kenkoku (The Dawn of Mongolia and Manchukuo). 1933 Toki no Shiraito; Gion matsuri; Jimpuren; The Jimpu Group; Strong Women Are (+ sc); Josei wa tsuyoshi (+ sc).
1934  Aizo toge (The Mountain Pass of Love and Hate); Orizuru osen (The Downfall of Osen)
1935  Maria no Oyuki (Oyuki the Madonna); Gubijinno (Poppy)
1936  Naniwa ereji (Osaka Elegy) (+ story); Gion no shi mai (Sisters of the Gion) (+ story)
1937  Aienkyo (The Straits of Love and Hate)
1938  Aa furusato (Ali, My Home Town); Roei no uta (The Song of the Camp)
1939  Zangiku monogatari (The Story of the Last Chrysanthemum)
1944  Danjuro sandai (Three Generations of Danjuro); Miyamoto Musashi (Musashi Miyamoto)
1945  Meito Bijomaru (The Famous Sword Bijomaru); Hisshoka (Victory Song) (co-d)
1946  Josei no shori (The Victory of Women); Utamaro o meguru (a story) (Utamaro and His Five Women)
1947  Joyu Sumako no koi (The Love of Sumako the Actress)
1948  Yoru no onnatachi (Women of the Night)
1949  Waga ko wa mo enu (My Love Burns)
1950  Yuki Fujin ezu (A Picture of Madame Yuki)
1951  Oya-sama (Miss Oyu); Musashino Fujin (Lady Musashino)
1952  Saikaku ichidai onna (The Life of Oyuki)
1953  Ugetsu monogatari (Ugetsu); Gion bayashi (Gion Festival Music)
1954  Sansho dayu (Sansho the Bailiff); Uwasa no onna (The Woman of the Rumor); Chikamatsu monogatari (A Story from Chikamatsu; Crucified Lovers)
1955  Yokichi (The Princess Yang Kwei-fei); Shin Heike monogatari (New Tales of the Taira Clan)
1956  Akasen chitai (Street of Shame)
1957  Osaka monogatari (An Osaka Story)

Publications

By MIZOGUCHI: articles—

‘‘Kenji Mizoguchi,’’ in Positif (Paris), November 1980.
‘‘Table ronde avec Kenji Mizoguchi’’ in Positif (Paris), December 1980 and January 1981.

On MIZOGUCHI: books—

Yoda, Yoshikata, Mizoguchi Kenji no hito to geijutsu [Kenji Mizoguchi: The Man and His Art], Tokyo, 1970.

Freiberg, Freda, Women in Mizoguchi Films, Melbourne, 1981.
Andrew, Dudley, Film in the Aura of Art, Princeton, New Jersey, 1984.
McDonald, Keiko, Mizoguchi, Boston, 1984.
Kirihara, Donald, Patterns of Time: Mizoguchi and the 1930s, Madison, 1992.

On MIZOGUCHI: articles—

Mizoguchi issue of Cinéma (Paris), no. 6, 1955.
Godard, Jean-Luc, ‘‘L’Art de Kenji Mizoguchi,’’ in Art (Paris), no. 656, 1958.
Mizoguchi issue of L’Ecran (Paris), February/March 1958.
‘‘The Density of Mizoguchi’s Scripts,’’ in interview with Yoshikata Yoda, in Cinema (Los Angeles), Spring 1971.
Sato, Tadao, and Dudley Andrew, ‘‘On Kenji Mizoguchi,’’ in Film Criticism (Edinboro, Pennsylvania), Spring 1980.
Leach, J., ‘‘Mizoguchi and Ideology,’’ in Film Criticism (Edinboro, Pennsylvania), Fall 1983.
Le Fanu, Mark, ‘‘Autour de Mizoguchi,’’ in Positif (Paris), June 1993.
Nemes, K., ‘‘Mizogucsi Kendzsi,’’ in Filmkultura (Budapest), October-December 1993.
Kirihara, Donald, in East-West (Honolulu), January 1994.
Burdieu, Emanuel and others, ‘‘Mizoguchi Encore,’’ in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), July-August 1996.

* * *

By any standard Kenji Mizoguchi must be considered among the world’s greatest directors. Known in the West for the final half-dozen films which crowned his career, Mizoguchi considered himself a popular as well as a serious artist. He made eighty-five films during his career, evidence of that popularity. Like John Ford, Mizoguchi is one of the few directorial geniuses to play a key role in a major film industry. In fact, Mizoguchi once headed the vast union governing all production personnel in Japan, and was awarded more than once the industry’s most coveted citations. But it is as a meticulous, passionate artist that Mizoguchi will be remembered. His temperament drove him to astounding lengths of research, rehearsal, and execution. Decade after decade he refined his approach while energizing the industry with both his consistency and his innovations.

Mizoguchi’s obsessive concern with ill-treated women, and his maniacal pursuit of a lofty notion of art, stemmed from his upbringing. His obstinate father, unsuccessful in business, refused to send his older son beyond primary school. With the help of his sister, a one-time geisha who had become the mistress of a wealthy nobleman, Mizoguchi managed to enroll in a Western-style art school. For a short time he did layout work and wrote reviews for a newspaper, but his real education came through the countless books he read and the theater he attended almost daily. In 1920 he presented himself as an actor at Nikkatsu studio, where a number of his friends worked. He moved quickly into scriptwriting, then became an assistant director, and finally a director. Between 1922 and 1935, he made fifty-five films, mostly melodramas, detective stories, and adaptations. Only six of these are known to exist today.

Though these lost films might show the influences his work had on the development of other Japanese films, German expressionism, and American dramatic filmmaking (not to mention Japanese theatrical style and western painting and fiction), Mizoguchi himself dismissed his early efforts, claiming that his first real achievement as an artist came in 1936. Working for the first time with scriptwriter Yoshikata Yoda, who would be his collaborator on nearly all his subsequent films, he produced Osaka Elegy and Sisters of the Gion, stories of exploited women in contemporary Japan. Funded by Daiichi, a tiny independent company he helped set up to bypass big-studio strictures, these films were poorly distributed and had trouble with the censors on account of their dark realism and touchy subject. While these films effectively bankrupted Daiichi, they also caused a sensation among the critics and further secured Mizoguchi’s reputation as a powerful, if renegade, force in the industry.

Acknowledged by the wartime culture as Japan’s chief director, Mizoguchi busied himself during the war mainly with historical dramas which were ostensibly non-political, and thus acceptable to the wartime government. Under the Allied occupation Mizoguchi was encouraged to make films about women, in both modern and historical settings, as part of America’s effort to democratize Japanese society. With Yoda as scriptwriter and with actress Kinuyo Tanaka as star, the next years were busy but debilitating for Mizoguchi. He began to be considered old-fashioned in technique, even if his subjects were of a volatile nature.

Ironically, it was the West which resuscitated this most oriental director. With his critical and box-office reputation on the decline, Mizoguchi decided to invest everything in The Life of Oharu, a classic seventeenth-century Japanese picaresque story, and in 1951 he finally secured sufficient financing to produce it himself. Expensive, long, and complex, Oharu was not a particular success in Japan, but it gained an international reputation for Mizoguchi when it won the grand prize at Venice. Daiei Films, a young company that took Japanese films and aimed them at the export market, then gave Mizoguchi virtual carte blanche in his filmmaking. Under such conditions, he was able to create his final string of masterpieces, beginning with Ugetsu, his most famous film.

Mizoguchi’s fanatic attention to detail, his insistence on multiple rewritings of Yoda’s scripts, and his calculated tyranny over actors are legendary, as he sought perfection demanded by few other film artists. He saw his later films as the culmination of many years’ work, his style evolving from one in which a set of tableaux were photographed from an imperial distance and then cut together (one scene/one shot) to one in which the camera moves between two moments of balance, beginning with the movements of a character, then coming to rest at its own proper point.

It was this later style which hypnotized the French critics and through them the West in general. The most striking oppositions in his themes and dramas (innocence vs. guilt, good vs. bad) unroll like a seamless scroll until in the final camera flourish one feels the achievement of a majestic, stoic contemplation of life.

More recently Mizoguchi’s early films have come under scrutiny, both for their radical stylistic innovations (such as the shared flashbacks of the 1935 Downfall of Osen) and for the radical political positions which they virtually shriek (in the final close-ups of Sisters of the Gion and Osaka Elegy, for instance). When charges of mysticism are levelled at Mizoguchi, it is good to recall that his final film, Street of Shame, certainly helped bring about the ban on prostitution in Japan in 1957.

A profound influence on the New Wave directors, Mizoguchi continues to fascinate those in the forefront of the art (Goddard, Straub, Rivette). Complete retrospectives of his thirty-one extant films in Venice, London, and New York resulted in voluminous publications about Mizoguchi in the 1980s. A passionate but contemplative artist, struggling with issues crucial to cinema and society, Mizoguchi will continue to reward anyone who looks closely at his films. His awesome talent, self-discipline, and productivity guarantee this.

—Dudley Andrew

MORETTI, Nanni

Nationality: Italian. Born: Brunico, Bolzano, Italy, 19 August 1953. Education: Self-taught. Family: Son, Pietro, with Silvia Nono. Career: Made his first amateur film, La sconfitta, 1973; directed additional amateur films Pate de bourgeois, 1973, and Come parli frate, 1974, shot on Super 8mm, which were screened in local cine-clubs and amateur festivals; directed his first feature, Io sono un autarchico, 1976; started a production company, Sacher Films, and an art house cinema, Nuovo Sacher, which screens independent films from across the globe. Awards: Italian National Syndicate of Film Journalists Silver Ribbon-Best Story, for Ecce bombo, 1978; Venice Film Festival Special Grand Jury Prize, for Sogni d’oro, 1981; Berlin Film Festival C.I.C.A.E. Award and Silver Berlin Bear, for La massa e finita, 1985; Sao Paolo International Film Festival Critics Award, Italian National Syndicate of Film Journalists Silver Ribbon-Best Original Story, for Palombella rossa, 1989; Italian National Syndicate of Film Journalists Silver Ribbon-Best Producer, for Il portaborse, 1991; Cannes Film Festival Best Director, European Film Awards
FIPRESCI Award, Italian National Syndicate of Film Journalists Silver Ribbon-Best Director, for Caro Diario, 1994; Italian National Syndicate of Film Journalists Silver Ribbon-Best Producer, for La seconda volta, 1996.

Films as Director/Screenwriter/Actor:

1976  Io sono un autarchico (I Am Self-sufficient) (+ pr, ed)
1978  Ecce bombo
1981  Sogni d’oro (Sweet Dreams)
1984  Bianca (co-sc)
1985  La massa e finita (The Mass Is Ended) (co-sc)
1989  Palombella rossa (Red Lob) (+ co-pr)
1990  La cosa (The Thing) (doc) (d, pr, ed only)
1994  Caro Diario (Dear Diary) (+ co-pr); L’Unico paese al mondo (co-d) (short)
1996  Il giorno della prima di Close-Up (Opening Day of Close-Up) (short)
1998  Aprile (+ pr)
2000  La Stanza del figlio

Other Films:

1977  Padre padrone (Paolo and Vittorio Taviani) (ro)
1987  Notte italiana (Mazzacurati) (pr)
1988  Domani accadra (It’ll Happen Tomorrow) (Luchetti) (co-pr, ro)
1990  Nanni Moretti (doc) (ro as interviewee)
1991  Il portaborse (The Factotum) (Luchetti) (co-pr, ro)
1996  Trois vies et une seule mort (Ruiz) (ro, uncredited); La seconda volta (Calopresti) (co-pr, ro)

Publications

By MORETTI: articles—

‘‘Conversation con Nanni Moretti,’’ interview by M. Garriba in Filmcritica (Rome), April/May 1984.

On MORETTI: books—

On MORETTI: articles—

* * *

Most Americans have never heard of Nanni Moretti, an Italian-born director-comedian who made his first film in 1973 at age twenty and has been a regular on the international film festival circuit since the early 1980s. This lack of recognition is not without irony, since his style of visually refined physical humor may be linked to the comic techniques of some of America’s most beloved funnymen (including Buster Keaton, Charlie Chaplin, and the Marx Brothers). But Moretti’s cinematic concerns involve much more than making his audiences laugh. He has been compared to Woody Allen in that both filmmakers have intellects, and both fill their work with philosophical deliberations.

Moretti is especially concerned with the political situation in his country, and the manner in which politics and politicians affect the lives of citizens. Palombella rossa is a typical Moretti film: both an off-the-wall satire and a pensive allegory about the choices, both personal and political, an individual makes in his life. It is the story of Michele, a character who often appears in Moretti’s films in different guises (and is played by the filmmaker). By 1990s’ standards, Michele is an anachronism in that he is a staunch communist. He also is a politician and a water-polo player. Much of the film is set during a water-polo match in which Michele constantly debates the merits of his politics with various individuals, from his teenaged daughter to journalists and political activists. All the while, the screen version of Dr. Zhivago, Boris Pasternak’s contemplation of communism, airs on a nearby TV set. There also are flashbacks to Michele’s youth. He is shown to be haunted by the more painful of his childhood memories, which adds insight into his present-day character.

Despite all this, Michele primarily is a comical creation. In his first appearance on screen, he drives his car and trades funny faces with some children in the back seat of the auto in front of him. This diversion results in his crashing into another car, causing a brief bout of amnesia that leads to the goings-on during the water-polo match.

On one level, Palombella rossa serves as an examination of the state of communism in Italy; the athletic contest slowly degenerates into chaos, which may be seen as a reflection of the political state of Italy. But one thing is clear: Moretti is lampooning all political theorists and blowhards, those who are pro- or anti-communist/fascist/capitalist but who end up becoming tangled in their own rhetoric. Even more specifically, the film serves as his shout of despair for the collapse of communism and the corruption of the true, ideologically pure communist objective: a fair and equitable economic system in which all people, rather than certain individuals, might thrive.

Moretti also overtly deals with politics in his first feature, I Am Self-sufficient, in which he spoofs the totalitarian ideal while chroning the goings-on in a theater group; he also appears as an actor in Daniel Luchetti’s Il Portaborse, an impassioned assault on corruption within Italy’s Socialist party. In his other films, however, Moretti focuses on additional issues with which he is intrigued. In The Mass Is Over, a speculation on the meaning of love, he plays a young cleric whose sense of priestly duty is jarred by the fact that his predecessor had broken his vows.

Moretti further spotlights this theme in Bianca, in which he plays a high school mathematics teacher who is consumed by the idea of romantic love. In this film, Moretti also drollly scrutinizes Europeans’ fixation on American pop culture, as his teacher is employed in the ‘‘Marilyn Monroe’’ alternative high school, where each classroom comes complete with a jukebox. In the autobiographical Sweet Dreams, he plays a filmmaker who shares a complex relationship with his mother. As the character is lauded by those who desire to collaborate with him on future projects and censured as a fraud by those put off by his opinions, Moretti reflects on the varied manner in which he is viewed as a filmmaker.

Moretti’s most widely distributed film to date is Caro Diario. It is divided into three distinctly personal sections, each of which mirrors the director’s concerns about his culture and, ultimately, his own survival. In the first, Moretti rides around Rome on a Vespa and makes off-the-wall observations about what he sees and feels. He pronounces that he is obsessed with Jennifer Beals, of Flashdance fame. This plays itself out on screen with the sudden appearance of Beals, who just so happens to be on the same street as Moretti at that very moment; as a cinematic effect, this also coincides with the manner in which Woody Allen employed Marshall McLuhan in Annie Hall. Moretti also savages pompous film critics who know nothing of real life, and who extol such films as Henry: Portrait of a Serial Killer, and he wonders why he has never visited the spot where Pier Paolo Pasolini was murdered.

In Part 2, Moretti goes island-hopping in Southern Italy. Here, he spotlights the same concerns he had dealt with earlier in Bianca, and considers a most relevant contemporary question: How long can a man exist without a television set? Part 3 is the most serious segment. Here, Moretti re-stages his own cancer treatment. A sequence he filmed as he readied himself for a real chemotherapy treatment precedes reenactments of him enduring uncomfortable itches and visiting numerous doctors. Each one offers different diagnoses. Each one hands him prescriptions for different pills, and the poor guy ends up with so many that he could open his own drugstore. Once again, Moretti manages to joke about a serious situation, and in doing so pulls off quite a feat: finding humor in his own mortality.

Moretti reappears as his humorously obsessive self in Aprile, his Caro Diario follow-up. He again depicts himself as self-absorbed and angst-ridden, and he focuses on three issues that are constants in his films: Italian politics; American culture and movies; and family. Moretti complains that his favored candidates are bound to lose an upcoming election, ponders the 1950s Hollywood-style musical he is set to direct, and prepares for the birth of his first child. The occasion of the latter directly parallels the content of the final section of Caro Diario.

While Aprile is often delightful, it is not as incisive as Caro Diario—and it earned neither the acclaim nor the distribution of its predecessor.

—Rob Edelman

MORRIS, Errol

Nationality: American. Born: Hewlett, New York, 5 February 1948.

Education: Graduated from the University of Wisconsin-Madison, 1969; graduate work at Princeton University and the University of California-Berkeley. Family: Married Julia Sheehan, an art historian; one son. Career: After leaving graduate school, held several jobs before beginning work on Gates of Heaven. Awards: Golden Horse award for Best Foreign Film, Taiwan International Film Festival, for The Thin Blue Line, 1988; Grand Jury Prize and Filmmaker’s Prize, Sundance Film Festival, for A Brief History of Time, 1992; Gotham Awards Filmmaker Award, 1997; Independent Spirit Truer than Fiction Award, for Fast, Cheap & Out of Control, 1997; Double Take Documentary Film Festival Career Award, 1999. Agent: ICM, 8942 Wilshire Blvd., Beverly Hills, CA 90211, U.S.A. Address: Fourth Floor Productions, 678 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge, MA 02139, U.S.A.

Films as Director:

1978 Gates of Heaven
1982 Vernon, Florida
1988 The Thin Blue Line
1992 A Brief History of Time; The Dark Wind
1996 Fast, Cheap & Out of Control
1998 Stairway to Heaven (short—for TV)
1999 Mr. Death: The Rise and Fall of Fred A. Leuchter Jr.
2000 The Killer Inside Me (short—for TV); I Dismember Mama (short—for TV)

Publications

On MORRIS: articles—

Errol Morris’s provocative work challenges documentary conventions. His unique style surfaces in his first film, Gates of Heaven, where he examines two California pet cemeteries: one a failure, and the other a successful enterprise run by a man and his two adult sons. Rather than employing an objective reportorial style in which information is presented and opposing sides are given an opportunity to present their positions, Morris allows the narrative to unfold slowly through the interwoven testimony of the participants. Quite unlike the typical, tightly controlled, interview-based documentary in which participants respond to direct questioning, in Gates of Heaven participants ramble on about issues both related and unrelated to the topic. As the interviews progress, the distinctive personalities of the participants emerge. The viewer is required to piece the narrative together, as the film’s point of view remains ambiguous. Are the pet cemetery entrepreneurs, both successful and unsuccessful, compassionate individuals trying to help bereaved pet owners, or are they curious oddities, pandering to a few marginal individuals obsessed with their departed pets? The audience is left to decide.

Vernon, Florida. Morris’s subsequent film, focuses on the residents of a small Florida community. It is a simple film which again employs the unstructured interview, the personal narrative, introduced in Gates of Heaven. The town’s residents reflect on many facets of their lives. By conventional standards, their vivid personalities and their rural lifestyle appear quirky and eccentric. What emerges is a film that attempts neither to judge its subjects nor to tell the audience what to think.

The Thin Blue Line, dealing with the arrest and conviction of Randall Adams for the murder of a Dallas police officer in 1976, is Morris’s best known and most distinctive film. The film created quite a stir when it was released, for several reasons. For example, although the film leaves the viewer with a clear sense that Randall Adams is innocent, it does not present that information directly. In a conventional documentary film, the most plausible scenario is represented and supported. Different opinions are introduced, but one clear position is taken. Morris defies that convention by illustrating conflicting interpretations, and in so doing he calls into question the very nature of the construction of truth. The audience is forced to confront the ambiguity caused by conflicting accounts. This confrontation disrupts the seamlessness of the conventional documentary and is disquieting to many viewers.

Morris also drew attention by using a series of highly stylized reenactments to illustrate the narratives told by various individuals. Reenactments have fallen out of favor as a documentary convention, and some critics feel Morris’s use of reenactments detracts from the film’s objectivity. Documentary has a long history of using reenactments, although they usually serve to represent typical rather than specific actions or activities. Today, viewers of documentary films expect to see evidence recorded on the scene from the historical world rather than reenacted scenarios. The introduction of cinema verite in the 1960s and the ubiquitous presence of on-the-scene reporting in the evening news has given rise to these expectations. Reenactments nowadays appear unfamiliar, unrealistic, even manipulative to many viewers. Morris takes reenactments an additional step by illustrating conflicting points of view instead of a typical or most plausible perspective.

Morris was hired to direct A Brief History of Time, but the film retains many characteristics of his earlier personal work. The film is based on scientist Stephen Hawking’s book of the same title, and Hawking’s computer-synthesized voice provides the structuring voice-over narration for the film. Hawking is presented as an ordinary man with extraordinary characteristics, including extreme physical limitations and a soaring intellect. As with the subjects in Morris’s earlier work, Hawking represents himself, and his personal narrative is embellished by the recollections of friends, family, and colleagues. Hawking’s synthesized voice on the soundtrack coupled with images of Hawking confined to a wheelchair, lips immobile, eyes animated, reveal powerful elements of character, personality, and intellect resulting in a complex, multifaceted portrait of the man and the scientist.

In 1999, Morris premiered Mr. Death: The Rise and Fall of Fred A. Leuchter Jr. The film’s focus is on an unprepossessing man who builds and repairs electric chairs in the basement of his home. Fred Leuchter’s macabre occupation might not, in itself, make the man a fitting subject for an Errol Morris documentary—but there is more to his story. A group of Holocaust deniers sent Leuchter to visit Auschwitz (the most notorious of the Nazi death camps), instructing him to steal and analyze some bits of concrete from the ruins of the camp’s gas chambers. Although lacking in scientific credentials, Leuchter claimed that he had found no trace of cyanide in the samples of concrete, and concluded that, therefore, no one had been gassed to death at Auschwitz. Leuchter immediately became the star “expert” cited by neo-Nazis and Klansmen everywhere.

Morris had originally planned to let Leuchter’s own specious arguments condemn him. But, upon screening a rough cut of the film for some students at Harvard University, Morris found that some in the audience found Leuchter’s claims reasonable. Thus, the final version of Mr. Death contains scenes of noted Holocaust experts, who refute Leuchter thoroughly and convincingly. Even so, some Jewish groups condemned the film on the grounds that it gives too much exposure to the cause of “Holocaust revisionism.”

Morris’ next project involved a series of short (30 minute) documentary films for a program called “First Person,” broadcast over the pay-cable channel Bravo. His subjects included a woman who designed the first “humane” slaughterhouse, a man who attempted to cryogenically “freeze” his mother, and a woman who falls in love with serial killers.

Morris’s work is unfettered by slavish adherence to current documentary conventions. He does not appear in his films, but his presence is felt in their structure and style. Morris allows the individuals represented to recount their own, often equivocal narratives, which are then carefully woven into the finished product through editing. The result is not a typical “objective” or journalistic documentary with an easily accessible perspective. The viewer is made aware of the process of documentary construction through interviews. that last a little too long or through the presentation of conflicting points of view without obvious resolution. The viewer is challenged and required to participate in crafting the narrative and forming an opinion about the individuals and issues presented. Morris brings a new vigor and a new insight to documentary filmmaking by playing with conventions and experimenting with new forms of representation.

—Elizabeth Cline, updated by Justin Gustainis

MORRISSEY, Paul

Films as Director:

1963 Taylor Mead Dances (short)
1964 Civilization and Its Discontents
1968 Lonesome Cowboys (Andy Warhol’s Lonesome Cowboys, Horse, Ramona and Julian) (Warhol) (uncredited, + pr, ph, ed); Flesh (Andy Warhol’s Flesh) (+ sc, ph)
1969 Trash (+ sc, ph, ed)
1970 Women in Revolt (Andy Warhol’s Women) (+ sc, ed)
1971 L’Amour (co-d, + co-sc, pr); Heat (Andy Warhol’s Heat) (+ co-sc, ph)
1974 Flesh for Frankenstein (Andy Warhol’s Frankenstein) (co-d, + co-sc); Blood for Dracula (Andy Warhol’s Dracula) (co-d, + co-sc)
1978 The Hound of the Baskervilles (+ co-sc)
1981 Madame Wang’s (+ sc)
1982 Forty Deuce
1985 Mixed Blood (+ co-sc); Le Neveu de Beethoven (Beethoven’s Nephew) (+ co-sc)
1988 Spike of Bensonhurst (+ co-sc)

Other Films:

1963 My Hustler (Warhol) (production asst); Space (Warhol) (production asst)
1966 Chelsea Girls (Warhol) (production asst); More Milk Evette (Lana Turner and More Milk Evette) (Warhol) (production asst); The Velvet Underground and Nico (Warhol) (doc) (ph)
1967 Nude Restaurant (Warhol) (pr); Bike Boy (Warhol) (ph)
1968 Superartist (Drago) (short) (doc) (ro as himself, + sound)
1969 The Loves of Ondine (Warhol) (exec pr) Andy Makes a Movie (Smith) (doc) (short) (ro as himself)
1969 Midnight Cowboy (Schlesinger) (ro as Party Guest); Blue Movie (Fuck) (Warhol) (exec pr)
1971 Rich and Famous (Cukor) (ro as Malibu Party Guest)
1972 Chambre 66 (Wenders—for TV) (doc) (short) (ro as himself)
1991 Resident Alien (Quentin Crisp in America) (Nossiter) (doc) (ro as himself)
1994 Jonas in the Desert (Sempel) (doc) (ro as himself)
1995 Nico Icon (Offeringer) (doc) (ro as himself)
1998 Divine Trash (Yeager) (doc) (ro as himself)

Publications

By MORRISSEY: articles—

“Bianca,” interview with Andy Warhol and others, in Interview (New York), December 1978.

On MORRISSEY: book—

On MORRISSEY: articles—

“Flash for Frankenstein,” in Film (Woking, Surrey, England), April 1975.

* * *

Paul Morrissey started out as one of the countless faces and personalities populating Andy Warhol’s famed Factory in the 1960s. He harbored cinematic aspirations, and worked in various capacities on a number of Warhol’s films; because of the often haphazard manner in which they were shot, Morrissey’s exact role in their production is the subject of debate. In 1968, Warhol nearly was killed after being shot by Valerie Solanis and summarily removed himself from first-hand involvement in his film production. At that point, Morrissey was able to take control and have a more clearly defined, hands-on role in directing the ‘‘Warhol’’ films—and exploiting the Warhol name. The pre-Morrissey Warhol’s films may be far removed from the mainstream; nonetheless, Warhol attempted to commercialize his projects, but did so on his own terms. There is an art and integrity to these films. Morrissey, meanwhile, was more of a packager than an artist. He wanted to concoct a formula that would make the films more mainstream. That formula consisted of imbuing them with a more orthodox cinematic structure, creating more conventional plot lines, and capitalizing on the Warhol name by slapping it on the finished product. Morrissey’s best films of the period may be absurdist classics and impertinent freak-show fun, but they are not art.

His outstanding directorial efforts all have monosyllabic titles: Flesh, Trash, and Heat. Superficially at least, they are in the outrageous Warhol tradition, and are populated by flagrantly campy, Warholian characters who wallow in divine degradation: transvestites, exhibitionists, drug addicts, go-go dancers, faded screen performers, lesbians, and gays. The prevailing attitude is represented by the name of a subsidiary character in Heat: “Aunt Harold.” Their characters—many of whom for all intents and purposes appear on screen as themselves—exist in self-contained and self-created worlds. And while their scenarios are scripted, Flesh, Trash, and Heat do serve as authentic, slice-of-life portraits that capture a time and place.

All three feature the Warhol hunk-icon Joe Dallesandro. In Flesh, he stars as a male prostitute who toils to support his lesbian wife and their son. Trash charts the plight of a hard-bitten and resourceful transvestite named Holly, played by Holly Woodlawn; Dallesandro appears as Holly’s lethargic, drug-addicted roommate-lover. Heat is Morrissey’s masterpiece, a clever reworking/updating of Sunset Boulevard with Sylvia Miles and Dallesandro in the Gloria Swanson and William Holden roles. Even though it also is known as Andy Warhol’s Heat, the film is without doubt a Paul Morrissey creation. In both style and substance, all three films are forerunners of the sexually frank independent productions (and, specifically, the New Queer Cinema) that emerged in the 1980s and 1990s.

With the exception of Mixed Blood, a darkly comic crime story that has garnered a bit of a cult reputation, all of Morrissey’s work since Flesh, Trash, and Heat has been disappointing: insignificant at best, and downright dreadful at worst. Flesh for Frankenstein and Blood for Dracula (otherwise known as Andy Warhol’s Frankenstein and Andy Warhol’s Dracula) are odd, boring exercises in camp. Forty Deuce, a sordid story of teen hustlers and heroin, is of note only for the appearance of a young Kevin Bacon. The Hound of the Baskervilles, made in England and featuring a top cast (Peter Cook, Dudley Moore, Denholm Elliott, Joan Greenwood, Jessie Matthews, Spike Milligan, Roy Kinnear), is an appalling Conan Doyle spoof. Le Neveu de Beethoven is a disappointing biopic. Spike of Bensonhurst, Morrissey’s most mainstream film, is a sometimes-amusing but ultimately forgettable comedy about a young wannabe pugilist from Brooklyn whose life becomes complicated when he connects with the daughter of a mobster.

—Rob Edelman

MULLIGAN, Robert

Robert Mulligan

Broffman, 5150 Wilshire Boulevard #505, Los Angeles, California 90036, U.S.A.

Films as Director:

1957  Fear Strikes Out
1960  The Rat Race
1961  The Great Imposter; Come September
1962  The Spiral Road; To Kill a Mockingbird
1963  Love with the Proper Stranger
1965  Baby the Rain Must Fall
1966  Inside Daisy Clover
1967  Up the Down Staircase
1968  The Stalking Moon
1971  The Pursuit of Happiness; Summer of ’42
1972  The Other (+ pr)
1975  The Nickel Ride (+ pr)
1978  Blood Brothers
1979  Same Time, Next Year (+ co-pr)
1982  Kiss Me Goodbye (+ co-pr)
1988  Clara’s Heart (+ co-pr)
1991  Man in the Moon

Publications

By MULLIGAN: articles—

Interview with J. A. Gil, in Ecran (Paris), October 1974.

On MULLIGAN: book—

Belton, John, Cinema Stylists, Metuchen, New Jersey, 1983.
On MULLIGAN: articles—

Falonga, M., “Mysterious Islands: Summer of ‘42,” in Film Heritage (New York), Fall 1972.

“TV to Film: A History, a Map, and a Family Tree,” in Monthly Film Bulletin (London), February 1983.

* * *

In an era in which consistent visual style seems perhaps too uniformly held as the prerequisite of the valorized auteur, one can all too easily understand why Robert Mulligan’s work has failed to evoke any passionate critical interest. His films all look so different; for instance, To Kill a Mockingbird, with its black-and-white measured pictorialism; Up the down Staircase, photographed on location with a documentary graininess; The Other, with its heightened Gothic expressionism rather conventional to the horror genre, if not to Mulligan’s previous work; and The Summer of ‘42, with a pastel prettiness that suffuses each image with the nostalgia of memory. If some would claim this visual eclecticism reflects the lack of a strong personality, others could claim that Mulligan has too much respect for his material to impose arbitrarily upon it some monolithic consistency and instead brings to his subjects the sensibility of a somewhat self-effacing Hollywood craftsman. Yet there are certainly some sequences in Mulligan’s work that spring vividly to mind: the silent, final seduction in The Summer of ‘42; the almost surreal walk home by a child dressed as a ham in To Kill a Mockingbird; the high school dance in Up the down Staircase; the climactic camera movement in The Other, from Niles to that empty space where Holland, were he not imaginary, would be sitting.

Even Mulligan’s two biggest critical successes, To Kill a Mockingbird and The Summer of ‘42, both examples of the kind of respectable Hollywood filmmaking which garners Academy Award nominations, have not yet been greeted by any significant critical cult. And yet, if Mulligan’s good taste has been steadfastly held against him, it must be noted that his films, albeit generally ignored, hold up remarkably well. Mulligan has a strong sense of narrative; and all his films are imbued with human values and a profound compassion which make for compelling audience identification with Mulligan’s characteristic protagonists. Mulligan’s tendency is to work in less familiar movie genres (such as Hollywood exposed, the family drama, the teacher film, the cinematic Bildungsroman), but to avoid—through sincerity and human insight—that emphasis on the purely formal which sometimes makes genre works “go dead” for their audiences upon repeated viewings. Perhaps it is American mistrust of male emotional expression which contributes to Mulligan’s facile dismissal by many; certainly it appears that those critics who attacked as sentimental The Summer of ‘42, Mulligan’s tasteful and bittersweet paean to lost virginity, failed to assess negatively those same qualities in so many of the French New Wave films, especially, for instance, the Antoine Doinel cycle by François Truffaut, which were instead praised for their lyrical and compassionate exploration of human interaction. Is nostalgia somehow more acceptable when it is French?

Certainly Mulligan seems especially interested in the deviant, the outsider, the loner: the mentally unbalanced Jimmy Peirsall in Fear Strikes Out; the enlightened attorney whose values put him in conflict with a bigoted community in To Kill a Mockingbird; the ex-convict trying to accustom himself to life outside the penitentiary in Baby the Rain Must Fall; the character of Ferdinand Demara, based on real life, who, in The Great Imposter, succeeds by the sheer force of his skillful impersonations in insinuating himself into a variety of environments in which he would otherwise never be accepted; the students in Up the down Staircase who, psychologically stunted and economically deprived, may—even with a committed teacher’s help—never fit into mainstream society. Like Truffaut, Mulligan has an extraordinary insight into the world of the child or adolescent and the secret rituals of that world.

Mulligan’s children never display that innocence conventionally associated with children, instead participating in often traumatic ceremonies of passage. One thinks of the child through whose eyes the innate racism of small-town America is seen in To Kill a Mockingbird; the precocious child-star in Inside Daisy Clover, the lost and often already jaded students in Up the down Staircase; the pubescent adolescents who learn about sex and morality in The Summer of ‘42; and the irrevocably evil child, Niles, and his twin, Holland, in The Other. Unfortunately, despite the high quality of Robert Mulligan’s films, there has been not even a minor re-evaluation of the director as a significant artist who has a consistency of themes (such as his association of puberty with violence)—this neglect despite the fact that To Kill a Mockingbird remains one of the most well-respected and emotionally engaging films in the American cinema, a movie which continues to please audiences whether they remember it from their past or whether they see it today for the first time. Not even the consistently fine performances elicited by Mulligan from his players (Anthony Perkins in Fear Strikes Out, Gregory Peck and Mary Badham in To Kill a Mockingbird, Sandy Dennis in Up the down Staircase, Jennifer O’Neil in The Summer of ‘42, Richard Gere in Blood Brothers, Neil Patrick Harris in Clara’s Heart, and indeed, all the children and adolescents who populate Mulligan’s world) have served to summon ongoing critical attention. Ultimately, Mulligan’s taste may be too fine and his feelings too sentimental to attract contemporary regard in a culture which thrives on the sexy, profane conflicts of a Pulp Fiction. And certainly, even at Mulligan’s best or near-best, one sensed a subtlety or indirection when he dealt with things sexual: such as the homosexual orientation of Robert Redford’s character in the underrated and fascinating Hollywood exposé Inside Daisy Clover. One suspects that if Mulligan may have never really had the gusto to publicize himself in the Sammy Glick-style, he neither had the opportunism or hypocrisy to jump on any passing bandwagon.
In any case, his recent films, though laudable and interesting, are hardly the works that would attract critical or popular attention. In 1982’s curiously unengaging Kiss Me Goodbye, a reworking of the Brazilian film Donna Flor and Her Two Husbands, Mulligan does not seem to be especially inspired by the romantic comedy form, despite the film dealing with typical Mulligan themes of loss and grief. Clara’s Heart, in 1988, reprised Mulligan’s coming-of-age theme and, like To Kill a Mockingbird, dealt with personal relationships between whites and blacks, in this case, the friendship of a young white boy and the black woman who becomes his nanny. Although the narrative develops with surprising turns, the film was unjustly ignored, with Whoopi Goldberg giving a sensitive, often surprising, performance. Ultimately, Clara’s Heart had too much heart and not enough cynicism to be successful; even though it dealt (if gently) with violence, divorce, rape, and incest, Clara’s Heart faded in the glare of more trendy and explicit contemporary films like Do the Right Thing. Mulligan’s final film to date, Man in the Moon, which had a few ardent critical supporters in 1991, is once again a coming-of-age story imbued with feelings of hopefulness and loss, nostalgia and regret. Although beautifully photographed in an older, Hollywood style by Freddie Francis, Man in the Moon—though a period piece—seems almost purposely set in a cultural vacuum so that Mulligan can avoid dealing with a contemporary America from which he seems rather alienated. The result is a film which, despite good performances from everyone, particularly the adolescent leads, seems somewhat dead and unconnected, certainly not the film to ignite a critical re-evaluation of Mulligan’s work.

—Charles Derry

MURNAU, F.W.

Films as Director:

1919 Der Knabe in Blau (Der Todessmaragd; The Boy in Blue)
1920 Satanas; Sehnsucht (Bajazzo); Der Bucklige und die Tanzerin (The Hunchback and the Dancer); Der Januskopf (Schrecken; Janus-Faced); Abend . . . Nacht . . . Morgen
1921 Der Gang in die Nacht; Schloss Vogelöd (Haunted Castle); Nosferatu—Eine Symphonie des Grauens (Nosferatu the Vampire)
1922 Marizza, genannt die Schmuggler-Madonna; Der Brennende Acker (Burning Soil); Phantom
1923 Die Austreibung (Driven from Home)
1924 Die Finanzen des Grossherzogs (The Grand Duke’s Finances); Der Letzte Mann (The Last Laugh)
1926 Tartuff, Faust
1927 Sunrise (Sunrise: A Song of Two Humans)
1928 Four Devils
1930 Die zwolfte Stunde—Eine Nacht des Grauens (Nosferatu the Vampire; Nosferatu) (adapted for sound); Our Daily Bread

Publications

By MURNAU: book—

Sunrise (Sonnenaufgang), Ein Drehbuch von Carl Mayer mit handschriftlichen Bemerkungen von Friedrich Wilhelm Murnau, German Institute for Film Studies, Wiesbaden, 1971.

By MURNAU: articles—

“Turia, an Original Story,” and “Tabu (Tabou), a Story of the South Sea,” with Robert Flaherty, in Film Culture (New York), no. 20, 1959.

On MURNAU: books—

Kracauer, Siegfried, From Caligari to Hitler, New York, 1966.

On MURNAU: articles—

“Per una ri-lettura critica di F.W. Murnau,” special Murnau issue of Filmcritica (Rome), July 1974.
Castoro Cinema (Milan), special issue, no. 36, 1976.
Murnau Section of Casablanca (Madrid), October 1981.

* * *

F.W. Murnau was studying with Max Reinhardt when the First World War began. He was called up for military service, and after achieving his lieutenancy, he was transferred to the air service, where he served as a combat pilot. But his plane was forced down in Switzerland, where he was interned for the duration. Through the German Embassy, however, he managed to direct several independent stage productions, and he began his lifelong dedication to the motion picture, compiling propaganda film materials and editing them. This experience made it possible for him to enter the reborn film industry after peace as a full-fledged director.

Murnau’s first feature film as director was The Boy in Blue, produced in 1919, and he made twenty-one full-length features from that year until 1926, when Fox Studios brought him to Hollywood. Unfortunately, most of the pictures he made in his native country no longer exist except in fragmentary form. They are tempting to read about, especially items like _Janus-Faced_, a study of a Jekyll-and-Hyde personality, which he made in 1920 with Conrad Veidt and Bela Lugosi. Critics found it more artistic than the John Barrymore version of the story made at about the same time in Paramount’s New York studios.

Extant today in a complete version is _Nosferatu_, which was subtitled “a symphony of horror.” It was a more faithful version of Bram Stoker’s _Dracula_ than any made thereafter, and the film, starring the incredibly gaunt and frightening Max Schreck as the vampire, is still available.

The next Murnau film that is still viewable is _The Last Laugh_, which starred Emil Jannings. At the time of its release, it was noted as being a picture without subtitles, told almost completely in pantomime. Its real innovation was the moving camera, which Murnau used brilliantly. The camera went everywhere; it was never static. Audiences watched spellbound as the camera moved upstairs and down, indoors and out, although the film told only the simple story of a proud commissionaire reduced in his old age to menial work as a lavatory attendant. The camera records, nevertheless, a very real world in an impressionistic way. In fact, Murnau, because of his skill with the moving camera, was generally known as the Great Impressionist, for he gave a superb impression of actual reality.

That title fit Murnau even more aptly in his next two features, both of which also starred Emil Jannings. They are _Tartuffe_, a screen adaption of Molière’s black comedy, in which Lil Dagover and Werner Krauss were also featured. It is topped by what must be the most definitive film version of Goethe’s _Faust_. The film starred Jannings as Mephistopheles, with the handsome Swedish favorite, Gosta Ekman, in the title role; Camilla Horn as Marguerite; the great Parisian star Yvette Guilbert as Marthe; and a young William Dieterle as Valentine. Again, the camera not only moved, it soared, especially in the sequence where Faust is shown the world which will be his if he sells his soul to the devil. Murnau was a master of light and shadow, and his work is always brilliantly choreographed as it moves from lightness to the dark.

It came as no surprise when in 1926 Murnau was invited to Hollywood, where the red carpet at Fox was unrolled for him. He was allowed to bring his cameraman, writers, and other craftsmen to work with him, and his initial feature was called _Sunrise_, subtitled “a song of two human beings.” The two stars were Janet Gaynor and George O’Brien, playing a young farm couple who make their first trip to the big city, which was constructed on the Fox lot, so that Murnau and his camera could follow them everywhere indoors and out of doors and onto a moving streetcar. Again, the story was very simple, adapted from a Hermann Suderman novel, _A Trip to Tilsit_, and simply proved that real love will always be triumphant.

_Sunrise_ was highly praised by all critics, and was one of three pictures which brought Janet Gaynor an Academy Award as Best Actress in the 1927–28 year. Quite naturally, awards also went to cinematographers Charles Rosher and Karl Struss and to interior decorator Harry Oliver, while _Sunrise_ was given a special award for its Artistic Quality of Production, a category never again specified.

For all that, _Sunrise_ was not a box-office success, and the studio moved in to supervise Murnau closely on his next two productions. _Four Devils_ was a circus story of four young arielists that gave Murnau’s camera a chance to fly with them from one performing trapeze to another. All prints of _Four Devils_ are unfortunately lost, which is a fate common to most of the last great silent films. Murnau began shooting on his final film at Fox, called _Our Daily Bread_, with Charles Farrell and Mary Duncan, but he was not allowed to finish the picture. The overwhelming popularity of the talking screen was allowed to flaw it, for the only version of it now shown is called _City Girl_, and is only effective when it is recognizably silent and all Murnau. As a part-talkie, the film is crude and not at all Murnau.

Murnau then allied himself with Robert Flaherty, and the two men journeyed to the South Seas to make _Tabu_. Flaherty, however, withdrew, and _Tabu_ is pure Murnau; some praise it as his greatest film. Murnau returned to California and was on the eve of signing at Paramount, which treated directors like Mamoulian, Lubitsch, and von Sternberg very kindly in their talking debuts. Unfortunately, Murnau lost his life in a motor accident on the Pacific Coast highway. He was only forty-two years old at the time, and after the success of _Tabu_, a new name might have been his.

—DeWitt Bodeen
NAIR, Mira

Nationality: Hindi and English. Born: Bhubaneshwar, Orissa, India, 15 October 1957. Education: Studied sociology and theater at the University of New Delhi, where she earned an undergraduate degree; earned a graduate degree in sociology from Harvard University, where she also studied film and directed the documentary Jama Masjid Street Journal for her Master's Degree thesis. Family: Married the cinematographer Mitch Epstein (divorced); married Mahmood Mamdani, son: Zohran. Career: Worked as a repertory actress in New Delhi theater, 1970s; began directing documentaries, working with Richard Leacock and D. A. Pennebaker, 1980s; directed her first fiction feature, Salaam Bombay!, 1988. Awards: Global Village Film Festival Best Documentary, for India Cabaret, 1985; Cannes Film Festival Camera d’Or and Grand Prix du Publique, for Salaam Bombay!, 1988; Los Angeles Film Critics Association New Generation Award, 1988; Venice Film Festival Golden Osella, Sao Paolo International Film Festival Critics Special Award, Italian National Syndicate of Film Journalists Best Director-Foreign Film, for Mississippi Masala, 1991; Muse Award, New York Women in Film and Television, 1997; Boston Film/Video Association Vision Award, 1997. Address: Mirabai Films, 24 Belmont Avenue, Oranjezicht, Cape Town 8001, India.

By NAIR: articles—

On NAIR: book—

On NAIR: articles—

Films as Director:

1979 Jama Masjid Street Journal (doc)
1982 So Far from India (doc)
1984 Women and Development (doc)
1985 India Cabaret (for TV) (doc)
1987 Children of a Desired Sex (for TV) (doc)
1988 Salaam Bombay! (+ co-sc, story, pr)
1991 Mississippi Masala (+ co-sc, pr, ro as Gossip 1)
1993 The Day the Mercedes Became a Hat (short) (+ co-sc, pr)
1995 The Perez Family (+ ro as Woman Buying Flowers)
1996 Kama Sutra: A Tale of Love (+ co-sc, co-pr)
1998 My Own Country (for TV) (+ ro as Saryu Joshi)

Publications

By NAIR: books—

At their core, the films of Mira Nair are humanist in nature. They spotlight the inequities of traditional, patriarchal Indian society, the manner in which individuals are trapped and victimized because of economic status and gender, and the problems Indians face as they assimilate into foreign cultures.

Prior to directing her first narrative feature, Salaam Bombay!, Nair made several documentaries whose subjects reflect her sociological concerns. Jama Masjid Street Journal explores a Muslim community in Old Delhi; So Far from India portrays an Indian immigrant in New York, and examines his emotions as he is separated from his wife and child back home; Children of a Desired Sex spotlights the problems of pregnant Indian women whose offspring will be girls. Her most acclaimed documentary, India Cabaret, records the lives of female Bombay nightclub performers. Here, Nair investigates the distinction between the traditional Indian woman, who is expected to remain in the home, and her more modern, free-thinking counterpart, who yearns for personal and economic emancipation.

Salaam Bombay!, a drama of the corruption of childhood, won Nair international acclaim. It is a story of lost young souls who, because of poverty and parental abuse, have no control of their lives, and their fates. At the same time, these children somehow manage to grasp onto their innocence. Nair’s hero is Krishna (Shafig Syed), a naive, illiterate ten-year-old country boy grappling for survival amid the mean streets of Bombay, which is a garish metropolis of filth, crime, and superficial glitter. Krishna starts off as a chaipau—a deliverer of tea and bread—and quickly finds himself involved with a prostitute, her sadistic pimp-lover (who doubles as a drug kingpin), a teenager sold by her father as a virgin hooker, and a pathetic, ill-fated drug dealer.

The scenario is structured as a novel, with all the characters colorfully and three-dimensionally etched. And Nair has crammed the film with memorable images and striking vignettes. Prominent among the latter is the characterization of Manju (Hansa Vithal),

---

Calderale, M., ‘‘Filmografie,’’ in Segnocinema (Vicenza, Italy), May/June 1997.
Patel, Vibhuti, ‘‘Making a Woman’s ‘Kama Sutra’,’’ in Ms. (New York), May/June 1997.
Nechak, P., ‘‘Mira Nair,’’ in Moviemaker (Los Angeles), May/June/July 1997.

* * *

Mira Nair on the set of Mississippi Masala daughter of the pimp and whore. Manju is a sweet little girl who is regularly ignored, then smothered with insincere kisses by her mother, and finally cast out into the street. Clearly, she too will be destined for a life of prostitution.

Nair’s documentary background impacted on the manner in which she enlisted her actors. Seventeen children are cast in Salaam Bombay! and all are non-professionals, recruited directly off the city’s streets. “I knew from the beginning that I had to work with real homeless children,” she explained after completing the film. “It was their spirit of survival, plus their inimitable qualities, that I think inspired me to make the film.” Indeed, Nair dedicated Salaam Bombay! to “the children of the streets of Bombay.”

In Mississippi Masala, her follow-up feature, Nair further explores the issues she examined in India Cabaret. Only here, even though the main female character no longer resides in India, she still must deal with societal and cultural pressures to conform. The film, set in the sleepy Bible-belt town of Greenwood, Mississippi, is a tale of forbidden romance; the lovers are a self-made African-American woman (Sarita Choudhury) and a spirited young Indian-American woman (Sarita Choudhury). Mississippi Masala is a chronicle of clashing cultures that is not unlike Spike Lee’s Jungle Fever. The point of each, simply put, is that people are people, and are united (or divided) in ways that transcend skin color.

Kama Sutra: A Tale of Love may be linked to India Cabaret and Mississippi Masala (as well as Deepa Mehta’s Fire) as a film that explores a subject rarely seen on Western movie screens: sexuality and Indian women. Kama Sutra is the story of two women: Tara (Sarita Choudhury), a 16th-century princess, and the seductive, independent-minded Maya (Indira Varma), her servant. Tara is set to wed a king, but Maya slips into his chamber and seduces him just before the nuptials. So as Tara and her new husband consummate their marriage, he only can think of one woman: Maya. Granted that, plot-wise, Kama Sutra is analogous to a daytime soap opera. But what makes it so compelling is the manner in which Nair portrays a period in history when women were trained to be either courtesans or wives, and her depiction of how, within the framework of that time, one woman manages to take power over her destiny.

Neither Mississippi Masala nor Kama Sutra—or, for that matter, any of her subsequent films—earned Nair the acclaim accorded Salaam Bombay! Yet she remains consistently committed to humanist-oriented scenarios featuring characters who struggle against ignorance and oppression. For example, My Own Country, a made-for-TV movie, is the based-on-fact account of an East Indian doctor who settles in Tennessee and becomes fabled for his compassionate treatment of AIDS patients.

—Rob Edelman

NAVA, Gregory

Nationality: American. Born: 10 April 1949. Education: Attended UCLA Film School. Family: Married Anna Thomas (a writer and filmmaker); two children. Awards: Chicago Film Festival prize for Best First Feature, for The Confessions of Anans, 1976; San Sebastián International Film Festival OCIC Award, for My Family/Mi Familiaa, 1995; ALMA Award, for Outstanding Latino Director of a Feature Film, for Why Do Fools Fall in Love, 1998. Agent: International Creative Management, 8942 Wilshire Blvd., Beverly Hills, CA 90211.

Films as Director:
1976 The Confessions of Amans (+ ph, co-sc, ed, co-pr)
1983 El Norte (+ co-sc)
1988 A Time of Destiny (+ co-sc)
1995 My Family/Mi Familia (+ co-sc)
1997 Selena (+ co-sc)
1998 Why Do Fools Fall in Love? (+ co-pr)
1999 In the Melting Pot (doc; for TV).

Publications
By NAVA: articles—
West, Dennis, “Filming the Chicano Family Saga: Interview with Director Gregory Nava,” in Cineaste, Fall 1995.

On NAVA: articles—

* * *

Anyone looking for the latest work of Latino filmmakers, particularly documentaries and shorter works in alternative styles, will most likely find it in festivals sponsored by universities, cinematqueis, or film collectives, and not at the nearest multiplex, where films about the lives of Americans of Hispanic descent are extremely rare. A handful of commercial films have had wide distribution, including the works of several Chicanos: Luis Valdez (La Bamba), James Edward Olmos (American Me), “Cheech” Marin (Born in East L.A.), and, far from least, Gregory Nava, who has managed on several occasions to overcome reluctance in Hollywood to produce films about Latino families. Nava has claimed to be first and foremost a filmmaker, not an “ethnic” or “niche” filmmaker, so that, for example, his saga My Family/Mi Familia should be meaningful to any American who has known the immigrant experience, or indeed who has been part of a close-knit family. Still, his career to date exemplifies the difficulty of getting films—other than crime dramas and broad comedies—about particular ethnic or social groups made and distributed to a wide audience.

Nava’s first major film, and arguably still his best, is El Norte, which takes as its subject a pair of Guatemalan refugees, brother and sister, their father brutally slain for his resistance to the ruling class, their mother taken away by soldiers. The film tells of their trip north, through Mexico and across the border to Los Angeles, where they find El Norte is hardly a welcoming haven. Telling its tragic story of the underprivileged with simplicity but not condescension, the film might best be compared to classics of Italian Neo-realism in its direct, sometimes brutal, always emotionally powerful presentation and deeply affecting performances. To be sure, it differs in certain conspicuous ways from those black-and-white dramas of post-War
Italian life, notably in the gorgeous colors of the Guatemala scenes (actually filmed in adjoining Mexican provinces), including the campesino textiles, brightly painted houses with deep red interior walls, and surrounding greenery. An occasional shot may seem framed as "picturesque"—e.g., three girls in their bright shawls with water jugs on their heads—but the clothing is authentic and the constant beauty is ironic and heartbreaking in the context of violence and exile. Another difference from the Italian films is the occasional touch of Latin American magic realism, or perhaps folk tradition, as in omens of Maria's death. The film has moments of humor—a running gag about Mexican swearing, and a dauntingly complicated washing machine in a wealthy woman's house—that leaven the mainly somber drama. There are also unexpected moments of elation, such as the burst of Mahler's Fourth Symphony (quite a contrast to the Guatemalan folk and Mexican popular music accompanying other scenes) that sounds when the exiles have their first glimpse of what they think will be the promised land.

The success of El Norte in art-house markets led to Nava (and his collaborator Anna Thomas) working on a Hollywood project with important stars, with somewhat unfortunate results. A Time of Destiny derives its plot from the Spanish play that provided Giuseppe Verdi with a libretto for La Forza del Destino (an aria from which is heard in one scene). A couple attempt to elope; the bride's stern father is accidentally killed while trying to prevent the marriage; her brother swears revenge on the now separated couple, pursuing the groom even across raging battlefields. Nava updates the story to World War II, keeps a Hispanic flavor by making the father a Basque rancher and setting key scenes in a California mission, and eliminates the tragic ending while keeping some of the stark and brooding quality of the original. Some truly suspenseful scenes and superb photography help the drama, but Timothy Hutton and Melissa Leo are only sweet kids, rather than interesting protagonists, and William Hurt is convincingly demented only in his later scenes. Moreover, the battle footage is a bit too flashy with its artillery-shell POVs (though there is a neat borrowing from Eisenstein's October to convey machine gun fire by rapid editing), and the climax in the bell tower owes too much to several Hitchcock films and to Orson Welles' The Stranger. Nava's ambitious next project, again with Thomas, was a multigenerational tale of a family in East Los Angeles, starting with a couple who arrive from Mexico in the late 1920s (joining a relative who has lived there since California was still part of Mexico, and who significantly gets buried in the back yard among some symbolic corn plants) and... continuing with their offspring. Historical events, like the illegal deportation of U.S. citizens to Mexico during the Depression, intersect with the family’s lives, but the story keeps circling back to the home itself, and to the nearby bridges that link it to the Anglo world. Each of the children seems to represent a possible direction for a Chicano life between the 1930s and the 1980s. One of the daughters has a big wedding and big family, while the other becomes a nun but later marries an ex-priest and works to help Central American refugees. Of the sons, one is a pachucO who scorns his parents’ work ethic, gets drawn into a knife fight at la West Side Story, and is slain by the police; one goes to UCLA law school; a third becomes a writer, and is in fact the narrator of the film; and the youngest, who witnesses the police slaying, grows up embittered. The struggles of the young parents take up the first part of the film, while the rest concentrates on the brothers with the most violent lives: in the 1950s the seemingly doomed Chucho (Esai Morales) and in the 1970s the tormented Jimmy (Jimmy Smits), who goes to jail more than once, marries a Salvadoran refugee to save her from deportation and death, and, in the film’s extended finale, works to establish a relationship with his own son. Nava compresses this saga into just over two hours’ time, relying at times on cliches in the dialogue and voiceover narration, but he finds dramatic unity not only in the theme of family solidarity but in the mise-en-scene (the gradually changing decor of the house) and a series of parallel situations. Some critics have questioned what could be called the film’s politics of nostalgia, but My Family/Mi Familia is still an important achievement, with several powerful performances and vivid set pieces.

More recently Nava has directed two biographies of popular American singers who died young—though the films are altogether different in tone and structure as well as subject. Given his commitment to stories that emphasize family values and the struggle of Latino/as to find a place for themselves in American culture, Nava was a natural choice to direct Selena, the life story of the Tejana singing star killed by a crazed fan at the age of 23. Selena had become astonishingly popular first among Texas Hispanics, then in Mexico (though she was unable to speak or sing in Spanish until her father trained her), and finally, with a crossover album, in America at large. With Selena’s family directly involved in the production, it is not surprising that the film is both saint’s life and American success story, with the usual “Gotta sing!” story impetus, but Nava does find drama in the impulsiveness, hot temper, and unswerving faith of her father Abraham (James Edward Olmos), a combination of “stage father” and Latin patriarch. Unlike the Old World father in A Time of Destiny, however, Abraham reconciles with his daughter after she elopes with her true love, the band’s guitarist with a “bad” reputation. In any case, the film is most successful not as drama but as a document of Selena’s musical achievement. Jennifer Lopez (the young peasant mother in My Family) lip-syncs Selena’s singing and recreates her stage movements convincingly (as we can see when footage of the real Selena is shown as an epilogue), and conveys a sort of wholesome sensuality. The songs are well integrated into the narrative and Nava’s widescreen lensing allows split screen effects, some of them virtually religious triptychs with Selena framed in the center panel. The director’s favorite images of full moon and round sun at the horizon, used in all his preceding films, make their appearance, but with less ominous foreboding than before. Nava elects not to show the murder of Selena onscreen, and gives only glimpses of the family’s grief, not just out of tact but because the film is clearly intended to be a celebration of Selena’s life and a memorial gift to her fans, with the advantages and drawbacks that such an approach is bound to have.

—Joseph Milicia

NEMEC, Jan

Nationality: Czech. Born: Prague, 12 July 1936. Education: Film Faculty, Academy of Music and Arts (FAMU), Prague, 1955–60. Family: Married 1) Ester Krumbachová (divorced); 2) Marta Kubisová. Career: While at film academy, assistant to directors Vaclav Krksa and Martin Frič; co-scripted two features, also five shorts and five mini-musicals for TV, with then-wife, 1964–66; after Martyrs of Love, blacklisted by Barrandov Studios for political reasons, 1966; filmed entry of Soviet forces into Prague, footage broadcast around the world (later used in both U.S. and Soviet propaganda films), 1968; made only film following Soviet invasion, a short documentary about intensive care unit, Prague, 1972; able to leave Czechoslovakia, worked with Veronika Schamoni in Germany, 1974, then moved to U.S.A.; occasionally lectured on cinema at American universities; returned to Czechoslovakia, 1989, to direct V žáru královské lásky (In the Light of the King’s Love). Address: 21607 Rambla Vista, Malibu, California, 90265, U.S.A.

Films as Director:

1960  Sousto (The Loaf; A Loaf of Bread; A Bite to Eat; The Morsel)
1963  The Memory of Our Day

Why Do Fools Fall In Love? posed a different kind of challenge, that of doing something original with the notoriously rigid formula of the biopic of an artist who succumbs to alcohol or drugs: early stardom, break with less talented “family” of fellow artists in favor of a solo career, love problems, loss of popularity, crazed addiction, partial comeback before fatal overdose. The solution was to center the story of Frankie Lymon around his three alleged widows, each claiming the royalties after his death. The resulting film attempts to be both the Citizen Kane and the Rashomon of doo-wop, with Lymon’s life revealed in flashbacks from the viewpoints of those who loved and hated him, but, unlike Citizen Kane, with some directly contradictory testimony, as in two alternative flashbacks of a fight around a swimming pool. Unfortunately, Larenz Tate cannot make Lymon much more than cute in some scenes and abusive in a few others, and the comic and horrific scenes seem to come from different movies. Still, Nava offers a number of pleasures: a fantastic sense of color and 1950s decor, most dazzlingly in a tour-bus-and-diner scene; raucous insult matches among the women, with Little Richard as himself whooping it up; and different editing patterns and photography for each musical number, including an elegant Steadicam shot that takes us from a theatre marquee through the doors, up onto the stage, swirling around the Pretenders in mid-number, following them offstage and Frankie’s group onstage, and circling around Frankie as well.

Why Do Fools is Nava’s first major work with only incidental connections to Latino life. Since then he has returned to what is clearly his most passionate concern, by making a pilot film for a TV series about an East L.A. family. One can imagine some of Nava’s strongest virtues as a filmmaker—unreserved emotional performances from his actors, bold color palate, sensitivity to music, broad humor—working well if given free rein in such a series, as one hopes to find them in feature films to come.

—Joseph Milicia
1964  Demanty noci (Diamonds of the Night) (+ co-sc); “Pdvodnici”
(The Liars, Impostors) segment of Perlicky na dn (Pearls of the Deep)
1966  O slavnosti a hostech (The Party and the Guests; Report on the Party and the Guests) (+ co-sc)
1967  Matcehdnic lasky (Martyrs of Love) (+ co-sc); Mother and Son
(short) (+ co-sc)
1968  Oratorio for Prague (Oratorium for Prague) (doc) (+ co-sc)
1972  Between Three and Five Minutes (doc short) (+ co-sc)
1975  Le Décolleté dans le dos (+ co-sc); Metamorphosis (short) (+ co-sc); The Czech Connection (+ co-sc)
1988  True Stories: Peace in Our Time?
1989  The Poet Remembers
1991  V žáru královské lasky (In the Light of the King’s Love; The Flames of Royal Love); Strahovská demonstrace
1997  Jmeno koda: Rubin (Code Name: Ruby) (co-sc)
2000  Nocti hovory s matkou

Other Films:

1988  The Unbearable Lightness of Being (special consultant, role)
1998  V centru filmu-stele domova (role as himself)
1999  Po ceste pustym lesem (role as himself)
2000  Bohemia Docta (role as himself)

Publications

By NEMEC: article—

An interview with Miloš Fryš and Milan Doinel and Petr Marek, in Film a Doba (Prague), Spring-Summer 1997.

On NEMEC: books—

Skvorecký, Josef, All the Bright Young Men and Women, Toronto, 1971.
Habova, Milada, and Jitka Vysekalova, editors, Czechoslovak Cinema, Prague, 1982.

On NEMEC: articles—

* * *

Jan Nemec’s Czech filmography includes three shorts, three features, and a segment of a compilation work. All three features were co-scripted by his then-wife, Ester Krumbachová. He reached international fame with the 1968 screening of The Party and the Guests at the New York Film Festival, which followed a two-year struggle to screen the film within Czechoslovakia. After completing The Martyrs of Love in 1966, Nemec was blacklisted by Barrandov Studios for political reasons and was unable to work in Czechoslovakia. He immigrated to the West in 1974, settling first in Paris, then in Germany, and finally in the United States, but he was unable to re-establish his film career despite the fact that he was one of the foremost talents of the Czech New Wave.

Thematically all of Nemec’s films deal with obstacles to human freedom and the ways in which men and women cope with these limitations. He has stated, “In Diamonds of the Night man is not free as a result of that most external of pressures called war. In The Party and the Guests, it is a lack of freedom that people bring on themselves by being willing to enter into any sort of collaborative relationship. In Martyrs of Love, it is a matter of a lack of freedom or opportunity to act out one’s own folly, one’s own madness, or dreams of love and human happiness.” Within the context, Nemec is most concerned with the psychological effects of these restrictions.

Stylistically Nemec developed a highly metaphoric cinema utilizing several experimental techniques. He calls this style “dream realism.” His works function as political and psychological parables. His first feature, Diamonds of the Night, based on a novel by Holocaust survivor Arnost Lustig, follows two Jewish boys who jump from a Nazi transport on its way to the concentration camps. As the boys wander through the forest looking for food, time shifts back and forth. There are memories of war-torn Prague, distorted visions of elongated trams, and menacing looks of strangers. The boys hallucinate about falling trees and swamp animals. Eventually they are arrested by the Home Guard, composed of old men more concerned with drinking and singing than with the boys. The film ends ambiguously with the fate of the two still an open question. Jaroslav Kučera’s hand-held camera creates tension as the boys scamper like animals or stare subjectively into the impassive faces of their captors.

The Party and the Guests begins with a summer picnic. Suddenly a group of men appear, forcing the picnickers to obey new rules. Next they are feted at an elaborate banquet. Only one man is unwilling to participate in the festivities. At the end, accompanied by a menacing dog, the group sets out to capture the nonconformist. Here again are the themes of impersonal group control, conformity, man’s indifference, and the casual use of violence, and Nemec again creates a surreal world where the extraordinary takes on the look of everyday events.

Nemec’s last major work, Martyrs of Love, is composed of three comic stories about young men in pursuit of romance. Their inability to achieve their goal ultimately turns comedy into sadness. In creating the dream-like world of the film, Nemec used only minimal dialogue. The images are accompanied by a jazzy score, reflecting the passion for American music among young Czechs during the 1960s.

Nemec’s short works deal with the same themes developed in his features. His graduation film, The Loaf of Bread, portrays a group of prisoners who steal a loaf of bread from their Nazi captors. Here Nemec depicts human beings under stress. As he has commented, “I am concerned with man’s reactions to the drastic situation in which, through no fault of his own, he may find himself.” Mother and Son, made in Holland in 1967, deals with the death of a sadistic soldier, who has beaten and executed prisoners. When young boys try to desecrate his grave, his old mother staunchly protects it. The film ironically concludes with the title, “Love between one human being and another is the only important thing in life.”

Nemec’s contribution to Pearls from the Deep is an episode titled “The Poseurs.” Here two senile patients at a private clinic ramble on about their former achievements, despite their failing memories. Nemec’s shots of the mortuary, the place where they will ultimately reside, provide a sad and chilling commentary on all human life. Nemec’s remaining works are Metamorphosis, an adaptation of the Kafka story filmed in Germany in 1957, and The Czech Connection, made the same year.

—Patricia Erens

NIBLO, Fred

Films as Director:

1915 Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford (+ role)
1918 Coals of Fire; The Marriage Ring; When Do We Eat?: A Desert Wooing; Fuss and Feathers
1919 Happy Though Married; The Haunted Bedroom; Partners Three; The Virtuous Thief; Stepping Out; What Every Woman Learns
1920 The Woman in the Suitcase; The False Road; Her Husband’s Friend; Dangerous Hours; Sex; Hairpins; The Mark of Zorro
1921 Silk Hosiery; Mother o’ Mine; Greater than Love; The Three Musketeers
1922 The Woman He Married; Rose o’ the Sea; Blood and Sand
1923 The Famous Mrs. Fair; Strangers of the Night (+ co-pr)
1924 Thy Name Is Woman; The Red Lily (+ story)
1926 Ben-Hur; The Temptress
1927 Camille (+ pr); The Devil Dancer (+ pr)
1928 The Enemy (+ pr); Two Lovers (+ pr); The Mysterious Lady; Dream of Love
1930 Redemption (+ pr); Way out West
1931 Donovan’s Kid; The Big Gamble
1932 Two White Arms; Diamond Cut Diamond (co-d); Blame the Woman

Other Films:

1915 Officer 666 (role)
1930 Free and Easy (Sedgwick) (role)

1940 Ellery Queen, Master Detective (Bellamy) (role); I’m Still Alive (role)
1941 Life with Henry (Reed) (role)
1944 Four Jills in a Jeep (Seiter) (co-sc)

Publications

By NIBLO: articles—

Interview with M. Cheatham, in Motion Picture Classic (Brooklyn), July 1920.

“Sketch,” with K. McGaffey, in Motion Picture Classic (Brooklyn), October 1921.

On NIBLO: book—

On NIBLO: articles—

“1224 Fred Niblo,” in Film Dope (Nottingham), December 1991.

Fred Niblo directed some of the most legendary stars of the 1920s in some of that decade’s biggest films: Blood and Sand (with Valentino); The Mark of Zorro and The Three Musketeers (Fairbanks); and Ben Hur. He guided Garbo through The Temptress (replacing her mentor, Mauritz Stiller) and The Mysterious Lady. He worked with Lillian Gish, Ronald Colman, Conrad Nagel, Lionel Barrymore, Vilma Banky, and Norma Talmadge. Valentino, Fairbanks, and Garbo first come to mind at the mention of their films with Niblo. The other actors’ best work was done elsewhere, for other more rightfully distinguished filmmakers.

Niblo’s one distinction is his credit on Ben Hur, the cinema’s first real super-spectacle. Ben Hur is the Titanic of its day, a boondoggle that ran way over budget and took two years to complete. It was begun by the Goldwyn Company, and passed along when Goldwyn, Loew’s Metro, and Louis B. Mayer joined together to form Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Ben Hur was initially shot on location in Italy. The dissatisfied studio ordered a revised script. Ramon Novarro replaced George Walsh in the title role and Niblo, the choice of Mayer and Irving Thalberg, took over for Charles Brabin. The Coliseum was rebuilt several blocks from the MGM lot; inside the studio, Roman galleys floated inside a large tank. Eventually, the budget climbed to $3 million—perhaps even higher—with over one million feet of film shot.

Niblo not so much directed as coordinated Ben Hur, and the result was all effect and no drama. Sometimes the film is confusing, and even tiring, yet it is also at its best thrilling. The image of Novarro and Francis X. Bushman (as Messala) racing their chariots remains one of the best-recalled of the silent era. This sequence is supposed to have influenced the staging of the same scene in William Wyler’s far superior remake.

Ultimately, Niblo’s career success was more a case of luck than any inherent talent or aesthetic vision. In 1917 he married Enid Bennett, who worked for Thomas Ince; the following year, he began making films for Ince. Later, Niblo was hired by Mayer, who liked him and brought him along to MGM. Niblo’s career as an A-film director did not last many years past Ben Hur. He made only a handful of films during the 1930s, even working in Britain before retiring in 1941. In his later years, he took small roles in films—he had commenced his career as an actor, in vaudeville, on tour, and Broadway—and was employed as a radio commentator and master of ceremonies.

Before Don Juan, The Jazz Singer, and the demise of silent movies, Niblo made some intriguing prognostications. He foresaw the advent of sound, declaring that motion picture music would be synchronized by radio to replace the live piano; subtitles would be synchronized and broadcast in the same way, in the actual voices of the actors. He predicted other advances as well, including the use of color cinematography, three-dimensional screens to prevent distortion, and theaters specializing in children’s films.

While Niblo may have been a decent technician at best in the director’s chair, he was far more adept with a crystal ball.

—Rob Edelman

Fred Niblo (center) with Lillian Gish on the set of The Enemy

NICHOLS, Mike

Academy Award for Best Direction, Directors Guild of America Outstanding Directorial Achievement in Motion Pictures, Golden Globe Award for Best Motion Picture Director, and British Academy Award for Best Direction, for The Graduate, 1968; American Comedy Awards Creative Achievement Award, 1994; awarded Star on Walk of Fame, 1998. Office: c/o Marvin B. Meyer, Rosenfeld, Meyer and Sussman, 9601 Wilshire Blvd., Beverly Hills, CA 90210, U.S.A.

Films as Director:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1966</td>
<td>Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1967</td>
<td>The Graduate</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1970</td>
<td>Catch-22</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1971</td>
<td>Carnal Knowledge (+ pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1973</td>
<td>The Day of the Dolphin</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1975</td>
<td>The Fortune (+ co-pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1980</td>
<td>Gilda Live</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1983</td>
<td>Silkwood (+ co-pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1986</td>
<td>Heartburn (+ co-pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1988</td>
<td>Biloxi Blues; Working Girl</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1990</td>
<td>Postcards from the Edge (+ co-pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1991</td>
<td>Regarding Henry (+ co-pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1994</td>
<td>Wolf</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1996</td>
<td>The Birdcage (+co-pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1998</td>
<td>Primary Colors (+co-pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2000</td>
<td>What Planet Are You From? (+co-pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

By NICHOLS: articles—

- Interview with Barry Davy, in Films and Filming (London), November 1968.
- Interview in The Film Director as Superstar, by Joseph Gelmis, New York, 1971.
- Interview with Richard Combs, in Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1989.

On NICHOLS: books—

Rice, Robert, “A Tilted Insight,” in New Yorker, 15 April 1961.

Bart, Peter, “Mike Nichols, Moviemaniac,” in New York Times, 1 July 1967.

Lightman, Herb, “On Location with Carnal Knowledge,” in American Cinematographer (Los Angeles), January 1971.

Sarris, Andrew, “‘After The Graduate,’” in American Film (Washington, D.C.), July/August 1978.

* * *

The son of a Russian-Jewish emigré who fled the Nazis for the U.S. with his family in the 1930s, lived in some poverty, and died when his son was 12, Mike Nichols has displayed the drive, energy, and Jewish-influenced sense of humor germane to his background. A man of cultivated sensibilities and eclectic taste, and an outstanding director of actors on both stage and screen, Nichols also developed an adroit film technique. Fond of foreground shooting, long takes, and distorting close-ups to intensify the sense of his characters’ entrapment, he also frequently employs overlapping sound and a spare, modernistic mise-en-scène (the latter at times reminiscent of Antonioni) to convey an aura of disorientation and sterility. In the underpraised and misunderstood Carnal Knowledge, Nichols uses whiteouts (also prominent in Catch-22) and Bergmanesque talking heads as structural and thematic devices to increase the viewer’s alienation from the two central characters, Jonathan and Sandy—visually (and in Jules Feiffer’s original screenplay) the most isolated and self-deluded of Nichols’s characters—and to ridicule notions of male sexual fantasy at the core of the film. Nichols made an awesome film directing debut in 1966 with Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf?, earning nine Oscar nominations with a deserved win for Elizabeth Taylor. Thirty years on, he had accumulated sixteen films to his credit which, viewed as a body of work, reveal a range and, in general, a level of quality that places him firmly in the upper echelons of commercial directors working in the pre-high tech-special effects tradition of solid comedy and drama.

The films of Mike Nichols are guided by the eye and ear of a satirist whose professional gifts emerge from a style of liberal, improvisational comedy that originated in a Chicago theater club and developed into a performing partnership with Elaine May in the late 1950s and early 1960s. In clubs and recordings, on radio, television, and Broadway, Nichols and May’s routines gnawed hilariously close to the bone. Aimed at literate, self-aware audiences, their skits (sometimes anticipating key elements of Nichols’s films) gleefully anatomized family relationships, and men and women dueling in post-Freudian combat, by turns straying from the marriage bond and clinging to it for dear life.

Before entering films, Nichols earned a reputation as a skillful Broadway director with a particular flair for devising innovative stage business and eliciting unusually polished performances. That sure theatrical sense, honed by his subsequent direction of plays by writers as diverse as Neil Simon, Anton Chekhov, Lillian Hellman, David Rabe, and Tom Stoppard, combines in his best films with the sardonic attitude toward American life that underlies even the gentllest of his collaborations with Elaine May.

Several of Nichols’s major films begin as comedies and evolve into mordant, generically ambiguous dissections of the American psyche. Their central characters exist in isolation from the landscapes they inhabit, often manufacturing illusions to shield themselves against reality (George and Martha in Virginia Woolf, Sandy and Jonathan in Carnal Knowledge) or fleeing with mounting desperation societies whose values they alone perceive as neurotic (Benjamin in The Graduate) or murderous (Yossarian in Catch-22).

Martha and George, Edward Albee’s Strindbergian couple, flail at each other on their New England campus and reveal a tormented relationship which, although concluding with a faint glimmer of hope, seems nevertheless to imply the futility of monogamy, a view reinforced by Carnal Knowledge and The Graduate. In the latter, until he dates Elaine Robinson, Benjamin Braddock is segregated by script and camera from the company of friends: whether in a packed airplane, on the Berkeley campus teeming with students, or surrounded by his parents’ partying guests, Ben is alone. His detachment, italicized by numerous shots within the film, permits him to function as the funnel for The Graduate’s social satire. In this respect he is Nichols’s surrogate, but the director complicates the viewer’s empathetic response to Ben by scrutinizing him rather as an experimenting scientist scrutinizes a mouse darting about a maze, especially as he scrambles in frantic pursuit of Elaine.

In Dustin Hoffman’s memorable screen debut, Ben became the moralistic spokesman for a generation that mistrusted anyone over thirty and vowed never to go into plastics. But, like certain other Nichols heroes, Ben may be more than a little crazy, the inevitable child of a Southern California lifestyle that leads him to anticipate instant gratification. Nichols, moreover, intentionally undermines the comic resolution toward which the film has been heading through ambivalent shots of Ben and Elaine on their departing bus, implicating them in mutual recognition of a colossal mistake. At film’s end, Ben Braddock still has considerable cause to be “worried about [his] future.”

For Yossarian, worrying about the future means literally staying alive. To survive a “Catch-22” universe he behaves like a lunatic, but the more bizarrely he acts the more sanely is he regarded according to the military chop-logic that drives him toward madness. In Buck Henry’s screenplay, time is fractured to retain the basic storytelling method of Joseph Heller’s novel. Flashbacks occur within flashbacks. Conversations are inaudible (as in the opening scene), while incidents only partially revealed (as in the first Snowden sequences) are later replayed with deleted elements restored.

Things are seldom what they initially seem in this director’s work. Like Nick and Honey, misled by George and Martha’s pretense of hospitality in Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf?, the viewer may be easily lulled by a deceptively comic tone, enticing visual stylization, and innovative storytelling technique into misreading the bleak vision that the films often harbor. The Day of the Dolphin, for example, with its mystical qualities, concerns about good and evil, and a painful ending, is certainly more than just a story of talking dolphins. Even The Fortune, a farce in the screwball tradition, hinges on attempted murder and leaves its heroine’s fate hanging in the balance. Nichols directs literate, intelligent scripts that pull few punches in their delineations of sexual, social or political themes.

While The Graduate continues to be regarded as an American classic, Nichols is sometimes undervalued for his film work because he prefers the New York theater and because his contributions to his pictures are periodically credited to their writers’ screenplays (Buck Henry, Jules Feiffer) or their theatrical and literary sources (Edward Albee, Joseph Heller, Charles Webb). But Nichols is very much an auteur, working intimately with his collaborators on all aspects of his films, principally the writing and, as with many auteurs, using many of the same actors and technicians again and again.

Nichols’s films uphold his original reputation as a gifted director of actors: Hoffman in The Graduate, Elizabeth Taylor and Richard Burton in Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf?, Jack Nicholson in Carnal Knowledge, The Fortune, Heartburn, and Wolf, George C. Scott in The Day of the Dolphin, Alan Arkin in Catch-22, Meryl Streep in Silkwood, Heartburn, and Postcards from the Edge, Robin Williams in The Birdcage, John Travolta and, indeed, the entire cast, in Primary Colors. The films also reveal, even in their intermittent self-indulgence and a very occasional descent into the trite or unfocused, a director of prodigious versatility and insight.

From Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf? in 1966 to The Fortune in 1975, Nichols’s films are pure fiction; with Silkwood in 1983, he moved into a second phase in which reality is rather closer to the surface of the plots. Silkwood itself, relating the experiences of a nuclear-plant employee Karen Silkwood (Meryl Streep), stands alone as being based on a true story, but, despite its fundamentally grim and salutary subject matter, in the novel that follows, strikes a note of optimism that springs from the inner growth of characters as they shed illusions and achieve inner peace. Thus, even Karen Silkwood gains awareness and tries to help herself and her friends before her shocking death. Adapted from her own novel by Nora Ephron, writing from the fund of her personal experiences, Heartburn charts the breakdown of a marriage destroyed by a husband’s infidelity but, once again, Rachel (Meryl Streep), the wronged wife, is able to grow and, with her children, move forward despite her shattered illusions.
On this occasion, however, Nichols seemed unable to bind together
Ephron’s episodic tragi-comedy into a coherent whole and, despite the excellence of Streep and Nicholson, it is a tedious and unsatisfying film that counts as the director’s one clear failure. Biloxi Blues, from Neil Simon’s semi-autobiographical rites-of-passage comedy of nostalgia, is no more than a pleasing, workmanlike transposition of the Broadway play, but with Working Girl Nichols evinced a new ebullience. He created a sure-fire hit with a movie that combined a Capra-esque feel-good romantic comedy with an incisive look into the contemporary subculture of working women in Manhattan, satirising female power-hunger and striking a blow for the class war in the triumph of Staten Island secretary Melanie Griffith’s triumph over her bitch-boss (Sigourney Weaver). Written by Debbie Reynolds and Tony Curtis’s daughter Carrie Fisher, whose credentials for an authentic exploration of her subject matter were impeccable, Postcards from the Edge deals with the explosively difficult relationship between a self-obsessed former Hollywood star (a tour de force from Shirley MacLaine) and her recklessly unstable daughter (Meryl Streep). Nichols directs this slightly overblown but absorbing and entertaining film with a confident sweep, once again pointing the road to inner growth and reconciliation as Streep’s Suzanne Vale wins the battle for self-awareness. The next protagonist to earn a fresh appreciation of life was Harrison Ford, as he recovers from a serious head-wound in Regarding Henry, a film perhaps more personal to Nichols, who claimed to have made a similar inner journey after an illness.
From 1993 onwards, Nichols’s eclecticism has been emphasized in his choice of projects, a choice he exercises sparingly. In 1993 his breadth of cultural interest was reflected in his choosing to produce the much-lauded film of Kazuo Ishiguro’s deeply English and very fine novel, The Remains of the Day. In 1994 he directed Wolf, in which he ventured gently into the margins of horror fiction as a Manhattan book editor (Jack Nicholson), caught in middle-age crisis and a love-affair with the daughter (Michelle Pfeiffer) of the boss who has sacked him, is bitten by a wolf. Before the resulting lupine transmogrification takes hold, his senses become more acute and he fights for and regains his job. Entertaining stuff, with a script (on which Elaine May, uncredited, assisted) that hints at a profounder subtext concerning questions about aging, death, the limits of concrete knowledge, and the possibility of immortality. Drawing the best from Robin Williams, Nichols next made The Birdcage, an Americanized version of La Cage aux folles, and a piece of hilarious, sometimes farcical, frivolity which, again, contains a clear social comment aimed at puncturing pretension, exposing bigotry, and preaching tolerant understanding.

Working from Joe Klein’s bestseller, scripted by Elaine May, Nichols made Primary Colors in 1998. This uncomfortable saga of the corrupt trappings surrounding a Clintonesque presidential campaign allowed him to exercise his grasp of both dramatic and satirical possibilities with theatrical flair, while drawing heavyweight performances from Travolta and Emma Thompson. With the new century came What Planet Are You From? which found Nichols entering the realm of comedy Sci-Fi with a tale conceived by the film’s star Garry Shandling—an intriguing and appropriate pairing of two razor-sharp satirical minds and talents—in which an alien seeks an earthling wife in order to propagate his species and save his planet.
The message is clear.

At the time of writing Mike Nichols was in pre-production for a film version of the play Wit, scheduled for release in 2001, with Emma Thompson chosen for the role created by Kathleen Chalfant on the New York and London stages. About a woman professor in process of coming to terms with her terminal cancer, the play is both searing and inspirational, but clearly too somber to serve the commercial interests of the big screen and is being made for television. It is, however, Mike Nichols’s most uncompromisingly serious-minded venture to date, and indicative of why he holds a respected place as a director of true substance.

—Mark W. Estrin, updated by H. Wayne Schuth, further updated by Robyn Karney
OLIVEIRA, Manoel de

Nationality: Portuguese. Born: Manoel Cândido Pinto de Oliveira in Oporto, 10 December 1908; grandfather of actor Ricardo Trepa.

Family: Married Maria Isabel Carvalhais, 1940; four children. Career: Athlete and race car driver, 1920–27; directed his first film, 1929, then returned to sporting activities, 1930s; directed his first feature, Aniki-Bóbó, 1941; unable to make films, worked in agriculture, 1943–71; became a full-time filmmaker, 1972. Awards: Berlin Film Festival Special Prize-Interfilm Award, 1981; Venice Film Festival Golden Lion, ‘‘For His Whole Works,’’ 1985; Sao Paolo International Film Festival Critics Special Award, for Os Canibais, 1988; Cannes Film Festival FIPRESCI Award (Special Award), 1990; Venice Film Festival Special Grand Jury Prize, for A divina comedia, 1991; Locarno International Film Festival Leopard of Honor for Lifetime Achievement and His Latest Movie, O Dia do desespero, 1992; Sao Paolo International Film Festival Critics Award, Tokyo International Film Festival Best Artistic Contribution Award, for Vale Abraao, 1993; Catalonian International Film Festival Prize of the Screenwriter’s Critic and Writer’s Catalan Association, for O Convento, 1995; Cannes Film Festival FIPRESCI Award, European Film Awards FIPRESCI Award, Tokyo International Film Festival Special Achievement Award, for Viagem ao principio do mundo, 1997; Best Director Portuguese Golden Globe, for Inquietude, 1998; Mar del Plata Film Festival Special Jury Prize, 1998; Montreal World Film Festival Grand Prix Special des Ameriques, 1998; Cannes Film Festival Jury Prize, for A Carta, 1999.

Films as Director:

1931 Douro, faina fluvial (Hard Labor on the River Douro) (short) (+ pr, sc, ed)
1939 Miramar praias das rosas (short) (+ pr, sc, ed); Ja se fabricam automovel em Portugal (short) (+ pr, sc, ed)
1940 Famalicão (short) (+ pr, sc, ed)
1942 Aniki-Bóbô (+ sc)
1956 O pintor e a cidade (The Painter and the Town) (+ pr, sc, ed, ph)
1959 O pão (Bread) (+ ed, ph, sc)
1960 O coração (The Heart) (short) (+ sc)
1963 Acto da primavera (The Passion of Jesus) (+ pr, ed, ph, sc); A caça (The Hunt) (+ ph, ed, sc)
1965 As pinturas de meu irmão Júlio (Pictures of My Brother Julio) (short) (+ pr, ph, ed)
1972 O passado e o presente (Past and Present) (+ co-pr, ed)
1975 Benilde ou a Virgem Mãe (Benilde: Virgin and Mother) (+ ed)
1978 Amor de perdição (Doomed Love) (+ sc)
1981 Francisca
1982 Memórias e confissões (Memories and Confessions) (to be released only after de Oliveira’s death)
1983 Lisboa Cultural (Cultural Lisbon)
1984 Nice à propos de Jean Vigo
1985 O Sapato de cetim (Le Soulier de satin; The Satin Slipper) (+ sc)
1986 O Meu Caso—Repetecoes (Mon Cas) (+ sc)
1988 Os Canibais (The Cannibals) (+ sc, ed); A Bandeira Nacional (The National Flag) (doc short)
1990 Não ou a Vá Glória de Mandar (Non or the Vain Glory of Command) (+ sc, ed)
1991 A divina comedia (The Divine Comedy) (+ sc, ed)
1992 O Dia do desespero (The Day of Despair) (+ sc, ed)
1993 Vale Abraao (Abraham Valley) (+ sc, ed)
1994 A Caixa (Blind Man’s Bluff) (+ sc)
1995 O Convento (The Convent) (+ sc, ed)
1996 Party (+ co-sc)
1997 Viagem ao principio do mundo (Journey to the Beginning of the World, Voyage to the Beginning of the World) (+ sc, ro as ‘‘Driver’’)
1998 Inquietude (Anxiety) (+ sc)
1999 A Carta (The Letter) (+ sc)
2000 Palavra e Utopia

Other Films:

1928 Fatima Milagrosa (Lupo) (uncredited extra)
1933 A Canção de Lisboa (Telmo) (role)
1982 Conversa Acabada (Botelho) (ro as Priest)
1994 Lisbon Story (Wenders) (ro as himself)

Publications

By OLIVEIRA: book—

By OLIVEIRA: articles—

‘‘O cinema e o capital,’’ in Movimento (Lisbon), October 1933. Interview with Paulo Rocha, in Critica (Lisbon), March 1972. Interview with João Botelho and Cabral Martins, in M (Lisbon), August/September 1975.

Interview with Charles Tesson and others, in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), January 1986.
Manoel de Oliveira (center) on the set of The Satin Slipper

Interview with J. A. Gili, in Positif (Paris), September 1993.
“Kijk eens Mama, ik heb een takening gemaakt!,” interview with G. Lefort, in Skrien (Amsterdam), April/May 1994.

On OLIVEIRA: books—

Manoel de Oliveira, Ciné-Club of Estremoz, 1955.

On OLIVEIRA: articles—

Fonseca, M. S., “Manoel de Oliveira, o cinema e a crueldade,” in Expresso (Lisbon), October 1981.
Simultaneously rugged and tender, the tortured work of Manoel de Oliveira, in which a personal vision is transformed into a unique expression of Portuguese culture, finds its only counterpart in that of Carl Theodor Dreyer. The radical aesthetic and ethical programs of both filmmakers met with incomprehension during the formative years of their careers. In addition, one finds a tragic fusion of profane desire and an aspiration toward the sacred in the work of both directors.

No man is a prophet in his own country; Oliveira, an artist of magnitude disproportionate to such a diminutive nation, confirms this aphorism. He found no favor under the Salazar regime; instead, he was condemned by its pettiness to silence and inactivity. Persecution did not cease with the death of the dictator. Oliveira continued to be charged with “not being natural” and was accused of the sin of “elitism.” This is the reason there are so many films that Oliveira did not make. Only relatively late in his career did international acclaim force a measure of national recognition.

The first phase of Oliveira’s work, what he calls “the stage of the people,” was dominated by an intense dialogue between documentary and fiction. From the very beginning Oliveira refused to subjugate himself to “genres” and “schools” of filmmaking. An unmistakable movement toward fiction, toward the autonomy of the cinema vis à vis the real, can be seen in his documentaries from Douro to Pinturas. In registering its images, Oliveira’s camera approaches quotidian reality as a stage. Through montage, the world can be fixed, cut, and reproduced as a series of fragments.

The second phase of Oliveira’s career began in 1972 and was characterized by a more complete expression of the impulsion towards fiction. His work featured a concomitant change of objectives: the ‘“stage of the people” is replaced by the “stage of the bourgeois.” This phase comprises four films, from O Passado e o presente to Francisca, known as the “Tetralogy of Frustrated Loves.” Alluringly romantic, possessed in particular by the love of perdition as expressed in the Portuguese literature of the time, these films attain an aesthetic refinement unsurpassed in European cinema.

In the 1930s Oliveira belonged to the cinematic vanguard. From 1940 to 1963 this cinematic craftsman anticipated many of the innovative aesthetic experiments of later filmmakers—from Italian neorealism to the cinema of Straub—without reducing his work to mere formalism. With the “Tetralogy,” a risky and original project makes its appearance: the destruction of the narrative grammar which relies on the shot/countershoot, and the destruction of psychological correspondences through the creation, in these films, of a “point of view belonging to no one.” Refusing to identify itself with either the characters or the spectator, the camera alters spatial relationships in an effort not exactly to neutralize itself, but to situate itself in a space without a subject in order to fix faces and voices. His attention to “Voices” is important because, since these films were adapted from literary works, they resolutely assume the literary nature of the text, to which long and fixed shots or the repetition of such shots confer a temporality without parallel in the history of the cinema. The obsessive use of the studio is also underscored, re-enforcing a sense of enclosure and restriction. A similar emphasis is placed on the style or representation which situates actors and objects on the same level; their function is simply to be present.

Linking this formal experimentation with undeniably vigorous fiction, Francisca is Oliveira’s masterpiece. In Francisca, a grandiose synthesis of literary, musical, and pictorial materials, a tellurian identification is revealed which is the origin of desire, fear, guilt, and perdition—the principle themes of Oliveira. After all, such an identification echoes an entire culture which, at its best, transcends a tortured pessimism and bitter irony, though it retains only the consolation of melancholy. This culture is Portuguese and Oliveira is its filmmaker.

What is truly amazing about Oliveira is that he scripted and directed one film per year through the 1990s—quite an accomplishment for an octogenarian/nonagenarian. His 1999 film, A Carta, a contemporary updating of Madame de Lafayette’s seventeenth-century novel La Princesse de Cleves, is the story of a young married beauty of noble background and her plight upon finding herself attracted to another. Here, Oliveira acutely examines the eternal conflict between desire and honor, carnality and spirituality, and what is temporary and what is lasting. Various characters die, and the filmmaker ruminates on the impact of death, and how those who have passed on are remembered by those who remain. As with his other work, Oliveira fills the film with long, lingering takes that allow the viewer to observe what is on the screen, which serves as the filmmaker’s canvas. Those less patient may feel that A Carta is too slow-moving; those more diligent will find views and ideas that are well worth pondering.

Perhaps Oliveira’s most revealing late-1990s film is Viajem ao principio do mundo, a poignant, thoughtful road movie. Oliveira tells the story of a wise, aging filmmaker named Manoel (an elderly looking and aptly cast Marcello Mastroianni, in one of his final screen appearances), who remembers his past while traveling by car with several associates and stopping at different sites. The character Manoel surely speaks for the octogenarian filmmaker when he observes, “The mind is fine, but the wrapping deteriorates.” And the character mirrors his creator in that his mind is forever active, and he is constantly thinking, recollecting, and philosophizing. “I am over the hill,” the on-screen Manoel observes. “I am lame and old. . . I am not a masochist, but I remember when I was an innocent child.” Later on, he poetically notes, “Memory is a landslide in a dreaming heart.” Oliveira fills the film with subjective shots of the countryside as it appears from the car window; these images serve to offer a view of Manoel’s world as seen by Manoel. But the filmmaker is not the lone sage character. One of Manoel’s companions reflects Oliveira’s worldview when noting, “Life is what it is, and death never fails.”

Viagem ao principio do mundo is a meditation on the essence of life. It is crammed with wisdom regarding memory and the past, youth and old age, women and the nature of physical attraction, transgression and admitting transgressions, and, most touchingly, the passing of time and life’s transitions.

—Manuel Dos Santos Fonseca, updated by Rob Edelman

OLMI, Ermanno

Films as Director:

1953  La digi sul ghiaccio (short/doc) (+ spvr)
1954  La pattuglia di passo San Giacomo (short/doc) (+ spvr)
1955  Società Ovestesino-Dinamo (short/doc) (+ spvr); Cantiere d’inverno (short/doc) (+ spvr); La mia valle (short/doc) (+ spvr); L’onda (short/doc) (+ spvr); Buongiorno natura (short/doc) (+ spvr)
1956  Michelino la B (short/doc) (+ spvr); Construzione meccaniche riva (short/doc) (+ spvr)
1958  Tre fili fino a Milano (short/doc) (+ spvr); Giochi di Colonia (short/doc) (+ spvr); Venezia città minore (short/doc) (+ spvr)
1959  Il tempo si è fermato (Time Has Stopped; Time Stood Still) (+ sc, spvr)
1960  Il grande paese d’Acciaio (short/doc) (+ spvr)
1961  Le grand barrage (short/doc) (+ spvr); Un metro lungo cinque (short/doc) (+ spvr); Il posto (The Sound of Trumpets; The Job) (+ sc)
1963  I fidanzati (The Fiancés; The Engagement) (+ pr, sc)
1965  ... e venne un uomo (A Man Called John; And There Came a Man) (+ co-sc)
1968  Un certo giorno (One Fine Day) (+ sc, ed)
1969  I recuperanti (The Scavengers) (+ co-sc, ph) (for TV)

1971  Durante l’estate (During the Summer; In the Summertime) (+ co-sc, ph, ed) (for TV)
1974  La circostanza (The Circumstance) (+ pr, sc, ph, ed) (for TV)
1978  L’albero degli zoccoli (The Tree of the Wooden Clogs) (+ sc, ph, ed)
1983  Cammina, cammina (Keep Walking)
1984  Milano ’83 (doc)
1987  Lunga Vita alla Signora (Long Live the Lady!) (+ sc, co-ph)
1988  La leggenda del santo bevitore (The Legend of the Holy Drinker) (+ sc, ed)
1992  Lungo il fiume (Along the River) (+ sc, ed)
1993  Il segreto del bosco vecchio (The Secret of the Old Forest) (+ sc)
1994  Genesis: The Creation and the Flood (+ sc)
1999  Il Denaro non esiste (co-d)
2000  Il Mestiere delle armi

Other Films:

1955  La tesatura meccanica della linea a 220.000 volt (short/doc) (spvr); San Massenza (Cimego) (short/doc) (spvr)
1956  Pantano d’avio (short/doc) (spvr); Perù—Istituto de Verano (short/doc) (spvr); Fertilizzanti complessi (short/doc) (spvr)
1957  Fibre e civiltà (short/doc) (spvr); Progresso in agricoltura (short/doc) (spvr); Campi sperimentali (short/doc) (spvr)
1958  Colonie Sicedison (short/doc) (spvr); Bariri (short/doc) (spvr); Il frumento (short/doc) (spvr)
1959  El fraile (short/doc) (spvr); Fertilizzanti prodotti dalla Societa del Gruppo Edison (short/doc) (spvr); Cavo olio fludio 220.000 volt (short/doc) (spvr); Auto chiese (short/doc) (spvr); Natura e chimica (short/doc) (spvr)
1961  Il pomodoro (short/doc) (spvr); Il sacco in Plypac (short/doc) (spvr); Po: forza 50.000 (short/doc) (pr)
1962  Una storia milanese (E. Visconti) (role)

Publications

By OLMI: book—

By OLMI: articles—

Interview with Don Ranvaud, in Monthly Film Bulletin (London), October 1988.

On OLMI: books—
Liehm, Mira, Passion and Defiance: Film in Italy from 1942 to the Present, Berkeley, 1984.
Marcus, Millicent, Italian Film in the Light of Neorealism, Princeton, 1986.

On OLMI: articles—
Houston, Penelope, “The Organisation Man,” in Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1964.
Special section on L’Albero degli zoccoli, in Positif (Paris), September 1978.

Keates, J., “’Inn the cascina,’” in Sight and Sound (London), Winter 1988/89.

Film Dope (Nottingham), June 1993.

Segnocinema (Vicenza), November/December 1993.

* * *

Ermanno Olmi, born in Bergamo in 1931, is the Italian filmmaker most committed to and identified with a regional heritage. His films are distinctly Lombardian; for the most part they describe life in Milan, the provincial capital (for example, Il posto, Un certo giorno, Durante l’estate and La circonstanza). He has also filmed in the Lombardian Alps (Il tempo si è fermato), and his native Bergamo (L’albero degli zoccoli), but even when he ventures to Sicily, it is to make a film of a Milanese worker temporarily assigned to the south who longs for home (I fidanzati), and when he makes a semi-documentary biography (... e venne un uomo), it is of the Lombardian Pope, John XXIII.

Furthermore, his work bears affinities to the central literary figure of the Lombardian tradition, Alessandro Manzoni, whose great historical novel, I promessi sposi, is variously reflected in at least three of Olmi’s films: most directly in I fidanzati, whose very title recasts the 1827 novel, but also in the idealization of a great ecclesiastical (... e venne un uomo), and in the vivid recreation of a past century (L’albero degli zoccoli), which portrays peasant life in the late nineteenth century rather than Manzioni’s seventeenth. The most significant Manzonian characteristic of Olmi’s cinema is its Catholicism: of all the major Italian filmmakers he has the least problematic relationship with the Church. He embodies the spirit of the “opening to the Left” which has characterized both religious and parliamentary politics in Italy since the early 1960s. For the most part, his films center upon an individual worker caught between employment and an individual quest to assert dignity through labor. Quite often this tension carries over from work to the conjugal or preconjugal love life of the protagonist.

Like Pasolini, Rosi, and Bertolucci, Olmi is a filmmaker nurtured by postwar neorealism. Like his great precursors, Rossellini, De Sica, and Visconti, he has worked extensively with amateur actors, chosen simplified naturalistic settings, eschewed elaborate artifices or lighting, and employed an ascetic camera style. What mobility his camera has comes largely from his extensive use of the zoom lens. In contrast, however, to the first generation of neorealists, he has a high tolerance for abstraction and ambiguity in his storytelling. Dramatic and emotional moments are consistently understated. Instead of a mobile camera, he has relied heavily upon montage (especially in the intercutting of scenes between Milan and Sicily in I fidanzati) and even more on the overlapping of sounds. In fact, Olmi’s meticulous attention to sound, his isolation and manipulation of auditory details, tends to transform his realistically photographed scenes into psychologically inflected domains of space and time.

After L’albero degli zoccoli, the predominately latent religiosity in his cinema became more manifest. Camminia, camminia recounts a version of the story of the Three Wise Men seeking the Christ child. La leggenda del santo bevitore turns the last days of a Parisian clochard into aparable of divine intervention. Its plot is perhaps more characteristic of Rohmer than Olmi, but the filmmaker uses it to reimagine the simple daily activities of proletarian life through the eyes of a drunken bewildered by his sudden streak of good fortune. Similarly, in a wholly secular mode, Lunga Vita alla Signora returns to the topos of Il tempo si e fermato after nearly thirty years to glimpse the intricacies of an affluent family reunion from the perspective of a naive adolescent in his first job as a busboy in an elegant Alpine hotel.

Olmi released two films in 1992, Lunga il fiume, a poetic documentary on the Po River, and Il segreto del Bosco vecchio, a fable adapted from Dino Buzzati, set in the Dolomites before the First World War, in which a sentient forest, with talking animals and winds, defeats the plans of a retired colonel for its commercial exploitation. Both films celebrate nature as a conduit of Divinity. The commentary of Lunga il fiume even allegorizes the outpouring of the river into the Adriatic as a type of Jesus’s kenosis and death.

Throughout the 1980s Olmi directed a workshop for young filmmakers, Ipotesi Cinema, at Bassano del Grappa. In the face of radically reduced film production and the domination of television in Italy, Ipotesi Cinema was a utopian project for helping filmmakers find alternative modes of production and financing without compromising the originality of their ideas.

—P. Adams Sitney

OPHÜLS, Max

Nationality: Born Max Oppenheimer in Saarbrucken, Germany, 6 May 1902, became French citizen, 1938. Family: Married actress Hilde Wall in 1926, one son, director Marcel Ophüls. Career: Acting debut, 1919; began as stage director, 1924; began working at Max Ophüls with Daniele Darrieux

Burgtheater, Vienna, 1926; dialogue director to Anatole Litvak at UFA, 1929; directed first film, 1930; with family, left Germany, 1932; directed in France, Italy, and Holland, 1933–40; worked in Switzerland, 1940, then moved to Hollywood, 1941; “rediscovered” by Preston Sturges, 1944; returned to France, 1949; directed for German radio, mid-1950s. Died: In Hamburg, 26 March 1957.

Films as Director:

1930 Dann schon lieber Lebertran (+ co-adaptation)
1932 Die verliebte Firma; Die verkaufte Braut (The Bartered Bride)
1933 Die lachende Erben (produced 1931); Liebelei; Une Histoire d’amour (French version of Liebelei)
1934 On a volé un homme; La Signora di tutti (+ co-sc)
1935 Divine (+ co-sc)
1936 Komedie om Geld (+ co-sc); Ave Maria (short); La Valse brillante (short); La Tendre Ennemie (The Tender Enemy) (+ co-sc)
1937 Yoshiwara (+ co-sc)
1938 Werther (Le Roman de Werther) (+ co-adaptation)
1940 Sans lendemain; De Mayerling à Sarajevo (Mayerling to Sarajevo); L’Ecole des femmes (unfinished)
1946 Vendetta (co-d, uncredited)
1947 The Exile
1948 Letter from an Unknown Woman
1949 Caught; The Reckless Moment
1950 La Ronde (+ co-sc)
1952 Le Plaisir (House of Pleasure) (+ co-sc)
1953 Madame de . . . (The Earrings of Madame De) (+ co-sc)
1955 Lola Montès (The Sins of Lola Montes) (+ co-sc)

Publications

By OPHÜLS: books—

Novelle, by Goethe, radio adaptation, Frankfurt am Main, 1956.
By OPHÜLS: articles—

Interview with Jacques Rivette and François Truffaut, in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), June 1957.

“Memory and Max Ophüls,” in Interviews with Film Directors edited by Andrew Sarris, New York, 1967.

“De lust van het kijken,” in Skrien (Amsterdam), October-November 1990.

On OPHÜLS: books—

Williams, Alan, Max Ophüls and the Cinema of Desire, New York, 1980.

On OPHÜLS: articles—

Tributes to Ophüls, in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1957.

“Ophüls Issue” of Film Comment (New York), Summer 1971.

“Ophüls Issues” of Filmkritik (Munich), November and December 1977.

Special Ophüls section, in Positif (Paris), July/August 1980.

Müller, M., “Von Soufeurkasten über das Mikro auf die Leinwand: Max Ophüls,” in Frauen und Film (Frankfurt/Main), August 1987.

Ophüls, Marcel, ”Correspondance immédia de Max Ophüls commentée par Marcel Ophüls,” in Positif (Paris), November 1992.

Walker, M., “1266 Max Ophüls,” in Film Dope (Frankfurt/Main), June 1993.

Belloï, Livio, Cinémathèque, no. 6, Autumn 1994.

* * *

Max Ophüls’ work falls neatly into three periods, marked by geographical locations and diverse production conditions, yet linked by common thematic concerns and stylistic/formal procedures: the pre-Second World War European period (during which he made films in four countries and four languages); the four Hollywood films of the late 1940s (to which one might add the remarkable Howard Hughes-produced Vendetta, on which he worked extensively in its early pre-production phases and which bears many identifiable Ophülsian traces, both thematic and stylistic); and the four films made in France in the 1950s. It is these 1950s films on which Ophüls’ current reputation chiefly rests, and in which certain stylistic traits (notably the long take with elaborately mobile camera) are carried to their logical culmination.

Critical estimation of Ophüls soared during the late twentieth century; prior to that, the prevailing attitude was disparaging (or at best condescending), and the reasons for this now seem highly significant, reflecting far more on the limitations of the critics than of the films. The general consensus was that Ophüls’ work had distinctive qualities (indeed, this would be difficult to deny), but was overly preoccupied with “style” (regarded as a kind of spurious, slightly decadent ornamentation) and given over to trivial or frivolous subjects quite alien to the “social” concerns considered to characterize “serious” cinema. In those days, the oppression of women within the patriarchal order was not identified as a “social concern”—especially within the overwhelmingly male-dominated field of film criticism. Two developments have contributed to the revaluation of Ophüls: the growth of auteur criticism in the 1960s and of feminist awareness, and I shall consider his work in relation to these phenomena.

1. Ophüls and auteurism. One of the first aims of auteur criticism was to dethrone the “subject” as the prime guarantee of a film’s quality, in favor of style, mise-en-scène, the discernible presence of a defined directorial “voice”; in Andrew Sarris’s terms, the “how” was given supremacy over the “what.” “Subject,” in fact, was effectively redefined as what the auteur’s mise-en-scène created. Ophüls was a perfect rallying-point for such a reformulation of critical theory. For a start, he offered one of the most highly developed and unmistakable styles in world cinema, consistent through all changes of time and place (though inevitably modified in the last two Hollywood melodramas, Caught and The Reckless Moment). Ophüls’ works were marked by elaborate tracking-and-craning camera movements, ornate décor, the glitter of glass and mirrors, objects intervening in the foreground of the image between characters and camera. His style can be read in itself as implying a meaning, a metaphysic of entrapment in movement, time, and destiny. Further, this style could be seen as developing, steadily gaining in assurance and definition, through the various changes in cultural background and circumstances of production—from, say, Liebelei through Letter from an Unknown Woman to Madame de . . . Ophüls could be claimed (with partial justice) as a major creative artist whose personal vision transcended the most extreme changes of time and place.

The stylistic consistency was underlined by an equally striking thematic consistency. For example, the same three films mentioned above, though adapted from works by fairly reputable literary figures (respectively, Arthur Schnitzler, Stefan Zweig, and Louise de Vilmorin), all reveal strong affinities in narrative/thematic structure: all are centered on romantic love, which is at once celebrated and regarded with a certain irony. Similarly, all three works move towards a clastic duel in which the male lover is destroyed by an avenging patriarch, an offended husband. All three films also feature patriarchal authority embodied in military figures. Finally, style and theme were perceived as bound together by a complicated set of visual motifs recurring from period to period. The eponymous protagonist of Ophüls’ last film, Lola Montès, declares “For me, life is movement”; throughout his work, key scenes take place in vehicles of travel and places of transition (carriages, trains, staircases, and railway stations figure prominently in many of the films). Even a superficially atypical work like The Reckless Moment (set in modern California rather than the preferred “Vienna, 1900” or its equivalent) contains crucial scenes on the staircase, in moving cars, on a ferry, at a bus station. Above all, the dance was recognized as a central Ophülsian motif, acquiring complex significance from film to film. The romantic/ironic waltz scene in Letter from an Unknown Woman, the fluid yet circumscribed dances of Madame de . . . the hectic and claustrophobic palais de danse of Le Plaisir, the constricted modern dance floor of Caught, and the moment in De Mayerling à Sarajevo where the lovers are prevented from attending the ball: all of the above scenes are reminders that “life is movement” is not the simple proposition it may at first appear.

There is no doubt that the development of auteur theory enormously encouraged and extended the appreciation of Ophüls’ work. In its pure form (the celebration of the individual artist), however, auteurism tends towards a dangerous imbalance in the evaluation of specific films: a tendency, for example, to prefer the “typical” but slight La Ronde (perhaps the film that most nearly corresponds to the “primitive” account of Ophüls) to a masterpiece like The Reckless Moment, in which Ophüls’ engagement with the structural and thematic materials of the Hollywood melodrama results in an amazingly rich and radical investigation of ideological assumptions.

2. Ophüls and Feminism. Nearly all of Ophüls’ films are centered on a female consciousness. Before the 1960s this tended merely to confirm the diagnosis of them as decorative, sentimental, and essentially frivolous: the social concerns with which “serious” cinema should be engaged were those which could be resolved within the patriarchal order, and more fundamental social concerns that threatened to undermine the order itself simply could not be recognized. The films belong, of course, to a period long before the eruption of what we now know as radical feminism; they do not (and could not be expected to) explicitly engage with a feminist politics, and they are certainly not free of a tendency to mythologize women. In retrospect, however, from the standpoint of the feminist theory and consciousness that evolved in the 1970s, they assume a quite extraordinary significance: an incomparably comprehensive, sensitive, and perceptive analysis of the position of women (subject to oppression) within patriarchal society. The films repeatedly present and examine the options traditionally available to women within our culture—marriage, prostitution (in both the literal and the looser sense), romantic love—and the relationship between those options. Letter from an Unknown Woman, for example, dramatizes marriage (Lisa’s to von Staufffer, her mother’s to the “military tailor”) and prostitution (“modelling”) as opposite cultural poles, then goes on to show that they really amount to the same thing: in both cases, the women are selling themselves (this opposition/parallel is brilliantly developed through the three episodes of Le Plaisir). Essentially, Letter from an Unknown Woman is an enquiry into the validity of romantic love as the only possible means of transcending this illusory dichotomy. Clearly, Ophüls is emotionally committed to Lisa and her vision; the extraordinary complexity and intelligence of the film lies in its simultaneous acknowledgement that romantic love can only exist as narcissistic fantasy and is ultimately both destructive and self-destructive.

Far from being incompatible, the auteurist and feminist approaches to Ophüls’ demand to be synthesized. The identification with a female consciousness and the female predicament is the supreme characteristic of the Ophülsian thematic; at the same time, the Ophüls style—the commitment to grace, beauty, sensitivity—amounts to a celebration of what our culture defines as “femininity,” combined with the force of authority, the drive, the organizational (directorial) abilities construed as masculine. In short, the supreme achievement of Ophüls’ work is its concrete and convincing embodiment of the collapsibility of our culture’s barriers of sexual difference.

—Robin Wood

OSHIMA, Nagisa

Nagisa Oshima

TV documentaries, early 1960s; created Oshima Productions, 1975; acquitted on obscenity charge relating to Realm of the Senses, 1976.

Films as Director:

1959 Ai to kibo no machi (A Town of Love and Hope) (+ sc); Asu no taiyo (short)
1960 Seishun zankoku monogatari (Cruel Story of Youth; Naked Youth, a Story of Cruelty) (+ sc); Taiyo no hakaba (The Sun’s Burial) (+ co-sc); Nihon no yoru to kiri (Night and Fog in Japan) (+ co-sc)
1961 Shiiku (The Catch)
1962 Amakusa shiro tokisada (Shiro Tokisada from Amakusa; The Rebel) (+ co-sc)
1964 Chisana boken ryoko (Small Adventure; A Child’s First Adventure) (+ co-sc); Watashi wa Bellet (collective direction, advertising film)
1965 Etsuruka (Pleasures of the Flesh) (+ sc); Yunbogi no niki (The Diary of Yunbogi) (+ pr, sc, ph) (short)
1966 Hakuchu no torima (Violence at Noon)
1967 Ninja higeicho (Band of Ninja) (+ co-pr, co-sc); Nihon shunka-ko (A Treatise on Japanese Bawdy Song; Sing a Song of Sex) (+ co-pr, co-sc); Muri-shinju; Nihon no natsu (Japanese Summer: Double Suicide) (+ co-sc)
1968 Koshkei (Death by Hanging) (+ co-pr, co-sc); Kaettekita yopparai (Three Resurrected Drunkards; A Sinner in Paradise) (+ co-sc)
1969 Shinjuku dorobo niki (Diary of a Shinjuku Thief) (+ co-sc); Shonen (Boy)
1970 Tokyo senso sengo hiwa (He Died after the War; The Man Who Left His Will on Film) (+ co-sc)
1971 Gishiki (The Ceremony) (+ co-sc)
1972 Natsu no imoto (Summer Sister) (+ co-sc)
1976 Ai no corrida (In the Realm of the Senses; Empire of the Senses) (+ sc)
1978 Ai no borei (Empire of Passion; The Phantom of Love) (+ co-pr, sc)
1983 Merry Christmas, Mr. Lawrence
1986 Max, Mon Amour (+ co-sc); Yunbogi no Nikki (+ sc, ph)
1991 Kyoto, My Mother’s Place (+ sc)
1995  One Hundred Years of Japanese Cinema (+ sc)
1999  Gohatto (+ sc)

Other Films:
1956  Shinkei gyosun (sc) (unproduced but published)
1959  Tsukimiso (Iwaki) (sc); Donto okoze (Nomura) (co-sc); Jusan nichi no kinyobi (unproduced) (sc)
1969  Yoiiyami semareba (Jossoji) (sc)
1997  Level Five (role)

Publications

By OSHIMA: books—
Sentou eiga: Hakai to sozo [Postwar Film: Destruction and Creation],
Tokyo, 1963.
Taikentei senso eizo ron [A Theory of the Postwar Image Based on Personal Experience], Tokyo, 1975.
Ecrits (1956–1978): Dissolution et jaillissement, translated by Jean-
Cinema, Censorship, and the State : The Writings of Nagisa Oshima, 1956–1978, edited and with an introduction by Annette Michelson,

By OSHIMA: articles—
“Situation et sujet du cinema japonais (1),” in Positif (Paris),
October 1972.
“Je suis constamment concerné par le temps où je vis . . . ,” an interview with Noel Simsolo, in Cinéma (Paris), November 1972.
Interview with R. McCormick, in Cineaste (New York), vol. 6,
no. 2, 1974.
“Oshima Uncensored,” an interview with M. de la F. McKendry, in Interview (New York), November 1976.
“L’Empire de la passion,” an interview with Max Tessier, in Écran
(Paris), August 1978.
with S. Hoass, in Cinema Papers (Melbourne), September/October 1979.
Interview with P. Lehman, in Wide Angle (Athens, Ohio), vol. 4,
no. 2, 1980.
“Tokyo Stories: Oshima,” an interview with Tony Rayns, in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1981.
Interview with Pascal Bonitzer and others, in Cahiers du Cinéma
(Paris), June/July 1983.
Interview with Nick Roddick, in Stills (London), July/August 1983.
“Oshima and Bowie: Culture Shock,” an interview with Tadao Sato,
in American Film (Washington, D.C.), September 1983.
“Campagnier in the World of the Absurd,” an interview with S.
“Entretien avec Nagisa Oshima,” with K. Ueno, in Cahiers du Cinéma
(Paris), November 1990.
“Kyoto, la ville de ma mere,” an interview with M. Borgese and others, in Jeune Cinéma, April/May 1992.
“Mes idées actuelles sur le cinéma Japonais,” in Positif (Paris),

Interview with Pierre-Olivier Toulza and Yoichi Unemoto, in Cahiers “Zwei Gespräche mit Nagisa Oshima,” with Ulrich Gregor and Klaus Höppner, in EPD Film (Frankfurt), February 1996.

On OSHIMA: books—
Sato, Tadao, Oshima Nagisa no sekai [The World of Nagisa Oshima], Bock, Audie, Japanese Film Directors, New York, 1978; revised
Tessier, Max, editor, Le Cinéma Japonais au présent: 1959–1979,
Magrelli, Enrico, and Emanuela Martini, Il Rito, il rivolta: Il cinema
Polan, Dana B., The Political Language of Film and the Avant-Garde, Desser, David, Eros Plus Massacre: An Introduction to the Japanese
Rollett, Arthur Jr., and David Desser, editors, Reframing Japanese Cinema: Authorship, Genre, History, Bloomington and Indian-
Cheryn Turim, Maureen, Films of Oshima Nagisa: Images of a Japa-

On OSHIMA: articles—
“Director of the Year,” in International Film Guide 1971, London, 1970.
“La Cérémonie,” special issue of Avant-Scène du Cinéma (Paris), McCormick, R., “Ritual, the Family and the State: A Critique of Nagisa Oshima’s The Ceremony,” in Cineaste (New York), vol. 6,
no. 2, 1974.
Dawson, J., “Nagisa Oshima: Forms and Feelings under the Rising Sun,” in Cinema Papers (Melbourne), September/October 1976.
McCormick, R., “In the Realm of the Senses,” in Cineaste (New York), Winter 1976/77.
High, P. B., “Oshima: A Vita Sexualis on Film,” in Wide Angle
Hughes, J., “Oshima in Paris: Reaching for the Flame,” in Take One
McCormick, R., “Oshima Issue” of Wide Angle (Athens, Ohio), no. 5, 1989.
Coates, P., “Repetition and Contradiction in the Films of Oshima,” in Quarterly Review of Film and Video, vol. 11, no. 4, 1990.
Nagisa Oshima, the Godard of the East, spent much of the 1980s engaged in international co-productions. He directed Merry Christmas, Mr. Lawrence in 1983 for Jeremy Thomas, who was later to produce The Last Emperor for Bertolucci, and he combined with Luis Buñuel’s old scriptwriter, Jean-Claude Carrière, on Max, Mon Amour—an Ionesco-like anatomy of bourgeois mores in which Charlotte Rampling has an affair with an ape.

These European excursions seem a world apart from the early work of the former student activist and leader of the Japanese New Wave of the late 1950s. Back in those days, Oshima was telling cruel stories of youth, using the ingredients of American teenage exploitation movies, namely sex and violence, to make a trenchant critique of postwar Japanese society. Railing against the U.S.-Japan Security Pact, and despairing of the old left communists’ ability to make a meaningful intervention as the country experienced its “economic miracle,” Oshima mobilized delinquency and nihilism. Unlike the French nouvelle vague, who tended merely to aestheticize the exploits of their young petty criminals and misfits—the Antoine Doinel and Jean Paul Belmondo—and who took until 1968 to become obstreperously political, Oshima was engaged from the outset.

He learned his craft as an assistant-director at the Shochiku Studios, where he directed his first features. However, the controversy surrounding his fourth film, Night and Fog in Japan (the title was deliberately designed to echo Resnais’s “gas chamber” documentary), pushed him toward working as an independent. A despairing indictment of the disunity of the Japanese left—the old left were repressed sexual energy, in the form of the platonic kisses Bowie and Sakamoto were cast in this film, aptly helping produce what critic Janet Muslin called a “curiously dislocated quality.” This director’s works, on a “true story”—of a young Korean sentenced to death for the brutal murder and rape of a Japanese high school girl—the film operates on several levels, both formally and thematically. Japanese racism toward Koreans—for so long the untouchables of Japanese society—the mindless bureaucracy involved in state licensed murder, and good old adolescent existential angst are amongst its narrative components. As Noel Burch has observed, the film’s style is constantly shifting: it starts as drama-documentary, shot in sober black and white, but it later develops into a self-reflexive avant-garde text in which the audience is addressed directly. It uses theatrical masquerade, paying homage to the tradition of Japanese kabuki theatre. Its early “classical realism” is utterly usurped. The Korean fails to die when he is hanged. The officials—wardens, priests, police—must recreate his crime for him because he has lost his memory. In their bid to remind him of his guilt, they actually repeat his murder.

Jean Genet, the French vagabond thief and writer, is Oshima’s constant inspiration. With its emphasis on crime, sexuality, and role playing, Death by Hanging is akin to Genet’s The Balcony. Oshima borrowed a Genet title for his Diary of a Shinjuku Thief, and his rather more whimsical Three Resurrected Drunkards, an exemplary modernist text that literally starts again halfway through (at the 1983 Edinburgh Film Festival there was a minor riot from patrons certain that the projectionist was accidentally replaying the opening reel), looks at the question of Korean immigration in terms of costume and identity. (Three Korean immigrants steal the clothes of three drunken Japanese youths. The three Japanese, with nothing to wear and no money, become “honorary” Koreans and are appropriately persecuted.)

It is perhaps unfortunate that Oshima’s best known film remains In the Realm of the Senses, a work customarily shown in late-night double-bills with Last Tango in Paris and, like the Brando vehicle, generally esteemed as the perfect marriage between art and pornography. Another “true story,” this time of the notorious case of Abe Sada, who strangled and castrated her lover, Kichizo, and was arrested with his genitals in her pocket, it marks Oshima’s most intimate meshing of the political with the sexual. Politics constitute the film’s structuring absence. It is 1936, the high point of Japanese militarism; the two lovers’ retreat into the realm of the senses must always be seen against this historical backcloth. The links between political and sexual repression are obvious, but it seems somewhat glib to view this innately tragic story as being about a straightforward liberation of female sexuality, a sort of “geisha’s revenge.” A familiar male response to the movie, as to Bataille’s novel The Story of Eye, is to welcome it as a scathing critique of the male gaze: instead of being a film about a couple making love, it is transmogrified, becoming a film about what it means to be a spectator of a film about a couple making love. And, of course, it sells out every time it shows.

Almost five years after In the Realm of the Senses and Empire of Passions (1978) came another international co-production, Merry Christmas, Mr. Lawrence, in 1983. Pop icons David Bowie and Ryuichi Sakamoto were cast in this film, aptly helping produce what critic Janet Muslin called a “curiously dislocated quality.” This highly stylized picture is filled with erotic tensions, though this time ones homoerotic and interracial in the era of war and confrontation. Repressed sexual energy, in the form of the platonic kisses Bowie (a POW) placed upon Sakamoto’s (the commander of the camp) cheeks, was released probably more in the viewer’s displaced projection than in the digests; Sakamoto’s character was relieved of his command while Bowie was brutally executed.
Max, Mon Amour (1986) proved to be ill-received—it took three years for it to be released in Britain—and since then Oshima has been working mainly for television as a talk show host. The once ardent advocate and leader of the Japanese New Wave seems to occupy a different orbit that puzzles his admirers and critics alike.

—G. C. Macnab, updated by Guo-Juin Hong

Ouedraogo, Idrissa

Films as Director:

1981 Pourquoi? (Why?); Poko
1983 Les écuelles (The Platters); Les funerailles du Larle Naba (Larle Naba’s Funeral) (co-d);
1985 Ouagadougou, Ouaga deux roues (Ouagadougou, Ouaga Two Wheels); Issa le tisserand (Issa the Weaver); Tenga
1986 Yam Daabo (The Choice)
1989 Yaaba (Grandmother)
1990 Tilaï (The Law)
1991 A Karim na Sala (Karim and Sala)
1993 Samba Traoré
1994 Le Cri du coeur (A Cry from the Heart)
1995 Afrique, mon Afrique (Africa, My Africa); Lumière et Compagnie (Lumière and Company) (co-d)
1997 Kini et Adams; Les Parias du cinéma

Publications:

By Ouedraogo: articles—

On Ouedraogo: books—

On Ouedraogo: articles—

Klawans, Stuart, “Tilaï (The Law),” in The Nation, 10 December 1990

Ukadike, N. Frank, “Yaaba,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1991.

* * *

Idrissa Ouedraogo is one of Africa’s most prolific filmmakers. His early films are remarkable in their ability to communicate through imagery. Poko, Les Écuelles (The Wooden Bowls), Les Funérailles du Larle Naba (The Funeral of Larle Naba), Ouagadougou, Ouaga deux roues (Ouagadougou, Ouaga Two Wheels), and Issa le tisserand (Issa the Weaver) appeal to a multi-lingual audience without using dialogue or voice-over narration. Although his subsequent films incorporate dialogue, Ouedraogo’s talent for creating meaning with images remains a hallmark of his work.

Ouedraogo’s first commercial success, Yaaba (Grandmother), narrates the story of two young children who befriend an old woman wrongly accused of malevolent sorcery. This film exemplifies Ouedraogo’s interest in the multiple ramifications of individual choices. It also demonstrates Ouedraogo’s skill at adapting the poetics of African oral tales to contemporary cinema. Nwachukwu Frank Ukadike notes that Ouedraogo “fuses the neorealist penchant for eliciting polished performance from nonprofessionals with the African narrative tradition of the griot . . . as in the oral tradition, a story’s interest and attraction for an audience depend upon how creatively a storyteller embellishes what he has heard or taken from his own experience.” Ouedraogo’s humor, wit, and keen sense of drama in Yaaba earned him international acclaim as an exceptional storyteller and filmmaker.
Idrissa Ouedraogo

Ouedraogo’s second big success was Tilai (The Law). At the film’s beginning, the protagonist, Saga, leaves his village. His life away from home is left out of the narrative, which speaks to Ouedraogo’s commitment to rural life. Saga returns to find that his father has married the woman he loves, Nogma. Nogma and Saga decide to disobey the law and escape to another village. Saga’s brother, Kougri, also refuses to follow his father’s order to punish Saga with death. Ouedraogo sympathizes with young villagers’ desires for change, but treats his elder characters with sensitivity. The film depicts the injustices of certain traditional laws in addition to the difficulties involved in defying them. At the same time, Ouedraogo deeply respects his country’s cultures, and sides with their battles for self-preservation.

Although Ouedraogo often critiques strict traditional laws, his love for his African heritage is clear in his films. His appreciation for African traditional life is expressed poignantly in Un cri du coeur (A Cry from the Heart). Here, a young boy named Moctar moves from his village in order to live with his middle-class parents, who have immigrated to France. Pained by his nostalgia for his village, and especially for his grandfather, Moctar has difficulty adjusting. When he has visions of a hyena on the streets, he alarms his parents, who hoped that France would provide Moctar with better opportunities. Un cri du coeur, like numerous African literary works, examines the affection shared between the older African generation and their grandchildren. When Moctar’s hyena, a strong figure in African folklore, appears for the last time, it takes the form of his dear grandfather.

In the context of African cinema, Ouedraogo’s films have been especially successful. He is committed to filming the specific realities of his home country, yet his themes of fidelity, resistance, transformation, and the recovery of traditions have touched diverse, world-wide audiences.

—Ellie Higgins

OZU, Yasujiro

Nationality: Japanese. Born: Tokyo, 12 December 1903. Education: the Uji-Yamada (now Ise) Middle School, Matsuzaka, graduated 1921. Career: Teacher, 1922–23; after introduction from uncle, began as assistant cameraman at Shochiku Motion Picture Co., 1923; assistant director, 1926; directed first film, 1927; military service in China, 1937–39; made propaganda films in Singapore, 1943; interned for six months as British POW, 1945. Died: In Kamakura, 12 December 1963.

Films as Director:

- 1927 Zange no yaiba (The Sword of Penitence)
- 1928 Wakodo no yume (The Dreams of Youth) (+ sc); Nyobo funshihitsui (Wife Lost); Kabocha (Pumpkin); Hikoshii jafu (A Couple on the Move); Nikutai bi (Body Beautiful) (+ co-sc)
- 1929 Takara no yama (Treasure Mountain) (+ story); Wakaki hi (Days of Youth) (+ co-sc); Wasei kenka tomodachi (Fighting Friends, Japanese Style); Daigaku wa deta keredo (I Graduated, But . . .); Kaisha-in seikatsu (The Life of an Office Worker); Tokkan kozo (A Straightforward Boy) (+ co-story)
- 1930 Kekkon-gaku nyumon (An Introduction to Marriage); Hogaraka ni ayume (Walk Cheerfully); Rakudai wa shita keredo (I Flunked, But . . .) (+ story); Sono yo no tsuna (That Night’s Wife); Erogami no onryou (The Revengeful Spirit of Eros); Ashi ni sawatta koun (Lost Luck); Ojosan (Young Miss) (+ story)
- 1931 Shukajo to hige (The Lady and the Beard); Bijin aishu (Beauty’s Sorrows); Tokyo no gasho (Tokyo Chorus)
- 1932 Haru wa gofujin kara (Spring Comes from the Ladies) (+ story); Umarete wa mita keredo (I Was Born, But . . .) (+ story); Seishun no yume ima izuko (Where Now Are the Dreams of Youth?); Mata au hi made (Until the Day We Meet Again)
- 1933 Tokyo no onna (A Tokyo Woman) (+ story); Hijosen no onna (Dragnet Girl) (+ story); Dekigokoro (Passing Fancy) (+ story)
- 1934 Haha o kowazu-ya (A Mother Should Be Loved); Ukiyusa monogatari (A Story of Floating Weeds)
- 1935 Hakoiri musume (An Innocent Maid); Tokyo no yado
- 1936 Daigaku yoi toko (College Is a Nice Place) (+ story); Hitori musuko (The Only Son) (+ story)
- 1937 Shukajo wa nani o wasuretaka (What Did the Lady Forget?) (+ co-story)
- 1941 Toda-ke no kyodai (The Brothers and Sisters of the Toda Family) (+ co-sc)
- 1942 Chichi ariki (There Was a Father) (+ co-sc)
- 1947 Nagaya no shinshi roku (The Record of a Tenement Gentleman) (+ co-sc)
- 1948 Kaze no naka no mendori (A Hen in the Wind) (+ co-sc)
- 1949 Banshun (Late Spring) (+ co-sc with Kogo Noda)
- 1950 Munekata shimagi (The Munekata Sisters) (+ co-sc with Kogo Noda)
- 1951 Baksu (Early Summer) (+ co-sc with Kogo Noda)
- 1952 Ozachake no aji (The Flavor of Green Tea over Rice) (+ co-sc with Kogo Noda)
- 1953 Tokyo monogatari (Tokyo Story) (+ co-sc with Kogo Noda)
- 1956 Soshun (Early Spring) (+ co-sc with Kogo Noda)
- 1957 Tokyo boshoku (Twilight in Tokyo) (+ co-sc with Kogo Noda)
- 1958 Higanbana (Equinox Flower) (+ co-sc with Kogo Noda)
- 1959 Ohayo (+ co-sc with Kogo Noda); Ukiyusa (Floating Weeds) (+ co-sc with Kogo Noda)
- 1960 Akibiyori (Late Autumn) (+ co-sc with Kogo Noda)
- 1961 Kohayagawa-ke no aki (The End of Summer) (+ co-sc with Kogo Noda)
- 1962 Samna no aji (An Autumn Afternoon) (+ co-sc with Kogo Noda)

Publications

On OZU: books—

On OZU: articles—

- Ryu, Chishu, “‘Yasujiro Ozu,’” in Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1964.
Thompson, Kristin, and David Bordwell, “Space and Narrative in the Films of Ozu,” in Screen (London), Summer 1976.

Geist, Kathe, “Narrative Style in Ozu’s Silent Films,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Winter 1986/87.

* * *

Throughout his career, Yasujirô Ozu worked in the mainstream film industry. Obedient to his role, loyal to his studio (the mighty Shochiku), he often compared himself to the tofu salesman, offering nourishing but supremely ordinary wares. For some critics, his greatness stems from his resulting closeness to the everyday realities of Japanese life. Yet since his death another critical perspective has emerged. This modest conservative has come to be recognized as one of the most formally intriguing filmmakers in the world, a director who extended the genre he worked within and developed a rich and unique cinematic style.

Ozu started his career within a well-established genre system, and he quickly proved himself versatile, handling college comedies, wistful tales of office workers, even gangster films. By 1936, however, he had started to specialize. The “home drama,” a Shochiku specialty, focused on the trials and joys of middle-class or working-class life—raising children, finding a job, marrying off sons and daughters, settling marital disputes, making grandparents comfortable. It was this genre in which Ozu created his most famous films and to which he is said to have paid tribute on his deathbed: “After all, Mr. President, the home drama.”

Ozu enriched this genre in several ways. He strengthened the pathos of family crisis by suggesting that many of them arose from causes beyond the control of the individual. In the 1930s, this often led to strong criticism of social forces like industrialization, bureaucratization, and Japanese “paternalistic” capitalism. In later films, causes of domestic strife tended to be assigned to a mystical super-nature. This “metaphysical” slant enabled the characters’ tribulations by placing even the most trivial action in a grand scheme. The melancholy resignation that is so pronounced in Tokyo Story and An Autumn Afternoon constituted a recognition of a cycle of nature that society can never control.

To some extent, the grandiose implications of this process are qualified by a homely virtue: comedy. Few Ozu films wholly lack humor, and many involve outrageous sight gags. As a genre, the home drama invited a light touch, but Ozu proved able to extend it into fresh regions. There is often an unabashed vulgarity, running to jokes about eating, bodily functions, and sex. Even the generally sombre Autumn Afternoon can spare time for a gag about an elderly man run ragged by the sexual demands of a young wife. Ohayo is based upon equating talk, especially polite vacuities, with farting. Ozu also risked breath-taking shifts in tone: in Passing Fancy, after a tearful scene at a boy’s sickbed, the father pettishly says that he wishes his son had died. The boy responds that the father was looking forward to a good meal at the funeral.

Ozu developed many narrative tendencies of the home drama. He exploited the family-plus-friends-and-neighbors cast by creating strict parallels among characters. If family A has a son of a certain type, family B will have a daughter of that type, or a son of a different sort. The father may encounter a younger or older man, whom he sees as representing himself at another point in his life. The extended-family format allowed Ozu to create dizzying permutations of comparisons. The sense is again of a vast cycle of life in which an individual occupies many positions at different times.

Ozu had one of the most distinctive visual styles in the cinema. Although critics have commonly attributed this to the influence of other directors or to traditions of Japanese art, these are insufficient to account for the rigor and precision of Ozu’s technique. No other Japanese director exhibits Ozu’s particular style, and the connections to Japanese aesthetics are general and often tenuous. (Ozu once remarked: “Whenever Westerners don’t understand something, they simply think it’s Zen.”) There is, however, substantial evidence that Ozu built his unique style out of deliberate imitation of and action against Western cinema (especially the work of Chaplin and Lubitsch).

Ozu limited his use of certain technical variables, such as camera movement and variety of camera position. This can seem a willful asceticism, but it is perhaps best considered a ground-clearing that let him concentrate on exploring minute stylistic possibilities. For instance, it is commonly claimed that every Ozu shot places the camera about three feet off the ground, but this is false. What Ozu keeps constant is the perceived ratio of camera height to the subject. This permits a narrow but nuanced range of camera positions, making every subject occupy the same sector of each shot. Similarly, most of Ozu’s films employ camera movements, but these are also systematized to a rare degree. Far from being an ascetic director, Ozu was quite virtuosic, but within self-imposed limits. His style revealed vast possibilities within a narrow compass.

Ozu’s compositions relied on the fixed camera-subject relation, adopting angles that stand at multiples of 45 degrees. He employed sharp perspectival depth; the view down a corridor or street is common. Ozu enjoyed playing with the positions of objects within the frame, often rearranging props from shot to shot for the sake of minute shifts. In the color films, a shot will be enhanced by a fleck of bright and deep color, often red; this accent will migrate around the film, returning as an abstract motif in scene after scene.

Ozu’s use of editing was no less idiosyncratic. In opposition to the 180-degree space of Hollywood cinema, Ozu employed a 360-degree approach to filming a scene. This “circular” shooting space yields a series of what Western cinema would consider incorrect matches of action and eyelines. While such devices crop up in the work of other Japanese filmmakers, only Ozu used them so rigorously—to undermine our understanding of the total space, to liken characters, and to create abstract graphic patterns. Ozu’s shots of objects or empty locales extend the concept of the Western “cutaway”: he used them not for narrative information but for symbolic purposes or for temporal prolongation. Since Ozu early abjured the use of fades and dissolves, cutaways often stand in for such punctuations. And because of the unusually precise compositions and cutting, Ozu was able to create a sheerly graphic play with the screen surface, “matching” contours and regions of one shot with those of the next.

Ozu’s work remains significant not only for its extraordinary richness and emotional power, but also because it suggests the extent to which a filmmaker working in popular mass-production filmmaking can cultivate a highly individual approach to film form and style.

—David Bordwell
PABST, G.W.

Films as Director:

1921 Im Banne der Krall (Frohlich) (role)

1923 Der Schatz (The Treasure) (+ co-sc)
1924 Gräfin Donelli (Countess Donelli)
1925 Die freudlose Gasse (The Joyless Street); Geheimnisse einer Seele (Secrets of a Soul)
1926 Man spielt nicht mit der Liebe (One Does Not Play with Love)
1927 Die Liebe der Jeanne Ney (The Love of Jeanne Ney)
1928 Abwege (Begierde) (Crisis (Desire)); Die Büchse der Pandora (Pandora’s Box) (+ co-d); Das Tagebuch einer Verlorenen (Diary of a Lost Girl) (+ pr)
1930 Westfront 1918; Skandal um Eva (Scandalous Eva)
1931 Die Dreigroschenoper (The Threepenny Opera); Kameradschaft (Comradeship)
1932 L’Atlantide (Die Herrin von Atlantis)
1933 Don Quichotte; Du haut en bas (High and Low)
1934 A Modern Hero
1936 Mademoiselle Docteur (Salonique, nid d’espions)
1938 Le Drame de Shanghai
1939 Jeunes Filles en détresse
1941 Komödianten (+ co-sc)
1943 Paracelsus (+ co-sc)
1944 Der Fall Molander (unfinished and believed destroyed)
1947 Der Prozess (The Trial)
1949 Geheimnisvolle Tiefen (+ pr)
1952 La Voce del silenzio
1953 Cose da pazzi
1954 Das Bekenntnis der Ina Kahr
1955 Der Letzte Akt (The Last Ten Days; Ten Days to Die); Es geschah am 20 Juli (Jackboot Mutiny)
1956 Rosen für Bettina; Durch die Walder, durch die Auen

Other Films:

1914–18.

1920; directed first film, 1923; formed Volksverband für Filmkunst (Popular Association for Film Art) with Heinrich Mann, Erwin Piscator, and Karl Freund, 1928; studied sound film techniques in Berlin, 1932; returned to France, 1935; planned to emigrate to United States on outbreak of war, but illness forced him to remain in Austria; formed Pabst-Kiba Filmproduktion (Frohlich) (role) in Vienna, 1949; worked in Italy, 1950–53. Awards: Légion d’honneur, 1931; Best Director, Venice Festival, for Der Prozess, 1948. Died: In Vienna, 29 May 1967.

Films as Director:

1921 Im Banne der Krall (Frohlich) (role)

1923 Der Schatz (The Treasure) (+ co-sc)
1924 Gräfin Donelli (Countess Donelli)
1925 Die freudlose Gasse (The Joyless Street); Geheimnisse einer Seele (Secrets of a Soul)
1926 Man spielt nicht mit der Liebe (One Does Not Play with Love)
1927 Die Liebe der Jeanne Ney (The Love of Jeanne Ney)
1928 Abwege (Begierde) (Crisis (Desire)); Die Büchse der Pandora (Pandora’s Box) (+ co-d); Das Tagebuch einer Verlorenen (Diary of a Lost Girl) (+ pr)
1930 Westfront 1918; Skandal um Eva (Scandalous Eva)
1931 Die Dreigroschenoper (The Threepenny Opera); Kameradschaft (Comradeship)
1932 L’Atlantide (Die Herrin von Atlantis)
1933 Don Quichotte; Du haut en bas (High and Low)
1934 A Modern Hero
1936 Mademoiselle Docteur (Salonique, nid d’espions)
1938 Le Drame de Shanghai
1939 Jeunes Filles en détresse
1941 Komödianten (+ co-sc)
1943 Paracelsus (+ co-sc)
1944 Der Fall Molander (unfinished and believed destroyed)
1947 Der Prozess (The Trial)
1949 Geheimnisvolle Tiefen (+ pr)
1952 La Voce del silenzio
1953 Cose da pazzi
1954 Das Bekenntnis der Ina Kahr
1955 Der Letzte Akt (The Last Ten Days; Ten Days to Die); Es geschah am 20 Juli (Jackboot Mutiny)
1956 Rosen für Bettina; Durch die Walder, durch die Auen

Other Films:

1921 Im Banne der Krall (Frohlich) (role)

Publications

By PABST: book—

Classic Film Scripts: Pandora’s Box (Lulu), translated by Christopher Holme, New York, 1971.

By PABST: articles—

“’Censor the Censor!,’” an interview with Beatrix Moore, in Sight and Sound (London), Winter 1938/39.

“Über zwei meiner Filme,” in Filmkunst (Vienna), 1960.

On PABST: books—

Kracauer, Siegfried, From Caligari to Hitler, Princeton, New Jersey, 1947.

Hull, David, Film in the Third Reich, Berkeley, 1969.

On PABST: articles—

G.W. Pabst

Rothe, Paul, “Pabst, Pudovkin, and the Producers,” in _Sight and Sound_ (London), Summer 1933.

Elsaesser, Thomas, “_Lulu_ and the Meter Man,” in _Screen_ (London), July/October 1983.

_Castoro Cinema_ (Firenze), special issue, no. 104, 1983.

* * *
Bryher, writing in Close Up in 1927, noted that “it is the thought and feeling that line gesture that interest Mr. Pabst. And he has what few have, a consciousness of Europe. He sees psychologically and because of this, because in a flash he knows the sub-conscious impulse or hunger that prompted an apparently trivial action, his intense realism becomes, through its truth, poetry.”

G.W. Pabst was enmeshed in the happenings of his time, which ultimately engulfed him. He is the chronicler of the churning maelstrom of social dreams and living neuroses, and it is this perception of his time which raises him above many of his contemporary filmmakers.

Like other German directors, Pabst drifted to the cinema through acting and scripting. His first film, Der Schatz, dealt with a search for hidden treasure and the passions it aroused. Expressionist in feeling and design, it echoed the current trend in German films, but in Die freudlose Gasse he brought clinical observation to the tragedy of his hungry postwar Europe. For Pabst the cinema and life grew closer together. In directing the young Greta Garbo and the more experienced Asta Nielsen, Pabst was beginning his gallery of portraits of women, to whom he would add Brigitte Helm, Louise Brooks, and Henny Porten.

Geheimnisse einer Seele carried Pabst’s interest in the subconscious further, dealing with a Freudian subject of the dream and using all the potential virtues of the camera to illuminate the problems of his central character, played by Werner Krauss. Die Liebe der Jeanne Ney, based on a melodramatic story by Ilya Ehrenburg, reflected the upheavals and revolutionary ideas of the day. It also incorporated a love story that ranged from the Crimea to Paris. Through his sensitive awareness of character and environment Pabst raised the film to great heights of cinema. His individual style of linking image and feeling that line gesture that interest Mr. Pabst. And he has what few have, a consciousness of Europe. He sees psychologically and because of this, because in a flash he knows the subconscious impulse or hunger that prompted an apparently trivial action, his intense realism becomes, through its truth, poetry.”

Two Pabst films have a special significance. Die Büchse der Pandora and Das Tagebuch einer Verlorenen featured the American actress Louise Brooks, in whom Pabst found an ideal interpreter for his analysis of feminine sensuality.

Between the high spots of Pabst’s career there were such films as Grafm Donelli, which brought more credit to its star, Henny Porten, than to Pabst. Man spielt nicht mit der Liebe featured Krauss and Lily Damita in a youth and age romance. Abwege, a more congenial picture that took as its subject a sexually frustrated woman, gave Pabst the opportunity to direct the beautiful and intelligent Brigitte Helm. His collaboration with Dr. Arnold Fanck on Die weisse Hölle vom Pitz-Palu resulted in the best of the mountain films, aided by Leni Riefenstahl and a team of virtuoso cameramen, Angst, Schneeburger, and Allgeier.

The coming of sound was a challenge met by Pabst. Not only did he enlarge the scope of filmmaking techniques, but he extended the range of his social commitments in his choice of subject matter. Hans Casparius, his distinguished stills cameraman and friend, has stressed the wonderful teamwork involved in a Pabst film. There were no divisions of labor; all were totally involved. Westfront 1918, Die Dreigroschenoper, and Kameradschaft were made in this manner when Pabst began to make sound films. Vajda the writer, cameraman Fritz Arno Wagner (who had filmed Jeanne Ney) and Ernö Metzner, another old colleague, worked out the mise-en-scène with Pabst, assuring the smooth, fluid process of cinema. With Pabst the cinema was still a wonder of movement and penetrating observation. The technical devices used to ensure this have been described by the designer Metzner.

Westfront 1918 was an uncompromising anti-war film which made All Quiet on the Western Front look contrived and artificial. Brecht’s Die Dreigroschenoper, modified by Pabst, is still a stinging satire on the pretensions of capitalist society. Kameradschaft, a moving plea for international cooperation, shatters the boundaries that tend to isolate people. All these films were studio-made and technically stupendous, but the heart and human warmth of these features were given by G.W. Pabst.

When Germany was in the grip of growing Nazi domination, Pabst looked elsewhere to escape from that country, of which he had once been so much a part.

L’Atlantide was based on the Pierre Benoit novel of adventure in the Sahara. The former success of Jacques Feyder, Pabst’s work featured Brigitte Helm as the mysterious Antinea. Don Quixote with Chaliapin did not fulfill its promise. A Modern Hero, made in Hollywood for Warner Brothers, had little of Pabst in it. On his return to France he handled with some competence Mademoiselle Docteur, Le Drame de Shanghai, and Jeunes Filles en dérèse. In 1941 circumstances compelled him to return to his estate in Austria. He was trapped, and if he was to make films, it had to be for the Nazi regime. Komödianten was a story of a troupe of players who succeed in establishing the first National Theatre at Weimar. Its leading player was Pabst’s old friend Henny Porten, who gave an excellent performance. The film won an award at the then Fascist-controlled Venice Biennale. Paracelsus, again an historical film, showed Pabst had lost none of his power. For his somewhat reluctant collaboration with the Nazis, Pabst has been savagely attacked, but it is hard to believe that any sympathy could have ever existed from the man who made Kameradschaft for the narrow chauvinists who ruled his country.

After the war Pabst made Der Prozess, dealing with Jewish pogroms in nineteenth-century Hungary. It was a fine film. After some work in Italy he made Der letzte Akt, about the last days of Hitler, and Es geschah am 20 Juli, about the generals’ plot against Hitler. Both were films of distinction.

Pabst died in Vienna in 1967, having been a chronic invalid for the last ten years of his life. As Jean Renoir said of him in 1963: “He knows how to create a strange world, whose elements are borrowed from daily life. Beyond this precious gift, he knows how, better than anyone else, to direct actors. His characters emerge like his own children, created from fragments of his own heart and mind.”

—Liam O’Leary

PAGNOL, Marcel

Marcel Pagnol

Films as Director:

1934
Le Gendre de Monsieur Poirier (+ pr, sc); Jofroi (+ pr, sc); L’Article 330 (+ pr, sc); Angèle (+ pr, sc)

1935
Merlusse (+ pr, sc); Cigalon (+ pr, sc)

1936
Topaze (second version) (+ pr, sc); César (+ pr, sc)

1937
Regain (+ pr, sc)

1938
Le Schpountz (+ pr, sc); La Femme du boulanger (+ pr, sc)

1940
La Fille du puisatier (+ pr, sc)

1945
Naïs (+ pr, sc)

1948
La Belle Meunière (+ pr, sc)

1951
Topaze (third version) (+ pr, sc)

1952
Manon des sources (+ pr, sc)

1954
Les Lettres de mon moulin (+ pr, sc)

1967
Le Curé de Cucugnan (for television) (+ pr, sc)

1962
*La Dame aux camélia*is (Gir) (sc)

1986
Jean de Florette (Berri) (original story); Manon des sources (Berri) (original story)

Publications (related to cinema)

By PAGNOL: books—

By PAGNOL: articles—

“Je n’ai pas changé de métier,” an interview with Michel Gorel, in Cinémonde (Paris), 17 August 1933.

“Il n’y a rien de plus bête que la technique,” an interview with Maurice Bessy, in Cinémonde (Paris), 6 October 1938.

“Mon ami Rene Clair,” in Cinémonde (Paris), 23 April 1946.

Interview with Claude Beylie and Guy Braucourt, in Cinéma (Paris), March 1969.

On PAGNOL: books—

On PAGNOL: articles—

Bazin, André, “Le Cas Pagnol,” in Qu’est-ce que le cinéma? (same author), Paris, 1959.

La Breteque, F., de, “Le goût pour la pédagogie et la didactique de Marcel Pagnol,” in Cahier de la Cinématheque (Perpignan), December 1990.

Bazin, André, “The Case of Marcel Pagnol,” in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury), vol. 23, July 1995.

Aubert, Michelle, Archives: Institut Jean Vigo (Perpignan), special issue, December 1997.

* * *

“The art of the theatre is reborn under another form and will realize unprecedented prosperity. A new field is open to the dramatist enabling him to produce works that neither Sophocles, Racine, nor Molière had the means to attempt.” With these words, Marcel Pagnol greeted the advent of synchronous sound to the motion picture, and announced his conversion to the new medium. The words also served to launch a debate, carried on for the most part with René Clair, in which Pagnol argued for the primacy of text over image in what he saw as the onset of a new age of filmed theater.

At the time Pagnol reigned supreme in the Parisian theater world. His plays, Topaze and Marius, both opened in the 1928–29 season to the unanimous acclaim of the critics and the public. Their success vindicated the theories of a group of playwrights which had gathered around Paul Nivoix, the drama critic for Comoedia. They were determined to develop an alternative to the predictable theater of the boulevards and the impenetrable experiments of the surrealist avant-garde. The group pursued a dramatic ideal based on the well-made, naturalistic plays of Scribe and Dumas fils. The formula featured crisp dialogue, tight structures, and devastating irony. Its renewed popular appeal did not escape the notice of Bob Kane, the executive producer of the European branch of Paramount Pictures. Kane secured the rights for the screen versions of two plays, retaining Pagnol as writer for Marius, to be directed by Alexander Korda, but he then excluded him from any participation in the Topaze project. This neglect spurred the volatile young ex-schoolmaster from Provence to undertake his own productions.

With Pierre Braunberger and Roger Richebe, Pagnol produced and adapted his play Fanny, a sequel to Marius, and hired Marc Allégret to direct. Then, in 1933, he formed his own production company, modelled on United Artists, which would control the production and distribution of all his future projects. At the same time he founded Les Cahiers du film, dedicated to the propagation of “cinematurgie,” Pagnol’s theories of filmed theater.

Jofroi and Angèle, the first two projects over which Pagnol exercised complete artistic control, established the tone for much of his ensuing career. Adapted from stories by Jean Giono and set in Provence in the countryside surrounding Marseilles, where Pagnol was born and raised, the films treat the manners and lifestyle of the simple farmers and shopkeepers of the south and are executed with the precise principles of dramatic structure Pagnol had developed in his years with Nivoix. Angèle is especially notable because it was shot on location on a farm near Aubagne. The film established a precedent followed by Jean Renoir in making Toni, a film produced and distributed by Pagnol’s company, regarded by many as a forerunner of Italian neorealism. This is the formula to which Pagnol would return with increasing success in Regain and Le Femme du boulanger: a story or novel by Giono honed by Pagnol into a taut drama, elaborating the myths and folkways of “le coeur meridionale” and pivoting on the redemptive power of woman; set on location in Provence; and peopled with the excellent repertory company Pagnol had assembled from the Marseille music halls (including Raimu, Fernandel, Fernand Charpin, Orane Dumazis, and Josette Day).

Even after a formal break with Giono in an ugly squabble over money in 1937, Pagnol continued to exploit the formula in La Fille du puisatier and his masterpiece, Manon des sources. Running three hours and more, these films, even more than before, reflected how the pace and flavor of the south colored Pagnol’s approach to filmmaking. As Fernandel has put it: “With Marcel Pagnol, making a film is first of all going to Marseille, then eating some bouillabaisse with a friend, talking about the rain or the beautiful weather, and finally if there is a spare moment, shooting.” Along with Clair and Cocteau, Pagnol was inducted into the Académie Française. Every year his status grows among historians of cinema who once ridiculed his “canned theater.”

—Dennis Nastav

PAKULA, Alan J.

Films as Director:

1969 The Sterile Cuckoo
1971 Klute (+ co-pr)

739
Alan J. Pakula

1972 Love and Pain and the Whole Damn Thing (+ pr)
1974 The Parallax View (+ pr)
1976 All the President’s Men
1978 Comes a Horseman
1979 Starting Over (+ co-pr)
1981 Rollover
1982 Sophie’s Choice (+ sc, co-pr)
1986 Dream Lover (+ co-pr)
1987 Orphans (+ pr)
1989 See You in the Morning (+ sc, pr)
1990 Presumed Innocent (+ co-sc)
1992 Consenting Adults (+ pr)
1993 The Pelican Brief (+ sc, pr)
1997 The Devil’s Own

Publications

By PAKULA: articles—

Interview with Tom Milne, in Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1972.
Interviews with Michel Ciment, in Positif (Paris), March 1972 and October 1976.
Interview with A. C. Bobrow, in Filmmakers Newsletter (Ward Hill, Massachusetts), September 1974.
“Making a Film about Two Reporters,” in American Cinematographer (Los Angeles), July 1976.

Other Films:

1957 Fear Strikes Out (Mulligan) (pr); To Kill a Mockingbird (Mulligan) (pr)
1963 Love with a Proper Stranger (Mulligan) (pr)
1965 Baby the Rain Must Fall (Mulligan) (pr)
1966 Inside Daisy Clover (Mulligan) (pr)
1967 Up the Down Staircase (Mulligan) (pr)
1968 The Stalking Moon (Mulligan) (pr)

“Gentleman Pakula,” an interview with Isabelle Reffas, in Cinéma 72, April 1997.

On PAKULA: articles—

Seidenberg, R., “Presumed Innocent,” in American Film, August 1990.

Film Dope (Nottingham), April 1994.

* * *

Now considered by many a major cinematic stylist, Alan J. Pakula began his career as a producer. The quality of his films is rather uneven, ranging from the acclaimed Fear Strikes Out and To Kill a Mockingbird to the universally panned Inside Daisy Clover. Critic Guy Flatley noted that Pakula is affectionately acknowledged within the film industry as an “actor’s director,” eliciting “richly textured performances” from Liza Minnelli in The Sterile Cuckoo; Maggie Smith in Love and Pain and the Whole Damn Thing; Warren Beatty in The Parallax View; Robert Redford, Dustin Hoffman, and Jason Robards Jr. in All the President’s Men; Jane Fonda, James Caan, and Robards in Comes a Horseman; and Burt Reynolds, Candice Bergen, and Jill Clayburgh in Starting Over. Many filmgoers are surprised upon discovering that it was Pakula who directed all these films.

Pakula’s self-effacement is deliberate. In the Oscar-winning Sophie’s Choice (for Meryl Streep as best actress), the director’s name is less known than the actors who worked so effectively under his direction, and far less known than the tragic personal, social, and historical themes of the film. Pakula stresses the psychological dimension of his films. Klute, one of his most celebrated efforts, is highlighted by his use of taped conversation to reveal character and heighten suspense. The film is noted for “visual claustrophobia” and unusual, effective mise-en-scène. For her performance, Jane Fonda received an Academy Award.

Klute was Pakula’s first “commercial and critical gold.” As one critic writes, “the attention to fine, authentic detail in Klute reflected the careful research done by both the director and the actress in the Manhattan demi-monde, and many of the shadings of the complex character of the prostitute were developed improvisationally during the filming by . . . Fonda in collaboration with Pakula.” Critical response to Klute is represented by such writers as Robin Wood, who said, “If it is too soon to be sure of Pakula’s precise identity as an auteur, it remains true that Klute belongs, like any other great movie, to its director.” Characteristically, Pakula believes that “the auteur theory is half-truth because filmmaking is very collaborative.”

Pakula’s other films have had equal success: All the President’s Men, for example, was the top-grossing film of 1976, and won four Academy Awards. It was nominated for best picture and best director, as well. Even the critic known as “Pakula’s relentless nemesis,” Stanley Kauffmann, “relected a little” concerning All the President’s Men. Alan J. Pakula is a filmmaker whose work most notably features tautness in both narrative and performance; he is a director of “moods,” and is often “congratulated for the moods he sustains.”

He has described his approach to filmmaking as follows: “I am oblique. I think it has to do with my own nature. I like trying to do things which work on many levels, because I think it is terribly important to give an audience a lot of things they may not get as well as those they will, so that in the end the film does take on a texture and is not just simplistic communication.”

Although he has remained active in recent years, Pakula has not produced—with one exception—work of real significance since Sophie’s Choice (itself more of an actors’ than director’s film). See You in the Morning attempts to create the melodramatic poignancy of Klute and The Sterile Cuckoo, but does not rediscover the stylistic finesse that made these earlier films so successful. See You in the Morning’s examination of family and personal breakdown is heavily-handed and hence strangely unafflicting.

The Pelican Brief, based on John Grisham’s amateurish novel about the corrupt Washington establishment, makes no good sense, but is also strangely unexciting and unsuspenseful. Unlike Hitchcock, Pakula here proves unable to forge a masterful thriller from a marginal literary source; The Pelican Brief, it must be said, also fails to create the paranoid atmosphere that is the hallmark of Pakula’s earlier, more successful forays into the political thriller (The Parallax View is the best of these). Consenting Adults is a domestic thriller centering on an unfaithful suburban husband who falls victim to a psychopath eager to perpetrate insurance fraud and steal his wife. The first part of this film offers a chilling version of contemporary upscale suburban life; but the film’s second half descends into sub-Hitchcockian third-rate twists and turns that fail to engage or excite. Only in Presumed Innocent does Pakula recapture some of his earlier success. Despite numerous plot inconsistencies (the legacy of Scott Turow’s novel), Presumed Innocent is compelling viewing because Pakula takes pains to fashion a detailed setting (heightened by fine character performances); he also astutely directs Harrison Ford in the lead role.

—Deborah H. Holdstein, updated by R. Barton Palmer

PALCY, Euzhan

Education: Earned degree in French Literature at the Sorbonne, Paris, 1983; attended the Vaugirard Film School; earned degree in Photography, Louis Lumière School of Cinema, 1984. Career:
Euzhan Palcy

Became the first black woman to direct a feature film for a major Hollywood film studio; produced and recorded two albums of songs for children. Awards: Venice Film Festival, Silver Lion Award for Best First Work, for Rue cases nègres, 1983; César Award for Best New Director of a Feature Film, 1984; Orson Welles Prize for Special Cinematic Achievement, Political Film Society, U.S.A., PFS Award, for A Dry White Season, 1990; Brussels International Festival of Fantasy Film, Silver Raven Award, Golden Senghor for Best Director, Ouagadougou Film Festival, Special Jury Prize, Brussels Film Festival, Prix de la Jeunesse, Milan Film Festival, Ban Zil Kreol Award, Montreal Film Festival, all for Siméon, 1993. Address: (c/o) Ada Babino, Nommo Speakers Bureau, 2714 Georgia Avenue NW, Washington, D. C. 20001, U.S.A.

Films as Director:

1975 La messagère (The Messenger) (for TV) (+ sc) (doc) (ro)
1982 L’atelier du diable (The Devil’s Workshop) (for TV) (+ sc)
1983 Rue cases nègres (Sugar Cane Alley, Black Shack Ally) (doc) (+ sc)
1989 A Dry White Season (+ sc)
1990 Hassane (for TV) (doc)
1992 Siméon (+ sc, pr)
1998 Ruby Bridges (for TV) (+ pr)
2000 Wings against the Wind (+ co-sc, pr)

Publications

By PALCY: articles—

On PALCY books—

On PALCY: articles—

“’The film is very difficult. I was so upset when I saw it. I have never been so upset by a film. I just could not believe that a young black woman director had done it,’ she said in an interview with Ally Acker. (video recording), 18 January 1998.

On PALCY: other media—

* * *

“The power of the film is incredible to change people’s minds, open their eyes, their vision of the world,” explained Euzhan Palcy in an interview in American Film in 1989. Her words describe her own effect on film; she is rapidly creating a legacy to the history of film as an artist, vanguard, and pioneer filmmaker.

Palcy was born on the French West Indian island of Martinique. From all accounts, Palcy was a precocious and artistically gifted child, encouraged in large part by her father. “I grew up in a cultured, artistic environment. We weren’t rich but there were painters, writers and intellectuals in my family.” Palcy wrote stories, poetry, short dramas and—while still a teenager—produced and directed La messegère (1974), a 50-minute drama about a grandmother who works on a banana plantation. The work stands out as probably the first of its kind to be produced in Martinique specifically for West Indian television.

Like many film artists, Palcy admits to having been captivated by movies at a tender age. “I loved the movies from the time I was a little girl,” she reveals in American Film, “by the time I was 10, I wanted to be a filmmaker.” Because the filmmaking industry of Martinique was all but non-existent, she instead was raised on a steady diet of American-produced fare and influenced in large part by the style of some revered directors, including Alfred Hitchcock, Orson Welles, and Fritz Lang. The films Palcy watched included such marginalized, conventionalized, and stereotyped imagery that she was inspired to take a camera into her own hands. “The desire to be a director came out of rage, anger, she noted in Film Comment. “I was so upset when I would see all those stupid portrayals of black people in American movies.”

At the age of seventeen, and to the consternation of her father, Palcy decided to become a filmmaker. “It is as if your child today would say, ‘I want to be a cosmonaut,’” Palcy explained in an interview with Ally Acker.

She left Martinique for Paris, studying art and French literature at the prestigious Sorbonne and earning a degree in photography at the equally prestigious Louis Lumière School of Cinema. In Paris she continued work on her screen adaptation of Joseph Zobel’s book Rue cases nègres, a novel that Palcy reveals profoundly effected her. She earned a grant from French television and even won the support of French film luminary, François Truffaut, who became part mentor, part godfather.

In 1981, she directed the film L’atelier du diable (The Devil’s Workshop) a piece derived largely from the story she would pursue in Rue cases nègres. It took some three years to raise the $800,000 for the production of Rue cases nègres. The film examines the 1930s sugar-cane plantations of the French West Indian island of Martinique. Striking are the scenes of crushing poverty and cruel exploitation: children go without shoes and marvel at the thought of sharing the taste of a found egg. We see the alleys, lined with the shacks that serve as dwellings for the indigent cane-cutters, and watch as a worker has his already tiny pittance docked simply because he stopped work to relieve himself.

Seen through the eyes of a personable young adolescent boy named Jeze, Rue cases nègres is a tale of colonialism, exploitation, and hope. José’s grandmother M’Man Tine, sacrifices her own well-being so that he may have the benefit of an education and need not follow her into a life as a sugar cane field worker. The success of Rue cases nègres earned Palcy international attention and a number of awards, including the French César.

In the space of a few years, Palcy carved a unique place for herself in film largely unbeknownst to women of color. Yet, her story had only just begun. In 1989, she burst into the public eye with the production of the film, A Dry White Season. The legacy of this film is multi-layered. First and foremost is the film’s unflinching depiction of the cruelty of the system of apartheid in South Africa. A few filmmakers had sought to do this, most notably Richard Attenborough’s production of Cry Freedom (1987). Palcy’s film adaptation of the André Brinque novel pulled no punches. The brutality and violence of the system is laid bare. Viewers witness the legacy of institutionalized racism and indifference: a severe lashing given a young boy by police leave his buttocks bloodied, children are gunned down in the streets, and another torture is shown. Critical reviews of the film were abundant and overwhelmingly positive. “No other contemporary mainstream film takes us so deeply, so unflinchingly into the tragically divided heart of South Africa,” noted Kevin Thomas of the Los Angeles Times. The film earned heightened interest because of its high-powered cast. Donald Sutherland played the Afrikaner school teacher Ben du Toit, whose well-ordered and seemingly ideal life is slowly and inexorably shattered by the realities of the brutal and unfair system that he has somehow managed to ignore of for most of his life.

In addition, Palcy managed to lure the services of the reclusive and semi-retired Marlon Brando, who took on the role of a sensitive and supportive South African barrister, receiving scale wages and an Oscar nomination for his appearance. Most significantly, the film positioned Palcy as the first black woman director of a feature film for a major Hollywood studio.

Palcy continued her success in 1992 when she directed the internationally acclaimed Siméon, a music-filled ghost story about a young Martinican girl who holds the dream of bringing her native music to the world. In 1994 she produced Aimé Céaire: un voix pour l’histoire (Aimé Céaire: A Voice for History), a three-part study of the life of the celebrated Martinican author. The end of the century saw Paley’s work take on a slightly different focus. In 1998, she directed the made-for-television movie Ruby Bridges, the poignant story of the little black girl who helped to bring racial integration to the all-white New Orleans school system. She has turned her attention to the production of Wings against the Wind, a tale of the life of Bessie Coleman, black America’s first female aviatrix and has plans for an adaptation of the story of Haitian military leader Toussaint L’Overture.

—Pamala S. Deane

PARADZHANOV, Sergei

Nationality: Soviet Georgian. Born: Tiflis (Tbilisi), Soviet Georgia, 1924. Transliterations of name include “Paradjanov” and “Parajanov.”

Education: Kiev Conservatory of Music, 1942–45; studied under Igor Savchenko at Moscow Film Institute (V.G.I.K.), graduated 1951.

Family: Married Svetlana (Paradzhanova), early 1950s (divorced after 2 years), one son. Career: Began as director at Kiev Dovzhenko Studio, 1953; following international success of Shadows of Our Forgotten Ancestors, ten filmscripts rejected by authorities through 1974; indicted for a variety of crimes, convicted of trafficking in art objects, sentenced to six years hard labor, 1974; released after international and Russian protests to Supreme Soviet, 1978. Awards: British Film Academy Award for Shadows of Our Forgotten Ancestors, 1966. Died: In Yerevan, of cancer, 20 July 1990.

Films as Director and Scriptwriter:

1951 Moldavskaiia skazka (Moldavian Fairy Tale) (short)
1954 Andriech (co-d)
1958 Pervyi paren (The First Lad)
1961 Ukrainskaiia rapsodia (Ukrainian Rhapsody)
1963 Tsve tok no kamne (Flower on the Stone)
1964 Dumka (The Ballad)
1965 Teni zabytykh predkov (Shadows of Our Forgotten Ancestors) (co-sc)
1969 Sayat nova (The Color of Pomegranates; The Blood of the Pomegranates) (released 1972)
1978 Achraroumès (Retour à la vie)
1985 Legenda o Saramskoj kreposti (The Legend of the Suram Fortress)
1986 Arabeski na temu Pirosmani (doc)
1988 Ashik kerib

Publications

By PARADZHANOV: articles—

On PARADZHANOV: articles—

Barsky, V., “‘Uber Sergj Paradschanow und seine Filme,’” in Filmfaust (Frankfurt), October/November 1985.

Kopanevora, G., “‘Dilo a osud Sergeje Paradžanova,’” in Film Dope (Nottingham), December 1990.

Kuncev, G., and others, in Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), no 8, August 1995.

The cinema, like heaven, has many mansions, and the place occupied by Sergei Paradzhanov is a very rich one indeed. This dissident, highly individual film creator made films startling in their beauty, deeply imbued with ethnic consciousness, as unique in their style as, say, the work of Miklos Jancsó.

Paradzhanov was unmistakably a dissident. Not for him the systematic social realism of the authorities. Like his distinguished predecessors Eisenstein and Dovzhenko, it was the poetry of life that he sought. His films must be taken in their totality, for the cumulative effect is stunning. His beautiful images, created with the eye of a painter, while striking in themselves, progress with the steady tempo of tableaux vivants.

When Paradzhanov’s Teni zabytykh predkov (Shadows of Our Forgotten Ancestors) burst upon world screens, it was quite evident that a major artist had appeared in Soviet cinema. This film, more flexible than his later stylized creations, revealed a powerful individuality. A tale of life in an ancient Carpathian village, it revealed also a sensitive feeling for nature and landscapes and an awareness of religious forces as it probed into the recesses of the inherited mind.

It was inevitable that Paradzhanov's work would not be appreciated by lesser men. He was uncompromising even when pressures and persecution pursued him. His personal lifestyle and his dogged pursuit of an ideal made him a marked man for bureaucratic tyranny, and after his Sayat nova (The Colour of Pomegranates) was completed in 1972 he was driven from the cinema. He was sentenced to six years in a labour camp for charges ranging from homosexuality and fraud to incitement to suicide. After several years under duress, world opinion forced the Soviet authorities to release him. He knew shame and beggary until with great determination he won his way back to making films once more.

The Colour of Pomegranates (or The Blood of the Pomegranates) evokes the life of the eighteenth-century Armenian poet Arutin Sayadian. In it the images are almost an embarras de richesses. The bleeding pomegranates, the struggling fish, details of utensils and native crafts, the boy swinging from the bellrope, pages of hundreds of books blown in the wind, the stately horseman parading back and forth, and the blazing colours of textiles in the dye-works scene pile up in a series of unforgettable impressions.

More sombre in tone is the Legenda o Saramskoj kreposti (The Legend of the Suram Fortress), made in 1984 when Paradzhanov returned to the Georgian Film Studio. It is again a series of episodes integrated in mood and feeling and characteristically poetic in approach. His last film, Ashik kerib, is suitably dedicated to Tarkovsky and tells the tale of a Turkish minstrel and his frustrated love. Again rich images prevail and the idiosyncratic style persists.

Paradzhanov was a poet of the Eastern Soviet Republics. A Georgian, born in Tiflis, he was steeped in the culture and traditions of his native region. His concern with its past was the source of his creative strength and his independence of mind. He lived, thankfully, to see repressive forces at least temporarily dissipated, bringing freedom to himself as an artist. Yet it is a great pity that in the West he is known by only a few, if important, key films. The future will no doubt bring a greater knowledge of his work.

—Liam O'Leary

PARKER, Alan

Films as Director:

1973 Footsteps (short) (+ sc); Our Cissy (short) (+ sc)
1976 Bugsy Malone (+ sc)
1978 Midnight Express
1980 Fame
1981 Shoot the Moon
1982 Pink Floyd—The Wall
1985 Birdy
1987 Angel Heart (+ sc)
1988 Mississippi Burning
1990 Come See the Paradise (+ sc)
1991 The Commitments (+ role as record producer)
1994 The Road to Wellville (+ pr, sc)
1996 Evita (+ pr, sc)
1999 Angela's Ashes (+ pr, sc)

Other Films:

1971 Melody (sc)

Publications

By PARKER: books—

Hares in the Gate (cartoons), London, 1983.
In the Lap of the Gods and the Hands of the Beatles, St. Louis, 1990.

By PARKER: articles—

Interviews in Focus on Film (London), April 1980.
Cartoons, in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1983.
Interview in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), vol. 15, no. 3, 1987.
Interview in American Film (Washington, D.C.), September 1990.
“Paradise Lost: Production of the Motion Picture Come See the Paradise,” in Premiere, January 1991.
Film Dope (Nottingham), April 1994.

“The Thoughts of Chairman Alan,” an interview with Nick James, in Sight and Sound (London), November 1997.

On PARKER: articles—

Houston, Penelope, “Parker, Attenborough, Anderson,” in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1986.

“Alan Parker,” in Film a Doba, January 1990.

Fuller, Graham, article in Interview, August 1991.

Of all his fellow graduates from the prolific British commercials school of the 1960s (Ridley and Tony Scott, Hugh Hudson, and others), Alan Parker appears to have made far and away the most successful complete transition to theatrical filmmaking. Which is not to say that his movies to date—from Bugsy Malone to Angela’s Ashes—have all been wholly successful in either box-office terms, critical reception or, blissfully, both at the same time. However, what Parker has managed always to achieve, with admittedly varying degrees of success, is that elusive blend of strong story and elegant frame, a symbiosis that tends regularly to elude other directors schooled in (and too often hamstrung by) the purely visual.

Two themes could be said to dominate Parker’s work: children and controversy. After an award-winning teleplay, The Evacuees, about the bittersweet plight of evacuated London children during World War II, he made his feature debut with Bugsy Malone, an ingenious gangster spoof substituting kids for adults and cream balls for bullets. It was energetic and surprisingly un-quaint, ingredients that also characterised his high-voltage Fame, centering on a group of ambitious students at the New York High School for the Performing Arts. In between, though, controversy had first raised its head in the form of Midnight Express, an ultimately reprehensible and unashamedly manipulative piece of docudrama, unhappily dignified by sheer technique, about the supposed fate of a young American jailed for drug offences in Turkey.

Later, after both Angel Heart, a labyrinthine Faustian tale which was briefly threatened with an American “X” rating, and Mississippi Burning, a powerful civil rights drama that was accused of blatant Hollywood-isation, Parker’s unquenchable passion and his admitted preference for “the theatrical edge” have continued to be, rather unfairly, mistaken for a filmmaking arrogance that tends to help make him less than a darling to those critics whom he has always termed “the Sight & Sound mafia.”

Shoot the Moon, Parker’s most personal film about marital mishaps and muddled offspring, and Birdy, which seamlessly transposed novelist William Wharton’s post-World War II traumas to a post-Vietnam setting, best demonstrate his theatrical style carefully crafted into (though never subsuming) strong content. Especially the latter, which deals with two emotionally damaged young men whose bond transcends the scars resulting in a message—common to much of Parker’s work—that is joyously life-affirming.

In 1991 Parker released The Commitments, a film based on a novel by Irish writer Roddy Doyle. The film, which garnered mixed reviews, told the story of the efforts of a ragtag group of musicians with widely varied individual agendas and their efforts to launch a successful band. 1994’s The Road to Wellville, meanwhile, despite an impressive cast headed by Anthony Hopkins, was a decidedly unsuccessful adaptation of T. Coraghessan Boyle’s novel.

—Quentin Falk

PARKS, Gordon

Nationality: American. Born: Fort Scott, Kansas, 30 November 1912. Education: Attended high school in St. Paul, Minnesota. Family: Married 1) Sally Alvis, 1933 (divorced 1961); 2) Elizabeth Campbell, December, 1962 (divorced 1973); 3) Genevieve Young (a book editor), August 26, 1973; children: (first marriage) Gordon, Jr. (deceased), Toni (Mrs. Jean-Luc Bouillaud), David; (second marriage) Leslie. Career: Worked at various jobs prior to 1937; freelance fashion photographer in Minneapolis, 1937–42; photographer with Farm Security Administration, 1942–43, with Office of War Information, 1944, and with Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, 1945–48; Life (magazine), New York City, photo-journalist, 1948–72; Essence (magazine), New York City, editorial director, 1970–73. President of Winger Corp. Film director, 1968—, director of motion pictures for Warner Brothers-Seven Arts, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer (MGM), and Paramount Pictures. Composer of concertos and sonatas performed by symphony orchestras in the United States and Europe. Also author of Martin, a ballet, 1990, and of several television documentaries produced by National Educational Television, including Flavio and Mean Streets. Contributor to Show, Vogue, Venture, and other periodicals. Awards: Rosenwald Foundation fellow, 1942; once chosen Photographer of the Year, Association of Magazine Photographers; Frederic W. Brehm award, 1962; Mass Media Award, National Conference of Christians and Jews, for outstanding contributions to better human relations, 1964; Harr Van Adna Journalism Award, University of Miami, 1964, Ohio University, 1970; named photographer-writer who had done the most to promote understanding among nations of the world in an international vote conducted by the makers of Nikon photographic equipment, 1967; A.F.D., Maryland Institute of Fine Arts, 1968; Litt.D., University of Connecticut, 1969, and Kansas State University, 1970; Spingarn Medal from National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, 1972; H.H.D., St. Olaf College, 1973, Rutgers University, 1980, and Pratt Institute, 1981; Christopher Award, 1980, for Flavio; President’s Fellow award, Rhode Island School of Design, 1984; named Kansan of the Year, Native Sons and Daughters of Kansas, 1986; World Press Photo award, 1988; Artist of Merit, Josef Sudek Medal, 1989; additional awards include honorary degrees from Fairfield University, 1969, Boston University, 1969, Macalaster

Films as Director:

1969 The Learning Tree (+ mus, pr, sc)
1971 Shaft
1972 Shaft’s Big Score! (+ mus)
1974 The Super Cops
1976 Leadbelly
1984 Solomon Northrup’s Odyssey (Half-Slave, Half-Free) (—for TV)

Films as Actor:

1992 Lincoln (Kunhardt—for TV) (voice of Henry H. Garnet)
2000 Shaft (Singleton) (as Lenox Lounge Patron)

Publications

By PARKS: books—

A Poet and His Camera (poems), self-illustrated with photographs, New York, 1968.

Shannon (novel), Boston, 1981.

Author of introduction, Soul Unsold, by Mandy Vahabzadeh, Marina del Rey, California, 1992.

Glimpses toward Infinity, Boston, 1996.

Contributor, Spirited Minds, Minneapolis, 1996.

On PARKS: books—

Monaco, James, American Film Now: The People, the Power, the Money, the Movies, New York, 1979.

On PARKS: articles—

America, 24 July 1971.
American Photo, September-October 1991.

Best Sellers, 1 April 1971.

Cue, 9 August 1969.

Ebony, July 1946.

Films and Filming, April 1972 and October 1972.

Focus on Film, October 1971.

Life, October 1994 and February 1996.

San Jose Mercury News, 23 February 1990.
Show Business, 2 August 1969.
Smithsonian, April 1989.
Variety, 6 November 1968 and 25 June 1969.
Vogue, 1 October 1968 and January 1976.

* * *

Already an award-winning photographer and novelist, Gordon Parks beat out Melvin Van Peebles by a few months to become, in 1969, the first African American hired to direct a major studio production. Parks had his Kansas-set The Learning Tree under way at Warner Bros. when Van Peebles was tapped to do the satire Watermelon Man for Columbia Pictures. As the trajectory of both men’s careers would later make clear, Parks’ historic role had more to do with versatility and fortitude than timing or blind luck. One need only compare the directors’ follow-up projects—Parks went on to do the trend-setting Shaft for MGM; Van Peebles made the incendiary, X-rated Sweet Sweetback’s Baadasssss Song—to understand why Hollywood was more comfortable casting Parks as civil rights standard bearer. Professorial in demeanor (with ever-present pipe, ascot, and natty sports jacket), Parks, one could argue, was less threatening to a power structure more interested in salving its conscience and tapping into a new urban market than in advancing the cause of blacks in Hollywood.

Was Parks then establishment Hollywood’s token black director, a ‘‘sell-out,’’ in the parable of the day? This has been a subject of some debate by, among others, Van Peebles (who charges yes) and Parks (who resents the implication, pointing to the large number of blacks employed on his films). To answer in the affirmative is in no way to diminish Parks importance to the erratic, snail-paced integration of the studio system. Someone had to be first, and that role fell to Parks more as an outgrowth of his deep-rooted humanism than as a result of any filmmaking skills. Indeed, Parks learned as he went on the set of The Learning Tree. The son of a Fort Scott, Kansas, sharecropper, Parks, the youngest of 15 children, bounced among menial jobs until, at age 25, he found his niche: still photography. He would go on to break color barriers in the worlds of fashion photography and photo-journalism, first with Vogue and then with Life magazine. Among Parks’ most famous portraits were studies of Langston Hughes, Duke Ellington, and Ingrid Bergman. As photojournalist, he chronicled the lives of a Harlem gang member, a Washington, D.C., cleaning woman named Ella Watson, and a Brazilian street orphan named Flavio. The Life studies—bracing, accusatory, always empathetic—brought accolades and retrospectives. In 1963, Parks added an autobiographical novel to his already-standard works on portrait and documentary photography. The Learning Tree, set in Cherokee Flats, Kansas, in the 1920s, is at once nostalgic, heartbreaking, and richly layered. The protagonist, a 12-year-old named Newt, comes of age as he witnesses acts of violence and betrayal from both blacks and whites. Newt’s mother offers a metaphorical lesson: ‘‘Some of the people are good and some of them are bad—just like the fruit on a tree . . . No matter if you go or stay, think of Cherokee Flats like that till the day you die—let it be your learnin’ tree.’’

Likened to stories of Faulkner and Steinbeck, and quickly added to required reading lists, The Learning Tree was immediately sought by Hollywood. Taking a page from silent-movie pioneer Oscar Micheaux, who produced and directed movies from his own books, Parks said he would only option the novel with himself attached as producer, director, screenwriter, and composer. In 1968, Warner Bros. agreed, and Parks, at age 56, returned to Fort Scott, Kansas, to shoot his first film, an at-times jarring blend of soft-focus sentimentality and bitter life lessons. Generally dismissed by critics expecting a harsher indictment of the System, The Learning Tree (1969) found vindication in 1989, when it become, along with Citizen Kane and Casablanca, one of the first ‘‘landmark’’ films selected by the Library of Congress’ National Film Registry.

Shaft (1971), Parks’ second feature, could not have been more of a departure. It starred Richard Roundtree as a Greenwich Village private eye—‘‘the cat that won’t cop out when there’s danger all about’’—who’s caught between black militants, racist cops, and warring racketeers. The character (created by novelist Ernest Tidyman) remains, according to Time magazine, ‘‘one of the first black movie heroes to talk back to the Man and get away with it.’’ Produced for $1 million, it grossed over $12 million and, with Van Peebles’ Sweet Sweetback’s Baadasssss Song, ushered in the short-lived blaxploitation craze. An Oscar-winner (for Isaac Hayes’ theme song), Shaft far outdistanced the black-themed (and predominantly white-produced) action pictures to come by walking the line between crass exploitation and stinging indictment of urban racism, in its many permutations.

In 1972—the year his son, Gordon Parks Jr., directed and starred in Superfly (1972)—Parks Sr. directed and composed the music for Shaft’s Big Score (1972), a slicker, less successful sequel that climaxed in a 16-minutes, air-sea-land chase a la countless James Bond capers. Instead of doing the third Shaft (Shaft in Africa), Parks became the first black director to do a non-black-themed studio picture: The Super Cops (1974), starring Ron Liebman and David Selby as undercover narcs who, like Mel Gibson and Danny Glover in the ‘‘Lethal Weapon’’ movies, bend the law to exact street justice. Many critics consider Super Cops Parks’ best film.

In his sixties, Parks changed gears yet again to do a period biopic of blues-folk singer Huddie Ledbetter titled Leadbelly (1976). Roger E. Mosley played Ledbetter, a gifted 12-string guitarist who drifts in and out of prison as he’s told, ‘‘It’s gonna cost you to play the blues.’’ Though it received favorable reviews—and remains Parks’ favorite film—Leadbelly failed to find wide release and Parks’ cachet as trailblazer continued to erode. In the 1980s, he turned to public television (doing the music and libretto for a PBS ballet based on Martin Luther King Jr.’s life) and had to content himself with the role of unofficial technical adviser on Steven Spielberg’s The Color Purple and other prestige race films overseen by whites. In 1990, upon receiving the Black Filmmakers Hall of Fame’s Paul Robeson Award, Parks said, ‘‘I found myself thinking, ‘I could direct this film (The Color Purple).’ And looking back, I’m sure certain black directors could have brought a hell of a lot more sensitivity to certain ‘white’ movies about blacks.’’ Little has changed in Hollywood since the early 1970s, he charges. ‘‘There’s still a tremendous amount of discrimination and prejudice, and a lot of black talent continues to be wasted. . . . Getting money from white-run studios is still the problem. They still pay us a lot of lip service, but that’s all.’’
Though he continues to write and collect honorary degrees, Parks' role in the integration of Hollywood has been all but forgotten. Critics generally disparage his studio films, which, like some of his best-known photographs, combine social awareness with a vulgarian's love of glitz and excess. In the 1990s, Parks was discovered by the new generation of black filmmakers anxious to seek his advice and validation. Boyz N the Hood director John Singleton called Shaft “a benchmark in American film” and added, “I think I’m walking in the path of Gordon Parks more than anybody.” In 2000, Singleton put his own less-political spin on Shaft by casting Samuel L. Jackson as John Shaft’s even more stylish and volatile nephew, now a member of the NYPD. Parks, still sporting a pipe and walrus mustache, can be seen in a Harlem lounge cameo.

—Glenn Lovell

PASOLINI, Pier Paolo

Films as Director:

1961 Accattone (+ sc)
1962 Mamma Roma (+ sc)
1963 “La ricotta” episode of Rogopag (+ sc); La rabbia (part one) (+ sc)
1964 Comizi d’amore (+ sc); Sopralluoghi in Palestina (+ sc); Il vangelo secondo Matteo (The Gospel according to Saint Matthew) (+ sc)
1966 Uccellacci e uccellini (The Hawks and the Sparrows) (+ sc); “La terra vista dalla luna” episode of Le Streghe (The Witches) (+ sc)
1967 “Che cosa sono le nuvole” episode of Capriccio all’italiana (+ sc); Edipo re (Oedipus Rex) (+ sc)
1968 Teorema (+ sc); “La sequenza del fiore di carta” episode of Amore e rabbia (+ sc)
1969 Appunti per un film indiano (+ sc); Appunti per una Orestiade africana (Notes for an African Oresteia) (+ sc); Forcile (Pigsty; Pigpen) (+ sc); Medea (+ sc)
1971 Il decameron (The Decameron) (+ sc, role as Giotto)
1972 12 dicembre (co-d, sc); I racconti di Canterbury (The Canterbury Tales) (+ sc, role)
1974 Il fiore delle mille e una notte (A Thousand and One Nights) (+ sc)
1975 Salò o le 120 giornate di Sodome (Salò—The 120 Days of Sodom) (+ co-sc)

Other Films:

1954 La donna del fiume (co-sc)
1955 Il prigioniero della montagna (co-sc)
1956 Le notti di Cabiria (Fellini) (co-sc)
1957 Marisa la civetta (Bolognini) (co-sc)
1958 Giovanni Maritt (Bolognini) (co-sc)
1959 La notte brava (Bolognini) (co-sc)
1960 La canta delle marane (sc); Morte di un amico (co-sc); Il bell’ Antonio (Bolognini) (co-sc); La giornata balorda (Bolognini) (co-sc); La lunga notte del ’43 (co-sc); Il carro armato dell’8 settembre (co-sc); Il gobbo (role)
1961 La ragazza in vetrina (co-sc)
1962 La commare secca (Bertolucci) (sc)
1966 Requiescat (role)
1969 Ostia (co-sc)
1973 Storie scellerate (co-sc)

Publications

By PASOLINI: books—

Poesie e Casarsa, Bologna, 1942.
Dov'è la mia patria, Casarsa, 1949.
I parlianti, Rome, 1951.
Tal cour d’un frut, Tricesimo, 1953.
Il canto popolare, Milan, 1954.
La meglio giovintù, Florence, 1954.
L’usignolo della Chiesa Cattolica, Milan, 1958.
Una vita violenta, Milan, 1959.
Sonetto primaverile (1953), Milan, 1960.
L’odore dell’India, Milan, 1962.
Il vangelo secondo Matteo, Milan, 1964.

A Thousand and One Nights (co-sc)
Pier Paolo Pasolini on the set of Salò il 120 giorni di Sodome

---

Poesie dimenticate, Udine, 1965.

---

By PASOLINI: articles—

“‘Cinematic and Literary Stylistic Figures,’” in Film Culture (New York), Spring 1962.
“‘Pier Paolo Pasolini: An Epical-Religious View of the World,’” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Summer 1965.
Interview with James Blue, in Film Comment (New York), Fall 1965.
Interview in Interviews with Film Directors, edited by Andrew Sarris, New York, 1967.

On PASOLINI: books—

Taylor, John, Directors and Directions, New York, 1975.

Snyder, Stephen, Pier Paolo Pasolini, Boston, 1980.

Bellezza, Darío, Morte di Pasolini, Milan, 1981.

Bergala, Alain, and Jean Narboni, editors, Pasolini cinéaste, Paris, 1981.

Boarini, Vittorio, and others, Da Accattone a Salò: 120 scritti sul cinema di Pier Paolo Pasolini, Bologna, 1982.

Maurizio, Viano, A Certain Realism: Toward a Use of Pasolini’s Film Theory and Practice, Berkeley, California, 1993.

Rumble, Patrick, and Bart Testa, Pier Paolo Pasolini: Contemporary Perspectives, Toronto, 1993.

On PASOLINI: articles—

Lane, John, “Pasolini’s Road to Calvary,” in Films and Filming (London), March 1963.

Hitchens, Gordon, “Pier Paolo Pasolini and the Art of Directing,” in Film Comment (New York), Fall 1965.

Filmihulu (Helsiniki), special section, no. 2, 1993.

Williamia, Bruce, “A Transit to Significance: Poetic Discourse in Chantal Akerman’s Toute une Nuit,” in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury), vol. 23, July 1995.

Mariniello, Silvestra, “La Résistance au corps dans l’image cinématographique: La mort, le mythe et la sexualité dans le cinéma de Pasolini,” in Cinémas (Montreal), vol. 7, no. 1–2, Autumn 1996

* * *

Pier Paolo Pasolini, poet, novelist, philosopher, and filmmaker, came of age during the reign of Italian fascism, and his art is inextricably bound to his politics. Pasolini’s films, like those of his early apprentice Bernardo Bertolucci, began under the influence of neorealism. He also did early scriptwriting with Bolognini and Fellini. Besides these roots in neorealism, Pasolini’s works show a unique blend of linguistic theory and Italian Marxism. But Pasolini began transcending the neorealist tradition even in his first film, Accattone (which means “beggar”).

The relationship between Pasolini’s literary work and his films has often been observed, and indeed Pasolini himself noted in an introduction to a paperback selection of his poetry that “I made all these films as a poet.” Pasolini was a great champion of modern linguistic theory and often pointed to Roland Barthes and Erich Auerbach in discussing the films many years before semiotics and structuralism became fashionable. His theories on the semiotics of cinema centered on the idea that film was a kind of “real poetry” because it expressed reality with reality itself and not with other semiotic codes, signs, or systems.

Pasolini’s interest in linguistics can also be traced to his first book of poetry, Poems of Casarsa, which is written in his native Friuli dialect. This early interest in native nationalism and agrarian culture is also a central element in Pasolini’s politics. His first major poem, “The Ashes of Gramsci” (1954), pays tribute to Antonio Gramsci, the Italian Marxist who founded the Italian Communist party. It created an uproar unknown in Italy since the time of D’Annunzio’s poetry and was read by artists, politicians, and the general public.

The ideas of Gramsci coincided with Pasolini’s own feelings, especially concerning that part of the working class known as the sub-proletariat, which Pasolini described as a prehistorical, pre-Christian, and pre-bourgeois phenomenon, one which occurs for him in the South of Italy (the Sud) and in the Third World.

This concern with “the little homelands,” the indigenous cultures of specific regions, is a theme linking all of Pasolini’s films, from Accattone to his final black vision, Salò. These marginal classes, known as cafoni (hicks or hillbillies), are among the main characters in Pasolini’s novels Ragazzi de vita (1955) and A Violent Life (1959), and appear as protagonists in many of his films, notably Accattone, Mamma Roma, Hawks and Sparrows, and The Gospel according to Saint Matthew. To quote Pasolini: “My view of the world is always at bottom of an epical-religious nature: therefore even, in fact above all, in misery-ridden characters, characters who live outside of a historical consciousness, these epical-religious elements play a very important part.”

In Accattone and The Gospel, images of official culture are juxtaposed against those of a more humble origin. The pimp of Accattone and the Christ of The Gospel are similar figures. When Accattone is killed at the end of the film, a fellow thief is seen crossing himself in a strange backward way, it is Pasolini’s indictment of how Christianity has “contaminated” the subproletarian world of Rome. Marxism is never far away in The Gospel; it is evident, for instance, in the scene where Satan, dressed as a priest, tempts Christ. In The Gospel, Pasolini has put his special brand of Marxism even into camera angles and has, not ironically, created one of the most moving and literal interpretations of the story of Christ. A recurrent motif in Pasolini’s filmmaking, and especially prominent in Accattone and The Gospel, is the treatment of individual camera shots as autonomous units; the cinematic equivalent of the poetic image. It should also be noted that The Gospel according to Saint Matthew was filmed entirely in southern Italy.

In the 1960s Pasolini’s films became more concerned with ideology and myth, while continuing to develop his epical-religious theories. Oedipus Rex (which has never been distributed in the United States) and Medea reaffirm Pasolini’s attachment to the marginal and pre-industrial peasant cultures. These two films indict capitalism as well as communism for the destruction of these cultures, and the creation of a world which has lost its sense of myth.

In Teorema (“theorem” in Italian), which is perhaps Pasolini’s most experimental film, a mysterious stranger visits a typical middle-class family, sexually seduces mother, father, daughter, and son, and destroys them. The Peasant maid is the only character who is transformed because she is still attuned to the numinous quality of life which the middle class has lost. Pasolini has said about this film: “A member of the bourgeoisie, whatever he does, is always wrong.”

Pigpen, which shares with Teorema the sulphurous volcanic location of Mount Etna, is a double film. The first half is the story or parable of a fifteenth-century cult of cannibals and their eventual destruction by the church. The second half concerns two former Nazis-turned-industrialists in a black comedy of rank perversion. It is the film closest in spirit to the dark vision of Salò. In the 1970s Pasolini turned against his elite international audience of intellectuals and film buffs and embraced the mass market with his “Trilogy of Life” : Decameron, Canterbury Tales, and Arabian Nights. The Decameron was his first major European box-office hit, due mainly to its explicit sexual content. All three films are a celebration of Pasolini’s philosophy of “the ontology of reality, whose naked symbol is sex.” Pasolini, an avowed homosexual, in Decameron, and especially Arabian Nights, celebrates the triumph of female heterosexuality as the epitome of the life principle. Pasolini himself appears in two of these films, most memorably in the Decameron as Giotto’s best pupil, who on completion of a fresco for a small town cathedral says, “Why produce a work of art, when it’s so much better just to dream about it.”

As a result of his growing political pessimism Pasolini disowned the “Trilogy” and rejected most of its ideas. His final film, Salô, is an utterly clinical examination of the nature of fascism, which for Pasolini is synonymous with consumerism. Using a classical, unmoving camera, Pasolini explores the ultimate in human perversions in a static, repressive style. Salô, almost impossible to watch, is one of the most horrifying and beautiful visions ever created on film. Pasolini’s tragic, if not ironic, death in 1975 ended a visionary career that almost certainly would have continued to evolve.

—Tony D’Arpino

PASTRONE, Giovanni

Nationality: Italian. Also known as Piero Fosco. Born: Montechiaro d’Asti, 11 September 1883. Career: Administrative assistant, Carlo Rossi & Company, Turin, 1905; company reorganized as Itala Film, became administrative director, 1907; director, from 1910; production supervisor of Itala, from 1914; left film industry, worked on medical research, early 1920s. Died: In Turin, 27 June 1959.

Films as Director:

- 1910 Agnese Visconti (+ pr); La caduta di Troia (+ pr)
- 1912 Padre (co-d, pr)
1914 Cabiria (+ pr)
1915 Il fuoco (+ pr); Maciste (+ pr)
1916 Maciste alpino (co-d, pr); Tigre reale (+ pr)
1919 Hedda Gabler (+ pr)
1923 Povere bimbe (+ pr)

Publications

On PASTRONE: books—

On PASTRONE: articles—

Caudana, Mino, “‘Vita laboriosa e geniale di Giovanni Pastrone,’” in Film (Rome), 25 February and 4 March 1939.
“‘Omaggio a Pastrone’” issue of Centrofilm (Turin), no. 12, 1961.
Verdone, Mario, “‘Pastrone, ultimo incontro,’” in Bianco e Nero (Rome), June 1961.
Special Pastrone and Griffith issue of Bianco e Nero (Rome), May/August 1975.

The firm Carlo Rossi and Company (of Turin) began to manufacture films and apparatus in 1907, drawing their personnel from the Pathé Company of Paris. When Rossi left the Company, Sciamengo and Giovanni Pastrone took over what was by then Itala Films, and Pastrone soon proved himself an active and inspired manager. The services of the French comedian André Deed were acquired by the company in 1908. The comedian’s role as Cretinetti proved a goldmine. Another valuable addition to the company was Segundo de Chomon, a Spanish cameraman who was a master of special effects. His first film for Itala was the sensational thriller Tigris in 1912.

In the meantime, Pastrone’s ambitions led him into direction, and in 1910 he made Agnese Visconti and the sensational Caduta del Troia, which reached American cinemas in spite of an embargo on foreign films. His film Padre introduced the famous actor Ermete Zacconi to the screen. In 1913 Pastrone conceived a vast project set in the time of the Punic Wars, when Scipio conquered Carthage. Armed with a showman’s instinct, Pastrone approached d’Annunzio and secured the approval and prestige of the great man’s name for a tidy sum. Pastrone, under the name Piero Fosco, directed the film Cabiria with a script duly credited to the famous author, D’Annunzio.

Pastrone did his homework for the film with dynamic thoroughness. The period behavior, architecture, and costumes were patiently researched. Vast structures were built. Shooting took six months, ranging from the Itala studios in Turin to Tunisia, Sicily, and the Val de Lanzo, where Hannibal is reputed to have crossed the Alps. Not only was the film spectacular but, artistically, it broke new ground. The striking camerawork by de Chomon made use of travelling shots with remarkable skill, and the effects of the eruption of Mount Etna and the naval battle of Syracuse were awe-inspiring. The character of the strong man Maciste became a legend of the cinema. Later, Pastrone directed this ex-dock laborer in a further adventure, Maciste, and in the same year, he directed Pina Menichelli and Febo Mari in Il Fuoco, the love story of a young painter and a wealthy woman. The film’s erotic atmosphere caused it to be banned and prompted clerical demonstrations against the film.

In 1916 Pastrone again directed Menichelli in a work by Verga, Tigre reale, and in 1919 he directed his former star of Cabiria, Itala Almirante Manzini, in Hedda Gabler. Before he retired at about that time he made several more films with his creation, Maciste. He abandoned the cinema to pursue research in therapeutic medicine.

—Liam O’Leary

PECKINPAH, Sam

Nationality: American. Born: David Samuel Peckinpah in Fresno, California, 21 February 1925. Education: Fresno State College, B.A. in Drama 1949; University of Southern California, M.A. 1950. Family: Married 1) Marie Selland, 1947, four children; 2) Begonia Palacios, 1964 (divorced), one child; 3) Joie Gould, 1972 (divorced). Military Service: Enlisted in Marine Corps, 1943. Career: Director/producer-in-residence, Huntington Park Civic Theatre, California, 1950–51; propman and stagehand, KLAC-TV, Los Angeles, then assistant editor at CBS, 1951–53; assistant to Don Siegel, from 1954; writer for television, including Gunsmoke and The Rifleman, late 1950s; worked on scripts at Walt Disney Productions, 1963. Died: Of a heart attack, 28 December 1984.

Films as Director:

1961 The Deadly Companions (Trigger Happy)
1962 Ride the High Country (Guns in the Afternoon) (+ co-sc, uncredited)
1965 Major Dundee (+ co-sc)
1966 Noon Wine (+ sc)
1969 The Wild Bunch (+ co-sc)
1970 The Ballad of Cable Hogue
1971 Straw Dogs (+ co-sc)
1972 Junior Bonner; The Getaway
1973 Pat Garrett and Billy the Kid
1974 Bring Me the Head of Alfredo Garcia (+ co-sc)
1975 The Killer Elite
1977 Cross of Iron
1978 Convoy
1983 The Osterman Weekend

Other Films:

1956 Invasion of the Body Snatchers (Siegel) (role as Charlie the meter reader)
1978 China 9 Liberty 37 (Hellmann) (role)
1980 Il Visitatore (Paradise) (role)

Publications

By PECKINPAH: articles—

“‘A Conversation with Sam Peckinpah,’” with Ernest Callenbach, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Winter 1963/64.
“Peckinpah’s Return,” an interview with Stephen Farber, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Fall 1969.
“Mort Sahl Called Me a 1939 American,” in Film Heritage (New York), Summer 1976.

On PECKINPAH: books—

On PECKINPAH: articles—

Reisner, Joel, and Bruce Kane, “‘Sam Peckinpah,’” in Action (Los Angeles), June 1970.
Shaffer, Lawrence, “‘The Wild Bunch versus Straw Dogs,’” in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1972.
Macklin, Anthony, editor, special Peckinpah issue of Film Heritage (New York), Winter 1974/75.
Miller, Mark, “‘In Defense of Sam Peckinpah,’” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1975.
Pettit, Arthur, “‘Nightmare and Nostalgia: The Cinema West of Sam Peckinpah,’” in Western Humanities Review (Salt Lake City), Spring 1975.
Fuller, Sam, “‘A Privilege to Work in Films: Sam Peckinpah among Friends,’” in Movietone News (Seattle), February 1979.
Jameson, R.T., and others, “‘Midsection: Sam Peckinpah,’” in Film Comment (New York), January/February 1981.
Murphy, K., “‘No Bleeding Heart,’” in Film Comment (New York), March/April 1985.
It is as a director of westerns that Sam Peckinpah remains best known. This is not without justice. His non-western movies often lack the sense of complexity and resonance that he brings to western settings. He was adept at exploiting this richest of genres for his own purposes, explaining its ambiguities, pushing its values to uncomfortable limits. Ride the High Country, Major Dundee, and The Wild Bunch are the work of a filmmaker of high ambitions and rare talents. They convey a sense of important questions posed, yet finally left open and unanswered. At their best they have a visionary edge unparalleled in American cinema.

His non-westerns lose the additional dimensions that the genre brings, as in, for example, Straw Dogs. A polished and didactic parable about a besieged liberal academic who is forced by the relentless logic of events into extremes of violence, it is somehow too complete, its answers too pat, to reach beyond its own claustrophobic world. Though its drama is entirely compelling, it lacks the referential framework that carries Peckinpah’s westerns far beyond the realm of tautly-directed action. Compared to The Wild Bunch, it is a one-dimensional film.

Nevertheless, Straw Dogs is immediately recognizable as a Peckinpah movie. If a distinctive style and common themes are the marks of an auteur, then Peckinpah’s right to that label is indisputable. His concern with the horrors and the virtues of the male group was constant, as was his refusal to accept conventional movie morality. "My father says there’s only Right and Wrong, Good and Evil, with nothing in between. But it’s not that simple, is it?" asks Elsa in Ride the High Country. Judd’s reply could almost be Peckinpah’s: “No. It should be, but it isn’t.”

In traditional westerns, of course, right and wrong are clearly distinguishable. The westerner, as Robert Warshow has characterised him, is the man with a code. In Peckinpah’s westerns, as in some of his other movies such as Cross of Iron, it is the code itself that is rendered problematic. Peckinpah explores the ethic rather than taking it for granted, plays off its elements one against the other, and uses his characters as emblems of those internal conflicts. He presents a world wherein moral certainty is collapsing, leaving behind doomed variations on assertive individualism. In some modern westerns that theme has been treated as elegy; in Peckinpah it veers nearer to tragedy. His is a harsh world, softened only rarely in movies like The Ballad of Cable Hogue and Junior Bonner. Peckinpah’s richest achievements remain the two monumental epics of the 1960s, Major Dundee and The Wild Bunch. In both, though Major Dundee was butchered by its producers both before and after shooting, there is ample evidence of Peckinpah’s ability to Marshall original cinematic means in the service of a morally and aesthetically complex vision. It has become commonplace to associate Peckinpah with the rise of explicit violence in modern cinema, and it is true that few directors have rendered violence with such horrific immediacy. But his cinema is far more than that: his reflections upon familiar western themes are technically sophisticated, elaborately constructed, and, at their best, genuinely profound.

—Andrew Tudor

Penn, Arthur

Nationality: American. Born: Philadelphia, 27 September 1922. Education: Black Mountain College, North Carolina, 1947–48; studied at Universities of Perugia and Florence, 1949–50; trained for the stage with Michael Chekhov. Military Service: Enlisted in Army, 1943; joined Soldiers Show Company, Paris, 1945. Family: Married actress Peggy Maurer, 1955, one son, one daughter. Career: Assistant director on The Colgate Comedy Hour, 1951–52; TV director, from 1953, working on Gulf Playhouse: 1st Person (NBC), Philco Television Playhouse (NBC), and Playhouse 90 (CBS); directed first feature, The Left-handed Gun, 1958; director on Broadway, from 1958. Awards: Tony Award for stage version of The Miracle Worker, two Sylvania Awards. Address: c/o 2 West 67th Street, New York, NY 10023, U.S.A.

Films as Director:

1958  The Left-handed Gun
1962  The Miracle Worker
1965  Mickey One (+ pr)
1966  The Chase
1967  Bonnie and Clyde
1969  Alice’s Restaurant (+ co-sc)
1970  Little Big Man (+ pr)
1973  “The Highest,” in Visions of 8
1975  Night Moves
1976  The Missouri Breaks
1981  Four Friends
Arthur Penn with Melanie Griffith on the set of Night Moves

1985  Target
1987  Dead of Winter
1989  Penn and Teller Get Killed (+ pr)
1993  The Portrait (for TV)
1995  Lumière et compagnie
1996  Inside

Publications

By PENN: articles—

Interview with Michael Lindsay, in Cinema (Beverly Hills), vol. 5, no. 3, 1969.

Interview in The Director’s Event by Eric Sherman and Martin Rubin, New York, 1970.

“Arthur Penn at the Olympic Games,” an interview in American Cinematographer (Los Angeles), November 1972.

Interview with A. Leroux, in 24 Images (Montreal), June 1983.

L’occhio aperto,” an interview with G. Garlazzo, in Filmcritica (Siena), May 1997.

On PENN: books—

On PENN: articles—

Byron, Stuart, and Terry Curtis Fox, “What Is a Western?,” in Film Comment (New York), July/August 1976.
Penn Section of Casablanca (Madrid), March 1982.
“TV to Film: A History, a Map, and a Family Tree,” in Monthly Film Bulletin (London), February 1983.
Richards, P., “Arthur Penn: A One-Film Director?” in Film, October 1987.
McCloy, Sean, “Focus on Arthur Penn,” in Film West (Dublin), July 1995.

Kock, I. de, “Arthur Penn,” in Film en Televisie + Video (Brussels), November 1996.

* * *

Arthur Penn has often been classed—along with Robert Altman, Bob Rafelson, and Francis Coppola—among the more “European” American directors. Stylistically, this is true enough. Penn’s films, especially after Bonnie and Clyde, tend to be technically experimental, and episodic in structure; their narrative line is elliptical, undermining audience expectations with abrupt shifts in mood and rhythm. Such features can be traced to the influence of the French New Wave, in particular the early films of François Truffaut and Jean-Luc Godard, which Penn greatly admired.

In terms of his thematic preoccupations, though, few directors are more utterly American. Repeatedly, throughout his work, Penn has been concerned with questioning and re-assessing the myths of his country. His films reveal a passionate, ironic, intense involvement with the American experience, and can be seen as an illuminating chart of the country’s moral condition over the past thirty years. Mickey One is dark with the unfocused guilt and paranoia of the McCarthyite hangover, while the stunned horror of the Kennedy assassination reverberates through The Chase. The exhilaration, and the fatal flaws, of the 1960s anti-authoritarian revolt are reflected in Bonnie and Clyde and Alice’s Restaurant. Little Big Man reworks the trauma of Vietnam, while Night Moves is steeped in the disillusioned malaise that pervaded the Watergate era.

As a focus for his perspective on America, Penn often chooses an outsider group and its relationship with mainstream society. The Indians in Little Big Man, the Barrow Gang in Bonnie and Clyde, the rustlers in The Missouri Breaks, the hippies in Alice’s Restaurant, the outlaws in The Left-handed Gun, are all sympathetically presented as attractive and vital figures, preferable in many ways to the conventional society which rejects them. But ultimately they suffer defeat, being infected by the flawed values of that same society. “A society,” Penn has commented, “has its mirror in its outcasts.”

An exceptionally intense, immediate physicality distinguishes Penn’s work. Pain, in his films, unmistakably hurts, and tactile sensations are vividly communicated. Often, characters are conveyed primarily through their bodily actions: how they move, walk, hold themselves, or use their hands. Violence is a recurrent feature of his films—notably in The Chase, Bonnie and Clyde, and The Missouri Breaks—but it is seldom gratuitously introduced, and represents, in Penn’s view, a deeply rooted element in the American character which has to be acknowledged.

Penn established his reputation as a director with Bonnie and Clyde, one of the most significant and influential films of its decade. But since 1970 he has made only a handful of films, none of them successful at the box office. Night Moves and The Missouri Breaks, both poorly received on initial release, now rank among his most subtle and intriguing movies, and Four Friends, though uneven, remains constantly stimulating with its oblique, elliptical narrative structure.
But since then Penn seems to have lost his way. Neither Target, a routine spy thriller, nor Dead of Winter, a reworking of Joseph H. Lewis’s cult B-movie My Name Is Julia Ross, offered material worthy of his distinctive talents. Penn and Teller Get Killed, a spoof psycho-killer vehicle for the bad-taste illusionist team, got few showings outside the festival circuit. Among his few recent directorial works is The Portrait, a solidly crafted adaptation for television of Tina Rowe’s Broadway hit, Painting Churches. “It’s not that I’ve drifted away from film,” Penn told Richard Combs in 1986. “I’m very drawn to film, but I’m not sure that film is drawn to me.” Given the range, vitality, and sheer unpredictability of his earlier work, the estrangement is much to be regretted.

—Philip Kemp

PEREIRA DOS SANTOS, Nelson

Films as Director and Scriptwriter:

1950 Juventude (short); Atividades políticas em Sao Paolo (short)
1955 Rio, quarenta graus (Rio, 40 Degrees)
1957 Rio, zona norte (Rio, zone nord)
1958 Soldados do fogo (short)
1960 Part of a documentary on Karl Gass made in East Germany
1961 Mandacaru vermelho (+ co-pr, role)
1962 O Bôca de Ouro; Ballet do Brasil (short)
1963 Vidas secas (Barren Lives); Um móco de 74 anos (short)
1964 O Rio de Machado de Assis (short)
1965 Fala Brasilia
1966 Cruzada ABC
1967 El justiciero (Le Justicier) (+ co-pr)
1968 Fome de amor (Soif d’amour); Abastecimento, nova política (short)
1969 Azyllo muito louco (L’Alieniste) (co-d)
1971 Como era gostoso o meu frances (How Tasty Was My Little Frenchman) (+ co-pr)
1972 Quem e beta (Pas de violence entre nous)
1974 O Amuleta de Ogum (The Amulet of Ogum); Tenda dos milagres (Tent of Miracles)
1980 Na estrada da vida (On the Highway of Life)
1984 Memorias do carcere (Memories of Jail)

1986 Jubiaba
1994 A Terceira margem do rio (The Third Bank of the River) (+ sc)
1995 Cinema de lágrimas (+ co-sc)
1998 Guerra e liberdade Castro alves em São Paulo

Other Films:

1951 O scai (Nanni) (asst d)
1952 Aghul no palheiro (Viany) (asst d)
1953 Balança mas nao caid (Vanderlei) (asst d)
1958 O grande momento (Santos) (pr)
1962 Barravento (Rocha) (ed); Pedreira de São Diogo (Hirszman) (ed)
1998 For all o trampolim da Vitória (ro as Almirante Johnes)

Publications

By PEREIRA DOS SANTOS: articles—

Interview with Leo Murray, in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), March 1966.
Interview with A. Lima, in Filme Cultura (Rio de Janeiro), February 1979.
Interview with Agustin Mahieu, in Cine Libre (Madrid), no. 6, 1983.
“‘Manifesto por un cinema popular,’” in Hojas de cine, by Marcelo Beraba, Mexico City, 1986.

On PEREIRA DOS SANTOS: books—

Friás, Isaac Léon, Los años de la connmoción, Mexico City, 1979.
Johnson, Randal, and Robert Stam, editors, Brazilian Cinema, Rutheerford, New Jersey, 1982.
Johnson, Randal, Cinema Novo x 5, Austin, Texas, 1984.
Burton, Julianne, editor, Cinema and Social Change in Latin America, Austin, Texas, 1986.

On PEREIRA DOS SANTOS: articles—

Kinder, Marsha, “Tent of Miracles,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Summer 1978.

759

Maier-Schoen, Petra, “Das filmische Gewissen,” in Film-Dienst (Cologne), 12 March 1996.

* * *

Considered to be the ‘‘mentor’’ and ‘‘conscience’’ of Cinema Novo (New Cinema)—the movement that fundamentally transformed the theory and practice of film in Brazil and Latin America—Nelson Pereira dos Santos encapsulates many of its ideals in his works.

The most important of these is the reaction against the domination of Brazilian screens by foreign films and imported cinematic models, for Cinema Novo is the result of efforts by directors such as Pereira, Glauber Rocha, and Carlos Diegues to make a genuinely ‘‘popular cinema.’’ This concept has been used in a variety of ways, but to Pereira it represents a combination of commercial success and a concern with national identity. Thus, though he criticized early Cinema Novo works because they were inaccessible to the general public, he also feels that marketability is not the only criterion by which to judge what is ‘‘popular.’’ For Pereira, films must also affirm the principles of Brazilian popular culture, which he sees as dramatically different from ‘‘superficial, elitist cultural forms that follow antiquated, colonized models.’’

The first film to embody the principles of Cinema Novo was Rio, 40 Degrees, which Pereira dos Santos made in 1955. Greatly influenced by Italian neo-realism, Rio was made in the streets of that city and outside studios, and was immersed in Brazil’s reality. The storyline presents the poles of Brazilian society, contrasting the lives of the upper and the lower classes through the following the activities of five peanut vendors who leave their slum houses to sell their wares in different parts of Rio.

Aside from the thematic focus on everyday life, Pereira believes the structure of the production also reflected the film’s innovative approach to storytelling. The work was made with an absolute minimum of technical resources (a camera and some lights); the crew was composed of friends who did whatever was required of them, rather than technicians who worked only in their specialty; and the film was shot on location, in the places where the stories take place. However, in spite of such low-budget strategies, production of Rio was still expensive enough to sink Pereira deeply in debt. As a consequence, he was unable to make another feature for four years.

When Pereira did return to feature production, it was to make another ‘‘classic’’ of Cinema Novo, Barren Lives. During 1957 and 1958, the filmmaker had directed documentaries in the Brazilian northeast, where he was greatly struck by the extreme drought conditions typical of that region. At the time, there was much debate about Brazil’s agrarian problems, and Pereira participated in that discussion by adapting Graciliano Ramos’ book Vidas secas to the screen.

Pereira’s experience in making documentaries there served him well, for he was aware that the usual camera filters transformed the arid countryside into an exotic garden. He worked closely with Luiz Carlos Barreto, one of the finest Brazilian cameramen of the time, to produce an austere kind of photography, achieved through high-contrast film shot without filters, which reflected the reality of the area. Pereira further struggled against the sentimentalized and picturesque vision so often rendered of such regions by creating a soundtrack in which harsh noises punctuate the narrative.

History is an important source of national identity, and Pereira has directed two historical films of uncommon power and beauty: How Tasty Was My Little Frenchman and Prison Memories. My Little Frenchman was made at a time when government censorship made it difficult to produce films on contemporary problems; as Pereira noted: “The government financed historical films, but it wanted the history to be within official parameters—the hero, the father of the country, all those things we have been told since elementary school.” This was a seemingly impossible task, but one that Pereira turned to his own uses by making a work that subverted “official history” by focusing on the Indian perspective of the “discovery” of America and through incorporating contradictions between the images shown and the discourses of government officials in the film.

With Prison Memories, Pereira returned to Graciliano Ramos for inspiration. Freely adapting the book, in which Ramos described his experiences as a political prisoner during the 1930s, Pereira turned the jail into a metaphor for “the prison of social and political relations which oppress the Brazilian people.” In his contemporary and historical cinema, Nelson Pereira dos Santos has explored the depths of Brazilian reality as well as the heights to which that nation’s culture is capable of rising.

—John Mraz

PETERSEN, Wolfgang

Films as Director:

1972  Smog (for TV)
1973  Einer von uns beiden (One of Us; One or the Other); Van Der Valk and the Rich (for TV)
1974  Auf’ kreuz gelegt (Pinned to the Ground) (for TV); Stadt im tal (Town in the Valley) (for TV)
1975  Stellenweise glatteis (Icy in Spots) (for TV)
1976  Hans im gluck (Hans’ Good Fortune) (for TV); Vier genen die bank (Four against the Bank) (for TV)
1977  Die Konsequenz (The Consequence) (+ co-sc); Plannahung (The Rehearsal) (for TV)
1978  Schwarz und Weiss wie Tage und Nachte (Black and White like Day and Night) (for TV) (+ co-sc)
1981  Das Boot (The Boat) (+ sc) (originally a TV mini-series)
1982  Reifezeugnis (For Your Love Only) (+ co-sc)
1984  The NeverEnding Story (+ co-sc)
1985  Enemy Mine
1991  Shattered (+ sc, co-pr)
1993  In the Line of Fire (+ co-exec pr)
1995  Outbreak (+ co-pr)
1997  Air Force One (+ co-pr)
2000  The Perfect Storm (+ co-pr)

Publications

By PETERSEN: articles—

Interview with D. Osswald, in Cinema Papers (Melbourne), May 1986.

On PETERSEN: articles—

Pourroy, J., article in Cinefex (Riverside, California), February 1986.
Honeycutt, Kirk, article in Los Angeles Times, 17 June 1990.
Grob, N., “In the Line of Light,” in EPD Film (Frankfurt), June 1996.

In a review of Wolfgang Petersen’s first theatrical feature, Einer von uns beiden—a suspense drama of romance, blackmail, and murder—a Variety critic noted that “After some 20 TV pix, many of them detective stories, Wolfgang Petersen is recognized as West Germany’s leading action director in the Hollywood vein.”

Not all of Petersen’s early films fit into the action genre. The Consequence, for example, is a drama that charts the romantic relationship between an imprisoned gay male and the son of one of his guards. But Das Boot, the film which brought Petersen to international prominence, might easily have been a Hollywood-produced submarine movie spectacle. At the time of its release, Das Boot was the most expensive German film ever made; it originally was shot as a six-hour television mini-series, and was to become the highest-grossing foreign-language film ever released in the United States.

Das Boot is a breathtakingly filmed drama detailing the plight of a German U-boat patrolling the Atlantic during World War II. What is especially impressive about the film is that its scenario runs its course entirely within the tight confines of the vessel. With skill and precision, Petersen uses a Steadicam to visually capture the manner in which the claustrophobic quarters and the constant fear of going into battle affect the crew members, without allowing the lack of space to hamper his directorial style. Furthermore, the film takes on an antirwar aura in that there is an ever-present sense of the wastefulness of war, and the needlessness for the men to have to endure their experience aboard the U-boat. Ironically, Americans who see the film come to empathize with the various characters and pull for their survival—even though, at the time in which the film is set, Germany was America’s enemy. Das Boot is at once an action-spectacle with a provocative point-of-view, a tremendously thrilling entertainment—and an impressive Hollywood calling card for Petersen.

The director’s next noteworthy production (as well as first English-language feature) is The NeverEnding Story, a German-British-made fantasy about a boy who envisions the story he is reading in a book. Petersen effectively employs his skills as an action director as the book comes alive and a young hero takes on an evil wizard who has threatened to destroy the Kingdom of Fantasia. Unfortunately, the filmmaker faltered in his first two American-made films. Enemy Mine is a middling science-fiction tale, while Shattered is a just-adequate Hitchcock clone about a car crash victim attempting to patch together his life after becoming an amnesiac.

With In the Line of Fire, Petersen redeemed himself and proved that he is capable of making a smashingly entertaining, financially successful, big-budget Hollywood nail-biter. Clint Eastwood plays one of his best roles in a non-Eastwood directed film as an aging Secret Serviceman, haunted by his failure to come between President John F. Kennedy and an assassin’s bullet in November 1963, who now must contend with a sadistic killer who aspires to murder the current U.S. chief executive. The director’s follow-up, Outbreak, is another topical thriller, in which an army researcher (Dustin Hoffman) races to halt the spread of a killer virus. The film’s limitations have to do with the script; what starts out as a credible thriller soon degenerates into a cartoon-like fantasy littered with counterfeit heroics. But Petersen’s direction consistently is first-rate. By the late 1990s, the filmmaker was firmly entrenched as a director of slick, high-profile/high-budget Hollywood action-adventures. He returned to the U.S. president-in-danger theme with Air Force One, a top-notch thriller featuring Harrison Ford as a chief executive who, along with his family and staff, is taken hostage by Kazakhstani terrorists while onboard the presidential plane. Petersen also directed one of the most anticipated movies of the year 2000, The Perfect Storm, based on Sebastian Junger’s account of a fishing boat lost at sea in a huge storm.

—Audrey E. Kupferberg

PETRI, Elio

Films as Director:

1954 Nasce un campione (short) (+ co-sc)
1957 I sette Contadini (short) (+ co-sc)
1961 L'assassino (The Lady Killer of Rome) (+ co-sc)
1962 I giorni contati (+ co-sc)
1963 Il maestro di Vigevano
1964 ‘Peccato nel pomeriggio’ (Sin in the Afternoon) episode of Alta infedeltà (High Infidelity)
1965 La decima vittima (The Tenth Victim) (+ co-sc)
1967 A ciascuno il suo (We Still Kill the Old Way) (+ co-sc)
1968 Un tranquillo posto di campagna (A Quiet Place in the Country) (+ co-sc)
1970 Indagine su un cittadino al di sopra di ogni sospetto (Investigation of a Citizen above Suspicion) (+ co-sc); ‘Documenti su Giuseppe Pinelli’ episode of Ipotesi (+ co-sc)
1971 La classe operaia va in paradiso (The Working Class Goes to Heaven; Lulu the Tool) (+ co-sc)
1973 La proprietà non è più un furto (+ co-sc)
1976 Todo modo (+ co-sc)
1978 Le Mani spore (for TV) (+ sc)
1979 Le buone notizie (+ co-sc, pr)

Other Films:

1952 Roma ore undici (Rome Eleven O’Clock) (De Santis) (co-sc)
1953 Un marito per Anna Zaccheo (A Husband for Anna) (De Santis) (co-sc)
1954 Giorni d’amore (Days of Love) (De Santis) (co-sc)
1956 Uomini e lupi (Men and Wolves) (De Santis) (co-sc)
1958 L’Uomo senza domenica (De Santis) (co-sc)
1958 Cesta duga godinu dana (La strada lunga un anno) (De Santis) (co-sc)
1960 La Garçonnière (De Santis) (co-sc)

Publications

By PETRI: books—

On PETRI: articles—

MacBean, James in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1972 and Spring 1973.
Alemanno, R., “Da Rosi a Peteri todo modo dentro il contesto,” in Cinema Nuovo (Bari), July/August 1976.
Goffers, Eric, and Ivo de Kock, in Film en Televisie (Brussels), no. 430, March 1993.
Cineforum (Boldone), vol. 36, no. 351, January-February 1996.

In his brief career, Elio Petri became renowned as one of the major political filmmakers of the 1960s and 1970s. He was also among the directors who achieved an international stature for the Italian cinema for the third time in its history. From his first feature, an original variation on the police thriller, he maintained a consistently high quality of style and poignant subject matter. Even with the bitterness, grotesqueness, and complexity of his films, many of them achieved a huge commercial success.

The Tenth Victim, for example, a stylized science-fiction collage of Americanisms that concentrates on the voracious rapport between a man (Marcello Mastroianni) and a woman (Ursula Andress), plays repeatedly on American television. Investigation of a Citizen above Suspicion (which won the Oscar for best foreign film) and The Working Class Goes to Heaven have enjoyed continued success with contemporary audiences through repertory screenings and 16mm distribution. With Investigation, Petri wanted to make a film against the police and the mechanisms that guaranteed immunity to the servants of power, yet intended no precise political references. His claim was that the state manifests itself through the police. Like his earlier film, A ciascuno il suo, it opens with a murder committed by a police official (Gian Maria Volonté), but, because of his position and manipulation of the system, it remains a crime without punishment. The film brilliantly studies the psychopathology of power, whereas with his other enormous success, The Working Class Goes to Heaven, Petri wanted to return to what he considered was the real basis of Italian neorealism—a popular hero. Filmed in a factory whose director was serving a prison sentence, it investigates the reasons why a worker is driven to strike. Again the protagonist was played by Volonté (whose name in the film, Massa, means “the masses”). Although he is a highly individualized character, Petri continually stresses that his actions, thoughts, goals, and even his sexuality are determined by society and its rules.

Two common themes running throughout Petri’s work have been the alienation of modern man and investigations of the socio-political relationships between an individual and his/her society. Petri usually employs a highly stylistic form which he often describes as expressionist. This is most obvious, for example, in Todo modo, aptly described as a celebration of death. Quite grotesque, the film was not well received in Italy, where, despite its extreme stylization, it was read as a precise analogy of the ruling political party.

Petri began his film career as a scriptwriter, most notably for Giuseppe De Santis’s Rome Eleven O’Clock: Petri often stated that De Santis was his only mentor, and like him, Petri directed relatively few films, carefully chosen for content and precisely planned in style and detail. Filmmaking was, in his opinion, the most popular tool with which a culture could understand itself. Thus, he is considered not an artisan, but an auteur, a filmmaker who closely identified the filmmaking process with personal, social, moral, and political duties.

—Elaine Mancini

PHALKE, Dadasaheb

NATIONALITY: Indian. Born: Dhundiraj Govind Phalke in Trymbakeshwar, near Nasik, 30 April 1870. Education: Studied drawing at J.J. School of Arts, Bombay; art studies at Kalabhavan, Baroda. Family: Married first wife in 1885 (she died in 1900); married Saraswatabai (Phalke), daughter Mandakini. Career: Portrait photographer and scene painter, from 1900; draughtsman and photographer, Government of India’s Archaeological Department, 1903; opened Phalke Engraving and Printing Works, 1905; left business, saw Life of Christ in Bombay, inspired to make films, 1910; made short film, Growth of a Pea Plant, 1911; suffered temporary blindness; travelled to London to buy filmmaking equipment, met Cecil Hepworth, 1912; returned to build studio in Bombay, then made first feature film and first Indian film, Raja Harishchandra, released April 1913; “Phalke’s Films” incorporated into the Hindustan Film Company, 1917; daughter played role of boy Krishna in Kaliya Mardan, 1918; retired to Benares, 1919; recalled to direct, 1922; attempted to set up business selling enamel boards, 1933; recalled for last film as director, Gangavataram, 1934 (completed 1936). Died: In Nasik, 16 February 1944.

Films as Director, Scriptwriter, Producer, and Cinematographer:

(partial list: Phalke made approximately one hundred feature films and twenty-two shorts)

1911 Growth of a Pea Plant (short)
1913 Raja Harishchandra
1914 Mohini Bhasmasur; Pithache Panje (short); Savitri Stayavan
1914/15 Soulagna Rasu; Mr. Sleepy’s Good Luck; Agkadyanchi Mog (anim); Animated Coins (anim); Vichitra Shilpa (Imanmate Animated) (anim); Sinhasat Parvanti; Kartiki Purnima Festival; Ganesh Utsava; Glass Works (doc); Talegaon (doc); Bird’s Eye View of Budh Gaya (doc);

Rock-Cut Temples of Ellora (doc); How Films Are Made (short); Prof. Kelpha’s Magic (+ role)
1916/17 Raja Harishchandra (new version); Lanka Dahan
1918 Shree Krishna Janma; Kaliya Mardan
1923 Sati Mahananda
1932 Setu Bandhan
1937 Gangavataram
1938 Raja Harishchandra: D.G. Phalke (1870–1944): The First Indian Film Director (compiled by Prof. Satish Bahadur)

Publications

By PHALKE: articles—

Four articles in Navyug (Bombay), September 1983. Interview reprinted in Close Up (India), July 1968.

On PHALKE: books—

On PHALKE: articles—

* * *

In 1912 Dadasaheb Phalke made Raja Harishchandra, conventionally considered India’s first feature film. Between 1912 and 1917, despite problems relating to finance and the import of equipment because of the war, Phalke and Co. (as the director’s concern was called) managed to remain in production. Given such historical facts, Phalke’s grand claim that he started the Indian film industry is actually quite a reasonable one.

Phalke brought an impressive string of qualifications to the cinema: painter, printer, engraver, photographer, drama teacher, and magician. The last distinction is particularly notable. He explained that his decision to make Hindu mythological films was due not only to his religious-minded audiences, but also because such subjects allowed him “to bring in mystery and miracles.” The mythological aspect of the works he pursued was especially suited to fulfil the early fascination with the cinema as magical toy: hence the extensive use of dissolves and superimpositions to herald miraculous happenings in the handful of Phalke’s films that have survived.

The Phalke biography is instructive for the insights it provides about media history. A well-known early story is that Phalke’s immersion in intense viewing and experimentation led to ill health and temporary blindness. There is a revelatory, metaphorical aspect to the loss and recovery of sight in a man who declared that he would bring images of revered Indian deities to the screen, just as Christ’s image had been presented in the West. Earlier, as photographer and printer, Phalke had been involved in the mass production of the famous religious paintings of Raja Ravi Varma. Phalke’s work therefore wove into the early history of cultural self-representation through new media technologies, a period intimately related to the creation of a mass market in indigenous imagery and identity.

Equally important was Phalke’s relationship with the theatre. At the time Phalke’s first films were released in Bombay, it was said that the cinema was displacing traditional entertainments, such as the theatre and circus, because of its astounding popularity. When Phalke took his films to Poona in 1913, they were screened at a theatre which normally exhibited performances of Tamasha, a western Indian dramatic form.

Theatre also left its mark on the new entertainment. In Raja Harischandra, the priest as comic character—a staple of the western Indian stage—was used. Moreover, it was because of the development of the theatrical tradition that Phalke was able get the women performers he sought for his female roles—even prostitutes had refused to associate themselves with films. A lay-off in a theatrical company briefly secured for him the services of Durgabhai Gokhale and her daughter, Kamalabhai, the first women actresses of the Indian cinema.

For financial reasons, Phalke and Co. merged with the Hindustan Film Company in 1918. Except for the period 1919–22, Phalke continued to work with this company till 1932, when it was wound up. In his working life as director, which spanned the ages of forty-two to sixty-four, Phalke made some 122 feature films and shorts, concluding his career with Gangavataran, the only one planned as a talkie. Thereafter he conceived of various schemes, such as setting up a production unit for short films for the Prabhat company, but nothing came of these ideas, and the last years of his life were spent in relative obscurity.

—Ravi Vasudevan

PIALAT, Maurice

Films as Director:

1960 L’amour existe (short)
1961 Janine (for TV)
1962 Maitre Galip (for TV)
1967 L’enfance nue (+ sc)
1971 La maison des bois (for TV) (+ role)
1972 Nous ne vieillirons pas ensemble (+ sc, pr)
1974 La gueule ouverte (+ sc, pr)
1979 Passe ton bac d’abord
1979 Loulou

1983 A nos amours (To Our Loves)
1985 Police (+ co-sc)
1987 Sous le soleil de Satan (Under Satan’s Sun) (+ co-sc, role)
1991 Van Gogh (+ sc)
1995 Le Garçu (+ sc)
1997 Les Auto-stoppeuses

Other Film:

1969 Que la bete meure (Chabrol) (role)

Publications

By PIALAT: book—

By PIALAT: articles—

Interview in Image et Son (Paris), March 1972.

Interview with Frédéric Strauss and others, in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), April 1993.

On PIALAT: books—

On PIALAT: articles—

Pialat Section of Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), December 1983.

* * *

Described by Alain Bergala in Cahiers du Cinéma as “Renoir’s true heir today,” Maurice Pialat is squarely in the tradition of French auteur cinema. Like Renoir, Feyder, and Grémillon in the 1930s, and Godard, Resnais, Varda, and a few others after the war, Pialat is an artisan who works both within and against the French film industry. He has often acknowledged his “debt” to Renoir, as well as to Pagnol, in terms of both working methods and a certain conception of realism. However, unlike the benign humanism of these two predecessors, Pialat’s work is marked by harshness, violence, and conflict, both on and off screen.

From his first feature (L’enfance nue, on deprived childhood), Pialat’s films have shown an almost ethnographic concern with unglamorous areas of French society: difficult adolescents (Passe ton bac d’abord), semi-hooligans (Loulou), the bitter breakdown of a couple (Nous ne vieillirons pas ensemble) and cancer (La gueule ouverte), combining a quasi cinéma-vérité approach with the reworking of deeply personal matters. Although Pialat has claimed to be “fed up with realism,” and even though he has made forays into genre films with Police and Sous le soleil de Satan, his cinema is still within a realistic idiom, fusing the New Wave (and neo-realist) concern with location shooting and contemporary setting with the “intimate” realism of the central European cinema of the 1960s. His films draw on basic realist strategies such as the use of non-professional or little-known actors (sometimes alongside stars like Gérard Depardieu, and on occasion—Renoir-style—the charismatic Pialat himself), the frequent recourse to improvisation and colloquial language, hand-held camerawork, long takes, and shooting without a finished script. If these strategies traditionally produce a sense of immediacy and authenticity, they often combine, in Pialat’s films, with a rare violence.

Pialat has earned a reputation as a “difficult” director. To some extent, this is an inherent part of the myth of auteur cinema which stresses the romantic pains of creation. Yet Pialat’s career is littered with well-publicized working and personal conflicts: with actors Gérard Depardieu (Loulou) and Sophie Marceau (Police), with scriptwriter Catherine Breillat over Police, and with technicians on many occasions. But part of his method consists precisely of inscribing his own personal relationships within the fabric of his films, as epitomised in A nos amours by the Pialat/Bonnaire couple (on several professional and personal levels).

“Pialat le terrible,” as he was dubbed by a French paper, sometimes makes headlines, and occasionally the courtrooms. This would be mere gossip if it did not echo the very subject matter of his films. In the same way as Sam Fuller defined cinema as “a battleground,” Pialat’s filmmaking might be described as belonging to the boxing ring. He has repeatedly stated his preference for situations where people have rows, where they clash, where “there is trouble,” and this is borne out by all his films, where conflict is the preferred element, a type of conflict which moreover assumes a great physicality. In Pialat’s cinema, contact is more likely to be made through violence than through tenderness, particularly within the family, where the boxing ring overlaps with the Oedipal stage. This is true both thematically (families and couples tearing each other apart) and in the way Pialat’s films address their spectators. A predominance of indoor scenes shot in claustrophobic medium close-ups, and the deliberate inclusion of “flawed” episodes, of moments of rupture or tension in the films, are ways of capturing “the truth” of characters or situations, sometimes with little regard for narrative continuity. Pialat does not pull his punches, and his cinema, in the words of editor Yann Dedet, “tends more towards emotion than comprehension.”
If Pialat’s films, in their bleak examination of some of the least palatable aspects of contemporary French society and personal emotions, make for difficult viewing, their reward lies in an emotional and documentary power rare in French cinema today.

—Ginette Vincendeau

PICK, Lupu

Nationality: Romanian. Also known as “Lupu-Pick.” Born: Iasi (Jassy), 2 January 1886. Family: Married Edith Pasca. Career: Actor in Romania, 1914; immigrated to Germany, acted in Hamburg and Berlin, 1915; founded production company Rex Filmesellschaft, 1917; directed first film, 1918; elected President of DACHO (German actors’ union), 1930. Died: In Berlin, 9 March 1931.

Films as Director:

1917 Die Fremde (role); Die Pagode (Mr. Wu) (role)
1918 Der Weltspiegel; Die Liebe des van Royk; Die Rothenburger; Die tolle Herat von Laló; Mister Wu
1919 Der Seelewerkäfer; Herr über Leben und Tod; Kitsch; Marionetten der Leidenschaft; Mein Wille ist Gesetz; Tötet nicht mehr!; Misericordia (+ pr)
1920 Der Dummkopf (The Idiot) (+ role); Niemand weiss es
1921 Aus den Erinnerungen eines Frauenarztes Part 2; Grausige Nächte; Scherben (Shattered)
1922 Zum Paradies der Damen
1923 Sylvester (New Year’s Eve); Der verbotene Weg (+ role)
1924 La Péniche tragique
1925 Das Haus der Lüge
1926 Das Panzergewölbe (Armored Vault) (+ co-sc)
1928 Eine Nacht in London (A Night in London) (+ pr)
1929 Napoleon a Sainte-Hélène (Napoleon on St. Helena)
1931 Les Quatres Vagabonds; Gassenhauer

Other Films:

1915 Schlemihl (Oswald) (role); Hoffmanns Erzählungen (Oswald) (role); Die Pagode (Mr. Wu) (role)
1916 Nächte des Grauens (Robison) (role); Homunculus series (role)
1917 Die Fremde (role)
1917/18 Es werde Licht (three episodes) (role)
1922 Fliehende Schatten (Lamprecht) (co-sc, role)
1923 Stadt in Sicht (role)
1926 Alte Herzen, neue Zeiten (role)
1928 Spione (Lang) (role)

Publications

On PICK: books—

* * *

Lupu Pick, a pioneer of the German Kammerspielfilm that led the way from expressionism to the new realism of the late 1920s, came to the cinema from the Berlin stage, where he worked as an actor under Piscator and Reinhardt. His first films as a director were segments of an adventure series for popular actor Bernd Aldor.

Two films that Pick created with scriptwriter Carl Mayer, Scherben and Sylvester, are the basis of his reputation. Scherben was the first German experiment in filmmaking without intertitles. Pick and Mayer adapted the name of Reinhardt’s smallest stage—which had come to represent the intimacy and concentration of the plays staged there—in the subtitle of their first film together: Scherben, ein deutsches Filmkammerspiel. Critics often attribute the success of Scherben and Sylvester to Mayer. Indeed, Mayer wrote many of the films usually counted as kammerspielfilme, working with Murnau, Jessner, and Gerlach. But Pick undeniably contributed his unique interpretation of Mayer’s scripts.

Scherben uses a single intertitle and is distinguished by the extended use of a moving camera, especially in long tracking shots along railway ties. This movement contrasts sharply with the stationary plot, the slow movement of the actors, and the long-held, still shots. At times masks seem to be used in response to the expressionist punctuation Mayer used in his scripts. Diagonal slash masks isolate an image just as Mayer’s one word sentences are set off by exclamation marks.

Pick created a new, non-expressionist style, concentrating on naturalistic detail rather than on abstraction. Perhaps it was this enthusiasm for naturalism that led Pick to linger over the process of mechanical tasks and everyday events. Yet his work remains tied to the expressionist movement. The actors in his films, especially his wife Edith Posca and Werner Krauss, operated within the range of theatrical expressionism. Shot at Pick’s own Rex Studios in Berlin, Scherben is to a great extent manufactured in the studio, although its intent and its effect involve a realist illusion.

Unlike filmmakers truly caught up in expressionism, Pick was concerned with portraying individual psychology. In his attempts to construct a drama without language he developed a system of iris and dissolves that was quite different from the psychological editing style then developing in Hollywood. Rather than cut to a reaction, Pick often masked the frame, isolating a single character. At other times he would compose a shot so that an object, framed in relation to a character, could represent a thought. While the style that Pick developed may have had little influence on subsequent filmmaking, it was nevertheless a bold experiment in film narrative in its time.

Originally Pick and Mayer had planned a trilogy that would include Scherben, Sylvester, and Der letze Mann, but a disagreement over the character of the doorman in the third film led to Pick’s departure from the project.

The films Pick made after his collaboration with Mayer are not remembered by many. He continued to work as an actor, both on stage... and in films. His best known role is that of Dr. Matsumoto in Lang’s Spione. Pick made a single sound film, Gassenhauer, reportedly an experiment in asynchronous sound.

—Ann Harris

POLANSKI, Roman

Nationality: Polish. Born: Paris, 18 August 1933. Education: Krakow Liceum Sztuk Plastycznych (art school), 1950–53; State Film School, Lodz, 1954–59. Family: Married 1) actress Barbara Kwiatkowska, 1959 (divorced 1961); 2) actress Sharon Tate, 1968 (died 1969); 3) actress Emmanuelle Seigner, 1989. Career: Returned to Poland, 1936; actor on radio and in theatre, from 1945, and in films, from 1951; joined filmmaking group KAMERA as assistant to Andrzej Munk, 1959; directed first feature, Knife in the Water, 1962, denounced by Polish Communist Party chief Gomulka, funding for subsequent films denied, moved to Paris, 1963; moved to London, 1964, then to Los Angeles, 1968; wife Sharon Tate and three friends murdered in Bel Air, California, home by members of Charles Manson cult, 1969; opera director, from 1974; convicted by his own plea of unlawful sexual intercourse in California, 1977; committed to a diagnostic facility, Department of Correction; upon completion of study, returned to Paris; also stage actor and director. Awards: Silver Bear, Berlin Film Festival, for Repulsion, 1965; Golden Bear, Berlin Festival, for Cul-de-Sac, 1966; César Award, for Tess, 1980. Address: Lives in Paris.

Films as Director and Scriptwriter:

1955/57 Rower (The Bike) (short)
1957/58 Morderstwo (The Crime) (short)
1958 Rozbijemy zabawe (Break up the Dance) (short); Dwaj ludzie z szasa (Two Men and a Wardrobe) (short) (+ role)
1959 Gdy spadaja anioly (When Angels Fall) (short) (+ role as old woman)
1961 Le Gros et le maigre (The Fat Man and the Thin Man) (short) (co-sc, + role as servant)
1962 Ssaki (Mammals) (short) (co-sc, + role); Nóż w wodzie (Knife in the Water) (co-sc)
1963 ‘La Rivière de diamants’ (‘A River of Diamonds’) episode of Les Plus Belles Escroqueries du monde (The Most Beautiful Swindles in the World) (co-sc)
1964 Repulsion (co-sc)
1965 Cul-de-sac (co-sc)
1967 The Fearless Vampire Killers (Pardon Me, but Your Teeth Are in My Neck; Dance of the Vampires) (co-sc, + role as Alfred)
1968 Rosemary’s Baby
1972 Macbeth (co-sc)
1973 What? (Che?: Diary of Forbidden Dreams) (co-sc, + role as Mosquito)
1974 Chinatown (d only, + role as man with knife)
1976 Le Locataire (The Tenant) (co-sc, + role as Trelkovsky)
1979 Tess (co-sc)
1985 Pirates (co-sc)
1988 Frantic (co-sc)

Other Films:

1953 Trzy opowiesci (Three Stories) (Nalecki, Poleska, Petelski) (role as Maly)
1954 Pokolenie (A Generation) (Wajda) (role as Mundek)
1955 Zaczarowany rower (The Enchanted Bicycle) (Sternfeld) (role as Asad)
1956 Koniec wojny (End of the Night) (Dziedzina, Komorowski, Uszycka) (role as Maly)
1957 Wraki (Wrecks) (Petelski) (role)
1958 Zadzwonie do mojej zony (Phone My Wife) (Mach) (role)
1959 Lotta (Wajda) (role as bandsman)
1960 Niewinni czarodzieje (Innocent Sorcerors) (Wajda) (role as Dudzio); Ostroznije yeti (The Abominable Snowman) (Czeksiki) (role); Do Widzenia do Jutra (See You Tomorrow) (Morgenstern) (role as Romek); Zezowate szczescie (Bad Luck) (Munk) (role)
1964 Do You Like Women? (Léon) (co-sc)
1968 The Woman Opposite (Simon) (co-sc)
1969 A Day at the Beach (Hessera) (pr); The Magic Christian (McGrath) (role)
1972 Weekend of a Champion (Simon) (pr, role as interviewer)
1974 Blood for Dracula (Morrissey) (role as a villager)
1991 Back in the USSR (Serafian) (role as Kurilov)
1994 Gross Fatigue (role as himself)
1995 A Simple Formality (role as Inspector)
2000 Ljuset häller mig sällskap (Light Keeps Me Company) (Nykvist) (role as himself); Hommage à Alfred Lepetit (Tribute to Alfred Lepetit) (Rousselot) (role)

Publications

By POLANSKI: books—

By POLANSKI: articles—
Interview with Gretchen Weinberg, in Sight and Sound (London), Winter 1963/64.
Interview with Michel Delahaye and Jean Narboni, in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), January 1968.
“Polanski in New York,” an interview with Harrison Engle, in Film Comment (New York), Fall 1968.
Interview with Joel Reisner and Bruce Kane, in Cinema (Los Angeles), vol. 5, no. 2, 1969.
Roman Polanski

Interview, in The Film Director as Superstar, by Joseph Gelmis, Garden City, New York, 1970.

Interview with O. Darmon, in Cinématographe (Paris), May 1986.

“At the Point of No Return,” an interview with Rider McDowell, in California, August 1991.

Interview with Catherine Axelrad and Laurent Vachaud, in Positif (Paris), April 1995.

On POLANSKI: books—

On POLANSKI: articles—

Polanski Section of Kino (Warsaw), July 1986.
Polanski Section of Positif (Paris), May 1988.
locales, as well as to the sense of alienation and entrapment which consequently afflicts his characters. Brought to such strange and oppressive environments by the conditions of their culture (Chinatown), their own misunderstood urges (Repulsion), or some inexplicable fate (Macbeth), Polanski’s protagonists struggle to make the unnatural seem natural, to turn entrapment into an abode, although the result is typically tragic, as in the case of Macbeth, or absurd, as in Cul-de-sac. Such situations have prompted numerous comparisons, especially of Polanski’s early films, to the absurdist dramas of Samuel Beckett. As in many of Beckett’s plays, language and its inadequacy play a significant role in Polanski’s works, usually forming a commentary on the absence or failure of communication in modern society. The dramatic use of silence in Knife in the Water actually “speaks” more eloquently than much of the film’s dialogue of the tensions and desires which drive its characters and operate just beneath the personalities they try to project. In the conversational clichés and banality which mark much of the dialogue in Cul-de-sac, we can discern how language often serves to cloak rather than communicate meaning. The problem, as the director most clearly shows in Chinatown, is that language often simply proves inadequate for capturing and conveying the complex and enigmatic nature of the human situation. Detective Jake Gittes’s consternation when Evelyn Mulwray tries to explain that the girl he has been seeking is both her daughter and her sister—the result of an incestuous affair with a wife—points out this linguistic inadequacy for communicating the most discomfiting truths. It is a point driven home at the film’s end when, after Mrs. Mulwray is killed, Gittes is advised not to try to “say anything.” His inability to articulate the horrors he has witnessed ultimately translates into the symptomatic lapse into silence also exhibited by the protagonists of The Tenant and Tess, as they find themselves increasingly bewildered by the powerful driving forces of their own psyches and the worlds they inhabit.

Prompting this tendency to silence, and often cloaked by a proclivity for a banal language, is a disturbing force of violence which all of Polanski’s films seek to analyze—and for which they have frequently been criticized. Certainly, his own life has brought him all too close to this most disturbing impulse, for when he was only eight years old Polanski and his parents were interned in a German concentration camp where his mother died. In 1969 his wife Sharon Tate and several friends were brutally murdered by Charles Manson’s followers. The cataclysmic violence in the decidedly bloody adaptation of Macbeth, which closely followed his wife’s death, can be traced through all of the director’s features, as Polanski has repeatedly tried to depict the various ways in which violence erupts from the human personality, and to confront in this specter the problem of evil in the world.

The basic event of Rosemary’s Baby—Rosemary’s bearing the offspring of the devil, a baby whom she fears yet, because of the natural love of a mother for her own child, nurtures—might be seen as a paradigm of Polanski’s vision of evil and its operation in our world. Typically, it is the innocent or unsuspecting individual, even one with the best of intentions, who unwittingly gives birth to and spreads the very evil or violence he most fears. The protagonist of The Fearless Vampire Killers, for example, sets about destroying the local vampire and saving his beloved from its unnatural hold. In the process, however, he himself becomes a vampire’s prey and, as a concluding voice-over solemnly intones, assists in spreading this curse throughout the world.

It is a somber conclusion for a comedy, but a telling indication of the complex tone and perspective which mark Polanski’s films. He is able to assume an ironic, even highly comic attitude towards the ultimate and, as he sees it, inevitable human problem—an abiding violence and evil nurtured even as we individually struggle against these forces. The absurdist stance of Polanski’s short films, especially Two Men and a Wardrobe and The Fat and the Lean, represents one logical response to this paradox. That his narratives have grown richer, more complicated, and also more discomfiting in their examination of this situation attests to Polanski’s ultimate commitment to understanding the human predicament and to rendering articulate that which seems to defy articulation. From his own isolated position—as a man effectively without a country—Polanski tries to confront the problems of isolation, violence, and evil, and to speak of them for an audience prone to their sway.

After a highly publicized 1977 sex scandal resulted in his flight from the United States and subsequent exile, Polanski surprised many by doing an apparent about-face in terms of subject matter, and creating one of his most restrained and visually beautiful films: the aforementioned Tess. It was based on the classic Thomas Hardy novel of innocence destroyed, Tess of the D’Urbervilles. Polanski dedicated the movie to the memory of his murdered wife, Sharon Tate. Tess was followed by Pirates, a parody of the swashbuckling adventure films starring Errol Flynn that Polanski had enjoyed as a youth. Walter Matthau starred in the film as the comically villainous Captain Red, a role Polanski had written for Jack Nicholson. When Pirates failed at the box-office, Polanski returned to the cinema of fear with Frantic, a Hitchcock-style thriller with a Polanski touch, starring Harrison Ford. The story of a man inadvertently trapped in a nightmare situation in a foreign land, Frantic drew upon many of Polanski’s favorite themes. But as a cast, critical and commercial success, it failed to repeat the performance of his earlier fear-films. The master of psychological suspense was not to be counted out yet, though. In 1992, Polanski bounced back with the film his fans had been clamoring for for years—a potent and powerful synthesis of all the absurdist comedies, parodies, thrillers, fear-films, and detective yarns Polanski had made in the past: Bitter Moon. He followed it up with the taut and well-reviewed but only modestly successful Death and the Maiden. Roman Polanski’s importance as a filmmaker hinges upon a uniquely unsettling point of view. All his characters try continually, however clumsily, to connect with other human beings, to break out of their isolation and to free themselves of their alienation. Could it be that his nightmarish films serve much the same purpose? Perhaps they too are the continuing efforts of a terrified young Jewish boy, adrift in a war-torn land, to connect with the rest of humanity—even after all these years.

—J. P. Telotte, updated by John McCarty

POLLACK, Sydney

771
Sydney Pollack

Films as Director:

1965 The Slender Thread
1966 This Property Is Condemned
1968 The Swimmer (Perry) (d one sequence only); The Scalphunters 1969 Castle Keep; They Shoot Horses, Don’t They?
1972 Jeremiah Johnson
1973 The Way We Were
1975 Three Days of the Condor; The Yakuza (Brotherhood of the Yakuza) (+ pr)
1976 Bobby Deerfield (+ pr)
1979 Absence of Malice (+ pr)
1980 Honeysuckle Rose (Schatzberg) (exec pr)
1982 Tootsie (role as George Fields) (+ co-pr)
1983 Songwriter (Rudolph) (pr); Sanford Meisner—The Theater’s Best Kept Secret (doc) (exec pr)
1984 Bright Lights, Big City (Bridges) (pr)
1988 Presumed Innocent (Pakula) (pr); White Palace (Mandoki) (exec pr)
1990 The Player (Altman) (role); Death Becomes Her (role); Husbands and Wives (Allen) (role)
1993 Flesh and Bone (Kloves) (exec pr); Sense and Sensibility (Lee) (exec pr)
1998 Bronx County (Carter—for TV) (exec pr); Sliding Doors (Howitt) (pr); Poodle Springs (B. Rafelson—for TV) (exec pr); A Civil Action (Zaillian) (role)
1999 The Talented Mr. Ripley (Minghella) (exec pr)
2000 Up at the Villa (Haas) (exec pr)
2001 The Quiet American (Noyce) (pr)

Publications

By POLLACK: book—

By POLLACK: articles—

Interview with P. Carcassonne and J. Fieschi, in Cinématographe (Paris), March/April 1981.

Interview with T. Ryan and S. Murray, in Cinema Papers (Melbourne), May/June 1983.

Interview in Post Script (Jacksonville, Florida), Fall 1983.

Segnocinema (Vicenza), January/February 1994.

Other Films:

1961 The Young Savages (Frankenheimer) (dialogue coach)
1962 War Hunt (Sanders) (role as Sergeant Van Horn)
1963 Il gattopardo (The Leopard) (Visconti) (supervisor of dubbed American version)
1973 Scarecrow (Schatzberg) (pr)

On POLLACK: books—

On POLLACK: articles—

***

Sydney Pollack is especially noted for his ability to elicit fine performances from his actors and actresses and has worked with leading Hollywood stars, including Robert Redford (who has appeared in five Pollack films), Jane Fonda, Barbra Streisand, Dustin Hoffman, Paul Newman, and Burt Lancaster, among others. Though Pollack has treated a cross-section of Hollywood genres, the majority of his films divide into male-action dramas and female melodramas. Among the former are The Scalphunters, Castle Keep, Jeremiah Johnson, Three Days of the Condor, and The Yakuza. Among the latter are The Slender Thread, This Property Is Condemned, The Way We Were, and Bobby Deerfield. The typical Pollack hero is a loner whose past interferes with his ability to function in the present. Throughout the course of the narrative, the hero comes to trust another individual and exchanges his isolation for a new relationship. For the most part, Pollack’s heroines are intelligent women, often with careers, who possess moral strength, although in several cases they are victims of emotional weakness. Pollack is fond of portraying the attraction of opposites. The central issue in all of Pollack’s work focuses on the conflict between cultural antagonists. This can be racial, as in The Slender Thread, The Scalphunters, or Jeremiah Johnson (black vs. white; white vs. Indian); religious, as in The Way We Were (Protestant vs. Jew); geographic, as in This Property Is Condemned and The Electric Horseman (city vs. town); nationalistic, as in Castle Keep (Europe vs. America; East vs. West); or based on gender differences, as in Tootsie (feminine vs. masculine).

Pollack’s films do not possess a readily identifiable visual style. However, his works are generally noteworthy for their total visual effect, and he frequently utilizes the helicopter shot. Structurally the plots possess a circular form, often ending where they began. Visually this is echoed in the circular dance floor of They Shoot Horses, Don’t They?, but is also apparent in Jeremiah Johnson and The Way We Were. Along with Sidney Lumet, Pollack is one of Hollywood’s foremost liberals. His work highlights social and political issues, exposing organized exploitation rather than individual villainy. Most prominent among the issues treated are racial discrimination (The Scalphunters), the destructiveness of war (Castle Keep), the Depression (They Shoot Horses, Don’t They?), Hollywood blacklisting (The Way We Were), CIA activities (Three Days of the Condor), commercial exploitation (The Electric Horseman), media exploitation (Absence of Malice), and feminism (Tootsie). Although Pollack has often been attacked for using these themes as background, rather than delving deeply into their subtleties, the French critics, among others, hold his work in high esteem.

Over the years, Pollack’s cache in the Hollywood community has steadily risen. Unlike Lumet, to whom his work and directorial approach bear many similarities, he is not a New York director who occasionally works in Hollywood, but a Hollywood insider. His films make money and score multiple Oscar nominations. He is instantly forgiven for a failure like Havana, his sweeping attempt to recall the filmmaking styles of the Old Hollywood and such pictures as Casablanca. Because of all this, an American Film Institute Life Achievement Award cannot be long in coming for him. Pollack began his career as an actor and frequently appears, sometimes unbilled, in the films of other directors—though, ironically, not his own films a la Hitchcock (for whose legendary TV series Pollack both acted and directed). Woody Allen gave this former actor a particularly juicy part in Husbands and Wives. But Pollack prefers to direct, and with his standing in the industry he is able to command big budgets and big stars—and choice properties—for his work. His The Firm, based on the runaway best-seller by lawyer-turned-novelist John Grisham, and starring Tom Cruise, was a sizable hit, the film’s alteration of the book’s ending not even a minus with Grisham fans. His 1995 work, Sabrina, is, surprisingly, Pollack’s first outright romantic comedy, a remake of the 1954 Billy Wilder gem, with Harrison Ford, Julia Ormond, and Greg Kinnear taking the respective roles of Humphrey Bogart, Audrey Hepburn, and William Holden.

—Patricia Erens, updated by John McCarty

POLONSKY, Abraham

Nationality: American. Born: New York City, 5 December 1910. Education: City College of New York; Columbia University, law degree. Career: Lawyer with Manhattan firm, then quit to write; signed with Paramount, late 1930s; served in Europe with Office of Strategic Services (O.S.S.), World War II; moved to Enterprise Productions, 1947; directed first feature, 1948; spent year in France, 1949; signed with Twentieth Century-Fox, 1950; called to testify... before House Un-American Activities Committee (HUAC), invoked Fifth Amendment, 1951; blacklisted until 1968; also novelist. Died: 26 October 1999, in Beverly Hills, California, of heart attack.

Films as Director and Scriptwriter:

1948  Force of Evil
1970  Tell Them Willie Boy Is Here
1971  Romance of a Horsethief

Other Films:

1947  Golden Earrings (Leisen) (sc); Body and Soul (Rossen) (sc)
1951  I Can Get It for You Wholesale (Gordon) (sc)
1968  Madigan (Siegel) (sc)
1979  Avalanche Express (Robson) (sc)
1982  Monsignor (sc)
1991  Guilty by Suspicion (sc)

Publications

By POLONSKY: book—

You Are There Teleplays, West Hills, 1997.

Odds against Tomorrow, West Hills, 1999.

By POLONSKY: articles—

“Abraham Polonsky and Force of Evil,” an interview with William Pechter, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1962.

Interview in Interviews with Film Directors, by Andrew Sarris, New York, 1967.
Interview with William Pechter, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Winter 1968/69.
Interview with Jim Cook and Kingsley Canham, in Screen (London), Summer 1970.

How the Blacklist Worked, in Film Culture (New York), Fall/Winter 1970.

Making Movies, in Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1971.

On POLONSKY: articles—

Canham, Kingsley, “Polonsky,” in Film (London), Spring 1970.
Neve, Brian, “Fellow Traveller,” in Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1990.
Schultheiss, John, “A Season of Fear: The Blacklisted Teleplays of Abraham Polonsky,” in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury), April 1996.
Robinson, David, “The Unvanquished,” in Sight and Sound (London), June 1996.

* * *

Abraham Polonsky’s filmography is quite thin: his second film as director, Tell Them Willie Boy Is Here, was released twenty-one years after his first, Force of Evil. “I was a left-winger,” he told Look magazine in 1970. “I supported the Soviet Union. In the middle 1940s, we’d have meetings at my house to raise money for strikers and radical newspapers.” For these crimes—and, equally, for the less-than-superficially patriotic qualities of his protagonists—a promising, perhaps even major, directorial career was squelched in its infancy by the insidious Hollywood blacklist.

A discussion of Polonsky would be incomplete without noting his collaborations with John Garfield, the American cinema’s original anti-hero. Polonsky scripted Body and Soul, one of the best boxing films of all time, and both authored and directed Force of Evil, a “B film” ignored in its time, but now a cult classic highly regarded for its use of blank verse dialogue.

Garfield stars in Force of Evil as a lawyer immersed in the numbers racket. When his brother, a small-time gambler, is murdered by his gangster boss, he hunts the hood down and turns himself in to the police. In Body and Soul, the actor portrays a poor boy with a hard, knockout punch who rises in the fight game while alienating his family, friends, and the girl he loves. In the end he reforms, defying the mob by refusing to throw a fight. “What are you gonna do, kill me?” he chides the chief thug. “Everybody dies.” With that, he walks off into the night with his girl. The final cut of Body and Soul is as much Polonsky’s as it is director Robert Rossen’s. Polonsky claimed to have prevented Rossen from altering the film’s finale.

Both of Polonsky’s protagonists become casualties of their desire for success. They seek out the all-American dream, but are corrupted in the process. They can only attain status by throwing fights, aligning themselves with lawbreakers. Fame and money, fancy hotels and snazzy suits, come not by hard work and honesty but by cheating, throwing the fight, fixing the books—the real American way.

Polonsky, and Garfield, were blacklisted as much for the tone of their films as their politics. Polonsky’s heroes are cocky, cynical loner-losers, estranged from society’s mainstream, who break the rules and cause others extreme sorrow—not the moral, honest, often comic-book caricatures of American manhood that dominated Hollywood cinema. In addition, Polonsky created a character in Body and Soul, a washed-up boxer (lovingly played by Canada Lee), who was one of the earliest portraits of a black man as a human being with emotions and feelings, a man exploited. Body and Soul and Force of Evil played the nation’s moviehouses in 1947 and 1948, when anything less than a positive vision of America was automatically suspect.

Polonsky’s plight is particularly sad. His passport was revoked, and he could not escape to find work abroad. Years after others who had been blacklisted had returned to the good graces of the cinema establishment, he toiled in obscurity writing television shows and perhaps dozens of film scripts—some Academy Award winners—under assumed names. His first post-blacklist directorial credit, Willie Boy, is a spiritual cousin of his earlier work. It is the tale of a nonconformist Paiute Indian (Robert Blake, who played Garfield as a child in Humoresque), victimized by an insensitive society after he kills in self-defense. The parallels between Polonsky and his character’s fate are clear.

Before the blacklist, Polonsky had hoped to film Thomas Mann’s novella, Mario and the Magician; in 1971, he was again planning this project, among others. None was ever completed. But most significantly, the films that he might have made between 1948 and 1969—the prime years of his creative life—can now only be imagined.

—Rob Edelman

PONTECORVO, Gillo

Nationality: Italian. Born: Giliberto Pontecorvo in Pisa, 19 November 1919. Education: Studied chemistry, University of Pisa. Military Service: Journalist, and partisan fighter, Milan (commanded 3rd Brigade), World War II. Career: Youth secretary, Italian Communist Party, 1946; Paris correspondent for Italian journals, late 1940s; began in films as assistant to Yves Allegret on Les Miracles n’ont lieu qu’une fois, 1951; made ten shorts, 1953–55; left Communist Party following invasion of Hungary, 1956; organizer of Venice Film Festival. Awards: Golden Lion, Venice Festival, for The Battle of Algiers, 1966. Address: via Paolo Frisi 18, Rome, Italy.

Films as Director:

1955 ‘‘Giovanna’’ episode of Die Windrose
1957 La grande strada azzurra (La lunga strada azzurra; The Long Blue Road) (+ co-sc)
1960 Kapò (+ co-sc)
1966 La battaglia di Algeri (The Battle of Algiers) (+ co-sc, co-mus)
1969 Queimada (Burn!)
Gillo Pontecorvo (right) on the set of Queimada

1979  Ogro (Operation Ogro)
1988  The Devil’s Bishop
1997  Nostalgia di protezione (+ sc); Segment titled ‘‘Nostalgia di protezione’’ in I Corti italiani (+ sc)

Other Films:

1946  Il sole sorge ancora (Vergano) (role as partisan)

Publications

By PONTECORVO: articles—

Interview with Guy Hennebelle, in Cinéma (Paris), December 1965.
‘‘The Battle of Algiers: An Adventure in Filmmaking,’’ in American Cinematographer (Los Angeles), April 1967.
Interview with Joan Mellen, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Fall 1972.
‘‘Using the Contradictions of the System,’’ an interview with H. Kalishman, in Cineaste (New York), vol. 6, no. 2, 1974.

Interview with C. Lucas, in Cineaste (New York), Fall 1980.
‘‘Fest Topper’s Trip down Memory Lane,’’ an interview with David Rooney, in Variety, August 28, 1995.

On PONTECORVO: books—

On PONTECORVO: articles—

Wilson, David, ‘‘Politics and Pontecorvo,’’ in Sight and Sound (London), Fall 1970.
Young, Deborah, ‘‘Pontecorvo Roars into Role as Fest Chief,’’ in Variety, March 2, 1992.

* * *

Gillo Pontecorvo is concerned with the oppressed, those kept down by the unjust and cruel use of power—and who will eventually rebel against the oppressor. “I’ve always wanted to look at man during the hardest moments of his life,” the filmmaker has stated. An examination of his filmography indicates that he has been true to his goals and ideals. Kapò, for example, is the story of a young Jewish girl and her attempt to survive in a Nazi concentration camp. But Pontecorvo’s masterpiece is The Battle of Algiers, a meticulous recreation of the historical events surrounding the successful rebellion against the French by Algeria between 1954 and 1962.

Shot in authentic locales with both actors and non-professionals in a cinéma-vérité style, Pontecorvo’s black-and-white images seem like newsreels rather than staged sequences; the viewer can easily forget that the film is not a documentary. Additionally, the villains (chiefly the French Colonel Mathieu, played by Jean Martin) are not sadistic, one-dimensional imperialists, thugs and goons who abuse the rights of those they have colonized. While Mathieu is far from benevolent, he is believable and sympathetic, as much the victim of an exploitative society as the Algerians; the colonel even admits that the Algerians are destined to win—this is a lesson of history—and his job is just to temporarily put off the inevitable.

The same is true for the most visible tyrant in Burn!, Sir William Walker (Marlon Brando), a confused, self-destructive British adventurer who betrays the slaves who revolt on a Portuguese-controlled, sugar-producing Caribbean island in the mid-nineteenth century. Both Walker and Mathieu are depicted as human beings—with misguided values, perhaps, but human beings nonetheless. However, while The Battle of Algiers is a near-flawless film, the scenario of Burn! is muddled in that Walker’s motives are never really clear. Both films are potent politically in that the imperialists are not caricatured, yet at the same time it is clear that Pontecorvo sides with the Algerians and the slaves. At the beginning of The Battle of Algiers, for example, a tortured Algerian is held up by French para troopers. Despite all that follows, this sequence is in and of itself a political statement, one that sets the tone for all that follows.

Pontecorvo is a Marxist: in 1941, at the age of twenty-two, he became a member of the Italian Communist Party. His initial film, the “Giovanna” episode from Die Windrose, is a woman’s rights movie shot in East Germany. And, in The Battle of Algiers, he deals specifically with partisans of the Algerian National Liberation Front who, via their actions, increase the political awareness of their fellow citizens. Here Pontecorvo illustrates how a group of individuals can unite into a political force and defeat a common enemy. This is achieved by violent means: if freedom is to be earned, suffering and physical force and even the deaths of innocent people may be necessary. Gillo Pontecorvo is a filmmaker whose art is scrupulously true to his politics.

—Rob Edelman

PORTER, Edwin S.

Nationality: American. Born: Edwin Stratton Porter in Connellsville, Pennsylvania, 21 April 1869. Military Service: Served in U.S. Navy, assisted in development of gunnery range finder, 1893–96. Career: Left school at age fourteen, worked as sign painter, theater cashier, and stagehand; after military stint, worked for Raff & Gammon, marketers of Edison Vitacope; helped arrange first New York screening of motion pictures, 1896; invented and manufactured projector, 1898; business ruined by fire, rejoined Edison Company, 1900; director and cameraman, then supervisor of production at Edison studio, New York City; quit Edison, founded Defender Pictures, 1909; organized Rex Film Company, 1910; sold interest in Rex, founded “Famous Players in Famous Plays” company, 1912, with Adolph Zukor; director general and treasurer, supervisor and director at Famous Players until 1915; became president of Precision Machine Corp., manufacturer of Simplex projector, which he helped develop, from 1915. Died: 30 April 1941.

Films as Director:

(partial list, also frequently sc, ph and ed)

1899 The America’s Cup Race
1900 Why Mrs. Jones Got a Divorce; Animated Luncheon; An Artist’s Dream; The Mystic Swing; Ching Lin Foo Outdone; Faust and Marguerite; The Clown and the Alchemist; A Wringing Good Joke; The Enchanted Drawing
1901 Terrible Teddy the Grizzly King; Love in a Hammock; A Day at the Circus; What Demoralized the Barber Shop; The Finish of Bridget McKeen; Happy Hooligan Surprised; Martyred Presidents; Love by the Light of the Moon; Circular Panorama of the Electric Tower; Panorama of the Esplanade by Night; The Mysterious Café
1902 Uncle Josh at the Moving Picture Show; Charleston Chain Gang; Burlesque Suicide; Rock of Ages; Jack and the Beanstalk; Happy Hooligan Turns Burglar; Capture of the Biddle Brothers; Fun in a Bakery Shop
1903 The Life of an American Fireman; The Still Alarm; Arabian Jewish Dance; Razzle Dazzle; Seashore Frolics; Scenes in an Orphans’ Asylum; The Gay Shoe Clerk; The Baby Review; The Animated Poster; The Office Boy’s Revenge; Uncle Tom’s Cabin; The Great Train Robbery; The Messenger Boy’s Mistake; Casey and His Neighbor’s Goat
1904 The Ex-Convict; Cohen’s Advertising Scheme; European Rest Cure; Capture of Egg Bank Burglars; City Hall to Harlem in Fifteen Seconds via the Subway Route; Casey’s Frightful Dream; The Cop Fools the Sergeant; Elephant Shooting the Chutes at Luna Park
1905 The Kleptomaniac; Stolen by Gypsies; How Jones Lost His Roll; The Little Train Robbery; The White Caps; Seven Ages; The Life of an American Policeman
1906 The Dream of a Rarebit Fiend; The Life of a Cowboy; Three American Beauties; Kathleen Mavourneen
1907 Daniel Boone; Lost in the Alps; The Midnight Ride of Paul Revere; Laughing Gas; Rescued from an Eagle’s Nest; The Teddy Bears
1908  *Nero and the Burning of Rome; The Painter’s Revenge; The Merry Widow Waltz Craze; The Gentleman Burglar; Honesty Is the Best Policy; Love Will Find a Way; Skinny’s Finish; The Face on the Barroom Floor; The Boston Tea Party; Romance of a War Nurse; A Voice from the Dead; Saved by Love; She; Lord Feathertop; The Angel Child; Miss Sherlock Holmes; An Unexpected Santa Claus

1909  *The Adventures of an Old Flirt; A Midnight Supper; Love Is Blind; A Cry from the Wilderness; Hard to Beat; On the Western Frontier; Fuss and Feathers; Pony Express; Toys of Fate; The Iconoclast; Hansel and Gretel; The Strike; Capital versus Labor

1910  *All on Account of a Laundry Mark; Russia—the Land of Oppression; Too Many Girls; Almost a Hero; The Toymaker on the Brink and the Devil

1911  *By the Light of the Moon; On the Brink; The White Red Man; Sherlock Holmes Jr.; Lost Illusions

1912  *A Sane Asylum; Eyes That See Not; The Final Pardon; Taming Mrs. Shrew

1913  *The Prisoner of Zenda (co-d); His Neighbor’s Wife; The Count of Monte Cristo (co-d); In the Bishop’s Carriage (co-d); A Good Little Devil (co-d)

1914  *Hearts Adrift; Tess of the Storm Country; Such a Little Queen (co-d)

1915  *The Eternal City (co-d); Zaza (co-d); Sold (co-d); The Prince and the Pauper (co-d); Bella Donna (co-d)

1916  *Lydia Gilmore (co-d)

Publications

By PORTER: article—

On PORTER: books—

On PORTER: articles—

Turconi, Davide, “Hie sunt leones: The First Decade of American Film Comedy, 1894–1903,” in Griﬃthiana (Gemona), September 1996.

On PORTER: film—

* * *

In the annals of film history, Edwin S. Porter is often credited as the first American film director. Although this may not be true in the literal sense, it is not unjustified to give Porter this title. Porter was first and foremost an engineer, an inventor, and a cameraman. In the early days of filmmaking, “cameraman” was synonymous with “director,” and Porter found himself handling both jobs. As his own editor, he also discovered new ways of creating a narrative. While most early motion pictures were composed of a single shot showing only one continuous action from beginning to end, Porter began to combine and juxtapose his filmed images, creating new meanings as one scene “psychologically” led into another. Porter became one of the first American directors to tell a story in his films.

Porter acknowledged an influence in his filmmaking from Georges Méliès, the French filmmaker whose “trick films” were extremely popular in the United States. A designer of motion picture cameras, Porter was able to study and discover the secrets to many of Méliès’s “tricks.” Most importantly, Porter was struck by the fact that these films told a story. However, while Méliès’s films told a straightforward, linear narrative, Porter expanded this idea with the use of cross-narrative (parallel action) to depict two simultaneous events or points of view.

Porter’s first film of major importance was The Life of an American Fireman, made in 1902 or early 1903. This film was largely composed of stock shots from earlier Edison Company films. Racing fire engines were a popular subject for early filmmakers and Porter had much footage at his disposal. To complement these stock shots, Porter filmed additional footage that depicted a mother and child trapped in a burning building. By editing these scenes together Porter created the story of the mother and child’s rescue by the firefighters. Porter intercut the scenes of mother and child with stock footage of the racing fire engines, thereby creating a dramatic tension—will the firefighters rescue the two victims from the burning building in time? While this technique of storytelling may seem blasé by today’s standards, it was innovative and exciting to 1903 audiences.

Porter continued to develop his film editing techniques in his best known and most popular film, The Great Train Robbery. On its most simplistic level, the film is a story of crime, pursuit, and capture. But it is perhaps the first great American chase film, a form still popular today. Again Porter edited his film using cross-cutting to show events that were supposedly occurring at the same time: the bandits begin their escape while the posse organizes a pursuit. The Great Train Robbery was an enormously popular film at a time when nickelodeons were just opening across the country, and the film did a great deal of repeat business.
Surprisingly, after The Great Train Robbery, Porter did little else to advance the art of filmmaking. In 1912 he formed the Famous Players Film Co. with Adolph Zukor and David Frohman, acting as director-general of the company. However, his films of this period (such as The Count of Monte Cristo and The Prisoner of Zenda) contain none of the energy of his earlier films. In fact, they took several steps backward technically, for they were photographed in a very stagy, single point-of-view manner. Apparently, Porter was never really interested in directing films. He soon sold his shares in Famous Players and became more involved in designing motion picture cameras and projectors, including the Simplex. Still, Porter’s one important contribution to filmmaking—a freer style of editing—was a turning point in the development of film as a narrative art form.

—Linda J. Obalil

POWELL, Michael, and Emeric PRESSBURGER

Films by Powell and Pressburger:

(Powell as director, Pressburger as scriptwriter)

1939 The Spy in Black (U-Boat)
1940 Contraband (Blackout)
1941 49th Parallel (The Invaders)
1942 One of Our Aircraft Is Missing
1947 A Canterbury Tale

(produced, directed and scripted by “The Archers”)

1943 The Life and Death of Colonel Blimp: The Volunteer
1944 A Canterbury Tale

1945 I Know Where I’m Going
1946 A Matter of Life and Death (Stairway to Heaven)
1947 Black Narcissus
1948 The Red Shoes
1949 The Small Back Room (Hour of Glory)
1950 Gone to Earth (The Wild Heart); The Elusive Pimpernel (The Fighting Pimpernel)
1951 The Tales of Hoffmann
1955 Oh! Rosalinda (Fledermaus ’55)
1956 The Battle of the River Plate (Pursuit of the Graf Spee); Ill Met by Moonlight (Intelligence Service; Night Ambush)

Other Films Directed by Powell:

1931 Two Crowded Hours; My Friend the King; Rynox; The Rasp; The Star Reporter
1932 Hotel Splendide; C.O.D.; His Lordship; Born Lucky
1933 The Fire-Raisers (+ co-sc)
1934 The Night of the Party; Red Ensign (+ co-sc); Something Always Happens; The Girl in the Crowd
1935 Lazybones; The Love Test; The Phantom Light; The Price of a Song; Someday
1936 The Man behind the Mask; Crown versus Stevens; Her Last Affair; The Brown Wallet
1937 Edge of the World (+ sc)
1939 The Lion Has Wings (co-d)
1940 The Thief of Bagdad (co-d)
1941 An Airman’s Letter to His Mother (short)
1955 The Sorceror’s Apprentice (short)
1956 Luna de miel (Honeymoon) (+ pr)
1960 Peeping Tom (+ pr, role)
1961 Queen’s Guards (+ pr)
1964 Bluebeard’s Castle
1966 They’re a Weird Mob (+ pr)
1968 Sebastian (Greene) (co-pr only)
1969 Age of Consent (+ pr)
1974 Trikimia (The Tempest) (+ pr, sc)
1978 Return of the Edge of the World (doc for television) (+ pr)

Other Films Written By Pressburger:

1953 Twice upon a Time (+ d, pr)
1957 Miracle in Soho (Amyes) (+ pr)

Publications

By POWELL: books—

By PRESSBURGER: books—

Killing a Mouse on Sunday, London, 1961

By POWELL and PRESSBURGER: articles—

“Michael Powell’s Guilty Pleasures,” in Film Comment (New York), July/August 1981.
Powell interview with T. Williams, in Films and Filming (London), November 1981.

Interview with Paul Harris and John Flaus, in Filmnews, vol. 20, no. 2, March 1990.

On POWELL and PRESSBURGER: books—

On POWELL and PRESSBURGER: articles—

Christie, I., “Michael Powell after and before the Archers,” in Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1990.

DeKock, I., in Film en Televisie (Brussels), April 1990.

On POWELL and PRESSBURGER: film—

* * *

Between the years 1942 and 1957, English director Michael Powell and his Hungarian partner, Emeric Pressburger, formed one of the most remarkable partnerships in cinema. Under the collaborative pseudonym “The Archers,” the two created a series of highly visual and imaginative treatments of romantic and supernatural themes that have defied easy categorization by film historians. Although both were listed jointly as director, screenwriter, and frequently as producer, and the extent of each one’s participation on any given film is difficult to measure, it is probably most accurate to credit Powell with the actual visualization of the films, while Pressburger functioned primarily as a writer. The latter, in fact, had no background as a director before joining Powell. He had drifted through the Austrian, German, and French film industries as a screenwriter before traveling to England in 1936.

Many of the gothic, highly expressionistic characteristics of the films produced by the partnership seem to trace their origins to Powell’s apprenticeship at Rex Ingram’s studio in Nice in the 1920s. There he performed various roles on at least three of the visionary director’s silent productions: Mare Nostrum (1926), The Magician (1926), and The Garden of Allah (1927). Working on these films and subsequently on his own features in the 1930s, Powell developed a penchant for expressionism that manifested itself in several rather unique ways. The most fundamental of these was in his use of the fantasy genre, as illustrated by A Matter of Life and Death, with its problematic juxtaposition of psychiatry and mysticism. Another manifestation was an almost philosophical sadism that permeated his later films, such as Peeping Tom, with a camera that impales its photographic subjects on bayonet-like legs. The mechanical camera itself, in fact, represents still another Powell motif: the use of machines and technology to create or heighten certain aspects of fantasy. For example, the camera obscura in A Matter of Life and Death and the German warship in the Pursuit of the Graf Spee (which is revealed through a slow camera scan along its eerie structure, causing it to turn into a metallic killer fish) effectively tie machines into each film’s set of symbolic motifs. In doing so, a technological mythology is created in which these objects take on near-demonic proportions.

Finally, the use of color, which most critics cite as a trademark of the Powell-Pressburger partnership, is shaped into an expressionistic mode. Powell chose his hues from a broad visual palette, and brushed them onto the screen with a calculated extravagance that became integrated into the themes of the film as a whole. In the better films, the visual and technological aspects complement each other in a pattern of symbolism. The mechanical staircase which descends from the celestial vortex in A Matter of Life and Death, for example, blends technology and fantasy as no other image has. Similarly, when the camera replaces the young pilot’s eye in the same film and the pink and violet lining of an eyelid descends over it, the effect is extravagant, even a bit bizarre, but it effectively serves notice that the viewer is closing his eyes to external reality and entering another world. The audience is left to decide whether that world is supernatural or psychological.

This world has been most palatable in popular Powell-Pressburger fantasies like The Red Shoes, a ballet film used as an allegory for the
Otto Preminger

Nationality: American. Born: Vienna, 5 December 1905, became U.S. citizen, 1943. Education: University of Vienna, LL.D, 1926. Family: Married 1) Marion Deutsch (stage name Marion Mill), 1932 (divorced); 2) Mary Gardner, 1951 (divorced 1959); 3) Hope (Preminger), 1960, two children; also one son by Gypsy Rose Lee.

Films as Director:

1931 Die grosse Liebe
1936 Under Your Spell
1937 Danger, Love at Work
1943 Margin for Error (+ role as Nazi consul Rudolf Forster)
1944 In the Meantime, Darling (+ pr); Laura (+ pr)
1945 Royal Scandal; Fallen Angel (+ pr)
1946 Centennial Summer (+ pr)
1947 Forever Amber; Daisy Kenyon (+ pr)
1948 That Lady in Ermine
1949 The Fan (Lady Windermere’s Fan) (+ pr); Whirlpool (+ pr)
1950 Where the Sidewalk Ends (+ pr); The Thirteenth Letter (+ pr)
1952 Angel Face
1953 The Moon Is Blue (+ co-pr)
1954 River of No Return; Carmen Jones (+ pr)
1955 The Man with the Golden Arm (+ pr); The Court Martial of Billy Mitchell (One-Man Mutiny)
1957 Saint Joan (+ pr); Bonjour Tristesse (+ pr)

Career: Actor with Max Reinhardt company, 1924; joined theater in der Josefstadt, 1928 (succeeding Reinhardt as director, 1933); invited to Hollywood by Joseph Schenck, 1935; contract with Fox broken, moved to New York, 1937; director on Broadway, 1938–41 (and later); returned to Hollywood as actor, 1942; signed seven-year contract with Fox, 1945; independent producer, from early 1950s. Died: Of cancer, in New York City, 23 April 1986.

Themeatically, Powell and Pressburger operate in a limbo somewhere between romance and realism. The former, characterized by technical effects, camera angles and movements, and the innovative use of color, often intrudes in the merest of details in fundamentally naturalistic films. In the eyes of some, this weakens the artistic commitment to realism. On the other hand, the psychological insights embodied in serious fantasies like A Matter of Life and Death are too often dismissed as simply entertainment. Most of the Powell-Pressburger efforts are, in fact, attempts at fundamental reconciliations between modern ideas and the irrational, between science and savagery, or between religion and eroticism. This dichotomy usually occurs in one character’s mind—as with Peter Carter in A Matter of Life and Death or the sex-obsessed nun in Black Narcissus—and hinges upon a second character such as A Matter of Life and Death’s Dr. Frank Reeves, who effects a degree of movement between the two sides of the dichotomy, particularly through his own death.

Although such mergings of reality and fantasy met with approval by the moviegoing public, Powell and Pressburger were less successful with the British film establishment. In a sense they were alienated from it through their exercise of a decidedly non-British flamboyance. To some degree, the Clive Candy character in The Life and Death of Colonel Blimp embodies the British film community during the period after the war. Powell and Pressburger’s visual and thematic extravagances of style conflicted with the self-consciousness of the film industry’s strivings for a rigid postwar realism not to be embellished by colorful and expressionistic ventures.

The team broke up in 1957 after Ill Met by Moonlight, and although Pressburger subsequently made some films by himself, they were not well received. Powell, though, continued in the vein established by his collaboration with the Hungarian director. Luna de Miel and The Queen’s Guards pursue all of the philosophical concerns of his earlier efforts, while Peeping Tom, which is now regarded as his masterpiece, indicates a certain morbid refinement of his thematic interests. Unfortunately, the film was perhaps ahead of its time—a problem that plagued the director and his collaborator for most of their careers.

—Stephen L. Hanson
1959  Porgy and Bess; Anatomy of a Murder (+ pr)
1960  Exodus (+ pr)
1962  Advise and Consent (+ pr)
1963  The Cardinal (+ pr)
1964  In Harm's Way (+ pr)
1965  Bunny Lake Is Missing (+ pr)
1966  Hurry Sundown (+ pr)
1968  Skiddoo (+ pr)
1970  Tell Me That You Love Me, Junie Moon (+ pr)
1971  Such Good Friends (+ pr)
1975  Tell Me That You Love Me, Junie Moon (+ pr)

Other Films:

1942  The Pied Piper (role); They Got Me Covered (role)
1945  Where Do We Go from Here (role)
1953  Stalag 17 (Wilder) (role as camp commandant)
1981  Unsere Leichen Leben Noch (Von Prauheim) (role)

Publications

By PREMINGER: book—

By PREMINGER: articles—

Interview with Ian Cameron and others, in Movie (London), Summer 1965.

Interview in Interviews with Film Directors, edited by Andrew Sarris, New York, 1967.

Interview with Gene Phillips, in Focus on Film (London), August 1979.

On PREMINGER: books—

On PREMINGER: articles—

“Preminger Issue” of Movie (London), September 1962.

Sarris, Andrew, “Preminger’s Two Periods—Studio and Solo,” in Film Comment (New York), Summer 1965.

Castoro Cinema (Milan), special section, no. 145, January-February 1990.

Mensuel du Cinéma (Paris), special section, no. 5, April 1993.

* * *

The public persona of Austrian-born Otto Preminger has epitomized for many the typical Hollywood movie director: an accented, autocratic, European-born disciplinarian who terrorized his actors, bullied his subordinates, and spent millions of dollars to ensure that his films be produced properly, although economically. Before the Cahiers du Cinéma critics began to praise Preminger, it may have been this public persona, more than anything else, which impeded an appreciation of Preminger’s extraordinarily subtle style or thematic consistencies.

Preminger’s career can be divided into two periods. Throughout the first period, Preminger worked as a studio director for Twentieth Century-Fox, where he had several well-publicized conflicts with Darryl F. Zanuck and found it difficult to conform to studio demands or to collaborate without retaining overall artistic control. His evocative and romantic mystery Laura, his breakthrough film, was produced during this period. Among the other eclectic assignments he directed at Fox, the most interesting include a series of film noir features in the late 1940s: Whirlpool, Where the Sidewalk Ends, The Thirteenth Letter, and Angel Face. Throughout the second and far more interesting period of Preminger’s career, he worked as one of the first notable independent producer-directors, in the process successfully undermining the studio system in various ways. He fought against institutional censorship by releasing several films without the Motion Picture Association seal (for example, The Moon is Blue) and he explored controversial subjects the studios might have been hesitant to touch (such as criticism of the War Department in The Court Martial of Billy Mitchell or homosexuality in Advise and Consent). Preminger also championed the independent producers movement by exploiting the Paramount Divorcement Decree and aggressively marketing and arranging exhibition for his films.

Preminger incorporated fresh and authentic backgrounds by promoting location shooting away from Hollywood. He worked diligently to discover new performers (such as Jean Seberg) and to develop properties (such as Carmen Jones and Hurry Sundown) which would allow the casting of Hollywood’s under-used black performers. Finally, he even helped to break the studio blacklist by hiring and publicly crediting Dalton Trumbo as screenwriter on Exodus. Preminger’s tastes have always been as eclectic as the disparate sources from which his films have been adapted. Throughout the 1950s and 1960s, however, Preminger’s films grew in pretention, displaying considerable interest in monolithic institutions (the military in The Court Martial of Billy Mitchell and In Harm’s Way; the Senate in Advise and Consent; the Catholic Church in The Cardinal; the medical profession in Such Good Friends) as well as the examination of social and political problems (drug addiction in Man with the Golden Arm; Jewish repatriation in Exodus; racial prejudice in Hurry, Sundown; political terrorism in Rosebud). A consistent archetype in Preminger’s films is the quest for truth; indeed, the director’s recurring image is the courtroom.

What has especially fascinated Preminger’s admirers is the subtlety of his mise-en-scène; his most typical effort is a widescreen film with long takes, no pyrotechnical montage, few reaction shots, fluid and simple camera movements, and careful yet unselfconscious compositions. Preminger’s style, though apparently invisible, is one which forces the audience to examine, to discern, to arrive at some ultimate position. Several critics have written persuasively on the ultimate position. Several critics have written persuasively on the ambiguity associated with Preminger’s apparent objectivity, including Andrew Sarris, who has characterized Preminger as a “director who sees all problems and issues as a single-take two-shot, the stylistic expression of the eternal conflict, not between right and wrong, but between the right-wrong on one side and the right-wrong on the other, a representation of the right-wrong in all of us as our share of the human condition.”

If Preminger’s formula floundered in the 1970s and 1980s, an era in which the American cinema seemed dominated by mainstream genre works and overt escapism, one cannot help but feel nostalgia and profound respect for Preminger’s serious subjects and artistry. Indeed, his series of films beginning with Bonjour, Tristesse in 1957 and continuing through Porgy and Bess, Anatomy of a Murder, Exodus, Advise and Consent, The Cardinal, In Harm’s Way, Bunny Lake Is Missing, and Hurry, Sundown in 1966, constitute one of the longest strings of ambitious, provocative films in American cinema.

—Charles Derry

PRESSBINTER, Emeric

See Powell, Michael, and Emeric Pressburger

PROTAZANOV, Yakov

Nationality: Russian. Born: Yakov Alexandrovitch Protazanov in Moscow, 4 February 1881. Education: Commercial school, Moscow. Career: Film actor, from 1905; translator, then writer of scenarios and director, Gloria studios, from 1909; moved to Ermoliev company, began collaboration with actor Ivan Mozukhkin, 1915; Ermoliev studios moved to Yalta, 1918, then to Istanbul and Marseilles, 1919–20; moved to Paris, worked in France and Germany, 1920–22; returned to Russia, joined Mezhrabpom-Rus Studio, Moscow, 1923. Awards: Merited Artist of the RSFSR, 1935. Died: In Moscow, 8 August 1945.

Films as Director:

1909 The Fountains of Bakhisarai
1911 Pesnya katorzhanina (The Prisoner’s Song) (+ sc)
1912 Anfisa; Ukhoed velikovo startza (Departure of a Grand Old Man) (co-d)
1913 Razbitaya vaza (The Shattered Vase) (+ sc); Klyuchi shchastya (Keys to Happiness) (co-d); Kak khoroshi, Kak svezhi byli rozi (How Fine, How Fresh the Roses Were) (+ sc)
1915 Petersburgskie trashchobbi (Petersburg Slums) (co-d, co-sc); Voina i mir (War and Peace) (co-d, co-sc); Plebei (Plebian) (+ sc); Nikolai Stavrogin (+ sc)
1916 Pikovaya dama (The Queen of Spades); Zhenshchina s kinzhalom (Woman with a Dagger); Grekh (Sin) (co-d)
1917 Prokurator (Public Prosecutor); Andrei Kozhukhov (+ sc); Ne nado krovi (Blood Need Not Be Spilled) (+ sc); Prokliatiye millioni (Cursed Millions); Satana ikuyashchii (Satan Triumphant)
1918 Oets Sergii (Father Sergius)
1919 Taina korolevy (The Queen’s Secret) (+ sc)
1920/23 L’angoissante aventure; L’Amour et la loi (Love and Law); Pour une nuit d’amour; Justice d’Abord; Le Sens de la mort; L’Ombre du pêché; Der Liebes Pielgerfahrt
1924 Aelita
1925 Yevo prizyv (Broken Chains; His Call); Zakroichikh iz Torzhka (Tailor from Torzhok)
1926 Protest o tryokh millyonakh (The Three Million Case) (+ co-sc)
1927 Sorok peryvi (The 41st)
1928 Byelyi orel (The White Eagle) (+ co-sc); Dondiego i Pelagaya (Don Diego and Pelagea)
1929 Chiny i liudi (Ranks and People) (+ co-sc); The Man from the Restaurant
1930 Prazdnik svyatovo Iorgena (The Feast of St Jorgen) (+ sc)
1931 Tommy (+ sc)
1934 Marionetki (Marionettes)
1937 Bespridannitsa (Without Dowry) (+ co-sc)
1938 Pupils of the Seventh Grade
1941 Salavat Yulayev
1943 Nasreddin v Bukhare (Nasreddin in Bukhara)
Publications

On PROTAZANOV: books—

Yakov Protazanov, Moscow, 1957.

Lebedev, Nikolai, Il cinema muto sovietico, Turin, 1962.

On PROTAZANOV: articles—

Alisova, N., “Priobzhenie k poesii,” in Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), April 1973.

Raizman, Yuli, and others, “Protazanov,” in Soviet Film (Moscow), no. 6, 1981.

Vajsfel’d, I., and others, “Effect Protazanova,” in Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), August 1981.

As a pioneer of the czarist cinema, as a director who filmed in Moscow, Yalta, Paris, and Berlin, and as one who worked under various social systems and managed to survive, Yakov Protazanov has a unique place in the story of the Russian cinema.

Originally intended for a commercial career, Protazanov fell under the spell of films and began his apprenticeship with Gloria Films, later to become Thiemann and Reinhardt, in Moscow. The cinema in Russia had been socially acceptable from the beginning and enjoyed the patronage of imperial circles. From script-writing and acting Protazanov moved into directing. In 1911 he made Pesnya katorzhanina (The Prisoner’s Song) with Vladimir Shaternikov, an actor he was to use many times. The following year Andreyev scripted for him an adaptation of his play Anfisa. The same year he made Ukhd velikovo startza (The Departure of a Grand Old Man), thereby antagonising Countess Tolstoy, who objected to the depiction of her husband as played by Shaternikov. The film was subsequently banned. A happier venture was Klyuchishchastya (Keys to Happiness), written by a popular novelist, A. Verbitskaya. The wide appeal of this film made it a great box-office success throughout Russia.

By the time of World War I, Protazanov had directed some forty films covering a wide range of material, from the perfidiv, morbid, and even decadent themes so popular in Russia at the time to historical spectacles and films based on the literary heritage of his country. In Kak khoroshi, kak svezhi byti rosii (How Fine, How Fresh the Roses Were) of 1913 he was inspired by Turgenev. He utilized Shaternikov once again in the film, casting him as Lev Tolstoy.

After his experiences as a soldier Protazanov joined the Ermoliev Company, as did his former colleague Vladimir Gardin. In 1915 they shared the direction of the elaborate Voina i mir (War and Peace) and a serial called Petersburgskiye trushchobi (Petersburg slums), while Protazanov directed a version of Strindberg’s Froken Julie under the title Plebei (Plebian). In these three films the lead was taken by Olga Preobrazhenskaya, herself to become a director of distinction in later years.

Ermoliev’s greatest actor was Ivan Mozhukhin, whose knowledge and interest in the whole field of cinema transcended his interpretive skills. Protazanov directed him in Nikolai Stavrogin (based on Dostoievsky) in 1915 and the following year in Pikovaya dama (The Queen of Spades). The latter film was a milestone in Mozhukin’s career. The script, incidentally, was written by a young Fedor Otsep. Other important Protazanov films with Mozhukin were Prokuror (Public Prosecutor), Satana likuyushchi (Satan Triumphant), Andrei Kozhukov, and Otets Sergii (Father Sergius). The last film is undoubtedly his masterpiece. Tolstoy’s story of the spiritual struggles of a young officer of the Imperial Court who gives up a life of pleasure to become a monk was a tour de force for Mozhukin. The actor’s transition from youth to age, the authenticity of the settings, and the cohesion of the film help to make it one of the great classics of the cinema.

On a very different level was Taina korolevoi (The Queen’s Secret), a film based on a novel by Elinor Glynn that again featured Mozhukin. This work was filmed in Moscow and Yalta, for with the coming of the Revolution many film artists fled to the south. Ermoliev transferred his studio to Yalta, bringing all his equipment, technicians, and artists with him. Here Protazanov made three films, but political unrest soon made work impossible. Ermoliev and all his people embarked on a British ship at Odessa which took them to Constantinople, where Protazanov continued with the direction of the film L’angoissante Aventure, from a script by Mozhukin. This ambulatory film went on from Constantinople to Marseilles and Paris, where Ermoliev’s production continued at Melies’ old studio at Monteuil. In spite of the circumstances under which it was made, L’angoissante Aventure was a quite ingenious comedy that effectively utilized the diverse talents of Mozhukin. The film ranged from comedy to tragedy, but was resolved by the typically Russian device of being a dream.

Protazanov’s Justice d’Abord was a remake of Prokuror, but he broke away from Ermoliev and his company. He adapted novels by Zola and Paul Bourget before going to Berlin, where he made Liebes Pilgerfahrt. Invited back to Russia to make a film of Taras Bulba, he instead directed Aelita for Mezhbrapomb-Russ. This fantasy, in which life on Mars is compared with contemporary Russia, featured extraordinary sets by Alexandra Exter of the Kamenny Theatre. Yevro prizvy (His Call) was released the following year. A propaganda film with a human face, the work showed that Protazanov was still his own man. Protsess o tryoch millyonakh (The Three Million Case) of 1926 and subsequent films like Sorok pervyi (The 41st), Byelyi orel (The White Eagle), Dondiego i Pelaguya (a satiric comment on bureaucracy), Chiny i Liudi (Ranks and People, a compendium of three Chekhov stories), and Prazdnik svyatovo Iorgena (The Feast of St Jorgen, a satirical anti-religious film) all established him as an artist who could hold his own with the new young school of Russian film directors.

In Sorok pervyi, a story of the fighting in Turkestan, a young girl partisan is torn between love and duty and has to kill a young White officer, the only man she ever loved. Set in a memorable landscape of sandy desert, the film develops with a powerful impact. Tommy, which was released in 1931, was Protazanov’s first sound film. It tells of a British soldier’s reaction to a group of partisans.

A recipient of official honours, Protazanov continued to be regarded as an outstanding creative artist, and many of his films were set in far-flung locations in outlying Soviet republics. When the centre of Soviet film production moved to Alma Ata in the Urals.
during the German invasion of Russia in World War II, Protazanov moved with it. His last film, though, was filmed on location in Uzbekistan. Nazreddin ve Bukhare (Nazreddin in Bukhara) was a delightful comedy that featured Meyerhold’s great actor Lev Sverdlin in the title role, where he gave a performance reminiscent of Fairbanks’ in Thief of Bagdad. When Protazanov died in 1945 he was working on a script based on a play by Ostrovsky. A prolific creator of films, he remains known as a great man of the cinema.

—Liam O’Leary

PUDOVKIN, Vsevolod

Nationality: Russian. Born: Vsevolod Illarionovitch Pudovkin in Penza, 16 February 1893. Education: Educated in physics and chemistry, Moscow University; entered State Cinema School, 1920. Military Service: Enlisted in artillery, 1914; wounded and taken prisoner, 1915; escaped and returned to Moscow, 1918. Family: Married actress and journalist Anna Zemtsova, 1923. Career: Worked as writer and chemist, 1919–20; worked on agit films, 1920–21; student at Lev Kuleshov’s studio, from 1922; quit State Cinema Institute to join Kuleshov’s Experimental Laboratory, 1923; began collaboration with cinematographer Anatoly Golovnia and scriptwriter Nathan Zarkhi, 1925; with Alexandrov, signed Eisenstein’s ‘Mani-

Films as Director:

1921 Golod . . . golod . . . golod (Hunger . . . Hunger . . . Hunger) (co-d, co-sc, role)

1925 Shakhmatnaya goryachka (Chess Fever) (co-d)

1926 Mekhanikha golovnovo mozga (Mechanics of the Brain) (+ sc); Mat (Mother)

1927 Konyets Sankt-Peterburga (The End of St. Petersburg)

1928 Potomok Chingis-khan (The Heir to Genghis-Khan; Storm Over Asia)

1932 Prostoi sluchai (A Simple Case); revised version of Otchen kharacho dziviosta (Life’s Very Good); first screened in 1930

1933 Dezertir (Deserter)

1938 Pobeda (Victory) (co-d)

1939 Minin i Pozharsky (co-d)

1940 Kino za XX liet (Twenty Years of Cinema) (co-d, co-ed)

1941 Ubitzi vykhodyat na dorogu (Murderers Are on Their Way) (co-d, co-sc)

1942 Vo imya rodini (In the Name of the Fatherland) (co-d)

1943 Amiral Nakhimov (Admiral Nakhimov)

1946 Tri vstrechi (Three Encounters) (co-d)

1950 Yukovsky (co-d)

1953 Vozvrachenia Vassilya Bortnikov (The Return of Vasily Borkin)

Other Films:

1920 V dni borbi (In the Days of Struggle) (role)

1921 Serp i molot (Sickle and Hammer) (ass’t d, role)

1923 Slesar i kantzler (Locksmith and Chancellor) (co-sc)

1924 Neobychainye priklucheniya Mistera Vesta v stranye bolshevikov (Extraordinary Adventures of Mr. West in the Land of the Bolsheviks) (Kuleshov) (co-sc, asst, role as the ‘’Count’’)

1925 Luch smerti (The Death Ray) (Kuleshov) (design, role); Kirpitchiki (Little Bricks) (role)

1928 Zhivoi trup (A Living Corpse) (role as Feodor Protassov)

1929 Vessiolaiia kanareika (The Cheerful Canary) (role as shop assistant)

1944 Ivan Grozny (Ivan the Terrible) (Eisenstein) (role as Nikolai the fanatic)

Publications

By PUDOVKIN: books—

Film Technique, translated by Ivor Montagu, London, 1933.
Film Technique and Film Acting, New York, 1949.
Textes choisis, Moscow, 1955.
Sobranie sochinenii v trekh tomakh, Moscow, 1974.
By PUDOVKIN: articles—

“Scénario et mise en scène,” in Revue du Cinéma (Paris), 1 September 1930.

“A Conversation with V.I. Pudovkin,” with Marie Seton, in Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1933.

On PUDOVKIN: books—

Bryher, Winifred, Film Problems of Soviet Russia, London, 1929.

Mariamov, A., Vsevolod Pudovkin, Moscow, 1952.

Dart, Peter, Pudovkin’s Films and Film Theory, New York, 1974.

On PUDOVKIN: articles—

Potamkin, Harry, “Pudovkin and the Revolutionary Film,” in Hound and Horn (New York), April/June 1933.

Pudovkin Section of Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), February 1983.

Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), no. 12, December 1991.

Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), special section, no. 11, November 1993.

* * *

Vsevolod Pudovkin’s major contribution to the cinema is as a theorist. He was fascinated by the efforts of his teacher, the filmmaker Lev Kuleshov, in exploring the effects of montage. As Pudovkin eventually did in his own work, Kuleshov often created highly emotional moments by rapidly intercutting shots of diverse content. Of course, the results could be manipulated. In The End of St. Petersburg, for instance, Pudovkin mixed together shots of stock market speculation with those depicting war casualties. Occasionally, Pudovkin’s images are uninspired: the above sequence looks static, even simplistic, today. Nevertheless, while other filmmakers may have advanced this technique, Pudovkin was one of the first to utilize it in a narrative.

Pudovkin’s essays on film theory, “The Film Scenario” and “Film Director and Film Material,” remain just as valuable as any of his works; these texts have become primers in film technique. Pudovkin wrote that it is unnecessary for a film actor to overperform or overgesture as he might in the theater. He can underplay in a film because the director or editor, via montage, is able to communicate to the viewer the pervading feeling in the shots surrounding the actor. Meanwhile, the actor may concentrate on his or her internal emotions, transmitting the truths of the character in a more subtle manner.

Beyond this, contended Pudovkin, an actor on screen is at the mercy of his director. The performer could be directed to cry without knowing his character’s motivations; the shots placed around him will pass along the cause of his grief. A non-actor could even be made to give a realistic performance as a result of perceptive editing. Pudovkin often integrated his casts with both actors and non-actors; the latter were utilized when he felt the need for realism was greater than the need for actors with the ability to perform. In Chess Fever, a two-reel comedy, Pudovkin even edited in shots of Jose Raoul Capablanca, a famous chess master, to make him seem an active participant in the scenario. As the filmmaker explained, “the foundation of film art is editing.” He noted that “the film is not shot, but built up from separate strips of celluloid that are its raw material.”

Pudovkin’s first significant credit, The Death Ray, was directed by Kuleshov. But he designed the production, wrote the scenario, assisted his teacher, and acted in the film. Before the end of the 1920s, he completed his three great silent features, which remain his best-remembered films: Mother, The End of St. Petersburg, and The Heir to Genghis-Khan. While they were each concerned with various aspects of the Revolution, they are not totally propagandistic: each film deals with human involvements, conflicts, and the effect that ideas and actions have on the lives of those involved. This is illustrated perfectly in Mother, based on a Maxim Gorky novel. Set during the 1905 Revolution, the film chronicles the plight of the title character (Vera Baranovskaya), who accidentally causes her politically active worker son (Nikolai Batalov) to be sentenced to prison. Eventually, Batalov is shot during an escape attempt and Baranovskaya, whose political consciousness has been raised, is trampled to death by the cavalry attacking a workers’ protest.

Baranovskaya also appears in The End of St. Petersburg, filmed to mark the tenth anniversary of the 1917 Revolution. The work centers on the political education of an inexperienced young peasant (Ivan Chuvelyov). This film is significant in that it is one of the first to satisfactorily blend a fictional scenario into a factual setting. Typically, Pudovkin cast real pre-Revolution stockbrokers and executives as stockbrokers and executives.

The Heir to Genghis-Khan (more commonly known as Storm over Asia) is not as successful as the others, but is still worthy of note. The film, set in Central Asia, details the activities of partisan revolutionaries and the English army of occupation in Mongolia (called the White Russian army in foreign prints). It focuses on a young Mongol trapper (Valeri Inkizhinov) whose fate is not dissimilar to that of Pudovkin’s other heroes and heroines: he is radicalized by unfolding events after he is cheated out of a prized fox fur by a European merchant.

Pudovkin continued making films after the advent of sound. A Simple Case, revised from his silent Life’s Very Good, was scheduled to be the Soviet cinema’s first sound feature; instead, the honor went to Nikolai Ekk’s The Road to Life. Pudovkin was not content to just add sound to his scenarios. His initial talkie was Deserter, in which he experimented with speech patterns: by editing in sound, he contrasted the conversational dialogue of different characters with crowd noises, traffic sounds, sirens, music, and even silence. But Pudovkin did not abandon his concern for visuals: Deserter contains approximately three thousand separate shots, an unusually high number for a feature film.

Pudovkin did make other sound films. His Minin and Pozharsky, released at the beginning of World War II, takes place in the seventeenth century, when Moscow was controlled by King Sigismund; it was the first major Soviet film to depict Poland as an invader. Nevertheless, his cinematic language is essentially one that is devoid of words, relying instead on visual components.

—Rob Edelman
RAFELSON, Bob

Nationality: American. Born: New York City, 1933. Education: Attended Dartmouth College. Family: Married Toby, one son. Military Service: Served with Occupation forces in Japan; worked as disc jockey for military radio station. Career: Advisor to Shochiku Films on American market; also worked as rodeo rider and horse breaker, and as jazz musician in Mexico; reader and story editor for David Susskind's Play of the Week, late 1950s; with Bert Schneider created TV pop group The Monkees, 1966, also directed episodes of their TV show; with Schneider and Steve Blauner formed BBS Productions, and directed first feature, Head, featuring The Monkees, 1968. Awards: Best Direction, New York Film Critics, for Five Easy Pieces, 1970.

Films as Director and Co-Producer:

1968 Head (+ co-sc)
1970 Five Easy Pieces (+ co-story)
1973 The King of Marvin Gardens (pr, + co-story)
1977 Stay Hungry (+ co-sc)
1980 Brubaker (d 10 days only, then replaced by Stuart Rosenberg)
1981 The Postman Always Rings Twice
1987 Black Widow
1989 Mountains of the Moon (+ co-sc)
1992 Man Trouble
1994 Wet
1996 Segment titled “Wet” in Tales of Erotica
1997 Blood and Wine (+ sc)
1998 Poodle Springs (for TV)

Other Films:

1969 Easy Rider (Hopper) (co-pr)
1971 The Last Picture Show (Bogdanovich) (co-pr)
1972 Drive, He Said (Nicholson) (co-pr)

Publications

By RAFELSON: articles—

“Raising Cain,” an interview with D. Thompson, in Film Comment (New York), March/April 1981.

Interview in Premiere (Boulder), February 1997.

On RAFELSON: book—

Boyer, Jan, Bob Rafelson: Film Director, New York, 1996.

On RAFELSON: articles—

Segnocinema (Vicenza), March/April 1997.

Bob Rafelson is a neglected director mainly because he lays bare the myths essential to America. He does not sugarcoat the bitter dose of his satire, as do Coppola and Altman. A distaste on the part of mainstream critics has caused attacks upon, but mostly the neglect of, Rafelson’s The King of Marvin Gardens, which is his most representative film. Head is bound by the conventions of the teenage-comedy genre and shows few marks of Rafelson’s authorship; Stay Hungry is a minor work that sustains his standard theme of the drop-out—this time it is a Southern aristocrat who falls into the underworld, which is ambiguously mixed with the business world above. Something of a popular success, Five Easy Pieces certainly demands attention.

Five Easy Pieces was the first expression of the burned-out liberalism that was to become the hallmark of American films of the 1970s. Rafelson’s film expresses the intelligentsia’s dissatisfaction with its impotency in light of an overweening socio-economic structure. Either capitulating or dropping out seemed the only choices. The film’s protagonist seeks escape, from a successful but unsatisfying career as a concert pianist into the world of the working class—first as an oil-field worker and then, at the end of the film, as a logger. The film centers on his foray into the bourgeois bohemia of his family’s home—a sort of ad hoc artist colony under the aegis of his sister. The world we see is both figuratively and literally one of cripples. His sister’s lover is in traction. His father is a paralytic. All are emblems of a pseudoclass, without a vital motive force, that the protagonist rejects, but cannot replace. The protagonist’s sole contribution to an intellectual discussion among his sister’s friends is an obscene comment on the senselessness of their phrase-weaving. In the largest sense, Five Easy Pieces is about the American intellectual’s self-hatred, his disorientation in an essentially anti-intellectual society, and his resulting inability to feel comfortable with his capacity to think and to create.
Bob Rafelson

The King of Marvin Gardens cuts through the American dream—the belief that every man can achieve riches by ingenuity. The protagonist becomes drawn into his brother’s success dream. Rafelson sets the film in pre-boom Atlantic City—an emblem of economic desolation. The locale’s aptness is affirmed by the scene of the protagonist’s sister-in-law throwing her make-up into a fire. Her ageing face, without make-up, is seen against the dilapidated facade of boardwalk hotels. Her gesture (and in Rafelson’s uncommitted world we daren’t ask for more) of defiance is directed against what has been the female share of the American Dream: the male has traditionally taken for himself the power that comes of wealth and left woman the illusion called “glamour.” Another symbol is the blowing up of an old hotel; it collapses in a heap like the dream of entrepreneurship the protagonist momentarily shares with his brother.

Rafelson’s elliptical style creates tension and interest in the opening moments of thrillers like The Postman Always Rings Twice, Black Widow, and Man Trouble, but this style makes for occasional plot confusion. It is often hard to tell whether the ellipses are accidental or part of aesthetic strategy. In one instance, whatever the intent, an ellipsis poetically seems to suggest a shudder of horror at the human condition and a desire to drop out entirely from it: Rafelson suddenly presents us with the strangely clipped, abrupt walkout of the protagonist at the end of Black Widow. The films focus on what is the main theme of Rafelson’s films of the 1980s and 1990s: betrayal from those closest to you, especially from within the family group. Rafelson cannot ever be said to have been caught up in the recent sentimentalism about the traditional family structure. In his filmic vision, he places no trust in the values found there.

Only in the unconventional pairing between the explorer Burton and a liberated aristocrat (exhilaratingly played by Fiona Shaw) in Mountains of the Moon does one find a positive vision of marriage and human trust, achieved only after the hero drops out from the competitive struggle for grants toward explorations and for credit from the findings. Burton experiences betrayal from Spekes, his boon companion during the exploration of the mountains at the source of the Nile River. While the film tries but fails to exonerate Burton of any deep complicity in British imperialism, it does pointedly show how powerful English interests seek in every possible way to harm his career and discount his accomplishments because he is of Irish birth. The socio-historical impact is otherwise weakened by the narrative. Whereas Rafelson’s thrillers benefit from elliptical expositions, they play considerable havoc with much of the first half of Mountains of the Moon. Rafelson has failed to gain audience popularity and rare critical approval because he does not soften brutal political deconstruction with dazzling techniques. He devotes his attention not only to the straightforward expression of his themes but to getting brilliant acting out of his casts. He forces them to explore the darker sides of their characters—each a microcosm of society.

—Rodney Farnsworth

RAIMI, Sam

Films as Director:

1977 It's Murder!
1978 Clockwork; Within the Woods (+ sc)
1982 The Evil Dead (+ sc, pr, ro as Fisherman on side of road [uncredited])

1985 Crimewave (+ sc)
1987 Evil Dead II (+ sc, ro as Knight [uncredited])
1990 Darkman (+ sc)
1993 Army of Darkness (+ sc, ro as Knight in Sweatshirt and Sneakers [uncredited])
1995 The Quick and the Dead
1998 A Simple Plan
1999 For Love of the Game
2000 The Gift; Doomsday Man
2001 Spider-Man

Other Films:

1983 Hefty’s (Premin) (ro as Cook vn2)
1985 Spies like Us (Landis) (ro as Drive-In Security); Stryker’s War (Becker) (ro as Cult Leader)
1988 The Dead Next Door (Bookwalter) (pr [uncredited]); Maniac Cop (Lustig) (ro as Parade Reporter); Intruder (Spiegel) (ro as Randy)
1989 Easy Wheels (O’Malley) (sc [as Celia Abrams], pr)
1990 Maniac Cop 2 (Lustig) (ro as Newscaster); Miller’s Crossing (Coen) (ro as Snickering Gunman)
1991 Lanatics: A Love Story (Becker) (pr)
1992 The Nutt House (Adam Rifkin) (sc [as Alan Smithee Jr.]; Flying Saucers over Hollywood: The Plan 9 Companion (Carducci) (ro as Himself/Interviewee); Innocent Blood (Landis) (ro as Roma Meats Man)
1993
* * *
Hard Target (Woo) (pr); Indian Summer (Binder) (ro as Stick Coder); Body Bags (Carpenter and Hooper-for TV) (ro as Dead Attendant); Journey to the Center of the Earth (for TV) (ro as Collins)

1994
The Hudnsucker Proxy (Coen) (sc, ro as Hudnsucker Brainstormer); Timecop (Hyams) (pr); Darkman II: The Return of Durant (May) (pr); The Flintstones (Levant) (ro as Cliff Look-a-Like)

1995
Galaxis (Mesa) (ro as Nervous Official)

1996
Darkman III: Darkman Must Die (May) (pr)

1997
The Shining (Garris-miniseries for TV) (ro as Gas Station Howie)

1998
Hercules and Xena—The Animated Movie: The Battle for Mount Olympus (Naylor) (pr); Young Hercules (Scott) (pr)

1999
Intimate Portrait: Kelly Preston (Golde) (role as himself)

Publications

By RAIMI: book—

By RAIMI: article—

‘‘Gun Slinging Sam’’ (interview), in Film Threat (Beverly Hills), no. 22, June 1995.

On RAIMI: articles—

Warren, Bill, ‘‘Darkman Director,’’ in Starlog, no. 158, September 1990.

Clark, J., ‘‘Some of Sam,’’ in Premiere (Boulder), March 1995.

* * *

Director, writer, producer, and occasional actor Samuel Raimi was born the third of five children, and was raised in a large home in Franklin, Michigan, a suburb of Detroit. His father, Leonard Raimi, a furniture and appliance store owner, staged and shot elaborate home movies, and Sam quickly became ‘‘fascinated by the fact that you could capture reality, however staged, with an 8mm camera, replay it, edit it, and make things happen in a different order than they did in real life.’’

When he was just eleven years old, the younger Raimi made his first film. At age thirteen, he bought his first 8mm camera, using money he had earned from raking leaves. The movies he made at this time ranged from slapstick comedies that resembled and were inspired by his beloved Three Stooges, to a huge ‘‘Civil War extravaganza using props and costumes with fifty extras.’’ Sam and his older brother Ivan (with whom he would later co-write Darkman and Army of Darkness) were constantly experimenting with different camera techniques in order to get the strangest angles possible—a preoccupation evident in his films to this day. At the age of fifteen, Sam and his friend Bruce Campbell (who would go on to attain cult status as Ash in the Evil Dead trilogy) began attending classes taught by industrial filmmaker Vern Nobles. Nobles hired Sam as a production assistant, and after directing his own amateur films (as well as some commercials in the local Detroit area), Raimi enrolled at Michigan State University. There he met future business partner and aspiring producer Robert Tapert. Sam, Ivan, Tapert, and Campbell formed Renaissance Pictures, and after a few early efforts by Raimi (It’s Murder!, Within the Woods, and Clockwork), they struck gold with The Evil Dead in 1982.

Stephen King called The Evil Dead, ‘‘the most ferociously original horror movie I have ever seen,’’ and this unexpected compliment brought the picture instant credibility. Made on a budget of approximately $50,000, Raimi’s backers were at first annoyed because the film appeared to be a comedy, when they thought they would be getting a horror movie. But it is precisely the director’s trademark combination of gore and slapstick (otherwise known as ‘‘splatstick’’), along with his innovative camerawork—particularly his use of demon point-of-view shots—which made the film a hit. The Evil Dead, an expanded version of Raimi’s earlier short, Within the Woods (also starring Campbell), tells the story of five students who travel to a creepy cabin in the woods for a weekend break and are cut off from the outside world when a bridge collapses beneath them. In the basement of the cabin, the students find the Book of the Dead (bound in human skin) and a tape recorder. The tape’s narrator warns of the evil dead, malevolent demons he has unwisely summoned. Sure enough, the evil dead show up, and all hell breaks loose. One of the female student goes outside and is raped by possessed vines, a scene which incurred the wrath of moralists in Britain, and led to the film being prosecuted under existing ‘‘video nasty’’ legislation. Although The Evil Dead’s super low budget is unintentionally revealed at times, the film’s kinetic camerawork, over-the-top gore, and sheer intensity insured its status as a cult fave.

In 1985, Raimi teamed up with friends Joel and Ethan Coen (who hit the big time a year before with Blood Simple) on the flawed but inspired Crimewave. In this movie, a pair of cartoon-like exterminator/hitmen kill the owner of a burglar-alarm company, and proceed to stalk the partner who hired them, his wife, and a nerd framed for the murder, who tells the story in flashback from the electric chair. Two years later, Raimi would direct the next installment of The Evil Dead on a substantially higher budget than his previous efforts. Evil Dead II: Dead by Dawn retells the entire story of the first film in about ten minutes, and develops the franchise’s underlying mythos, thereby paving the way for the third and most whacked out installment, Army of Darkness, in 1993. One crucial difference between Evil Dead II and its predecessor is that the latter is a more overtly comic film. The gore is still there, in spades, but as one critic puts it, ‘‘the flying eyeballs and lopped-off appendages serve as the functional equivalents of custard pies and buckets of whitewash rather than anything psychologically retrograde.’’

Raimi made his major-studio debut with Darkman in 1990, which he co-wrote as well as directed. Although he tried to secure the eponymous lead role for his friend Campbell, the producers opted instead for established star Liam Neeson. The film—a moderate success at best—concerns a scientist who is horribly burned by a fire in his lab lit by criminals. Using the synthetic skin he had invented, he seeks revenge under different identities. After Army of Darkness, Raimi teamed up with the Coen brothers once again, this time on The Hudnsucker Proxy (1994), which he co-wrote. In 1993–94, Raimi also co-produced a pair of Jean Claude Van Damme action spectacles, Hard Target (directed by Hong Kong legend John Woo), and Time...
Cop. In addition, he found great success as executive producer of the hit schlock television shows Hercules: The Legendary Journeys and Xena: Warrior Princess. Raimi returned as director on the revisionist Western, The Quick and the Dead (1995), starring Sharon Stone, Gene Hackman, Russell Crowe, and a pre-Titanic Leonardo DiCaprio. But his critical breakthrough came three years later, in 1998, with A Simple Plan, in which Bill Paxton and Billy Bob Thornton play brothers who find a bag full of money in the woods, with disastrous consequences. As well as being Raimi’s first heavyweight, serious film, it was also his first shot at directing an adaptation of a bestselling novel (written by Scott M. Smith). A Simple Plan wound up garnering two Oscar nominations, for Best Supporting Actor (Thornton), and novel (written by Scott M. Smith).

Raimi’s next feature, the tepid Kevin Costner baseball vehicle for Best Screenplay Based on Material from Another Medium, two Oscar nominations, for Best Supporting Actor (Thornton), and for Best Screenplay Based on Material from Another Medium. As well as being Raimi’s first heavyweight, serious film, it was also his first shot at directing an adaptation of a bestselling novel (written by Scott M. Smith).

---Steven Schneider

RAINER, Yvonne

Nationality: American. Born: San Francisco, 1934. Career: Modern dancer, then choreographer, New York, from 1957; co-founder of Judson Dance Theater, 1962; presented choreographic work in U.S. and Europe, 1962–75; began to integrate slides and short films into dance performances, 1968; completed first feature-length film, Lives of Performers, 1972; teacher at New School for Social Research, New York, California Institute of the Arts, Valencia, and elsewhere. Awards: Maya Deren Award, American Film Institute, 1988; Guggenheim Fellowship, 1969, 1989; MacArthur Fellowship, 1990–95; Wexner Prize, 1995. Address: 72 Franklin St., New York, NY 10013, U.S.A.

Films:

1967 Volleyball (Foot Film) (short)
1968 Hand Movie (short); Rhode Island Red (short); Trio Film (short)
1969 Line
1972 Lives of Performers
1974 *Film about a Woman Who . . .
1976 Kristina Talking Pictures
1980 Journeys from Berlin/1971
1985 The Man Who Envied Women
1990 Privilege
1996 MURDER and murder (+ sc, ed, pr)

Publications

By RAINER: books—

By RAINER: articles—

“Script of Privilege,” in Screen Writings: Scripts and Texts by Independent Filmmakers, edited by Scott MacDonald.

“(Re)position - or - Permission for My Motives,” in Felix, no. 2, 1992.

On RAINER: book—

On RAINER: articles—

“Yvonne Rainer: An Introduction, in Camera Obscura (Berkeley), Fall 1976.

Screen (Oxford), Spring 1992.

Onasta, Michael. “Yvonne Rainer: Tanz, Performance, Film,” in EPD Film (Frankfurt), June 1994.

* * *

Although Yvonne Rainer made her first feature-length film in 1972, she had already been prominent in the New York avant-garde art scene for nearly a decade. She moved to New York from San Francisco in 1957 to study acting, but started taking dance lessons and soon committed herself to dance. By the mid-1960s, she emerged as an influential dancer and choreographer, initially drawing the attention of critics and audiences through her work with the Judson Dance Theater.
Rainer saw a problem inherent in dance as an art form, namely its involvement with “narcissism, virtuosity and display.” Her alternative conception was of the performance as a kind of work or task, as opposed to an exhibition, carried out by “neutral ‘doers’” rather than performers. Thus the minimalist dance that she pioneered, which depended on ordinary movements, departed radically from the dramatic, emotive forms of both its classical and modern dance precursors.

Rainer was not long content with merely stripping dance of its artifice and conventions. She became interested in psychology and sexuality, in the everyday emotions that people share, and grew dissatisfied with abstract dance, which she found too limited to express her new concerns. To communicate more personal and emotional content, Rainer began experimenting with combining movements with other media, such as recorded and spoken texts, slides, film stills, and music, creating a performance collage. Language and narrative became increasingly important components of her performance.

Rainer’s first films, shorts made to be part of these performances in the late 1960s, were “filmed choreographic exercises,” as she wrote in 1971, “that were meant to be viewed with one’s peripheral vision . . . not to be taken seriously.” Her interest in the narrative potential of film and the director’s dominance of the medium drew Rainer further into filmmaking.

Her first two feature films, Lives of Performers and Film about a Woman Who . . ., both with cinematographer Babette Mangolte, originated as performance pieces. In these and her two other films, Kristina Talking Pictures and Journeys from Berlin/1971, Rainer interweaves the real and the fictional, the personal and the political, the concrete and the abstract. She preserves the collagist methods of her performances, juxtaposing personal recollections, previous works, historical documents, and original dialogue and narration, her soundtracks often having the same richness, and the same disjunction, as the visual portions of her films.

Like Brecht, Rainer believes that an audience should contemplate what they see; they should participate in the creative process of the film rather than simply receive it passively. Thus, instead of systematically telling a story, she apposes and layers narrative elements to create meaning. The discontinuity, ambiguity, and even contradiction that often result keep Rainer’s audience at a distance, so they can examine the feminist, psychological, political, or purely emotional issues she addresses. Consistent with her dance and performance, Rainer’s films are theoretical, even intellectual, not dramatic, sentimental, or emotional, despite her subject matter, which is often controversial and emotion-laden.

—Jessica Wolff

RAY, Man

Nationality: American. Born: Emanuel Rabinovitch, Philadelphia, PA, 27 August 1890. Family: Married Adon Lacroix, 1913 (divorced 1920); married Juliet Browning, 1946. Education: Studied art, architecture, and engineering at the National Academy of Design, the Art Student’s League and the Ferrer Center in New York City. Career: 1911—taught at Ferrer Center in New York; 1913—one-man show at the Daniel Gallery in New York; 1915—met artist Marcel Duchamp and helped form the New York Dada group; 1916—begins to experiment with photography; 1921—departs for Paris, discovers rayographs (photographs made by leaving objects on photographic paper, and has one-man exhibition at the “exposition Dada”; 1923—makes first film, La Retour à la raison (Return to Reason); 1929—rediscovers solarization (rendering a photographic image part negative, part positive by exposing a print or negative to white light); 1940—returns to the United States (Hollywood) to escape the German occupation; 1944—gives a retrospective exhibition at the Pasadena Art Institute; 1950—returns to Paris; 1963—publishes his autobiography (Self-Portrait). Died: Paris, France, 18 November 1976.

Films as Director:

1924  Le Retour à la raison (Return to Reason) (+ed, + pr); À quoi rêvent les jeunes films (What Do Young Films Dream About?)
1926  Emak-Bakia (+ ph)
1928  L’Étoile de mer (Starfish) (+ ph, pr)
1929  Les Mystères du château de Dé (The Mysteries of the Chateau de De) (+ ph)
1935  Essai de simulation de délire cinématographique (Attempt at Simulating Cinematic Delirium)
1941  Dreams That Money Can Buy

Other Films:

1924  Entr’acte (Intermission) (Clair, Picabia) (as Man Ray); Ballet mécanique (Mechanical Ballet) (Léger, Murphy) (ph)
1926  Anémic cinéma (Anemic Cinema) (Duchamp) (ph, asst)

Publications

By RAY: books—

On RAY: books—

In 1924, Man Ray, already a renowned painter, photographer, and participant in the Dada movement, began to experiment with the medium of film. At the time Man Ray was in the company of many of his avant-garde comrades, including Marcel Duchamp, René Clair, and Fernand Léger. Under the influence of the avant-garde ideals, Ray and his friends began concentrated on the technical potential of film-making, the possibilities of special effects, cinematic distortion, slow motion, etc., and abandoned the quest for narrative. The effect of this experimentation can be seen in many of Ray’s films.

Ray’s first project combined techniques he had cultivated in still photography and the experimental cinematic techniques developed by the avant-garde. This project, Le Retour à la raison (The Return to Reason), was completed in 1923. This film is literally a collection of Ray’s special photographs, or rayographs, strung together to form several series of images. Here, as in Ray’s later films, the emphasis is not on telling a story. Rather, it is to play with the possibility of representing light, shape, and movement on film.

Ray’s second film effort came in 1924 and was a collaborative project with his close friend, Marcel Duchamp. Anémic cinéma (Anemic Cinema) for which Ray functioned as cinematographer, is yet another experiment with the possibilities of cinema. The film features a set of spiraling disks, on which are placed French words. Through movement and camera focus, the words combine to form phrases and puns in French. Here again, there is no narrative. Instead, there is an emphasis on the non-sense of language and on the non-sense of art, both of which formed the basis of the Dada movement.

In the second half of the 1920s, Ray made three films that he characterized as cinematic poetry. These films, Emak-Bakia, L’Étoile, and...
Ray, Nicholas

Nationality: American. Born: Raymond Nicholas Kienzle in Galesville, Wisconsin, 7 August 1911. Education: Educated in architecture and theater, University of Chicago. Family: Married Nicholas Ray (left) with James Dean.

---

Ray is a pivotal figure in the history of cinema, renowned for his innovative approach to filmmaking. His work, characterized by an emphasis on visual poetry, experimentation, and a deep understanding of Surrealist and Dadaist influence, has left a lasting impact on the art form.

The Starfish (Emak-Bakia), perhaps Ray’s masterpiece, is literally a poem on film. Based on an unpublished poem by Surrealist poet Robert Desnos, the film is an attempt to represent verbal poetry as visual spectacle. Unlike his earlier films, L’Étoile de mer is constructed of realistic images rather than pure shapes or light forms, and yet it is equally non-narrative and equally abstract. In the film, sequences of couples meeting, undressing, getting into bed, parting, are shown in alternation with images of static objects, fields, the sea, a street. Thus, the frenzy and fervor of the human being’s movement toward sexual contact is juxtaposed against the sterility and stasis of everyday life. As in his preceding film, Ray experiments with light, with the camera and with representation in the film, using such techniques as extreme close-up, distortion and soft-focus, all used in contrast with a clear-focus lens.

Ray’s third film from this period, Les Mystères du château de Dé (The Mysteries of the Chateau de De) shows a further development in the focus on real or realistic images in abstract cinema. Like L’Étoile de mer, this film relies heavily on sequences of human beings. Furthermore, of Ray’s films, this one is the closest to being narrative, in that the sequences of images presented in the film seem, on the surface, to form a coherent whole. The film shows the voyage of a couple in a bar, who drive a great distance, arrive at a villa, and interact with other people. A great deal of attention is given to the house and to the actions engaged in by those staying there, and for a time, all seems “normal.” Progressively, however, distortions in the size of objects, in the light and shadows of the background, in the characters’ movements all become apparent. In the end, none of these distortions are “explained” by the film, nor is there a sense given to the actions of the characters. Despite its more narrative appearance, Les Mystères du château de Dé remains as abstract as Ray’s earlier films. Furthermore, the influence of the Surrealist movement can be seen very clearly in the seemingly banal images, which present unexplained and eerie irregularities.

By the late 1930s and 1940s, Ray had all but abandoned film to return to his two original passions, painting and still photography. Before his death, in 1976, he made only two more films, Essai de simulation de délire cinématographique (Attempt at the Simulation of Cinematographic Delirium) from 1935, and Dreams That Money Can Buy, in collaboration with Hans Richter, and many of his Dada-Surrealist collaborators. The first is highly reminiscent of Ray’s films from the 1920s, and the second is a combination of more developed cinematographic techniques and embodies the spirit of the Surrealist and Abstract Expressionist movements. In fact, it is puzzling that in the very years that Ray was the closest to the film industry (he was living in Hollywood), he was the least interested in cinema.

Carl Belz has suggested that Man Ray withdrew from cinema partly because he felt he had exhausted its potential, and partly because it took him away from painting and photography. And it is, in fact, for his contributions to the latter that he is best remembered. Nonetheless, to overlook the impact of May Ray on the cinema is to ignore the influence of one of the early pioneers of cinematic art. It was Man Ray, and many of his Dada and Surrealist contemporaries who first drew attention to a great many of the cinematic techniques widely used today. For this, and for the fascinating efforts at producing a non-narrative cinema, Man Ray’s films remain crucial to any understanding of the development of film.

---

—Dayna Oscherwitz

Films as Director:

1948  They Live by Night  (first released in Britain as The Twisted Road, U.S. release 1949); A Woman’s Secret
1949  Knock on Any Door
1950  In a Lonely Place; Born to Be Bad
1951  The Flying Leathernecks
1952  On Dangerous Ground; The Lasty Men
1954  Johnny Guitar
1955  Run for Cover; Rebel without a Cause (+ story)
1956  Hot Blood; Bigger than Life
1957  The True Story of Jesse James; Bitter Victory (+ co-sc)
1958  Wind across the Everglades; Party Girl
1959  The Savage Innocents (+ sc)
1961  King of Kings
1963  55 Days at Peking (co-d)
1975  You Can’t Go Home Again (+ sc, unfinished)
1981  Lightning over Water (Nick’s Movie) (co-d, role as himself)

Other Films:

1977  Der Amerikanische Freund  (The American Friend)  (Wenders) (role)
1979  Hair  (Forman) (role)

Publications

By RAY: articles—

Interview with Charles Bitsch, in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), November 1958.
Interview with Adriano Aprà and others, in Movie (London), May 1963.
Interview in Interviews with Film Directors, edited by Andrew Sarris, New York, 1967.

“Ray’s World according to Ray,” in Film Comment (New York), vol. 27, September-October 1991.

On RAY: books—

Masi, Stefano, Nicholas Ray, Florence, 1983.

On RAY: articles—

Wood, Robin, “Film Favorites,” in Film Comment (New York), September/October 1972.
Biskind, Peter, “Rebell without a Cause: Nicholas Ray in the Fifties,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Fall 1974.
Lederer, Joseph, “Film as Experience: Nicholas Ray—The Director Turns Teacher,” in American Film (Washington, D.C.), November 1975.

797
Margulies, I., “‘Delaying the Cut: The Space of Performance in Lightning over Water,’” in Screen, vol. 34, no. 1, Spring 1993.

Hauisch, M., “‘Der Poet der nacht, Nicholas Ray und sein werk,’” in Film-Dienst (Köln), vol. 46, no. 17, 13 August 1996.

* * *

“The cinema is Nicholas Ray.” Godard’s magisterial statement has come in for a good deal of ridicule, not by any means entirely undeserved. Yet it contains a core of truth, especially if taken in reverse. Nicholas Ray is cinema in the sense that his films work entirely (and perhaps only) as movies, arrangements of space and movement charged with dramatic tension. Few directors demonstrate more clearly that a film is something beyond the sum of its parts. Consider only the more literary components—dialogue, plot, characterisation—and a film like Party Girl is patently trash. But on the screen the visual turbulence of Ray’s shooting style, the fractured intensity of his editing, fuse the elements into a valid emotional whole. The flaws are still apparent, but have become incidental.

Nor is Ray’s cinematic style in any way extraneous, imposed upon his subjects. The nervous tension within the frame also informs his characters, vulnerable violent outsiders at odds with society and with themselves. The typical Ray hero is a loner, at once contemptuous of the complacent normal world and tormented with a longing to be reaccepted into it—to become (like Bowie and Keechie, the young lovers of They Live by Night) “like real people.” James Dean in Rebel without a Cause, Robert Ryan in On Dangerous Ground, Robert Mitchum in The Lusty Men, all start by rejecting the constraints of the nuclear family, only to find themselves impelled to recreate it in substitute form, as though trying to fill an unacknowledged void. In one achingly elegiac scene in The Lusty Men, Mitchum prows around the tumbledown shack that was his childhood home, “looking for something I thought I’d lost.”

Ray’s grounding in architecture (he studied at Taliesin with Frank Lloyd Wright) reveals itself in an exceptionally acute sense of space, often deployed as an extension of states of mind. In his films the geometry of locations, and especially interiors, serves as a psychological terrain. Conflict can be played out, and tension expressed, in terms of spatial areas (upstairs and downstairs, for example, or the courtyards and levels of an apartment complex) pitted against each other. Ray also credited Wright with instilling in him “a love of the horizontal line”—and hence of the CinemaScope screen, for which he felt intuitive affinity. Unlike many of his contemporaries, who found it awkward and inhibiting, Ray avidly explores the format’s potential, sometimes combining it with lateral tracking shots to convey lyrical movement, at other times angling his camera to create urgent diagonals, suggesting characters straining against the constraints of the frame.

Equally idiosyncratic is Ray’s expressionist use of colour, taken at times to heights of delirium that risk toppling into the ridiculous. In Johnny Guitar, perhaps the most flamboyantly baroque Western ever made, Joan Crawford is colour-coded red, white, or black according to which aspect of her character—whore, victim, or gunslinger—is uppermost in a given scene. Similarly, the contrast in Bigger than Life between the hero’s respectable job as a schoolteacher and his déclassé moonlighting for a taxi firm is signalled by an abrupt cut from the muted grey-browns of the school to a screenful of gaudy yellow cabs that hit the audience’s eyes with a visual slap.

Nearly all Ray’s finest films were made in the 1950s, their agonized romanticism cutting across the grain of that decade’s brittle optimism. “The poet of American disenchantment” (in David Thomson’s phrase), Ray viewed social conventions as a trap, from which violence or madness may be the only escape. In Bigger than Life, James Mason’s small-town teacher, frustrated by his low social status, gains the feelings of power and superiority he aspires to from a nerve drug. Under its influence the character is transformed into a hideous parody of the dominant father-figure enjoined by society. Similarly—but working from the opposite perspective—In a Lonely Place subverts Bogart’s tough-guy persona, revealing the anguish and insecurity that underlie it and, as V.F. Perkins puts it, making “violence the index of the character’s weakness rather than strength.”

“I’m a stranger here myself.” Ray often quoted Sterling Hayden’s line from Johnny Guitar as his personal motto. His career, as he himself was well aware, disconcertingly mirrored the fate of his own riven, alienated heroes. Unappreciated (or so he felt) in America, and increasingly irked by the constraints of the studio system, he nonetheless produced all his best work there. In Europe, where he was hailed as one of the world’s greatest directors, his craft deserted him: after two ill-starred epics, the last sixteen years of his life trickled away in a mess of incoherent footage and abortive projects. Victim of his own legend, Ray finally took self-identification with his protagonists to its ultimate tortured conclusion—collaborating, in Lightning over Water, in the filming of his own disintegration and death.

—Philip Kemp

RAY, Satyajit

Nationality: Indian. Born: Calcutta, 2 May 1921. Education: Attended Ballygunj Government School; Presidency College, University of Calcutta, B.A. in economics (with honors), 1940; studied painting at University of Santiniketan, 1940–43. Family: Married Bijoya Das, 1949; one son. Career: Commercial artist for D. J. Keymer advertising agency, Calcutta, 1943; co-founder, Calcutta Film Society, 1947; met Jean Renoir making The River, 1950; composed own music, from Teen Kanya (1961) on; made first film in Hindi (as opposed to Bengali), The Chess Players, 1977; editor and illustrator for children’s magazine Sandesh, 1980s. Awards: Grand Prize, Cannes Festival, 1956, Golden Gate Award, San Francisco International Film Festival, 1957, Film Critics Award, Stratford Festival, 1958, and president of India Gold Medal, all for Pather Panchali; Gold Lion, Venice Festival, 1957, Best Direction, San Francisco International Film Festival, 1958, and President of India Gold Medal, all for Aparajito; Selznick Award and Sutherland Trophy, 1960, for Apur Sansar; Silver Bear for Best Direction, Berlin Festival, for Mahanagar, 1964, and for Charulata, 1965; Special Award of Honour, Berlin Festival, 1966; Decorated Order Yugoslav Flag, 1971; Golden Bear Award, Berlin Film Festival, 1973, for Distant Thunder; D.Litt, Oxford University, 1978; life fellow, British Film Institute, 1983; Legion of Honour, France, 1989; Indian Awards, Best Picture and Best Director, 1991, for Agantuk; Academy Award for lifetime achievement in cinema, 1992. Died: Of heart failure, 23 April 1992, in Calcutta.
Satyajit Ray

Films as Director and Scriptwriter:

1955 Pather Panchali (Father Panchali) (+ pr)
1956 Aparajito (The Unvanquished) (+ pr)
1957 Parash Pathar (The Philosopher’s Stone)
1958 Jalsaghar (The Music Room) (+ pr)
1959 Apur Sansar (The World of Apu) (+ pr)
1960 Devi (The Goddess) (+ pr, mus)
1961 Teen Kanya (Two Daughters) (+ pr); Rabindranath Tagore (doc)
1962 Abhijan (Expedition); Kanchanjanga (+ pr)
1963 Mahanagar (The Big City)
1964 Charulata (The Lonely Wife)
1965 Kapurush-o-Mahapurush (The Coward and the Saint); Two (short)
1966 Nayak (The Hero)
1967 Chirirakhana (The Zoo)
1969 Goopy Gyne Bagha Byne (The Adventures of Goopy and Bagha)
1970 Pratidwandi (The Adversary); Aranyer Din Ratri (Days and Nights in the Forest)
1971 Seemabaddha; Sikkim (doc)
1972 The Inner Eye (doc)
1973 Asani Sanket (Distant Thunder)
1974 Sonar Kella (The Golden Fortress)
1975 Jana Aranya (The Middleman)
1976 Bala (doc)
1977 Shatranj Ke Khilari (The Chess Players)
1978 Joi Baba Felunath (The Elephant God)
1979 Heerak Rajar Deshe (The Kingdom of Diamonds)
1981 Sadgati (Deliverance) (for TV); Pikoo (short)
1984 Ghare Baire (The Home and the World) (+ pr, mus)
1989 Ganashatru (An Enemy of the People)
1990 Shakha Proshakha (Branches of the Tree)
1991 Agantuk (The Visitor)

Publications

By RAY: books—

By RAY: articles—

‘‘A Long Time on the Little Road,’’ in Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1957.
‘‘Satyajit Ray on Himself,’’ in Cinema (Beverly Hills), July/August 1965.
‘‘From Film to Film,’’ in Cahiers du Cinéma en English (New York), no. 3, 1966
Interview, in Film Makers on Filmmaking, by Harry M. Geduld, Bloomington, Indiana, 1967.
Interview, in Interviews with Film Directors, edited by Andrew Sarris, New York, 1967.
Interview with J. Blue, in Film Comment (New York), Summer 1968.
‘‘Under Western Eyes,’’ in Sight and Sound (London), Autumn 1982.
Interview with Derek Malcolm, in Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1989.
‘‘To Western Audiences, the Filmmaker Satyajit Ray Is Synonymous with Indian Cinema,’’ an interview with Gowri Ramnarayan, in Interview, June 1992.

On RAY: films—

On RAY: books—

Taylor, John Russell, Directors and Directions: Cinema for ‘70s, New York, 1975.
Rangoonwalla, Firoze, Satyajit Ray’s Art, Shahdara, Delhi, 1980.
Obituary, in EDP Film (Frankfurt), vol. 4, June 1992.
Bonneville, L., in Séquences (Haute-Ville, Québec), November 1992.
Positif (Paris), special section, no. 399, May 1994.
Van der Heide, Bill, “Experiencing India: A Personal History,” in Media International Australia (North Ryde, NSW), no. 80, May 1996.

* * *

From the beginning of his career as a filmmaker, Satyajit Ray was interested in finding ways to reveal the mind and thoughts of his characters. Because the range of his sympathy was wide, he has been accused of softening the presence of evil in his cinematic world. But a director who aims to represent the currents and cross-currents of feeling within people is likely to disclose to viewers the humanness even in reprehensible figures. In any case, from the first films of his early period, Ray devised strategies for rendering inner lives; he simplified the surface action of the film so that the viewer’s attention travels to (1) the reaction of people to one another, or to their environments, (2) the mood expressed by natural scenery or objects, and (3) music as a clue to the state of mind of a character. In the Apu Trilogy the camera often stays with one of two characters after the other character exits the frame to see their silent response. Or else, after some significant event in the narrative, Ray presents correlatives of that event in the natural world. When the impoverished wife in Pather Panchali receives a postcard bearing happy news from her husband, the scene dissolves to water skates dancing on a pond. As for music, in his films Ray commissioned compositions from India’s best classical musicians—Ravi Shankar, Vilayat Khan, Ali Akbar Khan—but after Teen Kanya composed his own music and progressed towards quieter indication through music of the emotional experience of his characters.
Ray’s work can be divided into three periods on the basis of his cinematic practice: the early period, 1955–66, from Pather Panchali through Nayak; the middle period, 1969–1977, from Googy Gya to Seemabaddha; and the final period, from Joy Baba Felanath and through his final film Agantuk, in 1991. The early period is characterized by thoroughgoing realism: the mise-en-scène are rendered in deep focus; long takes and slow camera movements prevail. The editing is subtle, following shifts of narrative interest and cutting on action in the Hollywood style. Ray’s emphasis in the early period on capturing reality is obvious in Kanchanjanga, in which 100 minutes in the lives of characters are rendered in 100 minutes of film time. The Apu Trilogy, Parash Pathar, Jalsaghar, and Devi all exemplify what Ray had learned from Hollywood’s studio era, from Renoir’s mise-en-scène, and from the use of classical music in Indian cinema. Charulata affords the archetypal example of Ray’s early style, with the decor, the music, the long takes, the activation of various planes of depth within a composition, and the reaction shots all contributing significantly to a representation of the lonely wife’s inner conflicts. The power of Ray’s early films comes from his ability to suggest deep feeling by arranging the surface elements of his films unemphatically.

Ray’s middle period is characterized by increasing complexity of style; to his skills at understatement Ray adds a sharp use of montage. The difference in effect between an early film and a middle film becomes apparent if one compares the early film and a middle film with the middle Jana Aranya, both films pertaining to life in Calcutta. In Mahanagar, the protagonist chooses to resign her job in order to protest the unjust dismissal of a colleague. The film affirms the rightness of her decision. In the closing sequence, the protagonist looks up at the tall towers of Calcutta and says to her husband so that we believe her, ‘‘What a big city! Full of jobs! There must be something somewhere for one of us!’’ Ten years later, in Jana Aranya, it is clear that there are no jobs and that there is precious little room to worry about niceties of justice and injustice. The darkness running under the pleasant facade of many of the middle films seems to derive from the turn in Indian politics after the death of Nehru. Within Bengal, many ardent young people joined a Maoist movement to destroy existing institutions, and more were themselves destroyed by a ruthless police force. Across India, politicians abandoned Nehru’s commitment to a socialist democracy in favor of a scramble for personal power. In Seemabaddha or Aranyer Din Ratri Ray’s editing is sharp but not startling. In Shatranj Ke Khilari, on the other hand, Ray’s irony is barely restrained: he cuts from the blue haze of a Nawab’s music room to a gambling scene in the city. In harsh daylight, commoners lay bets on fighting rams, as intent on their gambling as the Nawab was on his music.

Audiences in India who responded warmly to Ray’s early films have sometimes been troubled by the complexity of his middle films. A film like Shatranj Ke Khilari was expected by many viewers to reconstruct the splendors of Moghul India as the early Jalsaghar had reconstructed the sensitivity of Bengali feudal landlords and Charulata the decency of upper class Victorian Bengal. What the audience found instead was a stern examination of the sources of Indian decadence. According to Ray, the British seemed less to blame for their role than the Indians who demeaned themselves by colluding with the British or by ignoring the public good and plunging into private pleasures. Ray’s point of view in Shatranj was not popular with distributors and so his first Hindi film was denied fair exhibition in many cities in India.

Ray’s concluding style, most evident in the short features Pikoo and Sadgati, pays less attention than earlier to building a stable geography and a firm time scheme. The exposition of characters and situations is swift: the effect is of great concision. In Pikoo, a young boy is sent outside to sketch flowers so that his mother and her lover can pursue their affair indoors. The lover has brought along a drawing pad and colored pens to divert the boy. The boy has twelve colored pens in his packet with which he must represent on paper the wealth of colors in nature. In a key scene (lasting ten seconds) the boy looks at a flower, then down at his packet for a matching color. Through that action of the boy’s looking to match the world with his means, Ray suggests the striving in his own work to render the depth and range of human experience.

In focussing on inner lives and on human relations as the ground of social and political systems, Ray continued the humanist tradition of Rabindranath Tagore. Ray studied at Santiniketan, the university founded by Tagore, and was close to the poet during his last years. Ray once acknowledged his debt in a lyrical documentary about Tagore, and through the Tagore stories on which he based his films Teen Kanya, Charulata, and Ghare Bahire. As the poet Tagore was his example, Ray has become an example to important younger filmmakers (such as Shyam Benegal, M. S. Sathyu, G. Aravindan), who have learned from him how to reveal in small domestic situations the working of larger political and cultural forces.

—Satti Khanna

REED, Carol

Nationality: British. Born: Putney, London, 30 December 1906, son of actor Herbert Beerbohm Tree. Education: King’s School, Canterbury. Family: Married 1) Diana Wynyard (divorced); 2) actress Penelope Ward, two sons. Career: Actor on London stage, from 1924; dramatic advisor to author Edgar Wallace, 1927; stage director, from 1929; dialogue director for Associated Talking Pictures, 1932; directed first feature, 1933; served in British Army Film Unit, World War II; began collaboration with writer Graham Greene, 1946. Awards: Best British Film Award, British Film Academy, for Odd Man Out, 1947; Best British Film Award, British Film Academy, and Best Direction, New York Film Critics, for The Fallen Idol, 1948; Best British Film Award, British Film Academy, and Quarterly Award, Directors Guild of America, for The Third Man, 1949; Knighted, 1952; Oscar for Best Director, for Oliver!, 1968. Died: In London, 1976.

Films as Director:

1933 Midshipman Easy (Men of the Sea)
1936 Laburnum Grove; Talk of the Devil (+ story)
1937 Who’s Your Lady Friend?
1938 Bank Holiday (Three on a Week-End); Penny Paradise
Carol Reed (right) with Bernard Lee and Joseph Cotten on the set of The Third Man

1939  Climbing High; A Girl Must Live; The Stars Look Down
1940  Night Train to Munich (Night Train); The Girl in the News
1941  Kipps (The Remarkable Mr. Kipps); A Letter from Home
      (short documentary)
1942  The Young Mr. Pitt; The New Lot
1944  The Way Ahead
1945  The True Glory (collaboration with Garson Kanin)
1947  Odd Man Out
1948  The Fallen Idol
1949  The Third Man
1951  Outcast of the Islands
1953  The Man Between
1955  A Kid for Two Farthings
1956  Trapeze
1958  The Key
1960  Our Man in Havana
1963  The Running Man (+ pr)
1965  The Agony and the Ecstasy (+ pr)
1968  Oliver!
1970  Flap
1972  Follow Me (The Public Eye)

Other Film:

1937  No Parking (Raymond) (story)

Publications

By REED: article—

On REED: books—

DeFelice, James, Filmguide to Odd Man Out, Bloomington, Indiana, 1975.

On REED: articles—

Goodman, E., “‘Carol Reed,’” in Theatre Arts (New York), May 1947.

Wright, Basil, “The Director: Carol Reed,” in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1951.

De La Roche, Catherine, “‘A Man with No Message,’” in Films and Filming (London), December 1954.

Sarris, Andrew, “Carol Reed in the Context of His Time,” in two parts, in Film Culture (New York), no. 10, 1956, and no. 11, 1957.

Fawcett, Marion, “‘Sir Carol Reed,’” in Films in Review (New York), March 1959.

Voigt, M., “‘Pictures of Innocence: Sir Carol Reed,’” in Focus on Film (London), Spring 1974.

Everschor, Franz, “‘Der unbekannte Carol Reed,’” in Film-Dienst (Köln), vol. 48, no. 15, 18 July 1995.

Carol Reed came to films from the theater, where he worked as an assistant to Edgar Wallace. He served his apprenticeship in the film industry first as a dialogue director, and then graduated to the director’s chair via a series of low-budget second features.

Reed’s early films, such as Midshipman Easy, are not remarkable, but few British films before World War II were. In the 1920s and 1930s British distributors were more interested in importing films from abroad, especially from America, than in encouraging film production at home. As a result British films were, with rare exceptions, bargain-basement imitations of Hollywood movies. In 1938, however, the British government stipulated that producers must allocate sufficient funds for the making of domestic films in order to allow an adequate amount of time for preproduction preparation, shooting, and the final shaping of each picture. Directors like Carol Reed took advantage of this increased support of British production to produce films which, though still modestly made by Hollywood standards, demonstrated the artistry of which British filmmakers were capable. By the late 1930s, then, Reed had graduated to making films of considerable substance, like Night Train to Munich. “For the first time,” Arthur Knight has written, “there were English pictures which spoke of the British character, British institutions—even social problems such as unemployment and nationalization—with unexpected frankness and awareness.” An outstanding example of this new trend in British film making was Reed’s The Stars Look Down, an uncompromising picture of life in a mining community that brought the director serious critical attention on both sides of the Atlantic.

Reed went on to work on some of the best documentaries to come out of the war, such as the Academy Award-winning The True Glory. He also directed the documentary-like theatrical feature The Way Ahead, an unvarnished depiction of army life. The experience gained by Reed in making wartime documentaries not only influenced his direction of The Way Ahead, but also was reflected in his post-war cinematic style, enabling him to develop further in films like Odd Man Out the strong sense of realism which had first appeared in The Stars Look Down. The documentary approach that Reed used to tell the story of Odd Man Out, which concerns a group of anti-British insurgents in Northern Ireland, was one to which audiences were ready to respond. Wartime films, both documentary and fictional, had conditioned moviegoers in Britain and elsewhere to expect a greater degree of realism in post-war cinema, and Reed provided it.

The more enterprising British producers believed that films should be made to appeal primarily to the home market rather than to the elusive American market. Yet the films that Carol Reed and some others were creating in the post-war years—films which were wholly British in character and situation—were the first such movies to win wide popularity in the United States. Among these, of course, was Odd Man Out, the first film which Reed both produced and directed, a factor which guaranteed him a greater degree of creative freedom than he had enjoyed before the war.

For the first time, too, the theme that was to appear so often in Reed’s work was perceptible in Odd Man Out. In depicting for us in this and other films a hunted, lonely hero caught in the middle of a crisis usually not of his own making, Reed implies that man can achieve maturity and self-mastery only by accepting the challenges that life puts in his way and by struggling with them as best he can.

The Fallen Idol was the first of a trio of masterful films which he made in collaboration with novelist-screenwriter Graham Greene, one of the most significant creative associations between a writer and a director in the history of film. The team followed The Fallen Idol with The Third Man, which dealt with the black market in post-war Vienna, and, a decade later, Our Man in Havana. Commenting on his collaboration with the director, Greene has written that the success of these films was due to Reed, “the only director I know with that particular warmth of human sympathy, the extraordinary feeling for the right face for the right part, the exactitude of cutting, and not the least important, the power of sympathizing with an author’s worries and an ability to guide him.”

Because most of the films which Reed directed in the next decade or so were not comparable to the post-war films mentioned above, it was thought that he had passed his peak for good. Oliver! in fact proved that Reed was back in top form. In her New Yorker review of the film, Pauline Kael paid Reed a tribute that sums up his entire career in the cinema: “I applaud the commercial heroism of a director who can steer a huge production and keep his sanity and perspective and decent human feelings as beautifully intact as they are in Oliver!”

A genuinely self-effacing man, Reed was never impressed by the awards and honors he garnered throughout his career (he was knighted in 1952). Summarizing his own approach to filmmaking some time before his death at age sixty-nine in 1976, he said simply, “I give the public what I like, and hope they will like it too.” More often than not, they did.

—Gene D. Phillips

REINER, Rob

Films as Director:

1984 _This Is Spinal Tap_ (+ co-sc, co-songs, role)
1985 _The Sure Thing_
1986 _Stand by Me_
1987 _The Princess Bride_ (+ co-pr)
1989 _When Harry Met Sally_ (+ co-pr)
1990 _Misery_ (+ co-pr)
1992 _A Few Good Men_
1995 _North_ (+ pr); _The American President_ (+ pr)
1996 _The Ghosts of Mississippi_
1997 _I Am Your Child_ (for TV)
1999 _The Story of Us_ (role)

Films as Actor:

1967 _Enter Laughing_ (Carl Reiner) (as Clark Baxter)
1970 _Halls of Anger_ (Paul Bogart) (as Leaky Couloris); _Where’s Poppa_ (Carl Reiner) (as Roger)
1971 _Summertree_ (Anthony Newly) (as Don)
1974 _Thursday’s Game_ (James L. Brooks) (for TV)
1975 _How Come Nobody’s on Our Side_ (Richard Michaels) (as Miguelito)
1977 _Fire Sale_ (Alan Arkin) (as Russel Fikus)
1979 _More than Friends_ (Jim Burrows) (for TV) (+ co-sc, co-exec pr)
1982 _Million Dollar Infield_ (Hal Cooper) (for TV) (+ co-sc, co-pr)
1987 _Throw Momma from the Train_ (Danny DeVito) (as Joel)
1990 _Postcards from the Edge_ (Mike Nichols) (as Joe Pierce); _Likely Stories, Volume I_ (comedy sketches for cable TV)
1991 _Regarding Henry_ (Mike Nichols)
1993 _Sleepless in Seattle_ (Nora Ephron) (as Jay)
1994 _Bullets over Broadway_ (Woody Allen) (as Sheldon Flender); _Mixed Nuts_ (as Dr. Kinsky)
1995 _Bye Bye, Love_ (S. Weisman) (as Dr. Townsend)
1996 _Mad Dog Time_ (Bishop) (as Albert the Chauffeur); _For Better or Worse_ (Alexander) (as Dr. Plosner); _The First Wives Club_ (Hugh Wilson) (as Dr. Packman)
1998 _Primary Colors_ (Nichols) (as Izzy Rosenblatt)
1999 _Ed TV_ (Howard) (as Whitaker); _The Muse_ (Brooks) (as himself)

Publications

By REINER: articles—

“ _The American President_,” in _Premiere_ (Boulder), December 1995.

On REINER: book—

On REINER: articles—

Goldman, Steven, “‘Masters of the Numbers Game,’” in Guardian, 2 January 1993.

Rob Reiner is a show business kid who has learned much from his famous father, Carl Reiner, creator of the American television series The Dick Van Dyke Show and director of many comedy films—most notably Where’s Poppa and The Jerk. Beginning his career as an actor, Rob Reiner’s most notable role was as Michael Stivic in the long-running American television series All in the Family. Michael Stivic was the not-too-bright comic foil for his right-wing, racist father-in-law, Archie Bunker. Thus, from the beginning of Reiner’s career, several elements become apparent that are important to his development as a director: 1) a profound sympathy for the actor and the concomitant empathy to elicit skillful performances; 2) a deep understanding of comedy and satire and, more generally, an innate feel for timing and structure; and 3) an inherently liberal, humanistic sensibility.

If Reiner’s facility as a comic gives him great abilities of observation, its negative side is that his career has been by and large a series of very skillful imitations of other directors and other styles. In this context, it is hard to think of Reiner as a major Hollywood artist, no matter how successful his films. Indeed, Reiner would have made an extraordinary director at the heyday of the studio system, taking on the A-assignments with dazzling ability. So if Reiner has not yet demonstrated himself to be an auteur—like Woody Allen, with whom he has been compared, or like David Lynch, who seems a polar opposite—he is definitely a metteur en scène, like Sydney Lumet, Norman Jewison, or Sydney Pollack. Reiner’s first film was a mock documentary, This Is Spinal Tap, directed in 1984 and perhaps still one of his finest films. The basic concept of the mock documentary had been undertaken by many before, most notably by Peter Watkins in the 1960s or more popularly by Woody Allen in Zelig the year before. Reiner’s sincerity is apparent in that all satire inherently admits its basis in imitation: and This Is Spinal Tap satirizes the documentary genre, as well as rock documentary and rock bands themselves. A young, hip movie with surprising subtlety, This Is Spinal Tap became a cult film and one of the few Reiner films more popular today than when it was released. Some elements of the rock satire include the early, tragic death of a band member (in this case, a drummer), the physical transformation of the band (a short-lived foray into Kiss-like makeup), the girlfriend involved in the band who virtually destroys it (a la Yoko Ono or Linda McCartney), and of course, life on the road (which includes the most brilliant pseudo-verite repartee). Throughout, the film’s deadpan rhythms are virtually perfect—for instance, Spinal Tap’s manager, Ian, intones, “There’s no sex and drugs for Ian, David. I find lost luggage!”

This Is Spinal Tap was followed by a modest, dramatic film, The Sure Thing, a sweet and low-budget coming-of-age story which showed Reiner’s abilities to get very good, charming performances—in this case, from his leads Daphne Zuniga and John Cusack. The Sure Thing, if slight, was well observed, a kind of contemporary It Happened One Night offering a fairly credible view of college students, a not inconsiderable task, rarely accomplished. However, Reiner’s breakthrough film was the higher-budget Stand by Me. A fully realized film based on a very short, uncharacteristic story by Stephen King, Stand by Me presented a day or so in the lives of four pre-adolescent boys. A derivative coming-of-age story which seemed to emulate Francois Truffaut (Les Mistsons) or outright imitate Robert Mulligan (Summer of ’42), Stand by Me is very entertaining, if manipulative, and designed to appeal to the nostalgia of the yuppie-filled to the brim with references to Pez candy, Walt Disney’s Goofy, the Wagon Train television series, and so forth. By the revelations at the end, which propel the characters to their adult fates through the use of voice-over narration, the director clearly has the audience exactly where he wants them for the film’s final, sentimental line: “I never had any friends later on like the ones I had when I was twelve. Jesus, does anyone?” If Stand by Me holds up in the future, it will be as much for the unusually skillful performances Reiner has elicited from his very young actors, including wonderful work from the late River Phoenix in one of his first films.

The Princess Bride was a huge success in 1987. In this film, Reiner told a whimsical fantasy story, changing his style yet again—recalling Spielberg or Walt Disney, even. But an even bigger success came in 1989 with When Harry Met Sally, an absolutely hilarious comedy which made Billy Crystal and Meg Ryan breakaway movie stars. When Harry Met Sally attempted to answer, definitively, the philosophical question: Can straight men and women ever be true friends without sex causing problems? (No.) Virtually every commentator praising the film noted how overwhelmingly it imitated early Woody Allen (the funny period)—the style of joke, the use of music, the characterizations, the philosophical musings, everything. Indeed, it is not far-fetched to call When Harry Met Sally the best Woody Allen film that Allen never made. While the film added to Reiner’s reputation in Hollywood and endeared him to audiences, it also began to raise some doubts about his sincerity as an artist, with no personal sensibility clearly emerging.

Misery followed in 1990. Again based on Stephen King material, Misery was in yet another style—showing Reiner to be the most clever study in all of Hollywood—this time emulating Hitchcock and his thrillers, if without Hitchcock’s moral sophistication. The story of a woman who keeps a famous writer her prisoner, Misery made Kathy Bates an Academy Award-winning star, and her line “I’m your biggest fan” a kind of cultural catch-phrase. A Few Good Men, released the next year, was a military courtroom drama evoking The Caine Mutiny Court Martial, A Soldier’s Story, and several contemporary films of the Reagan/Bush era, like Top Gun, which got great mileage out of men in uniforms. One senses that after having presented James Caan as a weak, passive man in Misery, and after having worked with young people and/or comedians in so many other films, Reiner was eager to show that he could make a man’s man kind of film: a solid, Hawksian drama. And indeed, multiple Academy Award nominations followed; the somewhat liberal, anti-establishment theme attracted enough attention to divert from the essential potboiler nature of the project. Probably lasting more than the film’s reputation will be the impressive scenery-chewing of Jack Nicholson in the key supporting role.

The critical and popular failure of the sentimental and vapid North in 1994 represented a surprise in the Reiner career, which, through seven films, had shown a steady increase in assurance and judgment, as well as in critical and popular success. North was a juvenile effort uneasily combining a Spielberg-like narrative about a boy who travels across the world to pick out better parents with trite references for their own sake to television and popular culture. Thankfully for Reiner, North was followed in late 1995 by a very strong film, The American President—a funny and moving romantic comedy with deft performances by Annette Bening and Michael Douglas. The American President emerges from Reiner’s sympathies for President Bill Clinton, the first liberal Democrat in the White House in twelve years, who was elected in 1992 with great Hollywood support and subsequently excoriated by right-wing commentators over character issues for most of his presidency. The American President, which wears its liberalism proudly on its sleeve, also clearly attacks the domination of the Republican Party by the ‘Christian Coalition’ and its mean-spirited intolerance—as represented by Bob Munson, a Kansas senator played by Richard Dreyfuss who is a clear composite of Kansas Senator Bob Dole and others like Phil Gramm, Newt Gingrich, and Pat Buchanan. The film abounds with fetching parallels to people around Clinton (his young advisor George Stephanopoulos, his daughter Chelsea, and so forth), as well as apparent insights into life in the White House. Certainly, most of Reiner’s films have been derivative of other directors, and this time it is Frank Capra, although the influence is acknowledged cheerfully and clearly in the dialogue, and Frank Capra III even serves as the film’s first assistant director.
Somehow, the Capra vision does not rankle here, not only because it is so suited and similar to Reiner’s (although Capra’s is darker and more complex), but because it is totally clear that the progressive Reiner believes passionately in his material, which gives the popular form that the film takes a great, contemporary resonance. By the film’s end, when the corrupt right-wingers see their influence waning as the president finally gives the speech so many have wished Clinton had given, it is hard—if you possess a liberal vision—not to be moved by Reiner’s popular entertainment. Interesting, too, is that Reiner off-screen started taking on the role as spokesperson for liberal Hollywood; indeed, in response to Senator Dole’s 1995 (very selective) attacks on Hollywood for trashing American cultural values, Reiner became one of Hollywood’s most eloquent and public defenders.
Independently, Reiner even proposed and then tirelessly worked for California’s Proposition 10, an initiative to impose additional cigarette taxes in order to support children’s health issues.

Unfortunately, Reiner’s last two theatrical films, Ghosts of Mississippi in 1996 and The Story of Us in 1999 were not particularly well received. The melodramatic Ghosts of Mississippi, which is animated by the director’s heartfelt liberal convictions, presents the story of the white prosecutor who won a murder conviction in 1990 against Byron
De La Beckwith, the bigot who assassinated civil rights hero Medgar Evers in 1963. Although Ghosts of Mississippi was criticized for its narrative strategy of emphasizing the efforts of its white hero and almost completely ignoring the accomplishments of its black martyr, this criticism seems misguided, for the film’s focus is clearly on the failure of white America to take an uncompromising stand for justice.
Indeed, Reiner is particularly skilfully at presenting the continuing and subtle racism among his upper-class whites in the Mississippi of 1990. Although arguably a shallow film, Ghosts of Mississippi is nevertheless a melodrama with a bombastic power: when, for instance, the bigoted murderer piously announces “I got tears in my eyes . . . for Dixie,” Reiner cuts to the tearful widow of Evers on her knees, scrubbing her husband’s blood off their driveway. More ironies accrue as the prosecutor must actually discard his wife—who is named Dixie—in order to effect justice. As is typical in a Reiner film, performances are extraordinary, particularly James Wood’s scenery-chewing in old-man make-up as De La Beckwith, which received an Academy award nomination. The Story of Us is harder to defend. A comedy in the vein of When Harry Met Sally, if more melancholy, The Story of Us analyzes the fundamental differences between men and women within the context of a dissolving marriage.
Although the film evokes the superior Stanley Donen film Two for the Road, it unfortunately feels tedious and formless, dominated by direct-address, voice-over, and unrelated scenes linked only by its stars looking wistful as they try to figure out what went wrong. That The American President (written by Aaron Sorkin), for instance, is so much more engaging and successful, is a sign of how much Reiner’s films really owe to their screenwriters. The Capra-esque happy ending which works so well in The American President, in The Story of Us seems unjustified and unearned—an hypocrisy that contradicts the entire film preceding it, existing only to allow Michelle Pfeiffer her own climactic, histrionic performance opportunity. Unfortunately, too, is that the generally feminist Reiner seems to have lost his bearings, giving in to a casual sexism which implies the woman is more responsible for the marital woes than the man. Clearly, although Reiner can soar when given superior material, he is unable to transcend mediocre material.

Finally, it is necessary to comment on Reiner’s overall persona as a performer—for he is a genuinely talented comic actor, clever and canny, who has given a variety of skillful, light performances (notably in Nora Ephron’s Sleepless in Seattle and Woody Allen’s Bullets over Broadway). With a remarkable lack of self-consciousness, Reiner seems to be forming a recent acting career from deviously satirical self-portraits, as in Mike Nichols’ Postcards from the Edge—a film that comically presents the relationship between a parent and adult child in the film industry (based on Debbie Reynolds and Carrie Fisher) and which undoubtedly resonates for Reiner. He has contributed witty, if brief work, too, in Mike Nichols’ 1998 Primary Colors, and a reflexive performance playing himself in Albert Brooks’ 1999 film The Muse. Ultimately, as a performer as well as director, Reiner is nothing if not likeable, and seems giving, open, and unpretentious.

—Charles Derry

REISZ, Karel

Nationality: Czechoslovakian/British. Born: Ostrava, Czechoslovaki, 21 July 1926. Education: Leighton Park School, Reading, England, 1938–44; Emmanuel College, Cambridge, 1945–47. Family: Married 1) Julia Coppard (divorced); 2) Betsy Blair, 1963, three sons. Career: Arrived in England as refugee from Nazi threat, 1938; joined Czechoslovakian wing of R.A.F., 1944–45; teacher in London grammar school, 1947–49; film critic for Sequence and Sight and Sound, from 1950; programme director for National Film Theatre, London, 1952–55; ‘‘officer of commercials’’ for Ford Motor Co. in

Films as Director:

1956 Momma Don’t Allow (co-d)
1959 We Are the Lambeth Boys (doc)
1960 Saturday Night and Sunday Morning
1964 Night Must Fall (+ co-pr)
1966 Morgan, a Suitable Case for Treatment (Morgan!)
1968 Isadora (The Loves of Isadora)
1974 The Gambler
1978 Who’ll Stop the Rain (Dog Soldiers)
1981 The French Lieutenant’s Woman
1985 Sweet Dreams
1989 Everybody Wins

Other Films:

1957 Every Day except Christmas (Anderson) (co-pr)
1963 This Sporting Life (Anderson) (pr)
Karel Reisz (left) and John Fowles on the set of The French Lieutenant’s Woman

Publications

By REISZ: book—

By REISZ: articles—

“Experiment at Brussels,” in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1958.

Interview with Gene D. Phillips, in Cinema (Los Angeles), Summer 1968.

“Recontre avec Karel Reisz,” an interview with Francis Donovan, in Cinéma 72, November 1990.

Interview with Tomáš Liška, in Film a Doba (Prague), Winter 1996.

On REISZ: books—

On REIZS: articles—

Hoggart, Richard, “We Are the Lambeth Boys,” in Sight and Sound (London), Summer/Autumn 1959.

* * *

Karel Reisz came to filmmaking from the world of academia and scholarship. He had taught in an English grammar school, written film criticism, co-edited with Lindsay Anderson the last issue of the slightly snooty magazine Sequence, and written a theoretical textbook still in use today on film editing techniques (without having spent one working day in the industry). With such a background, it was obvious he would have preconceived notions about filmmaking, but they were notions without regard to established filmmaking practices. Reisz wanted to improve the British film industry (also the critical aim of Sequence). He had his first opportunity to do so with two documentary shorts, Momma Don’t Allow (co-directed with Tony Richardson) and We Are the Lambeth Boys. In these films, Reisz depicted contemporary Britain from a working-class viewpoint, and when they were first screened at London’s National Film Theatre, they were presented along with films from Lindsay Anderson and others as “British Free Cinema.” In fact, these films were to herald a new wave in British filmmaking, which reached its zenith with Reisz’s first feature, Saturday Night and Sunday Morning. Jack Clayton’s Room at the Top paved the way for Saturday Night and Sunday Morning, a study of a tough, young machinist, played by Albert Finney, who takes out his frustrations with his work and his life through sex and alcohol. He is the quintessential British rebel, the English answer to James Dean, who takes his revenge on society by impregnating his boss’s wife. It is an uninhibited, fresh, and frank look at British working-class existence, and it brought critical fame to Karel Reisz.

The only problem was that Reisz seemed temporarily unable to follow up on that first success. (Reisz’s output is pathetically small: a sign perhaps not so much of a careful director as a director with whom producers feel uneasy.) Next, Reisz directed Albert Finney again in Night Must Fall, which had worked as a classic melodrama in the 1930s but had little relevance to the 1960s. The unconventionality of Morgan also seemed strained, and even a little pretentious (a claim that also can easily be made regarding Reisz’s outdated study of a Vietnam vet, Who’ll Stop the Rain?). It was not until Isadora that Reisz began to demonstrate a new side to his work, a romantic side, perhaps born of his Czech background (he did not come to Britain until he was twelve).

Both Isadora and The French Lieutenant’s Woman showed that Reisz had discovered how to successfully blend romanticism and the realism of his first films. In Isadora it is perhaps a little more subtly accomplished than in The French Lieutenant’s Woman, where the two elements fight against each other for existence.

As to his directorial techniques, Reisz appears to be very willing to listen to others. He is quoted as saying, “For me the great thing about a film is to allow everyone to make their contribution and to keep the process fluid. The process of adaptation is a free process and the process of rehearsal is a free process and the process of shooting is a free process.” Free process, free cinema, and a healthy freedom in his choice of subjects have marked Reisz’s career to date.

—Anthony Slide

RENOIR, Jean

Jean Renoir (standing atop camera) on the set of French Cancan

Films as Director:

1925 La Fille de l’eau (+ pr)
1926 Nana (+ pr, adaptation)
1927 Catherine (Une vie sans joie; Backbiters) (co-d, co-pr, sc, role as sub-prefect); Sur un air de Charleston (Charleston-Parade) (+ pr, ed); Marquitta (+ pr, adaptation)
1928 La Petite Marchande d’allumettes (The Little Match Girl) (co-d, co-pr, sc)
1928 Tire au flanc (+ co-sc); Le Tournoi dans la cité (Le Tournoi) (+ adaptation)
1929 Le Bled
1931 On purge bébé (+ co-sc); La Chienne (+ co-sc)
1932 La Nuit du carrefour (Night at the Crossroads) (+ sc); Boudu sauvé des eaux (Boudu Saved from Drowning) (+ co-sc)
1933 Chotard et cie (+ co-sc)
1934 Madame Bovary (+ sc)
1935 Toni (Les Amours de Toni) (+ co-sc)
1936 Le Crime de Monsieur LANGE (The Crime of Monsieur Lange) (+ co-sc); La Vie est à nous (The People of France) (co-d, co-sc); Les Bas-Fonds (Underworld; The Lower Depths) (+ adaptation)
1937 La Grande Illusion (Grand Illusion) (+ co-sc)
1938 La Marseillaise (+ co-sc); La Bête humaine (The Human Beast; Judas Was a Woman) (+ co-sc)
1939 La Règle du jeu (Rules of the Game) (+ co-sc, role as Octave)
1941 La Tosca (The Story of Tosca) (co-d, co-sc); Swamp Water
1943 This Land Is Mine (+ co-p, co-sc)
1944 Salute to France (Salut à France) (co-d, co-sc)
1945 The Southerner (+ sc)
1946 Une Partie de campagne (A Day in the Country) (+ sc) (filmed in 1936); The Diary of a Chambermaid (+ co-sc)
1947 The Woman on the Beach (+ co-sc)
1951 The River (+ co-sc)
1953 Le Carrosse d’or (The Golden Coach) (+ co-sc)
1955 French Cancan (Only the French Can) (+ sc)
1956 Elena et les hommes (Paris Does Strange Things) (+ sc)
1959  Le Testament du Docteur Cordelier (The Testament of Dr. Cordelier; Experiment in Evil) (+ sc); Le Déjeuner sur l’herbe (Picnic on the Grass) (+ sc)
1962  Le Caporal épingle (The Elusive Corporal; The Vanishing Corporal) (co-d, co-sc)
1970  Le Petit Théâtre de Jean Renoir (The Little Theatre of Jean Renoir) (+ sc)

Other Films:
1927  Le Petit Chaperon rouge (Cavalcanti) (co-sc, role as the Wolf)
1930  Die Jagd nach dem Glück (Gliese) (role as Robert)
1937  The Spanish Earth (Ivens) (wrote commentary and narration for French version)
1971  The Christian Licorice Store (Frawley) (role as himself)

Publications

By RENOIR: books—

BThis Land Is Mine, in Twenty Best Film Plays, edited by Gassner and Nichols, New York, 1943.

BThe Southerner, in Best Film Plays—1945, edited by Gassner and Nichols, New York, 1946.

BThe Notebooks of Captain George, Boston, 1966.

By RENOIR: articles—

“Renoir at 72,’’ an interview with Axel Madsen, in Cinema (Los Angeles), Spring 1966.

“The Situation of the Serious Filmmaker,’’ in Film Makers on Film Making, edited by Harry Geduld, Bloomington, Indiana, 1967.

“My Next Films,’’ an interview with Michel Delahaye and Jean-André Fieschi, in Cahiers du Cinéma in English (New York), March 1967.

Interview with Rui Nogueira and François Truchaud, in Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1968.

“C’est la révolution! (Crème de beauté),’’ in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), May 1968.

Articles and interview, in special Renoir issue of Positif (Paris), September 1975.

On RENOIR: books—

Durgnat, Raymond, Jean Renoir, Berkeley, California, 1974.

On RENOIR: articles—

Belanger, Jean, ‘‘Why Renoir Favors Multiple Camera, Long Sustained Take Technique,’’ in American Cinematographer (Los Angeles), March 1960.
Dyer, Peter, ‘‘Renoir and Realism,’’ in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1960.
Callenbach, Ernst, and Roberta Schuldenfrei, ‘‘The Presence of Jean Renoir,’’ in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Winter 1960.
Godard, Jean-Luc, ‘‘Jean Renoir and Television,’’ in Godard on Godard, London, 1972.
Diehl, Digby, ‘‘Directors Go to Their Movies: Jean Renoir,’’ in Action (Los Angeles), May/June 1972.
Fofi, Goffredo, ‘‘The Cinema of the Popular Front in France (1934–38),’’ in Screen (London), Winter 1972/73.
Greenspun, Roger, ‘‘House and Garden: Three Films by Jean Renoir,’’ in Film Comment (New York), July/August 1974.
Thomas, P., ‘‘The Sorcerer’s Apprentice: Bazin and Truffaut on Renoir,’’ in Sight and Sound (London), Winter 1974/75.
‘‘Renoir Issue’’ of Cinema (Zurich), vol. 21, no. 4, 1975.
Turvey, G., ‘‘1936, the Culture of the Popular Front, and Jean Renoir,’’ in Media, Culture and Society (London), October 1982.
Eversen, William K., ‘‘Deana Durbin and Jean Renoir,’’ in Films in Review (New York), August/September 1986 (see also June/July and October 1987).

Bagh, Peter van, Jean Renoir ja elämän teatteri,’’ in Filmihulu (Helsinki), no. 6, 1994.
Positif (Paris), special section, July–August 1994.
Gallaher, Tag, ‘‘The Dancers and the Dance Jean Renoir,’’ in Film Comment (New York), vol. 32, January-February 1996.
Scorsese, Martin, ‘‘Ma cinéphile,’’ in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), no. 500, March 1996.
Williams, Alan, in Cineaste (New York), vol. 22, April 1996.

On RENOIR: films—

* * *

Jean Renoir’s major work dates from between 1924 and 1939. Of his 21 films the first six are silent features that put forward cinematic problems that come to dominate the entire oeuvre. All study a detachment, whether of language and image, humans and nature, or social rules and real conduct. Optical effects are treated as problems coextensive with narrative. He shows people who are told to obey rules and conventions in situations and social frames that confine them. A sensuous world is placed before everyone’s eyes, but access to it is confounded by cultural mores. In Renoir’s work, nature, like a frame without borders, isolates the impoverished subjects within limits at once too vast and too constricting for them. Inherited since the Cartesian revolution, and the growth of the middle class after 1789, bourgeois codes of conduct do not fit individuals whose desires and passion know no end.

The patterns established in the films appear simple, and they are. Renoir joins optical to social contradictions in the sense that every one of his films stages dramas about those who cannot conform to the frame in which they live. For the same reason his work also studies the dynamics of love in cinematography that marks how the effect is undeniably “scopic”—grounded in an impulse to see and thus to hold. Sight conveys the human wish to contain whatever is viewed, and to will to control what knows no border. As love cannot be contained, it becomes tantamount to nature itself.

The director has often been quoted as saying that he spent his life making one film. Were it fashioned from all of his finished works—including those composed in the 1920s or 1940s or 1960s in France, America, or India—it would tell the story of a collective humanity whose sense of tradition is effectively gratuitous or fake. The social milieu of many of his films is defined by a scapegoat who is killed in order to make that tradition both firm and precarious. All of Renoir’s central characters thus define the narratives and visual compositions in which they are found. Boudu (Michel Simon), who escapes the confinement of bourgeois ways in Boudu sauvé des eaux, is the opposite of Lestingois (Charles Granval), ensconced in a double-standard marriage à la Balzac. Boudu, a tramp, a trickster, and a refugee from La Chienne (1931), changes the imagination of his milieu by virtue of his passage through it. The effect he leaves resembles that of Amédée Lange (René Lefèvre) in Le Crime de Monsieur Lange, who gives life to a collective venture—an emblem of Leon Blum’s short-lived Popular Front government launched in 1936—that lives despite his delusions about the American West and the pulp he writes. Lange is the flip side of Jacques Lantier (Jean Gabin) of La Bête humaine (1938), a tragic hero whose suicide prefigures André Juriex’s (Roland Toutain’s) passion of La Règle du jeu (1939).

Boudu floats through the frame in ways that the migrant laborers of Toni or the souls of La Vie est à nous cannot. The latter are bound to conventions of capital exploitation that incorporate humanity. In these and other films the characters all “have their reasons,” that is, they have many contradictory drives that cannot be socially reconciled but that are individually well founded and impeccably logical on their own terms. When Renoir casts his characters’ plural “reasons” under an erotic aura, he offers superlative studies of love. His protagonists wish to find absolutism for their passion at the vanishing points of the landscapes—both imaginary and real—in which they try to move. The latter are impossible constructs, but their allure is nonetheless tendered within the sensuous frame of deep-focus photography, long takes, and lateral reframing. Rosenthal and Maréchal (Marcel Dalio and Gabin) seek an end to war when they tramp into the distance of a snowscape at the end of La Grande Illusion. Lange and Florelle (Valentine) wave goodbye as they walk into the flat horizon of Belgium. But Juriex can imagine love only as a picture-postcard when he and Christine (Nora Grégor), he hopes in desperation, will rejoin his mother in snowy Alsace. Or Lantier can be imagined jumping from his speeding locomotive into a space where the two tracks of the railroad converge, at infinity, beyond the line between Paris and Le Havre. In Une Partie de campagne, Henri (Georges Darnoux), frustrated beyond end at the sight of melancholy Juliette (Sylvia Bataille) rowing upstream with her husband sitting behind her in their skiff, looks tearfully at the lush Marne riverside. Sitting on the trunk of a weeping willow arched over the current, he flicks his cigarette butt in the water, unable to express otherwise the fate he has been dealt.

These scenes are shot with an economy that underscores the pathos Renoir draws from figures trapped in situations too vast for their ken or their lives. If generalization can seek an emblem, Renoir’s films appear to lead to a serre, the transparent closure of the greenhouse that serves as the site of the dénouement of La Règle du jeu. The “serre” is literally what constricts, or what has deceptive depth for its beholder. It is the scene where love is acted out and extinguished by the onlooker. The space typifies what Renoir called “the feeling of a frame too narrow for the content” of the dramas he selected from a literary heritage (Madame Bovary, The Lower Depths) or wrote himself, such as Rules. Renoir’s films have an added intensity and force when viewed in the 1990s. They manifest an urgent concern for the natural world and demonstrate that we are the “human beast” destroying it. Clearly opposed to the effects of capitalism, Renoir offers glimpses of sensuous worlds that seem to arch beyond history. A viewer of La Fille de l’eau (1924), Boudu, or Toni surmises that trees have far more elegance than the characters turning about them, or that, echoing Baudelaire’s pronouncements in his Salons of 1859, landscapes lacking the human species are of enduring beauty. Renoir puts forth studies of the conflict of language and culture in physical worlds that possess an autonomy of their own. His characters are gauged according to the distance they gain from their environments or the codes that tell them how to act and to live. Inevitably, Renoir’s characters are marked by writing. Boudu, a reincarnation of Pan and Nature itself, can only read “big letters.” By contrast, Lantier is wedded to his locomotive, a sort of writing machine he calls “l’a lison.” The urbane La Chesnaye (Dalio) in Rules cannot live without his writing, the “dangerous supplements” of mechanical dolls, a calliope, or human toys. These objects reflect in the narrative the filmic apparatus that crafted Renoir’s work as a model of film writing, a “caméra-stylo,” or ciné-écriture. Use of deep focus and long takes affords diversity and chance. With the narratives, they constitute Renoir’s signature, the basis of the concept and practice of the auteur.

Renoir’s oeuvre stands as a monument and a model of cinematography. By summoning the conditions of illusion and artifice of film, it rises out of the massive production of poetic realism of the 1930s in France. He develops a style that is the very tenor of a vehicle studying social contradiction. The films implicitly theorize the limits that cinema confronts in any narrative or documentary depiction of our world.

—Tom Conley

RESNAIS, Alain

Films as Director:

1946 Ouvert pour cause d’inventaire (short); Schéma d’une identification (short)
1947 Visite à Lucien Coutaud (short); Visite à Félix Labisse (short); Visite à Hans Hartung (short); Visite à César Domela (short); Visite à Oscar Dominguez (short); Portrait d’Henri Goetz (short); La Bague (short); Journée naturelle (short); L’Alcool tue (short) (+ ph, ed)
1948 Les Jardins de Paris (short) (+ ph, ed); Châteaux de France (short) (+ sc, ph, ed); Van Gogh (short); Malfray (short) (co-d); Van Gogh (+ ed)
1950 Gauguin (short) (+ ed); Guernica (short) (co-d, ed)
1953 Les Statues meurent aussi (short) (co-d, co-sc, ed)
1955 Nuit et brouillard (Night and Fog) (short)
1956 Toute la mémoire du monde (short) (+ ed)
1957 Le Mystère de l’Atelier Quinze (short) (co-d)
1958 Le Chant de Sylvestre (short) (+ ed)
1959 Hiroshima mon amour
1961 L’Année dernière à Marienbad (Last Year at Marienbad)
1963 Muriel, ou le temps d’un retour
Alain Resnais (behind camera) on the set of Toute la mémoire du monde

1966  La Guerre est finie (The War Is Over)
1967  Loin du Viêt-Nam (Far from Vietnam) (co-d)
1968  Je t’aime, je t’aime (+ co-sc)
1974  Stavisky
1977  Providence
1980  Mon Oncle d’Amérique
1983  La Vie est un roman (Life Is a Bed of Roses)
1984  L’Amour à mort
1986  Mélo
1989  I Want to Go Home
1992  Gershwin (video)
1993  Smoking; No Smoking
1997  On connaît la chanson (Same Old Song)

1952  Saint-Tropez, devoir de vacances (ed)
1955  La Pointe courte (ed)
1957  L’Oeil du maître (ed); Broadway by Light (ed)
1958  Paris à l’automne (ed)

Publications

By RESNAIS: books—

By RESNAIS: articles—

Interview with François Truffaut, in Arts (Paris), 20 February 1956.

“A Conversation with Alain Resnais,” with Noël Burch, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1960.
Interview with André Labarthe and Jacques Rivette, in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), September 1961; reprinted in English in Films and Filming (London), February 1962.

Interview with Penelope Houston, in Sight and Sound (London), Winter 1961/62.

“Trying to Understand My Own Film,” in Films and Filming (London), February 1962.

Interview with Marcel Martin, in Cinéma (Paris), December 1964 and January 1965.

Interview with Adrian Maben, in Films and Filming (London), October 1966.

“Last Words on Last Year: Discussion with Alain Resnais and Alain Robbe-Grillet,” in Films and Filming (London), March 1969.

Interview with Win Sharples Jr., in Filmmaker’s Newsletter (Ward Hill, Massachusetts), December 1974.

“Conversations with Alan Resnais,” with James Monaco, in Film Comment (New York), July/August 1975.

Interview with S. Daney and others, in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), May 1983.

Interview with A. Finnane, in Cinema Papers (Melbourne), December 1984.

Interview with Robert Benayoun, and others, in Positif (Paris), September 1986.

Interview with Patrick Duynslaegher and Philip Kemp, in Sight and Sound (London), December 1998.

On RESNAIS: articles—

Dossier on Resnais, in Cinématographe (Paris), April 1982.

On RESNAIS: books—

Alain Resnais, Premier Plan no. 18, October 1961.

Ward, John, Alain Resnais, or the Theme of Time, New York, 1968.

Kreidl, John Francis, Alain Resnais, Boston, 1977.

Monaco, James, Alain Resnais: The Role of Imagination, New York, 1978.

Sweet, Freddy, The Film Narratives of Alain Resnais, Ann Arbor, Michigan, 1981.

Cremonini, Giorgio, “‘30 ragioni per amare Resnais,’” in Cineforum (Bergamo), July-August 1996.

* * *

Alain Resnais is a prominent figure in the modernist narrative film tradition. His emergence as a feature director of international repute is affiliated with the eruption of the French New Wave in the late 1950s. This association was signaled by the fact that his first feature, Hiroshima mon amour, premiered at the Cannes Film Festival at the same time as François Truffaut’s Les 400 coups. However, Resnais had less to do with the group of directors emerging from the context of the Cahiers du cinéma than he did with the so-called Left Bank group, including Jean Cayrol, Marguerite Duras, Chris Marker, and Alain Robbe-Grillet. This group provided an intellectual and creative context of shared interest. In the course of his film career Resnais frequently collaborated with members of this group. Marker worked with him on several short films in the 1950s; Cayrol wrote the narration for Nuit et brouillard and the script for Muriel; Duras scripted Hiroshima mon amour; and Robbe-Grillet wrote _L’Année dernière à Marienbad_. All of these people are known as writers and/or filmmakers in their own right; their association with Resnais is indicative of his talent for fruitful creative collaboration.

Resnais began making films as a youth in 8 and 16mm. In the early 1940s he studied acting and filmmaking, and after the war made a number of 16mm films, including a series about artists. His first film in 35mm was the 1948 short, Van Gogh, which won a number of international awards. It was produced by Pierre Braunberger, an active supporter of new talent, who continued to finance his work in the short film format through the 1950s. From 1948–58 Resnais made eight short films, of which Nuit et brouillard is probably the best known. The film deals with German concentration camps, juxtaposing past and present, exploring the nature of memory and history. To some extent the film’s reputation and the sustained interest it has enjoyed is due to its subject matter. However, many of the film’s formal strategies and thematic concerns are characteristic of Resnais’s work more generally. In particular, the relationship between past and present, and the function of memory as the mechanism of traversing temporal distance, are persistent preoccupations of Resnais’s films. Other films from this period similarly reveal familiar themes and traits of Resnais’s subsequent work. Toute la mémoire du monde is a documentary about the Bibliothèque Nationale in Paris. It presents the building, with its processes of cataloguing and preserving all sorts of printed material, as both a monument of cultural memory and as a monstrous, alien being. The film almost succeeds in transforming the documentary film into a branch of science fiction.

Indeed, Resnais has always been interested in science fiction, the fantastic, and pulp adventure stories. If this interest is most overtly expressed in the narrative of Je t’aime, je t’aime (in which a human being is a guinea pig for scientists experimenting with time travel), it also emerges in the play of fantasy/imagination/reality pervading his work, and in many of his unachieved projects (including a remake of Fantômas and The Adventure of Harry Dickson).

Through editing and an emphasis on formal repetition, Resnais uses the medium to construct the conjunctions of past and present, fantasy and reality, insisting on the convergence of what are usually considered distinct domains of experience. In Hiroshima mon amour the quivering hand of the woman’s sleeping Japanese lover in the film’s present is directly followed by an almost identical image of her nearly dead German lover during World War II. Tracking shots through the streets of Hiroshima merge with similar shots of Nevers, where the woman lived during the war. In Stavisky, the cutting between events in 1933 and a 1934 investigation of those events presents numerous, often conflicting versions of the same thing; one is finally convinced, above all else, of the indeterminacy and contingency of major historical events. And in Providence, the central character is an aged writer who spends a troubled night weaving stories about his family, conjoining memory and fantasy, past, present, and future, in an unstable mix.

The past’s insistent invasion of the present is expressed in many different ways in Resnais’s films. In Nuit et brouillard, where the death camps are both present structures and repressed institutions, it is a question of social memory and history; it is an individual and cultural phenomenon in Hiroshima mon amour, as a French woman simultaneously confronts her experiences in occupied France and the Japanese experience of the atomic bomb; it is construed in terms of science fiction in Je t’aime, je t’aime when the hero is trapped in a broken time-machine and continuously relives moments from his past; and it is a profoundly ambiguous mixture of an individual’s real and imagined past in L’Année dernière à Marienbad (often considered Resnais’s most avant-garde film) as X pursues A with insistence, recalling their love affair and promises of the previous year, in spite of A’s denials. In all of these films, as well as Resnais’s other work, the past is fraught with uncertainty, anxiety, even terror. If it is more comfortable to ignore, it inevitably erupts in the present through the workings of the psyche, memory traces, or in the form of documentation and artifacts.

In recent years, Resnais’s presence on the international film scene barely has been noticed. While serious and provocative in intention, none of his films have measured up to his earlier work. However, in the early 1980s, he did direct two strikingly original films which are outstanding additions to his filmography.

In Mon Oncle d’Amérique, Resnais probes human responses and relations by illustrating the theories of Henri Laborit, a French research biologist. The scenario’s focus is on the intertwined relationship between three everyday characters: a Catholic farm boy who has become a textile plant manager (Gerard Depardieu); a former young communist who now is an actress (Nicole Garcia); and a conformist (Roger Pierre) who is married to his childhood sweetheart. La vie est un roman (Life Is a Bed of Roses) is a bewitching allegory contrasting the accounts of a rich man (Ruggero Raimondi) constructing a ‘temple of happiness’ around the time of World War I, and a seminar on education being held at that location decades later. Resnais’s points are that there are no easy answers to complex dilemmas and, most tellingly, that individuals who attempt to dictate to others their concepts of perfection are as equally destructive as those whose actions result in outright chaos.

Resnais’s filmic output has been relatively small. He nonetheless stands as a significant figure in modernist cinema. His strategies of fragmented point-of-view and multiple temporality, as well as his use of the medium to convey past/present and fantasy/imagination/reality as equivocal and equivalent modes of experience have amplified our understanding of film’s capacity for expression.

—M. B. White, updated by Rob Edelman
RICHARDSON, Tony

Films as Director:

1955 Momma Don’t Allow (co-d)
1959 Look Back in Anger
1960 The Entertainer
1961 Sanctuary; A Taste of Honey (+ pr, co-sc)
1962 The Loneliness of the Long-Distance Runner (+ pr)
1963 Tom Jones (+ pr)
1965 The Loved One; Mademoiselle
1967 The Sailor from Gibraltar (+ co-sc)
1968 Red and Blue; The Charge of the Light Brigade
1969 Laughter in the Dark (La Chambre obscure); Hamlet
1970 Ned Kelly (+ co-sc)
1971 A Delicate Balance; Dead Cert
1977 Joseph Andrews (+ co-sc)
1978 Death in Canaan
1982 The Border
1984 Hotel New Hampshire (+ sc)
1985 Turning a Blind Eye (doc)
1990 Blue Sky

Other Films:

1960 Saturday Night and Sunday Morning (Reisz) (pr)
1964 Girl with Green Eyes (Davis) (exec pr)

Publications

By RICHARDSON: book—

By RICHARDSON: articles—

“Tony Richardson: An Interview in Los Angeles,” with Colin Young, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Summer 1960.

On RICHARDSON: books—

On RICHARDSON: articles—

“Director,” in New Yorker, 12 October 1963.
Moller, David, “Britain’s Busiest Angry Young Man,” in Film Comment (New York), Winter 1964.
Lellis, George, “Recent Richardson,” in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1969.
Gomez, Joseph, “The Entertainer: From Play to Film,” in Film Heritage (Dayton, Ohio), Spring 1973.
Obituary, in EPD Film (Frankfurt), vol. 9, January 1992.
Obituary, in Film en Televisie (Brussels), January 1992.

* * *

Tony Richardson belongs to that generation of British film directors which includes Lindsay Anderson and Karel Reisz, all of them university-trained middle-class artists who were sympathetic to the conditions of the working classes and determined to use cinema as a means of personal expression, in line with the goals of the “Free Cinema” movement. After Oxford, he enrolled in a directors’ training program at the British Broadcasting Corporation before turning to theatre and founding, with George Devine, the English Stage Company in 1955 at London’s Royal Court Theatre—a company that was to include writers Harold Pinter and John Osborne. Among Richardson’s Royal Court productions were Look Back in Anger, A Taste of Honey, and The Entertainer, dramatic vehicles that he would later transform into cinema.
Tony Richardson (seated at right) on the set of The Hotel New Hampshire

Also in 1955, working with Karel Reisz, Richardson co-directed his first short film, Momma Don’t Allow, funded by a grant from the British Film Institute and one of the original productions of the “Free Cinema” movement. Richardson’s realistic treatment of the works of John Osborne (Look Back in Anger), Shelagh Delaney (A Taste of Honey), and Alan Sillitoe (Loneliness of the Long-Distance Runner) would infuse British cinema with the “kitchen sink” realism Richardson had helped to encourage in the British theatre. Indeed, Richardson’s link with the “Angry Young Men” of the theatre was firmly established before he and John Osborne founded their film production unit, Woodfall, in 1958 for the making of Look Back in Anger. Richardson’s strongest talent has been to adapt literary and dramatic works to the screen. In 1961 he turned to Hollywood, where he directed an adaptation of Faulkner’s Sanctuary, which he later described as arguably his worst film. His most popular success, however, was Tom Jones, his brilliant adaptation and abridgement of Henry Fielding’s often rambling eighteenth-century novel, which in other hands would not have been a very promising film project but which, under Richardson’s direction, won four Academy Awards in 1963. In 1977 Richardson tried to repeat his earlier success by adapting Fielding’s other great comic novel, Joseph Andrews, to the screen, but though the story was effectively shaped by Richardson and the casting was splendid, the film was not the overwhelming commercial success that Tom Jones had been. Nonetheless, Vincent Canby singled out Joseph Andrews as “the year’s most cheerful movie . . . and probably the most neglected movie of the decade.”

Other adaptations and literary collaborations included The Loved One (Evelyn Waugh), Mademoiselle (Jean Genet), The Sailor from Gibraltar (Marguerite Duras), Laughter in the Dark (Nabokov), and A Delicate Balance (Albee). Perhaps Richardson’s most enduring dramatic adaptation, however, is his rendering of Hamlet, filmed in 1969, remarkable for the eccentric but effective performance by Nicol
Williamson as Hamlet which it captures for posterity, and also for Anthony Hopkins’s sinister Claudius. Filmed at the Roundhouse Theatre in London where it was originally produced, it is a brilliant exercise in filmed theatre in the way it keeps the actors at the forefront of the action, allowing them to dominate the play as they would do on stage. Richardson has defined cinema as a director’s medium, but his Hamlet effectively treats it as an actor’s medium, as perhaps no other filmed production has done.

Other Richardson films seem to place a premium upon individualism, as witnessed by his treatment of the legendary Australian outlaw Ned Kelly (starring Mick Jagger, a project Karel Reisz had first undertaken with Albert Finney). This concern for the individual can also be discerned ten years later in The Border, a film Richardson completed for Universal Pictures in 1982, starring Jack Nicholson as a guard on the Mexican-American border, a loner who fights for human values against a corrupt constabulary establishment. Unfortunately The Border, which turned out to be a caricatured and flawed melodrama, did not reflect the director’s intentions in its released form, since Universal Studios apparently wanted—and got—“a much more up-beat ending where Nicholson emerges as a hero.” That a talented director of considerable vision, intelligence, and accomplishment should experience such an impasse is a sorry commentary. Nonetheless, Richardson migrated to the Hollywood Hills by choice and claimed to prefer California to his native England.

—James M. Welsh

RIEFENSTAHL, Leni

Films as Director:

1932 Das blaue Licht (The Blue Light) (+ co-sc, role as Junta)
1933 Sieg des Glaubens (Victory of the Faith)
1935 Triumph des Willens (Triumph of the Will) (+ pr, ed); Tag der Freiheit: unsere Wermacht (+ ed)
1938 Olympia (Olympische Spiele 1936) (+ sc, co-ph, ed)
1944 Tiefland (Lowland) (+ sc, ed, role as Marta) (released 1954)

Films as Actress:

1926 Der heilige Berg (Fanck)
1927 Der grosse Sprung (Fanck)
1929 Das Schicksal derer von Hapsburg (Raffé); Die weisses Hölle vom Piz Palü (Fanck)
1930 Stürme über dem Montblanc (Fanck)
1931 Der weiss Rausch (Fanck)
1933 S.O.S. Eisberg (Fanck)
1993 Die Macht der Bilder: Leni Riefenstahl (The Power of the Image: Leni Riefenstahl) (Müller) (role as herself)
1995 Die Nacht der Regisseure (Night of the Filmmakers) (Reitz) (role as herself)

Publications

By RIEFENSTAHL: books—

Kampf in Schnee und Eis, Leipzig, 1933.
Hinter den Kulissen des Reichsparteitagsfilms, Munich, 1935
(uncredited ghost writer Ernst Jaeger).
Schönheit im Olympischen Kampf, Berlin, 1937.
The Last of the Nuba, New York, 1974.

By RIEFENSTAHL: articles—

Interview with Michel Delahaye, in Interviews with Film Directors, edited by Andrew Sarris, New York, 1967.
“A Reply to Paul Rotha,” with Kevin Brownlow, in Film (London), Spring 1967.
“Statement on Sarris-Gessner Quarrel about Olympia,” in Film Comment (New York), Fall 1967.
Interview with Herman Weigel, in Filmkritik (Munich), August 1972.
“After a Half-Century, Leni Riefenstahl Confronts the U.S.,” in Film Culture (New York), Winter 1996.

On RIEFENSTAHL: books—

Infield, Glenn, Leni Riefenstahl, the Fallen Film Goddess, New York, 1976.
Berg-Pan, Renata, Leni Riefenstahl, Boston, 1980.
Graham, Cooper C., Leni Riefenstahl and Olympia, Metuchen, New Jersey, 1986.

On RIEFENSTAHL: articles—

Gunston, David, “Leni Riefenstahl,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Fall 1960.
“Riefenstahl Issue” of Film Culture (New York), Spring 1973.
“Zur Riefenstahl-Renaissance,” special issue of Frauen und Film (Berlin), December 1977.
Hitchens, Gordon, “Recent Riefenstahl Activities and a Commentary on Nazi Propaganda Filmmaking,” in Film Culture (New York), Winter 1996.
Cohn, H., “‘From the Mailbag: Offended by Honor to Riefenstahl,’” in Classic Images (Muscatine), November 1997.
On RIEFENSTAHLDIRECTORS, 4th EDITION

The Night of the Film-makers, 1995.

* * *

The years 1932 to 1945 define the major filmmaking efforts of Leni Riefenstahl. Because she remained a German citizen making films in Hitler’s Third Reich, two at the Fuhrer’s request, she and her films were viewed as pro-Nazi. Riefenstahl claims she took no political position and committed no crimes. In 1948, a German court ruled that she was a follower of, not active in, the Nazi Party. Another court in 1952 reconfirmed her innocence of war crimes. But she is destined to remain a politically controversial filmmaker who made two films rated as masterpieces.

She began to learn filmmaking while acting in the mountain films of Arnold Fanck, her mentor. She made a mountain film of her own, The Blue Light, using smoke bombs to create “fog.” She used a red and green filter on the camera lens, over her cameraman’s objections, to obtain a novel magical effect. This film is Riefenstahl’s own favorite. She says it is the story of her own life. Hitler admired The Blue Light and asked her to photograph the Nazi Party Congress in Nuremberg. She agreed to make Victory of the Faith, which was not publicly viewed. Hitler then asked her to film the 1934 Nazi Party rally.

Triumph of the Will, an extraordinary work, shows Hitler arriving by plane to attend the rally. He proceeds through the crowded streets of Nuremberg, addresses speeches to civilians and uniformed troops, and reviews a five-hour parade. The question is: Did Riefenstahl make Triumph as pro-Nazi propaganda or not? “Cinematically dazzling and ideologically vicious,” is R. M. Barsam’s judgment. According to Barsam, three basic critical views of Triumph exist: 1) those who cannot appreciate the film at all, 2) those who can appreciate and understand the film, and 3) those who appreciate it in spite of the politics in the film.

Triumph premiered 29 March 1935, was declared a masterpiece, and subsequently earned three awards. Triumph poses questions of staging. Was the rally staged so that it could be filmed? Did the filming process shape the rally, give it meaning? Riefenstahl’s next film, Olympia, posed the question of financing. Did Nazi officialslom pay for the film to be made? Riefenstahl claims the film was made independently of any government support. Other opinions differ.

The improvisatory techniques Riefenstahl used to make Triumph were improved and elaborated to make Olympia. She and her crew worked sixteen-hour days, seven days a week. Olympia opens as Triumph does, with aerial scenes. Filmed in two parts, the peak of Olympia I is Jesse Owens’s running feat. The peak of Olympia II is the diving scenes. In an interview with Gordon Hitchens in 1964, Riefenstahl revealed her guidelines for making Olympia. She decided to make two films instead of one because “the form must excite the content and give it shape… . The law of film is architecture, balance. If the image is weak, strengthen the sound, and vice-versa; the total impact on the viewer should be 100 percent.” The secret of Olympia’s success, she affirmed, was its sound—all laboratory-made. Riefenstahl edited the film for a year and a half. It premiered 20 April 1938 and was declared a masterpiece, being awarded four prizes.

Riefenstahl’s career after the beginning of World War II is comprised of a dozen unfinished film projects. She began Penthesilea in 1939, Van Gogh in 1943, and Tiefland in 1944, releasing it in 1954. Riefenstahl acted the role of a Spanish girl in it while co-directing with G. W. Pabst this drama of peasant-landowner conflicts. Visiting Africa in 1956, she filmed Black Cargo, documenting the slave trade, but her film was ruined by incorrect laboratory procedures. In the 1960s, she lived with and photographed the Mesakin Nuba tribe in Africa.

Riefenstahl’s Triumph of the Will and Olympia are two of the greatest documentaries ever made. That is indisputable. And it also is indisputable that they are among the most notorious and controversial. Each has been lauded for its sheer artistry, yet damned for its content and vision of Adolph Hitler and a German nation poised on the edge of totalitarian barbarism. After years as a name in the cinema history books, Riefenstahl was back in the news in 1992. Memoiren, her autobiography, was first published in English as The Sieve of Time: The Memoirs of Leni Riefenstahl, and she was the subject of a documentary, Ray Müller’s The Wonderful, Horrible Life of Leni Riefenstahl. Clearly, Riefenstahl had written the book and participated in the documentary in an attempt to have the final word regarding the debate over her involvement with Hitler and the Third Reich.

The documentary, which is three hours in length, traces Riefenstahl’s undeniably remarkable life, from her success as a dancer and movie actress during the 1920s to her career as a director, her post-World War II censure, and her latter-day exploits as a still photographer. Still very much alive at age ninety-one, Riefenstahl is shown scuba diving, an activity she first took up in her seventies.

Riefenstahl is described at the outset as a “legend with many faces” and “the most influential filmmaker of the Third Reich.” The film goes on to serve as an investigation of her life. Was she an opportunist, as she so vehemently denies, or a victim? Was she a “feminist pioneer, or a woman of evil?” Riefenstahl wishes history to view her as she views herself: not as a collaborator but as an artist first and foremost, whose sole fault was to have been alive in the wrong place at the wrong moment in history, and who was exploited by political forces of which she was unaware.

Upon meeting Hitler, she says, “He seemed a modest, private individual.” She was “ignorant” of his ideas and politics, and “didn’t see the danger of anti-Semitism.” She claims to have acquiesced to making Triumph of the Will only after Hitler agreed that she would never have to make another film for him. To her, shooting Triumph was just a job. She wanted to make a film that was “interesting, one that was not with posed shots… . It had to be filmed the way an artist, not a politician, sees it.” The same holds true for Olympia, which features images of perfectly proportioned, God-like German athletes. When queried regarding the issue of whether these visuals reflect a fascist aesthetic, Riefenstahl refuses to answer directly, replaying again that art and politics are separate entities.

“If an artist dedicates himself totally to his work, he cannot think politically,” Riefenstahl says. Even in the late 1930s, she chose not to leave Germany because, as she observes, “I loved my homeland.” She claims that she hoped that reports of anti-Semitism were “isolated events.” And her image of Hitler was “shattered much too late… . My life fell apart because I believed in Hitler. People say of me, ‘She doesn’t want to know. She’ll always be a Nazi.’ [But] I was never a Nazi.”

“What am I guilty of?” Riefenstahl asks. “I regret [that I was alive during that period]. But I was never anti-Semitic. I never dropped any bombs.” Explained director Müller, after a New York Film Festival screening of the film, “She was an emancipated woman before there was even such a term. She has a super ego, which has been trod upon for half a century. . . . [She is] an artist and a perfectionist. I believe that she was purposefully blind not to look in the direction that would get her into trouble.’’

In this regard, The Wonderful, Horrible Life of Leni Riefenstahl ultimately works as a portrait of denial. As Müller so aptly observes, ‘‘Any artist has a great responsibility. Anyone who influences the public has this. She is possessed with her art. She says, ‘I’m only doing my thing.’ I think this is irresponsible. She may be obsessed and possessed, and a genius. But that does not exempt her from responsibility.’’

In 1995, Riefenstahl briefly resurfaced in Edgar Reitz’s The Night of the Film-Makers, consisting of interviews with German filmmakers from Frank Beyer to Wim Wenders. Eric Hansen, writing in Variety, summed up the essence of her appearance by noting, ‘‘Names like the ninety-two-year-old Leni Riefenstahl and young director Detlev Buck are allowed only a few self-glorying or sarcastic comments.’’

Perhaps the final word on Riefenstahl is found in Istvan Szabo’s Hanussen, a 1988 German-Hungarian film. Much of Hanussen is set in Germany between the world wars. One of the minor characters is a celebrated, egocentric woman artist, a member of the political inner circle, who surrounds herself with physical beauty while remaining callously unconcerned with all but her own vanity. Clearly, this character is based on Riefenstahl.

—Louise Heck-Rabi, updated by Rob Edelman

RIGGS, Marlon

Career: Worked for television station in Texas, 1978–79; moved to Berkeley, California, 1979; produced master’s thesis Long Train Running, University of California at Berkeley, 1981; worked for various producers and directors in documentary film, with particular focus on public television production, 1981–87; began producing, writing, and directing original films, 1987; part-time faculty member, School of Journalism at the University of California at Berkeley. Awards: Berlin International Film Festival Teddy Award for Best Documentary Film Award, Los Angeles Film Critics Association Independent/Experimental Film or Video Award, and National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences Individual Craft Award for Outstanding Achievement in Research, for Tongues Untied, 1990; American Film Institute Independent Film and Video Artists Award, 1992; George Foster Peabody Award, Outstanding Achievement Award from the International Documentary Association, and Erik Barnouw Award from the Organization of American Historians, for Color Adjustment 1992; Sundance Film Festival Filmmaker’s Trophy in Documentary, for Black Is. . . Black Ain’t, 1995. Died: Oakland, California, 5 April 1994, of complications from AIDS.

Films as Director:

1986 Ethnic Notions (doc) (+ pr, wr)
1990 Affirmations
1991 Tongues Untied (doc) (+pr, wr, ed); Anthem
1992 No Regret; Color Adjustment (doc) (+pr, wr)
1993 Boy’s Shorts: The New Queer Cinema
1994 Black Is. . . Black Ain’t (doc)

Publications

By RIGGS: articles—

‘‘Tongues Untied’’ (poem) and ‘‘Black Macho Revisited: Reflections of a SNAP! Queen,’’ in Brother to Brother: New Writings by Black Gay Men, edited by Essex Hemphill, Boston, 1991.

On RIGGS: books—

Holmlund, Chris, and Cynthia Fuchs, editors, Between the Sheets, In the Streets: Queer, Lesbian, Gay Documentary, Minneapolis, 1997.

On RIGGS: articles—

Walters, Barry, ‘‘Filmmaker’s Social Views Untied,’’ in San Francisco Examiner, 14 June 1993.
On RIGGS: film—

* * *

Though the career of Marlon Riggs was brief, he established himself as one of the most important contemporary documentary filmmakers by producing, writing, and directing some of the most aesthetically innovative and socially provocative documentaries of the 1980s and 1990s.

Riggs, the child of a military family, spent a good deal of his childhood traveling. He lived in Fort Worth, Texas, the town of his birth, until age 11, when his family moved to West Germany. He returned to the United States in 1974 to attend Harvard University. For his senior thesis, Riggs chose a topic important to his own identity—the depiction of male homosexuality in American fiction and poetry—a subject not well received by the faculty. He ended up completing his research under the guidance of a graduate teaching assistant; none of the faculty were interested in serving as his advisor on the project.

After graduating with honors, Riggs returned to Texas to work at a television station. The racism he encountered while on the job fueled his decision to leave. He pursued a master’s degree in journalism at the University of California at Berkeley, graduating in 1981, having produced a thesis titled Long Train Running. After graduation Riggs honed his skills as a filmmaker by assisting documentary directors and producers, working as a production assistant and later editor, post-production supervisor, and sound editor. Much of his work was for those working in public television. In 1989 he completed his own film, Ethnic Notions, an documentary concerning the pervasive and intransigent stereotypes of African Americans. In the film, Riggs used an innovative approach, tracing the history of the stereotypes from slavery to the present, skillfully presenting the ways by which centuries-old attitudes about African Americans inform contemporary racism. Ethnic Notions established Riggs as one of the most important contemporary directors of American documentary.

His next film, Tongues Untied, an aesthetically challenging hybrid of experimental and documentary forms, used scenes of fantasy, performance, personal testimonies, direct address, and autobiography to confront, as Farrah Anwar writes in Sight and Sound, “‘the complacency of whites and blacks, hetero and homosexuals, in a bravura display of controlled anger’” about the oppression faced by gay African American men. Though the film was well received by critics and the public, it was deemed controversial because of its frank depiction of racism and homophobia. The film was used, along with other federally funded art works, by conservative members of the United States Senate to attack the National Endowment for the Arts. During the making of the film, Riggs discovered that he tested positive for HIV, the virus that can cause AIDS. Despite the threat to his health, and complications that ensued, he continued to work, completing two more films: No Regrets (1992), a documentary on the experiences of gay African-American men and HIV, and Color Adjustment (1992), which traces the evolution of African-American images on American television. More than just a history of African Americans on American television, this latter documentary, like all of Riggs’s works, tackles the subject of social relations and social justice. Color Adjustment, narrated by actress and civil rights activist Ruby Dee, places the television images in the context of wider social and political relations, examining the inter-relation between America’s racial consciousness and network prime-time programming. Rigg’s final film, Black Is . . . Black Ain’t (1995), which was completed after his death, analyzes the ways in which African-American identity has been formed through an exclusion of the female, the gay, and the lesbian.

—Frances Gateward

RIPSTEIN, Arturo

Nationality: Mexican. Born: Mexico City, 1943. Family: Son of Alfredo Ripstein, one of Mexico’s most accomplished producers, credited with more than 180 films. Career: Began directorial career at the age of twenty-one, with the debut of A Time to Die (screenplay by Gabriel García Márquez, adapted from his own short story). Awards: Golden Ariel, Academy Awards, Mexico, for Castillo de la pureza, 1973; Golden Ariel, Academy Awards, Mexico, for El Lugar sin límites, 1978; Golden Ariel, Academy Awards, Mexico, for Cadena perpetua, 1979; Golden Ariel, Academy Awards, Mexico, for El Imperio de la fortuna, 1987; Grand prize, San Sebastian Film Festival, 1993, for The Beginning and the End; Golden Ariel, Academy Awards, Mexico, for Principio y fin, 1994; Latin America Cinema Award, Sundance Film Festival, for El Cornel no tiene quien le escriba, 2000.

Arturo Ripstein
Films as Director:

1965  Tiempo de Morir (A Time to Die)
1966  H.O.
1968  Los Recuerdos del Porvenir
1969  La Hora de los Niños
1970  El Naufragio de la Calle de la Providencia (co-d with Rafael Castanedo)
1971  Autobiografía (+ sc, pr)
1972  El Castillo de la Puraéza (The Castle of Purity) (+ sc)
1974  El Santo Oficio (The Holy Office) (+ sc)
1975  Foxtrot (+ sc)
1976  Lecumberri (+ sc)
1977  El Lugar sin límites (The Place without Limits; Hell without Limits); La Viuda negra (The Black Widow)
1978  Cadena Perpetua (Vicious Circle) (+ sc)
1979  La Illegal; Tía Alejandra
1980  La Tía Alexandra
1981  Rastro de muerte
1983  La Seducción; Rastro de la Muerte
1984  El Otro (The Other)
1985  El Imperio de la Fortuna (In the Realm of Fortune)
1989  Mrteras Piadosas (White Lies)
1992  La Mujer del Puerto (Woman of the Port)
1993  Principio y fin (The Beginning and the End)
1994  La Reina de la Noche (The Queen of the Night)
1996  La Sonrisa del Diablo (series for TV); Profundo carmesí (Deep Crimson)
1998  El Evangelio de las Maravillas (Divine)
1999  El Coronel no tiene quien le escriba (No One Writes to the Colonel)
2000  La Perdición de los Hombres; Así es la vida (Such is Life)

Publications

By RIPSTEIN: articles—

On RIPSTEIN: book—

On RIPSTEIN: articles—

Vega Alfaro, E. de la, ‘‘Fichero de Cineastas Nacionales,’’ in Dicine (Mexico City), November/December 1987.
Brandimieri, T., ‘‘Muenchen: Ripstein und Andre,’’ in EPD Film (Postfach, Germany), August 1989.
Orejel, A., ‘‘Menirias Piadosas,’’ in Dicine (Mexico City), January 1990.
Carro, N., ‘‘Cineastas y Testimonios del Cine Mexicano,’’ in Dicine (Mexico City), September 1990.
Loffreda, P., ‘‘La Mujer del Puerto,’’ in Cineforum (Bergamo, Italy), June 1991.
Cox, Alex, and Richard Pena, ‘‘Roads to the South,’’ in Film Comment (New York), November-December 1995.

* * *

With more than twenty directorial works that span almost thirty years, Arturo Ripstein is one of the best-known Mexican directors whose fame reaches beyond the international film festival circuit. Son of one of Mexico’s most accomplished film producers, Ripstein literally grew up on the backlots of studios. He was not only able to observe the techniques of some master filmmakers, such as Luis Buñuel and Emilio Fernández, but was also taken on as an assistant director by the former. With such a filmmaking background since adolescence, Ripstein made his directorial debut, A Time to Die, at the age of twenty-one.

A Time to Die features a Gabriel García Márquez screenplay adapted from his own short story. Following this came a series of collaborations with other Latin American talents, such as Carlos Fuentes, Manuel Puig, José Donoso, Juan Rulfo, Elena Garros, Julio Alejandro, José Emilio Pacheco, Vincete Leñero, and Silvina Ocampo. As such closeness with literary works may suggest, Ripstein’s films are often precise in their realism yet tacit as well as articulate in their aesthetic visions.

His 1985 In the Realm of Fortune depicts the rise and fall of an ambitious peasant in the world of gambling. As the hero, Dioniso, gradually ascends from slavish poverty into influence, Ripstein captures “superbly the sleazy, smoke-drenched atmosphere of the world of cheap carnivals, opportunistic women, cock fights and nights-long card games,” according to Richard Greenbaum. It is in this world that Ripstein sets out to paint a ghastly portrait of obsession, the downfall of a human being, and fate like a pendulum oscillating between the lucky and the luckless. By the end of the movie, Dioniso commits suicide after losing everything—his wife and his fortune—for the ornate silver coffin he wishes to be buried in. As his young daughter, Bernardina, sings in a carnival (just like her mother did to find a husband) at the very end of the movie, one cannot help but wonder: if poverty is the eternal reality of the luckless and luck does not last, how does one transcend a world driven by materialism? The content is grim and the tonality dark. Deliverance, however, is not out of the question, for, through an understanding of material obsession as such, one needs not emphasize or identify with Dionisio to feel. In 1992, Ripstein started a project collaborating with yet another Nobel Prize winner, Naguib Mahfouz, on his novel The Beginning and the End. A story originally written in the 1940s about the social collapse of a Cairo family due to the death of the father, it takes on a universal quality under the pen of Ripstein’s longtime working companion, Paz Alicia García diago (who also wrote the screenplays for In the Realm of Fortune, White Lies, and Woman of the Port). The parallels drawn between Cairo and Mexico City are uncanny. As Ripstein himself puts it, “Mexico City, an enormous urban center, noisy, dusty, like Cairo, is destroyed and reconstructed daily. . . . They are cities conquered by accelerated urban development, irrational modernization.” In the filmmaker’s vision, “the family is the guardian of retired values [and] is responsible that destiny is carried out.” While the camera work almost renders a mythic texture, the soundtrack provides “a tragic breath,” “an operatic tone.” Recognized for its compelling treatment of a family story and rigorous artistic probing, The Beginning and the End was awarded the Grand Prize at the San Sebastian Film Festival in 1993.

Ripstein and García diago’s 1994 collaboration, The Queen of the Night, is an “imaginary biography of the sentimental life of Lucha Reyes.” Set between 1939 and 1944, the famed folk singer’s life is chronicled in all its intensity as a “descent into the hell of alcohol, sexual excess and jealousy,” writes Jorge Rufinelli. Another puissant theme of neurotic obsession and self-destruction recalls not only Dionisio’s lost battle with luck but also The Beginning and the End’s eerie picture of a domineering mother. Family as well as interpersonal relationships are articulated not in terms of inevitable sufferings per se, but rather, through the alluring singing of Reyes, in terms of an intensity closer to the overpowering force of life. Therefore, with Ripstein’s incisive and sure hand, “melodramatic themes are filtered through a rigorous aesthetic vision, so that [in The Queen of the Night] sentimentalism ends up becoming its opposite.”

In his fourth decade of an outstanding filmmaking career, there is no reason not to anticipate more masterpieces from Arturo Ripstein. This must have been a painstaking lifelong process for the filmmaker. However, as Ripstein reminds us, “all art is painful. Pained by humanity.”

—Guo-Juin Hong

RITT, Martin

Nationality: American. Born: New York City, 2 March 1902. Education: Dewitt Clinton High School, New York City; attended Elon College, North Carolina; St. John’s University, Brooklyn. Military Service: Served in U.S. Army Air Corps, 1942–46. Career: Member, Elia Kazan’s Group Theater, 1937–42; stage director, New York City, from 1946; director and actor, live productions for CBS TV, 1948–51; blacklisted by television industry when a Syracuse grocer charged him with donating money to Communist China, 1951; taught acting at Actor’s Studio, directed stage plays, 1951–56; directed first film, Edge of the City, 1957. Died: Of cardiac disease, in Santa Monica, California, 8 December 1990.

Films as Director:

- 1957 Edge of the City (A Man Is Ten Feet Tall); No Down Payment
- 1958 The Long Hot Summer
- 1959 The Sound and the Fury; The Black Orchid
- 1960 Jovanka e le altri (Five Branded Women)
- 1961 Paris Blues
- 1962 Adventures of a Young Man (Hemingway’s Adventures of a Young Man)
- 1963 Hud (+ co-pr)
- 1964 The Outrage
- 1966 The Spy Who Came in from the Cold (+ pr)
- 1967 Hombre (+ co-pr)
- 1968 The Brotherhood
- 1970 The Molly Maguires (+ co-pr); The Great White Hope
- 1971 Sounder
- 1972 Pete ‘n’ Tillie
- 1974 Conrack (+ co-pr)
- 1976 The Front (+ pr)
- 1978 Casey’s Shadow
- 1979 Norma Rae
- 1980 Back Roads
- 1983 Cross Creek
- 1985 Slugger’s Wife
- 1986 Murphy’s Romance
- 1987 Nuts
- 1989 Stanley and Iris (Letters; Union Street)

Other Films:

- 1944 Winged Victory (Cukor) (role as Gleason)
- 1975 Der Richter und sein Henker (End of the Game) (Schell) (role)

Publications

By RITT: articles—

- “Martin Ritt—Conversation,” in Action (Los Angeles), March/April 1971.
Martin Ritt

On RITT: books—

Jackson, Carlton, Picking up the Tab: The Life and Movies of Martin Ritt, Bowling Green, Ohio, 1994.

On RITT: articles—

Young, Colin, “The Hollywood War of Independence,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1959.
“Personality of the Month,” in Films and Filming (London), April 1960.
Farber, Stephen, “Hombre and Welcome to Hard Times,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Fall 1967.

Obituary, in EPD Film (Frankfurt), vol. 8, February 1991.

* * *

As his roots in the Group Theater would indicate, Martin Ritt was a man with a social conscience. He had himself known misfortune: he was blacklisted during the McCarthy years of the 1950s, an odious practice that he poignantly attacks in The Front. Often, the characters in his films are underdogs, victims of racism or sexism or capitalism who live lives of quiet dignity while struggling and occasionally triumphing over adversity.

Most refreshingly, Ritt’s films are inhabited by odd couplings, characters from diverse backgrounds who unite for a common good while in the process expanding their own awareness. In Norma Rae, for example, Southern cotton mill worker Sally Field and New York Jewish labor organizer Ron Leibman form a curious coalition as they unionize a factory. In a hilarious sequence that symbolizes the cinema of Martin Ritt, Field joins the Lower East Side and Dixie when she petulantly utters the Yiddish word kvetch while complaining to Leibman. (The director also deals with the hardships of overworked, underpaid employees in The Molly Maguires, set in the Pennsylvania coal mines of the 1870s.)

Blacks and whites regularly align themselves in Ritt films, from easy-going, hard-working railroad yard worker Sidney Poitier befriending confused army deserter John Cassavetes in Edge of the City to schoolteacher Jon Voight educating underprivileged black children in Conrack. In all of these, the black characters exist within a white society, their identities irrevocably related to whites. This is perhaps most evident in Sounder, released after Hollywood had discovered that black audiences do indeed attend movies; it was produced at a point in time when blacks on movie screens were able to exist solely within a black culture. Sounder pointedly details the struggles of a black family to overcome adversity and prejudice. Although he spent his youth in New York City, Ritt set many of his films in the South, including Sounder, Conrack, Norma Rae, The Long Hot Summer, and The Sound and the Fury—the last two based on William Faulkner stories.

While Ritt’s films are all solidly crafted, they are in no way visually distinctive; Ritt cannot be called a great visual stylist, and is thus not ranked in the pantheon of his era’s filmmakers.

—Rob Edelman

RIVETTE, Jacques

Films as Director:

1950 Aux Quatre Coins; Le Quadrille
1952 Le Divertissement
1956 Le Coup de berger (+ co-sc)
1961 Paris nous appartient (Paris Belongs to Us) (+ role as party guest)
1966 La Religieuse (Suzanne Simonin, la religieuse de Denis Diderot; The Nun) (+ co-sc); Jean Renoir, le patron (for TV)
1968 L’Amour fou (+ co-sc)
1971 Out 1: noli me tangere (for TV, never released)

1974 Out 1: ombre (+ co-sc); Céline et Julie vont en bateau (Céline and Julie Go Boating) (+ co-sc)
1976 Duelle (Twilight) (+ co-sc); Noroit (Northwest) (+ co-sc)
1979 Merry-Go-Round (+ co-sc) (released 1983)
1981 Le Pont du Nord (North Bridge); Paris s’en va
1984 L’Amour par terre
1985 Hurlevent (Wuthering Heights)
1989 La Bande des quatre
1990 Belle noiseuse (+ sc)
1991 La Belle Noiseuse
1993 Divertimento
1994 Jeanne la Pucelle
1995 Haut Bas Fragile (+ sc)
1998 Secret defense (Secret Defense) (+ sc)
2000 Va Savoir! (+ sc)

Other Films:

1955 French Cancan (Renoir) (asst); Une Visite (Truffaut) (ph)
1960 Chronique d’un été (Chronicle of a Summer) (Morin and Rouch) (role as Marilu’s Boyfriend)

Publications

By RIVETTE: articles—

Regular contributor to Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), 1952–69, and to Arts (Paris), 1950s.

Interview, in Les Lettres Françaises (Paris), April 1966.

Interview, in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), September 1968.

Interview, in Film Comment (New York), September/October 1974.

Interview, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Winter 1974/75.

Interview with P. Carcassonne and others, in Cinématographe (Paris), March 1982.

Interview with Frédéric Strauss, in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), February 1993.

On RIVETTE: books—

On RIVETTE: articles—

Burch, Noël, “Qu’est-ce que la Nouvelle Vague?,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Winter 1959.

Tyler, Parker, “The Lady Called A: or, If Jules and Jim Had Only Lived at Marienbad,” in Film Culture (New York), Summer 1962.
In the days when the young lions of the New Wave were busy railing against “Le Cinéma du papa” in magazine articles and attending all-night screenings of Frank Tashlin and Jerry Lewis movies at La Cinémathèque, Jacques Rivette was quite the keenest cinephile of them all. He made a short as early as 1950, worked as an assistant director for Becker and Renoir, and wrote endless essays for Gazette du Cinéma and Cahiers du Cinéma, which he would later edit. If his films seem academic and acutely self-reflexive, we must remember that he is somebody who has spent an eternity theorizing about cinema.

Rivette’s first feature, Paris nous appartient, clocks in at a mere 140 minutes, and takes as its theme the abortive attempt by a group of French actors to mount a production of Shakespeare’s Pericles. Rivette’s fascination with the play-within-the-film, a leitmotif of his work, is given an initial, and not entirely successful, airing here. The film seems stage-bound, literary, and rather earnest, something which Rivette himself would later acknowledge: “I am very unhappy about the dialogue, which I find atrocious.”

After his second feature, La Religieuse, was briefly banned (although it did make money) on account of its perceived anti-clericalism, Rivette decided to abandon conventional narrative cinema. Unlike Godard, who never managed to fully overcome the cult of personality (even Tout va bien and his other post-1968 collaborations with Gorin are inevitably treated as the great Jean-Luc’s personal statements), Rivette easily evolved a kind of collective cinema, where the director’s role was on a par with that of the actors. He gave his actors the task of improvising his/her dialogue and character and let the narrative stumble into being. A haphazard and risky working method, Rivette found this infinitely preferable to rigidly conforming to a pre-conceived script. As a result, Rivette’s films rarely appear polished and finished.

The subject matter of Rivette films is often rehearsal: they explore the process of creation, rather than the finished artefact itself. L’Amour fou, an account of a company’s attempts to produce Racine’s Andromaque while the director and his actress-wife have a break-up, stops short of opening night.

In Rivette’s monumental work Out, which lasts a full thirteen hours but has only ever seen the commercial light of day as Ombre, a four-hour shadow of itself, Rivette takes his theory of Direct Cinema as far as it will go. Determined to make a film “which, instead of being predicated on a central character presented as the conscience, reflecting everything that happens in the action, would be about a collective,” the director assembled a large cast of actor/characters, amongst them Juliet Berto and Jean-Pierre Leaud. The film opens as a documentary. Only very gradually does Rivette allow a fictional narrative to emerge through the interaction of the cast. He describes Out as being “like a game . . . a crossword.”

Rivette commissioned Roland Barthes to write for Cahiers du Cinéma. Rivette share Barthes’ well-chronicled suspicion of authors, and he is also a fervent “intertextualist”: his films abound in references to other books and films. The Hunting of the Snark, Aeschyulus, Balzac, Shakespeare, and Edgar Allen Poe are all liable to be thrown into the melting pot. He mixes 16mm and 35mm film stock in L’Amour fou, where he actually depicts a television crew filming the same rehearsals that he is filming: a case of Chinese boxes, perhaps, that goes some way to explaining his unpopularity with certain British critics. Harold Hobson in the Sunday Times described the director’s 1974 film, Céline et Julie vont en bateau, as a “ghastly exhibition of incompetent pretentiousness” while David Robinson suggested that L’Amour par terre offered the director’s “now accustomed fey and onanistic silliness.”

It should be noted that both of the films attacked above offered strong parts for women. Rivette, more than most of his New Wave contemporaries, has provided opportunities for actresses. He is hardly the most prolific director, and the length of his films has often counted against him. Nonetheless, his clinical, self-reflexive essays in film form, coupled with the sophisticated games he continues to play within the “house of fiction,” reveal him as a cinematic purist whose commitment to the celluloid muse has hardly diminished since the heady days of the 1950s.

—G. C. Macnab
ROCHA, Glauber

Films as Director:

1957 Um dia na rampa (short) (co-d)
1958 O patio (short); A cruz na praça (short)
1962 Barravento (The Turning Wind) (+ co-pr, sc)
1964 Deus e o diabo na terra do sol (Black God, White Devil) (+ co-pr, sc)
1965 Amazonas Amazonas (doc) (+ sc); Maranhão 66 (doc) (+ sc)
1967 Terra em transe (Land in Anguish) (+ sc)
1968 Cancer (+ sc) (completed in Cuba, 1973–4)
1969 Antônio das Mortes (O dragão da maldade contra o santo querreiro) (+ co-pr, sc, art d)
1970 Der leone have sept cabecas (The Lion Has Seven Heads) (+ co-sc, co-ed); Cabezas cortadas (Severed Heads) (+ sc)
1975 Claro (+ sc)
1978 Di (doc short)
1979 Jorjamado no cinema (doc short)
1980 A idade da terra (The Age of the Earth) (+ sc)

Other Films:

1965 A grande feira (d of pr); Menino de engenho (pr)
1966 A grande cidade (co-pr)

Publications

By ROCHA: books—

Riverao Sussuarana, Rio de Janeiro, 1981.

By ROCHA: articles—

Interview with Gordon Hitchens, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Fall 1970.

Interviews in Los años de la comonocación, by Isaac Léon Frías, Mexico City, 1979.

On ROCHA: books—

Johnson, Randal, Cinema Novo x 5, Austin, Texas, 1984.

On ROCHA: articles—

Callenbach, Ernest, “Comparative Anatomy of Folk Myth Films: Robin Hood and Antonio das Mortes,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Winter 1969/70.
Cinema Novo Section of Jump Cut (Chicago), June 1976.
Castoro Cinema (Milan), special section, no. 13, 1977.
Rocha Section of Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), November 1981.
Rocha Sections of Cine Cubano (Havana), nos. 100 and 101, 1982.
Rocha Section of Film Culture (Rio de Janeiro), August/October 1982.
Bernadet, J.-C., and T. Coelho, “Un utopiste flamboyant: Glauber Rocha et L’âge de la terre,” in CinémaAction (Conde-sur-Noireau), March 1983.
October 1983.
Burton, Julianne, “Modernist Form in Land in Anguish and Memories of Underdevelopment,” in Post Script (Jacksonville, Florida), Winter 1984.
Vernaglione, P., “O Cangaceiro do cinema,” in Filmcritica (Rome),
vol. 37, October 1986.
Film und Fernsehen (Potsdam), special section, vol. 18, December 1990.
Vega, J. “Glauber Rocha: el santo guerro del Cinema Novo,” in Cine

* * *

“A camera in your hand and an idea in your head” was how Glauber Rocha described the minimalist conditions in which the filmmakers of Brazil’s Cinema Novo (New Cinema) began. Though the origins of Cinema Novo can be traced to Nelson Pereira dos Santos’s movie, Rio 40 Degrees (1955), the “official” starting point for the movement which redefined Brazilian and Latin American film is 1962, when Rocha directed Barravento. Rocha was Cinema Novo’s principle theorist and most flamboyant practitioner, developing many of its key concepts and realizing them on the screen.

The most important element in Rocha’s theory of filmmaking was his recurrent insistence on discovering a filmic language of a uniquely Brazilian and Latin American quality, ending the practice endemic to neo-colonies of aping Hollywood and European cinema. This new idiom was to arise out of working directly within the reality of Latin America; thus, in one of his best-known essays, he argued that its core was an aesthetic of hunger and violence: “Hunger is the essence of our society . . . and hunger’s most noble cultural manifestation is violence.” Rocha was looking for a popular, but not a populist, form of expression, and he felt that this would lead to new acting styles, different ways of using music and color, and innovative forms of montage.

If the base of Rocha’s cinema was the traditional culture of Brazil, modern influences were also important. One of these was the Cuban revolution, which offered the example of radical social transformation in Latin America and made possible the birth of a truly Cuban cinematography. Another was the New Wave in France, from whence sprang the concept of the director as “auteur” which so influenced Rocha. Adherents of this concept pioneered the path he traveled from critic to filmmaker. However, Rocha clearly distinguished between the cinema of Europe, which expressed the existential anguish of the developed world, and the epic cinema which he believed more appropriate to articulating the social and economic crises of Latin America. As he pithily polemized: “We’re not interested in neurotics’ problems, we’re interested in the problems faced by those who are lucid.”

After some short films, and relatively extensive experience as a critic, Rocha burst onto the international cinematic scene with Barravento. Although in later years he was to express dissatisfaction with the film, even disclaiming authorship because he had taken it over from another director half-way through the shooting, at the time he called it the “first great denunciation realized in Brazilian cinema.” Filmed in a neo-realist style that was characteristic of many Cinema Novo directors—though this was the only instance in which Rocha employed this form—the movie focused on the harsh living conditions of a fishing village. If the work’s realism is at odds with Rocha’s later theatricality, the film nonetheless contains many of the elements found throughout his oeuvre. For example, the narrative leaps and the fighting which is choreographed as dancing presage the reflexivity of Rocha films that followed. Also present is the dialectic of the traditional and the modern, for while Rocha criticizes the mysticism that is part of the fishing people’s underdevelopment, he also shows how their popular culture provides them with a defense against the ravages of capitalism.

The films that came after Barravento are extravagant and operatic, expressive of Rocha’s search for a cinematic tropicalism equivalent to the magic realism contained in the work of Latin American writers such as Gabriel García Márquez and Alejo Carpentier. One of the unique formal elements in Rocha’s work is the combination of this tropicalism with the self-reflexivity of the New Wave through such strategies as the placing of a film within a film in Land in Anguish and the use of highly stylized violence in Antonio das Mortes.
In both of these films he also pricks the audience’s critical sense by making the perspective of the works larger than that of their central protagonist, thus cutting back against the very identification that he simultaneously foments in the films. This sort of systematic contradiction is characteristic of Rocha’s efforts to realize a dialectical form, and is perhaps most evident in the counter-point he consistently established between image and sound.

Rocha’s concern with thematic dialectics is most apparent in his explorations of Brazilian popular culture, which he perceived as representing both a permanent rebellion against oppression and the evasion of social problems. His interest in resolving this contradiction and turning popular culture and myth into a progressive force is portrayed in Black God, White Devil and Antonio das Mortes through the conflict between the cangaceiros, the social bandits of the Brazilian Northeast, and Antonio, the killer hired to eradicate the law-breakers but who ends up embodying their social ideals. That it is popular—not populist—culture which offers the only possibility for national liberation is made explicit by Rocha in Land in Anguish, where he contrasts traditional values to those of liberal populism, which is shown to lead inevitably to co-option by the bourgeoisie.
Rocha’s efforts to form a genuinely Brazilian cinema, founded on authentic themes and expressed through an idiom peculiar to Latin America, led him to make beautiful and moving films which continue to speak for his ideals.

—John Mraz

ROEG, Nicolas

1928. Education: Mercers School. Family: Married 1) Susan Rennie Stephens; 2) actress Theresa Russell. Career: Junior at Marylebone
Nicolas Roeg

Films as Director:

1970 Performance (co-d, + ph)
1971 Walkabout (+ ph)
1973 Don’t Look Now
1976 The Man Who Fell to Earth
1980 Bad Timing
1981 Dallas through the Looking Glass
1982 Eureka
1985 Insignificance
1986 Castaway

1987 Episode in Aria
1988 Track 29
1989 The Witches; Sweet Bird of Youth (for TV)
1992 Cold Heaven
1993 Heart of Darkness (for TV)
1995 Full Body Massage (for TV); Two Deaths
1996 Samson and Delilah (for TV)

Other Films:

(as camera operator)

1958 A Woman Possessed (Max Varnel); Moment of Indiscretion (Max Varnel); The Man Inside (Gilling)
1959 The Great Van Robbery (Max Varnel); Passport to Shame (Rakoff); The Child and the Killer (Max Varnel)
1960 The Trials of Oscar Wilde (Hughes); Jazz Boat (Hughes)
1961 The Sundowners (Zinnemann); Information Received (Lynn)
1962 Lawrence of Arabia (Lean) (2nd unit ph); Dr. Crippen (Lynn)
The tragedy of a couple (Julie Christie and Donald Sutherland) haunted in Venice by a psychic (Hilary Mason) claiming '"

By ROEG: articles—

Publications

1964 The Masque of the Red Death (Corman); The System (The Girl Getters) (Winner); Every Day’s a Holiday (Hill); Victim Five (Code Seven, Victim Five) (Lynn)

1965 Judith (Mann) (2nd unit ph)

1966 A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum (Lester); Farenheit 451 (Truffaut)

1967 Far from the Madding Crowd (Schlesinger); Casino Royale (Huston and others) (some sections only)

1968 Petulia (Lester)

On ROEG: articles—

Gomez, J., “Another Look at Nicholas Roeg,” in Film Criticism (Edinboro, Pennsylvania), Fall 1981.

Pursell, M., “From Gold Nugget to Ice Crystal: The Diagenetic Structure of Roeg’s Eureka,” in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), vol. 11, no. 4, October 1983.

Mazierska, Ewa, in Iluzjion, July-December 1991.

Nicolas Roeg is a visual trickster who plays havoc with conventional screen narratives. Choosing an oblique storytelling formula, he riddles his plots with ambiguous characters, blurred genres, distorted chronologies, and open-ended themes to invite warring interpretations.

Even the most facile Roeg synopsis betrays alienation and incongruity, with characters getting caught in bewildering and hostile situations. His first effort, Performance (with co-director Donald Cammell) offers a dark look at the last days of a pursued gangster (James Fox) who undergoes a psychosexual identity change while hiding out with a has-been rock star (Mick Jagger). This psychedelic cornucopia of androgynous sex, violence, and Borges allusions blessed and cursed Roeg with the lingering label “cult director.”

We had already been warned of Roeg’s charming peculiarities during his cinematographer days. Such notable films as Far from the Madding Crowd and Fahrenheit 451 had odd, even anachronistic looks that sometimes ran contrary to the story proper. In fact, the latter film barely resembles Truffaut at all and looks more Roegish with its dreamy color schemes and chilly atmospherics.

Even Roeg’s relatively tame second feature, Walkabout, based on a novel by James Vance Marshall, has narrative trap doors. Jarring cross-cuts, sensuous photography, and Edward Bond’s enigmatic script are more satisfying to mystics than humanists. Marshall’s novel is much more clear in its tale of two Australian children (Jenny Agutter and Lucien John) who get lost in the outback and are saved by an aborigine (David Gumpilil). Roeg’s version is a more complex and fatalistic expose of people from separate cultures who have no hope of connecting.

Roeg flaunts a talent for shattering a relatively simple story into heady fragments with his adaptation of Daphne du Maurier’s Don’t Look Now. The tragedy of a couple (Julie Christie and Donald Sutherland) haunted in Venice by a psychic (Hilary Mason) claiming (as lighting cameraman)

1963 The Caretaker (Donner); Just for Fun (Flemyng); Nothing but the Best (Donner)

1964 The Masque of the Red Death (Corman); The System (The Girl Getters) (Winner); Every Day’s a Holiday (Hill); Victim Five (Code Seven, Victim Five) (Lynn)

1965 Judith (Mann) (2nd unit ph)

1966 A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum (Lester); Farenheit 451 (Truffaut)

1967 Far from the Madding Crowd (Schlesinger); Casino Royale (Huston and others) (some sections only)

1968 Petulia (Lester)
to communicate with their drowned daughter turns into something more than just a proto-Hitchcock thriller. As in most Roegian journeys, we emerge from Don’t Look Now more discombobulated than we were at the start. Is the psychic a fraud? Is there foul play among the Venetian authorities? Could the occult implications be just a ruse? Roeg operates on a logic that is more visceral than intellectual. Instead of outright clues, we get recurrent shapes, sounds, colors, and gestures that belie a hidden order linking people and events.

Of all Roeg’s work, The Man Who Fell to Earth is the most accomplished and de-centered. A space alien (David Bowie) arrives on Earth, starts a multi-million dollar enterprise and is later captured by a government-corporate collusion. What threatens to be another trite sci-fi plot becomes, in Roeg’s hand, a visually stunning mental conundrum. All the continuity gaffes plaguing many an outer-space movie are here intentionally exacerbated to the point where we doubt that the “visitor” is really an alien at all. We see events mostly through the alien’s abstruse viewpoint as days, months, years, even decades transpire sporadically and inconsistently. The story is a sleight-of-hand distraction that forces our attention more onto the transitory mood of loneliness and dissociation.

Unlike a purely experimental director who would flout story-lines altogether, Roeg retains the bare bones of old genres only to disfigure them. His controversial Bad Timing could easily have been an updated “Inner Sanctum” spin-off with its pathological lovers (Art Garfunkel and Theresa Russell) and the voyeuristic detective (Harvey Keitel) snooping for foul play. But the film unfolds with vignettes that tell us one thing and show another. Time and motive—the staples of mysteries—are so deviously jumbled that we can only resign ourselves to the Roeg motto that “nothing is what it seems.”

Roeg’s under-appreciated and least-seen Eureka starts out as an adventure about a Yukon prospector (Gene Hackman) who finds gold and becomes one of the world’s richest men. But soon the story splinters into soap opera, romance, murder mystery, and even splatter film—a tortuous, visionary, frustrating, and ultimately mad epic.

Since Eureka, Roeg has been more skittish about re-entering the labyrinth. Films like Insignificance (about a night when the prototypes of Albert Einstein, Marilyn Monroe, Joe DiMaggio, and Joe McCarthy meet) and Castaway (based on Luci Irvine’s ordeal with a lover on a deserted island) have shades of the older Roeg films but lack his gift for reckless lust. The “Twilight Zone” teasers reemerge somewhat in Track 29, where he teams with absurdist scriptwriter Dennis Potter in a tale about a woman beleaguered by a man her own age who claims to be her illegitimate son. Once more, Roeg treats us to another story about frustrated love and the fragile border between “reality” and hallucination.

The career of Nicolas Roeg has in recent years been in sad decline. By far his best work in this latter period was the made-for-television feature Heart of Darkness, a moody, shadowy adaptation of the famed Joseph Conrad novella. Cold Heaven is a muddled drama about a husband who may or may not have been killed in a grisly accident just as his wife is set to leave him.

Though a well-intentioned expose of the horror of war, Two Deaths, his 1994 film, shows no evidence of a return to form. It is set during a bloody conflict. Several aristocratic types sit in a room awaiting the start of a dinner party. They complain about trilling matters, while on the streets around them blood flows like the wine they will enjoy with their meal. All too obviously, before the night is over the violence outside will intrude on their lives, with much moralizing and sermonizing along the way. Roeg beats you over the head with unsubtle symbolism: the guests slurp down oysters while a woman bleeds to death outside, and he even uses the cliché image of a dead dove.

—Joseph Lanza, updated by Rob Edelman

ROGOZHKIN, Alexander

Films as Director:
1979 Brother has Come (Brat priekhal) (short)
1980 Redhead Redhead (Ryzhaiapryzhaia) (short)
1985 For the Sake of a Few Lines (Radi neskol’kikh strochek)
1986 The Golden Button (Zolotaiapugovitsa) (for TV)
1988 Miss Millionaire (Miss millionersha)
1989 The Guard (Karaul)
1991 The Third Planet (Tret’ia planeta) (sc); The Chekist (Chekist)
1993 Life with an Idiot (Zhih’i’ idiotom) (sc); The Act (Akt) (sc)
1995 Peculiarities of the National Hunt (Osobennosti natsional’noi okhoty) (sc)
1996 Operation ‘Happy New Year’ (Operatsiia ‘S novym godom’) (sc)
1998 Peculiarities of National Fishing (Osobennosti natsional’noi rybalki) (sc); Checkpoint (Blokpost) (sc); Cops (Menty) (for TV)

Publications

By ROGOZHKIN: book—

Osobennosti natsional’noi okhoty/Osobennosti natsional’noi rybalki, Moscow, 1999.

On ROGOZHKIN: articles—
‘‘Blokpost,’’ in Seans (St. Petersburg), 17–18, 1999.
‘‘Osobennosti natsional’noi okhoty,’’ in Seans (St. Petersburg), no. 12, 1996.
Stishova, Elena, “Zapisiki s kavkazskoi voiny,’’ in Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), no. 1, 1999.

* * *

833
Alexander Rogozhkin is a rising star of post-Soviet cinema. His breakthrough came with Chekist (1991), followed by Life with an Idiot (1993), the latter being based on Viktor Erofeev’s eponymous novel about a humanist intellectual and his wife who adopt an idiot to fulfil a mission in their lives, yet never expect the violence they encounter.

Rogozhkin gained widespread popularity in Russia with Peculiarities of the National Hunt and, later, with the sequel Peculiarities of National Fishing. In these films Rogozhkin explores the notorious love of Russians for vodka as a motif for a comedy of social reality. In Peculiarities of the National Hunt a Finn, who is researching the traditions of the Russian hunts from the time of the tsars to the present day, joins a group of five Russians from the military and police forces in the hunt. The excessive drinking bouts the Russians associate with hunting are, however, not what the Finn expects. He initially refuses to drink, while he dreams all the time of the imperial hunting party of the late nineteenth century, stylishly hunting down a fox with their dogs, elegantly riding horses, and, of course, conversing in French, while he, the non-Russian speaker, is marginalized in the group. Drinking may have no purpose, but it is a habit that makes social and national differences disappear, and that lifts temporal boundaries in bringing together past and present. The world returns to its purest form, without any boundaries or limits.

Rogozhkin made two sequels to this very popular film, both starring Alexei Buldakov as the General Ivolgin, and the comic actor Leonid Yarmolnik. Operation Happy New Year sees the same characters on a hospital ward, celebrating New Year. The characters’ (or patients’) respective histories bring them, and the spectator, to the neurology department: a writer of erotic novels who broke his fingers in an experiment of having sex while tied to the bed; General Ivolgin who falls off a stage as he has his New Year television address recorded; a Russian businessman who is hunted through fields by two mafia henchmen and runs into a pole, sustaining injury to his genitals. All possible groups, or classes—(pseudo)-intellectual, military, and business—of the new Russian society are brought together in the ward, where they join the patients already there, including an actor and a ‘fatally ill’ patient, and, of course, the hospital staff. Class separation becomes impossible, and social boundaries are broken, while all the patients are dressed in gowns and masked with various parts of plaster-casts. The General organises the party with all the strategic precision of a military manoeuvre: he arranges for a tree to be stolen, food to be bought, and the women from the other wing to be invited. The General represents power, and in his physical appearance he is a cross-section between Brezhnev and General Lebed. He organises the feast, conducts the choir, and supervises the operation. Without military power harmony is impossible. Rogozhkin’s film thus celebrates the return to a past where authority is in command, to the golden past of the Soviet period.

In Peculiarities of National Fishing alcohol is responsible for the group of military men and the Finn accidentally mooring on the Finnish coast. In many ways this film is a weak reflection of Peculiarities of the National Hunt. Rogozhkin capitalises, however, on the extremely witty scripts for these films, combined with the casting of very popular Russian actors: not stars, but the darlings of millions of television viewers.

One of Rogozhkin’s most recent feature films is an anti-war film set in the Caucasus, titled Checkpoint (1998). Rogozhkin portrays a strategically unimportant checkpoint on some mountain road that leads to a Muslim cemetery. The lack of a general sense of the soldiers’ mission and their part in the overall strategy of the operation is reflected in the film’s composition, focused on detail and episodic in structure. The film takes the genre of notes from a war: a chronicler-narrator, no hero, tells the events as they happen: the soldiers raid a house in a local village where a boy is holding on to a mine that he sets off as they enter. The men manage to escape before the house explodes, but they are—mistakenly—thought to have caused the explosion. When the detachment has taken position on the check-point, the soldiers are hampered in their routine by a sniper. In order to negotiate a cease-fire, the soldiers ‘High’ (Kaif) and ‘Ash’ (Pepel) are sent to the village. Scared of what might happen, High clutches on to an activated mine that he later carefully disposes of in the wood. An old shepherd stumbles over the mine off and loses his hand in the accident. Under pressure from the local community to turn over the culprit, the commander surrenders ‘Rat’ (Krysa): he sacrifices one of his men to maintain the status quo. Rat’s body is returned to the check-point, wrapped in a sheepskin. As ‘Lawyer’ (Yurist) tries to pull the body off the road, he is shot by the sniper, Masha, a local woman whom he is fond of, since she can no longer distinguish him from the others after he has swapped with Ash his striking helmet decorated with a foxtail. Rogozhkin shows the everyday life and trivial events of the war without glorifying the war or creating heroes. He demythologises the war before a myth has even been created. While the national idea may be contained in fishing or the hunt, it is plainly absent from the military action in the Caucasus.

—Birgit Beumers

ROHMER, Eric

Nationality: French. Born: Jean-Marie Maurice Scherer in Nancy, France, 4 April 1920. Career: Taught literature teacher at lycée, Nancy, 1942–50; was a film critic, from 1948; founder, with Godard and Rivette, of La Gazette du Cinéma, Paris, 1950; co-authored a book on Alfred Hitchcock with Claude Chaplins, 1957; was editor-in-chief of Cahiers du Cinéma, 1957–63; directed his first feature, Le Signe du lion, 1959; made the ‘Six contes moraux’ (Six Moral Tales), 1962–73; with La Femme de l’aviator, began a new series, ‘Comédies et proverbes,’ 1980; began a new series, ‘Tales of the Four Seasons,’ 1989. Awards: Berlin Film Festival Silver Berlin Bear and Youth Film Award, for La Collectionneuse, 1967; Prix Max Ophüls, National Society of Film Critics Best Screenplay, New York Film Critics Circle Best Screenplay, for My Night at Maud’s, 1969; San Sebastian International Film Festival Golden Seashell, Prix Louis Delluc, Prix Méliès, for Claire’s Knee, 1971; Cannes Film Festival Grand Prize of the Jury, for The Marquise of O . . . , 1976; Berlin Film Festival FIPRESCI Award, O.C.I.C Award-Honorable Mention, and Silver Berlin Bear, for Pauline at the Beach, 1983; Venice Film Festival Golden Lion and FIPRESCI Award, for The Green Ray, 1986; Berlin Film Festival FIPRESCI Award and Prize of the Ecumenical Jury-Special Mention, for A Tale of Winter, 1992; National Society of Film Critics Best Foreign Language Film, Venice Film Festival Sergio Trasatti Award-Special Mention, for A Tale of Autumn, 1998 Officier des Arts et des Lettres. Address: 26 av. Pierre-der-Serbie, 75116 Paris, France.

Films as Director and Scriptwriter:

1950  Journal d’un scélérat
1951  Présentation ou Charlotte et son steak (Charlotte and Her Steak)
1952  Les Petites Filles modèles (co-d) (unfinished)
1954  Bérénice
1956  La Sonate à Kreutzer (The Kreutzer Sonata)
1958  Véronique et son cancre
1963  La Boulangerie de Monceau (first of the “Contes moraux”; following five films identified by “CM” and number assigned by Rohmer;
La Carrière de Suzanne (Suzanne’s Profession) (CM no. 2))
1964  Nadja à Paris
1964–69 Films for educational television: Les Cabinets de physique au XVIIIème siècle; Les Métamorphoses du paysage industriel; Perceval; Don Quichotte; Edgar Poë; Pascal;
La Bruyère; Mallarmé; La Béton dans la ville; Les Contemplations; Hugo architecte; Louis Lumière
1965  Films for television series “Cinéastes de notre temps”: Carl Dreyer, Le Celluloid et la marbre; “Place de l’étoile” episode of Paris vu Par... (Six in Paris)
1966  Une Étudiante d’aujourd’hui
1967  La Collectionneuse (CM no. 4) (+ sc); Fermière à Montfaucon
1969  Ma Nuit chez Maud (My Night at Maud’s) (CM no. 3)
1970  Le Genou de Claire (Claire’s Knee) (CM no. 5)
1972  L’Amour l’après-midi (Chloe in the Afternoon) (CM no. 6)
1976  La Marquise d’O... (The Marquise of O...)
1978  Perceval the Gaulois
1980  La Femme de l’aviateur (The Aviator’s Wife)
1982  Le Beau Mariage (The Perfect Marriage)
1983  Loup y es-tu? (Wolf, Are You There?); Pauline à la plage
(Pauline at the Beach)
1984  Les Nuits de la pleine lune (Full Moon in Paris)
1986  Le Rayon vert (The Green Ray)
1987  L’Ami de mon amie (My Girlfriend’s Boyfriend; Boyfriends and Girlfriends); Quatre Aventures de Reinette et Mirabelle
(Four Adventures of Reinette and Mirabelle)
1989  Conte de printemps (A Tale of Springtime)
1992  Un Conte d’hiver (A Tale of Winter)
1993  L’Arbre, le maire et la Mediatheque (The Tree, The Mayor, and the Mediatheque)
1995  Les rendez-vous de Paris (Rendezvous in Paris)
1996  Conte d’été (A Summer’s Tale)
1998  Conte d’automne (Autumn Tale, A Tale of Autumn)
2000  L’Anglaise et le Duc

Other Films:

1954  Berenice (role)
1993  François Truffaut: portraits voles (François Truffaut: Stolen Portraits) (Toubiana, Pascal) (appearance)

Publications

By ROHMER: books—

By ROHMER: articles—

Interview with Graham Petrie, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Summer 1971.
“Programme Eric Rohmer,” an article and interview with Claude
Beylie, in Ecran (Paris), April 1974.
“Rehearsing the Middle Ages,” an interview with N. Tesich-Savage, in Film Comment (New York), September/October 1978.
“Un Allegorie policière,” with Claude Chabrol, in Avant-Scène du Cinéma (Paris), June 1980.
Interview with Pascal Bonitzer and Serge Daney, in Cahiers du Cinéma
(Paris), May 1981.
“Comedies and Proverbs,” an interview with F. Ziolkowski, in Wide
“Eric Rohmer on Film Scripts and Film Plans,” an interview with R.
Hammond and J. P. Pagliano, in Literature-Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), vol. 10, no. 4, October 1982.
Interview with A. Carbonnier and Joel Magny, in Cinéma (Paris),
Interview with H. Niogret, and others, in Positif (Paris), November 1986.
Interview with Serge Toubiana and Alain Philippon, in Cahiers du Cinéma
“L’homme a la sacoche,” in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), November
1989.
“Lettre d’ Eric Rohmer, a Jacques Davila,” in Cahiers du Cinéma
(Paris), March 1990.
“Nestor Almendros, naturellement,” in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris),
April 1990.
Interview with A. de Baecque and others, in La Revue du Cinéma
(Paris), April 1990.
“La pensee et la parole,” in Avant Scène du Cinéma (Paris),
May 1990.
Interview with A. Danton, in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), February
“L’arbre, le maire et la mediatheque ou les sept hasards,” in Cahier
“L’amateur,” interview with A de Baecque and T. Jousse, in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), May 1993.
Rockwell, John, “Eric Rohmer Writes His Own Winter Tale,” in New
On ROHMER: books—

Vidal, Marion, Les contes moraux d’Eric Rohmer, Paris, 1977

On ROHMER: articles—

“Eric Rohmer,” in Film (London), Spring 1968.
Dalle Vacche, Angela, “Painting Thoughts, Listening to Images: Eric Rohmer’s The Marquise of O . . .,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Summer 1993.

* * *

By virtue of a tenure shared at Cahiers du Cinéma during the 1950s and early 1960s, Eric Rohmer is usually classified with Truffaut, Godard, Chabrol, and Rivette as a member of the French New Wave. Yet, except for three early shorts made with Godard, Rohmer’s films seem to share more with the traditional values of such directors as Renoir and Bresson than with the youthful flamboyance of his contemporaries. Much of this divergence is owed to an accident of birth. Born Jean-Marie Maurice Schérer in 1920, Rohmer was at least ten years older than any of the other critic/filmmakers in the Cahiers group. By the time he arrived in Paris in 1948, he was an established teacher of literature at the lycée in Nancy and had published a novel, Elizabeth (1946), under the pseudonym Gilbert Cordier. When he joined the Cahiers staff in 1951 Rohmer had already spent three years as a film critic with such prestigious journals as La Revue du Cinéma and Sartre’s Les Temps modernes. Thus Rohmer’s aesthetic preferences were more or less determined before he began writing for Cahiers. Still, the move proved decisive. At Cahiers he encountered an environment in which film critics and filmmaking were thought of as merely two aspects of the same activity. Consequently, the critics who wrote for Cahiers never doubted that they would become film directors. As it turned out, Rohmer was one of the first to realize this ambition. In 1951 he wrote and directed a short 16mm film called Charlotte and Her Steak in which Godard, the sole performer, plays a young man who tries to seduce a pair of offscreen women. Two of his next three films were experiments in literary adaptation. These inaugurated his long association with Barbet Schroeder, who produced or co-produced all of Rohmer’s subsequent film projects.

In 1958 filmmaking within the Cahiers group was bustling. Rivette, Truffaut, and Chabrol were all shooting features. Rohmer, too, began shooting his first feature, Sign of the Lion. The result, however, would not be greeted with the same enthusiasm that was bestowed on Godard and Truffaut. Rohmer has always maintained that his films are not meant for a mass audience but rather for that small group of viewers who appreciate the less spectacular qualities of the film medium. Unfortunately, Sign of the Lion failed to find even this elite audience. And while Truffaut’s The 400 Blows and Godard’s Breathless were establishing the Cahiers group as a legitimate film force, it was not until 1963 that Rohmer was able to secure funding for a film of any length. That same year he ended his association with Cahiers du Cinéma. The journal had for some time been moving away from the aesthetic policies of Bazin and towards a more leftist variety of criticism. Rohmer had always been viewed as something of a reactionary and was voted down as co-director. He chose to leave the magazine and devote his entire career to making films. At just this moment Barbet Schroeder was able to find money for a short 16mm film.
While writing the scenario for Suzanne’s Profession, Rohmer conceived the master plan for a series of fictional films, each a variation on a single theme: a young man, on the verge of committing himself to one woman, by chance meets a second woman whose charms cause him to question his initial choice. As a result of this encounter, his entire way of thinking, willing, desiring, that is to say, the very fabric of his moral life, starts to unwind. The young man eventually cleaves to his original choice, his ideal woman against whom he measures all his other moral decisions, but the meeting with the second woman (or, as is the case in Claire’s Knee, a trinity of women) creates a breathing space for the young man, a parenthesis in his life for taking stock. The vacillations of the young man, who often functions as the film’s narrator, comprise the major action of the six films, known as “Six Moral Tales.”

Rohmer recognizes the irony in his use of cinema, a medium which relies on objective, exterior images, to stage his interior moral dramas. But by effecting minute changes in the exterior landscape, he expresses subtle alterations in his protagonist’s interior drama. This explains why Rohmer pays such scrupulous attention to rendering surface detail. Each film in the “Six Moral Tales” was shot on the very location and at the exact time of year in which the story is set. Rohmer was forced to postpone the shooting of My Night at Maud’s for an entire year so that Jean-Louis Trintignant would be available during the Christmas season, the moment when the fiction was scripted to begin. The painter Daniel in La Collectioneuse is played by Daniel Pommereulle, a painter in real life. The Marxist historian and the priest who preaches the sermon at the end of My Night at Maud’s are, in real life, historian and priest. The female novelist of Claire’s Knee is a novelist, and the married couple of Chloé in the Afternoon are portrayed by husband and wife. Such attention to detail allowed Rohmer to realize an advance in the art of cinematic adaptation with his next two films, The Marquise of O. . . and Perceval. As he entered the 1980s, Rohmer completed two films of a new series of moral tales which he calls “Parables.” In contrast to the “Six Moral Tales,” the “Parables” are not played out on the interior landscape of a single character but rather engage an entire social milieu. In The Aviator’s Wife, a young postal clerk trails his mistress around Paris to spy on her affair with another man. During his peregrinations, he meets a young female student and loses track of his mistress. He decides he prefers the company of the young student, only to discover her in the arms of another man. The Perfect Marriage chronicles the attempts of a young Parisian woman to persuade the man whom she had decided will make her a perfect husband that she will, in turn, make him the perfect wife. She discovers, too late, that he has been engaged to another woman all along.

Emerging from the crucible of the French New Wave, Rohmer has forged a style that combines the best qualities of Bresson and Renoir with distinctive traits of the Hollywood masters. And though he was never as flamboyant as Godard or Truffaut, Rohmer’s appeal has proved much harder. The international success that met My Night at Maud’s and The Marquise of O. . . built a following that awaited further installment of the “Parables” with eagerness and reverence.

During the 1980s, Rohmer went on to complete his “Comedies and Proverbs” series. These films include: Pauline at the Beach, a clever, sharply observed comedy that compares the dishonesty of adult alliances and the forthrightness of adolescence; Full Moon in Paris, which details the plight of a willful young woman and her involvement with different men; Four Adventures of Reinette and Mirabelle, which insightfully contrasts the lives of two young women, one from the country and the other from the city; and My Girlfriend’s Boyfriend, which also follows what happens when two very different women begin a friendship and then start playing amorous games with a pair of men. Here, Rohmer proves a master at writing dialogue for characters whose romantic feelings change with the setting sun.

Rohmer then began a new series, called “Tales of the Four Seasons.” Its initial entry, A Tale of Springtime, is a typically refreshing Rohmer concoction. The filmmaker tells the story of Jeanne, a high school philosophy teacher with time on her hands who meets and befriends a younger woman. The latter’s father has a girlfriend her age, whom she despises, so she decides to play cupid for Jeanne and her dad. Rohmer’s dialogue is typically casual yet revealing. Beneath what may seem like superficial chatter, much is divulged regarding the characters’ wants, needs, and desires. A Tale of Springtime is a film about everyday feelings and reactions—and Rohmer transforms these everyday feelings and reactions into art. His characters find themselves in uncomfortable or comic situations that are nonetheless of a real-life quality that can be related to on a universal level.

Rohmer’s follow-up, A Tale of Winter, is the bittersweet story of a hairdresser who has an affair while on holiday but accidentally gives her lover the wrong address when they part. They lose touch, and she has his baby. All that remains of the child’s father are some photos and memories, her undying love—and the baby. Two ardent but very different suitors have become her boyfriends, and she cannot decide which one to marry. Rohmer’s point, beautifully illustrated, is that one should not settle for second best in love. Follow your heart, and allow it to lead you to your true destiny.

A Tale of Winter is flawed, if only because Rohmer’s heroine is far too flaky; she is constantly wavering and unfairly leading on the two suitors in a manner that makes it difficult to sympathize with her plight. Still, Rohmer’s thesis is well-taken; even middle-of-the-road Rohmer is far more engaging than the works of most other filmmakers.

The final two “Tales of the Four Seasons” are A Summer’s Tale and A Tale of Autumn. The first is a sweet and airy concoction about Gaspard, a moody math student passing his summer in Brittany, and his involvement with three very different young women. While the result is at best mid-level Rohmer, its point of view—you are defined by the decisions you make, and how you regard those around you and react to daily situations—is vintage Rohmer. The director was back in top form with A Tale of Autumn, the story of Magali, a fortysomething widow with two grown children, who operates her own rural vineyard. Magali has everything in life she possibly could want—all except for a companion, a relationship with just the right man. She admits this to her best friend Isabelle, but adds that she feels it is too late in life for her to find such a man. The story is set into motion when Isabelle schemes to play cupid for her friend by placing a personal ad in a newspaper. At the same time Rosine, the girlfriend of Magali’s son, plots to set her up with her former professor, who also is her ex-lover.

A Tale of Autumn oozes charm. It is vintage Rohmer: a sweet, literate, sophisticated story, crammed with sparkling, Rohmeresque dialogue. The star is the conversation between the characters, who reveal their feelings and how they relate to each other and the world. around them at this particular point in their lives. Indeed, what emerges triumphant in A Tale of Autumn is the art of conversation.

—Dennis Nastav, updated by Rob Edelman

ROMERO, George A.

Nationality: American. Born: The Bronx, New York, February 4, 1940. Education: Studied art, design, and theater at Carnegie-Mellon Institute, Pittsburgh. Career: Maker of short 8mm films, from 1954; actor/director in Pittsburgh, 1960s; directed first feature, 1968; established “Latent Image” to produce commercial/industrial films, early 1970s; worked extensively as TV director, 1970s; began collaboration with make-up artist Tom Savini on Martin, 1977; began association with writer Stephen King on Creepshow, 1982; executive producer, Tales from the Dark Side, for TV, 1983. Address: Lives in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, U.S.A.

Films as Director:

1954/6  The Man from the Meteor (short); Gorilla (short); Earthbottom (short)

1958  Curly (short); Slant (short)

1960/62  Expostulations (short)

1968  Night of the Living Dead (Night of the Flesh Eaters) (+ co-sc, ph, ed) [released in 30th anniversary edition, with additional footage, 1999]

1972  There’s Always Vanilla (The Affair) (+ ph)

1973  Hungry Wives (Jack’s Wife; Season of the Witch) (+ sc, ph, ed); The Crazies (Code Name: Trixie) (+ sc, ed)

1977  Martin (+ sc, ed)

1978  Zombies (Dawn of the Dead) (+ sc, co-ed, role as TV director)

1981  Knightriders (+ sc, co-ed)

1982  Creepshow (+ co-ed)

1985  Day of the Dead (+ sc)

1988  Monkey Shines (+ sc)

1990  Due occhi diabolici (Two Evil Eyes) (+ sc); Dark Half (+ sc, pr)

1993  The Dark Half (+ sc, ex prod)

2000  Bruiser (+ sc)

2001  The Ill (+ sc)

Other Films:

1986  Flight of the Spruce Goose (Majewski) (role)

1987  Creepshow 2 (Gornick) (sc)

1990  Night of the Living Dead (Savini) (sc); Tales from the Dark Side—The Movie (Cat from Hell episode) (Harrison) (sc)

1990  Night of the Living Dead (Savini) (sc, co-exec prod)

1991  The Silence of the Lambs (Demme) (role)

Publications

By ROMERO: books—

Martin (novelization, with Susanna Sparrow), New York, 1977.

By ROMERO: articles—

“George Romero from Night of the Living Dead to The Crazies,” in InterView (New York), April 1973.

“The McDonaldization of America,” an interview with J. Hanners and H. Kloman, in Film Criticism (Edinboro, Pennsylvania), Fall 1982.

Interview, in Cinefantastique (Oak Park, Illinois), March 1989.

On ROMERO: books—

On ROMERO: articles—

Yakir, Dan, article in American Film (Washington, D.C.), May 1981.

Vernier, J., “A Day with the Dead,” in Film Comment (New York), May/June 1985.

Profile, in Cineforum (Bergamo), July-August 1989.

As with Francis Ford Coppola, George Romero’s reputation—his position as a major American filmmaker—rests ultimately upon a trilogy. Without the three “Living Dead” films his work would merit little more than a footnote.

The other films can be dispensed with briefly. The interest of the early ones lies primarily in their relation to the trilogy. Jack’s Wife reveals an early interest in feminism that would be fully realized in Day of the Dead; The Crazies takes up certain themes of Night of the Living Dead and anticipates the later concern with militarism. The best of these films, Martin, stands somewhat to one side, though its insights into alienation and its consequences are consistent with the trilogy’s themes. Little need be said of the later films. The liberal attitudes of Knight Riders collapse into liberal platitudes—and are the more surprising given the uncompromising radicalism of the trilogy. The five-part anthology film Creepshow is barely distinguishable from the British Amicus horror films of the 1970s: nasty people doing nasty things to other nasty people. The Dark Half is an undistinguished adaptation of one of Stephen King’s worst novels. One might rescue Monkey Shines, with its intriguing premise, in which Romero seems somewhat more engaged.

The “Living Dead” trilogy, on the other hand, constitutes, taken in its entirety, one of the major achievements of American cinema, an extraordinary feat of imagination and audacity carried through with exemplary courage and conviction. The intelligence it so convincingly manifests in its sustained significance could scarcely be guessed at from the rest of Romero’s work to date. Each of the three films—Night of the Living Dead, Dawn of the Dead, and Day of the Dead—belongs absolutely to its period yet still carries resonance today; together, they constitute an implicit radical sociopolitical critique of the dominant movement of American civilization. Night of the Living Dead develops the themes of the modern family horror film inaugurated by Psycho: from its initial brother/sister bickering in the cemetery (which conjures up the first flesh-eating zombie) it proceeds... inexorably to the destruction of an entire nuclear family (its members killing and literally feeding on each other, as they had done metaphorically in their lives) and of the young couple (the embryonic future family), characters whose survival has traditionally been generically guaranteed. Unlike its successors, it also kills off its solitary hero-figure, mistaken for a zombie and shot down by the sheriff’s team. As in the other two films, the hero is black, his color situating him outside the dominant mainstream; the authority-figures are treated throughout with bitingly sardonic humor. The whole film is rooted in the disturbance and disillusion of the Vietnam period.

_Dawn of the Dead_, in the 1970s, focuses its attention on consumer-capitalism: the zombies, having taken over a vast shopping mall, proceed to carry on exactly as they did in life, except that they now consume human flesh. As one of the characters remarks, “They are us.” The film makes clear what was already there but unstated in its predecessor: the zombies do not consume for nourishment, they consume in order to consume. In both the first two films the characters are valued very precisely in relation to their ability to extricate themselves from the socially conditioned patterns of behaviour, with the difference that in _Dawn of the Dead_ two are permitted to survive. Although male and female they are not presented as even potential lovers; the woman has earlier rejected marriage to the man (subsequently a zombie) by whom she is pregnant, not because she no longer loves him but as a matter of principle. The implication is that a non-zombie future would necessitate an entire rethinking of the prevailing social-sexual organization.

In _Night of the Living Dead_ the main female character is catatonic through most of the film; in _Dawn of the Dead_, Fran is treated by the men as the traditional “helpless female,” but at the end, having extricated herself from conformity, she is sufficiently empowered to take over: it is she who pilots the helicopter to a possible though unlikely safety. In _Day of the Dead_ the woman, Sarah, becomes central—active, assertive, intelligent throughout. At the same time Romero extends his analysis of contemporary western culture to a more overtly political level, the critique of “masculinity” now directed at the two main bulwarks of male domination, the scientists and the military. The film is not anti-science: Sarah is herself a scientist. But she detaches herself from the masculinist science of Dr. Logan (aka “Dr. Frankenstein”). Logan’s aim is to prove that zombies can be tamed and trained for use as slaves. The zombies have themselves from the socially conditioned patterns of behaviour, with Romero is currently trying to turn the trilogy into a tetralogy, with the addition of _Twilight of the Dead_, but has so far been unable to secure the necessary funding. The apparent finality of _Day of the Dead_ makes speculation difficult, but one would certainly want to see what path he can find beyond it.

—Robin Wood

ROOS, Jörgen

_Nationality: Danish. Born: Gilleleje, Denmark, 14 August 1922._

_Family: Married Naomi Silberstein, 1957._

_Career: Cameraman, 1939–47; founder, Copenhagen film club, with painter Albert Mertz; scriptwriter, director, and cameraman on documentaries, from 1947; co-founder, Association of Danish Film Directors, 1956._

Awards: Silver Bear, Berlin Festival, for _Knud, 1966._

_Died: 13 September 1998, in Denmark._

Films as Director:

(documentaries, unless indicated)

1942 _Flugten (The Flight) (co-d with Albert Mertz)_.
1943 _Kaerlighed paa Rulleskoelter (co-d with Mertz); Hjertetryv (Thief of Hearts) (co-d with Mertz)_.
1944 _Richard Mortensens bevaegelige Maleri; Historien om en Mand (Story of a Man) (co-d with Mertz) (unfinished)_.
1947 _Paa Besøg hos Kong Tingeling (co-d with Mertz); Goddag Dyr! (co-d with Mertz); Ilsen brydes (co-d); Johannes V. Jensen; Opus 1; Reflexfilm_.
1948 _Mikkel_.
1949 _Paris på to måder; Jean Cocteau; Tristan Tzara, dadaismens fader; Det definitive afslag på anmodningen om et kys (co-d)_.
1950 _Spiste horisonter (co-d); Johannes Jørgensen i Assist; Shakespeare og Kronborg (Hamlet’s Castle)_.
1951 _Historien om et slot, J. F. Willumsen_.
1952 _Den strømlinjede gris; Slum; Feriebørn_.
1953 _Lyset i natten; Spaedbarnet; The Newborn (Goddag børn); Skyldig—ikke skyldig_.
1954 _Kalkmalerier; Inge bliver voksen; Avisen; Martin Andersen Nexos sidste rejse; Johannes Jørgensen i Svendborg_.
1955 _Mit livs eventyr (My Life Story)_.
1956 _Søly_.
1957 _Ellehammer; Johannes Larsen_.
1958 _Magie du diamant (Magic of the Diamond); 6-dagesløbet (The Six Days) (feature)_.
1959 _Friaflugt (Pure Air)_.
1960 _En by ved navn Köbenhaven (A City Called Copenhagen); Danish Design; Staphylokok-faren_.
1961 _Föroyar Færorerne; Hamburg_.
1962 _Vi haenger i en tråd_.

840
Besides these commissioned films he has worked on projects of his own, and in recent years he has had his own production company.

To the commissioned film Roos has brought a fresh and unconventional approach, and his way of solving the official tasks is often witty, surprising, and keen. His films are always one-man projects. He writes his own scripts, directs, and is often cameraman. And he is always the editor, because it is in the cutting room that he gives his films their definitive and personal form. Roos is superior in the short form: his editing is rhythmical, and his films have a fascinating, fast-moving drive. He likes to tease, to find unusual points of view, and he has an eye for the curious. His brilliant technique, however, can lead him into the superficial.

In 1955 Roos made one of his best films, Mit livs eventyr, about Hans Andersen. In this film he brought the iconographic technique to perfection, and he used it in later films. One of his most popular and widely known films is A City Called Copenhagen, from 1960, an untraditional and ironic tourist film. Roos was asked to make similar city portraits of Hamburg and Oslo, and has portrayed Danish personalities such as Nobel laureate Johannes V. Jensen, Carl Th. Dreyer, Greenland explorer Knud Rasmussen, and composer Carl Nielsen. In his later years Roos explored his special interest in Greenland. He lost his heart to this exceptional country and he explored both the old and the new Greenland in many films. In these later films, Roos replaced the cool, detached view characteristic of his earlier films with a more engaged view. His films about Greenland highlighted his deep-felt commitment to the land which he, more than anyone else, has brought to the screen.

—Ib Monty

ROSARI, Francesco

Films as Director and Co-Scriptwriter:

1958 La sfida (The Challenge)
1959 I magliari
1961 Salvatore Giuliano
1963 Le mani sulla città (Hands over the City)
1965 Il momento della verità (The Moment of Truth) (co-d)
1967 C’era una volta (More than a Miracle)
1970 Uomini contro
1972 Il caso Mattei (The Mattei Affair)
1973 A proposito Lucky Luciano (Lucky Luciano)
1976 Cadaveri eccellenti (Illustrious Corpses)
1979 Cristo si è fermato a Eboli (Christ Stopped at Eboli)
1981 Tre fratelli (Three Brothers)
1984 Carmen (Bizet’s Carmen)
1988 Cronaca di una morte annunziata (Chronicle of a Death Foretold)
1990 Dimenticare Palermo (To Forget Palermo)
1993 Neapolitan Diary
1996 La Tregua (The Truce)

Other Films:
1947 La terra trema (Visconti) (asst d)
1949 La domenica d’agosto (Emmer) (asst d)
1950 Tormento (Matarazzo) (asst d)
1951 I figli di nessuno (Matarazzo) (asst d); Parigi e sempre parigi (Emmer) (asst d, co-sc); Bellissima (Visconti) (asst, co-sc)
1952 Camicie Rosse (supervised post-production after director Goffredo Alessandri abandoned project); I vinti (Antonioni) (asst d); Processo alla città (Zampa) (sc)
1954 Carosello Napoletano (Giannini) (asst d); Proibito (Monicelli) (asst d); Senso (Visconti) (asst d)
1955 Racconti Romani (Franciolini) (co-sc)
1956 Il bigamo (Emmer) (asst d, co-sc)

Publications

By ROSI: articles—

Interview with Gideon Bachmann, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1965.
“Moments of Truth,” an interview with John Lane, in Films and Filming (London), September 1970.
Interviews in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1976 and Winter 1981/82.
Interview with M. Kimmel, in Films in Review (New York), May 1982.
Interview with Howard Feinstein, in Film Comment (New York), January/February 1995.
Interview with L. Codelli, in Positif (Paris), November 1997.

On ROSI: books—

Testa, Carlo, editor, Poet of Civic Courage, Westport, 1996.

On ROSI: articles—

Rosi Section of Image et Son (Paris), June/July 1976.
Alemanno, R., “Da Rosi a Petri todo modo dentro il contesto,” in Cinema Nuovo (Bari), July/August 1976.
Rosi Section of Thousand Eyes (New York), November 1976.
Rosi Section of Positif (Paris), May 1980.
Rosi Sections of Positif (Paris), May and June 1987.
Klawans, Stuart, “‘Illustrious Rosi,’” in Film Comment (New York), January/February 1995.
Calderale, M., in Segnocinema (Vicenza), March/April 1997.

* * *

The films of Francesco Rosi stand as an urgent riposte to any proposal of aesthetic puritanism as a sine qua non of engaged filmmaking. From Salvatore Giuliano to Illustrious Corpses and Chronicle of a Death Foretold, he uses a mobilisation of the aesthetic potential of the cinema not to decorate his tales of corruption, complicity, and death, but to illuminate and interrogate the reverberations of these events cause. If one quality were to be isolated as especially distinctive and characteristic it would have to be the sense of intellectual passion, of direction propelled by an impassioned sense of inquiry. This can be true in a quite literal way in Salvatore Giuliano, in which any “suspense” accruing to Giuliano’s death is put aside in favour of a search for another kind of knowledge; and The Mattei Affair, in which the soundtrack amasses evidence which is presented virtually in opposition to the images before us; or, in a more metaphorical sense, Christ Stoped at Eboli, which represents an inquiry into the social conditions of the South of Italy.

Rosi traces the evolution of his style to his early experience as an assistant on Rossellini’s Terra Trema, where he learnt the value of immediacy, improvisation, and the use of non-professional performers. It was a mode of filmmaking that suited the exploration of concerns found within a particular current in Italian thought. It finds expression in the writings of Carlo Levi and Leonardo Sciascia, both of whom deal with the issue of the South and both of whose work Rosi has adapted for the screen, along with, latterly, that of Primo Levi. It is a current that also finds political expression in the work of Antonio
Gamsci. Rosi’s films are perhaps above all the films of an industrialising Italy, the Italy of Fiat, that exists dialectically with that of the peasant South.

Throughout his work there is an abiding interest in the social conditions in which individuals live their lives and their expression at the public or civic level, licit or illicit. Concern with organised crime and its social roots—though free from any taint of sociologizing—appears as a major thread through films as diverse as Salvatore Giuliano, Hands over the City, The Mattei Affair, Lucky Luciano, and Chronicle of a Death Foretold. Although Rosi uses the appurtenances of the thriller or the gangster film (in Lucky Luciano, for instance), his interests, as Michel Ciment has pointed out, are not at all with whodunit but with what the crime reveals about the social context of individual lives. Lucky Luciano, for example, is not (unlike The Godfather) in the business of creating monsters but of creating a way of understanding the men who are thus mythologised. It is a tribute to Rosi’s virtuosity and commitment that the trajectory he describes is not a whit less exciting.

He may examine the mesh of the individual and his context from the point-of-view of the public sphere (Illustrious Corpses) or the private (Three Brothers or Christ Stopped at Eboli). The issue might be the ruthless mechanics of market forces in Hands over the City, or the process whereby the Mafia is set in place in The Mattei Affair. But above all Rosi remains a pre-eminent craftsman of the cinema in his acute and responsive relationship with his regular or occasional collaborators, especially with his cinematographers and musicians. Of recent films, Forget Palermo was criticised for superficiality and some awkwardness in its casting of James Belushi. Rosi argues that its initially touristical mode was part of its point. The film follows an American ‘man of power’ to his Sicilian roots. His honeymoon trip cannot be innocent of political implications and the tangled web of drugs and finance is meticulously revealed.

Neapolitan Diary was a more personal exploration of the same theme, taking Rosi himself back to the city of his birth and back to the location for Hands over the City. It is harsh and lucid, but never without hope of change, not even in bleak interviews with school-aged drug dealers. The South, urges Rosi, is not other than Italy but the place where the nation’s problems outcrop most painfully. Primo Levi’s The Truce, the subject of Rosi’s most recent film, follows the homeward journey of a mixed group of Auschwitz prisoners. In it Rosi has said he sees a foreshadowing of the tensions that have frighteningly emerged in Europe since the fall of the Wall.

If his most recent films may be less wholly satisfying than, say, the urgent definitiveness of Hands over the City, or less rigorously aesthetic than Illustrious Corpses, they still reveal a rare and vital intellectual commitment to cinema as a platform for debate and testimony—a form, he has said, of active participation in public life.

—Verina Glaessner

ROSSELLINI, Roberto

Nationality: Italian. Born: Rome, 8 May 1906. Family: Married 1) Marcella de Marquis (marriage annulled), two children; 2) actress Ingrid Bergman, 1950 (divorced), three children, including actress Isabella; 3) screenwriter Somali Das Gupta (divorced), one son. Career: Worked on films, in dubbing and sound effects, then as editor, from 1934; directed first feature, La nave bianca, 1940; technical director in official film industry, while simultaneously shooting documentary footage of Italian resistance fighters, 1940–45; accepted offer from Howard Hughes to make films for RKO with Ingrid Bergman in Hollywood, 1946; apparently fell out of public favour over scandal surrounding relationships with Bergman and later Das Gupta; television director of documentaries, 1960s. Died: 4 June 1977, in Rome, Italy, of heart attack.

Films as Director:

1936 Daphne (+ sc)
1938 Prelude à l’apres-midi d’une faune (+ sc)
1939 Fantasia sottomarina (+ sc); Il tacchino prepotente (+ sc); La vispa Teresa (+ sc)
1941 Il Ruscello di Ripasottile (+ sc); La nave bianca (+ co-sc)
1942 Un pilota ritorna (+ co-sc); I tre aquilotta (uncredited collaboration)
1943 L’uomo della croce (+ co-sc); L’invasore (+ supervised production, sc); Desiderio (+ co-sc) (confiscated by police and finished by Marcello Pagliero in 1946)
1945 Roma, città aperta (Rome, Open City) (+ co-sc)
1946 Paisà (Paisan) (+ co-sc; pr)
1947 Germania, anno zero (Germany, Year Zero) (+ co-sc) L’amore (Woman, Ways of Love) (+ sc); Il miracolo (The Miracle) (+ co-sc); La macchina ammazzacattivi (+ co-sc; pr); Stromboli, terra di dio (Stromboli) (+ co-sc; pr)

843
1950  Francesco—giullare di Dio (Flowers of St. Francis) (+ co-sc)
1952  “L’Invidia” episode of I sette peccati capitali (The Seven Deadly Sins) (+ co-sc); Europa ’51 (The Greatest Love) (+ co-sc)
1953  Dov’è la libertà (+ co-sc); Viaggio in Italia (Voyage to Italy, Strangers); The Lonely Woman (+ co-sc); “Ingrid Bergman” episode of Siamo donne
1954  “Napoli ‘43” episode of Amori di mezzo secolo (+ sc); Giovanna d’Arco al rogo (Joan of Arc at the Stake) (+ sc); Die Angst (Le Paura; Fear); Orient Express (+ sc, production supervision)
1958  L’India vista da Rossellini (ten episodes) (+ sc, pr); India (+ co-sc)
1959  Il Generale della Rovere (+ co-sc)
1960  Era notte a Roma (+ co-sc); Viva l’Italia (+ co-sc)
1961  Vanina Vanini (The Betrayer) (+ co-sc); Torino nei cent’anni; Benito Mussolini (Blood on the Balcony) (+ sc, production supervision)
1962  Anima nera (+ sc); “Il libratezza” episode of Rosopag (+ sc)
1966  La Prise de pouvoir par Louis XIV (The Rise of Louis XIV)
1967  Idea di un’isola (+ pr, sc)
1968  Atti degli apostoli (co-d, co-sc, ed)
1970  Socrate (Socrates) (+ co-sc, ed)
1972  Agostino di Ippona
1975  Blaise Pascal, Anno uno
1978  Il Messia (The Messiah) (+ co-sc)

Other Films:

1938  Luciano Serra, pilota (sc)
1963  Le carabinieri (co-sc)
1964  L’eta del ferro (sc, pr)
1967  La lotta dell’uomo per la sua sopravvivenza (sc, pr)

Publications

By ROSSELLINI: books—

By ROSSELLINI: articles—

“Païsà: Sixth Sketch,” with others, in Bianco e Nero (Rome), October 1947.
Interview with Francis Koval, in Sight and Sound (London), February 1951.
“Coloquio sul neo-realismo,” with Mario Verdone, in Bianco e Nero (Rome), February 1952.

“Conversazione sulla cultura e sul cinema,” in Filmcritica (Rome), March 1963.
“Intervista con Roberto Rossellini,” with Adriano Aprá and Maurizio Ponzi, in Filmcritica (Rome), April/May 1965.
“Conversazione con Roberto Rossellini,” with Michele Mancini, Renato Tomasinon, and Lello Maitello, in Filmcritica (Rome), August 1968.

On ROSSELLINI: books—

Guarner, José Luis, Roberto Rossellini, translated by Elizabeth Cameron, New York, 1970.

On ROSSELLINI: articles—

Sarris, Andrew, “Rossellini Rediscovered,” in Film Culture (New York), no. 32, 1964.
Casty, Alan, “The Achievement of Roberto Rossellini,” in Film Comment (New York), Fall 1964.
Norman, L., “Rossellini’s Case Histories for Moral Education,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Summer 1974.
“Rossellini Issue” of Filmcritica (Rome), May/June 1976.
Hughes, J., “In Memoriam: Roberto Rossellini,” in Film Comment (New York), July/August 1977.
Meder, T., “The Historiographer of the ’40s,” in Blimp (Graz), no. 37, 1997.

* * *

Roberto Rossellini has been so closely identified with the rise of the postwar Italian style of filmmaking known as neorealism that it would be a simple matter to neatly pigeonhole him as merely a practitioner of that technique and nothing more. So influential has that movement been that the achievement embodied in just three of his films—Roma, città aperta; Paisà; and Germania, anno zero—would be enough to secure the director a major place in film history. To label Rossellini simply a neorealist, however, is to drastically undervalue his contribution to the thematic aspects of his art. At its most basic level, Rossellini’s dominant concern appears to be a preoccupation with the importance of the individual within various aspects of the social context that emerged from the ashes of World War II. In his early films, which a number of historians have simplistically termed fascist, his concern for the individual was not balanced by an awareness of their social context. Thus, a film like his first feature, La nave bianca, while it portrays its sailors and hospital personnel as sensitive and caring, ignores their ideological and political milieu. It is Roma, città aperta, despite its carry-over of the director’s penchant for melodrama, that is properly considered Rossellini’s “rite of passage” into the midst of the complex social issues confronting the individual in postwar Europe. The crude conditions under which it was shot, its authentic appearance, and certain other naturalistic touches lent it an air of newsreel-like veracity, but its raw power was derived almost entirely from the individuals that Rossellini placed within this atmospheric context. With the exception of Anna Magnani and Aldo Fabrizi, the cast was made up of non-professionals who were so convincing that the effect upon viewers was electric. Many were certain that what they were viewing must have been filmed as it was actually occurring.

Despite legends about how Rossellini’s neorealist style arose as a result of the scarcity of resources and adverse shooting conditions that were present immediately after the war, the director had undoubtedly begun to conceive the style as early as his aborted Desiderio di 1943, a small-scale forerunner of neorealism which Rossellini dropped in mid-shooting. Certainly, he continued the style in Paisà and Germania, anno zero, the remaining parts of his war trilogy. In both of these features, he delineates the debilitating effects of war’s aftermath on the psyche of modern man. The latter film was a particularly powerful statement on the effect of Nazi ideology on the mind of a young boy, in part because it simultaneously criticizes the failure of traditional social institutions like the church to counter fascism’s corrupting influence.

The Rossellini films of the 1950s shed many of the director’s neorealist trappings. In doing so he shifted his emphasis somewhat to the spiritual aspects of man, revealing the instability of life and of human relationships. Stromboli, Europa ‘51, Voyage to Italy, and La paura reflect a quest for a transcendent truth akin to the secular saintliness achieved by the priest in Open City. In the 1950s films, however, his style floated unobtrusively between involvement and contemplation.

This is particularly obvious in his films with Ingrid Bergman, but is best exemplified by Voyage to Italy with its leisurely paced questioning of the very meaning of life. Every character in the film is ultimately in search of his soul. What little action there is has relatively little importance since most of the character development is an outgrowth of spiritual aspirations rather than a reaction to events. In this sense, its structure resembled the kind of neorealism practiced by De Sica in Umberto D (without the excessively emotional overtones) and yet reaffirms Rossellini’s concern for his fellow men and for Italy. At the same time, through his restriction of incident, he shapes the viewer’s empathy for his characters by allowing the viewer to participate in the film only to the extent of being companion to the various characters. The audience is intellectually free to wander away from the story, which it undoubtedly does, only to find its involvement in the character’s spiritual development unchanged since its sympathy is not based upon the physical actions of a plot.

Such an intertwining of empathetic involvement of sorts with a contemplative detachment carried over into Rossellini’s historical films of the 1960s and 1970s. His deliberately obtrusive use of zoom lenses created in the viewer of such films as Viva l’Italia and Agostino di Ippona a delicate distancing and a constant but subtle awareness that the director’s point of view was inescapable. Such managing of the viewer’s consciousness of the historical medium turns his characters into identifiable human beings who, though involving our senses... and our emotions, can still be scrutinized from a relatively detached vantage point.

This, then, is the seeming contradiction central to Rossellini’s entire body of work. As most precisely exemplified in his early, pure neorealist films, his camera is relentlessly fixed on the physical aspects of the world around us. Yet, as defined by his later works, which both retain and modify much of this temporal focus, the director is also trying to capture within the same lens an unseen and spiritual landscape. Thus, the one constant within all of his films must inevitably remain his concern for fundamental human values and aspirations, whether they are viewed with the anger and immediacy of a Roma, città aperta or the detachment of a *Viaggio in Italia."

—Stephen L. Hanson

ROSSEN, Robert

Nationality: American. Born: Robert Rosen in New York City, 16 March 1908. Education: Attended New York University. Family: Married Sue Siegal, 1954, three children. Career: Staged plays for Washington Square Players, later the Theater Guild, 1920s; actor, stage manager, and director in New York City, 1930–35; writer under contract to Mervyn LeRoy and Warner Bros., 1936–45; member of Communist Party in Hollywood, 1937–45; directed first feature, Johnny O’Clock, 1947; subpoenaed by House Un-American Activities Committee (HUAC), hearing suspended after arrest of Hollywood 10, 1947; produced first film, 1949; blacklisted after refusing to cooperate when called again to testify before HUAC, 1951–53; allowed to work again after naming names, 1953. Awards: Best Direction, New York Film Critics, for The Hustler, 1961. Died: 18 February 1966.

Films as Director:

1947 Johnny O’Clock (+ sc); Body and Soul
1949 All the King’s Men (+ sc; pr)
1951 The Brave Bulls (+ pr)
1955 Mambo (+ co-sc)
1956 Alexander the Great (+ sc, pr)
1957 Island in the Sun
1959 They Came to Cordura (+ co-sc)
1961 The Hustler (+ co-sc, pr)
1964 Lilith (+ co-sc, pr)

Other Films:

1937 Marked Woman (Bacon) (co-sc); They Won’t Forget (LeRoy) (co-sc)
1938 Racket Busters (co-sc)
1939 Dust Be My Destiny (sc); The Roaring Twenties (Walsh) (co-sc)
1940 A Child Is Born (Bacon) (sc)
1941 Blues in the Night (Litvak) (sc); The Sea Wolf (Curtiz) (sc); Out of the Fog (Litvak) (co-sc)
1943 Edge of Darkness (Milestone) (sc)
1946 A Walk in the Sun (Milestone) (sc); The Strange Love of Martha Ivers (Milestone) (sc)
1947 Desert Fury (sc)
1949 The Undercover Man (pr)

Publications

By ROSSEN: articles—

On ROSSEN: books—

On ROSSEN: articles—

* * *

Robert Rossen died as he was beginning to regain a prominent position in the cinema. His premature death left us with a final film which pointed to a new, deepening devotion to the study of deteriorating psychological states.

As a contract writer for Warner Bros. in the late 1930s and early 1940s, Rossen worked on many excellent scripts which showed a strong sympathy for individuals destroyed by or battling “the system.” His first produced screenplay, Marked Woman, a little-known and highly underrated Bette Davis vehicle, deserves serious attention for its study of prostitution racketeering and its empowerment of women to overthrow corruption. His fifth film, The Roaring Twenties, is a thoughtful study of the obsessive drive for power and money amidst the harshness of the post-World War I period and the beginnings of the Great Depression. While his early scripts occasionally displayed an idealism which bordered on naiveté, Rossen deserves credit for his commitment to the depiction of economic and social injustice.

According to Alan Caesty in The Films of Robert Rossen, Rossen was invited to direct his own screenplay for Johnny O’Clock, a tale of murder among gamblers, at the insistence of the film’s star, Dick Powell. Rossen followed this poorly received directorial debut with two of his most critically and financially successful films: Body and Soul and All the King’s Men, two male-centered studies of corruption and the drive for success. The first of these films is centered in the boxing ring, the second in the political arena. The success of Body and Soul (from a screenplay by Abraham Polonsky) allowed Rossen the financial stability to set up his own company with a financing and releasing contract through Columbia Pictures. As a result, he wrote, directed, and produced All the King’s Men, which was awarded the Best Picture Oscar in 1949.

These back-to-back successes apparently triggered an unfortunate increase in directorial ego: production accounts of the later films detail Rossen’s inability to openly accept collaboration. This paranoia was exacerbated by his deepening involvement in House Un-American Activities Committee (HUAC) proceedings. Despite a 1953 reprieve after providing names of alleged communists to the committee, he was unable to revive his Hollywood career, although he continued to work. He seemed a particularly unlikely candidate to direct his next three films: the Ponti-DeLaurentis melodrama Mambo, the historical epic Alexander the Great, and the interracial problem drama, Island in the Sun. The last of his 1950s films, They Came to Cordura, is an interesting film that should have succeeded. Its failure so obsessed Rossen that he spent many years unsuccessfully trying to re-edit it for re-release.

Rossen’s final films, The Hustler and Lilith, show a return to form, due in great part to the atmospheric cinematography of Eugene Schufftan. Rossen, firmly entrenched in the theatrical values of content through script and performance, had previously worked with strong cinematographers (especially James Wong Howe and Burnett Guffey), but had worked from the conviction that content was the prime area of concern. As he told Cahiers du Cinéma, “Technique is nothing compared to content.” In The Hustler, a moody film about winners and losers set in the world of professional pool-playing, the studied script was strongly enhanced by Schufftan’s predominantly claustrophobic framings. Schufftan, long a respected European cameraman (best known for his work on Lang’s Metropolis and Carné’s Quai des brumes), had been enthusiastically recommended to Rossen by Jack Garfein, who had brought Schufftan back to America for his Something Wild. Schufftan’s working posture was one of giving the director what he asked for, and production notes from the set of The Hustler indicate he gave Rossen what he wanted while also achieving results that one feels were beyond Rossen’s vision. There was no denying Schufftan’s influence in the film’s success (it won him an Oscar), and Rossen wisely invited him to work on his next film.

Lilith, an oblique and elliptical film in which a psychiatric worker ends up seeking help, signalled an advance in Rossen’s cinematic sensibility. While several of the purely visual passages border on being overly symbolic, one feels that Rossen was beginning to admit the communicative power of the visual. Less idealistic and with less affirmative endings, these last two films showed a deeper sense of social realism, with Rossen striving to portray the effect of the psychological rather than social environment on his characters. Rossen’s last project, which went unrealized because of his death, would have allowed him to portray both the social and psychological problems of people living in the vicinity of Cape Canaveral (Cape Kennedy). Such a project would have provided him with a further opportunity to break away from his tradition of dialogue-bound character studies.

—Doug Tomlinson

ROTH, Paul

Nationality: British. Born: Paul Thompson in London, 3 June 1907. Education: Highgate School; Slade School of Fine Art, London, 1923–25. Family: Married 1) Margaret Louise Lee, 1930 (divorced 1939); 2) Margot Rose Perkins, 1943; 3) actress Constance Smith. Career: Painter, designer, and book illustrator, 1925; art critic, Connoisseur, 1927–28; property man, 1928, then assistant designer, British International Pictures Ltd.; author and film historian, from 1930; producer, Empire Marketing Board, 1932; directed first film, Contact, 1932; director of productions, Strand Films, 1936–38; Rockefeller Foundation Fellow, 1937–38; set up Associated Realist Film Productions and founded Documentary News Letter, 1939; managing director, Paul Rotha Productions Ltd., 1941–76; made 100 documentaries for British Ministry of Information, World War II; head of Documentary Film Department, BBC, 1953–55; lecturer on documentary films, United States, 1953–54; member of board, Isotype Institute, from 1959; Simon Senior Research Fellow, University of Manchester, 1967–68. Awards: Gold Medals: Venice Festival, 1934, Brussels Festival, 1935, and Leipzig Festival, 1962; British Film Academy Awards for The World Is Rich, 1947, and World without End, 1953. Member: Fellow, British Film Institute, 1951; Honorary Member (posthumous), ACTT, 1984. Died: 7 March 1984.

Films as Director and Scriptwriter:

(documentary unless indicated)

- 1932 Contact
- 1933 The Rising Tide (reissued as Great Cargoes, 1935); Shipyard
- 1935 Death on the Road; Face of Britain
- 1936 The Future’s in the Air; Cover to Cover; The Way to the Sea; Peace of Britain
- 1937 Statue Parade; Today We Live; Here Is the Land
- 1939 New Worlds for Old; Roads across Britain (co-direct with Sidney Cole)
- 1940 The Fourth Estate (not shown until 1964); Mr. Borland Thinks Again
- 1943 World of Plenty
- 1944 Soviet Village
- 1945 Total War in Britain; Land of Promise
- 1946 A City Speaks
- 1947 The World Is Rich
- 1950 No Resting Place (feature)
- 1953 World Without End (co-direct with Basil Wright)
- 1953/55 Hope for the Hungry; The Waiting People; No Other Way; The Wealth of Waters; The Virus Story
- 1958 Cat and Mouse (feature)
- 1959 Cradle of Genius

---

Contact (documentary unless indicated)

- 1932 Contact
- 1933 The Rising Tide (reissued as Great Cargoes, 1935); Shipyard
- 1935 Death on the Road; Face of Britain
- 1936 The Future’s in the Air; Cover to Cover; The Way to the Sea; Peace of Britain
- 1937 Statue Parade; Today We Live; Here Is the Land
- 1939 New Worlds for Old; Roads across Britain (co-direct with Sidney Cole)
- 1940 The Fourth Estate (not shown until 1964); Mr. Borland Thinks Again
- 1943 World of Plenty
- 1944 Soviet Village
- 1945 Total War in Britain; Land of Promise
- 1946 A City Speaks
- 1947 The World Is Rich
- 1950 No Resting Place (feature)
- 1953 World Without End (co-direct with Basil Wright)
- 1953/55 Hope for the Hungry; The Waiting People; No Other Way; The Wealth of Waters; The Virus Story
- 1958 Cat and Mouse (feature)
- 1959 Cradle of Genius
1961 Das Leben von Adolf Hitler (The Life of Adolf Hitler)
1962 De Overval (The Silent Raid) (feature)

Publications

By ROTHA: books—

Documentary Film: The Use of the Film Medium to Interpret Creatively and in Social Terms the Life of the People as It Exists in Reality, London, 1936; 3rd edition, 1952.
A Paul Rotha Reader, with Duncan Petrie, editor, Evanston, 1999.

By ROTHA: articles—

Letter in Film and TV Technician (London), February 1983 (reply, July 1983).

On ROTHA: books—

On ROTHA: articles—

Film Forum (London), January 1963.

Powell, Dily, obituary, in Film and TV Technician (London), April 1984.

* * *

Paul Rotha’s position in the British documentary movement has always been somewhat equivocal. Unlike other members of the group, he served only briefly in the government units Grierson assembled in the 1930s. Before that he had trained as a painter and designer, and his book, The Film Till Now—the first aesthetic history of film in English, perhaps in any language—had already been published. After six months at the Empire Marketing Board Film Unit, he continued in documentary as an independent producer. His ability to obtain private sponsorship was unusual for those early years, when documentary was just becoming a recognized mode.

Rotha’s films were frequently innovative and experimental, with his creative impulse more akin to conceptual art than to personal expression, often mixing forms and styles. Though original in their combinations, their aspects derived from precedents that attracted Rotha. Shipyard, for example, takes a hard look at the cycles of work followed by unemployment that characterized the British shipbuilding industry. (In this respect the film makes one think of Joris Ivens’ Borinage, which concerned the miserable conditions in the mining region of Belgium.) But it also contains extended passages of visual artistry of the giant ship in stages of construction—silhouettes of the hull frame and the like—that seem to stem from the “city symphonies” of early documentary, or perhaps from Ivens’ The Bridge (1928).

World of Plenty (1943) and its sequel, The World Is Rich (1947), seem equally original and yet, as Rotha acknowledged, their inspiration came from the sort of Depression theater called “The Living Newspaper” he had seen while on a trip to the United States in the late 1930s to spread the documentary gospel. They are intelligent, imaginative, and finally a bit too clever, the rhetorical devices attracting as much attention as the argument itself. World without End is unusual because it couples footage about the work of UNESCO shot by Basil Wright in Thailand with that of Rotha in Mexico, an undertaking reminiscent of D.W. Griffith’s monumental Intolerance. But somehow it evokes no real (or deep) sympathy for the people and their problems.

Of Rotha’s three fiction features, the first, No Resting Place, is clearly in the semi-documentary tradition which Harry Watt had carried from the wartime Crown Film Unit over to commercial features. A film about the lives of itinerant tinkers, it was shot on location in Ireland and used non-actors as well as little-known professionals.

Rotha’s compilation The Life of Adolf Hitler, again skillful and intelligent, follows a vein much mined by American and British television. (Rotha was head of BBC-TV documentary during 1953–55.) Specifically, it recalls “The Twisted Cross” (1956) of NBC’s Project XX series.
In addition to his filmmaking, Rotha wrote constantly; his energy was prodigious, his output prolific. Apart from books and articles and reviews devoted to the entertainment film (some of them anthologized in Rotha on the Film) is the equally large body of writing related to the British documentary of the 1930s. At the time he was acknowledged as the historian of the movement, in large part because Documentary Film and Documentary Diary provide such a comprehensive picture of the subject. A special labor of love is his Robert J. Flaherty: A Biography. One other aspect of Rotha's role in relation to documentary deserves comment. He set himself up alongside Grierson rather than be cast as one of the loyal group members who followed Grierson. Although his politics may have been much like those of other documentarians, he maintained an outspokenness that those working at government units did not permit themselves. As a result, Rotha is honored by young left-wing film scholars and filmmakers who tend to dismiss Grierson and the documentary movement he formed as a tool of the Establishment.

Rotha was something of a maverick and gadfly. A testy and quirky man, he was given to self-promotion. But as Grierson once said in defending Rotha to documentary colleagues after he had made some contentious public outburst, “He is one of us.” Rotha would not have agreed, but on his own terms.

—Jack C. Ellis

ROUCH, Jean

Nationality: French. Born: Jean Pierre Rouch in Paris, 31 May 1917. Education: Lycée Henri IV, Paris, degree in literature; Ecole nationale des ponts et chaussées, Paris, degree in civil engineering. Family: Married Jane Margaret Gain, 1952. Career: Became first to make descent of Niger River by dugout canoe, also began making ethnographic films during trip, 1946–47; director of research at Centre Nationale de la Recherche Scientifique, 1966–86; Secrétaire ethnographic films during trip, 1946–47; director of research at Centre Nationale de la Recherche Scientifique, 1972; President of La Cinémathèque française, 1987–91. Awards: Prize Festival du Film Maudit, Biarritz, for Initiation à la danse, 1949; Prix du Reportage, Paris Short Film Festival, for Circoncision, 1950; Critics Prize, Venice Film Festival, for Les Maîtres fous, 1955; Prix Delleuc, for Moi, un Noir, 1959; Prizes at Cannes, Manheim, and Venice Festivals for Chronique d'un été, 1961; Golden Lion Prize, Venice, for La Chasse au lion, 1965.

Films as Director:

1947 Au pays des mages noirs (co-d, sc, ph)
1948 Hombori; Les Magiciens de Wanzerbé (co-d, pr, ph)
1949 Initiation à la danse des Possédés; La Circoncision (+ pr, ph)
1950 Chasse à l’hippopotame
1951 Bataille sur le grand fleuve (+ ph); Cimetière dans la falaise; Yenendi: les Hommes qui font la pluie (+ ph); Les Gens du mil (+ ph)
1952 Les Fils de l’eau (compilation of earlier films; released 1958)
1953 Mammy Water (+ sc, ph)
1954 Les Maîtres fous (+ ph, narration)

Jean Rouch

1957 Baby Ghana; Moi, un noir (+ sc, ph)
1958 Moro Naba (+ ph); La royale goumbé (+ ph); Sapkata (co-d, + ph)
1961 La Pyramide humaine (+ sc, co-ph); Chronique d’un été (Chronicle of a Summer) (co-d, co-sc); Les Ballets de Niger
1962 La Punition (co-d); Urbanisme africain (+ sc); Le Mil; Les Pêcheurs du Niger (+ sc); Abidjan, port de pêche (+ sc)
1963 Le Palmier à l’huile; Les Cocosiers; Monsieur Albert Prophète; Rose et Landry
1964 “Véronique et Marie-France” (also known as “La Fleur de l’âge ou les adolescents”) episode of Les Veuvres de quinze ans (The Adolescents; That Tender Age) (+ sc); “Gare du nord” episode of Paris vu par (Six in Paris) (+ sc)
1965 La Chasse au lion à l’arc (The Lion Hunters) (+ sc, ph, narration); La Goumbe des jeunes nocéurs (+ sc, ph) (released 1967); L’Afrique et la recherche scientifique; Alpha noir; Tambours de pierre; Festival de Dakar, Hampi; Musique et danse des chasseurs Gov; Jackville
1966 Batteries Dogon—éléments pour une étude des rythmes (co-d); Fêtes de novembre à Bregbo; Dongo Horendi; Dongo Yenendi; Koli-Koli; Sigui année zero (co-d)
1967 Jaguar (+ ph); Daudo Sorko; Sigui: l’enclume de Yougo; Tourou et Bitti
1968 Pierres chantantes d’Ayorou; Wanzerbé; Sigui 1968—les danseurs de Tyogou (co-d); Un Lion nommé l’Américain
1969 Sigui 1969—la caverna de Bongo
1970 Yenendi de Yantalla; Mya—la mère; Sigui 1970—Les clameurs d’Amani (co-d)
1971 Petit à petit (+ co-sc, ph); Porto Novo—la danse des reines (co-d); Sigui 1971—la danse d’Idyeli (co-d); Architectes Ayorou; Yenendi de Simiri

1972 Horendi; Sigui 1972—les pagnes de l’am (co-d); Yenendi de Boukoki; Tanda Singui

1973 L’Enterrement du Hogon; VW—Voyou; Dongo Hor; Sécheresse à Simiri; Boukoki; Hommage à Marcel Mauss; Taro Okamoto

1974 Cocorico, Monsieur Poulet (+ co-sc); Pam Kuso Kar; Sigui 1973—l’aventure de la circconsicion; La 504 et les foudroiers (co-d); Ambara Dama (co-d); Sécheresse à Simiri (continuation of 1973 film); Toboy Tobaye

1975 Souna Kouma; Initiation

1976 Babatou ou les trois conseils (+ ph); Médecines et médecins (co-d); Ryhmde de travail

1977 Makwayela; Ciné-Portrait de Margaret Head (Margaret Head: Portrait of a Friend); Isphahan: Lettre Persanne 1977; Fête des Gandhi Bi à Simiri; Le Griot Bayde (co-d); Hommage à Marcel Mauss: Marcel Levy; Hommage à Marcel Mauss: Germaine Dieterlen

1978 Simi Siddo Kuma

1979 Funérailles à Bongo: Le Vieux Anai (co-d)

1980 Yenendi Gengel

1981 Portrait de Raymond Depardon

1984 Dionysos

1986 Folie ordinaire d’une fille de Cham (The Ordinary Madness of a Daughter of Cham)

1987 Enigma (co-d)

1988 Brise-Glace (Icebreaker) (co-d); Boulevards d’Afrique—bou ou mariage

1990 Cantate pour deux générées (doc)

1993 Madame L’eau (Madam Water)

1997 Moi fatigué debout, moi couché; Faire-part: Musée Henri Langlois (+ ph)

Other Films:

1953 Alger—Le Cap (adviser)

1961 Niger, jeune républiqueum (adviser)

1976 Chantons sous l’occupation (co-ph)

Publications

By ROUCH: articles—

Interview, in Movie (London), April 1963.

“Jean Rouch in Conversation,” with James Blue, in Film Comment (New York), Fall/Winter 1967.

Interview in Ecran (Paris), March 1977.

“Ciné-transe: The Vision of Jean Rouch,” an interview with D. Yakir, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1978.

Interview with A. Rodrig, in Cinématographe (Paris), April 1985.

Interview with Gilles Marsolais, in 24 Images (Montreal), November-December 1989.

Interview with F. Maggi, and G. Maggi, in Cinéaction (Courbevoie), no. 4, 1996.

Interview with Borjana Mateeva, in Kino (Sophia), no. 3, 1998.

On ROUCH: books—

On ROUCH: articles—

Sandell, Roger, “Films by Jean Rouch,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Winter 1961/62.
Graham, Peter, “Cinéma Vérité in France,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Summer 1964.

MacDougall, David, “Prospects of the Ethnographic Film,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Winter 1969/70.

“Moi, un noir Issue” of Avant-Scène du Cinéma (Paris), 1 April 1981.

Kemp, Peter, “From This-Is-It! to Can-We-Do-It?” in Filmmnews, February 1988.

A prolific and innovative ethnographic filmmaker as well as a pioneer of cinématheque and improvised film psychodrama, Jean Rouch has not only redefined documentary film practice but also stimulated radical developments in fiction film. It was as a civil engineer preferring West Africa to the German occupation that Rouch stimulated radical developments in fiction film. The powerful exteriorisation of violence and role-play had particular meaning for two creative artists: Peter Brook staging his Marat/Sade, and Jean Gènet in his conception of Les Noirs. Rouch’s first feature film, Moi, un Noir, has thematic links with Les Maîtres fous. Observation of the daily lives of migrant workers includes their fantasies as they talk to the camera in the guise of their self-attributed movie-star pseudonyms. Discovering himself through the film’s rushes, “Edward G. Robinson” is stimulated to talk openly about his problems and ambitions. The valuable perceptions derived from this participatory technique reinforced the importance of including the subjective conscious alongside objective observation in the ethnographic film.

As a means to gather further insights into issues of racial and cultural difference, Rouch regularly experimented with improvised dramas: Jaguar; Cocorico, Monsieur Poulet; Les Adolescents; La Puniton; or the indicative La Pyramide humaine. In this film Rouch set up the situation of a white girl attempting to integrate with black classmates. With the camera providing the catalyst, pupils developed scenes from their own experiences to create a form of cathartic psychodrama, but the experiment was flawed by the lack of synchronized sound, and efforts to recreate raw emotions for a later soundtrack proved difficult.

At the suggestion of the sociologist Edgar Morin, Rouch applied his investigative documentary approach to a group of Parisians questioned about happiness (Chronique d’un été). With lightweight sound equipment and a special wide-angled camera developed by fellow cinematographer Michel Brault, Rouch achieved a sense of immediacy and intimacy previously lacking. Despite reservations about the interview sample (mostly Morin’s friends) and the post hoc shaping implicit in editing twenty-five hours of recording to the ninety-minute feature, Chronique d’été was lauded as the new realism, or in Rouch’s terms, cinéma vérité. The approach differs from the didacticism or idealism of scripted documentaries and implies a new directness and truthfulness (the term is borrowed from Vertov’s kino-pravda). Whereas the contemporary “direct” cinema movement maintained the camera’s invisibility, cinéma vérité foregrounded the technology, insisting that the elicited information is generated by the interview situation itself. The interventionist approach was geared to stimulate spontaneity, and with it, revelation.

The influence of the film was considerable. Radical filmmakers like Jacques Rozier, Chris Marker, and Jean-Luc Godard adapted the approach, so that hand-held cameras, actors addressing the camera, improvisation, or the undisguised directorial voice became staple elements.

The experiment of Chronique d’un été was extended in La punition, where Rouch also brought into play the techniques of La Pyramide humaine. Non-professional actors were wired for sound and left to improvise around the theme of a girl’s encounters with three men in Paris. Rouch’s aim was to maximise cinéma vérité spontaneity and, in order to reduce intervention through editing, filming was conducted in ten-minute takes over a single weekend. This attempt at convergence between film time and narrative time was only partially successful, and Rouch returned to the question in his “real life” drama of a fatal quarrel in Gare du Nord, one of the episodes in Paris vu par.... In subsequent films Rouch explored cultural issues through folk tales or contemporary African drama. In Babatou ou les trois conseils, he draws on war chronicles and a fairy tale to articulate views on slavery, while in Cocorico, Monsieur Poulet, a Nigerian tale about a travelling chicken dealer is retold through the collective improvisation of non-professional actors. A stage play is the source both for Folie ordinaire d’une fille de Cham, in which two female inmates of a mental institution act out their frustrations born of gender, race, religion, and upbringing, and for Boulevards d’Afrique, based on a Senegalese musical comedy, in which a young woman challenges her parent’s cultural assumptions about an arranged marriage.

Rouch’s most recent work confirms the continuing vitality of his eclectic interests. In the powerful Cantate pour deux générations, he returns to a possession ritual in which Africans perform voodoo rites on Napoleon’s grave to release the spirit of a black general. With Brise-Glace, he produced a wordless documentary about a Swedish ice-breaker in the North sea, while his current project, Madame l’Eau has taken him to Holland.

As a self-tutored ethnographic filmmaker, Rouch pioneered approaches which in turn radicalised several areas of filmmaking in the 1960s. His interactive approach to documentary, which evolved into extemporized psychodramas, brought fresh insights into cultural difference, while the French tradition of scripted documentary (encapsulated in Rouquier’s Farrebique) was jolted into a new form of directness by Chronique d’un été. Latter-day film and TV documentarists as well as radical filmmakers such as Godard attest to his influence in sociological film essays (Masculin et féminin). After half a century as a filmmaker, academic, and author, Rouch’s commitment to promoting film as an instrument of ethnographical research remains undiminished. In 1978, as a mark of his international standing, he was himself the subject of a TV documentary, Jean Rouch and His Camera in the Heart of Africa, but there are no greater monuments to his life’s work than the unique corpus of films produced for the Musée de l’Homme and the worldwide host of filmmakers who have followed his stimulating cross-disciplinary approach to filmmaking.

—R. F. Cousins

RUDOLPH, Alan

Nationality: American. Born: Los Angeles, 18 December 1943, son of actor and film/TV director Oscar Rudolph; sometimes credited as Gerald Cormier. Education: Studied accounting at UCLA. Career: Began work in the Paramount Pictures mailroom, mid-1960s; joined the Directors Guild training program, 1967; worked as an assistant director for TV and films, late 1960s; directed his first feature, Premonition, 1970 (released 1972); worked with Robert Altman at Lion’s Gate, from 1973; Altman produced Welcome to L.A. and Remember My Name. Awards: Los Angeles Film Critics Association New Generation Award, 1984; Berlin Film Festival C.I.C.A.E. Award, for Trouble in Mind, 1985; San Sebastian International Film Festival Alma Award for Best Screenplay, Aspen Filmfest Audience Award, for Afterglow, 1997. Address: 15760 Ventura Blvd., Encino, CA 91436, U.S.A.

Films as Director:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1970</td>
<td>Premonition (+ sc)</td>
<td>(released 1972)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1973</td>
<td>Terror Circus (Barn of the Naked Dead, Nightmare Circus) (+ co-sc, pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1976</td>
<td>Welcome to L.A. (+ sc)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1978</td>
<td>Remember My Name (+ sc)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1980</td>
<td>Roadie (+ co-story)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1982</td>
<td>Endangered Species (+ co-sc)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1983</td>
<td>Return Engagement</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1984</td>
<td>Choose Me (+ sc); Songwriter</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1985</td>
<td>Trouble in Mind (+ sc)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1987</td>
<td>Made in Heaven</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1988</td>
<td>The Moderns (+ co-sc)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1989</td>
<td>Love at Large (+ sc)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1991</td>
<td>Mortal Thoughts</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1993</td>
<td>Equinox (+ sc)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1994</td>
<td>Mrs. Parker and the Vicious Circle (+ co-sc)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1997</td>
<td>Afterglow (+ sc)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1999</td>
<td>Breakfast of Champions (+ sc)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2000</td>
<td>Trixie (+ sc, co-story)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2001</td>
<td>Investigating Sex (+ co-sc, pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Other Films:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1954</td>
<td>The Rocket Man (Rudolph)</td>
<td>(ro)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1969</td>
<td>Riot (Kulik)</td>
<td>(asst d)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1973</td>
<td>The Long Goodbye (Altman)</td>
<td>(asst d)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1974</td>
<td>California Split (Altman)</td>
<td>(asst d)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1975</td>
<td>Nashville (Altman)</td>
<td>(asst d)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1976</td>
<td>Buffalo Bill and the Indians, or Sitting Bull’s History Lesson (Altman)</td>
<td>(co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1990</td>
<td>The Hollywood Mavericks (Dauman)</td>
<td>(appearance)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1992</td>
<td>The Player (Altman)</td>
<td>(appearance)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1994</td>
<td>Would You Kindly Direct Me to Hell: The Infamous Dorothy Parker (doc)</td>
<td>(short)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Publications

By RUDOLPH: book—

By RUDOLPH: articles—

Interview in Film Comment (New York), January/February 1977.

Interview with Gavin Smith in Film Comment (New York), May/June 1993.

‘‘The Producer as Gambler,’’ in Film Comment (New York), March/April 1994.

On RUDOLPH: articles—

Milne, Tom, ‘‘... As Suggestive as a Neon Orchid,’’ in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1985.

Farber, Stephen, ‘‘Five Horsemen after the Apocalypse,’’ in Film Comment (New York), July/August 1985.

Jaehne, Karen, ‘‘Time for The Moderns,’’ in Film Comment (New York), March/April 1988.

Taylor, Paul, ‘‘Meet All the People—Alan Rudolph,’’ in Monthly Film Bulletin (London), November 1990.

* * *

Alan Rudolph’s films are populated by mysterious wanderers, musicians, painters, and journalists, people who have flirted with success without ever achieving it and who exist in a timeless, bohemian limbo. It is clear that he identifies with his protagonists. Never as trenchant a satirist as his early mentor, Robert Altman, Rudolph imbues his work with a strong romantic streak. At his worst, he is simply trite and maudlin. At his best, he weaves elaborate fantasies as colourful and eye-catching as anything Coppola ever managed at Zoetropes.

Stunned by Altman’s McCabe and Mrs Miller, the young Rudolph quickly attached himself to the shippets of the great director, co-scripting Buffalo Bill and the Indians, Altman’s bicentennial savaging of Wild West mythology, and also working on The Long Goodbye. Altman’s film company produced Welcome to L.A., Rudolph’s first important feature as a director. While the film was not a particularly scathing critique of Californian social mores, it nevertheless introduces themes and motifs which would be further explored in subsequent Rudolph works. For example, the film features a Kerouac-like lonesome traveler as hero. Keith Carradine plays a whisky-drinking songwriter, just arrived in town, who dresses—somewhat incongruously—like the straw man in the Wizard of Oz, with a goatee beard and a tweed hat. But despite his unlikely garb, he manages to seduce everyone from Lauren Hutton to Geraldine Chaplin. Rudolph has spoken of the importance of music to his films. Welcome to L.A. boasts a truly awful soundtrack, comprising the songs which the Carradine character is supposed to have written. This may be an elaborate joke on the director’s part. After all, Carradine is ostensibly a failed songwriter, and his music isn’t meant to be any good.

Rudolph’s second feature, Remember My Name, bombed at the box office. Undeterred, he geared up to start work on a third project, a long-cherished movie chronicling the lives and fast times of the American artists and literati in 1920s Paris. Five weeks before the cameras were due to roll, though, the financiers pulled the plug on The Moderns, and Rudolph was cast out into the wilderness of work as a contract director.

Between 1978 and 1984, Rudolph was employed on several “routine” movies, directing Roadie, a vehicle for the overweight American rocker Meatloaf, and making a romantic melodrama about cow killing in the U.S. Midwest, Endangered Species. He also found time to direct a highly provocative documentary, Return Engagement, which records a staged encounter between two disgraced figures from the recent American past—Timothy Leary, the psychedelic Harvard academic, and G. Gordon Liddy, mastermind behind the Watergate break-in. Although seemingly from opposite ends of the political spectrum, Leary and Liddy turn out to have a great deal in common. They are bona fide American anti-heroes, not at all dissimilar from the fictional characters with which Rudolph fills his films. As such, they hold an obvious attraction for the director.

Choose Me, based on a radio show and shot in less than a month for under $750,000, is quintessential Rudolph, and its success marked his return to the independent cinema mainstream. It centers on a singles bar where glamorous strangers strike up acquaintance. Genevieve Bujold, a Rudolph regular, plays a DJ agony aunt, offering solace and advice to the town’s yearning and heartbroken populace. There is something theatrical and stylized about the movie: for example, the sets could be from a Minnelli musical. But Rudolph manages to create vivid and memorable characters, even as the movie risks becoming an exercise in glamorous facades. In spite of the rain, the neon and the mist, and the soul music soundtrack, this is an absorbing story about sexual jealousy, and it is also genuinely mysterious: all in all, quite a coup for under a million dollars.

The follow up, Trouble in Mind, involves quite a bit of tampering with Keith Carradine’s coiffure: the actor, playing a young married delinquent making his first steps in organized crime, sports a lanky 1950s quiff. This contrasts with Kris Kristofferson’s beard and the bald pate of a villain played by Divine, on leave from John Waters. A meticulous stylist, Rudolph is one of the few directors capable of portraying character through hairstyles. A camp film noir, not that far removed in its narrative from Big Heat, Trouble in Mind manages again to blend visual extravagance with downbeat subject matter. The same cannot be said for Made in Heaven, a flimsy and mawkish love story, which in spite of its passing nods to the Sturges/Capra vision of small-town America, and its celestial chicanery (early parts of the film are set in heaven, for this is yet another variation on Heaven Can Wait) seems toothless and bland in comparison with its two predecessors. Again, Rudolph didn’t have full artistic control: “The writer-producers said they wanted me but it turned out they didn’t want the darker touches I would have added.”

Finally, ten years later than scheduled, Rudolph managed to make The Moderns in 1988. This was not the simple-minded evocation of Gertrude Stein’s tea parties and Hemingway’s alcoholism that some critics presumed. Based on “memoir, gossip, innuendo and lies,” it attempted to question the premises on which aesthetic judgments are made. What is originality, and what constitutes forgery? These rather obvious questions seemed especially relevant in a decade when art prices were shooting through the roof. The Rudolph repertory company turned out in force, with Bujold, Carradine, and Geraldine Chaplin all cast. Playing on stereotypes of 1920s modernism and caricaturing American attitudes toward Europe (The Moderns recreates Paris in Montreal), this was a far more tongue-in-cheek creation than its detractors realized.

Rudolph’s films are like those of his mentor Altman in that, taken as a whole, they are always interesting and consistently crammed with style. Occasionally brilliant, in the final analysis they are widely—and maddeningly—uneven. Take Love at Large, the story of a private detective and his various encounters after he is hired by a mystery woman. As much as you try to like the film because the characters are, on their surfaces, so intriguing, the result is more chaotic than coherent. The same can be said for Mortal Thoughts, about a murder investigation, and Equinox, about two lookalikes—one a powerless car mechanic and the other a gangland thug—who live coincident.

One of Rudolph’s most interesting 1990s films is Mrs. Parker and the Vicious Circle, a recollection of life among the 1920s New York intelligencia. At its core is the character of the writer-humorist Dorothy Parker, portrayed by Jennifer Jason Leigh. For all her surface cynicism and tenacity, Parker is depicted as a fragile, sensitive lost soul, a woman who gained a certain measure of professional success but who found elusive any level of personal contentment. The “vicious circle” of the title is the daily luncheon gathering of fabled writers, editors, and wits at the Algonquin Hotel’s Round Table. Parker is one of the regulars. Others include Robert Benchley (Campbell Scott), with whom Parker shares a close friendship and an unconsummated sexual attraction, and Charles MacArthur (Matthew Broderick), with whom she has an ill-fated affair. Flitting in and out of the story are Alexander Woollcott, Edna Ferber, Robert Sherwood, and Marc Connelly, among many others. It is Rudolph’s contention that these celebrity scribes frizzed away their talents on drink and idle chatter, while the true and lasting writers of the generation (such as Hemingway and Faulkner) were devoting their energies to their work.

Parker aficionados criticized the facts as presented in the film, contending it was unlikely that Parker and Benchley (who was less physically attractive than depicted onscreen) lived with a sexual tension between them. As the on-screen Parker reads her poetry and sits with her friends at the Algonquin, she often appears as a sad sack, an alcoholic bore. Yet in fact she was a true wit, with people flocking to be in her company. Onscreen, her voice is grating and slurring; it is the voice of a drunk. Yet in the biography You Might as Well Live: The Life and Times of Dorothy Parker, she is described as “possessed of a voice surprisingly rich and full for so small a person.”

Rudolph’s Mrs. Parker follow-up was one of his more engaging films: Afterglow, a deeply personal, tender, and riveting drama that tells the story of two couples, one younger and the other middle-aged, and the manner in which they become intertwined and linked by fate. Phyllis Mann (a resplendent Julie Christie) is a former B-movie actress who lives with her philandering handymen husband Lucky (Nick Nolte); the scenario follows what happens when he commences an affair with Marianne (Lara Flynn Boyle), a frustrated yuppie who is married to Jeffrey (Jonny Lee Miller), an arrogant corporate climber. Afterglow is a film for mature adults, which is not to say that it should have been rated NC-17. Its characters are finely drawn—disconnected and dissatisfied, and undeniably poignant. Unfortunately, Rudolph’s next film was disjointed and uninviting (however well-intentioned): Breakfast of Champions, a stale adaptation of the Kurt Vonnegut social satire.

Rudolph’s wildest—and best—film to date remains Choose Me, a comedy-drama with an evocative from-midnight-til-dawn feel. Choose Me serves as the best illustration of themes which remain constant throughout his work, exploring how some individuals choose to play different roles as they relate to others, and how chance acquaintances and occurrences affect peoples’ lives forever.

Rudolph is something of an anomaly among contemporary American filmmakers. In spite of his extravagant visual sense, he seems to work best on small budgets. Although his films seem destined for art houses, the cheerful, upbeat romanticism of some of his stories and his insistence on creating happy couples suggest he is a populist at heart.

—G. C. Macnab, updated by Rob Edelman

RUIZ, Raúl

Nationality: Chilean. Born: Puerto Montt, Chile, 25 July 1941. Education: Studied law, theology, and theatre; spent year at Documentary Film School of Santa Fe, Argentina, 1966. Family: Married to filmmaker and editor Valeria Sarmiento. Career: Prolific writer of stage plays, 1956–62; shot first film La maleta (unfinished) at Grupo Cine Experimental, University of Chile, 1960; directed first feature, Los tres triste tigres, 1968; film advisor to the Socialist Party in Allende’s coalition, 1971–72; forced into exile following Pinochet’s coup, 1973; moved to Germany, then to France, 1974; filmmaker with France’s National Audiovisual Institute, from 1977; director for TV, 1980s; director, La Maison de la Culture, Le Havre, 1985–88. Awards: Grand Prix, Locarno Festival, for Tres Tristes Tigres, 1969; César Award, for Colloque de chiens, 1978.

Films as Director and Scriptwriter:

1960 La maleta (unfinished)
1967 El tango del viudo (unfinished)
1968 Los tres triste tigres (Tres Tristes Tigres; Three Sad Tigers)
1969 Militarismo y tortura (doc short); La cate naria (unfinished)
1970 Que hacer? (co-d)
1971 La colonia penal (The Penal Colony); Ahor te vamos a llamar hermano (Now We Will Call You Brother) (short); Nadie dijo nada (Nobody Said Nothing); Mapuches (doc short)
1972 Los minuterios (The Minute Hands, The Street Photographer) (short)
1973 La expropiación (The Expropriation) (completed in Germany); Nueva canción Chilena (New Chilean Song) (short); El realismo socialista (Socialist Realism); Palomilla brava (Bad Girl); Palomita blanca (Little White Dove) (co-d, unfinished due to coup); Abastecimiento (Supply) (short)
1974 Diálogo de esilados (Dialogue of Exiles)
1975 El cuerpo repartido y el mundo al revez (Mensch verstreut und Welt verkehrt; The Scattered Body and the World Turned Upside Down)
1976 Soteló (doc short)
1977 Colloque de chiens (Dog’s Language) (short); La Vocation suspendue (The Suspended Vocation)
1978 L’Hypothèse du tableau volé (The Hypothesis of a Stolen Painting); Les Divisions de la nature (short)
1979 De Grands Événements et des gens ordinaires (Of Great Events and Ordinary People); Petit Manuel d’histoire de France (Short History of France); Images du débat (Images of Debate); Jeux (Games); Rue des archives 79
1980 Le Jeu de l’oie (Snakes and Ladders) (short); La Ville nouvelle (The New Town) (short); L’Or gris (Grey Gold); Teletests (short); Pages d’un catalogue (Pages from a Catalogue) (short); Fahlstrom (short)
1981 Le Territoire (The Territory); Le Borgne (serial); Het dak van de walvis (On Top of the Whale; The Whale’s Roof)
1982 Les Trois Couronnes du Matelot (The Sailor’s Three Crowns); Classification des plantes (short); Les Ombres chinoise (Chinese Shadows) (short); Querelle de jardins (The War of the Gardens) (short)
1983 Bérénice; La Ville des pirates (City of Pirates); Point de fuite; Voyage autour d’une main (short); Le retour d’un amateur de bibliothèque (short, for TV); La présence réelle (The Real Presence)
1985 L’Éveillé du pont de l’Alma; Les Destins de Manoel (Manuel’s Destinies); Dans un miroir (In a Mirror); Richard III
1986 Mammame; Régime sans pain; L’Île au trésor (Treasure Island)
1987 Memoire des apparences; Vie est un songe; La chouette aveugle
1988 Brise-Glace (Icebreaker) (co-d)
1989 Allegory
1990 The Golden Boat
1991 Treasure Island
Raúl Ruiz Section of Positif (Paris), December 1983.
Raúl Ruiz Section of Casablanca (Madrid), January 1984.

* * *

A prodigious storyteller, Raúl Ruiz is also a prolific manufacturer of moving images. This Chilean filmmaker, now living in exile in Paris, has molded his films by a deeply personal concern with representation and discourse. His innovative and experimental work thus defies any attempt at classification.

The cinema of Ruiz is a cinema of ideas. He has unmasked ideological stereotypes (Three Sad Tigers, Nobody Said Nothing, and Dialogue of Exiles), has exposed the contradictions of despotic institutions (The Suspended Vocation), and unveiled his own tortured world (The One-Eyed Man) torn between his cultural origins and the false cosmopolitanism of forced exile (The Whale’s Roof). His mise-en-scène is preoccupied with representation (The Hypothesis of a Stolen Painting and The Divisions of Nature) and the fragmentation of reality (The Sailor’s Three Crowns). His narrative is imbued with an intense research into performance and the ambiguity of the spoken language. His storylines never appear to enjoy a privileged position within the overall narrative of his films (The Expropriation). The voice-over narration (The War of the Gardens), the commentary (The Divisions of Nature), or even the dialogue (The Penal Colony), by detaching themselves from the image track, acquire an independent life or serve to lure the spectator into the willful contradictions that Ruiz wants to explore. The spoken language, saturated with Chilean slang, often makes his films incomprehensible for non-Chilean spectators. In France, though, Ruiz has found an audience for whom... simulations of Cartesian logic are the playful components of a fictional labyrinth.

Few filmmakers have taken better advantage of commissioned work. His video essays and documentary films for television and the Centre Beaubourg are original experiments with technology and narrative which inform the strategies of his feature work. A didactic comparison of French- and English-style gardens is displaced in favour of a playful suspense story (The War of the Gardens). A commissioned film on Beaubourg's cartography exhibition becomes a diabolic snakes-and-ladders game (Snakes and Ladders).

Ruiz has a passionate affair with technology. Working with innovative directors of photography—Diego Bonancina in Chile, Sacha Vierny and Henri Alekan in France—he has brought back the magic of French poetic realism to explore a world of manipulation, impotence, and violence. He favors the use of lighting, filters, and mirrors that deform filmic reality into a kaleidoscopic maze that traps his performers (Snakes and Ladders) and turns familiarity into fantastic exoticism (The Territory). Ruiz's originality stems from personal paradox. He is an exiled filmmaker in search of a territory, mastering a new language while stubbornly upholding his roots, and confined in a culture he recognizes as having colonized his own.

Ruiz's contribution to Chilean cinema has been openly acknowledged since Three Sad Tigers in 1969. His innovative approach to the film, his independence, and his critical stance on political reductionism have often set him apart from the mainstream. A name rarely mentioned in discussions on the new Latin American cinema, Ruiz retrospectives in Madrid, Edinburgh, London, Rotterdam, and Paris have finally brought him public recognition. After years of relative obscurity, critical acclaim has earned him a leading position within the French avant-garde.

Chilean cinema in exile has found in Ruiz a respected and vital representative. A total filmmaker, for whom theater, music, literature, and visual arts are familiar territory, Ruiz successfully combines intellectual inquiry with Latin American hedonism.

—Zuzana Mirjam Pick

RUTTMANN, Walter

Nationality: German. Born: Frankfurt am Main, 28 December 1887.

Education: Goethe-Gymnasium, Abitur 1905; architectural studies in Zurich, from 1907; studied painting in Munich, 1909. Military Service: Served as artillery lieutenant on Eastern Front, World War I; suffered nervous breakdown, sent to sanatorium until 1917. Career: Began filmmaking, 1919; moved to Berlin, 1923; worked with Lotte Reiniger and Carl Koch on The Adventures of Prince Achmed, 1923–26; worked with G. W. Pabst and Abel Gance in Paris, 1929–31. Died: In Berlin, 15 July 1941.

Films as Director:

- 1921 Opus I
- 1920–23 Opus II, III, IV
- 1923 “Der Falkentraum (Dream of Hawks)” sequence in Die Nibelungen part 1 (Lang)
- 1924 Abstract Alps dream sequence for Lebende Buddhas (Wegener)
- 1925–26 Opus V

1926–27 Berlin, die Sinfonie der Grossstadt (Berlin, Symphony of a Great City)

Other Films:

- 1923–26 Die Abenteuer des Prinzen Achmed (The Adventures of Prince Achmed) (Reiniger) (collaborated on making abstract, moving backgrounds)

Publications

On RUTTMANN: books—

On RUTTMANN: articles—

Fulks, Barry A., “Walter Ruttmann, the Avant-Garde Film, and Nazi Modernism,” in Film and History (Newark, New Jersey), May 1984.

Walter Ruttmann is often associated with the films of others: he created the “Dream of the Hawks” sequence in Fritz Lang’s Die Nibelungen, and directed several sequences in Paul Wegener’s *Lebende...
Later on, he assisted in the editing of Leni Riefenstahl’s Olympia. Easily his own most influential work is Berlin, Symphony of a Great City, one of the outstanding abstract documentaries of the 1920s.

Berlin is a visual essay on an average working day in the city, from dawn to the dead of night. The quiet, seemingly abandoned metropolis comes alive as a train makes its way through the suburbs, workers travel on their way to factories, the wheels of industry are set in motion, and everyday occurrences unfold in cafés and on streets. Night approaches, and Berlin becomes lit up like a birthday cake. Boys flirt with girls, chorus girls dance, an orchestra performs Beethoven. Lovers seek out privacy in a hotel. And it will all begin again with the sunrise.

Berlin is indeed a symphony, with Ruttmann stressing the movement of people and machinery in what amounts to a visual tapestry. The key is in the editing: for example, shots of people walking on a street are followed by those of cows’ legs. Ruttmann makes no social commentary, as rich and poor, man and animal, exist side by side. His sole interest is the imagery, the creation of visual poetry—even when he contrasts poor children and the food in a restaurant. Ruttmann’s use of montage was influenced by the Russian filmmaker Dziga Vertov. Yet while Vertov’s newsreels depicted the progress of a post-Revolutionary Soviet society, the life in Berlin could just as well be the life in Brussels or Amsterdam or Paris. Ruttmann is concerned with the details of daily reality edited together to form a unified whole, but he never comments or editorializes on the lives of his subjects.

The filmmaker, who appropriately began his career as an abstract painter, preceded Berlin with a series of experimental “Opus” films. Siegfried Kracauer describes Opus I as “a dynamic display of spots vaguely recalling X-ray photographs.” Additionally, Ruttmann realized that the advent of sound in motion pictures was inevitable. As a result, he attempted to attune his images to the soundtracks that he felt would ultimately outweigh visual components in importance. In World Melody, made after Berlin, music and sound effects are orchestrated to relate to the images; In der Nacht is a union of imagery and Schumann’s music.

As Ruttmann did not exhibit a social conscience in his early work, it is perhaps not surprising that, by the end of his life, he had been co-opted as a propagandist. An artist whose work was initially apolitical, Ruttmann neither protested nor went into exile with the advent of National Socialism. Instead, he conformed. His last documentaries were odes to Nazism and Germany’s military might.

—Rob Edelman
SANDERS-BRAHMS, Helma

Nationality: German. Born: Helma Sanders in Emden, Germany, 20 November 1940; added her mother’s maiden name to her own to differentiate herself from another New German Cinema filmmaker, Helke Sander. Education: Studied acting in Hanover, Germany; studied drama and literature at Cologne University. Career: Worked as an announcer and interviewer for a Cologne television station, 1960s; began directing shorts and documentaries for German television, 1970; directed first feature, Gewalt, 1971; made Erdbeben in Chile, her first film for the Filmverlag der Autoren, set up by thirteen New German Cinema directors as a production and distribution cooperative, 1974.

Films as Director and Screenwriter:

1971 Gewalt (Violence); Die industrielle Reservarmee (The Industrial Reserve Army) (doc)
1972 Der angestellte (The Employee)
1973 Die machine (The Machine) (doc)
1974 Die letzten tage von Gomorrah (The Last Days of Gomorrah); Erdbeben in Chile (Earthquake in Chile)
1975 Unter dem pfaster ist der strand (The Sand under the Pavement)
1976 Shirins hochzeit (Shirin’s Wedding)
1977 Heinrich
1980 Deutschland bleiche mutter (Germany, Pale Mother) (+ pr); Vringsveedeler triptichon (The Vringsveedel Triptych) (doc)
1981 Die beruhrtle (No Mercy No Future; No Exit No Panic) (+ pr, costumes, makeup)
1984 Flugel und fesseln (L’Avenir d’Emilie; The Future of Emily)
1986 Laputa
1987 Felix (co-dir)
1988 Geteilte liebe (Divided Love; Manoever) (+ pr)
1992 Apfelhuame (Apple Trees)
1995 Lumière et compagnie (Lumière and Company) (short)
1995 Jetzt leben—Juden in Berlin
1997 Mein Herz—Niemandem! (My Heart Is Mine Alone) (+ pr)
2000 Clara (+ co-sc)

Other Films:

1981 Der Subjektive Faktor (role)
1995 The Night of the Filmmakers (appearance)

Publications

By SANDERS-BRAHMS: articles—

Interview with C. Racine in Sequences (Montreal), February 1987.
Interview with Peter Brunette in Film Quarterly (Berkeley, California), Winter 1990.
Interview with E. Richter and R. Richter in Film und Fernsehen (Berlin), vol. 19, no. 8/9, 1991.
Interview with Janine Euvrard, in Ciné-Bulles (Montreal), Spring 1994.
Interview with Erika Richter, in Film und Fernsehen (Berlin), vol. 25, no. 2, 1997.

On SANDERS-BRAHMS: articles—

Aude, F., article in Positif (Paris), November 1981.
Article in Film a Doba (Prague), June 1985.
Fjordholm, H., article in Z Filmtidsskrift (Oslo), vol. 4, no. 5, 1986.

* * *

The films of Helma Sanders-Brahms have been programmed with some amount of relish at film festivals and in art houses and cinematheques, but it is a safe bet that they never will be mainstream movie fare. They are not engrossing dramas in which the audience can become emotionally involved in the onscreen action. Instead, Sanders-Brahms presents, from a distance, observable archetypes of life, often with a deliberate pacing. Rather than directing actors to express emotion, she prefers “pent-up” performers who hide their real feelings. In fact, actor Heinrich Giskes found himself so emotionally “pent-up” while shooting a scene for Heinrich that he broke a glass over his director’s head as soon as she yelled cut.

Sanders-Brahms is a rebel to Hollywood conventions. She avoids casting glamorous leading ladies or hunky actors in order to sell tickets, and her films are often very slowly paced. She does not make “road movies,” because she does not revel in what she calls “the poetry of the road, the journey. The autobahn and the factory assembly line are the same thing, the same prison.”

A producer and writer in addition to director, Sanders-Brahms is a member of the New German Cinema movement, and as such she builds her scripts around the concerns of the political left. Many of her films present themes pertaining to the plight of the worker in Germany: the inequities of modern working conditions; how workers have been pitted against one another in order to attain Germany’s capitalist “economic miracle”; and how the Gastarbeiter (“guest worker,” or foreign migrant worker in Germany) is exploited.

Shirin’s Wedding addresses the Gastarbeiter problem, focusing on the suffering of a Turkish woman. As a child, Shirin was betrothed to Mahmud, but he left for Germany to become a Gastarbeiter. To escape an arranged marriage, Shirin travels to Germany to find Mahmud. She obtains work in a factory in Cologne and later as a cleaner, a job which disappears after she is raped by her boss. She winds up a prostitute, with Mahmud paying to have sex with her. Eventually, she is killed by a pimp’s bullet. In Die Beruhrte, the daughter of a bourgeois family seeks sexual partners in the streets, including black migrant workers, derelicts, and aged, crippled cast-offs of society. In these neglected people, she sees the essence of Christ. Finally, Apfelbaume shows the destruction of a family whose members are adversely affected by the politics of reunification.

Other motifs in Sanders-Brahms’s work are the independent woman under fire and the mother-daughter relationship. She herself was raised by her self-reliant mother while her father was away fighting in Hitler’s armies. He did not return until she was five years old. Much of her perception of her parents’ relationship and her own childhood is depicted in Germany, Pale Mother, one of her best-known films. The mother is shown as a strong and independent woman who gives birth to her daughter (played by Sanders-Brahms’s own baby girl) during an air raid. When the war ends, this woman is expected to file away her independence in order to be an obedient wife. She does so, but her frustrations take hold in the form of a disease which paralyzes her face and, in a gut-wrenching scene, calls for the removal of all her teeth.

The Future of Emilie tells of an actress who lives a single, unconventional lifestyle. She returns to her parents’ home to retrieve her daughter, only to be told by her own mother that she is a bad influence on the child. In a powerful scene the actress and her little girl visit the beach, where they spin fantasy adventures with each other. The movie makes reference to the myth of an Amazon queen, a woman who has killed off the man she loves and is living quite nicely without the company of men. Sanders-Brahms’s point is that, in modern society, there are women who also are living well without men, but they are brainwashed into thinking that they would be better off with male partners.

Sanders-Brahms’s us-against-them brand of feminism mirrors the early 1970s, when the modern feminist movement was new and women who had grown up in a male-dominated society were feeling confrontational. Indeed, Felix, released in 1987, might have been made in the early 1970s. It is the politically loaded story of an egocentric, hypocritical modern male whose lack of self-awareness borders on the ridiculous. He has just been left by his lover, and he finds himself cast adrift in a world in which women no longer need men, or want men. Felix is filmed in four episodes, each shot by a different woman director—Christel Buschmann, Helke Sander, and Margarethe von Trotta, in addition to Sanders-Brahms. All are guilty of stereotyping men as jabbering idiots, and women as collectively sensitive, sensuous, and perceptive—practically perfect.

Sanders-Brahms’s films are united in that they are reflective of the society in which she came of age. Along with her fellow members of the New German Cinema, she has a mission: to point out what is wrong with the world as she sees it.

— Audrey E. Kupferberg

SANDRICH, Mark

Films as Director:

1926 Jerry the Giant (short) (co-d with Lesley Selander); Napoleon Junior (short) (co-d with Lesley Selander)
1927 Brave Cowboys (short); Careless Hubby (short); First Prize (short); Hello Sailor (short); Hold Fast (short); Hold That Bear (short); Hot Soup (short); A Midsummer Night’s
Mark Sandrich (sitting on ground by scaffolding), on the set of A Woman Rebels

Steam (short); The Movie Hound (short); Night Owls (short); Shooting Wild (short); Some Scout (short)

1928
Bear Knees (short); A Cow’s Husband (short); High Strang (short); A Lady Lion (short); Love Is Blonde (short) (co-d with Zion Myers); Sword Points (short); Runaways Girls

1929
The Talk of Hollywood (+ co-story); Two Gun Ginsburg (short)

1930
Aunt’s in the Pants (short); Barnum Was Wrong (short) (+ co-story, dialogue); General Ginsburg (short) (+ co-story, dialogue); Gunboat Ginsburg (short) (+ co-story, dialogue); Hot Bridge (short); Moonlight and Monkey Business (short) (+ co-continuity, dialogue); Off to Peoria (+ co-story, dialogue); Razord in Old Kentucky (short); Society Goes Spaghetti (short) (+ co-story, dialogue); Talking Turkey (short) (co-story, dialogue); Trader Ginsburg (short) (+ co-story, dialogue)

1931
The County Seat (short) (+ co-story, dialogue); Cowslips (short) (co-story, continuity); False Roomers (short) (+ co-adaptation); The Gay Nineties (short) (+ co-adaptation, dialogue); Many a Sip (short) (+ co-story, continuity); A Melon-Drama (short) (+ co-adaptation, dialogue); Scratch-As-Catch-Can (short) (+ co-adaptation); The Strife of the Party (short) (+ co-story, adaptation); The Way of All Fish (short) (+ co-adaptation, dialogue); The Wife o’ Riley (short) (+ co-story, dialogue)

1932
Ex-Rooster (short) (+ co-story); A Hurry Call (short) (+ co-story); The Iceman’s Ball (short) (+ co-adaptation, dialogue); Jitters, the Butler (short) (+ co-adaptation, dialogue); The Millionaire Cat (short) (+ co-adaptation, dialogue); A Slip at the Switch (short) (+ co-story); When Summons Comes (short (+ story, continuity); Hold ‘Em Jail (co-sc only)

1933
Aggie Appleby, Maker of Men; The Druggist’s Dilemma (short) (+ co-adaptation, dialogue); Hokus Focus (short) (+ co-adaptation, dialogue); Melody Cruise (+ co-sc); Private Wives (short) (+ co-story); So This Is Harris (short) (+ co-story); Thru Thin and Thicket; or, Who’s Zoo in Africa? (short)

1934
Hips, Hips, Hooray; Cockeyed Cavaliers; The Gay Divorcee

1935
Top Hat

1936
A Woman Rebels; Follow the Fleet

1937
Shall We Dance?
SANJINÉS

1938 Carefree
1939 Man about Town
1940 Love Thy Neighbor (+ pr); Buck Benny Rides Again (+ pr)
1941 Skylark (+ pr)
1942 Holiday Inn (+ pr)
1943 So Proudly We Hail! (+ pr)
1944 I Love A Soldier (+ pr); Here Come the Waves (+ pr)

Publications

On SANDRICH: articles—

* * *

The signature of Mark Sandrich is blurred. With a string of significant features to his credit, it would seem that a few books on Sandrich should have been published. Yet there have been no career evaluations of this director/producer. The reason is two-fold. First of all, Sandrich’s efforts are upstaged by the star power in his films. Secondly, Sandrich died in early middle age in 1945, cutting short his screen legacy at a time when the major studio factory system was beginning to be derailed and director/producers of his caliber were just starting to assert their position as auteurs within an about-to-be newly designed Hollywood.

With few exceptions, Sandrich’s most important films are comedies featuring legendary performers in legendary performances. The best known are the several Fred Astaire-Ginger Rogers musicals that he made at RKO. No matter how often these films are packaged, they never are tagged “Mark Sandrich films.” Instead, they are the Astaire-Rogers musicals. Even so, it is Sandrich’s contribution that allowed for the creation of Astaire-Rogers as one of the 1930’s most popular and exciting screen teams. Sandrich employed his extensive experience in screen comedy to mold a bland-looking Fred Astaire into a lively and charming screen presence.

Directing dozens of silent and early sound comedy shorts gave Sandrich an expert’s viewpoint on presenting screen comedy. With his sharpened eye, he determined how best to complement Astaire’s rather stagy manner and distant formality with the more free-flowing, vivacious Rogers. The results were dynamic. When The Gay Divorcee was being made, Rogers had more screen experience than Astaire. She acts more loosely for the camera than Astaire, whose theatrical gestures and reactions are a bit heavy-handed for films. Realizing this, Sandrich adjusts the placement of the camera to accommodate each of his actors. The film unfolds with a series of brief comedy sequences involving Astaire, Rogers, and a number of character actors. When Sandrich films Astaire, he does so in a series of quick takes, and he does not bring the camera in for a close shot. When Astaire and Rogers “meet cute” over a large trunk in which Rogers’ dress is caught, Sandrich moves in for a couple close shots of Rogers reacting to the situation, but he keeps Astaire at a distance. By recognizing the comfort zone of his stars, he brings out the most effective performance for each.

Sandrich seems to savor the comedy scenes in his films. His attention to camera placement and fast-paced editing result in efficient comedy sequences that bring quick laughs and prevent overly long reaction shots. Hips, Hips, Hooray and Cockeyed Cavaliers, both of which star the zany comedy duo of Wheeler and Woolsey, offer examples of this technique. Buck Benny Rides Again and Love Thy Neighbor, offbeat comedies featuring Jack Benny and Eddie “Rochester” Anderson, work because Sandrich is sensitive to Benny’s precise comic timing, as well as the humorous styles of other popular radio comedians who make appearances in the film.

Sandrich produced as well as directed his films from 1940 until his death. Taking a break from comedy, he made an outstanding World War II patriotic melodrama of brave nurses caring for fighting men in the Pacific. In So Proudly We Hail!, Sandrich emphasized accuracy and brought in several experienced combat nurses to document details of their experience. That authentication was particularly important to audiences since the film was in production when the war was in progress. This project, plus a follow-up called I Love a Soldier, a drama about wartime marriage which re-teams several of the So Proudly We Hail! stars, demonstrates Sandrich’s willingness to expand his cinematic repertoire, and make films that are serious as well as escapist.

Because of Sandrich’s sudden death, one only can speculate whether he would have further developed his talents during the post-war era, perhaps in a manner similar to director George Stevens, whose early career parallels Sandrich’s.

—Audrey Kupferberg

SANJINÉS, Jorge

Films as Director:

1961 Sueños y realidades (co-d)
1963 Revolución; Una día Paulino (co-d)
1965 Aysa
1966 Ukamau
1969 Yawar mallku (Blood of the Condor)
1971 El coraje del pueblo
1974 El enemigo principal
1976 Fuera de aquí
1983 Las banderas del amanecer (co-d)
1989 La nación clandestina (+ sc)
1995 Para recibir el canto de los pájaros (+ sc)
The Bolivian Jorge Sanjinés has become internationally recognized as a leading filmmaker in spite of the fact that his country has few significant filmmaking traditions or production facilities. Working outside of a film-industry context, Sanjinés has doggedly overcome formidable obstacles, including economic ones. For instance, to finance the fiction feature Yawar mallku Sanjinés and other members of his Ukamau production group sold personal belongings and accepted contributions. After finishing Yawar mallku, members of the Ukamau collective toured the Bolivian highlands with a 16mm print and portable projection equipment in an effort to reach the film’s intended audience—the Indian peasantry.

Sanjinés is a militant filmmaker whose primary goal is to bring a revolutionary Marxist political agenda to peasant and working-class audiences. His principal films respond to a militant Marxist aesthetic by examining oppressed collective protagonists (for example, an Andean peasant community) in their historical situations, by educating viewers to an understanding of those situations, and by inspiring audiences to transform the political and socioeconomic status quo in order to build a higher stage of society. The depiction of oppression in these films has in some cases been based on documented historical events.

Sanjinés’ works offer a defense of the Andean Indian way of life and expose and attack the Indians’ enemies. Yawar mallku denounces a Progress Corps (read Peace Corps) pediatrics clinic that sterilizes unsuspecting Andean women, while in the documentary reconstruction El coraje del pueblo, Bolivian government and military officials responsible for the massacres of Indian miners are specifically identified. The fiction feature El enemigo principal illustrates the exploitation and brutality suffered by indigenous peasants at the hands of powerful landowners and links the power of the landowners to U.S. imperialism. The mise-en-scène of these films reflects Sanjinés’s defense of the Indian way of life. For instance, in El enemigo principal the Inca heritage of the modern Andean Indian pervades the mise-en-scène: the predominance of Quechua dialogue, the centuries-old custom of chewing coca leaves, the trapezoidal niches and doors characterizing Inca masonry, the ancient agricultural ritual, the everyday work of spinning and weaving.

The structural, narrative, and stylistic approaches used by Sanjinés have evolved in accordance with his basic goal of optimal communication with his peasant and working-class audiences. When exhibiting Yawar mallku to Indians in remote areas, Sanjinés drew on an Inca oral tradition; and before showing the film he first had a narrator introduce the story and the characters to the cinematically unsophisticated audiences. Later, in El enemigo principal, Sanjinés built a narrator into the film itself: a well-known Indian peasant leader periodically appears to speak, in Quechua, directly to viewers in order to introduce the characters and events which will follow. From peasant reaction to his early films, Sanjinés found that unsophisticated viewers were shocked when a close shot follows an establishing shot. Therefore, in El enemigo principal outdoor group scenes appear initially in long shot; and then the camera slowly zooms in, much as a spectator would approach. Although Yawar mallku involved an Indian community in the filming, Sanjinés later sought from indigenous groups an even more active collective participation in an effort. to make films “from the people, to the people.” In El coraje del pueblo, survivors of the army’s 1967 massacre of miners actively participated in the filmmaking by re-creating their own activities before and during the bloodbath.

Since the appearance of Yawar mallku, Sanjinés has been a well-known and controversial figure in Bolivia; but he has at times been banished from his native country by right-wing regimes because of his highly political filmmaking activities. International critical opinion considers Sanjinés one of the leading Latin American militant filmmakers because of his oft-demonstrated ability to make aesthetically and politically significant feature films—both documentaries and fiction features—in spite of extremely limited technical and financial resources.

SAURA, Carlos

Nationality: Spanish. Born: Huesca, 4 January 1932. Education: Studied filmmaking at Instituto de Investigaciones y Experiencias Cinematográficas (IIEC), Madrid, 1952–57. Career: Professional photographer, 1950–53; teacher at IIEC, from 1957, left for political reasons, 1964; directed first feature, Los golfos, 1960. Awards: Silver Bear, Berlin Festival, for La caza, 1966, and Peppermint frappé, 1968; Special Jury Award, Cannes Festival, for La prima Angelica, 1974, and Cria cuervos, 1976; Golden Bear, Berlin Festival, for Hurry, Hurry, 1981. Address: Iberoamericana Films, Velazquez 12, Madrid 28001.

Films as Director and Scriptwriter:

1957 La tarde del domingo (Sunday Afternoon)
1958 Cuenca
1960 Los golfos (The Hooligans) (+ role)
1964 Llanto por un bandido (Lament for a Bandit)
1966 La caza (The Hunt; The Chase)
1967 Peppermint frappé
1968 Stress es tres, tres (Stress Is Three, Three)
1969 La madruguera (The Honeycomb; The Net)
1970 El jardín de las delicias (The Garden of Delights)
1973 Ana y los lobos (Ana and the Wolves)
1974 La prima Angélica (Cousin Angelica)
1976 Cria cuervos (Raise Ravens)
1977 Elisa, vida mía (Elisa, My Love)
1978 Los ojos vendados (Blindfold)
1979 Mamá cumple cien años (Mama Turns One Hundred)
1980 Depresión, depresión (Hurry, Hurry)
1981 Dulces horas (Sweet Hours); Bodas de sangre (Blood Wedding)
1982 Antonieta
1983 Carmen
1984 Los zancos (The Stilts)
1985 El amor brujo (Love the Magician)
1987 El dorado
1989 La noche oscura (The Dark Night)
1990 Ay! Carmela
1992 Sevillanas; Marathon
1993 Dispara! (Shoot!)
1995 Flamenco
1996 Taxi (d only)
1998 Esa luz!
1998 Pajarico; Tango
1999 Goya en Burdeos (Goya in Bordeaux)

Publications

By SAURA: articles—

Interview with Nick Roddick in Stills (London), September/October 1983.
“Brief an ein kind auf der treppe,” in Film und Fernsehen (Berlin), vol. 12, no 1., 1984.
“Die Rueckkehr nach Spanien,” in Film und Fernsehen (Berlin), vol. 12, no 1., 1984.
“Carlos Saura w Londynie,” interview in Kino (Warsaw), July 1993.

On SAURA: books—

On SAURA: articles—

Tate, S., “Carlos Saura, Spain, and Mama Turns One Hundred,” in Cinema Papers (Melbourne), April 1982.

Arumi, E., “Goya, artista revolucionario y su influencia en el cine,” in Film-Historia (Barcelona), no. 3, 1996.

Filmihullu (Helsinki), no. 6, 1996.

Over the past three decades, Carlos Saura has attained international stature while exploring quintessentially Spanish themes. Saura was one of the first Spanish filmmakers to deal with the Spanish Civil War and its aftermath. In several films he explored the impact of the war years and of the postwar period on the men and women of his generation, those who were born in the 1930s and who suffered emotional and psychological damage that affected them well into their adult years. In a number of movies, we witness the efforts of Saura’s adult protagonists to resurrect their past memories in order to come to terms with them once and for all. In the course of their recollections, we see the negative effects not only of the war, but also of the repressive system of education and of the confining family structures that were consolidated by the triumph of Franco in the postwar period.

Until Franco’s death in 1975, it was not possible to express this viewpoint openly. Films were censored first at the script stage and again upon completion. Nothing controversial was allowed. Even in the 1960s, a period of liberalization when some experimentation was allowed and the New Spanish Cinema movement was born, Saura and the other young directors associated with this movement walked a delicate and difficult line, trying to convey their ideas while avoiding the hurdles imposed by the censor.

It was in this atmosphere that Saura developed his cinematic style and method of working. In order to deal with taboo subjects, he (and the other young directors of that time) resorted to tactics of allusion, association, and allegory. In one of Saura’s first movies, The Hunt, a hunting party arranged by four former comrades-in-arms under Franco is used to represent the legacy of the Civil War and the moral bankruptcy it has engendered. In other movies, Saura destroys the chronological sequence of events in order to show the impact of the past and its continued importance in explaining the present. Actions and events taking place in the present often recall or evoke corresponding past moments, and Saura’s protagonists come to exist in several temporal dimensions simultaneously. We participate in their memories, dreams, and visions as Saura creates a fluid movement from present to past and in and out of dreams. What is original about these shifts in time and perspective is that Saura dispenses with the dissolves and soft-focus shots usually used to effectuate a time change in films. In his movies, present and past, reality and fantasy are deliberately fused together. Dream figures seem to be as palpable and as concrete as any of the “real” actors on screen. The audience learns to distinguish them through a series of narrative clues, changes in clothing, and the actors’ voices and facial expressions.

This method places substantial demands upon the actors with whom Saura works closely. He has often used the same actors in several movies. Saura has also worked with the same producer and crew for most of his career, which helps explain the significant continuity of his films. Sometimes images or sequences from one movie recur in later ones. As Saura himself has said, “Every film is a consequence of the film before.”

Every film is also a consequence of the particular political and social climate prevailing in Spain. With the death of Franco and the subsequent abolition of film censorship that resulted from restoration of democratic rule, Saura moved away from the complex, nonlinear narrative forms he had cultivated under Franco and began to make simpler, almost documentary-like movies. One of these, which dealt with juvenile delinquents in Madrid, was shot with nonprofessional actors from the slums of the capital (De prisa, de prisa). Two others are filmed versions of flamenco ballets that are based upon well-known literary works (Bodas de sangre and Carmen). In these as in other movies which contain references to Spanish plays, poems, and paintings, Saura affirms his ties to Spanish cultural traditions and shows their relevance to the Spain of today.

El amor brujo is the third of Saura’s “Spanish folk films,” following Bodas de sangre and Carmen. In it, he combines music, dance, and melodrama in telling the story of a pair of gypsies who have been promised to each other by their respective families; as their wedding approaches, each becomes involved in other romances.

Despite an occasional foray into what for Saura is unusual territory—Dispara! is a clichéd, unconvincing psychological drama about a rape victim who murders her attackers—the filmmaker has continued creating highly political films which explore facets of recent Spanish history, and non-narrative cinematic essays which celebrate Spanish culture. In the former category is Ay, Carmela!, a pointed yet endearing, extremely entertaining farce in which Carmen Maura has one of her best roles in a film not directed by Pedro Almodovar. She plays an entertainer who brings diversion to the partisans during the Spanish Civil War, and who ends up caught behind enemy lines with her husband and their assistant. The film works best as a comic reminiscence of what it means to be politically and morally correct, yet still be on the losing side of a conflict. Flamenco is a loving, exquisitely detailed ode to flamenco music, consisting of lively performances by an array of talented singers, dancers, and guitarists of all ages. Flamenco is a film that Gene Kelly would love; it leaves audience members clapping after each number, entranced by the joy and energy put forth by the performers, the best of whom are nothing short of dazzling. There are no English subtitles in Flamenco. None are needed.

—Katherine Singer Kovács, updated by Rob Edelman

SAUTET, Claude

Nationality: French. Born: Montrouge, Paris, 23 February 1924. Education: Ecole des Arts Decoratif, entered IDHEC, 1948. Career: Music critic for newspaper Combat, late 1940s; assistant director to Pierre Montazel, Gut Lefranc, Georges Franju, and Jacques Becker, 1950s; also TV producer; directed first feature, Classe tous risques, 1960. Died: Of liver cancer in Paris, 22 July 2000.

Films as Director and Scriptwriter:

1951 Nous n’irons plus au bois (short)
1956 Bonjour sourire (d only)
1960 Classe tous risques (The Big Risk)
1965 L’Arme à gauche (Guns for the Dictator)
1970 Les Choses de la vie (The Things of Life)
1971 Max et les ferraillleurs
1972 César et Rosalie (César and Rosalie)
1974 Vincent, François, Paul . . . et les autres
1976 Mado
1978 Une Histoire simple
1980 Un Mauvais Fils (A Bad Son)
1983 Garçon
1988 Quelques Jours avec moi
1992 Un Coeur en Hiver (A Heart in Winter) (co-sc)
1995 Nelly & Monsieur Arnaud (Nelly & Mr. Arnaud) (co-sc); Les Enfants de Lumière

—Katherine Singer Kovács, updated by Rob Edelman
Other Films:

(incomplete listing)

1954  Touchez pas au Grisbi (Grisbi)
1959  Les Yeux sans visages (Eyes without a Face) (Franju) (asst d)

Publications

By SAUTET: book—

By SAUTET: articles—

Interview in Filmihallu (Helsinki), no. 4, 1996.

On SAUTET: book—

On SAUTET: articles—

Elley, Derek, “Film Reviews—Nelly & Mr. Arnaud,” in Variety (New York), 18 September 1995.

* * * *

The career of Claude Sautet was slow in getting underway, but by the 1970s he had virtually become the French cinema’s official chronicler of bourgeois life. He had made his directing debut with a solidly constructed thriller, Classe tous risques, in 1960, but a second film, L’Arme à gauche, did not follow until 1965 and was markedly less successful. Despite numerous scriptwriting assignments, his directing career did not really get underway until he completed Les Choses de la vie in 1969. This set the pattern for a decade of filmmaking.

The core of any Sautet film is a fairly banal emotional problem—a man caught between two women in Les Choses de la vie or a married woman confronted with a former lover in César et Rosalie. Around this situation Sautet weaves a rich pattern of bourgeois life: concerns with home and family, with money and possessions, give these films their particular tone. This is a cinema of warmth, convincingly depicted characters for whom Sautet clearly has great affection and more than a touch of complicity. Problems and motivations are always explicitly set out, for this is a style of psychological realism in which the individual, not the social, forms the focus of attention.

The director’s style is a sober, classical one, built on the model of Hollywood narrative traditions: action, movement, vitality. Though his style can encompass such set pieces as the boxing match in Vincent, Francois, Paul . . . et les autres, Sautet is more concerned with the unfolding of a strong and involving narrative line. A key feature of all his work are the confrontation scenes which offer such excellent opportunities for the talented stars and solid character players who people his films.

Sautet’s films from the mid-1970s to early 1980s—Mado, Une Histoire simple, and Une Mauvais Fils—are all characterized by a total assurance and a mastery of the medium. This mastery, however, is exercised within very precise limits—not in terms of the subject matter, which widens to take in the problems of affluence, women’s independence, and juvenile delinquency, but in the manner in which such issues of the moment are approached. Sautet’s classicism of form and ability to communicate directly with his audience is not accompanied by the resonances of social criticism which characterize the best North American cinema. Seeking to move his audience rather than enlighten it, Sautet uses powerful actors cast to type in carefully constructed roles, but any probing of the essential contradictions is avoided by a style of direction that keeps rigidly to the surface of life, the given patterns of bourgeois social behaviour. His approach is therefore condemned to a certain schematism, particularly in the handling of dialogue scenes, but his work gets its sense of vitality from the vigor with which the group scenes—the meals and excursions—and the typical locations of café or railway station are handled. Sautet offers a facsimile of life, a reflection of current problems or issues, but contained within a form calculated not to trouble the spectator after he has left the cinema. This conformism may seem limiting to the contemporary critic, but it will offer future generations a rare insight into the manner in which the French middle classes liked to see themselves in the 1970s.

In two of his most recent features, the popularly and critically well-received Un Coeur en Hiver (1992) and Nelly & Monsieur Arnaud (1995), Sautet continues to offer versions of French middle-class bourgeois life in the 1990s. In keeping with Sautet’s thematic and stylistic terrain, Un Coeur and Nelly both focus on a small group of individuals as they undergo a set of personal and emotional situations. Again, while one senses a touch of Sautet’s complicity with the bourgeois world he represents, these films do not simply offer the conservative resolutions that characterize so many of the bourgeois Hollywood productions of the 1980s and 1990s. As we watch Un Coeur and Nelly, we proceed along the interior, emotional topographies of characters like the remote and ostensibly affectless Stephan in Un Coeur. The tension which builds throughout Un Coeur as a result of Stephan’s unwillingness and/or incapacity to love does not find its release, however, through the union of Stephan and Camille by the film’s end: Camille continues her relationship with Maxim, Stephan remains alone. As a result, Sautet powerfully succeeds in having us experience the frustration these characters feel, because Un Coeur resists consummating a formulaic relationship with its audience via a happy ending as Hollywood films are likely to do.

Nelly & Monsieur Arnaud affects its audience in similar ways. Comparable to Un Coeur, Nelly’s presentation of the emotional firings and misfirings between Nelly, Arnaud, Vincent, and Jerome draw the viewer into a narrative that resists uncomplicated closure; because of this, the world of Nelly & Monsieur Arnaud is more likely to resemble the reality its audience will encounter once the credits roll than the what-actually-has.’’ While Nelly’s presentation of the emotional affects its audience in similar ways. Nelly & Monsieur Arnaud affects its audience in similar ways. Comparable to Un Coeur, Nelly’s presentation of the emotional firings and misfirings between Nelly, Arnaud, Vincent, and Jerome draw the viewer into a narrative that resists uncomplicated closure; because of this, the world of Nelly & Monsieur Arnaud is more likely to resemble the reality its audience will encounter once the credits roll than the what-actually-has.’’ While Nelly’s presentation of the emotional

—Roy Armes, updated by Kevin J. Costa

SAYLES, John

Films as Director and Scriptwriter:

1980 The Return of the Secaucus Seven (+ ed, role as Howie)
1981 Lianna (+ ed, role as Jerry)
1983 Baby, It’s You
1984 The Brother from Another Planet (+ ed, role as bounty hunter)
1987 Matewan (+ role as preacher)
1988 Eight Men Out (+ role as Ring Lardner)

1991 City of Hope (+ ed, song, role as Carl)
1992 Passion Fish (+ ed)
1994 The Secret of Roan Inish (+ ed)
1995 Lone Star (+ pr) (+ ed)
1997 Men with Guns (Hombres armadas) (+ ed)
1999 Limbo (+ ed)

Other Films:

1978 Piranha (Dante) (sc)
1979 The Lady in Red (Kiss Me and Die; Guns, Sin, and Bathtub Gin) (Teague) (sc)
1980 Battle beyond the Stars (Murakami) (sc); The Howling (Dante) (co-sc); Alligator (Teague) (sc)
1982 The Challenge (Frankenheimer) (co-sc)
1984 Hard Choices (King) (role as Don)
1985 The Clan of the Cave Bear (Chapman) (sc); Enormous Changes at the Last Minute (Bank, Hvode) (sc)
1987 Wild Thing (Reid) (sc); Something Wild (Demme) (role as motorcycle cop)
1989 Breaking In (Forsyth) (sc)
1992 Straight Talk (Kellman) (role as Guy Girardi); Malcolm X (Lee) (role as FBI man); Matinee (Dante) (role as phoney moral crusader)
1993 A Safe Place (Lang) (sc); My Life’s in Turnaround (Schaeffer, Ward) (role as film producer)
1994 Men of War (sc); Bedlam (Mclean) (sc)
1995 Apollo 13 (Howard) (sc)
1997 Gridlock’d (role)

Publications

By SAYLES: books—

Sayles on Sayles, with Gavin Smith, New York, 1998.

By SAYLES: articles—

Interview with T. Crawley, in Monthly Film Bulletin (London), December 1982.

“Color Bars,” in American Film (Los Angeles), vol. 13, no. 6, April 1988.

Interview in American Cinematographer (Los Angeles), February 1995.

“‘I Don’t Want to Blow Anything by People,’” an interview with Gavin Smith, in Film Comment (New York), May-June 1996.

Interview with Brooke Comer, in American Cinematographer (Los Angeles), June 1996.

Zoom (Zürich), April 1997.
On SAYLES: books—

On SAYLES: articles—

Lardner, Ring, Jr., “Foul Ball,” in American Film (Los Angeles), vol. 13, no. 9, 1988.

Grogan, Johnny, “True Saylesmanship,” in Film Ireland (Dublin), April/May 1993.

Sarris, Andrew, “Baby It’s You: An Honest Man Becomes a True Filmmaker,” in Film Comment (New York), May/June 1993.

Schnelle, Frank, “Schatten der Vergangenheit,” in EPD Film (Frankfurt), March 1997.

* * *

No other American director has so successfully straddled both Hollywood and independent filmmaking as John Sayles. While his fellow independents have tended to restrict themselves either in terms of audience (Jim Jarmusch, Henry Jaglom) or creative scope (Woody Allen), Sayles has continued to make highly individual, idiosyncratic films of increasingly ambitious range, aimed firmly at a mainstream audience, without compromising his integrity or his radical views.

Even before launching out as a director, Sayles had established his reputation both as a novelist and as a provider of witty, literate scripts for genre movies—Alligator, The Howling, The Lady in Red—into whose conventions he deftly introduced sharp touches of political allegory. His own films, though, have steered clear of generic formulae, remaining (in subject matter as in treatment) fresh and quirkily unpredictable. The first of them, The Return of the Secaucus Seven, observed the reunion of a bunch of ex-1960s radicals with an affection, and a relaxed humour, that Kasdan’s glossier treatment in The Big Chill never quite matched. “There was a realism there,” Roger Corman noted, “which more money might have obscured.” The film picked up several awards and rapidly became a cult favourite.

Secaucus, for all its small-scale subject and slightly shaggy charm, established the priorities of all Sayles’s work to date: in his own words, “the acting, and believing in the characters and caring about them.” His films, situated (as Pat Aufderheide put it) “at the intersection of culture and politics,” favour ensemble playing over star performances, communication over sensation, and the exploration of character and ideas over pictorial values or technical bravura. “I don’t regard anything I do as art. That’s a foreign world to me. I regard it as a conversation. Very often in a conversation, you tell a story to illustrate something you think or feel,” Sayles has stated.

Even so, Sayles’s work has developed steadily in terms of visual as well as dramatic complexity. His early films, such as Secaucus and Lianna, a sympathetic account of a married woman awakening to her lesbian nature, were criticised in some quarters for their static camerawork. Sayles, while readily conceding his lack of technical experience, pointed out that “Fluid camera work takes money. Unless it’s an action movie, why cut away from good actors?” More recently, however, from Matewan onwards, he has adopted a more sophisticated and even elegant shooting style, though never at the expense of the story. The long, intricate tracking shots of Baby It’s You may hint at the intersection of culture and politics,” favour ensemble playing over star performances, communication over sensation, and the exploration of character and ideas over pictorial values or technical bravura. “I don’t regard anything I do as art. That’s a foreign world to me. I regard it as a conversation. Very often in a conversation, you tell a story to illustrate something you think or feel,” Sayles has stated.

Even so, Sayles’s work has developed steadily in terms of visual as well as dramatic complexity. His early films, such as Secaucus and Lianna, a sympathetic account of a married woman awakening to her lesbian nature, were criticised in some quarters for their static camerawork. Sayles, while readily conceding his lack of technical experience, pointed out that “Fluid camera work takes money. Unless it’s an action movie, why cut away from good actors?” More recently, however, from Matewan onwards, he has adopted a more sophisticated and even elegant shooting style, though never at the expense of the story. The long, intricate tracking shots of Baby It’s You may hint at the intersection of culture and politics,” favour ensemble playing over star performances, communication over sensation, and the exploration of character and ideas over pictorial values or technical bravura. “I don’t regard anything I do as art. That’s a foreign world to me. I regard it as a conversation. Very often in a conversation, you tell a story to illustrate something you think or feel,” Sayles has stated.

Even so, Sayles’s work has developed steadily in terms of visual as well as dramatic complexity. His early films, such as Secaucus and Lianna, a sympathetic account of a married woman awakening to her lesbian nature, were criticised in some quarters for their static camerawork. Sayles, while readily conceding his lack of technical experience, pointed out that “Fluid camera work takes money. Unless it’s an action movie, why cut away from good actors?” More recently, however, from Matewan onwards, he has adopted a more sophisticated and even elegant shooting style, though never at the expense of the story. The long, intricate tracking shots of Baby It’s You may hint at the intersection of culture and politics,” favour ensemble playing over star performances, communication over sensation, and the exploration of character and ideas over pictorial values or technical bravura. “I don’t regard anything I do as art. That’s a foreign world to me. I regard it as a conversation. Very often in a conversation, you tell a story to illustrate something you think or feel,” Sayles has stated. says a character in Lone Star, and the children in The Secret of Roan Inish buck their family history through sheer determination.

In his work as a director, Sayles has steadily extended and deepened his personal vision, always ready to take risks and strike out in new directions. Lone Star, his most accomplished film to date, is also his most narratively complex, interweaving a dozen storylines and subplots. In recent years he’s widened his geographical scope beyond the United States, taking in the west coast of Ireland for the mystical fable of Roan Inish, and Latin America for Men with Guns— which he shot in Spanish to get authentic performances from his Hispanic cast. Limbo, with its unexpected midway plot-switch and enigmatic ending, is his most dramatically audacious film yet.

It was also the first time in sixteen years that Sayles had made a studio picture, something he’d renounced after the horrendous Hispanic cast. Why give up a year of your life for a film you are going to produce, control, casting control, and final cut. “The fact is,” he explained, “I’ve got to the point where I don’t need to make movies... Why give up a year of your life for a film you are going to apologise for and you really don’t feel is yours?” Sayles’s films are, unmistakably, his. With his integrity established beyond question, and his status as doyen of American independents now secure, he can afford to shrug at studio backing. With or without it, his best work may yet be to come.

—Philip Kemp

SCHAFFNER, Franklin J.

Films as Director:

1961 A Summer World (incomplete)
1963 The Stripper (Woman of Summer)
1964 The Best Man
1965 The War Lord
1967 The Double Man (+ role)
1968 Planet of the Apes
1970 Patton (Patton—Lust for Glory; Patton: A Salute to a Rebel)
1971 Nicholas and Alexandra (+ pr)
1973 Papillon (+ co-pr)
1977 Islands in the Stream
1978 The Boys from Brazil
1981 Sphinx (+ exec pr)
1982 Yes, Giorgio
1987 Lionheart
1989 Welcome Home

Publications

By SCHAFFNER: book—

On SCHAFFNER: articles—

Interview with Gerald Pratley, in Cineaste (New York), Summer 1969.
Interview with R. Feiden, in Inter/View (New York), March 1972.
“Chronicle of Power,” an interview with Kathe Geist, in Film Comment (New York), September/October 1972.
Interview with D. Castelli, in Films Illustrated (London), May 1979.

On SCHAFFNER: book—

On SCHAFFNER: articles—

Sarris, Andrew, “Director of the Month—Franklin Schaffner: The Panoply of Power,‘‘ in Show (Hollywood), April 1970.
“Franklin J. Schaffner,‘‘ in Kosmorama (Copenhagen), Autumn 1977.
“TV to Film: A History, a Map, and a Family Tree,‘‘ in Monthly Film Bulletin (London), February 1983.
Obituary, in EPD Film (Frankfurt), vol. 6, no. 8, August 1989.

Franklin J. Schaffner has often been referred to as an “actors’ director.” A former actor himself, he spent over a decade directing television drama before making his first film. This experience proved invaluable when he arrived in Hollywood. All his films starred well-established professionals such as Fonda, Heston, Brynner, Scott, Hoffman, Peck, and Olivier.

Schaffner’s first film, The Stripper, was based on William Inge’s play A Loss of Roses. Producer Jerry Wald died while it was being made, and after completion the film was taken out of Schaffner’s hands and re-edited. As a result the character of the “stripper”, played by Joanne Woodward, was sadly lacking in contrast. Schaffner’s experience working on political television programs proved beneficial when he directed his second film, The Best Man, a story of two contenders for the presidential nomination at a political convention in Los Angeles. Set mainly in hotel rooms and corridors, it could have become very static. But Schaffner accepted the challenge and turned out a compelling drama.

After the intimacy of The Best Man came the vastness of The War Lord. A medieval costume picture, the film was a complete change for Schaffner, but he succeeded in capturing the visual splendor of the outdoor sequences—particularly in the first few minutes—and the excitement and gusto of the battle scenes. Although an “action” film, it had a literate script—but once again Schaffner’s film was cut by the studio. The director’s next work was The Double Man, an average spy drama. His first big financial success was Planet of the Apes, in which he had to produce realistic performances from actors in monkey suits. Handled by another director, it could easily have been turned into a farce, but Schaffner’s craftsmanship made it a science fiction satire.

In 1970 Schaffner directed George C. Scott in the role of General Patton. Twenty-seven years earlier Schaffner himself had taken part in the landings in Sicily under Patton. The film was shot in 70mm, but he insisted on cutting it in 35mm to avoid being influenced by the scope of 70mm. Scott’s performance was widely praised, but he refused an Academy Award (Schaffner accepted his).

It was his interest in history that first attracted Schaffner to Nicholas and Alexandra. Here he told what was basically an intimate story of two people, but two people surrounded by the overflowing retinue of the court and the boundless expanse of the countryside. Schaffner used the contrast to great effect, and the film was nominated for an Oscar.

Papillon is the only film which Schaffner directed in sequence, and this was not by choice. Dalton Trumbo was rewriting the script as the film was being shot, often just managing to keep up with the production. This film marked the second time that Schaffner had worked with cinematographer Fred Koenekamp, and they were teamed again for his next feature, Islands in the Stream. This time he faced the problem of space and isolation, having to fill the large screen for a long time with just one man. He also found it necessary to use two cameras for some of the action sequences, something which he never did if he could avoid it. Several studios turned down The Boys from Brazil because it was impossible to cast, but Schaffner thought it would work if he cast against type. So Gregory Peck, always known as a “good guy,” played Mengele—the German doctor intent on producing clones of Hitler. Olivier, who had earlier thought it would work if he cast against type. So Gregory Peck, described as a “musical” man, with Luciano Pavarotti.

Schaffner had a reputation for getting the best out of his actors and coping well with intimate dramas. Yet he also achieved success with large-scale epics and has been compared with David Lean because of the beauty of his compositions and the breadth of his dramatic power. He reveled in films about men struggling to achieve a certain goal. A craftsman, he did his homework and prepared each scene before arriving on the set.

—Colin Williams

SCHEPISI, Fred

Nationality: Australian. Born: Frederic Alan Schepisi in Melbourne, Victoria, 26 December 1939. Education: Briefly attended seminary school. Family: Married 1) Joan Ford, 1960, four children; 2) casting director Rhonda Finlayson, 1973, two children; 3) Mary Rubin, 1984, one child. Career: Director, producer, and writer at Carden Advertising, Melbourne, from 1955; television production manager, Paton Advertising Service, Melbourne, 1961–64; Victorian manager of Cinesound Productions, Melbourne, 1964–65; managing director of The Film House, Melbourne, making advertising shorts and documentaries, 1965–79 (chairman from 1979); first feature, The Devil’s Playground, won six Australian Film Institute awards, 1976; moved to United States, 1979; returned to Australia to make A Cry in the Dark, 1988; Governor of the Australian Film Institute. Awards: Best Director, Australian Film Awards, for The Devil’s Playground, 1976. Address: P.O. Box 317, South Melbourne VIC 3205, Australia. Agent: c/o Sam Cohn, International Creative Management, 40 W. 57th Street, New York, NY 10019, U.S.A.

Films as Director:

1970  The Party (short)
1973  “The Priest” episode of Libido
1976  The Devil’s Playground ( + sc, pr)
1978  The Chant of Jimmie Blacksmith ( + sc, pr)
1981  Barbarosa
1984  Iceman
1985  Plenty
1987  Roxanne
1988  A Cry in the Dark (Guilty by Suspicion; Evil Angels)
1990  The Russia House ( + pr)
1992  Mr. Baseball ( + co-pr)

1993  Six Degrees of Separation ( + co-pr)
1994  I.Q. ( + co-pr)
1997  Fierce Creatures
2001  Last Orders

Publications

By SCHEPISI: articles—

Interview in Cinema Papers (Melbourne), January 1978.

Interview in Screen International (London), 4 January 1986.

On SCHEPISI: books—

Matthews, Sue, 35mm Dreams: Conversations with Five Directors about the Australian Film Revival, Ringwood, Australia, 1987.

On SCHEPISI: articles—

Bromby, Robin, “‘Test for Australia,’” in Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1979.

Matthews, T., article in Box Office (Hollywood), November 1990.

Schiff, Stephen, “‘A Cinematic Gallant,’” in New Yorker, 20 December 1993.

Segnocinema (Vicenza), July/August 1995.

More than any other director of the Australian new wave, Fred Schepisi reflects, in his deal-making expertise, his emphasis on production values, even in his choice of New York as an adoptive base, the values of his home city, Melbourne, traditionally Australia’s capital of political conservatism, old money, the church, and the law.

873

Schepisi’s first two features assaulted Australia’s endemic provincialism. The Devil’s Playground, a story of sexual repression and dead belief set in a Catholic seminary, is based on Schepisi’s 18 adolescent months in a monastery. (The theme was rehearsed in The Priest, his episode of the sketch film Libido, written by lapsed Catholic novelist Thomas Keneally.) The film’s gloomy, sensual elegance is typical of Schepisi’s later work, but his adolescent hero’s moral and religious doubts are dealt with sketchily. Schepisi prefers to emphasize the celibate staff’s problems with sex and drink, especially in a memorable scene in which priest Arthur Dignam spies on naked girls at a public swimming pool.

The Chant of Jimmie Blacksmith, again based on Thomas Keneally’s work, is a period drama concerning the true story of nineteenth-century renegade aboriginal Jimmie Governor, who revolted against the dehumanization of his race at the hands of whites. Schepisi’s use of landscape echoes the westerns of Anthony Mann, underlining the similarities between his film and Hollywood’s pro-Indian dramas like Broken Arrow and Tell Them Willie Boy Is Here. In a film that, like Schepisi’s later A Cry in the Dark, mixes, sometimes uneasily, social protest with wide screen melodrama, an inexperienced Tommy Lewis rampages bloodily but unconvincingly across rural Australia as the ill-used part-aboriginal driven to massacre by corruption in law, religion, and the state.

A highly successful producer of TV commercials and documentaries, the pragmatic Schepisi conformed more comfortably than most Australian directors to Hollywood. Though his first American production, the revenge western Barbarosa, has all the earmarks of a test piece, he extracted good performances from an aging Gilbert Roland and the project’s co-producers, Willie Nelson and a famously aggressive Gary Busey. (“I am the first director he hasn’t destroyed,” Schepisi said proudly.) Schepisi proved equally decisive in Ice Man, a piece of Green science-fiction in which John Lone’s defrosted Neanderthal beguiles technocrat Tim Hutton with earth magic and Ice Age mythology.

Schepisi’s first hit was an adaptation of David Hare’s play Plenty. As the ex-Resistance heroine who finds only disillusionment in Britain’s post-war affluence, Meryl Streep replaced Kate Nelligan, who created the role on stage. The casting turned Plenty into a star vehicle, winning international success at the cost of Hare’s more precise political arguments, though Schepisi, as impatient as only an Australian can be with the British, manipulates Sir John Gielgud, Charles Dance, and especially Ian McKellen in wapsish parodies of imperial privilege.

Confirmed now as a technician able to tame any project or performer, Schepisi made Roxanne, a comedy version of Rostand’s Cyrano de Bergerac, reset in the Pacific Northwest as a vehicle for comic Steve Martin. In the wave of its enormous success, he returned to Australia to film A Cry in the Dark (Evil Angels), the sensational true story of a young mother’s trial and imprisonment for infanticide. Lindy Chamberlain insisted a wild dog had stolen her baby Azaria from Ayers Rock, one of Australia’s most famous desert tourist sites. But the lack of a body, combined with Lindy’s own unusual religious affiliations—she was a Seventh Day Adventist—fueled rumors that the child had been sacrificed in some arcane rite. She was freed only after investigators decisively discredited the forensic evidence.

In a typical calculated risk, Schepisi cast Meryl Streep as Lindy and used the film to reprise The Chant of Jimmie Blacksmith. Australia itself becomes the villain, and Chamberlain was portrayed as another victim—like Blacksmith and the boy of The Devil’s Playground—of national bigotry and ignorance. A Cry in the Dark depicts Australia’s press as vulgar and meretricious, and its police as malicious and bumbling. Far from resenting either the imported star or the national slur, Australians greeted the film with enthusiasm, and the Streep name guaranteed a modest international success.

Schepisi debated further Australian-based projects, but with the local industry’s financial base crumbling in the financial freeze of the late 1980s, he returned to New York (though much of the film was shot on location in Moscow) to direct another in his growing string of high-budget international projects, John le Carré’s Russia House. Schepisi has evolved into a proficient director whose recent films, while made on big budgets with international stars, are for the most part not nearly as interesting as his early-career work in Australia. The Russia House, which starred Sean Connery and Michele Pfeiffer, is an uneven spy drama; conversely, I.Q., with Tim Robbins, Meg Ryan, and Walter Matthau, is a lightly likable fantasy-romance in which a fictionalized Albert Einstein plays cupid for his brainy niece.

Mr. Baseball features Tom Selleck as a spoiled, aging American baseball star who goes to play in Japan. The film’s production was controversial in that it originally was intended strictly as a comedy. But when the Matsushita Electric Industrial Company acquired MCA, Inc., the owner of Universal Pictures (the film’s releasing company), Mr. Baseball became a more serious, complex film about an American hero who must become humbled and learn to accept Japanese customs before he is allowed success. Schepisi’s involvement with Mr. Baseball seems incidental; it is a well-directed film, to be sure, but then again it would be no matter what its ultimate storyline or point of view.

The theme of relations between peoples of different cultures is continued in Six Degrees of Separation, among Schepisi’s better post-Australian films. It is a provocative version of John Guare’s play, in which a well-off Manhattan couple is taken in by a gracious young con artist who eases himself into their household by pawning himself off as the son of actor Sidney Poitier. Schepisi does an especially fine job of capturing the setting’s upper-class urban ambiance and various New York City vistas.

—John Baxter, updated by Rob Edelman

SCHLESINGER, John

Films as Director:

1961 Terminus (doc) (+ sc)
1962 A Kind of Loving
1963 Billy Liar
1965 Darling (+ sc)
1967 Far from the Madding Crowd
1969 Midnight Cowboy (+ co-pr)
1971 Sunday, Bloody Sunday
1972 ‘‘Olympic Marathon’’ section of Visions of Eight
1975 The Day of the Locust
1976 Marathon Man
1979 Yanks
1980 Honky Tonk Freeway
1981 Privileged (consultant d only)
1985 The Falcon and the Snowman (+ pr)
1987 The Believers (+ pr)
1988 Madame Sousatzka
1990 Pacific Heights
1991 A Question of Attribution
1993 The Innocent
1996 Eye for an Eye; Cold Comfort Farm
1998 The Tale of Sweeney Todd (for TV)
2000 The Next Best Thing

Other Films:

1953 Single-handed (Sailor of the King) (Boulting) (role)
1955 The Divided Heart (Crichton) (role as ticket collector)
1956 The Last Man to Hang? (Fisher) (role as Dr. Goldfinger)
1957 The Battle of the River Plate (Pursuit of the Graf Spee) (Powell and Pressburger) (role); Brothers in Law (Boulting) (role)
1986 Fifty Years of Action! (appearance as himself)
Publications

By SCHLESINGER: articles—

Interview with David Spiers, in Screen (London), Summer 1970.

Interview with Gene D. Phillips, in Film Comment (New York), May/June 1975.

Interview with Tomáš Liška, in Film a Doba (Prague), Autumn 1994.

Interview with L. Verswijver, in Film en Televisie + Video (Brussels), October 1994.

On SCHLESINGER: books—

Schlesinger began directing feature films in Britain at the point when the cycle of low-budget, high-quality movies on social themes (called “Kitchen Sink” dramas) was in full swing. Because these films were made outside the large studio system, Schlesinger got used to developing his own film projects. He has continued to do so while directing films in Hollywood, where he has worked with increasing regularity in recent years, starting with his first American film, Marathon Man. “I like the cross-fertilization that comes from making films in both England and America,” he explains. “Although I am English and I do like to work in England, I have gotten used to regarding myself more and more as mid-Atlantic.” As a matter of fact, foreign directors like Lang and Hitchcock and Schlesinger, precisely because they are not native Americans, are sometimes able to view American life with a vigilant, perceptive eye for the kind of telling details which home-grown directors might easily overlook or simply take for granted. Indeed, reviews of Marathon Man by and large noted how accurately the British-born Schlesinger had caught the authentic atmosphere not only of New York City, but also of Miami Beach and the Texas Panhandle, as surely as he had captured the atmosphere of a factory town in his native England in A Kind of Loving. “Any film that is seriously made will reflect the attitudes and problems of society at large,” he says, and consequently possess the potential to appeal to an international audience, as many of his films have. “But it is inevitable that a director’s own attitudes will creep into his films. For my part I try in my movies to communicate to the filmgoer a better understanding of other human beings by exploring the hazards of entering into a mutual relationship with another human being, which is the most difficult thing on earth to do, because it involves a voyage of discovery for both parties.” Hence his prime concern as a director with examining complex human relationships from a variety of angles—ranging from the social outcasts of Midnight Cowboy to members of the jet set in Darling. Among the standout films of his career are: Marathon Man, a thriller about a young American Jew who finds himself pitted against a Nazi war criminal in New York; The Falcon and the Snowman, the true story of two young Americans who betrayed their country to the Russians; and Madame Sousatzka, which concerns a dedicated, demanding London piano teacher whose exacting standards threaten to drive her most promising pupil away. Significantly, Schlesinger’s acutely observed depiction of the ramshackle old rooming house where Madame lives, with its colorful assortment of diverse tenants, lends to the film an authentic atmosphere that recalls Schlesinger’s social (“Kitchen Sink”) dramas.

Given the great success of Marathon Man, Schlesinger went on to make a trio of superior thrillers: Pacific Heights, in which a hapless young landlord is victimized by a psychotic tenant; The Innocent, a story of international intrigue about a young English technician sent by British Intelligence to work on a secret operation in Berlin after World War II; and Eye for an Eye, a dark study wherein a vengeful mother vows to bring to justice the brute who raped and murdered her daughter. This trilogy of suspense films clearly established Schlesinger as a worthy successor to Hitchcock in the thriller genre.

In sum, John Schlesinger is a member of the international community of filmmakers who speak to an equally international audience. That is the way the world cinema has been developing, and directors like Schlesinger have helped to lead it there.

—Gene D. Phillips
SCHLÖNDORFF, Volker

Films as Director:

1960 Wen kümmert’s . . . (Who Cares . . .) (short, unreleased)
1966 Der junge Törless (Young Törless) (+ co-sc)
1967 Mord und Totschlag (A Degree of Murder) (+ co-sc)
1969 Michael Kohlhaas—Der Rebell (Michael Kohlhaas—The Rebel) (+ co-sc)
1970 Baal (for TV) (+ sc); Ein unheimlicher Moment (An Uneasy Moment) (short; originally episode of uncompleted feature Paukenspieler, filmed 1967); Der plötzlicher Reichtum der armen Leute von Kombach (The Sudden Fortune of the Poor People of Kombach) (+ co-sc)
1971 Die Moral der Ruth Halbfass (The Moral of Ruth Halbfass) (+ co-sc); Strohfeuer (A Free Woman; Strawfire; Summer Lightning (+ co-sc)
1974 Übernachtung in Tirol (Overnight Stay in the Tyrol) (for TV) (+ co-sc)
1975 Georginas Gründe (Georgina’s Reasons) (for TV); Die verlorene Ehre der Katharina Blum (The Lost Honor of Katharina Blum) (co-d, co-sc)
1976 Der Fangschuss (Coup de grâce)
1977 Nur zum Spass—Nur zum Spiel (Only for Fun—Only for Play), Kaleidoskop Valeska Gert (Kaleidoscope Valeska Gert) (doc) (+ sc)
1978 Deutschland im Herbst (Germany in Autumn) (co-d)
1979 Die Blechtrommel (The Tin Drum) (+ co-sc)
1980 Der Kandidat (The Candidate) (doc) (+ co-sc)
1981 Die Fälschung (The Forgery) (+ sc); Circle of Deceit
1983 Krieg und Frieden (War and Peace) (doc)
1984 Swann in Love (Un Amour de Swann)
1985 Death of a Salesman
1987 Vermischte Nachrichten (Odds and Ends) (co-d); A Gathering of Old Men (for TV)
1990 The Handmaid’s Tale
1991 Last Call from Passenger Faber (Voyager) (+ co-sc)
1992 Billy Wilder, wie haben Sie’s gemacht? (Billy How Did You Do It?) (series for TV); The Michael Nyman Songbook
1996 Der Unhold (The Ogre) (+ co-sc)
1998 Palmetto (Dumme sterben nicht aus)
1999 Die Stille nach dem Schuß (Rita’s Legends) (+ co-sc)

Publications

By SCHLÖNDORFF: book—

Die Blechtrommel als Film, Frankfurt, 1979.

By SCHLÖNDORFF: articles—

“Volker Schloendorff: The Rebel,” interview with Rui Nogueira and Nicoletta Zalaffi, in Film (London), Summer 1969.

“Melville und der Befreiungskampf in Baltikum,” interview with H. Wiedemann, in Film und Ton (Munich), December 1976.

“The Blechtrommel,” in Film und Ton (Munich), June 1979.

“The Tin Drum: Volker Schlöndorff’s ‘Dream of Childhood’, interview with J. Hughes, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1981.

Interview with B. Steinborn in Filmfaust (Frankfurt), February/March 1983.

“Director’s Chair,” an interview with D. DeNicolo in Interview (New York), March 1990.

On SCHLÖNDORFF: books—

Franklin, James, New German Cinema: From Oberhausen to Hamburg, Boston, 1983.

On SCHLÖNDORFF: articles—

Lally, K., article in Film Journal, December 1991.

Hickethier, Knut, in EPD Film (Frankfurt), November 1993.
Kino (Warsaw), June 1997.

On SCHLÖNDORFF: film—

Private Conversation (doc about the making of Death of a Salesman), Blackwood, 1985.

* * *

In discussions of the New German Cinema, Volker Schlöndorff’s name generally comes up only after the mention of Fassbinder, Herzog, Wenders, and perhaps Straub, Syberberg, or von Trotta. Though his work certainly merits consideration alongside that of any of his countrymen, there are several reasons why he has stood apart from them.

As a teenager, Schlöndorff moved to France to study, earning academic honors and a university degree in economics and political science. He enrolled at IDHEC with an interest in film directing but chose instead to pursue an active apprenticeship within the French film industry. Eventually he served as assistant director to Jean-Pierre Melville, Alain Resnais, and Louis Malle. Schlöndorff then returned to Germany and scored an immediate triumph with his first feature, Young Törless. Like his mentor Louis Malle, then, he ushered in his country’s new wave of film artists, but also like Malle, Schlöndorff’s eclectic range of projects has defied easy categorization, causing his work to seem less personal than that of almost any other German filmmaker. The thorough professional training received during his decade in France also set Schlöndorff apart. His time there instilled in him an appreciation for the highly-crafted, polished filmmaking that marks his style. (The quality of the photography in his work—both black and white and in color, whether by Sven Nykvist, Franz Rath, or Igor Luther—has been consistently exceptional.) While most of his contemporaries declared their antipathy toward the look and production methods of the declining German film industry of the 1960s, Schlöndorff endeavored successfully to make larger-scaled features. Toward this end he helped form and continues to operate two companies—Hallelujah-Film and Bioskop-Film—and has regularly obtained financing from German television and a variety of international producers. Yet he has met shooting schedules of just three weeks, and his wide career includes shorts, documentaries, and television films (one is a production of Brecht’s Baal with Fassbinder in the title role). In the mid-1970s he even turned to directing opera: Janaček’s Katya Kabanova and a work by Hans Werner Henze.

Intelectual, literate, and fluent in several languages, Schlöndorff has chiefly been attached to the adaption of literary works—a practice which has yielded mixed results: Young Törless, from Robert Musil, remains one of his best films, and there is much to praise in The Tin Drum, the New German Cinema’s foremost commercial success, which Günter Grass helped to adapt from his novel. Despite strengths in each, though, the director’s adaptations of Kleist’s Michael Kohlhaas and Marguerite Yourcenar’s Coup de grace turned out unevenly for quite different reasons. The admirable Lost Honor of Katharina Blum comes from a Heinrich Böll story, while the problematic Circle of Deceit was based on the novel by Nicolas Born.

Among “original” projects, on the other hand, are A Degree of Murder, a failure by all accounts; the fine A Free Woman; and the excellent Sudden Wealth of the Poor People of Kombach. Despite the variety of his subjects, Schlöndorff is almost invariably drawn to material that allows him expression as social critic. All the films cited above share this characteristic. Some of his projects have been courageously political: Katharina Blum is an undisguised attack on Germany’s powerful right-wing, scandal-mongering press, which serves large-scale social repression. As notable are his leading contributions to three collaborative documentaries: Germany in Autumn, a response to the authoritarian climate in the country in the wake of the Baader-Meinhof affair; The Candidate, a work shot during the election campaign that examines the career of ultra-conservative Christian Social Unionist Franz Josef Strauss; and War and Peace, an agit-prop film essay on the deployment of new American nuclear missiles in the Federal Republic.

Schlöndorff’s major theme is the temptation toward moral and political equivocation within an ambiguous or malignant social order, and his films are wryly or skeptically realistic about any hoped-for solutions, even courting controversy. A Free Woman chastens unbridled feminist idealism; Circle of Deceit (made prior to the Israeli invasion of Lebanon) refuses to take sides in the Lebanese conflict.

Margarethe von Trotta, to whom Schlöndorff is married, has performed in a number of her husband’s films and is a frequent collaborator on his scripts; interestingly, her own work as director is characterized not only by a polish equal to Schlöndorff’s and similar political inspiration but also by a compelling intelligence and power of evocation.

Throughout the 1980s and early 1990s, Schlöndorff has continued directing films based on fine literature. They feature characters in moral conflict who are spooked by their pasts, uncertain of their futures, and unable to control their impulses and their fates.

Swann in Love, based on Marcel Proust’s Remembrances of Things Past, is the elegantly sensual story of a wealthy gentleman (Jeremy Irons) who thrives in the finest circles of high society but risks everything over his erotic obsession with a courtesan. Death of a Salesman, superbly adapted from the 1984 Broadway revival of the Arthur Miller play, is the saga of Willy Loman (Dustin Hoffman), the tragic, desperate travelling salesman to whom “attention must be paid.” The Handmaid’s Tale, scripted by Harold Pinter from Margaret Atwood’s bestseller, is an intriguing science-fiction chiller told from a woman’s point of view. It is set in the future, when white women are coerced into birthing babies who will make up a new, “pure” generation. The story focuses on one such female (Natasha Richardson) who must contend with the advances of the powerful “commander” (Robert Duvall). Finally, Voyager, based on the Max Frisch book Homo Faber, is a pensive drama about two very different romances—one in the past, the other in the present—experienced by Walter Faber (Sam Shepard), a repressed American traveler.

—Herbert Reynolds, updated by Rob Edelman

SCHOEDSACK, Ernest B.

photographic unit. Family: Married actress Ruth Rose, 1926, one son. Career: Worked with engineering road gangs in San Francisco area, then secured job as cameraman for Mack Sennett through brother Felix (G.F.) Schoedsack, early 1910s; freelance newsreel cameraman, Europe, then returned to United States, 1922; collaborated with Merian C. Cooper and newspaper correspondent Marguerite Harrison on first film, Grass, 1925; suffered severe eye injury while testing photographic equipment for U.S. Army Air Corps, World War II. Died: 23 December 1979.

Publications

By SCHOEDSACK: article—

On SCHOEDSACK: books—

On SCHOEDSACK: articles—

* * *

Ernest B. Schoedsack’s initial fame as a filmmaker came from his work in the documentary mode directing “natural dramas,” as he and his partner Merian C. Cooper called their films. Schoedsack’s spirit for adventure in these pictures can be traced to the kind of life he himself led. He began his film career simply enough as a cameraman with the Mack Sennett Keystone Studios. When World War I broke out Schoedsack enlisted with the photographic section of the Signal Corps. He was stationed in France, where he gained a great deal of film experience as a newsreel cameraman. With the signing of the Armistice, Schoedsack decided to remain in Europe and aid the Poles in their battle against the Russians. While in Poland Schoedsack continued to make newsreels. This occupation, however, was primarily a cover to disguise the fact that he was smuggling supplies and Poles out of Russian-occupied territory.

It was in Poland that Schoedsack met his future partner Merian C. Cooper. Like Schoedsack, Cooper was an American who wanted to help the Polish people in their struggle for freedom. Cooper’s exploits during the Russian-Polish conflict resulted in his imprisonment by the Russians as a spy. Fortunately he managed to escape before he could be executed. The true-life adventures of both Cooper and Schoedsack make it easy to see why these two sought out the most distant, difficult, and dangerous locations they could find for their films.

Their first motion picture collaboration, titled Grass, concerned the yearly migration of the Bakhtiari tribes in Persia as they crossed over the Zardeh Kuh mountain range to find grazing land for their sheep and cattle. Although the trip was long and treacherous, Cooper and Schoedsack made the journey with the tribesmen, filming every step of the way. Back home Grass was an extremely successful film, and, along with Nanook of the North, helped to set the style for documentary travelogues.

Their next project together, Chang, was a documentary film set in China, but with a more centralized story line than Grass. This film dealt with one man’s efforts to protect his family from the dangers of nature. In order to help dramatize the story, some events in the film were staged. For example, the climactic elephant stampede toward the end of the film was directed at a mock village so that no lives would be endangered. Audiences in America were none the wiser, however, and Chang played to large crowds on Broadway.

With each successive film Cooper and Schoedsack moved more and more toward fiction, although their films still retained a documentary look. For example, their next film, The Four Feathers, included background scenes filmed in Africa, while the principal actors were filmed on a Hollywood stage. Eventually Cooper and Schoedsack moved their filmmaking partnership entirely to Hollywood and away from real locations. They continued to make films in the documentary style, though, as shown by their most famous film of all, King Kong. As a work of fiction, King Kong is a fantasy version of Cooper and Schoedsack’s ultimate documentary adventure—a journey to a faraway uncharted island in search of the “Eighth Wonder of the World.” The film was the box-office surprise of 1933 and it is still popular today.

After King Kong Schoedsack directed little of note. He directed two more giant ape pictures, Son of Kong and Mighty Joe Young. An accident during World War II left him partially blinded, but his documentary films alone earned Schoedsack an important place in the tradition of non-fiction filmmaking.

---

SCHRADER, Paul

Nationality: American. Born: Grand Rapids, Michigan, 22 July 1946; the brother of screenwriter Leonard Schrader. Education: Educated in Ministry of Christian Reformed religion at Calvin College, Grand Rapids, Michigan, graduated 1968; took summer classes in film at Columbia University, New York; University of California at Los Angeles Film School, M.A., 1970. Family: Married actress Mary Beth Hurt, 1983, one daughter, one son. Career: Moved to Los Angeles, 1968; worked as a writer for the Los Angeles Free Press, then became editor of Cinema magazine; first script to be filmed, The Yakuza, 1974; directed his first feature, Blue Collar, 1977. Awards: First Prize Paris Festival, for Blue Collar, 1978; Valladolid International Film Festival Youth Jury Award-Special Mention, for Affliction, 1997; Writers Guild of America Laurel Award for Screen Writing Achievement, 1999. Address: Schrader Productions, 1501 Broadway, Suite 1405, New York, NY 10019, U.S.A. Agent: Jeff Berg, International Creative Management, 8899 Beverly Blvd., Los Angeles, CA 90048, U.S.A.

Films as Director and Scriptwriter:

1977 Blue Collar
1978 Hardcore

---

Other Films:

1974 The Yakuza (Pollack) (co-sc)
1976 Taxi Driver (Scorsese) (sc); Obsession (De Palma) (co-sc)
1977 Rolling Thunder (Flynn) (sc); Close Encounters of the Third Kind (Spielberg) (co-sc, uncredited)
1978 Old Boyfriends (Tewkesbury) (co-sc, exec pr)
1980 Raging Bull (Scorsese) (co-sc)
1984 De Weg waar Bresson (The Road to Bresson) (De Boer, Rood) (doc) (ro as himself)
1986 The Mosquito Coast (Weir) (sc)
1988 The Last Temptation of Christ (Scorsese) (sc)
1995 City Hall (Becker) (co-sc); The Hollywood Fashion Machine (Ely—for TV) (doc) (ro as himself)
1999 Bringing out the Dead (Scorsese) (sc)
2002 Dino (Scorsese) (co-sc)
Publications

By SCHRADER: books—

Transcendental Style in Film: Ozu, Bresson, Dreyer, Berkeley, 1972.

By SCHRADER: articles—

Interview with Gary Crowdus and Dan Georgakas, in Cineaste (New York), Winter 1977/78.

Interview with M.P. Carducci, in Millimeter (New York), February 1979.

Interview with Mitch Tuchmann, in Film Comment (New York), March/April 1980.

Interview with Michel Ciment, in Positif (Paris), June 1985.

Interview with Allan Hunter, in Films and Filming (London), November 1985.

Interview with Karen Jaehne, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1986.

Interview with E. Anttila, in Filmihullu (Helsinki), no. 2, 1989.

Schrader, Paul, “Does the Letter Still Rate? Porn Has the X, Let’s not commit and ‘framed’ as the object of the gaze— the camera seems to love him), and the last time we see him, he is Wells, J., “American Gigolo and Other Matters,” in Film Comment (New York), March/April 1980.

Fraser, Peter, “American Gigolo and Transcendental Style,” in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), vol. 16, no. 2, 1988.

Kennedy, Harlan, “The Discomforts of Paul Schrader,” in Film Comment (New York), July/August 1990.

While it is doubtless fanciful and recherché to read Paul Schrader’s movies as unmediated reflections of his own life and feelings, it is nonetheless true that the director/screenwriter’s “religious fascination with the redeeming hero” echoes his extreme fascination with himself. The incredible urge that his characters have to confess (Schrader frequently resorts to voice-overs and interior monologues), exemplified by Travis Bickle’s musings on the cross during his Last Temptation, and Patty Hearst’s thoughts about her abduction, suggest that his films are firmly rooted in self-analysis. The 1989 book Schrader on Schrader, and the filmmaker’s enthusiasm for the bio-pic (Mishima, Patty Hearst), a genre that had been more or less moribund since the time of Paul Muni, testify that he does indeed share the Calvinist urge to account for everything, to make his art out of the introspective inventory of his, or somebody else’s, life.

 Appropriately, for a confirmed fan of the films of Bresson, the image of the condemned man/ woman attempting to escape his/her fate is a leitmotif in Schrader’s work. He seems obsessed with prison metaphors, with images of captivity. In Patty Hearst, Natasha Richardson is locked up in a cupboard. In Cat People, Natasha Kinski ends up behind bars, in a zoo—a human captive in a panther’s body. Richard Gere, in American Gigolo, is “framed” (he is “framed” for a murder he did not commit and “framed” as the object of the gaze—the camera seems to love him), and the last time we see him, he is reaching out for Lauren Hutton but is separated from her by the glass panel in the prison interview booth. Christ, predictably, ends up on the cross: he too is trapped. A last, sad image of Raging Bull is of Jake La Motta (Robert De Niro) banging his head against his cell wall. Schrader’s work abounds in figures cabinet, cribbed, and confined. Travis Bickle, that emissary from 1970s America, is a prisoner in the city, a prisoner in his own body, a prisoner behind the wheel of his taxi, a slave to pornography and junk food, and he is trying, in his mildly psychotic way, to free Jodie Foster’s child prostitute, who is similarly trapped. Season Hubley in Hardcore is whisked away from a Calvinist Convention, kidnapped by a snuff movie producer, and needs an Ahab/John Wayne figure (George C. Scott) from the suburbs to rescue her, to try to reincarcerate her within the family. Even Schrader’s Venice in The Comfort of Strangers, studio-built and full of interminable dark corridors, seems more like San Quentin than a beautiful European city on water.

An American of Dutch/German extraction, Schrader had a strict religious upbringing in Grand Rapids, Michigan. He did not watch as much TV as one might expect, and when it came to the cinema, he was cruelly deprived: incredibly, he saw his first film, The Absent-minded Professor, when he was seventeen. Then came the revelation of Wild in the Country, a lurid Elvis Presley vehicle which gave him his vision on the Road to Damascus: he was captured by the celluloid muse. His Calvinist background, combined with his early career as film historian/critic, makes him among the more academically inclined of mainstream Hollywood filmmakers. He was a Pauline Kael protégé, a “Paulette” as he describes it, and it was Kael’s influence which got him into the film course at UCLA. Few of his contemporaries have been fellows of the American Film Institute or have written ineffably unfathomable monographs on transcendental style in the movies of Ozu, Bresson, and Dreyer. He straddles two mutually exclusive cultures, traditions, discourses. On the one hand, he is the film scholar and expert in European and Japanese cinema. On the other, he is the hack Hollywood director and screenwriter. It is a tension that he seems to enjoy. Is he the artist locked up in a commercial catacomb or is he the popular filmmaker, hampered by his own notions of art? Is he, perhaps, just plain religious freak and show-off? “The reason I put that Bressonian ending onto American Gigolo,” he noted, “was a kind of outrageus perversion, saying I can make this fashion-conscious, hip Hollywood movie and at the end claim it’s really pure; and in Cat People I can make this horror movie and say it was about Dante and Beatrice.”

Sometimes Schrader seems too clever by half. Kael, attacking Patty Hearst, suggested he lacked a basic instinct for moviemaking: “He doesn’t reach an audience’s emotions.” This is probably unfair. His own scripts have a relentless narrative drive, generally toward some kind of judgement day (witness his work with Scorsese). When he is directing another writer’s scenario, he can lose that obsessive will to destruction, salvation, damnation. Both Patty Hearst and The Comfort of Strangers—though it must be taxing for any director to try to animate a Pinter script—lack the momentum, the frenetic desire to tell a story, which may be found in the films he wrote himself.

Apparently, he worked with Spielberg on early drafts of Close Encounters, but Spielberg elbowed him off the project because Schrader did not share his Capra-like love of the common man and wanted to make the protagonist a crusading religious fruitcake à la Travis Bickle. Whatever one’s reservations about Schrader’s evangelism or his tedious self-obsession, he is undoubtedly one of Hollywood’s most formally arresting filmmakers. He pays enormous attention to set design. (He has worked frequently with Scarfioiti, Bertolucci’s designer on The Conformist.) He seems equally at home with the lush, magical opulence of New Orleans in Cat People, the sober, almost drama-doc look of Patty Hearst, the glossy, superficial Los Angeles, all hotels, restaurants, and expensive apartments, of American Gigolo, or the stagy, elaborate sets on Mishima. Edgy, prowling tracks (the opening shot of The Comfort of Strangers is a virtuoso effort in camera perpetua to rival the first few minutes of Welles’ Touch of Evil), a predilection for high angle shots (humans as bugs), and his discerning use of music (he has worked with Philip Glass and Giorgio Moroder, among others) show him as a filmmaker with a consummate love of his craft.

Yet Schrader thrives on controversy. He was sacked from his job as film critic for the Los Angeles Free Press because he gave a debunking review to Easy Rider. American Gigolo was attacked as being homophobic. Mishima provoked an outcry in Japan. The Last Temptation of Christ brought the moral majority out to the picket line. Apparently a student radical in the 1960s, Schrader caricatures the Symbionese Liberation Army, Patty Hearst’s abductors, as idiotic mouthers of revolutionary platitudes. His films seem to abound in right-wing visionaries (Travis Bickle, George C. Scott in Hardcore, Mishima, Christopher Walken in The Comfort of Strangers) and, while he does not straightforwardly endorse their viewpoints, he respects their right to be individuals and their struggle for redemption, a struggle which invariably leaves onlookers dead and dying in the crusading hero’s wake. Social historians of American culture and politics in the 1970s and 1980s will find rich pickings in the Schrader oeuvre. Schrader continued his cinematic explorations of characters attempting to purge themselves of their excesses and sins in Light Sleeper, a knowing, sobering film set amid the strata of the New York City drug culture. Symbolically, its scenario is set during a sanitation strike, allowing the streets to be strewn with garbage. Willem Dafoe plays John LeTour, a forty-year-old ex-junkie and “mid-level drug dealer” whose clientele consists of upscale New Yorkers willing to pay big bucks for top-quality product. Both LeTour and Ann (Susan Sarandon), his boss, are fascinating characters. Within the confines of her world, Ann is a celebrity, a legend: the Mayflower Madam of the drug trade. She dresses like a high-powered business executive, dines in fancy restaurants, and tools around town in a chauffeured limousine. She also is shifting from drug dealing to marketing cosmetics. LeTour, too, yearns to go straight: he is having trouble sleeping, and he fears he has run out of luck. However, his redemption will not come easily, a fact that quickly becomes apparent when he runs into Marianne (Dana Delany), his ex-girlfriend and also a former junkie.

On occasion in Light Sleeper, Schrader waxes nostalgic about the “good old days” of drug use, “before crack came,” when cocaine was the drug of choice. Otherwise, he graphically depicts the ravages of drugs. His junkies are unromanticized and ultimately pathetic. Despite its top-of-the-line cast, Light Sleeper was too unsexy a film to earn the widespread hype enjoyed by many of Schrader’s earlier films.

Touch, the story of a Christ-like character named Juvenal (Skeet Ulrich) who is exploited by various revivalists, fundamentalists, and hucksters, is another of Schrader’s films that may be directly linked to his upbringing. It also is one of his lesser films, as it wallows in understatement. He then reemerged in full force with Affliction, based on a novel by Russell Banks, the saga of Wade Whitehouse (Nick Nolte, in a performance that is a model of anguish intensity), a small-town New Hampshire sheriff who is drowning in his demons. His ex-wife despises him; his daughter feels only discomfort as he ineptly attempts to relate to her; and his problems are linked to his abusive father (a riveting, Oscar-winning James Coburn), a dying man who wallows in alcoholic rage—and whom Wade still deeply fears.

Then Schrader revisited the landscape of Taxi Driver by scripting Scorsese’s Bringing out the Dead, only here the loner-hero, Frank Pierce (Nicolas Cage), is a burned-out Manhattan paramedic whose soul has been deadened by all the pain he has witnessed, and who finds himself haunted by hallucinations. Taxi Driver and Bringing out the Dead offer alternative visions of the Manhattan of Woody Allen: an upper-middle-class playground where crime and creeps mostly are nonexistent, drug-taking is a chic, recreational sport (rather than a destroyer of souls), and an individual’s dysfunction is linked to his psyche (and Brooklyn Jewish upbringing) rather than the muck of his present-day environment.

Frank Pierce and Wade Whitehouse are two more Schrader characters who are prisoners. Pierce’s shackles are the slick, dangerous streets of New York between dusk and dawn, while Whitehouse’s lockup is his hometown. Unlike his brother, he has not had the good sense to move far, far away, and reinvent himself.

—G.C. Macnab, updated by Rob Edelman

SCHROETER, Werner

Nationality: German.
Born: Georgenthal, Thuringia, 7 April 1945.
Education: Educated in Bielefeld and Heidelberg, and Naples; studied psychology at Mannheim; left Munich Television and Film Academy after a few weeks.
Career: Worked as journalist, then began making 8mm films, 1967; director for TV, from 1970; release of first film to theatres, The Kingdom of Naples, 1978; also director for opera and theatre, and actor in several films.
Awards: Golden Bear, Berlin Festival, for Palermo or Wolfsburg, 1980.

Films as Director:

- 1967
  Verona (Zwei Katzen) (short)

- 1968
  Callas Walking Lucia (short); Callas text mit doppelbeleuchtung (short); Maria Callas porträt (short); Mona Lisa (short); Maria Callas singt 1957 Rezitativ und Arie der Elvira aus Ernani 1844 von Giuseppe Verdi (short); La morte d’Isotta; Himmel Hoch (short); Paula—’je reviens’; Grotesk—Barlesk—Pittoresk (co-d with Rosa von Praunheim); Faces (short); Aggressionen (short); Neurast; Argila; Virginia’s Death (short)

- 1969
  Eika Katappa; Nicaragua

- 1970
  Der Bomber-pilot (for TV); Anglia

- 1971
  Salome (for TV); Macbeth (for TV); Funkausstellung 1971—Hitparade (for TV)

- 1972
  Der Tod der Maria Malibran (The Death of Maria Malibran) (for TV)

- 1973
  Willow Springs (for TV)

- 1974
  Der Schwarze Engel (The Black Angel) (for TV)

- 1975
  Johannes Traum (short)

- 1976
  Flocons d’or (Goldflocken; Goldflakes)

- 1978
  Regno di Napoli (Neapolitanische Geschwister; Kingdom of Naples)

- 1980
  Palermo oder Wolfsburg (Palermo or Wolfsburg); Weisse Reisse (White Journey); Die Generalprobe (La Répétition générale; The Dress Rehearsal)

- 1982
  Der Tag der Idioten (Day of Idiots); Das Liebeskonzil (Lovers’ Council)

- 1983
  Der lachende Stern (The Smiling Star)

- 1985
  De l’Argentine (About Argentina); Der Rosenkönig (Rose King); A la recherche du soleil (for TV)

- 1991
  Malina

- 1996
  Poussières d’amour (Love’s Debris) (+ co-sc)

- 1999
  Die Königin

Publications

By SCHROETER: book—

By SCHROETER: articles—

Interview with Alain Carbonnier and Noël Simsolo, in Cinéma (Paris), March 1984.

Interview with A. Wilink, in EPD Film, January 1991.

Interview, in Kino. Film der Bundesrepublik Deutschland, no. 2, 1991.

Interview with P. Kremski, in Filmbulletin (Winterthur), no. 5, 1996.
On SCHROETER: books—

Jansen, Peter W., and Wolfram Schütte, editors, Werner Schroeter, Munich, 1980.

On SCHROETER: articles—

Corrigan, Timothy, “Werner Schroeter’s Operatic Cinema,” in Discourse (Berkeley), Spring 1981.

* * *

Werner Schroeter’s hyper-melodramatic films tend to provoke either intense admiration or outraged hostility. He is one of the most controversial filmmakers associated with the New German Cinema. His emotionally charged, performance-inspired cinema draws on and radically reinterprets nineteenth-century Italian bel canto opera and the music of German Romanticism. Schroeter’s central figure is always the outsider—the homosexual, the mad person, the foreigner—and his major theme is the yearning for self-realization through passionate love and artistic creativity.

Schroeter’s concept of cinema relies on intense stylization, deploying manneristic prolonged gestures. The characters are framed in sumptuous tableaux compositions, and the visuals are underscored by a highly manipulated soundtrack. Images, music, and sound are non-synchronized in Schroeter’s early films: the performers mime exaggeratedly to the lyrics or spoken words on the soundtrack. The songs, arias, and literary citations (mostly from Lautréamont) give rise to stories which repeat distilled moments of desire, loss, and death.

Schroeter is not interested in reproducing an illusion of reality with psychologically motivated actions; instead, he seeks to create visions for a psychic reality. He wants to break with conventional viewing habits, hence his predilection for fragmentation, non-synchronization, extended duration, and deliberately over-the-top acting. At its best, this approach to cinema simultaneously involves the spectator through the music, whilst distancing through anti-naturalist conventions (which should not be confused with Brechtian distanciation techniques). Schroeter’s cinema of excess and artifice occupies a transitional space between the avant-garde and art cinema, neither quite abstract nor quite narrative.

Music, which is central in all of Schroeter’s films, is more important for its content than the mood it conveys: the music comments, but also contradicts at times. Juxtaposing classical with popular music is a major characteristic of Schroeter’s cinema. For example, he puts Maria Callas, the opera diva, side by side with Caterina Valente, the German popular singer. This blurs the hierarchical distinction between “high” and “low” culture, between art and kitsch. Yet Schroeter has been accused of elitism—of making films for “culture vultures”—since his complex system of citing from pop, opera, and literature sources demands a high degree of cultural literacy from the spectator. Moreover, with Schroeter one can never be quite certain whether he parodies or celebrates.

Over the years, and thanks to major retrospectives in London, Paris, and New York, Schroeter has gained an international cult following. Though his cinema is marginal in terms of general audience appeal, Schroeter has been a seminal presence in the New German Cinema of the 1970s. Fassbinder, Herzog, and Wenders have acknowledged him as a decisive influence on their work. His impact on Syberberg is so apparent that Fassbinder has even leveled charges of plagiarism.

Eika Katappa, a radical appropriation of famous nineteenth-century opera scenes, won the Josef von Sternberg prize (as “the most idiosyncratic film”) in 1969 at the Mannheim Film Festival and provided Schroeter with a major breakthrough. As a consequence he entered the world of television, and during the 1970s his films were produced almost exclusively by a small experimental television department. It is rather ironic that Schroeter’s “total cinema” (owing more to the spectacle than to the narrative arts) found a home in television.

Der Tod der Maria Malibran, sublime and bizarre, is considered by many (including Michel Foucault and Schroeter himself) to be one of his best films, but it is also the most difficult. The historical figure of the singer Maria Malibran provides merely a starting point for a dense network of references and allusions encompassing Goethe, Lautréamont, Elvis Presley, and Janis Joplin. With Regno di Napoli Schroeter shifted towards art cinema, and it became his first commercial release. It was received with an unusual consensus of critical acclaim. Many who had regarded Schroeter as a filmmaker of fantastic fables were surprised subsequently at his politically hard-hitting documentaries. The Laughing Star is an extraordinary collage documentary on Marcos’s corrupt regime, while Zum Beispiel Argentinien denounces Galtieri’s dictatorship.

Schroeter’s gay sensibility is expressed as an aesthetic approach that could be described as “high camp.” His conception has frequently been compared to and contrasted with (not always favourably) Rosa von Praunheim’s much more militant stance. Schroeter insists on the romantic version of homosexuality. In most of his films we get the gay historical subtext, rather than thematic treatment. Der Rosenkönig, an excessive and entrancing hallucinatory fable of oedipal and homosexual passion, is his most explicit gay film. It also marked the beginning of a six-year gap in fiction filmmaking for the director. Only in 1990 did he begin shooting his new film, Malina. During the 1980s Schroeter became much more widely known as a theatre and opera director, staging a range of productions in Germany and in other countries. Some of these works are highly acclaimed, but all are controversial; indeed, his theatre and opera efforts proved even more controversial than his films.

—Ulrike Sieglohr

SCHUMACHER, Joel

Films as Director:

1974 The Virginia Hill Story (for TV) (+ sc)
1979 Amateur Night at the Dixie Bar and Grill (for TV) (+ sc)
1981 The Incredible Shrinking Woman
1983 D.C. Cab (+ sc)
1985 St. Elmo’s Fire (+ co-sc)
1987 The Lost Boys
1989 Cousins
1990 Flatliners
1991 Dying Young
1993 Falling Down
1994 The Client
1995 Batman Forever
1996 A Time to Kill
1997 Batman & Robin
1999 8MM (+ co-pr); Flawless (+ sc, co-pr)
2000 Tigerland
2001 The Church of the Dead Girls

Other Films:

1972 Play It As It Lays (Perry) (costumes); The Last of Sheila (Ross) (costumes)
1973 Sleeper (Allen) (costumes); Blume in Love (Mazursky) (costumes)
1974 Killer Bees (Harrington) (for TV) (production designer)
1975 The Prisoner of Second Avenue (Frank) (costumes)
1976 Sparkle (O’Steen) (sc); Car Wash (Schultz) (sc)
1978 Interiors (Allen) (costumes); The Wiz (Lumet) (sc)
1986 Slow Burn (Chapman) (for TV) (co-exec pr)
1987 Foxfire (Taylor) (for TV) (co-exec pr)
1995 The Babysitter (Ferland) (exec pr)

Publications

By SCHUMACHER: articles—

Interview in Interview (New York), September 1977.
“Schumacher’s Cat-related Theory,” interview with Susan Morgan, in Interview (New York), July 1990.
“Riddle Me This, Batman,” interview with B. Bibby, in Premiere (New York), May 1995.
“Radiance and Shadow,” interview with Michael Fleming, in Movieline (Los Angeles), February 1999.

On SCHUMACHER: articles—

Joel Schumacher’s background as a fashion designer, display artist, and package designer prepared him for his entry into the film industry as a costume designer. Similarly, he was primed for his career as a feature film director by his work as scriptwriter on several features, and especially as scriptwriter-director of two impressive made-for-television movies: The Virginia Hill Story (a based-on-fact chronicle of mobster Bugsy Siegel’s moll, that is a variation on Warren Beatty’s Bugsy); and Amateur Night at the Dixie Bar and Grill (a well-done comedy-drama spotlighting various characters involved in a talent show at a Southern roadhouse).

All of Schumacher’s films have been generic Hollywood product, filled with all the gloss their budgets could buy. His debut feature is The Incredible Shrinking Woman, a distaff reworking of the 1950s... science-fiction cult classic The Incredible Shrinking Man. Lily Tomlin plays a housewife whose continuous exposure to chemical products results in her beginning to shrink. The film starts out as a wickedly clever spoof of the plight of the American housewife; as Tomlin becomes smaller, she symbolically takes up residence in a dollhouse. But it soon degenerates into a frantic and silly farce. While The Incredible Shrinking Man is a classic of its kind, The Incredible Shrinking Woman became yet another forgettable Hollywood comedy.

Among Schumacher's better works are Dying Young, the deeply moving chronicle of a fatally ill cancer patient and the woman who befriends him; Cousins, an amiable Americanization of Jean-Charles Tachella's smash-hit French romantic comedy Cousin-Cousine; Flatliners, a fast-paced drama about medical students who make themselves temporarily legally dead so that they may experience afterlife episodes; and Flawless, the well-intentioned and well-acted story of a conservative, retired security guard who suffers a stroke, and is forced to bond with his neighbor, a drag queen. Schumacher also directed two slick but solid adaptations of John Grisham novels: The Client, in which a lawyer represents an eleven-year-old boy who has come to know more than he ought to about Mafia dealings; and A Time to Kill, about a white lawyer who defends a black man who had shot and killed the two rednecks accused of raping his daughter. And he made the entertaining if special effects-laden Batman Forever, in which the famed superhero goes up against the Riddler and Two-Face.

The second wrung of Schumacher's credits includes D.C. Cab, a so-so comedy about a taxi company operated by oddballs; The Lost Boys, about a gang of adolescent vampires; St. Elmo's Fire, a brat-pack soap opera; and Batman & Robin, a flat, uninspired sequel. 8MM is the flashy but unpleasant story of a private detective/family man bent on determining if the star of a snuff film did indeed die on camera. Perhaps Schumacher's most unique work is Falling Down, an allegory featuring Michael Douglas as a stressed-out Modern Man who goes haywire while stuck in traffic on a Los Angeles freeway and begins a violence-laden odyssey across the city. Like The Incredible Shrinking Woman, the film is an attempt to make a statement about the perils of contemporary American society. And also like its predecessor, the result is only intermittently successful.

As the years have gone by, Schumacher's proficiency has allowed him to be assigned more prestigious, higher-budgeted projects. In his better work, he has been able to combine surface gloss with strong dramatic elements.

—Audrey E. Kupferberg, updated by Rob Edelman

---

SCOLA, Ettore

Nationality: Italian. Born: Trevico, Avellino, 10 May 1931. Education: Studied law, University of Rome. Career: Scriptwriter on films with Ruggero Maccari, from 1953; directed first film, Se permette parliamo di donne, 1964. Awards: César Award, for C'eravamo tanto amati, 1975; Best Director, Cannes Festival, for Brutti, sporchi e cattivi, 1976; Special Jury Prize, Cannes Festival, for Una giornata particolare, 1977; Best Screenplay, Cannes Festival, for La terrazza, 1980; Grand Jury Prize for Body of Work, Cannes Festival, 1981.

---

Films as Director:

- 1964  Se permette parliamo di donne (Let's Talk About Women) (+ co-sc); La congiuntura (+ co-sc)
- 1965  ‘Il vittimista’ episode of Thrilling (+ co-sc)
- 1966  L'arcidiavolo (Il diavolo innamorato; The Devil in Love) (+ co-sc)
- 1968  Il commissario Pepe (+ co-sc); Riusciranno i nostri eroi a trovare il loro amico misteriosamente scomparso in Africa? (+ co-sc)
- 1970  Dramma della gelosia—Tutti i particolari in cronaca (The Pizza Triangle: A Drama of Jealousy, and Other Things) (+ co-sc)
- 1971  Permette? Rocco Papaleo (Rocco Papaleo) (+ co-sc)
- 1972  La più bella serata della mia vita (+ co-sc)
- 1973  Trevico-Torino . . . Viaggio nel Fiat Nam (+ co-sc)
- 1974  C’eravamo tanto amati (We All Loved Each Other So Much) (+ co-sc)
- 1976  Brutti, sporchi e cattivi (Down and Dirty) (+ co-sc); one episode of Signori e signore, buonanotte (+ co-sc)
- 1977  Una giornata particolare (A Special Day) (+ co-sc); one episode of I nuovi mostri (The New Monsters; Viva Italia! (+ co-sc)
- 1979  Che si dice a Roma (+ co-sc)
- 1980  La terrazza (+ co-sc)
- 1981  Passione d’amore (+ co-sc)
- 1982  Il mondo nuovo (+ co-sc); La Nuit de Varennes (+ co-sc)
1984  Le Bal (+ co-sc)
1985  Maccheroni (Macaroni)
1987  Famiglia (The Family)
1989  Splendor (The Last Movie)
1990  Che ora e
1991  Viaggio di Capitan Fracassa
1993  Mario, Maria e Mario
1995  Romanzo di un Giovane Povero (Diary of a Poor Young Man)
1997  Segment titled “1943–1997” in Corti italiani (+ co-sc)
1998  La Cena (+ co-sc)
2000  Concorrenza sleale

Other Films:

1954  Un americano a Roma (Steno) (co-sc with Ruggero Maccari); Due notti con Cleopatra (Two Nights with Cleopatra) (co-sc with Maccari); Una Parigina a Roma (co-sc with Maccari)
1956  Lo scapolo (Pietrangeli) (co-sc with Maccari)
1958  Nata di marzo (co-sc with Maccari)
1960  Il mattatore (Love and Larceny) (co-sc with Maccari); Adua e le compagne (Love à la Carte) (co-sc with Maccari); Fantasmi a Roma (Ghosts of Rome) (co-sc with Maccari); “La storia di un soldato” (“The Soldier”) episode of L’amore difficile (Erotica; Of Wayward Love) (Manfredi) (co-sc with Maccari)
1962  Anni ruggenti (Roaring Years) (Zampa) (co-sc with Maccari); Il sorpasso (The Easy Life) (Risi) (co-sc with Maccari)
1963  I mostri (The Monsters; Opiate '67; Fifteen from Rome) (Risi) (co-sc with Maccari); La visita (co-sc with Maccari)
1964  Il gaucho (The Gaucho) (Risi) (co-sc); Alta infedeltà (High Infidelity) (co-sc); Il magnifico corutno (The Magnificent Cuckold) (co-sc)
1965  Io la conoscevo bene (Pietrangeli) (co-sc); Made in Italy (Loy) (co-sc)
1966  Follie d’estate (co-sc)
1967  Le dolci signore (Anyone Can Play) (Zampa) (co-sc); Il Profeta (sc)
1971  Noi donne siamo fatte così (Women: So We Are Made) (Risi) (co-sc)
1988  Vacanza (Guillot) (pr); Mitico Gianluca (Lazotti) (pr); O samba (Constantin) (pr)

Publications

By SCOLA: articles—

Interview with Dan Yakir, in Film Comment (New York), March/April 1983.
Interview with Mario Monicelli, in Chaplin (Stockholm), 1983.

“Visuelle Stenogramme,” in Film und Fernsehen (Potsdam, Germany), January 1989.
Interview with H. M. Fendel, in EPD Film (Frankfurt), August 1990.

On SCOLA: books—

On SCOLA: articles—

Gili, J., article in Ecran (Paris), April and November 1976.
Micheli, S., “Ein besonderer Tag,” in Film und Fernsehen (Potsdam, Germany), April 1978.
Andersson, W., “Brutti, sporchi, cattivi & una giornata particolare,” in Filmrutan (Sweden), 1978.
Zaoral, Z., article in Film a Doba (Czechoslovakia), October 1985.

Revered more in the international film community than in American cineaste circles, chameleon director Ettore Scola’s name is inexcusably absent from several English-language reference works. With Scola, one has to dig deep for the auteurist consistencies that make less elusive artists easier to pigeonhole. While Scola’s fascination with political attitude and social change dictated by purely personal psychology never varies, he skips the light fantastic through such specialties as historical epic (Le Nuit de Varennes), the musical (Le Bal), screwball comedy (A Drama of Jealousy), domestic drama (The Family), and grand romance (Passione d’Amore). In each case, the director gives established genres a uniquely invigorating spin. Critic Stephen Harvey compares Scola to Joseph Mankiewicz, and that pithy summation of Scola as a Mankiewicz seasoned with oregano sheds light on how Scola’s comic screenwriting background (over fifty screenplays) informs his later career as a filmmaking maestro.

---

889

Before directing his first feature in 1964, Scola was a writer and illustrator for satirical magazines, a scriptor for radio, and a screenwriter for movies, mainly comedies, directed by Nanni Loy, Antonio Pietrangeli, and Dino Risi, among others. Often constructed as star vehicles, his scripts contributed to the fame of such Italian mainstays as Vittorio Gassman, Ugo Tognazzi, and Alberto Sordi. From this particular brand of Italian comedy—bungling incompetents muddling through desperate situations, war’s grotesqueries, life’s ironies—Scola’s work has progressed to complex studies of his countrymen dealing with their history and social environment.

Although Scola’s directorial debut, Let’s Talk About Women, echoed his film-star showcase scripts, the bold A Drama of Jealousy (The Pizza Triangle) established him as a quirky chronicler of amore as a no-win situation; the film is a sort of “Waiting for Cupid” where every day is a luckless Valentine’s Day. C’eravamo tanto amati, a tribute to Vittorio De Sica, is not only about the difficult, frustrating post-World War II years of three men whose class differences overwhelm the close bond they formed while fighting for the Resistance. It is also a complex survey of thirty years of Italian cinema and its relationship to Italian history, photographed in various appropriate cinematic styles. La Terza also dissects the Italy-Cinema symbiosis as it scrutinizes the mores of Italian intellectuals, now middle-aged and no longer creative, forever failing to measure up to their heroic past.

In even his earliest directorial efforts, details of costume and milieu are integrated into Scola’s cinema of ideas compellingly, because inveterate sketch artist Scola is graced with a visual sensibility that will reach its apotheosis in La Nuit de Varennes and Passione d’Amore. In Riusciranno, set in modern Angola, an Italian bourgeois explores twentieth-century Africa in a nineteenth-century concept of a safari outfit, while Bruti, sporchi e cattivi (literally ‘’dirty, nasty and bad’’) satirizes the unavoidably disgusting appearance of the inhabitants of an impoverished village in a movie Scola had intended to introduce with comments by Pasolini.

What is most striking about Scola’s oeuvre, however, is his gift for compression. Restricting his observations deliberately to confined areas (for example, the coaches in La Nuit de Varennes, the microcosmic dance hall in Le Bal, the family domicile that survives decades of unrest in The Family), Scola forces his encaged protagonists to reveal the inner turmoil that informs their societal stances. Nowhere is this more apparent than in Una giornata particolare, which demonstrates oppression in a super-organized society that devalues individuality. Moving deeper and deeper inside the confined setting, a fluid camera concentrates on the facade and interior of a workers’ dwelling on 6 May 1938, when Mussolini welcomes Hitler to Rome. As the radio blares Il Duce’s doctrine self-confidence, two trapped members of this society—a domestically repressed housewife and an anti-fascist homosexual—meet by chance and share their humanity for a few hours. Whereas in The Family, the family unit struggles to withstand the winds of war and upheaval, in the stylish Le Bal, the decades-shifting dancers merely reflect the changes transpiring outside their social cocoon. Telescoping the French Revolution inside a few coaches, without portraying starving hordes or the king trying to escape the rabble’s wrath, Scola’s Le Nuit de Varennes forces the opportunity for rumination upon an upper class facing a climate hostile to them. In a masterfully compact fashion, Scola continues to examine the past in order to interpret the present. Particularly in The Family, Scola avoids the epic sweep of traditional political cavalances in favor of an intimate revisionism of history.

In all Scola’s films, the choreography of history steps in partnership with his simpatico actors, gliding camerawork, and updated neo-realistic melancholy. Even taking his overcooked Hollywood debut, Macaroni, into consideration, and the failure of his last films to secure American releases, Scola’s place in humanist film history is unassailable. Unlike many screenwriters who turn director to ensure an unedited venue for their glorious dialogue, when Scola has something to say he lets his mise-en-scene do the talking. His manner of working liberates film stars from their confining personas and challenges moviegoers to experience the ambiguous passions of his characters. As in that embryonic Fatal Attraction for the nineteenth century, Passione d’Amore (newly minted as a Sondheim musical, Passion), Scola’s relentless pursuit of beauty is an all-consuming mission, one that makes this filmmaker sympathetic with misfits like Fosca, whose emotional deprivation in Passione d’Amore is not categorized as a negative, but as an occasion for greater sensitivity. Scola revisits the impersonal past to give it a human face.

—Lillian Schiff, updated by Robert J. Pardi

SCORSESE, Martin

Films as Director:

1963 What’s a Nice Girl like You Doing in a Place like This? (short) (+ sc)
1964 It’s Not Just You, Murray (short) (+ co-sc)
1967 The Big Shave (short) (+ sc)
Martin Scorsese

1968  Who’s That Knocking at My Door? (+ sc, role as gangster)
1970  Street Scenes (doc)
1972  Boxcar Bertha (+ role as client of bordello)
1973  Mean Streets (+ co-sc, role as Shorty the Hit Man)
1974  Italian-American (doc) (+ co-sc)
1975  Alice Doesn’t Live Here Anymore (+ role as customer at Mel and Ruby’s)
1976  Taxi Driver (+ role as passenger)
1977  New York, New York
1978  The Last Waltz (doc)
1979  American Boy (doc) (+ sc)
1980  Raging Bull
1983  The King of Comedy (+ role as assistant)
1985  After Hours (+ role as disco patron)
1986  The Color of Money
1988  The Last Temptation of Christ
1989  ‘Life Lessons’ episode in New York Stories
1990  GoodFellas (+ sc); Man in Milan (doc)
1991  Cape Fear
1993  Age of Innocence (+ sc, role)
1995  Casino (+ sc)

1997  Kundun
1999  Bringing out the Dead, Il Dolce Cinema (+ sc)
2001  The Gangs of New York
2002  Dino

Other Films:

1965  Bring on the Dancing Girls (sc)
1967  I Call First (sc)
1970  Woodstock (ed, asst d)
1976  Cannonball (Bartel) (role)
1979  Hollywood’s Wild Angel (Blackwood) (role); Medicine Ball Caravan (assoc pr, post prod spvr)
1981  Triple Play (role)
1982  Bonjour Mr. Lewis (Benayoun) (role)
1990  Dreams (Kurosawa) (role); The Grifters (Frears) (pr); Fear No Evil (Winkler) (role); The Crew (Antonioni) (exec pr); Mad Dog and Glory (McNaughton) (exec pr)
1991  Guilty by Suspicion (role as Joe Lesser)
1993  Jonas in the Desert (role)
1994 Quiz Show (Redford) (role as sponsor); Naked in New York (exec pr)
1995 Search and Destroy (exec pr, role as accountant); Clockers (Lee) (pr)

Publications

By SCORSESE: books—

The Age of Innocence: A Portrait of the Film Based on the Novel by Edith Wharton, New York, 1993.
A Personal Journey with Martin Scorsese through American Movies, with Michael Henry Wilson, British Film Institute, 1997.

By SCORSESE: articles—

Interview with M. Rosen, in Film Comment (New York), March/April 1975.
Martin Scorsese Seminar, in Dialogue on Film (Washington, D.C.), April 1975.
“Scorsese on Taxi Driver and Herrmann,” an interview with C. Amata, in Focus on Film (London), Summer/Autumn 1976.
Interview with Jonathan Kaplan, in Film Comment (New York), July/August 1977.
Interview with Richard Combs and Louise Sweet, in Sight and Sound (London), Winter 1977/78.
“Martin Scorsese’s Guilty Pleasures,” in Film Comment (New York), September/October 1978.
Interview with B. Krohn, in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), May 1986.
Interview with Chris Hodenfield, in American Film (Washington, D.C.), March 1989.
Interview with A. Decurtis, in Rolling Stone (New York), November 1, 1990.
Interviews with Graham Fuller, in Interview (New York), November 1991 and October 1993.
Interview with Gavin Smith, in Film Comment (New York), November/December 1993.

Interview, in the Special Issue of Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), March 1996.
Interview with Jean-Pierre Coursodon and Michael Henry, in Positif (Paris), March 1996.
“Martin Scorsese’s Calling: To Protect and Preserve Film Artists’ Rights,” an interview with Ted Elrick, in DGA Magazine (Los Angeles), March-April 1996.

On SCORSESE: books—

Arnold, Frank, and others, Martin Scorsese, Munich, 1986.

On SCORSESE: articles—

Scorsese Section of Positif (Paris), April 1980.
Braudy, Leo, “The Sacraments of Genre: Coppola, De Palma, Scorsese,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1986.
“Scorsese Issue” of Film Comment (New York), September/October 1988.
At present, with regard to the Hollywood cinema of the last fifteen years, two directors appear to stand head-and-shoulders above the rest, and it is possible to make large claims for their work on both formal and thematic grounds: Scorsese and Cimino. The work of each is strongly rooted in the American and Hollywood past, yet is at the same time audacious and innovative. Cimino’s work can be read as at once the culmination of the Ford/Hawks tradition and a radical rethinking of its premises; Scorsese’s involves an equally drastic rethinking of the Hollywood genres, either combining them in such a way as to foreground their contradictions (western and horror film in Taxi Driver) or disconcertingly reversing the expectations they traditionally arouse (the musical in New York, New York, the boxing movie and “biopic” in Raging Bull). Both directors have further disconcerted audiences and critics alike in their radical deviations from the principles of classical narrative: hence Heaven’s Gate is received by the American critical establishment with blank incomprehension and self-defensive ridicule, while Scorsese has been accused (by Andrew Sarris, among others) of lacking a sense of structure. Hollywood films are not expected to be innovative, difficult, and challenging, and must suffer the consequences of authentic originality (as opposed to the latest in fashionable chic that often passes for it).

The Cimino/Scorsese parallel ends at this shared tension between tradition and innovation. While Heaven’s Gate can be read as the answer to (and equal of) Birth of a Nation, Scorsese has never ventured into the vast fresco of American epic, preferring to explore relatively small, limited subjects (with the exception of The Last Temptation of Christ), the wider significance of the films arising from the implications those subjects are made to reveal. He starts always from the concrete and specific—a character, a relationship: the vicissitudes in the careers and love-life of two musicians (New York, New York); the violent public and private life of a famous boxer (Raging Bull); the crazy aspirations of an obsessed nonentity (King of Comedy). In each case, the subject is remorselessly followed through to a point where it reveals and dramatizes the fundamental ideological tensions of our culture.

His early works are divided between self-confessedly personal works related to his own Italian-American background (Who’s That Knocking at My Door?, Mean Streets) and genre movies (Boxcar Bertha, Alice Doesn’t Live Here Anymore). The distinction was never absolute, and the later films effectively collapse it, tending to take as their starting point not only a specific character but a specific star: Robert De Niro. The Scorsese/De Niro relationship has proved one of the most fruitful director/star collaborations in the history of the cinema; its ramifications are extremely complex. De Niro’s star image is central to this, poised as it is on the borderline between ‘star’ and ‘actor’—the charismatic personality, the self-effacing impersonator of diverse characters. It is this ambiguity in the De Niro star persona that makes possible the ambiguity in the actor/director relationship: the degree to which Scorsese identifies with the characters De Niro plays, versus the degree to which he distances himself from them. It is this tension (communicated very directly to the spectator) between identification and repudiation that gives the films their uniquely disturbing quality.

Indeed, Scorsese is perhaps the only Hollywood director of consequence who has succeeded in sustaining the radical critique of American culture that developed in the 1970s through the Reagan era of retrenchment and recuperation. Scorsese probes the tensions within and between individuals until they reveal their fundamental, cultural nature. Few films have chronicled so painfully and abrasively as New York, New York the impossibility of successful heterosexual relations within a culture built upon sexual inequality. The conflicts arising out of the man’s constant need for self-assertion and domination and the woman’s bewildered alterations between rebellion and complexity are—owing to the peculiarities of the director/star/character/spectator relationship—simultaneously experienced and analysed.

Raging Bull goes much further in penetrating to the root causes of masculine aggression and violence, linking socially approved violence in the ring to socially disapproved violence outside it, violence against men to violence against women. It carries to its extreme that projection of his repressed desires for men onto the woman he ostensibly loves. The film becomes nothing less than a statement about the disastrous consequences, for men and women alike, of the repression of bisexuality in our culture.
King of Comedy may seem at first sight a slighter work than its two predecessors, but its implications are no less radical and subversive: it is one of the most complete statements about the emotional and spiritual bankruptcy of patriarchal capitalism today that the cinema has given us. The symbolic Father (once incarnated in figures of mythic force, like Abraham Lincoln) is here revealed in his essential emptiness, loneliness, and inadequacy. The “children” (De Niro and Sandra Bernhard) behave in exemplary Oedipal fashion: he wants to be the father, she wants to screw the father. The film moves to twin climaxes. First, the father must be reduced to total impotence (to the point of actual immobility) in order to be loved; then Bernhard can croon to him: “You’re gonna love me/like nobody’s loved me,” and remove her clothes. Meanwhile, De Niro tapes his TV act which (exclusively concerned with childhood, his parents, self-deprecation) culminates in a joke about throwing up over his father’s new shoes, the shoes he is (metaphorically) now standing in. We see ambivalence towards the father, the hatred-in-rivalry of “brother” and “sister,” the son’s need for paternal recognition (albeit in fantasy) before he can announce himself to the woman he (very dubiously) loves; and the irrelevance of the mother (a mere, intermittently intrusive, off-screen voice) to any “serious”—i.e., Oedipal patriarchal—concerns. Thus King of Comedy constitutes one of the most rigorous assaults we have on the structures of the patriarchal nuclear family and the impossible desires, fantasies, frustrations, and violence those structures generate: an assault, that is, on the fundamental premises of our culture.

Since 1990, Scorsese has made four films which, taken together, establish him definitively as the most important director currently working in Hollywood. GoodFellas, Cape Fear, The Age of Innocence, and Casino reveal an artist in total command of every aspect of his medium—narrative construction, mise-en-scène, editing, the direction of actors, set design, sound, music, etc. Obviously, he owes much to the faithful team he has built up over the years, each of whom deserves an individual appreciation; but there can be no doubt of Scorsese’s overall control at every level, from the conceptual to the minutiae of execution, informed by his sense of the work as a totality to which every strand, every detail, contributes integrally. If the films continue to raise certain doubts, to prompt certain reservations, it is not on the level of realization, but on moral and philosophical grounds. Let it be said at once, however, that The Age of Innocence, which in advance seemed such an improbable project—provoking fears that it would not transcend the solid and worthy but fundamentally dull literary adaptations of James Ivory—is beyond all doubts and reservations a masterpiece of nuance and refinement, alive in its every moment.

The other three films all raise the much-debated issue of the presentation of violence. There seem to be two valid ways of presenting violence (as opposed to the violence as “fun” of Pulp Fiction, violence as “aestheticized ballet” of John Woo’s films, or violence as “gross out” in the contemporary horror movie). One way is to refuse to show it, always locating it (by a movement of the camera or the actors) just off-screen (Lang in The Big Heat, Mizoguchi in Sansho Dayu), leaving our imaginations free to experience its horror: a method almost totally absent from modern Hollywood. The other is to make it as explicit, ugly, painful, and disturbing as possible so that it becomes quite impossible for anyone other than an advanced criminal psychotic to enjoy it. The latter is Scorsese’s method, and he cannot be faulted for it in the recent work. It was still possible, perhaps, to get a certain “kick” out of the violence in Taxi Driver, because of our ambiguous relationship to the central character, but this is no longer true of the violence in GoodFellas or Casino. An essential characteristic of the later films is the rigorous distance Scorsese constructs between the audience and all the characters: identification, if it can be said to exist at all, flickers only sporadically—are always swiftly contradicted or heavily qualified.

Yet herein lies what is at least a potential problem of these films. One can analyze the ways in which this distance is constructed, especially through the increasing fracturing of the narrative line, the splitting of voice-over narration among different characters in both GoodFellas and Casino; but isn’t alienation, for many of us, inherent in the characters themselves and the subject matter? Scorsese has insisted that the characters of Casino are “human beings”: fair enough. But he seems to imply that if we cannot feel sympathetic to them we are somehow assuming an unwarranted moral superiority. One might retort (to take an extreme case—but the Pesci character is already pretty extreme) that Hitler and Albert Schweitzer were both “human beings”: may we not at least discriminate between them? One can feel a certain compassion for the characters (even Joe Pesci) as people caught up in a process they think they can control but which really controls them; but can one say more for them than that?

Beyond that, though connected with it, is the films’ increasing inflation: not merely their length (GoodFellas plays for almost two-and-a-half hours, Casino for almost three) but its accompanying sense of grandeur: for Scorsese, apparently, the grandeur of his subjects. One is invited to lament, respectively, the decline of the Mafia and of Las Vegas. But suppose one cannot see them, in the first place, in terms other than those of social disease? The films strike me as too insulated, too enclosed within their subjects and milieux: the Mafia and Las Vegas are never effectively “placed” in a wider social context. Scorsese’s worst error seems to be the use in Casino of the final chorus from Bach’s St. Matthew Passion: an error not merely of “tease” but of sense, comparable in its enormity to Cimino’s use of the Mahler “Resurrection” symphony at the end of Year of the Dragon. If it is possible to lament the decline of Las Vegas, it surely cannot be inflated into the lament of Bach’s cheer for the death of Christ on the cross.

One cannot doubt the authenticity of Scorsese’s sense of the tragic. Yet it is difficult not to feel that he has not yet found for it (to adopt T. S. Eliot’s famous formulation) an adequate “objective correlatives.”

Martin Scorsese began the 1990s on a high note with GoodFellas but as the decade progressed, he has lost the support of the critics and the public. Arguably, Scorsese hasn’t tapered off as an artist; instead, the problem may be that his more recent films have failed to fulfill audience expectations. If so, it is somewhat ironic as Scorsese remains consistent in his thematic concerns and commitment to style as self-expression.

Casino is admittedly a demanding film. Viewer identification isn’t solicited and the film’s violence is excessive but without the absurdist connotations found in GoodFellas. On the one hand, the film offers a portrait of the Robert De Niro character, a gambler who, through his connections with the Mafia, gets to manage a casino in Las Vegas during the late 1970s and early 1980s. But Casino is also an “epic” in that it reflects the growing power of corporations; realizing the money to be made, “respectable” business takes over Las Vegas. Not unlike his role in Raging Bull, De Niro’s character succeeds ultimately to the extent that he survives. Scorsese’s concern with surviving in a world that is violent, brutal, and overwhelmingly indifferent to the individual has been evident in his films from early on; but, in his more recent works, this concern is, if anything, treated with greater hesitation and delicacy.

Much has been made of Scorsese’s Catholic background and its influence on his work. Kundun indicates that his interest in religion isn’t confined to Christianity. Kundun can be taken as a companion piece to The Last Temptation of Christ; but it can be considered equally in relation to Casino and the recent Bringing out the Dead. Like Casino, Kundun is an epic film; and its protagonist is also made to confront his fallibility and mortality. In Kundun, the Dalai Lama gradually achieves full consciousness of the destructiveness existing around him; the realization is what motivates him to accept the necessity of his survival. But unlike Casino, the violence in Kundun is constrained; it exists as a threat that fitfully and devastatingly erupts. Kundun is one of Scorsese’s most stylized films. Consistent with his aesthetics, the film is a combination of expressionism and realism, with the former given precedence. Although the film doesn’t directly impose viewer identification with the Dalai Lama, Kundun repeatedly features the Dalai Lama’s subjective responses. In effect, the film manages to be a simultaneously distancing and intimate experience. With Bringing out the Dead, Scorsese and Paul Schrader collaborated on a project that evokes their seminal Taxi Driver. Like the earlier film, Bringing out the Dead takes place on New York’s “mean streets” and features a male protagonist who, in addition to having a job which places him in direct contact with the city’s seamy side, harbors a martyrdom complex and wants to obtain salvation through becoming a savior figure. Th crucial difference between the two films resides in the character of the protagonist. Unlike Taxi Driver’s Travis Bickle, the Nicolas Cage character in Bringing out the Dead is motivated by genuinely humanistic impulses. He wants, not unlike the Dalai Lama, to be a good person who is capable of actively preserving human life. The character undergoes a crisis regarding his worth; at the film’s conclusion, he finds salvation through accepting his guilt over failure. As in Casino and Kundun, Bringing out the Dead is concerned fundamentally with the struggle between death and survival; and, like Casino, it is a brutal film. Although the film possesses an absurdist edge at times that suggests a black comedy, it is unrelenting in its capacity to disturb and horrify.

During the 1990s Scorsese produced works that have challenged the viewer as powerfully as any of his previous films. The films may have not found acceptance partly because his vision has become increasingly somber and elegiac: On the other hand, Scorsese refuses to despair and his films continue to be exhilarating and life affirming statements.

—Robin Wood, updated by Richard Lippe

SCOTT, Ridley

Nationality: English. Born: South Shields, County Durham, 1939. Education: Studied at West Hartlepool College of Art and at the Royal College of Art, London. Family: Married, three children. Career: Set designer, then director for BBC TV, including episodes of Z-Cars and The Informer, 1966–67; set up production company Ridley Scott Associates, directed close to 3,000 commercials, from 1967; directed first feature, The Duellists, 1977. Awards: Special Jury Prize, Cannes Festival, for The Duellists, 1977; Venice Film Festival Award for commercial work.

Films as Director:

1977 The Duellists
1979 Alien
1982 Blade Runner
1985 Legend
1987 Someone to Watch over Me (+ exec-pr)
1989 Black Rain
1991 Thelma and Louise (+ co-pr)
1992 1492: The Conquest of Paradise (+ pr)
1996 White Squall (+ exec pr)
1997 G.I. Jane (+ exec pr)
2000 Gladiator
2001 Hannibal

Other Films:

1994 The Browning Version (co-pr); Monkey Business (exec pr)
1997 The Hunger (series for TV) (exec pr)
1998 Clay Pigeons (pr)
1999 RKO 281 (for TV) (pr)
Publications

By SCOTT: articles—

‘‘Designer Genes,’’ an interview with Harlan Kennedy, in Films (London), September 1982.

Interview with Hubert Niogret, in Positif (Paris), September 1985.

Interview with Sheila Johnston, in Films and Filming (London), November 1985.

‘‘Thelma and Louise Hit the Road for Ridley Scott,’’ an interview with M. McDonagh, in Film Journal (New York), June 1991.

‘‘Myth Revisited,’’ an interview with M. Moss, in Boxoffice (Chicago), October 1992.

‘‘Stormy Weather,’’ an interview with David E. Williams, in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), February 1996.

Interview with A. Jones, in Cinema Papers (Fitzroy), July 1997.

On SCOTT: books—

On SCOTT: articles—

‘‘Blade Runner Issue’’ of Cinefex (Riverside, California), July 1982.

‘‘Blade Runner Issues’’ of Starburst (London), September/November 1982.

Caron, A., ‘‘Les archétypes chez Ridley Scott,’’ in Jeune Cinéma (Paris), March 1983.

Durgnat, Raymond, ‘‘Art for Film’s Sake,’’ in American Film (Washington, D.C.), May 1983.

Milmo, Sean, ‘‘Ridley Scott Makes the Details Count,’’ in Advertising Age (Chicago), 21 June 1984.

Doll, Susan, and Greg Faller, ‘‘Blade Runner and Genre: Film Noir and Science Fiction,’’ in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), no. 2, 1986.

‘‘The Many Faces of Thelma and Louise’’ (8 short articles), in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Winter 1991/92.

Wilmington, Mike, ‘‘The Rain People,’’ in Film Comment (New York), January/February 1992.

Torry, Robert, ‘‘Awaking to the Other: Feminism and the Ego-Ideal in Alien,’’ in Women’s Studies (Champaign, Illinois), vol. 23, no. 4, 1994.

Filmography, in Premiere (Boulder), February 1996.

* * *

Ridley Scott has enjoyed more critical acclaim and financial success as a director of television commercials than he has as a feature filmmaker. Ironically, the very element that has made him an award-winning director of commercials—his emphasis on visual design to convey the message—has often been at the core of the criticism aimed at his films.

Though Scott began his career directing popular TV programs for the BBC, he found that his meticulous attention to detail in terms of set design and props was more suited to making commercials. Scott honed his craft and style on hundreds of ad spots for British television during the 1970s, as did future film directors Alan Parker, Hugh Hudson, Adrian Lyne, and Tony Scott (Ridley’s brother). In 1979, Scott became a fixture in the American television marketplace with a captivating commercial for Chanel No. 5 titled ‘‘Share the Fantasy.’’ Still innovative in this arena, Scott continues to spark controversy with his ‘‘pocket versions of feature films’’—his term for commercials.

Scott approaches his feature films with the same emphasis on mise-en-scène that distinguishes his commercials, prompting some critics to refer to him as a visual stylist. Scott assumes control over the visual elements of his films as much as possible, rather than turn the set design completely over to the art director or the photography over to the cinematographer. Because his first feature, The Duellists, was shot in France, Scott was able to serve as his own cinematographer for that film—a luxury not allowed on many subsequent films due to union rules.

Hallmarks of Scott’s style include a detailed, almost crowded set design that is as prominent in the frame as the actors, a fascination with the tonalities of light, a penchant for foggy atmospheres backlit for maximum effect, and a reliance on long lenses, which tend to flatten the perspective. While these techniques are visually stunning in themselves, they are often tied directly to plot and character in Scott’s films.

Of all Scott’s films, Blade Runner and Legend make the fullest use of set design to enhance the theme. In Blade Runner, the polluted, dank metropolis teems with hordes of lower-class merchants and pedestrians, who inhabit the streets at all hours. Except for huge, garish neon billboards, fog and darkness pervade the city, suggesting that urban centers in the future will have no daylight hours. This pessimistic view is in sharp contrast to the sterile, brightly lit sets found in conventional science-fiction films. Inherent in the set design is a critique of our society, which has allowed its environment to be destroyed. The overwrought set design also complements the feverish attempts by a group of androids to find the secret to longer life. Blade Runner influenced the genre with its dystopian depiction of the future, though the cluttered set design and low-key lighting were used earlier by Scott in the science-fiction thriller Alien. Legend, a fairy tale complete with elves, goblins, and unicorns, employs a simple theme of good and evil that is reinforced through images of light and darkness. The magical unicorns, for example, have coats of the purest white; an innocent, virginal character is costumed in flowing, white gowns; sunbeams pour over glades of white flowers; and light shimmers across silver streams as the unicorns gallop through the forest. In contrast, a character called Darkness (actually the Devil) looks magnificently evil in an array of blood reds and wine colors; the sinister Darkness resides in the dark, dismal bowels of the Earth, where no light is allowed to enter; and a corrupted world is symbolized by a charred forest devoid of flowers and leaves and black clouds that cover the sky. The forest set was constructed entirely inside the studio and is reminiscent of those huge indoor sets created for Fritz Lang’s Siegfried. In Black Rain, Scott once again reinforced the film’s theme through its mise-en-scène, though here he made extensive use of actual locations instead of relying so much on studio sets. Black Rain follows the story of two New York detectives tracking a killer through the underworld of Osaka, Japan. The two characters are frequently depicted against the backdrop of Osaka’s ornate neon signs and ultramodern architecture. Shot through a telephoto lens and lit from behind, the characters seem crushed against the huge set design, which serves as a metaphor for their struggle to penetrate the culture in order to track their man.

Though Scott has forged a style that is recognizably his own, his approach to filmmaking has a precedent in German Expressionist filmmaking. The Expressionists were among the first to use the elements of mise-en-scène (set design, lighting, props, costuming) to suggest traits of character or enhance meaning. Similarly, Scott’s techniques are stunning yet highly artificial, a trait often criticized by American reviewers, who too often value plot and character over visual style, and realism over symbolism.

Scott’s more recent films, especially Thelma and Louise, suggest that his strongest quality all along has been an ability to create film myths that resonate in viewers’ minds for years afterwards. The Duellists continues to be a haunting film despite the actors’ inadequate performances, not just because of the splendidly romantic cinematography but because of the starkness of the tale itself (from Joseph Conrad); and Alien, with its own duel between a no-nonsense heroine and a hidden evil, continues to be an object of critical study, feminist and otherwise. Blade Runner, perhaps most of all of Scott’s films, has seized the imagination of both movie fans and scholarly theoreticians: a 1991 volume of critical studies of the film contains a 44-page annotated bibliography, and this is before the theatrical release of the “Director’s Cut,” which had aficionados debating the merits of its eliminating Deckard’s noiresque voiceovers and the hopeful green hills at the end, and of adding a brief shot of a unicorn. One might attribute the relative failures of Someone to Watch over Me and Black Rain, despite their visual swank, to their inability to transcend tired generic conventions, while the more recent 1492: The Conquest of Paradise seems most successful in its mythic moments—notably Columbus’s first glimpse of the New World as mists sweep aside—rather than in its efforts to document the Spanish extermination of native peoples while partially exonerating Columbus himself.

——Susan Doll, updated by Joseph Milicia

SEIDELMAN, Susan

Films as Director:

1976–77 And You Act like One (short); Deficit (short); Yours Truly, Andrea G. Stern (short)
1982 Smithereens (+ pr, story)
1985 Desperately Seeking Susan
1987 Making Mr. Right (+ exec pr)
1989 Cookie (+ sc); She-Devil (+ co-pr)
1992 Confessions of a Suburban Girl (+ ro)
1995 The Dutch Master (short, released as episode in Tales of Erotica in 1996 (+ co-sc); The Barefoot Executive (for TV)
1999 A Cooler Climate (for TV)
2000 Gaudi Afternoon

Other Films:

1982 Chambre 666 (Wenders—for TV) (doc) (appearance)
1993 The Night We Never Met (Leight) (co-assoc pr)

Publications

By SEIDELMAN: articles—

Interview with Richard Patterson, in American Cinematographer (Los Angeles), May 1983
Interview with Dan Yakir, in Film Comment (New York), May/June 1985.
Interview with Peter Goldin, in Films in Review (New York), June/July 1985
‘‘Celine and Julie, Susan and Susan,’’ interview with Jane Root, in Stills (London), October 1985.
Interview with R. Censi and G.A. Nazarro, in Cineforum (Bergamo, Italy), October 1992.

On SEIDELMAN: book—

On SEIDELMAN: articles—

Hachem, S., ‘‘Susan Seidelman,’’ in Millimeter (New York), August 1983.

Jaehne, K., ‘‘In Search of Susan,’’ in Stills (London), May 1985.
Current Biography (New York), 1990.
Cook, Pam, ‘‘Good Girl/Bad Girl— Susan Seidelman,’’ in Monthly Film Bulletin (London), May 1990.
Atkinson, M., ‘‘Armed (with Cameras) and Dangerous,’’ in Movieline (Los Angeles), August 1995.

* * *

Prior to directing Smithereens, her breakthrough independent feature, and Desperately Seeking Susan, the film that announced her as a major cinematic talent, Susan Seidelman made Deficit, a 40-minute drama about a young man who seeks revenge for a crime committed against his father. The film was funded in part by the American Film Institute Independent Filmmaker Program. Call it understatement or prophecy, but a comment on the film’s evaluation form portended Seidelman’s future: ‘‘The filmmaker shows a budding talent as a feature film director.’’

That talent was realized in Smithereens and Desperately Seeking Susan. Both are likably funky and keenly observed films featuring spirited, independent-minded but refreshingly unromanticized heroines: refugees from stifling suburbia who come to New York City’s East Village where they forge identities within a subculture. Both films are knowing depictions of 1980s New York punk/New Wave/No Wave culture, and are clearly defined observations of hipness and pseudo-hipness.

Smithereens, made for $80,000, is a minor landmark in the history of the then-burgeoning American independent film movement; for one thing, it was the first such film accepted as an official in-competition entry at the Cannes Film Festival. Smithereens benefits from its low budget, which allows it an authentic feel for time and place. Its heroine is Wren, a rootless 19-year-old whose motto might be ‘‘Desperately Seeking Celebrity.’’ She lives in a shabby East Village apartment, from which she is evicted for non-payment of rent; she may be energetic and determined, but her dreams of achieving fame, which are connected to the rock music industry and an idealized Southern California lifestyle, are hazy at best. Instead of educating herself and working to realize her dreams, Wrenastes photocopies of herself on subway car and station walls and attempts to link up with a rock singer whom she foolishly regards as a meal ticket. She will say and do anything and manipulate anyone, even if the result is her own debasement. Her rationale for her behavior is a line she repeats throughout the scenario: ‘‘I got a million and one places to go.’’

Seidelman entered the realm of mainstream filmmaking with her follow-up feature: Desperately Seeking Susan, a stylish screwball comedy that remained faithful to the feeling of its predecessor and became a surprise box-office smash. In retrospect, it is one of the more entertaining films of the mid-1980s. There are two heroines in Desperately Seeking Susan. The first is Roberta, a bored suburban housewife who sets out on a comic odyssey upon becoming intrigued by a series of ‘‘Desperately Seeking Susan’’ personal ads. Roberta’s counterpart, the Susan of the title, is a variation of Wren. She is a homeless but nonetheless ultra-hip East Village free spirit who has various boyfriends and sexual liaisons, and who will think nothing of pilfering jewelry or stiffing a taxi driver. Roberta and Susan become immersed in a frantic, funny scenario involving mistaken identity, amnesia, and other plot devices. Desperately Seeking Susan is especially successful in capturing the appeal of Madonna, who plays the title role and who then was blossoming as one of the era’s elite pop stars. Prior to her playing Evita twelve years later, Susan was her preeminent screen role.

Unfortunately, Desperately Seeking Susan was to be a career apex for Seidelman; it and Smithereens are her foremost films to date. The clever female-oriented humor that worked so well in Desperately Seeking Susan simply is missing from Making Mr. Right, which attempts to squeeze laughs out a supposedly successful career woman’s inability to walk in high heels. The scenario (which is set in Miami Beach) has the heroine realizing she only can find true love with a robot. In Smithereens and Desperately Seeking Susan, the male characters run the gamut from boring and self-involved to sympathetic. In Making Mr. Right, the view of men is horribly clichéd and mean-spirited, and downright offensive in that a real man is insufficient as the heroine’s romantic partner. Furthermore, the robot, which she has helped program, comes apart whenever it makes love.

In She-Devil, Seidelman directed one of the era’s most distinguished film actresses (Meryl Streep) and popular television comedienne (Roseanne), and worked from an acclaimed feminist novel: Fay Weldon’s The Life and Loves of a She-Devil. But the result, involving a frumpy housewife who seeks revenge after her husband leaves her, is slight and predictable. Cookie, which like She-Devil was scripted by Nora Ephron (working with Alice Arlen), is the story of a cheeky adolescent who forges a relationship with her mafioso father upon his release from jail. But the film was strictly formulaic, and paled beside Seidelman’s earlier work. In these three films, the feeling is that Seidelman abandoned her New York artistic roots, and in so doing lost her way as an idiosyncratic filmmaker.

Seidelman’s work in the 1990s at least was considered respectable, even if it did not establish her as an A-list filmmaker. The luridly named Confessions of a Suburban Girl, whose title seems an attempted thematic throwback to Smithereens and Desperately Seeking Susan, actually is a revealing documentary account of the filmmaker and several of her friends as they parallel their youthful aspirations to the reality of their adult lives. The Dutch Master, a short film (which earned a Best Live Action Short Oscar nomination), is the story of a New York dental hygienist who becomes fascinated by, and begins fantasizing about, a 17th-century painting. As the decade closed, Seidelman could be found directing for television. Her credits include episodes of the TV series Sex in the City and Now and Again, and a pair of very different TV movies: The Barefoot Executive, a remake of the 1971 Disney kiddie comedy; and A Cooler Climate, a chronicle of the evolving relationship between two disparate middle-aged women.

If you are, say, Steven Spielberg or Barry Levinson and you choose to latch onto a television series, that involvement will be viewed as slumming. Or if you are Martin Scorsese or Woody Allen and you direct a short, that work will be considered an exercise in creativity. But if you are Susan Seidelman, and you haven’t had a critical or commercial hit in well over a decade, your TV work and creativity. But if you are Susan Seidelman, and you haven’t had a critical or commercial hit in well over a decade, your TV work and creativity. But if you are Susan Seidelman, and you haven’t had a critical or commercial hit in well over a decade, your TV work and creativity. But if you are Susan Seidelman, and you haven’t had a critical or commercial hit in well over a decade, your TV work and creativity. But if you are Susan Seidelman, and you haven’t had a critical or commercial hit in well over a decade, your TV work and Tellingly, The Dutch Master was released commercially, along with three other shorts, under the throwaway title Tales of Erotica. It was paired with films by Ken Russell, Melvin Van Peebles, and Bob Rafelson—who, like Seidelman, are once-innovative filmmakers whose foremost works most likely are in their past.

—Rob Edelman

Sembene, Ousmane

Nationality: Senegalese. Born: at Ziguinchor, Senegal, 8 January 1923. Military Service: Joined Free French Forces fighting in Africa, 1942, demobilized at Marseilles, 1946. Career: Worked as mechanic, 1937–38; after military service, returned to Senegal, then moved to France, 1948; docker in Marseilles, and Secretary General of black workers organization in France; published first novel, Le Docker noir, 1956; returned to Senegal, 1960; studied cinema in Moscow under Sergei Gerasimov and Mark Donskoi, 1962; made first film, L’Empire Sonrai, 1963; founding editor, Kaddu newspaper, 1972. Awards: Dakar Festival of Negro Arts prize, 1966; Cannes Film Festival prize, 1967; Venice Film Festival prize, 1969; Atlanta Film Festival prize, 1970.

Films as Director and Scriptwriter:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>Songhays (L’Empire Sonrai) (documentary, unreleased); Borom Sarret</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1964</td>
<td>Niaye</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1965</td>
<td>La Noire de . . . (The Black Girl from . . . )</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1968</td>
<td>Mandabi (The Money Order)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1970</td>
<td>Taw (Taw)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1971</td>
<td>* Emitai*</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1974</td>
<td>Xala (Impotence)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1977</td>
<td>Ceddo (The People)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

Ousmane Sembene
1987  Camp de Thiaroye
1992  Guelwaar

Other Film:
1983  Camera d’Afrique (Boughedir) (role)

Publications

By SEMBENE: books—

By SEMBENE: articles—

Interview with Guy Hennebelle, in Jeune Cinéma (Paris), November 1968.
“Film-Makers Have a Great Responsibility to our People,” interview with H. D. Weaver Jr., in Cineaste (New York), vol. 6, no. 1, 1973.
Interview with G. M. Perry, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1973.
Interview with C. Bosseno, in Image et Son (Paris), September 1979.
Interview with M. T. Oldani, in Filmcritica (Rome), June 1991.
Interview with E. Castiel, in Séquences (Montreal), July/August 1993.

On SEMBENE: books—

Gadjigo, Samba, editor, Ousmane Sembene: Dialogues with Critics and Writers, Amherst, Massachusetts, 1993.

On SEMBENE: articles—

Cervoni, A., in Cinématographe (Courbevoie), no. 4, 1996.
Vos, J. M. de, in Film en Televisie + Video (Brussels), April 1997.

* * *

Ousmane Sembene is one of the most important literary figures of sub-Saharan Africa and, at the same time, its premier filmmaker. Born in 1923 in Senegal, he received little formal education. His first literary work, autobiographical in nature, dates from 1956. It featured as its backdrop the port city of Marseilles, where he worked as a docker. Sembene came to film by necessity: painfully aware that he could not reach his largely illiterate compatriots by means of a written art form, he studied film in Moscow in 1961 and began to work in this medium shortly thereafter.

It is interesting and important to note that four of Sembene’s films are based on texts, written by Sembene, which first appeared as novels or short stories. Between 1963 and 1977 he produced eight films while publishing three works of fiction. Between 1963 and 1977 he produced eight films while publishing three works of fiction. Following his breakthrough for Sembene: it is his first film in color, but, more importantly, it is the first work to use an African language—in this case Wolof, rather than French—and this allowed him to reach his primary audience in an even more direct manner than possible. His use of African languages continues with the creation of Emitai, which is made in Diola. Emitai was the first full-length film by Sembène which was not an adaptation of a written text.

The conditions of filmmaking in Africa are difficult and the lack of trained personnel and financial support have discouraged many African artists from working in this medium. Sembène has managed to overcome these problems and has even made a virtue of certain necessities: his almost exclusive reliance on non-professional actors and actresses, including those playing leading roles, is an example of this. He is thus able to increase both the general force of the film—the audience can more easily identify with his actors than with “stars”—and testify to his belief in the common man and the collective heroism of the masses.

Sembène’s films are not innovative in a technical sense; instead, their power and critical success stem from their compelling portraits of Third World men and women struggling against forces, both internal and external, which threaten their dignity and, in fact, their very existence. Sembène clearly sees himself as a Marxist-Leninist and sees art as necessarily both functional and politically committed. But this does not mean that he is a mere propagandist and, in fact, his art transcends narrow definition. His art is clearly African in character despite his extensive contacts with the West; the filmmaker is the griot, recording the history of his society, criticizing its faults, finding strength in its people in the face of the denigration of African society and culture inherent in all forms of colonialism.

—Curtis Schade

SEN, Mrinal

Nationality: Indian. Born: East Bengal (now Bangladesh), 4 May 1923. Education: Studied physics in Calcutta. Family: Married Gita Shome, 1953; one son. Career: Freelance journalist and medical representative in Uttar Pradesh; involved with Indian People’s Theatre Association, sponsored by Communist Party of India, 1943–47; directed first film, Raat Bhore, 1956; jury member at numerous international film festivals; chairman of Gov. Council Film and Television Institute of India, 1983–85. Awards: Silver Bear, Berlin Festival, for Akaler Sandhane, 1981.

Films as Director:

(in Bengali unless indicated)

1956 Raat Bhore (The Dawn; Night’s End)
1959 Neel Akasher Neechey (Under the Blue Sky)
1960 Baishey Shravana (The Wedding Day)
1961 Punnascha (Over Again)
1962 Abasheshey (And at Last)
1964 Pratinidhi (The Representative; Two Plus One)
1965 Akash Kasum (Up in the Clouds)
1967 Matira Manisha (Two Brothers) (+ co-sc, in Bengali); Moving Perspectives (doc)
1969 Bhuvan Shome (Mr. Shome) (+ pr, sc, in Hindi)
1970 Ichhuipran (The Wish-Fulfillment) (+ sc, in Bengali, also Hindi version)
1971 Interview
1972 Calcutta 71 (+ sc); Ek Adhuri Kahani (An Unfinished Story)
1973 Patadik (The Guerrilla Fighter)
1974 Chorus
1976 Mrigaya (The Royal Hunt) (+ co-sc, in Hindi)
1977 Oka Orie Katha (The Outsiders) (+ co-sc, in Telugu)
1978 Parashuram (The Man with the Axe)
1979 Ek Din Pratidin (And Quiet Rolls the Dawn)
1980 Akaler Sandhane (In Search of Famine)
1981 Chalachitra (The Kaleidoscope)
1982 Kharij (The Case Is Closed)
1983 Khandahar (The Ruins)
1985 Tasveer Apni Apni
1986 Genesis
1989 Ek din achakan (+ sc)
1990 Calcutta, My El Dorado (doc) (+ pr)
1991 World Within, World Without 1992 Mahaprithivi (+ sc)
1994 The Confined (+ sc)

Publications

By SEN: books—

By SEN: articles—

Interview with S. S. Chakravarty, in Ciné-Tracts (Montreal), 1981.

On SEN: books—

On SEN: articles—

Young, Deborah, “And the Show Goes On—Indian Chapter,” in Variety (New York), 21 October 1996.

On SEN: film—

* * *

Mrinal Sen’s work is distinguished by the attention he pays to the lives of the underprivileged in India. The style of his films varies considerably, and even within individual films his achievement is uneven, but the body of his work adds up to an important attempt in India at making political films, films which point to prevailing injustices and urge people to change society. Sen is India’s preeminent activist filmmaker.

Sen’s early films testify to the influences of the Italian neorealists and of Satyajit Ray’s first films. Sen filmed people at the ragged edge of society, using natural locations and employing non-professional actors. Nothing in his films touched up the drabness of poor villages. Unlike Ray, however, Sen’s attitude had less humanism in it than political urgency. In a strong film like Baishey Shrawana, Sen suggests that a bourgeois mentality makes bad conditions worse by interposing the claims of respectability on matters of survival.

Although Sen established a reputation in Bengal with Baishey Shrawana, he came to be known throughout India for the comic Bhuvan Shome, made in Hindi in 1969. The film describes a railway official’s encounter with the wife of a ticket collector under fire for accepting bribes. The prudish railway official (played in a restrained slapstick manner by Utpal Dutt) is charmed by a country girl while on holiday in Gujarat and only later discovers that the girl is married to the offending ticket collector. The film is shot among sand dunes and sugarcane fields and reveals Sen’s skill at sustaining a simple narrative. To some critics, Bhuvan Shome remains Sen’s best film, an example of his little-used talents as a confectioner of cinema.

Conditions of near civil war in Calcutta in the late 1960s led to three Sen films known as the Calcutta trilogy—Interview, Calcutta 71, and Padatik. In these films, Sen moved away from the surface realism of his previous work, turning instead to allegorical characters and symbolic utterances. Sen returned to conventional narrative with the Hindi film Mrigaya in 1976. Since that time he has continued to present stories about marginal people, framing the story so that the viewer is led to discover his or her own complicity with oppression.

In 1980 Sen directed Akaler Sandhane, which describes the adventure of a film crew out to film a story about the Bengal famine of 1943. The villages in which the crew works are no more prosperous in 1980 than they were forty years before; an afternoon’s shopping for the film team cleans out the village vegetable market. Akaler Sandhane is intensively effective in its portrayal of the film-within-film. At one point the actors recreate the dire poverty of a disabled peasant’s household. The wife has sold herself to the landlord in order to bring home a potful of rice. Sen cuts from a chilling night scene of the lame husband beating his wife to the crowd of onlookers; it is an open question whether the dissipation of intensity which follows this distancing serves a necessary political purpose.

Communist critics generally favor Sen’s work; liberal critics point to characteristic weakness of structure. But Sen’s compassion and energy are never contested. In film after film he probes the fate of those people—tribals (Mrigaya), outcasts (Oka Oorie Katha), pavement dwellers (Parashuram), working women (Ek Din Pratidin), servants (Kharij)—who are treated as if they were sub-human. Sen’s more recent films affect a subdued tone and, unlike the Calcutta trilogy, trust the audience to draw its own moral from the films. Outside of India, too, critics discern a new phase of maturity in Sen’s work of the 1990s.

—Satti Khanna

---

Sennett, Mack

Nationality: Canadian. Born: Mikall (Michael) Sinnott in Danville, Quebec, 17 January 1880. Career: Burlesque performer and chorus boy on Broadway, 1902–08; actor in Biograph films, 1908–10; director of Biograph shorts, from 1910, moved to Hollywood; formed Keystone Production Company with Charles Bauman and Adam Kessel, 1912; Keystone absorbed into Triangle Film Corporation with Thomas Ince and D.W. Griffith’s production companies, 1915; formed production company Mack Sennett Comedies following collapse of Triangle, 1917, though films released by Paramount; associated with Pathé, 1923–28, and with Educational Films, 1929–32, also returned to directing; producer and director of shorts for Paramount, from 1932, and experimented with early color process called “Natural Color”; returned to Educational Films, 1935, then retired to Canada; held nominal position at 20th Century-Fox from 1939. Awards: Special Oscar for contributions to screen comedy, 1937. Died: 1960.

Films as Director:

1910 The Lucky Toothache (+ sc, role); The Masher (+ sc, role)

1911 Comrades (+ role); Priscilla’s April Fool Joke, Cured; Priscilla and the Umbrella; Cupid’s Joke, Misplaced Jealousy; The Country Lovers; The Mincuere Lady (+ role); Curiosity; A Dutch Gold Mine (+ role); Dave’s Love Affair; Their Fates Sealed, Bearded Youth, The Delayed Proposal, *Stabbs’
New Servants; The Wonderful Eye; The Jealous Husband; The Ghost; Jinks Joins the Temperance Club; Mr. Peck Goes Calling; The Beautiful Voice; That Dare Devil (+ role); An Interrupted Game; The Diving Girl; $500,000 Reward (+ role); The Baron; The Villain Foiled; The Village Hero (+ role); The Lucky Horseshoe; A Convenient Burglar; When Wifey Holds the Purse Strings; Too Many Burglars; Mr. Bragg; A Fugitive; Trailing the Counterfeit (+ role); Josh’s Suicide; Through His Wife’s Picture; The Inventor’s Secret; A Victim of Circumstances; Their First Divorce Case (+ role); Dooley Scheme; Won through a Medium; Resourceful Lovers; Her Mother Interferes; Why He Gave Up; Abe Gets Even with Father; Taking His Medicine; Her Pet; Caught with the Goods (+ role); A Mix-up in Raincoats; The Joke on the Joker; Who Got the Reward; Brave and Bold; Did Mother Get Her Wash; With a Kodak; Pants and Pansies; A Near-Tragedy; Lily’s Lovers; The Fatal Chocolate (+ role); Got a Match; A Message from the Moon; Priscilla’s Capture; A Spanish Dilemma (+ role); The Engagement Ring; A Voice from the Deep; Hot Stuff; Oh, Those Eyes; Those Bicksville Boys; Their First Kidnapping Case (+ role); Help, Help; The Brave Hunter; Won by a Fish; The Leading Man; The Fickle Spaniard; When the Fire Bells Rang; The Furs; A Close Call; Helen’s Marriage; Tomboy Bessie; Algy, the Watchman; Katchen Kate; Neighbors; A Dash through the Clouds; The New Baby; Trying to Fool; One Round O’Brien; The Speed Demon; His Own Fault; The Would Be Shriner (+ role);

Willie Becomes an Artist; The Tourists; What the Doctor Ordered; An Interrupted Elopement; The Tragedy of a Dress Suit; Mr. Grouch at the Seashore; Through Dumb Luck

1912 Cohen Collects a Debt (Cohen at Coney Island) (+ pr); The Water Nymph (+ pr); Riley and Schultz (+ pr); The New Neighbor (+ pr); The Beating He Needed (+ pr); Pedro’s Dilemma (+ pr, role); Stolen Glory (+ pr, role); The Ambitious Butler (+ pr, role); The Flirting Husband (+ pr); The Grocery Clerk’s Romance (+ pr); At Coney Island (+ pr, role); Mabel’s Lovers (+ pr); At It Again (+ pr, role); The Deacon’s Troubles (+ pr); A Temperamental Husband (+ pr); The Rivals (+ pr, role); Mr. (+ pr, role); A Desperate Lover (+ pr); A Bear Escape (+ pr, role); Pat’s Day Off (+ pr, role); Brown’s Seance (+ pr); A Family Mixup (+ pr, role); A Midnight Elopement (+ pr); Mabel’s Adventures (+ pr); Useful Sheep (+ pr); Hoffmeier’s Legacy (+ pr); The Drummer’s Vacation (+ pr); The Duel (+ pr, role); Mabel’s Strategem (+ pr)

1913 Saving Mabel’s Dad (+ pr); A Double Wedding (+ pr); The Cure That Failed (+ pr); How Hiram Won Out (+ pr); For Lizzie’s Sake (+ pr); Sir Thomas Lipton out West (+ pr); The Mistaken Masher (+ pr, role); The Deacon Outwitted (+ pr); The Elite Ball (+ pr); Just Brown’s Luck (+ pr); The Battle of Who Run (+ pr, role); The Jealous Waiter (+ pr); The Stolen Purse (+ pr, role); Mabel’s Heroes (+ pr, role); Her Birthday Present (+ pr); Heinz’s Resurrection (+ pr); A Landlord’s Troubled (+ pr); Forced Bravery (+ pr); The Professor’s Daughter (+ pr); A Tangled Affair (+ pr); A Red Hot Romance (+ pr); A Doctored Affair (+ pr); The Sleuth’s Last Stand (+ pr, role); A Deaf Burglar (+ pr); The Sleuths at the Floral Parade (+ pr, role); A Rural Third Degree (+ pr); A Strong Revenge (+ pr, role); The Two Widows (+ pr); Foiling Fickle Father (+ pr); Love and Pain (+ pr); The Man Next Door (+ pr); A Wife Wanted (+ pr); The Rube and the Baron (+ pr, role); Jenny’s Pearls (+ pr); The Chief’s Predicament (+ pr); At Twelve O’Clock (+ pr); Her New Beau (+ pr, role); On His Wedding Day (+ pr); The Land Salesman (+ pr); Hide and Seek (+ pr); Those Good Old Days (+ pr); A Game of Poker (+ pr); Father’s Choice (+ pr); A Life in the Balance (+ pr); Murphy’s I.O.U. (+ pr); A Dollar Did It (+ pr); Cupid in the Dental Parlor (+ pr); A Fishy Affair (+ pr); The Bangville Police (+ pr); The New Conductor (+ pr); His Chum, the Baron (+ pr); That Ragtime Band (+ pr); Algie on the Force (+ pr); His Ups and Downs (+ pr); The Darktown Belle (+ pr); A Little Hero (+ pr); Mabel’s Awful Mistake (+ pr, role); The Foreman and the Jury (+ pr); The Gangster (+ pr); Barney Oldfield’s Race for a Life (+ pr, role); Passions—He Had Three (+ pr); Help! Help! Hydrophobia! (+ pr); The Hansom Driver (+ pr, role); The Speed Queen (+ pr); The Waiter’s Picnic (+ pr); The Tale of the Black Eye (+ pr); Out and In (+ pr); A Bandit (+ pr); Peeping Pete (+ pr); His Crooked Career (+ pr, role); For Love of Mabel (+ pr); Safe in Jail (+ pr); The Telltale Light (+ pr); Love and Rubbish (+ pr); A Noise from the Deep (+ pr); The Peddler (+ pr); Love and Courage (+ pr); Professor Bean’s Removal (+ pr); Cohen’s Outing (+ pr); The Firebugs (+ pr); Baby Day (+ pr); Mabel’s New Hero (+ pr); Mabel’s Dramatic Career (+ pr, role); The Gypsy Queen (+ pr); Willie Minds the Dog (+ pr); When Dreams Come True (+ pr); Mother’s Boy (+ pr); The 1914 The Bride’s Relation (+ pr); The Old Barn (+ pr); Whirls and Girls (+ pr); Broadway Blues (+ pr); The Bee’s Buzz (+ pr); Girl Crazy (+ pr); The Barber’s Daughter (+ pr); Jazz Mamas (+ pr); The New Bankroll (+ pr); The Constable (+ pr); Midnight Daddies (+ pr); The Lunkhead (+ pr); The Golfers (+ pr); A Hollywood Star (+ pr); Scotch (+ pr); Sugar Plum Papa (+ pr); Bulls and Bears (+ pr); Match Play (+ pr); Honeymoon Zeppelin (+ pr); Fat Wives for Thin (+ pr); Campus Crushes (+ pr); The Chumps (+ pr); Goodbye Legs (+ pr); Average Husband (+ pr); Vacation Loves (+ pr); The Bluffer (+ pr); Grandma’s Girl (+ pr); Divorced Sweethearts (+ pr); Racketeers (+ pr); Rough Idea of Love (+ pr)

1932 Hypnotized (+ pr, sc)

1935 Ye Olde Saw Mill (+ pr, sc); Flicker Fever (+ pr); Just Another Murder (+ sc, pr); The Timid Young Man (+ pr); Way Up Thar (+ pr)

Other Films:

(incomplete list)

1908 Balked at the Altar (Griffith) (role); Father Gets in the Game (Griffith) (role); The Song of the Shirt (Griffith) (role); Mr. Jones at the Ball (Griffith) (role)

1909 Mr. Jones Has a Card Party (Griffith) (role); The Curtain Pole (Griffith) (role); The Politician’s Love Story (Griffith) (role); The Lonely Villa (Griffith) (role); The Way of a Man (Griffith) (role); The Slave (Griffith) (role); Pippa Passes (Griffith) (role); The Gibson Goddess (Griffith) (role); Nursing a Viper (Griffith) (role)

1910 The Dancing Girl of Butte (Griffith) (role); All on Account of the Milk (Griffith) (role); The Englishman and the Girl (Griffith) (role); The Newlyweds (Griffith) (role); An Affair of Hearts (Griffith) (role); Never Again! (Griffith) (role); The Call to Arms (Griffith) (role); An Arcadian Maid (Griffith) (role)

1911 The Italian Barber (Griffith) (role); Paradise Lost (Griffith) (role); The White Rose of the Wilds (Griffith) (role); The Last Drop of Water (Griffith) (role)

1912 The Brave Hunter (role)

1913 Their First Execution (pr); Hubby’s Job (pr); Betwixt Love and Fire (pr); Toplitsky and Company (pr); Feeding Time (pr); Largest Boat Ever Launched Sidewalks (pr); Rastus and the Game-Cock (pr); Get Rich Quick (pr); Just Kids (pr); A Game of Pool (pr); The Latest in Life Saving (pr); A Chip off the Old Block (pr); The Kelp Industry (pr); Fatty’s Day Off (pr); Los Angeles Harbour (pr); The New Baby (pr); What Father Saw (pr); The Faithful Taxicab (pr); Billy Dodies Bills (pr); Across the Alley (pr); The Abalone Industry (pr); Schnitz the Tailor (pr); Their Husbands (pr); A Healthy Neighborhood (pr); Two Old Tars (pr); A Quiet Little Wedding (pr); The Janitor (pr); The Making of an Automobile Tire (pr); Fatty at San Diego (pr); A Small Town Act (pr); The Milk We Drink (pr); Wine (pr); Our Children (pr); Fatty Joins the Force (pr); The Woman Haters (pr); The Rogues’ Gallery (pr); The San Francisco Celebration (pr); A Ride for a Bride (pr); The Horse Thief (pr); The Gusher (pr); Fatty’s Flirtation (pr); Protecting San Francisco from Fire (pr); His Sister’s Kids (pr); A Bad Game (pr); Some Nerve (pr); The Champion (pr); He Would A Hunting Go (pr)

1914 A Misplaced Foot (pr); A Glimpse of Los Angeles (pr); Love and Dynamite (pr); Mabel’s Stormy Love Affair (pr); The Under Sheriff (pr); A Flirt’s Mistake (pr); How Motion Pictures Are Made (pr); Too Many Brides (pr); Won in a Closet (pr); Rebecca’s Wedding Day (pr); Little Billy Triumphs (pr); Mabel’s Bare Escape (pr); Making A Living (pr); Little Billy’s Strategy (pr); Kid Auto Races at Venice (pr); Olives and Their Oil (pr); A Robust Romeo (pr); Raffles (pr); Gentleman Burglar (pr); A Chief Catcher (pr); Twist Love and Fire (pr); Little Billy’s City Cousin (pr); Between Showers (pr); A Film Johnnie (pr); Tango Tangles (pr); His Favorite Pastime (pr); A Rural Demon (pr); The Race (How Villains Are Made) (pr); Across the Hall (pr); Cruel, Cruel Love (pr); Barnyard Flirtations (pr); A Back Yard Theater (pr); Chicken Chaser (pr); The Star Boarder (pr); Fatal High (pr); The Passing of Izy (pr); A Bathing Beauty (A Bathhouse Beauty) (pr); Twenty Minutes of Love (pr); Where Hazel Met the Villain (pr); Bowery Boys (pr); Caught in a Cabaret (pr); When Villains Wait (pr); Caught in the Rain (pr); A Busy Day (pr); The Morning Papers (pr); A Suspended Ordeal (pr); Finnegan’s Bomb (pr); Mabel’s Nerve (pr); The Water Dog (pr); When Reuben Fooled the Bandits (pr); Acres of Alfalfa (pr); Our Large Birds (pr); The Fatal Flirtation (pr); The Alarm (pr); The Fatal Mallet (pr); Her Friend the Bandit (pr); Our Country Cousin (pr); Mabel’s Busy Day (pr); A Gambling Rube (pr); A Missing Bride (pr); Mabel’s Married Life (pr); The Eavesdropper (pr); Fatty and the Heiress (pr); Caught in Tight (pr); Fatty’s Finish (pr); Love and Bullets (pr); Row-Boat Romance (pr); Laughing Gas (pr); Love and Salt Water (pr); World’s Oldest Living Thing (pr); Mabel’s New Job (pr); The Sky Pirate (pr); The Fatal Sweet Tooth (pr); Those Happy Days (pr); The Great Toe Mystery (pr); Soldiers of Misfortune (pr); The Property Man (pr, role); A Coat’s Tale (pr); The Face on the Barroom Floor (pr); Recreation (pr); The Yosemite (pr); Such a Cook (pr); That Minstrel Man (pr); Those Country Kids (pr); Caught in a Flue (pr); Fatty’s Gift (pr); The Masquerader (pr); Her Last Chance (pr); His New Profession (pr); The Baggage Smasher (pr); A Brand New Hero (pr); The Rounders (pr); Mabel’s Latest Prank (pr); Mabel’s Blunder (pr); All at Sea (pr); Bombs and Bangs (pr); Lover’s Luck (pr); He Loved the Ladies (pr); The New Janitor (pr); Fatty’s Debut (pr); Hard Cider (pr); Killing Hearts (pr); Fatty Again (pr); Their Ups and Downs (pr); Hello Mabel (pr); Those Love Pangs (pr); The Anglers (pr); The High Spots on Broadway (pr); Zipp, the Dodger (pr); Dash, Love and Splash (pr); Santa Catalina Islands (pr); The Love Thief (pr); Stout Heart but Weak Knees (pr); Shot in the Excitement (pr); Doug and Dynamite (pr); Gentlemen of Nerve (pr); Lovers’ Post Office (pr); Curses! They Remarked (pr); His Musical Career (pr); His Trysting Place (pr); An Incompetent Hero (pr); How Heroes Are Made (pr); Fatty’s Jonah Day (pr); The Noise of Bombs (pr); Fatty’s Wine Party (pr); His Taking Ways (pr); The Sea Nymphs (pr); His Halted Career (pr); Among the Mourners (pr); Leading Lizzie Astray (pr); Shotguns That Kick (pr); Getting Acquainted (pr); Other People’s Business (pr); His Prehistoric Past (pr); The Plumber (pr); Ambrose’s First Falsehood (pr); Fatty’s Magic Pants (pr); Hogan’s Annual Spree (pr); A Colored Girl’s Love (pr); Wild West Love (pr); Fatty and Minnie-He-Haw (pr); His Second Childhood (pr); Gussie the Golfer (pr); Hogan’s Wild Oats (pr); A Steel Rolling Mill (pr); The Knockout (Chaplin) (role)

1915 A Dark Lover’s Play (pr); Hushing the Scandal (pr); His Winning Punch (pr); U.S. Army in San Francisco (pr); Giddy, Gay and Ticklish (pr); Only A Farmer’s Daughter (pr); Rum and Wall Paper (pr); Mabel’s and Fatty’s Wash Day (pr); Hash House Mashers (pr); Love, Speed, and Thrills (pr); Mabel and Fatty’s Simple Life (pr); Hogan’s Messy Job (pr); Fatty and Mabel at the San Diego Exposition (pr); Colored Villainy (pr); Mabel, Fatty and the Law (pr); Peanuts and Bullets (pr); The Home Breakers (pr); Fatty’s New Role (pr); Hogan the Porter (pr); Caught in the Park (pr); A Bird’s a Bird (pr); Hogan’s Romance Upset (pr); Hogan’s Aristocratic Dream (pr); Ye Olden Grafters (pr); A Glimpse of the San Diego Exposition (pr); A Lucky Leap (pr); That Springtime Fellow (pr); Hogan out West (pr); Ambrose’s Sour Grapes (pr); Wilful Ambrose (pr); Fatty’s Reckless Fling (pr); From Patches to Plenty (pr); Fatty’s Chance Acquaintance (pr); Love in Armor (pr); Beating Hearts and Carpets (pr); That Little Band of Gold (pr); Ambrose’s Little Hatchet (pr); Fatty’s Faithful Fido (pr); A One Night Stand (pr); Ambrose’s Fury (pr); Gussie’s Day of Rest (pr); When Love Took Wings (pr); Ambrose’s Lofty Perch (pr); Dropington’s Devilish Dream (pr); The Rent Jumpers (pr); Dropington’s Family Tree (pr); The Beauty Banglers (pr); Do-Re-Mi-Fa (pr); Ambrose’s Nasty Temper (pr); Fatty and Mabel Viewing the World’s Fair at San Francisco (pr); Love, Lost, and Crash (pr); Gussie Rivals Jonah (pr); Their Social Splash (pr); A Bear Affair (pr); Mabel’s Wilful Way (pr); Gussie’s Backward Way (pr); A Human Hound’s Triumph (pr); Our Dare Devil Chief (pr); Crossed Love and Swords (pr); Mis Fatty’s Seaside Lover (pr); He Wouldn’t Stay Down (pr); For Better—But Worse (pr); A Versatile Villain (pr); Those College Girls (pr); Mabel Lost and Won (pr); Those Bitter Sweets (pr); The Cannon Ball (pr); A Home-Breaking Hound (pr); Foiled by Fido (pr); Court House Crooks (pr); When Ambrose Dared Walrus (pr); Dirty Work in a Laundry (pr); Fido’s Tin-Type Tangle (pr); A Lover’s Lost Control (pr); A Rascal of Wolfish Ways (pr); The Battle of Ambrose and Walrus (pr); Only a Messenger Boy (pr); Caught in the Act (pr); His Luckless Love (pr); Viewing Sherman Institute for Indians at Riverside (pr); Wished on Mabel (pr); Gussie’s Wayward Path (pr); Settled at the Seaside (pr); Gussie Tied to Trouble (pr); A Hash House Fraud (pr); Merely a Married Man (pr); A Game Old Knight (pr); Her Painted Hero (pr); Saved by Wireless (pr); Fickle Fatty’s Fall (pr); His Father’s Footsteps (pr); The Best of Enemies (pr); A Janitor’s Wife’s Temptation (pr); A Village Scandal (pr); The Great Vacuum Robbery (pr); Crooked to the End (pr); Fatty and the Broadway Stairs (pr, role); A Submarine Pirate (pr); The Hunt (pr)

1916 The Worst of Friends (pr); Dizzy Heights and Daring Hearts (pr); The Great Pearl Tangle (pr); Fatty and Mabel Adrift (pr); Because He Loved Her (pr); A Modern Enoch Arden (pr); Perils of the Park (pr); A Movie Star (pr); His Hereafter (pr); He Did and He Didn’t (Love and Lobsters) (pr); Love Will Conquer (pr); His Pride and Shame (pr); Fido’s Fate (pr); Better Late than Never (pr); Bright Lights (pr); Cinder’s Love (pr); Wife and Auto Troubles (pr); The Judge (pr); A Village Vampire (pr); The Village Blacksmith (pr); A Love Riot (pr); Gipsy Joe (pr); By Stork Delivery (pr); An Oil Scoundrel (pr); A Bathhouse Blunder (pr); His Wife’s Mistake (pr); His Bread and Butter (pr); His Last Laugh (pr); Bucking Society (pr); The Other Man (pr); The Snow Cure (pr); A Dash of outrage (pr); The Lion and the Girl (pr); His Bitter Pill (pr); Her Marble Heart (pr); Bathhtub Perils (pr); The Moonshiners (pr); Hearts and Sparks (pr); His Wild Oats (pr); Ambrose’s Cup of Woe (pr); The Waiter’s Ball (pr); The Surf Girl (pr); A Social Club (pr); Vampire Ambrose (pr); The Winning Punch (pr); His Lying Heart (pr); She Loved a Sailor (pr); His Auto Ruination (pr); Ambrose’s Rapid Rise (pr); His Busted Trust (pr); Tugboat Romeo (pr); Sunshine (pr); Her Feathered Nest (pr); No One to Guide Him (pr); Her First Beau (pr); His First False Step (pr); The Houseboat (pr); The Fire Chief (pr); Love on Skates (pr); His Alihi (pr); Love Comet (pr); A la Cabaret (pr); Haystacks and Steeples (pr); A Scoundrel’s Toll (pr); The Three Slims (pr); The Girl Guardian (pr); Wings and Wheels (pr); Safety First Ambrose (pr); Maid Mad (pr); The Twins (pr); Piles of Perils (pr); A Cream Puff Romance (pr); The Danger Girl (pr); Bombs (pr); His Last Scent (pr); The Manicurist (pr)

1917 The Nick of Time Baby (pr); Stars and Bars (pr); Maggie’s First False Step (pr); Villa of the Movies (pr); Dodging His Doom (pr); Her Circus Knight (pr); Her Fame and Shames (pr); Pinched in the Finish (pr); Her Nature Dance (pr); Teddy at the Throttle (pr); Secrets of a Beauty Parlor (pr); A Maiden’s Trust (pr); His Naughty Thought (pr); Her Torpedoed Love (pr); A Royal Rogue (pr); Oriental Love (pr); Cactus Nell (pr); The Betrayal of Maggie (pr); Skidding Hearts (pr); The Dog Catcher’s Love (pr); Whose Baby (pr); Dangers of a Bride (pr); A Clever Dummy (pr);
She Needed a Doctor (pr); Thirst (pr); His Uncle Dudley (pr); Lost a Cook (pr); The Pawnbroker’s Heart (pr); Two Crooks (pr); A Shanghaied Jonah (pr); His Precious Life (pr); Hula Hula Land (pr); The Late amended (pr); The Sultan’s Wife (pr); A Bedroom Blunder (pr); Roping Her Romeo (pr); The Pullman Bride (pr); Are Waitresses Safe (pr); An International Sneak (pr); That Night (pr); Taming Target Center (pr)

1918

The Kitchen Lady (pr); His Hidden Purpose (pr); Watch Your Neighbors (pr); It Pays to Exercise (pr); Sheriff Nell’s Tussle (pr); Those Athletic Girls (pr); Friend Husband (pr); Saucy Madeline (pr); His Smothered Love (pr); The Battle Royal (pr); Love Loops the Loop (pr); Two Tough Tenderfeet (pr); Her Screen Idol (pr); Ladies First (pr); Her Blighted Love (pr); She Loved Him Plenty (pr); The Summer Girls (pr); Mickey (pr); His Wife’s Friend (pr); Sleuths (pr); Beware the Boarders (pr); Whose Little Wife Are You (pr); Her First Mistake (pr); Hide and Seek Detectives (pr); The Village Chestnut (pr)

1919

Cupid’s Day Off (pr); Never Too Old (pr); Rip & Stitch, Tailors (pr); East Lynne with Variations (pr); The Village Smitty (pr); Reilly’s Wash Day (pr); The Foolish Age (pr); The Little Widow (pr); When Love Is Blind (pr); Love’s False Faces (pr); Hearts and Flowers (pr); No Mother to Guide Him (pr); Trying to Get Along (pr); Among Those Present (pr); Yankee Doodle in Berlin (pr); Why Beaches Are Popular (pr); Treating ‘em Rough (pr); A Lady’s Tailor (pr); Uncle Tom without the Cabin (pr); The Dentist (pr); Back to the Kitchen (pr); Up in Alf’s Place (pr); Salome vs. Shenandoah (pr); His Last False Step (pr); The Speak Easy (pr)

1920

The Star Boarder (pr); Ten Dollars or Ten Days (pr); Gee Whiz (pr); The Gingham Girl (pr); Down on the Farm (pr); Fresh from the City (pr); Let ‘er Go (pr); By Golly (pr); You Wouldn’t Believe It (pr); Married Life (pr); The Quack Doctor (pr); Great Scott (pr); Don’t Weaken (pr); It’s a Boy (pr); Young Man’s Fancy (pr); His Youthful Fancy (pr); My Goodness (pr); Movie Fans (pr); Fickle Fancy (pr); Love, Honor, and Behave (pr); A Fireside Brewer (Home Brew) (pr); Bangalor Troubles (pr)

1921

Dubbling in Art (pr); An Unhappy Finish (pr); On a Summer’s Day (pr); A Small Town Idol (pr, sc); Wedding Bells out of Tune (pr); Officer Cupid (pr); Away from the Steerage (Astray from the Steerage) (pr); Sweetheart Days (pr); Home Talent (pr, sc); She Sighed by the Seaside (pr); Hard Knocks and Love Taps (pr); Made in the Kitchen (pr); Call a Cop (pr); Love’s Outcast (pr); Molly O (pr, sc)

1922

By Heck (pr); Be Reasonable (pr); Bright Eyes (pr); The Duck Hunter (pr); On Patrol (pr); Step Forward (pr); Gymnasium Jim (pr); The Crossroads of New York (pr, sc); Oh Daddy! (pr); Home-made Movies (pr); Ma and Pa (pr); Bow Wow (pr); Love and Doughnuts (pr); When Summer Comes (pr)

1923

Suzanna (pr); The Shriek of Araby (pr, sc); Where Is My Wandering Boy This Evening (pr); Nip and Tuck (pr); Pitfalls of a Big City (pr); Skylarking (pr); Down to the Sea in Ships (pr); The Extra Girl (pr, co-sc); Asleep at the Switch (pr); One Cylinder Love (pr); The Dare-Devil (pr); Flip Flops (pr); Inbad the Sailor (pr)

1924

Ten Dollars or Ten Days (remake, pr); One Spooky Night (pr); Picking Peaches (pr); The Half-Back of Notre Dame (pr); Smile Please (pr); Scarem Mach (pr); Shanghaied Ladies (pr); The Hollywood Kid (pr); Flickering Youth (pr); Black Oxfords (pr); The Cat’s Meow (pr); Yukon Jake (pr); The Lion and the Souse (pr); His New Mama (pr); Romeo and Juliet (pr); Wall Street Blues (pr); The First Hundred Years (pr); East of the Water Plug (pr, sc); Lizzies of the Field (pr); The Luck of the Foolish (pr); Three Foolish Wives (pr); Little Robinson Corkscrew (pr); The Hansom Cabman (Be Careful) (pr); Riders of the Purple Cows (pr); The Rebel Virginian (The West Virginian) (pr); Galloping Bungalows (pr); All Night Long (pr); Love’s Sweet Pifile (pr); The Cannon Ball Express (pr); Feet of Mud (pr); Off His Trolley (pr); Bull and Sand (pr); Watch Out (pr); Over Here (pr); The Lady Barber (pr); North of 57 (pr); Love’s Intrigue (pr); The Stunt Man (pr)

1925

The Sea Squaw (pr); The Plumber (pr); The Wild Goose Chaser (pr); Honeymoon Hardships (pr); Boobs in the Woods (pr); The Beloved Bozo (pr); Water Wagons (pr); His Marriage Wow (pr); The Raspberry Romance (pr); Bashful Jim (pr); Giddap (pr); Plain Clothes (pr); Breaking the Ice (pr); The Marriage Circus (pr); The Lion’s Whiskers (pr); Remember When (pr); He Who Gets Smacked (pr); Skinners in Silk (pr); Good Morning, Nurse! (pr); Super-Hoopedy Lizzies (pr); Don’t Tell Dad (pr); Isn’t Love Cuckoo (pr); Sneezing Breezes (pr); Cupid’s Boots (pr); Tee for Two (pr); The Iron Nag (pr); Lucky Stars (pr); Cold Turkey (pr); Butter Fingers (pr); There He Goes (pr); Harry, Doctor (pr); A Rainy Knight (pr); Love and Kisses (pr); ver Thereabouts (pr); Good Morning, Madame (pr); A Sweet Pickle (pr); Dangerous Curves Behind (pr); The Soapsuds Lady (pr); Take Your Time (pr); The Window Dummy (pr); From Rags to Riches (pr); Hotsy Totsy (pr)

1926

The Gosh-Darn Mortgage (pr); Wide Open Faces (pr); Hot Cakes for Two (pr); Whispering Whiskers (pr); Saturday Afternoon (pr); Funnyoomers (pr); Trimmed in Gold (pr); Gooseland (pr); Circus Today (pr); Meet My Girl (pr); Spanking Breezes (pr); Wandering Willies (pr); Hooked at the Altar (pr); A Love Suicide (pr); Soldier Man (pr); The Ghost of Folly (pr); Fight Night (pr); Hayfoot, Strawfoot (pr); A Yankee Doodle Dude (pr); Muscle-bound Music (pr); Oh, Uncle! (pr); Puppy Lovetime (pr); Ice Cold Cocos (pr); A Dinner Jest (pr); A Sea Dog’s Tale (pr); Baby’s Pets (pr); A Bachelor Butt-in (pr); Smith’s Baby (pr); Alice Be Good (pr); When a Man’s a Prince (pr); Smith’s Vacation (pr); Hubby’s Quiet Little Game (pr); Her Actor Friend (pr); Hoboken to Hollywood (pr); The Prodigal Bridegroom (pr); The Perils of Petersboro (pr); Smith’s Landlord (pr); Love’s Last Laugh (pr); Smith’s Visitor (pr); Should Husbands Marry (pr); Masked Mamas (pr); A Harem Knight (pr); Smith’s Uncle (pr); Hesitating Houses (pr); The Divorce Dodger (pr); A Blonde’s Revenge (pr); Flirty Four-Flushers (pr); Smith’s Picnic (pr)

1927

Kitty from Killarney (pr); Smith’s Pets (pr); Should Sleepwalkers Marry (pr); Pass the Dumpling (pr); A Hollywood Hero (pr); Smith’s Customer (pr); Peaches and Plumbers (pr); Plumber’s Daughter (pr); A Small-Town Princess (pr); A Dozen Socks (pr); The Jolly Jilter (pr); Smith’s Surprise (pr); Smith’s New Home (pr); Broke in China (pr); Smith’s Kindergarten (pr); Crazy to Act (pr); Smith Fishing Trip (pr); His First Flame (pr); Pride of Pickleville (pr);
Cured in the Excitement (pr); Catalina, Here I Come (pr); The Pest of Friends (pr); Love’s Languid Lure (pr); College Kiddo (pr); Smith’s Candy Shop (pr); The Golf Nut (pr); Smith’s Pony (pr); A Gold Digger of Weepah (pr); Smith’s Cook (pr); Daddy Boy (pr); For Sale a Bungalow (pr); Smith’s Cousin (pr); The Bull Fighter (pr); Fiddlesticks (pr); Smith’s Modiste Shop (pr); The Girl from Everywhere (pr); Love in a Police Station (pr); Hold that Pose (pr)

1928
Smith’s Holiday (pr); Run, Girl, Run (pr); The Beach Club (pr); Love at First Sight (pr); Smith’s Army Life (pr); The Best Man (pr); The Swan Princess (pr); Smith’s Farm Days (pr); The Bicycle Flirt (pr); The Girl from Nowhere (pr); His Unlucky Night (pr); Smith’s Restaurant (pr); The Good-bye Kiss (pr); The Chicken (pr); Taxi for Two (pr); Caught in the Kitchen (pr); A Dumb Waiter (pr); The Campus Campbell (pr); Motor Boat Mamas (pr); The Bargain Hunt (pr); Smith’s Catalina Rowboat Race (Catalina Rowboat Race) (pr); A Taxi Scandal (pr); Hubby’s Latest Alibi (pr); A Jim Jam Janitor (pr); The Campus Vamp (pr); Hubby’s Weekend Trip (pr); The Burglar (pr); Taxi Beauties (pr); His New Stenographer (pr)

1929
Clunked on the Corner (pr); Baby’s Birthday (pr); Uncle Tom (pr); Calling Hubby’s Bluff (pr); Taxi Spooks (pr); Button My Back (pr); Ladies Must Eat (pr); Foolish Husband’s (pr); Matchmaking Mamas (pr); The Rodeo (pr); Pink Pajamas (pr); The Night Watchman’s Mistake (pr); The New Aunt (pr); Taxi Dolls (pr); Don’t Get Jealous (pr); Caught in a Taxi (pr); A Close Shave (pr); The Big Palooka (pr); Motoring Mamas (pr); Clancy at the Bat (pr); The New Half-Back (pr); Uppercut O’Brien (pr)

1930
He Trumped Her Ace (pr); Radio Kisses (pr); Hello Television (pr); Take Your Medicine (pr); Don’t Bite Your Dentist (pr); Strange Birds (pr); A Hollywood Theme Song (pr)

1931
No, No, Lady (pr); One Yard to Go (pr); The College Vamp (remake, pr); The Bride’s Mistake (pr); The Dog Doctor (pr); Just a Bear (It’s a Bear) (pr); Ex-Sweeties (pr); In Conference (pr); The Cowcatcher’s Daughter (pr); Slide, Speedy, Slide (pr); Fainting Lover (pr); Too Many Husbands (pr); The Cannonball (pr); The Trail of the Swordfish (pr); Poker Windows (pr); The World Flies (pr); Who’s Who in the Zoo (pr); Taxi Troubles (pr); The Great Pie Mystery (pr); Wrestling Swordfish (pr); All American Kickback (pr); Half Holiday (pr); The Pottsville Palooka (pr)

1932
Playgrounds of the Mammals (pr); Dream House (pr); The Girl in the Tonneau (pr); Shopping with Wife (pr); Lady! Please! (pr); Heavens! My Husband! (pr); The Billboard Girl (pr); The Flirt Sleepwalker (pr); Speed in the Gay Nineties (pr); Man-Eating Sharks (pr); Listening In (pr); The Spot in the Rug (pr); Divorce a la Mode (pr); The Boudoir Brothers (pr); Freaks of the Deep (pr); The Clandestine Camera (pr); Sea Going Birds (pr); Hatta Marri (pr); Alaska Love (pr); For the Love of Ludwig (pr); Neighbor Trouble (pr); His Royal Shyness (pr); Young Onions (pr); The Giddy Age (pr); Lighthouse Love (pr); Hawkins and Watkins (pr); The Singing Plumber (pr); Courting Trouble (pr); False Impressions (pr); Bring Back ‘em Sober (pr); A Hollywood Double (pr); The Dentist (pr); Double in the Quickies (pr); The Lion and the House (pr); Human Fish (pr)

1933
Blue of the Night (pr); The Wrestlers (A Wrestler’s Bride) (pr); Don’t Play Bridge with Your Wife (pr); The Singing Boxer (pr); Too Many Highballs (pr); Easy on the Eyes (pr); A Fatal Glass of Beer (pr); Caliente Love (pr); Sing, Bing, Sing (pr); The Plumber and the Lady (pr); Sweet Cookie (pr); The Pharmacist (pr); Uncle Jake (pr); Dream Stuff (pr); Roadhouse Queen (pr); See You Tonight (pr); Daddy Knows Best (pr); Knockout Kisses (pr); Husband’s Reunion (pr); The Big Fibber (pr); The Barber Shop (pr)

1939
Hollywood Cavalcade (role)

1949
Down Memory Lane (role)

Publications

By SENNETT: book—

Mack Sennett: King of Comedy, as Told to Cameron Shipp, New York, 1954.

By SENNETT: article—

Interview with T. Dreiser, in Photoplay (New York), August 1928.

On SENNETT: books—

On SENNETT: articles—

Carr, H., “The Secret of Making Film Comedies,” in Motion Picture Classic (Brooklyn), October 1925.
Manners, D., “Defense of Low-Brow Comedy,” in Motion Picture Classic (Brooklyn), October 1930.
Mack Sennett was the outstanding pioneer and primitive of American silent comedy. Although Sennett’s name is most commonly associated with the Keystone Company, which he founded in 1912, Sennett’s film career began four years earlier with the Biograph Company, the pioneering film company where D.W. Griffith established the principles of narrative and rhetoric. Sennett and Griffith were colleagues and contemporaries, and Sennett served as actor, writer, and assistant under Griffith in 1908 and 1909. In 1910 he began his career as director of his own films under Griffith’s supervision.

Sennett became associated with comic roles and comic films from the beginning under Griffith. In his first major role for Griffith, The Curtain Pole in 1908, Sennett played a comically drunk Frenchman who visits chaos upon all he meets in a desperate race through town to replace a broken curtain rod. The film contains several traits that would become associated with the mature Sennett style: the breathless chase, the reduction of human beings to venal stereotypes, the reduction of human society and its physical surroundings to chaotic rubble, and a fondness for games concerning the cinema mechanism itself, manifested in the use of accelerated (by undercranking) and reverse motion. In other roles for Griffith, Sennett consistently played the comic rube or dumb servant—roles that took advantage of Sennett’s shambling bulk and oafish facial expressions.

According to legend, Sennett founded the Keystone Company when he conned his bookies, Adam Kessel and Charles Bauman, to go double or nothing on his gambling debts and stake him to a film company. Kessel and Bauman, however, had been out of the bookmaking business and in the moviemaking business for at least five years as owners of Thomas Ince’s flourishing New York Motion Picture Company. Between late 1912 and early 1914, Sennett assembled a troupe of the finest raucous physical comedians and burlesque clowns in the film business. From Biograph he brought the pretty Mabel Normand, who was also an extremely agile and athletic physical comedienne, and the loony Ford Sterling, with his big-gesturing burlesque of villainy and lechery. Among the other physical comedians he found in those years were the burlly Mack Swain, the tiny Chester Conklin, the round Fatty Arbuckle, and the cross-eyed Ben Turpin. He also discovered such future comic stars as Charles Chaplin, Harold Lloyd, and Harry Langdon, as well as the future director of sound comedies, Frank Capra. Perhaps more important than any artistic contribution was Sennett’s managerial ability to spot comic talent and give it the opportunity to display itself.

At the root of Sennett’s comic style was the brash, the vulgar, and the burlesque. His films parodied the serious film and stage hits of the day, always turning the serious romance or melodrama into outrageous nonsense. There were no serious moral, psychological, or social issues in Sennett films, simply raucous burlesque of social or emotional material. His short comedies were exuberantly impolite and often made public jokes out of ethnic, sexual, or racial stereotypes. Among the characters around whom he built film series were the Germans Meyer and Heinie, the Jewish Cohen, and the black Rastus. Many of these films were so brashly vulgar in their stereotypical humor that they cannot be shown in public today. As indicators of social attitudes of the 1910s, these films seem to suggest that the still largely immigrant American society of that time was more willing to make and respond to jokes openly based on ethnic and sexist stereotypes than they are today in an era of greater sensitivity to the potential harm of these stereotypes. In defense of Sennett’s making sport of ethnic types, it must be said that the method and spirit was consistent with his films’ refusal to take any social or psychological matters seriously.

Sennett’s Keystone films were extremely improvisational; a typical formula was to take a camera, a bucket of whitewash, and four clowns (two male, two female) out to a park and make a movie. Sennett’s aesthetic was not so much an art that conceals art but an art that derides art. His many Keystone films reveal the same contempt for orderly, careful, well-crafted art that one can see in the Marx Brothers’ Paramount films or W.C. Fields’s Universal films two decades later. The one conscious artistic tool which Sennett exploited was speed—keeping the actors, the action, the gags, the machines, and the camera in perpetual speeding motion. The typical Keystone title might be something like Love, Speed, and Thrills or Love, Loot, and Crash.

Among other Sennett inventions were the Keystone Kops, a burlesque of attempts at social order, and the Bathing Beauties, a burlesque of attempts at pornographic sexuality. Sennett served his apprenticeship in the American burlesque theater, and he brought to the Keystone films that same kind of entertainment which took place at the intersection of vulgar lunacy and comic pornography.

Sennett’s most memorable films include a series of domestic films starring Mabel Normand, married either to Fatty Arbuckle or Charlie Chaplin; a series of films pairing the beefy Mack Swain and the diminutive Chester Conklin; a series featuring Ben Turpin as a cross-eyed burlesque of romantic movie stars; a series built around remarkably athletic automobiles and rampageous jungle beasts starring Billy Bevan; and a series of short films featuring the pixiesh child-clown Harry Langdon. Sennett also produced and personally directed the first comic feature film produced in America (or anywhere else), Tillie’s Punctured Romance, starring Chaplin, Normand, and stage comedienne Marie Dressler in her first film role.

Sennett ceased to direct films after 1914, becoming the producer and overseer of every comic film made by his company for the next two decades. Although the Keystone Company folded by the late 1910s, Sennett’s immensely long filmography is a testament to the sheer number of comic films he produced, well into the sound era. Sennett’s real importance to film history, however, derives from that crucial historical moment between 1912 and 1915, a period when a comic assumption, the evolution of film technique, and a collection... of talented physical clowns all came together under Sennett’s stewardship to create a unique and memorable type of comedy that has assumed its place not only in the history of cinema, but in the much longer history of comedy itself.

—Gerald Mast

SERREAU, Coline

Nationality: French. Born: Paris, 29 October 1947; daughter of famed avant-garde theatre director Jean-Marie Serreau and writer-translator Geneviève Serreau. Education: Studied music and dance at the Conservatoire de la rue Blanche; also studied acrobatics. Career: First of many leading roles on the French stage, in L’Escalier de Silas, by her mother Geneviève, 1970; first collaborative theatre work, Thérèse est triste, 1970; first documentary feature, Mais qu’est-ce qu’elles veulent? 1976; first feature film, Pourquoi pas?, 1977; wrote and starred in award-winning play Quisaitout et Grobeta, 1993. Awards: César Awards for Best Film and Best Screenplay, for Trois hommes et un couffin, 1986; César Award for Best Screenplay, for La Crise, 1993; Commandeur de l’ordre des Arts et des Lettres, awarded by the Ministry of Culture, 2000.

Films as Director:

1976  Mais qu’est-ce qu’elles veulent? (But What Do Women Want?) (doc)
1977  Pourquoi pas? (Why Not?) (+ sc)
1982  Qu’est-ce qu’on attend pour être heureux! (What are you waiting for to be happy!) (+ sc)
1985  Trois hommes et un couffin (Three Men and a Cradle) (+ sc)
1989  Romuald et Juliette (Mama, There’s a Man in Your Bed) (+ sc)
1991  “Contre l’oubli” (“Écrire contre l’oubli”; “Against Oblivion”; “Lest We Forget”) (3-minute episode in anthology film)
1992  La Crise (The Crisis) (+ sc)
1996  La Belle verte (The Green Planet) (+ sc, mu, ro as Mila)

Other films:

1973  On s’est trompé d’histoire d’amour (Bertuccelli) (co-sc, ro as Anne)
1975  Sept morts sur ordonnance (Rouffio) (ro as Mme. Mauvagne)
1989  Three Men and a Baby (Nimoy) (co-sc)

Publications

On SERREAU: books—

About SERREAU: articles—

“‘Mama, There’s a Man in Your Bed’: Coline Serreau—Remade in America,” in American Film, March 1990.

---

Genette Vincendeau’s insightful survey of Coline Serreau’s career calls it a “high wire act,” but one might shift the metaphor a little to “balancing act”: for Serreau has managed to keep a steady balance between political activism and commercial success, outright farce and drama of sentiment. Her first feature, a documentary, was hailed as a landmark of feminist filmmaking, while her comedy Three Men and a Cradle (later critiqued by some American academic writers as misogynistic) was not only the highest-grossing French film of 1985 but one of the most successful since World War II. She has furthermore balanced a career in filmmaking with a life in the theatre, as playwright and actress, with involvement in music and even acrobatics as well.

With a background in feminism, Marxism, psychoanalysis, and modernist theatre, Serreau has made films that both interrogate gender roles and pose utopian possibilities. Her documentary Mais qu’est-ce qu’elles veulent? —containing interviews with women as socially and economically diverse as a Swiss church minister and a black janitor in his building, while Qu’est-ce qu’on attend pour être heureux! is about a group of actors rebelling against the commercial film they are making. The sensation-ally popular Trois hommes et un couffin shows the transformation of three “typical male” types when circumstances lead them to raise an infant, while *Romuald et Juliette—truly a balancing act of fairy tale, wry observation of gritty detail, utopian hope and elaborate farce—tells of the successful marriage of a white business executive and a black janitor in his building.

Trois hommes is both comic and sentimental in its tale of three Parisian bachelors having to curtail their usual amorous activities, and even their professional careers, to raise an abandoned infant. Farce is the engine that drives the plot at first: the writer-director seems to have asked herself what could, after all, induce three perennial swingers to settle down even unwillingly to such a task. But the latter part of the film manages to be touching without becoming treacly or preachy, or larded with gratuitous chase scenes—unlike, one might claim, the also very popular American remake, *Three Men and a Baby. In its efforts to demonstrate that men too can be nurturing parents, Serreau’s film has been accused of glorifying patriarchy at the expense of women, in that the men eventually seem to claim exclusive rights over the realm of childcare, while there are no sympathetic females in the picture other than the infant, and the mother is literally infantilized as she sleeps in the crib at the end of the film. But Serreau’s droll observations of the bachelors suggest a more complex perspective: for example, when one of them, citing all the books he has read, tells off a haughty “Seconde Maman” from a government agency, he is being comically vain himself; and in the final reunion of the infant with the bachelors, their all standing shirtless (just aroused from sleep) may not be an assertion of patriarchal authority but a signifier of both an absurd masculinity and emotional vulnerability.

The farcical setup of Romuald et Juliette is considerably more ingenious than that of Trois hommes. Here, a yogurt tycoon on the eve of his greatest financial coup is the victim of three different and coincidental plots at the same time: his executive protégé is having an affair with his wife; another executive sabotages the yogurt plant to make Romuald and the protégé look culpable; and a third executive is using Romuald’s secretary/mistress to trap him in a phony insider trading scheme. All this is the means of igniting the unlikely romance of the title, between the tycoon and his office cleaning woman, a black mother of five who lives in a cramped tenement. The scène à faire, in which Juliette tells her boss about one plot after the other that she has overheard, is truly hilarious, thanks not only to the explosive release of tension but to Daniel Auteuil’s performance (and Serreau’s direction), mixing genuine friendliness with strained politeness and baf- fled incredulity. Equally brilliant is a later matching scene in which Juliette (the superb Firmine Richard) reacts to Romuald’s marriage proposal with comparable astonishment but also indignation, even exasperation. Some have found the film’s ending problematic, with Romuald’s vast wealth seeming indeed to buy happiness, or at least serving to overcome Juliette’s reservations, and with Juliette rather too neatly becoming an earth mother for the late 1980s. At least, in its delirious vision of family harmony despite racial and economic barriers it is consistent with Serreau’s utopian/comic outlook.

La Crise follows to a considerable extent the pattern set by its predecessors. The opening crisis is actually a multiple one in which the protagonist loses his job, is deserted by his wife, and finds most of his friends and relatives having momentous quarrels with their spouses and lovers. In this case the outsider who leads the middle-class protagonist to reconciliation is not an infant girl or African woman but a lower-class sot who accompanies the “hero” on a sentimental journey. As in her other films, Serreau keeps a cool eye on her obstute—but educable—male protagonists.

Most recently, La Belle verte carries Serreau’s utopian proclivities a great deal farther: in this comic fantasy the writer-director herself plays Mila, inhabitant of a “green planet,” where everyone lives free of stress, pollution, and bureaucracy, while practicing vegetarianism and acrobatics. Mila’s visit to Earth, armed with a device for “deprogramming” people so that they can be their “natural” selves (to the shock of other earthlings), allows Serreau herself to play the role of the beneficent outsider. Whether La Belle verte marks a new direction in her filmmaking or is a fanciful interlude amidst her relatively more down-to-earth comedies remains to be seen; meanwhile, she has devoted more of her time to the theatre. Earlier plans to direct the American version of Trois hommes, and later a version of Romuald et Juliette, were never realized, so that her career and fame reside largely in France, where her success as actress and musician, playwright and screenwriter, composer and film director has long been recognized.

—Joseph Milicia

SHEPITKO, Larisa

Nationality: Russian. Born: Armtiovsk, Eastern Ukraine, 1938 (some sources list 1939); first name sometimes spelled “Larissa.”

Family: Married film director Elem Klimov. Education: Studied with Alexander Dovzhenko at, and graduated from, the VGIK (State Film Institute). Career: Began assisting Yulia Solntseva, Alexander Dovzhenko’s widow, in making Poem of the Sea, based on Dovzhenko’s writings, 1956; directed the short films The Blind Cook and Living Water and the diploma feature Heat while at film school, early 1960s; a retrospective of her work presented at the Berlin Film Festival, where she was a member of the jury, 1978. Awards: Second Prize, Venice Film Festival, for Ti I Ya (You and I), 1971; Golden Bear, OCIC Award, FIPRESCI Award, and Interfilm Award Special Mention, Berlin International Film Festival, for Voshojdenie (The Ascent), 1977. Died: In a car accident near Moscow, July 1979.

Films as Director:

1961 The Blind Cook (short)
1962 Living Water (short)
1963 Znoy (Heat) (co-sc)
1966 Krylya (Wings)
1971 Ti I Ya (You and I) (co-sc)
1977 Voshojdenie (Kodyetvom; The Ascent) (co-sc)
1987 The Homeland of Electricity (Rodina Elektrichestva) (short; filmed in 1967 and released with Angel, a short directed by Andrei Smirnov, as The Beginning of an Unknown Century)

Other Films:

1970 Sport, Sport, Sport (Klimov), (ro)
1981 Proshchanie s Matyoroy (Farewell; Farewell to Matyora) (Klimov) (script concept)

Publications

By SHEPITKO: articles—

“Sotnikov ni e nuzhen i dnes,” in Kinoizkustvo (Sofia, Bulgaria), September 1977.

On SHEPITKO: articles—

“Director Larisa Shepitko and Her New Film, The Ascent,” in Soviet Film (Moscow), no. 4, 1977.

Herlinghaus, R., “Fuer Larisa Shepitko,” in Film und Fernsehen (Berlin), no. 8, 1979.

Obituary in Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), no. 12, 1979.

Obituary in Ecran (Paris), 15 September 1979.

Obituary in Bianco e Nero (Rome), September/December 1979.

Zemanova, Z., “Nespokojena maximalista Larisa Shepitko,” in Film a Doba (Prague), June 1982.

“Ohjaajat ja valvojat,” in Filmihalli (Helsinki), no. 6, 1988.

“Manchmal schwieg die Kritik,” in Film und Fernsehen (Berlin), no. 1, 1989.

Wilmington, Michael, “A Chance to View Art of Shepitko,” in Chicago Tribune (Chicago), 12 September 1996.

On SHEPITKO: film—

Larisa, tribute directed by Elem Klimov, 1980.

* * *

Barely two years after her greatest international triumph—winning the Golden Bear at the Berlin Film Festival for The Ascent—Ukrainian filmmaker Larisa Shepitko tragically died in an automobile accident. The Soviet cinema thus prematurely lost one of the major talents of its post-war generation, and the international film community was robbed of one of its emerging—and potentially most significant—creative lights. Shepitko and her work pretty much have remained unknown and ignored in North America, despite a small but fervent cult of admirers (including Martin Scorsese and Stan Brakhage).

Shepitko’s films are visually stunning, and loaded with images that eloquently communicate her characters’ deepest feelings, concerns, and conflicts. They also are linked in that their settings are such disparate physical extremes as snow-covered landscapes, arid deserts, and rugged wastelands. Nature itself presents a threat to human life, with the basics of survival often the primary challenge for her characters.

Furthermore, relationships in Shepitko’s films mostly are strained. Characters have their own personal visions and opposing views on key issues. While her first films explore clear-cut political questions within Soviet society, her work evolved to deal more with moral and ideological concerns. Ultimately, her films reflect on the use of cinema as a means of exploring such issues—and, accordingly, serve as expressions of the essence of the human spirit.

In her all-too-short life—she was 40 years old when she died—Shepitko directed just four features. Her first, Heat, was her diploma work for the VGIK state film school, and was completed when she was 24 years old. It is set during the 1950s, on a small collective farm in the USSR’s arid central Asian territory of Kirghizia, where two males from different generations quarrel over the manner in which agricultural procedures may be used to modernize the farm. This crisply directed film is especially successful in connecting its characters to their parched surrounding.

Wings, which Shepitko made three years later, examines the friction between Russians who survived World War II and their offspring. Its main character is a fabled female fighter pilot who has difficulty reconciling her past with her present job as a school administrator. She is entering middle age, her lone true love died in the war, and her memories of the war at once fill her thoughts and adversely affect her present-day relationships with her students and adopted daughter. From a political perspective, Wings is a provocative depiction of a character who views collectiveism and obligation as the backbone of the Soviet Union and is troubled by what she perceives as an increase in individualism among the younger generation. Adding resonance to the story is the fact that she is neither a Stalinist heavy nor a well-intentioned visionary, but rather an all-too-human being who is attempting to clarify her present-day identity and follow her convictions. You and I is a companion piece to Wings in that its main character, a brain surgeon, has come to question his role in society and the significance of his life and work. For this reason, he leaves his job and family and sets out on a soul-searching odyssey through Siberia. Both You and I and Wings are noteworthy as probing looks at moral dilemmas facing then-contemporary Soviet society.

Finally, The Ascent, Shepitko’s masterwork, is a chilling drama about honor and corruption, devotion and duplicity, and human endurance under the most trying conditions. It is set during a snowy, dreary World War II winter in Byelorussia, the provincial Soviet region then controlled by the occupying Germans. The three pivotal characters are individuals who each must achieve a personal reconciliation as they fathom the meaning of their accountability while struggling to endure the bloodshed in their midst. The first is a German-speaking Russian—whose profession, ironically, is that of a schoolteacher—who collaborates with the enemy and toils as a torturer of his fellow citizens. The other two are partisans. The first guilelessly attempts to save himself by sacrificing his comrade; the second heroically refuses to cave into his captors’ pressure and comes to view his imminent demise on a religious-mystical level, as a sacrifice in the wake of society’s horrors. Among the other characters are a trio of innocents sentenced to death for allegedly favoring the partisans.

In July 1979, while driving to Moscow after looking over locations for her next film, Shepitko and four of her crew members lost their lives in an automobile accident. The film, which ironically was to be titled Farewell, was completed by Shepitko’s husband, director Elem Klimov—who also filmed a documentary homage to her, titled Larisa. That Shepitko’s star was ascending on the international film scene is unquestionable. For this reason alone, her premature death is especially heartbreaking.

—Rob Edelman

SHERIDAN, Jim

Nationality: Irish. Born: Dublin, 6 February 1949. Education: Graduated from University College in Dublin; attended the New York University film school. Career: Worked as director-writer at the Lyric Theatre in Belfast and Abbey Theatre in Dublin, originated Children’s Theatre Company in Dublin, and operated and wrote plays for the Project Arts Center, a Dublin alternative theater, 1970s-early 1980s; came to New York and became artistic director of the Irish Arts Center, 1982; made screen directorial debut with My Left Foot, 1989. Awards: Fringe Award for Best Play, Edinburgh Festival, 1983, for Spike in the First World War; Academy Award nominations, Best Picture, Best Director, and Best Screenplay, 1993, for In the Name of the Father.

Films as Director and Screenwriter:

1989 My Left Foot (co-sc)
1990 The Field
1993 In the Name of the Father (co-sc, + pr)
1997 The Boxer (co-sc, + pr)

Other Films:

1993 Into the West (Newell) (sc)
1996 Some Mother’s Son (co-sc, co-pr)
1999 Agnes Brown (Huston) (pr)
2000 Borstal Boy (Peter Sheridan) (exec pr); Catch the Sun (Carney) (pr)

Publications

By SHERIDAN: books—

Some Mother’s Son: The Screenplay, with Terry George, New York, 1997.

By SHERIDAN: articles—

On SHERIDAN: articles—

George, Terry, “‘Terry George on Jim Sheridan,’” in New Yorker, 21 March 1994.
Grenier, Richard, “‘In the Name of the IRA,’” in Commentary (New York), April 1994.

* * *

Jim Sheridan
The cinema of Jim Sheridan is at once deeply personal, humanistic, and politically committed. His scenarios (taken from real-life as well as fiction) are heartrending, and his characters, all vividly realized, are individuals determined to triumph over seemingly insurmountable obstacles. Sheridan’s films are rooted in the culture, history, and politics of his native Ireland and, commercially as well as creatively, he has been at the vanguard of his country’s film industry. In 1990, The Field, which he directed and scripted, was the number one box-office champion in Ireland—the initial instance where an Irish film bested all foreign competition.

Perhaps Sheridan’s best film to date is his first, My Left Foot, which movingly charts the triumph of an extraordinary individual. At his death in 1981, Christy Brown (played by Daniel Day-Lewis) was one of Ireland’s foremost artistic and literary figures. Yet for Brown, it was no small achievement just to master the mundane. He was born with cerebral palsy, and he titled his autobiography My Left Foot because it was with this limb that he painted his pictures and wrote his stories. Sheridan’s telling of Brown’s life is so effective because he avoids mawkishness: by no means is Brown a cardboard cripple, a stereotypical figure to be pitied or feared. He is a complex character, with the wants, needs, and contradictions of any other man.

Like Sheridan’s other heroes, Christy Brown is a man of the working class; his father was a Dublin bricklayer. My Left Foot reflects the importance of the familial bond as, without doubt, the love and support Brown receives from his family are crucial in enabling him to flourish as an artist.

If My Left Foot is the story of a man who transcends his physical limitations, The Field and In the Name of the Father tell of ordinary souls thrust into extraordinary situations. The Field, based on a play by John B. Keane, spotlights the plight of Bull McCabe (Richard Harris), an aging, charismatic peasant who has rented a field and devoted his life to developing it into a top-quality parcel of land. Even though he does not legally own the field, he has nurtured it as one would his own child. Then, he must contend with the news that the wealthy widow who owns the land plans to sell it at auction. The scenario pointedly reflects on Ireland’s history and culture: it is set during the 1930s, with the memory of famine lingering in the minds of all the citizenry; and it offers a vivid portrait of traditional Irish village life. Furthermore, a focal point of the story is McCabe’s conviction that he has come to own the land. This belief is distilled from Irish tribal laws which, to his mind, transcend contemporary law.

In the Name of the Father, based on Gerry Conlon’s autobiographical book Proved Innocent, is an even more straightforward saga of blind injustice. It is the story of Conlon (Daniel Day-Lewis), an unfocused young Belfast man who, along with others (including several of his equally guiltless family members), is arrested by the British authorities and falsely charged with the 1974 terrorist bombing of a London pub. Conlon and three others, who came to be known as the Guildford Four, spent over fifteen years in prison until their convictions were reversed. In the Name of the Father is provocative in its anti-British feel, as Conlon and company clearly are innocents who are railroaded by an unfeeling power structure which is unconcerned with smoking out the true culprits—and which withholds decisive evidence that would have exonerated the accused. The scenario reflects on the Irish-British conflict regarding the plight of Northern Ireland, while focusing on the manner in which the denunciation adversely and tragically affects one Irish family. Beyond the politics of In the Name of the Father, the film is motivated by humanistic and familial concern. For years, Conlon shares a jail cell with his father, Giuseppe. Previously, the son had no admiration for his father, but as time passes they become united, resulting in a solid and poignant bond.

Like The Field, In the Name of the Father spotlights the individual’s thirst for fairness. Gerry Conlon, like Bull McCabe, is keenly aware that he is a victim of injustice. In both cases, each man stubbornly persists in a single-minded pursuit of truth—just as Christy Brown perseveres in his determination to be viewed as a man without an affliction.

Sheridan’s films are uniformly well acted. Daniel Day-Lewis and Brenda Fricker (cast as Christy Brown’s ever-supportive mother) won Oscars for their performances in My Left Foot. Richard Harris was nominated for The Field, while Day-Lewis, Pete Postlethwaite (as Giuseppe Conlon), and Emma Thompson (as the lawyer who uncovers the chicanery on the part of the Crown) were cited for In the Name of the Father.

—Rob Edelman

SHINDO, Kaneto

Nationality: Japanese. Born: Hiroshima Prefecture, 28 April 1912. Family: Married first wife, 1939 (died 1940); second wife (divorced late 1940s); actress Nobuko Otowa. Career: Joined art section of Shinko-Kinema Tokyo Studio, 1928; moved to scenario department, 1939; moved to Koa Film, from 1942 (absorbed by Shochiku-Ofuna Studio, 1943); with director Kosaburo Yoshimura, left Shochiku to form independent production company Kindai Eiga Kyokai, with producer Hisao Itoya, director Tengo Yamada, and actor Taiji Tonoyama, 1950; directed first film, 1951; became president of Japanese Association of Scenario Writers, 1972. Awards: Grand Prix, Moscow Festival, for Naked Island, 1960; Asahi Prize, Japan, for activities in independent film production, 1975. Address: 4–8–6 Zushi, Zushi-City, Kanagawa, Japan.

Films as Director:

1951 Aisai monogatari (Story of My Loving Wife) (+ sc)
1952 Nadare (Avalanche) (+ sc); Genbakano-ko (Children of the Atomic Bomb) (+ sc)
1953 Shukuzu (Epitome) (+ sc); A Life of a Woman (+ sc)
1954 Dobu (Gutter) (+ co-sc)
1955 Ookami (Wolves) (+ sc)
1956 Gin-Shinju (Silver Double Suicide) (+ sc); Ruri no kishi (Bank of Departure) (+ sc); Joyu (An Actress) (+ sc)
1957 Umi no yarodomo (Guys of the Sea) (+ sc)
1958 Kanashimi wa onna dakeni (Sorrow Is Only for Women) (+ sc)
1959 Dai go fukuryu-maru (+ co-sc); Hanayome san wa sekai-ichi (The World’s Best Bride) (+ sc); Rakugaki kokuban (Grafitti Blackboard) (+ sc)
1960 Hadaka no shima (Naked Island; The Island) (+ sc)
1962 Ningen (Human Being) (+ sc)
1963 Haha (Mother) (+ sc)
1964  Onibaba (+ sc)
1965  Akuto (A Scoundrel) (+ sc)
1966  Honno (Instinct) (+ sc); Totuseki iseki (Monument of Totuseki) (+ sc); Tateshina no shiki (Four Seasons of Tateshina) (+ sc)
1967  Sei no kigen (Origin of Sex) (+ sc)
1968  Yabu no naka no kuroneko (A Black Cat in the Bush) (+ sc); Tsuyomushi onna (&) yamawashi otoko (Strong Woman and Weak Man) (+ sc)
1969  Kagero (Heat Haze) (+ co-sc)
1970  Shokkaku (Tentacles) (+ sc); Hadaka no jukyu-sai (Naked Nineteen-year-old) (+ co-sc)
1972  Kanawa (Iron Ring) (+ sc); Sanka (A Paean) (+ sc)
1973  Kokoro (Heart) (+ sc)
1974  Waga michi (My Way) (+ sc)
1977  Hanaoko Seishu no tsuma (The Ball of the Anjo Family) (+ sc)
1981  My Love Burns
1982  Kagero-Hitori no Tabi (Life of Chikusan) (+ sc)
1984  Chiheisen (The Horizon)
1987  A Deciduous Tree
1988  Sakur Tai 8–6
1993  Bokuto Kidan (The Strange Story of Oyuki) (+ sc)
1995  Gogo no Yuigon-jo (+ sc)

Other Films:

(partial list: has written over 200 scripts)

1939  Nanshin josei (South Advancing Women) (Ochiai) (sc)
1946  Machihoke no onna (Woman Who Is Waiting) (Makino) (sc); Josei no shori (The Victory of Women) (Mizoguchi) (sc)
1947  Anjo-ke no butokai (The Ball of the Anjo Family) (Yoshimura) (sc)
1948  Yuwaku (Seduction) (Yoshimura) (sc); Waga shogai no kasayakeru hi (My Life’s Bright Day) (Yoshimura) (sc)
1949  Waga koi wa moenu (My Love Burns) (Mizoguchi) (co-sc); Shirito (Jealousy) (Yoshimura) (sc); Mori no Ishimatsu (Ishimatsu of Mori) (Yoshimura) (sc); Ojosan kanpai (Toast to a Young Miss) (Kinoshiita) (sc)
1951  Itsunareru seiyo (Deceiving Costume) (Yoshimura) (sc); Genji monogatari (Tale of Genji) (Yoshimura) (sc)
1955  Bijo to kairya (The Beauty and the Dragon) (Yoshimura) (sc)
1958  Hadaka no tayo (Naked Sun) (Ieki) (sc); Yorra no tazumi (Night Dram) (Imai) (co-sc)
1963  Shitoyakana kemono (Soft Beast) (Kawashima) (sc)
1964  Kizudarake no sanga (Mountains and Rivers with Scars) (Yamamoto) (sc)
1967  Hanaoko Seishu no tsuna (Seishu Hanaoka’s Wife) (Masumura)
1972  Gunki hatameku shitani (Under the Military Flag) (Fukasaku) (sc)
1987  Eiga Joyu (sc)
1988  Hachi-Ko (sc)
1993  Tooki Rakujitsu (Kôyama) (co-sc)
1995  Miyazawa Kenji sono ai (Kôyama) (sc)

Publications

By SHINDO: books—

Seishun no monokuromu, Tokyo, 1988.
Shigotoshi retsuden, Tokyo, 1991.
Nagai futari no michi: Otowa Nobuko to tomo ni, Tokyo, 1996.

By SHINDO: article—

Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), December 1995.

On SHINDO: books—

On SHINDO: article—

* * *

Kaneto Shindo began his career in film as a scenario writer. An episode portraying his study of scenario writing, under the perfectionist director Kenji Mizoguchi, is included in his own first film as a director, Story of My Loving Wife. The rigorous influence of his mentor on Shindo’s style is seen in both his scenarios and his direction. Such persistent influence, by one director on another, on mise-en-scène and writing, is rarely found in the work of other filmmakers.

Shindo became a very successful scenario writer mainly for Kosaburo Yoshimura’s films at Shochiku. However, after this team was subjected to commercial pressure from the studio, they left to produce their own films, establishing Kindai Eiga Kyokai, or the Society of Modern Film. Thus, they have been able to pursue their own interests and concerns in choosing subjects and styles. Shindo, a Hiroshima native, frequently deals with the effects of the atomic bomb. He traced Hiroshima’s aftermath, in Children of the Atomic Bomb, based on the compositions of Hiroshima children. This subject could be treated only after the American Occupation ended. Mother focuses on a surviving woman’s decision to become a mother after much mental and physical trauma. Instinct deals with a middle-aged survivor whose sexual potency is revived by the love of a woman. Dai go fukuryu-maru is about the tragedy of the fishermen heavily exposed to nuclear fallout after American testing in the South Pacific. Shindo condemns nuclear weapons for causing such misery to innocent people, but also strongly affirms the survivor’s will to live.

Shindo’s best-known film internationally, Naked Island, is experimental in nature, and has been seen by only some dialogue but only music. It also uses local people except for a professional actor and actress who play a couple living on a small island. We are impressed with the hardship of their farming life as well as with the beauty of their natural surroundings throughout the cycle of the seasons. The joy, sorrow, anger, and desperation of the hardworking couple is silently but powerfully expressed in a semi-documentary manner.

The peaceful atmosphere of this film is in contrast to many of Shindo’s more obsessive works, such as Epitome, Gutter, Sorrow Is Only for Women, Onibaba, and A Scoundrel. These convey a claustrophobic intensity by using only a few small settings for the action, with much close-up camera work.

In 1975, Shindo expressed his lifelong homage to his mentor, Mizoguchi, in a unique documentary: The Life of a Film Director: Record of Kenji Mizoguchi. In this film, he brought together many interesting and honest accounts of Mizoguchi by interviewing people who had worked for this master. These personal recollections, along with sequences from Mizoguchi’s films, are a testimony to the greatness of Mizoguchi’s art, and to his intriguing personality.

Like Mizoguchi, Shindo creates many strong female figures who, by virtue of their love and the power of their will, try to “save” their male counterparts. While Mizoguchi’s women seem to rely more on their generous compassion to sustain their men, Shindo’s women tend to inspire and motivate their men by their own energy and power. In much the same way, Shindo’s own energy and perseverance have supported his artistic vision through four decades of independent filmmaking.

—Kyoko Hirano

SHINODA, Masahiro

Nationality: Japanese. Born: Gifu Prefecture, 9 March 1931. Education: Studied drama and literature at Waseda University, Tokyo, graduated 1952. Family: Married actress Shima Iwashita. Career: Assistant director at Shochiku-Ofuna Studios, from 1953; began as director of “youth” films, 1960; left Shochiku, 1965; directed first film for independent production company Hyogen-sha [Expression Company], Clouds at Sunset, 1967. Address: 1–11-13, Kitasenzoku, Ota-Ku, Tokyo, Japan.

Films as Director:

1960 Koi no katamichi kippu (One-Way Ticket to Love) (+ sc); Kawaiita mizuumi (Dry Lake; Youth in Fury)

1961 Yuki ni ikai ore no kano (My Face Red in the Sunset; Killers on Parade); Waga koi no tabiji (Epitaph to My Love) (+ co-sc); Shamisen to otobai (Love Old and New)

1962 Watakushi-tachi no kekkon (Our Marriage) (+ co-sc); Yama no sanka: moyuru wakamono-tachi (Glory on the Summit: Burning Youth); Namida o shishi no tategami ni (Tears on the Lion’s Mane) (+ co-sc)

1963 Kawaiita hana (Pale Flower) (+ co-sc)

1964 Ansatsu (Assassination)

1965 Utsukushisa to kanashimi to (With Beauty and Sorrow); Ibun sarutobi susuke (Samurai Spy; Sarutobi)

1966 Shoketsu no shima (Punishment Island; Captive’s Island)

1967 Akanegumo (Clouds at Sunset)

1969 Shinju ten no Anijima (Double Suicide)

1970 Buraikan (The Scandalous Adventures of Buraikan)

1971 Chinmoku (Silence)

1972 Sapporo Orimpikku (Sapporo Winter Olympic Games)

1973 Kaseki no mori (The Petrified Forest)

1974 Himiko

1975 Sakura no mori no mankai no shita (Under the Cherry Blossoms) (+ co-sc)

1976 Nihon-maru (Nihon-maru Ship) (doc); Sadono kuni ondeko-za (Sad’s Ondeko-za) (doc)

1977 Hanare goze Orin (The Ballad of Orin) (+ co-sc)

1979 Yashagaike (Demon Pond)

1980 Aku Ryoto (Devil’s Island)

1984 Setouchi Shonen Yakuyudan (MacArthur’s Children)

1986 Yari no Gonza (Gonza, the Spearman)

1989 Maihime (Die Tänzerin; The Dancer)

1990 Shonnenjidai (Takeshi)

1995 Sharaku

1997 Setouchi munraito serenade (Moonlight Serenade)

Publications

By SHINODA: articles—

Interview in American Film (New York), May 1985.

Interview in Kino (Sophia), no. 5, 1995.

On SHINODA: books—

Sekai no eiga sakka 10: Shinoda Masahiro, Yoshida Yoshishige [Film Directors of the World 10: Masahiro Shinoda and Yoshishige Yoshida], Tokyo, 1971.

On SHINODA: articles—

Russell, Catherine, “‘Overcoming Modernity’: Gender and the Pathos of History in Japanese Film Melodrama,” in Camera Obscura (Bloomington), May 1995.

McDonald, Keiko I., “Short Story into Action: Shinoda’s Maihime,” in Post Script (Commerce), Summer 1996.

* * *

After his debut with One-Way Ticket to Love in 1960, Masahiro Shinoda (along with Oshima and Yoshida) was termed a “Japanese Nouvelle Vague” director. However, Shinoda’s devotion to sensual modernism contrasted with Oshima’s direct expression of his political concerns. Shinoda’s early films center on the fickle and frivolous entertainment world, petty gangsters, or confused student terrorists, ornamented by pop-art settings and a sensibility which may be largely attributed to his scenario writer, poet Shuji Terayama.

Being an intellectual and ideologue, Shinoda analyzes the fates of his marginal but likable characters with a critical eye on the social and political milieu. Even his work on Shochiku Studio home drama and melodrama projects show his critical views of the social structure. His indulgent aestheticism, which appears in his films as incomparable sensuality, has been connected with images of death and destruction (Assassination, With Beauty and Sorrow, Clouds at Sunset, Double Suicide, The Ballad of Orin) and of degradation (Silence, The Petrified Forest, Under the Cherry Blossoms). This stance again contrasts with that of Oshima, whose sexual and political outlook ultimately affirms the value of life and survival. Shinoda’s fundamental pessimism, represented by the image of falling cherry blossoms in his films, is rooted in the ephemerality of life.

The stylistic aspect of Shinoda’s work originated in his long interest in the Japanese traditional theater. Double Suicide received the highest acclaim for his bold art direction (elaborate calligraphy on the set was done by his cousin, Toko Shinoda), ambitious experimentation as in his use of men dressed in black (recalling traditional Japanese puppeteers) appearing to lead the characters to their destinies, and the double roles of the contrasting and competing heroines, the prostitute and the wife. This black-and-white film presents a most imaginative adaptation of Bunraku, the Japanese puppet play. The Scandalous Adventures of Buraikan is an elaborate and colorful adaptation of Kabuki drama, playful in spirit. Himiko recalls the origin of Japanese theater in the primordial Japanese tribe’s rituals, making use of avant-garde dancers. The two leading female roles in Demon Pond are played by the popular Kabuki actor Tamasaburo Bando.

Another unique aspect of Shinoda’s work is his interest in sports. As an ex-athlete, he was well qualified for the assignment of making the official documentary Sapporo Winter Olympic Games, and a documentary on runners, Sado’s Ondeko-za. In these films, he succeeds in conveying in a beautiful visual manner the emotions of athletes in lonely competition.

Shinoda has also played an important role as the head of an independent film production firm, Hyogen-sha, or Expressive Company, since he left Shochiku in 1965. Thus he has pursued his own concerns in choices of subjects and methods of expression, mostly through the adaption of traditional and modern Japanese literary works. He has developed many talented collaborators—actress Shima Iwashita (to whom he is married), music composer Toru Takemitsu, art directors Jusho Toda and Kiyoshi Awazu, and poet Taeko Tomioka, working as his scenario writer.

—Kyoko Hirano

SIEGEL, Don

Films as Director:

1945 Star in the Night; Hitler Lives?
1946 The Verdict
1949 Night unto Night, The Big Steal
1952 No Time for Flowers; Duel at Silver Creek
1953 Count the Hours (Every Minute Counts); China Venture
1954 Riot in Cell Block 11; Private Hell 36
1955 An Annapolis Story (The Blue and the Gold)
1956 Invasion of the Body Snatchers; Crime in the Streets
1957 Spanish Affair; Baby Face Nelson
1958 The Gun Runners; The Line-up
1959 Edge of Eternity (+ co-pr, role as man at the pool); Hound Dog Man
1960 Flaming Star
1962 Hell Is for Heroes
1964 The Killers (+ pr, role as short-order cook in diner); The Hanged Man
1967 Stranger on the Run
1968 Madigan
1969 Coogan’s Bluff (+ pr, role as man in elevator); Death of a Gunfighter (uncredited co-d)
1970 Two Mules for Sister Sara
1971 The Beguiled (+ pr); Dirty Harry (+ pr)
1973 Charley Varrick (+ pr, role as Murph)
1974 The Black Windmill (+ pr)
1976 The Shootist
1977 Telefon
1979  Escape from Alcatraz (+ pr, role as doctor)
1980  Rough Cut
1982  Jinxed!

Other Films:

1940  City for Conquest (Litvak) (montage d)
1941  Blues in the Night (Litvak) (montage d)
1942  Casablanca (Curtiz) (art d)
1943  Edge of Darkness (Milestone) (set d); Mission to Moscow (Curtiz) (art d); Northern Pursuit (Walsh) (special effects d)
1944  The Adventures of Mark Twain (Rapper) (ph)
1971  Play Misty for Me (Eastwood) (role as Marty the bartender)
1978  Invasion of the Body Snatchers (Kaufman) (role as cab driver)
1985  Into the Night (Landis) (role as embarrassed man)

Publications

By SIEGEL: book—

By SIEGEL: articles—

Interview with Peter Bogdanovich, in Movie (London), Spring 1968.
““Conversation with Donald Siegel,”” with Leonard Maltin, in Action (Los Angeles), July/August 1971.
Interview with Sam Fuller, in Interview (New York), May 1972.
Interview with Stuart Kaminsky, in Take One (Montreal), June 1972.

On SIEGEL: books—

Kaminsky, Stuart M., American Film Genres, Dayton, Ohio, 1974; revised edition, Chicago, 1983.
Belton, John, Cinema Stylists, Metuchen, New Jersey, 1983.
Vaccino, Roberto, Donald Siegel, Florence, 1985.

On SIEGEL: articles—

Austen, David, ““Out for the Kill,”” in Films and Filming (London), May 1968.
Mundy, Robert, ““Don Siegel: Time and Motion, Attitudes and Genre,”” in Cinema (London), February 1970.
Gregory, Charles T., ““The Pod Society vs. the Rugged Individualist,”” in Journal of Popular Film (Bowling Green, Ohio), Winter 1972.
Nepoti, R., ““Una poesia dell’antieroe,”” in Segnocinema (Vicenza), vol. 8, no. 34, September 1988.
Seesel, G., and H. R. Blum, ““Zu den Filmen von Don Siegel. Gespräche mit Don Siegel,”” in EPD Film (Frankfurt), vol. 8, no. 6, June 1991.
Sarris, A., and Clint Eastwood, ““Don Siegel. The Pro. The Padron,”” in Film Comment (Denville, New Jersey), vol. 27, no. 5, September-October 1991.
Bernstein, M., ““Institutions and Individuals: Riot in Cell Block 11,”” in Velvet Light Trap (Austin, Texas), no. 28, Fall 1991.
Sarris, Andrew, ““Don Siegel: The Pro,”” in Film Comment, September/October 1991.
Eastwood, Clint, ““The Padron,”” in Film Comment, September/ October 1991.

Don Siegel’s virtues—tightly constructed narratives and explosive action sequences—have been apparent from the very beginning. Even his B pictures have an enviable ability to pin audiences to their seats through the sheer force and pace of the events they portray. Unlike some action-movie specialists, however, Siegel rarely allows the action to overcome the characterization. The continuing fascination of Riot in Cell Block 11, for instance, stems as much from its central character’s tensions as from the violent and eventful story. Dunn is a paradigmatic Siegel protagonist, caught between a violent and eventful story. They rarely survive with dignity.

Siegel’s singular distinction, however, lies in his refusal to strike conventional moral postures in relation to this depressing and often sordid material. Though one cannot fail to be involved in and excited by his action-packed stories, there is always a clear sense that he remains outside of them as something of a detached observer. In the 1950s that seeming “objectivity” gave him a minor critical reputation as a socially conscious and “liberal” director, though this was a liberalism by implication rather than a direct and paraded commitment. In retrospect the 1950s movies seem best described as individualistic, antagonistic to unthinking social conformity, rather than liberally sentimental after the fashion of “socially concerned” Hollywood movies of the period. These films are generalized warnings, not exercises in breast-beating. Their spirit is that of Kevin McCarthy’s cry to his unheeding fellows in Siegel’s original ending to Invasion of the Body Snatchers (United Artists added an epilogue): “You’re next!”

In the 1960s and 1970s Siegel’s reputation and his budgets grew. He struck out in new directions with such films as Two Mules for Sister Sara and The Beguiled, though his major concerns remained with action and with his emotionally crippled “heroes.” The three cop movies (Madigan, Coogan’s Bluff, and Dirty Harry) are representative, the last especially encouraging the charge that Siegel had become a law-and-order ideologue. Its “wall-to-wall carpet of violence” (Siegel’s description) easily lent itself to a “tough cop against the world” reading. Yet, just as his earlier films cannot be reduced to simple liberal formulae, so the later movies are far more complex than much criticism has suggested. A colleague remarks of Madigan: “For him everything’s either right or wrong—there’s nothing in between.” In exploring his characters’ doomed attempts to live by such absolutes Siegel refuses to make their mistake. And though he does not presume to judge them, that does not mean that he approves of their actions. As the less frenetic films like The Shootist and Escape from Alcatraz make clear, his appreciation of character and morality is far more subtle than that.

More than any other action director of his generation Siegel has avoided the genre’s potential for reductive simplification. He has combined entertainment with perception, skilled filmmaking economy with nicely delineated characters, and overall moral detachment with sympathy for his hard-pressed protagonists. His movie world may often seem ungenial, but its creator has never appeared callous or unconcerned. His films have achieved much-deserved commercial success; his skill and subtlety have deserved rather more in the way of critical attention.

—Andrew Tudor

SILVER, Joan Micklin

Films as Director:

1972 Immigrant Experience: The Long Long Journey (short)
1974 Hester Street (+ sc)
1976 Bernice Bobs Her Hair (for TV)
1977 Between the Lines
1979 Chilly Scenes of Winter (Head over Heels) (+ sc)
1985 Finnegans, Begin Again (for TV)
1988 Crossing Delancey
1990 Loverboy
1992 Big Girls Don’t Cry . . . They Get Even (Stepkids); A Private Matter (for TV)
1996 In the Presence of Mine Enemies (for TV)
1999 A Fish in the Bathtub; Invisible Child (for TV)

Other Films:

1972 Limbo (Women in Limbo) (Robson) (co-sc)
1979 On the Yard (Silver) (prod)

Publications

By SILVER: book—
Interview in Image et Son (Paris), November 1975.
“Dialogue on Film: Joan Micklin Silver,” in American Film (Los Angeles), May 1989.
Interview with Graham Fuller in the Independent (London), 7 April 1989.
Interview in American Film (Los Angeles), May 1989.

On SILVER: books—

On SILVER: articles—
Michel, S., “Yekl and Hester Street: Was Assimilation Really Good for the Jews?” in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury), Spring 1997.

* * *

Undoubtedly, the impact of the feminist movement during the 1960s and early 1970s was instrumental in making it possible for women to establish themselves as directors by the latter half of the 1970s. Joan Micklin Silver was one of the first to do so. Silver’s films aren’t explicitly feminist in content, but she consistently displays an awareness of and sensitivity to women’s identities and concerns.

As in her initial effort, Hester Street, Silver’s films have tended to be intimate character studies centred on heterosexual relationships that are in a transitional process. In several of the films, Silver, while not minimizing her significance, de-centres the film’s female protagonist: in Finnegan, Begin Again, for example, the Robert Preston character dominates the narrative. But the two most striking examples are the films featuring John Heard, Between the Lines and Chilly Scenes of Winter. In both films, Heard plays a character with similar characteristics: a tendency to be possessive about the woman he professes to love and a casting of the relationship in the terms of romantic love. In Chilly Scenes of Winter, Heard imbibes the film with his consciousness. His fantasy regarding a meeting with the Mary Beth Hurt character is visualized and he frequently directly addresses the viewer, providing access to his mental and/or emotional responses to a specific situation. By the film’s conclusion, Heard has relinquished his romantic passion, but not without undergoing a considerable psychic and emotional strain. While Hurt rejects Heard and his overwhelming demands, she appears, on the other hand, to have no clearly formed idea of what she either wants or needs from a love relationship. Interestingly, the film does not imply that Hurt’s uncertainty is a negative condition—she is just beginning to discover that she can explore the range of sexual and/or romantic involvements available to a contemporary woman.

In Chilly Scenes of Winter, the most complex and disturbing of her films, Silver indicates that from Hurt’s point of view romantic love is oppressive and destructive; in Crossing Delancey, Silver employs a woman, the Amy Irving character, to investigate what could be called a romantic “perception” about possible relationships. Irving rejects the Peter Riegert character before she gets to know him on the grounds that the conditions of their meeting and his profession preclude the possibility of a romance between them. To an extent, Irving’s rejection is motivated by her desire to distance herself from her Jewish ghetto origins. In Silver’s films, a character’s attitude to his or her origins, profession, etc., is often shown to be a contributing factor in the shaping of the romantic fantasy. In the Heard films, the character is frustrated by (Between the Lines) or indifferent to (Chilly Scenes of Winter) his professional life. In Crossing Delancey, it is only after Irving distinguishes between her romantic notions of appropriate partners and the reality of the Riegert character that a romance between the two can develop.

With Lover Boy, Silver addresses another aspect of the thematic: a young man, played by Patrick Dempsey, learns gradually through his experiences as the paid lover of a number of frustrated married women that sexual desire, pleasure, and fulfillment are enriched by having a romantic attitude towards intimate relationships (in courting women, Dempsey’s musical tastes move from heavy metal to Fred Astaire). Silver’s films feature a continual probing of what the romantic means—the various dimensions of the concept and its possible significance to both of the sexes. As a concept, the romantic ideal is not gender specific, and it is treated as something that can be either negative or positive in application.

In Hollywood from Vietnam to Reagan, Robin Wood argues that Chilly Scenes of Winter, to be fully appreciated, needs to be read in relation to the generic expectations it in part fulfills but also undermines. Wood’s contention that the film belongs to the classical Hollywood tradition of the light comedy is well-taken; essentially, the same can be said of both Crossing Delancey, which is a reworking of the classical romantic comedy, and Lover Boy, which has its antecedents in the 1930s screwball comedy. (Similarly, Silver’s graceful but unobtrusive mise-en-scène is a reflection of the classical filmmaking tradition.) In making this claim, it is important to indicate that the films are not evoking these classical genres for nostalgic purposes; instead, the films, while utilizing the structural strengths and comic potentials of the generic formulas, are offering a contemporary vision of the tensions underpinning heterosexual relations, and Silver’s films predominantly respond to these tensions in a progressive manner. From this perspective, Silver’s films can be compared to Woody Allen’s light romantic comedies (Annie Hall, Manhattan, Broadway Danny Rose), though of the two directors, Silver is much less sentimental and precious about her characters (particularly in her treatment of the films’ male protagonists).

As more women directors emerge both outside and within the Hollywood establishment, Silver has come to be regarded as an elder statesman of women filmmakers. One of this new breed is her daughter, Marisa, whose films include Old Enough, Permanent Record, Vital Signs, and He Said, She Said (the latter co-directed with Ken Kwapis).

Silver’s lone feature after Loverboy is Big Girls Don’t Cry . . . They Get Even, released in 1992 but screened the preceding year as Stepkids. It is a comedy that charts the plight of Laura (Hilary Wolf), a teen with a large family—and big problems. While a genial, generally likable film, it is far from Silver’s best work, as it often plays like a television situation comedy, complete with overly adorable or precocious children and a too neatly wrapped-up finale.

In the last twenty years, Silver has produced a small but personal and distinguished body of work. She remains an underrated filmmaker; in part, this may be due to the fact that her films are not big-budget projects or star vehicles. (Consistently, her films are conceived as ensemble pieces and contain beautifully judged performances.) It may also be due to the fact that the tone of Silver’s films tends to be decidedly off-beat: although the films are clearly “serious” examinations of the complexities of heterosexual relations, Silver infuses them with a slightly absurdist humour. On the one hand, this may produce a distancing effect that alienates the viewer. But it also allows the viewer to take a more contemplative attitude towards her depiction of the often aching pleasures involved in love relationships.

—Richard Lippe, updated by Rob Edelman

SINGLETON, John

Nationality: American.  Born: John Daniel Singleton in Los Angeles, California, 6 January 1968.  Education: Graduated from University of Southern California School of Cinema-Television, 1990.  Family: Married Akosua Busia (an actress), 12 October 1994 (divorced, 15 June 1997); children: one daughter, Hadar.  Career: Director and writer; directed Michael Jackson’s video “Remember the Time,” 1992.  Awards: Jack Nicholson Award (twice) and Robert Riskin Writing Award, University of Southern California School of Cinema-Television; New Generation Award, Los Angeles Film Critics Association, 1991; New York Film Critics Circle Award for best new director, 1991, and MTV Movie Award for best new filmmaker, 1992, both for Boyz N the Hood; ShoWest Award for screenwriter of the year, and Special Award for directorial debut of the year, ShoWest
John Singleton, who grew up on the fringes of the black ghetto in South Central Los Angeles, graduated from the prestigious film school at the University of Southern California to begin his career at an interesting moment in Hollywood history. For the early 1990s witnessed, albeit on a small scale, a revisionist revival of the blaxploitation movement that had so energized Hollywood cinema in the 1970s with its anti-establishment celebration of African-American ghetto culture. Blaxploitation classics such as Superfly, The Mack, and Coffy had sometimes glorified the drug dealing, organized crime, and sexual promiscuity they ostensibly condemned, thereby providing a weak critique at best of a dysfunctional culture in the process of being destroyed by middle-class flight, decaying municipal infrastructures, and systemic racism. The spectacularly successful New Jack City, a 1991 film directed by Mario Van Peebles, can be similarly faulted for an exploitative political rhetoric. It is hardly remarkable, therefore, that the four-wall exhibition of New Jack City proved dangerous for theatergoers and theater owners alike. Gangbangers in attendance reaffirmed their commitment to the lawless lifestyle appealingly depicted on the screen by, in part, shooting up the place and each other.

Violence also greeted the initial screenings of John Singleton’s Boyz N the Hood, but this 23-year-old wunderkind had not authored and directed a film that could be blamed for anything more than depicting, accurately and movingly, the coming to manhood of a group of young black men in South Central. Gang life, and the endemic violence and police reaction it fosters, is hardly romanticized in the film, but pointlessly destroys the lives of some. Tre Styles is the exception to this iron rule. He is the only one of the homeboys lucky enough to benefit from a father’s correction and instruction. With his father’s example providing an alternative, Tre chooses to save himself by refusing to go along on a vengeance-prompted drive-by. Like his girlfriend, brought up strictly by a respectable Catholic family, Tre escapes the ‘hood for the blessings of a college education. Thus, the film’s ideological center is Tre’s father, the aptly named Furious Styles, who advocates a rigorous program of self-improvement and self-control (occasionally tinged by Farrakhanesque paranoia) for both his son and community.

Didactic and overly conventional at times, Boyz N the Hood offers more than a political program. The film is also a portrait in depth, both loving and critical, of a community in crisis, where almost no one prospers and where the line between the good and the bad is almost impossible to draw. A self-made entrepreneur who makes the most of his hard work, Furious Styles bequeaths to his son—and the film’s audience—hope for the future that depends on individual effort rather than institutional reform. It is notable in this regard that Tre’s future looks positive precisely because he has left behind the dangerous South Central neighborhood where he grows up. With this film, John Singleton established himself as a filmmaker with commitment as well as cinematic talent. Like Spike Lee’s ‘Crooklyn, Boyz N the Hood’ adroitly negotiates between commercial demands for engaging melodrama and the director’s desire to deliver a timely message. It was certainly an auspicious debut.

None of Singleton’s next three films has met this very high standard of accomplishment. ‘Poetic Justice’ is more or less a Janet Jackson vehicle, with the popular singer playing a homegirl from South Central who takes to the road in an attempt to assuage the pain of a broken heart and escape the violence of her neighborhood. In this instance, Singleton’s script suffers from a lack of direction and narrative energy; the result is somewhat unaffecting soap opera with the beautician heroine, who also writes poetry, hooking up with a mailman and his daughter after the tragic killing of her boyfriend. The story finds little of interest to do with the characters-driven-by-fortune structure that it initially develops. ‘Higher Learning’, also scripted by the director, suffers from similar problems. It treats racial and gender tensions at the mythical Columbus U., which is proposed as a metonymy for American society. Unfortunately, Singleton’s screenplay creates characters who are neither particularly plausible nor attractive, and the narrative in which they are plunged is needlessly fragmented and uninvolving. As in ‘Boyz’, Singleton puts an African-American father figure at the ideological center of the story, though this character, a rather aloof and prissy professor of political science, has no real depth. In ‘Rosewood’, Singleton wisely secured the services of a competent screenwriter, Gregory Poirier. But this at times exciting and moving re-creation of an historical event, an anti-black pogrom in a 1920s Florida small town, still suffers from structural problems: too many main characters; too much time and energy devoted to setting up the central actions the film will treat; too much of an emphasis on emotions handled with the predictable sentimentality of soap opera. In this film, Singleton shows flashes of directorial brilliance, and it is undoubtedly an improvement on its two immediate predecessors. Unfortunately, ‘Rosewood’ demonstrates that as the 1990s ended Singleton had still proven unable to move effectively beyond the authentic recreations of his adolescent experience that made ‘Boyz’ such a critical and popular success.

—R. Barton Palmer

SIODMAK, Robert

Films as Director:

1929 Menschen am Sonntag (People on Sunday) (doc) (co-d)
1930 Abschied (So sind die Menschen)
1931 Der Mann der seinen Möder sucht (Looking for His Murderer); Voruntersuchung (Inquest)
1932 Stürme der Leidenschaft (The Tempest; Storm of Passion); Quick (Quick—König der Clowns)
1933 Brennende Geheimnis (The Burning Secret) (+ pr); Le Sexe faible
1934 La Crise est finie (The Slump Is Over)
1936 La Vie parisienne; Mister Flow (Compliments of Mr. Flow)
1937 Cargaison blanche (Le Chemin de Roi; French White Cargo; Traffic in Souls; Woman Racket)
1938 Mollenard (Hatred); Ultimatum (co-d; completed for Robert Wiene)
1939 Pièges (Personal Column)
1941 West Point Widow
1942 Fly by Night; The Night before the Divorce; My Heart Belongs to Daddy
1943 Someone to Remember; Son of Dracula
1944 Phantom Lady; Cobra Woman; Christmas Holiday
1945  The Suspect; Uncle Harry (The Strange Affair of Uncle Harry; The Zero Murder Case); The Spiral Staircase
1946  The Killers; The Dark Mirror
1947  Time Out of Mind (+ pr)
1948  Cry of the City
1949  Criss Cross; The Great Sinner
1950  Thelma Jordan; Deported
1951  The Whistle at Eaton Falls
1952  The Crimson Pirate
1954  Le Grand Jeu (Flesh and Woman)
1955  Die Ratten
1956  Mein Vater der Schauspieler
1957  Nachts wann der Teufel kam (The Devil Strikes at Night)
1959  Dorothea Angermann; The Rough and the Smooth (Portrait of a Sinner)
1960  Katya (Un Jeune Fille un seul amour, Magnificient Sinner); Mein Schulfreund
1962  L’Affaire Nina B (The Nina B Affair); Tunnel 28 (Escape from East Berlin)
1964  Der Schut
1965  Der Schatz der Azteken; Die Pyramide des Sonnengottes
1968  Custer of the West (A Good Day for Fighting)
1968/69  Der Kampf um Rom (in two parts)

Other Films:

1936  Le Grand Refrain (Symphonie d’amour) (Mirande) (supervisor)
1945  Conflict (Bernhardt) (co-story)

Publications

By SIODMAK: article—

On SIODMAK: books—

On SIODMAK: articles—

Taylor, John, “‘Encounter with Siodmak,’” in Sight and Sound (London), Summer/Autumn 1959.
Flinn, Tom, “‘Three Faces of Film Noir,’” in Velvet Light Trap (Madison, Wisconsin), Summer 1972.

* * *

Robert Siodmak is an example of the UFA-influenced German directors who moved to Hollywood when war threatened Europe. Less well known than his compatriots Billy Wilder and Fritz Lang, Siodmak demonstrated his cinematic skills early in his career with his innovative movie Menschen am Sonntag, which featured a non-professional cast, hand-held camera shots, stop motion photography, and the sort of flashbacks that later became associated with his work in America.

Siodmak carried with him to Hollywood the traditions and skills of his German film heritage, and became a major influence in American film noir of the 1940s. Deep shadows, claustrophobic compositions, elegant camera movements, and meticulously created settings on a grand scale mark the UFA origins of his work. Such themes as the treachery of love and the prevalence of the murderous impulse in ordinary people recur in his American films. The use of the flashback is a dominant narrative device, reflecting his fatalistic approach to story and character. The Killers (1946 version) presents a narrative that includes multiple flashbacks, each one of which is a part of the total story and all of which must be accumulated to understand the opening sequence of the film. This opening, based directly on Ernest Hemingway’s famous short story, is a masterful example of film storytelling.

A typical Siodmak film of his noir period is Phantom Lady, a mini-masterpiece of mood and character that creates intense paranoia through the use of lighting and setting. Two key sequences demonstrate Siodmak’s method. In the first, the heroine follows a man into the subway, a simple action that sets off feelings of danger and tension in viewers, feelings that grow entirely out of sound, light, cutting, and camera movement. In the second, one of the most famous sequences in film noir, Siodmak uses jazz music and cutting to build up a narrative meaning that is implicitly sexual as the leading lady urges a drummer to a faster and faster beat.

Siodmak’s work is frequently discussed in comparison with that of Alfred Hitchcock, partly because they shared a producer, Joan Harrison, for a period of time. Harrison produced two Siodmak films for Universal, The Suspect and Uncle Harry. In both films a seemingly ordinary, innocent man is drawn into a tangled web of murder, while retaining the audience’s sympathy. Criss Cross, arguably Siodmak’s best noir work, ably demonstrates his ability to create depth of characterization through music, mood, and action, particularly in a scene in which Burt Lancaster watches his ex-wife, Yvonne DeCarlo, dance with another man. His fatal obsession with his wife and the victim/victimizer nature of their relationship is capably demonstrated through purely visual means.

In later years, Siodmak turned to such action films as The Crimson Pirate and Custer of the West, the former a celebrated romp that was one of the first truly tongue-in-cheek anti-genre films of its period. Although Siodmak’s films were successful both critically and commercially in their day, he has never achieved the recognition which the visual quality of his work should have earned him. An innovative and cinematic director, he explored the criminal or psychotic impulses in his characters through the ambience of his elegant mise-en-scène. The control of all cinematic tools at his command—camera angle, lighting, composition, movement, and design—was used to establish effectively a world of fate, passion, obsession, and compulsion. Although his reputation has been elevated in recent years, his name deserves to be better known.

—Jeanine Basinger

SIRK, Douglas

Nationality: German/American. Born: Claus Detlev Sierk in Skagen, Denmark, 26 April 1900. Education: Studied law, philosophy, and art history in Copenhagen, Munich, Jena, and Hamburg until 1922. Career: Dramaturg for Deutsches Schauspiele, Hamburg, 1921; director for Chemnitz "Kleinez Theater," 1922; artistic director, Bremen Schauspielhaus, 1923–29; director of Altes Theater, Leipzig, 1929–36; directed first film, as Detlef Sierck, for UFA, 1935; head of Leipzig drama school, 1936; left Germany, worked on scripts in Austria and France (notably Renoir’s Partie de campagne, 1937); signed for Warners in Hollywood, 1939, but inactive, 1940–41; contract as writer for Columbia, 1942; director for Universal, from 1950; returned to Europe, 1959; active in theatre in Munich and Hamburg, 1960s. Died: Of cancer, in Lugano, Switzerland, 14 January 1987.

Films as Director:

(as Detlef Sierck)

1935 It Was een April (Dutch version); April, April (German version); Das Madchen vom Moorhof; Stuten der Gesellschaft
1936 Schlussakkord (Final Accord) (+ co-sc); Das Hofkonzert (+ co-sc); La Chanson du souvenir (Song of Remembrance) (co-d) (French version of Das Hofkonzert)
1937 Zu neuen Ufern (To New Shores, Paramatta, Bagne de femmes) (+ co-sc); La Habanera
1939 Boefje (+ co-sc)

(as Douglas Sirk)

1943 Hitler’s Madman
1944 Summer Storm (+ co-sc)
1946 A Scandal in Paris
1947 Lured
1948 Sleep My Love
1949 Slightly French; Shockproof
1950 Mystery Submarine
1951 The First Legion (+ co-pr); Thunder on the Hill; The Lady Pays Off; Weekend with Father
1952 No Room for the Groom; Has Anybody Seen My Gal?; Meet Me at the Fair; Take Me to Town
1953 All I Desire; Taza, Son of Cochise
1954 Magnificent Obsession; Sign of the Pagan; Captain Lightfoot
1955 All That Heaven Allows; There’s Always Tomorrow
1956 Never Say Goodbye (Hopper) (d uncredited, completed film); Written on the Wind
1957 Battle Hymn; Interlude; The Tarnished Angels
1958 A Time to Love and a Time to Die
1959 Imitation of Life

(for Munich Film School)

1975 Talk to Me like the Rain
1977 Sylvesternacht
1979 Bourbon Street Blues

Other Films:

1937 Liebling der Matrosen (Hinrich) (co-sc as Detlef Sierck)
1938 Dreiklang (Hinrich) (story as Detlef Sierck)
1939 Accordfinal (Bay) (supervision, uncredited); Sehnsucht nach Afrika (Zsch) (role)

1986 My Life for Zarah Leander (Blackwood) (doc) (role)

Publications

By SIRK: book—

By SIRK: articles—

On SIRK: books—

On SIRK: articles—

Douglas Sirk (second from left) with Barbara Rush, Jane Wyman, Greg Palmer, Rock Hudson, and R. Husson on the set of Magnificent Obsession

Willems, P., “Toward an Analysis of the Sirkian System,” in Screen (London), Winter 1972/73.

“Fassbinder on Sirk,” in Film Comment (New York), November/December 1975.

Degenfelder, P., “Sirk’s The Tarnished Angels: ‘Pylon’ Recreated,” in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), Summer 1977.

Fesser, J., “Melodrama, Serienform und Fernsehen heute,” in Frauen und Film (Frankfurt), no. 42, August 1987.

Metz, Walter, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), vol. 49, no. 1, Fall 1995.

* * *

Douglas Sirk’s critical reputation has almost completely reversed from the time when he was a popular studio director at Universal in the 1950s. He was regarded by contemporary critics as a lightweight director of soap operas who showcased the talents of Universal name stars such as Rock Hudson and Lana Turner. His films often were labelled “women’s pictures,” with all of the pejorative connotations that term suggested. After his last film, Imitation of Life, Sirk retired to Germany, leaving behind a body of work that was seldom discussed, but which was frequently reviewed on television late shows.

Standard works of film criticism either totally ignored or briefly mentioned him with words such as “not a creative film maker” (quoted from his brief entry in Georges Sadoul’s Dictionary of Film Makers). In the early 1970s, however, a few American critics began to re-evaluate his works. The most important innovators in Sirk criticism in this period were Jon Halliday, whose lengthy interview in book form, Sirk on Sirk, has become a standard work, and Andrew Sarris, whose program notes on the director’s films were compiled into the booklet Douglas Sirk—The Complete American Period. From the time of these two works, it became more and more appropriate to speak of Sirk in terms of “genius” and “greatness.” By 1979, Sirk was even honored by BBC Television with a “Sirk Season” during which his now loyal following was treated to a weekly installment from the Sirk oeuvre as it now fashionably could be called.

Critics today see Sirk’s films as more than melodramas with glossy photography and upper-middle-class houses. The word “expressionist” is frequently used to describe his technique, an indication not only of the style of Sirk’s work in the United States, but also his background in films within the framework of German expressionism in the 1920s and early 1930s.

Sirk, who was born in Denmark, but immigrated to Germany in the teens, began work in the theater, then switched to films in the mid-1930s. Known for his “leftist” leanings, Sirk left Germany with the rise of Nazism, and eventually came to the United States in the early 1940s.

The first part of Sirk’s American career was characterized by low-budget films which have faded into oblivion. His first well-known film was Sleep My Love, a variation on the Gaslight theme starring Don Ameche and Claudette Colbert. Soon he began directing films that starred several of the “hot” new Universal stars, among them Hudson and John Gavin, as well as many of the grandes dames of the 1930s and 1940s, such as Barbara Stanwyck, Lana Turner, and Jane Wyman. Although today he is known primarily for his dramas, Sirk did make a few lighter pieces, among them Has Anybody Seen My Gal?, a musical comedy set in the 1920s, and remembered by movie buffs as one of the first James Dean movies.

Many critics consider Written on the Wind to be Sirk’s best film. It was also the one which was best received upon its initial release. All of Sirk’s movies deal with relationships which are complicated and often at a dead-end. In Written on the Wind, the film’s central characters are unhappy despite their wealth and attractiveness. They have little to interest them and seek outlets for their repressed sexuality. One of the four main characters, Kyle Hadley (Robert Stack), has always lived in the shadow of his more virile friend Mitch Wayne (Rock Hudson). He hopes to forget his own feelings of inadequacy by drinking and carousing, but his activities only reinforce his problems. Sexuality, either in its manifestation or repression, is a strongly recurrent theme in all of Sirk’s works, but perhaps no where is it more blatantly dramatized than in Written on the Wind, where sex is the core of everyone’s problems. Mitch is the only truly potent figure in the film, and thus he is the pivotal figure. Hudson’s role as Mitch is very similar to that of Ron Kirby in All That Heaven Allows. Ron and Mitch both exhibit a strong sense of sexuality that either attracts or repels the other characters and initiates their action.

Kyle’s feelings of sexual inadequacy and jealousy of Mitch are interrelated; Mitch is the manly son Kyle’s father always wanted and the virile lover his wife Lucy (Lauren Bacall) loves. Kyle admires Mitch, yet hates him at the same time. Similarly, Carey Scott in All That Heaven Allows desires the earthy gardener Ron, yet she is shocked at her own sexuality, an apparent rejection of the conventions of her staid upper-middle-class milieu. In There’s Always Tomorrow, Clifford Groves (Fred MacMurray) is faced with a similar situation. He seeks sexual and psychological freedom from his stiffing family with Norma Vail (Barbara Stanwyck), yet his responsibilities and sense of morality prevent him from finding the freedom he seeks.

It is an ironic key to Sirk’s popular acclaim that exactly the same stars whose presence seemed to confirm his films as being “‘programmers’” and “‘women’s pictures’” have ultimately added a deeper dimension to his works. By using popular stars of the 1930s through 1950s—stars who often peopled lightweight comedies and unregenerate melodramas, Sirk revealed another dimension of American society. His films often present situations in which the so-called “happy endings” of earlier films are played out to their ultimate (and often more realistic) outcomes by familiar faces. For example, in There’s Always Tomorrow, Clifford and his wife Marion (Joan Bennett) might very well have been the prototypes for the main characters of a typical 1930s comedy in which “boy gets girl” in the last reel. Yet, in looking at them after almost 20 years of marriage, their lives are shallow. The happy ending of a youthful love has not sustained itself. Similarly, in All That Heaven Allows, the attractive middle-aged widow of a “wonderful man” has few things in life to make her happy. Whereas she was once a supposedly happy housewife, the loving spouse of a pillar of the community, her own identity has been suppressed to the point that her death means social ostracism.

These two examples epitomize the cynicism of Sirk’s view of what was traditionally perceived as the American dream. Most of Sirk’s films depict families in which a house, cars, and affluence are present, but in which sexual and emotional fulfillment are not. Many of Sirk’s films end on a decidedly unhappy note; the ones that do end optimistically for the main characters are those in which traditions are shattered and the strict societal standards of the time are rejected.

—Patricia King Hanson

SJÖBERG, Alf

Films as Director:

1929 Den starkaste (The Strongest) (+ story)
1940 Med livet som insats (They Staked Their Lives) (+ co-sc); Den blomstertid (Blossom Time) (+ sc)
1941 Hem från Babylon (Home from Babylon) (+ co-sc)
1942 Himlaspelet (The Road to Heaven) (+ co-sc)
1944 Hets (Torment); Kungajakt (The Royal Hunt)
1945 Resan bort (Journey Out) (+ sc)
1946 Iris och lö jmantsch järta (Iris and the Lieutenant) (+ sc)
1949 Bara en mor (Only a Mother) (+ co-sc)
1951 Fröken Julie (Miss Julie) (+ sc)
1953 Barabbas (+ co-sc)
1954 Karin Mansdotter (+ sc)
1955 Vildjäglar (Wild Birds) (+ co-sc)
1956 Sista paret ur (Last Pair Out)
1960 Domaren (The Judge) (+ co-sc)
1966 On (The Island)
1969 Fadern (The Father)

Publications

By SJÖBERG: articles—

Interview in Chaplin (Stockholm), December 1965.

‘‘Ingmar Bergman’s Schooldays,’’ an interview with Peter Cowie in Monthly Film Bulletin (London), April 1983.

On SJÖBERG: books—

On SJÖBERG: articles—

Chaplin (Stockholm), no. 7, 1969.

‘‘Bergman on Sjöberg,’’ in National Film Theatre Booklet (London), September 1982.

Werner, Gosta, ‘‘Alf Sjöberg som filmskapare,’’ in Chaplin (Stockholm), vol. 25, no. 3, 1983.

* * *

Along with Sjöström, Stiller, and Bergman, Alf Sjöberg must be counted as one of the most significant directors of the Swedish cinema, and indeed as the most important in that long period between the departure of Sjöström and Stiller for Hollywood and the establishment of Bergman as a mature talent. However, it is hard not to agree with the judgement of Peter Cowie when he states that Sjöberg ‘‘is hampered by a want of thematic drive, for he is not preoccupied, like Bergman, with a personal vision. He has not created a world to which one returns with an immediate feeling of recognition and empathy. Each of his films is a solitary achievement, illuminating for a moment the universe of Strindberg, Lagerkvist and others with a cinematic expertise that rarely falters. . . . If one concludes that Sjöberg’s most successful accomplishments are founded on the inspiration of others . . . it is not to deny his impeccable craftsmanship, his uncanny grasp of historical period, and his gift for describing his characters compellingly within their environment.’’

After studying with Greta Garbo at Stockholm’s famous Dramatic Theatre School, Sjöberg rapidly made a name for himself as a theatre director, becoming chief director at the Stockholm Theatre by 1930. In the late 1920s he encountered the films of Eisenstein and Pabst, but the chief influence on his early films would appear to be the fatalism and melancholy of French ‘‘poetic realism’’ of the 1930s. However, in his first film, The Strongest, an epic tale of the seal hunters of Arctic Norway, the influences would appear to be an intriguing blend of Jack London, Robert Flaherty, the Sjöström of The Outlaw and His Wife and, in the remarkably fluidly edited bear-hunt that climaxes the film, Eisenstein. All this was too much for a cinema industry preoccupied with feeble studio comedies and light dramas, and Sjöberg was unable to make another film for ten years. Instead he confined his experiments in mise-en-scène to the theatre.

In They Stake Their Lives, a sombre story of the underground in an unidentified Baltic totalitarian state, and The Royal Hunt, which deals with Russian attempts to overthrow Gustav III of Sweden in the late eighteenth century, there are clear references to the Nazi threat. In more general terms these films deal with the theme of power and domination, one of the threads that runs through much of the director’s work. More important, however, is The Road to Heaven, a film very much in the Sjöström/Lagerlöf tradition that is generally regarded as one of the finest of the period 1920–1950 and an important milestone in the revival of the Swedish cinema at this time. A sort of Swedish Pilgrim’s Progress, it draws heavily on the same kind of Swedish peasant art which influenced The Seventh Seal, though it is both more nationalistic and more specifically and directly Christian in inspiration than that work. As Forsyth Hardy has pointed out, ‘‘it helped to give spiritual structure to the revival of the Swedish cinema.’’

Frenzy signalled a new departure both for Swedish cinema in general and Sjöberg’s work in particular, as well as the arrival of a powerful new talent in the form of its scriptwriter—Ingmar Bergman. In its story of a tyrannical schoolmaster (aptly nicknamed Caligula) who torments one of his students beyond endurance, Sjöberg clearly found a subject close to his heart, one which went beyond the obvious... theme of youthful ardour vs. oppressive, reactionary middle and old age. The story allowed him to explore power relationships (with all their distinctly sexual ramifications) in a more general way. Sjöberg created a remarkably claustrophobic and sombre atmosphere to match Bergman’s agonised screenplay—there are few sets, less still exterior shots, and the harsh lighting at times recalls the German silent cinema.

One of the themes explored in Frenzy is the destructive effect of outdated class divisions, and the evils of class society are also very much to the fore in Only a Mother, which is set among the “stataren,” rural communities where farm labourers and their families were forced to endure almost serf-like conditions. The social dimension of Sjöberg’s work at this time is a reminder that Sweden had recently introduced the full apparatus of a welfare state. At the same time, the director is still much preoccupied with formal matters, experimenting here with deep focus, huge close-ups, and sharply angled interior shots.

Sjöberg’s best known film is probably Miss Julie, which transforms Strindberg’s by-then rather outdated condemnation of the class system into a study of power relationships between the sexes. Here the sado-masochistic element comes right to the fore, which earned the film a rather risqué reputation in Anglo-Saxon countries. In addition to instituting considerable modifications to the original story, Sjöberg also experimented with rapid transitions between past and present, often without the aid of cuts, and the film also contains a rare example of the flash-forward. Like Iris and the Lieutenant and Only a Mother, Miss Julie is also an indictment of the position of women under a stern patriarchal order. Strindberg was also the inspiration behind Karin Mansdotter, parts of which were based on his play Erik XIV. Beginning with a bizarre (and rather out of place) parody of cinematic costume drama, the film is beautifully shot, mostly on location in some of Sweden’s most spectacular castles, by Sven Nykvist.

In his later work Sjöberg returned to contemporary Swedish society. The struggle between the sexes is continued in Wild Birds and the Bergman-scripted The Last Pair Out. At the same time, the director’s concern with social injustice is evident in The Judge, an indictment of dubious legal activities, and The Island, in which the central character urges his apathetic fellow islanders to fight government plans to take away their land and turn it into a gunnery range. It can be admitted, however, that Sjöberg’s later work does not show him at his best; characters too often come across as mere puppets, there are too many wordy passages, and Sjöberg often seems unable to sustain any consistency of mood or refrain from exaggerated melodramatics. Still, his dramatically resonant use of settings, and the way in which he controls his characters’ movements within them, remain interesting, reminding one that Sjöberg, at his best, has been compared to Emile Zola.

—Julian Petley

SJÖSTRÖM, Victor

Films as Director:

1912 Trägdärrsmaästaren (The Gardener) (+ role); Ett Hemligt giftemål (A Secret Marriage); En sommarnattsaga (A Summer Tale)
1913 Lö jen och tårar (Ridicule and Tears); Blodets röst (Voice of the Blood) (+ sc, role) (released 1923); Lady Marion sommarlirt (Lady Marion’s Summer Flirt); Äktenskapsbrydän (The Marriage Agency) (+ sc); Livets konflikter (Conflicts of Life) (co-d, role); Ingelborg Holm (+ sc); Halvblod (Half Breed); Miraklet; På livets ödesvägar (On the Roads of Fate)
1914 Prästen (The Priest); Det var i Maj (It Was in May) (+ sc); Kärlek starkare än hat (Love Stronger than Hatred); Dömen icke (Do Not Judge); Bra flicka reda sig själv (A Clever Girl Takes Care of Herself) (+ sc); Gataners barn (Children of the Street); Högjättels dotter (Daughter of the Mountains) (+ sc); Hjärtan som mötas (Meeting Hearts)
1915 Strefken (Strike) (+ sc, role); En av de många (One of the Many) (+ sc); Sonad oskuld (Expiated Innocence) (+ co-sc); Skomakare bliv vid din läst (Cobbler Stay at Your Bench) (+ sc)
1916 Lankshövdingens dottar (The Governor’s Daughters) (+ sc); Rösen på Tistelön (Havsganmar; The Rose of Thistle Island; Sea Eagle); I. Prövningens stund (Hour of the Trial) (+ sc, role); Skepp som mots (Meeting Ships); Hon segrade (She Conquered) (+ sc, role); Theresse (+ co-sc)
1917 Dödslyssen (Kiss of Death) (+ co-sc, role); Terje Vigen (A Man There Was) (+ co-sc, role)
1918 Berg-Ejvind och hans hustru (The Outlaw and His Wife) (+ co-sc, role); Tösen från stormytorpet (The Lass from the Stormy Craft) (+ co-sc)
1919 Ingmarsönerna, Parts I and II ( Sons of Ingmar) (+ sc, role); Hans nåds testamente (The Will of His Grace)
1920 Klosteret I Sendomir (The Monastery of Sendomir) (+ sc); Karin Ingmarsson (Karin, Daughter of Ingmar) (+ co-sc, role); Mästerman (Master Samuel) (+ role)
1921 Körkarlen (The Phantom Chariot; Thy Soul Shall Bear Witness) (+ sc, role as David Holm)
1922 Vem dömer (Love’s Crucible) (+ co-sc); Det omringgade huset (The Surrounded House) (+ co-sc, role)
1923 Eld ombord (The Tragic Ship) (+ role)
1924 Name the Man; He Who Gets Slapped
1925 Confessions of a Queen; The Tower of Lies
1927 The Scarlet Letter
1928 The Divine Woman; The Wind; Masks of the Devil
1930 A Lady to Love
1931 Markurells I Wadköping (+ role)
1937 Under the Red Rose
Other Films:

1912  Vampyren (Stiller) (role as Lt. Roberts); De svarta maskerna (Stiller) (role as the Lieutenant); I livets vår (Garbagni) (role)

1913  Nar karlekan dodar (Stiller) (role as the painter); Barnet (Stiller) (role as medical student)

1914  För sin kädelske skull (Stiller) (role as Borgen); Högfjällets dotter (Stiller) (role); Goldspindeln (Magnusen) (role); Thomas Graals bästa film (Stiller) (role as Thomas Graal); Thomas Graals bästa barn (Stiller) (role as Thomas Graal)

1934  Synnove Solbakken (T. Ibsen) (role)

1935  Valborgsmässa (Edgren) (role)

1937  John Ericsson (role)

1939  Gabben Kommer (Lindberg) (role); Mot nya tider (Wallen) (role)

1941  Striden går vidare (Molander) (role)

1943  Det brinner en eld (Molander) (role); Ordet (Molander) (role)

1944  Kejsaren av Portugalien (Molander) (role)

1947  Rallare (Mattson) (role)

1950  Till Glädje (Bergman) (role); Kvartetten som sprängdes (Molander) (role)

1952  Hård klang (Mattson) (role)

1955  Nattens väv (Mattson) (role)

1957  Smultronstället (Wild Strawberries) (Bergman) (role as Professor)

Publications

On SJÖSTRÖM: books—

On SJÖSTRÖM: articles—

* * *

With a career in film that in many ways paralleled that of his close friend Mauritz Stiller, Victor Sjöström entered the Swedish film industry at virtually the same time (1912), primarily as an actor, only to become almost immediately, like Stiller, a film director. Whereas Stiller had spent his youth in Finland, however, Sjöström had spent six formative years as a child in America’s Brooklyn. Once back in Sweden after an unhappy childhood, his training for the theater proved fruitful. He became a well-established actor before entering the film industry at the age of 32. “The thing that brought me into filmmaking was a youthful desire for adventure and a curiosity to try this new medium,” he once said in an interview. The first films in which he appeared in 1912 were Stiller’s The Black Masks and Vampyren. Although Sjöström proved excellent as an actor in comedy, his innate seriousness of outlook was reflected in the films he directed. He developed a deep response to nature and the spectacular northern landscape, capturing the expanses of ice, snow, trees, and mountains in all their (to him as to other Scandinavians) mystical force. One of his earliest films was Ingeborn Holm, which exposed the cruelties of the forced labor system to which the children of paupers were still subjected. This film was produced partially outdoors; Sjöström’s pantheistic response to nature was developed in Terje Vigen, his adaptation of Ibsen’s ballad poem, with its narrative set in the period of the Napoleonic confrontation with Britain. Sjöström himself played Terje, the bitter Norwegian sailor who had been imprisoned for a while by the British for attempting to break through their blockade at sea in order to bring food through to the starving people, including his wife and son, in his village. He fails in this attempt and they die as a consequence. Terje’s obsessive desire for vengeance is later purged as a result of his response to his British captor’s child, whom he rescues in a storm.

Sjöström became a prolific director. He completed nearly 30 films between 1912 and 1918, the year he directed The Outlaw and His Wife. Of that film, French critic and filmmaker Louis Delluc wrote in 1921: “Here without doubt is the most beautiful film in the world. Victor Sjöström has directed it with a dignity that is beyond words . . . it is the first love duet heard in the cinema. A duet that is entire life. Is it a drama? . . . I don’t know. . . . People love each other and live. That is all.” In this film a rich widow abandons her estate to live in the mountains with her outlaw lover until, hounded by his pursuers, they die together in the snow. It is typical of the Swedish film that winter, after the symbolic summer of love, should become the synonym for death.

Sjöström’s intense feeling for nature expanded still further in his first adaptation of a novel by Selma Lagerlöf who, as a writer in the grand tradition, became one of the primary inspirers of the Swedish cinema of this period. This adaptation was from The Lass from the Stormy Croft and featured a magnificent rustic setting which seems at once to transcend and embody the exigencies of human passion—the frustration of the poor peasant girl with her illegitimate child and the troubles that afflict the son of a landowner (played by Lars Hanson in his first important film role) who tries to befriend her. As Carl Dreyer, who in the same year made The Parson’s Widow in Sweden, commented, “Selma Lagerlöf’s predilection for dreams and supernatural events appealed to Sjöström’s own somewhat sombre artistic mind.”

Sjöström’s most famous film before his departure for Hollywood in 1923 was The Phantom Chariot (also known as Thy Soul Shall Bear Witness), also based on a novel by Selma Lagerlöf. The legend had it that the phantom chariot came once each year, on New Year’s Eve, St. Sylvester’s Night, to carry away the souls of sinners. In the film the central character is David Holm, a violent and brutalized man who is brought to relive his evil past on St. Sylvester’s Night, especially the ill-treatment he had given his wife, until his conscience is awakened. As Holm recalls his wicked deeds in flashback he is haunted by the approach of the chariot, and is saved just in time through reunion with his wife, whose imminent suicide he prevents. Holm is played brilliantly by Sjöström himself, while Julius Jaenzen’s multi-exposure camerawork emphasizes the distinction between body and soul in visuals that surpass virtually all that had been achieved in cinematography by 1920.

In the postwar era, Swedish films, with their comparatively heavy themes, began to prove less popular as exports. Sjöström, like Stiller, concentrated on his career as an actor, giving at the age of 78 a great performance as the aged professor in Bergman’s Wild Strawberries. The film, shot in the harsh Texan environment, finally drives her nearly insane and impels her to kill a male intruder in self-defense. The film, which at least one American reviewer praised for “its preservation of the simplicity of treatment in Thy Soul Shall Bear Witness.”

Sjöström returned to Sweden in 1928 and directed one good sound film, Markurells i Väsköping, in which he starred as a grim man, much like Terje Vigen, who is finally purged of his desire for revenge. Apart from directing a lame period romance in England called Under the Red Robe, with Raymond Massey and Conrad Veidt, Sjöström concentrated on his career as an actor, giving at the age of 78 a great performance as the aged professor in Bergman’s Wild Strawberries.

—Roger Manvell

SKOLIMOWSKI, Jerzy

Nationality: Polish. Born: Warsaw, 5 May 1938. Education: Educated in literature and history at Warsaw University, diploma 1959; Warsaw University and State Superior Film School in Lodz, 1960-64. Career: Published first collection of poetry, Quelque part près de soi, 1959; directed first feature (as film student), Ryosopis, 1964; Rece de gory banned by Polish authorities, left Poland, 1967; moved to United States, 1984. Awards: Grand Prix for Grand Prize, Bergamo International Film Festival, 1966, for Barrier; Golden Bear, Berlin Film Festival, 1967, for Le Depart; Special Jury Grand Prize, Cannes Film Festival, 1978, for The Shout; British Film Award and Best Screenplay, Cannes Festival, for Moonlighting, 1982, Special Prize, Venice Film Festival, 1985, for The Lightship.

Films as Director:

1960  Oko wykol (L’Oeil Torve) (short) (+ sc); Hamles (Le Petit Hamlet) (short) (+ sc); Erotyk (L’Érotique) (short) (+ sc)
1961  Boks (Boxing) (short) (+ sc); Prienddze albo zycie (La Bourse ou la vie) (short) (+ sc); Akt (short) (+ sc)
1964  Ryosopis (Identification Marks: None) (+ sc, pr, art d, ed, role as Andrzej Leszczyck)
1965  Walkover (Walkover) (+ sc, co-ed, role as Andrzej Leszczyck)
1966  Bariera (Barrier) (+ sc)
1967  Le Départ (+ co-sc); Rece do gory (Hands Up!) (+ sc, co-art d, role as Andrzej Leszczyck)
1968  Dialog (Dialogue) (+ sc, art d)
1969  The Adventures of Gerard (+ co-sc); Deep End (+ co-sc)
1971  King, Queen, Knav (co-sc)
1978  The Shout (+ co-sc)
1982  Moonlighting (+ sc, co-pr)
1984  Success Is the Best Revenge
1985  The Lightship
1989  Torrents of Spring (+ sc)
1991  Ferdydurke (+ sc)
1992  30 Door Key

Other Films:

1959  Niewinni czardodzieje (Innocent Sorcerers) (Wajda) (co-sc)
1960  Noz w wodzie (Knife in the Water) (Polanski) (co-sc); Przy Jaciel (A Friend) (co-sc)
1971  Falscung (Schlondorff) (role)
1985  White Knights (Hackford) (role)
1987  Big Shots (Mandel) (role)
1996  Mars Attacks! (Burton) (role)
1998  L.A. without a Map (Kaurismäki) (role)

Publications

By SKOLIMOWSKI: books—

Quelque part près de soi, Np, 1958.
La Hache et le ciel, Np, 1959.

By SKOLIMOWSKI: articles—

“An Accusation That I Throw in the Face of My Generation”—A Conversation with the Young Polish Director, Jerzy Skolimowski,” in Film Comment (New York), Fall 1968.
Interview with Michel Ciment and Bernard Cohn, in Positif (Paris), February 1972.

Interview with Dan Yakir in Film Comment (New York), November/December 1982.

Interview with Peter von Bagh, in Filmihullu (Helsinki), no. 6, 1997.

On SKOLIMOWSKI: book—

On SKOLIMOWSKI: articles—

Toeplitz, Krzysztof-Teodor, “Jerzy Skolimowski: Portrait of a Debutant Director,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Fall 1967.

Together with Roman Polanski, Jerzy Skolimowski is the most remarkable representative of the second generation of the Polish New Wave. Younger than Wajda, Munk, or Kawalerowicz, these two did not share the hope for a new society after World War II. They are more skeptical filmmakers, to the point of cynicism at times. With Polanski, Skolimowski wrote Knife in the Water, which deals precisely with the relationship between two generations, after having also collaborated on the script of Wajda’s Innocent Sorcerers, one of the director’s rare attempts at portraying Poland’s youth.

A student in ethnography, a poet, an actor, and a boxer, Skolimowski went to the Lodz film school (1960–1964) and graduated with a diploma work that brought world attention to his talent. That film, Ryosip (Identification Marks: None), and its totally controlled sequel Walkover, reveal an astonishing flexible style as it follows a central character, Andrzej Leszczyc, played by Skolimowski himself. Without resorting to a subjective camera, the director nevertheless makes us see reality through his hero. He refuses dramatic plot twists, filming instead in a manner very much like a jazz musician—all rhythm and improvisation. Ryosip tells of the few hours before being called up for military service, while Walkover provides an account of the time preceding a boxing match. A limited number of shots (39 and 29, respectively) give an extraordinary sense of fluidity, of life caught in its most subtle shifts.

Bariera is a much more literary and symbolic work. It offers the same themes and milieu (young people, often students), although with a dreamlike atmosphere. The film’s somnambulistic quality reappears later in Skolimowski’s work, though integrated into its realistic surface. “Our cynical and indifferent generation still possesses romantic aspirations,” says one of the characters, a statement that accurately sums up the filmmaker’s ambivalent attitude toward life.

If Bariera was, according to Skolimowski, influenced by Godard’s Pierrot le fou, his next film, Le Départ, shot in Belgium, borrowed two actors, Jean-Pierre Léaud and Catherine Duport, from the French director’s Masculin féminin. The film deals with a young hairdresser who dreams of becoming a rally driver, and his relationship with a girl. The same sensitive portrait of youth is found again in a more accomplished work, Deep End, a brilliant portrayal of a London swimming bath attendant and his tragic love affair.

The titles of Skolimowski’s films (Walkover, Barrier, Departure, Hands Up, Deep End) suggest the relationship to sports, movement, and physical effort that characterize his nervous and dynamic style. Hands Up, banned for fifteen years by the Polish authorities because of its bleak symbolic portrayal of a group of people shut up inside a railway carriage, prompted Skolimowski to work in the West, though he has always returned regularly to his home country. But difficulties associated with an international career appeared quickly with the failure of The Adventures of Gerard, a spoof on Conan Doyle’s Napoleonic novel, and the more evident one of King, Queen, Knave, a film based on Nabokov’s novel that was shot in Munich.

However, Skolimowski came back to the forefront of European filmmaking with The Shout and Moonlighting. The former, adapted from a Robert Graves short story, has a sense of the absurd which verges on creating a surrealistic atmosphere—a classic component of Polish culture. This film, which concerns a love triangle between a kind of sorcerer, the woman he is in love with, and her husband, is an intense, haunting piece of work.

Moonlighting, arguably Skolimowski’s best film to date, was written and shot within a few months and looks deceptively simple. The tale of four Polish workers sent from Warsaw to refurbish the house a rich Pole has bought in London gradually reveals layers of meaning, commenting on contacts between East and West and repression in Poland. The nightmare emerges slowly from a close scrutiny of reality, confirming that Skolimowski’s materialism and lucidity do not contradict but rather refine his unique poetic sensibility.

Subsequent films included Success, The Lightship, Torrets of Spring, and 30 Door Key. Of these, The Lightship was notable for its depiction of a grim power struggle between characters played by Klaus Maria Brandauer and Robert Duvall. Torrets of Spring, meanwhile, a visually lavish drama about a nineteenth-century Russian aristocrat and his love for two women, was based on an Ivan Turgenev story.

—Michel Ciment

SMITH, Kevin

Films as Director:

1992 Mae Day: The Crumbling of a Documentary (short) (+ sc, ro as himself, pr)
1994 Clerks (+ sc, ro as Silent Bob, co-pr, co-ed)
1995 Mallrats (+ sc, ro as Silent Bob)
1997 Chasing Amy (+ sc, ro as Silent Bob, co-ed)
1999 Dogma (+ sc, ro as Silent Bob, co-ed)
Kevin Smith (left) with Ben Affleck

Other Films:

1996  Drawing Flies (Gissing, Ingram) (ro as Silent Bob, pr)
1997  A Better Place (Pereira) (pr); Good Will Hunting (Van Sant) (co-ex-pr)
1998  Vulgar (Johnson) (ro as Martian Ingram); Independent's Day (Zenovich—for TV) (as himself); Overnight Delivery (Bloom) (co-sc, uncredited)
1999  Big Helium Dog (Lynch) (exec pr); Tail Lights Fade (Ingram) (exec consultant)
2000  Scream 3 (Craven) (ro as Silent Bob); Preacher (Talalay) (exec pr); Coyote Ugly (McNally) (co-sc)

Publications

By SMITH: books—

By SMITH: articles—

“Film Fraternity,” in Filmmaker (Los Angeles), no. 4, 1995.

“God Bless the Mall of America,” in Premiere (New York), July 1995.

“Malleable,” interview with M. Ingram in Film Threat (Beverly Hills), December 1995.

“Shannen Take 2: Director vs. Star,” in Film Threat (Beverly Hills), December 1995.

“Obsession Confession,” in Details (New York), November 1996.

“Strip Teased,” in Details (New York), November 1996.

“Mr. Smith Goes to Emotion,” interview with G. Fuller in Interview (New York), April 1997.

“Mr. Smith Goes to Church: Religious Spoof Dogma Came out of Crisis of Faith, Filmmaker Says,” interview with Bruce Kirkland, in Toronto Sun, 7 September 1999.

On SMITH: articles—

* * *

It is fitting that Kevin Smith hocked his comic book collection to partially finance Clerks, his breakthrough independent feature. The characters in Clerks and his subsequent films are reflective of the video game/comic book culture in which he came of age. They are slackers, stoners, and convenience store/suburban mall lounge lizards whose obsessions—American pop culture, drugs, and a colorfully graphic, gossipy, who-laid-who view of sex—have not transcended whose obsessions—American pop culture, drugs, and a colorfully graphic, gossipy, who-laid-who view of sex—have not transcended adolescence or young adulthood; his more entrepreneurial characters are artists, rather than yuppies. Smith’s films are set in a nondescript suburban-American landscape that is as much a part of his celluloid palate as Monument Valley was for John Ford.

The worst that can be said of Clerks is that it is a movie made by a very young person who is short on real-life experience, and whose world view has been derived from repeated screenings of Star Wars. But that is precisely the point: Clerks features a distinctive cinematic sensibility that can be fully appreciated by those of Smith’s age and background.

The main characters in the film are Dante, a likable 22-year-old convenience store clerk, and his obnoxious pal Randal, who works in an adjacent mom-and-pop video store. Dante and Randal are afflicted with the sort of ennui that the media tells us is the scourge of those contemporary twentysomethings who have not yet become millionaires by playing the stock market on-line. Dante resists the pleas of his girlfriend Veronica, who has been pressuring him to leave his dead-end job and return to school. He constantly complains about his job—if he quit, he would not be forfeiting a banker’s salary—and he obsesses about an ex-girlfriend who has just become engaged. Randal, meanwhile, spends more time talking trash with Dante than clerking in the video store. He casually and smugly insults customers, and is forever managing to foul up Dante’s life.

Clerks was inspired by Smith’s experiences working for $5 an hour at the Quick Stop, the New Jersey convenience store that is the film’s primary setting. He penned the script in a month, filmed it at the store during his off-hours at a cost of $27,575—and promptly found himself, at the tender age of 24, at the epicenter of the burgeoning mid-1990s independent film movement. There is neither sex nor nudity in the film, just some rough, locker-room language in which characters engage in hilariously profane sex-oriented conversations. Yet because of that language Clerks originally was rated NC-17, a fact that Miramax, the film’s distributor, cannily milked for the maximum amount of publicity. The rating was changed to R on appeal.

Mallrats, Smith’s follow-up feature, was a critical and commercial failure. Its story involves a parade of characters who hang out at a suburban mall; among them are T.S. Quint and Brodie, slackers who have just been dumped by their girlfriends. But Smith proved that he was no one-shot success story with his next film: Chasing Amy, a romantic comedy in which he ponders what might happen if a heterosexual male were to fall in love with a woman who is completely unavailable, not because she is married or has a steady boyfriend but because she prefers sleeping with women. Chasing Amy is the story of Holden, a successful young comic book artist who works with Banky, his old high school pal, and becomes smitten with Alissa, a perky fellow comic book artist, without knowing that she is a lesbian.

Suffice to say that in the final reel of a standard Hollywood romance, Alissa would permanently renounce her sexual preference and she and Holden would set off on a happy-ever-after dance along the New Jersey Turnpike of life. But Chasing Amy is no generic Hollywood product. So what happens to Alissa and Holden as they work out their feelings is far more complex and credible. As their stories unfold, Chasing Amy becomes a knowing examination of what it means to fall in love, and the sexual and emotional baggage that men and women bring to relationships in our modern era. With regard to Holden’s connection to Banky, Chasing Amy contemplates the meaning of friendship and the petty jealousies that may come between friends as well as lovers. Ultimately, the film works best as a fervent plea for open-mindedness, compassion, and sensitivity. As such, it is by far the most fully developed of Smith’s first three features.

Dogma, Smith’s next film, is a wickedly funny satire/fantasy/road movie about Loki and Bartleby, fallen angels who find a loophole in the Bible that will allow them to re-enter Heaven. As they set off on a movie about Loki and Bartleby, fallen angels who find a loophole in the Bible that will allow them to re-enter Heaven. As they set off on their quest, an array of characters parade across the screen. They include a woman whose religious faith has been severely tested, a messenger sent from heaven, a black apostle, a demon, and a muse. The film’s cheeky irreverence is exemplified by Smith’s casting of the anti-establishment comedian George Carlin as a Cardinal, and the pop singer Alanis Morisette as God. But the filmmaker is just being absurdist overtones, Dogma is a serious-minded reflection on the meaning of faith and spirituality. To this end, Smith poses a series of questions: Why do we practice religion, and what do we get out of our faith? How do we know that what is written in the Bible is fact? How do we know that the images of Jesus found in religious art are true-to-life? Could there have been another apostle, and might he have been black? Can a practicing Catholic justify working in a women’s health clinic? Could God really be a “she”? As Smith asks these questions, he also comes to conclusions. He is critical of the manner in which religion has been sold to the masses, as if it were a soft drink or potato chip; the corporate marketing of images that the masses come to worship as idols; and all of the wars and violence that, through the ages, have been carried out ‘‘in God’s name.’’

Depending upon your point of view, Dogma either is a provocative or profane film. To some, Smith is thoughtfully reflecting on the nature of faith. To others, his satirizing of religion is tantamount to blasphemy. And so, unsurprisingly, Dogma was the subject of much controversy prior to its release as it was denounced by conservative Catholics as being sacrilegious. Miramax, once a beacon for independent filmmaking but now an arm of Disney, bowed out as distributor. Dogma eventually was released by Lions Gate Films.

Smith’s films, all of which are powered by non-stop dialogue, are extensions of each other in that their characters are interrelated. Those portrayed or mentioned in one might be friends, acquaintances, old schoolmates, or former lovers of those in another. Two of Smith’s creations slink in and out of each, and actually have featured roles in Dogma: Jay and Silent Bob (the latter played by Smith), a two-person slacker/stoner Greek chorus. Jay (Jason Mewes) is the loquacious one, endlessly obsessing about and commenting on sex and drugs, while Silent Bob is usually, but not always, speechless. When he does speak, he offers gems of wisdom. In addition to Jay and Silent Bob, Smith’s films usually feature two male characters (Dante and Randal in Clerks; T.S. Quint and Brodie in Mallrats; Holden and Banky in Chasing Amy; and Loki and Bartleby in Dogma) who are long-time friends or partners, and who verbally spar as if they are Ralph and Alice Kramden in The Honeymooners.

—Rob Edelman

SODERBERGH, Steven

Nationality: American.
Born: 14 January 1963, in Atlanta, Georgia.
Education: High school graduate, 1980.
Family: Married Betsy Brantley, 1989 (divorced, 1994); one daughter.
Career: Did odd jobs while writing scripts and directing short films, 1980–85; directed 90125, a Yes concert film, for MTV, 1986; first feature, sex, lies, and videotape, a surprise international success, 1989.
Awards: Grammy Award for Best Director, for 90125, 1986; Palme d’Or for Best Feature Film, Cannes International Film Festival, 1989, and Sundance Film Festival Audience Award and Independent Spirit Awards for sex, lies, and videotape; National Society of Film Critics Best Director Award for Out of Sight, 1998.
Agent: Patrick Dollard, Dollard Management and Productions, 21361 Pacific Coast Highway vm3, Malibu, CA 90265, U.S.A.

Films as Director:

1986 90215
1989 sex, lies, and videotape (+ sc, ed)
1991 Kafka (+ ed)
1993 King of the Hill (+ sc); ‘‘The Quiet Room’’ (episode of TV series Fallen Angels)
1995 The Underneath (+ co-sc, uncredited)
1996 Gray’s Anatomy, Schizopolis (+ sc, ph, ro as Fletcher Munson/Dr. Jeffrey Korchek)
1998 Out of Sight
1999 The Limey

Other Films:

- 1993 Suture (McGehee) (exec pr)
- 1996 The Daytrippers (Mottola) (co-pr)
- 1998 Nightwatch (Borndal) (co-sc); Pleasantville (Ross) (co-pr)

Publications

By SODERBERGH: book—

- sex, lies, and videotape (journal and screenplay), New York, 1990.

On SODERBERGH: book—

On SODERBERGH: articles—

- Jacobson, Harlan, ‘‘Truth or Consequences,’’ in Film Comment (New York), July-August 1989.

Kehr, Dave, “‘The Hours and Times: The (Film) World according to Steven Soderbergh,’” in Film Comment (New York), September-October 1999.

** * * *

Steven Soderbergh’s work is difficult to characterize as a whole, considering its remarkable variety. His first four features differ considerably in both style and subject: a contemporary sexual drama/comedy, a fantasy thriller set in Kafka’s Prague, a portrait of a child growing up in Depression-era America, and a remake of a classic film noir. And the next five include a farce too avant-garde even for the art-house circuit and an altogether conventional Hollywood star vehicle. Following the sensational success of his first feature, sex, lies, and videotape, Soderbergh was often compared to other young independent American filmmakers, notably Jim Jarmusch and Hal Hartley. However, his film style has turned out to be much less immediately identifiable (or from a Hollywood viewpoint, less eccentric) than Hartley’s in particular. Overall, one can say that in his best films, he tells stories in concise and polished ways, reminiscent of classic Hollywood models, yet with fresh, unusual structures and surprising turns from scene to scene; and his cinematography is usually superb, notably in framing and lighting, though always adaptive to the overall subject and mood.

sex, lies, and videotape is more than a highly accomplished debut film—it would be highly accomplished at any stage of a career. In portraying a budding relationship between a man who is impotent, except when watching his own video interviews with women on sexual topics, and a woman recoiling from the discovery that her husband and sister are having an affair, the writer/director manages to create neither low farce nor soap-operative psychodrama. Actually, the film is rather touchingly romantic, in a witty, gentle, uns soppy sort of way. Soderbergh deftly introduces the four main characters through a montage of scenes linked by a voiceover of Ann speaking to her therapist; he moves the story forward with some striking close-ups and high angle shots, while unobtrusively linking each character to a special decor (mostly empty spaces in Graham’s case). And he brilliantly structures the climactic scene of Ann taking hold of Graham’s video camera: its second half unfolds only later, when her unfaithful but furious husband seizes her tape and begins to watch it, at which point Soderbergh cuts from the video footage to a flashback of Ann and Graham making the tape. As for the director’s handling of the actors, one might simply note that the film immeasurably boosted the careers of James Spader and Andie MacDowell and gave Laura San Giacomo a strong debut. If Peter Gallagher’s performance is merely solid—perhaps because his character is conceived more as a simple type than the other three—Soderbergh did later provide the actor with one of his best, most subtle screen roles, in The Underneath. Striking into new territory for his eagerly anticipated second feature, Soderbergh created a work uneasily occupying a space between a European art film and a plot-driven Hollywood suspense film. Kafka has a script that derives from two different kinds of paranoid world—the literary one of Franz Kafka and the cinematic one of the political-conspiracy thriller. Its visual style seems inspired by Carol Reed’s The Third Man (rather than Orson Welles’s version of Kafka’s The Trial), and perhaps too blatantly by Terry Gilliam’s Brazil in the color sequence inside the Castle. The film does have astonishingly handsome black-and-white cinematography, some quite terrifying moments involving a shrieking killer, and some droll slapstick humor in the antics of a pair of office assistants. But there is an awkwardness in having a protagonist who on one level is the ‘‘real’’ Franz Kafka—shown as a drudge in an insurance office who writes agonized letters to his father and fantastic stories like ‘‘Metamorphosis’’—but on another level is a reluctant movie hero drawn into uncovering a sinister organization that turns out to be diabolical in a much more conventional way than anything in an actual Kafka story.

King of the Hill has its terrifying moments too, notably in the figure of a snarly bellboy trying to evict the young hero from the hotel room where his father has more or less abandoned him. Indeed, all three of Soderbergh’s features following sex, lies, and videotape have a single isolated male protagonist trapped in a world out of his control or comprehension. But King of the Hill also particularly recalls sex, lies, and videotape in its concern with lies and the doubtful knowability of other people. The plot, based upon A. E. Hotchner’s memoir, centers upon the efforts of an impoverished twelve-year-old (Jesse Bradford) to pass himself off at school as well-to-do, and upon his need to trust that his suspiciously under demonstrative father (Jeroen Krabbe) will return to him. Overall, the story line is rather dark: the boy not only is exposed as a liar, but loses contact with everyone he loves—in turn, his kid brother, sickly mother, travelling-salesman father, the girl next door, and his roughish best friend—until he is nearly literally reduced to starvation. Yet, in Dickensian fashion, there are also warm, even comical moments and whole episodes, as well as a number of reunions. Soderbergh manages to balance the bleak and joyful elements skillfully, for the most part, though one might wish the cinematography did not have that hazy golden glow that for a time was too commonly used for period pieces.

In choosing to remake the classic film noir Criss Cross, Soderbergh had a perfect vehicle for continuing his fascination with motifs of lies, trust, and seemingly cosmic entrapment within the conventions of a genre that specializes in such concerns. Most impressively, The Underneath has the true noir feel, without aping the black-and-white visuals of the Robert Siodmak original or other 1940s films, or leaning toward parody à la Body Heat, or making a slick melodrama with an unambiguously decent protagonist and an upbeat ending (as in Barbet Schroeder’s remake of Kiss of Death, which opened at the same time as The Underneath). Selecting widescreen Panavision with some very unsettling compositions, and constructing a far more complex flashback structure than the original film had, Soderbergh flawlessly plays out the drama of an ex-gambling addict still obsessed with his ex-wife (now married to a gangster) and drawn into an armored car robbery that betrays his kindly mentor. There is a telling moment when Michael’s new girlfriend, sensing his mind on other things, remarks, ‘‘You’re not very present tense’’: a perfect description of a noir hero trapped in webs of the past and fearing the future. In the film’s fluid flashback structure we indeed see Michael’s life fluctuating between three timelines, and only gradually put the puzzle together: his selfish or addictive past (marked by his having a beard); his ethical/familial/sexual entanglements when he returns to his hometown; and (in what may be considered flashforwards) the day of the robbery, marked by bluish lighting and time subtitles, like ‘‘6:02 p.m.’’ Only at the violent moment of the robbery, more than an hour into the film, are we fully ‘‘caught up’’ in time; and at this point
Soderbergh proceeds to a daring seven minutes of POV shots as a delirious Michael watches various characters address him in his hospital bed. This is followed by a set piece of suspense, involving a possible assassin, that owes something to Siodmak’s film but is so superbly gauged that it is a classic in itself.

Receiving mixed reviews and low attendance at its opening, The Underneath quickly disappeared from theatres—an undeserved fate for one of the best of the neo-noirs, and perhaps Soderbergh’s most accomplished work after sex, lies, and videotape. Taking a break from conventional storytelling, he shot a Spaulding Gray performance piece, Gray’s Anatomy, and then the curious Schizopolis, which he wrote, photographed, and starred in, playing both a minor executive for a Scientology-like firm and a dentist who is having an affair with the executive’s wife. Soderbergh proves to be a deft enough comic actor, and writes some ingenious dialogue for husband and wife in the form of summaries. (Upon the wife’s return home “from a movie”: “Obligatory question about the evening’s activities.” “Oh, qualified, vaguely positive reply.”) Less amusing are scenes when his character is dubbed into Italian or French, or when men in white outfits are chasing a madman wearing only a t-shirt with the movie’s name on it. Parts of the film toy with narrative levels in a Monty Python manner, but the comic timing often seems vaguely off.

Soderbergh moves back into fine form, however, and critical and popular success, with the Elmore Leonard adaptation Out of Sight. Too playful to be properly called a thriller, though it features jailbreaks, crazed killers, graphic violence, and a climactic armed robbery caper, the film provides perfect roles for George Clooney as a cool and clever petty criminal and Jennifer Lopez as a U.S. Marshall trying to bring him in but (sort of) falling in love with him. The film’s racial and gender politics may be open to question (black men are either villains or loyal sidekicks, and Lopez is drawn to Clooney even though he kidnaps her upon their first meeting), but the performances are accomplished, the jazzy soundtrack sets a laid-back mood, and the editing is beautifully fluid even with the film’s extremely intricate flashback/flashforward structure. All of these virtues come together in a scene of seduction with snow falling outside a hotel window, a model of elegant cinematic romance.

The Limey uses flashbacks and flashforwards too, but in less fluid, more flashy self-conscious way. Here the technique and some of the plot recall John Boorman’s 1967 Point Blank. Terrence Stamp is suitably hard-boiled as an ex-con taking revenge on a whole slew of younger mobsters, but Peter Fonda as the head villain seems a gimmick in casting, and the tale, despite the narrative games, is rather one-dimensional, with a weak resolution.

Perhaps the most surprising turn in Soderbergh’s career to date is his choice of the muckraking drama Erin Brockovich for his next project, but his actual direction of it. From the opening close-up of Julia Roberts the film is clearly gauged as a vehicle for the star, whose demeanor is just a little too classy, and her outfits a little too calculatedly vulgar, for her to be fully plausible as the real-life redneck lawyer’s assistant who brought a successful lawsuit against a powerful utility for poisoning people’s groundwater. But the casting is not the problem: it is that virtually every shot, every character’s reaction to every story development, seems utterly predictable from beginning to end. One can only hope that the film’s huge box-office success will not keep Soderbergh from making the deftly structured, surprising dramas he has achieved in the past.

—Joseph Milicia

SOLANAS, Fernando E., and Octavio GETINO

Education: Solanas studied law, theater, and musical composition.

Career: Solanas worked in advertising, early 1960s; Getino active as writer, also made short documentary Trasmallos, early 1960s; both entered Cine Liberación group, making underground films, 1966; Perón returned to power, Getino accepted post on national film board, 1973; following military coup against Perón, Solanas moved to Paris, Getino moved to Peru, working for TV, 1976; Getino moved to Mexico as member of Film Dept. of the Universidad Autónoma de México, 1982. Awards: Solanas, Best Director Award, Cannes Festival, for Sur, 1988.

Films as Directors:

1968 La hora de los hornos (The Hour of the Furnaces) (Solanas d, co-sc, co-ph, ed, mus; Getino co-sc, sound)
1971 Perón: actualización política y doctrinaria para la toma del poder; Perón: La revolución justicialista (both films made as part of Grupo de Cine Liberación)
1973 El familiar (Getino only)
1976 Los hijos de Fierro (Solanas only)
1978 La familia Pichilin (Getino only)
1979 La mirada de los otros (Regard des autres) (doc) (Solanas only)
1986 Tangos—el exilio de Gardel (Tangos—l’exil de Gardel) (Solanas only)
1988 Sur (Solanas only)
1992 El Viaje (Solanas only)
1998 La Nube (The Clouds) (Solanas only) (+ sc, exec pr)

Publications

By SOLANAS AND GETINO: books—

Cine, cultura y descolonización, Mexico City, 1973.
Getino, Octavio, Notas sobre cine argentino y latinoamericano, Mexico City, 1984.

By SOLANAS AND GETINO: articles—

“Fernando Solanas: An Interview,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Fall 1970.

“De La hora de los hornos a Sur: Entrevista con Fernando Solanas,” with Luis Gastelum, in Dicine (Mexico City), September 1989.

“Durch die Stimme der Poesie,” an interview with Margret Köhler, in Film-Dienst (Cologne), 13 April 1993.

On SOLANAS AND GETINO: books—

On SOLANAS AND GETINO: articles—

Matthews, John, “... And After?: A Response to Solanas and Getino,” in Afterimage (London), Summer 1971.

Origинатis of the pivotal “third cinema” concept, Fernando E. Solanas and Octavio Getino demonstrated its practice in the only really important film they were to make—the influential La hora de los hornos. “Third cinema” was the product of a very specific context: the world-wide insurrections during the late 1960s. While U.S. students were protesting against the Vietnam War, Argentina moved close to genuine social revolution for the first time in its history. Solanas and Getino participated in that movement as cineastes, but they made it clear that their concern was with social change, not film art, in their first declaration as the Cine Liberacion Group: “Our commitment as cineastes in a dependent country is not with universal culture or art or abstract man; before anything else it is with the liberation of our country and the Latin American peoples.”

As intellectuals and artists in a neo-colonial situation, Solanas and Getino were greatly influenced by the “Third Worldism” of the period, frequently citing ideologists from the African (Frantz Fanon) and Asian (Mao Tse-Tung) struggles. They contrasted “third cinema” to the “first cinema” of the Hollywood industry and to the auteurist “second cinema” in various ways, distinguishing it first of all by its ideological commitment to anti-imperialism and the struggle for socialism. Against the consumerism provoked by the hermetic narrative structures of Hollywood, they proposed a cinema which would require active audience participation. Thus, a film was important as a “detonator” or a “pretext” for assembling a group, not as an experience that was born and that died on the screen. Likening themselves to guerrillas who open paths with machete blows, they perceived cinema as a provisional tool: “Our time is one of hypothesis rather than thesis, a time of works in process—unfinished, unordered, violent works made with the camera in one hand and a rock in the other.”

The most realized description of “third cinema” can be found near the end of their often-reprinted essay, “Toward a Third Cinema.” There they summarize it in the following manner: “The third cinema above all counters the film industry of a cinema of characters with one of themes, that of individuals with that of masses, that of the cinema above all counters the film industry of an ideological commitment to anti-imperialism and the struggle for socialism. Against the consumerism provoked by the hermetic narrative structures of Hollywood, they proposed a cinema which would require active audience participation. Thus, a film was important as a “detonator” or a “pretext” for assembling a group, not as an experience that was born and that died on the screen. Likening themselves to guerrillas who open paths with machete blows, they perceived cinema as a provisional tool: “Our time is one of hypothesis rather than thesis, a time of works in process—unfinished, unordered, violent works made with the camera on one hand and a rock in the other.”

The most realized description of “third cinema” can be found near the end of their often-reprinted essay, “Toward a Third Cinema.” There they summarize it in the following manner: “The third cinema above all counters the film industry of a cinema of characters with one of themes, that of individuals with that of masses, that of the author with that of the operative group, one of neocolonial misinformation with one of information, one of escape with one that recaptures the truth, that of passivity with that of aggressions. To an institutionalized cinema, it counterposes a guerrilla cinema; to movies as shows, it opposes a film... to a cinema made for the old kind of human being, it proposes a cinema fit for a new kind of human being, for what each one of us has the possibility of becoming.”

Given their concern to produce a cinema of information rather than one of fantasies to be consumed, Solanas and Getino naturally turned to the documentary. However, they conceived of the documentary as “not fundamentally one which illustrates, documents, or passively establishes a situation; rather it attempts to intervene in the situation as an element providing thrust or rectification... it provides discovery through transformation.” La hora de los hornos may be a bit too didactic at times, but it was certainly more “revolutionary” than the documentaries they were to make as the official cineastes they became on the return of Juan Perón, the urban populist who was president of Argentina (1946–55 and 1973–74).
Because of the timeliness of La hora de los hornos and the extensive publication of Solanas and Getino’s theoretical writings and interviews, they have received attention which may be disproportionate to that given to other Latin American cineastes of greater achievement, most notably the Cubans. Nonetheless, the French film critic Guy Hennebelle argued that “third cinema” is the concept that seems to be “most viable” as a counterpoint to traditional film study, stating, “according to this perspective, a veritable ‘counter-history’ of the seventh art is yet to be written.” In both their writings and their cinematic practice, Solanas and Getino have provided an alternative and a clearly articulated challenge to bourgeois cinema.

—John Mraz

SOLAS, Humberto

Nationality: Cuban. Born: Havana, December 1942. Education: Studied architecture, 1957. Career: Involved in insurrectionary movement against Batista government, 1957–59; member of Instituto Cubano de Arte e Industria Cinematografico (ICAIC), from 1959; directed first film in collaboration with Hector Veitia, under supervision of Joris Ivens, 1961; Licenciatura in history, University of Havana, 1978.

Films as Director:

1961 Casablanca
1962 Minerva traduce el mar (co-d)
1963 Variaciones; El retraso
1964 El acoso
1965 La acusation; Manuela
1968 Lucía
1972 Un día de Noviembre
1974 Simparele
1975 Cantata de Chile (+ sc)
1977 Nacer en Leningrado (short)
1978 Wilfredo Lam
1982 Cecilia Valdés
1983 Amada
1986 Un hombre de exito (A Successful Man) (+ sc)
1992 El Siglo de las luces

Publications

By SOLAS: articles—

Interview with Gerardo Chijona, in Cine Cubano (Havana), March 1978.

Interview with Julianne Burton and Marta Alvear, in Jump Cut (Chicago), December 1978.

Interview with J. King, in Framework (Norwich), Spring 1979.

“Reflexiones,” in Cine Cubano (Havana), no. 102, 1982.

Interview with H. Romano, in Jeune Cinéma (Paris), July/August 1993.

“Kino in Kuba,” an interview with Rainer Braun, in EPD Film (Frankfurt), May 1997.

On SOLAS: books—

On SOLAS: articles—

Sutherland, Elizabeth, “Cinema of Revolution—Ninety Miles from Home,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Winter 1961/62.

Mraz, John, “Lucía: History and Film in Revolutionary Cuba,” in Film and History (Newark, New Jersey), February 1975.

“Solas Issue” of Jump Cut (Chicago), December 1978.

Film a Doba (Prague), November 1986.

Perhaps the foremost practitioner of the historical genre for which Cuban cinema has achieved international acclaim, Humberto Solas is a member of the first generation of directors to mature under the revolution. Of humble origins, Solas became an urban guerrilla at age fourteen and later left school altogether because “it was a very unstable time to try to study. Either Batista (dictator of Cuba) closed down the university, or we did.” Prior to the triumph of the revolution, being a filmmaker “seemed like an unrealizable dream,” but Solas financed a short film out of his savings and was invited to join the Cuban Film Institute (ICAIC) soon after its founding in 1959. Although it is customary for Cuban directors to serve an extensive apprenticeship in documentaries, Solas directed several early fiction shorts as well. He considers his imitation of European film styles in these works to be typical of feelings of cultural inferiority and alienation in the underdeveloped world, and affirms that “Neither me, nor my generation, nor my country can be seen in any of these films.”
Historical subjects proved to be Solas’s avenue to Cuban and Latin American reality. He believes that the importance attached to historical films in Cuba derives from the fact that “Our history had been filtered through a bourgeois lens. We lack a coherent, lucid, and dignified appreciation of our national past.” Manuela, a medium-length film on the guerrilla war in the mountains, was the first of Solas’s works to embody “more genuinely Cuban forms of expression.” His continuing search for national (and Latin American) cinematic idioms and themes led him to direct his masterpiece to date, Lucia, at age twenty-six. Focusing on three periods of Cuban history through the characters of representative women, Solás used three different film styles to portray forms of experience and cognition during these epochs. In his later films, Solas interpretively analyzed the history of Haiti (Simparele), Chile (Cantata de Chile), and slavery in Cuba (Cecilia Valdés). These works are marked by an exciting blend of music, dance, documentary footage, primitive painting, and the re-enactment of historical events in an operatic style.

Solas considers his films “historical melodramas,” in which a Marxist perspective provides a materialistic explanation for events and personal psychology. He contrasts this to common melodrama and its “particular world of valorative abstractions” which determine events, but lack the power to explain them. For example, although the travails suffered by the heroines of Lucia are experienced personally, they are depicted as deriving specifically from the colonial and neo-colonial situation of Cuba (and vestigial machismo), rather than from any “eternal passions” which have no relationship to concrete historical circumstances.

For Solas, historical cinema is always a dialogue about the present, and he has often chosen women as a central metaphor in his films because, as a dominated group, they feel more deeply and reflect more immediately the contradictions of society—for example, the maintenance of archaic forms such as machismo in a revolutionary situation. As Solas states: “The sad masquerade of limited, archetyped, and suffocating human relations in defense of private property is most transparent in the case of the women—half of humanity. The pathetic carnival of economic exploitation begins there.” To Solas, the past is only present insofar as it continues to condition (for both good and bad) the lives of people today. It is about this past/present that Humberto Solas has made and continues to make beautiful and moving cinema.

—John Mraz

SOLONDZ, Todd

Nationality: American. Born: Newark, New Jersey, 15 October 1959. Education: Studied film, New York University. Career: Made three award-winning short films while at New York University, Feelings, Babysitter, Schatt’s Last Shot; spent six years teaching English as a Second Language to immigrants from Syria, Russia, and other countries; made short film, How I Became a Leading Artistic Figure in New York City’s East Village Cultural Landscape, for Saturday Night Live. Awards: Grand Jury Prize, Sundance Film Festival, for Welcome to the Dollhouse, 1996; FIPRESCI Award, Cannes Film Festival, for Happiness, 1998.

Films as Director:
- 1989 Fear, Anxiety, and Depression (+ sc, ro as Ira Ellis)
- 1995 Welcome to the Dollhouse (Middle Child) (+ sc, pr)
- 1998 Happiness (+ sc)

Films as Actor:
- 1988 Married to the Mob (as The Zany Reporter)
- 1997 As Good as It Gets (as Man on Bus)

Publications

By SOLONDZ: articles—

On SOLONDZ: articles—

* * *

Todd Solondz’s first film—the one almost nobody has seen including (or so he claims) Solondz himself—was called Fear, Anxiety, and Depression. It’s a measure of the precision with which the director has staked out his own highly specific territory that the title could have served equally well for either of his two subsequent features. With Welcome to the Dollhouse and, even more, Happiness, Solondz has definitively established himself as the cinematic bard of squirming, self-despising misery. Swimming determinedly against the mainstream of American cinema, with its propensity for easy consolation and feel-good narrative closure, he has so far persisted, often in the face of public outrage and critical abuse, with his disquieting brand of anguished comedy.

“Misanthropy” is the charge most often levelled at Solondz; in a sustained and largely personalised attack, the critic Charles Taylor accused him of “timidity of technique, paucity of insight and smug misanthropy.” These and similar indictments were prompted by Happiness. But it could be argued that the widely acclaimed Dollhouse painted a blacker picture of humankind in general. While continuing the cycle of “schooldays are hell” dark comedies such as Michael Lehmann’s Heathers and Richard Linklater’s Dazed and Confused, Solondz’s film lacks any leavening of borderline sympathetic characters. In Dollhouse nobody is likeable, not even the victimised heroine; when the opportunity offers, she callously vents her spleen on someone yet more vulnerable than herself. It’s clear that Dawn—even her name is a cruel irony—will grow up into a bitter, unpleasant adult thanks to her childhood torments. In Solondz’s own words, “Both the persecutors and the persecuted are damaged and warped, maybe for life.” The characters of Happiness are all, in their different ways, social disaster areas, but not all of them are ill-intentioned.

Ironically, if Solondz had made everybody in the film nastier it might have hit a lot less flak. Press hackles were raised, and Happiness’s distributors, October, were forced by their parent company Universal to drop the film, largely on account of its paedophile element. The film’s most seemingly normal and well-adjusted character, a happily married psychiatrist, turns out to be a serial rapist who drugs his 10-year-old son’s male schoolfriends during overnight stays in order to sodomise them. Solondz has the audacity not only to present this man in the context of a comedy (albeit a thoroughly miserablist comedy), but to refuse to demonise him. The psychiatrist, Bill, may be a pederast, but he’s also a good husband and a loving father. The scene where Bill, exposed, has to explain himself to his son is honest, tender—and funny.

In response to the expressions of outrage, and to objections that the film as a whole mocks and patronises social inadequates, Solondz responds, “I don’t see them that way. I endeavour to get under the skin of characters who for me are bleeding souls. The compelling themes for me are loneliness and desire, alienation and a struggle to connect.” At the same time, the director who originally wanted to call Dollhouse “Faggots and Retards” could scarcely claim that controversy over his work was unexpected, or even uninvited. “After Dollhouse everything was open to me, careerwise. I wanted to take advantage of that. . . . So I thought what’s the most horrific, horrible thing? I wanted to know how far I could push.”

It can’t be denied that the comedy of Solondz’s films—Dollhouse no less than Happiness—derives from cruelty, and several of his characters, such as Philip Seymour Hoffman’s sweaty sexual harasser in Happiness, can well be described as grotesque. But it’s disputable whether their creator treats them cruelly; even at their most abjectly inadequate, they never lack the last saving degree of pathos. Solondz’s films tread a very fine line, a knife-edge between comedy and contempt. It’s a fiendishly difficult balancing-act, and he doesn’t always succeed in maintaining it; but in view of the vast preponderance of comedies that plump, complacently for the easiest of options, Solondz deserves applause for the disquieting audacity of his vision.

—Philip Kemp

SPHEERIS, Penelope

Films as Director:

1981 The Decline of Western Civilization (doc) (+ sc, pr)
1984 Suburbia (The Wild Side) (+ sc)
Penelope Spheeris with Marlon Wayans on the set of Senseless

1985  The Boys Next Door
1986  Hollywood Vice Squad
1987  Dudes
1988  The Decline of Western Civilization II: The Metal Years (doc)
      (+ sc)
1991  Prison Stories: Women on the Inside (for TV) (episode of three-part film)
1992  Wayne’s World; Lifers Group: World Tour (doc short)
1993  The Beverly Hillbillies
1994  The Little Rascals (+ sc)
1995  Black Sheep
1998  The Thing in Bob’s Garage; Senseless; The Decline of Western Civilization Part III

Other Films:

1979  Real Life (Brooks) (pr)
1987  Summer Camp Nightmare (The Butterfly Revolution) (Dragin)
      (co-sc)
1990  Wedding Band (Raskov) (role); Thunder and Mud
1992  Wayne’s World
1993  The Beverly Hillbillies
1994  The Little Rascals (+ co-sc)
1996  Black Sheep

Publications

By SPHEERIS: articles—

On SPHEERIS: articles—

Occhiogrosso, Peter, article in Premiere (New York), October 1987.

* * *

Unlike many women directors, Penelope Spheeris does not make films that are sensitive at their core, that focus on women and their relationships and emotions. Rather, her films—at least the group she made in the first section of her career—are hard-edged and in-your-face brutal. In terms of subject matter, they often deal with male adolescent angst as it exists within a grim, realistic urban environment. If none are particularly distinguished, they certainly are linked thematically, and by their solemn and depressing outlook.

Suburbia, Spheeris’s first non-documentary feature, details the plight of a group of teen runaways residing on the edge of Los Angeles. It opens with a pack of wild dogs tearing a baby to shreds. The Boys Next Door is the saga of two teen boys who become serial killers. It included footage that had to be edited out in order to avoid an X rating. Dudes focuses on some young urban punk rockers who cross paths with murderous Southwestern rednecks. Not all of Spheeris’s young protagonists are male, however. One of the characters in Hollywood Vice Squad is a runaway girl who has become a heroin-addicted prostitute.

Spheeris has admitted that her preoccupation with alienation and brutality is directly related to the incidents in her life. “I look at violence in a realistic way because I’ve experienced a lot of it in my own life,” she once told an interviewer. While she grew up in a travelling side show called the Magic Empire Carnival, there was nothing enchanting about her childhood. When she was seven years old, her father was murdered. Her younger brother died at the hands of a drunken driver. Her mother, an alcoholic, was married nine times. And her lover, the father of her daughter Anna, overdid on heroin in 1974. Perhaps the infant being torn apart at the beginning of Suburbia is a representation of innocent young Penelope Spheeris, whose childhood purity was ripped from her at a too-young age.

As a child, Spheeris became captivated by rock music as an expression of youthful rebellion. This interest led her into a career in the music industry (as she formed her own company, Rock ‘n’ Reel, which produced short promotional films for such groups as the Doobie Brothers) and to the subject matter of her initial feature, the one which established her as a director. It is the 1981 documentary The Decline of Western Civilization, which records the late 1970s punk rock scene in Los Angeles. Featured are groups with such names as Circle Jerks, Fear, X, and Catholic Discipline, which are made up of rockers who are alienated not only from the core of straight American society but from the established, old guard in the rock ‘n’ roll hierarchy; to these rockers, the Beatles, Rolling Stones, or Kinks are as much a part of the mainstream as Spiro Agnew. Six years later, Spheeris made The Decline of Western Civilization Part II: The Metal Years, which contrasted several veterans of the heavy metal scene (including Ozzy Osbourne, Gene Simmons, and members of Aerosmith) to younger punk wannabes. Indeed, Spheeris’s attraction to individuals so far outside even the farthest degrees of the establishment may be traced to one of the films she made while a student at the UCLA Film School, Hats Off to Hollywood, about the romance between a drag queen and a lesbian.

Spheeris’s first mega-hit came with Wayne’s World, based on the nonsensical but nonetheless popular Saturday Night Live skit featuring Mike Myers and Dana Carvey as self-proclaimed “party dudes” who have their own cable TV show. Despite the film’s box-office success, it is too often idiotic and dull. Her features since then, like The Beverly Hillbillies and The Little Rascals, are even bigger disappointments, and far removed from the spirit of her earlier work: the first is a poorly done version of the silly but funny 1960s TV sitcom, and the second a pale reworking of the beloved Hal Roach one-and-two-reel comedies.

—Rob Edelman

SPIELBERG, Steven

Nationality: American. Born: Cincinnati, Ohio, 18 December 1947. Education: California State College at Long Beach, B.A. in English, 1970. Family: Married 1) actress Amy Irving (divorced 1989), one son, one daughter; 2) actress Kate Capshaw, one daughter. Career: Won amateur film contest with 40-minute film Escape to Nowhere, 1960; on strength of film Amblin’, became TV director for Universal, late 1960s; TV work included episodes of Marcus Welby, M.D., Columbo, and Night Gallery, and TV films, including Duel, then given theatrical release; directed first feature, The Sugarland Express, 1974; formed own production company, Amblin Productions; produced television series Amazing Stories, late 1980s, and seaQuest DSV and others, 1990s; formed new Hollywood studio DreamWorks SKG, with David Geffen and Jeffrey Katzenberg, 1995. Awards: David Di Donatello Award (Italy) for Best Foreign Director, Kinema Jumpo Award (Japan) for Best Foreign Director, National Society of Film Critics Award for Best Director, and L.A. Film Critics Award for Best Director, for E.T., 1982; Directors Guild Award for Best Director, and British Academy of Film and Television Arts Award for Best Director, for The Color Purple, 1985; Irving G. Thalberg Award for body of work, Motion Picture Academy, 1986; D. W. Griffith Award, National Board of Review, for Empire of the Sun, 1987; Academy Awards for Best Director and Best Film, L.A. Film Critics Best Film, New York Film Critics Circle Best Film, D. W. Griffith Award for Best Film, and National Society of Film Critics Best Film and Director, for Schindler’s List, 1993; Golden Lion for Career Achievement, Venice Film Festival, 1993; Life Achievement Award, American Film Institute, 1995; Distinguished Public Service Award, U.S. Navy, 1999. Agent: Jay Moloney, Creative Artists Agency, 9830 Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A. Address: Amblin Entertainment/Dreamworks SKG, 100 Universal City Plaza, Bungalow 477, Universal City, CA 91608–1085, U.S.A.

Films as Director, Scriptwriter, and Producer:

1969 Amblin’ (short)
1971 Duel (for TV)
1972 Something Evil (for TV)
1974 The Sugarland Express (+ co-story)
1975 Jaws
1977 Close Encounters of the Third Kind (2nd version released 1980) (+ story)
1979 1941
1981 Raiders of the Lost Ark
1982 E.T.—The Extraterrestrial (co-pr)
1983 episode of The Twilight Zone—The Movie (co-pr)
1984 Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom
1986 The Color Purple (co-pr)
1987 Empire of the Sun (co-pr)
1989 Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade
1990 Always (co-pr)
1991 Hook
1993 Jurassic Park (+ co-exec pr); Schindler’s List (+ co-exec pr)
1997 The Lost World; Jurassic Park; Amistad (+ pr)
1998 Saving Private Ryan (+ pr)
1999 The Unfinished Journey (short)
2001 A. I. (+ co-sc, pr)
2002 Minority Report (+ pr)

Other Films:

1973 Ace Eli and Rodger of the Skies (Erman) (story)
1978 I Wanna to Hold Your Hand (Zemeckis) (pr)
1980 Used Cars (Zemeckis); The Blues Brothers (Landis) (role)
1981 Continental Divide (Apted) (co-exec pr)
1982 Poltergeist (Hooper) (co-pr, co-story, co-sc)
1984 Gremlins (Dante) (co-exec pr)
1985 Back to the Future (Zemeckis) (co-exec pr); Young Sherlock Holmes (Levinson) (co-exec pr); Goonies (Donner) (co-exec pr)
1986 The Money Pit (Bluth) (co-exec pr); An American Tail (Dante) (co-exec pr); *batteries not included (Matthew Robbins) (co-exec pr)
1988 Who Framed Roger Rabbit? (Zemeckis) (co-exec pr); The Land Before Time (Bluth) (co-exec pr)
1989 Dad (Goldberg) (co-exec pr); Back to the Future, Part II (Zemeckis) (co-exec pr); Joe vs. the Volcano (Shanley) (co-exec pr)
1990 Arachnophobia (Frank Marshall) (co-exec pr); Back to the Future, Part III (Zemeckis) (co-exec pr); Gremlins 2: The New Batch (Dante) (co-exec pr)
1991 Cape Fear (Scorsese) (exec pr); An American Tail: Fievel Goes West (Nibelink) (co-pr)
1993 We’re Back: A Dinosaur’s Tail (co-exec pr); Trail Mix-up (exec pr)
1994 I’m Mad (exec pr)
1995 To Wong Foo, Thanks for Everything, Julie Newmar (Kidron) (co-exec pr); Balto (exec pr); Casper (exec pr)
1996 High Incident (for TV) (exec pr); Twister (exec pr)
1997 Men in Black (exec pr)
1998 Toomsylvania (series for TV) (exec pr); Pinky, Elmyra & the Brain (series for TV) (exec pr); Invasion America (series for TV) (exec pr); Deep Impact (exec pr); The Mask of Zorro (exec pr); The Last Days (exec pr); Paulie (exec pr); Small Soldiers (exec pr); Antz (exec pr); The Prince of Egypt (exec pr); In Dreams (exec pr)
1999 Forces of Nature (exec pr); The Love Letter (exec pr); The Haunting (exec pr); Wakko’s Wish (for video) (exec pr); American Beauty (exec pr); Freaks and Geeks (series for TV) (exec pr); Galaxy Quest (exec pr)
2000 The Road to El Dorado (exec pr); The Flintstones in Viva Rock Vegas (exec pr); Gladiator (exec pr); Road Trip (exec pr); Small Time Crooks (exec pr); Chicken Run (exec pr)
2001 Jurassic Park 3 (exec pr); The Martian Chronicles (pr); Anne Frank: The Whole Story (for TV) (exec pr); Band of Brothers (for TV) (exec pr);

Publications

By SPIELBERG: books—

By SPIELBERG: articles—

“From Television to Features,” an interview with M. Stettin, in Millimeter (New York), March 1975.
“Close Encounter of the Third Kind: Director Steve Spielberg,” with C. Austin, in Filmmakers Newsletter (Ward Hill, Massachusetts), December 1977.
“The Unsung Heroes or Credit Where Credit Is Due,” in American Cinematographer (Los Angeles), January 1978. Interview with Mitch Tuchman, in Film Comment (New York), January/February 1978.
“Of Narrow Misses and Close Calls,” in American Cinematographer (Los Angeles), November 1981.
Steven Spielberg (second from left) on the set of Saving Private Ryan

Interview with T. McCarthy, in Film Comment (New York), May/June 1982.
‘‘A Revealing Interview with Steven Spielberg,’’ in Film Threat (Beverly Hills), vol. 19, 1989.
‘‘Always,’’ an interview with S. Royal, in American Premiere Magazine (Beverly Hills), no. 6, 1989/90.
‘‘A Close Encounter with Steven Spielberg,’’ an interview with D. Shay, in Cinefex (Riverside, California), February 1993.

On SPIELBERG: books—

Mott, Donald R., and Cheryl McAllister Saunders, Steven Spielberg, Boston, 1986.
Somazzi, Claud, Steven Spielberg: Dreaming the Movies, Santa Cruz, 1994.
Oskar Schindler and His List: The Man, the Book, the Film, the Holocaust, and Its Survivors, Forest Dale, Vermont, 1995.
Sanello, Frank, Spielberg: The Man, the Movies, the Myth, Dallas, 1996.

On SPIELBERG: articles—

Jameson, R. T., “Style vs. ‘Style’,” in Film Comment (New York), March/April 1980.
Geng, Veronica, “Spielberg’s Express,” in Film Comment (New York), July/August 1981.
Place, Vanessa, “Supernatural Thing,” in Film Comment (New York), September/October 1993.

* * *

Perhaps any discussion of Steven Spielberg must inevitably begin with the consideration that as the new millennium gets underway after a century of cinema, Spielberg remains the most commercially successful director the world has known—an incredible, if mind-boggling proposition which, in another time, might have immediately made the director’s films ineligible for serious critical consideration. Yet the fact that Spielberg’s combined films have grossed well over one billion dollars attests to their power in connecting to the mass audience and offers the analyst an immediate conundrum which may take a more distanced generation of critics and filmgoers to answer fully: What does Spielberg know? And why has so much of his work invited such audience approval?

Spielberg has worked in a variety of genres: the television film Duel is a thriller; Jaws is a horror film; 1941 is a crazy comedy; Close Encounters of the Third Kind is a science-fiction film; Raiders of the Lost Ark is an adventure film patterned after film serials of the early 1950s; E.T.—The Extraterrestrial is a fantasy/family film combining elements from The Wizard of Oz, Lassie, and Peter Pan; The Color Purple is a social drama; Empire of the Sun is an expansive wartime epic. And yet virtually all of Spielberg’s films are united by the same distinctive vision: a vision imbued with a sense of wonder which celebrates the magic, mystery, and danger that imagination can reveal as an alternative to the humdrum and the everyday. The artistic consistency within Spielberg’s work is demonstrated further by his narratives, which are structurally similar. In the typical Spielberg film, an Everyman protagonist has his conception of the world enlarged (often traumatically) as he comes face to face with some extraordinary and generally non-human antagonist who is often hidden from the rest of the world and/or the audience until the narrative’s end. In Duel, a California businessman named Mann finds himself pitted against the monstrous truck whose driver’s face is never shown; in Jaws, the water-shy sheriff must face the final reel; in Close Encounters, a suburban father responds to the extrasensory messages sent by outer-space creatures who are not revealed until the last sequence of the film; in Raiders of the Lost Ark, Indiana Jones quests for the Lost Ark which, at film’s end we discover is Pandora’s Box of horrors when summoned up by those who would attempt to profit from it; and, of course, in E.T., a small boy whose life is already steeped in imagination keeps secret his adoption of a playful extra-terrestrial (although one could easily argue that the non-human antagonist here is not really the sensitive E.T., but the masked and terrifying government agents who, quietly working behind the scenes throughout the narrative, finally invade the suburban house and crystallize the protagonist’s most horrific fears). Structural analysis even reveals that Poltergeist, the Spielberg-produced, Tobe Hooper-directed film which relates to Spielberg’s career in the same way the Howard Hawks-produced, Christian Nyby-directed The Thing related to Hawks’s career, is indeed a continuation of the Spielberg canon. In Poltergeist, a typical American family ultimately discovers that the antagonists responsible for the mysterious goings-on in their suburban home are the other-worldly ghosts and skeletons not shown until the end of the film, when the narrative also reveals the villainy of the real estate developer who had so cavalierly disposed of the remains from an inconveniently located cemetery.

Technically proficient and dazzling, Spielberg’s films are voracious in their synthesis of the popular culture icons which have formed the director’s sensibilities: Hitchcock movies, John Wayne, comic books, Bambi, suburban homes, fast food, the space program, television. His vision is that of the child-artist—the innocent and profound imagination that can summon up primeval dread from the deep, as well as transcendent wonder from the sky. If Spielberg’s early films particularly are sometimes attacked for a certain lack of interest in social issues or “adult concerns,” they may be defended on the grounds that his films—unlike so many of the “special effects” action films of the 1970s and 1980s—derive from a sensibility which is sincerely felt. A more subtle attack on Spielberg would hold that his interest in objects and mechanical effects (as in 1941 and Raiders of the Lost Ark), though provocative, may not always be in perfect balance with his interest in sentiment and human values. Spielberg himself acknowledges his debt to Walt Disney, whose theme “When You Wish upon a Star,” a paean to faith and imagination, dictates the spirit of several Spielberg films. And yet certainly if intellectual and persuasive critical constructions be sought to justify our enjoyment of Spielberg’s cinema, they can easily be found in the kind of mythic, Jungian criticism which analyzes his very popular work as a kind of direct line to the collective unconscious. Jaws, for instance, is related to the primal fear of being eaten as well as to the archetypal initiation rite; Close Encounters is constructed according to the archetypal form of the quest and its attendant religious structures of revelation and salvation; and of course E.T. has already been widely analyzed as a retelling of the Christ story—complete with a sacred heart, a ritual death, a resurrection brought about by faith, and an eventual ascension into heaven as E.T. returns home.

If Spielberg is especially notable in any other way, it is perhaps that he represents the most successful example of what has been called the film-school generation, which is increasingly populating the new Hollywood: a generation which has been primarily brought up on television and film, rather than literature, and for whom film seems apparently to have replaced life as a repository of significant experience. And yet if the old Hollywood’s studio system is dead, it has been partially replaced by a solid, if informal matrix of friendships and alliances: between Spielberg and a fraternity that includes George Lucas, Francis Ford Coppola, Lawrence Kasdan, John Milius, Bob Zemeckis, Robert Gale, Hal Barwood, Matthew Robbins, Melissa Mathison, and Harrison Ford.

It is noteworthy that Hollywood, though consistently accused of a preference for box-office appeal over critical acclaim, has nevertheless refused (until Schindler’s List in 1994) to valorize publicly Spielberg’s work, despite his popular and critical success. The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences has consistently chosen to pass over Spielberg’s films and direction—in 1975 bypassing Jaws in favor of One Flew over the Cuckoo’s Nest and Milos Forman; in 1977, bypassing Close Encounters for Annie Hall and Woody Allen; in 1981 bypassing Raiders of the Lost Ark for Chariots of Fire and Warren Beatty (as director of Reds); in 1982 bypassing E.T. for Gandhi and Richard Attenborough; and in 1985 bypassing The Color Purple for Out of Africa and Sydney Pollack.

More than requiring an explanatory footnote in film history texts, these “slights” made it clear that the industry of the time had come to hold Spielberg responsible for the juvenilization of the American cinema in the late 1970s and 1980s. If the Coppolas and the Scorseses attempted to remake Hollywood to their own vision of a freer, more European, artistic sensibility (and by and large failed), should Spielberg now be held responsible for betraying earlier victories and turning Hollywood into a Disneyland? And although Spielberg became the richest man in Hollywood, the most commercially savvy, the man everyone most wanted to make a deal with, the most influential, he could not easily become anything at all like its most serious, respected artist. Spielberg’s longtime insistence on avoiding adult themes, instead taking refuge in nostalgia, special effects, remakes, and sequels, seemed to be directly responsible for rather perniciously preventing non-Spielberg-like films from being produced. As well, the overwhelming number of Spielberg imitators, many producing films under Spielberg’s own auspices, have largely contributed commercially successful hackwork.

Hollywood noted the irony, too, that it was in the Spielberg production of The Twilight Zone movie (directed by John Landis) that two children and actor Vic Morrow should have been killed in a clearly avoidable accident in which the children’s employment violated child-labor law. The Color Purple, although conforming to Spielberg’s typical pattern of the hidden antagonist, backed off from an explicit representation of Celie’s lesbianism, turning her instead into a cute E.T.-like creature. Thus the confrontation of the hidden antagonist (Celie’s true nature) became a kind of missing climax in a film which many critics ridiculed. After The Color Purple, when receiving the Irving Thalberg award from the Motion Pictures Academy, Spielberg gave a widely quoted speech which seemed surprisingly to admit responsibility for the state of American film culture: “I think in our romance with technology and our excitement at exploring all the possibilities of film and video, I think we have partially lost something. . . . It’s time to renew our romance with the word; I’m as culpable as anyone in exalting the image at the expense of the word. . . . Only a generation of readers will spawn a generation of writers.” Spielberg’s speech was followed by arguably his finest work: from a screenplay by famed dramatist Tom Stoppard, Empire of the Sun, set in Asia during World War II, includes some of Spielberg’s most startling set-pieces (such as a crowd sequence which rivals Eisenstein’s use of montage in “The Odessa Steps’” sequence of Potemkin, or an unusually expressive evocation of the atomic bombing at Hiroshima), as well as more adult themes relating to war and peace, community integration and disintegration. Nevertheless, when this film was overshadowed in many ways by Bertolucci’s Asia epic, The Last Emperor, Spielberg seemed to be a hasty retreat into safer material.

Always, a remake of A Guy Named Joe in which Spielberg portrayed adult relationships within a fantasy context including helpful ghosts, was both a critical and financial failure. Even more distressing was the critical failure of the 1991 Hook, in which Spielberg’s professed appreciation for the word disappeared under the weight of charmless Hollywood juveniles having onscreen food fights amidst special effects gleefully presented by Spielberg as artistic entertainment. Although critics had for years suggested that the source material Peter Pan would provide Spielberg his most natural material (a boy not wanting to grow up), many were stunned when Spielberg’s version finally arrived: bloated, overlong, overproduced, looking more like a vapid amusement park ride or a multimillion dollar commercial for a new attraction at the Universal Studio Tour than a film. Its artistic message—that its adult Peter Pan should work less and spend more quality time with his children—was in ludicrous contradiction to the herculean effort required by all, including its director, to devote themselves to such a high-budget, effects-heavy project; thus the film emerges as the most cynical, hypocritical attempt to play on audience sentiment to attract box-office in the Spielberg oeuvre. The year 1993 marked a turning point for Spielberg—with the release of two films in the same year that could not have been more different. Jurassic Park, a cinefantastique wonder showing dinosaurs wreaking havoc in a contemporary theme park, was a roller-coaster ride which fast became the most commercially successful film of all time, bypassing even Spielberg’s own E.T. Although the special effects were mostly marvelous and definitely the reason for the film’s appeal (can anyone who has seen the film ever forget the startlingly graceful images of apatosaurus grazing in the forest?), many critics were startled by a certain desultoriness in the construction of the narrative: loose ends here and there, scenes which seemed not all to pay off. And indeed, deficiencies may be attributed to Spielberg losing some interest in the project—for the other Spielberg film released in 1993 was the film which would finally, irrevocably answer his critics: a black-and-white film photographed in a radically different camera style, devoid of the famous Spielberg backlighting as well as his traditional over-the-top orchestrations, using virtually unknown actors, and all on the single most unremittingly serious subject of the contemporary world: the Holocaust. Spielberg’s Schindler’s List was his most striking, overwhelming work; with it, he finally won his Academy Awards for film and director, as well as best film awards from the L.A. and New York critics groups, the Board of Review, and the National Society of Film Critics—a startlingly unanimous achievement. For a serious film, Schindler’s List was also amazingly successful with the public, which was powerfully moved and horrified by the film. Based on the real-life story of Oskar Schindler, a German industrialist who actually saved over a thousand Jews by employing them at his factory, Schindler’s List, keeping with the Spielberg ethos, emphasized the most hopeful components of the story without minimizing or denying its horrifying components. The film’s coda, which showed the actors along with their real-life counterparts who survived because of Schindler visiting the gravesite of the real Schindler, was criticized by some, but this strategy insisted the audience understand the story as historical and gave the film an even greater emotional depth. Although time will tell whether Schindler’s List will retain its instant reputation as a great, towering achievement comparable to, say, Alain Resnais’s short Night and Fog, the definitive Holocaust film, the film has—according to his own testimony—altered Spielberg’s life, sensibility, and career. The first artistic work that allowed Spielberg directly to explore his Jewish heritage, Schindler’s List so consumed him that he has since embarked on what he has called his most important life’s work: a video project documenting the survivors of the Holocaust for educational purposes. In interviews given before his multiple Academy Award wins, Spielberg has also said that he could no longer imagine going back to directing the kinds of films he made before Schindler’s List. Either Spielberg’s sincerity must be regarded as suspect or his resolve as short-lived, for he followed the winning of his first Academy-award by directing The Lost World, a Jurassic Park sequel unnecessary for any motive except craven profit, in the process becoming more a designer of amusement park attractions than an artist. Psychologically vacuous, The Lost World shows men with gadgets who say things like “Lindstrade air rifle. Fires a sub-sonic impact delivery dart.” The exposition is obligatory, the villains cardboard, a black Disney child improbably appears to improve the film’s demographics, and characters behave stupidly so that dinosaurs can attack them. When at one point, we even see a man ripped in half by two dinosaurs competing for their dinner, we understand that the humanism of Schindler’s List has been replaced by the expediency of efficient, crowd-pleasing violence: it feels almost like a pornographic vision. The few pleasures in _The Lost World_ come from its irony—Jeff Goldblum, for instance, responding to a colleague’s awe at the dinosaurs: “Yeah, ‘ooh, ‘ahhh,’ that’s how it always starts. But then later there’s running and then screaming.” A few scenes invoke Hitchcock’s _The Birds_, generally to _The Lost World’s_ disadvantage, but only the climactic scenes showing a tyrannosaurus rex drinking from a swimming pool in suburban San Diego evoke, through their surreal wit, any lasting sense of awe.

_Amidst_ was a noble subject in the tradition of Schindler’s _List_, deals with the 1839 shipboard revolt of fifty-three African slaves. Despite the film’s idealism and the genuine interest of its historical narrative, much of _Amistad_ is problematic. In a surprising review in the _Los Angeles Times_, Kenneth Turan put forward the thesis that for Spielberg, “‘There’s been leakage from the no-brainers to the quality stuff and . . . bad habits picked up in the mindless movies are driving out better [habits].’” Turan’s comments seemed shocking then, particularly delivered in Spielberg’s own hometown community, and seem prescient still. Dialogue in _Amistad_ seems incredibly stilted, as reflected in this retort to John Quincy Adams, which passes as conversational: “‘There remains but one undone, one vital task the founding fathers left to their sons before their thirteen colonies could precisely be called United States, and that task, sir, as you well know, is crushing slavery.’” Not all performers escape seeming like high school students dressing up for an historical pageant. As well, there are conceptual lapses: the moral outrage of slavery has little to do with the thunder and lightning Spielberg uses in many of the shipboard sequences, and Spielberg’s traditional backlighting—particularly during the Middle Passage of the slaves’ journey—adds a sheen of romanticism totally inappropriate to his subject. Although the black slave leader’s passionate outburst in court is certainly moving, that it comes after he sees a picture of Christ and that it is accompanied by a theme, which (if African) is orchestrated in the style of a heavenly choir after he sees a picture of Christ and that it is accompanied by a theme, which is a quibble, because of the film’s accumulating emotional weight. Although Spielberg seems a quibble, because of the film’s accumulating emotional power. Certainly, so many images are unforgettable: the soldier who collects dirt samples from each country he does battle in; the bag filled with hundreds of dog tags, each representing a dead American; a German soldier slowly inserting a knife directly into a GI’s heart. The art design and the historical reconstruction of the film are flawless, its final images of the D-Day battlefield absolutely awe-inspiring (even more so because we never see the beach in long shot until the battle is over). Moving, too, is the Iowa sequence showing a bereaved mother framed in the doorway, its evocation of the opening of _The Searchers_ effortlessly suggesting that the titular search for her surviving child will be successful (just as was the search in the John Ford film Spielberg so obviously admires).

On other fronts, Spielberg has continued to consolidate his position in Hollywood as its most powerful man. His company, Amblin Entertainment, has long been involved with television production, either Spielberg and/or Amblin involved in television series as disparate as _Amistad_, a savage satire about bankrupt values and homophobia in America. More monumentally, in one of the most publicized entertainment stories of 1994, Spielberg formed a new Hollywood studio called DreamWorks SKG in partnership with two of the other most powerful men in Hollywood, Jeffrey Katzenberg and David Geffen. In 1999, DreamWorks released _Ameri_ can _Beauty_, a savage satire about bankrupt values and homophobia in the suburbs, which won the Academy award for best film. In 2000, inspired by the success of _Saving Private Ryan_, Spielberg was in the process of producing (in conjunction with Tom Hanks) a series of TV films with World War II stories. As Spielberg moves closer to being an all-powerful, modern-day studio mogul in the style of Walt Disney or Harry Cohn, will his _Schindler’s_ experience inspire a greater devotion to serious, artistically ambitious projects requiring no apology, or will the lure of big bucks for sequels and popular entertainments prove too great a temptation for DreamWorks to forego?

Although Spielberg executive-produced _The Last Days_, the 1998
Academy-award winning documentary on Hungarian holocaust survivors, his Amblin released early in 2000 the lowbrow Viva Rock Vegas, the Flintstones sequel. Reportedly, Spielberg is also currently preparing at least one more Jurassic Park sequel. Perhaps Spielberg will find some way of mediating his apparently contradictory goals with enough integrity and skill to retain his critical respectability as a serious artist, as well as his popular appeal.

—Charles Derry

STAHL, John M.

Films as Director:

(incomplete listing prior to 1918)

1914 The Boy and the Law
1917 The Lincoln Cycle (14-reeler distributed in six chapters including My Mother, My Father, My Self; The Call to Arms)
1918 Scandal Mongers; Wives of Men (+ sc); Suspicion
1919 Her Code of Honor; A Woman under Oath
1920 Greater than Love; Women Men Forget; The Woman in His House; Sowing the Wind; The Child Thou Gavest Me (+ pr)
1922 The Song of Life; One Clear Call (+ pr); Suspicious Wives
1923 The Wanters (+ pr); The Dangerous Age (+ pr)
1924 Why Men Leave Home; Husbands and Lovers (+ pr)
1925 Fine Clothes
1926 Memory Lane (+ pr, co-sc); The Gay Deceiter
1927 Lovers? (+ pr); In Old Kentucky (+ pr)
1930 A Lady Surrenders
1931 Seed; Strictly Dishonorable
1932 Back Street
1933 Only Yesterday
1934 Imitation of Life
1935 Magnificent Obsession
1937 Parnell
1938 Letter of Introduction (+ pr)
1939 When Tomorrow Comes (+ pr)
1941 Our Wife
1942 The Immortal Sergeant
1943 Holy Matrimony
1944 The Eve of St. Mark; The Keys of the Kingdom
1946 Leave Her to Heaven
1947 Forever Amber (replaced by Otto Preminger); The Foxes of Harrow
1948 The Walls of Jericho
1949 Father Was a Fullback; Oh, You Beautiful Doll

Publications

By STAHL: article—

“Oh, the Good Old Days,” in The Hollywood Reporter, 16 May 1932.

On STAHL: books—

On STAHL: articles—

Sarris, Andrew, “Esoterica,” in Film Culture (New York), Spring 1963.

* * *

John Stahl was a key figure in the development of the Hollywood “women’s melodrama” during the 1930s and 1940s, and quite possibly in the 1910s and 1920s as well. Although he began directing in 1914, and apparently made as many films before sound as after, only two of his silents (Her Code of Honor and Suspicious Wives) seem to have survived. Yet this is hardly the only reason that the ultimate critical and historical significance of his work remains to be established. More pertinent is the critical disrepute of the “tearjerker” genre in which he worked almost exclusively—a genre which had to await the discovery of Douglas Sirk’s melodramas and the reworking of the form by R.W. Fassbinder to attract serious critical attention.

Comparisons between Sirk’s baroquely aestheticized and Stahl’s straightforwardly unadorned treatments of equally improbable plots is somewhat useful, and virtually inevitable, given that Sirk remade three of Stahl’s classic 1930s “weepies”: Imitation of Life (1934/1959), Magnificent Obsession (1935/1954), and When Tomorrow Comes (1939), which became Interlude (1957). In a genre focusing on the problems presented by the social/sexual order for the individual (most frequently, the bourgeois female), Sirk tended to abstract dramatic conflicts in the direction of Brecht, while Stahl chose to emphasize the effects of social rigidities through the emotions of his characters.

Stahl’s career seemed to flourish most at Universal in the 1930s with the production of the highly accomplished Back Street, Only Yesterday, and the three films Sirk remade, all of which present emotionally similar heroines buffeted by twists of fate which wreak havoc on their socially determined modes of behavior. In his version of Fannie Hurst’s Back Street (remade in 1941 and 1961), Stahl encourages sympathy for Irene Dunne, an independent working woman who gives up everything to be “kept” in isolation by the respectable married man she loves. Audacious contradictions emerge from the very simplicity with which Stahl presents outrageous plot twists. Dunne meets the “kept woman” next door to her back street apartment, for example, only when the woman literally catches on fire and must be rescued. Recognizing a sister in shame, Dunne counsels the injured woman against allowing herself to be exploited by the man she loves; yet what seems to be a dawning moment of self-awareness on the part of our heroine is instantly obscured by a romantic haze when her own lover walks through the door in the middle of her diatribe. Similarly powerful contradictions abound in Imitation of Life (based on another Hurst novel), where best friends Claudette Colbert and Louise Beavers find themselves incapable, despite their best intentions, of breaking the social conventions which keep the black woman subservient to the white, even when the former is responsible for the latter’s wealth and success.

Given material such as the Fannie Hurst novels, the “inspirational” message of Lloyd C. Douglas’s Magnificent Obsession, and the hopelessly romantic Only Yesterday (virtually remade as Max Ophüls’ Letter from an Unknown Woman), and considering the period during which Stahl worked, the point of reference seems not to be Sirk so much as Stahl’s better-appreciated contemporary Frank Borzage. It is Borzage’s unrelenting romanticism which is usually assumed to characterize the “weepies” of the 1920s and 1930s; yet Stahl’s work offers another perspective. While he clearly encourages emotional identification with his heroines, Stahl seems more interested in exposing their romantic illusions than in relishing them. In fact, his meditative restraint in such situations has prompted George Morris to suggest that “it is Carl Th. Dreyer whom Stahl resembles more than directors like Sirk or Borzage.”

Yet ultimately, Stahl’s visual style seems largely dependent upon studio and cinematographer, a fact most clearly demonstrated by Leave Her to Heaven, a preposterously plotted drama of a psychotically duplicitous woman shot in Technicolor by Leon Shamroy on the modernesque sets of 20th Century-Fox, where the director’s mise-en-scène emerges as florid and baroque as Sirk in his heyday—and a full decade earlier.

It seems that Stahl’s films represent something of a missing link between Borzage’s romanticism and Sirk. Certainly, an examination of his work expands an understanding of the variety of Hollywood’s strategies in personalizing overtly ideological questions of sex, status, and money. In fact, if film scholars are serious about studying the melodrama in any depth, then the films of John Stahl remain a top and current priority.

—Ed Lowry

STAUDTE, Wolfgang

Nationality: German. Born: Saarbrücken, 9 October 1906. Education: Educated as engineer. Career: Stage actor for Max Reinhardt and Erwin Piscator, until 1933; film actor, from 1931; writer and director of advertising films and shorts, 1930s; directed first feature, Akrobat schö-ö-ön, for Tobis Film, also co-founder, with Harald Braun and Helmut Käutner, ‘‘Freie Film-Produktion-GmbH,’’ 1943; worked for DEFA Studios, East Germany, 1945; worked in West Germany, from 1953; television director, from 1970s. Awards: Silver Lion, Venice Festival, for Ciske de Rat, 1955. Died: Of heart failure, in ZigarSKI, 19 January 1984.

Films as Director:

1943 Akrobat schö-ö-ön (+ sc)
1944 Ich hab' von Dir geträumt
1945 Frau über Bord (Die Mörder sind unter uns) (+ sc)
1946 Die Mörder sind unter uns (The Muderers Are among Us) (+ sc)
1948 Die seltsamen Abenteuer des Herrn Fridolin B (+ sc)
1949 Rotation (+ co-sc); Schicksal aus zweiter Hand (+ sc); Der Untertan (The Submissive) (+ co-sc)
1953 Die Geschichte des kleinen Muck (The Story of Little Mook) (+ co-sc)
1954 Leuchtfeuer (+ co-sc)
1955 Ciske—Ein Kind braucht Liebe (Ciske—A Child Wants Love) (+ sc)
1957 Rose Bernd
1958 Kanonen-Serenade (The Muzzle) (+ co-sc); Madeleine und der Legionär; Der Maulkorb
1959 Rosen für den Staatsanwalt (Roses for the Prosecutor) (+ story)
1960 Kirmes (Kermes) (+ sc); Der letzte Zeuge (The Last Witness)
1962 Die glücklichen Jahre der Thorwalds (co-d)
1963 Die Dreigroschenoper (The Threepenny Opera)
1964 Herrenpartie (Me’s Outing); Das Lamm (The Lamb)
1966 Ganovenrehre (Hoodlam’s Honor)
1968 Heimlichkeiten (+ co-sc)
1970 Die Herren mit der weissen Weste (Those Gentlemen Who Have a Clean Sheet)
1971 Fluchtweg St. Pauli—Grossalarm fur die Davidswache
1972 Verrat ist kein Gessellschaftspiel (for TV); Marya Sklodowska-Curie. Ein Mädchen, das die Welt verändert (for TV)
1973 Nerze Nachts am Strassenrand (for TV); The Seawolf
1974 Ein herrliches Dasein
1976 Zwei Erfahrungen Reicher (for TV)
1978 Des Verschollene Inka-Gold (for TV); Zwischengleis (Memories)

Other Films:

1931 Gassenhauer (Pick) (role)
1945 Der Mann, dem man den Namen stahl (co-sc)
1949 Das Beil von Wandsbek (co-sc)
1950 Geheimnis des blauen Zimmers (role); Tannenberg (role); Der Choral von Leuthen (role); Heimkehr ins Glück (role); Pechmarie (role); Die Bande von Hoheneck (role); Schwarzer Jäger Johanna (role); Stärker als Paragraphen (role); Gleisdreieck (role); Susanne im Bade (role); Am seidenen Faden (role); Lauter Lügen (role); Pour le mérite (role); Mordsache Holm (role); Spiel im Sommerwind (role); Das Gewehr über (role); Die fremde Frau (role); Drei Unteroffiziere (role); Brand im Ozean (role); Legion Condor (role); Blutsbrüderschaft (role); Aus erster Ehe (role); Jud Süss (role); Jungens (role); Friedemann Bach (role); ... reitet für Deutschland (role); Das grosse Spiel (role)

Publications

By STAUDTE: articles—

‘‘Aber wenn geschlagen wird im diesem Land . . . ,’’ interview, in Film und Fernsehen (Berlin), no. 5, 1979.

‘‘Die Mörder sind unter uns,’’ interview, in Film und Fernsehen (Berlin), vol. 19, no. 5, May 1991.
On STAUDTE: articles—

Bachmann, J., “Wolfgang Staudte,” in Film (London), Summer 1963.
Karkosch, K., “Wolfgang Staudte,” in Film und Ton (Munich), March 1976.
Nrrested, Carl, “Glemte kontinuitets faktorer i tysk film,” in Film og Fernsehen (Berlin), vol. 19, no. 9, September 1986.

* * *

Wolfgang Staudte is one of the few important German directors of the postwar years. Die Mörder sind unter uns, the first German postwar film, remains today among the director’s best works. In the film, a surgeon, Hans Mertens, returns home from the war, becomes an alcoholic, and lives hopelessly among the ruins. His girlfriend Susanne has survived a concentration camp and attempts to help him overcome his apathy. The apathy is quickly dispelled by the appearance of an industrialist, formerly a Nazi, whose outlook remains unchanged and who, just as before the war, uses deceptive phrases to justify the new situation.

This contemporary material was realized by Staudte in a thoroughly realistic style with expressionistic strokes in a manner that suggests analogies with Rossellini’s Paisà. An English critic identified the director as a successor to Lang and Pabst. A phrase in the film—“The murderers are among us”—became a symbolic expression for the spirit of the time, in which progressive German intellectuals sought every means to reckon with the fascist past. It was not by chance that the film was made in the Soviet sector of Berlin and produced by the newly founded DEFA studios. Staudte’s efforts to interest cultural officials in the western zones in his project met with no success. This was also the case with Rotation and Der Untertan, a satiric version of Heinrich Mann’s novel of the same title, set in an actual embassy.

Staudte was a political artist because, as he said, he was a political person. He had perfect command of a variety of means of expression and narrative forms, and used a rich palette of symbolic images in realistically-structured filmic space. His films often led to comparisons with René Clément and Rossellini. Only his own country—the media and public as well as the authorities—could not accept him and systematically and conclusively thwarted him.

In the beginning Staudte was repeatedly labelled a communist because of his association with DEFA. He was urged to make West German films. In 1951 he decided to do so, and so began an unhappy period for him which consisted of attempts “to improve the world with the money of people who already find the world to be just fine.” He was regularly reproached for fouling his own nest, and was reluctantly reduced to making entertainment films. In its headlong rush toward economic development, West German society wanted to see neither fundamental analysis of the Nazi past, nor pessimistic mistrust directed against the new, American-oriented NRD-model. Years of harassment by the press and cultural authorities went by with Staudte working away, often in vain, writing unengaging comedies. He nevertheless made a few masterpieces: Rosen für den Staatsanwalt, Kirmes, and Herrenpartie. These films are united by Staudte’s conviction that the present and the past are bound together and that man today remains inseparable from yesterday. The most imposing of these films is Herrenpartie: it confronts two worlds—that of today’s German bourgeoisie, which would gladly bury Nazi memories, and that of a village of Yugoslavian widows who, despite everything, are better able to behave humanely than the Germans.

In the latter part of his career, Wolfgang Staudte directed television detective stories. His case demonstrates that the new German cinema has worthy predecessors who nevertheless remain unappreciated even by their colleagues.

—Maria Racheva

STEVENS, George

Nationality: American. Born: George Cooper Stevens in Oakland, California, 18 December 1904. Family: Married Joan (Stevens) (divorced), one son. Military Service: Joined U.S. Army Signal Corps, became head of Special Motion Pictures Unit assigned to photograph activities of 6th Army, 1943; Unit awarded citation from General Eisenhower, 1945. Career: Actor and stage manager for father’s theatrical company, 1920–21; moved to Hollywood, 1921, worked as assistant and 2nd cameraman, then cameraman; joined Hal Roach as cameraman for Laurel and Hardy shorts, 1927; director of two-reel shorts for Roach, from 1930, and for RKO and Universal, from 1932; directed first feature, The Cohens and Kellys in Trouble, 1933; also producer, from 1938; resumed career after military service during World War II. Awards: Oscars for Best Director, for A Place in the Sun, 1951, and Giant, 1956; Irving G. Thalberg Award, Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, 1953. Died: In Paris, 9 March 1975.

Films as Director:

1930 Ladies Past
1931 Call a Cop!; High Gear; The Kick-Off; Mama Loves Papa
1932 The Finishing Touch; Boys Will Be Boys; Family Troubles
1933 Should Crooners Marry; Hunting Trouble; Rock-a-Bye Cowboy; Room Mates; A Divorce Courtship; Flirting in the Park; Quiet Please; Grin and Bear It; The Cohens and the Kellys in Trouble
1934 Bridal Waltz; Ocean Swells; Bachelor Bait; Kentucky Kernels
1935 Laddie; The Nitwits; Alice Adams; Annie Oakley
1936 Swing Time
1937 Quality Street; A Damsel in Distress
1938 Vivacious Lady (+ pr)
1939 Gunga Din (+ pr)
1940 Vigil in the Night (+ pr)
1941 Penny Serenade (+ pr)
1942 Woman of the Year; The Talk of the Town (+ pr)
1943 The More the Merrier (+ pr)
1948 I Remember Mama (+ co-pr)
George Stevens (right) and Warren Beatty on the set of The Only Game in Town

1951  A Place in the Sun (+ pr)
1952  Something to Live For (+ pr)
1953  Shane (+ pr)
1956  Giant (co-pr)
1959  The Diary of Anne Frank (+ pr)
1965  The Greatest Story Ever Told (+ pr)
1970  The Only Game in Town

Other Films:

(partial list)

1924  The White Sheep (cameraman); The Battling Oriole (cameraman)
1925  Black Cyclone (cameraman)
1926  The Devil Horse (cameraman); The Desert’s Toll (cameraman); Putting Pants on Philip (cameraman)
1927  No Man’s Law (cameraman); The Valley of Hell (cameraman); Lightning (cameraman); The Battle of the Century (cameraman)
1928  Leave ‘em Laughing (cameraman); Two Tars (McCary) (cameraman); Unaccustomed as We Are (cameraman)
1929  Big Business (cameraman)

Publications

By STEVENS: articles—

Interview, in Cinema (Beverly Hills), December/January 1965.

On STEVENS: books—

On STEVENS: articles—

Houston, Penelope, “Shane and George Stevens,” in Sight and Sound (London), Fall 1953.
Bartlett, N., “Sentiment and Humanism,” in Film (London), Spring 1964.
Beresford, Bruce, “George Stevens,” in Film (London), Summer 1970.
Obituary, in Action (Los Angeles), March/April 1975.
Beylie, Claude, obituary, in Ecran (Paris), May 1975.
Petri, Bruce, “George Stevens: The Wartime Comedies,” in Film Comment (New York), July/August 1975.

* * *

Katharine Hepburn had originally been responsible for bringing George Stevens to the attention of those in the front office. He had directed a great many two-reelers for Hal Roach, and was just entering films as a director of features when Hepburn met him, liked him, and asked that he be assigned as director to her next film, Alice Adams. It was a giant step forward for Stevens, but Alice Adams, from the Booth Tarkington novel, was a project right up his alley.

Two years later Stevens directed Hepburn again in a charming version of Barrie’s play, Quality Street, and then in 1941 Hepburn again got him over to MGM to direct her and Spencer Tracy in Woman of the Year, the first film the two actors did together.

In the first half of his film career Stevens directed a Barbara Stanwyck feature, Annie Oakley, one of the best Astaire-Rogers dancing romances, Swing Time, and a delightful Ginger Rogers feature, Vivacious Lady. Astaire was never more debonair than in the adaption of Wodehouse’s novel A Damsel in Distress, with George Burns and Gracie Allen. Stevens then really hit his stride as director of Gunga Din, a Kiplingesque glorification of romantic derring-do that featured Cary Grant, Victor McLaglen, and Douglas Fairbanks Jr. Two romances, Vigil in the Night, starring Carole Lombard, and Penny Serenade, co-starring Irene Dunne with Cary Grant, added to his reputation as an ideal director for romance, especially the weepy sort. His final feature before departing for wartime Europe was one of his best. The More the Merrier was a very funny comedy concerning the wartime housing situation in the nation’s capital.

After the war, Stevens decided that he would like to produce and direct something that glorified America’s past, preferably a comedy. Fortunately, Stevens had been named by Irene Dunne as one of those she would like to work for as the projected star of I Remember Mama. The film was in production for six months and went far over schedule and budget. Stevens was a perfectionist who was determined not to be caught short of any piece of film he needed when making his first cut. He shot a master scene fully, with moving camera, and then shot and kept shooting the same scene from every conceivable angle. For a montage sequence involving Sir Cedric Hardwicke, Stevens spent nearly ten days shooting footage of Sir Cedric reading aloud while the family listened. He overshot, and it was expensive, but the end result was as nearly perfect as any movie could be. Because of the excessive production cost (over $3 million), I Remember Mama did not realize the profit it might have earned, although it premiered and played five continuous weeks at Radio Music City Hall, gathering rave notices and honors for all concerned.

Stevens had proved that he was back in form and at the top. He moved over to Paramount, where he made two of his best pictures—A Place in the Sun, from Theodore Dreiser’s American classic, and An American Tragedy, with three perfectly cast players: Montgomery Cliff, Elizabeth Taylor, and Shelly Winters. He then served as the producer-director of one of the most remarkable westerns ever filmed, Shane. Told through the eyes of a young boy, the film has a disarming innocence in spite of its violence.

Stevens moved over to Warner Bros. to film Giant, Edna Ferber’s novel about Texas. Giant featured Elizabeth Taylor, Rock Hudson, and James Dean. It was Dean’s final credit, for he was killed in an auto crash directly after the shooting of his scenes was finished. Stevens’ last three features—The Diary of Anne Frank, The Greatest Story Ever Told, and The Only Game in Town—were released by 20th Century-Fox. The last one, the best of the three, was virtually sloughed off in its release. When asked what the story was about, Stevens replied, “It’s about an aging hooker and a losing gambler, if you think the world is ready for that.” He had become embittered. The climate had changed in Hollywood, and it was difficult to get a first-class release for a picture made with the kind of extravagance Stevens was accustomed to.

—De Witt Bodeen

STILLER, Mauritz

Nationality: Swedish/Russian (became citizen of Sweden, 1921).
Born: Mosche Stiller in Helsinki, Finland, 17 July 1883. Career: Actor in Finland, from 1899; moved to Sweden to avoid Russian military draft, worked as actor in Sweden, from 1904; manager of avant-garde theatre Lilla Teatern, Stockholm, 1911; hired as film director (also writer and actor) for newly formed Svenska Biograf film studio, Stockholm, 1912; began collaboration with Greta Gustafsson (Greta Garbo), 1923; moved to Hollywood under contract to MGM, 1925; fired by MGM before completing a film, hired by Erich Pommer at Paramount to direct Hotel Imperial, then returned to Sweden, 1927. Died: 8 November 1928.
Mauritz Stiller (left) directing Greta Garbo and Antonio Moreno

Films as Director:

1912 Mor och dotter (Mother and Daughter) (+ sc, role as Count Raoul de Saligny); När svärmor regerar (When the Mother-in-Law Reigns) (+ sc, role as the pastor); Vampyren (Vampire) (+ sc); Barnet (The Child); De svarta makarna (The Black Masks) (+ co-sc); Den tryanniske fästmannen (The Tyrannical Fiancé) (+ sc, role as Elias Petterson)

1913 När kärleken dödar (When Love Kills) (+ co-sc); När larmhlockan ljuder (When the Alarm Bell Rings); Den okända (The Unknown Woman) (+ sc); Bröderna (Brothers) (+ co-sc); Den moderna suffrageten (The Suffragette) (+ sc); Pålives ödesväger (The Smugglers); Mannekägen (The Model) (+ sc); För sin kärleks skull (The Stockbroker) (+ sc); Grönsfolken (The Border Feud); Livets konflikter (Conflicts of Life) (+ sc); Kammarjunkaren (Gentleman of the Room) (+ sc)

1914 Lekkamraterna (The Playmates) (+ sc); Stormfågeln (The Stormy Petrel); Det röda tornet (The Master) (+ co-sc); Skottet (The Shot); När konstnärer älska (When Artists Love)

1915 Hans hustrus förflutna (His Wife’s Past); Hämnaren (The Avenger); Madame de Thèbes (The Son of Destiny); Mästertjuven (The Son of Fate); Hans bröllopsnatt (His Wedding Night); Minlotten (The Mine Pilot); Dolken (The Dagger) (+ co-sc); Lyckonälen (The Motorcar Apaches) (+ co-sc)

1916 Balettprima donnan (Anjuta, the Dancer); Kärlek och journalistik (Love and Journalism); Kampen om hans hjärta (The Struggle for His Heart); Vingarne (+ co-sc)

1917 Thomas Graals bästa film (Thomas Graal’s Best Picture); Alexander den Store (Alexander the Great) (+ sc)

1918 Thomas Graals bästa barn (Thomas Graal’s First Child) (+ co-sc); Sången om den eldröda blomman (Song of the Scarlet Flower, The Flame of Life)
1919 Fiskebyn (The Fishing Village); Herr Arnes Pengar (Sir Arne’s Treasure) (+ co-sc)

1920 Erotikon (Bonds That Chafe) (+ co-sc); Johan (+ sc)

1921 De Landsflyktige (The Exiles) (+ co-sc)

1922 Gunnar Hedes saga (Gunnar Hede’s Saga, The Old Mansion) (+ sc)

1923 Gösta Berlings saga (The Story of Gösta Berling; The Atonement of Gösta Berling) (+ co-sc)

1926 The Temptress (finished by Fred Niblo) (+ sc)

1927 Hotel Imperial (+ co-sc); The Woman on Trial; Barbed Wire (finished by Rowland Lee) (+ sc)

1928 The Street of Sin (finished by Ludvig Berger) (+ sc)

Publications

On STILLER: books—

On STILLER: articles—

Sjöström, Victor, “As I Remember Him,” in Film Comment (New York), Summer 1970.

* * * *

Like the other two distinguished pioneers of the early Swedish cinema, Sjöström and Sjöberg, Mauritz Stillers had an essentially theatrical background. But it must be remembered that he was reared in Finland of Russian-Jewish stock, did not immigrate to Sweden until he was 27, and remained there only 15 years before going to Hollywood. He responded relatively late to the Swedish cultural tradition, so heavily influenced by the country’s extreme northern climate and landscape, and by the fatalistic, puritanical literary and dramatic aura exerted most notably by the Swedish dramatist Strindberg and the Nobel prize-winning novelist Selma Lagerlöf. The latter’s works—Herr Arne’s Treasure, Gunnar Hede’s Saga, and Gösta Berlings Saga—were inspired by tradition and legend, and were all too be adapted by Stillers for the silent screen.

After establishing himself as a talented stage actor, Stiller’s work on film began in 1912. He immediately proved to be a meticulous craftsman, with a strong visual instinct and a polished sense of timing and rhythm. His early work showed how much he had learned technically from the considerable number of D.W. Griffith’s short narrative films shown in Sweden. For example, The Black Masks, made in 1912, is noted by Forsyth Hardy as having, “over a hundred scenes, a constantly changing combination of interiors and exteriors, close-ups and panoramic shots.” In 1913 Stillers even made a film based on the activities of Mrs. Pankhurst called Den moderna sufragetten, reflecting his reputation in the theater for avant-garde subjects.

Stillers also proved adept at comedy, as his films Love and Journalism, Thomas Graal’s Best Film—one of the earliest films about filmmaking—and Thomas Graal’s First Child reveal, with their skirminishing and coquetry that characterize the relationship of the sexes. Stiller insisted, however, on restraint in acting style; he was an autocratic perfectionist, and Emil Jannings, Germany’s leading actor, termed him “the Stanislavski of the cinema.” The second of these films had a complex structure, full of flashbacks and daydreams; the director Victor Sjöström starred in all three, as well as in other of Stillers films. In some of his earliest efforts, Stillers made appearances himself.

The climax to Stillers career in the production of elegant and graceful comedies of sex manners was Erotikon; though better known, because of its alluring title, than its predecessors, it is somewhat less accomplished. Elaborately staged and full of sexual by-play—the wife of a preoccupied professor has two lovers in hot pursuit; a young sculptor and an elderly baron—it includes a specially commissioned ballet performed by the opera in Stockholm. These sophisticated silent films rank alongside the early comedies of Lubitsch, whose work in this genre in Germany in fact succeeded them. Lubitsch readily acknowledged his debt to Stillers.

Again like Lubitsch (with whose career Stiller’s can best be compared at this stage), Stillers also worked on epic-style, historical subjects. He took over the adaptation of Selma Lagerlöf’s novel Sir Arne’s Treasure from Sjöström, its original director. This was essentially an eighteenth-century story of escape and pursuit—three Scottish mercenaries in the service of King John III are imprisoned for conspiracy. They abscond in the depths of winter, undertaking a desperate journey overland to flee the country. In the process they become increasingly violent and menacing until they come upon Arne’s mansion. They steal his treasure, burn his house, and slaughter its inhabitants except for an orphan girl. The orphan Elsalill, who survives the massacre, is a haunted figure half-attracted to the leader of the Scottish renegades. But she eventually betrays him and dies in the final confrontation in which the Scots are recaptured. The long, snake-like column of black-robed women moving over the icy waste in the girl’s funeral procession is Stillers’s concluding panoramic scene; one of the best-known spectacular shots in early cinema, it still appears in most history books. The film illustrates grandly the response of the early Swedish filmmakers to the menacing magnificence of the northern winter landscape.

After completing Erotikon Stiller moved on to Johan, a dark and satiric study of the triangular relationship of husband, wife, and the visitant, stranger-lover. Set in the desolate expanse of the countryside, the film includes a climax worthy of Griffith as the guilty couple, chased by the husband, ride the rapids in a small boat. Stiller then crowned his career in Sweden with two further adaptations of Lagerlöf’s work: Gunnar Hedes Saga and Gösta Berlings Saga. In the former—in every way an outstanding film of its period in its immixture of dream and actuality—the hero, the violinist Nils (Einar Hansson), is inspired to emulate his father, who made a fortune by driving a vast herd of reindeer south from the Arctic circle. Nils’s adventure in realizing this dream only leads to severe injury resulting in amnesia; back home in the forests of the south he experiences hallucinations from which the girl who loves him finally liberates him. The film’s duality is striking: the realism of the trek with the reindeer, which involved panoramic shots of the great herds and brilliant tracking shots of the catastrophic stampede which leads to Nils’s accident, is in marked contrast to the twilit world of his hallucinations.

Gösta Berling’s Saga, on the other hand, though famous for its revelation of the star quality of the young drama student, Greta Garbo, and its melodramatic story of the defrocked priest (Lars Hanson) fatally in love with Garbo’s Italian girl, is clumsy in structure compared with Gunnar Hede’s Saga, and was later destructively cut for export to half its original length of four hours.

Stiller travelled in 1925 to America at the invitation of Louis B. Mayer of MGM on the strength of his reputation as a sophisticated European director, but mostly (it would seem) because he was Garbo’s Svengali-like and obsessive mentor. He very soon fell out with Mayer, who endured him because he wanted Garbo as a contract player. All but mesmerized by Stiller, Garbo insisted that he direct her in The Temptress; the inevitable difficulties arose and he was withdrawn from the film.

Stiller’s best film in America was made at Paramount. Hotel Imperial, which starred Pola Negri, concerned a wartime love affair between a hotel servant and an Austrian officer and was notable for its spectacular, composite hotel set over which the camera hung suspended from an overhead rail. After finishing a second film with Negri, The Woman on Trial, Stiller never managed to complete another film; the respiratory illness that was undermining his health forced him to part from Garbo and return to Sweden, where he died in 1928 at the age of 45.

—Roger Manvell

STILLMAN, Whit

Films as Director:

1990 Metropolitan (+ pr, sc)
1993 “‘The Heart of Saturday Night,’ episode of Homicide: Life on the Streets (for TV)
1994 Barcelona (+ pr, sc)
1998 The Last Days of Disco (+ pr, sc)

Films as Actor:

1983 La Linea del cielo (The Sky Line) (Colomo)
1984 Sal gorda (Trueba) (as Mortimer Peabody)

Publications

By STILLMAN: article—

On STILLMAN: book—

On STILLMAN: articles—

Lyons, Donald, “Places in the Heart,” in Film Comment (New York), July/August 1994.

* * *

The characters populating Whit Stillman’s first three films occupy a more-or-less definable epoch at the end of the 20th century. The Last Days of Disco (1998) and Barcelona (1994) are set in the early 1980s; Metropolitan (1990) is set “not so long ago,” which would seem to be around the time of the other two pictures. Yet these people might easily have attended the parties, traipsed through the mansions, and jumped into the fountains of F. Scott Fitzgerald’s Roaring Twenties. Stillman has often been pegged as an ironist, but his movies are also informed by a rich nostalgia. And although he captures the tone of the 1980s with a keen eye—and especially a sharp ear—his people are also timeless types, their foibles and longings as authentic in the disco era as they would have been in the jazz age.

Had Stillman himself been alive in the 1920s, he probably would have known Fitzgerald. His great-grandfather was James Stillman, president of the banking leviathan that would become Citibank. Born to parents who worked in Democratic politics, Whit Stillman grew up partly in a Hudson Valley town, graduated from Harvard in 1973, and worked for a time in New York publishing (an environment that would form the backdrop of The Last Days of Disco). Having abandoned an early fling at novel-writing, he became involved in the movie business while living in Spain (he married a Barcelonan in 1980), as a sales representative for Spanish films and even as an occasional actor. His specialty was in geeky Americans—his appearances in Spanish movies include playing a character named Mortimer Peabody in Fernando Trueba’s Sal Gorda. While managing a design agency in Manhattan in the mid-1980s, Stillman wrote a feature screenplay about a Park Avenue debutante season. Stillman produced Metropolitan on a shoestring (including $50,000 from the sale of his apartment), arranging the film around a series of plainly but smartly shot dialogue scenes. The result was an utterly disarming look at the mating habits of upper-class WASPs, whose self-conscious yet earnest urges are no less poignant for their being born in the “urban haute bourgeoisie.” The characters often speak of Jane Austen, even if the central character doesn’t actually read novels (“I prefer good literary criticism”), and Stillman’s film is evocative of Austen’s earned wisdom and blade-edged satire. Most daringly, Stillman brought a wry sympathy to the privileged class at a time when serious film—especially serious independent film—was assumed to be exclusively concerned with problems and issues of ethnicity, feminism, crime, or life in the lower classes.

Metropolitan enjoyed a well-deserved round of critical gush, and it returned handsomely on its original investment. It won Stillman an Oscar nomination for his erudite screenplay; perhaps more importantly it won him a production deal at Castle Rock Pictures, which made his next two films. Barcelona, Stillman plucked two of the supporting actors from Metropolitan, Chris Eigeman and Taylor Nichols, and built an entire film around them.

In “the last decade of the Cold War,” two young Americans in Barcelona navigate the dangerous waters of beautiful women and anti-gringo sentiment. A torrent of talk swirls around them, from an anti-farm analogy of America’s foreign policy to the proper method of shaving, but Stillman’s Barcelona is not a toothless collection of glib ideas; he both satirizes and stands up for Eigeman’s defensive patriot, which accounts for the film’s sometimes bristling tone. With seamless efficiency, Stillman allows the picture to darken as it goes along, never losing its comic momentum but nicely upping the stakes. The visual portrait of the city was also evocative, but not in a picture-postcard way—critic Donald Lyons observed, “It is not surprising that Stillman, wary of clichés, includes not a single shot of a signature Gaudí building in this valentine to Gaudi’s city.”

And Barcelona confirmed Chris Eigeman as Stillman’s chief interpreter: as Marlene Dietrich was to Josef von Sternberg, so Chris Eigeman is to Whit Stillman. The filmmaker does not classify Eigeman as an alter ego: “I love that character he plays in my films, but actually that isn’t me. . . . (The characters Chris plays would be the older, impressive, funny cousins that I had—people in college who were two years older than me)” The wide-eyed, deadpan actor lets Stillman’s dialogue roll trippingly off his tongue, thus embodying the special kind of ironical sincerity that the director has perfected. Stillman wrote a role for “a Chris Eigeman type” in his next film, and worried over whom to cast . . . until coming to his senses and simply casting Chris Eigeman.

That film was The Last Days of Disco, a character comedy that lived up to its jokey yet vaguely melancholic title. Once again Stillman wrapped the delights of repartee around a solid emotional core, although this time the narrative weight was shifted to the female characters, especially the unlucky innocent played by Chloe Sevigny. Stillman’s picture of Manhattan youth waltzing through the Studio 54 scene confirmed his grasp of social groups. “This is something we hunger for in the United States,” Stillman has said. “We’re living in times that are a bit atomized. When we find those groups, it can really mean a lot to us.”

The stylization of Stillman’s dialogue risks his actors lapsing into wooden recitation, yet within minutes the films find their own rhythm and tone. The loose trilogy makes Stillman look like a Preston Sturges of the Reagan years, though admittedly less antic. Working at a deliberate pace, Stillman makes a film every four years, and after Disco planned to break away from his favored milieu and create a completely different kind of film—which means the UHB, the Urban Haute Bourgeoisie, may never again find as eloquent a voice.

—Robert Horton

---

STONE, Oliver

Nationality: American. Born: New York City, 1946. Education: Studied at Yale University, dropped out, 1965; studied filmmaking under Martin Scorsese, New York University, B.F.A., 1971. Military

Films as Director and Scriptwriter:

1974  Seizure
1979  Mad Man of Martinique
1981  The Hand
1986  Salvador (+ pr, co-sc); Platoon
1987  Wall Street (co-sc)
1988  Talk Radio (co-sc)
1989  Born on the Fourth of July (co-sc)
1991  The Doors (co-sc, + uncredited role as film professor); JFK (+ pr)
1993  Heaven and Earth (+ pr)
1994  Natural Born Killers
1995  Nixon (+ pr)
1997  U Turn
1999  Any Given Sunday (+ exec pr)

Other Films:

1973  Sugar Cookies (Gershuny) (co-pr)
1978  Midnight Express (Parker) (sc)
1982  Conan the Barbarian (Milius) (co-sc)
1983  Scarface (De Palma) (sc)
1985  Year of the Dragon (Cimino) (sc)
1986  8 Million Ways to Die (Ashby) (co-sc)
1991  The Iron Maze (exec pr)
1992  South Central (exec pr); Zebrahead (exec pr)
1993  Dave (role as himself); The Last Party (role as himself); The Joy Luck Club (exec pr); Wild Palms (for TV) (exec pr)
1994  The New Age (exec pr)
1995  Indictment: The McMartin Trial (for TV) (exec pr)
1996  Freeway (exec pr); Killer: Journal of a Murder (exec pr); The People vs. Larry Flint (pt)
1998  The Last Days of Kennedy and King (exec pr); Savior (pt)
1999  Chains (exec pr); The Corrupter (exec pr)

Publications

By STONE: books—

Oliver Stone’s Heaven and Earth, with Michael Singer, Boston, 1993.

By STONE: articles—

Interview with Pat McGilligan, in Film Comment (New York), January/February 1987.
Interview with M. Burke, in Stills (London), 29 February 1987.
Interview with Louise Tanner, in Films in Review (New York), March 1987.
Interview with M. Sineux and Michel Ciment, in Positif (Paris), April 1987.
Interview with Mark Rowland, in American Film (Washington, D.C.), March 1991.
Interview with Jeff Yarbrough, in Advocate (New York), 7 April 1992.
Interview with Gavin Smith, in Film Comment (New York), January/February 1994.
Interview with Graham Fuller, in Interview (New York), September 1994.
Interview with Nathan Gardels, in New Perspectives (Toronto), Spring 1995.
Interview with Ric Gentry, in Post Script (Commerce), Summer 1996.
“Desert Noir: How the Southwest was Redone;” an interview with Andrew O. Thompson, in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), October 1997.

On STONE: books—

On STONE: articles—

Cieutat, Michel, and others, in Positif (Paris), April 1996.

On STONE: film—

* * *

Anyone attempting with any degree of success, both artistic and commercial, to make overtly political movies that sustain a left-wing position within the Hollywood cinema of the 1980s and 1990s deserves at least our respectful attention. In fact, Oliver Stone’s work dramatizes, in a particularly extreme and urgent form, the quandary of the American left-wing intellectual.

Platoon and Wall Street provide a useful starting point, as they share the same basic structure. A young man (Charlie Sheen, in both films) has to choose in terms of values between the Good Father (Willem Dafoe, Martin Sheen) and the Bad Father (Tom Berenger, Michael Douglas); he learns to choose the Good Father and destroy the Bad. The opposition is very similar in both cases: the Good Father is a liberal with a conscience, aware of the impossibility of changing or radically affecting the general situation but committed to the preservation of his personal integrity; the Bad Father has no conscience and no integrity to preserve, and this, combined with a total ruthlessness, is what equips him to survive (until the dénouement) and makes him an insidiously seductive figure. The Bad Father is completely adapted to a system that the Good Father can protest against but do nothing to change. The young man can exact a kind of individual justice by destroying the Bad Father, but the system remains intact.

Platoon and Wall Street do not represent Stone’s work at its best: their targets are a bit too obvious, the characteristic rage comes too easily, tinged with self-righteousness, so that the alienating aspects of his manner—the heavy stylistic rhetoric, the emotional bludgeoning—are felt at their most obtrusive. But the two films encapsulate the quandary—one might say the blockage—that is treated more complexly elsewhere: what does one fight for within a system one perceives as totally corrupt but in which the only alternative to capitulation is impotence?

The fashionable buzz-phrase “structuring absence” becomes resonant when applied to Stone’s films: in the most literal sense, his work so far is structured precisely on the absence of an available political alternative, which could only be a commitment to what is most deeply and hysterically taboo in American culture, a form of Marxist socialism. There is a curious paradox here which Americans seem reluctant to notice: Lincoln’s famous formula, supposedly one of the foundations of American political ideology, “Government of the people, by the people and for the people,” could only be realized in a system dubbed, above all else, “un-American” (American capitalism, as Stone sees very clearly, is government by the rich and powerful for the rich and powerful). In both Salvador and Born on the Fourth of July the protagonist declares, at a key point in the development, “I am an American, I love America,” and we must assume he is speaking for Stone. But we must ask, which America does he love, since the American actuality presented in both films is unambiguously and uniformly hateful? What is being appealed to here is clearly a myth of America, but the films seem, implicitly and with profound unease, to recognize that the myth cannot possibly be realized, that capitalism must take the forms it has historically taken. Hence the sense one takes from the films of a just but impotent rage: without the availability of the alternative there is no way out.

This is nowhere clearer than in Salvador, one of Stone’s strongest, least flawed works and a gesture of great courage within its sociopolitical context. While in American capitalist democracy it is still possible to make a film like Salvador (the equivalent in Stalinist Russia would have been unthinkable), it is not possible for the film to go further than it does, to take the necessary, logical step. Impotent rage is permissible, the promotion of a constructive alternative is not. Stone’s films can be acceptable, even popular, even canonized by Academy Awards precisely because their ultimate effect, beyond the rage, is to suggest that things cannot be changed (as indeed they cannot, while one remains within the system). Salvador offers a lucid and cogent analysis of the political situation, a vivid dramatization of historical events (the death of Romero, the rape and murder of the visiting Nicaraguan nuns), and an outspoken denunciation of American intervention. Neither does it chicken out at the end: the final scene, where the protagonist at last gets his lover and her two children over the border into the “land of the free,” to have them abruptly and brutally sent back by American security officers, is as chilling as anything that modern Hollywood cinema has to offer. But the film’s attitude to the concept of a specifically socialist revolution (as opposed to a vague notion of people “fighting for their freedom”) is thoroughly cagy and equivocal. Nothing is done to demystify the habitual American conflation of socialism and Marxism with Stalinism.

All the film can say is that the threat of a general “Communist” takeover is either imaginary or grossly exaggerated (if it were not, presumably the horrors we are shown would all be justified or at least pardonable), that the Salvadors, like good Americans, just want their liberty, and that America, in its own interests, has betrayed its founding principles by intervening on the wrong side.

Born on the Fourth of July recapitulates the earlier film’s force, rage, and outspokenness, and also its impasse. It seems to be weakened, however, by its final construction of its protagonist as a redeemer-hero. Ron Kovic, by the end of the film, in realizing (with whatever irony) his mother’s dream that he would one day speak before thousands of people saying wonderful things, at once regains his full personal integrity and sense of self-worth and offers an apparent political escape by revealing the “truth.” But recent history has shown many times that the revelation of truth can be very readily mythified and absorbed into the system (the Oscar awards and nominations for Stone’s movies represent an exact equivalent).

Talk Radio received no such accolades and seems generally regarded as a minor, marginal work. On the contrary, it is arguably Stone’s most completely successful film to date and absolutely central to his work, to the point of being confessional. It has been taken as more an Eric Bogosian movie than a Stone movie. We can credit Stone with firmer personal integrity and higher ambitions than are evidenced by Barry Champlain (Bogosian’s character), but, that allowance made, Stone has found here the perfect “objectively correlative” for his own position, his own quandary. Champlain’s rage, topping over into hysteria, parallels the tone of much of Stone’s work and identifies one of its sources, the frustration of grasping that no one really listens, no one understands, no one wants to understand; the sense of addressing a people kept in a state of mystification so complete, by a system so powerful and pervasive, that no formal brainwashing could improve on it (this “reading” of the American public is resumed in Born on the Fourth of July). The film is indeed revelatory, and very impressive in its honesty and nakedness.

In the 1990s, Stone’s career entered a new phase as the director became even more commercially successful while raising the ante of political controversy. His earlier films, especially Platoon, had successfully exploited classic realist techniques—especially the device of the likeable main character—to arouse audience sympathy for a radical point of view: that the system deals in death, not life, and counts as enemies all who oppose it, including “good” Americans. Classic realism, however, leads the spectator toward emotional catharses that blunt the point of such political perceptions; furthermore, the narrative closure required in such texts suggests a victory for the protagonists of good will even as the political problems so tellingly enunciated are transcended. Of Stone’s recent films, only Heaven and Earth, which completes his Vietnam trilogy, remains more or less within the regime of classic realism. Based on the autobiographical novels of Le Ly Hayslip, Heaven and Earth also offers a main character—a young Vietnamese woman—who is both sympathetic and socially typical, who offers, in short, an ideal emotional and narrative vantage point for the representation—pompous if not objective or detailed—of Vietnamese history since 1953. Le Ly is abused and manipulated by the successive regimes in her village—French, South Vietnamese, Viet Cong—only to be “rescued” by a burned-out GI who takes her to an America concerned only with materialism and its own comfort. This ambitious film never individualizes, hardly humanizes its main character (who heroically resists Americanization by an entrepreneurship that allows her to live alone and return to Vietnam). With its startling visual stylization, artful use of disorienting editing, and expressionistic mise-en-scène, Heaven and Earth treats its subject with an operatic grandeur. The abandonment of realism (with its carefully restrained stylization) for expressionism is also evident in The Doors, which takes as its subject yet another—for Stone—heroic rebel of the 1960s, musician/poet Jim Morrison. Here visual and aural stylizations are motivated by Stone’s desire to pay homage to the psychodelism of the period, even as they “express” the artistic rebellion of Morrison’s music. As in Heaven and Earth, the film is less about a character than a zeitgeist, but many reviewers and spectators were disappointed by Stone’s lack of emphasis on narrative and complex character.

A further, though never complete rejection of realism is to be found in the three Stone films that have found the most commercial success, even as they have aroused the greatest political controversy (making Stone a frequent guest on TV talk shows to defend his latest work and simultaneously plug it). Natural Born Killers, though ostensibly set in the 1990s, actually constructs its own, nightmarish version of American reality. Following Brecht, Stone here revives an American myth—the outlaw couple à la Bonnie and Clyde—but empties the outrageously violent attack on family and society perpetrated by Mickey and Mallory of all emotional content through two defamiliarizing techniques: a fragmentary, Eisensteinian montage that prevents any scene from achieving a reality effect; and acting that avoids naturalism at all costs. If Platoon uses the violence of war for melodramatic effect, Natural Born Killers eschews emotion of any kind to make a political point: the murderous connection between the deep-seated pathology of American family life and the reprehensible tendency for the media to exploit the desire of the abused and battered to find some kind of identity and self-worth. The result is the most intellectually profound and cerebral contemplation of violence in American life since Peckinpah’s The Wild Bunch. Stone, however, has not been satisfied to transcend the historical through mythopoea and stylistic virtuosity (in the manner of, say, Jim Morrison). His conception of the film director’s social role is the most enlarged since the time of D. W. Griffith, whose career his own has in part mirrored. What the Civil War was for Griffith’s generation, the Kennedy assassination has been for Stone’s: a defining historical event, seen rightly or wrongly as the source of subsequent developments. JFK is Stone’s attempt to argue that case: not simply to advance yet another conspiracy theory, but to identify the death of Kennedy as the beginning of a deterioration in American life that has not yet come to an end. Like Griffith, Stone attempted a paradoxical recreation of history: a film that, he argues, is “true” to the facts and yet, making use of dramatic license, creates its own facts as an interpretation, a possible version of history. Like Griffith, Stone has been much attacked for so doing, even as his film has reopened interest in an event and its aftermath for a new generation. JFK uneasily joins two stylistic regimes: a classic realist narrative (the pursuit of the truth by a sympathetically presented main character, district attorney Jim Garrison) and a highly rhetorical, expressionistic recreation of the events under investigation. Of course, Garrison, like Stone’s other heroes, fails to do more than the right thing: the vaguely evoked fascistic cabal of southern businessmen and loose cannon Cubans emerges unsathed after pinning the rap on hapless Lee Harvey Oswald. Like Heaven and Earth, JFK ultimately turns nostalgically toward a past as yet unspoiled by the fall into political violence.

Nixon, in contrast, is less oriented toward an event and an era than toward political biography. In the extensively annotated published screenplay, Stone answers his expected critics by pointing to the historical record as a source for the film’s material. In that book, Stone insists that his story of Nixon is a classically tragic tale of the essentially good man who overreaches and thereby dooms himself to disgrace. The resulting film, however, is disappointingly simplistic. Nixon becomes a bumbling, foul-mouthed fool whose physical and political gaffes define his relations with others (their constant disapproval is evoked by numerous reaction shots). This interpretation is very much at odds with the substance of the political record and does nothing to explain the shifting tides of popular sentiment that swept Nixon into office and returned him for a second term. Choosing a subject for which he could feel little sympathy, Stone reveals in Nixon the limits of his political vision, which, like Griffith’s, depends too much on the melodramatic binarism of heroes and villains.

—Robin Wood

As not in JFK, the opposition of a classic realist regime (the film’s investigational structure, a la Citizen Kane, its most obvious model) to an expressionistically represented subjectivity (Nixon’s flow of memories) produces little more than confusion for anyone not absolutely familiar with the detailed factual record of Nixon’s presidency. Griffith’s genius lay in his ability, if that is what it was, to tell a complicated story in simple but evocative images. In this he was followed by the other great cinema historian, Sergei Eisenstein. Stone’s ponderous record of the American decline exemplified and contributed to by Nixon fails to tell a story to which anyone not a member of the chorus of the converted would likely attend or even be able to follow.

Stone’s work in the closing years of the decade signals a further decline. U-Turn moves away from political filmmaking toward the exploding of a popular genre—the neo-noir erotic thriller—through the same ostentatious stylistic excesses that made some political sense in JFK and Nixon (since they were a calculated Brechtian rhetoric), but here seem so much empty, facetious posing. Sean Penn offers an excellent performance as a petty criminal trapped by bad luck and his own ineptitude in a nightmare landscape (reminiscent of the world Welles limns in Touch of Evil, the paranoid masterpiece that Stone consciously evokes). Yet the film is strangely uninvolving, full of oneiric imagery signifying nothing. Unlike many neo-noir films, U-Turn says nothing new about the discontents of gender or the existential frustrations of the American dream. We are hardly surprised that in the bloodbath finale of cross and double cross the hero thinks he has broken the hold of bad fortune only to realize that the femme fatale, now dead by his hand, has taken the keys to the car that offers his only chance of escape. The same subject matter is treated with more wit and narrative finesse in Red Rock West, The Last Seduction, and other neo-noir programmers.

Stone returned to the big subject in Any Given Sunday, where he attempts to anatomize professional football, which we are implicitly asked to accept as a quintessence of American values, discontents, and dreams. Despite a huge expenditure on what are intended to be graphic depictions of the on-field struggle, Any Given Sunday seems surprisingly ill-informed on the sport and often fails to represent it meaningfully or clearly (for example, the plot involves a young black quarterback who leads the team to temporary success by making up plays in the huddle, an “innovation” we are asked to understand as both plausible and impressive). The struggle in which Stone is more interested takes place in the corporate board room and in the players’ luxurious homes. Here Stone proves incapable of capturing quickly and unforgettably the ambience of such a life on the edge and at the top (making Martin Scorsese’s evocation of Las Vegas in Casino seem all that more impressive). The narrative, unsurprisingly, comes down to a big game that the teams wins for the aging, jaded coach whose job is in jeopardy (another sad-faced portrayal by Al Pacino of a “godfather” in decline). Overlong, self-indulgent, and unconvincing, Any Given Sunday fails to add anything to our understanding of professional sports, or of the athletes and businessmen who control them.

—updated by R. Barton Palmer

STORCK, Henri

Nationality: Belgian. Born: Ostend, 5 September 1907. Family: Married photographer Virginia Lieren. Career: Began making films in 8mm, 1927; organized cine-club in Ostend, made first “reportages,” 1928; assistant in France to Pierre Billon, Jean Croillon, and Jean Vigo, 1931; with Joris Ivens, made Borinage, 1933; began making films about art and folklore, 1936; directed first Belgian-international co-production, Le Banquet des fraudeurs, 1951; president (for fifteen years), Association Belge des Auteurs de Films et Auteurs de Télévision, and co-founder, Royal Film Archive of Belgium. Died: 16 September 1999, in Brussels, Belgium, of natural causes.

Films as Director:

1927–28 amateur films on Ostend
1929–30 Pour vos beaux yeux; Images d’Ostende
1930 Une Pêche au hareng; Le Service de sauvetage sur la côte belge; Les Fêtes du centenaire; Trains de plaisir; Tentative de films abstraits; La Mort de Vénus; Suzanne au bain; Ostende, reine des plages
1931 Une Idylle à la plage
1932 Travaux du tunnel sous l’Escaut; Histoire du soldat inconnu; Sur les bords de la caméra
1933 Trois Vies une corde; Misère au Borinage (co-d, co-ph)
1934 Création d’alègres artisticiens chez le chien; La Production sélective du réseau à soixante-dix
1935 Electricification de la ligne Bruxelles-Anvers; L’Île de Pâques; Le Trois-Mâts; Cap du sud; L’Industrie de la tapisserie et du meuble sculpté; Le Coton
1936 Les Carillons; Les Jeux de l’été et de la mer; Sur les routes de l’été; Regards sur la Belgique ancienne
1937 La Belgique nouvelle; Un ennemi public; Les Maisons de la misère
1938 Comme une lettre à la poste; La Roue de la fortune; Terre de Flandre; Vacances; Le Patron est mort
1939 Voor Recht en Vrijheid te Kortrijk
1940 La Foire internationale de Bruxelles
1942–44 Symphonie paysanne (co-d, ph)
1944 Le Monde de Paul Delvaux (+ ph)
1947 La Joie de revivre
1947–48 Rubens
1949 Au carrefour de la vie
1950 Carnavals
1951 Le Banquet des fraudeurs (feature)
1952 La Fenêtre ouverte
1953 Herman Teirlinck
1954 Les Belges et la mer; Les Portes de la maison; Le Tour du monde en bateau-stop
1955 Le Trésor d’Ostende
1956 Décembre, mois des enfants
1957 Couleur de feu
1957–60 Les Seigneurs de la forêt
1960 Les Gestes du silence
1961 Les Dieux du feu, L’Energie et vous
1962 Variation sur le geste; Le Bonheur d’être aimée (+ co-pr, co-sc); Les Malheurs de la guerre
1963 Plastiques
1964 Matières nouvelles
1965 Le Musée vivant
1966 Jeudi on chantera comme dimanche
1968 Forêt secrète d’Afrique
1969–70 Paul Delvaux ou les femmes défendues (+ ed)
1969–72 Fêtes de Belges
1974–75 Fifes et tambours d’Entre-Sambre-et-Meuse; Les Marcheurs de Sainte Rolende; Les Joyeux Tromblons
1985 Permeke (+ sc)

Other Film:

1975 Jeanne Dielmann, 23 Quai du commerce, 1080 Bruxelles
(Akerman) (role as 1st caller)
1987 Henri Storck: Ooggetuige (consultant)
1998 Mes entretiens filmés (role)

Publications

By STORCK: articles—

Interview with Bert Hogenkamp, in Skrien (Amsterdam), July/August 1977.
Interview with J. P. Everaerts in Film en Televisie (Brussels), September 1987.
Interviews with A. Tournès in Jeune Cinéma (Paris), May/June and July/August 1988.
Interview with F. Tanzarella, in Cineforum (Bergamo), January-February 1996.

On STORCK: articles—

De Bongnie, J., “Storck vu par un jeune Hudon,” in Amis du Film et de la Télévision (Brussels), November 1979.
Everaerts, Jan-Pieter, in Film en Televisie + Video (Brussels), September 1987.

* * *

After growing up in the seaside town of Ostend, Henri Storck naturally chose the beach and the sea, with the surrounding sand dunes, as background and subject for many of his early films. He became friendly with Ostend’s resident and visiting artists, and they all apparently absorbed creative strength from the solid tradition of Flemish paintings as well as physical stamina from the invigorating
North Sea air. Primarily a documentarist, Storck’s prolific output of over seventy films does include a couple of fiction films: Une Idylle à la plage, a short film about adolescent love; and Le Banquet des fraudeurs, a feature film with a thriller framework. Storck has described the work of his mentor, Charles DeKeukeleire, another Belgian film pioneer, as having “lyrical expression, faithfulness to authentic reality, and a sense of rhythm in editing.” These words are just as applicable to Storck’s own oeuvre. Borinage, a film about a coal miners’ strike in the Borinage—a district southwest of Brussels—is a powerful revelation of the miners’ living conditions. The film cinematically echoes the feelings that Van Gogh expressed in his drawings of an earlier period. Borinage is full of strong, intense images. A daring project, made in collaboration with Joris Ivens, the film had to be shot covertly in order to evade the police. Banned from public showing in Belgium and Holland at the time it was released, Borinage became a time-tested classic and an inspiration to the “Grierson boys” in England. Symphonie paysanne, made in a completely different style, depicted the passage of the seasons on a Belgian farm. This pastoral eulogy again demonstrated Storck’s ability to express his humane sensibility in a cinematic manner.

After the war, Storck immensely enhanced a developing genre—films analyzing the visual arts. Rubens (made in collaboration with Paul Haezaerts) and The World of Paul Delvaux are outstanding examples which were immediately recognized as tours de force. The Open Window and The Sorrows of the War were also worthy contributions to this category. A later film about Delvaux, Paul Delvaux or the Forbidden Women, was, to Storck’s great amusement, promoted on Times Square as a pornographic film. In his films about art, Storck was particularly innovative in his use of camera movement to display the details of the art works, and in some films used animated lines to demonstrate their structures of composition. Henri Storck’s humanistic vision is revealed by his films and crosses all national and cultural boundaries.

—Robert Edmonds

STRAUB, Jean-Marie, and Danièle HUILLET

STRAUB. Nationality: French, German. Born: Metz, France, 8 January 1933. Education: Studied literature at the Universities of Strasbourg and Nancy, 1950–54. Family: Married Danièle Huillett, 1959. Career: Organized a film society in his hometown, late 1940s; moved to Paris and began collaboration with Huillet, 1954; worked as assistant to French directors Abel Gance, Jean Renoir, Jacques Rivette, Robert Bresson, and Alexandre Astruc, 1954–58; left France to avoid military service in the Algerian conflict, 1958 (received amnesty, 1971); Straub and Huillet moved to Munich, 1959; collaborated on their first film, Machorka-Muff, 1963; moved to Italy, 1969.

HUILLET. Nationality: French. Born: France, 1 May 1936. Education: Studied film at the Universities of Nancy and Strasbourg. Family: Married the director Jean-Marie Straub, 1959. Career: Began collaboration with Jean-Marie Straub, 1954; Straub and Huillet moved to Munich, 1959; collaborated on their first film, Machorka-Muff, 1963; moved to Italy, 1969. Address: c/o French Film Office, 745 5th Avenue, New York, NY 10151, U.S.A.

Films as Directors:

1963 Machorka-Muff (Straub: d, co-ed, co-sound; Huillet: sc, co-ed, co-sound)
1965 Nicht versöhnt oder Es hilft nur Gewalt, wo Gewalt herrscht (Huillet: sc, co-ed, co-sound)
1968 Chronik der Anna Magdalena Bach (Chronicle of Anna Magdalena Bach) (Straub: d, co-ed, co-ph; Huillet: sc, co-ed, co-ph)
1969 Othon (Les Yeux ne veulent pas en tout temps se fermer ou Peut-être qu’un jour Rome se permettra de choisir à son tour; Die Augen wollen sich nicht zu jeder Zeit schliessen oder Vielleicht eines Tages wird Rom sich erlauben, seinerseits zu wählen; Eyes Do Not Want to Close at All Times or Perhaps One Day Rome Will Permit Herself to Choose in Her Turn, Othon) (Huillet: sc, co-ed; Straub + role under pseudonym Jubarithe Semaran); Einleitung zu Arnold Schoenbergs Begleit Musik zu einer Lichtspielszene (Introduction to Arnold Schoenberg’s Accompaniment for a Cinematographic Scene) (+ co-pr, co-ed, co-ph; Huillet: sc, co-ed)
1972 Geschichtsunterricht (History Lessons) (+ co-pr, co-ed, co-ph; Huillet + sc)
1975 Moses und Aron (Moses and Aaron) (+ co-pr, co-ed; Huillet + sc)
1976 Fortini/Cani (I cani del Sinai) (+ co-pr, co-ed; Huillet + sc)
1977 Toute révolution est un coup de dés (Every Revolution Is a Throw of the Dice) (Huillet + sc)
1979 Della nube alla resistenza (From the Cloud to the Resistance) (Huillet + sc)
1983 Trop tot, trop tard (Too Early, Too Late)
1985 Klassenverhältnisse (Class Relations)
1987 Tod des Empedokles (The Death of Empedocles)
1989 Schwarze Sonne (Black Sun); Cézanne
1992 Antigone (Straub d, sc; Huillet, sc)
1994 Lothringen! (Huillet, ed)
1997 Von heute auf morgen
1999 Sicilia! (Straub d, sc; Huillet, sc)

Other Films (Straub):

1954 La Tour des Nesle (Gance) (asst d)
1955 French Cancan (Renoir) (asst d)
1956 Eléna et les hommes (Renoir) (asst d); Le Coup de Berger (Rivette) (asst d); Un Condamné à mort s’est échappé (Bresson) (asst d)
1958 Une Vie (Astruc) (asst d)

Publications

By STRAUB AND HUILLET: book—

By STRAUB AND HUILLET: articles—

Interview with R. Gansera, in Filmkritik (Munich), September 1978.
Interview with H. Farocki, in Filmkritik (Munich), May 1983.
Interview with S. Blum and J. Prieur, in Camera/Stylo (Paris), September 1983.
Interview with E. Bruno and R. Rosetti, in Filmcritica (Rome), September 1984.
Interview with M. Blank and others, in Filmkritik (Munich), September/October 1984.
Interview with A. Bengala and others, in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), October 1984.
Interview with E. Szekeley, in Filmvilág (Budapest), vol. 28, no. 8, 1985.
Interview with P. Willemsen, in Andere Sinema (Antwerp), September/October 1989.
Interview with Mart Dominicus and Jos de Putter, in Skrien (Amsterdam), February-March 1990.
Interview with Christian Bosséno, in Vertigo (Paris), January 1996.
Bramkamp, Robert, “Eine Hexe, die eine Menge Energie verbraucht,” in Film und Fernsehen (Berlin), vol. 25, no. 5–6, 1997.

On STRAUB AND HUILLET: books—

Franklin, James, New German Cinema: From Oberhausen to Hamburg, Boston, 1983.

On STRAUB AND HUILLET: articles—

Sauvaget, D., article in Revue du Cinéma (Paris), April 1980.
Blank, R., article in Skrien (Amsterdam), Summer 1981.
Durgnat, Raymond, “From Caligari to Hitler,” in Film Comment (New York), Summer 1981.
Graziani, G. and others, article in Filmcritica (Rome), September/October 1981.
Goldschmidt, D., article in Cinematographe (Paris), March 1982.
Mitry, Jean, article in Cinematographe (Paris), September 1982.
Simons, J., article in Skrien (Amsterdam), September 1982.
Lange, M., and others, article in Filmkritik (Munich), January 1983.
Ranieri, N., article in Cinema Nuovo (Torino), August-October 1983.
Maderna, M., article in Segnocinema (Vicenza), January 1984.
Rosetti, R., article in Filmcritica (Rome), October 1985.
Kamiah, J., article in Filmcritica (Rome), January-February 1987.
Chevrie, M., article in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), April 1989.
Dominicus, M., and J. de Putter, article in Skrien (Amsterdam), February-March 1990.
“Jean-Marie Straub wirt 60,” in EPD Film (Frankfurt), January 1993.

* * *

The films of Jean-Marie Straub and Danièle Huillet are best understood in the context of contemporary developments in radical, materialist cinema. They offer what many people see as a genuine alternative to both dominant narrative cinema and conventional art movies. Their work is formally austere and demands attentive, intellectual participation from audiences. However, it must be acknowledged that many people find their films nearly impenetrable and absolutely boring. This is explained in part by the fact that the films do not rely on standard narrative construction or conventional characters. While the films of Straub and Huillet are by no means ‘abstract’ it is nearly impossible to (re)construct a unified, imaginary, referential ‘world’ through them.

In a sense their work might be explained in terms of strategies of displeasure, a wilful refusal to captivate audiences with a coherent fictional world. Instead they promote a distanced, intellectual interaction between viewer and film. Because of this insistence on critical distance, audiences must work with the film in a dialectical process of meaning construction. (In fact, Straub is notoriously critical of ‘lazy’ viewers who are unwilling to engage in this activity.)

Straub and Huillet’s films directly address the nature of cinematic signification and its political implications. This includes breaking away from conventional assumptions and practices of dominant narrative cinema. Their films exploit all channels of the medium—music, sounds, words, and images—as equivalent carriers of meaning, rather than privileging the ‘visual’ or relegating music and sound effects to the task of support material. Thus, there are times when extremely long, static shots accompany lengthy, complex verbal passages (a singularly ‘uncinematic’ practice according to conventional canons of film aesthetics). Sequences may be developed along the lines of montage construction, juxtaposing graphic material, verbal material, and moving images. Both of these strategies are used in Introduction to Schoenberg’s ‘Accompaniment for a Cinematographic Scene’; and the starting point for this short film was a piece of music written by the composer. The major texts, read on-screen (though interrupted at intervals by black frames), are a letter from Schoenberg to Kandinsky explaining his reasons for not participating in the Bauhaus, and a text by Brecht elaborating the relationship between fascism and capitalism. The readings of these texts take up most of the film, which includes Straub and Huillet as on-camera narrators ‘placing’ the texts. The film then concludes with a montage sequence. The political aspect of the film derives not only from the logical argument advanced, the Brecht analysis standing as a critique of Schoenberg’s ‘liberal’ position, but also from the film’s rejection of documentary norms. At the same time it has been pointed out that Schoenberg’s music stands in relation to classical rules of harmonic composition in the same manner that Straub and Huillet films stand in relation to the conventions of dominant cinema.

The incorporation of musical works and verbal texts, as both a source for and signifying material within their films, is an important aspect of their work. The figure of Bertolt Brecht is perhaps the most pervasive presence in Straub and Huillet’s films. His writing is included in Introduction to Schoenberg and provided the source for History Lessons. More crucially, the strategies of deconstruction and distanciation in their films derive from principles advanced in Brechtian theory. These include concepts of alienation and anti-illusionism elaborated in Brecht’s theory of epic theater. Straub and Huillet have developed these ideas in the context of their films and their persistent concern with the politics of cinematic expression.

Straub and Huillet will probably never be as well known to cineastes as fellow New German filmmakers Rainer Werner Fassbinder, Volker Schlondorff, Werner Herzog, or Wim Wenders. But their minimalist films remain important contributions to the New German cinema, and they have been a meaningful voice for the art crowd in Germany. As with all gifted and dedicated film artists whose works are unconventionally structured, their cinematic output remains worthy of study by serious film students and equally worthy of viewing by discerning audiences.

—M.B. White, updated by Rob Edelman

STURGES, Preston

Nationality: American. Born: Edmund P. Biden in Chicago, 29 August 1898; adopted by mother’s second husband, Solomon Sturges. Education: Educated in Chicago (Coulter School); Lycée Janson, Paris; Ecole des Roches, France; Villa Lausanne, Switzerland; and in Berlin and Dresden. Family: Married 1) Estelle Mudge (divorced 1928); 2) Eleanor Post Hutton, 1932 (annulled 1932); 3) Louise Sergeant Tervis (divorced); 4) actress Anna Nagle (known professionally as Sandy Mellen), three sons. Career: Managed mother’s cosmetic shop in Deauville, then New York, early 1910s; runner for Wall Street brokerage firm, 1914; enlisted in Air Corps, attended School of Military Aeronautics, Austin, Texas, 1917; returned to cosmetic business in New York, invented kissproof lipstick, 1919; turned business over to mother, worked in various jobs and as inventor; playwright, from 1927; The Guinea Pig ran 16 weeks on Broadway, 1929; scriptwriter from 1930, moved to Hollywood, 1932; directed own screenplays, from 1940; also manager of Sturges Engineering Company, producing diesel engines; began association with Howard Hughes, 1944; moved to Paris, 1949. Awards: Oscar

Preston Sturges (right) with Joel McCrea and Claudette Colbert on the set of The Palm Beach Story for Best Original Screenplay, for The Great McGinty, 1940; Laurel Award for Achievement (posthumously), Writers Guild of America, 1974. Died: At the Algonquin Hotel, New York, 6 August 1959.

Films as Director and Scriptwriter:

1940 The Great McGinty; Christmas in July
1941 The Lady Eve; Sullivan’s Travels
1942 The Palm Beach Story
1944 Hail the Conquering Hero; The Miracle of Morgan’s Creek; The Great Moment
1947 Mad Wednesday (+ pr)
1948 Unfaithfully Yours (+ pr)
1949 The Beautiful Blonde from Bashful Bend (+ pr)
1951 Vendetta (co-d with Ferrer, uncredited)
1957 Les Carnets du Major Thompson (The French, They Are a Funny Race)

Other Films:

1930 The Big Pond (Henley) (co-sc, co-dialogue); Fast and Loose (Newmeyer) (sc, dialogue)
1931 Strictly Dishonorable (Stahl) (sc, play basis)
1933 The Power and the Glory (Howard) (sc); Child of Manhattan (Buzzell) (sc, play basis)
1934 Thirty-Day Princess (Gering) (co-sc); We Live Again (Mamoulian) (co-sc); Imitation of Life (Stahl) (co-sc, uncredited)
1935 The Good Fairy (Wyler) (sc); Diamond Jim (Sutherland) (co-sc)
1936 Next Time We Love (Edward Griffith) (co-sc, uncredited); One Rainy Afternoon (Lee) (lyrics for “Secret Rendezvous”)
1937 Hotel Haywire (Archainbaud) (sc); Easy Living (Leisen) (sc)
1938 Port of Seven Seas (Whale) (sc); If I Were King (Lloyd) (sc)
1940 Remember the Night (Leisen) (sc)
1947 I’ll Be Yours (Seiter) (screenplay basis)
1951 Strictly Dishonorable (Frank and Panama) (play basis)
1956 The Birds and the Bees (Taurog) (screenplay basis)
1958 Rock-a-bye Baby (Tashlin) (screenplay basis); Paris Holiday (Oswald) (role as Serge Vitry)

Publications

By STURGES: books—

By STURGES: articles—

Interview, in Interviews with Film Directors, edited by Andrew Sarris, New York, 1967.

On STURGES: books—

On STURGES: articles—

Houston, Penelope, “Preston Sturges,” in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1965.
Budd, Michael, “Notes on Preston Sturges and America,” in Film Society Review (New York), January 1968.
As a screenwriter, Preston Sturges stands out for his narrative inventiveness. All of the amazing coincidences and obvious repetitions in such comedies as Easy Living and The Good Fairy show Sturges’s mastery of the standard narrative form, as well as his ability to exaggerate it and shape it to his own needs. Moreover, in The Power and the Glory (an early model for Citizen Kane), Sturges pioneered the use of voice-over narration to advance a story.

Along with John Huston, Sturges was one of the first of the sound-era screenwriters to become a director, and those films that he made from his own screenplays take even further the narrative experiments he began as a writer in the 1930s. He continued making comedies, but often he combined them with elements that more properly belonged to social dramas in the Warner Brothers tradition, even though Sturges himself worked primarily for Paramount. The Great McGinty, for instance, deals with big-city political corruption. Christmas in July, despite its happy end, analyzes an American dream perverted by dishonesty and commercial hype. And Sullivan’s Travels, even as it mixes aspects of It Happened One Night and I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang, examines the uses of comedy in a society burdened by poverty and social injustice.

With The Palm Beach Story and The Lady Eve, Sturges goes from combining genres to parodying the standard narrative form. Traditionally, in the classical narrative, elements repeat from scene to scene, but with slight differences each time. The story, then, becomes a series of episodes that are similar, but not obviously so. The Palm Beach Story, however (although we cannot be sure of this until the end), deals with two sets of twins, one pair male and the other female, and Sturges takes full advantage of a practically infinite number of possibilities for doubling and repetition.

In The Lady Eve, there are no twins to call our attention to how Sturges exaggerates the typical narrative. But the central female character, Jean, changes her identity and becomes Eve Harrington, an elusive Faith Domergue, in Filmsfax (Evanston, Illinois), no. 59, February-March 1997.

* * *

During the early and mid-1940s, critics hailed Sturges as a comic genius. But after Unfaithfully Yours, over the last eleven years of his life, Sturges made only two more films. Upon leaving Paramount, he set out to make films for Howard Hughes, but the attempt was an ill-fated one, and Sturges’s standing in the critical community declined rapidly. For several years, though, a reevaluation has been underway. Sturges’s sophisticated handling of sexual relations (which the heir—no relation—plays the voyeur. As an added show of her strength, it is Jean who sees her staring, so she turns away from Pike’s table and holds a mirror to her face, as if she were giving a quick re-arrangement to her makeup. But instead she uses the mirror to watch Charles. Sturges cuts to a close-up of the mirror, and so we share Jean’s point of view.

As spectators, we are used to an appreciative male gaze, and are accustomed to a woman as the subject of that gaze. But here, once again, Sturges reverses our expectations. In his tale it is the woman who plays the voyeur. As an added show of her strength, it is Jean who apparently controls the images through her possession of the mirror. She thus captures an unknowing Charles within the frame of a looking-glass.

Sturges’s most interesting achievement may be his 1948 film, Unfaithfully Yours. Here, he shows the same event three times. While fairly common in literature, this sort of narrative construction is extremely rare in the cinema. But even in literature, the repeated event almost always comes to us from the points of view of different characters. In Sturges’s films, we see the event the first and second time through the eyes of the same man: an orchestra conductor plots revenge on his wife, whom he suspects of infidelity, and he imagines two different ways of accomplishing his goal. Then, the next repetition, rather than being imaginary, actually depicts the conductor’s attempts to murder his wife. So, since the conductor acts once again as the main character, even this last repetition comes to us from his point of view. The film stands out, then, as a remarkable case study of the thoughts and actions of a single character, and as one more of Sturges’s experiments in narrative repetition.

During the early and mid-1940s, critics hailed Sturges as a comic genius. But after Unfaithfully Yours, over the last eleven years of his life, Sturges made only two more films. Upon leaving Paramount, he set out to make films for Howard Hughes, but the attempt was an ill-fated one, and Sturges’s standing in the critical community declined rapidly. For several years, though, a reevaluation has been underway. Sturges’s sophisticated handling of sexual relations (which the heiress in The Palm Beach Story refers to as “Topic A”) make his films seem remarkably contemporary. And there can be no doubting Sturges’s screenwriting abilities. But only recently have critics come to appreciate Sturges’s consummate skills as a filmmaker.

—Eric Smoodin

SYBERBERG, Hans-Jurgen

Nationality: German. Born: Nossendorf, Pomerania, 8 December 1935. Education: Educated in literature and art history, Munich. Career: Lived in East Berlin, then moved to West Germany, 1953; made 8mm films of Brecht’s Berliner Ensemble at work, 1950s (blown up for release on 35mm, 1970); made 185 current affairs and documentary shorts for Bavarian Television, 1963–66; formed own production company, 1965; made five feature-length “character portraits” on Fritz Kortner and others, 1965–69; directed first feature, Scarabea, 1968; made “German Trilogy,” 1972–77; began working exclusively on projects with German actress Edith Clever after the release of Parsifal, 1983.

Films as Director:

1966 Fritz Kortner spricht Monologe für eine Schallplatte (Fritz Kortner Recites Monologues for a Record) (doc); Fritz Kortner spricht Shylock (Fritz Kortner Recites Shylock) (short; extract from Fritz Kortner spricht Monologe . . . );

1967 Die Grafen Pocci—Einige Kapitel zur Geschichte einer Familie (The Counts of Pocci—Some Chapters toward the History of a Family) (doc); Konrad Albert Pocci, der Fussballgraf vom Ammerland—Das vorläufig letzte Kapitel einer Chronik der Familie Pocci (Konrad Albert Pocci, the Football Count from the Ammerland—Provisionally the Last Chapter of a Chronicle of the Pocci Family) (extract from the preceding title)

1968 Scarabea—Wieviel Erde braucht der Mensch? (Scarabea—How Much Land Does a Man Need?)
1969 Sex-Business—Made in Passing (doc)
1970 San Domingo; Nach Meinem letzten Umzug (After My Last Move); Puntla and Faust (shorts; extracts from the preceding title)
1972 Ludwig II—Requiem für einen jungfräulichen König (Ludwig II—Requiem for a Virgin King); Theodor Hierneis oder: Wie man ehem. Hofkoch wird (Ludwig’s Cook)
1974 Karl May
The films of Hans-Jurgen Syberberg are at times annoying, confusing, and overlong—but they are also ambitious and compelling. In no way is he ever conventional or commercial: critics and audiences have alternately labeled his work brilliant and boring, absorbing and pretentious, and his films today are still rarely screened. Stylistically, it is difficult to link him with any other filmmaker or cinema tradition. In this regard he is an original, the most controversial of all the New German filmmakers and a figure who is at the vanguard of the resurgence of experimental filmmaking in his homeland.

Not unlike his contemporary, Rainer Werner Fassbinder, Syberberg’s most characteristic films examine recent German history: a documentary about Richard Wagner’s daughter-in-law, a close friend of Hitler (The Confessions of Winifred Wagner), his trilogy covering 100 years of Germany’s past (Ludwig II: Requiem for a Virgin King, Karl May, and, most famously, Hitler, A Film from Germany, also known as Our Hitler). These last are linked in their depictions of Germans as hypocrites, liars, and egocentrics, and in the final part he presents the rise of the Third Reich as an outgrowth of German romanticism.

Even more significantly, Syberberg is concerned with the cinema’s relationship to that history. Our Hitler, seven hours and nine minutes long, in four parts and 22 specific chapters, is at once a fictional move, a documentary, a three-ring circus (the “greatest show on earth”), and a filmed theatrical marathon. The Führer is presented with some semblance of reality, via Hans Schubert’s performance. But he is also caricatured, in the form of various identities and disguises: in one sequence alone, several actors play him as a house painter, Chaplin’s Great Dictator, the Frankenstein monster, Parsifal (Syberberg subsequently filmed the Wagner opera), and a joker. Hitler is also portrayed as an object, a ventriloquist’s doll, and a stuffed dog. In all, twelve different actors play the role, and 120 performances. But he is also caricatured, in the form of various identities and disguises: in one sequence alone, several actors play him as a house painter, Chaplin’s Great Dictator, the Frankenstein monster, Parsifal (Syberberg subsequently filmed the Wagner opera), and a joker. Hitler is also portrayed as an object, a ventriloquist’s doll, and a stuffed dog. In all, twelve different actors play the role, and 120 performances.

The result: Syberberg’s Hitler is painted as both a fascist dictator who could have risen to power at any point in time in any number of political climates (though the filmmaker in no way excuses his homeland for allowing Hitler to exist, let alone thrive), and a monstrous movie mogul whose Intolerance would be the Holocaust.

Syberberg unites fictional narrative and documentary footage in a style that is at once cinematic and theatrical, mystical and magical. His films might easily be performed live (Our Hitler is set on a stage), but the material is so varied that the presence of the camera is necessary to thoroughly translate the action. The fact that his staging has been captured on celluloid allows him total control of what the viewer sees at each performance. Additionally, the filmmaker is perceptibly aware of how the everyday events that make up history are ultimately comprehended by the public via the manner in which they are presented in the media. History is understood more by catchwords and generalities than facts. As a result, in this age of mass media, real events can easily become distorted and trivialized. Syberberg demonstrates this in Our Hitler by presenting the Führer in so many disguises that the viewer is often desensitized to the reality that was this mass murderer.

“...Aesthetics are connected with morals.” Syberberg says. “...Something like Holocaust is immoral because it’s a bad film. Bad art can’t do good things.” He commented that “...my three sins are that I believe Hitler came out of us, that he is one of us; that I am not interested in money, except to work with; and that I love Germany.” Our Hitler, and his other films, clearly reflect these preferences.

In recent years, Syberberg has remained relatively inactive as a filmmaker. None of his latter work has earned him the visibility, let alone the acclaim, of his earlier films. Since Parsifal, his version of the Wagnerian opera which was his most widely seen film, he has collaborated only with one of that film’s stars, Edith Clever. Their artistic ventures have included a number of theatrical monologues, a few of which have been videotaped or filmed. The series commenced with Die Nacht, a six-hour-long examination of how an individual may act or what an individual may ponder deep into the night.

Syberberg, however, has spoken out on issues relating to his homeland. He especially is troubled by the Americanization of world culture, and has hypothesized that the resurgence of neo-Nazism in Germany, especially among the nation’s youth, is a natural response to the hollowness of the capitalist culture which enveloped Germany in the post-World War II years. Thus, even in the wake of German unification, the memory of Hitler—despite the fact that he ultimately brought catastrophe and anguish to Germany—continues to influence and mold the national psyche.

—Rob Edelman

SZABÓ, István

Films as Director:

1966 Apa (Father) (+ sc)
1967 Kégeset (Piety) (short) (+ sc)
1970 Szerelmesfilm (Love Film) (+ sc)
1971 Budapest, amiért szeretem/Budapest, Why I Love It (series of shorts: Alom a házról [Dream about a House], Duna—halak—madarak [The Danube—Fishes—Birds], Egy tukor [A Mirror], Léányportre [A Portrait of a Girl], Tér [A Square], Hajnal [Dawn], Alkony [Twilight]) (+ sc)
1973 Tüzoltó utca 25 (25 Fireman’s Street) (+ sc)
1974 Ószemutató (Premiere) (+ sc)
1976 Budapesti mesék (Budapest Tales) (+ sc)
1977 Várostérkép (City Map) (short) (+ sc)
1979 Bizalom (Confidence) (+ sc); Der grüne Vogel (The Green Bird) (+ sc)
1981 Mephisto (+ sc)
1984 Bali
1985 Redl Ezredes (Colonel Redl)
1988 Hanussen
1990 Meeting Venus (+ sc)
1992 Sweet Emma, Dear Bobe (+ sc)
1996 Offenbach titkai
1999 Sunshine (+ co-sc)

Publications

By SZABÓ: articles—

“...Hungarian Director Szabo Discusses His Film Father,” with Robert Siton, in Film Comment (New York), Fall 1968.

“...Mit adhat a magyar film a világnak?,’’ interview, in Filmkultura (Budapest), January/February 1978.

“...Mephisto: Istvan Szabo and the Gestapo of Suspicion,’’ interview with J.W. Hughes, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Summer 1982.

“...I’d Like to Tell a Story,’’ in Hungarofilm Bulletin (Budapest), vol. 2, no. 84, 1984.

Interview with J.W. Hughes, in Film en Televisie + Video (Brussels, Belgium), November 1991.

Interview with A. Crespi, in Cineforum (Bergamo, Italy), April 1992.

Interview with L. Joris, in Film en Televisie + Video (Brussels, Belgium), no. 432, May 1993.

Interview with Tomi Aitio and Peter von Baugh, in Filmihullu (Helsinki), no. 6, 1997.

On SZABÓ: book—

On SZABÓ: articles—

Jaehe, Karen, “Istvan Szabo: Dreams of Memories,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Fall 1978.

* * *

Istvan Szabó’s films are notable because he works with a rich spectrum of possibilities and decisions, which only when seen in their totality attain the poetic quality that becomes the viewer’s primary experience. Istvan Szabó reacts like a sensitive membrane to everything that has happened around him in the past or is just happening. At the same time he builds solely from motives that brand a film reel with the mark of an individual personality. This is true even when he strives for seemingly objective symbols such as, for example, a streetcar—‘that constantly recurring, tangibly real and yet poeti-cally long logogram for his individual and very special world.’” Such were the words of the noted Hungarian historian and film theoretician Josef Marx as he considered the work of director Szabó. They underscore the essential characteristic of Szabó’s work: its inventiv-ness, which in his films takes on general forms in the broadest sense.

Szabó’s first feature film, Álmodozások kora, together with Gaal’s Sordásban, was the most expressive confession of an artistic generation and became a model for other artists, while his entire work has built up an unprecedented picture of contemporary life and its activities. In his earliest period Szabó’s starting point was his own experience, which he transformed into artistic images. At the same time he carefully absorbed everything that was happening around him. He attempted to discern the essence of modern people, and to come to an understanding of their concerns, endeavors, and aspirations. His films examine young engineers at the start of their careers; the personal ideals of a young man on the threshold of maturity; the changing relationship of two people, framed within a quarter-century of Hungarian history; the dreams and locked-up memories of people living together in an old apartment building; the story of an ordinary city streetcar with an allegorical resemblance to our contemporaries; the love and distrust between a pair of completely different people in a charged wartime atmosphere; and a deep probe into the character of a young actor whose talents are displayed and subordinated by the totalitarian power of nascent German fascism.

All of these films are linked by the setting off of intimate confession against historical reality. The images of Szabó’s films are full of poetry and the symbolism of dreamlike conceptions. They capture the small dramas of ordinary people—their disappointments, successes, loves, enthusiasms, moments of anxiety and ardor, joy and pain—as the history of post-war Hungary passes by in contrapunctal detail. Istvan Szabó creates auteur films in which the shaping of the theme and the screenplay are just as important as the direction, so that the resulting works bears a unique stamp. The heroes of his films are not only people, but also cities, streets, houses, parks. In his films, his native Budapest serves as the point of intersection of human fates.
Under Szabó’s creative eye the city awakens, stirs, arises, wounded after the tumult of the war, and lives with its heroes.

In the early 1980s Istvan Szabó deviated from the rule of auteur films (the model for his film Mephisto was a novel by Klaus Mann).
This detracted nothing from the importance of the work, which won an Oscar and several other awards. Even in this film the director left his imprint; he managed to develop it into a picture of personal tragedy painted into a fresco of historical events. At the same time, it shows that the creative process is a tireless search for pathways. Only a responsible approach to history and the way it is shaped can help the artist gain a complete understanding of today’s world.

“To awaken an interest in the people I want to tell about; to capture their essence so that a viewer can identify with them; to broaden people’s understanding and sympathy—and my own as well:
That’s what I’d like to do,” Istvan Szabó once said in an interview.
His films are an affirmation of this credo.

—Vacláv Merhaut
TANNER, Alain

Films as Director:

1957 Nice Time (short) (co-d)
1959 Ramuz, passage d’un poète (short)
1962 L’Ecole (sponsored film)
1964 Les Apprentis (doc feature)
1966 Une Ville à Chandigarh
1969 Charles, mort ou vif (Charles, Dead or Alive)
1971 Le Salamandre (The Salamander)
1972 Le Retour d’Afrique
1974 Le Milieu du monde (The Middle of the World)
1978 Messidor
1981 Les Années lumière (Light Years Away)
1983 Dans la ville blanche (In the White City)
1985 No Man’s Land
1986 François Simon—La présence
1987 Flamme dans mon coeur (A Flame in My Heart); Vallée Fantôme
1989 Femme de Rose Hill (The Woman of Rose Hill)
1992 L’Homme que a perdu son ombre (+ pr, sc)
1993 The Diary of Lady M (+ pr)
1995 Les Hommes du port (+ sc)
1996 Fourbi (+ sc, pr)
1998 Requiem (+ sc, pr)
1999 Jonas et Lila, à demain (+ sc, pr)

Publications

By TANNER: book—

By TANNER: articles—

Interview with Michel Delahaye and others, in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), June 1969.
Interview with L. Bonnard, in Positif (Paris), February 1972.
Interview with Jill Forbes, in Films and Filming (London), February 1982.
Interview with Martyn Auty, in Monthly Film Bulletin (London), November 1983.
Interview, in Cinéma (Courbevoie), January 1992.

On TANNER: books—

On TANNER: articles—

Alain Tanner’s involvement with film began during his college years. While attending Geneva’s Calvin College, he and Claude Goretta formed Geneva’s first film society. It was during this time that Tanner developed an admiration for the ethnographic documentaries of Jean Rouch and fellow Swiss Henry Brandt, an influence that continued throughout his career. After a brief stint with the Swiss merchant marine, Tanner spent a year in London as an apprentice at the BFI, where, with Goretta, he completed an experimental documentary, Nice Time, which chronicled the night life of Piccadilly Circus. While in London he participated in the Free Cinema Movement, along with Karel Reisz, Tony Richardson, and Lindsay Anderson. Through Anderson, Tanner made the acquaintance of novelist and art critic John Berger, who would later write the scenarios for Le Salamandre, Middle of the World, Jonah Who Will Be 25 in the Year 2000, and Le Retour d’Afrique. Upon returning to Switzerland in 1960, Tanner completed some forty documentaries for television. Among these were: Les Apprentis, which concerned the lives of teenagers (and created using the methods of Rouch’s direct cinema); Une Ville à Chandigarh, on the architecture designed by Le Corbusier for the Punjab capital (the narration for this film was assembled by John Berger); and newsreel coverage of the events of May 1968 in Paris. This last project provided the ammunition for Tanner (once again with Goretta) to form Groupe 5, a collective of Swiss filmmakers. They proposed an idea to Swiss TV for the funding of full-length narrative features to be shot in 16-millimeter and then blown-up to 35-millimeter for release. The plan enabled Tanner to make his first feature, Charles, Dead or Alive, which won first prize at Locarno in 1969.

The film tells of a middle-aged industrialist who, on the eve of receiving an award as the foremost business personality of the year, discovers his disaffection with the institution-laden society in which he finds himself. Following an innate sense of anarchism that Tanner posits as universal, he attempts to reject this lifestyle. His retreat into madness is blocked by his family and friends, who compel him, by appealing to his sense of duty, to resume his responsibilities. His retreat into madness is blocked by his family and friends, who compel him, by appealing to his sense of duty, to resume his responsibilities.

All Tanner’s films follow a similar scenario: individuals or a group become alienated from society; rejecting it, they try to forge a new society answerable to themselves alone, only to be defeated by the relentless pressures of traditional society’s institutions, whose commerce they never cease to require. This theme receives its fullest and most moving expression in Jonah Who Will Be 25 in the Year 2000. Here the failure of the collective and the survivors of 1968, who come together at Marguerite’s farm outside Geneva, is not viewed as a defeat so much as one generation’s attempt to keep the hope of radical social change alive by passing on the fruits of its mistakes, that is, its education or its lore, to the succeeding generation.

Tanner’s style is a blend of documentary and fable. He uses techniques such as one scene/one shot, a staple of cinéma-vérité documentary, to portray a fable or folk-story. This tension between fact and fiction, documentary and fable, receives its most exacting treatment in Le Salamandre. Rosemonde’s indomitable, rebellious vitality repeatedly defeats the efforts of the two journalists to harness it in a pliable narrative form. After Jonah, Tanner introduces a darker vision in Messidor, Light Years Away, and Dans la ville blanche. The possibility of escaping society by returning to nature is explored and shown to be equally provisional. The tyranny of physical need is portrayed as being just as oppressive and compromising as that of the social world.

—Dennis Nastav

TARANTINO, Quentin

Nationality: American. Born: Quentin Jerome Tarantino in Knoxville, Tennessee, 27 March 1963; grew up in Los Angeles. Education: Studied acting. Career: Worked at Video Archives with Roger Avary; did telephone sales for Imperial Entertainment; began writing scripts for Cinetel; formed production company, A Band Apart, with Lawrence Bender; directed “Motherhood” episode of ER television series, 1994. Awards: Palme d’Or, Cannes Film Festival, for Pulp Fiction, 1994; Academy Award, Best Original Screenplay, and Golden Globe Award, Best Screenplay and Best Director, for Pulp Fiction, 1995. Address: A Band Apart Productions, 6525 Sunset Blvd. #G-12, Los Angeles, CA 90028, U.S.A.

Films as Director, Screenwriter, and Actor:

1992 Reservoir Dogs
1994 Pulp Fiction
1995 ‘Man from Hollywood” episode of Four Rooms
1997 Jackie Brown (uncredited answering machine voice)

Other Films:

1992 Past Midnight (assoc pr)
1993 Natural Born Killers (Stone) (uncredited co-sc); True Romance (Tony Scott) (sc); Eddie Presley (role as hospital orderly)
1994 Killing Zoe (Avary) (sc, exec pr); Sleep with Me (role as Sid); The Coriolis Effect (short) (role as radio disc jockey); Somebody to Love (role as bartender); Destiny Turns on the Radio (role as Johnny Destiny)
1995 Desperado (Rodriguez) (role as pick-up guy)
1996 From Dusk till Dawn (Rodriguez) (sc, co-exec pr, role as Richard Gecko); Girl 6 (role); Curdled (exec pr)
1998 God Said ‘Ha!’ (exec pr)
Quentin Tarantino (right) with Harvey Keitel on the set of Reservoir Dogs

1999  From Dusk till Dawn 2: Texas Blood Money (exec pr);
2000  From Dusk till Dawn 3: The Hangman's Daughter (exec pr)

Publications

By TARANTINO: books—

By TARANTINO: articles—

On TARANTINO: books—

On TARANTINO: articles—

Atkinson, M., “‘Hype Dreams,’” in Movieline (Escondido, California), March 1993.
Deutsch, Joel, “‘The Feature Film Four,’” in DGA Magazine (Los Angeles), April–May 1995.
Corsello, Andrew, “‘Hello This Is Quentin - Your %&@ Tape Is Overdue!’” in Gentleman’s Quarterly, October 1995.

Quentin Tarantino’s meteoric rise to fame with the phenomenal critical and popular success of Pulp Fiction, his second feature, is not only the result of his considerable talent but of two forces operating within contemporary Hollywood: first, an economic mini-crisis brought on by the box-office and critical failures of many recent high-budget blockbuster productions (Waterworld is perhaps the most remarkable example) that has opened the door, as in the past, for young directors who are able to make successful films on small budgets (made for $8 million, Pulp Fiction earned almost $64 million at the box office, not counting video sales and rentals); second, the continuing popularity of neo-noir films, a popularity not limited to its most thriving sub-genre, the erotic thriller. If Hollywood’s economic hard times have given Tarantino (and others) a chance, it is the director’s personal obsessions, so much in tune with what contemporary audiences want to see, that have made him popular.

The widely read and very cine literate Tarantino has an obvious liking for classic hard-boiled pulp fiction (evidently Jim Thompson and W. R. Burnett in particular) and classic film noir (Huston’s Asphalt Jungle probably served as a model for Reservoir Dogs). But like several of the prominent directors of the Hollywood Renaissance in the middle 1970s (especially Martin Scorsese and Paul Schrader), Tarantino also owes a substantial debt to French film noir, especially the work of Jean Pierre Melville and Jean Luc Godard. Godard’s modernist refiguration of noir themes and conventions (Alphaville is the classic example), however, would hardly please the mass audience Tarantino has in mind. The most substantial contribution of nouvelle vague anti-realism in Tarantino’s films can be seen in their creative use of achronicities, disorderings in the storytelling process that make the narratives intriguing puzzles even as they uncover interesting ironies for the spectator, who must take an active role in the deciphering of the plot. The anti-Aristotelianism of this procedure, its disruption of emotional identification with the characters’ plight, allows Tarantino to concentrate on thematic elements, especially the role violence plays in American culture.

Like the gang in Asphalt Jungle, the crooks in Reservoir Dogs assembled to pull a heist (itself never represented) are shown participating in what is simply a “‘left-handed form of endeavor.’” If Huston endeavors to demonstrate that criminals too have an ordinary life (households to run, relationships to pursue, bills to pay), Tarantino, in contrast, is more interested in moral dilemmas and conflict, especially as these are brought to life by situations of extraordinary danger and threat. In fact, the central conflicts of Reservoir Dogs carry a substantial moral charge and significance, even if, in the end, as the all-knowing spectator alone recognizes, the characters are destroyed no matter if they are sociopaths with a yen for torture or men of good will who stand by their friends even at the cost of their own lives. And yet Tarantino obviously sympathizes with those who despise mauvaise foi and make the difficult choices that confront them. A Sartrean and Camusian moralism pervades this film.

Much the same can be said of the similar characters in Pulp Fiction, whose existential plights and difficult choices are here examined from a serio-comic perspective. A torpedo working for a drug dealer is given the assignment of looking after the boss’s flirtatious wife. He tries to resist her various come-ons, only to be faced with a sudden, more demanding test: she overdoses on heroin, goes into a near-fatal coma from which he can arouse her only by jabbing a harpoon-sized needle into her heart. Amazingly, she recovers, and Tarantino finishes this sequence with a comic leave-taking scene that ends their “date”. Once again, in Pulp Fiction difficult moral questions are raised. A boxer in the same drug dealer’s pay refuses out of personal integrity to throw a fight as ordered. Fleeing town, he meets his boss by accident on a city street. Their confrontation, however, opens unexpectedly onto another moral plane. Both men wind up the prisoners of local sadists, who plan to sodomize, torture, and kill them. The boxer escapes, and, feeling the pang of conscience, goes back to free his erstwhile boss, who forgives the man’s earlier betrayal before exacting a terrible vengeance on his torturers, one of whom is a policeman.

With their philosophical dimensions, unremitting representations of venality and depravity among the criminal under and over class, art cinema narrational complexities, and black humor, Tarantino’s first two films are strikingly original contributions to an American cinema struggling to rebound from the artistic doldrums of the 1980s. As a screenwriter, he has been no less successful. Written for former video shop co-worker Roger Avary, Killing Zoe offers a romantic twist on the themes examined in Tarantino’s own directorial efforts. In this case, a somewhat naive and easily swayed young criminal must make a moral stand against his lifelong friend to save the life of a prostitute he has come to care for; the gesture is reciprocated, and the two rescue themselves from a nightmarish world of self-destructive violence and addiction. Similarly, True Romance and Natural Born Killers offer outlaw couples on the run whose loyalty to each other is rewarded in the end by their escape from a corrupt and disfiguring America that attempts to destroy them.

Tarantino’s third film as a director, Jackie Brown, proved less successful with audiences, though it shares much in common with his earlier work. Though at times almost sedate, Jackie Brown also offers a nuanced meditation on the Los Angeles criminal underworld. Adapting an Elmore Leonard novel replete with a complex plot of double and triple crosses, Tarantino here focuses on the attempts of an impoverished black woman, a petty criminal and part-time stewardess, to heist the laundered money of a psychopathic underworld kingpin. Much in the Leonard vein, the film is very detailed in its mise-en-scène, which is carefully calculated to reveal both the seediness of urban L.A. and the cultural wasteland of the outlying suburbs; the film is also devoted to the depiction of character rather than the relentless advancement of the plot. This accounts for its more than two-and-a-half hours of running time. Like Reservoir Dogs, Jackie Brown is also a complicated cinematic homage. Robert De Niro and Michael Keaton appear in cameo roles that gently parody their screen personas. Pam Grier as the title character reprises the role of the independent woman who turns on her oppressors that she successfully portrayed in many 1970s blaxploitation films. Less philosophically oriented and characterized by a more subdued cinematic style, Jackie Brown nevertheless shows Tarantino working interestingly and creatively within his chosen generic limitations.

—R. Barton Palmer

TARKOVSKY, Andrei

Films as Director:

1959 There Will Be No Leave Today (short)
1960 Katok i skripka (The Steamroller and the Violin) (+ co-sc)
1962 Ivanovo detstvo (Ivan’s Childhood)
1969 Andrei Rublev (+ co-sc)
1971 Solyaris (Solaris) (+ co-sc)
1975 Zerkalo (The Mirror) (+ co-sc)
1979 Stalker
1983 Nostalghia (Nostalgia)
1986 Offret (The Sacrifice)

Publications

By TARKOVSKY: books—

By TARKOVSKY: articles—

Interview with O. Sorkova, in Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), July 1977.
“Against Interpretation,” an interview with Ian Christie, in Framework (Norwich), Spring 1981.

Interview with J. Hoberman, in American Film (Washington, D.C.), November 1983.

On TARKOVSKY: articles—

Dempsey, M. “Lost Harmony—Tarkovsky’s The Mirror and The Stalker,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Fall 1981.

Zak, M., in Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), September 1982.

Tarkovsky Section of Positif (Paris), October 1984.

Tarkovsky Sections of Positif (Paris), May and June 1986.

Tarkovsky Section of Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), July/August 1986.

Green, Peter, obituary in Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1987.

Tarkovsky Section of Positif (Paris), February 1988.

Leszczylowski, Michal, Directed by Andrei Tarkovsky, 1986.

“Tarkovsky is the greatest of them all. He moves with such naturalness in the room of dreams. He doesn’t explain. What should he explain anyhow?” Thus Ingmar Bergman, in his autobiography The Magic Lantern, bows down before the Russian director while also hinting at what makes Tarkovsky’s work so awkward to critics: it can verge on the inscrutable. Too opaque to yield concrete meaning, it offers itself as sacral art, demanding a rapt, and even religious, response from its audiences. His 1979 film Stalker, for instance, features a place called the Zone where all “desires come true.” Rather like the land of Oz, this mysterious outland promises to reveal the secret of things to any intrepid travellers who prospect it to its core. But there are no cowardly lions or tin men to ease the journey, no yellow brick road to follow. The Zone is an austere realm—typical Tarkovsky territory—of bleak landscapes populated by characters laden with a peculiarly Russian gloom.

Watching Tarkovsky’s films, his “sculptures in time,” spectators can find themselves on a journey every bit as arduous as that undertaken by the pilgrims who headed toward the Zone. The son of a poet, the director treated film as a medium in which he could express himself in the first person. His six years at the Moscow State Film School, during which he received a thorough grounding in film technique from such Soviet luminaries as Mikhail Romm, did nothing to disabuse him of the notion that cinema was a “high art.” He felt he could tap the same vein of poetic intimacy that his father sought in lyric verse. The necessary intrusion of camera crews and actors, and the logistical problems of exhibition and distribution, worried him not a jot. Although all his films are self-reflexive, he does not draw attention to the camera for radical Brechtian reasons. He is not trying to subvert bourgeois narrative codes. He is not even assaulting the tenets of Socialist Realism, a doctrine he found every bit as unappealing as Western mass culture aimed at the “consumer” (although his ex-partner, Konchalovsky, ended up in Hollywood directing Sylvester Stallone vehicles). What his constant use of tracking shots, slow motion, and never-ending pans—indeed his entire visual rhetoric—seems to emphasize is that he is moulding the images. He is a virtuoso, and he wants us to be aware of the fact.

Tarkovsky’s first two feature length projects, Ivan’s Childhood and Andrei Rublev, mark a curious collision between the personal and the political. On one level, the former is a propaganda piece, telling yet again the great Soviet story of the defeat of the Nazi scourge during World War II. But Tarkovsky destabilizes the film with dream sequences. The “big questions” that are ostensibly being addressed turn out to be peripheral: the director is more concerned with the poetic rekindling of childhood than with a triumphal narrative of Russian resilience. Similarly, Rublev, an epic three-hour biography of a medieval icon painter, is, in spite of the specificity and grandeur of its locations, a rigorous account of the role of the artist in society, as applicable to the 1960s as to the 1930s.

As if to display his versatility, Tarkovsky skipped genres, moving from the distant past to the distant future for his third feature, Stalker, a rather ponderous sci-fi movie taken from a novel by the Polish writer Stanislaw Lem. The harsh, Kubrick-like spaceship interiors suit the director far less than his customary wet and muddy landscapes. The musings on love and mortality engaged in by the cosmonauts as they hover above a sea of liquid gas—for a filmmaker with such a flair for images, Tarkovsky resorts to portentous dialogue with surprising frequency—weigh the story down. Still, Solaris works on a more intimate level when it explores a man’s attempts to come to terms with the death of his wife.

Mirror is quintessential Tarkovsky; ravishing to look at, full of classical music, and so narratively dense as to be almost unfathomable on a first viewing. There are only 200 or so shots in it, and it is a film that fell into shape, almost by accident, late in the editing stage, but it is Tarkovsky’s richest and most resonant work. The narrative flits between the present and the past, between the “adult” mentality of the narrator and the memory of his childhood. Moreover, the wide open spaces of the countryside where Tarkovsky spent his earliest years are contrasted with the constricting rooms of city apartments. Poems by the director’s father, Arseny, appear on the soundtrack. Complementing these, Tarkovsky is at his most elemental in this film: the wind rustling the trees, fire, and water are constant motifs.

Tarkovsky went to enormous lengths to recreate the landscape of his infancy, planting buckwheat a year before shooting started, and constructing, from memory and old photographs, the bungalow where he had lived. There is a humour and warmth in Mirror sometimes absent in his work as a whole. (This may have something to do with the fact that it is his only film to have a woman protagonist. Margarita Terekova, who ranks with Anatoli Solonitcine as Tarkovsky’s favourite actor, plays both the narrator’s wife and his mother.) Generally,
Tarkovsky terrain is desolate, ravaged by war, or threatened with catastrophe, as in The Sacrifice. In Mirror, however, the forests and rivers and fields are nurturing and colourful. Accused by the authorities of being narratively obscure, Tarkovsky testified that he received many letters from viewers who had seen their own childhoods miraculously crystallize as they watched the film.

Nostalgia was his first film in exile after his defection to the West. Shot in Italy, it showed the Russian pining for his homeland. He wouldn’t live to see it again.

The Sacrifice is a typically saturnine final testament from a filmmaker overly aware of his own reputation. Tarkovsky believed that “modern mass culture, aimed at the consumer . . . is crippling people’s souls.” A self-conscious exercise in spiritual plumbing, his last work before his premature death from cancer in 1987 is weighed down by its own gravitas. Shot by Sven Nykvist, who used natural light for the interior scenes, and full of intricate pans, the film has the formal beauty that one has come to associate with the director. But its People’s souls. A self-conscious exercise in spiritual plumbing, his last work before his premature death from cancer in 1987 is weighed down by its own gravitas. Shot by Sven Nykvist, who used natural light for the interior scenes, and full of intricate pans, the film has the formal beauty that one has come to associate with the director. But its endless and Wordy metaphysical surmising stops it from tugging at memory and emotion in the way of the best of his work, most notably Mirror.

—G.C. Macnab

TASHLIN, Frank

Films as Director:

1950 The Lemon Drop Kid (co-d, uncredited, + co-sc)
1951 The First Time (+ co-sc); Son of Paleface (+ co-sc)
1953 Marry Me Again (+ sc); Susan Slept Here (+ co-sc uncredited)
1955 Artists and Models (+ co-sc); The Lieutenant Wore Skirts (+ co-sc)
1956 Hollywood or Bust (+ co-sc uncredited); The Girl Can’t Help It (+ pr, co-sc)
1957 Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter? (+ sc, pr)

1958 Rock-a-Bye Baby (+ sc); The Geisha Boy (+ sc)
1959 Say One for Me (+ co-sc uncredited, pr)
1960 Cinderfella (+ sc)
1962 Bachelor Flat (+ co-sc)
1963 It’s Only Money (+ co-sc); The Man from The Diner’s Club; Who’s Minding the Store? (+ co-sc)
1964 The Disorderly Orderly (+ sc)
1965 The Alphabet Murders
1966 The Glass-Bottom Boat; Caprice (+ co-sc)
1968 The Private Navy of Sergeant O’Farrell (+ sc)

Other Films:

1944 Delightfully Dangerous (Lubin) (sc)
1947 Variety Girl (Marshall) (co-sc); The Paleface (McLeod) (co-sc); The Fuller Brush Man (That Mad Mr. Jones) (Simon) (co-sc)
1948 One Touch of Venus (Seiter) (co-sc); Love Happy (Miller) (co-sc)
1949 Miss Grant Takes Richmond (Innocence Is Bliss) (Bacon) (co-sc); Kill the Umpire (Bacon) (sc); The Good Humor Man (Bacon) (sc)
1950 The Fuller Brush Girl (The Affairs of Sally) (Bacon) (sc)
1956 The Scarlet Hour (Curtiz) (co-sc)

Publications

By TASHLIN: articles—

“Frank Tashlin—An Interview and an Appreciation,” with Peter Bogdanovich, in Film Culture (New York), no. 26, 1962.

On TASHLIN: book—

On TASHLIN: articles—

Benayoun, Robert, and others, articles, in Positif (Paris), no. 29.
Cameron, Ian, “Frank Tashlin and the New World,” in Movie (London), February 1963.

Frank Tashlin had achieved recognition as a children’s writer when he entered the film industry to work in the animation units at Disney and Warner Bros. Both of these early careers would have decisive import for the major films that Tashlin would direct in the 1950s. This early experience allowed Tashlin to see everyday life as a visually surreal experience, as a kind of cartoon itself, and gave him a faith in the potential for natural experience to resist the increased mechanization of everyday life. Tashlin’s films of the 1950s are great displays of cinematic technique, particularly as it developed in a TV-fearing Hollywood. They featured a wide-screen sensibility, radiant color, frenetic editing, and a deliberate recognition of film as film. Tashlin’s films often resemble live versions of the Warners cartoons. Jerry Lewis, who acted in many of Tashlin’s films, seemed perfect for such a visual universe with his reversion to a primal animality, his deformations of physicality, and his sheer irrationality.

Tashlin’s films are also concerned with the ways the modern world is becoming more and more artificial; the films are often filled with icons of the new mass culture (rock and roll, comic books, television, muscle men, Jayne Mansfield, Hollywood) and are quite explicit about the ways such icons are mechanically produced within a consumer society. For example, in Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter?, the successful romance of Rita Marlow (Jayne Mansfield) causes other women to engage in dangerous bust-expanding exercises to the point of nervous exhaustion. Yet the very critique of mass culture by an artist working in a commercial industry creates the central contradiction of Tashlin’s cinema: if the danger of modern life is its increasing threat of mechanization, then what is the critical potential of an art based on mechanization? Significantly, Tashlin’s films can be viewed as a critique of the ostentatious vulgarity of the new plastic... age while they simultaneously seem to revel in creating ever better and more spectacular displays of sheer technique to call attention to that age. The Girl Can’t Help It, for instance, chronicles the making of a non-talent (Jayne Mansfield) into a star, viewing the process with a certain cynicism but at the same time participating in that process. These films are vehicles for Mansfield as Mansfield, and are thus somewhat biographical.

As with Jerry Lewis, serious treatment of Tashlin began in France (especially in the pages of Positif, which has always had an attraction to the comic film as an investigator of the Absurd). Anglo-American criticism tended to dismiss Tashlin (for example, Sarris in American Cinema called him “vulgar”). In such a context, Claire Johnston and Paul Willemen’s Frank Tashlin had the force of a breakthrough, providing translations from French journals and analyses of the cinematic and ideological implications of Tashlin’s work.

—Dana B. Polan

TATI, Jacques

Films as Director:

1947 L’Ecole des facteurs (+ sc, role)
1949 Jour de fête (+ co-sc, role as François the postman)
1953 Les Vacances de Monsieur Hulot (Mr. Hulot’s Holiday) (+ co-sc, role as M. Hulot)
1958 Mon Oncle (+ co-sc, role as M. Hulot)
1967 Playtime (+ sc, role as M. Hulot)
1971 Traffic (Traffic) (+ co-sc, role as M. Hulot)
1973 Parade (+ sc, role as M. Loyal)

Other Films:

1932 Oscar, champion de tennis (sc, role)
1934 On demande une brute (Barrois) (co-sc, role)
1935 Gai Dimanche (Berry) (co-sc, role)
1936 Soigne ton gauche (Clément) (role)
1938 Retour à la terre (pr, sc, role)
1945 Sylvie et le fantôme (Autant-Lara) (role as ghost)
1946 Le Diable au corps (Autant-Lara) (role as soldier)

Publications

By TATI: articles—

Interview with E. Burcksen, in Cinématographe (Paris), May 1977.

On TATI: books—

Bazin, André, Qu’est-ce que le cinéma, London, 1958.
Carrière, Jean-Claude, Monsieur Hulot’s Holiday, New York, 1959.

On TATI: articles—

“Mr. Hulot,” in the New Yorker, 17 July 1954.
Houston, Penelope, “Conscience and Comedy,” in Sight and Sound (London), Summer/Autumn 1959.
Jacques Tati

Fawell, J. “Sound and Silence, Image and Invisibility in Jacques Tati’s Mon oncle,” in Literature and Film Quarterly (Salisbury), vol. 18, no. 4, October 1990.

Sartor, Freddy, in Film en Televisie (Brussel), no. 466, November 1996.

* * *

Jacques Tati’s father was disappointed that his son didn’t enter the family business, the restoration and framing of old paintings. In Jacques Tati’s films, however, the art of framing—of selecting borders and playing on the limits of the image—achieved new expressive heights. Instead of restoring old paintings, Tati restored the art of visual comedy, bringing out a new density and brilliance of detail, a new clarity of composition. He is one of the handful of film artists—the others would include Griffith, Eisenstein, Murnau, Bresson—who can be said to have transformed the medium at its most basic level, to have found a new way of seeing.

After a short career as a rugby player, Tati entered the French music hall circuit of the early 1930s; his act consisted of pantomime parodies of the sports stars of the era. Several of his routines were filmed as shorts in the 1930s (and he appeared as a supporting actor in two films by Claude Autant-Lara), but he did not return to direction until after the war, with the 1947 short L’Ecole des facteurs. Two years later, the short was expanded into a feature, Jour de fête. Here Tati plays a village postman who, struck by the “modern, efficient” methods he sees in a short film on the American postal system, decides to streamline his own operations. The satiric theme that runs through all of Tati’s work—the coldness of modern technology—is already well developed, but more importantly, so is his visual style. Many of the gags in Jour de fête depend on the use of framelines and foreground objects to obscure the comic event—not to punch home the gag, but to hide it and purify it, to force the spectator to intuit, and sometimes invent, the joke for himself.

Tati took four years to make his next film, Les Vacances de Monsieur Hulot (Mr. Hulot’s Holiday), which introduced the character he was to play for the rest of his career—a gently eccentric Frenchman whose tall, reedy figure was perpetually bent forward as if by the weight of the pipe he always kept clamped in his mouth. The warmth of the characterization, plus the radiant inventiveness of the sight gags, made Mr. Hulot an international success, yet the film already suggests Tati’s dissatisfaction with the traditional idea of the comic star. Hulot is not a comedian, in the sense of being the source and focus of the humor; he is, rather, an attitude, a signpost, a perspective that reveals the humor in the world around him.

Mon Oncle is a transitional film: though Hulot had abdicated his star status, he is still singled out among the characters—prominent, but strangely marginal. With Playtime, released after nine years of expensive, painstaking production, Tati’s intentions become clear. Playtime is composed almost entirely of long-shot tableaux that leave the viewer free to wander through the frame, picking up the gags that may be occurring in the foreground, the background, or off to one side. The film returns an innocence of vision to the spectator; no value judgements or hierarchies of interest have been made for us. We are given a clear field, left to respond freely to an environment that has not been polluted with prejudices.

Audiences used to being told what to see, however, found the freedom of Playtime oppressive. The film (released in several versions, from a 70mm stereo cut that ran over three hours to an absurdly truncated American version of 93 minutes) was a commercial failure. It plunged Tati deep into personal debt.

Tati’s last theatrical film, the 1971 Traffic, would have seemed a masterpiece from anyone else, but for Tati it was clearly a protective return to a more traditional style. Tati’s final project, a 60-minute television film titled Parade, has never been shown in America. Five films in 25 years is not an impressive record in a medium where stature is often measured by prolificacy, but Playtime alone is a lifetime’s achievement—a film that liberates and revitalizes the act of looking at the world.

—Dave Kehr

TAVERNIER, Bertrand

Films as Director and Co-Scriptwriter:

1964 ‘‘Une Chance explosive’’ episode of La Chance et l’amour
1965 ‘‘Le Baiser de Judas’’ episode of Les Baisers
1974 L’Horloger de Saint-Paul (The Clockmaker)
1975 Que la fête commence (Let Joy Reign Supreme)
1976 Le Juge et l’assassin (The Judge and the Assassin)
1977 Des enfants gâtés (Spoiled Children)
1979 Femmes Fatales
1980 La Mort en direct (Death Watch)
1981 Une Semaine de vacances (A Week’s Vacation)
1982 Coup de torchon (Clean Slate); Philippe Soupault et le surréalisme (doc)
1983 Mississippi Blues (Pay d’Octobre) (co-d)
1984 Un Dimanche à la campagne (A Sunday in the Country)
1986 Round Midnight (Autour de minuit)
1987 Le Passion Béatrice
1988 Lyon, le regard intérieur (doc for TV)
1989 La Vie et rien d’autre (Life and Nothing But)
1990 Daddy Nostalgie (These Foolish Things)
1991 La guerre sans non (The Undeclared War)
1992 L.627
1994 Le fille de D’Artagnan (The Daughter of D’Artagnan); Anywhere but Here
1995 L’appat (Fresh Bait)
1996 Captaine Conan (Captain Conan)
1997 La Lettre (for TV) (d only)
Bertrand Tavernier

1998  De l’autre côté du périph (The Other Side of the Tracks) (d only)
1999  Ça commence aujourd’hui (It All Starts Today)

Other Films:

1967  Coplan ouverte le feu à Mexico (Freda) (sc)
1968  Capitaine Singrid (Leduc) (sc)
1977  Le Question (Heynemann) (pr)
1979  Rue du pied de Grue (Grandjouan) (pr); Le Mors aux dents (Heynemann) (pr)
1993  Des demoiselles ont en 25 ans (The Young Girls Turn 25) (Varda) (appearance); Francois Truffant: portraits volés (Francois Truffaut: Stolen Portraits) (Toubiana, Pascal) (appearance)
1994  Troubles We’ve Seen: A History of Journalism in Wartime (pr)
1995  The World of Jacques Demy (Varda) (appearance); American Cinema (role)
2000  Il avait dans Le coeur des jardins introuvables (co-sc)

Publications

By TAVERNIER: book—

30 ans de cinéma américaine (30 Years of American Cinema), with Jean-Pierre Coursodon, Paris.
Fragments: Portraits from the Inside, with Andre De Toth and Martin Scorsese, New York, 1996.

By TAVERNIER: articles—

“Il n’y a pas de genre à proscrire ou à conseiller . . . ,” an interview with D. Rabourdin, in Cinéma (Paris), May 1975.
“Blending the Personal with the Political,” an interview with L. Quart and L. Rubinstein, in Cineaste (New York), Summer 1978.

Interviews in Films in Review (New York), March and April 1983.

Interview with Michel Ciment and others, in Positif (Paris), May 1984.

Interview with Dan Yakir, in Film Comment (New York), September/October 1984.

“All the Colors: Bertrand Tavernier Talks about Round Midnight,” an interview with Michael Dempsey, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1987.

Interview, in Skrien (Amsterdam), Spring 1987.

Interview, in Positif (Paris), September 1989.

Interview by F. Laurendeau, in Sequences (Montreal), November 1989.

Obituary, of Michael Powell, in Positif (Paris), May 1990.

On TAVERNIER: books—

Bion, Danièle, Bertrand Tavernier: cinéaste de l’émotion, Renens, 1984.

Mereghetti, Paolo, editor, Bertrand Tavernier, Venice, 1986.

La vida, la muerte: el cine de Bertrand Tavernier, Valencia, Spain, 1992.

Zants, Emily, Bertrand Tavernier: Fractured Narrative and Bourgeois Values, Lanham, 1999.

On TAVERNIER: articles—

* * *

It is significant that Bertrand Tavernier’s films have been paid little attention by the more important contemporary film critics/theorists: his work is resolutely “realist,” and realism is under attack in critical quarters. Realism has frequently been a cover for the reproduction and reinforcement of dominant ideological assumptions, and to this extent that attack is salutary. Yet Tavernier’s cinema demonstrates effectively that the blanket rejection of realism rests on very unstable foundations. Realism has been seen as the bourgeoisie’s way of talking to itself. It does not necessarily follow that its only motive for talking to itself is the desire for reassurance; nor need we assume that the only position realist fiction constructs for the reader/viewer is one of helpless passivity (Tavernier’s films clearly postulate an alert audience ready to reflect and analyze critically).

Three of Tavernier’s films, Death Watch, Coup de torchon, and A Week’s Vacation, while they may not unambiguously answer the attacks on realism, strongly attest to the inadequacy of their formulation. For a start, the films’ range of form, tone, and address provides a useful reminder of the potential for variety that the term “classical realist text” tends to obliterate. To place beside the strictly realist A Week’s Vacation the futurist fantasy of Death Watch on the one hand and the scathing, all-encompassing caricatural satire and irony of Coup de torchon on the other is to illustrate not merely a range of subject-matter but a range of strategy. Each film constructs for the viewer a quite distinct relationship to the action and to the protagonist, analyzable in terms of varying degrees of identification and detachment which may also shift within each film. Nor should the description of A Week’s Vacation as “strictly realist” be taken to suggest some kind of simulated cinéma-vérité: the film’s stylistic poise and lucid articulation, its continual play between looking with the protagonist and looking at her, consistently encourage an analytical distance.

Through all his films, certainly, the bourgeoisite “talks to itself,” but the voice that articulates is never reassuring, and bourgeois institutions and assumptions are everywhere rendered visible and opened to question. Revolutionary positions are allowed a voice and are listened to respectfully. This was clear from Tavernier’s first film, The Clockmaker, among the screen’s most intelligent uses of Simenon. Under Tavernier, the original project is effectively transformed by introducing the political issues that Simenon totally represses, and by changing the crime from a meaningless, quasi-existentialist acte... gratuit to a gesture of radical protest. But Tavernier’s protagonists are always bourgeois: troubled, questioning, caught up in social institutions but not necessarily rendered impotent by them, capable of growth and awareness. The films, while basically committed to a well-left-of-center liberalism, are sufficiently open, intelligent, and disturbed to be readily accessible to more radical positions than they are actually willing to adopt.

Despite the difference in mode of address, the three films share common thematic concerns (most obviously, the fear of conformism and dehumanization, the impulse towards protest and revolt, the difficulties of effectively realizing such a protest in action). They also have in common a desire to engage, more or less explicitly, with interrelated social, political, and aesthetic issues. The caustic analysis of the imperialist mentality and the kind of personal rebellion it provokes (itself corrupt, brutalized, and ultimately futile) in Coup de torchon is the most obvious instance of direct political engagement. Death Watch, within its science fiction format, is fascinatingly involved with contemporary inquiries into the construction of narrative and the objectification of women. Its protagonist (Harvey Keitel) attempts to create a narrative around an unsuspecting woman (Romy Schneider) by means of the miniature television camera surgically implanted behind his eyes. The implicit feminist concern here becomes the structuring principle of A Week’s Vacation. Without explicitly raising feminist issues, the film’s theme is the focusing of a contemporary bourgeois female consciousness, the consciousness of an intelligent and sensitive woman whose identity is not defined by her relationship with men, who is actively engaged with social problems (she is a schoolteacher), and whose fears (of loneliness, old age, death) are consistently presented in relation to contemporary social realities rather than simplistically defined in terms of “the human condition.”

In Tavernier’s films through the early 1990s, he has covered a wide variety of moods, styles, and settings, with the most representative of these works linked by a common contemplative quality. His concerns are the passage of time and its effect on human relationships and the individual soul. In particular, he is interested in characters who are aged and ill, or have seen too much of the seamiest aspects of human behavior. These latter works investigate how they come to terms with loved ones—especially their children.

A Sunday in the Country, set at the turn of the twentieth century, is the story of an elderly painter who resides in the country and is visited one Sunday by his reserved son and daughter-in-law, their three children, and his free-spirited daughter. The film is a pensive, poignant tale of old age and the choices people make in their lives. There is much drama and emotion in Life and Nothing But, a thoughtful war film which in fact takes place at a time when there is no fighting and bloodshed. Set after the conclusion of a war, the film concerns a soldier (Tavernier regular Philippe Noiret) who is assigned to chronicle his country’s war casualties. Meanwhile, a couple of women have set out in search of their lovers, who are missing in action.

In Round Midnight, Tavernier caringly recreates the community of black jazz artists in exile in France. The film is a character study of an aged, alcoholic tenor sax legend, a composite of Bud Powell and Lester Young (and played by Dexter Gordon, himself a jazz great). He settles in Paris in 1959 and plays nightly at a famed jazz club; at the core of the story is his friendship with a young, adoring Frenchman, a dedicated jazz fan. Finally, in Daddy Nostalgia, the filmmaker examines the complex alliance between a father (Dirk Bogarde) and daughter (Jane Birkin). He is seriously ill; she visits him for an extended stay and attempts to understand their relationship, and his life.

The fact that Tavernier’s recent films have (unaccountably) had very little exposure in North America must not be taken as evidence of decline. Only Daddy Nostalgia has had any wide release; the rest have gone direct to video after brief screenings in specialist theaters. All are well worth searching out, conceived and directed with Tavernier’s customary intelligence and complexity. His mastery of mise-en-scène is complete, from the intimate oedipal tensions of the family scenes in Daddy Nostalgia to the spectacular and horrifying battles of Capitaine Conan, though one would not easily guess this from the wretched video of Daddy Nostalgia, a widescreen film presented in the wrong format and suggesting that Tavernier doesn’t know how to frame. The other films have been treated by their distributors with more respect.

L.627 (the title refers to the Public Health Card for junkies, who get check-ups every twenty-four hours) is among the most intelligent movies in any language about the inner workings of the police, a fine example of Tavernier’s refusal to make simple statements or offer the spectator clear and uncompromised moral positions, implying severe criticisms of the organization while showing sympathy and some respect for the officers who try to preserve a modicum of decency and self-respect within it. The “bait” of L’Appat is a young woman used by her two male friends to seduce wealthy men to unlatch their apartment doors so that her colleagues can burst in and rob them; while no character is admirable, none is presented without some sympathy, so that the underlying implication is, as usual with Tavernier, that it is the culture that is pervasively “wrong,” not the individuals caught within it. Capitaine Conan is a fascinating study of the complexities of military service, centered on a dedicated “career officer” who has constructed for himself a personal code of honour the inherent contradictions and misguidedness of which are exposed at every step.

Tavernier remains a major figure in contemporary cinema; it is time for festivals and cinémathèques to take note and honour him with retrospectives, which might serve to rectify the terrible neglect into which his work seems to have fallen.

—Robin Wood, updated by Rob Edelman and Robin Wood

TAVIANI, Paolo and Vittorio

Nationality: Italian. Born: Paolo born in San Miniato, Pisa, 8 November 1931; Vittorio born in San Miniato, Pisa, 20 September 1929. Education: University of Pisa, Paolo in liberal arts, Vittorio in law. Career: With Valentino Orsini, ran cine-club at Pisa, 1950; with Cesare Zavattini, directed short on Nazi massacre at San Miniato; together and in collaboration with Orsini, made series of short documentaries, 1954–59; worked with Joris Ivens, Roberto Rossellini, and others, early 1960s; with Orsini, directed first feature, A Man for Burning, 1962. Awards: Best Film and International Critics Prize, Cannes Festival, for Padrepadrone, 1977; Special Jury Prize, Cannes Festival, and Best director Award (shared), National Society of Film Critics, for La notte di San Lorenzo, 1982.

Films as Directors:

(documentary shorts, sometimes in collaboration with Valentino Orsini)

1954 San Miniato, luglio '44
1955 Voltera, comune medievale
1955–59 Curtatone e Montanara; Carlo Pisacane; Ville della Brianza; Lavatori della pietra; Pittori in città; I Pazzi della domenica; Moravia; Carbunara
1960 Episode of L'Italia non è un paesa povero

(features)

1962 Un uomo da bruciare (A Man for Burning) (co-d, co-sc)
1963 Soffrilegge del matrimonio (co-d, co-sc)
1967 Sotto il segno dello scorpione (Under the Sign of Scorpio) (+ sc)
1971 San Michele aveva un gallo ( + sc)
1974 Allonsanfan (+ sc)
1977 Padre padrone (Father Master) (+ sc)
1979 Il prato (The Meadow) (+ sc)
1982 La notte di San Lorenzo (+ sc)
1983 The Night of the Shooting Stars (+ sc)
1984 Kaos
1986 Good Morning Babilonia (Good Morning Babylon)
1990 Il Sole anche di notte (Night Sun) (+ co-sc)
1992 Fiorile (+ co-sc)
1996 Le Affinità elettive (The Elective Affinities) (+ co-sc)
1998 Tu ridi (You Laugh) (+ co-sc)

Publications

By the TAVIANIS: books—

San Michele aveva un gallo/Allonsanfan, Cappelli, 1974.

By the TAVIANIS: articles—

Interview with G. Mingrone and others, in Filmcritica (Rome), January 1972.
Interview with Gary Crowdus, in Cineaste (New York), vol. 12, no. 3, 1983.
“Vittorio Taviani: An Interview,” with P. Brunette, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1983.
“Your Own Reality: An Interview with Paolo and Vittorio Taviani,” with David Ehrenstein, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Summer 1994.

On the TAVIANIS: books—

On the TAVIANIS: articles—

Yakir, Dan, “The Tavianis,” in Film Comment (New York), March/April 1983.

Since the early 1960s, when they realized that fiction feature films were going to be their main interest, Paolo and Vittorio Taviani have written scenarios and scripts, designed settings, developed a filmmaking style and philosophy, directed a dozen features, and patiently explained their methods and concepts to many interviewers and audiences in Italy and abroad.

Although influenced to some extent by neorealism—such as the films of Rossellini and De Santis, characterized by on-location settings, natural lighting, authentic environmental sounds, non-professional actors, and an emphasis on “the people” as protagonists—the Tavianis want reviewers to see their films as invented and staged, as interpretations of history rather than as documentaries. They draw upon their early interests and background—as youngsters they saw musicals and concerts but not movies—and use artistic and technical means similar to those utilized in theater and opera. Their films in which music is part of plot and theme reveal an affinity toward the human condition in the film.

The photography in their films takes the eye back to the horizon or across a huge field, far along a road or deep into the front of a church or schoolroom. Even casual viewers must realize the frequent alternation of intense close-ups and long shots that never cease to remind one of locale. In addition, thoughts and dreams are often given visual expression: A picture of a girl and her brother studying on a couch follows her interior monologue about missing the long yellow couch in her living room; a prisoner in solitary confinement for ten years creates a world of sound and sight expressed on the screen.

With theatrical form and technique serving as the framework for their political cinema, and complex, individualistic characters as protagonists, the Tavianis are as concerned with corruption, abuse of power, poverty, and suffering as were the neorealists and their successors. Struck by the autobiography of Gavino Ledda, which became their well-received Padre Padrone, they investigate the abuse of power by a father, compelled by tradition and his own need to survive to keep his son a slave. Amazingly, the illiterate, virtually mute shepherd boy whom a quirk of fate (army service) rescues from lifetime isolation becomes a professor of linguistics through curiosity, will, and energy. In Un uomo da Bruciare Salvatore, who wants to help Sicilian peasants break the Mafia’s hold, is complex, intellectual, and egotistical.

Other themes and topics in Taviani films include divorce, revolution as an ongoing effort interrupted by interludes of other activity, the changing ways of dealing with power and corruption, resistance in war, fascism, and the necessity of communal action for accomplishment. The Tavianis use the past to illuminate the present, show the suffering of opposing sides, and stress the major role of heritage and environment. Their characters ask questions about their lives that lead to positive solutions (and sometimes to failure). The two directors believe in the possibility of an eventual utopia.

In 1987 the Tavianis made their first English-language film, Good Morning Babylon, a poetic, sweetly nostalgic ode to the origins of cinema and the invulnerability of great art. Their scenario chronicles the plight of two Italian-born siblings whose ancestors are craftsmen who for centuries have restored cathedrals. They arrive in America during the 1920s and end up designing sets for D. W. Griffith’s Intolerance. This was followed by two works as outstanding as any of their earlier films. Il Sole anche di notte (Night Sun), adapted from Tolstoi’s “Father Sergius,” is the story of a young man who is deeply troubled by the knowledge that he exists in a world of temptation and hypocrisy. He sees that too many of his fellow humans seek sex and status, and then turn to religion only to ease their guilt. All he wishes is to find inner tranquility, so he becomes a monk—and even cuts off his finger rather than give in to his desires and allow himself to be seduced by a temptress. A sensitive man who only wishes to make the world a better place, Father Sergius only can end up disappointed; he becomes an eternal wanderer, forever seeking the true meaning of his life and existence. Ultimately, the Tavianis are able to elicit a special sensitivity toward the human condition in the film.

Fiorile is linked to Night Sun as an intricate, sardonic tale of tainted innocence. While on his way from Paris to Tuscany to visit his sick, hermit-like father, whom he hasn’t seen in a decade, a man discloses to his two young children the story of their ancestry. He commences by telling them of the nefarious means by which their forefathers became rich during the Napoleonic era—and how this wealth became a family curse for future generations. In Fiorile, the Tavianis examine the manner in which ill-gotten affluence will tarnish the soul and only result in misery. While their films are not lacking in political content—they keenly illustrate how greed, cruelty, lust for power, and temptation will wither one’s soul—the cinema of Paolo and Vittorio Taviani is one of a simple, but never simplistic, humanism.

—Lillian Schiff, updated by Rob Edelman

TÉCHINÉ, Andre

Nationality: French. Born: Valence d’Agen, 13 March 1943. Education: Lycée at Valence d’Agen. Career: Writer for Cahiers du Cinéma and assistant to stage director Marc’O and film director Jacques Rivette, 1964–67; his second film, Souvenirs d’en France, establishes him as an important director, 1974; friendship with writer Roland Barthes, who dedicates essay “Diderot, Brecht, Eisenstein” to him, 1977; international success of his autobiographical film Les Roseaux sauvages, 1994. Awards: Cannes Film Festival Best Director, for Rendez-vous, 1985; César Awards for Best Director and Best Writer, and New York Film Critics Circle Award for Best Foreign Language Film, for Les Roseaux sauvages, 1995. Agent: Artmedia, 10 Avenue George V, 75008 Paris.

Films as Director and Writer/Co-Writer:

1969 Paulina s’en va
1974 Souvenirs d’en France (French Provincial)
1976 Barocco
1979 Les Soeurs Brontë (The Brontë Sisters)
1981 Hotel des Amériques
1983 La Matonnette (short, for TV)
1984 L’atelier (doc short, for TV)
1985 Rendez-vous
1986 Le Lieu du crime (Scene of the Crime)
1987 Les Innocents
1991 J’embrasse pas (I Don’t Kiss)
1993 Ma saison préférée (My Favorite Season)
1994 Le Chène et le roseau (The Oak and the Reed) (for the TV series Tous les garçons et les filles de leur âge); Les Roseaux sauvages (Wild Reeds)
1996 Les Voleurs (Thieves)
1997 Que sont-ils devenus? (for TV)
1998 Alice et Martin (Alice and Martin)
2000 Terminus des anges

Other Films:

1974 Aloïse (de Kermadec) (co-sc)
1990 Mauvaise fille (Franc) (co-sc)
1997 Transatlantique (Laurent) (sc)

Publications

On TÉCHINÉ: books—

On TÉCHINÉ: articles—

White, Armond, “Strange Gifts: André Téchiné Remakes the Melodrama,” in Film Comment (Berkeley), July/August 1995.

André Téchiné belongs to a generation of French filmmakers, including Bertrand Blier and Bertrand Tavernier among those with an international reputation, who came into prominence in the mid-1970s. Many of his films have been classified as melodramas, though it might be more accurate to say that they play with conventions of melodrama and the thriller while exploring psychological states and social structures, with particular emphasis upon estrangement from home, both family and milieu. Intricately plotted or seemingly improvisatory—it is sometimes difficult to tell the difference—often with bizarre turns of event and unexpected sexual attractions, his films also feature memorable performances of both established stars—Catherine Deneuve above all—and young unknowns like Juliette Binoche and Élodie Bouchez. With a trio of films in the mid-1990s—My Favorite Season, Wild Reeds, and Thieves—Téchiné reached what many critics found to be a new power and maturity as a filmmaker.

Téchiné first came into prominence with Souvenirs d’en France. Filmed in the director’s native village, it is a highly compressed history of a small-town family from early in the century through the Resistance and on to May 1968. In a series of vignettes Téchiné explores intersections of private life and historical forces—as he would later do in the autobiographical Wild Reeds, though in a much briefer timeframe. Souvenirs d’en France is also densely allusive in regard to cinema history: it “quotes” a great many films and film styles via its own eclectic visual style, its echoes of other family-drama movies, and its references to actual films the characters see. At the same time, it provides juicy roles for Jeanne Moreau and Marie-France Pisier as women who marry into the family and become rivals—Moreau a laundress who becomes a matriarch and Pisier a bourgeoise who seeks the glamour of America.

Téchiné’s next film, Barocco, set the pattern for several works to follow, especially in its roots in the crime thriller, its perverse love relationships—characters helplessly drawn to dangerously violent people—and its fascination with train stations, including their cafes and the bridges connecting them to gritty neighborhoods. The film could not be more aptly named: it is “baroque” in both its convoluted plot and its elaborate camera movements and widescreen framings which turn the station and the unnamed city itself into a labyrinth. The plot involves a boxer (Gérard Depardieu) who has accepted and then turned down a huge bribe from a politician to tell a lie that will influence an election, a hired killer (Depardieu again, though no one seems to register just how very much the two look alike) who slays the boxer, and the boxer’s girlfriend (Isabelle Adjani), who eventually falls in love with the killer while trying to remake him into the image of her slain lover—a sort of bizarre reverse spin on the plot of Vertigo (itself based on a French novel). If one were to judge the film in terms of plausible narrative, it would hardly be worth discussing—Vertigo is documentary realism in comparison—but in its virtuoso photography by Bruno Nuytten and its toying with themes of identity and doubles, not to mention its political critique within a thriller context, Barocco has its compelling moments. The whole train station sequence from Adjani’s arrival to the shooting of the boxer by his double is a tour de force of cinematography and editing.
Making a film biography of the Brontë sisters gave Téchiné the opportunity to use an all-star cast (Pisier, Adjani, and Isabelle Huppert) while exploring one of literary history’s famed dysfunctional families, but most critics found The Brontë Sisters unable to leap beyond the conventions of movie biography—though there is a memorable scene of the three sisters rescuing their naked, unconscious brother from a fire in his bedroom. Far more successful was Hotel des Amériques, the story of a hopelessly ill-matched love affair between a woman (Catherine Deneuve) recovering from the suicide of a former lover and a man (Patrick Dewaere) feverishly attracted to her, but behaving like a spoiled child in moments of anger and jealousy, and still emotionally attached to a parasitic and bullying male friend. The casting is perfect, with Deneuve’s emotional opaqueness and Dewaere’s brooding, haunted intensity suggesting dimensions of their characters beyond articulation. And the film has interests extending well beyond its central couple, from the secondary characters with their own mysterious love afflictions to the setting of Biarritz, a formerly glamorous tourist town which the Deneuve character hates for somehow being neither “France” nor foreign, and neither urban nor rural, but all of the characters are partly defined by their relation to it.

Rendez-vous is more flamboyantly melodramatic than Hotel des Amériques, as even a very brief plot summary might suggest. Here a would-be actress (Binoche, callow but already with true screen presence) fleeing her provincial home for Paris is irrationally in love with a sadistic, self-destructive young actor (Lambert Wilson, repellent yet fiercely strong in the role), a former Romeo who caused the death of his Juliet and who is now playing a “Romeo” in a live-sex show. When the actor himself is killed in an accident, or possible suicide, his former mentor/director (Jean-Louis Trintignant), and father of the Juliet, determines to cast the untried Binoche as his new Juliet, though Wilson’s ghost (or her own hallucination) tries to stop her. Again a wildly improbable plot serves as a vehicle for exploring the violent intensity of certain emotional attachments and their ability to cause one’s life to spin off in unexpected directions. Hardly less extravagant is Scene of the Crime, which begins with a scene between a boy and an escaped convict right out of the opening of Great Expectations, but climaxes with the boy (a highly troubled youth himself) discovering his mother (Deneuve again) having sex with the handsome young convict—one of the stranger representations of Freud’s “primal scene” in cinema. But plot summary and performance description do little justice to these films, which share with most of Téchiné’s work a restless camera movement and seemingly casual narrative do little justice to these films, which share with most of Téchiné’s work a restless camera movement and seemingly casual editing that suggest a nervous, intense curiosity, equivalent to an artist’s rapid sketching. Scene of the Crime, for example, directs our attention to a gorgeous French countryside (and to Deneuve’s lakeside disco, deceptively serene when seen from afar), an ironic backdrop for two kinds of characters: those living repressed lives in a stifling bourgeois environment and those, more uninhibited, who play out a series of violent passions, with the boy caught in the middle.

Les Innocents et J’embrasse pas (seldom seen outside France) show Téchiné moving away from genre pictures while continuing to explore complex sets of emotional involvements, now more centrally concerning homosexual attractions, and in Les Innocents a theme he will take up again in Wild Reeds: repercussions of the French-Algerian conflict on individual lives. The more widely distributed My Favorite Season may be Téchiné’s most incisively detailed portrait of an unhappy family, with Daniel Auteuil giving one of his most brilliant performances as an emotionally volatile physician long estranged from his mother and sister (the latter played once again by Deneuve, effortlessly revealing the complexities of middle age). Like many another Téchiné character, the brother is unpredictable in his outbursts, but these are now rooted in a plausible family conflict rather than a baroque plot. Wild Reeds stands apart from Téchiné’s other films in its having had restrictions placed upon it from outside—restrictions which paradoxically seem to have allowed the director to make one of his freest, most graceful, and open-ended films. A French television network invited a number of directors to make an hour-long film for an anthology series about adolescence: each film was required to be more or less autobiographical, to give a sense of historical context, and to contain a party scene and popular songs of the day. Téchiné made not only “The Oak and the Reed” but a feature-length version of the same material to be shown in theatres as a kickoff for the series. Wild Reeds is centered upon four teenagers, three boys and a girl, each struggling with far from trivial coming-of-age concerns: for example, François is trying to come to terms with his realization that he is gay, while Henri, a pied-noir (French-Algerian immigrant), is defensive of the French presence in Algeria. The film never preaches a “correct” position on sexuality or politics, though it is clearly enough in support of a generosity of understanding; but what makes it come alive is what might be called the director’s investigatory style of camera movement and framing, by means of which he seems effortlessly to evoke the early 1960s and to expand his story to other lives beyond the four adolescents. In the final scenes, when the youths go swimming in a river and walk off to an uncertain future, we see without the point being hammered down that they are the reeds which bend instead of breaking.

For Thieves Téchiné takes up gangster melodrama, constructing a plot around a robbery that goes murderously awry—yet, perhaps through the experience of Wild Reeds and its free-form but not frayed or fragmented narrative, he has come up with perhaps his most accomplished and original film in terms of complex structure and shifting point-of-view. The story is divided into marked sections, each narrated by one of several characters, and each taking us backward or forward over days or months in time. Téchiné reunites Arlette and Deneuve, playing exceedingly dissimilar characters, a cop and a philosophy professor, who are brought together over their sexual involvement with a much younger and very desperate woman (Laurence Cote) who works for a crime family of which Arteuil is the “white” sheep. One must add that the cop has quite enough hang-ups, sexual and otherwise, to make him far from a simple protagonist; that the young woman has a brother involved in crime like the cop’s own brother (another example of Téchiné’s love of doublings); and that once again the director features a troubled boy (the cop’s nephew) unable to break from a family trap—in this case, too young to know he is ensnared.

In a New York Times interview Téchiné has said that he begins work on a film with a vivid scene or compelling character or two in mind, and only eventually constructs a coherent story and finds an ending. (To be sure, since his plots rarely have full closure, his endings typically suggest a number of alternatives.) This method of development may explain why his earlier films like Barocco and Rendez-vous seem to have dazzling moments and scenes but little sense of a coherent drama evolving toward an inevitable conclusion. But it also suggests how films like Wild Reeds and Thieves can seem so loose in structure and yet so accomplished, each part organically related to every other and drawing us powerfully toward their denouements. It is exciting to see a filmmaker so lavishly talented in youth create films in middle age that seem no less fiery in their passions or incisive in their technique while attaining a new sense of full achievement.

—Joseph Milicia

TIAN Zhuangzhuang

Nationality: Chinese. Born: People’s Republic of China, 1952. Education: Trained at the Beijing Agricultural Film Studio, 1975; admitted to the Beijing Film Academy, 1978. Career: Directed first feature for TV, 1980. Awards: Palme d’Or, Cannes Film Festival, for The Blue Kite, 1994.

---

Films as director:

1980 Our Corner (for TV)
1982 The Red Elephant (co-d with Zhang Jianya)
1984 September
1985 On the Hunting Ground; Daoma Zei (Horse Thief)
1986 Travelling Players
1988 Rock ‘n’ Roll Kids
1990 Fei Fa Shengming
1991 Li Lianying, the Imperial Eunuch
1993 Lan Fengzheng (The Blue Kite)

---

Other Film:

1992 Family Portrait (assoc pr)

---

Publications

By TIAN: articles—

On TIAN: books—

---

Tian Zhuangzhuang began his career as part of what has become known as the “Fifth Generation” of film directors from the People’s Republic of China. He is fairly representative of that group for a number of reasons. Like Chen Kaige, for example, he comes from a family already established in Chinese film circles; Tian’s mother, a major film star, headed the Beijing Children’s Film Studio for many years, and his father, an actor, headed the Chinese National Film Bureau at one time. Also, like many of his contemporaries who were in their teens or early twenties during the Great Proletarian Cultural Revolution, he joined the army and traveled extensively, visiting remote parts of China few “city kids” with an intellectual family background would have seen without the political and social upheaval of that period. Tian became a photographer at this time, and it is this period in his life that undoubtedly provided the impetus for many of his subsequent film features.

Marked by a politicized youth, Tian and others of his generation began to search for a sense of themselves as artists, as part of a Chinese culture and civilization, as national subjects, as men and women, when they matured in the post-Mao era. Many, including Zhang Yimou, Chen Kaige, the late Zhang Nuanxin, and Tian Zhuangzhuang, looked to those remote areas of China, where questions of identity have historically been perceived as more fluid: the dry, barren, western deserts, the forbidding northern frontier at the edges of the Great Wall, the distinct non-Han (not part of the majority ethnic group of Han Chinese) areas of Mongolia, Tibet, and Manchuria, and the lush jungles and wetlands of the southern border with Thailand and Vietnam. Rather than looking for models of exemplary behavior among a revolutionary elite, these filmmakers searched for Chinese identity among the poor, the illiterate, the unenlightened, the dispossessed of these border regions.

Tian Zhuangzhuang is perhaps the best known of this group for reviving and revitalizing a staple of the Chinese film industry—the “national minority” genre. Made to celebrate the solidarity of the Chinese people under the Communist regime, these films, often made by studios based in the minority areas themselves, showcased the songs, dances, customs, and patriotism of the non-Han community. Stories of liberation, they usually contrast the “backwardness” of traditional life before the Revolution with the benefits of Chinese Communist rule. Tian’s On the Hunting Ground, made in Inner Mongolia, and Horse Thief, set in Tibet, fall within the rough parameters of this genre. However, Tian’s work marks a radical break with the aesthetics of earlier generations of Chinese filmmakers. Rather than placing minority peoples within a narrative of liberation accessible to the average Han Chinese viewer, Tian, in On the Hunting Ground, for example, emphasizes the relationship between the land and the people. Long shots and long takes dominate; the landscape overpowers any identification with individual characters; dialogue, which is minimal, goes untranslated; rituals and social relationships remain unexplained. The Mongolian steppes—exotic, violent, harsh, and picturesque—become the visual embodiment of an unfathomable part of the Chinese nation, a marker of the limits of an ethnic identity. Clearly, this distance signals that this film may say more about Tian as the eye of the camera, an outsider, an intruder, than about the Mongolians as objects of his observations. These films are not about the plight of a downtrodden “minority” (although the people presented in Tian’s films are indeed poor and sometimes desperate), rather these are films about the liminality of Chinese ethnicity and, by implication, political authority, within its own borders. After the Cultural Revolution, a generation became “outsiders” in their own nation, stripped of political certainty and a clear sense of an ethnic, national, and gendered self. (It is not coincidental that On the Hunting Ground and Horse Thief are peopled principally by non-Han men engaged in “manly,” often violent and bloody occupations like hunting, since political, economic, and cultural uncertainties often play themselves out as a search for a more certain sense of gender—a nostalgia for a time or a yearning for a place where “men are men.”)

In Horse Thief, Tian continues to explore the issues he outlined in On the Hunting Ground. However, this film follows a more conventional path, and centers its narrative around the tribulations of Rorbu, the horse thief of the title, who attempts to change his ways after the death of his son. Set before the Chinese annexation of Tibet, the film could be read as a pre-Revolutionary indictment of traditional Tibetan nomads. However, the spectacular images the camera lingers over—from the beauty of the mountains to the grizzly “sky burials,” featuring vultures picking the bones of human cadavers, and the other, unexplained Buddhist rites that form the backbone of the film—take attention away from the protagonist and his ethical and economic dilemmas. Rather, like On the Hunting Ground, Horse Thief challenges the viewer with an unexplained and unexplainable “otherness” that defies easy recuperation into a Han sense of self. The analogy to the filmmaker’s own predicament again becomes clear. Investigating the Tibetan horse thief, an outlaw from a still recalcitrant “minority” nation, takes on the trappings of an investigation of the filmmaker’s own sense of self and otherness, rather than of a call for a “free” Tibet or an enlightened, subdued, “revolutionary” Tibet to cure Rorbu’s ills. This is an aesthetic search for a new way of depicting China, and a visual call for a reinvention of Chinese cinema.

Ironically, the free experimentation that Tian’s earlier work exemplified has been tempered less by government censorship (although Tian has had some problems) and more by the growing pressures on Chinese filmmakers to fit into the new market economy and make films that make money. Rock ’n’ Roll Kids, for example, exploited interest in rock music among Chinese youth. Travelling Players, based on a well-known literary source, followed a more gritty road with its itinerant minstrels; however, Li Lianying, the Imperial Eunuch is, in most respects, a conventional costume drama, made on the coattails of films like Bertolucci’s The Last Emperor, to exploit international interest in pre-Republican palace intrigue and spectacle.

The Blue Kite marks another stage in Tian’s career. Almost a companion piece to Zhang Yimou’s To Live, The Blue Kite takes an epic view of post-Liberation China, primarily focusing on the years of the Cultural Revolution, through the eyes of Tietou, “Iron Head,” an innocent who becomes the victim of senseless violence brought on by political turmoil. Although suppressed by the government, The Blue Kite still found its way into the international festival circuit and has enjoyed commercial distribution as an “art film” abroad. After its screening at the Cannes Film Festival without official permission, however, Tian was not able to work in the Chinese film industry again until very recently (as an executive producer rather than director). Given that the Chinese government itself is delighted to decry the excesses of the Cultural Revolution publicly in the international press, the controversy generated by the film must spring from an allegorical reading of Tietou as hard-headed China herself, innocent, tough, but ultimately vulnerable and naive. Perhaps Tietou is too much like Tian’s generation as a group, victims of and witnesses to a corruption that may or may not be endemic to a system or an era or an identity, and undeniably, like Tietou’s family, complicit in that corruption. Like the minority peoples of his earlier films, the child Tietou acts as a mirror of the preoccupations of a generation, and this film functions as a bridge to the more experimental works of Tian’s oeuvre. —Gina Marchetti

TORRE NILSSON, Leopoldo

Nationality: Argentinian. Born: Buenos Aires, 5 May 1924, son of filmmaker Leopoldo Torres Rios. Family: Married writer Beatriz Guido. Career: Assistant to father, from 1939; with father, directed first feature, 1949; began working with Guido, 1957; founder of production company Producciones Angel, 1959; signed contract with Columbia to make El ojo de la cerradura, 1964. Awards: International Critics Prize, Cannes Festival, for Hands in the Trap, 1961. Died: 8 September 1978.

Films as Director:

- 1947 El muro (The Wall) (short)
- 1950 El crimen de Oribe (Oribe’s Crime) (co-d)
- 1953 El hijo del crack (Son of the ‘Star’) (co-d); La Tigra (The Tigress)
- 1954 Días de odio (Days of Hate)
- 1955 Para vestir (The Spinsters)
- 1956 El protegido (The Protégé); Graciela
- 1957 La casa del ángel (End of Innocence; The House of the Angel) (+ co-sc with Beatriz Guido, based on Guido novel); Precursors of Argentine Painting (short) (Guido: sc); Los arboles de Buenos-Aires (short) (Guido: sc)
- 1958 El secuestrador (The Kidnapper) (+ sc)
Leopoldo Torre Nilsson

1959
La cáida (The Fall) (+ co-sc with Guido);
Fin de fiesta (The Party Is Over; The Blood Feast) (Guido: sc)

1960
Un guapo del 900 (+ co-pr)

1961
La mano en la trampa (The Hand in the Trap) (Guido: sc);
Piel de verano (Summer Skin) (+ pr, Guido: sc)

1962
Setenta veces siete (The Female: 70 Times 7) (Guido: sc);
Homenaje a la hora de la siesta (Homage at Siesta Time) (Guido: sc);
La terraza (The Terrace) (Guido: sc)

1964
El ojo de la cerradura (The Eavesdropper) (Guido: sc)

1965
Once upon a Tractor (for United Nations) (Guido: sc)

1966
La chica del lunes (Monday’s Child) (Guido: sc);
Los traidores de San Angel (The Traitors of San Angel) (Guido: sc);
Cavar un foso (To Dig a Pit) (Guido: sc)

1968
Martin Fierro (Guido: sc)

1969
El santo de la espada (The Knight of the Sword) (Guido: sc)

1970
Güemes—La terra en armas (Guido: sc)

1972
La mafia (The Mafio) (Guido: sc)

1973
Los siete locos (The Seven Madmen) (Guido: sc)

1974
Boquitas pintadas (Painted Lips) (Guido: sc)

1975
Diario de la guerra del cerdo (La guerra del cerdo; Diary of the Pig War) (Guido: sc);
Piedra libre (Guido: sc)

1975
Los gauchos judíos (Jewish Gauchos) (co-pr)

Publications

By TORRE NILSSON: book—

By TORRE NILSSON: articles—

Interview, in Cuadernos de cine (Buenos Aires), October 1954.
Interview with Hector Grossi, in Mundo Argentino (Buenos Aires),
February 1957.
Interview, in Tiempo de cine (Buenos Aires), October 1960.
“How to Make a New Wave,” in Films and Filming (London),
November 1962.
Interview with I. León Frías and R. Bedoya, in Hablemos de Cine (Lima), April 1979.

On TORRE NILSSON: books—

King, John, and Nissa Torrents, editors, Argentine Cinema: The Garden of Forking Paths,

On TORRE NILSSON: articles—

Trajtenberg, Mario, “Torre-Nilsson and His Double,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Fall 1961.

* * *

Leopoldo Torre Nilsson’s international reputation is based on a handful of films made in the late 1950s and at the very beginning of the 1960s, but his career as a director spanned three decades. In addition, through his father, the director Leopoldo Torre Rios, he had direct links with the pioneering days of Argentine cinema. Born in Buenos Aires of part Spanish-Catholic, part Swedish-Protestant ancestry, he began his involvement with cinema at the age of fifteen, when he became his father’s assistant. In all, he worked as assistant director on sixteen of his father’s films. He also scripted ten features in the 1940s before making his directing debut with a short film, El Muro, in 1947. His feature debut, El Crimen de Oribe, the first of two films co-directed with his father, already shows some signs of his future concerns: literary adaptation (the film was from a short story by Adolfo Bioy Casares) and stylistic experiment. The same is true of his first solo feature, Dias de Odio, adapted from “Emma Zunz,” a story by Jorge Luis Borges.

Torre Nilsson himself regarded his first five films as an independent director as apprentice efforts, and certainly they achieved little commercial success in Argentina. He reached maturity as a director and far wider international audiences in 1957, when he began his collaboration with the novelist Beatriz Guido, whom he subsequently married. Complementary personalities, they proved a highly successful team, with Guido creating a claustrophobic world and sets of characters ideally suited to her husband’s virtuoso camerawork and concern with symbolic detail. Three highly successful films starring the young Elsa Daniel exemplify the qualities of the pair. The House of the Angel provided an acid picture of upper middle-class life in Buenos Aires in the 1920s (a combination of puritanical religion and political corruption) but its central theme is the destruction of virginal innocence, for it features an adolescent heroine bound forever to the man who has half-seduced, half-raped her on the eve of a duel.

The director then evoked with great force and conviction the enclosed, Cocteau-esque world of The Fall, which combined the sexual tensions of a young governess with the amorality of the four wild children who become her charges. In 1961 Torre Nilsson adapted two further novels by his wife, both of which depicted a young woman at odds with her elders and caught in a trap of her own devising. In The Hand in the Trap, one of the director’s most successful works, Elsa Daniel uncovers the secret of her aunt’s withdrawal from the world and arranges a confrontation with the man who jilted her. But the cost of this curiosity is high, for she herself falls victim to the same seducer and realizes that she will live out her aunt’s story all over again. Summer Skin, which shows the director at his brilliant visual best, is a further tale of lost innocence, with Graciela Borges playing a girl who sells herself as “companion” to her dying cousin. The film has an open-air setting of beach and summer resort, but like the previous films it portrays a morally corrupt society.

Even at this period of his greatest acclaim, Torre Nilsson achieved comparatively little success with films outside this narrow range, such as The Kidnapper, a study of poverty, or his films on history and politics, The Party Is Over and A Tough Guy of 1900. Torre Nilsson’s subsequent attempts to widen the scope of his filmmaking received a mixed reception. Films in which he tried to combine his literary and historical concerns with the requirements of local commercial formulas received little international attention, but his constant struggle to maintain an independent voice made him an important figure within Argentina. He managed to continue working through the difficult years of censorship until two years before his death, when his last feature, Piedra libre (1976) was banned. But his reputation rests essentially on the handful of stylish depictions of corruption and loss of innocence which made such an impact on the art cinema and international festival circuits of the years around 1960.

—Roy Armes

TOURNEUR, Jacques

Nationality: American/French. Born: Paris, 12 November 1904, son of director Maurice Tourneur; became U.S. citizen, 1919. Education: Attended Hollywood High School. Family: Married actress Christiane (died). Career: Moved to United States with family, 1914; office boy at MGM, 1924, later actor; script clerk for father’s last six American films; moved to Paris, edited father’s films, 1928; directed first film, in France, 1931; 2nd unit director for MGM, Hollywood, 1935; directed shorts, then B features, from 1939; director for producer Val Lewton at RKO, from 1942; television director, from late 1950s. Died: In Bergerac, 19 December 1977.

Films as Director:

1931 Un vieux garçon; Tout ça ne vaut pas l’amour
1933 La Fusée; Toto; Pour être aimée
1934 Les Filles de la concierge
1939 They All Came Out; Nick Carter, Master Detective
1940 Phantom Raiders
1941 Doctors Don’t Tell
1942 Cat People
1943 I Walked with a Zombie; The Leopard Man
1944 Days of Glory; Experiment Perilous
1946 Canyon Passage
1947 Out of the Past (Build My Gallows High)
1948 Berlin Express
1949 Easy Living
1950 The Flame and the Arrow; Stars in My Crown
1951 Circle of Danger; Anne of the Indies
1952 Way of a Gaucho
1953 Appointment in Honduras
1955 Stranger on Horseback; Wichita
1956 Great Day in the Morning
1957 Nightfall; Night of the Demon (Curve of the Demon)
1958 The Fearmakers
1959 Timbuktu; La battaglia di Maratona (The Battle of Marathon); Frontier Rangers (originally for TV)
1963 The Comedy of Terrors
1965 War Gods of the Deep (City under the Sea)

Other Films:

1923 Scaramouche (Ingram) (role)
1927 The Fair Co-ed (Wood) (role); Love (Goulding) (role)
1929 The Trail of ’98 (Brown) (role)

Publications

By TOURNEUR: articles—

Jacques Tourneur and Patricia Roc on the set of Circle of Danger

On TOURNEUR: books—

On TOURNEUR: articles—

* * *

The first director Val Lewton hired for his RKO unit was Jacques Tourneur, and the first picture made by that unit was Cat People, an original screenplay by DeWitt Bodeen.

When Tourneur’s father, Maurice, returned to Paris after a number of years in America, Jacques had gone with him, working as assistant director and editor for his father. In 1933, he made a few directorial solos in the French language and then returned to Hollywood, where he became an assistant director at MGM. It was at this time that he first met Val Lewton, and the two young men worked as special unit directors for Jack Conway on A Tale of Two Cities; it was Lewton and Tourneur who staged the storming of the Bastille sequence for that film.

Tourneur remained at MGM, directing over 20 short subjects, and Lewton eventually went on to become David O. Selznick's story editor. When Lewton left Selznick to head his own production unit at RKO, he had already made up his mind that Tourneur would direct his first production. Tourneur came to RKO, where he served as director for Lewton’s first three films—Cat People, I Walked with a Zombie, and The Leopard Man. The front office held his work in such esteem that he was given the “A” treatment—solo direction of a high-budget picture. As an excellent melodrama, While Paris Sleeps was an immediate hit, and Tourneur immediately turned to another high budget picture at RKO—The Leopard Man. Under Tourneur’s skillful direction, it became a suspenseful melodrama, and Robert Ryan with Paul Lukas. Filmed partially in Berlin, the war was the first Hollywood picture to be made in Germany since the end of the war.

Tourneur then directed three excellent westerns for his friend Joel McCrea—Stars in My Crown, Stranger on Horseback, and Wichita, which featured McCreer as Wyatt Earp. He also directed The Flame and the Arrow, starring Burt Lancaster, and Great Day in the Morning, another RKO western with Robert Stack and Virginia Mayo. He then went back to make another horror picture in England, Night of the Demon, with Dana Andrews. This film is rated as highly as those he made for Lewton.

Television direction occupied the greater part of Tourneur’s time for the next decade, but he retired in 1966 and returned to his native country, where he died in Bergerac on December 19, 1977. The best pictures which he directed were those of suspense and genuine terror, though he also did well with those that had a great deal of action. He wisely resisted scenes with long patches of dialogue. When confronted with such scenes, he typically frowned and said, “It sounds so corny.”

—DeWitt Bodeen

TOURNEUR, Maurice

Nationality: French/American. Born: Maurice Thomas in Paris, 2 February 1876; became U.S. citizen, 1921. Education: Educated at Lycée Condorcet. Military Service: Military service in artillery, late 1890s. Family: Married Fernande Petit (stage name Van Doren), 1904 (separated 1927), son Jacques Tourneur. Career: Illustrator and graphic and interior designer, from 1894; assistant to Auguste Rodin and Puisis de Chavannes; actor; then stage director, from 1900; actor, then director for Eclair films, from 1912; assistant to Auguste Rodin and Puisis de Chavannes; actor; then stage director, from 1900; actor, then director for Eclair films, from 1912; moved to United States, 1914; production head of Paragon studio, 1915; contracted to Jesse Lasky for three Olga Petrova vehicles, 1917; formed own production company, 1918; moved to California, contracted to Paramount, formed Associated Producers Inc. with Thomas Ince and others (failed 1921), 1919; moved to Universal, 1920; quit direction of The Mysterious Island, returned to France, 1926; son Jacques edited films, from 1930. Died: 1961.

Films as Director:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1912</td>
<td>Le Friquet (+ sc); Jean la poudre (+ sc); Le Système du Docteur Goudron et du Professeur Plume; Figures de cire</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1913</td>
<td>Le Dernier Pardon (+ sc); Le Puits mitoyen; La Camée; Sevratoire (+ sc); Le Corso rouge; Mademoiselle 100 millions; Les Gaite de l’escadron (+ sc); La Dame de Montsoreau (+ sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1914</td>
<td>Monsieur Lecocq (+ sc); Rouletabille I: Le Mystère de la chambre jaune (+ sc); Rouletabille II: La Dernière Incarnation de Larson (+ sc); Mother (+ sc); The Man of the Hour (+ sc); The Wishing Ring (+ sc); The Pit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1915</td>
<td>* Alias Jimmy Valentine* (+ sc); The Cab; Trilby (+ sc); The Ivory Snuff Box (+ sc); A Butterfly on the Wheel; Human Driftwood</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1916</td>
<td>The Pawn of Fate; The Hand of Peril (+ sc); The Closed Road (+ sc); The Rail Rider; The Velvet Paw</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1917</td>
<td>A Girl’s Folly; The Whip; The Undying Flame; Exile; The Law of the Land (+ sc); The Pride of the Clan; The Poor Little Rich Girl; Barbary Sheep; The Rise of Jennie Cushing</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1918</td>
<td>Rose of the World; A Doll’s House; The Blue Bird; Prunella; Woman; Sporting Life</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1919</td>
<td>The White Heather; The Life Line; Victory; The Broken Butterfly (+ co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1920</td>
<td>My Lady’s Garter; The County Fair; Treasure Island; The White Circle; Deep Waters; The Last of the Mohicans</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1921</td>
<td>The Bait; The Foolish Matrons</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1922</td>
<td>Lorna Doone</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1923</td>
<td>While Paris Sleeps (made in 1920); The Christian; The Isle of Lost Ships; The Brass Bottle; Jealous Husbands</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1924</td>
<td>Torment (+ co-sc); The White Moth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1925</td>
<td>Never the Twain Shall Meet; Sporting Life (+ sc) (remake); Clothes Make the Pirate</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1926</td>
<td>Aloma of the South Seas; Old Loves and New; The Mysterious Island (co-d, sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1927</td>
<td>L’Equipage (+ co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1929</td>
<td>Das Schif der verloren Menschen (Le Navire des hommes perdus)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Accusée, levez-vous</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>Maison de danses; Partir . . . (Partir!)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>Au nom de la loi; Les Gaite de l’escadron (+ co-sc); L’Idoire (+ co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>Les Deux Orphelines (+ co-sc); L’Homme mysterieux (Obsession)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>Le Voleur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>Justin de Marseille</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>Konigsmark; Samson; Avec le sourire</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Le Patriote; Katia</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>Volpone</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>Peches de jeunesse; Mam’zelle Bonaparte</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1942</td>
<td>La Main du diable</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>Le Val d’enfer; Cecile est morte</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>Après l’amour</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1948</td>
<td>L’Impasse des deux anges</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Other Films:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1920</td>
<td>The Great Redeemer (Brown) (supervisor)*</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Maurice Tourneur

Publications

By TOURNEUR: articles—

“Stylization in Motion Picture Direction,” in Motion Picture (New York), September 1918.
Interview with M.S. Cheatham, in Motion Picture Classic (Brooklyn), February 1920.
Article, in Film Comment (New York), July/August 1976, reprinted from Shadowland, May 1920.

On TOURNEUR: articles—

Haskins, H., “Work of Maurice Tourneur,” in Motion Picture Classic (Brooklyn), September 1918.
Brownlow, Kevin, letter, in American Classic Screen (Shawnee Mission, Kansas), Fall 1979.
Tourneur Section of Griffithiana (Pordenone), 1988.

* * *

Maurice Tourneur is one of the greatest pictorialists of the cinema, deriving his aesthetic from his early associations with Rodin and Puvis de Chavannes. Having worked for André Antoine as an actor and producer, he joined the Eclair Film Company in 1912 and travelled to their American Studios at Fort Lee, New Jersey, in 1914. There he directed films based on successful stage plays. In The Wishing Ring it is possible to see the charm and visual beauty he brought to his work. His team consisted of John van der Broek, the cameraman who later tragically drowned during one of Tourneur’s productions; Ben Carré, the art director; and Clarence Brown, his editor, who would later achieve fame as Garbo’s favorite director.

Tourneur was most literate in his pronouncements on the cinema, individualistic and iconoclastic at times. He saw the cinema in perspective and would not concede it a status equal to the other arts. He stated: “To speak of the future development of the art of the cinema is futile. It cannot be. It costs a great deal of money to produce a motion picture. The only way the financial backer can get his money back, to say nothing of a profit, is to appeal to the great masses. And the thing that satisfies millions cannot be good. As Ibsen once wrote, it is the minority which is always right.” In practice, however, Tourneur’s own work belied this statement. To everything he did he brought a sense of beauty and great responsibility to his audiences.

Tourneur directed Clara Kimball Young in Triby, Mary Pickford in Pride of the Clan and Poor Little Rich Girl, the latter a very successful film. He made three films with Olga Petrova. In 1918 five memorable films came from his hand: Elsie Ferguson appeared in his The Doll’s House; two other stage plays, The Bluebird by Maeterlinck and Prunella by Granville Barker, gave Tourneur full scope for his visual style; Woman was a series of episodes that dealt with Adam and Eve, Claudius and Messalina, Heloise and Abelard, a Breton fisherman and a mermaid, and a Civil War story; and Sporting Life was significant for its absence of stars and its depiction of a fog-ridden London, anticipating Griffith’s Broken Blossoms of the following year.

In 1919 Tourneur made Joseph Conrad’s Victory for Paramount. A year later, he unveiled a delightful Treasure Island with Shirley Mason (as Jim Hawkins) and Lon Chaney, who also starred in While Paris Sleeps. For Associated Producers he made The Last of the Mohicans, which many consider to be his masterpiece, although Clarence Brown took over direction when Tourneur fell ill during production.

Tourneur’s remaining Hollywood films included Lorna Doone, The Christian, The Isle of Lost Ships, The Brass Bottle, The White Moth, Never the Twain Shall Meet, and Aloma of the South Seas. During the production of The Mysterious Island for MGM, however, Tourneur grew resentful of a producer’s interference. He walked off the set and returned to France. He continued to work in films in Europe, his first being L’Equipage. In 1929 he made Das Schiff der Verlorenen in Germany with Marlene Dietrich. This was his last silent film, but he accepted the coming of sound and, before his death in 1961, he had made over 20 sound films. The most important of these were Les Deux Orphelines, the delightful Katia with Danielle Darieux, Volpone with Harry Baur and Louis Jouvet, La Main du diable, made from a story by Gerard de Nerval and featuring Pierre Fresnay, and his last film, L’Impasse des deux anges. Tourneur was a man who had no illusions about working in films. He realized the limitations of Hollywood and the films he was given to direct. However, he brought his considerable talent as a designer to bear on his work, and did not hesitate to experiment. He stylized his sets and was influenced by new movements in the theater, but he also used the effects of nature to heighten his dramas. His awareness of the potentialities of the camera was profound, giving strength to his images.

—Liam O’Leary

Jan Troell

Nationality: Swedish. Born: Limhamn, Skane, 23 July 1931.

Awards: State Prize, Swedish Film Institute, for Johan Ekberg; Grand Prix, Oberhausen, for Stopover; Golden Bear, Berlin Film Festival, for Who Saw Him Die?; four Academy Award nominations for The Emigrants, and a Best Foreign-Language Film Academy Award nomination for The Flight of the Eagle.

Films as Director:

1960
1961
1962

!Jan Troell
1964  De gamla kvarnen (The Old Mill); Trakom (Trachoma); Johan Ekberg
1965  Portratt av Asa (Portrait of Asa); Uppehall i myrlandet (Stopover in the Marshland) (episode in Four by Four)
1966  Har har du ditt liv (Here Is Your Life)
1968  Ole dole doff (Who Saw Him Die?); Eeny Meeny Miny Moe
1970  Utvandrarrna (The Emigrants); Nybyggarna (The New Land); Unto a Good Land
1974  Zandy’s Bride
1977  Bang!
1979  Hurricane
1982  Ingenjor andreas luftfard (The Flight of the Eagle)
1988  Sagolandet (The Fairytale Country)
1991  Il Capitano
1996  Hamsun
1997  En Frusen dröm (A Frozen Dream)
2000  Har har du ditt liv

Other Film:
1963  Barnvagnen (The Baby Carriage) (Bo Widerberg) (lighting cameraman)

Publications

By TROELL: book—

Jan Troell (portrait and interview), Swedish Film Institute (Stockholm), 1975.

By TROELL: articles—

On TROELL: book—

On TROELL: articles—

Gilliatt, Penelope, “Hurricane,” in New Yorker, 23 April 1979.

* * *

“We are the last dinosaurs of Swedish film,” lamented Ingmar Bergman to Jan Troell in 1983. At the time neither could yet claim to be an elder statesman—Bergman was sixty-five at the time and Troell was only fifty-two—but both had lived and worked long enough to find themselves somewhat estranged from their own profession. Frequently cited as Sweden’s two greatest filmmakers, they have much else in common. Both are fiercely independent artists, trained in film and television, who have made their slow and patient way as chroniclers and critics of the history, myths, and institutions of their native land.

As director, photographer, and editor of his films, Troell has retained an unusual degree of control for most of his career. His films are invariably pictorially beautiful, stylistically conservative, and moderately paced. Excepting an occasional foray into contemporary life, his subjects have been mostly historical in nature.

Troell’s first projects drew upon his experiences as a boy and later as a teacher in his native town of Malmo, in the southernmost province of Skane. Baten (The Ship, 1961) was a documentary about the last journey of the SS Malmo, which for many years had carried passengers to Copenhagen. Sommartag (Summer Train, 1961) was a nostalgic tribute to an Osterlen locomotive. And Nyar i Skane (New Year’s Eve in Skane) recalled the Scanian plains of his childhood.

After winning a state prize for Johan Ekberg, a sensitive documentary about a retired railroad worker’s coming to terms with old age, and the Oberhausen Grand Prix for Uppehall i myrlandet (Stopover in the Marshland, 1965), a short film with Max von Sydow as a railroad brakeman, Troell was ready for the most productive phase of his career. Between 1966 and 1979, under the aegis of the Svensk Filmindustry and producer Bengt Forslung, he made eight ambitious features. First came Har har du ditt liv (Here Is Your Life, 1966), based on Eyvind Johnson’s four-volume autobiographical novel. The 167-minute film, the longest Swedish feature made up to that time, was set in the decade after World War I. It is Troell’s most picaresque work, a coming-of-age saga of young Olof (Eddie Axberg), who, on the way to becoming a writer, leaves school and survives colorful encounters on the railroad, at a timber camp, in a sawmill, and as a movie projectionist. The serio-comic tone, convoluted editing, and unusual color technique (interspersing black-and-white and color sequences) relates it to the French New Wave, while Troell’s characteristic empathy for his characters links him with earlier masters like Sweden’s Victor Sjostrom and France’s Jean Renoir. Critic Vernon Young admired its sense of the passage of time—a trait to be found in most of Troell’s later works. “You don’t just watch the film, you live through it.”

Ole dole doff (Who Saw Him Die? 1968), by contrast a far more subdued and dark tale of a teacher (Per Oscarsson) alienated from his students, was shot at the Malmo school where Troell himself had taught. Particularly successful, in the opinion of Peter Cowie, was Troell’s ability to convey “telling images” of loneliness and despair in the parks, docks, and streets of Malmo.

Troell’s best films are concerned with people who measure their dreams and test their characters against the hostilities and vicissitudes of weather and landscape. Perhaps no other director in Swedish film history, save Victor Sjöström, has as consistently explored this theme. The Emigrants and The New Land (made in 1970 and released in America three years later), his most famous and most popular films, were based on Vilhelm Moberg’s quartet of novels about the immigration of the family of Karl and Kristina Nilsson (Max von Sydow and Liv Ullmann) to America in the mid-nineteenth century. A slow-breathing, deliberately paced story of hardship and survival, it also tracks the changing textures and moods of land and water, from the stony monochrome of the bleak Swedish farmland, to the tossing grey-blue of the pitiless ocean, to the bursting colors of the verdant Minnesota river country. In Zandy’s Bride (1974) the spectacular vistas of California’s Big Sur form the backdrop for the developing relationship between a pioneer rancher, Zandy (Gene Hackman), and his mail-order bride, Hannah (Liv Ullmann). Hurricane (1979), shot in Bora Bora, relates the inner turmoil of star-crossed lovers (Mia Farrow and Dayton Ka’ne) to the spectacular elemental fury of a South Seas storm. The Flight of the Eagle pits the fool-hardy ambitions of three Swedish explorers, who were bent on reaching the North Pole by balloon, against the implacable hostilities of the frozen wastes.

At first glance, Troell’s more recent films might seem to indicate new directions. The ironically titled Saganadet (The Fairytale Country, 1988), made for the Swedish Film Institute, is a rather dour, three-hour documentary about contemporary Swedish life. By means of location shooting and numerous interviews—with parliamentary and local politicians, a rural road planner, a plant exterminator, a woodsman, an artist-weaver, etc.—a portrait emerges of a tightly regulated nation where social and technical progress threaten free will and imagination. Il Capitano has a much narrower focus, an account of a real-life murder case that attempts to explain how two youths could murder three people in cold blood.

Yet both share Troell’s concerns with the alienation of characters from the wellsprings of nature and tradition. There is no breathing room in a world cramped by partitions and conformity; there is no place for the independent and heroic gesture in a society where the machine and a welfare bureaucracy discourage initiative and achievement. Loneliness and isolation are the only rewards.

Troell has not been without his detractors. Many critics have justly complained of the inordinate length and plodding pace of works like The New Land, of the unrelieved bleakness of The Flight of the Eagle, and of the long intervals of silence in Zandy’s Bride (indeed, Troell can be the quietest of filmmakers). His preoccupation with landscape photography in Hurricane aroused Penelope Gilliatt’s scorn: “Never has there been so much surf, so much lashing of waves, such a tempest ... and you have never seen so many sunsets or so many pensive wanderings along beaches.” Jon Landau characterized too many of his characters as “rigidly humorless and largely unchanging.” Other attacks single out Troell’s conventional—even old-fashioned—modes of narrative. “He tells a coherent story,” defends Peter Cowie, “when gritty realism is the cameraman’s mode, he persists with poetic imagery. For all this, Jan Troell rides not behind but above his time, resorting to cinema as a means of expressing man’s better gifts.”

His flaws and obsessions notwithstanding, it seems that the persuasive integrity and earnestness that Troell invests in his subjects has been so consistently maintained that it must eventually earn our respect. “He has the sense of the justice owed to people and the homage owed to nature,” writes Pauline Kael. Critic John Simon adds: “You feel you are in the hands of a human being who cares about other human beings, who renders the truths of their lives without rending the veils of their privacy, who has sympathy even for what he deplores.”

—John C. Tibbetts

TRUFFAUT, François

Films as Director:

1955 Une Visite (+ sc, co-ed)
1957 Les Mistons (+ co-sc)
1958 Une Histoire d’eau
1959 Les Quatre Cents Coups (The Four Hundred Blows) (+ sc)
1960 Tirez sur le pianist (Shoot the Piano Player) (+ co-sc)
1961 Jules et Jim (Jules and Jim) (+ co-sc)
1962 “‘Antoine et Colette’” episode of L’Amour a vingt ans (Love at Twenty) (+ sc, role)
1964 La Peau douce (The Soft Skin) (+ co-sc)
1966 Fahrenheit 451 (+ co-sc)
1967 La Mariée était en noir (The Bride Wore Black) (+ co-sc)
1968 Baisers volés (Stolen Kisses) (+ co-sc)
1969 La Sirène du Mississippi (Mississippi Mermaid) (+ sc); L’Enfant sauvage (The Wild Child) (+ co-sc, role as Dr. Jean Hiard)
1970 Domicile conjugal (Bed and Board) (+ co-sc)
François Truffaut

1971  Les Deux Anglaises et le continent (Two English Girls) (+ co-sc)
1972  Une Belle Fille comme moi (Such a Gorgeous Kid like Me) (+ co-sc)
1973  La Nuit américaine (Day for Night) (+ co-sc, role as Ferrand)
1975  L’Histoire d’Adèle H. (The Story of Adele H.) (+ co-sc)
1976  L’Argent de poche (Small Change) (+ co-sc)
1977  L’Homme qui aimait les femmes (The Man Who Loved Women) (+ co-sc)
1978  La Chambre verte (The Green Room) (+ co-sc, role as Julien Davenne)
1979  L’Amour en fuite (Love on the Run) (+ co-sc)
1980  Le Dernier Metro (The Last Metro) (+ sc)
1981  La Femme d’à côté (The Woman Next Door)
1984  Vivement dimanche! (Finally Sunday)

Other Films:

1977  Close Encounters of the Third Kind (Spielberg) (role as French scientist)

Publications

By TRUFFAUT: books—

Ce n’est qu’un début, Paris, 1968.
The Last Metro, New Brunswick, New Jersey, 1985.

By TRUFFAUT: articles—

Interview of Rossellini, with Maurice Scherer, in Film Culture (New York), March/April 1955.
“On Film: Truffaut Interview,” in the New Yorker, 20 February 1960.
“Skeleton Keys,” in Film Culture (New York), Spring 1964.
Interview with Charles Higham, in Action (Los Angeles), January/February 1974.
Interview with A. Gillain, in Wide Angle (Athens, Ohio), vol. 4, no. 4, 1981.
Interview with Marcel Ophuls, in American Film (New York), May 1985.

On TRUFFAUT: books—

On TRUFFAUT: articles—

Burch, Noël, “Qu’est-ce que la Nouvelle Vague?,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Winter 1959.
Shatnoff, Judith, “François Truffaut—The Anarchist Imagination,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1963.
Taylor, Stephen, “After the Nouvelle Vague,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1965.
Klein, Michael, “The Literary Sophistication of François Truffaut,” in Film Comment (New York), Summer 1965.
Braudy, Leo, “Hitchcock, Truffaut, and the Irresponsible Audience,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Summer 1968.

Houston, Beverle, and Marsha Kinder, “Truffaut’s Gorgeous Killers,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Winter 1973/74.

Coffey, B., “Art and Film in François Truffaut’s Jules and Jim and Two English Girls,” in Film Heritage (New York), Spring 1974.

Barbera, Alberto, special issue, in Castoro Cinema (Firenze), no. 27, 1976.

Tintner, A.R., “Truffaut’s La Chambre vert,” in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), vol. 8, no. 2, 1980.

Turner, D., “Made in USA: The American Child in Truffaut’s 400 Blows,” in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), April 1984.

Truffaut Section of Wide Angle (Baltimore), vol. 7, nos. 1/2, 1985.

Jameson, R. T., and others, in Film Comment (New York), January/February 1985.

Desbarats, F., “François Truffaut, ou la communication barré,” in Cahiers de la Cinémathèque (Perpignan), no 54, December 1990.

* François Truffaut was one of five young French film critics, writing for André Bazin’s Cahiers du Cinéma in the early 1950s, who became the leading French filmmakers of their generation. It was Truffaut who first formulated the politique des auteurs, a view of film history and film art that defended those directors who were “true men of the cinema”—Renoir, Vigo, and Tati in France; Hawks, Ford, and Welles in America—rather than those more literary, script-oriented film directors and writers associated with the French “tradition of quality.” Truffaut’s original term and distinctions were subsequently borrowed and translated by later generations of Anglo-American film critics, including Andrew Sarris, Robin Wood, V.F. Perkins, and Dave Kehr. When Truffaut made his first feature in 1959, Les Quatre Cent Coups, he put his ideas of cinema spontaneity into practice with the study of an adolescent, Antoine Doinel, who breaks free from the constrictions of French society to face an uncertain but open future. Since that debut, Truffaut’s career has been dominated by an exploration of the Doinel character’s future (five films) and by the actor (Jean-Pierre Léaud) whom Truffaut discovered to play Antoine. In Truffaut’s 25 years of making films, the director, the Doinel character, and Léaud all grew up together.

The rebellious teenager of Les Quatre Cent Coups becomes a tentative, shy, sexually clumsy suitor in the “Antoine et Colette” episode of Love at Twenty. In Baisers volés, Antoine is older but not much wiser at either love or money making. In Domicile conjugal, Antoine has married but is still on the run toward something else—the exotic lure of other sexual adventures. And in L’amour en fuite, Antoine is still running (running became the essential metaphor for the Doinel character’s existence, beginning with the lengthy running sequence that concludes Les Quatre Cent Coups). Although Antoine is now divorced, the novel which he has finally completed has made his literary reputation. That novel, it turns out, is his life itself, the entire Doinel saga as filmed by Truffaut, and Truffaut fills his films with film clips that are both visual and mental recollections of the entire Doinel cycle. Truffaut deliberately collapses the distinction between written fiction and filmed fiction, between the real life of humans and the fictional life of characters. The collapse seems warranted by the personal and professional connections between Truffaut the director, Doinel the character, and Léaud the actor.

Many of Truffaut’s non-Doinel films are style pieces that similarly explore the boundaries between art and life, film and fiction. The main character of Tirez sur le pianiste tries to turn himself into a fictional character, as does Catherine in Jules et Jim. Both find it difficult to maintain the consistency of fictional characters when faced with the demanding exigencies of real life. La Mariée était en noir was Truffaut’s elegy to Hitchcock, a deliberate style piece in the Hitchcock manner, while Fahrenheit 451, his adaptation of Ray Bradbury’s novel, explores the lack of freedom in a society in which books—especially works of fiction—are burned. Adele H in L’Histoire d’Adele H attempts to convert her passion into a book (her diary), but life can neither requite nor equal her passion; instead, it drives her to madness and a total withdrawal from life into the fantasy of her romantic fiction. In L’Homme qui aimait les femmes, an incurable womanizer translates his desire into a successful novel, but the existence of that work in no way diffuses, alleviates, or sublimates the desire that vivified it. The Green Room is Truffaut’s homage to fiction and the novelist’s craft—a careful, stylish adaption of a Henry James story.

Given his conscious commitment to film and fiction, it is not surprising that Truffaut devoted one of his films to the subject of filmmaking itself. La Nuit américaine is one of the most loving and revealing films about the business of making films, an exuberant illustration of the ways in which films use artifice to capture and convey the illusion of life. This film, in which Truffaut himself plays a film director, is a comically energetic defense of the joys and pains of filmmaking, a deliberate response to the more tortured visions of Fellini’s 8” or Bergman’s Persona. Those Truffaut films not concerned with the subject of art are frequently about education. L’Enfant sauvage explores the beneficial power and effects of civilization on the savage passions of a child who grew up in the forest, apparently raised by beasts. Truffaut again plays a major role in the film (dedicated to Jean-Pierre Léaud), playing a patient scientist who effects the boy’s conversion from savagery to humanity. Like the director he played in La Nuit américaine, Truffaut is the wise and dedicated patriarch, responsible for the well-being of a much larger enterprise. L’Argent de poche examines the child’s life at school and the child’s relationships with adults and other children. As opposed to the imprisoning restrictions which confined children in the world of Les Quarte Cent Coups, the now adult Truffaut realizes that adults—parents and teachers—treat children with far more care, love, and devotion than the children (like the younger, rebellious Truffaut himself) are able to see.

Unlike his friend and contemporary Jean-Luc Godard, Truffaut remained consistently committed to his highly formal themes of art and life, film and fiction, youth and education, and art and education, rather than venturing into radical political critiques of film forms and film imagery. Truffaut seemed to state his position in Le Dernier Métro, his most political film, which examines a theater troupe in Nazified Paris. The film director appeared to confess that, like those actors in that period, he could only continue to make art the way he knew how, that his commitment to formal artistic excellence would eventually serve the political purposes that powerful art always serves, and that for him to betray his own artistic powers for political, programmatic purposes would perhaps lead to his making bad art and bad political statements. In this rededication to artistic form, Truffaut was probably restating his affinity with the Jean Renoir he wrote about for Cahiers du Cinéma. Renoir, like Truffaut, progressed from making more rebellious black-and-white films in his youth to more accepting color films in his maturity; Renoir, like Truffaut, played major roles in several of his own films; Renoir, like Truffaut, believed that conflicting human choices could not be condemned according to facile moral or political formulae; and Renoir, like Truffaut, saw the creation of art (and film art) as a genuinely humane and meaningful response to the potentially chaotic disorder of formless reality. Renoir, however, lived much longer than Truffaut, who died of cancer in 1984 at the height of his powers.

—Gerald Mast
ULMER, Edgar

Nationality: Austrian. Born: Edgar Georg Ulmer in Vienna, 17 September 1904. Education: Studied architecture at Academy of Arts and Sciences, Vienna: studied stage design at Burgtheater, Vienna. Family: Married Shirley Castle, one daughter. Career: Designer for Decla-Bioscope film company, 1918; designer for Max Reinhardt, Vienna, 1919–22; designer for Universal in New York, 1923; returned to Germany as assistant to Murnau, 1924; returned to United States, art director and production assistant at Universal, from 1925; co-directed first film, with Robert Siodmak, 1929; art director at MGM and stage designer for Philadelphia Grand Opera Co., 1930–33; made public health documentaries for minority groups, New York, mid-1930s; director and writer for Producers' Releasing Corporation (PRC), Hollywood, 1942–46; worked in United States, Mexico, Italy, Germany, and Spain, through 1950s. Died: In Woodland Hills, California, 30 September 1972.

Films as Director:

(claimed to have directed 128 films; following titles are reported in current filmographies):

1929 Menschen am Sonntag (People on Sunday) (co-d, co-sc)
1933 Damaged Lives (+ co-sc); Mr. Broadway
1934 The Black Cat (+ co-sc); Thunder over Texas (d as “John Warner”)
1937 Green Fields (co-d)
1938 Natalka Poltavka (+ sc, assoc pr); The Singing Blacksmith (+ pr); Zaporosch Sa Dunayem (Cossacks in Exile; The Cossacks across the Danube)
1939 Die Tlatsche (The Light Ahead) (original title: Fishe da Krin) (+ pr); Moon over Harlem; Amerikaner Schadchen (The Marriage Broker; American Matchmaker); Let My People Live
1940 Cloud in the Sky
1941 Another to Conquer
1942 Tomorrow We Live
1943 My Son, the Hero (+ co-sc); Girls in Chains (+ story); Isle of Forgotten Sins (+ story); Jive Junction
1944 Bluebeard
1945 Strange Illusion (Out of the Night); Club Havana; Detour
1946 The Wife of Monte Cristo (+ co-sc); Her Sister’s Secret; The Strange Woman
1947 Carnegie Hall
1948 Ruthless
1949 I pirati de Capri (Pirates of Capri)
1951 St. Benny the Dip; The Man from Planet X
1952 Babes in Bagdad
1955 Naked Dawn; Murder Is My Beat (Dynamite Anchorage)
1957 The Daughter of Dr. Jekyll; The Perjurer
1960 Hannibal; The Amazing Transparent Man; Beyond the Time Barrier; L’Atlantide (Antinea, L’amante della città Sepolita); Journey beneath the Desert (co-d)
1964 Sette contro la morte (Neunzing Nächte und ein Tag)
1965 The Cavern

Other Films:

1927 Sunrise (Murnau) (asst prod des)
1934 Little Man, What Now? (set design)
1942 Prisoner of Japan (story)
1943 Corregidor (co-sc); Danger! Women at Work (co-story)

Publications

By ULMER: articles—

Interview with Peter Bogdanovich, in Film Culture (New York), no. 58/60, 1974.

On ULMER: books—

Belton, John, Cinema Stylists, Metuchen, New Jersey, 1983.

On ULMER: articles—

Sarris, Andrew, “Esoterica,” in Film Culture (New York), Spring 1963.
Krohn, B., “King of the B’s,” in Film Comment (New York), July/August 1983.
The films of Edgar G. Ulmer have generally been classified as “B” pictures. However, it might be more appropriate to reclassify some of these films as “Z” pictures. On an average, Ulmer’s pictures were filmed on a six-day shooting schedule with budgets as small as $20,000. He often worked without a decent script, adequate sets, or convincing actors. But these hardships did not prevent Ulmer from creating an individual style within his films.

Part of the look of Ulmer’s films was, naturally, a result of their meager budgets. The cast was kept to a minimum, the sets were few and simple, and stock footage helped to keep costs down (even when it did not quite match the rest of the film). The length of the scripts was also kept to a minimum. Most of Ulmer’s films ran only 60 to 70 minutes, and it was not uncommon for his pictures to open upon characters who were not formally introduced. Ulmer often plunged his audience into the middle of the action, which would add to their suspense as the story finally did unfold.

Characters in Ulmer’s films commonly found themselves in strange and distant surroundings. This plight is especially true for the title character of The Man from Planet X. This curious being is stranded on earth (which from his point of view is an alien world) and is at the mercy of the strangers around him. In another example, the Allisons, a young couple on their honeymoon in The Black Cat, find themselves trapped in the futuristic home of the bizarre Mr. Poelzig. They are held against their will with all avenues of escape blocked off. Many of Ulmer’s characters find that they are prisoners. Some of them are innocent, but many times they live in prisons of their own making.

Another theme that is prevalent in Ulmer’s films is fate. His characters rarely have control over their own destiny, an idea verbalized by Al Roberts in Detour, who says, “whichever way you turn, Fate sticks out its foot to trip you.” In The Amazing Transparent Man, a scientist who has been forced to work against his will on experiments with nuclear material explains that he “didn’t do anything by choice.” The Allisons in The Black Cat have no control over their destiny, either—their fate will be determined by the outcome of a game of chess. In most cases the characters in Ulmer’s films find themselves swept away in a series of circumstances that they are unable to stop.

The critical recognition of Ulmer’s work has been a fairly recent “discovery.” Initial reviews of Ulmer’s films (and not all of his films received reviews) were far from complimentary. Part of the reason for their dismissal may have been their exploitative nature. Titles like Girls in Chains and Babes in Bagdad could conceivably have some difficulty finding a respectable niche in the film world. Taken as a whole, however, the work of Edgar Ulmer reveals a personal vision that is, at the very least, different and distinctive from the mainstream of film directors.

—Linda Obalil

VADIM, Roger

Nationality: French. Born: Roger Vadim Plemiannikov in Paris, 26 January 1928. Education: Educated in political science; studied acting with Charles Dullin. Family: Married 1) Brigitte Bardot, 1952 (divorced); 2) Annette Stroyberg, 1958 (divorced), one child; child by Catherine Deneuve; 3) Jane Fonda, 1967 (divorced); 4) Catherine Schneider, 1975 (divorced), one child; 5) Marie-Christine Barrault, 1990. Career: Stage actor, 1944–47; assistant to Marc Allégret on Juliette, 1953, and others; journalist for Paris-Match, and TV director, early 1950s; directed first film, Et... Dieu créa la femme, 1956. Died: 11 February, 2000, in Paris, France, of cancer.

Films as Director:

1956 Et... Dieu créa la femme (And... God Created Woman) (+ co-sc)
1957 Sait-on jamais? (No Sun in Venice) (+ sc)
1958 Les Bijoutiers du clair de lune (Heaven Fell That Night; The Night That Heaven Fell) (+ co-sc)
1959 Les Liaisons dangereuses (+ co-sc)
1960 Et Mourir de plaisir (Blood and Roses) (+ co-sc)
1961 La Bride sur le cou (Please, Not Now!) (co-d, uncredited, co-sc)
1962 “L’Orgueil” (Pride) episode of Les Sept Pêchés capitaux (Seven Deadly Sins) (+ co-sc); Le Repos du guerrier (Warrior’s Rest; Love on a Pillow) (+ co-sc)
1963 Le Vice et la vertu (Vice and Virtue) (+ co-sc, pr); Château en Suede (Natty, Naughty Chateau) (+ co-sc)
1964 La Ronde (Circle of Love) (+ co-sc, co-adapt)
1966 La Curée (The Game Is Over) (+ co-sc, pr)
1968 “Metzengerstein” episode of Histoires extraordinaires (Spirits of the Dead) (+ co-sc); Barbarella (+ co-sc)
1971 Pretty Maids All in a Row
1972 Hellé (+ story)
1973 Don Juan 1973 ou si Don Juan était une femme (Ms. Don Juan; Don Juan, or If Don Juan Were a Woman) (+ co-sc)
1974 La Jeune Fille assassinée (Charlotte) (+ pr, sc, role)
1976 Une Femme fidèle (+ co-sc)
1979 Night Games
1980 The Hot Touch
1981 Art of Deceit
1983 Surprise Party
1983 Come Back
1987 And God Created Woman
1991 Le Fou amoureux (+ sc)
1996 La Nouvelle tribu (series for TV) (+ sc); Mon père avait raison

Publications

By VADIM: books—

By VADIM: articles—

“Pretty Maids,” in Playboy (Chicago), April 1971.

On VADIM: books—

On VADIM: articles—

Burch, Noël, “Qu’est-ce que la Nouvelle Vague?,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Winter 1959.

Obituary, in Maclean’s, 21 February 2000.

* * *

With Et . . . Dieu créa la femme Roger Vadim created the commercial climate which made the nouvelle vague possible. Despite this, his reputation as director has always lagged behind that of a connoisseur of the beautiful women who inhabit his films. His relationships with Brigitte Bardot, Annette Stroyberg, Catherine Deneuve, Jane Fonda, and others established him, in English-speaking countries at least, as the archetypal “French” director. The American retitling of Le Repos du guerrier as Love on a Pillow, and Chateau en Suede as Natty, Naughty Chateau, glumly emphasizes his raffish image.

Vadim claims in his fanciful autobiography that a prostitute provided by producer Raoul Levy to relieve the tedium of screenwriting furnished him with rationale for Bardot’s character in Et . . . Dieu créa la femme—unselfishness. “If she’s not interested in money, people won’t think she’s a whore.” This motive recurs in Vadim’s work, where generous, warm-hearted, and sensual women lavish their favors on indifferent, often evil love objects. Fulfillment comes only with death. In La Jeune Fille assassiné, Vadim even makes death in the throes of orgasm the sole ambition of his heroine, and his first American film, Pretty Maids All in a Row, casts Rock Hudson as an improbable mass-murdering psychiatrist in a girls’ college.

For an artist with a single subject, Vadim has proved remarkably imaginative. Sait-on jamais exploits Venice with style, the Modern Jazz Quartet’s chiming score harmonizing precisely with Vadim’s romantic thriller. His lesbian vampire melodrama, Et mourir de plaisir, is among the lustiest of horror films, enlivened by a clever use of color and a surrealist dream sequence which reminds one that he knew Cocteau and acted in of color and a surrealist dream sequence which reminds one that he knew Cocteau and acted in Et . . . Dieu créa la femme—unselfishness. “If she’s not interested in money, people won’t think she’s a whore.” This motive recurs in Vadim’s work, where generous, warm-hearted, and sensual women lavish their favors on indifferent, often evil love objects. Fulfillment comes only with death. In La Jeune Fille assassiné, Vadim even makes death in the throes of orgasm the sole ambition of his heroine, and his first American film, Pretty Maids All in a Row, casts Rock Hudson as an improbable mass-murdering psychiatrist in a girls’ college.

For an artist with a single subject, Vadim has proved remarkably imaginative. Sait-on jamais exploits Venice with style, the Modern Jazz Quartet’s chiming score harmonizing precisely with Vadim’s romantic thriller. His lesbian vampire melodrama, Et mourir de plaisir, is among the lustiest of horror films, enlivened by a clever use of color and a surrealist dream sequence which reminds one that he knew Cocteau and acted in La Testament d’Orphée. Jane Fonda never looked more beautiful than in the incest drama La Curée, and in Barbarella he turned Jean-Claude Forest’s comic strip into something between Grand Guignol and an erotic tableau vivant. Even his lamentable American re-make of Et . . . Dieu créa la femme transformed Rebecca de Mornay from rural tart into temptress.

Vadim is at his best in the high style, where the material encourages grand gestures. Bardot in Le Repos du guerrier standing like the Winged Victory in a ruined church, face turned into a torrent of wind; Stroyberg in an eighteenth-century white gown gliding through the cypresses of Hadrian’s Villa to Jean Prodmolides’s score of harp and pizzicati strings in Et mourir de plaisir—these are images that briefly transcend the novelettish material from which they spring.

—John Baxter

VANDERBEEK, Stan

Films as Director:

1957 What Who How; Mankinda; Astral Man
1957–58 One and Yet
1958 Ala Mode; Wheeeels No. 1; Visioniii
1959 Wheeeels No. 2; Dance of the Looney Spoons; Science Friction; Achoo Mr. Keroovech; Street Meat (documentary, not completed)
1960 Skulluduggery; Blacks and Whites in Days and Nights
1961 Snapshots of the City
1961–62 Misc. Happenings (documentaries of Klaus Oldenberg happenings); Summit
1964 Breathdeath; Phenomenon No.1
1965 The Human Face Is a Monument; Variations No.5; Feedback
1966 Poem Field No.2
1966 See, Saw, Seens; Poem Field No.1; Man and His World; Panels for the Walls of the World; Poem Field No.5; Free Fall; Spherical Space No.1; The History of Motion in Motion; T.V. Interview; Poem Field No.7
1968 Newsreel of Dreams No.1; Vanderbeekiana; Oh; Super-Imposition; Will 1968–70 Found Film No.1
1969 Newsreel of Dreams No.2
1970 Film Form No.1; Film Form No.2; Transforms
1972 Symmetricks; Videospace; Who Ho Ray No.1; You Do, I Do, We Do
1973 Computer Generation
1977 Color Fields
1978 Euclidean Illusions
1980 Mirrored Reason; Plato’s Cave Inn; Dreaming
1981 After Laughter

Publications

By VANDERBEEK: articles—

“On Science Friction,” in Film Culture (New York), Summer 1961.

“The Cinema Delimina: Films from the Underground,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Summer 1961.

“If the Actor Is the Audience,” in Film Culture (New York), Spring 1962.

“Antidotes for Poisoned Movies,” in Film Culture (New York), Summer 1962.

“Interview: Chapter One,” in Film Culture (New York), no. 35, 1964/65.
As was typical with a great number of experimental filmmakers, Stan Vanderbeek studied painting before actually beginning his film production. Indeed, his earliest films are animated collage pieces which embody his background in graphics (e.g., Breathdeath).

Vanderbeek’s career spanned about a third of a century, a period of almost constant creativity with extraordinary amalgamations of media. As such, it is a difficult career to summarize, especially in light of the fact that no definitive list of his truly countless productions seems to exist. Vanderbeek appeared to exude creations at a rate that escaped even his own cataloguing.

Soon after Vanderbeek’s early animation work, he focused upon a unique multi-projection apparatus of his own design. This “Movie-Drome” (at Stony Point, New York) provided the presentation of a number of “Vortex-Concerts,” prototypes for a satellite-interconnected “Culture Intercom” that might allow better (and quicker) international communication. At the same time, he continued experiments with dance films, paintings, Polaroid photography, architecture, 195-degree cinematography, and intermedia events.

Vanderbeek’s more recent explorations of computer-generated images and video graphics provide a clear contemporary perspective for his career. In addition, they signalled a technostructural metamorphosis which marks the ongoing evolution of that major genre generally known as the “experimental film.” Experimental filmmakers of Vanderbeek’s prestige and prominence have, at times, found the fortune of industry support. In the late 1960s, Vanderbeek came to collaborate with such computer specialists as Ken Knowlton of New Jersey’s Bell Telephone Laboratories. The result was a number of cathode-ray-tube mosaics called Poem Fields. Today these early exercises with computer graphic possibilities still retain aesthetic power as transparent tapestries in electronic metamorphosis. Typically brief, non-narrative and abstract, the various Poem Fields often reveal subtle, stunning mandala patterns, strikingly similar to classic Asian meditative devices with their symmetrical concentricity.

Vanderbeek’s final projects also address electronically constructed imagery. Some of his work (such as Color Fields) employs the same interest in abstraction which characterized Poem Fields. Others (Mirrored Reason, made in video and released in film) are more representational and narrative. Still others (After Laughter) recall the rapidly paced irony that marked Breathdeath and other examples of Vanderbeek’s earliest animation.

This noteworthy quantity, quality, and extraordinary technological diversity of output resulted in exceptional institutional support for Vanderbeek throughout the years. He was artist-in-residence at USC, Colgate, WGBH-TV, and NASA. His work was presented on CBS, ABC, and such CATV showcases as Colgate, WGBH-TV, and NASA. His work was presented on CBS, ABC, and such CATV showcases as Alice, Juliette. Career: Worked as a mime and clown in Belgium’s “Big Flying Circus.” Awards: Student Academy Awards (USA), Honorary Foreign Film Award, for Maedelia la Breche, 1981; Camera d’Or and Young Cinema Award, Cannes Film Festival, Joseph Plateau Award for Best Belgian Director, Flanders International Film Festival, International Fantasy Film Awards for Best Film and Best Screenplay, Fantasporto, European Film Awards for Best Screenwriter and Best Young Film, Cesar Award (France) for Best Foreign Film, BAFTA (UK) Award for Best Film not in English language, all for Toto le Heros (Toto the Hero), 1991; Joseph Plateau Award, Flanders International Film Festival, for Le Huitieme Jour (The Eighth Day), 1996. Address: 1 Rue de l’Augette, 1330 Rixenart, Brussels, Belgium.

VAN DORMAEL, Jaco

Nationality: Belgian. Born: Ixelles, Belgium, 9 February 1957. Education: Studied film at I.N.S.A.S., Brussels, and Louis Lumière School, Paris. Family: Married Laurette Vankeerbergen; children: Alice, Juliette. Career: Worked as a mime and clown in Belgium’s “Big Flying Circus.” Awards: Student Academy Awards (USA), Honorary Foreign Film Award, for Maedelia la Breche, 1981; Camera d’Or and Young Cinema Award, Cannes Film Festival, Joseph Plateau Award for Best Belgian Director, Flanders International Film Festival, International Fantasy Film Awards for Best Film and Best Screenplay, Fantasporto, European Film Awards for Best Screenwriter and Best Young Film, Cesar Award (France) for Best Foreign Film, BAFTA (UK) Award for Best Film not in English language, all for Toto le Heros (Toto the Hero), 1991; Joseph Plateau Award, Flanders International Film Festival, for Le Huitieme Jour (The Eighth Day), 1996. Address: 1 Rue de l’Augette, 1330 Rixenart, Brussels, Belgium.

Films as Director:

1980 Maedelia la Breche
1981 Stade 81
1982 L’Imitateur
1983 Sortie de Secours
1984  E Pericoloso Sporgersi
1985  De Boot
1991  Toto le Heros (Toto the Hero) (+sc)
1995  Lumière and Company (contributing director in series of shorts)
1996  Le Huitième Jour (The Eighth Day) (+sc)
1998  Spotlight on a Massacre: Ten Films against Land Mines (contributing director)

Other Film:

1992  Sur la Terre Comme au Ciel (Between Heaven and Earth) (Hansel) (sc)

Publications

By VAN DOERMAL: books—

On VAN DOERMAL: articles—

‘‘Toto Adds up its Felix Victories,’’ in Hollywood Reporter, 5 January 1991
‘‘Toto le Heros,’’ in Hollywood Reporter, 3 March 1992
‘‘Getting It Half Right,’’ in Time, 3 June 1996
‘‘The Eighth Day,’’ in Hollywood Reporter, 3 March 1997

* * *

There is an essence of joy in Belgian director Jaco Van Dormael’s films. His use of children and child-like characters is both skillful and subtle. The directorial talent displayed in his 1991 film Toto le Heros brought abrupt international attention to his work. Van Dormael’s playfulness may relate to his experiences as a mime and clown for ‘‘The Big Flying Circus’’ in Belgium.

Toto (who likens himself a hero, a savior of righteousness and a crusader for truth) is certain that he was switched at birth with the boy next door, Alfred. While young Toto suffers through a painful childhood, Alfred enjoys wealth, abundance, and happiness. The film moves effortlessly between the past (as Toto the Hero, a boyhood fantasy identity) and present (as an elderly Toto, invoking this ‘‘secret agent’’ inside). Toto craves revenge and moves toward a resolution as he recounts the events of his miserable life. The film propelled Van Dormael into the international spotlight as both a writer and director.

In the wake of this success, Van Dormael participated in the ambitious 1995 project Lumière and Company. This work is actually an anthology of very short works (on average 60–90 seconds) contributed by prominent film directors from all over the world. The magical element in this collection comes from the camera itself: each director used the original Lumière motion picture camera to make his film. At the same time, Van Dormael was at work writing his next major work.

He wanted to make a more linear film than Toto le Heros, one which explored the world through the eyes of a man with Down’s syndrome. Le Huitième Jour (The Eighth Day) accomplishes this with the chance meeting and bizarre interactions between Georges (played brilliantly by Pascal Duquenne) and Harry (an unhappy, divorced businessman portrayed by Daniel Auteuil). Van Dormael wanted to show those very human elements present in Georges which so-called ‘‘normal’’ people don’t have. Van Dormael’s interest in Mongols (as they are called throughout the film) stems from an interest in their ‘‘talent for life, for loving life, that we often lack.’’ He sought to explore the concept of two worlds (that of Georges and that of Harry) existing simultaneously and yet separately.

Le Huitième Jour begins with a delightfully surreal journey depicting God’s creation through the first seven days. We learn at the end of the film that the Eighth Day brought us Georges. What lies between is a well-photographed tale of friendship between two men who share adventures, joys, and sorrows over a period of several days. The film walks a fine line between poignant and parody. The film won several international awards, including dual Best Actor awards at the 1996 Cannes Film Festival for Daniel Auteuil and Pascal Duquenne. The two do share an amazing chemistry on screen, and while their performances merit recognition, Le Huitième Jour relies heavily on conventions found in Hollywood films about the slow-witted. We see allusions to Rain Man, Of Mice and Men, and One Flew over the Cuckoo’s Nest used throughout; the images are charming, but they seem to detract from the originality of the story. Duquenne is a talented actor who has Down’s syndrome himself, and his characterization of Georges is stellar.

Since Le Huitième Jour, Van Dormael has participated in another collaborative piece in the style of Lumière and Company. Spotlight on a Massacre: Ten Films against Land Mines (1998) is a collection of short films that works as an anti-land mine campaign. Individual films in the piece focus on human suffering in the wake of such weapons and make a strong case against their perpetuation.

Van Dormael has used his experiences as a clown to infuse his writing with a playful sensibility that is at once seductive and joyful. Yet his work as a director has continued to evolve in more serious ways as well. His work is of political and historical importance as much as it is a love poem to life.

—Tammy Kinsey

VAN SANT, Gus

Nationality: American.  Born: Louisville, Kentucky, 24 July 1952.  Education: Studied painting, then switched emphasis to film, and graduated from the Rhode Island School of Design.  Career: Began making films using a Super-8 camera, 1964; worked as an assistant to Roger Corman, and made commercials for a New York advertising agency, 1970s-80s; made numerous short films and his first independent feature, Mala Noche, mid-late 1980s; earned acclaim with the independent feature Drugstore Cowboy, 1989; worked on the preproduction of The Mayor of Castro Street, based on Randy Shilts’s book about the murdered gay rights activist/politician Harvey Milk, but left the project; directed video for the rock band Red Hot Chili Peppers.  Awards: Berlin Film Festival Teddy-Best Short Film, for My New Friend, 1984; Los Angeles Film Critics Association Independent/Experimental Film or Video Award, for Mala Noche, 1985; Berlin Film Festival Teddy-Best Short Film, for Five Ways to Kill Yourself, 1987; Best Screenplay Independent Spirit Award, National...
Gus Van Sant

Society of Film Critics Best Screenplay and Best Director, Los Angeles Film Critics Association Best Screenplay, New York Film Critics Circle Best Screenplay, Berlin Film Festival C.I.C.A.E. Award, for Drugstore Cowboy, 1989 Best Screenplay Independent Spirit Award, Deauville Film Festival Critics Award, for My Own Private Idaho, 1991; Oberhausen International Short Film Festival FICC Prize-Honorable Mention, Seattle International Film Festival Golden Space Needle Award, for Ballad of the Skeletons, 1996.

Films as Director:

1984 My New Friend (short)
1985 Mala Noche (+ pr, sc, ed)
1986 Switzerland (short)
1987 Five Ways to Kill Yourself (short); Ken Gets out of Jail (short)
1988 Junior (short)
1989 Drugstore Cowboy (+ co-sc)
1991 My Own Private Idaho (+ sc)
1994 Even Cowgirls Get the Blues (+ sc, exec pr, ed)
1995 To Die For
1996 Ballad of the Skeletons (short)
1997 Good Will Hunting (+ sound re-recording mixer)
1998 Psycho (+ co-pr, ro)
2000 Finding Forrester; Don’t Worry, He Won’t Get Far on Foot; Brokeback Mountain (+ pr)

Other Films:

1995 Kids (Clark) (co-exec-pr)
1999 Speedway Junkie (Perry) (exec pr)

Publications

By VAN SANT: books—

Even Cowgirls Get the Blues/My Own Private Idaho/2 Screenplays in 1 Volume, New York, 1994.
By VAN SANT: articles—

Interview in Film Threat (Beverly Hills), November 1991.

"Gay Film Vagen," an interview with P. Loewe, in Chaplin (Stockholm), vol. 33, no. 6, 1991/92.

On VAN SANT: articles—

Lyons, Donald, "Gus Van Sant: Lawless as a Snowflake, Simple as Grass," in Film Comment (New York), September/October 1991.

* * *

In the late 1980s, Gus Van Sant commenced establishing himself as one of America’s leading and most influential independent filmmakers. His films, often peopleed with characters scuffling along on the fringes of American society, explore human feelings and frailties in often-understated fashion, and for the most part, Van Sant has proven himself a filmmaker with a deft touch. However, after the success of Drugstore Cowboy and My Own Private Idaho, some observers were concerned that Van Sant’s apparent predilection for examining the lives of society’s outcasts might blunt and ultimately limit his vision. The release of To Die For in 1995, however, did much to silence such voices. The wicked black comedy—a skillfully rendered and executed study of a woman obsessed with stardom—indicated that Van Sant’s body of work is in no danger of degenerating into formula.

Van Sant’s first works, created in the mid-1980s, were a series of short and experimental films. His initial feature, shot on a shoestring, won near-unanimous accolades. His films, often populated with characters scuffling along on the fringes of American society, explore human feelings and frailties in often-understated fashion, and for the most part, Van Sant has proven himself a filmmaker with a deft touch. However, after the success of Drugstore Cowboy and My Own Private Idaho, some observers were concerned that Van Sant’s apparent predilection for examining the lives of society’s outcasts might blunt and ultimately limit his vision. The release of To Die For in 1995, however, did much to silence such voices. The wicked black comedy—a skillfully rendered and executed study of a woman obsessed with stardom—indicated that Van Sant’s body of work is in no danger of degenerating into formula.

Two years later Van Sant released My Own Private Idaho, another story of American misfits on the margins of society. The quirky film concerns two male street hustlers, Mike and Scott (played by River Phoenix and Keanu Reeves), who embark on a journey to find Mike’s long-lost mother. Together, Van Sant and Phoenix create a memorable portrait of Mike, a narcopleptic who longs for love (My Own Private Idaho), a bold, sometimes dreamlike tale, further cemented Van Sant’s reputation.

In 1994, Van Sant released Even Cowgirls Get the Blues, a film based on Tom Robbins’s cult-classic book. Cowgirls was a mess in nearly every respect. A poorly executed and disappointing endeavor, it quickly disappeared from the nation’s cinema houses. Van Sant recovered nicely, though, with To Die For, an adaptation of a novel by Joyce Maynard. Blessed with an inspired performance by Nicole Kidman in the lead role, the film is a withering black comedy that aims venomous barbs at America’s television media and star-obsessed culture with deadly accuracy.

Van Sant then scored big with Good Will Hunting, one of the smash hits of 1997. This wildly popular story of a bunch of working-class Boston buddies, one of whom is a certifiable genius, earned accolades for the filmmaker, an overdue Oscar for Robin Williams (playing a psychologist), and fire-hot Hollywood commodity status for co-stars/co-scripters Matt Damon and Ben Affleck. Even though... the film’s title character, in his alienation and outsider status, is a typical Van Sant hero, the conventional tone of Good Will Hunting made it the director’s most mainstream film to date. Unfortunately, his follow-up was a film that rivaled Even Cowgirls Get the Blues for its mediocrity: a needless and ill- advised scene-by-scene remake of Hitchcock’s Psycho.

—Kevin Hillstrom, updated by Rob Edelman

VARDA, Agnès

Nationality: Belgian. Born: Brussels, 30 May 1928. Education: Studied literature and psychology at the Sorbonne, Paris; studied art history at the Ecole du Louvre; studied photography at night school. Family: Married director Jacques Demy, one son, one daughter. Career: Stage photographer for Theatre Festival of Avignon, then for Theatre National Populaire, Paris, Jean Vilar; directed first film, 1954; accompanied Chris Marker to China as advisor for Dimanche à Pekin, 1955; directed two shorts in U.S., 1968; founded production company Ciné-Tamaris, 1977. Awards: Prix Méliès for Cléo de 5 à 7, 1961; Bronze Lion, Venice Festival, for Salut les Cubains (Salute to Cuba) (+ text) (doc short) 1965; Le Bonheur (+ sc) 1966; Les Créatures 1967; Uncle Yanco; episode of Loin du Vietnam (Far from Vietnam) 1968; Black Panthers (Huey) (doc) 1969; Lion’s Love (+ pr) 1970; Nausicaa (for TV) 1975; Daguerrotypes (+ pr); Réponses de femmes (8mm) 1977; L’Une chante l’autre pas (One Sings, the Other Doesn’t) 1979; Mur Mars (Wall Walls; Mural Murals) (+ pr) 1981; Documenteur: An Emotion Picture (+ pr) 1983; Ulysse 1984; Les Dites cariatides; Sept P., Cuis., S. de B., . . . a saisir 1986; Vagabonde (Sans Toit ni loi.; Vagabond) 1988; Kung Fu Master (Don’t Say It); Jane B. par Agnès V. (doc) (appearance) 1991; Jacquot de Nantes (+ pr, sc) 1993; Des demoiselles ont en 25 ans (The Young Girls Turn 25) (doc) 1994; Les cent et une nuits (A Hundred and One Nights) (+ sc); L’universe de Jacques Demy (The World of Jacques Demy) (doc) 2000; Les Glaneurs et la glaneuse (Gleaners and I) (+ sc, ed, role as herself)

Films as Director:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1954</td>
<td>La Pointe courte (+ pr, sc)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1957</td>
<td>O saisons, o châteaux</td>
<td>(doc short)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1958</td>
<td>L’Opéra-Mouffe</td>
<td>(short); Du côté de la Côte (short)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1961</td>
<td>Cléo de cinq à sept (+ sc)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>Salut les Cubains (Salute to Cuba) (+ text) (doc short)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1965</td>
<td>Le Bonheur (+ sc)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1966</td>
<td>Les Créatures</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1967</td>
<td>Uncle Yanco; episode of Loin du Vietnam (Far from Vietnam)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1968</td>
<td>Black Panthers (Huey) (doc)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1969</td>
<td>Lion’s Love (+ pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1970</td>
<td>Nausicaa (for TV)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1975</td>
<td>Daguerrotypes (+ pr); Réponses de femmes (8mm)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1977</td>
<td>L’Une chante l’autre pas (One Sings, the Other Doesn’t)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1979</td>
<td>Mur Mars (Wall Walls; Mural Murals) (+ pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1981</td>
<td>Documenteur: An Emotion Picture (+ pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1983</td>
<td>Ulysse</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1984</td>
<td>Les Dites cariatides; Sept P., Cuis., S. de B., . . . a saisir</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1986</td>
<td>Vagabonde (Sans Toit ni loi.; Vagabond)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1988</td>
<td>Kung Fu Master (Don’t Say It); Jane B. par Agnès V. (doc) (appearance)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Other Films:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1971</td>
<td>Last Tango in Paris (Bertolucci) (co-dialogue)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1978</td>
<td>Lady Oscar (Demy) (pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

By VARDA: book—

By VARDA: articles—

“Pasolini—Varda—Allio—Sarris—Michelson,” in Film Culture (New York), Fall 1966.

“Mother of the New Wave,” an interview with J. Levitin, in Women and Film (Santa Monica), vol. 1, no. 5-6, 1974.

“One Sings, the Other Doesn’t,” an interview with R. McCormick, in Cineaste (New York), Winter 1977/78.

Interview with Barbara Quart, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Winter 1986/1987.

Interview with F. Audé, in Positif (Paris), March 1988.

On VARDA: books—

On VARDA: articles—

Film en Télévisie + Video (Brussels), February 1996.

* * *

Agnès Varda’s startlingly individualistic films have earned her the title “grandmother of the New Wave” of French filmmaking. Her statement that a filmmaker must exercise as much freedom as a novelist became a mandate for New Wave directors, especially Chris Marker and Alain Resnais. Varda’s first film, La Pointe courte, edited by Resnais, is regarded, as Georges Sadoul affirms, as “the first film of the French nouvelle vague. Its interplay between conscience, emotions, and the real world make it a direct antecedent of Hiroshima, mon amour.”

The use of doubling, and twin story lines; the personification of objects; the artistic determination of cinematic composition, color, texture, form, and time; and the correlation of individual subjectivity to societal objectivity to depict socio-political issues are denominators of Varda’s films, which she writes, produces, and directs.

After La Pointe courte Varda made three documentaries in 1957–58. The best of these was L’Opéra-Mouffe, portraying the Mouffetard district of Paris. Segments of the film are prefaced by handwritten intertitles, a literary element Varda is fond of using. In 1961–62, Varda began but did not complete two film projects: La Cocotte d’azur et Melangite. Her next film, Cléo de cinq à sept, records the time a pop singer waits for results of her exam for cancer. Varda used physical time in Cléo: events happening at the same tempo as they would in actual life. The film is divided into chapters, using Tarot cards which symbolize fate. Varda next photographed 4,000 still photos of Castro’s revolution-in-progress, resulting in Salute to Cuba. Le Bonheur is considered Varda’s most stunning and controversial achievement. Critics were puzzled and pleased. Of her first color film, Varda says it was “essentially a pursuit of the tempo as they would in actual life. The film is divided into chapters, using Tarot cards which symbolize fate. Varda next photographed 4,000 still photos of Castro’s revolution-in-progress, resulting in Salute to Cuba. Le Bonheur is considered Varda’s most stunning and controversial achievement. Critics were puzzled and pleased. Of her first color film, Varda says it was “essentially a pursuit of the palette . . . Psychology takes first place.” A young carpenter lives with his wife and children. Then he takes a mistress; when his wife drowns, his mistress takes her place. The film was commended for its texture, form, and time; and the correlation of individual subjectivity to societal objectivity to depict socio-political issues are denominators of Varda’s films, which she writes, produces, and directs.

After La Pointe courte Varda made three documentaries in 1957–58. The best of these was L’Opéra-Mouffe, portraying the Mouffetard district of Paris. Segments of the film are prefaced by handwritten intertitles, a literary element Varda is fond of using. In 1961–62, Varda began but did not complete two film projects: La Cocotte d’azur et Melangite. Her next film, Cléo de cinq à sept, records the time a pop singer waits for results of her exam for cancer. Varda used physical time in Cléo: events happening at the same tempo as they would in actual life. The film is divided into chapters, using Tarot cards which symbolize fate. Varda next photographed 4,000 still photos of Castro’s revolution-in-progress, resulting in Salute to Cuba. Le Bonheur is considered Varda’s most stunning and controversial achievement. Critics were puzzled and pleased. Of her first color film, Varda says it was “essentially a pursuit of the palette . . . Psychology takes first place.” A young carpenter lives with his wife and children. Then he takes a mistress; when his wife drowns, his mistress takes her place. The film was commended for its superb visual beauties, the use of narrative in le nouveau roman literary pattern, and its tonal contrasts and spatial configurations. Critics continue to debate the film’s theme.

Elisa is an essay portraying authors Elsa Triolet and her husband Louis Aragon. Les Créatures uses a black and white with red color scheme in a fantasy-thriller utilizing an inside-outside plot that mingles real and unreal events. As in La Pointe courte, a young couple retreat to a rural locale. The pregnant wife is mute, due to an accident. Her husband is writing a book. He meets a recluse who operates a machine forcing people to behave as his or her subconscious would dictate. The wife gives birth, regaining her speech. Visiting the United States, Varda and her husband Jacques Demy each made a film. Varda honored her uncle Janco in the film so named. The Black Panthers (or Huey) followed. Both documentaries were shown at the London Film Festival in 1968. She next directed a segment of the antiwar short Far from Vietnam. Using an American setting and an English-speaking cast, including the co-authors of the musical Hair, Varda made Lions Love in Hollywood. This jigsaw-puzzle work includes a fake suicide and images of a TV set reporting Robert Kennedy’s assassination. G. Roy Levin declared that it was hard to distinguish between the actual and the invented film realities. Naasicaa deals with Greeks living in France. Made for television, it was not shown, Varda says, because it was against military-ruled Greece.

In 1971, Varda helped write the script for Last Tango in Paris. Varda’s involvement in the women’s movement began about 1972; a film dealing with feminist issues, Réponses de femmes, has yet to be shown. Made for German television, Daguerréotypes has no cast. Varda filmed the residents and shops of the Rue Daguerre, a tribute to L. J. M. Daguerre.

In 1977, Varda made One Sings, the Other Doesn’t and established her own company, Ciné-Tamaris, to finance it. This “family” of workers created the film. Chronicling the friendship of two women over fifteen years, it earned mixed reviews, some referring to it as feminist propaganda or as sentimental syrup. But Varda, narrating the film and writing the song lyrics, does not impose her views. In One Sings, she wanted to portray the happiness of being a woman, she says.

Easily Varda’s most potent film of the 1980s, and one of the best of her career, is Vagabond, an evocative drama about the death and life of a young woman, Mona (Sandrine Bonnaire). She is an ex-secretary who has chosen to become a drifter, and her fate is apparent at the outset. As the film begins, Mona has died. Her frost-bitten corpse is seen in a ditch. Her body is claimed by no one, and she is laid to rest in a potter’s field. As Vagabond unfolds, Varda explores Mona’s identity as she wanders through the rural French countryside hitching rides and begging for the necessities that will sustain her. The scenario also spotlights the manner in which she impacts on those she meets: truck drivers; a gas station owner and his son; a vineyard worker; a professor-researcher; and other, fellow drifters. Varda constructs the film as a series of sequences, some comprised of a single shot lasting several seconds, in which Mona passes through the lives of these people. The result is an eloquent film about one average, ill-fated young woman and the choices she makes, as well as a meditation on chance meetings and missed opportunities. On a much broader level, the film serves as an allegory of the travails a woman must face if she desires to completely liberate herself from the shackles of society.

Varda’s most notable recent films have been valentines to her late husband, filmmaker Jacques Demy. The Young Girls Turn 25 is a nostalgia piece about the filming of Demy’s The Young Girls of Rochefort; The World of Jacques Demy is an up-close-and-personal documentary-biography consisting of interviews and clips from Demy’s films.

A third title, Jacquot de Nantes, was the most widely seen. It is an exquisite film: a penetrating, heart-rending account of the measure of a man’s life, with Varda moving between sequences of Demy in conversation, filmed in extreme close-up; clips from his films; and a re-creation of his childhood in Nantes and the manner in which he developed a passion for cinema. Varda illustrates how Demy’s life and world view impacted on his films; for example, his hatred of violence, which is ever so apparent in his films, was forged by his memories of Nantes being bombed during World War II. But Jacquot de Nantes (which was conceived prior to Demy’s death) is most effective as a tender love letter from one life partner to another. Varda visually evokes her feeling toward her departed mate in one of the film’s opening shots. She pans her camera across a watercolor, whose composition is that of a nude woman and man who are holding hands. With over three decades of filmmaking experience, Varda’s reputation as a filmmaker dazzles and endures.

—Louise Heck-Rabi, updated by Rob Edelman

---

VERHOEVEN, Paul

Nationality: Dutch. Born: Amsterdam, Netherlands, 1938. Education: Ph.D. in mathematics and physics, University of Leiden. Military Service: Royal Dutch Navy. Career: Documentary and feature film writer and director. Awards: Best Foreign Language Film, Los Angeles Film Critics Association, for Soldier of Orange, 1979; Best Foreign Language Film, Los Angeles Film Critics, International Award, Toronto Film Festival, and Jury Prize, Avoriaz, for The Fourth Man, 1979. Agent: Marion Rosenberg, 8428 Melrose Place, Los Angeles, CA 90069, U.S.A.

Films as Director:

1960 A Lizard Too Much (Een Hagedis Teveel)
1963 Let’s Have a Party (Feest)
1966 The Dutch Marine Corps (Hets Korps Mariniers)
1971 Business Is Business (Wat Zein Ik)
1973 Turkish Delight (Een Hagedis Teveel)
1975 Cathy Tippel (Keejte Tippel)
1979 The Fourth Man (De Vierde Man); Soldier of Orange (+ sc)
1980 Spetters
1985 Flesh and Blood (+ sc)
1987 Robocop
1990 Total Recall
1992 Basic Instinct
1995 Showgirls
1997 Starship Troopers
2000 Hollow Man

Publications

By VERHOEVEN: book—

Paul Verhoeven

By VERHOEVEN: articles—

On VERHOEVEN: books—

On VERHOEVEN: articles—

Baron, David, “Total Director Recalls His Troubles at Home,” in Times-Picayune, 9 June 1990.

“Special Issue,” Post Script (Commerce), Summer 1993.
Bond, J., “Basil’s Battle of the Bugs,” in Film Score Monthly, no. 8, 1997.
Persons, D., in Cinefantastique (Forest Park), no. 8, 1997.

* * *

Paul Verhoeven, a director of international acclaim who has achieved both critical and commercial success, is also one of Hollywood’s most controversial. His films, characterized stylistically by his use of deep focus, Christian iconography, and sensuous mise en scène, are perhaps better known for their graphic representations of violence and sexuality.

Verhoeven began his filmmaking career as a director of short subjects and, while serving with the Royal Dutch Navy, documentaries. After returning to civilian life, he continued to work with both fiction and documentary forms, expanding his scope to television. Though his first feature-length motion picture, Business Is Business (1971), was a commercial success, Verhoeven did not receive international attention until the release of his second feature, Turkish Delight (1973).

Nominated for an Oscar for Best Foreign-Language Film by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, Turkish Delight not only established Verhoeven as a skilled director, it also began his association with films of explicit sexual content. He continued to receive international critical acclaim with the release of Soldier of Orange (1979), which was nominated for a Golden Globe Award and was named Best Foreign-Language Film by the Los Angeles Film Critics Association.

Graphic acts of sex and violence were also integral to his two subsequent films: Spetters (1980), a film about teenage alienation in Holland; and The Fourth Man (1984), winner of the Los Angeles Film Critics Award for Best Foreign-Language Film, the Toronto Film Festival’s International Award, and the Jury Prize at Avoriaz.

Controversy surrounding Verhoeven’s work became more heated with his move to the United States in 1986. His first American feature, Flesh and Blood, started a long-running battle between the director and Jack Valenti’s Motion Picture Association of America (MPAA) rating authority. Flesh and Blood’s brutal depictions of sixteenth-century battles and candid sex scenes began a battle over ratings that would continue through Verhoeven’s next three features.

Considered one of the most violent films of 1987, Robocop, a post-modernist blend of science fiction, action-adventure, and the Western, is often viewed as a critique of corporate and consumer capitalism. Verhoeven’s subsequent film, Total Recall (1990), starring Arnold Schwarzenegger, is one of the most expensive feature films ever produced. The negative cost and worldwide marketing budget has been estimated to be over $100 million. Both these films were given the highly restrictive rating of “X”—prohibited to viewers under the age of seventeen—due to what was judged to be excessive violence. The films were then re-edited to meet the requirements of the “R” rating—under seventeen admitted with the accompaniment of an adult.

Perhaps the most controversial film of Verhoeven’s career is Basic Instinct, released in 1992. The story, with a $3 million script written by Joe Eszterhas, concerned a bi-sexual woman suspected of several murders who engages in a sexual relationship with the male police detective investigating the crimes. The MPAA again found Verhoeven’s work problematic on the grounds of both sex and violence. Basic Instinct was only the second release from a major studio to receive a rating of “NC-17”—no children under seventeen admitted (the first was Henry and June, directed by Philip Kaufman). Like the X, which was abolished in 1990, an NC-17 rating threatens the economic viability of a motion picture at the box office. Many theaters refuse to screen the films, community presses and television stations may reject advertisements, and some video rental outlets will not carry films thus rated. Again, the film was cut to meet the standards of an R rating.

In addition to the ratings controversy, the film was protested by several national gay and lesbian organizations for its stereotypical representations of lesbians and bi-sexuals. The film was criticized because, like many films of the period, it depicted sexual relations outside of the traditional heterosexual marriage as excessive and dangerous, linking homosexuality with violence.

Verhoeven was reunited with the creative team behind the commercially successful Basic Instinct in 1995 with the production of Showgirls. It was a landmark film, as Verhoeven became the first director in the United States hired by a major motion picture studio to deliver a film without the obligation of achieving an R rating. Showgirls was released with an NC-17 rating and generated considerable interest, but generally negative reviews.

—Frances Gateward

VERTOV, Dziga

FILMS AS DIRECTOR:

1918–19 Kino-Nedelia (Weekly Reels) series, no. 1–43 (co-d; according to Sadoul, he did not take part in the production of nos. 38–42)
1919 Godovshchina revoliutsiya (Anniversary of the Revolution) (+ ed); Protess Mironova (The Trial of Mironov); Vekrytie moschei Sergeia Radonezhskego (Exhumation of the Remains of Sergius of Radonezh)
1920 Boi pod Tsaritsinom (Battle for Tsaritsin) (+ ed); Vserusski starets Kalinin (All Russian Elder Kalinin); Instruktorii Parokhud “Krasnaia Zvezda” (Instructional Steamer “Red Star”)
1921 Agitoeozd VTsiK (The VTIIK Train; Agit-Train of the Central Committee)
1922 Istoriiia grazhdenskoi voini (History of the Civil War) (+ ed); Protess Eserov (Trial of the Social Revolutionaries); Univermag (Department Store)
1922–23 Kino-Pravda (Cinema-Truth; Film-Truth) series, nos. 1–23
1923–25 Goskinokalender series, nos. 1–53; Svodovia (Today)
1924 Sovetskie igrashki (Soviet Toys); Iumoreski (Humoresques); Daesh vozak (Give Us Air); Khronika-molniya (Newsreel-Lightning); Kino-glaz (Kino-Eye)
1925 Zagranichnii pokhod sudov Baltiiskogo flota kreisere “Aurora” i uchebogo sudna “Komssomolts,” August 8, 1925 (The Seventh Anniversary of the Red Army)
Dziga Vertov

1926  Shagai, Soviet! (Stride, Soviet!); Shestaya chast’ mira (A Sixth of the World)
1928  Odinnadtsatii (The Eleventh Year)
1929  Chełovek s kinoaparatom (The Man with a Movie Camera)
1931  Entuziazm: Sinfonia Donbassa (Enthusiasm: Symphony of the Don Basin)
1934  Tri pensi o Lenine (Three Songs of Lenin)
1937  Kolibel ’naya (Lullaby) (+ narration); Pamyati Sergo Ordzhonikidze (In Memory of Sergo Ordzhonikidze); Sergo Ordzhonikidze (co-d)
1938  Slava Sovetskym Geroiniam (Famous Soviet Heroes); Tri geroini (Three Heroines) (+ co-sc)
1941  Krov’za krov’, smert’za smert’: slodetaniya Nemetsko-Fashistkih zakhtatchikov na territorii C.C.C.P. me ne zabudem (Blood for Blood, Death for Death); Soiuzkinozhurnal No. 77; Soiuzkinozhurnal No. 87
1943  Tebe, Front: Kazakhstan Front (For You at the Front: The Kazakhstan Front)
1944  V gorakh Ala-Tau (In the Mountains of Ala-Tau); Kliatva molodikh (Youth’s Oath; The Oath of Youth)
1944–54  Novosti dnia series (contributed various issues through 1954)

Publications

By VERTOV: books—

By VERTOV: articles—

“Iz rabochikh tetradei Dziga Vertov,” in Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), no. 4, 1957.
“Vespominaia o s’emkakh V.I. Lenin,” in Iz Istorii Kino (Moscow), no. 2, 1959.
"Doklad na pervoi vsesoyuznoi . . . ," in Iz Istorii Kino (Moscow), no. 8, 1971.
Various articles in Film Comment (New York), Spring 1972.
"Dak rodilsja i rasvivalsfa Kinoglaz," in Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), February 1986.

On VERTOV: books—

Bryher, Winnifred, Film Problems of Soviet Russia, Terrutent, Switzerland, 1929.
Lozowick, Louis, Joseph Freeman, and Joshua Kunitz, Voices of October: Art and Literature in Soviet Russia, New York, 1930.
Geduld, Harry, editor, Film Makers on Filmmaking, Bloomington, Indiana, 1967.

On VERTOV: articles—

Hughes, Pennethorne, "Vertov ad Absurdum," in Close-Up (London), September 1932.
Weinberg, Herman G., "The Man with the Movie Camera," in Film Comment (New York), Fall 1966.

Dziga Vertov, pioneer Soviet documentarian, was born Denis Arkadievitch Kaufman. He and two younger brothers, Mikhail and Boris, were sons of a librarian in the Polish city of Byalistok, which at the time was within the Tsarist empire. When World War I broke out, the parents took the family to what seemed the comparative safety of Petrograd (St. Petersburg was renamed to expunge the Germanic link). When the Bolshevik revolution began, Denis, who was twenty-one, and Mikhail, who was nineteen, became involved. Denis volunteered to the cinema committee and became a newsreel worker. Soon he was editing footage of revolutionary upheaval and the struggles against American, British, French, and Japanese intervention forces. His hastily assembled reels went out as war reports and morale boosters. He became known as Dziga Vertov, a name that suggested a spinning top and a choice that was perhaps meant to convey perpetual motion. The newsreel, titled Kino-Nedelia (Film Weekly), continued until the end of the hostilities in 1920. Vertov also used selected footage for the multi-reel Godovshchina revoliutsiva (Anniversary of the Civil War) and other compilations.

Vertov hoped to launch a more ambitious series of film reports on the building of a new society, but a period of frustration followed. A new economic policy, introduced as a temporary measure, permitted limited private enterprise to stimulate the prostrate economy. Cinemas, which were allowed to import foreign features, were soon filled with old American, German, French, and English films. An outraged Vertov turned into a polemictic, a writer of fiery manifestos. Addressing the film world, he wrote: "Art works of pre-revolutionary days surround you like icons and still command your prayerful emotions. Foreign lands abet you in your confusion, sending into the new Russia the living corpses of movie dramas garbed in splendid technological dressing." He tended to look on these films, and even on fiction films in general, as dangerous corrupting influences, another "opium of the people." He urged producers to "come to life."

His vitriol won Vertov enemies in the film world, but he also had support in high places. Early in 1922 Lenin is said to have told his Comissar of Education, Anatoli Lunacharsky, "Of all the arts, for us film is the most important." Lenin emphasized newsreels and proclaimed a "Leninist film-proportion": along with fiction, film programs should include material reflecting "Soviet reality." All this enabled Vertov to launch, in May 1922, the famous Kino-Pravda (Film-Truth), which continued as an official monthly release until 1925. His wife, Elizoveta Svilova, became film editor. Mikhail Kaufman gave up a planned law career to become his brother's chief cameraman.

The Kino-Pravda group scorned prepared scenarios. Vertov outlined ideas, but left wide latitude to Mikhail and other cameramen. Sallying forth with cameras, they caught moments when a Moscow trolley line, long defunct in torn-up streets, was finally put back into action. Army tanks, used as tractors, were seen leveling an area for an airport. They shot footage of the staff of a children's hospital as it tried to save war-starved waifs. A travelling film team was seen arriving in a town, unpacking gear, and preparing an outdoor showing—of Kino-Pravda. The reels were always composed of "fragments of actuality," but Vertov also put emphasis on their provocative juxtaposition. Superimpositions, split screens, slowed or speeded motion could play a part in this. If the fragments were "truths," the manipulations were intended to bring out other "truths"—relationships and meanings.

For a time the Kino-Pravda releases were virtually the only item in cinema programs that touched the historic movement, and they therefore had a wide impact. Footage was from time to time reused in combination with new footage in feature documentaries. Among the most successful was Shestaya chast' mira (One Sixth of the World), in which Vertov made impressive use of subtitles. Short, intermittent subtitles formed a continuing apostrophe addressing the people of the Soviet Union. "You in the small villages...You in the tundra...You on the ocean." Having established, via footage and words, a vast geographic dispersion, the catalog turned to nationalities, "You Uzbeks...You Kalmyks." Then it addressed occupations, age groups, sexes. The continuing sentence went on for minutes, then ended with, "You are the owners of one sixth of the world." The incantation style, reminiscent of Walt Whitman—who was much admired by Vertov—continued throughout the film, projecting the destiny foreseen for the "owners." To men and women with only a dim awareness of the scope and resources of their land, the film must indeed have been a prideful pageant.

Vertov's career gradually became clouded, especially in the Stalin years. His aversion to detailed scenarios, which he said were inapplicable to reportage documentaries, marked him as "anti-planning." He agreed to write "analyses" of what he had in mind, but his proposals were often rejected. Articulated social doctrine was increasingly mandatory; experiments in form were decried. Ironically, Vertov remains best known for one of his most experimental films, Chelovek s kinoapparatom (Man with a Movie Camera). Featuring Mikhail in action, and intended to demonstrate the role of the cameraman in showing "Soviet reality," it also became an anthology of film devices and tricks. Eisenstein, usually a Vertov supporter, criticized it for "unmotivated camera mischief" and even "formalism."

During the following years Vertov and Kaufman worked in the Ukraine studios, apparently a reflection of disfavor in Moscow. But in the Ukraine Vertov created one of the most inventive of early sound films, Entuziazm: Simfonia Donbassa (Enthusiasm: Symphony of the Don Basin), a virtuosic exploration of the possibilities of nonsynchronous sound. Another such exploration was the moving Tri pesni O Lenine (Three Songs about Lenin), which utilized the precious fragments of Lenin footage. But Vertov had lost standing. In his final years he was again a newsreel worker, arriving and leaving the job on schedule, no longer writing manifestos.

Vertov's ideas were, however, echoed in later years in cinéma vérité, the movement of the 1960s named after Vertov's Kino-Pravda. The 1960s and 1970s saw an international revival of interest in Vertov. This revival included rehabilitation of his reputation in the Soviet Union, with retrospectives of his films, biographical works, and publication of selections from Vertov's journals, manifestos, and other writings.

—Erik Barnouw

VIDOR, King

Nationality: American. Born: King Walls Vidor in Galveston, Texas, 8 February 1894. Education: Attended Peacock Military Academy, San Antonio, Texas. Family: Married 1) actress Florence Arto, 1915 (divorced 1924), one daughter; 2) actress Eleanor Boardman, 1926 (divorced 1932); 3) Elizabeth Hall, 1932 (died 1973). Career: Ticket-taker and part-time projectionist in Galveston’s first movie house, 1909–10; amateur newsreel photographer, 1910–15; drove to Hollywood in Model T, financed trip by shooting footage for Ford’s advertising newsreel, 1915; worked at various jobs in film industry, then directed first feature, The Turn in the Road, 1919; hired by 1st National, built studio called Vidor Village, 1920 (shut down, 1922); director for Goldwyn Studios, 1923, later absorbed by MGM; taught graduate course in cinema, University of California, Los Angeles, 1960s. Awards: Best Direction, Venice Festival, for Wedding Night, 1935; Special Prize, Edinburgh Festival, 1964; Honorary Academy Award, 1978. Died: Of heart failure, in California, 1 November 1982.
Films as Director:

1919  The Turn in the Road (+ sc); Better Times (+ sc); The Other Half (+ sc); Poor Relations (+ sc)
1920  The Jack Knife Man (+ pr, co-sc); The Family Honor (+ co-pr); The Sky Pilot; Love Never Dies (+ co-pr)
1921  Conquering the Woman (+ pr); Woman, Wake Up (+ pr); The Real Adventure (+ pr); Dusk to Dawn (+ pr)
1922  Peg-o-My-Heart; The Woman of Bronze; Three Wise Fools (+ co-sc)
1924  Wild Oranges (+ co-sc); Happiness; Wine of Youth; His Hour
1925  Wife of the Centaur; Proud Flesh; The Big Parade
1926  La Bohème (+ pr); Bardelys, The Magnificent (+ pr)
1928  The Crowd (+ co-sc); The Patsy; Show People
1929  Hallelujah
1930  Not So Dumb; Billy the Kid
1931  Street Scene; The Champ
1932  Bird of Paradise; Cynara
1933  Stranger’s Return
1934  Our Daily Bread (+ pr, co-sc)
1935  Wedding Night; So Red the Rose
1936  The Texas Rangers (+ pr, co-sc)
1937  Stella Dallas
1938  The Citadel (+ pr)
1940  Northwest Passage (+ pr); Comrade X (+ pr)
1941  H.M. Pulpam, Esq. (+ pr, co-sc)
1944  American Romance (+ pr, co-sc)

1946  Duel in the Sun
1949  The Fountainhead; Beyond the Forest
1951  Lightning Strikes Twice
1952  Ruby Gentry (+ co-pr)
1955  Man without a Star
1956  War and Peace (+ co-sc)
1959  Solomon and Sheba

Publications

By VIDOR: books—

A Tree Is a Tree, New York, 1953; reprinted 1977.

By VIDOR: articles—

“Easy Steps to Success,” in Motion Picture Classic (New York), August 1919.
Interview with M. Cheatham, in Motion Picture Classic (New York), June 1928.
“Me . . . and My Spectacle,” in Films and Filming (London), October 1959.
Interview with V. F. Perkins and Mark Shivas, in Movie (London), July/August 1963.

On VIDOR: books—

On Vidor: articles—

Brownlow, Kevin, “King Vidor,” in Film (London), Winter 1962.

Higham, C., “King Vidor,” in Film Heritage (Dayton, Ohio), Summer 1966.

“King Vidor at NYU: Discussion,” in Cineaste (New York), Spring 1968.

Durgnat, Raymond, “King Vidor,” in two parts, in Film Comment (New York), July/August and September/October 1973.

Lang, J., “Hommage à King Vidor,” in CinémAction (Conde-sur-Noireau), no. 75, April 1995.

* * *

King Vidor began work in Hollywood as a company clerk for Universal, submitting original scripts under the pseudonym Charles K. Wallis. (Universal employees weren’t allowed to submit original work to the studio.) Vidor eventually confessed his wrongdoing and was fired as a clerk, only to be rehired as a comedy writer. Within days, he lost this job as well when Universal discontinued comedy production.

Vidor next worked as the director of a series of short dramatic films detailing the reform work of Salt Lake City Judge Willis Brown, a Father Flanagan-type. Vidor tried to parlay this experience into a job as a feature director with a major studio but was unsuccessful. He did manage, however, to find financial backing from nine doctors for his first feature, a picture with a Christian Science theme titled The Turn in the Road. Vidor spent the next year working on three more features for the newly christened Brentwood Company, including the comedy Better Times, starring his own discovery, Zasu Pitts.

In 1920 Vidor accepted an offer from First National and a check for $75,000. He persuaded his father to sell his business in order that he might build and manage “Vidor Village,” a small studio that mirrored similar projects by Chaplin, Sennett, Griffith, Ince, and others. Vidor directed eight pictures at Vidor Village, but was forced to close down in 1922. The following year, he was hired by Louis B. Mayer at Metro to direct aging stage star Laurette Taylor in Peg-o-My-Heart. Soon after, he went to work for Samuel Goldwyn, attracted by Goldwyn’s artistic and literary aspirations. In 1924 Vidor returned to Metro as a result of a studio merger that resulted in MGM. He would continue to work there for the next 20 years, initially entrusted with molding the careers of rising stars John Gilbert and Eleanor Boardman, soon to be Vidor’s second wife.

The Big Parade changed Vidor’s status from contract director to courted screen artist. Produced by Irving Thalberg, the film grew from a minor studio production into one of MGM’s two biggest hits of 1926, grossing $18 million. The Big Parade satisfied Vidor’s desire to make a picture with lasting value and extended exhibition. It was the first of three films he wanted to make on the topics of “wheat, steel, and war.” Vidor went on to direct Gilbert and Lillian Gish, a new studio acquisition, in La Bohème. Encouraged by the popularity of German films of the period and their concern with urban life, Vidor made The Crowd, The Big Parade of peace. It starred unknown actor James Murray, whose life would end in an alcoholic suicide. (Murray inspired one of Vidor’s later projects, an unproduced picture titled The Actor. Like The Big Parade, The Crowd presented the reactions of an everyman, this time to the anonymity of the city and the rigors of urban survival. Vidor’s silent career then continued with two of Marion Davies’ comedies, The Patsy and Show People. His career extended into “talkies” with a third comedy, Not So Dumb. Though only moderately successful, Vidor became a favorite in William Randolph Hearst’s entourage.

Vidor was in Europe when the industry announced its conversion to sound. He quickly returned to propose Hallelujah, with an all-black cast. Although considered a politically astute director for Hollywood, the film exposes Vidor’s political shortcomings in its paternalistic attitude toward blacks. With similar political naïveté, Vidor’s next great film, the pseudo-socialist agricultural drama Our Daily Bread, was derived from a Reader’s Digest article.

By this point in his career, Vidor’s thematics were fairly intact. Informing most of his lasting work is the struggle of Man against Destiny and Nature. In his great silent pictures, The Big Parade and The Crowd, the hero wanders through an anonymous and malevolent environment, war-torn Europe and the American city, respectively. In his later sound films, The Citadel, Northwest Passage, Duel in the Sun, and The Fountainhead various forms of industry operate as a vehicle of Man’s battle to subdue Nature. Unlike the optimism in the films of Ford and Capra, Vidor’s films follow a Job-like pattern in which victory comes, if at all, with a great deal of personal sacrifice. Underlying all of Vidor’s great work are the biblical resonances of a Christian Scientist, where Nature is ultimately independent from and disinterested in Man, who always remains subordinate in the struggle against its forces.

Following Our Daily Bread, Vidor continued to alternate between films that explored this personal thematic and projects seemingly less suited to his interests. In more than 50 features, Vidor worked for several producers, directing Wedding Night and Stella Dallas for Samuel Goldwyn; The Citadel, Northwest Passage, and Comrade X for MGM; Bird of Paradise, where he met his third wife Elizabeth Hill, and Duel in the Sun for David O. Selznick; The Fountainhead, Beyond the Forest, and Lightning Strikes Twice for Warner Brothers; and late in his career, War and Peace for Dino De Laurentiis. Vidor exercised more control on his films after Our Daily Bread, often serving as producer, but his projects continued to fluctuate between intense metaphysical drama and lightweight comedy and romance.

In the 1950s Vidor’s only notable film was Ruby Gentry, and his filmmaking career ended on a less-than-praiseworthy note with Beyond the Forest serving as producer, but his projects continued to fluctuate between

On VIDO: books—

- Buache, Freddy, and others, editors, Hommage à Jean Vigo, Lausanne 1962.

On VIDO: articles—

- “Vigo Issue” of Positif (Lyon), no. 7, 1953.
- Special issue, in Castoro Cinema (Firenze), no. 64, 1979.
- Baldwin, D., L’Atalante and the Maturing of Jean Vigo,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Fall 1985.

---

VIGO, Jean

Nationality: French. Born: Paris, 26 April 1905, son of anarchist Miguel Alemreyda (Eugène Bonaventure de Vigo). Education: Attended a number of schools, including the Boys School of St. Cloud, until 1917; following death of father, attended boarding school in Nimes, under the name Jean Sales. Family: Married Elizabeth Lozinska, 1929, child: Luce. Father found dead under mysterious circumstances in jail cell, 1917; mother confined to a hospital, 1923. Career: Experienced health problems, entered clinic in Montpellier, then moved to Nice because of his tuberculosis, 1929; directed first film, A propos de Nice, 1930, then returned to live in Paris, 1932; Zéro de conduite removed from circulation by censors because of perceived “anti-France” content; became seriously ill with leukemia, 1933. Died: 5 October 1934.

Film as Director:

1930 À propos de Nice
1931 Taris (Taris roi de l’eau; Jean Taris champion de natation)
1933 Zéro de conduite
1934 L’Atalante

Publications

By VIGO: books—

* * *

It is difficult to think of another director who made so few films and yet had such a profound influence on other filmmakers. Jean Vigo’s Â propos de Nice, his first film, is his contribution to the French surrealism that would later be so important to other filmmakers. Vigo’s works À propos de Nice and his second film, À propos de Taris, both filmic treatise on the nature of human beings and their relationship to the world, remains important and prize the school’s suffocating regulations above all else. Vigo lets the schoolboys rebel against this sort of mindless monotony. They engage in an apocalyptic pillow fight, and then bombard their teachers with fruit during a stately school ceremony. The film’s anarchic spirit led to its being banned in France until 1945. But during the 1950s, it became one of the inspirations for the French New Wave directors. In subject matter, it somewhat resembles Truffaut’s 400 Blows. But it is the film’s style—the mixture of classical Hollywood visuals with the dreamlike illogic of slow motion, fast action, and quick cutting—that particularly influenced a new generation of filmmakers.

Vigo’s last film, L’Atalante, is his masterpiece. It is a love story that takes place on a barge, with Vigo once again combining surrealism with poetic realism. The settings are naturalistic and the characters lower-class, and so bring to mind Renoir’s poetic realist films such as Toni and Les Bas-Fonds. There is also an emphasis on the imagination and on the near-sacredness of banal objects that places the film strongly in the tradition of such surrealism classics as Un Chien andalou. After Juliette leaves Jean, the barge captain, Jean jumps into the river and sees his wife’s image everywhere around him. The underwater sequence not only makes the viewer think of Taris, but also makes us aware that we are sharing Jean’s obsession with him. This dreamy visualization of a character’s thoughts brings to mind the priority that the surrealists gave to all mental processes. The surrealists prided, too, some of the more mundane aspects of everyday life, and Vigo’s film is full of ordinary objects that take on (for Juliette) a magical status. They are not only puppets, or fans, or gramophones piled in a heap in the room of Père Jules, Jean’s old assistant, but Juliette has spent her entire life in a small town, and for her, these trinkets represent the mysteries of faraway places. They take on a special status, the banal being raised to the level of the exotic.

Despite the movie’s links to two film movements, L’Atalante defies categorization. It is a masterpiece of mood and characterization, and, along with Zéro de conduite, it guarantees Vigo’s status as a great director. But he was not granted that status by the critical community until years after his death. Because of the vagaries of film exhibition and censorship, Vigo was little known while he was making films. He received nowhere near the acclaim given to his contemporaries Jean Renoir and René Clair.

—Eric Smoodin

---

VISCONTI, Luchino

Luchino Visconti

Films as Director:

1942 Ossessione (+ co-sc)
1947 La terra trema (+ sc)
1951 Bellissima (+ co-sc); Appunti su un fatto di cronaca (second in series Documento mensile)
1953 “We, the Women” episode of Siamo donne (+ co-sc)
1954 Senso (+ co-sc)
1955 Le notti bianche (White Nights) (+ co-sc)
1957 Rocco e i suoi fratelli (Rocco and His Brothers) (+ co-sc)
1962 “Il lavoro (The Job)” episode of Boccaccio ’70 (+ co-sc)
1963 Il gattopardo (The Leopard) (+ co-sc)
1965 Vaghe stelle dell’orsa (Of a Thousand Delights; Sandra) (+ co-sc)
1967 “Le strega bruciata viva” episode of Le streghe; Lo straniero (L’Etranger) (+ co-sc)
1969 La caduta degli dei (The Damned; Götterdämmerung) (+ co-sc)
1970 Alla ricerca di Tadzio
1971 Morte a Venezia (Death in Venice) (+ pr, co-sc)
1973 Ludwig (+ co-sc)
1974 Gruppo di famiglia in un interno (+ co-sc)
1976 L’innocente (The Innocent) (+ co-sc)

Other Films:

1936 Les Bas-fonds (Renoir) (asst d)
1937 Une Partie de campagne (Renoir) (asst d) (released 1946)

1940 La Tosca (Renoir) (asst d)
1945 Giorni di gloria (De Santis) (asst d)

Publications

By VISCONTI: books—

Le notti bianche, Bologna, 1957.
Rocco e i suoi fratelli, Bologna, 1961.
Vaghe stelle dell’orsa (Sandra), Bologna, 1965.
Il mio teatro, in two volumes, Bologna, 1979.

By VISCONTI: articles—

“Il cinéma antropomorfico,” in Cinema (Rome), 25 September 1943.
“La terra trema,” in Bianco e Nero (Rome), March 1951.
Interview with Jacques Doniol-Valcroze and Jean Domarchi, in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), March 1959.
Interview with Peter Brunette, in Sight and Sound (London), Winter 1986/87.

Other Publications:

On VISCONTI: books—
Tonetti, Clareta, Luchino Visconti, Boston, 1983.
On VISCONTI: articles—

Lane, John Francis, “The Hurricane Visconti,” in Films and Filming (London), December 1954.

Lane, John Francis, “Visconti—The Last Decadent,” in Films and Filming (London), July 1956.

Poggi, Gianfranco, “Luchino Visconti and the Italian Cinema,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1960.

Special issue of Castoro Cinema (Firenze), no. 98, 1982.

Schleifer, E., “Das Ende des ‘Flickerleppichs,’” in Film-Dienst (Cologne), vol. 46, no. 6, 16 March 1993.

The films of Luchino Visconti are among the most stylistically and intellectually influential of postwar Italian cinema. Born a scion of ancient nobility, Visconti integrated the most heterogeneous elements of aristocratic sensibility, and taste with a committed Marxist political consciousness, backed by a firm knowledge of Italian class structure. Stylistically, his career follows a trajectory from a uniquely cinematic realism to an operatic theatricalism, from the simple quotidian eloquence of modeled actuality to the heightened effect of lavishly appointed historical melodramas. His career fuses these interests into a mode of expression uniquely Viscontian, prescribing a potent, double-headed realism. Visconti turned out films steadily but rather slowly from 1942 to 1976. His obsessive care with narrative and filmic materials is apparent in the majority of his films.

Whether or not we choose to view the wartime Ossessione as a precursor or a determinant of neorealism, or merely as a continuation of elements already present in Fascist period cinema, it is clear that the film remarkably applies a realist mise-en-scène to the formulaic constraints of the genre film. With major emendations, the film is, following a then-contemporary interest in American fiction of the 1930s, a treatment (the second and best) of James M. Cain’s The Postman Always Rings Twice. In it the director begins to explore the potential of a long-take style, undoubtedly influenced by Jean Renoir, for whom Visconti had worked as assistant. Having met with the disapproval of the Fascist censors for its depiction of the shabbiness and desperation of Italian provincial life, Ossessione was banned from exhibition.

For La terra trema, Visconti further developed those documentarily-like attributes of story and style generally associated with neorealism. Taken from Verga’s late nineteenth-century masterpiece I malavoglia, the film was shot entirely on location in Sicily and employed the people of the locale, speaking in their native dialect, as actors. Through them, Visconti explores the problems of class exploitation and the tragedy of family dissolution under economic pressure. Again, a mature long-shot/long-take style is coupled with diverse, extensive camera movements and well-planned actor movements to enhance the sense of a world faithfully captured in the multiplicity of its activities. The extant film was to have become the first episode of a trilogy on peasant life, but the other two parts were never filmed.

Rocco e i suoi fratelli, however, made over a dozen years later, continues the story of this Sicilian family, or at least one very much like it. Newly arrived in Milan from the South, the Parandis must deal with the economic realities of their poverty as well as survive the sexual rivalries threatening the solidarity of their family unit. The film is episodic in nature, affording time to each brother’s story (in the original version), but special attention is given to Rocco, the forebearing and protective brother who strives at all costs to keep the group together, and Simone, the physically powerful and cruelly brutal one, who is unable to control his personal fears, insecurities, and moral weakness. Unable to find other work, they both drift into prize fighting, viewed here as class exploitation. Jealousy over the prostitute Nadia causes Simone to turn his fists against his brother, then to murder the woman. But Rocco, impelled by strong traditional ties, would still act to save Simone from the police. Finally, the latter is betrayed to the law by Ciro, the fourth youngest and a factory worker who has managed to transfer some of his familial loyalty to a social plane and the labor union. Coming full circle from La terra trema, Luca, the youngest, dreams of a day when he will be able to return to the Southern place of his birth. Rocco is perhaps Visconti’s greatest contribution to modern tragedy, crafted along the lines of Arthur Miller and Tennessee Williams (whose plays he directed in Italy). The Viscontian tragedy is saturated with melodramatic intensity, a stylization incurring more than a suggestion of decadent sexuality and misogyny. There is also, as in other Visconti works, a rather ambiguous intimation of homosexuality (here between Simone and his manager.)

By Senso Visconti had achieved the maturity of style that would characterize his subsequent work. With encompassing camera movements—like the opening shot, which moves from the stage of an opera house across the audience, taking in each tier of seats where the protest against the Austrians will soon erupt—and with a melodramatic rendering of historical fact, Visconti begins to mix cinematic realism with compositional elegance and lavish romanticism. Against the colorful background of the Risorgimento, he paints the betrayal by an Austrian lieutenant of his aristocratic Italian mistress who, in order to save him, has compromised the partisans. The love story parallels the approaching betrayal of the revolution by the bourgeois political powers.

Like Gramsci, who often returned to the contradictions of the Risorgimento as a key to the social problems of the modern Italian state, Visconti explores that period once more in Il gattopardo, from the Lampedusa novel. An aristocratic Sicilian family undergoes transformation as a result of intermarriage with the middle-class at the same time that the Mezzogiorno is undergoing unification with the North. The bourgeoisie, now ready and able to take over from the dying aristocracy, usurps Garibaldi’s revolution; in this period of transformismo, the revolutionary process will be assimilated into the dominant political structure and defused.

Still another film that focuses on the family unit as a barometer of history and changing society is La caduta degli dei. This treatment of a German munitions industry family (much like Krupp) and its decline into betrayal and murder in the interests of personal gain and the Nazi state intensifies and brings up-to-date an examination of the social questions of the last mentioned films. Here again a meticulous, mobile camera technique sets forth and stylistically typifies a decadent, death-surfeted culture.

Vaghe stelle dell’orsa removes the critique of the family from the social to the psychoanalytic plane. While death or absence of the father and the presence of an uprising surrogate is a thematic consideration in several Visconti films, he here explores it in conjunction with Freudian theory in this deliberate yet entirely transmuted retelling of the Elektra myth. We are never completely aware of the extent of the relationship between Sandra and her brother, and the possibility of past incest remains distinct. Both despise their stepfather Gilardi, whom they accuse of having seduced their mother and having denounced their father, a Jew, to the Fascists. Sandra’s love for and sense of solidarity with her brother follows upon a racial solidarity with her father and race, but Gianni’s love, on the other hand, is underpinned by a desire for his mother, transferred to Sandra. Nevertheless, dramatic confrontation propels the dialectical investigations of the individual’s position with respect to the social even in this, Visconti’s most densely psychoanalytic film.

Three films marking a further removal from social themes and observation of the individual, all literary adaptations, are generally felt to be his weakest: Le notte bianche from Dostoevski’s White Nights sets a rather fanciful tale of a lonely man’s hopes to win over a despairing woman’s love against a décor that refutes, in its obvious, studio-bound staginess, Visconti’s concern with realism and material verisimilitude. The clear inadequacy of this Livornian setting, dominated by a footbridge upon which the two meet and the unusually claustrophobic spatiality that results, locate the world of individual romance severed from large social and historical concerns in an inert, artificial perspective that borders on the hallucinatory. He achieves similar results with location shooting in Lo straniero, where—despite alterations of the original Camus—he perfectly captures the difficult tensions and tones of individual alienation by utilizing the telephoto lens pervasively. Rather than provide a suitable Viscontian dramatic space rendered in depth, it reduces Mersault to the status of a Kafka-esque insect-man observed under a microscope. Finally, Morte a Venezia, based on the fiction of Thomas Mann, while among Visconti’s most formally beautiful productions, is one of his least critically successful. The baroque elaboration of mise-en-scène and camera work does not rise above self-pity and self-indulgence, and is cut off from social context irretrievably.

—Joel Kanoff

von STERNBERG, Josef

Films as Director:

1925 The Salvation Hunters (+ pr, sc); The Exquisite Sinner (+ co-sc) (remade by Phil Rosen); The Masked Bride (remade by Christy Cabanne)
1926 The Sea Gull (Woman of the Sea) (+ sc)
1927 Children of Divorce (d add’l scenes only); Underworld
1928 The Last Command (+ sc); The Drag Net; The Docks of New York
1929 The Case of Lena Smith; Thunderbolt
1930 Der blaue Engel (The Blue Angel); Morocco
1931 Dishonored; An American Tragedy
1932 Shanghai Express; Blonde Venus (+ co-sc); I Take This Woman
1934 The Scarlet Empress
1935 The Devil Is a Woman (+ co-ph); Crime and Punishment
1936 The King Steps Out
1939 Sergeant Madden; New York Cinderella (remade by Frank Borzage and W.S. Van Dyke)
1941 The Shanghai Gesture (+ co-sc)
1943–44 The Town
1946 Duel in the Sun (d several scenes only)
Josef von Sternberg and Marlene Dietrich on the set of Dishonored

1951  Macao (re-shot almost entirely by Nicholas Ray)
1953  Anatahan (The Saga of Anatahan) (+ sc, ph)
1957  Jet Pilot (completed 1950)

Other Films:

(partial list)

1919  The Mystery of the Yellow Room (asst d); By Divine Right (asst d, sc, ph); Vanity’s Price (asst d)

Publications

By von STERNBERG: books—

Daughters of Vienna, free adaptation of stories by Karl Adolph, Vienna, 1922.

Dokumentation, eine Darstellung, Mannheim, Germany, 1966.

Fun in a Chinese Laundry, New York, 1965

The Blue Angel (screenplay), New York, 1968.

By von STERNBERG: articles—

Interview, in Motion Picture Classic (New York), May 1931.

“Acting in Film and Theater,” in Film Culture (New York), Winter 1955.

Interview with Peter Bogdanovich, in Movie (London), Summer 1965.

Interview with F. A. Macklin, in Film Heritage (Dayton, Ohio), Winter 1965–66.
Interview with Kevin Brownlow, in Film (London), Spring 1966.

On von STERNBERG: books—

Mérigueau, Pascal, Josef Von Sternberg, Paris, 1983.

On von STERNBERG: articles—

Pringle, Henry, “‘Profile of Josef von Sternberg,’” in the New Yorker, 28 March 1931.

Von Sternberg Section of Skrien (Amsterdam), April/May 1985.

Sobchack, V., and L. Poague, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1990.

On von STERNBERG: film—

The Epic That Never Was—‘‘I, Claudius,’’ directed by Bill Duncalf, for BBC-TV, London, 1966.

* * *

There is a sense in which Josef von Sternberg never grew up. In his personality, the twin urges of the disturbed adolescent towards self-advertisement and self-effacement fuse with a brilliant visual imagination to create an artistic vision un paralleled in the cinema. But von Sternberg lacked the cultivation of Murnau, the sophistication of his mentor von Stroheim, the humanity of Griffith, or the ruthlessness of Chaplin. His imagination remained immature, and his personality was malicious and obsessive. His films reflect a schoolboy’s fascination with sensuality and heroics. That they are sublime visual adventures from an artist who contributed substantially to the sum of cinema technique is one paradox to add to the stock that make up his career.

Much of von Sternberg’s public utterance, and in particular his autobiography, was calculated to confuse; the disguise of his real Christian name under the diminutive “Jo” is typical. Despite his claims to have done so, he did not “write” all his films, though he did re-write the work of some skilled collaborators, notably Jules Furthman and Ben Hecht. While his eye for art and design was highly developed, he never designed sets; he merely “improved” them with props, veils, nets, posters, scribbles, but above all with light. Of this last he was a natural master, the only director of his day to earn membership in the American Society of Cinematographers. Given a set, a face, a camera, and some lights, he could create a mobile portrait of breathtaking beauty.

Marlene Dietrich was his greatest model. He dressed her like a doll, in a variety of costumes that included feathers and sequins, a gorilla suit, a tuxedo, and a succession of gowns by Paramount’s master of costume, Travis Banton. She submitted to his every demand with the skill and complaisance of a great courtesan. No other actress provided him with such malleable material. With Betty Compson,
Gene Tierney, and Akemi Negishi he fitfully achieved the same “spiritual power,” as he called the mood of yearning melancholy which was his ideal, but the effect never equalled that of the seven Dietrich melodramas.

Von Sternberg was born too early for the movies. The studio system constrained his fractious temperament; the formula picture stifled his urge to primp and polish. He battled with MGM, which offered him a lucrative contract after the success of his von Stroheim-esque expressionist drama The Salvation Hunters, fell out with Chaplin, producer of the still-suppressed Woman of the Sea, and fought constantly with Paramount until Ernst Lubitsch, acting studio head, “liquidated” him for his intransigence; the later suppression of his last Paramount film, The Devil Is a Woman, in a political dispute with Spain merely served to increase von Sternberg’s alienation. For the rest of his career, von Sternberg wandered from studio to studio and country to country, always lacking the facilities he needed to achieve his best work. Even Korda’s lavish I Claudius, dogged by disaster and finally terminated in a cost-cutting exercise, shows in its surviving footage only occasional flashes of Sternbergian brilliance. By World War II, he had already achieved his best work, though he lived for another 30 years.

Von Sternberg alarmed a studio establishment whose executives thought in terms of social and sexual stereotypes, formula plotting, and stock happy endings; their narrative ideal was a Saturday Evening Post novelette. No storyteller, von Sternberg derided plot; “the best source for a film is an anecdote,” he said. From a single coincidence and a handful of characters, edifices of visual poetry could be constructed. His films leap years in the telling to follow a moral decline or growth of an obsession.

The most important film of von Sternberg’s life was one he never made. After the humiliation of the war years, when he produced only the propaganda short The Town, and the nadir of his career, as close-up advisor to King Vidor on Duel in the Sun, he wrote The Seven Bad Years, a script that would, he said, “demonstrate the adult insistence to follow the pattern inflicted on a child in its first seven helpless years, from which a man could extricate himself were he to realize that it was not the child but the adult who was leading him into trouble.” He was never to make this work of self-analysis, nor any film which reflected a mature understanding of his contradictory personality.

Von Sternberg’s theories of cinema were not especially profound, deriving largely from the work of Reinhardt, but they represented a quantum jump in an industry where questions of lighting and design were dealt with by experts who jealously guarded this prerogative. In planning his films not around dialogue but around the performers’ “dramatic encounter with light,” in insisting that the “dead space” between the camera and subject be filled and enlivened, and above all in seeing every story in terms of “spiritual power” rather than star quality, he established a concept of personal cinema which presaged the politique des auteurs and the Movie Brat generation.

In retrospect, von Sternberg’s contentious personality—manifested in the self-conscious affecting of uniforms and costumes on the set and an epigrammatic style of communicating with performers that drove many of them to frenzy—all reveal themselves as reactions against the banality of his chosen profession. von Sternberg was asked late in life if he had a hobby. “Yes. Chinese philately.” Why that? “I wanted,” he replied in the familiar weary, uninflected voice, “a subject I could not exhaust.”

—John Baxter

von STROHEIM, Erich

Films as Director:

1918 Blind Husbands (+ sc, art d, role as Lieutenant von Steuben)
1919 The Devil’s Passkey (+ sc, art d)
1921 Foolish Wives (+ sc, co-art d, co-costume, role as Count Wladislas Serge Karamazin)
1922 Merry-Go-Round (+ sc, co-art d, co-costume) (completed by Rupert Julian)
1924 Greed (+ sc, co-art d)
1925 The Merry Widow (+ sc, co-art d, co-costume)
1927 The Wedding March (+ sc, co-art d, co-costume, role as Prince Nicki)
1928 The Honeymoon (+ sc, role as Prince Nicki—part two of The Wedding March and not released in United States); Queen Kelly (+ sc, co-art d) (completed by others)
1933 Walking down Broadway (+ sc) (mostly reshot by Alfred Werker and Edwin Burke and released as Hello Sister)

Other Films:

1914 Captain McLean (Conway) (role)
1915 Old Heidelberg (Emerson) (asst d, military advisor, role as Lutz); Ghosts (Emerson) (role); The Birth of a Nation (Griffith) (role)
1916 Intolerance (Griffith) (asst d, role as second Pharisee); The Social Secretary (Emerson) (asst d, role as a reporter); Macbeth (Emerson) (asst d, role); Less than the Dust (Emerson) (asst d, role); His Picture in the Papers (Emerson) (asst d, role as the traitor)
1917 Panthea (Dwan) (asst d, role as Russian policeman); Sylvia of the Secret Service (Fitzmaurice) (asst d, role); In Again—Out Again (Emerson) (asst d, art d, role as Russian officer); For France (Ruggles) (role as Prussian officer)
1918 Hearts of the World (Griffith) (asst d, military advisor, role as German officer); The Unbeliever (Crosland) (role as German officer); The Honeymoon (Dwan) (asst d, role as Prince Nicki—part two of Greed and not released in United States); Five Graves to Cairo (Milestone) (role as Field Marshall Rommel); The North Star (Milestone) (role as German medic)
1919 The Lady and the Monster (Sherman) (role); Storm over Lisbon (Sherman) (role)
1920 The Great Flamarion (Mann) (role as Flamarion); Scotland Yard Investigation (Blair) (role); The Mask of Dijon (Landers) (role as Dijon)

1921 On ne meurt pas comme ça (Boyer) (role as Eric von Berg)
1922 La Danse de mort (Cravenne) (co-adapt, co-dialogue, role as Edgar)
1923 Le Signal rouge (Neubach) (role)
1924 Portrait d’un assassin (Bernard-Roland) (role)
1925 Sunset Boulevard (Wild) (role as Max)
1926 Minuit, quai de Bercy (Stengel) (role); Alraune (La Mandragore) (Rabenalt) (role)
1927 L’Envers du paradis (Gréville) (role as O’Hara); Alerte au sud (Devaivre) (role)
1928 Napoléon (Guitry) (role as Beethoven)
1929 Série noire (Foucauld) (role); La Madone des sleepings (Diamant-Berger) (role)

Publications

By von STROHEIM: books—

Paprika, New York, 1935.
Greed (full screenplay), Cinémathèque Royale de Belgique, Brussels, 1958.

By von STROHEIM: articles—

Interviews, in Motion Picture (New York), August 1920, October 1921, May 1922, September 1923, and April 1927.
“Charges against Him and His Reply,” with C. Belfrage, in Motion Picture Classic (Brooklyn), June 1930.
“My Own Story,” in Film Weekly (London), April/May 1935.
“Citizen Kane,” in Positif (Paris), March 1968 (reprinted from 1941).
“Les Rapaces (Greed),” (scenario), in Avant-Scène du Cinéma (Paris), September 1968.

On von STROHEIM: books—

Atasceva, P., and V. Korolevitch, Erich von Stroheim, Moscow, 1927.
Finler, Joel, Stroheim, Berkeley, 1968.

On von STROHEIM: articles—

Yost, Robert, “Gosh, How They Hate Him!,” in Photoplay (New York), December 1919.
“Tribute to Stroheim,” in Film Quarterly (London), Spring 1947.
“Von Stroheim Issue” of Cinéma (Paris), February 1957.
“Von Stroheim Issue” of Film Culture (New York), April 1958.
Gilliatt, Penelope, “The Scabrous Poem from the Estate Belonging to No One,” in the New Yorker, 3 June 1972.

EPD Film (Frankfurt), special section, vol. 11, no. 8, August 1994.

* * *

Erich von Stroheim had two complementary careers in cinema, that of actor-director, primarily during the silent period, and that of distinguished character actor when his career as a director was frustrated as a result of his inability to bring his genius to terms with the American film industry.

After edging his way into the industry in the humblest capacities, von Stroheim’s lengthy experience as bit player and assistant to Griffith paid off. His acceptance during the pioneer period of American cinema as Prussian “military adviser,” and his bullet-headed physical resemblance to the traditional monocled image of the tight-uniformed Hun officer, enabled him to create a more established acting career and star in his own films. With his first personal film, Blind Husbands, he became the prime creator in Hollywood of witty, risqué, European-like sex-triangle comedy-dramas. His initial successes in the early 1920s were characterized by subtle acting touches and a marked sophistication of subject that impressed American audiences of the period as essentially European and fascinatingly decadent. Blind Husbands was followed by other films in the same genre, the 12-reel The Devil’s Pass Key and the critically successful Foolish Wives. In all three works, women spectators could easily identify with the common character of the lonely wife, whose seduction by attractively wicked Germanic officers and gentlemen (usually played by von Stroheim, now publicized as “the man you love to hate”) provided the essential thrill. Von Stroheim also cunningly included beautiful but excitingly unprincipled women characters in both The Devil’s Pass Key and Foolish Wives, played by Maude George and Mae Busch. Details of bathing, dressing, and the ministration of servants in the preparation of masters or mistresses in boudoir or dressing room were recurrent, and the von Stroheim scene always included elaborate banquets, receptions, and social ceremonies.

Von Stroheim’s losing battle with the film industry began in his clashes with Irving Thalberg at Universal. His obsessive perfectionism over points of detail in setting and costume had pushed the budget for Foolish Wives to the million-dollar mark. Though the publicists boasted of von Stroheim’s extravagance, the front office preferred hard profits to such self-indulgent expenditures. Thalberg also refused von Stroheim’s demands that his films should be of any length he determined, and Foolish Wives (intended to be in two parts) was finally taken out of his hands and cut from 18–20 to some 12–14 reels. Although a critical success, the film lost money.

Foolish Wives was von Stroheim’s most discussed film before Greed. In it he played a bogus aristocratic officer, in reality a swindler and multi-seducer. His brilliant, sardonic acting “‘touches’ brought a similar psychological verisimilitude to this grimly satiric comedy of manners as Lubitsch was to establish in his Kammerspielfilme (intimate films). He also specialized in decor, photographic composition, and lighting. The latticed light and shadow in one sequence, when the seducer in full uniform visits the counterfeiter’s underworld den with hope of ravishing the old man’s mentally defective daughter, is unforgettable.

Greed, von Stroheim’s most important film, was based meticulously on Norris’s Zolaesque novel, McTeague. Von Stroheim’s masterpiece, it was eventually mutilated by the studio because of its unwieldy length; it was reduced over its director’s protests from 42 reels to 24 (between 5 and 6 hours), and then finally cut to 10 reels by the studio. Von Stroheim’s emphasis on the ugly and bizarre in human nature emerged in this psychologically naturalistic study of avarice and degradation seen in a mismatched couple—McTeague, the impulsive, primitive (but bird-loving) lower-class dentist, and Trina, the pathologically avaricious spinster member of a German-Swiss immigrant family and winner of a $5,000 lottery. After their marriage, Trina hoards her money as their circumstances decline to the point where the husband becomes drunk and brutal, and the wife mad. After he murders her and becomes a fugitive, McTeague ends up in the isolated wastes of Death Valley, handcuffed to Marcus, his former friend whom he has killed. Using the streets of San Francisco and the house where the actual murder that had inspired Norris had taken place, von Stroheim anticipated Rossellini in his use of such locations. But his insistence on achieving an incongruous and stylized realism, which starts with McTeague’s courtship of Trina sitting on a sewerpipe and culminates in the macabre sequence in Death Valley, goes beyond that straight neorealism of the future. Joel W. Finler, in his book Stroheim, analyzes the wholesale cutting in the 10-reel version, exposing the grave losses that render the action and motivation of the film unclear. But the superb performances of Zasu Pitts and Gibson Gowland compensate, and the grotesque Sieppe family provide a macabre background, enhanced by von Stroheim’s constant reminder of San Francisco’s “‘mean streets.’” The film was held to be his masterpiece by many, but also condemned as a “‘vile epic of the sewer.’”

Von Stroheim was to work as director on only five more films: the Rutarian Merry Widow (adapted from the operetta), The Wedding March (in two parts, and again severely cut), the erotic Queen Kelly (directed for Gloria Swanson, but never completed by von Stroheim, though released by Swanson with her own additions), and the sound films Walking Down Broadway (released as Hello, Sister; it was never released in von Stroheim’s original version) and The Emperor’s Candlessticks, on which it appears he collaborated only in direction. The silent films portray the same degenerate Imperial Viennese society von Stroheim favored. Half-romantic and half-grotesque fantasy, the films once again presented von Stroheim’s meticulous attention to detail in decor and characterization. The Wedding March (in spite of studio intervention) is the high point in von Stroheim’s career as a director after Greed. Subsequently he remained content to star or appear in films made by others, making some 50 appearances between 1929 and 1955. His most notable acting performances during this period were in Renoir’s La Grande Illusion and Wilder’s Five Graves to Cairo and Sunset Boulevard, in which his past as a director is almost ghoulishly recalled.

—Roger Manvell

von TRIER, Lars

Nationality: Danish. Born: Lars Trier, Lyngby, 30 April 1956. Education: Studied Film Science at the University of Copenhagen, 1976–1979; Danish Film School (director), 1979–82. Family: Married 1) Cæcilia Holbek, 1987 (divorced 1995); 2 children; 2) Bente Frøge (1997), twins. Career: With Niels Vørsel, established Element Film, 1986; established Element Film ApS, 1990; with Peter Aalbæk Jensen, established Zentropa Entertainments, 1992. Awards: Cannes International Film Festival Grand Prix de Technique, Danish Film Critics Award (Bodil) for Best Danish Feature Film, Danish Film Academy Award (Robert) for Best Danish Feature Film, and Mannheim International Film Festival Joseph von Sternberg-Preis, for Element of Crime, 1984; Cannes International Film Festival Special Prize of the Jury and Prix de la Commission Supérieure Technique, Bodil Award for Best Danish Feature Film, Robert Award for Best Danish Feature Film, Ghent Flanders International Film Festival First Prize, and Sydney Film Festival Award for Best Film, for Europa, 1992; Kjell Abel Award (Denmark), 1993; Ingmar Bergman travel grant (Denmark), 1994; Bodil Award for Best Danish Feature Film, for The Kingdom, 1995; Arthur Køpckes honorary award (Denmark), 1995; Cannes International Film Festival Grand Prix, Bodil Award for Best Danish Feature Film, Robert Award for Best Danish Feature Film, Carl Th. Dreyer Award (Denmark), Berlin European Film Academy Award for European Film of the Year, FIPRESCI Award, International Critics Award, Edinburgh International Film Festival Critics Award, New York Film Critics Circle Award for Best Director, International Society of Film Critics Awards for Best Film and Best Director, all 1996, César Award for Best Foreign Film, and Swedish Film Institute (Guldbagge) Award for Best Foreign Film, both 1997, all for Breaking the Waves; London Film Festival Award, FIPRESCI Award, and International Critics Award, for The Idiots, 1998; Cannes Film Festival Palme d’Or, for Dancer in the Dark.
2000. Office: Zentropa Productions, Ryesgade 106 A, 4th Floor, 2100 Copenhagen OE, Denmark.

Films as Director

- 1977 Orchidégartneren (+ ph, sc, ed, ro as Victor Morse)
- 1979 Menthe—la bienheureuse (Mynthe—den lyksalige) (+ pr, sc, ph, ed, ro as the driver)
- 1980 Nocturne (+ sc)
- 1982 Befrielsesbilleder (afgangsfilm fra Filmskolen) (+ co-sc)
- 1984 Forbrydelsens element (The Element of Crime) (+ co-sc, ro as Schmuck of Ages)
- 1988 Medea (for TV) (+ co-sc); Epidemic (+ co-sc, co-ph, co-ed, ro)
- 1991 Europa (+ co-sc, ro as Jew)
- 1994 Lærerværet (for TV); Riget (The Kingdom 1–4) (mini-series—for TV) (+ co-sc, ro as himself)
- 1996 Breaking the Waves (+ sc)
- 1997 Riget II (The Kingdom 5–8) (mini-series—for TV) (+ co-sc, ro as himself)
- 1998 Idioterne (The Idiots) (+ sc, ph, ro as interviewer)
- 1999 D-dag (three parts—for TV) (co-d with Thomas Vinterberg, Søren Kragh Jacobsen, and Christian Levring; ro as himself)
- 2000 Dancer in the Dark (+ sc, ph, lyrics)

Other Films:

- 1980 Kaptajn Klyde og hans venner vender tilbage (Holst and Klein) (ro)
- 1989 En Verden til forskel (Magnusson) (ro as Taxachauflor)
- 2000 De Udstillede (Jargil) (co-sc)

Publications

By von TRIER: books—

Breaking the Waves (script and director’s note), Per Kofod, 1996.

By von Trier: articles—

With Thomas Vinterberg, “The Vow of Chastity” (manifesto),
Dogme 95, www.dogme95.dk, signed 13 March 1995..

On von Trier: books—

Jensen, Klaus Bruhn, Jan Stjerne, and Palle Schantz Lauridsen,
Bono, Francesco, editor, Dansk Film, Rome, 1993.
Schepelern, Peter, Lars von Trier: Elementer: en filminstruktørs trillogi, København, 1999.
Forst, Achim, Breaking the Dreams: Das Kino des Lars von Trier, Marburg, Germany, 1998.

On von Trier: articles—

On von Trier: films—

Buchhardt, Nikolaj, director, Tiers element (doc—for TV), undated.
Bjørkman, Stig, director, Tranceformer, an Obsession (doc) 1994.

Jargil, Jesper, director, De udstillede (doc) 1999.

“My greatest problem in life is control contra chaos. I have an insane dread of not having control when I want it.” With these words Lars von Trier pinpoints a central dilemma in and behind his art. But, one must add, it is a dilemma that has proved particularly artistically fruitful for von Trier. If there is one recurrent feature characteristic of his wide range of productions, it is the consistency whereby they are directed by predefined rules within the governing framework of which chaos may be unleashed. The rules provide a sense of security and control and yet may be so open that chaos can be created. Just as typical are his deliberately serious, yet ironic references to the history of film and the arts. In a typical postmodernistic way, genres, stylistic features, and themes from this history are to be found repeatedly throughout his work, but in personal interpretations and variations where his ambition is not only to make reference, but also to extend the film language he regards as conservative and limited, governed by commercial interests. Von Trier has succeeded like few others in pursuing his experimental, avant-garde intentions for cinema as an art while reaching a wide audience and creating what certainly looks like commercial success.

On von Trier has publicly stated what a shocking discovery it was for him when his mother told him on her deathbed that the man he had called his father all his life was not his biological father, but that his mother had deliberately chosen another donor presumed to possess artistic genes who could contribute to the production of the child she wanted. Since his adolescence Lars von Trier has been settling up with his middle-class home and its artistic and political pretensions. He benefited throughout childhood from his parents’ liberal approach to child raising, one result of which was that he left school in the 6th grade because he couldn’t accept discipline and already suffered from all kinds of phobias. Appointments with various psychologists resulted in his being taught at home, where from the age of ten he lived a life of his own, a life which included making 8 mm films. His settling of accounts also applied to the cultural values his home represented, and from childhood he cultivated everything his parents repudiated: the sentimental, the kitsch, bathetic children’s books, cartoon comics, etc. This culminated when he bought the rights to the collected works of Morten Korch via Zentropa—a series of low-brow novels which had been filmed between 1950 and the late 1960s to the unmitigated delight of Danish cinema-goers and the just as unmitigated disgust of the critics. The self-appointed arbiters of taste deemed Korch to be the ultimate in kitsch: sentimental, distorted art to seduce the masses, which Zentropa has so far turned into a twenty-six part television series and a feature film.

Even in his graduation project for the National Film School of Denmark the director demonstrated his talent to provoke and go against the flow, by portraying a German Wehrmacht soldier with the pathos of martyrdom. It is a thoroughly politically incorrect film, but it was also noticed for its ambition and its artistic courage, with Andrei Tarkovsky as an obvious source of inspiration. Immediately after that, von Trier was able to embark on his first feature, Element of Crime, intended as the introduction to a Europa trilogy to be completed with Epidemic and Europa. Each film has its set of rules—color scheme, budget and the metafilm element, and the use of front projection and black and white with a single color, respectively.
Hypnosis plays a major role in portraying an apocalyptic Europe shown with the visual features and themes of fascism. The film drew critical acclaim and international attention, but the director only reached larger audiences with his television series, The Kingdom I and II, which Trier himself called his pot-boilers. This does not mean the surrender of artistic integrity. The series may have been inspired by the endless hospital soaps, but also by David Lynch’s Twin Peaks, with its similar degree of stylistic awareness. Trier went further; he not only shot the entire series with whatever light there was, hand-held cameras, and a mobility drawn from television series such as NYPD Blue and Homicide, but also broke a number of the fundamental principles of film narrative by editing without regard for the general rules for camera angles, optical axes, and the use of edits in otherwise continual shots. With Morten Arnfred as assistant director, more effort went into directing the cast than in previous Trier works.

Before that, the director had launched yet another project with its own very special rules. Dimension is a film for which three minutes would be shot every year for thirty years (1991 to 2022), with its premiere on April 30, 2024, when von Trier will be 68. There is no script, but a synopsis mentions a poetic gangster story “which will take us around Europe and be acted out and among events and flash points.” Equally radical in its concept was the exhibition Psychomobile vml: The World Clock, which took place in 1996 at the Art Society Building in Copenhagen. The exhibition was a mixture not only of genres but of art forms such as installation and performance. The concept was to have a number of fictitious characters develop by improvisation but according to a set of predetermined rules. Fifty-three people were put into play in the nineteen rooms of the Art Society. The fifty-three circulated among the rooms and not only entered into new groupings, but also new mental relationships and dramatic conflicts, all determined by the ants in an ant heap in New Mexico. The ant heap was monitored by video, the images transmitted to Copenhagen by satellite, and the movements of the ants from zone to zone sparked changes in each actor’s position in the rooms, signalled by colored lights, and changes to their mental states. Based on their predefined characteristics the actors improvised a story for three hours a day, for fifty days. An endless piece of fiction and a fascinating experience, it was documented in Jesper Jargil’s film The Exhibited. Another project conceived and carried out by the “Dogme brethren” —a group of four directors whose manifest, “The Vow of Charity,” offered a radical approach to filmmaking—clearly bore von Trier’s imprint and seems to be an extension of the World Clock. It was performed live on New Year’s Eve 1999 in Copenhagen. Four characters moved around the city, each under the remote control of the four Dogme directors, each followed by his own film unit, and each furnished with his own story, which comes together in a bank heap. The following day the four plots were transmitted on four different TV channels, with a fifth showing the directors at work in the remote control suite, and a sixth showing all screens simultaneously. In true zapper style viewers could create their own versions of the story by changing channels at any time. It was more exciting as a concept and experiment than as a complete work, but it was imbued with von Trier’s sense of rules and the interplay between chaos and control.

Before these projects, von Trier’s most convincing feature film appeared. Breaking the Waves continued the hand-held technique familiar from The Kingdom, but this time in feature film—and CinemaScope—format. It was a project conceived as a melodrama and clearly based on the most melodramatic foundations imaginable, a kind of primordial melodrama about true love and the self-sacrificing woman. In Dancer in the Dark love between man and woman gives way to love between mother and son, incorporated into a musical in which the road to the scaffold is paved with musical numbers.

The control and chaos syndrome clearly emerges in The Idiots, perhaps the director’s most radical, personal film to date, in which the rules not only determine the conception of the film but that of the characters. They, too, have drawn up rules to test their limits in a film shaped like a project that has gone off the rails, and in which the director, with von Trier’s own voice, attempts to bring order to the chaos by trying to uncover just what went wrong. But here, too, the director is in full control of the effects utilized in miming the dreaded chaos staged, as the credits say with an ironic tongue-in-cheek, by . . . .

—Dan Nissen

von TROT TA, Margarethe

Films as Director:

1975 Die verlorene Ehre der Katharina Blum (The Lost Honor of Katharina Blum) (+ co-d, co-sc)
1977 Das zweite Erwachen der Christa Klages (The Second Awakening of Christa Klages) (+ sc)
1979 Schwester oder Die Balance des Glücks (Sisters, or The Balance of Happiness) (+ sc)
1981 Die Bleierne Zeit (Leaden Times; Marianne and Julianne; The German Sisters) (+ sc)
1983 Heller Wahn (Sheer Madness) (+ sc)
1986 Rosa Luxemburg
1987 episode of Felix
1988 Paura e amore (Three Sisters/Love and Fear)
1990 Die Rückkehr (Return; L’Africana)
1993 Il lungo silenzio (The Long Silence)
1994 Das versprechen (The Promise) (+ co-sc)
1997 Winterkind
1998 Mit fünfzig kissen Männer anders
1999 Dunkle Tage (for TV) (+ sc)

Other Films:

1968 Schräge Vögel (Ehmck) (role)
1969 Brandstifter (Lemke) (role); Göter der Pest (Fassbinder) (role as Margarethe)
Margarethe von Trotta

1970  Baal (Schlöndorff) (role as Sophie); Der amerikanische Soldat (Fassbinder) (role as maid)
1971  Der plötzliche Reichtum der armen Leute von Kombach (Schlöndorff) (co-sc, role as Heinrich’s woman); Die Moral der Ruth Halbfass (Schlöndorff) (role as Doris Vogelsang)
1972  Strohfeuer (Schlöndorff) (role as Elisabeth, co-sc)
1973  Desaster (Hauff) (role); Übernachtung in Tirol (Schlöndorff) (role as Katja)
1974  Invitation à la chasse (Chabrol) (for TV) (role as Paulette); Georgina’s Gründe (Schlöndorff) (for TV) (role as Kate Theory)
1975  Das andechser Gefühl (Achternbusch) (role as film actress)
1976  Der Fangschuss (Schlöndorff) (co-sc, role as Sophie von Reval)
1984  Blaubart (Bluebeard) (Zanussi) (role); Unerreichbare Nahe (Hirtz) (sc)

By von TROTTA: articles—

“Rebell helt enkelt,” an interview with P. Loewe, in Chaplin (Stockholm), vol. 35, no. 6, 1993.

By von TROTTA: books—

On von TROTTA: books—

On von TROTTA: articles—

Donough, Martin, ‘‘Margarethe von Trotta: Gynemegoguery and the Dilemmas of a Filmmaker,’’ in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), vol. 17, no. 3, 1989.

Martin, Michel, and Maurice Elia, ‘‘Margarethe von Trotta toujours présente,’’ in Séquences (Haute-Ville), November-December 1996.

* * *

An important aspect of Margarethe von Trotta’s filmmaking, which affects not only the content but also the representation of that content, is her emphasis on women and the relationships that can develop between them. For example, von Trotta chose as the central theme in two of her films (Sisters, or The Balance of Happiness and Marianne and Juliane) one of the most intense and complex relationships that can exist between two women, that of sisters. Whether von Trotta is dealing with overtly political themes as in The Second Awakening of Christa Klages (based on the true story of a woman who robs a bank in order to subsidize a daycare center) and Marianne and Juliane (based on the experiences of Christine Ensslin and her ‘‘terrorist’’ sister) or with the lives of ordinary women as in Sisters or The Balance of Happiness or Sheer Madness, von Trotta shows the political nature of relationships between women. By paying close attention to these relationships, von Trotta brings into question the social and political systems which either sustain them or do not allow them to exist.

Although the essence of von Trotta’s films is political and critical of the status quo, their structures are quite conventional. Her films are expensively made and highly subsidized by the film production company Bioskop, which was started by her husband Volker Schlöndorff and Reinhard Hauff, both filmmakers. Von Trotta joined the company when she started making her own films. She did not go through the complicated system of incentives and grants available to independent filmmakers in Germany. Rather, she began working for Schlöndorff as an actress and then as a scriptwriter, and finally on her own as a director and co-owner in the production company which subsidizes their films.

Von Trotta has been criticized by some feminists for working too closely within the system and for creating characters and structures which are too conventional to be of any political value. Other critics find that a feminist aesthetic can be found in her choice of themes. For although von Trotta uses conventional women characters, she does not represent them in traditional fashion. Nor does she describe them with stereotyped, sexist clichés; instead, she allows her characters to develop on screen through gestures, glances, and nuances. Great importance is given to the psychological and subconscious delineation of her characters, for von Trotta pays constant attention to dreams, visions, flashbacks, and personal obsessions. In this way, her work can be seen as inspired by the films of Bresson and Bergman, filmmakers who also use the film medium to portray psychological depth.

‘‘The unconscious and subconscious behavior of the characters is more important to me than what they do,’’ says von Trotta. For this reason, von Trotta spends a great deal of time with her actors and actresses to be sure that they really understand the emotions and motivations of the characters which they portray. This aspect of her filmmaking caused her to separate her work from that of her husband, Volker Schlöndorff. During their joint direction of The Lost Honor of Katharina Blum, it became apparent that Schlöndorff’s manner of directing, which focused on action shots, did not mix with his wife’s predilections for exploring the internal motivation of the characters. Her films are often criticized for paying too much attention to the psychological, and thus becoming too personal and inaccessible.

Von Trotta has caused much controversy within the feminist movement and outside of it. Nevertheless, her films have won several awards not only in her native Germany but also internationally, drawing large, diverse audiences. Her importance cannot be minimized. Although she employs the commonly used and accepted structures of popular filmmakers, her message is quite different. Her main characters are women and her films treat them in a serious and innovative fashion. Such treatment of women within a traditional form has in the past been undervalued or ignored. Her presentation of women has opened up possibilities for the development of the image of women on screen and contributed to the development of film itself.

Von Trotta’s films have continued to express other concerns that were central to her earlier work as well. These include examinations of German identity and the impact of recent German history on the present; the view of historical events through the perceptions of the individuals those events affect; the personal risks that individuals take when speaking the truth or exposing the hypocrisy of those in power; and, in particular, the strengths of women and the manner in which they relate to each other and evolve as their own individual selves.

Rosa Luxemburg is a highly intelligent, multi-faceted biopic of the idealistic, politically committed, but ill-fated humanist and democratic socialist who had such a high profile on the German political scene near the beginning of the twentieth century. Love and Fear, loosely based on Chekhov’s The Three Sisters, is an absorbing (if sometimes overdone) allegory about how life is forever in transition. It focuses on a trio of sisters, each with a different personality. The senior sibling is a scholarly type who is too cognizant of how quickly time goes by; the middle one lives an aimless life, and is ruled by her feelings; the junior in the group is a fervent, optimistic pre-med student.

The Long Silence is the story of a judge whose life is in danger because of his prosecution of corrupt government officials. After his murder—an unavoidable occurrence, given the circumstances—his gynecologist wife perseveres in continuing his work. The Promise, which reflects on the downfall of communism and the demise of the Berlin Wall, tells of two lovers who are separated in 1961 during a failed attempt to escape from East to West. With the exception of a brief reunion in Prague in 1968, they are held apart until 1989 and the fall of communism in East Germany.

—Gretchen Elsner-Sommer, updated by Rob Edelman
WAJDA, Andrzej

Films as Director and Scriptwriter:

1950 Kiedy ty śpisz (While You Sleep); Zły chłopiec (The Bad Boy)
1951 Ceramika Ilżecka (The Pottery of Ilzecka)
1955 Pokolenie (A Generation); Idę do słoñca (I Walk to the Sun)
1957 Kanal (They Loved Life; sewer)
1958 Popiół i diament (Ashes and Diamonds)
1959 Lotna
1960 Niewinni czarodzieje (Innocent Sorcerers)
1961 Samson
1962 Sibirsk Ledi Magbet (Lady Macbeth of Mtsensk; Fury Is a Woman; Siberian Lady Macbeth); “Warszawa” episode of L’Amour à Vingt Ans
1965 Popiły (Ashes)
1967 Bramy raju (Gates to Paradise; The Gates of Heaven; The Holy Apes)
1968 Wszystko na sprzedaż (Everything for Sale); Przekładaniec (Roly-Poly)
1969 Polowanie na muchy (Hunting Flies); Makbet (Macbeth) (for Polish TV)
1970 Krajobraz po bitwie (Landscape after the Battle); Brzezina (The Birchwood)
1972 Pilatus und andere—ein Film für Karfreitag (Pilate and Others); Wesele (The Wedding)
1974 Ziemia obiecan (Promised Land) (also as series on Polish TV)
1976 Smuga cienia (The Shadow Line)
1977 Człowiek z marmuru (Man of Marble); Bez znieczulenia (Without Anesthetic); Umarła klasa (for TV)
1978 Zaproszenie do wnętrza (Invitation to the Inside) (doc)
1979 Dyrygent (The Conductor); Panny z Wilka (The Girls from Wilko)
1981 Człowiek z żelaza (Man of Iron)
1982 Danton
1983 Eine Liebe in Deutschland (Un amour en Allemagne; A Love in Germany)
1985 Kronika wypadków milosnych (Chronicle of a Love Affair)
1987 Les Possédés (The Possessed)
1990 Korczak
1993 The Ring with the Crowned Eagle
1994 Natasha
1995 Wielki tydzień (Holy Week) (+ co-sc)
1996 Panna Nikt (Miss Nobody)
1999 Pan Tadeusz (Pan Tadeusz: The Last Foray in Lithuania) (+ co-sc)
Publications

By WAJDA: books—

By WAJDA: articles—

“‘Destroying the Commonplace,’” in Films and Filming (London), November 1961.
“‘Andrzej Wajda Speaking,’” in Kino (Warsaw), no. 1, 1968.
Interview with K. K. Przybylska, in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), Winter 1977.
Interview with Gideon Bachmann, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Winter 1982/83.
Interview with Marcel Ophuls, in American Film (Washington, D.C.), October 1983.
Interview with Dan Yakir, in Film Comment (New York), November/December 1984.
Interview with W. Wertenstein, in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1985.
Interview with T. Hubelski, in Kino (Warsaw), May 1990.
Interview with J. J. Skreiberg, in Film and Kino (Oslo), no. 4, 1990.
Interview with wanda Wertenstein, in Kino (Warsaw), November 1994.
“Interview with Martti Puukko, in Filmihullu (Helsinki), no. 5–6, 1998.

On WAJDA: books—

On WAJDA: articles—

Toepplitz, K., “Wajda Redivivus,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Winter 1969/70.

* * *

The history of Polish film is as old as the history of filmmaking in most European countries. For entire decades, however, its range was limited to Polish territory and a Polish audience. Only after the Second World War, at the end of the 1950s, did the phenomenon known as the “Polish school of filmmaking” make itself felt as a part of world cinema. The phenomenon went hand in hand with the appearance of a new generation of film artists who, despite differences in their artistic proclivities, have a number of traits in common. They are approximately the same age, having been born in the 1920s. They spent their early youth in the shadow of the fascist occupation and shared more or less similar postwar experiences. This is also the first generation of cinematographically accomplished artists with a complete grasp of both the theoretical and practical sides of filmmaking.

Their debut was conditioned by the social climate, which was characterized by a desire to eliminate the negative aspects of postwar development labelled as the cult of personality. The basic theme of their work was the effort to come to grips with the painful experience of the war, the resistance to the occupation, and the struggle to put a new face on Polish society and the recent past. Temporal distance allowed them to take a sober look at all these experiences without schematic depictions, without illusions, and without pathetic ceremony. They wanted to know the truth about those years, in which the foundations of their contemporary life were formed, and express it in the specific destinies of the individuals who lived, fought, and died in those crucial moments of history. And one of the most important traits uniting all the members of the “school” was the attempt to debunk the myths and legends about those times and the people who shaped them.

The most prominent representative of the Polish school is Andrzej Wajda. In the span of a few short years he made three films, Pokolenie, Kanal, and Popiół i diament, which form a kind of loose trilogy and can be considered among the points of departure for the emergence of popular Poland. Pokolenie tells of a group of young men and women fighting in occupied Warsaw; Kanal is a tragic story of the 1944 Warsaw Uprising; Popiół i diament takes place at the watershed between war and peace. Crystallized in these three films are the fundamental themes of Wajda’s work, themes characteristic of some other adherents of the “school” as well. In these films we also see the formation of Wajda’s own artistic stamp, his creative method, which consists of an emotional approach to history, a romantic conception of human fate, a rich visual sense, and dense expression that is elaborate to the point of being baroque. In his debut, Pokolenie, he renounces the dramatic aspect of the battle against the occupation and concentrates on the inner world of people for whom discovering the truth about their struggle was the same as discovering the truth about love. In Kanal he expresses disagreement with a myth long ago rooted in the consciousness of the Polish people and propounded in portrayals of the Warsaw Uprising—that the greatest meaning of life is death on the barricades. In the film Popiół i diament we hear for the first time in clear tones the theme of the Pole at the crossroads of history and the tragedy of his choice. Wajda expresses this theme not in abstract constructions but in a concrete reality with concrete heroes.

Wajda returns to the war experience several times. Lotna, in which the historical action precedes the above-mentioned trilogy, takes place in the tragic September of 1939, when Poland was overrun. Here Wajda continues to take a critical view of national tradition. Bitterness and derision toward the romanticization of the Polish struggle are blended here with sober judgment, and also with understanding for the world and for the people playing out the last tragicomic act on the historical stage. In the film Samson, the hero, a Jewish youth, throws off his lifelong passivity and by this action steps into the struggle. Finally, there is the 1970 film Krajobraz po bitwie, which, however, differs sharply from Wajda’s early films. The director himself characterized this difference in the following way: “It’s not I who am drawing back [from the war]. It’s the war. It and I are growing old together, and therefore it is more and more difficult for me to discover anything in it that was close to me.”

Krajobraz po bitwie has become Wajda’s farewell to the war for a long time. This does not mean, however, that the fundamental principles of the artistic method found in his early films have disappeared from his work, in spite of the fact that his work has developed in the most diverse directions over the course of forty years. The basic principles remain and, with time, develop, differentiate, and join with other motifs brought by personal and artistic experience. Some of the early motifs can be found in other contexts. Man’s dramatic attitude towards history, the Pole at the crossroads of history and his tragic choice—these we can find in the film Popiół, in the image of the fate of Poland in the period of the Napoleonic Wars, when a new society was taking shape in the oppressive atmosphere of a defeated country divided up among three victorious powers. People living in a time of great changes are the main heroes of Ziemia obiecana, which portrays the precipitous, drastic, and ineluctable course of the transition from feudalism to the capitalist order. A man’s situation at dramatic historical moments is also the subject of the films Człowiek z marmuru, Człowiek z żelaza, and Danton, which have met with more controversy than the preceding works. In Danton and similarly in Les Possédés another element is present: the description and criticism of destructive revolutionary forces, which lust for power and assert themselves brutally without regard for the rights of others.

Wajda’s work reveals many forms and many layers. Over time, historical films alternate with films on contemporary subjects; films with a broad social sweep alternate with films that concentrate on intimate human experiences. Wajda is conscious of these alternations. From history he returns to contemporaneity, so as not to lose contact with the times and with his audience. After a series of war films, he made the picture Niewinni czarodzieje, whose young heroes search for meaning in their lives. In the film Wszystko na sprzedaż, following the tragic death of his friend, the actor Zbigniew Cybulski, he became absorbed in the traces a person leaves behind in the memories and hearts of friends; at the same time he told of the problems of artistic searching and creation. Wajda’s attitudes on these questions are revealed again in the next film, Polowanie na muchy, and even more emphatically in Dyrigrant, where they are linked to the motif of faithfulness to one’s work and to oneself, to one’s ideals and convictions. The motif links Dyrigrant with Popiół i diament. Another theme of Dyrigrant—the inseparability of one’s personal, private life from one’s work and the mutual influence of the two—is the basic problem treated in Bez znieszczenia. In Wajda there are many such examples of the migration of themes and motifs from one film to another. They affirm the unity of his work despite the fact that alongside great and powerful works there are lesser and weaker films. Such, for example, is Wajda’s sole attempt in the genre of comedy, Polowanie na muchy, or the adaptation of Joseph Conrad’s novel Heart of Darkness, which underwent a cinematic transformation.

Another unifying element in Wajda’s oeuvre is his faithfulness to literary and artistic sources. A significant portion of his films come from literature, while the pictorial aspect finds its inspiration in the romantic artistic tradition. In addition to such broad historical frescoes as Popióły or Ziemia obiecana, these include, for example, Stanislaw Wyspianski’s drama of 1901, Wesele, important for its grasp of Poland at a bleak point in the country’s history. Wajda translated it to the screen in all the breadth of its meaning, with an accent on the impossibility of mutual understanding between disparate cultural milieus. The director also selected from the literary heritage works that would allow him to address man’s existential questions, attitudes towards life and death. This theme resonates most fully in adaptations of two works by the writer Jaroslaw Iwaszkiewicz, Brzezina and Panny z Wilka, in which the heroes are found not in history but in life, where they are threatened not by war but by old age, illness, and death, and where they must struggle only with themselves. To address such existential tension Wajda also developed a transcription of Mikhail Bulgakov’s prose work The Master and Margarita, filmed for television in the German Democratic Republic under the title Pilatus und andere-ein Film für Karfreitag.

In the 1980s, after a number of years, Wajda goes back to the subject of war. It is in the nostalgic Kronika wypadków milosnych, which deals with young people into whose loves and disappointments creeps the premonition of a military catastrophe and death. Eine Liebe in Deutschland is about the tragic consequences of the love felt by a married German woman for a Polish prisoner. And it is also the subject of Korczak, the most important work of Wajda’s comeback. The director based Korczak on an authentic story, and the hero who gave the film its name is a portrait of a real person. After the arrival of the German occupying forces in Poland, Korczak followed his charges from an orphanage into the Jewish Ghetto, and in the end of his own free will into the extermination concentration camp of Treblinka. With this film about Korczak Wajda closed, for the time being, one of the great subjects of his life and work. He has done this by employing the simplest and therefore the most effective method: black-and-white photography, which renders a sober record of life in a sealed-off ghetto and at the same time pays homage to the unostentatious heroism of a man who, face to face with death, did not forget the moral code of the human race.

Wajda’s oeuvre, encompassing artistic triumphs and failures, forms a unified but incomplete whole. The affinity among his films is determined by a choice of themes which enables him to depict great historical syntheses, metaphors, and symbols. He is constantly drawn to those moments in the destinies of individuals and groups that are crossroads of events with tragic consequences. In his films the main motifs of human existence are interwoven—death and life, love, defeat, and the tragic dilemma of having to choose, the impossibility of realizing great aspirations. All these motifs are subordinated to history, even a feeling as subjective as love.

Wajda’s films have not been, and are not, uniformly received by audiences or critics. They have always provoked discussions in which enthusiasm has confronted condemnation and agreement has confronted disagreement and even hostility; despite some failures, however, Wajda’s films have never been met with indifference.

—Blažena Urgošiková

WALSH, Raoul

Nationality: American. Born: New York City, 11 March 1887 (some sources say 1892). Education: Attended Public School 93, New York; also attended Seton Hall College. Family: Married 1) Miriam Cooper, 1916 (divorced 1927); 2) Mary Edna Simpson, 1941. Career: Sailed to Cuba on uncle’s trading ship, 1903; horse wrangler in Mexico, 1903–04; worked in variety of jobs in United States, including surgeon’s assistant and undertaker, 1904–10; cowboy actor in Mexico, 1903–04; worked in variety of jobs in United States, including surgeon’s assistant and undertaker, 1904–10; cowboy actor in films for Pathé Studio, New Jersey, then for Biograph, from 1910; actor and assistant to D.W. Griffith, then director at Biograph, Hollywood, from 1912; director for William Fox, from 1916; lost eye in auto accident, 1928; introduced John Wayne as feature actor in The Big Trail, 1930; director for various studios, then retired to ranch, 1964. Died: In California, 31 December 1980.

Films as Director:

1912 The Life of General Villa (co-d, role as young Villa); Outlaw’s Revenge
1913 The Double Knot (+ pr, sc, role); The Mystery of the Hindu Image (+ pr, sc); The Gunman (+ pr, sc; credit contested)
1914 The Final Verdict (+ pr, sc, role); The Bowery
1915 The Regeneration (+ co-sc); Carmen (+ pr, sc); The Death Dice (+ pr, sc; credit contested); His Return (+ pr); The Greaser (+ pr, sc, role); The Fencing Master (+ pr, sc); A Man for All That (+ pr, sc, role); 11:30 P.M. (+ pr, sc); The Buried Hand (+pr, sc); The Celestial Code (+ pr, sc); A Bad Man and Others (+ pr, sc); Home from the Sea; The Lone Cowboy (+ co-sc)
1916 Blue Blood and Red (+ pr, sc); The Serpent (+ pr, sc); Pillars of Society
1917 The Honor System; The Silent Lie; The Innocent Sinner (+ sc); Betrayed (+ sc); The Conqueror (+ sc); This Is the Life
1918 Pride of New York (+ sc); The Woman and the Law (+ sc); The Prussian Cur (+ sc); On the Jump (+ sc); I’ll Say So
1919 Should a Husband Forgive (+ sc); Evangeline (+ sc); Every Mother’s Son (+ sc)
1920 The Strongest (+ sc); The Deep Purple; From Now On 1921 The Oath (+ pr, sc); Serenade (+ pr)
1923 Lost and Found on a South Sea Island (Passions of the Sea); Kindred of the Dust (+ pr, sc)
1924 The Thief of Bagdad
1925 East of Suez (+ pr); The Spaniard (+ co-pr); The Wanderer (+ co-pr)
1926 The Lucky Lady (+ co-pr); The Lady of the Harem; What Price Glory
1927 The Monkey Talks (+ pr); The Loves of Carmen (+ sc)
1928 Sadie Thompson (Rain) (+ co-sc, role); The Red Dance; Me Gangster (+ co-sc)
1929 In Old Arizona (co-d); The Cock-eyed World (+ co-sc); Hot for Paris (co-sc)
1930 The Big Trail
1931 The Man Who Came Back; Women of all Nations; The Yellow Ticket
1932 Wild Girl; Me and My Gal
1933 Sailor’s Luck; The Bowery; Going Hollywood
1935 Under Pressure; Baby Face Harrington; Every Night at Night
1936 Klondike Annie; Big Brown Eyes (+ co-sc); Spendthrift
1937 O.H.M.S. (You’re in the Army Now); When Thief Meets Thief; Artists and Models; Hitting a New High
1938 College Swing
1939 St. Louis Blues; The Roaring Twenties
1940 The Dark Command (+ pr); They Drive by Night
1941 High Sierra; The Strawberry Blonde; Manpower; They Died with Their Boots On 1942 Desperate Journey; Gentleman Jim
1943 Background to Danger; Northern Pursuit
1944 Uncertain Glory; San Antonio (unccredited co-d); Salty O’Rourke; The Horn Blows at Midnight
1946 The Man I Love
1947 Pursued; Cheyenne; Stallion Road (uncredited co-d)
1948 Silver River; Fighter Squadron; One Sunday Afternoon
1949 Colorado Territory; White Heat
1950 The Enforcer (uncredited co-d); Montana (uncredited co-d)
1951 Along the Great Divide; Captain Horatio Hornblower; Distant Drums
1952 The World in His Arms; The Lawless Breed; Blackbeard the Pirate
1953 Sea Devils; A Lion in the Streets; Gun Fury
1954 Saskatchewan
1955 Battle Cry; The Tall Men
1956 The Revolt of Mamie Stover; The King and Four Queens
1957 Band of Angels
1958 The Naked and the Dead; The Sheriff of Fractured Jaw
1959 A Private’s Affair
1960 Esther and the King (+ pr, sc)
1961 Marines, Let’s Go (+ pr, sc)
1964 A Distant Trumpet

Other Films:
1910 The Banker’s Daughter (Griffith) (role as bank clerk); A Mother’s Love (role as young man); Paul Revere’s Ride (Emile Cocteau) (role as Paul Revere)
1915 Birth of a Nation (Griffith) (role as John Wilkes Booth)

Publications

By WALSH: books—

Each Man in His Time, New York, 1974.

By WALSH: articles—

Interview with Guy Braucourt, in Ecran (Paris), September/October 1972.
“Can You Ride the Horse?,” an interview with J. Childs, in Sight and Sound (London), Winter 1972/73.
“Raoul Walsh Talks about D.W. Griffith,” with P. Montgomery, in Film Heritage (New York), Spring 1975.

On WALSH: books—

Hardy, Phil, editor, Raoul Walsh, Edinburgh, 1974.

On WALSH: articles—

Dienstfrey, Harris, “Hitch Your Genre to a Star,” in Film Culture (New York), Fall 1964.
Farber, Manny, “Raoul Walsh: ‘He Used to Be a Big Shot,’” in Sight and Sound (London), Winter 1974/75.
Comuzio, Ermanno, Castoro Cinema (Milan), special issue, no. 95, 1981.

Raoul Walsh’s extraordinary career spanned the history of the American motion picture industry from its emergence, through its glory years in the 1930s and 1940s, and into the television era. Like his colleagues Alan Dwan, King Vidor, John Ford, and Henry King, whose careers also covered 50 years, Walsh continuously turned out popular fare, including several extraordinary hits. Movie fans have long appreciated the work of this director’s director. But only when auteurs began to closely examine his films was Walsh “discovered,” first by the French (in the 1960s), and then by American and British critics (in the 1970s). To these critics Walsh’s action films come to represent a unified view, put forth by means of a simple, straightforward technique. Raoul Walsh is now accepted as an example of a master Hollywood craftsman who worked with naive skill and an animal energy, a director who was both frustrated and buoyed by the studio system.

Unfortunately, this view neglects Walsh’s important place in the silent cinema. Raoul Walsh began his career with an industry still centered in and around New York City, the director’s birthplace. He started as an actor in Pathé westerns filmed in New Jersey, and then journeyed to California to be with D.W. Griffith’s Fine Arts production company. Walsh apprenticed with Griffith as an actor, appearing in his most famous role as John Wilkes Booth in Birth of a Nation. Walsh then turned to directing, first for the fledgling Film Company. For the next five years (interrupted by World War I service experience) Walsh would master the craft of filmmaking, absorbing lessons which would serve him for more than forty years. His apprenticeship led to major assignments, and his greatest financial successes came in the 1920s. Douglas Fairbanks’s The Thief of Bagdad was directed by Walsh at the height of that famous star’s career.

Walsh took advantage of this acclaim by moving for a time to the top studio of that era, Paramount, and then signed a lucrative long-term contract with Fox. At that point Fox began expanding into the top studio of that era, Paramount, and then signed a lucrative long-term contract with Fox. Unfortunately, this view neglects Walsh’s important place in the silent cinema. Raoul Walsh began his career with an industry still centered in and around New York City, the director’s birthplace. He started as an actor in Pathé westerns filmed in New Jersey, and then journeyed to California to be with D.W. Griffith’s Fine Arts production company. Walsh apprenticed with Griffith as an actor, appearing in the most famous role as John Wilkes Booth in Birth of a Nation. Walsh then turned to directing, first for the fledgling Film Company. For the next five years (interrupted by World War I service experience) Walsh would master the craft of filmmaking, absorbing lessons which would serve him for more than forty years. His apprenticeship led to major assignments, and his greatest financial successes came in the 1920s. Douglas Fairbanks’s The Thief of Bagdad was directed by Walsh at the height of that famous star’s career.

Walsh took advantage of this acclaim by moving for a time to the top studio of that era, Paramount, and then signed a lucrative long-term contract with Fox. At that point Fox began expanding into the top studio of that era, Paramount, and then signed a lucrative long-term contract with Fox. Consequently, when Fox was about to convert to all-sound features, corporate chieftains turned to Walsh to direct In Old Arizona, in 1929. (It was on location for that film that Walsh lost his eye.) Because of its experience with newsreel shooting, Fox was the only studio at the time that could film and record quality sound on location. Walsh’s next film used the 70mm “Grandeur” process on a western, The Big Trail. The film did well but could not save the company from succumbing to the Great Depression.

Walsh’s career stagnated during the 1930s. He and Fox never achieved the heights of the late 1920s. When Darryl F. Zanuck came aboard with the Twentieth Century merger in 1935, Walsh moved on, freelancing until he signed with Warners in 1939. For slightly more than a decade, Walsh functioned as a contract director at Warners, turning out two or three films a year. Walsh never established the degree of control he had enjoyed over the silent film projects, but he seemed to thrive in the restrictive Warners environment. Walsh’s first three films at Warners fit into that studio’s mode of crime melodramas: The Roaring Twenties, They Drive by Night, and High Sierra. The Roaring Twenties was not a classic gangster film, like Warners’ Little Caesar and Public Enemy, but was a realistic portrait of the socio-economic environment in the United States after World War I. High Sierra looked ahead to the film noir of the 1940s. In that film the gangster became a sympathetic character trapped by forces he did not understand. During the World War II era Walsh turned to war films with a textbook example of what a war action film ought to be. Walsh continued making crime melodramas and war films in the late 1940s and early 1950s. Battle Cry, The Naked and the Dead, and Marines, Let’s Go proved that he could adapt to changing tastes within familiar genres.

Arguably Walsh’s best film of the post-war era was White Heat, made for Warners in 1949. The James Cagney character is portrayed against type: we see the gangster hiding and running, trying to escape his past and his social, economic, and psychological background. White Heat was the apex of Walsh’s work at Warners, for it simultaneously fit into an accepted mode and transcended the formula. White Heat has come to symbolize the tough Raoul Walsh action film. Certainly that same sort of style can also be seen in his westerns at Warners, They Died with Their Boots On, Pursued, and a remake of High Sierra called Colorado Territory. But there are other sides of the Walsh oeuvre, usually overlooked by critics, or at most awkwardly positioned among the action films. The Strawberry Blonde is a warm, affectionate, turn-of-the-century tale of small town America. Gentleman Jim of 1942 also swims in sentimentality. These films indicate that Walsh, though known as an action director, certainly had a soft touch when required. Indeed, when his works are closely examined, it is clear that Walsh had the ability to adapt to many different themes and points of view.

The 1950s seemed to pass Walsh by. Freed from the confines of the rigid studio system, Walsh’s output became less interesting. But he was a survivor. He completed his final feature, a cavalry film for Warners called A Distant Trumpet, in 1964. By then Raoul Walsh had truly become a Hollywood legend, having reached two career peaks in a more than fifty-year career. To carefully examine the career of Raoul Walsh is to study the history of the American film in toto, for the two are nearly the same length and inexorably intertwined.

—Douglas Gomery

WARD, Vincent

Nationality: New Zealander. Born: Greytown, New Zealand, 16 February 1956. Education: Attended the Ilam School of Art, Christchurch, New Zealand, where he intended to study painting but took up filmmaking instead. Career: Directed and co-wrote first films at age twenty-one, 1977–1978; directed first feature, Vigil, 1984; came to the United States to work on Alien3, 1992; currently based in Australia and the United States. Awards: Silver Hugo Award, Chicago Festival, 1978, for A State of Siege; Silver Hugo Award, Chicago Festival, 1980, for In Spring One Plants Alone: Grand Prix Award, Prades Festival, Grand Prix Award, Madrid Festival, and Best Film, Imag Fic Festival, all 1984, all for Vigil; Australian Film Awards, Best Picture and Best Director, 1988, for The Navigator: A Medieval Odyssey. Agent: CAA, 9830 Wilshire Blvd., Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A. Address: P.O. Box 423, Kings Cross, NSW 2011, Australia.

Films as Director and Screenwriter:

1977 Ma Olsen (short)
1978 A State of Siege (short)
1980 In Spring One Plants Alone (short)
1984 Vigil
1988 The Navigator: A Medieval Odyssey
1992 Map of the Human Heart (+ pr)
1998 What Dreams May Come (+pr)

Other Films:

1992 Alien3 (story)
1995 Leaving Las Vegas (ro of Businessman 1)
1996  The Shot (ro of Smith)
1997  One Night Stand (ro of Nathan)

Publications

By WARD: article—

On WARD: articles—

* * *

After completing just three feature films, Vincent Ward has established himself as a filmmaker of great individuality, intensity, and creativity. His narrative technique is centered on the fundamental importance of the image; he has a painter’s eye for capturing arresting, eye-popping visuals. However, all of his films are united not only by their imagery, While he resists categorizing himself and his work, Ward did admit in an interview with this writer that “I like to make films that say something about people.”

Ward’s characters are linked in that they consistently are isolated, trapped by the barren, desolate rural environments in which they have come of age. Ward is most interested in examining the manner in which they relate to their surroundings and, even more importantly, how they are touched by the outside world. Clearly, this theme is tied into the filmmaker’s own roots in New Zealand, a mostly rural country located at the very bottom of the world.

Vigil is a fine debut feature, the deeply personal story of a young farmgirl, on the cusp of adolescence, who is growing up in an isolated locale in backwoods New Zealand. The outside world comes to her in the person of a hunter, who arrives on the scene upon the death of her father and whose presence impacts on her and her family. Ward manages to get inside the mind of this child as he depicts the world around her in all of its realities and contradictions. That world is seen through her perceptions, fantasies, and lack of life experience. There is a raw energy present in Vigil, an energy created by a filmmaker who has total admiration for the art of cinema and the power of the moving image.

In Ward’s follow-ups, The Navigator: A Medieval Odyssey and Map of the Human Heart, he expands his characters’ horizons in that, near the beginning of each story, he has them leaving their homelands and entering the outside world. The Navigator is the stunningly visual account, set in the year 1348, of a group of townspeople in Cumbria who embark on the title journey in order to escape a plague. At the end of their trip, they come upon an ultra-modern, twentieth-century metropolis. Here, the film becomes a view of a contemporary, technological society as seen through the perceptions of medieval man. The special effects in The Navigator are especially impressive. Ward cleverly used small-scale cardboard and plywood miniatures to create his “future” city; the film was shot on a modest budget, yet it has the look of a multi-million-dollar Hollywood epic.

Ward’s third feature, Map of the Human Heart, is a heartrending drama, a thoughtful, emotionally involving film about clashing cultures and the corruption of innocence. Ward tells the story of Avik (Jason Scott Lee), an Eskimo who might easily be described as a child of fate. As a young boy in the early 1930s, Avik’s encounter with an Arctic mapmaker (Patrick Bergin) leads him into “civilization,” where he meets Albertine (Anne Parillaud), half-Indian and half-French Canadian, who is destined to be his true love. Also key to the story is Avik’s becoming a combat pilot, and his participation in World War II. Especially in The Navigator and Map of the Human Heart, Ward’s characters become convinced that by entering the outside world they can alter their lives and their fates. They share a faith in their futures, and it is this very faith that allows them—for better or for worse—to take action by moving out of their native environs and into the world at large.

To date, Ward’s sole Hollywood credit is Alien 3, for which he authored the story upon which the screenplay was based. It is a shame that, entering mid-career, this daringly original and always-interesting filmmaker has only three feature films to his credit. “It’s easy to get films made that are more generic,” Ward states. “I want my films to be accessible, though I also want to do them on my own terms, and to be about my own concerns as a filmmaker.”

—Rob Edelman

WARHOL, Andy

Andy Warhol

Films as Director and Producer:

1963 Tarzan and Jane Regained . . . Sort Of; Sleep; Kiss; Andy Warhol Films Jack Smith Filming Normal Love; Dance Movie (Roller Skate); Salome and Delilah; Haircut; Blow Job

1964 Empire; Batman Dracula; The End of Dawn; Naomi and Rufus Kiss; Henry Geldzahler; The Lester Persky Story (Soap Opera); Couch; Shoulder; Mario Banana; Harlot; Taylor Mead’s Ass

1965 Thirteen Most Beautiful Women; Thirteen Most Beautiful Boys; Fifty Fantastics; Fifty Personalities; Ivy and John; Screen Test I; Screen Test II; The Life of Juanita Castro; Drunk; Suicide; Horse; Vinyl; Bitch; Poor Little Rich Girl; Face; Restaurant; Afternoon; Prison; Space; Outer and Inner Space; Camp; Paul Swan; Hedy (Hedy the Shoplifter or The Fourteen-Year-Old Girl); The Closet; Lupe; More Milk, Evette

1966 Kitchen; My Hustler; Bufferin (Gerard Malanga Reads Poetry); Eating Too Fast; The Velvet Underground; Chelsea Girls

1967  * * * * (Four Stars) [parts of * * * * include International Velvet; Alan and Dickin; Imitation of Christ; Courtoom; Gerard Has His Hair Removed with Nair; Katrina Dead; Sausalito; Alan and Apple; Group One; Sunset Beach on Long Island; High Ashbury; Tiger Morse]; I, a Man; Bike Boy; Nude Restaurant; The Loves of Ondine

1968 Lonesome Cowboys; Blue Movie (Fuck); Flesh (d Morrissey, pr Warhol)

1970 Trash (d Morrissey, pr Warhol)

1972 Women in Revolt (co-d with Morrissey); Heat (d Morrissey, pr Warhol)

1973 L’Amour (co-d, pr, co-sc with Morrissey)

1974 Andy Warhol’s Frankenstein (d Morrissey, pr Warhol); Andy Warhol’s Dracula (d Morrissey, pr Warhol)

1977 Andy Warhol’s Bad (d Morrissey, pr Warhol)
Other Films

1986  Vamp (Wenk) (contributing artist)

Publications

By WARHOL: books—

The Philosophy of Andy Warhol (From A to B and Back Again), New York, 1975.

By WARHOL: articles—

Interview with David Ehrenstein, in Film Culture (New York), Spring 1966.

Interview with Tony Rayns, in Cinema (London), August 1970.

Interview with Ralph Pomeroy, in Afterimage (Rochester), Autumn 1970.

On WARHOL: books—

On WARHOL: articles—

Stoller, James, “Beyond Cinema: Notes on Some Films by Andy Warhol,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Fall 1966.

Tyler, Parker, “Dragtime and Drugtime: or Film à la Warhol,” in Evergreen Review (New York), April 1967.

“Warhol,” in Film Culture (New York), Summer 1967.

On WARHOL: film—

* * * *

By the time he screened his first films in 1963, Andy Warhol was well on his way to becoming the most famous “‘pop’” artist in the world, and his variations on the theme of Campbell’s soup cans had already assumed archetypal significance for art in the age of mechanical reproduction. Given Warhol’s penchant for the automatic and mass-produced, his movement from sculpture, canvas, and silk-screen into cinema seemed logical; and his films were as passive, as intentionally “empty,” as significant of the artist’s absence as his previous work or as the image he projected of himself. One of his earliest films, Kiss, was no more nor less than a series of people kissing in closeup, each scene running the three-minute length of a 16mm daylight reel, complete with flash frames at both ends. But it was his 1963 film Sleep, a six-hour movie comprised of variously framed shots of a naked sleeping man, which made Warhol a star on the burgeoning New York underground film scene. As though to dispel any doubts that his message was the medium, Warhol followed Sleep with Empire, an eight-hour stationary view of the Empire State Building, creating a kind of cinematic limit case for the Bazinian integrity of the shot. It was a film of such conceptual significance that if it did not exist it would have to be invented; yet it was a film that was equally unwatchable (even Warhol refused to sit through it).

During the period 1963 to 1967, Warhol made some fifty-five films, ranging in length from four minutes (Mario Banana, 1964) to twenty-five hours (Heat, 1967). All were informed by the passive, mechanical aesthetic of simply turning on the camera to record what was in front of it. Generally, what was recorded were the antics of Warhol’s E. 47th Street “Factory” coterie—a host of friends, artists, junkies, transvestites, rock singers, hustlers, fugitives, and hangers-on. Ad-libbing, “camping,” being themselves (and often more than themselves) before the unblinking eye of Warhol’s camera, they became “‘superstars’”—underground celebrities epitomizing Warhol’s consumer-democratic ideal of fifteen minutes’ fame for everyone.

Despite Warhol’s cultivated image as the “‘tycoon of passivity,’” his films display a cool but very dry wit. Blow Job, for example, consisted of thirty minutes of a closeup of the expressionless face of a man being fellated outside the frame—a coyly humorous presentation of a forbidden act in an image perversely composed as a denial of pleasure (for the actor and the audience). Mario Banana simply presented the spectacle of transvestite Mario Montez eating bananas while in drag. Harlot, Warhol’s first sound film, featured Mario (again eating bananas) sitting next to a woman in an evening dress, with the entirety of the virtually inaudible dialogue coming from three men positioned off-screen.

In the course of his films, Warhol seemed to be retracing the history of the cinema, from silence to sound to color (Chelsea Girls); from a fascination with the camera’s “‘documentary’” capabilities (Empire) to attempts at narrative by 1965. Vinyl, an adaption of Anthony Burgess’s A Clockwork Orange, involved a single high-angle camera position tightly framing a group of mostly uninvolved factory types, with protagonist Gerard Malanga sitting in a chair, reading his lines off a script on the floor, and being tortured with dripping candle wax and a “‘popper’” overdose. When the camera accidently fell over in the middle of the proceedings, it was quickly returned to its original position without a break in the action. My Hustler offered a modicum of story, audible dialogue, and two shots—one of a repetitive pan from a gay man talking to friends on the deck of a Fire Island beach house to his hired male prostitute sunning himself on the beach. The second shot, which fails to reveal the outcome of a wager made in the first section, shows the hustler and another man taking showers and grooming themselves in a crowded bathroom (a scene which made the pages of Life magazine for its brief male nudity).

It was Chelsea Girls, however, which resulted in Warhol’s breakthrough to national and international exposure. A three-hour film in black-and-white and color, shown on two screens at once, it featured almost all the resident “‘superstars’” in scenes supposedly taking place in various rooms of New York’s Chelsea Hotel. After Chelsea Girls’ financial success, subsequent Warhol films like I, a Man; Bike Boy; Nude Restaurant; and Lonesome Cowboys became a bit more technically astute and conventionally feature-length. Simultaneously, the scenes taking place in front of the camera in these films, while they maintained their bizarre, directionless, and ad-libbed quality, became more sensational in their presentation of nudity and sex. Warhol’s last hurrah, Lonesome Cowboys, was actually shot in Arizona. It featured a number of “‘superstars’” dressing in western garb, posing and walking through a nearly non-existent story amongst western movie sets. It was the last film Warhol completed before he was seriously wounded in an assassination attempt by marginal factory character Valerie Solanas.

Warhol’s shooting marked the beginning of a period of reclusiveness for the artist. Subsequent “‘Warhol’” films were the product of cohort and collaborator Paul Morrissey, who has been credited with the increasing commercialism of the 1967 films (not to mention the decline of the factory “‘scene’”). While Warhol lay in the hospital recovering from gunshot wounds, Morrissey completed a film on his own titled Flesh—a series of episodes basically recounting a day in the life of Joe Dallesandro (who appears nude more often than not), featuring Warhol-like performances and camera work, but adding a discernible story line and even character motivations.

From 1970 to 1974, Morrissey’s films under Warhol’s name quickly became not only more commercial, but more technically accomplished and traditionally plotted as well. After Trash, a kind of watershed film that featured Joe and Holly Woodlawn in a narrative comedy about some marginal New York junkies and low-lifes, Morrissey even began to tone down the nudity. Women in Revolt, which was virtually a full-fledged melodrama, featured three transvestites playing the women of the title. Heat, shot in Los Angeles, had Dallesandro and New York cult actress/screen personality Sylvia Miles playing out a sleazy remake of Sunset Boulevard. L’Amour took the whole Morrissey coterie to Paris.
Morrissey’s big step into mainstream filmmaking came with the 1974 production of Andy Warhol’s Frankenstein, a preposterously gory, tongue-in-cheek horror film rendered in perfectly seamless, classical Hollywood style, and in a highly accomplished 3-D process. As outrageous as it was in its surrealistically bloody excess, and for all its “high-camp” attitude, the film bore almost no resemblance to the films of Andy Warhol; nor did Morrissey’s Blood for Dracula, made at the same time, with virtually the same cast, but without 3-D. Since that time, Morrissey has pursued a career apart from Warhol’s name as an independent commercial filmmaker.

—Ed Lowry

WATERS, John

Nationality: American. Born: Baltimore, Maryland, April 29, 1946. Education: Attended University of Baltimore, 1965, and New York University, 1966; claims to have been thrown out of film school. Career: Made first short film with 8mm camera, 1964; directed first feature, Mondo Trasho (financed for $2,000 by father), and began collaboration with Divine, 1969; arrested on eve of premiere of Mondo Trasho and charged with “conspiracy to commit indecent exposure”; directed first-ever scratch-and-sniff movie, Polyester, 1981; teacher at Baltimore Prison, 1980s.

Films as Director, Producer, and Screenwriter:

1964 Hag in a Leather Jacket (short)
1966 Roman Candles (3 shorts)
1968 Eat Your Makeup (short)
1969 Mondo Trasho (+ ed, cin)
1970 Multiple Maniacs
1972 Pink Flamingoes (+ ed, cin)
1974 Female Trouble (+ cin)
1977 Desperate Living
1981 Polyester
1988 Hairspray (co-pr + role as Dr. Frederickson)
1990 Cry Baby
1994 Serial Mom (+ cameo role as Ted Bundy)
1999 Pecker (+ voice as Pervert on Phone)
2000 Cecil B. Demented

Other Films:

1986 Something Wild (Demme) (as Used Car Guy)
1989 Homer and Eddie (Mikhalkov-Konchalovsky) (as Robber vml)
1998 Home Movie on John Waters (Populin — short) (as Himself); Divine Trash (Yaeger — doc) (as Himself)
1999 In Bad Taste (Yaeger — doc) (as Himself); Forever Hollywood (Glassman/McCarthy — doc) (as Himself); Sweet and Lowdown (Allen) (as Mr. Haynes)

Publications

By WATERS: books—

By WATERS: articles—

Interview, in Film Comment (New York), June 1981.
“John Waters’ Guilty Pleasures,” in Film Comment (New York), July/August 1983.
Interview with Karen Jaehne, in Stills (London), November/December 1983.
Interview, in Interview (New York), December 1986.

“Walgelijk!,” an interview with K. Vandemaele, in Skoop (Amsterdam), July/August 1990.

Interview with Robert Seidenberg, in Empire (London), August 1990.

On WATERS: books—

On WATERS: articles—

* * *

One of the major surprises of Hairspray is that, in addition to being quite charmingly benign, it exhibits a technical competence, even flair, totally unsuggested by John Waters’s earlier works. Between his seventeen-minute home movie Hag in a Black Leather Jacket and his semi-overground scratch-and-smiff feature Polyester, the Baltimore-based Waters’s films improve only insofar as their increasing—though still minuscule—budgets allow for such luxuries as colour, synchronised sound, and camera set-ups. His best-known early works, Pink Flamingoes, Female Trouble, and Desperate Living, manage to combine the conceptually outrageous with all the technical skills of the average home movie or hardcore porno quickie. Financing his first films through shoplifting and surrounding his habitual star—300-pound transvestite Divine—with various comically depraved and/or hideous friends who are at once funnier, grosser, and more extreme than Warhol’s factory folk, Waters created in Mondo Trasho and Multiple Maniacs a self-contained world of the defiantly sick, where beauty and ugliness, good and bad, and restraint and excess are juggled to a surprisingly moral, endearing effect. His scatological obsessions are less Swiftian than pre-adolescent, and he always seems to view his movies as ratty fairy tales in the Saki or Disney manner, often poking fun at the very idea of something being offensive even while going as far as is possible on screen.

Pink Flamingoes is Waters’s disposable masterpiece, in which Divine and entourage—including the horrifying Edy Massey—battle with a group of more upright degenerates—including the talented Mink Stole, who has stuck with Waters throughout his career—for the title of “World’s Filthiest Person.” Waters simply uses the premise as an excuse for getting as much depravity on screen as possible, winding up with an unforgettable punchline as Divine outgrosses everyone by cheerfully eating dog shit. The rest of the picture matches the tone of this classic moment, with a DIY artificial insemination, a musical rectum, a half-naked egg-sucking grandmother, a touch of hardcore gay sex, a hokey cannibal orgy that satirises Night of the Living Dead, plentiful raving (“filth is my politics, filth is my life,” claims Divine), bad-taste Manson jokes, and a sexual act that involves killing chickens to add to the gross-out count. Typical of the film’s trashiness and compounding of illegality with the distasteful is the idea of Divine shoplifting a hunk of frozen meat by slipping it into her panties and then serving it to her family for dinner, claiming that it has been “warmed in her own oven.” Nevertheless, much of the funniest stuff in the movie is deadpanned, as when Divine’s loyal son staunchly reacts to an insult to his mother with “Mama, nobody sends you a turd and expects to live.”

Waters has claimed that “I pride myself in the fact that my work has no socially redeeming value,” but underneath it all he is an All-American Boy seeing how far he can go before his parents send him up to his room, and his essays—collected in Shock Value and Crackpot—reveal that he is a witty moralist. At worst, his films are merely tedious, but at best they are life-affirming in the way that Tom Lehrer’s gleefully sick songs can be. Pink Flamingoes, no matter how difficult it might be to sit through, is a one-of-a-kind movie, disarming and necessary in the way that Wavelength and The Act of Seeing with One’s Own Eyes are, but it proved an almost impossible act to follow. Female Trouble and Desperate Living are more of the same—with Divine leading a glamorous life of crime in the former and dying beautifully in the electric chair, and Mink Stole running away to join a community of murderous lesbian outcasts in the latter—only not as effectively offensive. Both films have their moments, both of humour (Divine strangling a hare krishna) and sickness (Susan Lowe reversing her sex change by snipping off her new penis with a pair of scissors), but they do not have the demented charm of Pink Flamingoes. Polyester, a nervous step towards the mainstream with less overt violence and one name actor (Tab Hunter), is a half-hearted picture, turning its back on sex and violence because Waters justifiably felt that other movies (Ilsa, She-Wolf of the SS, Thundercrack!, Cafe Flesh, Appointment with Agony) had gone further than he would care to, but finding little in its leftover soap-opera plot worth guying, although it has a priceless joke about a dive-in cinema advertising “three great Marguerite Duras hits” and offering champagne at its snack bar. With Polyester, it was also becoming notable that Waters’s mainly amateur casts had never been quite up to the demands of his acid, cleverly turned dialogue, and that Divine—as disastrously revealed in the Paul Bartel-directed but seemingly Waters-inspired “trash western” spoof Last in the Dust (which also starred Tab Hunter)—was incapable of turning a drag act into an acting performance worth building a film around.

After Polyester, Waters spent seven years of relative inactivity away from the camera—teaching film courses in prisons and writing... amusing essays for Film Comment and National Lampoon. Then, in 1988, Waters returned with Hairspray, a spoof of teen-oriented movies which retained Divine, albeit in a digestible secondary role, and a fascination with 1960s pop ephemera from Waters’ early movies (pirated pop had always been used on Waters’ soundtracks, and the plot of Female Trouble revolves around cha-cha heels), but which otherwise seems more like the sort of well-observed period picture one might have expected from Baltimore’s other resident local auteur, Barry Levinson. Like Diner and Tin Men, Hairspray is about a specific phenomenon of the place and period, in this case a television dance show a la Dick Clark’s “immortal” American Bandstand. Waters does not take his subject seriously, and enjoys the opportunity to guy more conventional nostalgic movies, but also shows that he was developing a grasp of the needs of real movie-making, including a flair for staging musical numbers that was carried over into Cry-Baby, a parody of 1950s juvenile delinquent movies that is very much in the vein of—and, indeed, is slightly overshadowed by—Hairspray. The untimely death of Divine forced Waters to cast a bonafide actress, Susan Tyrrell, in what would have been Divine’s role in Cry-Baby, with effective results. The period musicals Hairspray and Cry-Baby are further distinguished by Waters’ clever and fruitful use of kitsch casting—Pia Zadora, Deborah Harry, Troy Donahue, Patty Hearst, Traci Lords, Iggy Pop, Sonny Bono—to replace the bizarre hangers-on who used to exclusively populate his movies. Hairspray and Cry-Baby may be less repulsive than Pink Flamingoes, but much of the curiously innocent heart of the earlier film is carried over, along with the major contribution of art director Vincent Periano, as is Waters’s love of overheated B-movie melodrama.

Waters’ next film, Serial Mom, harkened a semi-return, by the self-billed “Prince of Puke” and self-styled chronicler of his beloved city of Baltimore’s high and low life, to the warped world view of his earlier Female Trouble and Polyester, albeit with a much bigger budget, better production values, and an even more mainstream cast. An occasionally bloody satire on suburban rot, mass murder, and the media’s glorification of crime and criminals—familiar Waters obsessions—it starred Kathleen Turner as the title character, an average housewife with a not-so-average predilection for knocking off any and all who pose a threat to her neat and tidy world of domestic bliss. The film never quite jelled, never quite crossed over into Waters’s trademark territory of outright lunacy, however. Its twistedness and perversity seemed dulled, its outrageousness muted, as if Waters was pulling his punches in a conscious bid for mainstream critical and audience acceptance. In short, it was too tasteful; either that or the movies had finally caught up with Waters’s unique vision, and what once seemed in shocking bad taste had now become all too much of a norm that even the redoubtable Waters could no longer top. That Waters seems fully aware of this is evidenced by his latest effort, the autobiographical Pecker. The title character is a fringe photographer (played by Edward Furlong) whose outrageous pictures catch on with a Baltimore gallery, catapulting him into the big leagues as a darling of the highbrow New York City art scene—a turnabout in his fortunes and in his low-rent career that costs him and his work its once-scandalous edge. To paraphrase John Huston’s character in Chinatown: “With time, even politicians and whores grow respectable.” This appears to go for the “prince of puke” too as the career of John Waters, which many early critics decried as evidence of the decline and fall of Western Civilization, seems a testament to Huston’s words. One wonders. Can a Life Achievement Award for Waters from the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences be far off?

—Kim Newman, updated by John McCarty

WEBER, Lois

Nationality: American. Born: Allegheny City, Pennsylvania, 1882. Family: Married Phillips Smalley, 1906 (divorced 1922). Career: Touring concert pianist, then Church Home Missionary in Pittsburgh, 1890s; actress in touring melodrama Why Girls Leave Home for company managed by future husband Smalley, 1905; writer and director (then actor) for Gaumont Talking Pictures, from 1908; teamed up with Smalley, moved to Reliance, then Rex, working for Edwin S. Porter; the Smalleys (as they were known) took over Rex, a member of the Universal conglomerate, following Porter’s departure, 1912; joined Hobart Bosworth’s company, 1914; Universal funded private studio for Weber at 4634 Sunset Boulevard, 1915; founded own studio, 1917; signed contract with Famous Players-Lasky for $50,000 per picture and a percentage of profits, 1920; dropped by company after three unprofitable films, 1921, subsequently lost company, divorced husband, and suffered nervous collapse; briefly resumed directing, late 1920s; script-doctor for Universal, 1930s. Died: In Hollywood, 13 November 1939.

Films as Director:

(partial list—directed between 200 and 400 films)

1912 The Troubadour’s Triumph
1913 The Eyes of God; The Jew’s Christmas (co-d, sc, role); The Female of the Species (+ role)
1914 The Merchant of Venice (co-d, role as Portia); Traitor; Like Most Wives; Hypocrites! (+ sc); False Colors (co-d, co-sc, role); It’s No Laughing Matter (+ sc); A Fool and His Money (+ role); Behind the Veil (co-d, sc, role)
1915 Sunshine Molly (co-d, role, sc); Scandal (co-d, sc, role)
1916 Discontent (short); Hop, the Devil’s Brew (co-d, sc, role); Where Are My Children? (co-d, sc); The French Downstairs; Alone in the World (short); The People vs. John Doe (+ role); The Rock of Riches (short); John Needham’s Double; Saving the Family Name (co-d, role); Shoes; The Dumb Girl of Portici (co-d); The Flirt (co-d)
1917 The Hand That Rocks the Cradle (co-d, pr, role); Even as You and I; The Mysterious Mrs. M; The Price of a Good Time; The Man Who Dared God; There’s No Place like Home; For Husbands Only (+ pr)
1918 The Doctor and the Woman; Borrowed Clothes
1919 When a Girl Loves; Mary Regan; Midnight Romance (+ sc); Scandal Mongers; Home; Forbidden
1921 Too Wise Wives (pr, sc); What’s Worth While? (+ pr); To Please One Woman (+ sc); The Blot (pr, sc); What Do Men Want? (+ pr, sc)
Lois Weber (left) with Billie Dove

1923  A Chapter in Her Life (+ co-sc)
1926  The Marriage Clause (+ sc)
1927  Sensation Seekers (+ sc); The Angel of Broadway
1934  White Heat

Other Films:

1915  A Cigarette, That’s All (sc)

Publications

By WEBER: article—

Interview with Aline Carter, in Motion Picture Magazine (New York), March 1921.

On WEBER: book—

On WEBER: articles—

* * *

Lois Weber was a unique silent film director. Not only was she a woman who was certainly the most important female director the American film industry has known, but unlike many of her colleagues up to the present, her work was regarded in its day as equal to, if not a little better than that of most male directors. She was a committed filmmaker in an era when commitment was virtually unknown, a filmmaker who was not afraid to make features with subject matter in which she devoutly believed, subjects as varied as Christian Science (Jewel and A Chapter in Her Life) or birth control (Where Are My Children). Hypocrities was an indictment of hypocrisy and corruption in big business, politics, and religion, while The People vs. John Doe opposed capital punishment. At the same time, Lois Weber was quite capable of handling with ease a major spectacular feature such as the historical drama The Dumb Girl of Portici, which introduced Anna Pavlova to the screen.

During the 1910s, Lois Weber was under contract to Universal. While at Universal, she appears to have been given total freedom as to the subject matter of her films, all of which where among the studio’s biggest moneymakers and highly regarded by the critics of the day. (The Weber films, however, did run into censorship problems, and the director was the subject of a vicious attack in a 1918 issue of Theatre Magazine over the “indecent and suggestive” nature of her titles.) Eventually the director felt the urge to move on to independent production, and during 1920 and 1921 she released a series of highly personal, intimate dramas dealing with married life and the types of problems which beset ordinary people. None of these films was particularly well received by the critics, who unanimously declared them dull, while the public displayed an equal lack of enthusiasm. Nonetheless, features such as Too Wise Wives and The Blot demonstrate Weber at her directorial best. In the former she presents a study of two married couples. Not very much happens, but in her characterizations and attention to detail (something for which Weber was always noted), the director is as contemporary as a Robert Altman or an Ingmar Bergman. The Blot is concerned with “genteel poverty” and is marked by the underplaying of its principals—Claire Windsor and Louis Calhern—and an enigmatic ending that leaves the viewer uninformed as to the characters’ future, an ending unlike any in the entire history of the American silent film. These films, as with virtually all of the director’s work, were also written by Lois Weber.

Through the end of her independent productions in 1921, Lois Weber worked in association with her husband, Phillips Smalley, who usually received credit as associate or advisory director. After the two were divorced, Lois Weber’s career went to pieces. She directed one or two minor program features together with one talkie, but none equalled her work from the 1910s and early 1920s. She was a liberated filmmaker who seemed lost without the companionship, both at home and in the studio, of a husband. Her career and life were in many ways as enigmatic as the ending of The Blot.

—Anthony Slide

WEIR, Peter

Nationality: Australian. Born: Peter Lindsay Weir in Sydney, 8 August 1944. Education: Arts/Law coursework at University of Sydney. Family: Married Wendy Stiles, 1966, two children. Career: Worked for family real estate business, then joined television station ATN 7, Sydney, 1967; worked as assistant cameraman and production assistant, Commonwealth Film Unit (now Film Australia), 1969; directed his first internationally distributed feature, The Cars That Ate Paris, 1974; had his first international success, Picnic at Hanging Rock, 1975; signed multi-film contract with Warner Bros., 1980; directed Witness, his first Hollywood film, 1985. Awards: Australian Film Institute Grand Prix, for Homestead, 1971; Australian Film Institute Best Director, for Gallipoli, 1981; Neville Wran Award for excellence in filmmaking, 1988; Best Film British Academy Award, Best Foreign Film Cesar Award, for Dead Poets Society, 1989; Australian Film Institute Raymond Longford Award, 1990; British Academy Award David Lean Award for Best Director, London Critics Circle Director of the Year, European Film Award Five Continents Award, Robert Festival Best American Film, for The Truman Show, 1998; FilmFest Hamburg Douglas Sirk Award, 1998. Address: Post Office, Palm Beach 2108, Australia.

Films as Director and Scriptwriter:

1967  Count Vim’s Last Exercise (short)
1968  The Life and Times of the Reverend Buck Shotte (short)
1970  ‘‘Michael’’ episode of Three to Go
1971  Homestead (+ ro)
1972  Incredible Floridas (short)
1973  Whatever Happened to Green Valley? (short)
1974  The Cars That Ate Paris (The Cars That Ate People)
1975  Picnic at Hanging Rock (d only)
1977  The Last Wave
1978  The Plumber (for TV)
1981  Gallipoli
1982  The Year of Living Dangerously (+ co-pr)
1985  Witness (d only)
1986  The Mosquito Coast (d only)
1989  Dead Poets Society
1990  Green Card (+ pr)
1993  Fearless (d only)
1998  The Truman Show (co-sc, uncredited)

Other Films:

1996  La Memoire retrouvée (Meny) (doc) (as himself)

Publications

By WEIR: articles—

Interview with D. Castell, in Films Illustrated (London), November 1976.
Interview with P. Childs, in Millimeter (New York), March 1979.
Interview with Brian McFarlane and T. Ryan, in Cinema Papers (Melbourne), September/October 1981.
Interview with Michael Dempsey, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Summer 1982.
Interview with M. Bygrave, in Stills (London), May 1985.

Interview, in Cinema Papers (Melbourne), August 1990.

“Keeping a Sense of Wonder,” interview with Michael Bliss, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Fall 1999.

On WEIR: books—

Mathews, Sue, 35mm Dreams: Conversations with Five Directors about the Australian Film Revival, Ringwood, Victoria, 1984.

On WEIR: articles—

Sesti, M., article, in Cineforum (Bergamo), July/August 1989.
Hentzi, G., “Peter Weir and the Cinema of New Age Humanism,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Winter 1990/91.

* * *

If, as Yugoslav director Dusan Makavajev contends, “Australia is Switzerland, but it wants to be Texas,” then it’s to the Swiss side that Peter Weir belongs. Even his apprentice shorts show an attraction to international concerns and fantasy that is alien to Australia’s documentary-based cinema. Incredible Floridas is a hommage to Rimbaud, Michael a vision of a future Australia gripped by revolution, while the macabre Homesdale evokes evil in the unlikely setting of an isolated retirement home.

Weir dropped out of university to travel to Europe, an experience that profoundly affected him: “It struck me very strongly that I was a European, that this was where we had come from and where I belonged.” An ancient sculpture found on a Tunisian beach prompted The Last Wave, and he conceived The Cars That Ate Paris when a French autoroute detour triggered the idea of a tiny village where, he surmised, anything might happen—including local hoodlums customising cars into killing machines.

The absurdist vision of The Cars That Ate Paris puzzled Australian audiences but interested Hollywood. Roger Cormam gave the film a small U.S. release while also borrowing some of its concepts for Paul Bartel’s Death Race 2000. Universal acclaim, however, greeted Picnic at Hanging Rock, a Victorian fantasy with drowsy, cryptic, and sensuous qualities. Weir filmed Joan Lindsay’s novel with such skill that most audiences believe the feature’s tale of the disappearance of three schoolgirls on a rocky monolith on St. Valentine’s Day, 1900, to be based on fact.

Weir chose Richard Chamberlain to star in The Last Wave as a lawyer who uncovers aboriginal cults which foretell the world’s end in a new flood, but Australian audiences greeted the film’s obscure theme and American star with suspicion. In reaction, Weir made The Plumber, a TV feature recognizable as his work only by its faintly surrealistic premise, in which an unsummoned tradesman invades a baffled housewife’s cozy suburban environment.

With Gallipoli, which he calls his “graduation film,” Weir shook off his reputation as an occult specialist and a director of essentially local concerns. Though set against Australia’s first military adventure—the disastrous 1916 Dardenelles campaign—its scale, style, and outlook, all broadly international, won Gallipoli mass American release, and both director and star Mel Gibson were given Hollywood contracts.

Weir’s first fully funded studio project, The Year of Living Dangerously, marked him as an artist capable of handling both big stars and bigger emergencies. When threats of violence from Muslim extremists drove the production out of Manila, he recreated Djakarta in Sydney suburbia. The film turned Mel Gibson into an international romantic lead, and also remade another career when Weir, unsatisfied with the actor playing dwarf Chinese cameraman Billy Kwan, recast the role with Linda Hunt, who delivered an Oscar-winning performance.

When plans to film The Mosquito Coast with Jack Nicholson collapsed, Weir stepped up at short notice to direct a thriller that featured Harrison Ford as a city cop finding affinities with the Amish religious fundamentalists who hide him from danger. Witness, an unexpected hit, decisively freed Ford from his Indiana Jones image, and the revived The Mosquito Coast starred not Nicholson but Ford as Paul Theroux’s dizzy technocrat, a man who drags his family to South America in a doomed celebration of American mechanical genius. The film’s relative failure in no way harmed Weir’s reputation as a director who could change careers and remake images. He went on to direct Robin Williams in Dead Poets Society, a film wherein a schoolteacher bucks a version of McCarthyism in the 1950s. Its critical and financial success powered Weir into Green Card, his first original screenplay, about an emigre musician marrying an American girl to get a work permit. The story attracted Gérard Depardieu, anxious to penetrate the English-language market. “I have the impression of having discovered a brother,” the actor said, “like with Truffaut.” Such statements suggest that Weir, while mastering Hollywood, has not lost touch with his early European concerns.

Those same concerns were evidenced yet again in Fearless, an unusual film for the 1990s: a mainstream project with deeply serious and sobering overtones. Its scenario examines the psychological impact the experience has on two of its survivors (played by Jeff Bridges and Rosie Perez). All too often, contemporary movies make no attempt to dramatize the effect of violence on its victims. Fearless, though dramatically flawed in its second half, is a refreshing change-of-pace in that it faces up to issues surrounding mortality and spirituality.

After a five-year absence from the screen, Weir returned triumphantly with yet another solemn exploration of contemporary life: The Truman Show, a keenly knowing expose of the all-encompassing power of modern technology. In particular, The Truman Show is an exploration of the ability of television to numb the brains of viewers and transform them into mindless robots who think, feel, and consume according to what they are told by their boob tubes. In this regard the film, like Fearless, is downright subversive for a contemporary Hollywood film.

The title character is Truman Burbank (Jim Carrey), a happy-go-lucky insurance salesman who resides in the idyllic, antiseptic town of Seahaven, a planned community on the Gulf Coast of Florida. Truman’s life is perfect. His always-chipper wife (Laura Linney) is perfect. His hometown (which he has never left) is perfect. And every day is a beautiful day. Yet little does Truman suspect that, since birth, he has been the star of his own television series. Wherever he goes, hidden cameras record his every movement. Everything in his life is artificial, from Seahaven (which is a massive set) to the weather, from his friends and neighbors to his family and wife (who are all actors). His entire existence is the creation of a fascist television director (Ed Harris) who has controlled all that happens around Truman since the day he was born. Indeed, for nearly three decades, billions of viewers have tuned in to catch each chronicle of the life and times of Truman Burbank (which airs 24 hours a day, seven days a week, even as Truman sleeps). At the core of the story is the manner in which Truman responds upon becoming aware of the sham that is his life, and his growing curiosity with regard to what exists beyond his made-up world.

In The Truman Show, Weir deals with such heady subjects as philosophy, religion, principles and ethics, and, in particular, the manner in which technology and the media affect practically everything in our lives. In addition, Weir accomplishes for Jim Carrey what he did for Robin Williams a decade earlier in Dead Poets Society: take a wacky, wildly popular comedy star and reinvent him as a serious dramatic actor.

—John Baxter, updated by Rob Edelman

WEISS, Jiři

Films as Director:

1935  People in the Sun
1936  Give Us Wings
1937  Song of a Sad Country
1938  Journey from the Shadows
1939  The Rape of Czechoslovakia
1941  Eternal Prague
1943  Before the Raid
1945  Věrni zustaneme (Interim Balance) (+ sc)
1947  Uloupená hranice (The Stolen Frontier) (+ co-sc)
1948  Dravci (Wild Beasts; Beast of Prey) (+co-sc); Ves v pohraničí (The Village on the Frontier)
1949  Píseň o sletu I, II (Song of the Meet, I and II; High Flies the Hawk, I and II)
1950  Vstanou noví bojovníci (New Warriors Will Arise); Poslední výstřel (The Last Shot)
1953  Muj přítel Fabián (My Friend Fabian; My Friend the Gypsy) (+ co-sc)
1954  Punt’a a čtyřlístek (Punta and the Four-Leaf Clover; Doggy and the Four) (+ co-sc)
1956  Hra o život (Life at Stake; Life Was at Stake) (+ co-sc)
1957  Vlčí jáma (Wolf Trap) (+ co-sc)
1959  Taková láská (Appassionata; That Kind of Love) (+ co-sc)
1960  Romeo, Julie a tma (Romeo, Juliet and the Darkness; Sweet Light in the Dark Window) (+ co-sc)
1962  Zbabèlec (Coward) (+ co-sc)
1963  Zlaté kaprady (The Golden Fern) (+ co-sc)
1965  Trícet jedna ve stínu (Ninety in the Shade) (+ co-sc)
1966  Vražda po našem (Muder Czech Style) (+ co-sc)
1968  Prípad pro Selwyn (Justice for Selwyn) (for Czech TV)
1970  Wie man seinen Gatten los wird (for TV)
1990  Martha und Ich (+ sc)

Publications

By WEISS: articles—

On WEISS: books—

Boček, Jaroslav, Modern Czechoslovak Film, Prague, 1965.
Habova, Milada, and Jitka Vysekalova, editors, Czechoslovak Cinema, Prague, 1982.

On WEISS: articles—

“Martha und ich,” in Kino (Filme der Bundesrepublik Deutschland), no. 3, 1990.
Variety (New York), 17 September 1990.
Strusková, Eva, “Marta a ja,” in Film a Doba (Prague), Winter 1992.
Zeman, Pavel, in Iluminace (Prague), vol. 8, no. 3, 1996.

* * *

Jiří Weiss is one of the most significant and certainly most interesting Czech directors of the twentieth century. He studied at Jura and had worked as a journalist before making his first film in 1934, a documentary which received a prize at Venice that year. Until the outbreak of war he continued to work on documentaries.

In 1939 Weiss fled the Nazis to England, befriended an English documentarist, and made several films, including Before the Raid. Later, as a film specialist, he took part in the battles of the Czech exile army. He returned to his homeland in 1945. His first theatrical film, Uloupená hranice, dealt with the Munich accord of 1938, shortly before the fascist occupation of his country. A subsequent film,
Vstanou noví bojovníci, depicted the establishment of the worker’s movement in Czechoslovakia, and brought the director not only official recognition at home but also attention abroad.

Afterward Weiss made films dealing with contemporary problems and people’s everyday life. In the 1953 film My Friend Fabian he described how the gypsies adjusted, with many difficulties, to a new life in socialist Czechoslovakia. Hra o život appeared in 1956, a critical film about the destruction of a bourgeois family in the period of the German occupation. Taková láška, a dramatic psychological work, displayed the director’s ability to develop richly human characterization.

Včelí jama impressed further through the deep psychological treatment of the characters and the careful attention to cultural surroundings by which he delineated the zeitgeist, the atmosphere and the milieu of the petit bourgeoisie prior to World War I. An honorable mayor of a small city, who feels a devotion for his ageing wife, nevertheless falls in love with a young girl who lives in the same house.

This film revealed the full range of Jiří Weiss’s style. It is based in a solid critical realism, rooted in the epic novels of the nineteenth century. This approach sets out fully realized and many-sided human figures within an accurately described milieu. The cinema of Weiss draws on Czech cultural tradition, and at the same time strives toward broader European dimensions. In this way his works attain a certain cosmopolitanism.

On the one hand, Weiss was strongly influenced by neorealism, as were all the other filmmakers of his generation. Although not so pathetically inclined as, for example, Andrzej Wajda, Weiss showed in his masterpiece Romeo, Julie a tma the influences of the neorealist aesthetic, especially in the case of the theme, again broadly European, of the tragic fate of two young lovers in Prague in 1942. The Jewish schoolgirl Hanna is hidden by young Pavel, a tender love develops and is cut short by Hanna’s death. Weiss had created a tragic and poetic work, without filmic innovation, but nevertheless a serious, noble film.

In the 1960s Weiss made Zlaté kaprádi, Trícet jedna ve stínu, and Vražda po našem, which attained a high standard in terms of craft, but broke no new ground formally or thematically. Living since 1968 in the West, he has made the occasional film for television.

—Maria Racheva

Orson Welles

WELLES, Orson

Nationality: American. Born: Kenosha, Wisconsin, 6 May 1916. Education: Attended Todd School in Woodstock, Illinois, 1926–31. Family: Married 1) Virginia Nicholson, 1934 (divorced 1939), one son; 2) Rita Hayworth, 1943 (divorced 1947), one daughter; 3) Paola Mori, 1955, one daughter. Career: Actor and director at the Gate Theatre, Dublin, 1931–34; debut on Broadway with Katherine Cornell’s road company, also co-directed first film, 1934; collaborated with John Houseman for the Phoenix Theatre Group, 1935, later producer and director for Federal Theater Project; co-founder, with Houseman, Mercury Theatre Group, 1937; moved into radio with Mercury Theatre on the Air, 1938, including famous dramatization of H. G. Wells’ War of the Worlds, Halloween, 1938; given contract by RKO, 1939; directed feature debut, Citizen Kane, 1941; began documentary It’s All True, 1942, then Welles and his staff were removed from RKO; directed The Lady from Shanghai for Columbia Studios, 1947; directed Macbeth for Republic Pictures, 1948; moved to Europe, 1949; completed only one more film in United States, Touch of Evil, 1958; appeared in advertisements, and continued to act, from 1960s. Awards: 20th Anniversary Tribute, Cannes Festival, 1966; Honorary Academy Award, for “Superlative artistry and versatility in the creation of motion pictures,” 1970; Life Achievement Award, American Film Institute, 1975; Fellowship of the British Film Institute, 1983. Died: In Hollywood, 10 October 1985.

Films as Director:

1934 The Hearts of Age (16mm short) (co-d)
1938 Too Much Johnson (+ co-pr, sc) (unedited, not shown publicly, destroyed in 1970 fire)
1941 Citizen Kane (+ pr, co-sc, role as Charles Foster Kane)
1942 The Magnificent Ambersons (+ pr, sc); It’s All True (+ pr, co-sc) (not completed and never shown)
1943 Journey into Fear (co-d, uncredited, pr, co-sc, role as Colonel Haki)
1946 The Stranger (+ co-sc, uncredited, role as Franz Kindler, alias Professor Charles Rankin)
1948 The Lady from Shanghai (+ sc, role as Michael O’Hara) (produced in 1946); Macbeth (+ pr, sc, co-costumes, role as Macbeth)
1952 Othello (+ pr, sc, role as Othello and narration)
1955  Mr. Arkadin (Confidential Report) (+ sc, art d, costumes, role as Gregory Arkadin and narration); Don Quixote (+ co-pr, sc, asst ph, role as himself and narration) (not completed)
1958  Touch of Evil (+ sc, role as Hank Quinlan)
1962  Le Procès (The Trial) (+ sc, role as Hastler and narration)
1966  Chimes at Midnight (Falstaff) (+ sc, costumes, role as Sir John Falstaff)
1968  The Immortal Story (+ sc, role as Mr. Clay)
1970  The Deep (+ sc, role as Russ Brewer)
1972  The Other Side of the Wind (+ sc) (filming begun in 1972, uncompleted)
1975  F for Fake (+ sc)

Other Films:
1937  The Spanish Earth (Ivens) (original narration)
1940  Swiss Family Robinson (Ludwig) (off-screen narration)
1944  Jane Eyre (R. Stevenson) (role as Edward Rochester)
1944  Follow the Boys (Sutherland) (revue appearance with Marlene Dietrich)
1945  Tomorrow Is Forever (Pichel) (role as John McDonald)
1946  Duel in the Sun (Vidor) (off-screen narration)
1947  Black Magic (Rafoff) (role as Cagliostro)
1948  Prince of Foxes (role as Cesare Borgia)
1949  The Third Man (Reed) (role as Harry Lime)
1950  The Black Rose (Hathaway) (role as General Bayan)
1951  Return to Glenshcaul (Edwards) (role as himself)
1953  Trent’s Last Case (Wilcox) (role as Sigsbee Manderson); Si Versailles m’était conté (Guity) (role as Benjamin Franklin); L’uomo, la bestia e la virtù (Steno) (role as the beast)
1954  Napoléon (Guity) (role as Hudson Lowe); “Lord Mountdrago” segment of Three Cases of Murder (O’Ferrall) (role as Lord Mountdrago)
1955  Trouble in the Glen (Wilcox) (role as Samin Cejador y Mengues); Out of Darkness (documentary) (narrator)
1956  Moby Dick (Huston) (role as Father Mapple)
1957  Pay the Devil (Arnold) (role as Virgil Remckler); The Long Hot Summer (Ritt) (role as Will Varner)
1958  The Roots of Heaven (Huston) (role as Cy Sedgwick); Les Seigneurs de la forêt (Sielman and Brandt) (off-screen narration); The Vikings (Fleischer) (narration)
1959  David e Golia (Pottier and Baldi) (role as Saul); Compulsion (Fleischer) (role as Jonathan Wilk); Ferry to Hong Kong (Gilbert) (role as Captain Hart); High Journey (Baylis) (off-screen narration); South Sea Adventure (Dudley) (off-screen narration)
1960  Austerlitz (Gance) (role as Fulton); Crack in the Mirror (Fleischer) (role as Hagolin/Lamorcière); I tartari (Thorpe) (role as Barundai)
1961  Lafayette (Déville) (role as Benjamin Franklin); King of Kings (Ray) (off-screen narration); Désordre (short) (role)
1962  Der grosse Atlantik (documentary) (narrator)
1963  La V.I.P.s (Asquith) (role as Max Buda); Rongopag (Pasolini) (role as the film director)
1964  L’Echiquier de Dieu (La Fabuleuse Aventure de Marco Polo) (de la Patellière) (role as Ackermann); The Finest Hours (Baylis) (narrator)
1965  The Island of Treasure (J. Franco) (role); A King’s Story (Booth) (narrator)
1966  Is Paris Burning? (Clément) (role); A Man for All Seasons (Zimmernann) (role as Cardinal Wolsey)
1967  Casino Royale (Huston and others) (role); The Sailor from Gibraltar (Richardson) (role); I’ll Never Forget Whatshisname (Winner) (role)
1968  Oedipus the King (Saville) (role as Tiresias); Kampf um Rom (role as Emperor Justimian); The Southern Star (Hayers) (role)
1969  Tepepa (role); Barbed Water (documentary) (narrator); Una su 13 (role); Michael the Brave (role); House of Cards (Guillermin) (role)
1970  Catch-22 (Nichols) (role as General Dweedle); Battle of Neretva (Bulajia) (role); Start the Revolution without Me (Yorkin) (narrator); The Kremlin Letter (Huston) (role); Waterloo (Bondarchuk) (role as King Louis XVIII)
1971  Directed by John Ford (Bogdanovich) (narrator); Sentinels of Silence (narrator); A Safe Place (Jaglom) (role)
1972  La Decade prodigieuse (role); Malperitas (role); I racconti di Canterbury (Pasolini) (role); Treasure Island (Hough) (role as Long John Silver); Get to Know Your Rabbit (De Palma) (role)
1973  Necromancy (Gordon) (role)
1975  Bugs Bunny Superstar (Jones) (narrator)
1976  Challenge of Greatness (documentary) (narrator); Voyage of the Drowned (Rosenberg) (role)
1977  It Happened One Christmas (Thomas) (for TV) (role)
1979  The Late Great Planet Earth (Guillermin) (role as himself)
1981  Butterfly (Cimber) (role as the judge); The Man Who Saw Tomorrow (Guenette) (role)
1984  Where Is Parsifal? (Helman) (role); Almonds and Raisins (Karel) (narrator)
1985  Genocide (Schwartzman) (narrator)
1987  Someone to Love (Jaglom) (role)

Publications

By WELLES: books—

Everybody’s Shakespeare, New York, 1933; revised as The Mercury Shakespeare, 1939.
The Trial (script), New York, 1970.
This Is Orson Welles, with Peter Bogdanovich, New York, 1972.
The Big Brass Ring: An Original Screenplay, with Oja Kodar, Santa Barbara, California, 1987.

By WELLES: articles—

Preface to He That Plays the King, by Kenneth Tynan, New York, 1950.
Interview with Francis Koval, in Sight and Sound (London), December 1950.

1062

Interview with Everett Sloane, in Film (London), no. 37, 1965.

“A Trip to Don Quixoteland: Conversations with Orson Welles,” with Juan Cobos and others, in Cahiers du Cinéma in English (New York), June 1966.

Interview with Kenneth Tynan, in Playboy (Chicago), March 1967.

“Heart of Darkness,” in Film Comment (New York), November-December 1972.

On WELLES: books—

Valentinnetti, Claudio M., Orson Welles, Florence, 1981.

Andrew, Dudley, Film in the Aura of Art, Princeton, New Jersey, 1984.

Callow, Simon, Orson Welles: The Road to Xanadu, New York, 1995.

On WELLES: articles—

Coeceau, Jean, profile of Welles, in Cinémonde (Paris), 6 March 1950.

Tyler, Parker, “Orson Welles and the Big Experimental Film Cult,” in Film Culture (New York), Summer 1963.

McBride, Joseph, “Welles before Kane,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1970.

Prokosch, Mike, “Orson Welles,” in Film Comment (New York), Summer 1971.

Coulouris, George, and Bernard Herrmann, “‘The Citizen Kane Book,’” in Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1972.

Houston, Beverle, “Power and Dis-integration in the Films of Orson Welles,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Summer 1982.

Kehr, Dave, obituary, in Film Comment (New York), January-February 1986.

Anderegg, Michael, “Every Third Word a Lie: Rhetoric and History in Orson Welles’ Chimes at Midnight,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1987.

On WELLES: films—

* * *

References to Orson Welles as one of America’s most influential directors and Citizen Kane as one of the great American films have become a simplistic way to encapsulate Welles’s unique contribution to cinema. It is a contribution that seems obvious but is difficult to adequately summarize without examining his complex career.

Welles began as an actor in Ireland at Dublin’s famous Gate Theater, bluffing his way into the theater’s acting troupe by claiming to be well-known on the Broadway stage. He began directing plays in New York, and worked with John Houseman in various theatrical groups. At one point they attempted to stage Marc Blitzstein’s leftist, pro-labor The Cradle Will Rock for the Federal Theatre Project, but government agents blocked the opening night’s production. Performers and audience subsequently moved to another theater, and the events surrounding the performance became one of Broadway’s most famous episodes. The incident led to Houseman being fired and Welles’s resignation from the Project.

Houseman and Welles then formed the Mercury Theatre Group, armed with a manifesto written by Houseman declaring their intention to foster new talent, experiment with new types of plays, and appeal to the same audiences that frequented the Federal Theater plays. Welles’s work on the New York stage was generally leftist in its political orientation, and, inspired by the expressionist theater of the 1920s, prefigured the look of his films.

Welles and his Mercury Theater Group expanded into radio as the Mercury Theater on the Air. In contrast to most theater-oriented shows on radio, which consisted merely of plays read aloud, the Mercury group adapted their works in a more natural, personal manner: most of the plays were narrated in the first person. Shrewd imitations of news announcements and technical breakdowns heightened the realism of his 1938 Halloween War of the Worlds broadcast to such a degree that the show has become famous for the panic it caused among its American listeners, a number of which thought that New Jersey was actually being invaded by Martians. This event itself has become a pop culture legend, shrouded in exaggeration and half-truths.

RKO studios hired Welles in 1939, hoping he could repeat the success on film for them that he had enjoyed on stage and in radio. Welles, according to most sources, accepted the job because his Mercury Theater needed money to produce an elaborate production called 5 Kings, an anthology of several of Shakespeare’s plays. Whatever the reason, his contract with RKO began an erratic and rocky relationship with the Hollywood industry that would, time and again, end in bitter disappointment for Welles. The situation eventually led him to begin a self-imposed exile in Europe.

The film on which Welles enjoyed the most creative freedom was his first and most famous, Citizen Kane. At the time the film created a controversy over both its subject matter and style. Loosely based on the life of newspaper magnate William Randolph Hearst, the film supposedly upset Hearst to such a degree that he attempted to stop the production, and then the distribution and exhibition. In the end, his anger was manifested in the scathing reviews critics gave the film in all his newspapers. The film’s innovative structure, which included flashbacks from the differing points-of-view of the various characters, in addition to other formal devices so different from the classic Hollywood cinema, also contributed to Kane’s financial failure and commercial downfall, though critics other than those employed at Hearst’s papers generally gave the film positive reviews.

Other controversies surrounded the film as well, including one over scriptwriting credit. Originally, Welles claimed solo credit for writing the film, but the Writer’s Guild forced him to acknowledge Herman Mankiewicz as co-author. Each writer’s exact contributions remain unknown, but the controversy was revived during the early 1970s by critic Pauline Kael, who attempted to prove that Mankiewicz was most responsible for the script. Whatever the case, the argument becomes unimportant and even ludicrous given the unique direction which shapes the material, and which is undeniably Welles’s.

Due to the failure of Kane, Welles was supervised quite closely on his next film, The Magnificent Ambersons. After shooting was completed, Welles went to South America to begin work on a documentary, It’s All True, designed to help dispel Nazi propaganda in Latin America. He took a rough cut of Ambersons with him, hoping to coordinate cutting with editor Robert Wise. A sneak preview of Welles’s Ambersons proved disastrous, however, and the studio cut his 140-minute-plus version to eighty-eight minutes and added a “happy ending.” The film was a critical and commercial failure, and the entire Mercury staff was removed from the RKO lot.

Welles spent the remainder of his Hollywood career sparring with various producers or studios over the completed versions of his films and his uncredited direction on films in which he starred. For example, Journey into Fear was begun by Welles but finished by Norman Foster, though Welles claims he made contributions and suggestions throughout. Jane Eyre, which made Welles a popular star, was directed by Robert Stevenson, but the gothic overtones, the mise-en-scène, and other stylistic devices suggest a Wellesian contribution. With The Stranger, directed for Sam Spiegel, he adhered closely to the script and a preplanned editing schedule, evidently determined to prove that he could turn out a Hollywood product on time and on budget. Welles, though, subsequently referred to The Stranger as “the worst of my films,” and several Welles scholars agree.

Welles directed one of his best films, The Lady from Shanghai, for Harry Cohn of Columbia. The film, a loose, confusing, noirish tale of double-crosses and corrupted innocence, starred Welles’s wife at the time, Rita Hayworth. Cohn, who was supposedly already dissatisfied with their marriage because he felt it would reduce Hayworth’s box-office value, was furious at Welles for the image she presented in Shanghai. The film, shot mostly on location, was made under stressful circumstances, with Welles often re-writing during the shooting. It was edited several times and finally released two years after its completion, but failed commercially and critically. His final Hollywood project, a version of Macbeth for Republic Studios, was also considered a commercial flop.

Disenchanted with Hollywood, Welles left for Europe, where he began the practice of acting in other directors’ films in order to finance his own projects. His portrayal of Harry Lime in Carol Reed’s The Third Man is considered his finest work from this period, and Welles continued to create villainous antagonists who are often more interesting, complex, or exciting than the protagonists of the films. In the roles of Col. Haki in Journey into Fear, Will Varner in Martin Ritt’s The Long Hot Summer, Quinlan in Touch of Evil, and in Mr. Arkadin, Welles created a sinister persona for which he has become as famous as for his direction of Citizen Kane. His last roles were often caricatures of that persona, as in Marlo Thomas’s It Happened One Christmas, or parodies as in The Muppet Movie. Welles’s European ventures include his Othello, shot over a period of years between acting assignments, often under chaotic circumstances. The difficulties of the film’s production are often described as though they were the madcap adventures of a roguish artist, but in reality it must have been an extreme hardship to assemble and reassemble the cast over the course of the film’s shooting. At one point, he “borrowed” equipment under cover of night from the set of Henry King’s The Black Rose (in which Welles was starring) to quickly shoot a few scenes. Welles later obtained enough financial backing to make Mr. Arkadin, a Kane-like story of a powerful man who made his fortune as a white slaver, and Chimes at Midnight. Welles returned to America in the late 1950s to direct Touch of Evil, starring Charlton Heston. Originally approached only to star in the film, Welles mistakenly thought he was also to direct. Heston intervened and insisted he be allowed to do so. Welles immediately threw out the original script, rewriting it without reading the book, Badge of Evil, upon which the script was based. Welles’s last works include The Immortal Story, a one-hour film made for French television, and F for Fake, a strange combination of documentary footage shot by another director, some Welles footage from earlier ventures, and Welles’s own narration.

Welles’s outsider status in connection with the American film industry is an interesting part of cinema history in itself, but his importance as a director is due to the innovations he introduced through his films and the influence they have had on filmmaking and film theory. Considering the turbulent relationship Welles experienced with Hollywood and the circumstances under which his films were made in Europe, it is surprising there is any thematic and stylistic consistency in his work at all.

The central character in many of his films is often a powerful, egotistical man who lives outside or above the law and society. Kane, Arkadin, and Mr. Clay (The Immortal Story) are enabled to do so by their wealth and position; Quinlan (Touch of Evil) by his job as a law enforcer, which allows him to commit injustices to suit his own purposes. Even George Minafer (Ambersons) becomes an outsider as a modern, industrialized society supersedes his aristocratic, nineteenth-century way of life. These characters are never innocent, but seem to be haunted by an innocence they have lost. Kane’s “Rosebud,” the emblem of childhood that he clings to, is the classic example, but this theme can also be found in Mr. Arkadin, where Arkadin is desperate to keep his daughter from discovering his sordid past. Many parallels between the two films have been drawn, including the fact that the title characters are both wealthy and powerful men whose past lives are being investigated by a stranger. Interestingly, just as Kane whispers “rosebud” on his deathbed, Arkadin speaks his daughter’s name at the moment of his death. Quinlan, in Touch of Evil, is confronted with his memories and his past when he runs into Tanya, now a prostitute in a whorehouse. The ornaments and mementoes in her room (some of them from Welles’s personal collection), seem to jog his memory of a time when he was not a corrupt law official. In Shanghai, it is interesting to note that Welles does not portray the egotist, Bannister, but instead the “innocent” Michael O’Hara, who is soiled by his dealings with Bannister’s wife. That the corrupt antagonist is doomed is often indicated by a prologue or introductory sequence which foreshadows his destruction—the newsreel sequence in Kane; the pening montage of Ambersons, which condenses eighteen years of George Minafer’s life into ten minutes to hint that George will get his ‘comeuppance’ in the end; the opening funeral scene of Othello; and the detailing of Mr. Clay’s sordid past in The Immortal Story. The themes of lost innocence and inescapable fate often shroud Welles’s films with a sense of melancholy, which serves to make these characters worthy of sympathy.

Much has been made of Welles’s use of deep-focus photography, particularly in Kane and Ambersons. Though a directorial presence is often suggested in the cinema through the use of editing, with Welles it is through mise-en-scène, particularly in these two films. Many Welles scholars discuss the ambiguous nature of long-shot/deep-focus photography, where the viewer is allowed to sift through the details of a scene and make some of his own choices about what is important to the narrative, plot development, and so on. However, Welles’s arrangement of actors in specific patterns; his practice of shooting from unusual angles; and his use of wide-angle lenses, which distort the figures closest to them, are all intended to convey meaning. For example, the exaggerated perspective of the scene where Thatcher gives young Charles Kane a sled makes Thatcher appear to tower over the boy, visually suggesting his unnatural and menacing hold on him (at least from young Kane’s point of view).

Welles also employed rather complex sound tracks in Kane and Ambersons, perhaps a result of his radio experience. The party sequence of Ambersons, for example, makes use of overlapping dialogue as the camera tracks along the ballroom, as though one were passing by, catching bits of conversation.

Welles’s visual style becomes less outrageous and less concerned with effects as his career continued. There seems to be an increasing concentration on the acting in his latter works, particularly in the Shakespeare films. Welles had a lifelong interest in Shakespeare and his plays, and is well known for his unique handling and interpretations of the material. Macbeth, for example, was greatly simplified, with much dialogue omitted and scenes shifted around. A primitive feel is reflected by badly synchronized sound, and much of the impact of the spoken word is lost. Othello, shot in Italy and Morocco, makes use of outdoor locations in contrast to the staginess of Macbeth. Again, Welles was quite free with interpretation: Iago’s motives, for example, are suggested to be the result of sexual impotency. His most successful adaptation of Shakespeare is Chimes at Midnight, an interpretation of the Falstaff story with parts taken from Henry IV, parts one and two, Henry V, Merry Wives of Windsor, and Richard II. In Chimes, Falstaff, as with many of Welles’s central characters, is imprisoned by the past. Like George Minafer, he straddles two ages, one medieval and the other modern. Falstaff is destroyed not only by the aging process but also by the problems of being forced into a new world, as is Minafer (and perhaps Kane). Again Welles is quite individualistic in his presentation of the material, making Falstaff a true friend to the king and an innocent, almost childlike, victim of a new order.

In the years before he died, Welles became known for his appearances in television commercials and on talk shows, playing the part of the celebrity to its maximum. His last role was as a narrator on an innovative episode of the television detective series Moonlighting, starring Bruce Willis and Cybill Shepherd. It is unfortunate that his latter-day persona as a bon vivant often overshadows his contributions to the cinema.

—Susan Doll

WELLMAN, William

Nationality: American.
Born: William Augustus Wellman in Brookline, Massachusetts, 29 February 1896.
Education: Attended Newton High School, Newton Highlands, Massachusetts, 1910–14.
Military Service: Joined volunteer ambulance corps destined for France, 1917, then joined French Foreign Legion, where he learnt to fly planes; when United States entered World War I, became part of Lafayette Flying Corps, an arm of the Lafayette Escadrille.
Family: Married 1) Helene Chadwick, 1918 (divorced 1920); three other marriages 1920–33; 5) Dorothy Coonan, 1933, seven children.
Career: Professional ice hockey player for minor league team, 1914; film actor, United States, from 1919; messenger for Goldwyn Pictures, then directed first film, 1920; director for 20th Century-Fox, 1923; signed by Paramount, 1927.
Awards: Oscar for Wings, 1927; Oscar for Best Writing (Original Story) for A Star Is Born (shared with Robert Carson), 1937.
Died: 9 December 1975.

Films as Director:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1920</td>
<td>The Twins from Suffering Creek</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1923</td>
<td>The Man Who Won; 2nd Hand Love; Big Dan; Cupid’s Fireman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1924</td>
<td>The Vagabond Trail; Not a Drum Was Heard; The Circus Cowboy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1925</td>
<td>When Husbands Flirt</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1926</td>
<td>The Boob; The Cat’s Pajamas; You Never Know Women</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1927</td>
<td>Wings</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1928</td>
<td>The Legion of the Condemned; Ladies of the Mob; Beggars of Life</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1929</td>
<td>Chinatown Nights; The Man I Love; Woman Trap</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Dangerous Paradise; Young Eagles; Maybe It’s Love</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>Other Men’s Women; The Public Enemy; Night Nurse; Star Witness; Safe in Hell</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>The Hatchet Man; So Big; Love Is a Racket; The Purchase Price; The Conquerors</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>Frisco Jenny; Central Airport; Lily Turner; Midnight Mary; Heroes for Sale; Wild Boys of the Road; College Coach</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>Looking for Trouble; Stingaree; The President Vanishes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>The Call of the Wild</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>The Robin Hood of Eldorado (+ co-sc); Small Town Girl</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>A Star Is Born (+ co-sc); Nothing Sacred</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Men with Wings (+ pr)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>Beau Geste (+ pr); The Light That Failed (+ pr)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>Reaching for the Sun (+ pr)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1942</td>
<td>Roxie Hart; The Great Man’s Lady (+ pr); Thunder Birds</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>The Ox-Bow Incident; The Lady of Burlesque</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1944</td>
<td>Buffalo Bill</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1945</td>
<td>This Man’s Navy; The Story of G.I. Joe</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1946</td>
<td>Gallant Journey (+ pr, co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>Magic Town</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1948</td>
<td>Iron Curtain</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>Yellow Sky; Battleground</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>The Next Voice You Hear</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>Across the Wide Missouri</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Westward the Women; It’s a Big Country (co-d); My Man and I</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1953</td>
<td>Island in the Sky</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1954</td>
<td>The High and the Mighty; Track of the Cat</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1955</td>
<td>Blood Alley</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1958</td>
<td>Darby’s Rangers; Lafayette Escadrille (+ pr, co-sc)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Other Film:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1919</td>
<td>Knickerbocker Buckaroo (Parker) (role)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

By WELLMAN: book—

By WELLMAN: articles—

‘‘Director’s Notebook—Why Teach Cinema?,’’ in Cinema Progress (Los Angeles), June/July 1939.

Interview, in Cinema (Beverly Hills), July 1966.

On WELLMAN: books—

Thompson, Frank T., William A. Wellman, Metuchen, New Jersey, 1983.

On WELLMAN: articles—

Pringle, H.F., ‘‘Screwball Bill,’’ in Collier’s (New York), 26 February 1938.

Sarris, Andrew, ‘‘Fallen Idols,’’ in Film Culture (New York), Spring 1963.

Brownlow, Kevin, ‘‘William Wellman,’’ in Film (London), Winter 1965/66.

Wellman, William, Jr., ‘‘William Wellman: Director Rebel,’’ in Action (Los Angeles), March/April 1970.

Brooks, Louise, ‘‘On Location with Billy Wellman,’’ in Film Culture (New York), Spring 1972.

Eymon, S., and Allen Eyles, ‘‘‘Wild Bill’ William A. Wellman,’’ in Focus on Film (London), no. 29, 1978.

Youngerman, Joseph C., ‘‘The Olden Days according to Youngerman,’’ in DGA (Los Angeles), vol. 20, no. 3, July-August 1995.

Hanisch, Michael, ‘‘Tough Guy—Fieger—Hollywood Professional,’’ in Film-Dienst (Cologne), vol. 44, no. 5, 27 February 1996.

** * * *

William Wellman’s critical reputation is in many respects still in a state of flux long after re-evaluations and recent screenings of his major films have established some consensus of opinion regarding his place in the pantheon of film directors. While there is some tentative agreement that he is, if nothing else, a competent journeyman director capable of producing entertaining male-dominated action films, other opinions reflect a wide range of artistic evaluations, ranging from comparisons to D.W. Griffith to outright condemnations of his films as clumsy and uninspired. His own preferred niche, as indicated by his flamboyant personality and his predilection for browbeating and intimidating his performers, would probably be in the same general class as highly masculine filmmakers like Howard Hawks, John Ford, and Raoul Walsh. While those three enjoy a distinct auteur status, a similar designation for Wellman is not so easily arrived at since much of his early work for Warner Bros. in the late 1930s is, at first glance, not easily distinguishable from the rest of the studio’s output of sociological problem films and exposés of organized crime. In addition, his later films do not compare favorably, in many scholars’ opinions, to treatments of similar themes (often employing the same actors and locales) by both Ford and Hawks.

It might be argued, however, that Wellman actually developed what has come to be regarded as the Warner Bros. style to a greater degree than did the studio’s other directors. His 1931 The Public Enemy, for example, stands above most of the other gangster films of the era in its creative blend of highly vivid images and in the subtle manner in which it created a heightened impression of violence and brutality by giving only hints of it on the screen. Exhibiting similar subtlety, Wellman’s depiction of a gangster, beginning with his childhood, graphically alluded to the sociological roots of organized crime. While many of his more typical treatments of men in adversity, like 1927’s Academy Award-winning Wings, were sometimes artificial, everything worked in Public Enemy. In Wellman’s later films like The Ox-Bow Incident, The Story of G.I. Joe, and Battleground, the interactions of men in various groupings are shaped in such a way as to determine the direction and thematic force of each story. In others, like Track of the Cat, the emphasis shifts instead to one individual and his battle with forces of nature beyond his control. Yet in all cases, the issue is one of survival, a concept that manifests itself in some manner in all of Wellman’s films. It is overt and recognizable in war dramas like Battleground or in a disaster film like The High and the Mighty, but it is reflected at least as much in the psychological tensions of Public Enemy as it is in the violence. It becomes even more abstract in a complex picture like Track of the Cat when the issue concerns the family unit and the insecurity of its internal relationships. In the more heavy-handed propaganda films such as The Iron Curtain and Blood Alley, the theme centers on the threat to democratic forms of government, and finally, in the Ox-Bow Incident, the issue is the very fragility of society itself in the hands of a mob.

Wellman’s supporters feel that these concerns arise from the latent cynicism of a disappointed romantic but are expressed by an instinctive artist with a keen awareness of the intellectual force of images conveyed with the raw power of many of those in Public Enemy. Yet it is the inconsistency of these images and a corresponding lack of inspiration in his work overall that clouds his stature as an auteur of the first rank. While, ultimately, it is true that Wellman’s films cannot be easily separated from the man behind them, his best works are those that sprang from his emotional and psychological experiences. His lesser ones have been overshadowed by the cult of his personality and are best remembered for the behind-the-scenes fistfights, parties, and wild stunts, all of which detracted from the production. Perhaps he never got the chance to make the one indisputable masterpiece that would thematically support all of the seemingly irreconcilable aspects of his personality and firmly establish him as a director of the first magnitude.

—Stephen L. Hanson

WENDERS, Wim

Nationality: German. Born: Wilhelm Wenders in Düsseldorf, 14 August 1945. Education: Studied medicine and philosophy; studied at Hochschule für Fernsehen und Film, Munich, 1967–70. Career: Film critic in Munich for Süddeutsche Zeitung and Filmkritik, late
Wim Wenders

Films as Director:

1967 Schauplätze (Locations) (short); Same Player Shoots Again (short)
1968 Silver City (short); Victor I (short)
1969 Alabama—2,000 Light Years (short); Drei amerikanische LPs (Three American LPs) (short)
1970 Polizeifilm (Police Film) (short); Summer in the City (Dedicated to the Kinks) (diploma film)
1971 Die Angst des Tormanns beim Elfmeter (The Goalie’s Anxiety at the Penalty Kick)
1972 Der scharlachrote Buchstabe (The Scarlet Letter)
1973 Alice in den Städten (Alice in the Cities)
1974 Aus der Familie der Panzerechsen (From the Family of the Crocodilia) (short, for TV); Die Insel (The Island) (short, for TV); Falsche Bewegung (Wrong Movement)
1976 Im Lauf der Zeit (Kings of the Road; In the Course of Time)
1977 Der amerikanische Freund (The American Friend)
1981 Lightning over Water (Nick’s Film)
1982 Hammett; Der Stand der Dinge (The State of Things)
1984 Paris, Texas; Room 666 (doc)
1985 Tokyo-Ga (doc)
1987 Der Himmel über Berlin (Wings of Desire)
1989 Aufzeichnungen zu Kleidern und Städten (Notebook on Cities and Clothes) (doc)
1991 Until the End of the World
1993 In weiter Ferne, so nah! (Faraway, So Close)
1995 Lisbon Story; Beyond the Clouds (co-d with Antonioni)
1997 The End of Violence (+ pr)
1999 Buena Vista Social Club (doc) (+ sc)
2000 The Million Dollar Hotel (+ pr)

Other Films:

1985 I Played It for You (Blakley) (role)
1987 Helsinki Napoli: All Night Long (Mika Kaurismaki); Yer Demir, Gok Bakir (Livaneli) (pr)
1990 Isabelle Eberhardt (Pringle) (pr)
2000 Delivering Milo (Castle) (pr)

Publications

By WENDERS: books—

The Film by Wim Wenders: Kings of the Road (In the Course of Time), with Fritz Müller-Scherz, Munich, 1976.

Nick’s Film—Lightning over Water, with Chris Sievernich, Frankfurt, 1981.

By WENDERS: articles—

“’Wim Wenders über Im Lauf der Zeit,’” an interview with H. Wiedemann and F. Müller-Scherz, in Film und Ton (Munich), May 1976.

“King of the Road,’” an interview with Carlos Clarens, in Film Comment (New York), September/October 1977.

Interview with Michel Ciment and Hubert Niogret, in Positif (Paris), September 1984.
Interview with K. Dieckman, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Winter 1974/75.

Interview with Sean Penn, in Interview (New York), January 1992.

On WENDERS: books—

Franklin, James, New German Cinema from Oberhausen to Hamburg, Boston, 1983.

On WENDERS: articles—

Wim Wenders Section of Cinéma (Paris), September 1984.

Wim Wenders Section of Positif (Paris), September 1984.

American Friends Section of Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), vol. 16, no. 3, 1988.

* * *

Of the three young German filmmakers who achieved the greatest international fame in the 1970s as the vanguard of a German New Wave, Wim Wenders had perhaps a less radical though no less distinctive film style than his compatriots R. W. Fassbinder and Werner Herzog. Though critics typically cite American influences upon Wenders’s “road trilogy” of the mid-1970s, there is a greater affinity with the modernist tradition of the European “art film” exemplified by the Antonioni of Red Desert. Wave, Wim Wenders had perhaps a less radical though no less international fame in the 1970s as the vanguard of a German New Wave, Wim Wenders had perhaps a less radical though no less distinctive film style than his compatriots R. W. Fassbinder and Werner Herzog. Though critics typically cite American influences upon Wenders’s “road trilogy” of the mid-1970s, there is a greater affinity with the modernist tradition of the European “art film” exemplified by the Antonioni of Red Desert—of the three young German filmmakers who achieved the greatest international fame in the 1970s as the vanguard of a German New Wave, Wim Wenders had perhaps a less radical though no less distinctive film style than his compatriots R. W. Fassbinder and Werner Herzog. Though critics typically cite American influences upon Wenders’s “road trilogy” of the mid-1970s, there is a greater affinity with the modernist tradition of the European “art film” exemplified by the Antonioni of Red Desert—of the three young German filmmakers who achieved the greatest international fame in the 1970s as the vanguard of a German New Wave, Wim Wenders had perhaps a less radical though no less distinctive film style than his compatriots R. W. Fassbinder and Werner Herzog. Though critics typically cite American influences upon Wenders’s “road trilogy” of the mid-1970s, there is a greater affinity with the modernist tradition of the European “art film” exemplified by the Antonioni of Red Desert—of the three young German filmmakers who achieved the greatest international fame in the 1970s as the vanguard of a German New Wave, Wim Wenders had perhaps a less radical though no less distinctive film style than his compatriots R. W. Fassbinder and Werner Herzog. Though critics typically cite American influences upon Wenders’s “road trilogy” of the mid-1970s, there is a greater affinity with the modernist tradition of the European “art film” exemplified by the Antonioni of Red Desert—of the three young German filmmakers who achieved the greatest international fame in the 1970s as the vanguard of a German New Wave, Wim Wenders had perhaps a less radical though no less distinctive film style than his compatriots R. W. Fassbinder and Werner Herzog. Though critics typically cite American influences upon Wenders’s “road trilogy” of the mid-1970s, there is a greater affinity with the modernist tradition of the European “art film” exemplified by the Antonioni of Red Desert—. conception of himself (well articulated in numerous interviews) as an artist: one who evolves spiritually with each work, or reaches dead ends (as he has called The State of Things) from which he must break out; and who sees each new work as an adventure, not to be mapped out too much in advance.

A crucial observation about Wenders’s art is found in cinematographer Ed Lachman’s remark that “light and landscape are actors” in his films. Wenders’s characters are typically revealed predominantly out-of-doors (the studio sets of Himmel über Berlin, indeed a “Symphony of a Great City,” in which the Wall is no barrier to the gliding camera or the angelic inhabitants.

Wenders’s films are dialectical: they structure contrasts not as simple polarities but as rich ongoing dialogue, and the later films seem to be in dialogue with the earlier ones. Among the central concerns from film to film are American versus European culture, the creation of mood versus tight narrative, a sense of “home” versus rootless “freedom,” and even black-and-white versus color photography.

Wenders’s ambivalent fascination with America has been a favorite topic for critics. None of his films is without interest in this regard, but Alice in the Cities is the first to be shot partially in America—a world of boardwalks, motels, neon, and skyscrapers, though still not so different from the urban, industrial Europe of the second half; it is also his first feature to make extensive use of American music, including the Chuck Berry concert in Wuppertal. The American Friend is a dizzying vortex of allusiveness, with its gangsters and cowboys, iconographic presences of Nicholas Ray and Dennis Hopper, miniature Statue of Liberty in Paris, Ripley’s digs in Hamburg, hints of an allegory of the American film industry in Germany (the pornographers seducing the hapless framemaker), and a narrative derived from a novel by an expatriate American and strongly echoing Strangers on a Train. Wenders’s “American period” from Hammett through Paris, Texas is of course of central interest here, with a whimsically mystical and lyrical embracing of humanity and the particulars of physical life that recalls Walt Whitman. Wenders still calls his production company “Road Movies” (in English).

The mid-1970s films may owe much to the American “road movie” of a few years earlier (themselves echoing Kerouac’s On the Road), but the classical Hollywood cinema is defined by its tight narrative structures, and Wenders can be felt to be wrestling with such a structure in The American Friend. He has said of Paris, Texas, in a Film Quarterly interview, “For once I was making a movie that wasn’t meandering all over the place. That’s what Sam [Shepard] brought to this movie of mine as an American writer: forward movement, which is very American in a way.” Still, Paris, Texas is very unlike a classical Hollywood film, though the problematic Hammett, ironically enough, is like one; and the later Wings of Desire is much more a fantasia upon a great city than a classical symphony. (Tokyo-Ga too meanders through a great city rather than being a tight documentary on Yasujiro Ozu.)

Also explored dialectically are the concepts of home and homelessness, omni-present concerns in Wenders’s films. Alice in the Cities, Kings of the Road, and Until the End of the World could all have as epigraph a Barbara Stanwyck line from Clash by Night quoted by Wenders in a piece on Fritz Lang: “Home is where you get when you run out of places.” The State of Things is perhaps Wenders’s most bleak portrayal of homelessness, while Paris, Texas expresses the greatest yearning for home, and Until the End of the World portrays home as a trap (both wondrously and filled with scientific gadgetry) of obligations to parents—a place the viewers too are trapped for the second half of a long film. Wings of Desire features an angel wishing he could “come home like Philip Marlowe and feed the cat;” an acrobat who has always felt “alone” and unattached, but now, in love, can feel “loneliness,” which means “I am finally whole;” and a conclusion in which the former angel muses, “I found Home . . . instead of forever hovering above”—like Wenders’s camera in this film. Obviously the issues of home/homelessness shade into the other prominent Wenders theme of aloneness versus tentative human bonds, explored especially in terms of adult-child friendships, unstable male bondings (see Faraway, So Close for its treatments of both of these), and in Wings, the angelic/mortal possibilities of adult heterosexual love.

Until the End of the World, Wenders’s most ambitious project to date, indeed a would-be magnum opus, is quintessentially Wenders in its fascination with home and the road, memory and dream, the mundane and the sublime; yet it disappoints, despite its fine moments. Its early scenes splendidly evoke a future world through decor, a few striking process shots, and multiple uses of video and computer screens; yet the film is flawed in its vague and inconsistent notions of science in the second half, the amateurish handling of the few action scenes, the implausibility of some of the heroine’s motives, and above all in the lack of enough meaningful connections between the “dance around the world” of the first half and the Australian home-science-lab second half. The Australian landscapes, and the European ones of the very beginning, are hauntingly resonant, like so many in other Wenders films, though the hopscotch around the continents in the first half seems to turn the beauties of Lisbon and rural Japan into mere postcards, an effect seemingly unintended. Perhaps the film succeeds best in its use of various video or computer-generated images to suggest the working—and inseparability—of dreams, memories, and desires. Faraway, So Close, the sequel to Wings of Desire in which Daniel’s angel partner Cassiel too becomes a mortal but finds it much harder to adjust to a world of time, suffers artistically from an attempt to include too many plot strands, to work farcical gangsters and daring rescue attempts into an otherwise private, meditative film. Wenders seems at his best when his stories are starkly simple, with complexity coming from the textures of the films’ environments.

Wenders once claimed, with some relish of paradox, or perhaps recollection of The Wizard of Oz, that black-and-white was suited to realism, color to fantasy. Hence those stylized tales of murder The Goalie’s Anxiety and The American Friend, as well as the science-fiction Until the End of the World, were in color, and the “road trilogy” not, with Kings of the Road immediately declaring itself “a Wim Wenders film in black/white.” He further claimed himself to be incapable of making a documentary in color—though he was soon to make more than one. Once again Wings of Desire seems a synthesis of previous concerns, if not a downright reversal, with the angels seeing the spiritual essence of things in black-and-white but humans perceiving the particularities of mortal life in color. Such inconsistency—or rather, willingness to change perspective—may be taken as represent-ative of the exploratory nature of Wenders’s film work as a whole.

—Joseph Milicia

WERTMULLER, Lina

Films as Director and Writer:

1963 I basilischi (The Lizards)
1965 Questa volta parliamo di uomini (Now, Let’s Talk about Men; This Time Let’s Talk about Men)

Publications

By WERTMULLER: books—

By WERTMULLER: articles—

Interview in Woman and Film (Santa Monica, California), no. 5–6, 1974.

Interview in Interview (New York), March 1975.

“Look, Gideon—Gideon Bachman Talks with Lina Wertmuller,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1977.

“Lina Sweeps In,” interview with G. Ott, in Cinema Canada (Montreal), March 1978.

Interview with B. Steinborn, in Filmfaust (Frankfort), April-May 1986.

On WERTMULLER: books—

Dokumentation: Lina Wertmuller/Martın Scorsese, Zurich, 1986.

On WERTMULLER: articles—

Durgnat, Raymond, in Films and Filming (London), October 1964.

Manera, P., in Cineforum (Bergamo, Italy), December 1991.

* * *

By the mid-1970s, Lina Wertmuller had directed a series of sharply observed (though, in retrospect, markedly uneven) features which brought her international fame and made her one of the shining lights of European cinema. At their best, her films were crammed with pointed humor, astute social commentary, and outrageous sexuality. In 1976, she even became the first woman to win a Best Director Academy Award nomination, for Seven Beauties.

In recent years, Wertmuller’s critical reputation has been tarnished. For one thing, the quality of her work has sharply deteriorated. For another, her detractors have dubbed her a reactionary, labeling her films as grotesque and self-absorbed, with little love for humanity. Meanwhile, her champions hail her as a defender of the downtrodden, an idealistic anarchist who realizes anarchy is impractical yet still cherishes the notion of total individual freedom. Upon examining her films, one might decide that most of her characters are caricatures, or might consider them sympathetic human beings. It all depends on the interpretation.

Wertmuller’s films most characteristically focus on the eternal battle between the sexes, fought with noisy screaming matches and comical seductions in a class warfare setting. Her most typical features—those which cemented her reputation—may be found in the middle of her career, from The Seduction of Mimi through Swept Away... All are imperfect: for every inspired sequence—most notably, in The Seduction of Mimi, Giancarlo Giannini’s antics between the sheets with a ridiculously obese woman—there are long stretches of repetitious ax-grinding on sex, love, anarchy, fascism, and the class struggle.

In the battles of the sexes, Wertmuller’s films are relatively consistent with regard to the portrayal of men and women. Wertmuller’s favorite actor is All Screwed Up star Giancarlo Giannini. His characters think they are suave, but they really are stubborn and stupid, in constant trouble both politically and sexually. In Love and Anarchy, set in 1932, for example, Giannini plays an anarchist, hiding in a brothel, who plans to assassinate Mussolini but instead falls for a prostitute. Wertmuller’s women, on the other hand, are not politically aware, and are uninterested in struggling for self-sufficiency. Seven Beauties, filled with stunning images, is Wertmuller’s penultimate feature: a searing drama about survival in a surreal, insane world. It chronicles the odyssey of a Don Juan (Giannini) through the horrors of World War II. The highlight of the film is a typically gruesome Wertmuller seduction sequence in which the “hero” entices a piggish female concentration-camp commandant.

Over the decades, the reputation of Seven Beauties has suffered because of the declining quality of Wertmuller’s subsequent films. The End of the World in Our Usual Bed in a Night Full of Rain, her first English-language effort, is a verbose marital boxing match pitting journalist/communist Giannini and photographer/feminist Candice Bergen. Revenge, also known as Blood Feud, is the exaggerated tale of a radical lawyer (Marcello Mastroianni) and a gangster (Giannini) who love the beautiful widow Sophia Loren during the early years of fascist rule in Italy. Both films were released in the late 1970s, and were followed by over a dozen forgettable films made over the next two decades.

Easily Wertmuller’s most accessible later-career films are Sotto, Sotto and Ciao, Professore! Thematical speaking, Sotto, Sotto is related to her earlier work in that it is a tale of sexual combat, but with a twist. It is the story of a married woman who becomes romantically attracted to her best (female) friend, which predictably piques her brutally sexist husband. Ciao, Professore! is a social comedy about a Northern Italian grade school teacher accustomed to working with affluent children, who is mistakenly assigned to an impoverished village near Naples. The film comically details the interactions and developing relationships between the teacher and the students. While not as disappointing as her other post-Seven Beauties features, Sotto, Sotto and Ciao, Professore! are formulaic stories whose high points do not compare to their counterparts in Love and Anarchy, Swept Away... and, most certainly, Seven Beauties.

—Rob Edelman
Whale, James

Films as Director:

1930 Journey’s End
1931 Waterloo Bridge; Frankenstein
1932 The Impatient Maiden; The Old Dark House
1933 The Kiss before the Mirror; The Invisible Man
1934 By Candlelight; One More River
1935 The Bride of Frankenstein; Remember Last Night
1936 Showboat
1937 The Road Back; The Great Garrick
1938 The Port of Seven Seas; Sinners in Paradise; Wives under Suspicion
1939 The Man in the Iron Mask
1940 Green Hell
1941 They Dare Not Love

Publications

On WHALE: books—

Curtis, James, James Whale, Metuchen, New Jersey, 1983.

On WHALE: articles—

Evans, Walter, “Monster Movies and Rites of Initiation,” in Journal of Popular Film (Bowling Green, Ohio), Spring 1975.
Clarens, Carlos, and Mary Corliss, “Designed for Film: The Hollywood Art Director,” in Film Comment (New York), May/June 1978.

* * *

Although he is primarily remembered as the director of the cult horror films Frankenstein, The Old Dark House, The Invisible Man, and The Bride of Frankenstein, James Whale contributed much more to the cinema. He also handled such stylish and elegant productions as Waterloo Bridge and One More River, which had little critical impact when they were first released and are, unfortunately, largely unknown today.
A quite, introspective man, James Whale’s background was the stage, notably the original London and New York productions of R.C. Sheriff’s pacifist play Journey’s End. Aside from some work assisting Howard Hughes with the direction of Hell’s Angels (work which is both negligible and best forgotten), James Whale made his directorial debut with Journey’s End, a film which illustrates many of the qualities which were to mark Whale’s later work: close attention to acting and dialogue, a striving for authenticity in settings, and a thoughtful use of camera (here somewhat hampered by the limits imposed on early talkies).

From 1930 through 1937, while Whale was under contract to Universal and under the patronage of studio production head Carl Laemmle Jr., the director was able to turn out a group of literate and accomplished features. Among his varied productions was the First World War melodrama Waterloo Bridge, later remade in a gaudy Hollywood fashion by Mervyn LeRoy, but in this version noteworthy for its honest approach to its leading character’s prostitution and a stunning performance by Mae Clarke (a favorite Whale actress). Both The Invisible Man and The Bride of Frankenstein are influenced by the director’s earlier Frankenstein, but both contain an element of black humor which lifts them above the common horror film genre. The Kiss before the Mirror and By Candlelight possess an intangible charm, while One More River is simply one of Hollywood’s best depictions of upper-class British life, memorable for the ensemble playing of its cast, headed by Diana Wynyard, and the one-liners from Mrs. Patrick Campbell. Show Boat demonstrates that Whale could handle a musical as easily as a romantic drama and is, without question, the finest screen version of the Jerome Kern-Oscar Hammerstein hit.

All of Whale’s Universal features were well received with the exception of his last, The Road Back, based on an Erich Maria Remarque novel and intended as a sequel to All Quiet on the Western Front. The Road Back today appears badly constructed, a problem created in part by the studio’s interference with the production out of concern that the German government might find the film unacceptable.

Whale’s final films after leaving Universal are uniformly without interest, and contemporary response to them was lukewarm at best. The director simply grew tired of the hassles of filmmaking and retired. It has been suggested that Whale’s homosexuality may have been unacceptable in Hollywood and helped to end his career, but he was a very private man who kept his personal life to himself, and it seems unlikely that his sexual preference created any problem for him or his employees; certainly Whale’s homosexuality is not evident from his films, unless it be in the casting of the delightfully “camp” Ernest Thesiger in The Old Dark House and The Bride of Frankenstein.

—Anthony Slide

WIENE, Robert

Nationality: German. Born: Dresden, 1881. Career: Actor, writer, and director, Lessing-Theater, Berlin, until 1913; offered film directing debut by producer Kolowrat, 1913; collaborated with Walter Turszinsky on several comic films, 1915; directed a number of Henny Porten films, 1916; worked in Austria, 1924–26; left Nazi Germany, 1934. Died: In Paris, 17 July 1938.

Films as Director:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1912</td>
<td>Die Waffen der Jugend (d: Wiene or Friedrich Müller, + sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1915</td>
<td>Frau Eva (Arme Eva) (+ sc-co); Die Konseranbraut; Der springende Hirsch (Die Diebe von Günsteburg) (co-d?)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1916</td>
<td>Der Sekretär der Königin (+ sc); Die Liebesbrief der Königin (+ sc); Das wandernde Licht; Die Räuberbraut; Der Mann Spiegel (+ sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1917</td>
<td>Der standhafte Benjamin (+ sc); Das Leben—ein Traum (+ co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1918</td>
<td>Der Umweg zur Ehe (d: Wiene or Fritz Freisler, + co-sc); Die Millionärin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1919</td>
<td>Die verführte Heilige (+ sc); Ein gefährliche Spiel (+ sc); Um das Lächeln einer Frau</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1920</td>
<td>Die Drei Tänze der Mary Wilford (+ co-sc); Das Kabinett des Dr. Caligari (The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari); Genuine; Die Nacht der Königin Isabeau (+ sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Die Rache einer Frau; Das Spiel mit den Feuer (+ co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1922</td>
<td>Die höllische Macht</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1923</td>
<td>Raskolnikow (Schuld und Sühne) (+ sc); Der Puppenmacher von Kiang-Ning; I.N.R.I. (Ein Film der Menschlichkeit) (+ sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1924</td>
<td>Orlacs Hände; Pension Groonen</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1925</td>
<td>Der Leibgardist (Der Gardeoffizier); Der Rosenkavalier (+ co-sc); Die Königin vom Moulin-Rouge</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1927</td>
<td>Die Geliebte; Die berühmte Frau; Le Tombeau sous L’Arc de Triomphe</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1928</td>
<td>Die Frau auf der Folter; Die grosse Abenteuerin; Leontines Ehemänner; Unfug der Liebe</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Der Andere (French version: Le Procureur Hallers)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>Der Liebesexpress (Acht Tage Glück) (French version: Huit Jours de bonheur); Panik in Chicago</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>Polizeiakte 909 (Der Fall Tokeramo) (+ sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>Eine Nacht in Venedig (+ sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Ultimatum (completed by Robert Siodmak)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Other Films:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1915</td>
<td>Fräulein Barbier (Albes) (co-sc); Arme Marie (Zeyn and Mack) (sc); Flucht der Schönheit (Seine schöne Mama) (Rector, i.e. Zeiske) (co-sc); Die bissende Magdalena (Albes) (co-sc); Lottekens Feldzug (Ziener) (co-sc); Der Schirm mit dem Schwan (Froelich) (sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1916</td>
<td>Gelöste Ketten (Biebrach) (sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1917</td>
<td>Frank Hansens Glück (Larsen) (sc); Die Prinzessin von Neutralien (Biebrach) (sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1918</td>
<td>Die Heimkehr des Odysseus (Biebrach) (sc); Das Geschlecht derer von Rinwall (Biebrach) (sc); Opfer der Gesellschaft (Grunwald) (sc); Die Dame, der Teufel und die Probiertmannsell (Biebrach) (sc); Am Tor des Lebens (Am Tor des Todes) (Conrad Wiene) (sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1919</td>
<td>Satanas (Murnau) (artistic spvr); Ihr Sport (Biebrach) (sc); Der lebende Tote (Biebrach) (sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1920</td>
<td>Das Blut der Ahnen (Gerhardt) (co-sc); Die Jagd nach dem Tode (Gerhardt) (co-sc); Die verbotene Stadt (Gerhardt) (co-sc); Die Abenteuer des Dr. Kircheisen (Biebrach) (sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1923</td>
<td>Die Macht der Finsternis (Conrad Wiene) (sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1924</td>
<td>Das Wachsfigurenkabinett (Workaxes) (Lenti) (artistic spvr)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
1928  Heut Spielt der Strauss (Der Walzerkönig) (Conrad Wiene) (sc)
1936  The Robber Symphony (Feher) (artistic spvr)

Publications

By WIENE: book—

On WIENE: books—
Kracauer, Siegfried, From Caligari to Hitler: A Psychological History of the German Film, Princeton, New Jersey, 1947.
Barton, John D., German Expressionist Film, Boston, 1982.

On WIENE: article—

Robert Wiene’s name will ever be associated with Das Kabinett des Dr. Caligari (The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari), his most famous film, although there are critics who would minimize his responsibility for this masterpiece of the cinema. His work is uneven and often blatantly commercial, but in spite of this many of his films show some originality of theme and distinguished performances by actors who worked under him.

Das Kabinett des Dr. Caligari, originally intended for Fritz Lang, put Wiene’s name on the map. It is the most important of the expressionist films and today its power seems undiminished and its daring timeless. It ran continuously in Paris for seven years, thereby creating a record, and at the Brussels World’s Fair of 1958 it was chosen by 117 film historians from 26 countries as one of the top twelve most important films of all time.

In Genuine, Wiene failed to repeat his success in the same genre, although the film was also scripted by the talented Carl Mayer. Three 1923 Wiene films show an interesting range of subject matter. I.N.R.I. dealt with the death of Christ and was mounted on a grand scale; it boasted the cream of German acting in the leading roles, and featured settings by the promising young Hungarian designer, Ernö Metzner. Der Puppenmacher von Kiang-Ning, a tragic-comedy with a script by Carl Mayer, and Raskolnikow, with fantastic sets by the Russian designer Andreiv, completed an interesting trilogy. The latter used emigrated actors in an adaptation of Dostoevsky’s Crime and Punishment. From 1924 to 1926 Wiene worked in Austria, where he made other distinguished films. Orlacs Hände was a horror film that starred Conrad Viedt as a sensitive musician who has the hands of a murderer grafted on to him. Der Rosenkavalier, meanwhile, a film adaptation of the Strauss opera, was co-scripted by Hugo von Hoff-manstahl. It included a special score arranged by the composer, who personally conducted the orchestra when it had its première at the Dresden State Opera House and at the Tivoli Cinema in London. The leading roles were taken by the French stars Huguette Duflos and Jacque Catelain.

Wiene returned to Germany, but his later work showed no special qualities and consisted of lightweight comedies with artists like Lily Damita, Dina Gralla, and Maria Jocabini. He also directed Mady Christians and Andre Roanne in a French production, La Duchesse de Les Folies. In 1935 he went to England and supervised The Robber Symphony, directed by his former actor from Caligari, Friedrich Feher. Of his sound films the Johann Strauss operetta Eine Nacht in Venedig merits attention.

Wiene died in Paris in 1938 while directing Erich von Stroheim and Dita Parlo in Ultimatum, which was completed by Robert Siodmak. While he covered a wide range of material in his films he never developed a personal style. His merit lay in encouraging many diverse talents and his ability to securing often outstanding contributions from them. He controlled his productions, in most cases writing the scripts himself. Wiene lived in a great period of cinema, which he served in his fashion.

—Liam O’Leary

WILDER, Billy

Nationality: Born Samuel Wilder in Sucha, Austria (now part of Poland), 22 June 1906; became U.S. citizen, 1934. Family: Married Audrey Young. Military Service: Served in U.S. Army as colonel in Psychological Warfare Division of the Occupational Government, Berlin, 1945. Career: Journalist in Vienna, then in Berlin, from 1926; collaborated with Robert and Kurt Siodmak, Edgar Ulmer, Fred Zinnemann, and Eugen Schüfftan on Menschen am Sonntag, 1929; scriptwriter, mainly for UFA studios, 1929–33; moved to Paris, co-directed Mauvaise graine, first directorial effort, then moved to Hollywood, 1933; hired by script department at Columbia, then Twentieth Century-Fox; hired by Paramount, began collaboration with Charles Brackett on Bluebeard’s Eighth Wife, 1937; directed first American film, The Major and the Minor, 1942; began making films as independent producer/director with The Seven Year Itch, 1955; began collaboration with writer I. A. L. Diamond on Love in the Afternoon, 1957; directed The Front Page for Universal, 1974. Awards: Oscars for Best Direction and Best Screenplay (with Charles Brackett), and Best Direction Award, New York Film Critics, for The Lost Weekend, 1945; Oscar for Best Story and Screenplay (with Charles Brackett), for Sunset Boulevard, 1950; Oscars for Best Direction and Best Screenplay (with I. A. L. Diamond), Best Direction Award and Best Writing Award (with Diamond), New York Film Critics, for The Apartment, 1960; American Film Institute Lifetime Achievement Award, 1985; Irving G. Thalberg Award, 1988; Kennedy Center Award, 1990; National Medal of Arts, 1993. Address: c/o Equitable Investment Corporation, P.O. Box 93877, Hollywood, CA 90093, U.S.A.
Films as Director:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>Mauvaise graine (co-d)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1942</td>
<td>The Major and the Minor</td>
<td>(+ co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>Five Graves to Cairo</td>
<td>(+ co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1944</td>
<td>Double Indemnity</td>
<td>(+ co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1945</td>
<td>The Lost Weekend</td>
<td>(+ co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1948</td>
<td>The Emperor Waltz</td>
<td>(+ co-sc); Foreign Affair (+ co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>Sunset Boulevard</td>
<td>(+ co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>Ace in the Hole (The Big Carnival)</td>
<td>(+ co-pr, co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1953</td>
<td>Stalag 17</td>
<td>(+ pr, co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1954</td>
<td>Sabrina</td>
<td>(+ pr, co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1955</td>
<td>The Seven Year Itch</td>
<td>(+ co-pr, co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1957</td>
<td>The Spirit of St. Louis, Love in the Afternoon</td>
<td>(+ co-sc, pr)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1958</td>
<td>Witness for the Prosecution</td>
<td>(+ co-sc, pr)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1959</td>
<td>Some Like It Hot</td>
<td>(+ co-sc, pr)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>The Apartment</td>
<td>(+ co-sc, pr)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1961</td>
<td>One, Two, Three</td>
<td>(+ co-sc, pr)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>Irma La Douce</td>
<td>(+ co-sc, pr)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1964</td>
<td>Kiss Me, Stupid</td>
<td>(+ co-sc, pr)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1966</td>
<td>The Fortune Cookie</td>
<td>(+ co-sc, pr)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1970</td>
<td>The Private Life of Sherlock Holmes</td>
<td>(+ co-sc, pr)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1972</td>
<td>Avanti!</td>
<td>(+ co-sc, pr)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1974</td>
<td>The Front Page</td>
<td>(+ co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1976</td>
<td>Fedora</td>
<td>(+ co-pr, co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1981</td>
<td>Buddy Buddy</td>
<td>(+ co-sc)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

By WILDER: book—

Conversations with Wilder, with Cameron Crowe, New York, 1999.

By WILDER: articles—

“One Head Is Better than Two,” in Films and Filming (London), February 1957.

“The Old Dependables,” with Colin Young, in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Fall 1959.

Interview with Jean Domarchi and Jean Douchet in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), August 1962.

Interview with Michel Ciment in Positif (Paris), January 1974.

Interview with Gene Phillips in Film/Literature Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), Winter 1975.

Interview with C. Columbus in American Film (Washington D.C.), March 1986.

“Billy’s Excellent Adventure,” an interview with Paul Diamond, in Fade In (Beverly Hills), vol. 2, no. 1, 1996.

On WILDER: books—

Dick, Bernard F., Billy Wilder, Boston, 1980.

On WILDER: articles—

Sarris, Andrew, “Fallen Idols,” in Film Culture (New York), Spring 1963.

Billy Wilder Issue of Filmcritica (Florence), November/December 1982.

Billy Wilder Section of Positif (Paris), September 1983.

Naremore, James, “Making and Remaking Double Indemnity,” in Film Comment (New York), January–February 1996.

Wenk, Michael, “Some Like It Wilder,” in Film-Dienst (Cologne), 18 June 1996.

* * *

During the course of his directorial career, Billy Wilder succeeded in offending just about everybody. He offended the public, who shunned several of his movies as decisively as they flocked to others; he offended the press with Ace in the Hole, the U.S. Congress with A Foreign Affair, the Hollywood establishment with Sunset Boulevard (‘‘This Wilder should be horsewhipped!’’ fumed Louis B. Mayer); and religious leaders with Kiss Me, Stupid; he offended the critics, both those who found him too cynical and those who found him not cynical enough. And he himself, in the end, seems to have taken offence at the lukewarm reception of his last two films, and retired into morose silence.

Still, if Wilder gave offence, it was never less than intentional. “Bad taste,” the tweaking or flouting of social taboos, is a key tactic throughout his work. His first film as director, The Major and the Minor, hints slyly at paedophilia, and several other Wilder movies toy with offbeat sexual permutations: transvestism in Some Like It Hot, spouse-swapping in Kiss Me, Stupid, an ageing woman buying herself a young man in Sunset Boulevard, the reverse in Love in the Afternoon. Even when depicting straightforward romantic love, as in
The Emperor Waltz, Wilder cannot resist counterpointing it with the eager ruttings of a pair of dogs.

He also relishes emphasising the more squalid of human motives. Stalag 17 mocks prison-camp mythology by making a mercenary fixer the only hero on offer, and Double Indemnity replays The Postman Always Rings Twice with greed replacing honest lust. In The Apartment Jack Lemmon avidly demeans himself to achieve professional advancement (symbolised by the key to a lavatory door), and virtually everybody in Ace in the Hole, perhaps the most acerbic film ever made in Hollywood, furthers personal ends at the expense of a poor dupe dying trapped in an underground crevice. Wilder presents a disillusioned world, one (as Joan Didion put it) ‘‘seen at dawn through a hangover, a world of cheap double entendres and stale smoke . . . the true country of despair.’’

Themes of impersonation and deception, especially emotional deception, pervade Wilder’s work. People disguise themselves as others, or feign passions they do not feel, to gain some ulterior end. Frequently, though—all too frequently, perhaps—the counterfeit turns genuine, masquerade love conveniently developing into the real thing. For all his much-flaunted cynicism, Wilder often seems to lose the courage of his own disenchantment, resorting to unconvincing changes of heart to bring about a slick last-reel resolution. Some critics have seen this as blatant opportunism. ‘‘Billy Wilder,’’ Andrew Sarris remarked, ‘‘is too cynical to believe even his own cynicism.’’ Others have detected a sentimental undertow, one which surfaces in the unexpectedly mellow, almost benign late films like Avanti! and The Private Life of Sherlock Holmes. But although, by comparison with a true moral subversive like Buñuel, Wilder can seem shallow and even facile, the best of his work retains a wit and astringent bite that sets it refreshingly off from the pieties of the Hollywood mainstream. When it comes to black comedy, he ranks at least the equal of his mentor, Lubitsch, whose audacity in wringing laughs out of concentration camps (To Be or Not to Be) is matched by Wilder’s in pivoting Some Like It Hot around the St. Valentine’s Day Massacre.

The consistency of Wilder’s sardonic vision allows him to operate with assurance across genre boundaries. Sunset Boulevard—‘‘full of exactness, cleverness, mastery and pleasure, a gnawing, haunting and ruthless film with a dank smell of corrosive delusion hanging over it,’’ wrote Axel Madsen—has yet to be surpassed among Hollywood-on-Hollywood movies. In its cold fatality, Double Indemnity qualifies as archetypal noir, yet the same sense of characters trapped helplessly in the rat-runs of their own nature underlies both the erotic farce of The Seven Year Itch and the autumnal melancholy of Sherlock Holmes. Acclamation, though, falls beyond Wilder’s scope: his Lindbergh film, The Spirit of St. Louis, is respectful, impersonal, and dull.

By his own admission, Wilder became a director only to protect his scripts, and his shooting style is essentially functional. But though short on intricate camerawork and stunning compositions, his films are by no means visually drab. Several of them contain scenes that lodge indelibly in the mind: Swanson as the deranged Norma Desmond, regally descending her final staircase; Jack Lemmon dwarfed by the monstrous perspectives of a vast open-plan office; Ray Milland (The Lost Weekend) trudging the parched length of Third Avenue in search of an open pawn-shop; Lemmon again, tangling deliriously with Joe E. Brown, in full drag with a rose between his teeth. No filmmaker capable of creating images as potent—and as cinematic—as these can readily be written off.

—Philip Kemp
1956  Somebody up There Likes Me
1957  This Could Be the Night; Until They Sail
1958  Odds against Tomorrow (+ pr)
1961  West Side Story (co-d)
1962  Two for the Seesaw
1963  The Haunting (+ pr)
1965  The Sound of Music (+ pr)
1966  The Sand Pebbles (+ pr)
1968  Star!
1970  The Andromeda Strain (+ pr)
1971  Two People (+ pr)
1975  The Hindenburg
1977  Audrey Rose
1979  Star Trek: The Motion Picture
1987  I, Zorba
1989  Rooftops
2000  A Storm in Summer (for TV)

Other Films:

(partial list)

1940  Dance, Girl, Dance (Arzner) (ed)
1941  Citizen Kane (Welles) (ed)
1942  The Magnificent Ambersons (Welles) (ed)

Publications

By WISE: books—

By WISE: articles—

Interview in Directors at Work, edited by Bernard Kantor and others, New York, 1970.
‘‘Impressions of Russia,’’ in Action (Los Angeles), July/August 1971.
‘‘Robert Wise at RKO,’’ an interview with Ruy Nogueira, in Focus on Film (London), Winter 1972.
‘‘Robert Wise at Fox,’’ an interview with Ruy Nogueira, in Focus on Film (London), Spring 1973.
‘‘Robert Wise to Date,’’ an interview with Ruy Nogueira, in Focus on Film (London), Autumn 1974.
‘‘The Production of The Hindenburg,’’ in American Cinematographer (Los Angeles), January 1976.

‘‘Time and Again,’’ an interview in Monthly Film Bulletin (London), November 1979.
Interview with K.G. Shinnick, in Scarlet Street (Glen Rock), no. 25, 1997.

On WISE: books—

Leemann, Sergio, Robert Wise on His Films: From Editing Room to Director’s Chair, Los Angeles, 1995.

On WISE: articles—

Szehin, F.C., ‘‘The Sound of Screaming,’’ in Cinefantastique (Forest Park), no. 4/5, 1997.

* * *

In the early 1940s there were two young men in the editorial department at RKO who worked as editors on Val Lewton pictures: Robert Wise and Mark Robson. The latter was promoted to a full directorship of Lewton’s Seventh Victim, a moody script by DeWitt Bodeen and Charles O’Neal about a cult of devil worshippers in modern Manhattan.

Meanwhile, Robson’s immediate superior in the editorial department, Robert Wise, got his first directorial opportunity when the front office grew displeased with Gunther von Fritsch, who was halfway through Curse of the Cat People, and dismissed him because he was behind schedule—a cardinal sin in the days of the studios. It was natural that Robert Wise, being the editor of Curse of the Cat People, should take over and complete the film, for only he knew the continuity of what had already been shot. Wise did so admirable a job that Lewton immediately got him assigned to his unit as full director for Mademoiselle Fifi with Simone Simon and The Body Snatcher with Boris Karloff.

Wise had edited two Orson Welles films for RKO—two that became classics, Citizen Kane and The Magnificent Ambersons. After now being made a full director, he diligently went into an acting class because he felt that actors had a special knowledge and language of their own; it was the ideal way of seeing film from the actor’s point of view. It paid off almost immediately; he got an assignment as director for The Set-Up, a realistic picture of the prize ring that made a top star of Robert Ryan and a top director of Wise as well. The Set-Up won him the Critics Prize at the Cannes Film Festival.

In 1950 Wise was at Warner Bros., where he directed a distinguished mood film, Three Secrets, and went on to direct a remake of Edna Ferber’s So Big with Jane Wyman, and The Desert Rats at Twentieth Century-Fox with Richard Burton. Executive Suite at MGM raised his status a notch higher, as did Tribute to a Bad Man with James Cagney. Somebody up There Likes Me was an excellent prize-ring picture starring Paul Newman, while Run Silent, Run Deep was a splendid submarine thriller for Gable and Lancaster. I Want to Live at long last won Susan Hayward an Academy Award as Best Actress for 1958. A couple of years later Wise shared an Academy Award as Best Director with Jerome Robbins for West Side Story. He returned to the moody horror film to make one of the most memorable of all time, The Haunting, which he also produced. He was director/producer again for The Sound of Music, a top box-office winner which won him once more the Academy’s Oscar as Best Director, while The Sand Pebbles, with the late Steve McQueen, also earned him admiration. Through the wide range of his work, Wise proved himself to be a highly versatile director.

—DeWitt Bodeen

WISEMAN, Frederick

Films as Director, Producer, and Editor:

1967 Titicut Follies
1968 High School
1969 Law and Order
1970 Hospital
1971 Basic Training

Other Films:

1964 The Cool World (Clarke) (pr)
1968 The Thomas Crown Affair (Jewison) (sc, uncredited)
Publications

By WISEMAN: articles—

Interview with Janet Handelman, in Film Library Quarterly (New York), Summer 1970.

Interview with Ira Halberstadt, in Filmmaker’s Newsletter (Ward Hill, Massachusetts), February 1974.

“Fictions and Other Realities,” an interview with J. Gianvito, in International Documentary (Los Angeles), Winter 1990/91.

On WISEMAN: books—

On WISEMAN: articles—

Dowd, Nancy, “Popular Conventions,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1969.

Williams, Donald, “Frederick Wiseman,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Fall 1970.

Armstrong, D., “Wiseman’s Model and the Documentary Project: Toward a Radical Film Practice,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Winter 1983/84.

* * *

In the context of their times, Wiseman’s classic documentaries of the 1960s and 1970s are comprehensively anti-traditional. They feature no commentary and no music; their soundtracks carry no more than the sounds Wiseman’s recorder encounters; they are long, in some cases over three hours; and, until recent years, they were monochrome. Following the Drew/Leacock “direct cinema” filmmakers, Wiseman developed a shooting technique using light-weight equipment and high-speed film to explore worlds previously inaccessible. In direct cinema the aim was to achieve what they considered to be more honest reportage. Wiseman’s insight, however, was to recognise that there is no pure documentary, and that all filmmaking is a process of imposing order on the filmed materials. For this reason he prefers to call his films “reality fictions.” Though he shoots in direct cinema fashion (operating the sound system, in his finest achievements in tandem with cameraman William Brayne), the crucial stage is the imposition of structure during editing. As much as forty hours of film may be reduced to one hour of finished product, an activity he has likened to that of a writer structuring a book. This does not mean that Wiseman’s films “tell a story” in any conventional sense. The pattern and meaning of Wiseman’s movies seem slowly to emerge from events as if somehow contained within them. Only after seeing the film, perhaps more than once, do the pieces fall into place, their significance becoming clear as part of the whole system of relations that forms the movie. Thus, to take a simple example, the opening shots of the school building in High School make it look like a factory, yet it is only at the end when the school’s principal reads out a letter from a former pupil in Vietnam that the significance of the image becomes clear. The soldier is, he says, “only a body doing a job,” and the school a factory for producing just such expendable bodies.
Wiseman is not an open polemicist; his films do not appear didactic. But as we are taken from one social encounter to the next, as we are caught up in the leisurely rhythms of public ritual, we steadily become aware of the theme uniting all the films. In exploring American institutions, at home and abroad, Wiseman shows us social order rendered precarious. As he has put it, he demonstrates that “there is a gap between formal and actual practice, between the rules and the way they are applied.” What emerges is a powerful vision of people trapped by the ramifications and unanticipated consequences of their own social institutions.

Some critics, while recognising Wiseman’s undoubted skill and intelligence, attack him for lack of passion, for not propagandising more overtly. They argue that when he shows us police violence (Law and Order), army indoctrination (Basic Training), collapsing welfare services (Welfare), or animal experiments (Primate) he should be more willing to apportion blame and make his commitments clear. But this is to misunderstand his project. Wiseman avoids the easy taking of sides for he is committed to the view that our institutions can go so terribly wrong. To do that at all is a remarkable achievement. To do it so uncompromisingly over so many years is quite unique.

In the 1980s he sought to broaden his enterprise somewhat. In 1982, for instance, he turned briefly to “fiction,” though Seraphita’s Diary is hardly orthodox and it is an intelligible extension of his interests. The subsequent documentaries, still produced at regular intervals, have perhaps not had quite the same force as his 1970s work. Central Park, for instance, is hypnotic in the rhythms of daily life that it invokes, but lacks the sheer power of the earlier films, which focused on the often ferocious tensions found in the collision between social institutions and people at the end of their tethers. Nevertheless, he has had a huge influence on the shape of modern documentary filmmaking, and, with Welfare his most compelling achievement, he remains the most sophisticated and intelligent documentalist of postwar cinema.

—Andrew Tudor

WOO, John

Films as Director:

1973 The Young Dragon
1974 The Dragon Tamers

1975 Princess Chang Ping; Hand of Death; Countdown in Kung Fu (+ sc; role as Scholar Cheng)
1977 Money Crazy, Follow the Star
1978 Last Hurrah for Chivalry
1979 From Rags to Riches
1981 To Hell with the Devil, Laughing Times
1982 Plain Jane to the Rescue
1983 The Sunset Warrior
1984 The Time You Need a Friend
1985 Run Tiger Run
1986 Heroes Shed No Tears (+ co-sc); A Better Tomorrow (+ co-sc, role as Inspector Wu)
1987 A Better Tomorrow II (+ co-sc); Just Heroes
1989 The Killer (+ co-sc)
1990 Bullet in the Head (+ co-sc, ed, role as Police Inspector)
1991 Once a Thief (+ co-sc, role as Stanley Wu)
1992 Hard-Boiled (+ co-sc, ed, role as Night Club Owner)
1993 Hard Target
1996 Broken Arrow; Once a Thief (for TV) (+ exec pr)
1998 John Woo’s Blackjack (for TV) (+ pr); Face-Off
2000 Mission Impossible II
2001 Windtalkers; King’s Ransom

Other Films:

1989 Starry Is the Night (Hui) (role)
1994 Cinema of Vengeance (Russell—doc) (as Himself)
1997 Hot Blood is the Strongest (Leung) (role as Police Chief)
1998 The Big Hit (Wong) (exec pr); The Replacement Killers (Fuqua) (exec pr)
1999 Kurosawa: The Last Emperor (Cox—doc) (as Himself)
2000 The Devil’s Pale Moonlit Kiss (Spottiswoode) (pr)

Publications

By WOO: articles—

“John Woo: I Hate Violence,” Interview, August 1993.
“Things I Felt Were Being Lost: John Woo,” Film Comment, September-October 1993.

On WOO: books —

On WOO: articles—

For sheer visceral excitement and over-the-top graphic violence, few action films made today, either in the United States or abroad, come close to the work of transplanted Hong Kong writer-director John Woo—a twenty-year veteran of Oriental action cinema who began his career making martial arts movies with kung fu superstar Jackie Chan.

With these and several costume epics to his credit, Woo shifted to bloody melodramas about his country’s pervasive problems of crime and gangsterism with A Better Tomorrow (1986). The film tells the story of an ace counterfeiter gone straight who runs into brutal conflict with his ex-cronies in the mob and his younger brother, an ambitious cop on the Hong Kong police force whose career rise is threatened because of his brother’s past reputation and criminal associations.

One of the biggest box-office successes in Hong Kong movie history, A Better Tomorrow made a major star out of a charismatic actor in the Cagney/Bogart mold named Chow Yun-Fat, who plays a crippled hit man and confidante of the film’s protagonist. John Woo and Chow Yun-Fat quickly became the Robert DeNiro and Martin Scorsese of Hong Kong cinema. They teamed for an equally successful sequel, A Better Tomorrow II, in 1987, and continued on an action-filled roll, turning out one gangster film after another—with such titles as Bullet in the Head (1990), a grueling saga of revenge and high crime with the Vietnam War serving as a backdrop, Once a Thief (1991), and Hard-Boiled (1992), a noirish urban melodrama with a thirty-minute finale of gunplay set in a hospital that remains one of the most mesmerizing action sequences in the history of cinema.

The duo’s most widely released collaboration statewide was The Killer (1990), the story of a world-weary mob hitman who suffers a crisis of conscience when he accidentally blinds a nightclub singer during a ferocious gangland shoot-out and—in the manner of Bogart’s Roy Earle in High Sierra—undertakes one last job to pay for an operation to restore her eyesight.

Woo’s Hollywood-gangster-film-inspired plots are a mixture of ripe sentimentality and macho romance with a moral grounding in such virtues as friendship, loyalty, and duty to God and country. Like the Italian action specialist Sergio Leone, dean of the “spaghetti Western,’’ Woo treats the clichés of the genre as grand myths. But his most talked-about trademark is his balletic choreographing of violent set-pieces (often in slow motion) in the manner of the late Sam
Peckinpah, the director Woo seems to have been most influenced by.
The climax of Peckinpah’s landmark Western The Wild Bunch (1969) erupted with what is still one of the most gut-wrenching, pyrotechnical displays of firepower and bloodletting ever put on the screen. Imagine if you will a director who stages all the action sequences in his films—and they are virtually non-stop—in the same over-the-top style and you have a good idea of what the action films of John Woo are like.
There is a chasm of difference though between the disquieting, raw-nerve power of Peckinpah’s scenes of violence (particularly in The Wild Bunch) and Woo’s montages of mayhem, which function (and engage us) on the same level as video games.

Woo’s growing worldwide reputation as an action specialist prompted Hollywood to import him in 1993 to try to breathe some new “life” into the tired action genre here as well with Hard Target, a Woo-style updating of Richard Connell’s classic tale of bloodsport,
The Most Dangerous Game, which marked the Hong Kong action wiz’s American film debut. Woo had to do some careful trimming to avoid an NC-17 rating for the film, which Entertainment Weekly critic
Owen Gleiberman hailed as ‘‘an incendiary action orgy, as joyously excessive as the grand finale in a fireworks show.’’ Woo followed Hard Target three years later with Broken Arrow, a thriller about a bad-guy Air Force pilot who crash lands his stealth fighter in order to steal the nuclear missiles on board and sell them to the highest bidder. Cast against type as the bad guy, John Travolta gives a broad, scenery-chewing performance that, much like the film itself, grows tiresome and eventually loses all credibility as the plot swings into high-tech gear and total improbability. The film was a hit, and Travolta and Woo enjoyed working together so much that they teammed again for Face/Off. This time around, Travolta plays the hero—a federal agent who, in order to get the goods on a contract terrorist’s (Nicolas Cage) next job, switches faces with Cage through high-tech surgery and gets close to Cage’s brother by pretending to be Cage. Complications mount when Cage pulls the same charade by having Travolta’s face grafted on to his own kisser and pretending to be Travolta—and the two adversaries square off for a series of bloody confrontations to resolve their respective identity crises.

Because of his concern about the fate of his native Hong Kong (and, one assumes, its movie industry) now that the country has returned to Chinese hands, Woo has taken up permanent residence in Hollywood. The greater opportunities (and bigger bucks) Hollywood offers to filmmakers with his special skills were undoubtedly a big inducement to expatriate as well. His reputation as the action movie genre’s premier maestro now as assured here as it was in Asia, Woo has parlayed his success by producing TV movies, helping his former star Chow Yun-Fat launch a Hollywood career (in The Replacement Killers, which Woo executive-produced), and landing the highest profile blockbuster assignments (like the Tom Cruise-starring Mission Impossible II) on which to put his distinctive bullets-and-balletics stamp.

—John McCarty

WOOD, Edward D., Jr.

Nationality: American. Born: Edward Davis Wood, Poughkeepsie,
NY, 10 October 1924. Education: Poughkeepsie High School, 1941;
Kings School of Dramatic Art, Frank Lloyd Wright Institute, Wash-
Family: Married to Kathy O’Hara Everett. Career: Wrote, produced, directed and starred in the play The Casual Company at the Village Playhouse, Hollywood, 1948; wrote and directed first film, Crossroads of Laredo, 1948; wrote, directed, and starred in first Hollywood feature, Glen or Glenda, 1953; wrote and directed several short films for the U.S. government, 1960; published first novel, Black Lace

Films as Director and Screenwriter:

1948 The Streets of Laredo
1951 The Sun Was Setting (+ pr)
1953 Glen or Glenda; Crossroad Avenger: The Adventures of the Tucson Kid; Boots
1954 Jailbait (d only, + pr)
1955 Bride of the Monster (+ pr)
1956 Plan Nine from Outer Space (+ pr)
1957 Final Curtain (+ pr); The Night the Banshee Cried (+ pr)
1958 Night of the Ghouls (+ pr)
1960 The Sinister Urge (d only, + story)
1970 Take It out in Trade
1971 Necromantia; The Only House

Films as Screenwriter:

1952 The Lawless Rider
1956 The Violent Years
1963 Shotgun Wedding
1965 Orgy of the Dead
1969 For Love or Money; One Million AC/DC; Operation Redlight; Gun Runners
1971 The Undergraduate
1972 Class Reunion (co-sc); The Cocktail Hostesses (co-sc); Dropout Wife (co-sc)
1974 Fugitive Girls
1976 The Beach Bunnies (co-sc)
Publications

By WOOD: books—

WATTS—The Difference, Pad Library, 1966.
Side-Show Siren, Sundown Reader, 1966.
WATTS... After, Pad Library, 1967.
It Takes One to Know One, Pad Library, 1967.
Death of a Transvestite, Pad Library, 1967.
Raped in the Grass, Pendulum Pictorial, 1968.
TV Lust, Eros Goldstripe, 1974.

On WOOD: books—

On WOOD: articles—

Sesslen, Georg, “Ed Wood-die Originale,” in Film-Dienst (Frankfurt), vol. 12, no. 9, September 1995.

On WOOD: film—

* * *

Ed Wood typifies the ultimate in filmmaking independence. His approach to filmmaking was that if no studio would hire him or finance his projects (which they wouldn’t and didn’t), he would make them himself, scavenging money from any available source. Wood fell in love with the movies at a very young age; he never wanted to be anything but a moviemaker, although he had little or no talent for the job. He began films in 8-millimeter even before he had reached his teens. Following a stint in the U.S. Marine Corps during World War II—where, according to legend, he stormed the beaches at Tarawa wearing ladies’ underwear beneath his battle dress—he journeyed to Hollywood to realize his boyhood dream of making it big in the movie business.

His “breakthrough” came in 1953, with the George Weiss-produced exploitation feature on sex-change operations first known as Behind Locked Doors, then as Transvestite, and finally as Glen or Glenda. The film was originally intended to be a documentary on the life of transsexual Christine Jorgensen; ultimately it became a kind of self-portrait of Ed Wood himself, a classic apology for cross-dressing, and an obsessive ode to the delights of wearing angora sweaters.

Wood then made Jailbait (1954), which is about a gangster (Timothy Farrell) who undergoes plastic surgery to escape the law. Armed with a broken-down rubber octopus previously seen in a Republic Pictures John Wayne movie called Wake of the Red Witch (1948), a leading man (Tom McCoy) who couldn’t act (but whose father provided some of the financing), as well as Bela Lugosi, Tor
Johnson, and a somewhat better-than-usual script, Wood next created Bride of the Monster, an attempt at a horror picture in the style of the classic Universal films Wood had grown up on. What he achieved was closer in spirit to the low-rent series of horror flicks turned out by Monogram in the 1940s.

Wood always cited his masterpiece as Plan Nine from Outer Space, the film most closely associated with him. It has earned the reputation over the years as the worst movie ever made, which it isn’t, although its shortcomings are enormous. The title (Wood originally wanted to call the film Grave Robbers from Outer Space) refers to an alien plot to resurrect the earth’s dead. Said aliens arrive in flying saucers made out of Cadillac hubcaps suspended on visible wires. Wood’s spaceship interior is a lamely disguised soundstage decked out with a shower curtain and some other “futuristic” touches. These boldly executed shortcomings, however, may be why Plan Nine has outlasted many better-made films of the era in the public’s mind.

To finance Plan Nine, Wood turned to a Baptist minister named J. Edward Reynolds, who saw the film as an opportunity to get into the movie business and use the profits to finance a series of religious films. In return, Wood agreed to have the cast and crew baptized by Reynolds prior to production. Soon he found his alcoholic/cross-dressing personal life under fire. Reynolds used this as a wedge to get control of the finished film, then let it sit on a shelf for three years, unable to find a distributor.

Wood penned the screenplay for The Bride and the Beast (1958), about the attraction of a young wife (Charlotte Austin) to her husband’s (Lance Fuller) pet gorilla, named “Spanky.” But the next feature he directed was Night of the Ghouls (1958). Once again, Wood thought he was in Universal’s classic monster territory, and once again he fell well shy of his intended mark. Forced to shoot in a severely cramped studio, he hastened to complete the film before the electric bill (which he couldn’t pay) came due.

From Night of the Ghouls Wood plunged into The Sinister Urge (1960), billed as a “smut picture” and “portrait of a psycho killer.” It was released as a double feature with a reissue of The Violent Years (1956), a film Wood had written. He also wrote the script for a sleazy “white trash” exploitation opus called Shotgun Wedding (1963) and for a combination horror-porno flick Orgy of the Dead (1965). In 1970, he directed his first “nude” feature, Take It out in Trade, in which he once again donned an angora sweater to star. He followed it up with the harder-core Necromania (1971), from which it was only a small step to porno “loops” and a steady downslide to an untimely death in dire poverty in 1978 at the age of fifty-four.

Wood’s saga was subsequently made into a film by Tim Burton, Ed Wood (1994), starring Johnny Depp as Wood and Martin Landau (who won an Oscar for his performance) as Bela Lugosi.

—John McCarty

WYLER, William

Nationality: American. Born: Willy Wyler in Mulhouse (Mülhausen), Alsace-Lorraine, 1 July 1902; became U.S. citizen, 1928. Family: Married 1) Margaret Sullivan, 1934 (divorced 1936); 2) Margaret Tallichet, 1938, four children. Military Service: U.S. Army Air Corps, 1942–45; major. Career: Travelled to America at invitation of cousin Carl Laemmle, 1920; worked in publicity department for Universal in New York, then transferred to Universal City, Hollywood, 1921; assistant director at Universal, from 1924; directed first film, Crook Buster, 1925, and first feature, Lazy Lightning, 1926; signed contract with Samuel Goldwyn, 1936; helped to found Committee for the First Amendment to counteract Hollywood investigations by House Un-American Activities Committee, 1947; “Hommage à William Wyler” organized by Henri Langlois at the Cinémathèque française, 1966; retired from directing, 1972. Awards: Oscar for Best Direction, for Mrs. Miniver, 1942; Oscar for Best Direction and New York Film Critics Award for Best Direction, for The Best Years of Our Lives, 1946; Oscar for Best Direction, for Ben Hur, 1959; Irving G. Thalberg Award, 1965; American Film Institute Lifetime Achievement Award, 1976. Died: 29 July 1981.

Films as Director:

1925 Crook Buster
1926 The Gunless Bad Man; Ridin’ for Love; Fire Barrier; Don’t Shoot; The Pinnacle Rider; Martin of the Mounted; Lazy Lightning; Stolen Ranch
1927 Two Fister; Kelly Gets His Man; Tenderfoot Courage; The Silent Partner; Galloping Justice; The Haunted Homestead; The Lone Star; The Ore Riders; The Home Trail;
Gun Justice; Phantom Outlaw; Square Shooter; The Horse Trader; Daze in the West; Blazing Days; Hard Fists; The Border Cavalier; Straight Shootin’; Desert Dust

1928 Thunder Riders; Anybody Here Seen Kelly
1929 The Shakedown; The Love Trap
1930 Hell’s Heroes; The Storm
1931 A House Divided
1932 Tom Brown of Culver
1933 Her First Mate; Counselor at Law
1934 Glamour; The Gay Deception
1936 These Three; Dodsworth; Come and Get It
1937 Dead End
1938 Jezebel
1939 Wuthering Heights
1940 The Westerner; The Letter
1941 The Little Foxes
1942 Mrs. Miniver
1944 Memphis Belle
1946 The Best Years of Our Lives
1947 Thunder-Bolt
1949 The Heiress
1951 Detective Story
1952 Carrie
1953 Roman Holiday
1955 The Desperate Hours
1956 Friendly Persuasion
1958 The Big Country
1959 Ben-Hur
1962 The Children’s Hour
1965 The Collector
1966 How to Steal a Million
1968 Funny Girl
1970 The Liberation of L.B. Jones

Publications

By WYLER: articles—

‘‘Interview at Cannes,’’ in Cinema (Beverly Hills), July/August 1965.
Interview with Charles Higham, in Action (Los Angeles), September/October 1973.
‘‘Wyler on Wyler,’’ with Alan Cartnel, in Inter/View (New York), March 1974.
‘‘Dialogue on Film,’’ in American Film (Washington, D.C.), April 1976.
Interview with P. Carcassonne and J. Fieschi, in Cinématographe (Paris), March/April 1981.
Lecture excerpts in Films and Filming (London), October 1981.

On WYLER: books—

Kolodiaznaia, V., Ul’iam Uailer, Moscow, 1975.

On WYLER: articles—

‘‘Personality of the Month,’’ in Films and Filming (London), July 1957.
Heston, Charlton, ‘‘The Questions No One Asks about Willy,’’ in Films and Filming (London), August 1958.
Reid, John Howard, ‘‘A Little Larger than Life,’’ in Films and Filming (London), February 1960.
Reid, John Howard, ‘‘A Comparison of Size,’’ in Films and Filming (London), March 1960.
Sarris, Andrew, ‘‘Fallen Idols,’’ in Film Culture (New York), Spring 1963.
Brownlow, Kevin, ‘‘The Early Days of William Wyler,’’ in Film (London), Autumn 1963.
Hanson, Curtis, ‘‘William Wyler,’’ in Cinema (Beverly Hills), Summer 1967.
Carey, Gary, ‘‘The Lady and the Director: Bette Davis and William Wyler,’’ in Film Comment (New York), Fall 1970.
Phillips, Gene, ‘‘William Wyler,’’ in Focus on Film (London), Spring 1976.
Swindell, Larry, ‘‘A Life in Film,’’ in American Film (Washington, D.C.), April 1976.

On WYLER: film—

Directed by William Wyler (Slesin), 1986.

* * *

William Wyler’s career is an excellent argument for nepotism. Wyler went to work for “Uncle” Carl Laemmle, the head of Universal, and learned the movie business as assistant director and then director of programmers, mainly westerns. One of his first important features, A House Divided, demonstrates many of the qualities that mark his films through the next decades. A transparent imitation of Eugene O’Neill’s Desire under the Elms, it contains evidence of the staging strategies that identify Wyler’s distinctive mise-en-scène. The film’s premise holds particular appeal for a director who sees drama in claustrophobic interiors, the actors held in expressive tension by their shifting spatial relationships to each other, the decor, and the camera. In A House Divided Wyler extracts that tension from the dynamics implicit in the film’s principal set: the downstairs room that confines the crippled father (Walter Huston) and the stairs leading to the landing between the rooms of the son (Kent Douglass) and the young stepmother (Helen Chandler). The stairway configuration is favored by Wyler for the opportunity it gives him to stack the agents of the drama and to fill the frame both vertically and in depth. When he later collaborates with cinematographer Gregg Toland, the potential of that depth and height is enhanced through the use of varying degrees of hard and soft focus. (Many critics, who are certainly unfamiliar with Wyler’s early work, have unjustly credited Toland for the depth of staging that characterizes the partnership.)

The implications of focus in Wyler’s stylics go far beyond lighting procedures, lenses, or even staging itself. Focus directs the viewer’s attention to varieties of information within the field, whatever its shape or extent. Focus gives simultaneous access to discordant planes, characters, and objects that challenge us to achieve a full, fluctuating reading of phenomena. André Bazin, in his important essay on Wyler in the French edition of What Is Cinema?, speaks of the director’s ‘‘democratic’’ vision, his way of taking in the wholeness of a field in the unbroken time and space of the ‘‘plan- séquence,’’ a shot whose duration and complexity of staging goes far beyond the measure of the conventional shot. Bazin opposes this to the analytic montage of Soviet editing. In doing so he perhaps underestimates the kind of control that Wyler’s deep field staging exerts upon the viewer, but he does suggest the richness of the visual text in Wyler’s major films.

Counselor at Law is a significant test of Wyler’s staging. The Broadway origins of the property are not disguised in the film; instead, they are made into a virtue. The movement through the law firm’s outer office, reception room, and private spaces reflects a fluidity that is a function of the camera’s mobility and a challenge to the fixed frame of the proscenium. Wyler’s tour de force rivals that of the film’s star, John Barrymore. Director and actor animate the attorney’s personal and professional activities in a hectic, ongoing present, sweeping freely through the sharply delineated (and therefore sharply perceived) vectors of the cinematic/theatrical space.

Wyler’s meticulousness and Samuel Goldwyn’s insistence on quality productions resulted in the series of films, often adaptations of prestigious plays, that most fully represent the director’s method. In Dodsworth, the erosion of a marriage is captured in the opening of the bedroom door that separates husband and wife; the staircase of These Three delimits the public and private spaces of a film about rumor and intimacy; the elaborate street set of Dead End is examined from a dizzying variety of camera angles that create a geometry of urban life; the intensity of The Little Foxes is sustained through the focal distances that chart the shape of family ties and hatreds.

After the war, the partnership of Wyler and Toland is crowned by The Best Years of Our Lives, a film whose subject (the situation of returning servicemen) is particularly pertinent, and whose structure and staging are the most personal in the director’s canon.

In his tireless search for the perfect shot, Wyler was known as the scourge of performers, pushing them through countless retakes and repetitions of the same gesture. Since performance in his films is not pieced together in the editing room but is developed in complex blockings and shots of long duration, Wyler required a high degree of concentration on the part of the actors. Laurence Olivier, who was disdainful of the medium prior to his work in Wuthering Heights, credits Wyler for having revealed to him the possibilities of the movies. But it is Bette Davis who defines the place of the star actor in a Wyler film. The three projects she did with Wyler demonstrate how her particular energies both organize the highly controlled mise-en-scène and are contained within it. For Jezebel she won her second Academy Award. In The Letter, an exercise in directorial tyranny over the placement of seemingly every element in its highly charged frames, the viewer senses a total correspondence between the focus exercised by director and performer.

During the last decades of Wyler’s career, many of the director’s gifts, which flourished in contexts of extreme dramatic tension and the exigencies of studio shooting, were dissipated in excessively grandiose properties and “locations.” There were, however, exceptions. Wyler’s presence is strongly felt in the narrow staircase of The Heiress and the dingy station house of Detective Story. He even manages to make the final shootout of The Big Country adhere to the narrowest of gulches, thereby reducing the dimensions of the title to his familiar focal points. But the epic scope of Ben Hur and the ego of Barbra Streisand (in Funny Girl) escape the compact economies of the director’s boxed-in stackings and plane juxtapositions. Only in The Collector, a film that seems to define enclosure (a woman is kept prisoner in a cellar for most of its duration) does Wyler find a congenial property. In it he proves again that the real expanse of cinema is measured by its frames.

—Charles Affron
XIE Jin

Films as Director:

1954 A Crisis; A Wave of Unrest; Rendezvous at Orchard Bridge
1955 Spring in the Land of Waters
1957 Woman Basketball Player Number Five
1958 episodes of Small Leaders of the ‘Big Leap’ and Small Stories of a Big Storm; Huang Baomei
1960 The Women’s Red Army Detachment
1962 Big Li, Young Li, and Old Li
1964 Wutai Jiemei (Two Stage Sisters)
1972 The Door
1975 Chunmiao
1976 The Bay of Rocks
1977 Youth
1980 Ah, Cradle
1981 The Legend of Tianyun Mountain
1982 The Herdsman
1983 Qiu Jin (+ sc)
1984 Garlands at the Foot of the Mountain
1986 Fu-Zung Cen
1987 Hibiscus Town
1989 The Last Aristocrats
1993 Lao ren he gou (An Old Man and His Dog)
1996 Behind the Wall of Shame
1997 Yapian zhanzheng (The Opium War)

Other Films:

1948 The Silent Wife (Wu Renzhi) (asst d)
1949 The Martyr of the Garden of the Pear Trees (Zheng Xiaoqui) (asst d)
1953 The Feather Letter (Shi Hui) (asst d)

Publications

On XIE JIN: books—

On XIE JIN: articles—

Jin Xie Section of Positif (Paris), March 1985.
Because of the length of his career, his ability to dramatize popular political sentiments, and his commitment to the melodrama as a vehicle for the expression of his aesthetic vision, Chinese filmmaker Xie Jin has been compared to Douglas Sirk and Frank Capra. Since his career spans over four decades, with contributions to every stage of the development of filmmaking from the earliest days of the post-Revolutionary period, Xie Jin must be counted as one of the most significant filmmaking veterans still making features today in the People’s Republic of China. He has not become a mere “fossil” tolerated by an industry grateful for his contributions in the 1950s and early 1960s. Rather, Xie continues to be controversial and exceptionally popular with Chinese audiences both inside and outside of China.

Trained in the theatre, Xie came to the Shanghai studios in the early 1950s and was soon promoted from assistant to full director. His name rather rapidly became associated with the political melodramas he is still known for today. His 1957 film Woman Basketball Player Number Five, for example, helped to establish his reputation as a “woman’s director.” Unlike the maligned “woman’s film” genre in Hollywood, melodramas featuring strong female leads became the favored vehicle for the dramatic examination of the role the Revolution was playing in reshaping both men’s and women’s lifestyles and attitudes toward gender in the People’s Republic. Blending Soviet socialist realism with the aesthetic directives of Mao and the popularity of classical Hollywood tear-jerkers, Xie was creating a peculiarly Chinese political aesthetic. This aesthetic can still be appreciated today for the ways in which it stretched beyond the modes of representation usually reserved for women at that time in both Asian and Western film cultures.

Before the onset of the Cultural Revolution in the mid-1960s, Xie Jin perfected his revolutionary woman’s films in The Women’s Red Army Detachment and Two Stage Sisters. Although The Women’s Red Army Detachment won the first One Hundred Flowers Award (the PRC equivalent of the Oscar still coveted today), Two Stage Sisters was doomed by a storm of criticism unleashed by the Cultural Revolution. Two Stage Sisters features the story of the relationship between two Shaoxing opera performers from their beginnings as itinerant entertainers in the feudal countryside of 1930s China through success in Shanghai during the Japanese occupation, eventual separation, and reunion during the post-Revolutionary period. Changes in the style of the operas presented in the film (for example, folk opera, Western-influenced critical realist operas, Mao’s favored “revolutionary romanticism” in opera form) also parallel broader social and political changes. Although probably the pinnacle of his career and the most complete flowering of his political aesthetic, Two Stage Sisters was only fully appreciated after the Cultural Revolution ended.

During the Cultural Revolution, Xie suffered much the same fate as most of his generation. At times under house arrest, he was still enlisted to help direct Jiang Qing’s “model opera” films during that period. These films, in fact, are aesthetically and politically at odds with his earlier work.

After the Cultural Revolution, Xie Jin went back to making political melodramas featuring female protagonists. The Legend of Tianyun Mountain, in fact, was one of the first films made after the Cultural Revolution to condemn not only its political excesses but also the strains the Anti-Rightist Campaign of the 1950s had placed on Chinese society. He has continued in this socially critical vein with The Herdsman and Hibiscus Town (both dealing with the Cultural Revolution), while also making patriotic dramas like Qija (based on the life of the well-known Qing Dynasty female revolutionist) and Garlands at the Foot of the Mountain (on the recent Sino-Vietnamese war). Xie’s The Last Aristocrats deals with the lives of four young Chinese women living abroad and was partially shot in the United States.

Ironically, even though Xie Jin has devoted virtually his entire life’s work to films about politically active, modern Chinese heroines, he is most often criticized today for his supposed “feudal” depiction of women as “good” wives and mothers. He has also been condemned for his “old-fashioned” style of filmmaking. However, while some younger filmmakers tend to disregard audience tastes, hoping for an art house following in Europe and the United States, Xie Jin, despite his critics, has continued to please Chinese audiences.

In the 1990s, Xie continued to work in the Shanghai film industry, increasingly as a producer rather than director. His influence can be felt as an often unacknowledged but clearly present indebtedness many younger filmmakers have to his seminal contributions to Chinese film culture. It is difficult, for example, to look at Chen Kaige’s critically celebrated Farewell My Concubine without seeing Two Stage Sisters remade as “Two Stage Brothers,” with the same epic sweep and use of Chinese opera to stand as a metaphor for the history of China in the twentieth century. Huang Shuqin’s Woman Demon Human also covers similar ground, using an opera actress’s life on and off the stage as an allegory for China in the post-war era. Although some critics have remarked on the number of recent Chinese films with male-centered narratives, the female-centered melodramas that Xie championed continue to be an important staple of the rapidly changing film culture of the People’s Republic.

—Gina Marchetti

---

YANG, Edward

Nationality: Chinese. Born: Yang Dechang, Shanghai, China, 1947; moved to Taiwan with family, 1949. Education: Graduated with a degree in engineering, 1969; earned master’s degree in computer science, University of Florida, 1972. Career: Returned to Taiwan, 1981; worked in television before making his directorial debut, 1982.

Films as Director:

1982  ‘‘Expectations’’ episode in the omnibus film In Our Time
1983  That Day, on the Beach
1985  Taipei Story
1986  The Terrorizer
1991  Guling Jie Shaonian Sha Ren Shijian (A Brighter Summer Day)
1994  A Confucian Confusion (+ sc, production designer)
1996  Mahjong
2000  Yi yi (A One and a Two) (+ sc)
Along with Hou Hsiao-hsien and Wan Jen, Edward Yang stands as one of the most recognized of Taiwan’s “New Wave” directors. Part of a torrent of talent that flooded international screens with innovative Chinese-language features from Hong Kong, Taiwan, and the People’s Republic of China in the 1980s, Yang’s work is New Wave in a number of different interpretations of that term. Yang’s films resemble European New Wave directors’ work because of his commitment to formal experimentation within fiction narratives. This is coupled with an interest in the use of film as social commentary and cultural critique. The films Yang directed in the 1980s, in particular, have been favorably compared to the work of Antonio Antonioni because of their “high modernist” exploration of the barren, urban landscape, and the alienation of the individual in contemporary, bourgeois society, as well as their focus on psychologically complex, female protagonists to investigate these themes dramatically.

Also, as was the case with the French New Wave, the Taiwanese New Wave (and, more recently, contemporary Chinese-language cinema generally) benefitted from very fruitful collaborations among a coterie of talented directors, scriptwriters, producers, and actors/actresses. Perhaps the most striking collaboration in Yang’s oeuvre, for example, occurred when the noted director Hou Hsiao-hsien took the lead role in Taipei Story. Hou’s portrayal of Lon, a failed businessman, obsessive baseball fan, and perpetual fiance of the film’s female protagonist, embodies many of the uncertainties and contradictions of contemporary Taiwanese society: a nostalgia for a past shaped by Japan and America, an ambivalence toward traditional gender and family roles, and an alienation from the political and economic vicissitudes of urban Taipei. Certainly, film director Hou’s reputation for films about rural youth and changes in traditional Chinese culture and society in the postwar, post-Japanese era brings a resonance to the character of Lon that other actors could not hope to convey.

Like members of the European New Wave of the 1960s, Yang has a love/hate relationship with American culture, using it for complex intertextual textures (for example, the use of Elvis Presley as a musical and visual presence in A Brighter Summer Day), and aesthetically working against Hollywood through the use of “dead,” “negative” space in which “nothing happens” in empty urban landscapes and aggressively long takes. However, despite these similarities, Yang is also a decidedly Taiwanese director, with a commitment to documenting the peculiarities of contemporary Taiwanese society: a nostalgia for a past shaped by Japan and America, an ambivalence toward traditional gender and family roles, and an alienation from the political and economic vicissitudes of urban Taipei. Certainly, film director Hou’s reputation for films about rural youth and changes in traditional Chinese culture and society in the postwar, post-Japanese era brings a resonance to the character of Lon that other actors could not hope to convey.

Nornes, Markus, “The Terrorizer,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1989.

alienate the uninitiated viewer, while winning the praise of intellectuals educated to appreciate a modernist sensibility. Although Yang now has his own production company, several of his earlier, more challenging films were financed by the government-operated Central Motion Picture Corporation, allowing for a freedom of experimentation without the pressing demands of the domestic marketplace.

In most of Yang’s oeuvre, women embody the key tensions of modern Taiwan. That Day, on the Beach uses an elaborate narrative structure composed of a frustrated, inconclusive murder investigation and a series of flashbacks to paint a portrait of Lin Chia-li, a woman who escaped the pressures of a traditional, patriarchal household only to find herself again trapped by an empty marriage. Although a corpse that may or may not be her husband prompts her interior investigation, the real substance of the film goes beyond a simple critique of Chinese patriarchy. It looks at contemporary Taiwan, its own uncertain national identity, precarious place in the global economy, and divided political culture through the life of a woman who is both the victim and beneficiary of these monumental social changes.

Taipei Story continues in the same vein. Chin, an unemployed mid-level administrator who has moved into her own apartment against the wishes of her traditional father, must decide whether to marry her fiancé, Lon, or move on with her upwardly mobile, female boss, leaving the ‘‘old’’ Taiwan of Lon and her family behind. The final scene, in which Chin is framed against the massive picture window of her boss’s new headquarters in an eerily empty office building—a signifier of modernity—as Lon lies bleeding to death in the window of her boss’s new headquarters in an eerily empty office building—a signifier of modernity—as Lon lies bleeding to death in another part of the city, again dramatically portrays the emergence of a new Taiwan in the character of a woman freed by the death of her more traditional lover.

This same theme has an even more bloody enactment in The Terrorizer. Chou Yufen, a writer married to a doctor, Li Li-chung, is cured of her writer’s block by the anonymous phone calls of a young Eurasian girl, bored during her recovery from a wound sustained during a youth gang street battle, who tells her that her husband is having an affair. Armed with this lie, Chou Yufen writes a story about her plights and leaves her husband. Passed over at the hospital and misunderstood by his estranged wife, Li Li-chung commits suicide (perhaps after killing his new boss and his wife’s lover). In New Wave fashion, the details of his death (or even the fact of his death) remain indeterminate. However, as in Yang’s earlier films, as the central, male character fades away, the female characters emerge. However, Lin Chia-li, Chin, Chou Yufen, and even the marginal ‘‘White Chick,’’ as the Eurasian girl is called, represent a new world tainted by a vacuous modernity, stripped of affect, and literally deadening.

In his work on The Terrorizer, Fredric Jameson sees the film as combining a modernist and postmodernist sensibility to explore the interpenetration of traditional, national, multinational, and transnational spaces, and thus the hybrid identity that marks contemporary Taipei. It is debatable whether this film marks a significant break with Yang’s earlier, ‘‘modernist’’ work or not. However, it is useful to look at Yang’s more recent A Brighter Summer Day and A Confucian Confusion as moving in a different direction from the director’s work in the 1980s. Keeping Yang’s characteristically complex and convoluted narrative structure, the former explores youth gangs in postwar Taiwan and the later looks at contemporary ‘‘yuppies’’ in modern Taipei. Unlike his earlier efforts, A Confucian Confusion is a comedy (albeit a very dark one). Despite the move away from the serious, woman-centered dramas of the 1980s, however, Yang maintains his commitment to examining carefully Taiwan’s experience of modernity, taking Taipei from the margins of the globe and putting it within an international framework that makes local issues poignant for a world audience.

—Gina Marchetti

YOSHIMURA, Kozaburo

Nationality: Japanese. Born: Shiga Prefecture, 9 September 1911; also known as Kimisaburo Yoshimura. Education: Nihon High School, Tokyo, graduated 1929. Family: Married Tomoko Oouchi, 1940. Career: Assistant director to Yasujiro Shimazu at Shochiku-Kamata Studio, 1929; drafted into military, 1932; after return from service, directed first film, Sneaking, 1934; assistant director to Shimazu, Heinosuke Gosho, Dhiro Toyota, and Mikio Naruse, 1934–39; moved to newly established Shochiku-Ofuna studios, 1936; resumed directing, 1939; served in machine gun unit, then as information officer on general staff, 1944; repatriated, spent year in prison and repatriation camp, 1945; began collaboration with scriptwriter Kaneto Shindo, 1947; founded independent production company Kindai Eiga Kyokai (Society of Modern Film), with Shindo, producer Hisao Itoya, director Tengo Yamada, and actor Taichi Tonoyama, 1950; contracted by Daiei Studio, 1956; TV director, 1960. Awards: Eiga Seikai-sha New Director’s Prize, for Danryu, 1939; Cinemajbo Number One Film, for Anjo-ke no bukokai, 1947; Mainichi Director’s Prize, for Itsureru seiso, 1951; Shijuo-Hosho Decoration, Japanese Government, 1976. Address: 4–3–37 Zushi, Zushi City, Kanagawa, Japan.

Films as Director:

1934 Nukiashi sashiashi (Sneaking)
1939 Onna koso ie o momore (Women Defend the Home!); Women Should Stay at Home); Yokina uramachi (Cheerful Alley; Gay Back Alley); Asu no odoriko (Dancers of Tomorrow); Gonin no kyodai (Five Brothers and Sisters); Danryu (Warm Current) 1940 Nishizumi sanshacho den (The Story of Tank Commander Nishizumi)
1941 Hana (Flower)
1942 Kancho mada shinazu (The Spy Has Not Yet Died) (+ story); Minami ni kaze (South Windy); Zoko minami no kaze (South Wind: Sequel)
1943 Laisen no zenya (The Night before the War Begins); Tekki kushu (Enemy Air Attack)
1944 Kessen (A Decisive Battle)
1947 Zo o katta renchu (The Fellows Who Ate the Elephant); Anjo-ke no butokai (The Ball of the Anjo Family)
1948 Yawaku (Temptation; Seduction); Waga shogai no kagayakeru hi (The Bright Day of My Life)
1949 Shitto (Jealousy); Mori no Ishimatsu (Ishimatsu of the Forest; Ishimatsu of Mori); Mahiru no enbukyo (Walz at Noon)
1950 Shunsetsu (Spring Snow); Senka no hate (The Height of Battle; The End of Battle Fire)
1951 Itsuwareru seiso (Deceiving Costume); Jiyu gakko (Free School); Genji monogatari (A Tale of Genji)
1952 Nishijin no shima (Sisters of Nishijin); Boryoku (Violence)
1953 Senba-zuru (A Thousand Cranes); Yokabo (Desire); Yoake mae (Before the Dawn)
1954 Ashizuri misaki (Cape Ashizuri); Wakai hitotachi (Young People)

1955 ‘Hanauer musume’ (The Flower Girl, The Girl Who Sells Flowers), episode of Aisureba koso (If You Love Me; Because I Love); Ginza no onna (Women of the Ginza); Bijou to kairyu (The Beauty and the Dragon)

1956 Totugu hi (Day of Marriage; The Day to Wed); Yoru no kawa (Night River; Undercurrent); Yonjuhassai no teiko (48-Year-Old Rebel; Protest at 48 Years Old)

1957 Osaka monogatari (An Osaka Story); Yoru no cho (Night Butterfly); Chijo (On the Earth)

1958 Hitotsubu no mugi (One Grain of Barley); Yoru no sugao (The Naked Face of Night)

1959 Denwa wa yugata ni naru (Telephone Rings in the Evening); Kizoku no kaidan (Aristocrat’s Stairs)

1960 ‘Koi o wasureta onna’ (A Woman’s Testament, The Woman Who Forgot Love), episode of Jokei (Women’s Scroll); Onna no saka (Woman’s Descent)

1961 Konki (Marriage Time); Onna no kunsho (Woman’s Decoration)

1962 Kazoku no jijo (Family’s Situation); Sono yo wa wasurenai (I Won’t Forget That Night)

1963 ‘Shayo nigo’ (Company’s Business), episode of Echizen take ningyo (Bamboo Doll of Echizen)

1966 Kokoro no sanmanryaku (The Heart of the Mountains)

1967 Daraku suru onna (A Fallen Woman)

1968 Nemureru bijo (Sleeping Beauty; The House of the Sleeping Virgins); Atsui yoru (A Hot Night)

1971 Amai himitsu (Sweet Secret)

1973 Konketsuji Rika (Rika, the Mixed-Blood Girl), Hamagure no komoriuta (Lullaby of Hamagure)

1974 Ranru no hata (Ragged Flag)

Publications

By YOSHIMURA: book—

Eiga no gijutsu to mikata [Film Technique and How to Look at Films], 1952.

On YOSHIMURA: books—

* * *

Although Kozaburo Yoshimura’s early work followed the drama and comedy conventions of the Shochiku Studio productions of the 1930s, he gradually proved himself an ambitious artist who broke away from these conventions through his varied selections of themes and subjects, and his bold exploration of styles. His technical maturity has been consistent over the years and through all genres, from the melodramatic Warm Current, which first brought Yoshimura recognition, through the wartime production The Story of Tank Commander Nishizumi, which successfully portrayed the decent, human side of the war hero with exciting action scenes, to the patriotic spy film The Night before the War Begins, which stylistically resembles an American suspense film.

The postwar liberation allowed him to employ more freely his favorite American film styles and techniques. Typical of this period is The Ball of the Anjo Family, which surprised the Japanese postwar audience not only with its fresh techniques, but also with its striking theme of the contrasts between the falling and emerging social classes of the time.

The challenges of the varied subjects of Yoshimura’s subsequent films confirmed his energy and versatility, as in The Bright Day of My Life, which illustrated a flamingly passionate love unusual to Japanese films, between a couple who had belonged to opposing political groups before the war. Ishinatsu of Mori is regarded as one of the first successful postwar period films. From the familiar legend, Yoshimura made a satirical comedy which alludes critically to the contemporary gangster’s mentality. Deceiving Costume, a postwar adaption of Mizogushi’s prewar masterpiece Sisters of the Gion, demonstrated a similar emotional intensity and powerful social criticism through its story of the life of geisha sisters. The Beauty and the Dragon is a new adaptation of a popular Kabuki play, made with the assistance of the innovative theater troupe Zenshin-za.

Scenario writer Kaneto Shindo’s collaboration with Yoshimura was indispensable to Yoshimura’s success, from The Ball of the Anjo Family to The Day to Wed, during which time they produced twenty-two films together. When in 1950 Shochiku Studio subjected the pair to commercial pressures, they decided to establish an independent production company, Kindai Eiga Kyokai, or Society of Modern Film. It enabled the two to pursue their artistic experimentation and thus produce many masterpieces which attracted critical attention.

Yoshimura became well known for literary adaptations—A Tale of Genji, A Thousand Cranes, Before the Dawn, Sleeping Beauty, and Cape Ashizuri—as well as for light comedy—Free School, about contemporary social life, Desire, Young People, and One Grain of Barley, among others. Particularly noteworthy is a series of films on the life of contemporary women using many of Daiei Studio’s prime actresses, Night River, Night Butterfly, Naked Face of Night, and others. He has continued his independent efforts, notably with Heart of the Mountains and Ragged Flag, which powerfully depicts the life of a pioneering opponent of pollution in Japan in the early years of this century.

Yoshimura has consistently shown excellent story-developing skill, which has won popular support for his films. His best films often contain social criticism, but at the same time do not preach, relying instead on the depiction of heightened emotions among the characters to successfully appeal to the audience.

—Kyoko Hirano
ZANUSSI, Krzysztof

Nationality: Polish. Born: Warsaw, 17 June 1939. Education: Educated in physics, Warsaw University, 1955–59; faculty of philosophy, University of Cracow, 1959–62; directing course, State Film school, Lodz, graduated 1966. Career: Director, from 1966; appointed to faculty of Lodz film school, and named vice president of Association of Polish Filmmakers, 1973; chosen by Pope John Paul II to make his film biography, From a Far Country, 1980; during suppression of Solidarity movement, directed mainly in Western Europe, 1980s; elected president of FERA (Fédération européenne des réalisateurs de l’audiovisuel), 1990. Awards: Venice Festival prizewinner for The Death of a Provincial, 1966; Best Film, Polish film critics, for The Structure of Crystals, 1970; State Award, Polish Minister of Culture and Arts, 1973; Special Prize, VII Polish Film Festival, 1980; Donatello Prize, for From a Far Country, 1980; Special Jury Prize, Venice Film Festival, 1982; State Prize 1st Class, 1984; Vittorio De Sica International Film Award, Sorrento, 1990.

Films as Director:

1958 Droga do nieba (The Way to the Skies) (amateur film in collaboration with Wincencyon Ronisz)
1966 Smierc provincjala (The Death of a Provincial) (short, diploma film); Przemysl; Maria Dabrowska
1967 Komputery (Computers)
1968 Twarz w twarz (Face to Face) (+ co-sc) (for TV); Krzysztof Penderecki (for TV)
1969 Zaliczenie (An Examination, Pass Mark) (+ co-sc) (for TV); Struktura krzscala (The Structure of Crystals) (+ co-sc)
1970 Gory o zmierzchu (Mountains at Dusk) (for TV); Zycie rodzinnie (Family Life) (+ sc)
1971 Rola (Die Rolle) (+ sc) (for West German TV); Za sciana (Behind the Wall) (+ co-sc) (for TV)
1972 Hipoteza (Hypothesis) (+ sc) (for TV)
1973 Illuminacja (Illumination) (+ sc)
1974 The Catamount Killing
1975 Milosierdzieplatne z gory (Nightdienst; Night Duty) (for TV); Bilans kwartalny (A Woman’s Decision) (+ sc)
1976 Barwy ochronne (Camouflage) (+ sc)
1977 Anatomie stunde (Lekcja anatomii; Anatomy Lesson) (for TV); Haus der Frauen (House of Women); Penderecki, Lutoslawa; Brigitte Horney
1978 Spirala (Spiral) (+ sc)
1979 Wagen in der Nacht (Ways in the Night; Paths into the Night) (+ sc)
1980 Constans (The Constant Factor)
1981 Kontrakt (The Contract); From a Far Country; Versuchung (for TV)
1982 Uerreiechbare (Imperative)
1984 Blaubart (Bluebeard); Rok spokojnego slonca (The Year of the Quiet Sun)
1985 Le Pouvoir du mal (The Power of Evil; Paradigme)
1987 Wherever We Are
1989 Stan Posiadania (Inventory) (+ sc)
1990 Dotkniecie (Touch)
1991 The Last Dance; Wittold Lutoslawski (doc); Zycie Za Zycie (A Life for a Life)
1992 The Silent Touch (+ co-pr); Lang Gesprach mit dem Vogel (for TV) (+ sc)
1996 Cwal (At Full Gallop) (+ sc, pr)
1997 Our God’s Brother
2000 Zycie jako smiertelna choroba przenoszona droga plciowa

Other Films:

1978 Amator (Camera Bluff) (Kieslowski) (role as himself)
1993 Kolejnosc uczuc (Sequence of Feelings) (Piwowarski) (pr)
1995 “Steps” (Olszewski) and “Pigs and Pearls” (Nikolic), episodes in Love & Hate (co-pr)
Publications

By ZANUSSI: articles—

Interview, in Interview (New York), December 1984.

“Tightrope,” an interview with Marcia Pally, in Film Comment (New York), January/February 1986.

Interview with Wanda Wertenstein, in Kino (Warsaw), November 1995.

Interview with Rafał Stec, in Kino (Warsaw), December 1997.

On ZANUSSI: books—

On ZANUSSI: articles—

Möller, Olaf, “Die ruhende Sonne oder ein Mann bleibt sich treu,” in Film-Dienst (Cologne), 28 April 1992.

Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), no. 6, 1994.

Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), no. 2, 1996.

* * * * *

The cinema of Krzysztof Zanussi explores a continuum of conflict ranging from the individual and interpersonal to the larger social order. He explores the relationship of the individual’s conscience to society’s norms of morality. Appearing as himself in Krzysztof Kieslowski’s Camera Buff, Zanussi says that he feels an obligation to question why the corrupt manipulators are the survivors. His is a provocative, cerebral cinema, objectifying its characters through both attention to detail and cool observation of the stages of conflict. During this process Zanussi demands the intellectual participation of his audience, and ultimately its response. The spectator should attain the level of self-awareness that his protagonists reach.

Zanussi has worked chiefly under a system of government subsidy in his native Poland. He has headed one of the three Polish film units. Yet while West German television has produced many of his recent, non-Polish films, they are still subject to Polish government approval. His films have therefore occupied a space between individual self-expression and government tolerance. Prior self-censorship has been a factor in both his message and the discourse which conveys it. No clear separation exists between the private world of Zanussi the artist-intellectual and the public realm in which he operates.

Three major types of conflicts permeate the films. The first is between determinism and free will (often clouded by chance). He elaborates this as the bridgeable gap between empiricism (rational analysis) and Catholicism (grace) in, for example, Illumination, The Constant Factor, and Imperative. Zanussi’s background in physics and philosophy strongly influences these films. Conflict between the individual and the corruption of (contemporary Polish) society is explored in Camouflage, The Constant Factor, and Contract. Zanussi masks the conflict in Ways in the Night, which presents the dilemma of an intelligent, sensitive young German officer who must uphold the policies of the National Socialists. The third major opposition is between the individual’s self-awareness and the invisible (yet pervasive) pressures of the immediate social milieu; this is presented most strongly in Spiral and The Contract. From a Far Country*, Zanussi’s biography of the Polish Pope John Paul II, is an important key to understanding Zanussi’s world view. In this film, no separation exists between the actions of the individual and the larger network of social forces in which he moves. The dichotomy of free will and determinism underlies the entire project.

Although Zanussi’s works can be defended against the charge that his approach is too cerebral, his films are often more cerebral than stimulating. Although Zanussi’s films may not reach many in the audience, it is likely that his portrayal of life and society is still valid today. dimension to the conflict between a son and his family. The handheld camera follows his attempt to burn down the family home. Zanussi intercuts this obsessive behavior with the repetitive sound of bells from a sleigh which carries his family. At the end of The Constant Factor, a stone falls in slow motion from where the protagonist, who has fallen from occupational grace because of his incorruptibility, is cleaning windows. It strikes a child playing below; chance plays a hand in a universe beyond the individual’s control. Zanussi then cuts to the majestic, desolate mountains, as if to say there is no rational method for solving the existential dilemma.

In all of Zanussi’s films these moments of cinematic self-consciousness alternate with long takes of intellectual debate and questioning. During these probing conversations Zanussi is least obtrusive in the application of cinematic techniques. The irony, however, is that the ideological imprint of the director is most overt in the depiction of these verbal conflicts.

Zanussi’s later films continue to examine human emotions and the difficulties of human relations as they exist within the context of historical events and cultural and political differences. Inventory is a subtle, reflective allegory whose characters mirror the downfall of Communism and the resulting political upheaval in Eastern Europe. Zanussi tells the story of two women: Julia, an ex-government censor who had rebelled against an oppressive system and whose spirit has been crushed; and an older woman, a devout Catholic whose church had played a key role in the resistance against Communist authority. The faith of the latter is tested when her idealistic son falls in love with Julia.

Other Zanussi films deal with the issues of sacrifice and survival as they specifically relate to World War II. The Year of the Quiet Sun is a poignant drama set immediately after the end of the war in an area abandoned by the Germans and in the process of being resettled by Poland. While one small town begins to be revived, an American soldier and Polish refugee fall in love. “This is meant to be a film of gentle emotion,” explained the director. “The story I wish to tell is a love story, whose protagonists don’t speak a common language and can understand each other only by gestures, facial expressions, laughter, and a few isolated words.”

A Life for a Life actually is set during the war. In reprisal for the escape of a young Silesian from Auschwitz in 1941, the Nazis condemn ten prisoners to starvation. A Franciscan priest eventually offers his life to save that of one of the prisoners, who has collapsed. Finally, The Silent Touch features Max von Sydow as a classical composer who survived the Holocaust. Now in retirement, he has turned to drink in his solitude. The scenario charts how he is induced back into creativity upon the arrival of a young music student who acts as his “guardian angel.”

—Howard Feinstein, updated by Rob Edelman

ZEFFIRELLI, Franco

Nationality: Italian. Born: Gianfranco Corsi in Florence, 12 February 1923. Education: Studied architecture at University of Florence, and at Accademia di Belle Arti, Florence. Family: One son, one daughter. Career: Theatre director, from 1945; designer for opera, from 1946; made only acting appearance in Zampa’s Angelina, 1947; assistant director to Visconti, for films and theatre, from 1947, working on La Terra trema, Bellissima, Senso; opera director, from 1953; directed first film, 1957; made Jesus of Nazareth for TV, 1977. Awards: Academy Award nomination, Best Director, for Romeo and Juliet, 1968.

Films as Director:

- 1957 Camping (+ co-sc)
- 1965 La Bohème
- 1966 The Taming of the Shrew (+ co-sc); Florence—Days of Destruction (doc)
- 1968 Romeo and Juliet (+ co-sc)
- 1972 Fratelli sole sorella luna (Brother Sun, Sister Moon) (+ co-sc)
- 1977 Gesù di Nazareth (Jesus of Nazareth) (for TV) (+ co-sc)
- 1979 The Champ
- 1981 Endless Love
- 1982 La Traviata (+ sc); La Bohème (for TV)
- 1983 Strasphere (doc)
- 1986 Othello (Othello) (+ sc)
- 1988 Il Giovane Toscanini (Young Toscanini)
- 1990 Hamlet (+ co-sc)
- 1992 Storia di una Capinera (The Story of a Blackcap) (+ sc)
- 1993 Sparrow (+ sc)
- 1996 Jane Eyre (+ sc)
- 1999 Tea with Mussolino (+ sc)

Other Films:

- 1947 Angelina (Zampa) (role)
- 1948 La terra trema (Visconti) (asst d)
- 1951 Bellissima (Visconti) (asst d)
- 1954 Senso (Visconti) (asst d)
- 1995 Placido Domingo: A Musical Life (role)

Publications

By ZEFFIRELLI: books—

By ZEFFIRELLI: articles—

“A Dialogue with Franco Zeffirelli,” in American Cinematographer (Los Angeles), October 1981.

Franco Zeffirelli

Interview with Steve Grant, in Time Out (London), 17 April 1991.

“Breaking the Classical Barrier: Franco Zeffirelli Interviewed by John Tibbets,” in Literature-Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), April 1994.

On ZEFFIRELLI: articles—

Pursell, M., “Artifice and Authenticity in Zeffirelli’s Romeo and Juliet,” in Literature-Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), October 1986.

Calderale, M., in Segnocinema (Vicenza), May/June 1996.

Simmons, James R. Jr., and Philip Weller, “‘In the Rank Sweat of an Enseamed Bed’: Sexual Abberation and the Paradigmatic Screen Hamlet: Freud’s Footprints in Films of Hamlet,” in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury), April 1997.

* * *

Franco Zeffirelli imbues his theater, opera, and film productions with a dazzling array of baroque imagery, visual pyrotechnics, sumptuous sets and costumes, and overt eroticism. Of his major motion pictures, nearly all are adaptations of classical derivation set in another era. To many viewers, his films are hollow, banal, and superfluous romantic exercises, but Zeffirelli defends his love of the past and tradition by saying: "We have no guarantee for the present or the future. Therefore the only choice is to go back to the past and respect traditions. I have been a pioneer in this line of thinking, and the results have proven me right. . . . The reason I am box-office everywhere is that I am an enlightened conservative continuing the discourse of our grandfathers and fathers, renovating texts but never betraying them."

After studying architecture at the University of Florence, Zeffirelli took up acting. Luchino Visconti saw him in a production of Jean Cocteau’s Les Parents terribles and hired him to act in stage productions of two works—Eurydice, by Jean Anouilh, and Crime and Punishment, by Dostoevsky. Zeffirelli also involved himself in designing sets and costumes for Visconti’s stage presentations, and appeared in the film L’onorevole Angelina, directed by Luigi Zampa and starring Anna Magnani. As a result of that film, he was offered a seven-year acting contract at RKO-Radio by screenwriter Helen Deutsch. Zeffirelli turned the offer down, however, to become Visconti’s assistant on three films—La terra trema, Bellissima, and Senso. Zeffirelli’s natural talent in the realms of set and costume design and his love of opera provided an obvious segue into staging opera productions. These productions gained a reputation for opulence and for the focusing of attention on the lead female singers. Zeffirelli, who says he “adores fun, fantasy, and women,” emphasized these elements in his operas. His most famous and successful association in opera was with the volatile Maria Callas, for whom he staged productions of La Traviata, Lucia de Lammermoor, Norma, and Tosca. His lengthy apprenticeship in the various theatrical arts earned Zeffirelli a reputation as a Renaissance man of sorts. He turned to feature film directing in 1967, bringing his romanticized traditionalism to The Taming of the Shrew, which starred Elizabeth Taylor and Richard Burton. While unarguably a bowdlerization of Shakespeare, its slapstick and boisterous merriment was engaging.

Romeo and Juliet was another matter entirely. Here the very heart of Shakespeare was replaced with Romeo and Juliet as flower children. It was an unabashed combination of theatricality, nude love scenes, and a Mercutio which Zeffirelli describes as “a self-portrait of Shakespeare himself as a homosexual.” The film was tremendously popular with the young movie-going audience and received Academy Awards for cinematography and costume design.

Fratello sole sorella luna (Brother Sun, Sister Moon) was also aimed at the young, this time the “Jesus freaks,” members of a fundamentalist religious group, but this outrageous portrait of St. Francis of Assisi was a complete flop.

Zeffirelli’s 1978 Easter television presentation, Jesus of Nazareth, employed a star-studded cast and surprised many serious critics with its sensitivity and restraint. This was not the case, however, with his syrupy diminishing of The Champ, a sentimental classic that should never have been updated.

Zeffirelli disparages the explicitly erotic Endless Love, a vehicle for Brooke Shields, which, he says, was a beautiful story of the tragedy of two families in its original three-hour-version. He labeled the truncated version “trash” and vowed to stop with his attempts to capture the young audience. Appropriately, his next picture was the opulent and admirably cinematic presentation of La Traviata. For his Hamlet, however, he courted controversy with his casting of heartthrob Mel Gibson in the title role.

Zeffirelli’s Hamlet was similar to his earlier The Taming of the Shrew in that both attempted to bring Shakespeare to the masses by casting bankable Hollywood names—Mel Gibson, Glenn Close—alongside classically trained Britons—Paul Scofield, Alan Bates, Ian Holm. Zeffirelli defends his extravagant approach to filmmaking by saying, “I am a flag-bearer of the crusade against boredom, bad taste, and stupidity in the theater,” but he is still the target of critical barbs such as those from a Time magazine reviewer who stated he was “a director in need of a director.”

Zeffirelli’s other recent films of note include Tea with Mussolini and Sparrow, a typically ornate but otherwise ponderous account of a young novice nun in 1850s Sicily who is forced out of her convent because of a cholera epidemic. She returns to her hometown and promptly falls in love, but rejects her suitor to return to the nunnery. Once there, she is conflicted by her feelings for her beloved and her religious commitment. Almost driven to insanity, she eventually garners the fortitude to persevere in her religious calling.

In recent years, Zeffirelli primarily has concentrated on directing opera productions in Europe and the United States, including a stint at New York’s Metropolitan Opera, where he directed a 1995 production of La Traviata.

—Ronald Bowers, updated by Rob Edelman

ZEMECKIS, Robert

Nationality: American. Born: Chicago, Illinois, 14 May 1951. Education: Attended Northern Illinois University; University of Southern California School of Cinema, graduated 1973. Family: Married Mary Ellen Trainor. Career: Following graduation, with Bob Gale, asked to develop material for Steven Spielberg and John Milius; also worked as cutter of advertisements, 1970s; directed his first feature, I Wanna Hold Your Hand, 1978; also worked as a writer for TV. Awards: Special Jury Award Student Academy Award, for Field of Honor, 1973; Los Angeles Film Critics Association Special Award, for Who Framed Roger Rabbit?, 1988; Best Director Academy Award, Directors Guild of America Outstanding Directorial Achievement in Motion Pictures, Best Director-Motion Pictures Golden Globe, for Forrest Gump, 1994. Address: 1880 Century Park E., #900, Los Angeles CA 90067, U.S.A.

Films as Director:

1973 Field of Honor (short) (+ sc)
1978 I Wanna Hold Your Hand (+ co-sc)
1980 Used Cars (+ co-sc)
1984 Romancing the Stone
1985 Back to the Future (+ co-sc)
1988 Who Framed Roger Rabbit?
1989 Back to the Future II

1101
Robert Zemeckis

1990  Back to the Future III
1992  Death Becomes Her (+ co-pr)
1994  Forrest Gump
1997  Contact (+ pr)
1999  The 20th Century: The Pursuit of Happiness (doc) (for TV)
2000  What Lies Beneath; Cast Away

Other Films:

1979  1941 (Spielberg) (co-sc)
1992  Trespass (Hill) (co-sc, co-exec pr); The Public Eye (Franklin) (exec pr)
1993  Johnny Bago (series for TV) (pr)
1995  Demon Knight (Demon Keeper, Tales from the Crypt Presents: Demon Knight) (exec pr); W.E.I.R.D. World (for TV) (exec pr)
1996  The Frighteners (Robert Zemeckis Presents: The Frighteners) (exec pr); Bordello of Blood (Tales from the Crypt Presents: Bordello of Blood) (exec pr)
1997  Perversions of Science (series for TV) (exec pr)
1999  House on Haunted Hill (Haunted Hill) (pr)

Publications

By ZEMECKIS: articles—

Interview, in Filmmakers Newsletter (Ward Hill, Massachusetts), June 1978.
Interview with A. Crystal, in Films and Filming (London), December 1985.
Interview with A. Garel, in Revue du Cinéma (Paris), November 1985.
“Back with a Future,” an interview with Mark Horowitz in American Film (Los Angeles), July/August 1988.
On ZEMECKIS: articles—

Kehr, Dave, “Who Framed ‘Forrest Gump,’” in Film Comment (New York), March/April 1995.

* * *

Did Robert Zemeckis “out-Spielberg” early-career Spielberg? As it stands now Zemeckis seems close to beating his closest mentor at his own game. Still, there has been a catch to all this: Zemeckis’s work has been much celebrated for its dazzling technological inventiveness, and then pretty much left at that. While his films are technically impressive, they are also more than that. Who Framed Roger Rabbit? does indeed blend animation with live action brilliantly, but that observation does not exhaust the film. Zemeckis, in all his work, also chooses narratives that work out conflicts arising from a complex dual structure, elicits a fondness for injecting his films with a carefully controlled kinetic sense that works both to hold these movies together and to keep them extraordinarily dynamic.

All Zemeckis’s films present narratives in which different worlds are at odds with each other, starting with his celebrated short Field of Honor. Continuing the line, I Wanna Hold Your Hand contrasts the frustrating glimpses that the Beatle-crazed protagonists get of the group with the satisfying television representation of them on the Ed Sullivan Show. Zemeckis repeatedly returns to this narrative tension as characters’ lives interact with highly mediated visions in Used Cars (politics clashes with and merges with advertising), Romancing the Stone (Kathleen Turner’s onscreen adventures contrast with her romance novel ideals), Roger Rabbit (humans interact uneasily with ‘toons), and Contact (which deals with issues of rationalism versus faith, and science versus religion). In the Back to the Future trilogy, the present (1985 suburban California) is contrasted to both the past and the future. Zemeckis’s characters generally find the less mediated, more ‘real’ world to be lacking but ultimately acceptable. For instance, in Romancing the Stone Michael Douglas does not meet Kathleen Turner’s expectations for Jess, her ideal man, but she pines for him anyway, and in the end goes to him. Only Roger Rabbit suggests that some sort of happy compromise is possible as both types of characters walk off together toward ‘Toontown at closure, though a case could be made for Future III, which combines the vistas of Ford with the optimism of Hawks.

These films also ponder serious questions in an entertaining way. Used Cars, as it explores the commercialization of American politics, itself can be seen as an extended form of the joke often told in reference to Nixon: “Would you buy a used car from this man?” Even more directly, the Future films, and to a lesser extent Roger Rabbit, overtly address questions concerning the impact that the present has on the future and our responsibilities to history. While bringing up such questions so directly in genre film is fairly rare, the unsystematic treatment such issues get here is not. Christopher Lloyd in the Future trilogy illustrates this cavalier treatment well. When faced with a question of how he could risk the space-time continuum so blithely, he responds, “Oh, what the hell.” Also, while he repeatedly stresses the risks to the universe occasioned by his inventions, he always fixes his time machine “one last time” and even fashions an entirely new one at the end of Future III. Zemeckis combines this interest in moral questions with an almost Buñuelian sense of humor. His use of black comedy is evident most obviously in Used Cars, which, among other things, uses a corpse as a comedy prop. Romancing the Stone, meanwhile, contains the following exchange: “Have they found her husband’s body yet?” “Just the one piece.” Further, the dark vision of 1985 in Future II is there at the edges of the other films in the trilogy. The porno theaters and winos that sprout in the middle film are present in the other installments in smaller numbers, often used for comedic effect, as when the same homeless person reappears again and again at different times. Even in Roger Rabbit some representations of the victims of World War II can be seen in the Terminal Bar.

Zemeckis makes use of a consistent spatial design to keep these disparate elements together. His spaces often take on readily discernible circular shapes. Chases are almost always chases around things: around the New Deal Used Car Lot, around the kitchen during the “Something’s Cookin’” segment of Roger Rabbit, around the courthouse square in the Future films. Fights also usually move around objects: around a broken stick in Romancing the Stone, around a cartoon mallet in Roger Rabbit, around Biff’s speeding car in Future II. These broad movements are mirrored by characters and objects in a number of other ways (Roger Rabbit’s movements after taking a drink, the looping take-offs of the flying time machines). On a different level this kinetic concern mirrors the circular narrative elements mentioned above, as the characters explore other worlds and typically settle for the one with which they started. Zemeckis blends these elements to form extremely vital, extremely satisfying wholes.

Since the conclusion of the Back to the Future trilogy, Zemeckis’s film output has been limited. The overall slightness of Death Becomes Her, a black comedy made memorable only by some eye-popping visual effects (and, to a lesser extent, the always watchable Meryl Streep, playing an egocentric actress), makes this film a minor credit on Zemeckis’s filmography. This is especially so when contrasted to his follow-up: Forrest Gump, which upon its release was christened one of the defining movies of the baby boom generation. The film made “stupid is as stupid does” a national catchphrase, and critics and audiences raved about the film, which went on to win six Academy Awards—including one for Zemeckis as Best Director.

To be sure, Forrest Gump is an appealing film. But it also is deeply flawed. Its scenario mirrors the tumultuous events of American history from the 1960s through 1980s as reflected through the experiences of the title character (Tom Hanks). There are the assassinations of John and Robert Kennedy, and the murder of John Lennon; the unwinnable and mismanaged Vietnam War; anti-war protests and the 1960s counterculture; and, finally and tragically, the AIDS plague. The point of the film is that, truly, the baby boom generation is a Lost Generation. Every generation may have its own set of problems: The parents of baby boomers, for instance, contended with the Great Depression and World War II. But for those coming of age during the 1930s and 1940s, problems were clearly defined. There was no debate regarding America’s declaration of war against Germany and Japan.

To its credit, Forrest Gump does get the Vietnam war right. For too long, Vietnam vets in movies were depicted as stereotypical sadists, drug abusers, and Charles Manson clones, all scapegoats for the folly of Vietnam. However, in such films as Born on the Fourth of July, Jacknife, and Forrest Gump, Vietnam vets finally were rendered with compassion and thoughtfulness. Yet Forrest Gump remains in many ways a simplistic film. Anti-war activists are depicted as one-dimensional, amoral twits, and many viewers found the film to be reactionary in its political overview. The Vietnam era was a complex time. Surely those millions who came to be against the war deserve far more thoughtful and three-dimensional depictions than may be found in Forrest Gump.

Zemeckis’s first post-Forrest Gump project was Contact, based on a Carl Sagan novel about a scientist-astronomer (Jody Foster) who is obsessively dedicated to the field of SETI (Search in Extra-Terrestrial Intelligence). With this choice, and the manner in which Zemeckis explores the possibility that otherworldly life may indeed exist, it might be said that the Zemeckis-Spielberg “link” has come full-circle.

—Mark Walker, updated by Rob Edelman

ZETTERLING, Mai

Films as Director:

- 1960 The Politic Invasion (short, for BBC TV)
- 1961 Lords of Little Egypt (short, for BBC TV); The War Game (short) (+ pr)
- 1962 The Prosperity Race (short, for BBC TV)
- 1963 The Do-It-Yourself Democracy (short, for BBC TV)
- 1964 Afskande par (Loving Couples) (co-d with David Hughes)
- 1965 Nattlek (Night Games) (co-d with Hughes)
- 1967 Doktor Glas (co-d with Hughes)
- 1968 Flickorna (The Girls) (co-d with Hughes)
- 1971 Vincent the Dutchman (co-d with Hughes, pr) (doc)
- 1973 “The Strongest,” episode of Visions of Eight (co-d with Hughes)
- 1976 We har manje namn (We Have Many Names) (+ ed, role)
- 1977 Stockholm (+ role) (for Canadian TV)
- 1978 The Rain’s Hat (+ ed) (for TV)
- 1982 Love (for TV)
- 1983 Scrubbers
- 1986 Amorosa (+ sc, ed)
- 1990 Sunday Pursuit

Other Films:

1941 Lasse-Maja (Olsson) (role)
1943 Jag drapte (Molander) (role)
1944 Hets (Torment; Frenzy) (Sjöberg) (role); Prins Gustaf (Bauman) (role)
1946 Iris och Løjtnantshjarta (Iris and the Lieutenant) (Sjöberg) (role); Frieda (Relph) (role); Driver dagg faller Regn (Sunshine Follows Rain) (role)
1948 Musik i mörker (Bergman) (role); Nu borjar livet (Molander) (role); Quartet (Smart and others) (role); The Bad Lord Byron (MacDonald) (role); Hildegard (role)
1949 Portrait from Life (The Girl in the Painting) (Fisher) (role); The Romantic Age (Greville) (role); The Lost People (Knowless) (role)
1950 Blackmailed (Marc Allégret) (role); The Ringer (Hamilton) (role)
1952 The Tall Headlines (The Frightened Bride) (Young) (role)
1953 The Desperate Moment (Bennett) (role); Knock on Wood (Frank and Panama) (role)
1954 Prize of Gold (Robson) (role); Dance Little Lady (Guest) (role)
1956 “Ett dockhem” (A Doll’s House), episode of Giftas (Henriksson) (role); Abandon Ship (Seven Waves Away) (Sale) (role)
1957 The Truth about Women (Box) (role)
1958 Lek pa regnbagen (Kjellgren) (role)
1959 Jet Storm (Endfield); Faces in the Dark (Eady) (role)
1960 Piccadilly Third Stop (Rilla) (role); Offbeat (Owen) (role)
1961 Only Two Can Play (Gilliat) (role)
1962 The Main Attraction (Petrie) (role); The Man Who Finally Died (Lawrence) (role)
1963  The Bay of St. Michel (Ainsworth) (role)
1965  The Vine Bridge (Nykvist) (role)
1988  Calling the Shots (doc) (Cole) (appearance)
1989  The Witches (Roeg) (role)
1990  Hidden Agenda (Loach) (role)

Publications

By ZETTERLING: books—

By ZETTERLING: articles—

“Mai Zetterling at the Olympic Games,” an interview in American Cinematographer (Los Angeles), November 1972.

On ZETTERLING: books—

On ZETTERLING: articles—

* * *

Mai Zetterling’s career as a filmmaker stemmed from her disillusionment with acting. Trained at Stockholm’s Royal Dramatic Theater, Zetterling debuted on stage and screen in 1941. She considered the film Torment her best acting achievement. She worked in British theatre, enacting roles in Chekhov, Anouilh, and Ibsen plays, and in British films. After one part in a Hollywood film, Knock on Wood with Danny Kaye, she spurned contract offers and returned home.

With her husband, David Hughes, she made several documentaries in the 1960s dealing with political issues. Zetterling’s feature films depict the social status and psyche of women, reflecting her feminist concerns. The uncompromising honesty of perception and technical virtuosity in her films correspond to the pervasive and dominant themes of loneliness and obsession. Zetterling says: “I want very strongly to do things I believe in. I can’t do jobs for the money. I just can’t do it.”

In 1960, Roger Moorfoot of the BBC financed her idea for a film on the immigration of Swedes to Lapland, The Polite Invasion. Three more followed: The Lords of Little Egypt depicted the gypsies at Saintes-Maries-de-la-Mer; her view of Swedish affluence in The Prosperity Race was not appreciated in Stockholm; and Do-It-Yourself Democracy commented on Icelandic society and government. Her first independent effort was the fifteen-minute anti-war film The War Game, in which two boys tussle for possession of a toy gun.

Zetterling’s first feature film, Loving Couples, was based on the fifth volume of Swedish author Agnes von Krusenstjerna’s seven-volume novel, The Misses von Pahlen. Zetterling wrote the script in one year, with sketches of each shot to indicate camera positions. In it, three expectant mothers in a Stockholm hospital recall their lives in the moment of, and then beyond, the births of their babies. Critic Derek Elley suggests that Zetterling developed her theories and themes of film in Loving Couples and rarely deviated from them in later works. She employs elaborate timelines as well as flashbacks, which she uses often and well, intertwining them one within another. Her films peak emotionally in scenes of parties and social gatherings. Her films are cohesive compositions, with a literary base, filmed in the stark contrasts of black to white, with a range of grays intervening. Zetterling’s scenes of sexual behavior are integral to her themes of loneliness and obsession. Loving Couples exemplifies these characteristics.

Night Games, derived from Zetterling’s novel with the same title, was banned from the Venice Film Festival. The critics who saw it were angered by the Marxist and Freudian elements in it; shocked by scenes of vomiting, masturbation, and childbirth. Based on Hjalmar Soderberg’s 1905 novel, her next film, Doktor Glas, records the haunted love of a young physician for a pastor’s wife. Even though the wife does not respond to the physician’s erotic overtures, he administers a lethal drug to the pastor. It is Zetterling’s grimmest study of loneliness, as Derek Elley observes, and her most pessimistic film, told in one extended flashback, ‘a far cry from Night Games.’

She returned to a strongly feminist story in Flickorna and, as in Loving Couples, it contains three female roles of equal weight. In Flickorna three actresses perform Lysistrata on tour, acting out the views of the play in their private lives. Some critics reacted negatively, finding it self-indulgent, a mix of Greek comedy and soap opera, with heavy symbolism and confusing time structures. Other critics liked the various forms of humor effectively employed, and the arresting imagery.

In 1971, Zetterling filmed a documentary in color about Vincent Van Gogh. Titled Vincent the Dutchman, it was shown on American and British television. David Wolper then asked her to film any phase of the 1972 Olympics she chose; she filmed the weightlifting sequence, ‘The Strongest,’ for Visions of Eight. In the 1970s, Zetterling published three novels, pursuing creative directions other than filmmaking. She also continued making documentaries (one on tennis champion Stan Smith, one dealing with Stockholm, another on marriage customs), along with a seven-hour adaptation for French television of Simone de Beauvoir’s The Second Sex. Zetterling asserted that whatever she filmed, it would be “something I believe in.”

—Louise Heck-Rabi
ZHANG YIMOU

Nationality: Chinese. Born: Xi’an, Shaanxi, China, 14 November 1950. Education: High School in Xi’an until interrupted by the Cultural Revolution, 1966; Beijing Film Academy, 1978–1982. Family: Married Xiao Hua (divorced), relationship with actress Gong Li, 1987 to 1995. Awards: Best Actor, Tokyo International Film Festival, for The Old Well, 1987, Golden Bear Award, Berlin Film Festival, and New York Film Festival Best Film Award, for Red Sorghum, 1988; Best Film Not in the English Language, BAFTA, Best Foreign Language Film, New York Film Critics, Best Foreign-Language Film, National Society of Film Critics, and Silver Lion, Venice Film Festival, all for Raise the Red Lantern, 1992; Best Foreign-Language Film, National Society of Film Critics, and Golden Lion, Venice Film Festival, both for The Story of Qiu Ju, 1993; Best Film Not in the English Language, BAFTA, and Grand Prize, Cannes Film Festival, both for To Live, 1995; Technical Grand Prize, Cannes Film Festival, 1995, and Golden Globe for Best Foreign Language Film, 1996, for Shanghai Triad.

Films as Director:

1988 Hong gao liang (Red Sorghum) (+ ro)
1989 Daihao meizhoubao (Operation Cougar; The Puma Action)
1990 Ju Dou

1991 Da hong deng long gao gao gua (Raise the Red Lantern)
1992 Qiu Ju da guan si (The Story of Qiu Ju)
1994 Huoche (To Live)
1995 Yao a yao dao waipo qiao (Shanghai Triad); episode in Lumière et compagnie (Lumière and Company)
1997 You hua hao hao shuo (Keep Cool) (+ ro)
1999 Yi ge dou bu neng shao (Not One Less); Wo de fu qin mu qin (The Road Home); Turandot—At the Forbidden City of Beijing (for TV)

Films as Cinematographer:

1983 Yi ge he ba ge (One and Eight) (Zhang Junzhao)
1984 Huang tu di (Yellow Earth) (Chen Kaige)
1986 Da yue bing (The Big Parade) (Wu Tianming)
1997 Lao jing (The Old Well) (Wu Tianming) (+ ro)

Other Films:

1989 Qin yong (A Terracotta Warrior) (Siu-Tung Ching) (ro)
1993 Hua hun (Soul of a Painter) (sc)
1997 Lung sing jing yuet (Dragon Town Story) (pr)

Publications

By ZHANG YIMOU: article—
Ye, Tan, “From the Fifth to the Sixth Generation” interview in Film Quarterly, Winter 1999.

On ZHANG YIMOU: book—
Wang, Pin, Chang I-mou che ko jen, Beijing, 1998.

On ZHANG YIMOU: articles—
Chua, Lawrence, “Making Movies (or Trying To) in China,” in Premiere, March 1992.

* * *

Born in the thick of revolution, prolific Chinese filmmaker Zhang Yimou learned early about cataclysmic social change and deep personal secrets. The son of an officer of the Kuomintang, Zhang was born a suspicious character to his new government. Like many other children of privileged families swept up in the Cultural Revolution, his higher education was factory labor, and his entertainment consisted of government sponsored films and theatrical productions, usually simplistic, moralistic, and patriotic. Though Zhang was fascinated by film, and managed to buy his first camera while working in a textile factory, he would be forever influenced by his disgust with the overtly propagandistic films of his youth. Later he would recall, “When we were in film school, we swore to each other we would never make films like that.”

By 1982, the Beijing Film Academy, which had been closed during the Cultural Revolution, was reopened, and Zhang was part of the first post-Mao graduating class. It was the fifth class to ever graduate the Academy, giving Zhang and his classmates their sobriquet, the “fifth generation” of Chinese filmmakers. The fifth generation were not establishment filmmakers, but they gained international notice because of the moral complexity and gritty realism of their films.

Though he was designated a cinematographer, Zhang soon began directing his own films, which would be characterized by their stark humanity and stunning visual imagery. Through 1995, they would also be characterized by the powerful performances of Gong Li, one of China’s most famous actors and Zhang’s longtime lover.

Zhang’s first film was Red Sorghum, a lyrical folk tale of a film that presented viewers with a strong, even ruthless, heroine to challenge the traditional Chinese subjugation of women. Mostly set in the 1920s in the harsh countryside of rural China, Red Sorghum was at the forefront of a new breed of Chinese film that was beginning to express moral ambiguity and chafing under authority.

Zhang’s next film, Codename Cougar, was fairly noncontroversial, a political action/thriller about an airplane hijacking, but he soon returned to the themes of societal repression and rebellion that would cause many of his films to be banned by the Chinese government. In Ju Dou, Zhang revisits his rural roots for a story of brutality and starvation, both literal and figurative, about the passion between a poor mill worker and the abused wife of the mill owner. Ju Dou was the first of Zhang’s films to be banned.

Zhang’s next films, Raise the Red Lantern, The Story of Qiu Ju, and To Live, were all banned by the government of his homeland, and were all visually remarkable films of the passion and drama in simple country life and the struggle of the common people (often women) against a brutal power system. Raise the Red Lantern illustrates the position of concubines as property, The Story of Qiu Ju follows a young woman’s struggle to gain justice from an unfeeling bureaucracy, and To Life documents the turbulent times of the Cultural Revolution. Audiences around the world flocked to peek through this keyhole into the emerging Chinese sensibility.

Zhang stayed on safer ground in his next film. Shanghai Triad is a lush gangster movie set in 1930s Shanghai that was widely admired, even by the Chinese government. Shanghai Triad was selected for the honor of opening the New York Film Festival, but politics prevailed. Even though Chinese authorities approved of Zhang’s film, they did not approve of another documentary about China slated for the festival, and Zhang was virtually forbidden to attend his film’s triumph.

Following his split with Gong Li, Zhang’s films became less star-driven. Not One Less is the story of a substitute teacher in a remote village who becomes obsessed with preventing one of her students from dropping out of school. Zhang filmed the movie on location in a tiny rural village, using villagers as his cast. The result here, and in his subsequent films such as The Road Home, is a direct film that expresses, without grandiosity, the endless contradictions that comprise human life.

While many of Zhang’s films offer a bleak picture of Chinese life, but they are never hopeless. Rather they reveal a sensual zest for life that survives the harshest conditions, and an underlying humor that sweetens despair. Audiences in China were hungry for the triumphant spirit of rebellion that pervades Zhang’s films, and audiences around the world soon found that China was not so far removed from them after all.

—Tina Gianoulis

ZINNEMANN, Fred

Nationality: Austrian/American. Born: Vienna, 29 April 1907. Education: Educated in law, University of Vienna, degree 1927; studied one year at the Ecole Technique de Photographie et Cinématographie, Paris. Family: Married Renée Bartlett, 1936, one son. Career: Assistant cameraman in Paris and Berlin, then with Billy Wilder, Eugen Schüfftan, and Robert Siodmak, made Menschen am Sonntag, 1928; moved to Hollywood, became assistant cameraman and cutter for Berthold Viertel, 1929; worked with Robert Flaherty on unrealized documentary project, Berlin, 1931; worked in Mexico with Paul Strand on Los Redes, 1934–35; hired by MGM to direct short subjects, 1937; directed first feature, 1942; vice president, Directors Guild of America, 1961–64. Awards: Oscars for Best Short Subject, for That Mothers Might Live, 1938, and Benji, 1951; Best Direction, New York Film Critics, for High Noon, 1952; Oscar for Best Director, and Director Award, Directors Guild of America, for From Here to Eternity, 1953; Best Direction, New York Film Critics, for The Nun’s Story, 1959; Oscar for Best Director, Best Direction, New York Film Critics, and Director Award, Directors Guild of America, for A Man for All Seasons, 1966; D. W. Griffith Award, 1971; Order of Arts and Letters, France, 1982; U.S. Congressional Lifetime Achievement Award, 1987; John Huston Award, Artists Rights Foundation, 1994. Died: 14 March 1997, in London, England, of heart attack.

Films as Director:

1934/35 Los Redes (The Wave)
1938 A Friend Indeed (short for MGM); The Story of Dr. Carver (short for MGM); That Mothers Might Live (short for...
Fred Zinnemann on the set of The Day of the Jackal

MGM); Tracking the Sleeping Death (short for MGM); They Live Again (short for MGM)

1939 Weather Wizards (short for MGM); While America Sleeps (short for MGM); Help Wanted! (short for MGM); One against the World (short for MGM); The Ash Can Fleet (short for MGM); Forgotten Victory (short for MGM)

1940 The Old South (short for MGM); Staffie (short for MGM); The Way in the Wilderness (short for MGM); The Great Meddler (short for MGM)

1941 Forbidden Passage (short for MGM); Your Last Act (short for MGM)

1942 The Lady or the Tiger? (short for MGM); The Kid Glove Killer; Eyes in the Night

1944 The Seventh Cross

1945 Little Mr. Jim

1946 My Brother Talks to Horses

1947 The Search

1948 Act of Violence

1950 The Men

1951 Teresa; Benjy (short)

1952 High Noon; The Member of the Wedding

1953 From Here to Eternity

1955 Oklahoma

1957 A Hatful of Rain

1958 The Nun’s Story

1960 The Sundowners (+ pr)

1963 Behold a Pale Horse (+ pr)

1966 A Man for All Seasons (+ pr)

1973 The Day of the Jackal (+ pr)

1977 Julia (+ pr)

1982 Five Days One Summer (+ pr) (re-edited version released 1988)

Other Films:

1927 La Marche des machines (Deslaw) (asst cameraman)

1929 Ich küsse Ihre Hand, Madame (Land) (asst cameraman); Sprengbagger 1010 (Achaz-Duisberg) (asst cameraman); Menschen am Sonntag (People on Sunday) (Siodmak) (asst cameraman)

1930 Man Trouble (asst d to Berthold Viertel); All Quiet on the Western Front (Milestone) (bit role)
1931 The Spy (asst d to Viertel)
1932 The Wiser Sex (asst d to Viertel); The Man from Yesterday (asst d to Busby Berkeley)
1989 Stand under the Dark Clock (doc) (Walker) (role)

Publications

By ZINNEMANN: book—

By ZINNEMANN: articles—

“Different Perspective,” in Sight and Sound (London), Autumn 1948.
“A Discussion: Personal Creation in Hollywood: Can It Be Done?,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1962.
“Zinnemann—True or False?,” in Cinema (Beverly Hills), February/March 1964.
Correspondence, in Film Criticism (Meadville), Winter 1994–1995.

On ZINNEMANN: books—

On ZINNEMANN: articles—

Nolletti, A., Jr. and others, in Film Criticism (Meadville), Spring 1994.
Obituary, in DGA Magazine (Los Angeles), May-June 1997.
Obituary, in EPD Film (Frankfurt), May 1997.
Obituary, in Film und Fernsehen (Berlin), vol. 25, no. 2, 1997.

* * *

In 1928 Fred Zinnemann worked as assistant to cinematographer Eugene Schuffan on Robert Siodmak’s Menschen am Sonntag (People on Sunday), along with Edgar Ulmer and Billy Wilder, who wrote the scenario for this semi-documentary silent feature made in the tradition of Flaherty and Vertov. Having been strongly influenced by realistic filmmaking, particularly the work of Erich von Stroheim, King Vidor, and Robert Flaherty, Zinnemann immigrated to the United States in 1930 and worked with Berthold Viertel, Flaherty (“probably the greatest single influence on my work as a filmmaker,” he later stated), and the New York photographer-documentarist Paul Strand on Los Redes, the first of a proposed series intended to document everyday Mexican life. Los Redes told the story of the struggle of impoverished fishermen to organize themselves against economic exploitation. The film was shot in Vera Cruz, and Zinnemann was responsible for directing the actors.

Zinnemann’s documentary training and background developed his style as a “social realist” in a number of early pictures (several shorts he directed, for example, in MGM’s Crime Does Not Pay and The Passing Parade series) during the years 1937–1942. His medical short That Mother Might Live won an Academy Award and enabled Zinnemann to direct feature films. His first feature at MGM was a thriller, The Kid Glove Killer, with Van Heflin and Marsha Hunt. The Seventh Cross was adapted from Anna Seghers’s anti-fascist World War II novel. Starring Spencer Tracy, the film was notable for its atmospheric and documentary style. The Search, shot on location in Europe in 1948, with Montgomery Clift, gave a realistic portrayal of... children who had been displaced by the turmoil of World War II and was a critical as well as a commercial success. The Men was the first of a three-picture contract Zinnemann signed with Stanley Kramer and dealt with the problem of paraplegic war veterans, marking Marlon Brando’s debut as a film actor. Zinnemann filmed The Men on location at the Birmingham Veteran’s Hospital and used a number of patients there as actors.

Zinnemann’s next film for Kramer, High Noon, was significant because of the way Zinnemann’s realistic style turned the genre of the Western upside down. It featured Gary Cooper in an Oscar-winning performance as Will Kane, a retired marshal who has taken a Quaker bride (Grace Kelly), but whose marriage is complicated by the anticipated return of paroled desperado Frank Miller, expected on the noon train. Zinnemann treated his “hero” as an ordinary man beset with doubts and fears in an existential struggle to protect himself and the community of Haddleyville, a town that proves to be undeserving of his heroism and bravery. Working against the stylized and mythic traditions that had come to dominate the genre, High Noon established the trend of the “psychological” Western and represents one of Zinnemann’s finest accomplishments.

Zinnemann’s last Kramer picture was The Member of the Wedding, a Carson McCullers novel that had been adapted to a popular Broadway production by McCullers herself. The film utilized the same cast that had made the stage production successful (Julie Harris, Brandon de Wilde, and Ethel Waters) but created cinematically an effective atmosphere of entrapment. Member of the Wedding is a model of effective theatrical adaption. Zinnemann went on to adapt the 1955 movie version of the Rodgers and Hammerstein classic Oklahoma!, removing the exclamation point, as one wit noted, in a spacious and lyrical, but also rather perfunctory, effort.

In 1953 Zinnemann moved to Columbia Pictures to direct the adaption of the popular James Jones novel From Here to Eternity, a huge popular success starring Montgomery Clift, Frank Sinatra, and Ernest Borgnine that won Zinnemann an Academy Award for Best Director. Zinnemann’s approach effectively utilized newsreel footage of the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor and his realistic style both tightened and dramatized the narrative. A Hatful of Rain applied Zinnemann’s documentary approach to the problem of drug addiction in New York. The Nun’s Story (with Audrey Hepburn and Peter Finch) has been linked to A Man for All Seasons in that both reflect conflicts of conscience, a recurring motif in Zinnemann’s films. A Man for All Seasons, adapted from Robert Bolt’s play, won Paul Scofield an Academy Award for his portrayal of St. Thomas More.

Among Zinnemann’s political films are Behold a Pale Horse, starring Gregory Peck and set during the Spanish Civil War, a picture that also incorporated newsreel authenticity, and The Day of the Jackal, a story about an assassin’s attempt on the life of Charles de Gaulle, shot on location “like a newsreel.” A later and in many ways impressive political film involving a conflict of conscience was Zinnemann’s Julia, adapted by Alvin Sargent from Lillian Hellman’s Pentimento, concerning Hellman’s love affair with the writer Dashiell Hammett (Jason Robards) and her long-standing friendship with the mysterious Julia (Vanessa Redgrave), the daughter of a wealthy family who becomes a socialist-intellectual politicized by events in Germany under the Nazi regime. Julia is a perfect Zinnemann vehicle, impressive in its authenticity and historical reconstruction, and also psychologically tense, particularly in the way Zinnemann films Hellman’s suspense-laden journey from Paris to Moscow via Berlin. It demonstrates the director’s sense of psychological realism and his apparent determination to make worthwhile pictures that are nevertheless highly entertaining.

—James M. Welsh
PICTURE ACKNOWLEDGMENTS
The editors wish to thank the copyright holders of the photographs included in this volume and the permissions managers of many book and magazine publishing companies for assisting us in securing reproduction rights. We are also grateful to the staffs of the Detroit Public Library, the Library of Congress, the University of Detroit Mercy Library, Wayne State University Purdy/Kresge Library Complex, and the University of Michigan Libraries for making their resources available to us. Every effort has been made to trace copyright, but if omissions have been made, please bring them to the attention of the editors. The following is a list of the copyright holders who have granted us permission to reproduce material in the International Dictionary of Films and Filmmakers as well as from where said resources were received:

AP/Wide World Photos. Souleymane Cisse, photograph by Laurent Rebours; George Cukor; Cecil B. De Mille; Federico Fellini; Emilio Fernandez; Ron Howard; George Lucas; Gordon Parks; Otto Preminger; Roberto Rossellini, photograph by Walter Attenni.

Archive Photos, Inc. Kenneth Branagh; Sergei Eisenstein; Robert Flaherty; Jean Luc Godard; D.W. Griffith; Stanley Kubrick; Spike Lee; Mack Sennett; John Waters/Nancy Rica. Schiff/SAGA.

CORBIS. Ousmane Sembene/Caroline Penn.

All remaining images were provided courtesy of the Kobal Collection.
NOTES ON ADVISERS AND CONTRIBUTORS

AFFRON, Mirella Jona. Essayist. Professor, Program in Cinema Studies, since 1985, and Dean of Humanities and Social Sciences, since 1987, College of Staten Island, City University of New York. Former member of the executive council, Society for Cinema Studies. Essay: Castellani.

ANDREW, Dudley. Adviser and essayist. Angelo Bertocci Professor of Critical Studies and director of the Institute for Cinema and Culture, University of Iowa (joined faculty, 1969). Author of Major Film Theories, 1976; André Bazin, 1978; Kenji Mizoguchi: A Guide to References and Resources (co-author), 1981; Concepts in Film Theory, 1984; and Film in the Aura of Art, 1984. Essays: Astruc; Becker; Clément; Clouzot; Delannoy; Duvivier; Grémillon; Mizoguchi.

ARROYO, José. Essayist. Lecturer in film studies, University of Warwick, Coventry; formerly lecturer in communications, Simon Fraser University, Vancouver. Essay: Almodóvar.

BERGAN, Ronald. Adviser. Regular contributor, The Guardian (London); consultant and writer for several TV documentaries; lectured on literature, theatre, and film during ten years in France; author of numerous books on the cinema, including biographies of the Coen Brothers, Sergei Eisenstein, Jean Renoir, Anthony Perkins, and Dustin Hoffman, as well as The United Artists Story and The Great Theatres of London.

BODEEN, DeWitt. Essayist. Screenwriter and film critic. Author of screenplays for Cat People, 1942; Seventh Victim, 1943; Curse of the Cat People, 1944; The Yellow Canary, 1944; The Enchanted Cottage, 1945; Night Song, 1947; I Remember Mama, 1948; Mrs. Mike, 1959; Billy Budd, 1962; and numerous teleplays, 1950–68. Also author of Ladies in the Footlights; The Films of Cecil B. DeMille; Chevalier: From Hollywood; More from Hollywood; 13 Castle Walk (novel); editor of Who Wrote the Movie and What Else Did He Write? Died 1988. Essays: Borzage; Cromwell; Korda; Murnau; Stevens; Jacques Tourner; Wise.

BURTON, Julianne. Essayist. Associate professor, Merrill College, and Board of Studies in Literature, University of California at Santa Cruz, since 1982 (Assistant Professor, 1974–82). Author of more than forty publications on Latin American Cinema. Essay: Birri.

CLOSE, Cynthia. Essayist. Executive director, Documentary Educational Resources (DER), a producer and distributor of documentary film about people and culture from around the world; formerly Dean of Admissions, The Art Institute of Boston; has worked in Europe and New England as a curator, visual artist, teacher, and activist for artist’s rights. Essays: Asch; Marshall.

COSTA, Kevin J. Essayist. B.A. in English and Film Studies and M.A. in English, Rhode Island College. Adjunct instructor of writing, Rhode Island College. Pursuing graduate studies in English at State University of New York at Buffalo. Essays: Kluge; Sautet.

CROWDUS, Gary. Adviser. Founder and editor-in-chief, Cineaste magazine; editor of A Political Companion to American Film (Lake View Press).

DEANE, Pamala S. Essayist. Independent writer and media historian; M.A. in Radio/TV/Film, University of Maryland, College Park; author of fiction and screenplays for documentary programming. Essays: Gerima; Palcy.

DERRY, Charles. Essayist. Professor and coordinator of Film Studies, Wright State University, Dayton, Ohio, from 1978; author of Dark Dreams: A Psychological History of the Modern Horror Film, 1977; and The Suspense Thriller: Films in the Shadow of Alfred Hitchcock, 1988; co-author, with Jack Ellis and Sharon Kern, of the reference work The Film Book Bibliography: 1940–1975, 1979; director of the short films Cerebral Accident and Joan Crawford Died For Your Sins; author of the play “Ten Memories of My Mother, in the Order I Think of Them”; fiction has appeared in a variety of periodicals and anthologies, including Reclaiming the Heartland: Gay and Lesbian Voices from the Midwest, Contra/Dictions, The Chattahoochee Review, and The Portland Literary Review. Essays: Altman; Chabrol; S. Lee; Jerry Lewis; Mulligan; Preminger; Reiner; Spielberg.

EDELMAN, Rob. Essayist. Author of Great Baseball Films, 1994; and Baseball on the Web, 1998. Co-author of Angela Lansbury: A Life on Stage and Screen, 1996; The John Travolta Scrapbook, 1997; and Meet the Mertzes, 1999. Contributing editor of Leonard Maltin’s Movie & Video Guide; Leonard Maltin’s Movie Encyclopedia; and Leonard Maltin’s Family Film Guide. Director of programming of Home Film Festival. Contributor to The Political Companion to American Film; Women Filmmakers & Their Films; Total Baseball; The Total Baseball Catalog; International Film Guide; and The Whole Film Sourcebook. Film critic/commentator, WAMC (Northeast) Public Radio. Lecturer, University at Albany. Former film critic/columnist, New Haven Register and Gazette Newspapers. Former adjunct instructor, The School of Visual Arts, Iona College, Sacred Heart University. Essays: Armstrong; August; Bemberg; Benton; Bergman; Berri; Besson; Blier; Breillat; Burnett; Campion; Chen Kaige; Coolidge; Costa-Gavras; Dassin; De Broca; Demme; Demy; Donskoi; Dörrie; Dovzhenko; Fellini; Forman; Forsyth; Frankenheimer; S. Franklin; Fridrikson; Gilliam; Godard; Greenaway; Haynes; Holland; Ivory; Jarman; Jarmusch; Jewison; Jordan; Kaurismaki; Kurosawa; Kusturica; Leconte; Leoluca; Leni; Loach; Albert and David Maysles; Micheaux; Mikhalkov; Moretti; Morrissey; Nair; Nibio; Oliveira; Polonsky; Pontecorvo; Pudovkin; Resnais; Riefenstahl; Ritt; Roeg; Rohmer; Rudolph; Runn; Saara; Schepisi; Schöndorf; Schrader; Schumacher; Seidelman; Shepitko; Sheridan; Silver; Smith; Sperber; Jean-Marie Straub and Danièle Huillet; Syberberg; Tavernier; Paolo and Vittorio Taviani; Van Sant; Varda; von Trotta; Ward; Weir; Westmuller; Zanussi; Zeffirelli; Zemeckis.

FARNSWORTH, Rodney. Essayist. Ph.D., Indiana University, 1980. Associate professor of comparative studies, Indiana University-Purdue University, Fort Wayne. Has published internationally in scholarly publications, including Literature/Film Quarterly. Essays: Herzog; Rafelson.

GATEWARD, Frances. Essayist. Film scholar and independent filmmaker; assistant professor, Program for Film Studies and the Center for Afro-American and African Studies, University of Michigan; co-editor, Sugar, Spice, and Everything Nice: Cinemas of Girlhood; and author of essays on cinema and popular culture. Essays: Riggs; Verhoeven.

GOMERY, Douglas. Adviser and essayist. Professor of media history, University of Maryland; author of ten books including Media in America, 1998; and Shared Pleasures: A History of Movie Presentation in the United States, 1992. Essays: Bacon; Benton; Curtiz; George Miller; Walsh.

GUSTAINIS, Justin. Essayist. Professor of communication at Plattsburgh State University, Plattsburgh, New York. Essays: Bartel; Borden; Branagh; E. Morris.

HIGGINS, Ellie. Essayist. Doctoral candidate in comparative literature, University of Texas at Austin; specializes in African literatures and cinemas. Essays: Kabore; Mambety; Ouedraogo.

HIRANO, Kyoko. Essayist. Film program coordinator, Japan Society, New York, since 1986. Editor, Cinéma Gras, Tokyo, 1977–79; and contributor to Cineaste and Theater Craft. Essays: Gosho; Imar; Kinoshita; Shindo; Shindo; Yoshimura.

HOFFMAN, Judy. Essayist. Acting director of Documentary Film Center, Columbia College. Co-founder of Kartemquin Films and contributor to most of their film productions, including as associate producer of Golub. Active in alternative media movement of the 1970s; became one of the first women to work professionally as a film technician in Chicago, apprenticing with IATSE Camera Local 666. Camera assistant on numerous independent documentary films, including Family Business; Seeing Red; American Dream; and Daley: The Last Boss. Researcher for PBS series On the Waterways. Associate Producer of film Box of Treasures. Video instructor and media consultant for Kwakiutl Indians for ten years. Director and editor of museum video on Kwakiutl salmon fishing for Chicago’s Shedd Aquarium. Teacher of video with Community Television Network. Producer and editor of student production Time to Make That Change. Recipient of VOICE Award from Chicago’s Center for Community and Media, 1994. Essay: Kopple.

HONG, Guo-Juin. Essayist. M.A. in Cinema Studies, San Francisco State University. Teacher of courses in Chinese cinema, Third World cinema, and Asian American cinema at San Francisco State University and the University of California, Santa Cruz. Independent documentary filmmaker of projects in affiliation with the Oral History Project of the Gay and Lesbian Historical Society of Northern California. Essays: Besson; Chahine; Joffé; Leduc; Marker; Oshima; Ripstein.
HORTON, Robert. Essayist. Film critic, The Herald (Everett, Washington), KUOW-FM (Seattle), and Film.com; frequent contributor to Film Comment magazine; contributor to Seattle magazine, Seattle Times, American Film, Amazon.com, Microsoft Cinemania, and others; former director of Seattle Film Society (now defunct); editor of film magazine The Informer, 1980–86. Essays: Carax; Kiarostami; Makhmalbaf; Stillman.

KEMP, Philip. Adviser and essayist. London-based freelance reviewer and film historian; contributor to Sight and Sound, Variety, and Film Comment; author of Lethal Innocence: The Cinema of Alexander Mackendrick, 1991; and of a forthcoming biography of Michael Balcon. Essays: Arcand; Bigelow; Clair; Crichton; Egyon; Fincher; Jackson; Kobayashi; Mackendrick; Penn; Ray; Sayles; Solondz; Wilder.

KINSEY, Tammy. Essayist. Assistant professor of film, University of Toledo, Ohio, since 1997; made her first film at the age of eight; M.F.A. in filmmaking, Virginia Commonwealth University, 1996. Essay: van Dormaal.

KOVÁCS, Katherine Singer. Essayist. Formerly assistant professor, Department of Comparative Literature, University of Southern California, Los Angeles; editor of Humanities in Society, and member of the executive committee, Quarterly Review of Film Studies. Died 1989. Essays: Bardem; García Berlanga; Saura.

KUPFERBERG, Audrey E. Essayist. Film historian, appraiser, and archivist. Co-author of Angela Lansbury: A Life on Stage and Screen, 1996; The John Travolta Scrapbook, 1997; and Meet the Merzies, 1999. Lecturer, University at Albany. Contributing editor of Leonard Maltin’s Family Film Guide. Contributor to Women Filmmakers & Their Films and The Whole Film Sourcebook. Film consultant to the Peary-MacMillan Arctic Museum at Bowdoin College. Former director, Yale University Film Study Center. Former assistant director, the National Center for Film and Video Preservation at the American Film Institute. Former project director, the American Film Institute Catalog. Essays: M. Brooks; Petersen; Sanders-Brahms; Sandrich; Schumacher.

LARSEN, Susan K. Adviser. Assistant professor of Russian literature, University of California, San Diego. Author of Reading and Writing Girlhood in Late Imperial Russia (forthcoming) and many articles on Russian film and popular culture; former chair of the Working Group on Cinema and Television in Eastern Europe and the Former Soviet Union.

MACNAB, G. C. Essayist. Free-lance writer, researcher, and filmmaker, London. Author of *J. Arthur Rank and the British Film...
Industry. Essays: De Antonio; Oshima; Rivette; Rudolph; Schrader; Tarkovsky.

McCLUSKEY, Audrey T. Adviser. Director of the Black Film Center/Archive and associate professor of Afro-American Studies, Indiana University-Bloomington; specializes in education, gender, and cultural studies; co-editor, with Elaine M. Smith, Mary McLeod Bethune: Building a Better World, 2000.

MERHAUT, Vaclav. Essayist. Film historian and member of staff, Film Archives of Czechoslovakia, Prague. Author of Actors and Actresses of the Italian Cinema. Essays: Cacoyannis; Gaël; Kachyňa; Kawalerowicz; Szabó.

MILICIA, Joseph. Essayist. Professor of English, University of Wisconsin, Sheboygan; writes about film and literature for such periodicals as Multicultural Review and the New York Review of Science Fiction. Essays: Adlon; De Palma; Hartley; Kasdan; Kuryz; Nava; Scott; Serreau; Soderbergh; Téchini; Wenders.

MILLER, Norman. Essayist. Journalist and author, London. Author of Toontown: Cartoons, Comedy, and Creativity; and contributor to a variety of periodicals. Essays: Demme; Gilliam.

NASTAV, Dennis. Essayist. Critic and documentary filmmaker. Essays: Pagnol; Rohmer; Tanner.

daily newspaper Information, since 1976; editor of the film periodical Kosmorama, since 1988; contributor to several books and dictionaries on film. Essays: Malmros; Von Trier.

OBALLI, Linda J. Essayist. Assistant, Special Effects Unit, Dreamscape, Bruce Cohn Citrus Productions/Bella Productions, since 1983. Essays: Porter; Schoedsack; Ulmer.

OPĚLA, Vladimír. Essayist. Film historian, Czechoslovakian Film Archives, Prague. Essays: Frič; Jireš.

PALMER, R. Barton. Essayist. Calhoun Lemon Professor of Literature and Director of the South Carolina Film Institute, Clemson University; books include Hollywood’s Dark Cinema, Perspectives on Film Noir, and Joseph Mankiewicz: A Bibliographical and Critical Study. Essays: Apted; Bogdanovich; Coen; Z. Korda; Malick; Pakula; Singleton; Stone; Tarantino.

PARDI, Robert J. Essayist. Formerly managing editor and chief film critic of four editions of Movies on TV; author of Movie Blockbusters; and Who’s Who in Cable and TV; co-author of The Complete Guide to Videocassette Movies; staff reviewer for TV Guide. Essays: Almodóvar; Corman; Scorsese.

PEÑA, Richard. Essayist. Director, New York Film Festival. Formerly director, Film Centre at the School of the Art Institute of Chicago. Essays: Bellocchio; Imamura.

PETLEY, Julian. Adviser and essayist. Lecturer in communications at Brunel University. Contributor to Sight and Sound, Monthly Film Bulletin, and Broadcast. Essays: Ferrara; Heitz; Kadár; Kautner; Leigh; Loach; Sjöberg.

PHILLIPS, Gene D. Essayist. Professor, Loyola University, Chicago; author of more than ninety articles and several books, including full-length studies of Alfred Hitchcock and Stanley Kubrick; contributing editor, Literature/Film Quarterly; has served on special juries at Cannes, Berlin, and Chicago International Film Festivals. Essays: Coppola; Cukor; Kubrick; Reed; Schlesinger.

POLAN, Dana B. Adviser and essayist. Professor of critical studies, School of Cinema-TV, University of Southern California. Author of Pulp Fiction, In a Lonely Place, two other books, and numerous essays on film and cultural studies; former president of the Society for Cinema Studies. Essays: Fuller; Tashlin.

ROULDEGGE, Chris. Essayist. Freelance writer and lecturer in literature and film; published essays on detective fiction, popular culture, and politics; co-editor of Mystery in Children’s Literature, forthcoming. Essays: Attenborough; Badham; Beineix; Cameron; Forman; Lucas.

SCHIFF, Lillian. Essayist. Free-lance film critic and consultant, New York. Author of Getting Started in Filmmaking, 1978. Essays: Akerman; Leacock; Maysles; Scola; Paolo and Vittorio Taviani.

SCHNEIDER, Steven. Essayist. Ph.D. student in philosophy at Harvard University, and in cinema studies at New York University; has written on horror films for Post Script, CineAction, Paradoxa, and Other Voices; contributed to Drive-In Horrors, Violated Bodies: Extreme Film, Horror Film Reader, and Autogedden; editing a collection of essays on psychoanalysis and the horror film, entitled Fried's Worst Nightmares. Essays: Bava; Hooper; Meyer; Raimi.

SCHUTH, H. Wayne. Essayist. Professor in the Department of Drama and Communications at the University of New Orleans. B.S. and M.A. degrees in Radio, Television, and Film from Northwestern University, Evanston, Illinois; Ph.D. in Communications from the Ohio State University. Author of Mike Nichols, 1978. Contributor of numerous articles to scholarly journals and film books. Member of board of trustees, University Film and Video Foundation, since 1988. Essay: Nichols.

SELIG, Michael. Essayist. Assistant professor, University of Vermont, since 1983. Contributor to Film Reader, Jump Cut, and Journal of Popular Film and Television. Essay: King Vidor.

SMOODIN, Eric. Essayist. Lecturer, Department of Literature, American University, Washington, D.C. Contributor to Film Studies Annual and Journal of the University Film and Video Association. Essays: De Mille; Mankiewicz; Sturges; Vigo.

SULLIVAN, Bob. Essayist. Writer; received a Bachelor of Arts in creative writing from Purdue University and attended the University of Southern California graduate film school; postgraduate work at the Actors and Directors Lab under Jack Garfein; formerly film reviewer for the Los Angeles Free Press, author of the B-movie sci-fi classic Clonus; contributor, St. James Encyclopedia of Popular Culture. Essays: A. Brooks; Landis.

TABERY, Karel. Essayist. Film researcher and historian, France. Historian/archivist, Czechoslovakian Film Archives, Prague, 1974–82. Essay: Fábrí.

TELOTTE, J. P. Essayist. Associate professor of English, Georgia Institute of Technology. Author of *Dreams of Darkness: Fantasy and the Films of Val Lewton and Voices in the Dark: The Narrative Patterns of Film Noir. Member of Film Criticism and Literature/Film Quarterly editorial boards; and co-editor, Post Script. Essay: Polanski.

TSAO, Leonardo Garcia. Adviser. Editor of Dinice, the longest-running film magazine in Mexico; film critic for Mexico City newspapers, including Unomásuno, La Jornada, and El Nacional, since 1977; contributor of articles to Film Comment, Sight and Sound, Variety, Moving Pictures, Cine, and Imágenes, among other periodicals. Author of books on Orson Welles, François Truffaut, Andrei Tarkovsky, and Sam Peckinpah, as well as a book of interviews with Mexican director Felipe Cazals; author of screenplay for feature film Intimidad (Intimacy), directed by Dana Rotberg. Member of FIPRESCI jury. Teacher of film courses at the Centro de Capacitación Cinematográfica and the Universidad Iberoamericana. Creator of TV programs of film criticism in Mexico City.

TUDOR, Andrew. Essayist. Reader in sociology at the University of York; has written widely on film and cultural studies, most recently in Decoding Culture: Theory and Method in Cultural Studies, 1999. Essays: Boorman; Eastwood; Hill; Peckinpah; Siegel; Wiseman.

URGOŠÍKOVÁ, Blažena. Essayist. Film historian, Czechoslovakian Film Archives, Prague. Author of History of Science Fiction Films. Essays: Kieslowski; Wajda.

WHITE, M. B. Essayist. Assistant professor, Department of Radio/TV/Film, Northwestern University, Evanston, Illinois. Contributor to Enclitic; and other periodicals. Essays: Autant-Lara; Duras; Resnais; Straub and Huillet.

WOOD, Robin. Essayist. Retired; taught Film Studies at Queen’s University, Kingston, Canada. University of Warwick, England, and York University, Toronto, Canada; author of twelve books on film, most recently Hollywood from Vietnam to Reagan, Hitchcock’s Films Revisited, and Sexual Politics and Narrative Film, all published by Columbia University Press, and a monograph on The Wings of the Dove for the British Film Institute; editor of, and regular contributor to, CineAction magazine. Essays: Araki; Burton; Cimino; Denny; De Palma; Godard; Hallstrom; Hitchcock; Hou Hsiao-Hsien; Itami; Linklater; A. Mann; McCabe; Ophüls; Romero; Scorsese; Stone; Tavernier.
NATIONALITY INDEX
American
Robert Aldrich
Woody Allen
Robert Altman
Kenneth Anger
Gregg Araki
Dorothy Arzner
Timothy Asch
Hal Ashby
Lloyd Bacon
John Badham
Bruce Baillie
Paul Bartel
Robert Benton
Busby Berkeley
Kathryn Bigelow
Budd Boetticher
Peter Bogdanovich
Lizzie Borden
Frank Borzage
Stan Brakhage
Albert Brooks
Mel Brooks
Tod Browning
Charles Burnett
Tim Burton
Frank Capra
John Carpenter
John Cassavetes
Michael Cimino
Shirley Clarke
Joel Coen
Martha Coolidge
Francis Ford Coppola
Roger Corman
Wes Craven
John Cromwell
George Cukor
Joe Dante
Jules Dassin
Delmer Daves
Emile De Antonio
Cecil B. De Mille
Brian De Palma
Jonathan Demme
Edward Dmytryk
Stanley Donen
Allan Dwan
Clint Eastwood
Abel Ferrara
David Fincher
Robert Flaherty
Victor Fleming
John Ford
Bob Fosse
John Frankenheimer
Sidney Franklin
William Friedkin
Samuel Fuller
Terry Gilliam

Argentinian
Maria Luisa Bemberg
Fernando Birri
Octavio Getino
Nelly Kaplan
Fernando E. Solanas
Leopoldo Torre Nilsson

Australian
Gillian Armstrong
Bruce Beresford
George Miller
Fred Schepisi
Peter Weir

Man Ray
Nicholas Ray
Rob Reiner
Marlon Riggs
Martin Ritt
George A. Romero
Robert Rossen
Alan Rudolph
Mark Sandrich
John Sayles
Franklin J. Schaffner
Ernest B. Schoedsack
Paul Schrader
Joel Schumacher
Martin Scorsese
Susan Seidelman
Don Siegel
Joan Micklin Silver
John Singleton
Kevin Smith
Steven Soderbergh
Todd Solondz
Penelope Spheeris
Steven Spielberg
John M. Stahl
George Stevens
Whit Stillman
Oliver Stone
Preston Sturges
Quentin Tarantino
Frank Tashlin
Gus Van Sant
Stan Vanderbeek
King Vidor
Raoul Walsh
Andy Warhol
John Waters
Lois Weber
Orson Welles
William Wellman
Robert Wise
Frederick Wiseman
Edward D. Wood, Jr.
William Wyler
Robert Zemeckis

D.W Griffith
Hal Hartley
Howard Hawks
Walter Hill
Toke Hooper
Ron Howard
James Ivory
Jim Jarmusch
Lawrence Kasdan
Philip Kaufman
Elia Kazan
Buster Keaton
Barbara Kopple
Stanley Kramer
Stanley Kubrick
Gregory La Cava
John Landis
Spike Lee
Mervyn Leroy
Richard Lester
Barry Levinson
Albert Lewin
Jerry Lewis
Richard Linklater
Pare Lorentz
Joseph Losey
George Lucas
Sidney Lumet
David Lynch
Terrence Malick
Rouben Mamoulian
Joseph L. Mankiewicz
Anthony Mann
Michael Mann
Gregory Markopoulos
John Kennedy Marshall
Albert Maysles
David Paul Maysles
Leo McCarey
Russ Meyer
Oscar Micheaux
Lewis Milestone
Vincente Minnelli
Errol Morris
Paul Morrissey
Robert Mulligan
Gregory Nava
Fred Niblo
Mike Nichols
Alan J. Pakula
Gordon Parks
Sam Peckinpah
Arthur Penn
Sydney Pollack
Abraham Polonsky
Edwin S. Porter
Otto Preminger
Bob Rafelson
Sam Raimi
Yvonne Rainer

Australian
Gillian Armstrong
Bruce Beresford
George Miller
Fred Schepisi
Peter Weir
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Nationality</th>
<th>Directors</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Austrian</td>
<td>Willi Forst, G.W. Pabst, Edgar Ulmer, Josef von Sternberg, Erich von Stroheim</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Belgian</td>
<td>Chantal Akerman, Jacques Feyder, Henri Storck, Jaco van Dormael, Agnès Varda</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bolivian</td>
<td>Jorge Sanjinés</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brazilian</td>
<td>Alberto Cavalcanti, Carlos Diegues, Nelson Pereira Dos Santos, Glauber Rocha</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chinese</td>
<td>Chen Kaige, Hu King, Tian Zhuangzhuang, John Woo, Xie Jin, Edward Yang, Zhang Yimou</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cuban</td>
<td>Santiago Alvarez, Sara Gómez, Tomás Gutiérrez Alea, Humberto Solas</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Czech</td>
<td>Věra Chytilová, Milos Forman, Martin Frič, Jaromíl Jireš, Karel Kachyňa, Ján Kadár, Jiří Menzel, Jan Nemec, Jiří Weiss</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Danish</td>
<td>Bille August, August Blom, Benjamin Christensen, Carl Theodor Dreyer, Astrid Henning-Jensen, Bjarne Henning-Jensen, Holger-Madsen, Nils Malmros, Jürgen Roos, Lars von Trier</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dutch</td>
<td>Bert Haanstra, Joris Ivens, Paul Verhoeven</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Egyptian</td>
<td>Youssef Chahine</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ethiopian</td>
<td>Haile Gerima</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Finnish</td>
<td>Aki Kaurismaki</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>French West Indian</td>
<td>Euzhan Palcy</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
German
Percy Adlon
Doris Dörrie
E.A. Dupont
Rainer Werner Fassbinder
Werner Herzog
Helmut Käutner
Alexander Kluge
Paul Leni
F.W. Murnau
Wolfgang Petersen
Leni Riefenstahl
Walter Ruttmann
Helma Sanders-Brahms
Volker Schlöndorff
Werner Schroeter
Wolfgang Staudte
Hans-Jurgen Syberberg
Margarethe von Trotta
Wim Wenders
Robert Wiene

Greek
Theodoros Angelopoulos
Michael Cacoyannis

Hungarian
Michael Curtiz
Zoltán Fábri
Paul Fejős
István Gaál
Miklós Jancsó
Zoltan Korda
Márta Mészáros
Istvan Szabó

Icelandic
Fridrik Thor Fridriksson

Indian
Shyam Benegal
Raj Kapoor
Mehboob Khan
Mira Nair
Dadasaheb Phalke
Satyajit Ray
Mrinal Sen

Iranian
Abbas Kiarostami
Mohsen Makhmalbaf

Irish
Neil Jordan
Jim Sheridan

Italian
Michelangelo Antonioni
Mario Bava
Marco Bellocchio
Bernardo Bertolucci
Renato Castellani
Federico Fellini
Pietro Germi
Alberto Lattuada
Sergio Leone
Nanni Moretti
Ermanno Olmi
Pier Paolo Pasolini
Elio Petri
Gillo Pontecorvo
Francesco Rosi
Roberto Rossellini
Ettore Scola
Paolo Taviani
Vittorio Taviani
Luchino Visconti
Lina Wertmüller
Franco Zefferelli

Japanese
Heinosuke Gosho
Susumu Hani
Kon Ichikawa
Tadashi Imai
Shohei Imamura
Juzo Itami
Keisuke Kinoshita
Teinosuke Kinugasa
Masaki Kobayashi
Akira Kurosawa
Kenji Mizoguchi
Nagisa Oshima
Yasujiro Ozu
Kaneto Shindo
Masahiro Shinoda
Kozaburo Yoshimura

Lithuanian
Jonas Mekas

Malian
Souleymane Cissé

Mexican
Fernando De Fuentes
Emilio Fernández
Paul Leduc
Arturo Ripstein

Mozambiquian
Ruy Guerra

New Zealander
Jane Campion
Peter Jackson
Vincent Ward

Polish
Agnieszka Holland
Jerzy Kawalerowicz
Krzysztof Kieślowski
Roman Polanski
Jerzy Skolimowski
Andrzej Wajda
Krzysztof Zanussi

Portuguese
Manoel de Oliveira

Russian
Boris Barnet
Evgeni Bauer
Mark Donskoi
Sergei Eisenstein
Iosif Heifitz
Grigori Kozintsev
Nikita Mikhalkov
Yakov Protazanov
Vsevolod Pudovkin
Alexander Rogozhkin
Larisa Shepitko
Dziga Vertov

Scottish
Bill Forsyth
John Grierson
Alexander Mackendrick

Senegalese
Safi Faye
Djibril Diop Mambety
Ousmane Sembene

Soviet
Sergei Gerasimov
Lev Kuleshov

Soviet Georgian
Otar Ioseliani
Sergei Paradzhanov

Soviet Russian
Andrei Tarkovsky

Spanish
Pedro Almodóvar
Juan Antonio Bardem
Luis Buñuel
Luis García Berlanga
Carlos Saura

Swedish
Ingmar Bergman
Lasse Hallstrom
Alf Sjöberg
Victor Sjöström
Jan Troell
Mai Zetterling

Swiss
Claude Goretta
Alain Tanner

Taiwanese
Hou Hsiao-Hsien
Ang Lee

Turkish
Yılmaz Güney

Ukrainian
Alexander Dovzhenko

Yugoslavian
Dušan Makavejev
FILM TITLE INDEX
The following list of titles cites all films included in the Directors volume of this series, including cross-references for alternative or English-language titles. The name(s) in parentheses following the title and date refer the reader to the appropriate entry or entries where full information is given. Titles appearing in bold are covered in the Films volume.

* * * *, 1967 (Warhol)
  . . . à Valparaiso, 1963 (Ivens)
  . . . reitet für Deutschland, 1950 (Staudte)
  . . . Veda silahara veda . . . , 1966 (Güney)
  . . . y la noche se hizo arcoiris, 1978 (Alvarez)
  1 Berlin-Harlem, 1974 (Fassbinder)
  1-100, 1978 (Greenaway)
  1.42.08, 1965-67 (Lucas)
  2 ou 3 Choses que je sais d’elle, 1967 (Miller)
  2 Friends, 1985 (Campion)
  2 A.M., 2001 (Lee)
  2 1/2 Women, 1999 (Greenaway)
  2 Friends, 1985 (Campion)

99. See Kilencvenkilenc, 1918

1135
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Affaire Lafarge, 1938</td>
<td>(von Stroheim)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Affaire Maurizius, 1954</td>
<td>(Duvivier)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Affaire Nina B, 1962</td>
<td>(Stodmak)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Affaires publiques, 1934</td>
<td>(Bresson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Affairs of a Rogue. See First Gentleman, 1948</td>
<td>(von Stroheim)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Affairs of Anatol, 1921</td>
<td>(de Mille)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Affairs of Cellini, 1934</td>
<td>(La Cava)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Affairs of Dobie Gillis, 1953</td>
<td>(Fosse)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Affairs of Martha, 1942</td>
<td>(Dassin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Affairs of Sally. See Fuller Brush Girl, 1950</td>
<td>(von Stroheim)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Affectionately Yours, 1941</td>
<td>(Bacon)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Afrique, My Africa. See Afrique, mon Afrique, 1995</td>
<td>(Shindo)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>African. See African, 1983</td>
<td>(huston)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>African. See African, 1938</td>
<td>(Buñuel)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>African. See African, 1955</td>
<td>(Imai; Yoshimura)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>African. See Africain, 1990</td>
<td>(Ray)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>African. See Africana. See Rückkehr, 1990</td>
<td>(Griffith)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>African. See Afrique et la recherche scientifique, 1965</td>
<td>(Rouch)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>After Life Time, 1971</td>
<td>(Loach)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>After Grad With Dad, 1980</td>
<td>(Egoyan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>After Hours, 1984</td>
<td>(Campion)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>After Hours, 1985</td>
<td>(Scorsese)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>After Laughter, 1981</td>
<td>(Vanderbeek)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>After Many Years, 1908</td>
<td>(Egoyan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>After My Last Move. See Nach Meinem letzten Umzug, 1970</td>
<td>(Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>After Office Hours, 1932</td>
<td>(Launder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>After School, 1912</td>
<td>(Dwan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>After Sunset: The Life &amp; Times of the Drive-in Theater, 1995</td>
<td>(Carpenter)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>After the Fox. See Caccia alla volpe, 1966</td>
<td>(De Sica)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>After the Game, 1973</td>
<td>(Marshall)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>After the Rain. See Ame agaru, 1999</td>
<td>(huston)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>After the Rehearsal. See After Repetitioner, 1983</td>
<td>(Borzage)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>After the Wall, 1947</td>
<td>(Frankenheimer)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>After the Wind, 1948</td>
<td>(Crichton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Afternoon Off, 1979</td>
<td>(huston)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Afloat on an Age of Infidelity. See Muerte de un ciclista, 1955</td>
<td>(Scorsese)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Age of the Earth. See A idade da terra, 1980</td>
<td>(Scorsese)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agee, 1980</td>
<td>(Huston)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agents tels qu’on nous les presente, 1908</td>
<td>(Feuillade)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aggie Appleby, Maker of Men, 1933</td>
<td>(Sandrich)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aggressionen, 1968</td>
<td>(Schrader)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aggrippes à la terre, 1968</td>
<td>(Ivens)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ahi Murad il diavolo bianco, 1959</td>
<td>(Bava)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ajit-Train of the Central Committee. See Ajitpoziod VTsIK, 1921</td>
<td>(Vertov)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aigkadyanchi Mouj, 1914</td>
<td>(Phalke)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agnes Brown, 1999</td>
<td>(Sheridan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agnes of God, 1985</td>
<td>(Jewison)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Age of Daydreaming. See Age of Consent, 1937</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Age of Desire, 1923</td>
<td>(Borzage)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Age of the Earth. See A idade da terra, 1980</td>
<td>(Scorsese)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agee, 1980</td>
<td>(Huston)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agent tels qu’on nous les presente, 1908</td>
<td>(Feuillade)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aggie Appleby, Maker of Men, 1933</td>
<td>(Sandrich)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aggressionen, 1968</td>
<td>(Schrader)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aggrippes à la terre, 1968</td>
<td>(Ivens)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ahi Murad il diavolo bianco, 1959</td>
<td>(Bava)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ajit-Train of the Central Committee. See Ajitpoziod VTsIK, 1921</td>
<td>(Vertov)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aigkadyanchi Mouj, 1914</td>
<td>(Phalke)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agnes Brown, 1999</td>
<td>(Sheridan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agnes of God, 1985</td>
<td>(Jewison)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agnese Visconti, 1910</td>
<td>(Pastrone)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ajan Dei. See Égi bárány, 1970</td>
<td>(Fernández)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agnis Dei Kinder Synapse, 1991</td>
<td>(Brakhage)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agonie de Byzance, 1913</td>
<td>(Feuillade)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agonie de Jerusalem, 1926</td>
<td>(Duvivier)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agonie des aigles, 1920</td>
<td>(Duvivier)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agonie des aigles, 1933</td>
<td>(Pagnol)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agony and the Ecstasy, 1965</td>
<td>(Reed)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agostino di Ippona, 1972</td>
<td>(Rossellini)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aju, 1972</td>
<td>(Guerra; Herzog)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aguirre, the Wrath of God. See Aguirre, der Zorn Göttes, 1972</td>
<td>(huston)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agulha no palheiro, 1952</td>
<td>(Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ah, Cradle, 1980</td>
<td>(Xie Jin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ah Fei. See Yu Ma Ts'ai Tzu, 1984</td>
<td>(Chen)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ah! My Friends without Voice. See Aa koe naki tomo, 1972</td>
<td>(huston)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ah, My Home Town. See Aa furustao, 1938</td>
<td>(Fernández)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ahor te vamos a llamar hermano, 1971</td>
<td>(Ruiz)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ahora mis pistolas hablan, 1980</td>
<td>(Fernández)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A.I., 2001</td>
<td>(Blade)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aifutabbi, 1972</td>
<td>(Ishikawa)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ai ni yomigaeri hi, 1976</td>
<td>(Mizoguchi)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aji no borei, 1978</td>
<td>(Oshima)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aja no corrida, 1976</td>
<td>(Oshima)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aik to chikai, 1945</td>
<td>(Imai)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aik to kibo no machi, 1959</td>
<td>(Oshima)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aik to ninkushimi no kanata e, 1951</td>
<td>(Kurosawa)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aik to shi no tanima, 1954</td>
<td>(Kurosawa)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aik vostror ordin, signora!, 1938</td>
<td>(Sica)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aik Yu Ming T'ien, 1976</td>
<td>(Hou Hsiao-Hsien)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aid to the Nation, 1947</td>
<td>(Dillon)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aid-to-ai, 1918</td>
<td>(Feuillade)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aido, 1969</td>
<td>(Hani)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aido, Slave of Love. See Aido, 1969</td>
<td>(Kurosawa)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aienkyo, 1937</td>
<td>(Mizoguchi)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aigle à deux têtes, 1947</td>
<td>(Cockeau)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aijo jin, 1953</td>
<td>(Ishikawa)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aijo no keifu, 1961</td>
<td>(Gosho)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aile ou la cuisse, 1976</td>
<td>(Beineix)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ainé Céaire: A Voice for History. See Ainé Céaire: un voix pour l’histoire, 1994</td>
<td>(huston)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ainé Céaire: un voix pour l’histoire, 1994</td>
<td>(Palcy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ainé des Ferchaux, 1963</td>
<td>(Melville)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Air Circus, 1928</td>
<td>(Hawks)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Air City. See Aerograd, 1935</td>
<td>(Carné)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Air de Paris, 1954</td>
<td>(Carné)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Air Force, 1943</td>
<td>(Hawks)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Air Force One, 1997</td>
<td>(Petersen)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Air pur, 1939</td>
<td>(Chayane)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aires de renovacion en el meridiano 37, 1986</td>
<td>(Alvarez)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Airmans letter to his mother, 1941</td>
<td>(Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aireda, 1976</td>
<td>(Brakhage)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aisai monogatari, 1951</td>
<td>(Shindo)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aisureba koso, 1955</td>
<td>(Imai; Yoshimura)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Aiyoku no ki, 1930 (Gosho)
Aizo toge, 1934 (Mizoguchi)
A.K., 1985 (Marker)
Akaitei, 1976 (Pakula)
All These Women. See För att inte tala om alla dessa kvinnor, 1954
All Things Flow. See Panta Rhei, 1951
A.K., 1985 (Marker)
Aizo toge, 1934 (Mizoguchi)
Aiyoku no ki, 1930 (Gosho)
Akhar.
Akce B, 1951 (Frič)
Akatsuki no tsuiseki, 1950 (Ichikawa)
Akatsuki no dasso, 1950 (Kurosawa)
Akash Kusum, 1965 (Sen)
Akaler Sandhane
Akai yuhi ni terasarete, 1925 (Mizoguchi)
Akai satsui, 1964 (Imamura)
Akahige, 1965 (Kurosawa)
Alarcon, 1951 (Zélie)
Alba, 1980 (del Toto)
Alain et Marguerite, 1950 (Dreszer)
Alan and Dickin, 1967 (Warhol)
Alan and Apple, 1967 (Warhol)
Ala Mode, 1958 (Vanderbeek)
Alabama—2,000 Light Years, 1969 (Wenders)
Ala Mode, 1958 (Vanderbeek)
Alacrity, 1957 (Armstrong)
Alcibiades, 1980 (Dinsdale)
Alcone, 1950 (Detmold)
Alain, 1924 (Englund)
Alice in Wonderland, 1903 (Hepworth)
Alice in Wonderland, 1933 (Mankiewicz)
Ali, 1950 (Pirès)
Ali et Précy, 1951 (Plati)
Ali Baba.
Ali Baba et les quarante voleurs, 1954
Ali Baba et les quarante voleurs, 1954 (Becker)
All Quiet on the Western Front
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>All Wet, 1924</td>
<td>McCarey</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Allá en el Rancho Grande, 1936</td>
<td>de Fuentes; Fernández</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alla in il tropico, 1940</td>
<td>de Fuentes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alla ricerca di Tadzio, 1970</td>
<td>Visconti</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alle kann ich nicht heiraten, 1952</td>
<td>Forst</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Allegory, 1989</td>
<td>Ruiz</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Allegro barbaro: Magyar rapszódia 2, 1978</td>
<td>Jancsó</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Allemande Neuf Zero, 1991</td>
<td>Godard</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alone at Last</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alone on the Pacific</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alone in the World, 1916</td>
<td>Weber</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Along the Galgu River</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Along the Great Divide, 1951</td>
<td>Walsh</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Along the River</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alpha noir, 1965</td>
<td>Roug</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alphabet Murders, 1965</td>
<td>Tashlin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alphaville, 1965</td>
<td>Godard</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alraune, 1952</td>
<td>Forst</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alraune, 1918</td>
<td>Curtiz</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Altered Message, 1911</td>
<td>Guy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alti, gli altri e noi, 1967</td>
<td>Sica</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Altijd, het al of het niet, 1949</td>
<td>Wajda</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Always Tell Your Wife, 1923</td>
<td>Hitchcock</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ame agaru, 1999</td>
<td>Kurosawa</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ame d’artiste, 1925</td>
<td>Dulac</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>America, America, 1964</td>
<td>Kazan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>America Is Hard to See, 1969</td>
<td>de Antonio</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>America: Isn’t Life Wonderful, 1924</td>
<td>Griffith</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>America’s Cup Race, 1899</td>
<td>Porter</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American 30’s Song, 1969</td>
<td>Brakhage</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Autobahn, 1984</td>
<td>Jarmusch</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Aristocracy, 1916</td>
<td>Fleming</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Beauty, 1999</td>
<td>Spielberg</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Boy, 1979</td>
<td>Scorcese</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Cinema, 1995</td>
<td>Tavernier</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Dream, 1991</td>
<td>Kopple</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Flyers, 1985</td>
<td>Badham</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Friend.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Graffiti, 1973</td>
<td>Coppola; Howard; Lucas</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Guerrilla in the Philippines, 1950</td>
<td>Lang</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Heires, 1917</td>
<td>Hepworth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American in Paris, 1951</td>
<td>Minnelli</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Madness, 1932</td>
<td>Capra</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Matchmaker.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American President, 1992</td>
<td>Reiner</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Romance, 1944</td>
<td>Vidor</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Soldier.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Tail, 1986</td>
<td>Spielberg</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Tail: Fievel Goes West, 1991</td>
<td>Spielberg</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Tragedy, 1931</td>
<td>von Sternberg</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Werewolf in London, 1981</td>
<td>Landis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Americaner Schadchen, 1939</td>
<td>Ulmer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Film Title</td>
<td>Director(s)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>------------------------------------------</td>
<td>----------------------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Americano, 1916 (Fleming)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Americano a Roma, 1954 (Scola)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amerikanische Freund, 1977 (Eustache; Fuller; Ray; Wenders)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amerikanische Soldat, 1970 (Fassbinder; Von Trotta)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>âmes au soleil, 1981 (Faye)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ames de fous, 1917 (Dulac)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ami de mon amie, 1987 (Rohmer)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amica, 1969 (Lattuada)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amiche, 1955 (Antonioni)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amici miei, 1975 (Germi)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amo magico: il maestro Nino Rota, 1999 (Wertmuller)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amiga, 1988 (Holland)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amiral Nakhtimov, 1946 (Pudovkin)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amistad, 1997 (Spielberg)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ami de mon ami, 1987 (Rohmer)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amor no h. . . pero. . . pero, 1951 (Bava)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amore, 1947 (Rossellini)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amore, 1948 (Fellini)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amore a Roma, 1960 (de Sica)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amore facile, 1960 (Scola)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amore e c'è un paesino, 1957 (de Sica)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amore e rabbia, 1969 (Bertolucci; Godard; Pasolini)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amor a cielo, 1953 (Antonioni; Fellini; Lattuada)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amor di mezzo secolo, 1954 (Germi; Rossellini)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amorosa, 1986 (Zetterling)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amorosa menzogna, 1949 (Antonioni)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amorous Adventures of Moll Flanders, 1965 (de Sica)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amos and Andrew, 1993 (Demme)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amour, 1972 (Morrissey)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amour, 1973 (Warhol)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amour. See L'amour de Toni, 1978 (Tarkovsky)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amour en Allemagne.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amour d'une femme, 1954 (Grémillon)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amour de Swann.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amour à Vingt Ans, 1972 (Wajda)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amour blessé, 1975 (Lefebvre)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amour chante, 1930 (Florey)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amour d'automne, 1912 (Feuillade)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amour de poche, 1957 (Melville)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amour de Swann. See Swann in Love, 1984</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amour d'une femme, 1954 (Grémillon)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amour en Allemande. See Liebe in Deutschland, 1983</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amour en fuite, 1979 (Truffaut)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amour et la loi, 1920/23 (Protazanov)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amour et restes humains. See Love &amp; Human Remains, 1993</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amour existe, 1960 (Pialat)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amour fou, 1968 (Rivette)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amour l'après-midi, 1972 (Rohmer)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amour par terre, 1984 (Rivette)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amoureux, 1993 (Feuillade)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amoureux, 1993 (Geoffroy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amours, délices et orgues. See Collège swing, 1946</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amulet of Ogum. See O Amuleta de Ogum, 1974</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ana, 1957 (Ichikawa)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ana and the Wolves. See Ana y los lobos, 1973</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ana y los lobos, 1973 (Saura)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ana y los lobos, 1973 (Saura)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ana y los lobos, 1973 (Saura)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ana y los lobos, 1973 (Saura)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ana, 1957 (Ichikawa)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>And Life Goes On. And God Created Woman, 1987 (Vadim)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>And Now My Love. And Justice for All.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Andy Warhol's Flesh. See Flesh, 1997</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Andromeda Strain, 1970 (Wise)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Andy Warhol's Heat.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Andy Warhol's Frankenstein. See Flesh for Frankenstein, 1974</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Andy Warhol's Heat.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Andy Warhol's Lonesome Cowboys. See Lonesome Cowboys, 1968</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Andy Warhol's Women. See Women in Revolt, 1971</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Anticipation of the Night, 1958 (Brakhage)
Antigone, 1992 (Straub, Jean-Marie, and Danièle Huillet)
Antinea, L’amante della città Sepolta. See Atlantide, 1960
Antípodas de la victoria, 1986 (Alvarez)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoinette Sabrier, 1926 (Dulac)
Antonia, 1982 (Saura)
Antoniyevo razbijeno ogledalo, 1957 (Makavejev)
Antónijevo razbijeno ogledalo, 1957 (Makavejev)
António das Mortes, 1969 (Rocha)
Antonio di Padova, 1949 (Bava)
Antz, 1998 (Allen; Spielberg)
Antonio et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoinette Sabrier, 1926 (Dulac)
Antoniyevo razbijeno ogledalo, 1957 (Makavejev)
Antonijn Dvořák, 1990 (Dříze)
António das Mortes, 1969 (Rocha)
Antonio di Padova, 1949 (Bava)
Antz, 1998 (Allen; Spielberg)
Antonijevo razbijeno ogledalo, 1957 (Makavejev)
Antonín Dvořák, 1990 (Jireš)
Antonieta, 1982 (Saura)
Antonijevo razbijeno ogledalo, 1957 (Makavejev)
Antonijevo razbijeno ogledalo, 1957 (Makavejev)
Antonijevo razbijeno ogledalo, 1957 (Makavejev)
Antonijevo razbijeno ogledalo, 1957 (Makavejev)
Antonijevo razbijeno ogledalo, 1957 (Makavejev)
Antonis Sabrier, 1926 (Dulac)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Antoine et Antoinette, 1947 (Becker)
Around the World in Eighty Minutes with Douglas Fairbanks. See Around the World with Douglas Fairbanks, 1931
Around the World with Douglas Fairbanks, 1931 (Fleming)
Arous-ye Khouban, 1989 (Makhmalbaf)
Arrangement, 1969 (Kazan)
Arrivée des congressistes à Neuville-sur-Saône. See Débarquement, 1895
Arrivée d’un bateau à vapeur, 1896-97 (Lumière)
Arrivée d’un train à La Ciotat, 1895 (Lumière)
Arrivée d’un train en gare de La Ciotat, 1936 (Lumière)
Arroseur arrosé, 1895 (Lumière)
Arroseur arrosé
Arrivée d’un bateau à vapeur, 1896-97 (Lumière)
Arte del tabaco, 1974 (Gutiérrez Alea)
Art de Revival.
Art of Mirrors, 1973 (Jarman)
Art of Love, 1965 (Jewison)
Art of Deceit, 1981 (Vadim)
Arsenic and Old Lace, 1944 (Capra)
Arsène Lupin joue et perd, 1980 (Astruc)
Arsenal
Arsén Lupin utolsó kalandja, 1921 (Fejös)
Arruza, 1971 (Boetticher)
Arrowsmith, 1931 (Ford)
Arrow Game, 1974 (Asch)
Arroz de maíz, 1973 (Guillén)
Art of Salesmanship.
As the Clouds Scatter.
As the Bells Rang Out, 1910 (Griffith)
As pinturas de meu irmão Júlio, 1965 (Oliveira)
As It Is in Life, 1910 (Griffith)
As in a Looking Glass, 1911 (Griffith)
As Good as It Gets, 1997 (Kasdan; Solondz)
Arzt aus Halberstadt, 1969 (Kluge)
Arvottomat, 1982 (Kaurismaki)
Aruyo futatabi, 1956 (Gosho)
Aru eiga-kantoku no shōgai: Mizoguchi Kenji no kiroku, 1975 (Shindo)
Artist’s Great Madonna, 1913 (Ingram)
Artist’s Dream, 1900 (Porter)
Artist’s Great Madonna, 1913 (Ingram)
Asi ni sawatta onna, 1952 (Ichikawa)
Ashi ni sawatta onna, 1952 (Ichikawa)
Ashik kerib, 1988 (Paradzhanov)
Ashizuri misaki, 1954 (Yoshimura)
Asi es la vida, 2000 (Ripstein)
Asi se quiere en Jalisco, 1942 (de Fuentes)
Ask a Policeman, 1939 (Lauder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)
Aslan bey, 1968 (Güney)
Aslanlarin dönüşi, 1966 (Güney)
Asleep at the Switch, 1923 (Sennett)
Asphalt Jungle, 1950 (Huston)
Assassin. See Point of No Return, 1993
Assassin a peur la nuit, 1942 (Delannoy)
Assassin habite au vingt-et-un, 1942 (Clouzot)
Assassin, The Emperor and the Assassin. See Jing ke ci qin wang, 1999
Assassinat de la rue du Temple, 1904 (Guy)
Assassinat du Courrier de Lyon, 1904 (Guy)
Assassination. See Ansatsu, 1964
Assassination Bureau, 1968 (Dearden)
Assassination Game, 1992 (Corman)
Assassination of Trotsky, 1972 (Losey)
Assassino, 1961 (Petri)
Assassins: A Film concerning Rimbaud, 1985 (Haynes)
Assasins de l’ordre, 1971 (Carné)
Assault on Paradise. See Maniac, 1977
Assault on Precinct 13, 1977 (Carpenter)
Assiettes tournantes, 1895 (Lumière)
Assigned to Danger, 1948 (Boetticher)
Asterix et Obelix Take on Caesar. See Asterix et Obelix contre Cesar, 1999
Asterix et Obelix contre Cesar, 1999 (Berri)
Astrologie ou Le Miroir de la vie, 1952 (Grémillon)
Astronautes, 1960 (Marker)
Asu no tsukuru hitobito, 1946 (Kurosawa)
Asuya, 1977 (Heifitz)
At avrat silah, 1957 (Güney)
At war with the Army, 1951 (Lewis)
At Twelve O’Clock, 1913 (Sennett)
At War with the Army, 1951 (Lewis)
At the Altar, 1909 (Griffith)
At the Circus, 1938 (Leroy)
At the Lörinc Spinnery.
At the Phone, 1912 (Guy)
Art of the English Craftsman, 1933 (Flaherty)
At the Risk of My Life.
Asphalt Jungle, 1950 (Huston)
At War with the Army, 1951 (Lewis)
At the Eleventh Hour.
At the Altar, 1909 (Griffith)
At Land, 1944 (Deren)
At the Phone, 1912 (Guy)
At the Risk of My Life. See Inochi bo ni furo, 1971
At the Circus, 1938 (Leroy)
At the Elephant Hour. See Hvem var Forbryderen?, 1912
At the Lörinc Spinnery. See A lörincí fonóban, 1912
At the Phone, 1912 (Guy)
At the Risk of My Life. See Inochi bo ni furo, 1971
At the Circus, 1938 (Leroy)
At the Risk of My Life. See Inochi bo ni furo, 1971
At the Phone, 1912 (Guy)
At the Risk of My Life. See Inochi bo ni furo, 1971
At the Circus, 1938 (Leroy)
At the Elephant Hour. See Hvem var Forbryderen?, 1912
At the Lörincí fonóban, 1912
At the Phone, 1912 (Guy)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Atencion prenatal, 1972 (Gómez)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Athens, 1982 (Angelopoulos)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Athlète incomplet, 1932 (Autant-Lara)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Atilla 74, 1975 (Cacoyannis)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Atividades políticas em Sao Paolo, 1950 (Pereira Dos Santos)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Atlantic, 1929 (Dupont; Forst)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Atlantic City, 1980 (Malle)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Atlanide, 1921 (Feyder)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Atlanide, 1932 (Pabst)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Atlanide, 1960 (Ulmer)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Atlanik, 1929 (Dupont)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Atlantis, 1913 (Blom; Curtiz)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Atlantis, 1930 (Dupont)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Atlantis, 1991 (Besson)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Atlas, 1960 (Corman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Atom, 1918 (Barzoghe)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Atom Age Vampire. See Seddok, l’erede di Satana, 1960</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Atonement of Gösta Berling. See Gösta Berlings saga, 1923</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Atrę, 1920 (Gance)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Atsui yoru, 1968 (Yoshimura)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Att Segla är Nödvändigt, 1937/38 (Fejös)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Atta Boy’s Last Race, 1916 (Browning)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Attack!, 1956 (Aldrich)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Attack of the Crab Monsters, 1957 (Corman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Attack of the Giant Leeches, 1959 (Corman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Attaque du feu, 1895 (Lumière)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Attaque d’un diligence, 1904 (Guy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Attempt at Simulating Cinematographic Delirium. See Essai de simulation de délire cinématographique, 1935</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Attenti, 1961 (de Sica)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Attention Bandits, 1987 (Lelouch)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Atti degli apostoli, 1968 (Rossellini)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Attrait du bouge, 1912 (Feuillade)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Au Bal de Flore, 1900 (Guy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Au cabaret, 1899/1900 (Guy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Au carefre de la vie, 1949 (Storck)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Au coeur du mensonge, 1999 (Chabrol)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Au coeur de l’Ile de France, 1954 (Grémillon)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Au gré des flots, 1913 (Feuillade)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Au harem d’Archimede, 1985 (Costa-Gavras)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Au hasard Balthazar, 1966 (Bresson; Miller)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Au nom de la loi, 1932 (Tourneur)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Au pays de George Sand, 1926 (Epstein)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Au pays des lions, 1912 (Feuillade)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Au pays des mages noirs, 1947 (Rouch)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Au pays du Roi Lépreux, 1927 (Feyder)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Au pays du scalp, 1931 (Cavalcanti)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Au petit bonheur, 1945 (L’herbier)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Au Poulaille!, 1905 (Guy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Au réfectoire, 1897/98 (Guy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Au Revoir les enfants, 1987 (Malle)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Au royaume des cieux, 1949 (Duvivier)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Au Rythme de mon coeur, 1983 (Lefebvre)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Au secours!, 1923 (Gance)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aube, 1986 (Jancsó)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Auberge rouge, 1910 (Gance)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Auberge rouge, 1923 (Epstein)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Auberge rouge, 1951 (Autant-Lara)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Auch Zwergen haben klein angefangen, 1970 (Herzog)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Audaces du cœur, 1913 (Feuillade)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Au-delà des grilles, 1948 (Clément)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Audition, 1989 (Campion)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Auditions, 1980 (Loach)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Audrey Rose, 1977 (Wise)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Auf Wiedersehen, Franziska. See Franziska, 1957</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Auf’s kreuz gelegt, 1974 (Petersen)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Außerstehung. See Resurrezione, 1958</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Auf’s Eis geführt, 1914 (Lubitsch)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aufzeichnungen zu Kleidern und Stüden, 1989 (Wenders)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Augen aus einem anderen Land, 1975 (Klug)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Augen der Mumie Mâ, 1918 (Lubitsch)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Augen wollen sich nicht zu jeder Zeit schliessen oder Vielleicht eines Tages wird Rom sich erlauben, seinerzeits zu wählen. See Othon, 1969</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Augenblick des Friedens, 1965 (Duras)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aujourd’hui ou jamais, 1998 (Lefebvre)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aunt’s in the Pants, 1930 (Sandrich)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Auntie and the Cowboys, 1911 (Dwan)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aurat, 1940 (Mehboob Khan)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aus dem Leben der Marionetten, 1980 (Bergman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aus den Erinnerungen eines Frauenarztes, 1921 (Pick)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aus der Familie der Panzerchensen, 1974 (Wenders)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aus erster Ehe, 1950 (Staudte)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aussi loin que l’amour, 1971 (Chabrol)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aussi loin que mon enfance, 1968 (Eustache)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aussi longue absence, 1961 (Duras)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Austerie, 1982 (Kawalerowicz)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Austerlitz, 1960 (Gance; Kaplan; Welles; de Sica)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Austreibung, 1923 (Murnau)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Auto chiese, 1959 (Olmi)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Autobiografia, 1971 (Ripstein)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Autobiography of a Princess, 1975 (Ivory)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Auto-stoppeuses, 1997 (Pialat)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Auger, 1924 (Pialat)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Augen aus einem anderen Land, 1975 (Klug)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Augen des Mühlenuh, 1923 (Rivette)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Augen der Mumie Mâ, 1918 (Lubitsch)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Augen wollen sich nicht zu jeder Zeit schliessen oder Vielleicht eines Tages wird Rom sich erlauben, seinerzeits zu wählen. See Othon, 1969</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Austerlitz, 1960 (Gance; Kaplan; Welles; de Sica)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Augen des Mühlenu, 1923 (Rivette)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Augen wollen sich nicht zu jeder Zeit schliessen oder Vielleicht eines Tages wird Rom sich erlauben, seinerzeits zu wählen. See Othon, 1969</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Austerlitz, 1960 (Gance; Kaplan; Welles; de Sica)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Augen des Mühlenu, 1923 (Rivette)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Augen wollen sich nicht zu jeder Zeit schliessen oder Vielleicht eines Tages wird Rom sich erlauben, seinerzeits zu wählen. See Othon, 1969</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Title</td>
<td>Year</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-------</td>
<td>------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventure de Billy le Kid, 1970</td>
<td>(Eustache)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventure de Catherine C., 1990</td>
<td>(Breillat)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventure des millions, 1916</td>
<td>(Feuillade)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventure Malgache, 1944</td>
<td>(Hitchcock)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventures d'Artsène Lupin, 1956</td>
<td>(Becker)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventures de Robert Macaire, 1925</td>
<td>(Epstein)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventures du roi Pausole, 1933</td>
<td>(Delannoy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventures d'un voyageur trop pressé, 1903</td>
<td>(Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventurier, 1934</td>
<td>(L'herbier)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventurière, 1912</td>
<td>(Feuillade)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventurière, dame de compagnie, 1911</td>
<td>(Feuillade)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventurière, 1912</td>
<td>(Feuillade)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventures d'un voyageur trop pressé, 1903</td>
<td>(Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventure de Catherine C., 1990</td>
<td>(Breillat)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventure de Billy le Kid, 1970</td>
<td>(Eustache)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventure de Catherine C., 1990</td>
<td>(Breillat)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Average Husband, 1929</td>
<td>(Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Avenue de l'Opéra, 1900</td>
<td>(Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventurière, dame de compagnie, 1911</td>
<td>(Feuillade)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventurière, 1912</td>
<td>(Feuillade)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventures d'un voyageur trop pressé, 1903</td>
<td>(Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventure Malgache, 1944</td>
<td>(Hitchcock)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventure des millions, 1916</td>
<td>(Feuillade)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventure de Catherine C., 1990</td>
<td>(Breillat)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventure de Billy le Kid, 1970</td>
<td>(Eustache)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventure de Catherine C., 1990</td>
<td>(Breillat)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Average Husband, 1929</td>
<td>(Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Avenue de l'Opéra, 1900</td>
<td>(Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventurière, dame de compagnie, 1911</td>
<td>(Feuillade)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventurière, 1912</td>
<td>(Feuillade)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventures d'un voyageur trop pressé, 1903</td>
<td>(Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventure Malgache, 1944</td>
<td>(Hitchcock)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventure des millions, 1916</td>
<td>(Feuillade)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventure de Catherine C., 1990</td>
<td>(Breillat)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventure de Billy le Kid, 1970</td>
<td>(Eustache)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventure de Catherine C., 1990</td>
<td>(Breillat)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Average Husband, 1929</td>
<td>(Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Avenue de l'Opéra, 1900</td>
<td>(Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventurière, dame de compagnie, 1911</td>
<td>(Feuillade)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventurière, 1912</td>
<td>(Feuillade)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventures d'un voyageur trop pressé, 1903</td>
<td>(Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventure Malgache, 1944</td>
<td>(Hitchcock)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventure des millions, 1916</td>
<td>(Feuillade)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventure de Catherine C., 1990</td>
<td>(Breillat)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventure de Billy le Kid, 1970</td>
<td>(Eustache)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventure de Catherine C., 1990</td>
<td>(Breillat)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Average Husband, 1929</td>
<td>(Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Avenue de l'Opéra, 1900</td>
<td>(Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventurière, dame de compagnie, 1911</td>
<td>(Feuillade)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventurière, 1912</td>
<td>(Feuillade)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aventures d'un voyageur trop pressé, 1903</td>
<td>(Guy)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Bad Lieutenant, 1992 (Ferrara)
Bad Lord Byron, 1948 (Zetterling)
Bad Luck. See Zecowate szczescie, 1960
Bad ma ra khabad bord, 1999 (Kiarostami)
Bad Man and Others, 1915 (Walsh)
Bad Man and the Ranger, 1912 (Dwan)
Bad One. See Sorority Girl, 1957
Bad Seed, 1956 (Leroy)
Bad Son.
Bad Timing, 1980 (Roeg)
Badlands
Badlanders, 1958 (Daves)
Badlands, 1973 (Malick)
Badou Boy, 1969 (Mambety)
Baggage Smasher, 1914 (Sennett)
Baghdad Café.
Bajaderens Haevn.
Bait, 1921 (Tourneur)
Bajaderens Haevn.
Balked at the Altar, 1908 (Griffith; Sennett)
Ballet Japonais, 1900 (Guy)
Ballet do Brasil, 1962 (Pereira Dos Santos)
Ballet Girl. See Ballerittens barn, 1954
Ballet Japonais, 1900 (Guy)
Ballet Libella, 1897 (Guy)
Ballet mécanique, 1924 (Ray)
Balletdanserinden, 1911 (Blom)
Ballets de Niger, 1961 (Rouch)
Ballettens bsrcn, 1954 (Henning-Jensen)
Balloneksplosionen, 1913 (Dreyer)
Ballooneksplosionen, 1913 (Dreyer)
Balloon. See Fusen, 1956
Balloon, 1959 (Leacock)
Balloon Explosion. See Balloneksplosionen, 1913
Balloomatic, 1923 (Keaton)
Balocchi e profumi, 1953 (Bava)
Balthazar. See Au hasard Balthazar, 1966
Baltic Deputy. See Deputat Baltiki, 1936
Baltic Express. See Pociag, 1959
Balto, 1995 (Spielberg)
Bambi, 1942 (Franklin)
Bambina. See Farô da padre. . . . , 1974
Bambini di Praga, 1993 (Jireš)
Bamboo Blonde, 1946 (Mann)
Bamboo Doll of Echizen. See Echizen take ningyo, 1963
Bamboo Leaf Flute of No Return. See Kaeranu sasabue, 1926
Bamboozled, 2000 (Lee)
Bambuá päldern på Mentaweii, 1937/38 (Fejös)
Bana kursun islemez, 1967 (Guney)
Banana Monster. See Schlock, 1971
Bananas, 1971 (Allen)
Band of Angels, 1957 (Walsh)
Band of Brothers, 2001 (Spielberg)
Band of Ninja. See Ninja bugeicho, 1967
Band of the Hand, 1986 (Mann)
Band Wagon, 1953 (Minnelli)
Bande à part, 1964 (Godard)
Bande des quatre, 1989 (Rivette)
Bande von Hoheneck, 1950 (Staudte)
Bandeau sur les yeux, 1917 (Feuillade)
Bandera, 1935 (Duviivier)
Banderas del amanecer, 1983 (Sanjinés)
Bandit, 1913 (Sennett)
Bandida, 1962 (Fernández)
Bandit Island of Karabei. See Return to Treasure Island, 1954
Bandit of Point Loma, 1912 (Dwan)
Bandito, 1946 (Lattuada)
Bandits. See Attention Bandits, 1987
Bandits in Rome. See Roma coma Chicago, 1969
Bandit’s Wager, 1916 (Ford)
Bandit’s Waterlow, 1908 (Griffith)
Bang!, 1977 (Troell)
Bangville Police, 1913 (Sennett)
Banjo on My Knee, 1936 (Cromwell)
Banjoko My Knee, 1936 (Cromwell)
Bank, 1915 (Bacon; Chaplin)
Bánk bán, 1914 (Curtiz)
Bank Book. See Viildledt Elskov, 1911
Bank Director, Carnival. See Karneval, 1908
Bank Holiday, 1937 (Lauder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat; Reed)
Bank of Departure. See Ruri no kishi, 1956
Banka, 1957 (Gosho)
Banker’s Daughter, 1910 (Walsh)
Banker’s Daughters, 1910 (Griffith)
Banshun
Banshun
Banshun
Banshun
Banshun
Banshun
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Bara ikutabi, 1955 (Kinugasa)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barabbas, 1953 (Sjöberg)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barajas, aeropuerto internacional, 1950</td>
<td>Bardem</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barbara, 1997 (Malmons)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barbara Frietchie, 1915 (Guy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barbarella, 1968 (Vadim)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barbarian and the Geisha, 1958</td>
<td>Huston</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barbarian, Ingomar, 1908 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barbarian Queen, 1985 (Corman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barbaro del Rito, 1963 (Alvarez)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barbarosa, 1981 (Scheppisi)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barbary Coast, 1935 (Hawks)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barbary Sheep, 1917 (Tourneur)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barbe-Bluée, 1972 (Dmytryk)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barbed Wire, 1927 (Stiller)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barber of Siberia. See Sibirskij tsiryulnik, 1998</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barber Shop, 1933 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barberousse, 1916 (Gance)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barber’s Daughter, 1929 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barbora Hlavsová, 1942 (Frič)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barcelona, 1994 (Stillman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bardey's the Magnificent, 1926 (Florey; Vidor)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bare Essentials, 1991 (Coolidge)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bare Fists, 1919 (Ford)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barefoot Contessa, 1954 (Mankiewicz)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barefoot Executive, 1995 (Seidelman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bargain Hunt, 1928 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bariera, 1966 (Skolimowski)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barnst Magt, 1914 (Holger-Madsen)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barney Oldfield's Race for a Life, 1913</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barnum Was Wrong, 1930 (Sandrich)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barnvagnen, 1963 (Troell)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barnyard Flirtations, 1915 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barroco, 1976 (Téchiné)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baron, 1911 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baron Blood. See Orreri del castello di Norimberga, 1972</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baron de l’Ecluse, 1959 (Delannoy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baron fantôme, 1942 (Coeu)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baron Munchhausen. See Baron Prášil, 1940</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baron of Arizona, 1950 (Fuller)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baron Prášil, 1940 (Frič)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baroque. See Barroco, 1989</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baroque Diet, 1992 (Maysles)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baroud, 1911 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Battle of Algiers. See Battaglia di Algeri, 1966</td>
<td>(Poncecorvo)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Battle of Almaty, 1975 (Nurzhigalov)</td>
<td>(Kazakhstan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Battle of Almaty for the Freedom of Women, 1975</td>
<td>(Kazakhstan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Battle of Amiens, 1936 (Vian)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Battle of America, 1942 (Farnham)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Battle of America, 1942 (Farnham)</td>
<td>(China)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Battle of America, 1942 (Farnham)</td>
<td>(Japan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Battle of America, 1942 (Farnham)</td>
<td>(Italy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Battle of America, 1942 (Farnham)</td>
<td>(South Africa)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Battle of America, 1942 (Farnham)</td>
<td>(UK)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Battle of America, 1942 (Farnham)</td>
<td>(USA)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Battle of America, 1942 (Farnham)</td>
<td>(Vietnam)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Battle of America, 1942 (Farnham)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
DIRECTORS, 4th EDITION

Battle of the Century, 1927 (Stevens)
Battle of the Rails. See Bataille du rail, 1945 Battle of the River Plate, 1956 (Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger; Schlesinger)
Battle of the Sexes, 1914 (Grifﬁth)
Battle of the Sexes, 1928 (Grifﬁth)
Battle of the Sexes, 1959 (Crichton)
Battle of the Villa Fiorita, 1965 (Daves)
Battle of Who Run, 1913 (Sennett)
Battle of Wills, 1913 (Dwan)
Battle over Citizen Kane, 1996 (Bogdanovich)
Battle Royal, 1918 (Sennett)
Battleground, 1912 (Dwan)
Battleground, 1949 (Wellman)
Battleship Potemkin. See Bronenosets Potemkin, 1925
Battleships, 1911 (Dwan)
Battling Butler, 1926 (Keaton)
Battling Charlie. See Champion, 1915
Battling Oriole, 1924 (Stevens)
Baule-les-Pins, 1990 (Kurys)
Baxter, Vera Baxter, 1977 (Duras)
Bay of Blood. See Reazione a catena, 1971
Bay of Rocks, 1976 (Xie Jin)
Bay of St. Michel, 1963 (Zetterling)
Bay of the Angels. See Baie des Anges, 1963
Baya el Khawatim, 1965 (Chahine)
Bayadere’s Revenge. See Tempeldanserindens Elskov, 1914
Baycot, 1985 (Makhmalbaf)
Bayn Ideak, 1960 (Chahine)
BBC: Droitwich, 1934 (Grierson)
BBC: The Voice of Britain, 1935 (Grierson)
Be Careful. See Hansom Cabman, 1924
Be Reasonable, 1922 (Sennett)
Be Tartib ya Bedoun-e Tartib, 1981 (Kiarostami)
Be Your Age, 1926 (McCarey)
Beach. See Spiaggia, 1954
Beach Ball, 1965 (Corman)
Beach Blanket Bingo, 1965 (Keaton)
Beach Bunnies, 1976 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Beach Club, 1928 (Sennett)
Beach Comber. See Under Crimson Skies, 1920
Bear. See Ours, 1988
Bear Affair, 1915 (Sennett)
Bear Escape, 1912 (Sennett)
Bear Knees, 1928 (Sandrich)
Bearded Youth, 1911 (Sennett)
Beast at Bay, 1912 (Grifﬁth)
Beast from a Haunted Cave, 1959 (Corman)
Beast of Prey. See Dravci, 1948
Beast with 1,000,000 Eyes, 1955 (Corman)
Beast with Five Fingers, 1945 (Florey)
Beasts of the Jungle, 1913 (Guy)
Beat 13. See 13. revír, 1945
Beat of the Live Drum, 1985 (Fincher)
Beat the Devil, 1953 (Clayton; Huston)
Beating He Needed, 1912 (Sennett)
Beating Hearts and Carpets, 1915 (Sennett)
Beau Brummel, 1913 (Ingram)
Beau Geste, 1939 (Wellman)
Beau Mariage, 1982 (Rohmer)
Beau Serge, 1958 (Chabrol; de Broca)
Beau-père, 1981 (Blier)
Beauté du diable, 1949 (Clair)
Beautiful Blonde from Bashful Bend, 1949 (Sturges)
Beautiful but Dangerous. See Donna piu bella del mondo, 1955
Beautiful City, 1925 (Goulding)

FILM TITLE INDEX

Beautiful Days. See Uruwashiki saigetsu, 1955
Beautiful Story. See Belle histoire, 1992
Beautiful Swindlers. See Plus Belles Escroqueries du monde, 1964
Beautiful Voice, 1911 (Sennett)
Beauty and the Beast. See Skønheden og udyret, 1983
Beauty and the Dragon. See Bijo to kairyu, 1955
Beauty and the Old Man. See Tao Hua Neu Tou Chao Kung, 1975
Beauty Bunglers, 1915 (Sennett)
Beauty Care in the Jungle. See Skönhetsvård i djungeln, 1935/36
Beauty’s Sorrows. See Bijin aishu, 1931
Bébé embarrassant, 1905 (Guy)
Bébé en vacances, 1910/13 (Feuillade)
Bébé fume, 1910/13 (Feuillade)
Because He Loved Her, 1916 (Sennett)
Because I Love. See Sukinareba koso, 1928
Because I Love. See Aisureba koso, 1955
Becky Sharp, 1935 (Mamoulian)
Bed and Board. See Domicile conjugal, 1970
Bed Sitting Room, 1969 (Lester)
Bedazzled, 1967 (Donen)
Bedingung—Kein Anhang!, 1914 (Lubitsch)
Bedlam, 1994 (Sayles)
Bedroom Blunder, 1917 (Sennett)
Bed’s Breakfast, 1930 (Launder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)
Bedside, 1933 (Florey)
Bedstemoders Vuggevise. See Operabranden, 1912
Beed-o Baad, 1999 (Kiarostami)
Beekeeper. See O Melissokomos, 1986
Beekeeper’s Scrapbook. See Slikovnica pčelara, 1958
Bees, 1978 (Corman)
Bee’s Buzz, 1929 (Sennett)
Beethoven’s Nephew. See Neveu de Beethoven, 1985
Beetlejuice, 1988 (Burton)
Before Dawn. See Reimei izen, 1931
Before Election. See Választás elótt, 1953
Before Spring, 1958 (Ivens)
Before Sunrise, 1995 (Linklater)
Before the Dawn. See Yoake mae, 1953
Before the Raid, 1943 (Weiss)
Before the Rally. See Przed rajdem, 1970
Before the Revolution. See Prima della rivoluzione, 1964
Befrielsesbilleder, 1982 (Von Trier)
Begegnung mit Fritz Lang, 1963 (Godard)
Beggar Man of Paris. See Smil, 1916
Beggar Princess. See Grevinde Hjerteløs, 1915
Beggar’s Deceit, 1900 (Hepworth)
Beggars of Life, 1928 (Wellman)
Beggar’s Opera. See Opera Zebracka, 1991
Begierde. See Abwege, 1928
Beginning and the End. See Principio y ﬁn, 1993
Beginning of an Unknown Century. See Angel,, 1987
Beguiled, 1971 (Eastwood; Siegel)
Behdasht-e Dandan, 1980 (Kiarostami)
Behind Closed Doors, 1988 (Jarman)
Behind Locked Doors, 1948 (Boetticher)
Behind the Makeup, 1930 (Arzner)
Behind the Mask, 1917 (Guy)
Behind the Rising Sun, 1943 (Dmytryk)
Behind the Scenes, 1908 (Grifﬁth)
Behind the Screen, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)
Behind the Shutters, 1973 (Bardem)
Behind the Veil, 1914 (Weber)
Behind the Wall. See Za sciana, 1971
Behind the Wall of Shame, 1996 (Xie Jin)
Behinderte Zukunft, 1970 (Herzog)
Behold a Pale Horse, 1963 (Zinnemann)

1149


<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Behold a Pale Horse, 1964</td>
<td>Berri</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Behold Thy Son. See Kiiroi karasu, 1957</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bei Dir war es immer so schön, 1952</td>
<td>Forst</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Beil von Wandsbek, 1949</td>
<td>Staude</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Being Human, 1994</td>
<td>Forsyth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Being John Malkovich, 1999</td>
<td>Fincher</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Being There, 1979</td>
<td>Ashby</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Being Two Isn’t Easy, 1962</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Béla Bartók: The Music of the Night.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Being John Malkovich, 1999</td>
<td>Fincher</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Benildé ou a Virgem Mãe, 1975</td>
<td>Oliveira</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Benildé: Virgin and Mother. Benilde ou a Virgem Mãe, 1975</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Benim adim Kerim, 1967</td>
<td>Güney</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Benito Cerenó, 1969</td>
<td>Guerra</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Benito Mussolini, 1961</td>
<td>Rossellini</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Benjy, 1951</td>
<td>Zinnemann</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Benen Kozó, 1928</td>
<td>Kinugasa</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Benvenuto Cellini, 1910</td>
<td>Feuillade</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bercail, 1919</td>
<td>L’herbier</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Berceaux, 1932</td>
<td>Epstein</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bérénice, 1954</td>
<td>Rohmer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bérénice, 1954</td>
<td>Rohmer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bérénice, 1983</td>
<td>Ruiz</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Berg-Ejvind och hans hustru, 1918</td>
<td>Sjöström</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bergadler. See Mountain Eagle, 1926</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bergkatze, 1921</td>
<td>Lubitsch</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bergmans röst, 1997</td>
<td>Bergman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Berlin Alexanderplatz, 1980</td>
<td>Fassbinder</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Berlin Conference, 1945</td>
<td>Gerasimov</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Berlin Conspiracy, 1992</td>
<td>Corman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Berlin Diaries 1940-45</td>
<td>Lee</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Berlin, die Sinfonie der Grossstadt, 1926-27</td>
<td>Ruttmann</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Berlin Express, 1948</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Berlin, Symphony of a Great City. See Berlin,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Berlin, die Sinfonie der Grossstadt, 1926-27</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bernadette, 1988</td>
<td>Delannoy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bernhardt. See Conflict, 1945</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bernice Bobs Her Hair, 1976</td>
<td>Silver</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bernstein in Israel, 1958</td>
<td>Leacock</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bernstein in Moscow, 1959</td>
<td>Leacock</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Beröringen, 1971</td>
<td>Bergman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bertolucci secondo il cinema, 1975</td>
<td>Bertolucci</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Berühmte Frau, 1927</td>
<td>Wiene</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Beruhite, 1981</td>
<td>Sanders-Brahms</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bes svideteley, 1983</td>
<td>Mikhalkov</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush, 1921</td>
<td>Hitchcock</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Besieged, 1998</td>
<td>Bertolucci</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Besitzbürgerin, Jahrgang 1908, 1972</td>
<td>Kluge</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bespoke Overcoat, 1955</td>
<td>Clayton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bespridannitsa, 1937</td>
<td>Protazanov</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Besserer Herr, 1928</td>
<td>Forst</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Best Foot Forward, 1943</td>
<td>Donen</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Best Friends, 1982</td>
<td>Jasenson; Levinson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Best Intentions. See Den Goda viljan, 1991</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Best Intentions. See Den goda viljan, 1992</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Best Intentions: The Education and Killing of</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Edmund Perry. See Murder without Motive: The</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Edmund Perry Story, 1992</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Best Man, 1928</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Best Man, 1964</td>
<td>Ashby; Schaffner</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Best Man, 1999</td>
<td>Lee</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Best Man Wins, 1912</td>
<td>Dwan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Best of Enemies, 1915</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Best Policy, 1912</td>
<td>Dwan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Best Things in Life Are Free, 1956</td>
<td>Curtiz</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Best Way of Walking. See Meilleure façon de</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>marcher, 1976</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Best Woman of My Life. See Nejlepší ženská</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>mého života, 1968</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Best Years of Our Lives, 1946</td>
<td>Wyler</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bête humaine, 1938</td>
<td>Becker; Renoir</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Béton dans la ville, 1964-69</td>
<td>Rohmer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Betrayal, 1929</td>
<td>Milestone</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Betrayal, 1948</td>
<td>Michaux</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Betrayal of Maggie, 1917</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Betrayed, 1917</td>
<td>Walsh</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Betrayed, 1988</td>
<td>Costa-Gavras</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Betrayed by a Hand Print, 1908</td>
<td>Griffith</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Betrayer. See Vanina Vanini, 1961</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Better, 1993</td>
<td>Chabrol</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Better Chance. See Chin shui Lou Tai, 1974</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
FILM TITLE INDEX

Better Late than Never, 1916 (Sennett)
Better Place, 1997 (Smith)
Better Times, 1919 (Vidor)
Better Tomorrow, 1986 (Woo)
Better Tomorrow II, 1987 (Woo)
Better Way, 1909 (Griffith)
Better GmbH, 1918 (Lang)
Betty Blue.
Bettler GmbH, 1918 (Lang)
Better Way, 1909 (Griffith)
Better Tomorrow II, 1987 (Woo)
Better Tomorrow, 1986 (Woo)
Better Times, 1919 (Vidor)
Better Place, 1997 (Smith)
Better Late than Never, 1916 (Sennett)
Between Two Worlds.
Between Two Women, 1937 (von Stroheim)
Between Showers, 1914 (Chaplin; Sennett)
Betty to the Rescue, 1917 (de Mille)
Betty Schimmel Story, 1999 (Branagh)
Betty of Greystone, 1916 (Dwan; Fleming)
Between Wroclaw and Zielona Góra.
Between Us, 1983 (Kurys)
Between Your Hands.
Beyond the Barricade.
Beyond the Aegean, 1989 (Kazan)
Beyond the Square.
Beyond the Palooka, 1929 (Sennett)
Big Six. See Common Law Cabin, 1967
Big Sky, 1952 (Hawks)
Big Sleep, 1946 (Hawks)
Big Shave, 1967 (Scorsese)
Big Risk.
Big Red Riding Hood, 1925 (McCarey)
Big Red One, 1980 (Fuller)
Big Punch, 1920 (Ford)
Big Parade. See Da yue bing, 1986
Big Pond, 1930 (Sturges)
Big Shot, 1927 (Coppola)
Big Shots, 1987 (Skolimowski)
Big Girls Don’t Cry ... They Get Even, 1992 (Silver)
Big Gamble, 1931 (Niblo)
Big Boys Don’t Cry . . . They Get Even, 1992 (Silver)
Big Guns Talk: The Story of the Westerns, 1997 (Boetticher)
Big Heat, 1953 (Lang)
Big Helium Dog, 1999 (Howard)
Big Hit, 1998 (Woo)
Big Joys, Small Sorrows. See Yorokobi mo kanashima mo ikotoshitsuiki, 1986
Big Knife, 1955 (Aldrich)
Big Leaguer, 1953 (Aldrich)
Big Lebowski, 1996 (Coen)
Big Li, Young Li, and Old Li, 1962 (Xie Jin)
Big Money, 1935 (Cavalcanti)
Big Mouth, 1967 (Lewis)
Big Noise, 1928 (Dwan)
Big Palooka, 1929 (Sennett)
Big Brother, 1923 (Dwan)
Bicycle Flirt, 1928 (Sennett)
Bicycle Thief. See Ladri di biciclette, 1948
Bicycle Thieves, 1948 (Masternab)
Bid of Roses, 1933 (La Cava)
Bidone, 1955 (Pellini)
Bien amada, 1951 (Fernández)
Bienfaits du cinématographe, 1904 (Guy)
Bienvenido, Mr. Marshall!, 1952 (Barilem; García Berlanga)
Bièvre, fille perdue, 1939 (Clément)
Bifé Titanic, 1980 (Kusturica)
Big Bad Mama, 1974 (Corman)
Big Bad Mama II, 1986 (Corman)
Big Bird Cage, 1972 (Corman)
Big Blockade, 1941 (Cavalcanti; Crichton)
Big Blue. See Grand bleu, 1988
Big Breadwinner Hog, 1968 (Apted)
Big Brother, 1923 (Dwan)
Big Brown Eyes, 1936 (Walsh)
Big Business, 1929 (Stevens)
Big Carnival, 1951 (Rieder)
Big Chill, 1983 (Kasdan)
Big City, 1928 (Browning)
Big City, 1937 (Borzage)
Big City, 1948 (Dohen)
Big City. See Mahanagar, 1963
Big City. See A grande cidade, 1966
Big City Blues, 1932 (Leroy)
Big Country, 1958 (Ashby; Wyler)
Big Dan, 1923 (Wells)
Big Doll House, 1971 (Corman)
Big Dust-up. See Grosse Verhau, 1970
Big Family. See Boldini semya, 1954
Big Film, 1933 (Sennett)
Big Fisherman, 1959 (Borzage)
Big Flock, 1969 (Loach)
Big Gamble, 1931 (Niblo)
Big Girls Don’t Cry . . . They Get Even, 1992 (Silver)
Big Guns Talk: The Story of the Westerns, 1997 (Boetticher)
Big Heat, 1953 (Lang)
Big Helium Dog, 1999 (Howard)
Big Hi, 1998 (Woo)
Big Joys, Small Sorrows. See Yorokobi mo kanashima mo ikotoshitsuiki, 1986
Big Knife, 1955 (Aldrich)
Big Leaguer, 1953 (Aldrich)
Big Lebowski, 1996 (Coen)
Big Li, Young Li, and Old Li, 1962 (Xie Jin)
Big Money, 1935 (Cavalcanti)
Big Mouth, 1967 (Lewis)
Big News, 1929 (La Cava)
Big Noise, 1928 (Dwan)
Big Palooka, 1929 (Sennett)
Big Brother, 1923 (Dwan)
Bicycle Flirt, 1928 (Sennett)
Bicycle Thief. See Ladri di biciclette, 1948
Bicycle Thieves, 1948 (Masternab)
Bid of Roses, 1933 (La Cava)
Bidone, 1955 (Pellini)
Bien amada, 1951 (Fernández)
Bienfaits du cinématographe, 1904 (Guy)
Bienvenido, Mr. Marshall!, 1952 (Barilem; García Berlanga)
Bièvre, fille perdue, 1939 (Clément)
Bifé Titanic, 1980 (Kusturica)
Big Bad Mama, 1974 (Corman)
Big Bad Mama II, 1986 (Corman)
Big Bird Cage, 1972 (Corman)
Big Blockade, 1941 (Cavalcanti; Crichton)
Big Blue. See Grand bleu, 1988
Big Breadwinner Hog, 1968 (Apted)
Big Brother, 1923 (Dwan)
Big Brown Eyes, 1936 (Walsh)
Big Business, 1929 (Stevens)
Big Carnival, 1951 (Rieder)
Big Chill, 1983 (Kasdan)
Big City, 1928 (Browning)
Big City, 1937 (Borzage)
Big City, 1948 (Dohen)
Big City. See Mahanagar, 1963
Big City. See A grande cidade, 1966
Big City Blues, 1932 (Leroy)
Big Country, 1958 (Ashby; Wyler)
Big Dan, 1923 (Wells)
Big Doll House, 1971 (Corman)
Big Dust-up. See Grosse Verhau, 1970
Big Family. See Boldini semya, 1954
Big Film, 1933 (Sennett)
Big Fisherman, 1959 (Borzage)
Big Flock, 1969 (Loach)
Big Gamble, 1931 (Niblo)
Big Girls Don’t Cry . . . They Get Even, 1992 (Silver)
Big Guns Talk: The Story of the Westerns, 1997 (Boetticher)
Big Heat, 1953 (Lang)
Big Helium Dog, 1999 (Howard)
Big Hi, 1998 (Woo)
Big Joys, Small Sorrows. See Yorokobi mo kanashima mo ikotoshitsuiki, 1986
Big Knife, 1955 (Aldrich)
Big Leaguer, 1953 (Aldrich)
Big Lebowski, 1996 (Coen)
Big Li, Young Li, and Old Li, 1962 (Xie Jin)
Big Money, 1935 (Cavalcanti)
Big Mouth, 1967 (Lewis)
Big News, 1929 (La Cava)
Big Night, 1951 (Losey)
Big News, 1929 (La Cava)
Big Olaf, 1965 (La Cava)
Big Parade. See Da yue bing, 1986
Big Pond, 1930 (Sturges)
Big Punch, 1920 (Ford)
Big Red One, 1980 (Fuller)
Big Red Riding Hood, 1925 (McCary)
Big Risk, See Classe tous risques, 1960
Big Shave, 1967 (Scorsese)
Big Shots, 1987 (Skolimowski)
Big Six. See Common Law Cabin, 1967
Big Sky, 1952 (Hawks)
Big Sleep, 1946 (Hawks)
Big Soft Nellie, 1971 (Apted)
Big Steal, 1949 (Siegel)
Big Time, 1929 (Ford)
Big Trail, 1930 (Walsh)
Big Trouble, 1986 (Cassavetes)
Big Trouble in Little China, 1986 (Carpenter)
Bigamo, 1955 (de Sica; Rosi)
Big Trouble in Little China, 1986 (Carpenter)
Big Trail, 1930 (Walsh)
Big Steal, 1949 (Siegel)
Big Soft Nellie, 1971 (Apted)
Biggest Bundle of Them All, 1967 (de Sica)
Biggest Battle...
Bigamist, 1929 (Ford)
Big Damn Heroes...
Bigger than Life, 1956 (Ray)
Biggest Battle...
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Black Rain. See Kuroi Ame, 1988</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Black Rain, 1989 (Scott)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Black Rainbow. See A fekete szivarvany, 1916</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Black River. See Kuroi kawa, 1957</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Black Robe, 1992 (Beresford)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Black Roots. See Racines noires, 1985</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Black Rose, 1950 (Welles)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Black Rose of Harlem, 1996 (Corman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Black Sabbath. See I Tre volti della paura, 1963</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Black Scorpion II: Aftershock, 1996 (Corman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Black Sheep, 1912 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Black Sheep, 1935 (Dwan)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Black Sheep, 1995 (Sperheirs)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Black Sheep of Whitehall, 1941 (Dearden)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Black Sin. See Schwarze Sunde, 1989</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Black Stallion, 1979 (Coppola)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Black Stallion Returns, 1983 (Coppola)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Black Sunday. See Maschera del demonio, 1960</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Black Sunday, 1976 (Frankenheimer)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Black Thunder, 1997 (Corman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Black Tide. See Kuroi u shio, 1954</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Black Vision, 1965 (Brakhage)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Black Watch, 1929 (Ford)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Black Widow. See Viuda negra, 1977</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Black Widow, 1987 (Rafelson)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Black Windmill, 1974 (Siegel)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blackbeard the Pirate, 1952 (Walsh)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blackbelt, 1992 (Corman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blackboard. See Takhte Siah, 2000</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blackened Hills, 1912 (Dwan)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blackguard, 1925 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blackmail, 1929 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blackmailed, 1950 (Zetterling)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blackout. See Contraband, 1940</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blackout, 1997 (Ferrara)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Black's and Whites in Days and Nights, 1960</td>
<td>(Vanderbeek)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blacksmith, 1922 (Keaton)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blacksmith. See Eldsmiourinn, 1981</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blacksnake!, 1973 (Meyer)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blade of Satans Bog, 1921 (Dreyer)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blade Runner, 1982 (Scott)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bladestorm. See I Coltelli del vendicatore, 1965</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blaise Pascal, 1975 (Rossellini)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blame It on Rio, 1984 (Donen)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blame It on the Bellboy, 1992 (Anderson)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blame the Woman, 1932 (Niblo)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blanc et le noir, 1932 (Florey)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blarney, 1926 (Lewin)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blasco Ibáñez, 1997 (García Berlanga)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blason, 1915 (Feuillade)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blaubart, 1984 (Von Trotta; Zanussi)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blau Engel, 1930 (Dmytryk; von Sternberg)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blaue Licht, 1932 (Riefenstein)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blaue Maus, 1928 (Forst)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blaue von Himmel, 1932 (Wilders)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blazing Days, 1927 (Wyler)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blazing Saddles, 1974 (Brooks)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bláznia a devčátku, 1989 (Kachyňa)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blé en herbe, 1953 (Autant; Lara; Berri)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blick Moments, 1971 (Leigh)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bléchtrommel, 1979 (Schlöndorff)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bled, 1929 (Becker; Renoir)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bleiern Zeit, 1981 (Von Trotta)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bless the Beasts and Children, 1971 (Kramer)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bless Their Little Hearts, 1983 (Burnett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blick zurück, 1944 (Forst)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blind, 1986 (Wiseman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blind Adventure, 1933 (Schoedsack)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blind Chance. See Przypradek, 1981</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blind Cook, 1961 (Shepitko)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blind Date, 1959 (Losey)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blind Desire. See Part de l'ombre, 1945</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blind Director. See Angriff der Gegenwart auf die Ubirge Zeit, 1985</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blind Fate, 1914 (Hepworth)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blind Fate. See Lotteriseddle No. 22152, 1915</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blind Gods, 1926 (Fleming)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blind Husbands, 1918 (von Stroheim)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blind Justice. See Haevnens Nat, 1915</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blind Man's Bluff. See A Caixa, 1994</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blind Princess and the Poet, 1911 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blindfold. See Ojos vendados, 1978</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blindkuh, 1914 (Lubitsch)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blindness of Devotion, 1915 (Ingram)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blindness of Fortune, 1918 (Hepworth)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blink, 1994 (Apted)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bliss, 1967 (Markopoulos)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bliss of Mrs. Blossom, 1968 (Attenborough)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blithe Spirit, 1945 (Lean)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bizna, 1976 (Holland; Kieślowski)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Block-notes di un registra, 1969 (Fellini)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blood's rost, 1913 (Stööstrom)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blockpost. See Checkpoint, 1998</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blond Bombshell. See Bombshell, 1933</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blonde Dream. See Blonder Traum, 1932</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blonde from Singapore, 1941 (Dmytryk)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blonde Inspiration, 1941 (Berkeley)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blonde Venus, 1932 (von Sternberg)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blonder Traum, 1932 (Forst; Wilder)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blonde’s Revenge, 1926 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blondie of the Follies, 1932 (Goulding)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blood Alley, 1955 (Wellman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blood and Black Lace. See Sei donne per l’assassinoo, 1964</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blood and Roses. See Et mourir de plaisir, 1960</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blood and Sand, 1922 (Arzner; Niblo)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blood and Sand, 1941 (Mamoulian)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blood and Soul. See Chi to rei, 1923</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blood and Water, 1913 (Guy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blood and Wine, 1997 (Rafelson)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blood Bath, 1965 (Corman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blood Brothers, 1978 (Mulligan)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blood Feast. See Fin de fiesta, 1959</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blood Feud. See Fato di sangue fra due uomini per causa di una vedova, 1978</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blood for Blood, Death for Death. See Krov’za krov’, smert’za smert’: slodeianiya Nemetsk Fashistih zakhvatchikov na territorii C.C.C.P. me ne zabudem, 1941</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blood for Dracula, 1974 (Morrissey; Polanski)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blood Kin, 1969 (Lumet)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blood Need Not Be Spilled. See Ne nado krovi, 1917</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blood of Others. See Sang des autres, 1983</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blood of the Condor. See Yawar mallku, 1969</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blood of the Pomegranates. See Sayat nova, 1969</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blood on the Balcony. See Benito Mussolini, 1961</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blood on the Moon, 1948 (Wise)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blood Relatives, 1978 (Chabrol)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blood River, 1991 (Carpenter)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blood Simple, 1984 (Coen)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blood Sisters. See Sisters, 1973</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blood Wedding. See Bodas de sangre, 1981</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bloodfist, 1989 (Corman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bloodfist, 3, 1992 (Corman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bloodfist II, 1990 (Corman; Craven)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Film Title</td>
<td>Year</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-------------------------------------</td>
<td>------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bloodfist</td>
<td>1992</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bloodfist VIII: Trained to Kill</td>
<td>1996</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bloodhounds of the North</td>
<td>1913</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blood’s Tone. See Three Films</td>
<td>1965</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bloodsaint</td>
<td>1912</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bloody Kids</td>
<td>1979</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blossi &amp; Blossom</td>
<td>1997</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blossom Gift Favor</td>
<td>1993</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blossom Time. See Den blomsterlid</td>
<td>1940</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blossoming Port. See Hanasaku minato</td>
<td>1943</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blossoms in the Dust</td>
<td>1941</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blot, 1921 (Weber)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blot on the 'Scutcheon, 1911 (Griffith)</td>
<td>1916</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blow-Ball. See Bóbita</td>
<td>1964</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blotted Brand. See Blot 1911 (Griffith)</td>
<td>1911</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blow Job, 1963 (Warhol)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blow Out, 1981 (de Palma)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blow-Up, 1966 (Antonioni)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue, 1992 (Cronenberg)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue, 1993 (Jarman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue and the Gold. See Annapolis Story</td>
<td>1955</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue Angel. See Blaue Engel, 1930</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue Bird, 1918 (Tournier)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue Blazes, 1936 (Keaton)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue Blood and Red, 1916 (Walsh)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue Chips, 1994 (Friedkin)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue City, 1986 (Hill)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue Collar, 1977 (Schrader)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue Collar Worker and the Hairdresser in a Whirl of Sex and Politics. See Metal meccanico e parrucchiera in un turbine di sesso e di politica, 1996</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue Dambe Waltz. See Kék Duna keringó, 1992</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue Eagle, 1926 (Ford)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue Gardenia, 1953 (Lang)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue in the Face, 1995 (Jarmusch)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue Kite. See Lan Fengzheng, 1993</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue Lagoon, 1948 (Lauder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue Lamp, 1950 (Dearden; Mackendrick)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue Light. See Blaue Licht, 1932</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue Manhattan; Confessions of a Peeping Tom; Son of Greetings. See Hi, Mom!, 1970</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue Moon, 1920 (Franklin)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue Moon Murder Case, 1932 (Florey)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue Moses, 1962 (Brakhage)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue Mountains. See Sinegoriya, 1946</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue Mouse. See Blaue Maus, 1928</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue Movie, 1968 (Morrissey; Warhol)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue Murder at St. Trinian’s, 1957 (Lauder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue of the Night, 1933 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue Revolution. See Aoiro kakumei, 1953</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue Sky, 1990 (Richardson)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue Steel, 1990 (Bigelow)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue Thunder, 1983 (Badham)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue Velvet, 1986 (Lynch)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blue White. See Three Films, 1965</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bluebeard, 1944 (Ulmer)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bluebeard. See Landru, 1963</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bluebeard. See Barbe-Blanche, 1972</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bluebeard. See Blaubart, 1984</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bluebeard’s Castle, 1964 (Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bluebeard’s Eighth Wife, 1938 (Lubitsch; Wilder)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bluebird, 1976 (Cukor)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blues Brothers, 1980 (Landis; Spielberg)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blues Brothers, 2000, 1998 (Landis)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blues in the Night, 1941 (Kazan; Rossen; Siegel)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bluff, 1916 (Feyder)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bluffer, 1929 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blume in Love, 1973 (Schumacher)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blundering Boob. See New Janitor, 1914</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blusenköönig, 1917 (Lubitsch)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blut der Ahnen, 1920 (Wiene)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blut und Boden, 1933 (Ruttmann)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blutsbrüderschaft, 1950 (Staudte)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boat, 1921 (Keaton)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boat. See Boot, 1981</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boat on the Grass, See Bateau sur l’herbe, 1971</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bob le flambeur, 1956 (Melville)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bobby, 1974 (Kapoor)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bobby Deerfield, 1976 (Pollack)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bóbita, 1964 (Mészáros)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bobs, 1928 (Grémillon)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bocal aux poissons-rouges, 1895 (Lumière)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boccaccio, 1920 (Curtiz)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boccaccio ’70, 1962 (de Sica; Fellini; Visconti)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boccaccio in Hungary. See A zsránok szíve avagy Boccaccio Magyarországon, 1981</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bodas de sangre, 1981 (Saura)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Body and Soul, 1925 (Micheaux)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Body and Soul, 1947 (Aldrich; Polonsky; Rossen)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Body Bags, 1993 (Carpenter; Raimi; Hooper)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Body Beautiful. See Nikutai bi, 1928</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Body Chemistry II: The Voice of a Stranger, 1992 (Corman; Landis)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Body Double, 1984 (de Palma)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Body Heat, 1981 (Kasdan; Lucas)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Body Snatchers, 1945 (Wise)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Body Snatchers, 1993 (Ferrara)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bodyguard, 1948 (Altman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bodyguard. See Yojiinbō, 1960</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bodyguard (Jackson), 1992 (Kasdan)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bodywaves, 1992 (Corman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boeing, 1939 (Sirk)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boeing Boeing, 1965 (Lewis)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boer Pietersen schiet in de roos, 1949 (Haastra)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boevi kinosbornik, 1942 (Donskoi)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bogus, 1995 (Jewison)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bohdan Khmelnytsky, 1941 (Dovzhenko)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boheme, 1925 (Florey)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bohème, 1926 (Vidor)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boheme, 1965 (Zeffirelli)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bohène, 1982 (Zeffirelli)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bohemia Docto, 2000 (Nemec)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bohemian Life. See Vie de Boheme, 1992</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bohuslav Martinů, 1980 (Jireš)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boi pod Tsaritsinom, 1920 (Vertov)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bois des amants, 1960 (Autant-Lara)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boîte à soleil, 1988 (Lefebvre)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boje sanaju, 1958 (Makavejev)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boks, 1961 (Skolimowski)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bolkito Kidan, 1993 (Shindo)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bold Seven. See Semero smellykh, 1936</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bolero, 1982 (Lelouch)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bolond április, 1957 (Fábri)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bolshaya semya, 1954 (Heifitz)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bomarzo, Superstizione; Ragazze in bianco, 1949 (Antonioni)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bomba Kemal, 1967 (Günay)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bombay Talkie, 1970 (Ivy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bomber-pilot, 1970 (Schroeter)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bomber’s Moon, 1943 (Florey)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bombs, 1916 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bombs and Bangs, 1914 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Bombshell, 1933 (Fleming)
Bon Allumeur. See Saturnin, 1921
Bon Dieu sans confession, 1953 (Autant-Lara; Berri)
Bon et les méchants, 1975 (Lebouch)
Bon propriétaire, 1913 (Feuillade)
Bon Voyage, 1944 (Hitchcock)
Bonaparte et la révolution, 1971 (Gance)
Bonchi, 1960 (Ichikawa)
Bonaparte et la révolution, 1971 (Gance)
Bon Voyage, 1944 (Hitchcock)
Bon propriétaire, 1913 (Feuillade)
Bon et les méchants, 1975 (Lelouch)
Bon Dieu sans confession, 1953 (Autant-Lara; Berri)
Bonds of Hate. See Prometheus I-II, 1919
Bonfire of the Vanities, 1990 (de Palma)
Bonnie and Clyde
Bonnie, Bonnie Lassie, 1919 (Browning)
Bonnie Brier Bush. See Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush, 1921
Bonheur toi-même, 1980 (Goretta)
Bonheur d'être aimée, 1962 (Storck)
Bonheur des autres, 1918 (Dulac)
Bonheur, 1965 (Varda)
Bonheur des autres, 1918 (Dulac)
Bonheur d'être aimée, 1962 (Storck)
Bonheur sans confession, 1953 (Autant-Lara; Berri)
Bonne année, 1972 (Lelouch)
Bonne année, 1913 (Feuillade)
Bonne Absinthe, 1899/1900 (Guy)
Bonjour, New York!, 1928 (Florey)
Bonjour Mr. Lewis, 1982 (Scorsese)
Bonita of El Cajon, 1911 (Dwan)
Bonheur, 1934 (L'herbier)
Bonfire of the Vanities, 1990 (de Palma)
Bonheur, 1965 (Varda)
Bonheur des autres, 1918 (Dulac)
Bonheur d'être aimée, 1962 (Storck)
Bonheur sans confession, 1953 (Autant-Lara; Berri)
Bonne année, 1972 (Lelouch)
Bonne année, 1913 (Feuillade)
Bonne Absinthe, 1899/1900 (Guy)
Bonjour, New York!, 1928 (Florey)
Bonjour Mr. Lewis, 1982 (Scorsese)
Bonita of El Cajon, 1911 (Dwan)
Bonheur, 1934 (L'herbier)
Bonfire of the Vanities, 1990 (de Palma)
Bonheur, 1965 (Varda)
Bonheur des autres, 1918 (Dulac)
Bonheur d'être aimée, 1962 (Storck)
Bonheur des autres, 1918 (Dulac)
Bonheur sans confession, 1953 (Autant-Lara; Berri)
Bonne année, 1972 (Lelouch)
Bonne année, 1913 (Feuillade)
Bonne Absinthe, 1899/1900 (Guy)
Bonjour, New York!, 1928 (Florey)
Bonjour Mr. Lewis, 1982 (Scorsese)
Bonita of El Cajon, 1911 (Dwan)
Bonheur, 1934 (L'herbier)
Bonfire of the Vanities, 1990 (de Palma)
Bonheur, 1965 (Varda)
Bonheur des autres, 1918 (Dulac)
Bonheur d'être aimée, 1962 (Storck)
Bonheur sans confession, 1953 (Autant-Lara; Berri)
Bonne année, 1972 (Lelouch)
Bonne année, 1913 (Feuillade)
Bonne Absinthe, 1899/1900 (Guy)
Bonjour, New York!, 1928 (Florey)
Bonjour Mr. Lewis, 1982 (Scorsese)
Bonita of El Cajon, 1911 (Dwan)
Bonheur, 1934 (L'herbier)
Bonfire of the Vanities, 1990 (de Palma)
Bonheur, 1965 (Varda)
Bonheur des autres, 1918 (Dulac)
Bonheur d'être aimée, 1962 (Storck)
Bonheur sans confession, 1953 (Autant-Lara; Berri)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Boys. See Drenge, 1977</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boys from Brazil, 1978 (Schaffner)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boys from Fengkuei. See Feng Kuei T'ai Jen, 1984</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boys from the West Coast. See Vesterhavsdreng, 1950</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boys in Brown, 1949 (Attlborough)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boys in the Band, 1970 (Friedkin)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boys in the Hood. See Boys N the Hood, 1991</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boys Next Door, 1985 (Shepherd)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boys of Paul Street. See A Pál utcai fiúk, 1968</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boy's Shorts: The New Queer Cinema, 1993 (Riggs)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boys Will Be Boys, 1932 (Stevens)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boys from Fengkuei</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Branches of the Tree</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bram Stoker's Dracula, 1992 (Apted; Coppola)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bramy raju, 1967 (Wajda)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bram Stoker's Dracula, 1992 (Apted; Coppola)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brand, 1912 (Dwan)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brand in Ozean, 1950 (Staudte)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brand New Hero, 1914 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brand of Fear, 1911 (Dwan)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Branding, 1929 (Ivens)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Branding a Bad Man and A Western Dreamer, 1911 (Dwan)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brandstifter, 1969 (Von Trott)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brandy for the Parson, 1951 (Grierson)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Br hardly Bas de combat, 1943 (Ivens)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brannigan, 1975 (Attenborough)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brascuba, 1987 (Alvarez)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brass, 1923 (Franklin)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brass Bottle, 1923 (Tourneur)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brass Knuckles, 1927 (Bacon)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brat, 1919 (Guy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brat, 1931 (Ford)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brat geroya, 1940 (Donskoii)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brat priekhali. See Brother has Come, 1979</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bratichka, 1926 (Gerasimov; Kozintsev)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bräutigam, die Komödiantin und der Zuhälter, 1968 (Fassbinder; Straub, Jean-Marie, And Danièle Huillet)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brave and Bold, 1911 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brave Bulls, 1951 (Rossen)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brave Cowards, 1927 (Sandrich)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brave Don't Cry, 1952 (Grierson)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brave Hunter, 1912 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brave Soldier at Dawn. See Akatsuki no yushi, 1926</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bravo, Tatsuko Istin!. See Appare Istin Tasuke, 1945</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brazen Beauty, 1918 (Browning)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brazil, 1985 (Gilliam)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bread, 1924 (Lewin)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bread. See Rotti, 1942</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bread. See O pão, 1959</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bread and Alley. See Nan va Koutcheh, 1970</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bread and Roses, 2000 (Loach)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bread of the Border, 1924 (Arzner)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Break the News, 1937 (Clair)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Break up the Dance. See Rozbijemy zabawe, 1958</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Breakdown. See Si j'etais un espion, 1967</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Breakdown. See Loveless, 1983</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Breaker Morant, 1980 (Beresford)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Breakers. See Branding, 1929</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Breakfast of Champions, 1999 (Rudolph)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Breaking In, 1989 (Forsyth; Sayles)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Breaking Point, 1950 (Curtiz)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Breaking the Ice, 1925 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Breaking the Sound Barrier. See Sound Barrier, 1952</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Breaking the Waves, 1996 (Von Trier)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Breakout. See Danger Within, 1959</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Breakout, 1975 (Huston)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Breaktime. See Zang-e Tafrih, 1972</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Breakup. See Rupture, 1970</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Breath of Scandal, 1960 (Curtiz)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Breathdeath, 1964 (Vanderbeek)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Breathless. See A bout de souffle, 1959</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Breezes of Love. See Fukeyo kikaza, 1935</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Breezy, 1973 (Eastwood)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bremen Freedom. See Bremer Freiheit, 1972</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bremer Freiheit, 1972 (Fassbinder)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Breenende Acker, 1922 (Murnau)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Breenende Geheimnis, 1933 (Siodmak)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Breenendes Geheimnis, 1932 (Forst)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bretagne, 1936 (Epstein)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Breve stagione, 1969 (Castellani)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Breve vacanza, 1973 (de Sica)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brewer's Daughter. See Bryggerens Datter, 1912</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brewster McCloud, 1970 (Altman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brewster's Millions, 1914 (de Mille)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brewster's Millions, 1945 (Dwan)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brewster's Millions, 1985 (Hill)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bricklayer. See Murarz, 1973</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bridal Ball, 1934 (Stevens)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bridal Path, 1959 (Lauder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bride of Death. See Dødens Brud Gadeoriginalen, 1911</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bride of Fear, 1918 (Franklin)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bride of Frankenstein, 1935 ( Whale)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bride of Glomdal. See Glomdalsbraden, 1926</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bride of the Andes. See Andesu no hanayome, 1966</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bride of the Monster, 1955 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bride Service, 1975 (Asch)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bride sur le cou, 1961 (Berri; Vadim)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bride Talks in Her Sleep. See Hanayome no negoto, 1933</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bride Wore Black. See Marieé était en noir, 1967</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bride Wore Red, 1937 (Arzner; Mankiewicz)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bridegroom Talks in His Sleep. See Hanamuko no negoto, 1935</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bridegroom, the Comedienne, and the Pimp. See Brüttigum, die Komödiantin und der Zuhälter, 1968</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bridenapping. See Hua T'ien-T'so, 1961</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brides Are Coming. See Nevjeste dolaze, 1978</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bride's Mistake, 1931 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bride's Relation, 1929 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bridge. See De Brug, 1928</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bridge, 1997 (Greenaway)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bridge in the Jungle, 1971 (Huston)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bridge of Japan. See Nihonbashi, 1956</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bridge of Storstrøm. See Storstrømsbroen, 1950</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bridge on the River Kwai, 1957 (Lean)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bridge That Gap, 1975 (Attenborough)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bridges-Go-Round, 1959 (Clarke)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>bridges. See Loveless, 1983</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bridal Party, 1974 (Lauder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bride’s Mistake, 1931 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bride’s Relation, 1929 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bridge. See De Brug, 1928</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brief Encounter, 1945 (Lean)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brief History of Time, 1992 (Morris)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brief Vacation. See Breve vacanza, 1973</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brig, 1964 (Mekas)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brigade sauvage, 1938 (L'herbier)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brigaden i Sverige, 1945 (Henning-Jensen)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brigadoon, 1954 (Minnelli)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brigands, chapitre VII, 1996 (Ioseliani)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brigante, 1961 (Castellani)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Brigante di Tacca del Lupo, 1952 (Fellini; Germi)
Bright Day of My Life. See Waga shogai no kagayakeru hi, 1948
Bright Eyes, 1922 (Sennett)
Bright Leaf, 1950 (Curiz)
Bright Lights, 1916 (Sennett)
Bright Lights, 1930 (Curiz)
Bright Lights, 1935 (Berkeley)
Bright Lights and Shadows. See Bright Lights of Broadway, 1923
Bright Lights of Big City, 1988 (Pollack)
Bright Lights of Broadway, 1923 (Goulding)
Bright Shawl, 1923 (Goulding)
Brighter Summer Day. See Guling Jie Shaonian Sha Ren Shijian, 1991
Brighton Rock, 1947 (Attenborough; Boulting)
Brigitte et Brigitte, 1965 (Chabrol; Fuller)
Brigitte Horney, 1977 (Zanussi)
Brillantenschiff, 1920 (Lang)
Brillantstjernern, 1912 (Blom)
Brimade dans une caserne. See Saut à la couverture, 1895
Bring Back 'em Sober, 1932 (Sennett)
Bring Me the Head of Alfredo Garcia, 1973 (Fernández; Peckinpah)
Bring on the Dancing Girls, 1965 (Scorsese)
Bring on the Night, 1985 (Apted)
Bring out the Dead, 1999 (Schneider; Scorsese)
Bringing up Baby, 1938 (Hawks)
Brink of Hell. See Toward the Unknown, 1956
Brink of Life. See Nára livet, 1958
Brinks Job, 1978 (Friedkin)
Brisè-Glace, 1988 (Rouch; Ruiz)
Bristet Lykke, 1913 (Blom)
Britannia Hospital, 1982 (Anderson)
British Agent, 1934 (Curiz)
British Sounds, 1969 (Godard)
Broad-Minded, 1930 (Goulding)
Broadcast. See Ekpolomi, 1968
Broadcast News, 1987 (Brooks)
Broadway, 1929 (Fejós)
Broadway after Dark, 1924 (Leroy)
Broadway Ahead. See Sweetheart of the Campus, 1941
Broadway Babies, 1929 (Leroy)
Broadway Bill, 1934 (Capra)
Broadway Blues, 1929 (Sennett)
Broadway by Light, 1957 (Resnais)
Broadway Daddies. See Broadway Babies, 1929
Broadway Danny Rose, 1984 (Allen)
Broadway Gondolier, 1935 (Bacon)
Broadway Melody, 1929 (Goulding)
Broadway Melody, 1940 (Goulding)
Broadway Rose, 1922 (Goulding)
Broadway Serenade, 1939 (Berkeley)
Bröderna, 1913 (Stiller)
Brodyachij avtobus, 1989 (Heifitz)
Broken English, 1979 (Jarman)
Budapest, amiért szeretem, 1971 (Szabó)
Budapest Tales. See Budapesti mesék, 1976
Budapest, Why I Love It. See Budapest, amiért szeretem, 1971
Budapesti mesék, 1976 (Szabó)
Buddy, 1997 (Coppola)
Buddy Buddy, 1981 (Wilders)
Buena Vista Social Club, 1999 (Wenders)
Buenos dias, Buenos Aires, 1960 (Birri)
Buenavista Social Club. See Buena Vista Social Club, 1999
Bus Driver’s Tale, 1990 (Baillie)
Busted Hearts. See Those Love Pangs, 1914
Busted Johny. See Making a Living, 1914
Buster Keaton Rides Again, 1965 (Keaton)
Buster Keaton Story, 1956 (de Mille)
Buster se marie, 1930 (Autant-Lara)
Busters verden, 1984 (August)
Busy Day, 1914 (Chaplin; Sennett)
Busybody, 1923 (La Cava)
But What Do Women Want?. See Mais qu’est-ce qu’elles veulent?, 1976
Buta to gunkan, 1961 (Imamura)
Butch and Sundance: The Early Days, 1979 (Lester)
Butcher Boy, 1917 (Keaton)
Butcher Boy, 1997 (Jordan)
Butter Fingers, 1925 (Sennett)
Butterfly, 1938 (Welles)
Butterfly Girl.
Butterfly, 1981 (Chaplin; Sennett)
Butterfly on the Wheel, 1915 (Tourneur)
Butterfly Revolution. See Summer Camp Nightmare, 1987
Burning Season, 1994 (Frankenheimer)
Cabareteras, 1980 (Fernández)
Cabbage Fairy. See Fée aux choux, 1896
Cabeza de la hidra, 1981 (Leduc)
Cabezas cortadas, 1970 (Rocha)
Cabin Boy, 1994 (Burton)
Cabin in the Cotton, 1932 (Curtiz)
Cabin in the Sky, 1942 (Minnelli)
Cabinet of Dr. Caligari. See Kabinett des Dr. Caligari, 1920
Cabinet of Dr. Ramírez, 1991 (Lynch)
Cabinets de physique au XVIIIème siècle, 1964-69 (Rohmer)
Cabiria, 1914 (Pastrone)
Caccia alla volpe, 1914 (Pastrone)
Cactus Land, 1988 (Jarman)
Cactus Nell, 1917 (Sennett)
Cadaveri eccellenti, 1976 (Rosi)
Caddy, 1953 (Lewis)
Caddyshack II, 1988 (Bartel)
Cadet Perpetua, 1978 (Ripstein)
Caduta degli dei, 1969 (Visconti)
Caduta di Troia, 1910 (Pastrone)
Café Electric, 1927 (Forst)
Cage of Gold, 1950 (Dearden)
Caged, 1950 (Cromwell)
Caged Heat, 1974 (Corman; Demme)
Caicara, 1950 (Cavalcanti)
Caida, 1959 (Torre Nilsson)
Caída de Sodoma, 1974 (Almodóvar)
Calamity Anne's Ward, 1912 (Dwan)
Calamity Anne's Vanity, 1913 (Dwan)
Calamity Anne's Inheritance, 1913 (Dwan)
Calamity Anne's Beauty, 1913 (Dwan)
Calamity Anne Parcel Post, 1913 (Dwan)
Calamity Anne, Detective, 1913 (Dwan)
Calamity, See Kalamata, 1980
Calamity Anne, Detective, 1913 (Dwan)
Calamity Anne Parcel Post, 1913 (Dwan)
Calamity Anne's Beauty, 1913 (Dwan)
Calamity Anne's Inheritance, 1913 (Dwan)
Calamity Anne's Trust, 1913 (Dwan)
Calamity Anne's Vanity, 1913 (Dwan)
Calamity Anne's Ward, 1912 (Dwan)
Calandria, 1933 (de Fuentes)
Calcutta, 1969 (Malle)
Calcutta 71, 1972 (Sen)
Calcutta, My El Dorado, 1990 (Sen)
Calendar, 1993 (Egoyan)
Calendar Girl, 1947 (Dwan)
Calendar of the Year, 1936 (Cavalcanti)
Calendar of the Year, 1937 (Grierson)
Cali Love, 1933 (Sennett)
Cali Love, 1994 (Egoyan)
California, 1936 (Cavalcanti)
California, 1996 (Ferrara)
California Dolls. See All the Marbles, 1981
California Split, 1974 (Altman; Rudolph)
Calimario Union, 1989 (Kaurismaki)
Call, 1909 (Griffith)
Call a Cop, 1921 (Sennett)
Candace, 1931 (Stevens)
Call Harry Crown, See 99 44/100 Dead, 1974
Call Me Mister, 1951 (Bacon; Berkeley)
Call of the Canyon, 1923 (Fleming; Leroy)
Call of the North, 1914 (de Mille)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Cannery Row</td>
<td>1982</td>
<td>Huston</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cannes, . . . 400 coups</td>
<td>1997</td>
<td>Beineix</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cannes, Man</td>
<td>1996</td>
<td>Jarmusch</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cannes, Les 400 coups</td>
<td>1997</td>
<td>Chabrol; Forman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cannes, Les 400 coups</td>
<td>1997</td>
<td>Allen</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cannibal! The Musical</td>
<td>1996</td>
<td>Brakhage</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cannibals, See Os Canibais</td>
<td>1988</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cannon Ball</td>
<td>1915</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cannon Ball Express</td>
<td>1924</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cannonball</td>
<td>1931</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cannonball</td>
<td>1976</td>
<td>Bartel; Corman; Dante; Scorsese</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cannot Exist</td>
<td>1995</td>
<td>Brakhage</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cannot Not Exist</td>
<td>1995</td>
<td>Brakhage</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Captanari</td>
<td>1968</td>
<td>Giney</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canta delle marane</td>
<td>1960</td>
<td>Pasolini</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Captata</td>
<td>Oldás és kötés, 1963</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cantate pour deux généraux</td>
<td>1990</td>
<td>Rouch</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canterbury Tale, The</td>
<td>1944</td>
<td>Powell, Michael, And Pressburger</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canterbury Tales, See I racconti di Canterbury</td>
<td>1972</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canterbury Ghost</td>
<td>1944</td>
<td>Dassin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cantiere d'inverno</td>
<td>1955</td>
<td>Olmi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canyon Dweller</td>
<td>1912</td>
<td>Dwan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canyon Passage</td>
<td>1946</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canzone del sole</td>
<td>1933</td>
<td>(de Sica)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cap du sud</td>
<td>1935</td>
<td>Storck</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cap perdu</td>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Dupont</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cape Ashizuri</td>
<td>1954</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cape Fear</td>
<td>1991</td>
<td>Scorsese; Spielberg</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cape Forlorn</td>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Dupont</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cape Town Affair</td>
<td>1953</td>
<td>Fuller</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Capricita roja</td>
<td>1947</td>
<td>Güntírez Alea</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Capitaine Constan</td>
<td>1996</td>
<td>Tavernier</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Capitaine Fracasce</td>
<td>1928</td>
<td>Cavalcanti</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Capitaine Fracase</td>
<td>1942</td>
<td>Gance</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Capitaine Singrid</td>
<td>1968</td>
<td>Tavernier</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Capital versus Labor</td>
<td>1909</td>
<td>Porter</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Captain, Carl</td>
<td>1991</td>
<td>Troell</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Capitou, 1968</td>
<td>Diegues</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Capkocy povídiky</td>
<td>1947</td>
<td>Frič</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Capone</td>
<td>1975</td>
<td>Corman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Caporal épingle</td>
<td>1962</td>
<td>Renoir</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cappotto</td>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Lattuada</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Caprriccio all'italiana</td>
<td>1967</td>
<td>Pasolini</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Caprice, 1966</td>
<td>Taslhin</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Caprice de princesse</td>
<td>1933</td>
<td>Clouzot</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Caprices de Marie</td>
<td>1969</td>
<td>(de Broca)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carplus Summer, See Rozmarně leto</td>
<td>1968</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Capriolen, 1937</td>
<td>Forst</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Captain Blood</td>
<td>1935</td>
<td>Curtiz</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Captain Boycott</td>
<td>1947</td>
<td>Lauder and Gilliat</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Captain Boy</td>
<td>1994</td>
<td>Corman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Captain Courageous</td>
<td>1937</td>
<td>Hawks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Captain Eddie</td>
<td>1945</td>
<td>Bacon</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Captain EO</td>
<td>1986</td>
<td>Lucas</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Captain Hates the Sea</td>
<td>1934</td>
<td>Milestone</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Captain Horatio Hornblower</td>
<td>1951</td>
<td>Walsh</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Captain Lightfoot</td>
<td>1954</td>
<td>Sirk</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Captain McLean</td>
<td>1914</td>
<td>Stroheim</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Captain of the Guard</td>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Fejős</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Captains Courageous</td>
<td>1937</td>
<td>Fleming</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Captains of the Clouds</td>
<td>1942</td>
<td>Curtiz</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Captive</td>
<td>1915</td>
<td>(de Mille)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Captive, 2000</td>
<td>Akerman</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Captive Heart</td>
<td>1946</td>
<td>Dearden</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Captive Soul, See Rablélek</td>
<td>1913</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Captive Wild Woman</td>
<td>1943</td>
<td>Dmytryk</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Captive’s Island, See Shokei no shima, 1966</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Capture of the Biddle Brothers, 1902</td>
<td>Porter</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Capture of Yegg Bank Burglars</td>
<td>1904</td>
<td>Porter</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Car Wash</td>
<td>1976</td>
<td>Schumacher</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carabiniers, 1963</td>
<td>Godard; Rossellini</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Caravaggio</td>
<td>1986</td>
<td>Jarman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carbunara, 1955-59</td>
<td>Taviani</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cardinal, 1963</td>
<td>Huston; Preminger</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cardinal’s Conspiracy, 1909</td>
<td>Griffith</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cardinal’s Visit, 1981-present</td>
<td>Baillie</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Care and Affection, See Szeretet, 1963</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Career Girls, 1997</td>
<td>Leighb</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Career of Dima, See Dimy Gorina, 1961</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carefree, 1938</td>
<td>Sandrich</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Careless Hubby, 1927</td>
<td>Sandrich</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Caretaker, 1963</td>
<td>Roeg</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Caretaker’s Daughter, 1925</td>
<td>Carey</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cargaison blanche, 1937</td>
<td>Siodmak</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cargaison blanche, 1957</td>
<td>de Broca</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cargo from Jamaica, 1933</td>
<td>Grierson</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carillons, 1936</td>
<td>Storck</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carl Dreyer, 1965</td>
<td>Leibovitz</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carl Nielsen, 1930</td>
<td>Roos</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carl Th. Dreyer, 1966</td>
<td>Roos</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carla’s Song, 1996</td>
<td>Loach</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carlito’s Way, 1993</td>
<td>Palma</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carlo Pisacane, 1955-59</td>
<td>Taviani</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carlson-Browne of the F.O., 1959</td>
<td>Boulting</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carmen, 1900</td>
<td>July</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carmen, 1915</td>
<td>Walsh; de Mille</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carmen, 1916</td>
<td>Chaplin</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carmen, 1918</td>
<td>Lubitsch</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carmen, 1926</td>
<td>Feyder</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carmen, 1983</td>
<td>Saura</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carmen, 1984</td>
<td>Sauria</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carmen Comes Home, See Karumen kokyo ni kaeru, 1951</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carmen Jones, 1954</td>
<td>Preminger</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carmen’s Pure Love, See Karumen junjo su, 1952</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carnal Knowledge, 1971</td>
<td>Nichols</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carnaval, 1953</td>
<td>Pagnol</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carnaval des vérités, 1919</td>
<td>Autant-Lara; L’herbier</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carnavals, 1950</td>
<td>Storck</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carne trémula, 1997</td>
<td>Almodóvar</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carnegie Hall, 1947</td>
<td>Ulmer</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carnet de bal, 1937</td>
<td>Duvière</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carnet de viaje, 1961</td>
<td>Ivens</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carnets of the Major Thompson, 1957</td>
<td>Sturges</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carnival in Flanders, See Kermesse héritoire, 1935</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carnival of Souls, 1998</td>
<td>Craven</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carnival Rock, 1957</td>
<td>Corman</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carnosaur, 1993</td>
<td>Corman</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carnosaur 2, 1995</td>
<td>Corman</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carnosaur 3, Primal Species, 1996</td>
<td>Corman</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Caro Diario, 1994</td>
<td>Moretti</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Caroline Cherie, 1967</td>
<td>de Sica</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carosello Napoletano, 1954</td>
<td>Rosi</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carpehbaggers, 1963</td>
<td>Dmytryk</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carquake, See Cannonball, 1976</td>
<td>Carl Th. Dreyer, 1966</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carriage to Vienna, See Kočár do Vídně, 1966</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carrie, 1952</td>
<td>Wyler</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carrie, 1976</td>
<td>Wyler</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carrie, 1976 (de Palma)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Cars That Ate Paris, 1974 (Weir)
Cars That Ate People. See Cars That Ate Paris, 1974
Carta al mundo. See Rte.: Nicaragua, 1984
Cartas del parque, 1988 (Gutiérrez Alea)
Carte a Sara, 1956 (Bardem)
Carthusband. See Karthauzi, 1916
Cartographer’s Girlfriend, 1987 (Hartley)
Carouche, 1962 (de Broca)
Casa del ángel, 1957 (Torre Nilsson)
Casa del ogro, 1938 (de Fuentes)
Casa dell’esorcismo, 1974 (Bava)
Casablanca, 1942 (Curtiz; Siegel)
Casablanca, 1961 (Solas)
Casarova, 1927 (Delannoy)
Casanova, 1998 (Scola)
Casanova di Federico Fellini. See Casanova, 1976
Case Is Closed. See Karij, 1982
Case of Jonathan Drew. See A Story of the London Fog, 1926
Case of Lena Smith, 1929 (von Sternberg)
Case of the Curious Bride, 1935 (Curtiz)
Casey’s Frightful Dream, 1904 (Porter)
Casey and His Neighbor’s Goat, 1903 (Porter)
Case of the Cattle Thief’s Brand, 1911 (Dwan)
Casey’s Vendetta, 1914 (Browning)
Cash, 1933 (Cricket; Korda)
Cashino, 1995 (Scorsese)
Casino, 1957 (de Sica)
Casino Royale.
Castle of the Spider’s Web.
Castle of Purity.
Castle Keep, 1969 (Pollack)
Castillo de la Pureza, 1972 (Ripstein)
Castelli in aria, 1938 (Castellani; de Sica)
Castiglione, 1942 (Sonnino)
Castiglione, 1979 (Ferreira)
Castiglione, 1980 (Ferrara)
Cast Iron, 1957 (Riley)
Casteel, 1986 (Rog)
Castelli in aia, 1938 (Castellani; de Sica)
Castillo de la Pureza, 1972 (Ripstein)
Castle Keep, 1969 (Pollack)
Castle of Purity. See Castillo de la Pureza, 1972
Castle of the Spider’s Web. See Kumonosu-jo, 1957
Castle within a Castle. See Et Slot 1 Et Slot, 1954
Castles in the Sky and Rhinestones. See Wolkenbau und Flimmerstern, 1919
Castro Street, 1966 (Baillie)
Casualties of War, 1989 (de Palma)
Cassian Trilogy, 1986 (Brakhage)
Cat and Mouse, 1958 (Rotha)
Cat and Mouse. See Chat et la souris, 1975
Cat and the Canary, 1927 (Leni)
Cat Chaser, 1989 (Ferrara)
Cat of the Night. See Yoro no mesuneko, 1929
Cat People, 1942 (Tourner)
Cat People, 1981 (Schrader)
Cat’s Cradle. See Brakhage
Cat’s Meow, 1924 (Coppa; Sennett)
Cat’s Pajamas, 1926 (Wellman)
Catamoros. See Katakomby, 1913
Catalan, 1984 (Jarman)
Catalina, Here I Come, 1927 (Sennett)
Catalina Rowboat Race. See Smith’s Catalina Rowboat Race, 1928
Catamount Killing, 1974 (Zanussi)
Catapult. See Katalpult, 1983
Catch. See Shiiku, 1961
Catch-22. See Nichols; Welles
Catch the Sun, 2000 (Sheridan)
Catch Us If You Can, 1965 (Boorman)
Cate naria, 1969 (Ruiz)
Cathédrale de Chartres. See Chartres, 1923
Catherine, 1927 (Renoir)
Catherine, 1964 (Loach)
Catherine & Company. See Catherine et Cie, 1975
Catherine et Cie, 1975 (Brellat)
Cathy Come Home, 1966 (Loach)
Cathy Tippel, 1975 (Verhoeven)
Cattivo soggetto, 1933 (de Sica)
Cattle, Gold, and Oil, 1911 (Dwan)
Cattle Queen of Montana, 1954 (Dwan)
Cattle Rustler’s End, 1911 (Dwan)
Cattle Thief’s Brand, 1911 (Dwan)
Caudillo, 1967 (Fernández)
Caught, 1949 (Ophüls)
Caught in a Cabaret, 1914 (Chaplin; Sennett)
Caught in a Flue, 1914 (Sennett)
Caught in a Taxi, 1929 (Sennett)
Caught in His Own Net. See Medbejlerens Haevn, 1910
Caught in His Own Trap. See Direktørens Datter, 1912
Caught in the Act, 1915 (Sennett)
Caught in the Kitchen, 1928 (Sennett)
Caught in the Park, 1915 (Sennett)
Caught in the Rain, 1914 (Chaplin; Sennett)
Caught in the Toils. See Den Ivide Djeavel, 1915
Caught in Tights, 1914 (Sennett)
Caught with the Goods, 1911 (Sennett)
Causa králík, 1979 (Jires)
Cause and Effect, 1988 (Haynes)
Cause commune, 1940 (Cavalcanti)
Cavaleur, 1978 (de Broca)
Cavar un foso, 1966 (Torre Nilsson)
Caveman, 1926 (Milestone)
Caveman. See His Prehistoric Past, 1914
Cavern, 1965 (Ulmer)
Cavo olio fludio 220.000 volt, 1959 (Olmi)
Caza, 1966 (Saura)
Ce que les flots racontent, 1916 (Gance)
Ce siècle a cinquante ans, 1950 (Cocteau)
Céline et Julie vont en bateau, 1974 (Eustache; Rivette)
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline et Julie vont en bateau, 1974 (Eustache; Rivette)
Céline et Julie vont en bateau, 1974 (Eustache; Rivette)
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline et Julie vont en bateau, 1974 (Eustache; Rivette)
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline et Julie vont en bateau, 1974 (Eustache; Rivette)
Céline et Julie vont en bateau, 1974 (Eustache; Rivette)
Céline et Julie vont en bateau, 1974 (Eustache; Rivette)
Céline et Julie vont en bateau, 1974 (Eustache; Rivette)
Céline et Julie vont en bateau, 1974 (Eustache; Rivette)
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline et Julie vont en bateau, 1974 (Eustache; Rivette)
Céline et Julie vont en bateau, 1974 (Eustache; Rivette)
Céline et Julie vont en bateau, 1974 (Eustache; Rivette)
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
Céline and Julie Go Boating.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Cena della beffe, 1941</td>
<td>Castellani</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cent et une nuits, 1995</td>
<td>Varda</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Centennial Summer, 1946</td>
<td>Preminger</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Centinela alerta!, 1936</td>
<td>Butuel; Grémillon</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cento anni d’amore, 1953</td>
<td>(de Sica)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Centomila dollari, 1940</td>
<td>Castellani</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Central Airport, 1933</td>
<td>Wellman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Central Park, 1990</td>
<td>Wiseman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Centre, 1978 (Brakhage)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Centuries of June, 1955</td>
<td>(Brakhage)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Century of Cinema, 1994</td>
<td>Burton; Dante; Jewison</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Century of Women, 1994</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>C’era una volta il West, 1969</td>
<td>Bertolucci; Leone</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>C’era una volta, 1967</td>
<td>Rosi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ceramika Ilzecka, 1951</td>
<td>Wajda</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>C’eravamo tanto amati, 1974</td>
<td>Fellini; Scola; de Sica</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cercle rouge, 1972</td>
<td>Melville</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ceremonie, 1995 (Chabrol)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ceremony. See Ceremonie, 1995</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ceremony. See Gishiki, 1971</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cerny Petr, 1963 (Forman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cerro Pelado, 1966</td>
<td>Alvarez</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Certo giorno, 1968 (Olmi)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>César, 1936 (Pagnol)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cesarére, 1978/79 (Dur)</td>
<td>Straub and Huillet</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cesar and Rosalie. See César et Rosalie, 1972</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>César et Rosalie, 1972</td>
<td>Sautet</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>C’est la vie. See Baule-les-Pins, 1990</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>C’est le printemps, 1916 (Feuillade)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>C’est Papa qui prend la purge, 1906 (Feuillade)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cesta do Prahy Vincence Mošteka a Simona Pešla z Vlčnova l.p., 1969</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>C’Est Papa qui prend la purge, 1906 (Feuillade)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charade, 1963 (Kapoor)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charles, mort ou vif, 1969</td>
<td>(Tanner)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charade, 1963 (Kapoor)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charade</td>
<td>(Donen)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charandas Chor, 1975</td>
<td>Benegal</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charandas the Thief. See Charandas Chor, 1975</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charcuterie mécanique, 1895 (Lumiére)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charge of the Light Brigade, 1936 (Curzita)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charge of the Light Brigade, 1968 (Richardson)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charlot of Fire, 1981 (Anderson)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charlot du feuilletateur, 1905 (Guy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charlotan. See A kuruzslo, 1917</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charlies, Dead or Alive. See Charles, mort ou vif, 1969</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charles et Lucie, 1979 (Kaplan)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charlies, mort ou vif, 1969</td>
<td>(Tanner)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charleston Chain Gang, 1902 (Porter)</td>
<td>Charleston-Parade. See Sur un air de Charleston, 1927</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charley My Boy, 1926 (McCray)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charley Varrick, 1973 (Siegel)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charlie and the Sausages. See Mabel’s Busy Day, 1914</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charlie and the Umbrella. See Between Showers, 1914</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charlie at the Races. See Gentlemen of Nerve, 1914</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charlie at the Studio. See A Film Johnnie, 1914</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charlie Bubbles, 1967 (Fears)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charlie Chaplin’s Burlesque on Carmen. See Carmen, 1916</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charlie on the Ocean. See Shanghaied, 1915</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charlie on the Speer. See In the Park, 1915</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charlie the bulbsiar. See Police!, 1916</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charlie the Hobo. See Tramp, 1915</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charlie the Sailor. See Shanghaied, 1915</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charlie’s Day Out. See By the Sea, 1915</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charlie’s Recreation. See Tango Tangles, 1914</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charlotte. See Jeune Fille assassinée, 1974</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charlotte and Her Steak. See Présentation ou Charlotte et son steak, 1951</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charlotte et son Jules, 1959 (Cocteau; Godard)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Film Title</td>
<td>Director(s)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>------------------------------------------------</td>
<td>-------------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charlote et Véronique ou Tous les garçons s’appellent Patrick</td>
<td>Godard</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charmant FrouFrou</td>
<td>Guy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charmants garçons, 1957 (de Broca)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charme discret de la bourgeoisie</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charmant FrouFrou</td>
<td>de Broca</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charmantes de l’existence, 1949 (Grémillon)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charmides, 1947 (Markopoulos)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charming Sinners, 1930 (Arzner)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Children</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Children. See Enfants, 1985</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charmettes fantôme, 1939 (Duvivier; Epstein)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charmant FrouFrou</td>
<td>Guy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charmant FrouFrou</td>
<td>Guy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chartres, 1923 (Grémillon)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chartres Series, 1994 (Brakhage)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charulata, 1964 (Ray)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chase, 1913 (Dwan)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chase, 1966 (Penn)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chase. See Caza, 1966</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chasing Amy, 1997 (Smith)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chasing Butterflies. See Chasse aux papillons, 1992</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chasse à l’hippopotame, 1950 (Rouch)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chasse au cambrioleur, 1903/04 (Guy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chasse au lion à l’arc, 1965 (Rouch)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chasse aux papillons, 1992 (Ioselian)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chasseurs de lions, 1913 (Feuillade)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chat et la souris, 1975 (Lelouch)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chateau de la peur, 1912 (Feuillade)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chateau de rêve, 1933 (Clouzot)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chateau de verre, 1950 (Clément)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Château en Suede, 1963 (Vadin)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Châteaux de France, 1948 (Resnais)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chatelaine du Liban, 1933 (Epstein)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charming Town</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ch'iao Ju Ts'ai Tieh Fei Fei Fei, 1981</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charly's Debut</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chief's Son Is Dead.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chegogla Lena</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chekist, 1991 (Rogozhkin)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chelovek s kinoapparatom, 1929 (Vertov)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chelsea Girls, 1966 (Morrissey; Warhol)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chemin de Rio. See Cargaison blanche, 1937</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chemin du paradis, 1956 (Forst)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chemines de l’Exil ou Les Dernières Années de Jean-Jacques Rousseau, 1978 (Gorettia)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chemist, 1936 (Keaton)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chéne et le roseau, 1994 (Tchélin)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cherchez la femme, 1921 (Curtiz)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chere Louise, 1972 (de Broca)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chernaya Ilyubov, 1917 (Kuleshov)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cherry, Harry, and Raquel!, 1969 (Meyer)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chess Fever. See Shakhmatnaya goryachka, 1925</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chess Players. See Shatranj Ke Khiladi, 1977</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chesty: A Tribute to a Legend, 1970 (Ford)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cheval d’Orgueil, 1980 (Chabrol)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cheyenne, 1947 (Walsh)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cheyenne Autumn, 1964 (Ford)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cheyenne Warrior, 1994 (Corman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cheyenne’s Pal, 1917 (Ford)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chez la concierge, 1907 (Feuillade)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chez le maginéteur, 1897/98 (Guy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chez le Maréchal-Ferrant, 1899/1900 (Guy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chez le photographe, 1900 (Guy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chi l’ha vistro?, 1942 (Fellini)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chi to rei, 1923 (Mizoguchi)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chiameremo Andrea, 1972 (de Sica)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chicago, Chicago. See Gaily, Gaily, 1969</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chi, 1928 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chicken. See Poulet, 1963</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chicken Chaser, 1914 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chicken-hearted Jim, 1916 (Ford)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chicken Run, 2000 (Spielberg)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chief’s Daughter, 1911 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chief’s Predicament, 1913 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Child. See Barnet, 1912</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Child. See Barnets Magt, 1914</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Child. See Dziecko, 1973</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Child and the Killer, 1959 (Roeg)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Child Is Born, 1940 (Bacon; Rossen)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Child Is Waiting, 1962 (Cassavetes)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Child Is Waiting, 1963 (Kramer)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Child of Manhattan, 1933 (Sturges)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Child of Resistance, 1972 (Gerima)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Child of the Big City. See Ditya Bol’shogo Goroda, 1914</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Child of the Ghetto, 1910 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Child of the Streets, 1967 (Benegal)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Child Thou Gavest Me, 1920 (Stahl)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Child Went Forth, 1941 (Losey)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Child’s Faith, 1910 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Child’s First Adventure. See Chiisana boken ryoko, 1964</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Child’s Garden and the Serious Sea, 1991 (Brakhage)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Child’s Impulse, 1910 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Child’s Love. See Barnet, 1909</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Child’s Play, 1972 (Lumet)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Child’s Remorse, 1912 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Child’s Sacrifice, 1910 (Guy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Child’s Strategem, 1910 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Childhood. See A Great Day for Bonzo, 1974</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Childhood of Gorky. See Detstvo Gorkovo, 1938</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Childhood of Maxim Gorki. See Detstvo Gorkovo, 1938</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Children. See Enfants, 1985</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Children at School, 1937 (Grierson)
Children, Books. See Gyermekek, könyvek, 1962
Children Hand in Hand. See Te o tsanugu kora, 1962
Children in the Classroom. See Kyoshitsu no kodomo-tachi, 1954
Children of a Desired Sex, 1987 (Nair)
Children of Angyalfold. See Angyalföldi fiatalok, 1955
Children of Bullerby Village. 1986 (Hallstrom)
Children of Change, 1930 (Lauder and Gilliat)
Children of Darkness. See Kinder der Finsternis, 1922
Children of Divorce, 1927 (von Sternberg)
Children of Paradise. See Enfants du paradis, 1945
Children of the Good Earth.
Children of Lumière.
Children of the Age.
Children of the Soviet Arctic.
Children of the Century.
Children of the Good Earth. See Ta Ti Erh Nü, 1964
Children of the Soviet Arctic. See Romantiki, 1941
Children of the Street. See Gatans barn, 1914
Children of This Country. See Bu vatanin cocuklari, 1958
Children Throw Toy Assegais, 1974 (Marshall)
Children Upstairs, 1955 (Anderson)
Children Were Watching, 1961 (Leacock)
Children Who Draw.
Children Who Draw. See Eo kaku kodomo-tachi, 1955
Children’s Corner, 1939 (L’herbier)
Children’s Friend, 1909 (Griffith)
Children’s Hour, 1962 (Ashby, Wyler)
Children’s Magical Death, 1974 (Asch)
Chile, la memoria obstinada, 1997 (Guzmán)
Chile, the Obstinate Memory. See Chile, la memoria obstinada, 1997
Chiller, 1985 (Craven)
Chilly Green Lake.
Chilly Scenes of Winter, 1979 (Silver)
Chillies, 1965 (Bartel)
Chirurgie fin de siècle, 1900 (Guy)
Chiriakhana, 1967 (Ray)
Chinoise ou Plutôt à la chinoise, 1967 (Goddard; Miller)
Chirurgie fin de siècle, 1900 (Guy)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Director</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Chumps</td>
<td>1929</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chung Kuo</td>
<td>1972</td>
<td>Antonioni</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chung Lieh T’u</td>
<td>1974</td>
<td>(King)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chung Shén Ta Shih</td>
<td>1981</td>
<td>(King)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chunmiao</td>
<td>1975</td>
<td>(Xie Jin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Church of the Dead Girls</td>
<td>2001</td>
<td>(Schumacher)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Churning</td>
<td>1976</td>
<td>See Manthan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chushingura</td>
<td>1932</td>
<td>(Kinugasa)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chute de la maison Usher</td>
<td>1928</td>
<td>(Buñuel; Epstein)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chute de la maison Usher, 1981</td>
<td>1981</td>
<td>(Astruc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chute d’un corps</td>
<td>1973</td>
<td>(Buñuel)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chuvas verao</td>
<td>1977</td>
<td>(Diegues)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chuzoi bereg</td>
<td>1930</td>
<td>(Donskoi)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chyortovo koleso</td>
<td>1926</td>
<td>(Gerasimov; Kozintsev)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chytilova versus Forman</td>
<td>1981</td>
<td>(Chytilová)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ciao, Professore!</td>
<td></td>
<td>See Io speriamo che me la cavo, 1994</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cible humaine</td>
<td>1904</td>
<td>(Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ciboulette</td>
<td>1933</td>
<td>(Autant-Lara)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cicala</td>
<td>1980</td>
<td>(Lattuada)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ciclon</td>
<td>1963</td>
<td>(Alvarez)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cid</td>
<td>1961</td>
<td>(Mann)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cider House Rules</td>
<td>1999</td>
<td>(Hallstrom)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ciel est à vous</td>
<td>1944</td>
<td>(Grémillon)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ciel, la terre</td>
<td>1965</td>
<td>(Anderson; Ivens)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cien, 1956</td>
<td>1956</td>
<td>(Kawalerowicz)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cien Metros con Charlot</td>
<td>1967</td>
<td>(Guzmán)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cifte tabancali kabadayi</td>
<td>1969</td>
<td>(Güney)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cift yürükli</td>
<td>1970</td>
<td>(Güney)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cigale et la fourmi</td>
<td>1909</td>
<td>(Feuillade)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cigalon</td>
<td>1935</td>
<td>(Pagnol)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cigányok</td>
<td>1962</td>
<td>(Gaál)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cigaretipigen</td>
<td>1915</td>
<td>(Holger-Madsen)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cigarette</td>
<td>1919</td>
<td>(Dulac)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cigarette Maker</td>
<td></td>
<td>See Cigaretipigen, 1915</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cigarette, That’s All</td>
<td>1915</td>
<td>(Weber)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ciklámen</td>
<td>1916</td>
<td>(Korda)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cimarron</td>
<td>1961</td>
<td>(Mann)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cimarron Kid</td>
<td>1951</td>
<td>(Boetticher)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cimégo</td>
<td></td>
<td>See Massenza, 1955</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cimitière dans la falaise</td>
<td>1951</td>
<td>(Rouch)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cina</td>
<td></td>
<td>See Chung Kuo, 1972</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cina è vicina</td>
<td>1967</td>
<td>(Belloccchio)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cincinnati Kid</td>
<td>1965</td>
<td>(Ashby; Jesson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cinco vêzes Favela</td>
<td>1962</td>
<td>(Diegues)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cinderella Jones</td>
<td>1946</td>
<td>(Berkeley)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cinderella</td>
<td>1960</td>
<td>(Lewis; Tashlin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cinderers of Love</td>
<td>1916</td>
<td>(Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ciné-Concert Dedicated to the Twenty-fifth Anniversary of the Red Army</td>
<td></td>
<td>See Film-Concert Dedicated to the Twenty-fifth Anniversary of the Red Army, 1943</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ciné-Portrait de Margaret Head</td>
<td>1977</td>
<td>(Rouch)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cinema according to Bertolucci</td>
<td></td>
<td>See Bertolucci secondo il cinema, 1975</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cinéma au service de l’histoire</td>
<td>1927</td>
<td>(Dulac)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cinema de lâgrimas</td>
<td>1995</td>
<td>(Pereira Dos Santos)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cinema de papa</td>
<td>1970</td>
<td>(Berri; de Broca)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cinema du diable</td>
<td>1967</td>
<td>(L’herbier)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cinema Europe: The Other Hollywood</td>
<td>1995</td>
<td>(Branagh)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cinema of Vengeance</td>
<td>1994</td>
<td>(Woo)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cinema-Truth: See Kino-Pravda</td>
<td>1922-23</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cinéma Vérité: Defining the Moment</td>
<td>1999</td>
<td>(Leacock)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cinétracts</td>
<td>1968</td>
<td>(Godard)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cinq Gentlemen maudits</td>
<td>1931</td>
<td>(Duvivier)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cinq jours d’une vie</td>
<td>1972</td>
<td>(Cissé)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cinque bambole per la luna d’agosto</td>
<td>1970</td>
<td>(Bava)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ciociara</td>
<td>1960</td>
<td>(de Sica)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Circle, 1925</td>
<td>1925</td>
<td>(Borzage)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Circle, 1985</td>
<td>1985</td>
<td>(Fridriksson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Circle of Danger</td>
<td>1951</td>
<td>(Tournier)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Circle of Deceit</td>
<td>1981</td>
<td>(Schlondorff)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Circle of Love</td>
<td></td>
<td>See Ronde, 1964</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Circle of Two</td>
<td>1980</td>
<td>(Dassín)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Circo</td>
<td>1948-49</td>
<td>(García Berlanga)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Circo mas pequeño</td>
<td>1963</td>
<td>(Ivens)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Circoncision</td>
<td>1949</td>
<td>(Rouch)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Circostanza</td>
<td>1974</td>
<td>(Olmi)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Circular Fence</td>
<td>1911</td>
<td>(Dwan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Circular Panorama of the Electric Tower</td>
<td>1901</td>
<td>(Porter)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Circular Fence</td>
<td></td>
<td>See Circular Fence, 1911</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Circumstantial Evidences</td>
<td>1919</td>
<td>(Michaëux)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Circus, 1927</td>
<td>1927</td>
<td>(Chaplin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Circus and the Boy</td>
<td>1914</td>
<td>(Ingram)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Circus Arrives</td>
<td></td>
<td>See Danserindens Haevn, 1915</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Circus Cowboy</td>
<td>1924</td>
<td>(Wellman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Circus Man</td>
<td>1914</td>
<td>(de Mille)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Circus of Sin</td>
<td></td>
<td>See Salto Mortale, 1931</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Circus Today</td>
<td>1926</td>
<td>(Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cirkin kiral</td>
<td>1966</td>
<td>(Güney)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cirkin kiral affetmez</td>
<td>1967</td>
<td>(Güney)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cirkin ve cesur</td>
<td>1971</td>
<td>(Güney)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cirque de la mort</td>
<td>1918</td>
<td>(Florey)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cisťav pekaľ a Pekaľuš pekaľ</td>
<td>1951</td>
<td>(Frič)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ciske—Ein Kind braucht Liebe</td>
<td>1955</td>
<td>(Staudte)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cita de amor</td>
<td>1936</td>
<td>(Fernández)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Citadel</td>
<td>1938</td>
<td>(Vidor)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Citadel of Silence</td>
<td></td>
<td>See Citadel del silence, 1937</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Citadel del silence</td>
<td>1937</td>
<td>(L’herbier)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Citizen Kane</td>
<td>1941</td>
<td>(Welles; Wise)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Citizen Karel Havlíček</td>
<td>1966</td>
<td>(Havlíček)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Citizen’s Band</td>
<td>1977</td>
<td>(Demme)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Città delle donne</td>
<td>1980</td>
<td>(Fellini)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Città di notte</td>
<td>1956</td>
<td>(Bava)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Città dolente</td>
<td>1948</td>
<td>(Fellini)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Città si difende</td>
<td>1951</td>
<td>(Fellini; Germi)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Citta violenta</td>
<td>1970</td>
<td>(Wertmuller)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>City</td>
<td>1939</td>
<td>(Cavalcanti; Lorentz)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>City at Night</td>
<td></td>
<td>See Citta di notte, 1956</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>City beneath the Sea</td>
<td>1953</td>
<td>(Boetticher)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>City Called Copenhagen</td>
<td></td>
<td>See En by ved navn Köbenhaven, 1960</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>City for Conquest</td>
<td>1940</td>
<td>(Kazan; Siegel)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>City Girl</td>
<td>1984</td>
<td>(Coolidge)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>City Hall</td>
<td>1959</td>
<td>(Schraer)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>City Hall to Harlem</td>
<td></td>
<td>See Fifteen Seconds via the Subway Route, 1904 (Porter)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>City Has Your Face</td>
<td></td>
<td>See Městomá svou tvář, 1958</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>City Heat</td>
<td>1984</td>
<td>(Eastwood)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>City Life</td>
<td>1990</td>
<td>(Kieślofski)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>City Lights</td>
<td>1931</td>
<td>(Chaplin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>City Map</td>
<td></td>
<td>See Várostérkép, 1977</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>City of Contrasts</td>
<td></td>
<td>See Contras City, 1969</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>City of Dark</td>
<td>1997</td>
<td>(Lefebvre)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>City of Desire</td>
<td></td>
<td>See Joen no chimata, 1923</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>City of Hope</td>
<td>1991</td>
<td>(Sajes)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>City of Joy</td>
<td>1992</td>
<td>(Joffé)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>City of Pirates</td>
<td></td>
<td>See Ville des pirates, 1983</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>City of Sadness</td>
<td></td>
<td>See Pei Ch’ing Ch’eng Shih, 1989</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>City of Women</td>
<td></td>
<td>See Città delle donne, 1980</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>City Prepares</td>
<td></td>
<td>See First Days, 1939</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>City Speaks</td>
<td>1946</td>
<td>(Rotha)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>City Streaming</td>
<td>1990</td>
<td>(Brakhage)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
City Streets, 1931 (Mamoulian)
City Tramp. See Stadtstreicher, 1965
City under the Sea. See War Gods of the Deep, 1965
Civil Action, 1998 (Pollack)
Civil Rights: The Struggle Continues, 1989 (Kopple)
Civilization and Its Discontents, 1964 (Morrissey)
Claim Jumpers, 1911 (Daven)
Clair de femme, 1979 (Costa-Gavras)
Clair de lune sous Richelieu, 1911 (Gance)
Clair de femme, 1979 (Costa-Gavras)
Client sérieux, 1932 (Autant-Lara)
Client, 1994 (Schumacher)
Clever Girl Takes Care of Herself.
Clever Dummy, 1917 (Sennett)
Cles du paradis, 1991 (de Broca)
Clerks, 1994 (Smith)
Cleopatra, 1963 (Mankiewicz)
Clancy, 1974 (Brahkage)
Clancy at the Bat, 1929 (Sennett)
Clara’s Heart, 1943 (Goulding)
Cloak and Dagger, 1946 (Lang)
Closed Doors. See S vyloučením veřejnosti, 1933
Closed Road, 1916 (Tourner)
Closely Watched Trains. See Ostré sledované vlaky, 1966
Closed, 1965 (Warhol)
Closed Land, 1991 (Howard)
Clothes Make the Pirate, 1925 (Tourner)
Cloud in the Sky, 1940 (Ulmmer)
Clouds, See Nube, 1998
Clouds at Sunset. See Akanejumou, 1967
Clouds at Twilight. See Yuyake-gumo, 1956
Clouds Will Roll Away. See Neni stále zamrženo, 1950
Clown and Policeman, 1900 (Hepworth)
Clown and the Alchemist, 1900 (Porter)
Clown en sac, 1904 (Guy)
Clowns, 1902 (Guy)
Clowns. See I clowns, 1970
Club, 1981 (Beresford)
Club de femmes, 1936 (Delannoy)
Club Extinction. See Docteur M, 1990
Club Havana, 1945 (Ulmmer)
Club of the Big Deed. See S.V.D., 1927
Club Vampire, 1997 (Corman)
Clubman and the Tramp, 1908 (Griffith)
Clue, 1985 (Landis)
Clum perdesi, 1960 (Güney)
Clunked on the Corner. 1929 (Sennett)
Cluny Brown, 1946 (Lubitsch)
Coal Miner’s Daughter, 1980 (Apted)
Coatlface, 1935 (Cavalcaniti; Grierion)
Coals of Fire, 1918 (Nihlo)
Coast of Folly, 1925 (Daven)
Coat’s Tale, 1914 (Sennett)
Cobbler Stay at Your Bench. See Skomakare bliv vid din läst, 1915
Cobra Verde, 1987 (Herzog)
Cobra Woman, 1944 (Siodmak)
Cobweb, 1916 (Hepworth)
Cobweb, 1955 (Minnelli)
Coca-Cola Kid, 1985 (Makavejev)
Cocaine Wars, 1986 (Corman)
Cocher de fiacre endormi, 1897/98 (Guy)
Cochez de fiacre endormi, 1897/98 (Guy)
Cochon, 1970 (Eustache)
Cock Crows Twice. See Nwati wa futatabi naku, 1954
Cock-eyed World, 1929 (Walsh)
Cockeyed Cavaliers, 1934 (Sandrich)
Cockfighter, 1974 (Corman)
Cocktail, 1937 (Henning-Jensen)
Cocktail Hostesses, 1972 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Cocktail Molotov, 1980 (Kurys)
Cocktails, 1928 (Lauder and Gilliat)
Cocoaanuts, 1929 (Florey)
Cocoon, 1985 (Howard)
Cocorico, Monsieur Poulet, 1974 (Rouch)
Cocotiers, 1963 (Rouch)
Coca-Cola Kid, 1985 (Makavejev)
Coca-Cola Kid, 1985 (Makavejev)
Cocks of the Sea. See S.V.D., 1927
Cocoon, 1985 (Howard)
Cocorico, Monsieur Poulet, 1974 (Rouch)
Cocotiers, 1963 (Rouch)
C.O.D. 1932 (Powell and Pressburger)
Code Name: Ruby. See Jmeno kodu: Rubin, 1997
Code Name: Merry. See Crazies, 1973
Code of Honor, 1916 (Borzage)
Code of the Sea, 1924 (Fleming)
Code Seven, Victim Five. See Victim Five, 1964
Coeur de Gueux, 1936 (Epstein)
Coeur de Gueux, 1936 (Epstein)
Coeur en Hiver, 1992 (Sautet)
Coeur fidèle, 1923 (Epstein)
Coeurs farouches, 1924 (Duvivier)
Coffee and Cigarettes, 1987 (Jarmusch)
Coffee and Cigarettes II (Memphis Version), 1989 (Jarmusch)
Coffee and Cigarettes III (Somewhere in California), 1993 (Jarmusch)
Coffee House. See Kaffeehaus, 1971
Coffee and Cigarettes, 1987 (Jarmusch)
Coffee and Cigarettes II (Memphis Version), 1989 (Jarmusch)
Coffee and Cigarettes III (Somewhere in California), 1993 (Jarmusch)
Coffee House. See Kaffeehaus, 1971
Coffret de Tolède, 1914 (Feuillade)
Cohen at Coney Island. See Cohen Collects a Debt, 1912
Cohen Collects a Debt, 1912 (Sennett)
Cohen Saves the Flag, 1913 (Sennett)
Cohen’s Advertising Scheme, 1904 (Porter)
Cohen’s Outing, 1913 (Sennett)
Cohens and the Kellys, 1927 (Florey)
Cohens and the Kellys in Trouble, 1933 (Stevens)
Cold Comfort Farm, 1996 (Schlesinger)
Cold Fever. See A kodom Klaka, 1994
Cold Heaven, 1992 (Roeg)
Cold Showers. See Kholodnye Dushi, 1914
Cold Turkey, 1925 (Sennett)
Cold Heaven, 1992 (Roeg)
Cold War, 1998 (Branagh)
Collector, 1965 (Wyler)
Collection, 1976 (Branagh)
Collectionneuse, 1967 (Rohmer)
Collector, 1965 (Wyler)
College, 1927 (Keaton)
College Is a Nice Place.
College Coach, 1933 (Wellman)
College, 1927 (Keaton)
College Vamp, 1931 (Sennett)
College Rhythm, 1934 (Dmytryk)
College Kiddo, 1927 (Sennett)
College, 1927 (Keaton)
College Coach, 1933 (Wellman)
College Is a Nice Place. See Daigaku yoi toko, 1936
College Kiddo, 1927 (Sennett)
College Rhythm, 1934 (Dmytryk)
College Swing, 1938 (Walsh)
College swing, 1946 (Duuvier)
College Vamp, 1931 (Sennett)
Colier de la reine, 1909 (Feuillade)
Collier de perles, 1915 (Feuillade)
Collier de la reine, 1909 (Feuillade)
Collier de perles, 1915 (Feuillade)
Colloque de chiens, 1977 (Ruiz)
Coloane penal, 1971 (Ruiz)
Colonia penal, 1971 (Ruiz)
Colonia penal, 1971 (Ruiz)
Colonia de perlas, 1971 (Bayo)
Color Purple, 1986 (Spielberg)
Color Fields, 1977 (Vanderbeek)
Colors of China.
Colorful China. See Színfoltok Kinaból, 1957
Colors Are Dreaming. See Boje sanjaju, 1958
Colors of China. See Színfoltok Kinaból, 1957
Colors of China. See Színfoltok Kinaból, 1957
Colors of Vásárhely.
Colosso di Rodi, 1961 (Leone)
Colossus of RHodes. See Colosso di Rodi, 1961
Colours. See Ranrha, 1976
Colpa e la pena, Abbasso lo zio, 1958 (Belloccchio)
Colpo di pistola, 1941 (Castellani)
Comanche Station, 1960 (Boetticher)
Comancho, 1962 (Curtiz)
Comanches, 1982 (Curtiz)
Comandos comunales, 1972 (Guzmán)
Comata, la Sioux, 1909 (Griffith)
Combat d’amour en songe, 2000 (Ruiz)
Come and Get It, 1936 (Hawks; Wyler)
Come Back, 1983 (Vadim)
Come Back, Little Shicksa, 1949 (Lewis)
Come Back to the Five and Dime, Jimmy Dean, Jimmy Dean, 1982
$j'habite chez une copine, 1981$
Come Have Coffee with Us. See Venga a prendere il caffé... da noi, 1970
Come on, George!, 1939 (Dearden)
Come Rain or Shine. See Ob’s stürmt oder schneit, 1976
Come See the Paradise, 1990 (Parker)
Come September, 1961 (Mulligan)
Come to My Place, I’m Living at My Girlfriend’s. See Viens chez moi, j’habite chez une copine, 1981
Come Drink with Me. See Ta Tsui Hsia, 1965
Come and Get It, 1936 (Hawks; Wyler)
Come Back, Little Shicksa, 1949 (Lewis)
Come Back to the Five and Dime, Jimmy Dean, Jimmy Dean, 1982
(j'habite chez une copine, 1981
Complementos, 1977 (Almodóvar)
Complex Sessions, 1994 (Denne)
Compliments of Mr. Flow. See Mister Flow, 1936
Complot, 1973 (Holland)
Complot. See To Kill a Priest, 1988
Compot petrolero, 1981 (Leduc)
Compulsion, 1959 (Welles)
Compulsive Husband, 1930 (Launder and Gilliat)
Computer Generation, 1973 (Vanderbeek)
Compulsory Husband, 1930 (Launder and Gilliat)
Compulsion, 1959 (Welles)
Complot petrolero, 1981 (Leduc)
Complot. See Doka o, 1926
Coppie (Les Couples), 1970 (de Sica)
Cops, 1922 (Keaton)
Comrades! Don’t Put up with It.
Comrades, 1911 (Sennett)
Comrade X, 1940 (Vidor)
Comradeship. See Kameradschaft, 1931
Comte de Monte Cristo, 1961 (Autant-Lara)
Concrete Jungle.
Condemned Man Escapes.
Condemned.
Condamné à mort s’est échappé
Concealing a Burglar, 1908 (Griffith)
Concrete Jungle.
Confrontation.
Confucian Confusion, 1994 (Yang)
Conflict, 1945 (Siodmak)
Conflicts of Life.
Confession.
Confession, 1918 (Franklin)
Confession, 1986 (Brakhage)
Confession. See Aven, 1970
Confessions.
Confessions of a Suburban Girl, 1992 (Seidelman)
Confessions of Boston Blackie, 1941
Confessions of a Queen, 1925 (Sjöström)
Confessions of a Queen, 1925 (Sjöström)
Confessions of a Superstar, 1973 (Hepworth)
Confessions of a Superstar, 1973 (Hepworth)
Confessions of Boston Blackie, 1941
Confessions of a Queen, 1925 (Sjöström)
Confessions of Amans, 1976 (Nava)
Confessions of Boston Blackie, 1941 (Dmytryk)
Confessions of Winifred Wagner. See Winifred Wagner und die Geschicthe des Hauses Wahnfried von 1914-1975, 1975
Confidence, 1909 (Griffith)
Confidence.
Confined, 1994 (Sen)
Confined or Deny, 1941 (Fuller; Lang)
Conflict. See Enjo, 1958
Conflict, 1945 (Siodmak)
Conflicts of Life. See Livets konflikter, 1913
Conformist. See Conformista, 1970
Conformista, 1970 (Bertolucci)
Confort et l’indifférence, 1982 (Arcand)
Confrontation. See Fényes szélek, 1969
Confucian Confusion, 1994 (Yang)
Confusión cotidiana, 1950 (Gutiérrez Alea)
Conquierta, 1964 (Scola)
Conquierta, 1964 (Scola)
Congres der Vakvereeinigingen. See N.V.V. Congres, 1929/30
Conjugal Cabin. See Common Law Cabin, 1967
Conjuror and the Boer, 1900 (Hepworth)
Connection, 1961 (Clarke)
Conquering Cross, 1941 (Eisenstein)
Conquering Power, 1921 (Ingram)
Conquering the Woman, 1922 (Vidor)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
<th>Year</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Cops, 1960</td>
<td>Keaton</td>
<td>1960</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cops, 1998</td>
<td>Rogozhkin</td>
<td>1998</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cops and Robbers. See Guardie e ladri, 1951</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cops and Watches. See Twenty Minutes of Love, 1914</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Coq au Vin. See Poulet au vinaigre, 1984</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Coquille et le clergymen, 1927 (Dulac)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1927</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cor, 1931 (Epstein)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1931</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Coraje del pueblo, 1971 (Sanjinés)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1971</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cord of Life, 1909 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1909</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Corbeau, 1943 (Clouzot)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1943</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Corazón bandolero, 1934 (Fernández)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1934</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Coralie et Cie, 1933 (Cavalcanti)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1933</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Coraje del pueblo, 1971 (Sanjinés)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1971</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cor, 1931 (Epstein)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1931</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Corner in Hats, 1914 (Browning)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1914</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Corner in Wheat, 1909 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1909</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Corde de ferro, 1940 (Castellani)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1940</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Coronation of King Edward VII, 1901 (Hepworth)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1901</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Coralie et Cie, 1933 (Cavalcanti)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1933</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Courbet au Vinaigre, 1984</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Coup de foudre, 1983 (Kurys)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1983</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Couleur de feu, 1957 (Storck)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1957</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cousin Bobby, 1991 (Dennett)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1991</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cousin Angelica. See Prima Angélica, 1974</td>
<td></td>
<td>1974</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cousin, 1959 (Chabrol; de Broca)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1959</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cousin, 1989 (Schumacher)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1989</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Court Martial of Billy Mitchell, 1955 (Preminger)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1955</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Court-Martialled, 1951 (Hepworth)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1951</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Court Patron, 1906 (Feuillade)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1906</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Court of Millions, 1912 (Feuillade)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1912</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Court des belles-mères, 1907 (Feuillade)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1907</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Courting Trouble, 1932 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1932</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Court Martial of Billy Mitchell, 1955 (Preminger)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1955</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Court-Martialled, 1951 (Hepworth)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1951</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Courtroom, 1967 (Warhol)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1967</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Counsellor at Law, 1933 (Wyler)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1933</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Courtesans of Bombay, 1982 (Ivory)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1982</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Court of Honor, 1911 (Keaton)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1911</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Court of Justice, 1937 (Howard; Minnelli)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1937</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Court of Miracles, 1902 (Guy)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1902</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Count von Reichenbach, 1939 (Brecht)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1939</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Couleur de feu, 1957 (Storck)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1957</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Count, 1916 (Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1916</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CountDownLatch, 1955 (McCarthy)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1955</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Count Me Out. See Stikkfri, 1997</td>
<td></td>
<td>1997</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Count of Monte Cristo, 1913 (Porter)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1913</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Count of Monte Cristo, 1913 (Porter)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1913</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Count of Monte Cristo, 1913 (Porter)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1913</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Count of Reichenbach, 1939 (Brecht)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1939</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Counting Out, See Knock Out, 1914</td>
<td></td>
<td>1914</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Counter-Attack, 1945 (Korda)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1945</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Couverteur, 1914 (Hepworth)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1914</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Covered Wagon, 1923 (Arzner)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1923</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cow, 1993 (Kachytya)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1993</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Coward, 1912 (Dwan)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1912</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Coward. See Zbabić, 1962</td>
<td></td>
<td>1962</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Coward and the Saint. See Kapurush-o-Mahapurush, 1965</td>
<td></td>
<td>1965</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cowboy, 1958 (Daves)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1958</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cowboy and the Artist, 1911 (Dwan)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1911</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cowboy and the Lady, 1938 (McCarey)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1938</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cowboy and the Outlaw, 1911 (Dwan)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1911</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cowboy from Brooklyn, 1938 (Bacon)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1938</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Coffee Shop, 1960 (Knieval)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1960</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CountVonReichenbach, 1939 (Brecht)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1939</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Country Chair, 1914 (Dwan)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1914</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Country Comes to Town, 1931 (Grierson)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1931</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Country Cupid, 1911 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1911</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Country Doctor, 1909 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1909</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Country Doctor. See Selskiy vrach, 1951</td>
<td></td>
<td>1951</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Country Lovers, 1911 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1911</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Country Suicide, 1912 (Dwan)</td>
<td></td>
<td>1912</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Cowboy’s Ruse and Law and Order on Bar L Ranch, 1911 (Dwan)
Cowcatcher’s Daughter, 1931 (Sennett)
Cow’s Husband, 1928 (Sandrich)
Cowslips, 1931 (Sandrich)
Coyote Ugly, 2000 (Smith)
Crack Gloss Eulogy, 1992 (Brakhage)
Crack in the Mirror, 1960 (Welles)
Crackers, 1984 (Malle)
Cracking Up, 1982 (Lewis)
Crime.
Crime and Punishment.
Crime and Punishment, 1935 (von Sternberg)
Crime in a Night Club.
Crime d'Ovide Plouffe, 1984 (Arcand)
Crime of the Heart, 1986 (Beresford)
Crimewave, 1985 (Raimi)
Criminal, 1960 (Losey)
Criminal Affairs, 1997 (Corman)
Criminal Code, 1931 (Hawks)
Criminal Court, 1946 (Wise)
Criminal Hypnotist, 1908 (Griffith)
Criminal Justice, 1990 (Apted)
Criminal Life of Archibaldo de la Cruz. See Ensayo de un crimen, 1955
Criminals, 1913 (Dwan)
Crimson Curtain. See Rideau cramoisi, 1915
Crimson Kimono, 1959 (Fuller)
Crimson Pirate, 1952 (Siodmak)
Crimson Romance, 1934 (von Stroheim)
Crimson Tide, 1995 (Cronenberg)
Crippe Girl. See Kaerligheds Laengsel, 1915
Crisis est finie, 1934 (Siodmak)
Crisis, 1992 (Serreau)
Crisis, 1963 (Leacock)
Crisis, 1954 (Xie Jin)
Crisis, 1963 (Leacock)
Crisis. See Crise, 1992
Crisis en el Caribe, 1962 (Alvarez)
Crisis Cross, 1949 (Siodmak)
Cristo si è fermato a Eboli, 1979 (Rosi)
Crime d'Ovide Plouffe, 1984
Cristoforo Colombo, 1983 (Lattuada)
Critic, 1963 (Brooks)
Critical Care, 1997 (Brooks; Lumet)
Critical Condition, 1986 (Apted)
Crna macka, beli macor, 1998 (Kusturica)
Crocogile, 2000 (Hooper)
Crocodyile Conspiracy, 1985 (Burnett)
Croisière de L'Atalante, 1926 (Grémillon)
Cronaca di un amore, 1950 (Antonioni)
Cronaca di una morte annunciata, 1988 (Rosi)
Cronica de una Señora, 1971 (Bemberg)
Crook. See Voyou, 1970
Crook Baster, 1925 (Wyler)
Crooked Mirror. See Křivé zrcadlo, 1956
Crooked Road, 1911 (Griffith)
Crooked to the End, 1915 (Sennett)
Crooked Way, 1949 (Florey)
Croomlyn, 1994 (Lee)
Crooner, 1932 (Bacon)
Cross Creek, 1983 (Ritt)
Cross My Heart (Bernstein), 1987 (Kasdan)
Cross of Iron, 1977 (Peckinpah)
Crossed Love and Swords, 1915 (Sennett)
Crossfire, 1947 (Dmytryk)
Crossing Delancey, 1988 (Silver)
Crossroad Avenger: The Adventures of the Tucson Kid, 1953 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Crowd, 1928 (Vidor)
Crowd Roars, 1932 (Hawks)
Crowd Roars, 1938 (Fleming)
Crowned Streetcar. See Manin densha, 1957
Crowned versus Stevens, 1936 (Powell and Pressburger)
Cruified Lovers. See Chikamatsu monogatari, 1954
Cruel, Cruel Love, 1914 (Chaplin; Sennett)
Cruel Romance. See Jestoki romans, 1984
Cruel Story of the Samurai's Way. See Bushido zankoku monogatari, 1963
Cruel Story of Youth. See Seishun zankoku monogatari, 1960
Cruising, 1980 (Friedkin)
Cruzada ABC, 1966 (Pereira Dos Santos)
Cruz del Sur, 1992 (Guzmán)
Cruztiao, 1924 (Fernández)
Cruzdada ABC, 1966 (Pereira Dos Santos)
Cry. See Krik, 1963
Cry Baby, 1958 (Corman)
Cry Baby, 1990 (Waters)
Cry for Help, 1912 (Griffith)
Cry Freedom, 1988 (Attenborough)
Cry from the Heart. See Cri du coeur, 1994
Cry from the Wilderness, 1909 (Porter)
Cry in the Dark, 1988 (Schepisi)
Cry in the Wild, 1990 (Corman)
Cry of the City, 1948 (Siodmak)
Cry of the Owl. See Cri du habou, 1987
Cry, the Beloved Country, 1951 (Korda)
Crying Game, 1992 (Jordan)
Cry for Freedom, 1911 (Sennett)
Cry That Failed, 1913 (Sennett)
Cured, 1911 (Sennett)
Cured in the Excitement, 1927 (Sennett)
Curée, 1966 (Vadim)
Curing Ceremony, 1969 (Marshall)
Curiosity, 1911 (Sennett)
Curly, 1958 (Romero)
Current. See Sodráshban, 1964
Currents of Youth. See Seishun no kiryu, 1942
Curse of Iku, 1918 (Borzage)
Curse of the Cat People, 1944 (Wise)
Curse of the Demon. See Night of the Demon, 1957
Curse of the Starving Class, 1994 (Beresford)
Cursed Millions. See Prokliatiye millioni, 1917
Curses! They Remarked, 1914 (Sennett)
Curtain, 1918 (Franklin)
Curtain Pole, 1909 (Griffith; Sennett)
Curtatone e Montanara, 1955-59 (Taviani)
Curtis’s Charm, 1995 (Egoyan)
Curtiš’s School of Aviation, 1912 (Dwan)
Custer of the West, 1968 (Siodmak)
Customs Frontier. See Vámhatár, 1977
Cute Girls. See Chiu Shih Liu Liu Te T’a, 1979
Cutting It Short. See Postrièrez, 1980
Cwal, 1996 (Zanussi)
Cyclamen. See Ciklámen, 1916
Cyclamen. See Ciklámen, 1916
Cyclamen. See Ciklámen, 1916
Cyprian's Son, 1927 (Sennett)
Cyrano and the Pest, 1915 (Browning)
Cupid and Chaps, 1911 (Dwan)
Cupid in Chaps, 1911 (Dwan)
Cupid in Chaps, 1911 (Dwan)
Cupid in the Dental Parlor, 1913 (Sennett)
Cupid Never Ages, 1913 (Dwan)
Cupid through Padlocks, 1912 (Dwan)
Cupid Throws a Brick, 1913 (Dwan)
Cupid’s Boots, 1925 (Sennett)
Cupid’s Day Off, 1919 (Sennett)
Cupid’s Fireman, 1923 (Wellman)
Cupid’s Joke, 1911 (Sennett)
Cupola Where the Furnaces Glow. See Kyupora no aru machi, 1962
Dagger. See Dolken, 1915
Daguerrotypes, 1975 (Varda)
Dai go Fukuryu-maru, 1959 (Shindo)
Dai-Tokyo bi ikkaku, 1930 (Gosho)
Daibutsu kaigen, 1952 (Kimugasa)
Daibyonin, 1995 (Itami)
Daichi wa hohoemiu, 1925 (Mizoguchi)
Daikaku wa deta keredo, 1929 (Ozu)
Daikoku wa deta keredo, 1929 (Ozu)
Daikoku no eiga, 1925 (Mizoguchi)
Daikoku wa deta keredo, 1929 (Ozu)
Daikoku wa deta keredo, 1929 (Ozu)
Danse serpentine par Mme Bob Walter, 1899/1900 (Guy)
Danserinden. See Ballettens Datter, 1913
Dance Contest in Esira.
Dan Turner, Hollywood Detective, 1990 (Bartel)
Dan the Dandy, 1911 (Griffith)
Damy, 1955 (Gerasimov)
Damsel in Distress, 1937 (Stevens)
Damned, 1955 (Gerasimov)
Dan the Dandy, 1911 (Griffith)
Dan Turner, Hollywood Detective, 1990 (Bartel)
Dance Contest in Esira. See Danstvåling i Esira, 1935/36
Dance, Girl, Dance. 1940 (Arzner; Wise)
Dance Hall, 1950 (Crichton)
Dance Hall Marge, 1931 (Sennett)
Dance in the Rain. See Ples v dezju, 1961
Dance in the Sun, 1954 (Clarke)
Dance Little Lady, 1954 (Zetterling)
Dance Madness, 1925 (Florey)
Dance Me Outside, 1994 (Jewison)
Dance Movie, 1963 (Warhol)
Dance of Death. See Totentanz, 1919
Dance of Life, 1929 (Cromwell)
Dance of Shiva, 1998 (Branagh)
Dance of the Damned, 1989 (Corman)
Dance of the Looney Spoons, 1959 (Vanderbeek)
Dance of the Vampires. See Fearless Vampire Killers, 1967
Dance Shadows by Danielle Helander. See Caswallan Trilogy, 1986
Dance Training. See Kyoren no buto, 1924
Dance with Death, 1992 (Corman)
Dancer, 2000 (Besson)
Dancer in the Dark, 2000 (Fridriksson; Von Trier)
Dancer of Izu. See Izu no odoriko, 1933
Dancer’s Revenge. See Danserindens Haevn, 1915
Dancer’s Strange Dream. See Danserindens Kaerlighedsdrøm, 1915
Dancers, 1925 (Goulding)
Dancers of Tomorrow. See Asu no odoriko, 1939
Dances in Japan. See Nihon no noyoku, 1929
Dancing Girl, 1915 (Dwan)
Dancing Girl. See Naught Girl, 1934
Dancing Girl of Butte, 1910 (Griffith; Sennett)
Dancing Mad. See Tänzer meiner Frau, 1925
Dancing Mothers, 1926 (Goulding)
Dancing with Crime, 1947 (Attenborough)
Dandan Dard, 1983 (Kiarostami)
Danse de mort, 1947 (von Stroheim)
Danse de l’ivresse, 1900 (Guy)
Danse du ventre, 1900/01 (Guy)
Danse du papillon, 1900 (Guy)
Danse des Saisons, 1900 (Guy)
Danse du pas des foulards par des almées, 1900 (Guy)
Danse du ventre, 1900/01 (Guy)
Danse fleur de lotus, 1897 (Guy)
Danse du pas des foulards par des almées, 1900 (Guy)
Danse du papillon, 1900 (Guy)
Danger Flirt, 1924 (Browning)
Danger Game, 1993 (Ferrara)
Dangerous Age, 1923 (Stahl)
Dangerous Curves Behind, 1925 (Sennett)
Dangerous Hour, 1920 (Niblo)
Dangerous Liaisons, 1988 (Fears)
Dangerous Lies, 1921 (Hitchcock)
Dangerous Love, 1988 (Corman)
Dangerous Paradise, 1920 (Goulding)
Dangerous Paradise, 1930 (Cavalcanti; Wellman)
Dangerous to Know, 1938 (Florey)
Dangerous Toys, 1921 (Goulding)
Dangerously They Live, 1941 (Florey)
Dancers of Tomorrow. See Asu no odoriko, 1939
Dancers of Tomorrow.
Danserindens Kærlighedsdrøm, 1915 (Holger-Madsen)
Danserindens Kærlighedsdr., 1915 (Holger-Madsen)
Danses, 1900 (Guy)
Danses espagnoles, 1900 (Lumière)
Dansk politi i Sverige, 1945 (Henning-Jensen)
Danske piger viser alt, 1996 (Makavejev)
Danstävlingen i Esira, 1935/36 (Fejös)
Danske piger viser alt, 1996 (Makavejev)
Daoma Zei, 1985 (Tian Zhanzhuang)
Daphne, 1936 (Rossellini)
Darakuru onna, 1967 (Yoshimura)
Daiberun a Pandhrola, 1960 (Frič)
Darby’s Rangers, 1958 (Wellman)
Dare-Devil, 1923 (Sennett)
Daredevil. See Smelchak, 1919
Dark, 1979 (Hooper)
Dark Angel, 1935 (Franklin)
Dark Angel, 1996 (Coppola)
Dark Angel, 2000 (Cameron)
Dark at Noon, 1992 (Ruiz)
Dark Command, 1940 (Walsh)
Dark Eyes. See Oci cionnie, 1987
Dark Half, 1993 (Romero)
Dark Horse, 1932 (LeRoy)
Dark Lover’s Play, 1915 (Sennett)
Dark Mirror, 1946 (Sidomak)
Dark Night, 1941 (Sennett)
Dark Passage, 1947 (Daves)
Dark Secrets, 1923 (Fleming; Goulding)
Dark Secrets; The Death Artist; Roger Corman Presents Bucket of Blood.
Dark Star, 1919 (Dwan)
Dark Star, 1974 (Carpenter)
Dark Town Strutters, 1975 (Corman)
Dark Victory, 1939 (Goulding)
Dark Wind, 1992 (Morris)
Darkman, 1990 (Landis; Raimi)
Darkman II: The Return of Durant, 1994 (Raimi)
Darkman III: Darkman Must Die, 1996 (Raimi)
Darkness at Noon. See Mahiru no anokou, 1956
Darkness in Daytime. See Nappali sótetség, 1963
Darling, 1965 (Schlesinger)
Darling, See Mazlitch, 1934
Daró un millione, 1935 (de Sica)
Dash for Liberty. See Hjøt Spil, 1913
Dash, Love and Splash, 1914 (Sennett)
Dash through the Clouds, 1911 (Sennett)
Dastan, 1950 (Kapoor)
Dastoroufosh, 1987 (Makhmalbaf)
Date with Judy, 1948 (Donen)
Daudo Sorko, 1967 (Rouch)
Daughter. See Musume, 1926
Daughter of Brahma. See Maharadjaens Yndlingshustru II, 1918
Daughter of D’Artagnan, See Fille de D’Artagnan, 1994
Daughter of Dr. Jekyll, 1957 (Ulmer)
Daughter of Liberty and A Trooper’s Heart, 1911 (Dwan)
Daughter of Shanghai, 1937 (Florey)
Daughter of the Congo, 1930 (Michaels)
Daughter of the Fortune Teller. See Den blaa Natviol, 1911
Daughter of the Mountains. See Högflätter dotter, 1914
Daughter of the Navajos, 1911 (Guy)
Daughter of the Nile. See Ni Lu Ho Nu Erh, 1987
Daughter of the Orient. See Daughter of Shanghai, 1937
Daughter of the Railway. See Jernbanens Datter, 1911
Daughter of Two Worlds, 1920 (Goulding)
Daughters Courageous, 1939 (Curitz)
Daughters of Destiny. See Destinées, 1952
Daughters of Senor Lopez, 1912 (Dwan)
Dave, 1993 (Stone)
Dave’s Love Affair, 1911 (Sennett)
David Copperfield, 1933 (Cukor)
David Copperfield, 1970 (Attenborough)
David Cronenberg, I Have to Make the World Be Flesh, 1999 (Cronenberg)
David e Golia, 1959 (Welles)
David Garrick, 1914 (Ingram)
David Golder, 1930 (Duvivier)
David Harum, 1915 (Dwan)
David Lynn’s Sculpture, 1961 (Baillie)
David: Off and On, 1972 (Coolidge)
Davud, 1965 (Güney)
Davy, 1957 (Dearden)
Dawn. See Aube, 1986
Dawn. See Hajnal, 1971
Dawn. See Raat Bhore, 1956
Dawn Guard, 1941 (Boulting)
Dawn of a New Day. See Fajr Yum Jadid, 1964
Dawn of Manchukuo and Mongolia. See Mammo Kenkoku no Reimei, 1932
Dawn of Passion, 1912 (Dwan)
Dawn of the Dead. See Zombies, 1978
Dawn Patrol, 1930 (Hawks)
Dawn Patrol, 1938 (Goulding)
Day and the Hour. See Jour et l’heure, 1962
Day at the Beach, 1969 (Polanski)
Day at the Circus, 1901 (Porter)
Day Dreams, 1922 (Keaton)
Day in the Country. See Partie de campagne, 1946
Day for Night. See Nuit américaine, 1973
Day of Despair. See O Dia do desespero, 1992
Day of Faith, 1923 (Browning)
Day of Happiness. See Dyen schastya, 1964
Day of Idiots. See Tag der Idioten, 1982
Day of Joy. See Glaedens Dag, eller Miskendet, 1918
Day of Marriage. See Totsugu hi, 1956
Day of Reckoning, 1990 (Fuller)
Day of the Dead, 1985 (Romero)
Day of the Dolphin, 1973 (Nichols)
Day of the Fight, 1952 (Kubrick)
Day of the Jackal, 1973 (Zinnemann)
Day of the Locust, 1975 (Schlesinger)
Day of Wrath. See Vredens Dag, 1943
Day She Paid, 1919 (Ingram)
Day the World Ended, 1955 (Corman)
Day the world was born, 1947 (Schlesinger)
Day the Mercedes Became a Hat, 1993 (Nair)
Day the Sky Exploded. See Morte viene dallo spazio, 1958
Day the World Ended, 1955 (Corman)
Day They Buried Cleaver, 1970 (Apted)
Day to Wed. See Totsugu hi, 1956
Daybreak, 1931 (Feyder)
Daybreak. See Jour se leve, 1939
Daybreak and Whiteeye, 1957 (Brakhage)
Daydreams. See Grezy, 1915
Days and Nights in the Forest. See Aranyer Din Ratri, 1970
Days in the Trees. See Des journées entières dans les arbres, 1976
Days of ’36. See Mères tou 36, 1972
Days of Glory, 1944 (Tourneur)
Days of Hate. See Dias de odio, 1954
Days of Heaven. 1978 (Malick)
Days of Hope, 1976 (Loach)
Days of Love.
Days of Youth. See Jeugd-dag, 1929/30
Days of ’76. See Lobos de granizado, 1978 (Menéndez)
Days of Youth. See Wakaki hi, 1929
Day’s Pleasure, 1919 (Chaplin)
Daytrippers, 1996 (Soderbergh)
Daze in the West, 1927 (Wyler)
Dazed and Confused, 1993 (Linklater)
De beaux lendemains.
De America soy hijo . . . y a ella me debo, 1972 (Alvarez)
De abajo, 1939 (Fernández)
D.C. Cab, 1983 (Schumacher)
Dead Cert, 1973 (Richardson)
Dead Country. See Holt vidék, 1971
Dead End, 1937 (Wyler)
Dead Man, 1995 (Jarmusch)
Dead Next Door, 1988 (Raimi)
Death of Night, 1945 (Camaltangi; Crichton; Dearden)
Death of Winter, 1987 (Penn)
Dead Ones, 1948 (Markopoulos)
Dead Only Perish. See Ölüme yalnız gidilir, 1963
Dead Pigeon on Beethoven Street, 1973 (Fuller)
Dead Poets Society, 1989 (Weir)
Dead Pool, 1988 (Eastwood)
Dead Reckoning, 1947 (Cromwell)
Dead Ringers, 1988 (Cronenberg)
Dead Zone, 1983 (Cronenberg)
Deadhead Miles, 1982 (Malick)
Deadly Affair, 1967 (Lumet)
Deadly Blessing, 1981 (Craven)
Deadly Circuit. See Mortelle randonnée, 1983
Deadly Companions, 1961 (Peckinpah)
Deadly Friend, 1986 (Craven)
Deadly Glass of Beer, 1916 (Brownin)
Deadly Trap. See Maison sous les arbres, 1971
Deaf, 1986 (Wiseman)
Deaf Burglar, 1913 (Sennett)
Deal with the Devil. See Den mystiske Fremmede, 1914
Dear Augustin. See Oh du lieber Augustin, 1922
Dear Diary. See Caro Diario, 1994
Dear Inspector, Dear Detective. See Tendre Poulet, 1977
Dear Phone (+ ph, ed), 1977 (Greenaway)
Dearly Purchased Friendship. See Dyrekøbt Venskab, 1912
Death and the Maiden, 1993 (Polanski)
Death at Dawn. See Akatsuki no shi, 1924
Death Becomes Her, 1992 (Pollack; Zemeckis)
Death Bell. See Halálszengő, 1917
Death by Hanging. See Koshikite, 1968
Death Command of the Tower. See Boro no kesshitai, 1943
Death Day, 1933 (Eisenstein)
Death Dice, 1915 (Walsh)
Death Disc, 1909 (Griffith)
Death Drives Through, 1935 (Huston)
Death for Five Voices. See Tod für fünf Stimmen, 1995
Death Game, 1996 (Corman)
Death in Canaan, 1978 (Richardson)
Death in the Snow. See Echigo tsutsuishi oyashirazu, 1964
Death in Venice. See Morte a Venezia, 1971
Death Is Called Engelchen. See Smrt si řiká Engelchen, 1963
Death of a Bureaucrat.
Death of a Beautiful Dream.
Death Is Called Engelchen.
Death of a Fly.
Death of a Provincial.
Death of Empedocles. See Tod des Empedokles, 1987
Death of a Salesman, 1947 (O’Neill)
Death of a Champion, 1939 (Flaherty)
Death of a Composer, 1999 (Greenaway)
Death of a Beautiful Dream. See Smrt krásnych snuc, 1986
Death of a Composer, 1999 (Greenaway)
Death of a President. See Śmierć Prezydenta, 1977
Death of a Salesman, 1951 (Kramer)
Death of a Bureaucrat. See Muerte de un burócrata, 1966
Death of a Champion, 1939 (Flaherty)
Death of an Insult. See Mortelle randonnée, 1983
Death of Augustin. See Oh du lieber Augustin, 1922
Death of a Fly. See Akatsuki no shi, 1924
Death of a Fly. See Oh du lieber Augustin, 1922
Death of a Fly. See Oh du lieber Augustin, 1922
Death of a Fly. See Oh du lieber Augustin, 1922
Death of Augustin. See Oh du lieber Augustin, 1922
Death of a Fly. See Oh du lieber Augustin, 1922
Death of a Fly. See Oh du lieber Augustin, 1922
Death of a Fly. See Oh du lieber Augustin, 1922
Death of a Fly. See Oh du lieber Augustin, 1922
Death of a Fly. See Oh du lieber Augustin, 1922
Death on the Road, 1935 (Rotha)
Death Race 2000, 1975 (Bartel; Corman; Landis)
Death Ray. See Luch smerti, 1925
Death Watch. See Mort en direct, 1980
Death’s Marathon, 1913 (Griffith)
Deathsport, 1978 (Corman)
Deathstalker, 1984 (Corman)
Deathstalker 4, 1992 (Corman)
Deathstalker, 1984 (Corman)
Deathsport, 1978 (Corman)
Death’s Marathon, 1913 (Griffith)
Death Watch.
Death Ray.
FILM TITLE INDEX
DIRECTORS, 4th EDITION

Den Hvide Djævel, eller Djævelens Protege, 1916 (Dreyer)
Den hvide Slavehandel I, 1910 (Blom)
Den hvide Slavehandel II, 1911 (Blom)
Den kinesiske Vase. See Vases Hemmelighed, 1913
Den levende virkelighed, 1989 (Roos)
Den lille Chauffør, 1914 (Blom)
Den moderna suffragetten, 1913 (Stiller)
Den Muso, 1975 (Cissé)
Den mystiske Fremmede, 1914 (Holger-Madsen)
Den mystiske Selskabsdame, eller Legationens Gidsel, 1917 (Dreyer)
Den mystiske Selskabsdame, 1916 (Blom)
Den mystiske Fremmede, 1914 (Holger-Madsen)
Den Muso, 1975 (Cissé)
Den Pukkelryggede.

Den omstridte Jord, 1915 (Holger-Madsen)
Den okända, 1913 (Stiller)
Den of Beasts.

Den of Thieves, 1905 (Hepworth)
Den of Thieves, 1905 (Hepworth)

Den of Beasts.

Den naadige Frøken, 1911 (Blom)

Den Mystiske Selskabsdame, eller Legationens Gidsel, 1917 (Dreyer)
Den mystiske Selskabsdame, 1916 (Blom)
Den levende virkelighed, 1989 (Roos)

Dernier Tango à Paris. See Last Tango in Paris, 1972

Departure of a Grand Old Man.
Destroy She Said. See Détériure, dit-elle, 1969
Destroyer. See Wir verbauen 3 x 27 Milliarden Dollar in einen Angriffs-schlachter, 1971
Det bødes der for. See Haevnet, 1911
Det brinner en eld, 1943 (Sjöström)
Det definitive asflag på anmodningen om et kys, 1949 (Roos)
Det er tilladt at være åndssvag, 1969 (Roos)
Det første Honorar, 1912 (Blom)
Det gamle Købmændshus, 1911 (Blom)
Det gyldne Smil, 1935 (Fejös)
Det hemmelighedsfulde X, 1913 (Christensen)
Det mørke Punkt, 1911 (Blom)
Det mørke Punkt, 1913 (Holger-Madsen)
Det omringgade huset, 1922 (Sjöström)
Det regnar på vår kärlek, 1946 (Bergman)
Det røda torden, 1914 (Stiller)
Det sjunde inseglet, 1957 (Bergman)
Det stjælne Ansigt, 1914 (Holger-Madsen)
Det store Falde or Malstrømmen, 1911 (Holger-Madsen)
Det store Hjerde, 1924 (Blom)
Det Største i Verden, 1919 (Holger-Madsen)
Det var i Maj, 1914 (Sjöström)
Detective, 1985 (Godard)
Detective Story, 1951 (Wyler)
Deux Anglaises et le continent, 1971 (Miller; Truffaut)
Deux Gamines, 1920 (Clair; Feuillade)
Deux francises, 1915 (Feuillade)
Deux double Panzer; Aberglaube, 1940 (Rutmann)
Deutsche Waffenschmiede, 1940 (Ruttmann)
Deutche Traum, 1977 (Syberberg)
Deutschland bleiche munter, 1980 (Sandars-Brahms)
Deutschland im Herbst, 1978 (Fassbinder; Kluge; Schönordoff)
Deux Anglaises et le continent, 1971 (Miller; Truffaut)
Deux Anglaises et le continent, 1971 (Miller; Truffaut)
Deux fois cinquante ans de cinema Francais, 1995 (Godard)
Deux Francaises, 1915 (Feuillade)
Deux Gamines, 1920 (Clair; Feuillade)
Deux Gosses, 1906 (Feuillade)
Deux heures moins le quart avant Jesus-Christ, 1982 (Berri)
Deux hommes dans Manhattan, 1959 (Melville)
Deux Mondes, 1930 (Dupont)
Deux Orphelines, 1933 (Tourneur)
Deux ou trois choses que je sais d’elle, 1967 (Godard)
Deux Rivaux, 1903/04 (Guy)
Deux Timides, 1928 (Clair)
Deux trois soleil, 1993 (Blier)
Deuxième Souffle, 1966 (Melville)
Development of the Stalk and the Root. See A szár és a gyökér fejlődése, 1961
Devi, 1960 (Ray)
Devi, 1908 (Griffith)
Devi, 1920 (Goulding)
Devi. See Az őrdög, 1918
Devil at Four O’Clock, 1961 (Leroi)
Devil by the Tail. See Diable par la queue, 1968
Devil Commands, 1941 (Dmytryk)
Devil Crag. See Seytan kayalikleri, 1970
Devil Dancer, 1927 (Niblo)
Devil Dogs of the Air, 1935 (Bacon)
Devil-Doll, 1936 (Brownie; von Stroheim)
Devil Horse, 1926 (Stiller)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>FILM TITLE INDEX</th>
<th>DIRECTORS, 4th EDITION</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Diamond Jim, 1935 (Sturges)</td>
<td>Directed by John Ford, 1971 (Bogdanovich; Welles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diamond Ship. See Brilliantenschiff, 1920</td>
<td>Directors, 1963 (Germar; Godard; Hitchcock; Huston)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diamond Star, 1910 (Griffith)</td>
<td>Direktstven Datter, 1912 (Blom)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diamonds, 1999 (Landis)</td>
<td>Dirigible, 1931 (Capra)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diamonds of the Night. See Demanty noci, 1964</td>
<td>Dirty Dozen, 1967 (Aldrich; Cassavetes)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diaries, Notes &amp; Sketches. See Walden, 1968</td>
<td>Dirty Duck, 1977 (Corman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diario de la guerra del cerdo, 1975 (Torre Nilsson)</td>
<td>Dirty-Face Dan, 1915 (Franklin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diario de los muertos, 1955</td>
<td>Dirty Hands. See Innocents aux mains sales, 1975</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diario de vídeo, 1974</td>
<td>Dirty Harry, 1971 (Eastwood; Siegel)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diario del poeta, 1956 (Torre Nilsson)</td>
<td>Dirty Lake an Angel. See Sale comme un ange, 1990</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diario de mi hermana, 1958</td>
<td>Dirty Money. See Maudite galette, 1972</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diario de mi nieto, 1971 (Eastwood; Siegel)</td>
<td>Dirty Story. See Sale histoire, 1977</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diaries, 1957 (Dufresne)</td>
<td>Dirty Work in a Laundry, 1915 (Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diaries, 1960 (Tátra)</td>
<td>Dis-moi, 1980 (Akerman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diaries, 1964 (Tátra)</td>
<td>Disbarred, 1993 (von Sternberg)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diaries, Notes, and Sketches. See Walden, 1968</td>
<td>Dislike. See Kirai Kirai Kirai, 1960</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diário de chuva, 1959 (Serra)</td>
<td>Disorderly Orderly, 1964 (Lewis; Tashlin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diário de uma depressão, 1959</td>
<td>Disorganised Crime, 1989 (Badham)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diário de uma mulher, 1969 (Carrere)</td>
<td>Disparal!, 1993 (Saura)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diario del poeta, 1957 (Borges)</td>
<td>Disparus de Saint-Agil, 1938 (von Stroheim)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diario de un vele en la noche, 1975 (Paniagua)</td>
<td>Disputed Passage, 1939 (Borzage)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diario del robo de tierra, 1936</td>
<td>Disque 927, 1928 (Dulac)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diario de un robo, 1936</td>
<td>Distant Clouds. See Tó ki k umo, 1955</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diário de uma mulher, 1957 (Borges)</td>
<td>Distant Drums, 1951 (Walsh)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diario de una mujer, 1956 (Zapatero)</td>
<td>Distant Jamaica. See Fernes Jamaica, 1969</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diário de uma mulher, 1957 (Zapatero)</td>
<td>Distant Relative, 1912 (Dwan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diário de uma mulher, 1958 (Borges)</td>
<td>Distant Thunder. See Asani Sanket, 1973</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diario de una mujer, 1958 (Borges)</td>
<td>Distant Trumpet, 1964 (Walsh)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diario de una mujer, 1959 (Borges)</td>
<td>Distinguished Gentleman. See Besserer Herr, 1928</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diário de um rei, 1955</td>
<td>Distractions, 1960 (Chabrol)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diaries, 1960 (Buruma)</td>
<td>Distress Call, 1938 (Cavalcanti)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diarios, 1960 (Dias)</td>
<td>Dita Saxová, 1967 (Menzel)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diarios, Notes, and Sketches. See Walden, 1968</td>
<td>Dites cariatides, 1984 (Varda)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diary of a Chambermaid, 1949 (Jennings)</td>
<td>Ditte Menneskebarn, 1946 (Henning-Jensen)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diaries, 1961 (Dias)</td>
<td>Ditte: Child of Man. See Ditte Menneskebarn, 1946</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diario de un amigo, 1955 (Goeb)</td>
<td>Ditto, 1937 (Keaton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diaries, 1961 (Dias)</td>
<td>Divorcer Dominos. See De Domeinen Ditvoorst, 1993</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diario de una mujer, 1958 (Zapatero)</td>
<td>Divya Bol’shogo Goroda, 1914 (Bauer)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diaries, 1962 (Dias)</td>
<td>Diva, 1981 (Beineix)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diario de una mujer, 1958 (Zapatero)</td>
<td>Divan à New York, 1996 (Akerman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diaries, 1963 (Dias)</td>
<td>Dive Bomber, 1941 (Curtiz)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diario de una mujer, 1959 (Zapatero)</td>
<td>Diverse Reports: We Should Have Won, 1985 (Loach)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diarios, 1963 (Dias)</td>
<td>Divertimento, 1993 (Rivette)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diarios, 1964 (Dias)</td>
<td>Divertissement, 1952 (Rivette)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diarios, 1965 (Dias)</td>
<td>Divided Heart, 1954 (Crichton; Schlesinger)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diarios, 1966 (Dias)</td>
<td>Divided Love. See Geteilte liebe, 1977</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diarios, 1967 (Dias)</td>
<td>Divina, 1989 (Haynes)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diarios, 1968 (Dias)</td>
<td>Divine, 1935 (Ophuls)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diarios, 1969 (Dias)</td>
<td>Divine, See Evangelio de las Maravillas, 1998</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diarios, 1971 (Dias)</td>
<td>Divine correr, 1929 (Duvivier)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diarios, 1972 (Dias)</td>
<td>Divine Damnation, 1967 (Markopoulos)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diarios, 1973 (Dias)</td>
<td>Divine Trash, 1998 (Jarmusch; Morrissey; Waters)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diarios, 1974 (Dias)</td>
<td>Divine Woman, 1928 (Sjöström)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diarios, 1975 (Dias)</td>
<td>Diving Girl, 1911 (Sennett)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Divino Boemo, 1970 (Jireš)
Divisions de la nature, 1978 (Ruiz)
Divorce a la Mode, 1932 (Sennett)
Divorce Courtship, 1933 (Stevens)
Divorce Dodger, 1926 (Sennett)
Divorce in the Family, 1932 (Daves)
Divorce Italian Style. See Divorzio all’italiana, 1962
Divorced. See Fränskild, 1951
Divorced Sweethearts, 1929 (Sennett)
Divorcee, 1919 (Guy)
Divorzio all’italiana, 1962 (Germi)
Diwana, 1967 (Kapoor)
Dix heures et demie du soir en été. See 10:30 P.M. Summer, 1966
Dix-septième parallèle, 1968 (Ivens)
Dixième Symphonie, 1918 (Gance)
Dixième anniversaire de l’O.U.A., 1973 (Cissé)
Dixième Symphonie, 1918 (Gance)
Dizzy Heights and Daring Hearts, 1916 (Sennett)
Dizzy Joe’s Career, 1914 (Browning)
Django Reinhardt, 1958 (Cocher)
Djävulens öga, 1960 (Bergman)
Dobrý voják Svejk, 1931 (Frič)
Dobré svetlo, 1985 (Kachyňa)
Dobrě placená procházka, 1965 (Forman)
Do You Remember Dolly Bell?
Do You Like Women?, 1964 (Polanski)
Do Widzenia do Jutra, 1960 (Polanski)
Do You Like Women?, 1964 (Polanski)
Do You Remember Dolly Bell? See Sjećas li se Dolly Bell?, 1981
Dog. See 10:30 P.M. Summer, 1966
Dog Catcher’s Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Dog Day Afternoon, 1975 (Lumet)
Dog Days. See Hundstage, 1944
Dog Doctor, 1931 (Sennett)
Dog-Heads. See Psohlavci, 1954
Dog, 1977 (Bardem)
Dog Soldiers. See Who’ll Stop the Rain, 1978
Dog Star Man: Part II, 1963 (Brakhage)
Dog’s Life. See Punt’a a čtyřlístek, 1954
Dogma, 1999 (Arcand; Smith)
Dog, 1988 (Hartley)
Dogs of War, 1980 (Jewison)
Dohyo-matsuri, 1944 (Kurosawa)
Dog’s Life. See Vita da cani, 1950
Dog and the Four. See Punt’a a čtyřlístek, 1954
Dogma, 1999 (Arcand; Smith)
Doktor ur, 1916 (Curtiz)
Doktor Satansohn, 1924 (Eisenstein)
Doktor Glas, 1967 (Zetterling)
Doktor Pulder zaait papavers, 1975 (Haanstra)
Doktor Glass, 1967 (Zetterling)
Doktor Mabuze—Igrok, 1924 (Eisenstein)
Doktor Satansohn, 1915 (Lubitsch)
Doktor ur, 1916 (Curtiz)
Dokument: Fanny och Alexander, 1986 (Bergman)
Dokushinsa goyojin, 1930 (Gosho)
Dolandicilar sahi, 1961 (Güney)
Dolandiricilar, 1961 (Güney)
Dolce vita, 1960 (Fellini)
Dolci signore, 1967 (Scola)
Doldertal 7, 1971 (Markopoulos)
Dolar Did It, 1913 (Sennett)
Dolar Down, 1925 (Browning)
Dolar Mambo, 1993 (Leduc)
Dolars of Dross, 1916 (Borzage)
Doll's House, 1973 (Lee)
Doll's House, 1918 (Tourneur)
Doll's House, 1918 (Weber)
Doll's House, 1918 (Weber)
Doll's House, 1918 (Weber)
Doll's House, 1918 (Weber)
Doll's House, 1918 (Weber)
Dolls, 1988 (Hartley)
Dog Soldiers. See Who’ll Stop the Rain, 1978
Dog Star Man: Part II, 1963 (Brakhage)
Dog’s Language. See Making a Living, 1914
Doka o, 1926 (Mizoguchi)
Dokhunda, 1935 (Kuleshov)
Doktor ur, 1916 (Curtiz)
Doktor satansohn, 1915 (Lubitsch)
Doktor ur, 1916 (Curtiz)
Dokument: Fanny och Alexander, 1986 (Bergman)
Dokushinsa goyojin, 1930 (Gosho)
Dolandiicilar sahi, 1961 (Güney)
Dolce vida, 1960 (Fellini)
Dolci signore, 1967 (Scola)
Doldertal 7, 1971 (Markopoulos)
Dole plotovi, 1962 (Makavejev)
Doll's House, 1918 (Tourneur)
Doll's House, 1918 (Weber)
Doll's House, 1918 (Weber)
Doll's House, 1918 (Weber)
Doll's House, 1918 (Weber)
Doll's House, 1918 (Weber)
Dolls, 1988 (Hartley)
Dog Soldiers. See Who’ll Stop the Rain, 1978
Dog Star Man: Part II, 1963 (Brakhage)
Dog’s Language. See Making a Living, 1914
Doka o, 1926 (Mizoguchi)
Dokhunda, 1935 (Kuleshov)
Dokkoi ikiteiru, 1951 (Imai)
Doktor Pulder zaait papavers, 1975 (Haanstra)
Doktor Glas, 1967 (Zetterling)
Doktor Mabuze—Igrok, 1924 (Eisenstein)
Doktor Satansohn, 1915 (Lubitsch)
Doktor ur, 1916 (Curtiz)
Dokument: Fanny och Alexander, 1986 (Bergman)
Dokushinsa goyojin, 1930 (Gosho)
Dolandiicilar sahi, 1961 (Güney)
Dolce vida, 1960 (Fellini)
Dolci signore, 1967 (Scola)
Doldertal 7, 1971 (Markopoulos)
Dole plotovi, 1962 (Makavejev)
Dolkenn, 1915 (Stiller)
Doll. See A Child’s Sacrifice, 1910
Dollar Did It, 1913 (Sennett)
Dollar Down, 1925 (Browning)
Dollar Mambo, 1993 (Leduc)
Dolars of Dross, 1916 (Borzage)
Dollhouse Mystery, 1915 (Franklin)
Doll’s House, 1918 (Tourneur)
Doll’s House, 1973 (Lee)
Dolorosa, 1934 (Grémillon)
Dorn na Trubnoi, 1928 (Barnet)
Domes of the Bronx, 1928 (Barnet)
Dome za vesanje, 1988 (Kusturica)
Domain of the Moment, 1977 (Brakhage)
Domani accadra, 1988 (Moretti)
Domani è troppo tardi, 1950 (de Sica)
Domaren, 1960 (Sjöberg)
Dömen icke, 1914 (Sjöström)
Domenica d’agosto, 1949 (de Sica)
Domenica è sempre domenica, 1958 (Rossi)
Dominic conjugal, 1970 (Miller; Truffaut)
Dominion, 1974 (Brakhage)
Dominio Principle, 1976 (Kramer)
Don Diego and Pelagea. See Don Diego i Pelaguya, 1928
Don Giovanni, 1979 (Losey)
Don Giovanni in Sicilia, 1967 (Lattuada)
Don Juan 1939 (Jireš)
Don Juan. See Amor de Don Juan, 1956
Don Juan 1973 or si Don Juan éait une femme, 1973 (Vadim)
Don Juan DeMarco, 1997 (Levinson)
Donna piu bella del mondo, 1955 (Bava)
Donna d’una notte.
Donna del Montagna, 1943 (Castellani)
Donna del fiume, 1954 (Pasolini)
Donna che venne del mare, 1957 (de Sica)
Donkey Skin.
Dongo Yenendi, 1966 (Rouch)
Dongo Hori, 1973 (Rouch)
Dongo Horendi, 1966 (Rouch)
Dondiego i Pelaguya, 1928 (Protazanov)
Dongo Horendi, 1928 (Protazanov)
Dongo Hori, 1973 (Rouch)
Dongo Yenendi, 1966 (Rouch)
Donkey Skin. See Peau d’ane, 1971
Donkey Skin. See Szamárbör, 1970
Donna che venne del mare, 1957 (de Sica)
Donna del fiume, 1954 (Pasolini)
Donna del Montagna, 1943 (Castellani)
Donna d’una notte. See Femme d’une nuit, 1930
Donna piu bella del mondo, 1955 (Bava)
Donnie Brasco, 1997 (Levinson)
Don’t Cry, Pretty Girls.
Don’t Bite Your Dentist, 1930 (Sennett)
Don’t Bet on Blonds, 1935 (Florey)
Don’t Believe in Monuments.
Donovan’s Reef, 1963 (Ford)
Don Quixote, 1957 (Kozintsev)
Don Quixote, 1955 (Welles)
Don Quixote 1973 ou si Don Quixote 1973 (Vadim)
Don Quichotte, 1964-69 (Rohmer)
Don Quichotte, 1922 (Autant-Lara; L’herbier)
Don Quichotte, 1933 (Pabst)
Don Quichotte, 1964 (Rohmer)
Don Juan, or If Don Juan Were a Woman.
Don Juan et Faust, 1922 (Autant-Lara; L’herbier)
Don Juan DeMarco, 1997 (Levinson)
Don Juan 68, 1968 (Jireš)
Don Giovanni in Sicilia, 1967 (Lattuada)
Don Giovanni, 1979 (Losey)
Don’t Leave Your Husband.
Don’t Give up the Ship, 1959 (Lewis)
Don’t Get Jealous, 1929 (Sennett)
Don’t Drink the Water, 1994 (Allen)
Don’t Say It.
Don’t Raise the Bridge, Lower the River, 1967 (Lewis)
Don’t Play Bridge with Your Wife, 1933 (Sennett)
Don’t Make Waves, 1967 (Mackendrick)
Don’t Look Now, 1973 (Roeg)
Don’t Touch Him, He Might Resent It, 1970 (Apted)
Don’t Trust Your Husband, 1948 (Bacon)
Don’t Weaken, 1920 (Sennett)
Don’t Worry, He Won’t Get Far on Foot, 2000 (van Sant)
Dontko oozo, 1959 (Oshima)
Donzoko, 1957 (Kurosawa)
Dooley Scheme, 1911 (Sennett)
Doom Generation, 1995 (Araki)
Doomed Love. See Amor de perdición, 1978
Doomsday Man, 2000 (Raimi)
Door, 1972 (Xie Jin)
Door on the Left as You Leave the Elevator. See A gauche en sortant de l’ascenseur, 1988
Door-to-Door Maniac, 1961 (Howard)
Doors, 1991 (Stone)
Doorway, 2000 (Corman)
Doorway of Destruction, 1915 (Ford)
Dora-heita, 1999 (Ichikawa)
Dorado, 1921 (L’herbier)
Dorado, 1966 (Hawks)
Dorado, 1987 (Saura)
Dorado de Pancho Villa, 1967 (Fernández)
Doraku shinan, 1928 (Gosho)
Doris and Doreen, 1978 (Treffs)
Dornröschen, 1917 (Leni)
Doroga v ad. See Tol’ko Raz v Godu, 1914
Dorogoi moi chelovek, 1958 (Heifitz)
Dorogoi tsonoi, 1957 (Donskoi)
Dorothea Angermann, 1959 (Siodmak)
Dorotheys Bekenntnis, 1921 (Curtiz)
Dos putas, o, Historia de amor que termina en boda, 1974 (Almodóvar)
Dos rostros y una sola imagen, 1984 (Alvarez)
Dottkniecie, 1990 (Zanussi)
Dottie Gets Spanked, 1993 (Haynes)
Douaniers et contrebandiers, 1905 (Guy)
Double Amour, 1925 (Epstein)
Double Bed. See Lit à deux places, 1965
Double Indemnity, 1944 (Wilder)
Double Jeopardy, 1999 (Beresford)
Double jeu, 1916 (Feuillade)
Double Knot, 1913 (Walsh)
Double Life, 1947 (Cukor)
Double Life of Véronique. See Podwójne życie Weroniky, 1991
Double Man, 1967 (Schaffner)
Double or Nothing, 1937 (Dmytryk)
Double Speed, 1920 (Leroy)
Double Suicide.
Doubling in the Quickies, 1932 (Sennett)
Double Wedding, 1937 (Mankiewicz)
Double Wedding, 1913 (Sennett)
Double Wedding, 1937 (Mankiewicz)
Doubling in the Quickies, 1932 (Sennett)
Douce, 1943 (Autant-Lara)
Douche après le bain, 1896-97 (Lumière)
Dough and Dynamite, 1914
Doughboys, 1930 (Keaton)
Doughnut Designer.
Douche aprés le bain, 1896-97 (Lumière)
Doux, 1943 (Autant-Lara)
Doux en deux places, 1965
Dow Rahehal Baraye yek Massaleh, 1975 (Kiarostami)
Down among the Sheltering Palms, 1952 (Goulding)
Down and Dirty. See Bratti, spori e cattivi, 1976
Down by Law, 1986 (Jarmusch)
Down Home, 1920 (Franklin)
Down Memory Lane, 1949 (Sennett)
Down on the Farm, 1920 (Sennett)
Down to Earth, 1917 (Fleming)
Down to the Sea in Shoes, 1923 (Sennett)
Down with the Fences. See Dole plotovi, 1962
Downfall of Osen. See Orizuru osen, 1934
Downhill, 1927 (Hitchcock)
Dozen Socks, 1927 (Sennett)
Dr. Akagi. See Kanzo Sensei, 1998
Dr. Bish Remedies I, 1990 (Baillie)
Dr. Bish Remedies II, 1987-present (Baillie)
Dr. Broadway, 1942 (Mann)
Dr. Bull, 1933 (Ford)
Dr. Crippen, 1962 (Roeg)
Dr. Cyclops, 1940 (Schoedsack)
Dr. Ehrlich’s Magic Bullet. See Story of Dr. Ehrlich’s Magic Bullet, 1940
Dr. Endesha Ida Mac Holland, 1998 (Burnett)
Dr. Goldfoot and the Girl Bombs. See Spic vengono dal semifreddo, 1966
Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, 1932 (Mamoulian)
Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. See Den skæbnesvangre Opfindelse, 1910
Dr. Mabuse der Spieler, 1924 (Eisenstein)
Dr. Mabuse, der Spieler, 1921/22 (Lang)
Dr. Mabuse, the Gambler. See Se Dr. Mabuse, der Spieler, 1921/22
Dr. Nicola, 1909 (Blom)
Dr. Nicola I (Den skjulte Skat), 1909 (Blom)
Dr. Nicola III, 1909 (Blom)
Dr. Nicola III, 1909 (Blom)
Dr. Nicola, 1909 (Blom)
Dream about a House. See Alom a házról, 1971
Dream Flight. See Polipty vo sne naiavou, 1983
Dream Girl, 1916 (de Mille)
Dream House, 1932 (Sennett)
Dream Lover, 1986 (Pakula)
Dream Machine, 1983 (Jarman)
Dream, NYC, The Return, The Flower, 1976 (Brakhage)
Dream of a Rarebit Fiend, 1906 (Porter)
Dream of David Gray. See Vampyr, 1932
Dream of Death. See Dødsdrommen, 1911
Dream of Love, 1928 (Niblo)
Dream of Passion, 1978 (Dassin)
Dream On, 1990 (Landis)
Dream One, 1982 (Boorman)
Dream Path of Youth. See Seishun no yumeji, 1923
Dream Street, 1921 (Griffith)
Dream Stuff, 1933 (Sennett)
Dream, What Else?. See Traum, was sonst, 1994
Dream Woman, 1914 (Guy)
Dreamers, 2000 (Bartel)
Dreaming, 1980 (Vanderbeek)
Dreaming Lips, 1937 (Lean)
Dreaming Place, 1999 (Cimino)
Dreams, 1990 (Kurosawa; Scorsese)
Dreams. See Kvinnodröms, 1955
Dreams of Love, 1990 (Forman)
Dreams of Monte Carlo. See Monte Carlo, 1926
Dreams of Youth. See Wakodo no yume, 1928
Dreams That Money Can Buy, 1941 (Ray)
Drei amerikanische LPs, 1969 (Wenders)
Drei Niemandskinder, 1927 (Forst)
Drei Tänze der Mary Wilford, 1920 (Wiene)
Drei Unteroffiziere, 1950 (Staudte)
Drei von der Tankstelle, 1955 (Forst)
Dreiroschenopfer, 1931 (Pabst)
Dreiroschenopfer, 1963 (Staudte)
Dreiklang, 1938 (Sirk)
Drenge, 1977 (Malmros)
Dress Rehearsal. See Generalprobe, 1980
Dressed to Kill, 1980 (de Palma)
Dressmaker from Paris, 1925 (Hawks)
Drifter, 1988 (Corman)
Drifters, 1929 (Grierson)
Drifting, 1923 (Browning)
Drifting Bottles, 1998 (Kaurismaki)
Drifting Clouds. See Kauas Pilvet Karkaavat, 1996
Drifting Clouds. See Wakare-gumo, 1951
Driftwood, 1912 (Dwan)
Driftwood, 1947 (Dwan)
Driftwood. See Strandgut, 1924
Driller Killer, 1979 (Ferrara)
Drink’s Lure, 1912 (Griffith)
Dritte Generation, 1979 (Fassbinder)
Drive for Life, 1909 (Griffith)
Drive, He Said, 1972 (Rafelson)
Drive In, 1990 (Landis)
Driver, 1978 (Hill)
Driver dagg faller Regn, 1946 (Zetterling)
Driving Miss Daisy, 1989 (Beresford)
Driving Mrs Daisy, 1989 (Beresford)
Droga do nieba, 1958 (Zanussi)
Droga do nieba, 1958 (Zanussi)
Droga do nieba, 1958 (Zanussi)
Droit à la vie, 1917 (Gance)
Drôles de drames, 1937 (Carné)
DROP Squad, 1994 (Lee)
Drop Zone, 1994 (Badham)
Dropout Wife, 1972 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Droppington’s Devilish Dream, 1915 (Sennett)
Droppington’s Family Tree, 1915 (Sennett)
Droske 519, 1909 (Blom)
Drowning by Numbers, 1988 (Greenaway)
Drowning Pool, 1975 (Hill)
Drug Wars: The Camarena Story, 1990 (Mann)
Drug Wars: The Cocaine Cartel, 1992 (Mann)
Drugist’s Dilemma, 1933 (Sandrich)
Drugstore Cowboy, 1989 (van Sant)
Druhé směna, 1940 (Fríč)
Druides, 1906 (Garso)
Duck, 1965 (Warhol; de Antonio)
Duck Soup
Duck Hunter, 1922 (Sennett)
Duck Soup
Duck, You Sucker. See Gli la testa, 1972
Dudes, 1987 (Spheeris)
Duck, You Sucker. See Gli la testa, 1972
Duck, You Sucker. See Gli la testa, 1972
Duck, You Sucker. See Gli la testa, 1972
Duck, You Sucker. See Gli la testa, 1972
Duchess of Doom.
Duchess of Buffalo, 1926 (Franklin)
Duchess of Doom.
Duchess of Buffalo, 1926 (Franklin)
Duchess of Doom.
Duchess of Buffalo, 1926 (Franklin)
Duchess of Doom.
Duchess of Buffalo, 1926 (Franklin)
Duchess of Doom.
Duchess of Buffalo, 1926 (Franklin)
Duchess of Doom.
Duchess of Buffalo, 1926 (Franklin)
Duchess of Doom.
Duchess of Buffalo, 1926 (Franklin)
Duchess of Doom.
Duchess of Buffalo, 1926 (Franklin)
Duchess of Doom.
Duchess of Buffalo, 1926 (Franklin)
Duchess of Doom.
Duchess of Buffalo, 1926 (Franklin)
Duchess of Doom.
Duchess of Buffalo, 1926 (Franklin)
Duchess of Doom.
Duchess of Buffalo, 1926 (Franklin)
Duchess of Doom.
Duchess of Buffalo, 1926 (Franklin)
Duchess of Doom.
Duchess of Buffalo, 1926 (Franklin)
Duchess of Doom.
Duchess of Buffalo, 1926 (Franklin)
Duchess of Doom.
Duchess of Buffalo, 1926 (Franklin)
Duchess of Doom.
Duchess of Buffalo, 1926 (Franklin)
Duchess of Doom.
Duchess of Buffalo, 1926 (Franklin)
Duchess of Doom.
Duchess of Buffalo, 1926 (Franklin)
Duchess of Doom.
Duchess of Buffalo, 1926 (Franklin)
Duchess of Doom.
Duchess of Buffalo, 1926 (Franklin)
Duchess of Doom.
Duchess of Buffalo, 1926 (Franklin)
Duchess of Doom.
Duchess of Buffalo, 1926 (Franklin)
Duchess of Doom.
Ear. See Ucho, 1992
Early Spring. See Before Spring, 1958
Early Spring. See Soshun, 1956
Early Summer. See Bakushu, 1951
Early to Wed, 1926 (Borzage)
Earrings of Madame De. See Madame de . . . , 1953
Earth. See Zemlya, 1930
Earth Smiles. See Daichi wa hohoemu, 1925
Earth’s Revenge. See Den omstridte Jord, 1915
Earthbottom, 1954/6 (Romero)
Earthen Aerie, 1995 (Brakhage)
Earthquake in Chile. See Erdbebenen Chile, 1974
East China Sea. See Higashi Shinakik, 1968
East Is West, 1922 (Franklin)
East Lynne with Variations, 1919 (Sennett)
East of Eden
East Lynne, 1919 (Sennett)
East of Shanghai
East of Eden Maes Dagbog.
Eddie Cantor, 1929 (Florey)
Eddie Presley, 1993 (Tarantino)
Édes Anna, 1957 (Fábri)
Edgar Allan Poe, 1909 (Griffith)
Edgar Poé, 1964-69 (Rohmer)
Edge of Darkness, 1943 (Milestone; Rossen; Siegel)
Edge of Eternity, 1949 (Siegel)
Edge of the City, 1957 (Cassavetes; Ritt)
Edge of Eternity, 1959 (Siegel)
Edith et Marcel. See Edith et Marcel, 1982
Edith et Marcel, 1992 (Mészáros)
Edlouard et Caroline, 1951 (Becker)
Educated Evans, 1935 (Lauder and Gilliat)
Education professionelle des conducteurs de tramway, 1925 (Grémillon)
Education sentimentale, 1962 (Astruc)
Educational Fairy Tale.
Education sentimentale, 1962 (Astruc)
Edith and Marcel.
Edith and Marcel, 1992 (Mészáros)
Edith et Marcel, 1982 (Lelouch)
Edith and Marcel, 1992 (Mészáros)
Edith and Marcel, 1982 (Lelouch)
Édouard et Caroline, 1951 (Becker)
Edgar Poé, 1964-69 (Rohmer)
Effrontée, 1985 (Miller)
Effroi, 1913 (Feuillade)
Effi Briest.
Effi Briest.
Effi Briest.
Een pak slaag, 1979 (Haanstra)
Églantine, 1971 (Chabrol)
Egy krajcár története, 1917 (Curtiz)
Egy kiállítás képei, 1954 (Jancsó)
Egy délután Koppánymonostorban, 1955 (Jancsó)
Egy kis boldogság nem marad vissza, 1950 (Szenes)
Egy kif jól mondja, a lyukázó független, 1957 (Jancsó)
Egy kis nagyon vidám, 1962 (Jancsó)
Egy kis ismertető, 1958 (Jancsó)
Egri csillagok, 1923 (Fejös)
Egri csillagok, 1923 (Fejös)
Egri csillagok, 1923 (Fejös)
Egy jó barát, 1947 (Fellini)
Ecole, 1962 (Tanner)
École communale, 1939 (Carné)
École des détectives, 1934 (Delannoy)
Ecole des facteurs, 1947 (Tati)
École des familles, 1940 (Ophuls)
Écuelles, 1983 (Ouedraogo)
Écume des jours, 1968 (Miller)
Ed TV, 1999 (Howard; Reiner)
Ed Wood, 1994 (Burton)
Eclisse, 1962 (Antonioni)
Écumes des jours, 1968 (Miller)
Echiquier de Dieu, 1964 (Welles)
Écoeuré, 1966 (Warhol)
Eating Raoul, 1982 (Bartel; Landis)
Eaten Alive, 1976 (Hooper)
Eat Your Makeup, 1968 (Waters)
Eat Your Heart Out, 1997 (Adlon)
Eat My Dust!, 1976 (Bartel; Corman; Howard)
Eat Your Wheels, 1989 (Raimi)
Een blandt mange, 1961 (Henning-Jensen)
Een Hagedis Teveel.
Een pak slaag, 1979 (Haanstra)
Een pak slaag, 1979 (Haanstra)
Egyptian Story.
Egyptian Series, 1984 (Brakhage)
Egy tukor, 1971 (Szabó)
Egy krajcár története, 1917 (Curtiz)
Egy krajcár története, 1917 (Curtiz)
Egy krajcár története, 1917 (Curtiz)
Egypi Sanction, 1975 (Eastwood)
Eight Hours Don’t Make a Day. See Acht Stunden sind kein Tag, 1972
Eight Iron Men, 1952 (Dmytryk; Kramer)
Eight Men Out, 1988 (Sayles)
Eight Million Ways to Die, 1985 (Ashby)
Eight Iron Men, 1952 (Dmytryk; Kramer)
Eight Men Out, 1988 (Sayles)
Eight Million Ways to Die, 1985 (Ashby)
Eight Iron Men, 1952 (Dmytryk; Kramer)
Eight Men Out, 1988 (Sayles)
Eight Million Ways to Die, 1985 (Ashby)
Eight Iron Men, 1952 (Dmytryk; Kramer)
Eight Men Out, 1988 (Sayles)
Eight Million Ways to Die, 1985 (Ashby)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Eight O’Clock Walk, 1951</td>
<td>Attenborough</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eighty Days, 1944</td>
<td>Jennings</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ejianaika, 1980</td>
<td>Imamura</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eika Katappa, 1969</td>
<td>Schroeter</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Einleitung zu Arnold Schoenberg Begleit Musik zu einer Lichtspielscene, 1969 (Straub and Huillet)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Einspänner Nr. 13. See Fiaker Nr. 13, 1926</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eisenstein in Mexico, 1933</td>
<td>Eisenstein</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eisenstein’s Mexican Project, 1958</td>
<td>Eisenstein</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Éjszaka, 1989 (Gaál)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ek Adhuri Kahani, 1972</td>
<td>Sen</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ek Dil Sou Afsane, 1963</td>
<td>Kapoor</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ek din achanak, 1989</td>
<td>Sen</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ek Din Pratidin, 1979</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ek Hi Rasta, 1939</td>
<td>Mehboob Khan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ekberg, 1964 (Troell)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ekpombi, 1968 (Angelopoulos)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ekspeditricen, 1911</td>
<td>Blom</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eldsmiourinn, 1981</td>
<td>Fridriksson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eldora, vida mía, 1977</td>
<td>Saura</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elden, 1947 (Buñuel)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eldorado, 1923 (Alt-Antara)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eldsmiorinn, 1981</td>
<td>Fridriksson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elektrama, 1970 (Guzmán)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elective Affinities. See Affinità elettiva, 1996</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Electra, 1962 (Coyocanish)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Electric Alarm, 1915</td>
<td>Browning</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Electric Horseman, 1979</td>
<td>Pollack</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Electric House, 1922</td>
<td>Keaton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Electricity Cure, 1900</td>
<td>Hepworth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Electrification de la ligne Bruxelles-Anvers, 1935 (Storck)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Electrification de la ligne Paris-Vierzon, 1925 (Grémillon)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Électrocéuté, 1911</td>
<td>Gance</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Électrocéutée, 1904</td>
<td>Guy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Electroshow, 1966</td>
<td>Guzmán</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elektria. See Szerelmêm, Élektar, 1935</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Element of Crime. See Forbrydelsens element, 1984</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elementary Phrases, 1994</td>
<td>(Brakhage)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eléna et les hommes, 1956</td>
<td>Blvd</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elephant Boy, 1937</td>
<td>Crichton; Flaherty; Korda</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elephant Called Slowly, 1969</td>
<td>(Launder and Gilliat)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elephant God. See Jloi Baba Felunath, 1978</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elephant Man, 1980</td>
<td>Brooks; Lynch</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elephant Shooting the Chutes at Luna Park, 1904 (Porter)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elevén, See A it, 1971</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elegy of the North. See Banka, 1957</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elektrevia. See Szerelmêm, Élektar, 1935</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Element of Crime. See Forbrydelsens element, 1984</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elemental Phrases, 1994</td>
<td>(Brakhage)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elena et les hommes, 1956</td>
<td>Blvd</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elephant Boy, 1937</td>
<td>Crichton; Flaherty; Korda</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elephant Called Slowly, 1969</td>
<td>(Launder and Gilliat)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elephant God. See Jloi Baba Felunath, 1978</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elephant Man, 1980</td>
<td>Brooks; Lynch</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elephant Shooting the Chutes at Luna Park, 1904 (Porter)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eletünket és vérunket: Magyar rapszödia 1, 1978 (Jancsó)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eletjel, 1954 (Fábri)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eletkönnyet és vérunyet: Magyar rapszódia 1, 1978 (Jancsó)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elevator to the Gallows. See Ascenseur pour l’échafaud, 1958</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eleventh Year. See Odinadsatsit, 1928</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elf Teufel, 1927 (Forst; Korda)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elsa, My Love. See Elisa, vida mía, 1977</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elsa, vida mía, 1977</td>
<td>(Saura)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elisir d’amore, 1946</td>
<td>(Bava)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elite Ball, 1913 (Senetti)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elizabeth, 1964 (Attenborough)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elizabeth: The Virgin Queen. See Elizabeth, 1998</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ella Cinders, 1926 (Leroy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elle court, elle court la banlieue, 1972 (Kuryss; Miller)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ellahammer, 1957 (Roos)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ellery Queen, Master Detective, 1940</td>
<td>(Niblo)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elmer the Great, 1933</td>
<td>Leroy</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Éloge de l’amour, 1999 (Godard)               |
Eloping with Auntie, 1909 (Griffith)          |
Elsie Haas, femme peintre et cinéaste d’Haiti, 1985 (Faye) |
Elsie Haas, Haitian Woman Painter and Filmmaker. See Elsie Haas, femme peintre et cinéaste d’Haiti, 1985 |
Elskovs Mast, 1913 (Holger-Madsen)            |
Elskovs Opfindsomhed, 1913 (Dreyer)           |
Elskovsleg, 1913 (Blom; Holger-Madsen)        |
Elstree Calling, 1930 (Hitchcock)             |
Eltávozott nap, 1968 (Mészáros)               |
Éléotis Tiszá-víz, 1954 (Jancsó)              |
Elusive Corporal. See Ceparol épínglé, 1962  |
Elusive Pimpernel, 1950 (Powell and Pressburger) |
Elvis, 1979 (Carpenter)                       |
Emak-Bakia, 1926 (Ray)                       |
Embarquement pour le promenade, 1896-97 (Lumiére) |
Emberek! Ne engedjétek!, 1954 (Jancsó)        |
Embezzler, 1914 (Dwan)                        |
Emerald Forest, 1985 (Boorman)               |
Emergency Call, 1933 (Mankiewicz)             |
Emergency Squad, 1939 (Dmytryk)               |
Emigrant, 1994 (Chahine)                      |
Emil and the Detectives, 1935 (Lauder and Gilliat) |
Emil and the Detectives. See Emil und die Detektive, 1931 |
Emil und die Detektive, 1931 (Wilder)         |
Emi, 1952 (Buñuel)                            |
Em😘, 1971 (Sembene)                         |
Emlékek, ifjúság, 1955 (Jancsó)               |
Emigrants. See Utvandrarna, 1970              |
Emotional Education. See Selskaya uchitelnitsa, 1947 |
Emperor, 1965-67 (Lucas)                     |
Emperor of the North, 1973 (Aldrich)          |
Emperor of the North Pole. See Emperor of the North, 1973 |
Emperor Waltz, 1948 (Wilder)                  |
Emperor’s Baker and the Baker’s Emperor. See Cisař pekař a Pekařův pekař, 1951 |
Empire, 1964 (Warhol)                         |
Empire of Passion. See Ai no borei, 1978      |
Empire of the Senses. See Ai no corrida, 1976 |
Empire of the Sun, 1987 (Spielberg)           |
Empire Sonnai. See Songhays, 1963            |
Empire Strikes Back, 1980 (Kasdan; Kershner; Lucas) |
Employee. See Angestellte, 1972               |
Employment Discrimination: The Troubleshooters, 1976 (Coolidge) |
Empress, 1917 (Guy)                           |
Emproyed-out Grocer’s Shop. See U sněženého krámu, 1933 |
Empty Hands, 1924 (Fleming)                   |
Empty Table. See Shokutaku no nai ie, 1985    |
En Aeresoprejsning, 1914 (Holger-Madsen)      |
En av de många, 1915 (Sjöström)               |
En by ved navn Köbenhaven, 1960 (Roos)        |
En Cas de malheur, 1958 (Autant-Lara)        |
En classe, 1897/98 (Guy)                      |
En coups de route. See Utközbén, 1979         |
En de zee was niet meer, 1955 (Haanstra)      |
En el Nombre de Dios, 1986 (Guzmán)           |
En ensom Kvinde, 1913 (Sjöström)              |
En by ved navn Köbenhaven, 1960 (Roos)        |
En Cas de malheur, 1958 (Autant-Lara)        |
En classe, 1897/98 (Guy)                      |
En Corps de Route. See Utközbén, 1979         |
En de zee was niet meer, 1955 (Haanstra)      |
En el Nombre de Dios, 1986 (Guzmán)           |
En ensom Kvinde, 1913 (Sjöström)              |
En by ved navn Köbenhaven, 1960 (Roos)        |
En Cas de malheur, 1958 (Autant-Lara)        |
En classe, 1897/98 (Guy)                      |
En Frsen dröm, 1997 (Troell)                  |
En Gaest fra en anden Verden. See Tugthusfange No. 97, 1914 |
End of a Clairvoyant.
Encyclopédie filmée—Alchimie, Azur, Absence, 1952 (Grémillon)
Encounter.
Enchanted Island, 1958 (Dwan)
Enchanted Desna.
Enchanted Cottage, 1945 (Cromwell)
Enchanted Desna. See Zacharovannyaya Desna, 1965
Enchanted Drawing, 1900 (Porter)
Enchantment, 1916 (Borzage)
Encounter. See Stranger on the Prowl, 1952
Encyclopedia filmée—Alchimie, Azur, Absence, 1952 (Grémillon)
End of a Clairvoyant. See Koniec jasnovidce, 1958
End of a Prolonged Journey. See Hana no nagadosu, 1954
End of Arthur’s Marriage. 1965 (Loach)
End of Battle Fire. See Senka no hate, 1950
End of Dawn. 1964 (Warhol)
End of Desire. See Vie, 1958
End of Innocence. See Casa del ángel, 1957
End of St. Petersburg. See Konyets Sankt-Peterburga, 1927
End of Summer. See Kohayagawa-ke no aki, 1961
End of the Affair. 1954 (Dmytryk)
End of the Affair, 1999 (Jordan)
End of the Feud, 1912 (Dwan)
End of the Feud, 1914 (Dwan)
End of the Game. See Richter und sein Henker, 1975
End of the Good Old Days. See Koneč starych casu, 1989
End of the Night. See Koniec wojny, 1956
End of Violence, 1997 (Wenders)
Endangered Species, 1982 (Rudolph)
Ende eines Wintermärchens, 1977 (Syberberg)
Endelig Alene, 1914 (Holger-Madsen)
Endise, 1974 (Güney)
Endless Desire. See Hateshinaki yokubo, 1958
Endless Love, 1981 (Zeffirelli)
Endless Night, 1972 (Laurnier and Gilliat)
Endless Passion. See Hateshinaki jonetsu, 1949
Entei, mene, mink, 1977 (Dörrer)
Enemigo principal. 1974 (Sanjinés)
Enemy, 1928 (Fukui)
Enemy. See Dūsman, 1979
Enemy Air Attack. See Tekki kushu, 1943
Enemy Mine, 1985 (Petersen)
Enemy of the People. See Ganashatru, 1989
Enemy of the People. See Minshu no teki, 1946
Énergie et vous, 1961 (Storck)
Energy First, 1955 (Anderson)
Enfance nue, 1970 (Berri; Pialat)
Enfant aimé, 1971 (Akerman)
Enfant de la barricade. See Sur la barricade, 1907
Enfant de la roulotte, 1914 (Feuillade)
Enfant de l’amour, 1929 (L’herbier)
Enfant et chien, 1896-97 (Lumièrè)
Enfant sauvage. 1969 (Müller; Truffaut)
Enfants, 1985 (Duras)
Enfants au bord de la mer, 1896-97 (Lumièrè)
Enfants aux jouets, 1895 (Lumièrè)
Enfants de la peur. See Os filhos do medo, 1978
Enfants de Lumièrè, 1995 (Müller; Sautet)
Enfants du miracle, 1903/04 (Guy)
Enfants du paradis, 1945 (Carné)
Enfants du siècle, 1999 (Kurys)
Enfants jouent a la Russie, 1995 (Godard)
Enfants terribles, 1950 (Cocteau; Melville)
Enfer, 1994 (Chabrol)
Enfoiré, 1950 (Walsh)
Enfoiré, 1976 (Eastwood)
Engagement. See I fidanzati, 1963
Engagement Ring, 1911 (Sennett)
Engagement Ring. See Konyaku yubiwa, 1950
Engineer Prite’s Project. See Proyekt izhenera Praita, 1918
Englischer altheimsins, 2000 (Fridriksson)
English Potter, 1933 (Flaherty)
Englishman and the Girl, 1910 (Griffith; Sennett)
Engrenage, 1919 (Feuillade)
Enigma, 1987 (Rouch)
Enigma, 2000 (Apted)
Enigma of Kaspar Hauser. See Jeder für sich und Gott gegen alle, 1974
Enigma, 1919 (Feuillade)
Enigma de dix heures, 1916 (Gance)
Enjo, 1958 (Ichikawa)
Enlèvement en automobile et mariage précipité, 1903 (Guy)
Enlèvement en automobile et mariage précipité. See Erleuchtung garantiert, 2000
Enlisted Man’s Honor, 1911 (Guy)
Enmixed, 1937 (Storck)
Enoch Arden, Part II, 1911 (Griffith)
Enoch Arden, Part I, 1911 (Griffith)
Ennemi public, 1937 (Storck)
Engelhardt, 1909 (Griffith)
Enormous Changes at the Last Minute, 1985 (Sayles)
Enough of It. See Et Huskers, 1914
Enough Rope. See Meurtrier, 1963
Enough Simplicity in Every Wise Man, 1923 (Eisenstein)
ENrages, 1985 (Berri)
Enredando sombras, 1998 (Berri; Costa-Gavras)
Enrages, 1985 (Berri)
Englar alheimsins, 2000 (Fridriksson)
Engineer Prite’s Project. See Proyekt izhenera Praita, 1918
Englard, 1909 (Griffith)
Enforces, 1950 (Walsh)
Enrages, 1985 (Berri)
Enrages, 1985 (Berri)
Engravemen, 1973 (Rouch)
Entertainer, 1960 (Richardson)
Enthusiasm: Symphony of the Don Basin. See Entuziazm: Simfoniia Donbassa, 1931
Enulosuo mi u le hongiio, 1953 (Josho)
Entr’acte, 1924 (Clair; Ray)
Entre la mer et l’eau douce, 1967 (Arcand)
Entre Nous, See Coup de foudre, 1983
Entre tinieblas, 1983 (Almodóvar)
Entuziazm: Simfoniia Donbassa, 1931 (Vertov)
Envers du décor: Portrait de Pierre Guffoy, 1992 (Forman)
Envers du paradis, 1953 (von Stroheim)
Eo kaku kodomotachi, 1955 (Hani)
Epervier, 1933 (L'herbier)
Envers du paradis, 1953 (von Stroheim)
Envers du décor: Portrait de Pierre Guffoy, 1992 (Forman)
Epitaph to My Love.
Era notte a Roma, 1960 (Rossellini)
Er i bange, 1971 (Roos)
Erk a bino, 1915 (Feuillade)
Errand Boy, 1961 (Lewis)
Erik the Conqueror.
Erh Tzu Tê Ta Wan Ou, 1983 (Hou Hsiao-Hsien)
Eremitten.
Erdbebenin Chile, 1974 (Sanders-Brahms)
Ercole e la regina di Lidia, 1959 (Bava)
Ercole al centro della terra, 1961 (Bava)
Erreur tragique, 1913 (Feuillade)
Erreur judiciaire, 1899/1900 (Guy)
Erreur de poivrot, 1904 (Guy)
Errand Boy, 1961 (Lewis)
Equinox, 1993 (Rudolph)
Equinox Flower.
Equinox, 1994 (Borden)
Eroticon.
Erotica, 1961 (Meyer)
Erotic Tales. See Cuentos eróticos, 1979
Erotica.
Erotica, 1961 (Meyer)
Erotica, 1910 (Feuillade)
Erotica, 1978 (Fernández)
Erotica. See Amore difficile, 1960
Eroticon. See Erotica, 1961
Erotik, 1920 (Stiller)
Erotique, 1994 (Borden)
Érotique. See Erotyck, 1960
Erotyck, 1960 (Skolimowski)
Errand Boy, 1961 (Lewis)
Erreur de poivrot, 1904 (Guy)
Erreur judiciaire, 1899/1900 (Guy)
Erreur tragique, 1913 (Feuillade)
Erste walzer, 1978 (Dörrie)
Eruption, 1997 (Corman)
Es geschah am 20 Juli, 1955 (Pabst)
Es geschahchen noch Wunder, 1951 (Forst)
Es hilft nicht, wo Gewalt herrscht. See Nicht versöhnt oder Es hilft nur Gewalt, wo Gewalt herrscht, 1965
Es ist nicht leicht ein Gott zu sein, 1989 (Herzog)
Es leuchten die Sterne, 1938 (Forst)
Es war einmal ein Walzer, 1932 (Wilder)
Es werde Licht, 1917/18 (Pick)
Es Werde Licht, 1918 (Dupont)
Esa luz!, 1998 (Saura)
Esa pareja feliz, 1951 (Bardem; García Berlanga)

Envers du décor: Portrait de Pierre Guffoy, 1992 (Forman)
Envers du paradis, 1953 (von Stroheim)
Eo kaku kodomotachi, 1955 (Hani)
Epervier, 1933 (L'herbier)
Envers du paradis, 1953 (von Stroheim)
Envers du décor: Portrait de Pierre Guffoy, 1992 (Forman)
Epitaph to My Love.
Era notte a Roma, 1960 (Rossellini)
Er i bange, 1971 (Roos)
Erk a bino, 1915 (Feuillade)
Errand Boy, 1961 (Lewis)
Erik the Conqueror.
Erh Tzu Tê Ta Wan Ou, 1983 (Hou Hsiao-Hsien)
Eremitten.
Erdbebenin Chile, 1974 (Sanders-Brahms)
Ercole e la regina di Lidia, 1959 (Bava)
Ercole al centro della terra, 1961 (Bava)
Erreur tragique, 1913 (Feuillade)
Erreur judiciaire, 1899/1900 (Guy)
Erreur de poivrot, 1904 (Guy)
Errand Boy, 1961 (Lewis)
Equinox, 1993 (Rudolph)
Equinox Flower.
Equinox, 1994 (Borden)
Eroticon.
Erotica, 1961 (Meyer)
Erotic Tales. See Cuentos eróticos, 1979
Erotica.
Erotica, 1910 (Feuillade)
Eroticon. See Erotica, 1961
Erotik, 1920 (Stiller)
Erotique, 1994 (Borden)
Érotique. See Erotyck, 1960
Erotyck, 1960 (Skolimowski)
Errand Boy, 1961 (Lewis)
Erreur de poivrot, 1904 (Guy)
Erreur judiciaire, 1899/1900 (Guy)
Erreur tragique, 1913 (Feuillade)
Erste walzer, 1978 (Dörrie)
Eruption, 1997 (Corman)
Es geschah am 20 Juli, 1955 (Pabst)
Es geschahchen noch Wunder, 1951 (Forst)
Es hilft nicht, wo Gewalt herrscht. See Nicht versöhnt oder Es hilft nur Gewalt, wo Gewalt herrscht, 1965
Es ist nicht leicht ein Gott zu sein, 1989 (Herzog)
Es leuchten die Sterne, 1938 (Forst)
Es war einmal ein Walzer, 1932 (Wilder)
Es werde Licht, 1917/18 (Pick)
Es Werde Licht, 1918 (Dupont)
Esa luz!, 1998 (Saura)
Esa pareja feliz, 1951 (Bardem; Garcia Berlanga)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Directors</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Eternal City</td>
<td>1915</td>
<td>Porter</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eternal Love</td>
<td>1929</td>
<td>Lubitsch</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eternal Love. See Liang Shan-po yu Chu Ying T’ai</td>
<td>1963</td>
<td>Griffith</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eternal Mother</td>
<td>1911</td>
<td>Griffith</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eternal Prague</td>
<td>1941</td>
<td>Weiss</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eternal Rainbow. See Kono ten no niji</td>
<td>1958</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eternal Return</td>
<td>1943</td>
<td>Cocteau; Delannoy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eternity and a Day. See Mia Ainswotha Kae Mia Mera</td>
<td>1998</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ethel Gets Consent.</td>
<td>1914/15</td>
<td>Browning</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ethel’s Teacher</td>
<td>1914</td>
<td>Browning</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ethnic Notions</td>
<td>1986</td>
<td>Riggs</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Étirage des ampoules électriques, 1924 (Grémillon)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Etnocidio: notas sobre el Mezquital</td>
<td>1978</td>
<td>Leduc</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Étoile de mer.</td>
<td>1928</td>
<td>Ray</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Étoile disparait.</td>
<td>1932</td>
<td>Delannoy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Étrange aventure de Lenny Caution</td>
<td>1965</td>
<td>Godard</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Étrange Madame X, 1951 (Grémillon)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Étrange Monsieur Victor.</td>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Grémillon</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Étranger. See Stranierno.</td>
<td>1967</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Étsuraku, 1965</td>
<td>Oshima</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ettore lo fusto</td>
<td>1972</td>
<td>Nicolaicci</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Every Day’s a Holiday.</td>
<td>1964</td>
<td>Roeg</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Every Day except Christmas.</td>
<td>1957</td>
<td>Anderson; Reisz</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Every Day’s a Holiday.</td>
<td>1964</td>
<td>Roeg</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Every Man for Himself and God against All. See Jeder für sich und</td>
<td>1974</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gott gegen alle.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Every Minute Counts.</td>
<td>1953</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Every Mother’s Son.</td>
<td>1919</td>
<td>Walsh</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Every Night at Night</td>
<td>1935</td>
<td>Walsh</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Every Revolution Is a Throw of the Dice. See Toute révolution est</td>
<td>1977</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>un coup de dés</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Every Which Way but Loose.</td>
<td>1978</td>
<td>Eastwood</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Every Woman for Herself and All for Art.</td>
<td>1977</td>
<td>Jarman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Everybody Does It.</td>
<td>1949</td>
<td>Goulding</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Everybody Wins.</td>
<td>1989</td>
<td>Reisz</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Everybody’s Doing It.</td>
<td>1971</td>
<td>Irving</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Everybody’s Woman.</td>
<td>1924</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Everyday, 1962</td>
<td>Baillie</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Everyman</td>
<td>1962</td>
<td>Balsillie</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Everyone off to Jail.</td>
<td>1993</td>
<td>Allen</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Everyone Says I Love You</td>
<td>1996</td>
<td>Allen</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Everything Ends Tonight.</td>
<td>1955</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Everything for Sale.</td>
<td>1968</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Everything That Lives.</td>
<td>1934</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Everything You Always Wanted to Know about Sex but Were Afraid to</td>
<td>1972</td>
<td>Allen</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ask, 1972</td>
<td>Allen</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Everything’s in Order But Nothing Works. See Tutto a posto e niente</td>
<td>1974</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>in ordine</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Everywoman’s Man. See Prizefighter and the Lady.</td>
<td>1933</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Evil Angels. See A Cry in the Dark.</td>
<td>1988</td>
<td>Raimi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Evil Dead</td>
<td>1982</td>
<td>Raimi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Evil Dead II</td>
<td>1987</td>
<td>Raimi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Evil Eye. See Ragazza che sapeva troppo</td>
<td>1963</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Evil Genius. See Truet Lykke.</td>
<td>1915</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Evil Inheritance.</td>
<td>1972</td>
<td>Dwane</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Evil Men Do</td>
<td>1915</td>
<td>Ingram</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Evil, 1996</td>
<td>Parker</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ewigkeit von gestern.</td>
<td>1960</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ex-Convict.</td>
<td>1904</td>
<td>Porter</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ex-lady, 1932</td>
<td>Florey</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ex-Rooster.</td>
<td>1932</td>
<td>Sandwich</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ex-Sweeties.</td>
<td>1931</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ex-voto, 1919</td>
<td>Autant-Lara</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ex-Voto. See Diable au coeur.</td>
<td>1927</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Examination Day at School.</td>
<td>1910</td>
<td>Griffith</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Examination, Pass Mark.</td>
<td>1969</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Example. See Ibret.</td>
<td>1971</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Excalibur.</td>
<td>1981</td>
<td>Boorman; Jordan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Excess Baggage.</td>
<td>1928</td>
<td>Davies</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Exchange Is No Robbery.</td>
<td>1898</td>
<td>Hepworth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Exciting Courtship.</td>
<td>1914</td>
<td>Irving</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Excursion a Vueltabajo.</td>
<td>1965</td>
<td>Gómez</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Executioner.</td>
<td>1968</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Executioner. See Verdugo.</td>
<td>1963</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Executive Suite.</td>
<td>1954</td>
<td>Wise</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Exhumation of the Holy Remains of St. Sergius of Radonezh. See</td>
<td>1919</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vskrytie moschei Sergiya Radonezhskogo</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Exhumation of the Remains of Sergius of Radonezh. See Vskrytie</td>
<td>1919</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>moschei Sergiae Radonezhskogo</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Exile, 1917 (Tournier).</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Exile, 1931 (Michaux)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Exile, 1947 (Ophuls)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Exiled. See Aventurersken.</td>
<td>1914</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Exiles. See De Landsflyktige.</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>EXistentZ.</td>
<td>1999</td>
<td>Cronenberg</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Exodus.</td>
<td>1910</td>
<td>Feuillade</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Exodus, 1960</td>
<td>Preminger</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Exorcist.</td>
<td>1973</td>
<td>Friedkin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Exorcist II: The Heretic.</td>
<td>1977</td>
<td>Boorman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Film Title</td>
<td>Year</td>
<td>Director(s)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>----------------------------------</td>
<td>------</td>
<td>------------------------------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Exotica</td>
<td>1994</td>
<td>Egoyan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Expedition. See Abhijan, 1962</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Experience. See Tadjrebeh, 1973</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Experiment, 1943 (Frič)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Experiment in Evil. See Testament du Docteur Cordelier, 1959</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Experiment Perilous, 1944 (Tourneur)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Expiated Innocence. See Sonad oskuld, 1915</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Expiation, 1909 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Expiation, 1915 (Feuillade)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Exploits of an Intelligence Agent. See Podvig razvedchika, 1947</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Explorers, 1985 (Dante)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Explosion of a Motor Car, 1900 (Hepworth)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Expostulations, 1960/62 (Romero)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Express Train in a Railway Cutting, 1899 (Hepworth)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Expropriation. See Expropriation, 1973 (Ruiz)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Exquisite Thief, 1919 (Browning)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Exquisite Sinner, 1926 (Florey; von Sternberg)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eyes. See Ansiktet, 1958</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Extra Girl, 1923 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Extraordinary Adventures of Mr. West in the Land of the Bolsheviks. See Neobykhainye priklicheniya Mistera Vesta v stranye bolshevikov, 1924</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Extraordinary Child, 1954 (Brakhage)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Extraordinary Seaman, 1968 (Frankenheimer)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Extraordinary Years. See Neoby’ejná léta, 1952</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Extreme Measures, 1996 (Apted)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Extreme Prejudice, 1987 (Hill)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eye for an Eye, 1996 (Schlesinger)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eye Myth, 1972 (Brakhage)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eye Myth, 1981 (Brakhage)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eye of the Eagle, 1992 (Corman)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eye of the Vichy. See Ocil de Vichy, 1993</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eye See You, 2001 (Howard)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eyes. See Pittsburgh Documents, 1971</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eyes Do Not Want to Close at All Times or Perhaps One Day Rome Will Permit Herself to Choose in Her Turn, Othon. See Othon, 1969</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eyes in the Night, 1942 (Zinnemann)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eyes of a Stranger, Roses Are Dead; Secret Lies; Secret Lives. See Acting on Impulse, 1993</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eyes of God, 1913 (Weber)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eyes of Laura Mars, 1978 (Carpenter)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eyes of Mystery, 1918 (Browning)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eyes that Could Not Close, 1913 (Guy)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eyes That See Not, 1912 (Porter)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eyes, the Mouth. See Occhi, la bocca, 1982</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eyes Wide Shut, 1999 (Kubrick; Pollack)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eyes without a Face. See Yeux sans visages, 1959</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eyewitness. See Sudden Terror, 1970</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>F for Fake, 1973 (Bogdanovich; Welles)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>F. Murray Abraham: Man and Actor, 1987 (Jireš)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fabián Bálint találkozása Istennel, 1979 (Fábri)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Faking with Society. See Karakuri musume, 1927</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fainting Lover, 1931 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fair Co-ed, 1927 (Tourneur)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fair Exchange, 1909 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fair Exchange. See Getting Acquainted, 1914</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Faire-part: Musée Henri Langlois, 1997 (Rouch)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fairlytale Country. See Sagolandet, 1988</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Faithful, 1910 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Faithful Taxicab, 1913 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Failure’s Song Is Sad. See Haizan no uta wa kanashi, 1923</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Failure . . . L’ occasion . . . L’herbe tendre, 1904 (Guy)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Faint Heart, 1922 (La Cava)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fainting Lover, 1931 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fail-Safe, 2000 (Frears)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Factotum. See Portaborse, 1991</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Faded Lilies, 1909 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fader og Søn, 1911 (Blom)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Faderen, 1909 (Blom)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fadern, 1969 (Sjöberg)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fad’jal, 1979 (Faye)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fado, Majeur et Mineur, 1994 (Rui)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fad’renal, 1969 (Sjöberg)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fadern, 1909 (Blom)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fad’jal, 1979 (Faye)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fado, Majeur et Mineur, 1994 (Rui)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fabrik, 1970</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fabryka, 1980 (Szpilman)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fabryka, 1970 (Kieslowski)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fabryka, 1980 (Szpilman)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fabryka, 1980 (Szpilman)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fabrication du ciment artificiel, 1924 (Grémillon)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fabrication du fil, 1924 (Grémillon)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fabryka, 1970 (Kieslowski)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fabryka, 1980 (Szpilman)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fabryka, 1980 (Szpilman)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fabullesque Aventure de Marco Polo, 1964 (Welles)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fabuleux voyage de l’ange, 1991 (Lefebvre)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Face. 1965 (Warhol)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Face. See Ansiktet, 1958</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Face at the Window, 1910 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Face at the Window, 1912 (Guy)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Face behind the Mask, 1940 (Florey)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Fall Tokeramo. See Polizeiakte 909, 1933
Fallen Angel, 1945 (Preminger)
Fallen Angels, 1993 (Bogdanovich; Soderbergh)
Fallen Champ: The Untold Story of Mike Tyson, 1993 (Kopple)
Fallen Hero, 1913 (Browning)
Fallen Idol, 1948 (Reed)
Fallen Star, 1916 (Hepworth)
Fallen Woman. See Daraku suru onna, 1967
Falling Down, 1993 (Schumacher)
Falling Fire, 1997 (Corman)
Falling for You, 1933 (Launder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)
Falling Leaves, 1912 (Guisham)
Falling Leaves. See Listopad, 1966
Falls, 1980 (Greenaway)
Falsche Arzt. See Namenlos, 1923
Falsche Bewegung, 1974 (Wenders)
Falsche Ehrenmann, 1931 (Wildl)
Fälschung, 1981 (Bergman; Soderbergh)
Fainting, 1924 (Koegler)
Far from the Madding Crowd, 1967 (Roeg; Schlesinger)
Far from Vietnam. See Loin de la guerre, 1967
Far from Vietnam. See Loin du Viêt-nam, 1967
Far out Man, 1990 (Bertolucci)
Faró-dokument, 1969 (Bergman)
Faró-dokument, 1979, 1979 (Bergman)
Faraon, 1965 (Kawalerowicz)
Faraway, So Close.
Farewell.
Farewell Army.
Farewell to Arms, 1957 (de Sica; Huston)
Farewell, My Concubine.
Farewell, My Lovely, 1944 (Dmytryk)
Farewell, My Precious.
Farewell, My Concubine.
Farewell to Your Love.
Farewell to Arms, 1957 (Roeg; Schlesinger)
Fashions for Women, 1927 (Arzner)
Fast and Loose, 1930 (Sturges)
Fast and the Furious, 1954 (Corman)
Fast and the Furious, 1939 (Bergman)
Fast Company, 1929 (Marien)
Fast Call, 1929 (Dwan)
Fawlty Towers, 1982 (Bennett)
Fawn in the Street.
Faya, 1974 (Medina)
Feast of Love, 1982 (Raimi)
Félicité, 1996 (Corin)
Federico, 1924 (Duvivier)
Fefil, 1974 (Rousseau)
Federal Agent, 1935 (Bogdanovich)
Federico, 1924 (Duvivier)
Federico, 1924 (Duvivier)
Federico, 1924 (Duvivier)
Federico, 1924 (Duvivier)
Federico, 1924 (Duvivier)
Fat City, 1972 (Huston)
Fat Man and Little Boy, 1989 (Joffé)
Fat Man and the Thin Man. See Gros et le maigre, 1961
Fat Wives for Thin, 1929 (Sennett)
Fata Morgana, 1969 (Herzog)
Fatal Chocolate, 1911 (Sennett)
Fatal Flirtation, 1914 (Sennett)
Fatal Glass of Beer. See Deadly Glass of Beer, 1916
Fatal Glass of Beer, 1933 (Sennett)
Fatal High, 1914 (Sennett)
Fatal Hour, 1908 (Griffith)
Fatal Lie. See Fru Potifar, 1911
Fatal Mallet, 1914 (Chaplin; Sennett)
Fatal Hour, 1908 (Griffith)
Fatal High, 1914 (Sennett)
Fatal Glass of Beer.
Fatal Flirtation, 1914 (Sennett)
Fatal Chocolate, 1911 (Sennett)
Fatty’s Flirtation, 1913 (Sennett)
Fatty’s Gift, 1914 (Sennett)
Fatty’s Jonah Day, 1914 (Sennett)
Fatty’s Magic Pants, 1914 (Sennett)
Fatty’s New Role, 1915 (Sennett)
Fatty’s Reckless Fling, 1915 (Sennett)
Fatty’s Wine Party, 1914 (Sennett)
Faut, 1918 (Korda)
Faunovo prilis pozdní odpoledne, 1983 (Chytilová)
Faust, 1900/07 (Guy)
Faust, 1926 (Murnau)
Faust, 1970 (Syberberg)
Faust 3: Candida Albacore, 1988 (Brakhage)
Faust 4, 1989 (Brakhage)
Faust et Mephistophélès, 1903 (Guy)
FaustFilm: An Opera, 1987 (Brakhage)
Faustrechte der Freiheit, 1974 (Fassbinder)
Faust’s Other: An Idyll, 1988 (Brakhage)
Faut-il les marier?, 1932 (Clouzot)
Faut Vivre Dangereusement, 1974 (Kaplan)
Faute d’orthographe, 1919 (Feyder)
Favoris de la Lune, 1984 (Ioselliani)
Favorite Fool, 1915 (Sennett)
Favorite Wife of the Maharaja II. See Maharadjaens
Yndlingshuset II, 1918
Fayette, 1961 (de Sica)
Fazil, 1927 (Hawks)
FBI Story, 1959 (Leroy)
Faye D’Anjou, 1955
Faust, 1970 (Syberberg)
Father Panchali.
Father of the Bride, 1950 (Minnelli)
Father Sorrow.
Father Sergius.
Father Gets in the Game, 1908 (Griffith; Sennett)
Father Vojtech.
Father Christmas Has Blue Eyes. See Père Noël a les yeux bleus, 1966
Father Gets in the Game, 1908 (Griffith; Sennett)
Father Master. See Padre padrone, 1977
Father of the Bride, 1950 (Minnelli)
Father Panchali. See Pathé Panchali, 1955
Father Sergius. See Oets Sergijs, 1918
Father Sorrow. See Smil, 1916
Father to Be, 1979 (Hallstrom)
Father Vojtech. See Páter Vojtěch, 1928
Father Vojtech. See Pater Vojtěch, 1936
Father Was a Fullback, 1949 (Stahl)
Father Washes His Children, 1974 (Asch)
Fatherland, 1986 (Loach)
Father’s Day Off, 1913 (Sennett)
Father’s Death, 1914 (Sennett)
Father’s Faithful Fido, 1915 (Sennett)
Father’s Finish, 1914 (Sennett)
Fifth Seal. See Az ötödik pecsét, 1976.

Female
Female Impersonator.
Female Demon. See Chokon yasha, 1928
Female of the Species, 1912 (Griffith; Weber)
Female Trouble, 1974 (Waters)
Femelle zilelor noastre, 1958 (Mészáros)
Feminine Touch, 1941 (Mankiewicz)
Femme coquette, 1955 (Godard)
Femme d’à côté, 1981 (Truffaut)
Femme de l’aviateur, 1980 (Rohmer)
Femme de mon pote, 1982 (Blier)
Femme de Rose Hill, 1989 (Tanner)
Femme disparaît, 1942 (Feyder)
Femme douce, 1969 (Bresson)

Femme du boulanger, 1938 (Pagnol)
Femme du bout de monde, 1937 (Epstein)
Femme du Ganges, 1974 (Duras)
Femme d’une nuit, 1930 (L’herbier)
Femme escarlate, 1968 (Chabrol)
Femme en blanc se révolte. See Nouveau Journal d’une femme en blanc, 1966

Femme est une femme, 1961 (Godard)
Femme et le pantin, 1958 (Duvivier)
Femme fatale, 1917 (Feuillade)
Femme fidèle, 1976 (Vadim)
Femme infidèle, 1969 (Chabrol)
Femme mariée, 1964 (Godard)
Femme Nikita, 1990 (Besson)
Femme spectacle, 1960 (Lelouch)

Félicité, 1979 (Miller)

Felicia’s Journey, 1999 (Egoyan)
Felices Pascuas, 1954 (Bardem)
Ferdinand Lassalle, 1918 (Dupont)
Ferdinando I, re di Napoli, 1959 (de Sica)

Fernando e Carolina, 1939 (Eisenstein)
Ferghana Canal, 1939 (Eisenstein)
Fierebùrn, 1952 (Roos)
Fermière à Montfacon, 1967 (Rohmer)
Fernandes, 1969 (Fassbinder)
Ferrero, 1956 (Germi)
Ferry to Hong Kong, 1959 (Welles)
Fertilizzanti complessi, 1956 (Olmi)

Fertilitzzanti prodotti dalla Societa del Gruppo Edison, 1959 (Olmi)
Festin de Balthazar, 1910 (Feuillade)
Festival de Dakar, 1965 (Rouch)
Festival of American Folklife, 1976 (Marshall)
Festívák városa—Szentendre, 1964 (Mészáros)
Fête à Henriette, 1952 (Duvivier)
Fête des Gondyi Bi à Simiri, 1977 (Rouch)
Fête du Sanke, 1970-71 (Cissé)
Fête espagnole, 1919 (Dulac)
Fêtes de Belgiques, 1969-72 (Storck)
Fêtes de novembre à Bregbo, 1966 (Rouch)
Fêtes du centenaire, 1930 (Storck)
Fêtes galantes, 1965 (Clair)

Fetters. See Pouta, 1961
Fetus. See A Magzat, 1993

Feu!, 1937 (Delannoy)
Feu follet, 1963 (Malle)

Festival del diablo, 1930 (Goulding)
Fidélité romaine, 1911 (Feuillade)
Fidelity, 1912 (Dwan)

Fido’s Fate, 1916 (Sennett)
Fido’s Tin-Type Tangle, 1915 (Sennett)
Field, 1990 (Sheridan)
Field of Fire, 1992 (Corman)
Field of Honor, 1973 (Zemeckis)
Fierce Creatures, 1997 (Scheppis)
Fiesco, 1921 (Leni)

Feu Mathias Pascal, 1924 (Cavalcanti; L’herbier)
Feud and the Turkey, 1908 (Griffith)
Feud in the Kentucky Hills, 1912 (Griffith)
Feuerlöscher E. A. Winterstein, 1968 (Kluge)
Feuertaufe, 1940 (Buñuel)
Feuerzangenbowle, 1970 (Käutner)

Fete espagnole, 1919 (Dulac)
Fêtes du Sanke, 1919 (Dulac)

Feu, 1981 (Holland)

Feuille de Balthazar, 1910 (Feuillade)
Feuille de l'épée, 1920 (Sennett)
Feuille de vie, 1923 (Sennett)
Feuille de vie, 1923 (Sennett)

Février, 1981 (Holland)

Feuilles de Rose Hill, 1936 (Keaton)

Fiercy and the Turkey, 1908 (Griffith)
Feu Mathias Pascal, 1924 (Cavalcanti; L’herbier)

Feu Mathias Pascal, 1924 (Cavalcanti; L’herbier)

Feu, 1981 (Holland)

Feu Mathias Pascal, 1924 (Cavalcanti; L’herbier)
Fifty Fantastics, 1965 (Warhol)
Fifty-Fifty, 1916 (Dwan)
Fifty Fifty, 1998 (Akerman)
Fifty–Mile Auto Contest, 1912 (Dwan)
Fifty Personalities, 1965 (Warhol)
Fifty Years of Action!, 1986 (Schlesinger)
Fig Leaves, 1926 (Hawks)
Fight Club, 1999 (Fincher)
Fight for Life, 1940 (Lorentz)
Fig Leaves, 1926 (Hawks)
Film about the Book.
Film about a Woman Who . . . , 1974 (Rainer)
Film, 1965 (Keaton)
Filles du cantonnier, 1909 (Feuillade)
Filles de la concierge, 1934 (Tourneur)
Fille sur le pont, 1999 (Leconte)
Fille revée, 1978 (Carax)
Fille et des fusils, 1964 (Lelouch)
Fille du puisatier, 1940 (Renou)
Fighting Film Album.
Fighter Squadron, 1948 (Walsh)
Fight for Love, 1919 (Ford)
Fighting Film Album No. 1, 1941 (Gerasimov)
Fighting Film Album No. 3. See Boyevoy kinosbornik no. 3, 1941
Fighting Film Album no. 10. See Boyevoy kinosbornik no. 10, 1942
Fighting Fluid, 1925 (McCarey)
Fighting Friends, Japanese Style. See Wasei kenka tomodachi, 1929
Fighting Heart, 1925 (Ford)
Fighting Instinct. See Manden, der sejrede, 1918
Fighting Mad, 1976 (Corman; Demme)
Fighting Odds, 1917 (Dwan)
Fighting Pimpernel.
Fighting Pimpernel. See Elusive Pimpernel, 1950
Fighting Tooth, (Nail) and the Government, 1988 (Marshall)
Fighting Tooth, (Nail) and the Government, 1988 (Marshall)
Fighting Film Album. See Boevi kinosbornik, 1942
Fighting Film Album no. 1, 1941 (Gerasimov)
Fireloop. See Caswallan Trilogy, 1986
Firefox, 1982 (Eastwood)
Firehawk, 1993 (Corman)
Fire Island, 1974 (Jarman)
Firelight, 1921 (Dwan)
Fireman, Do Not Despair, 1923 (Warhol)
Firemen, 1924 (Brecht)
Firends Keepers, 1994 (Lester)
Firends Keepers, Lovers Weepers!, 1968 (Meyer)
Finding Forrester, 2000 (van Sant)
Finding Forks, 1913 (Dwan)
Finding Forks, 1913 (Dwan)
Finding Buck McHenry, 2000 (Burnett)
Finding Buck McHenry, 2000 (Burnett)
Finding Forrester, 2000 (van Sant)
Finnegan's Bomb, 1914 (Ingram)
Finn and Hattie, 1931 (Mankiewicz)
Finn and Hattie, 1931 (Mankiewicz)
Fine Clothes, 1925 (Stahl)
Fine Feathers Make Fine Birds, 1914 (Ingram)
Fine Snow, 1983 (Èdithnaka)
Finnegan, Begin Again, 1985 (Silver)
Finnegan's Bomb, 1914 (Sennett)
Finnegan's Bomb, 1914 (Sennett)
Finger Print, 1927 (Brecht)
Finger Print, 1927 (Brecht)
Final Accord. See Schlussakkord, 1936
Final Verdict, 1914 (Griffith)
Finally Sunday.
Final Lie, 1958 (Cacoyannis)
Final Lie, 1958 (Cacoyannis)
Final Pardon, 1912 (Porter)
Final Pardon, 1912 (Porter)
Final Settlement, 1910 (Griffith)
Film about a Woman Who . . . , 1974 (Rainer)
Film, 1965 (Keaton)
Film about the Book. See Film o knjizi A.B.C., 1962
Film and Reality, 1952 (Cavalcanti)
Film and Reality, 1952 (Cavalcanti)
Film and Reality, 1952 (Cavalcanti)
Film and Reality, 1952 (Cavalcanti)
Film and Reality, 1952 (Cavalcanti)
Film and Reality, 1952 (Cavalcanti)
Film der Menschlichkeit.
Fils de deux meres ou Comedie de l'innocence, 2000 (Ruiz)
Fils de Gasconne, 1995 (Leacock)
Fils de la sunamitë, 111 (Feuillade)
Fils de l'eau, 1952 (Rouch)
Fils de Locuste, 1911 (Feuillade)
Fils du filibuster, 1922 (Feuillade)
Fils du garde-chasse, 1906 (Guy)
Fils du Rajah, 1931 (Autant-Lara)
Fils improvisé, 1932 (Delannoy)
Films by Stan Brakhage: An Avant-Garde Home Movie, 1961 (Brakhage)
FIREMAN, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)
Fireman E. A. Winterstein. See Feuerlöscher E. A. Winterstein, 1968
Fireman Save My Child, 1932 (Bacon)
Fires of Baku. See Ogni Baku, 1950
Fires on the Plain. See Nobi, 1959
Fires Were Started, 1943 (Jennings)
Fires Within, 1991 (Armstrong)
Fireside Brewer, 1920 (Sennett)
Fireside Theater, 1955 (Ford)
Firewood, 1974 (Asch)
Fireworks, 1947 (Anger)
Fireworks over the Sea.
Fireworks, 1947 (Anger)
Flame Within, 1991 (Armstrong)
Firm, 1993 (Pollack)
Firma Heiratet, 1914 (Lubitsch)
First Case. See Ghazieh-e Shekli-e Aval, Ghazieh-e Shekli-e Doi Wom, 1979
First Comes Courage, 1943 (Arzner)
First Gentleman, 1948 (Cavalcanti)
First Graders. See Avalia, 1984
First Hundred Years, 1924 (Capra; Sennett)
First Love. See Pervyi paren, 1958
First Legion, 1951 (Sirk)
First Love. See Hatsuuki, 1926
First Love. See Pervaya Lyubov’, 1915
First Love. See Pierwsza milosć, 1973
First Medical Mission, 1980 (Howard)
First Prize, 1927 (Sandrich)
First Run Features, 1984 (Apted)
First Time, 1951 (Tashlin)
First Time. See Premiere fois, 1976
First Travelling Saleslady, 1956 (Eastwood)
First Waltz. See Erste walzer, 1978
First Wave, 1998 (Copolla)
First Wives Club, 1996 (Reiner)
First Year, 1926 (Borzage)
First Year. See Primer año, 1970
First Years. See Pyat vecheroc, 1979
Fischbad. See Umi no hanabi, 1951
Fish Called Wanda, 1988 (Silver)
First -wo, 1979
Five Minutes to Live. See Door-to-Door Maniac, 1961
Five Postcards from Capital Cities, 1967 (Greenaway)
Five-Leaf Clover, 1934 (Cukor)
Five-Star Final, 1930 (Leroy)
Five-storyed Pagoda. See Goju-no to, 1944
Five Thousand Fingers of Dr. T, 1953 (Kramer)
Five Ways to Kill Yourself, 1987 (van Sant)
Five Bayonets, 1951 (Fuller)
Fixer, 1968 (Frankenheimer)
Flame and the Arrow, 1950 (Tourneur)
Flame in My Heart. See Flamme dans mon coeur, 1987
Flame of New Orleans, 1940 (Clair)
Flame Within, 1935 (Goulding)
Flamenco, 1995 (Saura)
Flames of Royal Love. See V žáru královske lásky, 1991
Flames over Baku. See Ogni Baku, 1950
Flaming Arrow. See Wigwam, 1911
Flaming Star, 1960 (Siegel)
Flaming Sword. See Verdens Undergang, 1915
Flaming Years. See Povest plamennykh let, 1961
Flamingo Road, 1949 (Curtiz)
Flamme, 1923 (Lubitsch)
Flamme dans mon coeur, 1987 (Tanner)
Flammes sur l’Adriatique, 1968 (Astruc)
Flammesvaerdet. See Verdens Undergang, 1915
Flap, 1970 (Reed)
Flash 29, 1968 (Autant-Lara)
Flash of Light, 1910 (Griffith)
“Flashing Spikes”, 1962 (Ford)
Flatliners, 1990 (Schumacher)
Flavor of Green Tea over Rice. See Ochazuke no aji, 1952
Flawless, 1999 (Schumacher)
Fledermaus ’55. See Oh! Rosalinda, 1955
Fleet That Came to Stay, 1946 (Boetticher)
Flesh, 1931 (Ford; Goulding)
Flesh, 1968 (Morrissey; Warhol)
Flesh and Blood, 1912 (Guy)
Flesh and Blood, 1951 (Clayton)
Flesh and Blood, 1985 (Verhoeven)
Flesh and Blood, 1997 (Dante)
Flesh and Bone, 1993 (Pollack)
Flesh and Fantasy, 1943 (Duvivier)
Flesh and Woman.
Flesh and Bone, 1993 (Pollack)
Flesh and Woman. See Grand Jeu, 1954
Flesh for Frankenestein, 1974 (Morrissey)
Flesh Is Hot.
Flesh from Life. See Har jeg Ret til at tage mit eget Liv, 1919
Flight from the Millions. See Goju-no to, 1944
Flight from Life. See Har jeg Ret til at tage mit eget Liv, 1919
Flight from the Millions. See Flugten fra millionerne, 1934
Flight Nurse, 1954 (Dwan)
Flight of the Eagle. See Ingenjor andrees luftfard, 1982
Flight of the Phoenix, 1965 (Aldrich; Attenborough)
Flight of the Spruce Goose, 1986 (Romero)
Flights of Fancy. See Polioly vo sne naiaavou, 1983
Flintstones, 1994 (Raimi)
Flintstones in Viva Rock Vegas, 2000 (Spielberg)
Flip Flops, 1923 (Sennett)
Flip Out, 1983 (Barcel)
Flipping, 1973 (Chabrol)
Flirt, 1916 (Weber)
Flirt, 1995 (Hartley)
Flirtation Walk, 1934 (Borzage; Daves)
Flirting. See Between Showers, 1914
Flirt's Mistake, 1914 (Sennett)
Flirty Four-Flushers, 1926 (Sennett)
For Love or Money. See Cash, 1933
For Love or Money, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
For Love or Money, 1994 (Raimi)
For Love or Money, 1999 (Raimi)
For Love or Money, 2000 (Spielberg)
For Love of the Game, 1999 (Raimi)
Footsteps in the Dark, 1941 (Bacon)
Footprints.
Foot Film.
For Luck. See Za Schast’em, 1917
For Marilyn, 1992 (Brakhage)
For Me and My Gal, 1942 (Berkeley)
For Sale a Bungalow, 1927 (Sennett)
For sin Fadiers Skyld, 1916 (Holger-Madsen)
Für sin käddeks skall, 1914 (Sjöström; Stiller)
For sit Lands Aere, 1915 (Blom)
For the Defense, 1930 (Cromwell)
For the Good of Her Men, 1912 (Dwan)
For the Love of Ludwig, 1932 (Sennett)
For the Love of Man. See Lyubit cheloveka, 1972
For the Love of Mike, 1927 (Capra)
For the Love of Mike, 1932 (Lauder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)
For the Love of Tillie. See Tillie’s Punctured Romance, 1914
For the Sake of a Few Lines, 1985 (Rogozhkin)
For Them That Trespass, 1949 (Cavalcanti)
For Those in Peril, 1914 (Crichton)
For You at the Front: The Kazakhstan Front. See Tebe, Front: Kazakhstan
Front, 1943
For Your Love Only. See Reifezeugnis, 1982
Forbidden, 1919 (Weber)
Forbidden, 1932 (Capra)
Forbidden Adventure, 1931 (Mankiewicz)
Forbidden Fruit, 1921 (de Mille)
Forbidden Games. See Jeux interdits, 1951
Forbidden Passage, 1941 (Zinnemann)
Forbidden Room, 1914 (Dwan)
Forbidden Songs. See Zakazane piosenki, 1947
Forbidden Thing, 1920 (Dwan)
Forbidden to Know. See Défense de savoir, 1973
Forbidden World, 1982 (Corman)
Forbrydelsens element, 1984 (Von Trier)
Force of Arms, 1951 (Curtiz)
Force of Evil, 1948 (Aldrich; Polonsky)
Forced Bravery, 1913 (Sennett)
Forced Take-Off. See Qiang xing qi fei, 1984
Forced Nature, 1999 (Spielberg)
Foreclosure, 1912 (Dwan)
Foreign Affair, 1948 (Wilder)
Foreign Correspondent, 1940 (Hitchcock)
Foreign Skies. See Wish You Were There, 1985
Foreman and the Jury, 1913 (Sennett)
Foreman Went to France, 1941 (Cavalcanti)
Forest, 1931 (Gerasimov)
Forest on the Hill, 1919 (Hepworth)
Forêt secrète d’Afrique, 1968 (Storck)
Forever Amber, 1947 (Preminger; Stahl)
Forever and a Day, 1942 (Clair)
Forever and a Day, 1943 (Goulding; Keaton)
Forever Flirt. See Strausskiste, 1999
Forever Hollywood, 1999 (Waters)
Forever in Love, Body and Soul. See Pride of the Marines, 1945
Forever Mine, 1999 (Schrader)
Forever Yours. See Forget Me Not, 1936
Forever Yours. See Hub illal Abad, 1959
Forlorn, 1937 (L’herbier)
Forgo, 1895 (Lumiére)
Forgery. See Falschung, 1981
Forget Me Not, 1936 (Nichols)
Forgotten. See Olvidados, 1950
Forgotten Faces, 1936 (Dupont)
Forgotten Prayer, 1916 (Botzage)
Forgotten Silver, 1996 (Jackson)
Forgotten Victory, 1939 (Zinnemann)
Forjadores de la paz, 1962 (Alvarez)
Föroyar Faeröerne, 1961 (Roos)
Forraederen, 1910 (Blom)
Forrest Gump, 1994 (Zemeckis)
Forsaking All Others, 1934 (Mankiewicz)
Fort Apache, 1948 (Ford)
Fortini/Cani, 1976 (Straub, Jean-Marie, And Danièle Huillet)
Fortune, 1975 (Nichols)
Fortune Cookie, 1966 (Wilder)
Fortune Hunters, 1913 (Guy)
Fortune Is a Woman, 1956 (Lauder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)
Fortunella, 1958 (Fellini)
Forty Deuce, 1982 (Morrissey)
Forty Guns, 1957 (Fuller)
Forty Hearts. See Sorok serdets, 1930
Forty Little Mothers, 1940 (Berkeley)
Forward Flag of Independence. See Susume dokuritsuki, 1943
Forgotten. See Iizumi, 1956
Forgotten. See Bakhisarai, 1909 (Protanov)
Four Adventures of Reinette and Mirabelle. See Quatre Aventures de Reinette et Mirabelle, 1987
Four against the Bank. See Vier genen die bank, 1976
Four American Composers, 1983 (Greenaway)
Four around a Woman. See Kämpfende Herzen, 1920
Four Bags Full. See Transversée de Paris, 1956
Four Barriers, 1937 (Cavalcanti; Grierson)
Four by Four, 1965 (Troyell)
Four Chimneys. See Entotsu no mieru basho, 1953
Four Daughters, 1938 (Curtiz)
Four Days in July, 1985 (Leigh)
Four Devils, 1928 (Murnau)
Four Feathers, 1929 (Schoedsack)
Four for Texas, 1963 (Aldrich)
Four Friends, 1981 (Penn)
Four Frightened People, 1934 (de Mille)
Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse, 1921 (Ingram)
Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse, 1962 (Minnelli)
Four Hundred Blows. See Quatre Cents Coups, 1959
Four Hundred Million, 1939 (Ivens)
Four Jills in a Jeep, 1944 (Niblo)
Four Love Stories. See Yottsu no koi no monogatari, 1947
Four Moods. See Hsi Nu Ai Le, 1970
Four Musketeers, 1975 (Lester)
Four Nights of a Dreamer. See Quatre Nuits d’un rêveur, 1971
Four Orphans, 1923 (La Cava)
Four Poster, 1952 (Kramer)
Four Rooms, 1995 (Tarantino)
Four Seasons of Tateshina. See Tateshina no shiki, 1966
Four Sorrows, 1928 (Ford)
Four Stars, 1967 (Warhol)
Four Times about Bulgaria. See Ctyřikrát o Bulharsku, 1958
Four Times That Night. See Quante volte...quella notte, 1972
Four Ways Out. See Città si difende, 1951
Four Wives, 1939 (Curtiz)
Fourberies de Pingouin, 1916 (Feuillade)
Fourbi, 1996 (Tanner)
Four’s a Crowd, 1938 (Curtiz)
Fourteen Hours, 1951 (Cassavetes)
Fourteen’s Good, Eighteen’s Better, 1980 (Armstrong)
Fourth Estate, 1940 (Rotha)
Fourth Man, 1979 (Verhoeven)
Fourth Marriage of Dame Margaret. See Prystánka, 1920
Fourth War, 1989 (Frankenheimer)
Fourth Estate, 1940 (Rotha)
Fourteen’s Good, Eighteen’s Better, 1980 (Armstrong)
Fourteen Hours, 1951 (Cassavetes)
Four's a Crowd, 1938 (Curtiz)
Fourberies de Pingouin, 1916 (Feuillade)
Four Wives, 1939 (Curtiz)
Fra La La Land, 1943 (Vanities)
Fräulein Doktor, 1968 (Lattuada)
Fräulein von vierzig Jahren, 1925 (Leni)
Frau am Wege, 1948 (Forst)
Frayle, 1959 (Olmi)
Free, 1998 (Lee)
Freaks, 1932 (Browning)
Freaks and Geeks, 1999 (Spielberg)
Freaks of the Deep, 1932 (Sennett)
Freccia nel fianco, 1945 (Lattuada)
Freddaines de Pierre, 1900 (Guy)
Free and Easy, 1930 (Keaton; Niblo; de Mille)
Free Fall, 1967 (Vanderbeek)
Free School. See Jiyu gakko, 1951
Free Woman. See Strohofer, 1971
Freed ‘em and Weep, 1929 (McCarey)
Freedom Committee. See Frihedsfonden, 1945
Freedom Road, 1978 (Kadár)
Frey, 1996 (Stone)
Freya, 1971 (Strohfeuer, 1971)
Friede, 1952 (Sennett)
Friedland, 1954 (Balaban; Garten)
Frieda, 1946 (Dearden; Zetterling)
Friedemann Bach, 1950 (Staudte)
Friedmann Bach, 1950 (Staudte)
Friedman, 1957 (Stern)
Friedrich, 1960 (Wagner)
French, They Are a Funny Race.
French Provincial.
French Postcards, 1979 (Beineix)
French without Tears, 1939 (Forst)
French without Tears, 1939 (Lean)
Freund.
Freundschaft siegt. See Naprozod młodzieży, 1952
Fric-Frac, 1939 (Autant-Lara)
Frida. See Frida: Naturaleza vita, 1984
Frida: Naturaleza vita, 1984 (Leduc)
Friday the Thirteenth, 1967 (Launder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)
Friedlaender, 1951 (Forst)
Friedman, 1957 (Stern)
Friedrich, 1960 (Wagner)
French, They Are a Funny Race.
French Provincial.
French Postcards, 1979 (Beineix)
French without Tears, 1939 (Lean)
Reflects. See Przy Jaciel, 1980
Friend.
Friend Fleeing, 1962 (Baillie)
Friend Husband, 1918 (Sennett)
Freaks of the Deep, 1932 (Sennett)
Freaks of the Deep, 1932 (Sennett)
Friend Fleeing, 1962 (Baillie)
Friend Husband, 1918 (Sennett)
Friend Husband, 1918 (Sennett)
Freaks and Geeks, 1999 (Spielberg)
Freaks of the Deep, 1932 (Sennett)
Freaks of the Deep, 1932 (Sennett)
Friend Husband, 1918 (Sennett)
Friend Husband, 1918 (Sennett)
Friend Husband, 1918 (Sennett)
Friend Husband, 1918 (Sennett)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Directors</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Friend Indeed</td>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Zinnemann</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Friend of the Family</td>
<td>1909</td>
<td>Griffith</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Friend of the People</td>
<td>1918</td>
<td>Ven, Folkets</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Friendly Enemies</td>
<td>1942</td>
<td>Dwan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Friendly Persuasion</td>
<td>1956</td>
<td>Wyler</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Friendly, Rope Dancing</td>
<td>1990</td>
<td>Coolidge</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Friends</td>
<td>1912</td>
<td>Griffith</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Friends and Lovers</td>
<td>1931</td>
<td>von Stroheim</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Friendship Triumphs</td>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Mizoguchi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Furusato no uta</td>
<td>1925</td>
<td>Mizoguchi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fury</td>
<td>1922</td>
<td>Goulding</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fury</td>
<td>1936</td>
<td>Lang, Mankiewicz</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Furies, 1950 (Olmi)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Franta e il corpo</td>
<td>1963</td>
<td>Bava</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fu-Zung Cen</td>
<td>1986</td>
<td>Xie Jin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fuck, 1968 (Warhol)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fuck. See Blue Movie, 1969</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fuck Me, Fuck Me, Fuck Me, Tim. See Folly, folle, folla</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fuga, 1960 (Diegues)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fuga, 1965 (Jireš)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fuga in Francia</td>
<td>1948</td>
<td>Germi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fugitive, 1910 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fugitive, 1913 (Dwan)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fugitive, 1947 (Ford)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fugitive Kind</td>
<td>1960</td>
<td>Lamet</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fugitive Road</td>
<td>1934</td>
<td>(von Stroheim)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fugitives. See Den sande Kaerlighed, 1912</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fugitives. See Kacaklar, 1971</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fugitives Find Shelter. See Flyingin g finner en hamn, 1945</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fugue de Lily</td>
<td>1917 (Feuillade)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fujicho</td>
<td>1947 (Kinosita)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fukuyo koikaze</td>
<td>1935 (Gosho)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fukushu suruwa ware ni ari</td>
<td>1979 (Imamura)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Full Body Massage</td>
<td>1995 (Roeg)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Full Day’s Work</td>
<td>1972</td>
<td>Journée bien remplie</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Full Fathom Five</td>
<td>1990</td>
<td>Corman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Full Life. See Mitasareta seikatsu, 1962</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Full Metal Jacket</td>
<td>1987 (Kubrick)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Full Moon in Paris. See Nuits de la pleine lune, 1984</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Full Value</td>
<td>1912 (Dwan)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fuller Brush Girl</td>
<td>1950 (Bacon; Tashlin)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fuller Brush Man</td>
<td>1947 (Tashlin)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fultah Fisher’s Boarding House</td>
<td>1922 (Capra)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Funeria d’opppio</td>
<td>1947 (Fellini)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fun in a Bakery Shop</td>
<td>1902 (Porter)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Funérailes à Bongo: Le Vieux Anai</td>
<td>1979 (Rouch)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Funérailes du Larle Naba</td>
<td>1983 (Ouedraogo)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Funeral</td>
<td>1996 (Ferrara)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Funeral. See Ososiki, 1984</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Funeral of Queen Victoria</td>
<td>1901 (Hepworth)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fünf letzte Tage</td>
<td>1981 (Adlon)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fünf verfluchten Gentlemen</td>
<td>1931 (Duvivier)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fünfter Akt, siehe Szene. Fritz Kortner probt Kabale und Liebe</td>
<td>1965 (Syberberg)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fünfesteer Akt, siehe Szene. Fritz Kortner probt Kabale und Liebe, 1965 (Syberberg)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fünfesteer Akt, siehe Szene. Fritz Kortner probt Kabale und Liebe, 1965 (Syberberg)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Funhouse</td>
<td>1981 (Hooper)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Funivia del Faloria</td>
<td>1950 (Antonioni)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Funistaussstellung</td>
<td>1971—Hitparade, 1971 (Schroeter)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Funny Bones</td>
<td>1995 (Lewis)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Funny Face</td>
<td>1957 (Doren)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Funny Girl</td>
<td>1968 (Wyler)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Funny Old Man. See Směšný pán, 1969</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum</td>
<td>1966 (Keaton; Lister; Roeg)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Furry</td>
<td>1936 (Lang; Mankiewicz)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Fury, 1978 (Cassavetes; de Palma)
Fury Is a Woman. See Sibirska Ledi Magbet, 1972
Fury shonen, 1960 (Hani)
Fusa, 1993 (Ichikawa)
Fusée, 1933 (Tourneur)
Fusen, 1956 (Imamura)
Fushin no toki, 1968 (Imai)
Fuss and Feathers, 1909 (Porter)
Fuss and Feathers, 1918 (Niblo)
Füst, 1970 (Jancsó)
Futari de aruita iku-haru-aki, 1962 (Kinosita)
Futatsuzuro, 1933 (Kinugasa)
Future Fear, 1997 (Corman)
Future’s in the Air, 1936 (Rotha)
Fuyaki shinju, 1934 (Kinugasa)
Fuzen no tomoshibi, 1957 (Kinoshita)
Gambler’s Wife.
Gamblers, 1929 (Curtiz)
Gambler, 1974 (Reisz)
Galloping Justice, 1927 (Wyler)
Galloping Bungalows, 1924 (Sennett)
Gallant Journey, 1946 (Wellman)
Gallant Lady, 1933 (La Cava)
Galley Slave, 1915 (Ingram)
Gallina clueca, 1941 (de Fuentes)
Gallina muy ponedora, 1980 (Fernández)
Gallipoli, 1981 (Weir)
Galloping Bungalows, 1924 (Sennett)
Galloping Justice, 1927 (Wyler)
Gambler, 1974 (Reisz)
Gamblers, 1929 (Curitz)
Gambler’s Wife. See Fra Fryrste til Knejpevaert, 1913
Gambling Rube, 1914 (Sennett)
Game, 1997 (Fincher)
Game. See Gra, 1968
Game in the Sand. See Spiel im Sand, 1964
Game Is Over. See Curée, 1966
Game of Death, 1946 (Wise)
Game of Love. See Blé en herbe, 1953
Game of Poker, 1913 (Sennett)
Game of Pool, 1913 (Sennett)
Game Old Knight, 1915 (Sennett)
Gamekeeper, 1979 (Loach)
Games. See Jeux, 1979
Gamila Bohraid, 1958 (Chahine)
Gamin de Paris, 1923 (Feuillade)
Gammelion, 1967 (Markopoulos)
Ganashatru, 1989 (Ray)
Gandhi, 1982 (Attenborough)
Ganesh Utsava, 1914/15 (Phalke)
Gang Buster, 1931 (Mankiewicz)
Gang in die Nacht, 1921 (Murnau)
Ganga Zumba, 1964 (Diegues)
Gangavataraan, 1937 (Phalke)
Gang’s All Here, 1943 (Berkeley)
Gangs of New York, 1938 (Fuller)
Gangs of New York, 2001 (Scorsese)
Gangs of the Waterfront, 1938 (Fuller)
Gangster, 1913 (Sennett)
Gangster We Made. See Vicious Years, 1950
Gangster’s Moll. See Minbo No Onna, 1991
Ganovenlehre, 1966 (Staudte)
Gans von Sedan, 1959 (Käutner)
Garage, 1920 (Keaton)
Garbo Talks, 1984 (Lumet)
Garçon, 1983 (Sautet)
Garçon divorcé. See Mari garçon, 1932
Garçon sauvage, 1951 (Delannoy)
Garconnière, 1960 (Petri)
Garçu, 1995 (Pialat)
Garde à vue, 1981 (Miller)
Garden, 1990 (Jarman)
Garden of Allah, 1927 (Ingram)
Garden of Delights.
Garden of Eden, 1928 (Milestone)
Garden of Luxor, 1972 (Jarman)
Garden of the Finzi-Continis. See Giardino dei Finzi Contini, 1970
Garden of the Moon, 1938 (Berkeley)
Garden of Women. See Onna no sono, 1954
Gardener. See Trädgårdsmästaren, 1912
Gardens of Stone, 1987 (Coppola)
Gardecifizier. See Leibgardist, 1925
Garde le sourire. See Sonnenstrahl, 1933
Gardien du feu, 1913 (Feuillade)
Gardiens de phare, 1929 (Feyder; Grémillon)
Gare centrale.
Garçon, 1983 (Sautet)
Gardeoffizier.
Garçon divorcé.
Garçon, 1983 (Sautet)
Garbo Talks, 1984 (Lumet)
Garçon, 1983 (Sautet)
Garçon sauvage, 1951 (Delannoy)
Garçons de phare, 1929 (Feyder; Grémillon)
Gare centrale. See Bab el Hadid, 1958
Garibaldino al convento, 1942 (de Sica)
Garlands at the Foot of the Mountain, 1984 (Xie Jin)
Garment Jungle, 1957 (Aldrich)
Gars des vues, 1970 (Milestone)
Gaslight, 1944 (Cukor)
Gaspards, 1973 (Miller)
Gassenhauer, 1931 (Pick; Staudte)
Gardienne du feu, 1913 (Feuillade)
Gardens of Stone, 1987 (Coppola)
Gardens of the Finzi-Continis. See Giardino dei Finzi Contini, 1970
Garden of the Moon, 1938 (Berkeley)
Garden of the Moon, 1938 (Berkeley)
Garden of Eden, 1928 (Milestone)
Garden of Luxor, 1972 (Jarman)
Garden of the Moon, 1938 (Berkeley)
Garçon sauvage, 1951 (Delannoy)
Gardens of Stone, 1987 (Coppola)
Gardens of the Moon, 1938 (Berkeley)
Garden of Women. See Onna no sono, 1954
Gardener. See Trädgårdsmästaren, 1912
Gardens of Stone, 1987 (Coppola)
Gardez le sourire. See Sonnenstrahl, 1933
Gardien du feu, 1913 (Feuillade)
Gardiens de phare, 1929 (Feyder; Grémillon)
Garçon, 1983 (Sautet)
Garde le sourire. See Sonnenstrahl, 1933
Gardien du feu, 1913 (Feuillade)
Gardiens de phare, 1929 (Feyder; Grémillon)
Gare centrale. See Bab el Hadid, 1958
Garibaldino al convento, 1942 (de Sica)
Garlands at the Foot of the Mountain, 1984 (Xie Jin)
Garment Jungle, 1957 (Aldrich)
Gars des vues, 1970 (Milestone)
Gaslight, 1944 (Cukor)
Gaspards, 1973 (Miller)
Gassenhauer, 1931 (Pick; Staudte)
Gass-s-s-s, or It Became Necessary to Destroy the World in Order to Save It, 1970 (Corman)
Gastone, 1959 (de Sica)
Gatans barn, 1914 (Sjöström)
Gate of Hell. See Jigokumon, 1953
Gates of Heaven, 1978 (Morris)
Gates of Heaven. See Bramy raju, 1967
Gates of the Night. See Portes de la nuit, 1946
Gates to Paradise. See Spiel im Sand, 1964
Gates of Heaven, 1978 (Morris)
Gates of Heaven. See Bramy raju, 1967
Gates of the Night. See Portes de la nuit, 1946
Gates to Paradise. See Spiel im Sand, 1964
Gates to Paradise. See Spiel im Sand, 1964
Getting Mary Married, 1919 (Dwan)
Getting of Wisdom, 1977 (Beresford)
Gewalt, 1971 (Sanders-Brahms)
Gewehr über, 1950 (Staudte)
Gezeichneten, 1922 (Dreyer)
Ghazieh-e Shekl-e Aval, Ghazieh-e Shekl-e Dou Wom, 1979 (Kiarostami)
Ghost of the Variety.
Ghost Goes West, 1935 (Clair)
Ghost Flower, 1918 (Borzage)
Ghost Dog: The Way of the Samurai, 1999 (Jarmusch)
Ghost Breaker, 1922 (Leroy)
Ghost Breaker, 1914 (de Mille)
Ghost and Mrs. Muir, 1947 (Mankiewicz)
Ghost, 1911 (Sennett)
Getting of Wisdom, 1977 (Beresford)
Ghost of Folly, 1926 (Sennett)
Ghost Story of Youth.
Ghost Parade, 1931 (Sennett)
Ghosts Italian Style.
Ghost Train, 1931 (Launder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)
Ghosts of Rome.
Ghosts of Mississippi, 1996 (Reiner)
Ghosts of the Variety. See Spøgelset i Gravkaelderen, 1910
Ghost Story of Youth. See Seishun kaidan, 1955
Ghost Train, 1931 (Launder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)
Ghosts, 1915 (von Stroheim)
Ghosts Italian Style. See Questi fantasi, 1967
Ghosts of Mars, 2001 (Carpenter)
Ghosts of Mississippi, 1996 (Reiner)
Ghosts of Rome. See Fantasmi a Roma, 1960
Giacomo l’idealista, 1942 (Lattuada)

Giants, 1956 (Stevens)

Giant of Marathon. See Battaglia di Maratona, 1959
Giardino dei Finzi Contini, 1970 (de Sica)
Gibson Goddess, 1909 (Griffith; Sennett)
Gibraltar, 1938 (von Stroheim)
Giordano Bruno, 1958 (Pasolini)
Giorgino Mariti, 1958 (Pallavicini)
Giorno della prima di Close-Up, 1996 (Moretti)
Giovane Toscanini, 1988 (Zeffirelli)
Giovanna d’Arco al rogo, 1954 (Rossellini)
Giovanni Mariti, 1958 (Pallavicini)
Gioventù perduta, 1947 (Germi)
Gipsy Joe, 1916 (Sennett)
Girl. See Den Muso, 1975
Girl. See Eltävozzot nap, 1968
Girl 6, 1996 (Lee; Tarantino)
Girl Back Home, 1912 (Dwan)
Girl Can’t Help It, 1956 (Tashlin)
Girl Crazy, 1929 (Sennett)
Girl Crazy, 1943 (Berkeley)
Girl Friend. See Kanojo, 1926
Girl from Chicago, 1932 (Micheaux)
Girl from Everywhere, 1927 (Sennett)
Girl from Lorraine. See Provinciale, 1980
Girl from Maxim’s, 1933 (Crichton; Korda)
Girl from Nowhere, 1928 (Sennett)
Girl from the Street. See Ditya Bol’shogo Goroda, 1914
Girl Getters. See System, 1964
Girl Guardian, 1916 (Sennett)
Girl I Loved. See Waga koiishi otome, 1946
Girl in Black, 1957 (Cacoyannis)
Girl in Every Port, 1928 (Hawks)
Girl in Number 29, 1920 (Ford)
Girl in the Crowd, 1934 (Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger)
Girl in the Moon.
Girl in the Tonneau, 1932 (Sennett)
Girl in the Beach.
Girl in the News, 1940 (Launder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat; Reed)
Girl in the Tonneau, 1932 (Sennett)
Girl I Knew Too Much. See Bara ikutabi, 1955
Girl Missing, 1932 (Florey)
Girl Must Live, 1939 (Launder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat; Reed)
Girl of the Golden West, 1915 (de Mille)
Girl of Yesterday, 1915 (Dwan)
Girl on the Beach. See Fille sur le pont, 1999
Girl on the Canal. See Painted Boats, 1945
Girl Was Young. See Young and Innocent, 1937
Girl Who Knew Too Much. See Ragazza che sapeva troppo, 1963
Girl Who Stayed at Home, 1919 (Griffith)
Girl with Green Eyes, 1916 (Tashlin)
Girl with Green Eyes, 1964 (Richardson)
Girl with the Green Eyes, 1916 (Guy)
Girl With Green Eyes, 1964 (Richardson)
Girl Who Stayed at Home, 1939 (Griffith)
Girl from the Street. See Ditya Bol’shogo Goroda, 1914
Girl Getters. See System, 1964
Girl Guardian, 1916 (Sennett)
Girl I Loved. See Waga koiishi otome, 1946
Girl in Black, 1957 (Cacoyannis)
Girl in Every Port, 1928 (Hawks)
Girl in Number 29, 1920 (Ford)
Girl in the Crowd, 1934 (Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger)
Girl in the Moon. See Frau im Mond, 1929
Girl in the News, 1940 (Launder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat; Reed)
Girl in the Painting. See Portrait from Life, 1949
Girl in the Tonneau, 1932 (Sennett)
Girl Isn’t Allowed to Love. See Bara ikutabi, 1955
Girl Missing, 1932 (Florey)
Girl Must Live, 1939 (Launder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat; Reed)
Girl of the Golden West, 1915 (de Mille)
Girl of Yesterday, 1915 (Dwan)
Girl on the Bridge. See Fille sur le pont, 1999
Girl on the Canal. See Painted Boats, 1945
Girl Was Young. See Young and Innocent, 1937
Girl Who Knew Too Much. See Ragazza che sapeva troppo, 1963
Girl Who Stayed at Home, 1919 (Griffith)
Girl with Green Eyes, 1964 (Richardson)
Girl with the Green Eyes, 1916 (Guy)
Girl with the Hat Box. See Devushka s korobkoi, 1927
Girlfriends. See Amiche, 1955
Girlfriends. See Biches, 1968
Girls, 1957 (Cukor)
Girls. See Bonnes femmes, 1960
Girls. See Flickorna, 1968
Girls about Town, 1931 (Cukor)
Girls and a Daddy, 1908 (Griffith)
Girl’s Folly, 1917 (Tourneur)
Girls from Wilko. See Panny z Wilka, 1979
Girls in Chains, 1943 (Ulmer)
Girls in Prison, 1994 (Fisher)
Girls of Izu. See Izu no musumetachi, 1945
Girls on the Beach, 1965 (Corman)

FILM TITLE INDEX
DIRECTORS, 4th EDITION

1200
Girls Own Story, 1984 (Campion)
Girl’s Strategem, 1913 (Griffith)
Gishiki, 1971 (Oshima)
Gitane, 1986 (de Broca)
Gitania, 1914 (Feuillade)
Giü la testa, 1972 (Leone)
Giudizio universale, 1961 (de Sica)
Giulietta degli spiriti, 1965 (Fellini)
Giulietta e Romeo, 1954 (Castellani)
Give a Girl a Break, 1953 (Donen; Fosse)
Glad Rag Doll, 1929 (Curtiz)
Glace a trois faces, 1927 (Epstein)
Gives Us This Day, 1949 (Dmytryk)
Give Me Wings, 1936 (Weiss)
Give Her the Moon.
Give Her the Moon.
Give Her the Moon.
Give Us Air.
Give My Regards to Broadway, 1948 (Bacon)
Give Us Air. See Daesh vokukh, 1924
Give Us Wings, 1936 (Weiss)
Gibran, 1972 (de Mille)
Gleisdreieck, 1950 (Staudte)
Glass.
Glas Wasser, 1960 (Käutner)
Glas du Père Césaire, 1909 (Gance)
Glaneurs et la glaneuse, 2000 (Varda)
Glaning from the Deep, 1993 (Dreyer)
Gleisbreck, 1950 (Staudte)
Glen or Glenda, 1953 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Glen Miller Story, 1954 (Mann)
Glimpse of the Moon, 1923 (Dwan)
Glitterbug, 1993 (Jarman)
Glimpse of Los Angeles, 1914 (Sennett)
Glimpse of the San Diego Exposition, 1915 (Sennett)
Glorious World of the Adlon Hotel. See In der glanzvollen Welt des Hotel Adlon, 1989
Glory, 1920 (Keaton)
Glory of the Sunset.
Gloria, 1979 (Lumet)
Gloria, 1980 (Cassavetes)
Gloria, 1999 (Lumet)
Glorious Young Man, 1945 (Coppola)
Glorious Lady, 1919 (Goulding)
Glorious Sixth of June, 1934 (Jennings)
Glorious Youth. See Yama no sanka: moyuru wakamono-tachi, 1962
Glorious Youth. See Yama no sanka: moyuru wakamono-tachi, 1962
Glorious Youth. See Yama no sanka: moyuru wakamono-tachi, 1962
Glorious Youth. See Yama no sanka: moyuru wakamono-tachi, 1962
Glorious Youth. See Yama no sanka: moyuru wakamono-tachi, 1962
Gold from the Gutter.
Gold Dust Gertie, 1931 (Bacon)
Gold Diggers of 1937, 1937 (Bacon; Berkeley)
Gold Diggers of 1933, 1933 (Berkeley; Leroy)
Gold Diggers of Weepah, 1927 (Sennett)
Gold Seekers, 1910 (Griffith)
Gold of Naples. See Oro di Napoli, 1954
Gold, 1920 (Keaton)
Goalie’s Anxiety at the Penalty Kick. See Angst des Tormanns beim Elfmeter, 1971
God Is My Co-Pilot, 1944 (Florey)
God Needs Men. See Dieu a besoin des hommes, 1950
God Runs Backwards. See Isten hátrafelé megy, 1990
God Said ’Ha’!, 1998 (Tarantino)
God Shiva, 1955 (Haanstra)
God Told Me To, 1976 (Corman)
God Within, 1912 (Griffith)
Godchild, 1974 (Badham)
God dvdn. See Newborn, 1953
God of the Plague. See Göttler der Pest, 1969
God’s Little Acre, 1958 (Mann)
Gods and the Dead. See Os deuses e os mortos, 1970
God’s Country, 1946 (Keaton)
God’s Country, 1985 (Malle)
God’s Gift. See Wend Kuuni, 1982
God’s Gift to Women, 1931 (Curtiz)
Go West, 1925 (Keaton)
Go into Your Dance, 1935 (Berkeley; Florey)
Go-Getter, 1937 (Berkeley; Daves)
Goat, 1921 (Keaton)
Gobbo, 1960 (Pasolini)
Godfather, Part II, 1974 (Coppola; Corman)
Godfather, Part III, 1991 (Coppola)
God’s Unfortunate, 1912 (Dwan)
Goglerblod, Artists. See Troløs, 1913
Gogleren. See Elskovs Magt, 1912
Gogo no Yui-son-jo, 1995 (Shindo)
Gohatto, 1999 (Oshima)
Going and Coming Back. See Partir, revenir, 1985
Going Ga-ga, 1928 (Mccarey)
Going Gently, 1961 (Fears)
Going Hollywood, 1933 (Walsh)
Going My Way, 1944 (Mccarey)
Going Places. See Valseuses, 1973
Going Straight, 1916 (Franklin)
Going Up, 1923 (Leroy)
Goku-no to, 1944 (Gosho)
Gokumonto, 1977 (Ichikawa)
Gold and Glitter, 1912 (Griffith)
Gold Digger of Weepah, 1927 (Sennett)
Gold Diggers in Paris, 1938 (Berkeley)
Gold Diggers of 1933, 1933 (Berkeley; Leroy)
Gold Diggers of 1935, 1935 (Berkeley)
Gold Diggers of 1937, 1937 (Bacon; Berkeley)
Gold Dust Gertie, 1931 (Bacon)
Gold from the Gutter. See Alt paa ét Kort, 1912
Gold Ghost, 1934 (Keaton)
Gold Is Not All, 1910 (Griffith)
Gold Is Where You Find It, 1938 (Curtiz)
Gold Lust, 1911 (Dwan)
Gold of Naples. See Oro di Napoli, 1954
Gold Rush, 1925 (Chaplin)
Gold Seekers, 1910 (Griffith)
Golden Age of Comedy, 1959 (Clair)
Golden Bed, 1925 (Keaton)
Golden Bowl, 1900 (Ivory)
Golden Boy, 1929 (Mccarey)
Golden Boy, 1939 (Mamoulian)
Golden Button, 1986 (Rogozhkin)
Golden Chance, 1915 (de Mille)
Golden Coach. See Carrosse d’or, 1953
Golden Demon. See Konjiki yasha, 1972 (Hani)
Gozideh tasvir dar doran-e Qajar, 1993 (Makhmalbaf)
Gra, 1968 (Kawalerowicz)
Goldflocken.
Golden Smile.
Golden Shovel.
Golden Pavement, 1915 (Hepworth)
Golden Louis, 1909 (Griffith)
Golden Gates. See Zolotoye vorota, 1969
Golden Girl, 1951 (Bacon)
Golden Gloves, 1940 (Dmytryk)
Golden Girl, 1951 (Bacon)
Golden Gloves, 1940 (Dmytryk)
Golden Supper, 1910 (Griffith)
Goldflakes.
Goldene See, 1919 (Lang)
Goldene Schmetterling, 1926 (Curtiz; Leni)
Golden Vision, 1968 (Loach)
Goldene Schmetterling, 1926 (Curtiz; Leni)
Gone with the Wind
Gönül kusu, 1965 (Güney)
Golpeando en la selva, 1967 (Alvarez)
Golod . . . golod . . . golod, 1921 (Pudovkin)
Golgotha, 1935 (Duvivier)
Golfos, 1960 (Saura)
Golfers, 1929 (Sennett)
Golf Nut, 1927 (Sennett)
Golem, l’espirit de l’exil, 1992 (Bertolucci)
Goldstein, 1964 (Kaufman)
Goldene See, 1919 (Lang)
Goob na ñu, 1979 (Faye)
Gonzague ou L’Accordeur, 1933 (Grémillon)
Gonin no kyodai, 1939 (Yoshimura)
Gonza, the Spearman. See Yari no Gonza, 1986
Gonzague ou L’Accordeur, 1933 (Grémillon)
Goonies, 1985 (Spielberg)
Goo, 1997 (van Sant)
Good Day for Fighting.
Good Bad Man, 1916 (Dwan; Fleming)
Good and the Bad.
Goob na ñu, 1979 (Faye)
Good Little Devil, 1913 (Porter)
Good Man in Africa, 1994 (Beresford)
Good Morning, Nurse!, 1925 (Sennett)
Good Morning,邦女, 1939 (Cukor; Fleming; Hawks)
Good Morning. See Kinyu og na, 1939 (Yoshimura)
Good Morning. See Bouquet de bébé, 1896-97 (Lumière)
Gösta Berlings saga
Gozideh tasvir dar doran-e Qajar, 1993 (Makhmalbaf)
Good Provider, 1922 (Borzage)
Good Provider, 1922 (Borzage)
Good Sam, 1948 (McCarey)
Good Soldier Schweik. See Dobrý voják Svejk, 1931
Good Taste, 1995 (Jackson)
Good, the Bad, and the Ugly. See Buono il brutto il cattivo, 1966
Good Time Charley, 1927 (Curtiz)
Good Times, 1967 (Friedkin)
Good Will Hunting, 1997 (Smith; van Sant)
Goodbye Again, 1933 (Curtiz)
Goodbye Charlie, 1964 (Minnelli)
Goodbye, Children. See Au Revoir les enfants, 1987
Goodbye, Hello. See Sayonara, konnichiwa, 1959
Goodbye Kiss, 1928 (Sennett)
Goodbye Legs, 1929 (Sennett)
Goodbye Lover, 1999 (Joffé)
Goodbye, Mr. Chips, 1939 (Franklin)
Goodbye South, Goodbye. See Nanguo zaijan, nanguo, 1996
Goodbye, Summer, 1914 (Ingram)
GoodFellas, 1990 (Scorsese)
Goole by Numbers, 1976 (Greenaway)
Goonies, 1985 (Spielberg)
Goopy Gyma Bagha Byne, 1969 (Ray)
Gounders, 1956 (Sennett)
Goskinokalender, 1923-25 (Vertov)
Gosh-Darn Mortgage, 1926 (Sennett)
Gostia, 1976 (Guzmán)
Gospel according to Saint Matthew.
Good Sam, 1948 (McCary)
Gottor der Pest, 1969 (Fassbinder; Von Trotta)
Gottor der Pest, 1969 (Fassbinder; Von Trotta)
Götter der Pest, 1969 (Fassbinder; Von Trotta)
Götterdämmerung.
Gösta Berlings saga
Gösta Berlings saga
Gösta Berlings saga
Good Omens, 2002 (Gilliam)
Governor, 1977 (Brakhage)
Governor’s Daughter. See Guvernørens Datter, 1912
Governor’s Daughter. See Lankshövdingens dottrar, 1916
Governor’s Lady, 1915 (de Mille)
Gower, 1943 (Kapoor)
Goya and Burdeos, 1999 (Saura)
Goya in Bordeaux, 1999 (Saura)
Goyos, 1926 (Kinugasa)
Gozareh, 1977 (Kiarostami)
Gozenchu no jikanwari, 1972 (Hani)
Gozideh tasvir dar doran-e Qajar, 1993 (Makhmalbaf)
Gra, 1968 (Kwalerowicz)
Graal. See Hitler ein Film aus Deutschland, 1977
Graal. See Lancelot du Lac, 1974
Grace of God, 1997 (Cronenberg)
Gracias Santiago, 1984 (Alvarez)
Graciela, 1956 (Torre Nilsson)
Graduate, 1967 (Nichols)
Grafen Pocci—Einige Kapitel zur Geschichte einer Familie, 1967
(Syberberg)
Graffiti Blackboard. See Rakugaki kokuban, 1959
Gräfin Donelli, 1924 (Pabst)
Gran calavera, 1949 (Buñuel)
Gran Casino, 1947 (Buñuel)
Gran salto al vacío, 1979 (Alvarez)
Gran varietà, 1953 (de Sica)
Grand barricade, 1961 (Olmi)
Grand bleu, 1988 (Besson)
Grand Canyon, 1991 (Kasdan)
Grand Carnaval, 1985 (Besson)
Grand cri d’amour, 1998 (Berri)
Grand Dukès. See Grands ducs, 1996
Grand Duke’s Finances. See Finanzen des Grossherzogs, 1924
Grand Hotel, 1932 (Goulding)
Grand Hotel Babylon, 1919 (Dupont)
Grand Illusion. See Grande Illusion, 1937
Grand Jeu, 1934 (Feyder)
Grand Jeu, 1954 (Siodmak)
Grand Parade, 1930 (Goulding)
Grand Prix, 1966 (Frankenheimer)
Grand Refrain, 1936 (Siodmak)
Grand Rue. See Calle Mayor, 1956
Grand Slam Opera, 1936 (Keaton)
Grand Slam, 1940 (Ford)
Grand Duke's Finances. See Grand Duke's Finances, 1924
Grand Duke's Finances. See Grand Duke's Finances, 1924
Grandeur et Decadence d’un Petit Commerce du Cinema, 1986 (Godard)
Grande attacco, 1977 (Huston)
Grande Chartreuse, 1938 (Clément)
Grande Époque, 1959 (Clair)
Grande Fille tout simple, 1947 (L’herbier)
Grande Illusion, 1937 (Becker; Renoir; von Stroheim)
Grande paese d’Acciao, 1960 (Olmi)
Grande Passion, 1929 (Delannoy)
Grande Pastorale, 1943 (Clément)
Grande strada azzurra, 1957 (Pontecorvo)
Grande Vie. See Kunstseidene Mädchen, 1960
Grandes Manoeuvres, 1955 (Clément)
Grandeur et Decadence d’un Petiet Commerce du Cinema, 1986 (Godard)
Grandi magazzini, 1939 (Castellani; de Sica)
Grandma’s Girl, 1929 (Sennett)
Grandmother, 1970 (Lynch)
Grandmother. See A nagymama, 1916
Grandmother. See Yaaba, 1989
Grands ducs, 1996 (Lecoute)
Grands Moments, 1965 (Lelouch)
Grampa. See Dédâček, 1968
Gränsfolken, 1913 (Stiller)
Granton Trawler, 1934 (Cavalcanti; Grierson)
Grapes of Wrath, 1940 (Ford)
Grass, 1923 (Schoedsack)
Grass Is Greener, 1960 (Doren)
Grass Is Singing, 1982 (August)
Gratuités, 1927 (Grémillon)
Grausame Freundin, 1932 (Clouzot)
Grausige Nächte, 1921 (Pick)
Gravy Train, 1974 (Malick)
Gray Dame. See Den graa Dame, 1909
Gray’s Anatomy, 1996 (Soderbergh)
Greaser, 1915 (Walsh)
Greaser and the Weakling, 1912 (Dwan)
Greaser's Gauntlet, 1908 (Griffith)
Great Adventure, 1918 (Guy)
Great Beginning. See Chlen pravitelstva, 1940
Great Cargoes, 1933 (Rotha)
Great Clown. See Muharraj el Kabir, 1951
Great Consoler. See Veliki uteshitel, 1933
Great Day, 1920 (Hitchcock)
Great Day for Bonzo, 1974 (Apted)
Great Day in Harlem, 1994 (Benton)
Great Day in the Morning, 1956 (Tourneur)
Great Dictator, 1940 (Chaplin)
Great Ecstasy of the Sculptor Steiner. See Grosse Ekstase des Bildschnitzers Steiner, 1974
Great Escape, 1963 (Attenborough)
Great Expectations, 1946 (Lean)
Great Flamariion, 1945 (Mann; von Stroheim)
Great Gabbo, 1929 (von Stroheim)
Great Garrick, 1937 (Leroy; Whale)
Great Gatsby, 1974 (Clayton; Coppola)
Great Gilbert and Sullivan. See Story of Gilbert and Sullivan, 1953
Great Harmony, 1913 (Dwan)
Great Imposter, 1961 (Mulligan)
Great Land, 1944 (Gerasimov)
Great Lie, 1941 (Goulding)
Great Love, 1918 (Griffith)
Great Manhunt. See State Secret, 1950
Great Man’s Lady, 1942 (Wellman)
Great McGinty, 1940 (Sturges)
Great Meddler, 1940 (Zimmernann)
Great Moment, 1944 (Sturges)
Great Northfield Minnesota Raid, 1972 (Kaufman)
Great Pearl Tangle, 1946 (Sennett)
Great Pie Mystery, 1931 (Sennett)
Great Problem, 1916 (Ingram)
Great Redeemer, 1920 (Tourneur)
Great Scott, 1920 (Sennett)
Great Sinner, 1949 (Leroy; Siodmak)
Great Sioux Uprising, 1953 (Bacon)
Great St. Trinian’s Train Robbery, 1966 (Lauder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)
Great Stone Face, 1970 (Keaton)
Great Temptation. See Porte du large, 1936
Great Texas Dynamite Chase. See Dynamite Women, 1976
Great Toe Mystery, 1914 (Sennett)
Great Train Robbery, 1903 (Porter)
Great Universal Mystery, 1914 (Dwan)
Great Vacuum Robbery, 1915 (Sennett)
Great Van Robbery, 1959 (Roeg)
Great Vacuum Robbery, 1915 (Sennett)
Great White Hope, 1970 (Ritt)
Greater Love Hath No Man, 1915 (Guy)
Greater Love, 1913 (Dwan)
Greater than Love, 1940 (Niblo; Stahl)
Greatest Adventure. See Istorya O Vechnom Seme, 1950
Greatest Love. See Europa ’51, 1952
Greatest Question, 1919 (Griffith)
Greatest Show on Earth, 1952 (de Mille)
Greatest Story Ever Told, 1965 (Ashby; Stevens)
Greatest Thing in Life, 1918 (Griffith)
Greed, 1924 (Ingram; von Stroheim)
Greek Testament, 1942 (Cavalcanti; Crichton)
Green and Pleasant Land, 1955 (Anderson)
Green Berets, 1968 (Leroy)
Green Bird. See Grüne Vogel, 1979
Green Card, 1990 (Weir)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Directors</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Green– eyed Monster</td>
<td>1912</td>
<td>Dwan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Green Fields</td>
<td>1937</td>
<td>Ulmer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Green Flood.</td>
<td>1971</td>
<td>Frears</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gun</td>
<td>1974</td>
<td>Badham</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gun</td>
<td>1997</td>
<td>Altman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gun Fightin' Gentleman</td>
<td>1919</td>
<td>Ford</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gun Fury</td>
<td>1953</td>
<td>Walsh</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Green– eyed Monster</td>
<td>1912</td>
<td>Dwan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Green Fields</td>
<td>1937</td>
<td>Ulmer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Green Flood.</td>
<td>1971</td>
<td>Frears</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gun</td>
<td>1974</td>
<td>Badham</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gun</td>
<td>1997</td>
<td>Altman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gun Fightin' Gentleman</td>
<td>1919</td>
<td>Ford</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gun Fury</td>
<td>1953</td>
<td>Walsh</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Gun in His Hand, 1945 (Losey)
Gun Justice, 1927 (Wyler)
Gun Law, 1919 (Ford)
Gun Packer, 1919 (Ford)
Gun Pusher, See Gun Packer, 1919
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Woman, 1918 (Borzage)
Gunboat Ginsburg, 1930 (Sandrich)
Gunpowder Plot, 1900 (Hepworth)
Gunnar Hedes saga, 1922 (Stiller)
Gunman, 1913 (Walsh)
Gunman, 1911 (Dwan)
Gunless Bad Man, 1926 (Wyler)
Gunki hatameku shitani, 1972 (Shindo)
Gunga Din, 1939 (Hawks; Stevens)
Gung Ho, 1986 (Howard)
Güney ölüm saciyor, 1969 (Güney)
Gunboat Ginsburg, 1930 (Sandrich)
Gun Woman, 1918 (Borzage)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Gun Runners, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Gun Runners, 1958 (Siegel)
Hamlet Goes Business.

Hamlet, 2000 (Bartel)

Hamlet, 1996 (Attenborough; Branagh)

Hamlet, 1990 (Zeffirelli)

Hamlet, 1969 (Richardson)

Hamlet, 1968 (Dmytryk)

Hamlet, 1963 (Kozintsev)

Hamlet, 1910 (Blom)

Hamlet, 1960 (Skolimowski)

Hamlet, 1961 (Roos)

Handicapped Future.

Handful of Rice.

Hand That Rocks the Cradle, 1917 (Weber)

Hand of Peril, 1916 (Tourneur)

Hand in the Trap.

Hand, 1981 (Stone)

Hand Movie, 1968 (Rainer)

Hand of Death, 1975 (Woo)

Hand of Time: The Premonition, 1999 (Bartel)

Hand Movie, 1968 (Rainer)

Hand in the Trap.

Hand, 1981 (Stone)

Hand of Death, 1975 (Woo)

Hand of Peril, 1916 (Tourneur)

Hand That Rocks the Cradle, 1917 (Weber)

Hand of Death, 1975 (Woo)

Hand in the Trap.

Hand, 1981 (Stone)

Hand of Death, 1975 (Woo)

Hand of Time: The Premonition, 1999 (Bartel)

Hand Movie, 1968 (Rainer)

Hand of Death, 1975 (Woo)

Hand in the Trap.

Hand, 1981 (Stone)

Hand of Death, 1975 (Woo)
Hard to Handle: Bob Dylan with Tom Petty and the Heartbreakers, 1986 (Armstrong)
Hard Way, 1991 (Badham)
Hardcore, 1978 (Schneider)
Hardly Working, 1980 (Lewis)
Hare Krishna, 1966 (Mekas)
Harem Knight, 1926 (Sennett)
Hari Hondal Bargadar, 1980 (Begnalo)
Harlan County, U.S.A., 1976 (Kopple)
Harlot, 1964 (Warhol)
Harmony Heaven, 1930 (Launer, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)
Harold and Maude, 1971 (Ashby)
Harold Teen, 1928 (Leroy)
Három csillág, 1960 (Jancsó)
Harp of India. See Biruma no tategoto, 1956
Harrison és Barrison, 1917 (Korda)
Harrowing, 1939 (Brakhage)
Haru no orie, 1960 (Kinoshita)
Haru wa gofujin kata, 1932 (Ozu)
Harun al Raschid, 1924 (Curtiz)
Haru wa gofujin kara, 1932 (Ozu)
Haru no yume, 1960 (Kinoshita)
Häxan, 1922 (Christensen)
Haru no yume, 1932 (Gosho)
Hatred.
Hatmaker.
Hatful of Rain, 1957 (Zinnemann)
Hateshinaki jonetsu, 1949 (Ichikawa)
Haters, 1912 (Dwan)
Hatchet for the Honeymoon. See Rossos segno della follia, 1969
Hatchet Man, 1932 (Wellman)
Haters, 1912 (Dwan)
Hateshikani jontesu, 1949 (Ichikawa)
Hateshikani yakubu, 1958 (Imamura)
Hatful of Rain, 1957 (Zinnemann)
Hatmaker. See Fantômes du chapelier, 1982
Hatred. See Mollenard, 1938
Hatred. See Nenavist, 1978
Hats Off, 1936 (Fuller)
Hatsukoi, 1926 (Gosho)
Hatsukoi, 1947 (Kurosawa)
Hatsukoi, 1926 (Gosho)
He Died after the War. See Rożen na Tistelôn, 1916
He Did and He Didn’t, 1916 (Sennett)
He Died during the War. See Tokyo senso sengo hiwa, 1970
He Got Game, 1998 (Lee)
He Is My Brother, 1976 (Dmytryk)
He Loved Her So. See Twenty Minutes of Love, 1914
He Loved the Ladies, 1914 (Sennett)
He Stands in a Desert Counting the Seconds of His Life, 1985 (Anger; Mekas)
He Tramped Her Ace, 1930 (Sennett)
He Walked by Night, 1948 (Mann)
He was born, he suffered, he died, 1974 (Brakhage)
He Was Her Man, 1934 (Bacon)
He Was Once, 1989 (Haynes)
He Who Gets Smacked, 1925 (Sennett)
He Who Must Die.
He Who Would A Hunting Go, 1913 (Sennett)
He Who Rides a Tiger, 1965 (Crichton)
He Who halten mit, 1958 (Christensen)
He Walked by Night, 1948 (Mann)
Hearts in Montevideo, 1963 (Kautner)
Hau Bas Fragile, 1995 (Rivette)
Hau les mains, 1912 (Feuillade)
Haut Lisse, 1956 (Grémillon)
Havacs, 1990 (Pollack)
Have you Thought of Talking to the Director?, 1962 (Baillie)
Havel's Audience with History, 1990 (Menzel)
Havets Djuvul, 1935/36 (Fejös)
Having a Go, 1983 (Armstrong)
Having a Wild Weekend. See Catch Us If You Can, 1965
Havoc, 1925 (Goulding)
Havsameer. See Kösen på Tistelôn, 1916
Hawk, 1935 (Dmytryk)
Hawks and Watkins, 1932 (Sennett)
Hawks and the Sparrows. See Uccellacci e uccellini, 1966
Hawk's Nest, 1928 (Christensen)
Hixan, 1922 (Christensen)
Hayfoot, Strawfoot, 1926 (Sennett)
Hayseed, 1919 (Keaton)
Hayseed, 1919 (Keaton)
Häxan, 1922 (Christensen)
Havsgammar.
Havets Djävul, 1935/36 (Fejös)
Havel's Audience with History, 1990 (Menzel)
Havocs Nest, 1928 (Christensen)
Hawks and the Sparrows. See Uccellacci e ucellini, 1966
Hawk's Nest, 1928 (Christensen)
Hixan, 1922 (Christensen)
Hayfoot, Strawfoot, 1926 (Sennett)
Hayseed, 1919 (Keaton)
Hayseed, 1919 (Keaton)
Häxan, 1922 (Christensen)
Havsgammar.
Heart of Nora Flynn, 1916 (de Mille)
Heart of Oyama, 1908 (Griffith)
Heart of Scotland, 1961/62 (Grierson)
Heart of Show Business, 1957 (de Mille)
Heart of the Mountains. See Kokoro no sanmyaku, 1966
Heart of Wetona, 1919 (Franklin)
Heartbeat. See Szívdbogós, 1961
Heartbeeps, 1981 (Bartel)
Heat.
Heat, 1995 (Mann)
Heat, 1972 (Forman; Nichols)
Heatburn, 1986 (Forman; Nichols)
Hearts Adrift, 1914 (Porter)
Hearts and Flowers, 1919 (Sennett)
Hearts and Horses, 1913 (Dwan)
Hearts and Planets, 1915 (Sennett)
Hearts and Sparks, 1916 (Sennett)
Hearts Are Trumps, 1920 (Ingram)
Hearts Divided, 1936 (Borzage)
Hearts in Exile, 1929 (Curtiz)
Hearts of Age, 1934 (Welles)
Hearts of Oak, 1924 (Ford)
Hearts of the World, 1918 (Griffith; von Stroheim)
Hearts of Scotland, 1961/62 (Grierson)
Hearts of Show Business, 1957 (de Mille)
Hearts of the Mountains.
Hearts of the World, 1918 (Griffith; von Stroheim)
Hearts of Show Business, 1957 (de Mille)
Hearts of Scotland, 1961/62 (Grierson)
Hearts of the Mountains.
Hearts of Scotland, 1961/62 (Grierson)
Hearts of the Mountains.
Hearts of Show Business, 1957 (de Mille)
Hearts of the Mountains.
Hearts of Scotland, 1961/62 (Grierson)
Hearts of the Mountains.
Hearts of Scotland, 1961/62 (Grierson)
Hearts of the Mountains.
Hearts of Scotland, 1961/62 (Grierson)
Hearts of the Mountains.
Her Cardboard Lover, 1942 (Cukor)
Her Circus Knight, 1917 (Sennett)
Her Code of Honor, 1919 (Stahl)
Her Fancy and Shames, 1917 (Sennett)
Her Father’s Pride, 1910 (Griffith)
Her Feathered Nest, 1916 (Sennett)
Her Filmland Hero, 1915 (Franklin)
Her First Affaire, 1933 (Dwan)
Her First Biscuits, 1909 (Griffith)
Her First Beau, 1916 (Sennett)
Her First Affaire, 1933 (Dwan)
Her Filmland Hero, 1915 (Franklin)
Her Feathered Nest, 1916 (Sennett)
Her Father’s Pride, 1910 (Griffith)
Her Fancy and Shames, 1917 (Sennett)
Her First Affaire, 1933 (Dwan)
Her Filmland Hero, 1915 (Franklin)
Her Feathered Nest, 1916 (Sennett)
Her Fancy and Shames, 1917 (Sennett)
Her Filmland Hero, 1915 (Franklin)
Her Feathered Nest, 1916 (Sennett)
Her Father’s Pride, 1910 (Griffith)
Her Fancy and Shames, 1917 (Sennett)
Her Filmland Hero, 1915 (Franklin)
Her Feathered Nest, 1916 (Sennett)
Her Fancy and Shames, 1917 (Sennett)
Her Filmland Hero, 1915 (Franklin)
Her Feathered Nest, 1916 (Sennett)
Her Father’s Pride, 1910 (Griffith)
Her Fancy and Shames, 1917 (Sennett)
Her Filmland Hero, 1915 (Franklin)
Her Feathered Nest, 1916 (Sennett)
Her Father’s Pride, 1910 (Griffith)
Her Fancy and Shames, 1917 (Sennett)
Her Filmland Hero, 1915 (Franklin)
Her Feathered Nest, 1916 (Sennett)
Her Father’s Pride, 1910 (Griffith)
Her Fancy and Shames, 1917 (Sennett)
Her Filmland Hero, 1915 (Franklin)
Her Feathered Nest, 1916 (Sennett)
Her Father’s Pride, 1910 (Griffith)
Her Fancy and Shames, 1917 (Sennett)
Her Filmland Hero, 1915 (Franklin)
Her Feathered Nest, 1916 (Sennett)
Her Father’s Pride, 1910 (Griffith)
Her Fancy and Shames, 1917 (Sennett)
Her Filmland Hero, 1915 (Franklin)
Her Feathered Nest, 1916 (Sennett)
Hibiscus Town, 1987 (Xie Jin)
Hickey and Boggs, 1972 (Hill)
Hickory Hill, 1968 (Leacock)
Hidari uchiwa, 1935 (Gosho)
Hidden Agenda, 1990 (Loach; Zetterling)
Hidden City, 1915 (Ford)
Hidden Fortress. See Kakushi toride no san-akunin, 1958
Hidden River. See Río Escondido, 1947
Hidden Room. See Obsession, 1949
Hidden Woman, 1922 (Dwan)
Hide and Seek, 1913 (Sennett)
Hide and Seek Detectives, 1918 (Sennett)
Higanbana
Hidari uchiwa, 1935 (Gosho)
Hijos de Maria Morales, 1952 (de Fuentes)
Hijo del crack, 1953 (Torre Nilsson)
High and Low. See Kadowo, 1952 (Kramer; Zinnemann)
High and Low, 1913 (Dwan)
High and Dry, 1954 (Mackendrick)
Higashi Shinaki, 1968 (Imamura)
Hidden River.
Hidden Fortress. See Kakushi toride no san-akunin, 1958
Hidden Woman, 1922 (Dwan)
Hide and Seek, 1913 (Sennett)
High Fidelity, 2000 (Frears)
High Ashbury, 1967 (Warhol)
High Anxiety, 1977 (Brooks; Levinson)
High and the Mighty, 1954 (Wellman)
High and Low.
High Heels.
High Gear, 1931 (Stevens)
High Heels. See Docteur Popaul, 1972
High Hopes, 1988 (Leigh)
High Incident, 1996 (Spielberg)
High Infidelity. See Alta infedelà, 1964
High Journey, 1959 (Welles)
High Kampf, 1973 (Apted)
High Noon, 1952 (Kramer; Zinnemann)
High Plains Drifter, 1972 (Eastwood)
High Pressure, 1932 (Leroy)
High Baltic, 1935 (Gosho)
High Ball, 1931 (Browning)
High Ball, 1928 (Sandrich)
High Tension, 1928 (Sandrich)
His Guardian Angel.
His Glorious Night, 1930 (Feyder)
His First Patient.
His First False Step, 1916 (Sennett)
His First Command, 1930 (La Cava)
His First False Step, 1916 (Sennett)
His First Flame, 1927 (Sennett)
His First Monocle. See Min første Monocle, 1911
His First Patient. See Det første Honorar, 1912
His Girl Friday, 1940 (Hawks)
His Glorious Night, 1930 (Feyder)
His Guardian Angel. See Hans gode Genius, 1920
His Haunted Career, 1914 (Sennett)
His Hereafter, 1916 (Sennett)
His Hidden Purpose, 1918 (Sennett)
His Hour, 1924 (Vidor)
His Innocent Dupe. See Sjaeletyven, 1915
His Last Burglary, 1910 (Griffith)
His Last False Step, 1919 (Sennett)
His Last Laugh, 1916 (Sennett)
His Last Scent, 1916 (Sennett)
His Lesson, 1912 (Griffith)
His Lordship, 1932 (Towell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger)
His Lordship’s White Feather, 1912 (Guy)
His Lost Love, 1909 (Griffith)
His Luckless Love, 1915 (Sennett)
His Lying Heart, 1916 (Sennett)
His Majesty, the American, 1919 (Fleming)
His Marriage Wow, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)
His Most Difficult Part. See Hans vanskeligste Rolle, 1912
His Royal Profession, 1912 (Dwan)
His True Credentials, 1913 (Sennett)
His Mother’s Scarf, 1911 (Griffith)
His Mother’s Son, 1913 (Griffith)
His Musical Career, 1914 (Chaplin; Sennett)
His Mysterious Adventure. See Seine Frau, die Unbekannte, 1923
His Name Is Sukhe-Bator. See Yevo zovut Sukhe-Bator, 1942
His Naughty Thought, 1917 (Sennett)
His Neighbor’s Wife, 1913 (Porter)
His New Job, 1915 (Chaplin)
His New Mama, 1924 (Capra; Sennett)
His New Profession, 1914 (Chaplin; Sennett)
His New Stenographer, 1928 (Sennett)
His Nibs, 1922 (La Cava)
His Old-Fashioned Mother, 1913 (Dwan)
His Own Fault, 1911 (Sennett)
His Picture in the Papers, 1916 (Fleming; von Stroheim)
His Precious Life, 1917 (Sennett)
His Prehistoric Past, 1914 (Chaplin; Sennett)
His Pride and Shame, 1916 (Sennett)
His Real Wife. See Hans Rigtige kone, 1917
His Reckless Fling. See His Favorite Pastime, 1914
His Regeneration, 1914 (Chaplin)
His Return, 1915 (Walsh)
His Robe of Honor, 1918 (Ingram)
His Royal Shyness, 1932 (Sennett)
His Robe of Honor, 1918 (Ingram)
His Robe of Honor, 1918 (Ingram)
His Smothered Love, 1918 (Sennett)
His Soul, 1911 (Sennett)
His Soul, 1911 (Sennett)
His Son, 1913 (Sennett)
His Smoky Past, 1913 (Dwan)
His Story, 1915 (Chaplin; Sennett)
His Story of the World, Part I, 1918 (Brom, Levinson)
Hit, 1925 (Tuttle)
Hit Him Again. See Fatal Mallet, 1914
Hit Me Again. See Smearly, 1933
Hitchcock: Shadow of a Genius, 1999 (Altman; Bogdanovich)
Hitchin’ Posts, 1920 (Ford)
Hitler? Connais pas, 1963 (Blier)
Hitler ein Film aus Deutschland, 1977 (Syberberg)
Hitler Lives?, 1945 (Siegel)
Hitler’s Children, 1943 (Dmytryk)
Hitler’s Madman, 1943 (Sirk)
Hitler hada Kannon, 1937 (Kinugasa)
Hitro no issho, 1928 (Mizoguchi)
Hitro no yo sugata, 1926 (Gosho)
Hitomi musuko, 1936 (Ozu)
Hiotsubu no mugi, 1958 (Yoshimura)
Hittebarnet, 1916 (Holger-Madsen)
Hitting a New High, 1937 (Walsh)
Hjarttyven, 1943 (Roos)
Hjertetas Guld, 1912 (Blom)
Hjertestyven, 1943 (Roos)
Hoboken to Hollywood, 1926 (Sennett)
Hobson’s Choice, 1931 (Lauder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)
Hobson’s Choice, 1954 (Lean)
Hochzeit im Ekzentrisk Klub, 1917 (Lang)
Hoffmanns Erzählungen, 1915 (Pick)
Hoffmeyer’s Legacy, 1912 (Sennett)
Hofkonzert, 1936 (Sirk)
Hofrat Geiger, 1947 (Forst)
Hogan out West, 1915 (Sennett)
Hogan the Porter, 1915 (Sennett)
Hogan’s Annual Spree, 1914 (Sennett)
Hogan’s Aristocratic Dream, 1915 (Sennett)
Hogan’s Messy Job, 1915 (Sennett)
Hogan’s Romance Upset, 1915 (Sennett)
Hogan’s Wild Oats, 1914 (Sennett)
Hogaraka ni ayume, 1930 (Ozu)
Hoffman’s Mallet, 1914
Hogwarts and Warships. See Buta to gunkan, 1961
Hohomu jinsei, 1930 (Gosho)
Hojutsu no issho, 1930 (Gosho)
Hojutsu no issho, 1930 (Gosho)
Hokusai, Ukiyoe Master. See Hokusai manga, 1982
Hokusui manga, 1982 (Shindo)
Hokusukai manga, 1982 (Shindo)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Hold Back the Dawn, 1941</td>
<td>Wilder</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold Back the Night, 1956</td>
<td>Dwan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold Back the Sea.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold 'Em Jail, 1932</td>
<td>Sandrich</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold 'em Navy, 1937</td>
<td>Dmytryk</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold 'er Sheriff, 1931</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold Fast, 1927</td>
<td>Sandrich</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold That Bear, 1927</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold that Pose, 1927</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold-Up, 1911</td>
<td>Guy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold That Pose, 1927</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold That Pose, 1927</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold 'em Navy, 1937</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold 'Em Jail, 1932</td>
<td>Dmytryk</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold 'em Navy, 1937</td>
<td>Dmytryk</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold 'er Sheriff, 1931</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold Fast, 1927</td>
<td>Sandrich</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold That Bear, 1927</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold that Pose, 1927</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold-Up, 1911</td>
<td>Guy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold That Pose, 1927</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold That Pose, 1927</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold 'em Navy, 1937</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold 'Em Jail, 1932</td>
<td>Dmytryk</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold 'em Navy, 1937</td>
<td>Dmytryk</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold 'er Sheriff, 1931</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold Fast, 1927</td>
<td>Sandrich</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold That Bear, 1927</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold that Pose, 1927</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold-Up, 1911</td>
<td>Guy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold That Pose, 1927</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold That Pose, 1927</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold 'em Navy, 1937</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold 'Em Jail, 1932</td>
<td>Dmytryk</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold 'em Navy, 1937</td>
<td>Dmytryk</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold 'er Sheriff, 1931</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold Fast, 1927</td>
<td>Sandrich</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold That Bear, 1927</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold that Pose, 1927</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold-Up, 1911</td>
<td>Guy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold That Pose, 1927</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold That Pose, 1927</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold 'em Navy, 1937</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold 'Em Jail, 1932</td>
<td>Dmytryk</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold 'em Navy, 1937</td>
<td>Dmytryk</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold 'er Sheriff, 1931</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold Fast, 1927</td>
<td>Sandrich</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold That Bear, 1927</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold that Pose, 1927</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold-Up, 1911</td>
<td>Guy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold That Pose, 1927</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold That Pose, 1927</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold 'em Navy, 1937</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold 'Em Jail, 1932</td>
<td>Dmytryk</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold 'em Navy, 1937</td>
<td>Dmytryk</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold 'er Sheriff, 1931</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold Fast, 1927</td>
<td>Sandrich</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold That Bear, 1927</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold that Pose, 1927</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold-Up, 1911</td>
<td>Guy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold That Pose, 1927</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold That Pose, 1927</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold 'em Navy, 1937</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold 'Em Jail, 1932</td>
<td>Dmytryk</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold 'em Navy, 1937</td>
<td>Dmytryk</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold 'er Sheriff, 1931</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold Fast, 1927</td>
<td>Sandrich</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold That Bear, 1927</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold that Pose, 1927</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold-Up, 1911</td>
<td>Guy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold That Pose, 1927</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hold That Pose, 1927</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Honest Man, 1918 (Borzage)

Honesty Is the Best Policy, 1908 (Porter)

Honesty—the Best Policy, 1926 (Hawks)

Honey Pot, 1967 (Mankiewicz)

Honeycomb. See Madriguera, 1969

Honeymoon, 1926 (von Stroheim)

Honeymoon. See Luna de miel, 1956

Honeymoon for Three, 1941 (Bacon)

Honeymoon Hardships, 1925 (Sennett)

Honeymoon in My Life. See Honningmane, 1978

Honeymoon Zeppelin, 1929 (Sennett)

Honeymoon. See I. Prövningens stund, 1916

Hour of the Wolf. See Vargtimmen, 1968

Hourglass, 1971 (Gerima)

House, 1916 (Franklin)

Honeymoon in My Life. See Honningmane, 1978

Honeymoon Zeppelin, 1929 (Sennett)

Honeymoon. See I. Prövningens stund, 1916

Hour of the Wolf. See Vargtimmen, 1968

Hourglass, 1971 (Gerima)

Honeymoon. See I. Prövningens stund, 1916

Hour of the Wolf. See Vargtimmen, 1968

Hourglass, 1971 (Gerima)

House, 1916 (Franklin)
House, 1973 (Burnett)
House. See A Casa, 1997
House across the Bay, 1940 (Hitchcock)
House at the Terminus. See Chambre blanche, 1969
House across the Bay, 1940 (Hitchcock)
House on Trubnaya.
House on Telegraph Hill, 1951 (Wise)
House on Haunted Hill, 1999 (Zemeckis)
House on Carroll Street, 1988 (Benton)
House on 56th Street, 1933 (Florey)
House of Women.
House of Usher.
House of the Spirits, 1994 (August)
House of the Damned, 1996 (Corman)
House of the Angel.
House of Strangers, 1949 (Mankiewicz)
House of Pleasure.
House of Marney, 1927 (Hepworth)
House of Light.
House of Horror, 1928 (Christensen)
House of Exorcism.
House of Darkness, 1913 (Griffith)
House of Cards, 1916 (Guy)
House of Bamboo, 1916 (Sennett)
House with the Closed Shutters, 1910 (Griffith)
House That Jack Built, 1912 (Dwan)
House by the River, 1950 (Lang)
House behind the Cedars, mid-1920s (Micheaux)
House Divided, 1931 (Huston; Wyler)
House I Live In, 1945 (Leroy)
House of Cards, 1916 (Guy)
House of Cards, 1969 (Welles)
House of Darkness, 1913 (Griffith)
House of Exorcism. See Casa dell’esorcismo, 1974
House of Horror, 1928 (Christensen)
House of Light. See Chambre blanche, 1969
House of Marney, 1927 (Hepworth)
House of Pleasure. See Plaisir, 1952
House of Strangers, 1949 (Mankiewicz)
House of the Angel. See Casa del ángel, 1957
House of the Damned, 1996 (Corman)
House of the Spirits, 1994 (August)
House of Usher. See Fall of the House of Usher, 1960
House of Women. See Haus der Frauen, 1977
House on 56th Street, 1933 (Florey)
House on Carroll Street, 1988 (Benton)
House on Haunted Hill, 1999 (Zemeckis)
House on Carroll Street, 1988 (Benton)
House on Telegraph Hill, 1951 (Wise)
House on Trubnaya.
House across the Bay, 1940 (Hitchcock)
House That Jack Built, 1912 (Dwan)
House with the Closed Shutters, 1910 (Griffith)
Houseboat, 1916 (Sennett)
House with the Closed Shutters, 1910 (Griffith)
House That Jack Built, 1912 (Dwan)
House Divided, 1931 (Huston; Wyler)
House by the River, 1950 (Lang)
House behind the Cedars, mid-1920s (Micheaux)
House Divided, 1931 (Huston; Wyler)
House by the River, 1950 (Lang)
House of Horror, 1928 (Christensen)
House of Exorcism.
House of Darkness, 1913 (Griffith)
House of Cards, 1916 (Guy)
House of Bamboo, 1916 (Sennett)
House with the Closed Shutters, 1910 (Griffith)
House That Jack Built, 1912 (Dwan)
House by the River, 1950 (Lang)
House behind the Cedars, mid-1920s (Micheaux)
House Divided, 1931 (Huston; Wyler)
House by the River, 1950 (Lang)
Human Kindness, 1913 (Dwan)
Human Patterns. See Ningen moyo, 1949
Human Pawn. See Broken Fetters, 1916
Humanoids from the Deep, 1996 (Corman)
Humayun, 1945 (Mehboob Khan)
Humble Man and the Singer. See Demütige und die Sängerin, 1925
Humdrum Brown, 1918 (Ingram)
Humoresque, 1920 (Borzage)
Humoresques. See Humoreski, 1924
Humour noir, 1964 (Autant-Lara)
Hungarian Rhapsody.
Hung Hu-Tzu, 1958 (King)
Hundstage, 1944 (Forst)
Hundred Thousand Children, 1955 (Anderson)
Hundred Pound Window, 1944 (Attenborough)
Hundred and One Nights.
Hunchback of Notre Dame.
Hunchback and the Dancer.
Hun Within, 1918 (von Stroheim)
Humayun, 1945 (Mehboob Khan)
Hunting Trouble, 1933 (Stevens)
Hurry, Hurry.
Hurry, Doctor, 1925 (Sennett)
Hurry Call, 1932 (Sandrich)
Hurry, Doctor, 1925 (Sennett)
Hurry, Hurry. See Deprisa, deprisa, 1980
Hurry Sundown, 1966 (Preminger)
Husassistenten, 1914 (Holger-Madsen)
Husband for Anna. See Marito per Anna Zaccheo, 1953
Husbands, 1970 (Cassavetes)
Husbands and Lovers, 1924 (Stahl)
Husbands and Wives, 1992 (Allen; Pollack)
Husband’s Reunion, 1933 (Sennett)
Huse til mennesker, 1972 (Roos)
Hush . . . Hush, Sweet Charlotte, 1964 (Aldrich)
Hushing the Scandal, 1915 (Sennett)
Hussards et grisettes, 1901 (Guy)
Hustle, 1975 (Aldrich)
Hustler, 1961 (Rosen)
Husz óra, 1964 (Fábri)
Hvem er Gentlemantyen, 1915 (Holger-Madsen)
Hvem er han? See En ensom Kvinde, 1914
Hvem var Forbryderen?, 1912 (Blom)
Hvězda zvaná Pelyněk, 1964 (Fríč)
Hvo som elsker sin Fader or Faklen, 1915 (Holger-Madsen)
Hvor bjergene sejler, 1955 (Henning-Jensen)
Hvor Sorgerne glemmes, 1916 (Holger-Madsen)
Hvorledes Dr. Nicola erhvervede den kinesiske Stok. See Dr. Nicola, 1909
Hyakumanin no musumetachi, 1963 (Gosho)
Hyenas. See Hyènes, 1992
Hyènes, 1992 (Mambety)
Hymn to a Tired Man.
I Am Self-sufficient. See Io sono un autarchico, 1976
I Am Two. See Wasati wa naisi, 1962
I Am Your Child, 1997 (Brooks; Reiner)
I bambini ci guardano, 1943 (de Sica)
I basilisch, 1963 (Wertmuller)
I Became a Criminal. See They Made Me a Fugitive, 1947
I Believe in You, 1951 (Dearden)
I Call First, 1967 (Scorsese)
I Can Get It for You Wholesale, 1951 (Polonsky)
I cani del Sinai. See Fortini/Cani, 1976
I Can’t Marry Them All. See Alle kann ich nicht heiraten, 1952
I clowns, 1970 (Fellini)
I colpevoli, 1957 (de Sica)
I Coltellli del vendicatore, 1965 (Bava)
I Come from Bokin. See Je reviens de Bokin, 1977
I Come with the Wave. See Wo T’ a Laong Erh Lai, 1978
I Confess, 1953 (Hitchcock)
I conte Max, 1957 (de Sica)
I Corti italiani, 1997 (Pontecorvo)
I den store pyramide, 1974 (Roos)
I Did It, Mama, 1909 (Griffith)
I dieci comandamenti, 1945 (Germi)
I Dismember Mama, 2000 (Morris)
I dolci inganni, 1960 (Lattuada)
I Don’t Care Girl, 1953 (Bacon)
I Don’t Kiss. See J’embrasse pas, 1991
I Don’t Know. See Nie wiem, 1977
I Don’t Know You but I Love You. See Ich kenn’ Dich nicht und liebe Dich, 1933
I Don’t Want to Talk about It. See De eso no se habla, 1993
I Dood It, 1943 (Minnelli)
I Dream of Jeannie (with the Light Brown Hair), 1952 (Dwan)
I Dream Too Much, 1934 (Cromwell)
I . . . Dreaming, 1988 (Brakhage)
I Dreamt I Woke Up, 1991 (Boorman)
I due marescialli, 1961 (de Sica)
I Escaped from Devil’s Island, 1973 (Corman)
I fidanzati, 1963 (Olmi)
I figli di nessuno, 1951 (Rosi)
I‘T’ Film. See Ik-Film, 1929
I Flunked, But . . . . See Rakudai wa shita keredo, 1930
I Found Stella Parish, 1935 (Leroy)
I Fresh, 1987 (Burnett)
I fuorilegge del matrimonio, 1963 (Taviani)
I giorni contati, 1962 (Petti)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>I giorni più belli, 1956</td>
<td>(de Sica)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I girasoli, 1970</td>
<td>(de Sica)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Had a Comrade.</td>
<td>(de Sica)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Hate Your Guts.</td>
<td>(Intruder)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Hired a Contract Killer, 1990</td>
<td>(Kaurismaki)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Know Where I'm Going, 1945</td>
<td>(Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Kynighi, 1977</td>
<td>(Angelopoulos)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Live for Love, 1935</td>
<td>(Berkeley)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Live in Fear.</td>
<td>(See I kimono no kiroku, 1955)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Live My Life, 1935</td>
<td>(Mankiewicz)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Livets Braending, 1915</td>
<td>(Holger-Madsen)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Love a Soldier, 1944</td>
<td>(Sandrich)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Love NY: Sidney Lumet, 1987</td>
<td>(Jireček)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Love You All.</td>
<td>(See Je vous aime, 1980)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Love You to Death, 1989</td>
<td>(Kasdan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I magliari, 1959</td>
<td>(Rossi)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Married a Witch, 1942</td>
<td>(Clair)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I, Mobster, 1958</td>
<td>(Corman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I mostri, 1963 (Scola)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Never Promised You a Rose Garden, 1977</td>
<td>(Corman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I nostri anni più belli, Gli anni più belli, 1956</td>
<td>(De Sica)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I nostri figli.</td>
<td>(See I Vinti, 1952)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I nostri sogni, 1943 (de Sica)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I nuovi mostri, 1977 (Scola)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Once Had a Life.</td>
<td>(See General, 1998)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Only Want You to Love Me.</td>
<td>(See Ich will doch nur, dass Ihr mich liebt, 1976)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Pazzi della domenica, 1955-59 (Taviani)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I pirati de Capri, 1949</td>
<td>(Uller)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Played It for You, 1935</td>
<td>(Wenders)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Prövningens stund, 1916</td>
<td>(Sjöström)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I pugni in tasca, 1965</td>
<td>(Bellacchio)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I racconti di Canterbury, 1972</td>
<td>(Pasolini; Welles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I recuperanti, 1969 (Olimi)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Remember Mama, 1948</td>
<td>(Stevens)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I See a Dark Stranger, 1946</td>
<td>(Lauder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Set Anything, 1934</td>
<td>(Florey)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I sequestrati di Altona, 1962</td>
<td>(Lewis)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Sign in Blood.</td>
<td>(See Imzam kanla yaziylir, 1970)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I signi nel cassetto, 1957</td>
<td>(Castellani)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Spit on Your Grave.</td>
<td>(See Mr. Ira le cracher sur vos tombes, 1959)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Spy. see Morning After, 1934</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Surrender Dear, 1931</td>
<td>(Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Take These Truths, 1994</td>
<td>(Brakhage)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Take This Woman, 1932 (von Sternberg)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I tartari, 1960 (Welles)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I, the Worst of Them All.</td>
<td>(See Yo, la peor de todos, 1990)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I tre aquilotta, 1942 (Rossellini)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Tre volti della paura, 1963</td>
<td>(Bava)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Vampiri, 1956 (Bava)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I vinti, 1952 (Antonioni; Rossi)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Vitelloni, 1953 (Fellini)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Walk the Line, 1970</td>
<td>(Frankenheimer)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Walk to the Sun.</td>
<td>(See I ldq do sôma, 1955)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Walked with a Zombie, 1943</td>
<td>(Tourneur)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Wanna Hold Your Hand, 1978 (Spielberg; Zemeckis)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>“I Want My Hat!” (1909)</td>
<td>(Griffith)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Want to Go Home, 1989</td>
<td>(Resnais)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Want to Live, 1958 (Wise)</td>
<td>(Coolidge)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Was a Male War Bride, 1949</td>
<td>(Hawks)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Was a Soldier.</td>
<td>(See Bylem zohnierzem, 1970)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Was an Adventuress, 1940</td>
<td>(von stroheim)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Was Born, But . . . .</td>
<td>(See Umarete wa mite keredo, 1932)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Wonder Who’s Kissing Her Now, 1947 (Bacon)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Won’t Forget That Night.</td>
<td>(See Sono yo wa wasurenai, 1962)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I. Your Mother.</td>
<td>(See Man sa yay, 1980)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Zorba, 1987 (Wise)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ibn el Nil, 1951 (Chahine)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ibret, 1971 (Güney)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ibu sarutobi sasuke, 1965 (Shinoda)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Icarus, 1961 (de Palma)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ice Cold Cosos, 1926 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ice Storm, 1997 (Lee)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Icebreaker. see Brise-Glace, 1988</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Icelandic Cowboys.</td>
<td>(See Kurekars Noroursins, 1984)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Icean, 1984 (Jewison; Schepisi)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Iceanman Cometh, 1973 (Frankenheimer)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Iceanman’s Ball, 1932 (Sandrich)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ich bin Sebastian Ott, 1939 (Forst)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ich hab’ von Dir geträumt, 1944 (Staudte)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ich kenn’ Dich nicht und liebe Dich, 1933 (Forst)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ich Küssle Ihre Hand, Madame, 1929 (Zinnemann)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ich möchte kein Mann sein!, 1920 (Lubitsch)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ich und er, 1987 (Dorrie)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ich Werde Dich Toten Wolf, 1970 (Petersen)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ich will doch nur, dass Ihr mich liebt, 1976 (Fassbinder)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ichhupuran, 1970 (Sen)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ichiban utusukushiku, 1944 (Kurosawa)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ici et ailleurs, 1976 (Godard)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Iclonolast, 1909 (Griffith; Porter)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Icy in Spots.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I Deer do solhca, 1955 (Wajda)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Idea di un’isola, 1967 (Rossellini)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ideal Husband, 1947 (Clayton; Korda)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ideale Gattin, 1914 (Lubitsch)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Identification Marks: None. see Ryopsis, 1964</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Identificazione di una donna, 1982 (Antonioni)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Idiot. see Dummknopf, 1920</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Idiot. see Hakuchi, 1951</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Idiots. see Idioteer, 1998</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Idiots. see Idioteer, 1998</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Idioteer, 1998 (Von Trier)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Idiot. see Idioteer, 1998</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Idiotic Class, 1921 (Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Idlers That Work, 1949 (Anderson)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Idoire, 1932 (Tourneur)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Idol Dancer, 1920 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Idol of Hope, 1941 (Eisenstein)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Idoles, 1967 (Eustache)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Idylle, 1897 (Guy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Idylle à la plage, 1931 (Storck)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Idylle interrompue, 1897/98 (Guy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ibrahaim, 1951 (Ishikawa)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ieri, oggi, domani, 1963 (de Sica)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>If . . . , 1969 (Anderson; Frears)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>If I Had a Million, 1932 (Lubitsch; Mankiewicz)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>If I Had to Do It All over Again. see Si c’était à refaire, 1976</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>If I Lose You. see Seni kaybederessen, 1961</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>If I Were a Spy. see Si j’etais un espion, 1967</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>If I Were King, 1938 (Sturges)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>If I Were Rich.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>If I Were Rich. see Cash, 1933</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>If It Fits, 1978 (Marshall)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>If It’s Tuesday, This Must Be Belgium, 1969 (Cassavetes; de Sica)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>If One Thousand Clarinets, 1964 (Menzel)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>If the Sun Never Returns. see Si le soleil ne revenais pas, 1987</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>If These Walls Could Talk 2, 2000 (Coolidge)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
If You Like It. See Sukinareba koso, 1928
If You Love Me. See Aisureba koso, 1955
Igyjöttem, 1964 (Jancsó)
Ihr Sport, 1919 (Wiene)
Ihre Durchlaucht, die Verkäuferin, 1933 (Clouzot; Forst)
Ihre Hoheit beliehlt, 1931 (Wildor)
Ik Film, 1929 (Ivens)
Ikari no umi, 1944 (Mai)
Ikeru shikabane, 1920 (Kinugasa)
Ikimon no kiroku, 1955 (Kurosawa)
Ikinokata Shinsengumi, 1932 (Kinugasa)
Ikiru, 1952 (Kurosawa)
Ikisi de cesardu, 1963 (Güney)
Ikite-iru Magoroku, 1943 (Kinoshita)
Ikitoshi Ikerumono, 1934 (Gosho)
Ille au trésor, 1986 (Rui)
Ille de Pâques, 1935 (Storck)
Ille jaune, 1975 (Lefebvre)
Iliac Passion, 1967 (Markopoulos)
Ill, 2001 (Romero)
I’ll Be Seeing You, 1945 (Cukor)
I’ll Be Yours, 1947 (Sturges)
I’ll Buy You. See Anata kaimasu, 1956
I’ll Do Anything, 1994 (Brooks)
Ill Met by Moonlight, 1936 (Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger)
I’ll Never Forget Whatshisname, 1967 (Welles)
I’ll Say So, 1918 (Walsh)
I’ll See You in My Dreams, 1952 (Curtiz)
I’ll Still Live, 1938 (Vidor)
I’ll Take New York, 1942 (Sturges)
I’ll Take What’s Mine, 1947 (Boulin)
I’ll Take Your Last Name, 1935 (Dwan)
I’ll Take You by the Hand. See Ich hättle mir de u, 1931
I’ll Think of You, 1951 (Whitten)
I’ll Turn You Over, 1939 (Sarnoff)
I’ll Walk Alone, 1946 (Curtiz)
I’ll Be Your Baby, 1944 (Ranlett)
I’ll Do It My Way, 1955 (D’Ambrosio)
I’ll Do It Myself, 1950 (Ranlett)
I’m a Fool, 1976 (Howard)
I’m a Fool, 1974 (Brooks)
I’m All Right Jack, 1959 (Attenborough; Boulting)
Im Banne der Kralle, 1921 (Pabst)
Im Durch und grösster Not bringt der Mittelweg den Tod, 1974 (Kluge)
Im Lauf der Zeit, 1976 (Wenders)
Im Lauf der Zeit
Im innern des wals, 1985 (Dörrie)
Im Durchlaucht, die Verkäuferin, 1933 (Clouzot; Forst)
Im Dienste der Menschheit, 1938 (Ruttmann)
Im dornen des wals, 1985 (Dörrie)
Im Lauf der Zeit, 1976 (Wenders)
Im Mad, 1994 (Spiegelberg)
Im Still Alive, 1940 (Niebo)
I'm Wandering through Moscow.
In a Full Moon Night.
Imzam kanla yazilir, 1970 (Güney)
In a Wild Moment, One Wild Moment, A Summer Affair.
in a Mirror. See In einem miroir, 1985
In a Year with Thirteen Moons.
In Again—Out Again, 1917 (von Stroheim)
In Another’s Nest, 1913 (Dwan)
In A Moveable Feast, 1948 (Brook)
In a Full Moon Night. See In una notte di chiaro luna, 1989
In a Hog’s Forest, 1918 (Wiene)
In a Year with Thirteen Moons.
In a Mirror. See In einem miroir, 1985
In der Nacht, 1931 (Ruttmann)
In dornen des wals, 1985 (Dörrie)
Imbaccamato e scontento, 1966 (Santini; De Sica)
Imbecile, 1964 (Sartori)
Imbecile, 1966 (Messina; Dallaglio)
Imbolco, 1916 (Clair)
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
Impassable Destiny.
In jenen Tagen, 1947 (Käutner)
In Life’s Cycle, 1910 (Griffith)
In Little Italy, 1909 (Griffith)
In Love and War, 1997 (Attenborough)
In Memoriam László Mészáros. See Mészáros László emlékére, 1968
In Memory of Sergio Ordzhonikidze. See Pamyati Sergo Ordzhonikidze, 1937
In Name Only, 1939 (Cromwell)
In nome della legge, 1947 (Fellini; Germi)
In Old Kentucky, 1927 (Stahl)
In Old Kentucky, 1909 (Griffith)
In Old California, 1910 (Griffith)
In Old Arizona, 1929 (Walsh)
In Our Time, 1982 (Yang)
In Paris Parks, 1954 (Clarke)
In Prehistoric Days, 1913 (Griffith)
In Search of Famine. See Akaler Sandhane, 1980
In Search of Oz, 1993 (Coodridge)
In Spirit Of, 1991 (Hennig-Jensen)
In Spring One Plants Alone, 1980 (Ward)
In Such Trepidation I Creep off Tonight to the Evil Battle. See Zu böser Schlacht schleicht' ich heut' Nachts so bang, 1977
In the Aisles of the Wild, 1912 (Griffith)
In the Belly of the Whale. See V bolshom gorode, 1927
In the Bonds of Passion.
In the Bishop’s Carriage, 1913 (Porter)
In the Clutches of the Gang, 1914 (Sennett)
In the Course of Time.
In the Cut, 2001 (Campion)
In the Days of ’49, 1911 (Griffith)
In the Days of Struggle. See V dni borbi, 1920
In the Good Old Summertime, 1949 (Keaton)
In the Hands of Impostors. See Den hvide Slavehandel II, 1911
In the Heart of a Fool, 1921 (Kwan)
In the Heat of Passion, 1992 (Corman)
In the Heat of Passion II, 1994 (Corman)
In the Heat of the Night, 1967 (Ashby; Jewison)
In the Heart of Prussia, 1983 (de Antonio)
In the Light of the King’s Love. See V žaru královské lásky, 1991
In the Line of Fire, 1993 (Eastwood; Jewison)
In the Line of Fire, 1993 (Eastwood; Petersen)
In the Meantime, Darling, 1944 (Preminger)
In the Melting Pot, 1999 (Nava)
In the Mountains of Ala-Tau. See V gorakh Ala-Tau, 1944
In the Mouth of Madness, 1995 (Carpenter)
In the Name of Life. See Vo imya zhizni, 1946
In the Name of the Father. See Nel nome del padre, 1971
In the Name of the Fatherland. See Vo imya rodini, 1943
In the Night. See In der Nacht, 1931
In the Outskirts of the City. See A vásor peremén, 1957
In the Park, 1915 (Bacon; Chaplin)
In the Presence of a Clown. See Larmar och gör sig till, 1997
In the Presence of Mine Enemies, 1996 (Silver)
In the Prime of Life. See Ekspediricin, 1911
In the Realm of Fortune. See Imperio de la Fortuna, 1985
In the Realm of the Senses. See Al no corrida, 1976
In the Ruins. See Haikyo no naka, 1923
In the Season of Buds, 1910 (Griffith)
In the Shadow of the Sun, 1980 (Jarman)
In the Soup, 1992 (Jarmusch)
In the Summertime. See Durante l’estate, 1971
In the Town of S. See V gorodoe S, 1967
In the Watches of the Night, 1909 (Griffith)
In the White City. See Dans la ville blanche, 1983
In the Window Recess, 1909 (Griffith)
In the Year 2000, 1912 (Guy)
In the Year of the Pig, 1968 (de Antonio)
In This Corner, 1985 (Egoyan)
In This Our Life, 1942 (Huston)
In Two Minds, 1967 (Loach)
In una notte di chiaro luna, 1989 (Wertmuller)
In weitere Ferne, so naht!, 1993 (Wenders)
In Which We Serve, 1942 (Attenborough; Lean)
In Wrong. See Between Showers, 1914
Inadmissible Evidence, 1968 (Anderson)
Inanimate Animated.
India Summer, 1912 (Griffith)
India Song, 1975 (Duras)
India, 1958 (Rossellini)
India Cabaret, 1985 (Nair)
India Song. See Songe d’Inde, 1958 (Rossellini)
Indicatation: The McMartin Trial, 1995 (Stone)
Indio, 1971 (Fernández)
Indische Grabmal, 1921 (Lang)
Indiscreet, 1958 (Donen)
Indiscretion. See Såndet, 1953
Indiscretion of an American Wife. See Stazione Termini, 1953
Indomitable Leni Peickert. See Unbezähmbare Leni Peickert, 1969
Indonesian Calling, 1946 (Ivens)
Industrial Britain, 1933 (Flaherty; Grierson)
Industrial Research, 1976 (Benegal)
Industrial Reserve Army. See Industrielle Reservarmee, 1971
Industrie de la tapisserie et du meuble sculpté, 1935 (Storck)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>FILM TITLE INDEX</th>
<th>DIRECTORS, 4th EDITION</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Industrielle Reservarmee, 1971 (Sanders-Brahms)</td>
<td>Inside Out, 1992 (Borden)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Inez from Hollywood, 1924 (Arzner)</td>
<td>Inside Rooms—The Bathroom, 1985 (Greenaway)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Infamous. See Den Aereløse, 1916</td>
<td>Inside Story, 1948 (Dwan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Inferno, 1980 (Bava)</td>
<td>Inside/Outside Station 9, 1970 (Marshall)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Inferno des Verbrechens. See Inferno—Menschen der Zeit, 1921/22</td>
<td>Insider, 1999 (Mann)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Inferno—Menschen der Zeit, 1921/22 (Lang)</td>
<td>Insignificance, 1985 (Roeg)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Inferno of First Love. See Hatsuoki jig ok uhen, 1968</td>
<td>Inspector la Bavure, 1980 (Berrí)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Infirmière, 1914 (Gance)</td>
<td>Inspector Lavardin, 1985 (Chabrol)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Informant, 1973 (Marshall)</td>
<td>Inspector. See Revisor, 1933</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Information Received, 1961 (Roeg)</td>
<td>Inspector Hornleigh Goes to It, 1940 (Lauder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Informer, 1912 (Griffith)</td>
<td>Inspector Hornleigh on Holiday, 1939 (Lauder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Informer, 1935 (Ford)</td>
<td>Inspector Maigret. See Maigret tend un piège, 1957</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Informer. See Zinker, 1931</td>
<td>Inspirations, 1997 (Apted)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Inge bliver voksen, 1954 (Roos)</td>
<td>Instant de la paix. See Augenblick des Friedens, 1965</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ingeborg Holm, 1913 (Sjöström)</td>
<td>Instinct. See Honno, 1966</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ingenjor andrees luftfard, 1982 (Troell)</td>
<td>Instinct est maitre, 1917 (Feyder)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Inn at Osaka.</td>
<td>Instructeurs, 1915 (Vertov)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Inn at Osaka no yado, 1954</td>
<td>Instructors. See Instructors, 1914 (Browning)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Inn of Evil. See Hatsuoki jig ok uhen, 1968</td>
<td>Instructors. See Instructors, 1914 (Browning)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Initiation à la danse des Possédés, 1949 (Rouch)</td>
<td>Inspector. See Revisor, 1933</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Initiation, 1978 (Clarke)</td>
<td>Inspector Maitre. See Inspector Maitre tend un piège, 1957</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Initiative à la mort. See Magiciens, 1975</td>
<td>Interpolations I-V, 1992 (Apted)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Inferno des Verbrechens. See Inferno—Menschen der Zeit, 1921/22</td>
<td>Interrogation of a Woman, 1935 (Saito)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Inferno—Menschen der Zeit, 1921/22 (Lang)</td>
<td>Interrogation Room, 1970 (Foster)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Inferno of First Love. See Hatsuoki jig ok uhen, 1968</td>
<td>In the Dark. See Entre tienielas, 1983</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Innocence Is Bliss.</td>
<td>Into the Dark. See Entretien de la nuit, 1941 (Lecompte)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Innocents aux mains sales, 1975 (Chabrol)</td>
<td>In the Night, 1985 (Bartel; Cronenberg; Demme; Kasdan; Landis; Siegel)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Innocents, 1987 (Téchiné)</td>
<td>Into the West, 1993 (Sheridan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Innocents aux mains sales, 1975 (Chabrol)</td>
<td>Into Thin Air, 1985 (Howard)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Innocents, 1961 (Clayton)</td>
<td>Intolerance, 1916 (Browning; Griffith; von Stroheim)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Innocents, 1967 (Spielberg)</td>
<td>Introducing Dorothy Dandridge, 1999 (Coolidge)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Innocents, 1976 (Visconti)</td>
<td>Introducing the Dial, 1935 (Grierson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Innocents, 1976 (Visconti)</td>
<td>Introducing the Hero, 1935 (Grierson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Innocents aux mains sales, 1975 (Chabrol)</td>
<td>Introducing the Jury, 1991 (Mann)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Innocents, 1961 (Clayton)</td>
<td>Introduction to Marriage. See Kekkon-gaku nyumon, 1930</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Innocents, 1967 (Spielberg)</td>
<td>Introduction to Arnold Schoenberg’s Accompaniment for a Cinematographic Scene. See Einleitung zu Arnold Schoenberg Begleit Musik zu einer Lichtspieldarstellung, 1969</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Innocents, 1976 (Visconti)</td>
<td>Introduction to Marriage, 1930</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>In the Night, 1985 (Bartel; Cronenberg; Demme; Kasdan; Landis; Siegel)</td>
<td>Introducing the Jury, 1991 (Mann)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Intolerance, 1916 (Browning; Griffith; von Stroheim)</td>
<td>Introducing the Jury, 1991 (Mann)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Introducing Dorothy Dandridge, 1999 (Coolidge)</td>
<td>Introducing the Jury, 1991 (Mann)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Introducing the Jury, 1991 (Mann)</td>
<td>Introducing the Jury, 1991 (Mann)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Introducing the Jury, 1991 (Mann)</td>
<td>Introducing the Jury, 1991 (Mann)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
DIRECTORS, 4th EDITION

Italian Barber, 1910 (Grifﬁth)
Italian Barber, 1911 (Sennett)
Italian Blood, 1911 (Grifﬁth)
Italiano in America, 1967 (de Sica)
Italy Is Not a Poor Country. See Italia non e un paese povero, 1960
Itél a Balaton, 1932 (Fejös)
Itinéraire d’un enfant gâté, 1988 (Lelouch)
Itinerary of a Spoiled Child. See Itinéraire d’un enfant gâté, 1988
It’ll Happen Tomorrow. See Domani accadra, 1988
Itoshi no wagako, 1926 (Gosho)
It’s a Bear. See Just a Bear, 1931
It’s a Big Country, 1952 (Wellman)
It’s a Boy, 1920 (Sennett)
It’s a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World, 1963 (Keaton; Kramer; Lewis)
It’s a Wonderful Life, 1946 (Capra)
It’s All True, 1942 (Welles)
It’s Always Fair Weather, 1955 (Donen)
It’s Always Sunday, 1955 (Dwan)
It’s Forever Springtime. See E’primavera, 1949
It’s Impossible to Learn to Plow by Reading Books, 1988 (Linklater)
It’s in the Air, 1938 (Dearden)
It’s Magic. See Romance on the High Seas, 1948
It’s Murder!, 1977 (Raimi)
It’s No Laughing Matter, 1914 (Weber)
It’s Not Just You, Murray, 1964 (Scorsese)
It’s Only Money, 1962 (Lewis; Tashlin)
It’s Trad, Dad, 1962 (Lester)
It’s up to You, 1941 (Kazan)
Itsuwareru seiso, 1951 (Shindo; Yoshimura)
Itto d’Afrique, 1934 (Clouzot)
Iumoreski, 1924 (Vertov)
Ivan, 1932 (Dovzhenko)
Ivan Grozny, 1944 (Eisenstein; Pudovkin)
Ivan Groznyi II: Boyarskii zagovor, 1958 (Eisenstein)
Ivan the Terrible, Part I. See Ivan Groznyi, 1944
Ivan the Terrible, Part II: The Boyars’ Plot. See Ivan Groznyi II:
Boyarskii zagovor, 1958
Ivanov. See Three Soldiers, 1932
Ivanovo detstvo, 1962 (Tarkovsky)
Ivan’s Childhood. See Ivanovo detstvo, 1962
I’ve Always Loved You, 1946 (Borzage)
Ivory Snuff Box, 1915 (Tourneur)
Ivy and John, 1965 (Warhol)
Izin, 1975 (Güney)
Izotöpok a gyögyászatban, 1959 (Jancsó)
Izu no musumetachi, 1945 (Gosho)
Izu no odoriko, 1933 (Gosho)
Izumi, 1956 (Kobayashi)
J. Th. Arnfred, 1974 (Roos)
Ja se fabricam automovels em Portugal, 1939 (Oliveira)
Jaan Pehchan, 1950 (Kapoor)
Jabberwocky, 1977 (Gilliam)
J’Accuse, 1919 (Gance)
J’accuse, 1937 (Gance)
Jack, 1996 (Coppola)
Jack & Jill, 1998 (Egoyan)
Jack Ahoy!, 1934 (Launder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)
Jack and the Beanstalk, 1902 (Porter)
Jack and the Beanstalk, 1917 (Franklin)
Jack Brown, Genius, 1995 (Jackson)
Jack Bull, 1999 (Badham)
Jack Knife Man, 1920 (Vidor)
Jack of Diamonds, 1912 (Dwan)
Jack Point, 1973 (Apted)
Jackal of Nahueltoro. See Chacal de Nahueltoro, 1969

FILM TITLE INDEX

Jackboot Mutiny. See Es geschah am 20 Juli, 1955
Jackie, 1921 (Ford)
Jackie Brown, 1997 (Tarantino)
Jack’s the Boy, 1932 (Launder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)
Jack’s Wife. See Hungry Wives, 1973
Jack’s Word, 1912 (Dwan)
Jackson County Jail, 1976 (Corman)
Jackville, 1965 (Rouch)
Jacquot de Nantes, 1991 (Demy; Varda)
Jade, 1995 (Friedkin)
Jag drapte, 1943 (Zetterling)
Jag Mandir, 1991 (Herzog)
Jagd nach dem Gluck, 1930 (Renoir)
Jagd nach dem Tode, 1920 (Wiene)
Jagirdar, 1937 (Mehboob Khan)
Jagte Raho, 1956 (Kapoor)
Jagten paa Gentlemanrøveren, 1910 (Blom)
Jaguar, 1967 (Rouch)
Jaguar Lives, 1979 (Huston)
J’ai faim, j’ai froid, 1984 (Akerman)
J’ai un hanneton dans mon pantalon, 1906 (Guy)
Jail Bait, 1937 (Keaton)
Jail Yaatra, 1947 (Kapoor)
Jailbait, 1954 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Jak si zaslouzit princeznu, 1995 (Menzel)
Jalisco canta en Sevilla, 1948 (de Fuentes)
Jalna, 1934 (Cromwell)
Jalousie du barbouillé, 1928 (Cavalcanti)
Jalsaghar, 1958 (Ray)
Jam Session, 1944 (Donen)
Jama Masjid Street Journal, 1979 (Nair)
Jamaica Inn, 1939 (Hitchcock; Launder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)
James Bond Story, 1999 (Apted)
James Dean Story, 1957 (Altman)
Jana Aranya, 1975 (Ray)
Jane, 1986 (Brakhage)
Jane Austen in Manhattan, 1980 (Ivory)
Jane B. par Agnès V., 1988 (Varda)
Jane Eyre, 1943 (Welles)
Jane Eyre, 1996 (Zefﬁrelli)
Janes gode Ven. See Det Største i Verden, 1919
Janie, 1944 (Curtiz)
Janine, 1961 (Berri; Pialat)
Janis, 1999 (Demme)
Janitor, 1913 (Sennett)
Janitor’s Wife’s Temptation, 1915 (Sennett)
Janitzio, 1934 (Fernández)
János Tornyai. See Tornyai János, 1962
Jánošík, 1935 (Frič)
January Man, 1989 (Jewison)
Janus-Faced. See Januskopf, 1920
Januskopf, 1920 (Murnau)
Japan and the Japanese. See Nihon to Nihonjin, 1970
Japanerin, 1918 (Dupont)
Japanese Grandmothers. See Nippon no obachan, 1962
Japanese Summer: Double Suicide. See Muri-shinju: Nihon no natsu, 1967
Japanese Tragedy. See Nihon no higeki, 1953
Jardín de las delicias, 1970 (Saura)
Jardin des plantes, 1995 (de Broca)
Jardinier. See Arroseur arrosé, 1895
Jardins de Paris, 1948 (Resnais)
Jashumon no onna, 1924 (Kinugasa)
Jason X: Friday the 13th Part 10, 2001 (Cronenberg)
Jatagan Mala, 1953 (Makavejev)

1221


Jaune le soleil, 1971 (Duras)
Jawaharlal Nehru, 1985 (Benegal)
Jaws, 1975 (Spieberg)
Jazz—34, 1996 (Altman)
Jazz Boat, 1960 (Roeg)
Jazz Mamas, 1929 (Sennett)
Jazz Singer, 1953 (Curtiz)
Jazz Waiter. See Caught in a Cabaret, 1914
Jazzmania, 1923 (Goulding)
Je reviens de Bokkin, 1977 (Kaboré)
Je serai seule après minuit, 1931 (Clouzot)
Je t’aime, je t’aime, 1968 (Resnais)
Je tu il elle, 1974 (Akerman)
Je vous aime, 1980 (Berri)
Je vous y prrrends!, 1897/98 (Guy)
Jealous Husband, 1911 (Griffith; Sennett)
Jealous Husbands, 1923 (Tourneur)
Jealous Rage, 1912 (Dwan)
Jealous Waiter, 1913 (Sennett)
Jealousy. See Shitto, 1949
Jealousy and the Man, 1909 (Griffith)
Jean Cocteau, 1949 (Roos)
Jean Cocteau fait du cinéma, 1925 (Cocteau)
Jean de Florette, 1986 (Berri; Pagnol)
Jean de la Lune, 1948 (Astruc)
Jean Effel, 1948 (Resnais)
Jean la poudre, 1912 (Tourneur)
Jean-Paul Belmondo, 1965 (Lelouch)
Jean Piaget, 1977 (Goretta)
Jean de Florette, 1986 (Berri; Pagnol)
Jean-Paul Belmondo, 1965 (Lelouch)
Jean de la Lune, 1948 (Astruc)
Jean Effel, 1948 (Resnais)
Jean la poudre, 1912 (Tourneur)
Jean-Paul Belmondo, 1965 (Lelouch)
Jean Piaget, 1977 (Goretta)
Jean Renoir, le patron, 1966 (Eustache; Rivette)
Jean Renoir, 1993 (Bertolucci; Chabrol)
Jean Piaget, 1977 (Goretta)
Jean Renoir, le patron, 1966 (Eustache; Rivette)
Jean Renoir, 1993 (Bertolucci; Chabrol)
Jean Piaget, 1977 (Goretta)
Jean Renoir, le patron, 1966 (Eustache; Rivette)
Jean Renoir, 1993 (Bertolucci; Chabrol)
Jean Piaget, 1977 (Goretta)
Jean Renoir, le patron, 1966 (Eustache; Rivette)
Jean Renoir, 1993 (Bertolucci; Chabrol)
Jean Piaget, 1977 (Goretta)
Jean Renoir, le patron, 1966 (Eustache; Rivette)
Jean Renoir, 1993 (Bertolucci; Chabrol)
Jean Piaget, 1977 (Goretta)
Jean Renoir, le patron, 1966 (Eustache; Rivette)
Jean Renoir, 1993 (Bertolucci; Chabrol)
Jean Piaget, 1977 (Goretta)
Jean Renoir, le patron, 1966 (Eustache; Rivette)
Jean Renoir, 1993 (Bertolucci; Chabrol)
Jean Piaget, 1977 (Goretta)
Jean Renoir, le patron, 1966 (Eustache; Rivette)
Jean Renoir, 1993 (Bertolucci; Chabrol)
Jean Piaget, 1977 (Goretta)
Jean Renoir, le patron, 1966 (Eustache; Rivette)
Jean Renoir, 1993 (Bertolucci; Chabrol)
Jean Piaget, 1977 (Goretta)
Jean Renoir, le patron, 1966 (Eustache; Rivette)
Jean Renoir, 1993 (Bertolucci; Chabrol)
Jean Piaget, 1977 (Goretta)
Jean Renoir, le patron, 1966 (Eustache; Rivette)
Jean Renoir, 1993 (Bertolucci; Chabrol)
Jean Piaget, 1977 (Goretta)
Jean Renoir, le patron, 1966 (Eustache; Rivette)
Jean Renoir, 1993 (Bertolucci; Chabrol)
Jean Piaget, 1977 (Goretta)
Jean Renoir, le patron, 1966 (Eustache; Rivette)
Jean Renoir, 1993 (Bertolucci; Chabrol)
Jean Piaget, 1977 (Goretta)
Jean Renoir, le patron, 1966 (Eustache; Rivette)
Jean Renoir, 1993 (Bertolucci; Chabrol)
Jean Piaget, 1977 (Goretta)
Jean Renoir, le patron, 1966 (Eustache; Rivette)
Jean Renoir, 1993 (Bertolucci; Chabrol)
Jean Piaget, 1977 (Goretta)
Jean Renoir, le patron, 1966 (Eustache; Rivette)
Jean Renoir, 1993 (Bertolucci; Chabrol)
Jean Piaget, 1977 (Gore...
Job. See Posto, 1961
Job. See Urzad, 1967
Job in a Million, 1937 (Grierson)
Job Offer. See Offre d’emploi, 1980
Jocko musicians, 1903 (Guy)
Jocular Winds, 1913 (Dwan)
Joe Debbs, 1917 (Lang)
Joe Kidd, 1972 (Eastwood)
Joe vs. the Volcano, 1989 (Spielberg)
Joen no chimata, 1923 (Mizoguchi)
Joen, 1959 (Kinugasa)
Joen’s Apartment, 1996 (Bartel)
Johannes V. Jensen, 1947 (Roos)
Johannes Jörgensen i Svendborg, 1954 (Roos)
Johannes Jörgensen i Assisi, 1950 (Roos)
Johannas Traum, 1975 (Sjöström)
Johannes V. Jensen, 1947 (Roos)
John Carpenter’s Escape from L.A., 1996 (Bartel)
John Ericsson, 1937 (Sjöström)
John the Younger Brother. See Arendás zsidó, 1917
John the Younger Brother. See Jön az öcsem, 1919
Johnny Guitar
Johnny Eager, 1941 (Leroy)
Johnny Handsome, 1989 (Hill)
Johnny Handsome, 1989 (Hill)
Johnny’s Suicide, 1911 (Sennett)
Joey Boy, 1965 (Launder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)
Joe’s Apartment, 1996 (Bartel)
Jojakko, 1934 (Pagnol)
Joking Relationship, 1962 (Marshall)
Joking Relationship, 1962 (Marshall)
Joking Relationship, 1962 (Marshall)
Joke. See Farceur, 1960
Joke. See Joki Ii. Mono o takaku uritsukeru onna, 1959 (Ichikawa)
Jokei, 1960 (Yoshimura)
Joke. See Zert, 1968
Joke. See Zert, 1968
Jokyo II: Mono o takaku uritsukeru onna, 1959 (Ichikawa)
Joly Homme, 1976 (Tanner)
Jolly Jilter, 1927 (Sennett)
Jones Have Amateur Theatricals, 1909 (Griffith)
Jones Family in Quick Millions, 1939 (Keaton)
Jones and His New Neighbors, 1909 (Griffith)
Jones and the Lady Book Agent, 1909 (Griffith)
Jonathan Demme, 1980 (Dane)
Jonathan Demme, 1980 (Dane)
Jonathan Demme, 1980 (Dane)
Journey into Autumn.
Journey into Fear, 1943 (Welles)
Journey of Vincenc Moštek and Simon Pešl of Vlčnov to Prague, 1969
Jones and the Lady Book Agent, 1909 (Griffith)
Jour de fête, 1949 (Tati)
Jour des parques. See Rupture, 1970
Jour du frotteur, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Jour du terme, 1904 (Guy)
Jour et l’heure, 1962 (Clément)
Jour pina a demandé, 1983 (Akerman)
Jour “S . . . “, 1984 (Lefebvre)
Jour neanche, 1974 (Resnais)
Journey. See Safar, 1994
Journey. See Viaggio, 1974
Journey beneath the Desert, 1960 (Ulmer)
Journey from the Shadows, 1938 (Weiss)
Journey into Autumn. See Kvinnodröm, 1955
Journey into Fear, 1943 (Welles)
Journey of the Hyena. See Touki Bouki, 1973
Journey of Vincenc Moštek and Simon Pešl of Vlčnov to Prague, 1969
Journey Together, 1945 (Attenborough; Boulting)
Journey to the Lost City, 1959 (Lang)
Journey to the Land of the Traveller. See Sarari be Diare Mosafer, 1974
Journey to the Land of the Traveller. See Sarari be Diare Mosafer, 1974
Journey to the Land of the Traveller. See Sarari be Diare Mosafer, 1974
Journey to the Land of the Traveller. See Sarari be Diare Mosafer, 1974
Journey to the Lost City, 1959 (Lang)
Journey Together, 1945 (Attenborough; Boulting)
Journey’s End, 1930 (Whale)
Journeys from Berlin/1971, 1980 (Rainer)
Jours de 36. See Mères tout 36, 1972
Jours tranquilles a Clichy, 1990 (Chabrol)
Jour de fête, 1949 (Tati)
Jour des parques. See Rupture, 1970
Jour du frotteur, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Jour du terme, 1904 (Guy)
Jour et l’heure, 1962 (Clément)
Jour pina a demandé, 1983 (Akerman)
Jour “S . . . “, 1984 (Lefebvre)

Jubal, 1956 (Daves)
Jubiaba, 1986 (Pereira Dos Santos)
Jubilation Street. See Kanko no machi, 1944
Jubilee, 1978 (Jarman)
Jubilante, 1970 (Grierson)
Jubilation Street.
Judge.
Judge, 1916 (Sennett)
Judex
Judex
Jud Süss
Jubilee, 1978 (Jarman)
Judas Was a Woman.
Jubilation Street.
Jubiaba, 1986 (Pereira Dos Santos)
Jubal, 1956 (Daves)
Just a Bear, 1931 (Sennett)
Just Another Murder, 1935 (Sennett)
Just before Nightfall. See Juste avant la nuit, 1971
Just Brown’s Luck, 1913 (Sennett)
Just for Fun, 1963 (Roeg)
Just Gold, 1913 (Griffith)
Just Heroes, 1987 (Woo)
Just Kids, 1913 (Sennett)
Just like a Woman, 1912 (Griffith)
Just like at Home. See Olyan, mint otthon, 1978
Just Pals, 1920 (Ford)
Just Shoot Me, 1997 (Allen)
Just Tell Me What You Want, 1980 (Lumet)
Juste avant la nuit, 1971 (Chabrol)
Justice d’Abord, 1920/23 (Protazanov)
Justice for Selwyn. See Pripad pro Selwyn, 1968
Justice of the Sage, 1912 (Dwan)
Justice Victorious. See Retten sejer, 1917
Justicier. See Justiciero, 1967
Justiciero, 1967 (Pereira Dos Santos)
Justin de Marseille, 1935 (Tourneur)
Justine, 1969 (Cukor)
Jutro premiera, 1946 (Kawalerowicz)
Juvelerernes Skrœk, eller Skelethaanden, eller Skelethaandens sidste bedrift, 1915 (Dreyer)
Juvenile Court, 1973 (Wiseman)
Juvenizer. See Chung Shên Ta Shih, 1981
Juventude, 1950 (Pereira Dos Santos)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>FILM TITLE INDEX</th>
<th>DIRECTORS, 4th EDITION</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Keiraku hichu, 1928 (Kinugasa)</td>
<td>Killer! Baby…Kill!. See Spie vengono dal semifreddo, 1966</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Keirin shonin gyojoki, 1964 (Imamura)</td>
<td>Kill the Umpire, 1949 (Bacon; Tashlin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kejsaren av Portugalien, 1944 (Sjöström)</td>
<td>Killbots. See Shopping Mall, 1986</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kék Duna keringő, 1992 (Jancsó)</td>
<td>Killer! See Que la bête meure, 1969</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kekkon, 1947 (Kinoshita)</td>
<td>Killer, 1989 (Woo)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kekkon-gaku nyumon, 1930 (Ozu)</td>
<td>Killer Bees, 1974 (Schumacher)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kekkon no seitai, 1941 (Imai)</td>
<td>Killer Elite, 1975 (Peckinpah)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kekkon, 1947 (Kinoshita)</td>
<td>Killer Inside Me, 2000 (Morris)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kekkon shonin gyojoki, 1964 (Imamura)</td>
<td>Killer Is Loose, 1955 (Boetticher)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kekkon, 1947 (Kinoshita)</td>
<td>Killer: Journal of a Murder, 1996 (Stone)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kett Félödö a pokolban, 1961 (Fábri)</td>
<td>Killer McCoy, 1947 (Donen)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kessim, 1944 (Yoshimura)</td>
<td>Killer of Sheep, 1977 (Burnett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kermesse héroïque</td>
<td>Killer Party, 1986 (Bartel)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kermes.</td>
<td>Killer Shark, 1950 (Boetticher)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kekkon no seitai, 1941 (Imai)</td>
<td>Killers, 1946 (Huston; Siodmak)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kekkon, 1947 (Kinoshita)</td>
<td>Killers, 1964 (Cassavetes; Siegel)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kekkon-gaku nyumon, 1930 (Ozu)</td>
<td>Killer’s Kiss, 1955 (Kubrick)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kekkon, 1947 (Kinoshita)</td>
<td>Killers on Parade. See Yuhi ni akai ore no kao, 1961</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kekkon shonin gyojoki, 1964 (Imamura)</td>
<td>Killing, 1956 (Kubrick)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kekkon-shonin gyojoki, 1964 (Imamura)</td>
<td>Killing Fields, 1984 (Joffé)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kekkon, 1947 (Kinoshita)</td>
<td>Killing Hearts, 1914 (Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kekkon, 1947 (Kinoshita)</td>
<td>Killing Me Softly, 2001 (Chen Kaige)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kekkon, 1947 (Kinoshita)</td>
<td>Killing of a Chinese Bookie, 1976 (Cassavetes)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kekkon, 1947 (Kinoshita)</td>
<td>Killing of Sister George, 1968 (Aldrich)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kekkon, 1947 (Kinoshita)</td>
<td>Killing Urge. See Jet Storm, 1959</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kekkon, 1947 (Kinoshita)</td>
<td>Killing Zoe, 1994 (Tarantino)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kekkon, 1947 (Kinoshita)</td>
<td>Kim G., 1978 (August)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kekkon, 1947 (Kinoshita)</td>
<td>Kimono, 2000 (Hartley)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kekkon, 1947 (Kinoshita)</td>
<td>Kina vendégéi voltunk, 1957 (Jancsó)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kekkon, 1947 (Kinoshita)</td>
<td>Kind Millionaire.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kekkon, 1947 (Kinoshita)</td>
<td>Kindred of the Dust, 1923 (Walsh)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kekkon, 1947 (Kinoshita)</td>
<td>Kinfolk. See Rodnya, 1982</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kekkon, 1947 (Kinoshita)</td>
<td>King and Country, 1964 (Losey)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kekkon, 1947 (Kinoshita)</td>
<td>King and Four Queens, 1956 (Walsh)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kekkon, 1947 (Kinoshita)</td>
<td>King and Country, 1964 (Losey)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kekkon, 1947 (Kinoshita)</td>
<td>Kindred of the Dust, 1923 (Walsh)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kekkon, 1947 (Kinoshita)</td>
<td>Kindred of the Dust, 1923 (Walsh)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kekkon, 1947 (Kinoshita)</td>
<td>Kindred of the Dust, 1923 (Walsh)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
King of the Hill, 1993 (Soderbergh)
King of the Sumava. See Král Sumavy, 1959
King of Thieves. See Dolandiricilar, 1961
King, Queen, Knave, 1971 (Skolimowski)
King Steps Out, 1936 (von Sternberg)
Kingdom 1-4. See Riget, 1994
Kingdom 5-8. See Riget II, 1997
Kingdom of Diamonds. See Heerak Rajar Deshe, 1979
Kingdom of Naples. See Regno di Napoli, 1978
Kings Go Forth, 1958 (Daves)
Kings of the Road. See Im Lauf der Zeit, 1976
King’s Ransom, 2001 (Woo)
King’s Story, 1965 (Welles)
Kini et Adams, 1997 (Ouedraogo)
Kinno jidai, 1926 (Kinugasa)
Kirpitchiki, 1925 (Pudovkin)
Kirmes, 1960 (Staudte)
Kirinji, 1926 (Kinugasa)
Kiri no minato, 1923 (Mizoguchi)
Kire no ame, 1924 (Kinugasa)
Kiss before the Mirror, 1933 (Whale)
Kiss Me, Stupid, 1964 (Wilder)
Kiss Me Kate, 1953 (Fosse)
Kiss Me Goodbye, 1982 (Mulligan)
Kiss Me Kate, 1953 (Fosse)
Kiss Me, Stupid, 1964 (Wilder)
Kiss of Death.
Kiss of Death, 1976 (Kieślowski)
Kiss Them For Me, 1957 (Donen)
Kiss Me and Die.
Kiss Me Again, 1925 (Lubitsch)
Kiss in the Dark, 1949 (Daves)
Kiss from Stadium.
Kiss for Corliss, 1949 (Aldrich)
Kiss from Polibek ze stadionu, 1948
Kiss in the Dark, 1949 (Daves)
Kiss Me Again, 1925 (Lubitsch)
Kiss Me and Die. See Lady in Red, 1979
Kiss Me Deadly, 1955 (Aldrich)
Kiss Me Goodbye, 1982 (Mulligan)
Kiss Me Kate, 1953 (Fosse)
Kiss Me, Stupid, 1964 (Wilder)
Kiss of Death, 1976 (Leigh)
Kiss of Death. See Dödsödkyssen, 1917
Kiss Them For Me, 1957 (Donen)
Kisses. See Baisers, 1919
Kisses at Fifty, 1974 (Apted)
Kissing Bandit, 1948 (Donen)
Kissilma: Az Utolso Naplo, 2000 (Mészáros)
Kissing Bandit, 1948 (Donen)
Kisses at Fifty, 1974 (Apted)
Kissing Bandit, 1948 (Donen)
Kiss the Worldkonferenz, 1939 (Käutner)
Kizil vazo, 1961 (Güney)
Kizilirmak-Karakoyun, 1967 (Güney)
Kizoku no kaidan, 1959 (Yoshimura)
Kizudarake no sanga, 1964 (Shindo)
Klanni—tarina sammokoinen, 1984 (Kaurismaki)
Klansman, 1974 (Fuller)
Komedie om Geld, 1936 (Ophüls)
Komm’ zu mir zum Rendezvous, 1930 (Florey)
Komödianten, 1941 (Pabst)
Komödie der Leidenschaften, 1921 (Leni)
Komputerzy, 1967 (Zanussi)
Komsomolsk, 1938 (Gerasimov)
Konzert, 1961 (Szabó)
Kondura/Anugraham, 1977 (Benegal)
Konec jasnovidec, 1958 (Chytil)
Koneč starych casu, 1989 (Menzel)
Kongen bød, 1938 (Henning-Jensen)
König wojny, 1956 (Polanski)
Königin vom Moulin-Rouge, 1925 (Wiener)
Königin, 1999 (Schroeter)
Königskinder, 1949 (Käutner)
Königswalzer, 1935 (Forst; Grémillon)
Korol’ Sumavy, 1959 (Kachyňa)
Krák Králu, 1963 (Frič)
Krajobraz po bitwie, 1970 (Wajda)
Kraftmeier, 1916 (Lubitsch)
Közelrölia: a vér, 1965 (Jancsó)
Kozano lu, 1967 (Gosho)
Koo kro no niijii, 1958 (Kinoshiba)
Konrad Albert Pocci, der Fussballgraf vom Ammerland—Das vorläufig letzte Kapitel einer Chronik der Familie Pocci, 1967 (Syberberg)
Konsequenz, 1977 (Petersen)
Konservanbraut, 1915 (Wiene)
Konszervanbraut, 1915 (Wiene)
Krabbe’s Bakery Shop. See Cranes Konditor, 1951
Kranes Konditori, 1951 (Henning-Jensen)
Krap’s Last Tape, 2000 (Egoyan)
Krasnaya palatka, 1971 (Mikhalkov)
Krasnyj junin no onna, 1961 (Kinoshiba)
Krajobraz po bitwie, 1970 (Wajda)
Králik a Královna, 1948 (Forst)
Kuduz recep, 1967 (Güney)
Kunduk, 1967 (Sorosese)
Kung Bushmen Hunting Equipment, 1972 (Marshall)
Kung San Exhibits, 1991 (Marshall)
Kung San San Exibit/Peabody Museum, 1991 (Marshall)
Kung San San Exibit/Peabody Museum, 1991 (Marshall)
Kung San San Life, 1987 (Marshall)
Kung San San Resettlement, 1988 (Marshall)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Master, 1988 (Varda)
Kung Fu Ma...
Kyoto, 1969 (Ichikawa)
Kyoto, My Mother’s Place, 1991 (Oshima)
Kyuporan aru machi, 1962 (Imamura)

L.627, 1992 (Tavernier)
L.A. Babysitter. See Jeune fille libre le soir, 1975
L.A. Takedown, 1989 (Mann)
L.A. without a Map, 1998 (Skolimowski)
L.B.J., 1968 (Alvarez)
La Course du lièvre à travers les champs, 1972 (Clément)
La Rivolta delle Gladiatrici. See Arena, 1973
Labinento de pasiones, 1982 (Almodóvar)
Labors of Hercules. See Fatiche di Ercole, 1957
Laburnum Grove, 1936 (Reed)

Lady and the Beard.
Lady, 1925 (Borzage)
Lady Charlie.
Lady Barber, 1924 (Sennett)
Lady and the Mouse, 1913 (Griffith)
Lady and the Monster, 1944 (von Stroheim)
Ladies of the Bois de Boulogne.
Ladies of Leisure, 1930 (Capra)
Ladies Must Love, 1933 (Dupont)
Ladies Must Eat, 1929 (Sennett)
Ladies’ Man, 1961 (Lewis)
Ladies’ Journal.
Laddie, 1935 (Stevens)
Lacombe, Lucien, 1973 (Malle)
Lachende Erben, 1933 (Ophüls)
Lady Kills, 1929 (Sennett)
LadyKiller.
Lady in the Train.
Lady in Red, 1979 (Sayles)
Lady in the Train. See Sayidet el Kitar, 1952
Lady Killer. See Leon Drey, 1915
Lady-Killer of Rome. See Assassinio, 1961
Lady Lion, 1928 (Sandrich)
Lady Macbeth of Mtsensk. See Sibirska Ledi Magbet, 1957
Lady Marions sommarflirt, 1913 (Sjöström)
Lady Mary’s Love. See Den naadige Frøken, 1911
Lady Musashino. See Musashino Fujin, 1951
Lady of Burlesque, 1943 (Wellman)
Lady of Chance, 1928 (Goulding)
Lady of Scandal, 1930 (Franklin)
Lady of the Boulevard. See Nana, 1934
Lady of the Harem, 1926 (Walsh)
Lady of the Pavements, 1929 (Griffith)
Lady of the Shadows. See Terror, 1963
Lady or the Tiger?, 1942 (Zinnemann)
Lady Oscar, 1978 (Demy; Varda)
Lady Pays Off, 1951 (Sirk)
Lady! Please!, 1932 (Sennett)
Lady Surrenders, 1930 (Stahl)
Lady Takes a Sailor, 1949 (Curtiz)
Lady to Love, 1930 (Sjöström)
Lady Vanishes, 1938 (Hitchcock; Lauder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)
Lady Windermere’s Fan, 1925 (Lubitsch)
Lady Windermere’s Fan. See Fan, 1949
Lady with Sunflowers. See A napraforgós hölgy, 1918
Lady with the Black Glove. See Dame mit dem schwarzen Handschuh, 1919
Lady with the Little Dog. See Dama s sobachkoi, 1960
Ladybird Ladybird, 1994 (Loach)
Ladykiller, 1996 (Corman)
Ladykillers, 1955 (Mackendrick)
Lady’s Morals, 1930 (Franklin)
Lady’s Tailor, 1919 (Sennett)
Laegens Hustru. See Mens Pesten raser, 1913
Lererværøelset, 1994 (Von Trier)
Lafayette, 1961 (Wellman)
Lafayette Escadrille, 1958 (Eastwood; Wellman)
La Plan de La Mer, 1951 (Lazár)
Lafayette, 1961 (Welles)
Lage landen, 1960 (Haanstra)
Lagourdette, gentleman cambrioleur, 1913/16 (Feuillade)
Lage landen, 1960 (Haanstra)
Lamuru, 1933 (Gosho)
Lamurka, 1980 (Nesvijarskas)
Lament for a Bandit. See Llanto por un bandido, 1964
Lamm, 1964 (Staudte)
Lammur, 1933 (Gosho)
Launched, 1997 (Loach)
Land and Freedom, 1941 (Eisenstein)
Land and Freedom, 1995 (Loach)
Land Baron of San Tee, 1912 (Dwan)
Land and Freedom, 1941 (Eisenstein)
Land and Freedom, 1995 (Loach)
Land of the Pharaohs, 1955 (Hawks)
Land of the Lawless, 1923 (Fejös)
Land of Silence and Darkness.
Land of the Living, 1933 (Dwan)
Land of the Lawless, 1923 (Fejös)
Land of the Lawless, 1923 (Fejös)
Land of the Lawless, 1923 (Fejös)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>FILM TITLE INDEX</th>
<th>DIRECTORS, 4th EDITION</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Landlord’s Troubled, 1913 (Sennett)</td>
<td>Last House on the Left, 1973 (Craven)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Landru, 1962 (Chabrol; Melville)</td>
<td>Last House on the Left, Part II. See Reazione a catena, 1971</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Landsbykirken, 1947 (Weyr)</td>
<td>Last Hurrah, 1938 (Ford)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Landscape after the Battle. See Krajobraz po bitwie, 1970</td>
<td>Last Hurrah for Chivalry, 1978 (Woo)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Landscape in the Mist. See Topio stia Omichli, 1988</td>
<td>Last Hustle in Brooklyn, 1977 (Lee)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Landscapes of Southern China. See Del-Kina tajim, 1957</td>
<td>Last Laugh. See Letzte Mann, 1924</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lane That Had No Turning, 1922 (Fleming)</td>
<td>Last Man. See Poslední muž, 1934</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lang Gespräch mit dem Vogel, 1992 (Zanussi)</td>
<td>Last Man Standing, 1996 (Hill)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lark's Nightmare.</td>
<td>Last Man to Hang?, 1956 (Schlesinger)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Läßka, 1967 (Kachyňa)</td>
<td>Last Metro. See Dernier Metro, 1980</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Láska mezi kapkami deště, 1979 (Kachyňa)</td>
<td>Last Moment, 1928 (Fejős)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Láska, 1972 (Kachyňa)</td>
<td>Last Movie. See Splendor, 1989</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Landscape after the Battle.</td>
<td>Last Night, 1998 (Cronenberg)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Laste Fiançailles, 1973 (Zetterling)</td>
<td>Last Notch, 1911 (Dwan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lars Ole, 5C, 1972 (Malmros)</td>
<td>Last of Mrs. Cheyney, 1929 (Franklin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Láska mezi kapkami deště, 1979 (Kachyňa)</td>
<td>Last of Mrs. Cheyney, 1937 (Arzner)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Last Adventure of Arsène Lupin. See Arsén Lupin utolsó kalandja, 1921</td>
<td>Last of Sheila, 1972 (Schumacher)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Last Adventure of the Skeleton’s Hand. See Juvelerernes Skrek, eller Slektheaanden, eller Slektheaanden’s südste bedrft, 1915</td>
<td>Last of the Mohicans, 1920 (Tourneur)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Last Aristocrats, 1989 (Xie Jin)</td>
<td>Last of the Mohicans, 1992 (Mann)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Last Betrothal.</td>
<td>Last of the Vikings, See Ultimo dei Vikinghi, 1961</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Last Couple Out. See Sista paret ut, 1956</td>
<td>Last Orders, 2001 (Scheppis)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Last Coupon, 1932 (Lauder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)</td>
<td>Last Outlaw, 1919 (Ford)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Last Dance, 1991 (Zanussi)</td>
<td>Last Pair Out. See Sista paret ut, 1956</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Last Dance, 1996 (Beresford)</td>
<td>Last Party, 1993 (Lee; Stone)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Last Dance. See Daibyonin, 1995</td>
<td>Last Performance, 1929 (Fejős)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Last Dawn. See Az utolsó hajnal, 1917</td>
<td>Last Picture Show, 1971 (Bogdanovich; Rafelson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Last Day of the War. See Ultimo dia de la guerra, 1969</td>
<td>Last Run, 1971 (Huston)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Last Days, 1998 (Spielberg)</td>
<td>Last September, 1999 (Jordan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Last Days of Chez Nous, 1992 (Armstrong)</td>
<td>Last Shot. See Poslední výstřel, 1950</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Last Days of Disco, 1998 (Stillman)</td>
<td>Last Stage. See Ostattrer lap, 1947</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Last Days of Gomorrah. See Letzte Tage von Gomorrah, 1974</td>
<td>Last Sunset, 1961 (Aldrich)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Last Days of Pompeii, 1935 (Schoedsack)</td>
<td>Last Supper. See Ultima cena, 1976</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Last Days of Pompeii. See Ultimi giorni di Pompeii, 1959</td>
<td>Last Tango in Paris, 1972 (Bertolucci; Breilat; Varda)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Last Deal, 1909 (Griffith)</td>
<td>Last Temptation of Christ, 1988 (Schrader; Scorsese)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Last Detail, 1973 (Ashby)</td>
<td>Last Ten Days. See Letzte Akt, 1955</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Last Drink of Whiskey, 1914 (Browning)</td>
<td>Last Tycoon, 1976 (Kazan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Last Drop of Water, 1911 (Griffith; Sennett)</td>
<td>Last Wagon, 1956 (Daves)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Last Emperor, 1987 (Bertolucci; Chen Kaige)</td>
<td>Last Waltz, 1978 (Scorsese)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Last Exit to Earth, 1996 (Corman)</td>
<td>Last Warning, 1929 (Leni)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Last Five Minutes. See Ultimi cinque minuti, 1955</td>
<td>Last Wave, 1977 (Weir)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Last Frontier, 1955 (Mann)</td>
<td>Last Will of Dr. Mabuse. See Testament des Dr. Mabuse, 1933</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Last Gangster. See Roger Touhy, Gangster, 1943</td>
<td>Last Witness. See Letzte Zeuge, 1960</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Last Gasp. See Sista skriket, 1995</td>
<td>Last Woman on Earth, 1958 (Corman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Last Goal. See Két Félidő a pokolban, 1961</td>
<td>Last Witness. See Letzte Zeuge, 1960</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Last Grenade, 1969 (Attenborough)</td>
<td>Last Yoga, 1972 (Bertolucci; Beltrami; Varda)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Last Hour, 1930 (Lauder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)</td>
<td>Last Year at Marienbad. See Année dernière à Marienbad, 1961</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

Notes:
- See references where applicable.
- Dates are in chronological order.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>FILM TITLE INDEXDIRECTORS, 4th EDITION</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Laughing Times, 1981 (Woo)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Laughter in the Dark, 1969 (Richardson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Laundromat, 1985 (Altman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Laura, 1944 (Preminger)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lausbubengeschichten, 1964 (Käutner)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lauter Längen, 1950 (Staudte)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>L’Autre, 1999 (Chahine)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lavatori della pietra, 1955-59 (Taviani)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lavatory moderne, 1990/01 (Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lavender Hill Mob, 1951 (Crichton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Laveuses, 1896-97 (Lumière)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Laviamoci il cervello. See RoGoPaG, 1962</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Let Joy Reign Supreme. See Que la fête commence, 1975</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lavender Hill Mob, 1951 (Crichton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Laveuses, 1896-97 (Lumière)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Laviamoci il cervello. See RoGoPaG, 1962</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Let Joy Reign Supreme. See Que la fête commence, 1975</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lavender Hill Mob, 1951 (Crichton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Laveuses, 1896-97 (Lumière)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Laviamoci il cervello. See RoGoPaG, 1962</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Let Joy Reign Supreme. See Que la fête commence, 1975</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lavender Hill Mob, 1951 (Crichton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Laveuses, 1896-97 (Lumière)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Laviamoci il cervello. See RoGoPaG, 1962</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Let Joy Reign Supreme. See Que la fête commence, 1975</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lavender Hill Mob, 1951 (Crichton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Laveuses, 1896-97 (Lumière)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Laviamoci il cervello. See RoGoPaG, 1962</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Let Joy Reign Supreme. See Que la fête commence, 1975</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lavender Hill Mob, 1951 (Crichton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Laveuses, 1896-97 (Lumière)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Laviamoci il cervello. See RoGoPaG, 1962</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Let Joy Reign Supreme. See Que la fête commence, 1975</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lavender Hill Mob, 1951 (Crichton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Laveuses, 1896-97 (Lumière)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Laviamoci il cervello. See RoGoPaG, 1962</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Let Joy Reign Supreme. See Que la fête commence, 1975</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lavender Hill Mob, 1951 (Crichton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Laveuses, 1896-97 (Lumière)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Laviamoci il cervello. See RoGoPaG, 1962</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Let Joy Reign Supreme. See Que la fête commence, 1975</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lavender Hill Mob, 1951 (Crichton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Laveuses, 1896-97 (Lumière)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Laviamoci il cervello. See RoGoPaG, 1962</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Let Joy Reign Supreme. See Que la fête commence, 1975</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lavender Hill Mob, 1951 (Crichton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Laveuses, 1896-97 (Lumière)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Laviamoci il cervello. See RoGoPaG, 1962</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Let Joy Reign Supreme. See Que la fête commence, 1975</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Leaves of Grass, 1942 (Frank)
Let Katie Do It, 1916 (Franklin)
Let My People Go, 1960 (Anderson)
Let My People Live, 1939 (Ulmer)
Let There Be Light, 1946 (Huston)
Let There Be Light. See Es Werde Licht, 1918
Let’s Get Married, 1926 (La Cava)
Let’s Have a Party, 1963 (Verhoeven)
Let’s Make Love, 1960 (Cukor)
Let’s Speak, Grandmother. See Parloans, grand-mère, 1989
Let’s Spend the Night Together, 1982 (Ashby)
Let’s Talk about Women.
Letter.
Letter, 1940 (Wyler)
Letter from an Unknown Woman
Letter from a Friend, 1982 (Haynes)
Letter to Three Wives, 1949 (Mankiewicz)
Letter of Introduction, 1938 (Stahl)
Letter from Siberia.
Letter for Evie, 1946 (Dassin)
Letters from Marusia.
Letters from the Park.
Lettre.
Lidércnyomás, 1920 (Fejös)
Liduška of the Stage. See Muzikantská Liduška, 1940
Lie, 1914 (Dwan)
Lieb’ mich und die Welt ist mein, 1923 (Forst)
Liebe der Jeanne Ney, 1927 (Fahs)
Liebe des van Royk, 1918 (Pick)
Liebe en Deutschland, 1984 (Holland)
Liebe in Deutschland, 1983 (Wajda)
Liebe ist kälter als der Tod, 1969 (Fassbinder)
Liebelei, 1933 (Ophüls)
Liebes Pielgerfahrt, 1920/23 (Protazanov)
Liebesbrief der Königin, 1916 (Wiene)
Liebesexpress, 1931 (Wiene)
Liebeskonzil, 1982 (Schroeter)
Liebesträumilch, 1928 (Forst)
Liebling der Matrosen, 1937 (Sirk)
Lied der Sonne, 1933 (de Sica)
Lied der Ströme, 1954 (Ivens)
Lied einer Nacht, 1932 (Clouzot)
Lied für dich, 1933 (Clouzot)
Lied is aus, 1930 (Forst)
Lien Lien Feng Ch’eng, 1986 (Hou Hsiao-hsien)
Liers saang. See Blood Relatives, 1978
Lies. See Uso, 1963
Lies My Father Told Me, 1975 (Kadár)
Lieuf du crime, 1986 (Téchiné)
Lieutenant Wore Skirts, 1955 (Tashlin)
Life. See Zhizn, 1927
Life and Adventures of Nicholas Nickleby, 1947 (Cavalcanti)
Life and Death of a Hollywood Extra, 1927 (Florey)
Life and Death of Colonel Blimp. 1943 (Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger)
Life and Extraordinary Adventures of Private Ivan Chonkin, 1995 (Menzel)
Life and Loves of Beethoven. See Grande Amour de Beethoven, 1936
Life and Nothing But. See Vie et rien d’autre, 1989
Life and Times of a Criminal. See En Forbyrders Liv og Levned, eller En Forbyrders Memoirer, 1916
Life and Times of Judge Roy Bean, 1972 (Huston)
Life and Times of the Reverend Buck Shotte, 1968 (Weir)
Life at Stake. See Nr o život, 1956
Life Boat, 1944 (Hitchcock)
Life-bringing Water. See Ëltetô Tiszavíz, 1954
Life for a Kiss, 1912 (Dwan)
Life for a Life. See Zhizn’ za Zhizn’, 1916
Life for a Life. See Zycie Za Zycie, 1991
Life for a Kiss. See Jizni tonbo-gaeri, 1946
Life for a Kiss. See Zhizn za Zhizn’, 1916
Life for a Life. See Zycie Za Zycie, 1991
Life for Ruth, 1962 (Deardens)
Life Goes On. See Az élet megy tovább, 1959
Life in Sometown, U.S.A., 1938 (Keaton)
Life in the Balance, 1913 (Sennett)
Life Is a Bed of Roses. See Vie est un roman, 1983
Life Is a Bed of Roses. See Vie et rien d’autre, 1989
Life Is Like a Somersault. See Jisni toubo-gaeri, 1946
Life Is Rising from the Ruins, 1945 (Kadár)
Life Is Sweet, 1990 (Leigh)
Life Is for Ruth, 1962 (Dearden)
Life Is Rising from the Ruins, 1945 (Kadár)
Life Is Sweet, 1990 (Leigh)
Life Line, 1919 (Tourneur)
Life Love Death. See Vie, l’amour, la mort, 1968
Life of a Communist Writer. See Kobayashi Takiji, 1974
Life of a Cowboy, 1906 (Porter)
Life of a Film Director: Record of Kenji Mizoguchi. See Aru eiga-eigakotokou no shogai: Mizoguchi Kenji no kiroku, 1975
Life of a London Shopgirl, 1914 (Goulding)
Life of a Mother. See Historien om en Moder, 1912
Life of a Woman, 1953 (Shindo)
Life of Adolf Hitler. See Leben von Adolf Hitler, 1961
Life of an American Fireman, 1903 (Porter)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Life of an American Policeman, 1905</td>
<td>Porter</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Life of an Office Worker. See Kaisha-in seikatsu, 1929</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Life of Chikuzan. See Chikuzan hitori-tabi, 1977</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Life of General Villa, 1912</td>
<td>Walsh</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Life of Her Own, 1950</td>
<td>Cukor</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Life of Juanita Castro, 1965</td>
<td>Warhol</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Life of Luxury. See Hitari uchiwa, 1935</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Life of Oharu. See Saikaku ichidai onna, 1952</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Life of Reilly, 1923 (La Cava)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Life on a String. See Biax ou biax chang, 1991</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Life Signs. See Eletjel, 1973</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Life Size. See Tamaño natural, 1973</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Life Stinks!. See 1991 (Brooks)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Life Story. See Zyciorys, 1975</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Life Was at Stake. See Hra o život, 1956</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Life with an Idiot, 1993 (Rogozhin)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Life with Father, 1947 (Curtiz)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Life with Henry, 1941 (Niblo)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lifeforce, 1985 (Hooper)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lifers Group: World Tour, 1992 (Spheeris)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Life’s Harmony, 1916 (Borzage)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Life’s Very Good. See Otchen kharacho dziviosta, 1932</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Light. See Yeelen, 1987</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Light Ahead. See Tatsche, 1939</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Light Fantastic. See Love Is Better than Ever, 1952</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Light Keeps Me Company. See Ljuset håller mig sällskap, 2000</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Light of Day, 1987 (Schrader)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Light Sleeper, 1992 (Schrader)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Light Snack, 1975 (Leigh)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Light That Came, 1909 (Griffith)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Light That Failed, 1939 (Wellman)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Light Years Away. See Années lumière, 1981</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lighthouse. See Yorokobi mo kanashimi mo ikutoshiakabe, 1957</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lighthouse Love, 1932 (Sennett)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lightning’, 1925 (Ford)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lightning over Water, 1981</td>
<td>Jarmusch; Ray; Wenders</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lightning Strikes Twice, 1951 (Vidor)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lightning, 1927 (Stevens)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lights from Circus Life. See Det store Hjerte, 1924</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lights of Night. See Nishi Ginza eki mae, 1958</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lightship, 1985 (Skolimowski)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ligne de démarcation, 1966</td>
<td>Berri; Chabrol</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Like a Bird on a Wire. See Wie ein Vogel auf dem Draht, 1974</td>
<td>Weber</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Like Most Wives, 1914 (Weber)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Likely Stories, Volume 1, 1990 (Reiner)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Li’l Abner, 1940 (Keaton)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Li’l Abner, 1960 (Lewis)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lili Marleen, 1980 (Fallenbinder)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lilies of the Field, 1930 (Korda)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Liliom, 1919 (Curtiz)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Liliom, 1930 (Borzage)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Liliom, 1934 (Lang)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lilit, 1964 (Rosen)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lilit und Ly, 1919 (Lang)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lille Cirkus, 1984 (Roos)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lily of the Tenements, 1910 (Griffith)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lily Turner, 1933 (Wellman)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lily’s Lovers, 1911 (Sennett)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Limbo, 1972 (Silver)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Limbo, 1999 (Sayles)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Limelight, 1952 (Aldrich; Chaplin; Keaton)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Limey, 1999 (Soderbergh)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lina Pod Eksperimento ili Buinjy Pokoinik, 1917</td>
<td>Bauer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lina Under Examination. See Lina Pod Eksperimento ili Buinjy Pokoinik, 1917</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lina’s Adventure in Sochi. See PriklyuchenieLinya v Sochi, 1916</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lincoln, 1992 (Parks)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lincoln Cycle, 1917 (Stahl)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Line, 1969 (Rainer)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Line Cruising South, 1933 (Grierson)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Line of Demarcation. See Ligne de démarcation, 1966</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Line to Tschiera Hut, 1937</td>
<td>Cavalcanti; Grierson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Line-up, 1958 (Siegel)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Línea del cielo, 1983 (Stillman)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lines of White on the Sullen Sea, 1909 (Griffith)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lion and the Girl, 1916 (Sennett)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lion and the House, 1932 (Sennett)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lion and the Mouse, 1928 (Bacon)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lion and the Souse, 1924 (Sennett)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lion des Mogols, 1924 (Epstein)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lion Game, 1970 (Marshall)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lion Has Seven Heads. See Leone have sept cabecas, 1970</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lion Has Wings, 1939 (Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lion Hunters. See Chasse au lion à l’arc, 1965</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lion in the Streets, 1953 (Walsh)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lion nommé l’Américain, 1968 (Rouch)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lion savant, 1902 (Guy)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lion with the White Mane. See Lev s bilou hľivou, 1987</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lionheart, 1987 (Schaffner)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lion’s Love, 1969 (Bogdanovitch; Clarke; Varda)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lion’s Roar, 1928 (Sennett)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lion’s Whiskers, 1925 (Sennett)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Liquide du couvent, 1903 (Guy)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Liquid Dreams, 1992 (Bartel)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lisa and the Devil. See Casa dell’esorcismo, 1974</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lisboa Cultural, 1983 (Oliveira)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lisbon Story, 1995 (Oliveira; Wenders)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lisseta, 1933 (de Sica)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>List of Adrian Messenger, 1963 (Huston)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Listen to Britain, 1942 (Jennings)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Listen Up! The Lives of Quincy Jones, 1990 (Lumet)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Listen with Your Eyes, 2000 (Frankenheimer)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Listening In, 1932 (Sennett)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Listopad, 1966 (Joseliani)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lit à deux places, 1965 (Delannoy)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Little, 1916 (Franklin)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Little American, 1917 (de Mille)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Little Angels of Luck, 1910 (Griffith)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Little Big Man, 1970 (Penn)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Little Big Shot, 1935 (Curtiz)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Little Billy Triumphs, 1914 (Sennett)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Little Billy’s City Cousin, 1914 (Sennett)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Little Billy’s Strategy, 1914 (Sennett)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Little Black Book, 1999 (Forman)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Little Bricks. See Kirpichiki, 1925</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Little Brother. See Braticha, 1926</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Little Buddha, 1994 (Bertolucci)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Little Caesar, 1930 (Leroy)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Little Chaos. See Kleine Chaos, 1966</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Little Chauffeur. See Den lille Chauffier, 1914</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Little Cupids, 1916 (Franklin)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Little Darling, 1909 (Griffith)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Little Dick’s First Adventure. See Ash Can, or Little Dick’s First Adventure, 1915</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Little Dick’s Silver Case, 1916 (Franklin)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Little Dieter Needs to Fly, 1997 (Herzog)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Little Foxes, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Little Girl Who Sold the Sun. See Petite vendeuse de soleil, 1998</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Little Hero, 1913 (Sennett)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Little Johnny Jones, 1923 (Leroy)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Little Journey, 1927 (Lewin)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Little Lord Fauntleroy, 1936 (Cromwell)</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Little Man, What Now?, 1934 (Borzage; Ulmer)
Little Marie, 1915 (Browning)
Little Match Girl. See Petite Marchande d'allumettes, 1928
Little Meena’s Romance, 1916 (Fleming)
Little Mermaid. See Malá mošská vila, 1976
Little Miss Smiles, 1922 (Ford)
Little Mr. Jim, 1945 (Zinnemann)
Little Monastery in Tuscany. See Petit monastère en Toscane, 1988
Little People, 1926 (Cavalcanti)
Little Prince, 1974 (Doneen; Rossetti)
Little Princess, 1917 (Hawks)
Little Rascals, 1994 (Brooks; Spheeris)
Little Runaway.
Little Robinson Corkscrew, 1924 (Sennett)
Little Rascals, 1994 (Brooks; Spheeris)
Little Princess, 1917 (Hawks)
Little Sugar House. See Cukrová bouda, 1980
Little Teacher, 1909 (Griffith)
Little Teacher, 1915 (Sennett)
Little Tease, 1913 (Griffith)
Little Terror, 1917 (Ingram)
Little Theatre of Jean Renoir. See Petit Théâtre de Jean Renoir, 1970
Little Thief.
Little Theatre. See Chisana toboshia, 1967
Little Shop of Horrors, 1960 (Corman)
Long Road, 1911 (Griffith)
Long Shot. See Target of an Assassin, 1976
Long Live the Republic.
Long Live the Lady!.
Long Live the Deceased.
Long Live the Bride and Groom.
Long Hot Summer, 1957 (Ritt; Welles)
Long Gray Line, 1955 (Ford)
Long Goodbye, 1973 (Altman; Rudolph)
Long Day's Journey into Night, 1962 (Lumet)
Long Absence.
Long Dead, 1924 (Borzage)
Long Distance Runner, 1962 (Richardson)
Long Distance Runner, 1962 (Richardson)
Lonely Woman.
Lonely Woman, 1953 (Rossellini)
Lonely Wife.
Lonely Village.
Lonely Range, 1911 (Dwan)
Lonely Passion of Judith Hearne, 1988 (Clayton)
Lonely Night, 1951 (Leacock)
Lonely Hearts, Happiness. See Kofuku, 1982
Lonely Hoodlum. See Sabishiki ranbomono, 1927
Lonely Night, 1951 (Leacock)
Lonely Passion of Judith Hearne, 1988 (Clayton)
Lonely Range, 1911 (Dwan)
Lonely Villa, 1909 (Griffith; Sennett)
Lonely Village. See Sabishiki mura, 1924
Lonely Wife. See Charulata, 1964
Lonely Woman, 1953 (Rossellini)
Lonely Woman. See A Woman Alone, 1982
Lonesome, 1928 (Fejös)
Lonesome Cowboys, 1968 (Morrissey; Warhol)
Long Absence. See Aussi longue absence, 1961
Long Blue Road. See Grande strada azzurra, 1957
Long Day’s Journey into Night, 1962 (Lumet)
Long Goodbye, 1973 (Altman; Rudolph)
Long Gray Line, 1955 (Ford)
Long Hot Summer, 1957 (Ritt; Welles)
Long Live the Bride and Groom. See Vivan los novios, 1969
Long Live the Deceased. See Af žije nebožtik, 1935
Long Live the King, 1926 (Mackaye)
Long Live the Lady!. See Lunga Vita alla Signora, 1987
Long Live the Republic. See At žije republika, 1965
Long, Long Trailer, 1954 (Minnelli)
Long Lost Father, 1934 (Schoedsack)
Long Pants, 1927 (Capra)
Long Ride Home. See A Time for Killing, 1967
Long Riders, 1980 (Hill)
Long Road, 1911 (Griffith)
Long Shot, 1978 (Frears)
Long Shot. See Target of an Assassin, 1976
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>FILM TITLE INDEXDIRECTORS, 4th EDITION</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Long Silence. See Lungo silenzio, 1993</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Long Voyage Home, 1940 (Ford)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Long Way Home, 1989 (Apted)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Long Weekend (o’ Despair), 1989 (Araki)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Longest Yard, 1974 (Aldrich)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Longshot, 1986 (Bartel)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Longue Marche, 1966 (Astruc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Look at Life, 1965-67 (Lucas)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Look at Liv, 1977 (Bergman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Look at the 6th FESPACO. See Regard sur le VIème FESPACO, 1979</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Look Back in Anger, 1959 (Richardson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Look Back. See Blick zurück, 1944</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Look Who’s Laughing, 1941 (Dwan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Look Who’s Talking, Too!, 1991 (Brooks)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lookin’ to Get Out, 1982 (Ashby)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Looking for a Flat. See Nevité o byte?, 1947</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Looking for His Murderer. See Mann der seinen Mörder sucht, 1931</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Looking for Nothing, 1988 (Egoyan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Looking for Richard, 1996 (Branagh)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Looking for Sally, 1925 (Mccarey)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Looking for Trouble, 1934 (Wellman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lookout. See Another Stakeout, 1993</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Looks and Smiles, 1981 (Loach)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Loop, 1986 (Brakhage)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Loot, 1971 (Attenborough)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lorca, la Muerte de un Poeta, 1987 (Bardem)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lord Arthur Saville’s Crime. See Lidércnyomás, 1920</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lord Babs, 1932 (Lauder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lord Camber’s Ladies, 1932 (Hitchcock)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lord Feathertop, 1908 (Porter)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lord for a Night. See Aru yo no tonosama, 1946</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lord Jim, 1925 (Fleming)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lord Jim, 1952 (Itami)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lord of the Rings: The Fellowship of the Ring, 2001 (Jackson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King, 2003 (Jackson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lord of the Rings: The Two Towers, 2002 (Jackson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lord Richard in the Pantry, 1930 (Lauder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lord’s Lantern in Budapest. See Pesten Nikem lámpást adott kezembe az Úr, 1999</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lords of Little Egypt, 1961 (Zetterling)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lorenzo’s Oil, 1992 (Miller)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lorgno accusateur, 1905 (Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lorna, 1964 (Meyer)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lorna Doone, 1922 (Tourneur)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lost a Cook, 1917 (Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lost and Found on a South Sea Island, 1923 (Walsh)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lost and Won, 1917 (de Mille)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lost Art of Minding One’s Business, 1913 (Griffith)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lost Bag. See Naar Fruen gaar paa Eventyr, 1913</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lost Boys, 1987 (Schumacher)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lost Highway, 1997 (Lynch)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lost Honor of Katharina Blum. See Verlorene Ehre der Katharina Blum, 1975</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lost Horizon, 1937 (Capra)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lost Illusions, 1911 (Porter)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lost in America, 1985 (Brooks)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lost in Prague. See Návrat domu, 1948</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lost in the Alps, 1907 (Porter)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lost in the Deep Cloud. See Yun shen Pu Chih Ch’u, 1974</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lost in Youkers, 1993 (Coolidge)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lost Lost Lost, 1975 (Bogdanovich; Mekas)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lost Luck. See Ashi ni sawatta koun, 1930</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lost Patrol, 1934 (Ford)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lost People, 1949 (Attenborough; Zetterling)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lost Squadron, 1932 (von Stroheim)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lost Track. See Ztracená stopa, 1956</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lost Weekend, 1945 (Wilder)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lost World: Jurassic Park, 1997 (Attenborough; Landis; Spielberg)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lost Youth. See Giovventù perduta, 1947</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lothringen!. 1994 (Straub, Jean-Marie, And Danièle Huillet)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lotna, 1959 (Polanski; Wajda)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lotta dell’uomo per la sua sopravvivenza, 1967 (Rossellini)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lotte in Italia, 1969 (Godard)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lottekens Feldzug, 1915 (Wiene)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lotteriseddel No. 22152, 1915 (Blom)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lottery Lover, 1935 (Wilder)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Loud Visual Noises, 1987 (Brakhage)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Loudest Whisper. See Loudest Whisper, 1943 (L’herbier)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lourdes et ses miracles, 1954 (Demy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love, 1927 (Goulding; Tourneur)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love, 1982 (Zetterling)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love. See Koi, 1924</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love. See Láska, 1972</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love. See Mirsu, 1924</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love &amp; Basketball, 2000 (Lee)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love &amp; Hate, 1995 (Zamussi)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love &amp; Human Remains, 1993 (Arcand)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love à la Carte. See Adua e le compagne, 1960</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love Affair, 1939 (Daves; Dmytryk; Mccarey)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love Affair. See Ljubavni Slučaj, tragedija službenice PTT, 1967</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love after Love. See Après l’amour, 1992</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love Among the Roses, 1910 (Griffith)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love among the Ruins, 1975 (Cukor)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love and a Warrior. See Koi to bushi, 1925</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love and Anger. See Amore e rabbia, 1967</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love and Bullets, 1914 (Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love and Courage, 1913 (Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love and Death, 1975 (Allen)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love and Doughnuts, 1922 (Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love and Dynamite, 1914 (Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love and Gasoline, 1914 (Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love and Happiness, 1995 (Bartel)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love and Hate. See Lyubov’ i nenavist’, 1936</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love and Journalism. See Kärlek och journalistik, 1916</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love and Kisses, 1925 (Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love and Lobsters. See Love &amp; Human Remains, 1993 (Arcand)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love and Lemons, 1912 (Dwan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love and Law. See Amour et la loi, 1920/23</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love and Lemons, 1912 (Dwan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love and Lemons, 1912 (Dwan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love and Law. See Amour et la loi, 1920/23</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love and Lemons, 1912 (Dwan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love and Lemons, 1912 (Dwan)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Love at Large, 1989 (Rudolph)
Love at Twenty. See Amour a vingt ans, 1962
Love between the Raindrops. See Láska mezi kapkami deště, 1979
Love by the Light of the Moon, 1901 (Porter)
Love Cage, 1964 (Clément)
Love Can Build a Bridge. See Naomi & Wynonna: Love Can Build a Bridge, 1995
Love Comet, 1916 (Sennett)
Love Crimes, 1991 (Borden)
Love Film. See Szerelemfilm, 1970
Love Finds a Way, 1908 (Griffith)
Love Flower, 1920 (Griffith)
Love Game. See Jeux de l’amour, 1960
Love Happy, 1948 (Tashlin)
Love Has Tomorrow. See Ai Yu Ming T’ien, 1976
Love, Honor, and Behave, 1920 (Sennett)
Love in a Hammock, 1901 (Porter)
Love in An Apartment Hotel, 1912 (Griffith)
Love in Armor, 1915 (Sennett)
Love in Germany. See Liebe in Deutschland, 1983
Love in Germany, 1989 (Wilder)
Love in the Afternoon, 1957 (Donen)
Love in the City. See Amore in città, 1953
Love in the Hills, 1911 (Porter)
Love in the Tropics. See Tropisk Kaerlighed, 1911
Love in Tokyo. See Koi no Tokyo, 1932
Love Is a Funny Thing. See Homme qui me plait, 1969
Love Is a Racket, 1932 (Wellman)
Love Is Better than Ever, 1952 (Donen)
Love Is Blind, 1909 (Porter)
Love Is Blind, 1913 (Sennett)
Love Is Blind, See Kaerlighed gør blind, 1912
Love Is Blonde, 1928 (Sandrich)
Love Is Colder than Death. See Liebe ist kälter als der Tod, 1969
Love Is My Profession. See En Cas de malheur, 1958
Love Letter, 1999 (Michelangelo Antonioni)
Love Letters, 1999 (Corman)
Love Letters, 1984 (Corman)
Love Letters, 1999 (Donen)
Love Loops the Loop, 1918 (Sennett)
Love Mask, 1916 (de Mille)
Love Letters, 1999 (Greenaway)
Love me, 1923
Love Me and the World Is Mine, 1927 (Dupont)
Love Me and the World Is Mine. See Lieb’ mich und die Welt ist mein, 1923
Love Me Tonight, 1932 (Campion)
Love Nest, 1923 (Keaton)
Love Nest on Wheels, 1937 (Keaton)
Love Never Dies, 1921 (Vidor)
Love of a Clown—Pagliacci. See Pagliacci, 1947
Love of an Angel. See Liebe der Jeanne Ney, 1927
Love of an Angel. See Liebe der Jeanne Ney, 1927
Love of the West, 1911 (Dwan)
Love Old and New. See Shamisen to otobai, 1961
Love on a Pillow. See Repos du guerrier, 1962
Love on a Rain. See Subway Stories: Tales from the Underground, 1997
Love on Credit. See Kaerlighed pa kredit, 1955
Love on Skates, 1916 (Sennett)
Love on Skis. See Amor auf Ski, 1928
Love on the Run, 1936 (Mankiewicz)
Love on the Run. See Amour en fuite, 1979
Love on Toast, 1937 (Dupont)
Love One Another. See Gezeigneten, 1922
Love Parade, 1929 (Lubitsch)
Love Riot, 1916 (Sennett)
Love Root. See Mandragola, 1965
Love Route, 1915 (Dwan)
Love Should Be Guarded. See Asya, 1977
Love Sickness at Sea, 1913 (Sennett)
Love, Speed, and Thrills, 1915 (Sennett)
Love Storm. See Cape Forlorn, 1930
Love Story. See Douce, 1943
Love Streams, 1984 (Cassavetes)
Love Stronger than Hatred. See Kärlek starkare än hat, 1914
Love Sublime, 1917 (Browning)
Love Sundae, 1926 (Sennett)
Love Test, 1935 (Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger)
Love That Lives. See Det Störste i Verden, 1919
Love That Whirls, 1949 (Anger)
Love the Magician. See Amor bruvo, 1985
Love Thief, 1914 (Sennett)
Love Thy Neighbor, 1940 (Sandrich)
Love Trap, 1929 (Wilder)
Love Unconquered: Conversations with Derek Jarman, 1993 (Jarman)
Love Unconquered, 1916 (Sennett)
Love Will Find a Way, 1908 (Porter)
Love with the Proper Stranger, 1963 (Pakula; Mulligan)
Loved By Two. See Akit ketten szeretnek, 1915
Loved One, 1965 (Ashby; Richardson)
Loved, 1983 (Bigelow)
Loved Flute and Drum. See Natsukashiki fue ya taiko, 1967
Lovely to Look At, 1952 (Leroy; Minnelli)
Lovely Flute and Drum. See Gezeichneten, 1922
Lovely Love, 1968 (Greenaway)
Loveless, 1983 (Bigelow)
Lovers. See Amants, 1958
Lovers. See Amants de Paris, 1958
Lovers. See Amants du Pont-Neuf, 1991
Lovers. See Coeurs, 1954
Lovers. See Coeurs, 1954
Lovers. See En Cas de malheur, 1969
Lovers and Lass, 1975 (Hallstrom)
Loverboy, 1990 (Silver)
Lovers?, 1927 (Stahl)
Lovers. See Coeurs, 1954
Lovers. See Amants, 1958
Lovers’ Council. See Liebeskonzil, 1982
Lovers. Happy Lovers, 1954 (Clément)
Lovers’ Lost Control, 1915 (Sennett)
Lovers’ Luck, 1914 (Sennett)
Lovers Must Learn. See Rome Adventure, 1962
Lovers on the Bridge. See Amants du Pont-Neuf, 1991
Lovers’ Post Office, 1914 (Sennett)
Love’s Berry. See Yahidka kokhannya, 1926
Love’s Boomerang. See Perpetua, 1922
Love’s Crucible. See Vem dömer, 1922
Love’s Debris. See Poussières d’amour, 1996
Love’s Devotee. See Elskovsleg, 1913
Love’s False Faces, 1919 (Sennett)
Love’s False Faces, 1919 (Sennett)
Love’s Last Laugh, 1929 (Keaton)
Love’s Last Laugh, 1929 (Keaton)
Love’s Lost, 1920 (Branagh)
Love’s Languid Lure, 1927 (Sennett)
Love’s Last Laugh, 1926 (Sennett)
Loves of a Blonde. See Lásky jedné plavovlásky, 1965
Loves of Carmen, 1927 (Walsh)
Loves of Isadora. See Isadora, 1968
Loves of Ondine, 1967 (Morrisset; Warhol)
Loves of Zora, 1927 (Florey)
Lovesick, 1983 (Huston)
Loven’ Molly, 1974 (Lumet)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Directors/Year</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Loving, 1957 (Brakhage)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Loving Couples. See Alskande par, 1964</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lower Depths. See Bas-Fonds, 1936</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lower Depths. See Donzoko, 1957</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lowland. See Tieland, 1944</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Loyal 47 Ronin. See Chushingura, 1932</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Loyal Soldier of Pancho Villa. See Dorado de Pancho Villa, 1967</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lu, a kokott, 1918 (Curtiz)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Luanda ya no es de San Pablo, 1976 (Alvarez)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lucette, 1924 (Feuillade)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Luch smerti, 1925 (Kuleshov; Pudovkin)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Luci del varietà, 1950 (Fellini; Lattuada)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ludwig, 1968 (Solas)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Luciano Serra, pilota, 1938 (Rossellini)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lucie Aubrac, 1997 (Berri)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lucien Leuwen, 1973 (Autant-Lara)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lucifer Rising, 1974 (Anger)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Luck and Love. See Chance et l'amour, 1964</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Luck o’ the Foolish, 1924 (Capra; Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Luck of the Irish, 1920 (Dwan)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Luck, Trust &amp; Ketchup: Robert Altman in Carver County, 1993 (Altman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lucky Transfer, 1915 (Browning)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lucky Toothache, 1910 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lucky Stars, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lucky Star, 1929 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lucky Jim, 1909 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lucky Jim, 1957 (Boulting)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lucky Lady, 1926 (Waltz)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lucky Lady, 1975 (Donen)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lucky Leap, 1915 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lucky Luciano. See A proposito Lucky Luciano, 1973</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lucky Partners, 1940 (Milestone)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lucky Star, 1929 (Borzage)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lucky Stars, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lucky Toothache, 1910 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lucky Transfer, 1915 (Browning)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lucrèse Borgia, 1935 (Gance)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ludvig, 1973 (Visconti)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ludwig II—Glanz und Elend eines Königs, 1954 (Käuttner; Syberberg)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ludwig’s Cook. See Theodor Hienrei os oder: Wie man ehem. Hofkoch</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ludwig’s Cook. See Theodor Hienrei os oder: Wie man ehem. Hofkoch</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>wirk, 1972</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lugar sin límites, 1977 (Ripstein)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lullaby. See Kolibell ‘naya, 1937</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lullaby of Hamagure. See Hamagure no komoriuta, 1973</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lulu, 1918 (Curtiz)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lulu, 1967 (Leacock)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lulu the Tool. See Classe operaia va in paradiso, 1971</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lumber Yard Gang, 1916 (Ford)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lumière d’été, 1943 (Grémillon)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lumière et compagnie, 1995 (Angelopoulos; Boorman; Chahine; Costa-</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gavras; Greenaway; Ivory; Kaboré; Kiarostami; Leconte; Lynch;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Miller; Ouedraogo; Penn; Sanders-Brahms; van Dormael; Zhang Yimou</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lumiére et l’invention du cinématographe, 1953 (Gance)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Luna, 1979 (Bertolucci)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Luna de miel, 1956 (Powell, Michael, and Emerick Pressburger)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Luna sleva, 1928 (Heifitz)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lunatics: A Love Story, 1991 (Raimi)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lunch, 1899/1900 (Guy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lune des Lapins, 1927 (Anquer)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lung Men Fêng Yun, 1976 (King)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lung Men K’o Chan, 1967 (King)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lung sëng jing yuet, 1997 (Zhang Yimou)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lungo il fiume, 1992 (Olmi)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lungo silenzio, 1993 (Von Trotta)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lunikhead, 1929 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lupa, 1953 (Lattuada)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lupe, 1965 (Warhol)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lure, 1914 (Guy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lure of the Gown, 1909 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lure of the Jungle. See Paw, 1959</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lured, 1947 (Sirk)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lust for Evil, 1959 (Clément)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lust for Life, 1956 (Minnelli)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lust in the Dust, 1985 (Bartel)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lust of the Vatican. See I Vampiri, 1956</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lust Seekers. See Good Morning . . . and Goodbye!, 1967</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lustgården, 1961 (Bergman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lustige Ehemann, 1919 (Lubitsch)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lustigen Vagabunden, 1928 (Forst)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lustig Weiber von Wien, 1930 (Forst)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lucky Men, 1952 (Ray)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Luttes en Italie. See Lotte in Italia, 1969</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Luu tetur atomarikina, 1904 (Guy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lygten, 1917 (Lang)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lyon, le regard intérieur, 1988 (Tavernier)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lyon, le regard intérieur, 1988 (Tavernier)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lydia, 1918 (Dreyer; Holger-Madsen)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lydia, 1941 (Duvivier)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lydia Gilmore, 1916 (Porter)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lying Lips, 1939 (Micheaux)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lykken, 1916 (Holger-Madsen)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lynet, 1934 (Holger-Madsen)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lyon de la Vie, 1920 (Clair)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lyset i natten, 1953 (Roos)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lysten styret. See Et Huskors, 1914</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lymph cheloveka, 1972 (Gerasimov)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lyubbó’ i nevajist’, 1936 (Barnet)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lyulya Bek, 1914 (Bauer)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>M, 1951 (Aldrich; Losey)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>M, Butterfly, 1992-93 (Cronenberg)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>M Is for Man, Music, Mozart, 1991 (Greenaway)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>M, Mörder unter Uns, 1931 (Lang)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>M and Pa, 1922 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ma Cousine de Varsovie, 1931 (Clouzot)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ma es holnap, 1912 (Curtiz)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ma femme’s appelle reviens, 1982 (Leconte)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ma no ike, 1923 (Kinugasa)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ma non è una cosa seria!, 1936 (de Sica)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ma Nuit chez Maud, 1969 (Rohmer)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ma Olsen, 1977 (Ward)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ma saison préférée, 1993 (Téchiné)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maatterprinsessen, 1916 (Holger-Madsen)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maangamizi: The Ancient One, 2000 (Demme)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mabel and Fatty’s Simple Life, 1915 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mabel at the Wheel, 1914 (Griffith; Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mabel and Fatty’s Wash Day, 1915 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mabel’s Adventures, 1912 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mabel’s Awful Mistake, 1913 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mabel’s Bare Escape, 1914 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mabel’s Blunder, 1914 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mabel’s Busy Day, 1914 (Chaplin; Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mabel’s Dramatic Career, 1913 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mabel’s Flirtation. See Her Friend the Bandit, 1914</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Film Title</td>
<td>Director(s)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>------------------------------------------------</td>
<td>--------------------------------------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mabel’s Heroes, 1913</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mabel’s Latest Prank, 1914</td>
<td>Chaplin; Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mabel’s Lovers, 1912</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mabel’s Married Life, 1914</td>
<td>Chaplin; Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mabel’s Nerve, 1914</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mabel’s New Hero, 1913</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mabel’s New Job, 1914</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mabel’s Stormy Love Affair, 1914</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mabel’s Strange Predicament, 1914 (Chaplin; Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Magic Waltz. See Varázskeringö, 1918</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Magic World. See Mundo mágico, 1966</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Magical Death, 1974</td>
<td>Asch</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Macaroni. See Maccheroni, 1985</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>MacArthur’s Children. See Setouchi shonen yaku yu dan, 1985</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Macbeth, 1916</td>
<td>Fleming; von Stroheim</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Macbeth, 1948</td>
<td>Welles</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Macbeth, 1971</td>
<td>Schroeter</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Macbeth, 1972</td>
<td>Polanski</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Macbeth. See Makbet, 1969</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maccheroni, 1985 (Scola)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Macchina a mmazzacattivii, 1947 (Rossellini)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Machi no hitobito, 1926</td>
<td>Gosho</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Machi to gesui, 1953</td>
<td>Hani</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Machiboke no onna, 1946</td>
<td>Shindo</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Machine, 1973 (Sanders-Brahms)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Machine, 1994 (Berri)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Machine à refaire la vie, 1924 (Duvivier)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Machine Age. See Kalyug, 1981</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Machine Gun Kelly, 1958</td>
<td>Corman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Machine Gun McCain, See Intocchabili, 1968</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Machine of Eden, 1970</td>
<td>Brakhage</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Machorka-Muff, 1963</td>
<td>Straub, Jean-Marie, And Danièle Huillet</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Macht der Bilder: Leni Riefenstahl, 1993 (Riefenstahl)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Macht der Finsternis, 1923</td>
<td>Wiene</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Macht der Gefühle, 1983</td>
<td>Kluge</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maciste alpino, 1916</td>
<td>Pastrone</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maciste, 1915 (Pastrone)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mack at It Again, 1914</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mackintosh Man, 1973</td>
<td>Hill; Huston</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maclovia, 1948 (Fernández)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Macomber Affair, 1947</td>
<td>Korda</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Macon County Jail, 1997</td>
<td>Corman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maçons, 1905 (Guy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mad about the Opera. See Follie per l’opera, 1948</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mad Cap. See Premi Pagal, 1933</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mad City, 1997 (Costa-Gavras; Landis)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mad Dog and Glory, 1990</td>
<td>Scorsese</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mad Dog Time, 1996 (Reiner)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mad Genius, 1931 (Curtiz)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mad Little Island. See Rockets Galore, 1958</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mad Man of Martinique, 1979</td>
<td>Corman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mad Wednesday, 1947 (Sturges)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mad Max, 1979 (Miller)</td>
<td>Miller</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mad Max II, 1981 (Miller)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mad Max III: Beyond Thunderdome, 1985</td>
<td>Miller</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madadayo, 1993 (Kurosawa)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madam Water. See Madame L’eau, 1993</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madame Bovary, 1934</td>
<td>Becker; Renour</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madame Bovary, 1949</td>
<td>Minnelli</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madame Bovary, 1991 (Chabrol)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madame Curie, 1943</td>
<td>Franklin; Leroy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madame de . . . , 1953 (de Sica; Ophüls)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madame de Thèbes, 1915</td>
<td>Stiller</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madame L’eau, 1993 (Rouch)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madame Pompadour, 1927 (Dupont)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madame Q, 1929 (McCary)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madame Rex, 1911 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madame Rosa. See Vie devant soi, 1977</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madame Sans Gène, 1909</td>
<td>Blom</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madame Satan, 1930 (de Mille)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madame Sousatzka, 1988 (Schlesinger)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madame Wang’s, 1981 (Morrissey)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madame wünscht keine Kinder, 1926 (Korda)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madame wünscht keine Kinder, 1933 (Wilder)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madamu to nyobo, 1931</td>
<td>Gouya</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Machen vom Moorhof, 1935</td>
<td>Sirk</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maddalena, 1970 (Kawalerowicz)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maddelena zero in condotta, 1941 (de Sica)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Made for Each Other, 1939</td>
<td>Cromwell</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Made in Bangkok, 1991</td>
<td>Joffé</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Made in Heaven, 1987 (Rudolph)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Made in Italy, 1965 (Scola)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Made in the Kitchen, 1921 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Made in U.S.A., 1966 (Godard)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Made Manifest, 1980 (Brakhage)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mädel vom Ballett, 1918 (Lubitsch)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madeleine, 1950 (Lean)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madeleine und der Legionär, 1958 (Staudte)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madeleine, 1972 (Richardson)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madeleine 100 millions, 1913 (Tournier)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madeleine Docteur, 1937 (Pabst; von Stroheim)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madeleine II, 1944 (Wise)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madeleine die Präsidentessa, 1952</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madigan, 1968 (Polansky; Siegel)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madman, See Fou, 1970</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madman in the Dark. See Krok do tmy, 1938</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mado, 1976 (Sautet)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madame des sleepings, 1955 (von Stroheim)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madonna di Avennum A, 1929 (Curtiz)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madame et le dragon, 1990 (Fuller)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madriguera, 1969 (Saura)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mae Day: The Crumbling of a Documentary, 1992 (Smith)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Madelela la Breche, 1980 (van Dormael)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maestro di Vigevano, 1963 (Petri)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mafija, 1972 (Torre Nilsson)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maria. See In nome della legge, 1949</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mafioso, 1962 (Lattuada)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Magasiskola, 1970 (Gaál)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Magdalene, 1908 (Holger-Madsen)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maggie, 1954 (Mackendrick)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maggie’s First False Step, 1917 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mágia, 1917 (Korda)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Magic, 1978 (Attenborough)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Magic. See Mágia, 1917</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Magic Box, 1951 (Attenborough; Boultng)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Magic Christian, 1968 (Attenborough; Polanski)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Magic Fire, 1956 (Dupont)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Magic Flame, 1926 (Florey)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Magic Flute. See Trollflöjten, 1975</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Magic of the Diamond. See Magie du diamant, 1958</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Magic Prague of Rudolph II. See Kouzelna Praha Rudolfa II, 1982</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Magic Town, 1947 (Wellman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Magic Voice. See Forget Me Not, 1936</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Magic Voyage of Sinbad, 1962 (Coppola; Corman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Magic Waltz. See Varázskeringö, 1918</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Magic World. See Mundo mágico, 1966</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Magical Death, 1974 (Asch)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Magical World of Chuck Jones, 1992 (Dante; Howard)
Magician, 1926 (Ingram)
Magician. See Ansiket, 1958
Magician. See Tarot, 1972
Magicians of the Silver Screen. See Bajecni muži s klikou, 1979
Magiciens, 1975 (Chabrol)
Magiciens de Wanzerbé, 1948 (Rouch)
Magie du diamant, 1958 (Roos)
Magiciens, 1975 (Boetticher)
Magnificent Ambersons, 1942 (Welles; Wise)
Magnificent Cuckold. See Magnifico cornuto, 1964
Magnificent Doll, 1946 (Borzage)
Magnificent Fraud, 1939 (Florey)
Magnificent Matador, 1955 (Stahl)
Magnificent Obsession, 1935 (Stahl)
Magnificent Obsession, 1954 (Sirk)
Magnifico cornuto, 1964 (Scola)
Magie noire, 1904 (Guy)
Magie du diamant, 1958 (Roos)
Magiciens de Wanzerbé, 1948 (Rouch)
Magiciens, 1975 (Boetticher)
Magnificent Obsession, 1935 (Stahl)
Magnifique, 1973 (de Broca)
Makbet, 1969 (Wajda)
Mal du siècle, 1953 (Lelouch)
Main du diable, 1942 (Tourneur)
Main Attraction, 1962 (Zetterling)
Mainland.
Main Nashe Me Hoon, 1959 (Kapoor)
Main du professeur Hamilton ou Le Roi des dollars, 1903 (Guy)
Maine du diable, 1942 (Tourneur)
Main Attraction, 1962 (Zetterling)
Maine du diable, 1942 (Tourneur)
Main du diable, 1942 (Tourneur)
Maine du diable, 1942 (Tourneur)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Man and the Woman, 1917</td>
<td>Gay</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man behind the Mask, 1936</td>
<td>Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Between, 1953</td>
<td>Reed</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Called Back, 1932</td>
<td>Florey</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Called “Bee”, 1975</td>
<td>Asch</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Called John, See e venne un uomo, 1965</td>
<td>Mann</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man-Eating Sharks, 1932</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man for All Seasons, 1966</td>
<td>Welles; Zinnemann</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man for All That, 1915</td>
<td>Walsh</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man for Burning. See Uomo da bruciare, 1962</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Forgets Love. See Mann vergisst die Liebe, 1955</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man from Frisco, 1943</td>
<td>Florey</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man from Home, 1914</td>
<td>de Mille</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man from Home, 1922</td>
<td>Hitchcock</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man from Laramie, 1955</td>
<td>Mann</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man from Naples. See Mann aus Neapel, 1922</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man from Painted Post, 1917</td>
<td>Fleming</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man from the East, 1912</td>
<td>Dwan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man from the Meteor, 1954</td>
<td>Romero</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man from the Restaurant, 1929</td>
<td>Protazanov</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man from Yesterday, 1932</td>
<td>Zinnemann</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man ham Mitoumam, 1975</td>
<td>Kiarostami</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Hunt, 1911</td>
<td>Dwan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Hunt, 1941</td>
<td>Lang</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man I Killed, 1932</td>
<td>Lubitsch</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man I Love, 1929</td>
<td>Wellman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man I Love, 1946</td>
<td>Walsh</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man in a Cocked Hat. See Carlton-Browne of the F.O., 1959</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man in Love, 1987</td>
<td>Kurys</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man in Milan, 1990</td>
<td>Scorsese</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man in My Life. See Rajol ã Hayati, 1961</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man in Polar Regions, 1967</td>
<td>Clarke</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man in the Couch, 1914</td>
<td>Browning</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man in the Iron Mask, 1939</td>
<td>Whale</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man in the Moon, 1960</td>
<td>Dearden</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man in the Moon, 1991</td>
<td>Mulligan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man in the Moonlight, 1919</td>
<td>Franklin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man in the Net, 1959</td>
<td>Curtiz</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man in the Sky, 1956</td>
<td>Crichton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man in the White Suit, 1951</td>
<td>Mackendrick</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man in the Wilderness, 1971</td>
<td>Huston</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Inside, 1958</td>
<td>Roeg</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Is Not a Bird. See Covek nije tica, 1966</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Is Ten Feet Tall. See Edge of the City, 1957</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Next Door, 1913</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man och Kvinn, 1938</td>
<td>Fejös</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man of Africa, 1953</td>
<td>Grierson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man of Aran, 1934</td>
<td>Flaherty</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man of Bronze. See Jim Thorpe—All American, 1951</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man of Iron. See Człowiek z żelaza, 1981</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man of Iron. See Ferroviere, 1956</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man of Marble. See Człowiek z marmuru, 1977</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man of Stone, 1921</td>
<td>Goulding</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man of the Hour, 1914</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man of the Moment. See Toki no uijgami, 1932</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man of the Soil. See A költeménye, 1917</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man of the West, 1958</td>
<td>Mann</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man on a Tightrope, 1952</td>
<td>Kazan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man on the Beach, 1955</td>
<td>Losey</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man on the Box, 1914</td>
<td>de Mille</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man on the Case, 1914</td>
<td>Dwan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man on the Moon, 1999</td>
<td>Forman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Sa Yay, 1980</td>
<td>Faye</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man spielt nicht mit der Liebe, 1926</td>
<td>Pabst</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man There Was. See Terje Vigen, 1917</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man to Man, 1930</td>
<td>Dwan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Trouble, 1930</td>
<td>Zinnemann</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Trouble, 1992</td>
<td>Rafelson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man under Cover, 1922</td>
<td>Browning</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Upstairs, 1958</td>
<td>Attenborough</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Vanishes. See Ningen johatsu, 1967</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Who Came Back, 1924</td>
<td>Goulding</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Who Came Back, 1931</td>
<td>Walsh</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Who Changed His Mind, 1936</td>
<td>Lauder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Who Dared God, 1917</td>
<td>Weber</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Who Envied Women, 1985</td>
<td>Rainer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Who Fell to Earth, 1976</td>
<td>Roeg</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Who Finally Died, 1962</td>
<td>Zetterling</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Who Haunted Himself, 1970</td>
<td>Dearden</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Who Killed Don Quixote, 2001</td>
<td>Gilliam</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Who Knew Too Much, 1934</td>
<td>Hitchcock</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Who Knew Too Much, 1955</td>
<td>Hitchcock</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Who Laughs, 1928</td>
<td>Leni</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Who Left His Will on Film. See Tokyo senso sengo hiwa, 1970</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Who Lived Again. See Man Who Changed His Mind, 1936</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Who Loved Women. See Homme qui aimait les femmes, 1977</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Who Saw Tomorrow, 1981</td>
<td>Welles</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Who Shot Liberty Valance, 1962</td>
<td>Ford</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Who Stayed at Home, 1915</td>
<td>Hepworth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Who Tamed the Victors. See Manden, der sejrede, 1918</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Who Won, 1923</td>
<td>Wellman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Who Would Be King, 1975</td>
<td>Huston</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man with a Movie Camera. See Chelovek s kinoapparatom, 1929</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man with an Umbrella. See Det regnar på vår kärlek, 1946</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man with Connections. See Pistonne, 1970</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man with the Axe. See Parashuram, 1978</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man with the Golden Arm, 1955</td>
<td>Preminger</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man with the Golden Touch. See Az aranyember, 1918</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man with the X-Ray Eyes. See X, 1963</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man with Two Hearts. See A kétszívü férfi, 1916</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man Within, 1947</td>
<td>Attenborough</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man without a Future. See Manden uden Fremtid, 1915</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man without a Nationality. See Mukokuseki-sha, 1951</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man without a Star, 1955</td>
<td>Vidor</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manchurian Candidate, 1962</td>
<td>Frankenheimer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mandabi, 1968</td>
<td>Sembene</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mandacaru vermelho, 1961</td>
<td>Pereira Dos Santos</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mandalay, 1934</td>
<td>Curtiz</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mandela, 1996</td>
<td>Demme</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manden, der sejrede, 1918</td>
<td>Holger-Madsen</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manden uden Fremtid, 1915</td>
<td>Holger-Madsen</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manden uden Smil, 1916</td>
<td>Holger-Madsen</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mandi, 1983</td>
<td>Benegal</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mandragola, 1965</td>
<td>Lattuada</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mandragore. See Alraune, 1952</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mandy, 1952</td>
<td>Mackendrick</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mangler, 1995</td>
<td>Hooper</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manhandled, 1924</td>
<td>Dwan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manhattan, 1979</td>
<td>Allen</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manhattan Cocktail, 1928</td>
<td>Arzner</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manhattan Madness, 1916</td>
<td>Dwan; Fleming</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manhattan Melodram, 1934</td>
<td>Mankiewicz</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manhattan Murder Mystery, 1993</td>
<td>Allen</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manhattan Parade, 1932</td>
<td>Bacon</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manhunter, 1986</td>
<td>Mann</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mani sporche, 1978</td>
<td>Petri</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mani sulla città, 1963</td>
<td>Rosi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maniac, 1977</td>
<td>Corman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maniac Cook, 1908</td>
<td>Griffith</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Film Title</td>
<td>Year</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-----------------------------------------</td>
<td>----------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maniac Cop, 1988</td>
<td>Raimi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maniac Cop 2, 1990</td>
<td>Raimi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manicure Lady, 1911</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manicurist, 1916</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manifesto, 1989</td>
<td>Makavejev</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manifold Controversy, 1973</td>
<td>Marshall</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manin densha, 1957</td>
<td>Ichikawa</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mankillers. See Faster Pussycat! Kill!</td>
<td>Raimi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man's Caller, 1912</td>
<td>Dwan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man's Castle, 1933</td>
<td>Borzage</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man's Calling, 1912</td>
<td>Dwan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manpower, 1941</td>
<td>Walsh</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manon Lescaut, 1940</td>
<td>de Sica</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manon Lescaut, 1926</td>
<td>Leni</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manon des sources, 1986</td>
<td>Clouzot</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manon des sources, 1952</td>
<td>Pagnol</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manon de Montmartre, 1914</td>
<td>Feuillade</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man's Duty, 1913</td>
<td>Dwan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man's Face Is His History. See Otoko no kao wa rirekisho, 1966</td>
<td>Dwan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man's Favorite Sport, 1963</td>
<td>Hawks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man's Great Adversary, See Elskovs Magt, 1912</td>
<td>Dwan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man's Heart. See Otokogokoro, 1925</td>
<td>Griffith</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man's Life. See Hito no issho, 1928</td>
<td>Leni</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man's Lust for Gold, 1912</td>
<td>Griffith</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man's Man, 1929</td>
<td>Daves</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man's Value. See Tsena cheloveka, 1928</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Man's Worldly Appearance. See Hito no yo no sugata, 1928</td>
<td>Dwan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manslaughter, 1922</td>
<td>Mankind</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manthan, 1976</td>
<td>Benegal</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mantrap, 1926</td>
<td>Fleming</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manuel Rodriguez, 1972</td>
<td>Guzmán</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manuel, 1965</td>
<td>Solas</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manuel’s Destinies. See Destins de Manoel, 1985</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manufacture of Musical Instruments. See Proizvodstvo muzykal’nykh instrumentov, 1930</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manxman, 1928</td>
<td>Hitchcock, Launder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Many a Pickle, 1938</td>
<td>Cavalcanti</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Many a Sip, 1931</td>
<td>Sandrich</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Map of the Human Heart, 1992</td>
<td>Ward</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mapuches, 1971</td>
<td>Ruiz</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maputo, 1976</td>
<td>Alvarez</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mar, 1974</td>
<td>Leduc</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mar y tú, 1951</td>
<td>Fernández</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maranhão 66, 1965</td>
<td>Rocha</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marathon, 1992</td>
<td>Saura</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marathon Man, 1976</td>
<td>Schlesinger</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marathon Runner. See Läufer von Marathon, 1933</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marâtre, 1906</td>
<td>Guy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marauders, 1912</td>
<td>Dwan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>March of Time, 1940</td>
<td>Buñuel</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>March to Aldermaston, 1958</td>
<td>Anderson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marcha del pueblo combatiente, 1980</td>
<td>Alvarez</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marchand de ballons, 1902</td>
<td>Guy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marchand de coco, 1899/1900</td>
<td>Guy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marchand de plaisir, 1923</td>
<td>Autant-Lara</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marché, 1896-97</td>
<td>Lumière</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marché à la volaille, 1899/1900</td>
<td>Guy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marche des machines, 1927</td>
<td>Zinnemann</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marche des rois, 1913</td>
<td>Feuillade</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marcheurs de Sainte Rolande, 1974-75</td>
<td>Storck</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marcia trionfale, 1976</td>
<td>Bellochio</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mardi Gras, 1958</td>
<td>Goulding</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mare Matto, 1962</td>
<td>Castellani</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mare Nostrum, 1925</td>
<td>Ingram</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maréchal Ferrant, 1895</td>
<td>Lumière</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marg Deegari, 1982</td>
<td>Makhmalbaf</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Margaret Head: Portrait of a Friend. See Ciné-Portrait de Margaret Head, 1977</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Margin for Error, 1943</td>
<td>Preminger</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marguerite: 3—Eine Frau für Drei, 1939</td>
<td>Käutner</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marguerite de la nuit, 1956</td>
<td>Autant-Lara</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mari de la coiffeuse, 1990</td>
<td>Leconte</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mari garçon, 1932</td>
<td>Cavalcanti</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maria Callas porträt, 1968</td>
<td>Schroeter</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maria Callas singt 1957 Rezitativ und Arie der Elvira aus Ernani 1844 von Giuseppe Verdi, 1968</td>
<td>Schroeter</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maria Candelaria, 1943</td>
<td>Fernández</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maria Chapelaine, 1934</td>
<td>Duvivier</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maria Dabrowska, 1966</td>
<td>Fernández</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maria Chapdelaine, 1934</td>
<td>Duvivier</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maria Elena, 1935</td>
<td>Fernández</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maria no Osuki, 1935</td>
<td>Mizoguchi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maria of the Street of Ants. See Ari no Machi no Maria, 1958</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maria Rosa, 1916</td>
<td>de Mille</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mariage, 1974</td>
<td>Lelouch</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mariage de Chiffon, 1942</td>
<td>Autant-Lara</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mariage de l’aînée, 1911/13</td>
<td>Feuillade</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mariage de Mademoiselle Beulemans, 1927</td>
<td>Duvivier</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mariage de Miss Nelly, 1913</td>
<td>Feuillade</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mariage de raison, 1916</td>
<td>Feuillade</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marianne and Julienne. See Bleierne Zeit, 1981</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marianne de ma jeunesse, 1955</td>
<td>Duvivier</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marie-Antoinette, 1955</td>
<td>Delannoy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marie-Chantal contre le Docteur Kha, 1965</td>
<td>Chabrol</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marie de Nazareth, 1995</td>
<td>Delannoy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marie du port, 1949</td>
<td>Carné</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marie, légende hongroise. See Tavaszi zápor, 1932</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marie-Octobre, 1959</td>
<td>Duivier</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mariée était en noir, 1967</td>
<td>Truffaut</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mariés d’un jour, 1916</td>
<td>Feuillade</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marie’s Millions. See Tellie’s Punctured Romance, 1914</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marijuana, 1936</td>
<td>Fernández</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marilyn’s Window, 1988</td>
<td>Brakhage</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marine Law, 1913</td>
<td>Dwan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marines et Cristeaux, 1928</td>
<td>Gance</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marines, Let’s Go, 1961</td>
<td>Walsh</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mario Banana, 1964</td>
<td>Warhol</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mario, Maria e Mario, 1993</td>
<td>Scota</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marionetki, 1934</td>
<td>Prozatanov</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marionetten der Leidenschaft, 1919</td>
<td>Pick</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marionettes. See Marionetki, 1934</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marisa la civetta, 1957</td>
<td>Pasolini</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marito per Anna Zaccheo, 1953</td>
<td>Petri</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marito povero, 1946</td>
<td>Sica</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marius, 1931</td>
<td>Korda; Pagnol</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Marius; Zum Goldenen Anker, 1931 (Korda)
Marizza, genannt die Schmuggler-Madonna, 1922 (Murnau)
Marjolin ou la fille manquée, 1921/22 (Feuillade)
Mark of the Vampire, 1935 (Browning)
Mark of Zorro, 1920 (Niblo)
Mark of Zorro, 1940 (Mamoulian)
Marked Man, 1917 (Ford)
Marked Men, 1919 (Ford)
Marked Time-Table, 1910 (Griffith)
Marked Woman, 1937 (Bacon; Rossen)
Mark Time-Table, 1910 (Griffith)
Marked Men, 1919 (Ford)
Mark of the Vampire, 1935 (Browning)
Mary of the Movies, 1923 (Ingram)
Mary Reegan, 1919 (Weber)
Mary Reilly, 1996 (Fears)
Mary Shelley’s Frankenstein, 1994 (Branagh; Coppola)
Mary, Sir John greift ein!, 1930
Mary Stevens M.D., 1933 (Bacon)
Mary Stevens M.D., 1933 (Bacon)
Marilyn Sklodowska-Curie. Ein Mädchen, das die Welt verändert, 1972
(Maudite)
Maschera del demonio, 1960 (Bava)
Mascot, 1914 (Browning)
Mascot of Troop “C”, 1911 (Guy)
Masculin-féminin, 1966 (Godard)
M* A*S* H, 1970 (Altman)
Masquerade, 1964 (Dearden)
Masquerade in Vienna. See Masquerade, 1964
Masquerade, 1934 (Forst)
Mass Production of Eggs.
Mass Is Ended.
Mass for the Dakota Sioux, 1964 (Baillie)
Mass Production of Eggs. See Nagyüzemi tojástermelés, 1962
Massa e finita, 1985
Mastery of the Sea.
Master Ideál.
Master of the Vineyard, 1911 (Dwan)
Master Samuel. See Mästerman, 1920
Master Zoard. See Zoárd Mester, 1917
Mästerman, 1920 (Sjöström)
Masters of the Sea. See Heeren der Meere, 1922
Masters of Ukrainian Art in Concert. See Kontsert masterov ukraïnskogo iskusstva, 1952
Mästertjuven, 1915 (Stiller)
Mastery of the Sea, 1941 (Cavalcanti)
Mat, 1926 (Pudovkin)
Mat, 1956 (Donskoi)
Mata au hi made, 1932 (Ozu)
Mata au hi made, 1950 (Imai)
Matador, 1986 (Almodóvar)
Matatabi, 1973 (Ichikawa)
Match Factory Girl.
Matchmaker. See Yeuh Hsia Lao Jen, 1964
Matchmaking Mamas, 1929 (Sennett)
Matelas alcoolique, 1906 (Guy)
Mater dolorosa, 1910 (Feuillade)
Mater Dolorosa, 1917 (Gance)
DIRECTORS, 4th EDITION

Materi i docheri, 1974 (Gerasimov)
Matewan, 1987 (Sayles)
Matières nouvelles, 1964 (Storck)
Matinee, 1992 (Dante; Sayles)
Matinee Idol, 1928 (Capra)
Matins, 1988 (Brakhage)
Matiouette, 1983 (Téchiné)
Matira Manisha, 1967 (Sen)
Matka Joanna od Aniolów, 1961 (Kawalerowicz)
Matrimaniac, 1916 (Fleming)
Matrimonial Bed, 1930 (Curtiz)
Matrimonial Problem. See Matrimonial Bed, 1930
Matrimonio, 1953 (de Sica)
Matrimonio all’italiana, 1964 (Castellani; de Sica)
Mattatore, 1960 (Scola)
Mattei Affair. See Caso Mattei, 1972
Matter of Dignity. See Final Lie, 1958
Matter of Life and Death, 1946 (Attenborough)
Matter of Life and Death, 1946 (Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger)
Matter of Morals. See De Sista Stegen, 1960
Matter of Time, 1976 (Minnelli)
Matthaus-Passion, 1951 (Flaherty)
Matthias Kneissl, 1970 (Fassbinder)
Maturareise, 1943 (Feyder)
Maudite galette, 1972 (Arcand)
Maudite soit la guerre, 1910 (Feuillade)
Maudits, 1947 (Clément)
Maudits sauvages, 1971 (Lefebvre)
Maulkorb, 1958 (Staudte)
Mauprat, 1926 (Buñuel; Epstein)
Maurice, 1987 (Ivory)
Maurya Patan, 1929 (Mehboob Khan)
Mauvais coeur puni, 1904 (Guy)
Mauvais Fils, 1980 (Sautet)
Mauvais Sang, 1986 (Carax)
Mauvaise ﬁlle, 1990 (Téchiné)
Mauvaise graine, 1933 (Wilder)
Mauvaise passe, 1999 (Berri)
Mauvaise Soupe, 1899/1900 (Guy)
Mauvaises fréquentations, 1966 (Eustache)
Mauvaises rencontres, 1955 (Astruc)
Max et les ferrailleurs, 1971 (Sautet)
Max, Mon Amour, 1986 (Oshima)
Maximenko Brigade. See A Maksimenko brigád, 1950
May 1, 1920 in Moscow. See Pervoye maya 1920 v Moskve, 1919
May 1st 1952. See 1952 Május 1, 1952
May Blossom, 1915 (Dwan)
May Fools. See Milou en Mai, 1990
May-Fly. See Maaneprinsessen, 1916
Maybe It’s Love, 1930 (Wellman)
Mayerling to Sarajevo. See De Mayerling à Sarajevo, 1940
Mayo de las tres banderas, 1980 (Alvarez)
Mayol, 1900/07 (Guy)
Mazazo macizo, 1981 (Alvarez)
Mazel Tov ou le mariage, 1969 (Berri)
Mazlíček, 1934 (Frič)
Mazurka di papà, 1938 (de Sica)
Mazurka, 1935 (Forst)
McCabe and Mrs. Miller, 1971 (Altman)
Me & Isaac Newton, 1999 (Apted)
Me alquilo para sonar, 1991 (Guerra)
Me and Him. See Ich und er, 1987
Me and My Gal, 1932 (Walsh)
Me and You. See Mig og dig, 1969
Me Gangster, 1928 (Walsh)

FILM TITLE INDEX

Me! I’m Afraid of Virginia Woolf, 1978 (Frears)
Me, Naked Childhood. See Enfance nue, 1970
Me Want You. See Moi vouloir toi, 1984
Meadow. See Prato, 1979
Mean Machine. See Longest Yard, 1974
Mean Streets, 1973 (Scorsese)
Meantime, 1983 (Leigh)
Meat, 1975 (Wiseman)
Meat Fight, 1974 (Marshall)
Mécaniciens de l’armée de l’air, 1959 (Lelouch)
Mechanical Ballet. See Ballet mécanique, 1924
Mechanics of the Brain. See Mekhanikha golovnovo mozga, 1926
Med livet som insats, 1940 (Sjöberg)
Med tuld Musik, 1933 (Holger-Madsen)
Medals. See Seven Days’ Leave, 1930
Medan staden sover, 1950 (Bergman)
Medbejlerens Haevn, 1910 (Blom)
Meddlers, 1912 (Dwan)
Medea, 1969 (Pasolini)
Medea, 1988 (Von Trier)
Médecines et médecins, 1976 (Rouch)
Medicine Ball Caravan, 1979 (Scorsese)
Medicine Bottle, 1909 (Grifﬁth)
Medico e lo stregone, 1957 (de Sica)
Meditation on Violence, 1948 (Deren)
Medium Is the Masseuse: A Balinese Massage, 1983 (Asch)
Meet Boston Blackie, 1940 (Florey)
Meet John Doe, 1941 (Capra)
Meet Marlon Brando, 1965 (Maysles)
Meet Me at the Fair, 1952 (Sirk)
Meet Me in Moscow. See Ya shagayu po Moskve, 1964
Meet Me in St. Louis, 1944 (Minnelli)
Meet My Girl, 1926 (Sennett)
Meet the Feebles, 1989 (Jackson)
Meet the Pioneers, 1948 (Anderson)
Meeting Hearts. See Hjärtan som mötas, 1914
Meeting in July. See Setkání v červenci, 1977
Meeting on the Atlantic. See Spotkanie na Atlantyku, 1979
Meeting Ships. See Skepp som motas, 1916
Meeting Venus, 1990 (Szabó)
Meeting with Maxim, 1941 (Gerasimov)
Még kér a nép, 1972 (Jancsó)
Mégano, 1955 (Gutiérrez Alea)
Megavixens. See Cherry, Harry, and Raquel!, 1969
Meigatsu somato, 1951 (Kinugasa)
Meiji haruaki, 1968 (Gosho)
Meilleure façon de marcher, 1976 (Miller)
Mein Herz—Niemandem!, 1997 (Sanders-Brahms)
Mein Kind, 1956 (Ivens)
Mein liebster Feind—Klaus Kinski, 1999 (Herzog)
Mein Schulefreund, 1960 (Siodmak)
Mein Vater der Schauspieler, 1956 (Siodmak)
Mein Wille ist Gesetz, 1919 (Pick)
Meine Frau, die Filmschauspielerin; Meyer aus Berlin, 1919 (Lubitsch)
Meito Bijomaru, 1945 (Mizoguchi)
Mekhanikha golovnovo mozga, 1926 (Pudovkin)
Melba, 1953 (Milestone)
Mélo, 1986 (Resnais)
Melodie der Welt, 1929 (Ruttmann)
Melody, 1971 (Parker)
Melody Cruise, 1933 (Sandrich)
Melon-Drama, 1931 (Sandrich)
Melvin and Howard, 1980 (Demme)
Melvin’s Revenge, 1949 (Lewis)
Member of the Government. See Chlen pravitelstva, 1940
Member of the Wedding, 1952 (Kramer; Zinnemann)

1243


Memento Mori, 1989 (Jireš)
Memento Mori, 1992 (Clayton)
Memoire. See Hadota Misreya, 1982
Memoire retrouvée, 1996 (Weir)
Memoire des apparences, 1987 (Ruiz)
Memories of a Criminal. See Apunte sobre Ana, 1971
Memories.
Memórias e confissões, 1982 (Oliveira)
Memorias do carcere, 1984 (Pereira Dos Santos)
Memorias del subdesarrollo, 1968 (Gutiérrez Alea)
Memorias de un reencuentro, 1986 (Alvarez)
Memories of Underdevelopment.
Memories of Young Days.
Men Bathing, 1973 (Marshall)
Men Can’t Be Raped. See Miesta ei voi raiskata, 1977
Men in Black, 1997 (Spielberg)
Men in Danger, 1939 (Cavalcanti)
Men in War, 1957 (Mann)
Men of Novgorod. See Nozgorodtsyi, 1943
Men of the Sea.
Memories of Jail.
Men and Wolves. See Uomini e lupi, 1956
Men Are Such Fools, 1938 (Berkeley)
Men and Beasts, 1962 (Gerasimov)
Men and Beasts, 1985 (Egoyan)
Men, 1950 (Kramer; Zinnemann)
Men of the Sea.
Men of Novgorod.
Men in War, 1994 (Sayles)
Men of Tomorrow, 1932 (Crichton; Korda)
Men of War, 1994 (Sayles)
Men Who Tread on the Tiger’s Tail. See Tora no o o fumu otokotachi, 1945
Men with Guns, 1997 (Sayles)
Men with Wings, 1938 (Wellman)
Men without Women, 1930 (Ford)
Menace, 1913 (Dwan)
Menace to Carlotta, 1914 (Dwan)
Menaces, 1939 (von Stroheim)
Menage. See Tenue de soiree, 1986
Mended Lute, 1909 (Griffith)
Mender of the Nets, 1912 (Griffith)
Ménestrel de la reine Anne, 1913 (Feuillade)
Menino de engenho, 1965 (Rocha)
Mens Pesten raser, 1913 (Holger-Madsen)
Mensch verstreut und Welt verkehrt. See Cuerpo repartido y el mundo al reves, 1975
Menschen am Sonntag, 1929 (Siodmak; Ulmer; Wilder; Zinnemann)
Menschen, die die Staufer-Austellung vorbereiten, 1977 (Kluge)
Menschen hinter Gittern, 1930 (Fejos)
Menschen im Käfig, 1930 (Dupont)
Mental Suicide, 1913 (Dwan)
Menteurs, 1961 (Chabrol)
Mente—la bienheureuse, 1979 (Von Trier)
Mentiras Piadosas, 1989 (Ripstein)
Mento. See Cops, 1998
Menuisiers, 1896-97 (Lumière)
Meoto boshi, 1926 (Kinugasa)
Mephisto, 1981 (Szabó)
Mépris, 1963 (Godard; Lang)
Mer des corbeaux. See Mor-Vran, 1931
Mera Naam Joker, 1970 (Kapoor)
Meraviglie di Aladino, 1961 (Bava; de Sica)
Mercenarios, 1983 (Fernández)
Merchant Convoy. See Merchant Seamen, 1941
Merchant of the Four Seasons. See Händler der vier Jahreszeiten, 1971
Merchant of Venice, 1914 (Weber)
Merchant Seamen, 1941 (Cavalcanti)
Merry la vie, 1991 (Blier)
Merci pour le chocolat, 2000 (Chabrol)
Mère du moine, 1909 (Feuillade)
Mère et l’infant, 1959 (Demy)
Merely a Married Man, 1915 (Sennett)
Mères tou 36, 1972 (Angelopoulos)
Mer An. See Romantic Prince, 1932
Meridiano Novo, 1976 (Alvarez)
Merlusse, 1935 (Pagnol)
Mermaids of Tiburon, 1961 (Corman)
Merrill’s Marauders, 1962 (Fuller)
Merrily We Go to Hell, 1932 (Arzner)
Merry Christmas. Mr. Lawrence, 1983 (Oshima)
Merry Vagabonds. See Lustigen Vagabunden, 1928
Merry Widow, 1925 (von Stroheim)
Merry Widow, 1934 (Lubitsch)
Merry Widow, 1938 (Lubitsch)
Merry Widows, 1930 (Porter)
Merry Go-Round, 1922 (von Stroheim)
Merry-Go-Round, 1979 (Rivette)
Merry-Go-Round, 1922 (Griffith)
Merry Widow, 1934 (Lubitsch)
Merry Widow, 1938 (Lubitsch)
Merry Widow Waltz Craze, 1908 (Porter)
Merry Widow, 1942 (Lubitsch)
Merry Widow, 1951 (Lubitsch)
Merry Widow, 1957 (Lubitsch)
Merry Widow, 1969 (Porter)
Merry Widow, 1970 (Lubitsch)
Merry Widow, 1978 (Lubitsch)
Merry Widow, 1980 (Lubitsch)
Merry Widow, 1981 (Lubitsch)
Merry Widow, 1982 (Lubitsch)
Merry Widow, 1983 (Lubitsch)
Merry Widow, 1984 (Lubitsch)
Merrily We Go to Hell, 1932 (Arzner)
Merry Widow, 1938 (Lubitsch)
Merry Widow, 1942 (Lubitsch)
Merry Widow, 1951 (Lubitsch)
Merry Widow, 1957 (Lubitsch)
Merry Widow, 1969 (Porter)
Merry Widow, 1970 (Lubitsch)
Merry Widow, 1978 (Lubitsch)
Merry Widow, 1980 (Lubitsch)
Merry Widow, 1981 (Lubitsch)
Merry Widow, 1982 (Lubitsch)
Merry Widow, 1983 (Lubitsch)
Merry Widow, 1984 (Lubitsch)
M蜥蜴的Of the Afternoon, 1943 (Der en)
Message, 1909 (Griffith)
Message from Geneva, 1936 (Cavalcanti)
Message from the Moon, 1911 (Sennett)
Message to Napoleon. See Et Budskab til Napoleon paa Elba, 1909
Mesopotamia, 1975 (Palcy)
Mes de minuit, 1906 (Guy)
Messenger. See Mensa, 1975
Messenger Boy’s Mistake, 1903 (Porter)
Messenger: The Story of Joan of Arc, 1999 (Besson)
Messia, 1978 (Rossellini)
Messiah. See Messia, 1978
Messidor, 1978 (Tanner)
Messieurs, 1986 (Giraud)
Mestiere delle armi, 2000 (Olmi)
Mestinia svou tvr, 1958 (Kachyna)
Mészáros László emlékre, 1968 (Mészáros)
Meségy von özvegy, 1918
Mesák az írógépröl, 1916 (Korda)
Messengers of the Afternoon, 1943 (Der en)
Message, 1909 (Griffith)
Message from Geneva, 1936 (Cavalcanti)
Message from the Moon, 1911 (Sennett)
Message of the Violin, 1910 (Griffith)
Message to Napoleon. See Et Budskab til Napoleon paa Elba, 1909
Messe de minuit, 1906 (Guy)
Mesangère, 1975 (Palcy)
Messe de minuit, 1906 (Guy)
Messenger. See Messangère, 1975
Messenger Boy’s Mistake, 1903 (Porter)
Messenger: The Story of Joan of Arc, 1999 (Besson)
Messia, 1978 (Rossellini)
Messiah. See Messia, 1978
Messidor, 1978 (Tanner)
Mestiere delle armi, 2000 (Olmi)
Méstomia svou tvr, 1958 (Kachyna)
Mészáros László emlékre, 1968 (Mészáros)
Metal meccanico e parrocchia in un turbin di sesso e di politica, 1996
Metal meccanico e parrocchia in un turbin di sesso e di politica, 1996
Meurtre est un meurtre, 1972 (Chabrol)
Meurtrier, 1963 (Autant-Lara)
Meurtrière. See Demütige und die Sängerin, 1925
Mewad No Mawali, 1930 (Mehboob Khan)
Mexican, 1911 (Dwan)
Mexican Sweethearts, 1909 (Griffith)
Mexican Symphony, 1941 (Eisenstein)
Mexico Marches, 1941 (Eisenstein)
México norte, 1977 (Fernández)
Mig och dig, 1969 (Henning-Jensen)
Miesta ei voi raiskata, 1977 (Holger-Madsen)
Miedzy Wrocławiem a Zielona Góra, 1972 (Kieślowski)
Midwinter’s Tale. See In the Bleak Midwinter, 1995
Mig og dig, 1969 (Henning-Jensen)
Mighty, 1929 (Cromwell)
Mighty Aphrodite, 1995 (Allen)
Mighty Joe Young, 1949 (Schoedsack)
Mighty like a Moose, 1926 (McCarey)
Mignon, 1900/07 (Guy)
Mignon oder der Child of Fate, 1912 (Guy)
Migrants, 1974 (Howard)
Migratory Birds under the Moon. See Tsuki no watari-dori, 1951
Mikey and Nicky, 1976 (Cassavetes)
Mikkel, 1948 (Roos)
Miklós Borsós, See Borsós Miklós, 1966
Mil, 1962 (Rouch)
Mil huit cent quatorze, 1910 (Feuillade)
Milan noir, 1987 (Breillat)
Milano ‘83, 1984 (Olmi)
Mildred Pierce, 1945 (Curtiz)
Millieu du monde, 1974 (Tanner)
Militaire et nourrice, 1904 (Guy)
Militant Suffragette. See A Busy Day, 1914
Militarismo y tortura, 1969 (Ruiz)
Milk We Drink, 1913 (Sennett)
Milky Way, 1935 (McCarey)
Milky Way. See Voie lactée, 1969
Mill on the Po. See Mulino del Po, 1949
Miller’s Crossing, 1990 (Coe; Raimi)
Millhouse: A White House Comedy, 1971 (de Antonio)
Million, 1931 (Clair)
Million Bid, 1927 (Curtiz)
Million-Dollar Bride, 1914 (Browning)
Million-Dollar Hotel, 2000 (Wenders)
Million-Dollar Infeld, 1982 (Reiner)
Million-Dollar Job. See A Film Johnnie, 1914
Million-Dollar Legs, 1932 (Dmytryk; Mankiewicz)
Millio- Dollar Mermaid, 1952 (Berkeley; Leroy)
Million-Dollar Robbery, 1914 (Guy)
Million-Dollar Trio. See Trio: Rubinstein, Heifetz and Piatigorsky, 1952
Million Girls. See Hyakumanin no musumetchi, 1963
Millionärde, 1913 (Holger-Madsen)
Millionaire Cat, 1932 (Sandrich)
Millionaireess, 1960 (de Sica)
Millionärin, 1918 (Wiene)
Millions de la bonne, 1913/16 (Feuillade)
Millions en fuite. See Flugten fra millionerne, 1934
Millions like Us, 1943 (Launder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)
Millions like Us. See Millions en fuite, 1934
Millions of the Gods, 1909 (Griffith)
Militante et nourrice, 1904 (Guy)
Militante und die Sängerin, 1925
Miltos, 1900/07 (Guy)
Mighty like a Moose, 1926 (McCarey)
Mighty Joe Young, 1949 (Schoedsack)
Mighty, 1929 (Cromwell)
Ministry of Fear, 1944 (Lang)
Miniver Story, 1950 (Franklin)
Mininlotsen, 1915 (Stiller)
Minnie and Moskowitz, 1971 (Cassavetes)
Ministry of Fear, 1944 (Lang)
Minuit, quai de Bercy, 1952 (von Stroheim)
Minute Hands, The Street Photographer. See Minuteros, 1972
Miracle in Milan.
Miracle in Harlem, 1937 (Micheaux)
Miracle Can Happen, 1946 (Huston)
Miracle, 1991 (Jordan)
Miracle. See Miracolo, 1947
Miracle of Morgan's Creek, 1944 (Sturges)
Miracle in Soho, 1957 (Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger)
Mira, 1974 (Kan)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Mister Roberts</td>
<td>1955</td>
<td>Ford; Leroy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. Saturday Night</td>
<td>1992</td>
<td>(Lewis)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. Shome</td>
<td>1969</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. Sleepy’s Good Luck</td>
<td>1914/15</td>
<td>Phalke</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. Slotter’s Jubilee</td>
<td>1914</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. Sleepy’s Good Luck</td>
<td>1914</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. Shome</td>
<td>1969</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. Saturday Night</td>
<td>1992</td>
<td>Lewis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mister Roberts</td>
<td>1955</td>
<td>Ford; Leroy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mondo vuole cosi</td>
<td>1945</td>
<td>de Sica</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Money. See Kane</td>
<td>1926</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Money. See Penge</td>
<td>1916</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Money. See Thune</td>
<td>1992</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. Slotter's Jubilee</td>
<td>1914</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. Sleepy's Good Luck</td>
<td>1914</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. Shome</td>
<td>1969</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. Saturday Night</td>
<td>1992</td>
<td>Lewis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mister Roberts</td>
<td>1955</td>
<td>Ford; Leroy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mondo vuole cosi</td>
<td>1945</td>
<td>de Sica</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Money. See Kane</td>
<td>1926</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Money. See Penge</td>
<td>1916</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Money. See Thune</td>
<td>1992</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. Slotter's Jubilee</td>
<td>1914</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. Sleepy's Good Luck</td>
<td>1914</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. Shome</td>
<td>1969</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. Saturday Night</td>
<td>1992</td>
<td>Lewis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mister Roberts</td>
<td>1955</td>
<td>Ford; Leroy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mondo vuole cosi</td>
<td>1945</td>
<td>de Sica</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Money. See Kane</td>
<td>1926</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Money. See Penge</td>
<td>1916</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Money. See Thune</td>
<td>1992</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. Slotter's Jubilee</td>
<td>1914</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. Sleepy's Good Luck</td>
<td>1914</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. Shome</td>
<td>1969</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. Saturday Night</td>
<td>1992</td>
<td>Lewis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mister Roberts</td>
<td>1955</td>
<td>Ford; Leroy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mondo vuole cosi</td>
<td>1945</td>
<td>de Sica</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Money. See Kane</td>
<td>1926</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Money. See Penge</td>
<td>1916</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Money. See Thune</td>
<td>1992</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Money Crazy, 1977 (Woo)
Money Dance. See Zeni no odori, 1964
Money from Home, 1954 (Lewis)
Money Mad, 1908 (Griffith)
Money Money Money.
Money Mad, 1908 (Griffith)
Money from Home, 1954 (Lewis)
Moonfleet, 1955 (Lang)
Moonblood, 1975 (Asch)
Moonfleet, 1955 (Lang)
Moonlight and Monkey Business, 1930 (Sandrich)
Moonlight in Havana, 1942 (Mann)
Moonlight Madness. See Gekka no kyojin, 1926
Moonlight Serenade. See Setouchi murnaito serenade, 1997
Moonlighting, 1982 (Skolimowski)
Moonlighting, 1985 (Donen)
Moonrise, 1948 (Borzage)
Moonrise. See Tsukiwa noborinu, 1955
Moonshine County Express, 1977 (Corman)
Moonshine Maid and the Man, 1914 (Ingram)
Moonshine, 1918 (Keaton)
Moonshiners, 1916 (Sennett)
Moonstruck, 1988 (Jewison)
Mor de sterf, 1964 (Güney)
Mor och dotter, 1912 (Stiller)
Mor-Vran, 1931 (Epstein)
Moral der Ruth Halbfass, 1971 (Schlöndorff; Von Trotta)
Moralista, 1959 (de Sica)
Mord ohne Täter, 1920 (Dupont)
Mord und Totschlag, 1967 (Schlöndorff)
Mörder sind unter uns, 1946 (Staudte)
Morderswo, 1957/58 (Polanski)
Mordsache Holm, 1950 (Staudte)
More about the Children of Bullerby Village, 1987 (Hallstrom)
More American Graffiti, 1979 (Howard; Lucas)
More Milk Evette, 1966 ()
More Milk, Evette, 1965 (Morrissey; Warhol)
More than a Miracle. See C’era una volta, 1967
More than a School, 1974 (Coolidge)
More than Friends, 1979 (Reiner)
More the Merrier, 1943 (Stevens)
Morella, 1990 (Corman)
Morena, 1986 (Kaurismaki)
Morgan, a Suitable Case for Treatment, 1966 (Frears; Reisz)
Mori no Ishimatsu, 1949 (Shindo; Yoshimura)
Móricz Zsigmond, 1956 (Jancsó)
Morir por la patria es vivir, 1976 (Alvarez)
Mormon, 1912 (Dwan)
Mormonens Offer, 1911 (Blom)
Morning After, 1934 (Dwan)
Morning After, 1986 (Lumet)
Morning Departure, 1950 (Attenborough)
Morning for the Osone Family. See Osone-ke no asa, 1946
Morning Papers, 1914 (Sennett)
Morning Premiere. See Jutro premiere, 1946
Morning Schedule. See Gozenchu no jikanwari, 1972
Morning Sun Shines. See Asahi wa kagayaku, 1929
Moro Naba, 1958 (Rouch)
Morocco, 1930 (von Sternberg)
Moros y cristianos, 1987 (Garcia Berlanga)
Morphia the Death Drug, 1914 (Hepworth)
Mors aux dents, 1979 (Tavernier)
Morsel. See Sousto, 1960
Mort, 1909 (Feuillade)
Mort de Robert Macaire et Bertrand, 1905 (Guy)
Mort de Vénus, 1930 (Storck)
Mort du Duc d’Enghien, 1912 (Gance)
Mort du soleil, 1921 (Dulac)
Mort en ce jardin, 1956 (Buñuel)
Mort en direct, 1980 (Tavernier)
Mort vivant, 1912 (Feuillade)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Mortal Storm, 1940</td>
<td>Borzage</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mortal Thoughts, 1991</td>
<td>Rudolph</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Morte a Venezia, 1971</td>
<td>Visconti</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Morte di un amico, 1960</td>
<td>Pasolini</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Morte d’Isotta, 1968</td>
<td>Schroeter</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Morte viene dallo spazio, 1958</td>
<td>Bava</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mortel Tranfert, 2000</td>
<td>Beineix</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mortelle randonnée, 1983</td>
<td>Miller</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Morts reviennent-ils?</td>
<td>See Drame au Château d’Acre, 1915</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mortuary Academy, 1988</td>
<td>Bartel</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Moscow in October. See Moskv a oktyabre, 1927</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mosedale Horseshoe, 1971</td>
<td>Apted</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Moses und Aron, 1975</td>
<td>Straub, Jean-Marie, And Danièle Huillet</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Moskva v oktyabre, 1927</td>
<td>Barnet</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mosquito Coast, 1986</td>
<td>Schrader; Weir</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mossafer, 1974</td>
<td>Kiarostami</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mossane, 1996</td>
<td>Faye</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Most Beautiful. See Ichiban utsukshiku, 1944</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Most Beautiful Swindles in the World. See Plus Belles Escroqueries du monde, 1963</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Most Dangerous Game, 1932</td>
<td>Schoedsack</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Most Dangerous Man Alive, 1961</td>
<td>Dwan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Most Useful Tree in the World. See Världens mest Användbara träden, 1935/36</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Most of the. See Lénigme, 1919</td>
<td>Lénigme</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mot nga tider, 1939</td>
<td>Sjöström</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1914</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother, 1996</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Munchies, 1987 (Bartel; Corman)</td>
<td>Musique et danse des chasseurs Gow, 1965 (Rouch)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mundo de la Mujer, 1972 (Bemberg)</td>
<td>Musketeers of Pig Alley, 1912 (Griffith)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mundo mágico, 1966 (Litín)</td>
<td>Musuko no seishun, 1952 (Kobayashi)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Munekata shimai, 1950 (Ozu)</td>
<td>Musume, 1926 (Gosho)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Municipal Elections. See Elecciones municipales, 1970</td>
<td>Musume Dooji, 1946 (Ichikawa)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Munition Conspiracy. See Krigens Fjende, 1915</td>
<td>Mutant Action. See Acción mutante, 1993</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Munka vagy hivatás?, 1963 (Mészáros)</td>
<td>Mute Witness, 1913 (Dwan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Munsters Scary Little Christmas, 1996 (Landis)</td>
<td>Mutiny, 1952 (Dmytryk)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Muppet Movie, 1979 (Brooks; Welles)</td>
<td>Mutiny on the Bounty, 1935 (Lewin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Muppets Take Manhattan, 1984 (Landis)</td>
<td>Mutiny on the Bounty, 1962 (Milestone)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mur, 1970 (Guerra)</td>
<td>Mutter Küsters Fahrt zum Himmel, 1975 (Fassbinder)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mur, 1982 (Güney)</td>
<td>Muyder Circle Lives Again. See De Muiderkring herleef, 1948</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mur, 1982 (Varda)</td>
<td>Muž z neznáma, 1939 (Frič)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mara di Malapaga, 1948 (Clément)</td>
<td>Muzikantská Liduška, 1940 (Frič)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mura Murs, 1980 (Varda)</td>
<td>Muzsika, 1984 (Jancsó)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mura no hanayome, 1928 (Gosho)</td>
<td>Muzzle. See Kanonen-Serenade, 1958</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Muse, 1999 (Brooks; Cameron; Reiner)</td>
<td>My Apprenticeship. See Vlyudyakh, 1939</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Muses, 1985 (Brakhage)</td>
<td>My Baby, 1912 (Griffith)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Murder, 1930 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>My Beautiful Laundrette, 1985 (Frears)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Murder a la Mod, 1967 (de Palma)</td>
<td>My Best Friend’s Girl. See Femme de mon pote, 1982</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>MURDER and murder, 1996 (Rainer)</td>
<td>My Best Gal, 1944 (Mann)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Murder Czech Style. See Vražda po našem, 1966</td>
<td>My Brilliant Career, 1979 (Armstrong)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Murder Goes to College, 1937 (Dmytryk)</td>
<td>My Brother Talks to Horses, 1946 (Zinnemann)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Murder in the Family. See Crime d’Ovide Plouffe, 1984</td>
<td>My Brother’s Wedding, 1983 (Burnett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Murder Is My Beat, 1955 (Ulmer)</td>
<td>My Child. See Mein Kind, 1956</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Murder My Sweet. See Farewell, My Lovely, 1944</td>
<td>My Country. See Moya rodina, 1933</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Murder on the Orient Express, 1974 (Lumet)</td>
<td>My Darling Clementine, 1946 (Ford)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Murder Psalm, 1980 (Brakhage)</td>
<td>My Dear Bodyguard. See Seygili muhafizin, 1970</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Murder without Cause. See Mord ohne Täter, 1920</td>
<td>My Dear Fellow. See Dorogoi moi chelovek, 1958</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Murderers Are among Us. See Mörder sind unter uns, 1946</td>
<td>My Dinner with Andre, 1981 (Mallic)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Murderers Are on Their Way. See Ubizti vykhodyat na dorogu, 1942</td>
<td>My Dream Is Yours, 1949 (Curriz)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Murders in the Rue Morgue, 1932 (Florey; Huston)</td>
<td>My Enemy, the See. See Taiheiyo hitoribotchi, 1963</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Muriel, ou le temps d’un retour, 1963 (Resnais)</td>
<td>My Face Red in the Sunset. See Yuhi ni akai ore no kao, 1961</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Murmur of the Heart. See Souffle au coeur, 1971</td>
<td>My Fair Lady, 1964 (Cukor)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Muro, 1947 (Torre Nilsson)</td>
<td>My Family. Mi Familia, 1995 (Coppola; Nava)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Murphy’s I.O.U., 1913 (Sennett)</td>
<td>My Fatherland. See Moya rodina, 1933</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Musashi Miyamoto. See Miyamoto Musashi, 1944</td>
<td>My Favorite Season. See Ma saison préférée, 1993</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Musashino Fujin, 1951 (Mizoguchi)</td>
<td>My Favorite Wife, 1940 (Mccarey)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Muscle-bound Music, 1926 (Sennett)</td>
<td>My First Mister, 2000 (Brooks)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Muse, 1999 (Brooks; Cameron; Reiner)</td>
<td>My Friend Fabian. See Mj pifel Fabin, 1953</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Musée Grévin, 1958 (Coccaet; Demy)</td>
<td>My Friend Irma, 1949 (Lewis)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Musée vivant, 1965 (Storck)</td>
<td>My Friend Irma Goes West, 1950 (Lewis)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Musen fusen, 1924 (Mizoguchi)</td>
<td>My Friend Ley. See Min Ven Ley, 1914</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Museo dell’amore, 1935 (Lattuada)</td>
<td>My Friend the Gypsy. See Mj pifel Fabin, 1953</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Museumsmysteriet, 1909 (Blom)</td>
<td>My Friend the King, 1931 (Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Music. See Muzsika, 1984</td>
<td>My Generation, 2000 (Kopple)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Music and Faith, 1992 (Jireš)</td>
<td>My Girlfriend’s Boyfriend. See Ami de mon amie, 1987</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Music and Pain, 1993 (Jireš)</td>
<td>My Goodness, 1920 (Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Music Box, 1990 (Costa-Gavras)</td>
<td>My Heart Belongs to Daddy, 1942 (Siodmak)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Music from Mars. See Hudza z Marsu, 1954</td>
<td>My Heart Is Calling, 1934 (Lauder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Music Hall Star. See Lydia, 1916</td>
<td>My Hero, 1912 (Griffith)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Music Hath Its Charms, 1915 (Browning)</td>
<td>My Husband Lies. See Hazasodik az uram, 1913</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Music in Darkness. See Musik i mörker, 1948</td>
<td>My Hustler, 1966 (Morrisey; Warhol)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Music in the Air, 1934 (Wilder)</td>
<td>My Kingdom for . . . , 1985 (Boetticher)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Music Man, 1962 (Howard)</td>
<td>My Lady’s Garter, 1920 (Tourneur)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Music Master, 1927 (Dwan)</td>
<td>My Learned Friend, 1943 (Dearden)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Music of the Heart, 1999 (Craven)</td>
<td>My Left Foot, 1989 (Sheridan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Music Room. See Jalsagar, 1958</td>
<td>My Life as a Dog, 1985 (Hallstrom)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Musica, 1966 (Duras)</td>
<td>My Life for Zarah Leander, 1986 (Sirk)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Musical Tramps. See His Musical Career, 1914</td>
<td>My Life Story. See Mit livs eventyr, 1955</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Musicians’ Girl. See Muzikantskå Liduska, 1940</td>
<td>My Life to Live. See Vivre sa vie, 1962</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Musik i mörker, 1948 (Bergman; Zetterling)</td>
<td>My Life with Caroline, 1941 (Milestone)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Naked Kiss, 1963 (Fuller)
Naked Lunch, 1991 (Cronenberg)
Naked Night. See Gyeklarnas aften, 1953
Naked Nineteen-year-old. See Hadaka no jukyu-sai, 1970
Naked Paradise, 1957 (Corman)
Naked Spar, 1953 (Mann)
Naked Sun. See Hadaka no taiyo, 1958
Naked Warriors. See Arena, 1973
Naked Youth, a Story of Cruelty. See Seishun zankoku monogatari, 1960
Naked, 1993 (Leigh)
Name the Man, 1924 (Sjöström)
Namaste v Bukhare, 1943 (Protazanov)
Nasreddin Shih, hactore Cinema, 1992 (Makhmalbaf)
Nata de marzo, 1958 (Scola)
Natale al campo 119, 1948 (Bava; de Sica)
Natalka Poltuvka, 1936 (Umer)
Natsukashiki fue ya taiko, 1967 (Kinoshita)
Natter Johnny, 1977 (Haanstra)
Native Land. See Strana rodnaya, 1946
Natalka Poltavka, 1938 (Ulmer)
Natale al campo 119, 1948 (Bava; de Sica)
Natalia Granger, 1972 (Duras)
Nathan Dixon, 1999 (Apted)
National Flag. See A Bandeira Nacional, 1988
National Lampoon’s European Vacation, 1985 (Bartel)
National Parks . . . a Necessity, National Parks in the Netherlands. See
Nationale Parken . . . noodzaak, 1978
Nautical Rifle. See Escopeta nacional, 1978
Nationale Parken . . . noodzaak, 1978 (Haanstra)
Native Land. See Strana rodnaya, 1946
National Parks . . . a Necessity, National Parks in the Netherlands.
Nationale Parken . . . noodzaak, 1978
Naufrago de la Calle de la Providencia, 1970 (Ripstein)
Naughts, 1994 (Brakhage)
Naughty Nurses. See Tender Loving Care, 1973
Nausicaa, 1970 (Varda)
Nautch Girl, 1934 (Mehboob Khan)
Nave bianca, 1941 (Rossellini)
Navigator, 1924 (Keaton)
Navigator: A Medieval Odyssey, 1988 (Ward)
Navire des hommes perdu. See Schiff der verlorene Menschen, 1929
Navire Night, 1978 (Duras)
Navy Wife, 1935 (Dwan)
Navy, 1934 (Levinson)
NATO, 1976 (Gance)
Natural Born Killers, 1994 (Stone; Tarantino)
Nature of the Beast, 1919 (Hopeworth)
Nassef de la Calle de la Providencia, 1970 (Ripstein)
Nassef, 1994 (Brakhage)
Natievandieren, 1916 (Holger-Madsen)
Natalie Granger, 1972 (Duras)
Nazerin, 1958 (Buñuel)
Nazi Agent, 1942 (Dassin)
Nazarín, 1946 (Mehboob Khan)
Nazzara, 1961 (Kapoor)
Ne bougeons plus, 1903 (Guy)
Ne faus pas mourir pour ça, 1967 (Lefebvre)
Ne jouez pas avec les Martiens, 1983 (Imamura)
Ne me demandez pas pourquoi. See Testament d’Orphée, 1960
Nationale Parken . . . noodzaak, 1978
National Rifle. See Escopeta nacional, 1978
National Flag. See A Bandeira Nacional, 1988
National Lampoon’s European Vacation, 1985 (Bartel)
National Parks . . . a Necessity, National Parks in the Netherlands.
Nationale Parken . . . noodzaak, 1978
Naufrago de la Calle de la Providencia, 1970 (Ripstein)
Nassef, 1994 (Brakhage)
Natievandieren, 1916 (Holger-Madsen)
Natalie Granger, 1972 (Duras)
Nazerin, 1958 (Buñuel)
Nazi Agent, 1942 (Dassin)
Nazarín, 1946 (Mehboob Khan)
Nazzara, 1961 (Kapoor)
Ne bougeons plus, 1903 (Guy)
Ne faus pas mourir pour ça, 1967 (Lefebvre)
Ne jouez pas avec les Martiens, 1983 (Imamura)
Ne me demandez pas pourquoi. See Testament d’Orphée, 1960
Nationale Parken . . . noodzaak, 1978
National Rifle. See Escopeta nacional, 1978
National Flag. See A Bandeira Nacional, 1988
National Lampoon’s European Vacation, 1985 (Bartel)
National Parks . . . a Necessity, National Parks in the Netherlands.
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)
Necklace, 1909 (Griffith)
Necklace of the Dead.
Necklace of Ramses, 1914 (Ingram)

New York Cinderella, 1939 (von Sternberg)
New York Diary—Alexander Hackenschmied, 1993 (Jireš)
New York Girl, 1914 (Sennett)
New York Hat, 1912 (Griffith)
New York Nights, 1929 (Milestone)
New York Stories, 1989 (Allen; Coppola; Scorsese)
New York, 1954 (Leacock)
New York, New York, 1977 (Scorsese)
New York, 1954 (Leacock)
New York, New York Bis, 1984 (Akerman)
New York Girl, 1914 (Sennett)
Newlyweds, 1910 (Griffith; Sennett)
Newly Rich, 1931 (Mankiewicz)
Newcomers.
Newborn, 1953 (Roos)
Nick’s Movie.
Nick’s Film.
Nick of Time Baby, 1917 (Sennett)
Nick of Time, 1995 (Badham)
Night before Christian’s Birthday. See Natten for Kristians
Fødelsdag, 1908
Night before the Divorce, 1942 (Siodmak)
Night before the War Begins. See Laisen no zenya, 1943
Night Butterfly. See Yoru no cho, 1957
Night Call Nurses, 1972 (Corman)
Night Club, 1928 (Flcrey)
Night Drum. See Yoru no tsuzumi, 1958
Night Duty. See Milosierdzie platne z gory, 1975
Night Falls on Manhattan, 1997 (Lumet)
Night Flyer, 1928 (Daves)
Night Full of Rain. See Fine del mondo in una notte piena di poggia, 1978
Night Games, 1979 (Vadim)
Night Games. See Nattlek, 1966
Night Holds Terror, 1955 (Cassavetes)
Night in London. See Nacht in London, 1928
Night in Marseilles, 1931 (Lauder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)
Night in the Show, 1915 (Chaplin)
Night Is My Future. See Musik i mörker, 1948
Night Is Young. See Mauvais Sang, 1986
Night Life in New York, 1925 (Dwan)
Night Mail, 1936 (Cavalcanti; Grierson)
Night Moves, 1975 (Penn)
Night Music. See Bartók Béla: az éjszaka zenéje, 1970
Night Must Fall, 1964 (Reisz)
Night Noises. See Tapage nocturne, 1979
Night Nurse, 1931 (Wellman)
Night of Mystery, 1937 (Dupont)
Night of January 16th, 1941 (Daves)
Night of Nights, 1939 (Milestone)
Night of Passion. See Netsuo no ichiya, 1929
Night of the Blood Beast, 1958 (Corman)
Night of the Bride. See Noc nevésté, 1967
Night of the Cobra Woman, 1972 (Corman)
Night of the Demon, 1957 (Tourneur)
Night of the Filmmakers. See Nacht der Regisseure, 1995
Night of the Flesh Eaters. See Night of the Living Dead, 1968
Night of the Ghouls, 1958 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Night of the Iguana, 1964 (Fernández; Huston)
Night of the Living Dead, 1968 (Romero)
Night of the Living Dead, 1990 (Romero)
Night of the Party, 1934 (Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger)
Night of the Shooting Stars, 1983 (Taviani)
Night on Earth, 1992 (Jarmusch)
Night Out, 1915 (Chaplin)
Night Owls, 1927 (Sandrich)
Night Porter’s Point of View. See Z punktu widzenia nocnego portiera, 1977
Night River. See Yoru no kawa, 1956
Night Shift, 1982 (Howard)
Night Song, 1947 (Cromwell)
Night Sun. See Let damici lai ciel de lune, 1958
Night of the Banshee Cried, 1957 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Night They Raided Minsky’s, 1968 (Friedkin)
Night Tide, 1961 (Corman)
Night to Remember. See Kazoku no jjiro, 1962
Night Train. See Night Train to Munich, 1940
Night Train. See Pociag, 1959
Night Train to Munich, 1940 (Launder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat; Reed)
Night unto Night, 1949 (Siegel)
Night Visions, 1990 (Craven)
Night Watch, 1928 (Korda)
Night Watch; The Hole. See Trou, 1960
Night Watchman’s Mistake, 1929 (Sennett)
Night We Never Met, 1993 (Seidelman)
Night Women. See Femme spectacle, 1960
Night World, 1932 (Berkeley)
Night Zoo. See Zoo la nuit, 1987
Nightbreed, 1990 (Cronenberg)
Nightcarts, 1956 (Brakhage)
Nightfall, 1957 (Tourneur)
Nightfall, 1988 (Corman)
Nighthawks, 1979 (Jarman)
Nightjohn, 1996 (Burnett)
Nightmare. See Lidércnyomás, 1920
Nightmare Alley, 1947 (Goulding)
Nightmare Cafe, 1992 (Craven)
Nightmare in Chicago, 1964 (Altman)
Nightmare on Elm Street (+ sc), 1984 (Craven)
Nightmare on Elm Street 3: Dream Warriors, 1986 (Craven)
Nightmare Alley, 1947 (Goulding)
Nightmare.
Nightjohn, 1996 (Burnett)
Nighawks, 1979 (Jarman)
Nightfall, 1957 (Tourneur)
Nightcats, 1956 (Brakhage)
Nobody’s Woman. See Señora de Nadie, 1982
Noc nevěsty, 1967 (Kachyňa)
Noces d’argent, 1915 (Feuillade)
Noces de sable, 1948 (Cocteau)
Noces rouges, 1973 (Chabrol)
Noces sanguantes, 1915/16 (Feuillade)
Noces siciliennes, 1912 (Feuillade)
Noces vénitiennes. See Prima notte, 1958
Noch’v sentyabre, 1939 (Barnet)
Nochny hovory s matkou, 2000 (Nemec)
Noi siamo le colonne, 1956 (de Sica)
Nogi Taisho to Kuma-san, 1926 (Mizoguchi)
Nogent, Eldorado du dimanche, 1929 (Carné)
Noël du poilu, 1915 (Feuillade)
Noël de Francesca, 1912 (Feuillade)
Nodes, 1981 (Brakhage)
Nocturne, 1980 (Von Trier)
Nocturne, 1919 (Feuillade)
Noctámbulos, 1995 (Bardem)
Nocí hovory s matkou, 2000 (Nemec)
Nocí hovory s matkou, 2000 (Nemec)
Noirt, 1976 (Rivette)
Norma Rae, 1979 (Ritt)
Nora inu, 1949 (Kurosawa)
Notorious Elinor Lee, 1940 (Micheaux)
Notorious Affair, 1930 (Bacon)
Notorious Gentleman. See Rake’s Progress, 1945
Notre Histoire, 1984 (Blier)
Notre pauvre cœur, 1916 (Feuillade)
Notre-Dame de Paris, 1931 (Epstein)
Notre-Dame de Paris, 1956 (Delannoy)
Notte, 1960 (Antonioni)
Notte brava, 1959 (Pasolini)
Notte d’estate, con profilo Greco, occhi amandorla e odore di basilico, 1986 (Wertmuller)
Notte di San Lorenzo, 1982 (Taviani)
Notte di tempesta, 1945 (Castellani)
Notte italiana, 1960 (Antonioni)
Notte di San Lorenzo, 1982 (Taviani)
Notte di tempesta, 1945 (Castellani)
Notte italiana, 1987 (Moretti)
Notti bianche, 1957 (Visconti)
Notti di Cabiria, 1956 (Fellini; Pasolini)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcanti)
Nous ne ferons jamais de cinéma, 1932 (Cavalcant
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>FILM TITLE INDEX</th>
<th>DIRECTORS, 4th EDITION</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Novosti dnia, 1944-54 (Vertov)</td>
<td>Nuuk 250 år, 1979 (Roos)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Novyi Vavilon, 1929 (Gerasimov; Kozintsev; Pudovkin)</td>
<td>Nyar i Skane, 1961 (Troell)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Now, 1965 (Alvarez)</td>
<td>Nabyggarna, 1970 (Troell)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Now about These Women. See För att inte tala om alla dessa kvinnor, 1964</td>
<td>NYC 3/94, 1994 (Hartley)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Now That I Was Born a Woman. See Onna to umaretakaranya, 1934</td>
<td>Nymph. See Ninfa plebea, 1996</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Now We Will Call You Brother. See Ahor te vamos a llamar hermano, 1971</td>
<td>Nyobo funshitsu, 1928 (Ozu)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Now, Let’s Talk about Men. See Questa volta parliamo di uomini, 1965</td>
<td>O Amuleta de Ogum, 1974 (Pereira Dos Santos)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nowhere, 1997 (Araki)</td>
<td>O Bõca de Ouro, 1962 (Pereira Dos Santos)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Noz w wodzie. 1960 (Skolimowski)</td>
<td>O canto do mar, 1953 (Cavalcanti)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nóz w wodzie. 1962 (Polanski)</td>
<td>O cavalho de Oxuame, 1961 (Guerra)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>N’te promène donc pas toute nue, 1906 (Feuillade)</td>
<td>O Circo, 1965 (Diegues)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number, 1979 (Boulting)</td>
<td>O Convento, 1995 (Oliveira)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Thirteen, 1922 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>O coração, 1960 (Oliveira)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Seventeen, 1932 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>O Dia do desespero, 1992 (Oliveira)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Seventeen, 1932 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>O dragão da maldade contra o santo querreiro. See António das Mortes, 1969</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>O Dreamland, 1953 (Anderson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>O grande momento, 1958 (Pereira Dos Santos)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>O homem das estrelas, 1971 (Guerra)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>O Lucky Man!, 1973 (Anderson; Frears)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>O Megalexandros, 1980 (Angelopoulos)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>O Melissokomos, 1986 (Angelopoulos)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>O Meu Caso—Repeticoes, 1986 (Oliveira)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>O nêchem jinêm, 1963 (Chytilová)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>O pão, 1959 (Oliveira)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>O passado e o presente, 1972 (Oliveira)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>O patio, 1958 (Rocha)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>O pintor e a cidade, 1956 (Oliveira)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>O Rio de Machado de Assis, 1964 (Pereira Dos Santos)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>O saisons, o chateaux, 1957 (Varda)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>O Salto, 1967 (de Broca)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>Oamba, 1988 (Scola)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>O Sapato de cetim, 1985 (Oliveira)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>O sciai, 1951 (Pereira Dos Santos)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>O slavosti a hostech. 1966 (Nemec)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>O Thiasos, 1975 (Angelopoulos)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>O Kay for Sound, 1937 (Lauder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>O. Henry’s Full House, 1952 (Hawks)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>O.C. and Stiggs, 1983 (Altman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>O.H.M.S., 1937 (Walsh)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>Oak and the Reed. See Chêne et le roseau, 1994</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>Oath, 1921 (Walsh)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>Oath and the Man, 1910 (Griffith)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>Oath of Youth. See Klatva molodikih, 1944</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>Občan Karel Havlíček, 1966 (Jireš)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>Obchod na korze. 1965 (Kadár)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>Oberwald Mystery. See Mistero di Oberwald, 1979</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>Objections Overruled, 1912 (Dwan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>Oblomok imperii, 1929 (Gerasimov)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>Oblomov, 1980 (Mikhailov)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>Obmanutyje Mechty. See Grezy, 1915</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>Obol’stitel. See Yuri Nagorny, 1915</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>Oboro yo no onna, 1936 (Gosho)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>Oh’s stürmt oder schnet, 1976 (Dörrie)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>Obsession, 1949 (Dmytryk)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>Obsession, 1954 (Delanony)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>Obsession, 1976 (Schrader; de Palma)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>Obsession. See Homme mysterieux, 1933</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>Obsession. See Junoon, 1977</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>Obžalovaný, 1964 (Kadár)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>Ochamo Is My Town, 1974 (Asch)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>Occasional Work of a Female Slave. See Gelegenheitsarbeit einer Sklavin, 1973</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>Occhi, la bocca, 1982 (Bellocchio; Breillat)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number Twenty, 1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td>Ocupe-toi d’Amélie, 1949 (Autant-Lara)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Film Title</td>
<td>Director</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>------------------------------------------</td>
<td>-------------------------------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ocean Swells, 1934</td>
<td>Stevens</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ocean Waif, 1916</td>
<td>Guy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ocean’s Eleven, 1960</td>
<td>Milestone</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ocean’s Eleven, 2001</td>
<td>Soderbergh</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ohazukuo no aji, 1952</td>
<td>Imamura; Ozu</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Och ahoos de Revolution, 1966</td>
<td>Alvarez</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oci cionnie, 1987</td>
<td>Mikhailov</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>October. See Oktiabr, 1928</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Octubre de todos, 1977</td>
<td>Alvarez</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oda—vissza, 1962</td>
<td>Gaál</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Odd Job Man, 1912</td>
<td>Dwan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Odd Man Out, 1947</td>
<td>Reed</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Odd Obsession. See Kagi, 1959</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Odds against Tomorrow, 1959</td>
<td>Wise</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Odds and Ends. See Vermischte Nachrichten, 1987</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Odette Robert, 1980</td>
<td>Eustache</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Odeur des fauves, 1970</td>
<td>de Sica</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Odna, 1931</td>
<td>Gerasimov; Kozintsev</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Odnazhdy noch’yu, 1945</td>
<td>Barnet</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Odinnadtsii, 1928</td>
<td>Vertov</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ondine</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oedipus Rex. See Edipo re, 1967</td>
<td>Barnet</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oedipus the King, 1968</td>
<td>Welles</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oeil de Vichy, 1993</td>
<td>Chabrol</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oeil du maître, 1957</td>
<td>Resnais</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oeil de Vichy, 1993</td>
<td>Chabrol</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>O’er Hill and Dale, 1932</td>
<td>Grierson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oeuvre immortelle, 1924</td>
<td>Duvivier</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Of a Thousand Delights. See Vaghe stelle dell’orsa, 1965</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Of Great Events and Ordinary People. See De Grands Evénements et des gens ordinaires, 1979</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Of Human Bondage, 1934</td>
<td>Cromwell</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Of Human Bondage, 1946</td>
<td>Goulding</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Of Men and Music, 1951</td>
<td>Zetterling</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Of Wayward Love. See Amore difficile, 1960</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Off His Trolley, 1924</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Off to Peoria, 1930</td>
<td>Sandrich</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Offbeat, 1960</td>
<td>Zetterling</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Offenbach titkai, 1996</td>
<td>Szabó</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Offense, 1973</td>
<td>Lumet</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Office Boy’s Revenge, 1903</td>
<td>Porter</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Office Wife, 1930</td>
<td>Bacon</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Officer 666, 1915</td>
<td>Niblo</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Officer Cupid, 1921</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Officer’s Swordknot. See A tiszti kardbojt, 1915</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Offre d’emploi, 1980</td>
<td>Eustache</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oftret, 1986</td>
<td>Tarkovsky</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ogni Baku, 1950</td>
<td>Heifitz</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ogon, 1930</td>
<td>Donskoi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ogrec. See Unhold, 1996</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ogro, 1979</td>
<td>Pontecorvo</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oh, 1968</td>
<td>Vanderbeek</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oh Amelia!. See Occupe-toi d’Amélie, 1949</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oh Dad, Poor Dad, Mama’s Hung You in the Closet and I’m Feelin’ So Sad, 1967</td>
<td>Mackendrick</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oh Daddy!, 1922</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oh, Doctor?!, 1917</td>
<td>Keaton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oh du lieber Augustin, 1922</td>
<td>Forst</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oh, Kay! 1928</td>
<td>Leroy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oh Life—A Woe Story—The A Test News, 1963</td>
<td>Brakhage</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oh, Mabel Behave, 1921</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oh, Mr. Porter!, 1937</td>
<td>Launder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oh My Aunt, 1914</td>
<td>Hepworth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oh! Rosalinda, 1955</td>
<td>Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Old South, 1940 (Zinnemann)
Old Well. See Lao jing, 1987
Old Wives for New, 1918 (de Mille)
Old Woman Ghost. See Yoba, 1976
Old Women of Japan. See Nippon no obachan, 1962
Old Writing Desk. See Chatollets Hemmelighed, eller Det gamle chatol, 1913
Öldürmek hakkimdir, 1968 (Güney)
Old Fashioned Woman, 1974 (Coolidge)
Old és kotés, 1963 (Jancsó)
Old Brother and Younger Sister. See Ani imoto, 1976
Old Professionals. See Plus Vieux Métier du monde, 1967
On the Pole, 1960 (Leacock)
On the Red Front. See Na krasnom fronte, 1920
On the Reef, 1909 (Griffith)
On the Right Track. See Na vernom sledu, 1925
On the Roads of Fate. See På livets ödesvägar, 1913
On the Steep Cliff. See U Krutovo Yara, 1962
On the Town, 1949 (Donen)
On the Waterfront, 1954 (Kazan)
On the Western Frontier, 1909 (Porter)
On the Yard, 1979 (Silver)
On Top of the Whale. See Het dak van de walvis, 1981
Once a Thief, 1991 (Woo)
Once Around, 1991 (Hallstrom)
Once More with Feeling, 1960 (Donen)
Once One Night. See Odnazhdyy noch’yu, 1945
Once por cero, 1970 (Alvarez)
On a Honeymoon, 1942 (Mccarey)
On a Savage Night. See Nightmare in Chicago, 1964
On a Thursday. See Affairs of Martha, 1942
On a Time. See Var Engang, 1922
On a Time . . . Is Now, 1977 (Hitchcock)
Once upon a Time in America. 1984 ( Leone)
On a Time in the West. See C’era una volta il West, 1969
On a Time in the Cinema. See Nasseroddin Shah, hactore Cinema, 1992
On a Time in the Tractor, 1965 (Torre Nilsson)
Onda, 1955 (Olmi)
On and One. See Pour toutes, 1999
On A.M. 1916 (Chaplin)
On A.M. 1968 (Godard)
On A.M. 1971 (Godard)
On a Clear Day You Can See Forever, 1970 (Minnelli)
On a Common Path. See Kózös útán, 1953
On a Jhola. See Boszu, 1997
On a Summer’s Day, 1921 (Sennett)
On a Volé la cuisse de Jupiter, 1980 (de Broca)
On a Volé un homme, 1934 (Ophüls)
On Borrowed Time, 1939 (Franklin)
On connaît la chanson, 1997 (Resnais)
On Dangerous Ground, 1952 (Ray)
On demande une brute, 1934 (Tati)
On est au coton, 1976 (Arcand)
On est poivrot, mais on a du cœur, 1905 (Guy)
On Foreign Land. See Por la tierra ajena, 1968
On Guard. See Boszu, 1997
On His Wedding Day, 1913 (Sennett)
On a Neut pas comme ça, 1946 (von Stroheim)
On n’engraisse pas les cochons à l’eau claire, 1973 (Lefebvre)
On Our Merry Way. See A Miracle Can Happen, 1946
On Patrol, 1922 (Sennett)
On purge bébé, 1931 (Renoir)
On Roller Skates. See Rulleskøjterne, 1908
On s’est trompé d’histoire d’amour, 1973 (Serreau)
On Such a Night, 1937 (Dupont)
On Sundays, 1960/61 (Baillie)
On the Beach, 1959 (Kramer)
On the Border, 1913 (Dwan)
On the Brink, 1911 (Porter)
On the Earth. See Chijo, 1957
On the Foggy River. See Yen P’o Chiang Shang, 1977
On the Highway of Life. See Na estrada da vida, 1980
On the Hunting Ground, 1985 (Tian Zhuangzhuang)
On the Jump, 1918 (Walsh)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>FILM TITLE INDEX</th>
<th>DIRECTORS, 4th EDITION</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>One Mysterious Night, 1944 (Boetticher)</td>
<td>Onna koso ie o momore, 1939 (Yoshimura)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One Night Stand, 1915 (Sennett)</td>
<td>Onna no kao, 1949 (Imai)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One Night Stand, 1995 (Corman)</td>
<td>Onna no kunsho, 1961 (Yoshimura)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One Night Stand, 1997 (Ward)</td>
<td>Onna no machi, 1940 (Imai)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One, Night, and Then—, 1909 (Griffith)</td>
<td>Onna no misoshiru, 1968 (Gosho)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One of Our Aircraft Is Missing, 1942 (Lean; Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger)</td>
<td>Onna no saka, 1960 (Yoshimura)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One of the Blood. See His Majesty, the American, 1919</td>
<td>Onna no sono, 1954 (Kinoshita)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One of the Many. See En av de många, 1915</td>
<td>Onna to umaretakaranya, 1934 (Gosho)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One of Us. See Von uns beiden, 1973</td>
<td>Onna yo, kini no na o kegasu nakare, 1930 (Gosho)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One or the Other. See Von uns beiden, 1973</td>
<td>Onna-yo ayamaru nakare, 1923 (Kinugasa)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One P.M., 1971 (Godard; Leacock)</td>
<td>Onorata societai, 1961 (de Sica)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One Plus One, 1968 (Godard)</td>
<td>Ont staan en vergaan, 1954 (Haanstra)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One Potato, Two Potato . . . See Eci, pec, pec, 1961</td>
<td>ONU Allah afitensin, 1970 (Güney)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One Rainy Afternoon, 1936 (Sturges)</td>
<td>Onyxkopf, 1917 (Dupont)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One Round O'Brien, 1911 (Sennett)</td>
<td>Ooh . . . You Are AWFUL, 1972 (Lauder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One September Night.</td>
<td>Ookami, 1955 (Shindo)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One Spooky Night, 1924 (Sennett)</td>
<td>Open at Night. See Yoru hiraku, 1931</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One Sings, the Other Doesn`t. See Une chante l’autre pas, 1977</td>
<td>Open Gate, 1909 (Griffith)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One Spooky Night, 1924 (Sennett)</td>
<td>Open House, 1982 (Egoyan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One Touch of Nature, 1908 (Griffith)</td>
<td>Opening in Moscow, 1959 (Clarke)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One Touch of Venus, 1948 (Tashlin)</td>
<td>Opening Night, 1977 (Bogdanovich; Cassavetes)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One Touch of Nature, 1908 (Griffith)</td>
<td>Opera do Malandro, 1986 (Guerra)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One Touch of Venus, 1948 (Tashlin)</td>
<td>Opera in the Vineyard. See Opera ve vinici, 1981</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One, Two, Three, 1912 (Dwan)</td>
<td>Opera No. 1, 1994 (Hartley)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One, Two, Three, 1961 (Wildor)</td>
<td>Opera ve vinici, 1981 (Jireš)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One Two Three Sun. See Deux trois soleil, 1993</td>
<td>Opera Zebracka, 1991 (Menzel)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One Two Three, 1978 (Clarke)</td>
<td>Operá-Mouffe, 1958 (Varda)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One Way or Another. See De cierta manera, 1977</td>
<td>Operabranden, 1912 (Blom)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One Week, 1920 (Keaton)</td>
<td>Operación abril del Caribe, 1982 (Alvarez)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One Woman’s Story. See Passionate Friends, 1949</td>
<td>Opération Béton, 1954 (Godard)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One Yard to Go, 1931 (Sennett)</td>
<td>Operation Disaster. See Morning Departure, 1950</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One-Piece Bathing Suit. See Million-Dollar Mermaid, 1952</td>
<td>Operation Ogro. See Ogro, 1979</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One-Run Elmer, 1935 (Keaton)</td>
<td>Operation “Happy New Year”, 1996 (Rogozhkin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One-Way Ticket to Love. See Koi no katamichi kippu, 1960</td>
<td>Operation Redlight, 1969 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oni amazi, 1926 (Kinugasa)</td>
<td>Operasnia “S novym godom”. See Operation “Happy New Year”, 1996</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oninaba, 1964 (Shindo)</td>
<td>Operazione paura. See Spie vengono dal semifreddo, 1966</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Onkel og Nevo. See Fader og Søn, 1911</td>
<td>Operette, 1940 (Forst)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Only A Farmer’s Daughter, 1915 (Sennett)</td>
<td>Opfer der Gesellschaft, 1918 (Wiener)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Only a Messenger Boy, 1915 (Sennett)</td>
<td>Ophélie, 1962 (Chabrol)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Only a Mother. See Bara en mor, 1949</td>
<td>Opie ‘67. See I mostri, 1963</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Only Angels Have Wings, 1939 (Hawks)</td>
<td>Opium Smoker’s Dream. See Opiumsdrømmen, 1914</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Only for Love, Please Not Now. See Bride sur le cou, 1961</td>
<td>Opiumsdrømmen, 1914 (Holger-Madsen)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Only Game in Town, 1970 (Stevens)</td>
<td>Opus 1, 1947 (Roos)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Only House, 1971 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)</td>
<td>Opus I, 1921 (Ruttmann)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Only Once a Year. See Tołko Raz w Godu, 1914</td>
<td>Opus II, III, IV, 1920-23 (Ruttmann)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Only One. See Edinstvennaia, 1976</td>
<td>Opus seis, 1969 (Guzmán)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Only Saps Work, 1930 (Dmytryk; Mankiewicz)</td>
<td>Opus Six. See Opus seis, 1969</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Only Son, 1914 (de Mille)</td>
<td>Opus V, 1925-26 (Ruttmann)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Only Son. See Hitori musuko, 1936</td>
<td>Or des mers, 1932 (Epstein)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Only the French Can. See French Cancan, 1955</td>
<td>Or du Cristobal, 1939 (Becker)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Only the Hours. See Rien que les heures, 1926</td>
<td>Or gris, 1980 (Ruiz)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Only Two Can Play, 1961 (Attenborough; Launder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat; Zetterling)</td>
<td>Or Pigs and Pearls. See Montenegro, 1981</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Only Way, See Ek Hi Rasta, 1939</td>
<td>Örökseg, 1980 (Mészáros)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Only When I Larf, 1968 (Attenborough; Dearden)</td>
<td>Ora della verità. See Minute de vérité, 1952</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Only Yesterday, 1933 (Stahl)</td>
<td>Örökbefogadás, 1975 (Mészáros)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Only You, 1981 (Jarmusch)</td>
<td>Opera-Mouffe, 1958 (Varda)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Onna, 1948 (Kinugasa)</td>
<td>Opera ve vinici, 1981 (Jireš)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Onna, 1949 (Imai)</td>
<td>Opera Zebracka, 1991 (Menzel)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Onna, 1961 (Yoshimura)</td>
<td>Operá-Mouffe, 1958 (Varda)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Onna, 1960 (Yoshimura)</td>
<td>Operabranden, 1912 (Blom)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Onna, 1968 (Gosho)</td>
<td>Opération avril del Caribe, 1982 (Alvarez)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Onna, 1970 (Gosho)</td>
<td>Opération Béton, 1954 (Godard)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Onna, 1973 (Kimura)</td>
<td>Operation Disaster. See Morning Departure, 1950</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Onna, 1973 (Kimura)</td>
<td>Operation Gas-Oil, 1955 (de Breca)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Onna, 1973 (Kimura)</td>
<td>Operation Ogro. See Ogro, 1979</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Onna, 1973 (Kimura)</td>
<td>Operation “Happy New Year”, 1996 (Rogozhkin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Onna, 1973 (Kimura)</td>
<td>Operazione paura. See Spie vengono dal semifreddo, 1966</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Onna, 1973 (Kimura)</td>
<td>Operette, 1940 (Forst)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Onna, 1973 (Kimura)</td>
<td>Opfer der Gesellschaft, 1918 (Wiener)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Onna, 1973 (Kimura)</td>
<td>Ophélie, 1962 (Chabrol)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Ordeal of Rosetta, 1918 (Goulding)
Orderly or Unorderly. See Be Tartib ya Bedoun-e Tartib, 1981
Orders Are Orders, 1953 (Grierson)
Orders Is Orders, 1933 (Launder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)
Ordet, 1943 (Sjöström)

Ordinary Madness of a Daughter of Cham. See Folie ordinaire d’une fille de Cham, 1986
Ordinary Ways. See Közös útán, 1953
Ordinateur des pompes funèbres, 1976 (Miller)
Ore Riders, 1927 (Wyler)
Orecchio, 1946 (Bava)
Ore Riders, 1927 (Wyler)
Ordinateur des pompes funèbres, 1976 (Miller)
Ottokar, 1953 (Kusturica)
Ordinary Ways. See Közös útán, 1953
Oribe’s Crime. See Crimen de Oribe, 1950
Orient Express, 1954 (Rossellini)
Orfeo, 1985 (Goretta)
Orose with Attitude, 1990 (Haynes)
Ore Riders, 1927 (Wyler)
Orizuru osen, 1934 (Mizoguchi)
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Original Kings of Comedy, 2000 (Lee)
Origin of Sex.
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Original Kings of Comedy, 2000 (Lee)
Origin of Sex.
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Original Kings of Comedy, 2000 (Lee)
Origin of Sex.
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Original Kings of Comedy, 2000 (Lee)
Origin of Sex.
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Original Kings of Comedy, 2000 (Lee)
Origin of Sex.
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Original Kings of Comedy, 2000 (Lee)
Origin of Sex.
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Original Kings of Comedy, 2000 (Lee)
Origin of Sex.
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Original Kings of Comedy, 2000 (Lee)
Origin of Sex.
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Original Kings of Comedy, 2000 (Lee)
Origin of Sex.
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Original Kings of Comedy, 2000 (Lee)
Origin of Sex.
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Original Kings of Comedy, 2000 (Lee)
Origin of Sex.
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Original Kings of Comedy, 2000 (Lee)
Origin of Sex.
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Original Kings of Comedy, 2000 (Lee)
Origin of Sex.
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Original Kings of Comedy, 2000 (Lee)
Origin of Sex.
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Oriental Love, 1917 (Sennett)
Original Kings of Comedy, 2000 (Lee)
Origin of Sex.
Our Man in Havana, 1960 (Reed)
Our Marriage. See Watakushi-tachi no kekkon, 1962
Our Mother’s House, 1967 (Clayton)
Our Mr. Sun, 1956 (Capra)
Our Russian Front, 1942 (Ivens; Milestone)
Our Story. See Notre Histoire, 1984
Our Teacher. See Waga kyokan, 1939
Our Visit to China. See Watakushi-tachi no kekkon, 1962
Our Wonderful Years.
Our Wife, 1941 (Stahl)
Our Teacher.
Our Visit to China.
Our Story.
Our Russian Front, 1942 (Ivens; Milestone)
Our Mr. Sun, 1956 (Capra)
Our Mother’s House, 1967 (Clayton)
Our Marriage.
Our Man in Havana, 1960 (Reed)
Out of College.
Out of Africa, 1985 (Pollack)
Out of the Blue.
Out of Sight, 1998 (Brooks; Soderbergh)
Out of Season, 1949 (Anderson)
Out of the Underworld.
Out of the Dark, 1935 (Daves; Leroy)
Out of the Night.
Out of the Underworld.
Outcast’s Return. See Tugthusfange No. 97, 1914
Outcry. See Grido, 1957
Outdoor Pajamas, 1924 (Mccarey)
Over glas gesproken, 1958 (Haanstra)
Over, under, and up!. See Up!, 1976
Overcoat. See Cappotto, 1952
Overdrive, 1997 (Corman)
Overexposed, 1990 (Corman)
Overnight Delivery, 1998 (Smith)
Overnight Stay in the Tyrol. See Ubernachtung in Tirol, 1974
Ovoces rajszych jme, 1969 (Chytilová)
Owd Bob, 1938 (Launder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)
Owl’s Legacy. See Héritage de la chouette, 1989
Ox-Bow Incident, 1943 (Wellman)
Oxford and Cambridge Boat Race, 1898 (Hepworth)
Oyaji to sono ko, 1929 (Gosho)
Oyu-sama, 1951 (Mizoguchi)
Oyuki the Madonna. See Maria no Oyuki, 1935
Oz, 1997 (Levinson)
Ozawa, 1986 (Maysles)
Oznamuje se láskam vasim, 1988 (Kachyňa)
P . . . respectueuse, 1949 (Astruc)
P tissier et ramoneur, 1904 (Guy)
P-38 Pilot, 1990 (Baillie)
På livets ödesvägar, 1913 (Sjöström)
Paa Besög hos Kong Tingeling, 1947 (Roos)
Paa Livets Skyggeside, 1912 (Holger-Madsen)
Papi, 1953 (Kapoor)
Pace That Thrills, 1925 (Leroy)
Pacific Heights, 1990 (Schlesinger)
Pacificist. See Pacifista, 1970
Pacifista, 1970 (Jancsó)
Padatik, 1973 (Sen)
Padlockd, 1926 (Dwan)
Padre, 1912 (Pastrone)
Padre padrone, 1977 (Moretti; Taviani)
Paapi, 1953 (Kapoor)
Paa Besög hos Kong Tingeling, 1947 (Roos)
Paa Livets Skyggeside, 1912 (Holger-Madsen)
Padlolicked, 1926 (Dwan)
Pagode, 1915 (Pick)
Paid in Full, 1912 (Dwan)
Paid to Love, 1927 (Hawks)
Paint Your Wagon, 1969 (Eastwood)
Painted Skin. See Hua Pi Zhi Yinyang Fawang, 1992
Painters Painting, 1972 (de Antonio)
Pain.
Painter and the Town.
Painted Lady, 1912 (Griffith)
Painted Lips.
Pain.
Painter’s Revenge, 1908 (Porter)
Pair of Tights, 1928 (McCarey)
Paisa Hi Paisa, 1956 (Mehboob Khan)
Paisa, 1946 (Fellini; Rossellini)
Paisan. See Paisa, 1946
Pajama Game, 1957 (Donen; Fosse)
Pajama Party, 1964 (Keaton)
Pajaro del faro, 1971 (Alvarez)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Palaces of Peking. See Pekingi palotái</td>
<td>1957</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Palanquin. See Dochu sugoruku kago</td>
<td>1926</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Palavra e Utopia</td>
<td>2000</td>
<td>Oliveira</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pale Flower. See Kawaita hana</td>
<td>1963</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pale Rider</td>
<td>1985</td>
<td>(Eastwood)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paleface, 1922</td>
<td>(Keaton)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paleface, 1947</td>
<td>(Tashlin)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Palæontologie</td>
<td>1959</td>
<td>(Haanstra)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paleface</td>
<td>1947</td>
<td>(Tashlin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Palermo or Wolfsburg</td>
<td>1980</td>
<td>(Schroeter)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paleontologie</td>
<td>1959</td>
<td>(Haanstra)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paleface, 1947</td>
<td>(Tashlin)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Palermo oder Wolfsburg</td>
<td>1980</td>
<td>(Schroeter)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pampa gringa</td>
<td>1962</td>
<td>(Birri)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pam Kuso Kar</td>
<td>1974</td>
<td>(Rouch)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pályamunkások</td>
<td>1957</td>
<td>(Gaál)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pals</td>
<td>1912</td>
<td>(Dwan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Palookah from Paducah</td>
<td>1935</td>
<td>(Keaton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Palomita blanca</td>
<td>1973</td>
<td>(Ruiz)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Palomilla brava</td>
<td>1973</td>
<td>(Ruiz)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Palombella rossa</td>
<td>1989</td>
<td>(Moretti)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paloma herida</td>
<td>1963</td>
<td>(Fernández)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Palmy Days</td>
<td>1931</td>
<td>(Berkeley)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Palm Beach Story</td>
<td>1942</td>
<td>(Sturges)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Palle Alone in the World</td>
<td>1949</td>
<td>(Henning-Jensen)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pålivets ödesväger</td>
<td>1913</td>
<td>(Stiller)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pandora's Box</td>
<td>1928</td>
<td>(Duvivier)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pandora and the Flying Dutchman</td>
<td>1951</td>
<td>(Lewin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pan Tadeusz: The Last Foray in Lithuania</td>
<td>1999</td>
<td>(Wajda)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pan, 1920</td>
<td>(Fejos)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pan Tadeusz, 1999</td>
<td>(Wajda)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pan Tadeusz: The Last Foray in Lithuania</td>
<td>1999</td>
<td>(Wajda)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pandora and the Flying Dutchman</td>
<td>1951</td>
<td>(Lewin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradox of Love</td>
<td>1957</td>
<td>(Ray)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pan</td>
<td>1951</td>
<td>(Vertov)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Panelstory, 1979</td>
<td>(Chytilová)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Panique</td>
<td>1946</td>
<td>(Duvivier)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Panic in the Streets</td>
<td>1950</td>
<td>(Kazan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pan</td>
<td>1912</td>
<td>(Dwan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pans, 1912</td>
<td>(Dwan)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Parnassus</td>
<td>1955</td>
<td>(de Sica)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pans</td>
<td>1912</td>
<td>(Dwan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paparazzi</td>
<td>1963</td>
<td>(Godard)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Papatacchi</td>
<td>1955</td>
<td>(Gualtieri)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Parent troublant</td>
<td>1950</td>
<td>(Keaton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paris—New York</td>
<td>1939</td>
<td>(von Stroheim)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paris Nous Appartient, 1960</td>
<td>(Chabrol)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paris-Nord Appartient</td>
<td>1960</td>
<td>(Chabrol)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paris, 1926</td>
<td>(Florey; Goulding)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paris, 1926</td>
<td>(Florey; Goulding)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paris in the Spring</td>
<td>1935</td>
<td>(Milestone)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paris blue</td>
<td>1912</td>
<td>(Keaton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paris Blues, 1953</td>
<td>(Ritt)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paris Blues, 1961</td>
<td>(Ritt)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paris, 1926</td>
<td>(Florey; Goulding)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paris, 1926</td>
<td>(Florey; Goulding)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paris, 1926</td>
<td>(Florey; Goulding)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradise Belongs to Us</td>
<td>1961</td>
<td>(Keaton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradise Not Yet Lost</td>
<td>1980</td>
<td>(Mekas)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradise Road</td>
<td>1997</td>
<td>(Beresford)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradise Road</td>
<td>1997</td>
<td>(Beresford)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradise Road</td>
<td>1997</td>
<td>(Beresford)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradise Lost</td>
<td>1911</td>
<td>(Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradise Lost</td>
<td>1911</td>
<td>(Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradise Lost</td>
<td>1986</td>
<td>(Dorrie)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradigme</td>
<td>1986</td>
<td>(Dorrie)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paraiso ortopedico</td>
<td>1969</td>
<td>(Guzmán)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Parallax View</td>
<td>1974</td>
<td>(Pakula)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paralytic</td>
<td>1912</td>
<td>(Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paramour</td>
<td>1912</td>
<td>(Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paramour</td>
<td>1912</td>
<td>(Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paramount on Parade</td>
<td>1930</td>
<td>(Arzner; Goulding; Lubitsch)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paramour</td>
<td>1912</td>
<td>(Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paraphernalia</td>
<td>1964</td>
<td>(Demy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paraphernalia</td>
<td>1964</td>
<td>(Demy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paraphernalia</td>
<td>1964</td>
<td>(Demy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Parkour Command</td>
<td>1958</td>
<td>(Corman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Park is Not Yet Lost</td>
<td>1980</td>
<td>(Mekas)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Park is Not Yet Lost</td>
<td>1980</td>
<td>(Mekas)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Parent troublant</td>
<td>1950</td>
<td>(Keaton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Panique</td>
<td>1946</td>
<td>(Duvivier)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Panique</td>
<td>1946</td>
<td>(Duvivier)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Panique</td>
<td>1946</td>
<td>(Duvivier)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Parent troublant</td>
<td>1950</td>
<td>(Keaton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Parent troublant</td>
<td>1950</td>
<td>(Keaton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Parent troublant</td>
<td>1950</td>
<td>(Keaton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Panique</td>
<td>1946</td>
<td>(Duvivier)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Panique</td>
<td>1946</td>
<td>(Duvivier)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradoxe</td>
<td>1950</td>
<td>(Keaton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradoxe</td>
<td>1950</td>
<td>(Keaton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradoxe</td>
<td>1950</td>
<td>(Keaton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradoxe</td>
<td>1950</td>
<td>(Keaton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradoxe</td>
<td>1950</td>
<td>(Keaton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradise de Satan</td>
<td>1938</td>
<td>(Delannoy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradox of Love</td>
<td>1957</td>
<td>(Ray)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradoxe</td>
<td>1950</td>
<td>(Keaton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradox of Love</td>
<td>1957</td>
<td>(Ray)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradox of Love</td>
<td>1957</td>
<td>(Ray)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradox of Love</td>
<td>1957</td>
<td>(Ray)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradox of Love</td>
<td>1957</td>
<td>(Ray)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Panique</td>
<td>1946</td>
<td>(Duvivier)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Panique</td>
<td>1946</td>
<td>(Duvivier)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Panique</td>
<td>1946</td>
<td>(Duvivier)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradox of Love</td>
<td>1957</td>
<td>(Ray)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradoxe</td>
<td>1950</td>
<td>(Keaton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradox of Love</td>
<td>1957</td>
<td>(Ray)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradox of Love</td>
<td>1957</td>
<td>(Ray)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradoxe</td>
<td>1950</td>
<td>(Keaton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradox of Love</td>
<td>1957</td>
<td>(Ray)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradox of Love</td>
<td>1957</td>
<td>(Ray)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradoxe</td>
<td>1950</td>
<td>(Keaton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradox of Love</td>
<td>1957</td>
<td>(Ray)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradox of Love</td>
<td>1957</td>
<td>(Ray)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradox of Love</td>
<td>1957</td>
<td>(Ray)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradox of Love</td>
<td>1957</td>
<td>(Ray)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paradox of Love</td>
<td>1957</td>
<td>(Ray)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Panique</td>
<td>1946</td>
<td>(Duvivier)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Paris nous appartient, 1958 (Godard)
Paris nous appartient, 1960 (Demy)
Paris nous appartient, 1961 (Rivette)
Paris pà to mâder, 1949 (Roos)
Paris, Texas, 1984 (Wenders)
Paris qui dort, 1923 (Clair)
Paris s’en va, 1981 (Rivette)
Paris Tombuctú, 1999 (García Berlanga)
Paris s’en va, 1981 (Rivette)
Paris qui dort, 1923 (Clair)
Paris, Texas
Paris på to måder, 1949 (Roos)
Paris nous appartient, 1961 (Rivette)
Paris nous appartient, 1960 (Demy)
Paris nous appartient, 1958 (Godard)
Paris vu par . . . 20 ans après, 1984 (Akerman)
Paris Underworld. See Apachen, 1919
París Tombuctú, 1999 (García Berlanga)
Paris qui dort, 1923 (Clair)
Paris qui dort, 1923 (Clair; Feuillade)
Paris, Texas
Paris s’en va, 1981 (Rivette)
Paris qui dort, 1923 (Clair)
Paris qui dort, 1923 (Clair)
Paris qui dort, 1923 (Clair; Feuillade)
Paris, Texas
Paris s’en va, 1981 (Rivette)
Paris qui dort, 1923 (Clair)
Paris qui dort, 1923 (Clair)
Paris qui dort, 1923 (Clair; Feuillade)
Paris, Texas
Paris s’en va, 1981 (Rivette)
Paris qui dort, 1923 (Clair)
Paris qui dort, 1923 (Clair)
Paris qui dort, 1923 (Clair; Feuillade)
Paris, Texas
Paris s’en va, 1981 (Rivette)
Paris qui dort, 1923 (Clair)
Paris qui dort, 1923 (Clair)
Paris qui dort, 1923 (Clair; Feuillade)
Paris, Texas
Paris s’en va, 1981 (Rivette)
Paris qui dort, 1923 (Clair)
Paris qui dort, 1923 (Clair)
Paris qui dort, 1923 (Clair; Feuillade)
Pattes blanches, 1949 (Grémillon)
Pattes de mouches, 1936 (Grémillon)
Paton, 1970 (Coppola; Schaffner)
Paton—Lust for Glory. See Patton, 1970
Paton: A Salute to a Rebel. See Patton, 1970
Pattuglia di passo San Giacomo, 1954 (Olmi)
Patty Hearst, 1988 (Schrader)
Pauvre pompier, 1906 (Guy)
Paula—"je reviens"., 1968 (Schroeter)
Paula aus Portugal, 1979 (Dörrie)
Paula s’en va, 1969 (Téchiné)
Paulie, 1998 (Spielberg)
Paulina s’en va, 1969 (Téchiné)
Paulo Coelho, 1980 (Saura)
Paul Revere’s Ride, 1910 (Walsh)
Paul Delvaux ou les femmes défendues, 1969-70 (Storck)
Paul Swan, 1965 (Warhol)
Pays d'où je viens, 1956 (Carné)
Payoff, 1935 (Florey)
Pay the Devil, 1957 (Welles)
Pay Day, 1922 (Chaplin)
Pay as You Enter, 1928 (Bacon)
Pawnshop, 1916 (Chaplin)
Pawebd of Fate, 1916 (Tourneur)
Pawenko Mezhevskii, 1998 (Rogozhkin)
Pawlínka, 1974 (Kachyňa)
Pavé, 1905 (Guy)
Pauvre pompier, 1906 (Fayard)
Pavo, 1960 (Jansari)
Péchés de jeunesse, 1941 (Tourneur)
Pêcheur dans le torrent, 1897 (Guy)
Pêcheur du Niger, 1930 (Rouch)
Pêcheurs du Niger, 1930 (Rouch)
Pêcheurs du Niger, 1930 (Rouch)
Pêcheurs du Niger, 1930 (Rouch)
Pêcheurs du Niger, 1930 (Rouch)
Péculier of National Fishing, 1998 (Rogozhkin)
Péculier of the National Hunt, 1995 (Rogozhkin)
Pedagogiska bajka, 1961 (Makavejev)
Pedales sobra Cuba, 1965 (Alvarez)
Pedlar, 1913 (Sennett)
Pedlar. See Dastorouf, 1987
Pedestrian Subway. See Przajcie podziemne, 1973
Pedreira de São Diogo, 1962 (Pereira Dos Santos)
Pepe’s Dilemma, 1912 (Sennett)
Pe-Wee’s Big Adventure, 1985 (Burton)
Peel, 1982 (Campion)
Peep Show, 1981 (Egoyan)
Peeping Pete, 1913 (Sennett)
Peeping Tom, 1960 (Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger)
Peg o’ the Ring, 1916 (Ford)
Peg-o-My-Heart, 1923 (Vidor)
Pegg Sue Got Married, 1986 (Coppola)
Peggy, The Will o’ th Wisp, 1917 (Browning)
Pègre de Paris, 1906 (Guy)
Pei Chi-h Ch’iu, 1977 (Hou Hsiao-Hsien)
Pei Ch’ing Ch’êng Shih, 1989 (Hou Hsiao-Hsien)
Peine du talion, 1916 (Fuellade)
Peintre et ivrogne, 1905 (Guy)
Pekiing palotái, 1957 (Jancsó)
Pelea cubana contra los demonios, 1971 (Gutiérrez Alea)
Pelican Brief, 1993 (Pakula)
Pelileo Earthquake, 1944 (Leacock)
Pelle erobreren, 1987 (August)
Pelle the Conqueror. See Pelle erobreren, 1987
Pensioner. See Guerneres Yndling, 1919
Penderecki, Lutoslaw, 1977 (Zanussi)
P'eng P' eng I Ch’uan Hsin, 1980 (Hou Hsiao-Hsien)
Penge, 1916 (Dreyer)
Péniche tragique, 1924 (Pick)
Penn and Teller Get Killed, 1989 (Penn)
Penny Journey, 1938 (Jennings)
Penny Paradise, 1938 (Dearden; Reed)
Penny Serenade, 1941 (Wiene)
Pension Groonen, 1924 (Wiene)
Pension Mimosas, 1935 (Feyder)
Pensioners, 1912 (Dwan)
Pente, 1931 (Autant-Lara)
Penthesilea, 1987 (Syberberg)
People. See Ceddo, 1977
People and Their Guns. See Nas wal Nil, 1968
People and the Nile. See Nas wal Nil, 1968
People and Their Guns. See People et ses fusils, 1969
People under the Stairs, 1991 (Craven)
People vs. John Doe, 1916 (Weber)
People under the Stairs, 1991 (Craven)
People on a Glacier. See Lidé z metra, 1974
People on the Sun, 1935 (Weiss)
People of One Heart. See Vie est à nous, 1936
People of One Heart. See Lidé jednoho srđce, 1953
People of the Cumberlands, 1937 (Kazan)
People on a Glacier. See Lidé na kře, 1937
People on Sunday. See Menschen am Sonntag, 1929
People on Wheels. See Lidé z maringotek, 1966
People under the Stairs, 1991 (Craven)
People vs. John Doe, 1916 (Weber)
People vs. Larry Flint, 1996 (Forman; Stone)
People Who Are Preparing the Year of the Hohenstaufens. See Menschen, die die Stauffer-Ausstellung vorbereiten, 1977
People Will Talk, 1951 (Mankiewicz)
People’s Enemy. See Minshu no teki, 1946
Pépé-le-Moko, 1937 (Duvivier)
Pepi, Lucy, Bom and Lots of Other Girls. See Pepi, Lucy, Bom y otras chicas de montón, 1980
Pepi, Lucy, Bom y otras chicas de montón, 1980 (Almodóvar)
Pepita Jiménez, 1945 (Fernaández)
Peppermint frappé, 1967 (Saura)
Peppermint Soda. See Diabolo Menthe, 1977
Perceval, 1964-69 (Rohmer)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>FILM TITLE INDEX DIRECTORS, 4TH EDITION</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Per qualche dollaro in più, 1965 (Eastwood; Leone)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Per un pugno di dollari, 1964 (Leone)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Perceval le Gaullois, 1978 (Rohmer)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Perdición de los Hombres, 2000 (Ripstein)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Perdonami, 1952 (Bava)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Père de mademoiselle, 1953 (L’herbier)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Père Noel a les yeux bleus, 1966 (Eustache)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Père prematuré, 1933 (Delannoy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Père tranquille, 1946 (Clément)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Perez Family, 1995 (Nair)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Perfect Couple, 1979 (Altman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Perfect Crime, 1921 (Dwan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Perfect Lady. See A Woman, 1915</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Perfect Love, 1919 (Goulding)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Perfect Love. See Parfait amour!, 1996</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Perfect Marriage. See Beau Mariage, 1982</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Perfect Specimen, 1937 (Curtiz)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Perfect Storm, 2000 (Levinson; Petersen)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Perfect Strangers, 1945 (Korda)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Perfect World, 1993 (Coppola)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Perfidy of Mary, 1913 (Griffith)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Performance, 1970 (Roeg)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Perils of Petersboro, 1926 (Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Perils of the Park, 1916 (Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Périoscope, 1916 (Gance)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Perjurer, 1957 (Ulmer)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Perla, 1945 (Fernández)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Perličky na dn , 1964 (Nemec)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Perličky na dně, 1965 (Chytilová; Jireš)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Persiane chiuse, 1950 (Fellini)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Perón: La revolución justicialista, 1971 (Solanas, Fernando E., And Octavio Getino)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Perón: actualización política y doctrinaria para la toma del poder, 1971</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Persoon, 1966 (Bergman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Personal Column. See Piéges, 1939</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Personal History, Adventures, Experience, and Observations of David Copperfield, the Younger. See David Copperfield, 1933</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Personal Love. See Perfect Love, 1919</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Personnel. See Personel, 1975</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Peru—Instituto de Verano, 1956 (Olmi)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pervaya Lyubov’, 1915 (Bauer)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Perversions of Science, 1997 (Hooper; Zemeckis)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pervyj paren, 1958 (Paradzhanov)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pesn o Gerojah, 1932 (Ivans)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pesn o metallye, 1928 (Heiftz)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pesnya katorzhanina, 1911 (Protazanov)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pesnya Manshuk, 1971 (Mikhalkov)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pesnya o sluchaste, 1934 (Donskoi)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pest from the West, 1939 (Keaton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pest in Florenz, 1919 (Lang)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pest of Friends, 1927 (Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pesten Nkem lámpást adott kezembe az Úr, 1999 (Jancsó)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Petal on the Current, 1919 (Browning)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pete 'n' Tillie, 1972 (Ritt)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pete Roleum and His Cousins, 1939 (Losey)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Peter and Paulia. See Cerný Petr, 1963</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Peter Voss Who Stole Millions. See Peter Voss, der Millionendieb, 1931</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Peter Voss, der Millionendieb, 1931 (Dupont; Forst)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Peter’s Friends, 1992 (Branagh)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Petersburg Slums. See Petersburgskiyi trushchob, 1915</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Petersburgskiyi trushchob, 1915 (Protazanov)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Petey and Johnny, 1961 (Leacock)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pétitrovskaya, 1949 (Frič)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Petit à petit, 1971 (Rouch)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Petit Baboun, 1932 (Grémillon)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Petit Chaperon rouge, 1929 (Cavalcanti; Renoir)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Petit Chapiteau. See Circo mas pequeño, 1963</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Petit frère et petite soeur, 1896-97 (Lumiére)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Petit Hamlet. See Hamlet, 1946</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Petit Jour, 1963 (Godard)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Petit Manuel d’histoire de France, 1979 (Ruiz)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Petit monastère en Toscane, 1988 (Ioseliani)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Petit Monde de Don Camillo, 1951 (Duvivier)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Petit officier . . . Adieu!, 1930 (Forst)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Petit de la Pacha, 1940 (Novak)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Petits Chapeau.See Peter Voss, der Millionendieb, 1931</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Petits Coupeurs de bois vert, 1904 (Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Petrifed Forest, 1936 (Daves)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Petrifed Forest. See Kaseki no mori, 1973</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pett and Pott, 1934 (Cavalcanti; Grierson; Jennings)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Petulias, 1968 (Lester; Roeg)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Peuple est invincible, 1969 (Ivans)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Peuple et ses fusils, 1969 (Ivans)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Peuple ne peut rien sans ses fusils, 1969 (Ivans)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Peuple peut tout, 1969 (Ivans)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Peur des coups, 1932 (Autant-Lara)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pezzo, capopeco e capitano. See Kanonenserenade, 1958</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Phaedra, 1962 (Dassin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Phantasmes, 1918 (L’herbier)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Phantom Chariot. See Körkäralen, 1921</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Phantom Eye, 1999 (Corman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Phantom India. See Inde fantôme, 1969</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Phantom Lady, 1944 (Siodmak)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Phantom Life. See Vie fantôme , 1992</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Phantoms of the West, 1935 (Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Phantom of Liberty. See Fantôme de la liberté, 1974</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Phantom of Love. See Ai no borei, 1978</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Phantom of the Paradise, 1974 (de Palma)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Phantom Outlaw, 1927 (Wyler)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Phantom Riders, 1918 (Ford)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Phantom Strikes. See Gaunt Stranger, 1938</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Phantom, 1922 (Murnau)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Phantom, 1996 (Davies)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pharoah. See Farao, 1965</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pharmacist, 1933 (Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Personel, 1975 (Kieslowski)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Personnel. See Personel, 1975</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Peter Voss. See Körkäralen, 1921</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Philadelphia, 1993 (Corman; Demme)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Philadelphia Experiment, 1984 (Carpenter)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Philadelphia Story, 1940 (Cukor; Mankiewicz)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>FILM TITLE INDEX DIRECTORS, 4th EDITION</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>----------------------------------------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1267</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Philippe Soupault et le surréalisme, 1982 (Tavernier)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Philips-Radio, 1931 (Ivens)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Philosopher’s Stone. See Parash Pathar, 1957</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Phir Subah Hogi, 1958 (Kapoor)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Phobia, 1980 (Huston)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Phoenix, See Fujicho, 1947</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Phoenix, See Hi no tori, 1980</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Phone My Wife. See Zadzwonie do mojej zony, 1958</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Phoney University Student. See Nise Daigakusei, 1960</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Photogénie mécanique, 1924 (Grémillon)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Photograph. See Zdiceja, 1968</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Photographie, 1895 (Lumière)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Photos d’Alix, 1980 (Eustache)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Phynx, 1970 (Berkeley)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Physical Culture Romance, 1914 (Browning)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pianist, 2001 (Polanski)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Piano, 1993 (Campion)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Piano Movers. See His Musical Career, 1914</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pianos mécanicos, 1965 (Bardem)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pianos mécaniques. See Pianos mécanicos, 1965</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pibe cabeça, 1975 (Torre Nilsson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Picador, 1932 (Dulac)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Piccadilly, 1928 (Dupont)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Piccadilly Third Stop, 1960 (Zetterling)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Piccolo mondo antico, 1941 (Lattuada)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Piccolo mondo di Don Camillo. See Petit Monde de Don Camillo, 1951</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Picket Guard, 1913 (Dwan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Picking Peaches, 1924 (Capra; Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Picking up the Pieces, 2000 (Allen)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pickpocket, 1959 (Bresson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pickup on South Street, 1953 (Fuller)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Picnic at Hanging Rock, 1975 (Weir)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Picnic at Ray’s, 1975 (Jarman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Picnic on the Grass. See Déjeuner sur l’herbe, 1959</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Picture of Dorian Gray, 1945 (Lewin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Picture of Madame Yuki. See Yuki Fujin ezu, 1950</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Picture of the Time. See Bild der Zeit, 1921/22</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Picture Snatcher, 1933 (Bacon)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Picture Windows, 1995 (Dante)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pictures at an Exhibition. See Egy kiállítás képei, 1954</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pictures of My Brother Julio. See As pinturas de meu irmão Júlio, 1965</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pída huivsta kiállitás Tatjana, 1994 (Kaurismaki)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pie in the Sky, 1934 (Kazan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Piece of Pleasure. See Partie de plaisir, 1975</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pied Piper, 1942 (Preminger)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pied Piper. See Pied Piper of Hamelin, 1972</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pied Piper of Hamelin, 1972 (Demy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pied qui etreint, 1916 (Feyder)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Piednadle albo zycie, 1961 (Skolimowski)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Piedra libre, 1976 (Torre Nilsson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Piedra sobre piedra, 1970 (Alvarez)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pieds-Nickeles, 1964 (de Broca)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Piége à pucelles, 1972 (Chabrol)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Piéges, 1939 (Siodmak; von Stroheim)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Piel de verano, 1961 (Torre Nilsson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pied de verano, 1961 (Torre Nilsson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pierre et Paul, 1968 (Miller)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pierre philosophe, 1912 (Gance)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pierres chantantes d’Ayorou, 1968 (Rouch)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pierrot assassin, 1903 (Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pierrot le fou, 1965 (Fuller; Godard)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pierrot Pierrette, 1924 (Feuillade)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pierwsza miłość, 1973 (Kieślowski)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pierwsze lata, 1949 (Ivens)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Piety. See Kegyelyet, 1967</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pig. See Cochon, 1970</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pigion. See Porcile, 1969</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pigsty. See Porcile, 1969</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pikoo, 1981 (Ray)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pikovaya dama, 1916 (Protazanov)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pilate and Others. See Pilatus und andere—ein Film für Karfreitag, 1972</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pilate und andere—ein Film für Karfreitag, 1972 (Wajda)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pile Driver. See Fatal Mallet, 1914</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pile Driving. See Heien, 1929</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Piles of Perils, 1916 (Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pilgrim, 1923 (Chaplin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pilgrimage, 1933 (Ford)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pill Pounder, 1923 (La Cava)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pillars of Society, 1916 (Walsh)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pillole di Ercole, 1960 (de Sica)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pillow Book, 1996 (Greenaway)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pilota ritorna, 1942 (Rossellini)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pimp. See Zegen, 1987</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pinched in the Finish, 1917 (Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pine à ongles, 1968 (Forman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pink Cadillac, 1989 (Eastwood)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pink Flamingoes, 1972 (Waters)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pink Floyd—The Wall, 1982 (Parker)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pink Pajamas, 1929 (Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pinky, 1949 (Kazan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pinky, Elmyra &amp; the Brain, 1998 (Spielberg)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pinnacle Rider, 1926 (Wyler)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pinned to the Ground. See Auf’s kreuz gelegt, 1974</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pinocchio, 1972 (de Sica)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pioneers in Ingolstadt. See Pioniere in Ingolstadt, 1971</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pioniere in Ingolstadt, 1971 (Fassbinder)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pipes of Pan, 1922 (Hepworth)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pippa Passes, 1909 (Griffith; Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pir v Girmunik, 1941 (Pudovkin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pirañas, 1967 (García Berlanga)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Piranha, 1978 (Bartel; Corman; Dante; Sayles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pirata sono io!, 1940 (Fellini)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pirate, 1948 (Minnelli)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pirate Gold, 1912 (Griffith)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pirate Tape, 1982 (Jarman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pirates, 1985 (Polanski)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pirates Bold, 1916 (Franklin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pirates du rail, 1938 (von Stroheim)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pirate’s Fiancée, Dirty Mary. See Fiancée du Pirate, 1969</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pirate’s Gold, 1908 (Griffith)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pirates of Capri. See I pirati di Capri, 1949</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Príncipe Nuri, 1968 (Güney)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pirhanka II: The Spawning, 1981 (Cameron)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pirogov, 1947 (Kozintsev)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pirovka és a farkas, 1988 (Mészáros)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Piseň o sletu I, II, 1949 (Kurísmák)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Piti en el norte, 1942 (Feyder)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pisto, 1970 (Berri)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pit, 1914 (Tourneur)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pit. See Ana, 1957</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pit and the Pendulum, 1913 (Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pit and the Pendulum, 1961 (Corman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pit and the Pendulum. See Puits et le pendule, 1963</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pit Stop, 1969 (Corman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pitfalls of a Big City, 1923 (Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pithance Punje, 1914 (Phake)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pittori in città, 1955-59 (Taviani)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pittsburgh Documents, 1971 (Brakhage)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Piu bella serata della mia vita, 1972 (Scola)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Piyade Osman, 1970 (Güney)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pizhon, 1929 (Donskoi)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Pizza Triangle: A Drama of Jealousy, and Other Things. See Dramma della gelosia—Tutti i particolari in cronaca, 1970
Place for Lovers. See Amanti, 1968
Place in a Crowd, 1964 (Menzel)
Place in the Sun, 1963 (Dearden)
Place in the Sun
Place in a Crowd, 1964 (Menzel)
Place for Lovers.
Planet of the Apes, 1968 (Schaffner)
Plan Nine from Outer Space, 1956 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Plaisirs défendus, 1933 (Cavalcanti)
Plaisir d'Amour, 1994 (Kaplan)
Plaisir, 1952 (Ophüls)
Plainsman, 1937 (de Mille)
Plain Jane to the Rescue, 1982 (Woo)
Plain Clothes, 1988 (Coolidge)
Plain Clothes, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)
Plain and Fancy Girls, 1925 (Mccarey)
Plain Woman.
Plain Song, 1910 (Griffith)
Plague in Florence. See Pest in Florenz, 1919
Plain and Fancy Girls, 1925 (Mccarey)
Plain Woman. See Okame, 1927
Plainness, 1937 (de Mille)
Plaisir, 1952 (Ophüls)
Plaisirs d'Amour, 1994 (Kaplan)
Plaisirs défendus, 1933 (Cavalcanti)
Plan Nine from Outer Space, 1911 (Dwan)
Poisoned Flume, 1911 (Dwan)
Poisonous Arrow. See Giftpilen, 1915
Poisoned Flume, 1911 (Dwan)
Poison of Gold. See Guldets Gift, eller Lerhjertet, 1916
Poison of Gold.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
<th>Year</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Poisonous Love</td>
<td>See Fader og Søn</td>
<td>1911</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pojken och draken</td>
<td>1962 (Troell)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Poker Windows</td>
<td>1931 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pokerspiel</td>
<td>1966 (Kluge)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pokhozdeniya Oktjabrnik</td>
<td>1924 (Kozintsev)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Poko</td>
<td>1981 (Ouedraogo)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pokoj zwyczeczy wiat</td>
<td>1951 (Ivens)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Poloklenic</td>
<td>1955 (Polanski; Wajda)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Polokitel' Zhenskikh Serdets. See Leon Drey</td>
<td>1915</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pokušení</td>
<td>1957 (Kachaňa)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pola X</td>
<td>1999 (Carax)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Polden</td>
<td>1931 (Heifitz)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Potomok Chingis-khana</td>
<td>1928 (Barnet; Pudovkin)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Popiøj vo sne niajovou</td>
<td>1983 (Mikhalkov)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Polite Invasion</td>
<td>1966 (Zetterling)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Police</td>
<td>1934 (Gance)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Police!</td>
<td>1916 (Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Polizeifilm</td>
<td>1970 (Wenders)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Polizeiakte 909</td>
<td>1933 (Wiene)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Policefilm</td>
<td>1970</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pojken och draken</td>
<td>1962 (Troell)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Police</td>
<td>1970 (Gance)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Police of the Brno Industrial Fair.</td>
<td>See Polyekrán pro Mezinárodní výstavu práce Turin, 1961</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Police for International Exposition of Labor Turin.</td>
<td>See Polyekrán pro Mezinárodní výstavu práce Turin, 1961</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Police</td>
<td>1970 (Wenders)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Polin</td>
<td>1900/07 (Guy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Polity vo sne niajovou</td>
<td>1983 (Mikhalkov)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Politie Invasion</td>
<td>1966 (Zetterling)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Politician's Love Story</td>
<td>1909 (Griffith; Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Politicakten 1911</td>
<td>1931 (Heifitz)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Polowanie na mchuy</td>
<td>1969 (Wajda)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Poltergeist</td>
<td>1982 (Hooper; Spielberg)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Polustanok</td>
<td>1963 (Barnet)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Polyecrán pro International Exposition of Labor Turin.</td>
<td>See Polyekrán pro Mezinárodní výstavu práce Turin, 1961</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Polyecrán pro the Brno Industrial Fair.</td>
<td>See Polyekrán pro BVV, 1960</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Polyecrán pro BVV</td>
<td>1960 (Jireš)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Polyecrán pro Mezinárodní vůstavu práce Turin,</td>
<td>1961 (Jireš)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Polyester</td>
<td>1981 (Waters)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Polymer</td>
<td>1902 (Guy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pomodor</td>
<td>1961 (Olmi)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pompadourtasken</td>
<td>See Naar Fruen gaar paa Eventyr, 1913</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pömperly's Kampf mit dem Schneeschuh, 1922</td>
<td>Holger-Madsen</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pompier</td>
<td>1895 (Lumière)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pommen</td>
<td>1903/04 (Guy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pompong</td>
<td>1922 (Holger-Madsen)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pompon malencontreux 1</td>
<td>1903/04 (Guy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pont d'Énna</td>
<td>1900 (Lumière)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pont du Nord</td>
<td>1981 (Rivette)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pontcarral, Colonel d'Empire</td>
<td>1942 (Delannoy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pontormo and Punks at Santa Croce</td>
<td>1982 (Jarman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pony Express</td>
<td>1909 (Porter)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Poodle Springs</td>
<td>1998 (Pollack; Rafelson)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pool of London</td>
<td>1950 (Dearden)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Poor Cow</td>
<td>1967 (Loach)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Poor Fish</td>
<td>1924 (Mccarey)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Poor Fish</td>
<td>1931 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Poor Girl</td>
<td>1974 (Apted)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Poor Girl. See Chudá holka</td>
<td>1929</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Poor Little Rich Girl</td>
<td>1917 (Tourneur)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Poor Little Rich Girl</td>
<td>1965 (Warhol)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Poor Ones. See Zavallilar</td>
<td>1975</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Poor Relations</td>
<td>1919 (Vidor)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Poovanam</td>
<td>1969 (Benegal)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Papas in tabara de vara</td>
<td>1958 (Mészáros)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pope Must Die</td>
<td>1991 (Bartel)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pope Must Die. See Pope Must Die</td>
<td>1991</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Popeye</td>
<td>1980 (Altman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Popiøj i diamant</td>
<td>1958 (Wajda)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Popióly</td>
<td>1965 (Wajda)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Popyi</td>
<td>1935</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Popular Crafts. See Artesania popular, 1966</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Popular Power. See Poder popular, 1979</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Poverty and Other Delights.
Povere bimbe, 1923 (Pastrone)
Pouta, 1961 (Kachyňa)
Poussières d'amour, 1996 (Schroeter)
Pourquoi pas?, 1977 (Serreau)
Pourquoi, Israel?, 1973 (Lanzmann)
Pourquoi?, 1981 (Ouedraogo)
Pour vos beaux yeux, 1929-30 (Storck)
Pour une nuit d'amour, 1920/23 (Protazanov)
Pour un sou d'amour, 1931 (Grémillon)
Pour toutes, 1999 (Lelouch)
Pour secourer la salade, 1902 (Guy)
Pour le mistral, 1966 (Ivens)
Pour le mérite, 1950 (Staudte)
Pour être aimée, 1933 (Tourneur)
Poulet au vinaigre, 1984 (Chabrol)
Poulet, 1963 (Berri)
Poule fantaisiste, 1903 (Guy)
Poudre d'escampette, 1971 (de Broca)
Pottsville Palooka, 1931 (Sennett)
Potterymaker, 1925 (Flaherty)
Proud Marys, 1943 (LeRoy)
Pbs
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Primitive Lover</td>
<td>1922</td>
<td>(Franklin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Primrose Path</td>
<td>1940</td>
<td>(La Cava)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prince and the Pauper</td>
<td>1915</td>
<td>(Porter)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prince and the Pauper. See Seine Majestät das Bettelkind</td>
<td>1920</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prince of Arcadia. See Prinz von Arkadien</td>
<td>1932</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prince of Avenue A.</td>
<td>1920</td>
<td>(Ford)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prince of Darkness</td>
<td>1987</td>
<td>(Carpenter)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prince of Egypt</td>
<td>1998</td>
<td>(Brooks; Spielberg)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prince of Homburg. See Principe di Homburg</td>
<td>1997</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prince of the City</td>
<td>1981</td>
<td>(Lumet)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Princess Bride</td>
<td>1987</td>
<td>(Reiner)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Princess Chang Ping</td>
<td>1975</td>
<td>(Woo)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Princess from the Moon. See Taketori Monogatari</td>
<td>1987</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Princess of New York</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>(Hitchcock)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Princess Pongyola. See A hercégénő Pongyolaban</td>
<td>1914</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Princess with the Golden Star. See Princneza se zlatou hvězdou</td>
<td>1959</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Princess Yang Kwei-fei</td>
<td>1955</td>
<td>(Yokihi)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Princesse de Clèves</td>
<td>1960</td>
<td>(Coeau; Delannoy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Princesse Mandane</td>
<td>1928</td>
<td>(Dulac)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Princesse Dilemma. See Prinsesse Elena</td>
<td>1913</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Princneza se zlatou hvězdou</td>
<td>1959</td>
<td>(Fríč)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Principe di Homburg</td>
<td>1997</td>
<td>(Belloccio)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Principio y fin</td>
<td>1993</td>
<td>(Ripstein)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prins Gustaf</td>
<td>1944</td>
<td>(Zetterling)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prinsesse Elena. Holger-Madsen</td>
<td>1913</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Printemps</td>
<td>1909</td>
<td>(Feuillade)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prinz Kuckuck</td>
<td>1919</td>
<td>(Leni)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prinz Sami</td>
<td>1918</td>
<td>(Lubitsch)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prinz und Bettelkneb. See Seine Majestät das Bettelkind</td>
<td>1920</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prinz von Arkadien</td>
<td>1932</td>
<td>(Forst)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prinzessin und der Geiger. See Blackguard</td>
<td>1925</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prinzessin von Neutralien</td>
<td>1917</td>
<td>(Wiene)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prípad pro Selwyn</td>
<td>1968</td>
<td>(Weiss)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Priscilla and the Umbrella</td>
<td>1911</td>
<td>(Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Priscilla’s April Fool Joke</td>
<td>1911</td>
<td>(Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Priscilla’s Capture</td>
<td>1911</td>
<td>(Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prise de pouvoir par Louis XIV</td>
<td>1966</td>
<td>(Rossellini)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prisonero trece</td>
<td>1933</td>
<td>(de Fuentes)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prison, 1965 (Warhol)</td>
<td>1949</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prison Farm</td>
<td>1938</td>
<td>(Dmytryk)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prison Stories: Women on the Inside</td>
<td>1991</td>
<td>(Silver; Spheeris)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prison on the goffre</td>
<td>1912</td>
<td>(Feuillade)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prison Taint. See Den Acrelise</td>
<td>1916</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prison without Bars</td>
<td>1938</td>
<td>(Crichton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prisoner from Stambul. See Häfliing aus Stambul</td>
<td>1929</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prisoner No. 1. See Fange nr. 1, 1935</td>
<td>1913</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prisoner No. 113. See Fange Nr. 113, 1917</td>
<td>1917</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prisoner of Honor</td>
<td>1991</td>
<td>(Anderson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prisoner of Japan</td>
<td>1942</td>
<td>(Ulmer)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prisoner of Mars</td>
<td>1942</td>
<td>(Anger)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prisoner of Second Avenue</td>
<td>1975</td>
<td>(Schumacher)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prisoner of Shark Island</td>
<td>1936</td>
<td>(Ford)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prisoner of the Harem</td>
<td>1914</td>
<td>(Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prisoner of Zenda</td>
<td>1913</td>
<td>(Porter)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prisoner of Zenda. See Hannibád Tonár úr</td>
<td>1956</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prisoner My Son. See Mio Figlio</td>
<td>1947</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prisoner’s Daughter</td>
<td>1913</td>
<td>(Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Protectors</td>
<td>1967</td>
<td>(Scola)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Professia di un delitto. See Magiciens</td>
<td>1975</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Profit by Their Example</td>
<td>1964</td>
<td>(Loach)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Profound Desire of the Gods. See Kamigami no Fukuki Yokoobo</td>
<td>1968</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Profundo carmesí. See Hofrat Geiger</td>
<td>1947</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Professor Beware</td>
<td>1938</td>
<td>(Daves)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Professor de mi Señora</td>
<td>1930</td>
<td>(Flerey)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Professor Hannibal. See Hannibád tonár úr</td>
<td>1956</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Professor My Son. See Mio Figlio Professore</td>
<td>1947</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Professor’s Daughter</td>
<td>1913</td>
<td>(Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Professora</td>
<td>1995</td>
<td>(Besson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Professor’s Removal</td>
<td>1913</td>
<td>(Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Professor’s Wives</td>
<td>1933</td>
<td>(Sandrich)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Professor’s Affair</td>
<td>1959</td>
<td>(Walsh)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Professor’s Progress</td>
<td>1956</td>
<td>(Attenborough; Boulting)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Privilege</td>
<td>1990</td>
<td>(Rainer)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Privileged</td>
<td>1981</td>
<td>(Schlesinger)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Privy Councillor Geiger. See Hofrat Geiger</td>
<td>1947</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prize de beauté</td>
<td>1930</td>
<td>(Clair)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prize of Gold</td>
<td>1954</td>
<td>(Zetterling)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prizefighter and the Lady</td>
<td>1933</td>
<td>(Hawks)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prizzi’s Honor</td>
<td>1985</td>
<td>(Huston)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pro Patria</td>
<td>1914</td>
<td>(Blom)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Probation Wife</td>
<td>1919</td>
<td>(Franklin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Probation, 1975 (Leigh)</td>
<td>1953</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Problem Girls</td>
<td>1953</td>
<td>(Dupont)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Procès</td>
<td>1962</td>
<td>(Welles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Procès de Jeanne d’Arc. See Sefasone</td>
<td>1962</td>
<td>(Bresson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Process, 1972 (Brakhage)</td>
<td>1952</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Processo alla città</td>
<td>1952</td>
<td>(Rossi)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Processo Clémenceau</td>
<td>1918</td>
<td>(de Sica)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Proclamation. See Káldó</td>
<td>1964</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Procureur Hallers. See Andre.</td>
<td>1939</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prodigal Bridegroom</td>
<td>1926</td>
<td>(Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prodigal Knight. See Affairs of Anatol</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prodigal Son. See Tuhlaaapoiška</td>
<td>1993</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prodoloužený čas. See Jířeš</td>
<td>1984</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Producers</td>
<td>1968</td>
<td>(Brooks)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Production sélective du réseau à soixante-dix,</td>
<td>1934</td>
<td>(Storck)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Professional</td>
<td>1995</td>
<td>(Besson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Professione: Reporter</td>
<td>1975</td>
<td>(Antonioni)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Professor Bean’s Removal</td>
<td>1913</td>
<td>(Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Professor Beware</td>
<td>1938</td>
<td>(Daves)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Professor de mi Señora</td>
<td>1930</td>
<td>(Flerey)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Professor Hannibád. See Hannibád tonár úr</td>
<td>1956</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Professor My Son. See Mio Figlio</td>
<td>1947</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Professor’s Daughter</td>
<td>1913</td>
<td>(Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Profeta</td>
<td>1967</td>
<td>(Scola)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Profezia di un delitto. See Magiciens</td>
<td>1975</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Profit by Their Example</td>
<td>1964</td>
<td>(Loach)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Profound Desire of the Gods. See Kamigami no Fukuki Yokoobo</td>
<td>1968</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Profundo carmesí. See Hofrat Geiger</td>
<td>1947</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Progresso in agricultura</td>
<td>1957</td>
<td>(Olmi)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prohibito</td>
<td>1954</td>
<td>(Rossi)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Priore del vent</td>
<td>1926</td>
<td>(Clair)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Priore pour l’ombre</td>
<td>1960</td>
<td>(Astruc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Priroevstvost muzikal’nykh instrumentov</td>
<td>1930</td>
<td>(Barnet)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prikleti praznik</td>
<td>1958</td>
<td>(Makavejev)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prokliatiye millioni</td>
<td>1917</td>
<td>(Protazanov)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prokuror</td>
<td>1917</td>
<td>(Protazanov)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prolonged Time. See Prdloužený čas</td>
<td>1984</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Promesse de l’aube</td>
<td>1971</td>
<td>(Dassin)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Prométhée, 1908 (Feuillade)
Prométhée . . . banquier, 1921 (L’herbier)
Prometeus I-II, 1919 (Blom)
Promise, 1912 (Dwan)
Promise. See Versprechen, 1994
Promised at Dawn. See Promesse de l’aube, 1971
Promised Land. See Tierra prometida, 1973
Promised Land. See Ziemia obiecana, 1974
Property Man, 1914 (Chaplin; Sennett)
Prophecy, 1979 (Frankenheimer)
Prophecy. See Joslat, 1920
Props sur le cinéma, 1960 (Lelouch)
Propriétar non ê più un furto, 1973 (Petri)
Proschanie s Matyoroy, 1980 (Shepitko)
Proscrit, L’oubliette, 1912/13 (Feuillade)
Protsess o tryokh millionakh, 1926 (Barnet; Protazanov)
Protsess Mironova, 1919 (Vertov)
Protsess Eserov, 1922 (Vertov)
Protest at 48 Years Old.
Protegido, 1956 (Torre Nilsson)
Protégé.
Protector, 1999 (Corman)
Protection.
Provincial Actors. See Aktorzy prowincjonalni, 1979
Provinciale, 1980 (Goretta)
Proud Ones.
Proud Flesh, 1925 (Vidor)
Proud Rebel, 1958 (Curitz)
Prova de Fogo, 1980 (Diegues)
Prova d’orchestra, 1978 (Fellini)
Pruach, 1927 (Borzi)
Pulce Women, 1948 (Anger)
Pulcinella, 1969 (Marcello)
Pyramides bleues, 1988 (Marker)
Pytel blech, 1962 (Chytilová)
Pytlákova schovanka, 1949 (Frič)
Q & A, 1990 (Lumet)
Q-hec My Love. See Succès commercial, 1970
Qiang xing qi fei, 1984 (Chen Kaige)
Qin yong, 1989 (Zhang Yimou)
Qi Jin, 1983 (Xie Jin)
Qi Ju da guan si, 1992 (Zhang Yimou)
Quack Doctor, 1920 (Sennett)
Quadrule, 1950 (Godard; Rivette)
Quadrule réaliste, 1902 (Gay)
Quai des brumes, 1938 ( Carné)
Quai des Orfèvres, 1947 (Clouzot)
Quality Street, 1927 (Franklin; Lewin)
Quality Street, 1937 ( Stevens)
Quand le rideau se lève, 1957 (Lelouch)
Quand les feuilles tombent, 1911 ( Feuillade)
Quand minuit sonna, 1914 ( Feyder)
Quand tu vas la lettre, 1953 (Melville)
Quando a Carnaval chegar, 1972 (Diegues)
Quando de domine avevano la coda, 1970 (Wertmuller)
Quante volte . . . quella notte, 1972 (Bava)
Quarrelsome Anglers, 1898 (Hepworth)
Quarry Mystery, 1914 (Hepworth)
Quarta pagina, 1942 ( Fellini)
Quartet, 1948 (Zetterling)
Quartet, 1981 (Ivory)
Quartieri alti, 1944 (Castellani)
Quatro Juillet, 1932 (Clair)
Quatro Juillet, 1954 ( Gance)
Quatre Aventures de Reinette et Mirabelle, 1987 (Rohmer)
Quatre Cents Coups, 1959 (Demy; Truffaut)
Quatre Nuits d’un rêveur, 1971 (Bresson)
Quatres Vagabonds, 1931 ( Pick)
Quatres vérités, 1962 ( Clair)
Que el viento se llevar, 1980 (Alvarez)
Que hacer, 1970 (Ruiz)
Que la bête meure, 1969 (Chabrol; Pialat)
Que la fête commence, 1975 (Tavernier)
Qué me ha hecho yo para merecer esto?, 1972 (Buñuel)
Queen of Apollo, 1970 (Leacock)
Queen of Blood, 1966 (Corman)
Queen of Modern Times. See Jérome Perreau, héro des barricades, 1936
Queen of the Night. See Reina de la Noche, 1994
Queen’s Diamonds. See Three Musketeers, 1974
Queen’s Guards, 1961 (Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger)
Queen’s Necklace. See Affaire du collier de la Reine, 1946
Queen’s Secret. See Taina koroleovy, 1919
Quemada, 1969 (Poncecorvo)
Quel bando soto io, 1949 (Bava)
Quelle joie de vivre. See Che gioia vivere, 1961
Quelques Jours avec moi, 1988 (Sautet)
Quem e beta, 1972 (Pereira Dos Santos)
Quemando tradiciones, 1971 (Alvarez)
Quentin Crisp in America. See Resident Alien, 1991
Querelle, 1982 (Fassbinder)
Querelle de jardins, 1982 (Ruiz)
Querelle enfantille, 1895 (Lumière)
Quest of Life, 1916 (Goulding)
Qu’est-ce qu’on attend pour être heureux!, 1982 (Serreau)
Quanto sono parlavo di uomini, 1965 (Wertmuller)
Questi fantasmi, 1967 (Castellani)
Questi ragazzi, 1937 (de Sica)
Question, 1977 (Tavernier)
Question of Attribution, 1991 (Schlesinger)
Question ordinaire, 1969 (Miller)
Questions of Leadership, 1983 (Loach)
Qui me commande aux fusils, 1969 (Iverson)
Quick, 1932 (Siodmak)
Quick and the Dead, 1995 (Raimi)
Quick Billy, 1970 (Bailie)
Quick—König der Clowns. See Quick, 1932
Quicksands, 1923 (Hawks)
Quick, 1932 (Siodmak)
Qui commande aux fusils, 1969 ( Ivens)
Quiet Days in Clichy.
Quiet Day at the End of the War, 1970 (Mikhalkov)
Quiet American, 2001 (Pollack)
Quiet American, 1958 (Mankiewicz)
Quiet Man, 1952 (Ford)
Quiet Place in the Country. See Tranquillo posto di campagna, 1968
Quiet Please, 1933 ( Stevens)
Quiet Revolution, 1975 (Benegal)
Quiet Village. See Vaenuut kyla, 1997
Quills, 2000 (Kaufman)
Quilombo, 1984 (Diegues)
Quintet, 1979 (Altman)
Quién me quiere a mí?, 1936 (Buñuel)
Quicksands, 1923 ( Hawks)
Quiet, 1932 (Siodmak)
Quién me quiere a mí?, 1936 (Buñuel)
Quiet American, 1958 (Mankiewicz)
Quiet Man, 1952 (Ford)
Quick and the Dead, 1995 ( Raimi)
Quick Billy, 1970 (Bailie)
Quick—König der Clowns. See Quick, 1932
Quicksands, 1923 (Hawks)
Quick, 1932 ( Siodmak)
Quiome se quiere a mi?, 1936 (Buñuel)
Quiet American, 1958 (Mankiewicz)
Quiet American, 2001 (Pollack)
Quiet Day at the End of the War, 1970 ( Mikhalkov)
Quiet Days in Clichy. See Jours tranquilles a Clichy, 1990
Quiet Little Wedding, 1913 ( Sennett)
Quiet Man, 1952 (Ford)
Quiet Place in the Country. See Tranquillo posto di campagna, 1968
Quiet Please, 1933 ( Stevens)
Quiet Revolution, 1975 (Benegal)
Quiet Village. See Vaenuut kyla, 1997
Quills, 2000 (Kaufman)
Quilombo, 1984 (Diegues)
Quintet, 1979 (Altman)
Quixote, 1964/65 (Bailie)
Quiz Show, 1994 (Levinson; Scorsese)
Quivi, 2001 (Ferrara)
R-I.P., Rest in Pieces, 1997 (Jarmusch)
Raag Yaman Kalyan, 1972 (Benegal)
Raat Bhore, 1956 (Sen)
Raha lubvi, 1976 (Mikhalkov)
Rabbia, 1963 (Pasolini)
Rabbit Case. See Causa králick, 1979
Rabbit’s Moon. See Lune des Lapins, 1950
Rabid, 1976 (Cronenberg)
Rabid Dogs. See Cani arrabbiati, 1974
Rahindranath Tagore, 1961 (Ray)
Rabléek, 1913 (Curitz)
Racconti Romani, 1955 (Rosi; de Sica)
Race, 1914 (Sennett)
Race for a Bride, 1914 (Browning)
Racetrack, 1985 (Fleming)
Racetrack, 1985 (Wiseman)
Raduga, 1944 (Donskoi)
Rafle de chiens, 1904 (Guy)
Raffles, 1914 (Sennett)
Raiders of the Lost Ark, 1981 (Spielberg)
Rain, 1932 (Milestone)
Rain, 1929 (Dwan)
Rainbow, 1950 (Kurosawa)
Rain People, 1969 (Coppola)
Rain or Shine, 1930 (Capra)
Rain Man, 1988 (Lieberman)
Rainy Knight, 1925 (Sennett)
Raintree County, 1957 (Dmytryk)
Rain's Hat, 1978 (Zetterling)
Rainmaker, 1997 (Coppola)
Raining Stones, 1993 (Loach)
Raining in the Sky. See Kono ten no niji, 1958
Raining in the Mountain. See K’ung Shan Ling Y&udieresis;, 1979
Raining Stones, 1993 (Loach)
Rainmaker, 1997 (Coppola)
Rain’s Hat, 1978 (Zetterling)
Rain tree County, 1957 (Dmytryk)
Rainy Knight, 1925 (Sennett)
Raise Ravens. See Cria cuervos, 1976
Raise the Red Lantern. See Da hong deng long gao gao gua, 1991
Raising Arizona, 1987 (Coeen)
Raising Cain, 1992 (de Palma)
Raja Harishchandra, 1913 (Phalke)
Raja Harishchandra, 1916/17 (Phalke)
Rajel ti Hayati, 1961 (Chabine)
Rajtunk is mulik, 1960 (Mészáros)
Rake’s Progress, 1945 (Lauder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)
Rakki-san, 1952 (Ichikawa)
Rakudai wa shita keredo, 1930 (Ozu)
Rakugaki kokuban, 1959 (Shindo)
Rallure, 1947 (Sjöström)
Rally ‘round the Flag, Boys!, 1958 (Mccarey)
Rambler, Rose, 1991 (Coolidge)
Rambo: First Blood Part II, 1984 (Cameron)
Ramona and Julian. See Lonesome Cowboys, 1968
Ramance, 1992 (Friedkin)
Ramuncho, 1958 (de Broca)
Ran, 1957 (Kurosawa)
Ranch Detective, 1912 (Dwan)
Ranch Girl, 1911 (Dwan)
Ranch Life on the Range, 1912 (Dwan)
Ranchero’s Revenge, 1913 (Griffith)
Ranchman’s Marathon, 1912 (Dwan)
Ranchman’s Nerve, 1911 (Dwan)
Rancho alegre, 1940 (Fernández)
Rancho Notorious, 1952 (Lang)
Random Harvest, 1942 (Franklin; Leroy)
Random Hearts, 1999 (Pollack)
Rangha, 1976 (Kiarostami)
Rango, 1931 (Schoedsack)
Rank and File Film, 1971 (Loach)
Ranks and People. See Chinese in the city, 1929
Ranru no hata, 1974 (Yoshimura)
Ransom, 1996 (Howard)
Ransom. See Tengoku to jigoku, 1963
Rape of Czechoslovakia, 1939 (Weiss)
Rappel immédiat, 1939 (von Stroheim)
Rapt d’ enfant par les romanichels. See Volée par les bohémiens, 1904
Rapto, 1953 (Fernández)
Rascal Dazzle, 1981 (Lewis)
Rascal of Wolfish Ways, 1915 (Sennett)
Rashomon, 1950 (Kurosawa)
Raskolnikow, 1923 (Wiener)
Rasp, 1931 (Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger)
Raspberry Romance, 1925 (Sennett)
Raggio, 1953 (Fernández)
Rah Hal-e Yek, 1978 (Kiarostami)
Rage of Chinese, 1929 (Sennett)
Rage of the Turkish, 1928 (Sennett)
Raging Bull, 1980 (Spielberg)
Raging Bull, 1980 (Scorsese)
Ragtime, 1981 (Forman)
Rahal-e Yek, 1978 (Kiarostami)
Raiders of the Lost Ark, 1981 (Kasdan; Kaufman; Lucas; Spielberg)
Rail Rider, 1916 (Tournier)
Railrooder, 1965 (Keaton)
Railroaded, 1925 (Mann)
Railroaded, 1947 (Mann)
Rain, 1932 (Milestone)
Rain. See Regen, 1929
Rain. See Sadie Thompson, 1928
Rain Man, 1988 (Levinson)
Rain or Shine, 1930 (Capra)
Rain People, 1969 (Coppola)
Rainbow. See Raduga, 1944
Rainbow Dance, 1936 (Cavalcanti)
Rainbow Jacket, 1954 (Dearden)
Rainbow of This Sky. See Kono ten no niji, 1958
Raining in the Mountain. See K’ung Shan Ling Y&udieresis;, 1979
Raining Stones, 1993 (Loach)
Rainmaker, 1997 (Coppola)
Rain’s Hat, 1978 (Zetterling)
Rain tree County, 1957 (Dmytryk)
Rainy Knight, 1925 (Sennett)
Raise Ravens. See Cria cuervos, 1976
Raise the Red Lantern. See Da hong deng long gao gao gua, 1991
Raising Arizona, 1987 (Coeen)
Raising Cain, 1992 (de Palma)
Raja Harishchandra, 1913 (Phalke)
Raja Harishchandra, 1916/17 (Phalke)
Rajel ti Hayati, 1961 (Chabine)
Rajtunk is mulik, 1960 (Mészáros)
Rake’s Progress, 1945 (Lauder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)
Rakki-san, 1952 (Ichikawa)
Ready to Wear, 1995 (Altman)
Real Adventure, 1922 (Vidor)
Real End of the Great War. See Prawdziwy koniec wielkiej wojny, 1957
Real Estate Fraud, 1912 (Dwan)
Real Genius, 1985 (Cosolid)
Real Life, 1979 (Brooks; Spereri)
Real McTeague, 1994 (Altman)
Real Presence. See Présence réelle, 1983
Real Woman. See Mulher de verdade, 1954
Realismo socialista, 1973 (Ruiz)
Reap the Wild Wind, 1942 (de Mille)
Realismo social, 1973 (Rui)
Reckoning, 1908 (Griffith)
Red and the White.
Red and the Blue, 1983 (Loach)
Red and Blue, 1968 (Richardson)
Red and the Blue, 1953 (Loach)
Red and the White. See Csillagosok, katónák, 1967
Red Badge of Courage, 1951 (Huston)
Red Ball Express, 1952 (Boettcher)
Red Baron. See Von Richthofen and Brown, 1971
Red Beard.
Red Desert. See Deserto rosso, 1964
Red Dust, 1932 (Fleming; Hawks)
Red Elephant, 1982 (Tian Zhuangzhuang)
Red Ensign, 1934 (Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger)
Red Girl, 1908 (Griffith)
Red-headed Woman, 1932 (Lewin)
Red Heat, 1988 (Hill)
Red Heels. See Celimene, Poupée de Montmartre, 1925
Red Hot Rhythm, 1929 (McCarey)
Red Hot Romance, 1913 (Sennett)
Red Hot Romance, 1922 (Fleming)
Red House, 1947 (Daves)
Red Inn. See Auberge rouge, 1951
Red Italy, 1979 (Jarmusch)
Red Kimono, 1925 (Arzner)
Red Line 7000, 1965 (Hawks)
Red Lob. See Palombella rossa, 1989
Red Margaret, Moonshiner, 1913 (Dwan)
Red Mark, 1928 (Daves)
Red May. See Vörös Május, 1968
Red Pearls, 1930 (Lauder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)
Red Pony, 1949 (Aldrich; Milestone)
Red Psalm. See Még ké r a nép, 1972
Red Ribbon Blues, 1995 (Barl)
Red River, 1948 (Hawks)
Red Samson. See A vörös Sámsón, 1917
Red Shoes, 1948 (Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger)
Red Sorghum
Red Sorghum
Red Tent.
Red Tent. See Krasnaya palatka, 1971
Red Vase. See Kizil vazo, 1961
Red Vase. See Kizil vazo, 1961
Red Redemption, 1930 (Niblo)
Redes, 1934/35 (Zimmern)
Redhead Redhead, 1980 (Rogozhkin)
Redfizdes, 1985 (Szabó)
Redman and the Child, 1908 (Griffith)
Redman’s View, 1909 (Griffith)
Reed: Insurgent Mexico.
Reed: Mexico insurgente, 1973
Reef Fine, 1998 (Brakhage)
Reel Virginian, 1924 (Sennett)
Reencuentro, 1985 (Alvarez)
Reflections in a Golden Eye, 1967 (Coppola; Huston)
Reflections in the Dark, 1994 (Corman)
Reflections of Murder, 1974 (Badham)
Reflections on Black, 1955 (Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger)
Reflections on the VIème FESPACO, 1979 (Kaboré)
Reflections on Citizen Kane, 1991 (Frankenheimer)
Reflections on cinema. See Propos sur le cinéma, 1986
Reflections on Citizen Kane, 1991 (Frankenheimer)
Reflet de Claude Mercoeur, 1923 (Duvi er)
Refection, 1947 (Roos)
Reformation. See Et Laereaa, 1914
Reformation of Sierra Smith, 1912 (Dwan)
Reformers, 1913 (Griffith)
Refrain. See Refren, 1972
Refren, 1972 (Kieslowski)
Refugee, 1918 (Hepworth)
Refugiados de la Cueva del Muerto, 1983 (Alvarez)
Regain, 1937 (Pagnol)
Régard des autres. See Mirada de los otros, 1979
Regard Picasso, 1967 (Kaplan)
Regard sur le VIème FESPACO, 1979 (Kaboré)
Red Shoes, 1948 (Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger)
Regen, 1929 (Ivens)
Regeneration, 1915 (Walsh)
Régime sans pain, 1986 (Ruiz)
Réglement moderne, 1906 (Guy)
Registered Nurse, 1933 (Florez)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Regularly or Irregularly.</td>
<td>See Be Tartib ya Bedoun-e Tartib, 1981</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rehabilitation, 1905</td>
<td>(Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rehearsal, 1974</td>
<td>(Dassin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rehearsal, See Planbung, 1977</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reifezeugnis, 1982</td>
<td>(Petersen)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reign of Terror, 1949</td>
<td>(Mann)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reilly’s Wash Day, 1919</td>
<td>(Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reime izen, 1931</td>
<td>(Kimagusa)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reina de la Noche, 1994</td>
<td>(Ripstein)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Réincarnation de Serge Renaudier, 1920</td>
<td>(Duvivier)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reincarnation, See Urajloíc, 1920</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reindeer Games, 2000</td>
<td>(Frankenheimer)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reine Margot, 1954</td>
<td>(Gance)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reine Margot, 1994</td>
<td>(Berri)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reise ins Licht, 1973</td>
<td>(Kluge)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Réjeanne Padovani, 1973</td>
<td>(Arcand; Lefebvre)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reise nach Wien, 1973</td>
<td>(Kluge)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Réjaneous Padovani, 1973</td>
<td>(Arcand; Lefebvre)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Releasing the Spirits, 1990</td>
<td>(Asch)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Relentless: Mind of a Killer, 1994</td>
<td>(Badham)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Relentless Outlaw, 1912</td>
<td>(Dwan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Religieuse, 1966</td>
<td>(Rivette)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reluctant Debutante, 1958</td>
<td>(Minnelli)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reluctant Millionaire.</td>
<td>See Muž z neznáma, 1939</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reluctant Saint, 1962</td>
<td>(Dmytryk)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Remains of the Day, 1993</td>
<td>(Ivory)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Remarkable Mr. Kipps.</td>
<td>(Kipps)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rembrandt, 1936</td>
<td>(Korda)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rembrandt, Etc and Jane, 1976</td>
<td>(Brakhage)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rembrandt, Painter of Man.</td>
<td>See Rembrandt, schilder van de mens, 1957</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rembrandt, schilder van de mens, 1957</td>
<td>(Korda)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Remember Last Night, 1935</td>
<td>(Whale)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Remember Mary Magdalene, 1914</td>
<td>(Dwan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Remember My Name, 1978</td>
<td>(Altman; Rudolph)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Remember the Night, 1940</td>
<td>(Sturges)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Remember When, 1925</td>
<td>(Capra; Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reminiscences of a Journey to Lithuania, 1972</td>
<td>(Mekas)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Remorques, 1941</td>
<td>(Grémillon)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Removal Party.</td>
<td>See Sloane Square, A Room of One’s Own, 1976</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rencontre, 1914</td>
<td>(Feuillade)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rencontre avec le Président Ho Chi Minh, 1969</td>
<td>(Ivens)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rendez-vous, 1962</td>
<td>(Delannoy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rendez-vous, 1976</td>
<td>(Lelouch)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rendez-vous, 1985</td>
<td>(Tchéhiné)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rendez-vous d’Anna, 1978</td>
<td>(Akerman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rendez-vous de Cannes, 1929</td>
<td>(Becker)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rendez-vous de Juillet, 1949</td>
<td>(Becker)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rendez-vous de Paris, 1995</td>
<td>(Sturges)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rendezvous at Orchard Bridge, 1954</td>
<td>(Xie Jin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rendezvous with Annie, 1946</td>
<td>(Dwan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Renegade’s Heart, 1913</td>
<td>(Dwan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Renegades, 1930</td>
<td>(Fleming)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rennen, 1961</td>
<td>(Kluge)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rennifeber, 1917</td>
<td>(Dupont)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rent Jumpers, 1915</td>
<td>(Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Renunciation, 1909</td>
<td>(Griffith)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Repétition dans un cirque, 1903</td>
<td>(Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Repétition générale.</td>
<td>See Generalprobe, 1980</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Repas de bébé, 1805</td>
<td>(Lumiére)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Repas en famille, 1896-97</td>
<td>(Lumiére)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Replacement Killers, 1998</td>
<td>(Woo)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Réponses de femmes, 1975</td>
<td>(Varda)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Report.</td>
<td>See Gozaresh, 1977</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Report from Millbrook, 1966</td>
<td>(Varda)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Report from the Aleutians, 1943</td>
<td>(Huston)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reportage sur Orly, 1964</td>
<td>(Godard)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reportaje, 1953</td>
<td>(Fernández)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reporters, 1972 (Apted)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Repos du guerrier, 1962</td>
<td>(Vadim)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Representative. See Pratinidhi, 1964</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Republicans—The New Breed, 1964</td>
<td>(Leacock)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Repulsion, 1964 (Polanski)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Requiem, 1981 (Fábri)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Requiem, 1998 (Tanner)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Requiem for Those Who Overlived, 1992</td>
<td>(Jireš)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Requiescat, 1966 (Pasolini)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rescued by Rover, 1905</td>
<td>(Hepworth)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rescued from an Eagle’s Nest, 1907</td>
<td>(Porter)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rescuers: Stories of Courage: Two Women, 1997</td>
<td>(Bogdanovich)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Achraroums, 1978</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rest ist Schweigen, 1959</td>
<td>(Kautner)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Restaurant, 1965</td>
<td>(Warhol)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Restless Breed, 1957</td>
<td>(Dwan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Restless Spirit, 1913</td>
<td>(Dwan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Restless Wives, 1924</td>
<td>(La Cava)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Restless Years, 1958</td>
<td>(Kautner)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Restoration, 1909 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Resultado final, 1998</td>
<td>(Bardem)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Resurrection, 1909 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Resurrection. See En Opstandelse, 1914</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Résurrection, 1923 (L’herbier)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Resurrection, 1999 (Cronenberg)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Resurrection of Bronco Billy, 1970</td>
<td>(Carpenter)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Resurrection of Love.</td>
<td>See Ai ni yomigaaru hi, 1923</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Resurrezione, 1958 (Castellani)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Retenex-moi . . . ou je fais un malheur, 1984</td>
<td>(Lewis)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Retour à la raison, 1924</td>
<td>(Ray)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Retour à la terre, 1938</td>
<td>(Tati)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Retour à la vie, 1949</td>
<td>(Clouzot)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Retour à la vie. See Achraroums, 1978</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Retour d’Afrique, 1971</td>
<td>(Tanner)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Retour de Don Camillo, 1953</td>
<td>(Duvivier)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Retour de Manivel, 1916</td>
<td>(Feuillade)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Retour des champs, 1899/1900 (Guy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Retour d’un amateur de bibliothèque, 1983</td>
<td>(Ruiu)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Retour d’une promenade en mer, 1896-97 (Lumière)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Retour Madrid, 1967</td>
<td>(Kautner)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Retrato, 1963 (Solas)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Retrosceña, 1939 (Germi)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Retten sejrer, 1917 (Dupont)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Return. See Rückkehr, 1990</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Return Engagement, 1983</td>
<td>(Rudolph)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Return of Frank James, 1940 (Lang)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Return of Maxim. See Vorvraschemeny Maksima, 1937</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Return of the Edge of the World, 1978</td>
<td>(Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Return of the Heroes. See Aslanlarin dönüşi, 1966</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Return of the Jedi, 1983</td>
<td>(Kasdan; Lucas; Marquand)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Return of the Musketeers, 1989</td>
<td>(Lester)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Return of the Prodigal Son. See Awdat al Ibn al Dal, 1976</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Return of the Secaucus Seven, 1980 (Sayles)
Return of the Seven, 1965 (Fernández)
Return of the Texan, 1952 (Daves)
Return of Vasili Bortnikov. See Vozvrashchenia Vassilya Bortnikov, 1953
Return Ticket to Madrid. See Retour Madrid, 1967
Return to Glennascual, 1951 (Welles)
Return to Mayberry, 1986 (Howard)
Return to Reason. See Retour à la raison, 1924
Return to Treasure Island, 1954 (Dupont)
Return of the Texan, 1952 (Daves)
Return of the Secaucus Seven, 1980 (Sayles)
Richeieu, 1914 (Dwan)
Richter und sein Henker, 1975 (Ritt)
Riddance, Free Breathing. See Szabad lélegzet, 1973
Riddle of the Stinson, 1987 (Miller)
Ride Back, 1957 (Aldrich)
Ride for a Bride, 1913 (Sennett)
Ride in the Whirlwind, 1965 (Corman)
Ride Lonesome, 1959 (Boetticher)
Ride the High Country, 1962 (Peckinpah)
Ride with the Devil, 1999 (Lee)
Rideau cramoisi, 1953 (Astruc)
Rider on the Rain. See Passager de la pluie, 1969
Right Stuff, 1983 (Kaufman)
Right of Man.
Right of Youth. See Ungdommens Ret, 1911
Right Stuff, 1983 (Kaufman)
Rika, the Mixed-Blood Girl.
Ride the High Country, 1962 (Hawks)
Ride Lonesome, 1959 (Boetticher)
Ride in the Whirlwind, 1965 (Corman)
Ride with the Devil, 1999 (Lee)
Rideau cramoisi, 1953 (Astruc)
Rider on the Rain. See Passager de la pluie, 1969
Right Stuff, 1983 (Kaufman)
Rika, the Mixed-Blood Girl.
Ride the High Country, 1962 (Hawks)
Ride Lonesome, 1959 (Boetticher)
Ride in the Whirlwind, 1965 (Corman)
Ride with the Devil, 1999 (Lee)
1277
Ripa ruostuu, 1993 (Kaurismaki)
Ripe Earth, 1938 (Boulting)
Riport egy TSZ-elnökről, 1960 (Mészáros)
Riptide, 1934 (Goulding)
Rise and Fall of a Little Film Company. See Grandeur et Decadence d’un
Petit Commerce du Cinéma, 1986
Rise and Fall of Legs Diamond, 1960 (Boetticher)
Rise and Shine, 1941 (Dwan)
Rise of Jennie Cushing, 1917 (Tourneur)
Rise and Fall of a Little Film Company.
Riptide, 1934 (Goulding)
Ritorno di Don Camillo.
Ritorna Za-la-mort.
Rite of Passage, 1972 (Marshall)
River, 1951 (Renoir)
River Rats, 1984 (Apted)
River of Romance, 1929 (Cukor)
River of No Return, 1954 (Preminger)
River of Romance, 1929 (Cukor)
River One Two Three, 1966
River of No Return, 1954 (Preminger)
River of No Return, 1954 (Preminger)
River without Bridges II. See Hashi no nai kawa, 1970
River's Edge, 1957 (Dwan)
River's End, 1930 (Curtiz)
RKO 281, 1999 (Scott)
Road Back, 1937 (Whale)
Road Home. See Wo de fu qin mu qin, 1999
Road of Truth, 1956 (Gerasimov)
Road Sign. See Wegweiser, 1920
Road to Bresson. See De Weg waar Bresson, 1984
Road to Corinth. See Route de Corinthie, 1967
Road to El Dorado, 2000 (Branagh; Spielberg)
Road to Fort Alamo. See Strada per Fort Alamo, 1964
Road to Glory, 1926 (Hawks)
Road to Glory, 1936 (Hawks)
Road to God. See Kami e no michi, 1928
Road to Happiness. See Goldene Schmetterling, 1926
Road to Happiness. See Lykken, 1916
Road to Heaven. See Himlaspelet, 1942
Road to Hell. See Tol’ko Raz v Godu, 1914
Road to Mandalay, 1926 (Browning)
Road to Peace. See A béke ut ja, 1917

Road to Ruin, 1913 (Dwan)
Road to Success, 1913 (Dwan)
Road to the Heart, 1909 (Griffith)
Road to Wellville, 1994 (Parker)
Road to Yesterday, 1925 (de Mille)
Road Trip, 2000 (Spielberg)
Road Warrior. See Mad Max II, 1981
Roadhouse Queen, 1933 (Sennett)
Roadie, 1980 (Rudolph)
Roads across Britain, 1939 (Rotha)
Roads of Exile. See Chemines de l’Exile ou Les Dernières Années de
Jean-Jacques Rousseau, 1978
Roadways, 1937 (Cavalcanti)
Roaring Twenties, 1939 (Rossen; Walsh)
Roaring Years. See Anni ruggenti, 1962
Robber Spider. See Rovederkoppene, eller Den rode Enke, 1916
Robber Symphony, 1936 (Wiene)
Robby the Coward, 1911 (Griffith)
Robert et Robert, 1978 (Lelouch)
Robert Frost: A Lover’s Quarrel with the World, 1963 (Clarke)
Robert Macaire et Bertrand, 1904 (Guy)
Robert und Bertram, 1915 (Lubitsch)
Robert Zemeckis Presents: The Frighteners. See Frighteners, 1996
Robin and Marian, 1976 (Lester)
Robin Hood, 1922 (Dwan; Florey)
Robin Hood of El Dorado, 1936 (Wellman)
Robin Hood: Men in Tights, 1993 (Brooks)
Robinson Crusoe, 1910 (Blom)
Robinson Girl. See Robinsonka, 1974
Robinsonka, 1974 (Kachyňa)
Robocop, 1987 (Verhoeven)
Robotnicy 71 nic o nas bez nas, 1972 (Kieślowski)
Robust Romeo, 1914 (Sennett)
Rocco and His Brothers. See Rocco e i suoi fratelli, 1960
Rocco Papaleo. See Permette? Rocco Papaleo, 1971
Rock All Night, 1957 (Corman)
Rock in Reykjavik. See Rokk in Reykjavik, 1982
Rock ‘n Roll High School, 1979 (Barlet; Corman; Dante)
Rock ‘n Roll High School Forever, 1991 (Corman)
Rock ‘n Roll Kids, 1988 (Tian Zhuangzhuang)
Rock of Ages, 1902 (Porter)
Rock of Riches, 1916 (Weber)
Rockabye, 1932 (Cukor)
Rock-a-Bye Baby, 1958 (Lewis)
Rock-a-bye Baby, 1958 (Sturges)
Rock-a-bye Baby, 1958 (Tashlin)
Rock-a-bye Cowboy, 1933 (Stevens)
Rock-Cut Temples of Ellora, 1914/15 (Phalke)
Rocket Busters, 1938 (Bacon)
Rocket Man, 1954 (Rudolph)
Rocketeers, 1958 (Dearden)
Rocky Road, 1909 (Griffith)
Rocky Road to Dublin, 1968 (Huston)
Rodelkavalier, 1918 (Lubitsch)
Rodelkavalier, 1918 (Lubitsch)
Rodeo, 1929 (Sennett)
Rogopag, 1963 (Rossellini)
Rogie’s Gallery, 1913 (Sennett)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Directors</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Rogues of Paris, 1913</td>
<td>(Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rogues of Rajasthan. See Mewad No Mawali, 1930</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roi de coeur, 1966 (de Broca)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roi de Thulé, 1910 (Feuillade)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roi des Champs-Elysées, 1934 (Delannoy; Keaton)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roi des palaces, 1932 (Clouzot)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roi des parfums, 1910 (Gance)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roi Lear au village, 1911/13 (Feuillade)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rotk spokojnego slonca, 1984 (Zanussi)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Romance of the Western Hills, 1910 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Romance of the Redwoods, 1917 (de Mille)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roman Holiday, 1953 (Wyler)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roman Numeral Series, 1981 (Brakhage)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Romance, 1919 (Franklin)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Romance, 1999 (Breillat)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Romans of Paris</td>
<td>(Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Romance of a Will. See Kaerlighedens Triumf, 1914</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Romance of a Horsethief, 1971</td>
<td>(Polonsky)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Romance of a Jewess, 1908 (Griffith)</td>
<td>(Porter)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Romance of a War Nurse, 1908</td>
<td>(Griffith)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rosemary's Baby, 1968 (Cassavetes; Polanski)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rosen für Betina, 1956 (Pabst)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roma, città aperta, 1945 (Rossellini; Fellini)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roma città libera, 1946 (de Sica)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roma com a Chicago, 1969 (Cassavetes)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roma de los vientos, 1983 (Guzmán)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roma Luxemburg, 1986 (Von Trotta)</td>
<td>(Adlon)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roma, città aperta, 1945</td>
<td>(Rossellini; Fellini)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roma città libera, 1946 (de Sica)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roma, città libera, 1946 (de Sica)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Film Title</td>
<td>Directors</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>----------------------------------------</td>
<td>----------------------------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rosen für den Staatsanwalt, 1959</td>
<td>Staudte</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rösen på Tistelön, 1916</td>
<td>Sjöström</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roses de vie, 1962 Eustache</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roses for the Prosecutor. See Rosen für den Staatsanwalt, 1959</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rosewood, 1997 (Singleton)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rosier de Madame Husson, 1950</td>
<td>Pagnol</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rosière de Pessac , 1979 Eustache</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rosière de Pessac, 1969 Eustache</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rosita, 1923 (Lubitsch)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roslyn Romance (Is It Really True?): Intro. I and II, 1978</td>
<td>Baillie</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rosamond, 1962 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rosalind Russell, 1926</td>
<td>Dwan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rosalyn, 1987 (Coppola)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rosalind, 1971 (Spielberg)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rosario, 1986 (Stern)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rosa, See Rote, 1962</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rosario, 1973 (Spielberg)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rosario Pobre, 1979</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rosario Pobre, 1979</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rospigliosi, 1958 (Siodmak)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rosso segno della follia, 1969 (Bava)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rosso, 1985 (Kaurismaki)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rotation, 1949 (Staudte)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rote, 1962 (Käutner)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rothenburger, 1918 (Pick)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roti, 1942 (Mehoob Khan)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rotten to the Core, 1965 Boulting</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rotterdam-Europoort, 1966 (Ivens)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rotterdam-Europoort. See Rotterdam-Europoort, 1966</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roue de la fortune, 1938 (Storck)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roué, 1923 (Gance)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roué’s Heart, 1909 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rouge est mis, 1953 (Cocteau)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rouge et le blanc, 1971 (Autant-Lara)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rouge et le noir, 1954 (Autant-Lara)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rough and the Smooth, 1959 (Siodmak)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rough Cut, 1980 (Siegel)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rough House, 1917 (Keaton)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rough Idea of Love, 1929 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rough Riders, 1927 (Fleming)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rough Treatment. See Bez znecznienia, 1978</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roughhouse, 1988 (Coolidge)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roughly Speaking, 1945 (Curtiz)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roulement à billes, 1924 (Grémillon)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rouletabille I: Le Mystère de la chambre jaune, 1914</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rouletabille II: La Dernière Incarnation de Larson, 1914</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Round Midnight, 1986 (Tavernier)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Round Trip. See Volta redonda, 1952</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Round Up, 1920 (Keaton)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Round-up. See Szegénylegények, 1965</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rounders, 1914 (Chaplin; Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roustabout. See Property Man, 1914</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Route de Corinthe, 1967 (Chabrol)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Route de l’Ouest, 1965 (Arcand)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Route est belle, 1929 (Florey)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Route impériale, 1935 (L’herbier)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Route Napoléon, 1953 (Delannoy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rovedderkoppen, 1915 (Blom)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rovedderkoppen, eller Den røde Enke, 1916</td>
<td>Dreyer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Row-Boat Romance, 1914 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rower, 1955/57 (Polanski)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roxanne, 1987 (Scheptsi)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roxie Hart, 1942 (Wellman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roy Colt and Winchester Jack. See Roy Colt e Winchester Jack, 1970</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roy Colt e Winchester Jack., 1970 (Bava)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Royal Family of Broadway, 1930 (Cukor; Dmytryk)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Royal Flash, 1975 (Lester)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Royal Hunt. See Kungajakt, 1944</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Royal Hunt. See Kungajakt, 1944</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Royal Hunt. See Mrigaya, 1976</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Royal Razz, 1924 (Mccarey)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Royal Remembrances, 1929 (Hepworth)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Title</td>
<td>Director(s)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>--------------------------------------------</td>
<td>--------------------------------------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ruthless Romance</td>
<td>See Jestoki romans, 1984</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ruy Blas</td>
<td>1947 (Coecke)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ryan’s Daughter</td>
<td>1970 (Lean)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rynox</td>
<td>1931 (Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ryoju</td>
<td>1961 (Gosho)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rysopis</td>
<td>1964 (Skolimowski)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rzyhaipryzhaia</td>
<td>See Redhead Redhead, 1980</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sabu principal ladro.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sabte yar</td>
<td>1972 (Güney)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sabrina</td>
<td>1954 (Wilder)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sabishy mura</td>
<td>1924 (Kinugasa)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sabishiky ranbomono</td>
<td>1927 (Gosho)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sabotage</td>
<td>1936 (Hitchcock)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saboteur</td>
<td>1942 (Hitchcock)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sabotier du Val de Loire</td>
<td>1956 (Demy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sabrina, 1954 (Pollack)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sabtse yar</td>
<td>1972 (Güney)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sabú principio ladro.</td>
<td>See Buongiorno elefanté!, 1952</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sacco in Plyphac</td>
<td>1961 (Olmi)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sacred Protector</td>
<td>See Hito hada Kannon, 1937</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sacrifice</td>
<td>1908 (Griffith)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sacrifice. See Offret, 1986</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sacrifice d’honneur. See Veille d’armes, 1935</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sad Idiot. See Kansahiki hakuchi, 1924</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sad Sack</td>
<td>1957 (Lewis)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sad Story of a Barmaid. See Jokyu aishi, 1931</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saddle the Wind</td>
<td>1958 (Cassavetes)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sadgati</td>
<td>1981 (Ray)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sadie Thompson</td>
<td>1928 (Walsh)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sadko, 1962 (Corman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sadness of Autumn. See Pei Chih Ch’iu, 1977</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sado’s Ondeko-za</td>
<td>See Sadono kuni ondeo-za, 1976</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sedono kuni ondeo-za, 1976</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sagar, 1994 (Kiarostami)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Safari</td>
<td>1940 (Daves)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Safari, 1995 (Haynes)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Safe Cracker</td>
<td>See Kasaf, 1973</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Safe in Hell</td>
<td>1931 (Wellman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Safe in Jail</td>
<td>1913 (Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Safe Place</td>
<td>1971 (Welles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Safe Place, 1993 (Sayles)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Safety, 1918 (Franklin)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Safety First Ambrose, 1916 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>S’affranchir</td>
<td>1911/13 (Feuillade)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saga of Anatahan</td>
<td>See Anatahan, 1953</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saga of the Great Buddha. See Daibutsu kaigen, 1952</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saga of the Viking Women and Their Voyage to the Waters of the Great Sea Serpent, 1957 (Corman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sage-femme de premiere classe, 1902</td>
<td>1927 (Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sage of the Viking Women</td>
<td>See Sengoku gunto den, 1960</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sage of the Violet Women and Their Voyage</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sagebrush Phrenologist and The Elopements on Double L. Ranch, 1911 (Dwan)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sagolandet</td>
<td>1988 (Troell)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sahara</td>
<td>1943 (Korda)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saeheji Finds a Way. See Bakumatsu Taiyoden, 1958</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Said the Preacher</td>
<td>1972 (Apted)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saito: Year of the Cat, 1983 (Fears)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saishakku ichidai onna, 1952 (Mizoguchi)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sailor Beware, 1952 (Lewis)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sailor Beware!, 1956 (Clayton)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sailor from Gibraltar, 1967 (Richardson; Welles)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sailor of the King. See Single-handed, 1953</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sailor’s Lady, 1940 (Dwan)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sailor’s Luck, 1933 (Walsh)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sailor’s Sweetheart, 1927 (Bacon)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sailor’s Three Crowns. See Trois Couronnes du Matelot, 1982</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saimma. See Saimma Ilmio, 1981</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saimma Ilmio, 1981 (Kaurismaki)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saint Jack</td>
<td>1979 (Bogdanovich; Corman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saint Joan</td>
<td>1957 (Preminger)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saint-Tropez blues, 1960 (Chabrol)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saint-Tropez, devoir de vacances, 1952 (Resnais)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saintly Switch, 1999 (Bogdanovich)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sait-on jamais?, 1957 (Vadim)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sakpata, 1958 (Rouch)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sakur Tai</td>
<td>8-6, 1988 (Shindo)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sakura Dance</td>
<td>See Sakura Ondo, 1934</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sakura no mori no mankai no shita, 1975 (Shinoda)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sakura Ondo, 1934 (Gosho)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sal gorda</td>
<td>1984 (Stillman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sálztracený kroka, 1960 (Jireš)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salaam Bombay!</td>
<td>1988 (Nair)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salaam Cinema</td>
<td>1994 (Makhmalbaf)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saladin. See Nasar Salah el Dine, 1963</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salaires de la peur, 1952 (Clouzot)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salamander. See Salamandre, 1971</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salamandre, 1971 (Tanner)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salavat Yulayev</td>
<td>1941 (Protanov)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sale comme un ange, 1990 (Breilat)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sale desti!, 1987 (Chabrol)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sale histoire, 1977 (Eustache)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salem’s Lot: The Movie, 1979 (Hooper)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salesman, 1969 (Maysles)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salesmanship. See Az eladás művészete, 1960</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salüat Maria!, 1970 (Heifitz)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salle des pas perdus, 1960 (Jireš)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sally, 1925 (Leroy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sally, Irene and Mary, 1925 (Goulding)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sally of the Sawdust, 1925 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salmonberries</td>
<td>1989 (Adlon)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salò o le 120 giorni di Sodoma, 1975 (Bellochio; Pasolini)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salò—The 120 Days of Sodom. See Salò o le 120 giorni di Sodome, 1975</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salome, 1971 (Schroeter)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salome, 1978 (Almodóvar)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salome, 1980 (Brakhage)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salome and Delilah, 1963 (Warhol)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salome vs. Shenandoah, 1919 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salón México</td>
<td>1948 (Fernández)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salón nautique, 1954 (de Broca)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salónique. nid d’espions.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salesmanship. See Mademoiselle Docteur, 1936</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salomonwagen E 417, 1939 (Käutner)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salt to the Devil. See Gives Us This Day, 1949</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salto Mortale, 1931 (Dupont)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salto nel vuoto, 1979 (Bellochio)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salty O’Rourke, 1944 (Walsh)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Saturday Afternoon, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)
Saturday Night, 1922 (de Mille)
Saturday Night and Sunday Morning, 1960 (Reisz; Richardson)
Saturday Night Fever, 1977 (Badham)
Saturday, Sunday, Monday, 1990 (Wertmuller)
Saturday the 14th Strikes Back, 1988 (Corman)
Saturday’s Children, 1929 (La Cava)
Saturday’s Shopping, 1903 (Hepworth)
Saturday, 1936 (Cavalcanti; Grierson)
Saturday's Children, 1929 (La Cava)
Saturday the 14th Strikes Back, 1988 (Corman)
Saturday, July 27, 1963. See Saturday Afternoon, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)
Saturday Afternoon, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)
Saturday, July 27, 1963. See Saturday Afternoon, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)
Saturday Afternoon, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)
Saturday Afternoon, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)
Saturday Afternoon, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)
Saturday Afternoon, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)
Saturday Afternoon, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)
Saturday Afternoon, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)
Saturday Afternoon, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)
Saturday Afternoon, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)
Saturday Afternoon, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)
Saturday Afternoon, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)
Saturday Afternoon, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)
Saturday Afternoon, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)
Saturday Afternoon, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)
Saturday Afternoon, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)
Saturday Afternoon, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)
Saturday Afternoon, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)
Saturday Afternoon, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)
Saturday Afternoon, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)
Saturday Afternoon, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)
Saturday Afternoon, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)
Saturday Afternoon, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)
Saturday Afternoon, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)
Saturday Afternoon, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)
Saturday Afternoon, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)
Saturday Afternoon, 1925 (Capra; Sennett)
DIRECTORS, 4th EDITION

Seconda volta, 1996 (Moretti)
Seconds, 1966 (Frankenheimer)
Secours aux naufragés, 1903/04 (Guy)
Secret Agent, 1936 (Hitchcock)
Secret beyond the Door, 1948 (Lang)
Secret Ceremony, 1968 (Losey)
Secret Cinema, 1969 (Bartel)
Secret de Mayerling, 1949 (Delannoy)
Secret defense, 1998 (Rivette)
Secret du forçat, 1913 (Feuillade)
Secret Garden, 1993 (Coppola; Holland)
Secret Honor, 1984 (Altman)
Secret Honor: A Political Myth. See Secret Honor, 1984
Honor, 1984
Secret Invasion, 1964 (Corman)
Secret Journey: Lives of Saints and Sinners, 1994 (Ruiz)
Secret Man, 1917 (Ford)
Secret Marriage. See Ett Hemligt giftermaål, 1912
Secret of a Wife. See Tsuma no himitsu, 1924
Secret of Blood. See Tajemství krve, 1953
Secret of Roan Inish, 1994 (Sayles)
Secret of Santa Vittoria, 1969 (Kramer)
Secret of St. Job Forest. See A Szentjóbi erdö titka, 1917
Secret of the America Dock. See Geheimnis des Amerika-Docks, 1917
Secret of the Old Forest. See Segreto del bosco vecchio, 1993
Secret of the Pavilion. See Pavillonens Hemmelighed, 1916
Secret of the Sahara. See Steel Lady, 1953
Secret of the Writing Desk. See Chatollets Hemmelighed, eller Det gamle chatol, 1913
Secret Partner, 1960 (Dearden)
Secret Policeman’s Private Parts, 1984 (Gilliam)
Secret Treaty. See Den tredie Magt, 1912
Secrets, 1924 (Borzage)
Secrets, 1933 (Borzage)
Secrets. See Secrets of the Lone Wolf, 1941
Secrets and Lies, 1996 (Leigh)
Secrets d’alcôve, 1953 (de Sica)
Secrets de la prestidigitation dévoilés, 1904 (Guy)
Secrets of a Beauty Parlor, 1917 (Sennett)
Secrets of a Soul. See Geheimnesse einer Seele, 1925
Secrets of the Lone Wolf, 1941 (Dmytryk)
Secrets of Women. See Kvinnors väntan, 1952
Section speciale, 1975 (Costa-Gavras)
Secuestrador, 1958 (Torre Nilsson)
Seddok, l’erede di Satana, 1960 (Bava)
Sedmikrásky, 1966 (Chytilová)
Sedotta e abbandonata, 1964 (Germi)
Seducation of Mimi. See Mimi metallurgio ferito nell’onore, 1972
Seducción, 1983 (Ripstein)
Seduced and Abandoned. See Sedotta e abbandonata, 1964
Seducer. See Yuri Nagornyi, 1915
Seduction. See Yuwaku, 1948
See, Saw, Seems, 1967 (Vanderbeek)
See You at Mao. See British Sounds, 1969
See You in the Morning, 1989 (Pakula)
See You Tomorrow. See Do Widzenia do Jutra, 1960
See You Tonight, 1933 (Sennett)
Seed, 1931 (Stahl)
Seedling. See Ankur, 1974
Seeing Nellie Home, 1924 (Mccarey)
Seeing Stars, 1938 (Boulting)
Seeking Refuge in God. See Este’aze, 1984
Seelenverkäufer, 1919 (Pick)

FILM TITLE INDEX

Seemabaddha, 1971 (Ray)
Segno di Venere, 1955 (de Sica)
Segretaria per tutti, 1932 (de Sica)
Segreto del bosco vecchio, 1993 (Olmi)
Segunda Declaracion de la Habana, 1965 (Alvarez)
Sehnsucht, 1920 (Murnau)
Sehnsucht der Veronika Voss, 1982 (Fassbinder)
Sehnsucht nach Afrika, 1939 (Sirk)
Sei donne per l’assassino, 1964 (Bava)
Sei no kigen, 1967 (Shindo)
Seigneurs de la forêt, 1958 (Storck; Welles)
Seikatsu to mizu, 1952 (Hani)
Seine a rencontré Paris, 1957 (Ivens)
Seine Frau, die Unbekannte, 1923 (Christensen)
Seine Majestät das Bettelkind, 1920 (Korda)
Seine neue Nase, 1916 (Lubitsch)
Seine schöne Mama. See Flucht der Schönheit, 1915
Seishu Hanaoka’s Wife. See Hanaoko Seishu no tsuma, 1967
Seishun, 1925 (Gosho)
Seishun kaidan, 1955 (Ichikawa)
Seishun no kiryu, 1942 (Kurosawa)
Seishun no yume ima izuko, 1932 (Ozu)
Seishun no yumeji, 1923 (Mizoguchi)
Seishun zankoku monogatari, 1960 (Oshima)
Seishun Zenigata Heiji, 1953 (Ichikawa)
Seitensprünge, 1930 (Wilder)
Seizure, 1974 (Stone)
Sekishun-cho, 1959 (Kinoshita)
Sekretär der Königen, 1916 (Wiene)
Selbe and So Many Others. See Selbé et tant d’autres, 1982
Selbé et tant d’autres, 1982 (Faye)
Selena, 1997 (Nava)
Self-Portrait, 1990 (Mekas)
Selinunte, 1951 (Birri)
Selma, Lord, Selma, 1999 (Burnett)
Selon Mathieu, 2000 (Breillat)
Selskaya uchitelnitsa, 1947 (Donskoi)
Selskiy vrach, 1951 (Gerasimov)
Seltsame Nacht, 1926 (Holger-Madsen)
Seltsame Nacht der Helga Wansen, 1928 (Holger-Madsen)
Seltsamen Abenteuer des Herrn Fridolin B, 1948 (Staudte)
Selva de fuego, 1945 (de Fuentes)
Semaine de vacances, 1981 (Tavernier)
Semero smelykh, 1936 (Gerasimov)
Seminole, 1953 (Boetticher)
Semya tarassa. See Nepokorenniye, 1945
Senba-zuru, 1953 (Yoshimura)
Send Me No Flowers, 1964 (Jewison)
Sendung des Yoghi, 1921 (Lang)
Sengoku gunto den, 1937 (Kurosawa)
Sengoku guntoden, 1960 (Kurosawa)
Seni kaybederesen, 1961 (Güney)
Senka no hate, 1950 (Yoshimura)
Senor muy viejo con unas alas enormes, 1988 (Birri)
Señora de Nadie, 1982 (Bemberg)
Sens de la mort, 1921 (Clair; Protazanov)
Sensation. See Szenzáció, 1922
Sensation Seekers, 1927 (Weber)
Sense and Sensibility, 1995 (Lee; Pollack)
Sense of History, 1992 (Leigh)
Senseless, 1998 (Spheeris)
Senso, 1954 (Rosi; Visconti; Zefﬁrelli)
Senso to Seishun, 1991 (Imai)
Sensual Paradise. See Together, 1971
Sentinels of Silence, 1971 (Welles)
Senza pietà, 1948 (Fellini; Lattuada)

1285


Separation, 1994 (Berri)
Separation. See Separation, 1994

Seppuku, 1962 (Kobayashi)
Sept fois femmes. See Woman Times Seven, 1967
Sept morts sur ordonnance, 1975 (Serceau)
Sept P., Cuis., S. de B. . . . a saisir, 1984 (Varda)
Sept Péchés capitaux, 1962 (Berri; Chabrol; de Broca; Demy; Godard; Vadim)
Sept péchés capitaux, La nativité, 1910/11 (Feuillade)
Sexual Meditation: Faun’s Room Yale, 1972 (Brakhage)
Sexual Meditation: Hotel, 1972 (Brakhage)
Sexual Meditation No. 1: Motel, 1972 (Brakhage)
Seven.
Seven Chances, 1925 (Keaton)
Seven-Colored Ring. See Nanairo yubi wa, 1918
Seven Days in January. See 7 Dias de enero, 1979
Seven Days in May, 1963 (Frankenheimer)
Seven Days’ Leave, 1930 (Cromwell)
Seven Days to Noon, 1950 (Boultling)
Seven Deadly Sins. See 7 Péchés capitaux, 1952
Seven Deadly Sins. See Sept Péchés capitaux, 1962
Seven Footprints to Satan, 1929 (Christensen)
Seven Kinds of Trouble. See Belanin yedi türlüşi, 1969
Seven Madmen. See Siete locos, 1973
Seven Men from Now, 1956 (Boetticher)
Seven Miles from Alcatraz, 1942 (Dmytryk)
Seven Minutes, 1971 (Meyer)
Seven No-goods. See Yedi belalılar, 1970
Seven of Clubs. See Makkhetes, 1916
Seven Pieces for Black and White Cinema. See Sept pièces pour cinéma noir et blanc, 1983
Seven Samurai. See Shichinin no samurai, 1954
Seven Sinners, 1925 (Milestone)
Seven Sinners, 1936 (Launder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)
Seven Songs for Malcolm X, 1993 (Lee)
Seven Sweethearts, 1942 (Borzage)
Seven Wild Lions. See Yedi da in aslani, 1966
Seven Women, 1966 (Ford)
Seven Women, Seven Sins, 1987 (Akerman)
Seven Women of Various Ages. See Siedem kobiet w różnym wieku, 1978
Seven Year Itch, 1955 (Wilder)
Seventeenth Parallel. See Dix-septième parallèle, 1968
Seventh Age. See De Gamle, 1947
Seventh Anniversary of the Red Army. See Zagranichnii pokhod sudov Baltiiskogo flota kresire “Aurora” i uchebnogo sudna “Komsomolts,” August 8, 1925, 1925
Seventh Cross, 1944 (Zinnemann)
Seventh Day, 1909 (Griffith)
Seventh Day, 1922 (Goulding)
Seventh Heaven, 1927 (Borzage)
Seventh Room. See Siódmy Pokój, 1995
Seventh Seal. See Det sjunde inseget, 1957
Seventh Sin, 1957 (Minnelli)
Seventy-five Years of Cinema Museum, 1972 (Daves)
Seventy-five Years of Cinema Museum, 1972 (Daves)
Several Days in the Life of I. I. Oblomov. See Oblomov, 1980
Several Friends, 1969 (Burnett)
Severed Heads.
Severe Head, 1971 (Attenborough)
Severed Heads. See Cabezas cortadas, 1970
Severo Torelli, 1914 (Feuillade)
Seven Waves Away. See Abandon Ship, 1956
Seven Women, 1966 (Ford)
Seven Wild Lions. See Yedi da in aslani, 1966
Seven Wild Lions. See Yedi da in aslani, 1966
Seven Women.
Sex Comes and Goes.
Ship Safety. See Watertight, 1943
Ship That Died of Shame, 1955 (Attenborough; Dearden)
Shipmates, 1931 (Daves)
Shipmates Forever, 1935 (Borzage; Daves)
Shipyard, 1933 (Rotha)
Shirasagi, 1957 (Kinugasa)
Shirayuri wa nageku, 1925 (Mizoguchi)
Shipyard, 1933 (Rotha)
Shipmates Forever, 1935 (Borzage; Daves)
Shipmates, 1931 (Daves)
Ship That Died of Shame, 1955 (Attenborough; Dearden)
Shirin’s Wedding. See Shirins hochzeit, 1976
Shirins hochzeit, 1976 (Sanders-Brahms)
Shipyard, 1933 (Rotha)
Shipmates Forever, 1935 (Borzage; Daves)
Shipmates, 1931 (Daves)
Ship That Died of Shame, 1955 (Attenborough; Dearden)
Shock. See Schock, 1977
Shock Corridor, 1963 (Fuller)
Shock Troops. See Homme de trop, 1968
Shockproof, 1949 (Fuller; Sirk)
Shocking Miss Pilgrim, 1946 (Goulding)
Shock Troops. See Schock, 1977
Showboat, 1936 (Whale)
Showgirl in Hollywood, 1930 (Leroy)
Showgirls, 1995 (Verhoeven)
Showman, 1962 (Maysles)
Shoko, 1948 (Kinoshita; Kurosawa)
Shoah, 1985 (Schock, 1977)
Show Me a Strong Town and I’ll Show You a Strong Bank, 1966
Show People, 1928 (Chaplin; Vidor)
Showtime, 1999 (Bogdanovich)
Showgirls, 1995 (Verhoeven)
Showgirls, 1995 (Verhoeven)
Showgirl in Hollywood, 1930 (Leroy)
Showgirls, 1995 (Verhoeven)
Showman, 1962 (Maysles)
Show Me a Strong Town and I’ll Show You a Strong Bank, 1966
Shot, 1996 (Ward)
Shot in the Excitement, 1914 (Sennett)
Shotgun Wedding, 1963 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Shotguns That Kick, 1914 (Sennett)
Should a Husband Forgive, 1919 (Walsh)
Should a Mother Tell?, 1915 (Ingram)
Should Crooners Marry, 1933 (Stevens)
Should Husbands Be Watched?, 1925 (Mccarey)
Should Husbands Marry, 1926 (Sennett)
Should Married Men Go Home?, 1928 (Mccarey)
Should Sleepwalkers Marry, 1927 (Sennett)
Should Women Drive?, 1928 (Mccarey)
Shoulder, 1964 (Warhol)
Shoulder Arms, 1918 (Chaplin)
Shout, 1978 (Skolimowski)
Show, 1927 (Browning)
Show Leader, 1966 (Bailie)
Show Me a Strong Town and I’ll Show You a Strong Bank, 1966
Si c’était à refaire, 1976 (LeLouch)
Si j’avais quatre dromadaires, 1966 (Marker)
Si j’étais un espion, 1967 (Blier)
Si le soleil ne revenais pas, 1987 (Goreta)
Si l’Empereur savait ça, 1930 (Feyder)
Si signora, 1942 (Lattuada)
Si tous les gars du monde . . . , 1955 (Clouzot)
Si usted no puede, yo sí, 1950 (Buñuel)
Si Versailles m’était conté, 1953 (Welles)
Si fabulé, 1927 (Gosho)
Si j’etais à refaire, 1976 (LeLouch)
Si j’avais dix ans, 1966 (Marker)
Si j’était un espion, 1967 (Blier)
Si le soleil ne revenais pas, 1987 (Goreta)
Si l’Empereur savait ça, 1930 (Feyder)
Si signora, 1942 (Lattuada)
Si tous les gars du monde . . . , 1955 (Clouzot)
Si usted no puede, yo sí, 1950 (Buñuel)
Si Versailles m’était conté, 1953 (Welles)
Si vous ne m’aimez pas, 1916 (Feuillade)
Si vous ne m’aimez pas, 1916 (Feuillade)
Si vous ne m’aimez pas, 1916 (Feuillade)
Siamo donne, 1953 (Rossellini; Visconti)
Siamo tutti in libertà provvisoria, 1972 (de Sica)
Si vous ne m’aimez pas, 1916 (Feuillade)
Sibiriaki, 1940 (Kuleshov)
Siberian Lady Macbeth. See Sibirskaja Ledi Magbet, 1972
Siberians. See Sibirians, 1965
Siberiaka, 1940 (Kuleshov)
Sibirska Ledi Magbet, 1972 (Wajda)
Sibirska Ledi Magbet, 1972 (Wajda)
Sicari, 1961 (Germi)
Sicilia!, 1999 (Straub, Jean-Marie, And Danièle Huillet)
Sicilian, 1987 (Cimino)
Sicilian, 1987 (Cimino)
Sicily, 1961 (Germi)
Sicilia!, 1999 (Straub, Jean-Marie, And Danièle Huillet)
Sicilian, 1987 (Cimino)
Side Lights of the Sawdust Ring. See Det store Hjerte, 1924
Side Street, 1950 (Mann)
Sidewalks of New York, 1931 (Keaton)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Sidney's Joujoux, 1900 (Guy)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sie und die Drei, 1922 (Dupont)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Siedem kobiet w różnym wieku, 1978 (Kieszowski)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sieg des Glaubens, 1933 (Riefenstahl)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Siegfrieds Tod, 1924 (Lang)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Siempre Tuya, 1950 (Fernández)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Siedem kobiet w różnym wieku, 1978 (Kieszowski)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sign of Leo. See Signe du lion, 1959</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sign of the Cross, 1932 (de Mille)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sign of the Gladiator. See Nel segno di Roma, 1958</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sign of the Lion. See Signe du lion, 1959</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sign of the Pagan, 1954 (Sirk)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sign Please, 1933 (Laudner, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sign of the Gladiator. See Nel segno di Roma, 1958</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sign of Leo. See Signe du lion, 1959</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sign of the Cross, 1932 (de Mille)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sign of the Gladiator. See Nel segno di Roma, 1958</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sign of the Lion. See Signe du lion, 1959</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sign of the Pagan, 1954 (Sirk)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sign Please, 1933 (Laudner, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sign of the Cross, 1932 (de Mille)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sign of the Gladiator. See Nel segno di Roma, 1958</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sign of the Lion. See Signe du lion, 1959</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sign of the Pagan, 1954 (Sirk)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sing, Young People!</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Singin’ in the Rain, 1952 (Donen)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Singing Blacksmith, 1938 (Ulmer)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Singing Boxer, 1933 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Singing Fool, 1928 (Bacon)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Singing Lesson. See Raz, dwa, trzy, 1967</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Singing Marine, 1937 (Berkeley; Daves)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Singing Plumber, 1932 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Singing the Blues in Red. See Fatherland, 1986</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Single-handed, 1953 (Boulting; Schlesinger)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Singaree, 1910 (Blom)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Singh the Dancer, 1976 (Armstrong)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Singaree, 1910 (Blom)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sima o caolho, 1952 (Cavalcanti)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Simple Case. See Prostoi slučai, 1932</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Simple Charity, 1910 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Simple Formality, 1995 (Polanski)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Simple Love, 1912 (Dwan)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Simple Men, 1992 (Hartley)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Simple Plan, 1998 (Raimi)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sin. See Grekh, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sin of Martha Qued, 1921 (Dwan)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sin That Was His, 1920 (Goulding)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sinful Davey, 1969 (Huston)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sing a Song of Sex. See Nihon shunka-ko, 1967</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sing, Bing, 1933 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sing, Young People!. See Utae, wakodo-tachi, 1963</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sing Your Way Home, 1945 (Mann)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sings Your Way Home, 1945 (Mann)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Singer and the Dancer, 1976 (Armstrong)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silver City, 1968 (Wenders)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silver Cord, 1933 (Cromwell)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silver Double Suicide. See Gin-Shinju, 1956</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silver Gout. See Az ezust krecské, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silver Lode, 1954 (Dwan)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silver-plated Gun, 1913 (Dwan)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silver Queen, 1942 (Bacon)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silver River, 1948 (Walsh)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silver Wings, 1922 (Ford)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silverado, 1985 (Kasdan)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silver plating Gun, 1913 (Dwan)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silverado, 1985 (Kasdan)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silverado, 1985 (Kasdan)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silencio, 1966 (Fernández)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silent Aesthetic. See Monde du silence, 1956</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silent of the Pagan, 1954 (Sirk)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silent Madness. See Monde du silence, 1956</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silent Sound Sense Stars Subotnick and Sender, 1962 (Brakhage)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silent Touch, 1992 (Zamussi)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silent Village, 1943 (Wood; Edward D., Jr.)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silent Wife, 1948 (Xie Jin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silent World. See Monde du silence, 1956</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silenzio dei prosciutti, 1994 (Brooks; Carpenter; Dante; Landis)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silk 2, 1990 (Corman)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silk Hosiery, 1921 (Nibli)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silk Stocking Girl, 1924 (Browning)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silk Stocking Sal. See Silk Stocking Girl, 1924</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Sir Arne’s Treasure. See Herr Arnes Pengar, 1919
Sir Arthur Conan Doyle’s The Lost World. See Lost World, 1998
Sir Thomas Lipton out West, 1913 (Sennett)
Siren of Impulse, 1912 (Griffith)
Sirène du Mississippi, 1969 (Miller; Truffaut)
Sirène, 1907 (Feuillade)
Sirène la lune, 1973
Slightly Scarlet, 1930 (Mankiewicz)
Slightly Scarlet, 1956 (Dwan)
Slikovnica pčelara, 1958 (Makavejev)
Sirius Remembered, 1959 (Brakhage)
Sirène des tropiques, 1927 (Buñuel)
Sister Angelica.
Six Days.
Six Days, Six Nights.
Six Days, Six Nights. See À la folie, 1994
Six Degrees of Separation, 1993 (Schepisi)
Six Days. See 6-dageslöbet, 1958
Six Days, Six Nights. See À la folie, 1994
Sixe of a Kind, 1934 (Mccarey)
Six Juin à l’aube, 1945 (Grémillon)
Six in Paris. See Paris vu par . . . , 1965
Six Hundred Million People Are with You, 1958 (Ivens)
Sixième Face du Pentagone, 1968 (Marker)
Sixth of June at Dawn. See Six Juin à l’aube, 1945
Sixth of the World. See Sheshata chast’ mira, 1926
Six Chimneys, 1919 (Sennett)
Six Shooter Andy, 1918 (Franklin)
Six-Shooter Collection, 1934 (Grierson)
Six-Thirty Collection, 1934 (Grierson)
Six of a Kind, 1934 (Mccarey)
Six of a Kind, 1934 (Mccarey)
Six of a Kind, 1934 (Mccarey)
Skaebnens Veje, 1913 (Holger-Madsen)
Skaebnebaeltet, 1912 (Christensen)
Sjeckas li se Dolly Bell?, 1981 (Kusturica)
Sjakal, 1979 (Holger-Madsen)
Skyline, 1928 (Florey)
Skyfacts and Brassieres, 1963 (Meyer)
Skepp till Indialand, 1947 (Bergman)
Skepp som motas, 1915 (Holger-Madsen)
Skepp, 1968 (Bergman)
Skeppet, 1915 (Holger-Madsen)
Skepp till Indialand, 1947 (Bergman)
Skepp som motas, 1915 (Holger-Madsen)
Sleep, 1963 (Warhol)
Sleep My Love, 1948 (Sirk)
Sleepers, 1996 (Levinson)
Sleeping Car Murders. See Compartiment tueurs, 1966
Sleeping Tiger, 1954 (Losey)
Sleepless in Seattle, 1993 (Reiner)
Sleepwalk, 1984 (Jarmusch)
Sleepers, 1996 (Levinson)
Sleeping Beauty. See Nemureru bijo, 1968
Sleeping Car Murders. See Compartiment tueurs, 1966
Sleeping Car Murders. See Compartiment tueurs, 1966
Skepp, 1968 (Bergman)
Skepp till Indialand, 1947 (Bergman)
Skepp som motas, 1915 (Holger-Madsen)
Skeppen, 1968 (Bergman)
Skeppet, 1915 (Holger-Madsen)
Skepp till Indialand, 1947 (Bergman)
Skepp som motas, 1915 (Holger-Madsen)
Skepp, 1968 (Bergman)
Skepp till Indialand, 1947 (Bergman)
Skepp som motas, 1915 (Holger-Madsen)
Skeppen, 1968 (Bergman)
Skepp till Indialand, 1947 (Bergman)
Skepp som motas, 1915 (Holger-Madsen)
Skepp, 1968 (Bergman)
Skepp till Indialand, 1947 (Bergman)
Skepp som motas, 1915 (Holger-Madsen)
Skeppen, 1968 (Bergman)
Skepp till Indialand, 1947 (Bergman)
Skepp som motas, 1915 (Holger-Madsen)
Skepp, 1968 (Bergman)
Skepp till Indialand, 1947 (Bergman)
Skating.
So This Is College, 1929 (Daves)
So This Is Hamlet?, 1923 (La Cava)
So This Is Harris, 1933 (Sandrich)
So This Is Hollywood. See So This Is Harris, 1933 (Sandrich)
So This Is Hamlet?, 1923 (La Cava)
So This Is London, 1933 (Grierson)
So This Is Love, 1928 (Capra)
So This Is New York, 1948 (Aldrich; Kramer)
So This Is Paris, 1926 (Lubitsch)
So Well Remembered, 1947 (Dmytryk)
So You Won’t Squawk, 1941 (Keaton)
So You Won’t Talk, 1935 (Launder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)
So You Won’t Squawk, 1941 (Keaton)
So Well Remembered, 1947 (Dmytryk)
So This Is Paris, 1926 (Lubitsch)
So This Is New York, 1948 (Aldrich; Kramer)
So This Is London, 1933 (Grierson)
Soapsuds Lady, 1925 (Sennett)
Soap Opera, 1964 (Warhol)
Society Secrets, 1921 (Browning; Mccarey)
Society for Sale, 1918 (Borzage)
Society and Chaps, 1912 (Dwan)
Società Ovesticino-Dinamo, 1955 (Olmi)
Socialist Realism. See Realismo socialista, 1973
Social Secretary, 1916 (von Stroheim)
Sobrevivientes, 1979 (Gutiérrez Alea)
Sobre horas extras y trabajo voluntario, 1973 (Gómez)
Sobre el problema fronterizo entre Kampuchea y Vietnam, 1978 (Alvarez)
Soberanos del cielo, 1960 (Villar)
Soldier’s Daughter Never Cries, 1998 (Ivory)
Soil, 1974 (Brakhage)
Sol no se puede tapar con un dedo, 1976 (Alvarez)
Sol over Danmark, 1936 (Holger-Madsen)
Socrates. See Socrate, 1970 (Rossellini)
Soiuzkinozhurnal No. 77, 1941 (Vertov)
Soiuzkinozhurnal No. 87, 1941 (Vertov)
Soir de Rafle, 1931 (Clouzot)
Soft Fruit, 1999 (Campion)
Soft Skin. See Peau douce, 1964
Soft Beds and Hard Battles, 1974 (Boulting)
Soft Skin. See Peau douce, 1964
Soldiers of Fortune, 1919 (Dwan)
Soldiers of Misfortune, 1914 (Sennett)
Soldier’s Pay. See A Soldier’s Plaything, 1930
Soldier’s Plaything, 1930 (Curtiz)
Soldier’s Story, 1944 (Wilder)
Sole anche di notte, 1990 (Taviani)
Sole sorge ancora, 1946 (Poncecorvo)
Soledad de los dioses, 1985 (Alvarez)
Soleil dans l’oeil, 1961 (Godard)
Soleil de l’ile de Pâques, 1971 (Guerra)
Soleil noir, 1918 (Gance)
Soleil, 1974 (Brakhage)
Some Like It Hot, 1939 (Dmytryk)
Some Like It Hot, 1959 (Wilder)
Some Mother’s Son, 1996 (Sheridan)
Some Nerve, 1913 (Sennett)
Some Nerve. See Gentlemen of Nerve, 1914
Some Nerve, 1913 (Sheridan)
Some Nerve. See Gentlemen of Nerve, 1914
Some Scout, 1927 (Sandrich)
Somebody to Love, 1994 (Tarantino)
Somebody up There Likes Me, 1956 (Wise)
Someday, 1935 (Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger)
Someo...
Son of Dracula, 1943 (Siodmak)
Son of Fate. See Mästertjuven, 1915
Son of Fury, 1942 (Cromwell)
Son of Gascogne, 1994 (Leconte)
Son of His Father, 1925 (Fleming)
Son of India, 1931 (Autant-Lara; Feyder)
Son of India, 1962 (Mehboob Khan)
Son of Kong, 1933 (Schoedsack)
Son of Lifeboat, 1949 (Lewis)
Son of Paleface, 1951 (de Mille; Tashlin)
Son of Spellbound, 1949 (Lewis)
Son of Satan, 1924 (Micheaux)
Son of the "Star".
Son of Spellbound, 1949 (Lewis)
Son of the “Star”. See Hijo del crack, 1953
Son Tarasa, 1919 (Kuleshov)
Son of Fate.
Son of Fate.
Son of Paleface, 1951 (de Mille; Tashlin)
Son of Spellbound, 1949 (Lewis)
Son of Satan, 1924 (Micheaux)
Son of Spellbound, 1949 (Lewis)
Son of the “Star”. See Hijo del crack, 1953
Son Tarasa, 1919 (Kuleshov)
Sonderung, 1964 (Hirsch)
Song about Flowers.
Song 27 (Part II) Rivers, 1969 (Brakhage)
Sondagsbarn, 1992 (Bergman)
Sonate à Kreutzer, 1956 (Rohmer)
Sonatas, 1959 (Bardem)
Sonar Kella, 1974 (Ray)
Sonata di Roma, 1936 (Dwan)
Sonata di Roma, 1936 (Dwan)
Sonata de Paris, 1951 (Beroard)
Sorcerer. See Yosco, 1963
Sorcerer from Outer Space, 1962-70 (Carpenter)
Sorceror’s Apprentice, 1955 (Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger)
Sorciere, 1988 (Belloccio)
Sorokin, 1927 (Protazanov)
Sorokin, 1927 (Protazanov)
Sororiety Girl, 1957 (Corman)
Sororiety House Massacre 2, 1992 (Corman)
Sorprasso, 1962 (Scola)
Sorrow Is Only for Women. See Kanashimi wa onna dakeni, 1958
Sorrowful Example, 1911 (Griffith)
Sorrowful Shore, 1913 (Griffith)
Sorrows of the Unfaithful, 1910 (Griffith)
Sortie de secours, 1970 (Chabrol)
Sortie de Secours, 1983 (van Dortmael)
Sortie des usines, 1894 (Lumière)
Sortie des usines, 1895 (Lumière)
Sortie du port. See Barque sortant du port, 1895
Soseji gakkyu, 1956 (Hani)
Soshun, 1956 (Ozu)
Sosie, 1915 (Feuillade)
Söster Cecilies Offer. See Hvor Sorgerne glemmes, 1916
Souliers de satin. See O Sapato de cetim, 1985
Souliers de Saint-Pierre. See Shoes of the Fisherman, 1968
Souls for Sale, 1923 (Chaplin)
Souls under the Sun. See Æmes au soleil, 1981
Sonna Kouma, 1975 (Rouch)
Sound and the Fury, 1959 (Ritt)
Sound Barrier, 1952 (Lean)
Sound of Music, 1965 (Wise)
Sound of Trumpets. See Posto, 1961
Sound Sleeper, 1909 (Griffith)
Sounder, 1971 (Ritt)
Source, 1900 (Guy)
Source de beauté. See Fioritures, 1916
Soupite, 1913 (Tourneur)
Souriantes Madame Beudet, 1923 (Dulac)
Sous le soleil de Satan, 1987 (Berri; Pialat)
Sous les toits de Paris, 1930 (Clair)
Sous un autre soleil, 1955 (de Broca)
Souste, 1960 (Nemec)
South. See Sud, 1999
South Advancing Women. See Nanshin Josei, 1939
South Central, 1992 (Stone)
South Limburg. See Zuid Limburg, 1929
South Sea Adventure, 1959 (Welles)
South Sea Rose, 1929 (Dwan)
South Wind. See Minami ni kaze, 1942
South Wind: Sequel. See Minami no kaze, 1942
Southwestern Comfort, 1981 (Hill)
Southern Star, 1968 (Welles)

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

South

Sou
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Directors</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Sporck’schen Jäger</td>
<td>1926</td>
<td>Holger-Madsen</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sport Sport Sport</td>
<td>1971</td>
<td>Mikhailov; Shepitko</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sporting Fame</td>
<td>1950</td>
<td>Donskoi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sports Illustrated: Swimsuit '92</td>
<td>1992</td>
<td>Maysles</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spring</td>
<td>1917</td>
<td>King</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sprengbagger 1010</td>
<td>1929</td>
<td>Zinnemann</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spotkanie na Atlantyku</td>
<td>1979</td>
<td>Kawalerowicz</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spot in the Shade</td>
<td>1949</td>
<td>Lewis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sposa bella</td>
<td>1968</td>
<td>Zeffirelli</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sports Illustrated: Swimsuit '92</td>
<td>1992</td>
<td>Maysles</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sportivnaya slava</td>
<td>1950</td>
<td>Donskoi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sporting Life</td>
<td>1925</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sporting Life</td>
<td>1939</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sporting Fame</td>
<td>1939</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sporck’schen Jäger</td>
<td>1926</td>
<td>Holger-Madsen</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spring in Wintertime</td>
<td>1917</td>
<td>King</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spring in the Pastures of Dalby</td>
<td>1962</td>
<td>Grierson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spring in the Land of Waters</td>
<td>1955</td>
<td>Xie Jin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spring Dreams</td>
<td>1949</td>
<td>Grierson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spring Fever</td>
<td>1927</td>
<td>Lewin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spring Fever</td>
<td>1927</td>
<td>Lewin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spring in Moscow</td>
<td>1955</td>
<td>Xie Jin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spring in the Pastures of Dalby</td>
<td>1962</td>
<td>Grierson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spring in Wintertime</td>
<td>1917</td>
<td>King</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spring Lock</td>
<td>1917</td>
<td>King</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squall</td>
<td>1929</td>
<td>Korda</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squall</td>
<td>1929</td>
<td>Korda</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squall</td>
<td>1929</td>
<td>Korda</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squad</td>
<td>1917</td>
<td>King</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squaddie</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Del Ruth</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
| Squaddie | 1921 | Del R
FILM TITLE INDEX  DIRECTORS, 4th EDITION

Starquest II, 1997 (Corman)
Starry Is the Night, 1989 (Woo)
Stars. See Estrella, 1976
Stars and Bars, 1917 (Sennett)
Stars Are Beautiful, 1974 (Brakhage)
Stars in My Crown, 1950 (Tourneur)
Stars Look Down, 1939 (Reed)
Stars of Eger. See Egri csillagok, 1923
Stars over Broadway, 1935 (Berkeley)
Stars Shine. See Es leuchten die Sterne, 1938
Starship Troopers, 1997 (Verhoeven)

State of Siege. 1978 (Ward)
State of Things. See Stand der Dinge, 1982
State Secret, 1950 (Launder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)
State of the Night. See Vokzal dla dvoish, 1983
State, 1905 (Guy)
Statue Parade, 1937 (Rotha)
Statues meurent aussi, 1953 (Marker; Resnais)
Station. See Train Station, 1977
State of Things. See Etat de siège, 1973
State of Siege, 1978 (Ward)
State of the Union, 1948 (Capra)
State of Siege. See Stand der Dinge, 1982
Statue. See Train Station, 1977
Stealth, 1998 (Rich)
Steel Helmet, 1950 (Fuller)
Steel Hearts. See Stalone serca, 1948
Steel Helmet, 1950 (Fuller)
Steel King’s Last Wish. See Det mørke Punkt, 1913
Steel Lady, 1953 (Dupont)
Steel Rolling Mill, 1914 (Sennett)
Steel Town. See Zoceleni, 1950
Steel Trap, 1952 (Aldrich)
Steel: A Whole New Way of Life, 1971 (Benegal)
Stella, 1955 (Cacoyannis)
Stella Dallas, 1937 (Vidor)
stellar, 1993 (Brakhage)
Stellenweise glatteis, 1975 (Petersen)
Stenning i April, 1947 (Henning-Jensen)
Stěnata, 1957 (Forman)
Step Forward, 1922 (Sennett)
Stepkids. See Big Girls Don’t Cry . . . They Get Even, 1992
Stepmother. See Svend Dytings Hus, 1908
Stepmother, 1912 (Dwan)
Steppa, 1962 (Lattuada)
Stepping Out, 1919 (Biblo)
Sterbende Perlen, 1917 (Dupont)
Sterbende Stadt. See Den dvendte stad, 1921
Stereo, 1969 (Cronenberg)
Sterile Cuckoo, 1969 (Pakula)
Sterilized, 1948 (Wellman)

Still of the Night, 1982 (Benton)
Still We Live. See Dokkoi iktiiru, 1951
Stille nach dem Schluß, 1999 (Schlondorff)
Stillness. See Spokoj, 1976
Stilt. See Zancos, 1984
Stimme aus dem Ather, 1939 (Käutner)
Stimme Österreichs, 1949 (Forst)
Stingaroo, 1934 (Wellman)
Sto je radnički savjet?, 1959 (Makavejev)
Stockbroker. See För sin kärleks skull, 1913
Stockez et conservez les grains, 1978 (Kaboré)
Stockholm, 1977 (Zetterling)
Stój, 1965 (Roos)
Stolen Affections. See Révoltée, 1947
Stolen Bride, 1927 (Korda)
Stolen by Gypsies, 1905 (Porter)
Stolen Desire. See Nusumareta yokujo, 1958
Stolen Frontier. See Uloupená hranice, 1947
Stolen Glory, 1912 (Sennett)
Stolen Goods, 1924 (McCarey)
Stolen Holiday, 1936 (Curtiz)
Stolen Jewels, 1908 (Griffith)
Stolen Kisses. See Baisers volés, 1968
Stolen Love. See Nusumareta koi, 1951
Stolen Magic, 1915 (Sennett)
Stolen Purse, 1913 (Sennett)
Stolen Ranch, 1926 (Wyler)
Stolz der Firma, 1914 (Lubitsch)
Storm Clouds of Venus. See Planeta Burg, 1966
Storm in Summer, 2000 (Wise)
Storm of Passion. See Stürme der Leidenschaft, 1932
Storm over Asia.
Storm over the Nile, 1955 (Korda)
Storm in Summer, 2000 (Wise)
Storm of Passion. See Stürme der Leidenschaft, 1932
Storm over Asia. See Potomok Chingis-khan, 1928
Storm over Lisbon, 1944 (von Stroheim)
Storm over the Nile, 1955 (Korda)
Stormfågeln, 1914 (Dreyer)
Storm of Life. See Livets Storme, 1910
Stormy Petrel. See Stormfågeln, 1914
Storms of Love. See Chikamatsu monogatari, 1954
Story in the Rocks. See Paleontologie, 1959
Story of a Love Affair. See Cronaca di un amore, 1950
Story of a Man. See Historien om en Mand, 1944
Story of a Penny. See Egy krajcár története, 1917
Story of a Potter. See Potterymaker, 1925

Storie scellerate, 1973 (Pasolini)
Stories of the Revolution. See Historias de la revolución, 1960
Still We Live. See Dokkoi iktiiru, 1951
Still of the Night, 1982 (Benton)
Still We Live. See Dokkoi iktiiru, 1951
Still We Live. See Dokkoi iktiiru, 1951
Still We Live. See Dokkoi iktiiru, 1951
Still We Live. See Dokkoi iktiiru, 1951
Still We Live. See Dokkoi iktiiru, 1951
Still We Live. See Dokkoi iktiiru, 1951
Still We Live. See Dokkoi iktiiru, 1951
Still We Live. See Dokkoi iktiiru, 1951
Story of a Story, 1915 (Browning)
Story of Adele H., See Histoire d’Adèle H., 1975
Story of Dr. Carver, 1938 (Zinnemann)
Story of Dr. Ehrlich’s Magic Bullet, 1940 (Huston)
Story of Dr. Wassell, 1944 (de Mille)
Story of Esther Costello, 1938 (Zinnemann)
Story of Four Loves, See Yottsu no koi no monogatari, 1947
Story of G.I. Joe, 1945 (Aldrich; Wellman)
Story of Gilbert and Sullivan, 1953 (Lauder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)
Story of Gösta Berling. See Gösta Berlings saga, 1923
Story of Israel. See Geschichte des kleinen Muck, 1953
Story of Mandy. See Mandy, 1952
Story of Michelangelo, 1949 (Flaherty)
Story of My Loving Wife. See Aisai monogatari, 1951
Story of Private Pooley, 1962 (Anderson)
Story of Pure Love. See Junai monogatari, 1957
Story of Qi Ju. See Qi Ju da guan si, 1992
Story of Sue San. See Yú T’ang Ch’un, 1962
Story of Tank Commander Nishizumi. See Nishizumi sanshacho den, 1940
Story of the Count of Monte Cristo. See Comte de Monte Cristo, 1961
Story of the Last Chrysanthemum. See Zangiku monogatari, 1939
Story of the London Fog, 1926 (Hitchcock)
Story of the Turbulent Years. See Povest plămâniykh let, 1961
Story of the Wheel, 1934 (Jennings)
Story of Three Loves, 1953 (Franklin; Minnelli)
Story of Tosca. See Tosca, 1941
Story of Us, 1999 (Reiner)
Story of Will Rogers, 1952 (Curtiz)
Story of Women. See Affaire des femmes, 1989
Story of X, 1998 (Bielow)
Stout Heart but Weak Knees, 1914 (Sennett)
Strange Affair of Uncle Harry. See Uncle Harry, 1945
Strange Affection. See Scamp, 1957
Strange Birds, 1930 (Sennett)
Strange Boarders, 1938 (Lauder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)
Strange Cargo, 1940 (Borzage; Mankiewicz)
Strange Case of the Cosmic Rays, 1957 (Capra)
Strange Days, 1995 (Bigelow)
Strange Illusion, 1945 (Ulmer)
Strange Impersonation, 1946 (Mann)
Strange Lady in Town, 1955 (Leroy)
Strange Love of Martha Ivers, 1946 (Aldrich; Milestone; Rossen)
Strange Love of Molly Louvain, 1932 (Curtiz)
Strange Meeting, 1909 (Griffith)
Strange Story of Oyuki. See Bokuto Kidan, 1993
Strange Woman, 1946 (Ulmer)
Stranger, 1946 (Huston; Welles)
Stranger among His Own People. See Svoi sredi chougikh, 1974
Stranger among Us, 1992 (Lumet)
Stranger at Coyote, 1912 (Dwan)
Stranger in Between. See Hunted, 1951
Stranger in My Arms, 1958 (Küntner)
Stranger in Our House, 1978 (Craven)
Stranger on Horseback, 1955 (Tourneur)
Stranger on the Prowl, 1952 (Losely)
Stranger on the Run, 1967 (Siegel)
Stranger than Paradise, 1984 (Jarmusch)
Stranger than Paradise, Part One. See New World, 1982
Strangers in the Night, 1944 (Mann)
Strangers of the Night, 1923 (Nibo)
Strangers on a Honeymoon, 1936 (Lauder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)
Strangers on a Train, 1951 (Hitchcock)
Stranger’s Return, 1933 (Vidor)
Strangling Threads, 1922 (Hepworth)
Strangulation Blues, 1980 (Carax)
Straniero, 1967 (Visconti)
Stranicky zhisni, 1948 (Barnet)
Strapped, 1993 (Apted)
Strasphere, 1983 (Zefferelli)
Strass et compagnie, 1916 (Gance)
Strategia del ragno, 1969 (Bertolucci)
Strategic Air Command, 1955 (Mann)
Strategija svrake, 1987 (Kusturica)
Strausskiste, 1999 (Adlon)
Strauss’s Great Waltz. See Waltzes from Vienna, 1933
Straviniský Portrait, 1964 (Leacock)
Straw, 1971 (Peckinpah)
Straw Man, 1916 (Franklin)
Strawberries and Gold, 1980 (Coolidge)
Strawberry and Chocolate. See Fresa y chocolate, 1993
Strawberry Blonde, 1941 (Walsh)
Strawfire. See Strohfeuer, 1971
Stray Bullet, 1998 (Corman)
Stray Dog. See Nora inu, 1949
Stream. See Sodrášnan, 1964
Streamers, 1983 (Altman)
Streamlined Swing, 1938 (Keaton)
Street Angel, 1928 (Borzage)
Street Girls, 1974 (Corman; Levinson)
Street Meat, 1959 (Vanderbeek)
Street of Chance, 1930 (Cromwell)
Street of Childhood. See Barndommens gade, 1986
Street of No Return, 1989 (Fuller)
Street of Shame. See Akansen chitai, 1956
Street of Sin, 1928 (Stiller)
Street Scene, 1931 (Vidor)
Street Scenes, 1970 (Scorsese)
Street Sketches. See Gaijo no suketchi, 1925
Streetcar Named Desire, 1952 (Kazan)
Streets, 1990 (Corman)
Streetfighter. See Hard Times, 1975
Streets of Fire, 1984 (Hill)
Streets of Laredo, 1948 (Wood, Edward D., Jr.)
Street Walking’, 1985 (Corman)
Streghé, 1966 (de Sica; Eastwood; Pasolini; Visconti)
Stredja, 1959 (Jireš)
Strejk, 1915 (Sjöström)
Strength of the Hungarian Soil. See A Magyár föld ereje, 1916
Stress es tres, tres, 1968 (Saura)
Stress Is Three. See Stress es tres, tres, 1968
Stress of Youth. See Trápeni, 1961
FILM TITLE INDEX

Strictly Dishonorable, 1931 (Stahl; Sturges)
Strictly Dishonorable, 1951 (Sturges)
Strictly Secret Previews. See Pfisně tajné premiéry, 1967
Strike, Soviet! See Shagai, Soviét!, 1926
Striden går vidare, 1941 (Sjöström)
Strife of the Party, 1931 (Sandrich)
Strijd zonder einde. See Rival World, 1955
Strike, 1909 (Porter)
Strike. See Stachka, 1925
Strike the Monster on Page One. See Sbatti il mostro in prima pagina, 1972
Strike up the Band, 1940 (Berkeley)
String of Pearls, 1911 (Griffith)
Stripped to Kill, 1987 (Corman)
Stripped to Kill II, 1989 (Corman)
Stripper, 1963 (Schaffner)
Strip Tease II, 1997 (Corman)
Strohfeuer, 1971 (Schlöndorff; Von Trotta)
Stromboli, terra di dio
Stromboli.
Stroj, 1962 (Chytilová)
Strongest, 1920 (Walsh)
Stronger than the Sun, 1977 (Apted)
Stronger than Death, 1920 (Guy)
Stronger Man, 1911 (Dwan)
Stronger Man, 1926 (Capra)
Strong Boy, 1929 (Ford)
Strongman Ferdinand.
Strong Woman and Weak Man.
Strong Revenge, 1913 (Sennett)
Submarine, 1906 (Dwight)
Submarine D-1, 1937 (Bacon)
Submarine Patrol, 1938 (Ford)
Submarine Pirate, 1915 (Sennett)
Submissive. See Unterton, 1949
Suburbia, 1983 (Corman; Sphieris)
SubUrbia, 1997 (Linklater)
Subway, 1985 (Besson)
Subway Stories: Tales from the Underground, 1997 (Demme; Ferrara)
Success commercial, 1970 (Lefebvre)
Success Is the Best Revenge, 1984 (Skolimowski)
Successful Man. See Hombre de éxito, 1986
Such a Cook, 1914 (Sennett)
Such a Girl Is Unforgettable. See So ein Mädel vergisst man nicht, 1932
Such a Gorgeous Kid like Me. See Belle Fille comme moi, 1972
Such a Little Queen, 1914 (Porter)
Such Good Friends, 1971 (Preminger)
Such is Life. See Así es la vida, 2000
Sud, 1999 (Akerman)
Sudden Fortune of the Poor People of Kombach. See Plützlcher Reichtum der armen Leute von Kombach, 1970
Sudden Impact, 1983 (Eastwood)
Sudden Terror, 1970 (Demme)
Suddenly, Last Summer, 1959 (Mankiewicz)
Such Good Friends, 1971 (Preminger)
Such a Little Queen, 1914 (Porter)
Such a Girl Is Unforgettable. See So ein Mädel vergisst man nicht, 1932
Such a Gorgeous Kid like Me. See Belle Fille comme moi, 1972
Such a Little Queen, 1914 (Porter)
Such Good Friends, 1971 (Preminger)
Such is Life. See Así es la vida, 2000
Sud, 1999 (Akerman)
Sudden Fortune of the Poor People of Kombach. See Plützlcher Reichtum der armen Leute von Kombach, 1970
Sudden Impact, 1983 (Eastwood)
Sudden Terror, 1970 (Demme)
Suddenly, Last Summer, 1959 (Mankiewicz)
Such a Little Queen, 1914 (Porter)
Such Good Friends, 1971 (Preminger)
Such is Life. See Así es la vida, 2000
Sud, 1999 (Akerman)
Sudden Fortune of the Poor People of Kombach. See Plützlcher Reichtum der armen Leute von Kombach, 1970
Sudden Impact, 1983 (Eastwood)
Sudden Terror, 1970 (Demme)
Suddenly, Last Summer, 1959 (Mankiewicz)
Such a Little Queen, 1914 (Porter)
Such Good Friends, 1971 (Preminger)
Such is Life. See Así es la vida, 2000
Sud, 1999 (Akerman)
Sudden Fortune of the Poor People of Kombach. See Plützlcher Reichtum der armen Leute von Kombach, 1970
Sudden Impact, 1983 (Eastwood)
Sudden Terror, 1970 (Demme)
Suddenly, Last Summer, 1959 (Mankiewicz)
Such a Little Queen, 1914 (Porter)
Such Good Friends, 1971 (Preminger)
Such is Life. See Así es la vida, 2000
Sud, 1999 (Akerman)
Sudden Fortune of the Poor People of Kombach. See Plützlcher Reichtum der armen Leute von Kombach, 1970
Sudden Impact, 1983 (Eastwood)
Sudden Terror, 1970 (Demme)
Suddenly, Last Summer, 1959 (Mankiewicz)
Such a Little Queen, 1914 (Porter)
Such Good Friends, 1971 (Preminger)
Such is Life. See Así es la vida, 2000
Sud, 1999 (Akerman)
Sudden Fortune of the Poor People of Kombach. See Plützlcher Reichtum der armen Leute von Kombach, 1970
Sudden Impact, 1983 (Eastwood)
Sudden Terror, 1970 (Demme)
Suddenly, Last Summer, 1959 (Mankiewicz)
Such a Little Queen, 1914 (Porter)
Such Good Friends, 1971 (Preminger)
Such is Life. See Así es la vida, 2000
Sud, 1999 (Akerman)
Sudden Fortune of the Poor People of Kombach. See Plützlcher Reichtum der armen Leute von Kombach, 1970
Sudden Impact, 1983 (Eastwood)
Sudden Terror, 1970 (Demme)
Suddenly, Last Summer, 1959 (Mankiewicz)
Such a Little Queen, 1914 (Porter)
Such Good Friends, 1971 (Preminger)
Such is Life. See Así es la vida, 2000
Sud, 1999 (Akerman)
Sudden Fortune of the Poor People of Kombach. See Plützlcher Reichtum der armen Leute von Kombach, 1970
Sudden Impact, 1983 (Eastwood)
Sudden Terror, 1970 (Demme)
Suddenly, Last Summer, 1959 (Mankiewicz)
Such a Little Queen, 1914 (Porter)
Such Good Friends, 1971 (Preminger)
Such is Life. See Así es la vida, 2000
Sud, 1999 (Akerman)
Sudden Fortune of the Poor People of Kombach. See Plützlcher Reichtum der armen Leute von Kombach, 1970
Sudden Impact, 1983 (Eastwood)
Sudden Terror, 1970 (Demme)
Suddenly, Last Summer, 1959 (Mankiewicz)
Such a Little Queen, 1914 (Porter)
Such Good Friends, 1971 (Preminger)
Such is Life. See Así es la vida, 2000
Sud, 1999 (Akerman)
Sudden Fortune of the Poor People of Kombach. See Plützlcher Reichtum der armen Leute von Kombach, 1970
Sudden Impact, 1983 (Eastwood)
Sudden Terror, 1970 (Demme)
Suddenly, Last Summer, 1959 (Mankiewicz)
Such a Little Queen, 1914 (Porter)
Such Good Friends, 1971 (Preminger)
Such is Life. See Así es la vida, 2000
Sud, 1999 (Akerman)
Sudden Fortune of the Poor People of Kombach. See Plützlcher Reichtum der armen Leute von Kombach, 1970
Sudden Impact, 1983 (Eastwood)
Sudden Terror, 1970 (Demme)
Suddenly, Last Summer, 1959 (Mankiewicz)
Such a Little Queen, 1914 (Porter)
Such Good Friends, 1971 (Preminger)
Such is Life. See Así es la vida, 2000
Sud, 1999 (Akerman)
Sudden Fortune of the Poor People of Kombach. See Plützlcher Reichtum der armen Leute von Kombach, 1970
Sudden Impact, 1983 (Eastwood)
Sudden Terror, 1970 (Demme)
Suddenly, Last Summer, 1959 (Mankiewicz)
Such a Little Queen, 1914 (Porter)
Such Good Friends, 1971 (Preminger)
Such is Life. See Así es la vida, 2000
Sud, 1999 (Akerman)
Summertime. See Summer Madness, 1955 (Lean)
Summer Lightning. See Summer Lightning, 1988 (Costa-Gavras)
Summer Madness, 1955 (Lean)
Summer Night with Greek Profile, Almond Eyes, and Scent of Basil. See Soleil de l’est, 1986 (Basilico)
Sun. See Soleil de l’est, 1986 (Basilico)
Sunrise
Sunrise: A Song of Two Humans.
Sunup, 1925 (Goulding)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Susan. See Susanville, 1927 (Duryea)
Susan and God, 1940 (Cukor)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suns. See Susman, 1986 (Benegal)
Suture, 1993 (Soderbergh)
Suvorov, 1941 (Pudovkin)
Suzanna, 1923 (Sennett)
Suzanne au bain, 1930 (Storck)
Suzanne Simonin, la religieuse de Denis Diderot. See Religieuse, 1966
Suzanne’s Profession. See Carrière de Suzanne, 1963
Svadlenka, 1936 (Frič)
Swarta Horisonter, 1935/36 (Fjöös)
Svend Dyrings Hus, 1908 (Holger-Madsen)
Svéd Alfons Mucha, 1980 (Jireš)
Svět pať nám, 1937 (Frič)
Svitati, 1999 (Brooks)
Svoi sriedi chougikh, 1974 (Mikhalkov)
Swan, 1950 (Markopoulos)
Swamp Thing, 1982 (Craven)
Swamp Water, 1941 (Renoir)
Swamp Woman, 1956 (Corman)
Swan, 1984 (Jireš)
Swan Princess, 1928 (Sennett)
Swan Song, 1980 (Mann)
Swan Song, 1992 (Branagh)
Swann in Love, 1984 (Schlondorff)
Sweet Adeline, 1935 (Leroy)
Sweet and Lowdown, 1999 (Allen; Waters)
Sweet Adeline, 1935 (Leroy)
Swann in Love, 1984 (Schlöndorff)
Swann in Love, 1984-85 (Philippe De Broca)
Sweetie, 1989 (Campion)
Sweethearts on Parade, 1953 (Dwan)
Sweetheart of the Campus, 1941 (Dmytryk)
Sweet Home, 1945 (George Seaton)
Sweet Toronto, 1971 (Leacock)
Sweet Secret, 1969 (Guerra)
Sweet Smell of Success, 1957 (Mackendrick)
Sweet Suzy. See Blacksnake!, 1973
Sweet Toronto, 1971 (Leacock)
Sweetheart Days, 1921 (Sennett)
Sweetheart of the Campus, 1941 (Dmytryk)
Sweethearts on Parade, 1953 (Dwan)
Sweetie, 1989 (Campion)
Swell Season. See Prima sezona, 1994
Swept Away...by an Unusual Destiny in the Blue Sea of August. See Swept Away...by an Unusual Destiny in the Blue Sea of August, 1974
Swim Princess, 1928 (Capra)
Swimmer, 1968 (Pollack)
Swimming to Cambodia, 1987 (Demme)
Swindle, See Rien ne va plus, 1997
Swing, 1936 (Micheaux)
Swing, See Schaukel, 1982
Swing Kids, 1993 (Branagh)
Swing Shift, 1984 (Corman; Demme)
Swing Time, 1936 (Stevens)
Swiss Family Robinson, 1940 (Welles)
Switchboard Operator. See Ljubavni Slučaj, tragedija službenice
PTT, 1967
Switzerland, 1986 (van Sant)
Swoon, 1992 (Haynes)
Sword and the Flute, 1959 (Ivyroy)
Sword and the Sumo Ring. See Ippan gatana dohyoiri, 1934
Sword of D’Artagnan, 1951 (Boetticher)
Sword of Penitence. See Zange no yaiba, 1927
Sword Points, 1928 (Sandrich)
Swords and Hearts, 1911 (Griffith)
Swordsman. See Hsiao Ao Chiang Hu, 1989
Syberberg Films Brecht. See Syberberg film Brecht, 1993
Syberberg film Brecht, 1993 (Syberberg)
Sydney: A Story of a City, 1999 (Beresford)
Sylvestre, 1923 (Pick)
Sylvesternacht, 1977 (Sirk)
Sylvia of the Secret Service, 1917 (von Stroheim)
Sylvia Scarlett, 1936 (Cukor)
Sylvesters, 1923 (Pick)
Symphonie d’amour. See Grand Refrain, 1936
Symphonie industrielle, Industrial Symphony. See Philips-Radio, 1931
Symphonie pastorale, 1946 (Delannoy)
Symphonie paysanne, 1942-44 (Storck)
Symphony of Six Million, 1932 (La Cava)
Syndens Datter, 1915 (Blom)
Syndig Kaerlighed, 1915 (Blom)
Symnove Solbakken, 1934 (Sjöström)
System, 1964 (Roeg)
Système du Docteur Goudron et du Professeur Plume, 1912 (Tourmeur)
Szabad lélegzet, 1973 (Mészáros)
Szamárbör, 1918 (Curtiz)
Szegénylegények, 1965 (Jancsó)
Szent Páter esenyője, 1917 (Korda)
Szentendre—Town of Painters. See Festők városa—Szentendre, 1964
Szenzáció, 1922 (Fjöös)
Szép Iányok, ne sérítok, 1970 (Mészáros)
Szerelmem, Elektra, 1975 (Jancsó)
Szerelmesfilm, 1970 (Szabó)
Szeressük egymást gyerekek!, 1996 (Jancsó)
Szeretet, 1963 (Mészáros)
Szeretet, 1963 (Mészáros)
Szerkezettervezés, 1960 (Jancsó)
Színfoltok Kínaböl, 1957 (Jancsó)
Síkortyó, 1961 (Mészáros)
Sztánkerék Kugoró, 1960 (Jancsó)
Sympathy for the Devil.
Symmetricks, 1972 (Vanderbeek)
Symphonie d’amour. See Grand Refrain, 1936
Symphonie pastorale, 1946 (Delannoy)
Symphonie industrielle, Industrial Symphony. See Philips-Radio, 1931
Syberberg Films Brecht.
Syberberg filmt Brecht, 1993 (Syberberg)
Syberberg film Brecht, 1993 (Syberberg)
Sybil, 1976 (Kieslowski)
T-Bird Gang, 1959 (Corman)
T-Group, 1973 (Marshall)
T-Men, 1948 (Mann)
TG Psychic Rally in Heaven, 1981 (Jarman)
T.G.M.—Osoboditel, 1990 (Chytlová)
THX 1138, 1971 (Coppola; Lucas)
THX 1138, 1971 (Coppola; Lucas)
TNT Jackson, 1974 (Corman)
T.V. Interview, 1967 (Vanderbeek)
T2 3-D: Battle across Time, 1996 (Cameron)
Ta Lun Hui, 1983 (King)
Ta Ti Erh Nü, 1964 (King)
Ta Tsui Hsia, 1965 (King)
Tabu, 1931 (Flaherty; Murnau)
Tacchino prepotente, 1939 (Bava; Rossellini)
Taches, 1964 (Eustache)
Tacomes lejanos, 1991 (Almodóvar)
Tadjrebeh, 1973 (Kiarostami)
Tag der Freiheit: unsere Wermacht, 1935 (Riefenstahl)
Tag der Idioten, 1982 (Schroeter)
Tagebuch des Dr. Hart, 1916 (Leni)
Tagebuch einer Verlorenen, 1929 (Pabst)
Tailors from Torzhok.
Tail Lights Fade, 1999 (Smith)
Taiheiyo hitoribotchi, 1963 (Ichikawa)
Tagebuch des Dr. Hart, 1916 (Leni)
Tagebuch des Dr. Hart, 1916 (Leni)
Tag der Idioten, 1982 (Schroeter)
Tadjrebeh, 1973 (Kiarostami)
Taches, 1964 (Eustache)
Tacchino prepotente, 1939 (Bava; Rossellini)
Tainted Horseplay.
Taina korolevy, 1919 (Protazanov)
Take Care of Your Scarf, Tatiana.
Takara no yama, 1929 (Ozu)
Tajemství krve, 1953 (Frič)
Taiyo to bara, 1956 (Kinoshita)
Taiyo no hakaba, 1960 (Oshima)
Taipei Story, 1985 (Yang)
Taki no Shiraito, 1933 (Mizoguchi)
Takhte Siah, 2000 (Makhmalbaf)
Tales of the Typewriter.
Tales of Terror, 1962 (Corman)
Tales of Hoffman, 1951 (Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger)
Tales of Kish. See Ghessé hayé kish, 1999
Tales of Manhattan, 1942 (Duvivier)
Tales of Terror, 1962 (Corman)
Tales of the Typewriter. See Mesék az írógépől, 1916
Talife nad Velkým Malíkovem, 1977 (Jireš)
Talk of Hollywood, 1929 (Sandrich)
Talk of the Devil, 1936 (Reed)
Talk of the Town, 1942 (Stevens)
Talk Radio, 1988 (Stone)
Talk to Me like the Rain, 1975 (Sirk)
Talking Heads. See Gadajace głowy, 1980
Talking Turkey, 1930 (Sandrich)
Tall Headlines, 1952 (Zetterling)
Tall Men, 1955 (Walsh)
Tall T, 1957 (Boetticher)
Tall Target, 1951 (Mann)
Taller de la vida, 1985 (Alvarez)
Ta‘m e guilass, 1997 (Kiarostami)
Tam na konečné, 1957 (Kadár)
Tam za lesem, 1962 (Forman)
Tamaño natural, 1973 (García Berlanga)
Tamara la complaisante, 1937 (Delannoy)
Tambora, 1937/38 (Fejős)
Tambours de pierre, 1965 (Rouch)
Taming a Husband, 1910 (Griffith)
Taming Mrs. Shrew, 1912 (Porter)
Taming of Dorothy. See Quel bandito sono io, 1949
Taming of the Shrew, 1908 (Griffith)
Taming of the Shrew. See Trold kan taemmes, 1914
Taming of the Shrew, 1966 (Zeffirelli)
Taming of the Snood, 1940 (Keaton)
Taming Target Center, 1917 (Sennett)
Tampico. See Gran Casino, 1947
Tampopo, 1986 (Hami)
Tanda Singui, 1972 (Rouch)
Tandem, 1986 (Leconte)
Tangled Affair, 1913 (Sennett)
Tango, 1993 (Leconte)
Tango, 1998 (Saura)
Tango del viudo, 1967 (Ruiz)
Tango for You. See Tango für Dich, 1930
Tango für Dich, 1930 (Forst)
Tango Tangles, 1914 (Chaplin; Sennett)
Tangoos—el exilio de Gardel, 1986 (Solanas, Fernando E., And Octavio Getino)
Tangoos—l’exil de Gardel. See Tangos—el exilio de Gardel, 1986
Tank Commando, 1959 (Corman)
Tank Commandos. See Tank Commando, 1959
Tanks Are Coming, 1951 (Sennett)
Tank Commando, 1959
Tanks Are Coming, 1951 (Sennett)
Tanks Are Coming, 1951 (Sennett)
Tanned Affair, 1913 (Sennett)
Tango, 1998 (Saura)
Tangos—el exilio de Gardel, 1986 (Solanas, Fernando E., And Octavio Getino)
Tangos—l’exil de Gardel. See Tangos—el exilio de Gardel, 1986
Tank Commando, 1959 (Corman)
Tank Commandos. See Tank Commando, 1959
Tanks Are Coming, 1951 (Fuller)
Tannenberg, 1950 (Staudte)
Tanner ’88, 1988 (Altman)
Tansy, 1921 (Hepworth)
Tant que vous serez heureux, 1911/13 (Feuillade)
Tänzer meiner Frau, 1925 (Korda; Leni)
Tänner; The Dancer.
Tänzerin; The Dancer.
Tänzer meiner Frau, 1925 (Korda; Leni)
Tante von Glück, 1925 (Eisler; Leni)
Tant que vous serez heureux, 1911/13 (Feuillade)
Tango voor, 1927 (Vigo)
Tango, 1993 (Leconte)
Tango, 1998 (Saura)
Tango voor, 1927 (Vigo)
Tango, 1993 (Leconte)
Tango, 1998 (Saura)
Tangos—el exilio de Gardel, 1986 (Solanas, Fernando E., And Octavio Getino)
Tangoos—l’exil de Gardel. See Tangos—el exilio de Gardel, 1986
Tank Commando, 1959 (Corman)
Tank Commandos. See Tank Commando, 1959
Tanks Are Coming, 1951 (Fuller)
Tannenberg, 1950 (Staudte)
Tanner ’88, 1988 (Altman)
Tansy, 1921 (Hepworth)
Tant que vous serez heureux, 1911/13 (Feuillade)
Tänzer meiner Frau, 1925 (Korda; Leni)
Tänner; The Dancer.
Tänzerin; The Dancer.
Tänzer meiner Frau, 1925 (Korda; Leni)
Tender Barbarian, 1990 (Menzel)
Tender Comrade, 1943 (Dmytryk)
Tender Enemy. See Tendre Ennemie, 1936
Tender Hearted Boy, 1912 (Griffith)
Tender Hearts, 1909 (Griffith)
Tender Loving Care, 1973 (Corman)
Tender Mercies, 1983 (Beresford)
Tenderfoot Courage, 1927 (Wyler)
Tenderly, 1917 (Sennett)
Tennessee's Partner, 1955 (Dwan)
Tenkrát o vánocích, 1958 (Kachyňa)
Tenkawa Densetsu Satsujin Jiken, 1991 (Ichikawa)
Teni zabytych predkov
Tendi lyubvi, 1917 (Kuleshov)
Tengoku to jigoku, 1963 (Kurosawa)
Tengoku ni musubu koi, 1932 (Gosho)
Tengo fe en ti, 1979 (Alvarez)
Tenga, 1985 (Ouedraogo)
Tendre Poulet, 1977 (de Broca)
Tendre Ennemie, 1936 (Ophüls)
Tenderloin, 1928 (Curtiz)
Tenderfoot Courage, 1927 (Wyler)
Tender Mercies, 1983 (Beresford)
Tender Hearts, 1909 (Griffith)
Tenderly, 1917 (Sennett)
Tendre Ennemie, 1936 (Ophüls)
Tendre Barbarian, 1990 (Menzel)
Terror Within II, 1991 (Corman)
Terrore nello spazio, 1965 (Bava)
Terrorizer, 1986 (Yang)
Teru hi kumoru hi, 1926 (Kinugasa)
Terza liceo, 1954 (Bava)
Tesatura meccanica della linea a 220.000 volt, 1955 (Olmi)
Tesito, 1989 (Faye)
Tesla, 1979 (Welles)
Tesoro del Amazonas, 1983 (Fernández)
Tess, 1979 (Berri; Polanski)
Tess of the Storm Country, 1914 (Porter)
Test, 1909 (Griffith)
Test, 1911 (Dwan)
Test of Friendship, 1908 (Griffith)
Test Pilot, 1938 (Fleming; Hawks)
Testament de Pierrot, 1904 (Guy)
Testament des Dr. Mabuse, 1933 (Lang)
Testament d’Orphée, 1960 (Cocteau)
Testament du Docteur Cordelier, 1959 (Renoir)
Testament of Dr. Cordeliers. See Testament du Docteur Cordelier, 1959
Testament of Dr. Mabuse. See Testament des Dr. Mabuse, 1933
Testamentet. See Kaerlighedens Triumf, 1914
Testamentets Hemmelighed, 1916 (Holger-Madsen)
Testimone, 1946 (Germi)
Tête coupée, 1915/16 (Feuillade)
Tête de turc, 1935 (Becker)
Tête d’un homme, 1932 (Duvivier)
Tête qui rapporte. See Tête de turc, 1935
Têtes de femmes, femmes de tête, 1916 (Feyder)
Tetsu ‘Jilba’. See Jiruba no Tetsu, 1950
Tetto, 1956 (de Sica)
Teufel, 1918 (Dupont)
Teufelsreporter, 1929 (Wildêr)
Texan, 1930 (Cromwell)
Texas Chainsaw Massacre, 1974 (Hooper)
Texas Chainsaw Massacre, Part 2, 1986 (Hooper)
Texas Project. See Places in the Heart, 1984
Texas Rangers, 1936 (Vidor)
Texasville, 1990 (Bogdanovich)
Text of Light, 1974 (Brakhage)
Thank You, 1925 (Ford)
Thanks, Life. See Merci la vie, 1991
That Certain Thing, 1928 (Capra)
That Certain Woman, 1937 (Goulding)
That Chink at Golden Gulch, 1910 (Griffith)
That Christmas. See Tenkrát o vánočich, 1958
That Cold Day in the Park, 1969 (Altman)
That Dare Devil, 1911 (Sennett)
That Day, on the Beach, 1983 (Yang)
That Gal of Burke’s, 1916 (Borzage)
That Hamilton Woman, 1941 (Korda)
That Kind of Woman, 1959 (Lumet)
That Kind of Love.
That Kind of Love. See Taková láská, 1959
That Kind of Woman, 1959 (Lumet)
That Lady in Ermine, 1948 (Lubitsch; Preminger)
That Little Band of Gold, 1915 (Sennett)
That Mad Mr. Jones. See Fuller Brush Man, 1947
That Man from Rio. See Homme de Rio, 1963
That Minstrel Man, 1914 (Sennett)
That Model from Paris, 1926 (Florey)
That Mothers Might Live, 1938 (Zinnemann)
That Navy Spirit. See Hold ‘em Navy, 1937
That Night, 1917 (Sennett)
That Night, 1928 (Mccarey)
That Night with You, 1945 (Keaton)
That Night, 1928 (Mccarey)
That Night with You, 1945 (Keaton)
That Tender Age. See Veuves de quinze ans, 1964
That They May Live. See J’accuse, 1937
That Uncertain Feeling, 1941 (Lubitsch)
Their Ups and Downs, 1914 (Sennett)
Their Secret Affair. See Top Secret Affair, 1957
Their First Kidnapping Case, 1911 (Sennett)
Their Fates Sealed, 1911 (Sennett)
The, 1931 (Sandrich)
Theater in Trance, 1981 (Fassbinder)
Theft of Sight. See Krazha zreniya, 1934
Theft of the Mona Lisa. See Raub der Mona Lisa, 1931
Their Fates Sealed, 1911 (Sennett)
Their First Execution, 1913 (Sennett)
Their First Divorce Case, 1911 (Sennett)
Their May Live. See J’accuse, 1937
Their May Man, 1947 (Borzage)
Their Sexploitation, 1973 (Meyer)
That’s Adequate, 1989 (Coolidge)
That’s My Boy, 1951 (Lewis)
That’s Sexploitation, 1973 (Meyer)
That’s My Man, 1947 (Borzage)
That’s My Boy, 1951 (Lewis)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Where the Action Is, 1965 (de Antonio)
That’s the Spirit, 1945 (Keaton)
That’s My Man, 1947 (Borzage)
That’s that, 1948 (Ray)
That’s My Man, 1947 (Borzage)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s the Spirit, 1945 (Keaton)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
That’s Their Life, 1930 (Siodmak)
That’s That, 1948 (Ray)
Three Million Dollars, 1911 (Dwan)
Three Million Case.
Three Men on a Horse, 1936 (Leroy)
Three Men and a Cradle.
Three Men and a Baby, 1989 (Serreau)
Three Men and a Baby, 1989 (Serreau)
Three Men and a Baby, 1989 (Serreau)
Three Men and a Baby, 1989 (Serreau)
Three Men and a Baby, 1989 (Serreau)
Three Men and a Baby, 1989 (Serreau)
Three Men and a Baby, 1989 (Serreau)
Three Men and a Baby, 1989 (Serreau)
Three Men and a Baby, 1989 (Serreau)
Three Men and a Baby, 1989 (Serreau)
Three Men and a Baby, 1989 (Serreau)
Three Men and a Baby, 1989 (Serreau)
Three Men and a Baby, 1989 (Serreau)
Three Men and a Baby, 1989 (Serreau)
Three Men and a Baby, 1989 (Serreau)
Three Men and a Baby, 1989 (Serreau)
Three Men and a Baby, 1989 (Serreau)
Three Men and a Baby, 1989 (Serreau)
Three Men and a Baby, 1989 (Serreau)
Three Men and a Baby, 1989 (Serreau)
Three Men and a Baby, 1989 (Serreau)
Three Men and a Baby, 1989 (Serreau)
Three Men and a Baby, 1989 (Serreau)
Three Men and a Baby, 1989 (Serrea
Three Musketeers, 1974 (Lester)
Three Nights of Love. See Tre notti di amore, 1964
Three on a Couch, 1966 (Lewis)
Three on a Limb, 1936 (Keaton)
Three on a Match, 1932 (Leroy)
Three on a Week-End. See Bank Holiday, 1938
Three Passions, 1929 (Ingram)
Three Places for the 26th. See Trois Places pour le 26, 1988
Three Resurrected Drunkards. See Kaettekita yopparai, 1968
Three Ring Circus, 1954 (Lewis)
Three Secrets, 1950 (Wise)
Three Shell Game, 1911 (Dwan)
Three Songs of Lenin. See Tri pensi o Lenine, 1934
Three Sisters, 1910 (Griffith)
Three Sinners, 1928 (Daves)
Three Strangers, 1946 (Huston)
Three to Go, 1970 (Weir)
Three Women; Forbidden Paradise, 1924 (Lubitsch)
Three Wishes, 1995 (Coolidge)
Three Wise Fools, 1923 (Vidor)
Thursday's Game, 1974 (Reiner)
Thursday's Children, 1953 (Anderson)
Thus Another Day. See Kyo no mata kakute ariin, 1959
Thursday's Game. See Kyo mo mata kakute arinan, 1959
Thus Ended a Love. See So endete eine Liebe, 1934
Thus Spake Theodor Herzl, 1967 (Cavalcanti)
Thy Name Is Woman, 1924 (Niblo)
Thy Soul Shall Bear Witness. See Körkarlen, 1921
Til I Ya, 1971 (Shepitko)
Tía Alejandra, 1970 (Ripstein)
Tia Alexandra, 1980 (Ripstein)
Tic, 1908 (Feuillade)
Tidbits. See Leckerbissen, 1948
Tide of Empire, 1929 (Dwan)
Tie Me up, Tie Me Down!. See Atame!, 1990
Tiefeland, 1944 (Riefenstahl)
Tiempo de Morir, 1965 (Ripstein)
Tiempo es el viento, 1976 (Alvarez)
Tiempo libre a la roca, 1981 (Alvarez)
T’ien Liang Hao Kê Chi’u, 1979 (Hou Hsiao-Hsien)
Tien, vous êtes à Poitiers?, 1916 (Feyder)
Tierra del Fuego se apaga, 1955 (Fernández)
Tierra del Fuego, 1999 (Littin)
Tiempos libres, 1973 (Littin)
Ties. See Legato, 1977
Tieta do Agreste, 1996 (Diegues)
Tieta do Agreste. See Tieta do Agreste, 1996
Tiger Leaped and Killed, But He Will Die. He Will Die. See Tigre salto y mato . . . pero morira . . . morira, 1973
Tiger Likes Fresh Blood. See Tigre aime la chair fraîche, 1964
Tiger Love, 1924 (Hawks)
Tiger Morse, 1967 (Warhol)
Tiger of Bengal. See Tiger von Eschnapur, 1959
Tiger Rose, 1923 (Franklin; Guilding)
Tiger Shark, 1932 (Hawks)
Tiger van Eschnapur, 1921 (Lang)
Tiger von Eschnapur, 1959 (Lang)
Tigerland, 2000 (Schumacher)
Tight Little Island. See Whisky Galore, 1949
Tightrope, 1984 (Eastwood)
Tigra, 1953 (Torre Nilsson)
Tigre aime la chair fraîche, 1964 (Chabrol)
Tigre de Yauatepec, 1933 (de Fuentes)
Tigre reale, 1916 (Pastrone)
Tigre salto y mato . . . pero moriria . . . morira, 1973 (Alvarez)
Tigre se perfume à la dynamite, 1965 (Chabrol)
Tigero: A Film That Was Never Made, 1994 (Jarmusch)
Tigress, 1914 (Guy)
Tigress. See Tigra, 1953
Ti Hoang, 1918 (Feuillade)
Tikhy Don, 1957/58 (Gerasimov)
’Til We Meet Again, 1922 (Goulding)
’Til We Meet Again, 1940 (Goulding)
Tilai, 1990 (Ouedraogo)
Tilki Selim, 1966 (Günay)
Till Divorce Do You Part. See Castagne sono buone, 1970
Till Glädje, 1950 (Bergman; Sjöström)
Till I Come Back to You, 1918 (de Mille)
Till the Clouds Roll By, 1947 (Minnelli)
Till the End of Time, 1946 (Dmytryk)
Till Victory. See Jusqu’à la victoire, 1934
Till Victory Always. See Hasta la victoria siempre, 1967
Till We Meet Again, 1936 (Florey)
Till We Meet Again, 1944 (Borzage)
Tillie’s Nightmare. See Tillie’s Punctured Romance, 1914
Tillie’s Punctured Romance, 1914 (Chaplin; Sennett)
Tilly the Tomboy, 1909 (Hepworth)
Tim Burton’s The Nightmare before Christmas, 1993 (Burton)
Timber Industry. See Timmerfabriek, 1930
Thus Spake theodor Herzl, 1967 (Cavalcanti)
Timbuktu, 1959 (Tourneur)
Time. See Waati, 1995
Time & Fortune Vietnam Newsreel, 1969 (Mekas)
Time Bandits, 1981 (Gilliam)
Time for Dying, 1971 (Boetticher)
Time for Killing, 1967 (Corman)
Time Gentlemen Please, 1952 (Grierson)
Time Has Stopped. See Tempo si è fermato, 1959
Time in the Sun, 1939 (Eisenstein)
Time of Love. See A Love.
Time of the Gypsies.
Time of Love.
Time of Destiny, 1988 (Nava)
Time Is on Our Side, 1983 (Ashby)
Time in the Sun, 1939 (Eisenstein)
Time of Reckoning.
Tivoli Garden Games.
Titfield Thunderbolt, 1952 (Crichton)
Titanic Bar.
Titanic, 1997 (Cameron)
Titan, 1949 (Ford)
Tiz éves Kuba, 1969 (Gaál)
Tlatsche, 1939 (Ulmer)
To and Fro. See Oda—vissza, 1962
To Be a Crook. See Fille et des fusils, 1964
To Be or Not to Be, 1942 (Rubitsch)
To Be or Not to Be, 1983 (Brooks)
To Be Young. See Naar man kun er ung, 1943
To Catch a Cop. See Retenex-moi . . . ou je fais un malheur, 1984
To Catch a Thief, 1954 (Hitchcock)
To Die For, 1995 (van Sant)
To Dig a Pit. See Cavar un fosso, 1966
To Forget Palermo. See Dimenticare Palermo, 1990
To Have and Have Not, 1944 (Hawks)
To Hear Your Banjo Play, 1940 (Leacock)
To Hell with the Devil, 1981 (Woo)
To Hold Our Ground, 1990 (Marshall)
To Joy. See Till gladje, 1950
To Kill a Mockingbird, 1957 (Pakula)
To Kill a Mockingbird, 1962 (Mulligan)
To Kill a Priest, 1988 (Holland)
To Live. See Hua Q, 1994
To Live and Die in L.A., 1985 (Friedkin)
To Live. Doomed. See Ikiri, 1952
To Love Again. See Ai futatabi, 1972
To maend i òdemarken, 1972 (Roos)
To Mary with Love, 1936 (Cromwell)
To New Shores, Paramatta, Bagne de femmes. See Zu neuen Ufern, 1937
To Our Loves. See A nos amours, 1983
To Parsifal, 1963 (Bailie)
To Please One Woman, 1921 (Weber)
To Sail Is Necessary. See Att Segla är Nödvändigt, 1937/38
To Save Her Soul, 1909 (Griffith)
To Sir with Love 2, 1996 (Bogdanovich)
To Sleep with a Vampire, 1993 (Corman)
To Sleep with Anger, 1990 (Burnett)
To the End of the Silver Mountains. See Ginrei no hate, 1947
To the Last Man, 1923 (Fleming)
To the Rhythm of My Heart. See Au Rythme de mon coeur, 1983
To the Victor, 1948 (Daves)
To the Western World, 1981 (Huston)
To the White Sea, 2000 (Coen)
To Tjenestepiger, 1910 (Blom)
To Wong Foo, Thanks for Everything, Julie Newmar, 1995 (Spielberg)
Toa to a Young Miss. See Ojosan kanpai, 1949
Tobacco Road, 1941 (Ford)
Tobe Hooper’s Night Terrors, 1993 (Hooper)
Tobeh Nosuh, 1982 (Makhmalbaf)
Tobin’s Talk, 1991 (Bogdanovich)
Tobin’s World, 1991 (Bogdanovich)
Tobis—Autumn Sketches. See Yorokobi mo kanashimi mo
Tod für fünf Stimmen, 1995 (Herzog)
Tod des Empedokles, 1987 (Straub, Jean-Marie, And Danièle Huillet)
Tod in der Stadt, 1992 (Institution)
Tour, 1928 (Clair)
Tour au large, 1926 (Grémillon)
Tour de chant, 1933 (Cavalcanti)
Tour de Nesle, 1954 (Gance; Straub, Jean-Marie, And Danièle Huillet; Kaplan)
Tour du monde en bateau-stop, 1954 (Storck)
Tour Eiffel, 1900 (Lumière)
Tourbillon de Paris, 1928 (Duvivier)
Tour E, 1928 (Jean)
Traviata, 1982 (Zeffirelli)
Travolti da un insolito destino nell’azzurro mare d’agosto, 1974 (Wertmuller)
Tre eccetera del colonello. See Treis etc . . . du colonel, 1959
Tre fili fino a Milano, 1958 (Olmi)
Tre fratelli, 1981 (Rosi)
Tre notti di amore, 1964 (Castellani)
Tre Volti, 1965 (Antonioni)
Treasure. See Schatz, 1923
Treasure Island, 1918 (Franklin)
Treasure Island, 1920 (Tourneur)
Treasure Island, 1934 (Fleming)
Treasure Island, 1972 (Welles)
Treasure Island. See Ile au trésor, 1986
Treasure Island, 1991 (Ruiz)
Treasure Mountain. See Takara no yama, 1929
Treasure of the Golden Condor, 1953 (Daves)
Treasure of Kalifa.
Treasure of the Wooden Clogs. See Albero degli zoccoli, 1978
Tree, The Mayor, and the Mediatheque. See Arbre, le maire et la Mediatheque, 1993
Tree, 1966 (Greenaway)
Tree Grows in Brooklyn, 1945 (Kazan)
Tree, 1976 (Brakhage)
Tree Film, 1968 (Rainer)
Tree of Knowledge.
Tree of the Wooden Clogs. See Albero degli zoccoli, 1978
Tree, 1966 (Greenaway)
Treize jours en France, 1968 (Lelouch)
Trenchcoat in Paradise, 1989 (Coolidge)
Treister Tigre, 1939 (Keaton)
Tria etc . . . du colonel, 1959
Tribe Lives On. See Stammen Lever an, 1937/38
Tribo, 1951 (Iñaki)
Tribo, 1951 (Iñaki)
Tribulations d’un chinois en Chine, 1965 (de Broca)
Tribunal, 1969 (Jiréš)
Tribune Film: Break and Build. See De Tribune film: Breken en bouwen, 1930
Tribute to a Bad Man, 1955 (Wise)
Tribute to Alfred Lepetit. See Hommage à Alfred Lepetit, 2000
Tribute to the Teachers. See Bozorgdasht-e mo’ Allem, 1977
Triefing Women, 1922 (Ingram)
Trigger Happy, See Deadly Companions, 1961
Trikaal, 1985 (Benegal)
Trikia, 1974 (Powell, Michael, And Emeric Pressburger)
Triby, 1915 (Tourneur)
Triology, 1994/95 (Brakhage)
Trimmer in Gold, 1926 (Sennett)
Trio, 1976 (Brakhage)
Trio, 1968 (Rainer)
Trio: Rubinstein, Heifetz and Piatigorsky, 1952 (Aldrich)
Trip, 1967 (Bogdanovich)
Trip to Door, 1971 (Brakhage)
Trip to Mars. See Himmelskibet, 1917
Triple Echo, 1973 (Apted)
Triple Play, 1981 (Scorsese)
Triple Trouble, 1918 (Chaplin)
Tristan Tzara, dadaismens fader, 1949 (Roos)
Tristana, 1970 (Buñuel)
Triste Fin d’un vieux savant, 1904 (Guy)
Triumph, 1924 (de Mille)
Triumph des Willens, 1934 (Riefenstahl; Ruttmann)
Triumph des Willens, 1940 (Buñuel)
Triumph of Lester Snapwell, 1963 (Keaton)
Triumph of the Will. See Triumph des Willens, 1934
Triumph of Will, 1940 (Buñuel)
Triumph of Wings. See Tsubasa no gaika, 1942
Trixie, 2000 (Altman; Rudolph)
Tro, hab og kaerlighed, 1984 (August)
Trois Chambres à Manhattan, 1965 (Carné; Miller)
Trois Chansons de la résistance, 1944 (Cavalcanti)
Trois Chants pour la France. See Trois Chansons de la résistance, 1944
Trois couleurs: Blanc, 1993 (Kieslowski)
Trois couleurs: Bleu, 1993 (Holland; Kieslowski)
Trois couleurs: Rouge, 1993 (Holland; Kieslowski)
Trois Couronnes du Matelot, 1982 (Ruiz)
Trois etc . . . du colonel, 1959 (de Sica)
Trois freres, 1995 (Berri)
Trois hommes et un couffin, 1985 (Serreau)
Trois-Mâts, 1935 (Storck)
Trois Passions. See Three Passions, 1929
Trois places pour le 26, 1988 (Berri; Demy)
Trois vies et une seule mort, 1996 (Moretti; Ruiz)
Trois Vies une corde, 1933 (Storck)
Troy Women, 1971 (Cacoyannis)
Troll kan tæmmes, 1914 (Holger-Madsen)
Trollflöjeten, 1975 (Bergman)
Trolls, 1913 (Blom)
Trolösa, 2000 (Bergman)
Trompè mais content, 1902 (Guy)
Trop belle pour toi, 1989 (Blier)
Trop tot, trop tard, 1983 (Straub, Jean-Marie, And Danièle Huillet)
Tropisk Kaerlighed, 1911 (Blom)
Trou, 1960 (Becker)
Troubadour’s Triumph, 1912 (Weber)
Trouble along the Way, 1953 (Curtiz)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>FILM TITLE INDEX</th>
<th>DIRECTORS, 4th EDITION</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Twin Brothers, 1909 (Griffith)</td>
<td>Two Plus One. See Pratinidhi, 1964</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Twin Peaks: Fire Walk with Me, 1992 (Lynch)</td>
<td>Two Rode Together, 1961 (Ford)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Twin Sisters. See Soseiji gakkyu, 1956</td>
<td>Two Seconds, 1932 (Leroy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Twin Sitters, 1994 (Bartel)</td>
<td>Two Sides, 1911 (Griffith)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Twinkletoes, 1926 (Leroy)</td>
<td>Two Sightless Eyes. See Do Cheshman Beesu, 1984</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Twins, 1916 (Sennett)</td>
<td>Two Smart People, 1946 (Dassin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Twins. See Dead Ringers, 1988</td>
<td>Two Solutions for One Problem. See Dow Rahehal Baraye yek Massaleh, 1975</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Twins from Suffering Creek, 1920 (Wellman)</td>
<td>Two Stage Sisters. See Wutai Jiemei, 1964</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Twist.</td>
<td>Two Stone Lanterns. See Futatsu doro, 1933</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Twins, 1916 (Sennett)</td>
<td>Two Tars, 1928 (McCary; Stevens)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two of Them.</td>
<td>Two Thousand Women, 1944 (Laudner, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two of a Kind.</td>
<td>Two Tickets to Broadway, 1951 (Berkeley)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two o’Clock Courage, 1945 (Mann)</td>
<td>Two times 50 Years of French Cinema. See Deux fois cinquante ans de cinema francais, 1995</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two of Us, Claude, The Old Man and the Boy. See Vieil homme et l’enfant, 1967</td>
<td>Two to Tango, 1989 (Corman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Memories, 1909 (Griffith)</td>
<td>Two Tough Tenderfeet, 1918 (Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Men and a Wardrobe. See Dwaj ludzie z szasa, 1958</td>
<td>Two Trains a Day. See Naponta kêt vonat, 1977</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Men of the Desert, 1913 (Griffith)</td>
<td>Two Way Street, 1931 (Laudner, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Memories, 1909 (Griffith)</td>
<td>Two Weeks, 1920 (Franklin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Old Tars, 1912 (Guy)</td>
<td>Two Weeks in Another Town, 1962 (Minnelli)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollar Hotel, 1932 (McCarey; Stevens)</td>
<td>Two Weeks with Love, 1950 (Berkeley)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollar Wedding, 1921 (Fejös)</td>
<td>Two White Arms, 1932 (Niblo)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollar Mystery, 1923 (Sennett)</td>
<td>Two Whores, or, A Love Story that Ends in Marriage. See Dos putas, o, Historia de amor que termina en boda, 1974</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>Two Widows, 1913 (Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>Two Women. See Ciaciara, 1960</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>Two Women and a Man, 1909 (Griffith)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>Two Worlds, 1930 (Dupon)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>Typewriter, the Rifle &amp; the Movie Camera, 1996 (Jarmusch)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>Tyrannt’s Heart. See A zrnanok szíveis agyav Boccaccio Magyarországon, 1981</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>Tyrrée, 1912 (Feuillade)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>Tystnaden, 1963 (Bergman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>Tsyacha Vtoraya Khithrost, 1915 (Bauer)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>Tyven, 1910 (Blom)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>U-Boat. See Spy in Black, 1939</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>U Krutovo Yara, 1962 (Gerasimov)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>U ozer, 1969 (Gerasimov)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>U samogo sinego morya, 1935 (Barnet)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>U snédeného krámu, 1933 (Fríč)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>U Turn, 1997 (Stone)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>U.S. Army in San Francisco, 1915 (Sennett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>USA en vrac, 1953 (Delouch)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>Übernachtung in Tirol, 1973 (Schlöndorff; Von Trotta)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>Ubitzi vykhodyat na dorogu, 1942 (Pudovkin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>Uccellacci e uccellini, 1966 (Pasolini)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>Uchitel, 1939 (Gerasimov)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>Uchitelntisa Kartashova, 1942 (Kuleshov)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>Ucho, 1969 (Kachyňa)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>Ucho, 1992 (Kachyňa)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>Ucinůzů de mihiarim, 1965 (Güney)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>Uden Faedreland. See De Forviste, 1914</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>Uefitzen. See Ugetsu monogatari, 1953</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>Ugetsu monogatari, 1953 (Mizoguchi)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>Ugly Boy. See A csunya fiu, 1969</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>Ugly Man. See Bir cirkin adam, 1918</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>Ugly Village. See A zsranok szíves agyav Boccaccio Magyarországon, 1981</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>Ugetsu monogatari, 1953 (Mizoguchi)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>Uffen. See Pratinidhi, 1964</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>Uftho. See Pratinidhi, 1964</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>Ugh. See Pratinidhi, 1964</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>Ukamau, 1966 (Sanjinés)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two Million Dollars, 1941 (Wyler)</td>
<td>Ukhod velikovo startza, 1912 (Protazanov)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Ukifune, 1957 (Kinugasa)
Ukigusa, 1959 (Ozu)
Ukigusa monogatari, 1934 (Ozu)
Ukiyo-buro, 1929 (Go sho)
Ukijent man, 1952 (Henning-Jensen)
Ukraine in Flames. See Nezahibamoe, 1968
Ukrainian Rhapsody, See Ukrainskai rapsodiia, 1961
Ukrainskai rapsodiia, 1961 (Paradzhnov)
Ula’s Chandelier. See Ula’s Fête, 1975
Ula’s Fête, 1975 (Jarman)
Ulicka v raji, 1936 (Frič)
Uloupená hranice, 1947 (Weiss)
Ulrich fortæller en historie, 1972 (Roos)
Ultima carrozzella, 1943 (Fellini)
Ultima cena, 1976 (Gutiérrez Alea)
Ultima Thule, 1968 (Roos)
Ultimatum, 1971 (Lefebvre)
Ultimo dei Vikinghi, 1961 (Bava)
Ultimo dia de la guerra, 1969 (Bardem)
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
 Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimo tango a Parigi.
Ultimately, 1973 (Kurasawa)
Unfaithful Wife. See Femme infidèle, 1969
Unfaithfully Yours, 1948 (Sturges)
Unfaithfully Yours, 1984 (Brooks; Levinson)
Unfinished Business, 1941 (La Cava)
Unfinished Journey, 1999 (Spielberg)
Unfinished Love Song, 1919 (Kuleshov)
Unfinished Piece for Mechanical Piano. See Neokontchennaya piesa dlia mekhanitcheskogo pianino, 1977
Unfinished Story.
Unfinished Symphony.
Ungdom og Letsind.
Unforgiven
Unforgiven, 1960 (Huston)
Unforgettable Richard Beckinsale, 2000 (Frears)
Unforgettable.
Unfit or The Strength of the Weak, 1914 (Hepworth)
Unknown Tomorrow.
Unknown Man.
Unknown, 1927 (Browning)
Unkissed Man, 1929 (Mccarey)
Unjustly Accused. See Ballettens Datter, 1913
Unkissed Man, 1929 (Mccarey)
Unknown, 1927 (Browning)
Unknown Man. See Ukjent mann, 1952
Unknown Tomorrow. See Unbekannte Morgen, 1923
Unknown Woman. See Den okända, 1913
Unlawful Trade, 1914 (Dwan)
Unos, 1952 (Kadar)
Unpainted Woman, 1919 (Browning)
Unprecented Defense of the Fortress of Deutschkreuz. See Beispielelose Verteidigung der Festung Deutschkreuz, 1966
Unrecorded Story, 1942 (Lauder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)
Unrecorded Victory. See Spring Offensive, 1939
Uns et les autres, 1981 (Lelouch)
Unscrupulous Ones. See Os cafajestes, 1962
Unseen Enemy, 1912 (Griffith)
Unseen Forces, 1920 (Franklin)
Unsere Leichen Leben Noch, 1981 (Preminger)
Unsuspected, 1996 (Corman)
Unsuspected, 1947 (Curiz)
Until pere et tils, 1940 (Duvivier)
Unter dem pilaster ist der strand, 1975 (Sanders-Brahms)
Unter den Brücken, 1945 (Kautner)
Untertan, 1949 (Staudte)
Until Dusk. See Yugure made, 1980
Until the Day We Meet Again. See Mata au hi made, 1932
Until the End of the World, 1991 (Wenders)
Until They Get Me, 1917 (Borzage)
Until They Sail, 1957 (Wise)
Until We Meet Again. See Mata au hi made, 1950
Untitled Film of Geoffrey Holder’s Wedding, 1955 (Brakhage)
Untitled Film on Pittsburgh, 1959 (Brakhage)
Unto. See Nybyggarna, 1970
Untouchables, 1987 (de Palma)
Unvanquished. See Nepokorenniye, 1945
Unvanquished. See Aparajito, 1956
Unweiling Guest, 1912 (Griffith)
Unwelcome Guest, 1912 (Griffith)
Unwelcome Mrs. Hatch, 1914 (Dwan)
Unwillng Sinner. See Sjaelelyven, 1915
Uomini che mascalzioni!, 1932 (de Sica)
Uomini contro, 1970 (Rosi)
Uomini e cieli, 1943 (Bava)
Uomini e lusi, 1946 (Petrri)
Uomini e nobluomini, 1959 (de Sica)
Uomini in piú, 1950 (Antonioni)
Uomini non guardano il cielo, 1951 (de Sica)
Uomo che sorrilde, 1936 (de Sica)
Uomo da bruciare, 1962 (Taviani)
Uomo dai calzoni corti, 1958 (Bardem)
Uomo della croce, 1943 (Rossellini)
Uomo di paglia, 1957 (Germi)
Uomo, la bestia e la virtu, 1953 (Welles)
Uomo senza domenica, 1957 (Petri)
Up!, 1976 (Meyer)
Up at the Villa, 2000 (Pollack)
Up, down, and Sideways, 1991 (Cacyoyannis)
Up from the Beach, 1965 (Lumet)
Up in Alf’s Place, 1919 (Sennett)
Up in Mabel’s Room, 1944 (Dwan)
Up in the Clouds. See Akash Kusum, 1965
Up! Smokey. See Up!, 1976
Up the down Staircase, 1967 (Mulligan; Pakula)
Up the Junction, 1965 (Loach)
Up the River, 1930 (Ford)
Up to a Certain Point. See Hasta cierto punto, 1984
Up to a Point. See Hasta cierto punto, 1984
Up to His Ears. See Tribulations d’un chinois en Chine, 1965
Upir z Feratu, 1981 (Menzel)
Uppehall i myrlandet, 1965 (Troell)
Upper Hand, 1914 (Ingram)
Uppercut O’Brien, 1929 (Sennett)
Upstream. 1927 (Ford)
Upstream, 1931 (Grierson)
Uptight!, 1968 (Dassin)
Ural, 1919 (Kuleshov)
Uranos, 1990 (Berri)
Urban Justice, 1997 (Corman)
Urbanisme africain, 1962 (Rouch)
Urge, 1990 (Mikhalkov)
Uruwashiki saigetsu, 1955 (Kobayashi)
Urge a Nous Deux, 1979
Use of New Energy in. See Utilisation des énergies nouvelles en milieu rural, 1980
Used Cars, 1980 (Spielberg; Zemeckis)
Useful Sheep, 1912 (Sennett)
Uso, 1963 (Kinugasa)
Usual Suspects, 1995 (Barlet)
Usurer, 1910 (Griffith)
Usurer’s Son, See Under Savklingens Taender, 1913
Utand, 1960 (Kinugasa)
Utage, wakodo-tachi, 1963 (Kinoshita)
Utage, 1967 (Gosho)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Year(s)</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Utamaro and His Five Women. See Utamaro o meguru gonin no onna, 1946</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Utamaro o meguru gonin no onna, 1946 (Mizoguchi)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Utilisation des énergies nouvelles en milieu rural, 1980 (Kaboré)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Utinapló, 1989 (Mészáros)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Uttószezon, 1967 (Fűrész)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Utro, 1966 (Henning-Jensen)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Utsukushisa to kanashimi to, 1965 (Shinoda)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Utvandrarla, 1970 (Troell)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Uwasa no onna, 1954 (Mizoguchi)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Už zase skáču přes kaluže, 1970 (Kachyňa)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V bolshom gorode, 1927 (Donskoi)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V centrul filmului—v temple domova, 1998 (Forman)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V dni borbí, 1920 (Pudovkin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V gorakh Ala-Tau, 1944 (Vertov)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V gorodye S, 1927 (Donskoi)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V váru královské lásky, 1991 (Nemec)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V.I.P.s, 1963 (Welles)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond, 1915</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond, 1915 (Bacon; Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond King, 1956 (Curtiz)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond King, 1956</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vágabond. See Vagabond, 1916 (Bacon; Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
FILM TITLE INDEX

DIRECTORS, 4th EDITION

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Director</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Vice Squad</td>
<td>1931</td>
<td>Cromwell</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vices and Pleasures</td>
<td>1931</td>
<td>Cromwell</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vicious Circle</td>
<td>1978</td>
<td>Cadena Perpetua</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vicious Years</td>
<td>1950</td>
<td>Florey</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vicioli e delitti</td>
<td>1961</td>
<td>Wenders</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Victim</td>
<td>1961</td>
<td>Dearden</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Victim Five</td>
<td>1964</td>
<td>Roeg</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Victim of a Character</td>
<td>1951</td>
<td>Huster</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Victim of Circumstances</td>
<td>1911</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Victim of Jealousy</td>
<td>1910</td>
<td>Griffith</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Victim of Circumstances</td>
<td>1911</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Victim</td>
<td>1919</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Victory</td>
<td>1940</td>
<td>Cromwell</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Victory</td>
<td>1940</td>
<td>Cromwell</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Victory</td>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Antonioni</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Victim</td>
<td>1959</td>
<td>Dearden</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Victim</td>
<td>1959</td>
<td>Dearden</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Victim in Right-Bank Ukraine</td>
<td>1945</td>
<td>Fyodorov</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Victory of the Faith</td>
<td>1933</td>
<td>D'Aubigny</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Victory of Women</td>
<td>1946</td>
<td>Bresson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Victory Song</td>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Allongé</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vida Criminal de Archibaldo de La Cruz</td>
<td>1955</td>
<td>Giraud</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vidas secas</td>
<td>1965</td>
<td>Dos Santos</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Videodrome</td>
<td>1982</td>
<td>Cronenberg</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Video Space</td>
<td>1972</td>
<td>Vandemere</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie</td>
<td>1958</td>
<td>Straub</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie</td>
<td>1978</td>
<td>Straub</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie</td>
<td>1980</td>
<td>Straub</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie of Bohème</td>
<td>1943</td>
<td>L'herbier</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie du Christ</td>
<td>1906</td>
<td>(Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie del Petriolo</td>
<td>1965</td>
<td>Bertolucci</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie des travailleurs italiens en France</td>
<td>1926</td>
<td>Grémillon</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie devant soi</td>
<td>1977</td>
<td>Costa-Gavras</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie du Christ</td>
<td>1898</td>
<td>(Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie du marin</td>
<td>1906</td>
<td>(Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie d'un grand journal</td>
<td>1934</td>
<td>Epstein</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie d'un poète</td>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Cocteau</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie est à nous</td>
<td>1936</td>
<td>(Becker; Renaud)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie est un roman</td>
<td>1983</td>
<td>(Resnais)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie est un songe</td>
<td>1987</td>
<td>Ruiz</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie et rien d'autre</td>
<td>1989</td>
<td>Tavernier</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie fantôme</td>
<td>1992</td>
<td>Huillet</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie</td>
<td>1992</td>
<td>Kaurismaki</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie et rien d'autre</td>
<td>1989</td>
<td>Tavernier</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie est un songe</td>
<td>1987</td>
<td>Ruiz</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie est un roman</td>
<td>1983</td>
<td>(Resnais)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie, 1958</td>
<td>Astruc; Straub, Jean-Marie, And Danièle Huillet</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Videodrome</td>
<td>1982</td>
<td>Cronenberg</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vida Criminal de Archibaldo de La Cruz</td>
<td>1955</td>
<td>Giraud</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vidas secas</td>
<td>1965</td>
<td>Dos Santos</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Videodrome</td>
<td>1982</td>
<td>Cronenberg</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Video Space</td>
<td>1972</td>
<td>Vandemere</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie</td>
<td>1958</td>
<td>Straub</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie</td>
<td>1978</td>
<td>Straub</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie</td>
<td>1980</td>
<td>Straub</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie de Bohème</td>
<td>1943</td>
<td>L'herbier</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie du Christ</td>
<td>1906</td>
<td>(Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie del Petriolo</td>
<td>1965</td>
<td>Bertolucci</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie des travailleurs italiens en France</td>
<td>1926</td>
<td>Grémillon</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie devant soi</td>
<td>1977</td>
<td>Costa-Gavras</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie du Christ</td>
<td>1898</td>
<td>(Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie du marin</td>
<td>1906</td>
<td>(Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie d’un grand journal</td>
<td>1934</td>
<td>Epstein</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie d’un poète</td>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Cocteau</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie est à nous</td>
<td>1936</td>
<td>(Becker; Renaud)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie est un roman</td>
<td>1983</td>
<td>(Resnais)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie est un songe</td>
<td>1987</td>
<td>Ruiz</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie et rien d’autre</td>
<td>1989</td>
<td>Tavernier</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie fantôme</td>
<td>1992</td>
<td>Huillet</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie</td>
<td>1992</td>
<td>Kaurismaki</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie et rien d’autre</td>
<td>1989</td>
<td>Tavernier</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie est un songe</td>
<td>1987</td>
<td>Ruiz</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie est un roman</td>
<td>1983</td>
<td>(Resnais)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie, 1958</td>
<td>Astruc; Straub, Jean-Marie, And Danièle Huillet</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Videodrome</td>
<td>1982</td>
<td>Cronenberg</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vida Criminal de Archibaldo de La Cruz</td>
<td>1955</td>
<td>Giraud</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vidas secas</td>
<td>1965</td>
<td>Dos Santos</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Videodrome</td>
<td>1982</td>
<td>Cronenberg</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Video Space</td>
<td>1972</td>
<td>Vandemere</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie</td>
<td>1958</td>
<td>Straub</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie</td>
<td>1978</td>
<td>Straub</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie</td>
<td>1980</td>
<td>Straub</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie de Bohème</td>
<td>1943</td>
<td>L’herbier</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie du Christ</td>
<td>1906</td>
<td>(Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie del Petriolo</td>
<td>1965</td>
<td>Bertolucci</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie des travailleurs italiens en France</td>
<td>1926</td>
<td>Grémillon</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie devant soi</td>
<td>1977</td>
<td>Costa-Gavras</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie du Christ</td>
<td>1898</td>
<td>(Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie du marin</td>
<td>1906</td>
<td>(Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie d’un grand journal</td>
<td>1934</td>
<td>Epstein</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie d’un poète</td>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Cocteau</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie est à nous</td>
<td>1936</td>
<td>(Becker; Renaud)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie est un roman</td>
<td>1983</td>
<td>(Resnais)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie est un songe</td>
<td>1987</td>
<td>Ruiz</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie et rien d’autre</td>
<td>1989</td>
<td>Tavernier</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie fantôme</td>
<td>1992</td>
<td>Huillet</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie, l’amour, la mort</td>
<td>1968</td>
<td>(Lelouch)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie miraculeuse de Thérèse Martin</td>
<td>1929</td>
<td>Duvivier</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie ou la mort</td>
<td>1912</td>
<td>Feuillade</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie parisienne</td>
<td>1936</td>
<td>(Siodmak)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie privée</td>
<td>1962</td>
<td>(Malle)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vie sans joie</td>
<td>1927</td>
<td>Catherine</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Veil homme et l’enfant</td>
<td>1967</td>
<td>Berri</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vieilles Estampes</td>
<td>1904</td>
<td>(Guy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vieilles Femmes de l’Hospice</td>
<td>1917</td>
<td>Feyder</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vienna Blood</td>
<td>1970</td>
<td>Blu</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vienna Burgtheater</td>
<td>1936</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vienna, City of my Dreams</td>
<td>1957</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vienna Woods</td>
<td>1963</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Viennese Maidens</td>
<td>1944</td>
<td>Mädel</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Viens chez moi, j’habite chez une copine</td>
<td>1981</td>
<td>(Leconte)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vier genen die bank</td>
<td>1976</td>
<td>(Petersen)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vier um die Frau</td>
<td>1920</td>
<td>Herzgen</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Additional Information

- Vice Squad (1931) - Cromwell
- Vices and Pleasures (1931) - Cromwell
- Vicious Circle (1978) - Cadena Perpetua
- Vicious Years (1950) - Florey
- Vicioli e delitti (1961) - Wenders
- Victim (1961) - Dearden
- Victim Five (1964) - Roeg
- Victim of a Character (1951) - Huster
- Victim of Circumstances (1911) - Sennett
- Victim of Jealousy (1910) - Griffith
- Victim of Circumstances (1911) - Sennett
- Victim (1919) - Tourneur
- Victory (1940) - Cromwell
- Victory (1952) - Antonioni
- Victim of Circumstances (1911) - Sennett
- Victim (1959) - Dearden
- Vida Criminal de Archibaldo de La Cruz (1955) - Giraud
- Vidas secas (1965) - Dos Santos
- Videodrome (1982) - Cronenberg
- Video Space (1972) - Vandemere
- Vie (1958) - Straub
- Vie fantôme (1992) - Huillet
- Vie de Bohème (1943) - L’herbier
- Vie du Christ (1906) - (Guy)
- Vie del Petriolo (1965) - Bertolucci
- Vie des travailleurs italiens en France (1926) - Grémillon
- Vie devant soi (1977) - Costa-Gavras
- Vie du Christ (1898) - (Guy)
- Vie du marin (1906) - (Guy)
- Vie d’un grand journal (1934) - Epstein
- Vie d’un poète (1930) - Cocteau
- Vie est à nous (1936) - (Becker; Renaud)
- Vie est un roman (1983) - (Resnais)
- Vie est un songe (1987) - Ruiz
- Vie et rien d’autre (1989) - Tavernier
- Vie fantôme (1992) - Huillet
- Vie, l’amour, la mort (1968) - (Lelouch)
- Vie miraculeuse de Thérèse Martin (1929) - Duvivier
- Vie ou la mort (1912) - Feuillade
- Vie parisienne (1936) - (Siodmak)
- Vie privée (1962) - (Malle)
- Vie sans joie (1927) - Catherine
- Veil homme et l’enfant (1967) - Berri
- Vieilles Estampes (1904) - (Guy)
- Vieilles Femmes de l’Hospice (1917) - Feyder
- Vienna Blood (1970) - Blu
- Vienna Burgtheater (1936)
- Vienna, City of my Dreams (1957)
- Vienna Woods (1963)
- Viennese Maidens (1944) - Mädel
- Viens chez moi, j’habite chez une copine (1981) - (Leconte)
- Vier genen die bank (1976) - (Petersen)
- Vier um die Frau (1920) - Herzgen
Vive la vie!, 1984 (Lelouch)
Vive la vie, 1937 (Epstein)
Vive le sabotage, 1907 (Feuillade)
Vivement dimanche!, 1984 (Truffaut)
Vivre pour vivre, 1967 (Lelouch)

Vivre sa vie, 1962 (Godard)
Vixen!, 1968 (Meyer)

Vivex. See Supervivex, 1975

Vizí privati, publikhe virtů, 1976 (Jancsó)

Vizivároš Nyár, 1965 (Fábri)
Vizkerešzet, 1967 (Gaál)

Vladimir et Rosa, 1971 (Godard)
Vladimir Horowitz: The Last Romantic, 1986 (Maysles)

Vlád kló stáncie nebe, 1972 (Kachyňa)

Vléj jáma, 1957 (Weiss)
Vlci bouda, 1986 (Chytilová)

Vlotá hujÚch, 1939 (Donskoj)
Vo imya zhizni, 1946 (Heifitz)

Vo imya rodini, 1943 (Pudovkin)

Vlyudyakh, 1939 (García Berlanga)

Vivacious Lady, 1938 (Stevens)

Viva Zapata!, 1952 (Kazan)

Viva Villa!, 1934 ( Hawks)

Vivacent Lady, 1938 (Stevens)

Vivian los novios, 1969 (García Berlanga)

Vive Henri IV . . . Vive l’amour, 1962 (Autant-Lara; de Sica)

Vive la musique et la liberté, 1989 (Jireš)

Vive la Vie!, 1984 (Lelouch)

Vive le monde, 1943 (Cicognoli)

Vivere in pace, 1911 (Sennett)

Vive la liberté, 1909 (Brakhage)

Vivere in pace, 1911 (Sennett)

Vivere in pace, 1911 (Sennett)

Vive le sabotage, 1907 (Feuillade)

Vivre pour vivre, 1967 (Lelouch)

Vivere in pace, 1911 (Sennett)

Vive le sabotage, 1907 (Feuillade)

Vivre pour vivre, 1967 (Lelouch)

Vivere in pace, 1911 (Sennett)

Vive le sabotaje, 1907 (Feuillade)

Vivement dimanche!, 1984 (Truffaut)

Vivre pour vivre, 1967 (Lelouch)

Vivere in pace, 1911 (Sennett)

Vive la vie, 1937 (Epstein)

Vive le sabotage, 1907 (Feuillade)

Vivement dimanche!, 1984 (Truffaut)

Vivre pour vivre, 1967 (Lelouch)

Vivere in pace, 1911 (Sennett)

Vive le sabotaje, 1907 (Feuillade)

Vivement dimanche!, 1984 (Truffaut)

Vivre pour vivre, 1967 (Lelouch)

Vivere in pace, 1911 (Sennett)

Vive le sabotage, 1907 (Feuillade)

Vivement dimanche!, 1984 (Truffaut)

Vivre pour vivre, 1967 (Lelouch)

Vivere in pace, 1911 (Sennett)

Vive le sabotaje, 1907 (Feuillade)

Vivement dimanche!, 1984 (Truffaut)

Vivre pour vivre, 1967 (Lelouch)

Vivere in pace, 1911 (Sennett)

Vive le sabotaje, 1907 (Feuillade)

Vivement dimanche!, 1984 (Truffaut)

Vivre pour vivre, 1967 (Lelouch)

Vivere in pace, 1911 (Sennett)

Vive le sabotaje, 1907 (Feuillade)

Vivement dimanche!, 1984 (Truffaut)

Vivre pour vivre, 1967 (Lelouch)
Wandering Image. See Wandernde Bild, 1920
Wandering on Highways. See Országútak vándora, 1956
Wandering Willis, 1926 (Sennett)
Wandernde Bild, 1920 (Lang)
Wandernde Licht, 1916 (Wiene)
Wann—wenn nicht jetzt?; 1947 (Dörrie)
Wanted, a Child, 1909 (Griffith)
Wanters, 1923 (Stahl)
Wanzerbe, 1968 (Rouch)
War and Peace, 1956 (Vidor)
War and Peace. See Krieg und Frieden, 1983
War and Peace. See Voina i mir, 1915
War and Youth. See Senso zu Seishun, 1991
War between Boys and Girls. See Nan Hai Yu Nü Hai Te Chan
Cheng, 1976
War Correspondent. See Kriegs-korrespondenten, 1913
War Game, 1961 (Zetterling)
War Games, 1983 (Badham)
War Gods of the Deep, 1965 (Tourneur)
War Games, 1994 (Corman)
Warner's Rest.
Warrior's Rest.
Warren of Virginia, 1915 (de Mille)
Warriors, 1979 (Hill)/Warrior's Rest. See Repos du guerrier, 1962
Wars of the Primal Tribes. See In Prehistoric Days, 1913
Warsaw World Youth Meeting I-III. See A Varsoif vit, 1955
Was Justice Served?, 1909 (Griffith)
Was ist los mit Nanette, 1928 (Holger-Madsen)
Was He a Coward?, 1911 (Griffith)
Was Frauen träumen, 1933 (Wilder)
Was der Geist geht, 1952 (Hundertwasser)
Warui yatsu hodo yoku nemuru, 1960 (Kurosawa)
Wars of the Satellites, 1958 (Corman)
Way. See Redes, 1934/35
Way of All Fish, 1931 (Fleming; Sandrich)
Way of Man, 1909 (Griffith)
Way of the Strong, 1928 (Capra)
Way of the West, 1911 (Dwan)
Way of the World, 1910 (Griffith)
Way out West, 1930 (Nicol)
Way Past Cool, 2000 (Forman)
Way to Paradise, See Chemin du paradis, 1956
Way to Shadow Garden, 1954 (Brakhage)
Way to the Sea, 1936 (Rotha)
Way to the Skies. See Droga do nieba, 1958
Way up Thar, 1935 (Sennett)
Way We Were, 1973 (Pollack)
Wayne's World, 1992 (Speeris)
Ways in the Night.
Ways of Fate, 1913 (Dwan)
Way We Were, 1973 (Pollack)
Way We Were, 1973 (Pollack)
We Hold These.
We Are from the Urals.
We Are from the Urals.
We Are Not Alone, 1939 (Goulding)
We Are Not Made out of Stone.
We Are Not Made out of Stone.
We Can't Have Everything, 1918 (de Mille)
We Faw Down, 1928 (Mccarey)
We har manje namn, 1976 (Zetterling)
We Have Many Names. See We har manje namn, 1976
We Hold These, 1994 (Brakhage)
We Hold These. See Trilogy, 1994/95
We Live Again, 1934 (Mamoulian; Sturges)
We Live in Two Worlds, 1937 (Cavalanti; Grierson)
We Moderns, 1925 (Leroy)
We Sail at Midnight, 1943 (Ford)
We Still Kill the Old Way. See A ciascuno il suo, 1967
We Three. See Hum Tum Aur Woh, 1938
We Took over the Cause of Peace. See Kezunbe vettuk a béke ugyét, 1950
We Were Strangers, 1949 (Huston)
Weaker Brother, 1912 (Dwan)
Wealth of Waters, 1953/55 (Rotha)
Wear a Very Big Hat, 1965 (Loach)
Weary Death. See Müde Tod: Ein Deutsches Volkslied in Sechs Versen, 1921
Weather Forecast, 1934 (Grierson)
Weather Wizards, 1939 (Zinnemann)
Web of Passion. See A double tour, 1959
Webster Boy, 1962 (Cassavetes)
Wedding, 1978 (Altman; Cromwell)
Wedding, 1998 (Burnett)
Wedding. See Wesele, 1972
Wedding Band, 1990 (Spheeris)
Wedding Banquet. See Kekkon koshinkyoku, 1951
Wedding Bells. See Royal Wedding, 1951Wedding Bells Out of Tune, 1921 (Sennett)
Wedding Day. See Baishey Shravana, 1960
Wedding Dress, 1912 (Dwan)
Wedding during the French Revolution. See Revolutionsbryllup, 1909
Wedding in Blood. See Noces rouges, 1973
Wedding in the Eccentric Club. See Hochzeit im Ekzentrik Klub, 1917
Wedding March, 1927 (von Stroheim)
Wedding March. See Kekkon koshinkyoku, 1951
Wedding Night, 1935 (Vidor)
Wedding Party, 1969 (de Palma)
Wedding Rehearsal, 1933 (Korda)
Wedding Ring. See Prstýnek, 1944
Wedlock House: An Intercourse, 1959 (Brakhage)
Wednesday Love, 1975 (Apted)
Wee Geordie. See Geordie, 1955
Wee Lady Betty, 1917 (Borzage)
Wee Willie Winkie, 1937 (Ford)
Weeding the Garden, 1974 (Asch)
Weekend, 1930 (Ruttman)
Weekend. 1967 (Goddard; Miller)
Weekend of a Champion, 1972 (Polanski)
Weekend with Father, 1951 (Sirk)
Weekend Wives, 1928 (Lauder and Gilliat)
Weekly Reels. See Kino-Nedelia, 1918-19
Week’s Vacation. See Semaine de vacances, 1981
Wee Willie Winkie, 1937 (Ford)
Wee, What?.
What the Daisy Said, 1910 (Griffith)
What the Doctor Ordered, 1911 (Sennett)
What Who How, 1957 (Vanderbeck)
What Will People Say?!, 1916 (Guy)
Whatever Happened to Aunt Alice?, 1969 (Aldrich)
Whatever Happened to Baby Jane?, 1962 (Aldrich)
Whatever Happened to Green Valley?, 1973 (Weir)
What's a Nice Girl like You Doing in a Place like This?, 1963 (Scorsese)
What's Eating Gilbert Grape, 1993 (Hallstrom)
What's Happened to Sugar, 1945 (Flaherty)
What's Who How, 1957 (Vanderbeek)
What the Doctor Ordered, 1911 (Sennett)
When a Man's a Prince, 1926 (Sennett)
When a Girl Loves, 1919 (Weber)
Wheels of Time.
Wheel of Life.
Wheeeeels No. 2, 1959 (Vanderbeek)
Wheeeeels No. 1, 1958 (Vanderbeek)
What's Worth While?, 1921 (Weber)
When a Woman Loves.
When a Woman Loves. See Otac na sluzbenoh putu, 1985
When Harry Met Sally, 1989 (Reiner)
When You're Married. See Mabel's Married Life, 1914
Where Are My Children?, 1916 (Weber)
Where Broadway Meets the Mountains, 1912 (Dwan)
Where Chimes Are Seen. See Entotsu no mieru basho, 1953
Where Do We Go From Here, 1945 (Preminger)
Where Eagles Dare, 1969 (Eastwood)
Where East Is East, 1929 (Browning)
Where Hazel Met the Villain, 1914 (Sennett)
Where Is My Wandering Boy This Evening, 1923 (Sennett)
Where Is Parsifal?, 1984 (Welles)
Where Is the Friend's House?. See Khane-ye Doust Kojadast?, 1987
Where Love Has Gone, 1964 (Dmytryk)
Where Mountains Float. See Hvor bjergene sejler, 1955
Where Now Are the Dreams of Youth?. See Seishun no yume ima izuko, 1932
Where the Breakers Roar, 1908 (Griffith)
Where the Ganges Flows. See Jis Desh Me Ganga Behti Hai, 1960
Where the Heart Is, 1990 (Boorman)
Where the Hot Winds Blow. See Legge, 1959
Where the Pavement Ends, 1922 (Ingram)
Where the Sidewalk Ends, 1950 (Preminger)
Where There's a Heart, 1912 (Dwan)
Where There’s a Will, 1936 (Lauder and Gilliat)
Where’s Poppa, 1970 (Reiner)
Wherever We Are, 1987 (Zanussi)
Which Is Which.
Whispering Whiskers, 1926 (Sennett)
Whispering Chorus, 1918 (de Mille)
Whisky Galore, 1949 (Mackendrick)
Whirls and Girls, 1929 (Sennett)
Whirlpool, 1949 (Preminger)
Whip and the Body. See Frusta e il corpo, 1963
Whirlpool, 1949 (Preminger)
Whirls and Girls, 1929 (Sennett)
Whisky Galore, 1949 (Mackendrick)
Whispering Chorus, 1918 (de Mille)
Whispering Whiskers, 1926 (Sennett)
Whistle, 2000 (Lumet)
Whistle at Eaton Falls, 1951 (Siodmak)
Whistle-Stop. See Polustanok, 1963
White, 1993 (Brakhage)
White Balloon. See Badkonake sefid, 1995
White Banners, 1938 (Goulding)
White Bus, 1967 (Anderson)
White Caps, 1905 (Porter)
White Christmas, 1954 (Curtiz)
White Circle, 1920 (Tourneur)
White Cliff. See Shirōi gake, 1960
White Cliffs of Dover, 1944 (Franklin)
White Dawn, 1974 (Kaufman)
White Devil. See Den Hvide Djevel, eller Djevelens Protege, 1916
White Dog, 1982 (Bartel; Fuller)
White Eagle. See Byelyi orel, 1928
White Fangs. See Shirōi kiba, 1960
White Feather, 1955 (Daves)
White Flannels, 1927 (Bacon)
White Ghost. See Den Hvide Dame, 1913
White Heat, 1934 (Weber)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>White Heat</td>
<td>1949</td>
<td>Walsh</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Hell of Pitz-Palu</td>
<td>1929</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Horse Inn</td>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Dwan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Hotel</td>
<td>1950</td>
<td>Aldrich</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Hunter, Black Heart</td>
<td>1990</td>
<td>Eastwood</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Journey</td>
<td>1925</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Lament</td>
<td>1916</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Man</td>
<td>1914</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Moth</td>
<td>1924</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Nights</td>
<td>1924</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Nights</td>
<td>1925</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Palace</td>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Peacock</td>
<td>1920</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Red Man</td>
<td>1924</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Rose, Weisse Pfau</td>
<td>1924</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Rose of the Wilds</td>
<td>1911</td>
<td>Griffith; Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Roses of Ravensberg</td>
<td>1929</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Sea of Yushima</td>
<td>1955</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Shadow</td>
<td>1923</td>
<td>Hitchcock</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Shadows, Lament</td>
<td>1916</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Sheep</td>
<td>1924</td>
<td>Stevens</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Sister, Weisse Pflau</td>
<td>1924</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Slave</td>
<td>1910</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Slide</td>
<td>1960</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Squall</td>
<td>1996</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Tiger</td>
<td>1923</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Tower</td>
<td>1925</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Treachery</td>
<td>1923</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Warrior, Weisse Pfau</td>
<td>1959</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Whales, Weisse Pflau</td>
<td>1987</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Widow</td>
<td>1916</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Wing’s Bride</td>
<td>1925</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Whitewash, Weisse Pflau</td>
<td>1924</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Why Are You, Old People?</td>
<td>1988</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Why Care Deep</td>
<td>1960</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Why Did It?, 1955 (Dearden)</td>
<td></td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Why Framed Roger Rabbit?</td>
<td>1988</td>
<td>Zemeckis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Who Got Stung?</td>
<td>1914</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Who Got the Reward, 1911</td>
<td></td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Who Has Been Rocking My Dream</td>
<td></td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Who Ho Ray No.1, 1921 (Vanderbeek)</td>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Who Is Henry Jaglom?, 1966</td>
<td></td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Who Killed Barno O’Neal</td>
<td>1916</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Who Saw Him Die?</td>
<td>1968</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Who Seeks the Gold Bottom</td>
<td>1975</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Who So Loveth His Father’s Honor</td>
<td>1915</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Who Writes to Switzerland, 1937 (Cavalcanti)</td>
<td></td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Whoopee, 1930 (Berkeley)</td>
<td></td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Who’s Afraid of the Avant-Garde, 1968 (Leacock)</td>
<td>1968</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf?, 1966 (Nichols)</td>
<td>1966</td>
<td>Sennett</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Wild Country, 1971 (Howard)
Wild Flowers. See Fleurs sauvages, 1982
Wild Gals of the Naked West!, 1962 (Meyer)
Wild Game. See Wildwechsel, 1972
Wild Girl, 1914 (Browning)
Wild Girl, 1932 (Walsh)
Wild Goose Chase, 1915 (de Mille)
Wild Goose Chase. See Course à l’échalote, 1975
Wild Goose Chaser, 1925 (Sennett)
Wild Heart. See Gone to Earth, 1950
Wild Heather, 1921 (Hepworth)
Wild Is the Wind, 1957 (Cukor)
Wild Man Blues, 1998 (Allen; Kopple)
Wild Man of Borneo, 1941 (Sennett)
Wild Man of the West, 1970 (Walsh)
Wild Thing, 1987 (Sayles)
Wild West Love, 1941 (Sennett)
Wild Woman, 1918 (Dwan)
Wildflower, 1914 (Dwan)
Wildside. See Vilda spor, 1998
Wildwechsel, 1972 (Fassbinder)
Wilfredo Lam, 1978 (Solas)
Wilful Ambrose, 1915 (Sennett)
Wilful Peggy, 1910 (Griffith)
Wilhelm von Kobell, 1966 (Syberberg)
Will, 1968 (Vanderbeek)
Will of His Grace. See Hans nåds testamente, 1919
Will of James Waldron, 1912 (Dwan)
Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter?, 1957 (Tashlin)
Willi Tobler and the Wreck of the Sixth Fleet. See Willi Tobler and der Untergang der sechste Flotte, 1971
Willi Tobler und der Untergang der sechste Flotte, 1971 (Kluge)
William Shakespeare’s Hamlet. See Hamlet, 1996
Willie Makes an Artist, 1911 (Sennett)
Willie Minds the Dog, 1913 (Sennett)
Willow, 1988 (Howard; Lucas)
Willow Springs, 1973 (Schroeter)
Willows of Ginza. See Ginza no yanagi, 1932
Wilmington 10—USA 10,000, 1982 (Gerima)
Winchester ’73, 1950 (Mann)
Wind, 1928 (Sjöström)
Wind, 1992 (Coppola)
Wind. See Finyé, 1982
Wind across the Everglades, 1958 (Ray)
Wind and the Lion, 1975 (Huston)
Wind Rose. See Windrose, 1954
Wind Will Carry Us. See Bad ma ra khabad bord, 1999
Windbag the Sailor, 1935 (Launer and Gilliat)
Windfall in Athens, 1953 (Cacoyannis)
Windmill in Barbados, 1933 (Cavalcanti; Grierson)
Window, 1976 (Brakhage)
Window Dummy, 1925 (Sennett)
Window Suite of Children’s Songs, 1969 (Brakhage)
Window Water Baby Moving, 1959 (Brakhage)
Wings, 1927 (Wellman)
Wings. See Krylya, 1966
Wings. See Vingarne, 1916
Wings against the Wind, 2000 (Palcy)
Wings and Wheels, 1916 (Sennett)
Wings for the Eagle, 1942 (Bacon)
Wings of Desire. See Himmel über Berlin, 1987
Wings of Eagles, 1957 (Ford)
Wings of the Hawk, 1953 (Boetticher)
Wings of the Navy, 1939 (Bacon)
Winifred Wagner und die Geschichte des Hauses Wahnfried von 1914-1975, 1975 (Syberberg)
Winning Back His Love, 1910 (Griffith)
Winning Coat, 1909 (Griffith)
Winning of La Mesa, 1912 (Dwan)
Winning Punch, 1916 (Sennett)
Winter Children. See Winterborn, 1978
Winter Kills, 1979 (Huston)
Winter Light. See Natvardsgästerna, 1963
Winter Soldier, 1972 (Kopple)
Winter Sports and Pastimes of Coronado Beach, 1912 (Dwan)
Winter Wind. See Winterkind, 1997 (von Trotta)
Wipping Something off the Slate, 1900 (Hepworth)
Wir Kinder der Hölle, 1977 (Syberberg)
Wir machen Musik, 1942 (Käutner)
Wir verbräuen 3 x 27 Milliarden Dollar in einen Angriffs-schlachter, 1971 (Kluge)
Wise Blood, 1979 (Huston)
Wise Guys, 1986 (de Palma)
Wise Kid, 1922 (Browning)
Wiser Sex, 1932 (Zinnemann)
Wise Blood, 1979 (Huston)
Wise Blood, 1979 (Huston)
Wise Children. See De Forviste, 1914
Wishmaster, 1997 (Craven)
Wishing Ring, 1914 (Tourneur)
Wishing Seat, 1913 (Dwan)
Wish You Were There, 1985 (Anderson)
Wish-Fulfillment. See Ichhapuran, 1970
Wished on Mabel, 1915 (Sennett)
Wise Blood, 1979 (Huston)
Wise Blood, 1979 (Huston)
Wise Blood, 1979 (Huston)
Wise Blood, 1979 (Huston)
Wish You Were There, 1985 (Anderson)
Wish-Fulfillment. See Ichhapuran, 1970
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Directors</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Without Reservations</td>
<td>1946</td>
<td>Leroy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Without Witness. See Bes svideteley</td>
<td>1983</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Witness, 1985 (Weir)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Witness for the Prosecution</td>
<td>1958</td>
<td>Wilder</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Witness to the Will, 1914 (Ingram)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wittgenstein, 1993 (Jarman)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wittold Lutoslawski, 1991 (Zanussi)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wives of Men, 1918 (Stahl)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wives under Suspicion, 1938 (Whale)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wiz, 1978 (Lumet; Schumacher)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wizard of Oz. 1939 (Fleming; Leroy)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wizards of the Lost Kingdom II</td>
<td>1989</td>
<td>Corman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wo de fu qin mu qin, 1999 (Zhang Yimou)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wo Die Grünen Ameisen Traümen. See Where the Green Ants Dream, 1983</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wo ist mein Schatz?, 1916 (Lubitsch)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wochenende. See Weekend, 1930</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wodaabe—Die Hirten der Sonne, 1988 (Herzog)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wolf, 1994 (Nichols)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wolf. See Farkas, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wolf, Are You There?. See Loup y es-tu?, 1983</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wolf Hunters, 1949 (Boetticher)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wolf Song, 1929 (Fleming)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wolf Trap. See Vlčí jáma, 1957</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wolf’s Hole. See Vlci bouda, 1986</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wolkenbau und Flimmerstern, 1919 (Lang)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wolves. See Ookami, 1955</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman, 1918 (Tourneur)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman, 1915 (Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman. See Aurat, 1940</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman. See Onna, 1948</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman Alone, 1982 (Holland)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman Alone. See Sabotage, 1936</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman and the Law, 1918 (Walsh)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman Basketball Player Number Five, 1957 (Xie Jin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman Between, 1931 (Lauder and Gilliat)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman by the Road. See Frau am Wege, 1948</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman Disputed, 1927 (Florey)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman from Mellon’s, 1909 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman from Monte Carlo, 1932 (Curtiz)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman from the Property-owning Middle Class, Born 1908, See Besitzbürgerin, Jahrgang 1908, 1972</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman from Warren’s, 1915 (Browning)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman God Forgot, 1917 (de Mille)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman Haters, 1913 (Sennett)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman He Married, 1922 (Niblo)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman Hunt, 1974 (Corman)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman in His House, 1920 (Stahl)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman in Red, 1934 (Florey)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman in the Suitcase, 1920 (Niblo)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman in the Window, 1944 (Lang)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman in White. See Journal d’une femme en blanc, 1965</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman Named En. See En to iu onna, 1971</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman Next Door. See Femme d’à côté, 1981</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman of Bronze, 1923 (Vidor)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman of Mystery, 1914 (Guy)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman of Osaka. See Osaka no onna, 1958</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman of Pale Night. See Oboro yo no onna, 1936</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman of Paris, 1923 (Chaplin)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman of Pleasure. See Kanraku no onna, 1924</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman of Rose Hill. See Femme de Rose Hill, 1989</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman of Straw, 1964 (Dearden)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman of Summer. See Stripper, 1963</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman of the Port. See Mujer del Puerto, 1992</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman of the Osore Mountains. See Osore-zen no onna, 1964</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman of the People. See En Kvinde af Folket, 1909</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman of the Rumor. See Uwassa no onna, 1954</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman of the Sea, 1926 (Chaplin; von Sternberg)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman of the Sea. See Sea Gull, 1926</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman of the Year, 1942 (Mankiewicz; Stevens)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman on the Beach, 1947 (Renoir)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman on Trial, 1927 (Stiller)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman Opposite, 1968 (Polanski)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman Possessed, 1958 (Roeg)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman Racket. See Cargaison blanche, 1937</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman Rebels, 1936 (Sandrich)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman Scorned, 1911 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman Tempted Me. See Den frelsende Film, 1915</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman They Almost Lynched, 1953 (Dwan)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman Times Seven, 1967 (de Sica)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman to Woman, 1923 (Hitchcock)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman Trap, 1929 (Wellman)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman under Oath, 1919 (Stahl)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman under the Influence, 1974 (Cassavetes)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman Who Did. See Frau mit dem schlechten Ruf, 1924</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman Who Is Waiting. See Machiboke no onna, 1946</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman Who Killed a Vulture. See Geier-Wally, 1921</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman Who Touched Legs. See Ashi ni sawatta onna, 1952</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman with a Dagger. See Zhengchchina s kinzhalom, 1916</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman with the Orchid. See Frau mit den Orchiden, 1919</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman without a Face. See Kvïnna utan ansikte, 1947</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman, Wake Up, 1922 (Vidor)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman, Ways of Love. See Amore, 1947</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman-Wise, 1937 (Dwan)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Womanhandled, 1925 (La Cava)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Womanlight. See Clair de femme, 1979</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman’s Decision. See Bilans kwartalny, 1975</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman’s Decoration. See Onna no kundo, 1961</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman’s Descent. See Onna no saka, 1960</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman’s Face. 1941 (Cukor)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman’s Face. See Onna no kao, 1949</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman’s Fool, 1918 (Ford)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman’s Heresy. See Jashumon no onna, 1924</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman’s Honor, 1913 (Dwan)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman’s Past, 1915 (Dwan)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman’s Puzzle. See Montage, 1936</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman's Right to Exist. See Jashumin no onna, 1924</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman’s Secret. 1948 (Ray)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman’s Testament, Part 2: Women Who Sell Things at High Prices. See Jokyo II: Mono o takaku uritsukeru onna, 1959</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman’s Vengeance, 1948 (Korda)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woman’s Way, 1908 (Griffith)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Women, 1939 (Cukor)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Women, 1973 (Brakhage)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Women and Development, 1984 (Nair)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Women and Miso Soup. See Onna no misoshiru, 1968</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Women and War, 1913 (Dwan)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Women Are No Angels. See Frauen sind keine Engel, 1943</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Women Are Strong. See Josei wa tsuyoshi, 1924</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Women Defend the Home!. See Osore-zan no onna, 1964</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Women, Do Not Shame Your Names. See Onna yo, kini no na o kegusu nakare, 1930</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Women Everywhere, 1930 (Korda)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Women in Cages, 1971 (Corman)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Women in Limbo. See Limbo, 1972</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Women in New York. Frauen sind keine Engel, 1943</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Women in Limbo. See Limbo, 1972</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Women in Limbo. See Limbo, 1972</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Women Left Alone, 1913 (Dwan)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Women Love Diamonds, 1927 (Goulding)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Women Men Forget, 1920 (Stahl)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Women of all Nations, 1931 (Walsh)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Women of the Ginza. See Ginza no onna, 1955
Women of the Night. See Yoru no onnatachi, 1948
Women of Troy. See Troy Women, 1971
Women on the Verge of a Nervous Breakdown. See Mujeres al borde de un ataque de nervios, 1988
Women Should Stay at Home. See Onna koso ie o momore, 1939
Women: So We Are Made. See Nessa bala Rejal, 1952
Women without Men. See Red Army Detachment, 1960 (Xie Jin)
Women's Scroll. See Jokei, 1960
Women’s Town. See Onna no machi, 1940
Won by a Fish, 1911 (Sennett)
Won in a Closet, 1914 (Sennett)
Won by a Fish, 1911 (Sennett)
Wonder Bar, 1934 (Bacon; Berkeley)
Wonder Ring, 1955 (Brakhage)
Wonderful Adventure, 1915 (Ingram)
Wonderful Crook. See Pas si méchant que ça, 1975
Wonderful Eye, 1911 (Sennett)
Wonderful Times. See Herrliche Zeiten, 1950
Wonderful Years. See Restless Years, 1958
Wonders of Aladdin. See Mokaseki, 1940
Wooers of Mountain Kate, 1912 (Dwan)
Woodstock '94, 1998 (Kopple)
Woodstock, 1970 (Scorsese)
Wooden Leg, 1909 (Griffith)
Word. See Prześwietlenie, 1973
Wordless Message, 1912 (Dwan)
Words for Battle, 1941 (Jennings)
Work, 1915 (Chaplin)
Working–Class Man.
Working Girls, 1986 (Borden; Leacock)
Working Girls, 1931 (Arzner)
Working Girl, 1988 (Nichols)
Working Girls, 1914 (Browning)
Wrong Again, 1929 (McCarey)
Wrong Kid, 1973 (Marshall)
Wrong Man, 1956 (Hitchcock)
Wrong Movement. See Falsche Bewegung, 1974
Wrongdoers. See Vurguncular, 1971
World Championship of Air Models. See Mistrovství světa leteckých modelářů, 1957
World Changes, 1933 (Leroy)
World Flier, 1931 (Sennett)
World for Ransom, 1954 (Aldrich)
World's Best Bride. See Hanayome san wa sekai-ichi, 1959
Worlds in Struggle. See Kämpfende Welten, 1922
World’s Oldest Living Thing, 1914 (Sennett)
Worse You Are the Better You Sleep. See Warui yatsu hodo yoku nemuru, 1960
Worsted of Disasters, 1941 (Ivens)
Worsted of Friends, 1916 (Sennett)
Worthless, See Avrovotomat, 1982
Woton’s Wake, 1963 (de Palma)
Wrecks. See Wraki, 1957
Wrestler and the Clown. See Borets i kloun, 1957
Wrestlers, 1933 (Sennett)
Wrestler’s Bride. See Wrestlers, 1933
Wrestling Swordfish, 1931 (Sennett)
Wrestling-Ring Festival. See Dobyo-matsuri, 1944
Wriencing Good Joke, 1900 (Porter)
Written on the Wind. 1956 (Sirk)
Wrong Against, 1929 (McCarey)
Wrong All Around, 1914 (Browning)
Wrong Kid, 1973 (Marshall)
Wrong Man, 1956 (Hitchcock)
Wrong Movement. See Falsche Bewegung, 1974
Wrongdoers. See Vurguncular, 1971
Wszystko na sprzedaż, 1968 (Wajda)
Würger der Welt, 1919 (Dupont)
X, 1963 (Corman)
Xala, 1974 (Sembene)
Xica da Silva, 1976 (Diegues)
X-Ray. See Prześwietlenie, 1973
X-Ray
Y a des Jours . . . et des Lunes, 1990 (Lelouch)
Y a des pieds au plafond, 1912 (Gance)
Y el cielo fue tomado por asalto, 1973 (Alvarez)
Y tenemos sabor, 1974 (Gómez)
Ya shagayu po Moskve, 1964 (Mikhalkov)
Yabure daiko, 1949 (Kinoshita)
Yaban gülü, 1961 (Güney)
Yabu no naka no kuroneko, 1968 (Shindo)
Yabure daiko, 1949 (Kinoshita)
Yagodko ijuvi. See Yahidka kokhannya, 1926
Yagui, 1940/41 (Fejös)
Yahidka kokhannya, 1926 (Dovzenko)
Yakroman to Tetsu, 1949 (Kurosawa)
Yakuza, 1974 (Pollack; Schrader)
Yalta Conference, 1944 (Gerasimov)
Yam Daabo, 1986 (Ouedraogo)
Yama no sanka: moyuru wakamono-tachi, 1962 (Shinoda)
Yamabiko gakko, 1952 (Imai)
Yamata, 1919 (Korda)
FILM TITLE INDEX
DIRECTORS, 4th EDITION

Yanapanacuna, 1970 (Alvarez)
Yang + Yin: Gender in Chinese Cinema, 1996 (Chen Kaige)
Yank at Oxford, 1937 (Launder, Frank, and Sidney Gilliat)
Yanke Doodle Dandy, 1942 (Curtiz)
Yanke Doodle Dade, 1926 (Sennett)
Yanke Doodle in Berlin, 1919 (Sennett)
Yanks, 1979 (Schlesinger)
Yanomamo, 1974 (Asch)
Yanomamo: A Multidisciplinary Study, 1971 (Asch)
Yanomamo Myth of Naro as Told by Kaobawa, 1975 (Asch)
Yanqui No, 1960 (Leacock)
Yanqui No, 1960 (Leacock)
Yandayos, 1977 (Ingco)
Yanqui, 1968 (Fernández)
Yapian zhanzheng, 1997 (Xie Jin)
Yarin son gündür, 1971 (Güney)
Yari no Gonzal, 1986 (Shinoda)
Yaritori, 1958 (Rogers)
Yashagaike, 1979 (Shinoda)
Yarqui No, 1960 (Leacock)
Yao a yao dao waipo qiao, 1995 (Zhang Yimou)
Yao a yao dao waipo qiao, 1995 (Zhang Yimou)
Yasaka da, 1970 (Hosoda)
Yasaka no kioku, 1955 (Sautet)
Yasuke, 1975 (Suzuki)
Yasuke, 1975 (Suzuki)
Yaqui Cur, 1913 (Griffith)
Yaqui, 1968 (Fernández)
Yaqui Cur, 1913 (Griffith)
Yarali kartal, 1965 (Güney)
Yari no Gonzza, 1986 (Shinoda)
Yarin son gündür, 1971 (Güney)
Yasgahatke, 1979 (Shinoda)
Yatsuhataka-mura, 1996 (Ichikawa)

Yawar mallku

Ye Olden Grafter, 1915 (Sennett)
Ye Olde Saw Mill, 1935 (Sennett)

Ye Olden Grafter, 1915 (Sennett)
Ye Olde Saw Mill, 1935 (Sennett)

Yeah Yeah Yeah, The Beatles! The First U.S. Visit. See What’s Happening: The Beatles in the USA, 1964
Year My Voice Broke, 1988 (Miller)
Year of the Quiet Sun.
Year of the Horse, 1997 (Jarmusch)
Year of the Gun, 1991 (Frankenheimer)
Year of Living Dangerously, 1982 (Weir)
Year My Voice Broke, 1988 (Miller)
Yearning.
Yearling, 1946 (Franklin)
Yeux qui fascinent

Yeux qui fascinent

Yeux sans visages, 1959 (Sautet)
Young as You Feel, 1931 (Borzage)
Young Bess, 1953 (Franklin)
Young Cassidy, 1965 (Ford)
Young Doctors, 1961 (Ashby)
Young Dragon, 1973 (Woo)
Young Eagles, 1930 (Wellman)
Young Emmanuelle.
Young Girls, Crazy Guys.
Young Girls, Turn 25.
Young Girls of Rochefort.
Young Girls, 1973 (Wellman)
Young Guard. See Molodaya gvardiya, 1947
Young Hercules, 1998 (Raimi)
Young Ideas, 1943 (Dassin)
Young Lions, 1958 (Dmytryk)
Young Man and the White Whale. See Mladý muž a bílá velryba, 1978
Young Man of Music. See Young Man with a Horn, 1950
Young Man with a Horn, 1950 (Curtiz)
Young Man’s Fancy, 1920 (Sennett)
Young Miss. See Ojisan, 1930
Young Mr. Lincoln, 1939 (Ford)
Young Mr. Pitt, 1942 (Laudner and Gilliat; Reed)
Young Nurses, 1972 (Corman)
Young One, 1960 (Buñuel)
Young Onions, 1932 (Sennett)
Young People, 1940 (Dwan)
Young People. See Wáikai hitotachi, 1954
Young People, Remember. See Emlékezz, ifjúság, 1955
Young People, Young Generation. See Wáikai hito, 1952
Young Picasso. See Joven Picasso, 1993
Young Racers, 1963 (Coppola; Corman)
Young Samurai. See Samuraj no ko, 1963
Young Savages, 1961 (Frankenheimer; Pollack)
Young Scarface. See Brighton Rock, 1947
Young Sherlock Holmes, 1985 (Levinson; Spielberg)
Young Sinners. See High School Big Shot, 1959
Young Stranger, 1957 (Frankenheimer)
Young Torless. See Junge Torless, 1966
Young Toscanini. See Giovane Toscanini, 1988
Young Veteran, 1941 (Cavalcanti; Crichton; Dearden)
Young Wolves. See Jeunes Loups, 1967
Young World. See Monde nouveau, 1965
Youngblood Hawke, 1964 (Davis)
Younger and Younger, 1988 (Adlon)
Younger Generation, 1929 (Carra)
Your Acquaintance. See Vasha znakomaya, 1927
Your Beer. See Anata no biru, 1954
Your Highness. See Kakka, 1940
Your Last Act, 1941 (Zinnemann)
Your Name’s Not God, It’s Edgar, 1968 (Apted)
Your Studio and You, 1995 (Singleton)
Your Beer. See Anata no biru, 1954
Your Highness. See Kakka, 1940
Your Last Act, 1941 (Zinnemann)
Your Name’s Not God, It’s Edgar, 1968 (Apted)
Your Studio and You, 1995 (Singleton)
Youth. See Seishun, 1925
Youth and Jealousy, 1913 (Dwan)
Youth and the Man of Property, 1973 (Marshall)
Youth for Truth. See Last Party, 1993
Youth Gets a Break, 1941 (Losey)
Youth in Fury. See Kawaiya mizuumi, 1960
Youth in Poland, 1957 (Mayles)
Youth of Heiji Zenigata. See Seishun Zenigata Heiji, 1953
Youth of Japan. See Nihon no seishun, 1968
Youth of Maxim. See Yunost Maksima, 1935
Youth of “The Land of Angels.” See Angyalföldi fiatalok, 1955
Youth on Trial, 1944 (Boetticher)
Youth Speaks. See Pesn o Gerojach, 1932
Youth’s Oath. See Kliatva molodikh, 1944
You’ve Got to Live Dangerously. See Faut Vivre Dangereusement, 1974
You’ve Got to Walk It like You Talk It or You’ll Lose That Beat, 1971 (Craven)
Yu Ma Ts’ai Tzu, 1984 (Hou Hsiao-Hsien)
Yü T’ung Ch’un, 1962 (King)
Yugure made, 1980 (Itami)
Yuki no akai ore no kao, 1961 (Shinoda)
Yuki Fujin ezu, 1950 (Mizoguchi)
Yuki matsuri, 1952 (Hani)
Yuki no yo ketto, 1954 (Kinugasa)
Yukiko, 1955 (Imai)
Yukinojo henge, 1935 (Kinugasa)
Yukinojo henge, 1963 (Ichikawa)
Yukinojo’s Revenge. See Yukinojo henge, 1935
Yukon Jake, 1924 (Sennett)
Yukovsky, 1950 (Pudovkin)
Yun shen Pu Chih Ch’u, 1974 (Hou Hsiao-Hsien)
Yunbogi no nikki, 1965 (Oshima)
Yunost Maksima, 1935 (Kozintsev)
Yuri Nagornyi, 1915 (Bauer)
Yushima no shiraume, 1955 (Kinugasa)
Yuwaku, 1948 (Shindo; Yoshimura)
Yyake-gumo, 1956 (Kinoshita)
Yvette, 1927 (Cavalcanti)
Yvonne’s Perfume, 1993 (Leconte)
Z, 1969 (Costa-Gavras)
Z čínskëo zápisniku, 1954 (Kachyňa)
Z miasta Lodzi, 1969 (Kieślowski)
Z punktu widzenia nocnego portiera, 1977 (Kieślowski)
Za chto?, 1995 (Kawalerowicz)
Za Kazhdyu slezu po Kable Krovi. See Zhizh’ za Zhizh’, 1916
Za Schast’em, 1917 (Bauer; Kuleshov)
Za sciana, 1971 (Zanussi)
Za život radostný, 1951 (Kachyňa)
Zabriške Point, 1970 (Antonioni)
Zacharovannaya Desna, 1965 (Dovzhenko)
Zaczárowany rower, 1955 (Polanski)
Zadzwoncie do mojej zony, 1958 (Polanski)
Zagranichnii pokhod sudov Baltiiskogo flota kreisere “Aurora” i uchebnogo sudna “Komsomolts,” August 8, 1925, 1925 (Vertov)
Zaidu, die Tragödie eines Modells, 1923 (Holger-Madsen)
Zakazane piosenki, 1947 (Kawalerowicz)
Zakroichik iz Torzhka, 1925 (Protazanov)
Zaliczenie, 1969 (Zanussi)
Zan Boko, 1988 (Kaboré)
Zancos, 1984 (Saura)
Zandunga, 1965 (Dovzhenko)
Zandra Rhodes, 1981 (Greenaway)
Zandunga, 1937 (de Fuentes)
Zandy’s Bride, 1974 (Troll)
Zange no yaiba, 1927 (Ozu)
Zang-e Tafrith, 1972 (Kiarostami)
Zangha, 1985 (Makhmalbaf)
Zangiku monogatari, 1939 (Mizoguchi)
Zanzibar, 1988 (Breillat)
Zaostřit, prosím, 1956 (Frič)
Zaporosch Sa Dunayem, 1938 (Ulmer)
Zapotecan Village, 1941 (Eisenstein)
Zappa, 1983 (August)
Zaproszenie do wnętrza, 1978 (Wajda)
Zardoz, 1973 (Boorman)
Zärtlichkeit der Wölfe, 1973 (Fassbinder)
Zavallilar, 1975 (Güney)
Závrat, 1962 (Kachyňa)
Zaza, 1915 (Porter)
Zaza, 1923 (Dwan)
Zaza, 1939 (Cukor; Dmytryk; Lewin)
Zaza, 1942 (Castellani)
Zazie. See Zazie dans le Métro, 1960
Zazie dans le Métro, 1960 (Malle)
Zbabělec, 1962 (Weiss)
Zdjecie, 1968 (Kieślowski)
Zdravstvuitye deti, 1962 (Donskoi)
Zebrahead, 1992 (Stone)
Zed and Two Noughts, 1985 (Greenaway)
Zeeckij-Filmstudie, 1927 (Ivens)
Zegen, 1987 (Imamura)
Zelig, 1983 (Allen)
Zelly and Me, 1988 (Lynch)
Zemlya, 1930 (Dovzhenko)
Zemma, 1951 (Kinoshita)
Zendegi Edame Darad, 1991 (Kiarostami)
Zeni no odori, 1964 (Ichikawa)
Zerkalo, 1975 (Tarkovsky)
Zéro de conduite, 1933 (Vigo)
Zero Murder Case. See Uncle Harry, 1945
Zert, 1968 (Jireš)
Zeyno, 1970 (Güney)
Zeyno, 1970 (Güney)
Zénaïde, 1958 (de Sica)
Zidore ou les métamorphoses, 1921/22 (Feuillade)
Ziegfeld Follies, 1946 (Minnelli)
Ziegfield Girl, 1941 (Berkeley)
Ziemia obiecana, 1974 (Wajda)
Zil pevcij drozd, 1972 (Ioseliani)
Zimba gibi delikanlı, 1964 (Güney)
Zinker, 1931 (Fríč)
Zipp, the Dodger, 1914 (Sennett)
Zire darakhatan zeyton, 1994 (Kiarostami)
Zitelloni, 1958 (de Sica)
Zivot je pes, 1933 (Fríč)
Zivot Radina, 1987 (Kusturica)
Zlaté kaprady, 1963 (Weiss)
Zločin v šantánu, 1968 (Menzel)
Zločin v dívčí škole, 1965 (Menzel)
Zly chlopiec, 1950 (Wajda)
Znay, 1963 (Shepikò)
Zo o kutta renchu, 1947 (Yoshimura)
Zórard Mester, 1917 (Curtiz)
Zosceleni, 1950 (Fríč)
Zoe bonne, 1966 (Chabrol)
Zoko minami no kaze, 1942 (Yoshimura)
Zoku Sugata Sanshiro, 1945 (Kurosawa)
Zöldár, 1965 (Gaál)
Zolotaia pugovitsa. See Golden Button, 1986
Zolotye vorota, 1969 (Dovzhenko)
Zombies, 1978 (Romero)
Zona roja, 1975 (Fernández)
Zone de la mort, 1917 (Gance)
Zone Moment, 1956 (Brakhage)
Zoo, 1962 (Haanstra)
Zoo, 1993 (Wiseman)
Zoo, 1999 (Bartel)
Zoo. See Chiriakhana, 1967
Zoo in Africa?, 1933 (Sandrich)
Zoo la nuit, 1987 (Arcand)
Zoo Story. See Dobutsuen nikki, 1956
Zorba the Greek, 1964 (Cacoyannis)
Zorro de Jalisco, 1940 (Fernández)
Zsigmond Moricz 1879-1942. See Móricz Zsigmond, 1956
Ztracená stopa, 1956 (Kachyňa)
Zu jung für die Liebe, 1961 (Käutner)
Zu neuen Ufern, 1937 (Sirk)
Zubeidaa, 2000 (Benegal)
Zucker und Zimt, 1915 (Lubitsch)
Zuckerbaby, 1983 (Adlon)
Zuid Limburg, 1929 (Ivens)
Zulu’s Heart, 1908 (Griffith)
Zum Paradies der Damen, 1922 (Pick)
Zürcher Verlobung, 1957 (Käutner)
Zuyderzee, 1933 (Ivens)
Zuzu the Band Leader, 1913 (Sennett)
Zvenyhora, 1928 (Dovzhenko)
Zwei Erfahrungen Reicher, 1976 (Staudte)
Zwei Herzen im Dreivierteltakt, 1930 (Forst)
Zwei Katzen. See Verona, 1967
Zwei Welten, 1930 (Dapont)
Zweite Erwachen der Christa Klages, 1977 (von Trotha)
Zweite Schuss, 1943 (Fríč)
Zwischengleis, 1978 (Staudte)
Zwolftete Stunde—Eine Nacht des Grauens, 1930 (Murnau)
Zycie jako smiertelna choroba przenoszona droga plciowa, 2000 (Zanussi)
Zycie rodzinne, 1970 (Zanussi)
Zycie Za Zycie, 1991 (Zanussi)