WRITERS and
PRODUCTION ARTISTS
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>CONTENTS</th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>EDITORS’ NOTE</td>
<td>vii</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>BOARD OF ADVISERS</td>
<td>ix</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CONTRIBUTORS</td>
<td>xi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LIST OF ENTRANTS</td>
<td>xiii</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>WRITERS AND PRODUCTION ARTISTS</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>PICTURE ACKNOWLEDGMENTS</td>
<td>971</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>NOTES ON ADVISERS AND CONTRIBUTORS</td>
<td>975</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>NATIONALITY INDEX</td>
<td>985</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>FILM TITLE INDEX</td>
<td>991</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
EDITORS’ NOTE

This is a revised edition of the 4th volume of the International Dictionary of Films and Filmmakers, which also includes Volume 1, Films, Volume 2, Directors, and Volume 3, Actors and Actresses. The book contains 545 entries, consisting of a brief biography, a complete filmography, a selected bibliography of works by and about the entrant, and a critical essay written by a specialist in the field. There are 51 entrants new to this edition. Most of the entries from the previous edition have been retained here; all entries have updated filmographies and bibliographies; and many entries have updated critical essays. Since film is primarily a visual medium, the majority of entries are illustrated, either by a portrait or by a representative still from the entrant’s body of work.

The entrants in this volume represent a wide range of writers and production artists, including art directors, cinematographers, costume designers, composers (and music directors, arrangers, and lyricists), editors, choreographers, stuntmen, special effects and sound technicians, makeup artists, and animators. The selection of entrants is once again based on the recommendations of the advisory board. It was not thought necessary to propose strict criteria for selection: the book is intended to represent the wide range of interests within North American, British, and West European film scholarship and criticism.

Thanks are due to the following: Nicolet V. Elert and Michael J. Tyrkus at St. James Press, for their efforts in preparing this collection for publication; Michael Najjar, for his tireless efforts in researching the entries; our advisers, for their wisdom and broad knowledge of international cinema; and our contributors, for their gracious participation. We have necessarily built upon the work of the editors who have preceded us, and we thank them for the strong foundation they created.

A Note on the Entries

Non-English language film titles are given in the original language or a transliteration of it, unless they are better known internationally by their English title. Alternate release titles in the original language(s) are found within parentheses, followed by release titles in English (American then British if there is a difference) and translations. The date of a film is understood to refer to its year of release unless stated otherwise.

In the list of films in each entry, information within parentheses following each film modifies, if necessary, then adds to the subject’s principal function(s). The most common abbreviations used are:

- an: animator
- assoc: associate
- asst: assistant
- chor: choreographer
- d: director
- ed: editor
- exec: executive
- mus: music
- ph: cinematographer or director of photography
- pr: producer
- prod des: production designer
- ro: role
- sc: scenarist or scriptwriter

The abbreviation “co-” preceding a function indicates collaboration with one or more persons. Other abbreviations that may be used to clarify the nature of an individual film are “doc”—documentary; “anim”—animation; and “ep”—episode. A name in parentheses following a film title is that of the director. A film title in boldface type indicates that complete coverage of that film may be found in the International Dictionary of Films and Filmmakers, Volume 1: Films.
BOARD OF ADVISERS

Jeanine Basinger
Ronald Bergan
Rui Santana Brito
Lewis Cole
Gary Crowdus
Robert von Dassanowsky
Susan Felleman
Douglas Gomery
Robyn Karney
Philip Kemp
Susan K. Larsen
Audrey T. McCluskey
Ib Monty
Gary Morris
Dan Nissen
Julian Petley
Jayne Pilling
Dana Polan
Bibekananda Ray
Frank P. Tomasulo
B. Urgošičková
CONTRIBUTORS

Richard Alwyn
Anthony Ambrogio
Roy Armes
Giselle Atterberry
Doreen Bartoni
Jeanine Basinger
John Baxter
Charles Ramírez Berg
Nina Bjornsson
Ronald Bowers
Jay Boyer
Anwar Brett
Stephen Brophy
Rick Broussard
Fred Camper
Ross Care
Richard Chatten
R. F. Cousins
Robert von Dassanowsky
Gertraud Steiner Daviau
Jerome Delamater
Denise Delorey
Charles Derry
Wheeler Winston Dixon
Robert Dixter
Susan Doll
Aíne Doyle
Clyde Kelly Dunagan
Raymond Durgnat
Rob Edelman
Thomas L. Erskine
Mark W. Estrin
Greg S. Faller
Rodney Farnsworth
Susan Felleman
Patricia Ferrara
Peter Flynn
M. S. Fonseca
Alexa L. Foreman
John A. Gallagher
Sandra Garcia-Myers
Heidi Gensch
Shohini Ghosh
Tina Gianoulis
Jill Gillespie
Verina Glaessner
H. M. Glancy
Douglas Gomery
Martin A. Gostanian

Justin Gustainis
John Hagan
Kevin Jack Hagopian
John Halas
Robert A. Haller
Patricia King Hanson
Stephen L. Hanson
Leonard G. Heldreth
Mary Hess
Kyoko Hirano
Peter Hutchings
Dina Iordanova
Jill Gillespie
Mark Johnson
Nancy Jane Johnston
David Gonthier, Jr.
Philip Kemp
Tammy Kinsey
William Lafferty
Edith C. Lee
Peter Lev
David Levine
James Limbacher
Janet Lorenz
Jon Lupo
Richard Dyer MacCann
Geoffrey Macnab
Roger Manvell
Floyd W. Martin
Donald W. McCaffrey
John McCarty
Vaclav Merhaut
Lois Miklas
Joseph Milicina
Norman Miller
John E. Mitchell
James Morrison
John Mraz
Dominique Nasta
Richard R. Ness
Kim Newman
Martin J. O'Conor
Daniel O'Brien
Liam O'Leary
Carrie D. O'Neill
Linda O'Nell
Vladimir Opěla
Dayna Oscherwitz

Maryann Oshana
Marc Oxoby
R. Barton Palmer
Sylvia Paskin
Soon-Mi Peten
Julian Petley
Philip Kemp
Rob Pinsel
Dominic Power
André Pozner
Victoria Price
Susan Perez Prichard
Ken Provencher
Lauren Rabinovitz
Bibekananda Ray
Allen Grant Richards
Arthur G. Robson
Chris Routledge
Marie Saeli
Richard Sater
Patrick J. Sauer
Eric Schaefer
H. Wayne Schuth
Leslie Felperin Sharman
Charles L. P. Silet
Anthony Slide
Edward S. Small
Cecile Starr
Christopher John Stephens
Dan Streible
Karel Tabery
Susan Tavernetti
J. P. Telotte
Suzanne Thomas
Tony Thomas
Frank Thompson
Doug Tomlinson
Lee Tsiantis
B. Urgošičková
Fiona Valentine
Ravi Vasudevan
Gregory Votolato
Milos Votruba
Mark Walker
Tomasz Warchol
Renee Ward
Graham Webb
Joanne L. Yeck
LIST OF ENTRANTS

K. A. Abbas
Ken Adam
Richard Addinsell
Adrian
Age and Scarpelli
Luis Alcoriza
John Alcott
G. R. Aldo
Henri Alekan
Alexander and Claire Alexeieff
Dede Allen
Jay Presson Allen
Nestor Almendros
John A. Alonzo
John Alton
William Alwyn
Preston Ames
Sergio Amidei
André Andrejew
Georges Annenkov
Malcolm Arnold
Joseph H. August
Jean Aureneche and Pierre Bost
Georges Auric
Tex Avery
Burt Bacharach
Angelo Badalamenti
Rick Baker
Barney Balaban
Michael Balcon
Lucien Ballard
Michael Ballhaus
Travis Banton
William George Barker
George S. Barnes
John Barry
Léon Barsacq
James Basevi
Ronald Bass
Saul Bass
Cecil Beaton
Sir Richard Rodney Bennett
Irving Berlin
Pandro S. Berman
James Bernard
Elmer Bernstein
Walter Bernstein
Adrian Biddle
Lajos Biro
Joseph Biroc
Anil Biswas
Billy Bitzer
Peter Biziou
Mel Blanc
Henry Blanke
Margaret Booth
Stephen Bosustow
Russell Boyd
Robert Boyle
Bruno Bozzetto
Charles Brackett
Leigh Brackett
Paulo Branco
Pierre Braunberger
J. R. Bray
Jiří Brdečka
Robert Breer
Albert R. Broccoli
Karl Brown
Nacio Herb Brown
Clyde Bruckman
John Bryan
Sidney Buchman
Wilfred Buckland
Henry Bumstead
Léonce-Henry Burel
Robert Burks
S. D. Burman
Ben Burtt
Carter Burwell
Sammy Cahn
Yakima Canutt
Jack Cardiff
Hoagy Carmichael
Ben Carré
James Carreras
Jean-Claude Carrière
Suso Cecchi D’Amico
Christopher Challis
Bansi Chandragupta
Borden Chase
Bob Clampett
Charles G. Clarke
T. E. B. Clarke
Ghislain Cloquet
William H. Clothier
Emile Cohl
Harry Cohn
Jack Cole
Henri Colpi
Betty Comden and Adolph Green
Bill Conti
Merian C. Cooper
Stanley Cortez
Curt Courant
Raoul Coutard
Noël Coward
Franco Cristaldi
Edward Cronjager
Floyd Crosby
Albert S. D’Agostino
William H. Daniels
Mason Daring
Beatrice Dawson
Richard Day
Acácio de Almeida
Basil Dean
Jean D’Eaubonne
Georges de Beauregard
Henri Decaë
Anatole de Grunwald
Dino De Laurentiis
Georges Delerue
Tonino Delli Colli
Louis de Rochemont
Adolph Deutsch
I. A. L. Diamond
Ernest Dickerson
Carmen Dillon
Todor Dini
Walt Disney
Gianni Di Venanzo
Pino Donaggio
Danilo Donati
Max Douy
Hans Dreier
Paul Driessen
George Duning
Linwood Dunn
Philip Dunne
George Dunning
Marguerite Duras
Dulal Dutta
John Dykstra
Roger Edens
Arthur Edeson
Richard Edlund
Farciot Edouart
Hanns Eisler
Danny Elfman
Peter Ellenshaw
Yevgeni Enei
Julius and Philip Epstein
Joe Eszterhas
Bernard Evein
Verna Fields
Gabriel Figueroa
Gunnar Fischer
Oskar Fischinger
Gerry Fisher
Ennio Flaiano and Tullio Pinelli
Max and Dave Fleischer
Carl Foreman
William Fox
Marcel Fradetal
William A. Fraker
Freddie Francis
Arthur Freed
Karl Freund
Hugo Friedhofer
Jules Furthman
Henrik Galeen
Lee Garmes
Tony Gaudio
Léon Gaumont
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Entrants</th>
<th>Writers and Production Artists</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Paul Gégauff</td>
<td>Julius Jaenzon</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Piero Gherardi</td>
<td>Maurice Jarre</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cedric Gibbons</td>
<td>Paul Jarrico</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Arnold Gillespie</td>
<td>Maurice Jaubert</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bert Gleemon</td>
<td>Dorothy Jeakins</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bob Godfrey</td>
<td>Henri Jeanson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Menahem Golan and Yoram Globus</td>
<td>George Jenkins</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Goldman</td>
<td>Talbot Jennings</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jerry Goldsmith</td>
<td>Ruth Prawer Jhabvala</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Samuel Goldwyn</td>
<td>Nunnally Johnson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anatoli Golovnya</td>
<td>Chuck Jones</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frances Goodrich and Albert Hackett</td>
<td>Quincy Jones</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Stephen Goosson</td>
<td>Alfred Junge</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Johnny Green</td>
<td>George Justin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paul Grimault</td>
<td>Gus Kahn</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anton Grot</td>
<td>Janusz Kaminski</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dave Grusin</td>
<td>Garson Kanin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tonino Guerra</td>
<td>Bronislau Kaper</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Burnett Guffey</td>
<td>Erich Kästner</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agnès Guillemot</td>
<td>Boris Kaufman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Raymond and Robert Hakim</td>
<td>Michael Kidd</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Halas and Joy Batchelor</td>
<td>Howard W. Koch</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Conrad Hall</td>
<td>Count “Sascha” Alexander</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ernest Haller</td>
<td>Kolowrat-Krakowsky</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gerry Hambling</td>
<td>Alexander Korda</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marvin Hamlisch</td>
<td>Vincent Korda</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Hanna and Joseph Barbera</td>
<td>Erich Wolfgang Korngold</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Russell Harlan</td>
<td>Joseph Kosma</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Joan Harrison</td>
<td>Laszlo Kovacs</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ray Harryhausen</td>
<td>Hanns Kräly</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Byron Haskin</td>
<td>Robert Krasker</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anthony Havelock-Allan</td>
<td>Norman Krasna</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fumio Hayasaka</td>
<td>Milton Krasner</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Michael Hayes</td>
<td>Hanif Kureishi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Edith Head</td>
<td>Yoji Kuri</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ben Hecht</td>
<td>Carl Laemmle, Sr. and Carl Laemmle, Jr.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hein Heckroth</td>
<td>Francis Lai</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Otto Heller</td>
<td>Giuseppe Lanci</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Buck Henry</td>
<td>Charles B. Lang</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jim Henson</td>
<td>Sherry Lansing</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robert Herth</td>
<td>Walter Lantz</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jorge Herrera</td>
<td>Ring Lardner, Jr.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bernard Herrmann</td>
<td>Joseph La Shelle</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Winton C. Hoch</td>
<td>Jesse L. Lasky</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Samuel Hoffenstein</td>
<td>Walter Lassally</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carl Hoffmann</td>
<td>Ernest Lasslo</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Arthur Honegger</td>
<td>Philip H. Lathrop</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Hornbeck</td>
<td>Charles Lederer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Harry Horner</td>
<td>Michel Legrand</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Houseman</td>
<td>Ernst Lehman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sidney Howard</td>
<td>Charles LeMaire</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>James Wong Howe</td>
<td>Jan Lenica</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Hubley</td>
<td>Boris Leven</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Otto Hunte</td>
<td>Sonya Levien</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ross Hunter</td>
<td>Joseph E. Levine</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jacques Ibert</td>
<td>Val Lewton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas H. Ince</td>
<td>Pierre Lhomme</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Irene</td>
<td>Carol Littleton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ivan Ivanov-Vano</td>
<td>Marcus Loew</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ub Iwerks</td>
<td>Anita Loos</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Santo Loquasto</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Jean Louis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Eugène Lourié</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Sven Nykvist
Willis H. O’Brien
Miroslav Ondříček
Orry-Kelly
Sam O’Steen
George Pal
Hermes Pan
Nick Park
Robert Parrish
Joe Pasternak
Charles Pathé
John Paxton
Clare Peplee
Hal Pereira
Georges Périnal
Jack P. Pierce
Harold Pinter
Franz Planer
Walter Plunkett
Van Nest Polglase
Sol Polito
Erich Pommer
Carlo Ponti
Ion Popescu-Gopo
Cole Porter
Zhigniew Preisner
Jacques Prévert
André Previn
Sergei Prokofiev
Alexander Puškho
David Puttnam
Jean Rabier
David Raksin
Ken Ralston
J. Arthur Rank
Samson Raphaelson
Jean-Paul Rappeneau
Terence Rattigan
Lotte Reiniger
Walter Reisch
Ray Rennahan
Claude Renoir
Alma Reville
William H. Reynolds
Robert Riskin
Hal Roach
Alain Robbe-Grillet
Walter Röhrig
Helen Rose
Ralph Rosenblum
Leonard Rosenman
Charles Rosher
Hal Rosson
Nino Rota
Giuseppe Rotunno
Philippe Rousselot
Miklós Rozsa
Joseph Ruttenberg
Philippe Sarde
Alvin Sargent
Jacques Saulnier
John Monk Saunders
Tom Savini
James Schamus
Dore Schary
Joseph and Nicholas Schenck
Lalo Schifrin
Leon Schlesinger
Charles Schnee
Thelma Schoonmaker
Eugen Schüfftan
Stephen Schwartz
Aleksandr Šcibor-Rylski
John Seale
John F. Seitz
William N. Selig
David O. Selznick
Jorge Semprun
Mario Serandrei
Leon Shamroy
Ravi Shankar
Irene Sharaff
Douglas Shearer
Sam Shepard
R. C. Sherriff
Robert E. Sherwood
Dmitri Shostakovich
Curt Stiodmak
Douglas Slocombe
Dick Smith
Jack Martin Smith
Franco Solinas
Terry Southern
Charles Spaak
Dorothy Spencer
Sam Spiegel
Jan Stallich
Carl Stalling
Ladislaw Starewicz
Ray Stark
Jerzy Stefan Stawiński
Max Steiner
Donald Ogden Stewart
Vittorio Storaro
Herbert Stothart
Harry Stradling
Hunt Stromberg
Karl Struss
C. Gardner Sullivan
Robert L. Surtees
Jan Švankmajer
Jo Swerling
Richard Sylbert
Toru Takemitsu
Daniel Taradash
Dean Tavoularis
Paul Terry
Irving G. Thalberg
Mikis Theodorakis
Virgil Thomson
Dimitri Tiomkin
Edward Tisse
Josho Toda
Gregg Toland
John Toll
Robert Towne
Alexandre Trauner
Jiří Trnka
Lamar Trott
Dalton Trumbo
Douglas Trumbull
Eiji Tsuburaya
Geoffrey Unsworth
Sergei Urusovskiy
Christine Vachon
Ernest Vajda
Helen Van Dongen
Vangelis
James Van Heusen
Theodora Van Runkle
Anthony Veiller
Alex Vetchinsky
Sacha Vierny
Will Vinton
Patrizia von Brandenstein
Efī von Dassanowsky
Thea Von Harbou
Slavko Vorkapich
Dušan Vukotić
Fritz Arno Wagner
Georges Wakhevitch
Chris Walas
Jerry Wald
Joseph B. Walker
Hal B. Wallis
William Walton
Walter Wanger
Hermann Warm
Jack L. Warner
Lew Wasserman
David Watkin
Franz Waxman
The Westmore Family
Haskell Wexler
Lyle Wheeler
Albert Whitlock
Herbert Wilcox
John Williams
Richard Williams
Calder Willingham
Gordon Willis
Michael Wilson
Irwin Winkler
Stan Winston
Yoshikata Yoda
Freddie Young
Victor Young
Darryl F. Zanuck
Richard D. Zanuck
Cesare Zavattini
Karel Zeman
Hans Zimmer
Vilmos Zsigmond
Adolph Zukor
ABBAS, K. A.

Films as Writer:

1943 Naya Sansaar (New World) (Acharya)
1946 Dr. Kotnis Ki Amar Kahani (The Immortal Story of Dr. Kotnis) (Shantaram)
1951 Anhonee (The Impossible) (+ d)
1952 Awaara (Awaara; The Vagabond) (Kapoor)
1954 Munna (Lost Child) (+ d, pr)
1955 Shree 420 (Mr. 420) (Kapoor)
1965 Aasman Mahal (+ d)
1970 Saat Hindustani (Seven Indians) (+ d)
1973 Achanak (Suddenly) (Gulzar); Bobby (Kapoor)
1974 Faasla (Distance) (+ d)
1981 The Naxalites
1983 Love in Goa

Films as Director:

1947 Dharti Ke Lal (Children of the Earth)
1953 Rahi
1959 Chaar Dil Chaar Rahen (Four Hearts, Four Roads; Four Faces of India); One Thousand Nights on a Bed of Stones
1972 Do Boond Pani (2 Drops of Water)

Publications

By ABBAS: book—

By ABBAS: article—

“Social Realism in the Indian Cinema,” in Filmfare, 2 June 1972.

On ABBAS: book—

Vasudev and Lenglet, editors, Indian Cinema Superbazaar, New Delhi, 1978.

On ABBAS: articles—

Indian Film Culture (New Delhi), no. 4, September 1964.
Film World, vol. 1, no. 10, October 1978.

K. A. Abbas was representative of a generation of left-wing playwrights associated with the Indian People’s Theatre Association (IPTA), who sought to draw upon indigenous and folk forms and idioms to communicate their radical ideas. This was evident in the first film Abbas directed, Dharti Ke Lal (Children of the Earth), about the Bengal famine of 1943. But perhaps as important were questions of the topical: how films he had conceptualised would draw upon immediate events and articulate them as part of his mise en scène. In Dharti Ke Lal this led to IPTA using actual peasant unions to stage protest marches for the film. Otherwise, in ways which were less directly political in their articulation, Abbas drew upon his career as a journalist to fulfill these topical relations to contemporary life. Journalism was used to constitute the raw material of his scenarios, and also functioned as representative modern practice and metaphor.

Thus, his 1946 script, Dr. Kotnis Ki Amar Kahani (The Immortal Story of Dr. Kotnis), drew on a real story, the commitment and premature death of a young doctor assigned to the Indian medical mission which helped the Chinese communists in Yenan, which had been recounted in Abbas’s own book on the subject. And, in Naya Sansaar (New World), journalism becomes the medium through which the struggle for a new rationality was represented. Perhaps as significantly, in Naya Sansaar Abbas employed an oedipal plot to frame his narrative of the emergence of a new notion of Indian personality, one founded on the conflict between a dynamic young reporter and his cautious editor.

If the drive for a new, Nehruvian truth, uncluttered by superstition and the impediments of traditional pieties motivated Abbas’s heroes, it is significant that the individuated oedipal self through which these aspirations were voiced came to be narratively constrained. A key example is the later Awaara, in which the polemic against social attitudes founded on hierarchical and genetic conceptions of the social order is somewhat denied its full power when the hero recovers the elevated social situation he had lost. Not only is the critique of social hierarchy cushioned by this; so too is the discourse of masculine aggression and conflict, for the oedipal antagonism against the father which structures the story is qualified, and held in check by an undercurrent that motivates the hero to recover his lost mother and the innocence of childhood. Underlying Abbas’s stories, and their rationalist stances, there rests a certain nostalgia, an idea of loss that is more widely common in the Hindi popular cinema. Significantly, his 1954... film, Munna, while abandoning the musical and performative conventions of that cinema, nevertheless founds its story on a child’s search for his mother. The archetypal mother came to cast a looming shadow, one which spoke of the loss and the drive to renegotiate a cultural mooring.

Finally, we should note a strongly didactic element in Abbas’s writing, again quite common in traditional dramaturgy, and here yoked to progressive causes. His own efforts as director to use film to urge caste, religious, and regional amity, such as in Chaar Dil Chaar Rahen and Saat Hindustani were less successful than when these imperatives were combined with directors more attuned to the entertainment conventions of the popular Hindi cinema. This is especially apparent in Abbas’s work with Raj Kapoor.

—Ravi Vasudevan

ADAM, Ken

Films as Art Director/Production Designer:

1956 Soho Incident (Spin a Dark Web) (Sewell); Child in the House (de Lautour and Endfield)
1957 Around the World in Eighty Days (Anderson) (co); The Devil’s Pass (Conyers); Night of the Demon (Curse of the Demon) (J. Tourneur)
1958 Battle of the VI (Missile from Hell; Unseen Heroes) (Sewell) (designs)
1959 Gideon of Scotland Yard (Gideon’s Day) (Ford); Beyond This Place (Web of Evidence) (Cardiff); The Angry Hills (Aldrich); 10 Seconds to Hell (Aldrich); The Rough and the Smooth (Portrait of a Sinner) (Siodmak); In the Nick (Hughes); John Paul Jones (Farrow) (co); Ben-Hur (Wyler) (research)
1960 Let’s Get Married (Scott); The Trials of Oscar Wilde (The Green Carnation) (Hughes)
1961 The Hellions (Annakin) (designs)
1962 Sodoma e Gomorra (Sodom and Gomorrah) (Leone and Aldrich); Dr. No (Young); In the Cool of the Night (Stevens)
1964 Dr. Strangelove: Or How I Learned to Stop Worrying and Love the Bomb (Kubrick); Woman of Straw (Dearden); Goldfinger (Hamilton); The Long Ships (Cardiff) (designs)
1965 The Ipcress File (Furie); Thunderball (Young)
1966 Funeral in Berlin (Hamilton)
1967 You Only Live Twice (Gilbert)
1968 Chitty Chitty Bang Bang (Hughes)
1969 Goodbye, Mr. Chips (Ross)
1970 The Owl and the Pussycat (Ross)
1972 Sleuth (Mankiewicz)
1973 The Last of Sheila (Ross)
1975 Barry Lyndon (Kubrick)
1976 The Seven-Per-Cent Solution (Ross)
1977 Salon Kitty (Madam Kitty) (Brass); The Spy Who Loved Me (Gilbert)
1979 Moonraker (Gilbert)
1981 Pennies from Heaven (Ross) (+ assoc pr)
1985 King David (Beresford); Agnes of God (Jewison)
1986 Crimes of the Heart (Beresford)
1987 The Deceivers (Meyer)
1988 Dead-Bang (Frankenheimer)
1989 The Freshman (Bergman); Dinosaurs (Meyer)
1990 The Doctor (Haines)
1992 Undercover Blues (Ross)
1993 Addams Family Values (Sonnenfeld)
1994 Boys on the Side (Ross); The Madness of King George (Hytner)
1995 Bogus (Jewison)
1997 In & Out (Oz)
1999 The Out-of-Towners (Weisman)
2000 The White Hotel

Publications

By ADAM: book—

By ADAM: articles—

Positif (Paris), March 1977.
Film Comment (New York), January/February 1982.
American Film, February 1991.
Born Klaus Adam in Berlin in 1921, Ken Adam emigrated to the United Kingdom in 1934. He studied architecture and became a freelance architect and interior designer. In 1947 he joined the film industry as a draftsman. An art director since 1948 and production designer since 1959, Adam has won awards for the low-key spy thriller The Ipcress File and the period adaptations Barry Lyndon and The Madness of King George, though it is his innovative and spectacular work on the James Bond adventure-fantasies for which he will be best remembered.

Adam’s James Bond films characterized the modern look in the 1960s—slick, inventive, filled with modern gadgets and smooth, cold, clean surfaces. There was a love of the exotic with a dazzling display of conspicuous consumption. Colors were pure and bright. Everything gleamed and sparkled with movement. Plastic and steel were not only stylish, they were considered futuristic, and the future, people felt, “was now.” The “back to nature” movement would have to wait till later in the decade. The only real things in the Bond movies were the mirrors on the floor. Meanwhile, Bond fans reveled in Adam’s influential creations as the designer put the “mod” in modern.

To accommodate his mammoth designs for the Bond films, which ranged from a recreation of the interior of Fort Knox in Goldfinger to an underground space launch in You Only Live Twice, a special sound stage had to be built at Pinewood Studios where the films were made. It remains the largest single sound stage in the world.
Adam’s ability to “come to the rescue” with ingenuity on a budget evidenced itself early in his career when the producer of Night of the Demon called him in at the last minute to render visible the titular beast that director Jacques Tourneur had insisted on keeping unseen in the belief that such things were best left to the audience’s imagination. Adam responded economically with a design based on medieval woodcuts; shown only in a few brief closeups, his demon remains one of the most fearsome looking monsters in movie history. Years later, Adam applied similar ingenuity to bringing the macabre world of cartoonist Charles Addams to life on the screen in Addams Family Values.

Adam performed similar miracles on Dr. Stangelove, Stanley Kubrick’s black comedy about a nuclear strike. Denied cooperation by the U.S. military due to the film’s controversial theme, Kubrick relied on Adam to create everything from the interiors of the planes that drop the bombs to the “war room” where the U.S. president and Russian ambassador play cat and mouse with the fate of the world. Adam’s “war room” set centered on a giant oval table with an ominous overhanging fixture that looked suspiciously like a nuclear mushroom cloud. This dramatically darkened room was lit only by this overhanging fixture and the electric arrows on the numerous maps that lined the walls, indicating the paths of nuclear destruction. The people surrounding the table seemed insignificant in scale, as individuals are to those who power the giant war machine.

Adam also designed Sleuth, an entertaining English thriller. One of its main characters, a successful mystery writer, lives to play games of physical and psychological sleight-of-hand. The story takes place at his home in the country, its rooms filled by games, puzzles, and mechanical toys; its garden is landscaped as an elaborate maze. It seemed the perfect place for a crime, a crime of the writer’s own design. This wittily plotted tale shows Adam at his cleverest.

The Stanley Kubrick film Barry Lyndon was perhaps Adam’s magnum opus. Every detail displayed a painstaking job of period reconstruction, each celluloid frame worthy of Gainsborough or Hogarth. His work on the later The Madness of King George showed equal devotion to detail. After the success of The Madness of King George, in the late 1990s Adam has been involved in disappointing mainstream comedies such as In & Out and The Out-Of-Towners. Set in contemporary America, neither film can have tested his considerable skills. Such projects are typical of the kind of films Adam has interspersed with more demanding work throughout his career. His next film release will be the rather more challenging The White Hotel, adapted from the D.M. Thomas novel of the same name and directed by Bosnian Emir Kusturica. How ironic it is that Adam, who leaped to prominence with his space-age designs for the hugely successful James Bond films, would receive his only two Oscars to date for films set in the far distant past.

—Edith C. Lee, updated by John McCarty, further updated by Chris Routledge

ADDINSSELL, Richard

Films as Composer:

1936 Amateur Gentleman (Freeland)
1937 Fire Over England (Howard); Dark Journey (The Anxious Years) (Saville); Farewell Again (Troopship) (Whelan)
1938 South Riding (Saville); Vessel of Wrath (The Beachcomber) (Pommer)
1939 Gaslight (Angel Street; Strange Case of Murder) (Dickinson); Goodbye, Mr. Chips (Wood); The Lion Has Wings (Brunel/Hurst)
1940 Contraband (Blackout) (Powell)
1941 Love on the Dole (Baxter); Dangerous Moonlight (Suicide Squadron) (Hurst)
1942 The Day Will Dawn (The Avengers) (French); The Big Blockade (Frend)
1945 Blithe Spirit (Lean)
1949 Under Capricorn (Hitchcock); The Passionate Friends (One Woman’s Story) (Lean)
1950 Highly Dangerous (Ward Baker); The Black Rose ( Hathaway)
1951 Tom Brown’s Schooldays (Parry); Scrooge (A Christmas Carol) (Hurst)
1952 Encore (French/Jackson)
1953 Sea Devils (Walsh)
1954 Macbeth (for TV) (Evans); Beau Brummel (Bernhardt)
1955 Out of the Clouds (Dearden/Relph)
1957 The Prince and the Showgirl (Oliver)
1957 The Admirable Crichton (Paradise Lagoon) (Gilbert)
1958 A Tale of Two Cities (Thomas)
1961 The Greengage Summer (Loss of Innocence) (Gilbert); The Roman Spring of Mrs. Stone (Quintero)
1962 The War Lover (Leacock)
1962 Waltz of the Toreadors (The Amorous General) (Guillermin)
1965 Life at the Top (Kotcheff)

Publications

On ADDINSSELL: articles—

Composer Richard Stewart Addinsell was born in London on January 13, 1904. He was the son of a successful London businessman and a mother so protective of her youngest child that his major education came through home schooling. Addinsell briefly attended Hertford School, Oxford, where he began to read Law, but his interest in music soon led him—briefly—to the Royal College of Music. In 1926 Addinsell’s natural musical gifts led to his writing songs for that year’s Andre Charlot revue, and later travel in Europe visiting the continent’s major musical and theatrical centers. Around this time Addinsell also began an enduring association with the theatrical writer, Clemence Dane, a collaboration which led to theater and film work with performers such as Gertrude Lawrence and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.

These various contacts led to Addinsell’s first work in British films, a feature entitled The Amateur Gentleman, which starred Fairbanks and was partially scripted by Dane. Ensuing British films such as South Riding, Dark Journey, Fire Over England, and the first of several British feature propaganda films, The Lion Has Wings, followed. In 1940 he scored his first international success with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's British production of Goodbye, Mr. Chips. He also scored MGM’s early version of Gaslight which was later surprised in the wake of the Ingrid Bergman American version.

1941 saw the debut of Addinsell’s chief d’oeuvre, the “Warsaw Concerto” composed for the film Dangerous Moonlight (U.S. title: Suicide Squadron). The film itself is a melodrama involving a Polish air ace who had been a concert pianist before World War II. Themes from the “Warsaw” piece are heard throughout the film which then climaxes with a nearly complete performance of the concerto itself. This one-movement composition for piano and orchestra turned out to be the most striking element in the film for war-weary British audiences, and soon generated international interest as well. The celebrated Russian pianist and composer, Sergei Rachmaninov, had been approached about doing the score, and when he refused it Addinsell cast his concerto in a Rachmaninovian mode of effusive, appealing lyricism. Indeed, the enduring popularity of the dramatic piece eventually eclipsed anything else the British composer was to create, and “Warsaw Concerto” eventually generated over a hundred separate recordings which sold in excess of three million copies.

“Warsaw Concerto” was also one of the first compositions to call attention to the specific art of composing for film, which was still an extremely specialized and esoteric calling in the early 1940s, and to the lucrative commercial potential of film music. (The popular success of Addinsell’s work no doubt prompted the transcription of Miklos Rozsa’s score for Alfred Hitchcock’s Spellbound into a similar one-movement piano/orchestral synthesis which also achieved some popular success in 1945.) Addinsell’s concerto remained popular for decades, and in the 1950s its lyrical main theme was adapted into an American popular song, “The World Outside.” A pop version was recorded by Ray Coniff and his orchestra on the second volume of Coniff’s Concert in Rhythm albums for Columbia.

Throughout the 1940s and 1950s Addinsell alternated film scoring with theatrical work, the latter including both composing and performing (as pianist/accompanist). He was especially known for his songwriting with the British actress/lyricist Joyce Grenfell, and for touring in her review of comic songs and sketches, Joyce Grenfell Requests the Pleasure. Addinsell also wrote extensively for the BBC. His most well-known films of this period include David Lean’s production of Noel Coward’s Blithe Spirit, which produced one of Addinsell’s most lyrical waltz melodies, Alfred Hitchcock’s Under Capricorn, and the British version of Tom Brown’s Schooldays. Aside from his ubiquitous “Warsaw Concerto,” one of Addinsell’s best and most widely heard scores is for the 1951 British version of Dickens’ A Christmas Carol, Scrooge. Starring Alistair Sim, this version of the oft-filmed tale has become a staple of holiday television viewing. Addinsell’s imaginative and atmospheric score fuses his original themes and character motifs with traditional christmas carols, and explores a variety of styles and moods along the way, from the powerful opening cue which has been compared to music for a Universal horror classic, to a delicate music-box-style sequence for the wistful scene in which Tiny Tim gazes at clockwork toys in a shop window.

In the late 1950s and 1960s, the demise of the Hollywood studio system with its increasing emphasis on international co-productions led to some of Addinsell’s more unusual and widely heard late work. In 1957 he scored the Marilyn Monroe production of Terance Ratigan’s play, The Sleeping Prince, filmed as The Prince and the Showgirl with Monroe and Lawrence Olivier, and produced in London. For The Roman Spring of Mrs. Stone, Jose Quintero’s 1961 film of the Tennessee Williams novel starring Vivien Leigh, Addinsell composed a moody main theme, and a lyrical cantilena for guitar and orchestra which underscores the main title credits and continues under the spoken prologue. 1961 also saw Addinsell composing what he referred to as one of his personal favorite scores, the pastoral Greengage Summer. Addinsell’s last film was Life at the Top, the sequel to one of the classics of the New British Cinema of the 1960s, Room at the Top. After seeing his great friend, the couturier Victor Steibal, through a difficult demise due to muscular sclerosis, Addinsell himself died in his native London in November of 1977.

Addinsell was popular with film producers because he was also an accomplished pianist who could immediately capture (and play for) the exact type of music they desired for their projects. He was a genius at scoring films, at capturing both mood and period, but (and here he is not unlike many other musicians who worked in films) he did not orchestrate, and so arrangers were needed to expand his music for full orchestra. Like the American composer/songwriter, Victor Young, Addinsell’s reputation for attractive melodies and “light music” has somewhat overshadowed his prolific career in feature film scoring. But while the “Warsaw Concerto” remains the work for which Addinsell is best-remembered by the general public, the introduction of digital technology prompted a revival of interest in both Addinsell’s film and light concert music, resulting in several CDs devoted to his film scores and miscellaneous pieces, including his “Smokey Mountains” concerto, and of course the ever-popular “Warsaw.”

—Ross Care

ADRIAN, (Gilbert)

Films as Costume Designer:

1924 What Price Beauty (Buckingham)
1925 The Eagle (Brown); Cobra (Henabery); Her Sister (Franklin)
1926 Fig Leaves (Hawks); Gigolo (Howard); Young April (Crisp); For Alimony Only (W. De Mille); The Volga Boatman (C. De Mille)
1927  Almost Human (Urson); The Angel of Broadway (Sjöström); Chicago (Urson); Dress Parade (Crisp); His Dog (K. Brown); The Main Event (Howard); My Friend from India (Hopper); The Wise Wife (Hopper); The Country Doctor (Julian); The Fighting Eagle (Crisp); The Forbidden Woman (Stein); The Little Adventuress (W. De Mille); Vanity (Crisp); The Wreck of the Hesperus (Clifton); Love (Goulding)

1928  The Blue Danube (Sloane); A Ship Comes In (Howard); Skyscraper (Higgin); Walking Back (Julian); Dream of Love (Niblo); The Godless Girl (C. De Mille); Let ‘er Go Gallagher (Clifton); Midnight Madness (Weight); Stand and Deliver (Crisp); A Woman of Affairs (C. Brown); A Lady of Chance (Leonard); The Masks of the Devil (Sjöström)

1929  Marianne (Leonard); The Bridge of San Luis Rey (Brabin); Dynamite (C. De Mille); A Single Man (Beaumont) Their Own Desire (Hopper); Wild Orchids (Franklin); The Last of Mrs. Cheyney (Franklin); Our Modern Maidens (Conway); Devil-May-Care (Franklin); The Single Standard (Robertson); The Thirteenth Chair (Browning); The Trial of Mary Dagan (Veiller); The Unholy Night (L. Barrymore)

1930  Not So Dumb (K. Vidor); Passion Flower (W. De Mille); The Rogue Song (L. Barrymore); This Mad World (W. De Mille); New Moon (Conway); The Divorcee (Leonard); Anna Christie (C. Brown); The Floradora Girl (Beaumont); In Gay Madrid (Leonard); The Lady of Scandal (Franklin); A Lady in Love (Sjöström); A Lady’s Morals (Franklin); Let Us Be Gay (Leonard); Madam Satan (C. De Mille); Montana Moon (St. Clair); Our Blushing Brides (Beaumont); Redemption (Niblo); Romance (C. Brown)

1931  Inspiration (C. Brown); Laughing Sinners (Beaumont); A Free Soul (C. Brown); The Squaw Man (C. De Mille); The Bachelor Father (Leonard); Five and Ten (Leonard); Strangers May Kiss (Fitzmaurice); The Guardsman (Franklin); Susan Lennox, Her Rise and Fall (Leonard); Arsene Lupin (Conway)

1932  Emma (C. Brown); Flying High (Riesner); Grand Hotel (Goulding); Strange Interlude (Leonard); Polly of the Circus (Santell); Rasputin and the Empress (Boleslawsky); Faithless (Beaumont); As You Desire Me (Fitzmaurice); Smilin’ Through (Franklin); The Son-Daughter (C. Brown); The Wet Parade (Fleming); Huddle (Wood); But the Flesh Is Weak (Conway); Lovers Courageous (Leonard); Unashamed (Beaumont); Red Dust (Fleming); Red-Headed Woman (Conway); The Washington Masquerade (Brabin); The Mask of Fu Manchu (Brabin)

1933  The Barbarian (Wood); Peg o’ My Heart (Leonard); Made on Broadway (Beaumont); Midnight Mary (Wellman); Queen Christina (Mamoulian); Dancing Lady (Leonard); Stage Mother (Brabin); When Ladies Meet (Beaumont); Hold Your Man (Wood); Another Language (Griffith); The Woman in His Life (Seitz); Bombshell (Fleming); Men Must Fight (Selwyn); Reunion in Vienna (Franklin); Looking Forward (C. Brown); Gabriel over the White House (La Cava); The White Sister (Fleming); The Secret of Madam Blanche (Brabin); Turn Back the Clock (Selwyn); Beauty for Sale (Boleslawsky); Dinner at Eight (Cukor); Storm at Daybreak (Boleslawsky); The Stranger’s Return (K. Vidor); Going Hollywood (Walsh); The Solitaire Man (Conway); Penthouse (Van Dyke); Secrets (Borzage) (co); The Cat and the Fiddle (Howard)

1934  Operator 13 (Boleslawsky); Forsaking All Others (Van Dyke); Riptide (Goulding); The Mystery of Mr. X (Selwyn); The Barretts of Wimpole Street (Franklin); Outcast Lady (Leonard); The Girl from Missouri (Conway); Men in White (Boleslawsky); The Painted Veil (Boleslawsky); What Every Woman Knows (La Cava); The Merry Widow (Lubitsch); Sadie McKee (C. Brown)

1935  No More Ladies (Griffith); After Office Hours (Leonard); Mark of the Vampire (Browning); I Live My Life (Van Dyke); China Seas (Garnett); Broadway Melody of 1936 (Leonard); Reckless (Fleming); Anna Karenina (C. Brown); Naughty Marietta (Van Dyke)

1936  The Great Ziegfeld (Leonard); Romeo and Juliet (Cukor) (co); The Gorgeous Hussy (C. Brown); Love on the Run (Van Dyke); San Francisco (Van Dyke); Rose Marie (Van Dyke); Born to Dance (Del Ruth); Camille (Cukor)

1937  Parnell (Stahl); Maytime (Leonard); The Bride Wore Red (Azner); The Double Wedding (Thorpe); Broadway Melody of 1938 (Del Ruth); The Firefly (Leonard); Between Two Women (Seitz); The Last Gangster (Ludwig); Mannequin (Borzage); Conquest (C. Brown)

1938  The Girl of the Golden West (Leonard); Marie Antoinette (Van Dyke) (co); Love Is a Headache (Thorpe); The Toy Wife (Thorpe) (co); The Shopworn Angel (Wallace); Sweethearts (Van Dyke); The Shining Hour (Borzage); Three Loves Has Nancy (Thorpe); Vacation from Love (Fitzmaurice); Dramatic School (Sinclair)
1939 The Women (Cukor); Idiot’s Delight (C. Brown); The Wizard of Oz (Fleming); Ice Follies of 1939 (Schunzel) (co); It’s a Wonderful World (Van Dyke); Broadway Serenade (Leonard) (co); Balalaika (Schunzel); Ninotchka (Lubitsch)

1940 Escape (LeRoy); Boom Town (Conway) (co); Bitter Sweet (Van Dyke) (co); The Mortal Storm (Borzage) (co); Pride and Prejudice (Leonard) (co); New Moon (Leonard); Broadway Melody of 1940 (Taurog) (co); Waterloo Bridge (Le-Roy) (co); Comrade X (K. Vidor); Strange Cargo (Borzage); The Philadelphia Story (Cukor)

1941 When Ladies Meet (Leonard); The Feminine Touch (Van Dyke); Smilin’ Through (Borzage) (co); Two-Faced Woman (Cukor); Lady Be Good (McLeod); Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (Fleming) (co); They Met in Bombay (C. Brown) (co); Blossoms in the Dust (LeRoy) (co); Ziegfeld Girl (Leonard); A Woman’s Face (Cukor)

1942 Woman of the Year (Stevens); Hers to Hold (Ryan) (co); Shadow of a Doubt (Hitchcock) (co); Hi Diddle Diddle (Stone); Keeper of the Flame (Cukor)

1943 His Butler’s Sister (Borzage); The Powers Girl (McLeod) (co)

1946 Humoresque (Negulesco) (co)

1947 Rope (Hitchcock)

1948 Smart Woman (Blatt)

1952 Lovely to Look At (LeRoy) (co)

Publications

By ADRIAN: articles—

“Garbo as Camille,” in Vogue (New York), 15 November 1936.

On ADRIAN: book—

On ADRIAN: articles—

Wide Angle (Athens, Ohio), vol. 6, no. 4, 1985.

* * *

Known for his impeccable styling, Adrian influenced the history of fashion with his camera-tailored costumes that set cinematic precedents. Also to his credit is a potent iconography of American mythology that lingers even today.

Adrian envisioned Norma Shearer as “everywoman’s” ideal. Loaded with class, Shearer wore the kinds of fashions on which the “best-dressed” lists thrive. For her “prestige” pictures, Adrian featured the ultimate in opulent elegance. In Marie Antoinette, for instance, her wardrobe rivaled the magnificence of the historical originals.

For Greta Garbo, MGM had originally planned to laden the Swedish actress with junk jewelry and paraphernalia. Adrian protested vehemently, “Never put anything fake on Garbo!” and proceeded to dress her in his finest creations. Though his lines were simple, he often added precious details, such as exquisite embroidery or special sleeve treatments. Instead of presenting her as a flashy femme fatale, he translated her beauty as ethereal fantasy. In Camille Adrian costumed the tale. Garbo as martyr wore a golden chain around her neck, while her shoulders were bared and vulnerable. Stars across the gown associated her with the heavens. This image suggested a Christian saint more than a demi-monde courtesan. In other films, Adrian designed heavily glittered garments to counteract Garbo’s purity. The fabric symbolized adultery in Wild Orchids and moral decay in Susan Lenox. Mata Hari shed her sequins as she spiritually progressed, for no material could outshine Garbo’s natural brilliance.

While Adrian’s Garbo bore the timeless beauty of geometry, with her abstract, linear proportions paralleling contemporary European design, all-American Jean Harlow hit with Yankee hard sell. Exaggerated but clever, brassy yet bold, Harlow was dressed with panache. Her “white on white” look could be traced to a British decorating Vogue. It stood for a contemporary decadence rather than traditional purity. Adrian revealed Harlow’s round, provocative form in the guise of an earthly Venus.

Adrian’s Joan Crawford evolved. Beginning as an unadulterated moderne flapper, she combined Garbo’s geometry with Harlow’s visual chutzpah. Later, as a sleek, sophisticated socialite, she spurred glorious dreams of wealth for Depression audiences. But it is for her masculine padded shoulder style that we remember her best. With a torso as assertive as a yield sign, Crawford typified the aggressive woman. When the working woman returned to fashion in the 1970s, so did Adrian’s padded shoulders.

Throughout his career Adrian designed fantastic frivolities. From Madam Satan to Ziegfeld Girl, erotica akin to Érté’s sumptuous extravaganzas paraded down MGM’s runways. Adrian dressed the nymphs of the chorus as chimeric birds, sprites, and demons. But his ultimate contribution to American myth was in The Wizard of Oz, a colorful, childhood allegory that remains one of Hollywood’s most frequently seen films.

—Edith C. Lee
AGE and SCARPELLI

1949—first co-written script, Totò cerca casa; 1954–55—co-wrote the musical revues Festival and Siamo tutti dottori.

Films as Co-Writers (Selected Filmography):

1949 Totò cerca casa (Steno and Monicelli); Il vedovo allegro (Mattòli); Totò le Moko (Bragaglia)
1950 Totò cerca moglie (Bragaglia); Totò Tarzan (Mattòli); 47 morto che parla (Bragaglia); I cadetti di Guascogna (Mattòli)
1951 Arrivano i nostri (Mattòli); L’erole sono io (Bragaglia); Signori in carrozza! (Zampa); Auguri e figli maschi (Simonelli); Una bruna indiavolata (Bragaglia)
1952 Totò a colori (Steno); Totò e le donne (Steno and Monicelli); Ragazze da marito (De Filippo)
1953 Ivan, il figlio del diavolo bianco (Brignone); Capitan Fantasma (Zeglio); Cinema d’altre tempi (Steni); L’incantevole nemica (Gora); Gli uomini, che mascheroni! (Pellegrini); Napoletani a Milano (De Filippo)
1954 Le signorine delle 64 (Franciolini); Casa Ricordi (House of Ricordi) (Gallone); Sinfonia d’amore (Schubert) (Pellegrini)
1955 Casta diva (Gallone); Bravissimo! (d’Amico); Il bigamio (Emmer)
1956 Racconti romani (Roman Tales) (Franciolini); La banda degli onesti (Mastrocincione); Peccato di castità (Franciolini); Tempo di villeggiatura (Racioppi and Zampa); Una pelliccia di visone (Pellegrini); Padri e figli (The Tailor’s Maid; Fathers and Sons) (Monicelli)
1957 Il medico e lo stregone (Monicelli); Souvenir d’Italie (Pietrangeli)
1958 Totò, Peppino, e le fanatiche (Mattòli); I soliti ignoti (Big Deal on Madonna Street) (Monicelli); Nata di marzo (Pietrangeli); La Loi . . . c’est la loi (The Law Is the Law) (Christian-Jaque); Primo amore (Camerini)
1959 Audace colpo dei soliti ignoti (Fiasco in Milan) (Loy); Policarpo, ufficiale di scrittura (Soldati); La grande guerra (The Great War) (Monicelli)
1960 Il mattatore (Love and Larceny) (Risi); Risate di gioia (The Passionate Thief) (Monicelli); Tutti a casa (Everybody Go Home?) (Comencini)
1961 I due nemici (The Best of Enemies) (Hamilton); A cavallo della tigre (Comencini)
1962 Totò e Peppino divisi a Berlino (Bianchi); La marcia su Roma (Risi); Il commissario (Comencini); Il mafioso (Mafioso) (Lattuada)
1963 I compagni (The Organizer) (Monicelli); I mostri (Opiate ’67; I 5 from Rome) (Risi); Il maestro di Vigevano (Petri)
1964 “Gente moderna” (“Modern People”) ep. of Alta infedeltà (High Infidelity) (Monicelli); Frenesi dell’estate (Germi)

1965 Casanova ’70 (Monicelli); “Il complesso della schiava nabiana” ep. of I complessi (Rossi); Io, io, io . . . e gli altri (Blasetti)
1966 Signore e signori (The Birds, the Bees, and the Italians) (Germi); Il buono, il brutto, il cattivo (The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly) ( Leone); L’armata Brancalone (Monicelli); “Il marito di Olga” and “Il marito di Attília” eps. of I nostri mariti (Monicelli and Risi)
1967 “Senso civico” (“Civic Sense”) ep. of Le streghes (The Witches) (Bolognini); Il tigre (The Tiger and the Pussycat) (Risi); Ti ho sposato per allegria (I Married You for Fun) (Salce)

1968 Riuscirono i nostri eroi a trovare l’amico misteriosamente scomparso in Africa? (Schulz) (Scarpelli only); Straziani ma di baci sazi (Tear Me But Satiate Me with Your Kisses) (Risi); “La bambinaia” and “Perché” eps. of Capriccio all’italiana (Monicelli and Bolognini)
1969 Rosolino Paternò, soldato (Loy)
1970 Dramma della gelosia, tutti i particolari in cronaca (The Pizza Triangle; A Drama of Jealousy and Other Things) (Scarpelli); Brancalone alle crociate (Monicelli)
1971 “Alberta” ep. of Noi donne siamo fatte così (Women: So We Are Made) (Risi); In nome del popolo italiano (In the Name of the Italian People) (Risi)
1972 Senza famiglia nullatenenti, cercano affetto . . . (Gassman)
1973 Teresa la ladra (Di Palmà); Vogliamo i colonnelli (Monicelli)
1974 Romanzo popolare (Monicelli); C’eravamo tanto amanti (We All Loved Each Other So Much) (Scarpelli)
1975 La donna della domenica (The Sunday Woman) (Comencini)
1976 L’Agnes va a morire (Montaldo); Signore e signori buonanotte (Comencini and others); “Il superiore” and “Macchina d’amore” eps. of Basta che non si sappia in giro (Magni and Loy)
1977 I nuovi mostri (The Monsters; Viva Italia!) (Risi and Scarpelli)
1979 Temporale Rosy (Monicelli)
1980 La terrazza (Scarpelli)
1981 “Armando’s Notebook” ep. of Sunday Lovers (Risi); Nudo di donna (Portrait of a Woman, Nude) (Manfredi); Camera d’albergo (Monicelli)
1982 Spaghetti House (Paradisi)
1983 Il tassinaro (Sordi)
1985 Scemo di guerre (Risi)
1988 Una Botta di vita (Oldoini)
1999 Boom (Zaccariello) (Age only)

Other Films:

1947 I due orfanelli (Mattòli) (Age only)
1949 Vivere a sbasso (Ferroni) (Age only)
1983 Scherzo (Wertmüller) (Age only); Dagobert (Risi) (Age only); Un ragazzo, una ragazza (Risi) (Scarpelli only); Ballando ballando (Le Bal; The Ball) (Scarpelli only)
1984 Cuori nella tormenta (Oldoini) (Scarpelli only)
1985 Maccheroni (Macaroni) (Scarpelli only); I soliti ignoti vent’anni dopo (Todini) (Age only)
1987 La famiglia (The Family) (Scarpelli only)
1989 Tempo di uccidere (The Short Cut; Le Raccourci; Time to Kill) (Montaldo) (Scarpelli only)
Audiences familiar with popular Italian comedies from the sixties and early seventies cannot have missed the names of Age and Scarpelli from the credits. Apart from being the most representative writers of comedy “in the Italian style,” they have marked the careers of many reputed filmmakers; a recent film historian has labeled them “the key binomial” in the evolution of Italian cinema. Both come from artistic milieus and get involved with theater, vaudeville, and satirical journals (they met as part of the staff of the famous magazine Marc Aurelio) while still very young. They share with contemporar- ies such as Fellini, Monicelli, Risi, Scola, and Steno the taste for mordant verbal satire and its visualization, initially present in sketches and drawings, later to become subjects for feature-length films. Their first four-hand achievement is one of the numerous comedies starring the Keatonesque Totó, called Totò cerca casa, co-directed by one of their future habitués, director Mario Monicelli. Totó’s innate sense for surrealistic and satirical comedy considerably influenced their screenwriting trajectory, allowing them to turn ordinary situations into models of irony and understatement. Another notable influence was Sergio Amidei, also known as the dean of postwar scriptwriting, with whom they wrote Le signorine delle 04; Amidei favors “the horizontal story,” which allows several sub-stories to unfold simultaneously, as opposed to “the vertical story,” in which plot-points lead to an expected finale.

After a couple of rather “operatic” productions such as Casa Ricordi and Casta diva, Age and Scarpelli eventually imposed their personal style, achieving an unprecedented blend between dramatic and satirical comedy. Their “youth-oriented” films, mainly directed by Monicelli, Comencini, and Risi (with whom they tried to set up a production company called “Film Cinque”), feature minor characters, small-time thieves, and homeless vitelloni whose humor, generosity, and wit facilitate audience identification: I soliti ignoti, Tutti a casa, I compagni, and I mostri (famous sketch-film with a sequel made 14 years later, I nuovi mostri) are just a few highlights of an outstandingly rich creative decade. The sixties also enabled the two screenwriters to desacralize various taboo subjects: war heroes are demystified (La grande guerra and La marcia su Roma) and middle-age icons ridiculed (L’armata Brancalone); the sexual revolution, although incipient, is foregrounded (noteworthy in this respect is the collaboration with Pietro Germi, director of Sedotta e abbandonata and Signore e signori). Their versatile screenwriting style facilitated the revival of the Leone-Western (Il buono, il brutto, il cattivo) and turned a parodic melodrama by Ettore Scola (Dramma della gelosia) into a landmark Italian comedy from the early seventies. The subsequent production of Age and Scarpelli is more heterogeneous, although no less exciting: they were invited to write more scripts for sketch-films (i.e., Noi donne siamo fatte così by Dino Risi), while continuing to transgress political and historical taboos through ferocious farces (i.e., Vogliamo i colonnelli and its group of fascist nostalgics who set up a coup).

Nonetheless, 1974 proved a crucial year in the career of these modern-time Goldenis: they created one of their best comedies of manners, Monicelli’s Romanzo popolare. The traditional love triangle staging the husband, his wife, and her lover is the pretext for analyzing the important gap separating urban and nonurban populations, the North and the South, the “written” Italian language and the various dialects which Age and Scarpelli relish using in many of their scripts. In a totally different vein, C’eravamo tanto amati heralded a new beginning in their collaboration with Scola and coincided with a change in tone, an almost autumnal echoing of their common youth: the audience is confronted with individual destinies, their revolution- ary ideals and their broken dreams. A few years later, in La terzoza, this autobiographical overture was further developed into an unconventional meditation of a group of aging intellectuals, one of them played by none other than Age.

The eighties witnessed a further diversification in the screenwriters’ working style: they started collaborating with directors from the younger generation (Age with Fiorella Infascelli, Scarpelli with Marco Risi), wrote scripts for actors’ films (Manfredi, Sordi, etc.) and did not refrain from adapting famous novels (Scemo di guerra, after Il deserto di Libia by Mario Tobino) or from issuing “international products” (Spaghetti House and Maccheroni). Some of the above-mentioned films were scripted separately, others still in collaboration; Age and Scarpellì eventually decided to “part ways” in the mid-eighties, confessing above all a need for change and a natural impulse to help young filmmakers and start teaching on a more permanent basis. Such a decision did not prevent them from pursuing hectic careers, Age in France and Italy, Scarpellì mostly with Scola, but also more recently with his own son, Giacomo (for the Oscar-nominated Il postino). Proving that they are still active and occasionally reunited into the nineties, Age and Scarpellì are credited for a 1996 musical revue, Bobbi sa tutto. Paraphrasing the musical, one could almost state that the ‘‘key binomial’’ definitely knows everything about successful screenwriting.

—Dominique Nasta

ALCORIZA, Luis

Writer and Director. Nationality: Mexican. Born: Badajoz, Spain, 5 September 1920; naturalized Mexican citizen. Family: Married the dancer and actress Raquel Rojas. Career: Actor from his teens; 1939—on stage in Mexico with Blanch Brothers’ company; 1940—film debut as actor in La torre de los suplicios; 1946—first film as writer, El ahijado de la muerte; 1960—first film as director, Los jóvenes. Died: December 1992.

Films as Writer (Often in Collaboration):

1946 El ahijado de la muerte (Foster)
1948 Nocturno de amor (Gómez Muriel); Enredatoyveras (Orellana); Flor de caña (Orellana); Negra consentida (Soler); Los amores de una viuda (Soler)
1949 La liga de las muchachas (Cortés); Un cuerpo de mujer (Davison); El gran calavera (The Great Madcap) (Buñuel) (+ ro); Tu, solo tu (Delgado) (+ ro); Yo quiero ser hombre (Cardona)
1950 Mala hembra (Delgado); Si me viera Don Porfirio (Cortés); Los olvidados (The Young and the Damned) (Buñuel); Huellas del pasado (Crevenna); El siete machos (Delgado)
1951 La hija del angaño (Daughter of Deceit) (Buñuel); Una gringuita en Mexico (Soler); Canasta uruguaya (Cardona); Los enredos de una gallega (Soler); Anillo de compromiso (Gómez Muriel); La Miel se fue de la luna (Soler); Carne de presidio (Soler)
1952 Se la paso la mano (Soler); Isla de mujeres (Baledón)
1953 El bruto (The Brute) (Buñuel); El (This Strange Passion) (Buñuel); Gitana tenias que ser (Baledón); Lo que importa es vivir (What’s Important Is to Live)

Publications

By ALCORIZA: book—

By ALCORIZA: articles—

Cinematheca (Montevideo), January 1978.
Dirigido por . . . (Barcelona), February 1978.

On ALCORIZA: articles—

Film Heritage (Dayton, Ohio), Fall 1965.
Huelva Festival Booklet, 1971.

* * *

Luis Alcoriza is best known for his script collaborations with fellow Spaniard Luis Buñuel, having worked on some of Buñuel’s more intriguing Mexican films. But in his later life, Alcoriza emerged as one of the leading scenarists of modern Mexican cinema. After 1962 he scripted a number of important films (most of which he directed himself), which are his own peculiar blend of raucous entertainment and pointed social criticism. His unit of analysis is the group which, especially in his post-Buñuel period, he uses to symbolize Mexican society. This is a motif that is discernible in his Buñuel films as early as Los olvidados (the gang of street kids in Mexico City). Similarly, there are the bourgeois guests in El ángel exterminador, mysteriously trapped in their host’s drawing-room, the disparate band of refugees lost in the jungle in La Mort en ce jardin, and the political prisoners, bureaucrats, politicians, and hangers-on in the fictional South American dictatorship of La Fière monte à El Pao.

But whereas Buñuel’s aims were existential, surrealist, and absurdist, Alcoriza’s were satirical. Buñuel’s films were bleak, detached commentaries on the human animal as he observed it, their undeniably dark side due to the fact that Buñuel’s vision did not encompass redemption. Alcoriza’s view was more hopeful. His scripts poke fun at human nature (particularly as it expresses itself in the Mexican national character), but like all true satirists, he criticizes in the hope of improving humanity. In Alcoriza’s cinematic universe redemption is a goal worth striving for—is the only goal worth striving for. Asked why he chose to write and direct Tarahumara, his semidocumentary film about an isolated Mexican Indian tribe scratching out its meager existence in a remote region of Chihuahua, Alcoriza said: “I am not in agreement with the world in which I have to live, because I do not like our society. Today we try to reach other worlds, the moon, Mars . . . and the most elementary problems—hunger, justice, [human] dignity—have yet to be resolved.” But Alcoriza believed this situation could be changed. Accordingly, his body of work reflects healthy indignation rather than Buñuel’s typically distressing resignation.

Two of his more illustrious scripts (both for films he directed) are Presagio, coscripted by Gabriel García Márquez, about a village whose inhabitants come to believe that they are living under an evil spell, and Mecánica nacional, the story of a group of automobile racing fans, on their way to see the conclusion of an Acapulco-to-Mexico City auto race, who are thrown together for a day and a long night due to a traffic jam. In these and other Alcoriza films (Tlayucan, Tiburoneros, El oficio más antiguo, Las fuerza vivas) he fills an expansive canvas with a large cast of characters and succeeds in creating a Rabelaisian cross-section of Mexican society.

—Charles Ramírez Berg

ALCOTT, John

Cinematographer. Nationality: British. Born: London, 1931. Career: 1940s—clapper boy at Gainsborough Studios; 1983—moved to Hollywood. Awards: Berlin Film Festival Silver Bear Award for Little Malcolm, 1974; Academy Award and British Academy Award for Barry Lyndon, 1975. Died: Of heart attack, Cannes, 28 July 1986.

Films as Cinematographer:

1968 2001: A Space Odyssey (Kubrick) (additional photography)
1971 Fangio (Hudson); A Clockwork Orange (Kubrick)
1973 David Niven (Burder—doc)
1974 Little Malcolm (Cooper)
1975 Barry Lyndon (Kubrick)
1977 The Fiesta Story (Worth); March or Die (Richards); The Disappearance (Cooper)
1978 Who Is Killing the Great Chefs of Europe? (Too Many Chefs) (Kotcheff)
1980 The Shining (Kubrick); Fort Apache, the Bronx (Petrie); Terror Train (Spottiswoode)
1982 The Beastmaster (Coscarelli); El triunfo de un hombre llamado caballo (Hough); Vice Squad (Sherman)
1984 Greystoke: The Legend of Tarzan, Lord of the Apes (Hudson); Miracles (Kouf)
1985 Baby (Norton)
1987 No Way Out (Donaldson); White Water Summer (Bleckner)

Films as Focus Puller:

1960 The Singer Not the Song (Baker)
1961 Whistle Down the Wind (Forbes)

Publications

By ALCOTT: article—

On ALCOTT: articles—

* * *

By the time of his tragically premature death in 1986, John Alcott had established himself as one of the world’s leading directors of photography. In particular, his association with director Stanley Kubrick had put him at the forefront of technical and aesthetic developments in his field.

The son of Arthur Alcott, production controller at Gainsborough Studios throughout the 1940s, John Alcott began his movie career in the lowly position of clapper boy. After working as a focus puller on various films in the 1950s and 1960s (including Roy Baker’s The Singer Not the Song and Bryan Forbes’ Whistle Down the Wind), his big break came in the mid-sixties with his first film for Kubrick, 2001:
A Space Odyssey. When that landmark film’s original director of photography, Geoffrey Unsworth had to leave the project half-way through its two-year shooting schedule because of other commitments, Alcott, who had been his assistant, stepped ably into his shoes.

By all reports a modest and self-effacing man, Alcott preferred lighting that appeared natural and which did not draw attention to itself. As he himself put it, “It is possible then to emphasize colours more, on the streets and on the set.” It was his work with Kubrick that gave Alcott the best opportunity to develop his ideas about “natural” lighting. One can indicate as examples of his skill the now famous scenes from Barry Lyndon which were shot entirely by candlelight. This was an idea that Kubrick and Alcott had discussed as far back as 2001 (it had originally been intended for Kubrick’s abortive Napoleon project), but it was only in the 1970s that lens technology finally caught up with the imagination of these two great filmmakers. Similarly, in The Shining Alcott chose to light the elaborate hotel sets almost entirely with “practicals” (that is, sources of lighting which are visible on screen as an integral part of the set; e.g. chandeliers and other light fixtures).

Alcott also of course produced distinguished work with other directors. His numerous projects included a glossy comedy-romance (Who Is Killing the Great Chefs of Europe?), a Tarzan movie (Greystoke), thrillers (No Way Out, Vice Squad) and fantasies (Baby, The Beastmaster). Some of these films were better than others, but Alcott nearly always contributed something distinctive, even to the least interesting of films. A good example of this occurs in the generally undistinguished low-budget horror production Terror Train. At one point near the beginning of this film a group of masked partygoers board a train in the middle of the night. The scene is genuinely eerie (unlike the rest of the film), with its strange, dreamlike quality arising almost entirely from Alcott’s lighting.

Alcott was one of a number of important behind-the-scenes figures in cinema whose input into various films often goes unheeded by critics and the public. The meticulousness of his work, as well as his complete lack of pretentiousness and his willingness to become involved in a wide range of projects (including some very unlikely ones) marked him out as one of cinema’s great artist-technicians, someone who through his ability to push back the boundaries of what was technically possible and then think through some of the aesthetic consequences of this contributed to the development of film as an art form.

—Peter Hutchings

ALDO, G. R.

Cinematographer. Nationality: Italian. Born: Aldo Graziati in Scorze, 1 January 1902. Career: 1919—actor in France briefly, then still photographer in French film studios, and eventually cameraman; 1947—first film as cinematographer, La terra trema. Died: In a motor accident, 1953.

Films as Cinematographer:

1945  Couleurs de Venise (Faurez and Mercanton) (+ asst d)
1947  La terra trema (Visconti)

1948  Les Derniers Jours de Pompeï (Gli ultimi giorni di Pompei; The Last Days of Pompeii) (L’Herbier); Cielo sulla palude (Genina)
1950  Taxi di notte (Singing Taxi Driver) (Gallone); Miracolo a Milano (Miracle in Milan) (De Sica)
1951  Domani e un altro giorno (Moguy)
1952  Othello (Welles); Tre storie proibite (Genina); Umberto D (De Sica); La provinciale (The Wayward Life) (Soldati)
1953  Stazione Termini (Indiscretion of an American Wife) (De Sica)
1954  Senso (Visconti) (co)

Publications

On ALDO: articles—

Cinema Nuovo (Turin), 1 December 1953.
Bianco e Nero (Rome), December 1953.

* * *

G.R. Aldo, one of Italy’s greatest cameramen, was a slow starter. Originally he had come to France in 1919 and appeared as an actor in a Jean Durand comedy. He abandoned this career to become a still photographer in the French film studios, continuing in the capacity for almost 20 years. He transferred his skills to working as an assistant cameraman and ultimately to lighting cameraman. In his humber capacity he had worked with Marcel Carné and with Jean Cocteau on La Belle et la bête. In 1939 he was camera operator for Leonid Moguy’s L’Empreinte du Dieu and also for Christian-Jaque on La Symphonie fantastique. With this experience behind him he visited Italy on location for Christian-Jaque’s Chartreuses de Parme in 1947. He decided to remain in his native country and having been introduced to Visconti by his friend Antonioni, who knew him in Paris, he undertook the photography of La terra trema. His work on this made his reputation immediately. His sensitivity to location in this drama of poor Sicilian fishermen produced never-to-be-forgotten images in black-and-white. The physical beauty of the sea scenes and the contrasting landscapes never obscured the neorealist approach of its director. It could be said that Aldo began and ended his career with Visconti for it was during the shooting of Senso in colour that he was killed in a motor accident on the Padua-Venice autostrada.

His output was not great but his artistry can be seen in three films of De Sica, Miracolo a Milano, Umberto D, and Stazione Termini. His exquisite work on Genina’s Cielo sulla palude, a life of the child-saint Maria Goretti, brought out the beauty of the Pontine marshes in the changing seasons and the physical traits of peasant life and character. The film had, in the words of one critic, “the rhythm of an ancient sorrow.” In 1952 Orson Welles made his version of Othello under conditions of great physical and financial difficulty. Forced to use the natural setting of Mogador in North Africa, Aldo illuminated the film with his striking images, and it became a feast for the eyes, turning the necessities of production into a virtue.

His style is never flamboyant and shows a subtle awareness of environment and subject but he could use every expressive device of the camera to penetrate the meaning of a scene. He played a key role in the neorealism of the Italian cinema.

—Liam O’Leary
ALEKAN, Henri

Films as Cinematographer:

1941 Le Chariot de Théophrast (Canolle—short); Robie est un ange (Y. Allégret—destroyed)
1942 Les Chevaux du Vercors (Audry—short) (co); Tu seras vedette (Mieur—short); Ceux du rail (Clément—short); Les Deux Timides (Y. Allégret) (co)
1943 Bell ouvrage (Cloche—short); Les Petites du Quai aux Fleurs (M. Allégret—short); Eccher au roy (Paulin); La Symphonie du travail (Cloche); La Grande Pastorale (Clément—short)
1944 Chefs de demain (Clément—short)
1945 La Bataille du rail (Clément); La Belle et la bête (Cocqueteau)
1947 Les Maudits (The Damned) (Clément); Le Diable souffle (Gréville)
1948 Anna Karenina (Duvivier); Arch of Triumph (Milestone) (2nd unit); Un si jolie petite plage (Riptide) (Y. Allégret)
1949 La Marie du port (Carné); Les Amants de Vérona (The Lovers of Verona) (Cayette)
1950 Ma pomme (Sauvajon)
1951 Juliette ou la clé des songes (Carné); Parigi e sempre Parigi (Emmer); ‘‘Mouche’’ ep. of Trois femmes, trois âmes (Michel); La Voyage en Amérique (Lavorel)
1952 Stranger on the Prowl (Encounter) (Losey) (+ ro); La Sarre, pleins feux (+ co-d—short); Le Fruit défendu (Verneuil)
1953 Zoë (Brabant); Quand tu lisas cette lettre (Melville); Roman Holiday (Wyler) (co); Les Amours finissent à l’aube (Calef); Julietta (M. Allégret)
1954 Le Port du désir (Gréville); Les Impure (Chevalier); La Reine Margot (Gréville); Frou-Frou (Genina)
1955 Les Héros sont fatigués (Ciampi); La Meilleure Part (Y. Allégret)
1956 Typhon sur Nagasaki (Ciampi); La Salaire du péché (de la Patellière); Le Cais du Docteur Laurent (le Chanois); ‘‘La Maison du bonheur’’ ep. of Die Windrose (Bellon)
1957 L’Enfer de Rodin (+ d—short)
1958 Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme (Meyer); Cerf-volant du bout du monde (Pigaut)
1959 Le Mariage de Figaro (Meyer); Douze heures d’horloge (Radavanyi)
1960 Austerlitz (Gance); La Princesse de Clèves (Delannoy); Les Collants noirs (Un, deux, trois, quatre . . .; Black Tights) (Young); Le Secret du chevalier d’eon (Audry) (co); Un Oiseau s’en voile (Canaille—short)
1961 ‘‘Ella’’ and ‘‘Antonia’’ eps. of Les Parisiennes (Poitrenaud and Boisrond)
1962 Le Couteau dans la plaire (Five Miles to Midnight) (Litvak)
1963 El otro Cristobal (Gatti); Réunion des artistes (Madasne)
1964 Topkapi (Dassin)
1965 Lady L (Ustinov)
1966 Danger Grows Wild (The Poppy Is Also a Flower) (Young); Triple Cross (Young)
1968 Mayerling (Young); Ici et maintenant (Bard—short)
1969 Versailles (Lamorisse—short); L’Arbre de Noel (The Christmas Tree) (Young)
1970 Figures in a Landscape (Losey) (co); Giselle (Farrel)
1971 Soleil rouge (Red Sun) (Young)
1975 Jackpot (Young)
1977 Noire et Caline (Leconte); L’Ombre et la nuit (Leconte)
1981 The Territory (Ruiz)
1982 Techo de la ballena (The Roof of the Whale) (Ruiz); Der Stand der Dinge (The State of Things) (Wenders); Une Pierre dans la bouche (Leconte); The Trout (Losey)
1983 La Belle Captive (Robbe-Grillet)
1984 A Strange Love Affair (de Kuyper); Wankanal Hinrichtung fur vier Stimmen (Exécution à quatre voix) (Harlan); Unser Nazi (Notre Nazi) (Harlan)
1985 The Perfect Kiss (Demme)
1986 Esther (Gitai)
1987 Der Himmel über Berlin (Wings of Desire; Sky over Berlin; Les Ailes du désir) (Wenders)
1988 Im Exil der erstrunkenen Tiger
1989 Berlin-Jérusalem (Gitai); J’écris dans l’espace (Eitaix); Cézanne (Jean-Marie Straub and Danièle Huillet); La Danseuse de 14 ans (short)
1992 Golem—L’Esprit de l’exil (Golem—The Spirit of Exile) (Gitai)
1993 Golem—Le Jardin pétrifié (Golem—The Petrified Garden) (Gitai)

Films as Camera Operator:

1936 Mademoiselle Docteur (Pabst)
1937 La Danseuse rouge (Paulin); Drôle de drame (Bizarre Bizarre) (Carné)
1938 Le Drame de Shanghaï (Pabst); Quai des brumes (Port of Shadows) (Carné); Campement 13 (Constant); L’Esclave blanche (Sorkin); Molken (Siodmak)
1939 Les Musiciens du ciel (Lacombe); L’Emigrante (Y. Allégret and Joannon)
1940 Sans lendemain (Ophüls)
1941 La Vénus aveugle (Gance); La Femme dans la nuit (Gréville)
Publications

By ALEKAN: book—

By ALEKAN: articles—

* Cinémagraphe (Paris), June 1981.
* Film Français (Paris), 24 September 1982.
* Postif (Paris), November 1982.
* Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), March 1983.
* Cinéma (Paris), May 1983.
* Film Français (Paris), 31 August 1984.
* Visions (Brussels), February 1985.
* Skrien (Amsterdam), February/March 1985.
* Première (Paris), June 1985
* Postif (Paris), July/August 1985.
* Filmcritica (Montepulciano), September/October 1989.
* Sight and Sound (London), vol. 3, no. 6, June 1993.
* Film Français (Paris), no. 2519, August 1994.

On ALEKAN: articles—

* Unifrance (Paris), June/July 1951.
* Film Français (Paris), 11 February 1977.
* Film Français (Paris), nos. 2296/7, May 1990.
* 24 Images (Montreal), Summer 1992.
* American Cinematographer (Hollywood), March 1996.

On ALEKAN: films:

1986 Henri Alekan, des lumières et des hommes (short) (Roth)
1988 Alekan, la lumière and Alekan, la mémoire (Dumoulin) (TV films as part of Océaniques series)

* * *

After studying optics and working as an assistant cameraman, and worked with Eugen Schüfftan on several renowned films during the later 1930s: Pabst’s Mädchenschicksale Doktor and Le Drame de Shanghai, Carné’s Drôle de drame and Quai des brumes, Strosmak’s Mollenard, and Ophüls’s Sans lendemain.

Alekan was imprisoned during the early years of World War II, but escaped and became a Resistance fighter. He found time to work on a series of short films (directed by Canolle, Audry, and Clément), and with both Yves and Marc Allégret. He persuaded Clément to revise his documentary Ceux du rail, and they collaborated with members of the “Résistance Fer” on the new version, centering on acts of sabotage and battles between the railway workers and the Germans. The film, La Bataille du rail, was greeted enthusiastically when it was shown in 1945, and considered the best French film about the Resistance.

Alekan’s lyrical precision and sobriety, appropriate to the documentary subject, brought him an immediate reputation for sensitivity combined with realism. His next film was Cocteau’s La Belle et la bête, a fairy tale with a cultivated poetic atmosphere. His earlier work with Schüfftan had opened his eyes to the potentialities of the camera; now his work with Cocteau would change his life. With Cocteau’s help, he created a series of images often compared to such painters as de Hooch and Vermeer or de la Tour. The beauty of the film relies on the charm of Jean Marais and Josette Day, the leading players, on the splendor of the designs of sets and costumes of Christian Bérard, and above all on the harmony of the images and the ingenious utilization of values and the black-and-white contrasts caused by the play of light and shadows. Without becoming overly artful, Alekan was able to adapt his sense of the image to the needs of the scenario and the exigencies of the director, an ability he was able to maintain in all his future work.

After these two completely different films which showed his versatility of style, Alekan worked with a series of leading French directors, and made Roman Holiday with Wyler in 1953. Alekan’s short film L’Enfer de Rodin, illustrating a double dream (of Dante and of Rodin), was widely praised, and in Gance’s Austerlitz and Delannoy’s La Princesse de Clèves, he was shown as masterful with color as he had been with black-and-white. Later outstanding films include El otro Cristobal, Versailles, Figures in a Landscape, Der Stand der Dinge, The Trout, and Wings of Desire, in which Alekan once more makes dazzling use of his talents in black-and-white cinematography.

In the mid-eighties Alekan teamed up with Amos Gitai, initially for Esther, then for the thematic trilogy dealing with exile and nationhood, Berlin-Jérusalem, Golem—L’Esprit de l’exil, and Golem—Le Jardin pétrifié. Each film tested Alekan’s abiding aesthetic concerns with light, particularly in Esther, where the harsh sun of Haifa was ultimately turned to dramatic effect with painterly contrasts of light and shadow. In Berlin-Jérusalem, Alekan’s formation through German expressionism is witnessed in dark and menacing atmospheric studio images of prewar Berlin, while for the sequences in Palestine, long traveling shots capture the ravaged, arid landscape to achieve a metaphorical resonance. If Golem—L’Esprit de l’exil is overly didactic in its representation of Paris as an inhospitable refuge for displaced foreigners, Alekan’s images of despair, occasionally built from multiple exposures, retain a dark poetry. In Golem: Le Jardin pétrifié, the symbolic journey of an art collector’s search for family heirlooms in Russia is registered in evocative landscape photography.

As an extremely active octogenarian, Alekan made his first American screen appearance in Wim Wenders’s In Weiter Ferne, so Nah!, and in 1994 penned a vigorous protest against the relocation of Langlois’s beloved Cinémathèque. Reflecting on his career, he asserts his preference for black-and-white photography and generously acknowledges the importance of his chief electrician Louis Cochet to his achievements. Several exhibitions marked his eightieth birthday and, as a celebration of his contribution to cinematography, French television screened two film studies: Alekan, la lumière and Alekan, la mémoire.

——Karel Tabery, updated by R. F. Cousins

ALEXEIEFF, Alexander, and Claire PARKER

1921—Alexeieff moved to Paris to study linguistics; scenic designer for Diaghilev’s Ballets Russes; 1920s—active as artist, book illustrator, and stage designer; 1931—Claire Parker, then his student, collaborated with Alexeieff and his wife Alexandra Grinevsky on first pinboard (“l’écran d’épingles”) animation; 1933—Night on Bald Mountain a commercial failure, Alexeieff turned to advertising films for theatrical exhibitions; 1935–39—with collaborators Georges Violet and others, Alexeieff and Parker produced 25 films, mostly for sponsors or advertisers; some of these feature original scores by major composers such as Poulenc, Auric, and Milhaud; 1940—emigrated to U.S., married following year, continued work as illustrators; 1947—returned to Paris; 1952–64—produced 21 advertising films using “totalization” technique; 1957—designed logo used on films of sponsors or advertisers; some of these feature original scores by major composers such as Poulenc, Auric, and Milhaud; 1979.

Films as Directors and Animators:

1933 Une Nuit sur le Mont Chauve (Night on Bald Mountain) (+ pr)
1935 La Belle au bois dormant (Puppet film)
1943 En passant
1962 Prologue to Le Procès (The Trial) (Welles)
1963 Le Nez (The Nose)
1966 L’Eau
1972 Tableaux d’une exposition (Pictures at an Exhibition)
1980 Trois Themes (Three Themes)

Advertising and Sponsored Films:

1936 Lingner Werke; Opta empfangt
1937 Le Trône de France; Grands Feux; Parade des chapeaux; Franck Aroma; La Crème Simon
1938 Les Vêtements Sigrand; Huiror; L’Eau d’Evian; Les Fonderies Martin; Balatam; Les Oranges de Jaffa; Les Cigarettes Bastos
1939 Gulf Stream; Les Gaines Roussel; Centpa; Le Gaz (unfinished)
1951 Fumées
1952 Masques
1954 Nocturne; Pure Beauté; Esso; Rimes
1955 La Sève de la terre; Le Buisson ardent 1956 Quatre Temps; Bain d’X (Bendix)
1957 Constance; Anonym; Osmar (4 films); Cent pour cent
1959 Automation
1960 La Dauphine Java
1962 Divertissement; A propos de Jivago

Publications

By ALEXEIEFF and PARKER: books—

Entretien avec A. Alexeieff et C. Parker, by N. Salomon, Annecy, 1980.

A. Alexeieff ou la gravure animée, exhibition catalogue, Chateau d’Annecy, 1983.

By ALEXEIEFF and PARKER: articles—

“Reflections on Motion Picture Animation,” in Film Culture (New York), no. 32, 1964.

Script, no. 10/12, 1964.

“‘Théâtre d’ombres et de lumières de 1 250 000 épingles,’” in Bulletin d’Information ASIFA, no. 1, 1972.

On ALEXEIEFF and PARKER: books—

On ALEXEIEFF and PARKER: articles—

On ALEXEIEFF and PARKER: films—

Pinscreen, produced by the National Film Board of Canada, 1972.

* * *

Even a brief scrutiny of Alexeïeff’s cinema must acknowledge his preliminary activities in other spheres, initially the severe challenge of designing and painting sets for the theatrical production companies of Paris. He also took up engraving, woodcuts, etching, and lithographs for book illustration, all of which profited from the assistance and critiques of his first wife, actress Alexandra Grinevsky, whose painting skills complemented his own.

Although Alexeïeff and Claire Parker, who arrived in 1931, were participants in the avant-garde movements of Paris, as artists they remained largely separate from these spheres; their art is mainly a synthesis of their own experiences and conceptions. The key to their work lies in Alexeïeff’s engravings, especially a three-volume edition of Dostoevsky’s Brothers Karamazov for which he created 100 lithographs. Until his edition of Pasternak’s Dr. Zhivago in 1959 with 200 pinboard illustrations, the Dostoevsky work remained the most powerful example of “static film,” i.e. a series of images joined together serially to create an implicit sense of movement, providing a visually powerful interpretation of the verbal narrative.

From this impetus Parker and Alexeïeff conceived a desire to animate his engravings, to employ chiaroscuro with even more refinement than was possible with engravings. The blurred contours and indistinct forms of their poetic and anti-narrative films reflect the Freudian preoccupation with dreams of avant-garde cinema in the 1920s, to which they added a sense of theater and spectacle that invested the engravings with vivid drama.

At the same time as Alexeïeff planned the pinboard with Parker, his student from Boston, Berthold Bartosch created L’Idée, described in its premiere announcement as “animated engravings.” Less an influence than an inspiration, L’Idée became for Alexeïeff and Parker an example of poetic animation, great art, arduous craftsmanship, and imaginative techniques.

All the pinboard films build their visual poetry upon the stimulus of a musical track devoid of dialogue. The only apparent anomaly in their use of the pinboard as a medium of visual poetry is The Nose, based on Gogol’s short story. It is, however, more an homage to Gogol than a duplication of his narrative. Reducing his narrative to a slight strand, they build a finely detailed illustration of 19th-century Russia centered on a breathtaking realization of Kazan Cathedral. The story of an overreaching czarist clerk serves as the occasion for exploring spatial definitions in a new way.

Their final two pinboard films are derived from a single Mussorgsky composition. In the spirit of their first Mussorgsky-inspired film, four decades earlier, they continued to explore animated orchestrations of movement and time with their minds attuned to basic issues of mathematics and physics. In their first creative decade, Alexeïeff and Parker focused more sharply on the ability of their medium to represent the free play of time and space, the intuitive interaction of visual and musical modes in a continual metamorphosis of contrapuntal relationships. Pictures at an Exhibition lacks the nightmarish quality of the initial film, but possesses quite different strengths. One pinboard in front of another establishes a visual dialogue, juxtaposing past and present in a sinuous and melancholy poetry that captures through interlaced allusions, the paradoxical relationship between youth and maturity.

In no pinboard film, least of all in their final one Three Themes, do Alexeïeff and Parker try to simulate what they would call photographic prose. Their texture is suggestive rather than explicit, a three-part complementing and contrasting sonata; their goal is a heuristic creation of reality’s depths where the mind and heart correspond freely. Three Themes is a fiftyfold slowdown of the normal scherzo pace of animation, a meditative elegy.

—Arthur G. Robson

ALLEN, Dede

Editor. Nationality: American. Born: Dorothy Carothers Allen in Cincinnati, Ohio, 1925. Family: Married the director Stephen Fleischman: one son and one daughter. Career: 1943—worked as messenger, then in sound laboratory and as assistant editor for Columbia; editor on commercial and industrial films before becoming feature-film editor. Awards: British Academy Award, for Dog Day Afternoon, 1975; Academy Award, for Reds, 1981. Address: c/o United Talent, 9560 Wilshire Boulevard, Suite 500, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Editor:

1957  Endowing Your Future (Engel—short)
1958  Terror from the Year 5000 (Cage of Doom) (Gurney)
Between 1961 and 1981, Dede Allen reigned as American cinema’s most celebrated editor. This period championed the auteur director and Allen emerged as an auteur editor, working with many of Hollywood’s best auteurs (Arthur Penn, Sidney Lumet, Robert Wise, Robert Rossen, Elia Kazan, and George Roy Hill) and developing her own editorial signature.

Her first important feature film (after 16 years in the industry) was Odds against Tomorrow. Urged by Robert Wise to experiment, Allen developed one of her major techniques: the audio shift. Instead of stopping both a shot and its accompanying audio at the same time (the common practice), she would overlap sound from the beginning of the next shot into the end of the previous shot (or vice versa). The overall effect increased the pace of the film—something always happened, visually or aurally, in a staccato-like tempo.

When she started work on her next feature, The Hustler (the first of six films with Arthur Penn), Allen further developed the principle of the jump cut by marrying it to classical Hollywood editing and television commercial editing. Instead of using the jump cut as a modernist reflexive device or a stylistic flourish, Allen combined its spatial and temporal discontinuity with a clear narrative and strong character identification (from Hollywood) and nontraditional shot combinations and short duration shots (from television commercials). Allen’s synthesis of the Nouvelle Vague, the “angry young men” films hit America. The realism of the British school and the radical editing of the French school made strong impressions on Allen. She credits Tony Gibbs’s editing on Look Back in Anger (1959) as very influential. The Hustler employs a similar style: lengthy two-shots, unexpected shot/reverse-shot patterns, and strategically placed “jump cuts.” “Jump cutting” helped launch the Nouvelle Vague, and before Allen began editing, Robert Rossen asked her to watch Jean-Luc Godard’s A bout de souffle, one of the seminal films of the French movement. Although she felt the “jump cuts” were only partially successful, she incorporated the basic principle into The Hustler by using a straight cut instead of a dissolve or an invisible continuity edit. The combination of these two schools and the focus on character over a seamless narrative flow gives The Hustler its unique quality of realism and modernism.

With Bonnie and Clyde (the first of six films with Arthur Penn), Allen further developed the principle of the jump cut by marrying it to classical Hollywood editing and television commercial editing. Instead of using the jump cut as a modernist reflexive device or a stylistic flourish, Allen combined its spatial and temporal discontinuity with a clear narrative and strong character identification (from Hollywood) and nontraditional shot combinations and short duration shots (from television commercials). Allen’s synthesis of the Nouvelle Vague, the “angry young men,” Hollywood, and television defined her other major editing technique, what Andrew Sarris called “shock cutting . . . wild contrasts from one shot to the next, which give the film a jagged, menacing quality and create a sort of syncopated rhythm.”
Bonnie’s sexual frustration and ennui at the start of Bonnie and Clyde find perfect expression in a series of jump/shock cuts. The chaos of the gun fights and the immeasurably influential ending (which also shows Allen’s debt to Eisenstein’s montage) pushed screen violence to a new, visually stunning level.

In short, Allen must be credited with bringing modernist editing to Hollywood. Whether labeled American New Wave or Postclassical Hollywood, The Hustler and Bonnie and Clyde stand as benchmark films in the history of editing. And like A bout de souffle, The Hustler and Bonnie and Clyde deviated enough from the norm to be originally perceived as “badly edited,” a perception fully inverted today.

Allen’s “shock cutting” in Bonnie and Clyde produced two long-lasting effects: 1) the American public began to recognize and openly discuss editing as an art form; and 2) the standard was set for rapid editing in every subsequent action film. From Sam Peckinpah to John Woo, editorial pacing continually moved toward shorter and flashier sequences. Her influence also manifests itself in other visual media; television commercials, music videos, animation, and children’s television compress many images into very short sequences. Almost every music video owes its rapid, nontraditional editing constructs to Allen. In retrospect, Allen expresses concern about her contribution to increased editing tempo—“I wonder if we’re raising enough people in a generation who are able to sit and look at a scene play out without getting bored if it doesn’t change every two seconds. We talk an awful lot about cutting; we talk very little about not lousing something up by cutting just to make it move faster. I’m afraid that’s the very thing I helped promulgate. . . . It may come to haunt us, because attention spans are short.”

Allen continued to refine her editorial signature (audio shifts, shock cutting, and montage) through her subsequent films, especially the temporal and spatial jumps of Slaughterhouse-Five and Dog Day Afternoon (her first Academy Award nomination). In Dog Day Afternoon, after a slow, tension-building opening, the protagonist’s discovery of the SWAT team unleashes a brief moment of chaos which Allen augments into ten, breathless seconds of screen time by overlapping audio, intercutting multiple interior and exterior locations, and employing jarring shot combinations and temporal ellipses. Since Sidney Lumet used a double camera setup on Al Pacino and Chris Sarandon during their phone conversations, Allen used various takes of each, which produced jump cuts and violated screen direction, but intensified their performances. In Reds, Allen combined documentary editing and her signature narrative techniques to weave a historical and biographical tapestry of refined complexity. This documentary/narrative blend won her an Academy Award.

Since Reds, Allen’s work remains consistently professional, especially in the usually overlooked dialogue scenes, but fails to convey the innovation of the sixties and seventies. This is not her fault. In the 1980s, not only did Hollywood become more an industry and less a developer of film artists, but Allen’s techniques became fully integrated into everyday film and television editing. What once appeared radical became commonplace. When asked to edit The Addams Family, Allen needed to balance special effects, a greater emphasis on spectacle and set design, the demands of stars, shorter viewer attention span, a more cost-conscious Hollywood, and a script based on a 1960s television show. These constraints resulted in a polished film, but one with little of her signature, except for the loony glee of the vault slide and the intercutting of Gomez’s train sequence. When working on independent projects, more of her creativity emerges. The curious jumble of edgy character interaction in The Breakfast Club and Let It Ride depends on the pacing her editing provides. In Henry and June, she experimented with fades and partial fades to blur time and point of view.

Allen has co-edited most of her films since Reds with younger editors, providing invaluable training for them. Her mentoring of others has produced a new generation of top rank editors. After nearly 40 years in Hollywood, Allen’s style, technical skill, ground-breaking films, and teaching secure her status as a legend of American editing.

---

Allen, Jay Presson

Writer. Nationality: American. Born: Jacqueline Presson in San Angelo, Texas, 3 March 1922. Family: Married the producer Lewis Maitland Allen (second marriage), 1955, one daughter: Brooke.

Films as Writer:

- 1964 Marnie (Hitchcock)
- 1969 The Prime of Miss Jean Brodie (Neame)
- 1972 Cabaret (Fosse); Travels with My Aunt (Cukor) (co)
- 1973 The Borrowers (Miller)
- 1975 Fanny Lady (Ross) (co)
- 1980 Just Tell Me What You Want (Lumet) (+ co-pr)
- 1981 Prince of the City (Lumet) (co, + exec-pr)
- 1982 Deathtrap (Lumet) (+ pr)
- 1986 The Morning After (Lumet) (co)
- 1990 Lord of the Flies (Hook); Year of the Gun (Frankenheimer) (co)
- 1995 Copycat (Amiel) (co)

Films as Producer:

- 1980 It’s My Turn (Weill)
- 1988 Hothouse (The Center) (Gyllenhaal)

Publications

By ALLEN: books—

- A Little Family Business (play adapted from Potiche by Pierre Barillet), New York, 1983.
Jay Presson Allen is a curiously overlooked screenwriter whose work has never received the attention it deserves. This may be in part because of a debut film which seemed auspicious at the time, but which has grown in critical estimation: her screenplay for Alfred Hitchcock’s Marnie. Although criticized at the time for what was regarded as facile psychoanalyzing, the screenplay is actually a finely constructed work, presenting with great subtlety, voyeurism, and yet sympathy, an emotionally disturbed woman who can hold her own with those female creations of Bergman and Antonioni of the same period, but who, perhaps typical of her American context, is able to overcome her problems. Providing Hitchcock with the screenplay for this, one of his two or three greatest films, is certainly a notable achievement, even more apparent if one is familiar with the original novel by Winston Graham and knows how well (and radically) Allen adapted the material. Her power to adapt brilliantly is present also in her screenplay for The Prime of Miss Jean Brodie, based on the novel by Muriel Spark, which once again presented sympathetically a three-dimensional, deeply disturbed woman.

Allen’s greatest critical acclaim came for her adaptation for Bob Fosse of Cabaret, which not only threw out most of the sentimental trappings of the Broadway musical, but also had the courage to go back to the original Christopher Isherwood stories and to make explicit in the film itself the central homosexuality of the character generally patterned on Isherwood. By providing Fosse with a screenplay which allowed him to express his characteristic cynicism in great displays of technical razzle-dazzle, Allen made an inestimable contribution to the institution of the American musical; in its portrait of Nazism and German society, Cabaret claimed definitively for the musical a kind of laudable pretension and seriousness, as well as providing for Liza Minnelli one of the American cinema’s great roles—yet another of Allen’s portraits of neurotic women. Allen’s most underrated screenplay is the surprising Just Tell Me What You Want, directed by Sidney Lumet, which offered an excellent Hollywood story and provided Ali McGraw the chance to turn in her most accomplished performance. Allen expanded the scope of her career somewhat by writing the screenplay for Sidney Lumet’s Prince of the City, with its largely masculine milieu and adapting (again for Lumet) the thriller Death Trap, perhaps her least interesting or successful project. Like many of her screenwriting colleagues, Allen became an occasional hyphenate, taking increased control of her work by functioning as her own producer as well. She also expanded into television and theater work. Tra, a one man show based on the life of Truman Capote which she wrote and directed, had great success on Broadway. Allen’s theatrical follow-up was The Big Love, adapted from a novella by Florence Aadland. Cowritten with Allen’s daughter, Brooke Allen, the play was produced by Allen’s husband, Lewis Allen, and Home Box Office (HBO), and later appeared on the cable network. In 1994, Allen returned to film, discussing her work on Celluloid Closet, a documentary on gay representations in Hollywood films. Allen also co-wrote the script for Copycat, a thriller featuring Sigourney Weaver as an agoraphobic psychologist. Copycat’s distraught detective (Holly Hunter) and paranoid psychologist are further examples of Allen’s effective portraits of neurosis.

—Charles Derry, updated by Mark Johnson

ALMENDROS, Nestor

Films as Cinematographer (Features):

1967 La Collectionneuse (Rohmer); The Wild Racers (Haller)
1969 More (Schroeder); Ma nuit chez Maud (My Night at Maud’s) (Rohmer); L’Enfant sauvage (The Wild Child) (Truffaut)
1970 Domicile conjugal (Bed and Board) (Truffaut); Le Genou de Claire (Claire’s Knee) (Rohmer)
1971 Les Deux Anglaises et le continent (Two English Girls) (Truffaut); La Vallée (The Valley) (Schroeder)
1972 L’Amour l’après-midi (Chloe in the Afternoon) (Rohmer)
1973 Femmes au soleil (Dreyfus); The Gentleman Tramp (Patterson)
1974 La Gueule ouverte (Pialat); General Idi Amin Dada (Schroeder); Cockfighter (Born to Kill) (Hellman); Mes petites amoureuusses (Eustache)
1975 L’Histoire d’Adèle H. (The Story of Adèle H.) (Truffaut); Maîtresse (The Mistress) (Schroeder)
1976 Die Marquise von O . . . (The Marquise of O . . .) (Rohmer); Des journées entières dans les arbres (Days in the Trees) (Duras); Cambio de sexo (Aranda)
1977 L’Homme qui aimait les femmes (The Man Who Loved Women) (Truffaut); La Vie devant soi (La Vie continue) (Mizrahi); Beaubourg (Rossellini—doc); Koko (Schroeder—doc); Goin’ South (Nicholson)
1978 La Chambre verte (The Green Room) (Truffaut); Days of Heaven (Malick); Perceval le Gaullois (Rohmer)
1979 L’Amour en fuite (Love on the Run) (Truffaut); Kramer vs. Kramer (Benton); The Blue Lagoon (Kleiser)
1980 Le Dernier Métro (The Last Metro) (Truffaut)
1982 Still of the Night (Benton); Sophie’s Choice (Pakula); Pauline à la plage (Pauline at the Beach) (Rohmer); Vivement dimanche! (Confidentially Yours; Finally, Sunday!) (Truffaut)
1984 Places in the Heart (Benton)
1986 Heartburn (Nichols)
1987 Nadine (Benton)
1989 ‘Life Lessons’ ep. of New York Stories (Allen, Coppola and Scorsese)
1990 Billy Bathgate (Benton)
Films as Cinematographer (Shorts):

1959  58–59 (+ d, sc)
1960  El acuña (Gomez—doc); El tomate (Canel—doc);
     Construcciones rurales (Arenal—doc); Cooperativas agropecurias (Gutiérrez Alea—doc) (co)
1961  Gente en la playa (+ d, sc)
1964  “Place de l’Etoile” and “Saint-German-des-Pres” eps. of Paris vu Par . . . (Paris Seen By . . . ) (Rohmer and Douchet); Le Père Noel a les yeux bleus (Eustache
1969  Les Bluets dans la tête (Brach)

Other Films:

1960  Escuela rural (+ d—short):
1984  Mauvaise conduite (Improper Conduct) (+ co-d—feature doc)
1988  Nadie escuchaba (Nobody Listened) (+ co-pr, co-sc, co-d)

Publications

By ALMENDROS: book—

Un Homme à la caméra, Paris, 1980; as A Man with a Camera, New

By ALMENDROS: articles—

“Neorealist Cinematography,”’ in Film Culture (New York), no.
20, 1959.
Film Dope (London), no. 1, December 1972.
Dirigido por . . . (Barcelona), April 1974.
Filmkritik (Munich), January 1976.
Cinématographe (Paris), Summer 1976.
“Buñuel, cinéaste hispanique,” in Cinématographe (Paris), September
1977.
Film Comment (New York), September-October 1978.
On Days of Heaven in American Cinematographer (Hollywood),
June 1979.
“Témoignage: mon expérience américaine,” in Cinémagraphe
On Kramer vs. Kramer in American Cinematographer (Hollywood),
May 1980.
Film Français (Paris), 3 October 1980.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), September 1981.
Cinema e Cinema (Bologna), April-July 1982.
Mediafilm (Brussels), Winter 1982.
Millimeter (New York), February 1983.
Film Français (Paris), 18 March 1983.

On Sophie’s Choice in American Cinematographer (Hollywood),
April 1983.
“Bronte-Buñuel,” in Cinématographe (Paris), September-October
1983.
In Masters of Light: Conversations with Contemporary Cinematogrsphers, by Dennis Schaefer and Larry Salvo, Berkeley, California, 1984.
Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1984.
Cinématographe (Paris), March 1984.
On Improper Conduct in American Film (Washington, D.C.),
September 1984.
“Almendros and Documentary,” in Sight and Sound (London),
Winter 1985–86.
Films and Filming (London), June 1986 + filmo.
Film Comment (New York), vol. 23, no. 4, July-August 1987.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), September 1987.
Kino (Warsaw), vol. 21, no. 11, November 1987.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), March 1989.

By ALMENDROS: articles—

Canby, Vincent, on Claire’s Knee in New York Times, 28 February 1971.
Film Français (Paris), 28 January 1977.
Avant-Scène (Paris), 1 November 1978.
Film Français (Paris), 2 February 1979.
Trusell, H., on Goin’ South in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), March 1979.
Thevenet, Homero Alsina, in Monthly Film Bulletin
(London), May 1980.
Sarris, Andrew, “The Cinematographer as Superstar,”’ in American Film (Washington, D.C.), April 1981.
Carlesimo, C., “Painting with Light,” in American Film (Washington, D.C.), April 1981.
Guttierrez, Tomas, “Cuba Si, Almendros No!”, in Village Voice
Filmcritica (Montepulciano), vol. 15, no. 391–392, January-February 1989.

*   *   *

Of the many splendid images Nestor Almendros recorded, two fleeting ones in Kramer vs. Kramer are remarkable for their pure visual power. The morning after Joanna has left Ted, he calls home from his office hoping she will answer, and the film cuts to two shots, one of their living room, one of the bedroom. Although we have seen the apartment earlier in the film, it is eerie how sad the rooms look without people: the colors are muted, the light is dim, the furnishings— the chairs, the lamp, the coffee table, the plant in the corner, the unanswered telephone on the bed—seem cold and oppressive in the semidarkness. The brief shots make the apartment’s emptiness a metaphor for Ted Kramer’s suddenly vacant life. Their poignant simplicity is not only a sterling example of Almendros’s unaffected technical mastery, but an illustration of a common Almendros technique: producing telling images that capture a film’s mood, crystallize its theme, and solidify its emotional content. One thinks of the rolling fields of wheat and the lone, erect farmhouse in Days of Heaven, Catherine Deneuve’s luminously sculptured face in Le Dernier Métro, the dappled forest in L’Enfant sauvage, the spellbinding close-ups of Meryl Streep in Sophie’s Choice, the crazed figure of Adèle H. wandering the sun-drenched streets of Barbados.

In his book of professional reminiscences, A Man with a Camera, Almendros demystifies much of the cinematographic process. For him, the images a director of photography records have less to do with technical trickery or special equipment than with sensibility. “The main qualities a director of photography needs,” Almendros writes, “are plastic sensitivity and a solid cultural background. So-called cinematographic technique is only of secondary importance.” Further, Almendros recognizes his responsibility of maintaining a cinematic tradition. The long-term function of the cinematographer, he believes, is to serve “as depository or transmitter of progress or discoveries in what has been called ‘cinematographic language.’” Accordingly, the sum of Almendros’s film work is more than a list of credits for films he has lighted, composed, and photographed; it is, as François Truffaut says in the preface of Almendros’s book, a lustrous chronicle of an artistic vocation.

Cinematically, Almendros used standard photographic conventions expertly. Menacing or disturbed characters in his films often move through chiaroscuro spaces (thus the night is identified with the schizophrenic Nathan in Sophie’s Choice, and the love-obsessed Adèle in Histoire d’Adèle H. cloaks herself in shadows and halflights). Film noir lighting is employed to heighten suspense in thrillers such as the moody Still of the Night, the more light-hearted Vivement dimanche!, and the romantic Le Dernier Métro. And foreboding occurrences are sometimes underscored by darkness (the coming of the storm in Places in the Heart, Sophie’s horrifying nighttime monologues recounting her tortured past in the Nazi concentration camps).

But beyond the inspired use of photographic language, an equally striking aspect of Almendros’s work is his inversion of cinematographic clichés. More often than not Almendros contrasted a scene’s mood with his visual rendering of it. Again and again in his films, the more emotionally complex a scene, the more brightly, naturally, and evenly it is lit. There is, for instance, the tangled bedroom farce that plays itself out amidst the sunny serenity in Pauline à la plage. Or the simple blacks and whites of Maud’s apartment (the set was purposely painted in only those two colors) in Ma nuit chez Maud, which contrast sharply with the wide range of gray ambiguities—moral, sexual, and psychological—facing the protagonist during his snowbound night with Maud. A more emotionally charged instance is Joanna Kramer’s disturbing departure from her husband in the full, flat glare of their well-lit apartment.

Almendros’s use of this technique is subversive: undermining his pictorial perfection, he creates an unpredictable world. As a viewer you appreciate the visual grace of the images, but become wary of lingering too long over a striking composition lest it explode in your face. In the cinematography of Almendros, tranquility is tenuous and likely to be violently shattered, like the sudden gunshot in broad daylight which kills the husband in Places in the Heart, the shooting of Richard Gere in Days of Heaven that breaks the river’s mirror-like surface, or the last repose of Nathan and Sophie, locked in a deadly embrace as midday’s golden light pours through the bedroom windows.

Almendros undercut his formal elegance because he realized that sorrow, pain, and sometimes evil lurk just beneath the surface of the finest, most evenly illuminated compositions. There is more to Almendros than pretty pictures. His camera eye sees down to the core of things, sees life’s duplicitous nature, the coexistence of beauty and treachery, the terror that can underly the wondrous. In Kramer vs. Kramer the uniform lighting of the courtroom sequence creates a measured calmness counterpoised by the increasingly painful proceedings. What gives Almendros’s visuals their charge is this kind of collision of surface with substance.

Most of Almendros’s earliest credits as cinematographer were on the films of French New Wave directors, especially Truffaut and Rohmer. Beginning with Days of Heaven in 1978, he began working on American as well as European films, most often with Robert Benton; Almendros was the cinematographer of Kramer vs. Kramer, Still of the Night, Places in the Heart, Nadine, and Billy Bathgate. He also was the cinematographer of Truffaut’s final features. Almendros himself directed or co-directed only a few films, the most notable of which were very personal expressions of his political/humanist beliefs and abhorrence of oppression in Castro’s Cuba: Mauvaise conduite (Improper Conduct), which offers evidence of persecution against artistic and political dissenters and, especially, male homosexuals (which Vincent Canby called “something very rare in films—an intelligent attack on Fidel Castro’s Cuban revolution” and “the first legitimately provocative anti-Castro film I’ve seen”); and the revealingly titled Nadie escuchaba (Nobody Listened), which further chronicles tyranny and human rights violations in Cuba.

But Almendros, who succumbed to cancer in 1992 at the all-too-young age of 61, will be best remembered as a cinematographer. In the preface to A Man with a Camera, Truffaut wrote that Almendros “loves the cinema religiously; he obliges us to share his faith, and proves that we can speak of light with words.” Turning Truffaut’s words around yields another truth: Almendros could speak with words of light.

—Charles Ramírez Berg, updated by Rob Edelman

ALONZO, John A.

Cinematographer, Director and Actor. Nationality: American. Born: Dallas, Texas, 1934. Education: Attended Dallas public schools. Family: Married Jan Murray. Career: Spent early childhood in Guadalajara, Mexico; worked with local theater while in high school; early 1950s—camera-pusher and cameraman, then director, WFAA-TV; 1956—puppet show created for Dallas TV; then in Hollywood working for KHJ-TV; also actor on TV and in films (credits include small role in The Magnificent Seven); 1964—cameraman for short film The Legend of Jimmy Blue Eyes; also did film documentaries for Wolper Productions; 1970—first feature film as cinematographer, Bloody Mama; 1978—directed first film, FM. Agent: Scott Harris, Harris and Goldberg, 2121 Avenue of the Stars, No. 950, Los Angeles, CA 90067.

Films as Cinematographer:

1970 Bloody Mama (Corman)
1971 Vanishing Point (Sarafian); Harold and Maude (Ashby)
1972 Sounder (Ritt); Get to Know Your Rabbit (De Palma); Pete ‘n Tillie (Ritt); Lady Sings the Blues (Furie)
1973 The Naked Ape (Driver)
1974 Conrack (Ritt); Chinatown (Polanski)
1975 Once Is Not Enough (Green); The Fortune (Nichols); Farewell, My Lovely (Richards)
1976 The Bad News Bears (Ritchie); I Will, I Will . . . for Now (Panama)
1977 Black Sunday (Frankenheimer); Which Way Is Up? (Schultz);
Close Encounters of the Third Kind (Spielberg) (co)
1978 Casey’s Shadow (Ritt); The Cheap Detective (Moore)
1979 Norma Rae (Ritt)
1980 Tom Horn (Wiard)
1981 Back Roads (Ritt)
1983 Blue Thunder (Badham); Cross Creek (Ritt); Scarface (De Palma)
1984 Runaway (Crichton)
1986 Nothing in Common (G. Marshall)
1987 Overboard (G. Marshall); Real Men (Ponzi)
1988 Knightrider (F. Mann—for TV); Physical Evidence (Crichton)
1989 Steel Magnolias (Ross)
1990 The Guardian (Friedkin); Internal Affairs (Figgis); Navy Seals (Teague)
1992 HouseSitter (Oz); Cool World (Bakshi)
1993 Meteor Man (Townsend)
1994 Clifford (Flaherty); World War II: When Lions Roared (Sargent—for TV); Star Trek: Generations (Carson)
1995 The Grass Harp (Charles Matthau)
1998 Letters from a Killer (Carson)
1999 Lansky (McNaughton); The Dancing Cow (Goldstein)
2000 Return to Me (Hunt); Fail Safe (for TV)
2001 Deuces Wild

Other Films:

1960 The Magnificent Seven (Sturges) (uncredited bit part)
1961 The Long Rope (Witney) (role as Manuel); Susan Slade (Daves) (role as Manuel Alvarez)
1962 Terror at Black Falls (Sarafian) (role as Carlos Avila); Hand of Death (Nelson) (role as Carlos)
1964 The Legend of Jimmy Blue Eyes (cam—short); Invitation to a Gunfighter (Wilson) (role as Manuel)
1966 Seconds (Frankenheimer) (2nd cam)
1978 FM (d)
1979 Champions: A Love Story (d); Portrait of a Stripper (d)
1980 Belle Starr (d); Blinded by the Light (d)
1992 Visions of Light: The Art of Cinematography (as himself)

Publications

By ALONZO: articles—

On Chinatown in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), May 1975.
Millimeter (New York), March 1976.
On Tom Horn in Filmmakers Monthly (Ward Hill, Massachusetts), May 1980.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), May 1983.
In Masters of Light: Conversations with Contemporary Cinematographers, by Dennis Schaefer and Larry Salvato, Berkeley, California, 1984.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), March 1986.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), May 1990.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), April 1993.

On ALONZO: articles—

Cleaver, T., ‘‘Scarface,’’ in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), December 1983.
McCarthy, T., in Film Comment (New York), March/April 1984.
Erbach, K., on Nothing in Common in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), March 1986.

* * *

John A. Alonzo represented—along with Vilmos Zsigmond, Gordon Willis, Conrad Hall, and others—a new breed of Hollywood cinematographer that entered the business during the 1970s whose work, like that of many new breed directors and editors at the time, challenged the classic style of Hollywood filmmaking by striving to be more experimental.

His career falls neatly into three segments. Initially, he journeyed to Los Angeles to make his fame and fortune as an actor; indeed for a short time he was the host of a locally produced children’s show in Los Angeles. He got an uncredited bit part in The Magnificent Seven, John Sturges’s western remake of Kurosawa’s Seven Samurai, starring Yul Brynner. Bigger and better parts soon followed in such features as Delmer Daves’s Susan Slade and the western Invitation to a Gunfighter, also starring Yul Brynner. On television, he had supporting roles in such hit series of the 1950s and 1960s as Perry Mason, Cheyenne, Temple Houston, Denty, Bewitched and The Wild, Wild West—where he appeared in two episodes, “The Night of the Golden Cobra” and “The Night of the Surreal McCoy.” In the latter episode, he had the title role.

It was during this initial phase of his career that Alonzo decided he really wanted to work behind the camera. He spent many a day studying the work of great cinematographers, particularly Winton Hoch and James Wong Howe. It was Howe who helped him break into the industry. Howe was shooting Seconds in 1966 and needed a camera operator. Alonzo was picking up camera experience working on David Wolper television documentaries at the time, but had no union card. Howe and the director of Seconds, John Frankenheimer, sponsored Alonzo for union membership and his career was off and running. Between 1971 and 1974 Alonzo lensed such popular films as Vanishing Point, Sounder, Lady Sings the Blues, and director Roman Polanski’s groundbreaking Chinatown.

For Chinatown, Alonzo was called upon to replace the film’s original cinematographer, the legendary Stanley Cortez (The Magnificent Ambersons, The Night of the Hunter) whose old-guard methods of lighting and shooting Polanski found to be too slowly paced, causing the film to fall behind schedule. Alonzo’s greater spontaneity both in the studio and on location—which stemmed from his experience shooting low budget films for Roger Corman, and greater familiarity with the day’s newer, faster film speeds—made him an ideal replacement. His masterful evocation of a sun-baked Los Angeles of the 1930s darkened by shadows lurking everywhere with a hint of corruption virtually defined the cinematic style now known as neo-noir.

For Chinatown Alonzo earned his only (to date) Academy Award nomination. Though he didn’t win, the Academy’s acknowledgment of his brilliant work on Chinatown enabled him to pick and choose his next projects. There were a number of successful efforts such as Norma Rae in 1979 and Scarface in 1983 that defined this phase of his career. But there were no other major awards or breakthrough achievements. Thus, increasingly, Alonzo began to alternate work as a cinematographer with stabs at directing in an effort to gain more creative control.

He directed his first film, FM (an amusing, counter-cultural forerunner of the hit TV series WKRP In Cincinnati) in 1978. The TV movies Champions: A Love Story, and Belle Starr, as well as numerous videos for MTV followed. Alonzo’s directorial career never really took off, however, and so he has had to settle for finding the top venues to exhibit his talent as a cinematographer. He is still much in demand. But most of the films Alonzo has lensed in the 1980s and 1990s—including Meteor Man, an entry in the big screen Star Trek franchise, Internal Affairs, HouseSitter, and others—only serve to remind us of a talent serving a system that has given him little opportunity to match the early promise of his masterful Chinatown.

—Douglas Gomery, updated by John McCarty

ALTON, John

Films as Cinematographer:

1933 Los Tres Berretines [uncredited] (+ d)
1934 El Hijo de papá (+ d, pr, sc)

1935 Big Calibre (Bradbury)
1937 El Pobre Pérez (Amadori)
1938 Madreselva (Amadori)
1939 Caminito de Gloria (Amadori); Puerta cerrada (Saslavsky)
1940 Remedy for Riches (Kenton); Dr. Christian Meets the Women (McGann); Three Faces West (The Refugee) (Vorhaus); The Courageous Dr. Christian (Vorhaus)
1941 The Devil Pays Off (Auer); Forced Landing (Wiles); Melody for Three (Kenton); Power Dive (Hogan)
1942 The Affairs of Jimmy Valentine (Unforgotten Crime) (Vorhaus); Ice-Capades Revue (Ice-Capades; Rhythm Hits the Ice) (Vorhaus); Johnny Doughboy (Auer); Moonlight Masquerade (Auer); Mr. District Attorney in the Carter Case (The Carter Case) (Vorhaus); Pardon My Stripes (Auer)
1944 The Lady and the Monster (The Lady and the Doctor; Monster and Tiger Man; Tiger Man) (Sherman); Lake Placid Sernade (Sekely); Storm Over Lisbon (Inside the Underworld) (Sherman); The Saltan’s Daughter (Dreifuss); Enemy of Women (Dr. Paul Joseph Goebbels; Mad Lover; The Private Life of Paul Joseph Goebbels) (Zeisler); Atlantic City (McCready)
1945 Girls of the Big House (Archainbaud); Song of Mexico (FitzPatrick); Love, Honor and Goodbye (Rogell); I Was a Criminal (Captain of Koepenick; Passport to Heaven) (Oswald)
1946 Affairs of Geraldine (Blair); A Gay Could Change (Howard); The Madonna’s Secret (Thiele); The Magnificent Rogue (Rogell); Murder in the Music Hall (Midnight Melody) (English); One Exciting Week (Beaudine)
1947 Driftwood (Dwan); The Ghost Goes Wild (Blair); Hit Parade of 1947 (McDonald); T-Men (Mann); The Trespasser (Blair); Winter Wonderland (Vorhaus); Wyoming (Kane); Bury Me Dead (Back Home From the Dead) (Vorhaus); The Pretender (Wildger)
1948 Canon City (Wilbur); He Walked by Night (Werker, Mann [uncredited]); Hollow Triumph (The Scar) (Sekely); Raw Deal (Mann); The Spiritualist (The Amazing Mr. X) (Vorhaus)
1949 Captain China (Foster); The Crooked Way (Florey); Reign of Terror (Black Book) (Mann); Border Incident (Mann); Red Stallion in the Rockies (Murphy)
1950 Grounds for Marriage (Leonard); Mystery Street (Murder at Harvard) (Sturges); Devil’s Doorway (Mann); Father of the Bride (Minnelli)
1951 It’s a Big Country (Brown, Hartman, Sturges, Thorpe, Vidor, Weis, Wellman); An American in Paris (ballet photography) (Minnelli); The People Against O’Hara (Sturges); Father’s Little Dividend (Minnelli)
1952 Talk About a Stranger (Bradley); Washington Story (Target for Scandal) (Pirosh); Apache War Smoke (Kress)
1953 I, the Jury (Essex); Take the High Ground! (Brooks); Count the Hours (Every Minute Counts) (Siegel); Battle Circus (Brooks)
1954 Cattle Queen of Montana (Dwan); Duffy of San Quentin (Men Behind Bars) (Doniger); Passion (Dwan); Witness to Murder (Rowland); Silver Lode (Dwan)
1955 The Big Combo (Lewis); Pearl of the South Pacific (Dwan); Escape to Burma (Dwan); Tennessee’s Partner (Dwan)
1956 Slightly Scarlet (Dwan); Tea and Sympathy (Minnelli); The Teahouse of the August Moon (Mann); The Catered Affair (Wedding Breakfast) (Brooks)
1957 Designing Woman (Minnelli)
1958 The Brothers Karamazov (The Murderer Dmitri Karamazov) (Brooks)
1959 Lonelyhearts (Miss Lonelyheart) (Donehue)
1960 Elmer Gantry (Brooks); Twelve to the Moon (12 to the Moon) (Bradley)
1966 Mission: Impossible (TV Series—pilot only)

Publications

By ALTON: book—

On ALTON: book—

On ALTON: articles—

Obituary, in Variety (New York), vol. 363, no. 6, 10 June 1996.

Handzo, Stephen, American Cinematographer (Hollywood), September 1996.

Obituary, in EPD Film (Frankfurt), vol. 13, no. 9, September 1996.

Sarris, Andrew, in Bright Lights vol. 1, no. 4, Fall 1996.

* * *

It is often claimed that film noir is more a matter of visual style than of content. If so, cinematographers no less than directors and screenwriters should perhaps be listed among the true auteurs of the noir cycle, and John Alton would certainly rank as one of its prime exponents. In the heyday of the cycle—especially in the early thrillers of Anthony Mann and in Joseph H. Lewis’s cult classic, The Big Combo—Alton created archetypes of noir’s main genre, the urban thriller. But he also ingeniously extended the idiom into genres with which it is less readily associated, such as the western and the costume drama.

Alton’s eclectic professional background provided ideal training for the financial and stylistic economies of noir. Born in Hungary and studying spatial organization and positioning of actors, matched by framing depth and background as also for The Black Book, working to the usual modest budget, Alton contrived a richly atmospheric evocation of Revolutionary France, turbulent and treacherous, largely from shadows and silhouettes. He created an equally alienated visual mood for the location exteriors of Border Incident, as also for Devil’s Doorway, the first in Mann’s great series of westerns.

Though his film noir work is in many ways his most interesting, Alton was too professional a craftsman to limit himself to a single style. His association with Allan Dwan, which began with Driftnwood, took in several of the veteran director’s autumnal late westerns, including Silver Lode and Tennessee’s Partner. To these he brought an austere lyricism, gently melancholy in its clarity, and long, elegant but unobtrusive tracking shots. In Dwan’s Slightly Scarlet he demonstrated another facet of his talent, matching James M. Cain’s overheated melodrama with a Technicolor palatte of startlingly garish hues set off by areas of deep shadow. The result, according to Andrew Sarris, was “one of the most eye-boggling American movies ever made.”

Other directors with whom Alton often worked included Vincente Minnelli and Richard Brooks. His Minnelli films saw him turning the glossy MGM house-style to advantage—as in Father of the Bride, where Spencer Tracy’s nightmare vision of the wedding ceremony crumbling into disaster is all the more surreal for being shot with such knife-edge crispness. Alton’s sole Academy Award came for his work on the climactic final ballet of An American in Paris, set to Gershwin’s tone poem. Whatever the pretensions of the ballet itself, there is no gainsaying the virtuosity of Alton’s lighting and camerawork.

For Brooks, Alton produced moodier, more downbeat effects, sometimes—as in The Brothers Karamazov—deliberately jarring. In an attempt to suggest the psychological turmoil of Dostoyevsky’s characters, he devised an expressionistic lighting scheme that threw deep shadows of saturated primary colours, a technique widely dismissed as crude and overemphatic. A similar approach, but more subtly applied, worked far better in Elmer Gantry. John Fitzpatrick noted how Alton’s photography “catches the Dust Bowl reds and browns by day and casts them against blue-black voids at night.” Many of the movie’s nocturnal episodes, though filmed in colour, convey a nourish feel of claustrophobic obsession.

Alton’s last masterpiece of pure noir cinematography was The Big Combo, routine gangland-vengeance stuff transmuted by its visual treatment. Jean-Pierre Coursodon observed how “Lewis’s carefully studied spatial organization and positioning of actors, matched by John Alton’s masterful balance of sparse lighting and engulfing darkness in predominantly deep-focus setups, create a dazzlingly rich texture which at times . . . verges on the abstract.” In its blend of trash content and sheer overwrought style, The Big Combo strikingly exemplifies how, in the hands of a master like Alton, cinematography can on occasion take precedence over script, acting, and possibly even directing, in determining the key quality of the creative mix.

—Philip Kemp

ALWYN, William

Composer. Nationality: British. Born: Northampton, 7 November 1905. Education: Studied music at Royal Academy of Music, London 1920–23. Career: Played flute in an orchestra that accompanied silent films; 1927–55—Professor of Composition, Royal Academy of Music; 1936—score for first film, The Future’s in the Air; also composed for radio, as well as orchestra and choral works; 1944–45—composer for newsreel The Gen. Award: Commander, Order of the British Empire, 1978. Died: 11 September 1985.

Films as Composer:

1936 The Future’s in the Air (Shaw—short) (co); New Worlds for Old (Rotha—short)

1937 Air Outpost (Taylor—short); Roads across Britain (Cole—short); Wings over Empire (Legg—short)

1938 Monkey into Man (Hawes, Spice, and Alexander); Zoo Babies (Spice—short); The Zoo and You (Shaw—short); The Birth of the Year (Spice—short)

1939 These Children Are Safe (Shaw—short)

1940 S.O.S. (Eldridge—short); The New Britain (Keene—short)

1941 Penn of Pennsylvania (The Courageous Mr. Penn) (Comfort); Architects of England (Eldridge—short); Night Watch (Taylor—short); Steel Goes to War (Curthoys—short); Queen Cotton (Musk—short)

1942 The Countrywomen (Page—short); Squadron Leader X (Comfort); They Flew Alone (Wings and the Woman) (Wilcox); The Harvest Shall Come (Anderson—short); Spring on the Farm (Keene—short); Life Begins Again (Alexander—short); Rat Destruction (Cooper—short); Western Isles (Bishop—short); Wales—Green Mountain, Black Mountain (Eldridge—short); Winter on the Farm (Keene—short); W.V.S. (Bird—short); Border Weave (Curthoys—short); Citizen of Tomorrow (Smith—short)

1943 Escape to Danger (Comfort); A.B.C.A. (Riley—short); The Crown of the Year (Keene—short); A Start in Life (Smith—short); Summer on the Farm (Keene—short); World of Plenty (Rotha—short); Fires Were Started (I Was a Fireman) (Jennings); Desert Victory (R. Boulting); Tunisian Victory (R. Boulting and Capra) (co); On Approval (C. Brook); Welcome to Britain (Asquith and Meredith)

1944 The Way Ahead (The Immortal Battalion) (Reed); French Town, September 1944 (Shaw—short); Our Country (Eldridge—short); The Grassy Shires (Keene—short); Soldier—Sailor (Shaw—short); Medal for the General (Elvey); There’s a Future in It (Fenton—short); Your Children’s Eyes (Strasser—short); Country Town (short)

1945 The True Glory (Reed and Kanin); Great Day (Comfort); Your Children’s Ears (Pearl—short); Land of Promise (Rotha); The Rake’s Progress (Notorious Gentlemen) (Gilliat); Your Children’s Teeth (Massey—short); Proud City (Keene—short); Worker and Warfront (Rotha); Total War in Britain (Rotha and Orrom—short); Today and Tomorrow (Carruthers—short)

1946 I See a Dark Stranger (The Adventuress) (Lauder); Home and School (Bryant—short); Green for Danger (Gilliat); Your Children and You (Smith—short); Each for All (Tully—short)

1947 Captain Boycott (Lauder); Take My Life (Neame); Odd Man Out (Reed); The October Man (Baker); Approach to Science (Mason—short); A City Speaks (Gysin—short); A City Speaks (Gysin—re-edited as City Government, 1948)

1948 Escape (Mankiewicz); Three Dawns to Sydney (Eldridge); One Man’s Story (Munden and Shand—short); The History of Mr. Polly (Pelissier); The Fallen Idol (Reed); The Winslow Boy (Asquith); So Evil My Love (Allen) (co); Your Children’s Sleep (Massey—short)

1949 Morning Departure (Operation Disaster) (Baker); The Cure for Love (Donat); The Golden Salamander (Neame); The Rocking Horse Winner (Pelissier); Daybreak in Udi (Bishop—short)

1950 Madeleine (Lean); The Mudlark (Negulesco); State Secret (The Great Manhunt) (Gilliat)

1951 The Magic Box (J. Boulting); The Magnet (Frend); No Resting Place (Rotha); Night without Stars (Pelissier); Distant Thames (Royal River) (Smith—short); Lady Godiva Rides Again (Lauder); The House in the Square (I’ll Never Forget You) (Baker); Saturday Island (Island of Desire) (Heisler); Henry Moore (Read—short)

1952 Mandy (Crash of Silence) (Mackendrick); The Long Memory (Hammer); The Crimson Pirate (Siodmak); Royal Heritage (Pine—short); The Card (The Promoter) (Neame)

1953 Personal Affair (Pelissier); Malta Story (Hurst); The Master of Ballantrae (Keighley); The Million Pound Note (The Man with a Million) (Neame)

1954 The Seekers (Land of Fury) (Annakin); The Constant Husband (Gilliat); The Rainbow Jacket (Keighley); Each for All (Smith—short); Your Children’s Teeth (Munden—short)

1955 The Ship That Died of Shame (P.T. Raiders) (Dearden and Relph); Bedevilled (Lesien); Geordie (Wee Geordie) (Laund—short); Zarak (Young)

1956 Safari (Young); Smiley (Kimmins); The Black Tent (Hurst); Odongo (Gilling) (song only); Fortune Is a Woman (She Played with Fire) (Gilliat)

1957 The Silent Enemy (Fairchild); Manuela (Stowaway Girl) (Hamilton); I Accuse! (J. Ferrer); The Smallest Show on Earth (Big Time Operators) (Dearden); Carve Her Name with Pride (Gilbert)

1958 A Night to Remember (Baker)

1959 Shake Hands with the Devil (Anderson); Killers of Kilimanjaro (Thorpe); Devil’s Bait (Scott); Third Man on the Mountain (Annakin)

1960 Swiss Family Robinson (Annakin); The Professionals (Sharp)

1961 The Naked Edge (Anderson); In Search of the Castaways (Stevenson); Night of the Eagle (Burn, Witch, Burn) (Hayers)

1962 Life for Ruth (Walk in the Shadow)

1963 The Running Man (Reed)
Publications

By ALWYN: books—
Daphne, Southwold, Suffolk, 1972.

By ALWYN: article—

On ALWYN: book—

On ALWYN: articles—
Pro Musica Sana (New York), Summer 1980 (additions in Fall 1980 issue).
Score (Lelystad), September 1996.

* * *

William Alwyn was the most successful British example of a composer dividing his creativity between absolute music and film composition. Between 1941 and 1963 he scored almost 80 films, while at the same time producing an extensive catalogue of concert, choral, and chamber works. It includes five symphonies, the opera Miss Julie, a piano concerto, a violin concerto, three concerti grossi, and several song cycles.

Alwyn studied the flute and the piano as a child. It was as a flautist that he first became aware of film scoring, when he was hired for an orchestra playing accompaniment to silent movies. Alwyn studied at the Royal Academy of Music in London and became a teacher of composition at the academy in 1925, a post he held until 1955. He was always among the most active forces in British music, serving as the chairman of the Composers’ Guild, writing on musical topics for magazines, lecturing, serving on committees, all in addition to writing several volumes of poetry, translating French poetry, and painting. A number of his paintings were used to illustrate the covers of the recordings of his concert works.

Alwyn’s first work for films was in 1936, when he was brought in to write a replacement score for the short documentary The Future’s in the Air, which led to other assignments in this field. With Penn of Pennsylvania in 1941 he began his more than 20 years as Britain’s most prolific composer of critically acclaimed films. Other composers—Walton, Bliss and Vaughan Williams—contributed occasional film scores of value but none matched the productivity or consistency of Alwyn. He was very much a part of the blossoming of the British film industry following the Second World War, and received praise for his contributions to such films as The Rake’s Progress, I See a Dark Stranger, The Fallen Idol, The Crimson Pirate, A Night to Remember, and two films dealing with troubled Ireland—Odd Man Out and Shake Hands with the Devil, the latter being the only one of his film scores issued as a record album. He retired from the screen with The Running Man in 1963.

Despite his high academic standing and his success with serious music, Alwyn never considered film composition a lesser form. “I am passionately fond of films and I think all good film composers are. You must believe in pictures, have faith in your artistic medium, and you can produce good scores.” He did, however, fully realize the different intent of concert and film music. “The whole art of the cinema is in its planning. It is coordination of a team, director, producer, designer, cameraman, musician, and actor, all working together and interlocking to obtain a dramatic whole in which no single aspect is predominant. I am always a little worried if somebody says to me, ‘I liked your score for such-and-such a picture.’ It makes me wonder whether I have stepped outside my brief, which is to provide music which is as indigenous to the film as the camera angles and the film sets.”

—Tony Thomas

AMES, Preston

Films as Art Director:
1946 Lady in the Lake (Montgomery); No Leave, No Love (Martin); The Show-Off (Beaumont)
1948 Three Daughters (Wilcox); The Big City (Taurog)
1949 That Midnight Kiss (Taurog); Outriders (Rowland); The Doctor and the Girl (Bernhardt)
1950 Crisis (Minnelli); Two Weeks—with Love (Rowland)
1951 An American in Paris (Minnelli); Dear Brat (Seiter); Rhubarb (Lubin); Submarine Command (Farrow); Sailor Beware (Walker)
1952 The Wild North
1953 The Band Wagon (Minnelli); Torch Song (Walters); The Story of Three Loves (Reinhard and Minnelli)
1954 Brigadoon (Minnelli)
1955 Kismet (Minnelli)
1956 Lust for Life (Minnelli); These Wilder Years (Rowland)
1957 Designing Woman (Minnelli)
1958 Gigi (Minnelli)
1959 Green Mansions (M. Ferrer); The Big Operator (Haas)
1960 Bells are Ringing (Minnelli); Home from the Hill (Minnelli); Where the Boys Are (Levin)
1961 The Honeymoon Machine (Thorpe); Wild in the Country (Dunne)
1962 All Fall Down (Frankenheimer); Jumbo (Billy Rose’s Jumbo) (Walters)
1963 It Happened at the World’s Fair (Taurog)
1964 A Global Affair (Arnold); The Unsinkable Molly Brown (Walters)
1965 Quick, Before It Melts (Delbert Mann)
1966 Made in Paris (Sagal); Penelope (Hiller)
1968 The Impossible Years (Gordon); Live a Little, Love a Little (Taurog)
1970 Airport (Seaton); Brewster McCloud (Altman); The Strawberry Statement (Hagmann)
1971 Lost Horizon (Jarrott)
1973 The Don Is Dead (Beautiful but Deadly) (Fleischer)
1974 Earthquake (Robson)
1975 Rooster Cogburn (Millar); Babe (Kulik); The Lives of Jenny Dolan (Jameson); The Prisoner of Second Avenue (Frank)
1976 Woman of the Year (Taylor)
1977 Damnation Alley (Smith)
1978 A Family Upside Down (Rich); The Cat from Outer Space (Tokar)
1979 Beyond the Poseidon Adventure (Allen)
1981 The Pursuit of D. B. Cooper (Spottiswoode)
1982 Bare Essence (Grauman)

Publications

By AMES: articles—

On AMES: article—

* * *

Preston Ames’s most notable successes in Hollywood art direction took place during MGM’s golden musical era. His greatest work was produced while working with director Vincente Minnelli. His portfolio includes such titles as An American in Paris, The Band Wagon, Brigadoon, Kismet, Lust for Life, Designing Woman, Bells Are Ringing, and that adorable piece of Art Nouveau fluff, Gigi.

Minnelli was a highly visual director with a great concern for detail. In the 1930s the concern for décor had been the Hollywood norm, particularly at MGM. However, the self-depriving war years had tarnished the luster of the glamour capital’s looking-glass. Then, in reaction to an era of sacrifice, opulence returned to America in the 1950s. Unfortunately, this was often at the expense of sophistication. Minnelli’s iconoclastic artistic vision belied this trend. His demands for specific images often perplexed the studio and he often clashed with the iron wills of both the Art Department head Cedric Gibbons and those new dictators of Hollywood—the special consultants from Technicolor. To work for such a creative maverick as Minnelli was an art director’s dream, and such an opportunity came countless times to Ames.

Ames’s most interesting assignments were for the Minnelli films An American in Paris and Lust for Life. The former was his first film with Minnelli, and somewhat appropriate since the American-born Ames had studied architecture in Paris and the film was about an American painter living in France. The movie, however, is far from a realistic depiction of life on the left bank. It is more a stateside fantasy of Paris life than cinéma vérité, colorful and quaint, with every set begging for a background of accordion music and spatially constructed for the Gene Kelly-Leslie Caron dance numbers. One of the less reproduced but fascinating designs was for a Folies Bergère-type number that did not feature the two principal dancers. ‘‘I’ll Climb a Stairway to Paradise’’ had a long pink staircase with each stair electrically lit at the tap of the cabaret star’s foot. At the base of its railing was a bevy of beautiful showgirls posing as ornaments and wearing enormous candelabras that would have made Carmen Miranda wince. It was an elaborate and difficult construction task, very uncomfortable for the showgirls, and it no doubt rekindled some fond memories for Cedric Gibbons about the good old days.

The most important number in the film, of course, was the ‘‘American in Paris’’ ballet. This production probably won the movie its many Academy Awards, including the one for Ames as art director. The credit cannot be given only to Ames, for costume designer Irene Sharaff also contributed a great deal to the sets. What made the film unique was its use of late 19th-century French art as the basis of design. It was not just the style and colors of painters such as Henri Rousseau, Toulouse-Lautrec and Raoul Dufy that were used. There was an attempt to emphasize the two-dimensional quality of these paintings on film, which, though a two-dimensional medium itself, almost exclusively aims at three-dimensional illusionism. (I should add that a similar attempt had been made as recently as 1944 in England when Olivier’s Henry V used medieval illuminated manuscripts as a source for art direction.) Such an issue would be important to American artists of the 1950s, still battling with a general public unable to deal with non-objective art and mainly in love with impressionism for its ‘‘prettiness and charm.’’

Minnelli and Ames tried a similar approach when filming the Van Gogh biography Lust for Life. This time color played an even greater role. As Van Gogh’s life progressed (or regressed) the colors of the film grew as intense as the colors in his paintings, indicating overwhelming madness.

Ames’s films without Minnelli were not nearly as visually exciting. Lost Horizon as a musical remake was a pretentious flop, and Airport—well, there is only so much you can do with the inside of a plane. But due to his unusual achievements on the Minnelli films, we’ll remember Ames well.

—Edith C. Lee

AMIDEI, Sergio

Films as Writer:

1935  Don Bosco (Allessandrini)
1938  Il conte di Brechard (Bonnard) (uncredited); Pietro Micca (Vergano)
1939  Lotte nell'ombra (Gambino); Cose dell'altro mondo (Malasomma); Traversata nera (Gambino)
1940  La notte delle beffe (Campogalliani); Arditi civili (Gambino); Popo divorzeremo (Malasomma); La fanciulla di portici (Bonnard) (uncredited)
1941  Cuori nella tormenta (Campogalliani); Il prigioniero di Santa Cruc (Bragaglia); Il pozzo dei miracoli (Righelli); L'ultimo ballo (Mastrocinque)
1942  Giungla (Malasomma); La regina di Navarra (Gallone); Gioco pericoloso (Malasomma); Don Cesare di Bazan (Freda); Il figlio del corsaro rosso (Elter); La bisbetica domata (Poggioli); Harlem (Gallone)
1943  Gli ultimi filibustieri (Elter); Gelosia (Poggioli); Tristi amori (Gallone); T'amérerò sempre (Camerini)
1944  Addio, amore! (Franciolini); Il cappello da prete (Poggioli)
1945  Roma città aperta (Open City) (Rossellini)
1946  Paisà (Paisan) (Rossellini); Sciuscià (Shoeshine) (De Sica); Cronaca nera (Bianchi)
1947  Fatalità (Bianchi); L'altra (Bragaglia); Germania, anno zero (Germany, Year Zero) (Rossellini)
1948  Anni difficili (Difficult Years) (Zampa); Ladri di biciclette (The Bicycle Thief) (De Sica); La macchina ammazzacattivi (Rossellini); Sotto il sole di Roma (Under the Sun of Rome) (Castellani)
1949  Patto col diavolo (Chiasrini); Stromboli, terra di Dio (Stromboli) (Rossellini)
1950  Domenica d'agosto (Sunday in August) (Emmer); Vita da cani (Steno and Monicelli)
1951  Parigi è Sempre Parigi (Emmer)
1952  La ragazze di Piazza di Spagna (Three Girls from Rome) (Emmer)
1953  Anni felici (Easy Years) (Zampa); Destini di donne (Daughters of Destiny) (Pagliero); Villa Borghese (It Happened in the Park) (Franciolini)
1954  Cronache di poveri amanti (Lizzani); Le signorine dello 04 (Franciolini); Terza liceo (Emmer); Secrets d'alcove (Il letto; The Bed) (Decoin and others); Die Angst (La paura; Fear) (Rossellini)
1955  Picasso (Emmer—doc); Il bigamo (The Bigamist) (Emmer)
1956  Una pelliccia di visone (Pellegrini); Racconti romani (Roman Tales) (Franciolini); Peccato di castità (Franciolini)
1957  Il momento più bello (The Most Wonderful Moment) (Emmer)
1958  Racconti d'estate (Love on the Riviera; Summer Tales) (Franciolini)
1959  Il Generale Della Rovere (General Della Rovere) (Rossellini)
1960  Vi viva l'Italia! (Rossellini)
1961  Fantasmi a Roma (Pietrangeli)
1962  Anni ruggenti (Zampa); Copacabana Palace (Girl Game; The Saga of the Flying Hostesses) (Steno); Una domenica d'estate (Petroni)
1963  Il processo di Verona (Lizzani)
1964  La fuga (Spinola); Lioliò (A Very Handy Man) (Blasetti); La vita agra (Lizzani)
1966  Fumo di Londra (Sordi); Scusi, lei è favorevole o contrario? (Sordi)
1967  Maigret a Pigalle (Landi); Cinq gars pour Singapour (Toubland-Michelin) (Italian version only)
1968  Colpo di sole (Gerrini); Il medico della Mutua (Zampa)
1969  Il Prof. Guido Tersilli, primario della clinica Villa Celeste convenzionato con le mutue (Salce)
1970  Il presidente del Borgorosso Football Club (Filippo d'Amico)
1971  Detenuto in attesa di giudizio (Why?) (Loy)
1972  La più bella serata della mia vita (Scola)
1973  Anastasia nio fratello (Steno)
1977  Un borghese piccolo piccolo (Monicelli)
1979  Le Temoin (Mockey)
1981  Storie di ordinaria follia (Tales of Ordinary Madness) (Ferreri)
1982  La Nuit de Varennes (Scola)

Films as Assistant Writer or Assistant Director:

1926  Maciste all'inferno (Brignone); Maciste nella gabbia dei Leoni (Brignone); Beatrice Cenci (Negroni); Transatlantische (Righelli)
1927  Il carnevale di Venezia (Almirante)
1928  Gli ultimi zar (Negroni); La compagnia dei Matti (Almirante)
1933  Les Aventures du roi Pausole (Granowsky)
1934  Les Nuits moscovites (Granowsky)

Publications

By AMIDEI: book—

Open City, Paisan, and Germany, Year Zero (scripts), in Roberto Rossellini: The War Trilogy, edited by Stefano Roncoroni, New York, 1973.

By AMIDEI: article—

Positif (Paris), April 1982.

On AMIDEI: articles—

Filmcritica (Siena), December 1990.

Roma città aperta (Open City) probably owes more to Sergio Amidei, one of its writers, than to its director, Roberto Rossellini. Amidei either directly experienced many of the events recreated in the film (the escape from German soldiers over the rooftops of Rome, sitting in a café with his romantic interest during an air raid), or witnessed them (the murder of a pregnant woman by soldiers while sitting in a café with his romantic interest during an air raid), or landlady who warned him of the arrival of the German soldiers, as well as the young woman with whom he shared the air raid, both reprised their roles in the film.

...

Amidei and Rossellini were already close friends when they set to work on this project, and would work together on several other films over the next fifteen years before becoming estranged after the director commented negatively on Il Generale Della Rovere (General Della Rovere) in 1959. Their collaboration included the other two films of Rossellini’s “War Trilogy,” Paisà (Paisan) and Germanzia, anno zero (Germany, Year Zero). This trilogy, together with De Sica’s Sciuscià (Shoeshine) and Ladri di biciclette (The Bicycle Thief), to whose screenplays Amidei also contributed, are considered to be the central texts of the neorealist movement.

Amidei was much more politically committed than Rossellini or Fellini, but he joined them in their desires to move beyond the constraints of neorealist theory. Amidei collaborated with Rossellini on most of his films made with Ingrid Bergman, films generally on most of his films made with Ingrid Bergman, films generally selling out of previously shared principles. Amidei’s later work included comedies of manners, satires, and even fantasy (La macchina amazzacattivi, begun but not completed by Rossellini) with younger directors such as Mario Monicelli and Marco Ferreri.

Amidei has, perhaps facetiously, described his work in these terms, “I’m a worker. Someone comes, asks me for something—a miniature, a fresco, a portrait, a country scene, a still life—and I do what I can. I’m like a Titian, a 16th-century artist (admitting the differences!).’’

—Stephen Brophy

ANDREJEW, André

Art Director. Nationality: Russian. Born: Andrei Andrejev in St. Petersburg, 21 January 1887. Education: Studied architecture and painting at Academy of Fine Arts, Moscow. Career: Stage designer at Stanislavsky Theatre, Moscow, and for Max Reinhardt in Berlin and Vienna; 1923—first film designs; worked in France after the Nazis came to power; also worked in England. Died: In France, 1966.

Films as Art Director:

1923 Die Macht der Finsternis (C. Wiene); Raskolnikoff (Crime and Punishment) (R. Wiene)
1925 Briefe, die ihn nicht erreichten (Zelnik); Das Geheimnis der alten Mansell (Marzbach); Der Trödler von Amsterdam (Janson)
1926 An der schönen blauen Donau (Zelnik); Die Försterchristel (Zelnik); Die Lachende Grille (Zelnik); Die Mühle von Sanssouci (Philippi); Überflüssige Menschen (Rasumny); Der Veilchenfresser (Zelnik)
1927 Alpentragödie (Land); Der goldene Abgrund (Bonnard); Im Luxuszug (Schönfelder); Die Spielerin (Cutts); Das tanzende Wien (Zelnik); Die Weber (Zelnik); Der Zigeunerwag (Zelnik)
1928 Thérèse Raquin (Simplet) (Cayatte); Rapa-Nui (Bonnard—short); Die Büchse der Pandora (Pandora’s Box) (Pabst); Die Heilige und ihr Narr (Dieterle); Der Herzensphotograph (Reichmann); Heut tanzt Mariett (Zelnik); Der Ladenprinz (Schönfelder); Mary Lou (Zelnik); Volga-Wolga (Tourjansky); Mein Herz ist eine jazzband (Zelnik); Zwei rote Rosen (Land)
1929 Diane (Waschnck); Die Liebe der Brüder Rott (Waschnck); Meineid (Jacoby); Der Narr seiner Liebe (Tschechowa); Revolte im Erziehungs haus (Asgaroff); Sprengbagger 1010 (Achaz–Duisberg)
1930 Die letzte Kom paniegie (Bernhardt)
1931 Die Dreigroschenoper (The Threepenny Opera; The Beggar’s Opera) (Pabst); Ihre Majestät die Liebe (May); Liebeskommando (von Bolvary); Die lustigen Weber von Wien (von Bolvary); Der Raub der Mona Lisa (von Bolvary)
1932 Mirages de Paris (Ozep) (co); Don Quichotte (Don Quixote) (Pabst)
1933 Volga en flammes (Tourjansky); Dans les rues (Trivas); Cette vieille canaille (Litvak)
1934 Les Nuits moscovites (Granowsky); L’Or dans la rue (Bernhardt); The Dictator (The Loves of a Dictator) (Saville)
1935 Les Yeux noirs (Tourjansky); Whom the Gods Love (Dean); Tarass Boulba (Granowsky); Le Golem (Duvivier)
1936 Mayerling (Litvak); The Beloved Vagabond (Bernhardt)
1937 La Citadelle du silence (L’Herbier); Tarakanowa (Ozep); Dreaming Lips (Czinner)
1938 Le Drame de Shanghai (Pabst); Lumières de Paris (Pottier); L’Esclave blanche (Sorkin and Pabst); Jeunes filles en détresse (Pabst)
1939 Les Musiciens du ciel (Lacombe)
1940 Paris-New York (Mirande and Lacombe); Elles étaient douze femmes (Lacombe)
1941 Caprices (Joannon)
1942 Le Dernier des six (Lacombe); La Symphonie pastorale (Christian-Jaque); L’Assassin habite au 21 (Clouzot); Simplot (Fernandel and Carlo-Rimi); La Fausse Maitresse (Cayatte); La Main du diable (Tourneur); Piecups (Pottier)
1943 Au Bonheur des dames (Cayatte); Le Corbeau (The Raven) (Clouzot); Mon Amour est près de toi (Pottier); La Ferme aux loups (Pottier); Pierre et Jean (Cayatte)
1946 Le Dernier sou (Cayatte)—produced 1944
1948 Anna Karenina (Duvivier); The Winslow Boy (Asquith)
1953 The Man Between (Reed); Melba (Milestone)
1954 Mambo (Rossen)
1955 Alexander the Great (Rossen)
1956 Anastasia (Litvak)

Publications

On ANDREJEW: article—

Cinématographe (Paris), March 1982.

* * *

Believing in creative freedom rather than academic reconstruction, André Andrejew fulfilled the 20th century’s notion of the romantic, individualistic artist. The unusual titillated his imagination, and, much like the French Symbolists, Andrejew sought to reveal underlying truths through symbolic imagery.
Andrejew began his career as a film designer within the context of "German Expressionism," a movement obsessed with the outward depiction of man's internal traumas. The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari, designed by Hermann Warm, Walter Röhrig, and Walter Reimann, had emphasized this attitude through linear distortion and contrasts of lights and darks. However, Caligari remained highly two-dimensional—an appropriate surface treatment for its superficial story line (although the original author's intent had greater ambitions than the final scenario). Andrejew expanded Caligari's conception into three dimensions in Raskolnikoff with twisted, jabbed spaces and jutting, discordant diagonals from plane to plane. This physical depth paralleled the psychological depth of Dostoevsky's source novel. In particular, Andrejew emphasized the staircase (a frequent motif in German cinema) as representative of the main character's twisted and tormented state.

Mingling fantasy with social reality, Andrejew furnished an ambiguously evil world for Pabst's Pandora's Box. Images of pain, cruelty, greed, innocence, and sacrifice precipitously under a cloud of omnipresent sexuality, as Lulu, the moderne, lower-class outsider, threatens the teetering, respectable, older, upper-class Europeans, destroying them and later herself. Lulu's apartment imprisons her in a 15th-century oil painting) includes an oriental grotesque, an incense burner, a tiny glass figure of a lamb, and an empty, nine-branched candelabra (Jewish menorah?). On one wall hangs a picture of Lulu as Pierrot the musician. Yet, beyond this idyll lies an alcove hiding a secret past. Lulu's apartment imprisons them, especially the films immediately after the war when full-fleshed film design seemed de rigueur. Andrejew slightly toned down his style. Nonetheless, he maintained his belief in the importance of intrinsic meaning in design.

As critics began to condemn any strongly stated art direction as distracting, Andrejew slightly toned down his style. Nonetheless, he maintained his belief in the importance of intrinsic meaning in design.

—Edith C. Lee

ANNENKOV, Georges

Costume Designer. Nationality: Russian. Born: Yuri Pavlovich Annenkov in Petrovskol, 1 June 1889; occasionally billed as George Annet. Career: Stage designer in Russia in 1910s and early 1920s; 1924—emigrated to Germany, then to France, and worked as stage and film designer. Died: In Paris, July 1974.

Films as Costume Designer:

1926  * Faust* (Murnau)
1934  * Les Nuits moscovites* (Moscow Nights) (Granowsky)
1936  * Mayerling* (Litvak)
1937  * Mademoiselle Docteur* (Greville); Nuits de feu (L'Héribier); Le Mensonge de Nina Petrovna (Tourjansky); Nostalgie (The Postmaster's Daughter) (Tourjansky)

1938  * Le Drame de Shanghâi* (Pabst); Tarakanowa (Ozep)
1939  * Cavalcade d'amour* (Bernard)
1942  * Poncarral, colonel d'empire* (Dellanoy); La Duchesse de Langeais (de Baroncelli)
1943  * L'Eternel Retour* (The Eternal Return) (Delannoy)
1944  * Le Bossu* (Delannoy)
1945  * Le Père Serge* (Gassner-Raymond)
1946  * La Symphonie pastorale* (Delannoy); Patrie (Daquin); L'Af-faire du collier de la reine (L’Herbier) (co)
1947  * La Colère des dieux* (Lamac); La signora delle camelie (Gallone)
1948  * La Chartreuse de Parme* (Christian-Jaque) (co); La Leggenda di Faust (Gallone)
1949  * Black Magic* (Ratoff); La Valse brillante (Boyer)
1950  * Lady Paname* (Jeanson) (co); La Ronde (Ophüls)
1952  * Le Plaisir* (Ophüls)
1953  * Madame de . . .* (The Earrings of Madame De) (Ophüls)
1955  * Lola Montès* (Ophüls)
1958  * Montparnasse 19* (Modigliani of Montparnasse) (Becker)
1964  * Pas question le samedi* (Joffé)

Publications

By ANNENKOV: books—

On ANNENKOV: article—

* Obituary, in Ecran (Paris), October 1974.

* * *

Georges Annenkov had worked as a stage and costume designer for 20 years before his work in French films, and he continued to do stage designs in France. His filmography is rather small for his years of activity, and his works from the 1940s have an overdone feel to them, especially the films immediately after the war when full-fleshed film design seemed de rigueur.

But his collaborations with Max Ophüls and his "team" (the art director Jean D’Eaubonne, the photographer Christian Matras, and, usually, the writer Jacques Natanson) on Ophüls’s last four films display his sensitivity as well as his brilliance in costume design. The stylish variety of costumes in La Ronde and Le Plaisir testify to his long experience, and his ability not to let his command of the periods and styles overwhelm the thematic movements of the films themselves.

In Madame de . . ., the wardrobe, as well as the earrings, are used to promote insight into the underlying theme of the film: frivolity leading to understanding and finally tragedy. Lola Montès is a deliberate exercise in overabundance and opulence, and here, guided no doubt by Ophüls, Annenkov’s use of the “Baroque” (a term used to both vilify and praise the film) is subtle and amusing. Cocteau, with whom Annenkov had worked on two films (L’Eternel Retour and La Symphonie pastorale), was interestingly enough one of those who signed an open letter defending the film after its disastrous opening, and only after the film’s rehabilitation in the late 1960s has it come to be seen as a critique of excess rather than a film pandering to it.

ARNOLD, Malcolm

Composer. Nationality: British. Born: Northampton, England, 21 October 1921. Education: Attended the Royal College of Music, London, 1938–41. Military Service: British Army, 1944–45. Family: Married; two sons and one daughter. Career: 1941—joined London Philharmonic Orchestra as trumpeter (principal trumpet, 1942); 1945–46—played for the BBC Orchestra; 1946–48—rejoined the LPO; 1949—score for first fiction film, Britannia Mews (The Forbidden Street) (Negulesco); also composer of works for orchestra, incidental music for plays, the ballet Homage to the Queen (for 1953 coronation). Awards: Academy Award, for The Bridge on the River Kwai, 1957. Commander, Order of the British Empire, 1970. Knights Batchelor, 1993.

Films as Composer:

- 1947 Avalanche Patrol (Swain)
- 1948 Charting the Seas (Lowenstein); Gates of Power (Squire); Badgers Green (Irwin); Women in Our Time (Nolbandov—short)
- 1949 Britannia Mews (The Forbidden Street) (Negulesco); The Frazers of Cabot Cove (Swingler); Drums for a Holiday (Taylor); Terra Incognito (Verity)
- 1950 Your Witness (Eye Witness) (Montgomery)
- 1951 Home at Seven (Richardson)
- 1952 The Ringer (Hamilton); The Sound Barrier (Breaking the Sound Barrier) (Lean); Stolen Face (Fisher); The Holly and the Ivy (O’Ferrall); Curtain Up (Smart); It Started in Paradise (Compton Bennett); Four Sided Triangle (Fisher)
- 1953 Albert, R.N. (Break to Freedom) (Gilbert); The Captain’s Paradise (Kimmins)
- 1954 The Night My Number Came Up (Norman); Hobson’s Choice (Lean); The Sea Shall Not Have Them (Gilbert); The Sleeping Tiger (Losey); The Beautiful Stranger (Twist of Fate) (Miller); The Belles of St. Trinian’s (Launder); You Know What Sailors Are (Annakin)
- 1955 1984 (Anderson); I Am a Camera (Cornelius); The Deep Blue Sea (Litvak)
- 1956 Tiger in the Smoke (Baker); Trapeze (Reed); Port Afrique (Maté)
- 1957 Island in the Sun (Rossen); The Bridge on the River Kwai (Lean); Wicked as They Come (Hughes)
- 1958 The Roots of Heaven ( Huston); The Key (Tully); The Inn of the Sixth Happiness (Robson); Blue Murder at St. Trinian’s (Launder); Dunkirk (Norman)
- 1959 Suddenly Last Summer (Mankiewicz)
- 1960 The Angry Silence (Green); Tunes of Glory (Neame); The Pure Hell of St. Trinian’s (Launder)
- 1961 No Love for Johnnie (Thomas); Whistle Down the Wind (Forbes); On the Fiddle (Operation Snafu) (Frankel)
- 1962 The Lion (Cardiff); The Inspector (Lisa) (Dunne)
- 1963 Nine Hours to Rama (Nine Hours to Live) (Robson); Tamahine (Leacock)
- 1964 The Thin Red Line ( Marton); The Chalk Garden (Neame)
- 1965 The Heroes of Telemark (A. Mann)
- 1966 Sky, West, and Crooked (Gypsy Girl) (Mills); The Great St. Trinian’s Train Robbery (Launder and Gilliat)
- 1967 Africa—Texas Style! (Marton)
- 1969 Battle of Britain (Hamilton) (co); The Reckoning (Gold)
- 1970 David Copperfield (Delbert Mann)
- 1975 N.E.L. Offshore News (doc) (co)
- 1980 The Wildcats of St. Trinian’s (Launder)

Publications

By ARNOLD: articles—

“I Think of Music in Terms of Sound,” in Music and Musicians (London), vol. 6, no. 11, 1956.

On ARNOLD: book—

On ARNOLD: articles—

Score (Lelystad), June 1993.

On ARNOLD: film—

1991 Malcolm Arnold at 70 (Rusmanis)

* * *

One of the later recruits to the distinguished group of orchestral composers who worked for British films more especially during and after World War II, Malcolm Arnold began his main contribution to films in the 1950s. His first notable score was for David Lean’s The Sound Barrier. Initially a trumpeter in the London Philharmonic Orchestra, Arnold had received his training at the Royal College of Music; as a composer he was outstanding for the range of his musical styles, which made him ideally adaptable as a composer for film, since he readily adjusted himself with an infectious enthusiasm to each individual film’s dramatic needs, exploiting his evident skill in pastiche composition. This was demonstrated early in his notable screen career in his close collaboration with Lean on The Sound Barrier. In the opening sequence, in which a Spitfire fighter test pilot, while descending in a steep dive, inadvertently hits the sound barrier, the music blends brilliantly with the sound effects that represent the onset of the battering of the aircraft and the pilot’s momentary loss of consciousness before he regains his self-control and manages to pull his aircraft out of trouble. Lean, as the former meticulous film editor-turned-director calculating every frame of every shot, required of his composer a split-second response to each nuance of the action, integrating momentary musical phrasing, or brief stretches of musical composition with the orchestration of the carefully selected sound effects. As the Spitfire lifts and soars so do the strings of Arnold’s composition, and when the diving aircraft begins to batter, the music shifts into an ominous, chattering sound which ceases only when the half-swooping pilot pulls the craft out of its dangerous dive.

In another of Lean’s films, Hobson’s Choice—the film version of a celebrated stage comedy about an alcoholic Lancashire bootmaker and domestic tyrant, played by Charles Laughton—the opening scene again shows the inventive integration of Arnold’s work. The film combines a vigorous and tuneful music hall-style pastiche with significant sound-effects—the squeaky pendant sign outside the old-fashioned bootstrap, a striking city clock, slow pans accompanied by music over the variety of shoes on display, all culminating in a sudden zip-pan to the shop door as it crashes open and Hobson staggers back home with a monstrous, climactic belch.

For Arnold, film music only became a branch of musical creativity if it was fully integrated with the visual-aural action of the picture, an inventive component in a multiple art-form, as it is in ballet and opera. Bernard Herrmann (Hitchcock’s key composer) used to claim that film music is truly “melodrama”—music-drama. Otherwise, he claimed, film music becomes a mere hybrid, just background music, trying to exist alongside, not with the movie. His view was to be shared by most of the prominent British composers of the period who were also enthusiastic composers for film, including William Alwyn, Vaughan Williams, William Walton, Arnold Bax, and others. Though Alwyn preferred to begin composition at script stage, working closely with the director, Arnold, a very rapid worker, preferred to work only at the rough-cut stage of the picture. He also preferred to use small combinations of instruments rather than large orchestral effects—25 instruments only, for example, in the case of Hobson’s Choice. He was to work with Lean again on The Bridge on the River Kwai, which earned him an Oscar; other prominent films for which he wrote the music were The Inn of the Sixth Happiness and David Copperfield.

—Roger Manvell

AUGUST, Joseph H.

Films as Cinematographer:

1913 From the Shadows (Barker—short); The Heritage of Eve (Barker—short); The Iron Master (Barker—short); The Man Who Went Out (Barker—short); The Miser (Barker—short)
1914 The Fugitive (The Taking of Luke McVane) (Hart and Smith—short); The Imposter (Barker—short); On the Night Stage (Barker—short; extended version: The Bandit and the Preacher, 1915); The Passing of Two Gun Hics (Two Gun Hicks) (Hart and Smith—short); Pinto Ben (Barker—short)
1915 Between Men (Barker); Cash Parrish’s Pal (Double Crossed) (Hart and Smith—short); The City of Darkness (Barker—short); The Coward (T. Ince and Barker); The Conversion of Frosty Blake (The Gentleman from Blue Gulch) (Hart and Smith—short; extended version: The Convert/The Roughneck, 1915); The Darkening Trail (Hart and Smith—short; extended version: Hell Bound for Alaska, 1915); The Disciple (Barker); The Grit (Hart and Smith—short); His Hour of Manhood (Barker); The Iron Strain (Barker); Keno Bates, Liar (Hart and Smith—short); Rumpelstiltskin (Barker); The Silent Stranger (Hart and Smith); The Ruse (Hart and Smith—short; extended version: A Square Deal, 1915)
1916 Hell’s Hinges; The Return of Drew Egan; Apostle of Vengeance (Hart and Smith); The Aryan (Hart and Smith); The Captive God (Barker); Civilization’s Child (Barker) (co)
The Deserter (Edwards) (co); The Devil’s Double (Barker);
The Last Act (Hart and Smith)
1917 The Cold Deck (Barker); The Desert Man (Hart); An Even Break (Hart); Golden Rule Kate (Barker); The Gunfighter (Hart); Truthful Tulliver (Hart); The Regenerates (Hart); The Silent Man (Hart); The Square Deal Man (Hart); Upholding the Law (Hart); Wolf Lowry (Hart)
1918 Blue Blazes Rawden (Hart); The Border Wireless (Hart); Branding Broadway (Hart); He Comes Up Smiling (Dwan); The Narrow Trail (Hart); Riddle Gawne (Hart); Selfish Yates (Hart); Shark Monroe (Hart); The Tiger Man (Hart); Wolves of the Rail (Hart)
1919 Poppys Girl’s Husband (Hart); Breed of Men (Hillary); John Petticoats (Hillary); The Money Corral (Hillary); Square Deal Sanderson (Hillary); Wagon Tracks (Hillary)
1920 Sand (Hillary); The Testing Block (Hillary); The Toll Gate (Hillary); The Cradle of Courage (Hillary)
1921 O’Malley of the Mounted (Hillary); The Whistle (Hillary); White Oak (Hillary); Three Word Brand (Hillary)
1922 Arabian Love (Storm); Travelin’ On (Hillary); Honor First (Storm); The Love Gambler (Franz); A California Romance (Storm)
1923 The Man Who Won (Wellman); Truxton King (Truxtonia) (Storm); Madness of Youth (Storm); The Temple of Venus (Otto); Big Dan (Wellman); Good-by Girls! (Storm); St. Elmo (Storm); Darkness and Daylight (Plummer); Cupid’s Fireman (Wellman)
1924 Dante’s Inferno (Otto); Not a Drum Was Heard (Wellman); The Folly of Vanity (Elvey and Otto) (co); The Vagabond Trail (Wellman)
1925 The Hunted Woman (Conway); Greater Than a Crown (Neill); The Fighting Heart (Ford); The Ancient Mariner (Otto and Bennett); Tumbleweeds (Baggot); Lightnin’ (Ford)
1926 The Road to Glory (Hawks); Fig Leaves (Hawks); The Flying Horseman (Dull)
1927 The Beloved Rogue (Crosland); Two Arabian Knights (Milestone) (co); Come to My House (Green); Very Confidential (Tiling)
1928 Soft Living (Tiling); Don’t Marry (Tiling); Honor Bound (Green); The Farmer’s Daughter (Rosson or Taurog)
1929 Strong Boy (Ford); Salute (Ford); Seven Faces (Viertel) (co); The Black Watch (King of the Khyber Rifles) (Ford)
1930 Men without Women (Ford); Double Cross Roads (Werner) (co); On Your Back (McClintic); Up the River (Ford); Man Trouble (Viertel)
1931 Sea Beneath (Ford); Mr. Lemon of Orange (Blystery); Quick Millions (Brown); The Brat (Ford); Heartbreak (Werner); Charlie Chan’s Chance (Blystery)
1932 Silent Witness (Varnel and Hough); As the Devil Commands (Neill); Mystery Ranch (Howard); Vanity Street (Grinde); No More Orchids (W. Lang); That’s My Boy (Neill)
1933 Circus Queen Murder (Neill); Cocktail Hour (Schartzinger); Master of Men (Hillery); Man’s Castle (Borzage)
1934 No Greater Glory (Borzage); Twentieth Century (Hawks); Black Moon (Neill); Sisters under the Skin (The Romantic Age) (Burton); The Defense Rests (Hillery); Among the Missing (Rogell); The Captian Hates the Sea (Milestone)
1935 The Whole Town’s Talking (Passport to Fame) (Ford); I’ll Love You Always (Bulgakov); The Informer (Ford); After the Dance (Bulgakov); Sylvia Scarlett (Cukor)
1936 Mass ’em Up (House of Fate) (C. Vidor) (co); Every Saturday Night (Tinling); Mary of Scotland (Ford); Grand Jury (Rogell); The Plough and the Stars (Ford)
1937 Sea Devils (Stoloff) (co); The Soldier and the Lady (Michael Strogooff) (Nicholls); Fifty Roads to Town (Taugr); There Goes My Girl (Holmes); Super-Sleuth (Stoloff); Music for Madam (Blnesty); A Damsel in Distress (Stevens)
1938 The Saint in New York (Holmes) (co); Gun Law (Howard); Border G-Man (Howard); This Marriage Business (Cabanne)
1939 Man of Conquest (Nicholls); Gunga Din (Stevens); Nurse Edith Cavell (Wilcox) (co); The Hunchback of Notre Dame (Dieterle)
1940 Primrose Path (La Cava); Melody Ranch (Santley)
1941 All That Money Can Buy (The Devil and Daniel Webster) (Dieterle)
1945 They Were Expendable (Ford)
1948 Portrait of Jennie (Dieterle)

Publications

On AUGUST: articles—

* Film Comment (New York), Summer 1972.
* Film Dope (Nottingham), March 1988.

Screenwriter Dudley Nichols once wrote, “... Joe August was a great cameraman, perhaps the most experimental and audacious I have ever known.” Much of his silent work has been lost or is available only in poor copies that do little justice to Joseph H. August’s exemplary skill. But the films that survive—both silent and sound—eloquently support Nichols’ appraisal.

August began in the business under the tutelage of Thomas Ince and soon was William S. Hart’s photographer of choice. With only a couple of exceptions, August photographed every Hart feature from double exposure in Hart’s The Desert Man, to moralistic fantasies like Dante’s Inferno, The Temple of Venus, and The Ancient Mariner, and delighted in the unusual and experimental: he turns the camera upside-down for an effect in Big Dan, works with double exposure in Hart’s Three Word Brand, utilizes Technicolor in Fig Leaves.

While the cliché would have it that the introduction of sound “nailed the camera to the floor,” August found the new technology... challenging and inspiring. His stunning camera work on John Ford films such as Salute and Men without Women is filled with elaborate tracking shots, underwater photography (at one point, he mounted a camera in a waterproof booth on top of a submarine and filmed the submersion), and other bravura techniques without sacrificing what Lindsay Anderson calls his “voluptuous lighting” which gives films like The Black Watch their “remarkable visual distinction: strikingly chiaroscuro, boldly dramatic in composition, strongly dramatic in atmosphere.”

August worked often with Ford in the 1930s, oddly—considering that both men made their reputations in the genre—never in a western. Ford had August utilize double exposures to make twins of Edward G. Robinson in The Informer. Ford also worked together on the moody Mary of Scotland, The Plough and the Stars (an “Irish” film that seems to be composed equally of documentary and expressionist techniques), and The Informer. Ford’s most overt excursion into the art film. The Informer seems more deliberate and obvious than much of Ford’s best work but August’s contribution is superb: stylized, shadowy, evocative.

However, Ford had no monopoly on August’s services. Rowland Brown, Stevens, Dieterle, Cukor, and Borzage all brought out fresh facets of the cinematographer’s talent. The cinematography in Quick Millions is fast-paced and hard-boiled; August suffuses Man’s Castle with romantic mist; A Damsel in Distress is fluid and sun-lit; Gunga Din stylizes its roughhousing, mock-heroic images by placing the camera below eye level and undercranking.

Portrait of Jennie, August’s last film, contains some of his most striking work: harsh, black-and-white contrasts in one scene, dreamy, misty romanticism in the next. Only in his late 50s when he died, August was a motion picture veteran of over 30 years. His career neatly spans the ‘Golden Age.’ He weathered the technical innovations of the silent period, matter-of-factly took on sound, and gracefully exited the scene before television ever played havoc with the sensitive, glimmering, and audacious images to which he devoted his life.

—Frank Thompson

AURENCHE, Jean, and Pierre BOST

Films as Writer (Aurenche):

- 1933 Pirates du Rhône (+ co-d—short); Bracos de Sologne (+ co-d—short); Monsieur Cordon (P. Prévert—short) (+ ro)
- 1936 Les Dégourdis de la onzeème (Christian-Jaque); Vous n’avez rien à déclarer? (Y. Allégret and Joannon)
- 1937 L’Affaire Lafarge (Chenal); L’Affaire du courrier de Lyon (The Courier of Lyons) (Lehmann)
- 1938 Hôtel du Nord (Carné); Le Ruisseau (Lehmann)
- 1939 L’Héritier des Mondésir (Valentin); Cavalcade d’amour (Bernard); La Tradition de minuit (Richèbe); L’Emigrante (Y. Allégret and Joannon)
- 1941 Madame Sans-Gêne (Richèbe)
- 1942 Le Mariage de Chiffon (Autant-Lara); Domino (Richèbe); Huit hommes dans un château (Pottier); Romance à trois (Richèbe); Lettres d’amour (Autant-Lara)
- 1943 Le Moussaillon (Gourgues); Le Marchand de notes (Grimault—short); Les Petites du Quai aux Fleurs (M. Allégret); Adrien (Fernandel); L’Épouv antail (Grimault—short)
- 1944 Le Voleur de paratonnerres (Grimault—short); Sylvie et la fantôme (Sylvie and the Ghost; Sylvie and the Phantom) (Autant-Lara)
- 1946 Les J-3 (Richèbe)
- 1947 Les Amants du Pont Saint-Jean (Decoin)
- 1951 Gibier de potence (Richèbe)
- 1953 Mam’zelle Nitouche (Y. Allégret)
- 1956 Notre-Dame de Paris (The Hunchback of Notre Dame) (Delannoy)
- 1958 La Femme et le pantin (The Female) (Duvivier)
- 1960 L’Affaire d’une nuit (Verneuil)
- 1962 Vive Henri IV, vive l’amour! (Autant-Lara); Vu du pont (A View from the Bridge) (Lumet) (French version only)
- 1963 Venere imperiale (Delannoy)
- 1965 Le Journal d’une femme en blanc (Autant-Lara)
- 1966 Le Nouveau Journal d’une femme en blanc (Une Femme en blanc se révolte) (Autant-Lara)
- 1967 “Aujourd’hui” ep. of Le Plus Vieux Métier du monde (The Oldest Profession) (Autant-Lara)
- 1969 Les Patates (Autant-Lara)
- 1975 Que la fête commence (Let Joy Reign Supreme) (Tavernier); Le Juge et l’assassin (The Judge and the Assassin) (Tavernier)
- 1981 Coup de torchon (Clean Slate) (Tavernier)
- 1982 L’Etoile du nord (The Northern Star) (Granier-Defere)
- 1987 Fucking Fernand (Mordillat); De guerre lasse (Enrico) (co)
- 1988 Le Palanquin des larmes (Dorfmann)

Films as Writer (Bost):

- 1939 L’Héritier des Mondésir (Valentin)
- 1942 L’Homme qui joue avec le feu (De Limur); Croisieres sidérales (Zwobada); La Chèvre d’or (Barberis); Une Etoile au soleil (Zwobada); Madame et le mort (Daquin); Dernier atout (Becker)
- 1944 La Libération de Paris
- 1945 Patrie (Daquin)
- 1947 Les Jeux sont faits (Delannoy)
- 1950 Le Château de verre (Clément)
- 1952 La voce del silenzio (Fabst); La P . . . respectueuse (The Respectful Prostitute) (Pagliero and Brabant)
1953 Une Fille nommée Madeleine (Maddalena) (Genina); Le Guérisseur (Ciampi)
1957 Oeil pour oeil (An Eye for an Eye) (Cayatte)
1958 Le Vent se lève (Ciampi)
1959 Pantalaskas (Paviot)
1961 Che gioia vivere (Quelle joie de vivre) (Clément)

Films as Cowriters:
1943 Douce (Autant-Lara)
1946 La Symphonie pastorale (Delannoy); La Septième Porte (Zwoboda)
1947 Le Diable au corps (Devil in the Flesh) (Autant-Lara)
1949 Au-delà des grilles (The Walls of Malapago) (Clément); Occupe-toi d’Amélie (Oh, Amelia) (Autant-Lara)
1950 Dieu a besoin des hommes (God Needs Men) (Delannoy)
1951 L’Auberge rouge (Autant-Lara); Les Jeux interdits (Forbidden Games) (Clément); “La Paresse” and “L’Orgeuil” eps. of Les Sept Péchés capitaux (The Seven Capital Sins) (Dréville and Autant-Lara)
1952 “Jeanne d’Arc” ep. of Destinées (Daughters of Destiny) (Delannoy)
1953 Le Blé en herbe (The Game of Love) (Autant-Lara); Les Orgueilleux (The Proud and the Beautiful) (Y. Allégret)
1954 Le Rouge et le noir (Autant-Lara)
1955 Chiens perdus sans collier (Delannoy); Gervaise (Clément)
1956 La Traverse de Paris (Four Bags Full) (Autant-Lara)
1958 En cas de malheur (Love Is My Profession) (Autant-Lara); Le Joueur (Autant-Lara)
1959 La Jument verte (The Green Mare) (Autant-Lara); Le Chemin des écoliers (Boisron)
1960 Les Régates de San Francisco (Autant-Lara)
1961 Tu ne tueras point (Autant-Lara)
1962 Le Crime ne paie pas (Crime Does Not Pay) (Oury); Le Rendez-vous (Delannoy)
1963 Le Meurtier (Enough Rope) (Autant-Lara)
1964 Le Magot de Joséphé (Autant-Lara); Les Amitiés particulières (This Special Friendship) (Delannoy); “La Fourmi” ep. of Humour noir (Autant-Lara)
1966 Paris brûle-t-il? (Is Paris Burning?) (Clément)
1967 Le Franciscain de Bourges (Autant-Lara)
1974 L’Horloger de Saint-Paul (The Clockmaker) (Tavernier)

Publications

By AURENCHE: books—

La suite à l’écran, Lyon, 1993.

By AURENCHE: articles—

Films and Filming (London), May 1959.
Cinéma (Paris), February 1962.
Positif (Paris), April 1975.

Image et Son/Ecran (Paris), November 1981.
Problèmes Audiovisuels (Aubervilliers, France), May-June 1983.

On AURENCHE: articles—

Cinémonde (Paris), 26 September 1952.
Avant-Scène (Paris), May 1974.
Cinéma de France (Paris), May 1981.
First Cut, no. 10, 1981.

By BOST: books—

Hercule et mademoiselle, Paris, 1924.
Homicide par imprudence, Paris, 1925.
Les Vieillards, Paris, 1925.
Crise de croissance, Paris, 1926.
Faillite, Paris, 1928.
Anaïs, Paris, 1930.
Monsieur Ladmiral va bientôt mourir, Montrouge, 1945.

By BOST: article—

Films and Filming (London), May 1959.

On BOST: articles—

Bianco e Nero (Rome), vol. 5, no. 7, 1943.
Avant-Scène (Paris), May 1974.

* * *

A prolific writer of over 80 scenarios, Jean Aurenche enjoyed a long and varied film career. His 30-year partnership with Pierre Bost brought several major literary classics to the screen, and in the late 1940s and early 1950s these soundly-crafted adaptations, mostly directed by Claude Autant-Lara, enjoyed both enormous popularity and, initially, critical approval. However, their influence on French film production in this period was condemned by André Bazin and his outspoken protégé, François Truffaut, for whom the notion of a so-called quality cinema beholden to a literary tradition was essentially a denial of cinema itself. The eventual triumph of New Wave concepts of film authorship and production methods may have marked the collapse of the Aurenche and Bost hegemony, but not the end of the partnership which lasted until Bost’s death in 1976. After that, Aurenche enjoyed a productive association with Bernard Tavernier. Most recently, Aurenche’s presence was discernible in the antiauthoritarian Fucking Fernand with its anarchic excesses and black humour, while the more traditional side of the scriptwriter’s humanitarianism is witnessed in De guerre lasse, a study of love and friendship during the Occupation and characteristically structured through flashback and voice-over.

Aurenche’s early ambition had been to write gags for Buster Keaton, but a more modest debut awaited him in the early 1930s when he began writing publicity films for the Maison Damour. Here collaboration with Marcel Carné, Jean Anouilh, Paul Grimault, Jacques Prévert, Max Ernst, and other former surrealists like Denis Tual eventually led to more serious undertakings. Tual introduced him to the German scriptwriter Hans Wilhem to gain experience, and early success followed with the scenario for Chenal’s L’Affaire Lafarge, the reconstruction of a famous court case. From his friendship with Grimault came the coauthorship of celebrated cartoons: Le Marchand de notes, L’Épouvantail, and Le Voleur de paratonnerres, adapted from his own short story. With Anouilh he composed the surrealist sketch Humulus le muet and later coscripted his first feature films for Joannon, Vous n’avez rien à déclarer? and, for Christian-Jaque, Les Dégourdis de la onzième. Through Carné he worked with Henri Jeanson on a skillfully constructed adaptation of Eugène Dabit’s melodramatic Hôtel du Nord, and this collaboration was renewed in the 1960s for Verneuil’s L’Affaire d’une nuit and the disappointing costume drama Vive Henri IV, vive l’amour! directed by Autant-Lara. With Prévert responsible for the dialogue, Aurenche undertook his first adaptation for Autant-Lara, the melodramatic L’Affaire du courrier de Lyon, and the two writers again combined for Delannoy’s colourful version of Hugo’s Notre-Dame de Paris.

It was Autant-Lara who introduced Bost to Aurenche to help with the dialogue for his film Douce, taken from Michel Davet’s simple story of a devoted governess in a bourgeois family. Their screen version cleverly subverts the original text by shifting the emphasis to expose middle-class complacency. Thereafter the two writers formed a unique partnership translating for the screen an impressive array of literary classics, including works by Aymé, Colette, Feydeau, Gide, Radiguet, Stendhal, and Zola. Their initial collaboration set the pattern for their approach to adaptation: Aurenche concerning himself mainly with the screenplay and Bost with the dialogue. Frequently their shared left-wing sympathies are reflected in the inflection given to their reworked film narratives. Although they worked for several directors their most memorable achievements are found in films by Delannoy, Clément, and Autant-Lara.

Their first international success came with Delannoy and their version of La Symphonie pastorale, after Gide’s own script had been rejected. The original narrative exposes a pastor’s self-deceiving relationship with Gertrude, a blind girl, and the tragic consequences his lack of self-awareness brings both for the girl and his family. Although the reworking is satisfactory in its own terms with a neatly balanced plot, clearly drawn characters, and thematic exposition of moral dilemmas, it is by the same token a betrayal and simplification of Gide’s account of moral complexities and perceptions. The weakness in the film’s narrative strategy lies in its inability to reproduce the irony implicit in the restricted viewpoint of the self-deluding pastor, and, throughout, the audience is fully aware of the real situation. Similarly Gide’s teasingly subtle symbolism becomes heavily explicit in the more concrete visual statement. Further films followed for Delannoy in the 1950s including Dieu a besoin des hommes, from a novel by Quefflec, which concerns a priest’s fraught relationship with a superstitious fishing community. The film narrative is again tightly structured and allows for powerful visually composed scenes matched by forceful dialogue, but the ironical observation of the original is lost. Although collaboration with Delannoy continued in the 1960s none of the films redounded to the scriptwriters reputation.

Their association with René Clément began with Au-delà des grilles when they reshaped an existing Italian script into a tightly organized, but ultimately predictable, melodrama about a fugitive criminal played by Jean Gabin. The scenario for Les Jeux interdits, which depicts the life of two children growing up during the Occupation, was cowritten with the author François Boyer who had originally conceived his novel as a film-script. The result is a delicate, finely judged screen version which deftly projects the children’s feelings. However, of their films for Clément, none has matched Gervaise, a generally faithful and sympathetic rendering of Zola’s working-class masterpiece L’Assommoir, which deals with the social consequences of poverty and alcoholism. As the film title implies, the scenario shifts the emphasis from the study of general sociological issues to the depiction of the heroine’s tragic fate. If the narrative framework retains the key elements the scope of the action is reduced, and some episodes, namely Goujet’s involvement in a strike, his trial, and imprisonment have been invented. As with other adaptations, Aurenche and Bost have used a combination of flashback and voice-over to bind narrative elements together and to clarify characters’ motivations.

It is through their sustained service to Autant-Lara both as a team and as individuals that the talents of Aurenche and Bost are most completely displayed. After Douce the two collaborated on an adaptation of Radiguet’s Le Diable au corps, the first of three films with Gérard Philipe as the protagonist. Here he plays the selfish, immature lover of a woman whose husband is at the front during World War I. The film narrative is structured through a series of flashbacks which encourages a strong identification with the couple’s situation, the tensions within the relationship, and the difficulties caused by social pressures. In the adaptation of Stendhal’s Le Rouge et le noir Philipe was Julien Sorel, the gifted but unsure proletarian hero making his way in society as a charming seducer. The devices of flashback and first-person narrative are introduced to order the material of the novel, and although the key plot elements remain, there is inevitably considerable condensing and simplification of Stendhal’s dense narrative. The tone and depth of the author’s narration with its subtle articulations are sadly lacking. Sharp observations on the political intrigues and the social order, the insights afforded into the complex psychology of the assertive yet self-doubting hero have been sacrificed to episodes with an inherently dramatic, visual, appeal. Philipe was again the protagonist of Le Jouer, an adaptation of Dostoïevsky’s tale, but the script becomes a star vehicle and the subtleties and reflective nature of the original are lost in melodrama. Their version of Colette’s delicately textured novel Le Blé en herbe, which tells of the burgeoning love between two adolescents and the seduction of the boy by a mature woman, is not without strengths, the script translating well many of the more tentatively intimate moments.
Farce and comedy were also part of the Aurenche and Bost repertoire. Their version of the Feydeau play Occupe-toi d’Amélie remains a cleverly wrought boulevard farce, adopting the form of a play within a film. In their adaptation of the Marcel Aymé comic story, La Traversée de Paris, telling of wartime blackmarketeering, episodes were invented and the proletarian taxi-driver is deliberately rendered more likeable than the aristocratic painter, played by Gabin. Less successful in its attempt to bring together a multiplicity of narrative threads was their version of Aymé’s bucolic farce of seduction and intrigue, La Jument verte. Black comedy is at the heart of L’Auberge rouge, one of their few original scenarios. Here a murderous innkeeper and his wife systematically kill off their guests much to the consternation of an informed monk, played by Fernandel, who feels unable to break his vows of confidentiality. Antibourgeois, anti-Catholic, this disturbing farce is tightly worked but reveals objection. The plot, again dependent on flashback, is rather pedestrian and does not carry the weight of Autant-Lara’s message.

The last important collaboration between Aurenche and Bost was for Bernard Tavernier with their free adaptation of Simenon’s L’Horloger d’Everton. Retitled L’Horloger de Saint-Paul, the action moves from South America to Lyon. Characters and situations are modified to present a portrait of the French city and to depict an unusual friendship between the criminal’s father, played by Philippe Noiret, and the investigating detective. The reshaping allows an exposition of current French political attitudes and the humanistic values dear to Tavernier. After Bost’s death, Aurenche collaborated with the director on further scenarios with Noiret in the main role. The witty Que la fête commence, loosely adapted from La Fille du Régent by Dumas, is again used as a vehicle for contemporary comment, while Le Juge et l’assassin is a psychological study of power through the example of an overbearing magistrate. Black humour, though perhaps a little laboured, is the essence of Coup de torchon which deals with colonial rule in Africa through another figure of authority, that of a slovenly policeman, again brilliantly played by Noiret. In two of his films Tavernier acknowledges his debt to Aurenche. Une Semaine de vacances is dedicated to him, while within the narrative of Coup de torchon is found Aurenche’s early advertising short Au petit jour à Mexico on va fusiller un homme. Homage is similarly paid to Bost with the delicately observed Un Dimanche à la campagne, a reworking of his early novel Monseur L’admiral va bientôt mourir. With their strong literary flavour and social comment Tavernier’s films appropriately renew the traditions established by Aurenche and Bost in the late 1940s.

Bost can claim a number of film credits independent of those in collaboration with Aurenche. He worked for a variety of directors, adapting both novels and plays as well as writing dialogue. An early 1940s script provided Becker with a taut police drama in Dernier atout, while for Daquin he wrote dialogue, notably for Patrie, adapted from a play by Sardou and dealing indirectly with the moral issues of Occupation and Resistance. His adaptation of the Soubran novel Les Hommes en blanc for Habor inspired perhaps this director’s most accomplished film, while also of considerable interest was Paviot’s Pantalaskas, dealing with the difficulties of immigrant workers, for which he wrote the dialogue. His sober commentary enhances the documentary La Libération de Paris, which was pieced together from original footage.

Neither Aurenche nor Bost articulated any illuminating theory of adaptation. A rendering faithful to the original text while ensuring a visually engaging film readily understood by all seems to have been the basic aim. Their role was to stimulate the director, to work as closely as possible with him, and to allow for the needs of stars such as Philippe, Gabin, or Noiret. Dialogue was seen as an aspect of characterization rather than as a function of plot clarification. There is considerable truth in the basic charge levelled by Truffaut, namely that authors with quite different values and quite different narrative strategies are reduced to a sameness through the Aurenche and Bost treatment. Their well-tried formula closes open-ended plots, simplifies elusive, complex characters, and prefers strong visual development to reflective interiority. Their rejected script for Le Journal d’un curé de campagne understandably failed to satisfy Bernanos. Although their personal persuasions and values are occasionally discernible through their adaptations, they rarely treated a literary text as Balazs would have wished, namely as raw material susceptible to a completely original restatement. Yet arguably they did impose their own identifiable style, based in an intelligent paring down of plots, a regular reliance on flashback and first-person narration in their reordering of material, together with frequently sharp, sensitive, and witty dialogue. Consummate craftsmen, fashioning to their own ends the disparate material of fellow authors, Aurenche and Bost represent a particular view of the cinema’s relationship with literature. Their enterprise raises fundamental and unresolved questions about precisely what a film adaptation of a literary text should seek to achieve.

—R. F. Cousins

AURIC, Georges

Films as Composer:

- 1930 Le Sang d’un poète (The Blood of a Poet) (Cocteau)
- 1931 À nous la liberté (Clair)
- 1934 Lac-aux-dames (M. Allégret)
- 1935 Les Mystères de Paris (Gandera)
- 1936 Les Oranges de Jaffa (Alexeiff—short)
- 1937 Orage (M. Allégret); Les Oranges de Jaffa (Alexeiff—short); Trois minutes—les saisons (short); La Vie d’un homme (short); Hailor (Alexeiff—short); Entrée des artistes (The Curtain Rises) (M. Allégret); La Rue sans joie (Hugon) (co); Son ocel de Normandie (Dréville)
- 1939 La Mode révée (L’Herbier—short); Macao, l’enfer du jeu (Delannoy); The Alibi
1940  De la ferraille a l’acier victorieux (Lallier—short)
1942  Opéra-Musette (LeFèvre and C. Renoir); L’Assassin a peur la nuit (Delannoy); Monseigneur et la souris (Lacombe); La Belle Aventure (Twilight) (M. Allégret)
1943  L’Éternel Retour (The Eternal Return) (Delannoy); Farandole (Zwoboda)
1944  Le Bossu (Delannoy)
1945  François Villon (Zwoboda) (co); Caesar and Cleopatra (Pascal); Dead of Night (Cavalcanti and others); La Part de l’ombre (Blind Desire) (Delannoy)
1946  La Belle et la bête (Beauty and the Beast) (Coecke); La Symphonie pastorale (Delannoy); La Septième Porte (Zwoboda)
1947  Ruy Blas (Billon); Hie and Cry (Crichton); Les Jeux sont faits (The Chips Are Down) (Delannoy); L’Aigle à deux têtes (The Eagle with Two Heads) (Coecke); Corridor of Mirrors (Young); It Always Rains on Sunday (Hammer); La Rose et le réséda (Michel)
1948  The Queen of Spades (Dickinson); Silent Dust (Comfort); Another Shore (Crichton); Noces du sable (Zwoboda); Les Parents terribles (The Storm Within) (Coecke); Aux yeux du souvenir (Souvenir) (Zwoboda);
1949  Maya (Bernard); Passport to Pimlico (Cornelius); Ce siècle a cinquante ans (Tul) (co); The Spider and the Fly (Hammer)
1950  Orphée (Orpheus) (Coecke); Cage of Gold (Dearden); Caroline chérie (Pottier); Fès (Zwoboda—short); Les Amants de Bras-Mort (Pagliero)
1951  Nex de cair (Y. Allégret); Front de mer (short); Kermesse fantastique (Mishka—short); La P... respectueuse (The Respectful Prostitute) (Pagliero and Brabant); La Fête à Henriette (Duvivier); The Open Window (Storck—short); The Tifffield Thunderbolt (Crichton); Moulin Rouge (Huston); The Lavender Hill Mob (Crichton)
1953  La Chair et le diable (Josipovici); L’Esclave (Ciampi); La Salaire de la peur (The Wages of Fear) (Clozouz); Roman Holiday (Wyler)
1954  Chéri Bibi (Pagliero); The Good Die Young (Gilbert); Du Rififi chez les hommes (Rififi) (Dassin); The Divided Heart (Crichton); Nagana (Bromberger); Abdullah the Great (Abdullah’s Harem) (Ratoff); Father Brown (The Detective) (Hammer)
1955  La Femme et la fauve (Sarrut and Asseo—short); La Chaleur du foyer (Feeder de l’est) (Gillet—short); The Bespoke Overcoat (Clayton—short); Lola Montès (Ophüls); Les Hussards (Joffé); Gervaise (Clément); A Visit with Darius Milhaud (Joseph) (+ appearance); Walk into Paradise (Robinson and Pagliero); Licht und der Mensch (Geesink)
1956  Le Mystère Picasso (The Mystery of Picasso) (Clozouz); Notre-Dame de Paris (Delannoy); Heaven Knows, Mr. Allison (Huston); Les Aventures de Till l’Espiegle (Philippe)
1957  Celui qui doit mourir (He Who Must Die) (Dassin); Bonjour Tristesse (Preminger); Les Espions (Clozouz); The Story of Esther Costello (Miller); Walk into Hell
1958  Next to No Time (Cornelius); Dangerous Exile (Hurst); Les Bijoutiers du clair de lune (Heaven Fell That Night) (Vadim); Christine (Gaspard-Huit)
1959  The Journey (Litvak); La Princesse de Clèves (Delannoy); Sergent X . . . (Borderie); S.O.S. Pacific (Green)
1960  Le Testament d’Orphée (The Testament of Orpheus) (Coecke); Schlüssakkord (Liebeneiner)
1961  Aimez-vous Brahms? (Goodbye Again) (Litvak); Bridge to the Sun (Perier); The Innocents (Clayton); Les Croulants se portent bien (Boyer); Le Rendez-vous de minuit (Leenhart)
1962  La Chambre ardente (The Burning Court) (Duvivier); Smash en direct (Dasque and Abadie—short) (co); Carillons sans joie (Brabant)
1963  The Kremlin (Vicas); The Mind Benders (Dearden)
1964  Thomas l’imposteur (Franju)
1965  La Sentinelle endormie (Dreville); La Communale (L’Hote)
1966  La Grande Vadrouille (Oury); Danger Grows Wild (The Poppy Is Also a Flower) (Young)
1968  Thérèse et Isabelle (Metzger); Ce pays dont les frontières ne sont que fleurs (Masson—short)
1969  The Christmas Tree (Young)

Other Films:

1924  Entr’acte (Clair—short) (ro)
1941  Les Petits Riens (Leboursier) (mus d)

Publications

By AURIC: autobiography—

By AURIC: articles—

Mein Film (Vienna), 22 August 1952.

Unifrance Film (Paris), no. 50, 1959.

On AURIC: books—

On AURIC: articles—

Sight and Sound (London), April-June 1953.

New Zealand Film Music Bulletin (Invercargill), November 1983.

Composer of some of the most delightfully whimsical motion picture scores in history, Georges Auric also had the added distinction of having written the first original score for a feature film: his music for Jean Cocteau’s The Blood of a Poet (1930). Auric’s quirky classicism is displayed in more than 75 scores from 1930 to 1969. He never lost sight of his own artistic vision, no matter the assignment he was given, and his screen music is shot through with echoes of Durey, Tailleferrre, Poulenc, Honneger and Milhaud, the other members of “The Group of Six” (Auric was the sixth member). He worked with such major directors as Max Ophüls (Lola Montès), John Huston (Moulin Rouge), William Wyler, Otto Preminger, Jean Delannoy, and... his scores range from the highly dramatic (Bonjour Tristesse) to the playful (The Lavender Hill Mob, Passport to Pimlico).

According to Cocteau’s biographer, Francis Steegmuller, Auric early on acquired a taste for opium, but apparently never let the drug get the better of him, becoming what Steegmuller described as a “controlled, habitual smoker.” He probably acquired his predilection for the drug from Cocteau, who was widely known to use opiates for relaxation and “brainstorming,” and it is perhaps not too far-fetched to claim that a certain “twinkling etherealness” in Auric’s music may be attributable to his use of the drug. Auric’s best scores, including The Blood of a Poet, A nous la liberté, Beauty and the Beast, The Eternal Return, Dead of Night, Rififi, and The Lavender Hill Mob, all have a certain “celestial accent” (Cocteau’s words) which makes them simultaneously fanciful and yet never too far removed from the mundane realities they must inevitably remain grounded in.

Almost alone among those composers who work specifically for films, Auric had a classical background which led him to create scores which stand quite well on their own as concert pieces, and interestingly, Auric’s few detractors claim that at times his music forgets its supporting role and threatens to overpower the images it is supposed to accompany. Perhaps this explains why he worked so well, and so often, with Cocteau, whose visual style is boldly, even aggressively romantic. Cocteau’s full blown imagery coupled with Auric’s lush, yet light music meshed perfectly to create a fantastic world of fully-blooded fantasy, a world at once more real and tangible than that of one’s everyday existence.

Auric picked his assignments with great care, particularly after he became director of the Paris Opera in 1962. Although he won numerous prizes for his work at the Venice and Cannes Film Festivals, and elsewhere, Auric was always more interested in working on “difficult” or “experimental” projects than mainstream films. For example, one of his last films, The Mind Benders, directed by Basil Dearden, is a prescient tale of psychological research done by a group of university professors who subject themselves to long periods of sensory deprivation in “isolation tanks.” That the film was ahead of its time is amply demonstrated by the fact that it was still considered a radical enough concept to be remade by Ken Russell in his uneven Altered States. Auric also worked on Cocteau’s last project, The Testament of Orpheus, which, although arguably the least of Cocteau’s efforts, is still an admirably evocative conclusion to the artist’s illustrious multifaceted career. It is perhaps the highest possible tribute to Auric’s work to say that his film scores are instantly recognizable, sincerely romantic, and, like the film scores of his fellow countryman George Delerue, glorious throwbacks to an earlier age of gentility, precision, and grace.

—Wheeler Winston Dixon

AVERY, Tex

Animator. Nationality: American. Born: Frederick Bean Avery in Taylor, Texas, 26 February 1907. Education: Attended North Dallas High School, graduated 1927. Career: 1930–35—animator with Universal–Walter Lantz Cartoons; 1936–41—worked at Warners (4 films in Bugs Bunny series: A Wild Hare, Tortoise Beats Hare, The Heckling Hare, and All This and Rabbit Stew); before 1941 credited as Fred Avery; 1942—brief period at Paramount, 3 films in Speaking of Animals series then moved to MGM beginning with The Blitz Wolf; 1954–55—directed for Walter Lantz; 1955—quit MGM; 1956–78—made commercials for Cascade Productions; 1979–80—with Hanna-Barbera Cartoons. Awards: First Prize, Venice Publicity Festival, for Calo-Tiger, 1958; Television Commercials Council Award, 1960; Annie Award, ASIFA 1974. Died: 26 August 1980.

Films as Director (often credited as supervisor):

1936 Goldiggers of ‘49; The Blow-out; Plane Dippy; I’d Love to Take Orders from You; Miss Glory; I Love to Singa; Porky the Rain Maker; The Village Smithy; Milk and Money; Don’t Look Now; Porky the Wrestler

1937 Picador Porky; I Only Have Eyes for You; Porky’s Duck Hunt; Uncle Tom’s Bungalow; Ain’t We Got Fun; Daffy Duck and Egglehead; Egglehead Rides Again; A Sunbonnet Blue; Porky’s Garden; I Wanna Be a Sailor; The Sneezing Weasel; Little Red Walking Hood

1938 The Penguin Parade; The Isle of Pingo Pongo; A Feud There Was; Johnny Smith and Poker-Huntas; Daffy Duck in Hollywood; Cinderella Meets Fella; Hamateur Night; The Mice Will Play; Daffy’s Romance

1939 A Day at the Zoo; Thugs with Dirty Mugs; Believe It or Else; Dangerous Dan McFoo; Detouring America; Land of the Midnight Fun; Fresh Fish; Screwwall Football; The Early Worm Gets the Bird

1940 Cross Country Detours; The Bear’s Tale; A Gander at Mother Goose; Circus Today; A Wild Hare; Ceiling Hero; Wacky Wild Life; Of Fox and Hounds (+ voice of Willoughby the dog); Holiday Highlights

1941 The Crackpot Quail; Haunted Mouse; Tortoise Beats Hare; Hollywood Steps Out; Porky’s Preview; The Heckling Hare (+ voice of Willoughby the dog); Aviation Vacation; All This and Rabbit Stew; The Bug Parade; Aloha Hooey; The Cagey Canary (completed by Bob Clampett); Crazy Cruise

1942 Speaking of Animals down on the Farm; Speaking of Animals in a Pet Shop; Speaking of Animals in the Zoo; The Blitz Wolf; The Early Bird Dood it; Dumb-Hounded

1943 Red Hot Riding Hood; Who Killed Who?; One Ham’s Family; What’s Buzzin’, Buzzard?

1944 Screwy Squirrel; Batty Baseball; Happy-Go-Nutty; Big Heewatha

1945 The Screwy Truant; The Shooting of Dan McGoo; Jerky Turkey; Swing Shift Cinderella; Wild and Woolfy

1946 Lonesome Lenny; The Hick Chick; Northwest Hounded Police; Henpecked Hoboes (+ voice of Junior)

1947 Hound Hunters (+ voice of Junior); Red Hot Rangers (+ voice of Junior); Uncle Tom’s Cabana; Slap Happy Lion; King Size Canary; Little Tinker

1948 What Price Fleadom; Half-Pint Pygmy (+ voice of Junior); Lucky Ducky; The Cat That Hated People

1949 Bad Luck Blackie; Señor Droopy; The House of Tomorrow; Doggone Tired; Wags to Riches; Little Rural Riding Hood; Outfoxed; Counterfeit Cat

1950 Ventriloquist Cat; The Cuckoo Clock; Garden Gopher; The Chump Champ; The Peachy Cobbler

1951 Cock-a-Doodle Dog; Dare-Devil Droopy; Droopy’s Good Deed; Symphony in Slang; The Car of Tomorrow; Droopy’s Double Trouble; The Magical Maestro

1952 One Cab’s Family; Rock-a-Bye Bear
1953  Little Johnny Jet; TV of Tomorrow; The Three Little Pups; Drag-a-long Droopy
1954  Billy Boy; Homesteader Droopy; Farm of Tomorrow; The Flea Circus; Dixieland Droopy; Crazy Mixed-Up Pup
1955  Field and Scream; The First Bad Man; Deputy Droopy (co-d); Cellbound (co-d); I'm Cold (Some Like It Hot); Chilly Willy in the Legend of Rockabye Point (The Rockabye Legend); SH-H-H-H-H; remakes of Wags to Riches and Ventri-loquist Cat
1956  Millionaire Droopy; Cat's Meow
1958  Polar Pests

Publications

By AVERY: article—

Interview with Joseph Adamson, in Take One (Montreal), January-February 1970.

On AVERY: books—

Canemaker, John, Tex Avery: Artist, Animator, & Director from the Golden Age of Animated Cartoons, North Dighton, 1998.

On AVERY: articles—

Schneider, Steve, in That’s All Folks! New York, 1988.

Film en Televisie, March 1993.
Sight and Sound, October 1993.
Time, 8 August 1994.

The cartoons of Tex Avery represent a style of animation that is the absolute antithesis to the Disney school of filmmaking. Whereas Disney strove for realism (with such technical devices as sound, Technicolor, and the multiplex camera), Avery strove for the absurd and the surreal. Avery’s “logic” had no bounds and his cartoons exhibited an anything-goes policy. The characters in Avery’s cartoons not only behaved in a crazy way, but actually seemed insane. Among the cartoon characters that he created were Daffy Duck, Screwball Squirrel, Droopy, and his most famous character, Bugs Bunny. Avery gave Bugs his famous phrase “What’s up Doc?,” which was an expression in Avery’s home town in Texas.

The most striking feature of Avery’s animation style is the breakneck pace of gags. Avery believed in having as many gags as possible. While at Warner Brothers, Avery did a number of cartoons loosely structured as travelogues or newsreels. This simple framework gave Avery the opportunity to string together as many “black out” (short, self-contained) gags as could fit into seven minutes. Cartoons like Believe It or Else and Wacky Wild Life were short on plot, but bursting with Avery’s sight gags.

Another trademark of Avery’s cartoons is the elasticity of his characters. It would be fair to say that Avery puts his characters through a wider range of physical distortions than any other cartoon director. For example, in King Size Canary, the dog, cat, bird and mouse grow to absurd proportions. In Screwbball Football a character literally yells his head off. Naturally, none of these physical distortions ever proves to be fatal.

Another source of Avery’s humor is the medium of animation itself. Many times the characters in Avery’s cartoons refer to the cartoon world in which they live. For example, in Porky’s Preview, Porky Pig draws his own cartoon starring himself. In Screwbball Squirrel, Screwy accidentally runs clear off the side of the frame of the film. In The Magical Maestro a hair keeps bobbing up and down in the projection gate until one of the characters finally reaches over and pulls it out. Avery rarely lets the audience forget that they are watching cartoons.

Another feature often associated with Tex Avery’s cartoons are his jokes based on sexual innuendos. For example, Avery’s character of the Wolf (who appeared in Red Hot Riding Hood and Wild and Woolfy among others) represents the most elementary of sexual beings. In these cartoons the Wolf cannot control his desire for Red; his eyes pop out of his head, his jaw drops open, his tongue rolls out on the floor, and he literally falls to pieces. His lust is in no way subtle, and in fact, Red Hot Riding Hood had some trouble getting by the Hays Office because of the suggestion of bestiality. Nothing in Avery’s cartoons ever went beyond suggestion, but Avery subsequently adopted the habit of padding his scripts with extra and outlandish “no-no’s,” which could then be dropped, in order that a few innuendoes could slip by the censors.

During the latter part of his career, Tex Avery achieved an unusual degree of recognition in television even though his work was uncredited. He created a number of award-winning animated commercials with such characters as the Raid bugs and the Frito Bandito. The short 30- or 60-second format of commercial advertising was an ideal outlet for Avery’s fast-paced gags. His work has certainly influenced a number of younger animators, although no one has yet been able to completely match Avery’s achievement: the totally crazy cartoon.

—Linda Obalil
BACHARACH, Burt

Composer. Nationality: American. Born: Kansas City, Missouri, 12 May 1928; son of the syndicated columnist Bert Bacharach; brought up in New York. Education: Studied musical theory at the Mannes School of Music in New York City; Berkshire Music Center; New School for Social Research, studying under Darius Milhaud, Bohuslav Martinu, and Henry Cowell; further study McGill University, Toronto; scholarship to study at the Music Academy of the West in Santa Barbara. Military Service: U.S. Army, 1950–52. Family: Married 1) Paula Stewart, 1953 (divorced 1958); 2) the actress Angie Dickinson, 1965 (divorced 1982); 3) the singer-songwriter Carole Bayer Sager, 1982 (divorced 1990); 4) Jane Hanson, 1991. Career: 1955—became member of ASCAP; 1957— teamed up with lyricist Hal David; 1962—Bacharach and David started to write for the singer Dionne Warwick; composed music for TV series Any Day Now. Awards: Academy Award for Best Song, for Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid, 1969, and Arthur, 1981. Address: 10 Ocean Park Boulevard, Suite #4, Santa Monica, CA 90405–3556, U.S.A.

Films as Composer:

- 1965 What’s New, Pussycat? (C. Donner)
- 1966 After the Fox (De Sica)
- 1967 Casino Royale (Huston, Hughes, Parrish, McGrath, and Talmadge)
- 1969 Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid (Hill)
- 1972 Lost Horizon (Jarrott)
- 1981 Arthur (Gordon)
- 1982 Night Shift (R. Howard)
- 1992 Love Hurts (Yorkin)
- 1996 Grace of My Heart (Anders)
- 2000 Isn’t She Great

Films as Songwriter:

- 1957 Lizzie (Haas); The Sad Sack (George Marshall)
- 1958 The Blob (Yeaworth Jr.); Country Music Holiday (Ganzer)
- 1961 Love in a Goldfish Bowl (Sher)
- 1962 Forever My Love (Marischka)
- 1963 Who’s Been Sleeping in My Bed? (Daniel Mann); Wives and Lovers (Rich)
- 1964 Send Me No Flowers (Jewison); A House Is Not a Home (Rouse)
- 1965 Bob and Carol and Ted and Alice (Mazursky)
- 1966 Alfie (L. Gilbert)
- 1969 April Fool’s (Rosenberg)

Other Films:

- 1997 Austin Powers: International Man of Mystery (Roach) (ro as himself)
- 1999 Austin Powers: The Spy Who Shagged Me (Roach) (ro as himself)

Publications

On BACHARACH: book—

On BACHARACH: articles—

Film Dope (London), March 1973.
Ecran (Paris), September 1975.
Fistful of Soundtracks, May 1981.
Film Dope (London), March 1990.
Interview (New York), February 1996.
Q, July 1996.

* * *

Burt Bacharach has achieved a singular place in the history of twentieth-century popular music. During the sixties, when pop music was becoming rock, Bacharach and lyricist Hal David wrote a string of hit records that were both melodically complex and seductive, romantic and suave. It is surprising that Bacharach has not composed scores for more films—so much of his work seems cinematic—the sound track, perhaps, of some romantic, sophisticated urban comedy in his head. Describing his compositional technique, he said “I was thinking in terms of miniature movies. . . . Three and a half minute movies with peak moments and not just one intensity level the whole way through.”

Burt Bacharach’s musical education began at an early age, studying cello, drums, and later piano. Being a music student in New York exposed himself to a variety of influences: “I liked Berg and I liked Webern. . . . I hung out in New York watching Cage and Lou Harrison. I was aware of the angular side of music but I liked tunes too.” His main influence, however, was Darius Milhaud, whom he studied under at the New School for Social Research, and who, Bacharach claims, taught him, “Never to be ashamed to write something people can whistle.” From 1958 to 1961 he was musical director for Marlene Dietrich, touring Europe and the United States with her. He teamed up with lyricist Hal David in 1957, and in 1962 they began to write for the singer Dionne Warwick, a three-way partnership that yielded 39 hit records.

Bacharach’s involvement with film began in 1958, with the title song—written with veteran songwriter Mack David (Hal David’s older brother)—for the low-budget horror film The Blob. This set a pattern for a significant amount of his writing for films, lending the Bacharach touch by furnishing individual songs rather than the creating an entire score. In some cases the songs have proved more memorable than the films in which they appeared. He has written title songs for Whose Been Sleeping in My Bed?, Wives and Lovers, Send Me No Flowers, and A House Is Not a Home. He has also contributed the song “What the World Needs Now” to Bob and Carol and Ted and Alice. Sometimes Bacharach’s role can be confusing—“The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance,” the hit he wrote for Gene Pitney is inspired by John Ford’s film of the same name but is not featured in it. And for many the aching Bacharach ballad “Alfie,” used over the credit sequence in the American version of Lewis Gilbert’s film, is more identified with Alfie than Sonny Rollins’s coolly elegant modern jazz score.

Bacharach’s first complete score for was Clive Donner’s frantic sex comedy, scripted by Woody Allen, What’s New, Pussycat? Because of Bacharach’s relative inexperience with film composition most of the music used in the film was drawn from the buoyant title song: “They took that one title theme, the title song, and one or two of the cues I’d written, and (producer) Charlie Feldman put them all through the movie because he fell in love with them.” The result was a score that provided a perfect complement to the on-screen antics. Less successful was his score for the dire James Bond spoof Casino Royale, which does little more than underline the film’s heavy-handed humor. It did, however, yield one classic Bacharach/David song, “The Look of Love.”

Bacharach’s greatest success as a film composer was with George Roy Hill’s Western Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid, where Bacharach’s score was crucial to the feel and the success of the film. The subject of the film was bleak: two middle-aged gunfighters, involved with one woman, unable to come to terms with the shrinking frontier, make a break for South America, where death instead of freedom awaits them. Thematically the film blends elements of Sam Peckinpah’s The Wild Bunch with François Truffaut’s Jules et Jim. Bacharach adds a defiantly upbeat and sunny score that, along with William Goldman’s witty script, reflects much of the story’s fatalism. The music nods towards period with occasional passages of pastiche ragtime, otherwise it is modern in tone, action choreographed with light scat choruses. In the film’s most celebrated sequence Paul Newman and Katharine Ross careen across a meadow on a bicycle accompanied by “Raindrops Keep Falling on My Head,” one of Bacharach’s most compulsively tuneful songs, perfectly matched by Hal David’s nonsense lyrics. As if to emphasize the inspired incongruity, the sequence takes place in bright sunlight.

At the end of the sixties Bacharach and David and the playwright Neil Simon created the Tony award-winning Broadway show Promise Her Anything, based on Billy Wilder’s film The Apartment. Bacharach provided music and songs for Lost Horizon Charles Jarrott’s unsuccessful musical remake of the Frank Capra classic. After the partnership with Hal David foundered, Bacharach began a collaboration with his then wife, the singer/songwriter, Carole Bayer Sager. During the eighties Bacharach’s most successful film score was for Arthur. The featured song, “The Best That You Can Do,” written by Bacharach, Sager, Christopher Cross, and Peter Allen, won an Academy Award for best song.

—Dominic Power

BADALAMENTI, Angelo

Composer. Nationality: American. Born: Brooklyn, New York, 22 March 1937; son of an Italian fish market owner. Education: Eastman School of Music. B.A.; Manhattan School of Music, M.A. 1960. Family: Married Lonny, 1968; two children: daughter Danielle and son Andre. Career: Accompanist to singers in the Catskills as a teen; taught at a Brooklyn junior high school before developing career as songwriter in the 1970s; hired for Blue Velvet as vocal coach for Isabella Rossellini but retained as composer, 1986; has scored all of David Lynch’s films, TV productions, and other video material; composer for TV series Inside the Actors Studio (as Angelo
Films as Composer:

1973 Gordon’s War (Davis) (as Andy Badale)
1974 Law and Disorder (Passer) (as Andy Badale)
1986 Blue Velvet (Lynch)
1987 Weeds (Hancock); Tough Guys Don’t Dance (Mailer); Nightmare on Elm Street 3: Dream Warriors (Russell)
1989 Wait Until Spring, Bandini (Deruddere); Parents (Balaban); Cousins (Schumacher); National Lampoon’s Christmas Vacation (Chechik)
1990 Industrial Symphony No. 1: The Dream of the Broken Hearted (video) (Lynch); The Comfort of Strangers (Shrader); Twin Peaks (Lynch—for TV, pilot, and series); Wild at Heart (Lynch)
1992 On the Air (Lynch—for TV); Twin Peaks: Fire Walk with Me (Lynch)
1993 Hotel Room (Lynch—for TV)
1994 Naked in New York (Algrant); Witch Hunt (Shrader—for TV)
1995 La Cité des enfants perdus (City of Lost Children) (Caro and Jeunet)
1997 Lost Highway (Lynch); The Blood Oranges (Haas)
1999 Story of a Bad Boy (Donaghy); Arlington Road (Pellington); Holy Smoke (Campion); Forever Mine (Shrader); The Straight Story (Lynch)
2000 Mulholland Drive (Lynch—for TV); The Beach (Boyle)

Other Films:

1977 Across the Great Divide (Raffill) (lyricist)
1996 Invasion of Privacy (Hickox) (music theme)

Publications

By BADALAMENTI: books—

Floating into the Night (songs for voice and piano, words by David Lynch), Port Chester, New York, 1991.

By BADALAMENTI: articles—

‘‘Angelo Badalamenti in Prague: ‘I am the jazzman,’” interview in Kinorevue (Prague), October 1996.

On BADALAMENTI: articles—

Abrahams, Andrew, ‘‘His Haunting Mood Music,’’ in People (New York), 9 September 1990.
Woodard, Josef, ‘‘Sonata for Cello and Cherry Pie,’’ in American Film, 15 December 1990.

* * *

Only a few composers for films have the distinction of being deeply identified with a string of major works by a famed director, so that one can hardly think of the films without hearing the soundtrack: among the foremost pairings are Bernard Herrmann with Alfred Hitchcock and Nino Rota with Federico Fellini. Few, perhaps, would place David Lynch in the august company of Hitchcock and Fellini, but certainly many of the haunting moments of the American director’s work have been accompanied by the music of Angelo Badalamenti, who since 1986’s Blue Velvet has scored all of Lynch’s films, TV work, and experimental videos. The composer has worked on other films, composed themes for TV shows, and collaborated on CDs with various singing artists, but his work with Lynch, notably Blue Velvet, Twin Peaks and The Straight Story, has been his most celebrated.

Blue Velvet’s opening title music is relatively conventional, symphonic in style, appropriate enough for a moody, noirish film. Later, at suspenseful moments, as when Jeffrey is sneaking into Dorothy’s apartment, the scoring is more sparse, and kept to the background, so that the low strings become indistinguishable from moaning sounds that might be wind blowing through a stairwell. In the first scene at the Slow Club, Badalamenti himself shows up as a pianist, with sax and bass, to accompany Dorothy (Isabella Rossellini) in a very slow version of “Blue Velvet.” But the composer truly comes into his own in the night scene between Jeffrey and Sandy in front of the church. The somber organ music appears to be coming from behind the stained glass windows glowing in the darkness, but as Sandy tells about her dream of robins and love, the music reaches a peak of hyper-sweet piety that seems a sly mockery of her speech. Later, when the young friends/crime-solvers kiss, the same music is played by strings, and later yet, at a dance and then as the couple converse by phone in a scene that could be captioned “Teen Heartbreak,” we hear a vocal version (“Mysteries of Love,” sung by Julee Cruise, with lyrics by Lynch). In the film’s ineffably weird epilogue, we hear the song again while the loving family watches the (mechanical) robin with its bug: at this point we have reached the classic moment of the Lynch/Badalamenti fusion.

If one may speak of a fully mature Badalamenti style, one can find it in his score for Twin Peaks, the TV series whose pilot film, directed by Lynch, was shown as a feature film in Europe and on video in the United States. The title track, like some spaced-out accompaniment to an unheard Country/Western song, seems on an endless loop with its repeated arpeggios and twangy steel-guitar-like notes. Later in the pilot film we do hear it backing a vocal line (though not remotely Country) sung by Julee Cruise, again with lyrics by Lynch—indeed, we see it performed, as the world’s most improbable dance music for a biker roadhouse. A second important musical segment for Twin Peaks is the somber progression of notes, spare and tragic, first heard when the body of Laura Palmer is found; this segment often features a second part, when a piano enters and builds to a kind of sop- operatic pop climax, just short of parody—or well across the border—and thus perfect for various hyper-emotional scenes (the sheriff announcing Laura’s death, or the love scene between the heartbroken teens James and Donna). A third category of Twin Peaks music is the sort that opens with finger-snapping in a ‘50s jazzy way, as if the Sharks and Jets of West Side Story are about to rumble. Various styles spin off from these openings: twangy guitar sounds for scenes with the hoodlum Bobby; a sax solo, suitable for a movie detective, used to introduce Agent Cooper; and other cool “bad-girl” music for the trampy Audrey. Like Twin Peaks itself, Badalamenti’s music is vaguely “period” (1950s) yet contemporary, always either on the brink of parody or inhabiting some alternative universe beyond parody—in short, perfectly postmodern.

Badalamenti’s music for the generally disliked feature-film prequel, Twin Peaks: Fire Walk with Me, is not just a reprise of his material for the series but new and more elaborately jazzy. His music for other Lynch films has varied in its importance: for example, though he contributed some New-Orleans-style accompaniments for Wild at Heart, the soundtrack for that film is memorable more for Chris’ Isaak’s eerie “Wicked Game” and the glorious orchestral outburst that opens the last of Richard Strauss’ Four Last Songs. In some non-Lynch films too, notably The Beach, his original scoring is secondary to pop-group selections.

Badalamenti’s contribution to films other than Lynch’s has been quite varied in style. Joel Schumacher’s Cousins uses very little soundtrack music in its first hour, except for some discreet flute-and-guitar and solo flute accompaniment to early scenes between the not-yet-lovers of the title. But there is also a little waltz on piano that gets orchestrated when the cousins run to each other on the train platform, and becomes a lovely if conventional “big theme” as the two become lovers and again when they marry at the end. Paul Shrader’s tale of murderous games in Venice, The Comfort of Strangers, Badalamenti comes up with a rather rich and dark Italianate tune, though with unusual 6-bar phrases, for the title music; but for various scenes of roaming about the haunted city he uses music of more Middle Eastern flavor, whether for solo flute, guitar, or strings with exotic percussion, as if the ghost of Othello were somewhere nearby. For City of Lost Children one might have expected music of a mocking grotesquerie to match the somewhat Terry-Gilliam-esque visuals, but although there are certainly eerie moments, and a waltz for a hurdy-gurdy that recalls the more deranged sort of French grand organ music, Badalamenti’s largely string score is more often alternately somber and tender.

Badalamenti’s most memorable score of recent years is probably his contribution to Lynch’s The Straight Story. Here the flavors are more distinctively American than usual, suitably enough for a genial and touching tale of an elderly man who travels from Iowa to Wisconsin by lawnmower to visit his ailing brother. But the score never attempts to be imitation Copland or folk music. The title music, mostly strings and piano, rises in intensity through long, irregular phrases, but holds back from the heart-on-sleeve sentimentality of the Laura Palmer’ theme. For the leisurely “road music” the composer features a solo fiddle, suggesting a very much slowed-down bluegrass or square dance style. Most strikingly of all, a melody for solo guitar is used to accompany scenes about parting, or love, or both. We first hear it as Alvin’s daughter looks at a child playing near a sprinkler, while (we later learn) she thinks about her own children who were taken away from her. It will be used several times again, accumulating meaning, as when Alvin says goodbye to one of his most important helpers along the way, and most powerfully at the end, when Alvin reaches his long-estranged brother. Here, as is the case with many of the greatest film scores, the music tells us things the characters cannot possibly articulate.

—Joseph Milicia

BAKER, Rick

Films as Special Effects Makeup Artist:

1971 Schlock (Landis)
1972 The Thing with Two Heads (Frost) (+ ro as policeman)
1973 Live and Let Die (Hamilton); Black Caesar (Cohen)
1974 It’s Alive (Cohen); The Autobiography of Miss Jane Pittman (Korty—for TV)
1975 Death Race 2000 (Bartel)
1976 King Kong (Guillermin) (+ title ro); Zebra Force (Tornatore); Track of the Moon Beast (Ashe); Food of the Gods (B. Gordon)
1977 Incredible Melting Man (Sachs)
1978 The Fury (De Palma); It Lives Again (Cohen)
1979 An American Christmas Carol (Till)
1980  The Howling (Dante) (consultant only); Tanya’s Island (Sole)
1981  Funhouse (Hooper); Incredible Shrinking Woman (Schumacher)
      (+ ro as Sidney); An American Werewolf in London (Landis)
1983  Videodrome (Cronenberg); Greystoke: The Legend of Tarzan, Lord of the Apes (Hudson); Thriller (Landis) (+ ro as zombie)
1984  Starman (Carpenter)
1985  Cocoon (R. Howard) (as consultant); Into the Night (Landis); My Science Project (Betuel); Teen Wolf (Daniel)
1986  Max mon amour (Max, My Love) (Oshima) (as chimp consultant); Ratboy (Locke); Captain Eo (Coppola)
1987  Harry and the Hendersons (Dear) (monster designer); It’s Alive III: Island of the Alive (Cohen); Beauty and the Beast (Franklin—for TV)
1988  Coming to America (Landis); Gorillas in the Mist (Apted) (+ assoc producer)
1989  Missing Link (Hughes)
1990  Gremlins 2: The New Batch (Dante) (co-pr)
1991  The Rocketeer (Johnston)
1992  Lorenzo’s Oil (Miller)
1993  Body Bags (Carpenter—for TV)
1994  Wolf (Nichols); Baby’s Day Out (Johnson); Ed Wood (Burton)
1995  Batman Forever (Schumacher)
1996  The Nutty Professor (Shadyac)
1996  Escape from L.A. (Carpenter)
1997  Men in Black (Sonnenfeld)
1998  Critical Care (Lumet); Mighty Joe Young (Underwood)
1999  Life (Demme); Wild Wild West (Sonnenfeld)
2000  How the Grinch Stole Christmas (Howard); Nutty II: The Klumps (Segal)
2001  The Visitor (Burton)

Other Films:

1970  Octaman (Essex—for TV) (designer of Octaman costume)
1971  The Incredible 2-Headed Transplant (Lanza) (designer of gorilla suit)
1973  The Exorcist (Friedkin) (asst)
1976  Squirm (Lieberman) (design)
1977  Star Wars (Lucas) (sequence supervisor) (+ ro as Hem Dazon)
1994  The Santa Clause (Pasquin) (exec pr)
1996 The Frighteners (Jackson) (designer of The Judge) 1997 Batman and Robin (Schumaker) (designer of Nora Fries and coppersicles); The Devil’s Advocate (Hackford) (designer: demons)
1998 Psycho (Van Sant) (designer: Mrs. Bates)

Publications

By BAKER: articles—

Cinefantastique (New York), Spring 1978.
Écran Fantastique (Neuilly), September 1996.

On BAKER: articles—

‘‘Baker Issue” of Cinefex (Riverside, California), April 1982.
Cinefantastique (New York), July/August 1982.
Segnocinema (Vicenza), vol. 6, no. 21, January 1986.
Cinefex (Riverside), May 1991.
Cinefex (Riverside), December 1994.
Cinefex (Riverside), September 1996.
Écran Fantastique (Neuilly), September 1996.
Cinefex (Riverside), June 1997.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), June 1997.

* * *

If Dick Smith began the family of contemporary special makeup effects artists, Rick Baker is his eldest and most successful son. His early experiments with simple cosmetics apparently set the stage for the complex prosthetic appliances and creatures he would later design and create. Even though experienced enough at a young age to achieve professional results on shoestring budgets, his collaboration with Dick Smith on The Exorcist and his Emmy Award for The Autobiography of Miss Jane Pittman began Baker’s rise to the top of his field.

Working in all genres, Baker excels at designing anthropomorphic creatures (the mutant killer babies of It’s Alive series, the cantina sequence aliens of Star Wars, Bigfoot in Harry and the Hendersons, the zombies of Thriller, the aliens in Men in Black, the Grinch), deformed humans (The Thing with Two Heads, The Incredible Melting Man, Ratboy, the greek in Funhouse, the beast of Beauty and the Beast, the judge in The Frighteners, the plastic surgery citizens of Beverly Hills in Escape from L.A.), and animals. In fact, one could argue that he “specializes” in creating animals. His apes (The Incredible 2-Headed Transplant; King Kong; Greystoke: The Legend of Tarzan, Lord of the Apes; Gorillas in the Mist; Missing Link; Mighty Joe Young) impress and wholly convince because the smallest “human” gestures and facial expressions carry through the layers of makeup. His werewolves (The Howling, An American Werewolf in London, Teen Wolf, Wolf) frighten and disturb not simply because they are grotesque, but because they too convey a human agony.

An expert at combining mechanized appliances with masks, body suits, and cosmetics, Baker brought to life some of the most impressive special effects of the pre-digital effects era (before 1990). His full-body, on-screen transformations of The Howling, An American Werewolf in London, Starman, and Videodrome advanced the ability of film to graphically visualize metamorphoses without dissolves, mattes, stop-motion photography, or digital technology. Hydraulic devices implanted underneath an actor’s makeup could alter any part of the human anatomy. The lengthy and detailed presentations of lycanthropic change in The Howling and An American Werewolf in London included extending fingers and legs, expanding torsos and faces, and growing fangs, claws, and hair. Starman employed the same techniques to show a new-born infant instantly growing into an adult male. These narratively grounded transformations yielded to pure hallucinations in Videodrome. The inorganic and the organic freely swap places: a television set becomes a lump of eroticized flesh and the protagonist’s hand mutates into a living gun. These groundbreaking techniques set an industry standard—until digital effects supplanted them.

When digital effects became the dominant technology for rendering on-screen transformations, making Baker’s mechanized appliances obsolete, Baker returned to more “conservative” cosmetic applications. Stating that how makeup looks proves more important than how it is done, he eschewed the very technology he propagated and moved towards a more “human” emphasis. In this way, Baker’s recent award-winning work seems almost a homage to Jack Pierce and the Westmores. In Coming to America, The Nutty Professor, and Nutty II: The Klumps, Baker transformed Eddie Murphy into a number of eccentric characters; each one accomplished through “traditional” techniques employing full body and facial prosthetics. In Gorillas in the Mist, Missing Link, and Mighty Joe Young, Baker constructed ape suits and masks so flexible and responsive to the human form that, anecdotally, many viewers failed to realize they were watching actors playing apes. In Wolf, his makeup for Jack Nicholson and James Spader was actually subtle given its topic. Instead of on-screen, fully body werewolf metamorphoses, Baker showed isolated specifics: a hirsute palm, a pointed ear, a toothy smile, and most effectively, lupine eyes. The werewolf contact lenses he designed created a just noticeable distortion of pupil shape and color. In Ed Wood, Baker changed Martin Landau into Bela Lugosi and in Wild Wild West he created Kevin Kline’s disguises by updating classical cosmetic techniques. Some of Baker’s most accomplished recent work focuses on depicting the aged human body: Eddie Murphy becomes his own grandmother in The Nutty Professor and Nutty II: The Klumps; Albert Brooks plays an Id doctor in Critical Care; Martin Lawrence and Eddie Murphy turn into 90-year-olds during the course of Life. In all these examples, the makeup (whether prosthetic or cosmetic) does not draw attention to itself; it appears highly naturalistic.

Although Baker creates his effects without relying on digital technology, he does not retreat from it. Whatever the required effect, Baker and his Cinovation Studios crew will utilize any and all means to accomplish it. Combining models, puppets, and makeup with digital effects, Baker created an amazing menagerie of aliens for Men in Black. Mighty Joe Young employed the same combination of techniques and added to the mix actors in full gorilla costumes. The Nutty Professor and Nutty II: The Klumps used computer technology to depict rapid on-screen transformations between Buddy Love and Professor Klump. In Wild Wild West, Kenneth Branaugh’s legs were digitally “amputated” to make his Dr. Loveless even more sinister. For Life, digital imaging aided the design of Murphy and Martin’s prosthetic makeup.

48

Baker’s five Oscars for special makeup effects (including the first one ever awarded by the Academy in 1981) place him as one of Hollywood’s top production artists. His ability to utilize prosthetic technology, traditional cosmetics, puppets, mechanical appliances, and digital effects should keep Rick Baker in demand in a field which mutates as quickly as some of his own creations.

—Greg S. Faller

BALABAN, Barney

Theater Chain Owner, Producer. Nationality: American. Born: 8 June 1887 in Chicago, Illinois. Education: Attended local schools. Family: Married Tillie Urkov, 1929; son Leonard, daughter Judith. Career: After working in his immigrant father’s grocery store, was hired by Western Union as a messenger; later was chief clerk in a cold-storage company. Opened a nickelodeon in Chicago in 1908 with his brother Abe and other members of his family; theatrical holdings grew into a prosperous, nationwide chain, though many of the principal houses were in the Chicago area; 1917—profited from his experience in the cold storage business to pioneer ice-cooled refrigeration, a precursor to air conditioning, for his theaters. Control of theaters bought by Paramount in 1926, with much Paramount stock going to Balaban; with Katz, continued as manager of the chain; named first to the stockholders’ board of Paramount in the early thirties, then to a directorship; 1936—named president; late 1940s—toured foreign theaters at invitation of State Department; 1964—relinquished presidency for chairmanship of the board; 1966—was eased out as Paramount came under control of Gulf and Western. Died: 8 March 1971.

Publications

On BALABAN: book—

Born in Chicago to parents who ran a small grocery store, Barney Balaban quit school at the age of twelve to work at a number of jobs in order to help support his parents and six younger brothers. It was in 1908, however, at the height of the nickelodeon craze, that Balaban embarked on the venture that would shape his career. Along with his parents and brothers, Balaban decided to rent a small movie theater; the idea, he was later to confess, was really his mother’s, who, attending her first picture show, was impressed by the huge crowds that flocked to enjoy the new medium.

Balaban and his brother Abe expanded their holdings slowly; by 1914 they were managing three theaters. They also ran a restaurant, the Movie Inn, located in the downtown film business section; it was here that they met Sam Katz, who also worked in film exhibition and owned three downtown theaters. In 1916, the brothers went into partnership with Katz and embarked on an ambitious program of expansion. Seeing correctly that movie exhibition, which had initially drawn most of its paying customers from the working class, had more of a future with a middle-class clientele, Balaban & Katz determined to build and operate theaters that would appeal to this emerging audience. Because they were not affiliated with any of the major filmmakers, Balaban & Katz would not have access to the very best films then being made in the industry; so, they reasoned, economic success would come from designing and providing a total entertainment experience along the lines pioneered by Roxy Rothapfel’s Rivoli and Rialto theaters in New York.

While Katz engineered a series of real estate deals to acquire prime property in upscale suburbs near mass transportation, even signing up as investors some of Chicago’s richest tycoons, including William Wrigley, Jr. and John Hertz, Barney Balaban and his brother Abe set about making the resulting theaters attractive to middle-class customers. The Chicago firm of George and C.W. Rapp, soon to become one of the national leaders in “picture palace” design, was hired to create opulent and ornate designs that would accommodate huge crowds both within the auditorium and in the lobby, waiting for the next show. Exits and entrances were carefully planned so that the unending flow of patrons could easily come and go.

Much emphasis was placed on service, as Balaban attempted to run each establishment with the maximum of efficiency. Ushers, for example, were all to be young men, preferably college students, of a certain height and weight; careful training was given to all staff, who were to pamper patrons and cater efficiently to their needs. Though the ushers were to give the impression that they were present only to serve, actually they had another function—to make sure the auditorium was filled as quickly and completely as possible. Well-equipped restrooms provided middle-class patrons with familiar comforts, and most Balaban & Katz houses even featured free baby-sitting services, which certainly increased matinee attendance on weekdays. Because the films they exhibited were often second-rate, Barney Balaban directed his brother Abe to design the very best possible stage shows; film and show always ran 150 minutes, with films even shortened if they ran over the pre-set limit. The organists, stage attractions, and first-rate orchestras hired by Abe packed customers in seven days a week. Often the film on a given program was only an incidental attraction, certainly not responsible for box office success. Another marketing coup was Barney Balaban’s inspiration alone. His experience in the meat-packing business had given him some knowledge of rudimentary cooling systems. He hired the best engineers in what was then an emerging field to create satisfactory air cooling for his theaters; this then required whole rooms full of expensive equipment in need of constant service, but the result was certainly profitable, especially in Chicago’s often brutal summers, when crowds poured into Balaban & Katz theaters often simply to escape the oppressive heat. Along with Sam Katz and Abe, Barney Balaban was responsible for shaping the movie exhibition business in decisive ways, particularly by emphasizing the total experience provided by the house and thus encouraging what was soon to become a national obsession, “ging to the movies,” a social activity indulged in often with little regard for what film was actually playing.

In 1925 Katz negotiated an alliance with Famous Players-Lasky, then the largest movie company in the world, and soon to be renamed Paramount Pictures. Katz himself was put in charge of the exhibition end of the business nationwide, centralizing operations for the resulting chain—Publix Theaters—in ways that would become a model for the industry. Barney Balaban stayed in Chicago to run what formerly had been Balaban & Katz, but soon was promoted to the Paramount board, eventually receiving a directorship. In 1936 Balaban was selected as president of the corporation. In an era of hard times that had seen several reorganizations of the company, and a descent into receivership, the choice of Balaban was a wise one. Moving to the New York offices, where he remained for thirty years, Balaban applied the same lessons of efficient management to the operation of the vertically integrated enterprise of a classic Hollywood studio. Costs were cut, operations made more efficient, and in the space of a year Paramount was again turning a profit, even as the other studios continued to struggle until the highly profitable war years. Balaban insisted that every expenditure meet with his prior approval. As a studio head, he was less interested in art than in the financial bottom line, staying with proven methods of making a collar, including the nearly exclusive use of stars who had already established reputations in vaudeville, radio, or the stage. But, just as he had done with air conditioning, Balaban was eager to invest in technological change; in 1939, at his direction, Paramount became an investor in the DuMont video company, which, in the early days of television, briefly became a fourth network. Balaban also thought that theater television might prove profitable, but, despite his efforts, this use of the new medium never gained enough popularity. After Paramount signed a consent decree in 1947 that forced the studio to divest itself of theatrical holdings, Balaban struggled to find a way to keep the company profitable. Investment in a television station chain proved impossible because FCC regulations forbid ownership of stations by any corporation found guilty of monopoly practices. In the early 1950s, Paramount’s fortunes declined despite Balaban’s well-executed deal to sell the company’s backlog of pre-1948 films to MCA for $50 million.

Unlike other studio heads, Balaban kept a low public profile, emerging into the limelight only to further his patriotic interest in promoting American films abroad. He proved such an able spokesman for the motion picture industry that he was invited to organize a tour abroad, backed by the State Department, to help rebuild Hollywood’s overseas markets in the political and economic turmoil that resulted from the end of World War II. Paramount’s corporate fortunes, however, did not improve during the general decline of the film business in the late 1950s and early 1960s. Balaban was forced gently from the presidency, and then from membership on the board by 1966, as what had been the most powerful of the majors became part of the international conglomerate Gulf and Western.

—R. Barton Palmer

BALCON, (Sir) Michael

Producer. Nationality: British. Born: Birmingham, 19 May 1896. Education: Attended George Dixon School, Birmingham. Family: Married Aileen Leatherman, 1924; one son; one daughter, the actress Michael Balcon
Jill Balcon. Career: 1919—founder, with Victor Saville, Victory Motion Pictures, distributing company; 1921—first film produced, the documentary The Story of Oil; 1924—founder, with Graham Cutts, Gainsborough Pictures, Islington; 1926—organized Piccadilly Pictures with Carlyle Blackwell; 1928—founder, with Maurice Ostor and C. M. Wolf, Gainsborough Pictures Ltd.; 1931—36—in charge of production for Gaumont-British (who had taken over Gainsborough); 1936—38—head of production for MGM British; 1938—59—head of production for Ealing Studios (later Ealing Films); 1959—75—head of Bryanston Films; 1964–66—Chairman of British Lion. Knighted, 1948. Died: 16 October 1977.

Films as Producer (Features):

1925 The Rat (Cutts)

1926 The Sea Urchin (Cutts); The Triumph of the Rat (Cutts); The Lodger: A Story of the London Fog (Hitchcock); The Mountain Eagle (Hitchcock)

1927 Blithy (Brulcn); Downhill (Cutts); The Road (Cutts); Easy Virtue (Hitchcock); One of the Best (Kellino); The Vortex (Cutts)

1928 A South Sea Bubble (Hunter); A Light Woman (Brulcn); The First Born (Mander); The Wrecker (von Bolvary)

1929 The Return of the Rat (Cutts); Armistice (Saville); City of Play (Cliff); Taxi for Two (Saville); Woman to Woman (Saville)

1930 Just for a Song (Gundrey); The Crooked Billet (Brulcn); Journey's End (Hitchcock); Balaclava (Saville); Ashes (Saville); A Warm Corner (Saville)

1931 P. C. Josser (Rosmer); Hot Heir (Kellino); Who Killed Doc Robin? (Kellino); Bull Rushes (Kellino); Third Time Lucky (Forde); The Sport of Kings (Saville); The Stronger Sex (Gundrey); Aroma of the South Seas (Rosmer); The Kinger (Forde); The Lady of the Lake (Fitzpatrick); A Night in Montmartre (Forde); The Man They Could Not Arrest (Hunter); My Old China (Kellino); The Ghost Train (Forde); Hindle Wakes (Saville); The Calender (Bacchus); A Warm Corner (Saville)

1932 Lord Babs (Forde); The Frightened Lady (Saville); The Faithful Heart (Saville); Love Faces (Hunter); Jack's the Boy (Forde); Love on Wheels (Saville); Marry Me (Thiele); There Goes the Bride (Forde); Rome Express (Forde); After the Ball (Rosmer); The Midshipman (Forde)

1933 The Man from Toronto (Hill); The Good Companions (Saville); Soldiers of the King (Saville); King of the Ritz (Gallone); The Lucky Number (Nolbandov); Sleeping Car (Litvak); It's a Boy (Whelan); Failing for You (Hulbert); Britannia of Billingsgate (Hitchcock); Orders Is Orders (Forde); The Ghoul (Hunter); I Was a Spy (Saville); The Fire Raisers (Powell); Just Smith (Forde); Friday the Thirteenth (Saville); Aunt Sally (Forde); The Constant Nymph (Dean); Turkey Time (Forde)

1934 Jack Ahoy! (Forde); Evergreen (Saville); A Cup of Kindness (Saville); Prince Charming (Hitchcock); Man of Aran (Flaherty); Wild Boy (Forde); Chu Chin Chow (Forde); Wings over Everest (Barkas and Montagu); Little Friend (Viertel); My Old Dutch (Hill); Evensong (Saville); Jew Süss (Mendes); The Camels Are Coming (Whelan); Lady in Danger (Forde); Road House (Forde); The Man Who Knew Too Much (Hitchcock); Dirty Work (Forde); Temptation (Neufeld)

1935 The Iron Duke (Saville); Things Are Looking Up (de Courville); Oh, Daddy! (Cutts and Melford); Fighting Stock (Saville); Bulldog Jack ( Alias Bulldog Drummond) (Forde); Forever England (Forde); Torpedo Raiders (Forde); The 39 Steps (Hitchcock); The Clairvoyant (Hitchcock); Me and Marlborough (Saville); Boys Will Be Boys (Forde); Stormy Weather; Car of Dreams (Cutts and Melford); The Passing of the Third Floor Back (Saville); The Gav'nor (Rosmer); First a Girl (Saville); The Tunnel (Elvey); Foreign Affairs (Saville)

1936 King of the Damned (Forde); Jack of All Trades (Forde); First Offence (Mason); Rhodes of Africa (Rhodes, the Empire Builder) (Viertel); Pot Luck (Forde); Nine Days a Queen (Saville); The Secret Agent (Hitchcock); It's a Love Game (Forde); Where There's A Will (Forde); Seven Sinners (Forde); Soldiers Three (Mander); The Man Who Changed His Mind (Forde); The Man Who Lived Again (Forde); Doctor Maniac (Reisner); Everybody Dance (Reisner); All In (Forde); Hindle Wakes (Saville); The Calender (Bacchus); A Warm Corner (Saville)

1937 O.H.M.S. (Forde); Head Over Heels (Hale); The Great Barrier (Hale); King Solomon's Mines (Stevenson)

1938 A Yank at Oxford (Conway); The Gaunt Stranger (Forde); The Wreke Case (Viertel)

1939 Let's Be Famous (Forde); There Ain't No Justice (Tennyson); The Four Just Men (Forde); Cheer Boys (Forde); Young Man's Fancy (Viertel); Happy Families (Forde)

1940 Return to Yesterday (Viertel); The Proud Valley (Viertel); Let George Do It (Mason); Saloon Bar (Forde); Convoy (Tennyson); Sailors Three (Mander); The Man Who Knew Too Much (Hitchcock); Windbag the Sailor (Walters)

1941 Spare a Copper (Carstairs); The Ghost of St. Michael's (Viertel); Turned Out Nice Again (Viertel); Black Sheep (Forde); Ships with Wings (Nolbandov); Whitehall (Dearden and Hay)

1942 The Big Blockade (Forde); The Foreman Went to France (Tennyson); The Next of Kin (Viertel); The Goose Steps Out (Dearden and Hay); Went the Day Well? (Hitchcock)

1943 Nine Men (Viertel); The Bells Go Down (Viertel); Undercover (Mander); My Learned Friend (Dearden and Hay)

1944 San Demetrio London (Forde); The Halfway House (Forde)
1945 Johnny Frenchman (Frend); Painted Boats (The Girl on the Canal) (Crichton); Dead of Night (Dearden, Cavalcanti, and Hamer); Pink String and Sealing Wax (Hamer)

1946 The Captive Heart (Dearden); The Overlanders (Watt)

1947 Hue and Cry (Crichton); Nicholas Nickleby (The Life and Adventures of Nicholas Nickleby) (Cavalcanti); The Loves of Joanna Godden (Frend); Frieda (Dearden); It Always Rains on Sunday (Hamer)

1948 Against the Wind (Crichton); Saraband for Dead Lovers (Saraband) (Dearden); Another Shore (Crichton); Scott of the Antarctic (Frend)

1949 Eureka Stockade (Watt); Passport to Pimlico (Cornelius); Whiskey Galore! (Tight Little Island) (Mackendrick); Kind Hearts and Coronets (Hamer); Train of Events (Cole, Dearden and Crichton); A Run for Your Money (Frend)

1950 The Blue Lamp (Dearden); Bitter Springs (Smart); Cage of Gold (Dearden); The Magnet (Cole)

1951 Pool of London (Dearden); The Lavender Hill Mob (Crichton); The Man in the White Suit (Mackendrick); Where No Vultures Fly (Ivyon Hunter) (Watt)

1954 Lease of Life (Frend)

1955 The Night My Number Came Up (Norman); Armand and Michaela Denis (series—3 films); Touch and Go (The Light Touch) (Truman); The Ladykillers (Mackendrick)

1956 The Feminine Touch (The Gentle Touch) (Jackson); The Long Arm (The Third Key) (Frend)

1959 The Scapegoat (Hamer)

Films as Producer (Shorts):

1925 Gainsborough Burlesque Films (Brunel)

1926 The Steven Donoghue Series (West)

1929 In a Monastery Garden

1930 Sugar and Spice Series (Oumansky); Gainsborough Gems Series

1931 Harry Lauder Songs Series (Pearson—8)

1940 All Hands (Carstairs); Cable Laying (Carstairs); Dangerous Comment (Carstairs—2); Signals Office (Carstairs); Now You’re Talking (Carstairs)

1941 Freedom Must Have Wings (Bennett)

1942 Go to Blazes (Forde); Mighty Penny (Carstairs); Raid on France (Bennett); Meet Mr. Joad (Williams)

1943 Did You Ever See a Dream Walking? (Dearden); Save Your Shillings and Smile (Watt); The Saving Grace (Frend); Fleet Air Arm (Bennett)

1944 Journal of Resistance

Films as Co-Producer:

1921 The Story of Oil (Saville); Liquid Sunshine (Saville)

1923 Woman to Woman (Cutts)

1924 The White Shadow (White Shadows) (Cutts); The Prude’s Fall (Cutts); The Passionate Adventure (Cutts)

1925 The Blackguard (Cutts)

1926 The Pleasure Garden (Hitchcock)

1928 The Constant Nymph (Brunel)

1963 Sammy Going South (A Boy Ten Feet Tall) (Mackendrick)

Publications

By BALCON: books—

Realism or Tinsel?, Brighton, 1943.

By BALCON: articles—

“Whither Film?,” in Film Art (London), Winter 1934.

“The British Film During the War,” in Penguin Film Review (London), August 1946.

Interview with Penelope Houston, in Sight and Sound (London), Winter 1962–63.

On BALCON: books—

Brown, Geoff, editor, Der Produzent: Michael Balcon und der englische Film, Berlin, 1981.

On BALCON: articles—

Richards, Jeffrey, “Soldiers Three: the ‘Lost’ Gaumont British Imperial Epic (Michael Balcon’s Imperial Epic; Film Production Outfit),” in Historical Journal of Film, Radio and Television, March 1995.
Kemp, Philip, “Paradise Postponed: Ealing, Rank and They Came to a City,” in Cineaste (New York), Fall 1998.

* * *

Of the three producers whose influence, above all, shaped the British cinema—Alexander Korda, J. Arthur Rank and Michael Balcon—it was Balcon that in the end proved the strongest and the most lasting. Though he never enjoyed Korda’s international prestige, nor Rank’s financial might, he succeeded in creating a body of films recognizably stamped with his own image. To speak of a Denham film, or a Pinewood film, conveys no particular idea—but “an Ealing film” suggests, for better or worse, a very specific and very British style of movie, strongly marked by the personality of Balcon himself. Many of the outstanding qualities of British cinema, both during his lifetime and since, can be credited to Michael Balcon. And so, perhaps, can some of its faults.

Balcon’s influence on British cinema long pre-dates his arrival at Ealing in 1938. He produced his first feature film in 1923 at Islington Studios, where he founded Gainsborough Pictures and gave Alfred Hitchcock his first chance to direct. As head of Gaumont-British in the 1930s he produced some of the most successful British films of the period: not only Hitchcock’s thrillers, but Jessie Matthews musicals, Ben Travers farces, and the comedies of Jack Hulbert and Will Hay. There was also a string of slightly ungainly Anglo-German co-productions—and the occasional excursion into high seriousness such as Flaherty’s Man of Aran, otherwise known as “Balcon’s Folly.”

After a brief, unhappy stint heading MGM’s UK operation, Balcon took over from Basil Dean at Ealing, where he created the nearest the British film industry ever came to a studio after the classic Hollywood pattern. Like, say, Warners in the 1930s, Ealing had its roster of personnel—directors, writers, technicians, and so forth—on permanent salary, its pool of actors, its recurrent thematic preoccupations and, derived from all these, a recognizable house-style of filmmaking.

During this, “the happiest and most rewarding period of my working life,” Balcon was able to realise his ambition of an independent, national cinema, modest in its resources but international in scope. His aim, like that of every major British producer, was to get into the American market, but without aping the values, and the “hard technical perfection,” of Hollywood movies. “We shall become international,” he insisted, “by being national.” To the “tinsel” of Hollywood he opposed the “realism” of Ealing—documentary-based productions, in authentic settings. Documentary, he contended, was less a question of factual, non-fiction subjects than of “an attitude of mind towards filmmaking.”

Throughout his career Balcon was a great nurturer of young talent. At Ealing, presiding benevolently over “Mr Balcon’s Academy for Young Gentlemen” (in Monja Danischewsky’s famous phrase), he fostered a whole generation of filmmakers—not just directors like Alexander Mackendrick, Robert Hamer, Charles Crichton, Basil Dearden and Seth Holt, but producers, writers, cinematographers and actors—allowing them to develop their skills within an exceptionally tolerant and supportive atmosphere. He was, as Mackendrick remarked, “very mean with money, but extraordinarily generous with opportunities.”

Inevitably, this benign environment had its drawbacks. Under Balcon’s guidance, Ealing encouraged a consensus mentality that verged on complacency, a weakness for eccentricity dangerously akin to whimsy. Staunchly patriotic, he set out to make films “reflecting Britain and the British character,” but it was a reflection contained within a carefully defined frame. Certain subjects—notably sex and religion—alarmed him, and featured rarely, if at all. Social institutions could be gently mocked, but never seriously attacked. Those directors—Hamer, Mackendrick, Cavalcanti—who expressed a darker vision did so only by defying, or subverting, the studio ethos.

Balcon has been accused of insularity, of turning his back on cinematic developments elsewhere—in Bertrand Tavernier’s words, “a totally British talent but closed to the rest of the world.” Certainly, Ealing never encouraged formal experimentation, and it’s hard to imagine the swirling Baroque fantasies of Michael Powell fitting in there. In its latter years the studio retreated into a dated, toytown concept of England, and after its demise Balcon himself seemed a diminished figure, presiding uneasily at Bryanston over the brash outspokenness of the British New Wave.
Balcon’s limitations, though, were the obverse of his strengths. And it is for his strengths that he was remarkable—for his vigorous, indefatigable championship of British filmmaking, for his skill in reconciling commercial appeal with creative integrity, for his knack of spotting, cultivating and teaming disparate talents. If his concept of cinema sometimes seemed unambitious, it was also—like the man himself—refreshingly free from pretension or rhetoric. It was typical of him that, looking back on his career, he assigned to others the credit for his achievement. “A film producer is only as good as the sum total of the quality of the colleagues with whom he works, and in this respect I have been uniquely fortunate.”

—Philip Kemp

BALLARD, Lucien

Films as Cinematographer:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Director</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>Crime and Punishment</td>
<td>von Sternberg</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>The King Steps Out</td>
<td>von Sternberg, Arzner</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>The Devil’s Playground</td>
<td>Kenton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>I Promise to Pay</td>
<td>Lederman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Racketeers in Exile</td>
<td>Kenton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Venus Makes Trouble</td>
<td>Wiles</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Girls Can Play</td>
<td>Hillyer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>The Shadow (The Circus Shadow)</td>
<td>Coleman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Life Begins with Love</td>
<td>Mayo</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Squadron of Honor</td>
<td>Coleman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>From Bad to Worse</td>
<td>Lord—short</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>Penitentiary</td>
<td>Brahm</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>The Lone Wolf in Paris</td>
<td>Rogell</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>Highway Patrol</td>
<td>Coleman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>Flight to Fame</td>
<td>Coleman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>Rio Grande</td>
<td>Nelson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>Home on the Range</td>
<td>Lord—short</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>Violent Is the Word for Curly</td>
<td>Chase—short</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>Three Little Sew and Sevans</td>
<td>Lord—short</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>A Star Is Shorn</td>
<td>Lord—short</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>Let Us Live</td>
<td>Brahm</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>Blind Alley</td>
<td>Vidor, Ludvig, West, Nelson, Nelson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>Coast Guard</td>
<td>Nelson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>The Thundering West</td>
<td>Nelson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>Wild Geese Calling</td>
<td>Brahm</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>Whispering Ghosts</td>
<td>Werker</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>Orchestra Wives</td>
<td>Mayo</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>The Undying Monster</td>
<td>Brahm</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>Tonight We Raid Calais</td>
<td>Brahm</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>Bomber’s Moon</td>
<td>Fuhr</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>Holy Matrimony</td>
<td>Stahl</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1944</td>
<td>The Lodger</td>
<td>Brahm</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1944</td>
<td>Sweet and Lowdown</td>
<td>Mayo</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1945</td>
<td>The Love of Ours</td>
<td>Dieterle</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1946</td>
<td>Temptation</td>
<td>Pichel</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>Night Song</td>
<td>Cromwell</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1948</td>
<td>Berlin Express</td>
<td>Tourneur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>Let’s Make It Legal</td>
<td>Sale, Wise</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>The House on Telegraph Hill</td>
<td>Fuller</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Return of the Texan</td>
<td>Daves, Hathaway</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Don’t Bother to Knock</td>
<td>Baker</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>“The Clarion Call” ep. of O. Henry’s Full House (Full House)</td>
<td>Hathaway</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Night without Sleep</td>
<td>Baker</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1954</td>
<td>New Faces</td>
<td>Horner</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1958</td>
<td>Prince Valiant</td>
<td>Hathaway</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1958</td>
<td>The Raid</td>
<td>Fregonese</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1955</td>
<td>White Feather</td>
<td>Webb</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1955</td>
<td>The Magnificent Matador</td>
<td>Boetticher, Webb</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1955</td>
<td>Seven Cities of Gold</td>
<td>Webb</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>The Killer Is Loose</td>
<td>Boetticher</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>The Killing</td>
<td>Kubrick</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>The Proud Ones</td>
<td>Webb</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>A Kiss before Dying</td>
<td>Oswald</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>The King and Four Queens</td>
<td>Walsh</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1957</td>
<td>Band of Angels</td>
<td>Walsh</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1957</td>
<td>The Unholy Wife</td>
<td>Farrow</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1958</td>
<td>I Married a Woman</td>
<td>Kanter, Boetticher</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1958</td>
<td>Buchanan Rides Alone</td>
<td>Bolander, Laven</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1958</td>
<td>Murder by Contract</td>
<td>Lerner</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1959</td>
<td>City of Fear</td>
<td>Lerner</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1959</td>
<td>Al Capone</td>
<td>Wilson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1959</td>
<td>The Rise and Fall of Legs Diamond</td>
<td>Boetticher</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>The Bramble Bush</td>
<td>Petrie, Wilson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>Pay or Die</td>
<td>Wilson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1961</td>
<td>Desire in the Dust</td>
<td>Claxton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1961</td>
<td>The Parent Trap</td>
<td>Walsh</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1961</td>
<td>Susan Slade</td>
<td>Daves</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1962</td>
<td>Ride the High Country (Guns in the Afternoon)</td>
<td>Peckinpah</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1962</td>
<td>Six-Gun Law</td>
<td>Nyby</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>Wives and Lovers</td>
<td>Rich</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>The Caretakers</td>
<td>Bartlett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>Wall of Noise</td>
<td>Wilson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>Take Her, She’s Mine</td>
<td>Koster</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Lucien Ballard
1964  The New Interns (Rich);  Roustabout (Rich)
1965  Dear Brigitte (Koster);  The Sons of Katie Elder (Hathaway);  Boeing Boeing (Rich)
1966  Nevada Smith (Hathaway);  An Eye for an Eye (Moore)
1967  Hour of the Gun (Sturges);  Will Penny (Gries)
1968  The Party (Edwards);  How Sweet It Is!  (Paris);  Arruza (Boetticher) (co)
1969  A Time for Dying (Boetticher);  The Wild Bunch (Peckinpah); True Grit (Hathaway)
1970  The Ballad of Cable Hogue (Peckinpah);  The Hawaiians (Master of the Islands) (Gries);  Elvis—That’s the Way It Is (Sanders)
1971  What’s the Matter with Helen?  (Harrington)
1972  Junior Bonner (Peckinpah);  The Getaway (Peckinpah)
1974  Thomasine and Bushrod (Parks)
1975  Breakout (Gries)
1976  Breakheart Pass (Gries);  St. Ives (Thompson);  From Noon till Three (Gilroy);  Drum (Carver);  Mikey and Nicky (May) (co)
1978  Rabbit Test (Rivers)

Films as 2nd Cameraman:

1930  Morocco (von Sternberg)
1935  The Devil Is a Woman (von Sternberg)

Publications

By BALLARD: article—

On BALLARD: articles—

Lightman, Herb A., on The House on Telegraph Hill in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), July 1951.
Scott, Darrin, on Ride the High Country in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), July 1962.
Cinema (Beverly Hills), Fall 1969.
Film Comment (New York), Summer 1972.
Focus on Film (London), January-February 1979.

*  *  *

Lucien Ballard has to be ranked among the greatest of Hollywood cinematographers based on a distinguished career which stretched from the early days of talkies into the blockbuster era of the 1970s. During more than four decades he worked on an extraordinary number of visually interesting films, in particular Buchanan Rides Alone, The Rise and Fall of Legs Diamond, and Ride the High Country. His creative output seems to divide into five periods.

He began his career at Paramount as editor and assistant to the great cameraman Lee Garmes on Josef von Sternberg’s Morocco, starring Marlene Dietrich. Taken under von Sternberg’s wing as a protégé, Ballard worked on The Devil Is a Woman and Crime and Punishment. It is hard to think of a more inspirational training ground for exploring the possibilities of light and shadow in the cinema than to have worked with Josef von Sternberg in the 1930s.

Ballard then entered the next phase of his training when he struggled to make all forms of genre films a bit distinguished. The late 1930s saw his credits accumulate, even through work on many a two-reeler including the comedies of The Three Stooges, and Charlie Chase. His principal employer, the Columbia Pictures studio, may have been on “Poverty Row,” but it afforded Ballard the perfect place to learn to shoot Hollywood films quickly and efficiently.

World War II, with many talented cameramen off working for the military, provided Lucien Ballard with his chance to move up to Hollywood productions. He jumped from Columbia, the home of the “B” movie to Twentieth Century-Fox, a top studio. In the mid-1940s he became a bit of a celebrity as the husband of Merle Oberon and the cameraman who struggled with Howard Hughes to create the idiosyncratic Western, The Outlaw.

But then his career stuck and he returned to shooting lower-budget fare. He achieved a measure of excellence with The Killer Is Loose and Buchanan Rides Alone for Budd Boetticher, and The Killing for Stanley Kubrick. In 1962 his career took a turn for the better and he began to achieve fame as an exceptional cameraman with work for director Sam Peckinpah. Their Ride the High Country stands as one of the most beautiful of Westerns; The Wild Bunch, The Ballad of Cable Hogue, and Junior Bonner brought Ballard and Peckinpah much due recognition and acclaim. This final phase of Ballard’s career was underlined with greatness for the clean, elegant visual style he brought to the Western just, ironically, as that form was passing from the movie screen.

—Douglas Gomery

BALLHAUS, Michael

Cinematographer. Nationality: German. Born: Berlin, 5 August 1935; family moved to Bavaria 1942; son of the actors Oskar Ballhaus and Lenna Huter. Career: Inspired to become a cinematographer after watching Ophüls’s Lola Montès, 1950s; studied photography; employed as assistant cameraman for television; promoted to Director of Photography, 1960; began collaboration with Rainer Werner Fassbinder, 1971; settled in the United States, 1982. Awards: German Film Awards Film Strip of Gold-Outstanding Individual Achievement in Cinematography, for Die Bitteren Tranen der Petra von Kant, 1972; German Film Awards Film Strip of Gold-Outstanding Individual Achievement in Cinematography, for Despair, 1978; National Society of Film Critics Best Cinematography, Los Angeles Film Critics Association Award Best Cinematography, for The Fabulous

55
Michael Ballhaus

Baker Boys, 1989; Los Angeles Film Critics Association Best Cinematography, for GoodFellas, 1990; German Camera Awards Honorary Award, 1996. Address: c/o Lawrence A. Mirisch, Triad Artists, Inc., Los Angeles, CA, U.S.A.

Films as Cinematographer:

1971 Whity (Fassbinder); Sand (Politzsch); Warnung vor einer Heiligen Notte (Beware of a Holy Whore) (Fassbinder)

1972 Die Bitteren Tränen der Petra von Kant (The Bitter Tears of Petra von Kant) (Fassbinder)

1973 Tschetan, der Indianerjunge (Bohm)

1974 Martha (Fassbinder)

1975 Faustrecht der Freiheit (Fox and his Friends) (Fassbinder); Sommergäste (Summer Guests) (Stein); Adolf & Marlene (Lommel); Also es war so . . . (Thome); Chinesisches Roulette (Chinese Roulette) (Fassbinder); Ich will doch nur, das Ihr mich liebt (I Only Want You to Love Me) (Fassbinder)

1977 Mütter Küsters fahrt zum Himmel (Mütter Küsters Goes to Heaven) (Fassbinder); Frauen in New York (Fassbinder)

1978 Despair (Fassbinder); Venedig—die Insel der Glückseligen am Rande am des Untergangs (The Team; Venice) (Rischert); Bolwieser (The Stationmaster’s Wife) (Fassbinder); Deutschland im Herbst (Germany in Autumn) (Fassbinder); Die Erste Polka (Emmerich); Der Kleine Godard (Fassbinder)

1979 Kaleidoskop: Valeska Gert (For Fun—for Play) (Schlöndorff); Die Ehe der Maria Braun (The Marriage of Maria Braun) (Fassbinder) (+ro as Counsel); Deutscher Frühling (Fassbinder)

1980 Der Aufstand (The Uprising) (Lilienthal); Gross und Klein (Stein)

1981 Looping (Bockmayer)

1982 Dear Mr. Wonderful (Citydreams) (Lilienthal); Friends and Husbands (Heller Wahn) (von Trotta); Der Zauberberg (Geissendörfer)

1983 Malou (Merrapfel); Baby It’s You (Sayles); Edithes Tagebuch (Edith’s Diary) (Geissendörfer)

1984 Reckless (Foley); Old Enough (Silver); Heartbreakers (Roth); Das Autogram (Lilienthal)

1985 After Hours (Scorsese); The Death of a Salesman (Schlöndorff); Private Conversations (Blackwood)

1986 The Color of Money (Scorsese); Under the Cherry Moon (Prince)

1987 Broadcast News (James L. Brooks); The Glass Menagerie (Newman)

1988 Baja Oklahoma (Roth); The Last Temptation of Christ (Scorsese); Dirty Rotten Scoundrels (Oz); Working Girl (Nichols); The House on Carroll Street (Yates)

1989 The Fabulous Baker Boys (Kloves)

1990 GoodFellas (Scorsese); Postcards from the Edge (Nichols)

1991 Guilty by Suspicion (Winkler); What about Bob? (Oz); The Mambo Kings (Glimcher); Fear No Evil (Winkler)

1992 Bram Stoker’s Dracula (Coppola)

1993 The Age of Innocence (Scorsese)

1994 I’ll Do Anything (James L. Brooks)

1995 Outbreak (Petersen)

1996 Der Tote vom anderen Ufer (Krawinkel); Sleepers (Levinson)

1997 Air Force One (Petersen)

1998 Primary Colors (Nichols)

1999 Wild Wild West (Sonnenfeld)

2000 What Planet Are You From? (Nichols); The Legend of Bagger Vance (Redford); The Gangs of New York (Scorsese)

Other Films:

1970 Fassbinder Produces Film No. 8 (d?for TV)

1992 Visions of Light: The Art of Cinematography (Glassman and McCarthy) (appearance)

1999 The Thirteenth Floor (Rusnak) (exec pr)

Publications

By BALLHAUS: articles—

Film, no. 4, April 1985.

EPD Film (Frankfurt/Main), March 1994.
On BALLHAUS: articles—

Film Comment (New York), vol. 25, no. 5, September/October 1989.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), October 1993.
Film & TV Kameramann (Munich), February 1995.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), October 1996.

* * *

For decades, foreign cinematographers had little chance of getting anywhere in Hollywood. Nevertheless, a loosening of union restrictions in the late 1970s enabled a host of European “lensers” to colonize a corner of the American film industry. The new wave of emigré camera wizards—Nykvist, Storaro, and Robby Müller among them—had become so influential by 1989 that one critic, Todd McCarthy, was able to write in Film Comment: “The Yanks have been virtually wiped off the map . . . foreign lensers now utterly dominate.”

At the helm of the invasion was an unassuming German cameraman, Michael Ballhaus—a relative of Max Ophüls—whose infatuation with the celluloid muse had started when he saw Ophüls at work on Lola Montés. Ballhaus cut his teeth as a cinematographer on pictures by several of the pioneers of the so-called “New German Cinema.” Most notably, he shot 15 films for that tyrant of excess, Rainer Werner Fassbinder. Working with Fassbinder was never easy. Contemporary critics recall him as a fiercely jealous, insanely competitive figure, a dynamic and mercurial director who liked to engender a mood of tension and fear on the set. Early collaborations between Fassbinder and Ballhaus hardly can be said to be distinguished by their cinematography. Fassbinder, in those days, operated at a breakneck pace, and was not overly concerned with allowing his cameraman the leisure to devise complex lighting patterns. Pictures such as The Bitter Tears of Petra von Kant were lit rapidly and crudely, and compulsive as these tales of role playing and sexual jealousy may be to watch, they are certainly not shining advertisements for Ballhaus’s skills.

Later collaborations, notably Chinese Roulette and The Marriage of Maria Braun, have more to recommend them. The former is set in a country house, and is full of exquisite pastoral compositions of twilights and dawns, shot in the “magic hour.” The latter recreates postwar Germany in all its speedy splendor as the country rollicks into the Adenauer years. Moreover, in The Marriage of Maria Braun, Ballhaus does for Hanna Schygulla what von Sternberg did for Dietrich in The Blue Angel. Ballhaus has a knack for photographing female stars: his work with Schygulla prefigures his later Hollywood movies such as Working Girl and The Fabulous Baker Boys, where he frames Melanie Griffith and Michelle Pfeiffer, respectively, with the same kind of teasing deference accorded Garbo in the 1930s.) Fassbinder’s voracious appetite for cocaine in his latter years was a source of much stress to his colleagues: it is little wonder that around the time of his death Ballhaus fled west.

In 1984, he shot his first American film, Baby It’s You, for John Sayles, and in his subsequent assignments, Ballhaus has shown extraordinary versatility. He has worked within the constraints of theatrical adaptation, shooting a dim and lugubrious Death of a Salesman for Volker Schlöndorff as well as Tennessee Williams’s The Glass Menagerie for Paul Newman. Ballhaus has shot super-slick Mike Nichols movies such as Working Girl, Postcards from the Edge, Primary Colors, and What Planet Are You From?, which showed him as equally adept at photographing the urban sprawl of New York, the many shades of blue of California, and the vistas of the American South and Southwest. He was just as expert when working on soundstages, where he filmed practically all of Bram Stoker’s Dracula for Francis Ford Coppola. Perhaps missing his former mentor, he even teamed up with another egotist, namely Prince, to shoot Under the Cherry Moon. Established as a veteran, he nurtured Steve Kloves in his remarkably assured directing debut, The Fabulous Baker Boys. While his well-earned reputation as a solid and reliable professional won him a range of other high-prestige Hollywood assignments, Ballhaus probably will be best remembered for his work with Scorsese; for the elaborate circular tracks he laid down so that the camera could prowl round the pool table as Newman and Cruise hustled their way through The Color of Money, and, by way of contrast, for his filming of dust and desert in The Last Temptation of Christ, and the elegant period detail of 1870s New York in The Age of Innocence. He certainly reached some kind of peak with his incredibly fluid camera work, perfectly complementing the quick-fire narrative, on the brilliant GoodFellas.

In Europe, Ballhaus asserts, filmmaking is by necessity an art: budgets are tight, and there is rarely the prospect of making much money. In the States, though, film is a business. One senses that Ballhaus is happier in Hollywood than he ever was in Germany. For a start, American directors are far less likely to interfere with the lighting than are their European counterparts. After his years with the erratic Fassbinder, the strict hierarchies of the Hollywood scene, where the director of photography rarely operates the camera and where everybody knows his or her role, must come as something of a relief. Having served his apprenticeship shooting films high on concept but low on finance and unlikely to reach a mass audience, Ballhaus—like fellow countryman Wolfgang Petersen, for whom he photographed Outbreak and Air Force One—now shows himself to be a consummate Hollywood professional, delighted with the opportunities that he is offered.

—Geoffrey Macnab, updated by Rob Edelman

BANTON, Travis

Travis Banton

designer for manufacturers, and for his own salon. Died: In Hollywood, California, 2 February 1958.

Films as Costume Designer:

1917 Poppy (José) (asst)

1925 The Dressmaker from Paris (Bern); Grounds for Divorce (Bern); The Little French Girl (Brenon); The Swan (Buchowetski)

1926 The Palm Beach Girl (Kenton); The Cat’s Pajamas (Wellman); The Grand Duchess and the Waiter (St. Clair); Dancing Mothers (Brenon); The Blind Goddess (Fleming); The Popular Sin (St. Clair); Love ‘em and Leave ‘em (Tuttle)

1927 Children of Divorce (Lloyd); Beau Sabreur (Waters); Barbed Wire (Lee); It (Badger); Rolled Stockings (Rosson)

1928 Red Hair (Badger); Doomsday (Lee); The Fifty-Fifty Girl (Badger); His Tiger Lady (Henley); The Fleet’s In (St. Clair); Docks of New York (von Sternberg); Sins of the Fathers (Berger)

1929 The Man I Love (Wellman); Abie’s Irish Rose (Fleming); The Canary Murder Case (St. Clair); The Love Parade (Lubitsch); The Dance of Life (Cromwell and Sutherland); The Wild Party (Arzner); Four Feathers (Schoedsack, Cooper, and Mendes); Charming Sinners (Milton); Interruption (Mendes); The Case of Lena Smith (von Sternberg)

1930 Fast and Loose (Newmeyer); Slightly Scarlet (Knopf and Gasnier); Paramount on Parade (Arzner and others); Follow Thru (Schwab and Corrigan); Morocco (von Sternberg); The Vagabond King (Berger); Safety in Numbers (Schertzinger); Monte Carlo (Lubitsch); Let’s Go Native (McCarey); For the Defense (Cromwell); The Royal Family of Broadway (Cukor and Gardner)

1931 Dishonored (von Sternberg); Girls about Town (Cukor); The Mad Parade (Beaudine); Once a Lady (McClintic); An American Tragedy (von Sternberg); The Ladies’ Man (Mendes); Tarnished Lady (Cukor); Up Pops the Devil (Sutherland); It Pays to Advertise (Tuttle); Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (Mamoulian)

1932 The Eagle and the Hawk (Foster); Blonde Venus (von Sternberg); Evening for Sale (Walker); He Learned about Women (Corrigan); The Man from Yesterday (Viertel); No Man of Her Own (Ruggles); Shanghai Express (von Sternberg); A Farewell to Arms (Borzage); The Phantom President (Turog); Night after Night (Mayo); Trouble in Paradise (Lubitsch); Supernatural (Halperin); Stranger in Love (Intimate) (Mendes)

1933 Brief Moment (Burton) (co); The Crime of the Century (Beaudine); Design for Living (Lubitsch); Disgraced (Kenton); From Hell to Heaven (Kenton); Girl without a Room (Murphy); International House (Sutherland); A Lady’s Profession (McLeod); Midnight Club (Hall and Somnes); Song of Songs (Mamoulian); Terror Abroad (Sloane); Three Cornered Moon (Nugent); Torch Singer (Hall and Somnes)

1934 All of Me (Flood); Belle of the Nineties (McCarey); Bolero (Ruggles); Death Takes a Holiday (Leisen); The Great Flirtation (Murphy); Here Is My Heart (Tuttle); Kiss and Make Up (Thompson); Menace (Murphy); The Scarlet Empress (von Sternberg); Search for Beauty (Kenton); You’re Telling Me (Kenton); Cleopatra (DeMille) (co); Now and Forever (Hathaway); Nana (Arzner)

1935 Enter Madame! (Nugent); All the King’s Horses (Tuttle); The Crusades (DeMille); The Devil Is a Woman (von Sternberg); The Gilded Lily (Ruggles); Goin’ to Town (Hall); The Lives of a Bengal Lancer (Hathaway); Ruggles of Red Gap (McCarey); Rhumba (Gering); So Red the Rose (K. Vidor)

1936 The Bride Comes Home (Ruggles); Desire (Borzage); Yours for the Asking (Hall); Valiant Is the Word for Carrie (Ruggles); Rose of the Rancho (Gering); The Princess Comes Across (Howard); My Man Godfrey (La Cava); Love before Breakfast (W. Lang); Go West, Young Man (Hathaway); The Big Broadcast of 1937 (Leisen)

1937 Maid of Salem (Lloyd); Angel (Lubitsch); Champagne Waltz (Sutherland); Artists and Models (Walsh); High, Wide, and Handsome (Mamoulian); I Met Him in Paris (Ruggles); Nothing Sacred (Wellman) (co); Swing High, Swing Low (Leisen)

1938 Bluebeard’s Eighth Wife (Lubitsch); Fools for Scandal (LeRoy) (co)

1939 Made for Each Other (Cromwell); Eternally Yours (Garnett) (co); In Name Only (Cromwell) (co); The Great Commandment (Pichel)
1940 Chad Hanna (H. King); Down Argentine Way (Cummings); Lillian Russell (Cummings); The Mark of Zorro (Mamoulian); The Return of Frank James (F. Lang); Tin Pan Alley (W. Lang); Hudson’s Bay (Pichel); Raffles (Wood); Slightly Honorable (Garnett)

1941 Blood and Sand (Mamoulian); Charley’s Aunt (Mayo); Man Hunt (F. Lang); That Night in Rio (Cummings); A Yank in the R.A.F. (H. King); Moon over Miami (W. Lang); Western Union (F. Lang); How Green Was My Valley (Ford); Tobacco Road (Ford); The Great American Broadcast (Mayo); Sun Valley Serenade (Humberstone); Belle Starr (Cummings); Wild Geese Calling (Brahm)

1942 Confirm or Deny (Mayo) (co)
1943 What a Woman! (Cummings)

1944 Cover Girl (C. Vidor) (co); A Song to Remember C. Vidor) (co)
1945 Scarlet Street (F. Lang); Wonder Man (Humberstone); The Beautiful Cheat (Barton); Frontier Gal (The Bride Wasn’t Willing) (Lamont); The Strange Affair of Uncle Harry (Siodmak); This Love of Ours (Dieterle) (co); She Wouldn’t Say Yes (Hall) (co)

1946 Canyon Passage (Tourneur); Magnificent Doll (Borzage) (co); The Runaround (Lamont); Night in Paradise (Lubin); Tangier (Waggener); Sister Kenny (Nichols)
1947 I’ll Be Yours (Seitel) (co); The Lost Moment (Gabel); Smash Up (Heisler); The Paradine Case (Hitchcock)
1948 A Double Life (Cukor) (co); Letter from an Unknown Woman (Ophüls); The Velvet Touch (Gage); The Secret beyond the Door (F. Lang)

1950 Never a Dull Moment (Marshall)
1951 Valentino (Marshall) (co)

Publications

By BANTON: articles—

On BANTON: articles—

Photoplay (New York), April, May, and June 1936.
Mann, William J., “Costume Design: Travis Banton,” in Architectural Digest (Los Angeles), April 1996.

* * *

We characterize the European Baroque by its dramatic lighting, dynamic movement, frequent use of diagonals, repetition of motifs in infinite variation, forms built upon forms. Artists used lavish materials and embellished them with elaborate details. When individual works of art were brought together, sharing common styles and themes, they created even greater wholes. In the 1930s Travis Banton translated that spirit into pure Hollywood.

Banton’s most “Baroque” examples of costume artistry were completed under director Joseph von Sternberg’s visionary eye. Every detail in the von Sternberg films harmoniously meshed—scenery, costumes, makeup, even the postures of star Marlene Dietrich. Costume designer Banton, art director Hans Dreier, and photographer Lee Garmes, worked along with others toward an intricate and unified style.

Banton’s careful choice of costume materials complemented the sophisticated lighting techniques found in von Sternberg productions. His fabric palette ranged from absorbent to highly reflective. The combined talents of Banton, von Sternberg and Dietrich constructed a femme fatale as ethereal as the sparkle of a diamond.

As moving pictures moved, so did costumes by Banton. Playing across his reflective surfaces, the light skinned the screen like moonbeams on water. To increase this kinetic impact, Banton’s couture sprouted feathers, fluttering veils, acres of chiffon, and anything else that moved with the slightest breeze or gesture. This assured Paramount that even in the midst of full-screen revolution, not an eye would stray from the star. Shanghai Express pitted guerilla leader Warner Oland against Marlene Dietrich, but she stole the scene, wearing hypnotic buttons that swung like swashbucklers on chandeliers.

Besides his technical and formal considerations, Banton concentrated on capturing the essential mystique. He created numerous guises to capture Dietrich’s ambiguity—sexy masculine dress, elegant rags, etc. She even looked desirable in a gorilla suit. Dietrich glowed in glowing absurdity.

Love goddesses dressed by Banton spanned quite a range. Claudette Colbert alone crossed from temptress to dedicated wife. Banton “gilded” bawdy Mae West, investing her burlesque regalia with opulent class. Contrast West’s grand-staircase curves with streamline Carole Lombard, for whom Banton introduced a version of the star. The bride wasn’t a femme fatale but she stole the scene, wearing hypnotic buttons that swung like swashbucklers on chandeliers.

Love goddesses dressed by Banton spanned quite a range. Claudette Colbert alone crossed from temptress to dedicated wife. Banton “gilded” bawdy Mae West, investing her burlesque regalia with opulent class. Contrast West’s grand-staircase curves with streamline Carole Lombard, for whom Banton introduced a version of the star. The bride wasn’t a femme fatale but she stole the scene, wearing hypnotic buttons that swung like swashbucklers on chandeliers.

—Edith C. Lee

BARBERA, Joseph

See HANNA, William, and Joseph Barbera

BARKER, (Sir) William George

Director, Producer, Entrepreneur. Nationality: British. Born: London, 1867. Career: Worked as a travelling salesman; became interested in amateur film production, turning professional in 1901 and founding the Autoscope Company, which specialized in “topical” or “reality” films; became director of the Warwick Trading Company in 1906, which specialized in news films; 1908—with the nickelodeon boom, he set up his own company, Barker Motion Photography Ltd., with offices in the London theatrical district (Soho) and studios at Ealing; continued making topicals for several years; 1911—began feature production; formed own stock company of players; 1918—left the production business because of unsolvable distribution problems. Died: 1951.

Feature Films as Director/Producer:

(undated) The Anarchists Doom; The Great Bank Robbery; In the Hands of London Crooks; Jim the Fireman; The Last Round; Lights of London; The Fighting Parson; Greater Love Hath No Man; Younita

1911 Henry VIII; Princess Clementina

1913 The Great Bullion Robbery; London by Night; Sixty Years a Queen; East Lynne

1914 The Brother’s Atonement

Publications:

On BARKER: books—

* * *

Along with Cecil Hepworth and George Pearson, William Barker was responsible for the re-establishment of profitable British production in 1908, a boom that was prompted by the transference of exhibition from musical halls and fairgrounds to purpose-built theaters, known as nickelodeons, and the gradual shift to narrative films.

Interested first in filmmaking as an amateur, Barker saw the economic possibilities of the new medium and started making his own “topical” or “reality” films in the tradition of fellow British filmmakers Robert Paul and Birt Acres, themselves inspired by the success of the Lumière brothers in France. He abandoned the very primitive facilities of his Autoscope Company in 1906 to run the Warwick Trading Company, replacing founder Charles Urban, and soon turned the business into one of the country’s most notable suppliers of topicals, for which there was then the greatest demand. He became one of the most important figures in the growing British film business.

The public’s growing lack of interest in a steady diet of topicals, however, led to a radical change within the industry, with Barker very much in the forefront. The future, he saw clearly, lay in narrative films, and by 1911 he realized that longer, feature films would be most desirable, providing problems of exhibition and distribution could be solved so that larger production budgets could be justified. Like D. W. Griffith and Adolph Zukor in America, Baker saw that the most popular kind of film would likely be feature length productions starring famous actors, especially those from the legitimate stage. While he did not stop making the topicals that were still providing a steady income, Barker did pioneer the making of large-scale features, on the model of Italian costume epic spectacles such as Giulio Cesare (1909), Bruto (1910), San Francisco (1911), and, particularly, Fall of Troy (1911). His initial choice of subject matter was wise—a film on Henry VIII, perhaps the most famous of British monarchs; it was a subject that would prove popular and profitable again in the thirties with Alexander Korda’s The Private Life of Henry VIII (1933). For his Henry VIII, Barker convinced the era’s most famous Shakespearean actor, Sir Herbert Tree, to play the title role; only the promise of a huge salary convinced the reluctant Tree to take the part, but his superb performance made the film. British film historians are agreed that the film was the first truly important British feature, occupying roughly the place within the cinematic history of that country that Griffith’s The Birth of a Nation does in the United States. Barker’s film was an outstanding success at the box office and was instrumental in interesting a middle-class public in the cultural possibilities of the cinema.

Developing, again like Griffith, his own stock company of actors, Barker moved on to other historical subjects—most notably, Sixty Years a Queen, a slickly produced and patriotic homage to Queen Victoria. More important, however, for the growth and development of the industry was his elaborate mounting of East Lynne, which had started life as a novel by Mrs. Henry Wood and was soon adapted into one of the period’s most successful and notable stage melodramas. As Griffith had, Barker discovered materials in the stage melodrama ideally suited to cinematic adaptation: stock characters, emotionally-heightened action, predictable but effective twists and turns of the plot, and young female main characters, potential victims of a male-dominated society, with whom the audience could easily identify. Barker’s film version, directed by Bert Haldane, was the first six-reel British film and achieved an outstanding success with audiences. Though Barker and Haldane were not technically innovative in the manner of Griffith (the film’s editing, without any intercutting, makes for a certain monotony that the basically static camera set-ups do not alleviate), East Lynne offers a well-told and coherent narrative, with an expert blending of interior scenes and appropriate exteriors.

During the same period, again following a popular trend undoubtedly inaugurated by Griffith (in Musketeers of Pig Alley), Barker produced a number of exciting crime melodramas that made much of London night life, particularly its seamy side. Despite his successes with audiences, however, Barker proved unable to solve persistent problems with distribution. He allowed Henry VIII to be hired for very limited runs at quite high prices, thus enabling him to keep distribution in the hands of one dealer, who would issue territorial rights for individual showmen. To keep prices and demand high, he allowed very few prints of any one film. Barker even went so far as to burn the twenty prints of Henry VIII after a release period of only six weeks in order to keep increasingly tattered prints from circulating and damaging the public image of the film business (and of course providing competition to newer films produced by him). No other producer went so far in an attempt to control the market, and Barker was by no means successful in solving the problem for British filmmakers with ensuring a distribution that would regularly reward the huge investment needed to make a top-quality feature.

Barker’s films eventually became less noteworthy during the period from 1914 to 1917, and he was increasingly discouraged by the difficult business conditions the British industry suffered through as a result of wartime restrictions. The same general crisis that was soon to overtake all British production as a result of irresistible American competition forced him out of the industry by the end of the war in 1918.

—R. Barton Palmer
BARNES, George S.

Films as Cinematographer:

1918 The Biggest Show on Earth; Desert Song; Fuss and Feathers (Niblo); The Marriage Ring (Niblo); Keys of the Righteous (Storm); Naughty! Naughty! (Storm); The Vamp (Storm); When Do We Eat? (Storm)
1919 Stepping Out (Niblo); Dangerous Hours (Niblo); Happy Though Married (Niblo); The Haunted Bedroom (Niblo); Law of Men (Niblo); Partners Three (Niblo); Virtuous Thief (Niblo); What Every Woman Learns (Niblo); The Woman in the Suitcase (Niblo)
1920 Her Husband’s Friend (Niblo); Sex (Niblo); Hairpins (Niblo); The False Road (Niblo)
1921 Silk Hosiery (Niblo); The Heart Line (Thompson); The Beautiful Gambler (Worthington); The Bronze Bell (Horne); Opened Shutters (Worthington)
1922 The Real Adventure (K. Vidor); Woman, Wake Up! (Harrierson); Peg o’ My Heart (K. Vidor); Dusk to Dawn (K. Vidor); Conquering the Women (K. Vidor)
1923 Alice Adams (Lee); Desire (Lee); The Love Piker (Hopper)
1924 Janice Meredith (The Beautiful Rebel) (Hopper) (co); Yolanda (Vignola) (co)
1925 Zander the Great (Hill) (co); The Teaser (Seiter); The Dark Angel (Fitzmaurice); The Eagle (Brown) (co)
1926 Mademoiselle Modiste (Leonard); The Son of the Sheik (Fitzmaurice); The Winning of Barbara Worth (H. King)
1927 The Night of Love (Fitzmaurice) (co); Venus of Venice (Neilan); The Magic Flame (H. King); The Devil Dancer (Niblo) (co)
1928 Sadie Thompson (Walsh) (co); Two Lovers (Niblo); The Awakening (Fleming); Our Dancing Daughters (Beaumont)
1929 This Is Heaven (Santell) (co); The Rescue (Brenon); Bulldog Drummond (Jones) (co); The Trespasser (Goulding) (co); Condemned (Ruggles) (co)
1930 Raffles (Fitzmaurice and D’Arrast) (co); The Devil to Pay (Fitzmaurice) (co); The Lady’s Morals (The Soul Kiss; Jenny Lind) (Franklin) (co); What a Widow! (Dwan); One Heavenly Night (Fitzmaurice) (co)
1931 Five and Ten (Daughter of Luxury) (Leonard); Unholy Garden (Fitzmaurice) (co); Street Scene (K. Vidor)
1932 The Greeks Had a Word for Them (L. Sherman); Polly of the Circus (Santell); The Wet Parade (Fleming); Society Girl (Lanfield); Blondie of the Follies (Goulding); Sherlock Holmes (Howard)
1933 Broadway Bad (Her Reputation) (Lanfield); Peg o’ My Heart (Leonard); Goodbye Again (Curtiz); Footlight Parade (Lloyd); Havana Widows (Enright)
1934 Gambling Lady (Mayo); Massacre (Crosland); Smarty (Hit Me Again) (Florey); He Was Her Man (Bacon); Dames

Publications

On BARNES: articles—

Film Comment (New York), Summer 1972.
An artist of great versatility, George S. Barnes was one of the masters of Hollywood cinematography, his handsome, stylish work best served in visually lush melodramas like Rebecca, Jane Eyre, and Frenchman’s Creek. Barnes excelled in many genres—musicals (Footlight Parade, Gold Diggers of 1935), westerns (Jesse James), or science-fiction (The War of the Worlds)—but could also create a darker, more realistic visualization for social drama (Black Legion) and film noir (Force of Evil). Equally proficient in black-and-white (Bulldog Drummond, Marked Woman) or color (Sinbad the Sailor, The Boy with Green Hair), Barnes was in demand from top directors like Hitchcock, Capra, DeMille, and McCarey, and such stars as Valentino, Swanson, Colman, Cooper, Bergman, and Crosby.

In the silent era, Barnes’s finest achievements included Janice Meredith, a Revolutionary War drama in the Griffith style; the Valentino vehicle The Son of the Sheik, with its softly lit interiors and exhilarating desert photography of Arab horsemen; and The Winning of Barbara Worth, highlighted by a climactic and still impressive flood sequence. Barnes became Samuel Goldwyn’s number one cameraman in 1925 with The Dark Angel, and his exquisite visuals became a Goldwyn hallmark in the late 1920s and early 1930s. He was responsible for the studio’s important romantic team Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky, both in their solo vehicles (Colman’s Condemned and Raffles, Banky’s The Awakening and This Is Heaven) and their tandem efforts (The Night of Love, The Magic Flame, Two Lovers). Barnes’s assistant and eventual co-photographer on the Goldwyn films was Gregg Toland, who learned cinematography under Barnes’s tutelage. Toland’s later work on Dead End, Wuthering Heights, and Citizen Kane shows Barnes’s influence in the refinement of deep focus, expressive camera movement, and faultless lighting.

Bulldog Drummond exemplifies their artistry together. The film is an early precursor to the James Bond pictures, and allows for a bravura photographic style. Imaginative tracking shots, such as the opening at the men’s club and later in the villains’ hideout, are coupled with William Cameron Menzies’s eccentric sets to create a visual feast. Tremendously mobile for one of the first talking pictures, Bulldog Drummond is set almost entirely at night, and Barnes and Toland eschew day-for-night for actual nocturnal exteriors.

Toland succeeded Barnes as Goldwyn’s ace cameraman, and Barnes moved on to brief stints at MGM and Fox before settling at Warners. He was kept busy at the Warners factory, shooting 25 films between 1934 and 1937. He brought a gritty, realistic look to message movies like Massacre, Black Legion, and Marked Woman, but usually was assigned to musicals. He shot a trio of Busby Berkeley classics—Footlight Parade with the famous “Shanghai Lil” number; Dames; and Gold Diggers of 1935 with its striking, lengthy “Lullaby of Broadway” sequence—and many lesser musicals, such as the ludicrous Broadway Gondolier. Barnes left Warners in 1938 for more rewarding films, and found himself very much in demand.

Henry King’s Jesse James (co-photographed with W. Howard Greene) was a tremendous change from the sound-stage musicals, a lavish western adventure filmed on picturesque Missouri locations in dazzling three-strip Technicolor. Barnes imparts a staggering sense of movement to the proceedings, his exteriors bringing life to the vigorous action. Barnes also did the sequel in Technicolor, The Return of Frank James, this time with Fritz Lang directing. The color was just as vibrant, but Lang gave darker meaning to the film, reflected in Barnes’s claustrophobic interiors.

Barnes’s 1940s work is impeccable. He won an Oscar for Alfred Hitchcock’s Rebecca, a black-and-white masterpiece. Manderley, the manor house of Daphne du Maurier’s novel, was given a brooding, foreboding quality by Barnes’s play of light and shadow. He also photographed Spellbound for Hitchcock, famed for the surrealistic Salvador Dali-designed dream sequence, a flashy, disproportionate, bizarre experiment. Robert Stevenson’s Jane Eyre has much the same ominous feel of Rebecca, this time with a 19th-century period setting.

Barnes furnished a darker view than was normal for Frank Capra’s films. In Meet John Doe, he painted the images in starkly defined high contrast, then softened the focus for the climactic rooftop scene in the snow. His later Capras, the Bing Crosby musicals Riding High and Here Comes the Groom, were by necessity much lighter in tone and text. Barnes’s films for Leo McCarey during this period—Once upon a Honeymoon, The Bells of St. Mary’s, and Good Sam—were slick studio jobs with a director noted for his straightforward, uncomplicated camera style. Barnes’s main challenge in the McCarey films was to give the Hollywood glamour treatment to the stars—Cary Grant and Ginger Rogers in Honeymoon, Ingrid Bergman and Bing Crosby (as a nun and a priest, respectively) in Bells, and Gary Cooper and Ann Sheridan in Good Sam. Crosby was so happy with Barnes’s photography that he insisted on him for many of his subsequent features.

Barnes also distinguished himself with outstanding color work. The Spanish Main and Sinbad the Sailor have rich cartoon colors to suit their rustic adventures, while he etched subtler hues for the romantic Frenchman’s Creek, again from a du Maurier novel. In his epics for Cecil B. DeMille, the Biblical Samson and Delilah, and the circus marathon The Greatest Show on Earth, Barnes employed garish colors for the director’s showy vision.

A consummate cinematographer, George Barnes had a prolific career exemplified by a high degree of lighting sophistication, an intuitive mastery of deep-focus photography, and a creative sense of composition and camera movement. He helped set the Hollywood standard for studio cinematography, yet could also transcend the limitations of the system and paint artistically lasting works of cinema. Within the industry, Barnes was acclaimed as among the best in his field, and his Academy Award record is impressive. He was nominated for three films during the first Oscar season of 1927–28 with Devil Dancer, The Magic Flame, and Sadie Thompson, and, in addition to his win for Rebecca, he was nominated in both black-and-white (Our Dancing Daughters, Spellbound) and color (The Spanish Main, Samson and Delilah) categories.

—John A. Gallagher

BARRY, John

Composer. Nationality: British. Born: John Barry Prendergast in York, 3 November 1933. Education: Studied with Francis Jackson and Joseph William Russo. Military Service: Played in military band during military service. Family: Married 1) the actress Jane Birkin (divorced); 2) Laurie Barry. Career: Rock ‘n’ roll trumpeter, and composer-arranger-conductor for John Dankworth, Jack Parnell, and other bands; organized his own group, The John Barry Seven; 1960—composed music for TV, including the miniseries Eleanor and Franklin, 1976. Awards: Academy Award, for Born Free (and the song “Born Free”), 1966, The Lion in Winter, 1968, Out of Africa, 1985, and Dances with Wolves, 1990; British Academy Award, for The Lion in Winter, 1968. Agent: ICM, 8899 Beverly Boulevard, Hollywood, CA 90048, U.S.A.

Films as Composer:

1960 Beat Girl (Wild for Kicks) (Grenville); Never Let Go (Guillermin)
1962 The L-Shaped Room (Forbes); The Amorous Prawn (The Playgirl and the War Minister) (Kimmins)
1963 From Russia with Love (Young); Zulu (Endfield)
1964 A Jolly Bad Fellow (They All Died Laughing) (Chaffey); Seance on a Wet Afternoon (Forbes); Man in the Middle (Hamilton); Goldfinger (Hamilton)
1965 The Party’s Over (Hamilton—produced 1962); The Ipcress File (Furie); Four in the Morning (Simmons); King Rat (Forbes); Mister Moses (Neame); The Knack, and How to Get It (Lester); Thunderball (Neame); One Man and His Bank (Cobham—short)

1966 Born Free (Hill); The Quiller Memorandum (Anderson); Dutchman (Harvey); The Chase (Penn); The Wrong Box (Forbes)

1967 The Whisperers (Forbes); You Only Live Twice (Gilbert)

1968 Petulia (Lester); Deadfall (Forbes); Boom! (Huston); The Lion in Winter (Harvey)

1969 Midnight Cowboy (Schlesinger); On Her Majesty’s Secret Service (Hunt)

1970 The Last Valley (Clavell); Monte Walsh (Fraker); The Appointment (Lumet) (song)

1971 A Clockwork Orange (Kubrick); Murphy’s War (Yates); Follow Me (The Public Eye) (Reed); Walkabout (Roeg); They Might Be Giants (Harvey); Diamonds Are Forever (Hamilton)

1972 Alice’s Adventures in Wonderland (Sterling); Mary, Queen of Scots (Jarrott)

1973 A Doll’s House (Garland); The Glass Menagerie (Harvey)

1974 The Man with the Golden Gun (Hamilton); The Dove (Jarrott); The Little Prince (Donen)

1975 The Day of the Locust (Schlesinger); Love among the Ruins (Cukor); The Tamarind Seed (Edwards)

1976 Robin and Marian (Lester); King Kong (Guillermin)

1977 First Love (Darling); The Deep (Yates); The War between the Tates (Philips); White Buffalo (Lee Thompson); The Gathering (Kleiser); Eleanor and Franklin: The White House Years (Petrie); Young Joe, the Forgotten Kennedy (Heffron)

1978 Game of Death (Clouse); The Betsy (Petrie)

1979 Hanover Street (Hyams); Star Crash (Coates); Moonraker (Gilbert); The Black Hole (Nelson); Willa (Darling and Guzman); The Corn Is Green (Cukor)

1980 Inside Moves (Donner); Raise the Titanic! (Jameson); Somewhere in Time (Szwarc)

1981 The Legend of the Lone Ranger (Fraker); Body Heat (Kasdan); Murder by Phone (Bells) (Anderson)

1982 Hammett (Wenders); Frances (Clifford)

1983 Octopussy (Glen); High Road to China (Hutton); Svengali (Harvey)

1984 The Cotton Club (Copolla); Mike’s Murder (Bridges); Until September (Marquand)

1985 Jagged Edge (Marquand); A View to a Kill (Glen); Out of Africa (Pollack)

1986 Howard the Duck (Huyck); A Killing Affair (Saperstein); My Sister’s Keeper (Saperstein); Peggy Sue Got Married (Copolla)

1987 Hearts of Fire (Marquand); The Living Daylights (Glen)

1988 Masquerade (Swaim)

1990 Dances with Wolves (Costner)

1992 Chaplin (Attenborough)

1993 Deception (Clifford); Indecent Proposal (Lyne); My Life (Rubin)

1994 The Specialist (Llosa)

1995 Cry, the Beloved Country (Roodt); The Scarlett Letter (Joffé)

1997 Swept from the Sea (Kidron)

1998 Mercury Rising (Becker); Playing by Heart (Carroll)

1999 Goodbye Lover (Score Withdrawn)

Film as Arranger:

1962 Dr. No (Young)

Publications

By BARRY: articles—

On BARRY: articles—

John Barry is one of cinema’s most prolific and well-known composers. Europe has long provided the American movie industry with many of its leading musical artists, but no Englishman has ever equaled Barry’s breadth of accomplishment and commercial success. Although movie music increasingly consists of collections of unrelated pop songs selected mainly for their ability to sell records, Barry’s skills are still in demand among those who value dramatic and musical integration. Best known for his compositions for the James Bond films, Barry has in fact displayed an extraordinary versatility throughout his career. Jazz instrumentals, medieval music, blues motifs, rock variations, French ballads, and evocations of the Orient have all been featured in his work. He composes orchestral and solo textures with equal facility, and is as much at home with electronically generated sound as with that produced by acoustic instruments. Although he has been criticized for an excess of lushness, his professionalism, his competence in a diversity of idioms, and his keen understanding of the cinematic relevance of music have earned him wide respect.

By the time he entered the film industry, Barry was already acquainted with a wide range of musical genres. The son of a cinema owner, he gravitated toward movies by way of a classical music training at an English cathedral, playing trumpet in an army band, arranging for several of Britain’s top jazz orchestras, and leading the brass-laden rock ‘n’ roll group The John Barry Seven. After writing his first film score for the youth-oriented melodrama, Beat Girl, Barry was asked to arrange and direct Monty Norman’s lively James Bond theme for Dr. No, the first of the 007 films. Norman has always received credit for the composition, with its plunking guitar and insistent brass, but Barry’s input helped to make it one of the 1960’s most recognizable signature tunes in any medium. Barry has since written most of the scores and about half the title songs for the Bond series. While all of these have achieved an effective synthesis of music and image, Barry’s work for Goldfinger is perhaps the most exciting. Although the compositions have varied in musical quality, they have always been integral to the films’ identity—as much a part of the total package as the arresting title sequences and 007 himself. Barry’s distinctive use of brass has added urgency to the action sequences, and his use of lush strings and woodwind melodies have enhanced the more romantic interludes. While he has been required to generate chart-busting title songs for the Bond films, he has always created thematic unity between the main number and the score as a whole.

Barry’s work includes music which functions mainly to establish mood or signal changes of emotional pace. His unobtrusive score for Jagged Edge is a typical example. Yet he rejects the idea that film music must always be an appendage to the visual image, faithfully reflecting the events depicted on screen. His philosophy is that “a film score should burn with its own fire, not merely glow in the dark like a pretty charcoal.” While insisting that score and narrative should be in harmony, Barry believes that music can add dramatic dimension, either by augmenting expressed emotions and attitudes, or by communicating information not contained in the images or script. His sweeping pastorales for Out of Africa, for example, gave heightened expression to the protagonists’ love for their adopted country, as well as for each other. In The Lion in Winter, choral fugues, sung in Latin, are used to establish the largely unarticulated influence of the Catholic Church on England’s Henry II. As musical supervisor on Midnight Cowboy, he and director John Schlesinger used Fred Neil’s up-tempo song “Everybody’s Talkin’” to supply much of the film’s initial pace and meaning. Barry also employs musical understatement for dramatic effect. The emotional impact of the sober prison-camp drama King Rat owed much to Barry’s delicate instrumentation.

Many of Barry’s most lasting contributions to film music have been composed in a romantic vein. His love themes for Robin and Marian, his title song for Moonraker, and the gentle ballad sung by Louis Armstrong in On Her Majesty’s Secret Service exemplify his skill at using music to call forth an affective response in the audience. Indeed, his score for Somewhere in Time was not only more memorable than the film, but was more effective than either script or acting in establishing the movie’s romantic resonance. Although such compositions do not satisfy every taste—some critics describe them as “soupy”—they are seldom inappropriate.

While Barry can scarcely be accused of a formulaic approach to film scoring, it is possible to identify certain trademarks in his music. Extensive use of flutes, horns, and strings, sustained low brass notes (“‘brass pedals’”), and endless reworking of a single theme, serve to distinguish his work from that of his contemporaries. Although he may not always satisfy the aesthetic sensibilities of film-music critics, Barry has done more than most to keep alive the public’s appreciation of movie scoring. In an era in which commercial pressure has eroded the relationship between music and film, this is a significant achievement.

—Fiona Valentine

BARSAcq, Leon

Films as Assistant Art Director:

1934  Chansons de Paris (de Baroncelli)
1935  Touche-à-tour (Dreville)
1936  Le Coupable (Bernard); Courrier-Sud (Billon); Trois... six... neuf (Rouleau)
1937  Yoshinawa (Ophuls)
1938  L’Ange que j’ai vendu (Bernheim); J’étais une aventurière (Bernard); La Marseillaise (Renior)
1939  Battement de coeur (Decoin); Le Monde tremblera (Pottier)

Films as Art Director:

1940  Volpone (Tourneur)
1942  Les Visiteurs du soir (The Devil’s Envoys) (Carné); L’Honorabile Catherine (L’Herber)
1943  Les Mystères de Paris (de Baroncelli); Lumière d’été (Gremillon) (co)
1945  Les Enfants du paradis (Children of Paradise) (Carné) (co); Boule de suif (Christian-Jaque)
1946  L’Idiot (The Idiot) (Lampin); Le Chanteur inconnu (Cayatte); Le Silence est d’or (Clair)
1947  Les Dernières Vacances (Leenhardt); Eternel conflit (Lampin) (co)
1949  Pattes blanches (Grémillon); Maya (Bernard); Le Beauté du diable (Beauty and the Devil) (Clair)
1950  Le Château de verre (Clément)
1951  Deux sous de violettes (Anouilh)
1952  Rome ore 11 (Rome 11 O’Clock) (De Santis); Les Belles de nuit (Beauties of the Night) (Clair); Les Amants de Tolède (Decoin); Violettes impériales (Pottier); La Dame aux camélias (Bernard)
1953  Leur dernière nuit (Lacombe); La Belle de Cadix (Bernard)
1954  Le Grand Jeu (Flesh and Women) (Siodmak); Bel-Ami (Daquin); Les Diaboliques (Diabolique) (Clouzot); Les Fruits de l’été (Bernard)
1955  Les Grandes Manoeuvres (The Grand Maneuver) (Clair); The Ambassador’s Daughter (Krasna)
1956  Les Aventures de Till L’Espigile (Philipe); Michel Strogoff (Gallone)
1957  Porte de Lilas (Gates of Paris) (Clair); Pot Bouille (Duvivier)
1959  Le Chemin des écoliers (Boisrond); Les Arrivistes (Daquin); Recours en grace (Benedek)
1960  La Croix des vivants (Cross of the Living) (Govar)
1961  Tout l’or du monde (Clair)
1962  The Longest Day (Annakin, Marton, and Wicki) (co); “Les Deux Pigeons” [“The Two Pigeons”] ep. of Les Quatres Vérités (Three Fables of Love) (Clair)
1963  Symphonie pour un massacre (Symphony for a Massacre) (Deray); Der Besuch (The Visit) (Wicki)
1965  Trois chambres à Manhattan (Carné)
1966  Le Soleil noir (de la Patellière)
1967  J’ai tué Raspoutine (Hosseim); Diaboliquement vôtre (Duvivier)
1968  Phèdre (Jourdan)

Films as Designer:

1948  Tous les chemins mènent à Rome (Boyer)

Publications

By BARSACQ: book—

By BARSACQ: article—

On BARSACQ: article—
Cinématographe (Paris), March 1982.

* * *

Léon Barsacq was one of the leading art directors of his time. Yet his greater importance will almost certainly lie in his ideas about set design as an art and in his documentation of the history of film design.

The Russian-born Barsacq trained in architecture and decorative arts in Paris before becoming an assistant designer on films by Andrei Andrejew and others. Among his early work as an art director, the most memorable settings appear in Marcel Carné’s and Jacques Prévert’s Les Enfants du paradis, for which Barsacq collaborated with Alexandre Trauner and Raymond Gabutti. In its density of detail, its visual richness and atmosphere, this was a masterpiece of style defying the austerity of occupied France.

In Les Enfants du paradis and other of his early films, such as La Marseillaise, directed by Jean Renoir, the elaboration of settings did not, perhaps, totally comply with Barsacq’s premise that design should subordinate itself to narrative, simply lending atmospheric support. But as the complexities of style which dominate Occupation films gave way to a simpler imagery in the 1950s, Barsacq’s work developed a more sketchlike style. His best sets achieve a delicate balance between realism and artifice. Barsacq was an elegant Beaux Arts draftsman whose drawings reflected his ability to find the essence of a setting without resorting to obvious trickery.

Barsacq’s closest liaisons were with René Clair and Marcel Carné. Clair said of his designs, “reality paled alongside its imitation.” Jean Renoir, too, was among his collaborators. Like the directors with whom he worked, Barsacq drew inspiration from such painters as Daumier, for the Boulevard du Crime in Les Enfants du paradis, and Breughel, for the sets in Les Aventures de Till L’Espigile.

Barsacq worked among the French pioneers in the use of color during the early 1950s, the so-called “heroic” period of color film. Early color films with sets by Barsacq include Richard Pottier’s Violettes impériales and Raymond Bernard’s La Dame aux camélias. The expensive Technicolor process and the uncertain Belgian Gevacolor system were used until the introduction of the more controllable Eastmancolor, for which Barsacq designed sets in Calir’s Les Grandes Manoeuvres. By limiting his palette of colors to neutral tones with only occasional use of strong color, Barsacq confirmed the aesthetic merit of color in producing atmospheric effects.

Barsacq’s designs of the 1960s for films such as The Longest Day and Trois Chambres à Manhattan, have been treated with less interest by critics than his earlier work. This was due partly to the overwhelming fashion for cinéma vérité in the later 1950s and early 1960s, which attempted to abandon artificiality and contrivance in design and all other aspects of the film. But as a historian of film design, Barsacq was highly productive in his later years. Published in 1970, his book Le Décor de film not only contains a wealth of information, but also proposes a clear aesthetic postulate on film design and, consequently, has become the standard text on its subject.

—Gregory Votolato

BASEVI, James

Films as Art Director:

1925 Soul Mates (Conway); The Circle (Borzage); The Big Parade (K. Vidor); Confessions of a Queen (Sjöström); The Tower of Lies (Sjöström)
1926 Bardelys the Magnificent (Whatham) (co); Dance Madness (Leonard); Love’s Blindness (Dillon); The Temptress (Niblo)
1938 The Cowboy and the Lady (Potter)
1939 Raffles (Wood); Wuthering Heights (Wyler); The Real Glory (Hathaway)
1940 The Long Voyage Home (Ford); The Westerner (Wyler)
1941 Tobacco Road (Ford); A Yank in the R.A.F. (H. King)
1942 The Black Swan (H. King); Moonlight (Mayo); Thunder Birds (Wellman); China Girl (Hathaway); Son of Fury (Cromwell)
1943 Bomber’s Moon (Furul); Claudia (Goulding); The Dancing Masters (St. Clair); Guadalcanal Diary (Seiler); The Gang’s All Here (The Girls He Left Behind) (Berkeley); Happy Land (Pichel); Heaven Can Wait (Lubitsch); Hello, Frisco, Hello (Humberstone); Holy Matrimony (Stahl); Jitterbugs (St. Clair); The Moon Is Down (Pichel); The Ox-Bow Incident (Strange Incident) (Wellman); Paris after Dark (The Night Is Ending) (Moguy); The Song of Bernadette (H. King); Stormy Weather (Stone); Sweet Rosie O’Grady (Cummins); They Came to Blow Up America (Ludwig); Wintertime (Brahm)
1944 Lifeboat (Hitchcock); Bermuda Mystery (Stoloff); Buffalo Bill (Wellman); The Eve of St. Mark (Stahl); Four Jills in a Jeep (Weiter); Greenwich Village (W. Lang); Home in Indiana (Hathaway); Jane Eyre (Stevenson); In the Meantime, Darling (Preminger); Ladies of Washington (L. King); The Keys of the Kingdom (Stahl); The Lodger (Brahm); Pin-Up Girl (Humberstone); The Purple Heart (Milestone); Roger Touhy, Gangster (The Last Gangster) (Florey); The Sullivans (Bacon); Tampico (Mendes); Wilson (H. King)
1945 Spellbound (Hitchcock)

1946 Claudia and David (W. Lang); The Dark Corner (Hathaway); Duel in the Sun (K. Vidor); Home, Sweet Homicide (Bacon); It Shouldn’t Happen to a Dog (Leeds); Johnny Comes Flying Home (Stoloff); Somewhere in the Night (Mankiewicz); Strange Triangle (Strange Alibi) (McCarey); Margie (H. King); 13 Rue Madeline (Hathaway); If I’m Lucky (Seiler); My Darling Clementine (Ford) (co)
1947 The Brasher Doubloon (The High Window) (Brahm); Captain from Castile (H. King); The Homestretch (Humberstone); Carnival on Costa Rica (Rateoff); The Late George Apley (Mankiewicz); The Shocking Miss Pilgrim (Seaton); Boom-erang! (Kazan); Thunder in the Valley (Bob, Son of Battle) (L. King)
1948 Fort Apache (Ford); Three Godfathers (Ford)
1949 Mighty Joe Young (Schoedsack); She Wore a Yellow Ribbon (Ford)
1950 To Please a Lady (Brown); Wagonmaster (Ford); Across the Wide Missouri (Wellman)
1951 Night into Morning (Markle); The People against O’Hara (J. Sturges); Just This Once (Weis)
1952 My Man and I (Wellman)
1953 Battle Circus (R. Brooks); Island in the Sky (Wellman)
1954 East of Eden (Kazan)
1956 The Searchers (Ford)

Films as Special Effects Artist:

1929 The Mysterious Island (Hubbard)
1937 History Is Made at Night (Borzage); Dead End (Wyler); The Hurricane (Ford)
1938 The Adventures of Marco Polo (Mayo); Blockade (Dieterle)

During Hollywood’s Golden Age, James Basevi was one of the most successful and innovative set designers and special effects men working for the major studios. He made films with many of the greatest directors of his time including William Wyler, William Wellman, John Ford, and Elia Kazan. Both in collaboration with other leading designers and on his own, Basevi created some of the most memorable visual images in American film history.

Within a short time after his arrival in Hollywood around 1924, Basevi was an assistant to the highly influential Cedric Gibbons, working on silent classics such as The Big Parade. Among numerous consultancies and collaborations, Basevi’s work with Richard Day is particularly notable. Their films together include Bardelys the Magnificent, The Hurricane, and Captain from Castile.

During the 1930s Basevi proved to be one of the greatest masters of special effects. In 1935, as head of MGM’s special effects department, he collaborated with Arnold Gillespie on the lengthy and memorable earthquake sequence in San Francisco. This was, at that time, the most ambitious and technically exacting recreation of a natural catastrophe ever attempted; and even with the passage of many years, it remains extremely convincing. For John Ford’s The Hurricane, a 1937 vehicle for Dorothy Lamour, Basevi devised a 600-foot miniature set representing a tropical island village which was to be deluged by a gigantic tidal wave. The wave effect was produced by releasing many thousands of gallons of water onto the model in a controlled manner through tall, specially designed and constructed channels. The result is one of the most believable storms ever filmed using studio miniatures.

As art director at Twentieth Century-Fox Studios from 1939 to 1944, later as head of the art department at Vanguard Films, and in subsequent freelance work, Basevi demonstrated a special skill in creating highly atmospheric images of the Old West. His sets for John Ford’s My Darling Clementine and She Wore a Yellow Ribbon display the visual conventions of the Western genre at their most refined and persuasive.

—Gregory Votolato

BASS, Ronald

Nationality: American. Born: Ronald Jay Bass in Los Angeles, 1943. Education: Became a voracious reader while bedridden as a child; attended Stanford University, where he studied political science; awarded a Woodrow Wilson fellowship to Yale University, where he continued his studies; graduated from Harvard Law School.

Family: Married Gail Weinstein (divorced); married Christine Steimann; two daughters, Jennifer and Sasha. Career: Began working in the motion picture industry as an entertainment lawyer, 1967; re-worked Voleur, a novel he had written while a teen-ager, which was published as The Perfect Thief, 1978; wrote two additional novels, Lime’s Crisis, 1982, and The Emerald Illusion, 1984; abandoned his law practice to write full-time, 1984; authored his first produced screenplay, Code Name: Emerald, based on The Emerald Illusion, 1985; worked as executive producer on two network TV series, Maloney and Dangerous Minds, 1996, signed an exclusive three-year writing and producing deal with Sony Pictures Entertainment, 1998; was one of 30 screenwriters to sign a pact with Sony Pictures Entertainment that will enable them to earn at least two per cent of a film’s gross receipts, plus upfront fees, 1999. Awards: Best Original Screenplay Academy Award (shared with Barry Morrow), for Rain Man, 1988; ShoWest Convention Screenwriter of the Year, 1998. Address: c/o Beth Swafford, Creative Artists Agency, 9830 Wilshire Blvd., Beverly Hills, CA 90212, USA.

Films as Writer: (sometimes credited as Ron Bass)

1985 Code Name Emerald (Emerald) (Sanger) (based on his novel)
1986 Black Widow (Rafelson)
1987 Gardens of Stone (Coppola)
1988 Rain Man (Levinson) (co-sc)
1991 Sleeping With the Enemy (Ruben)
1993 The Joy Luck Club (Wang) (co-sc, + co-pr)
1994 When a Man Loves a Woman (Mandoki) (co-sc, + co-exec pr, ro as AA Man #1); The Enemy Within (Darby—for TV) (co-sc); Reunion (Grant—for TV) (co-sc)
1995 Waiting to Exhale (Whitaker) (+ co-exec pr); Dangerous Minds (Smith)
1997 My Best Friend’s Wedding (Hogan) (+ co-pr)
1998 How Stella Got Her Groove Back (Sullivan) (co-sc, + co-exec pr); What Dreams May Come (Ward) (+ co-exec pr); Stepmom (Columbus) (co-sc, + co-exec pr)

1999 New Kid on the Block (Hogan); Border Line (Kwapis—for TV) (co-sc, + story); Invisible Child (Silver—for TV) (co-sc); Swing Vote (Anspaugh—for TV) (co-sc); Entrapment (Amiel) (co-sc, + co-story, co-exec pr); Snow Falling on Cedars (Hicks) (co-sc, + co-pr)

2000 Passion of Mind (Berliner) (co-sc) (+ co-pr)

2001 The Shipping News

Publications

By BASS: books—

By BASS: articles—

On BASS: books—

On BASS: articles—

* * *

In 1988, Ron Bass had only a trio of produced screenplays to his credit. That year, he won an Academy Award for co-writing Rain Man, which remains among the most fondly recalled films of its era. Since then, he has been one of Hollywood’s most prolific and in-demand screenwriters, establishing himself as a reliable scripter whose films generally are inspirational in content as they spotlight human needs, desires, and relations. Furthermore, in an industry in which the screenwriter often is undervalued, if not the object of outright scorn, Bass’s savvy business sense, combined with his professional roots as an entertainment lawyer, have allowed him to cannily market himself as a high-profile—and highly-paid—scenarist.
Bass occasionally will be associated with a popcorn action movie. One such title is Code Name: Emerald, his first screen credit, a by-the-numbers espionage yarn based on one of his novels. Another is Entrapment, a tired older man-younger woman romantic thriller featuring Sean Connery and Catherine Zeta-Jones. However, the majority of his scripts tell humanistic stories and feature characters who are struggling to find happiness and inner peace within themselves and in their relationships with others.

Many of his scripts feature strong female characters; even Entrapment pits an insurance investigator who is as tough as she is attractive against a sly veteran thief. Bass’s screenplays have examined the plights of, and delineated issues related to, minority women: The Joy Luck Club (based on the novel by Amy Tan); and Waiting to Exhale and How Stella Got Her Groove Back (both adaptations of books by Terry McMillan). They have explored the complexities of relations between the races: Dangerous Minds, about a “white bread” teacher/ex-marine who struggles to inspire her African-American and Hispanic charges; and Snow Falling on Cedars, in which a Japanese-American fisherman is accused of murder and a white reporter covering the case finds that the man’s Japanese-American wife was his own boyhood love. Some are inter-generational sagas: Gardens of Stone, spotlighting a veteran soldier who believes the war in Vietnam is a folly and a young, raw, anxious-for-combat recruit. They have examined the intricacies of friendship: My Best Friend’s Wedding, in which a woman is jarred when the man who has been her best pal becomes engaged to another. Or, they have charted the complexities of inter-familial relationships and crises, focusing on characters who patronize, disregard, or despise each other but come to understandings: When a Man Loves a Woman (about an alcoholic wife-mother and her mildly condescending husband); Stepmom (in which a cancer-stricken ex-wife-mother first opposes but then unites with her former husband’s girlfriend); and, of course, Rain Man (in which a self-absorbed young man establishes a bond with his autistic older brother).

Bass’s most fanciful screenplays explore other-worldly existences, alternative realities that are the outgrowths of an individual’s dreams, or an individual’s death. What Dreams May Come depicts a concrete, fully-visualized afterlife for its main character, who dies, ends up in heaven, and then must venture from paradise to save his wife/soulmate, who has committed suicide and gone to hell. In Passion of Mind, a woman concocts a make-believe reality in her dreams, and then must ascertain which of her lives is authentic and which is illusion. Both of these films explore their main characters’ deep-seated longings, fears, and fantasies—and, by extension, those of the viewer.

Quite a few of Bass’s scripts are adaptations of novels. He has transformed books by such diverse writers as Tan, McMillan, Nicholas Proffitt (Gardens of Stone), Nancy Price (Sleeping With the Enemy), Charles W. Bailey II and Fletcher Knebel (Seven Days in May, the source material for the TV movie The Enemy Within), LouAnne Johnson (My Posse Don’t Do Homework, the source material for Dangerous Minds), Richard Matheson (What Dreams May Come), and David Guterson (Snow Falling on Cedars). With regard to how he goes about adapting a novel into a screenplay, Bass once observed, “My basic view of film is that, literature is about what happens within people, while film is more about what happens between people. So the basic tool for me is the two-shot, a scene between two people interacting in a way that illuminates for them and for us who they are, what they want, and where they’re going.”

At a point in time in which a majority of Hollywood movies seem to be about special effects or teens intent on losing their virginity, Bass’s films spotlight character development and explore human emotions. His strength is in writing dramatic scenes, in which characters reveal their innermost feelings or connect with others—and he has come to be depended upon for his ability to fashion such sequences. The original draft of Stepmom, an autobiographical effort penned by Gigi Levangie, was a blend of comedy and drama. It was deemed unacceptable by the potential stars, Susan Sarandon and Julia Roberts. Bass eventually was hired to rework the script, to excise the comic aspects and highlight the dramatic ones—resulting in Sarandon’s and Roberts’s agreeing to sign onto the project.

Conversely, to some, Bass’s screenplays are unabashedly sentimental, not to mention formulaic. They wallow in touchy-feely emotion and, in the grand Hollywood tradition, they have manufactured happy endings. The production notes of his films may refer to him as “one of the film industry’s preeminent screenwriter(s)” and add that his films “have earned well over $1 billion in box-office revenues worldwide.” However, one critic has even gone so far as to label him a “powerful industry hack.”

Bass started out in the business as an entertainment lawyer—an industry type whom his creative counterpart might disdainfully label a “suit”—and so it is no surprise that most of his films, for better or worse, are strictly and safely mainstream. For example, during the 1990s, dozens of independent features offered in-depth explorations of the romantic lives and lifestyles of gays and lesbians. In Hollywood movies, homosexuals finally have a non-disapproving presence, but only as poignantly tragic figures (in Philadelphia), comic figures (The Birdcage), and, most notoriously, as sexually neutered buddies (As Good as It Gets and Bass’s My Best Friend’s Wedding, in which the heroine and her gay sidekick set out to torpedo her pal’s nuptials). So Bass’s screenplays usually are tame, and rarely are cutting-edge. And he fully understands and accepts his role within the filmmaking process. He has noted that “you judge a writer’s work by what the final film looks like, but there are a lot of other people whose decisions (come into how a) film is going to be presented, and ultimately of course the author of every film is the director. He’s the guy that makes the final decisions.”

With this in mind, Bass has endured the everyday indignities of the screenwriter. Many of his scripts have been rejected and gone unreproduced, or have been altered by others; Elaine May, for one, was hired to make revisions on Dangerous Minds. Yet he is not underpaid, underappreciated ink-stained wretch. Given his background as an entertainment lawyer, Bass fully understands the sources of power in the motion picture industry. And so he has astutely established himself as a mini-writing factory, penning several screenplays at once and charging $2-million per script. Assisting him are six writer-researchers, who are known as his Team—and who a number of his friends have dubbed The Ronettes.

Since The Joy Luck Club in 1993, he also has received a producer credit on many of the films he has scripted. In the late 1990s, he agreed to an exclusive three-year writing and producing deal with Sony Pictures Entertainment. Then he was among a group of 30 screenwriters who signed a landmark, controversial pact with Sony that will result in their earning at least two per cent of a movie’s gross receipts, in addition to upfront fees. The deal was negotiated without input from either the Writers Guild of America or the scenarists' managers and agents.

—Rob Edelman

BASS, Saul

Title Designer and Director. Nationality: American. Born: New York City, 8 May 1920. Education: Studied under Howard Trafton, Art Students League, New York, 1936–39; under Gyorgy Kepes, Brooklyn College, 1944–45. Family: Married Elaine Makatura, 1961, one daughter and one son. Career: 1936–46—freelance designer, New York; 1946—founded Saul Bass and Associates, Los Angeles (became Saul Bass/Herb Yager and Associates, 1978); 1954—first film as title designer, Carmen Jones; 1962—first film as director, Apples and Oranges; also designed trailers, film posters, commercials, title credits for television, package design, and corporation logos. Awards: Academy Award, for short film Why Man Creates, 1968. Died: 25 April 1996.

Films as Title Designer:

- 1954 Carmen Jones (Preminger)
- 1955 The Big Knife (Aldrich); The Man with the Golden Arm (Preminger); The Racers (Such Men Are Dangerous) (Hathaway); The Seven Year Itch (Wilder); The Shrike (Ferrera)
- 1956 Attack! (Aldrich); Storm Center (Taradash)
- 1957 Saint Joan (Preminger); Edge of the City (A Man Is Ten Feet Tall) (Ritt); Around the World in Eighty Days (Anderson); Bonjour Tristesse (Preminger); The Pride and the Passion (Kramer); The Young Stranger (Frankenheimer)
- 1958 The Big Country (Wyler); Cowboy (Daves); Vertigo (Hitchcock)
- 1959 Anatomy of a Murder (Preminger); North by Northwest (Hitchcock)
- 1960 Ocean's Eleven (Milestone); Psycho (Hitchcock); The Facts of Life (Frank); Spartacus (Kubrick)
- 1961 Exodus (Preminger); West Side Story (Wise and Robbins); Something Wild (Garfin)
- 1962 Walk on the Wild Side (Dmytryk); Advice and Consent (Preminger)
- 1963 The Cardinal (Preminger); Nine Hours to Rama (Robson)
- 1964 The Victors (Foreman)
- 1965 In Harm’s Way (Preminger); Bunny Lake Is Missing (Preminger)
- 1966 Grand Prix (Frankenheimer); Not with My Wife, You Don’t (Panama); Seconds (Frankenheimer)
- 1971 Such Good Friends (Preminger)
- 1976 That’s Entertainment, Part II (Kelly—compilation)
- 1987 Broadcast News (J. Brooks)
- 1988 Big (P. Marshall)
- 1989 The War of the Roses (DeVito)
- 1990 GoodFellas (Scorsese)
- 1991 Cape Fear (Scorsese)
- 1992 Mr. Saturday Night (Crystal)
- 1993 The Age of Innocence (Scorsese)
- 1995 Casino (Scorsese)

Other Films:

- 1962 Apples and Oranges (pr, + d—short)
- 1964 From Here to There (pr, + d, co-sc—short); History of Adventure (d—short); Packaging Story (d—short); The Searching Eye (d, + co-sc—short)
- 1968 Why Man Creates (d, + co-sc—short)
- 1973 Phase IV (d)
- 1977 One Hundred Years of the Telephone (d—short)
- 1978 Notes on the Popular Arts (d—short)
- 1980 The Solar Film (d—short)
- 1983 The Quest (co-d)

Publications

By BASS: articles—

“Film Titles,” in Graphis, vol. 16, no. 89, 1960.
Cinema (Beverly Hills, California), Fall 1968.

On BASS: book—

On BASS: articles—

Print (New York), May/June 1958.
Foster, Frederick, in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), June 1962.
Skoop (Amsterdam), March 1968.
Bianco e Nero (Rome), September/October 1968.
Jacobs, Lewis, in The Emergence of Film Art, 1969.
If any one person can be credited with having introduced the idea of ‘‘high concept’’—the single striking image or pithy phrase that immediately sums up a creative work—to the movie industry, it would have to be Saul Bass. Not that the term existed when Bass, then known as one of America’s brightest graphic designers, was called in to create the poster and title design for Otto Preminger’s Carmen Jones. Bass preferred to talk in terms of Single Appropriate Image, in contrast to the then prevalent style of selling films, which he drily summed up as ‘‘the See! See! See! approach. See the missionaries boiled in oil, see the volcano destroy the island, see the virgins of the temple! The theory was that if you talked about a film in pieces, there would be something for everyone.’’ Instead of crassly duplicating the function of the trailer, Bass saw his task as ‘‘finding a metaphor for the film, rather than an actuality from it.’’

The single image he created for Carmen Jones was a rose, in flames; taken with the title, that said it all. His design for Preminger’s... next film, The Man with the Golden Arm, was yet more audacious: the jagged diagram of an arm groping downward, contorted with agony. Like so many of Bass’s concepts, it relied on the simplest and most effective style of design, a silhouette. Initially Preminger wanted a static image for the title sequence, but after “some towering discussions” Bass won his battle to animate the arm, making it jerk in torment to the rhythm of Elmer Bernstein’s doomy, small-hours jazz score. Not for the last time, Bass’s title sequence packed a more formidable punch than the movie that followed it. The prowling black alley cat that prefaced Walk on the Wild Side was so patently the best thing in the film that, once word got around, people would come to see the credit sequence, then get up and leave once the film started.

Knowing that nothing is more universally recognizable than stylized images of the human face or body, Bass drew on this primal source for some of his most memorable designs. The paper cut-out doll, suggesting at once childish innocence and the lethal sharpness of a blade, introduced the kidnap drama of Bunny Lake Is Missing. For Exodus, clenched fists grasping at a rifle: anger, desperation, revolt, revenge, all in one charged outline. A voluptuous pair of bare female thighs (in a style borrowed from Matisse) heralded the sophisticated sex comedy Such Good Friends. Bonjour Tristesse was evoked by a made-up face (a nod here to Picasso) decorated with a single fat tear.

Most famous of all was the sectioned human body that suggested both a chaukned forensic outline on the ground, and the title of the film: Anatomy of a Murder. So potent was the concept that it has been widely plagiarized ever since.

All these organic images were for Preminger films. For Hitchcock and Wilder, two film-makers with a cooler, more analytical eye, Bass paid homage to the great montage-maker Slavko Vorkapich with a montage that whisked through the major events of Spartacus. His own foray into feature directing, the compilation film That’s Entertainment, Part II, proved competent but strangely anonymous, as if Bass’s creative urge needed the compression and concentration of the brief span to function at full throttle.

Bass’s title designs defined a whole era of American filmmaking, and were hugely influential. Among his followers was Maurice Binder, who designed the “walking gun” titles for the Bond films.

For a time, perhaps inevitably for the creator of such a specific look, Bass fell out of fashion and concentrated on his industrial design work. Between 1971 and 1987 he designed credits for only a single feature, the compilation film That’s Entertainment, Part II. But in the last decade of his life he was back in demand, eagerly embracing new technologies to create intricate title designs for four of Scorsese’s films. Beautiful, complex, and hypnotic, this late work lacks something of the stark immediacy of his classic period. But Bass’s status as the first and so far the only auteur of title design seems, for the moment, safe from challenge.

—Philip Kemp

BEATON, (Sir) Cecil

Films as Costume Designer:

- 1941 Kipps (The Remarkable Mr. Kipps) (Reed); Major Barbara (Pascal); Dangerous Moonlight (Suicide Squadron) (Hurst)
- 1946 Beware of Pity (Elvey)
- 1947 Anna Karenina (Duvivier)
- 1948 An Ideal Husband (Korda)
- 1957 The Truth about Women (Box)
- 1959 The Doctor’s Dilemma (Asquith)
- 1970 On a Clear Day You Can See Forever (Minnelli) (co)
Cecil Beaton

Other Films:
1942  The Young Mr. Pitt (Reed) (costume design + art dir)
1958  Gigi (Minnelli) (costume + pr design)
1965  My Fair Lady (Cukor) (costume + pr design)

Publications

By BEATON: books—

Time Exposure, text by Peter Quennell, London, 1941.
History under Fire, text by James Pope-Hennessy, London, 1941

(Editor) British Photographers, London, 1944.
Cecil Beaton is best known as a photographer, whose major work included fashion images for Vogue and Harper’s Bazaar, images of the Second World War for the British government, and portraits of prominent figures from society, the performing arts, and the movies. In terms of motion pictures, Beaton will be remembered for his designs for Gigi and My Fair Lady.

His designs for these films can be described as elegant and swanky. In both there is a high degree of realistic detail and attention to historical accuracy in furnishings and costumes. Nevertheless there are striking and unusual aspects within a mostly realistic design framework. My Fair Lady’s Ascot sequence, for example, is costumed entirely in black and white, but with such variety that there is no sense of dullness caused by the lack of color. Many of the costumes have organic or geometric shapes and surreal designs that recall those found in the paintings of Miro, Dali, or Picasso (all of whom had been subjects for Beaton’s camera).

Beaton’s experiences with fashion photography and his fascination with Hollywood’s make-believe world during the early 1930s made him well-suited for designing films that emphasized dramatic and lavish costuming. His first trip to the United States in 1929 brought him to the attention of Condé Nast, for whom he worked in the following decade, making periodic trips to this country from England. In 1931 and the years following he photographed such stars as Gary Cooper, Orson Welles, Buster Keaton, Carole Lombard, Tallulah Bankhead, Marlene Dietrich, and John Wayne, often using frames of sets or other structural elements as dramatic contrasts to the figures. He continued to photograph stars throughout his life, and had a complex, but intense professional relationship with Greta Garbo from 1944 to 1955.

Beaton had experience as a theatre designer in London and New York in the 1940s and 1950s; his My Fair Lady film sets are expansions of the theatre designs. His experience with stage design and with the world of fashion gave him a sensibility to fabrics and to the human figure, and this, combined with his understanding of photography, a medium requiring the ability to perceive the world two-dimensionally, made him successful as a screen designer. His output on that medium was small, but well represents a particular approach to film design—lavish appearances made memorable by the use of unusual and effective details.

—Floyd W. Martin

BENNETT, Sir Richard Rodney

Richard Rodney Bennett

Films as Composer:

1957 Pickup Alley (Interpol) (Gilling)
1958 Face in the Night (Menace in the Night) (Comfort); The Man Inside (Gilling); The Safecracker (Milland); Indiscreet (Donen)
1959 Blind Date (Change Meeting) (Losey); The Angry Hills (as Richard Bennett) (Aldrich); The Devil’s Disciple (Hamlin); The Man Who Could Cheat Death (Fisher)
1961 The Mark (Green)
1962 The Wrong Arm Of The Law (Owen); Satan Never Sleeps (The Devil Never Sleeps; Flight from Terror) (McCarey); Only Two Can Play (Gillian)
1963 Billy Liar (Schlesinger); Doctor Who (TV series) (C. Carry/M. Barry); Heavens Above
1965 One Way Pendulum (Yates); The Nanny (Holt)
1966 The Witches (The Devil’s Own) (Friedkin)
1967 Far from the Madding Crowd (Schlesinger) Billion Dollar Brain (Russell)
1968 Secret Ceremony (Losey)
1969 Figures in a Landscape (Losey); The Buttercup Chain (Ellis Miller)
1971 Nicholas and Alexandria (Schaffner)
1972 Lady Caroline Lamb (Bolt)
1973 Voices (Nightmare) (Billington)
1974 Murder on the Orient Express (Lumet)
1975 Permission to Kill (Frankel)
1976 Sherlock Holmes in New York (TV) (Sagal)
1977 Equus (Lumet)
1978 The Brink’s Job (Big Stickup at Brink’s) (Friedkin)
1979 Yanks (Schlesinger)
1980 The Return of the Soldier (Bridges)
1981 The Ebony Tower (TV) (Knights)
1985 Tender Is the Night (TV mini-series) (Knights)
1987 Strange Interlude (TV) (Wise)
1988 The Attic: The Hiding of Anne Frank (TV) (Erman)
1992 Enchanted April (Newell)
1994 Four Weddings and a Funeral (Newell)
1996 Swann (Gyles)
1998 The Tale of Sweeney Todd (TV) (Schlesinger)
2000 Gorbenhurst (TV)

Publications

By BENNETT: articles—

On BENNETT: books—

* * *

Composing for film and television has been only one aspect of the prolific musical career of the British composer/pianist Richard Rodney Bennett. Aside from his film scores Bennett has worked equally prodigiously in concert music and opera, and has maintained a successful ‘‘secondary’’ career performing vintage popular music. In addition, Bennett was once a devotee of the new Vienna serialist school of Schoenberg and his disciples, and in the 1960s was a key member of an emerging school of new British concert composers which included Peter Maxwell-Davies, Elizabeth Lutyens, and Thea Musgrave.

Bennett, however, began his professional musical career as a jazz pianist. At age 19, Bennett broke into film music when Howard Ferguson, one of Bennett’s professors at the Royal Academy, introduced him to conductor John Hollingsworth in 1955 and he began scoring British short films. Feature scores followed soon (including his first, Interpol in 1957, and Hammer’s The Man Who Could Cheat Death in 1959), these leading to a 1963 score for John Schlesinger’s Billy LIar, a key film in the British cinema renaissance which evolved from the emerging international popularity of foreign (or ‘‘art’’) films in the post-studio era 1950s.

It was Bennett’s association with Schlesinger which led to his first international cinematic success, a lush symphonic score for Far from the Madding Crowd, released by MGM in 1967. Here Bennett’s atmospheric lyricism aptly captured the pantheism of Thomas Hardy’s mythic Wessex countryside through the use of traditional British folk themes fused with his own folk-like motifs. The score was also a landmark of symphonic orchestral scoring for an era in which film music had become increasingly dominated by rock/pop effects. Bennett’s extended cue for the scene in which Sergeant Troy seduces Bathsheba with a virtuoso display of swordplay is one of the most striking fusions of music, image, and drama in late 20th-century film music. While the Hardy film itself was a commercial disappointment, Bennett’s score became a contemporary classic, and Schlesinger would go on to direct one of the most popular American films of the 1970s, Midnight Cowboy in 1969.

That same year Bennett scored Billion Dollar Brain for another British director soon to create a major splash on the international film scene: Ken Russell. Brain was a manifestation of the James Bond/secret agent craze launched in the early 1960s, and was the third in a series based on Len Deighton’s ‘‘Harry Palmer’’ novels. It chronicles the fantastic efforts of a mad American general to invade communist Russia, and Russell’s stylish production makes several visual references to Eisenstein. Likewise, Bennett’s sleekly contemporaneous music pays homage to Prokoviev, Shostakovich and other 20th-century Russian composers. Orchestralized solely for multiple pianos, brass, percussion, and an early electronic instrument, the Ondes Martenot, Bennett’s cohesive, yet sonically adventurous score includes a kind of aural Op Art-style Main Title (and a languorous love theme cleverly derived from it), and an extended cue for the film’s climactic sequence, a homage to Eisenstein’s ‘‘Battle On The Ice’’ sequence from Ivan the Terrible. These two contrasting but distinctive scores led to Bennett’s scoring more prestigious productions on the international film scene of the 1970s. He created another big symphonic score evoking both the lyricism and brooding melancholy of Tchaikowsky for Franklin Schaffner’s epic of the last days of the Romanov dynasty, Nicholas and Alexandra in 1971. This was followed by darkly rhapsodic music for Lady Caroline Lamb, Robert Bolt’s 1972 film about the scandalous affair between Lord Byron and the wife of a prominent British aristocrat. (The Lady Caroline score was also developed and recorded as a concert piece for viola and orchestra). Sidney Lumet’s 1974 Murder On The Orient Express, based on one of Agatha Christie’s Hercule Poirot mysteries, provided a change of pace with a pastiche score which indulged Bennett’s interest in period popular music, while still providing the opportunity for a number of orchestral cues in the mode of Ravel and the French impressionists.

While scoring these major international productions Bennett remained active in the more intimate realm of native British cinema. He scored several small films for American expatriate director, Joseph Losey, including Secret Ceremony in 1968, and Figures In A Landscape in 1970. For the former (a notoriously ambiguous and rather Pinteresque exercise with Elizabeth Taylor and Mia Farrow) Bennett created a delicately minimalist, partially serialized score for a chamber ensemble which aptly captured the enigmatic quality of Losey’s strange film.

In 1977 Bennett produced another major score for Lumet’s depressingly literal adaptation of Peter Schaffer’s international stage success, Equus. Orchestralized solely for lower strings, Bennett’s music effectively played against Schaffer’s poetic, if overwrought script with a somberly melancholy yet compassionate lyricism. Bennett’s last major score for the 1970s was for another Schlesinger film, 1979’s Yanks, a modern romance about American soldiers stationed in Britain during World War II.

By the 1980s Bennett had veered away from big film scores to pursue his interest in popular music, particularly the classic songs of great American songwriters such as Porter, Warren, Gershwin, and Berlin, and to further pursue his career as a pianist, accompanist, and sometimes singer on the New York cabaret scene. The composer also scored a number of television productions during this period, among them a Tender Is The Night mini-series, Strange Interlude, and The Attic: The Hiding of Anne Frank. In 1992 a film which he had scored for British television, Enchanted April, was successfully released as a theatrical film in the United States. Along with his popular cabaret performances and solo recordings Bennett’s other recent work has been for the popular Four Weddings and A Funeral (1994). This followed by another all-string chamber style score for the poetic murder mystery Swann (Canadian film, 1996). In 1998 Bennett scored another John Schlesinger film, The Tale of Sweeney Todd, produced for British television, a score which Bennett himself considers one of his finest. His most recent score was for another British mini-series, Gorbenhurst.

Concerning his film work (about which the composer has become very selective) Sir Richard Rodney Bennett has commented: ‘‘I realized very early that I was never going to make by living by writing string quartets. But I wanted to write music and I didn’t want to have to do anything else.’’ Bennett has called his film work ‘‘a means to an end,’’ a way for him ‘‘to live as a composer,’’ but in the process has nonetheless created some of the most brilliant, varied, and original scores in the history of late-20th-century film. In a conversation on film music with American film composer Elmer Bernstein, Bennett also offered these comments: ‘‘on the other hand, you’ve got to be born to it. It is nor hack work as far as I’m concerned. I’ve never had any consistent theory about film music. I try to simply respond freshly to everything I see. Every picture I do to stimulate myself, and in order not to let myself do anything I’ve done before.”

—Ross Care

BERLIN, Irving

Films as Songwriter/Composer:

1927  The Jazz Singer (Crosland)
1928  The Awakening (Fleming)
1929  Cocoanuts (Santley) (+ original play); Coquette (Sam Taylor); Glorifying the American Girl (Webb); Lady of the Pavements (D. W. Griffith); Hallelujah (Vidor)
1930  Puttin’ on the Ritz (Schenk); Mammy (Curtiz) (+ original play); The Bad One (Fitzmaurice)
1931  Reaching for the Moon (Goulding) (+ story)
1934  Kid Millions (Goldwyn); Top Hat (Sandrich)
1936  Follow the Fleet (Sandrich)
1937  On the Avenue (Del Ruth): Way out West
1938  Carefree (Sandrich); Alexander’s Ragtime Band (King)
1939  Second Fiddle (Lanfield)
1942  Holiday Inn (Sandrich) (+ story); Louisiana Purchase (Cummings) (co)
1943  This is the Army (Curtiz) (+ story + ro)
1944  Christmas Holiday (Siodmak)
1946  Blue Skies (Heisler); The Jolson Story (Green)
1948  Easter Parade (Walters)
1950  Annie Get Your Gun (Sidney) (+ original play)
1953  Call Me Madam (Walter Lang): Run for the Hills
1954  White Christmas (Curtiz); There’s No Business Like Showbusiness (Walter Lang) (songs)
1957  Sayonara (Logan) (song)

Film as Writer of Original Story:

1926  Stop, Look and Listen

Publication:

On BERLIN: books—

On BERLIN: articles—

*  *  *

Irving Berlin’s career as a songwriter was so long that he out-lived some of the copyrights of his early works. Although he was hit-making as early as “Alexander’s Ragtime Band” in 1911, he was obviously barred from the cinema until 1927, when he got in at the earliest possible moment by providing “Blue Skies,” a tune featured in The Jazz Singer, the first musical movie. The burst of song and dance activity that naturally followed Al Jolson’s warbling found Berlin’s work featured in a clutch of late 1920s and early 1930s musicals, most notably the Marx Brothers’ Cocoanuts (“When My Dreams Come True”), the first song Berlin wrote expressly for a film, “Monkey Doodle-Doo,” “The Tale of a Shirt”) and the all-black Hallelujah (“Waiting at the End of the Road,” “Sweepee Shuffle”) in 1929, but also Glorifying the American Girl (”Blue Skies” again), Puttin’ on the Ritz (the first film titled after a Berlin tune), and The Jazz Singer follow-up Mammy (with a Technicolor sequence, and “Let Me Sing and I’m Happy”). However, once the first burst of screen musicals died down, Berlin had to wait until 1935 to be offered something worthwhile in the way of a credit.

Top Hat, the first of the great Astaire-Rogers musicals, features only one forgettable song—“The Piccolino,” which is unfortunately the climax of the picture—but otherwise boasts four soon-to-be-standard numbers, all mounted with the maximum of RKO elegance, “No Strings,” “Cheek to Cheek,” “Top Hat, White Tie and Tails” and “Isn’t This a Lovely Day to Be Caught in the Rain?” Here, Berlin’s deft but unfussy tunes and simple but perfect lyrics are at their best, expressing neither the lyrical nor musical sophistication of George Gershwin or Cole Porter—beside whom Berlin still looks like the Compleat Tin Pan Alley Professional—and yet never seeming cheap, obvious or cynical. Top Hat was followed by the underrated Follow the Fleet, which is a better all-round movie than Top Hat—with a more congenial navy-and-showbiz New York setting as opposed to the stuffily trivial London and continental high society of the earlier film—with an almost equally good score, led off by “Let’s Face the Music and Dance” but featuring also “I’m Puttin’ All My Eggs in One Basket,” “Let Yourself Go,” “We Saw the Sea” and “But Where Are You?”

Berlin would create hit-packed scores for Astaire movies again—for Carefree (“I Used to Be Color Blind”) and Holiday Inn (“White Christmas,” for which he won an Oscar)—as well as a few lesser talents (Second Fiddle, for Sonja Henie) but Top Hat and Follow the Fleet were the peak of his contribution purely to cinema, most of the other Berlin movies being adapted from stage successes (Louisiana Purchase, This Is the Army, Call Me Madam, Annie Get Your Gun or built around clusters of pre-existing songs (On the Avenue, Alexander’s Ragtime Band, Blue Skies, Easter Parade, White Christmas, There’s No Business Like Show Business).

While Porter, Gershwin, Richard Rodgers and Stephen Sondheim aspire to lift the musical comedy to a High Art level, Berlin was simply content to do the best possible work within the framework of a three-minute popular song, and demonstrated an astonishing versatility within those limits, turning to comedy (“Oh, How I Hate to Get Up in the Morning,” “Doin’ What Comes Nat’rally”), romance (“Cheek to Cheek,” “Always”), social comment (“Let’s Have Another Cup of Coffee, Let’s Have Another Piece of Pie”), patriotism (“God Bless America,” a song so ingrained in the national psyche it’s hard to remember someone sat down and wrote it, “Three Cheers for the Red, White and Blue”) holiday sentiment (“Easter Parade,” “White Christmas”), and show stopping razzamatazz (“When the Midnight Choo-Choo Leaves for Alabam,” “There’s No Business Like Show Business”). Almost always sunny and optimistic, the only variety of standard Berlin appeared never to master was the lovelorn torch song, which he either turned around into a renewal of hope (“Blue Skies”) or played for laughs (“You Can’t Get a Man with a Gun”). After the 1950s, his output declined, but his oeuvre probably includes more lasting songs than any other composer this century.

—Kim Newman

BERMAN, Pandro S.

Films as Producer:

1931 Way Back Home (Seiter); The Gay Diplomat (Boleslawsky)
1932 Symphony of Six Million (Melody of Life) (La Cava); Age of Consent (La Cava); The Half-Naked Truth (La Cava); What Price Hollywood? (Cukor); Men of Chance (Archainbaud)
1933 Ann Vickers (Cromwell); Morning Glory (L. Sherman); One Man’s Journey (Robertson); The Silver Cord (Cromwell)
1934 The Gay Divorcee (The Gay Divorce) (Sandrich); The Life of Vergie Winters (Santell); Age of Innocence (Moeller); Of Human Bondage (Cromwell); The Little Minister (Wallace); The Gridiron Flash (Tyrone); Wednesday’s Child (Robertson); The Fountain (Cromwell); Spitfire (Cromwell); Richest Child in the World (Seiter); Stingaree (Wellman); By Your Leave (Corrigan)
1935 Roberta (Seiter); Romance in Manhattan (Roberts); Alice Adams (Stevens); Laddie (Stevens); Top Hat (Sandrich)
Freckles (Killy and Hamilton); Sylvia Scarlett (Cukor); Break of Hearts (Moeller); I Dream Too Much (Cromwell); In Person (Seiter); Star of Midnight (Roberts)

1936
Follow the Fleet (Sandrich); Mary of Scotland (Ford); Winterset (Santell); Swing Time (Stevens); A Woman Rebels (Sandrich); That Girl from Paris (Jason); Muss ‘em Up (C. Vidor); The Big Game (Nicholls)

1937
Stage Door (La Cava); A Damsel in Distress (Stevens); Shall We Dance? (Sandrich); Quality Street (Stevens); Christopher Strong (Arzner); The Soldier and the Lady (Michael Strogoff) (Nicholls)

1938
Room Service (Seiter); Vivacious Lady (Stevens); Carefree (Sandrich); Having Wonderful Time (Santell); The Mad Miss Manton (Jason); Mother Carey’s Chickens (Lee)

1939
Gunga Din (Stevens); In Name Only (Cromwell); The Hunchback of Notre Dame (Dieterle); Love Affair (McCary); The Story of Vernon and Irene Castle (Potter) (co); The Flying Irishman (Jason); Boy Slaves (Wolfson)

1941
Ziegfeld Girl (Leonard); Love Crazy (Conway); Honky Tonk (Conway)

1942
Rio Rita (Simon); Somewhere I’ll Find You (Ruggles)

1943
Slightly Dangerous (Ruggles); Marriage Is a Private Affair (Leonard)

1944
Dragon Seed (Conway and Bucquet); The Seventh Cross (Zinnemann); National Velvet (Brown)

1945
The Picture of Dorian Gray (Lewin)

1946
Undercurrent (Minnelli)

1947
Sea of Grass (Kazan); If Winter Comes (Saville); Living in a Big Way (La Cava)

1948
The Three Musketeers (Sidney)

1949
Madame Bovary (Minnelli); The Bribe (Leonard); The Doctor and the Girl (Bernhardt)

1950
Father of the Bride (Minnelli)

1951
Father’s Little Dividend (Minnelli); Soldiers Three (Garnett); The Light Touch (R. Brooks)

1952
The Prisoner of Zenda (Thorpe); Ivanhoe (Thorpe); Lovely to Look At (LeRoy); Battle Circus (R. Brooks)

1953
The Knights of the Round Table (Thorpe); All the Brothers Were Valiant (Thorpe)

1954
The Long, Long Trailer (Minnelli)

1955
The Blackboard Jungle (R. Brooks); Quentin Durward (The Adventures of Quentin Durward) (Thorpe)
1956  Bhowani Junction (Cukor); Tea and Symphony (Minnelli); The Great American Pastime (Hoffman)
1957  Something of Value (R. Brooks); Jailhouse Rock (Thorpe)
1958  The Brothers Karamazov (R. Brooks); The Reluctant Debutante (Minnelli)
1960  All the Fine Young Cannibals (Anderson); Butterfield 8 (Daniel Mann); Key Witness (Karlson)
1962  Sweet Bird of Youth (R. Brooks)
1963  The Prize (Robson)
1964  Honeymoon Hotel (Levin)
1965  A Patch of Blue (Green)
1969  Justine (Cukor)
1970  Move (Rosenberg)

Films as Assistant Director:
1925  Midnight Molly (Ingraham); Smooth as Satin (R. Ince); Lady Robinood (R. Ince); Alias Mary Flynn (R. Ince)

Films as Editor:
1928  Beyond London (Terriss); Phantom of the Range (Dugan); Fangs of the Wild (Storm); Stocks and Blondes (Murphy); Taxi 13 (Neilan); The Texas Tornado (Clark)
1929  Trial Marriage (Kenton) (co)

Publications
On BERNARD: articles—

Film Daily (New York), 8 July 1953.
Cinématographe (Paris), May 1984.
Obituary in Classic Images (Muscatine), September 1996.

*  *  *

Pandro S. Berman was one of the great line producers in Hollywood history. Working for RKO in the 1930s he supervised the creation of such classic Fred Astaire-Ginger Rogers musicals as The Gay Divorcee, Top Hat, Follow the Fleet, and Swing Time. At MGM in the 1940s Berman produced such hits as National Velvet starring Elizabeth Taylor and Father of the Bride, again starring Taylor, this time with Spencer Tracy.

Berman’s career spanned three important eras in the history of the movies. The first was his apprenticeship in the 1920s. In those days one learned all aspects of the film industry at the feet of the masters at work; no one went to film school. It was on-the-job-training at its best. Indeed Berman never went to college; he went into the film business directly from high school. His father, a minor executive at powerful Universal Pictures, secured Pandro’s first job at a minor studio, Film Booking Office. Little did they know that before the end of the 1920s Film Booking Office would merge into one of the major studios and become part of RKO. Such luck is the foundation of many a great career.

Berman worked hard at his new job. He worked his way up to chief film editor, and then became an assistant to William LeBaron and David O. Selznick, two of the myriad of early production chiefs at RKO in the late 1920s and early 1930s. From this position of power he teamed Astaire with Rogers and helped remake the history of the Hollywood musical. He also assisted the careers of Katharine Hepburn and Cary Grant, plus director George Stevens.

But RKO was always on shaky grounds financially and thus any producer had to work twice as hard as one at the studio then at the top, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Thus it was not surprising that Berman was drawn to MGM in 1940 to work for Louis B. Mayer. Berman’s early MGM films will not be remembered as great classics, but nearly all made money. He built the career of a young Elizabeth Taylor from National Velvet to Father of the Bride to Ivanhoe to Cat on a Hot Tin Roof and Butterfield 8.

Berman’s output as a producer slowed considerably in the late 1950s and early 1960s. With the change of power at MGM in 1956 he became in effect an independent producer distributing through the studio. And Berman did well by MGM. When the studio was entering its darkest days in the 1960s, Berman produced many of its rare hits: consider that in 1964 The Prize starring Paul Newman and Edward G. Robinson finished 19th in Variety’s listing of top money-making films of the year. Two years later A Patch of Blue starring Sidney Poitier, Elizabeth Hartman, and Shelley Winters finished tenth. But MGM slid further and further downhill. Berman gracefully retired from the studio in 1967 after working there for more than 35 years. He switched to Fox for his two final productions (neither of which did well at the box office), Justine and Move.

Pandro S. Berman survived almost everyone from his generation of producers from the Golden Age of Hollywood, and thus gracefully retired in 1970. The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences honored this ultimate insider with the Irving Thalberg Award in 1976 for his consistent creation of profitable films.

—Douglas Gomery

BERNARD, James

Films as Composer:
1955  The Quatermass Experiment (The Creeping Unknown) (Guest)
1956  Pacific Destiny (Rilla); X—the Unknown (Norman); The Door in the Wall (Alvey)
1957  The Curse of Frankenstein (Fisher); Quatermass II (Enemy from Space) (Guest); Windom’s Way (Neame); Across the Pacific (Annakin)
1958  Dracula (Horror of Dracula) (Fisher); Nor the Moon by Night (Elephant Gun) (Annakin); The Immortal Land (Wright—doc)
1959  The Hound of the Baskervilles (Fisher); The Stranglers of Bombay (Fisher)
1960  The Terror of the Tongs (Bushell); A Place for Gold (Wright—doc)
1961  The Damned (These Are the Damned) (Losey)
1963  Kiss of the Vampire (Kiss of Evil) (Sharp)
1964  The Gorgon (Fisher)
1965  Dracula—Prince of Darkness (Fisher); She (Day); The Secret of Blood Island (Lawrence)
1966  The Plague of the Zombies (Gilling)
1967  Frankenstein Created Woman (Fisher); Torture Garden (Francis) (co)
1968  Dracula Has Risen from the Grave (Francis); The Devil Rides Out (The Devil's Bride) (Fisher)
1969  Frankenstein Must Be Destroyed (Fisher)
1970  The Horror of Frankenstein (Sangster); Taste the Blood of Dracula (Sasdy); The Scars of Dracula (Baker)
1973  Frankenstein and the Monster from Hell (Fisher)
1974  The Legend of the Seven Golden Vampires (The Seven Brothers Meet Dracula) (Baker)
1985  Murder Elite (Whatham)
1997  Flesh and Blood (Newsom)
1998  Universal Horror (for TV)

Film as Co-writer, with Paul Dehn:

1950  Seven Days to Noon (J. & R. Boulting)

Publications

By BERNARD: articles—

Soundtrack (Belgium), September 1992.
Soundtrack (Belgium), June 1996.

On BERNARD: articles—

Little Shoppe of Horrors (Waterloo, Iowa), February 1974.
Little Shoppe of Horrors (Waterloo, Iowa), April 1978.
Fistful of Soundtracks (London), May 1981.
Filmusic (Leeds), 1982.
Dark Terrors (Cornwall, England), 1993
Scarlet Street (Glen Rock), Spring 1995.
Bender, J., “‘The Devil Rides Out’: the Film Music of James Bernard” in Film Score Monthly (Los Angeles), September 1996.
Soundtrack (Belgium), September 1996.

* * *

James Bernard created the musical identity of Hammer Films, the great British “gothic” studio, which flourished at Hammer’s studios in Bray between 1958 and 1964. Bernard’s most conspicuous accomplishment in the area of film scoring is undoubtedly his musical “signature” for Dracula, directed by Terence Fisher, Hammer’s major house director. Bernard also wrote the scores for such “Hammer horrors” as The Quatermass Experiment, X—the Unknown, Quatermass II, and The Curse of Frankenstein. His major work for the company includes his haunting work on the 1959 The Hound of the Baskervilles, his score for Joseph Losey’s prescient The Damned, his gorgeous piano music for Kiss of the Vampire, and his sensuous main theme for She. But in addition to his work for Hammer, Bernard has a long career in classical music composition which helped him immeasurably as a composer of film scores.

Educated at Wellington College, Bernard met the eminent composer Benjamin Britten at age 17, when Britten was asked to judge a school music competition. Britten was impressed with young Bernard’s work, and urged him to continue composing. In 1947, after service in the Royal Air Force, Bernard entered the Royal College of Music, again on the advice of Benjamin Britten. He studied composition under Herbert Howells, and then labored as Britten’s assistant on his opera Billy Budd. Bernard said later that his work with Britten during this period refined his skill as an arranger and orchestrator.

In 1951, Bernard left Britten’s employ, seeking freelance work as a composer to create his own reputation. He found work at the BBC, and John Hollingsworth conducted a number of Bernard’s scores for the network. In 1954, Hammer hired Hollingsworth to work up a score for their forthcoming science-fiction film The Quatermass Experiment. Hollingsworth immediately asked Bernard to score the film, and it thus emerged as the first science-fiction/horror film from the studio that truly bore the stamp of all the major collaborators during Hammer’s peak period. The enormous commercial and critical success of this film assured Bernard’s reputation with the public, but it also effectively typed Bernard as primarily a composer of horror scores. This is unfortunate, since it led to his being only spottily employed since the time of Hammer’s demise as a production organization. No one can deny, however, that Bernard has a musical sensibility which seems most at home in the gothic genre, and the best Bernard scores are brooding melancholic visions of a temporal world shot through with peril and temptation.

Bernard admits to a real affinity for the character of Dracula, although he, along with everyone else connected with that series of films, feels that the later Dracula films trailed off in quality. Bernard orchestrates all his own music, but leaves the conducting to others. His own favorite scores include The Devil Rides Out, the Dracula scores, and She. He writes all of his scores first on a piano, composing at his home in Chelsea, in a quiet room near the back of his house which is reserved for his work. He sees the film twice through altogether; then he likes to break the film down reel-by-reel, stopping during the projection to discuss cues with the film’s musical director. According to Bernard, he writes his scores (40 to 50 minutes in length) in roughly four weeks, which is all that most producers will allow him. He builds each score “round two or three main themes, and perhaps one or two subsidiary themes. I do not give a theme to every character in the film—it would become much too complicated. In horror films, I am always pleased when there is an opportunity for a love-theme (as in Taste the Blood of Dracula), or at any rate something romantic, as a contrast to the main horror theme.”

Some have accused Bernard of being too simplistic, repetitive, and insistent in his music, and one can see where this criticism is founded. Bernard’s theme for Dracula, for example, is a very simple three-note signature (Drac-u-la) which repeats itself in the score at least 50 times during the course of the film. Bernard piles on the brass sections for the “shock” moments in some of his films, and he often borrows from himself, or uses some of his trademark “developmental” devices, such as repeating a main theme over and over while moving up or down in registers.

81

Yet, along with Bernard Robinson’s settings, Jimmy Sangster’s scripts, Terence Fisher’s and Freddie Francis’s direction, and the iconic presences of actors Christopher Lee and Peter Cushing, James Bernard’s music is an integral part of the Hammer vision, both commercially and artistically. His scores may lack the subtlety of Elizabeth Lutyen’s work on such films as Freddie Francis’s Para-noiac or Terence Fisher’s The Earth Dies Screaming, but Bernard’s brooding romanticism is an energetic and engaging component of many of Hammer’s finest efforts.

—Wheeler Winston Dixon

BERNSTEIN, Elmer

Films as Composer:

1951 Saturday’s Hero (Idols in the Dust) (Miller); Boots Malone (Dieterle)
1952 Sudden Fear (Miller); Battles of Chief Pontiac (Feist)
1953 Never Wave at a WAC (The Private Wore Skirts) (McLeod); Robot Monster (Tucker); Miss Robin Crusoe (Frenke); Cat Women of the Moon (Hilton)
1954 Make Haste to Live (Seiter); Silent Raiders (Bartlett); Career: Medical Technologists (Churchill)—short
1955 The Eternal Sea (Auer); Storm View from Pompey’s Head (Secret Interlude) (Dunne); The Man with the Golden Arm (Preminger); House, after Five Years of Living (C. & R. Eames)—short
1956 The Ten Commandments (DeMille); Men in War (A. Mann); Fear Strikes Out (Mulligan); Eames Lounge Chair (C. & R. Eames)—short
1957 Drango (Bartlett and Bricken); The Naked Eye (Stoumen); Sweet Smell of Success (Mackendrick); The Tin Star (A. Mann); Toccata for Toy Trains (C. & R. Eames)—short; The Information Machine (C. & R. Eames)—short 1958 Desire under the Elms (Delbert Mann); God’s Little Acre (A. Mann); Kings Go Forth (Daves); The Buccaneer (Quinn); Anna Lucasta (Laven); Saddle the Wind (Parrish); Some Came Running (Minnelli)
1959 The Miracle (Rapper); The Story on Page One (Odets); Two Baroque Churches in Germany (C. & R. Eames)—short; Glimpses of the U.S.A. (C. & R. Eames)—short; Israel (Zebba)—short
1960 From the Terrace (Robson); The Magnificent Seven (J. Sturges); Introduction to Feedback (C. & R. Eames)—short
1961 By Love Possessed (J. Sturges); The Young Doctors (Karlon); The Comancheros (Curtiz); Summer and Smoke (Glenville); IBM Mathematics Peep Show (C. & R. Eames)—short
1962 The House of Silence (C. & R. Eames)—short; Hud (Ritt); Walk on the Wild Side (Dmytryk); A Girl Named Tamiko (J. Sturges); Birdman of Alcatraz (Frankenheimer); The Great Escape (J. Sturges); To Kill a Mockingbird (Mulligan); Rampage (Karlon)
1963 The Caretakers (Borderlines) (Bartlett); Kings of the Sun (Lee Thompson); The Carpetbaggers (Dmytryk); Love with the Proper Stranger (Mulligan)
1964 The World of Henry Orient (Hill); Think (C. & R. Eames—short); Four Days in November (Stuart); Baby the Rain Must Fall (Mulligan); Some Sort of Cage (Allyn and Baldwin—short)

1965 The Hallelujah Trail (J. Sturges); The Reward (Bourguignon); 7 Women (Ford); The Sons of Katie Elder (Hathaway); Cast a Giant Shadow (Shavelson); IBM at the Fair (C. & R. Eames—short); Westinghouse A.B.C. (C. & R. Eames—short); The Smithsonian Institution (C. & R. Eames—short); IBM Puppet Show (C. & R. Eames—short)

1966 The Silencers (Karlson); Hawaii (Hill); Return of the Seven (Kenedy)

1967 Thoroughly Modern Millie (Hill); The Scalphunters (Pollack); A Computer Glossary (C. & R. Eames—short)

1968 I Love You, Alice B. Toklas! (Averbach); Where’s Jack (Clavell); The Bridge at Remagen (Guillermi); Guns of the Magnificent Seven (Wendkos); Powers of Ten (C. & R. Eames—short)

1969 True Grit (Hathaway); The Gypsy Moths (Frankenheimer); The Midas Run (A Run on Gold) (Kjellin); A Walk in the Spring Rain (Green); Tops (C. & R. Eames—short); The Liberation of L. B. Jones (Wyler)

1970 Cannon for Cordoba (Wendkos); Doctors’ Wives (Schaeffer)

1971 Big Jake (G. Sherman); The Tell-Tale Heart (Carver—short); Blind Terror (See No Evil) (Fleischer); Light, Strong and Beautiful (Tardio—short); Owen Marshall, Counselor at Law (Kulik)

1972 The Magnificent Seven Ride! (McCowan); The Amazing Mr. Blunden (Jeffries); The Rookies (Taylor); Deadly Honeymoon (Silverstein)

1973 Cahill, United States Marshal (Cahill) (McLaglen); Incident on a Dark Street (Kulik)

1974 The Man from Independence (Smight); Men of the Dragon (Falk); McQ (J. Sturges); The Trial of Billy Jack (Laughlin); Gold (Hunt); Report to the Commissioner (Operation Undercover) (Kataselas)

1975 Ellery Queen (Many Suspects) (Greene)

1976 The Shootist (Siegel); The Incredible Sarah (Fleischer); Serpico: The Deadly Game (Collins)

1977 Billy Jack Goes to Washington (Laughlin); The 3,000 Mile Chase (Mayberry)

1978 National Lampoon’s Animal House (Landis); Bloodbrothers (Mulligan)

1979 Charleston (Arthur); The Great Santini (The Ace) (Carlino); Meatballs (Reitman); Zulu Dawn (Hickox)

1980 Airplane! (Abrahams and D. & J. Zucker); Moviola: This Year's Blonde (Ermann); Saturn 3 (Donen)

1981 Honky Tonk Freeway (Schlesinger) (co); Going Ape! (Kronsberg); Stripes (Reitman); An American Werewolf in London (Landis); Heavy Metal (Potterton—animation)

1982 The Chosen (Kagan); Five Days One Summer (Zimmennann); Airplane II: The Sequel (Finkleman)

1983 Trading Places (Landis); The Entity (Furie); Class (Carlino); Thriller (Landis) (co); Spacehunter: Adventures in the Forbidden Zone (Johnson)

1984 Bolero (Derek) (co); Ghostbusters (Reitman); Prince Jack (Lovitt)

1985 Spies Like Us (Landis); Marie Ward (Donaldson); The Black Cauldron (Berman and Rich—animation)

1986 Legal Eagles (Reitman); Three Amigos! (Landis)

1987 Amazing Grace and Chuck (Newell); Leonard, Part 6 (Welland)

1989 Da (Clark); Funny Farm (Hill); The Good Mother (Nimoy)

1990 Slipstream (Lisberger); My Left Foot (Sheridan)

1991 The Field (Sheridan); The Grifters (Ferres)

1992 A Rage in Harlem (Duke); Cape Fear (Scorsese); Rambling Rose (Coolidge); Oscar (Landis)

1993 The Age of Innocence (Scorsese); Lost in Yonkers (Coolidge); Mad Dog and Glory (McNaughton); The Good Son (Ruben); The Cemetery Club (Duke)

1994 Canadian Bacon (Moore)

1995 Devil in a Blue Dress (Dennme); Roommates (Yates); Frankie Starlight (Lindsay-Hogg)

1996 Bulletproof (Dickerson)

1997 Puppies for Sale (Krauss); Buddy (Thompson); Rough Riders (Milius—for TV) (theme only); Hoodlum (Duke); The Rainmaker (Coppola)

1998 Twilight (Benton)

1999 Chinese Coffee (Pacino); The Deep End of the Ocean (Grosbard); Introducing Dorothy Dandridge (Coolidge—for TV); Happy Face Murders (Trenchard-Smith—for TV); Bringing Out the Dead (Scorsese); Wild Wild West (Sonnensfeld)

2000 Keeping the Faith (Norton)

2001 Chinese Coffee

Other Films:

1960 The Rat Race (Mulligan) (mus, + bit ro)
1974 Mister Quisp (Tuchner) (mus d)
1975 From Noon till Three (Gilroy) (mus, + bit ro)
1977 Slap Shot (Hill) (mus supervision)
1992 Music for the Movies: Bernard Herrmann (Waletzky) (doc) (ro)
1998 Digging to China (Hutton) (score pr, orch)

Publications

By BERNSTEIN: articles—

Filme Cultura (Rio de Janeiro), May/June 1969.

Film Music Notebook (Calabasas, California), Fall 1974.

“The Annotated Friedkin,” in Film Music Notebook (Calabasas, California), Winter 1974.

Interview with Irwin Bazelton, in Film Music Notebook (Calabasas, California), Spring 1975.

Interview with Jerry Goldsmith, in Film Music Notebook (Calabasas, California), vol. 3, no. 2, 1977.
Interview with John Addison, in Film Music Notebook (Calabasas, California), vol. 3, no. 3, 1977.

“The Aesthetics of Film Scoring,” in Film Music Notebook (Calabasas, California), no. 1, 1978.

Interview with Henry Mancini, in Film Music Notebook (Calabasas, California), vol. 4, no. 1, 1978.

Interview with Bronisław Kaper, in Film Music Notebook (Calabasas, California), vol. 4, no. 2, 1978.

In Film Score, edited by Tony Thomas, South Brunswick, New Jersey, 1979.

Soundtrack! (Hollywood), June and September 1983.

Soundtrack! (Hollywood), March 1986.

Soundtrack (Belgium), March 1992.

On BERNSTEIN: articles—

Focus on Film (London), January/February 1970.

Dirigido por . . . (Barcelona), January 1974.

Scheff, Michael, in Film Music Notebook (Calabasas, California), Winter 1974–75.

Ecran (Paris), September 1975.

Séquences (Montreal), October 1980.

Soundtrack! (Hollywood), Summer 1981.

Soundtrack! (Hollywood), December 1981.

Score (Leystad, Netherlands), March 1982.

Walsh, J.S., “The Ten Most Influential Film Composers,” in Film Score Monthly (Los Angeles), January/February/March 1996.

Sight & Sound (London), May 1996.

* * *

In 1967, Elmer Bernstein won an Oscar for scoring Thoroughly Modern Millie, which is ironic because it is not typical of his work and is far less interesting than his other Oscar-nominated scores, among them The Man with the Golden Arm, The Magnificent Seven, Summer and Smoke, To Kill a Mockingbird, Hawaii, and The Age of Innocence. The first of these was marked by an arresting use of jazz colors and rhythms; the theme from The Magnificent Seven remains possibly the most recognizable of all Western movie themes; and the score for To Kill a Mockingbird is generally thought to be the most evocative for any film set in the Deep South.

Bernstein showed artistic aptitude as a child. He won a number of prizes for paintings but by the age of 12 it was apparent that his major talent was music. He studied piano with Henrietta Michelson of the Juilliard School of Music but she was so impressed with his ability to improvise that she took him to see Aaron Copland. He arranged lessons in composition with Israel Sitowitz, resulting in a scholarship that enabled Bernstein to study with Roger Sessions.

Completing his music education at New York University, Bernstein was still intent on a career as a concert pianist and began giving recitals in his late teens. At 21 he was inducted into the Army Air Corps and assigned duty as an arranger with the Armed Forces Radio Service. One of his first jobs was making arrangements for Glenn Miller’s newly formed Army Air Corps band. In time he was given assignments scoring radio documentaries and in the course of the next three years arranged and composed for about 80 of them. He returned to being a concert pianist after his military service but in 1949 he accepted an offer to score a radio program for the United Nations, which led to similar film offers, and finally one from Columbia Pictures.

Bernstein was brought to Hollywood in 1951 and given two films, Saturday’s Hero and Boots Malone. After a dozen modest films Bernstein drew comment with The Man with the Golden Arm, plus a goodly sale on the record album, and his success thereafter was assured. His music for DeMille’s The Ten Commandments proved his ability to handle the mightiest of screen fare, but it was with his scores for films of Americana, such as Desire under the Elms, God’s Little Acre, and Summer and Smoke, and such Westerns as The Magnificent Seven, The Scalphunters, True Grit, and The Shootist that Bernstein seemed truly at home. As the years passed, he has remained an active and vital force in the film industry, easily adapting himself to changing tastes. After working on National Lampoon’s Animal House in 1978, Bernstein went on to score a number of comedies starring Saturday Night Live alumni (including Meatballs, Stripes, Trading Places, Ghostbusters, and Spies Like Us). Meanwhile, he continued working on more serious films, winning acclaim for his evocative scores of My Left Foot, The Grifters, A River Runs through It, and Age of Innocence, and his adaptation of Bernard Herrmann’s original score of Cape Fear, commissioned for Martin Scorsese’s 1991 remake. In the late 1990s, approaching his eightieth birthday, Bernstein remained ever-active, composing the scores for films as varied as Francis Coppola’s The Rainmaker, Robert Benton’s Twilight, Barry Sonnenfeld’s Wild Wild West, and Scorsese’s Bringing Out the Dead. Active as a guest conductor with symphony orchestras and for a ten-year period the president of the Los Angeles Young Musicians Foundation, Bernstein has also been involved in film music preservation, starting his own record label, Film Music Collection, in 1974 and recording scores by the likes of Rozsa, Newman, Tiomkin, Steiner, and others. Few men have done more to maintain high standards in film scoring than Bernstein. “Music really is an art whose life begins where pictures and words leave off,” he has declared. “You receive it through an emotional medium. Music is basically an emotional fantasy. It is for this reason that I think it functions so ideally in film.”

—Tony Thomas, updated by Rob Edelman

BERNSTEIN, Walter

Writer. Nationality: American. Born: Brooklyn, 20 August 1919. Family: Married to the literary agent Gloria Loomis; several children from a previous marriage. Education: Graduated from Dartmouth College, 1940. Military Service: Drafted into the U.S. Army, 1941; served as a correspondent for the Army weekly Yank during World
Walter Bernstein

War II. Career: Secured first writing job reviewing films for the Daily Dartmouth, a student newspaper, circa 1938; wrote a musical comedy while stationed at Fort Benning, GA, 1941; wrote for New Yorker, Argosy, Life, Sports Illustrated, and Collier’s during the 1940s and 1950s; co-edited a newsletter, Facts About the Blacklist, during the 1950s. Awards: Writers Guild of America-East, Ian McLellan Hunter Memorial Award for Lifetime Achievement in Writing, 1994; Gotham Awards, Writer Award, 1996; Human Family Educational and Cultural Institute, Humanitas Prize, PBS/Cable Category, for Miss Evers’ Boys, 1997. Agent: Arlene Donovan, International Creative Management, 40 W. 57th St., New York, NY 10019, U.S.A.

Films as Writer:

1948  Kiss the Blood Off My Hands (Foster)
1959  That Kind of Woman (Lumet); The Wonderful Country (Parrish)  (uncredited)
1960  Heller in Pink Tights (Cukor); A Breath of Scandal (Curtiz)  (uncredited); The Magnificent Seven (Sturges) (uncredited)
1961  Paris Blues (Ritt)
1962  Something’s Got to Give (Cukor)
1964  Fail-Safe (Lumet)
1965  The Train (Frankenheimer) (uncredited)
1966  The Money Trap (Kennedy)
1970  The Molly Maguires (Ritt) (+ pr)
1976  The Front (Ritt)
1977  Semi-Tough (Ritchie)
1978  The Betsy (Petrie)
1979  An Almost Perfect Affair (Ritchie); Yanks (Schlesinger)  (uncredited)
1980  Little Miss Marker (+ d)
1985  The Legend of Billie Jean (Robbins)
1988  The House on Carroll Street (Yates)
1991  Women & Men 2: In Love There Are No Rules (for TV) (+ d)
1994  Doomsday Gun (Young—for TV)
1995  The Affair (Seed—for TV) (story only)
1997  Miss Evers’ Boys (Sargent—for TV)
1999  Durango (Shields—for TV)
2000  Fail Safe (Frears—for TV)

Other Films:

1950  Panic in the Streets (Kazan) (ro)
1976  Hollywood on Trial (Helpern) (doc) (ro)
1977  Annie Hall (Allen) (ro)
1985  The Last Days of Marilyn Monroe (Olgiati) (doc) (ro)

Publications

By BERNSTEIN: books—

Keep Your Head Down, New York, 1945.

By BERNSTEIN: articles—

*  *  *

If for no other reason, Walter Bernstein will be remembered for his sheer longevity as a film and television screenwriter. Incredibly, his screenplays have spanned a period from the 1940s to the 2000s and may well qualify him as the longest-working writer of produced films and television programs in history.

Bernstein began his screenwriting career in 1947, shortly after he had published a collection of World War II essays originally written for the New Yorker and the Army weekly Yank. The anthology, Keep Your Head Down, was so strong that it landed him a ten-week contract as a writer with Columbia Pictures. He moved to Hollywood and soon began working with Columbia’s Robert Rossen. Though he learned much about the craft of screenwriting from Rossen during that period, he did not actually write his first script until the ten-week stint was over. His agent, Harold Hecht, and actor Burt Lancaster had just formed an independent film company, Norma Productions, and Hecht hired Bernstein at $500 a week, doubling the writer’s Columbia salary. Paired with the more experienced writer Ben Maddow, Bernstein created the screenplay for his first film: Kiss the Blood Off...
My Hands, an adaptation of a British thriller novel and regarded by Bernstein as “an offbeat melodrama that borrowed (stole) heavily from Hitchcock.”

The tyro screenwriter had little time to savor his breakthrough accomplishment, however. He left Hollywood in December 1947—a mere six months after he had arrived and before Kiss the Blood Off My Hands had even opened—in the wake of the anti-Communist investigation of the movie industry launched by the House Committee on Un-American Activities (HUAC). Bernstein, who had joined the Communist Party a year after his Army discharge, could see the destructive effects of HUAC’s inquisition and returned to his native New York in the hope of writing film screenplays on the East Coast. Instead, he found steady work as a writer for the fledgling medium of television.

Bernstein’s early success as a TV writer could not shield him from the icy effects of the Cold War and the anti-Communist fervor of the time. He was blacklisted in 1950 and was unable to write television scripts under his own name until 1961, though several film directors did hire him openly as early as 1959. Routinely harassed by the FBI during the 1950s, Bernstein wrote many TV scripts under various pseudonyms (principally “Paul Bauman”) for some of early television’s most prestigious anthology programs, including You Are There, Playhouse 90, and Studio One. Working behind a “front” for producer David Susskind, Bernstein also adapted Thornton Wilder’s The Bridge of San Luis Rey and Mark Twain’s The Prince and the Pauper for television. His script for the latter production won a Christopher Award, which he was unable to collect because of the blacklist.

Following his return to Hollywood under his own name in 1959, Bernstein crafted screenplays for movies that ranged widely in their content; westerns, thrillers, comedies, and melodramas became his stock in trade, with the screenplays for Fail-Safe, The Train, The Molly Maguires, and Semi-Tough among his best. Unquestionably the most heartfelt of Bernstein’s screenplays were for those films that dealt with the blacklisting era: The Front, for which he received Oscar and Writers Guild of America (WGA) screenplay nominations; and The House on Carroll Street, a film that Bernstein unapologetically turned into a melodrama to deliver his views. “With melodrama you’re never going to go very deep,” he said. “What you can do is to state a social issue, draw the lines, and you can’t do a hell of a lot more than that. But that’s a lot. It’s not disgraceful. It’s a very American form—stories in the way people expect to hear them.”

Since the 1990s, Bernstein has written exclusively for television. His work there has included his much-admired screenplay for Miss Evers’ Boys and a rewrite of his Fail Safe script for a production performed live on network TV in April 2000. In a sense, his writing career had returned full circle with the new Fail Safe screenplay, since much of his early work had been for live television as well.

Despite the heavy demands of his writing career, Bernstein has found time to share his knowledge with up-and-coming filmmakers. He has been an Adjunct Professor of Film at Columbia University’s School of the Arts for years, taught at New York University, and also served as an advisor at the Sundance Institute’s Screenwriters Lab for several summers. He has also worked as a teacher of a different sort, reminding people of Hollywood’s dark days during the 1940s and 1950s. He was vociferous in his complaints, for example, when Elia Kazan, a Hollywood director who informed on his leftist colleagues during the blacklisting era, was soon to receive a Lifetime Achievement Oscar. As he told interviewer David Walsh in early 1999, “I don’t think they should give Kazan an award. It’s true, it’s been a long time [since Kazan testified before HUAC], but this was a man who damaged the industry that is now giving him the award. . . . He hurt a lot of people.”

Bernstein’s dedication to screenwriting may be found in a simple remark in his memoir, Inside Out: “I write movies; focus is all.” Judging from the breadth and depth of his work, the span of his career, and the passion of his beliefs, Bernstein must surely be among the most focused of writers ever to have their work appear on the large and small screens.

—Martin F. Norden

BIDDLE, Adrian

Films as Cinematographer:

1986 Aliens (Cameron)
1987 The Princess Bride (Reiner)
1988 The Dawn ing (Knights); Willow (Howard)
1990 The Tall Guy (Smith)
1991 Thelma and Louise (Scott)
1992 I492: The Conquest of Paradise (Scott)
1994 City Slickers II: The Legend of Curly’s Gold (Weiland)
1995 Judge Dredd (Cannon)
1996 101 Dalmatians (Herk
1997 St. Porcest (Young and Schepisi) (co-ph); The Butcher Boy (Jordan); Event Horizon (Anderson)
1998 Holy Man (Herk)
1999 The Mummy (Sommers); The World is Not Enough (Apted)
2000 102 Dalmations
2001 The Mummy Returns; The Weight of Water

Other Films:

1977 The Duellists (Scott) (camera focus)
1979 Alien (Scott) (co-camera focus)

Publications:

By BIDDLE: articles—

On BIDDLE: articles—

Whatever the advances in computer-generated imagery, there will always be a place in films for a top grade director of photography. Working alongside such big name directors as Ridley Scott, James Cameron, Rob Reiner and Neil Jordan, cameraman Adrian Biddle specialises in high profile mainstream projects that tend to aim for the elusive ‘‘thinking person’s blockbuster’’ category. Much of Biddle’s work to date has been in big budget fantasy-adventure cinema, whether high-tech science fiction, mythical sword and sorcery, or borderline fantastique such as the James Bond franchise. To his credit, Biddle’s undeniable lighting skill has never been swamped by the regular deluges of special effects in his movies, the two elements usually complementing rather than competing with each other.

Having served as a focus puller on Ridley Scott’s Alien, Biddle’s somewhat belated debut as lighting cameraman for the first sequel plunged him straight into the deep end of effects-heavy movie making. James Cameron’s visual style is as dynamic as his storytelling, and he had Biddle working with quantities of smoke, mist, steam, strobes, flashes, flames, and gunfire. What could have been tired sci-fi cliches—blue and red washes, metallic greys, clinical whites, ‘‘spooky’’ backlighting—are handled with great assurance. Demonstrating an aptitude for sharply defined images, Biddle also gives liquid substances a curiously visceral quality: the condensation on Ripley’s cryogenic pod, water splashing into a see-through cup, rain falling on the planet surface, sweat on Sigourney Weaver’s finely chiselled face, even the gross-out drool from the aliens’ mouths. Lurking in the shadows, the aliens are barely visible much of the time, light occasionally glinting off their exo-skeletal bodies. When the shooting starts, Biddle’s camera picks out every drop of acid blood spurting from the blasted creatures. He is equally assured during the quieter, more intimate moments, bathing a close-up scene between Ripley and orphan Newt in orange light, a moment of warmth in the overall darkness.

Ron Howard’s violent fairytale Willow demonstrates Biddle’s abilities outside the studio, the spectacular, if sombre British and New Zealand locations providing a realistic counterpart to the fantastical plot and CGI bonanza. While the Industrial Light and Magic company provide a wealth of trolls, pixies, shapeshifters, and two-headed behemoths, Biddle’s ‘‘natural’’ style of lighting emanates from more plausible points of origin: flickering torchlight, moonlight from a dungeon window, sunlight through trees. Forsaking the all-out sensory assault of Aliens, the film has more than its share of visual highlights: the forbidding grey stone of wicked Queen Bavmorda’s realm, the island prison with a mountain range backdrop, a silhouetted procession of soldiers through a snowy wasteland, the final rainswept battle in the castle grounds.

Reunited with Ridley Scott a decade on from Alien, Biddle made his mark away from the fantasy genre. Dispensing with the tech-noir visuals of Alien and Blade Runner, Thelma and Louise offers increasingly ironic tourist brochure views of the American southwest as the protagonists travel down Route 66, taking in John Ford favourite Monument Valley along the way (Biddle’s work netted him an Academy Award nomination). Few paying customers turned up to appreciate his photography for Scott’s flop commemorative epic 1492, which evokes both the dazzling spectacle and squalid brutality of the period.

The Mummy, an Indiana Jones-style reworking of the old horror favourite, is virtually a two-hour showcase for Industrial Light and Magic’s CGI division. Those transfixed by the procession of scuttling scarab beetles, walking cadavers, firestorms, locust swarms, and transmigrating souls might miss out on the film’s more subtle visual pleasures, such as burning torches flickering in the cavernous darkness of an Egyptian tomb. Working with largely orange-gold hues, Biddle provides some striking backdrops, notably the Sahara Desert and a ruined ‘‘lost city’’ built inside the crater of an inactive volcano. Sand and sky are rendered in sharp, bright tones, giving no hint of the dark, malevolent powers dormant beneath the ground. As with all of Biddle’s best work, these images convey a sense of tangibility, texture, and atmosphere that even ILM’s digital bag of tricks cannot equal.

—Daniel O’Brien

BIRO, Lajos

Films as Writer:

1927 The Way of All Flesh (Fleming)
1928 The Last Command (Von Sternberg); The Yellow Lily (A. Korda); The Night Watch (A. Korda); The Haunted House (Christensen); Adoration (Lloyd)
1930 Women Everywhere (A. Korda)
1931 The Ghost Train (Forde); Michael and Mary (Saville)
1932 Wedding Rehearsal (A. Korda); Service for Ladies (A. Korda); The Faithful Heart (Faithful Hearts) (Saville)
1933 The Private Life of Henry VIII (A. Korda); Strange Evidence (Milton)
1934 Catherine the Great (Czinner); The Private Life of Don Juan (A. Korda)
1935 The Scarlet Pimpernel (Young); Sanders of the River (Z. Korda): Rembrandt
1937 Under the Red Robe (Sjöström); Knight without Armor (Feyder); The Return of the Scarlet Pimpernel (Schwarz); Over the Moon (Freeland and Howard); Dark Journey (The Anxious Years) (Saville); Things to Come (Menzies) (co); The Man Who Could Work Miracles
1938 The Drum (Drums) (Z. Korda); The Divorce of Lady X (Whelan)
1939 The Four Feathers (Z. Korda); Hotel Imperial 1940 The Thief of Bagdad (Powell, Berger, and Whelan); The Way of All Flesh
1943 Five Graves to Cairo (Wilder)
1945 A Royal Scandal (Preminger)
A prolific and celebrated Hungarian writer of the old school, Lajos Biro was originally a journalist and drama critic who, based in Vienna, published some 30 volumes of romantic plays, novels, and short stories, much of this work translated into German and other languages. He left Hungary after the First World War and worked variously in Rome, Paris, and Berlin as well as Hollywood, where in 1924 he became primarily a successful screenwriter for silent film. His earlier credits included an acknowledgement for his play The Czarina as the basis for Ernst Lubitsch’s film Forbidden Paradise, while another of his plays, Hotel Imperial, was adapted three times for the screen, the last as Billy Wilder’s Five Graves to Cairo.

In the 1930s Biro became one of the highly creative team of Hungarian film writers, artists, and executives assembled in England by Alexander Korda for his newly established production company, London Films. He was to remain in close association with Korda until his death in 1948. He co-scripted Korda’s first British film, Service for Ladies; he acted as staff “dramaturge,” or script supervisor, not only on those films Korda himself directed, such as The Private Life of Henry VIII, Rembrandt, and An Ideal Husband, but those he produced, including Czinner’s Catherine the Great (another adaptation of The Czarina), Harold Young’s The Scarlet Pimpernel, Jacques Feyder’s Knight without Armour, Tim Whelan’s The Divorce of Lady X, and Zoltan Korda’s Sanders of the River, The Drum, The Four Feathers, and The Thief of Bagdad. No doubt Korda’s implicit trust in Biro began with their early association and collaboration in Hungary and subsequently in Hollywood. He also worked on H. G. Wells’s film The Man Who Could Work Miracles and (uncredited) Korda’s abortive production of I, Claudius, and at one stage acted as script adviser to Winston Churchill when Korda invited the future Prime Minister to prepare a script about his ancestor, the Duke of Marlborough.

—Roger Manvell

BIROC, Joseph

Films as Cinematographer:

1947 It's a Wonderful Life (Capra) (co); Magic Town (Wellman); A Miracle Can Happen (On Our Merry Way) (K. Vidor and Fenton) (co)
1948 My Dear Secretary (Martin)
1949 Roughshod (Robson); Mrs. Mike (L. King); Johnny Allegro (Hounded) (Tetzlaff)
1950 The Killer that Stalked New York (The Frightened City) (McEnvoy)
1951 Cry Danger (Parrish); All that I Have (Claxton)
1952 Without Warning (Laven); The Bushwackers (The Rebel) (Amateau); Red Planet Mars (Horner); Bwana Devil (Oboler); Loan Shark (Friedman)
1953 The Twonky (Oboler); Vice Squad (The Girl in Room 17) (Laven); Donovan’s Brain (Feist); The Glass Wall (Shane); The Tall Texan (Williams); Appointment in Honduras (J. Tourneur); Charade (Kellino) (co)
1955 Bengazi (Brahm); Ghost Town (Miner)
1956 Quincannon, Frontier Scout (Frontier Scout) (Selander); Nightmare (Shane); Attack! (Aldrich); The Black Whip (Warren); Tension at Table Rock (Warren)
1957 The Ride Back (Miner); The Garment Jungle (V. Sherman); China Gate (Fuller); Run of the Arrow (Fuller); The Unknown Terror (Warren); Forty Guns (Fuller); The Amazing Colossal Man (Gordon)
1958 Underwater Warrior (Marton); Home before Dark (LeRoy)
1959 Born Reckless (Koch); The FBI Story (LeRoy); Verboten! (Fuller); The Bat (Wilbur)
1960 Ice Palace (V. Sherman); Thirteen Ghosts (Castle)
1961 Gold of the Seven Saints (Douglas); Operation Eichmann (Springsteen); The Devil at Four O’Clock (Brecher); Sail a Crooked Ship (Brecher)
1962 Convicts Four (Repprie) (Kauffman); Hitler (Heisler); Confessions of an Opium Eater (Evils of Chinatown) (Zugsmith)
1963 Bye Bye Birdie (Sidney); Toys in the Attic (Hill); Under the Yum Yum Tree (Swift); Gunfight at Comanche Creek (MacDonald)
1964 Viva Las Vegas (Love in Las Vegas) (Sidney); Bullet for a Badman (Springsteen); Ride the Wild Surf (Taylor); Promises, Promises (Donovan); Kitten with a Whip (Heyes); Hush . . . Hush, Sweet Charlotte (Aldrich); The Young Lovers (Goldwyn) (co)
1965 I Saw What You Did (Castle); The Flight of the Phoenix (Aldrich)
1966 The Russians Are Coming, the Russians Are Coming (Jewison); The Swinger (Sidney); Warning Shot (Kulik); Who’s Mindin’ the Mint? (Morris)
1967 Enter Laughing (C. Reiner); Tony Rome (Douglas); Fitzwilly (Fitzwilly Strikes Back) (Delbert Mann)
1968 The Detective (Douglas); The Legend of Lylah Clare (Aldrich); Lady in Cement (Douglas); The Killing of Sister George (Aldrich)
1969 Whatever Happened to Aunt Alice? (Katzin); Too Late the Hero (Aldrich)
1970 Mrs. Pollifax—Spy (Martinson)
1971 Escape from the Planet of the Apes (Taylor); The Grissom Gang (Aldrich); The Organization (Medford); Brian’s Song (Kulik)
1972 Ulzana’s Raid (Aldrich); Gidget Gets Married (Swackhammer); Playmates (Flicker); The Crooked Hearts (Sandrich)
1973 Cahill, United States Marshal (Cahill) (McLaglen); Emperor of the North (Aldrich)
1974 Blazing Saddles (M. Brooks); The Longest Yard (The Mean Machine) (Aldrich); Shanks (Castle); The Towering Inferno (Guillermin) (co); Wonder Woman (McEveety); Honky Tonk (Taylor); Thursday’s Game (Moore) (produced 1971)
1975 Hustle (Aldrich)
1976 The Duchess and the Dirtwater Fox (Frank)
1977 The Choirboys (Aldrich); SST—Death Flight (SST: Disaster in the Sky) (Rich)
1978 A Family Upside Down (Rich); The Clone Master (Medford)
1980 Kenny Rogers as the Gambler (Lowry)
1981 . . . All the Marbles (The California Dolls) (Aldrich)
1982 Hammett (Wenders) (co); Airplane II: The Sequel (Finkleman); Desperate Lives (Lewis)
1984 The Jerk, Too (Schultz—for TV)
1985 Father of Hell Town (Medford—for TV); A Death in California (Mann—for TV)
1986 A Winner Never Quits (Damski—for TV); Outrage! (Grauman—for TV)

Other Films:

1934 Where Sinners Meet (The Dover Road) (Ruben) (asst cameraman); The Gay Divorcee (The Gay Divorce) (Sandrich) (asst cameraman)
1935 Laddie (Stevens) (cameraman); Break of Hearts (Moeller) (cameraman)
1940 Tom Brown’s Schooldays (Stevenson) (cameraman)
1963 Four for Texas (Aldrich) (2nd unit ph)

Publications

By BIROC: articles—

On BIROC: articles—

Patterson, R., on Hammett in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), November 1982.
Obituary, in Cinefantastique (Forest Park), vol. 28, no. 6, 1996.

* * *
Joseph Biroc’s cinematography has a no-nonsense competence that does not draw attention to itself. His images are always at the service of the story, never showy in or of themselves. It is easy to dismiss Biroc as a modest talent or (worse yet) to ignore him altogether; but a look at his filmography reveals a body of work of impressive skill, variety, vitality, and innovation.

Biroc learned the ropes as a cinematographer in the Army Signal Corps during World War II and did not begin working in Hollywood until his mid-forties. He received his first screen credit as co-photographer with Joseph Walker on Frank Capra’s It’s a Wonderful Life, and he applied Walker’s teachings to the Capra-esque (though directed by William Wellman) Magic Town. Biroc wasted no time in proving his uncommon versatility; he provided some admirably hard-boiled images for films noir Johnny Allegro and Cry Danger and proved equal to the challenges of 3-D in Bwana Devil (the first film made in the process), special effects on a dimestore budget in The Amazing Colossal Man, and CinemaScope in The Devil at Four O’Clock and Bye Bye Birdie.

Biroc’s long association with Robert Aldrich—beginning with Attack! and continuing until the director’s untimely death in 1982—gave the cinematographer some of his most challenging assignments. Aldrich’s work is strongly individualistic (eccentric, even) and Biroc was a trusted ally for translating that maverick vision into powerful and telling images. If the Aldrich films were all that survived of Biroc’s work his career would still strike one as unusually provocative. From the punchy, gritty images of Attack! to the lush color stylings in The Legend of Lylah Clare, the austere landscapes of the survival in the desert drama The Flight of the Phoenix, the berserk pyrotechnics of The Grissom Gang to the sad dignity of Ulzana’s Raid and the neon raunch of the world of female wrestling in... All the Marbles, Biroc and Aldrich worked together with a sympathy of purpose as productive as Griffith and Bitzer, Capra and Walker, and Bergman and Nykvist.

Other directors have not been as demanding of Biroc, and The Swinger; The Russians Are Coming, the Russians Are Coming; Who’s Minding the Mint?; and The Duchess and the Dirtwater Fox can count his professional sheen as one of their few attributes. Biroc’s name posed for Hindi films.

The music Anil Biswas has composed for films is a reflection of his active and eventful life. Born at a time when a wave of patriotism was sweeping the country, young Biswas became an active underground worker and a revolutionary. This patriotic militancy and stirring optimism came to be manifested in the music that he composed for Hindi films.

Biswas began composing film music in 1931, but the first film in which he was credited with composing the entire score is the 1935

---

BISWAS, Anil

Composer. Nationality: Indian. Born: Barisal, East Bengal (now Bangladesh), 1914. Career: 1930—moved to Calcutta: actor, singer, and assistant music director, Rangmahal Theatre, 1932–34; 1934—moved to Bombay; 1935—composed background music for Dharam Ki Devi; 1936–42—composer for Sagar Movietones; 1942—joined Bombay Talkies; 1957—worked on two films in the USSR; 1963–65—director of National Orchestra for All India Radio (AIR), and chief producer of light Hindustani music from 1965; television work includes title music for popular serial Humlog. Address: K-11/12, South Extension Part-II, New Delhi 110049, India.

Films as Composer/Music Director:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>Dharam Ki Devi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>Pratima (Prem Murty); Prem Bandhan; Sher Ka Panja</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>Bull Dog; Dukhiyar; Gentleman Daku; Insaf; Jagirdar; Kokila; Maha Geet</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Dynamite; Gramophone Singer; Hum Tum aur Woh; Nirala Hindustan; Abhilasha; 300 Din Ke Baad; Vatan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>Jeevan Sathi; Ek Hi Raasta</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>Alibab; Aurat; Pooja</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>Aasraa; Bahen; Nai Roshani</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1942</td>
<td>Apna Paraya; Gareeb; Jawant; Roti; Vijaya</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>Hamari Baat; Basant; Kismat</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1944</td>
<td>Char Ankh; Jwar Bhata</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1945</td>
<td>Pahl Nazar</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1946</td>
<td>Milan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>Bhookh; Manjudhar; Naya</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1948</td>
<td>Anokha Pyar; Gajre; Veena</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>Girls’ School; Jeet; Ludali</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>Arzoo; Begasoor; Lajawab</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>Aaraam; Badi Bahu; Do Sitare; Taran</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Do Raha</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1953</td>
<td>Aakash; Farib; Ham Dard; Julianwale; Baag ki Jyoti; Mehmaan; Rahi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1954</td>
<td>Maan; Mahatma Kabir Munna; Naaz; Waris</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1955</td>
<td>Farar</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>Heer; Paisa hi paisa</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1957</td>
<td>Abhimam; Jalti Nishani; Ajanasi Nikitin; Pardeshi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1958</td>
<td>Sanskar</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1959</td>
<td>Char dil Char rahen</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>Angulimaal; Mira ka Chitra; Superman ki Wapasi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1961</td>
<td>Lucky Number; Savitri</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1962</td>
<td>Hame Khelne Do; Sautela Bhai</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1964</td>
<td>Raju aur Gangaram</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1965</td>
<td>Chhoti Chhoti Baten</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

On BISWAS: book—

* * *

The music Anil Biswas has composed for films is a reflection of his active and eventful life. Born at a time when a wave of patriotism was sweeping the country, young Biswas became an active underground worker and a revolutionary. This patriotic militancy and stirring optimism came to be manifested in the music that he composed for Hindi films.

Biswas began composing film music in 1931, but the first film in which he was credited with composing the entire score is the 1935
Dharam Ki Devi. The memorable scores that followed bore ample testimony not only to a wide variety of songs but to an element of orchestration that accompanied each composition. By then, he had formed an orchestra of 12 musicians, a number considered “extraordinary” by the industry. Orchestration had always fascinated him, particularly the adaptation of Indian raga within a Western discipline. When Biswas began work with the Bombay film industry, music-recording was in its infancy. Once when Biswas, an accomplished singer, played the role of a blind performer, the camera, mike, and orchestra had to be moved down the road with him as he sang.

Biswas’s immense popularity is due not only to the songs that he composed but also to his background scores. He paid careful attention to instrumental scores for creating mood and ambiance. He also pioneered the adaptation of folk and classical forms within modern film music. He felt that only the “temple” and the “field,” symbolizing the Indian classical and folk traditions respectively, could salvage film music. He felt that only the “temple” and the “field,” symbolizing the Indian classical and folk traditions respectively, could salvage contemporary Indian music from colonial fetters. His fame also rests on his ability to create music with which ordinary Indians can identify.

—Shohini Ghosh

BITZER, Billy

Cinematographer. Nationality: American. Born: Johan Gottlieb Wilhelm Bitzer in Roxbury, Massachusetts, 21 April 1872; brother of the photographer John C. Bitzer. Education: Trained as silversmith; studied electrical engineering, Cooper Union, New York. Family: Married Ethel (Bitzer), son: Eden Griffith Bitzer. Career: 1894—joined Magic Introduction Company, later called American Mutoscope, then Biograph Company, and photographed (with Laurie Dickson); projected first Mutoscope films, shown in 1896; in the next dozen years photographed many newsreel and popular interest subjects; 1908—first film shot for D. W. Griffith, A Calamitous Elopement; shot most of Griffith’s films until 1924 (in Hollywood after 1913); 1926—founder, International Photographers of the Motion Picture Industries (twice president); worked in a New York photographic shop in late 1930s; 1939—began assembling old cameras and restoring film prints and documents for Museum of Modern Art. Died: Of heart disease, Woodland Hills, California, 29 April 1944.

Films as Cinematographer:

1896 William McKinley at Canton, Ohio; Hard Wash
1897 President McKinley’s Inauguration; Mutoscope Shorts
1898 U.S.S. Maine, Havana Harbor; Spanish-American War Scenes
1899 Jim Jeffries-Jim Sharkey Fight; Ambulance Corps Drill; Children Feeding Ducklings; How Ducks Are Fattened; Train on Jacob’s Ladder, Mt. Washington; Frankenstein Trestle, White Mts.; Canadian Pacific Railroad Shots; Union Pacific Railroad Shots; The Picturesque West
1900 Galveston Hurricane Shots; Polo Games, Brooklyn; The Interrupted Message (+ d, sc); Tough Kid’s Waterloo; Grand Trunk Railroad Scenes; Water Duel; Love in the Suburbs; Last Alarm; U.S. Naval Militia; Council Bluffs to Omaha—Train Scenic; Childhood’s Vow; At Breakneck Speed (Fall River, Mass.)
1901 Middies Shortening Sail; Boats under Oars; Pan-American Exposition Electric Tower; Union Pacific Railroad Scenes; In the Grazing Country; Fattened for the Market
1902 St. Louis Exposition
1903 I Want My Dinner, N.Y. City Fire Dept.; American Soldier in Love and War; Boy in the Barrel; Dude and the Burglar; Don’t Get Gay with Your Minicure; Model Courtship; Jeffries-Corbett Fight (restaged); Happy Hooligan Earns His Dinner; How Mike Got the Soap in His Eyes; In the N.Y. Subway; Kidnapper; Physical Culture Girls; Poor Old Fido; President T. R. Roosevelt, July 4th; Professor of the Drama; Pajama Girl; Sweets for the Sweet; Shocking Incident; She Fell Fainting in His Arms; Too Ardent Lover; Unprotected Female; Unfaithful Wife; Wages of Sin; Widow, Willie’s Camera; Why Foxy Grandpa Escaped Ducking; Weighing the Baby; You Will Send Me to Bed, Eh?
1904 Auto Boat on the Hudson; Vanderbilt Cup Auto Race; Holland Submarine Torpedo Boat; Children in the Surf; Coney Island Police Patrol Chicken Thief; First Baby; Hero of Liao Yang; Judge Alton B. Parker; Lost Child; Moonshiners; Person; Racing the Chutes at Dreamland; Seashore Baby; Slocum Disaster; Speed Test of Tantanula; Swimming Class; Two Bottle Babies; Widow and the Only Man
1905 Al Trelor Muscle Exercises; Athletic Girl and Burglar; Auto Races, Ormonde, Fla.; Ballroom Tragedy; Barnstormers; Between the Dances; Chauncy Explains; Country Courtship; Dream of the Racertrack Fiend; Deer Stalking with Camera; Departure of Train from Station; Deadwood Sleeper; Everybody Works but Father; Firebug; Flight of Ludlows Aerodrome; Fun on the Joy Line; Gee, If Me Mudder Could See Me; Gossipers; Great Jewel Mystery; Henpecked Husband; His Move; Horse Thief; Impossible Convicts; Kentucky Feud; Leap Frog Railway; Ludlow’s Aeroplane; Lifting the Lid; Mobilizing Mass. State Troops; Moose Hunt in Canada; Mystery of the Jewel Casket; Nan Patterson’s Trial; Oslerizing Papa; Pipe Dream; Quail Shooting; Pikehurst, Reuben in the Subway; River Pirates; Reception of British Fleet; Salmon Fishing, Quebec; Sparring at N.Y. Athletic Club; Simple Life; Spirit of ‘76; Trout Fishing; Rangeley Lakes; Turkey Hunt; Pinelhurst; Two Topers; Under the Bamboo Tree; Wine Opener; Wedding; Wrestling, N.Y. Athletic Club
1906 At the Monkey House; Black Hand; Country Schoolmaster; Critic; Dr. Dippy’s Sanitarium; Fox Hunt; Friend in Need Is Friend Indeed; Gateway to the Catskills; Grand Hotel to Big Indian; Hallroom Boys; Holdup of Rocky Mt. Express; In the Haunts of Rip Van Winkle; In the Heart of the Catskills; Lighthouse; Married for Millions; Masqueraders; Mr. But-In; Mr. Hurry-Up; Night of the Party; Paymaster; Poughkeepsie Regatta; San Francisco; Society Ballooning; Subpoena Server; Trial Marriages; Through Austin Glen; Valley of Esopus; Village Cut-Up
1907 Crayono; Defate-Mutes Ball; Dr. Skinum; Elopement; Falsely Accused; Fencing Master; Fights of Nations; Hypnotist’s Revenge; If You Had a Wife Like This; Jamestown Exposition; Love Microbe; Model’s Mr.; Mrs. Smithers’ Boarding School; Neighbors; Professional Jealousy; Rube Brown in BITZER WRITERS AND PRODUCTION ARTISTS, 4th EDITION

1908 Bobby’s Kodak; Classmates; Lonesome Junction; Snowman; Boy Detective; Princess in the Vase; Yellow Peril; Caught by Wireless; Famous Escape; Her First Adventure; Old Isaacs, the Pawnbroker; His Day of Rest; Hulda’s Lovers; King of the Cannibal Islands; King’s Messenger; Mixed Babies; Music Master; Romance of an Egg; Sculptor’s Nightmare; When Knights Were Bold; At the French Ball; Invisible Fluid; Man in the Box; Night of Terror; ‘Oslor Joe; Outlaw; Over the Hills to the Poorhouse; Thompson’s Night Out; Black Viper; Fight for Freedom; Kentuckian; A Calamitous Elopement; Deceived Slumming Party; The Man and the Woman; Betrayed by a Handprint; Monday Morning in a Coney Island Police Court; Smoked Husband; The Stolen Jewels; Where the Breakers Roar; The Zulu’s Heart; The Barbarian, Ingomar; Concealing a Burglar; The Devil; Father Gets in the Game; Mr. Jones at the Ball; The Planter’s Wife; Romance of a Jewess; Vaquerio’s Vow; After Many Years; The Guerrilla; The Ingrate; Money Man; Pirate’s Gold; Song of the Shirt; Taming of the Shrew; The Christmas Burglars; The Clubman and the Trap; The Feud and the Turkey; The Reckoning; The Test of Friendship; Valet’s Wife; The Curtain Pole; Mrs. Jones Entertains; The Maniac Cook; A Wreak in Time; The Honor of Thieves; The Criminal Hypnotist; The Sacrifice; The Welcome Burglar; A Rural Elopement; Mrs. Jones Has a Card Party; The Hindoo Dagger; The Salvation Army Lass; Love Finds a Way; Tragic Love; The Girls and a Daddy

Those Boys; The Cord of Life; Trying to Get Married; The Fascinating Mrs. Frances; Those Awful Hats; Jones and the Lady Book Agent; The Drive for Life; The Brahma Diamond; The Politician’s Love Story; The Jones Have Amateur Theatricals; Edgar Allan Poe; The Roue’s Heart; His Ward’s Love; At the Altar; The Prussian Spy; The Medicine Bottle; The Deception; The Lure of the Crown; Lady Helen’s Escapade; A Fool’s Revenge; The Wooden Leg; I Did It, Mama; A Burglar’s Mistake; The Voice of the Violin; A Little Child Shall Lead Them; The French Duel; Jones and His New Neighbors; A Drunkard’s Reformation; The Winning Coat; A Rude Hostess; The Eavesdropper; Confidence; Lucky Jim; A Sound Sleeper; A Troublesome Satchel; ’Tis an Ill Wind; The Suicide Club; Resurrection; One Busy Hour; A Baby’s Shoe; Eloping with Auntie; The Cricket on the Hearth; The Jilt; Eradicating Auntie; What Drink Did; Her First Biscuit; The Violin Maker of Cremona; Two Memories; The Lonely Villa; The Peach-Basket Hat; The Son’s Return; His Duty; A New Trick; The Necklace; The Way of Man; The Faded Lillies; The Message; The Friend of the Family; Was Justice Served?; Mrs. Jones’ Lover; The Mexican Sweetheart; The Country Doctor; Jealousy and the Man; The Renunciation; The Cardinal’s Conspiracy; The Seventh Day; Tender Hearts; A Convict’s Sacrifice; Sweet and Twenty; The Slave; They Would Elope; Mrs. Jones’ Burglar, The Mended Lute; Indian Runner’s Romance; With Her Card; The Better Way; His Wife’s Visitor; The Mills of the Gods; Oh, Uncle!; The Sealed Room; 1776, or Hessian Renegades; The Little Darling; In Old Kentucky; The Children’s Friend; Comata, The Sioux;

Getting Even; The Broken Locket; A Fair Exchange; The Awakening; Pippa Passes; Leather Stocking; Fools of Fate; Wanted, a Child; The Little Teacher; A Change of Heart; His Lost Love; Lines of White on the Sullen Sea; The Gibson Goddess; In the Watches of the Night; The Expiation; What’s Your Hurry?; The Restoration; Nursing a Viper; Two Women and a Man; The Light That Came; A Midnight Adventure; The Open Gate; Sweet Revenge; The Mountain-er’s Honor; In the Window Recess; The Trick that Failed; The Death Disk; Through the Breakers; In a Hempen Bag; A Corner in Wheat; The Redman’s View; The Test; A Trap for Santa Claus; In Little Italy; To Save Her Soul; Choosing a Husband; The Rocky Road; The Dancing Girl of Butte; Her Terrible Ordeal; The Call; The Honor of the Family; On the Reef; The Last Deal; One Night and Then—; The Cloister’s Touch; The Woman from Mellon’s; The Duke’s Plan; The Englishman and the Girl

1910 The Final Settlement; His Last Burglary; Taming a Husband; The Newlyweds; The Thread of Destiny; In Old California; The Man; The Converts; Faithful; The Twisted Trail; Gold Is Not All; As It Is in Life; A Rich Revenge; Romance of the Western Hills; Thou Shalt Not; The Way of the World; The Unchanging Sea; The Gold Seekers; The Two Brothers; Unexpected Help; Ramona; Over Silent Paths; The Impalement; In the Season of Buds; A Child of the Ghetto; In the Border States; A Victim of Jealousy; The Face at the Window; The Marked Timetable; A Child’s Impulse; Muggsy’s First Sweetheart; The Purification; A Midnight Cupid; What the Daisy Said; A Child’s Faith; The Calto Arms; Serious Sixteen; A Flash of Light; As the Bells Rang Out; The Arcadian Maid; House with the Closed Shutters; Her Father’s Pride; A Salutary Lesson; The Usurer; Sorrows of the Unfaithful; In Life’s Cycle; Wifjul Peggy; A Summer Idyll; The Modern Prodigal; Rose o’ Salem Town; Little Angels of Luck; A Mohawk’s Way; The Oath and the Man; The Iconoclast; Examination Day at School; That Chink in Golden Galch; The Broken Doll; The Banker’s Daughters; The Message of the Violin; Two Little Waifs; Waiter No. 5; The Fugitive; Simple Charity; Song of the Wildwood Flute; A Child’s Strategem; Sunshine Sue; A Plain Song; His Sister-in-Law; The Golden Supper; The Lesson; When a Ma Loves; Winning Back His Love; His Trust; His Trust Fulfilled; A Wreath of Orange Blossoms; The Italian Barber; The Two Paths; Conscience; Three Sisters; A Decree of Destiny; Fate’s Turning; What Shall We Do with Our Old?; The Diamond Star; The Lily of the Tenements; Heart Beats of Long Ago

1911 Fisher Folks; His Daughter, The Lonedale Operator; Was He a Coward?; Teaching Dad to Like Her; The Spanish Gypsy; The Broken Cross; The Chief’s Daughter; A Knight of the Road; Madame Rex; His Mother’s Scarf; How She Triumphed; In the Days of ’49; The Two Sides; The New Dress; Enoch Arden (2 parts); The White Rose of the Wilds; The Crooked Road; A Romany Tragedy; A Smile of the Child; The Primal Call; The Jealous Husband; The Indian Brothers; The Thief and the Girl; Her Sacrifice; Blind Princess and the Poet; The Last Drop of Water; Bobby the Coward; A Country Cupid; The Ruling Passion; The Rose of Kentucky; The Sorrowful Example; Sword and Hearts; The Stuff Heroes Are Made Of; Old Confectioner’s Mistake; The Unveiling; The Eternal Mother; Dan the Dandy; Revenue Man and the Girl; The Squaw’s Love; Italian Blood; The Making of a Man; Her Awakening; The Adventures of Billy; The Long Road; The Battle; Love in the Hills; The Trail of the Books; Through Darkened Vales; Saved from Himself; A Woman Scorned; The Miser’s Heart; The Failure; Sunshine through the Dark; As in a Looking-Glass; A Terrible Discovery; The Voice of the Child; A Tale of the Wilderness; The Baby and the Stork; The Old Bookkeeper; A Sister’s Love; For His Son; The Transformation of Mike; A Blot on the Scutcheon; Billy’s Strategem; The Sunbeam; A String of Pearls; The Root of Evil

1912
The Mender of the Nets; Under Burning Skies; A Siren of Impulse; Iola’s Promise; The Goddess of Sagebrush Gulch; The Girl and Her Trust; The Punishment; Fate’s Interception; The Female of the Species; Just Like a Woman; One Is Business, the Other Crime; The Lesser Evil; The Old Actor; A Lodging for the Night; His Lesson; When Kings Were the Law; A Beast at Bay; An Outcast among Outcasts; Home Folks; A Temporary Truce; The Spirit Awakened; Lena and the Geese; An Indian Summer; The Schoolteacher and the Wolf; Man’s Last for Gold; Man’s Genesis; Heaven Avenues; A Pueblo Legend; The Sands of Dee; Black Sheep; The Narrow Road; A Child’s Remorse; The Inner Circle; An Unseen Enemy; Two Daughters of Eve; Friends; So Near Yet So Far; A Feud in the Kentucky Hills; In the Aisles of the Wild; The One She Loved; The Painted Lady; The Musketeers of Pig Alley; Heredity; Gold and Glitter; My Baby; The Informer; Brutality; The New York Hat; My Hero; The Burglar’s Dilemma; A Cry for Help; The God Within; The Unwelcome Guest; Pirate Gold; The Massacre; Oil and Water; Three Friends; The Telephone Girl and the Lady; Fate; Adventure in the Autumn Woods; A Chance Deception; The Tenderhearted Boy; A Misappropriated Turkey; Brothers; Drink’s Lure; Love in an Apartment Hotel

1913
Broken Ways; A Girl’s Strategem; Near to Earth; A Welcome Intruder; The Sheriff’s Baby; The Hero of Little Italy; The Perfidy of Mary; A Misunderstood Boy; The Little Tease; The Lady and the Mouse; The Wanderer; The House of Darkness; Olaf, an Atom; His Mother’s Son; Just Gold; The Gold; The Yauqui Car; The Ranchero’s Revenge; A Timely Interception; Death’s Marathon; The Sorrowful Shore; The Mistake; The Mothering Heart; Her Mother’s Oath; During the Roundup; The Coming of Angelo; An Indian’s Loyalty; Two Men of the Desert

1914
In Prehistoric Days; Judith of Bethulia; The Battle at Elderbush Gulch; The Battle of the Sexes; The Escape; Home, Sweet Home; The Avenging Conscience

1915
The Birth of a Nation

1916
Intolerance

1918
Hearts of the World; The Great Love; The Greatest Thing in Life

1919
A Romance in Happy Valley; The Girl Who Stayed Home; True-Heart Susie; Scarlet Days; Broken Blossoms; The Greatest Question

1920
The Idol Dancer; The Love Flower; Way Down East

1923
The White Rose

1924
America

1928
Drums of Love; The Battle of the Sexes

1929
Lady of the Pavements

Publications

By BITZER: book—

By BITZER: article—

“I Remember,” in Cine-Technician (London), September/October 1944.

On BITZER: articles—

Arnheim, Rudolph, in Intercine (Rome), January 1938.

Williams, Martin, in Griffith: First Artist of the Movies, New York, 1980.

Turconi, Davide, “‘Hic sunt leones’: The First Decade of American Film Comedy,” in Griffithiana, September 1996.

* * *

Billy Bitzer’s career as a cinematographer spanned the silent film era, and his development as a cameraman provides a history of early filmmaking. Because he worked primarily with D. W. Griffith, the foremost director in silent film, he is permanently linked with Griffith in film history. The two worked so closely together that their collaboration amounted to a kind of partnership, one that produced the most outstanding films of the 1910s, among them Broken Blossoms, Intolerance, The Birth of a Nation, and Judith of Bethulia. In the 1920s, however, with the exception of Way Down East (1920), Griffith’s career declined, as did Bitzer’s. In addition to cultural changes brought on by World War I there were changes in cinematic style: German expressionism proved incompatible in content and technique with Griffith and Bitzer, who did not adapt well to a changed movie industry.
A former electrician with the Magic Introduction Company, Bitzer became a photographer when the company acquired the Mutoscope camera and changed its name to American Mutoscope and then Biograph. Among his earliest newsreels were William McKinley's receiving the presidential nomination in Canton, Ohio, and the Jim Jeffries-Jack Sharkey championship prizefight—he used 40 lights over the ring. He began making short fiction films in 1900 (he wrote, photographed, and directed The Interrupted Message, his first film). When Griffith came to Biograph, Bitzer had quite a bit of experience. When the two began working together in 1908, however, both men had to become cinematographic students in order to shoot the complex narratives Griffith had designed. Although Bitzer has been credited with the creation of the close-up, soft-focus photography, the iris shot, the fade-out, and backlighting, many of these techniques had been used before (Griffith credited Georges Méliès with some of these innovations); but Bitzer and Griffith were the first team to use these techniques to advance and enhance the narrative. Some of the cinematic “effects” were the results of accidents or mistakes; in his autobiography Bitzer recounts the accidental-discovery story of cinematic “effects” were the results of accidents or mistakes; in his autobiography Bitzer recounts the accidental-discovery story of double exposure, as well as of the “reverse light” effect. He learned to shoot into the sun using a shaded lens, used the close-up to advance the narrative in The Mender of Nets, and, after Hendrik Sartov, a special effects photographer, joined the Griffith team, achieved the soft-focus effect which made Broken Blossoms an artistic triumph—the diffused, softened lighting on the Chinese rescuer is contrasted to Griffith's Pan-American style (1902). He also learned to use Rembrandt lighting and profile portrait-effect in Edgar Allan Poe, fireside-light in A Drunkard's Reformation, parallel-action montage in The Lonely Villa, and morning-light effect in Pippa Passes. Sartov's arrival, however, heralded the beginning of Bitzer's decline. As he noted in his autobiography, “With the entrance of Sartov, I became the pupil.” Sartov received cinematography credit for Griffith's Dream Street, and after Way Down East Bitzer was only one of several cameramen on the last five Griffith films.

—Thomas L. Erskine

BIZIOU, Peter

Cinematographer. Nationality: British. Awards: Best Artistic Contribution, Cannes Film Festival, for Another Country, 1984; Academy Award for Best Cinematography, British Academy Award for Best Cinematography, British Society of Cinematographers Best Cinematography Award, for Mississippi Burning, 1989.

Films as Cinematographer:

1969 L'Échelle blanche (Secret World) (Freeman)
1976 Bugsy Malone (Parker)
1979 Life of Brian (Monty Python's Life of Brian) (Jones)
1981 Time Bandits (Gilliam)
1982 Pink Floyd The Wall (The Wall) (Parker and Scarfe)
1984 Another Country (Kanievskii)
1986 Nine 1/2 Weeks (Lyne)
1988 A World Apart (Menges); Mississippi Burning (Parker)

1990 Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead (Stoppard)
1992 City of Joy (La Cité de la joie) (Joffé); Fatale (Damage) (Malle)
1993 In the Name of the Father (Sheridan)
1994 The Road to Wellville (Parker)
1995 Richard III (Loncraine)
1998 The Truman Show (Weir)

Publications

On BIZIOU: articles—

* * *

Peter Biziou has quietly built a solid reputation as one of the finest cinematographers of his generation that Britain has produced. Of Welsh extraction, he began his career building models, graduated to lighting commercials, and began his career behind the camera with his friend and long time collaborator, director Alan Parker. His journeyman years spent making commercials have heavily influenced his style without inhibiting his creativity: in making Peter Weir's The Truman Show (1998) he relied on that “unreal” look to create an insular world lit by too-brilliant sunlight: as Weir put it, “I was taken with the way Peter uses light, his choice of lenses and his overall look. I loved his work with directors Alan Parker and Jim Sheridan. He takes chances, yet one always sees what one needs to see. I also knew that Peter is selective and only takes on films to which he feels he can offer something unique.” The Truman Show itself is a showcase for the cinematographer’s art: when the director Christof (Ed Harris) says abruptly, “Cue the sun” and a fireball shoots up in response (a stunning effect requiring Biziou’s strategy and elaborate digital enhancement) or the vignettes that alert the viewer to the presence of the many spying cameras recording Truman Burbank’s life. To give “a more obvious, menacing feel,” Biziou used gobos placed in front of the lens and explored the use of wide angle lenses often used in commercials, as well as all the ingenious “Truman-cams.” His ability to translate Weir's wish for a hyper-real, light-soaked Norman Rockwell world is in keeping with his reputation as an inventive, intuitive artisan who compliments and completes a director’s vision.

His work on literary adaptations is much admired: the audacious Richard III (1995), fashioned by Ian McKellen and director Richard Loncraine, owes much to Biziou's smoke-filled, hazy ambiance which signifies the creeping evil of Richard’s homicidal ambition. A deco palette of soft browns and tan interiors is punctuated by bold flashes of color (usually a vivid red, of lipstick, fire, or blood) or by the sleek menace of gleaming black leather crypto-Nazi outfits: Richard III invents a fascist state la Leni Riefenstahl, and Biziou’s precise lighting and camera work creates the proper shock of recognition, from a Marat-style death scene to a stunning, flag-waving political rally. Similarly, Tom Stoppard’s Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead (1990) was saved from excessive staginess in large part by Biziou’s work, and 1994’s The Road To Wellville, a film otherwise disliked, was praised for its handsome photography.
Director Adrian Lyne praised Biziou’s ability to deliver the exact look he wanted—an expensive, lush 1980s style eroticism that again hearkened back to the desired style of commercials—for his controversial Nine 1/2 Weeks (1985). The visual style of that film is what audiences responded to more than Lyne’s typically juiced-up script, and which complimented leading lady Kim Basinger (whose career took off after this film). Biziou is also beloved of Monty Python fans: his work on Life of Brian (1979) and especially Terry Gilliam’s cult favorite Time Bandits (1981) added much to the artistic success of those films. Time Bandits’ conceit of time travel allowed Biziou to create a variety of visual styles to suggest historical passages and Gilliam’s trademark, an otherworldly atmosphere and fantastic set design. The first employed a naturalistic style that added to its hilarious quality, while Gilliam’s fantasy is otherworldly and surreal. Similarly, Biziou’s work enhanced the cult artiness of Alan Parker’s hypnotic midnight movie favorite Pink Floyd—The Wall (1982) and Bugsy Malone (1976) which established both Parker and Biziou, who met while still making commercials in the United Kingdom in the 1970s.

Peter Biziou finally received critical acclaim for his work in Another Country, the high-toned public school saga of spy Guy Burgess. He went for a look of ‘slightly sour sunlight’ to suggest the oppressive nature of the place, and for this film he was awarded ‘Best Artistic Achievement’ at the 1984 Cannes Film Festival. Admitted to the ranks of the British Cinematographer’s Society, Biziou began to receive assignments more worthy of his talents. The versatile Biziou has proved most capable of handling assignments that require evoking difficult history: his work on Parker’s Mississippi Burning, a fictionalized but gripping story of three murdered civil rights workers in 1964, catapulted him into the exclusive company of the best British cinematographers, capped by his Academy Award in 1989. The opening sequence (as the doomed men are chased by the Klan) is Biziou at his most powerful, and his artistic restraint helps to curtail Parker’s characteristic excesses. Film historian Duncan Petrie noted that he used long lenses (between 70mm and 80mm) to give an observational look to the opening sequence, and further noted that Biziou has not been absorbed into the Hollywood scene, preferring to pick his projects and showing a preference for British films.

His work on Jim Sheridan’s In the Name of the Father (1994) and Chris Menges’ A World Apart (1988) shows Biziou’s affinity for thoughtful, potentially controversial films. Biziou is as well known for his collegiality as his professional acumen: in an interview with American Cinematographer he was careful to credit everyone who helped achieve the astonishing look of The Truman Show and was generous with his praise. As a cinematographer, Peter Biziou has made good films exceptional and memorable, and his art has rescued many others: his body of work shows an artist of remarkable talent and sensitivity.

—Mary Hess

BLANC, Mel

Voice Artist. Nationality: American. Born: Melvin Jérôme Blank in San Francisco, California, 30 May 1908; raised in Portland, Oregon. Family: Married Estelle Rosenberg, 1933; son: Noel. Career: 1927—sang on radio show The Hoot Owls with his wife; wrote and produced and performed all characters in the daily show Cobwebs and Nuts; 1928—played bass and violin in San Francisco’s NBC Radio Orchestra; 1937—began voice characterization for Warners’ Merrie Melodies and Looney Tunes cartoons, including Bugs Bunny and Daffy Duck; regular performer on The Jack Benny Show; 1961—serious car accident. Television work included the voice of Barney Rubble in the * Flintstones*, Mr. Spacely in The Jetsons and Twiki in * Buck Rogers in the 25th Century*. Died: Of heart disease, Los Angeles, California, 10 July 1989.

Films as Voice Artist for Warner Bros.:

1937 Porky the Wrestler, Porky’s Road Race, Picador Porky, Porky’s Romance, Porky’s Duck Hunt, Porky and Gabby, Porky’s Building, Porky’s Super Service, Porky’s Badtime Story, Porky’s Railroad, Get Rich Quick Porky, Porky’s Garden, Rover’s Rival, The Case of the Stuttering Pig, Porky’s Double Trouble, Porky’s Hero Agency

1938 Daffy Duck and Eghead, Porky’s Poppa, Porky at the Crocadero, What Price Porky, Porky’s Phone Express, Porky’s Five and Ten, Porky’s Hare Hunt, Injun Trouble, Porky the Fireman, Porky’s Party, Porky’s Spring Planting, Porky and Daffy, Wholly Smoke, Porky in Wackyland, Porky’s Naughty Nephew, Porky in Egypt, The Daffy Doc, Daffy Duck in Hollywood, Porky the Gob

1939 The Lone Stranger and Porky, It’s an Ill Wind, Porky’s Tire Trouble, Porky’s Movie Mystery, Prest-O Change-O,
Chicken Jitters; Daffy Duck and the Dinosaur; Porky and Teabiscuit; Krishter Kolumbus, Jr.; Polar Pals; Scalp Trouble; Old Glory; Porky’s Picnic; Wise Quacks; Hare-Um Scare-Um; Porky’s Hotel; Jeepsy Creepers; Naughty Neighbors; Pied Piper Porky; Porky the Giant Killer; The Film

1940 Porky’s Last Stand; The Early Worm Gets the Bird; Africa Squeaks; Mighty Hunters; Ali Baba Bound; Busy Bakers; Elmer’s Candid Camera; Pilgrim Porky; Cross Country Doctors; Confedrate Honey; Slap Happy Pappy; The Bear’s Tale; The Hardship of Miles Standish; Porky’s Poor Fish; Sniffles Takes a Trip; You Ought to Be in Pictures; A Gander at Mother Goose; The Chevin’ Bruin; Tom Thumb in Trouble; Circus Today; Porky’s Baseball Broadcast; Little Blabbermouse; The Egg Collector; A Wild Hare; Ghost Wanted; Patient Porky; Ceiling Hero; Malibu Beach Party; Calling Dr. Porky; Stage Fright; Prehistoric Porky; Holiday Highlights; Good Night Elmer; The Sour Pass; Wacky Wildlife; Bedtime for Sniffles; Porky’s Hired Hand; Of Fox and Hounds; The Timid Toreador; Shop, Look and Listen

1941 Elmer’s Pet Rabbit; Porky’s Snooze Reel; The Fighting 69th; Sniffles Bells the Cat; The Haunted Mouse; The Crackpot Quail; The Cat’s Tale; Joe Glow the Firefly; Tortoise Beats Hare; Porky’s Bear Facts; Goofy Groceries; Toy Trouble; Porky’s Preview; The Trial of Mr. Wolf; Porky’s Ant; Farm Frolics; Hollywood Steps Out; A Coy Decoy; Hiawatha’s Rabbit Hunt; Porky’s Prize Pony; The Wacky Wombat; Meet John Doughboy; The Hellion Hare; Inki and the Lion; Aviation Vacation; We, the Animals, Squeak; Sport Champions; The Henpecked Duck; Snow Time for Comedy; All This and Rabbit Stew; Notes to You; The Brave Little Bat; The Bug Parade; Robinson Crusoee, Jr.; Rookie Revue; Saddle Silly; The Cagey Canary; Porky’s Midnight Matinee; Rhapsody in Rivets; Wabbit Twouble; Porky’s Pooch

1942 Hop, Skip and a Chump; Porky’s Pastry Pirates; The Bird Came C.O.D.; Aloha Hooey; Who’s Who in the Zoo; Porky’s Cafe; Conrad the Sailor; Crazy Cruise; The Wabbit Who Came to Supper; Saps in Chaps; Horton Hatches the Egg; Dog Tired; Daffy’s Southern Exposure; The Wacky Wabbit; The Draft Horse; Nutty News; Lights Fantastic; Hobby Horse Laffs; Hold the Lion, Please; Gopher Goofy; Double Chaser; Wacky Blackouts; Bugs Bunny Gets the Boid; Foney Fables; The Duckators; The Squawkin’ Hawk; Eatin’ on the Cuff; Fresh Hare; The Impatient Patient; Fox Pop; The Dover Boys; The Hep Cat; The Sheepish Wolf; The Daffy Duckaroo; The Hare-Brainned Hypnotist; A Tale of Two Kitties; My Favorite Duck; Ding Dog Daddy; Case of the Missing Hare

1943 Coal Black and de Sebben Dwarfs; Confessions of a Nutty Spy; Pigs in a Polka; Tortoise Wins by a Hare; Fifth Column Mouse; To Duck or Not to Duck; Flop Goes the Weasel; Hop and Go; Super Rabbit; The Unbearable Bear; The Wise Quacking Duck; Greetings Batt; Tokio Jokio; Jack-Wabbit and the Beanstalk; The Aristo-Cat; Yankee Doodle Daffy; Wackikibbit; Tin Pan Alley Cats; Porky Pig’s Fear; Scrap Happy Daffy; Hisse and Make Up; A Corny Concerto; Pin ‘n’ Catty; Falling Hare; Inki and the Minah Bird; Daffy the Commander; An Itch in Time; Pass ‘n’ Booty

1944 Little Red Riding Rabbit; What’s Cookin’, Doc?; Meatless Flyday; Tom Tark and Daffy; Bugs Bunny and the Three Bears; I Got Plenty of Mutton; The Weakly Reporter; Tick Tock Tuckered; Bugs Bunny Nips the Nips; The Swooner Crooner; Russian Rhapsody; Duck Soup to Nuts; Angel Pass; Slightly Daffy; Hare Ribbin’; Brother Brat; Hare Force; From Hand to Mouse; Birdy and the Beast; Buckaroo Bugs; Goldilocks and the Jivin’ Bears; Plane Daffy; Lost and Foundling; Booby Hatched; The Old Grey Hare; The Stupid Cudip; Stage Door Cartoon

1945 Odor-able Kitty; Herr Meets Hare; Draffee Daffy; The Unruiy Hare; Trap Happy Porky; Life with Feathers; Behind the Meat Ball; Hare Trigger; Ain’t That Ducky; A Gruesome Twosome; A Tale of Two Mice; Wagon Heels; Hare Conditioned; Fresh Airedale; The Bashful Buzzard; Peck Up Your Troubles; Hare Tonic; Nasty Quacks

1946 Book Revue; Baseball Bugs; Holiday for Shoestrings; Quentin Quail; Baby Bolleneck; Hare Remover; Daffy Doodles; Hollywood Canine Canteen; Hush My Mouse; Hair-Raising Hare; Kitty Kornered; Hollywood Daffy; Acrobat Bunny; The Eager Beaver; The Great Piggy Bank Robbery; Baccal to Arms; Of Thee I Sting; Walky Talky Hawky; Racketeer Rabbit; Fair and Worm-er; The Big Snooze; The Mouse-merized Cat; Mouse Menace; Rhapsody Rabbit; Roughly Squeaking

1947 One Meat Brawl; The Goofy Gophers; The Gay Antier; Sentimental Over You; A Hare Grows in Manhattan; The Birth of a Notion; Tweetie Pie; Rabbit Transit; Hobo Bobo; Along Came Daffy; Inki At the Circus; Easter Yeggs; Crowing Pains; A Pest in the House; The Foxy Duckling; House Hunting Mice; Little Orphan Airedale; Doggone Cats; Slick Hare; Mexican Joyride; Catch As Cats Can; A Horsefly Fleas

1948 Gorilla My Dreams; Two Gophers from Texas; A Feather in His Hare; What Makes Daffy Duck; What’s Brewin’; Brain?; Daffy Duck Slept Here; A Hick, a Slick and a Chick; Back Alley Oproar; I Taw a Putty Tat; Rabbit Punch; Hop, Look and Listen; Nothing But the Tooth; Buccaneer Bunny; Bone, Sweet Bone; Bugs Bunny Rides Again; The Rattled Rooster; The Upstanding Sitter; The Shell Shocked Egg; Haredevil Hare; You Were Never Duckier; Dough Ray Moff; Hot Cross Bunny; The Pest That Came to Dinner; Hare Splitter; Odor of the Day; The Foghorn Leghorn; A Lad in His Lamp; Daffy Dilly; Kit for Kat; The Stupor Salesman; Riff Ruffy Daffy; My Bunny Lies over the Sea; Scarredy Cat

1949 Wise Quackers; Hare Do; Holiday for Drumsticks; The Awful Orphan; Porky Chops; Mississippi Hare; Paying the Piper; Daffy Duck Hunt; Rebel Rabbit; Mouse Wreckers; High Diving Hare; The Bee-devilled Bruin; Curtain Razor; Bowery Bugs; Mouse Mazurka; Long-haired Hare; Henhouse Henry; Knights Must Fall; Bad ‘O’ Putty Tat; The Greyhound Hare; Often an Orphan; The Windblown Hare; Dough for the Do-do; Fast and Furry-ous; Each Dawn I Crow; Frigid Hare; Swallow the Leader; Bye Bye Bluebeard; For Sentimental Reasons; Hippey Hopper; Which Is Witch?; Bear Fear; Rabbit Hood; A Ham in a Role

1950 Home Tweet Home; Hardy Gurdy Hare; Boobs in the Woods; Matunny on the Bunny; The Lion’s Busy; The Scarlet Pumpernickel; Homeless Hare; Strife with Father; The Hypochondri-Cat; Big House Bunny; The Leghorn Blows at Midnight; His Bitter Half; An Egg Scramble; What's Up, Doc?; All Hail-r-roid; Ball Bunny; It's Hummer Time; Golden Yeggs; Hillbilly Hare; Dog Gone South; The Ducksters; A Fractured Leghorn; Bunker Hill Bunny; Canary Row; Stooge for a Mouse; Pop 'im Pop; Bushy Hare; Caveman Inki; Dog Collared; Rabbit of Seville; Two's a Crowd

1951

Hare We Go; A Fox in a Fix; Canned Feud; Rabbit Every Monday; Putty Tat Trouble; Com Plastered; Bunny Hugged; Scent-imental Romeo; A Bone for a Bone; Fair-haired Hare; A Hound for Trouble; Early to Bet; Rabbit Fire; Room and Bird; Chow Hound; French Rabbit; The Wearing of the Grin; Leghorn Swoggled; His Hare Raising Tale; Cheese Chasers; Lovelorn Leghorn; Tweetie's S.O.S.; Balloot Box Bunny; A Bear for Punishment; Sleepy Time Possum; Drip-Along Daffy; Tweet, Tweet, Tweety; The Prize Pest

1952

Who's Kitten Who?; Operation: Rabbit; Feed the Kitty; Gift Wrapped; Foxy by Proxy; Thumb Fun; 4 Carrot Rabbit; Little Bebe Pepe; Kiddin' the Kitten; Water, Water Every Hare; Little Red Rodent Hood; Sock a Doodle Doo; BEEP; Hasty Hare; Ain't She Tweet; The Turn-Tale Wolf; Cracked Quack; Oily Hare; Hoppy Go Lucky; Going! Going! Gosh! Bird in a Guilty Cage; Mouse Warming; Rabbit Seasoning; The Egg-cited Roster; Tree for Two; The Super Snooper; Rabbit's Kin; Terrier Stricken; Fool Coverage; Hare Lift

1953

Don't Give Up the Sheep; Snow Business; A Mouse Divided; Forward March Hare; Kiss Me Cat; Duck Amuck; Upswept Hare; A Peck o' Trouble; Fowl Weather; Muscles Tussle; Southern Fried Rabbit; Ant Pasted; Much Abo about Nutting; There Auto Be a Law; Hare Trimmed; Tom-Tom Tomcat; Wild over You; Duck Dodgers in the 241/2th Century; Bully for Bugs; Plop Goes the Weasel; Cat-Tails for Two; A Street Cat Named Sylvester; Zipping Along; Duck! Rabbit! Duck! Easy Peckin'; Catty Cornered; Of Rice and Hen; Cats Aweigh; Robot Rabbit; Punch Trunk

1954

Dog Pounded; Captain Hareblower; I Gopher You; Feline Frame-Up; Wild Wife; No Barking; Bugs and Thugs; The Cat's Bah; Design for Leaving; Bell Hoppy; No Parking Hare; Doctor Jerkyl's Hide; Claws for Alarm; Little Boy Boo; Devil May Hare; Muzzle Tough; The Oily American; Bewitched Bunny; Satan's Waitin'; Stop, Look and Hasten; Yankee Doodle Bugs; Gone Batty; Goo Goo Goliath; By Word of Mouse; From A to Z-Z-Z; Quack Shot; Lumber Jack Rabbit; My Little Duckaroo; Sheep Ahoy; Baby Buggy Bunny

1955

Pizzicato Pussycat; Feather Duster; Pests for Guests; Beanstalk Bunny; All Fowled Up; Stork Nacked; Lighthouse Mouse; Sahara Hare; Sandy Claws; The Hole Idea; Ready, Set, Zoom!; Hare Brush; Past Perfumance; Tweetey's Circus; Rabbit Rampage; Lumber Jerks; This Is a Life?; Double or Mutton; Jumpin' Jupiter; A Kiddie's Kitty; Hyde and Hare; Dime to Retire; Speedy Gonzales; Knight-mare Hare; Two Scents Worth; Red Riding Hoodwinked; Roman Legion Hare; Heir Conditioned; Guided Muscle; Pappy's Puppie; One Frogsy Evening

1956

Bugs Bonners; Too Hop to Handle; Weasel Stop; The High and the Flighty; Broomstick Bunny; Rocket Squad; Tweet and Sour; Heaven Scent; Mixed Master; Rabbitson Crasoe; Gee Whiz-z-z; Tree Cornered Tweety; The Unexpected Pest; Napoleon Bunny-Part; Tugboat Grumpy; Supor Duck; Barbary Coast Bunny; Rocket Bye Baby; Half-jare Hare; Raw! Raw! Rooster; Slap-Happy Mouse; A Star Is Bored; Deducce, You Say; Yankee Dood It; Wideo Wabbit; There They Go-Go-Go; Two Crows from Tacos; The Honey-mousers; To Hare Is Human

1957

The Three Little Bops; Tweet Zoo; Scrambled Aches; Ali Baba Bunny; Go Fly a Kite; Tweetie and the Beanstalk; Bedevilled Rabbit; Boyhood Dane; Cheese It, the Cat; Fox Terror; Piker's Peak; Steal Wool; Boston Quackie; What's Opera, Doc?; Tobacco Road; Birds Anonymous; Dancing the Devil; Bugsy and Mugsy; Zoom and Bored; Greedy for Tweety; Touché and Go; Show Biz; Bugs; Mouse-taken Identity; Gonzales' Tamale; Rabbit Romeo

1958

Don't Axe Me; Tortilla Flaps; Hare-less Wolf; A Pizza Tweety Pie; Robin Hood Duffy; Hare-way to the Stars; Whoa, Be Gone; A Waggily Tale; Feather Bluster; Now Hare This; To Icht His Own; Dog Tales; Knighty Night Bugs; Weasel While You Work; A Bird in a Bonnet; Hook, Line and Stinker; Pre-hysterical Hare; Gopher Broke; Hip, Hip—Hurry!; Cat Feud

1959

Baton Bunny; Mouse Placed Kitten; China Jones; Hare-abian Nights; Trick or Tweet; The Mouse That Jack Built; Apes of Wrath; Hot Rod and Reel; A Matt in a Rut; Backwoods Bunny; Really Scent; Mexicali Shmoes; Tweet and Lovely; Wild and Wooly Hare; The Cat's Paw; Here Today, Gone Tomorrow; Bonanza Bunny; A Broken Leghorn; Wild About Hurray; A Witch's Tangled Hare; Unnatural Hare; Tweet Dreams; People Are Bunny

1960

Fastest with the Mostest; West of the Pesos; Horse Hare; Wild Wild World; Goldimouse and the Three Cats; Person to Bunny; Who Scent You?; Hyde and Go Tweet; Rabbit's Feast; Crockett-Doodle-Do; Mouse and Garden; Ready, Woolen and Able; Mice Follies; From Hare to Heir; The Dixie Fryer; Hopalong Casualty; Trip for Tat; Doggone People; High Note; Lighter Than Hare

1961

Cannery Woe; Zip 'n' Snort; Hoppy Daze; The Mouse on 57th Street; Strangled Eggs; Birds of a Father; D' Fightin' Ones; The Abominable Snow Rabbit; Lickety Splat; A Scent of the Matterhorn; The Rebel without Claws; Compressed Hare; The Pied Piper of Guadalupe; Prince Violent; Duffy's Inn Trouble; What's My Lion; Beep Prepared; The Last Hungry Cat; Nelly's Folly

1962

Wet Hare; A Sheep in the Deep; Fish and Slips; Quackodile Tears; Crow's Feet; Mexican Boarders; Bill of Hare; Zoom at the Top; The Slick Chick; Lounre Come Back to Me; Honey's Money; The Jet Cage; Mother Was a Rooster; Good Nose; Shishkabugs; Martian Through Georgia

1963

Devil's Feud Cake; Fast Buck Duck; The Million-Hare; Mexican Cat Dance; Now Hear This; Woolen Under Where; Hare-breadth Hurry; Banty Raids; Chili Weather; The Unmentionables; Aqua Duck; Mad As a Mars Hare; Claws in the Lease; Transylvania 6-5000; To Beep or Not to Beep

1964

Dumb Patrol; A Message to Gracis; Bartholomew versus the Wheel; Freudy Cat, Dr. Devil and Mr. Hare; Nuts and Volts; The Iceman Ducketh; War and Pieces; Hawaiian Aye Aye; False Hare; Senorella and the Glass Huarache; Pancho's Hideaway; Road to Andalay
1965  *It's Nice to Have a Mouse around the House; Cats and Bruises; The Wild Chase; Moby Duck; Assault and Peppered; Well Worn Daffy; Suppressed Dork; Corn on the Cop; Rushing Roulette; Run, Run Sweet Road Runner; Tease for Two; Tired and Feathered; Boulder Wham; Chili Con Corny; Just Plane Beep; Harried and Hurried; Go Go Amigo; Highway Runnery; Chaser on the Rocks

1966  Astroduck; Shot and Bothered; Mucho Locos; Mexican Mousepiece; The Solid Tin Coyote; Out and Out Rout; Daffy Rents; Clipperty Clobbered; A Haunting We Will Go; Snow Excuse; A Squeak in the Deep; Feather Finger; Swing Ding Amigo; Sugar and Spies; A Taste of Catnip

1967  Daffy's Diner; The Quacker Tracker; The Music Mice-Tro; The Spy Swatter; Speedy Ghost to Town; Rodent to Stardom; Go Away Stowaway; Cool Cat; Merlin the Magic Mouse; Fiesta Fiasco

1968  Hocus Pocus Powwow; Norman Normal; Big Game Haunt; Skyscraper Capers; Hippodrome Tiger; A Feud with a Dude; The Door; See Ya Later Gladiator; 3-Ring Wing-Ding; Flying Circus; Bunny and Claude; Chimp and Zee

1969  The Great Carrot Train Robbery; Fistic Mystic; Rabbit Stews and Rabbits Too; Shamrock and Roll; Bugged by a Bee; Injun Trouble

1988  The Duckorist

Other Films as Voice Artist/Actor:

1940  Pinocchio (Disney)
1949  Neptune's Daughter (Buzzell)
1964  Kiss Me Stupid (Wildler)
1986  Heathcliff: The Movie (Bianchi); Howard the Duck (Huyck); Porky Pig in Hollywood (Avery)
1988  Daffy Duck's Quackbusters (Ford); Who Framed Roger Rabbit? (Zemeckis); The Night of the Living Duck
1989  Entertaining the Troops (Mugge)
1990  Jetsons: The Movie (Hanna)

Publications

By BLANC: book—

On BLANC: books—

On BLANC: articles—

Classic Images (Muscatine, Iowa), no. 170, August 1989, and see also no. 173, November 1989.

* * *

Mel Blanc’s vocal talents are so universally known that he seems a little strange, adrift almost, in that handful of feature films—Neptune’s Daughter, Kiss Me Stupid—or archive TV shows—The Jack Benny Show—in which he appears live. A pudgy comic actor very unlike the wiry cartoon characters he voiced, he could well lay claim to being one of the most versatile performers in the cinema for his contributions to the marvellous characterizations—engineered, of course, by animator-directors like Bob Clampett, Tex Avery, Chuck Jones, Frank Tashlin, Robert McKimson and Friz Freleng—of a fifty-year run of cartoons, from Picador Porky in 1937 to Who Framed Roger Rabbit? and The Duckorist in 1988. Often playing against himself—as in the incredible confrontations between Bugs Bunny and Daffy Duck or Bugs and Yosemite Sam—Blanc created, and incarnated the voices of an unparalleled run of Warner Brothers characters—Porky Pig and Elmer Fudd are just about the only major characters he didn’t originate, and he swiftly took over Porky from Joe Dougherty—keeping them consistent even when, as in Duck Amuck, almost everything about their physical form was in a constant state of flux.

The jewels of Blanc’s career are the sustained film-to-film performances as Bugs Bunny, Daffy Duck and Sylvester P. Pussycat. Bugs is the archetypal Warner Bros. character, a snarling, wise-talking urban rabbit who stands next to Disney’s cute animal tykes as Humphrey Bogart does to Shirley Temple. Permanently chomping on a carrot and sneering ‘‘nyahh, what’s up doc?’’ at hapless opponents, Bugs is, even more than Mickey Mouse, the great versatile creation of the cartoon short, at home in any historical period or geographical locale—emerging from a tunnel in a Mexican bullring or the Abomiable Snowman-haunted Himalayas, he can fish out a map and muse ‘‘I knew I should have taken that left turn at Albuquerque’’—and the equal of any bullying hunter, predator, rabbit chef, monster or do-badger in sight, without ever seeming, as Mighty Mouse does, like a moralizing twit. Daffy and Sylvester are subtler achievements, especially considering that they started out with exactly the same lisp: Daffy the money-grubbing coward, doomed to horrible failure in every enterprise, hopelessly outclassed by the smarts of Bugs (‘‘you’re dethpicable!’’) or the natural innocence of Porky or Elmer, occasionally prone to fits of absolute raving insanity, ridiculously miscast in the hero roles (Duck Dodgers in the 241/2nd Century, Robin Hood Daffy) he insists Jack Warner give him; Sylvester the hopelessly carnivore without the heart to consume his prey (‘‘suffering succotash’’), eternally the victim of the sinisterly benign Tweety Pie or the deceptively sweet-looking Grandma, sometimes (as in the sublime Birds Anonymous) desperately at odds with his own hunger-fuelled nature, or even stuck with the role reversal (Snow Business) of being at odds in a snowbound cabin with a mouse so hungry he wants to eat a cat.

Besides this trio of masterful characterizations, Blanc also managed to pull off a succession of one-joke creatures, helping them last beyond their debut appearances into modest series of their own: Pepe le Pew, a Charles Boyer-cum-Maurice Chevalier voiced romantic skunk whose bizarre French expressions prefigure Inspector Clouseau (‘‘ahh, la belle femme skunke fatale’’); Foghorn Leghorn, a Southern rooster always eager to give unwanted advice to others as he struts around the yard; Wile E. Coyote, in his rare speaking roles as he abandons his pursuit of the Road Runner to try, unwisely, for a substitute diet of Bugs Bunny; Marvin the Martian, the stranglevoiced Thing From Another World who wants to disintegrate Earth to make room for a freeway; Barney Rubble, Fred Flintstone’s bumbling neighbor, doubling also as the voice of Dino the Dinosaur; Woody Woodpecker, devising the voice and laugh and then passing them on to a succession of others when an exclusive contract with Warners prevented him from continuing with Walter Lantz; the Tasmanian
Devil, inarticulate but a furiously munching fiend, appetite incarnate;
Speedy Gonzalez, the one-gag mouse with the perky Mexican accent;
and Yosemite Sam, “the blood-thirstiest, shoot-'em firstiest, gosh-darn worstiest bandit North, South, East and West of the Pecos!,” originally a pint-sized cowboy with a huge moustache but later a pirate or a black knight.

Cartoons are essentially driven by sight gags, sometimes to the extent of throwing in captions to the pictures, but Warners also believed in a riot of sound. This was exemplified not only by Blanc’s many voices—gaining him sole credit even on cartoons where the likes of Stan Freberg did some of the work—but also by Carl W.
Stalling’s ferocious and furious orchestral accompaniment. Some of Blanc’s greatest moments find him bursting into song, in the mock-Wagnerian shenanigans of What’s Opera, Doc? or The Rabbit of Seville, not to mention Bugs’ occasional bursts of “What Do They Do in a Rainy Night in Rio?” or “Singing in the Bathtub,” and he also scored novelty hits with “I’m Glad to Be Bugs Bunny,” “The Woody Woodpecker Song” and, immortally, “I Tort I Taw a Putty Tat.”

—Kim Newman

BLANKE, Henry

Producer. Nationality: German. Born: Berlin, 30 December 1901; son of the painter Wilhelm Blanke. Career: 1920—joined UFA, Berlin; personal assistant to Ernst Lubitsch, and accompanied him to Hollywood, 1922; 1927–28—worked for Warner Brothers in Hollywood, then headed their production in Germany, 1928–30, their foreign productions in Hollywood, 1930–31, supervised their American output, 1931–32, and then producer, 1932–61 (sometimes termed

Films as Producer:

1933 Female (Curtiz); Bureau of Missing Persons (Del Ruth); The Mystery of the Wax Museum (Curtiz); Lady Killer (Del Ruth); I Loved a Woman (Green); Convention City (Mayo)
1934 Fashions of 1934 (Fashion Follies of 1934) (Dieterle); Madam
De Barry (Dieterle); Fog Over Frisco (Dieterle);
Journal of a Crime (Keighley); Gambling Lady (Mayo);
Dragon Murder Case (Humberstone); The Firebird
(Dieterle); British Agent (Curtiz); Dr. Monica (Keighley)
1935 The Story of Louis Pasteur (Dieterle); Secret Bride (Dieterle);
The White Cokatoos (Crosland); The Girl from 10th Avenue (Green); A Midsummer Night's Dream (Reinhardt and Dieterle); I Am a Thief (Florey)
1936 The Petrified Forest (Mayo); Anthony Adverse (LeRoy); The Green Pastures (Connelly and Keighley); The White Angel
(Dieterle); Satan Met a Lady (Dieterle); Green Light
(Borzage); The Case of the Velvet Claw (Clemens)
1937 The Life of Emile Zola (Dieterle); Call It a Day (May);
Confession (May)
1938 Jezebel (Wyler) (co); The Adventures of Robin Hood (Curtiz and Keighley); Four Daughters (Curtiz); White Banners
(Goulding); Juarez (Dieterle) (co)
1939 The Old Maid (Goulding) (co); Four Wives (Curtiz);
Daughters Courageous (Curtiz); We Are Not Alone (Goulding)
1940 The Sea Hawk (Curtiz) (co); A Dispatch from Reuters (This Man Reuter) (Dieterle); Saturday’s Children (V. Sherman); Four Mothers (Keighley)
1941 The Maltese Falcon (Huston) (co); The Great Lie (Goulding)
(co); Blues in the Night (Litvak); Out of the Fog (Litvak);
The Sea Wolf (Curtiz)
1942 The Gay Sisters (Rapper)
1943 The Constant Nymph (Goulding); Old Acquaintance (V. Sherman); Edge of Darkness (Milestone)
1944 The Mask of Dimitrios (Neyugesco)
1945 Roughly Speaking (Curtiz)
1946 Deception (Rapper); My Reputation (Bernhardt); Of Human Bondage (Goulding); One More Tomorrow (Godfrey)
1947 Cry Wolf (Godfrey); Deep Valley (Neyugesco); Escape Me
Never (Godfrey); The Woman in White (Godfrey)
1948 The Treasure of the Sierra Madre (Huston); Winter Meeting
(Windust); June Bride (Windust)
1949 The Fountainhead (K. Vidor); Beyond the Forest (K. Vidor)
1950 Bright Leaf (Curtiz)
1951 Lightning Strikes Twice (K. Vidor); Come Fill the Cup
(Douglas); Goodbye, My Fancy (V. Sherman); Tomorrow
Is Another Day (Feist); Room for One More (Taurog)
1952 The Iron Mistress (Douglas); Operation Secret (Seiler)
1953 So Big (Wise); She’s Back on Broadway (Douglas); So This Is Love (The Grace Moore Story) (Douglas)
1954 Phantom of the Rue Morgue (Del Ruth); Lucky Me (Donohue);
King Richard and the Crusaders (Butler); Young at Heart
(Douglas)
1955 The McConnell Story (Tiger in the Sky) (Douglas); Sincerely
Yours (Douglas)
1956 Serenade (A. Mann)
1958 Too Much, Too Soon (Napoleone);
1959 The Nun’s Story (Zinnemann); The Miracle (Rapper);
Westbound (Boetticher)
1960 Ice Palace (V. Sherman); Cash McCall (Pevney)
1961 The Sins of Rachel Cade (Douglas)
1962 Hell Is for Heroes (Siegel)

Films as Assistant Director:

1924 The Marriage Circle (Lubitsch); Three Women (Lubitsch)
1926 My Official Wife (Stein); The Third Degree (Curtiz)
1927 Brass Knuckles (Bacon); The College Widow (Mayo); Dearie
(Mayo); The Desired Woman (Curtiz); Don’t Tell the Wife
(Stein); Ginsberg the Great (Haskin); Matinee Ladies
(Haskin); A Million Bid (Curtiz)
1928 Across the Atlantic (Bretherton); Rinty of the Desert (Lederman)
Henry Blanke represents one of those individuals of little public fame, but who had immense power as a producer during Hollywood’s Golden Age of the 1930s and 1940s. His immediate boss, Jack L. Warner, was, of course, well known, as were the stars over whose careers he had so much influence, including Humphrey Bogart, Bette Davis and Olivia de Havilland. But in his more than 30 years at Warners, Henry Blanke supervised the creation of hundreds of films, including such motion picture classics as The Adventures of Robin Hood, Juarez, The Maltese Falcon, and The Treasure of the Sierra Madre.

Blanke came to Hollywood as part of the then-famous European connection so active during the 1920s. In the two decades before the World War II dozens of directors, producers, and even stars (most notably Marlene Dietrich) emigrated from impoverished European film communities to Hollywood to seek fame and fortune. No European film industry, even that in Germany, could come close to challenging Hollywood. As a native-born German, Blanke made his connection with Hollywood by helping Warners create versions of their films for foreign audiences. Once in the United States he brought the noted director William Dieterle from Germany into Warners’s fold.

With the coming of sound Warners became a major Hollywood studio. Quickly Blanke moved into third position of power at the studio, behind only the founding brother Jack and Warners’s ace assistant Hal Wallis. When Wallis left for Paramount in the mid-1940s, Blanke had no rival other than the brothers Warner themselves. He would leave the company only when it was sold to outsiders in the 1950s.

Blanke seemed to have his greatest success with vehicles designed for stars Paul Muni, Errol Flynn, and Bette Davis. Muni starred in the Academy Award-winning The Life of Emile Zola in 1937, as well as Juarez the following year, both Blanke productions. Flynn essayed The Adventures of Robin Hood and The Sea Hawk for Blanke’s production unit. The Petrified Forest helped Davis become a major star, and Jezebel earned her an Academy Award for Best Actress in 1938. These and 11 other Davis films were produced directly by Henry Blanke.

Blanke’s films for Warners after World War II did not seem to match his pre-war efforts. But make no mistake about it—they made the company millions of dollars. But the studio system in which Blanke had labored for more than 30 years came to an end in the 1950s and his skills were no longer needed at Warners. Blanke left for an independent deal at Paramount but that union produced only one film, Hell Is for Heroes, his final effort as a producer, issued in 1962. Henry Blanke was the product of an earlier era when the studio system produced, year-in and year-out, the classic narrative films which continue to define the Golden Age of American movie making.

—Douglas Gomery

Films as Editor:

1924  Why Men Leave Home (Stahl) (co); Husbands and Lovers (Stahl) (co)
1925  Fine Clothes (Stahl) (co)
1926  Memory Lane (Stahl); The Gay Deceiver (Stahl)
1927  The Enemy (Niblo); Bringing Up Father (Conway); Lovers? (Stahl); In Old Kentucky (Stahl) (co)
1928  Telling the World (Wood) (co); The Mysterious Lady (Niblo); A Lady of Chance (Leonard)
1929  The Bridge of San Luis Rey (Brabin); Wise Girls (Kempy) (Hopper)
1930  The Rogue Song (L. Barrymore); Redemption (Niblo); Strictly Unconventional (Burton); The Lady of Scandal (The High Road) (Franklin); A Lady’s Morals (The Soul Kiss; Jenny Lind) (Franklin)
1931  New Moon (Conway); The Southerner (The Prodigal) (Pollard); It’s a Wise Child (Leonard); The Cuban Love Song (Van Dyke); Five and Ten (Daughter of Luxury) (Leonard);
Margaret Booth was one of the great film editors in Hollywood history. She started out as a patcher (film joiner) for D. W. Griffith and ended her career some 60 years later as one of the true insiders at MGM. The classic Hollywood film is surely defined by its characteristics of editing. Booth was one of the innovators who shepherded the classic Hollywood editing style through the coming of sound, color, and wide-screen.

Like many of her contemporaries, Booth joined the American film industry without any formal training. She took her first job with D. W. Griffith’s company right out of high school. She then moved to Famous Players and the Mayer studios. By the early 1930s she ranked as one of the top editors at MGM. In 1939 she was appointed MGM’s supervising film editor, a position she held until the studio collapsed in 1968.

Booth was, if anything, a survivor. Once she left MGM, she began to work as a freelance editor on such 1970s blockbusters as The Way We Were, The Sunshine Boys, and Murder by Death. She was one of those rare individuals whose career encompassed the history of Hollywood from its beginnings through the studio years into the age of television.

There have been few opportunities for women behind the camera in Hollywood. “Film editing,” noted the New York Times in 1936, “is one of the few important functions in a studio in which women play a substantial part.” And at MGM Booth was able to advance in the ranks so that she held a position of substantial creative power in the 1930s and 1940s. Her patron was Louis B. Mayer himself, for Booth had worked as a secretary with the old Mayer studio before it ever merged into MGM.

Booth’s career neatly divides into two parts. During the first, up through her appointment as head of editing at MGM, she cut many a noted film. These include a number of MGM classics: The Barretts of Wimpole Street, Romeo and Juliet, and Camille. Somewhat surprisingly for one with so much industry power and influence, Booth received only one Academy Award nomination for film editing. This was for the 1935 version of Mutiny on the Bounty. She did not win the award. However it should be noted that Booth did get an Honorary Oscar in 1977 to denote “sixty-two years of exceptionally distinguished service to the motion picture industry as film editor.”

In the second half of her career Margaret Booth worked strictly as an editing supervisor. In her own words she did no actual editing for 30 years. But she assigned those who did, and approved their work and performance. As such she held immense power and continued the tradition of a style of classic editing for which Hollywood films of the studio years have now become famous. All filmmakers from the late 1930s through the late 1960s who worked at MGM had, in the end, to go through Booth to have the final editing of sound and image approved. Thus for three decades she represented one of the truly important but relatively unknown powers in the history of Hollywood filmmaking.

—Douglas Gomery

BOST, Pierre

See AURENCHE, Jean, and Pierre BOST

BOSUSTOW, Stephen

Animator, Writer, Designer, Director and Producer. Nationality: Canadian. Born: Victoria, British Columbia, 6 November 1911; family moved to California when Bosustow was a boy. Career: 1922—won first art prize at school; worked with Ub Iwerks; worked for the Walter Lantz Organisation at Universal Studios; 1934–41—writer and sketcher at Walt Disney’s studio; laid off after participating in workers’ strike; 1944—produced Hell Bent for Election for Roosevelt’s election campaign; 1945—founded UPA (United Producers of America) Animation Studio; 1960—sold UPA. Award: Academy Award, Magoo’s Puddle Jumper, 1956. Died: Of pneumonia, 4 July 1981.

Films as Producer at UPA:

1945 Flat Hatting (Hubley)
1946 The Brotherhood of Man (Hubley and Cannon)
1948 Robin Hoodlum (Hubley)
1949 The Magic Fluke (Hubley); Ragtime Bear (Hubley); Punchy Deleon (Hubley); The Miner’s Daughter (Cannon); Giddy Yap (Babbitt); Trouble Indemnity (Burness); The Popcorn Story (Babbitt); Bungled Bungalow (Burness)
1950 Spellbound Hound (Hubley)
1951 Gerald McBoing Boing (Cannon); The Family Circus (Babbitt); Bare Faced Flatfoot (Burness); Georgie and the Dragon (Cannon); Fuddy Duddy Buddy (Hubley); Wonder Gloves (Cannon); Grizzly Golfer (Burness)
1952 Rooty Toot Toot (Hubley); The Four Poster (Hubley); The Oompahs (Burness); Sloppy Jalopy (Burness); Dog Snatcher (Burness); Willie the Kid (Cannon); Pink and Blue Blues (Burness); Pete Hothead (Burness); Hotxy Footsy (Hurtz); Madeline (Cannon); Captains Outrageous (Burness)
1953 Christopher Crumpet (Cannon); A Unicorn in the Garden (Hurtz); The Tell-Tale Heart (Parmelee); Little Boy with a Big Heart (Cannon); The Emperor’s New Clothes (Parmelee); Safety Spin (Burness); Gerald McBoing Boing’s Symphony (Cannon); Magoo’s Masterpiece (Burness); Magoo Slept Here (Burness)
1954 Destination Magoo (Burness); Bringing Up Mother (Hurtz); Ballet-Oop (Cannon); Magoo Goes Skiing (Burness); The Man on the Flying Trapeze (Parmelee); Fogdjet’s Budget (Cannon); Kangaroo Courting (Burness); How Now Boing Boing (Cannon)
1955 When Magoo Flew (Burness); Magoo Makes News (Burness); Spare the Child (Liss); Four Wheels and No Brake (Parmelee); Magoo’s Check-Up (Burness); Baby Boogie (Julian); Magoo’s Express (Burness); Madcap Magoo (Burness); Christopher Crumpet’s Playmate (Cannon); Stage Door Magoo (Burness); Rise of Dutos Lang (Evans)
1956 Gerald McBoing Boing on the Planet Moo (Cannon); Magoo’s Puddle Jumper (Burness); Magoo’s Caine Mutiny (Burness); Magoo Goes West (Burness); Calling Dr. Magoo (Burness); The Jaywalker (Cannon); Magoo Beats the Heat (Burness); Trailblazer Magoo (Burness); Magoo’s Problem Child (Burness); Meet Mother Magoo (Burness)
1957 Magoo Goes Overboard (Burness); Matador Magoo (Burness); Magoo Breaks Par (Burness); Magoo’s Glorious Fourth (Burness); Magoo’s Masquerade (Larriva); Magoo Saves the Bank (Burness); Rock Hound Magoo (Burness); Magoo’s Moose Hunt (Cannon); Magoo’s Private War (Larriva)
1958 Trees and Jamaica’s Daddy (Keller); Sailing and Village Band (Keller); Magoo’s Young Manhood (Burness); Scoutmaster Magoo (Cannon); The Explosive Mr Magoo (Burness); Magoo’s Three Point Landing (Burness); Magoo’s Cruise (Larriva); Love Comes to Magoo (McDonald); Spring and Saganaki (Keller); Gunshoe Magoo (Turner)

1959 1001 Arabian Nights (Kinney); Bwana Magoo (McDonald); Picnics Are Fun and Dino’s Serenade (Keller); Magoo’s Homecoming (Turner); Merry Minstrel Magoo; Magoo’s Lodge Brother (Larriva); Terror Faces Magoo (Ishii)

Publications

By BOSUSTOW: book—

Chief By Birthright, 1981.

On BOSUSTOW: articles—

* * *

The name of Stephen Bosustow is inseparably linked with the United Productions of America. This important artist was not only its founder but also its spiritual father. At the end of the forties and the beginning of the fifties, this corporation became the greatest rival of Walt Disney as a result of Bosustow’s artistic way of looking at animated—especially cartoon—film, but also it served as a creative base for young artists. Now Bosustow could realize his dreams and ideas both in his own films (the first such film—Brotherhood of Man—raised a sharp reaction and brought about notable success) and in serial stories and series with characteristic figures such as Mr. Magoo, the little boy Gerald McBoing Boing, and others.

The importance of this cartoon filmmaker, scriptwriter, art designer and director consists, above all, in the fact that he was the initiator of new trends and currents. He created conditions for artistic development of modern animation in the United States and to a pleiad of talented artists such as the painter Saul Stenberg, the designer Thurber, Robert Cannon, Peter Burness, Ted Parmelee and others. The basis of the work of this group headed by Bosustow was inspired by modern artistic tendencies, abstraction and children’s drawing, and the graphic development of modern posters and caricature. Bosustow gave way to personalities: he did not restrain them by his own style and challenged the established “rules” of American cartoon film from the point of view of both content and graphic form. Thus he broke conventions and established new values. He abandoned gags and the settled “O-style” which was characteristic of the cartoon slapstick of that time. He did not portray animals and did not tell fables but dealt with problems of human beings in cartoon films for adults.

In comparison with Disney and his technical perfection of animation and naturalistic detailed drawings, Bosustow returned to a simpler form of drawing and animation. He often used linear drawing. The scene expressed only the essential, and partial animation stressed absurdity or even the grotesque. This shows in his feature films where he aimed at effectiveness of scenes regardless of the principles of perspective in his desire to make the scenes visually more attractive.

Stephen Bosustow’s tendencies influenced others such as Hy Hirsch, Ernest Pintoff, Gene Deitch and, to some extent, even Walt Disney himself. They influenced the commercial trick film and the works of Tex Avery, Walter Lantz, Paul J. Smith, and others. Thus Bosustow could be called the founder of the modern American school of animation.

—Vacláv Merhaut

BOYD, Russell

Cinematographer. Nationality: Australian. Born: 1944 in Australia. Career: Worked at Cinesound, Melbourne; shot commercials for Supreme Films, Paddington, late 1960s; first feature credit as director of photography for Between Wars, 1974; cinematographer for dozens of Australian and American films; television credits include A Town Like Alice, 1981. Awards: Australian Cinematographers Society (ACS) Cinematographer of the Year, for Between Wars, 1976; British Academy Award (BAFTA) for Best Cinematography, 1977, and Academy of Science Fiction, Horror and Fantasy Films Saturn Award for Best Cinematography, 1979, for Picnic at Hanging Rock; Australian Film Institute (AFI) Award for Best Achievement in Cinematography, for Break of Day, 1977; AFI Award for Best Achievement in Cinematography, for The Last Wave, 1978; AFI Award for Best Achievement in Cinematography, 1981, and ACS Cinematographer of the Year, 1982, for Gallipoli; AFI Raymond Longford Award for significant contribution to Australian filmmaking, 1988. Address: 52 Sutherland Street, Cremorne NSW 2090, Australia. Agent: Smith/Gosnell/Nicholson & Assoc., PO Box 1166, 1515 Palisades Dr., Pacific Palisades, CA 90272–2113, U.S.A.

Films as Cinematographer:

- 1974 Between Wars (Thornhill)
- 1975 Picnic at Hanging Rock (Weir); The Man From Hong Kong (Wang and Trenchard-Smith); The Golden Cage (Kuyulu)
- 1976 Summer of Secrets (Sharman); Break of Day (Hannam)
- 1977 Gone to Ground (Dobson); The Singer and the Dancer (Armstrong); The Last Wave (Weir)
- 1979 Just Out of Reach (Blagg); Dawn! (Hannam); The Chain Reaction (Barry and Miller)
- 1980 ... Maybe This Time (McGill)
- 1981 Gallipoli (Weir); A Town Like Alice (Stevens—for TV)
- 1982 The Year of Living Dangerously (Weir); Starsacked (Armstrong)
- 1983 Tender Mercies (Beresford); Phar Lap (Wincer); Stanley: Every Home Should Have One (Storm)
- 1984 A Soldier’s Story (Jewison); Mrs. Soffel (Armstrong)
- 1986 Burke & Wills (Clifford); ‘'Crocodile’’ Dundee (Faiman); The Perfectionist (Thomson)
- 1987 High Tide (Armstrong)
- 1988 The Rescue (Fairfax); ‘'Crocodile’’ Dundee II (Cornell)
- 1989 In Country (Jewison); Blood Oath (Wallace); Sweet Talker (Jenkins)
- 1990 Almost an Angel (Cornell); Prisoners of the Sun (Wallace)
- 1991 Turtle Beach (Wallace)
- 1992 Forever Young (Miner); White Men Can’t Jump (Shelton)
- 1994 Cobb (Shelton)
- 1995 Operation Dumbo Drop (Wincer)
- 1996 Tin Cup (Shelton)

BOYDWRITERS AND PRODUCTION ARTISTS, 4th EDITION

1997 Liar Liar (Shadyac)
1998 Dr. Dolittle (Thomas)
1999 Company Man (Askin)

Other Films:

- 1997 Oscar and Lucinda (Armstrong) (additional camera)

Publications

By BOYD: articles—

On BOYD: articles—

- McCarthy, Todd, “Speed of Light,” in Film Comment (New York), September-October 1989.

* * *

Australian cinematographer Russell Boyd came to prominence in 1975 for lensing Peter Weir’s Picnic at Hanging Rock. He was part of the New Wave that revitalized the Australian motion picture industry by introducing the “quality” film, a hybrid of art cinema and classic Hollywood conventions. Technically skilled and imaginative, Boyd and his peers—producers, directors, screenwriters, and cinematographers—had their first features in the can before their 30th birthdays. These productions dominated Australian screens and received international acclaim.

Boyd was an overnight sensation whose career had started unassumingly years earlier. He first became interested in the production of television commercials, news, and documentaries while working at Cinesound in Melbourne. After moving to Sydney in the mid-1960s he started his apprenticeship as a cameraman at Supreme Films in Paddington: there he shot commercials every day for five years. Boyd’s feature film break came when director Michael Thornhill hired him as director of photography for Between Wars (1974), and the effort earned him the Cinematographer of the Year award from the Australian Cinematographers Society (ACS). Boyd made his worldwide mark with Picnic at Hanging Rock, while he was still making a name for himself. Along with many young and talented filmmakers, he continued to work throughout the 1970s on domestic productions, promoting the growth of “an authentic Australian cinema.” Part of the Australian film drain of the early 1980s, Boyd journeyed to Los Angeles to work on features helmed by Aussie directors Bruce Beresford (Tender Mercies, 1983) and Gillian Armstrong (Mrs. Soffel, 1984). Unlike many of his compatriots, he also continued to shoot films Down Under. With smash hit “Crocodile” Dundee in 1986, Boyd proved that an Australian production could have the same slick look as its American competition. His craftsmanship put him in demand behind the camera on both continents, but his choice of projects grew more commercial. In the 1990s, for example, he shot the Australian film Turtle Beach and then a number of mainstream American movies including White Men Can’t Jump, Tin Cup, Liar Liar, and Dr. Dolittle.

Pinpointing Boyd’s personal style is difficult. He is the first to admit “the contrast between one picture and the next can be extraordinary” for a cinematographer like himself, who tailors different looks for different films. In addition, depending upon the demands of a scene, he shifts back and forth between the British and the American system. If the lighting design is complex, Boyd adopts the British “lighting cameraman” model: he concentrates on the lighting, while the camera operator works more closely with the director to set the shot. When working in the American style, Boyd collaborates more significantly with the director to determine the camera angle, composition, and choreography. Although many of Boyd’s credits have come from collaborating with the same directors (Peter Weir, Gillian Armstrong, Norman Jewison, Ron Shelton), he has achieved considerably different looks on each of their projects.

Boyd distinguishes between a “cameraman’s picture” and a performance piece. He earned lavish praise for his conspicuously artistic photography in Picnic at Hanging Rock, a “cameraman’s picture” with a lyrical style intrinsic to the drama. He based its look on the Impressionist period of Australian art, covering his camera lens with a yellow-dyed net to simulate the golden light in the turn-of-the-century paintings. He created the hallucinatory, hypnotic feel of the picnic sequences by shooting at different camera speeds. To enhance the romantic image of the Victorian schoolgirls, Boyd backlight their hair and used longer focal-length lenses to capture them in the middleground, surrounded by wildflowers and grass rendered out of focus in the foreground and background planes. His tight framing and extreme angles convey a sense of claustrophobia and impending doom when the girls start winding their way up Hanging Rock, the site of their puzzling disappearance. Boyd’s pictorialism greatly contributed to the drama’s mystery and atmosphere.

When shooting a performance piece like Norman Jewison’s A Soldier’s Story (1984), based on Charles Fuller’s Pulitzer Prize-winning play, Boyd uses conventional compositions to support the acting and direction. In a 1984 article, Boyd explains, “To me, A Soldier’s Story is pretty much performance and the director’s choreography of the scenes. It doesn’t have—and can’t support—a very strong visual style.” He subordinates style to the needs of the theatrical piece, often making the camerawork disappear so that nothing detracts from the acting.

Regardless of the project, Boyd’s working methodology remains the same. Valuing creative collaboration, he has studied paintings and period photographs with directors and production designers to help determine the appropriate look for a film. His favorite tools include adjustable Fresnel spotlights and color-compensating filters placed at the camera lens rather than at the lamps. Boyd is known for his exceptional night work, which includes the evening murder sequence that sets the plot of A Soldier’s Story into motion, and his flair for photographing scenery in movies as diverse as Tender Mercies and Tin Cup, both shot in Texas.

Except for winning a British Academy Award for Picnic at Hanging Rock, Boyd has never collected a major cinematography award outside the Australian film industry. Several factors contribute to the lack of recognition. Boyd adapts his style to a film’s shifting modes and moods, an approach that affords him less visibility than those cinematographers who constantly capture beautiful pictures or select projects on the basis of showcasing their talent. During the last decade, while feature film production and budgets have remained static in Australia, Boyd has accepted more and more work on mainstream American projects. Often he adjusted to new crews containing personnel with little experience working together. As a result, his 40 films as director of photography are a mixture of notable outings and average, impersonal jobs. Instead of developing into the visual artist promised by his earlier work, Boyd has become a hardworking, accomplished craftsman.

—Susan Tavernetti

BOYLE, Robert

Art Director. Nationality: American. Born: Los Angeles, California, 1910. Education: Attended the University of Southern California, Los Angeles, B. Arch. 1933. Family: Married. Career: Worked for several architectural firms, and acting extra; 1933—sketch artist and draftsman, Paramount, then worked for Universal, RKO, and Universal again. Agent: The Gersh Agency Inc., 232 North Canon Drive, Beverly Hills, CA 90210, U.S.A.

Films as Art Director or Production Designer:

1942 Saboteur (Hitchcock)
1943 Flesh and Fantasy (Duvivier); Shadow of a Doubt (Hitchcock); Good Morning, Judge (Yarbrough); South of Tahiti (White Savage) (Lubin)
1946 Nocturne (Marin)
1947 They Won’t Believe Me (Pichel); Ride the Pink Horse (Montgomery)
1948 Another Part of the Forest (Gordon); An Act of Murder (Life Today for Tomorrow) (Gordon); For the Love of Mary (de Cordova)
1949 The Gal Who Took the West (The Western Story) (de Cordova); Abandoned (Newman)
1950 Buccaneer’s Girl (de Cordova); Louisa (Hall); The Milkman (Barton); Sierra (Grenen); Mystery Submarine (Sirk)
1951 Iron Man (Pevney); Mark of the Renegade (Fregonesi); The Lady Pays Off (Sirk); Weekend with Father (Sirk)
1952 Bronco Buster (Boetticher); Lost in Alaska (Yarbrough); Yankee Buccaneer (de Cordova); Back at the Front (G. Sherman)
1953 Girls in the Night (Arnold); The Beast from 20,000 Fathoms (Lourié); Gunsmoke (Juram); Abbott and Costello Go to Mars (Lamont); Ma and Pa Kettle on Vacation (Lamont); It Came from Outer Space (Arnold); East of Sumatra (Boetticher)
Ma and Pa Kettle at Home (Lamont); Johnny Dark (G. Sherman); Ride Clear of Diablo (Hibbs)
Chief Crazy Horse (G. Sherman); Kiss of Fire (Newman); The Private War of Major Benson (Hopper); Lady Godiva (Lubin); Running Wild (La Cava)
Never Say Goodbye (Hopper); A Day of Fury (Jones); Congo Crossing (Pevney)
The Night Runner (Biberman); The Brothers Rico (Karlson); Operation Mad Ball (Quine)
Buchanan Rides Alone (Boetticher); Wild Heritage (Haas)
The Crimson Kimono (Fuller); North by Northwest (Hitchcock)
Cape Fear (Lee Thompson) (co)
The Birds (Hitchcock); The Thrill of It All (Jewison) (co)
Marnie (Hitchcock)
Do Not Disturb (Levy) (co); The Reward (Bourguignon) (co)
The Russians Are Coming, the Russians Are Coming (Jewison)
Fitzwilly (Delbert Mann); In Cold Blood (R. Brooks); How to Succeed in Business without Really Trying (Swift)
The Thomas Crown Affair (Jewison)
Gaily, Gaily (Chicago, Chicago) (Jewison)
The Landlord (Ashby)
Fiddler on the Roof (Jewison)
Portnoy’s Complaint (Lehman)
Mame (Saks)
Bite the Bullet (R. Brooks)
Leadbelly (Parks)
Winter Kills (Richert)
Private Benjamin (Ziefi)
Staying Alive (Stallone)
Jumpin’ Jack Flash (P. Marshall)
Dragnet (T. Mankiewicz)
Troop Beverly Hills (Kanew)
To Meteoro vima tou pelargou (The Suspended Step of the Stork) (Angelopoulos)

Publications

By BOYLE: articles—

Film Comment (New York), May/June 1978.

On BOYLE: article—

Films and Filming (London), March/April 1970.

* * * *

During his 46 years as an independent Hollywood art director, Robert Boyle worked on a variety of films, applying his technique and the tricks of the art director’s trade to make realistic looking sets and locations. He created images that would not only enhance the story but also cement it to time and place. From Hitchcock’s Saboteur to Troop Beverly Hills, Boyle worked on such films as The Russians Are Coming, the Russians Are Coming, The Thomas Crown Affair, and the original Cape Fear. But along with these impressive films, Boyle also served as art director on such films as Abbott and Costello Go to Mars and It Came from Outer Space, as well as a few Ma and Pa Kettle films. Westerns such as Bronco Buster and such costume films as Buccaneer’s Girl were also part of Boyle’s oeuvre.

Boyle began his career in the thirties when film sets started to move away from the style that was more suitable to the theater, from which they had been borrowed. Film studios began to maintain large art departments and art department heads were appointed to be responsible for the ultimate style of the studio. At Paramount, where Boyle was associated with Wiard Ihnen, the art department head was Hans Drier, a German architect. Drier brought a flair for the modern to Paramount, having been influenced by Bauhaus artists and the Swiss architect, Le Corbusier. It was said that Drier’s Paramount was able to make sets look more like the real thing.

Although trained as an architect, Boyle started out as a sketch artist and assistant designer. He was, however, able to use his architectural skills to design the realistic sets that were in demand by the studios during the thirties. Developing his skills at this time made Boyle a believer in film sets and the total control the art director could exercise over them. He also found that it was easier to design a location than to find one. After reading a script, Boyle would put into reality the images he conceived from the story. On the film set, Boyle would be able to use all the tricks of his trade to design and build a believable set.

As films changed and location filming became more popular, Boyle adapted as well. He used his tricks to make the location shots more controllable. Using mattes to improve the mood and floodlights to correct existing conditions—or adding bits and pieces to the location—Boyle used anything to try to create the preconceived image he got from the script. Although he worked on memorable films by other great directors, it is his work with Hitchcock for which Boyle is best known. He first worked as an art director on Hitchcock’s Saboteur in 1942, then worked on four more Hitchcock films—Shadow of a Doubt, North by Northwest, Marnie, and The Birds, receiving an Oscar nomination for his work on North by Northwest.

Hitchcock wanted to use actual locations for North by Northwest, including Grand Central Station and Mount Rushmore. Since filming at Mount Rushmore was limited, the sequence was filmed on a stage using rear projections to create the illusion that it was filmed on location. For Grand Central Station, Boyle used a maximum of light to create a proper set. Boyle said he flooded the station with so much light he wondered if Paramount could pay the bill. He also showed his adaptability with location shooting by using an ideal site for the crop-duster assault on Cary Grant. The image is one of a lone figure in the dusty field with no cover in sight desperately trying to flee the airplane. The contrast between the impeccably dressed Grant, the dust from the fields, and the emptiness of the landscape combine to create a memorable scene.

The most startling and perhaps the most technically complex film Boyle has worked on is The Birds. Boyle drew his inspiration from Edvard Munch’s painting “The Cry” for his overall look. For the technical challenge, he turned to the Disney studios for their special effects technology. Using mattes, and a borrowed special effect prism from Disney, he was able to exercise total control of the imagery and to make convincing illusions. One of the more famous scenes is the bird’s-eye view of the fire in the town of Bodega Bay. Boyle had to create the entire scene using mattes; even the apparently moving smoke was part of the mattes. The only actual “real” objects were the gas, the phone booth, the car and, of course, the fire. The filming of the fire was done in the studio parking lot, and the town was added in matte by matte to create the final image. Boyle said they could not film the fire on location because the town in the movie was actually a composite of several towns. Boyle created Bodega Bay by using bits and pieces from one town or another, another example of his ability to take control and create his vision of the story while on location.

Marnie was to be his last film with Hitchcock, and Boyle went on to work with Norman Jewison for several films. He was nominated for an Academy Award for his work on Gaily, Gaily—a lavish production set in Chicago in 1910 in which he successfully incorporated historic landmarks and period scenes in and around Chicago. Fiddler on the Roof, Jewison’s film version of the theater production, was shot on location in Yugoslavia. The film called for real houses, real animals and real landscapes. Boyle again was nominated for an Academy Award for his work on this film, the look of which was described as gritty and realistic.

Boyle continued to show his adaptability and versatility well into the 1980s working on such films as Private Benjamin, Staying Alive (Stallone’s sequel to Saturday Night Fever), Jumpin’ Jack Flash, and finishing his career with the film version of Dragnet in 1987 and Troop Beverly Hills in 1988.

—Renee Ward

BOZZETTO, Bruno

Films as Animator:

1958 Tapum!, la storia delle armi
1959 La storia delle invenzioni
1960 Un Oscar per il Signor Rossi
1961 Alpha Omega
1963 I Due Castelli; Il Signor Rossi va a Sciare
1964 Il Signor Rossi al mare
1965 West and Soda
1966 Il Signor Rossi compra l’automobile
1967 Una vita in scatola; L’uomo e il suo mondo
1968 Vip mio fratello superuomo
1969 Ego
1970 Il Signor Rossi al camping
1971 Sottaceti
1972 Oppio per oppio; Il Signor Rossi al Safari Fotografico
1973 Opera; La cabina
1974 Self Service; Il Signor rossi a Venezia
1975 Gli Sport del Signor Rossi
1976 Il Signor Rossi cerca la Felicita; La Piscina; Allegro non troppo
1977 I sogni del Signor Rossi; Le Vacanze del Signor Rossi; Strip tease
1978 Baby Story
1979 Happy Birthday

1980 Giallo automatico; Sandwich; Ma come fanno a farli così belli? (4 films); Lilliput-put (13 films)
1981–83 Quark (35 films)
1981 Homo Technologicus (7 films)
1982 Tennis Club; Sporting; Homo Technologicus (8 films)
1983 La Pillola; Milano Zero; Sigmund; Nel Centro del Mirino; Homo Technologicus (6 films)
1984 Moa Moa; Sandwich; Homo Technologicus (8 films)
1985 El Dorado; Homo Technologicus (5 films)
1986 Spiaggia privata; Spider; Quark Economia (13 films)
1987 Sotto il ristorante Cinese (Below the Chinese Restaurant); Baeus; Quark (5 films)
1988 Sigmund (for TV); Mini Quark (29 films); Quark (6 films); Mister Tao
1990 Cavalette; Big Bang
1991 Dancing; Ski Love
1992 Talilem
1993 Maleducazione in Montagna; Educazione al Cinema; Drop 1995 Help?

Publications

By BOZZETTO: articles—

Filmblatter, 2 February 1968.
Segnocinema (Vicenza), vol. 7, no. 28, May 1987.

On BOZZETTO: book—

On BOZZETTO: articles—

Rivista del Cinematografo (Rome), July 1964.
Film a Doba (Prague) no. 2, 1965.
Rivista del Cinematografo (Rome), January 1967.
Image et Son (Paris), November 1967.
Cineforum (Bergamo), November 1968.
Rivista del Cinematografo (Rome), June 1975.
Film Guia, June/July 1975.
Canemaker, John, in Film News, Summer 1979.
Film Library Quarterly (New York), vol. 13, no. 4, 1980.
Banc-Titre (Paris), December 1980.

* * *

Bruno Bozzetto’s early education consisted of classical studies and some years at university devoted to law and geology, but since entering animation and design at the age of 17, he has succeeded in a field that was primarily dominated by the Hollywood-based studios, such as those of Walt Disney, Hanna-Barbera, and more recently, Filmation and Ralph Bakshi.

Bozzetto’s main attributes are his consistency of output and his inimitable style of grotesque, highly individual caricature. He can define with simple outlines the true essence of a personality which is instantly recognizable and commands interest. As a film cartoonist, he is able to expand a character with the right behavior patterns and to create a complementary personality in depth. One of his stock characters, Il Signor Rossi, who appears in numerous short cartoons from 1960 onwards and in three of his feature-length films, became the symbol of the Italian “little man”; resourceful, determined, greedy, and vain, he charmingly puts his family interests above all others.

Bozzetto’s rare asset is his ability to coordinate and control story continuity, characterization of personalities, development of story, complementary sound effects and music (which underline the behavior of his figures), humor (which never steps out of context of the subject), and ideas (which are within the bounds of the technical flexibility of animation) to achieve the final effect. His sharp, European wit differs from the American (which is more physical), inasmuch as he comments satirically on human shortcomings, such as greed and stupidity. Nevertheless, his humor is light, it never swings over into preaching, and is fixed firmly within the limits of traditional Italian comedy.

His large output, which includes several series for television and six full-length animated feature films, reached a peak with Allegro non troppo in 1976. A parody on a grand symphony concert, it plays on the unexpected happenings which could occur during such an event. The film combines pleasing graphic design, close relationships between choreography of movement and music, and a degree of visual progression which few animated films have achieved. Several of Bozzetto’s shorter films, such as Alpha Omega, Opera, Ego, and Self Service, all classic cautionary tales for our time, exemplify his integration of graphic design, storytelling, and European humor.

—John Halas

BRACKETT, Charles

Writer and Producer. Nationality: American. Born: Saratoga Springs, New York, 26 November 1892. Education: Attended Williamstown College, Williamstown, Massachusetts, B.A. 1915; Harvard Law School, Cambridge, Massachusetts, LL.B., 1920. Family: Married 1) Elizabeth Barrows Fletcher, 1920 (died 1948); two daughters; 2) Lillian Fletcher, 1953. Career: Served in the United States Army in World War I: 2nd lieutenant, and vice-consul in St. Nazaire, France (Medal of Honor, France); 1920–25—practicing lawyer, and also writer: first novel, The Counsel of the Ungodly, 1920; 1926–29—drama critic, The New Yorker; 1930—joined father’s law firm (also board member, Adirondacks Trust Company); retained these positions throughout his career: 1934—first film as writer, Enter Madam!; 1937–50—collaborator with Billy Wilder; 1943—first film as producer, Five Graves to Cairo; 1949–55—president, Motion Picture Academy; 1954—worked mainly as producer; 1962—retired. Awards: Academy Award (producer and writer) for The Lost Weekend, 1945; Sunset Boulevard, 1950; Titanic, 1953; Writers Guild Award for Sunset Boulevard, 1950; Writers Guild Laurel Award, 1956, and

Films as Writer:

1934 Enter Madam! (Nugent)
1935 College Scandal (The Clock Strikes Eight) (Nugent); The Crusades (De Mille); The Lost Outpost (The Last Outpost) (Gasnier and Barton); Without Regret (Young)
1936 Woman Trap (Young); Rose of The Rancho (Gering)
1937 Live, Love, and Learn (Fitzmaurice)
1938 Bluebeard’s Eighth Wife (Lubitsch)
1939 Midnight (Leisen); Ninotchka (Lubitsch)
1940 Arise, My Love (Leisen)
1941 Hold Back the Dawn (Leisen); Ball of Fire (Hawks)
1942 The Major and the Minor (Wilder)
1944 Skirmish on the Home Front (Short)

Films as Writer and Producer:

1943 Five Graves to Cairo (Wilder)
1945 The Lost Weekend (Wilder)
1946 To Each His Own (Leisen)
1948 The Emperor Waltz (Wilder); A Foreign Affair (Wilder); Miss Tatlock’s Millions (Haydn)
1950 Sunset Boulevard (Wilder)

Founders Award, 1966; Special Academy Award, 1957. Died: In Beverly Hills, California, 9 March 1969.

Charles Brackett
1951 The Mating Season (Leisen); The Model and the Marriage Broker (Cukor)
1953 Niagara (Hathaway); Titanic (Negulesco)

Films as Producer:

1944 The Uninvited (Allen)
1954 Garden of Evil (Hathaway); Woman’s World (Negulesco)
1955 The Girl in the Red Velvet Swing (Fleischer) (+ co-sc); The Virgin Queen (Koster)
1956 Teenage Rebel (Goulding) (+ co-sc); The King and I (Walter Lang); D-Day, the Sixth of June (Koster)
1957 The Wayward Bus (Vicas)
1958 The Gift of Love (Negulesco); Ten North Frederick (Dunne); The Remarkable Mr. Pennypacker (Levin)
1959 Journey to the Center of the Earth (Levin) (+ co-sc); Blue Denim (Blue Jeans) (Dunne)
1960 High Time (Edwards)
1962 State Fair (J. Ferrer)

Publications

By BRACKETT: fiction—

The Counsel of the Ungodly, New York, 1920.
Week-End, New York, 1925.
That Last Infirmity, New York, 1926.
American Colony, New York, 1929.
Entirely Surrounded, New York, 1934.

By BRACKETT: other books—

With Billy Wilder and Walter Reisch, Ninotchka (screenplay), 1966.

By BRACKETT: articles—

‘Putting the Picture on Paper,’’ in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), December 1951.

On BRACKETT: articles—

Film Comment (New York), May-June 1982.

* * *

Who was Charles Brackett? Just a secretary to Billy Wilder? That premise has been proffered numerous times and when one looks at Brackett’s work outside the 14 pictures he did with Wilder, there appears to be some truth in it. Yet in all fairness, Brackett was, like many of his screenwriting colleagues, a chameleon who adapted to the influence exerted by his collaborators at the time.

Brackett was a graduate of Harvard Law School and a practicing lawyer for some six years before his second novel, Week-End, landed him a job as drama critic on The New Yorker. In 1932, he signed a writing contract with Paramount and the ten or so pictures he worked on before joining forces with Billy Wilder are mostly forgettable. His first collaboration with Wilder was the screenplay for Bluebeard’s Eighth Wife, directed by Ernst Lubitsch. This sophisticated, witty story of greed on the French Riviera owed much to Wilder’s dark humor, but Brackett’s contribution should not be diminished. Wilder’s films all have a streak of cruelty running through them, and Brackett’s chief talent was his ability to be a mellowing buffer to this characteristic, to ‘‘Americanize’’ Wilder’s Viennese idiom and to provide the ‘‘bridging dialogue’’ between Wilder’s perceptive but sarcastic ideas.

They continued this extremely successful collaboration through 1950—frequently being joined by two other writers—Walter Reisch and Richard Breen—and their combined filmographies include some of Hollywood’s most memorable and sophisticated films: Midnight, Ninotchka, Ball of Fire, A Foreign Affair, The Lost Weekend, and Sunset Boulevard, the last two winning Academy Awards. Brackett’s reaction to Wilder’s dark side is revealed in a comment he made about Sunset Boulevard in 1952: ‘‘[Norma Desmond] was also tragic. Perhaps we should have told about her with a more audible lump in our throats. We thought it effective to suppress the pitying sounds and let the audience find the pity for themselves.’’ It is obvious that Wilder is not of the ‘‘lump in our throats’’ school of filmmaking, and his treatment of Sunset Boulevard as a real horror story is what makes it the greatest film about Hollywood.

Brackett, on the other hand, was very definitely of a more sentimental nature and the work he wrote and produced without Wilder proves this. His best work without Wilder was the extremely romantic women’s picture To Each His Own, the sensuous marital suspenser Niagara, and the melodramatic Titanic, which earned him, and Reisch, Academy Awards. And as a producer he proved extremely successful with middle-of-the-road sentimental entertainments such as The Virgin Queen, The King and I, The Remarkable Mr. Pennypacker, and State Fair.

While Wilder is the dominant force behind Brackett’s best films, the contribution to the collaborative art of the motion picture by such writers as Brackett must not be underestimated. Without the leveling force of a Brackett, Wilder’s films would probably never have found the wide audience they did.

—Ronald Bowers

BRACKETT, Leigh

Films as Writer:
1945  The Vampire’s Ghost (Selander)
1946  The Big Sleep (Hawks); Crime Doctor’s Manhunt (Castle)
1959  Rio Bravo (Hawks)
1961  Gold of the Seven Saints (Douglas)
1962  Hatari! (Hawks)
1967  El Dorado (Hawks)
1970  Rio Lobo (Hawks)
1973  The Long Goodbye (Altman)
1980  The Empire Strikes Back (Kershner)

Publications

By BRACKETT: fiction—

No Good from a Corpse, New York, 1944.
Stranger at Home (ghost-written for George Sanders), New York, 1946.
The Sword of Rhiannon, New York, 1953.
Alpha Centauri—or Die!, New York, 1963.
Follow the Free Wind, New York, 1963.
People of the Talisman, the Secret of Sinharat, New York, 1964.
The Coming of the Terrans (stories), New York, 1967.

By BRACKETT: other books—

(Editor) Strange Adventures in Other Worlds, New York, 1975.

By BRACKETT: articles—

Take One (Montreal), September-October 1972.

On BRACKETT: book—

On BRACKETT: articles—

Biografären, October 1966.
Take One (Montreal), November 1978.

Upon being asked about Leigh Brackett’s work on El Dorado in the book Hawks on Hawks, director Howard Hawks replied: “She wrote that like a man. She writes good.” Therein lies not only Hawks’s opinion of Brackett but also his screen heroes’ reaction to a person who comes through in a tight spot. “You were good back there” (Big Sleep), “You were good in there tonight” (Rio Bravo), were the best compliments that a Hawks character could pay. And Brackett did come through for Hawks, writing screenplays for five of his films, beginning with The Big Sleep.

By the time that Brackett began working with Hawks, the director already had a definite style. The “Hawksian woman” as she is now known—a strong-willed character who gambles, drinks, can use a gun, and still remains feminine—had made appearances in previous films. Hawks normally shaped his action around two or more men and their reaction to pressure and to the Hawksian woman. Brackett’s contribution as one of Hawks’s screenwriters was to hone the male–female relationships, and to connect scenes and action that Hawks gave her. Hawks preferred his writers to be present on the set, and there was constant rewriting as dialogue was changed and then changed again. During their period together, Brackett and Hawks produced ensemble films in which the hero is helped by a group of oddball characters who surround him and aid him in a life or death situation. In four of the five films that they did together (Rio Bravo, Hatarl!, El Dorado, Rio Lobo), John Wayne was that hero.

Brackett believed, as Hawks did, that the usual Hollywood leading ladies were not very strong or interesting, and the Hawksian woman was a necessary character in their films. The screenwriter and the director also agreed that you had to depend on yourself because others can fail you in any situation—especially love. And while the characters of their films reject help in a tight situation, they receive it from unexpected places. On the subject of love, the characters usually have two partners, one of whom is a temporary love interest. But once started, the relationship is strong.

Without Hawks, Brackett wrote the script for The Long Goodbye, directed by Robert Altman and, like The Big Sleep, based on a Raymond Chandler story. This script, however, was more brutal than anything that Brackett wrote for Hawks, and it portrayed a modern-day Marlowe who, like the 1940s detective, has definite values of honor and trust and downplays danger with a flippant attitude. This Marlowe reacts to events with “O.K. with me,” but, unlike his ’40s counterpart, he is truly alone. He is betrayed by everyone, including his cat, and in the end he shoots a friend, Terry, who has deceived him. Brackett admitted that she changed the ending of the Chandler story. This script, however, was more brutal than the Chandler story. This script, however, was more brutal than most obviously the strong sarcastic Leia, the daring Han Solo, and their relationship. When Solo attempts to kiss her, Leia says, “Being held by you isn’t quite enough to get me excited.” But the attraction was there, and like Vivian and Marlowe, and Feathers and Chance, it is only a matter of time.

—Alexa L. Foreman

BRANCO, Paulo

Films as Producer:

1979  Oxalá (Vasconcelos); Aurelia Steiner—Vancouver (Duras)

1980  Loin de Manhattan (Biette); Conversa Acabada (Botelho); Silvestre (Montiro)

1981  Le Territoire (Ruiz); Francisca (de Oliveira); Amor de perdicao (de Oliveira); Ana (Reis and Cordeiro); A estrangeira (Grilo); Fim de estação (Silva); Aspern (de Gregorio)

1982  Les Trois couronnes du matelot (The Sailor’s Three Crowns) (Ruiz); Der Stand der Dinge (The State of Things) (Ruiz) (co); O Lugar do morto (Vasconcelos)

1983  Dans la ville blanche (Tanner) (+ ro); Pointe de juite (Ruiz) (+ ro); Jusqu’a la nuit (Martiny)

1984  Les Amants terribles (Dubroux); Maine-Océan (Rocier); Notre mariage (Sarmiento); Angola (Ruiz); Der Rosenkönig (Schroeter); Ninguém Daus Vezes (Mello) (co); Le Meilleur de la ville (Victor) (co); Les Destins de Manoel (Ruiz)

1985  L’Île au trésor (Ruiz); L’Eveillé du Pont de l’Alma (The Insomniac at the Bridge) (Ruiz); Le Soulier de satin (de Oliveira); Vertiges (Laurent); Gardien de la nuit (Limosin); Faubourg St. Martin (Guiguet); O Outono (Canijo)

1986  Across the Heart (R. Kramer); Les Mendiant (Jacquet); Eden-misère (Laurent); Mon cas (de Oliveira); Agosta (Mello)

1988  Tres menos eu (Three Minus Me) (Canijo) (co)

1990  Nao ou a vá gloria de mandar (No, or the Vain Glory of Command; Non, ou la vaine gloire de commande) (de Oliveira); Le Trésor des Îles Chiennes (Le Trésor des Îles Chiennes) (Monteiro) (co); Border Film (Dubroux); Une Flame dans mon coeur (A Flame in My Heart) (Tanner)

1991  L’Homme qui a perdu son ombre (The Man Who Lost His Shadow) (Tanner) (co); A divina comedia (The Divine Comedy) (de Oliveira); Bis ans Ende der Welt (Until the End of the World) (Wenders) (exec)

1992  O Último Mergulho (The Last Dive) (Monteiro); No Dia dos Meus Anos (On My Birthday) (Botelho); O Fim do Mundo (Grilo); O Dia do Desespero (The Day of Despair) (de Oliveira); Das Tripas Coração (Twin Flames) (Pinto); Un Paraguas para tres (An Umbrella for Three) (Vega) (assoc)

1993  Madregilda (Regueiro) (assoc); Les Gens normaux n’ont rien d’exceptionnel (Normal People Are Nothing Exceptional) (Laurence Ferreira Barbosa) (co); L’Absence (The Absence) (Handke); Vale Abraão (Abraham Valley) (de Oliveira)
1994  Mil e Uma (A Thousand and One) (Moraes); Le Livre de cristal (Crystal Book) (Plattner); Fado majeur et mineur (Fado, Major and Minor) (Ruiz); Casa de Lava (Down to Earth) (Costa); A Caixa (Blind Man’s Bluff) (de Oliveira); Longe Daqui (Guerra); Três Palmeiras (Three Palm Trees) (Botelho); Lisbon Story (Wenders)

1995  O Convento (The Convent) (de Oliveira)

1996  No Sex Last Night (Double Blind) (Calie and Shephard); Le Journal de séducteur (Diary of a Seducer) (Dubroux); Le Coeur fantôme (Garrel); Cinco Dias, Cinco Noites (Fonseca e Costa); Trois vies et une seule mort (Three Lives and Only One Death) (Ruiz); Os Olhos da Ásia (The Eyes of Asia); Party (de Oliveira); For Ever Mozart (Goddard); Few of Us (Bartas); Camélélone (Cohen)

1997  Transatlantique (Laurent); O Homem do Comboio (Bruxelas and Rezende); Pour rire! (Belvaux); Généalogies d’un crime (Genealogies of a Crime) (Ruiz); Viagem ao Princípio do Mundo (Voyage to the Beginning of the World) (de Oliveira); A Casa (The House) (Bartas); J’ai horreur de l’amour (I Hate Love) (Laurence Ferreira Barbosa); Porto Santo (Vicente Jorge Silva); Ossos (Bones) (Costa); Alors voilà (Piccoli)

1998  Trois ponts sur la rivière (Biette); On a très peu d’amis (Monod); Sapatos Pretos (Canijo); Requiem (Tanner); Inquietude (Anxiety) (de Oliveira); Comic Act (Hazan); L’Inconnu de Strasbourg (Sarmiento); Traffic (Botelho); Longe da Vista (Grilo); L’Examen de minuit (Midnight Exam) (Dubroux); L’Ennui (Kahn)

1999  Lilo Lili (Vermillard); La Nouvelle Ève (The New Eve) (Corsini); Le Temps retrouvé (Time Regained) (Ruiz) (exec); As Bodas de Deus (Monteiro); A Carta (The Letter) (de Oliveira)

2000  El Mar; (The Sea); Tarde Derrais; La Fidélité; Fidelity; La Captive; (The Captive); Palavara e Utopia

Other Films:

1972  Perdido per cen (Vasconcelos) (asst d)

1983  Les Tricheurs (Schroeder) (exec pr); Vidas (Telles) (ro); La Ville des pirates (City of Pirates) (Ruiz) (exec pr)

1984  De grens (Frontiers) (de Winter) (exec pr)

1989  Piano panier (ro as Antônio)

1999  Les Infortunes de la beauté (ro as Le gardien)

Publications

By BRANCO: articles—

On BRANCO: articles—

* * *

In the first three years of the 1980s, Paulo Branco changed the axis of film production in Portugal. Since 1983, Branco has been the Portuguese pole of European production, putting his mark as producer on some of the most important European vanguard cineastes, Raoul Ruiz, Wim Wenders, Marguerite Duras, Werner Schroeter, and Alain Tanner, without mentioning his particular relationship with Manoel de Oliveira.

In Portugal, where production depended exclusively on financial assistance from the state, Branco, in association with Antonio-Pedro Vasconcelos, formed V.O. Filmes and started a small revolution, creating a system of complicated personal relations that has permitted him to produce a number of films unknown since the best years of the “cinema novo,” a movement equivalent to the New Wave in France. The prestige he acquired in France as a distributor (showing films by Straub, de Oliveira, Ruiz, and Welles in France, and a variety of films in the Portuguese market) was such that he was able to attract to Portugal important European filmmakers, integrating them into his production system which relies, in equal proportion, on a love of film, rapid production, and a multiplication of financing which Branco, with his gambler’s instinct, calls “controlled risks.” Another factor in his success is the “clan” spirit he elicits, evident on the continued presence on his productions of the cinematographer Acácio de Almeida, the sound recorder Joaquim Pinto, and the set designer Maria José Branco.

The filmmaker most amenable to Paulo Branco’s production system is Raoul Ruiz, a Chilean radical living in France. Since Le Territoire, most of Ruiz’s films have been produced by Branco with financial backing through television, film festivals, cultural institutions, and “advance over receipts,” a type of state support for film production in France. The secret of multiple production can be explained in part by the films’ low budgets much below standard costs, and in part by the aesthetic and stylistic similarity between Ruiz and Branco. Ruiz’s cinema thrives on an illusionist representation in which improvisation is a strong part. As Branco has said, “$600,000 or $700,000 on a film of Ruiz represents four times more money than on a normal film. Nothing is ever wasted. The amount of the budget is the amount actually spent.”

Because of the difficulty in financing films by new filmmakers or films that go beyond the routinely commercial, Branco has used a system whereby he produces two films simultaneously, one, financially certain, financing a second film of uncertain standing. For instance, Wenders’s Der Stand der Dinge supported Ruiz’s Le Territoire, and Ruiz’s La Ville des pirates was produced using a diversion of part of the budget of Les Tricheurs by Barbet Schroeder.

The production of the films of Manoel de Oliveira is, however, different from the usual system. Unlike Ruiz, de Oliveira is a perfectionist unable to surrender the most minor elements of his conception of a film. His films require a long and rigorous preparation, similar to that of large-scale European films. For Le Soulier de satin, however, Branco was able to provide a production of 50 sets, a cast of 7 months with a crew of 75 people. His Portuguese budget of $1,800,000, however, would have been $9,000,000 had the film been produced in France, yet this film, as well as Francisca and Mon cas, attains an unexpected splendor.
Though one cannot say that Branco has sparked a new aesthetic movement, his production system has been able to make films by new “auteurs,” and new films by established makers (think of Dans la ville blanche by Tanner and Der Stand der Dinge by Wenders), and to make at the same time a type of European series B film which does not lack a characteristic mark of elegance.

—M. S. Fonseca

BRAUNBERGER, Pierre

Films as Producer/Executive Producer (Shorts):

1924 Entr’acte (Clair)
1925 Rien que les heures (Cavalcanti)
1926 Voyage au Congo (M. Allégret and Gide)
1927 La P’lote Lili (Cavalcanti)
1929 Un Chien andalou (Buñuel)
1937 Records 37 (Brunius)
1945 Gitanes d’Espagne (Castanier); Six si petits (Bertrand); Chambre 34 (Barma)
1946 Une Partie de campagne (A Day in the Country) (Renoir—produced 1936); Paris 1900 (Vedres) (+ sc); Le Bâton (Gibaud); L’Homme (Margaritis); Monsieur Badin (Régnier)
1947 Les Petites Annonces (Barma); Illusion (Rougeul); La Cathédrale (Béranger)
1948 Transports urbains (Gibaud); Journal masculin (Barma); Versailles et ses fantômes (Béranger); Van Gogh (Resnais); Actualités burlesques (Margaritis); Rondo est sur la piste (Henry)
1949 Guernica (Resnais and Hessens); Les Actualités: ça c’est des nouvelles! (Margaritis)
1950 Histoire de pin-up girls (Gibaud); Guagin (Resnais); Toulouse-Lautrec (Hessens)
1951 La Course de taureaux (Bullfight) (+ d, sc); Pompon rouge (Lalande); Le Fils de l’eau (Rouche—compilation); L’Art Haut-Rhônan (Gibaud); Station mondaine (Gibaud); Palais-Royale (Béranger); Le Dictionnaire des pin-up girls (Gibaud)
1952 Avec André Gide (M. Allégret—compilation); En quête de Marie (Gibaud)
1953 La Sérénade et ses marchands (Gibaud); Chagall (Hessens)
1954 Ballade parisienne (Gibaud); Croissance de Paris (Gibaud)
1955 Impressions de New York (Reichenbach); New York ballade (Reichenbach); Visages de Paris (Reichenbach); Paris qui ne dort pas (Reichenbach); Une Lettre pour vous (Vétusto);

Mammy Water (Ma mère l’eau) (Rouch); Les Maîtres fous (Rouch)

1956 Paris d’hier et d’aujourd’hui (Hier et aujourd’hui) (Gibaud); Symphonie New York (Reichenbach); Le Grand Sud (Reichenbach); Houston Texas (Reichenbach); Novembre à Paris (Reichenbach); Toute la mémoire du monde (Resnais); Le Coup de berger (Rivette); Les Abeilles (Dhuit); Surprise-boogie (Pierre); Soir de fête (Pierre)

1957 O Saisons, o châteaux (Varda); Les Marines (Reichenbach);

Au pays de Porgy and Bess (Reichenbach); L’Américain se détend (Reichenbach); L’Été indien (Reichenbach); Carnaval à la Nouvelle Orléans (Reichenbach); Alberobello; ‘ Au pays des trulli’ (Reichenbach); Ballade sur les fils (Vétusto); L’Oeil du maître (Vétusto); Eygalières, commune de France (Vétusto); La Santé à l’étable (Vétusto); La Vie dans l’herbe (Dhuit); Fantaisie sur quatre cordes (Pierre); Tous les garçons s’appellent Patrick (Godard); Les surmenés (Doniol-Valcroze); Terre d’insectes (Calderon); Terre d’oiseaux (Calderon and Dragesco)

1958 Le Printemps de la mer (Gibaud); Le Chant du Styrène (Resnais); Bonjour, Monsieur La Bruyère (Doniol-Valcroze); Les Eglises romanes en Sainteagne (Bazin and Doniol-Valcroze); Élèves-maîtres (Vétusto); Ces gens de Paris (Fabiani); Au bon coin (Kechbron); Recherches (Agam); Charlotte et son Jules (Godard); Terre sous-marine (Calderon); Une Histoire d’eau (Godard and Truffaut); Le Vivarium (Calderon); La Montagne aux météores (Bissirieux); La Vie des termites (Grasse and Dragesco); L’Amérique insolite (Reichenbach); Moi, un noir (Rouch)

1959 Drôles d’actualités (Pierre)

1960 L’Abeille et les hommes (Dhuit); Photo-souvenir (Fabiani); La Jeune Fille et l’étoile (Pierre); Aventures en Laponie (Bissirieux); Ile Maurice (Rossif); Prélude à l’Asie (Rossif); La Soif des bêtes (Dragesco and Calderon); Tant qu’il est temps: le cancer (Vétusto and Doniol-Valcroze)

1961 Le soleil estéat (Gilles); Les Guêpes (Dhuit); Les Oiseaux d’Afrique (Dragesco and Calderon); L’Amour existe (Pialat); La Frontière (Caryol and Durand); Calligraphie japonaise (Azechinsky); Cinq cents balles (Rippert); Dans la réserve africaine (Calderon and Dragesco); La Machine à parler d’amour (Rossi, i.e. Japrisot); Quatorze juillet (Hurtado); Le match de catch (Bekretaoui); La Pyramide humaine (Rouche)

1962 Jeu 1 (Reichenbach); Exemple Etreât (Lepeuve); Venu du Havre (Lepeuve); Le Menutier (Blue); L’Idée fixe (Triangle) (Rossi, i.e. Japrisot); Série du Tort (Hurtado); Dante n’avait rien vu (Hurtado); Delphica (Korber); Retour à New York (Reichenbach); A la mémoire du rock (Reichenbach); L’Amérique Lunaire (Reichenbach); Le Paris des mannequins (Reichenbach); Le Paris des photographes (Reichenbach); Le Petit Café (Reichenbach)

1963 Illustrations (Reichenbach); Gestes de France (Reichenbach); Histoire d’un petit garçon devenu grand (Gilles and Reichenbach); La Douceur du village (Reichenbach); Captain Cap (Hurtado); Havre sac (Lepeuve); L’Endormi (Blue); Le Voleur (Blue); 1880 (Clerfeuille); Dé partement 66 (Laporte); Suivez l’oeuf (Robin); Plus qu’on ne peut donner (Chevassu); L’Épouse infernale (Korber); La Dame à la longue vue (Korber); Eve sans trêve (Korber); Au-to-portrait (Patris); Le Monde des marais (Dhuit); Les Hommes de la Wahgi (Villeminot); Gaspard fait du cheval (Matalon); Artifices (Reichenbach); Gaspard a un rendez-vous (Matalon); La Vie des oiseaux en Mauritanie (Dragesco)

1964 Gaspard se marie (Matalon); La Princesse muette (Blue); Les Albigeois (Laporte); Altitude 8625 (Korber); La Rentrée (Korber); La Rose de mon jardin (Grimblat); Paolo, le petit pecheur (Labrit); La Parachutistes (Jean-Pierre and Jean-Paul Janssen); L’Avatar botanique de Mlle. Flora (Barbillon); ‘Véronique et Marie-France’ ep. of Le Fleur de l’age, ou les adolescents (The Adolescents) (Rouche)

1965 Lomelin (Reichenbach); Paris au jour d’hiver (Gilles); Dunoyer de Segonzac (Reichenbach and Lepeuve); La Vengeance d’une orpheline russe (F. and M. Lepeuve); La Goûmbe des jeunes noceurs (Rouch); L’Affaire des poissons (Barbillon); Les Hommes du Sepik (Villeminot); Week-end total (Calderon); Le Drame du taureau (Clergue); Pierre Boulez; Fano; Corrida d’hier et d’aujourd’hui (Popelin); Au Guadalquivir (Puzenat); Le Dernier Refuge (Puzenat); Lourdes (Gion); La Longue Nuit (Seban)

1966 Aurora (Reichenbach); Equisofo 1900 (Lepeuve); L’Incertaine Vocation de Médéric de Plougastel (Barbillon); Chanson de gestes (Gilles); Linarès, le jeune toréador (Clergue); Dans Arles où sont les Alyscamps (Clergue); Soleil (Thorn); Une Misanthrope (Pirès); La Direction d’acteurs par Jean Renoir (G. Braunberger); Stéphane et la garde chasse (Duval)

1967 Lumière (M. Allégret); Exposition 1900 (M. Allégret); Concerto Brandenbourgeois (Reichenbach); L’Etoile de mer (Puzenat); Le Phare (Clergue); La Sixième Face du Pentagone (Marker); Vive eau (Roger); Soleil de pierre (Baux); L’Emploi du temps (Demaio); Les Toros (Flaujac); Delta de sel (Clergue)

1968 Au peril de la mer (Roger); Du cuir en juin (G. Braunberger); Débat du siècle (M. Allégret); Jeunesse de France (M. Allégret); La Grande-Bretagne et les Etats-Unis de 1896 à 1900 (M. Allégret); Je vous salue, Paris (Reichenbach); Mario Prassinos (Clergue); Les Seigneurs des mers du sud (Villeminot); L’Entretien du toréador (Clergue); Vivre à San Francisco (de Gaspari)

1969 Monique à Vichy (Reichenbach); La Fête des morts (Reichenbach); Le Mariage des dieux (Reichenbach); Suite en si mineur (Reichenbach); Méditerréenne (Clergue); Sables (Clergue); L’Art de la turlutte (Pirès); Les Flamands Roses de Camargue (Clergue); La Fête des mères (Pirès); Le Deuxième Ciel (Roger); Europe continentale avant 1900 (M. Allégret); Europe méridionale au temps des rois (M. Allégret); Au champ de manœuvre (Roger); Cinéma cinéma (Lajournade); Libre de ne pas l’être (Lajournade); Comme je veux (Comoli); Kill Patrice, un sherif pas comme les autres (Reichenbach); L’Avant-veille du grand soir (Fansten); L’Onirromane (Ginet); L’Armoire (Moulin); Et quand vient le soir (Desclercs); Trois hommes dur un cheval (Moussy); Les Moissons de l’espoir (Reichenbach)

1970 Gromaire (Reichenbach); A fleur d’eau (Reichenbach); L’Opéra de quatre pesos (Reichenbach); Visage mystérieux d’Océanie (Villeminot); Dressage de chevaux sauvages (Clergue); La Tortue et le renard (J. and C. Clerfeuille); Le Droit d’asile (Lajournade); En attendant l’auto (G. Braunberger); Un Coup pour pur rien (Comoli); Chambre de bonne (Moulin); Les Voisins n’aînement pas la musique (Fansten); Le Chasseur (Reichenbach); Un Lion nommé l’Américain (Rouch); On ira lui porter des oranges (Wachsberger); L’Autre (Grandjouan)

1971 Prison à l’américaine (Reichenbach); Voyage en Camardie (Clergue); La Mort ne tue jamais personne (Reichenbach); Eliette, ou instants de la vie d’une femme (Reichenbach); La Forêt calcinée (Le Feu) (Clergue); Le Renard et le corbeau (J. and C. Clerfeuille); Hans Hartung (Ferlet); Le Révolte (Bersy); Le Laboratoire de l’angoisse (Leconte); Narcissus/Echo (Foldes); Le Leçon de musique (Scorpion); La Vie sentimentale de Georges le Tueur (Berger)

Films as Producer/Executive Producer (Features):

1924 Monsieur Beaufica (Olcott) (asst)
1925 La Fille de l’eau (Renoir)
1926 Nana (Renoir) (+ ro)
1927 Sur un air de Charleston (Charleston) (Renoir); En rade (Sea Fever) (Cavalcanti); Yvette (Cavalcanti)
1928 Tire au flanc (Renoir)
1929 La Route est belle (Florey)
1930 L’Age d’or (Buhuel); L’Armour chante (Florey)
1931 Les Amants de minuit (M. Allégret and Genina); Mam’zelle Nitouche (M. Allégret); On purbe Bébé (Renoir); La Chienne (Renoir); Fantômas (Féjos); L’Amour à l’américaine (Féjos and Haymann); Baleydier (Mamy)
1932 Le Blanc et le noir (M. Allégret and Florey); La Petite Chocolatière (M. Allégret)
1934 Sans famille (M. Allégret)
1936 Vous n’avez rien à déclarer? (Joannon)
1937 Forfaiture (L’Herber)
1939 Menaces (Gréville)
1946 Paris 1900 (Vedrès) (+ sc)
1948 Les Aventures des Pieds-Nickelés (Aboulker)
1949 Le Trésor des Pieds-Nickelés (Aboulker)
1950 Le Tampon du capiston (Labro); Bertrand, coeur de lion (Dhery)
1951 La Crime du bouij (Cerf); Jocelyn (de Casembroot); La Vie de Jésus (En souvenir de moi) (Gibaud)
1953 Julietta (M. Allégret)
1959 L’Eau à la bouche (Game for Six Lovers) (Doniol-Valcroze); Ein Engel auf Erden (Angel on Earth) (von Radavany)
1960 Tirez sur le pianiste (Shoot the Piano Player) (Truffaut)
1961 Cuba si! (Marker); La Dénonciation (The Immoral Moment) (Doniol-Valcroze); La Temps du ghetto (The Witness) (Rossif); Un Coeur gros comme ça (The Winner) (Reichenbach)
1962 Vivre sa vie (My Life to Live) (Godard); Virginie (Boyer)
1963 Muriel (Resnais); L’Amour avec des si . . . (Lelouch); La Difficulté d’être infidèle (Bonnie à tout faire) (Toublanc-Michel); La Bestiaire d’amour (Calderon)
1964 La Punitión (Rouch); De l’amour (Aurel); La Femme spectac-ule (Night Women) (Lelouch); Une Fille et des fusils (To Be a Crook) (Lelouch)
1965 La Chasse au lion à l’arc (The Lion Hunters) (Rouch); Les Grands Moments (Lelouch)
1966 Mamaia (Varèla); Martin Soldat (Deville)
1967 Jaquar (Rouch)
1968 Erotissimo (Pirès); Plaisir d’amour (Reichenbach); L’Astragale (Casaril) (+ art d)
1969 Ma nuit chez Maud (My Night at Maud’s) (Rohmer)
1970 Medicine Ball Caravan (We Have Come for Your Daughters) (Reichenbach); Petit à petit (Rouch); Etes-vous fiancée à un marin grec ou à un pilote de ligne? (Aurel)
1971 Fantasia chez les ploucs (Pirès); On n’arrête pas le printemps (Gilson); Catch Me a Spy (Clément); La Cavale (Mitrani); Je, tu, elles . . . (Foldes); La Fin des Pyrénées (Lajournade); J’ai tout donné (Reichenbach)
1973 Elle court, elle court, la banlieu (Pirès)
1974 Comment réussir . . . quand on est con et pleurnichard (Audiard); Comme un pot de fraises (Aurel); L’Agression (Pirès)
1975 Attention les yeux (Pirès)
1976 Sex O’Clock U.S.A. (Reichenbach)
1978 Les Héroïnes du mal (Borowczyk)
1979 Collections privées (Jacquin); Le Risque de vivre (Calderon)
1984 Dionysos (Rouch); Kusameikyu
1990 Les Chevaliers de la table ronde (Llorca)

Publications

By BRAUNBERGER: book—

By BRAUNBERGER: articles—

Cinéma (Paris), March 1961.
Film (London), Spring 1963.
Kosmorama (Copenhagen), December 1970.
Cinéma (Paris), February 1972.
Ecran (Paris), September 1978.
Film Français (Paris), 23 December 1983.
Cinéma Française (Paris), 31 August 1984.
Film Français (Paris), 31 August 1984.

On BRAUNBERGER: articles—

Avant-Scène (Paris), 15 October 1962.
Cinéma Française (Paris), December 1980.

Maillis, Annie, “La course de taureaux de P. Braunberger,” in Archives: Institut Jean Vigo (Perpignan), March 1996.

Serceau, D., “Pierre Braunberger: Rouch a du genie mais il ne maitrise pas toujours son imagination debordante,” in Cinémaction (Courbevoie), no. 4, 1996.

* * *

The French film industry, never as centralised as the British or American, left more leeway for “small” producers of whom Pierre Braunberger became the doyen: in love with film, eclectic in his tastes, interested in the arts, and joyously practical in commerce. In another respect he was quite unique: as producer, distributor, and exhibitor, he extended the 1920s avant-garde and cradled the 1950s New Wave, alongside diverse commercial features and shorts. Born into a medical family, he fell in love with cinema after seeing Feuillade’s Fantômas and DeMille’s The Cheat. He learned the trade as film-buyer for Brockliss of London, then, in the United States, he was French adviser for Fox and secretary to Thalberg, then publicity executive for Paramount in Paris. As a crucial learning experience, he cites his heroic struggle, in Miami in 1923, to finish a fiction film despite a hurricane—only to be sacked for not filming the hurricane instead. The lesson stayed with him, and his survival in a shaky industry depended on combining strict economy with an openness to improvisation and location work; whence his congeniality for Renoir, Rouch, Reichenbach and the nascent New Wave, whose commercial “godfather” he can claim to be.

His decisive encounter, through their mutual friend Pierre Lestranguez, was with Renoir, for whom he functioned as administrative producer, organising the completion of Renoir’s first two films, both unfinished. Another enduring association was with brothers Yves and Marc Allégret. At studio Films he distributed avant-garde films so energetically that his, quite inadvertent, “monopoly” covered even the USA. From 1930–39 and 1945–65, his Panthéon Cinema was the major showcase for art and experimental shorts, and for Anglophone product shown only undubbed and unsubtitled, through respect for the integrity of the image. His commercial productions, first in tandem with another exhibitor, Roger Richebé, then solo as Panthéon Films, introduced to films Sacha Guitry, Fernandel, the Préverts, and Simone Simon. After the Second World War, first as Panthéon, then as Les Films de la Pléiade, and latterly in collaboration with his wife, Gisèle Braunberger, as Les Films du Jeudi, he promoted Resnais, Melville, Rouch, Reichenbach (an art dealer who became a pioneer of “globe-trotting” direct cinema, making 36 films for Braunberger). By 1986 his producer filmography ran to 88 features and 300 shorts, from spoofs and interest films to highly acclaimed works by Peter Foldes and Jacques Doniol-Valcroze, editor of Cahiers du Cinéma.

Preoccupation with directorial credits has overshadowed producer creativity, much as a critical preference for single consistent themes has obscured diversity of interest. Braunberger typifies a type of artist-sensitive opportunist, juggling, usually on a shoestring. Festival kudos, commercial viability, and his own spread of enthusiasms; and providing creative collaboration without cramping a director’s style. He was also an innovator. In 1924 he showed Renoir mercury vapour lamps, then unknown in French film production, but used by Braunberger, Sr. for the medical treatment of his patients. La Route est belle (1929) was the first French talkie. Paris 1900, the first elaborate compilation film, was Braunberger’s concept. His too, the realisation that Partie de campagne, shelved as unfinished, needed only two intertitles to become, not merely showable, but truly complete, a lyrical gem. Around 1930, when an avant-garde film proved dismally unshowable, Braunberger projected the negative, eliciting Panthéon applause, and launching its successful career. He believed that a similar dodge later, showing reels out of order, inspired the extensive resort to “arbitrary” devices by Godard, the director whom, with Renoir, Braunberger most admired.

—Raymond Durgnat

BRAY, J. R.

Films as Animator (Selected List):

1910  The Artist’s Dream (The Dachshund and the Sausage)
1914  Colonel Heezaliar, Naturalist; Colonel Heezaliar’s African Hunt; Colonel Heezaliar, Shipwrecked; Colonel Heezaliar, Explorer; Colonel Heezaliar, Farmer; Colonel Heezaliar in Mexico; Colonel Heezaliar in the Wilderness; Colonel Heezaliar in Africa
1915  Colonel Heezaliar and the Zeppelin; Colonel Heezaliar At the Bat; Colonel Heezaliar At the Front; Colonel Heezaliar—Ghost Breaker; The Adventures of Colonel Heezaliar—He’s a Daredevil; Colonel Heezaliar and the Torpedo; Colonel Heezaliar, Dog Fancier; Colonel Heezaliar Foils the Enemy; Colonel Heezaliar in the Haunted Castle; Colonel Heezaliar in the Trenches; Colonel Heezaliar, War Aviator; Colonel Heezaliar, War Dog; Colonel Heezaliar Invents a New Kind of Shell; Colonel Heezaliar Runs the Blockade; Colonel Heezaliar Signs the Pledge; Ramiet and Julio; Rastus’ Rabid Rabbit Hunt
1916  Colonel Heezaliar and the Bandits; Colonel Heezaliar at the Vaudeville Show; Colonel Heezaliar Captures Villa; Colonel Heezaliar’s Bachelor Quarters; Colonel Heezaliar on Strike; Colonel Heezaliar Plays Hamlet; Colonel Heezaliar Gets Married
1917  Colonel Heezaliar, Detective; Colonel Heezaliar on the Jump; Colonel Heezaliar, Spy Dodger; Colonel Heezaliar, Temperance Advocate
1920  The Best Mouse Loses; The Chinese Honeymoon; Family Affair; The Great Cheese Robbery; Happy Hooldini and Lampoons; His Last Legs; Jerry and the 5.15 Train; Kats Is Kats; Knock on the Window, the Door Is in a Jamb; The Debut of Thomas Cat
1921  How I Became Krazy; Izzy Able the Detective; The Awful Spook; The Chicken Thief
1923  Colonel Heezaliar’s Mysterious Case; Colonel Heezaliar
1924  Colonel Heezaliar, Nature Faker; Colonel Heezaliar’s Ancestors; Colonel Heezaliar’s Horseplay; Colonel Heezaliar’s Knighthood; Colonel Heezaliar, Skypilot
1925  The Adventures of Togo and Dinky: A Fitting Gift
1926  Captain Kidd

Publications

On BRAY: articles—

Langer, Mark, “‘La parola a John Randolph Bray, pioniere dell’animaizione,’” in Griﬃthiana (Baltimore), May 1995.

* * *

Many media and artistic techniques can be used to create the illusion of movement in an animated film, like charcoal, paint on glass, computer graphics, or the manipulation of objects like clay, sand, or models with the use of frame-by-frame exposure by a camera. The most common method, however, is “cel” animation, a technique so popular it almost seems alone to define “animation” in the popular imagination. The control of its patent was wielded primarily by John Randolph Bray from 1917 onwards, although the use of “cels” or panes of celluloid on which images are painted was actually patented by Earl Hurd in 1915. Bray himself took over several crucial patents on the registration and use of translucent sheets for backgrounds in 1914, and in 1917, in order to avoid a costly legal battle with Hurd, they together formed the Bray Hurd Process Company, to which all animators had to apply for a license to use the cel technique. These technical accomplishments alone would be enough to ensure Bray’s place in the history of film, but in addition, he was also responsible for drawing and producing the first commercially distributed animated cartoon (The Artist’s Dream or The Dachshund and the Sausage) (1910), founding the first commercial animation studio organized along Taylorist principles of production, and producing the first colour cartoon (The Debut of Thomas Cat; 1920); he was, as Donald Crafton has appropriately called him, “the Henry Ford of Animation.”

Like most of the animators of the silent period, Bray came to the medium from a background in newspaper cartoons, starting in 1906 with single panel cartoons for Judge, moving on to a full-page comic strip called “The Teddy Bears,” a well-drawn if somewhat prosaic series based on the exploits of a group of magical stuffed toys. Inspired by Porter’s film The ‘Teddy’ Bears (1907) which used stop motion photography to animate real toys, Bray experimented with animating his own drawings of frolicsome furry animals, but abandoned the project eventually. His second attempt, The Artist’s Dream, about a greedy Dachshund who explodes after overindulging in sausages, was more successful once Bray realized that time could be saved enormously by minimizing detail. This second film was made around 1910 or 1911, but not released until 1913. Unlike Winsor McCay’s first two films, Little Nemo (1911) and The Story of a Mosquito (1912) (or all his films for that matter) which Bray had seen on the vaudeville stage and which were made by laboriously tracing over every single line frame-by-frame, Bray, inspired by his experience in journalism, printed his backgrounds and then experimented with using translucent pages that could be laid over the changing character drawings. He realized he could further save time by having a staff of artists each responsible for the different stages of the process, and in 1914 he formed Bray Studios, Incorporated and went into production of the Colonel Heeziar series, based on a character part Teddy Roosevelt, part Baron Munchausen, featuring his fantastic exploits abroad. Only seven films in 1914, according to Crafton, were actually animated by Bray himself. After that he delegated the work to his staff, many of whom went on to be famous in the field, like Walter Lantz, Max and Dave Fleischer, Paul erry, Cy Young, and Shamus Culhane.

Culhane described Bray as ‘‘a sallow, lean man with a very military bearing. It was hard to believe he was ever a humorist.’’ Indeed, once the theatrical cartoon department was established and running smoothly, Bray began to devote his energies to the production of animated military training and educational films, a specialized but lucrative market that he exploited in the best tradition of sound business management, with the help of his strong-willed wife Margaret, who was endowed with considerable business acumen in her own right. This part of the corporation has survived up to the present, run by Bray’s descendants, while the theatrical cartoon department, depleted of talented staff and ideas, ran aground with the advent of sound cartoons.

Although it was the largest independent animation studio of the silent period, its output, though popular at the time, has not been canonized with the same reverence accorded now to the Felix the Cat series by Otto Messmer, or Fleischer’s Out of the Inkwell series, lacking as it did in commensurate wit and invention. Nonetheless, the products of the Bray Studio helped to establish the place of the animated cartoon in the theatrical program, and the technique that he and Hurd patented remains an exceptional contribution to the art of animation. In his 90s, concerning cel animation, Bray remarked, ‘‘I’m very much pleased that they haven’t been able to improve on the process. It’s still the same old process that I invented.’’ Although it does now seem that cel animation is gradually being assisted and replaced by more widely available computer technology, Bray’s hierarchical model of production remains an industry standard, and his position as a key figure in animation and film history remains irrefutable.

—Leslie Felperin Sharman

BRDEČKA, Jiří

Animator and Writer. Nationality: Czech. Born: Jiří Brnečka in Hranice, Moravia, 24 December 1917. Education: Studied at an art college, Prague; studied art history, Charles University, Prague, 1936–39. Career: Writer, journalist, and illustrator; 1940—first appearance of story Limonádový Joe (later versions as play, novel, and animated film); 1943—44— animator for Richard Dillenz Studio (later Prag-Film); 1946—wrote scripts for Trnka’s animated films, and joined Bratí Triku Studio after the war; 1947—first film as director of animation; 1951—first fiction film as scriptwriter. Died: 2 June 1982.

Animated Films as Writer:

- 1946 Péká a SS (The Springer and the SS-Men) (Trnka); Dárek (The Gift) (Trnka)
- 1947 Sváb (The Cockroach) (Mann); Vzucholod a láška (Love and the Zeppelin) (+ d)
- 1948 Císařský slavík (The Emperor’s Nightingale) (Trnka); Andelský kabát (The Angel’s Coat) (Hofman)
- 1949 Papírové nokturny (Paper Nocturne) (Hofman); Arie prémie (The Song of the Prairie) (Trnka)
- 1950 Káslaní a kýchani (Cough and Sneeze) (Mozis); Mouchy (Flies) (Mozis); Neviditelní neprátelé (Invisible Enemy) (Mozis); Vitamin C
- 1953 Staré povesti české (Old Czech Legends) (Trnka); O svelte (On Light) (Srámek); O skleničku vic (A Drop Too Much) (Pojar)
- 1956 Ztracená varta (The Lost Sentry) (Makovec)
- 1958 Historie blechatého psa (Story of a Dog Who Had Fleas) (Mudrnáč); Vynález zkásy (An Invention for Destruction; The Fabulous World of Jules Verne) (K. Zeman)

Animated Films as Director and Writer:

- 1958 Jak se človek naucil létat (A Comic History of Aviation; How Man Learned to Fly)
- 1959 Dráhoušek Klementýna (My Darling Clementine); Pozor! (Look Out!; Attention)
- 1960 Naše Karkulka (Our Little Red Riding Hood)
- 1961 Clovek pod vodou (Man Under Water); Zavada není na vašem příjímaci (The Television Fan)
- 1962 Rozum a cit (Reason and Emotion); Zmrzly dřevař (The Frozen Logger)
- 1963 Spatné namaloované slepice (Gallina Vogelbirdie; The Grotesque Chicken); Jak na to (How to Keep Slim)
- 1964 Slíve M (The Letter M; The Minstrel’s Song)
- 1965 Dezertér (The Deserter); Blaho lásky (The Joy of Love; She and He)
- 1966 Do leščíka na čekanou (Forester’s Song; Let’s Go Hunting in the Woods); Proč se usmíváš, Mona Lisa? (Why Do You Smile, Mona Lisa?)
- 1968 Moc osudu (The Power of Destiny); Pobroma (Vengeance)
- 1969 Metamorfeus
- 1970 Jak se moudrý Aristoteles stal jeste moudřejším (Wisdom Aristotle Gets Still Wiser; Aristotle)
- 1971 Jsouc na rece mlynár jeden (There Was a Miller on the River)
- 1973 Tvár (The Face)
1974 Accordion Song
1975 What I Didn’t Say to the Prince
1978 Aamour

Animated Films as Cowriter:
1959 Proč UNESCO? (Why UNESCO?) (Trnka); Sen noci svatojánské (A Midsummer Night’s Dream) (Trnka); Bombománie (Bomb Mania) (Pojar); Stastný lev (The Happy Lion) (Bedrich)
1960 Sláva (Fame) (Pojar); Prak a drunk (The Catapult and the Kite) (Topaldjikov); Jak zařídit byt (How to Furnish a Flat) (Pojar); Mikromakrokosmos (Little-Big-Cosmos)
1961 Baron Prášil (Baron Munchausen) (Zeman)
1962 Srovniková dobrodružství (Screw’s Adventures) (Vyskytsel)
1970 Tři čarovná péra (Three Magic Feathers) (Rozkopal)

Other Animated Films:
1959 Tucet mých tatínku (My Twelve Fathers) (Hofman) (codesign)
1951 Císařov pekař a pekaruv cisař (The Emperor’s Baker and the Baker’s Emperor) (Fric)
1952 Velké dobrodružství (Great Adventure) (Makovek)
1954 Kavárna na hlavní třídě (Cafe in the Main Street) (Hubácek); Severně přistáv (Northern Harbour) (Makovek)
1955 Bly jednou jeden král (There Was Once a King) (B. Zeman)
1956 Obusku, z pytle ven! (Stick, Start Beating!) (Pleskot)
1956 Snadný život (Easy Life) (Makovek); Vlčí jáma (Wolf Trap) (Weiss); Ztracenici (Three Men Missing) (Makovek)
1959 Taková láská (Appassionata) (Weiss)
1960 Černá sobota (Saturday Night) (Hubácek)
1961 Lidé za kamerou (People behind the Camera) (Hofman—doc)
1963 Až přijde Kocour (That Cat) (Jasny)
1964 Limonádový Joe (Lemonade Joe) (Lipsky)
1968 “Last Golem” ep. of Pražské noci (Prague Nights) (+ d + co-sc of other episodes)
1972 Román o ruži (Story of a Rose) (+ d—short)
1972 Tajemství hradu v Karpatech (The Mysterious Castle in the Carpathians) (Lipsky)

Other Films:
1963 Spunilá jízda (The Glorious Campaign) (Danek) (ro)

Publications
By BRDEČKA: books—
Limonádový Joe, Prague, 1940.
Kety bez pochaska (Guns without Glamour), Prague, 1956.
Faunovo znace pokroctle dpoledne (The Faun’s Rather Late Afternoon), Prague, 1966.

By BRDEČKA: articles—
Film a Doba (Prague), September 1982.
Film a Doba (Prague), November 1983.

On BRDEČKA: articles—
Film a Doba (Prague), vol. 11, no. 3, 1965.
Image et Son (Paris), November 1967.
Film a Doba (Prague), vol. 33, no. 12, December 1967.
Film a Doba (Prague), February 1983.
Film a Doba (Prague), December 1987.

It is not altogether accurate to call Jíří Brdečka an animator. That is, of course, what he was—but the breadth of his other interests is impressive: he was also a draughtsman, film critic, novelist, scriptwriter, and film director.

In 1940 he worked as a film critic for Lidové Noviny (later known as Svobodné). For two years he worked on publicity for Lucernafilm, and in 1943 he studied animation at the AFIT Special Effects Studio. Soon after that, he did the animation of an octopus in the animated film Wedding in the Coral Sea, the first film of the future Bratri Triku Studio, which he joined after the war. He returned to animated film and collaborated with Trnka on the scripts for such films as The Gift, The Springer and the SS-Men, The Emperor’s Nightingale, The Song of the Prairie, Old Czech Legends, Why UNESCO?, and A Midsummer Night’s Dream. With Pojar he collaborated on A Drop Too Much, Fame, and Bombománie. During a career that lasted almost 40 years, he also collaborated on the scripts for a number of feature, live-action films, including The Emperor’s Baker and the Baker’s Emperor (with Fric); Wolf Trap (with Jiří Weiss); That Cat (with Vojtěch Jasny); and Lost People (Miloš Makovec). He also adapted his own novel for Oldrich Lipsky’s film Lemonade Joe.

In 1947 Brdečka made his debut as a director of animated films, with Love and the Zeppelin, visually inspired by Art Nouveau. In this film he lovingly and humorously portrays the world of discoverers, inventors and pioneers of science. He returned to this theme on two more occasions, with the films How Man Learned to Fly and Man Under Water, which involve some of the most demanding material ever attempted by an animated film—particularly the sketch “Wisdom and Teaching.” As J. Bocék has commented: “This animated ballet captures a philosophical debate between the author and the audience. The conflict between reason and feeling reflecting nothing less than the basic issues of life and worldliness.”

The Grotesque Chicken is Brdečka’s most famous film: it is his artistic declaration of faith in the imagination and in creativity. Many of his other films have their origin in a visual inspiration transformed into the grotesque—for example, Why Do You Smile, Mona Lisa? In others, particularly those inspired by music, Brdeckova was attempting to impose on the serious, the tragic, and the lyrical his own touch of humour.
Brdečka was the kind of intellectual filmmaker, rich in inventiveness, who fully mastered all the elements of cinematography. He portrayed with both cunning and a gentle irony the history of inventions, philosophical essays, folk songs, myths, and fairy tales. Above all, he was the consummate story-teller who was able to transform his visual, literary, and musical inspirations into individualistic works of art. He brought new ideas and new expressive means to both the animated and the feature film.

—Vladimir Opěla

BREER, Robert

Films as Animator:

1952 Form Phases I
1953 Form Phases II; Form Phases III
1954 Form Phases IV; Image by Images I (endless loop): Un Miracle
1955 Image by Image II; Image by Image III
1956 Image by Images IV; Motion Pictures; Cats; Recreation I
1956–57 Recreation II
1957 Jamestown Balloos; A Man and His Dog Out for Air
1958 Par Avion
1958–59 Cassis Colank; Chutes de pierres, danger du mort (Fano) (sequence only)
1959 Eyewash; Trailer
1960 Homage to Jean Tinguely’s Homage to New York (live-action); Inner and Outer Space
1961 Blazes; Kinetic Art Show—Stockholm
1962 Pat’s Birthday (live-action); Horse over Tea Kettle
1963 Breathing
1964 Fist Fight
1966 66
1968 69; PBL 2 (for PBL TV); PBL 3 (for PBL TV)
1970 70
1971 Elevator (for CTW TV); What? (for CTW TV)
1972 Galls and Buoys
1974 Fuji
1975 Etc.; Rubber Cement
1977 77
1978 LMNO
1979 TZ
1981 Swiss Army Knife with Rats and Pigeons
1982 Trial Balloons
1986 Bang!
1988 A Frog on the Swing; Blue Monday (video)
1993 Sparkill Ave!

Publications

By BREER: articles—

Interview with Guy Cote, in Film Culture (New York), Winter 1962–63.
“Robert Breer on His Work,” in Film Culture (New York), Fall 1966.
Interview with Jonas Mekas and P. Adams Sitney, in Film Culture (New York), Spring 1973.
Velvet Light Trap (Madison, Wisconsin), no. 24, Fall 1989.

On BREER: books—

Hein, Birgit, Film as Film, Arts Council of Great Britain, 1979.
Moore, Sandy, Robert Breer, St. Paul, Minnesota, 1980.

On BREER: articles—

Burch, Noël, “Images by Images, Cats, Jamestown Balloos, A Man and His Dog Out for Air (films by Robert Breer),” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley, California), Spring 1959.
Tomkins, Calvin, “Onward and Upward with the Arts,” in New Yorker, 3 October 1970.

* * *

Robert Breer’s work as a filmmaker has been primarily in animation. He has made two live-action films (Pat’s Birthday and Homage to Jean Tinguely’s Homage to New York), and many of his other films contain photographed images, but his films generally are made one or a few frames at a time, which is what distinguishes them from live-action cinema. He is arguably the most extraordinary maker of animated films the cinema has given us since Méliès.

Just as many avant-garde live-action filmmakers have defined their work—in terms radically opposed to the “illusionistic” mainstream of commercial film—so Breer defines his work in direct opposition to mainstream commercial animation. The Hollywood cartoon, and many of its offshoots, are based on continuous movements of characters through connected spaces. Breer’s films are full of disjunctive breaks, multiple and discontinuous spaces and rhythms, and acknowledgments, often humorous, of the animation process itself and the animator’s presence.

The tremendous richness of Breer’s cinema comes not from a simple exclusion of continuities, but rather from the attempt to include as much as possible. Thus he situates his films at a number of “thresholds.” A burst of continuous movement will suddenly arrest itself in a freeze frame. Extremely jerky and irregular rhythms will unexpectedly become continuous ones. A drawn object will appear to rotate in three dimensions, creating the illusion of depth; a moment later we find ourselves watching a flat surface once again. The sound track will oscillate between apparently synchronous effects that match the action, a more abstract accompaniment, and sounds that are intentionally, often humorously, ill at odds with the images. The audience thus finds itself presented with a virtual panoply of styles and techniques. The effect is that the audience is held literally at the edge of its perception by a continual unfolding of surprises. Each time a brief section (“brief” being generally only a few seconds) establishes some form of continuity, the film leaps outside the pattern just established into some new realm. While it should be apparent from this that Breer’s attitude toward his medium and its materials locates him clearly within the modernist tradition, the effect of his work is unique. Time and space are profoundly fragmented, and the film and its viewer are placed firmly in the infinitely uncertain realm of the instant.

In the first two decades of Breer’s filmmaking, he utilized a variety of approaches and styles. His earliest films, such as the Form Phases series, are abstract, and grew out of his work as an abstract painter. Mondrian was an early inspiration, and some of the abstract films seem to be questing after idealized, perfect forms. There are hand-drawn and animated films, such as A Man and His Dog Out for Air and PBL 2, in which tension is created between line as representation of figure and line as an abstraction. There are some highly eclectic works, such as Eyewash and Fist Fight, in which cut-outs, various kinds of animation, and live-action photography are intermixed. There are “abstract” animations such as 66, 69, and 70, which are amazing for their fusion of purity and complexity. It should also be mentioned that Breer has made kinetic sculptures, works that move along the floor so slowly their movement can barely be seen, and a number of constructions inspired by early “pre-cinema” devices such as thaumatropes; these works again play at the threshold between movement and stillness.

In 1972, Breer’s filmmaking entered a new period, in which he mirrors the eclecticism of his earlier filmography within individual films. Abstract animation, animation that mimics photographed scenes, and actual photographs are combined with dense, collage-like sound tracks to produce a visionary mixture of humor and surprise, whimsy and ecstatic delight. The use of rotoscoping in Gulls and Buoys and Fuji, and of photographs combined with drawings based on them in many other films, also creates a relationship between these films and daily seeing: every object, every landscape, seems to harbor underlying abstract shapes and movements. In the “kitchen sink” multiplicity of these films, different kinds of image material interact in multiple ways, resulting in a new, and profoundly energized form of seeing: traces of recognizable objects perpetually oscillate between their existence as identifiable places and things and the multitudinous abstract shapes and colors that they contain, or suggest.

—Fred Camper

BROCCOLI, Albert R.

Producer. Nationality: American. Born: New York City, 5 April 1909. Military Service: US Navy, 1942–47. Family: Married Dana Natol Wilson; sons, Michael Wilson and Anthony; daughters, Christina and Barbara. Education: City College of New York. Career: Worked as an agronomist before landing a job in 1938 with 20th Century Fox, first as a messenger, then as a publicist, and finally as an assistant director in 1941–42; 1947–48—assistant director for RKO; 1948—became a successful theatrical agent with Charles Feldman, then moved to London where he founded Warwick Pictures with Irving
Albert R. Broccoli

Allen; produced with Allen a series of mostly B pictures released through Columbia; 1959—ended partnership with Allen; produced a few further films with Harold Huth and John R. Sloan; 1961—teamed with Harry Saltzman to found Eon Productions Ltd.; 1962—produced Dr. No, first of a number of James Bond adaptations; 1974—broke with Saltzman after The Man with the Golden Gun; retained rights to Bond series, which continues under auspices of Broccoli’s Warfield Productions. Award: Irving Thalberg Lifetime Achievement Award, 1982. Died: 27 June 1996.

Films as Producer:

1954 The Black Knight (with Irving Allen and Phil C. Samuel); Hell Below Zero (with Allen and George W. Willoughby); Paratrooper (with Allen)
1955 The Cockleshell Heroes (with Allen); A Prize of Gold (with Allen and Samuel)
1956 Zaruk (with Adrian D. Worker); Odongo (with Islin Auster)
1957 How to Murder a Rich Uncle (with John Paxton); Fire Down Below (with Allen); Pickup Alley (with Allen)
1958 The Man Inside (with Allen and Harold Huth); Tank Force (with Allen)
1959 The Bandit of Zhobe (with Allen); Idol on Parade (with Huth)
1960 Killers of Killimanjaro (with John R. Sloan); In the Nick (with Huth); Jazz Boat (with Huth); Let’s Get Married (with Sloan); The Trials of Oscar Wilde (with Huth)
1961 Johnny Nobody (with Sloan, released in 1965)
1962 Dr. No (with Harry Saltzman)
1963 Call Me Bwana (with Saltzman); From Russia with Love (with Saltzman)
1964 Goldfinger (with Saltzman)
1967 You Only Live Twice (with Saltzman)
1968 Chitty Chitty Bang Bang (with Saltzman)
1969 On Her Majesty’s Secret Service (with Saltzman)
1971 Diamonds are Forever (with Saltzman)
1973 Live and Let Die (with Saltzman)
1974 The Man with the Golden Arm (with Saltzman)
1977 The Spy Who Loved Me
1979 Moonraker
1981 For Your Eyes Only
1983 Octopussy
1985  A View to a Kill
1987  The Living Daylights (with Michael Wilson)
1989  Licence to Kill (with Wilson)

Publications

On BROCCOLI: articles—

Obituary, in Film-Dienst (Cologne), July 1996.
Obituary, in Classic Images (Muscatine), August 1996.

* * *

Albert “Cubby” Broccoli is the subject of what is perhaps the film industry’s greatest rags to riches story; a down at the heels producer of low budget action films in the early 1960s, he became in a few short years the genius behind the James Bond films, the most financially successful and popular series ever produced by the commercial film industry. As a result, from a marginal figure, Broccoli became one of the most important figures in international filmmaking. Always eager to enter film production, Broccoli had worked his way rapidly up the industry ladder with an impressive display of energy, enthusiasm, and intelligence. Starting as a messenger boy at Fox, he talked his way into assistant directing within three years, only to be interrupted by the outbreak of World War II. Broccoli served for the duration of hostilities and beyond, attempting in the late 1940s to resume his work behind the camera. However his career took another direction as he became associated with Charles Feldman, a noted theatrical agent and producer (who was responsible for, among other notable successes, bringing largely intact to the screen Elia Kazan’s stage production of Tennessee Williams’ A Streetcar Named Desire). Working with the highflying Feldman gave Broccoli a yen for deal making and production, but the economic woes of the film industry at the time in America made breaking into this area, even as an enterprising independent, no easy task. Broccoli saw better possibilities in England, which was also experiencing a downturn in exhibition, but where, because of currency regulations, a good many American-financed, mostly low budget films were being shot, with a view toward exhibition in the US as well as in the UK.

In partnership with another emigré deal maker, Irving Allen, Broccoli set up Warwick Films, which planned to make largely low-budget action and/or costume films. Some of these are eminently forgettable: Zarak, Odongo, and The Bandit of Zhobe stand out in this category. Others are rather interesting ‘‘small’’ films, especially two World War II productions, Paratrooper and The Cockleshell Heroes, The Trial of Oscar Wilde, though in some sense an exploitation film, also offers a sensitive and often profound treatment of a difficult subject. In any case, the years with Warwick gave Broccoli a good deal of insight into what aspects of British cultural mythology could be sold to American audiences. He also developed a feel for British popular culture. Making war and adventure films taught Broccoli how to tell an exciting story on a limited budget, and he was not slow to realize the importance of cheesecake and ‘‘love interests’’ to energize and eroticize the narrative.

Warwick Films was not doing well by the end of the 1950s. One of Broccoli’s last productions for the company, the appropriately titled Johnny Nobody, could not even secure an American release until 1965, when Broccoli had become the darling of exhibitors and distributors. Because he was used to mining pulp and popular literature for source materials, it is hardly surprising that Broccoli discovered and subsequently reworked one of Ian Fleming’s James Bond narratives. This is a project he began after entering into partnership with Harry Saltzman, an experienced deal maker in his own right who had clear ideas about popular taste. Beginning with Dr. No, whose huge financial success fueled the series of Fleming adaptations, Broccoli and Saltzman invented a formula that had mass and sustained appeal at a time when other producers were wondering what kind of films to make for an Anglo-American culture in the throes of profound and far-reaching changes. Broccoli and Saltzman remade James Bond into the very epitome of a cultural icon born in 1950s America—the playboy. Like the implied reader of Hugh Hefner’s magazine of the same name (a cultural product that achieved the same kind of phenomenal success as the Bond films themselves), Bond was single and single-mindedly devoted to pleasure in the forms of expensive clothes, food, liquor, fast cars, and faster women. If he was still to some degree an action hero of the old school—good with his fists, quick-witted, physically daring, and cool under fire—James Bond, under the careful shaping of Broccoli and Saltzman, became a very different kind of male figure, one whose selfishness and emotional shallowness suited a generation brought up on the idea of unending consumption. It is a tribute to the genius of Broccoli and Saltzman that they recognized early the necessary connection of their James Bond to Hefner’s new masculine ideal, striking a deal with the magazine that effectively ‘‘tied into’’ each new Bond film to a Playboy special issue in which some or all of the female stars were featured in various states of tasteful undress.

The Bond films, in many ways, are very similar to the adventure/action productions Broccoli oversaw for Warwick early in his career—the difference is an artful and highly effective expansion of production values. The Bond films of the 1960s featured what were, for the time, unusual and elaborate special effects and scenes of spectacle; they emphasized visual beauty in terms of exotic locations, sumptuous interiors (particularly for the villains, who are always rich), and of course a gallery of attractive women, the most important of whom is the ‘‘Bond girl,’’ for whom James develops a special affection since she always belongs to the villain. Under Broccoli and Saltzman’s careful generalship (these were never directors’ pictures in any true sense), the Bond films developed a well-deserved reputation for excess—mostly in terms of visual spectacle—that always far outweighed any emphasis on theme or even ideas. Even more so than Fleming’s novels, which relate complexly to the fact of the Cold War, the Bond films ignore the real world of politics for the more enjoyable one of pure escapism. Thus they retained their popularity even in the face of immense cultural change, proving eminently adaptable even to twists and turns in gender politics (the later ‘‘Bond girls’’ are provided with a more feminist inflection).

Though all of Fleming’s novels have been filmed and new scripts must be devised for each production, the series pioneered by Broccoli and Saltzman has entered its fourth decade of popularity, becoming a phenomenon unparalleled in screen history.

—R. Barton Palmer
BROWN, Karl

Films as Cinematographer:

1920 The City of Masks (Heffron); The Fourteenth Man (Henabery); The Life of the Party (Henabery)
1921 Brewster’s Millions (Henabery); The Dollar-a-Year Man (Cruze); Gasoline Gus (Cruze); The Traveling Salesman (Henabery); Crazy to Marry (Cruze)
1922 One Glorious Day (Cruze); Is Matrimony a Failure? (Cruze); The Dictator (Cruze); The Old Homestead (Cruze); Thirty Days (Cruze)
1923 The Covered Wagon (Cruze); Ruggles of Red Gap (Cruze)
1924 The Fighting Coward (Cruze); The Enemy Sex (Cruze); Merton of the Movies (Cruze); The City That Never Sleeps (Cruze); The Garden of Weeds (Cruze)
1925 The Goose Hangs High (Cruze); Welcome Home (Cruze); Marry Me (Cruze); Beggar on Horseback (Cruze); The Pony Express (Cruze)
1926 Mannequin (Cruze)

Films as Assistant and Special Effects Photographer:

1914 The Spoilers (Campbell); The Avenging Conscience (Griffith); Golden Days
1915 The Birth of a Nation (Griffith)
1916 The Mystery of the Leaping Fish (Emerson—short); Daphne and the Pirate (Cabanne); Intolerance (Griffith); The Flying Torpedo (Emerson)
1918 The Great Love (Griffith)
1919 Broken Blossoms (Griffith)

Films as Director:

1927 His Dog; Stark Love (+ pr + co-sc)
1930 Prince of Diamonds
1932 Flames (Fire Alarm)
1937 Michael O’Halloran (Any Man’s Wife)
1938 Barefoot Boy; Numbered Woman (Private Nurse); Under the Big Top (The Circus Comes to Town)

Films as Writer:

1929 The Mississippi Gambler (Barker) (co)
1933 Fast Workers (Browning)
1934 Stolen Sweets (Thorpe); City Park (Thorpe); One in a Million (Strayer); The Curtain Falls (Lamont)
1935 The Calling of Dan Matthews (Rosen); Tarzan Escapes (McKay)
1936 In His Steps (Sins of the Children) (+ d); White Legion (+ d); Hearts in Bondage (Ayres)
1937 Join the Marines (Staub); Girl Loves Boy (Mansfield); Federal Bullets (+ d)
1938 Gangster’s Boy (Nigh); Port of Missing Girls (+ d)
1939 A Woman Is the Judge (Nigh); The Man They Could Not Hang (Grinde); My Son Is Guilty (Crime’s End) (Barton)
1940 The Man with Nine Lives (Behind the Door) (Grinde); Gangs of Chicago (Lubin); Military Academy (Lederman); Before I Hang (MacDonald); Girl from Havana (Landers)
1941 Mr. District Attorney (Morgan); Prairie Pioneers (Orlebeck); Rookies on Parade (Santley); I Was a Prisoner on Devil’s Island (Landers); Under Fiesta Stars (McDonald); Harvard, Here I Come (Here I Come) (Landers)
1942 Phantom Killer (Beaudine); Hitler—Dead or Alive (Grinde)
1943 The Ape Man (Lock Your Doors) (Beaudine)
1945 The Chicago Kid (McDonald)

Publications

By BROWN: books—
With Leonard Fields, The Mississippi Gambler (novelization), New York, 1929.
Incorrigible (novel), New York, 1947.
The Cup of Trembling (novel), New York, 1953.

On BROWN: articles—
Filme Cultura (Rio de Janeiro), November-December 1969.
Obituary, in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), June 1990.

* * *

Karl Brown became associated with the movies in Hollywood when both were young. Brown’s credits include photographing The Covered Wagon in the early 1920s and directing Stark Love (1927), a semi-documentary shot in North Carolina; and writing scripts for Columbia and Republic Studios between 1926 and 1945. Brown’s career is most memorable in his association with D. W. Griffith between 1913 and 1919.

Brown’s 1973 Adventures with D. W. Griffith is one of the best sources describing Griffith’s working methods. Brown began as an assistant to the cameraman Billy Bitzer, and thus learned how to operate cameras, light scenes, and keep written records of various shots. His book makes clear that he was more than simply an assistant cameraman; he was a jack-of-all-trades for the Griffith organization. Brown describes in extensive detail the planning, shooting, and post-production aspects of Griffith’s three masterpieces, Birth of a Nation, Intolerance, and Broken Blossoms.

For the last film Brown was in charge of the opening sequence showing ships on the Thames seen from the Limehouse district of London. He was shown a picture and then organized a series of miniatures, flats, groundrows, moving boats, and a trough of water. He lit the scene so that when photographed it provided a Whistler-like illusion of a London dockside. This example is typical of the pictorial values Griffith emphasized and which he expected from his collaborators. It also shows how good a student of both Griffith and Bitzer Brown had become.

Brown’s career as author and screenwriter included work for Columbia, Republic, and a few independent producers. Most of these films are gangster pictures, courtroom dramas, military situations, or horror stories. Had not Brown had good notes and recollections and been encouraged to publish them, he would probably be almost forgotten today. It is fitting, however, that a person who spent so much time on the routine tasks of filmmaking in its early Hollywood years will now be remembered because of his thoughtful book. Now, as then, moviemaking is a collaborative effort, and while a few key individuals receive major credit, no work would succeed without the many workers who, like Brown, also make fundamental contributions.

—Floyd W. Martin

BROWN, Nacio Herb

Films as Composer:

1929 The Broadway Melody (Beaumont); Untamed (Conway); The Hollywood Revue of 1929 (Reisner); Marianne (Leonard)
1930 Whoopee! (Freeland); Good News (Grinde); Montana Moon (St. Clair); Lord Byron of Broadway (Nigh and Beaumont); One Heavenly Night (Fitzmaurice)
1932 A Woman Commands (Stein)
1933 The Barbarian (Wood); Stage Mother (Brabin); Going Hollywood (Walsh); Hold Your Man (Wood); Peg o’ My Heart (Leonard)
1934 Hollywood Party (Dwan); Hide-Out (Van Dyke); Student Tour (Riesner); Riptide (Goulding); Sadie McKee (Brown)
1935 Broadway Melody of 1936 (Del Ruth); China Seas (Garnett); A Night at the Opera (Wood)
1936 The Devil Is a Sissy (Van Dyke); San Francisco (Van Dyke); After the Thin Man (Van Dyke)
1937 Broadway Melody of 1938 (Del Ruth); Thoroughbreds Don’t Cry (Green)
1939 Babes in Arms (Berkeley); The Ice Follies of 1939 (Schünzel)
1940 Two Girls on Broadway (Simon)
1941 Ziegfeld Girl (Leonard)
1943 Wintertime (Brahm); Swing Fever (Whelan)
1944 Greenwich Village (W. Lang)
1946 Holiday in Mexico (Sidney)
1948 The Kissing Bandit (Benedek); On an Island with You (Thorpe)
1949 The Bribe (Leonard)
1950 Pagan Love Song (Alton)
1952 Singin’ in the Rain (Kelly and Donen)

Publications

On BROWN: articles—

* * *

After bidding goodnight to Kathy Selden, the woman with whom he has fallen in love, Don Lockwood waves his limousine on and begins strolling down a rain-drenched street. Even the most casual movie musical fan knows what happens next. Gene Kelly, cast as Lockwood, unconcerned with the rain storming down over him, and starts singing the lyrics to and dancing to the melody of the song for which the movie is named, Singin’ in the Rain.

The man who wrote the melody, Nacio Herb Brown, was one of the most successful of all Hollywood studio composers working during the first quarter-century of the film musical. And ‘‘Singin’ in the Rain,’’ with lyrics by Arthur Freed, is perhaps the one song which remains most closely identified with not only the MGM musical but the era itself. In the first sequence of That’s Entertainment!, a compilation featuring the very best MGM musical numbers, ‘‘Singin’ in the Rain’’ is performed initially by Cliff (“Ukelele Ike”) Edwards (in a rainstorm and accompanied by a dancing chorus) in The Hollywood Revue of 1929. Then in the 1930s, Jimmy Durante sits at his piano and
BROWN WRITERS AND PRODUCTION ARTISTS, 4th EDITION

124

Nacio Herb Brown (left) with Arthur Freed
scat-sings to its rhythm. Next, during the 1940s, Judy Garland sings it in her own inimitable style. Finally, in the 1950s, Kelly, Donald O'Connor, and Debbie Reynolds harmonize before the opening credits of Singin’ in the Rain. (The song is performed in the latter two more times, in Kelly’s solo and by Reynolds at the finale.)

Brown began composing for the screen in the late 1920s, just as the movies were learning to sing and dance as well as talk. He retired in 1950, the year before his career was paid homage to in Singin’ in the Rain (which is credited as being “suggested by the song,” and is set in the era when Brown’s career was beginning).

For the next two decades, Brown composed scores and songs for MGM musicals (often, but not always, in collaboration with Freed). His melodies feature no Gershwinesque phrasing. Unlike the sophisticated world described in Cole Porter’s lyrics, or the playful quadruple rhymes of Betty Comden and Adolph Green, Brown’s music is more at home with lyrics that are simple, lilting, and irrepressibly romantic. It elicits a naive, happy-go-lucky lightheartedness. This carefree, cheerful aura is the hallmark of the MGM musical.

In addition to the little song, all but two of the tunes performed in Singin’ in the Rain originally were included in other studio releases: The Broadway Melody (“You Were Meant for Me,” “The Wedding of the Painted Doll,” and “The Broadway Melody”); San Francisco (“Would You?”); Sadie McKee (“All I Do Is Dream of You”); The Broadway Melody of 1936 (“You Are My Lucky Star,” “I’ve Got a Feeling You’re Fooling,” and “Broadway Rhythm”); Lord Byron of Broadway (“Should I?”); and Babes in Arms (“Good Morning”). In each, Brown’s music nicely complements the eternal optimism of Freed’s lyrics: “All I do is dream of you the whole night through”; “life was a song, you came along . . . you were meant for me, and I was meant for you”; “good mornin’, good mornin’ . . . rainbows are shinin’ through”; “no skies of gray on that Great White Way, that’s the Broadway melody”; and, finally, “I’m singin’ in the rain . . . What a glorious feeling. I’m happy again.”

The word again in the latter places the song within a time frame. Most of Brown and Freed’s compositions were for films made during the American Depression and the Second World War, and their optimism reflects a need to focus on life’s bright side. The songs are colorful; they do not dwell on the problems of the present, but offer the message that the viewer also will one day “be happy again.”

Interestingly, Brown’s MGM connection allowed him to continue enjoying this same pleasure during the Depression. He first began composing as a hobby; he successfully ran a menswear shop in Los Angeles, and was one of the first to invest in land in Beverly Hills. Brown had spurned Irving Thalberg’s invitation to write for the talkies, until the Wall Street crash supposedly severely altered his economic status.

A Depression-era Warners musical might feature characters visibly stifled by the economic constraints of the era, or social commentary (in such song lyrics imploring the listener to “remember my forgotten man”). Not so an MGM musical, and certainly not so an MGM musical with a Nacio Herb Brown score. Whatever problems the characters endure will not be all that permanent or serious because you know that, at any moment, someone is bound to burst into tune, to be singin’ in a rainstorm to a Nacio Herb Brown melody.

—Rob Edelman

BRUCKMAN, Clyde

Films as Writer (Features):

1923 The Three Ages (Keaton and Cline); The Rouged Lips (Shaw) (titles only); Our Hospitality (Keaton and Blystone)
1924 Sherlock, Jr. (Keaton); The Navigator (Keaton and Crisp)
1925 Seven Chances (Keaton); Keep Smiling (Pratt)
1926 For Heaven’s Sake (Taylor)
1928 The Cameraman (Sedgwick) (co)
1929 Professor Beware (Nugent)
1932 Blondie Goes to College (The Boss Said No) (Strayer)
1933 Honeymoon Lodge (Lilley); So’s Your Uncle (Yarborough); Swingtime Johnny (Cline)
1934 Week-end Pass (Yarborough); Moon over Las Vegas (Yarborough); South of Dixie (Yarborough); Twilight on the Prairie (Yarborough)
1935 Under Western Skies (Yarborough); Her Lucky Night (Lilley); She Gets Her Man (Kenton)

Films as Director:

1926 The General (co + co-sc)
1927 Horse Shoes ; A Perfect Gentleman ; Love ‘em and Feed ‘em (short); Call of the Cuckoo (short); Putting Pants on Philip (short)
1928 The Battle of the Century (short); Leave ‘em Laughing (short); The Finishing Touch (short)
1929 Welcome Danger (+ co-sc)
1930 Feet First (+ co-sc)
1931 Everything’s Rosie
1932 Movie Crazy
1933 The Human Fish (short); Too Many Highballs (short); The Fatal Glass of Beer (short)
1935 Horse Collars (short); Spring Tonic (co); Man on the Flying Trapeze (The Memory Expert)

Publications

On BRUCKMAN: articles—

Clyde Bruckman (second from left) with Hugh Fay, Hunt Stromberg, and David Kirkland

Pratfall, vol. 2, no. 6–9, 1985.

***

The intention of a comedy craftsman is not only to create a comic situation, but to build on it, complicate it, top it, and give the comedian room to work in his own unique personality. The gagman/director Clyde Bruckman was one of the most sought after talents of comedy’s Golden Age.

Harry Brand lured Bruckman away from Warner Bros. to work for Buster Keaton in 1921. Along with Joe Mitchell, Jean Havez, and Eddie Cline, Bruckman fashioned the blissfully odd mechanical world of which the poker-faced Keaton was the center, controlling nothing. The story lines for these shorts were strong and remarkably serious for their time, but with logical twists that snowballed into the chase. The daring acrobatic stunts and incredible sight gags rank as some of the best on film today. Although he didn’t receive screen credit until his feature films with Keaton, Bruckman had a hand in many early pictures, most noticeably Cops.

As the medium grew from one- and two-reelers to feature-length productions, Keaton and his stable of gag writers pushed themselves into creating more deliberately paced sequences. Buster insisted that impossible or “cartoon gags” be discontinued, though he used them rarely anyway. When complications arose (or worse, if they didn’t), they’d break for baseball in the backlot or continue playing cards until a better idea came along. This freewheeling approach to screen collaboration worked at the Keaton Studio, especially for Bruckman. “In such a situation, gags are never a problem. You feel good. Your mind’s at ease, and working.”

It was Bruckman who showed Keaton a Civil War novel about a Confederate raid into Northern lines, and knew the comic possibilities in it. This became The General, which he cowrote and codirected with Keaton. Their story was scripted by Al Boasberg and Charles Smith, and used fewer than 50 title cards. Six of the seven reels involved a pursuit of locomotives at full steam, one manned by an army of Northern spies and the other by Keaton alone. The General is a marvel of sustained ingenuity and, though unsuccessful in its first release, remains what many consider the last great silent comedy.
Harold Lloyd needed a person of Bruckman’s talent to get his timid “glasses character” into mighty and hilarious situations. A businesslike comic, Lloyd sometimes found sitting in on gagwriting sessions unsettling. “Our lack of method is deplorable, but sometimes it works.”

Lloyd often used Bruckman in tight situations, such as turning the silent Welcome Danger into a sound picture (a painful early lesson in postdubbing) and directing Feet First, Lloyd’s first venture as a “sound comedian.” The latter’s climax had Harold roll onto a painter’s scaffold in a mail sack that becomes hooked on the side of a skyscraper. His attempts to escape provided the thrills that audiences screamed for, yet it was the Harold Lloyd Corporation that later sent Bruckman’s own career out the window.

Producer Hal Roach sought Bruckman to direct comedian Max Davidson in Call of the Cuckoo in 1927. Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy were featured in secondary roles, and Bruckman’s credit in the development of this comedy team is notable in the next four pictures he directed. Bruckman’s ability to milk a single embarrassing situation, that of Putting Pants on Philip (with Stan as a woman-crazy Scottish nephew of Ollie), was praised by film historian William K. Everson for design and editing. This might have been part Leo McCarey’s handiwork, part Stan Laurel’s, part Bruckman’s, and surely the uncredited editor’s.

What is important was something special in the foolishness of Laurel and Hardy, and they seized upon it. Here was a case of two characters groping for a screen persona, and Bruckman’s direction established them as a team—a couple of children innocently creating a mounting choreography of chaos. The Battle of the Century had the banana peel and pie fight spectacular to end them all, Leave ‘em Laughing a hysterical traffic jam with the boys convulsed by laughing gas, and The Finishing Touch carpentry sight gags galore.

W.C. Fields was known to eat directors alive. Bruckman directed Fields twice. The Fatal Glass of Beer, produced by Mack Sennett, was a patchwork burlesque of long-winded dramas of the demon drink set in the Yukon. There is hardly any structure to it, but the nightmarish lunacy of this film made it a cult classic. Fields himself called upon Bruckman to fill in as the director of Man on the Flying Trapeze during a flu epidemic.

Bruckman worked best with comics who established their own screen personalities and knew what they wanted. From the simple-minded Stan Laurel to the malevolent W.C. Fields, the all-around guy Harold Lloyd to the analytical Buster Keaton, Clyde Bruckman adapted to the rhythms of each of these contrasting comic characters, subordinating “specialty” gags for the excellence of the picture as a whole. Using this same surefire material for other comedians got him into big trouble.

By the mid-1930s, one of the last bastions of the comedy short was Jules White’s unit at Columbia Pictures. Bruckman worked as director for The Three Stooges in Horse Collars in 1935. Later, for the most part, he wrote stories and screenplays directed by White. Among the best of these were his collaborations with Felix Adler in the Hitler lampoons You Nazty Spy!, a favorite of Moe’s and Jules White’s and Larry’s, and its sequel I’ll Never Heil Again.

1939 brought a happy reunion for Buster Keaton and Clyde Bruckman at Columbia Pictures, making two-reelers again. Keaton had done one feature with Bruckman at MGM in 1928, was fired in 1933, and since then had batted around in shabby Educational Comedies and miscellaneous jobs. Even though Bruckman wasn’t providing fresh material, Keaton was giving it all he had. The film historian Leonard Maltin calls Pest from the West “one of Keaton’s funniest pictures.” Keaton made ten shorts at Columbia from 1939 to 1941, seven of these with Bruckman.

Time and budget restrictions at the Columbia short-subject department (averaging three days and using leftover sets) required the elastic ability to land on your feet, and Bruckman was already on a downward slide. Alcoholism and bouts with depression had dissipated a lot of his talents. He was drawing from past routines, sometimes word for word, and not crafting them to the artist. In 1945 and early 1946, the Harold Lloyd Corporation filed three suits against Universal Studios and two against Columbia Pictures for alleged plagiarism of Lloyd’s films, naming writers who had previously worked with him. Bruckman was named in all five. In 1947, the Lloyd Corporation collected. The court’s judgment held that the Universal films So’s Your Uncle, She Gets Her Man, and Her Lucky Night contained material lifted from the Lloyd comedies Movie Crazy, Welcome Danger, and The Freshman, respectively. The Stooges’ two-reelers Three Smart Saps and Loco Boy Makes Good contained material borrowed from The Freshman and Movie Crazy.

Being sued closed almost every avenue for employment. With his reputation shattered and his drinking getting worse, Bruckman was becoming more and more unreliable. And, like Buster Keaton, he found the assembly-line method of story conferences in the industry made him lose confidence in his own ideas. In the 1950s television was growing and it had a huge appetite. Bruckman worked on The Buster Keaton Comedy Show, one of the pioneering live television shows, and from 1951 to 1953 on The Abbott and Costello Show, one of the first syndicated comedy series. (Joseph Adamson III writes that Bruckman did uncredited work for Abbott and Costello’s 1944 feature In Society.) Much of his material for these shows was derived from his old pencraft, as well as vaudeville and burlesque routines. The Golden Age was over, and Bruckman became a tragic casualty: he killed himself in Santa Monica in 1955.

—Rob Pinsel

BRYAN, John

Films as Producer:

1952 The Card (The Promoter) (Neame)
1953 The Million Pound Note (Man with a Million) (Neame)
1954 The Purple Plain (Parrish)
1956 The Spanish Gardener (Leacock)
1957 The Secret Place (Donner)
1958 Windom’s Way (Neame); The Horse’s Mouth (Neame)
1960 There Was a Crooked Man (Mankiewicz)
1962 The Girl on the Boat (Kaplan)
1964 Tamahine (Leacock)
1966 Caccia alla volpe (After the Fox) (de Sica)
1968 The Touchables (Freeman)
Films as Production Designer:

1937 The Song of the Road (Baxter)
1946 Great Expectations (Lean)
1947 Blanche Fury (Allégret); Take My Life (Neame)
1948 Oliver Twist (Lean) (also set designer)
1949 The Passionate Friends (One Woman’s Story (USA)) (Lean) (also set decorator)
1950 The Golden Salamander (Neame)
1951 Pandora and the Flying Dutchman (Lewin); The Magic Box (Boulting)
1964 Becket (Glennie)
1968 Great Catherine (Fleming)

Films as Art Director:

1938 Pygmalion (Asquith and Howard)
1939 A Stolen Life (Czinner)
1941 Dangerous Moonlight (Suicide Squadron) (Hurst)
1942 King Arthur Was a Gentleman (Varnel)
1943 Dear Octopus (The Randolph Family) (French); Millions Like Us (Lauder and Gilliat); Sabotage Agent (Adventures of Tartu; Tartu) (Bucquet)
1944 2,000 Women (House of 1,000 Women; Two Thousand Women) (Lauder); Fanny by Gaslight (Man of Evil) (Asquith); Love Story (A Lady Surrenders) (Arliss); Time Flies (Forde)
1945 Caravan (Charell); The Wicked Lady (Arliss)
1946 Caesar and Cleopatra (Pascal)

Other Films:

1936 Things to Come (Menzies) (asst art d, uncredited)
1950 Madeleine (The Strange Case of Madeleine) (Lean) (set decorator)

Publications:

On BRYAN: books—

* * *

A little-known but key figure in British cinema from the 1940s until the 1960s, John Bryan involved himself in most areas of film production. Bryan’s work with directors David Lean and Ronald Neame on films like Great Expectations, Oliver Twist, The Card and The Million Pound Note, has proved to be the most enduring, and the films also rank among the directors’ best work. Unlike many of his contemporaries who went on to make names for themselves in Hollywood, Bryan continued to work in the British film industry even as it began to struggle in the 1960s.

Bryan’s career began in the 1930s as a production designer and art director on films such as The Song of the Road and Pygmalion. In many ways, these films were to shape Bryan’s career, idealizing as they do an England of the past; in many of his later films Bryan was required to create sets and locations reminiscent of an earlier time. The Song of the Road tells the story of a man and his horse made redundant by the introduction of motorized trucks. The England it portrays is a comfortable, conservative one, and the main character, adhering to the values of honesty and hard-work and having a firm grip on his social position, is a peculiarly English hero of the time. Pygmalion, which was later to be adapted as the musical My Fair Lady, won an Oscar for its writers, and for George Bernard Shaw, the writer of the original play—although it was originally tailored in the United States as being based on a play by Shakespeare. The film is notable for the detail of its settings and the overall quality of the production, which marked Bryan out as an impressive talent in only his second film.

Bryan spent most of the 1930s and early 1940s working as art director at Pinewood Studios, where he contributed to notable films such as The Wicked Lady and the Bernard Shaw adaptations, Caesar and Cleopatra. The Wicked Lady is notable mainly for its period detail and had to be re-shot for American release in order that the women’s costumes should meet the requirements of the Hays Code. Apart from its production values, Caesar and Cleopatra, benefits from a talented cast, including Vivien Leigh as Cleopatra, and Claude Rains as an unlikely Caesar.

It was after World War II, when he teamed up with Lean, Neame, and Anthony Havelock-Allen, that Bryan entered the most successful period in his career. As production designer on Lean’s Great Expectations, Bryan combined his talent for historically stylised versions of England with Lean’s gothic imagination to create a Dickens adaptation that is decidedly British in its look. A comparative viewing of William Wyler’s 1939 adaptation of Wuthering Heights, for which the Yorkshire moors were recreated, complete with transplanted heather, in the California hills, will confirm the Britishness of the look of Lean’s film. Bryan also worked with Lean on another Dickens adaptation, as production designer for the exemplary Oliver Twist, a film which is superior in every respect to Carol Reed’s commendable 1968 musical version, Oliver! Although Bryan and Lean collaborated on only two films, the dark settings and confident visual style mark Great Expectations and Oliver Twist out as two of the finest British films ever made.

As a producer, working with Ronald Neame, Bryan found almost immediate success, with The Card and The Million Pound Note becoming two of the best British films of the 1950s. Although he produced the films of other directors it was his collaborations with Neame that have proved the most long-lasting. Later in his career as a producer, as the British film industry entered a period of rapid decline, Bryan was less fortunate in his choice of film projects, and The Touchables, his last film as producer, was an unmitigated failure. As a production designer, Bryan was more consistent, and his penultimate film, Becket, is among the highlights of his career. Based on a play by Jean Anouilh, Becket is rather slow-paced, but the relative lack of action only serves to highlight the magnificence of the English locations.

John Bryan’s career spanned the most successful period in British film making, and he was an important figure among the group of producers, directors, and cinematographers who gathered around
David Lean and Cineguild in the 1940s and early 1950s. He became adept at recreating archetypal English landscapes and interiors, but he was also capable of dramatic exaggeration, as in the gothic bleakness of the country churchyard in Great Expectations. Oddly, his career began and ended with adaptations of George Bernard Shaw plays; first Pygmalion, and then, in 1968, the over-adorned Great Catherine.

—Chris Routledge

BUCHMAN, Sidney

Writer and Producer. Nationality: American. Born: Duluth, Minnesota, 27 March 1902. Education: Attended the University of Minnesota, St. Paul; Oxford University. Career: 1929—assistant stage manager, Old Vic Theatre, London; 1930—play This One Man produced in New York (later play is Storm Song); 1931–34—staff writer at Paramount; 1934–42—writer at Columbia, then Vice-President and Assistant Production Chief, 1942–51; 1951—questioned by the House Un-American Committee, admitted being a Communist Party member, 1938–45, and blacklisted from 1953; moved to Europe; 1961—hired by 20th Century-Fox as writer-producer, and worked in Europe for the rest of his career; lived in Cannes after 1965. Awards: Academy Award for Here Comes Mr. Jordan, 1941; Writers Guild Laurel Award, 1965. Died: Of cancer in Cannes, 23 August 1975.

Films as Writer:

1927 Matinee Ladies (Haskin) (co)
1931 Daughter of the Dragon (Corrigan) (dialogue)
1932 No One Man (Corrigan); Thunder Below (Wallace); If I Had a Million (Lubitsch and others); The Sign of the Cross (DeMille)
1933 From Hell to Heaven (Kenton); Right to Romance (Santell)
1934 All of Me (Flod); Whom the Gods Destroy (W. Lang); His Greatest Gamble (Robertson); Broadway Bill (Strictly Confidential) (Capra)
1935 I’ll Love You Always (Bulgakov); Love Me Forever (Schertzinger); She Married Her Boss (La Cava)
1936 The Music Goes Round (Schertzinger); The King Steps Out (von Sternberg); Adventure in Manhattan (Manhattan Madness) (Ludwig); Theodora Goes Wild (Boleslawsky)
1938 Holiday (Cukor)
1939 Mr. Smith Goes to Washington (Capra)
1940 The Howards of Virginia (The Tree of Liberty) (Lloyd)
1941 Here Comes Mr. Jordan (Hall)
1942 The Talk of the Town (Stevens)
1944 A Song to Remember (C. Vidor) (+ pr)
1945 Over 21 (C. Vidor) (+ pr)
1949 Jolson Sings Again (Levin) (+ pr)
1951 Saturday’s Heroes (Idols in the Dust) (Miller)
1961 The Mark (Green) (+ co-pr)
1963 Cleopatra (Mankiewicz)

1966 The Group (Lumet) (+ pr)
1971 La Maison sous les arbres (The Deadly Trap) (Clément) (+ co-pr)

Films as Producer:

1937 She Married an Artist (Gering)
1948 To the Ends of the Earth (Stevenson)

Publications

By BUCHMAN: scripts—

Mr. Smith Goes to Washington and Here Comes Mr. Jordan in Twenty Best Film Plays, edited by John Gassner and Dudley Nichols, New York, 1943.

On BUCHMAN: articles—

Film Comment (New York), September-October 1972.

Film Gaia, October-November 1975.

* * *

Sidney Buchman wrote, alone or in collaboration, some of the best socially oriented screenplays in the American cinema, such as Mr. Smith Goes to Washington and The Talk of the Town, managing to make his messages palatable to audiences in the guise of entertainment. In this, he was aided by such arbiters of public taste as the directors Frank Capra and George Stevens and the enticing screen stars Jean Arthur, James Stewart, and Cary Grant. Ironically, Buchman was ultimately a victim of the Hollywood blacklist in the 1950s, and although he was involved in other film projects he never regained the momentum he had built up in 15 years of inspired screenwriting.

After serving as an assistant stage manager in London at the Old Vic Theatre, Buchman tried his hand at playwrighting, with no success. He joined Paramount in the early 1930s as a junior writer; his most notable credits there—DeMille’s The Sign of the Cross, and the omnibus If I Had a Million—were cowritten with a multitude of scenarists, and Buchman did not flourish until he joined Harry Cohn’s Columbia Pictures in 1934. The year is significant; it saw Columbia legitimized as a major studio with the Oscar-winning success of Capra’s It Happened One Night. Buchman became Cohn’s favorite writer, and he had a hand in most of the studio’s important productions. He would frequently be asked to polish scripts, and he toiled without screen credit on Capra’s Broadway Bill and Lost Horizon,
McCary’s The Awful Truth, Zoltan Korda’s Sahara, and Alfred Green’s The Jolson Story. In 1942 Cohn appointed Buchman to the position of production supervisor, and he eventually became a vice-president of production. His Sidney Buchman Productions produced the comedy Over 21, from the Ruth Gordon play, and the Jolson sequel, Jolson Sings Again, before the blacklist took effect. He admitted to the House Un-American Activities Committee that he had been a member of the Communist party in his youth, but refused to name names, and was subsequently fined, given a suspended sentence, and unofficially blacklisted. The producer who had benefited most from his skills, Harry Cohn, did not come to his aid, and Buchman became a European exile. The story is all the more ironic when one considers that Buchman’s scripts for She Married Her Boss, Theodora Goes Wild, Holiday, Mr. Smith Goes to Washington, The Howards of Virginia, Here Comes Mr. Jordan, and The Talk of the Town were among Columbia’s biggest moneymakers.

Gregory LaCava’s She Married Her Boss was a domestic comedy, a warm farce with telling situations. Buchman’s script for Richard Boleslawsky’s Theodora Goes Wild was based on a Mary McCarthy story, with Irene Dunne in the title role as a small-town novelist whose juicy book causes a scandal. The premise of the rural idealist in the big city was later adapted for Capra’s Mr. Smith Goes to Washington. While Mr. Smith was officially based on the story “The Gentleman from Montana” by Lewis R. Foster, it clearly has a partial inspiration in Theodora. James Stewart excels as the naive Senator who tackles the corrupt political machine in Washington. A courageous paean to democracy, Mr. Smith Goes to Washington boasted carefully drawn characters, thoughtful and at times humorous dialogue, and a narrative that builds to a monumental filibuster by Stewart in the U.S. Senate.

George Stevens’s The Talk of the Town also couched its ideology in mass entertainment, using a comedic situation to say some important things about justice. Jean Arthur harbors fugitive Cary Grant in her house, while Ronald Colman, a dedicated professor of law, rents a room from her. The Colman character is forced to rethink his rigid application of law in a humanistic comedy of social manners. Buchman could also write straight farcical material, as witness Here Comes Mr. Jordan, as well as epic drama, such as The Howards of Virginia, a Revolutionary War film about America’s founding fathers.

Buchman lived in Europe after the blacklist, and returned to motion pictures with a contract from 20th Century-Fox in the early 1960s. The Mark, directed by Guy Green, is a thinly disguised... allegory about a convict released from prison and forced to adapt to a new society, a metaphor for Buchman’s situation at the time. The multimillion dollar turkey Cleopatra followed, but he had more success with his adaptation of Mary McCarthy’s novel The Group, which he also produced.

In Talking Pictures, Richard Corliss pointed out the similarity between Buchman and Robert Riskin, another writer who was favored at Columbia. Both Buchman and Riskin wrote lengthy scripts, both wrote uncommonly fast, both used the dramatic device of opposing characters from rural and urban backgrounds, and both were “easy-going populists” who had Frank Capra as their ideal director. Corliss maintains that Buchman’s writing was much richer than Riskin’s; the record tends to bear him out. Unfortunately, Buchman’s populism was eventually undermined by the real life tyranny of Senator McCarthy.

—John A. Gallagher

BUCKLAND, Wilfred

Films as Art Director for DeMille and/or Apfel:

1914 The Squaw Man; The Ghost Breaker; Brewster’s Millions; The Man on the Box; The Virginian; The Call of the North; What’s His Name; The Man from Home; Rose of the Ranch; The Girl of the Golden West
1915 The Unafraid; The Captive; The Warrens of Virginia; Carmen; The Cheat; The Wild Goose Chase; The Arab; Chimmie Fadden; Kindling; Maria Rosa; Chimmie Fadden Out West; Temptation
1916 The Golden Chance; The Trail of the Lonesome Pine; The Heart of Nora Flynn; The Dream Girl; Joan the Woman
1917 A Romance of the Redwoods; The Little American; The Woman God Forgot; The Devil-Stone
1918 The Whispering Chorus; Old Wives for New; We Can’t Have Everything; Till I Come Back to You; The Squaw Man; Don’t Change Your Husband
1919 For Better, for Worse; Male and Female
1923 Adam’s Rib

Other Films as Art Director:

1918 Less than Kin (Crisp); Stella Maris (Neilan)
1919 The Grim Game (Willat)
1920 Conrad in Search of His Youth (W. De Mille)
1921 A Perfect Crime (Dwan)
1922 The Deuce of Spades (Ray); The Masquerader (Young); Omar the Tentmaker (Young); Robin Hood (Dwan) (co)

1924 Icebound (W. De Mille)
1927 The Forbidden Woman (Stein) (co); Almost Human (Urson)

Publications

By BUCKLAND: articles—

“‘Getting Belasco Atmosphere,’” in Moving Picture World (New York), 30 May 1914.

“When the Leaves Begin to Fall,” in Theatre, October 1918.

On BUCKLAND: article—

***

In his autobiography, I Blow My Own Horn, Jesse L. Lasky wrote, “As the first bona fide art director in the industry, and the first to build architectural settings for films, Buckland widened the scope of pictures tremendously by throwing off the scenic limitations of the stage.”

Lasky’s comments are at the same time correct and inaccurate. Wilfred Buckland did, quite obviously, understand the difference between stage and screen settings. Through the use of klieg lights, he introduced artificial lighting, which helped develop the early film industry. In the countless films on which he was art director, usually without screen credit, produced by Lasky and later Famous Players-Lasky in the 1910s, Buckland demonstrates an ability to create any type of set, ancient or modern. Unquestionably, he helped to expand the relationship between the director and the art director; he proved that the art director as much as the director is responsible for the look of the film—something which has come to be taken for granted. The best proof of this is Cecil B. DeMille’s Male and Female, which is best remembered for its bathroom sequence with Gloria Swanson. That bathroom owes as much to the imagination of Buckland as to DeMille’s obsession with vulgarity.

At the same time, Buckland had been a stage director (notably for David Belasco) prior to entering films, and many of his interior sets for the 1910s dramas, starring Blanche Sweet, Geraldine Farrar, or Wallace Reid, have a Victorian stuffiness to them which is inextricably linked to the theatre. Even the outrageous DeMille sets are so far divorced from reality as to have their origins in Victorian and Edwardian theatre rather than screen reality.

Buckland’s last major contribution to art direction was the creation of the castle setting for Douglas Fairbanks’s Robin Hood. His was an extraordinary architectural achievement, and a fitting climax to a career which paved the way for Cedric Gibbons, William Cameron Menzies, and others. Buckland had established the importance of the art director, but, quite obviously, he lacked the youth—he was almost 60 when he worked on Robin Hood—and vitality to continue in a major position within the industry.

Sadly, the tragedy of Wilfred Buckland’s death overshadows the importance of his career. He shot and killed his mentally ill son, fearing what might happen to the boy after his death, and then killed himself.

—Anthony Slide
BUMSTEAD, Henry

Art Director. Nationality: American. Born: 17 March 1915 in Ontario, California. Career: Art director from 1948; received Academy Award nominations for Vertigo, 1958; and Unforgiven, 1992. Awards: Academy Awards for To Kill a Mockingbird, 1962; The Sting, 1973. Address: Smith, Gosnell, Nicholson and Associates, Pacific Palisades, CA, U.S.A.

Films as Art Director:

1948 Saigon (Fenton); The Sainted Sisters (Russell); My Own True Love (Bennett)
1949 Song of Surrender (Leisen); Top o the Morning (Miller); My Friend Irma (Marshall)
1950 The Furies (A. Mann); No Man of Her Own (The Lie) (Leisen); My Friend Irma Goes West (Walker); The Goldbergs (Hart); The Redhead and the Cowboy (Fenton)
1952 Aaron Slick from Punkin Crick (Binyon); Jumping Jacks (Taurog); Come Back, Little Sheba (Daniel Mann)
1953 The Stars Are Singing (Taurog)
1954 Knock on Wood (Panama and Frank); The Bridges at Toko-Ri (Robson)
1955 The Man Who Knew Too Much (Hitchcock); Run for Cover (Ray); Lucy Gallant (Parriott)
1956 That Certain Feeling (Panama and Frank); The Leather Saint (Ganzer); The Vagabond King (Curtiz); Hollywood or Bust (Tashlin)
1958 I Married a Monster from Outer Space (Fowler); As Young As We Are (Girard); Vertigo (Hitchcock)
1959 The Hangman (Curtiz)
1960 The Bellboy (Lewis); Cinderfella (Tashlin)
1961 Come September (Mulligan); The Great Imposter (Mulligan)
1962 The Spiral Road (Mulligan); To Kill a Mockingbird (Mulligan)
1963 A Gathering of Eagles (Delbert Mann)
1964 The Brass Bottle (Keller); Bullet for a Badman (Springsteen); Father Goose (Nelson)
1965 The War Lord (Schaffner)
1966 Beau Geste (Heyes); Blindfold (Dunne); Gunpoint (Bellamy)
1967 Banning (Winston); Tobrak (Hillier)
1968 The Secret War of Harry Frigg (Mulligan); What’s So Bad about Feeling Good? (Seaton)
1969 Topaz (Hitchcock); Tell Them Willie Boy Is Here (Polsky); A Man Called Gannon (Goldstone)
1970 The Movie Murderer (Sagal); McCLOUD: Who Killed Miss U.S.A.? (Portrait of a Dead Girl) (Colla)
1971 Joe Kidd (J. Sturges); Slaughterhouse-Five (Hill) (+ ro); High Plains Drifter (Eastwood); The Victim (Daugherty); The Adventures of Nick Carter (Krasny)
1973 The Sting (Hill)
1974 The Front Page (Wilder); Honky Tonk (Taylor)
1975 The Great Waldo Pepper (Hill)
1976 Family Plot (Hitchcock)
1977 Don’t Push, I’ll Charge When I’m Ready (Lane—produced 1969)
1978 Same Time Next Year (Mulligan); House Calls (Zieff)
1979 The Concorde—Airport ‘79 (Airport 80—The Concorde) (Rich); A Little Romance (Hill)

1982 The World According to Garp (Hill)
1984 Harry & Son (Newman); The Little Drummer Girl (Hill)
1986 Psycho III (Perkins)
1988 Fanny Farm (Hill); A Time of Destiny (Nava) (+ ro)
1989 Her Alibi (Beresford)
1990 Almost an Angel (Cornell); Ghost Dad (Poitier)
1991 Cape Fear (Scorsese)
1992 Unforgiven (Eastwood)
1993 A Perfect World (Eastwood)
1994 The Stars Fell on Henrietta (Keich)
1997 Absolute Power (Eastwood); Midnight in the Garden of Good and Evil (Eastwood); Home Alone 3 (Gosnell)
1999 True Crime (Eastwood)
2000 Space Cowboys (Eastwood)

Publications

—By BUMSTEAD: article—

—On BUMSTEAD: articles—

* * *

Embarking on his 1955 remake of The Man Who Knew Too Much, Alfred Hitchcock asked cameraman Robert Burks to recommend the best designer among those currently at work for Paramount under Hal Pereira. Roland Anderson and John Meehan had won Oscars, but Burks suggested Henry Bumstead, then designing Michael Curtiz’s The Vagabond King, a period musical starring the Mario Lanza-surrogate Oreste Kirkop.

Bumstead did the art direction on four Hitchcock films, including Vertigo, one of his finest, and went on to an Oscar-winning career. Until then he had mainly worked for Paramount’s second-string directors like Mitchell Leisen, who as an ex-designer himself had had his own ideas of how Song of Surrender and No Man of Her Own should look. Hitchcock was no less specific about his wants, but Bumstead, sensing the director’s tastes, not only reflected but amplified them. The London suburban chapel haunted by Bernard Miles in The Man Who Knew Too Much improved on Alfred Junge’s 1934 original, while the new addition of a taxidermist’s shop lined with stuffed animal heads prefigures Norman Bates’s office in Psycho. Less flamboyantly, a Moroccan restaurant in the same film shows the eye for authentic detail that was to enliven Bumstead’s later design.

In 1957, Hitchcock called on Bumstead again for Vertigo,. He told him he conceived the film as almost motionless, a series of tableaux vivants which would demand particularly evocative set design. As a further hint he suggested Bumstead “try to use a lot of mirrors,” emphasizing the dual role played by Kim Novak and the moral ambivalence of the James Stewart character. Bumstead turned these suggestions into one of the most visually distinctive of all Hollywood films. The empty picture gallery where Kim Novak contemplates what appears to be her own portrait, Barbara Bel Geddes’s San Francisco apartment with its vertiginous view from the kitchen window, the Spanish mission church tower around which much of the film hinges, all fulfill the requirement of great design, telling us part of the story even before we see a moment of action.

Bumstead would later design Topaz and Family Plot for Hitchcock but in neither case did the story demand much besides simple backgrounds, both being shot on mainly existing locations, though Bumstead did put much effort into turning Hitchcock’s chosen graveyard for the latter into an effective setting. He also worked on No Bail for the Judge, the 1959 Audrey Hepburn thriller that Hitchcock cancelled when the star rejected the script. Bumstead had meanwhile become a member of the Hitchcock entourage, a dubious honour. It was the designer who drove Hitchcock to his naturalisation ceremony in April 1955, a favour for which the director rewarded him with one of his practical jokes, calling him in and asking his secretary casually, “Dolores, how would you like to screw Henry Bumstead?” Hitchcock’s appreciation of the Vertigo sets was as typically egocentric and cutting. Impressed by Bumstead’s design for Tom Helmore’s book-lined red leather 19th-century office, Hitchcock asked him to redo his own study in the same style. When he got no acknowledgement for his work Bumstead asked the director’s wife if he’d been satisfied. Prompted, Hitch rang with his thanks—and a request that Bumstead similarly renovate the house’s gates and furniture.

Films as Cinematographer:

1915 Alsace (Pouctal); La Folie du Docteur Tube (Gance)
1916 La Fleur des ruines (Gance); L’Enigme de dix heures (Gance); L’Hérosisme de Paddy (Gance); Le Fou de la falaise (Gance); Ce que les flots racontent (Gance); Les Mouettes (Mariaud); Fioritures (L a Source de beauté (Gance); Barberousse (Gance); Les Gaz mortels (La Brouillard sur la ville) (Gance)
1917 Le Droit à la vie (Gance); La Zone de la mort (Gance); Mater Dolorosa (Gance)
1918 La Dixième Symphonie (Gance)
1919 J’accuse (Gance)
1921 L’Hirondelle et la mésange (Antoine); Mademoiselle de la seiglière (Antoine)
1922 L’Artésienne (Antoine)
1923 Visages d’enfants (Feyder); La Roue (Gance); La Femme inconnue (de Baroncelli)
1924 Salammbo (Der Kampf um Karthago) (Maradon)
1925 Michel Strogoff (Tourjansky); L’Image (Feyder); Feu Mathias Pascal (The Late Mathias Pascal; The Living Dead Man) (L’Herbier)
1927 Napoléon (Gance) (co); Casanova (Wolkoff); Morgane la Sirène (Perret); La Danseuse orchidée (Perret); L’Équipage (Tourneur)
1928 Nuits de princes (D’Herbier); Vénus (Mercanton)
1929 The Three Passions (Ingram); Frivolités (Mazeline and Le Hénaff); Le Regain (Chomettre); Le Secret de Delthia (Menesier)
1930 Le Mystère de la chambre jaune (L’Herbier); Die Fremde (Sauer)—also French version, L’Etrangère (Ravel); Die Königin einer Nacht (Wendhausen) (co)—also French version, La Femme d’une nuit (L’Herbier)
1931 Un Soir de rafle (Gallone); L’Aiglon (Tourjansky); Baroud (Love and Morocco) (Ingram)

—John Baxter, updated by Chris Routledge
A cinematographer is like a chameleon, in that his job is to capture whatever diverse moods and images are required by his director. Abel Gance and Robert Bresson are a pair of directors with profoundly different aesthetics. So, if these two are among the most revered French filmmakers of the pre-Nouvelle Vague, then Léonce-Henry Burel (who photographed several of Gance and Bresson’s most representative images) must not only be a master of versatility, but one of the greatest of all French cinematographers.

This could be the case if only for longevity: Burel’s career spans seven decades, with credits that include a healthy share of French cinema classics from Gance’s Mater Dolorosa in 1917 and his first version of J’accuse in 1919 through Bresson’s Les Procès de Jeanne d’Arc (The Trial of Joan of Arc) in 1962. Indeed, in The Parade’s Gone By . . ., Kevin Brownlow calls the cinematographer “brilliant;” in his book on the reconstruction of Gance’s 1927 epic, Napoléon (on which Burel served as a chief cameraman), Brownlow refers to him as “one of the finest cinematographers Europe has ever known.”

Burel established his reputation as the photographer of Gance’s most important early films, culminating with his work on Napoléon as part of a team of cinematographers. Much of Burel’s initial collaboration with Gance predates the German Expressionism of the 1920s: in La Folie du Docteur T. B., he uses mirrors to create images that are fragmented, abstracted; in close-ups in Barberousse, the camera is set below the actor’s face, resulting in stark, expressive imagery; in Mater Dolorosa, light and shade are utilized to vividly emphasize facial expressions.

J’accuse features images which depict the devastation of war in grand, panoramic terms. It is highlighted by the famous, allegorical “Return of the Dead” sequence, in which thousands of deceased First World War soldiers collectively rise from the battlefields and march off to see if their sacrifices were in vain. Burel’s camera captures Gance’s vision in vividly eerie detail. And later, in La Ruse, he stunningly photographs the various objects relating to the film’s grimy railroad and snowy mountain settings. They become key elements within each sequence, not simply backgrounds.
Whatever Burel’s specific contribution to Napoléon, the film remains a landmark of cinematographic innovation. It is crammed with majestic images, including detailed battle sequences, and is a startling example of the creative use of the camera. There is camera movement to imitate a ship in a storm at sea; spectacular lighting; handheld cameras attached to horses, pendulums, even a toboggan; and, finally, color sequences (the latter, according to Georges Sadoul, was Burel’s major contribution to Napoléon).

As the Gance films feature images that portray reality in expressive, panoramic terms, and that are intended to stir the senses, Burel’s films with Robert Bresson (including Le Journal d’un curé de campagne, Un Condamné à mort s’est échappé, Pickpocket and Le Procès de Jeanne d’Arc) offer visuals that explore their characters’ inner workings. His dusky blacks and glaring greys are precise accompaniments to Bresson’s highly personal vision: pastoral and intimate depictions of reality as a still-life, with the resulting emotion deriving from images that are austere, that evolve from the filmmaker’s particular world view.

Burel’s work with Bresson is interior and philosophical; here, dialogue and other interaction between the characters, along with the shots of faces and objects that are necessary to Bresson’s art, take precedence over compositions that are overtly dramatic. Contrasted with J’accuse or Napoléon, there is a visual monotony, but that is precisely Bresson’s scheme. His concern is the characters and their sensitivities, how they look when they ask questions and give answers.

Burel’s own career as a director—he made a trio of features between 1922 and 1932—remains minor. But his work with Gance and Bresson—he also collaborated with a gallery of other filmmakers, including Feyder, Renoir, L’Herbier, Benoit-Levy and Maurice Tourneur—is indicative of his outstanding ability to capture images that fit each filmmakers’ diversely varying cinematic vision.

—Rob Edelman

BURKS, Robert

Films as Cinematographer:

1944 Jammin’ the Blues (Mili); Make Your Own Bed (Godfrey)
1945 Escape in the Desert (Blatt); Hitler Lives! (Siegel); Star in the Night (Siegel)
1948 To the Victor (Daves); A Kiss in the Dark (Daves)
1949 Task Force (Daves) (co); The Fountainhead (King Vidor); Beyond the Forest (King Vidor)
1950 The Glass Menagerie (Rapper)
1951 Room for One More (Taurog); Close to My Heart (Keighley); The Enforcer (Murder Inc.) (Windust); Strangers on a Train (Hitchcock); Tomorrow Is Another Day (Feist); Come Fill the Cup (Douglas)
1952 Mara Maru (Douglas); I Confess (Hitchcock)
1953 The Desert Song (Humberstone); Hondo (Farrow) (co); The Boy from Oklahoma (Farrow); So This Is Love (The Grace Moore Story) (Douglas)
1954 Dial M for Murder (Hitchcock); Rear Window (Hitchcock)
1955 To Catch a Thief (Hitchcock); The Man Who Knew Too Much (Hitchcock); The Trouble with Harry (Hitchcock)
1956 The Vagabond King (Curti); The Wrong Man (Hitchcock)
1957 The Spirit of St. Louis (Wildner) (co)
1958 Vertigo (Hitchcock); The Black Orchid (Ritt)
1959 North By Northwest (Hitchcock); But Not for Me (Walker Lang)
1960 The Rat Race (Mulligan); The Great Impostor (Mulligan)
1961 The Pleasure of His Company (Seaton)
1962 The Music Man (da Costa)
1963 The Birds (Hitchcock)
1964 Marnie (Hitchcock)
1965 Once a Thief (Nelson); A Patch of Blue (Green)
1966 A Covenant with Death (Johnson)
1967 Waterhole #3 (Graham)

Films as Special Effects Photographer:

1937 Marked Woman (Bacon) (co)
1940 Brother Orchid (Bacon) (co); A Dispatch from Reuters (This Man Reuter) (Dieterle); They Drive by Night (The Road to Frisco) (Walsh); The Story of Dr. Ehrlich’s Magic Bullet (Dr. Ehrlich’s Magic Bullet) (Dieterle)
1941 King’s Row (Wood); Highway West (McGann)
1942 In This Our Life (Huston) (co)
1944 Arsenic and Old Lace (Capra) (co)
1945 Pride of the Marines (Forever in Love) (Daves); God Is My Co-Pilot (Florey)
1946 Night and Day (Curti); The Verdict (Siegel)
1947 The Two Mrs. Carrolls (Godfrey); My Wild Irish Rose (Butley); Possessed (Bernhardt); The Unfaithful (Sherman); Cry Wolf (Godfrey); The Unsuspected (Curti)
1948 The Woman in White (Godfrey); Key Largo (Huston) (co); Romance on the High Seas (It’s Magic) (Curti); Smart Girls Don’t Talk (Bare)
1949 John Loves Mary (Butler); The Younger Brothers (Marin)
1952 The Miracle of Our Lady of Fatima (The Miracle of Fatima) (Brahm)

Publications

On BURKS: articles—

Film Comment (New York), vol. 8, no. 2, Summer 1972.

* * *

Robert Burks was perhaps Alfred Hitchcock’s most important collaborator on the director’s films of the fifties and early sixties. To be sure, of the crucial collaborators from this period, such as the film editor George Tomasini and the composer Bernard Herrmann, Burks worked with Hitchcock most consistently. He photographed Hitchcock’s films from Strangers on a Train (1951) to Marnie (1964), with the crucial exception of Psycho (1960), for which Hitchcock attempted to achieve a different visual texture by using his television crew. (Psycho was photographed by John Russell.) These are the films on which Burks’s reputation as a cinematographer largely rests, and what is immediately striking about them is their visual range. Indeed, throughout the fifties, Hitchcock made two distinct types of films. For Paramount, he made big-budget films in color with established stars and crowd-pleasing suspense tactics (Rear Window, The Man Who Knew Too Much). For the more adventurous Warner Bros. studio, he made films with lower budgets, usually in black-and-white featuring lesser-known actors, and exploring forms of irony and pessimism that became the dominant tones of Hitchcock’s late work. Amazingly, Burks was capable of shooting both the bleakly neorealist The Wrong Man (1956) and the jubilantly colorful To Catch a Thief (1955); both the delicately shaded Strangers on a Train and the deliriously deep-toned Vertigo (1958).

If this set of films illustrates Burks’s range, it is perhaps in the later films that Burks’s experiments with color are most audacious. It may well be, of course, that Hitchcock was a decisive influence on these experiments. Certainly nothing in the bland colors Burks provided for Morton da Costa’s overblown The Music Man (1962) prepares one for the extraordinary palette of Marnie with its feverish color contrasts, its nauseous yellows and bile-greens set against burnished or full-hued auburns and blues. The film was much criticized at the time of its release for its presumed visual clumsiness. Now, however, it seems very much a precursor of sixties art-cinema, especially of such a film as Antonioni’s Red Desert (1966). Moreover, the film’s visual distinction lies not only in its play with color but in Burks’s manipulation of telephoto and wide-angle lenses, particularly in the climactic flashback scene. Thus Marnie, Burks’s last film with Hitchcock, emerges as in many ways his most extraordinary achievement.

—James Morrison

BURMAN, S. D.

Composer and Musical Director. Nationality: Indian. Born: Kumar (Prince) Sachin Dev Burman in Comilla (now in Bangladesh), 1 October 1906. Education: Graduated from Calcutta University; studied Indian classical music with Bhishmadev Chatterjee, Badal Khan, Alauddin Khan, and others. Career: Served in the court of Maharaja of Tripura; 1932—radio singer on Calcutta station; also made popular recordings of East Bengal folk songs; 1934—small singing role in Urdu film Selima; 1937—first film as musical director, Raagi; 1944—settled in Bombay; 1945—composed first songs for film, Shikari; compiled collection of Indian folk songs. Awards: Sangeet Natak Akademi (Academy of Music and Plays) award, 1957; President of India Padmashree award, 1969; India National Film award for Aradhana, 1969; Zindagi, Zindagi, 1972.  Died: In Bombay, 31 October 1977.

Films as Composer and Musical Director:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>Raagi (mus d only)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1945</td>
<td>Shikari</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1946</td>
<td>Aath Din</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>Chittor Vijay, Dil Ki Rani, Do Bhai</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Films as Actor:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>Selima</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>Bidrohi</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

On BURMAN: articles—

Rangoonwalla, Feroze, in Screen (Bombay), 4 August 1978.
Rangoonwalla, Feroze, in Screen (Bombay), 11 August 1978.
Ragendran, Girija, in Screen (Bombay), 27 October 1978.

S. D. Burman migrated to Bombay early in his singing career (1944) and soon climbed to the top, despite the city’s cut-throat competition. Burman stayed in Bombay for more than three decades, but he continued to hold Bengal dear and it is from there that he drew his creative sustenance. His childhood exposure to the vast paddy fields and swollen, serpentine rivers of East Bengal and to the folk music of Chittagong and Comilla influenced his slightly nasal, long-drawn style of singing, evoking mood and landscape. His name on a cinema poster or advertisement was enough to guarantee box-office success in the 1950s and beyond.

Burman sang or wrote the music for over 500 songs in Hindi films from Bombay alone, in addition to his numerous recordings in Calcutta and Bombay, and though he amassed a fortune, he remained...

S. D. Burman’s memory will be preserved among millions of his admirers through his lilting tunes, whether it was a melancholy Bhatiali of East Bengal or a love song in an indifferent Hindi film. His tunes transcend space and time and transport a listener to a milieu of romance or nostalgia. He took five to six days to decide a tune, test and retest it, before going ahead with the composition. No wonder they abide.

——Bibekananda Ray

BURTT, Ben

Films as Sound Technician:

1974 Kildozer (London)
1977 Star Wars (Lucas)
1978 Invasion of the Body Snatchers (Kaufman)
1979 Alien (Scott)
1980 The Empire Strikes Back (Kershner)
1981 Raiders of the Lost Ark (Spielberg)
1982 E.T.—The Extra-Terrestrial (Spielberg); The Dark Crystal (Henson)
1983 Return of the Jedi (Marquand); WarGames (Badham)
1984 Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom (Spielberg)
1989 Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade (Spielberg)
1989 Always (Spielberg)
1999 Star Wars: Episode I—The Phantom Menace (Lucas) (+ ed)

Other Films:

1986 The Great Heep (Smith) (sc)
1990 Blue Planet (d)
1992 The Young Indiana Jones Chronicles (series for TV) (d)
1994 Destiny in Space (d)
1995 Young Indiana Jones and the Attack of the Hawkmen (d)
1996 Special Effects: Anything Can Happen (d, ed, co-sc)

Publications

By BURTT: article—

On BURTT: article—

Mancini, Marc, in Film Comment (New York), November/December 1983.

Weaver, J.M., in Skrien (Amsterdam), February/March 1995.

Garcia, F., in Cinefantastique (Forest Park), vol. 28, no. 8, 1997.

* * *

As head supervisor of Skywalker Sound (formerly Sprocket Systems), Ben Burtt is chiefly known as George Lucas’s personal sound designer, creating the now telltale sound effects for Lucas’s Star Wars trilogy. Equally impressive is Burtt’s insistence on using original sounds, or distorting classical sounds through electronic processing. Rather than rely on stock sounds, computers, or synthesizers, Burtt finds his own sounds and reinvents them in the laboratory. This dedication to sounds discovered in the physical world leads Burtt to unusual sources. A Star Wars laser blast, for example, is Burtt tapping a radio wire in the Mojave Desert. The rolling boulder in Raiders of the Lost Ark is a station wagon coasting down a gravel road. Animals are primary sources for a slew of creatures and machines: Chewbacca’s growl, E.T.’s voice, and even a Star Wars TIE-Fighter derive from sounds of bears, seals, elephants, dogs, cats, badgers, raccoons, lions, and walruses.

Burtt has few peers in his orchestration of jarring, realistic sound effects in large-scale action sequences: the truck chase in Raiders has more than 200 camera cuts, and Burtt’s attention to nearly every detail—the loud crank of the truck’s hood ornament as Indiana Jones pulls it off, the smash of a windshield as a Nazi falls through it—shows he is a precise, gifted editor. But his expertise is in science-fiction/fantasy pictures whose settings and characters are without “natural” sounds. The spacecraft and creatures out of E.T., Alien, The Dark Crystal, and the Star Wars films have no voice beyond Burtt’s invention.

Rarely is a Burtt sound effect limited to one noise for one event; he prefers mixes—overlapping or sequential effects arranged in a sound montage. These montages vary in length from a split second (the Millenium Falcon’s door opening in Star Wars) to several minutes (the birth of a pod person in Invasion of the Body Snatchers). Many of Burtt’s assigned pictures have long passages without dialogue; the only sounds in these sequences come from Burtt and the musician (John Williams is a frequent collaborator), and to a large extent, Burtt’s effects have to tell the story. Body Snatchers is a prime example: the exhausted heroes have to keep quiet to elude the pod people, who alert each other with a horrifying scream devised by Burtt—the only confirmation of their alien identity.

Burtt is especially adept at creating offscreen action with offscreen sounds. A scene crowded with chattering aliens and futuristic machinery (the cantina in Star Wars, Jabba’s palace in Return of the Jedi, the holding docks in The Empire Strikes Back) depends on background noise for ambience and authenticity. In the Star Wars pictures,
Burtt creates an intergalactic hubbub so busy and familiar it is irresistibly funny, if a little sophomoric: glutinous monsters slobber and belch (see also—or hear—The Dark Crystal’s infamous banquet scene); Jabba’s palace minions hoot and holler at Luke’s fight against the Rancor with catcalls, whistles, and yee-hahs; robots beep and argue in languages that need no translation. The background effects in Star Wars almost always suggest an Earthly setting, bridging Lucas’s galaxy with our own through an aural similarity.

At times the offscreen sound effects provide more than mere background: they depict actions we cannot see, or supply information withheld from the camera. This dependence on the sound expert to ‘‘fill in’’ crucial elements absent from the screen is, of course, fiscally prudent: Yoda’s resurrection of Luke’s X-Wing Fighter from a bog in Empire is largely conveyed through close-ups of Yoda and a burbling, sloshing sound inserted by Burtt (as well as some stirring music by Williams)—a more cost-effective method than simply air-lifting the whole fighter. But the closeups and the sloshing are also dramatically effective: they leave more to the imagination. In several pictures, Burtt’s offscreen montages heighten suspense or inject humor into a scene. They range from a quick fistfight in Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom—we hear an offscreen Indy punch out a Thuggee guard, who slides on-screen through a group of slave children who had been watching the fight with their mouths open—to Ripley’s mad, prolonged scurrying through the corridors of the Nostromo in Alien, accompanied by endlessly overlapping hisses and shudders that both suggest and cloak the sounds of the monster chasing her. The Star Wars radio series, released after Jedi, owes its success entirely to Burtt’s mastery of audio drama.

Given Burtt’s painstaking technique, it’s not surprising that he’s a perfectionist who expects theaters to do justice to his effects. Dissatisfied with the poor quality of sound equipment in most theaters showing Jedi, Burtt designed a surround speaker system that more advanced theaters have adopted: all dialogue issues from two speakers in the bottom center of the screen, while a network of speakers all around the theater broadcast the more spectacular sound effects in digital stereo. Although the system is expensive, and not every film can benefit from surround sound—few films are on the massive scale of Lucas’s and Spielberg’s—a monotrack system quashes many of Burtt’s compositions.

Perhaps disenchanted with most theatrical sound systems, Burtt has avoided the feature film industry in recent years, concentrating on such projects as 1990’s Blue Planet, an IMAX film released only in those theaters equipped with IMAX screens two stories high. IMAX theaters are a sound expert’s dream, featuring a multitrack, floor-rumbling speaker system more complex than Cinerama and twice as loud. A towering IMAX image from Blue Planet, coupled with pristine, undistorted sounds mixed in Burtt’s laboratory, inspire awe in the audience, a response as rare as the talents worthy of evoking it. In terms of audio-visual extravagance, Burtt has broken the sound barrier.

—Ken Provencher

BURWELL, Carter

Films as Composer:

1984 Blood Simple (Coen and Coen)
1985 A Hero of Our Time (Almereyda)
1986 Psycho III (Perkins)
1987 Raising Arizona (Coen and Coen)
1988 Pass the Ammo (Beaird); It Takes Two (Beaird); The Beat (Mones)
1989 Checking Out (Leland)
1990 Miller’s Crossing (Coen and Coen)
1991 Doc Hollywood (Caton-Jones); Barton Fink (Coen and Coen); Scorchers (Beaird)
1992 Buffy the Vampire Slayer (Kuzui); Waterland (Gyllenhaal); Storyville (Frost)
1993 This Boy’s Life (Caton-Jones); Kalifornia (Sena); A Dangerous Woman (Gyllenhaal); And the Band Played On (Spottiswoode—for TV); Wayne’s World 2 (Surikj)
1994 It Could Happen to You (Bergman); The Hudsucker Proxy (Coen and Coen); Airheads (Lehmann)
1995 Children Remember the Holocaust (doc) (Gordon); Bad Company (Harris); Rob Roy (Caton-Jones); A Goofy Movie (Lima); The Celluloid Closet (doc) (Epstein and Friedman); Two Bits (Foley)
1996 The Chamber (Foley); Fargo (Coen and Coen); Fear (Foley); Joe’s Apartment (Payson)
1997 Girls Night Out (Paci); Picture Perfect (Coron); Assassin(s) (Kassovitz); Conspiracy Theory (Donner); The Locusts (Kelley); The Spanish Prisoner (Mamet); The Jackal (Caton-Jones)
1998 Gods and Monsters (Condon); The Big Lebowski (Coen and Coen); Velvet Goldmine (Haynes); The Hi-Lo Country (Frear)
1999 The Corruptor (Foley); The General’s Daughter (West); Being John Malkovich (Jonze); Three Kings (Russell); Mystery, Alaska (Roach)
2000 Hamlet (Almereyda); What Planet Are You From? (Nichols); High Fidelity (Fears)

Publications

On BURWELL: articles—

* * *
Carter Burwell is among the most chameleonic of modern film composers. Though his music certainly has recognizable traits, his work for the first seven films by Joel and Ethan Coen is greatly varied in style—far from instantly identifiable, at least when compared to the scores of Angelo Badalamenti for David Lynch, or Bernard Herrmann for Alfred Hitchcock (or for anyone else). In the mid-to-late 1990s Burwell has also been among the most prolific of American film composers, averaging five scores per year while working on everything from risk-taking independent films to big summer spectacles—e.g., from Being John Malkovich to Conspiracy Theory, with A Goofy Movie for good measure. One can single out particular musical characteristics of a Burwell score—favorite chord progressions, a fondness for wistful little themes for solo piano or occasionally celesta or the like against soft strings—but perhaps what his scores most have in common is a general “thoughtfulness” and subtlety, compared to the “blast-em-with-the-big-theme-again” philosophy of many current Hollywood composers. While “self-effacing” would be the wrong term for Burwell, he does appear to subscribe to the classic position that movie music should seldom call attention to itself, but always serve the drama.

A look at the Coen brothers’ first three films reveals some of Burwell’s range. His first film score, for Blood Simple (a noirish thriller with black comedy very close to the Coens’ later Fargo), is nothing if not understated, but effective in its quiet way. Lightly scored (mainly with a synthesizer), the music is neither conventionally suspenseful nor grotesquely humorous, though there are occasional menacing groaning sounds; more often we hear a pensive sort of solo piano music (“eerie” would be overstating the case). Raising Arizona is inventive in completely different ways. The cartoonish and mostly illegal activities of the redneck characters are fittingly accompanied by banjo music of the Bonnie and Clyde variety, though with the addition of yodeling vocals and odd bits like a Country version of Beethoven’s “Ode to Joy.” Yet there are also musical moments that are almost indefinable in mood, though somehow “right,” like the abrupt, possibly teasing, synthesizer notes when Nicholas Cage’s character is attempting to steal one of the quints. (One might have thought the scene called for the kind of conical suspense music one hears in a Warner Brothers cartoon, but Burwell rarely goes for the conventional.) The historical gangster drama Miller’s Crossing does not use music for most of its dialogue, and some violent scenes are backed by old-fashioned songs for Irish tenor (“‘Danny Boy’ and ‘Good Night, Sweetheart’”) to ironic effect; but Burwell comes up with a stately, very Irish-sounding theme—this is his first orchestral score—for the opening and final credits and some scenes between Tom and Verna, with solo oboe playing a traditional melody and symbols punctuating the bigger restatements.

As for the Coens’ more recent Fargo, with its murder spree in Minnesota, the title music, strangely enough, has a medieval or folk flavor, modal with harp and what sound like viols; later drums introduce a bigger, more solemn version of the music in a more definite minor key. Hearing the music alone, one might expect something more along the lines of Ivanhoe, but in fact the “medieval” theme will be used again to introduce the crime-solving police officer Marge, and played even as she dines at Hardee’s. The film does contain what seems mock-ominous music, as during shots of the Paul Bunyan statue, yet the score as a whole is very far from either suspenseful or satirical in any obvious way, though it does keep a sort of ironic distance from the action. Curiously, it even makes certain scenes (e.g., ones involving Marge) touching that might otherwise seem deliberately ludicrous. Much the same might be said about Burwell’s score for Spike Jonze’s Being John Malkovich, where the plot itself is sufficiently weird without any need for a joking soundtrack; if anything, the score could be called wistful, as in the puppet music. Burwell’s music for directors besides the Coens is equally varied. For example, Richard Donner’s Conspiracy Theory is the sort of film that calls for a great deal of soundtrack music, filled as it is with suspense sequences, extensive driving on the streets of New York, and a much more prominent love drama than most thrillers contain. Burwell does offer some fairly typical “thriller music,” including one theme with a Peter Gunn rhythm for some street scenes, and some jazzy passages that may recall the scores of John Barry, but much of his contribution is extremely subtle. As is often the case for this composer, some of the action scenes are accompanied so deftly (but not softly, and not routinely) that one hardly notices how well the music is doing its job. For the romance between Mel Gibson and Julia Roberts, music is particularly needed to convey the true feelings of the hero, who is extremely inarticulate and motivated by repressed memories; again Burwell’s music is stirring without being either sentimental or grandiose.

For Richard Condon’s Gods and Monsters, about the twilight years of the “forgotten” film director James Whale and his troubled involvement with a young gardener on his estate—a story with echoes of Death in Venice and Sunset Boulevard—Burwell again avoids heavy sentimentality, especially of the sort which Franz Waxman used for Whale’s The Bride of Frankenstein, scenes from which are shown in Condon’s film. We do get a sad waltz during a dream near the very end, and a solo violin passage that gently connects to the Hermit’s playing for the Monster in Whale’s movie; but as usual, it is very hard to attach a simple emotional label to most of Burwell’s score, whose main theme is more a delicately orchestrated series of chords than an identifiable tune. For certain dramatic scenes late in the film the music editors do seem to have laid on the music rather mindlessly and almost inaudibly, but for the flashbacks and fantasies that Whale (Ian McKellen) slips into, the music is hauntingly appropriate.

In line with what could be called a non-egotistical approach to scoring, Burwell has also proven a successful collaborator and adapter. In a film like Velvet Goldmine, about glam-rock musicians of the 1970s, his synthesizer and guitar accompaniments discreetly contribute to the mostly pop score. For Rob Roy, he combines his own themes with traditional Celtic music performed by folk specialists. For the Coens’ The Hudsucker Proxy he features music by Aram Khatchaturian, chiefly the love theme from the ballet Spartacus (truly a “big theme” of practically Max Steiner dimensions, with its “Stormy Weather” first notes), for mocking effect. Like film composers of an older generation Burwell is good at evoking exotic settings—but rather than compose in the “Hollywood-Oriental” styles once standard for pictures set in China or the Middle East, he uses authentic instruments and creates unusual pastiches of Western and other music. An example is his score for The Corruptor, a Hong-Kong-action-comes-to-NY-Chinatown thriller, featuring actual Chinese stringed instruments and woodwinds but with an American pop-rhythm accompaniment. Three Kings, with its Gulf War setting, has an especially eclectic score: it uses Middle Eastern sounds, but also does not hesitate to borrow a chorus from Handel for a drive across the desert. Some stretches of military action have only a drum set accompaniment, while music connected to “treasure” is quiet, with chime-like sounds, later overlaid with Middle Eastern music when the soldiers find the gold.
“Never obvious” could practically be this composer’s motto. For better or worse, there is nothing in Burwell’s music like Trevor Jones’ stirring main theme for Michael Mann’s Last of the Mohicans. A recurring theme for Rob Roy is about as close as he comes to such a style: a tender melody, first played by folk instruments, but suitable for statement by full orchestra during the film’s grander moments. Still, the moody, thoughtful scores he has created for an astonishing variety of films have made him one of the distinguished film composers of his generation.

—Joseph Milicia
CAHN, Sammy

Films as Lyricist:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>Argentine Nights</td>
<td>(Rogell); Ladies Must Live</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(Smith)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>Time Out for Rhythm</td>
<td>(Salkow); Go West, Young Lady</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Sing for Your Supper</td>
<td>(Strayer); Rookies on Parade</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(Santley); Two Latins from</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Manhattan (Barton); Honolulu</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Lu (Barton)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1942 Two Yanks in Trinidad (Ratoff); Johnny Doughboy (Auer); Blondie Goes to College (Strayer); Blondie’s Blessed Event (Strayer); Youth on Parade (Rogell)

1943 Crazy House (Cline); Lady of Burlesque (Wellman); Let’s Face It (Lanfield); Thumbs Up (Santley); The Heat’s On (Ratoff)

1944 Follow the Boys (Sutherland); Knickerbocker Holiday (Brown); Jam Session (Barton); Carolina Blues (Jason); Step Lively (Whelan); Jamie (Curtiz); A Song to Remember (C. Vidor); Tonight and Every Night (Saville)

1945 Anchors Aweigh (Sidney); The Stork Club (Walker); Thrill of a Romance (Thorpe)

1946 The Kid from Brooklyn (McLeod); Cinderella Jones (Berkeley); Earl Carroll Sketchbook (Rogell); Tars and Spars (Green); The Sweetheart of Sigma Chi (Bernhard); It Happened in Brooklyn (Whorf)

1947 Ladies Man (Russell)

1948 Romance on the High Seas (Curtiz); Sons of Adventure (Canutt); Two Guys from Texas (Butler); Miracle of the Bells (Pichel)

1949 It’s a Great Feeling (Butler); Borderline (Seiter); Always Leave Them Laughing (Del Ruth); Anna Lucasta (Rapper)

1950 Young Man with a Horn (Curtiz); The Toast of New Orleans (Taurog); The West Point Story (Del Ruth)

1951 Rich, Young and Pretty (Curtiz); Sugarfoot (Marin); Two Tickets to Broadway (Kern); Double Dynamite (Cummings)

1952 April in Paris (Butler); She’s Working Her Way Through College (Humberstone); Stazione Termini (Indiscretion of an American Wife) (De Sica)

1953 Because You’re Mine (Hally); Peter Pan (Luske, Geronimi, and Jackson); Three Sailors and a Girl (Del Ruth) (+ pr)

1954 Three Coins in the Fountain (Negulesco); Vera Cruz (Aldrich)

1955 The Tender Trap (Walters); Love Me or Leave Me (C. Vidor); The Court Jester (Panama and Frank); Anything Goes (Lewis); Pete Kelly’s Blues (Webb); You’re Never Too Young (Taurog); How to Be Very, Very Popular (Johnson); Ain’t Misbehavin’ (Buzzell); The Seven Year Itch (Wilder)

1956 Meet Me in Las Vegas (Rowland); Written on the Wind (Sirk); Quincannon, Frontier Scout (Selander); Serenade (A. Mann); Somebody Up There Likes Me (Wise); Forever Darling (Hall); The Opposite Sex (Miller) Pardners (Taurog); Beau James (Shavelson)

1957 Pal Joey (Sidney); The Joker Is Wild (C. Vidor); Until They Sail (Wise); Ten Thousand Bedrooms (Thorpe); Don’t Go Near the Water (Walters); This Could Be the Night (Wise)

1958 The Long Hot Summer (Ritt); Indiscreet (Donen); Paris Holiday (Oswald); Some Came Running (Minnelli); Home Before Dark (LeRoy); Rock-a-Bye Baby (Tashlin); The Sound and the Fury (Ritt); Party Girl (Ray); Kings Go Forth (Daves)
1959 A Hole in the Head (Capra); Who Was That Lady? (Sidney); The Best of Everything (Negulesco); Career (Anthony); They Came to Cordura (Rossen); This Earth Is Mine (H. King); Say One for Me (Tashlin); Holiday for Lovers (Levin); Journey to the Center of the Earth (Levin); Night of the Quarter Moon (Haas)

1960 High Time (Edwards); Wake Me When It’s Over (LeRoy); Let’s Make Love (Cukor); Oceans Eleven (Milestone); The World of Suzie Wong (Quine)

1961 The Pleasure of His Company (Seaton); Pocketful of Miracles (Capra); By Love Possessed (J. Sturges)

1962 Boys’ Night Out (Gordon); The Road to Hong Kong (Panama); How the West Was Won (Ford, Marshall, and Hathaway); Gigot (Kelly)

1963 My Six Loves (Champion); Papa’s Delicate Condition (Marshall); Come Fly with Me (Levin); Come Blow Your Horn (Yorkin); Johnny Cool (Asher); Under the Yum Yum Tree (Swift); 4 for Texas (Aldrich)

1964 Robin and the 7 Hoods (Douglas); Honeymoon Hotel (Levin); Looking for Love (Weiss); The Pleasure Seekers (Negulesco); Where Love Has Gone (Dmytryk)

1965 Licensed to Kill (The Second Best Secret Agent in the Whole Wide World) (Shonteff) (song in US version)

1966 The Oscar (Rouse); Texas Across the River (Gordon)

1967 The Bobo (Parrish); Thoroughly Modern Millie (Hill); The Cool Ones (Nelson); The Odd Couple (Saks); Jack and the Beanstalk (Kelly)

1968 Star! (Wise); A Flea in Her Ear (Charon); Bandolero! (McLaglen)

1969 The Great Bank Robbery (Averback)

1971 Journey Back to Oz (Sutherland)

1973 The Heartbreak Kid (May); A Touch of Class (Frank)

1974 Paper Tiger (Annakin)

1975 Whiffs (Post); I Will, I Will . . . for Now (Panama)

1976 The Duchess and the Dirtwater Fox (Frank) (co)

1977 Fingers (Toback)

1978 The Stud (Masters)

1982 Heidi’s Song (Taylor—animation)

Sammy Cahn was one of the mainstays of Hollywood’s popular music industry during its Golden Age from the 1930s to the 1960s. In a remarkable career from 1942 to 1975 he worked as a lyricist with four different composers to garner some 25 Academy Award nominations for best original song. He won four times and will always be remembered for the words to such popular classics as “Three Coins in the Fountain,” “All the Way,” and “High Hopes.” Cahn proved to be a survivor by adapting to the changing musical tastes of a nation. From the Broadway-inspired musical tunes of the 1940s he moved smoothly to ballads for the 1950s and 1960s.

Songwriter Jules Styne and lyricist Cahn churned out hit after hit during the 1940s. They were one of a select team of composer/lyricists who wrote the year’s top ten hits, year in and year out. In the 1940s the movies, by and large, introduced the major popular musical hits, and Styne and Cahn contrived their share for such stars as Frank Sinatra in Anchors Aweigh and Danny Kaye in The Kid from Brooklyn.

But movie music moved into different forms, and Cahn, ever the professional, adapted. In the 1950s he teamed with Nicholas Brodszky to write several forgettable songs from movies such as The Toast of New Orleans and Love Me or Leave Me. But with “Three Coins in the Fountain,” a major hit in 1953, Cahn’s career was off again. The reason was a new partner, Jimmy Van Heusen, and the renewed career of hit-maker Frank Sinatra.

The late 1950s and the early 1960s were a “Golden Age” for Cahn and Van Heusen. Together with Sinatra they provided hit after hit in the face of a revolution in popular music—rock and roll. “All the Way” and “High Hopes” came to be Sinatra standards. Unfortunately the Sinatra rage ended with the coming of the Beatles. Yet Cahn and Van Heusen kept on with the formula music which had worked so well before, and provided the forgettable theme song from the gigantic bust Star! Musical idioms had changed and the contributions of Sammy Cahn would fade into the world of nostalgia.

Sammy Cahn, thus, stands as yet another example of the multitude of top professionals who labored to create the great Hollywood movies of the past. Though working in a niche of the business that is not often taken very seriously, Cahn does deserve a note as one of the film industry’s (as well as the popular music industry’s) great talents.

—Douglas Gomery

---

CANUTT, Yakima

Stuntman and Second Unit Director. Nationality: American. Born: Enos Edward Canutt in Colfax, Washington, 29 November 1895. Family: Sons: actors/stuntmen Tap and Joe Canutt. Career: Ranch hand, then joined wild west show at age 17: became rodeo “world champion”; 1919—first film appearance as actor/stuntman; 1927–35—second unit director for Mascot; 1935–48—head of Republic stunt unit. Award: Special Academy Award, 1966. Died: In Hollywood, California, 24 May 1986.

Films as Actor/Stuntman:

1919 Lighting Bryce (Hurst—serial)
1922 The Heart of a Texan (Hurst)
Yakima Canutt

1923  The Forbidden Range (Hart)
1924  The Days of ’49 (Jaccard and Marchand—serial; released as feature California in ’49, 1924); The Desert Hawk (De La Mothe); Ridin’ Mad (Jaccard); Sell ’em Cowboy (Alias Texas Pete Owens) (Hayes); Branded a Bandit (Hurst); The Riddle Rider (Craft—serial)
1925  The Cactus Cure (Hayes); Romance and Rustlers (Wilson); Scar Hanan (The Man with the Scar) (Wilson, Linden, and Cunliff) (+ co-sc); Risin’ Comet (Wilson); A Two-Fisted Sheriff (Wilson and Hayes); White Thunder (The White Rider) (Wilson); Wolves of the Road (Hayes); The Strange Rider (Hayes); The Human Tornado (Wilson)
1926  The Devil Horse (Jackman); The Fighting Stallion (Wilson); Desert Greed (Greed of Gold) (Jaccard); Hellhound of the Plains (Wilson)
1927  The Outline Breaker (Jaccard); Open Range (Smith)
1928  The Vanishing West (Thorpe—serial)
1929  The Three Outcasts (Smith) (+ co-sc as Enos Edwards); Bad Men’s Money (Mad Man’s Money) (McGowan); Captain Cowboy (McGowan); Riders of the Storm (McGowan); A Texan’s Honor

1930  Firebrand Jordan (Neitz); Ridin’ Law (Webb); Bar L Ranch (Webb); The Lonesome Trail (Mitchell); Canyon Hawks (Neitz); Westward Bound (Webb); The Texan (The Big Race) (Smith)
1931  Hurricane Horseman (The Mexican) (Schaefer); Pueblo Terror (Paradise Valley) (Neitz); Battling with Buffalo Bill (Taylor—serial); The Fighting Test (Horner); The Vanishing Legion (Eason—serial); The Lightning Warrior (Kline and Schaefer—serial)
1932  Cheyenne Cyclone (Smashing Through) (Schaefer); Two-Fisted Justice (Durlan); Wyoming Whirlwind (Schaefer); The Last Frontier (Bennet—serial; released as feature The Black Ghost, 1932); The Devil Horse (Brower—serial); The Shadow of the Eagle (Beebe—serial); Hurricane Express (Schaefer and McGowan—serial); The Last of the Mohicans (Eason and Beebe—serial); Raider of the Golden Gulch (Smith) (+ co-sc)
1933  The Telegraph Trail (Wright); Law and Lawless (Schaefer); The Three Musketeers (Schaefer and Clark—serial; released as feature Desert Command, 1948); Via Pony Express (Collins); Wolf Dog (Clark and Fraser—serial); *Fighting
1934 The Lucky Texan (Bradbury); West of the Divide (Bradbury); Texas Tornado (Drake); Blue Steel (Bradbury); The Man from Utah (Bradbury); Randy Rides Alone (Fraser); The Star Packer (Bradbury); Man from Hell (Collins); Fighting Through (Fraser); 'Neath the Arizona Skies (Fraser); Carrying the Mail (Framun and Emmett—short); The Lost Jungle (Schaefer and Clark—serial); Law of the Wild (Schaefer and Eason—serial); Mystery Mountain (Brower and Eason—serial); Outlaw Rule (Luby); Blazing Guns (Heinz); The Desert Man (Emmett—short); Pals of the West (Emmett—short)

1935 The Lawless Frontier (Bradbury); Circle of Death (London); Paradise Canyon (Pierson); The Dawn Rider (Bradbury); Westward Ho (Bradbury); Lawless Range (Bradbury); Cyclone of the Saddle (Clifton); The Farmer Takes a Wife (Fleming); The Phantom Empire (Brower and Eason—serial); Rough Ridin’ Rangers (The Secret Stranger) (Clifton); Dante’s Inferno (Lachman); The Fighting Marine (Eason—serial)

1936 The Oregon Trail (Pembroke); King of the Pecos (Kane); The Lonely Trail (Kane); Winds of the Wasteland (Wright); The Vigilantes Are Coming (The Mounties Are Coming) (Wright and Taylor—serial); Wildcat Trooper (Wild Cat) (Clifton); Ghost Town Gold (Kane); The Clutching Hand (Herman—serial); The Black Coin (Herman—serial); Roarin’ Lead (Wright and Newfield); Rose Marie (Van Dyke); Ten Laps to Go (Clifton); The Lawless Nineties (Kane); The Trail of the Lonesome Pine (Hathaway); San Francisco (Van Dyke); The Charge of the Light Brigade (Curtiz); The Big Show (Wright)

1937 The Bold Caballero (The Bold Cavalier) (Root); The Riders of the Whistling Skull (The Golden Trail) (Wright); Hit the Saddle (Wright); Trouble in Texas (Bradbury); Gunsight Ranch (Kane); Come on Cowboys (Kane); The Painted Stallion (Witney, James, and Taylor—serial); Range Defenders (Wright); Prairie Thunder (Eason); Riders of the Rockies (Bradbury); Riders of the Dawn (Bradbury); Zorro Rides Again (Witney and English—serial); The Mysterious Pilot (Bennett—serial); In Old Chicago (H. King); Rootin’ Tootin’ Rhythm (Rhythm on the Range) (Wright); S.O.S. Coastguard (Witney and James—serial); Ali Baba Goes to Town (Butler)

1938 The Secret of Treasure Island (Clifton—serial); The Lone Ranger (Witney and English—serial); Heart of the Rockies (Kane); Santa Fe Stampede (G. Sherman); The Girl of the Golden West (Leonard); Heroes of the Hills (G. Sherman); Pals of the Saddle (G. Sherman); Dick Tracy Returns (Witney and English—serial); Overland Stage Raiders (G. Sherman); Storm over Bengal (Salkow)

1939 Man of Conquest (Nicholls); Wyoming Outlaw (G. Sherman); The Kansas Terrors (G. Sherman); Cowboys from Texas (G. Sherman); Zorro’s Fighting Legion (Witney and English—serial); Gone with the Wind (Fleming); Jesse James (H. King); The Lone Ranger Rides Again (Witney and English—serial); Dodge City (Curtiz); The Night Riders (G. Sherman); The Oregon Trail (Beebe—serial); Captain Fury (Roach); Daredevils of the Red Circle (Witney and English—serial); The Light That Failed (Wellman)

1940 Pioneers of the West (Orelbeck); Ghost Valley Raiders (G. Sherman); The Ranger and the Lady (Kane); Under Texas Skies (G. Sherman); Frontier Vengeance (Watt); Young Bill Hickok (Kane); Virginia City (Curtiz); One Million B.C. (Man and His Mate) (Roach and Roach Jr.); Shooting High (Green); Deadwood Dick (Horne—serial); Boom Town (Conway); Oklahoma Renegades (Watt); Prairie Schooners (Through the Storm) (Nelson)

1941 Prairie Pioneers (Orelbeck); The Great Train Robbery (Kane); Gauchos of Eldorado (Orelbeck); White Eagle (Horne—serial); Western Union (F. Lang); Jungle Girl (Witney and English—serial); Kansas Cyclone (G. Sherman); Bad Man of Deadwood (Kane); King of the Texas Rangers (Witney and English—serial)

1942 Shadows on the Sage (Orelbeck); Spy Smasher (Witney—serial)

1943 Pride of the Plains (Fox); King of the Cowboys (Kane); Santa Fe Scouts (Bretherton); Song of Texas (Kane); Calling Wild Bill Hickok (Bennett); For Whom the Bell Tolls (Wood)

1944 Hidden Valley Outlaws (Bretherton); Zorro’s Black Whip (Grissell and Bennett—serial); The Tiger Woman (Perils of the Darkest Jungle) (Bennett and Grissell—serial)

1945 Sunset in El Dorado (McDonald)

1950 The Showdown (D. & S. McGowan); Rocky Mountain (Keighley)

Films as Stuntman and 2nd Unit Director:

1931 The Galloping Ghost (Schaefer and Eason—serial)
1939 Stagecoach (Ford)
1940 Dark Command (Walsh)
1941 They Died with Their Boots On (Walsh)
1943 In Old Oklahoma (Rogell)
1945 Flame of Barbary Coast (Kane); The Topeka Terror (Bretherton); Dakota (Kane); Manhunt of Mystery Island (+ co-d—serial); Sheriff of Chimarron (+ d); Federal Operator 99 (+ co-d—serial)
1946 Cyclone (Springsteen); Under Nevada Skies (McDonald); Angel and the Badman (Grant)
1947 Twilight on the Rio Grande (McDonald); That’s My Man (Will Tomorrow Ever Come?) (Borzage); Northwest Outpost (End of the Rainbow) (Dwan); Wyoming (Kane)
1949 Red Stallion in the Rockies (Murphy); Hellfire (Springsteen); The Doolins of Oklahoma (The Great Manhunt) (Douglas)
1950 Devil’s Doorway (A. Mann)
1952 Last of the Comanches (The Sabre and the Arrow) (De Toth); Ivanhoe (Thorpe); Hangman’s Knot (Huggins)
1955 The Far Horizons (Mate)
1957 Old Yeller (Stevenson)
1958 In Love and War (Dunne)
1959 Ben-Hur (Wyler)
1960 Spartacus (Kubrick)
1961 El Cid (A. Mann)
1962 How the West Was Won (Hathaway, Ford, and Marshall)
1966 Khartoum (Dearden)
1969 Where Eagles Dare (Hutton)
1970 Rio Lobo (Hawks)
1975 Breakheart Pass (Gries)
1985 High on the Range

Other Films:

1947 G-Men Never Forget (co-d—serial)
1948 Dangers of the Canadian Mounted (co-d); Oklahoma Badlands (d); Carson City Raiders (d); Adventures of Frank and Jesse James (co-d—serial); Sons of Adventure (d)
1954 The Lawless Rider (d)
1977 Equus (Lumet) (technical consultant)

Publications

By CANUTT: book—

On CANUTT: articles—

Classic Film Collector (Indiana, Pennsylvania), Summer 1967.
Filme Cultura (Rio de Janeiro), November-December 1969.
Ecran (Paris), May 1978.
Classic Images (Indiana, Pennsylvania), May 1984.
Rhodes, S., “‘Hangin’ On,’” in Filmfax (Evanson), February/March 1994.

* * *

In 1966, Yakima Canutt was given a special Academy Award “for creating the profession of stuntman as it exists today and for the development of many safety devices used by stuntmen everywhere.” Canutt helped legitimize the stuntman, and though he had peers such as Harvey Parry, Gil Perkins, and Dave Sharpe, it was Canutt whose work was best known and most widely publicized, largely through his 40-year association with John Wayne. Canutt graduated from stuntman to second unit director, staging action scenes for the likes of John Ford (Stagecoach), William Wellman (The Light That Failed), Raoul Walsh (Dark Command), and Howard Hawks (Rio Lobo), as well as big-budget spectacles like Ben-Hur, Spartacus, and El Cid.

Canutt came from a rodeo background, and was a star on the Wild West Show circuits as a teenager. A newspaper labeled him “The Cowboy from Yakima (Washington),” and the nickname stuck. Canutt’s rodeo speciality was bareback bronco riding, helping him win five world championship cowboy titles. He entered silents doing unbilled stunts, but quickly became a cowboy star in a series of silent westerns, performing his own daring stunts. His voice prevented him from succeeding in talking pictures, and he opted for full-time stunt work, with occasional bit parts, mostly as Indians or heavies.

Canutt doubled for many stars, including Clarke Gable, Errol Flynn, Tyrone Power, and Henry Fonda. He joined John Wayne in a 1932 Mascot serial, The Shadow of the Eagle, and through a series of B-westerns for Monogram, helped develop Wayne’s physical persona, teaching him how to fake punches for the screen. He went on to Republic in 1935 with Wayne, and through a score of westerns doubled Wayne while playing small roles in which he inevitably tangled in knockdown, drag out fisticuffs with the star.

When Wayne was boosted to the big time with Stagecoach, he recommended Canutt to director John Ford. Canutt was hired to direct second unit action on the film, as well as perform some of his most celebrated stunts. In addition to saddle-and-horse falls, Canutt did the famous transfer stunt (his personal favorite), shot on the flats at Victorville, California. Playing an Indian, Canutt jumps from his galloping horse onto the stagecoach team’s lead horses then works his way over six charging team horses towards the carriage. Wayne shoots him, he falls between the horses, is dragged along the ground at full speed, then finally drops to the ground as stage and horses pass over him. As second unit director, Canutt staged the sequence of the stagecoach in the river crossing. Miraculously, Canutt emerged unhurt, although he did suffer injuries doubling for Gable on San Francisco (six broken ribs while saving a panicked stuntwoman) and Boom Town (a punctured lung when he was tossed from a wagon into a bass drum). Canutt also doubled for Gable as Rhett Butler in the burning of Atlanta sequence for Gone With the Wind, and played a bit as a renegade who terrorizes Vivien Leigh.

Canutt had staged action for directors as early as his starring role in The Devil Horse with Rex, King of the Wild Horses, and after Stagecoach, he concentrated in this area. He handled second unit for Raoul Walsh on the westerns Dark Command (featuring a spectacular cliff jump by Canutt and three other stuntmen) and They Died with Their Boots On (in which Canutt doubled Flynn for Custer’s Last Stand and helped supervise the battle sequence). Republic hired him as a director in 1944 and assigned him B-westerns with Sunset Carson, Rocky Lane, and Clayton Moore. After four years of low budgets, Canutt signed as second unit director with MGM.

Canutt found his fame as a second unit action man, and in this capacity was responsible for some of the best action sequences of the 1950s and 1960s. He specialized in medieval epics (Richard Thorpe’s Ivanhoe, Anthony Mann’s El Cid) and biblical spectacles (William Wyler’s Ben-Hur, Stanley Kubrick’s Spartacus). His most memorable set pieces include the jousts in Ivanhoe and El Cid; the sieges in El Cid and Basil Dearden’s Khartoum; the revolt of the slaves in Spartacus; the attack on the Nazi fortress in Brian Hutton’s Where Eagles Dare; and especially the celebrated chariot race between Charlton Heston and Stephen Boyd in Ben-Hur.

—John A. Gallagher

CARDIFF, Jack

International as runner and general assistant; expert on color photography by 1935; 1940s—made first films as cinematographer; worked for Crown Film Unit during World War II; 1958—first film as director, Intent to Kill; television work includes the mini-series The Far Pavilions and The Last Days of Pompeii, both in 1984. Awards: Academy Award, for Black Narcissus, 1947; Golden Globe, Directors’ Guild of America and New York Critics’ awards, for Sons and Lovers, 1960; International award, American Society of Cinematographers, for Outstanding Achievement, 1994. Address: c/o L’Epine Smith and Carney Associates, 10 Wyndham Place, London W1H 1AS, England.

Films as Cinematographer:

1937–40 World Window (Rome Symphony; The Eternal Fire; Fox Hunting the Roman Compagna; Jerusalem; Petra; Wanderers of the Desert; Arabian Bazaar; Ruins of Palmyra and Baalbek; A Road in India; River Thames—Yesterday; Indian Temples; Jungle; Delhi; The Sacred Ganges; A Village in India; Indian Durbar) (Gentilomo, Francisci, Nieter, Blasetti, and Hanau—docs)

1938 Paris on Parade (Fitzpatrick—short)

1939 Main Street of Paris (Bernard—short)

1940 Peasant Island (Taylor—short)

1941 Green Girdle (Keene—short); Queen Cotton (Musk—short); Western Isles (Bishop—short); Plastic Surgery in Wartime (Sainsbury—short)

1942 Colour in Clay (Catling—short); Border Weave (Curthoys—short); Out of the Box (Bishop—short); The Great Mr. Handel (Walker) (co); This Is Colour (Ellitt—short); The Life and Death of Colonel Blimp (Colonel Blimp) (Powell and Pressburger)

1943 Scottish Mazurka (Nieter—short)

1944 Western Approaches (The Raider) (Jackson); Steel (Riley—short) (co)

1945 Caesar and Cleopatra (Pascal) (co)

1946 A Matter of Life and Death (Stairway to Heaven) (Powell and Pressburger)

1947 Black Narcissus (Powell and Pressburger)

1948 The Red Shoes (Powell and Pressburger); Scott of the Antarctic (Frend) (co)

1949 Under Capricorn (Hitchcock)

1950 The Black Rose (Hathaway); Montmartre (Bernard—short)

1951 Montmartre Nocturne (Bernard—short); Paris (Bernard—short); Pandora and the Flying Dutchman (Lewin); The Magic Box (J. Boulting); The African Queen (Huston)

1952 It Started in Paradise (Bennett)

1953 The Master of Ballantrae (Keighley)

1954 Il maestro di Don Giovanni (Crossed Swords) (Krims); The Barefoot Contessa (Mankiewicz)

1956 War and Peace (K. Vidor); The Brave One (Rapper)

1957 Legend of the Lost (Hathaway); The Prince and the Showgirl (Olivier)

1958 The Vikings (Fleischer); The Diary of Anne Frank (Stevens) (co)

1959 The Journey (Litvak)

1960 Fanny (Logan)

1968 The Girl on a Motorcycle (Naked under Leather; La Motocyclette) (+ d, co-sc)

1973 Scalawag (Douglas)

1976 Ride a Wild Pony (Chaffey)

1978 Death on the Nile (Guillermin); The Prince and the Pauper (Crossed Swords) (Fleischer)

1981 Ghost Story (Irvin); The Dogs of War (Irvin)

1983 Scandalous (Cohen); Wicked Lady (Winner)

1984 Conan the Destroyer (Fleischer)

1985 Cat’s Eye (Teague); Rambo: First Blood, Part II (Cosmatos)

1986 Tai-Pan (Duke)

1987 Million Dollar Mystery (Fleischer)

1988 Call from Space (Fleischer)

1989 Magic Balloon (Neame)

1991 Vivaldi’s Four Seasons

1998 The Dance of Shiva (Payne)

Films as Director:

1958 Intent to Kill

1959 Beyond This Place (Web of Evidence)

1960 Scent of Mystery (Holiday in Spain); Sons and Lovers

1961 My Geisha

1962 The Lion; Satan Never Sleeps (additional segments only)

1963 The Long Ships

1964 Young Cassidy

1965 The Liquidator

1967 The Mercenaries (Dark of the Sun)
1973  Penny Gold
1974  The Mutations

Other Films:
1929  The Informer (Robison) (asst)
1930  Loose Ends (Walker) (asst)
1935  The Ghost Goes West (Clair) (cam)
1936  As You Like It (Czinner) (cam); Wings of the Morning (Schuster) (cam)
1937  Knight without Armor (Feyder) (cam)

Publications

By CARDIFF: articles—

On The Black Rose in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), November 1950.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), March 1990.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), March 1994.

On CARDIFF: articles—

Edwards, M., in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1951.
Hill, Derek, in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), December 1956.
Cinéma (Paris), February 1968.
Filme Cultura (Rio de Janeiro), April/May 1970.
Reiss, D.S., in Filmmakers Monthly (Ward Hill, Massachusetts), March 1981.
In Camera (Hemel Hempstead, Hertfordshire), Spring 1990.
Filmlax (Evanson), April-May 1993.
Eyepiece (Greenford), vol. 15, no. 6, 1994/1995.

Like Freddie Francis, Jack Cardiff made the transition from director of photography to director in the 1960s and gradually drifted back to his old job in the 1970s and 1980s, leaving behind him an interesting but not especially successful body of directorial work, from the prestige of Sons and Lovers (for which, ironically, Francis won an Oscar for best cinematography) through the trendy idiocy of The Girl on a Motorcycle (also known, in honor of Marianne Faithfull’s fascist introductory scene, as Naked under Leather) to the grotesque mad-scientist melodrama of The Mutations (a horror movie a good deal freakier, funnier, stupider, and trashier than Francis’s run of professional and faintly stodgy contributions to the genre). Otherwise, Cardiff the director seemed mainly there to collect scraps from the table: allowed to finish Young Cassidy when John Ford fell ill, and doing what he could with the mismatch of Rod Taylor and Julie Christie in a project that meant a lot to Ford and nothing apparently to Cardiff; permitted to make in The Long Ships a sequel to The Vikings—a film he had photographed—and failing to match Richard Fleischer’s bold swashbuckling approach to the original; stepping in to do additional sequences for Satan Never Sleeps, the ailing Leo McCarey’s last film; stuck with the standing joke of Scent of Mystery, a gimmick attempt to introduce Odorama to the cinema 20 years before Polyester, with various smells and perfumes pumped into the auditorium to coincide with the on-screen action; and yet again unable to make Rod Taylor seem charismatic in the cut-price Bond imitation The Liquidator, although Cardiff and Taylor both seem to have been uncharacteristically enthused by Dark of the Sun.

Once the directorial doodles have been set aside, Cardiff has one of the most impressive records of pictorial achievement in the cinema, starting as a camera operator and second unit cameraman with Korda and the Archers in the 1930s—working on Knight without Armor, The Ghost Goes West, the early Technicolor Wings of the Morning (Britain’s first full-color film), and The Life and Death of Colonel Blimp before being promoted to director of photography with the documentary Western Approaches and the lavish, prestigious, slightly boring Caesar and Cleopatra. He first made himself noticed, however, with three color masterpieces for Michael Powell and Emeric Pressburger, A Matter of Life and Death, Black Narcissus, and The Red Shoes. Here, in an atmosphere of fantasy, violence, and eroticism, Cardiff was allowed a very un-English lack of restraint, and came through with a procession of images that go beyond the chocolate-box prettiness of Technicolor into very dangerous areas indeed, especially in the striking use of strong reds—the scarlet of Kathleen Byron’s dress and lipstick in Narcissus, the shoes themselves in The Red Shoes—and a knack for making unconventional beauties into screen goddesses. Kim Hunter, a most unlikely candidate, looks extraordinary in uniform in A Matter of Life and Death, and the later films find turbulent depths in the cool exteriors of Deborah Kerr and Kathleen Byron, all the more disturbing since they are supposed to be playing nuns, and Moira Shearer. Unsurprisingly, Cardiff would later be called in to highlight the faces and figures of Ava Gardner (Pandora and the Flying Dutchman, The Barefoot Contessa), Audrey Hepburn (War and Peace), Marilyn Monroe (The Prince and the Showgirl), Sophia Loren (Legend of the Lost), Janet Leigh (The Vikings) and Leslie Caron (Fanny).

After his period with the Archers, Cardiff became a prestige international director of photography, especially adept at American productions with a European or period flavor. Under Capricorn, for Alfred Hitchcock, is labyrinthine and elegant, the Hollywood Englishman calling upon some of the innovations of the Archers to reinvigorate his Selznick-to-the-ground studio style. Pandora, directed by the delirious Albert Lewin with unrestrained Ava and upright Flying Dutchman James Mason, is three degrees steamier even than Black Narcissus, to the point when its magic, eroticism, and monomania is almost, but not quite, ludicrous. The African Queen, made in color under grueling conditions, is unfussy about its exotic backgrounds, spirited in its action, and modestly competent when it comes to keeping its unglamorized stars center screen and registering the nuances of their performances. If some of the 1950s “big pictures”—The Magic Box, The Prince and the Showgirl, War and Peace, The Journey, The Brave One—look stuffy today, that has more to do with the then-prevailing ideas of “quality” than with any inherent limitations in Cardiff’s approach. And before temporarily abandoning the camera for the megaphone, Cardiff did do his best for The Vikings, a still-underrated classic of the demented melodrama following up Cardiff’s work on The Black Rose and The Master of Ballantrae. Here, Cardiff captured Kirk Douglas walking on the oars, Ernest Borgnine jumping into a pit of starving wolves, Tony Curtis ripping Janet Leigh’s dress so she can row better, and plenty of Boys’ Own boat and swordplay.

Returning in the 1970s and 1980s as a photographer, Cardiff found himself on familiar ground—swashbuckling and faraway places—with Scalawag, The Prince and the Pauper, Death on the Nile, and Conan the Destroyer, then perhaps recaptured some of the discomfort of The African Queen and sadomasochistic action man feel of The Vikings in Rambo: First Blood, Part II, in which he followed Stallone’s glistening torso through mud, blood, leeches, machine gun bandoliers, electric torture, and nonstop jungle engagements. It was as if he had never been away.

—Kim Newman

CARMICHAEL, Hoagy

Composer. Nationality: American. Born: Hoagland Howard Carmichael in Bloomington, Indiana, 22 November 1899. Education: Studied Law at Indiana University, Bloomington. Family: Married Ruth Mary Meinardi, 1936; two sons. Career: Law practice; then band leader, songwriter, and arranger; 1924—first recorded song; 1936—songs for first film, Anything Goes; also composer for Broadway, and performer on radio from 1944, and in films and TV. Award: Academy Award for song “In the Cool Cool Cool of the Evening,” 1951. Died: 27 December 1981.

Films as Composer:

1936 Anything Goes (Milestone)
1938 Every Day’s a Holiday (Sutherland); College Swing (Walsh); Sing, You Sinners (Ruggles)
1941 Road Show (Roach Jr., and Douglas)
1942 Mr. Bug Goes to Town (Fleischer)
1943 True to Life (Marshall)
1944 To Have and Have Not (Hawks) (+ ro)
1945 Johnny Angel (Martin) (+ ro); The Stork Club (Walker) (+ ro)
1946 Canyon Passage (Tourneur) (+ ro); The Best Years of Our Lives (Wyler) (+ ro)
1947 Night Song (Cromwell) (+ ro)
1950 Johnny Holiday (Holdbeck) (+ ro)
1951 Here Comes the Groom (Capra)
1952 Belles on Their Toes (Levin) (+ ro); The Las Vegas Story (Stevenson) (+ ro)
1953 Gentlemen Prefer Blondes (Hawks)
1955 Timberjack (Kane) (+ ro); Three for the Show (Potter)

Film as Actor:

1950 Young Man with a Horn (Curtiz)

Publications

By CARMICHAEL: books—

On CARMICHAEL: books—

On CARMICHAEL: articles—

* * *
Born in Bloomington, Indiana, into a rich and privileged background, Hoagy Carmichael first studied law and even undertook a law practice for a brief period until a chance meeting with the legendary jazz pianist and cornet player, Bix Beiderbecke, completely bowled him over. He took up his musical career then and there, playing piano with Jean Goldkette’s band. He never had a formal music lesson in his life—he simply played by ear. Carmichael went on to compose great classics like “Stardust,” “Rockin’ Chair,” “Georgia on My Mind,” “Old Buttermilk Sky,” “Skylark” and “Lazy Bones.” Carmichael’s drawing style of singing derived from a black jazz tradition. His phrasing was so very effortless, so lazy, that when he sang, it was a piano-playing character complete with hat over his eyes, a match stuck between his lips and sitting slouched at the keyboard—an image as memorable as that of Dooley Wilson, (“Sam” in Casablanca) in such films as To Have and Have Not, Johnny Angel, The Best Years of Our Lives and Young Man with a Horn (inspired by Beiderbecke), Night Song, The Las Vegas Story, Belles on Their Toes and Timberjack. His role in the movie Canyon Passage made his lean face familiar to millions. In the film he wore a top hat while singing his own composition “Old Buttermilk Sky.” He wrote the memorable “In the Cool Cool Cool of the Evening” performed by Bing Crosby for Here Comes the Groom which won an Academy Award in 1951.

Carmichael, like Irving Berlin, Richard Rodgers and Cole Porter, has become a household name in the English-speaking world. He had a knack for writing songs which were both memorable and fresh-sounding and on the occasions when he did collaborate with lyricists, his choice was always impeccable—Johnny Mercer and Sammy Lerner were among his partners. His most famous song was the heavenly “Stardust” which he wrote while still a struggling lawyer. He scribbled the song on the front pages of a lawbook while waiting for business in Florida but he did not get it recorded till several years later. ‘I figured there ought to be work for a good lawyer because there was all that selling and reselling going on. There probably was too—only I wasn’t a good lawyer. A note, to me, was something that belonged on a musical staff. . . .’ His death in 1981 was a great loss to American popular music and film.

—Sylvia Paskin

CARRÉ, Ben

Films as Art Director:

1907 La Course aux potirons (The Pumpkin Race) (Cohl)
1909 Le Huguenot (Feuillade); La Mort de Mozart (Feuillade)
1910 Le Festin de Balthazar (Feuillade)
1911 Aux lions les chrétiens (Feuillade)
1914 The Dollar Mark (Lund); Mother (Tourneur); The Man of the Hour (Tourneur); The Wishing Ring (Tourneur); The Pit (Tourneur)
1915 Alias Jimmy Valentine (Tourneur); Hearts in Exile (Young); The Boss (Chautard); The Ivory Snuff Box (Tourneur); A Butterfly on the Wheel (Tourneur); The Pawn of Fate (Tourneur); Camille (Capellani)
1916 A Girl’s Folly (Tourneur); The Hand of Peril (Tourneur); The Closed Road (Tourneur); La Vie de Bohème (Capellani); The Rail Rider (Tourneur); The Velvet Paw (Tourneur); The Dark Silence (Capellani); The Deep Purple (Young); The Rack (Chautard)
1917 Trillby (Tourneur); The Cub (Tourneur); The Undying Flame (Tourneur); The Whip (Tourneur); The Law of the Land (Tourneur); Exile (Tourneur); Barbary Sheep (Tourneur); The Rise of Jenny Cushing (Tourneur); The Pride of the Clan (Tourneur); Poor Little Rich Girl (Tourneur)
1918 The Blue Bird (Tourneur) (co); Rose of the World (Tourneur); Prunella (Tourneur) (co); A Doll’s House (Tourneur); Woman (Tourneur); Sporting Life (Tourneur)
1919 The White Heather (Tourneur); The Life Line (Tourneur); Victory (Tourneur); The Broken Butterfly (Tourneur)
1920 Stronger than Death (Bryand and Blanché); The River’s End (Neilan); In Old Kentucky (Neilan and Green); Go and Get It (Neilan and Symonds); For the Soul of Rafael (Garson); My Lady’s Garter (Tourneur); Treasure Island (Tourneur) (co)
1921 Don’t Ever Marry (Neilan and Heerman); Dinty (Neilan and McDermott); Man, Woman, and Marriage (Holubar); Bob Hampton of Place (Custer’s Last Stand) (Neilan); The Wonderful Thing (Brenon)
1922 The Light in the Dark (Brown); When the Desert Calls (Smallwood) Queen of the Moulin Rouge (Smallwood); What Fools Men Are (Terrywilliger)
1923 Wife in Name Only (Terrywilliger)
1924 Thy Name Is Woman (Niblo); The Goldfish (Storm); Cytherea (The Forbidden Way) (Fitzmaurice); Tarnish (Fitzmaurice); The Red Lily (Fitzmaurice); In Hollywood with Potash and Perlmutter (So This Is Hollywood) (Green)
1925 Lights of Old Broadway (Merry Wives of Gotham) (Bell); The Phantom of the Opera (Julian) (co); The Masked Bride (Cabanne and von Sternberg) (co)
1926 Mare Nostrum (Ingram); La Bohème (K. Vidor) (co); The Book (The Yokel) (Wellman) (co); Don Juan (Crosland); The Better ‘ole (Reiser); My Official Wife (Stein); When a Man Loves (Crosland)
1927 The King of Kings (DeMille) (co); Old San Francisco (Crosland); Soft Cushions (Cline); The Jazz Singer (Crosland)
1928 The Red Dance (The Red Dancer of Moscow) (Walsh); The River Pirate (Howard); The Air Circus (Hawks and Seiler)
1929 The Iron Mask (Dwan) (co); The Woman from Hell (Erickson); The Valiant (Howard); The Cockeyed World (Walsh); Frozen Justice (Dwan); Hot for Paris (Walsh) (co)
1930 City Girl (Murnau) (co); River’s End (Curtiz)
1931 Women of All Nations (Walsh) (co); The Black Camel (MacFadden); Riders of the Purple Sage (MacFadden)
1933 Sailor’s Luck (Walsh)
1935 Dante’s Inferno (Lachman) (co); A Night at the Opera (Wood) (co)
1936 Let’s Sing Again (Neumann); The Mine with the Iron Door (Howard) (co); Great Guy (Blystone)
1937 231/2 Hours Leave (Blystone)

Publications

By CARRÉ: articles—

Film Comment (New York), May-June 1978.

On CARRÉ: articles—

Everson, William K., in Films in Review (New York), November 1977
Brownlow, Kevin, “Ben Carré,” in Griffithiana (Gemona, Italy),

* * *

Ben Carré had one of the longest careers in the history of cinema. He began his movie career as a contemporary of Méliès, Lumière, and Emile Cohl, and retired in 1969 at the age of 82. For 63 years he applied his classical training in painting and practical experience in theatre design to the production of French and American films. His expertise in trompe l’oeil painting techniques provided the early French cinema with a depth and locale the studio productions otherwise lacked. Reportedly to enliven the actors’ performances, he provided sets in full color, an uncommon practice since everything was photographed in black-and-white. During the mid-1930s, Carré withdrew from his prominent role as art director because of ill health and contented himself with background painting. He also experimented with miniatures and glass paintings, and created many vivid and memorable images, especially the Emerald City in The Wizard of Oz, the Smith house in Meet Me in St. Louis, and the numerous Impressionist settings for the climactic ballet of An American in Paris.

Carré was also one of the first (if not the first) Hollywood art directors. He created opulent and picturesque sets which alternated between extreme realism and bold abstraction. His 34-film collaboration with Maurice Tourneur during the 1910s represented the major peak of his career. As William K. Everson said: “Their early work together, combining stylized pictorial inventiveness with tasteful, charming storytelling, represents one of the most felicitous teamings of visual talents in all film history.” Overseeing every aspect of set production for Tourneur, Carré displayed the first cohesive sense of film design seen in Hollywood and possibly the world. Films ranging from The Pawn of Fate and The Hand of Peril, through Trilby, Poor Little Rich Girl, and The Blue Bird, to Treasure Island demonstrate the two styles associated with Carré. He was best at visualizing the fantastic, employing highly stylized sets, shadowy backgrounds, glass paintings, and miniatures in an expressionistic manner. The sets for Poor Little Rich Girl and The Blue Bird seem to anticipate German Expressionism by suggesting a character’s interior perspective through light and decor. Yet his designs for Pawn of Fate (an entire farm in Normandy), Trilby (the backstreets of Paris), and The Hand of Peril (a nine-room apartment set) successfully achieved a realism which influenced Rex Ingram and Erich von Stroheim.

The film most closely associated with Carré’s name is The Phantom of the Opera. Combining imagination with a fond memory of the Paris Opéra, he created the haunting subterranean chambers inhabited by the Phantom. The film summarizes his encompassing talents by merging opposing sensibilities: concrete physical reality with a stylized netherworld of horror. Carré’s retirement to easel painting provided a fitting closure to a career of great significance, one that is just recently being reevaluated.

—Greg S. Faller

CARRERAS, (Sir) James

Producer. Nationality: British. Born: 30 January 1909. Education: Attended Manchester Grammar School. Family: Married Vera St. John, 1926; son: Michael. Career: 1925—managed cinema in Manchester; joined his father in managing the Blue Hall circuit of theatres;
1939–45—Colonel in Army; 1948–72—Chairman of Hammer Film Productions; 1968—Hammer awarded the Queen’s Award to Industry; 1972—sold shares in Hammer to his son. Awards: MBE, 1944; knighted (“for services to youth”), 1970. Died: In Henley on Thames, 9 June 1990.

Films as Executive Producer:

1947 River Patrol (Hart)
1948 Dick Barton—Special Agent (Goulding)
1949 Dick Barton Strikes Back (Grayson); Dr. Morelle—the Case of the Missing Heiress (Grayson); Cella (Searle); The Adventures of PC 49 (Grayson)
1950 Dick Barton at Bay (Grayson); The Man in Black (Searle); Meet Simon Cherry (Grayson); Room to Let (Grayson); Someone at the Door (Searle); What the Butler Saw (Grayson); The Lady Craved Excitement (Searle)
1951 The Rosseter Case (Searle); To Have and to Hold (Grayson); The Dark Light (Sewell); Cloudburst (Searle); The Black Widow (Sewell); A Case for PC 49 (Searle)
1952 Death of an Angel (Saunders); Whispering Smith Hits London (Whispering Smith vs. Scotland Yard) (Searle); The Last Page (Man Bait) (Fisher); Never Look Back (Searle); Wings of Danger (Fisher); Stolen Face (Fisher); Lady in the Fog (Scotland Yard Inspector) (Newfield); Mantrap (Man in Hiding) (Fisher); The Gambler and the Lady (Jenkins and Fisher)
1953 Four Sided Triangle (Fisher); Spaceways (Fisher); The Flamang Boy (Bad Blonde) (Le Borg); The Saint’s Return (The Saint’s Girl Friday) (Friedman)
1954 Face the Music (The Black Glove) (Fisher); The Stranger Came Home (The Unholy Four) (Fisher); Blood Orange (Three Stops to Murder) (Fisher); Life with the Lyons (Guest); The House across the Lake (Heat Wave) (Hughes); Five Days (Paid to Kill) (Tully); 36 Hours (Ferror Street) (Tully); Men of Sherwood Forest (Guest); Mask of Dust (A Race for Life) (Fisher)
1955 The Quatermass Xperiment (The Creeping Unknown) (Guest); The Lyons in Paris (Guest); Break in the Circle (Guest); Third Party Risk (Deadly Game) (Birt); Murder By Proxy (Blackout) (Fisher); Cyril Stapleton and the Show Band (Michael Carreras); The Glass Cage (The Glass Tomb) (Tully); The Eric Winstone Band Show (Michael Carreras); The Right Person (Cotes)
1956 X the Unknown (Norman); Just for You (Michael Carreras); A Man on the Beach (Losey); Parade of the Bands (Michael Carreras); Eric Winstone’s Stagecoach (Michael Carreras); Women without Men (Williams); Copenhagen (Michael Carreras); Dick Turpin—Highwayman (Paltenghi)
1957 The Steel Bayonet (Michael Carreras); The Curse of Frankenstein (Fisher); Quatermass II (Enemy from Space) (Guest); The Edmundo Ross Half Hour (Michael Carreras); Day of Grace (Searle); The Abominable Snowman (Guest); Danger List (Arlliss); Clean Sweep (Rogers)
1958 The Camp on Blood Island (Guest); The Snorkel (Green); The Revenge of Frankenstein (Fisher); Dracula (Horror of Dracula) (Fisher); Further up the Creek (Guest); Man with a Dog (Arlliss)
1959 I Only Arsked (Tully); The Hound of the Baskervilles (Fisher); Ten Seconds to Hell (Aldrich); The Ugly Duckling (Comfort); Operation Universe (Bryan); Yesterday’s Enemy (Guest); The Mummy (Fisher); The Man Who Could Cheat Death (Fisher); Don’t Panic Chaps! (Pollock)
1960 The Strangers of Bombay (Fisher); Hell Is a City (Guest); The Curse of the Werewolf (Fisher); The Brides of Dracula (Fisher); Never Take Sweets from a Stranger (Frankel); The Two Faces of Dr. Jekyll (House of Fright) (Fisher); Sword of Sherwood Forest (Fisher)
1961 Pirates of Blood River (Gilling); The Damned (These Are the Damned) (Losey); Visa to Canton (Passport to China) (Michael Carreras); The Full Treatment (Stop Me before I Kill) (Guest); A Weekend with Lulu (Carstairs); Taste of Fear (Scream of Fear) (Holt); Watch it Sailor! (Rilla); The Terror of the Tongs (Bushell)
1962 The Phantom of the Opera (Fisher); Captain Clegg (Night Creatures) (Scott); The Pirates of Blood River (Gilling)
1963 The Devil-Ship Pirates (Sharp); Maniac (Michael Carreras); Paranoiac (Francis); The Damned (These Are the Damned) (Losey); The Scarlet Blade (The Crimson Blade) (Gilling); Cash on Demand (Lawrence)
1964 The Evil of Frankenstein (Thompson); Kiss of the Vampire (Sharp); Nightmare (Francis); The Gorgon (Fisher); The Curse of the Mummy’s Tomb (Michael Carreras); Fanatic (Die! Die! My Darling!) (Narizzano)
1965 She (Day); The Secret of Blood Island (Lawrence); Hysteria (Francis); The Brigand of Kandahar (Gilling); The Nanny (Holt)
1966 One Million Years B.C. (Chaffey); Dracula—Prince of Darkness (Fisher); The Plague of the Zombies (Gilling); Rasputin—The Mad Monk (Sharp); The Reptile (Gilling); The Old Dark House (Castle); The Witches (The Devil’s Own) (Frankel)
1967 The Viking Queen (Chaffey); Frankenstein Created Woman (Fisher); The Mummy’s Shroud (Gilling); Quatermass and the Pit (Five Million Years to Earth) (Baker); A Challenge for Robin Hood (Pennington-Richards)
1968 The Anniversary (Baker); The Vengeance of She (Owen); The Devil Rides Out (The Devil’s Bride) (Fisher); Slave Girls (Prehistoric Women) (Michael Carreras); Dracula Has Risen from the Grave (Francis); The Lost Continent (Carreras)
1969 Frankenstein Must Be Destroyed (Fisher); Moon Zero Two (Baker)
1970 Taste the Blood of Dracula (Sasdy); Crescendo (Gibson); Horror of Frankenstein (Sangster); Scars of Dracula (Baker); The Vampire Lovers (Baker); When Dinosaurs Ruled the Earth (Guest)
1971 Creatures the World Forgot (Chaffey); Lust for a Vampire (Sangster); Countess Dracula (Sasdy); On the Buses (Booth); Hands of the Ripper (Sasdy); Twins of Evil (Hough); Dr. Jekyll and Sister Hyde (Baker); Blood from the Mummy’s Tomb (Holt and Michael Carreras)
1972 Shock (The Creeping Unknown) (Francis); Dracula A.D. 1972 (Gibson); Vampire Circus (Stark); Fear in the Night (Sangster); Straight On till Morning (Collinson); Mutiny on the Buses (Booth); Demons of the Mind (Sykes)
The reputation of James Carreras rests on the output of a single, low-budget production company, Hammer Films—and specifically on the movies it produced between 1954 and 1970. During that period Hammer established, for the first time, an indigenous British style of horror movie; and if Carreras himself had relatively little to do with the creation of that style, he deserves every credit for fostering and encouraging it, in the teeth of virulent critical outrage.

Carreras has sometimes been compared to Michael Balcon. Like Balcon, he ran a small, self-contained studio on paternalist lines—in his case at Bray in Berkshire, in a rambling 19th-century country house whose Gothic architecture provided ready-made sets for numerous Hammer movies. Bray, like Ealing, offered supportive opportunities to beginners and continuous employment to a regular team of actors and technicians. But where Balcon was closely concerned with the style and ethical stance of the films he produced, Carreras—as he readily admitted—cared only about saleability. “If tomorrow the public decided it wanted Strauss waltzes,” he once observed, “we’d be in the Strauss waltz business.”

Hammer was founded in 1948 as the production arm of Exclusive Films, a distribution company set up by Carreras’s father Enrique and his partner William Hinds, a one-time music hall performer whose stage name was Will Hammer. James Carreras, having served a pre-war apprenticeship as usher, cashier and projectionist in his father’s chain of cinemas, returned after his war service to take over the running of the newly formed Hammer. His corporate policy was brutally simple: to make films guaranteed to show a profit.

Since the minuscule budgets scarcely ran to star actors, Hammer often went for presold subjects—films based on characters well known from British radio or TV. So when in 1953 the BBC broadcast a hugely popular science fiction TV serial, The Quatermass Experiment, Hammer promptly snapped up the rights. The film version (respelt Xperiment to exploit the British censor’s new adults-only “X” certificate) went down well both in Britain and the USA, as did its two follow-ups—X the Unknown and Quatermass II.

Shrewdly deducing that it was the horrific, rather than the sci-fi, element of these films that was hooking audiences, Carreras looked round for similar properties and realised that not since the great Universal cycle of the 1930s had the classic Gothic myths of Dracula and Frankenstein appeared on screen—and never in colour. The Curse of Frankenstein launched Hammer’s horror cycle, along with the careers of Peter Cushing and Christopher Lee, and—according to David Pirie—“reintroduced into Britain the cinema of action and spectacle, of imagination and myth.” It also set the style for its successors: full-blooded, sensual stories, straightforwardly told, in plush period settings that owed nothing to Universal’s shadowy Germanic expressionism.

Such elements, though, should probably be credited less to Carreras than to his collaborators—in particular to his partner, the producer/screenwriter Anthony (son of William) Hinds, the director Terence Fisher, the screenwriter Jimmy Sangster, art director Bernard Robinson, and cinematographer Jack Asher. What James Carreras contributed was consummate salesmanship—or perhaps showmanship might be a better term. Hammer’s films were promoted with fairground razzmatazz and vigorously presold to foreign distributors, especially in the United States. By the late 1960s, over 80 per cent of Hammer’s revenue came from overseas earnings, an achievement that won the company the Queen’s Award for Industry.

Having no particular commitment to horror, Carreras was always ready to explore other avenues. In the wake of Psycho, Hammer produced a run of psychological thrillers—Maniac, Paranoiac, Hysteria and so on—and the success of One Million Years B.C. inspired several more fur-bikini sagas. Where this serviceable, down-to-earth approach showed its limitations was when a filmmaker tried to subvert the studio formula for imaginative ends, as Losey did with The Damned. Neither Carreras nor anyone else at Bray could grasp what Losey was after, and the film wound up badly mutilated.

This may also explain why the most intriguing and distinctive horror films of the period were left to Hammer’s rivals—Gordon Hessler’s Scream and Scream Again for Amicus, or Michael Reeves’s Witchfinder General for Tigon. Though even here Hammer could claim some indirect input, since both Tigon and Amicus were operating within a market that Carreras had opened up for them.

By the end of the 1960s, Hammer horror, initially so reviled by squeamish critics, had become respectable enough to feature in retrospectives at the National Film Theatre in London. But with the cutback in American financing, Hammer’s market was shrinking, and in 1969 Bray studios were sold. Soon afterwards James Carreras withdrew from control of the company, handing it over to his son Michael, and within three years Hammer had ceased production.

—Philip Kemp

CARRIÈRE, Jean-Claude

Writer. Nationality: French. Born: Colombières, 19 (or 17) September 1931. Career: Often worked with the director Luis Buñuel, as well as Jacques Deray, Pierre Etaix, Jean-Luc Godard, Louis Malle, and Volker Schlöndorff; 1968—directed short La Pince à ongles; 1985—directed feature L’Unique. Awards: Best Short Subject—Live Action Academy Award, for Heureux anniversaire, 1961; Best Screenplay British Academy Award, for Le Retour de Martin Guerre, 1982; Best Adapted Screenplay British Academy Award, for The Unbearable Lightness of Being, 1988; Catalonian International Film Festival Best Screenplay, for At Play in the Fields of the Lord, 1990; Writers Guild of America Laurel Award for Screen Writing Achievement, 2000.

Films as Writer/Co-writer:

1961 [Rupture](+ co-d—short); [Heureux anniversaire](+ co-d, pr—short)

1962 Le Soupirant (The Suitor)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>Nous n’irons plus au bois (Etaix)</td>
<td>(Etaix)</td>
<td>(+ ro)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>expanded into Tant qu’on a la santé, 1965;</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Insomnie (Etaix) (+ ro); Le Bestiare d’amour</td>
<td>(Calderon)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>(Calderon); Le Journal d’une femme de chambre</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>(The Diary of a Chambermaid) (Buñuel) (+ ro as The Priest)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1964</td>
<td>Yoyo (Etaix); La Reine verte (The Green Queen)</td>
<td>(Mazoyer)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1965</td>
<td>Viva Maria! (Malle); Cartes sur table (Franco)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1966</td>
<td>Belle de jour (Buñuel); Miss Muerte (The</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Diabolical Dr. Z) (Franco); Hotel Paradiso</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>(Glenville)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1967</td>
<td>Le Voleur (The Thief of Paris) (Malle)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1968</td>
<td>La Pince à ongles (+ d—short); La Piscine</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>(The Swimming Pool) (Deray); Le Grand Amour</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>(Etaix)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1969</td>
<td>La Voie Lactée (The Milky Way) (Buñuel) (+ ro as Priscillian)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1970</td>
<td>L’Alliance (de Chalonge) (+ ro as Hugues);</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Taking Off (Forman); Borsalino (Deray)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1971</td>
<td>Un Peu de soleil dans l’eau froide (Deray)</td>
<td></td>
<td>(+ ro)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1972</td>
<td>La cagna (Liza) (Ferreri); Le Moine (The Monk)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>(Kyrour); Le Droit d’aimer (Le Hung); Un</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Homme est mort (The Outside Man) (Deray);</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Le Charme discret de la bourgeoisie (The</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Discreet Charm of the Bourgeoisie) (Buñuel)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1973</td>
<td>France S.A. (France Société anonyme) (Corneau)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1974</td>
<td>Dorotheas Rache (Fleischmann); Grandeur</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>nature (Life Size) (Berlanga); La Fantôme</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>de la liberté (The Phantom of Liberty) (Buñuel)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>(Buñuel); La Chair de l’orchidée (Chereau);</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>La Femme aux bottes rouges (J. Buñuel);</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Séries comme le plaisir (Benayoun) (+ ro)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1975</td>
<td>Leonor (J. Buñuel); Les Oeufs brouillés</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>(Santoni); La Faille (Fleischmann)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1976</td>
<td>Le Garg (Deray)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Other Films:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1976</td>
<td>Julie Pot de Colle (de Broca); Le Diable dans</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>la boîte (Lary); Cet obscur objet de désir</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>(That Obscure Object of Desire) (Buñuel)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1978</td>
<td>Photo souvenir (Sechan) (+ ro); Un Papillon</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>sur l’épaule (Deray); Chaussette surprise</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>(Surprise Sock) (Davy) (+ ro as Fournier)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1979</td>
<td>Ils sont grands ces petits (These Kids Are</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Grown-Ups) (Santoni); L’Associé (The Associate)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>(Gainville); Le Tambour (The Tin Drum) (Schlöndorff)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1981</td>
<td>Die Falschung (Circle of Deceit) (Schlöndorff)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1982</td>
<td>Danton (Wajda); Le Retour de Martin Guerre</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>(The Return of Martin Guerre) (Vigne)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1983</td>
<td>Un Amour de Swann (Swann in Love) (Schlöndorff)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>(La Tragédie de Carmen (The Tragedy of Carmen)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>(Brook)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1986</td>
<td>Max mon amour (Max, My Love) (Oshima); Wolf</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>at the Door (Carlson)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1974</td>
<td>Les Exploits d’un jeune Don-Juan (Mingozzi);</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Les Possédés (Wajda)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1978</td>
<td>The Unbearable Lightness of Being (Kaufman);</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>La Nuit bengali (Klotz)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1989</td>
<td>Valmont (Forman); Hard to Be a God (Fleischmann)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>J’écris dans l’espace (Etaix); The Malahibarata</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1990</td>
<td>Cyrano de Bergerac (Rappeneau); At Play in the</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Fields of the Lord (Babenco); Milou en mai (</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>May Fools) (Malle)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1991</td>
<td>Bouvard et Pecuchet (Verhaeghe—for TV) (+ ro as Narrator)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1992</td>
<td>La Controverse de Valladolid (Verhaeghe—for TV)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>; Le Retour de Casanova (Casanova’s Return)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>(Niermans)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1995</td>
<td>Le roi des aulnes (The Ogre) (Schlöndorff);</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Capitaine Cyrano (Feuille)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1996</td>
<td>Une femme explosive (Deray—for TV)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1997</td>
<td>Chinese Box (Wang) (+ co-story)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1998</td>
<td>La Guerre dans le Haut Pays (War in the</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Highlands) (Reusser); Attaville, le veritable</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>histoire des fourmis (Calderon)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>(commentary only); Clarissa (Deray—for TV)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2000</td>
<td>Salsa (Joyce Buñuel)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

By CARRIÈRE: books—

Mon Oncle (novelization), London, 1972.

By CARRIÈRE: articles—

Cinéma (Paris), February 1965.
Jeune Cinéma (Paris), September 1968.
Positif (Paris), March 1969.

Cinéma (Paris), July/August 1970.
Kosmorama (Copenhagen), December 1970.
Cinémonde (Paris), March 1971.

Cinéaste (Paris), vol. 13, no. 1, 1983.
‘‘Luis Buñuel,’’ in Cinéma (Paris), September 1983.

Technicien du Film (Paris), October/November 1984.

24 Images (Montreal), Autumn 1986.

Cinéma (Paris), 1 October 1986.
Skrien (Amsterdam), no. 164, February/March 1989.

Cinéma (Paris), May 1990.
Interview by Omid Rohani, in Film International (Tehran), Winter 1993.
Interview by Pierre Beylot and Raphaëlle Moine, in Cinémaction (Paris), March 1996.
Interview with I. Wiese, in Z Filmtidsskrift (Oslo), no. 3, 1996.

On CARRIÈRE: articles—

Focus on Film (London), Spring 1975.
Focus on Film (London), Summer 1975.
Focus on Film (London), Winter 1975–76.

Film Français (Paris), 3 February 1978.

Millard, Kathry, ‘‘Henri and Georgette Go Writing,’’ in Film News (Sydney), April 1995.

As a screenwriter, Jean-Claude Carrière is still best known for his association with Luis Buñuel, with whom he collaborated regularly from Le Journal d’une femme de chambre onwards. Yet of all his screenplays, only six (or seven if one counts Le Moine, eventually directed by Ado Kyrou) were written for Buñuel. To date, Carrière has produced well over 80 screenplays and teleplays for a long and prestigious list of directors that includes Malle, Schlöndorff, Wajda, Forman, Godard, Oshima, Philip Kaufman, Carlos Saura, Hector Babenco, Wayne Wang, and Pierre Etaix. He also writes for the stage (most notably for Peter Brook’s international theater company); he has written novels, and has occasionally acted and directed.

Unlike many prolific scenarists, though, Carrière rarely lapses into lazy or slipshod writing, and the overall standard of his work has remained consistently high. Nor, despite his literary background, does his dialogue feel overwritten or stilted. He himself, while wary of laying down rules and guidelines, maintains that a screenwriter should above all aim for clarity and avoid self-indulgence. ‘‘Good dialogue doesn’t draw attention to itself,’’ he has observed. ‘‘You penetrate it without effort. It’s like the sound of a mill to the miller; he only hears it when it stops.’’

Carrière took up screenwriting at a time when the New Wave filmmakers, reacting against the confined, studio-bound style of the ‘‘cinéma de qualité,’’ were also rejecting the rigid tyranny of the traditional script. Carrière entirely concurred, since he considered the scenario ‘‘at once useful and superfluous, simply a stage in the existence and development of a film.’’ A script, he believes, ‘‘doesn’t stop when it’s written, it continues during the shooting and often during the editing.’’ It should be flexible enough to ‘‘allow a degree of freedom, not just to the director, but to the actors.’’ At the same time, he expresses reservations about wholly improvisational approaches, which can lead to shapelessness and banality. ‘‘I think we have to strike a balance between the script being all-powerful, and it being nonexistent.’’

The role of improvisation, for Carrière, comes much earlier in the creative process. ‘‘The scenario is created when you and the director act it out together, improvising.’’ To achieve this, he tries to establish with his director ‘‘a near telepathic communication,’’ which ‘‘requires on both sides a receptiveness and a trust which can never be taken for granted. Like all good relationships, it has to be constantly worked at, and shielded against the effects of personal vanity.’’ The scriptwriter must on occasion be prepared to submerge his ego, since ultimately ‘‘it’s the director’s film, and you’re there to help him, to facilitate him.’’

Not that there is anything in the least anonymous about Carrière’s work. From his films there emerges a dryly humorous personality, alert to the absurdities of life, profoundly mistrustful of all absolutes and authorities. Having a sharp eye for middle-class ritual, he particularly enjoys prodding at the pretensions of ‘‘the French bourgeoisie in all its self-satisfied myopia.’’ Pessimistic but too ironic for tragedy, left-leaning but too skeptical for dogma, Carrière presents a world in which the surreal, the unpremeditated, or simply the spectacle of sheer bloody-minded human resilience, can serve to keep alive an intrigued sense of unexplored potential. “The best quality for a screenwriter,” as he has remarked, “is an unsatisfied curiosity.”

Carrière’s unselfishly craftsmanlike approach to screenwriting is exemplified by his work on Cyrano de Bergerac, one of his biggest international hits. Both Carrière and his director, Jean-Paul Rappeneau, were determined, in the teeth of widespread skepticism, to preserve the play’s convention of having all the dialogue in rhymed alexandrine couplets. By judiciously pruning Rostand’s sometimes clotted verse, adding in a few extra scenes and some fragments of skillful Rostand-pastiche, Carrière produced a script that moved at a smart cinematic pace while staying faithful to the spirit of the original. So faithful, indeed, that even devotees of the play scarcely registered that changes had been made. Carrière also served Rappeneau well in Le hussard sur le toit, which like Cyrano is an energetic, deliciously romantic historical epic. Le hussard is crammed with sweeping, eye-popping imagery; on visual terms, Rappeneau does an especially fine job of contrasting the lushly beautiful French countryside and the deadly dangers confronting his idealistic and honorable Italian aristocrat-soldier-revolutionary hero. Simultaneously, Carrière’s smart, literate dialogue propels the story along while keeping the characters lively and engaging.

The subtlety, and the understated ironies, of Carrière’s style can on occasion prove self-defeating. In his work with Buñuel, he once explained, “we chose the path of what is probable, but just at the limit, at the borderline of the probable.” It is a balance, as he acknowledges, that is “very difficult to maintain,” and in some films his writing, perhaps aiming to avoid extravagance, can verge towards over-neatness. What his skilled adaptation of Kundera’s The Unbearable Lightness of Being gains in clarity and narrative coherence, it loses in moral complexity and the joy of inconsistency. And the straight-faced surrealism of Max mon amour, ill-served by Oshima’s literal-minded direction, falls sadly flat.

Some critics have suggested that even Buñuel was rendered “respectable” by his association with Carrière, trading the earthiness and carnality of his earlier Spanish-language movies for French urbanity and sophistication—no longer outraging his bourgeois audiences, but titillating them with pleasurable shocks. But it can equally be argued that in Carrière, whom he called “the writer closest to me,” Buñuel found the ideal collaborator in the expression of his cruel, insidious vision, his elegantly austere sensuality. And certainly Carrière achieved in his work with Buñuel a mastery of style and insidious vision, his elegantly austere sensuality. And certainly Carrière, whom he called “the writer closest to me,” Buñuel found the ideal collaborator in the expression of his cruel, insidious vision, his elegantly austere sensuality. And certainly Carrière achieved in his work with Buñuel a mastery of style and structure that he may subsequently have equaled but has yet to surpass. Had he written nothing else, he would rank high among contemporary screenwriters for these six films alone.

—Philip Kemp, updated by Rob Edelman

CECCHI D’AMICO, Suso

Writer. Nationality: Italian. Born: Giovanna Cecchi in Rome, 21 July 1914; daughter of the writer Emilio Cecchi. Education: Studied in Rome and Cambridge. Career: Journalist; translator of English-language plays; 1946—first film as writer, Mio figlio professore; 1977—co-writer for TV mini-series Gesù di Nazareth (Jesus of Nazareth); writer for TV, Una moglie, 1987. Quattro storie di donne, 1990. Awards: Best script award, Sindacato Nazionale Giornalisti Cinematografici Italiani, for Speriamo che sia femmina, 1986. Address: via Paistello 27, 00198 Rome, Italy.

Films as Writer:

1946 Mio figlio professore (Professor My Son) (Castellani); Vivere in pace (To Live in Peace) (Zampa); Roma città libera (Pagliero)

1947 Il delitto di Giovanni Episcopo (Flesh Will Surrerender) (Lattuada); L’onorevole Angelina (Angelina) (Zampa)

1948 Fabiola (Blasetti); Ladri di biciclette (The Bicycle Thief) (De Sica); Patto col diavolo (Chiarini); Cielo sulla palude (Heaven over the Marshes) (Genina)

1949 Le mura di Malapaga (The Walls of Malapaga) (Clément) (co-sc Italian version); Prohibito rubare (Guaglio) (Comencini)

1950 Miracolo a Milano (Miracle in Milan) (De Sica); E primavera (It’s Forever Springtime) (Castellani); E più facile che un cammello (Zampa); Romazo d’amore (Toselli) (Coletti)

1951 Due mogli sono troppi (Honeymoon Deferred) (Camerini); Bellissima (Visconti)

1952 “Primo amore” ep. of Altri tempi (Times Gone By) (Blasetti); Processo alla città (A Town on Trial) (Zampa); Buongiorno, eletante! (Hello Elephant!) (Franciolini); I vinti (I nostri figli) (Antonioni); Il mondo le condanna (His Last Twelve Hours) (Franciolini)

1953 Siamo donne (We the Women) (Visconti); “Il pupo” ep. of Tempi nostri (Anatomy of Love) (Blasetti); Febbre di vivere (Gora); La signora senza camelle (Camille without Camelas) (Antonioni); Cento anni d’amore (de Felice)

1954 Graziella (Bianchi); Senso (Visconti); L’allegro squadrone (Moffa); Peccato che sia una canaglia (Too Bad She’s Bad) (Blasetti); Proibito (Monicelli)

1955 Le amiche (The Girlfriends) (Antonioni)

1956 La fortuna di essere donna (Blasetti); La finestra sul Luna Park (Comencini); Kean (Gassman); Difendo il mio amore (Sherman) (co)

1957 Le notti bianche (White Nights) (Visconti); Mariti in città (Comencini)

1958 Nella città l’inferno (And the Wild, Wild Women) (Castellani); La sfida (The Challenge) (Rossi); “I soliti ignoti” (Big Deal on Madonna Street) (Monicelli)

1959 Estate violenta (Violent Summer) (Zurlini); I magliari (Rossi)

1960 La contessa azzurra (Gora); Rocco e i suoi fratelli (Rocco and His Brothers) (Visconti); Risate di giove (The Passionate Thief) (Monicelli); Il Rostro nel sale (Shavelson)

1961 Salvatore Giuliano (Rossi); Il relitto (Blasetti); I due nemici (The Best of Enemies) (Hamilton)

1962 “Il lavoro” (The Job) and “Renzo e Luciana” (Renzo and Luciana) eps. of Boccaccio 70 (Visconti and Monicelli); “Le Lièvre et la tortue” (The Tortoise and the Hare) ep. of Les Quatre Vérités (Three Fables of Love) (Blasetti)

1963 Il gattopardo (The Leopard) (Visconti); Gli indifferenti (Time of Indifference) (Maselli)

1965 Casanova’70 (Monicelli); Vaghe stelle dell’orsa (Sandra) (Visconti)
Suso Cecchi d’Amico is undoubtedly best known as Visconti’s regular screenwriter, however her work, either alone or in collaboration, with a large number of other directors is at the core of a long list of films which embodies the development of postwar Italian cinema from Blasetti to De Sica, from Rosi to Zeffirelli and Antonioni. It is undoubtedly a tribute to her work that her scripts achieve a certain “transparency,” becoming all-but-inextricable from the finished film itself.

She has all too modestly described her work as akin to that of the artisan. This emphasizes her professionalism, the literate well-craftedness of her scripts, and her endless adaptability to the contrasting needs of filmmakers working within competing stylistic conventions. It glosses over the acuteness of her appraisal of particular projects and particular directors. Luigi Comencini may be no great stylist, as she has remarked, his films stand or fall by their overall effect. Cuore is a tender and ironic melodrama but anchored cogently to moments in Italian history. Zampa may be a minor talent but with Vivere in pace Cecchi d’Amico wrote to the project’s integrity and antiheroic pacifism. Her script gives Genna’s strange melodrama about a peasant girl’s rape and subsequent sanctification, Heaven over the Marshes, a much-needed steelly quality.

Writing for De Sica made other demands. Cecchi d’Amico has spoken of his need “to borrow from and reproduce” reality, a need that predated any theorization of neorealism. The moral catch-22 spoken of his need “to borrow from and reproduce” reality, a need that predated any theorization of neorealism. The moral catch-22

By CECCHI D’AMICO: articles—

Positif (Paris), September 1985.
EPD Film (Frankfurt/Main), April 1993.

On CECCHI D’AMICO: book—

On CECCHI D’AMICO: articles—

Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), no. 5, 1997.

* * *

Suso Cecchi d’Amico has spoken of his need “to borrow from and reproduce” reality, a need that predated any theorization of neorealism. The moral catch-22 behind The Bicycle Thief lends De Sica’s slice-of-life a bitter edge. Her collaboration with Francesco Rosi has been equally rewarding. A trial transcript provided the source for Salvatore Giuliano’s script, the framework for a film of epic dimension honed from events both sordid and sadly routine. But where she worked with a director whose own drive was towards honing away excesses and revealing a structure, the results were less happy. Where Antonioni saw his films as the very embodiment of a moment in Italy, Cecchi d’Amico saw contemporary fables.

It was the opportunity posed for working with Visconti with his concern for the firm location of characters within a specific time, place, and history that drew from his best work. She has said that his clarity of vision and sureness made him an easy person to work for, and there is an obvious complementarity between her spareness and Visconti’s rhetorical visual style. Initial efforts for him required...
copious pruning to adapt them to his particular "cinematic rhythm." So completely did Visconti make his projects his own that they escape the category of "literary adaptation," and are rewritten and reformed to his own vision. Where a subject interested him but a suitable text could not be found, Cecchi d'Amico has spoken of the preparation of a script only after a considerable amount of research had been done. Even a contemporary subject might have a literary analogue. Thus Dostoyevsky was a touchstone for Rocco and His Brothers.

Rocco, an original story, knits its moral conundrum into a precisely located mise-en-scène, as it follows the attempts of a Southern peasant family to adjust to a new life in the North, and in doing so charts the stresses attendant upon Italy's own path to industrialization. The script's major coup is the withholding of an explicit statement of the immigrant's code of morality until the final section, where it acquires an especially revelatory force, marking a passage from the certainties of an agrarian society, to notions of compromise embodied in a trade-off between rights and duties. The concern for morality and betrayal, personal and national history present here also underlie many of her other projects for Visconti, The Innocent, Senso, Ludwig, and Conversation Piece.

The same concerns give her extraordinary gallery of female characters a memorable distinctiveness. Often transgressive they are always true to their time and place and never airbrushed into stereotype. Another consistent thread has been her collaborations with Monicelli, a director known for his humorously ironic tales of bourgeois life. The recent Il male oscuro was scripted with Tonino Guerra from a prizewinning sixties novel (translated as Incubus in the United States) by Giuseppe Berto. It studies the relationships between a mediocre writer undergoing analysis, his younger wife, and his obsessive, ambivalent relationship with his father. The family theme is continued with Parenti serpenti, also made in the nineties, an examination of the tensions that arise as three generations of an extended family attempt Christmas together. Humor and irony also underlie her contributions to the script for Mikhalkov's Oci ciornie.

Her experience of writing a supposedly "Ben Hecht" script for Wyler's Roman Holiday (she took the job out of admiration for the director), which involved stringing together a series of banal generic elements, merely confirmed her observations of the wholly pernicious effect of Hollywood's postwar incursion into Italian filmmaking. (The Italian industry was, in her opinion, to be destroyed and the United States) by Giuseppe Berto. It studies the relationships between a mediocre writer undergoing analysis, his younger wife, and his obsessive, ambivalent relationship with his father. The family theme is continued with Parenti serpenti, also made in the nineties, an examination of the tensions that arise as three generations of an extended family attempt Christmas together. Humor and irony also underlie her contributions to the script for Mikhalkov's Oci ciornie.

Her experience of writing a supposedly "Ben Hecht" script for Wyler's Roman Holiday (she took the job out of admiration for the director), which involved stringing together a series of banal generic elements, merely confirmed her observations of the wholly pernicious effect of Hollywood's postwar incursion into Italian filmmaking. (The Italian industry was, in her opinion, to be destroyed and the country opened up as a market for U.S. product.) There were other international co-productions occasionally; the Taylor-Burton The Taming of the Shrew for which her early experience as a translator into Italian of English literature might have, in part, prepared her, and on which she worked with Paul Dehn. But her preoccupations lay elsewhere. Cecchi d'Amico has always believed in the necessity of developing a national cinema that would "tell its own stories." It has been an unstinting dedication to this principle which underlies her work.

—Verina Glaessner

CHALLIS, Christopher

Cinematographer. Nationality: British. Born: London, 18 March 1919. Education: Wimbledon College. Career: Camera assistant on newsreels from late teens; apprentice technician at Technicolor laboratory; second unit cameraman (credits include The Thief of Bagdad 1940); cameraman with the Royal Air Force Film Unit during World War II (credits include Theirs Is the Glory 1945); post-war return to film industry as camera operator (including uncredited work on A Matter of Life and Death 1946), graduating to lighting cameraman in 1947; retired 1985. Address: c/o British Society of Cinematographers, 11 Crost Road, Gerard’s Cross, Buckinghamshire SL9 9AE, England.

Films as Cinematographer:

1947 End of the River (+ uncredited assoc d) (Twist)
1949 The Small Back Room (Hour of Glory) (Powell/Pressburger)
1950 Gone to Earth (The Wild Heart) (Powell/Pressburger) (new scenes for U.S. version uncredited director, Rouben Mamoulian); The Elusive Pimpernel (The Fighting Pimpernel) (Powell/Pressburger)
1951 The Tales of Hoffmann (Powell/Pressburger)
1952 Angels One Five (co-ph) (O’Ferrall); Twenty-Four Hours of a Woman’s Life (Saville)
1953 Genevieve (Cornelius); Saadia (Lewin); The Story of Gilbert and Sullivan (Giliat)
1954 Twice Upon a Time (Pressburger); Malaga (Fire Over Africa) (Sale); The Flame and the Flesh (Brooks)
1955 The Sorcerer’s Apprentice (short) (Powell); Oh Rosalinda! (Powell/Pressburger); Quentin Durward (The Adventures of Quentin Durward) (Thorp); Raising a Riot (Toye); Footsteps in the Fog (Lubin)
1956 The Battle of the River Plate (The Pursuit of the Graf Spee) (Powell/Pressburger); Ill Met By Moonlight (Night Ambush) (Powell/Pressburger); The Spanish Gardener (Leacock)
1957 Miracle in Soho (Amyes); Windom’s Way (Neame)
1958 Floods of Fear (Crichton); Rooney (Pollack); The Captain’s Table (Lee)
1959 Blind Date (Chance Meeting) (Losey)
1960 Sink the Bismark (Gilbert); The Grass is Greener (Donen); Surprise Package (Donen); Never Let Go (Guillermin)
1961 Flame in the Streets (Baker); Five Golden Hours (Zampi); An Evening With the Royal Ballet (co-ph)
1962 HMS Defiant (Damn the Defiant) (Gilbert)
1963 The Long Ships (Cardiff); The Victors (Foreman)
1964 A Shot in the Dark (Edwards); The Americanization of Emily (co-ph) (Hiller)
1965 Those Magnificent Men in Their Flying Machines (Annakin); Return from the Ashes (Thompson)
1966 Arabesque (Donen); Kaleidoscope (Smight)
1967 Two for the Road (Donen)
1968 A Dandy in Aspic (Mann & uncredited Laurence Harvey); Chitty Chitty Bang Bang (Hughes)
1969 Staircase (Donen)
1970 The Private Life of Sherlock Holmes (Wilders)
1971 Villain (Tuchner); Catch Me a Spy (Clement); Mary Queen of Scots (Jarrott)
1972 Follow Me (The Public Eye) (Reed); The Boy Who Turned Yellow (Powell/Pressburger)
1974 The Little Prince (Donen)
1975 Mister Quilp (The Old Curiosity Shop) (Tuchner)
1976 The Incredible Sarah (Fleischer)
1977 The Deep (Yates)
Christopher Challis

1978 Force Ten from Navarone (Hamilton)
1979 The Riddle of the Sands (Maylam)
1980 The Mirror Crack’d (Hamilton)
1981 Evil Under the Sun (Hamilton)
1984 Top Secret! (Abrahams, Zucker, Zucker)
1985 Steaming (Losey)

Other Films:

1948 The Red Shoes (cam op only) (Powell/Pressburger)

Publications

On CHALLIS: books—

Howard, James, Michael Powell, London, 1996.

On CHALLIS: articles—

Christopher Challis belongs to a select group of cameramen who honed their skills in the relatively thriving post-war British film industry, attracting Hollywood interest with a series of impressive credits. Probably best known for his work with the celebrated Powell-Pressburger partnership, The Archers, Challis’ career spanned five decades and virtually every film genre, ranging from historical romance (Mary Queen of Scots) to Airplane-style comedy (Top Secret!). Challis’ technical skill was allied to a strong visual sense, both in the studio and on location, most notably in his rich Technicolor photography for the Archers productions Gone to Earth and Tales of Hoffmann. Equally adept with black and white, Challis also adapted successfully to the various widescreen formats, whether Cinemascope, Vistavision, Technirama or Panavision. In demand at home and abroad throughout the 1960s and 1970s, Challis found few projects—or directors—to test his abilities, finally calling it a day after nearly forty years.

Along with the likes of Ronald Neame, Geoffrey Unsworth, Freddie Francis, and Jack Cardiff, Challis served an invaluable apprenticeship under Powell and Pressburger, making his debut as lighting cameraman on the Archers-produced End of the River, his stylish black and white photography enhancing an otherwise unremarkable effort. Challis hit his stride with The Small Back Room, also in high contrast black and white. A little uncertain in its dramatic effects, this wartime tale of a physically and emotionally crippled bomb disposal expert (David Farrar) has undeniable visual authority. The location work is vivid, taking in the Thames Embankment, Stonehenge, the Welsh countryside, and a windswept seashore, the backdrop for the climactic bomb dismantling. Back in the studio, Powell requested ‘‘Caligari lighting’’ (the use of a shadowy, distorted, nightmarish backdrop to reflect an equally distorted state of mind typical of 1920s German cinema) for the famous hallucinatory sequence where Farrar imagines himself crushed by a giant whisky bottle, an expressionist touch as striking as it is unsuitable. Other visual highlights include a ‘‘sculpted’’ effect for close-ups of leading lady Kathleen Byron; film noir-style lighting as Farrar and Byron kiss, their faces wreathed in shadow; and shots from underneath a metal walkway, feet passing overhead as blurred shadows. There is even a ripple effect shot from Farrar’s point of view as sweat pours down his face during the bomb disposal scene. The Tales of Hoffmann marked the peak of Challis’ Technicolor work with The Archers, making ingenious use of gauzes to produce in-camera optical effects. Shooting without sound to a prerecorded score, Challis and his crew dispensed with the cumbersome camera blimp, normally required to muffle motor noise, enabling the newly mobile equipment to be as elaborately ‘‘choreographed’’ as the performers. According to Powell, the Technicolor Company rated the photography in The Archers’ films as the best in the world.

Challis became The Archers’ regular cameraman at a time when the duo’s creative powers were showing signs of decline. Gone to Earth renders the nineteenth century Shropshire landscape in dazzling shades of green and red, yet the story lacks conviction. Ill Met By Moonlight, the last Archers production, was actually criticised for its supposedly murky black and white photography, one reviewer retitling the film ‘‘I’ll lit by moonlight’’.

Away from The Archers, Challis became a mainstay of the Rank Organisation during the 1950s, lending his talents to the smash hit Genevieve, and worked with leading British directors such as Sidney Gilliat, Lewis Gilbert, Charles Crichton and Roy Ward Baker. Challis’ Hollywood credits from this period include the lively medieval swashbuckler Quentins Durward, notable for its vibrant widescreen imagery. Hollywood-backed productions seldom called for the kind of visual imagination evident in the Archers films. A Shot in the Dark, for example, found Challis largely constricted by Blake Edwards’ penchant for subdued colour and long, static takes. An elaborate crane shot in the opening sequence, charting multiple amorous liaisons in a French villa, shows what could have been.

Challis’ only long-term collaborator after The Archers was choreographer turned director Stanley Donen. In truth, their six films together are largely undistinguished, with the exception of the literate romantic comedy Two for the Road. Stranded with a ‘‘problematic’’ script for the chic thriller Arabesque, Donen went all out for visual dazzle, the disorienting shifts in focus and off-kilter camera angles accentuating rather than disguising the flimsy content.

Unlike fellow Archers graduates Cardiff, Neame, and Francis, Challis never turned to directing. Joining forces with Cardiff for The Long Ships, he probably felt he’d made the right decision. Leaving aside the clumsy dialogue, plodding pace, and questionable casting, this Vikings versus Moors adventure has only moments of visual flair, notably a stylised prologue involving silhouetted figures superimposed against still backdrops of mosaics and engravings.

Ironically, Challis’ most impressive film from the latter period of his career, Billy Wilder’s The Private Life of Sherlock Holmes, was one of his least satisfying assignments. While Challis rated both Powell and Donen as great visual directors, he felt Wilder was unable to picture what he wanted in advance, preoccupied with the script and performances. Challis also clashed with production designer Alexander Trauner, claiming that the latter built his intricate sets without regard to the practicalities of filmmaking and showed total ignorance of process shots, flaws evident in the finished film. Nevertheless, Private Life contains some striking imagery: Holmes lurking in shadow operating a remote control pipe with a foot pump; the palatial corridor of the Diogenes Club; a cycle ride by the shores of Loch Ness; Queen Victoria’s torch-lit nighttime visit to a secret government base beneath a ruined castle.

For much of the 1970s, Challis lent a glossy veneer to otherwise bland big budget productions, whether biopics, musicals, thrillers or Agatha Christie adaptations. A belated reunion with Powell and Pressburger resulted in The Boy Who Turned Yellow, a modest juvenile fantasy produced for the Rank-backed Children’s Film Foundation. Having secured Panavision equipment for this 55 minute epic, Challis captured the locations—the Tower of London, Chalk Farm Underground Station—as effectively as he did for The Small Back Room. Times had changed but Challis remained a true professional.

—Daniel O’Brien

CHANDRAGUPTA, Bansi

Films as Art Director:

1955 Father Panchali (Father Panchali) (Ray)
1956 Aparajito (The Unvanquished) (Ray)
1957 Parash Pathar (Ray); Seema
1958 Jaalsughar (The Music Room) (Ray)
1959 Apar Sansar (The World of Apu) (Ray)
1960 Devi (The Goddess) (Ray)
1961 Rabindranath Tagore (Ray—doc); Teen Kanya (Two Daughters) (Ray)
1962 Abhijan (Expedition) (Ray)
1963 Mahanagar (The Big City) (Ray)
1964 Charulata (The Lonely Wife) (Ray)
1965 Kapurush-o-Mahapurush (The Coward and the Saint) (Ray)
1966 Nayak (The Hero) (Ray)
1970 Aranjer Din Ratri (Days and Nights in the Forest) (Ray)
1972 Maya Darpan (Shahani)
1973 27 Down (Kaul)
1977 Shatranj Ke Khilari (The Chess Player) (Ray)
1981 36 Chowringhee Lane (A. Sen)
1982 Aarohan (Ascending Scale) (Benegal)

Films as Director:

1978 Glimpses of West Bengal (doc)
1979 Ganga Sagar (doc)
1980 Happening in Calcutta (doc)

Publications

By CHANDRAGUPTA: articles—

Montage, July 1966.
Madhuri, 16 November 1978.
Obituary in Variety, 1 July 1981.

* * *

Bansi Chandragupta, by far India’s best production designer, aspired to be a painter and went to Calcutta to study painting at the insistence of Subho Tagore, but friendship with Satyajit Ray in the late 1940s attracted him to the career of art director, then an unheard-of concept in Bengali or Indian cinema. Ardent and long viewing of Western films with Ray, mostly at the Calcutta Film Society (founded by Ray and his friend Chidananda Dasgupta, later a noted film critic), nurtured his imagination for realistic production sets, then lacking in most studio-oriented Indian films.

Opportunity came with Renoir’s The River on the recommendation of Ray and Harisadhan Dasgupta. But the most satisfying beginning was made with designing outdoor sets for Ray’s Pather Panchali, e.g., the hut in which Apu spends his childhood and other locales of the Bengali village. His most accomplished work that marked him out in later life were studio sets for Ray’s Charulata, Nayak, and Shatranj Ke Khilari. He designed the bogey of the high-speed train for the shooting of Nayak so flawlessly that it was mistaken by most viewers as a real railway compartment. He recreated the mid-nineteenth century milieu of the British general Outram and the pre-Mutiny Muslim habitats of Lucknow in Shatranj. His ambition to switch over to directing was cut short by his untimely death, though he made three documentaries for the West Bengal Government.

Chandragupta’s ideas on art direction and production design were very unconventional. Although a pioneer and ardent advocate of location shooting, he told an interviewer later in life that “outdoor shooting cannot compare with the excellence of indoor setting where factual details can be more easily established.” It is surprising to hear from him that “85 per cent of Ray’s films are shot indoors.” For his most acclaimed work, in Shatranj, he was helped by Ray who studied pre-Mutiny Lucknow thoroughly, and by the paintings of Gaziuddin Hyder, a Nawab of Audh, preserved in the Victoria Memorial, Calcutta. The throne of Wazed Ali, for example, was copied from one such painting. Bansi was critical of set design in the commercial Hindi films of Bombay which were crudely expensive, gaudy, unrealistic, and generally outside the purview of directors. “Spending on sets is not infructuous but it is also challenging to design sets within a limited budget.” For good set designing, there should be close collaboration between the director, the scriptwriter, and the designer. A set should not be a replica of what already exists, but built with a view to its photogenic appeal. “Anything that is not effective through the lens, is a waste of good money and effort,” he told an interviewer in 1966.

—Bibekananda Ray

CHASE, Borden

Films as Writer:

1935 Under Pressure (Walsh)
1941 Blue, White, and Perfect (Leeds) (story)
1943 Harrigan’s Kid (Reisner) (story)
1944 Destroyer (Seiter); The Fighting Seabees (Ludwig)
1945 This Man’s Navy (Wellman); Flame of the Barbary Coast (Kane)
1946 I’ve Always Loved You (Concerto) (Borzage)
1947 Tycoon (Wallace)
1948 Red River (Hawks); The Man from Colorado (Levin)
1950 The Great Jewel Robbery (Godfrey); Montana (Enright); Winchester ’73 (A. Mann)
1951 Iron Man (Pevney); Lone Star (Sherman)
1952 Bend of the River (Where the River Bends) (A. Mann); The World in His Arms (Walsh)
1953 Sea Devils (Walsh)
1954 His Majesty O’Keefe (Haskin); Vera Cruz (Aldrich) (story)
1955 The Far Country (A. Mann); Man without a Star (K. Vidor)
1956 Backlash (J. Sturges)
1957 Night Passage (Nelson)
1958 Ride a Crooked Trail (Hibbs)
1965  Los Pistoleros de Casa Grande (Gunfighters of Casa Grande)
         (Rowland)
1969  A Man Called Gannon (Goldstone); Backtrack
         (Bellamy—for TV)

Publications

By CHASE: fiction—

East River, New York, 1935.
Sandhog, New York, 1938.
Lone Star, New York, 1942.
Blazing Guns on the Chisholm Trail, New York, 1948, as Red River,
         New York, 1948.

By CHASE: nonfiction—

Sandhog: The Way of the Life of the Tunnel Builders, Evanston,
       Illinois, 1941.

By CHASE: article—

Interview with Jim Kitses in The Hollywood Screenwriter, edited by

On CHASE: articles—

Script (Belgium), no. 3, 1962.
   *   *   *

Borden Chase pursued a successful screenwriting career from the mid-1930s into the 1970s by creating tough heroes who faced danger and death in the uncivilized days of the American West. His most famous films, such as Red River (with Charles Schnee) and Bend of the River, were all Westerns, although he also wrote war films (Fighting Seabees, Destroyer), detective films (Blue, White, and Perfect), and even romantic melodramas (Frank Borzage’s I’ve Always Loved You, which is also based on Chase’s own short story “Concerto”). However, his success at depicting complex conflicts between two strong men kept him working in the Western format after a certain point in his career, and today his name is associated almost exclusively with that genre.

Chase left school at fourteen, and roamed the country, trying his hand at boxing, taxi driving, bootlegging, sandhogging, and even serving a hitch in the navy. Realizing this colorful existence could be put to use in storytelling, he started a professional writing career. His background led him easily to writing for the pulps (Argosy and Detective Fiction) and for slick successful magazines (The Saturday Evening Post and Liberty). This success led him inevitably to Hollywood, where his brand of well-plotted, clear stories about strong men found a welcome market.

Among Chase’s most successful works are three Western films starring James Stewart and directed by Anthony Mann: Winchester
’73 (with Robert L. Richards), Bend of the River, and The Far Country. These films typify the characters and conflicts associated with Chase’s work. First of all, two strong men are involved in an arduous journey across the western terrain, with units of society either contained within the journey itself (as a wagon train) or as various stops along the way (western towns, mining towns, etc.). The primary involve ment of the movie is the conflict between two men, who tend to be deeply linked by some common bond. It may be an actual blood relationship (Winchester ’73), a mutual past experience (Bend of the River), a competition over an economic goal (The Far Country), or an adoptive father-son link as in his Howard Hawks film, Red River. In some cases the conflict is internal, the hero against the evil inside himself. Although Chase created strong females in films like Lone Star, Vera Cruz, and Flame of the Barbary Coast, most Chase stories are male conflicts. Chase once said “That I believe is the greatest love story in all of the world. I don’t mean sexual. I have always believed that a man can actually love and respect another man more so than he can a woman. . . . That’s the theory I’ve worked on. There is a closer relationship between two men than between a man and a woman.”

Straightforward dialogue, and absence of pretentious philosophiz-and, clearly delineated action mark the story progressions, which cuminate in unambiguous resolutions. Any ambiguities lie in the maturity of the characterizations, in which the two men are neither totally good nor totally bad. In this regard, Chase made a major contribution to what is thought of as the “adult” or “psychological” Westerns of the 1950s. Even when Chase’s original script endings were altered, as in the case of Red River, the story and the characters he created were not destroyed. (Charles Schnee wrote a new ending for Red River, in which the two heroes, John Wayne and Montgomery Clift, end up in a showdown resolved by the intervention of the leading lady.)

The Chase Western story is presented in a physical progression across a larger-than-life landscape, an epic journey west which allows forces of good and evil to interact. In Red River, there is a cattle drive.
In Bend of the River, a wagon train moves west. In Vera Cruz, a stagecoach progresses into Mexico. And in perhaps Chase’s most commercially successful Western, Winchester ’73, a search for a stolen rifle moves the story across the American West, and also through a microcosm of typical Western genre events: a final shootout, an Indian uprising, a last stand, a bank robbery, a saloon fight, an Indian attack on the cavalry, and more. The issue of the Chase Western script is not whether man will settle the West and live in it. It is assumed he will, or that he already has. The question is more universal and appropriate to modern life: Will the uncivilized forces within man create a Wild West in perpetuity by winning out over his better instincts?

—Jeanine Basinger

CLAMPETT, Bob

Animator.  Nationality:  American.  Born:  San Diego, California, 1915 (?).  Education:  Attended Otis Art Institute, Los Angeles.
Career:  Cartoonist for Los Angeles Times while still in school, then strip cartoon contract with King Features; 1931—joined Warner Brothers as animator, working mainly on Bosko and Buddy series;
director of animation 1937; 1948—briefly a consultant to Columbia, then worked mainly in television: puppet series Time for Beany from 1949; other series include Thunderbolt the Wonder Colt, Buffalo
Billy, Top o’ the Morning, Wm. Shakespeare Wolf, and Beany and Cecil; also made commercials. Died: In 1985.

Films as Animator:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>When’s Your Birthday (Beaumont) (sequence)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>Get Rich Quick Porky, Injin Trouble, Porky in Wackyland, Porky’s Bedtime Story, Porky’s Hero Agency, Porky’s Popper, Rover’s Rival</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>The Daffy Doc, The Lone Stranger and Porky, Porky and Daffy, Porky in Egypt, Porky’s Five and Ten, Porky’s Naughty Nephew, Porky’s Party, What Price Porky</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>Ali Baba Bound, Chicken Jitters, The Film Fan, Jeepers Creepers, Kristopher Kolumbus, * jr.*, Naughty Neighbors, Patient Porky, Pied Piper Porky, Polar Pals, Porky’s Hotel, Porky’s Last Stand, Porky’s Movie Mystery, Porky’s Picnic, Porky’s Tire Trouble, Scalp Trouble, Wise Quacks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>Africa Squeaks, The Chewin’ Brains, Farm Frolics, Pilgrim Porky, Porky’s Poor Fish, Porky’s Snooze Reel (co); Prehistoric Porky, Slap Happy Pappy, The Sour Puss, The Timid Toadator (co); We, the Animals Squeak</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>A Coy Decoy, Goofy Groceries, The Henpecked Duck, Meet John Doughboy, Porky’s Pooch, Robinson Crusoe, Jr., Wabbit Trouble</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1942</td>
<td>Bugs Bunny Gets the Boid, Cagey Canary (co); Crazy Cruise, Eatin’ on the Cuff, The Hep Cat, Horton Hatches the Egg, The Impatient Patient (co); A Tale of Two Kitties, Wacky Blackout, The Wacky Wabbit, Any Bonds Today (co)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>Coal Black and de Sebben Dwarfs, A Corny Concerto, Falling Hare, An Inch in Time, Tin Pan Alley Cats, Tortoise Wins By a Hare, The Wise Quacking Duck, Booby Traps</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1944</td>
<td>Birdy and the Beast, Buckaroo Bugs, Draftee Daffy, Hare Ribbin’, The Old Grey Hare, Russian Rhapsody, Slightly Daffy, Tick Tock Tuckered, What’s Cookin’ Doc?</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1945</td>
<td>Baby Bottleneck, The Bashful Bazzard, Book Revue, A Gone-some Twosome, Wagon Wheels</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1946</td>
<td>Bacall to Arms, The Big Snooze, The Great Piggy Bank Robbery, Kitty Korned, The Goofy Gophers (co)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>It’s a Grand Old Nag (+ pr)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Bwana Devil (Oboler) (prologue, + ro)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1975</td>
<td>Bugs Bunny—Superstar (compilation) (+ ro)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

By CLAMPETT: articles—

Classic Film Collector (Indiana, Pennsylvania), Summer 1971.
The Velvet Light Trap (Madison, Wisconsin), Fall 1975.
Classic Images (Muscatine, Iowa), June 1984.

On CLAMPETT: articles—

Obituary in Film Comment (New York), November-December 1984.
Classic Images (Muscatine, Iowa), December 1984.

* * *

Arguably one of the most creative and instrumental cartoon directors at Warner Brothers during the 1930s and 1940s, Bob Clampett started his cartooning career while still at school when King Features offered him a job drawing a newspaper Sunday strip. His earliest contact with animated cartoons was when he joined the Harman-Ising unit at Warner Brothers as an inbetweener; he was soon working as an animator on the very first Merrie Melody cartoon. At this early stage it is difficult to pick out one person’s contribution, but Clampett was soon animating and suggesting stories and gags for most of the cartoons in production.

After his apprenticeship was served, Clampett was elevated to a full director to fill the space left by Frank Tashlin. Clampett made a hopeful start on an animated version of Edgar Rice Burrough’s science-fiction stories John Carter on Mars, but it unfortunately never came to fruition. His first directorial role was an animated segment for a Joe E. Brown feature called When’s Your Birthday, in which the zodiac signs become animated. Chiefly directing Porky Pig cartoons, he injected a wild, flighty surrealism close to that of his colleague Tex Avery, yet in a style all his own. The ludicrousness of a “rubberized” dog (Porky’s Tire Trouble), a camel doing a highland fling (Porky in Egypt) or Daffy Duck inflating and deflating like a balloon, having just escaped being in an iron lung (The Daffy Doc) are all excellent examples of the Clampett philosophy of throwing logic to the wind.

Not until the war years and his being allowed color did Clampett pull out all the stops and inflect on audiences his own particular no-holds-barred kinds of zaniness. Armed with some excellent animators (Bob McKimson and Rod Scribner, among others) and his layout man Mike Sasanoff, who helped with just about every aspect connected with the production, Clampett made some of the wildest, most bizarre shorts ever put out by Warners. Parodies were also a good stock-in-trade for Clampett. His Corny Concerto flattens Disney’s Fantasia by using Elmer Fudd as Deems Taylor to introduce the mayhem, including Bugs Bunny as a ballerina. Coal Black and de Sebben Dwarfs rib Disney’s Snow White by putting the whole cast in blackface, while Bacall to Arms deflates the Humphrey Bogart feature To Have and Have Not and Kitty Korned parodies the effect Orson Welles’s radio broadcast of The War of the Worlds had on the general public.

Only one really perennial character was to emerge from Clampett’s pen, that of (“I T’ot I Taw a Putty Tat!”) Tweety-Pie, and Tweety only survived when refined, remodelled, and placed in an Award-winning cartoon directed by Fritz Fre leng after Bob had left Warners. It would seem as though Clampett’s characters were too bizarre to survive the test of time and become standard Warner featured stars.

After leaving Warners, Clampett helped other Warner drop-outs to remodel Columbia cartoons and made a pilot cartoon to launch Republic Pictures’ Trucolor color system. But his true glory was yet to come—in television—and with puppets. Time for Beanie was the most successful and popular children’s puppet show on TV in the 1950s, watched by young and old alike. It reached out to all ages with its action, adventure, in-jokes, and dreadful puns featuring Cecil the Sea-Sick Sea Serpent, Dishonest John, Cap’n Huffenpuff, and, of course, Beanie, whose propeller cap became a necessity for every American child in that era. The popularity of this puppet show inspired Clampett to revert to form and make an animated series of Beanie, syndicated throughout the world.

—Graham Webb

CLARKE, Charles G.

Cinematographer. Nationality: American. Born: Charles Gallorgsy Clarke in Potter Valley, California, 10 March 1899. Career: 1916—assistant cameraman to Allen Siegler at Universal; 1917–18—served in United States Army; 1918—worked in film laboratories at National (also editor) and Oliver Morosco Company; 1922—first cameraman, Jesse Lasky Company; 1927–33—cinematographer for Fox and for 20th Century-Fox, 1937–62; 1966—co-director, Milestone of the Movies; past president, American Society of Cinematographers. Died: In Beverly Hills, California, 1 July 1983.

Films as Cinematographer:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1922</td>
<td>The Half Breed (Taylor)</td>
<td>(co, + ed)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1923</td>
<td>Salomy Jane (The Law of the Sierras) (Melford)</td>
<td>The Light That Failed (Melford)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1924</td>
<td>Flaming Barriers (Melford); The Dawn of a Tomorrow (Melford); Tiger Love (Melford); The Top of the World (Melford)</td>
<td>Friendly Enemies (Melford); Without Mercy (Melford)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1925</td>
<td>Rocking Moon (Melford); Whispering Smith (The Open Switch) (Melford); One Minute to Play (Wood); Going Crooked (Melford); Upstream (Footlight Glamor) (Ford); Singed (Wray); A Racing Romeo (Wood); Ham and Eggs at the Front (Del Ruth)</td>
<td>Sharp Shooters (Three Naval Rascals) (Blystone); Four Sons (Ford) (co); The Red Dance (The Red Dancer of Moscow) (Walsh) (co); Plastered in Paris (Stoloff); Riley the Cop (Ford)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1928</td>
<td>The Sin Sister (Klein) (co); Not Quite Decent (Cummings); The Veiled Woman (Flynn); The Exalted Flapper (Tilting); Masquerade (Birdwell) (co); Words and Music (Tilting) (co); Nix on Dames (Gallaher); A Song of Kentucky (Seiler)</td>
<td>Temple Tower (Gallaher); So This Is London (Blystone); Oh, for a Man! (MacFadden); Men on Call (Blystone)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Girls Demand Excitement (Felix); Annabelle’s Affairs (Werker); Good Sport (MacKenna)</td>
<td>Too Busy to Work (Blystone); Second Hand Wife (The Illegal Divorce) (MacFadden)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>Hot Pepper (Blystone)</td>
<td>The Cat and the Fiddle (Howard) (co); Tarzan and His Mate (Gibbons) (co); Viva Villa! (Conway) (co); Evelyn Prentice (Howard)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>The Winning Ticket (Reisner); Shadow of Doubt (Seitz); The Casino Murder Case (Martin); Woman Wanted (Seitz); Pursuit (Martin) (co); The Perfect Gentleman (Whelan)</td>
<td>The Garden Murder Case (Marin); Moonlight Murder (Marin); Trouble for Two (The Suicide Club) (Rubin); All American Champ (Country Bumpkin) (Marin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>Under Cover of Night (Seitz); Man of the People (Marin); The Thirteenth Chair (Seitz); Stand-in (Garnett)</td>
<td>Safety in Numbers (St. Clair); Charlie Chan in Honolulu (Humberstone)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>Pardon Our Nerve (Humberstone); The Return of the Cisco Kid (Leeds); Mr. Moto Takes a Vacation (Foster); Frontier Marshal (Dwan)</td>
<td>Young As You Feel (St. Clair); Viva Cisco Kid (Foster); Yesterday’s Heroes (Leeds); For Beauty’s Sake (Traube); Street of Memories (Traube)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>Romance of the Rio Grande (Leeds); Murder among Friends (McCarey); Dead Men Tell (Lachman); The Cowboy and the Blonde (McCarey); The Bride Wore Crutches (Traube); Accent on Love (McCarey); The Last of the Duanes (Tilting); Cadet Girl (McCarey); Marry the Boss’s Daughter (Freeland); The Perfect Snob (McCarey)</td>
<td>A Gentleman at Heart (McCarey); It Happened in Flatbush (McCarey); Moonrise (Mayo); Thru Different Eyes (Loring); Careful, Soft Shoulders (Garrett); Time to Kill (Leeds)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>Hello, Frisco, Hello (Humberstone) (co); Wintertime (Brahm) (co); Guadalcanal Diary (Weiler)</td>
<td>Hello, Frisco, Hello (Humberstone) (co); Wintertime (Brahm) (co); Guadalcanal Diary (Weiler)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1945</td>
<td>Thunderhead, Son of Flicka (L. King); Molly and Me (Seiler); Junior Miss (Seaton)</td>
<td>The Iron Curtain (Wellman); Green Grass of Wyoming (L. King); That Wonderful Urge (Sinclair)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1946</td>
<td>Smokey (L. King); Margie (H. King)</td>
<td>Sand (L. King); Slattery’s Hurricane (De Toth)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>Miracle on 34th Street (The Big Heart) (Seaton); Captain from Castle (H. King) (co); Thunder in the Valley (Bob, Son of Battle) (L. King)</td>
<td>The Big Lift (Seaton); I’ll Get By (Sale)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>The Iron Curtain (Wellman); Green Grass of Wyoming (L. King); That Wonderful Urge (Sinclair)</td>
<td>The Last of the Duanes (Leeds); The Return of the Cisco Kid (Foster); Change of Heart (Blystone)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Red Skies of Montana (Newman); Kangaroo (Milestone); Stars and Stripes Forever (Marching Along) (Koster)</td>
<td>Destination Gobi (Wise); City of Bad Men (Jones); Vesuvius Express (O. Lang—short); The Coronation Parade (Hathaway—short)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1954</td>
<td>Night People (Johnson); Suddenly (Allen); Black Widow (Johnson); Prince of Players (Dunne); The Bridges at Toko-Ri (Robson) (co)</td>
<td>The Man in the Gray Flannel Suit (Johnson); The Dark Wave (Negulesco—short); Three Brave Men (Dunne)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1955</td>
<td>Violent Saturday (Fleischer); The Virgin Queen (Koster)</td>
<td>The Man in the Gray Flannel Suit (Johnson); The Dark Wave (Negulesco—short); Three Brave Men (Dunne)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>The Barbarian and the Geisha (Huston); The Hunters (Powell); These Thousand Hills (Fleischer)</td>
<td>The Sound and the Fury (Ritt); Holiday for Lovers (Levin); A Private’s Affair (Walsh); Hound Dog Man (Siegel)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>Return to Peyton Place (J. Ferrer); Madison Avenue (Humberstone)</td>
<td>Caribbean Adventure (Taylor); The Time of Their Lives (Taylor) (co); The Giant (Taylor) (co); The Cat o’ Nine Tails (Taylor) (co); The Youngest Profession (Taylor) (co); The Last Hurrah (Taylor) (co); The Great War (Taylor) (co)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Other Films:

1916  Shoes (Weber) (asst)
1921  The Son of Tarzan (Jungle Trail of the Son of the Tarzan) (Revier and Flaven—serial) (2nd unit ph)
1922  Burning Sands (The Dweller in the Desert) (Melford) (asst); Ebb Tide (Melford) (asst)
1923  Slippery McGee (Ruggles) (2nd unit ph + ed)
1935  Mutiny on the Bounty (Lloyd) (2nd unit ph)
1937  Pigskin Champions (d—short)
1938  Suez (Dwan) (2nd unit ph)
1950  Three Came Home (Negulesco) (2nd unit ph)
1966  Milestones of the Movies (co-d)

Publications

By CLARKE: books—

Early Film Making in Los Angeles, Los Angeles, California, 1976.

By CLARKE: articles—

On The Big Lift in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), May 1950.
On Kangaroo in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), July 1952.
‘‘Practical Filming Techniques for Three-Dimension and Wide-Screen Motion Pictures,’’ in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), March 1953.
‘‘And Now 55mm,’’ in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), December 1955.
‘‘Shooting Night Scenes in Daylight,’’ in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), December 1956.
‘‘The Case of the Inventor of Motion Pictures,’’ in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), November 1961.
‘‘How to Film Night Scenes in Daylight,’’ in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), May 1966.
‘‘What Is a ‘Director of Photography,’’’ in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), May 1967.
Film Dope (London), no. 7, April 1975.

On CLARKE: articles—

Obituary in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), November 1983.
Film Dope (Nottingham), March 1985.

* * *

A commentator once noted that Charles G. Clarke ‘‘doesn’t work at photography . . . he is in love with it.’’ It is an apt comment on a cinematographer whose contribution to the screen as a cameraman is equalled by his devotion to acquiring and preserving (through donations to the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences) many early and rare books, papers, and artifacts.

Clarke was a pioneer in technical innovations in cinematography, including the introduction of a battery-operated camera motor, the development of matte photography, and a device for composing artificial clouds. He was heavily involved with the American Society of Cinematographers, and edited several editions of its Cinematographers Manual. He was a consummate filmmaker, and yet, at the same time, it is difficult to identify him as a great cameraman.

Although the films on which Clarke worked are widely known and admired, the cinematography in them is not particularly outstanding. Or, at least, he makes his camerawork seem so matter-of-fact that it is never noted as a major critical issue in the film. Indeed, his films very clearly emphasize his own comment that ‘‘There are two kinds of cinematographers—those who know and those who put on a show.’’ He dismissed his work simply: ‘‘You work out a pleasing composition, take a light reading and shoot. It’s that simple.’’

A prolific cinematographer, Clarke has no discernible style, as do the better-known cameramen. His photography is so innocuous that despite the critical furor over the ‘‘colorization’’ of black-and-white features, there were no arguments with the plans to ‘‘colorize’’ Clarke’s work on Miracle on 34th Street. If Clarke is best-known for anything, it is for his outdoor work on difficult locations for features such as Mutiny on the Bounty, Viva Villa!, and The Good Earth. As one of the leading cameramen at 20th Century-Fox, to which he was under long-term contract, Clarke was considered reliable enough to photograph the first Technicolor Monopack feature, Thunderhead.

His style could easily be changed to suit an Alice Faye musical such as Hello Frisco, Hello or a John Ford production, such as Four Sons, which Clarke always considered his best work.

—Anthony Slide

CLARKE, T. E. B.

Films as Writer:

1944  For Those in Peril (Crichton) (co); The Halfway House (Dearden) (co); Champagne Charlie (Cavalcanti) (co-lyrics)
1945  Johnny Frenchman (Frend); ‘‘The Golfing Story’’ ep. of Dead of Night (Crichton) (additional dialogue)
1946  Hue and Cry (Crichton)
1948  Against the Wind (Crichton); Passport to Pimlico (Crommell) (co-lyrics); ‘‘The Engine Driver’’ ep. of Train of Events (Cole); The Blue Lamp (Dearden)
1950  The Magnet (Frend)
If any one person can be credited with inventing Ealing Comedy, it would have to be T. E. B. Clarke. Not that Michael Balcon's studio had produced no comedies prior to Clarke's arrival; but they had largely been vehicles for such superannuated British comics as George Formby or Will Hay—crude, slapdash productions in the broad music-hall tradition, lacking any distinctively Ealing look or tone. With Hue and Cry, Clarke's first comedy, something fresh had unmistakably arrived. Hue and Cry—like its more accomplished successor, Passport to Pimlico—draws on the Ealing documentary heritage, making effective use of the blitzed buildings and bomb-craters of postwar London. Its humour is soundly based in character and observation, without recourse to tired comic routines. And, like all Clarke's comedies, it celebrates a degree of anarchy—the liberating power of fantasy to break through the drab, commonsense fabric of everyday life. A group normally subject to the prosaic weight of authority (schoolboys, in this case) suddenly find themselves able to wriggle free, to realise—at least for a time—their daydreams. (The plot stems from an isolated image conceived by the film's producer, Henry Cornelius: ''the impression that for one glorious hour boys have taken over the city''.)

Yet—as so often in Clarke's work, and indeed in Ealing generally—the anarchy is limited, controlled, ultimately unambitious, feeding safely back into the society which surrounds and, in the end, contains it. The boys ''take over the city'' for no more subversive purpose than to round up a gang of crooks. Similarly, in Passport to Pimlico the Londoners who have joyfully thrown off the burdens of austerity and bureaucracy soon feel themselves constrained to reimpose their own versions of these things, and finally return, thankfully, to the cosily regulated world of ration-books. (''Never thought I'd welcome the sight of these again.'') The status quo is teased, rumpled a little, but never seriously endangered.

Of all the Clarke comedies, The Lavender Hill Mob comes closest to shattering these self-prescribed limits. Alec Guinness's downtrodden, patronized bank clerk does get away with his stolen bullion, does enjoy the high life in South America—but even here convention imposes, in the last reel, a well-spoken Interpol detective, complete with handcuffs. The script, which won an Oscar and a prize at Venice, includes some of Clarke's most inventive and enjoyable writing. The ''seduction scene'' has become deservedly famous: Guinness circling... restlessly around the more slow-witted Stanley Holloway, slily in-numinating, until realization dawns in Holloway’s eyes—‘‘By Jove, Holland, it’s a good job we’re both honest men.’’ The distance, though, between this, archetype of the good-natured Ealing mainstream, and the darker vision of Hamer or Mackendrick, can readily be estimated by comparison with The Ladykillers. Both movies feature Guinness as gang boss; but the brutal deaths of the later film would be unthinkable in Lavender Hill Mob, wrenching its gentle make-believe.

‘‘Its good humour,’’ Charles Barr wrote of Lavender Hill Mob
(and the judgment holds good for all Clarke’s comedies), ‘‘has the effect of continuously endorsing the ‘social’ values even while the plot is ostensibly defying them.’’ This endorsement figures even more clearly in his non-comedies such as The Blue Lamp, seminal ancestor of every British TV police series ever since. In the closing scenes, police and criminal underworld unite to trap a young cop-killer. The episode recalls M, but with none of Lang’s Brechtian irony (‘‘Child-murderers are bad for business’’); the delinquent in The Blue Lamp has broken a set of rules acknowledged equally by cops and villains, and thus placed himself beyond the communal pale.

The best comedy, it can be argued, needs an element of cruelty in the mix. But cruelty seems to have been something absent from the character of Clarke, an exceptionally genial and tolerant man, and in the post-Lavender Hill comedies the kindliness threatens to become stifling. The Titfield Thunderbolt, Barnacle Bill, The Titfield Thunderbolt, Barnacle Bill: fantasy shades off into whimsy, individuality into eccentricity. There are still enjoyable moments, but it’s hard not to lose patience with the pervasive air of parochial self-indulgence as Ealing’s vision turns increasingly in on itself. ‘‘This little, close-knit community,’’ Clarke commented in a TV interview, ‘‘had really failed to see how life was changing round about us.’’

After Ealing closed down, many of its alumni seemed to lose their way, missing the supportive team atmosphere that Balcon had created. Clarke was no exception; the handful of films he scripted for other producers show little sign of his distinctive quirkiness, and he largely withdrew from screenwriting midway through the 1960s. To judge from his autobiography, it was as much with relief as with regret.

—Philip Kemp

CLOQUET, Ghislain

Films as Cinematographer:

1950 Curare et curarisants de synthèse (Lemoigne); Une ligne sans incident (Magnin—short); Soldats d’eau douce (Leduc—short)
1952 Saint-Tropez, devoir de vacances (Paviot—short)
1953 Les Statues meurent aussi (Resnais and Marker—short); Lumiére et l’invention du cinématographe (Louis Lumière)
1954 Neiges (Languépin—short) (co); Pantomimes (Paviot—short); Contes à dormir debout (Brabant—short); La Belle Journée (Gibaud—short); Aux frontières de l’homme (Védres and Rostand—short)
1955 Deux bobines et un fil (Villier—short); Nuit et brouillard (Resnais—short)
1956 Toute la mémoire du monde (Resnais—short); Le Ciel est pardi dessus le toit (Ma famille et mon toit) (Decourt—short); Brahim (Fléchet)
1957 Le Mystère de l’Atelier Quinze (Resnais and Heinrich—short) (co); Me and the Colonel (Glenville) (2nd unit); Un Amour de poche (Kast)
1958 Chopin (Mityr and Olemert—short) (co); Le Bel Age (Kast) (co)
1959 Classe tous risques (Sautet); Le Trou (Jacques Becker)
1960 Les Hommes de la guerre (Dewever) (co); Description d’un combat (Marker); L’Exécution (Cazenueve—for TV)
1961 Un nommé la Rooc (Jean Becker); La Belle Américaine (Dhery)
1962 Carillons sans joie (Brabant)
1963 Le Poulet (Berri—short); Un Panier de chats (Villa—for TV); La Belle Marinére (Marchand—for TV); Touriste encore (Malle and Ertaud; another version: Vive le Tour!, 1965); Le Feu follet (The Fire Within. A Time to Live, a Time to Die) (Malle)
1964 Le Pain et le vin (Witta—short); La Chambre (Mitrani—for TV)
1965 Mickey One (A. Penn); Pas de cavier for Tante Olga (Jean Becker)
1966 Au hasard Balthazar (Balhazar) (Bresson); L’Homme au crâne rasé (Die man die zijn Haar kort liet knippen; The Man Who Had His Hair Cut Shor) (Delvaux)
1967 Mouchette (Bresson); Loin du Viét-nam (Varda) (co); Les Demoiselles de Rochefort (The Young Girls of Rochefort) (Demy)
1968 Benjamin ou les mémoires d’un puceau (Deville); Un Soir, un train (Delvaux); Mazel tov or le mariage (Berri)
1969 La Maison des Borie (Doniol-Valcroze); Une Femme douce (Bresson)
1970 La Décharge (Baratier); C’était un jour comme les autres (Chartier—short)
1971 Peau d’ane (Donkey Skin) (Demy); Faustine et le bel été (Companeez); Rendez-vous à Bray (Delvaux); Pouce! (Badal)
1972 Nathalie Granger (Duras); Au rendez-vous de la mort joyeuse (J. Buñuel)
1973 L’Histoire très bonne et très joyeuse de Colinot Trousselle (Companeez); Belle (Delvaux)
1974 Dites-le avec des fleurs (Grimblat); Le Boucher, la star, et l’orpheline (Savary) (co)
1975  Love and Death (Allen); Monsieur Albert (Renard); La Ville Bidon (Baratier)
1978  The Secret Lives of Plants (Green) (co)
1979  Tess (Polanski) (co)
1980  Chère inconnue (I Sent a Letter to My Love) (Mizrahi)
1981  Four Friends (Georgia’s Friends) (A. Penn)

Films as Camera Operator:

1947  Blanc comme neige (Berthomieu)
1948  Cent ans de mission (Méhu—short); Mademoiselle de la Ferté (Dallier)
1949  La Perspective (Le Dessin de perspective) (Régnier—short); ‘‘Le Retour de Jean’’ ep. of Retour à la vie (Clouzot); Un Certain Monsieur (Ciampi); La Profession de géomètre expert (Gibaud—short); Moissons d’aujourd’hui (Chevaux d’acier) (Dupont—short); Pétrole de la Gironde (Lemoigne—short)
1950  Braque (Bureau—short); L’Espero au village (de Boissac—short); Hommes des oasis (Régnier—short); Les Musiciens de la mine (Méhu—short); Avalanche (Segard)
1951  La Petite Diligence (Croses—short); Labor Goes to School (Croses—short); The Green Glove (Maté)
1952  Il est minuit, Docteur Schweitzer (Haguet)
1953  La Classe de mathématiques (Lecomte—short); La Classe de lettres (Lecomte—short); La Classe d’histoire (Lecomte—short); L’Homme à l’oeillet blanc (Severac—short); Le Grand Pavois (Pinoteau)
1954  Napoléon (Guitry) (2nd unit)
1955  Les Possédés (Brabant)
1957  Les aventures d’Arsène Lupin (The Adventures of Arsène Lupin) (Jacques Becker)
1958  Le Piège (Brabant); Les Naufrageurs (Brabant)

Publications

By CLOQUET: articles—

Revue du Cinéma (Morges, Switzerland), October/December 1969.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), May 1981.

On CLOQUET: articles—

Film Dope, April 1975.
Pour le Cinéma Belge (Brussels), May/June 1980.
camera operator and as cinematographer for most of Delvaux’s films: L’Homme au crâne rasé, Un soir, un train; Rendez-vous à Bray; and Belle all received worldwide praise for their camerawork. The black-and-white photography used for L’Homme au crâne rasé works up a striking ambiguity between dream and reality, while images shot in color for the three other films are a deliberate reminder of Flemish and French masters.

Cloquet’s name has nonetheless been associated with less sophisticated directors such as Claude Berri, Jean Becker, and Nina Companeez. It is precisely after having seen Faustine et le bel été by Companeez that Woody Allen decided to hire the Belgian cinematographer for Love and Death, asking him to find evocative Russian locations around Paris and to keep a consistent balance between the poetic and the parodic elements of a multilayered visual fiction. Cloquet had previously worked with another U.S. director, Arthur Penn, for Mickey One, and one of his last films was another successful Penn vehicle, Four Friends. Cloquet’s last—but not least—challenge consisted in brilliantly succeeding the reputed Geoffrey Unsworth, who died unexpectedly before having time to complete the shooting of Polanski’s Tess. Apart from receiving an Academy Award—for his work on Tess—Cloquet was offered the opportunity, one year before his untimely death, to bring his opinions back to the forefront and to reaffirm what he has always cherished, namely the importance of rigorous training for a discipline where art and technical ability were meant to be one.

—Dominique Nasta

CLOTHIER, William H.

Cinematographer. Nationality: American. Born: Decatur, Illinois, 1903. Military Service: U.S. Army Air Corps during World War II: captain. Career: 1923—newsreel photographer for Paramount; 1927—did aerial photography for Wings; 1929—contract with RKO; mid-1930s—worked as photographer in Mexico and Spain; 1953–54—photographed the television series Gang-Busters. Awards: Presidential Award, American Society of Cinematographers, 1994.  Died: 7 January 1996.

Films as Cinematographer:

1932  The Lost Squadron (Archimbaud and Sloane); The Conquerors (Wellman) (aerial ph)
1935  Maria Elena (Sevilla); El 113 (Sevilla)
1936  Rinconcito madrileño (Artola); Lola Triana (del Campo)
1944  Memphis Belle (Wyler—short)
1947  For You I Die (Reinhardt)
1948  Soifa (Reinhardt)
1950  Once a Thief (W. Wilder)
1952  Confidence Girl (Stone)
1953  Phantom from Space (W. Wilder); Island in the Sky (Wellman) (aerial ph); Killers from Space (W. Wilder)
1954  The High and the Mighty (Wellman) (aerial ph); Track of the Cat (Wellman)
1955  Gang-Busters (Karn) (+ co-pr); Top of the World (Foster) (aerial ph); The Sea Chase (Farrow); Blood Alley (Wellman); Sincerely Yours (Douglas); Good-bye, My Lady (Wellman)
1956  Seven Men from Now (Boetticher); Gun the Man Down (McLaglen); The Man in the Vault (McLaglen)
1957  Dragoon Wells Massacre (Schuster); Fort Dobbs (Douglas); Bombers B-52 (No Sleep till Dawn) (Douglas); Darby’s Rangers (The Young Invaders) (Wellman); Lafayette Escadrille (Hell Bent for Glory) (Wellman); Jet Pilot (aerial photography) (von Sternberg)
1958  China Doll (Borzage); Escort West (Lyons)
1959  The Horse Soldiers (Ford)
1960  The Alamo (Wayne); Tomboy and the Champ (Lyons)
1961  Ring of Fire (Stone); The Deadly Companions (Peckinpah); The Comancheros (Curtiz); The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance (Ford)
1962  Merrill’s Marauders (Fuller)
1963  Donovan’s Reef (Ford); McLintock! (McLaglen)
1964  A Distant Trumpet (Walsh); Cheyenne Autumn (Ford)
1965  Shenandoah (McLaglen); The Rare Breed (McLaglen)
1966  Stagecoach (Douglas); Way . . . Way Out (Douglas)
1967  The Way West (McLaglen); The War Wagon (Kennedy); Firecreek (McEveety)
1968  The Devil’s Brigade (McLaglen); Bandolero! (McLaglen); Hellfighters (McLaglen)
1969  The Undefeated (McLaglen)
1970  The Cheyenne Social Club (Kelly); Chisum (McLaglen); Rio Lobo (Hawks)
1971  Big Jake (G. Sherman)
1973  The Train Robbers (Kennedy)

Films as Cameraman:

1927  Wings (Wyler) (aerial ph); Underworld (Paying the Penalty) (von Sternberg)
1928  The Last Command (von Sternberg); The Patriot (Lubitsch); Sins of the Fathers (Berger)
1929  Rio Rita (Reed)
1930  Hit the Deck; The Silver Horde (Archainbaud); Cimarron (Ruggles)
1933  King Kong (Cooper and Schoedsack)
1939  Gunga Din (Stevens)
1942  Name, Age, Occupation (Lorentz—short)
1948  Fort Apache (Ford) (asst)

Publications

By CLOTHIER: articles—

On Film, 1970.
Take One (Montreal), no. 8, 1975.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), November 1977.
On CLOTHIER: articles—

Obituary, in Classic Images (Muscatine), February 1996.

Obituary, in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), March 1996.

Obituary, in Classic Images (Muscatine), March 1996.

* * * *

“I never saw a mountain I wouldn’t climb,” said the cinematographer William H. Clothier, “if I thought I could make my shot better, or get up on a rooftop, or in an airplane, anything to improve a shot.” In the course of 45 years, Clothier climbed many a mountain, and risked his life in all types of aircraft to achieve the most effective photography. A favorite Clothier setup involved digging a pit for his camera and crew, then charging John Ford’s cavalry over it for a spectacular low-angle shot. Whether filming Westerns in Monument Valley, or documentary footage of aerial combat during World War II, Clothier was the preeminent location cameraman. His sense of composition and penchant for dangerous settings appealed to such action-oriented directors as Ford, William Wellman, Raoul Walsh, and Howard Hawks, and Clothier photographed their last films.

It took Clothier 20 years to rise to the status of Hollywood director of photography, but he brought with him a wealth of rich and varied cinematic experience. He broke into pictures at the age of 20, painting sets at Warner Brothers. He worked his way up to assistant cameraman on low-budget Westerns before joining Harry Perry’s camera crew on William Wellman’s aviation spectacular Wings. A contract with Paramount followed, and Clothier assisted such veteran cinematographers as Bert Glennon (his strongest influence) and Victor Milner. With the advent of sound, he moved to RKO, where he did the beautiful aerial cinematography in Wellman’s The Conquerors, and assisted on Cimarron, The Silver Horde, and King Kong. Clothier spent the rest of the 1930s as a first cameraman in the fledgling Mexican and Spanish film industries, and shot newsreels of the Spanish Civil War for Paramount. He returned to America to work as Joseph August’s assistant cameraman on Gunga Din, and during World War II served as a photographic officer in the U.S. Eighth Air Force. In this capacity he shot William Wyler’s historic documentary Memphis Belle, a color film shot in combat situations in the European skies.

After the war, Clothier began a relationship with John Ford, working first as a camera operator for Archie Stout on Fort Apache. He also made his first Hollywood film as a director of photography, the low-budget For You I Die. He renewed his association with William Wellman in 1953 shooting the aerials for Island in the Sky and The High and the Mighty, the former in black and white, the latter in color and CinemaScope, both offering Clothier’s visual sense of space and composition. With Archie Stout’s retirement, Clothier became Wellman’s regular cameraman, and he shot the remainder of Wellman’s films. Track of the Cat was a fascinating experiment, a black-and-white film in color. In the exteriors, the snow and forest were shot in low-light situations to create a black-and-white look. In the interiors the actors were clothed in black and white except for Robert Mitchum’s red jacket and Diana Lynn’s yellow sleeves. The cumulative effect was visually remarkable, and a statement against the typical garish color of Hollywood product. The other Wellman films have good pictorial values as well—Blood Alley was a black-and-white film, recreating China in San Rafael, California; Good-bye, My Lady profited from Georgia swamp locations; Darby’s Rangers featured a memorable combat terrain filmed entirely on a misty soundstage; and Lafayette Escadrille contains some breathtaking aerial scenes shot at dawn, although the dogfights were reused from Wellman’s earlier Men with Wings.

Clothier’s work for John Ford is also distinguished. The main title sequence of The Horse Soldiers showcases a classic Clothier shot, a long view of 30 Union troopers galloping along a railroad track, silhouetted against the sky. The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance is black-and-white symbolism, a story about right and wrong, and the building of a myth, given eloquence by the simplicity of Clothier’s cinematography. By contrast, Ford’s Donovan’s Reef with its bright colors and Hawaiian locations, and Cheyenne Autumn, filmed in color and Super Panavision 70mm to emphasize the epic qualities of the piece, reveal another side of Clothier’s talent.

Clothier’s films for Wellman and Ford, most of which starred John Wayne, made him the actor’s favorite cameraman, and he was enlisted to shoot Wayne’s Todd-AO epic The Alamo. It is one of his best-looking pictures, visualized in the style of Frederic Remington’s Western paintings. Clothier went on to shoot the majority of Wayne’s pictures, all on Western and Mexican locations. Many of them, including McLintock!, The Undefeated, and Chisum, were directed by the former Wellman/Ford assistant director Andrew McLaglen.

Clothier’s style embraced landscape and location in the classic manner of Remington and Russell, and his films share a common trait of beautiful compositions. Win Sharples, Jr., once commented on the shot across the dunes towards a line of horsemen in Burt Kennedy’s The Train Robbers, and it sums up the essence of Clothier’s work: “There was that clean, strong recording of the image—the composition coming out of that instinctive placing of the camera, a matter of an inch or two adjustment in the set-up, and the lighting just perfect—a real Clothier shot.”

—John A. Gallagher

COHL, Emile

Films as Animator, Director, and Writer:

1908 Le Violoniste (L’Agent et le violoniste; Violon et agent); Fantasmagorie (Metamorphosis; Black and White); Le Prince azur; La Monnaie de 1.000F; Blanche comme neige; La Vengeance de Riri; Le Séquestrée; La Force de l’enfant; Le Veau; Le Coffre-fort; Et si nous buvions un coup; Le Journal animé (Mon Journal); L’Hôtel du silence; Le Cauche-mar du Fantoche (The Puppet’s Nightmare; Living Blackboard); L’Automate; Un Drame chez les fantoches (A Love Affair in Toyland; Mystical Love-Making); Les Allumettes animées (Animated Matches); Le Cerceau magique (Magic Hoop); Le Petit Soldat qui devient Dieu; Les Freres Boutdebois (Acrobatic Toys; Brothers Wod); N.I. ni-c’est fini

1909 Les Transfigurations; Soyons doncs sportifs (A Sportive Puppet); La Valise diplomatique (La Bourse; The Ambassdor’s Despatch); L’Omelette fantaisique (Magic Eggs); Les Beaux-Arts de Jocko (The Automatic Monkey; Jacko the Artist); La Lampe qui file (The Smoking Lamp); Japon de fantaisie (Japanese Magic; A Japanese Fantasy); L’Agent de poche (Pocket Policeman); Les Joyeux Microbes (The Merry Microbes); Moderne École; Les Gricheux; Le Docteur Carnaval; L’Eventail animé (Historical Fan; Magic Fan); Clair de lune espagnol (The Man in the Moon; The Moon-Struck Matador); Les Locataires d’à côté (Next Door Neighbors); Les Couronnes (Laurels); Le Linge turbulent; La Bataille d’Austerlitz (The Battle of Austerlitz); Monsieur Clown chez les Lilliputiens; Porcelaines tendres (Sevres Porcelain); Les Chapeaux des belles dames; L’Armée d’Agenor (L’Ecole du soldat); Génération spontanée (Les Générations comiques; Magic Cartoons); Les Chaussures matrimoniales; La Lune dans son tablier (Moon for Your Love); Don Quichotte (Don Quixote); Un Coup de Jarnac (Jarnac’s Treacherous Blow); Un Chirurgien distrait; Les Lunettes fériques (X-Ray Glasses); Affaires de coeur (Affairs of Hearts)

1910 Cadres fleuris (Floral Studies); Le Binetoscope (The Comedy-Graph); Rêves enfants; En route; Les Chaines; Singeries humaines (The Jolly Whirl); Le Songe d’un garçon de café (Le Rêve du garçon de café; The Hasher’s Delirium; Café Waiter’s Dream); Le Champion du jeu à la mode (Solving the Puzzle); Le Mobilier fidèle; Le Petit Chantecler; Les Douze Travaux d’Hercule (Hercules and the Big Stick); Le Tout Petit Faust (The Beautiful Margaret); Le Peintre néo-impressionniste; Les Quatre Petits Tailleurs (The Four Little Tailors); L’Enfance de l’art; Les Beaux Arts mystérieux; Monsieur Stop; Le Placier est tenance; Toto devient anarchiste; Histoire de chapeaux (Headaddresses of Different Periods); La Telecuteur sans fil; Rien n’est impossible à l’homme; Dix Siècles d’elegance; Monsieur de Crac (Le Baron de Crac; The Wonderful Adventures of Herr Munchausen); Le Grand Machin et le petit chose; Bonsoirs russes; Bonsoirs (in 8 languages); Les Chefs d’œuvres de Bébé; La Musicomanie (last film for Gaumont)

1911 Le Retapete de Cervelles (Brains Repaired); Les Aventures d’un bout de papier; Le Musée des grotesques; Les Bestioles Artistes; Les Fantaisies d’Agenor maltrace; Jobard est demande en mariage; Jobard ne peut pas rire; Jobard a tué sa belle-mere; Jobard change de bonne; Jobard garçon de recettes; Jobard amoureux timide; Jobard portejaux par amour; Jobard ne peut pas voir les femmes travailler; Jobard fiancé par interim (Jobard chauffeur); La Vengeance des esprits; La Boîte diabolique

1912 Les Exploits de feu-follet; Les Jouets animés (Les Joujoux savants); Les Allumettes fantaisies (Les Allumettes magiques); Les Extraordinaires Exercices de la famille Coeur-de-Bois; Campbell Soups; Les Metamorphoses comiques; Dans la Vallée d’Ossau; Quelle drôle de blanchisserie; Une Poule mouillée qui se sèche; Poulot n’est pas sage; Ramoneur malgré lui; Le Mari a mal aux dents; Le Premier Jour de Vacances de Poulot; Jeunes Gens a marier; Le Prince de galles et fâillères; La Marseillaise; Fruits et légumes vivants; Mouland Hafid et Alphonse XIII

1913–14 Bewitched Matches; Clara and Her Mysterious Toys; A Vegetarian’s Dream; Unforesseen Metamorphosis (Exposition of Caricatures); Le Ousititi de Toto

1915 Le Voisin trop gourmand; La Trompette anti-neurasthenique; Ses Ancêtres; Fantaisies traquées; La Blanchisserie américaine; Fruits et legumes animés; Les Braves Petits Soldats de plomb; Le Terrible Bout de papier; Un Drame sur la planche à chaussures

1916 Les Exploits de Farfadet; Les Tableaux futuristes et incohérents; Pulcherie et ses meubles; Les Evasions de Bob Walter; Mariage par suggestion; Les Victualles de Gretchen se revolvent; Figures de cire et tetes de bois; Croquemitaine et Rosalie; Jeux de cartes; La Journée de Flambeau (Flame- bead, chien perdu); Flambeau au pays des surprises (Flambeau aux lignes); La Main mystérieuse; Les Fiancailles de Flambeau; Les Aventures de Clementine; La Maison du Fantoche (Fantoche cherche un logement); La Campagne de France 1814-?; Pages d’histoire numbers 1 and 2; numerous publicity and educational films

1917 L’Enlevement de Dejaniez Goldebois; L’Avenir devoile par les lignes des pieds

1922–23 Numerous publicity films for Publi-Cine
The Moving World Series—
1912–1922 Films, 15 to 25 meters long, based on news events of the day

Eclair Journal/Series—
1915 4 films, 10 to 12 meters long
1916 32 films, most between 10 and 30 meters long, and on subjects relating to the War

Les Aventures des Pieds-Nickles Series—
1916 Numbers 1 through 5

Other Films:
1908 Le Mouton enragé; Le Miracle des roses

Publications

On COHL: books—
Crafton, Donald, Emile Cohl: Caricature and Film, Princeton, New Jersey, 1990.

On COHL: articles—
Dauven, L.R., “En visite chez M. Emile Cohl,” in Pour Vous (Paris), August 1933.

Animation Journal (Orange), Fall 1992.
Crafton, Donald, “Émile Cohl and American Éclair’s Animated Cartoons,” in Griffithiana (Baltimore), May 1993.

* * *

The invention of animated cartoons goes back to the invention of film itself making it difficult to trace its exact origins. However, one of the first (if not the first) to discover this art form was Émile Cohl. Before he began his career as a film animator (aged 50), Cohl had achieved some fame in France as a newspaper caricaturist and political satirist. With his background as a cartoonist it seemed only natural that he should add movement to his drawings.

Before Cohl’s work, both drawn and object animation was used only as a novelty in “trick” films, such as those done by George Méliès and J. Stuart Blackton. Cohl expanded the form so that an entire story could be told using animation. One of Cohl’s first films, Fantasmagorie, ran only two minutes, but was composed of 700 drawings narrating the adventures of a little clown.

Cohl’s animation style is rather surreal and also makes good use of the medium. The cartoons are not formally structured, but the images flow easily from one to another as objects melt into other shapes. For example, an elephant turns into a house or a window changes into a man. These films have had an obvious influence on later animated films, such as George Dunning’s Yellow Submarine, or the pink elephant sequence in Walt Disney’s Dumbo.

Émile Cohl’s films also contain many technical innovations used in later cartoons. For example, Clair de lune espagnol uses matte photography to combine animation with live-action. Although it is a “simple” split-screen technique, it is amazing that Cohl registered any synchronization at all between the live and animated halves since these scenes must have been composed in-the-camera.

Émile Cohl was the first animator to have to deal with the pressures of studio production schedules. While at the Gaumont Studios in France he was required to complete a film every two weeks. This time pressure forced him to take several shortcuts. In some cases his animated films were lengthened with live-action footage; at other times he was forced to use cut-out animation. (Cut-out animation uses a single figure with movable limbs in order to save time by not having to redraw the figure every frame.) Cohl naturally disliked the look of the cut-out animation because of its obviously limited motion. His situation at Gaumont Studios can be compared to television animation today where time and money limits the potential of the animators in favor of more product.

In 1912 Cohl moved to New Jersey to work for the Eclair Studios. In America Cohl worked on a number of cartoons known as The Newlyweds, marking the first time that a continuing set of characters appeared in a cartoon series. Of course, many competitors, such as Krazy Kat and Mickey Mouse, soon followed.

Though Cohn’s films were extremely well received in America (where his French films were distributed by Gaumont), he was, unfortunately, given no credit. The production companies received all the praise and the true artist went unknown. However, the influence which Emile Cohl has had on the shape of the animated cartoon is invaluable, the basis for the art form as it exists today.

—Linda Obalil

COHN, Harry

Producer. Nationality: American. Born: New York City, 27 July 1891. Family: Married 1) Rose Barker (divorced); 2) the actress Joan Perry, 1941: two sons, one daughter. Career: 1906—song plugger in vaudeville; 1913—personal secretary to Carl Laemmle at IMP (to become Universal) Studios; 1920—with Jack Warner, partnered Joseph Brandt in forming CBC Film Sales Company, soon to become Columbia; 1924—the studio produced its first full-length features, and took up premises in Hollywood; 1929—became president of the company; 1937—Columbia began the first of over sixty sound serials. Awards: 45 Academy Awards for films produced by Columbia, including five for It Happened One Night, 1934; and eight for From Here to Eternity, 1953. Died: In Phoenix, Arizona, 27 February 1958.

Films as Executive Producer:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1918</td>
<td>My Four Years in Germany</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1922</td>
<td>Only a Shop Girl (Le Saint)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1923</td>
<td>Her Accidental Husband (Fitzgerald); Mary of the Movies (McDermott); Temptation (Le Saint)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1924</td>
<td>More to Be Pitted Than Scorned; The Barefoot Boy (Kirkland); Yesterday’s Wife (Le Saint)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1926</td>
<td>The Way of the Strong (Capra)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1927</td>
<td>The Blood Ship (Seitz)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1928</td>
<td>Submarine (Capra); The Matinee Idol (Capra); Say It with Sables (Capra); The Power of the Press (Capra); That Certain Thing (Capra); So This Is Love (Capra)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1929</td>
<td>Flight (Capra); The Donovan Affair (Capra); Younger Generation (Capra)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Vengeance (Mayo); Ladies of Leisure (Capra); Rain or Shine (Capra)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>Miracle Woman (Capra); The Criminal Code (Hawks); Dirigible (Capra); Platinum Blonde (Capra)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>American Madness (Capra); Love Affair (McCarey); Forbidden (Capra)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>Bitter Tea of General Yen (Capra); Man’s Castle (Borzage)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>It Happened One Night (Capra); Twentieth Century (Hawks); One Night of Love (Schertzinger); Lady for a Day (Capra); Broadway Bill (Capra); Lady by Choice (Burton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>The Whole Town’s Talking (Ford); Crime and Punishment (von Sternberg); In Spite of Danger (Hillyer); She Couldn’t Take It (Garnett); She Married Her Boss (La Cava)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>Mr. Deeds Goes to Town (Capra); The King Steps Out (von Sternberg); Love Me Forever (Schertzinger); Theodora Goes Wild (Boleslawsky); It’s All Yours (Nugent)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>Lost Horizon (Capra); The Awful Truth (McCary); What Price Vengeance (Lord); When You’re in Love (Riskin); I’ll Take Romance (E. Griffith)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Holiday (Cukor); You Can’t Take It with You (Capra); There’s Always a Woman (Hall); There’s That Woman Again (Hall); Juvenile Court (Lederman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>Mr. Smith Goes to Washington (Capra); Golden Boy (Mamoulian); Only Angels Have Wings (Hawks); Good Girls Go to Paris (Hall); His Girl Friday (Hawks)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>Angels Over Broadway (Hecht and Garmes); Arizona (Ruggles); Too Many Husbands (Ruggles); He Stayed for Breakfast (Hall); The Lady in Question (Charles Vidor)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>Adam Had Four Sons (Ratoff); Here Comes Mr. Jordan (Hall); The Face behind the Mask (Florey); This Thing Called Love (Hall); Our Wife (Hall); You’ll Never Get Rich (Lanfield)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1942</td>
<td>The Talk of the Town (Stevens); You Were Never Lovelier (Seiter); Flight Lieutenant (Salkow); My Sister Eileen (Hall); They All Kissed the Bride (Hall)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>The More the Merrier (Stevens)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1944</td>
<td>Cover Girl (C. Vidor); Together Again (C. Vidor); A Song to Remember (Seiter)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Cohn was a late-comer in the main second wave of motion picture business tycoons. Starting with $250 in 1920 and facing the competition of Paramount, Universal, Fox, First National, Warner Brothers—and after 1925, MGM—he steered his company from Poverty Row to the status of a major studio. Thanks in large part to hiring Frank Capra as director in 1928 and Robert Riskin as writer in 1931, he could claim at the time of his death 45 Academy Awards for his films.

His father (a tailor) was born in Germany, his mother in Russia. Their family of five children shared four rooms with the two grandmothers on 88th Street in New York City. Harry quit school at 14 to take his first paying job in the “choir” of a popular play, The Fatal Wedding (which at one time included in its touring company Mary Pickford and family).

Brother Jack had moved from advertising to Universal Pictures, where he learned lab work and editing and collaborated with George Loane Tucker in the surreptitious production of Traffic in Souls (1913), a five-reel film about the white slave traffic. Harry, who had been working as a “song-plugger,” both live and on film, was hired by Carl Laemmle as his secretary. By 1920, they were certain they knew enough about movies to start their own shop. Taking Joe Brandt with them, they set up a company named by their initials CBC—soon to be known, because of its rockbottom budgets, as Canned Beef and Cabbage Productions.

Beginning with a nonfiction series about movie stars called Screen Snapshots, and The Hall Room Boys, based on a comic strip, the new company became Columbia while making its first feature film, More to Be Pitted Than Scorned (1924). In 1929 the brothers bought out their partner. Jack, as head of sales and distribution, stayed in New York. Harry produced the pictures in Hollywood. They quarreled constantly.

Skilled at betting on talent, Harry nevertheless refused to offer long-term contracts, but watched for cheaper opportunities: actors “on the way up and on the way down.” He was quick to accept the chance L.B. Mayer gave him to “punish” a young newcomer at MGM, Clark Gable, by loaning him out. Riskin’s handling of the expensive short story, Night Bus, under Capra’s direction, brought Columbia the five top Oscars for It Happened One Night (1934).

Jack Cohn was equally mean in denying Columbia expansion into theaters. This minimized real estate burdens and risks but put pressure on the company to make outstanding popular films and win time on the screens of the theater chains. Capra did it with comedy in Mr. Deeds Goes to Town, Mr. Smith Goes to Washington, and You Can’t Take It with You. After Capra left to try independence, the studio continued to be a source of top-notch films, and there were still some major successes in terms of Academy Awards. Cohn himself was in effect executive producer for For Here to Eternity which won eight Oscars in 1953. On the Waterfront also got eight awards in 1954, and The Bridge on the River Kwai seven in 1957, but both of these were produced on the new “independent” basis by Sam Spiegel—an augury of the Hollywood transition away from studio boss rule.

Generally viewed as the most vulgar, loud-mouthed, and autocratic of all the studio bosses, Cohn customarily shouted insults at writers until they stoutly defended their work—after which he claimed to have more confidence in them. Hated and feared by some, sneered at by others for his limited education and experience, he could not seem to operate without four-letter words. Yet when he died there were many, like Jack Lemmon and Glenn Ford, who said he “would be missed.”

In an early statement about his views on film making (1928) Harry Cohn stressed economy—original scripts, fewer scenes and set-ups, fewer close-ups. He tried to create stars—Rita Hayworth, Kim

---

Publications

On COHN: books—

On COHN: articles—

Film en Televisie (Brussels), no. 308, January 1983.

Cohn, H., “‘From the Mailbag: Offended by Honor to Riefenstahl,’” in Classic Images (Muscatine), November 1997.

---

President and head of production for Columbia Pictures, Harry Cohn was a late-comer in the main second wave of motion picture
Novak. But his unique loyalty was to the talent of the writer, even though it was very often a love-hate relationship. It is suitable that the index of films in Larkin’s studio profile called Hail, Columbia lists only titles, dates, and screenwriters.

He was also conscious of what might be called an American style. Knowing that theater bookers might not watch new releases beyond the first reel or two, he said: ‘‘Like newspaper writers, we put a punch in the first reel of our picture that demands immediate respect and attention.’’ Then, ‘‘if your picture has novelty, human appeal, humor, and pathos without being too morbid, your chances are very good.’’

He knew what was in the scripts. According to the Bob Thomas biography, Capra confronted him in 1933 with last-minute qualms on Lady for a Day—a picture which later won four Academy Award nominations. ‘‘Do you realize you’re spending $300,000 on a picture in which the heroine is seventy years old?’’ Cohn thought about it, but told him to go ahead: ‘‘All I know is—the story packs a wallop.’’

—Richard Dyer MacCann

COLE, Jack

Films as Choreographer:

1944 Kismet (Dieterle); Cover Girl (C. Vidor); Jammin’ the Blues (Burks—short); Tonight and Every Night (Saville)
1946 Gilda (C. Vidor); The Jolson Story (Green); The Thrill of Brazil (Simon) (co)
1947 Down to Earth (Hall)
1951 On the Riviera (W. Lang); Meet Me after the Show (Sale)
1952 The Merry Widow (Bernhardt); David and Bathsheba (H. King)
1953 The I Don’t Care Girl (Bacon); Gentlemen Prefer Blondes (Hawks); The Farmer Takes a Wife (Levin)
1954 River of No Return (Preminger); There’s No Business Like Show Business (W. Lang)
1955 Three for the Show (Potter); Kismet (Minnelli); Gentlemen Marry Brunettes (Sale)
1957 Les Girls (Cukor)
1959 Some Like It Hot (Wilder)
1960 Let’s Make Love (Cukor)

Films as Actor:

1941 Moon over Miami (W. Lang); Designing Woman (Minnelli)

Publications

By COLE: article—

On COLE: article—

* * *

Credited as one of the primary influences in show business choreography, Jack Cole combined modern dance, jazz, and ethnic—particularly oriental—movement into a unique style that he exploited in a variety of commercial settings. Although he began as a modern dancer with Ruth St. Denis and Ted Shaw, he soon became involved with stage and night club performances and maintained those affiliations long after becoming a significant force in Hollywood. Working primarily at Columbia, Twentieth Century-Fox, and, occasionally, MGM, Cole provided individual dances in many musical and nonmusical films as well as choreographing all the numbers in a variety of musicals. Cole’s importance outweighs the films—and, indeed, the stage shows—he worked on. As mentor to a number of major dancers, as an innovator of dance movement, and as a filmmaker concerned with the relationship of camera and dance, Jack Cole provided a model for filming dance but often in films that have reputations inferior to his own.

During his stint at Columbia, Cole founded a permanent troupe of twelve dancers who formed the core of his work on such films as Tonight and Every Night, Down to Earth, and The Jolson Story. The troupe provided the studio with the equivalent of one of its departments: trained professionals, under contract, ready at any moment to rehearse for a film. Gwen Verdon, Carol Haney, and Matt Mattox were members of Cole’s unit at Columbia, and each helped perpetuate Cole’s influence. Although jazz and modern dance were the basis of their education with him, they also studied ballet and ethnic dance. Cole recognized the need for variety in their training and the possibilities inherent in using that variety in his choreography. Gwen Verdon has discussed the way in which Cole integrated all aspects of dance into a theatrical whole: “When we danced with him . . . we had to do absolutely authentic dances, but in jazzy costumes to jazz music.”

The understanding of how to use different forms of dance, combine them with unexpected kinds of music, and adapt them to the needs of the show or film led to remarkable innovations. It also led to frustration, for, as Glenn Loney has suggested in a series of articles in Dance Magazine, “he seldom had major artistic control; instead, he tailored his contribution to the demands of others.”

In spite of a difficult and iconoclastic personality, Cole was admired in Hollywood. He was often called on in difficult situations, to help temperamental stars, as with Marilyn Monroe in Some Like It Hot, or to provide material that would seem authentic, as with the biblical epic David and Bathsheba. His work is most evocative, though, in musicals, and he demonstrated his diverse interests in many films: a modern-dance parody of Marlon Brando in Les Girls; Latin American influences in “Heat Wave” from There’s No Business Like Show Business; oriental dance in Kismet. Always concerned with photographing dance, Cole insisted on tight control of the shooting and editing of the material he prepared and tried to work with directors to integrate the dances into the totality of a film. He seldom had the opportunity, however, to influence the films beyond the musical numbers. Fortunately, the record of his work on film survives and gives credence to the claim that he provided the legacy inherited by Bob Fosse and others.

The dancer Barrie Chase has articulated Cole’s contribution to contemporary dance style: “his combining of modern, oriental and jazz movement, his way of digging into the ground, of breaking down dance steps and body movement, of exact counting of every part of every step.” Never happy working in Hollywood, Cole was, however, important as a teacher and innovator. He made occasional screen appearances (in Designing Woman, for example), but always returned to the stage and the classroom for sustenance. Perhaps Cole’s independent spirit worked against him in Hollywood, for those who succeeded in developing the musical genre were, by nature, collaborators. Cole, on the other hand, was unique, and, although willing to tailor his material to the needs of a film, rarely agreed to a subordinate role. His ideas have become part of the vocabulary of contemporary dance and are present in films far removed from his direct contact, but his real genius may have been his ability to link innovation with show business savvy. Marilyn Monroe doing “Diamonds Are a Girl’s Best Friend” in Gentlemen Prefer Blondes demonstrates that Jack Cole had a remarkable theatrical flair. Jack Cole’s style will endure because it makes artistic endeavor part of popular expression.

—Jerome Delamater

COLPI, Henri

Editor and Director. Nationality: Swiss. Born: Brigue, 15 July 1921.

Education: Studied editing at IDHEC, Paris, 1945–47. Career: 1949—Editor, Ciné-Digest; 1948—editor of first film, Fourvière; also edited advertising shorts, worked for TV, and directed. Address: 33 rue Bonaparte, 75006 Paris, France.

Films as Editor (Shorts):

1948 Fourvière (Maudru); Super-Pacific (Maudru)
1950 Les Déchaînés (Surbom) (Keigel) (+ asst d); L’Amour d’un métier (Gérard)
1951 Des rails sous les palmiers (Colson-Malleville) (+ asst d); La Chanson du pavé (Gérard); Ce soir . . . le cirque (Gérard); La Fabrication industrielle des solutés injectables (Gérard); Disques d’hier et d’aujourd’hui (Gérard); Finlande (Bonnier); Norvège (Bonnier); Sarre, pleins feux (Bonnier and Alekan)
1952 Baba-Ali (Colson-Malleville); Le Petit Monde des étangs (Colson-Malleville); Rencontres sur le Rhin (Bonnier); La Fabrication industrielle des conrimés et dragées (Gérard) (+ asst d)
1953 Le Barrage du Châtelot (Colson-Malleville) (+ asst d); A tout casser (Stock-Cars) (Dupont); Architecture de lumière (+ co-d)
1954 Du point de vue d’Anton (Colson-Malleville); L’Enquête aboutit (Delbez and others) (+ asst d)
1955 Nuit et brouillard (Night and Fog) (Resnais)
1956 Monsieur La Brayère (Doniol-Valcroze); Routes barricées (Collet); Matériaux nouveaux, demeures nouvelles (+ d)
1957 La Dérouté (Kyrour); Morts en vitrine (Vogel) (co); La Jaconde (Gruel); Chères vieilles choses (Vogel)
1958 Le Siècle a soif (Vogel) (co); La Mer et les jours (Vogel) (co); Les Hommes de la baleine (Ruspoli); Du côté de la côte (Varda); La Première Nuit (Franju)
1959 Paris la belle (P. Prévert); Monsieur Tête (Gruel and Lenica)
1966 Symphonie Nr. 7 von Ludwig von Beethoven (+ d); Symphonie Nr. 9 von Franz Schubert (+ d)
1967 Le Coeur des pierres (Bettetini); Symphonie Nr. 3 in Es-dur, Opus 55 ‘Eroica’ von Ludwig von Beethoven (+ d)
1972 Une Belle Journée (Tacchella)

Films as Editor (Features):

1947 Les Jeux sont faits (Delannoy) (asst)
1952 Si ça vous chante (Loew)
1956 Le Mystère Picasso (The Mystery of Picasso) (Clouzot)
1957 A King in New York (Chaplin)
1959 Hiroshima mon amour (Resnais) (co)
1961 L’Année dernière à Marienbad (Last Year at Marienbad) (Resnais) (co); Une Aussi Longue Absence (A Long Absence) (+ d, lyrics)
1963 Codine (+ d, co-sc)
1964 Fascinante Amazônie (Lambert)
1966 Mona, l’étoile sans nom (+ d, co-sc)
1969  Femme noire, femme nue (Ecaré); Détruire, dit-elle (Destroy, She Said) (Duras)

1970  Heureux qui comme Ulysse (+ d, co-sc)

1973  L’Île mystérieuse (The Mysterious Island) (+ co-d, co-sc)

1976  Chantons sous l’occupation (Halimi); Bilitis (Hamilton) (+co-d)

1983  L’Hirondelle et la mésange (Antoine—produced 1920); Le Grand frère (Gird); La Fuite en Avant (Zerbib)

1987  Rue des Arcrives

1989  Australia (Andrien)

Other Films:

1948  Les Enfants dorment la nuit (Bonnière—short) (asst d); Les Chants retrouvés (Breuteil—short) (asst d)

1953  Les Statues meurent aussi (Resnais and Marker—short) (uncredited sound ed)

1961  Regards sur la folie (Ruspoli) (technical adviser)

1986  Offert (The Sacrifice) (Tarkovsky) (editorial consultant)

1987  Rue des Arcrives (co-d, with Lubchansky, Ikhlef, Boutang, Patris)

Publications

By COLPI: books—

By COLPI: articles—

“Desbatement of the Art of Montage,” in Film Culture (New York), Summer 1961.

Cinéma (Paris), November 1962.

Cinématographe (Paris), November 1980.

On COLPI: articles—

1953–60.  Hiroshima Mon Amour

Summer 1961.

** * * * **

Henri Colpi’s education at IDHEC, his experience as a film writer and as editor of Ciné-Digest, together with his early work as assistant director and editor of short films, give his editorial work a notable authority and maturity. Work for Resnais (Nuit et brouillard, Hiroshima mon amour, and L’Année dernière à Marienbad), Clouzot (Le Mystère Picasso), and Chaplin (A King in New York) on long films; and for Gruel, Kyrou, Franju, Varda, and Pierre Prévôt on short films—his activity in this second group corresponding to the apogee of the French short film—reveals his astonishing sensibility and assurance in a variety of styles, seen in the actual editing by his choice and arrangements of plain and visual sequences.

As a director as well, Colpi becomes a complete man of the cinema. After a few short films, Colpi made his long-film debut with Une Aussi Longue Absence, based on a scenario conceived by Marguerite Duras. The film, which surprises by its maturity (and also by its deliberate rhythm), tells the story of a woman who thinks her missing husband has reappeared as a tramp. This intimate drama rests on a profound and poetic humanism, despite its realism. In spite of critical attention, the film was not popular, and in the next ten years Colpi succeeded in directing only three more long films. Codine, a faithful adaptation of a work by Panait Istrati, contains color images of great beauty. Mona, l’étoile sans nom, while containing plastic qualities and a poetic atmosphere, seems compromised by a commercial system working against the director. But his next film, Heureux qui comme Ulysse (Fernandel’s last film), is a notable success: Colpi manages to translate into visual images all the poetry of Provence, and to render through the story of a man and his horse a homage to liberty.

Later work includes a TV series, L’Île mystérieuse (with a shorter cinema version), and an edited version of André Antoine’s silent film L’Hirondelle et la mésange, evidently never before prepared for viewing, a resurrection unique in cinema.

—Karel Tabery

COMDEN, Betty, and Adolph GREEN

Betty Comden and Adolph Green

Films as Actor: Green:

1944  Greenwich Village (W. Lang)
1979  Simon (Brickman) (as commune leader)
1982  My Favorite Year (Benjamin) (as Leo Silver)
1985  Lily in Love (Makk) (as Jerry Silver)
1989  I Want to Go Home (Resnais)
1996  The Substance of Fire (Sullivan) (as Mr. Musselblatt)

Films as Actress: Comden:

1944  Greenwich Village (W. Lang)
1984  Garbo Talks (Lumet)
1989  Slaves of New York (Ivory) (as Mrs. Wheeler)

Films as Writers and Lyricists:

1947  Good News (Walters)
1948  Take Me Out to the Ball Game (Everybody’s Cheering) (Berkeley) (lyricists only); The Barkleys of Broadway (Walters) (sc only)
1949  On the Town (Donen and Kelly)
1952  Singin’ in the Rain (Donen and Kelly)
1953  The Band Wagon (Minnelli) (sc only)
1955  It’s Always Fair Weather (Donen and Kelly)
1958  Auntie Mame (da Costa) (sc only)
1960  Bells Are Ringing (Minnelli)
1964  What a Way to Go! (Lee Thompson)

Publications

By COMDEN and GREEN: books—

Singin’ in the Rain (script), New York, 1972.
Comden and Green on Broadway, New York, 1981.
On the Twentieth Century (play), New York, 1981.

By COMDEN and GREEN: articles—

On COMDEN and GREEN: article—

Betty Comden and Adolph Green came to Hollywood from New York, where as two-fifths of a group called The Revuers they wrote and performed songs and sketches in a series of cabaret, radio, and theater shows in the early 1940s. When the group disbanded, Comden and Green wrote the book and lyrics for the Broadway production of On the Town, in which they also acted and which, five years later, they adapted for the screen, their roles now played by Ann Miller and Jules Munshin.

The experience gained and associations formed in this early period of their partnership—despite the decision to play a mostly backstage, offscreen role in their later ventures—significantly influenced their writing. They prepared their own material because The Revuers were originally too poor to hire writers, while the group’s gradual word-of-mouth success at a Greenwich Village cellar night-club assumed certain musical-comedy proportions of its own and influenced plot developments in a number of Comden-Green screenplays. (“Within the measure of possibility,” they once told an interviewer, “we always make use of elements in our personal lives.” The writing couple played by Oscar Levant and Nanette Fabray in The Band Wagon provides perhaps the wittiest testimony to that practice.) Moreover, the episodic nature of the sketch form and Comden and Green’s ability to integrate it with satiric songs proved particularly adaptable to the more extended requirements of musical comedy, whose heyday at MGM they magically helped to shape. Their original screenplays for Singin’ in the Rain and The Band Wagon, for example, emerged from sets of songs they were told to incorporate into each film’s story line, not an uncommon process in the making of a musical.

The genre of musical comedy is thus particularly dependent upon the world of show business itself, as screenwriters seek contexts for their characters to perform production numbers from a ‘‘realistic’’ base in an essentially unrealistic art form. As in Singin’ in the Rain and Band Wagon, lead characters in a musical tend to be performers in rehearsal for a musical play or film within the film. (Note Comden and Green’s delicious parody of the writer’s desperate search for musical excuses within the story line as Cosmo Brown—Donald O’Connor—transforms Singin’ in the Rain’s dueling cavalier into a dancing one.) In this regard, even when (as in On the Town) their main characters are not literally performers, Comden and Green’s work is infused with the exhilarating appearance of that ‘‘Hey kids, let’s put on a show’’ spontaneity so endemic to the spirit of the classic Hollywood musical. (Consider, for example, the madcap element of carnival embedded in the Singin’ in the Rain and Band Wagon dialogue, or the joyous sense of liberation captured in their lyrics to ‘‘New York, New York’’ as the three sailors disembark for shore leave in On the Town.)

But the deep affection for the world of entertainment that shines through their work is wittily balanced by Comden and Green’s satiric pleasure in the industry’s absurdities. Their screenplays abound with pretentious directors (Jeffrey Cordova in The Band Wagon), dollar-hungry movie moguls (R. F. Simpson in Singin’ in the Rain), and egomaniacal stars (Astaire/Rogers in The Barkleys of Broadway, Lina Lamont in Singin’ in the Rain) all courting potential comic disaster. Television provides the target for their nastiest satire in It’s Always Fair Weather, a film considerably ahead of its time and predaing such brilliantly bitter musicals as Cabaret, All That Jazz, and Pennies from Heaven.

—Mark W. Estrin

CONTI, Bill

Films as Composer:

1969 Juliette de Sade (Heterosexual) (Kiefer); Un Sudario a la medida (A Candidate for a Killing) (Elorrieta)
1970 Il Giardino dei Finzi-Contini (The Garden of the Finzi-Contini) (De Sica)
1972 Liquid Subway
1973 Blume in Love (Mazursky)
1974 Harry and Tonto (Mazursky)
1975 Pacific Challenge (Amram)
1976 Next Stop, Greenwich Village (Mazursky); The Displaced Person (Jordan—for TV); Rocky (Avildsen) (+ “Gonna Fly Now” theme); Smash-Up on Interstate 5 (Moxey—for TV)
1977 Handle with Care (Citizens Band) (Demme) (+ song “You Heard the Song”); A Sensitive, Passionate Man (Newland—for TV) (+ co-wrote title song); Kill Me If You Can (The Caryl Chessman Story) (Kulik—for TV); In the Matter of Karen Ann Quinlan (Jordan—for TV)
1978 Uncle Joe Shannon (Hanwright); Slow Dancing in the Big City (Avildsen); Paradise Alley (Stallone) (+ song “Too Close to Paradise”); Five Days from Home (Peppard); The Big Fix (Kagan); Ring of Passion (Countdown to the Big One) (Lewis—for TV); An Unmarried Woman (Mazursky); F.I.S.T. (Jewison); The Pirate (Harold Robbins’ The Pirate) (Annakin—for TV)
1979 The Seduction of Joe Tynan (Schatzberg); The Fantastic Seven (Steel Glory, Stunt Seven) (Peyser—for TV); Dreamer (Nosseck) (+ song “Reach for the Top”); Goldengirl (Sargent) (+ song “Slow Down, I’ll Find You”); A Man, a Woman, and a Bank (A Very Big Withdrawal) (Black) (+ song “When You Smile at Me”); Rocky II (Stallone)
1980 Private Benjamin (Zieff); The Formula (Avildsen); Gloria (Cassavetes)
1981 For Your Eyes Only (Glen) (+ co-wrote title theme); Carbon Copy (Schultz) (+ song “I’m Gonna Get Closer to You”); Victory (Escape to Victory) (Huston); Neighbors (Avildsen)
1982 That Championship Season (Miller); Split Image (Kotchell) (+ songs); Rocky III (Stallone) (+ song “Pushin’”); I, the Jury (Heffron); Farrell for the People (Wendkos—for TV)
1983 Without a Trace (Jaffie); Two of a Kind (Herzfeld); The Right Stuff (Kaufman); The Terry Fox Story (Thomas—for TV); Bad Boys (Rosenthal)
1984 Mass Appeal (Jordan); Grand Canyon: The Hidden Secrets (Merrili) (doc); The Bear (Sarafian) (+ co-wrote song “I’ll Be Home Again’’); Unfaithfully Yours (Zieff); The Karate Kid (Avildsen) (+ songs); The Coolangatta Gold (The Gold and the Glory) (Auzins)

1985 Stark (Holcomb—for TV); Rocky IV (Stallone); Beer (The Selling of America) (Kelly); Gotcha! (Kanew)

1986 Stark: Mirror-Image (Stark II) (Nosseck—for TV); Nomads (McTiernan) (+ co-wrote songs); Niagara: Miracles, Myths and Magic (Merrill) (doc); F/X (Mandel); The Boss’ Wife (Steinberg); Big Trouble (Cassavetes); The Karate Kid, Part II (Avildsen) (+ song ‘‘Two Looking for One’’)

1987 Io e papa (Papa and Me) (Capitani—for TV); Happy New Year (Avildsen); Broadcast News (Brooks); Baby Boom (Shyer) (+ song ‘‘Everchanging Times’’); A Prayer for the Dying (Hodges); Masters of the Universe (Gibson)

1988 A Night in the Life of Jimmy Reardon (Richert); I Love N.Y. (Bozzacchi, Smithee); For Keeps (Avildsen); Betrayed (Costa-Gavras); Le Grand Bleu (The Big Blue) (Le grand bleu) (Besson)

1989 The Karate Kid III (Avildsen); Lean on Me (Avildsen); Murderers Among Us: The Simon Wiesenthal Story (Gibson—for TV); Bionic Showdown: The Six Million Dollar Man and the Bionic Woman (Levi—for TV); Cohen and Tate (Red); Lock Up (Flynn)

1990 The Fourth War (Frankenheimer); A Captive in the Land (Berry); Backstreet Dreams (Backstreet Strays) (Hitzig); The Operation (Bodily Harm) (Wright—for TV); Rocky V (Avildsen)

1991 Necessary Roughness (Dragoti); Grand Canyon (Kasdan); By the Sword (Kagan); Year of the Gun (Frankenheimer); Dynasty: The Reunion (Moore—for TV)

1992 Nails (Flynn—for TV)

1993 Rookie of the Year (Stern); The Adventures of Huck Finn (Sommers); Bound By Honor (Blood In... Blood Out) (Hackford)

1994 Yellowstone (doc); 8 Seconds (The Lane Frost Story) (Avildsen); The Next Karate Kid (Cain); The Scout (Ritchie)

1995 Napoleon (Andreacchio); Bushwhacked (The Tenderfoot) (Beeman)

1996 Spy Hard (Friedberg); Entertaining Angels: The Dorothy Day Story (Rhodes)

1998 Wrongfully Accused (Proft); The Real Macaw (Andreacchio); Winchell (Mazursky—for TV)
1999  The Thomas Crown Affair (McTiernan)
2000  Sugihara: Conspiracy of Goodness

Publications

By CONTI: articles—

“Bill Conti,” interview with S. Simak, in CinemaScore (Sunnyvale, California), Summer 1987.

On CONTI: articles—

Bill Conti is a prolific, all-purpose composer-arranger who in his thirty-plus year career has written musical themes for every conceivable medium and genre: blockbuster and B-list Hollywood action-adventures and comedies; television series and mini-series; independent and foreign-language productions; and even television commercials, specials, and news and variety programs. In 1987, for example, he composed the music for such diverse films as Broadcast News and Masters of the Universe, Baby Boom and A Prayer for the Dying—not to mention the Italian-made Io e Papa, the television series Ohara and Mariah, and the mini-series Napoleon and Josephine: A Love Story. Early in his career Conti found himself in Italy, where he scored one prestigious film, Vittorio De Sica’s Il Giardino dei Finzi-Continis. He began composing scores and themes for long-forgotten television series and made-for-TV movies and worked with Paul Mazursky, writing music for Blume in Love, Harry and Tonto, and Next Stop, Greenwich Village. Yet in the mid-1970s, Conti still was relatively unheralded. Then he won the assignment that would establish him as one of the most celebrated composers of his era. He was hired to write the music for an obscure, low-budget feature about a club fighter who gets the opportunity to tangle in the ring with the World Heavyweight Champion. The star and screenwriter was an unsung actor named Sylvester Stallone. The film was Rocky, and Conti’s rousing, inspirational theme song, “Gonna Fly Now,” was an immediate audience-grabber. Along with Vangelis’s Chariots of Fire theme and Randy Newman’s music for The Natural, “Gonna Fly Now” remains among the most familiar and beloved sports-oriented movie themes. Musically-speaking, Conti’s overall score is neither complex nor creative, but it is undeniably effective in imparting a mood of self-confidence and triumph.

Conti’s music for Rocky transcends the motion picture medium—and not just because, back in 1977, “Gonna Fly Now” reached number one on the pop music charts. In subsequent years, the song has come to symbolize the courage and spirit of the underdog. Decades after Rocky first came to movie theaters, one might attend an athletic event and find some scrappy, Rocky-like challengers entering the boxing ring or playing field to the soaring trumpet that opens “Gonna Fly Now.”

Given the phenomenal success of Rocky, it is no surprise that Conti went on to compose the theme music for the television series American Gladiators. In fact, quite a few of his future projects involved creating musical sounds to parallel the emotion inherent in athletic activity: Golden girl; Dreamer; The Terry Fox Story; The Karate Kid and its sequels; Rookie of the Year; The Scout; Necessary Roughness. One of Conti’s very best scores, for The Right Stuff, amplifies the heroics of pioneer American astronauts. The names of the themes on the soundtrack—including “Breaking the Sound Barrier,” “Yeager’s Triumph,” “A Close Call,” “Returning Home,” “Last Embrace,” and “Final Meeting”—mirror the composer’s approach to conveying the tension and emotion of the story.

Across the decades, Conti has maintained professional relationships with his Rocky co-workers. Immediately following the film’s success, he composed for projects that were outgrowths of Rocky: Slow Dancing in the Big City (a Rocky clone helmed by its director, John G. Avildsen); Paradise Alley (directed and scripted by and starring Sylvester Stallone); Uncle Joe Shannon (scripted by and starring Rocky supporting actor Burt Young); F.I.S.T. and Victory (both starring Stallone)—and, of course, the inevitable Rocky sequels. In particular, Conti has remained Avildsen’s house composer, scoring a majority of the filmmaker’s projects well into the 1990s.

As a composer working in a commercial medium, Conti is as pragmatic as he is prolific. He accepts the reality that his role as composer is to serve his director. If the filmmaker is not musically oriented, Conti will relish the resulting artistic freedom. However, if the filmmaker knows exactly what he wants for the soundtrack, Conti will provide those sounds. He understands that movie music primarily must be emotional; it is one of the components that keeps the viewer involved in the on-screen activity.

For Conti, composing ultimately is a job. Upon completing work on one project, which may be a much-hyped potential blockbuster or Oscar contender, he will dutifully move on to the next, which might be an obscure television show or made-for-TV movie.

—Rob Edelman
COOPER, Merian C.

Producer. Nationality: American. Born: Jacksonville, Florida, 24 October 1893 (some sources give 1894). Education: Attended Lawrenceville School; United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, Maryland, 1911–15; Georgia Institute of Technology, Atlanta, graduated 1917. Military Service: Served in the United States infantry, 1916, then in Aviation Corps; captain; 1918–20—served with the Kosciusko Flying Squadron; lieutenant colonel; then news correspondent; served as colonel with Army Air Corps during World War II; chief of staff to General Claire Chennault in China; retired as brigadier general. Career: Merchant seaman and newspaperman; 1920s—collaborated with Ernest B. Schoedsack on documentaries and other films; joined RKO, and succeeded David O. Selznick as Vice President in Charge of Production, 1933; 1936—Vice President, Selznick International Pictures; 1947—formed Argosy Pictures with John Ford; 1952—coproducer of first Cinerama film. Award: Special Academy Award, 1952. Died: 21 April 1973.

Films as Producer:

1925 Grass: A Nation’s Battle for Life (Grass: The Epic of a Lost Tribe) (+ co-d + co-ph + ro)
1927 Chang (+ co-d)
1928 Gow, the Head Hunter (doc)
1929 The Lost Empire (doc—produced 1924); The Four Feathers (+ co-d + co-ph)

1932 The Most Dangerous Game (The Hounds of Zoroff) (Schoedsack and Pichel); The Phantom of Crestwood (Ruben)
1933 King Kong (+ co-d + co-sc); Lucky Devils (Ince); Professional Sweetheart (Seiter); Bed of Roses (La Cava); The Right to Romance (Santell)
1934 La Cucaracha (Corrigan—short)
1935 Becky Sharp (Mamoulian); She (Pichel and Holden); The Last Days of Pompeii (Schoedsack)
1936 Dancing Pirate (Corrigan)
1938 The Toy Wife (Frou Frou) (Thorpe)
1939 Stagecoach (Ford) (uncredited)
1940 The Long Voyage Home (Ford)
1942 Jungle Book (Rudyard Kipling’s Jungle Book) (Z. Korda) (uncredited); Eagle Squadron (Lubin) (uncredited)
1947 The Fugitive (Ford)
1948 Fort Apache (Ford); Three Godfathers (Ford)
1949 Mighty Joe Young (Schoedsack); She Wore a Yellow Ribbon (Ford)
1950 Rio Grande (Ford); Wagonmaster (Ford)
1952 The Quiet Man (Ford); This Is Cinerama (Rose) (+ uncredited co-d)
1953 The Sun Shines Bright (Ford)
1956 The Searchers (Ford); The Best of Cinerama (compilation)

Films as Executive Producer:

1933 The Silver Cord (Cromwell); Melody Cruise (Sandrich); Double Harness (Cromwell); Morning Glory (L. Sherman); Ann Vickers (Cromwell); Ace of Aces (Ruben); Chance at Heaven (Seiter); Little Women (Cukor); After Tonight (Sealed Lips) (Archainbaud); Flying Down to Rio (Freeland)
1934 The Lost Patrol (Ford); Spitfire (Cromwell); Sing and Like It (Seiter); Success at Any Price (Ruben); Finishing School (Tuchcok and Nicholls); Singarree (Wellman)

Publications

By COOPER: books—

By COOPER: article—

On COOPER articles—
“King Kong Was a Dirty Old Man,” in Esquire (New York), April 1951.
Cinématographe (Paris), May 1984.
CORTEZ, Stanley

Cinematographer. Nationality: American. Born: Stanislaus Krantz in New York City, 4 November 1908; brother of the actor Ricardo Cortez. Education: Attended New York University. Military service: Photographer for Signal Corps during World War II. Career: 1920s—worked with portrait photographers Edward Steichen, Pirie MacDonald, and Bachrach; then worked for various studios in New York and Hollywood as assistant and cameraman; 1932—directed the short film Scherzo; 1936—first film as cinematographer, Four Days’ Wonder; after the war, under personal contract to David O. Selznick, Orson Welles, Walter Wanger, etc.; also worked for television. Died: 23 December 1997, in Hollywood, California, of a heart attack.

Films as Cinematographer:

1932 Scherzo (+ d, sc—short)
1936 Four Days’ Wonder (Salkow)
1937 The Wildcatter (Collins); Armored Car (Foster)
1938 The Black Doll (Garrett) (co); The Last Express (Garrett); Lady in the Morgue (The Case of the Missing Blonde) (Garrett); Danger on the Air (Garrett); Personal Secretary (Garrett); Exposed (Schuster)
1939 Risky Business (Lubin); They Asked for It (McDonald); For Love or Money (Tomorrow at Midnight) (Rogell); Hawaiian Nights (Rogell); The Forgotten Woman (Young); Laugh It Off (Lady Be Gay) (Rogell)
1940 Alias the Deacon (Cabanne); Love, Honor, and Oh, Baby! (Lamont); The Leatherpushers (Rawlins); Margie (Garrett and Smith); Meet the Wildcat (Lubin); A Dangerous Game (Rawlins)
1941 The Black Cat (Rogell); San Antonio Rose (Lamont); Moonlight in Hawaii (Lamont); Badlands of Dakota (Green); Sealed Lips (Waggener); Bombay Clipper (Rawlins)
1942 Eagle Squadron (Lubin); The Magnificent Ambersons (Welles)
1943 The Powers Girl (Hello Beautiful) (McLeod); Flesh and Fantasy (Duvivier)
1944 Since You Went Away (Cromwell) (co)
1947 Smash-Up (A Woman Destroyed) (Heisler); Secret behind the Door (F. Lang)
1948 Smart Woman (Blatt)
1949 The Man on the Eiffel Tower (Meredith)
1950 The Underworld Story (The Whipped) (Endfield); The Admiral Was a Lady (Rogell)
1951 The Basketball Fix (The Big Decision) (Feist); Fort Defiance (Rawlins); De l’autre côté de l’eau (From the Other Side of the Water) (Darene—short) (co)
1952 Stronghold (Sekely); Models, Inc. (Call Girl; That Kind of Girl) (LeBorg); Abbott and Costello Meet Captain Kidd (Lamont)
1953 The Neanderthal Man (Dupont); The Diamond Queen (Brahm); Dragon’s Gold (Wisberg and Pollexfen); Shark River (Rawlins); Riders to the Stars (Carlson)
1954 Black Tuesday (Frepozenese)
1955 The Night of the Hunter (Laughton)
1956 Man from Del Rio (Horner)
1957 Top Secret Affair (Their Secret Affair) (Potter); The Three Faces of Eve (Johnson)
1959 Thunder in the Sun (Rousse); Vice Raid (Cahn)
1960 The Angry Red Planet (Melchior); Dinosaurs! (Yeaworth); Back Street
1962 Madmen of Mandoras (Return of Mr. H) (Bradley)
1963 Shock Corridor (Fuller); A Comedy Tale of Fanny Hill (Goodwins—short); Nightmare in the Sun (Lawrence)
1964 The Naked Kiss (Fuller)
1965 Young Dillinger (Morse); The Navy versus the Night Monsters (Monsters in the Night) (Hoey)
1966 Blue (Narizzano); The Bridge at Remagen (Guillermin)
1969 Tell Me that You Love Me, Junie Moon (Preminger) (co)

Merian C. Cooper, first a journalist, then an explorer, then a scriptwriter/producer, then an executive producer, was given a special Academy Award in 1952 “for his many innovations and contributions to the art of the motion pictures.” He and Ernest B. Schoedsack were executive producers for the original King Kong, which made so many innovations in the horror-fantasy genre. In 1932 and 1933, RKO/Radio was suffering from the Depression, which was only then seriously affecting the film industry. In a desperate attempt to avoid the bankruptcy of RKO, Cooper and Schoedsack made a $500,000 gamble—a gigantic budget then—and won the bet with a tremendous financial success with King Kong. He was also the main writer of the script. Two decades later he opened a new frontier in film when he became a pioneer in the wide-screen process by producing This Is Cinerama in 1952.

Cooper’s real contribution to cinema, however, was that he joined forces with John Ford to create Argosy Film Pictures in 1941. In the early days, the two men had a distribution deal with Darryl F. Zanuck of 20th Century-Fox where the latter approved the story and cost of each production. Cooper, however, managed also to arrange the international distribution for The Fugitive with Alexander Korda. Cooper continued to make other deals that had the effect of freeing Ford from the importunity of producers, whom he generally despised. It is no accident that, with Cooper as his producer or coproducer, Ford made the film that critics now claim to be the finest he or any other American made.

Ford has a great amount of power in Argosy; for example, in a letter dated 19 May 1959 (now a part of the Lilly Library collection) a colleague of Cooper and Ford writes that Ford “makes all vital decisions” in financial matters. In an earlier letter (2 April 1947) Cooper writes about a proposed script to Ford: “In my opinion, in its present form and with its dialogue, it is not a money picture.” At Cooper’s advice, the script was set aside. Letters in the same collection suggest how important Cooper was in negotiating a good deal for The Searchers—a deal that allowed Ford the creative freedom his particular talent needed. Cooper’s contributions to Ford’s career are demonstrated by the names of a mere few of the films he had a hand in: the entire Calvary Trilogy, Three Godfathers, The Quiet Man; it is also demonstrated by the general mediocrity of the films Ford made at the same time without Cooper.

—Rodney Farnsworth

* * *
COURANT, Curt

Cinematographer. Nationality: German. Born: 1895 (?); also known as Kurt or Curtis. Family: Son, the cinematographer Willy Kurant. Career: Early work as cameraman for German and Italian films; experimental film, Scherzo, that drew on the techniques of Slavko Vorkapich; critics who have seen it have referred to this short as a "symphony of light."

Cortez’s early films as cinematographer are not of the first rank, but they often had offbeat subjects that allowed him to experiment. In The Forgotten Woman he did an extreme close-up of the actress’s eyes to create a sense of seeing into her mind. Then in 1942 Cortez had his big chance of working with Orson Welles on The Magnificent Ambersons. Cortez saw the set for the film before being appointed first cameraman. His spatial sense told him that film among these sets would be a tremendous challenge. Welles’s cinematic genius told him that Cortez’s mastery of studio space was exactly what this film—having a house as its main setting, indeed, its main character—demanded. Much of Cortez’s great work was cut out later by the studio. There is the famous long take where the camera seems to explore the now empty Amberson mansion. The camera (a hand-held Mitchell) in this and another similar shot had to enter various rooms which were literally created and dismantled on cue and within seconds by the crew. The film contained documentary-like moments—for example, the opening shots which look like period photographs or engravings. These vignettes of turn-of-the-century life are carefully framed and often done in triangularly posed three-shots that give an atmosphere of bygone formality and order. The Magnificent Ambersons uses Tolandesque techniques such as depth of field with the new Plus-X film and the Waterhouse stops; Eagle Squadron carries these techniques even further.

In his later years, Cortez showed skill in filming psychological dramas. In a relatively minor work, Smash-Up, Cortez created the sense of drunkenness by doing subjective shots with flashing lights placed inside the camera, instead of using the banal distorted-lens shot. Charles Laughton gave Cortez another challenge—The Night of the Hunter. The extraordinary film demanded trial underwater shots and expressionistically lighted sets. The camera movements have a musical quality about them, and with the possible exception of the work of Charles Rosher and Karl Struss on Sunrise, Night of the Hunter contains the most beautiful camera ballet and shots of light on water ever done. As Cortez says, the camera work is musically conceived. In The Three Faces of Eve, Cortez found his actress Joanne Woodward would be to him what Garbo was to Daniels and Dietrich to Garmes. Cortez’s subtle modulations of lighting match Woodward’s equally subtle changes of expression, and both together create the sense of Eve, a psychologically split personality, becoming someone else. The labyrinthine hallways and rooms of the studio set representing a mental hospital for Samuel Fuller’s Shock Corridor is transformed by Cortez’s camera into a symbol of incarceration and insanity.

—Rodney Farnsworth

Stanley Cortez, while a solid contributor to Hollywood hack works, played an important part in the creation of a handful of transcendent masterpieces: The Magnificent Ambersons, The Night of the Hunter, The Three Faces of Eve, and Shock Corridor. Cortez was also able to give otherwise mediocre works a certain interest by means of experimental techniques.

Before Cortez started making films, he worked as a designer of elegant sets for several portrait photographers’ studios. This work may well have instilled in him his great talent: a strong feeling for space and an ability to move his camera through that space in such a way as to embody it in film’s two-dimensional format. Cortez lent an additional depth to his spatial capability by making the set into an objective correlative of the characters’ psyche. He had his first job in cinema with Pathé News, which later allowed him to give his films the newsreel-like touch when necessary. During the 1920s and the early 1930s, he worked his way up the ladder that has become usual for Hollywood cameramen—camera assistant, camera operator, and cinematographer (or first cameraman). He managed to work for some of the great Hollywood cameramen, among them Karl Struss, Charles Rosher, and Arthur C. Miller. On the side, Cortez managed to do an

Publications

By CORTEZ: articles—

American Cinematographer (Hollywood), November 1976.

On CORTEZ: articles—

Lightman, Herb A., on The Bridge at Remagen in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), November 1969.

Film Comment (New York), Summer 1972.

* * *

1971  The Date (Hansley); Do Not Fold, Spindle, or Mutilate (Post)

1977  Un autre homme, une autre chance (Another Man, Another Woman) (Lelouch)

Film as Cameraman:

1935  Gold Diggers of 1935 (Berkeley)
1917—first film work on Hilde Warren und der Tod; 1933—left Germany after rise of Nazis, worked in France and England.

Films as Cinematographer:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title and Details</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1917</td>
<td>Hilde Warren und der Tod (May) (co)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1920</td>
<td>Das Mädchen aus der Ackerstrasse (Schünzel); Hamlet (Glade) (co); Präsident Barrada (Lund)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Das Mädel vom Piccadilly (Zelnik); Der Abenteurer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1922</td>
<td>Peter de Grosse (Peter the Great) (Buchowetzki); Der Pantoffelheld (Schünzel)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1923</td>
<td>Das Paradies im Schnee (Jacoby) (co)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1924</td>
<td>Quo Vadis? (D’Annunzio and Jacoby); Komödianten des Lebens (Jacoby); Zwei Kinder (Hilber)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1925</td>
<td>Liebefeuer (Stein)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1926</td>
<td>Die Insel der Träume (Stein); Ich liebe dich (Stein); Die Fahrt ins Abenteuer (Mack); Gräfin Plättmanns (David); Die Flucht in die Nacht (The Flight in the Night) (Palermi); Die kleine vom Variété (Schwarz); Wehe, wenn die losgelassen (Froelich); Die Welt will belogen sein (Ferner) (co); Heinrich der Vierte (Palermi)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1927</td>
<td>Der fesche Erzherzog (Land); Die Czardasfürsten (Schwarz); Familientag im Hause Prellstein (Steinhoff); Der Kampf des Donald Westhof (Wendhausen)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1928</td>
<td>Schuldig (Meyer) (co); Geheimnisse des Orients (Wolffk); Hurrah! Ich liebe! (Theile) (co)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1929</td>
<td>Die Frau, nach der Mann sich sehnt (Lang); Das brennende Herz (The Burning Heart) (Berger); Die Frau im Mond (The Woman in the Moon) (Lang) (co)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Der Hampelmann (Emo); L’Homme qui assassina (Bernhardt and Tarride); Der König von Paris (Mittler) (co); Die singende Stadt (Gallone) (co); Der weisse Teufal (Wolffk) (co)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>Le Chanteur inconnu (Tourjansky); Der Mann, der den mord (Bernhardt); Meine Cousine aus Warschau (Ma cousine de Varsovie) (Boese and Gallone); Son altesse l’amour (Schmidt and Peguy); Wer nimmt die Liebe ernst? (Engel)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>Coeur de Lilas (Litvak); Un Fils d’Amérique (Gallone); Gitta entdeckt ihr Herz (Froelich); Die—oder Keine (Froelich); L’Homme qui ne sais pas dire non (Hilpert); Rasputin (Der Dämon der Frauen) (Trotz)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>Ces messieurs de la santé (Colombier); Cette vieille canaille (Litvak); Ciboulette (Autant-Lara); Ich will dich liebe lehren (Hilpert) (co); Scam poles, ein Kind der Strasse (Steinhoff); The Perfect Understanding (Gardner)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>Le Voleur (Tourneur); Anok (Ozep); The Man Who Knew Too Much (Hitchcock); The Iron Duke (Saville)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>The Passing of the Third Floor Back (Autant-Lara)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>Broken Blossoms (Septan); Spy of Napoleon (Knowles); The Man in the Mirror (Elvey)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>Le Mensonge de Nina Petrovna (Tourjansky); Le Puritain (Musso); Tarakanova (Ozep); Dusty Ermine (Vorhaus)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>La Bête humaine (The Human Beast) (Renoir); La Drame de Shanghai (Fabris); Lumière de Paris (Pottier); La Maison du Malais (Chenal)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>Le Jour se lève (Daybreak) (Carné); Louise (Gance); Monsieur Bretonneau (Esway)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>De Mayerling à Sarajevo (Mayerling to Sarajevo) (Ophüls)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>Monsieur Verdoux (Chaplin) (co)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>It Happened in Athens (Marton)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

By COURANT: article—

On COURANT: article—

* * *

Most of Curt Courant’s work as a cinematographer was done in Germany before 1933, and he is recognized as one of the best of his profession, especially on melodramas and spectaculars. He worked for Gallone, Froelich, Thiele, May, and Buchowetzki, as well as making two films for Fritz Lang (including Die Frau im Mond). In the early 1930s, he made several French-language versions of German Films, but when he left Germany with the rise of the Nazis, he worked first in England, where he was partly responsible for the wonderful incongruities of Hitchcock’s The Man Who Knew Too Much (1934). Though he made films with Max Ophüls and Charlie Chaplin in the 1940s, his most famous films are two he made in 1938 and 1939, La Bête humaine and Le Jour se lève. These two films, directed by Renoir and Carné, respectively, represent the final flourishing of what is often called “poetic realism,” a concept which to current thinking looks very much like romanticism. The mood of poetic intensity, the melancholy and bittersweet fatalism, and the dreaminess that pervade both films—though much stronger in Le Jour se lève—centers on proletarian heroes (almost anti-heroes) caught up in psychological intensities they cannot quite understand or control. The despair they represented in the late 1930s has been muted into nostalgia, but they are still powerful and moving films.

COUTARD, Raoul

Films as Cinematographer:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title and Details</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>Paradiso terrestre (Emmer) (co)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1957</td>
<td>Thau le pêcheur (Schöndörffer—short); La Passe du diable (Dupont and Schöndörffer)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
1958 Ramuntcho (Schöndörffer)
1959 Pêcheur d’Islande (Schöndörffer); Nicky et Kitty (Mericier—short)
1960 A bout de souffle (Breathless) (Godard); Les Grandes Personnes (Valère); Chronique d’un été (Rouch and Morin) (co); Tirez sur le pianiste (Shoot the Piano Player) (Truffaut)
1961 Lola (Demy); Jules et Jim (Jules and Jim) (Truffaut); Une Femme est une femme (Godard); Tire-au-flanc 62 (de Givray) (+ ro)
1962 La Poupée (Baratier); Vivre sa vie (Godard); “Antoine et Colette” ep. of L’Amour à vingt ans (Love at Twenty) (Truffaut); Et Satan conduit le bal (Dabat); Vacances portugaises (Kast); Bourdelle, sculpteur monumental (Navarra—short) (co)
1963 Le Petit Soldat (Godard—produced 1960); Les Carabiniers (Godard); Als tween druppels water (Splitting Image) (Rademakers); Les Baisers (Tavernier and others); Le Mépris (Contempt) (Godard) (+ ro); “Le Grand Escroc” ep. of Les Plus Belles Escroqueries du monde (Godard); La Difficulté d’être infidèle (Troublanc-Michel)
1964 Bande à part (Godard); Les 317e Section (Schöndörffer); Je vous salue, Maria (Lévy); Un Monstre de compagnie (Male Companion) (de Broca); La Peau douce (The Soft Skin) (Truffaut); La Femme mariée (Godard); L’Avatar botanique de Mlle. Flora (Barbillon—short); Petit jour (Pierre—short) (co)
1965 Alphaville (Godard); Pierrot le fou (Godard); Les Voix d’Orly (Lachenay—short); Scruggs (A Game Called Scruggs) (Hart)
1966 L’Horizon (Rouffio); Made in U.S.A. (Godard); Riom le beau (Guilbert—short)
1967 The Sailor from Gibraltar (Richardson); L’Espion (The Defender) (Leyly); Deux ou trois choses que je sais d’elle (Godard); Weekend (Godard); La Chinoise (Godard); Concerto Brandebourgeois (Reichenbach—short) (co); La Mariée était en noir (The Bride Wore Black) (Truffaut); Vive eau (Roger—short)
1968 L’Étoile du sud (The Southern Star) (Hayers); Rocky Road to Dublin (Lennon); Au péril de la mer (Roger—short)
1969 Z (Costa-Gavras) (+ ro)
1970 L’Aveu (The Confession) (Costa-Gavras) (+ ro); Jolly Green (+ d, sc—short); Etes-vous fiancée à un marin grec ou à un pilote de ligne? (Aurel); La Liberté en croupe (Molinaro)
1971 L’Explosion (Simenon) (+ ro); Le Trêfle à cinq feuilles (Frees); Les Aveux les plus dous (Molinaro); The Jerusalem File (Flynn)
1972 Embassy (Hessler); Le Gang des otages (Molinaro)
1973 L’Emmerdeur (Molinaro)
1974 Comme un pot de fraises! (Aurel)
1977 Le Crabe-Tambour (Schöndörffer)
1979 La Légion sauté sur Kolwezi (+ d)
1982 Passion (Godard)
1983 Le Diagonale du fou (Dangerous Moves) (Demblo); Prénom Carmen (First Name Carmen) (Godard)
1984 La Garce (Pascal); Du Sel sur la peau (Deges)
1986 Max mon amour (Max, My Love) (Oshima)
1987 Fuegos (Arias)
1988 Blanc de chine (Granier-Deferre); Bremende Bettens (Burning Beds) (Frankenberg) Ne revielez pas un flic qui dort (Pinheiro); Peaux de vaches (Mazuy)

1990 La femme fardeé (Pinheiro); Bethune: The Making of a Hero (Dr. Bethune) (Borsos); Il gêle en enfer (Mocky)
1991 Les Enfants volants (The Flying Children) (Nicloux) (co)
1992 La Vie crevée (The Punctured Life) (Nicloux)
1993 La Naissance de l’amour (Garrel)
1994 Faut pas rire au bonheur (Happiness Is No Joke) (Nicloux)

Films as Director:

1967 Singal l’antilope sacrée (short); Tu es danse et vertige (short)
1969 Hoa-Binh (Peace) (+ co-sc)
1980 La Légion saute sur Kolwezi
1982 SAS à San Salvador (SAS—Terminate with Extreme Prejudice)

Publications

By COUTARD: articles—

Show (New York), 17 September 1970.

Cinématographe (Paris), July 1981.

Le Technicien du Film (Paris), July/September 1982.

Filmkritik (Munich), July 1983.

Film Français (Paris), 19 October 1984.

On COUTARD: articles—

Film (Hanover), no. 9, 1965.

Chaplin (Stockholm), no. 2, 1970.

Film Français (Paris), 3 February 1978.

* * *

Most readily identified with Godard and, to a lesser extent, Truffaut, Raoul Coutard’s unorthodox, technically unsophisticated but highly imaginative photography became an expression of French

185
New Wave values. In the era of lightweight cameras and fast film-stock which prized inventiveness and naturalness above the studied, polished images of the fifties, he was at home working quickly with hand-held cameras in locations invariably underlit by textbook standards. His direct, simplified approach to filming also broke with traditional aesthetics by drawing attention to the camera in films such as A bout de souffle or Le Petit Soldat. His challenging innovations were so rapidly assimilated as to become, in many respects, the new orthodoxy of the sixties both in France and further afield. His influence in America, for example, shows in the work of Konrad Hall, Laszlo Kovaks, Gordon Willis, and Vilmos Zsigmond.

The qualities of freshness and resourcefulness inherent in Coutard’s approach are attributable to an absence of formal training and to his fieldwork experience, initially as an army photographer in Indochina and later as a daring photojournalist for Radar, Paris-Match, and Life.

Feature work ensued with Romantchko, a film about smugglers in the Basque country and Pêcheur d’Islande, with the life of deep-sea fishermen as its subject. Remarkable for its images of stormy seas, the film anticipates by two decades Coutard’s award-winning photography of ships and dramatic seascapes in Le Crabe-Tambour.

The sixties brought collaboration with a variety of directors including Demy, Kast, Valère, Richardson, and Costa-Gavras, though most notably with Godard and Truffaut. His work for Valère in Les Grandes Personnes, with its Parisian setting captured in flat, naturalistic lighting, reveals the influence of Decaë. For Denny’s Lola, with its striking slow motion sequences at the fairground, he obtained the distinctively rich blacks and whites by using Gevaert 36 film; for Costa-Gavras in Z the political message of the investigative documentary is effectively pointed by subjective shots and informative close-ups.

Coutard’s association with Truffaut resulted in films which were remarkable for their atmospheric qualities and their sympathetic treatment of character. In Tirez sur le pianiste, the pastiched mood of the American B movie is established as the camera tracks through dark streets and, in terms of characterization, a slow pan round
Charlie’s room becomes a delicate revelation of his painful past; in La Mariée était en noir, homage to Hitchcock is found in the play of tracking shots and close-ups to create tension and engender audience identification; in Jules et Jim, the richly varied camerawork reflects the pattern of moods dictated by the mercurial Catherine. In his work with Truffaut, Coutard excelled in conveying the full weight of the psychological moment. In Tirez sur le pianiste a lengthy close-up of a finger hesitating above a doorbell renders the violinist’s apprehension before the audition while rapid camera movements brilliantly convey Charlie’s panic and desperation as he rushes, too late, to his suicidal wife. In Jules et Jim, Coutard captures the sheer exuberance of the sun-drenched bicycle rides, or the innocent joy of childish games, or the initial awkwardness, then exhilaration, of the reunion as the camera hesitantly, then excitedly, links the protagonists, or conveys the depth of Jim’s feelings with the camera soaring above the trees to deny the distance between the chalet and the hotel.

Nevertheless, it is above all in his contribution to Godard’s subversive cinema of ideas during the sixties and in the early eighties that Coutard revolutionized approaches to cinematography. There were frequent experiments with film stock. For A bout de souffle a raw newsreel quality was achieved by using Ilford HPS photographic film; for Les Carabiniers, a special processing was employed to produce the documentary realism of harsh blacks and whites rather than muted grays; in Vivre sa vie starkly contrasting monochrome images underpin the bleak depiction of prostitution; in La Femme mariee or Le Petit Soldat dehumanization is conveyed in clinically detached photography of characters against empty white backgrounds while the chilling mood of alienation in Alphaville derives from the camera’s emphasis of inhumane architecture and the harsh neon lights of Paris by night. Coutard’s color photography for Godard was equally experimental. In Le Mepris the symbolic play of reds, blues, and yellows is emphasized by the use of film stock which enhances sensitivity; in Une Femme est une femme color is used for dramatic purposes to serve the mood; in La Chinoise primary colors translate the brutality of the Vietnam war, and in Deux ou trois choses que je sais d’elle, the display of brightly-colored commercial products exposes the temptations of Western materialism. With the luxuriant color of Pierrot le fou, there are elements of unusual beauty in the reflection of traffic lights on the car windshield or in the images of the protagonists walking through long grass as the car blazes. In Passion, concerned as it is with light and pictorial representation, Coutard’s experience as a lighting cameraman was invaluable.

Coutard’s use of long tracking shots—from the hand-held camera in a bath chair for the sequence at Orly airport in Une Femme mariée to the shocking ten-minute account of the murderous traffic jam in Weekend—has been daring. Equally challenging has been the use of the distancing longshot in Pierrot le fou, Week-end or Les Carabiniers, and, in Deux ou trois choses que je sais d’elle, for example, the use of the extreme close-up of a coffee cup to achieve a degree of abstraction or, in Vivre sa vie, a telling concentration on Nana’s pen as she struggles over an illiterate letter.

In the nineties Coutard enabled a new generation of filmmakers to bring their vision to the screen. For Garrel he provided aptly prosaic black-and-white images of workaday Paris as a framework for the mid-life crises explored in La Naissance de l’amour, while in three films for Nicloux, he again conveyed bleak, soulless moods through restrained camerawork. In Les Enfants volants, he worked with Jean Badal to provide a controlled, dispassionate portrait of the deranged and murderous protagonist; in La Vie crévéé, his camera perceptively observes the maneuvers of a manipulative older male (Michel Piccoli) destroying the previously happy relationships of two young couples, while in Faut-pas rire au bonheur, long takes characterize the unfolding of the director’s gloomy tale of chance encounters set in Coutard’s familiar nighttime Paris.

Although Coutard enjoyed a measure of polite recognition as a director with films such as Hoa-Binh, it is essentially his work as a cinematographer that has determined his reputation. He is justly acknowledged to be not only the unrivaled interpreter of the Godardian vision, but also the most consistently adventurous and influential of the New Wave cameramen.

—R. F. Cousins

COWARD, (Sir) Noël

Coward in Teddington, Middlesex, England, 16 December 1899.
Education: Attended Chapel Road School. Career: Child actor, writer for revues in late 1910s; 1924—first successful play, The Vortex; followed by a series of comedies, musicals (often writing the music and lyrics), and dramas; also a stage director of his own and 186

Noël Coward

other plays; 1942—first film as writer (also producer and co-director), In Which We Serve; cabaret entertainer from the 1950s. Awards: Special Academy Award for In Which We Serve, 1942. Knighted, 1970. Died: 26 March 1973.

Films as Producer:

1942  In Which We Serve (+ co-d + sc + mus + ro)
1944  This Happy Breed (Lean)
1945  Blihe Spirit (Lean); Brief Encounter (Lean) (+ co-sc)

Films as Writer:

1945  Journal de la résistance (Grémillion) (commentary, + narrator)
1949  The Astonished Heart (Fisher and Darnborough) (+ mus + ro)
1952  Meet Me Tonight (Pelissier) (+ mus)
1955  Cavalcade (Allen)

Films as Actor:

1918  Hearts of the World (Griffith)
1935  The Scoundrel (Hecht and MacArthur)
1956  Around the World in Eighty Days (Anderson)

1959  Our Man in Havana (Reed)
1960  Surprise Package (Donen)
1963  Paris When It Sizzles (Quine)
1965  Bunny Lake Is Missing (Preminger)
1968  Boom! (Losey)
1969  The Italian Job (Collinson)

Publications

By COWARD: plays—

The Young Idea, London, 1922
The Rat Trap, London, 1924.
The Vortex, London, 1925.
Fallen Angels, London, 1925.
The Queen Was in the Parlour, London, 1926.
This Was a Man, London, 1926.
Design for Living, London, 1933.
Curtain Calls, New York, 1940.
Blihe Spirit, London, 1941.
Australian Broadcast, London, 1941.
This Happy Breed, London, 1943.

By COWARD: other books—

A Withered Nosegay (non-fiction), London, 1922.
Chelsea Buns (verse), London, 1925.
Spangled Unicorn (verse), London, 1932.
Present Indicative (autobiography), London, 1937.
To Step Aside (stories), London, 1939.
Middle East Diary (non-fiction), London, 1944.
Brief Encounter (script), in Three British Screen Plays, edited by Star Quality (stories), London, 1951.
Pretty Polly Barlow (stories), London, 1964, as Polly Barlow, New York, 1965.
Collected Verse, edited by Graham Payn and Martin Tickner, London, 1984.

By COWARD: articles—

Picturegoer (London), August 1927.
Picturegoer (London), 29 April 1933.
Photoplay (New York), February 1935.
The Listener (London), 7 April 1966.

On COWARD: books—

Morley, Sheridan, A Talent to Amuse: A Biography of Noël Coward, Merchant, William, Privilege of His Company: Noël Coward Remem-
Lesley, Cole, The Life of Noël Coward, London, 1976, as Remem-
Yaraventilimath, C. R., Jestings Jeremiah: A Study of Noël Coward’s
Cole, Stephen, Noël Coward: A Bio-bibliography, Westport, Con-
Morella, Joseph, and George Mazzei, Geniuses and Lust: The Creative Browne, Phyllis, Thanks for the Tea, Mrs. Browne: My Life with Noël,

On COWARD: articles—

Picturegoer (London), 27 April 1935.
Photoplay (New York), June 1935.
Baker, Bob, “In Which He Served,” in Sight & Sound (London),
Summer 1990.
Stillwater, Marianne, “Noël Coward et David Lean,” in Cinéma
Gottlieb, S., “Kissing and Telling in Hitchcock’s Easy Virtue,” in Hitchcock Annual (Gambier), no. 1, 1992.

Noël Coward, bright young man of the 1920s and 1930s and darling of cafe society for over five decades, wore many creative caps in addition to his chief vocation as playwright. Likewise his ventures into films were under a number of guises—actor, screenwriter, producer, and director.

As a playwright he saw most of his plays adapted for the screen but with little actual involvement on his part—Bitter Sweet, Private Lives, Design for Living, and Blithe Spirit. In 1933, the American production of his play, Cavalcade—the saga of a British family between the Boer War and the First World War—won the Academy Award as Best Picture of the Year. As an actor, he did two bit parts in 1918 in D. W. Griffith’s Heart of the World. Later acting roles included Around the World in Eighty Days, Bunny Lake Is Missing, and Boom! As a screenwriter he was less prolific, but his output includes two hallmark films—In Which We Serve, based upon his original screenplay, and Brief Encounter, which he adapted from his one-act play Still Life. Curiously, neither of these films rely on the flippant, sometimes sarcastic, and often effete subject matter of many of his famous plays. Instead they were inspiring, realistic depictions of the English during the Second World War.

In Which We Serve was Coward’s admirable effort to boost British wartime morale, a propaganda film with lasting value. The germination for the film began with Louis Mountbatten’s description of life aboard the HMS Kelly prior to its sinking during the Battle of Crete.
Coward developed the screenplay, and also produced the film, wrote the music, co-directed with David Lean, and acted the role of the ship’s captain. Told in sober, documentary style with the use of flashbacks, it is flagwaver of considerable merit which earned Coward a special Academy Award.

Brief Encounter remains one of the screen’s most durable romantic films. For all its simplicity—the story of an extramarital affair between two happily married, middle-class people—the film is a moving and convincing account of basic human emotions. Coward wrote the screenplay with David Lean and Anthony Havelock-Allan; Coward produced and Lean directed. The complete opposite of Hollywood’s glossy women’s pictures, Brief Encounter is sparingly directed by Lean, and beautifully acted by Celia Johnson and Trevor Howard.

—Ronald Bowers

CRISTALDI, Franco

Films as Producer:

1954 La pattaglia sperduta (Nelli)
1955 Il seduttore (Rossi); Camilla (Emmer); Un eroe dei nostri tempi (Monicelli)
1956 Mio figlio Nerone (Nero’s Mistress) (Steno); Kean (Gassman)
1957 Rascel Fifi (Leoni); L’uomo di paglia (Germi); I notti bianchi (White Nights) (Visconti)
1958 La sfida (The Challenge) (Rossi); I soliti ignoti (Big Deal on Madonna Street) (Monicelli); Lo i... c’est la loi (The Law Is the Law) (Christian-Jaque)
1959 Audace colpo dei soliti ignoti (Fiasco in Milan) (Loy); Un ettaro di cielo (Casasido); Rascel Marine (Leoni); I magilari (Rossi)
1960 I delfini (Maselli); Vento del sud (Provenzale); Kapò (Pontecorvo)
1961 L’assassinio (The Lady Killer of Rome) (Petri); Fantasmi a Roma (Pietrangeli); Un giorno da leone (Loy); Giorno per giorno disperatamente (Gianetti); Salvatore Giuliano (Rossi)
1962 Divorzio all’italiana (Divorce, Italian Style) (Germi); Arrivano i Titani (My Son, the Hero) (Tessari)
1963 La ragazze di Babe (Bebo’s Girl) (Comencini); I compagni (The Organizer) (Monicelli); Omicron (Gregoretti); Mare matto (Castellani)
1964 Sedotta e abbandonata (Seduced and Abandoned) (Germi); Les Plus Belles Escroqueries du monde (The Beautiful Swindlers) (Godard and others); Gli indifferenti (Time of Indifference) (Maselli)
1965 Vaghe stelle dell’orsa (Sandra) (Visconti); L’antimiroiracolo (Piccon)
1967 Una rosa per tutti (A Rose for Everyone) (Rossi); La Cine è vicina (China Is Near) (Bellochio)
1968 Rubra al prossimo tuo (A Fine Pair) (Maselli) (exec pr)
1971 Krasnaya palatka (The Red Tent) (Klalatazov); Nel nome del padre (In The Name of the Father) (Bellochio); L’udienza (Ferreri); Le Souffle au coeur (Murmur of the Heart) (Malle)
1972 Il caso Mattei (The Mattei Affair) (Rossi); Lady Caroline Lamb (Bolli) (exec pr)
1973 A proposito Lucky Luciano (Re: Lucky Luciano) (Rosi); Lacombe Lucien (Malle)
1974 Amarcord (Fellini)
1975 Beata Loro
1976 Qui comincia l’avventura (Di Palma)
1979 Ogro (Operation Ogre) (Pontecorvo) (co); Cristo si è fermato a Eboli (Christ Stopped at Eboli) (Rossi); Ratataplan (Nichetti) (co)
1980 Café Express (Loy); Ho fatto splash (Nichetti); Il Cappotto di Astrakhan (Vicario)
1982 Domani si balla (Nichetti)
1983 Marco Polo (for TV); Arrivano i miei (Salerno); E la nave va (And the Ship Sails On) (Fellini)
1986 Garibaldi—the General (Magni); The Name of the Rose (Annua)
1989 Vanille fraise (Oury)
1990 Cinema Paradiso (Tornatore); C’era un castello con 40 cani (Au bonheur des chiens) (Tessari)

Publications

By CRISTALDI: articles—

On CRISTALDI: articles—

* Film Français* (Paris), 4 May 1984.
* Rivista del Cinematografo (Rome), September 1992.

* * *

As an occasional, if reluctant, producer for Luchino Visconti and a longtime associate of Francesco Rosi, Franco Cristaldi was responsible in the 1960s and 1970s for some of Italy’s most uncompromising cinema, while shrewd marketing of his Pietro Germi and Mario Monicelli productions made them among the best-known European films to circulate in the United States.

Born in 1924, Cristaldi began producing documentaries. In 1952 he founded Vides Cinematografica and moved into features as Italy’s youngest producer. Half a dozen minor projects attracted the attention of the prestigious but profligate Luchino Visconti, the budget overruns of whose Senso had scared off more experienced financiers. Cristaldi, Visconti and writer Suso Cecchi d’Amico collaborated to make I notti bianchi, intended as a cheap vehicle to launch their friend Marcello Mastroianni as a serious actor. Shortly before filming was to begin in Livorno, Visconti, impressed by Maria Schell’s Venice Golden Lion for Gervaise, hired her, at a fee Cristaldi considered exorbitant. But Visconti refused to recast, and further announced his preference for a studio shoot over locations. Sets of city streets, canals and railway lines were built at Cinecittà, made even more expensive when Visconti demanded huge tulle curtains to create the effect of fog. Hoping to spread costs, Cristaldi commissioned a comedy script from d’Amico to employ the Notti bianchi sets, but delays forced them out of Cinecittà before the film, I soliti ignoti, could start shooting under Mario Monicelli. I notti bianchi won a Silver Lion at Venice but failed commercially. On the other hand, Monicelli’s farce about feckless crooks trying to pull a robbery became Cristaldi’s first success, even (as Big Deal on Madonna Street) in the U.S.A. Cristaldi also married one of its stars, Claudia Cardinale.

Over the next five years Cristaldi financed a range of films distinguished by tough socialist subject matter. Monicelli’s assistant Gillo Pontecorvo brought him the concentration camp drama Kapò, whose starkness prefigures Monicelli’s I compagni, the story of a turn of the century union agitator working in Cristaldi’s native Turin, and Francesco Rosi’s Salvatore Giuliano. The films established Vides as Italy’s preeminent producer of socially conscious cinema but were too bleak to enjoy wide English-language release. In particular Salvatore Giuliano, recut and retitled The Bandit’s Revenge, fared badly.

In 1959, Visconti approached Cristaldi to produce Rocco and his Brothers. Committed to a mixed French and Italian cast, the director had already chosen Annie Girardot for a major role. When Cristaldi suggested Brigitte Bardot or Pascale Petit, Visconti, replying acidly that he could see hiring them as manicurists but not as actresses, moved the project to Goffredo Lombardo’s Titanus and broke with Cristaldi “after a series of telegrams,” recalled the producer, “that could never be published in a respectable book. I am even surprised the postal service agreed to send them.” Cristaldi returned to social satire, backing Pietro Germi’s highly successful Divorzio all’italiana and Sedotta e abbandonata, films that overturned the rocks of Italian regional life, showing the clichéd warm-hearted Italian as greedy, treacherous and priapic. Stefania Sandrelli was established as a star, Germi won an Oscar for Divorce’s story and screenplay, and Cristaldi was launched decisively as an international producer.

In 1964, Visconti proposed another collaboration. Aware that Cardinale, who had worked with him on The Leopard, was anxious to do so again, Visconti induced Cristaldi to back Vaghe stelle dell’orsa, his version of Elektra with Cardinale and Jean Sorel as incestuous aristocratic siblings. The film made little money, but probably paid off in scandal and critical esteem. Cristaldi also funded two further vehicles for Cardinale, A Rose for Everyone on Brazilian locations and Ruba al prossimo tuo, a crime comedy with Rock Hudson, leeringly retitled A Fine Pair for the U.S.A.
Consistently interested in socialist/humanist projects through the 1970s, Cristaldi continued the collaboration with Francesco Rosi that had begun with 1958’s La sfida. Though he funded China Is Near and In the Name of the Father by belligerent left-wing director Marco Bellocchio, Cristaldi was not drawn to the new crop of young Italian filmmakers. His main involvement with the newer generation was with French directors, notably Louis Malle, whose Viva Maria, Le Souffle au Coeur, Lacombe Lucien, and Black Moon Vides backed. He also financed Fellini’s autobiographical Amarcord.

In 1977, Cristaldi became head of the International Federation of Film Producers Associations, a post which briefly reduced his activity on active work, which extends back to the one-reelers of the earliest part of the twentieth century continues through to the present day with cameramen who have ever worked in motion pictures. Their collection of the Cronjager family to work in pictures were Henry and Jules, who shot scores of films between the turn of the

—John Baxter

CRONJAGER, Edward

Films as Cinematographer:

1925 Womanhandled (La Cava)
1926 Let’s Get Married (La Cava); Say It Again (La Cava); The Quarterback (Newmeyer)
1927 Paradise for Two (La Cava); Knockout Reilly (St. Clair); Man Power (Badger); Shanghai Bound (Reed); The Gay Defender (La Cava)
1928 Sporting Goods (St. Clair); Easy Come, Easy Go (Tuttle); Warming Up (Newmeyer); Moran of the Marines (Strayer); What a Night! (Sutherland)
1929 Redskin (Schertzinger); Nothing but the Truth (Schertzinger); The Wheel of Life (Schertzinger); Fashions in Love (Schertzinger); Fast Company (Sutherland); The Love Doctor (M. Brown); Seven Keys to Baldpate (Barker)
1930 Lovin’ the Ladies (M. Brown); He Knew Women (Herbert and Shores); Shooting Straight (Archainbaud); Cimarron (Ruggles)
1931 Young Donovan’s Kid (Donovan’s Kid) (Nihlo); The Public Defender (Ruben); Secret Service (Ruben)
1932 The Lost Squadron (Archainbaud) (co); Road of the Dragon (Ruggles); Hell’s Highway (R. Brown); The Conquerors (Wellman); No Other Woman (Ruben); Sweepings (Cromwell); Diplomaniacs (Seiter); Professional Sweetheart (Seiter); No Marriage Ties (Ruben); If I Were Free (Behold We Live) (Nugent)
1934 Spitfire (Cromwell); Strictly Dynamite (Nugent); Down to Their Last Yacht (Hawaiian Nights) (Sloane); Kentucky Kernels (Triple Trouble) (Stevens); Lightning Strikes Twice (Holmes)
1935 Enchanted April (Beaumont); Roberta (Seiter); The Nitwits (Stevens); Jabba (Cromwell); In Person (Seiter)
1936 Yellow Dust (Fox); Special Investigator (L. King); Swing It (Goodwins—short); The Texas Rangers (K. Vidor); Three Married Men (Buzzell); One in a Million (Lanfield)
1937 Nancy Steele Is Missing (Marshall); Wake Up and Live (Lanfield); Thin Ice (Lovely to Look At) (Lanfield) (co); Wife, Doctor, and Nurse (W. Lang)
1938 Island in the Sky (Leeds); Rascals (Huston); Gateway (Worner); Keep Smiling (Miss Fix-It) (Leeds)
1939 Winner Take All (Brower); The Gorilla (Dwan); Chicken-Wagon Family (Leeds); The Escape (Cortez); Heaven with a Barbed Wire Fence (Cortez); Too Busy to Work (Brower); Everything Happens at Night (Cummings)
1940 I Was an Adventuress (Ratoff) (co); The Girl in 313 (Cortez); Young People (Dwan); The Gay Caballero (Brower); Youth Will Be Served (Brower)
1941 Western Union (F. Lang) (co); A Very Young Lady (Schuster); Sun Valley Serenade (Huston); Hot Spot (I Wake Up Screaming) (Huston); Rise and Shane (Dwan)
1942 To the Shores of Tripoli (Huston) (co); Friendly Enemies (Dwan); The Pied Piper (Pichel); Girl Trouble (Schuster); Life Begins at 8:30 (The Light of Heart) (Pichel)
1943 Margin for Error (Preminger); Heaven Can Wait (Lubitsch); The Gang’s All Here (The Girls He Left Behind) (Berkeley)
1944 Home in Indiana (Hathaway)
1945 Nob Hill (Hathaway); Colonel Effingham’s Raid (Man of the Hour) (Pichel)
1946 Do You Love Me? (Ratoff); Canyon Passage (J. Tourneur)
1947 Honeymoon (Two Men and a Girl) (Keighley); A Miracle Can Happen (On Our Merry Way) (K. Vidor and Fenton) (co)
1948 Relentless (G. Sherman); Don’t Trust Your Husband (An Innocent Affair) (Bacon); The Countess of Monte Cristo (de Cordova)
1950 The Capture (J. Sturges); House by the River (F. Lang)
1951 I’d Climb the Highest Mountain (H. King); Best of the Badmen (Russell); Two Tickets to Broadway (Kern) (co)
1952 Lure of the Wilderness (Negulesco); Bloodbath of Broadway (Jones)
1953 Treasure of the Golden Condor (Davies); Powder River (L. King); Beneath the 12 Mile Reef (Webb)
1954 The Siege at Red River (Maté)
1955 Devil’s Partner (Rondeau)
1959 The Girl in Lover’s Lane (Rondeau)
1960 The Threat (Rondeau)

* * *

The Cronjager family is perhaps the most prolific dynasty of cameramen who have ever worked in motion pictures. Their collective work, which extends back to the one-reelers of the earliest part of the twentieth century continues through to the present day with feature films and television.

The earliest members of the Cronjager family to work in pictures were Henry and Jules, who shot scores of films between the turn of the Edward Cronjager has attained perhaps the greatest fame because of his extensive work during the 1930s and 1940s on a wide variety of major studio productions, mostly at Twentieth Century-Fox. Cimarron, the Edna Ferber Oscar-winning saga directed by Wesley Ruggles, was a triumph for Edward, who was nominated for an Oscar for his fine work (the first of five such nominations over the course of the next 20 years), and received ecstatic notices. The Oklahoma land rush sequence, one of the most famous from any western, compares favorably with the same sequence in the 1961 version which benefited from color and advanced technology, but did not surpass the original in design or scope.

Perhaps Cronjager’s most famous work was that which he did on several of Sonja Henie’s pictures at Fox, including her best-known film, Sun Valley Serenade. He was noted for his spectacular work with the black ice sequences which were characteristic of her films, and Henie insisted on several occasions that Cronjager be taken off other projects to work on her pictures.

In 1943 Cronjager made Heaven Can Wait, directed by Ernst Lubitsch at Fox and the vivid color brought him his third Oscar nomination. D. W. Griffith reportedly was so impressed with the photography on the film that he called it the best color footage ever made. Vivid color continued to be important in Cronjager’s later work. In Canyon Passage, directed by Jacques Tourneur, the “Ole Buttermilk Sky” described in Hoagy Carmichael’s title song came to life spectacularly under Cronjager’s photographic direction. The last film of significance which Cronjager shot was Beneath the 12 Mile Reef, with innovative underwater photography that far surpassed the mundane plot.

Although he continued to work sporadically for several years, including some uncredited work on Desiree in 1954, ill health greatly curtailed his career until his death.

—Patricia King Hanson

---

CROSBY, Floyd

Cinematographer. Nationality: American. Born: Floyd Delafield Crosby in New York City, 12 December 1899. Family: Son: the rock musician David Crosby. Career: Worked in cotton industry and on Wall Street in stock exchange; 1927—photographer for William Beebe in Haiti, and worked on documentary films in 1930s; after World War II—freelance cinematographer on entertainment films; TV work includes episodes for Reader's Digest, Court of Last Appeal, Author's Playhouse, and other series. Award: Academy Award for Tabu, 1931. Died: In Ojai, California, 30 September 1985.

Films as Cinematographer:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Directors</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>Tabu (Murnau and Flaherty)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>Matto Grosso (+ co-d) (co)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>The River (Lorentz) (co)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>The Fight for Life (Lorentz); The Power and the Land (Ivens—short) (co)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>The Land (Flaherty—short) (co)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1942</td>
<td>Power for Defense (Gerke and Bolte—short) (co); Name, Age, Occupation (Lorentz—short; produced 1939)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>Rural Co-op (Lorentz—short); My Father's House (Kilne)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>Of Men and Music (Reis) (co)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>The Brave Bulls (Rossen) (co)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>High Noon (Zinnemann)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1953</td>
<td>Man in the Dark (Landers); Mystery Lake (Lansburgh); Stormy, the Thoroughbred with an Inferiority Complex (Lansburgh—short) (co); The Steel Lady (The Treasure of Kalifa) (Dupont); Man Crazy (Lerner)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1954</td>
<td>Monster from the Ocean Floor (Ordung); Five Guns West (Corman); The Fast and the Furious (Ireland and Sampson); The Snow Creature (W. Wilder)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1955</td>
<td>The Naked Street (Shane); Apache Woman (Corman); Shack Out on 101 (Dein); Hell's Horizon (Gries)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1957</td>
<td>She-Gods of Shark Reef (Shark Reef) (Corman); Naked Paradise (Corman); Rock All Night (Corman); Attack of the Crab Monsters (Corman); Carnival Rock (Corman); Ride Out for Revenge (Girard); Hell Canyon Outlaws (The Tall Trouble) (Landers); Reform School Girl (Berrnds)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1958</td>
<td>Suicide Battalion (Cahn); War of the Satellites (Corman); The Cry Baby Killer (Addiss); Hot Rod Gang (Fury Unleashed) (Landers); Machine Gun Kelly (Corman); Teenage Caveman (Out of the Darkness) (Corman); Wolf Larsen (Jones); The Old Man and the Sea (Sturges) (co); The Screaming Skull (Nicol); I, Mobster (The Mobster) (Corman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1959</td>
<td>Crime and Punishment, U.S.A. (Sanders); The Wonderful Country (Parrish) (co); Blood and Steel (Kowalski); The Rookie (O'Hanlon); Terror at Black Falls (Ordeal at Dry Red) (Sarafian)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>Twelve Hours to Kill (Cahn); The Fall of the House of Usher (House of Usher) (Corman); High-Powered Rifle (Dexter); Freckles (McLaglen); Walk Tall (Dexter); Operation Bottleneck (Cahn); The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come (McLaglen); The Gambler Wore a Gun (Cahn)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1961</td>
<td>A Cold Wind in August (Singer); The Pit and the Pendulum (Corman); The Purple Hills (Dexter); The Explosive Generation (Kulik); Seven Women from Hell (Webb); The Two Little Bears (Hood); The Broken Land (Bushelman); Hand of Death (Nelson); Woman Hunt (Dexter)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1962</td>
<td>The Premature Burial (Corman); Tales of Terror (Corman); The Firebrand (Dexter)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>The Raven (Corman); The Yellow Canary (Kulik); Black Zoo (Gordon); The Young Racers (Corman); The Haunted Palace (Corman); X (The Man with the X-Ray Eyes) (Corman); The Comedy of Terrors (Tourneur)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1964</td>
<td>Bikini Beach (Asher); Pajama Party (Weis); Indian Paint (Foster)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1965</td>
<td>Beach Blanket Bingo (Asher); Sergeant Deadhead (Taurow); Sallah (Kishon); How to Stuff a Wild Bikini (How to Fill a Wild Bikini) (Asher)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1966</td>
<td>Fireball 500 (Asher)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
1967  The Cool Ones (Nelson)
1972  Sweet Kill (The Arousers) (Hanson) (co)

Other Films:
1938  Doctor Rhythm (Tuttle) (cam)
1955  Oklahoma (Zinnemann) (2nd unit ph)

Publications
On CROSBY: articles—

Film Comment (New York), Summer 1972.

* * *

Although Floyd Crosby’s work as a cinematographer stretches back to Tabu (1931) and The River (1937), he achieved his greatest measure of commercial and artistic success in the late 1950s and early 1960s as director of photography for the American director Roger Corman, working on a series of low-budget horror and science fiction films. Crosby was born in 1899 in New York City, and after a brief period on Wall Street, he began working as a still photographer, before turning to cinematography around 1930. Crosby rapidly made a name for himself as a cameraman, working with such pioneer documentarists as Robert Flaherty, Joris Ivens, and Pare Lorentz. In 1931, Crosby won the Academy Award for his work on Tabu, directed by Flaherty and F.W. Murnau. But following this early period of celebrity and success, Crosby shied away from the Hollywood mainstream. Except for a few assignments, such as Fight for Life in 1940 and My Father’s House in 1947, he remained a fringe figure in the film community, known for his uncompromising standards and his lack of interest in studio politics.

In 1951, however, he went back to work on Robert Rossen’s The Brave Bulls and shot Fred Zinnemann’s classic antiwestern High Noon the following year. These films showed that Crosby had lost none of his skill as a cinematographer. He was much in demand as a result of his speed and craftsmanship on both projects, but still refused to become tied to any particular producer or director. That is, until he met Corman. The two first worked together on Five Guns West in 1954 and immediately hit it off. “He needed a lot less coaching than a lot of other young directors,” Crosby remembered later. “He knew what he wanted, he worked fast, and it was fun. Suddenly we were a team.” In an interview I conducted with Corman on 21 April 1986, he remembered working with Crosby with equal fondness. “He was a rarity,” Corman reminisced. “He worked fast, which is important to me, and yet his stuff was always good. No matter how fast I moved, Floyd kept right up, and he could light a setup in 10–15 minutes flat, or even faster if need be, and we’d go. That’s unusual—lots of people are fast, but you don’t want to see the results. With Floyd, you didn’t have that problem. Plus, he knew how to set up these really complicated dolly shots quickly. He was the best, and working with him was always a pleasure, professionally and personally.”

For Corman, Crosby shot War of the Satellites, Machine Gun Kelly, I, Mobster, The Fall of the House of Usher, The Pit and the Pendulum, The Premature Burial, Tales of Terror, and many other films. Most of these films were for American International Pictures, or AIP, Corman’s “home company.” Eventually Crosby worked on other AIP projects not directed by Corman, including Bikini Beach, Pajama Party, How to Stuff a Wild Bikini, and Fireball 500. After his work as a cophotographer of the undistinguished programmer The Arousers, Crosby retired from the industry.

But it is his atmospheric, imaginative work for Corman which is Floyd Crosby’s most enduring achievement. The unlikely alliance between Crosby, the seasoned veteran (he was 56 when he shot his first film for Corman), and Corman, the brash young neophyte of 1950s cinema, remains one of the most prolific and resonant partnerships in film.

—Wheeler Winston Dixon
D’AGOSTINO, Albert S.

Films as Art Director/Production Designer:

1921 Salvation Nell (Webb) (co)
1928 Ramona (Carewe)
1929 She Goes to War (H. King) (co)
1930 Today (Nigh)
1933 Headline Shooter (Brower) (co); Midshipman Jack (Cabanne) (co); One Man’s Journey (Robertson) (co); Blood Money (R. Brown) (co); I Cover the Waterfront (Cruse)
1934 Palooka (Stoloff); The Man Who Reclaimed His Head (Ludwig); Finishing School (Tuchoch and Nicholls)
1935 Werewolf of London (Walker); The Raven (Landers); She Gets Her Man (Kenton); The Mystery of Edwin Drood (Walker); King Solomon of Broadway (Crosland); Manhattan Moon (Walker); Three Kids and a Queen (Ludwig)
1936 The Invisible Ray (Hillyer); Love before Breakfast (W. Lang); Dracula’s Daughter (Hillyer)
1937 A Doctor’s Diary (C. Vidor); John Meade’s Woman (Wallace); Her Husband Lies (Ludwig); The Great Gambini (C. Vidor)
1938 The Gladiator (Sedgwick)
1940 The Stranger on the Third Floor (Ingster)
1941 Mr. and Mrs. Smith (Hitchcock)
1942 Cat People (Tourneur); The Magnificent Ambersons (Welles)
1943 I Walked with a Zombie (Tourneur); This Land Is Mine (Renoir); The Leopard Man (Tourneur); The Ghost Ship (Robson); The Seventh Victim (Robson); Zombies on Broadway (+ d)
1944 Tender Comrade (Dmytryk); Murder My Sweet (Dmytryk); The Curse of the Cat People (Fritsch and Wise); Mademoiselle Fifi (Wise); None but the Lonely Heart (Odets)
1945 The Body Snatcher (Wise); The Spiral Staircase (Siodmak); The Enchanted Forest (Landers); The Bells of St. Mary’s (McCary); Cornered (Dmytryk); Isle of the Dead (Robson); The Brighton Strangler (Nosseck)
1946 Till the End of Time (Dmytryk); Bedlam (Robson); From This Day Forward (Berry); Notorious (Hitchcock); The Locket (Brahm); The Falcon’s Adventure (Berke) (co); The Stranger (Welles); Back to Bataan (Dmytryk); Lady Luck (Martin); Badman’s Territory (Whelan)
1947 Dick Tracy Meets Gruesome (Rawlins); Crossfire (Dmytryk); The Woman on the Beach (Renoir); The Long Night (Litvak); Mourning Becomes Electra (Nichols); Night Song (Cromwell); Tycoon (Wallace); Rachel and the Stranger (Foster); Out of the Past (Build My Gallows High) (Tourneur)
1948 Berlin Express (Tourneur); Blood on the Moon (Wise); The Boy with Green Hair (Losey); I Remember Mama (Stevens); They Live by Night (The Twisted Road) (Ray)
1949 The Set-Up (Wise); Adventure in Baltimore (Wallace); The Window (Tetzlaff)
1951 The Thing (Nyby)
1952 Beware My Lovely (Hornor); The Lusty Men (Ray); Clash by Night (F. Lang); Macao (von Sternberg); The Big Sky (Hawks); Angel Face (Preminger)
1953 Androcles and the Lion (Erskine); The Hitch-Hiker (Lupino); Devil’s Canyon (Werker); Second Chance (Maté)
1954 The French Line (Bacon); Susan Slept Here (Tashlin)
1955 Underwater (J. Sturges)
1956 Back from Eternity (Farow); The Conqueror (Powell); Great Day in the Morning (Tourneur); I Married a Woman (Kanter)
1957 Jet Pilot (von Sternberg—produced 1950); The Unholy Wife (Farrow); Run of the Arrow (Farrow)

Publications

On D’AGOSTINO: article—

* * *

Albert S. D’Agostino’s career as supervising art director at RKO in the 1940s has always been overshadowed by the more conspicuous career of Van Nest Polglase whose regime in the same position at the studio extended over the flamboyant 1930s. Polglase’s designs were large and opulent, D’Agostino’s smaller and more conservative, though no less impressive in their ability to stretch a budget while using the sets to underpin character psychology.

Though he created sets for dramas of some of the industry’s top directors, D’Agostino’s work is most closely associated with the horror and mystery genres, particularly with the low-budget efforts of producer Val Lewton. Much of his early work for Universal on films such as The Raven, Dracula’s Daughter, and Werewolf of London continued that studio’s gothic tradition of dank dungeons and fantastic laboratories. The move from Universal to RKO was a move from the shuffling monster school of horror to a brand of narrative grounded in psychological causality. Consciously creepy sets gave way to spaces that were often more normal at first glance but were in fact braced by considerable psychic influence. A dream sequence in The Stranger on the Third Floor, a D’Agostino collaboration with Polglase, found direct projection of a character’s psychological state in a series of minimal, expressionistic sets. The protagonist’s sense of guilt is conveyed in sets that grow increasingly abstract to the point where a jail cell is suggested by merely a bed and the shadows of bars. Not all of D’Agostino’s work is as overt in its linkage of characters’ subconscious states with physical surroundings due to simple narrative strictures, hence often a single, realistic setting would serve as a psychological metaphor for an entire film.

D’Agostino was able deftly to balance a sense of reality with metaphoric undercurrents reflecting the interior state of characters. Most of the films designed by D’Agostino and Walter Keller for the Lewton thrillers feature at least one set that serves the metaphoric function. I Walked with a Zombie and The Leopard Man both contain fountains which act as central staging points for action and as the psychic centers of the films. In the former film, a fountain in the form of St. Sebastian materializes the characters’ personal sense of martyrdom and pain. Like the seemingly random narrative of The Leopard Man, and the fate which afflicts its characters, the ball suspended by the waters of a fountain at the center of that film appears to be controlled by larger, intangible forces. Isle of the Dead recreates the Arnold Bocklin painting that inspired the movie and centers much of the film’s polemic about faith and death on a parapet on which a votive fire burns. The key set for The Seventh Victim is a room, decorated with only a chair and a noose, which becomes a manifestation of the heroine’s philosophy of life and death. Also crucial to the film, as with many designed by D’Agostino, is the staircase, often functioning as a path to sexual invitation or initiation. The double staircase in The Seventh Victim is a conspicuous symbol of the choices in life available to the characters in the film.

While D’Agostino’s sets were often motivated by psychology, designs were also prompted by budgetary concerns. The massive, ornate staircase from The Magnificent Ambersons was reused numerous times in slightly altered forms, and the 18th-century English insane asylum in Bedlam was a frugal refitting of sets left from The Bells of St. Mary’s. James Agee and others lauded the Lewton unit for its ability to create convincing period sets on almost nonexistent budgets, with 19th-century Edinburgh (The Body Snatcher) and the small French village caught up in the Franco-Prussian War (Made-moiselle Fifi) often singled out as examples of D’Agostino and Keller’s most evocative work.

Much of the Polglase influence continued in D’Agostino’s work, notably in the expressionist motives favored by Polglase for thrillers. These characteristics became exploited fully in the studio’s extensive production of the film noir in the post-war years. D’Agostino continued and refined some of the Polglase tenets while leaving his own unique mark on the studio. By linking characters to their surroundings on a psychological level rather than simply placing them in handsomely designed spaces, Albert D’Agostino added a degree of depth to art direction that had been largely lacking since the Expressionist period in Germany.

—Eric Schaefer

DANIELS, William H.

Cinematographer. Nationality: American. Born: Cleveland, Ohio, 1 December 1895 (or 1900); brother of the director Jack Daniels. Attended the University of Southern California, Los Angeles. Family: Married Betty Lee Gaston, 1943; two daughters and one son. Career: 1917—assistant cameraman for Triangle/KB; 1918–24—worked for Universal, then for MGM, 1924–43, Universal, 1945–58, and MGM, 1958–70; 1961–63—president, American Society of Cinematographers. Awards: Academy Award for The Naked City, 1948. Died: 14 June 1970.

Films as Assistant/2nd Cameraman:

1917 Robinson Crusoe (short)
1919 Blind Husbands (von Stroheim)
1920 The Devil’s Passkey (von Stroheim)
1922 The Long Chance (Conway)

Films as Cinematographer:

1922 Foolish Wives (von Stroheim) (co)
1923 Merry-Go-Round (von Stroheim and Julian) (co)
1924 Helen’s Babies (Seiter) (co)
1925 Women and Gold (Hogan); Greed (von Stroheim) (co); The Merry Widow (von Stroheim) (co); MGM Studio Tour (short)

William H. Daniels
1926  Dance Madness (Leonard) (co); The Torrent (Bell); The Boob (The Yokel) (Wellman); Monte Carlo (Dreams of Monte Carlo) (Cabanne); Money Talks (Mayo); Bardeley's the Magnificent (K. Vidor); The Tempress (Niblo) (co); Altars of Desire (Cabanne); Flesh and the Devil (Brown)

1927  Captain Salvation (Robertson); Tillie, the Toiler (Henley); Love (Anna Karenina) (Goulding); On ze Boulevard (Millarde) (co)

1928  The Latest from Paris (Wood); Bringing Up Father (Conway); Telling the World (Wood); The Actress (Trelawny of the Wells) (Franklin); The Mysterious Lady (Niblo); A Woman of Affairs (Brown); Dream of Love (Niblo) (co); A Lady of Chance (Leonard) (co)

1929  Wild Orchids (Franklin); The Trial of Mary Dugan (Veiller); The Last of Mrs. Cheyney (Franklin); Wise Girls (Kempy) (Hopper); The Kiss (Feyder); Their Own Desire (Hopper)

1930  Anna Christie (Brown); Montana (St. Clair); Strictly Unconventional (Burton) (co); Le Spectre vert (Feyder—French version of L. Barrymore’s The Unholy Night); Romance (Brown); Si l’empereur savait ça! (Feyder—French version of L. Barrymore's His Glorious Night); Olympiea (Feyder—German version of His Glorious Night); A Free Soul (Brown); Strangers May Kiss (Fitzmaurice); Susan Lenox: Her Fall and Rise (The Rise of Helga) (Leonard)

1932  Mata Hari (Fitzmaurice); Lovers Courageous (Leonard); Grand Hotel (Goulding); As You Desire Me (Fitzmaurice); Skyscraper Souls (Selwyn)

1933  Rasputin and the Empress (Rasputin, the Mad Monk) (Boleslawsky); The White Sister (Fleming); The Stranger’s Return (K. Vidor); Broadway to Hollywood (Ring Up the Curtain) (Mack) (co); Dinner at Eight (Cukor); Christopher Bean (Wood)

1934  Queen Christina (Mamoulian); The Barrettes of Wimpole Street (Franklin); The Painted Veil (Boleslawsky)

1935  Naughty Marietta (Van Dyke); Anna Karenina (Brown); Rendezvous (Howard)

1936  Rose-Marie (Van Dyke); Romeo and Juliet (Cukor); Camille (Cukor) (co)

1937  Personal Property (Van Dyke); Broadway Melody of 1938 (Del Ruth); Double Wedding (Thorpe); The Last Gangster (Ludwig); Beg, Borrow, or Steal (Thiele)

1938  Marie Antoinette (Van Dyke); Three Loves Has Nancy (Thorpe); Dramatic School (Sinclair)

1939  Idiot’s Delight (Brown); Stronger than Desire (Fenton); Ninotchka (Lubitsch); Another Thin Man (Van Dyke)

1940  The Shop around the Corner (Lubitsch); The Mortal Storm (Borzage); New Moon (Leonard)

1941  So Ends Our Night (Cromwell); Back Street (Stevenson); They Met in Bombay (Brown); Shadow of the Thin Man (Van Dyke); Design for Scandal (Taurog) (co); Dr. Kildare’s Victory (The Doctor and the Debutante) (Van Dyke)

1942  For Me and My Gal (Berkeley) (co); Keeper of the Flame (Cukor)

1943  Girl Crazy (Taurog) (co)

1947  Brute Force (Dassin); Lured (Personal Column) (Sirk)

1948  The Naked City (Dassin); For the Love of Mary (de Cordova); Family Honeymoon (Binyon)

1949  The Life of Riley (Brecht); Illegal Entry (de Cordova); Abandoned (Newman); The Gal Who Took the West (de Cordova)

1950  Woman in Hiding (Gordon); Winchester ’73 (A. Mann); Harvey (Koster); Departed (Siodmak)

1951  Thunder on the Hill (Bonjour) (Sirk); The Lady Pays Off (Sirk); Bright Victory (Lights Out) (Robson)

1952  When in Rome (Brown); Pat and Mike (Cukor); Glory Alley (Walsh); Plymouth Adventure (Brown); Never Wave at a WAC (The Private Wore Skirts) (McLeod)

1953  Forbidden (Maté); Thunder Bay (A. Mann); The Glenn Miller Story (A. Mann); War Arrow (G. Sherman)

1954  The Far Country (A. Mann); Strategic Command (A. Mann)

1955  Six Bridges to Cross (Pevney); Foxfire (Pevney); The Shrike (J. Ferrer); The Girl Rush (Pirosch); The Benny Goodman Story (Davies)

1956  Away All Boats (Pevney); The Unguarded Moment (Keller); Istanbul (Pevney)

1957  Night Passage (A. Mann and Neilson); Interlude (Sirk); My Man Godfrey (Koster)

1958  Voice in the Mirror (Keller); Cat on a Hot Tin Roof (Brooks); Some Came Running (Minnelli); A Stranger in My Arms (Kautner)

1959  A Hole in the Head (Capra); Never So Few (J. Sturges)

1960  Can-Can (W. Lang); All the Fine Young Cannibals (Anderson); Ocean’s Eleven (Milestone)

1961  Come September (Mulligan)

1962  Junco (Billy Rose’s Jumbo) (Walters); How the West Was Won (Hathaway)

1963  Come Blow Your Horn (Yorkin); The Prize (Robson)

1964  Robin and the Seven Hoods (Douglas) (+ assoc pr)

1965  Von Ryan’s Express (Robson); Marriage on the Rocks (Donohue) (+ pr)

1966  Assault on a Queen (Donohue) (+ assoc pr)

1967  In Like Flint (Douglas); Valley of the Dolls (Robson)

1968  The Impossible Years (Gordon)

1969  Marlone (Bogart); The Maltese Bippy (Panama)

1970  Move (Rosenberg)

Film as Associate Producer:

1965  None But the Brave (Sinatra)

Publications

By DANIELS: articles—

“Photography at 40,000 Feet,” in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), September 1955.

Sight and Sound (London), Autumn 1967.

On DANIELS: articles—

Foster, Frederick, on Six Bridges to Cross in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), February 1955.

Rowan, Arthur, on Night Passage in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), March 1957.
William H. Daniels gained considerable stature as a creative artist, even though he began his career by working well within the tradition of the Hollywood silents. In 1918, Daniels began working as cinematographer at Universal Studio, making serials and one-reel comedies. During the early 1920s he worked with Erich von Stroheim, whose obsession with detail is a Hollywood legend and who may very well have instilled in Daniels (although on a healthier scale) the eye for detail that was to become his own hallmark. The demands that von Stroheim made upon Daniels’s lighting and photographic skills were tremendous, given the time: outdoor shots in Death Valley, shots taken deep in a gold mine (according to Daniels, in 132-degree heat) or a junk-man’s cabin. Many of the shots over which Daniels took such great pains were cut out of the final version of Greed, but the discipline of shooting them left its mark on Daniels, who was about to face his greatest challenge—filming Greta Garbo.

Daniels achieved a major triumph in photographing Garbo in Flesh and the Devil. This cinematographer elegantly tailored his style, which called for the heavy use of gauzes and filters, to capture the sophisticated beauty of Garbo. He often lit Garbo with sidelights in half-tone, creating a chiaroscuro effect in which one half of the actress’s face is lit, the other in shadows. However, unlike the way Lee Garmes consistently lit Dietrich, Daniels varied his lighting—often showing great imagination by imposing effects that can only be called romantic, in the broadest sense. These effects often lend the subtlest detail, and Daniels felt that the invention of details was his contribution to the director’s vision.

It is no surprise that of the sound films made by Garbo, the most significant were photographed by William Daniels. In Anna Christie Daniels and Garbo achieved moments of real poetry—in spite of some stiffness caused by the relative newness of sound. In the adventurous film adaptation of Luigi Pirandello’s As You Desire Me, Daniels was again working with von Stroheim—as well as Garbo. Considering the difficulty of the original play, the finished result is fascinating. Queen Christina is a masterpiece. This film includes one rare moment of pure cinema: the famous scene showing Garbo moving around the room in the inn where she first knew love. Daniels freely admitted that the realistic elements were added under the influence of von Stroheim—the sources of light placed so as to seem as if the fire were the only source of light. The cinematographer, however, failed to acknowledge that the lighting and filming have an expressive side, which transcends the actual. In this scene, Daniels achieves the goal of conveying the drama through light as the director does through speech and action. In Anna Karenina we feel the lighting’s aptness both for the reality and the psyche of the film—whether it is a tryst of lovers in a sun-dappled, leafy arbor or a flashing light of a passing train on Garbo’s face. Even the virtuoso tracking shot over the officers’ banquet table has the dramatic purpose of creating the elegant brutality of Tsarist Russia—a world of contradictions that eventually crush the protagonist. Ninotchka, for all its shallowness, is a flawlessly photographed and lit apotheosis of cinematic Art Nouveau. It is these films’ magical mixture of Daniels and Garbo, of the actual and the glamorous, that represent the best of what is quintessentially Hollywood. It would be wrong to perceive Daniels merely as the best glamor director of the most glamorous of studios—MGM. He never lost touch with the deeper dramatic, psychological significance of a shot.

It is difficult after these films with Garbo to see Daniels’s career as anything other than a decline. However, he did achieve some successes. He won the Academy Award for The Naked City, an acknowledgment of the realistic side of his talent. Nevertheless, a romantic mixture of life and daydreams remained his forte. Pat and Mike is a sun-filled world of tennis courts and golf courses. Katharine Hepburn was never photographed in any other film better than she is in this 1952 romantic comedy. In Valley of the Dolls, mediocre as it is otherwise, the face of Barbara Parkins, especially in the scenes set in New England, calls forth something vaguely reminiscent of the old Daniels-Garbo magic. Daniels combined romanticism with realism; and, like all great portraitists, his ultimate achievement was only as good as the face and personality he rendered.

—Rodney Farnsworth

DARING, Mason

Films as Composer:

1980 Return of the Secaucus 7 (Sayles)
1983 Lianna (Sayles)
1984 The Brother from Another Planet (Sayles)
1985 Osa (Egorov); Key Exchange (Kellman)
1987 Matewan (Sayles) (+ ro as Picker)
1988 Jenny’s Song (Barzyk—for TV); Eight Men Out (Sayles)
1989 Day One (Sargent—for TV)
1990 Murder in Mississippi (Young—for TV); Little Vegas (Lang)
1991 Dogfight (Savoca); City of Hope (Sayles) (+ ro as Peter); Wild Hearts Can’t Be Broken (Miner)
1992 Passion Fish (Sayles) (+ musician)
1993 Stolen Babies (Laneniville—for TV); Ed and His Dead Mother (Bon Appetit, Mama) (Wacks) (+ musician); The Ernest Green Story (Laneniville—for TV)
1994 Getting Out (Korty—for TV); The Last Outlaw (Murphy—for TV); On Promised Land (Tewkesbury—for TV); The Secret of Roan Inish (Sayles); She Lives to Ride (Stone); The Old Curiosity Shop (Conner—mini, for TV)
1995 Letter to My Killer (Meyers—for TV)
1996 Hidden in America (Bell—for TV); Odyssey of Life (Agaton—for TV) (NOVA theme); The Great War (miniseries—for TV); Lone Star (Sayles); Einstein Revealed (Jones—for TV) (NOVA theme)
1997 Cold Around the Heart (Ridley); Men with Guns (Hombres armados) (Sayles) (+ musician); The Ripper (Meyer—for TV); Hitchhiking Vietnam: Letters From the Trail (Mul-ler); Prefontaine (James)
1998 The Opposite of Sex (Roos); Evidence of Blood (Mondshein—for TV); From the Earth to the Moon (mini—for TV)
1999 Limbo (Sayles); Music of the Heart (Craven); A Walk on the Moon (Goldwyn)
2000 Private Lies (Horman—for TV); Where the Heart Is (Williams); George Wallace: Settin’ the Woods on Fire (McCabe and Stekler)

Publications

By DARING: articles—

Daring, Mason, telephone conversations with Philip Kemp, Spring 2000.

On DARING: books—

On DARING: articles—

Anyone who knows the films of John Sayles will have heard a lot of Mason Daring’s music, though perhaps without realising it. Not because Daring’s scores are colourless or undistinguished—quite the reverse, indeed. But as a composer, he displays the chameleon ability to feel his way into a remarkably wide range of musical idioms, adopting their stylistic garb with uncanny fluency. The creator of the lilting Irish folk score of The Secret of Roan Inish also composed the zydeco dances for Passion Fish, the mountain music and Italian popular song of Matewan, the country and western, rhythm and blues, and Mexican folk music of Lone Star. There’s never any sense of pastiche in Daring’s scores; rather it is a matter of assimilation from within.

Daring may be unique among film composers in having entered the industry as a lawyer, though he studied music at college. “I was in a band signed to Columbia,” he explains, “and the deal fell through halfway through making the record. So in a panic I thought, I’ll go to law school. Then no sooner had I enrolled than I really started to play music and led a dual life for a few years, playing music live and producing records for people, and studying law and finally becoming a lawyer.” It was through his work as an entertainment lawyer that Daring met John Sayles. “I heard this fellow wanted to make his own movie and was looking for a lawyer. I said, ‘Forget it—those people never really make the movie and I never get paid.’ They said, ‘His name is John Sayles.’ Now I’d just read his novel Union Dues—one of the best books I’d ever read. I said, ‘Forget what I just said—I’ll hold his coat.’”

The film was Sayles’ first as director, Return of the Secaucus 7. Soon discovering his attorney’s other talents, Sayles invited Daring to contribute the film’s score. “I’d done music for a number of short films and commercials, so I said sure. And that was pretty much my last job in the law. I wasn’t really cut out for it, anyway.”

Setting up as a full-time composer, Daring went on to score all Sayles’ subsequent features except Baby It’s You. His reputation for versatility soon gained him other commissions, including five from Disney: two TV films, a Dickens mini-series, The Old Curiosity Shop, with Tom Courtenay and Peter Ustinov, and two features, Wild Hearts Can’t Be Broken and Prefontaine from Jared Leto and Amy Locane, makers of the groundbreaking documentary Hoop Dreams. He also scored a western, The Last Outlaw with Mickey Rourke, for Home Box Office (HBO), “because I wanted to do a film with a bunch of guys on horseback shooting each other. It was great fun, but one’s enough.”

Much of Daring’s work has been for PBS, including themes for the long-running shows Nova and Frontline, and a documentary, George Wallace: Setting the Woods on Fire, about the racist 1968 presidential candidate George Wallace. His longest project to date is the eight-hour KCET/BBC series The Great War (1996). “It was five months out of my life. But it was a challenge, and I thought it was great.”

Daring’s association with Sayles has now lasted through eleven movies. “John starts with the music much earlier. He and I talk about it even before he shoots. He knows exactly what he wants it to do.” Daring wholeheartedly endorses Sayles’ comment that “when it works movie music is like a natural voice, like the only sound the picture up there could possibly make.” “That’s exactly it,” he agrees, “the music should arise from the scene. I usually write source music for him, whereas almost everybody else buys the music in. It’s not just a budgetary thing, he wants it to have a certain effect.”

Daring dismisses the view that film music represents a compromise for the composer. “It’s not compromise,” he insists, “it’s opportunity.” He relishes the challenge of finding exactly the right instrument for a given film. For Matewan he unearthed a dobro, a modified guitar from the 1920s with an inset metal plate that makes the notes (as Sayles put it) “bend into a question at the end.” Much of the otherworldly flavour of Roan Inish (Daring’s own personal favourite among his scores) comes from the yearning wail of the Uilléan pipes, which he learned to play for the occasion. In Limbo the "voice of the film” was provided by an e-bow, an electromagnetic device held over an electric guitar to give “an eerie sound, like whale sounds or gulls’ cries.”

Limbo, set in Alaska, was less folk-based than Daring’s previous scores for Sayles. By contrast, Hombres armados (Men with Guns), Sayles’s first foreign-language movie, made intense use of folk idioms. The film is set in a fictional Latin American country “like Guatemala but it’s not. So my score’s intended to be pan-Hispanic music, from all around Central and South America. And almost every instrument is wooden, except for a little trumpet and French horn: Spanish guitar, marimba, wooden percussion. I didn’t set out to do that; it just happened that way.”

Recently Daring has moved into scoring big-budget mainstream films, starting with Wes Craven’s Music of the Heart and Matt Williams’ directorial debut Where the Heart Is. He describes both projects as “a pleasure from start to finish,” but plans to continue working on smaller independent films as well. At his studio in Marblehead, Massachusetts, near Boston, he produces his own music and acts as producer for a number of other artists, which involves being “a cross between the Wizard of Oz and a den mother.” He sees himself as being exceptionally lucky to have become someone “who actually gets paid to write music. It’s a wonderful job, but somebody has to do it.”

—Philip Kemp
DAWSON, Beatrice

Costume Designer. Nationality: British. Born: 1908. Career: Begin as costume designer in the theatre, 1945. Died: 16 April 1976.

Films as Costume Designer:

1948 Night Beat; London Belongs to Me (Dulcimer Street)
1949 Dear Mr. Prohack; Trottie True (The Gay Lady)
1950 State Secret (The Great Manhunt)
1951 The Reluctant Widow; Pandora and the Flying Dutchman
1952 Penny Princess; The Importance of Being Earnest; The Pickwick Papers
1954 Macbeth (for TV); Grand National Night (Wicked Wife)
1955 Footsteps in the Fog; Svengali; Dance Little Lady
1957 The Prince and the Showgirl
1958 A Tale of Two Cities
1960 Faces in the Dark; Expresso Bongo; Macbeth (for TV)
1961 The Full Treatment (Stop Me Before I Kill!) (Treatment); The Day the Earth Caught Fire (The Day the Sky Caught Fire)
1962 The Adventures of Sir Francis Drake (for TV); Waltz of the Toreadors (The Amorous General)
1963 The Servant; The L-Shaped Room
1964 The Beauty Jungle (Contest Girl); Woman of Straw
1965 The Intelligence Men (Spylarks); Life at the Top; Masquerade (Operation Masquerade) (A Shabby Tiger); Where the Spies Are 1966 Promise Her Anything; Modesty Blaise
1967 Accident
1968 Mrs. Brown, You’ve Got a Lovely Daughter; Guns in the Heather (The Secret of Boyne Castle) (Spy Busters); Only When I Larf
1969 The Assassination Bureau
1970 The Man Who Haunted Himself; The Last Grenade
1972 Zee and Co. (X, Y and Zee) (+ wardrobe designer)
1973 The Merchant of Venice (for TV); A Doll’s House
1974 Brief Encounter (for TV)
1976 The Bawdy Adventures of Tom Jones

Other Films:

1957 The Abominable Snowman of the Himalayas (The Snow Creature) (dress designer)

---

Beatrice “Bumble” Dawson, the prolific and versatile British costume designer, began her career in the theatre with a production of The Duchess of Malfi at the Haymarket Theatre in 1945. She started her film work with the 1948 postwar drama Night Beat for British Lion Film Corporation. Dawson continued working for both film and the stage throughout her career. With Trottie True (1949), the lavish costume musical about a Gaiety Girl who graduates from the stage to marriage with a peer, Dawson herself found the success that elevated her to the top rank of Britain’s designers. Actress Jean Kent, a lovely redhead, was the first of the screen beauties to be showcased by Dawson’s elegant costumes—the film itself is chiefly noted for its brilliant use of Technicolor.

Dawson’s next major assignment was Pandora and the Flying Dutchman, remarkable for its exquisite star, Ava Gardner, and it marked Dawson’s first collaboration with cinematographer Jack Cardiff. While a critical failure, Pandora gave Dawson true international exposure. Selected for Anthony Asquith’s definitive version of Wilde’s The Importance of Being Earnest, Dawson’s designs artfully used applied floral motifs made popular by British designer Norman Hartnell. Other prestige projects followed, with Dawson gaining a reputation for period costume at a time when Britain (particularly through the agency of J. Arthur Rank) used handsome, expensive prestige productions to penetrate the American market and boost Britain’s sagging film industry. Her work in the film adaptation of Dickens’ The Pickwick Papers garnered an Academy Award nomination for black and white costume design, and she would similarly produce memorable designs for the classic Tale of Two Cities in 1958. Reunited with cinematographer Jack Cardiff for The Prince and the Showgirl, her resourcefulness helped on an admittedly difficult shoot. One costume, a slinky beaded white gown, had to be replaced several times because Marilyn Monroe spilled food on the front repeatedly. Dawson remade the dress in two parts, with a front that could be quickly replaced if it was soiled.

Another significant and successful working relationship was with writer/director Val Guest, who directed Dance Little Lady (a ballet drama cashing in on the Red Shoes craze) and Expresso Bongo, meant to sell the career of rocker Cliff Richard (in the latter, some costumes were provided by Balmain). Dawson showed a flair for modern dress which served her well in the British film industry of the 1950s and 1960s, which began to turn from literary adaptations to working class dramas (Life at the Top, The L-Shaped Room) and later to sleek, pop-influenced confections like Masquerade and Modesty Blaise. Dawson worked nonstop throughout these years, in one high profile film after another, for eminent directors such as Joseph Losey (The Servant, Accident), as she and the British film industry were the beneficiaries of American investment in British films in the 1960s. Waltz of the Toreadors (starring Peter Sellers), an international success, showed her to be as skilful designing for color as she had been for black-and-white, and made her work better known to a wider audience. British fashion had finally come into its own, and 1968 found her back at work creating turn-of-the-century attire for the stylish hit The Assassination Bureau, where she dressed the willowy Diana Rigg, who looked as comfortable in Dawson’s creations as she did in a leather cat suit on television’s The Avengers. Despite their excellent work, British designers were occasionally snubbed by foreign stars: sometimes a star would require her own designer for a production, as was the case in I Could Go On Singing, where Judy Garland’s wardrobe was by Hollywood design diva Edith Head. For 1964’s otherwise unprepossessing Woman of Straw, Dawson received professional acclaim for her work with a BAFTA nomination for color costume and also one for black-and-white for Of Human Bondage. Star Gina Lollobrigida consented to make the film if she could be dressed by Dior, a common practice by European actresses used to acquiring a designer wardrobe in exchange for making a mediocre film.

Continuing her highly successful interpretation of 19th century period costume, Dawson created the wardrobe for 1973’s A Doll’s House (the version starring Claire Bloom—Jane Fonda and Joseph Losey’s version of the Ibsen play was made the same year) and received another BAFTA nomination. Her last film, the unfortunate
The Bawdy Adventures of Tom Jones (1976)—described as “a nudie musical” and “dull” by critics—at least allowed her to costume British actress Joan Collins in the role of highwaywoman Black Bess. Beatrice Dawson continued her theatre work (dressing stage great Dame Judith Anderson among many others), did films for television (the remake of Brief Encounter [1974]), and remained professionally active until her death at 68.

—Mary Hess

DAY, Richard

Art Director. Nationality: American. Born: Victoria, British Columbia, Canada, 9 May 1896; emigrated to the United States, 1918. Family: Married; six children. Career: Set decorator for Erich von Stroheim at MGM, Paramount, and United Artists during the 1920s; 1928–38—worked independently with Goldwyn and United Artists, then with 20th Century-Fox, 1939–43, and freelance. Awards: Academy Award for The Dark Angel, 1935; Dodsworth, 1936; How Green Was My Valley, 1941; This above All, 1942; My Gal Sal, 1942; A Streetcar Named Desire, 1951; On the Waterfront, 1954. Died: In Hollywood, 23 May 1972.

Films as Art Director:

1918 Blind Husbands (von Stroheim)
1919 The Devil’s Passkey (von Stroheim)
1922 Foolish Wives (von Stroheim)
1923 Merry-Go-Round (Julian and von Stroheim)
1925 Greed (von Stroheim); The Merry Widow (von Stroheim); Bright Lights (Leonard); The Only Thing (Conway); His Secretary (Henley)
1926 Beverley of Graustark (Franklin); Bardelys the Magnificent (K. Vidor)
1927 The Show (Browning); Mr. Wu (Nigh); Tillie the Toiler (Henley); The Unknown (Browning); Adam and Evil (Leonard); After Midnight (Bell); The Road to Romance (Robertson); Tea for Three (Leonard); The Student Prince in Old Heidelberg (Franklin); The Enemy (Niblo)
1928 The Divine Woman (Sjöström); Wickedness Preferred (Henley); Rose-Marie (Hubbard); The Big City (Browning); Circus Rookies (Sedgwick); Laugh, Clown, Laugh (Brenon); The Actress (Trelawny of the Wells) (Franklin); Forbidden Hours (Beaumont); Our Dancing Daughters (Beaumont); Excess Baggage (Cruze); While the City Sleeps (Conway); The Wedding March (von Stroheim); West of Zanzibar (Browning)
1929 The Bridge of San Luis Rey (Brabin); The Idle Rich (W. De Mille); A Man’s Man (Cruze); Wonder of Women (Brown); The Girl in the Show (Selwyn); The Unholy Night (L. Barrymore); The Hollywood Revue of 1929 (Reisner); Wise Girls (Kempy) (Hopper); The Thirteenth Chair (Browning); The Kiss (Feyder); Their Own Desire (Hopper); Devil May Care (Franklin); Untamed (Conway); Gus Edwards’ Song Revue (Edwards—short); Song Shop (Lee—short)
1930 Anna Christie (Brown) (also German and French versions directed by Feyder); In Gay Madrid (Leonard); Whoopie! (Freedland); Sins of the Children (The Richest Man in the World) (Wood); Madame Satan (C. DeMille); Le Spectre vert (Feyder—French version of The Unholy Night); The Devil to Pay (Fitzmaurice)
1931 The Front Page (Milestone); Indiscreet (McCarey); Street Scene (K. Vidor); The Unholy Garden (Fitzmaurice); Palmy Days (Sutherland); Arrowsmith (Ford)
1932 The Greeks Had a Word for Them (L. Sherman); Rain (Milestone); Cynara (K. Vidor); The Kid from Spain (McCary)
1933 Hallalujah I’m a Bum! (Hallalujah I’m a Tramp) (Milestone); Secrets (Borzage); The Bowery (Walsh); The Masquerader (Wallace); Roman Scandals (Tuttle); Gallant Lady (La Cava)
1934 Moulin Rouge (Lanfield); Nana (Arzner); The Affairs of Cellini (La Cava); Born to Be Bad (L. Sherman); The House of Rothschild (Werkner); The Last Gentleman (Lanfield); Bulldog Drummond Strikes Back (Del Ruth); Kid Millions (Del Ruth); Looking for Trouble (Wellman); We Live Again (Mamoulian); The Mighty Barnum (W. Lang)
1935 Folies Bergere (The Man from the Folies Bergere) (Del Ruth); Clive of India (Boleslawsky); Cardinal Richelieu (L. Sherman); Come and Get It (Hawks and Wyler); Beloved Enemy (Potter)
1936 Strike Me Pink (Taurog); These Three (Wyler); One Rainy Afternoon (Lee); Dodsworth (Wyler); The Gay Desperado (Mamoulian); Come and Get It (Hawks and Wyler); Beloved Enemy (Potter)
1937 Woman Chases Man (Blystone); Stella Dallas (K. Vidor); Dead End (Wyler); The Hurricane (Ford)
1938 The Goldwyn Follies (Marshall); The Cowboy and the Lady (Potter); The Adventures of Marco Polo (Mayo); Charlie Chan in Honolulu (Huston)
1939 The Little Princess (W. Lang); The Gorilla (Dwan); The Hound of the Baskervilles (Lanfield); The Return of the Cisco Kid (Leeds); Rose of Washington Square (Ratoff); Young Mr. Lincoln (Ford); Frontier Marshal (Dwan); Quick Millions (St. Clair); The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes (Werkner); Charlie Chan at Treasure Island (Foster); The Escape (Cortez); Hollywood Cavalcade (Cummings); Pack Up Your Troubles (We’re in the Army Now) (Huston); Drums along the Mohawk (Ford); Day-Time Wife (Ratoff); City of Darkness (Leeds); Swanee River (Lanfield); The Honeymoon’s Over (Forde); Everything Happens at Night (Cummings); City of Chance (Cortez)
1940 Little Old New York (H. King); The Blue Bird (W. Lang); He Married His Wife (Del Ruth); The Grapes of Wrath (Ford); The Man Who Wouldn’t Talk (Burton); Charlie Chan in Panama (Foster); Star Dust (W. Lang); Johnny Apollo (Hathaway); Shooting High (Green); I Was an Adventuress (Ratoff); Lilian Russell (Cummings); Girl in 313 (Cortez); Earthbound (Pichel); Four Sons (Mayo); Manhattan Heartbeat (Burton); Maryland (H. King); The Man I Married
Richard Day with Ingrid Bergman

(Pichel); Girl from Avenue A (Brower); The Return of Frank James (F. Lang); Pier 13 (Forde); Young People (Dwan); Charlie Chan at the Wax Museum (Shores); Yesterday’s Heroes (Leeds); The Gay Caballero (Brower); Down Argentine Way (Cummings); The Great Profile (W. Lang); The Mark of Zorro (Mamoulian); Street of Memories (Traube); Tin Pan Alley (W. Lang); Youth Will Be Served (Brower); Murder over New York (Lachman); Jennie (Burton); Chad Hanna (H. King); Hudson’s Bay (Pichel); Michael Shayne, Private Detective (Forde)

1941

For Beauty’s Sake (Traube); Remember the Day (H. King); Romance of the Rio Grande (Leeds); Western Union (F. Lang); Tobacco Road (Ford); That Night in Rio (Cummings); The Great American Broadcast (Mayo); Blood and Sand (Mamoulian); The Cowboy and the Blonde (McCarey); Man Hunt (F. Lang); A Very Young Lady (Schuster); Moon over Miami (W. Lang); The Bride Wore Crutches (Traube); Accent on Love (McCarey); Dance Hall (Pichel); Dressed to Kill (Forde); Charley’s Aunt (Charley’s American Aunt) (Mayo); Wild Geese Calling (Brahm); Private Nurse (Burton); Sun Valley Serenade (Humberstone); Belle Starr (Cummings); Charlie Chan in Rio (Lachman); We Go Fast (McGann); The Last of the Duanes (Tinling); Man at Large (Forde); A Yank in the R.A.F. (H. King); Great Guns (Banks); Riders of the Purple Sage (Tinling); Weekend in Havana (W. Lang); Rise and Shine (Dwan); How Green Was My Valley (Ford); Swamp Water (The Man Who Came Back) (Renoir)

1942

The Lone Star Ranger (Tinling); Son of Fury (Cromwell); Roxie Hart (Wellman); Song of the Islands (W. Lang); Rings on Her Fingers (Mamoulian); My Gal Sal (Cummings); The Man Who Wouldn’t Die (Leeds); It Happened in Flatbush (McCarey); Whispering Ghosts (Werker); Moontide (Mayo); The Magnificent Dope (W. Lang); Through Different Eyes (Loring); The Postman Didn’t Ring (Schuster); Ten Gentlemen from West Point (Hathaway); This above All (Litvak); Footlight Serenade (Ratoff); A-Haunting We Will Go (Werker); Little Tokyo, U.S.A. (Brower); Orchestra Wives (Mayo); The Loves of Edgar Allan Poe (Lachman); Berlin Correspondent (Forde); Careful, Soft Shoulders (Garrett); Just Off Broadway (Leeds); Iceland (Katina) (Humberstone); Girl Trouble (Schuster);
Richard Day put on the screen some of the seediest sets in Hollywood history. The constructions for Dead End so appalled the producer Samuel Goldwyn that the mogul wondered why his money couldn’t have been used to build a better slum! Despite his proclivity for suggesting human blight, Day was equally at ease designing for drawing-room dramas and musical extravaganzas. What unities can be found in such versatility?

Day’s film career began with his apprenticeship to director Erich von Stroheim, who was possessed by a violent forcefulness akin to the German Expressionists. Attracted to fantasy and symbolism in spirit, he belonged with the German social realists such as George Grosz. Yet von Stroheim’s meticulous attention to detail recalled the American realists (such as Thomas Eakins), with their fascination for everyday minutiae. Although Day absorbed these traditions, he equally shared the sensibilities of the American regionalist school. His classically balanced urban scenes recalled Edward Hopper’s works, serene even in their turmoil. His humble, rural environments interpreted the countryside with the same poignancy found in paintings by Thomas Hart Benton.

Day’s films were lush with details. His expressions of poverty included every crack in the wall, thick coats of dust, peeling paint, and the fading floral wallpaper of an out-of-date print. Stairways creaked, and laundry bloomed the sky like a Piranesi prison. On the other hand, for the old-world wealthy, Day gilt grand staircases with elaborate ornamentation. His swags of velvet drapery regally dressed the richly veined marble colonnades. The “moderne chic” danced on floors of patent leather-black gleam. White multiplatform steps, kaleidoscopic mirrors, and Deco glass sculpture well served the slick set’s “swells.” Despite their apparent disparities, each style shared Day’s love of the particular.

In the 1950s the “new breed” of actors and directors found Day’s work well suited to their needs. Day could capture the brutal snap and underlying sentiment dominating the works of such directors as Elia Kazan. As always, Day invested the commonplace with poetic symbolism. His intensely ambient spaces suggested inner psychologies—a critical factor in artistic works of the time. However, despite Day’s topicality, his modus operandi had barely changed since his collaborations with von Stroheim.

Day achieved richness through magnification of the specific. Amazing details, he combined visual intricacy with depth of content. As a result, his tragic visions spoke with the boldest tones. Day filled his saddest images with a poetry that von Stroheim denied, thus giving his viewer a bittersweet sense of hope.

—Edith C. Lee

---

de ALMEIDA, Acácio

Cinematographer. Nationality: Portuguese. Born: Acácio Augusto de Almeida in Souto, 29 June 1938. Education: Studied cinematography at the Centro Universitário de Lisboa, 1963–65. Career: Assistant to cinematographers Jean Rabier and others; 1967—first film as cinematographer, Sete Balas para Selma; 1969—co-founder, the cooperative Centro Português de Cinema; 1980s—associated as cameraman on several films by Raúl Ruiz; also associated with the producer Paulo Branco.
Films as Cinematographer:

1965  Ilhas Encantadas (Vilardebó) (asst); Domingo à Tarde (Macedo) (asst)
1967  Sete Balas para Selma (Macedo)
1968  A Crue de Ferro (do Canto) (asst)
1970  O Cerco (Telles)
1971  Queridíssimos Verdugos (Patiño)
1972  O Passado e o Presente (Past and Present) (de Oliveira); A Sagrada Familia (Monteiro); India (Faria)
1974  Meus Amigos (Telles); Brandos Costumes (Santos)
1975  As armas e o Povo (doc) (co); Deus, Pátria, Autoridade (Simões); Que Farei Eu Com Esta Espada (Monteiro); Gente da Praia da Vieira (Vilardebó) (asst)
1976  Trás-os-Montes (Reis and Cordeiro); Máscaras (Delgado); Continuarm a Viver (Telles); A Lei da Terra—Alentejo 76 (Grupo Zero)
1977  Veredas (Monteiro); Que fait-on ce dimanche (Essid)
1978  Histórias Selvagens (Campos)
1980  Bom Povo Português (Simões); Passagem ou a Meio Caminho (Mello)
1981  Dina e Django (Nordland); Conversa Acabada (Botelho); Silvestre (Monteiro)
1982  A Ilha dos Amores (Rocha) (co); Gestos e Fragmentos (Santos); Aspern (de Gregorio); Ana (Reis and Cordeiro); A Estrangeira (Grilo); Le Cercle des passions (D’Anna)
1983  Dans la ville blanche (In the White City) (Tanner); Vidas (Telles); Point de juite (Ruiz); La Ville des pirates (City of Pirates) (Ruiz)
1984  Ninguém Duas Vezes (Mello); Maine-Océan (Rozier); Notre mariage (Sarmiento); Les Destins de Manoel (Ruiz); Jusqu’à la nuit (Martiny); Vertiges (Laurent)
1985  Um Adeus Português (Botelho); L’Ile au trésor (Treasure Island) (Ruiz); Dans un miroir (Ruiz); Régime sans pain (Ruiz)
1986  A Flor do Mar (Monteiro); Mammane (Ruiz); Balada da Praia dos Cães (Fonseca and Costa); Agosta (Mello); Les Mendiants (Jacquot)
1988  El placer de matar (The Pleasure of Killing) (Rotaeta); Étoile (Ballet) (Del Monte); La Maschera (The Mask) (Infascelli)
1989  A rosa de area (Desert Rose) (Cordeiro) (co-pr); O Sangue (Costa); Il Maestro (The Maestro) (Hänsel)
1990  Une Flamme dans mon coeur (A Flame in My Heart) (Tanner); Terra Fria (Cold Land) (Campos) (+ pr)
1992  Zappa di pesce (Infascelli)
1995  Pandora (da Cunha Telles); La Leyenda de Balthasar el Castrado (Miñon); Fugueuses (Trintignant)
1996  Un Asunto privado (Arias)
1998  A Tempestade da Terra (Fernando D’Almeida e Silva); Os Mutantes (The Mutants) (Villaverde); A Sombra dos Abutres (In the Shadow of the Vultures) (Veira) (+ exec pr); L’Inconnu de Strasbourg (Sarmiento)
1999  Yerma (Távora); *Mal

Film as Cameraman:

1981  Le Territoire (The Territory) (Ruiz)
1987  O Bobo (The Jester)

Publications:

On de ALMEIDA: articles—

* * *

The most notable aspects of the photography of Acácio de Almeida are his intuitions and his craftsmanship. Because of the noncommercial nature of the directors he has worked with (Manoel de Oliveira, Raúl Ruiz, Alain Tanner, António Reis, and César Monteiro, among others), de Almeida’s work is determined by aesthetic imperatives. In almost all his films, for example, de Almeida functions as both director of photography and camera operator, paying equal attention to lighting and framing each shot. The phrase “‘cinematographic technique’ applies perfectly to his sensibility and to his intimate style associated with the appearance of objects in the frame and with fast film sensitive to a minimum of light.

Since Trás-os-Montes (1976), a film by António Reis and Margarida Cordeiro vigorously defended by Cahiers du Cinéma, de Almeida’s photography testifies to his taste for low-key lighting and the utilization of a single light source. In the case of Trás-os-Montes, his use of a candle’s flame has suggested the influence of the painter Georges de la Tour. Not without some irony, de Almeida rejects the idea of any cultural influence on his work, noting that he grew up in a rural area without electric light.

There is, however, an influence that de Almeida has not rejected—that of Nestor Almendros who photographed François Truffaut’s L’Amour en fuite in 1978. De Almeida shares with Almendros the same preoccupation—to discover in nature and daily life inspiration for his light. The lighting in de Almeida’s films, as in the European films of Almendros, always seek to reconstruct and represent the principles of natural light.

Notwithstanding having begun his career at the peak of the “cinema novo,” an aesthetic movement that developed in Portugal under the influence of the Nouvelle Vague and the South American cinema novo, de Almeida can only vaguely be linked to the movement. For de Oliveira’s O Passado e o Presente, for instance, situated on the aesthetic edge of the movement, de Almeida used high-key lighting and complex sequence shots, neither of which corresponds to the principal characteristics of cinema novo.

It is with Trás-os-Montes, a film situated between fiction and documentary, that de Almeida finds his style. Alain Tanner’s Dans la ville blanche, a film which contrasts the brilliant light of Lisbon with the ‘‘soft lights’’ of the interiors, begins de Almeida’s European series, which attains its highest point in his collaboration with Raúl Ruiz, a Chilean filmmaker exiled in France.

The “Raúl Ruiz-Paulo Branco system” of filmmaking, in which de Almeida is a continuing figure, lends itself to a permanent inventive delirium that attempts to explore to the fullest the magical outpouring of cinema. In this context, de Almeida’s photography gains an extraordinary liberty, evident in the theater of shadows in La Ville des pirates and in the games of light, contrasting dull and vivid tones, in L’Ile au trésor. In these films, without abandoning realism, de Almeida’s photography shows its magic as never before.

—M. S. Fonseca
DEAN, Basil

Films as Producer and Director:

1928 The Return of Sherlock Holmes
1930 Escape (+ sc); Birds of Prey (The Perfect Alibi) (+ sc)
1932 Nine till Six; The Impassive Footman (Woman in Bondage); Looking at the Bright Side (co-d + co-sc)
1933 Loyalties
1934 Autumn Crocus (+ sc); Sing As We Go

1935 Lorna Doone; Look Up and Laugh
1936 Whom the Gods Love (Mozart)
1937 The Show Goes On (+ co-sc)

Films as Producer:

1931 A Honeymoon Adventure (Footsteps in the Night) (Elvey) (+ co-sc); Sally in Our Alley (Elvey)
1932 The Water Gipsies (Elvey) (+ co-sc); The Sign of Four (Lee and Cutts); Love on the Spot (Cutts)
1933 Three Men in a Boat (Cutts); Skipper of the Osprey (Walker)
1934 Love, Life, and Laughter (Elvey); Java Head (Ruben)
1935 No Limit (Banks); Midshipman Easy (Men of the Sea) (Reed) (co)
1936 Queen of Hearts (Banks); The Lonely Road (Scotland Yard Commands) (Flood)
1937 Feather Your Nest (Beaudine)
1938 I See Ice (Kimmins); It’s in the Air (George Takes the Air) (Kimmins)

Other Films:

1928 The Constant Nymph (Brunel) (co-sc)
1933 The Constant Nymph (d + co-sc)
1937 The First and the Last (21 Days; 21 Days Together) (d)
1938 Penny Paradise (co-pr + co-sc)

Publications

By DEAN: books—

The Repertory Theatre (lecture), Liverpool, 1911.
With Barry V. Jackson, Fifinella (play), London, 1912.
With Margaret Kennedy, The Constant Nymph (play), London, 1926.
With Margaret Kennedy, Come with Me (play), London, 1928.
The Theatre in Reconstruction, Tonbridge, Kent, 1945.
Hassan (play), London, 1951.

By DEAN: articles—

Picturegoer (London), July 1930.

On DEAN: article—

* * *

A major figure in British theatrical history, Basil Dean is all too often overlooked in the study of British film history. His fame as the creator of Ealing Studios is overshadowed by the importance placed on his successor, Michael Balcon. Because of the general opinion that British cinema failed to exist on an international level prior to Alexander Korda’s production of The Private Life of Henry VIII in 1933, Dean’s work in the development of a major studio, Associated Talking Pictures (arguably the first British company to be incorporated after the coming of sound), and its collaborative activities with the American RKO Radio Pictures, has been neglected. (Coincidentally, in 1937, Korda and Dean worked together, far from amicably, on 21 Days, which Dean had originally produced on the stage, and which was intended as a starring vehicle for Laurence Olivier and Vivien Leigh.)

More importantly, Basil Dean has not received recognition for understanding the screen potential of British music hall stars and for his work in developing two of those stars, Gracie Fields and George Formby, into the most popular British screen personalities of the 1930s. Dean’s screen career led directly from his work in the theatre, as he wrote the screenplay for Margaret Kennedy’s The Constant Nymph and directed John Galsworthy’s Escape, both of which had been highspots in his stage career. Basil Dean further learned the rudiments of motion picture production from a trip to New York, where he directed one feature for Paramount, The Return of Sherlock Holmes, a surprisingly competent production for one unfamiliar with American production techniques.

In 1930 Somerset Maugham had advised Dean that “it would be grand if the pictures ceased to be an outrage to the intelligence of an educated person.” Dean sought to heed Maugham’s suggestion, initially by adapting works by A.A. Milne and John Galsworthy, among others, for the screen. Later, he realized that British films had the potential for depicting the working-class view of British society. The theatre belonged to the middle and upper classes. The screen belonged to the masses. He developed two North Country comedy performers, Gracie Fields and George Formby, and used their personas to show the grit and determination, the humor and pathos of working-class society. Fields and Formby were already familiar to performers, Gracie Fields and George Formby, and used their personas to belong to the masses. He developed two North Country comedy of life in the Lancashire cotton mills. It is one of the finest social realistic portraits of North Country British working-class society.

During the years that Dean was a producer, he helped further the careers of many individuals at Ealing studios, notably David Lean (then an editor), Carol Reed, Thorold Dickinson, and Basil Dearden. In many respects, his films from 1931–38 are the forerunners of the popular Ealing comedies of the late 1940s and early 1950s. Indeed, Dean claimed up to his death that his Ealing comedies, which relied more on personalities than situations, had stood the test of time better than those of his highly promoted Ealing heir, Michael Balcon.

—Anthony Slide

D’EAUBONNE, Jean

Art Director. Nationality: French. Born: Jean Adrien D’Eaubonne in Talence, 8 March 1903. Education: Trained as sculptor and painter with Antoine Bourdelle, Paris. Career: Painter and poster designer; assistant to Lazare Meerson and Jean Perrier on films in the late 1920s, then art director; 1940–45—lived in Switzerland; 1957–68—lived in Hollywood. Awards: Venice Festival prize, for La Ronde, 1950. Died: In July 1970.

Films as Art Director/Production Designer:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1928</td>
<td>Le Perroquet vert (Milva)</td>
<td>(asst)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Tarakanova (Bernard)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Le Sang d’un poète (The Blood of a Poet)</td>
<td>(Cocteau);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Le Défenseur (Ryder)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>La Ronde des heures (Ryder); Azais (Hervil)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>Coup de roule (de la Cour)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>Le Juif polonais (Kemm)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>Coquercigrole (Berthomieu)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>Pour un sou d’amour (Grémillon) (co);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>Amour et discipline (Kemm)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>Le Truc au Brésilien</td>
<td>(Cavalcanti);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>Les Vignes du seigneur</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>L’Amour et la veine (Banks)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>Mademoiselle Josette ma femme (Berthomieu);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>Mannequins</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>Ame de clown (Noé and Didier);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>L’Ami Fritz (de Baroncelli);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>Coralie et Cie (Cavalcanti);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>La Femme idéale (Berthomieu)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>Maître Bolbec et son mari (Natanson);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>Le Petit Jacques (Roudes);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>La Reine de Biarritz (Toulout);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>L’Aristo (Berthomieu)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>Le Clown Bux (Natanson);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>Les Beaux Jours (M. Allègre);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>Le Chant de l’amour (Roudes);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>Marie des angoisses (Bernheim)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>Le Roman d’un spahi (Bernheim);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>La Flamme (Berthomieu);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>Jenny (Carré);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>L’Amant de Madame Vidal (Berthomieu);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>Anne-Marie (Bernard)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>La Chaste Suzanne (The Girl in the Taxi) (Berthomieu);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>Police mondaine (Bernheim and Chamborant);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>L’Habit vert (Richebé);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>Un Déjeuner de soleil (Cravenne);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>Légions d’honneur (Gleize);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>L’Homme sans nom (Vallée)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Les Gens du voyage (Feyder);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Le Train pour Venise (Berthomieu); Carrefour (Bernhardt);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Trois valse (Berthomieu);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Un de la Canebière (Pujol);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Les Gangsters du Chateau d’If (Pujol)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>Nuit de décembre (Bernhardt);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>L’Enfer des anges (Christian-Jaque) (designs);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>De Mayerling à Sarajevo (Mayerling to Sarajevo) (Ophuls)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1942</td>
<td>La Loi du nord (Feyder)—produced 1939;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1942</td>
<td>Une Femme disparait (Feyder)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1945</td>
<td>Étoile sans lumière (Blistène)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1946</td>
<td>Macadam (Backstreets of Paris) (Blistène and Feyder);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1946</td>
<td>La Foire aux chimères (Chenal)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>Black Magic (Caglioniostro) (Ratoff)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1948</td>
<td>La Chartreuse de parme (Christian-Jaque);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1948</td>
<td>L’Impasse des Deux Anges (M. Tourneur);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1948</td>
<td>Hans le marin (Villiers)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>Le Paradis des pilotes perdus (Lapmin);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>Je n’aime que toi (Montazel);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>Pas de week-end pour notre amour (Montazel);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>Lady Paname (Jeanson)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>Orphée (Cocteau);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>La Ronde (Ophuls);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>La Dame de Chez Maxim’s (Aboulker) (designs);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>Ma pomme (Sauvajon);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>Olivia (Audry)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>Nuits de Paris (Baum)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Le Plaisir (House of Pleasure) (Ophuls);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Casque d’or (Jacques Becker);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Plaisirs de Paris (Baum);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>La Fête à Henriette (Duviivier);</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>‘Lysistrata’ ep. of Destinées (Daughters of Destiny) (Christian-Jaque)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

D’EAUBONNE WRITERS AND PRODUCTION ARTISTS, 4th EDITION
moved to the Jacques Haik studios as a now fully experienced production designer and art director. This thorough grounding in the fundamentals of his craft was invaluable to a career that involved, over four decades, an association with some 70 directors and work on more than 130 films, mainly in European studios but also in Hollywood. His apprenticeship to filmmaking was completed as assistant to Jean Perrier and then to Lazare Meerson for Feyder’s Les Nouveaux Messieurs.

If many of d’Eaubonne’s multifarious films are unremarkable, several rightfully merit critical recognition and, in 1950, his magnificient design for Max Ophüls’s La Ronde was duly rewarded at the Venice Film Festival. Essentially practical, resourceful and unassuming, Jean d’Eaubonne calmly coped with last-minute script changes necessitating alterations to already constructed sets. Such was the case with Madame de . . ., where Ophüls’s revisions required a balcony for the general’s quarters, previously deemed below street level. In Lola Montès tact and lateral thinking were required when the innkeeper, refusing to see his inn repainted brick red, eventually allowed a temporary cladding of red tiles. Sadly, d’Eaubonne discarded most of his models and production designs.

D’Eaubonne’s work first came to notice with Cocteau’s Le Sang d’un poète, where his understanding of the plastic arts informed a conception in which statues were but part of the real world. The spare, but highly suggestive design, derived from an intimate knowledge of Cocteau’s work, served to perfection the poet-filmmaker’s vision. This fertile relationship was renewed 20 years later when Cocteau returned to the theme of creativity with Orphée. Once again d’Eaubonne responded brilliantly, providing everyday locations which merged magically with trompe l’oeil sets suggesting the otherworldliness of the princess: the disquieting, ruinous house with its glittering theaters, extravagant restaurants, and palatial apartments, magnificent ballrooms,palatial apartments, magnificent ballrooms, and misty riverside settings, was followed by an even more lavish design for Madame de . . ., where palatial apartments, magnificent ballrooms, and sweeping staircases set the tone of opulence and frivolity. In Le Plaisir, striking contrasts were achieved between the ornate artificiality of Maupassant’s Maison Tellier brothel and the idyllic, redemptive countryside locations for Madame’s day out with her girls.

After the liberation the resuscitation of the French film industry led to big-budget productions in heavily subsidized studios. Typical was Christian-Jaque’s version of La Chartreuse de Parme for which d’Eaubonne designed impressively complex and costly sets. The golden decade of the fifties, with an emphasis on high production values, saw d’Eaubonne’s creative talents flourish, particularly in his all-important association with Ophüls. D’Eaubonne’s stylized Vienna for La Ronde, with its glittering theaters, extravagant restaurants, and misty riverside settings, was followed by an even more lavish design for Madame de . . ., where palatial apartments, magnificent ballrooms, and sweeping staircases set the tone of opulence and frivolity. In Le Plaisir, striking contrasts were achieved between the ornate artificiality of Maupassant’s Maison Tellier brothel and the idyllic, redemptive countryside locations for Madame’s day out with her girls.

Publications

On D’EAUBONNE: articles—

* * *

After studying under the sculptor Antoine Bourdelle in Paris, Jean d’Eaubonne initially found work at the Epinay studios as a publicity artist and scenery painter before graduating to set design. He later

1953 Rue de l’Estrapade (Jacques Becker); Jeunes mariés (Grangier); Le Mystère du Palace Hôtel (Steckel and Berna); Madame de . . . (The Earrings of Madame De . . .) (Ophüls); Cet homme est dangereux (Sacha); Julietta (M. Allégret)
1954 Touchez pas au Grisbi (Grisbi) (Jacques Becker); Man ‘zelle Nitoche (Y. Allégret); Scènes de ménage (Berthomieu); Bonnes à taer (Decoin); Les Amants du Tage (Verneuil)
1955 Marianne de ma jeunesse (Duvivier); Lola Montès (The Sins of Lola Montès) (Ophüls); L’Affaire des poisons (Decoin); Le Secret de Soeur Angèle (Joannon)
1956 Le Long des trottoirs (Moguy); Paris-Plateau Hôtel (Verneuil); L’Homme aux clés d’or (Joannon); La Mariée est trop belle (Gaspard-Huit); Bonsoir Paris, bonjour l’amour (Baum); OSS 117 n’est pas mort (Sacha); Jusqu’au dernier (Billon)
1957 Amère victoire (Bitter Victory) (N. Ray); Une Manche et la belle (Verneuil); Quand la femme s’en mêle (Y. Allégret); Montparnasse 19 (Modigliani of Montparnasse) (Jacques Becker)
1958 The Reluctant Debutante (Minnelli); Christine (Gaspard-Huit); Nina (Boyer)
1959 Ein Engel auf Erden (Angel on Earth) (Radvanyi); Suspense au 2e Bureau (de St. Maurice)
1960 Katja (The Magnificent Sinner) (Siodmak); Les Magiciennes (Double Deception) (Friedman); Crack in the Mirror (Fleischer); The Big Gamble (Fleischer)
1961 Madame Sans-Gêne (Madame) (Christian-Jaque)
1962 L’Affaire Nina B (The Nina B Affair) (Siodmak); Love Is a Ball (Swift)
1963 Charade (Donen)
1964 Paris When It Sizzles (Quine); Le Repas des fauves (Christian-Jaque)
1965 Lady L (Ustinov) (co); Cartes sur table (Franco)
1966 Gala (I and My Lovers) (Lautner); Avec les peaux des autres (Deray)
1967 Fleur d’oseille (Lautner); La Pacha (Lautner)
1968 Custer of the West (Siodmak) (co); Girl on a Motorcycle (Cardiff) (co); Johnny Banco (Y. Allégret); Faut pas prendre les enfants du Bon Dieu pour des canards sauvages (Audiard)
1969 Une Veuve en or (Audiard); Sur la route de Salina (Lautner)
1970 Elle doit pas, elle fume pas, elle drague pas, mais ... elle cause! (Audiard); Sapho (Farrel); Laisse aller, c’est une valse (Lautner); Le Cri du cormoran le soir, au-dessus des jongues (Audiard)
1971 Le Drapeau noir flotte sur la marmite (Audiard)
Similarly, in Lola Montès, the heroine’s giddy, tinsel world of the circus is set against the more ordered and substantial setting of the Bavarian palace. In each undertaking, d’Eaubonne deftly satisfied through location and set design, Ophüls’s expressionist style.

In the fifties d’Eaubonne was frequently required to create a studio Paris and this he largely achieved without slipping into lazy, well-worn clichés. For Jeanson’s Lady Paname, he provided the capital of the belle époque, while for Jacques Becker he created a turn-of-the-century Paris to frame the tragic love story, Casque d’Or. Thereafter came fashionable domestic settings for the latter director’s light-hearted comedy, Rue de l’Estrapade, the bohemian milieu of cafés and studios for Modigliani’s final days in Montparnasse 19, while in the seminal gangster film Touchez pas au Grisbi, d’Eaubonne served the narrative with luxurious apartments and expensive nightclubs. With Baum came lightweight films exploiting the city’s romantic image: Nuits de Paris; Plaisirs de Paris, and Bonjour Paris, bonjour l’amour.

The sixties saw American and British interest in Parisian locations. For Donen’s thriller Charade, the scenic quais, the colonnade of the Palais Royal, and the Comédie Française were deployed, while for Quine’s Paris When It Sizzles, the narrative with luxurious apartments and expensive nightclubs. For Donen’s thriller Charade, the scenic quais, the colonnade of the Palais Royal, and the Comédie Française were deployed, while for Quine’s Paris When It Sizzles, the narrative with luxurious apartments and expensive nightclubs.

More exotic locations were also d’Eaubonne’s remit. For Veurnel’s Les Amants du Tage, colorful Portuguese beaches provided the essential romantic atmosphere; for Siodmark’s Civil War spectacular, Custer of the West, d’Eaubonne served the capital of the American production also included Nicholas Ray’s Benghazi and Studios for Modigliani’s final days in Montparnasse 19, while in the seminal gangster film Touchez pas au Grisbi, d’Eaubonne served the narrative with luxurious apartments and expensive nightclubs. With Baum came lightweight films exploiting the city’s romantic image: Nuits de Paris; Plaisirs de Paris, and Bonjour Paris, bonjour l’amour.

The range and diversity of d’Eaubonne’s portfolio confirm not only his eclecticism but also his acknowledged professionalism. Directors and producers recognized in d’Eaubonne a gifted, self-effacing craftsman who would skillfully meet their needs, whether through spare, suggestive sets for the experimental Cocteau, solid, detailed constructions and atmospheric locations for the poetic realists such as Carné or Feyder, or though lavish theatrical designs for the expressionist Ophüls.

—R. F. Cousins

Films as Producer or Coproducer:

1955 Muerte de un ciclista (Death of a Cyclist; Age of Infidelity) (Bardem)
1956 Calle Mayor (The Lovemaker) (Bardem)
1957 La Passe du diable (Dupont and Schöndörffer)
1958 Ramuntscho (Schöndörffer)
1959 Pecheur d’Islande (Schöndörffer)
1960 Adieu Philippine (Rozier); A bout de souffle (Breathless) (Godard)
1961 Lola (Demy); Cléo de 5 à 7 (Cleo from 5 to 7) (Varda); Une Femme est une femme (A Woman Is a Woman) (Godard)
1962 L’Oeil du malin (The Third Lover) (Chabrol)
1963 Léon Morin—prêtre (Melville); Landru (Bluebeard) (Chabrol); Le Petit Soldat (Godard—produced 1960); Le Doulos—The Finger Man (Melville); Le Mépris (Contempt) (Godard); Les Carabiniers (Godard); Les Baisers (Berri and others)
1964 La Chance et l’amour (Tavernier and others); Le Vampire de Düsseldorf (Hossein); La 317e Section (Schöndörffer)
1965 Pierrot le fou (Godard); Marie-Chantal contre le Dr. Kha (Chabrol)
1966 Objectif 500 millions (Schöndörffer); Un Choix d’assassins (Fourastié); Le Ligne de démarcation (Line of Demarcation) (Chabrol); Made in U.S.A. (Godard); Suzanne Simonin, la religieuse de Denis Diderot (La Religieuse; The Nun) (Rivette)
1967 La Collectioneuse (Rohmer); Lamiel (Fourastié)
1968 L’Amour fou (Rivette); 48 heures d’amour (St. Laurent)
1969 Le Petit Bournai (Toublanc-Michel)
1970 Le Mur de l’Atlantique (Camus)
1972 Le Bar de la fourche (Levent)
1973 Prêtres interdits (de la Patellière); Gross Paris (Grangier)
1975 Numéro deux (Godard); Les Fougères bleues (Schöndörffer)
1977 Le Crabe-Tambour (Schöndörffer)
1979 Tout dépends des filles (Fabre); La Légion saute sur Kolwezi (Coutard)
1980 Le Cheval d’orgueil (Chabrol)
1982 L’Honneur d’un capitaine (Schöndörffer)

Publications

By de BEAUREGARD: articles—

Film Quarterly (Berkeley, California), Spring 1967.

On de BEAUREGARD: articles—

Film Français (Paris), 2 March 1982.
Film Français (Paris), 1 October 1982.
Cinémotagraphie (Paris), May 1984.

de BEAUREGARD, Georges

* * *

Georges de Beauregard is best known as one of the producers of the French New Wave filmmakers of the late 1950s and early 1960s. His adventurous spirit and enthusiasm for negotiation and financial risk corresponded to the audacious confidence of the generation of directors, headed by Jean-Luc Godard, Claude Chabrol, and François Truffaut, that swept aside the classicism of the “tradition of quality” and established a new, more vital form of filmmaking. In a sense, the New Wave was at least as great a revolution in production as in direction; the small-budget films of Georges de Beauregard (like those produced by Pierre Braunberger), shot on location and without stars, put an end to the dominance of French cinema by the solid yet somewhat stale work of studio-bound directors such as Claude Autant-Lara, Christian-Jaque, and Jean Delannoy. A fresher, more personal style of filmmaking developed, in which the camera was assimilated to the pen of a writer and the director, assuming virtual total control of his or her work, could become an “auteur.”

Even though de Beauregard was not the first producer of the films of the young generation of directors to emerge from the ranks of the critics of the Cahiers du Cinéma (Chabrol’s Le Beau Serge and Les Cousins, and Truffaut’s Les Quatre Cents Coups had already proved the financial credibility of small-budget filmmaking), his courage was nevertheless great in producing the first full-length feature films of Jean-Luc Godard (A bout de souffle), Jacques Demy (Lola), Jacques Rozier (Adieu Philippine), and Agnès Varda (Cléo de 5 à 7), and later such contentious works as Godard’s second film, Le Petit Soldat (banned until 1963) and Jacques Rivette’s Suzanne Simonin, la religieuse de Denis Diderot. This courage was backed by a strong faith in his directors and in the need for innovation in the French cinema. For de Beauregard, confidence in the originality of ideas, rather than youth for the sake of youth, often determined his decisions to produce; he was equally ready, for example, to produce Le Doulos, a highly personal thriller by Jean-Pierre Melville who had been directing feature films since 1947, as the first works of the impressive Cahiers du Cinéma critics, or, in Les Baisers, a film composed of sketches, to reveal the talents of five new directors at once: Bertrand Tavernier, Charles Bitsch, and J-F Hauduroy.

The great achievement of de Beauregard was that this flair for newness and vitality did not operate in terms of an esoteric underground marginality, but most often corresponded to what the general public wanted. Maintaining an awareness of the importance of the demands of the public (both domestic and international) assured the financial success of films as innovative as A bout de souffle and proved that formal inventiveness and originality, as demonstrated by the New Wave, need not be the exclusive privilege of an avant-garde minority.

The path by which de Beauregard came to film production reveals the origins of the taste for risk that characterizes the bold nature of many of his productions. After several years in the army and work in journalism (he founded the Agence Universel Presse in 1947), de Beauregard became involved in the selling of American films to French distributors (including films by Lubitsch and Milestone) and the export of French films to Brazil. He moved to Spain in 1950, where he continued to import American films, and eventually applied his entrepreneurial flair to film production. After one film by Miguel Iglesia, he produced two films by the militant anti-Francist Juan Antonio Bardem, Muerte de un ciclista and Calle Mayor, which courageously portrayed life under Franco and greatly contributed to a renaissance in Spanish cinema. The courage in producing such politically bold films as those of Bardem prefigures de Beauregard’s career in France, marked by the formal audacities of the New Wave and the confrontations with French censors for both Le Petit Soldat and Suzanne Simonin. De Beauregard’s military career, on the other hand, accounts for another facet of his productions: a number of larger budget films which reveal a nostalgia for the camaraderie of the military and, true to his own personality, a strong dose of adventure. The clearest examples of this aspect of his work are Pierre Schöndörffer’s La Passe du diable, La 317e Section, Objectif 500 millions, Le Crabe-Tambour, and L’Honneur d’un capitaine, and Raoul Coutard’s La Légion saute sur Kolwezi.

But whatever sort of film de Beauregard was producing, he remained true to the notion of the director as “auteur,” seeing it as his role both to provide the necessary material means for a production and to encourage an atmosphere that suited and stimulated the creative temperament of the director and his collaborators. It is this which made him and his production company, Rome-Paris-Films (established in 1960 with Carlo Ponti), so respected by directors. For such excellent relationships with his directors, for his encouragement of new talent, and for demonstrating, especially in his early New Wave productions, that successful cinema does not necessarily require exhorbitant budgets and studio facilities, Georges de Beauregard will be remembered as an exemplary producer.

—Richard Alwyn

DECAË, Henri

Films as Cinematographer (Shorts):

1941 Eau vive (+ co-d)
1942 Glaciers (+ d); Premier prix du conservatoire (Guy-Grand) (co)
1943 Au-delà du visible (+ d)
1945 A tous les vents (+ d); Chanson de rue (Sevestre); Marseille, premier port de France (Mineur)
1946 Hommes et bêtes (Mineur); L’Accordéon et ses vedettes (Sevestre); Sport de la voile (Sevestre and Motard)
1947 Les Drames du Bois de Boulogne (Loew)
1948 Un Homme à la mer (Loew); Sous les palmes de Marrakech (Mineur); Marrakech, capitale du Sud (Mineur); Le Mellah de Marrakech (Mineur)
1949 Pensez à ceux qui sont en-dessous! (+ d); Surveillez votre tenue (+ d); Evitez le désordre (+ d); Ne compromettez pas vos loisirs (+ d); Apprenez à soulever une charge (+ d);
Faites soigner vos égratignures (+ d); Bons baisers de Dinard (Loew)

1950 A cheval (+ d); Cher vieux Paris! (de Gastyne); Le Premier Pas (Charrier); Paré pour accoster (Loew)

1951 Visite au Haras (+ d); Le Garde-chasse (+ d); Caroline au pays natal (de Gastyne); Vacances blanches (de Gastyne); La Course de taureaux (Braunberger); La Lutte contre le gaspillage (Sevestre); Excalé à Paris (Lukine) (co)

1952 Caroline du Sud (de Gastyne)

1953 Cow-boys français (Vaudremont); La Beauté de l'effort (de Gastyne); Avec les gens de voyage (de Gastyne) (co); L'Homme et la bête (de Gastyne) (co); Le Grand Cirque s'en va (de Gastyne) (co); A tout casser (Stock-cars) (Dupont) (co); L'Égypte éternelle (de Gastyne); Un Monde troublant (de Gastyne) (Vaudremont); Navigation marchande (Marine marchande) (Franju)

1955 Mer Caribe (de Hubsch) (co); La Grande Terre (Vaudremont)

1956 L'Enfant au femme (Dupont); Coureurs de brousse (Dupont); Israel . . . terre retrouvée (de Gastyne) (co); Propre à rien (de Gastyne) (co)

1957 La Voix des anges (Leduc); De bouche à oreille (Leduc); Nef à trois, ou la journée d'une vedette (Leduc); Piano, mon ami (Leduc); Confidences d'un piano (Leduc); Robinson (de Gastyne) (co); Les Plus Beaux Jours (de Gastyne) (co)

1958 Bois et cuivres (Leduc) (co); Les Caïmans à la voix d'or (Leduc); Le Château du passé (de Gastyne) (co)

1960 Images d'hier et d'aujourd'hui (Leduc) (co); Ce monde banal (Wagner)

1961 Le Village du milieu des brumes (Chartier)

1962 Football (Languagepin)

1963 Le Marionnettiste (Languagepin)

1967 Toutankhamon et son royaume (de Gastyne—produced 1952)

Fils as Cinématographe (Features):

1948 Le Silence de la mer (Melville)
1950 Les Enfants terribles (Melville); Bertrand, coeur de lion (Dhéry)
1951 Au coeur de la Casbah (Maria-Pilar) (Cardinal)
1954 Crève-Cœur (Dupont)
1955 Bob le flambeur (Melville) (+ voice); S.O.S. Noronha (Rouquier)
1957 Le Désir mène les hommes (Roussell) (Bitter Reunion) (Chabrol); Un Témoin dans la ville (Molinaro); Les Amants (The Lovers) (Malle)

1959 Les Quatre Cents Coups (The 400 Blows) (Truffaut); Les Cousins (The Cousins) (Chabrol); Plein soleil (Web of Passion; Leda) (Chabrol); La Sentence (Valère)

1960 Les Bonnes Femmes (Chabrol)

1961 Che gioia vivere (Quelle joie de vivre) (Clément); Cybèle, ou les dimanches de Ville d'Avray (Sundays and Cybèle) (Bourguignon)

1962 “La Luxeure,” “La Paresse,” and “L’Orgueil” eps. of Les Sept Péchés capitaux (The Seven Deadly Sins) (Demy, Godard, and Vadim); Vie privée (A Very Private Affair) (Malle); Le Jour et l’heure (The Day and the Hour) (Clément)

1963 Léon Morin, prêtre (Melville); La Tulipe noire (The Black Tulip) (Christian-Jaque); Dragées au poivre (Baratier); La Porteuse de pain (Cloche); L’Ainé des Ferchaux (Melville)

1964 Week-end à Zaydecote (Verneuil); La Ronde (Circle of Love) (Vadim); Les Félins (Joy House; The Love Cage) (Clément); Le Corinund (Oury)

1965 Viva Maria! (Malle)
1966 Le Voleur (The Thief of Paris) (Malle); Hotel Paradiso (Glenville)

1967 The Night of the Generals (Litvak); Le Samouraï (Melville) (co); Diaboliquement vôtre (Duvivier); The Comedians (Glenville)

1969 Le Clan des siciliens (The Sicilian Clan) (Verneuil); Castle Keep (Pollack)

1970 The Only Game in Town (Stevens); Hello-Goodbye (Negulesco)

1971 Two People (Wise); La Folie des grandeurs (Oury); Jo (Girault); La Luz del fin del mundo (The Light at the Edge of the World) (Billington)

1972 Le Cercle rouge (Melville); Le Droit d’aider (Le Hung)

1973 Don Juan 1973, ou si Don Juan était une femme (Ms. Don Juan) (Vadim) (co); Les Aventures de Rabbi Jacob (Oury)

1974 Isabelle devant le désir (Berckmans); La Moutarde me monte au nez (Zidi)

1975 La Course à l’échelotte (Zidi); Operation Daybreak (Gilbert)

1976 Seven Nights in Japan (Gilbert)

1977 Bobby Deerfield (Pollack); Le Point de mire (Tramont); Mort d’un pourri (Lautner)

1978 Ils sont fous, ces sorciers! (Launier); The Boys from Brazil (Schaffner); Flic ou voyou (Lautner)

1979 An Almost Perfect Affair (Ritchie); The Hard Way (Dryhurst); Le Guignolo (Launier)

1980 The Island (Ritchie); Le Coup du paraplufie (Oury); Inspecteur la bavure (Zidi); Est-ce bien raisonnable (Launier)

1983 Exposed (Toblash)

1984 Les Parents ne sont pas simples cette année; Le Vengeance du serpent à plumes

Other Films:

1946 Le Charcutier de Machonville (Vernel—short) (cam)

1948 Le Silence de la mer (Melville—short) (co-ed)

1950 Trois hommes en Corse (Melville—short) (Yvernel—short) (cam)

1951 Fait d’hiver (d—short)

Publications

By DECAË: articles—

Cinéma Français (Paris), March 1954.
Revue du Cinéma (Morges, Switzerland), January 1971.
Cinématographe (Paris), July 1981.

On DECAË: articles—

Chaplin (Stockholim), no. 2, 1970.
Focus on Film (London), September-October 1970.

* * *

Scornful of cinematography which drew attention to itself at the expense of a film’s aesthetic coherence, Henri Decaë modestly regarded the cinematographer as an invisible technician serving the director’s vision. He rejected the notion of a “Decaë style,” arguing that every film required a fresh approach and that different directors made individual demands on his skills. The characteristic feature of his practice was a flexible attitude to constantly changing technical challenges. To ensure aesthetic unity, he advocated close collaboration between director and camera crew: production strategies in respect of narrative intentions or options regarding the creation of tone or atmosphere were best arrived at collectively. More inclined to leave framing to others, Decaë was above all concerned with lighting to promote the required mood or the appropriate exposure of actors. With colour, no less than with monochrome, he sought to suggest meaning rather than simply to record action. In a career embracing both the austere and the spectacular, the modest documentary and the large-budget movie, working creatively in both black-and-white and in colour, Henri Decaë successfully served directors on both sides of the Atlantic for over forty years.

After graduating from the Vaugirard cinema school, he joined Poste Parisien as a sound recordist and editor, but it was as an Air Force photographer that he developed his ability to work quickly and inventively under pressure. His first film, Eau vive, was a nature documentary processed by the Jean Mineur laboratories. This contact with the publicity filmmaker led to over forty shorts in genres as disparate as the travelogue, the educational documentary, the publicity short or the nature film. In turn Decaë worked with, amongst others, Dupont, Leduc and Loew, but his principal collaboration was with Marc de Gastyne for whom he shot fourteen films. His association with Jean Mineur also led to a remarkable debut in features as Melville’s cameraman for Le Silence de la mer.

If the film is a tribute to Melville’s commitment to a project for which he had little money, it is also a magnificent testimony to Decaë’s adaptability and resourcefulness. Making do with discarded lengths of studio negative (often with different emulsions), meagre lighting equipment, and unreliable hand-held cameras (occasionally used surreptitiously in unauthorised locations), Decaë achieved a film of striking visual quality. This sparse approach to filming, born out of pure necessity, was to be hailed a decade later as the way forward by young directors seeking to break away from the tyranny of prohibitively expensive studio productions. The New Wave generation was fortunate to have available lightweight cameras and fast film stock requiring little artificial lighting, and was able to benefit from Decaë’s no-nonsense, direct method and his inventive resourcefulness. The cinematographer readily drew on his documentary experience to produce striking images imbued with a sense of raw authenticity and immediacy for, among others, Truffaut and Chabrol. Decaë’s knowledge of film stock was invaluable, preferring the softer and faster Gevaert monochrome to Kodak, and later, Eastmancolor for its superior colour range. In Melville’s Bob le flaneur, for example, the brilliant evocation of Paris by night was achieved using specially produced ultra-fast film stock.

Characteristics of Decaë’s style include his atmospheric work in monochrome. For Truffaut he captured the doleful greyness of the Parisian suburbs in Les Quatre Cents Coups; for Melville, in Léon Morin, prêtre, he evoked the grinding mood of austerity and repression in occupied France through dull, flat tones; for Chabrol, in Le Beau Serge, he conjured up the bleakness of autumnal landscapes drained of colour, and, in Les Bonnes Femmes the harsh realities of life for urban working girls, while for Clément’s thriller Les Félins he brilliantly developed tension through high contrast images.

Decaë’s handling of colour registers was no less masterful. Muted hues were produced for shadowy gangster films such as Melville’s Le Samourai or for Malle’s Le Voleur. Warmer colours shaped the mood of Melville’s L’Aîné des Ferchaux as did more sensual colour tones for Malle’s Les Amants or the rich range of glowing reds for Clément’s powerful Plein soleil, while for Chabrol’s A double tour images of bourgeois decadence were expressed by an override palette. However, it was in Malle’s Viva Maria! with its bright costumes, gaudy caravans, and fireworks lighting up the night sky, that Decaë exploited to the full the colour spectrum.

Invariably his resourcefulness resolved technical difficulties. To convey Antoine Doinel’s point of view from inside the rotor in Les Quatre Cents Coups, he strapped himself to the central pole, while in Plein soleil to film the storm-tossed boat he secured himself to the mast. Technical challenges of a different order were posed in Le Samourai—particularly impressive are the shadows of passing cars seen on Jeff Costello’s ceiling and the tracking of the gangster in the underlit Metro.

The long tracking shot is almost a stylistic marker in Decaë’s films. Apart from the Melville gangster canon and Toback’s affectationist homage to the French master in Exposed, the tracking shot features prominently in, amongst other films, Les Quatre Cents Coups, here to detail Antoine’s escape from the reformatory, and in Ascenseur pour l’échauffaud to chart Jeanne Moreau’s distracted walk through Paris in the early hours.

Decaë’s urban landscapes, from the early monochromes of Les Quatre Cents Coups and Les Bonnes Femmes through to the colour compositions in his gangster movies such as Le Clan des siciliens or Exposed, are richly atmospheric. His country landscapes are equally memorable, from the documentary notations of village life in Le Beau Serge and the delicately conjured parkland in Les Amants to the rolling Mexican landscapes of Viva Maria! and the beautiful rural compositions of Gilbert’s Seven Nights in Japan.

In the mid-sixties, after the initial impact of the New Wave began to fade, Decaë turned his attention to the less adventurous, studio-based cinema of Lautner, Oury, Vernueil and Zidi, and to collaboration with American directors such as Pollack, Stevens, and Wise. His corpus of transatlantic films testifies to his international recognition as an artist and serves to consolidate his already considerable reputation. However, Decaë’s place in cinema history ultimately rests on his formative influence within the New Wave movement, as the liberating cinematographer whose initiatives made possible a whole new approach to cinematic practice.

—R. F. Cousins
de GRUNWALD, Anatole

Films as Producer and Writer:

1949 Now Barabbas was a Robber . . . (Parry)
1951 Flesh and Blood (Kimmins)
1952 Treasure Hunt (Carstairs); The Holly and the Ivy (O’Ferrall); Three Men and a Girl (Golden Arrow) (Parry)
1958 The Doctor’s Dilemma (Asquith)
1959 Libel (Asquith)

Films as Writer:

1938 French without Tears (Asquith) (co)
1940 Spy for a Day (Live and Let Live) (Zampi) (co)
1941 Cottage to Let (Bombsight Stolen) (Asquith) (co); Pimpernel Smith (Howard); Tomorrow We Live (King)
1943 The First of the Few (Howard)
1948 Bond Street (Parry) (co); Home at Seven (Murder on Monday) (Richardson)
1952 Women of Twilight (Twilight Women) (Parry)
1953 Innocents in Paris (Parry)

Films as Producer:

1943 The Demi-Paradise (Asquith)
1945 The Way to the Stars (Johnny in the Clouds) (Asquith)
1948 The Winslow Boy (Asquith); The Queen of Spades (Dickinson)
1962 Come Fly with Me (Levin); I Thank a Fool (Stevens)
1963 The V.I.P.s (International Hotel) (Asquith)
1964 The Yellow Rolls-Royce (Asquith)

Publications

By de GRUNWALD: articles—

On de GRUNWALD: article—

* * *

“Tolly,” as Anatole de Grunwald was nicknamed, came from a Russian diplomatic and academic family; an air of affable distinction imbued most of his productions. On leaving Cambridge he submitted scenarios to Gaumont-British, who, in crisis, could only offer a year’s apprenticeship, unpaid, in their scenario department. Eventually Mario Zampi brought him into the company, and French without Tears was the first of many collaborations with its playwright, Terence Rattigan, and its director, Anthony Asquith. A romantic comedy of Englishmen in France, it combined several de Grunwald specialities: “typical Englishness,” windows into Europe, adaptations of stage plays, “drawing-room” discussions of issues, and sophisticated dialogue. In a word: personal diplomacy, where politeness may conceal intelligence, and sharp purpose survive due form.

Until he rejoined Two Cities in 1943, his writing jobs were mainly melodramas of Occupied Europe, as the free nations imagined it. In retrospect, Tomorrow We Live looks astonishingly like ‘Allo, ‘Allo, BBC TV’s 1984 Resistance burlesque, thanks to its melodramatist director, George King, and his invincibly English cast. But de Grunwald came into his own while working on Pimpernel Smith and The First of the Few with Leslie Howard, whose refined Englishness went with a sensitive cosmopolitanism. Howard initiated de Grunwald in the finer points of American tastes, which other English producers too quickly assumed they understood. In The Demi-Paradise Laurence Olivier played a Bolshevik engineer who comes to appreciate an apparently overgentrified English industrialist; its two-way mentality suited the times. The Way to the Stars, about gentle frictions between a “Yank” aircrew and the English, was inspired by the poem which it featured—John Pudney’s gently Housemanesque “Johnny-Head-in-the-Air,” and promptly became one of the best-loved war films.

Labour Government Minister Ernest Bevin asked de Grunwald to make a film about British justice, and another about British goods. Rattigan’s play, The Winslow Boy, inspired by the Archer-Shee case, was the first, and The Yellow Rolls-Royce, much later, the second. Gradually de Grunwald’s interests shifted to his own company, International Screenplays. Its most celebrated film was Thorold Dickinson’s The Queen of Spades, which also sparked a well-known courtroom battle over credits with playwright Rodney Ackland.

De Grunwald then combined independent productions with executive production of Korda’s lower-budget films. His own films included several “cross-section” or “omnibus” films (a then-prevalent genre, with loosely connected tales proceeding episodically or in parallel), like Now Barrabas Was a Robber . . . (convicts), Innocents in Paris (Englishmen abroad), and Bond Street (women associated with a wedding troupe). The Korda films inclined to “filmed theatre,” notably Home at Seven, directed by Ralph Richardson. R. C. Sherriff’s play, about an amnesiac bank clerk suspected of murder, forefronts a theme hovering over many de Grunwald films. A protagonist who might be mesmerised by circumstances into accepting his plight, gropes for control of his own life—not brashly, American-style, but almost blindly, and by quietly persistent negotiation which elicits modest support from others—by, in short, the diplomacies of everyday life. In The Winslow Boy and Libel the syndrome centres on courtroom battles. The Doctor’s Dilemma, from Shaw’s play, centrestages the converse theme, a ‘superior’ individual achieving a just, not exaggerated, estimate of his social rights. The Queen of Spades endows with expressionist force the theme of ‘the trap and the spell.’ This theme imbues with a little poetry de Grunwald’s otherwise routine ‘little people’ subjects.

Soon after Korda’s death de Grunwald moved to MGM, where his last three films were mounted with a slap-up lavishness suiting American ostentation. The V.I.P.s and The Yellow Rolls-Royce reunited him with Rattigan and Asquith, but stressed the self-made-super-rich and famous, notably Burton and Taylor as a divorcing couple. De Grunwald reputedly intended the films as rejoinders to Rattigan and Asquith, but stressed the self-made individual, from Shaw’s play, centre-stages the converse theme, a ‘superior’ individual achieving a just, not exaggerated, estimate of his social rights. The Queen of Spades endows with expressionist force the theme of ‘the trap and the spell.’ This theme imbues with a little poetry de Grunwald’s otherwise routine ‘little people’ subjects.

De Grunwald’s cinéma de qualité, rooted in middle-class middle-brow stage pieces, may have struck younger critics as talkative and unfilmic, and geared to old-fashioned issues and attitudes, but wider audiences shared the director’s fascination with personal diplomacy, which is indeed a profound and complex matter.

—Raymond Durgnat

DE LAURENTIIS, Dino

Producer. Nationality: Italian. Born: Torre Annunziata, 8 August 1919. Education: Attended Centro Sperimentale di Cinematografia, Rome. Military Service: During World War II. Family: Married 1) the actress Silvana Mangano, 1949 (deceased), one son (deceased), three daughters; 2) the producer Martha Schumacher. Career: Worked as extra, actor, propman, unit manager, and assistant director while still in school; 1939—produced his first film, Troppo tardi t’ho conosciuta; early 1950s—co-founded Ponti-De Laurentis production company with Carlo Ponti: dissolved, 1957; built Dinocittà studio in early 1960s: sold to Italian government, early 1970s; resettled in the United States with Embassy Pictures, and, in 1985, De Laurentis Entertainment Group (resigned as chairman of the board, 1988). Awards: Academy Award, for The Best of Enemies (Hamilton); Il giudizio universale (The Last Judgment) (De Sica); Barabba (Barabba) (Fleischer); Io amo, tu ami (I Love, You Love) (Blasetti).

Films as Producer:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>Troppo tardi t’ho conosciuta (Caracciolo)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>L’amore canta (Poggioli)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1942</td>
<td>Margherita fra i tre (Perilli); Malombra (Soldati)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>La donna della montagne (Castellani)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1946</td>
<td>Il misere del Signor Travet (Soldati); Il bandito (Lattuada)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>La figlia del capitano (Camerini); Il passatore (Coletta)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1948</td>
<td>Riso amaro (Bitter Rice) (de Santis); Molti sogni per le strade (Women Trouble) (Camerini)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>Il lupo della Sila (Lure of the Sila) (Coletti)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>Il brigante Mussolini (Camerini); Napoli milionaria (de Filippo); Adano e Eva (Mattoli)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>Guardie e ladri (Cops and Robbers) (Steno and Monicelli); Botta e risposta (Soldati); Romanticismo (Fracassi); Sensualità (Fracassi); Totò à colori (Totó in Color) (Steno)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Anna (Lattuada) (co); Europa ’51 (Rossellini); I tre corsari (Soldati); La tratta delle bianche (Girls Marked Danger) (Comencini); Jolanda, la figlia del Corsaro Nero (Soldati)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1953</td>
<td>Anni facili (Easy Years) (Zampa); Do v è la libertà? (Rossellini); La Lupa (The She-Wolf) (Lattuada)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1954</td>
<td>Ussie (Ulysses) (Camerini); La strada (Fellini); La romantica (Woman of Rome) (Rome)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1955</td>
<td>Il coraggio (Paolella); Mambo (Rossen); L’oro di Napoli (Gold of Naples) (De Sica); La donna del fiore (Soldati); La bella mugnaia (The Miller’s Beautiful Wife) (Camerini)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>Guendalina (Lattuada); La banda degli honesti (Mastrocinque); Totò, Peppino, e. . . la malafemmina (Mastrocinque); War and Peace (K. Vidor); La notti di Cabiria (Nights of Cabiria; Cabiria) (Fellini)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1958</td>
<td>Barrage contre le Pacifique (La diga sul Pacifico; The Sea Wall; This Angry Age) (Clément); La tempesta (Tempest) (Lattuada); Fortunella (de Filippo)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1959</td>
<td>La grande guerra (The Great War) (Monicelli)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>Giovanna e le altre (Five Branded Women) (Ritt); Crimen (and Suddenly It’s Murder) (Camerini); Tutti a casa (Everybody Go Home!) (Comencini); Il gobbo (The Hunchback of Rome) (Lizzani)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1961</td>
<td>I due nemici (The Best of Enemies) (Hamilton); Il giudizio universale (The Last Judgment) (De Sica); Barabba (Barabba) (Fleischer); Io amo, tu ami (I Love, You Love) (Blasetti)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1962</td>
<td>Mafioso (Lattuada)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>Il boom (De Sica); Il diavolo (To Bed or Not to Bed) (Polidoro)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1965</td>
<td>La Bibbia (The Bible . . . in the Beginning) (Huston)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1966</td>
<td>Se tutte le donne del mondo (Kiss the Girls and Make Them Die) (Levin and Maiuri)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1967</td>
<td>Lo straniero (The Stranger) (Visconti); Le streghe (The Witches) (Visconti and others)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1968</td>
<td>La sbarchi di Anzio (Anzio, The Battle for Anzio) (Coletti and Dmytryk); Barbarella (Vadim); Diabolik (Danger: Diabolik) (Barbarella) (Vadim); De Funiокт (Doktor) (Lattuada); Bandit a Milano (The Violent Four) (Lizzani); Romeo and Juliet (Zeffirelli)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1969</td>
<td>Una breve stagione (A Brief Season) (Castellani)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1970</td>
<td>Waterloo (Bondarchuk); La spina dorsale del diavolo (Kennedy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1971</td>
<td>The Deserter (Kennedy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1973</td>
<td>The Stone Killer (Winner); Serpico (Lumet)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1975</td>
<td>Mandingo (Fleischer)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1976</td>
<td>Casanova (Fellini); Drum (Carter); King Kong (Guillerman); Ansikte mot ansikte (Face to Face) (Bergman); Buffalo Bill and the Indians (Altman); The Shootist (Siegel)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1977</td>
<td>Das Schlangenei (The Serpent’s Egg) (Bergman)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Films as Executive Producer:

1954  Un giorno in pretura (A Day in Court) (Steno) (co)
1961  Maciste contre il vampiro (Goliath and the Vampire) (Gentilomo and Corbucci)

1979  Hurricane (Troell); Flash Gordon (Hodges)
1981  Ragtime (Forman); Conan the Barbarian (Milius)
1984  Conan the Destroyer (Fleischer); Firestarter (Lester)
1985  Year of the Dragon (Cimino); Red Sonja (Fleischer); Marie (Donaldson); Cat’s Eye (Teague); Silver Bullet (Attias)
1990  Desperate Hours (Cimino)
1991  Sometimes They Come Back (McLoughlin—for TV)
1992  Once upon a Crime (Criminals; Over My Dead Body; Troublemakers; Returning Napoleon) (Levy)
1993  Body of Evidence (Edel)
1995  Solomon & Sheba (Young—for TV); Assassins (Donner) (exec); Slave of Dreams (Young—for TV)
1996  Unforgettable (Dahl)
1997  Breakdown (Mostow)

1974  Death Wish (Winner)
1975  Three Days of the Condor (Pollack)
1977  La orca (Orca) (E. Visconti); The White Buffalo (Lee Thompson)
1978  The Brink’s Job (Friedkin); King of the Gypsies (Pierson)
1983  The Dead Zone (Cronenberg)
1984  The Bounty (Donaldson)
1985  Dune (Lynch)
1986  Tai Pan (Duke); Crimes of the Heart (Beresford); Blue Velvet (Lynch); Maximum Overdrive (Stephen King)

Publications

By DE LAURENTIIS: articles—

Bianco e Nero (Rome), no. 7–8, 1961.
Film Français (Paris), 11 June 1976.
One of the most colorful, prolific, and successful producers in the contemporary motion picture business, Dino De Laurentiis has proven his entrepreneurial skills time and again, growing from an independent Italian producer into an international conglomerate. His product, from low-budget neorealist works to multimillion dollar spectacles, has always stressed entertainment value, and no matter what the era, he has managed to overcome the exigencies of the fickle motion picture industry to produce consistently crowd-pleasing fare. In the 1950s and 1960s it was the epic; in the 1970s and 1980s a flow of Charles Bronson and Arnold Schwarzenegger action movies, and a series of Stephen King horror shows. De Laurentiis has been a popular media figure with his flamboyant personality and high profile; very much a mogul in the tradition of Samuel Goldwyn, he maintains a strong degree of production value with talented directors, actors, writers, and technicians. What other producer, for example, has produced films by Fellini, Bergman, Rossellini, De Sica, Visconti, Vidor, Huston, Lumet, Forman, Altman, Friedkin, Pollack, Cimino, and Cronenberg, to name but a few? Their films bear the De Laurentiis imprimatur; at the same time, he has shown his fondness for such impersonal, reliable directorial technicians as Richard Fleischer, John Guillermin, and Michael Winner on many of his bread-and-butter pictures.

De Laurentiis attended the Centro Sperimentale di Cinematografia in Rome at the age of 16, then gained practical filmmaking experience in Italy with English-speaking stars and directors. In the early 1960s, he constructed a vast studio complex outside Rome and used it as a base of operations for production, as well as leasing it to other independents. In addition to such steamy dramas as Martin Ritt’s Five Branded Women and René Clément’s This Angry Age, De Laurentiis made money from epics such as Richard Fleischer’s Barabbas and particularly from The Bible . . . in the Beginning, directed by John Huston with an all-star cast reverently recreating the great tales of the Old Testament. De Laurentiis had another prestigious blockbuster with Franco Zeffirelli’s adaptation of Romeo and Juliet. For once the Shakespeare tragedy was correctly cast with teenagers in the leads, and the picture struck a chord with the rebellious young generation of the late 1960s.

De Laurentiis moved to America in the early 1970s, after Italy imposed tight tax restrictions on the film industry. Since then his career has expanded rapidly. He continued to support individualistic filmmakers such as Fellini (Casanova) and Ingmar Bergman (Face to Face, The Serpent’s Egg), and experienced noble failures with Robert Altman’s Buffalo Bill and the Indians and William Friedkin’s The Brink’s Job, but began to rely more and more on sure-fire mass appeal material. A series of Charles Bronson action films—The Valachi Papers, The Stone Killer, and Death Wish—were huge moneymakers, and employed a graphic, streetwise realism. Although De Laurentiis still made important films such as Sidney Lumet’s Serpico, (the true story of New York police corruption), Sydney Pollack’s CIA thriller Three Days of the Condor, Don Siegel’s The Shootist, (a nostalgic Western and John Wayne’s last movie), and Milos Forman’s impressive turn-of-the-century epic Ragtime, he found it profitable to exploit more popular genres.
For a time in the 1970s, it seemed as though the producer was dedicated to such overweight kitsch as Mandingo, Orca, and Hurricane. Of these only Mandingo was a resounding box-office hit, spawning a sequel, Drum. While he had enjoyed a science-fiction success with Roger Vadim’s sexy Barbarella, De Laurentiis’s other sci-fi films, Flash Gordon and David Lynch’s $50 million Dune did not perform well. Much stronger were the Conan films; Robert E. Howard’s classic sword and sorcery adventures were faithfully transmitted to the screen with Arnold Schwarzenegger in the title role. John Milius directed Conan the Barbarian; Richard Fleischer handled the inferior sequel Conan the Destroyer, as well as a related adventure, Red Sonja. After a well-mounted remake of The Bounty with Mel Gibson as Fletcher Christian and Anthony Hopkins as Captain Bligh under Roger Donaldson’s direction, De Laurentiis opened new studios in Wilmington, North Carolina. In 1985 he acquired Embassy Pictures and formed De Laurentiis Entertainment Group, a new distribution and production company, making many of its films at the North Carolina studios. Again, there was a familiar pattern to the De Laurentiis product, with prestigious films (Crimes of the Heart), epics (Tai-Pan), action movies (Desperate Hours), and occasionally the offbeat (Blue Velvet). Horror pictures have been the mainstay of De Laurentiis’s output in recent years, especially the successful Stephen King movies—The Dead Zone, Firestarter, Maximum Overdrive. It is no surprise. For 50 years, De Laurentiis has been making movies, for 50 years, capping his career with a thriving distribution company. It is no surprise. Few producers possess his sense of daring—he not just deals, and his prodigious body of work is rare indeed in today’s film industry. Few producers possess his sense of daring—he was the only producer to hire Michael Cimino, for example, after the Heaven’s Gate debacle, and their film, Year of the Dragon, helped Cimino back on his feet—or his sense of showmanship, whether promoting the sublime or the banal.

—John A. Gallagher

DELERUE, Georges

Composer. Nationality: French. Born: Roubaix, 12 March 1925. Studied under Milhaud and Henry Busser at the Paris Conservatory. Family: Married Micheline Gautron, 1959; one daughter and one step-daughter. Career: Conductor, composer, of orchestra and stage works; 1950—first work for films; also much work for TV; 1984—worked in Hollywood. Awards: Academy Award for A Little Romance, 1979; Commandeur de l’ordre des Arts et des Lettres. Died: In Los Angeles, California, 20 March 1992.

Films as Composer (Shorts):

1950 Le Mystère du Quai Conti (Lacoste)
1952 Les Ingénieurs de la mer (Renaud)
1953 “L’Aventure” et ses Terre-Nuevas (Renaud); Au rythme du siècle (Champetier); Berre, cité du pétrole (Champetier); Avec les pilotes de porte-avions (Galey)
1954 La Grande Cité (Angkor) (Rouy); Madagascar (Rouy); Au pays de Guillaume le Conquérant (Wronecki); Regards sur l’Indochine (Rouy)
1955 Ame d’argile (Toublanc-Michel); La Cité d’argent (Galey); Première croisière (Renaud)
1956 Tu enfants sans douleur (Fabiani and Dalmas); La Rue chinoise (Loriquet); Marche française (Fabiani and Vogel); Le Corbusier, l’architecte du bonheur (Kast) (co)
1957 Portrait de la France (Fabiani); Morts en vitrine (Vogel); Les Sarmentés (Doniol-Valcroze); Courses d’obstacles (Berr); Chères vieilles choses (Vogel)
1958 Les Centrales de la mine (Gillet); L’île de sein (Vogel); L’Opéra-Mouffe (Varda); Mam’zelle Souris series (Paviot) (co); OCIL 1958 (Berr); Europe (Biro, Pagliero, and Weber); La Première Nuit (Franju); Du côté de la côte (Varda); Le Sourire (Bourguignon); Images pour Baudelaire (Kast); Zinc laminé et architecture (Berr); Le Siècle a soif (Vogel); Le Dragon de Komodo (Bourdelon); Des ruines et des hommes (Kast and Lioret)
1959 La Mer et les jours (Vogel); Le Montreur d’ombres (Bourguignon); Images des mondes perdus (Lifschitz); L’Age des artères (Berr); Prélude pour orchestre, voix, et caméra (Arcady); L’Etoile de mer (Bourguignon); Le Mal des autres (Logreau); Entre la terre et le ciel (Volardebo); Escale (Bourguignon); Une Question d’assurance (Kast); Images de Sologne (de Roubaix); Le Pont de Tancarville (Champetier)
1960 Allumorphoses (Rhein); Plaisir de plaire (Leconte); Dorothea Tanning, ou le regard ébloui (Desvilles); Des hommes… une doctrine (Cateny); La Fleuve invisible (Vilardebo); Naissance du plutonium (Hulin); Diagnostic C.I.V. (Fabiani); Le Vaisseau sur la colline (Marcilly); Picasso, romancero du picador (Desvilles); Architecture et chauffage d’aujourd’hui (Berr); Les Etudiants (Grospiere); Sahara (Gerard); Prenze des gants (Billon) (co); Brevet de pilote No. 1: Blériot (Galey); El Gassi (Heinrich); Fruits communs (Forestier); Des gouts et des couleurs (Gerard); Nef estages tout acier (Wronecki) (co)
1961 Les Hommes du pétrole (Heinrich and Chapot); Son et Lumiére (Béranger); Les Guêpes (Berr); L’Amour existe (Pialat); Enez Eussia (L’Ile d’Ouessant) (Page and Gestin); La Parole est du fleuve (Veltuso and Oswald); Horizons nouveaux (Gillet); La Balayeuse (Desvilles); Les Chevaux de Vaugirard (Grospiere)
1962 Les Autogrimpeurs (Languepin); Les Héros de l’air (Laurent and Mitry); Chateaux stop... sur la Loire (Vernick and Desvilles); Le Champ du possible (Toublanc-Michel); On a volé la mer (Salvy); La Naturalisée (Cuniot); Le Bureau des mariages (Bellon); Exemple Etretat (Lepeuve); Six petites bougies (Cotton); Le Chemin de la terre (Menezgoz); Le Rendez-vous d’Asnières (Salvy); Le Bureau (Pialat); Les Chevaux de Vaugirard (Grospiere)
1963 Route sans sillage (Menezgoz); Le Monde des marais (Dhuit); Le Bosphore (Pialat); Le Soir de notre vie (Valentin); Corne d’or (Pialat); Eves futures (Baratier)
1964 Apparences (Kupiissonoff); A (Lenica); La Rose et le sel (Desvilles); La Montagne vivante (Dhuit)
1965 Le Voix d’orly (Lachenay); Vive le Tour! (Malle and Ertaud); Le Dernier Refuge (Puzenat)
1966 Une Alchimie (Kupossonoff); La Revue blanche (Ferreux); Le Cours d’une vie (Desvilles and Darribeauhaude) (co); Louis Leclin (Desvilles and Darribeauhaude) (co)
1967 Paris au temps des cerises: La Commune (Desvilles and Darribeauhaude) (co); Le Temps redonné (Fabiani and Levi-Alvares) (co)
1968 Le Violon de Crémone (Kupissonoff)
1969 Le Jeu de la puce (Desvilles)

Films as Composer (Features):

1959 Le Bel Age (Kast) (co); Hiroshima mon amour (Resnais) (waltz); Une Fille pour l’été (Molinaro); Marche ou crève (Launet)
1960 Classe tous risques (The Big Saut) (Sautet); Les Jeux de l’amour (de Broca); “La Femme seule” ep. of La Française et l’amour (Love and the Frenchwoman) (Le Chanois); Tirez le pianiste (Shoot the Piano Player) (Truffaut); Arretez les tambours (Launet); La Recreation (Moreuil); La Mort de Belle (Molinaro); La Morte-Saison de amours (Kast)
1961 Le Farceur (The Joker) (de Broca); L’Amant de cinq jours (The Five Day Lover) (de Broca); Une Aussi Longue Absence (The Long Absence) (Colpi); En plein cirage (Launet); La Denonciation (Don iod-Valcroze); Le Petit Garçon de l’ascenseur (Grazier-Deferre)
1962 L’Amour à vingt ans (Love at 20) (Truffaut and Ophuls); Le Monto-charge (Bluwal); Le Crime ne paie pas (Crime Does Not Pay) (Oury); Le Bonheur est pour demain (Fabiani) (co); Jules et Jim (Jules and Jim) (Truffaut); Jusqu’au bout du monde (Villiers); L’Immortelle (Robbe-Grillet); Rififi à Tokyo (Deray); Vacances portugaises (Kast); Cartouche (de Broca); L’Affaire Nina B. (The Nina B. Affair) (Siodmak)
1963 L’Abominable Homme des douanes (M. Allégret); Hitler . . . connais pas (Blier); Nunca pasa nada (Bardem); L’Honor-able Stanislas, agent secret (Dudrumeat); L’Ainé des Ferchaux (Melville); Le Journal d’un fou (Coggio); Chair de poule (Duvivier); Le Mépris (Contempt) (Godard); L’Homme de Rio (That Man from Rio) (de Broca); Du grudge chez les veuves (Poirotrenaud); French Dressing (Russell); Cent Mille Dollars au soleil (Veurneuil); Muriel (Resnais) (song)
1964 Des pissenlits par la racine (Launet); La Peau douce (The Soft Skin) (Truffaut); The Pumpkin Eater (Clayton); Le Gros Coup (Valère); L’Amour à la chaîne (de Givray); L’Autre Femme (Villiers); Laissez tirer les tireurs (Lefranc); L’Insoumis (Cavalier); Un Monsieur de compagnie (Male Companion) (de Broca); Lucky Jo (Deville); L’Age ingrat (Grangier); Mata-Hari, Agent H-21 (Richard); Le Corniaud (Oury)
1965 Los pianos mecánicos (The Uninhibited) (Barden); Rapture (Guillame); Viva Maria! (Malle); Pleins feux sur Stanislas (Dudrumeat); Les Tribulations d’un chinois en Chine (Up to His Ears) (de Broca); Le Bestiaire d’amour (Calderon)
1966 Le Roi de coeur (King of Hearts) (de Broca); A Man for All Seasons (Zinnemann); La Vingt-cinquième heure (The 25th Hour) (Verneuil); Le Vieil Homme et l’enfant (The Two of Us) (Berri); Mona, l’étoile sans nom (Colpi); Jeudi ou chantera comme dimanche (de Usch); Derrière la fenêtre (Schmidt) (co)
1967 Our Mother’s House (Clayton); Oscar (Molinaro); La Petite Vertu (Korber)
1968 Les Cracks (Joffé); Les Gommes (Deroisy); Interlude (Billington); Nobody Runs Forever (The High Commissioner) (Thomas); Le Diable par la queue (The Devil by the Tail) (de Broca)
1969 Le Cerveau (Oury); A Walk with Love and Death (Huston); Hibernatus (Molinaro); Women in Love (Russell); Anne of the Thousand Days (Jarrett); Les Caprices de Maria (Give Her the Moon) (de Broca)
1970 Il conformista (The Conformist) (Bertolucci); Heureux qui comme Ulysse (Colpi); Comptes à rebours (Pigaut); The Horsemen (Frankenheimer)
1971 Le Promesse de l’aube (Promise at Dawn) (Dassin); Les Aveux les plus dous (Molinaro); L’Ingénue (Carbonnaux); Deux anglaises et le continent (Two English Girls) (Truffaut); Mira (Rademakers)
1972 Malpertuis (Kumel); Chère Louise (de Broca); Une Belle Fille comme moi (Such a Gorgeous Kid Like Me) (Truffaut); Quelque part, quelqu’un (Bellino)
1973 The Day of the Jackal (Zinnemann); La Nuit américaine (Day for Night) (Truffaut); Angela (Van Der Heyde); The Day of the Dolphins (Nichols); La Femme de Jean (Bellon)
1974 La Gifle (The Slap) (Pinoteau); L’Important c’est d’aime (The Most Important Thing: Love) (Zalawski)
1975 L’Incorrigible (de Broca); Calmos (Blier); Jamais plus toujours (Bellon); Oublie-moi Mandoline (Wyn); Police Pylysin (Cornell)
1976 Julia (Zinnemann); Julie Pot de Colle (de Broca); Le Point de mire (Focal Point) (Tramont); Tendre poulet (Dear Inspector) (de Broca); Va voir Maman . . . Papa travaille (Go See Mother . . . Father Is Working; Your Turn, My Turn) (Leterrer); Preparez vos mouchoirs (Get Out Your Handkerchiefs) (Blier)
1977 La Petite Fille en velour bleu (The Little Girl in Blue Velvet) (Bridges); Le Cavaleur (Practice Makes Perfect) (de Broca)
1978 L’Amour en fuite (Love on the Run) (Truffaut); A Little Romance (Hill); An Almost Perfect Affair (Ritchie)
1980 Le Dernier Métro (The Last Metro) (Truffaut); Garde a vue (Under Suspicion) (Miller)
1981 Rich and Famous (Cukor); True Confessions (Grosbard); Richard’s Things (Harvey); La Femme d’à côté (The Woman Next Door) (Truffaut); La Passante du Sans-Souci (La Passante) (Rouffio)
1982 A Little Sex (Paltrow); La Vie continue (Mizrahi); The Escape Artist (Deschanel); Partners (Borrows)
1983 Vivement dimanche! (Finally, Sunday!) (Truffaut); L’Eté meurt (One Deadly Summer) (Becker); The Black Stallion Returns (Dalva); Man, Woman, and Child (Richards); Silkwood (Nichols); Exposed (Toback)
1984 Femmes de personne (Nobody’s Women) (Frank); Love Thy Neighbor (Bill)
1985 Agnes of God (Jewison); Maxie (Aaron)
1986 Conseil de famille (Costa Gavras); Crimes of the Heart (Beresford); Déscente aux enfers (Giroud); Mesmerized (Laughlin); Plateau (Stone); Salvador (Stone)
1987 Un Homme amoureux (A Man in Love) (Kurys); The Lonely Passion of Judith Hearne (Clayton); Maid to Order (Jones); The Pick-Up Artist (Toback); Summer Heat (Gleason)
1988  Paris by Night (Hare); Beaches (G. Marshall); Biloxi Blues (Nichols); Chouans! (de Broca); Heartbreak Hotel (Columbus); The House on Carroll Street (Yates); Memories of Me (Winkler); Popielusko; A Summer Story (Haggard); Twins (Reitman)

1989  Der Aten; Hard to Be a God (Fleischmann); Her Alibi (Beresford); La Révolution française (Guillermin); Seven Minutes (Meyer); Steel Magnolias (Ross); Strapless (Hare)

1990  Mister Johnson (Mr. Johnson) (Beresford); Cadence (Sheen); Joe versus the Volcano (Shanley); A Show of Force (Barretto)

1991  La Reine blanche (Hubert); Carly Sue (Hughes)

1992  Céline (Brisseau); The Josephine Baker Story (Gibson—for TV)

Films as Music Director:

1954  La Pointe-Courte (Varda—short)
1955  Nuit et brouillard (Resnais—short)
1956  Dimanche à Pekin (Marker—short); Novembre à Paris (Reichenbach—short); Toute la mémoire du monde (Resnais—short); Les Sorcières de Salem (Rouleau—short)
1957  Le Mystère de l’atelier 15 (Resnais and Heinrich—short); La Joconde (Gruel—short); Lettre de Sibérie (Marker—short); Le Chant du styrène (Resnais—short); Notre-Dame, cathédrale de Paris (Franju—short)
1958  André Masson et les quatre éléments (Grémillon—short)
1959  Hain Soutine (Brando—short); Vacances au paradis (L’Hôte—short)
1961  L’Ondomane (Arcaduy)
1962  Marquet (Megret); Mais où sont les nègres d’antan? (Martin and Boschet)
1963  . . . à Valparaïso (Ivens)

Film as Arranger:

1957  Si le roi savait ça (Canaille—short)

Publications

By DELERUE: articles—

Ecran (Paris), September 1975.
Soundtrack! (Hollywood), August and Fall 1980.
Soundtrack! (Hollywood), June 1982.
Soundtrack! (Hollywood), vol. 9, no. 33, March 1990.

On DELERUE: articles—

Chaplin (Stockholm), no. 2, 1970.

Film Français (Paris), 2 February 1979.
Soundtrack! (Hollywood), April 1980.
Film Français (Paris), 16 January 1981.
Film Français (Paris), 2 March 1984.
Soundtrack! (Hollywood), vol. 8, nos. 29, 30 and 31, March, June and September 1989.

*  *  *

A former student of the French composer Darius Milhaud, Georges Delerue created some of the most aggressively romantic film music in cinema history. Delerue’s many scores include his work for Jean-Luc Godard’s Contempt, François Truffaut’s Shoot the Piano Player and Jules and Jim, as well as the music for the classic films Hiroshima mon amour, The Pumpkin Eater, That Man from Rio, King of Hearts, and A Man for All Seasons. Indeed, one of the hallmarks of Delerue’s career was his ability to compose excellent scores with remarkable facility and speed, borrowing from himself from time to time, but on the whole creating work of vigor, beauty, and instantly identifiable originality.

As Truffaut’s principal scorer, Delerue’s music for both the director’s early and late films (Day for Night and Love on the Run being two of the later efforts) became as much a part of the director’s vision as Truffaut’s lyrical visual compositions and gently elegiac evocations of youthful excess and innocence. Delerue’s music is typically lushly orchestrated, with delicately melancholic undertones, and a remarkable sense of both “place,” and the irrecoverable past. Delerue’s music for Day for Night is in many ways the culmination of his long collaboration with the gifted director. In this gently tragic film of the passion that must necessarily go into the making of any movie, Delerue becomes a character in Truffaut’s “movie within the movie,” as he plays his “proposed” score over a long distance telephone hookup for Truffaut’s approval. Truffaut listens as he peruses a number of books on film history which have just arrived for him; within 30 seconds, he has approved the score and hung up. Clearly, Truffaut has worked with Delerue for so long on so many projects that there is an unspoken language between them; Truffaut does not need to hear the entire score to know what Delerue is up to. In this scene, both men are professionals, each working under a tight deadline to create a work of art. They have no time for pleasantries, but they need none. The finished film will be a coherent whole, with the music perfectly underscoring Truffaut’s visuals, which Delerue has, at that point, not even seen. Delerue’s score for Contempt, one of Jean-Luc Godard’s most deeply felt and somber works, and also a film about the making of a film (albeit more tangentially than Day for Night), comprises little more than 15 minutes of music in all. But Delerue’s two main themes, with variations, are repeated continually throughout the film by Godard, lending a tragic intensity to the doomed romance of the scriptwriter (Michel Piccoli) and his wife (Brigitte Bardot). Delerue’s music also meshes expertly with the film within Contempt, Fritz Lang’s fragmented attempt to make a film of the Odyssey for producer Jack Palance. By the end of the film, Delerue’s score has become, through insistent repetition, a metaphor for the inexorable sweep of events which governs the characters’ actions. Certainly, both scores are remarkable achievements, and they stand as some of the finest work Delerue ever produced.

One is constantly struck by the fact that Delerue’s scores for individual films seem to be part of one large whole. Many of his soundtracks seem, on first hearing, to be quite similar, and certainly his scores repeat a number of themes which are obviously dear to the composer’s heart. However, the variations which Delerue created from these themes are unique, and one can no more criticize him for this practice than one could call Bach to task for writing The Goldberg Variations. Delerue never tried to be what he was not: he was a romantic, a man with one foot in the early 20th century (Milhaud, Honegger, Auric, Poulenc), and the other foot firmly striding forward.

Although it has not generally been commented upon, my own feeling is that Delerue was most deeply influenced as a composer by the work of Jean-Jacques Grünemberg, the brilliant French composer who wrote the music for Robert Bresson’s masterpieces Les Dames du Bois de Boulogne (1945) and Diary of a Country Priest (1950). Grünemberg’s scores are invariably more austere and tragic than Delerue’s, but they share a common interest in full orchestral arrangements, and a sense of depth which refuses to be wholly frivolous. There is at times a frank commerciality in some of Delerue’s music, as in his perfunctory score for A Man for All Seasons, which seems dashed off with little care or concern. In addition to his work in films, Delerue wrote regularly for French TV, the stage, and the ballet. With the considerable output, it is inevitable that some of his work was second-rate, and perhaps this willingness to work on almost any project sometimes mitigated against his wider acceptance as one of the truly great film composers. But although the number of his scores is prodigious, Delerue displayed an unwavering sensibility which was entirely his own, and in his best work he succeeded brilliantly.

—Wheeler Winston Dixon

DELLI COLLI, Tonino

Cinematographer. Nationality: Italian. Born: Antonio Delli Colli in Rome, 20 November 1923. Career: Worked as camera assistant; 1943—first film as cinematographer, Finalmente si; 1951—shot first Italian color film, Totò a colori. Awards: Silver Ribbon, Italian National Syndicate of Film Journalists, 1965, for Il vangelo secondo Matteo, 1968, for La Cina è vicina, 1982, for Tales of Ordinary Madness, 1985, for Once Upon a Time in America, 1987, for Der Name der Rose, 1998, for Marianna Ucria; British Academy Award, Best Cinematography, for Once Upon a Time in America, 1985; David di Donatello Award, Best Cinematography, for Marianna Ucria, 1997, and for La Vita è bella, 1998.

Films as Cinematographer:

1943 Finalmente si (Kish); Il paese senza pace (Le Barbare Chiozzotte) (Menardi)
1945 O Sole mio (Gentilomo) (co)
1946 Trepidazione (Frenguelli); Felicità perduta (Ratti) (co)
1947 La lunga manica (Mantici—short); Il quinquale (Mantici—short)
1948 L’isola di Montecristo (Sequi); La città dolente (Bonnard)
1949 L’esperienza del cubismo (Pelligrini—short); L’isola (Micucci—short); La strada (Fugitive Lady) (Salkow); Nerone e Messalina (Zelig)
1950 Arte e realtà (Giovannini and Mayer—short); Alina (Pastina);
Il voto (Bonnard); Io sono il Capataz! (Simonelli)
1951 Milano Miliardaria (Metz, Marchesi, and Girolami); Totò a colori (Totò in Color) (Steno); Gli undici moschettieri (Saraceni and De Concini); Iolanda la figlia del corsaro nero (Soldati); I tre corsari (Soldati); Fratelli d’Italia (Saraceni); Gioventù alla sbarra (Cerio)
1953 Dov’è la libertà? (Rossellini) (co); Totò e le donne (Steno and Monicelli); Il sacco di Roma (Cerio); Ti ho sempre amato (Costa); Amori di mezzo secolo (Pellegrini and others)
1954 Rosso e nero (Papolli); Tradita (La notte delle nozze) (Bonnard); L’ombra (Bianchi); Le signorine della 04 (Francioli)
1955 Angelo bianco (Matarazzo); L’intrusa (Matarazzo); Piccola posta (Steno); Accadde al penitenziario (Bianchi)
1956 Donatella (Monicelli); Una voce, una chitarra, un po’ di luna (Gentilomo); Poveri ma belli ( Poor but Beautiful) (D. Risi); Buon appetito (Saraceni—short); Vecchie amicizie (Saraceni—short); Il Nilo di pietra (Ronchi—short)
1957 Femmine tre volte (Steno); La nonna Sabella (Grandmother Sabella) (D. Risi); Susanna tutta panna (Steno); Seven Hills of Rome (Rowland); Belle ma povere (Beautiful But Poor) (D. Risi); Adorabili e bugiarde (Malassoma)
1958 Venezia, la luna, e tu (Venice, the Moon, and You) (D. Risi); Marinai, donne e guai (Simonelli) (co); Primo amore (Camerini); Poveri milionari (Poor Millionaires) (D. Risi); L’amico del giaguaro (Bennati)
1959 Le cameriere (Braghetti); Il Mondo di notte (Vanzi)
1960 Il ladro di Bagdad (The Thief of Bagdad) (Lubin and Vailati)
1961 Morgan il pirata (Morgan the Pirate) (Zeligio and De Toth); Le meraviglie di Aladino (The Wonders of Aladdin) (Levin); Accattone (Pasolini); Il nuovi angeli (Gregoretti) (co); Le spadaccino di Siena (La congiura dei dieci; The Swordsman of Siena) (Perier)
1962 Mamma Roma (Pasolini); La monaca di Monza (Gallone); La bella di Lodi (Missiroli)
1963 “La ricotta” ep. of Rogopag (Pasolini); El verdugo (Berlanga); “Naples” ep. of Les Plus Belles Escroqueries du monde (Gregoretti); “Amore e alfabeto” and “Amore e morte” eps. of Amore in quattro dimensioni (Mida and Guerrini)
1964 Loli (Blasetti) (co); “Il generale” ep. of Amore pericolosi (Giannetti); Il vangelo secondo Matteo (The Gospel According to St. Matthew) (Pasolini); “La doccia” ep. of Extraordinary (Franciosa); Comizi d’amore (Pasolini) (co)
1965 Le soldatessa (The Camp Followers) (Zurlini); Les Sultans (Delannoy); La mandragola (The Love Root) (Lattuada); “Le Monstre” and “Mourir pour vivre” eps. of Le Lit à deux places (Puccini)
1966 Andreino in città (N. Risi); Uccellacci e uccellini (The Hawks and the Sparrows) (Pasolini) (co); Il buono, il brutto, il cattivo (The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly) (Leone)
1967 La Cina è vicina (Bocciochio); Quei fantasti (Castellani); “Che cosa sono le nuvole?” ep. of Capriccio all’italiana (Pasolini)
1968 “William Wilson” ep. of Histoires extraordinaires (Spirits of the Dead) (Malle); Il giorno della civetta (Damiani); Niente rose per OSS 177 (Cerrato and Desagnat); C’era una volta il west (Once upon a Time in the West) (Leone); Metti, una sera a cena (Patroni Griffi)
1969 Porcile (Pigsty) (Pasolini) (co); Rosolino Paterno, soldato . . . (Loy)
1970 Pussycat, Pussycat, I Love You (Amateau)
1971 Il Decamerone (The Decameron) (Pasolini); Cometogether (Swimmer); Homo eroticus (Vicario)
1972  I racconti di Canterbury (The Canterbury Tales) (Pasolini); Los amigos (Deaf Smith and Johnny Ears) (Cavara); Pilgrimage (Montresor); Un uomo da rispettare (A Man to Respect; The Master Touch; Hearts and Minds) (Lupo)
1973  Storie scellerate (Citti); Paolo il caldo (Vicario); Peccato veniale (Samperi); Lacome Lucien (Malle)
1974  Mio Dio, come sono caduta in basso! (Comencini)
1975  Salo o le 120 giornate di Sodoma (Salo—The 120 Days of Sodom) (Pasolini); Pasqualino Settebellezza (Seven Beauties) (Wertmüller)
1976  Caro Michele (Monicelli); Anima persa (Lost Soul) (D. Risi)
1977  I nuovi mostri (Viva Italia) (Monicelli); Un Taxi mauve (The Purple Taxi) (Boisset)
1978  Primo amore (First Love) (D. Risi); Viaggio con Anita (Travels with Anita) (Monicelli)
1979  Caro Papà (Dear Father) (D. Risi); Revenge (Wertmüller)
1980  Macabro (Macabre) (Bava)
1981  “Armando’s Notebook” ep. of Sunday Lovers (D. Risi); Storie di ordinaria follia (Stories of Ordinary Madness) (Ferreri)
1983  Zeder: Voices from Darkness (Avati); Trenchcoat (Tuchner)
1984  Once upon a Time in America (Leone); Il futore e donna (The finished film to look. Delli Colli was shown Chaplin’s knowledge of film, but with a crystal clear idea of how he wanted the light and the possibilities film offers for going “contro natura.”

Thus the needs and wishes of the director are identified as precisely as possible and reconciled as closely as possible with the constraints and opportunities offered by a particular location (Delli Colli prefers location shooting) or set. Also to be taken into account are the needs of the performers—whether established stars (such as Magnani, who preferred to be lit a certain way, or Totò, whose vision, towards the end of his life, was failing) or nonprofessionals unused to the camera. Never a cinephile, Delli Colli’s fascination has always been, and remains with the basic medium of photography—light, and its varying qualities depending on time, weather, geography and the subtle balances required between natural and artificial light.

Films as Camera Assistant:

1940  La fanciulla di portici (Bonnard)
1941  Lo Specchio (Benigni)
1942  La Nozze del Popolo (Polani)
1943  Caro Michele (Monicelli); Anima persa (Lost Soul) (D. Risi)
1944  Death and the Maiden (Polanski)
1945  Facciamo paradiso (Monicelli)
1946  Marianna Ucrìa (Greco); Specialmente la domenica (Especially on Sunday) (Tornatore and others)
1947  Bitter Moon (Polanski)
1948  La Soff de l’or (The Thirst for Gold) (Oury)
1949  Fiamma et la Venere (Greco)
1950  Die Buckkehr (L’Africana) (von Trottta); Le voce della luna (The Voice of the Moon) (Ferrini)
1951  Una storia semplice (A Simple Story) (Greco); Specialmente la domenica (Especially on Sunday) (Tornatore and others)
1952  Bitter Moon (Polanski)
1953  La Soif de l’or (The Thirst for Gold) (Oury)
1954  Death and the Maiden (Polanski)
1955  Facciamo paradiso (Monicelli)
1956  Marianna Ucrìa (Greco)
1957  La Vita a bella (Life is Beautiful) (Benigni)

Publications

By DELLI COLLI: articles—

Rivista del Cinematografo (Rome), July 1965.
Bianco e Nero (Rome), April/June 1986.

On DELLI COLLI: articles—

* * *

“Metta, metta, Tonino
il cinquanta, non abbia paura che le luce sfondi—faciamo questo carrorello contro natura!!”

Tonino Delli Colli is probably the only cinematographer who has had a poem addressed to him. A self-avowedly “instinctive” practitioner of his craft, Delli Colli holds a crucial position between genre cinema at its most dazzlingly ambitious (in the hands of Sergio Leone) and art cinema as embodied in the intensely innovative and challenging films of Pier Paolo Pasolini, author of the above verse.

It is an impossible task to find a visual signature common to Delli Colli’s work with Rossellini, Louis Malle, Dino Risi, Boccaccio, or Federico Fellini, and that is without taking into account his strictly generic output—a string of films made with the Italian comic star Totò. And he is indeed the last person to wish such a common denominator to be apparent.

His approach is less to impose a common visual style upon a number of disparate projects than to apply an identical strategy. Thus the needs and wishes of the director are identified as precisely as possible and reconciled as closely as possible with the constraints and opportunities offered by a particular location (Delli Colli prefers location shooting) or set. Also to be taken into account are the needs of the performers—whether established stars (such as Magnani, who preferred to be lit a certain way, or Totò, whose vision, towards the end of his life, was failing) or nonprofessionals unused to the camera. Never a cinephile, Delli Colli’s fascination has always been, and remains with the basic medium of photography—light, and its varying qualities depending on time, weather, geography and the subtle balances required between natural and artificial light.

Working on Accattone with Pasolini signaled a move away from genre cinema which Delli Colli has sustained up to the present, but it was not something which changed his working methods. He has remained pragmatic, approaching each project as it comes, with a precise and increasingly practiced eye for nuances in the quality of light and the possibilities film offers for going “contro natura.”

Delli Colli’s response to Pasolini’s poetic demands is characteristically phlegmatic. Pasolini, he has said, could write of a “cinquanta” (a kind of lens), but he would not know what to do with one. On Accattone Delli Colli confronted a director innocent of any technical knowledge of film, but with a crystal clear idea of how he wanted the finished film to look. Delli Colli was shown Chaplin’s City Lights and Dreyer’s Jean of Arc (later reference points were to be early Italian religious painters and, for Mamma Roma, the paintings of Mantegna). To achieve the film’s grainy look, Delli Colli took as inspiration such “yellow press” scandal sheets as Lo Specchio and shot on the then rarely-used Ferrania film.

In Sergio Leone he confronted someone whose starting point was also genre cinema and who had also had experience working as an assistant director but whose demands were, like Pasolini’s, in a sense transgressive. Like Pasolini, Leone is concerned about rewriting myths and constructing a kind of prehistoric world. Behind it all is a very different dynamic, rhetorical and romantic and predicated on Leone’s obsessive need to extend the dramatic moment far beyond its “natural” duration. Thus Delli Colli was able to bring into play an avidly mobile camera, ritualistically circling and tracking shots, zooms, and large close-ups, all of which tied the viewer into a dramatic space quite other than that of everyday experience.

Ideally, he has said, a cinematographer and a director must work as one, each automatically knowing what the other wants and can do, otherwise one works on a solely technical register. And for the best directors, he has said, it is impossible to make a bad shot; their knowledge of camera angle and framing will be so precise.

If there are times when one might wish for a different cinematic style, harsher, say for Malle’s Lacombe Lucien, they are outweighed by wonder at the extraordinary breadth of range encompassed by Deli Colli’s work—the sharply evocative images of The Gospel According to St. Matthew, the extraordinary sense of another time and place in The Decameron or Oedipus, the potent meld of romance and history in Leone’s Westerns, the acerbic poetry of Accattone matching exquisitely the rawness of the nonprofessional players, the sterility of Salo and, more recently, the parade of Fellinian leitmotifs in The Voice of the Moon.

—Verina Glaessner

de ROCHEMONT, Louis

Films as Producer:

1933–43  The March of Time (series)
1933  The Cry of the World (doc)
1934  The First World War (doc)
1940  The Ramparts We Watch (+ d—doc)
1942  We Are the Marines (+ d—doc)
1944  The Fighting Lady (Steichen) (+ ed)
1945  The House on 92nd Street (Hathaway)
1947  13 Rue Madeleine (Hathaway); Boomerang! (Kazan)
1949  Lost Boundaries (Werker)
1951  The Whistle at Eaton Falls (Siodmak)
1952  Walk East on Beacon (Werker)
1953  Martin Luther (Pichel)
1954  Animal Farm (Halas and Batchelor—animation)
1955  Cinerama Holiday
1958  Windjammer (L. de Rochemont III)
1960  Man on a String (de Toth)
1961  The Roman Spring of Mrs. Stone (Quintero)

Publications

By de ROCHEMONT: article—

Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1941.

On de ROCHEMONT: book—

On de ROCHEMONT: articles—

“‘A Black Filmmaker Remembers Louis de Rochemont,’” in Film Library Quarterly (New York), vol. 12, no. 4, 1979.

Sakmyster, Thomas, “‘Nazi Documentaries of Intimidation: Feldzug in Polen (1940), Feuertaufe (1940) and Sieg im Westen (1941),’” in Historical Journal of Film, Radio and Television (Abingdon), October 1996.

* * *

Louis de Rochemont is best remembered today for his involvement with Roy Larsen in producing Time magazine’s innovative and popular newsreel The March of Time and for pioneering in a postwar Hollywood subgenre, the so-called ‘semidocumentary.’ Generally overlooked, however, is de Rochemont’s far-ranging work in the early days of American newsreels, his early embracing of the compilation documentary, his later activity in adapting new wide-screen processes to the documentary mode, and his extensive educational film production outside the Hollywood industry.

According to Raymond Fielding, de Rochemont’s passion for journalism had its origin in his enthusiasm for Richard Harding Davis’s novel Gallegher, in which the title character is a teenaged reporter dedicated to “‘scoops.’” During his youth de Rochemont emulated Gallegher, prowling his hometown in Massachusetts for news, and, when news was not forthcoming, manufacturing it. As a freelance motion picture cameraman during his high school days, de Rochemont regularly supplied regional movie theaters with short films of local happenings, and in 1916 achieved some renown when he successfully coaxed a Maine sheriff to “‘reenact’” his jailing of a suspected German saboteur. According to Fielding, it is from this initial “‘re-creation’” that evolved de Rochemont’s sustained belief that, just as a reporter and editor can re-create events with words, so can the newsreel cameraman re-create those events in images. While serving with Pathé News as an assistant newsreel editor, he reportedly expressed to a colleague his dissatisfaction with the current form of newsreels—claiming that they just depicted an event, never explaining its causes or what it may portend—and vowed to “someday revolutionize the newsreel.” By 1935 de Rochemont received the opportunity to do just that.

After his stint in the navy (during which he still pursued freelance newsreel photography) and with various newsreel concerns, particularly Fox Movietone, de Rochemont in 1933 launched his March of the Years series of historical reenactments, which he admitted had been inspired by Time’s radio program The March of Time. The radio program anticipated the newsreel. The program employed a prodigious coterie of actors who mimicked the voices of current newsmakers, re-creating their statements to the press, and, if no statements had been recorded, voicing a writer’s interpretations of what those statements might have been. Roy Larsen at Time determined that de Rochemont would be the ideal person to take The March of Time to the screen, based upon his extensive newsreel experience at Fox Movietone and his demonstrated penchant for filmic re-creation. Today, such re-creation seems an atavistic and even dishonest approach to the news. Nevertheless, it must be realized that this is solely from a contemporary viewpoint within a society permeated by instantaneous telecommunications technology; 60 years ago, lacking the technology, audiences and producers alike generally accepted John Grierson’s dictum that the essence of cinematic truth was “the creative interpretation of actuality.” For the next eight years, de Rochemont oversaw the production of the newsreel, dubbed “a new kind of pictorial journalism” by Time. Almost from the beginning, the newsreel found itself involved in controversy: although the impersonations by actors of famous persons (such as President Roosevelt) frequently annoyed those so depicted, it was the series’ increasing political trenchancy that caused the most furor. Like the opinions voiced about Charles Foster Kane in the March of Time imitation at the beginning of Citizen Kane, Time-Life’s newsreel similarly suffered schizoid assessments of its political bent. Despite its progressively more pointed depictions of Hitler, the American left claimed the series was an agent of fascism, while the conservative minions of Henry Luce at Time regarded it as distinctly left-wing, a sentiment shared within areas of American political life. Throughout its run, the series was plagued by the capriciousness of local and state censor boards, and at times caused such controversy that the Hays Office considered censoring it before release.

Despite whatever political imbroglios The March of Time precipitated, the political leanings of de Rochemont, an intensely private man, were never fully manifest; nevertheless, virtually all of his film work was marked by a general liberalism in social matters. While at Fox in 1933, he helped edit Laurence Stalling’s compilation documentary The First World War, a film using wartime footage. Perhaps based upon this experience, the same year de Rochemont independently produced his compilation documentary The Cry of the World, described by Fielding as “a powerful indictment of war and oppression,” a film that anticipated many of the formal compilation techniques which such filmmakers as Emil de Antonio would use years later. By 1938, de Rochemont, with Larsen’s backing, produced a feature-length film, The Ramparts We Watch, which sought to explicate for audiences the international tensions of the day by presenting a dramatic narrative depicting the causes of the Great War 25 years earlier. In its conception, the use of nonactors and location shooting to point up social concerns, the film mirrored contemporary production in England (such as Jennings’s Fires Were Started) and prefigured many aspects of postwar Italian neorealism. In terms of de Rochemont’s career, it also prefigured his success seven years later as a producer of semidocumentaries.

In 1943 de Rochemont left The March of Time, apparently because his often idiosyncratic and expensive filmmaking techniques, as well as his undistinguished managerial abilities, increasingly riled his corporate superiors, an aspect of his professional nature that would continue to plague his later dealings with the studios. In August 1943 Darryl F. Zanuck hired de Rochemont as a producer, apparently intending him to work on Twentieth Century-Fox’s bio-film of Woodrow Wilson, a statesman whose concern with international peace reflected that of de Rochemont’s Cry of the World and The Ramparts We Watch. Instead de Rochemont found himself producing Edward Steichen and William Wyler’s naval documentary The Fighting Lady, an assignment for which de Rochemont’s documentary work and naval background were perfectly suited. By 1945, though, de Rochemont had begun production of The House on 92nd Street, the first of three features produced by de Rochemont for Zanuck which would ultimately become known as semidocumentaries. The origin of the term “semidocumentary” is unclear, although it quickly found common usage in the Hollywood trade press; de Rochemont himself thought the term “documentary” to be “the kiss of death” at the box office, it signifying to audiences the type of film produced by the government during the 1930s, what he called “arty avant-garde” films such as The Plow that Broke the Plains, of which de Rochemont, apparently, was not too fond.

De Rochemont preferred the term “pictorial journalism” to describe his features, the same term that Time had used to describe The March of Time. All of de Rochemont’s features during this period followed a set production philosophy: all were based upon actual incidents involving some aspects of law enforcement or detection, filmed on location, and, to an extent unheard of in Hollywood, all made extensive use of nonprofessional actors.

Some critics, such as Paul Schrader, have attributed Hollywood’s postwar appropriation of de Rochemont’s filmmaking technique to audiences’ desire for a more realistic depiction of the world, conditioned particularly by society’s wartime experience. This may be, but other more tangible reasons explain the appearance of the semidocumentary. De Rochemont’s brand of filmmaking not only reflected that of the Italian neorealist films then finding quick popular and critical acceptance in the United States, but the particular economies of production of such filmmaking were highly attractive to a Hollywood film industry beleaguered by studio labor strife, escalating production costs, and a diminishing box office. Based upon relatively inexpensive properties (generally magazine articles), using relatively unknown low-priced talent, and shot on locations far away from Hollywood’s labor demands, de Rochemont’s films for Zanuck found a receptive audience while well suited to Hollywood’s stringent postwar cost-cutting. After two years, however, de Rochemont’s general dislike of the Hollywood system and resistance to Zanuck’s supervision led to his departure from Twentieth Century-Fox. According to de Rochemont, Zanuck insisted that he use “star” names (such as James Cagney in 13 Rue Madeleine) over de Rochemont’s objections (the producer believing that such star presences deflected audiences’ attention from the story and the films’ realistic aura). De Rochemont and Zanuck feuded over publicity and screen credits, and de Rochemont left when Zanuck began charging de Rochemont’s productions with studio overheads, despite none of his films ever using the Fox lot. He went to MGM in 1948, but soon left when it balked at producing Lost Boundaries, dealing with what was at the time a highly controversial racial theme.

To produce Lost Boundaries, de Rochemont again entered independent production, bankrolling much of the film himself. The film proved a somewhat notorious critical and financial success, being censored in some parts of the country, but it gained de Rochemont a contract with Columbia which assured him a high degree of creative autonomy while guaranteeing production financing, leading to two more films in the semidocumentary vein: The Whistle at Eaton Falls, dealing with both sides of a contemporary labor problem, and Walk East on Beacon, a reprise of de Rochemont’s earlier interest in factual espionage films.

After his Columbia productions, both de Rochemont’s Hollywood career and the semidocumentary vogue went into decline, as television news and French and Canadian experiments with cinéma vérité began to alter audiences’ perceptions of what constituted cinematic reality. De Rochemont produced an historical re-creation of Martin Luther’s life, an American-German co-production shot in Europe—a project apparently initiated by his former March of Time colleague Lothar Wolff. After handling the release of John Halas and Joy Batchelor’s animated feature Animal Farm, de Rochemont entered Cinerama production, a multiple-camera widescreen system. De Rochemont had always maintained a keen interest in technological innovation in film since his days at Time, perhaps explaining his exploration of the potential of Cinerama. He produced the second Cinerama film, Cinerama Holiday; ostensibly the story of two couples, one American and one European, who explore the other’s homeland; the film was actually a thinly veiled pretense for reproducing glorious American and European landscapes through Cinerama. Using Cinemiracle, a rival process acquired by Cinerama, de Rochemont produced Windjammer with his son Louis III directing; as the slightly fictionalized depiction of a Norwegian training ship’s visit to the United States, the film was slightly reminiscent of de Rochemont’s early semidocumentaries.

The early 1960s saw de Rochemont’s last two feature films. In 1960 he produced a film strongly evocative of his first Twentieth Century-Fox productions, a generally well-received espionage drama filmed on location, Man on a String; the next year de Rochemont undertook a radically different project for him, producing José Quintero’s screen version of Tennessee Williams’s novella The Roman Spring of Mrs. Stone, which, despite its impressive cast, received but lukewarm critical acclaim. After that film, de Rochemont would never produce a feature film again. As a newsreel innovator in the 1930s and producer of distinctive Hollywood features in the 1940s, features that broke away from established Hollywood practice in both production technique and, especially with Lost Boundaries, content, de Rochemont achieved high visibility both within and without the motion picture industry. By the 1950s, however, de Rochemont’s particular brand of “pictorial journalism,” in light of new trends in documentary production and television news, had lost its luster. Although de Rochemont did not remain active in feature film production, he did remain active in industrial and educational film production: until his death Louis de Rochemont Associates was a prolific producer of nontheatrical films, ranging from foreign language educational films (the 143-part Nous Parlons Français) to basketball instructional films to a series of informational and promotional films for the American Medical Association.

—William Lafferty

DEUTSCH, Adolph

Films as Composer or Arranger:

1936 Mr. Deeds Goes to Town (Capra)
1937 Tovarich (Litvak); Submarine D-I (Bacon); They Won’t Forget (LeRoy); The Great Garrick (Whale); Mr. Dodd Takes the Air (Green); Swing Your Lady (Enright)
1938 Fools for Scandal (LeRoy); Racket Busters (Bacon); Valley of the Giants (Keighley) (co); Broadway Muskeeters (Farrow); Heart of the North (Seiler); Four’s a Crowd (Curtiz); Cowboy from Brooklyn (Bacon)
1939 Angels Wash Their Faces (Enright); Off the Record (Flood); The Kid from Kokomo (Seiler); Indianapolis Speedway (Bacon); Espionage Agent (Bacon); The Oklahoma Kid (Bacon) (co); Gone with the Wind (Fleming) (co)
1940 They Drive by Night (The Road to Frisco) (Walsh); Torrid Zone (Keighley); Castle on the Hudson (Years Without Days) (Litvak); Saturday’s Children (V. Sherman); East of the River (Green); Flowing Gold (Green); The Fighting 69th (Keighley); Three Cheers for the Irish (Bacon); Tugboat Annie Sails Again (Seiler)
1941 The Maltese Falcon (Huston); High Sierra (Walsh); The Great Mr. Nobody (Stoloff); Kisses for Breakfast (Seiler); Underground (V. Sherman); Manpower (Walsh); Singapore Woman (Negulesco)
1942 Across the Pacific (Huston); All Through the Night (V. Sherman); Jake Girl (Bernhardt); The Big Shot (Seiler); Lucky Jordan (Tuttle); Larceny (Bacon); You Can’t Escape (Graham); George Washington Slept Here (Keighley)
1943 Action in the North Atlantic (Bacon); Nothern Pursuit (Walsh)
1944 Uncertain Glory (Walsh); The Doughgirls (Kern)
1945 The Mask of Dimitrios (Negulesco); Danger Signal (Florey); Escape in the Desert (Blatt)
1946 Nobody Lives Forever (Negulesco); Three Strangers (Negulesco); Shadow of a Woman (Santley)
1947 Blaze of Noon (Farrow); Ramrod (de Toth)
1948 Whispering Smith (Fenton); Julia Misbehaves (Conway)
1949 Intruder in the Dust (Brown); Little Women (LeRoy); The Stratton Story (Wood)
1950 Mrs. O’Malley and Mr. Malone (Taurog); The Big Hangover (Krasna); Father of the Bride (Minnelli); Stars in My Crown (Tourneur); Pagan Love Song (Alton); The Yellow Cab Man (Donohue)
1951 Soldiers Three (Garnett)
1952 The Belle of New York (Walters)
1953 Torch Song (Walters); The Band Wagon (Minnelli)
1954 Seven Brides for Seven Brothers (Donen) (co); The Long, Long Trailer (Minnelli); Deep in My Heart (Donen)
1955 Oklahoma! (Zinnemann); Interrupted Melody (Bernhardt); Battle of Gettysburg (Hoggman—doc)
1956 Tea and Sympathy (Minnelli); The Rack (Laven)
1957 Funny Face (Donen); Les Girls (Cukor)
1958 The Matchmaker (Anthony)
1959 Some Like It Hot (Wildcr)
1960 The Apartment (Wildcr)
1961 Go Naked in the World (MacDougall)

Films as Music Director:

1931 The Smiling Lieutenant (Lubitsch)
1948 Take Me Out to the Ball Game (Berkeley)
1950 Annie Get Your Gun (Sidney) (co)
1951 Show Boat (Sidney) (co)
1952 Million Dollar Mermaid (LeRoy)

Publications

By DEUTSCH: articles—

On DEUTSCH: articles—

Rivista del Cinematografo (Rome), May 1980.

* * *

Adolph Deutsch was one of those great unrecognized talents who collectively worked behind the scenes to help create the great MGM musicals of the 1950s. Deutsch worked on nearly all of them. He was nominated for Academy Awards for scoring The Band Wagon from Arthur Freed’s unit, and he won Oscars for his work on two minor musical efforts, Annie Get Your Gun and Oklahoma! as well as for Seven Brides for Seven Brothers.

Deutsch’s career in music divides neatly into three parts. This classically trained musician earned his spurs as an arranger in New York, serving an apprenticeship on many Broadway shows, helping such composers as Irving Berlin, Richard Rogers, and George Gershwin. Like others in the 1930s, he also dabbled, because the money was so good, in the fledgling radio industry. Indeed he toiled full-time on Paul Whiteman’s Music Hall, a network radio program, for three years before moving to even bigger money in Hollywood.

Deutsch moved to California in the late 1930s to work for Warner Brothers, and scored such films as High Sierra, The Maltese Falcon, and Action in the North Atlantic. But probably his greatest fame within the Hollywood community came with a ‘‘loan out’’ in 1939 when he helped Max Steiner, a fellow Warner contract musician, with the three-hour score for Gone with the Wind.

After World War II Deutsch moved to MGM and became part of the team under producer Arthur Freed which created the greatest set of musicals in movie history. He also scored non-musical films such as Father of the Bride and The Stratton Story. Like many of the great ‘‘unknown’’ musicians of his era, Deutsch understood that his function was to help, not star in the movie, ‘‘A film musician is like a mortician—he can’t bring the body back to life but he’s expected to make it look better.’’ Deutsch was part of an MGM music department which many critics argue may never have been equalled.

—Douglas Gomery

---

DIAMOND, I. A. L.

Writer and Producer. Nationality: American. Born: Itek Domnnici, Romania, 7 June 1920; emigrated to the United States, 1929. Education: Attended Boys High School, Brooklyn, New York; Columbia University, New York, 1938–41. Family: Married Barbara Bentley, 1945. Career: 1941–43—junior writer at Paramount; 1944—first film as writer, Murder in the Blue Room; 1951–55—writer for 20th Century-Fox; 1955—began collaboration with Billy Wilder; 1959—began producing his own films. Awards: Writers Guild Award for Love in the Afternoon, 1957; Some Like It Hot, 1959; The Apartment, 1960 (also Academy Award and New York Film Critics Award); Writers Guild Laurel Award, 1979. Died: In Beverly Hills, California, 21 April 1988.

---

Films as Writer:

1944 Murder in the Blue Room (Goodwins)
1946 Never Say Goodbye (Kern); Two Guys from Milwaukee (Butler); Love and Learn (de Cordova)
1947 Always Together (de Cordova)
1948 Romance on the High Seas (It’s Magic) (Curtiz) (additional dialogue); Two Guys from Texas (Two Texas Knights) (Butler)
1949 The Girl from Jones Beach (Godfrey); It’s a Great Feeling (Butler) (story)
1951 Love Nest (Newman); Let’s Make It Legal (Sale)
1952 Monkey Business (Hawks); Something for the Birds (Wise)
1956 That Certain Feeling (Panama and Frank)
1957 Love in the Afternoon (Wilder)
1958 Merry Andrew (Kidd)

Films as Writer and Co-associate Producer:

1959 Some Like It Hot (Wilder)
1960 The Apartment (Wilder)
1961 One, Two, Three (Wilder)
1963 Irma La Douce (Wilder)
1964 Kiss Me, Stupid (Wilder)
1966 The Fortune Cookie (Meet Whiplash Willie) (Wilder)
1969 Cactus Flower (Saks) (sc only)
1970 The Private Life of Sherlock Holmes (Wilder)
1972  Avanti! (Wilder) (co-sc)
1974  The Front Page (Wilder) (co-sc)
1978  Fedora (Wilder)
1981  Buddy Buddy (Wilder)

Publications

By DIAMOND: scripts (with Billy Wilder)—

Some Like It Hot, New York, 1959.
Irma La Douce, New York, 1963.

By DIAMOND: articles—

American Film (Washington, DC), May 1982.
Films and Filming (London), May 1982.

On DIAMOND: articles—

Sight and Sound (London), Winter 1969–70.
Show (New York), June 1970.
Focus on Film (London), Summer 1973.

* * *

I. A. L. Diamond’s talent as a writer emerged at Columbia University, where, in 1941, his newsworthy contribution to the school’s annual Varsity Show resulted in a story in the New York Times. Paramount Studios read of his success and offered him a ten-week contract as a junior writer. Diamond gave up his plans to attend Columbia School of Journalism and headed for Hollywood. The studio picked up his option, but his screenwriting efforts went unproduced. So in 1943 Diamond left Paramount, wrote one screenplay for Universal, and eventually negotiated a contract with Warner Bros. There he worked on several box-office successes, particularly the Dennis Morgan-Jack Carson vehicles (Two Guys from Milwaukee, Two Guys from Texas, and It’s a Great Feeling), but these and Diamond’s other comedy assignments were frothy diversions at best. His work at 20th Century-Fox in the early 1950s was in the same vein; the most memorable of these films is Monkey Business, a screwball-style comedy directed by Howard Hawks. During these years Diamond’s work lacked distinction, his opportunities for stylistic development hindered by the collaborative nature of the studio system. He left Fox after only three films and began freelancing.

Coincident with his first notoriety, it was once again his talent at writing sketches rather than screenplays that brought Diamond his next opportunity. The writer-director Billy Wilder, impressed by the skits Diamond wrote for a Writers Guild dinner, asked him to cowrite a screenplay. Wilder had worked with several writers since his breakup with the writer-producer Charles Brackett, but had failed to find the ideal collaborator. Though their personalities were dramatically different, Diamond’s withdrawn, introverted qualities proved to be the perfect balance for Wilder’s extrovert nature. They not only shared a common European immigrant background, but the same dry sense of humor.

Beginning with Love in the Afternoon, their partnership spanned 25 years and a dozen films. While popular and critical reception of the pictures varied, their combined talents created some of the best and most enduring comedy/dramas of the late 1950s and early 1960s. Witty dialogue and sophisticated sexual situations marked their stories. They openly challenged the long-standing assumption that all Hollywood productions should be family oriented, and provided moviegoers with tasteful, adult entertainment. Their most satisfying pictures combined cynicism with sentiment, playing the two extremes against each other until the softer side of human nature won out. Frequently focused on illicit sex, their scenarios were also about love and the emotional vicissitudes of intimate relationships.

Innocence was sometimes ascribed to the female characters (Audrey Hepburn in Love in the Afternoon or Marilyn Monroe in Some Like It Hot) and sometimes to the males (Jack Lemmon in The Apartment or Joe E. Brown in Some Like It Hot). Their most popular and complicated exposé of male/female relationships, Some Like It Hot, showed masculinity taking on a new kind of innocence when two sexually savvy musicians (Tony Curtis and Jack Lemmon), disguise themselves as women to escape Chicago gangsters.

For Diamond and Wilder cynicism knew neither sexual nor age boundaries; it belonged to the middle-aged male (Gary Cooper in Love in the Afternoon and Fred MacMurray in The Apartment), to the youthful bachelor (Curtis and Lemmon in Some Like It Hot), and to the simple working girl (Shirley MacLaine in The Apartment and Irma La Douce). They poked fun at modern mores (Avanti!), at the American Dream (One, Two, Three), at ambition (Kiss Me, Stupid), and at greed (The Fortune Cookie). Their repeated casting of stars such as Lemmon, MacLaine, and Walter Matthau gave an additional continuity to their work. Particularly effective was the teaming of Lemmon and Matthau in a series of films (The Fortune Cookie, The Front Page, and Buddy Buddy) focusing on male relationships.

During the 1970s their work lost the bite and zest of the earlier pieces, perhaps because the genuine sentiment of the team’s contemporar y satires was replaced by a less appealing nostalgia. Attempting to recapture the lost innocence of another time, their productions of The Private Life of Sherlock Holmes, The Front Page, and Fedora lacked meaning for modern audiences.

Diamond took one significant respite from Wilder to adapt the Broadway success Cactus Flower. The material proved a perfect outlet for his urbane repartee.

—Joanne L. Yeck

DIKES, William

Cinematographer and Director. Nationality: American. Born: Newark, New Jersey, 1952. Education: Degrees from Howard University School of Architecture and New York University Graduate School of Film. Family: Married twice; second wife, Traci; one daughter and one son. Career: Filmed surgical procedures for Howard University
Ernest Dickerson

Medical School and commercials for Nike; cinematographer for all of Spike Lee’s films, 1981–92; began career as a director with PBS documentary Spike & Co.: Do It A Capella, 1990; photographed television series Tales from the Darkside and Law and Order, 1990; filmed music videos for Anita Baker, Bruce Springsteen, Miles Davis, the Neville Brothers, and others; founded Original Film, a bi-coastal company formed to produce television commercials and public service announcements, 1992. Awards: New York Film Critics Circle Award, Best Cinematography, for Do the Right Thing, 1989; L.A. Outfest Grand Jury Award for Outstanding American Narrative Feature, for Blind Faith, 1999. Agent: Dolores Robinson Agency, 10683 Santa Monica Blvd., Los Angeles, CA, 90025, U.S.A.

Films as Cinematographer:

1982 Joe’s Bed-Stuy Barbershop: We Cut Heads (Lee)
1984 The Brother From Another Planet (Sayles)
1985 Krush Groove (Schultz)
1986 She’s Gotta Have It (Lee) (+ to)
1987 Enemy Territory (Manoogian); Eddie Murphy Raw (doc) (Townsend)
1988 School Daze (Lee)
1989 Do the Right Thing (Lee)
1990 The Laserman (Wong); Def by Temptation (Bond); Ava & Gabriel (de Rooy); Mo’ Better Blues (Lee)
1991 Jungle Fever (Lee)
1992 Cousin Bobby (doc) (Demme); Malcolm X (Lee)

Films as Director:

1992 Juice (+ co-sc)
1994 Surviving the Game
1995 Tales From the Crypt: Demon Knight
1996 Bulletproof
1998 Ambushed; Blind Faith (for TV); Futuresport (for TV)
1999 Strange Justice (for TV)
2000 Bones

Publications

By DICKERSON: articles—

On DICKERSON: books—

Lee, Spike, Do the Right Thing (journal, production notes, and script), New York, 1989.

On DICKERSON: articles—

* * *

Ernest Dickerson’s career has so far divided rather decisively into two parts: until 1991, he was exclusively a cinematographer, and since 1992, he has been exclusively a director. He was Spike Lee’s director of photography on all his films from student projects (culminating in the hour-long Joe’s Bed-Stuy Barbershop: We Cut Heads) through Malcolm X, creating a distinctive look that sets these films apart from Lee’s post-Dickerson work. As a director he began auspiciously with Juice, one of the best of the youth-crime dramas of the early 1990s, but went on to make a series of genre films that received little critical notice or box office success. Recent forays into social melodrama rather than action-thriller suggest that he may be finding a voice for himself in a different genre while continuing to engage himself in stories of the ongoing struggles of blacks in America.

Spike Lee’s book on the making of his first feature, She’s Gotta Have It, describes how Dickerson was an important collaborator. It was the latter’s idea to shoot the film in black and white (and the dance scene in color), and he directed the scenes in which Lee appears onscreen as Mars Blackmon. Shot in super 16mm, the film is handsomely realized, most strikingly in its inventive lighting and framing for each of the sex scenes between Nola and one of her three lovers.

Do the Right Thing, Lee’s third feature, is visually remarkable in many ways, beginning with the fact that it appears to take place on a single hot day and night on a Brooklyn street. Actually, the film was shot on location over the course of several weeks in varying weather, even occasionally in rain (as in Radio Raheem’s first encounter with some youths sitting on an apparently sunny stoop). Dickerson very precisely drew up a scheme noting the time of day each scene must take place, in order to create the sense of inexorable movement from sweltering dawn to glowing dusk. He has commented on his choice of hot colors for the night sequences too (rather than the typical blues that suggest a cooling down), and on the need—for this and all films with a cast of people of color—to choose the right lighting and film stocks to bring out the full rich range of light and dark skin tones. Do the Right Thing is filled with so many memorable shots that every viewer might have different favorites: e.g., the first shot after the opening credits, a remarkable pullback from the lips of Senor Love Daddy (Samuel L. Jackson) at his radio mike to a wide view of the street where the whole film will take place; or the radiant late-afternoon look of Jade (Joie Lee) in her pink dress and hat. Of Dickerson’s other films for Lee, one might single out ‘Mo Better Blues for its ‘jazzy’ camera movements to suggest the improvisatory nature of the music, and Malcolm X for its shifting color schemes for the different phases of Malcolm’s life.

Dickerson’s first feature as director, completed before Malcolm X, remains in many ways his most accomplished. Based on his own preliminary script, Juice traces the lives of four Harlem youths spiraling out of control. (Dickerson gave all four actors their first major screen roles, with Omar Epps and music star Tupac Shakur going on to important film careers, tragically short in the case of the latter.) The plot may be a bit schematic, with Q (Epps) aspiring to win fame in the hip hop world of DJ contests, while Bishop (Shakur) watches White Heat rather too intensely, identifying himself with James Cagney’s lunatic gangster, whom he sees “taking destiny in his own hands” and “going out in a blaze.” Bishop lures his pals into a grocery-store robbery that he turns into murder, then psychotically seeks to slay each of his now former buddies. But Dickerson gives the drama a rich texture and density, partly by including memorable minor characters (notably those played by Queen Letifah and Samuel L. Jackson), but especially through the photography and pacing. He places his characters solidly within Harlem settings which are full of detail without any shots seeming self-consciously picturesque or cluttered. He finds striking locations, like a deserted courtyard which seems like the bottom of a well, into which the friends flee after the robbery and where Bishop slays one of them—or the 125th St. Viaduct, under which Bishop chases Q. Also effective is the overall arc of the drama from bright daylight in the first half to predominantly night in the second half, as the story turns from kids playing hokey and stealing records to murder and pursuit. The DJ contest is excitingly portrayed with restless camera and fast editing, while a funeral scene, right after an intense police grilling, slows down the pace at a point where the drama needs it. Shakur’s sudden creepy appearances onscreen in the second half are rather horror-movie in style, but his performance is disturbing in its intensity. Juice may be a little weak in its final resolution, and it has been criticized for placing blame for ruined lives on individual psychosis rather than larger social forces of racism, but Dickerson has defended his film in terms of its being explicitly about peer pressure.

Dickerson’s subsequent films continue to tell troubled stories of African Americans, most often using action-melodrama as a vehicle. Surviving the Game, one of many remakes of 1932’s The Most Dangerous Game, updates the tale of a madman hunting humans for sport by having a group of affluent “weekend warrior” types spouting jargon about “embracing the animal within” themselves and getting in touch with their “prime masculine essence,” while their victims are ghettion Loners lured to a remote wilderness with promises of a job. The film plays down naked racism by having references only to “the poor” or to “someone like you” (i.e., the hero, played by Ice-T), and casting Charles S. Dutton (rather implausibly) as one of the vicious hunters. All the same, the satisfaction of the drama comes from seeing an unarmed but resourceful black man outwit his mostly white pursuers. To Dickerson’s credit, the film has original touches like having the hunt played out in woods ironically bathed in splendid golden light, rather than going for a noirish look; and although the villains do a lot of scene-chewing, the director allows one of them, Gary Busey, the opportunity to deliver at leisure a chilling, brilliantly acted monologue. Unfortunately, the final scene of the film, back in a ghetto alleyway, is so improbable and ineptly staged that everyone involved seems to have given up on the project.

One can imagine Dickerson having a lark with the horror-movie conventions of Demon Knight, his third project; but Bulletproof—an “action-comedy” featuring a black cop and white crook, friends turned enemies, fleeing both police and mobsters—accomplishes little other than providing Adam Sandler some good opportunities to display his distinctive humor (most notably a Whitney Houston imitation). Harmed by the script, Dickerson finds no way to make the co-star, Damon Wayans, anything but thick-headed and unamusing, while the quite graphic violence seems at odds with the light comedy, and the combination of misogyny and constant jokes about homosexual acts and the quarreling friends being “sweet on” each other give the film a most peculiar tone. Production values are undistinguished except for some handsome lighting (as in nearly all of Dickerson’s projects). One other genre piece, Futuresport, was originally a pilot for a TV series, shot both for a network showing and for an R-rated videotape release. This is Dickerson’s first directorial foray into science fiction, though less Blade Runner than Max Headroom—indeed, both the look of this near-future world and the plot seem directly derived from that 1980s series. It does boast some snazzy footage of the titular game—a kind of co-ed hockey played on floating skateboards—and Wesley Snipes has fun with a Rasta accent as a mysterious possible villain, but the film is otherwise far from a major achievement.

Ambushed, on the other hand, deserves more recognition than it has received to date. Its virtues are those of a “B” movie of the 1940s, with haunting, powerful scenes embedded in hokey melodrama and some unconvincing action (including more than one ambush). The plot involves another unlikely pair on the run: here, a black cop and a vicious-mouthed 12-year-old son of a neo-Nazi, fleeing both a corrupt police force and gangs of murderous racists. The setting is some Southern state of today where black children are regularly kidnapped, black men are routinely threatened with lynching, and less-than-fully-racist white children are murdered by their fathers, without any police interference. Yet the film features some genuinely moving scenes between fathers and sons or surrogate sons, and an atmospheric climax in a deserted industrial complex, with lots of canted angles. At its best moments, Ambushed seems to have a “B”-movie conviction about its own preposterous situations and dialogue.
More recently Dickerson has tried his hand at domestic melodrama, with mixed results. In Blind Faith his usual eye for striking lighting effects is in evidence, but he does little to make plausible (or compellingly lurid) a plot, set in the 1950s, in which the first black cop in his Bronx precinct (Charles Dutton in one of his rare unconvincing performances) helps cover up the white gang murder of a young black homosexual, even though he knows that doing so will cause his own gay son to be sentenced to death for a murder that was really self-defense. Far more successful is Strange Justice, a retelling of the Anita Hill/Clarence Thomas controversy. While the producer and head writer claim to have scrupulously (or perhaps calculatedly) taken a neutral position on who was telling the truth, with the drama focusing upon media exploitation, one might suspect Dickerson and his leading actors (Regina Taylor and Delroy Lindo) of giving more credence to Hill’s side. Whether or not it was Dickerson’s own idea to stage the climactic speeches at the hearing as “heightened” drama (veering into fantasy, most theatrically when Thomas strips off his shirt and pulls his tie in a noose, before we snap back to the ‘‘real’’ hearing), the scenes work, and the whole film features nuanced performances. Though Dickerson has not yet achieved the status of well-known “auteur” among critics or public, works as varied as Juice and Strange Justice reveal an important artist whose best work may be yet to come.

—Joseph Milicia

DILLON, Carmen

Art Director. Nationality: British. Born: Cricklewood, London, 1908. Education: Attended New Hall Convent, Chelmsford, Essex; qualified as architect. Career: Actress and designer for amateur dramatics; 1934—assistant to Ralph Brinton, Wembley Studios; then long association with Two Cities and Rank. Awards: Academy Award, for Hamlet, 1948; Venice Festival prize, for The Importance of Being Earnest, 1952. Died: 1995.

Films as Art Director:

- 1937 The Five Pound Man (Parker)
- 1938 Who Goes Next? (Elvey)
- 1939 French without Tears (Asquith) (asst); The Mikado (Schertzing) (asst)
- 1940 Freedom Radio (The Voice in the Night) (Asquith)
- 1941 Quiet Wedding (Asquith)
- 1942 Unpublished Story (French); The First of the Few (Spitfire) (L. Howard)
- 1943 The Gentle Sex (L. Howard); The Demi-Paradise (Adventure for Two) (Asquith)
- 1945 Henry V (Olivier); The Way to the Stars (Johnny in the Clouds) (Asquith)
- 1946 Carnival (Haynes); School for Secrets (Ustinov)
- 1947 White Candle Inn (High Furry) (French)
- 1948 Vice Versa (Ustinov); Woman Hater (Young); Hamlet (Olivier)
- 1949 Cardboard Cavalier (Forde)
- 1950 The Reluctant Widow (Knowles); The Woman in Question (Asquith); The Rocking-Horse Winner (Pelissier)
- 1951 The Browning Version (Asquith)
1970  The Rise and Rise of Michael Rimmer (Billington)
1971  Catch Me a Spy (Clement); The Go-Between (Losey)
1973  Lady Caroline Lamb (Bolt); The Nelson Affair (A Bequest to the Nation) (Jones)
1974  Bailey (Pinter)
1975  In This House of Brede (Schaefer—for TV); Love among the Ruins (Cukor—for TV)
1977  Julia (Zinnemann)
1979  The Corn Is Green (Cukor—for TV)

Publications

By DILLON: article—

On DILLON: articles—

Picturegoer (London), 16 July 1949.
Cinema Studio (London), November 1951.
Focus on Film (London), Spring 1973.

* * *

Carmen Dillon was born in 1908 in London. As did so many art directors, she originally studied architecture. Dillon worked as a set dresser and art director on many pictures for Two Cities and Rank, and for nearly a quarter of century she was the only woman art director working in English films.

Early in her career Dillon collaborated with the great British art directors Paul Sheriff and Roger Furse. She assisted Sheriff on Olivier’s Henry V, and the sets of Olivier’s Hamlet were by Dillon with design by Furse. These two pictures were very significant in the history of film design. Henry V changed style from a ‘‘realistic’’ look at a historic (Elizabathan) time, to a historic theatrical setting, and finally to a re-creation of the style, color, and spatial sense of medieval illuminated manuscripts. It was a daring and successful undertaking. As a contrast to the highly colored spectacle of Henry V, Olivier filmed the tragedy of Hamlet in black and white. The impression was that of an etching. The design emphasized spaces, with ominous repeating arches and geometric platforms, giving a sense of modern minimal theater as well as that of a dark and drafty castle.

Dillon did several historical reconstruction films. The Importance of Being Earnest and The Go-Between amply illustrate her skills as a researcher. In 1977 Dillon worked with Gene Callahan and Willy Holt on Julia. This film had great potential as a costumer. Art Deco was enjoying a revival and there were enough scenes of the wealthy, the bohemians, and the decadents for some standard streamlining and a bit of neon here and there. But the picture had none of that. Except for a calendar on the wall and the political events taking place it could have represented any time. This is critical. It gives the film a timeless meaning that speaks beyond a particular era and style. This story does not only tell specifically about Julia fighting Nazi atrocities but also how a brave human can stand up against injustice and evil. It is not just about the author Lillian Hellman and her deep relationship with a childhood companion, but of the strength of loving friendships. Furthermore, this film concerns nonmaterialistic characters who care more about feelings and ideas than decor. Dillon must convey that tone.

Julia uses clean simple lines. Dillon emphasizes few objects, and then with the precision of a still life. Objects, when shown, have specific relationships to the story. They are never there just for local color. Again, the sets are painted with the sparcity of a modern minimalist stage set. Often, particularly in the scenes of Hellman and Dashiell Hammett, darkness forms a cover. At times it serves as a protective blanket, at others as a threat of the unknown. Sometimes it serves for dramatic composition. Light also plays many roles—exposing, attacking, enlightening. Scene after scene features silhouettes and outlines, lamps and lighting fixtures. Ceilings are shown, giving a feeling of claustrophobia. Dillon characterizes Julia’s childhood in strongly lit reflective surfaces broadcasting to the viewer the opulent wealth of her family. There are few objects—the highly polished silver, the crystal chandeliers, the red velvet chairs. The rest of the house is almost bare, even the few hanging paintings blend into the blankness of the walls. The tall arches throughout oppress and intimidate. The staircase at the end of the film serves a similar function. Julia’s room, in contrast, feels cozy, an all-white interior which symbolizes purity rather than coldness.

In Julia Dillon’s free use of space and lighting as key elements in design goes back to her earlier work on Hamlet. These elements project inner feelings and serve a purpose other than that of decorative surface trappings. Dillon’s versatility allows her to use detail or to eliminate it, in her pursuit of achieving an appropriate narrative effect.

—Edith C. Lee

DINOV, Todor

Animator. Nationality: Bulgarian. Born: Greece, 1919; grew up in Sofia, Bulgaria. Education: Studied art in Sofia; studied under Ivanov-Vano at the Institute of Motion Picture Arts, Moscow, two years. Career: Caricaturist and journalist; 1953—first animated film, Marko the Hero; 1969—directed first live-action film; taught visual communications, University of Sofia.

Films as Animator:

1953  Junak Markos (Marko the Hero)
1956  The Little Guardian Angel
1959  Prometheus
1960  Story of a Twig
1962  The Lightning Conductor
1963  Jealously; The Apple
1965  The Daisy
1969  Ikonostast (co-d live-action)
1970  Prometheus XX
1971  Chain Reaction
1974  Lamjata (live-action)
1975  Perpetual Motion
1977  Baruten Bukvar (live-action)
1980  The Rain of Paris
1986  Grehut na Malitsa
Publications

By DINOV: articles—

Bulgarian Film (Sofia), no.4, 1984.

On DINOV: articles—

Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), no. 4, 1966.
Bulgarian Film (Sofia), no. 6, 1968.
Bulgarian Film (Sofia), no. 8, 1979.
Bulgarian Film (Sofia), no. 4, 1985.
Kino (Sofia), June 1994.

*Todor Dinov is reputed to be the veteran of Bulgarian animation from its birth in the mid-1950s. He studied figurative art in Sofia in his formative years and was among the students selected to continue their studies in Moscow. There he found a place in the Institute of Motion Picture Arts where he learned his technique and approach to animation from the great Russian master, Ivanov-Vano for two years. Ivanov-Vano’s influence has prevailed all through Dinov’s life, though Dinov was able to expand his interests over a much broader field. He had a period in journalism, acted as a caricaturist for a local newspaper, and published satirical magazines. One of the later ones, A Propos, a collection of drawings and articles by well-known humorists, enjoyed an international success in 1983. Nevertheless, Dinov achieved his reputation through his animated films.

Dinov’s first production, Marko the Hero, was made in the Sofia Animated Film Studio in 1953. While he understands how to appeal to the public, he never compromises his serious outlook and his belief that good will eventually overcome bad. He has also been consistent with his visual style. His work is graphically pleasing without being revolutionary and experimental beyond the reach of his audience. As the Bulgarian animation studio expanded and the second generation of animators emerged, including Donyo Donev and Stoyan Dukov (eventually they were known as the Three Big Ds), Dinov took time off to try his skills as scriptwriter and as director of live-action films, as so many animators have done when the opportunity arises. Possibly more than others of the former Eastern Bloc, Dinov has succeeded with some of his live films and has become established as one of the popular Bulgarian directors, as well as a supremely talented animator.

—John Halas

DISNEY, Walt

Animator. Nationality: American. Born: Walter Elias Disney in Chicago, 5 December 1901. Education: Attended McKinley High School, Chicago; Kansas City Art Institute, 1915. Family: Married Lillian Bounds, 1925; children: Diane, Sharon. Career: 1918—in France with Red Cross Ambulance Corps, arriving just after Armistice; 1919—returned to Kansas, became commercial art studio apprentice, met Ub Iwerks; with Iwerks briefly in business, doing illustrations and ads; 1920—joined Kansas City Film Ad Co., making cartoon commercials for local businesses; 1922—incorporated Laugh-o-Gram Films, first studio, went bankrupt; 1923— to Hollywood, contract with M. J. Winkler, began Alice in Cartoonland series; soon joined by Iwerks; 1927—ended Alice series, began Oswald the Lucky Rabbit series; salary dispute with Winkler; formed Walt Disney Productions; 1928—Steamboat Willie released, first synchronized sound cartoon, featuring Mickey Mouse; made deal with Pat Powers for independent distribution; 1930—began distributing through Columbia; 1932—Flowers and Trees, first cartoon in Technicolor and first to win an Academy Award; released through United Artists; 1937—Snow White, first feature-length cartoon, marked innovative use of multi-plane camera, developed by Disney Studios; began releasing through RKO; 1941—strike by Disney staff belonging to Cartoonists Guild; Art Babbitt fired, later rehired; changes introduced included credit titles on cartoon shorts; 1944—“Mickey Mouse” is password on D-Day invasion of Europe; 1945—“True Life Adventure” series began, Disney’s first live-action films; 1951–60—Disney developed several television programs; 1954—formed Buena Vista Distributing Co. for release of Disney and occasionally other films; hosting Disneyland TV series (later Walt Disney Presents, Walt Disney’s Wonderful World of Color, The Wonderful World of Disney); 1955—Disneyland opened, Anaheim, California; The Mickey Mouse Club premiered on TV; 1960—Walt Disney’s Wonderful World of Color premiered on television; 1971—Walt Disney World opened in Orlando, Florida. Awards: Special Academy Award, 1932; Special Academy Award for contributions to sound, with William Garity and John N.A.
Films as Director, Animator and Producer:

1920  Newman Laugh-O-Grams series
1922  Cinderella; The Four Musicians of Bremen; Goldie Locks and the Three Bears; Jack and the Beanstalk; Little Red Riding Hood; Pass in Boots
1923  Alice’s Wonderland; Tommy Tucker’s Tooth; Martha

Films as Head of Walt Disney Productions, co-d with Ub Iwerks:

1928  Steamboat Willie
1929  Plane Crazy (made as silent, 1928, but released with synch sound); The Gallopin’ Gaucho (made as silent, 1928, but released with synch sound); The Barn Dance; The Opry House; When the Cat’s Away; The Barnyard Battle; The Plow Boy; The Karnival Kid; Mickey’s Choo Choo; The Jazz Fool; Jungle Rhythm; The Haunted House
1930  The Barnyard Concert (sole director); Just Mickey (Fiddling Around) (sole director); The Cactus Kid (sole director)

Other Films as Head of Walt Disney Productions:

1937  Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs (Hand)
1940  Pinocchio (Sharpsteen); Fantasia (Sharpsteen)
1941  The Reluctant Dragon (Luske, Handley, Beebe, Verity, Blystone and Werker) (+ ro); Dumbo (Sharpsteen)
1942  Bambi (Hand); Saludos Amigos (Ferguson) (+ ro)
1943  Victory through Air Power (Hand and Potter)
1944  The Three Caballeros (Ferguson)
1946  Make Mine Music (Grant); Song of the South (Jackson and Foster)
1947  Fan and Fancy Free (Sharpsteen)
1948  Melody Time (Sharpsteen); So Dear to My Heart (Luske and Schuster)
1949  Ichabod and Mr. Toad (The Adventures of Ichabod and Mr. Toad) (Sharpsteen)
1950  Cinderella (Sharpsteen); Treasure Island (Haskin)
1951  Alice in Wonderland (Sharpsteen)
1952  The Story of Robin Hood and His Merrie Men (Annakin)
1953  Peter Pan (Luske, Geronimi, and Jackson); The Sword and the Rose (Annakin); Rob Roy, the Highland Rogue (French)
1954  20,000 Leagues under the Sea (Fleischer); The Littlest Outlaw (El pequeno proscriptoro) (Gavalion)
1955  Lady and the Tramp (Luske, Geronimi and Jackson); Davy Crockett and the River Pirates
1956  The Great Locomotive Chase (Lyons); Westward Ho the Wagons! (Beaudine)
1957  Johnny Tremain (Stevenson); Old Yeller (Stevenson)
1958  The Light in the Forest (Daughtery); Sleeping Beauty (Geronimi); Tonka (L. Foster)
1959  The Shaggy Dog (Barton); Darby O’Gill and the Little People (Stevenson); Third Man on the Mountain (Annakin); Toby Tyler, or Ten Weeks with a Circus (Barton)
1960  Kidnapped (Stevenson); Pollyanna (Swift); Ten Who Dared (Beaudine); Swiss Family Robinson (Annakin); One Hundred and One Dalmatians (Reitherman, Luske and Geronimi); The Absent-Minded Professor (Stevenson)
1961  Moon Pilot (Neilson); In Search of the Castaways (Stevenson); Nikki, Wild Dog of the North (Couffer and Haldane); The Parent Trap (Swift); Grefriar’s Bobby (Chaffey); Babes in Toyland (Donohue)
1962  Son of Flubber (Stevenson); The Miracle of the White Stallions (Flight of the White Stallions) (Hiller); Big Red (Tokar); Bon Voyage (Neilson); Almost Angels (Born to Sing) (Previn); The Legend of Lobo (Algar and Couffer)
1963  Savage Sam (Tokar); Summer Magic (Neilson); The Incredible Journey (Markle); The Sword in the Stone (Reitherman)
The Misadventures of Merlin Jones (Stevenson); The Three Lives of Thomasina (Chaffey)

1964 A Tiger Walks (Tokar); The Moon-Spinners (Neilson); Mary Poppins (Stevenson); Emil and the Detectives (Tewksbury); Those Calloways (Tokar); The Monkey’s Uncle (Stevenson)

1965 That Darn Cat (Stevenson)

1966 The Ugly Dachshund (Tokar); Lt. Robin Crusoe, U.S.N. (Paul) (story under pseudonym Retlaw Yensid); The Fighting Prince of Donegal (O’Herlihy); Follow Me, Boys! (Tokar); Monkeys, Go Home! (McLaglen); The Adventures of Bullwhip Griffin (Neilson); The Gnome-Mobile (Stevenson)

1967 The Jungle Book (commentary) (Reitherman)

Publications

By DISNEY, book—

Sketch Book, Old Saybrook, CT, 1993.

By DISNEY: articles—

On DISNEY: books—

Rotha, Paul, Celluloid, the Film Today, New York, 1931.

Field, Robert D., The Art of Walt Disney, New York, 1942.

Culhane, Shamus, Talking Animals and Other People, New York, 1986 + filmo.

Grant, John, Encyclopaedia of Walt Disney’s Animated Characters, New York, 1987.

Duchene, Alain, Walt Disney n’est pas mort!, Paris, 1989.

Fanning, Jim, Walt Disney, New York, 1994.

Bell, Elizabeth, Lynda Haas, and Laura Sells, editors, From Mouse to Mermaid: The Politics of Film, Gender, and Culture, Bloomington, Indiana, 1995.

On DISNEY: articles—

Mann, Arthur, in Harper (New York), May 1934.

Boone, Andrew R., “‘A Famous Fairytale is Brought to the Screen as the Pioneer Feature Length Cartoon in Color,’” in Popular Science Monthly (New York), 1938.

Jeanne, René, “‘Comment naquirent les dessins animés,’” in Revue des Deux Mondes (Paris), 15 March 1938.

Ahl, Frances Norene, “‘Disney Techniques in Educational Film,’” in The Social Studies, December 1941.

“‘Walt Disney: Great Teacher,’” in Fortune (New York), August 1942.

“‘Mickey Mouse and Donald Duck Work for Victory,’” in Popular Science Monthly (New York), September 1942.

Mosdell, D., “‘Film Review,’” in Canadian Forum, November 1946.

“Disney Comes to Television,” in Newsweek (New York), 12 April 1954.
Special Disney issue of Kosmorama (Copenhagen), November 1973.
Griﬃthiana (Gemona, Italy), no. 34, December 1988.
Kosmorama (Copenhagen), vol. 35, no. 188, Summer 1989.
The South Atlantic Quarterly, no. 1, 1993.
Positif, no. 388, June 1993.
Newsweek, 26 July 1993.

* * *

Before Walt Disney, there was Émile Cohl (the “ﬁrst animator,” who made over 250 ﬁlms in the early years of the twentieth century); Winsor McCay (whose Gertie the Dinosaur, created in 1914, was the original animated personality); John Randolph Bray (the Henry Ford of animation, whose technological and organizational contributions revolutionized the art form); and Otto Messmer, inventor of Felix the Cat, the Charlie Chaplin of animated characters and the most popular cartoon creation of the 1920s, entertaining audiences before Mickey Mouse ever uttered a squeak.

So why is Walt Disney synonymous with animation? How could Fantasia, Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs, and Bambi have been re-released to theaters every few years and then marketed to home video, to delight generations of children? Simply because no other animator ever duplicated the Disney studio’s appealingly lifelike cartoon characters and wonderful ﬂair for storytelling.

First, Disney was an innovator, a perfectionist who was forever attempting to improve his product and explore the medium to its fullest potential. He was the ﬁrst to utilize sound in animation, in Steamboat Willie, which was the third Mickey Mouse cartoon. The soundtrack here is more than just a gimmick: for example, in an animal concert, a cow’s udder is played like a bagpipe and its teeth are transformed into a xylophone. The musical accompaniment thus emerges from the background, becoming an integral element in the ﬁlm’s structure.

In Flowers and Trees, Disney was the ﬁrst to utilize three-strip Technicolor in animation, a process devised by Joseph Arthur Ball:
Films and Merchant-Ivory Productions, and marketed such traditionally un-Disney-like fare as Pulp Fiction, Kids, Pretty Woman, and The Hand That Rocks the Cradle. But the studio remains mostly synonymous with animation. In the 1990s, it produced a string of animated features which ranks with its classics of decades past: The Lion King, Pocahontas, Beauty and the Beast, and Aladdin. As of 1996, The Lion King rated number five on Variety’s list of all-time money-earning champs, taking in over $312 million. Also ranked in the top 50 were other animated and non-animated Disney fare, which certifies the studio’s status as a major Hollywood player: Aladdin (number 16, $217-million); Toy Story (number 24, $182 million);
Pretty Woman (number 26, $178 million); the previously mentioned Snow White (number 29); Three Men and a Baby (number 34, $167 million); Who Framed Roger Rabbit? (number 42, $154 million); Beauty and the Beast (number 49, $145 million); and The Santa
Clause (number 50, $144 million).

In 1991, Beauty and the Beast became the first animated film ever nominated for a Best Picture Academy Award. And in 1995 came Toy Story, a groundbreaking feature produced completely on computer.

An essay on Walt Disney would be incomplete without a note on Mickey Mouse, the most famous of all Disney creations and one of the world’s most identifiable and best-loved characters. Appropriately, Disney himself was the voice of Mickey, who was originally dated Mortimer. The filmmaker himself best explained the popularity of his mouse: “... Mickey is so simple and uncomplicated, so easy to understand, that you can’t help liking him.”

With pen, pencil, ink, and paint, Walt Disney created a unique, special world. Max and Dave Fleischer, Walter Lantz, Chuck Jones, and many others may all be great animators, but Disney is unarguably
the most identifiable name in the art form.

—Rob Edelman

DI VENANZO, Gianni

Cinematographer. Nationality: Italian. Born: Teramo, 18 December
1920. Career: Camera assistant from early 1940s; 1949—first film as

Films as Cameraman:
1947 La terra trema (Visconti)
1949 La Beauté du diable (Clair)
1950 Miracolo a Milano (Miracle in Milan) (De Sica)

Films as Cinematographer:
1949 Cantoria d’Angeli (Hamza—short); La scuola di Severino (Guerrini—short); Pesca a Mazara del Vallo (Fallette—short); Ponti e porte de Roma (Hanzo—short); La primavera del papa (Hamza—short)
1950 Procida (Fasano—short); S. Cardino (Fasano—short); Carrara
(Lomazi—short)
1951 Achtung banditi! (Lizzani)
1953 Cronache di poveri amanti (Lizzani); Terra straniera
(Corbucci); Amore in città (Love in the City) (Risi and others)
DONAGGIO, Pino

Composer. Nationality: Italian. Born: Burano, 24 November 1941. Education: Studied the violin at Venice Conservatory and Verdi Conservatory, Milan; also studied under Ugo Amendola. Career: Singer and songwriter; 1973—first film score, for Don’t Look Now.

Films as Composer:

1973 Don’t Look Now (Roeg)
1975 Corruzione al palazzo di giustizia (Corruption in the Halls of Justice) (Aliprandi)
1976 Un sussurro nel buio (Aliprandi)
1977 Carrie (De Palma)
1978 Piranha (Dante); Nero Veneziano (Damned in Venice) (Liberatore); Amore, pionbo, e furor (China 9, Liberty 37) (Hellman)
1979 Tourist Trap (Schmoeller); Senza buccia (Aliprandi); Home Movies (De Palma)
1980 The Howling (Dante); Dressed to Kill (De Palma); Augh! Augh! Augh! (Tonioio); Desideria, la vita interiore (Desire, the Interior Life) (Barcelloni); Al di là del bene a del male (Beyond Evil) (Cavani)
1981 Tattoo (B. Brooks); The Fan (Bianchi); Blow Out (De Palma); Il gatto nero (The Black Cat); Fulci; Venezia, carnevale, un amore (Lanfanchi)
1982 Morte in Vaticano (Death in the Vatican) (Aliprandi); Oltre la porta (Behind the Door) (Cavani); Jugando con la muerte (Playing with Death, Target Eagle) (de la Loma); Tex (Hunter)
1983 Hercules (Coates)

---

Publications

On DI VENANZO: articles—

Film (Hanover), no. 5, 1966.
Corruzione al palazzo di giustizia (Corruption in the Halls of Justice) (Aliprandi)
Carrie (De Palma)
Piranha (Dante); Nero Veneziano (Damned in Venice) (Liberatore); Amore, pionbo, e furor (China 9, Liberty 37) (Hellman)
Tourist Trap (Schmoeller); Senza buccia (Aliprandi); Home Movies (De Palma)
The Howling (Dante); Dressed to Kill (De Palma); Augh! Augh! Augh! (Tonioio); Desideria, la vita interiore (Desire, the Interior Life) (Barcelloni); Al di là del bene a del male (Beyond Evil) (Cavani)
Tattoo (B. Brooks); The Fan (Bianchi); Blow Out (De Palma); Il gatto nero (The Black Cat); Fulci; Venezia, carnevale, un amore (Lanfanchi)
Morte in Vaticano (Death in the Vatican) (Aliprandi); Oltre la porta (Behind the Door) (Cavani); Jugando con la muerte (Playing with Death, Target Eagle) (de la Loma); Tex (Hunter)

---

DONAGGIO, Pino

Composer. Nationality: Italian. Born: Burano, 24 November 1941. Education: Studied the violin at Venice Conservatory and Verdi Conservatory, Milan; also studied under Ugo Amendola. Career: Singer and songwriter; 1973—first film score, for Don’t Look Now.

---

Films as Composer:

1973 Don’t Look Now (Roeg)
1975 Corruzione al palazzo di giustizia (Corruption in the Halls of Justice) (Aliprandi)
1976 Un sussurro nel buio (Aliprandi)
1977 Carrie (De Palma)
1978 Piranha (Dante); Nero Veneziano (Damned in Venice) (Liberatore); Amore, pionbo, e furor (China 9, Liberty 37) (Hellman)
1979 Tourist Trap (Schmoeller); Senza buccia (Aliprandi); Home Movies (De Palma)
1980 The Howling (Dante); Dressed to Kill (De Palma); Augh! Augh! Augh! (Tonioio); Desideria, la vita interiore (Desire, the Interior Life) (Barcelloni); Al di là del bene a del male (Beyond Evil) (Cavani)
1981 Tattoo (B. Brooks); The Fan (Bianchi); Blow Out (De Palma); Il gatto nero (The Black Cat); Fulci; Venezia, carnevale, un amore (Lanfanchi)
1982 Morte in Vaticano (Death in the Vatican) (Aliprandi); Oltre la porta (Behind the Door) (Cavani); Jugando con la muerte (Playing with Death, Target Eagle) (de la Loma); Tex (Hunter)
1983 Hercules (Coates)
1984 Over the Brooklyn Bridge (Alby’s Delight) (Golan); Body Double (De Palma); Déjà vu (Richmond); Agatha Christie’s Ordeal by Innocence (Davis)
1985 Sotto il vestito niente (Vanzini); The Berlin Affair (Cavani)
1986 Sette chili in sette giorni (Verdone); Il caso moro (Ferrara); Hotel Colonial (Torrini); Crawlspace (Schmoeller)
1987 The Barbarians (Deodato); Dancers (Ross); Going Bananas (Davidson); Jenatsch (Schmid); La monaca di Monza (Odoriso); Scirocco (Lado)
1988 La Partita (The Match; The Gamble) (Vanzina); Appointment with Death (Winner); Catacombs (Schmoeller); High Frequency (Rosati); Kansas (D. Stevens); Phantom of Death (Deodato); Sacrilege (Odoriso); Zelly and Me (Rathbone)
1989 Indio (De Anda); Night Games (Vadim)
1990 Meridian—Kiss of the Beast (Band); Rito d’amore (Lado); Two Evil Eyes (Romero)
1992 Raising Cain (De Palma); Indio 2—The Revolt (Dawson); A Fine Romance (Tchin-Tchin; Cin Cin) (Saks); La Setta (The Devil’s Daughter) (Soavi); Trauma (Argento); Così fan tutte (All Women Do It) (Brass); Missione d’amore (Risi—mini for TV)
1993 Curse IV: The Ultimate Sacrifice (Schmoeller); Pakt mit dem Tod (Sánchez Silva); Giovanni Falcone (Ferrara); Dove siete Io sono qui (Where Are You? I’m Here) (Cavani—for TV)
1994 Oblivion (Irvin); La Chance (Power and Lovers) (Lado); Botte di Natale (The Night Before Christmas) (Hill)
1995 Soldato ignoto (Aliprandi); Segreto di stato (State Secret) (Ferrara); Palermo Milano solo andata (Fragasso); Mollo tutto (Sánchez Silva); Marchiando nel buio (Spano); Un Eroe borghese (Ordinary Hero) (Placido); Inka Connection (Gremm—mini for TV); Never Talk to Strangers (Hall)
1996 Oblivion 2: Backlash (Irvin); Festival (Avati); L’Arcano incantatore (Mysterious Encounter) (Avati); Squillo (Vanzina); Nach uns die Sintflut (Rothemund—for TV)
1997 La Terza luna (Bellinelli); Il Carniere (The Game Bag) (Zaccaro); Le Ragazze di Piazza di Spagna (Lazotti and Sánchez Silva—series for TV); Die Stunden vor dem Morgengrauen (Gremm)
1998 Die Sünde der Engel (Gremm—for TV); Coppia omicida (Fragasso); Il Tesoro di Damasco (Sánchez Silva) (miniseries for TV); Monella (Brass); Il Mio West (My West) (Veronesi); Prima del tramonto (Incerti); Morte di una ragazza perfetta (Perelli—for TV)
2000 Up at the Villa; Mr. Hughes

Publications

By DONAGGIO: article—

On DONAGGIO: articles—

Pino Donaggio’s association with Brian De Palma on a number of the director’s deliberately Hitchcockian thrillers has led to the composer’s being compared to Bernard Herrmann, and inevitably coming up the loser.

Herrmann provided De Palma with the intense scores for two of the director’s earliest Hitchcock pastiches, Sisters and Obsession. Carrie, Donaggio’s first score for De Palma, was to have been a Herrmann assignment too, but the composer died suddenly. Donaggio has been replacing Herrmann for De Palma ever since.

Early on, Donaggio had established a distinct and recognizable musical voice all his own, characterized by lyrical melodies—usually for woodwinds backed by guitar or piano—juxtaposed against suspense cues provided by jarring chords and sharply sustained string lines.

In general Donaggio’s scores, often conducted by Natalie Massara, show an ability to adapt to a variety of classical and contemporary stylings. Donaggio likes to experiment with a broad range of musical styles, such as the Giorgio Moroder-style effects in Body Double or the pop presentation of a Rossini-style overture for the comedy Home Movies.

His stylistic signature of using the same instrumentation for both love themes and suspenseful passages evidenced itself in his first major score, for Nicolas Roeg’s Don’t Look Now. The score’s lyrical themes give way to trills in the upper registers of the woodwinds, high-pitched strings, and jarring chords on piano, guitar, and harp. Don’t Look Now shows evidence of Donaggio’s classical training as well as his background in jazz and pop, and also shows his ability to deliberately compose against the tone of the film by providing richly melodic themes identified with the characters rather than the terrifying events that are occurring.

By employing Herrmannesque orchestrations and compositional elements in his subsequent work for De Palma, Donaggio has significantly muted this early voice, becoming a sort of ersatz-Herrmann instead—and, therefore, complicit in the negative comparison that haunts him.

His recent, often very different work, in genres other than the De Palma thriller may, in time, bring an end to the invited Herrmann comparisons and lead to his being recognized for his own individual, often lyrical, style. Donaggio has been associated with Joe Dante (Piranha, The Howling) and more recently with Liliana Cavani (Behind the Door, The Berlin Affair). Donaggio has provided scores for Westerns (Amore, piombo, e fuoco), political thrillers (Corruzione al palazzo di giustizia), contemporary dramas (Tex), and light romantic films (Over the Brooklyn Bridge).

Despite the diversity of subject matter and use of various musical styles, these scores are more characteristic of the real—i.e., non-Herrmann—Donaggio, than his work for De Palma.

—Richard R. Ness, updated by John McCarty
DONATI, Danilo

Films as Costume Designer:

1962 La steppa (The Steppe) (Lattuada); Rogopag (Pasolini and others)
1964 Il vangelo secondo Matteo (The Gospel According to St. Matthew) (Pasolini)
1965 La mandragola (Mandragola; The Love Root) (Lattuada)
1966 El Greco (Salee); Uccellacci e uccellini (The Hawks and the Sparrows) (Pasolini); The Taming of the Shrew (Zeffirelli) (co)
1967 Edipo re (Oedipus Rex) (Pasolini)
1968 Romeo and Juliet (Zeffirelli); La cintura di castità (On My Way to the Crusades, I Met a Girl Who . . .) (Festa Campinile)
1969 Porcile (Pigsty) (Pasolini); Medea (Pasolini); Satyricon (Fellini); La monaca di Monza (The Lady of Monza) (E. Visconti)
1970 I clowns (The Clowns) (Fellini)
1971 Il decameron (The Decameron) (Pasolini)
1972 Roma (Fellini); I racconti di Canterbury (The Canterbury Tales) (Pasolini); Fratello sole, sorella luna (Brother Sun, Sister Moon) (Zeffirelli)
1974 Il fiore delle mille e una notte (A Thousand and One Nights) (Pasolini); Amarcord (Fellini)
1975 Salo, o le 120 giornate di Sodoma (Salo—The 120 Days of Sodom) (Pasolini)
1976 Caligula (Brass); Casanova (Fellini)
1979 Hurricane (Troell)
1980 Flash Gordon (Hodges)
1985 Red Sonja (Fleischer)
1986 Ginger e Fred (Fellini)
1987 Intervista (The Interview) (Fellini) (art designer)
1989 Francesco (St. Francis of Assisi) (Cavani)
1994 Il Mostro (The Monster) (Benigni and Filippi)
1996 I Magi randagi (We Free Kings) (Citti) (+ production designer); Nostromo (Reid) (miniserie for TV)
1997 La Vita è bella (Benigni) (+ production designer)

Publications

On DONATI: articles—

Interiors, April 1999.

* * *

When one recalls the films of Federico Fellini, Franco Zeffirelli, and Pier Paolo Pasolini, one inevitably visualizes the creations of Danilo Donati. Those outrageous hats of the Pharisees in The Gospel According to St. Matthew, the richly colored gowns in Romeo and Juliet and The Taming of the Shrew, bizarre interpretations of history in Satyricon and Casanova, eye-popping fashion shows for clowns in The Clowns and for the well-dressed pope in Roma, all these examples illustrate the strength of the Donati vision keeping pace with the powerful images of modern movie masters.

Donati was born in Italy and had originally trained in Florence as a muralist and fresco painter. He had also spent several years as supervising art director at RAO, Italy’s national television network. In addition to his cinema work, Donati designed theatrical productions (including the early stage and opera presentations of Luchino Visconti) and public spectacles.

It is hard to characterize Donati’s work only because he is interested in so many different elements of creation. In his costumes, for example, he uses inventive shapes, sometimes modified from tradition, sometimes entirely fanciful. Color is important. Usually his hues are unbelievably rich, but at other times they are purposefully subdued or faded. Fabrics are important. Specially created textiles were made for Satyricon so that they would in no way resemble anything contemporary.

Donati often uses light reflective surfaces such as sequins or materials such as feathers or furs that create eye-catching movement on the screen. His approach to costume decoration rivals the great Hollywood costume designers of the 1930s. Donati not only uses these techniques, he understands their function. Furthermore, Donati costumes interact with each other; as lovely as they may be individually, they work together to form visual unities (or even contrasts when necessary—as seen in the dinner party of the Spanish and French in Casanova) and themes.

Donati’s oeuvre conjures up monuments to opulence in the minds of many; even lesser films, such as Caligula and the entertaining Dino De Laurentiis production of Flash Gordon were memorable due to their outlandish Donati designs. Nevertheless, Donati equally excels in depicting realism. Consider an earthier work of Fellini, such as Amarcord, or the scruffy peasants peopling Pasolini’s The Decameron; Donati pays as great an attention to details in the rags of the poor and the mundane attire of the middle class, as he would for robes of a Renaissance princess. Often Donati will contrast the ultraglamorous or unusual with the more humble in the same movie.

It is important to note that Donati worked with highly individualistic directors with well-developed visual senses and strong opinions on what they wanted. Zeffirelli’s productions were to be like exquisite oil paintings. Donati’s works for Pasolini were to be revolutionary new interpretations of well-known tales. And as for the films of Fellini . . . well, they are simply Fellini!

Cooperation is essential when a director tries to create a statement of great complexity. Donati’s directors have had very specific visual conceptions they wished to convey. Observe their cast selections: Donati costumes would have to compete with those ravishing faces featured in Zeffirelli films. Pasolini and Fellini extras could have stepped out of the sketch books of Leonardo da Vinci. Of course, Donati did not compete with great men’s visions; he complemented them. Donati’s designs integrate well within the dreams of his directors and at the same time they are distinctively Donati.

—Edith C. Lee
DOUY, Max

Films as Assistant Art Director:

1930 Le Poignard malais (Goupillières); Le Rêve (de Baroncelli); Levy et Cie (Hugon); Kopfiiher ins Gluck (Steinhoff); Das gelbe Haus des King-Fu (Grun); La Petite Lise (Grémillon); Accusée, levez-vous! (M. Tourneur)
1931 La Bête errante (de Gastyne); Les Croix de bois (Bernard); Grains de beauté (Caron); Paris-Mediteranneen (May); Partir (M. Tourneur); Le Roi du cirage (Colombier)
1932 Au nom de la loi (M. Tourneur); L’Ane de Bruidan (Ryder); Enlevez-moi (Perret); Mirages de Paris (Ozep); Les Gaietés de l’escadron (M. Tourneur)
1933 Les Deux Orphelines (M. Tourneur); Chotard et Cie (Renoir); Tout pour rien (Pujol); Charlemagne (Colombier); Ces messieurs de la Sante (Colombier); Totó (J. Tourneur); Les Deux Canards (Schmidt); Il était une fois (Perret); Léopold le bienaimé (Brun); Le Paquebot Tenacity (Duvisvier); Théodore et Cie (Colombier)
1934 L’Atalante (Vigo); Les Misérables (Bernard—3 parts); Dactylo se marie (May and Pujol); Sapho (Perret); Mam’zelle Spahi (de Vaucorbeil); Zouzou (M. Allégret); Tartarin de tarascon (Bernard)
1935 La Rosière des Halles (de Limur); Le Bonheur (L. Heribier); L’Ecole des cocottes (Colombier); Le Clown Bus (Natanson); Princess Tam-Tam (Gréville); Le Bébé de l’escadron (Sti)
1937 Ces dames aux chapeaux verts (Cloche); Ramuntcho (Barberis)
1938 Le Paradis de Satan (Gandera); Werther (Le Roman de Werther) (Ophüls); La Bête humaine (The Human Beast) (Renoir)
1939 L’Enfer du jeu (Macao, l’enfer du jeu) (Delannoy); La Règle du jeu (The Rules of the Game) (Renoir); Air pur (Clair—unfinished)
1940 Sans lendemain (Ophüls)
1941 Nous les gosses (Daquin); Le Pavillon bridé (de Baroncelli); Ce n’est pas moi (de Baroncelli); La Maison des sept jeunes filles (Valentin); La Duchesse de Langeais (de Baroncelli)

Films as Art Director:

1942 Le Dernier atout (Jacques Becker)
1943 Lumière d’été (Grémillon); Adieu . . . Léonard! (P. Prévert); Feu Nicolas (Houssin)
1944 Le Ciel est à vous (Grémillon)
1945 Falbalas (Paris Frills) (Jacques Becker); La Ferme du pendu (Gréville); Les Dames du Bois de Boulogne (Presson); François Villon (Zwobada)
1946 L’Affaire du collir de la reine (The Queen’s Necklace) (L’Heribier); Pétrus (M. Allégret)
1947 Le Diable au corps (Devil in the Flesh) (Autant-Lara); Quai des Orfèvres (Clouzot)
1948 Le Mystère de la chambre jaune (Aisner); Manon (Clouzot)
1949 Occupé-toi d’Amélie (Oh Amelia!) (Autant-Lara); Le Parfum de la dame en noir (Daquin); “Le Retour de Jean” ep. of Retour à la vie (Clouzot); La Belle que voilà (Le Chanois)
1950 Terreur en Oklahoma (Heinrich and Paviot—short); Sans laisser d’adresse (Le Chanois); Adventures of Captain Fabian (Marshall)
1951 Agence matrimoniale (Le Chanois); L’Auberge rouge (The Red Inn) (Autant-Lara)
1952 Linking sketch and “L’Orgueil” (“Pride”) ep. of Les Septs Péchés capitaux (The Seven Capital Sins) (Lacombe and Autant-Lara)
1953 Le Bon Dieu sans confession (Autant-Lara); Le Blé en herbe (The Game of Love) (Autant-Lara)
1954 L’Affaire Maurizius (Duvivier); Le Rouge et le noir (Autant-Lara)
1955 French Can-Can (Only the French Can) (Renoir); Les Mauvaises Rencontres (Astruc); Cela s’appelle l’aurore (Buñuel); Mutter Courage und ihre Kinder (Staudte—unfinished)
1956 Marguerite de la nuit (Autant-Lara); La Traversée de Paris (Four Bags Full) (Autant-Lara)
1957 Tamango (Berry)
1958 Celui qui doit mourir (He Who Must Die) (Dassin); En cas de malheur (Love Is My Profession) (Autant-Lara); Le Joueur (Autant-Lara)
1959 Les Dрагueurs (Mocky); La Jument verte (The Green Mare) (Autant-Lara)
1960 Les Régates de San Francisco (Autant-Lara); Le Bois des amants (Autant-Lara); Le panier à crabes (Lisbona)
1961 Tu ne tueras point (Non uccidere; Thou Shalt Not Kill) (Autant-Lara); Le Comte de Monte Cristo (The Story of the Count of Monte Cristo) (Autant-Lara—2 parts); “La Colère” (“Anger”) ep. of Les Sept Péchés capitaux (The Seven Capital Sins) (Hemme) (adviser)
1962 Phaedra (Dassin); Vive Henri IV, vive l’amour (Autant-Lara); Mandarin, bandit gentilhomme (Le Chanois)
1963 Le Meurtrier (Enough Rope) (Autant-Lara)
1964 Le Magot de Joséfa (Autant-Lara); “La Fourni” ep. of Humour noir (Autant-Lara); Topkapi (Dassin); Patate (Friend of the Family) (Thomas)
1965 Le Journal d’une femme en blanc (A Woman in White) (Autant-Lara); Thunderball (Young) (uncredited); Un Monde nouveau (A Young World) (De Sica); Fantômes se déchaîne (Hunebelle)
1966 La Seconde Vérité (Christian-Jaque); Le Nouveau Journal d’une femme en blanc (Une Femme en blanc se revole) (Autant-Lara); Atout coeur à Tokyo pour OSS 117 (Boisrond)
1967 Fantômes contre Scotland Yard (Hunebelle); “Aujourd’hui” ep. of Le Plus Vieux Métier du monde (The Oldest Profession) (Autant-Lara); Le Franciscain de Bourges (Autant-Lara)
1969 Catherine, il suffit d’un amour (Borderie); Les Patates (Autant-Lara); Castle Keep (Pollack)
1970 Tang (Michel)
1971 Joseph Balsamo (Hunebelle); Boulevard du Rhum (Enrico); La Cavale (Mitrani)

1972 Les Cauds (Enrico); Le Moine (Kyrout); L’Insolent (Roy)

1973 A nous quatre, Cardinal (Hunebelle); Les Quatre Charlots mousquetaires (Hunebelle)

1975 Section spéciale (Special Section) (Costa-Gavras); Le Sauvage (Rappeneau)

1976 La Victoire en chantant (Annaud); Vous n’aurez pas l’Alsace et la Lorraine (Coluche)

1979 Moonraker (Gilbert)

1980 Le Malévil (de Chalonge)

1981 Les quarantième rugissante (de Chalonge)

1984 Monseur de Pourceaugnans (Mitrani)

Publications

By DOUY: books—

By DOUY: articles—

On DOUY: articles—

Max Douy was one of the most prolific art directors of French cinema. Having regularly collaborated on the films of Claude Autant-Lara since Le Diable au corps, he contributed greatly to the French ‘‘tradition of quality’’ which the New Wave critics and filmmakers so virulently attacked. This work with Autant-Lara was often in the service of narratives in which stylized poetry (in the manner of the collaborations between Lazare Meerson and René Clair, or Alexandre Trauner and Marcel Carné) was less important than sober issues of character psychology and morality. Consequently, his sets often were conceived in order to complement a visual style which foregrounded dialogue rather than décor and their relationship to narrative requirements frequently made them persuasively, although discreetly, realistic. Indeed, Douy’s skill was such that sets for exteriors often could be mistaken for real locations. For example, the garden of the Jaubert family and the streets in which Gérard Philipe meets the husband of Marguerite de la nuit, translucent and colored and lit from behind; the silhouettes of the theatrical flats that reconstruct a familiar yet strangely unreal Paris for Le Traversée de Paris; or the gothic designs for Castle Keep in which the sets have the force of a character.

Yet whatever the degree of reality inherent in Douy’s designs, they were always conceived and constructed to serve the subject of the film; stylization was never the result of gratuitous ostentation. Indeed, Douy’s insistence on filmmaking as a team activity, thoroughly opposed to the New Wave’s individualistic notions of “auteur,” excluded all possibility of any such gratuitous brilliance that could run contrary to the needs of a narrative. His preferred way of working involved very close preproduction collaboration with the director and other members of the team. He preferred to prepare drawings of the sets as they were to appear on the screen, taking into account the focal length of the lens used, and consequently he designed and built his sets according to the dramatic necessity of camera angles and camera and actor movement. Such a method, developed in France during the 1930s by art directors such as Jacques Colombier and Jean Perrier (to whom Douy was assistant), involves meticulous shot by shot preparation and not only ensures that the sets serve the requirements of the narrative, but is also economical and allows directors to concentrate on the direction of actors during the shooting. Such an intense collaboration is especially characteristic of Douy’s work with Autant-Lara, Henri-Georges Clouzot, and Jean-Paul Le Chanois.

Douy’s thorough professionalism was the result of a long career, begun at the age of 16. He worked for 12 years as an assistant art director, serving apprenticeship to most of the great designers of the 1930s: at Pathé-Natan he worked not only with Jean Perrier and Jacques Colombier, but also with Lucien Aguetand and Guy de Castyne. He later worked with Francis Jourdain on the cluttered and realistic sets of Jean Vigo’s L’Atalante, and with Lazare Meerson on Les Quatres Charlots and Edmond Gréville’s Princesse Tam-Tam. Collaborating with Eugene Lourié on Jean Renoir’s La Bête humaine and La Règle du jeu, Douy worked on sets which have the same force of realism as his later designs for Le Diable au corps.

—Richard Alwyn

DREIER, Hans

Art Director. Nationality: German. Born: Bremen, 21 August 1885. Education: Studied engineering and architecture, Munich University. Military Service: Served in the German army during World War

Films as Art Director:

1919 Der letzte Zeuge (Gartner); Lillis Ehe (Speyer); Der Teufel und die Madonna (Boese and Speyer); Maria Magdalena (Schünzel); Seelenverkäufer (Boese); Seine Beichte (Moest); Die Duplicität der Ereignisse (Gärtner)

1920 Das Frauenhaus von Brescia (Moest); Der Marquis d’Or (Schünzel); Florentinische Nacht (Wienkowitz and Wassung); Kurfurstendamm (Ein Höllenspuk in 6 Akten) (Oswald); Lady Godiva (Moest); Maria Tudor (Gärtner); Max, der Vielgeprüfte (Graf); Nachtgestalten (Oswald); Napoleon und die kleine Wäscherin (Gärtner); Sizilianische Blutrache (Gärtner); Um Mine Stromid (Moest); Die Stimme (Gärtner); Manoelescus Memoiren (Oswald)

1921 Danton (All for a Woman) (Buchowetzki); Das Rätsel der Sphinx (Gärtner); Lady Hamilton (Oswald); Die grosse und die kleine Welt (Mack); Fahrendes Volk (Gärtner); Die Liebschaftenden des Hektor Dalmore (Oswald)

1922 Fridericus Rex: Ein Königsschicksal (von Csép); Peter der Grosse (Buchowetzki)

1923 Boheme (Righelli); Die Frau mit den Millionen (Wolff)

1924 East of Sue (Walsh)

1927 Underworld (von Sternberg); The Student Prince (Lubitsch)

1928 The Last Command (von Sternberg); The Dragnet (von Sternberg); The Patriot (Lubitsch); The Street of Sin (Stiller); The Docks of New York (von Sternberg)

1929 A Dangerous Woman (Lee); Betrayal (Milestone); The Case of Lena Smith (von Sternberg); Thunderbolt (von Sternberg); The Love Parade (Lubitsch)

1930 Monte Carlo (Lubitsch); The Vagabond King (Berger); Morocco (von Sternberg)

1931 An American Tragedy (von Sternberg); Dishonored (von Sternberg); The Smiling Lieutenant (Lubitsch); Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (Mamoulian)

1932 Love Me Tonight (Mamoulian); The Man I Killed (Broken Lullaby) (Lubitsch); One Hour with You (Lubitsch and Cukor); A Farewell to Arms (Borzage); Trouble in Paradise (Lubitsch); Shanghai Express (von Sternberg)

1933 This Day and Age (DeMille); Design for Living (Lubitsch); Song of Songs (Mamoulian); Duck Soup (McCarey); White Woman (Walker); I’m No Angel (Ruggles); One Sunday Afternoon (Roberts)

1934 Kiss and Make Up (Thompson); Ladies Should Listen (Taurog); We’re Not Dressing (Taurog); Cleopatra (DeMille); Six of a Kind (McCarey); Now and Forever (Hathaway); It’s a Gift (McLeod); The Scarlet Empress (von Sternberg); Belle of the Nineties (McCarey)

1935 The Crusades (DeMille); So Red the Rose (K. Vidor); Paris in the Spring (Milestone); The Lives of a Bengal Lancer (Hathaway); The Devil Is a Woman (von Sternberg); Ruggles of Red Gap (McCarey); Rumba (Gering); Peter Ibbetson (Hathaway); Enter Madam (Nugent); Wings in the Dark (Flood); The Last Outpost (Barton and Gasnier); Goin’ to Town (Hall)

1936 Hollywood Boulevard (Florey); Wedding Present (Wallace); Go West, Young Man (Hathaway); Desire (Borzage); Klondike Annie (Walsh); Anything Goes (Sink Is the Limit) (Milestone); The General Died at Dawn (Milestone); Mississippi (Sutherland); The Trail of the Lonesome Pine (Hathaway); The Plainsman (DeMille); Poppy (Sutherland); The Big Broadcast of 1937 (Leisen); Border Flight (Lubitsch); Desert Gold (Hogan); F-Man (Cline); Girl of the Ozarks (Shea); Give Us This Night (Hall); Lady Be Careful (Reed); The Preview Murder Mystery (Florey); The Princess Comes Across (Howard); The Texas Rangers (K. Vidor); Yours for the Asking (Hall)

1937 Angel (Lubitsch); Artists and Models (Walsh); The Buccaneer (DeMille); Easy Living (Leisen); Bulldog Drummond Comes Back (L. King); High, Wide, and Handsome (Mamoulian); Hold ’em, Navy (Neumann); I Met Him in Paris (Ruggles); King of Gamblers (Florey); Interns Can’t Take Money (Santell); Night Club Scandal (Murray); Make Way for Tomorrow (McCary); Mountain Music (Florey); Partners in Crime (Murphy); Souls at Sea (Hathaway); Swing High, Swing Low (Leisen); This Way Please (Florey); Thrill of a Lifetime (Archainbaud); True Confessions (Ruggles); Turn Off the Moon (Seiler); Wells Fargo (Lloyd)

1938 The Arkansas Traveler (Santell); You and Me (F. Lang); Artists and Models Abroad (Leisen); Zaza (Cukor); The Big Broadcast of 1938 (Leisen); College Swing (Walsh); Bluebeard’s Eighth Wife (Lubitsch); Hunted Men (L. King); Bulldog Drummond in Africa (L. King); Campus Confessions (Archainbaud); Bulldog Drummond’s Peril (Hogan); Give Me a Sailor (Nugent); If I Were King (Lloyd); Illegal Traffic (L. King); Prison Farm (L. King); Sing You Sinners (Ruggles); Sons of the Legion (Hogan); Stolen Heaven (Stone); Thanks for the Memory (Archainbaud)

1939 Arrest Bulldog Drummond (Hogan); Beau Geste (Wellman); Bulldog Drummond’s Bride (Hogan); Café Society (Griﬃth); The Cat and the Canary (Nugent); Disbarred (Florey); Disputed Passage (Borzage); Geronimo (Sloan); The Gracie Allen Murder Case (Green); Grand Jury Secrets (Hogan); The Great Victor Herbert (Stone); Invitation to Happiness (Ruggles); The Light That Failed (Wellman); Man about Town (Sandrich); Never Say Die (Nugent); Our Neighbors, the Carters (Murphy); One Thousand Dollars a Touchdown (Hogan); Persons in Hiding (L. King); Rulers of the Sea (Lloyd); Some Like It Hot (Archainbaud); Union Pacific (DeMille); Night of Nights (Milestone); St. Louis Blues (Walsh)

1940 Arise My Love (Leisen); Victory (Cromwell); North West Mounted Police (DeMille); The Biscuit Eater (Heisler); Buck Benny Rides Again (Sandrich); Christmas in July (P. Sturges); Comin’ round the Mountain (Archainbaud); Dr. Cyclops (Schoedsack); Emergency Squad (Dmytryk); The Farmer’s Daughter (Hogan); Golden Gloves (Dmytryk); The Great McGinty (P. Sturges); I Want a Divorce (Murphy); Love Thy Neighbor (Sandrich); Mystery Sea Raider
1941
Aloma of the South Seas (Santell); Bahama Passage (Griffith); Birth of the Blues (Schertzinger); Buy Me That Town (Forde); Caught in the Draught (Butler); Glamour Boy (Murphy); Henry Aldrich for President (Bennett); Hold Back the Dawn (Leisen); I Wanted Wings (Leisen); Louisiana Purchase (Cummings); New York Town (C. Vidor); Night of January 16th (Clemens); Nothing but the Truth (Nugent); One Night in Lisbon (Griffith); The Shepherd of the Hills (Hathaway); Skylark (Sandrich); There’s Magic in Music (Stone); Virginia (Griffith); West Point Widow (Siodmak); Sullivan’s Travels (Sturges)

1942
Beyond the Blue Horizon (Santell); Dr. Broadway (A. Mann); The Forest Rangers (Marshall); The Glass Key (Heisler); The Great Man’s Lady (Wellman); Henry Aldrich, Editor (Bennett); Holiday Inn (Sandrich); I Married a Witch (Clair); Lucky Jordan (Tuttle); The Major and the Minor (Wilder); Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch (Murphy); My Favorite Blonde (Leisen); A Night in New Orleans (Clemens); My Heart Belongs to Daddy (Siodmak); Pacific Blackout (Murphy); Palm Beach Story (P. Sturges); Priorities on Parade (Rogell); Reap the Wild Wind (DeMille); Road to Morocco (Butler); Star Spangled Rhythm (Marshall); Street of Chance (Hively); Sweater Girl (Clemens); Take a Letter, Darling (Leisen); This Gun for Hire (Tuttle); Wake Island (Farrow)

1943
China (Farrow); The Crystal Ball (Nugent); Five Graves to Cairo (Wilder); For Whom the Bell Tolls (Wood); The Good Fellows (Graham); Happy Go Lucky (Bernhardt); Henry Aldrich Gets Glamour (Bennett); Henry Aldrich Haunts a House (Bennett); Henry Aldrich Swings It (Bennett); Hostages (Tuttle); Lady Bodyguard (Clemens); No Time for Love (Leisen); Riding High (Marshall); Salute for Three (Murphy); So Proudly We Hail (Sandrich); True to Life (Marshall); Young and Willing (Griffith)

1944
And Now Tomorrow (Pichel); And the Angels Sing (Binyon); Double Indemnity (Wilder); Frenchman’s Creek (Leisen); Going My Way (McCarey); The Great Moment (P. Sturges); Hail the Conquering Hero (P. Sturges); Henry Aldrich, Boy Scout (Bennett); Here Comes the Waves (Sandrich); Henry Aldrich Plays Cupid (Bennett); Henry Aldrich’s Little Secret (Bennett); The Hitler Gang (Farrow); The Hours before the Dawn (Tuttle); Lady in the Dark (Leisen); The Man in Half Moon Street (Murphy); Ministry of Fear (F. Lang); The Miracle of Morgan’s Creek (P. Sturges); The National Barn Dance (Bennett); Practically Yours (Leisen); Our Hearts Were Young and Gay (Allen); Rainbow Island (Murphy); Standing Room Only (Lanfield); Till We Meet Again (Borzage); The Story of Dr. Wassell (DeMille); The Uninvited (Allen); You Can’t Ration Love (Fuller)

1945
The Affairs of Susan (Seiter); Duffy’s Tavern (Walker); Hold That Blonde (Marshall); Incendiary Blonde (Marshall); Kitty (Leisen); The Lost Weekend (Wilder); Love Letters (Dieterle); Masquerade in Mexico (Leisen); A Medal for Benny (Pichel); Miss Susie Slagle’s (Berry); Murder, He Says (Marshall); Out of This World (Walker); Road to Utopia (Walker); Salty O’Rourke (Walsh); The Story Club (Walker); The Unseen (Allen); You Came Along (Farrow)

1946
The Blue Dahlia (Marshall); The Bride Wore Boots (Pichel); California (Farrow); Monsieur Beaucaire (Marshall); O.S.S. (Pichel); Our Hearts Were Growing Up (Russell); The Searching Wind (Dieterle); To Each His Own (Leisen); The Strange Love of Martha Ivers (Milestone); Two Years before the Mast (Farrow); The Virginian (Gilmore); The Well-Groomed Bride (Lanfield)

1947
Suddenly It’s Spring (Leisen); Blaze of Noon (Farrow); Cutout (Farrow); Dear Ruth (Russell); Easy Come, Easy Go (Farrow); Golden Earrings (Leisen); I Walk Alone (Haskin); The Imperfect Lady (Allen); Ladies’ Man (Russell); My Favorite Brunette (Nugent); The Perils of Pauline (Marshall); The Road to Rio (McLeod); The Trouble with Women (Lanfield); Unconquered (DeMille); Variety Girl (Marshall); Welcome Stranger (Nugent); Where There’s Life (Lanfield); Wild Harvest (Garnett)

1948
The Accused (Dieterle); Beyond Glory (Farrow); The Big Clock (Farrow); Dream Girl (Leisen); The Emperor Waltz (Wilder); A Foreign Affair (Wilder); Hazard (Marshall); Isn’t It Romantic? (McLeod); Miss Tatlock’s Millions (Haydn); My Own True Love (Bennett); The Night Has a Thousand Eyes (Farrow); The Paleface (McLeod); Saffon (Fenton); The Sainted Sisters (Russell); Sealed Verdict (Allen); Sorry, Wrong Number (Litvak); Whispering Smith (Fenton)

1949
Alias Nick Beal (Farrow); Bride of Vengeance (Leisen); A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur’s Court (Garnett); The File on Thelma Jordan (Siodmak); The Great Gatsby (Nugent); The Great Lover (Hall); Dear Wife (Haydn); My Friend Irma (Marshall); Red, Hot, and Blue (Farrow); Rope of Sand (Dieterle); Samson and Delilah (DeMille); Song of Surrender (Leisen); Sorrowful Jones (Lanfield); Streets of Laredo (Fenton); Top o’ the Morning (Miller)

1950
Dark City (Dieterle); Sunset Boulevard (Wilder); No Man of Her Own (Leisen); Riding High (Capra); Paid in Full (Dieterle); Captain Carey, U.S.A. (Leisen); My Friend Irma Goes West (Wallis); The Furies (A. Mann); Union Station (Maté); Copper Canyon (Farrow); Let’s Dance (McLeod); Fancy Pants (Marshall); Mr. Music (Haydn); September Affair (Dieterle); Branded (Maté)

1951
Appointment with Danger (Allen); A Place in the Sun (Stevens)

1957
A Farewell to Arms (C. Vidor)

Publications

By DREIER: articles—

“Motion Picture Sets,” in Journal of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers (Easton, Pennsylvania), November 1931.

“Designing the Sets,” in We Make the Movies, edited by Nancy Naumburg, New York, 1937.

On DREIER: articles—

Thompson, David, in American Film (Washington, D.C.), February 1977.

* * *

The influx of talented Germans who invaded Hollywood in the 1920s to change the course of American filmmaking included art director Hans Dreier. Like other German moviemakers, inspired by Expressionist art movements and the theater of Max Reinhardt, Dreier conveyed moments of horror and intensity by using such stylistic devices as violent lines, exaggerated spaces, and dramatic chiaroscuro.

Dreier’s films with Josef von Sternberg rank among the art director’s most expressionistic. His torturous, Russo-Byzantine The Scarlet Empress and moody Shanghai Express produced in viewers an empathetic anxiety towards the characters’ situations. In many ways, these films served as precursors to the film noir. Dreier’s early training as an architect enabled him to manipulate space expertly. He finshed these environments with such evocative details as posters peeling from aging walls and discarded clothing draped on idle chairs. This type of ambience continued to appear in his work as late as 1950 with his designs (done in collaboration with John Meehan) for Billy Wilder’s Sunset Boulevard.

Dreier’s alternative style can be compared to early, German-period epics of Fritz Lang and Ernst Lubitsch; in these, the artist sacrifices accuracy for effect. For Cecil B. DeMille’s Cleopatra and The Crusades, Dreier produced a curious hybrid—an international moderne translation of a 19th-century academic interpretation of a historic time. Retaining those elements conforming to contemporary taste, revelling in emblem and drapery, this style suggested the past but in popular proportions.

Dreier developed a different style for Lubitsch’s later films, in which he illustrated the decadent aristocracy’s fantastic world—as delectable as a Viennese pastry. Slightly restrained, yet still ornate, his curves whipped gaily with the rhythms of light operetta, rather than those of an intricate, rococo string quartet.

Director Rouben Mamoulian depended on Dreier to adapt previous visual treatments for his particular directorial ends. Mamoulian often basd his works on other directors’ special genres, but injected his own insights along the way. Love Me Tonight paid homage to Lubitsch, for instance, while Song of Songs paid respects to von Sternberg’s image of Marlene Dietrich. Mamoulian’s Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde contrasted Dreier’s updated Beaux Arts neoclassicism with Expressionism, as Jekyll’s respectably ordered universe clashed with Hyde’s chaotic disrepute to illustrate the theme of man’s dual nature. With his own disparate styles, it might be said that Dreier illustrated just such a coexistence in his work.

—Edith C. Lee

DRIESSEN, Paul

Films as Animator:

1968 The Story of Little John Bailey
1972 Le Bleu perdu; Air
1974 Cat’s Cradle (Au bout du fil)
1975 An Old Box
1977 David; The Killing of an Egg
1980 On Land, at Sea, and in the Air; Elbowing (Jeu de coudes)
1982 Home on the Rails; The Same Old Story; Oh What a Knight
1983 Spotting a Cow
1986 Elephantrio
1995 The End of the World in Four Seasons (+ d)

Publications

By DRIESSEN: articles—

Séquences (Montreal), January 1978.
Skrien (Amsterdam), July 1978.

On DRIESSEN: articles—

24 Images (Montreal), no. 43, Summer 1989.
Film a Doba (Prague), Summer 1994.

Paul Driessen is a highly original artist whose work can be recognized instantly. His films have three basic elements which make them different from others: the drawings look like scribbles which could just as well come from the pen of a child; his stories are not for children but primarily have adult appeal; and his humor is purely visual. He makes a character out of a dot and plays with contrasting dimensions and fantasy to such an extent that they become ridiculous. Apart from these values, his graphic treatment of contrasting black-and-white tonal forms provides a vibrance seldom experienced on the screen.

Driessen feels he is lucky not to have known anything about animation up to the time he met Jim Hiltz in 1964, since he was not influenced by any particular style. Thereafter he truly earned the label
“The Flying Dutchman.” In 1970 he went to Canada and since then divides his time in commuting between the National Film Board of Canada, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in Montreal, and his studio in Holland where he works with producer Nico Crama.

He recognizes the differences of the two continents. In Holland he enjoys its quiet isolation working alone; in Canada he likes the contact with other animators and the excellent equipment available. The unifying theme in his films is visual imagery, abstract cartoon ideas, and the mystic content of the stories. He categorizes his films as crazy tendencies in such productions as Cat’s Cradle and On Land, at Sea and in the Air; short gags such as The Killing of an Egg, Elbowing, and Oh What a Knight; dramatic structures such as An Old Box, David, and Spoting a Cow. Visual gags play a significant role in all of them. Driessen states: “I like spending time on my back in the sun, dreaming up new ideas, a small but important part of my schedule. So little time, so much to do.”

—John Halas

DUNING, George

Composer and Arranger. Nationality: American. Born: Richmond, Indiana, 25 February 1908. Education: Attended the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music and the University of Cincinnati; also studied with Mario Castelnuovo-Tedesco. Military Service: U.S. Navy, arranger and conductor for the Armed Forces Radio Service during World War II. Career: Band arranger; then musical director for Kay Kyser’s radio program, eight years; 1939—first film as arranger, the Kay Kyser film That's Right, You're Wrong; 1944–62—contract arranger, and after 1947, composer, Columbia; then freelance composer; TV work includes the mini-series The Dream Merchants, 1980, and Goliath Awaits, 1981; 1983—retired.

Films as Arranger:

- 1939 That’s Right, You’re Wrong (Butler)
- 1944 Show Business (Marin); Carolina Blues (Jason)
- 1946 Singing in the Corn (Give and Take) (Lord)

Films as Composer:

- 1947 Down to Earth (Hall); Lust for Gold (Simon); The Guilt of Janet Ames (Levin); I Love Trouble (Simon); The Corpse Came C.O.D. (Levin); Her Husband’s Affairs (Simon); Johnny O’Clock (Rossen)
- 1948 To the Ends of the Earth (Stevenson); The Dark Past (Maté); Gallant Blade (Levin); The Man from Colorado (Levin); The Untamed Breed (Lamont); The Return of October (Lewis)
- 1949 Jolson Sings Again (Levin); Slightly French (Sirk); The Undercover Man (Lewis); The Doolins of Oklahoma (Douglas); And Baby Makes Three (Levin); Lust for Gold (Simon); Johnny Allegro (Hounded) (Tetzlaff); Shockproof (Sirk)
- 1950 No Sad Songs for Me (Maté); Convicted (Levin); Between Midnight and Dawn (Douglas); The Pretty Girl (Levin); Harriet Craig (V. Sherman); Cargo to Capetown (McEvoy); The Flying Missile (Levin)
- 1951 The Barefoot Mailman (McEvoy); The Mob (Parrish); Lorna Doone (Karlson); Two of a Kind (Levin); Sunny Side of the Street (Quine); The Family Secret (Levin); The Lady and the Bandit (Murphy); Man in the Saddle (de Toth); Scandal Sheet (The Dark Page) (Karlson)
- 1952 Sound Off (Quine); All Ashore (Quine); Paula (Maté); Last of the Comanches (de Toth); Assignment in Paris (Parrish); Captain Pirate (Captain Blood, Fugitive) (Murphy); Afa-""
Publications

By DUNING: articles—

“Salome,” in Film and TV Music (New York), March/April 1953.
“From Here to Eternity,” in Film and TV Music (New York), March/April 1954.
“An Interview with George Duning,” in Cue Sheet (Hollywood), vol. 12, no. 1, 1996.

On DUNING: articles—

Morton, Lawrence, in Quarterly of Film, Radio, and Television (Berkeley, California), Winter 1951.
Larson, Randal, in Soundtrack, September 1990.

* * *

Virtually an epitome of the solid, reliable craftsman in the days of high studio productivity, George Duning was for a 17-year period the mainstay composer of Columbia Pictures. During that period, when he proved himself adept at almost every kind of film scoring, Duning was nominated for an Oscar five times for his work. Virtually an epitome of the solid, reliable craftsman in the days of high studio productivity, George Duning was for a 17-year period the mainstay composer of Columbia Pictures. During that period, when he proved himself adept at almost every kind of film scoring, Duning was nominated for an Oscar five times for his work. Duning became the musical director for the Lucky Strike radio program Kay Kyser’s Kollege of Musical Knowledge and held that post for eight years. His first film experience came in 1939 when Kayser was contracted by RKO to make a series of movies, starting with That’s Right, You’re Wrong. The last of the Kayser films, Carolina Blues, was made at Columbia and resulted in that studio putting Duning under contract as an arranger. Soon afterwards he joined the U.S. Navy and spent almost three years arranging and conducting programs for the Armed Forces Radio Service.

After his discharge Duning rejoined Columbia as an arranger and orchestrator but pestered the studio to give him a chance to write original dramatic compositions. His ability in this regard was well proven with Johnny O’Clock, and from then until he left Columbia in 1962 Duning scored at least half a dozen films each year. Thereafter, until his retirement in 1983, he freelanced. He claims never to have made a listing of his scores but estimates that the total number of feature and television films in which he has worked in various capacities probably totals 300. Of these he is especially proud of Picnic, the love theme of which is among the most acclaimed pieces of film scoring; 3:10 to Yuma; Cowboy; Bell, Book and Candle; The World of Suzie Wong; and Toys in the Attic.

A quiet, modest man, never a seeker of publicity, Duning is particularly well regarded in the Hollywood music community. Arthur Morton, who orchestrated most of Duning’s scores during the Columbia years, says, “George never took any easy means. He always had a shrewd sense of what would and wouldn’t work in scoring films, of what you could and couldn’t do. George is a first-class musician and working with him was a pleasure.”

—Tony Thomas

DUNN, Linwood

Films as Special Effects Technician (selected list):

1930 Danger Lights (Seitz); Cimarron (Ruggles)
1932 The Most Dangerous Game (Schoedsack and Pichel); Bird of Paradise (K. Vidor)
1933 Flying Down to Rio (Freeland); King Kong (Cooper and Schoedsack)
1934 Down to Their Last Yacht (Sloane)
1935 She (Pichel and Holden); The Last Days of Pompeii (Cooper and Schoedsack)
1938 Bringing Up Baby (Hawks)
1939 Gunga Din (Stevens); The Hunchback of Notre Dame (Dieterle)
1940 The Swiss Family Robinson (Ludwig)
1941 Citizen Kane (Welles)
1942 The Navy Comes Through (Sutherland); Cat People (J. Tourneur)
1943 Bombardier (Wallace)
1944 Days of Glory (J. Tourneur); Experiment Perilous (J. Tourneur)
1945 A Game of Death (Wise)
1949 Mighty Joe Young (Schoedsack)
1951 The Thing (Nyby)
1952 Androcles and the Lion (Erskine)
1953 The French Line (Bacon)
1961 West Side Story (Wise and Robbins)
1963 It’s a Mad, Mad, Mad World (Kramer) (co)
1965 The Great Race (Edwards) (co); La Bibbia (The Bible . . . in the Beginning) (Huston)
1966 Hawaii (Hill) (co); What Did You Do in the War, Daddy? (Edwards) (co)
1969 Airport (Seaton)
1970 Darling Lili (Edwards) (co)
1976 King Kong (Guillermin)
DUNNE, Philip

Films as Writer:

1933  Student Tour (Bell)
1934  The Count of Monte Cristo (Lee)
1935  The Melody Lingers On (Burton)
1936  The Last of the Mohicans (Seitz)
1937  Lancer Spy (Ratoff); Breezing Home (Carruth) (co-story)
1938  Suez (Dwan)

The name of Linwood Dunn is almost synonymous with the art of special effects: he created effects for several hundred motion pictures. Dunn was a production assistant cameraman with a Pathé serial unit in Astoria, Long Island, went to Hollywood in 1926, and in 1929 joined RKO Radio Pictures where he created all types of visual effects while working in their photographic effects department. Dunn developed highly creative uses for the optical printer, which he first used in 1928. The printer consisted of a modified motion picture camera set up on a solid base with a special precision motion picture projector—both driven in synchronization while the camera photographed the film carried in the projector. Through this film-copying process, the image in the projector could be modified in unlimited ways: superimposition of one or more images; various types of transitional effects from scene-to-scene; changes in size, screen quality, action speed; conversion from one screen format to another; and the introduction of many other modifications limited only by the imagination and skill of the operating cameraperson. The optical effects printer is truly the heart of the motion picture visual effects techniques. Its facilities have been utilized by practically every movie subsequently made. Dunn also carried on the development of complex traveling mattes, rear projection, and many other types of special photographic effects.

While he was at RKO, Dunn’s work included effects for many major productions. He assisted the noted special effects expert Willis H. O’Brien on the classic King Kong after he convinced O’Brien that the optical printer could do certain complicated animation composites effectively (and speedily) and thus relieve O’Brien from occasional retakes of the animation. Dunn was then assigned to the optical effects for the entire production. In Citizen Kane, he used matte paintings, optical printing, rear projection, and miniatures to compensate for the minimal use of sets, and for the need to modify scenes during editing.

With the United States at war in 1942, Eastman Kodak commissioned Dunn to develop an effects optical printer for the armed forces motion picture units in various locations throughout the world, for which he received an Academy citation in 1946. When World War II ended, Dunn founded his own special effects studio and laboratory, Film Effects of Hollywood, while still continuing his work with RKO until the studio ceased operations in 1956. Film Effects pioneered the expansion of 16mm film into the production field, being the first to create sophisticated optical effects for the wider use of this medium. Also it became one of the first visual effects companies to offer a variety of effects to the growing number of independent production companies, effects that had previously been available primarily to those major studios that could afford their own elaborate special effects departments. The company handled the special effects for the NBC-TV series Star Trek, and was a consultant to Twentieth Century-Fox on Star Wars in 1977.

Towards the end of his life, Dunn was in great demand as a speaker and gave his comprehensive special effects film lecture at more than 100 institutions. In this presentation, he demonstrated how he used three separate filmed images of Katharine Hepburn, Cary Grant, and a leopard—optically combining them by split screen for Bringing Up Baby—and also described the methods of a variety of other sophisticated special effects from major films.

—James Limbacher
Philip Dunne (foreground) with Richard Egan and Dana Wynter

1939  The Rains Came (Brown); Swanee River (Lanfield); Stanley and Livingston (H. King)
1940  Johnny Apollo (Hathaway)
1941  How Green Was My Valley (Ford)
1942  Son of Fury (Cromwell)
1947  The Late George Apley (Mankiewicz); Forever Amber (Preminger); The Ghost and Mrs. Muir (Mankiewicz)
1948  The Luck of the Irish (Koster); Escape (Mankiewicz)
1949  Pinky (Kazan)
1951  Anne of the Indies (Tourneur); David and Bathsheba (King)
1952  Lydia Bailey (Negulesco); Way of a Gaucho (Tourneur) (+ pr)
1953  The Robe (Koster)
1954  Demetrius and the Gladiators (Daves); The Egyptian (Curtiz)
1965  The Agony and the Ecstasy (Reed)

1958  Ten North Frederick; Blue Denim (Blue Jeans)
1966  Blindfold (co-sc)

Films as Director:

1955  Prince of Players
1958  In Love and War
1961  Wild in the Country
1962  Lisa (The Inspector)

Publications

By DUNNE: books—

By DUNNE: articles—

On DUNNE: articles—

Callenbach, Ernest, "How Green Was My Valley: The Screenplay for the John Ford Directed Film," in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Fall 1991.

* * *

One of Hollywood’s most respected screenwriters, Philip Dunne is best known for his successful adaptations of literary works. Throughout a 25-year association with 20th Century-Fox—which later included stints as both a producer and a director—Dunne wrote films noted for their intelligence, strongly developed characters, and frequent social commentary. He was also one of the film industry’s leading liberal political activists—a role which found him labeled a Communist sympathizer in many quarters during the McCarthy era—as a principal organizer of the Writers Guild, and a sometime political speech writer for candidates ranging from Franklin Roosevelt to John F. Kennedy.

Although Dunne initially tried his hand at banking after leaving Harvard, literature had played an important role in his childhood (his father was the noted humorist Finley Peter Dunne) and his inclination toward writing was perhaps a natural one. Arriving in Hollywood in 1930, he was hired by Fox as a reader, then fired and rehired a year later as a junior writer, a position which found him assisting on various screenplays in a minor capacity. In 1934, he received his first chance as a full-fledged writer when he and Rowland Lee were assigned to co-author an adaptation of The Count of Monte Cristo. The film proved a success and Dunne began a long and fruitful collaboration with the studio, writing screenplays for such films as Stanley and Livingston, The Ghost and Mrs. Muir, and The Robe. His work was characterized by its attention to details of character and human interaction and his literate handling of dialogue and the mechanics of storytelling.

During most of Dunne’s tenure at Fox the studio was run by Darryl F. Zanuck, whose thoroughness in overseeing film productions extended to participating in script and story conferences. Zanuck was known for his willingness to tackle controversial social issues in the films he produced, and Dunne was assigned to write two of the most notable: How Green Was My Valley, the story of a Welsh mining family, and Pinky, which deals with the subject of racism. Both of these films represent Dunne’s work at its best, displaying his talent for literary adaptation, his sensitivity to social and political problems, and his reliance on characters as the source of true dramatic conflict.

How Green Was My Valley, based on the novel by Richard Llewellyn and directed by John Ford, focuses on the hardships endured by one family, the Morgans, Welsh coal miners whose strong family bonds are torn apart by disagreements over labor strikes and the formation of a miners’ union. Although the film’s setting is Wales, the issue of unionization was an extremely controversial one in the United States at the time of its release, and How Green Was My Valley helped put a human face on the many nameless workers plagued by unsafe or unjust conditions both in America and abroad.

Pinky dealt with an issue much closer to home. The film stars Jeanne Crain as a light-skinned young black girl who is able to “pass for white” until she is forced to confront her own sense of identity and pride when she falls in love with a white doctor. The film was one of the first to confront the subject of racism, and it takes the issue a step further than does the book, Quality, on which it is based. Quality ends with the doctor rejecting the girl after learning she is black. Dunne and his cowriter, Dudley Nichols, altered this slightly, with the doctor now offering to marry Simons if she will continue to “pass”: Crain refusing, realizing at last that self-hatred is perhaps the most damaging form of prejudice. It is a perceptive alteration on the writers’ part and one which allows the young heroine to grow throughout the course of the story.

Despite his tinkering with Pinky’s conclusion, Dunne has been among the most successful adapters of literature because of his respect for the original author’s intentions. He has stated in interviews that the three keys to adapting a novel are remaining true to the essence of the book and its author’s style, allowing the characters to tell the story, and selecting the right scenes to retain for the screen. Michael Mann so highly regarded Dunne’s adaptation skills, that he credited Dunne’s 1936 screenplay as the source for his own 1992 film version of The Last of the Mohicans, rather than the original novel by James Fenimore Cooper.

Dunne’s own autobiography, Take Two: A Life in Movies and Politics, is among the best-written and most informative books on Hollywood and the craft of screenwriting, and he has remained a vocal critic over the years of the auteur theory, likening the screenwriter to an architect and the director to a building contractor who imposes his own style on the architect’s blueprints. Dunne’s outings as a director have included such films as Prince of Players with Richard Burton and Ten North Frederick with Gary Cooper, but it is as a screenwriter that Dunne will be remembered, with the intelligence, insight, and concern for the human condition that mark his work, remaining rare and valued qualities on the screen.

—Janet Lorenz

DUNNING, George

Died: In 1979.

Films as Animator:

1943 “Auprès de ma blonde” ep. of Chants populaires
1944 Grim Pastures, or the Fight for Fodder
1945 The Three Blind Mice
1946 “J’ai tant dansé” ep. of Chants populaires; Cadet Rousselle
1947 Upright and Wrong (co)
1948 Family Tree (co)
1958 The Wardrobe
1961 Visible Manifestations
1962 The Ever-Changing Motor Car; Mr. Know-How in Hot Water; The Apple; The Flying Man
1964 The Ladder
1965 Safety Boots
1967 The Chair
1968 Yellow Submarine; Lazy River
1969 Hands, Knees, and Bumps-a-Daisy
1970 Moon Rock
1972 Damon the Mower; Horses of Death
1973 How Not to Lose Your Head While Shotfiring (co); The Maggot
1977 Teamwork (co)

Other Films:

1944 Keep Your Mouth Shut (asst d)
1967 Canada Is My Piano (Sewell) (pr)

Publications

By DUNNING: article—

On DUNNING: articles—

Films and Filming (London), June 1964.

* * *

George Dunning, like his contemporaries John Hubley and Norman McLaren, can best be described as an “experimentalist,” having used every medium to make animated films, including cut-outs, painting on glass, and direct painting onto film as well as more orthodox methods such as cel and paper. Most of his early energies were directed toward commercials, and once he had formed his UK company, sponsors were eager for his particular brand of animated television advertising. While working on commercial projects, Dunning’s enthusiasm still found outlets in projects done for his own personal satisfaction in his spare time and usually at his own expense.

Damon the Mower, a visual interpretation of Andrew Marvell’s poem, is photographed as a pencil-test which enhances the quality rather than loses it. He always attempts to bring the right technique to each of his films. In The Apple, the humorous story of a man trying to reach an apple high in a tree, Dunning draws his characters in simple outline with the apple being the only colored object on the screen. The Flying Man is painted directly onto glass in a different fashion of artwork entirely.

Each new film Dunning produced reflected the fact that he was still experimenting. This proved true in his highly acclaimed film Yellow Submarine, which includes every style and technique from watercolor on cel (“Lucy in the Sky with Diamonds”) and Rotoscope to early forms of computer animation. Unfortunately, due to ill health Dunning was never able to finish his pet project of several years, Shakespeare’s The Tempest. His company carries on in his memory, chalking up awards for such masterpieces as Raymond Briggs’s The Snowman (1982). No doubt Dunning would approve.

—Graham Webb

DURAS, Marguerite

Writer. Nationality: French. Born: Marguerite Donnadieu in Giadinh, French Indo-China, 1914. Education: Educated in mathematics, law and political science at the Sorbonne, Paris. Career: Published first novel, Les Impudents, 1943; subsequently novelist, journalist and playwright; directed first film, La Musica, 1966. Awards: Prix Goncourt for novel L’Aman, 1984; CICAEE Award, CIDALC Award, and Silver Berlin Bear Honorable Mention, Berlin International Film Festival, all for Les Enfants, 1985; Died: 3 March 1996, in Paris, France.

Films as Writer:

1959 Hiroshima mon amour (Resnais)
1960 Moderato Cantabile (Brook) (co-adapt from her novel)
1961 Une Aussi longue absence (The Long Absence) (Colpi) (co-sc from her novel)
1964 Nuit noire, Calcutta (Karmitz) (short)
1965 “Les rideaux blancs” (Franju) episode of Der Augenblick des Friedens (Un Instant de la paix) (for W. German TV)
1966 10:30 P.M. Summer (Dassin) (co-sc uncredited, from her novel) (Dix heures et demie du soir en été); La Voleuse (Chapot) (+ dialogue); La Musica (+ co-d)
1969 Détruir, dit-elle (Destroy She Said) (+ d)
1971 Jaune le soleil (+ d, pr, co-ed, from her novel Abain, Sabana, David)
1972 Nathalie Granger (+ d, music)
1974 La Femme du Ganges (+ d)
1975 India Song (+ d, voice)
1976 Des journées entières dans les arbres (Days in the Trees) (+ d); Son Nom de Venises dans Calcutta desert (+ d)
Marguerite Duras

1977  Baxter, Vera Baxter (+ d); Le Camion (+ d, role)
1978  Le Navire Night (+ d)
1978/79 Aurelia Steiner (4-film series): Cesarée (1978) (+ d); Les Mains négatives (1978) (+ d); Aurelia Steiner—Melbourne (1979) (+ d); Aurelia Steiner—Vancouver (1979) (+ d)
1981  Agatha et les lectures illimitées (Agatha) (+ d)
1991  L’Amant (The Lover) (co-sc)

Other Films:

1985  Les Enfants (The Children) (d)

Publications

By DURAS: screenplays—

Moderato Cantabile, with Gérard Jarlot and Peter Brook, 1960.

Jaune le soleil, Paris, 1971

By DURAS: fiction—

La Vie tranquille, Paris, 1944.

By DURAS: plays—

Théâtre 2 (includes Susanna Andler, Yes, peut-être; Le Shaga; Des journées entières dans les arbres; Un Homme est venu me voir), Paris, 1968.
The Square, Edinburgh, 1986.

By DURAS: other books—

By DURAS: articles—

“India Song, a Chant of Love and Death,” interview with F. Dawson, in Film Comment (New York), November/December 1975.
“India Song and Marguerite Duras,” interview with Carlos Clarens, in Sight and Sound (London), Winter 1975/76.
Interview with D. Fasoli, in Filmcritica (Florence), June 1981.
Interview with A. Grunert, in Filmfaust (Frankfurt), February-March 1982.
“The places of Marguerite Duras,” an interview with M. Porte, in Enclitic (Minneapolis), Spring 1983.
Interview with Jean-Luc Godard, in Cinéma (Paris), 30 December 1987.

On DURAS: books—

On DURAS: articles—

Gollub, Judith, “French Writers Turned Film Makers,” in Film Heritage (New York), Winter 1968/69.
“Reflections in a Broken Glass,” in Film Comment (New York), November/December 1975.

Fedwik, P., “Marguerite Duras: Feminine Field of Nostalgia,” in Enclitic (Minneapolis), Fall 1982.

Sarrut, B., “Marguerite Duras: Barrages against the Pacific,” in On Film (Los Angeles), Summer 1983.

Murphy, C.J., “New narrative regions: The role of desire in the films and novels of Marguerite Duras,” in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), April 1984.

McWilliams, D., “Aesthetic tripling: Marguerite Duras’s Le navire Night,” in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), January 1986.

Williams, Bruce, “Splintered Perspectives: Counterpoint and Subjectivity in the Modernist Film Narrative,” in Film Criticism (Meadville), vol. 15, no. 2, Winter 1991.

Obituary, in EPD Film (Frankfurt), April 1996.

Obituary, in Kino (Sofia), no. 2, 1996.

Obituary, in Classic Images (Muscatine), May 1996.

Obituary, in Skrien (Amsterdam), June-July 1996.

Roy, André, “Marguerite Duras, moderne,” in 24 Images (Montreal), no. 82, Summer 1996.

---

Mon Amour, which closely resembled the novel, Moderato Cantilbis (1958), that established her literary reputation. The film explores the brief extra-marital relationship between a French woman (played by Emmanuelle Riva) and a Japanese architect (played by Eiji Okada.) The film won critical acclaim (the International Critics Prize at the Cannes Film Festival and the New York Film Critics Best Foreign Language Film Award) in part for the innovative use of flashbacks to the war when the woman was involved with a German soldier. The haunting story, which was able to juxtapose such seemingly disparate themes as Hiroshima and love, reflected Duras’ preoccupation with desire, death, love and memory. Although Duras was nominated for an Academy Award for her work as a screenwriter, she was unhappy enough with the result that she claimed she would never again let anyone else direct her words on the screen.

Duras continued to write for the screen and began to direct as well. In 1975 her screenplay for India Song demonstrated Duras’ continuing connection to the Asia of her youth, a place that is, for her, emblematic of an unattainable desire and unknowable longing which, sought through memory, can only, finally, be resolved in death. The 1977 adaptation of her novel, Le Camion, which she directed, features a scene in which Duras herself reads star Gerard Depardieu the scenario of the film, which focuses on a truck driver and a mysterious woman hitch-hiker. Duras directed in order to be able to “preserve textual obscurity.”

Her 1985 novel, L’aimant (The Lover), perhaps her finest work, returned to the Indochina of her youth. The New York Times Book Review praised it for the same qualities that infused the film (released in 1991): its “masterly balance between formalism and powerful emotional effect.” Duras was uniquely capable of creating what has been called cinematic prose, or “literary films.” Her innovative work as a screenwriter and director paved the way for such minimalist women filmmakers as Chantal Ackerman who followed in the wake of Duras’ artistic legacy.

---

Nina Bjornsson

---

DUTTA, Dulal

Films as Editor for Satyajit Ray:

1955 Pather Panchali (Father Panchali)
1956 Aparajito (The Unvanquished)
1957 Parash Pathar (The Philosopher’s Stone)
1958 Jalsaghar (The Music Room)
1959 Apur Sansar (The World of Apu)
1960 Devi (The Goddess)
1961 Rabindranath Tagore (doc); Teen Kanya (Two Daughters)
1962 Kanchanjunga; Abhijan (Expedition)
1963 Mahanagar (The Big City)
1964 Charulata (The Lonely Wife)
1965 Kapurush-o-Mahapurush (The Coward and the Saint)
1966 Nayak (The Hero)
1967 Chiriacchana (The Zoo)
1969 Goopy Gyne Bagha Byne (The Adventures of Goopy and Bagha)
1970 Aranyer Din Ratri (Days and Nights in the Forest); Pratidwandi (The Adversary)
1971 Seemabaddha; Sikkim (doc)
1972 The Inner Eye (doc)
1973 Asani Sanket (Distant Thunder)
1974 Sonar Kella (The Golden Fortress)
1975 Jana Aranya (The Middleman)
1976 Bala (doc)
1977 Shatranj Ke Khilari (The Chess Players)
1978 Joi Baba Felunath (The Elephant God)
1979 Heerak Rajar Deshe (The Kingdom of Diamonds)
1982 Ghare Bahire (The Home and the World)
1989 Ganashatru (An Enemy of the People)
1990 Shakha Proshakha (The Branches of the Tree)
1991 Agantuk (The Stranger)

Films as Editor for Sandip Ray:

1994 Uttoran (The Broken Journey)
1995 Target

* * *

When Satyajit Ray gathered a crew of friends together to make a film of Bibhuti Banerjee’s novel, Pather Panchali, editor Dulal Dutta seemed to be an old veteran in comparison with the inexperience of the others. He had previously worked on two movies. He went on to collaborate many times with Ray, gaining worldwide fame for this association. Ray later commented on the amateur appearance of his first work: “Judged on the level of craftsmanship, there was much that was wrong with my film… The early part clearly shows we were groping with the medium. Shots are held for too long, cuts come at the wrong points, the pace falters.” Other critics have more generously judged that the director and his editor allowed the material, the natural rhythms of the village life and landscape, to dictate the rambling style of the film.

Dutta, under Ray’s close supervision, developed a cutting style of great economy, but one which could reveal the poetry of the content. Akira Kurosawa commented that “his work can be described as flowing composedly, like a big river.” Dutta’s editing skills are most apparent in scenes of dialogue, such as the picnic and memory game in Aranyer Din Ratri. Ray described in a 1966 article, “‘Some Aspects of My Craft,’” the alternative assemblages Dutta would put together for him: “These offer endless variations of emphasis, unlimited scope for pointing up shades of feeling. It is not unusual for an important dialogue scene to be cut in half a dozen different ways before a final satisfactory form is achieved.”

Dutta has worked with other directors, including James Ivory on his first film, The Householder. But he has otherwise lived an almost reclusive life in the film community of Calcutta, rarely being seen in public.

—Stephen Brophy

DYKSTRA, John

Films as Special Effects Crew:

1971 Silent Running (Trumbull); The Andromeda Strain (Wise)
1977 Star Wars (Lucas) (special photographic effects supervisor)
1978 Battlestar: Galactica (Colla) (effects-unit supervisor, co-pr)
1979 Star Trek: The Motion Picture (Wise) (special photographic effects supervisor); Avalanche Express (Robson)
1982 Firefox (Eastwood) (supervisor)
1985 Lifeforce (Hooper) (supervisor)
1986 Invaders from Mars (Hooper) (supervisor)
1988 My Stepmother Is an Alien (Benjamin) (supervisor); The Unholy (Vila)
1995 Batman Forever (Schumacher) (visual effects supervisor)
1997 Batman & Robin (Schumacher) (visual effects)
1999 Stuart Little (Minkoff) (senior visual effects supervisor)
2001 Spider-Man

Publications

By DYKSTRA: article—

On DYKSTRA: articles—

Clark, Michael, on Batman Forever, in Shoot (Hollywood), 14 July 1995.
Reid, C., “‘John Dykstra Effects Supervisor,’” in Cinefantastique (Forest Park), vol. 29, no. 1, 1997.
Vaz, M.C., “‘Freeze Frames,’” in Cinefex (Riverside), September 1997.

* * *

John Dykstra is arguably the most respected and sought after special effects supervisor working in Hollywood. He has built a deservedly stellar reputation for ingenuity, organizational skill, and thorough preproduction planning. In the 1970s, he set the visual-effects standard for both the Star Wars trilogy and the Star Trek films, two of Hollywood’s most popular science-fiction film series. Dykstra is also a pioneer in the use of computer technology for visual effects, from the computer-controlled Dykstraflex camera system developed for Star Wars, to the extensive use of computer-generated image animation in Batman Forever.

Dykstra started his career studying at Long Beach State as an industrial designer. According to Star Wars promotional material, he was kicked out of school before earning a degree. He began working with Douglas Trumbull, a veteran effects director (whose work was kicked out of school before earning a degree. He began working with Douglas Trumbull, a veteran effects director (whose work included effects for Victor Fleming’s Wizard of Oz and Stanley Kubrick’s 2001: A Space Odyssey), as part of the effects crew on Trumbull’s science-fiction thriller Silent Running. From Trumbull, he learned techniques on matte filming and miniature work, skills he would put to great use throughout his career. Following his apprenticeship with Trumbull, Dykstra joined Berkeley’s Institute of Urban Development, where he was involved in a sophisticated project coupling cinematography and visual effects with the construction of miniature cityscape models. Here, he further honed his skills with miniatures and camera effects. In June 1975, George Lucas and Gary Kurtz asked him to handle visual effects for a film they were working on called Star Wars. As a result, Dykstra became the first head of Lucas’s new special effects studio, Industrial Light and Magic.

Industrial Light and Magic would evolve into the premier Hollywood special-effects studio, doing the effects for all three Star Wars films as well as Terminator II and Jurassic Park, among other films. Dykstra won two Academy Awards in 1977 for his work on Star Wars. The first award was for best visual effects, while the second was a scientific/technical special award for his invention and development of the Dykstraflex motion-control camera system. The innovation of combining computer programing with camera work would be an essential link to the computer-generated imaging currently being utilized by Hollywood’s special-effects producers.

In 1978, Dykstra left ILM to form Apogee, his own special-effects company. Through Apogee, he produced the first five episodes of the television series Battlestar: Galactica. He also supervised the special effects for the motion-picture version of Battlestar: Galactica. Later, he worked with director Robert Wise on the first motion picture version of an older television science-fiction phenomenon, Star Trek.

In 1979, Dykstra earned another Academy Award nomination for his work on Star Trek: The Motion Picture.

Dykstra dismantled Apogee in the fall of 1982, due to the lack of commercial work, the company’s primary source of clientele. This turned out to be only a minor setback. Over the next decade, he would work with esteemed directors Clint Eastwood (on Firefox), Tobe Hooper (Lifeforce and Invaders from Mars), and Richard Benjamin (My Stepmother Is an Alien). Though none of these movies was a blockbuster, he continued to innovate, maintaining his reputation for creativity and organization.

This reputation resulted in a job as visual-effects supervisor on Batman Forever. Dykstra’s work here proved worthy of his reputation: Batman Forever was the top box-office draw for 1995, largely due to the special effects as well as Jim Carrey’s over-the-top performance as the Riddler. The effects called for by director Joel Schumacher and the script were more than a single effects studio could deliver on its own, thus Dykstra decided to subcontract with many different effects labs.

Much of the organization of this picture was deciding what to do with real actors and sets, what to do in miniature, and what to do in computer-generated images, or CGI. Dykstra determined that the stunts called for were too dangerous for a human stuntman to perform. As a result, many of the film’s stunts were “‘performed’” by high-end computer-generated animation. These animated segments were compiled by Dykstra at his Warner Bros. office in Burbank, where he was linked with the firms via real-time digital fiber, letting him judge the quality of each shot as it was being crafted. Dykstra and his crew combined computer imaging from the many subcontracted firms, each firm responsible for a different element (such as lighting, blurring motion, background matte paintings, etc.) of the final composite.

John Dykstra’s contribution to cinema is substantial: from the Dykstraflex motion-control camera system utilized in Star Wars, to the computer-generated image animation of Batman Forever, Dykstra has proved himself to be an organized supervisor and an innovative special effects visionary.

—Mark Johnson
EDENS, Roger

Films as Music Director/Supervisor:

1934  Kid Millions (Del Ruth)
1935  Broadway Melody of 1936 (Del Ruth)
1936  San Francisco (Van Dyke); Born to Dance (Del Ruth); The Great Ziegfeld (Leonard)
1937  Broadway Melody of 1938 (Del Ruth) (song); A Day at the Races (Wood); Rosalie (Van Dyke)
1938  Love Finds Andy Hardy (Seitz); Everybody Sing (Marin)
1939  The Wizard of Oz; (Fleming); Babes in Arms (Berkeley) (songs)
1940  Strike Up the Band (Berkeley); Go West (Buzzell); Little Nelly Kelly (Taurog) (songs)
1941  Kathleen (Bucquet); Ziegfeld Girl (Leonard) (songs); Lady Be Good (McLeod); Babes on Broadway (Berkeley)
1942  Panama Hattie (McLeod)
1943  Presenting Lily Mars (Taurog); Cabin in the Sky (Minnelli)
1944  Thousands Cheer (Sidney); Ziegfeld Follies (Minnelli) (songs); Meet Me in St. Louis (Minnelli) (+ assoc pr)
1945  Yolanda and the Thief (Minnelli) (+ assoc pr); The Harvey Girls (Sidney) (+ assoc pr)
1947  Good News (Walters) (songs, + assoc pr)
1948  Words and Music (Taurog); Easter Parade (Walters) (songs); The Pirate (Minnelli)
1949  On the Town (Donen)
1950  Annie Get Your Gun (Sidney)
1952  Singin’ in the Rain (Kelly and Donen) (song)
1954  Deep in My Heart (Donen) (song, + pr); A Star Is Born (Cukor) (song)
1957  Funny Face (Donen) (songs, + pr)
1962  Jumbo (Walters) (songs, + assoc pr)

Other Films:

1948  Take Me Out to the Ball Game (Berkeley) (composer)
1951  Show Boat (Sidney) (assoc pr); An American in Paris (Minnelli) (assoc pr)
1953  The Band Wagon (Minnelli) (assoc pr)
1964  The Unsinkable Molly Brown (Walters) (assoc pr)
1969  Hello Dolly! (Kelly) (assoc pr)

Publications

By EDENS: article—

Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1958.

If the musical genre reached its artistic and commercial peak with the MGM/Arthur Freed vehicles of the 40s and 50s, then some of the credit must go to Roger Edens. Composer, lyricist, arranger, producer, and associate of Freed’s, Edens built a career in Hollywood that was synonymous with the genre that typified the glamour and extravagance of the Golden Age of Hollywood. He worked behind the limelight that fell on Ethel Merman, Eleanor Powell, Mickey Rooney, Fred Astaire, Gene Kelly, and, most especially, Judy Garland. His lyrics and compositions included “I’ve got a Feeling You’re Fooling,” “Think Pink,” “Bonjour Paris,” and “Dear Mr. Gable,” Garland’s breakthrough number from Broadway Melody of 1938 (1937).

A former ballroom pianist, Edens began his film career at Paramount, where he was hired in 1933 to write material for the studio’s Ethel Merman pictures. From there he moved to MGM in 1935, where he would remain until the decline of the musical in the mid-to-late ’50s. He began as musical supervisor working on such early chorus-line pictures as The Broadway Melody of 1938, Born to Dance (1936), and Everybody Sing (1938). It was at Warners, however, where Busby Berkeley was staging the glamorous, kaleidoscopic numbers for such films as 42nd Street (1933) and Foottlight Parade (1933), that the genre was achieving its fullest expression. Edens found himself working on imitations of Berkeley’s mechanical, impersonal style. In Born to Dance for example, Eleanor Powell dances to the Cole Porter tune “Swin’gin’ the Jinx Away” while encircled by hundreds of singers and dancing sailors on the prow of a huge glittering battleship. In Gotta Sing, Gotta Dance: A Pictorial History of the Film Musical (London: Hamlyn, 1971) by John Kobol, Edens is reported to have referred to the scene as “that really monstrous epitome of nonsense” (p. 133).

Edens’s discomfort with the baroque, non-narrative spectacle of the Berkeley style was shared by fellow lyricist and future producer Arthur Freed. Freed had set about refining the musical, moving the genre toward a more integrated form, with music and narration as integral parts of the overall plot. Babes in Arms (1939), Freed’s debut as producer, employing Edens as lyricist and a more subdued Berkeley as director, begins an inexorable movement toward such plot-integrated, character-driven musicals as Ziegfeld Girl (1941), Ziegfeld Follies (1944), and Take Me Out to the Ballgame (1948), all of which were worked on by Edens as supervisor and sometimes composer.
The Freed unit as MGM, of which Edens was becoming an increasingly integral part, sought a new intimacy in the genre. Freed’s “integrated musicals” became more character bound, employing such stars as Fred Astaire, Judy Garland, and Gene Kelly to add a warmth and personality previously left wanting in the en masse chorus-line picture.

Through his various approaches to the genre, Edens was seeking a way to achieve this through lyrics and composition. His work as music supervisor/arranger on The Wizard of Oz (1939) contributed to the film’s groundbreaking integration of music and plot. While “Over the Rainbow” establishes the theme of the picture, and songs like “Off to See the Wizard” propel the narrative, numbers such as “If I Only Had a Brain” establish characterization. In short, the music routines fulfill plot functions—creating character, theme, and movement.

Elevated in the early ’40s to the position of associate producer, Edens found himself with even greater control and influence over the genre. Freed was beginning to view him as indispensable; by mere suggestion Edens could veto even the most major ideas from his collaborator/boss. He was Freed’s right-hand man on Meet Me in St. Louis (1944), Easter Parade (1948), On the Town (1949), Annie Get Your Gun (1950), and An American in Paris (1951). During this period, the musical reached its most perfect form. Extraneous numbers such as Garland and Astaire’s “A Couple of Swells” from Easter Parade were skillfully and believably worked into the storyline. Others, such as those in On the Town attained an almost minimalist quality, foregrounding not the excess and artificiality of the genre, but a realism (in terms of both character and landscape) heretofore left untapped. By the end of the ’40s, Edens had earned three Academy Awards, and the musical, with MGM at the crest of the wave, was the most popular genre of the industry.

In 1954, at the prompting of Freed, Edens began to produce. His first project, Deep in My Heart (1954) was a minor success. However, Funny Face (1957), his next assignment as producer, was far more accomplished. Though the “Freed Unit” had begun to disband (due to a sudden and inexorable decline in popularity), Edens moved many of the MGM craftsmen to Paramount and there, with his frequent collaborator, director Stanley Donen, produced one of the last great musicals of the Hollywood era. Starring Audrey Hepburn and Fred Astaire, Funny Face used a tantalizing, sophisticated mixture of color and music to enter the world of fashion photography and fairy-tale romance.

Following Funny Face Edens’s career began to fade. The genre was now outmoded and his final two productions, The Unsinkable Molly Brown (1964) and Hello Dolly (1969) were further evidence to the fact. Overblown and splashy, they conformed to the emerging philosophy of what is bigger is better, and performed poorly at the box office.

Edens died in 1970 at the cusp of a new era in American cinema. He was sixty-five years of age and his career in the industry had spanned over half his lifetime. Though his contributions to the genre’s development were substantial, Edens worked continuously in the collaborative environment of the studio system. His career runs alongside that of great musical talents of the time, and his impact on the genre must be viewed in the light of his peers. Indeed, the story of Edens’s career is not only the story of the great American genre of song and dance, but also that of the factory system itself.

—Peter Flynn

EDESON, Arthur

Films as Cinematographer:

1914 A Gentleman from Mississippi (Sergeant); The Dollar Mark (Lund)
1915 The Deep Purple (Young); Wildfire (Middleton); Hearts in Exile (Hearts Afire) (Young)
1916 The Devil’s Toy (Knoles); Miss Petticoats (Knoles); The Gilded Cage (Knoles); Bought and Paid For (Knoles)
1917 A Woman Alone (Davenport); A Square Deal (Knoles); The Master Hand (Knoles) (+ asst d); The Social Leper (Knoles); The Page Mystery (Knoles); In Again—Out Again (Emerson); The Stolen Paradise (Knoles); The Price of Pride (Knoles); Wild and Woolly (Emerson); Souls Adrift (Knoles); Baby Mine (Robertson and Ballin); Reaching for the Moon (Emerson); Nearly Married (Withy)
1918 Jack Spurlock, Prodigal (Harbaugh); Mr. Fixit (Dwan); The Savage Woman (Mortimer); The Road through the Dark (Mortimer)
1919 Cheating Cheaters (Dwan); The Better Wife (Earle); Hushed Hour (Mortimer); Eyes of Youth (Parker)
1920 The Forbidden Woman (Garson); For the Soul of Rafael (Garson); Mid Channel (Garson); Hush (Garson)
1921 Good Women (Gascier); The Three Musketeers (Nieio)
1922 The Worldly Madonna (Garson); Robin Hood (Dwan)
1924 The End of the World (Keays); The Thief of Bagdad (Walsh); Inez from Hollywood (The Good Bad Girl) (Green)
1925 The Lost World (Hoyt) (co); Waking Up the Town (Cruze) (co); One Way Street (Dillon); The Talker (Green); Her Sister from Paris (Franklin); Stella Dallas (H. King)
1926 Partners Again (H. King); The Bat (West); Sweet Daddies (Santell); Subway Sadie (Santell); Just Another Blonde (Santell)
1927 McFadden’s Flats (Wallace); The Patent Leather Kid (Santell) (co); The Drop Kick (Glitter) (Webb) (co); The Gorilla (Santell)
1928 A Thief in the Dark (Ray); Me, Gangster (Walsh)
1929 In Old Arizona (Walsh and Cummings); Girls Gone Wild (Seiler) (co); The Cock-Eyed World (Walsh); Romance of the Rio Grande (Santell)
1930 All Quiet on the Western Front (Milestone); The Big Trail (Walsh) (co); The Man Who Came Back (Walsh)
1931 Doctors’ Wives (Borzage); Always Goodbye (McKenna and Menzies); Waterloo Bridge (Whale); Frankenstein (Whale)
1932 The Impatient Maiden (Whale); Strangers of the Evening (Humberstone); Fast Companions (Information Kid)
1933 The Constant Woman (Schertzinger); A Study in Scarlet (Marin); The Life of Jimmy Dolan (The Kid’s Last Fight) (Mayo); The Big Brain (Enemies of Society) (Archainbaud); The Invisible Man (Whale); His Double Life (Hopkins and W. De Mille)

1934 Palooka (The Great Schnozzle) (Stoloff); The Merry Frinks (The Happy Family) (Green); Here Comes the Navy (Bacone); Maybe It’s Love (McGann)

1935 Devil Dogs of the Air (Bacon); While the Patient Slept (Enright); Dinky (Lederman and Bretherton); Going Highbrow (Florey) (co-ph); Mutiny on the Bounty (Lloyd); Ceiling Zero (Hawks)

1936 The Golden Arrow (Green); Satan Met a Lady (Dieterle); Hot Money (McGann); China Clipper (Enright); Gold Diggers of 1937 (Bacon)

1937 The Go Getter (Berkeley); Mr. Dodd Takes the Air (Green); The Footloose Heiress (Clements); They Won’t Forget (LeRoy); Submarine D-1 (Bacon); Swing Your Lady (Enright); The Kid Comes Back (Don’t Pull Your Punches) (Eason)

1938 Boy Meets Girl (Bacon); Cowboy from Brooklyn (Romance and Rhythm) (Bacon); Racket Busters (Bacon); Mr. Chump (Clements)

1939 Wings of the Navy (Bacon); Nancy Drew—Reporter (Clements); Sweepstakes Winner (McGann); No Place to Go (Morse); Each Dawn I Die (Keighley); Kid Nightingale (Amy)

1940 Castle on the Hudson (Years without Days) (Litvak); They Drive by Night (The Road to Frisco) (Walsh); Tugboat Annie Sails Again (Seiler); Lady with Red Hair (Bernhardt)

1941 Kisses for Breakfast (Seiler); Sergeant York (Hawks) (co); The Maltese Falcon (Huston)

1942 The Male Animal (Nugent); Across the Pacific (Huston); Casablanca (Curtiz)

1943 Thank Your Lucky Stars (Butler)

1944 Shine On, Harvest Moon (Butler); The Mask of Dimitrios (Negulesco); The Conspirators (Negulesco)

1946 Three Strangers (Negulesco); Two Guys from Milwaukee (Royal Flash) (Butler); Never Say Goodbye (Kern); Nobody Lives Forever (Negulesco); The Time, the Place and the Girl (Butler) (co-ph)

1947 Stallion Road (Kern); My Wild Irish Rose (Butler) (co)

1948 Two Guys from Texas (Two Texas Knights) (Butler) (co); The Fighting O’Flynn (Pierson)

Publications

On EDESON: articles—

Film Comment (New York), Summer 1972.

* * * *

Arthur Edeson’s style is a perfect example of the approach and merger of two schools and aesthetics of world cinema. Like Hal Mohr, Arthur Miller, or Charles Rosher, Edeson was one of the master craftsmen of the old American school, whose principal work was on the side of realism, considered by most historians to represent the zenith of Hollywood photography. Edeson built on the influence of German Expressionism, brought to America by German cinematographers during the 1920s.

Notable among Edeson’s 1920s work are his films for Douglas Fairbanks, especially three which gained Gold Medal Awards (the immediate predecessor of the Oscar): Fred Niblo’s The Three Musketeers, Allan Dwan’s Robin Hood, and Raoul Walsh’s The Thief of Bagdad. One of Edeson’s great strengths was his ability to capture the spirit of large-scale scenarios: for Robin Hood, for instance, with a scenario by Wilfred Buckland, through the use of double exposures and glass shots, and, notably for the scenes in the castle’s interior, through the use of natural light. In The Thief of Bagdad his photography creates an atmosphere almost unreal, matching the William Cameron Menzies scenario, and bringing a fascination to Walsh’s film.

In fact, in the late 1920s and early 1930s Walsh was the director to whose work Edeson was most linked. The realism of the photography of Me, Gangster and In Old Arizona (the first sound film to be shot outside a studio) prepares for that of The Big Trail, the culminating collaboration of the two men. Filmed in the first wide-screen process (70 mm), known as Grandeur, this epic reveals Edeson’s mastery of composition, using frame enlargement dramatically. The Big Trail is both pictorial and documentary, with a spectacular use of space, sensitive to the archetypical sequences of the western, including a buffalo charge, an Indian attack, and a fantastic river crossing.

The visual drama of The Big Trail, based in part on epic realism, is counterpointed admirably in his work as cinematographer for James Whale. (His work for Whale is anticipated by his collaboration with Karl Freund, one of the great German photographers, on All Quiet on the Western Front, filmed with a mute camera and with sound added later, and one of the most widely praised American war films.) In Frankenstein, his first film with Whale, Edeson was seen to have assimilated and controlled the “expressionist heritage,” synthesizing it into an appropriate style—attaining a fantastic and mysterious realism without losing the mobility of the camera. Frankenstein is a classic “horror movie,” above all owing to its visual conception which suggests the silent German film, especially The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari, due to its paradigmatic opening scene in which Frankenstein and his assistant watch a funeral, and to Edeson’s camera angles and camera movement. The Old Dark House and The Invisible Man are also classics of their genres. In the first of these, the potentialities of illumination to create zones of shadows give the film an irony approaching black comedy; in the second, there is a masterful combination of Edeson’s photography and John Fulton’s special effects.

In the late 1930s and early 1940s Edeson worked for Warner Brothers within the parameters of the studio style, but utilizing his own below-eye-level shots and strong angular compositions Edeson was able to produce the sinister and threatening Maltese Falcon and the devastatingly romantic Casablanca. This alone is enough for Edeson to merit a place of honor in American film. Without obsessively darkening the set, without a geometrical lighting leading to remote shadows, obscuring rather than suggesting, The Maltese Falcon can be said to have invented a genre—the film noir—and to have highlighted a visage that Louise Brooks called “the face of St. Bogart.”

—M. S. Fonseca

EDLUND, Richard

Special Effects Technician. Nationality: American. Born: Fargo, North Dakota, 6 December 1940. Education: Attended high school in California; University of Southern California film school, Los Angeles. Military Service: Made training films while serving in the U.S. Navy. Career: Assistant to special effects technician Joe Westheimer; then worked as cable car driver and photographer; designed Candy Apple Neon lettering while working for Bob Abel; 1975–83—worked for George Lucas’s company; founded the Industrial Light and Magic Company; 1983—joined Douglas Trumbull’s Entertainment Effects group, the Boss Film Corporation. Awards: Academy Award, for Star Wars, 1977, The Empire Strikes Back, 1980, Raiders of the Lost Ark, 1981, and Return of the Jedi, 1983; Academy Technical Award, 1981 (2 awards); British Academy Award, for Poltergeist, 1982, and Return of the Jedi, 1983.

Films as Special Effects Technician:

1977 Star Wars (Lucas)
1979 The China Syndrome (Lumet)
1980 The Empire Strikes Back (Kershner)
1981 Raiders of the Lost Ark (Spielberg)
1982 Poltergeist (Spielberg)
1983 Return of the Jedi (Marquand)
1984 2010 (Hans; Ghostbusters (Reitman)
1985 Fright Night (Holland)
1986 Big Trouble in Little China (Carpenter); The Boy Who Could Fly (Castle); Legal Eagles (Reitman); Solarbabies (Johnson); Poltergeist II (Gibson)
1987 Date with an Angel (McLoughlin); Leonard, Part 6 (Weiland); Masters of the Universe (Goddard); The Monster Squad (Dekker)
1988 Big Top Pee-Wee (Kleiser); Die Hard (McTiernan); Elvira, Mistress of the Dark (Signorelli); Vibes (Kwapis)
1989 Farewell to the King (Milius) (ph—special water unit)
1990 Ghost (Zucker); Solar Crisis (Sarafian) (+ co-pr)
1992 Alien 3 (Fincher)
1995 Species (Donaldson)
1996 Multiplicity (Ramis)
1997 Air Force One (Petersen)
1998 Desperate Measures (Schroeder)
2000 Bedazzled (Ramis)

Publications

By EDLUND: articles—

Cinefantastique (New York), Spring 1978.
Ecran Fantastique (Paris), October 1983.
Film Comment (New York), July/August 1984.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), July 1996.

On EDLUND: articles—

American Cinematographer (Hollywood), April and June 1984.
Cinefex (Riverside, California), no. 25, February 1986.
Cinefantastique (Forest Park), vol. 27, no. 7, 1996.
Cinefex (Riverside, California), March 1996.
Cinefex (Riverside, California), September 1996.

* * *

Richard Edlund’s career as a special effects expert began when he was hired as part of the visual effects team for Star Wars. The film, a phenomenal critical and popular success, breathed life into the science-fiction genre, and established the director/producer George Lucas as a powerful member of Hollywood’s new generation of filmmakers. It was a significant film in the history of Hollywood for other, less apparent reasons as well. With its innovative visual effects, it changed the course of that aspect of the industry. Edlund’s career has developed as rapidly as the special effects business itself.

The backbone of the science-fiction film is the matte shot, which can combine a prepositioned live-action sequence with separate footage of painted backgrounds to create the illusion that the characters are existing in another time and place; or matte shots can also bring together several individual components, such as animated sequences, model shots, and shots with miniatures, to create scenes impossible to produce in another manner. Some of the first matte shots were done in the camera, while later ones were produced using an optical printing process. Because of the complex space battles that Lucas planned for Star Wars, neither of these methods were adequate.

The system developed for Star Wars was a combination of producing the mattes inside the camera and optical printing. It was Edlund who helped develop the motion-control camera which was used for creating the in-camera mattes. This camera, linked to a computer, was capable of repeating the same movements with an exact precision. Few viewers realize the complexities of producing one shot of a flying spaceship. The ship, the lights on the ship, and the flame coming from the tail are all shot separately. With the motion-control camera, these components, which must all move on the same perspective, are recorded one at a time on a single piece of film with each pass of the camera. Once this image of the spaceship is complete, it then becomes a component in a larger matte, perhaps of a battle with many ships, assembled on the optical printer. Before Star Wars and the development of the motion-control camera, and other technical innovations, this type of complex process shot was not possible.

Given the complicated nature of the special effects and the time and technology it took to produce them (there were more than 300 special effects shots in Star Wars), it is no wonder that a different approach to assembling an effects crew was necessary. A large group of experts (including Edlund) was gathered for Star Wars, resulting in the formation of Industrial Light and Magic (ILM), a visual effects company, where the equipment and crew needed to produce the effects for a given film were housed together.

The success of Star Wars and its sequels, and of Close Encounters of the Third Kind to some extent, caused a renaissance in the special effects industry. Edlund believes that that renaissance is still peaking and that “the new grammar of special film effects is still being developed.” Since Star Wars, leaps and bounds have been made in the technology, and Edlund’s motion-control camera has been modified and improved many times.

Edlund himself has developed a number of pieces of effects equipment, including a snorkel lens, which is used inside a cloud tank. On big-budget science-fiction or adventure films, visual effects houses have replaced the lone special effects expert as the creators of large-scale effects. After Star Wars, ILM, (including Edlund), went on to do the visual effects for The Empire Strikes Back, The Return of the Jedi, and Raiders of the Lost Ark. On each of these films, Edlund and other members of the ILM crew won Academy Awards for their innovative work. While at ILM, Edlund also headed the special effects unit on Poltergeist. His work for that film was also nominated for an Oscar.

In the early 1980s Edlund boosted his career when he became the head of the large special effects crew for 2010, the sequel to 2001: A Space Odyssey. Though he worked with a crew of 100 for 16 months and was associated with the effects house Entertainment Effect Group, he was virtually in charge of most of the effects. For 2010 Edlund made decisions concerning the special type of cameras and camera equipment necessary for the effects shots, the cloud tanks, the motion-control system, how to shoot the mattes, at what camera speed to shoot the miniatures, what size film stock to use, and the effects of the different types of film emulsion for various shots.

At the request of special effects pioneer Douglas Trumbull, Edlund became the supervising head of Trumbull’s effects house, Boss Film, in the mid-1980s. Boss is a completely self-contained effects company, with a number of departments—including a creature department, an animation and rotoscope division, a matte department, and much more—headed by experts in the field. When a studio hires Boss Film, it is in charge of producing all the special and mechanical effects for that film, with each department handling the appropriate effect. Edlund heads the whole creative force.

Because of the complex nature of today’s special effects, the large number of people needed to produce them for each film, and their technical nature, it would seem that any attempt to discuss an overall approach to a film’s effects would be impossible. Edlund, however, likes to group his films into two categories—those that are complete fantasies, that have little basis in the world as the audience knows it (the Star Wars trilogy, Masters of the Universe); and those that depend on the audience’s familiarity with certain characters, situations, and locales (2010, Poltergeist, and the smash hit, Ghost). Edlund seems to have a certain fondness for the latter, as they present more of a challenge in terms of making the effects more believable. For example, Edlund went to great pains in 2010 to make the images of Jupiter familiar to the audience by playing off their expectations based on NASA footage from Voyager 2, which had been shown on television.

In the 1990s, Edlund continues to dominate much of the special effects industry, and has taken advantage of recent developments in digital technology. Films such as ILM’s Terminator 2 and Jurassic Park show how fantastical images can emerge on-screen via computer enhancement, and look completely realistic. Edlund and Boss Films have not fallen behind. In 1992, IBM delivered to Boss a $1.2 million Power Visualization System (PVS), whose output data of 100 megabytes per second (roughly 100 times the average Ethernet networked workstation), make models and matte shots nearly obsolete. With a PVS to create digital images, anything within the effects expert’s imagination can be reproduced on film. Edlund marvels at the new technology: “Suddenly we have a godlike capability.” And yet he has not abandoned more traditional methods. For Species, Edlund supervised construction of an animatronic monster equipped with motion sensors. This fierce, agile creature leaps and growls with the speed of a jungle cat. As with many of Edlund’s creations, it remains the sole spark of originality in an otherwise mediocre film.

Edlund is a pivotal figure in the visual effects renaissance brought about by the success of techniques and innovations pioneered in Star Wars. Since then, Edlund has moved up the ladder from being one member of a visual effects team to becoming board chairman of one of Hollywood’s largest special effects houses.

—Susan Doll, updated by Ken Provencher

EDOUART, Farciot

Special Effects Technician. Nationality: American. Born: California, 1895. Family: Married. Military Service: U.S. Army Engineers, Camouflage Division of Corps of Engineers during World War I, then with the Signal Corps. Career: 1915—joined Realeart Studio as assistant cameraman; then worked for the Red Cross in Europe until 1921; 1922—joined Lasky Company, and worked as special effects photographer after it became Paramount, until 1974. Awards: Academy Award for I Wanted Wings, 1941, Reap the Wild Wind, 1942; Technical Academy Award, 1937, 1939, 1943 (2 awards), 1947, 1955 (2 awards); Special Academy Award, 1938. Died: In Kenwood, California, 17 March 1980.

Films as Special Effects Photographer (selected list):

1933 Alice in Wonderland (McLeod)
1935 Lives of a Bengal Lancer (Hathaway)
1936 Peter Ibbetson (Hathaway)
1938 The Texans (Hogan); Spawn of the North (Hathaway)
1939 Union Pacific (DeMille)
1940 Dr. Cyclops (Schoedsack)
1941 I Wanted Wings (Leisen); Virginia (Griffith); Sullivan’s Travels (P. Sturges); Aloma of the South Seas (Santell)
1942  Reap the Wild Wind (DeMille)
1943  So Proudly We Hail (Sandrich)
1944  The Story of Dr. Wassell (DeMille)
1945  The Lost Weekend (Wilders)
1946  The Virginian (Gilmore)
1947  Unconquered (DeMille)
1948  The Emperor Waltz (Wilders)
1950  Sunset Boulevard (Wilders)
1951  Ace in the Hole (Wilders); When Worlds Collide (Maté)
1955  Artist and Models (Tashlin)
1956  The Mountain (Dmytryk)
1958  The Colossus of New York (Lourié); The Space Children (Arnold); Vertigo (Hitchcock); Houseboat (Shavelson)
1961  Blue Hawaii (Taurou); Breakfast at Tiffany’s (Edwards); One-Eyed Jacks (Brando); The Pleasure of His Company (Seaton)
1963  Donovan’s Reef (Ford); Hud (Ritt); It’s a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World (Kramer)
1964  The Carpetbaggers (Dmytryk); The Disorderly Orderly (Lewis)
1965  In Harm’s Way (Preminger); Red Line 7000 (Hawks); Ship of Fools (Kramer); Village of the Giants (Gordon)
1966  This Property Is Condemned (Pollack)
1967  Barefoot in the Park (Saks); El Dorado (Hawks); Warning Shot (Kuklik)
1968  Rosemary’s Baby (Polanski)

EISLER, Hanns

Films as Composer:

1930  Das Lied vom Leben (Song of Life) (Granowsky) (co)
1931  Niemansland (No Man’s Land) (Trivas) (co)
1932  Kuhle Wampe, oder Wir gehören die Welt? (Dudow); Pesno o geroyazh (Komsomol; Song of Heroes; Youth Speaks) (Ivens)
1933  Dans les rues (Trivas); Nieuwe gronden (New Earth) (Ivens—short)
1934  Le Grand Jeu (Feyder)
1935  Abdul the Damned (Grene)
1936  La Vie est à nous (Renoir) (song)
1938  The 400 Million (China’s 400 Million) (Ivens)
1940  White Flood (Maddow, Field, and Meyers—short); Rain (Ivens) (new score for 1929 film Regen)
1941  Pete Roleum and His Cousins (Losey—short); A Child Went Forth (Losey and Ferno—short); Our Russian Front (Ivens and Milestone—short); The Forgotten Village (Kline)

EISLER WRITERS AND PRODUCTION ARTISTS, 4th EDITION

EISLER WRITERS AND PRODUCTION ARTISTS, 4th EDITION

Publications

On EDOUART: articles—

Obituary in Journal of the Society of Motion Picture and Television Engineers (Scarsdale), July 1980.

* * *

The name most closely associated with classic rear-screen projection effects is Farcio Edouart. Rear-screen projection is a technique which composites studio sequences with location or effects shots by projecting images on a screen behind the live action and then simultaneously photographing them. Developed during the late 1920s, it was first used in Just Imagine in 1930. According to American Cinematographer, Edouart was the second technician to employ rear-screen projection in feature films.

Edouart’s concentration and expertise in this field is made clear by the ten Academy Awards he received between 1937 and 1955. Seven of the awards were technical and directly involved improvements on the rear-screen projection process, most notably his improvement of the triple-headed background projector and a process which transferred color transparencies to glass plates, then projected and rephotographed them.

Edouart’s filmography avoids much overt science-fiction or fantasy. This fact is not all that surprising, since rear-screen projection as practiced by Edouart was used to render a heightened reality and project authenticity of locale, as in Spawn of the North, Union Pacific, Aloma of the South Seas, Ace in the Hole, The Mountain, and Blue Hawaii. However, some of his best-remembered work foregrounds technology as it plays with the unreal. Dr. Cyclops and When Worlds Collide (both created by Edouart and Gordon Jennings, a frequent collaborator) used rear-screen projection to depict the very small in an oversized environment: the 12-inch-tall explorers struggling to survive in a world usually taken for granted (Dr. Cyclops) or the scientists coping with Earth’s destruction by a renegade planet (When Worlds Collide). Vertigo and It’s a Mad, Mad, Mad World employed similar techniques to visualize the private fantasies of the film’s protagonists: the morbid obsession to recreate the lost ideal woman (Vertigo) or the comic lunacy of the promise of untold wealth (It’s a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World).

Edouart stands as an expert technician whose efforts were made in the service of a film’s overall design. Professionalism prevented him from creating special effects for their own end and consequently much of his work passes undetected. Although this may deny recognition by the general public, it actually attests to Edouart’s consummate skills.

—Greg. S. Faller
Hanns Eisler (center)

1942  China Fights (Yuan)
1943  Hangmen Also Die! (F. Lang)
1944  None But the Lonely Heart (Odetts)
1945  Jealousy (Machaty); The Spanish Main (Borzage)
1946  Deadline at Dawn (Clurman); Scandal in Paris (Sirk) (co)
1947  The Woman on the Beach (Reinor); So Well Remembered (Dmytryk)
1948  Krizova trojka (Three Crosses) (Gajer)
1949  Unser täglich Brot (Our Daily Bread) (Dudow)
1950  Der Rat der Götter (Maetzig)
1951  Das Leben unserer Präsidenten (Leben Wilhelm Piecks) (Thorndike)
1952  Frauenschicksale (Dudow)
1953  Schicksal am Lenkrad (Vergano)
1954  Bel Ami (Daquin)
1955  Herr Puntila und sein Knecht Matti (Cavalcanti); Nuit et brouillard (Night and Fog) (Resnais)
1956  Les Sorcières de Salem (The Witches of Salem) (Rouleau)
1958  Geschwader Fledermaus (Engel)
1959  Tribe Wasser (Les Arrivistes) (Daquin)
1962  Unbändiges Spanien (J. and K. Stein); Esther (Trosch)

Other Films:

1936  Pagliacci (A Clown Must Laugh) (Grune) (arranger)
1955  Gasparone (Paryla) (adaptation, + co-sc)
1956  Fidelio (Felsenstein) (adaptation, + co-sc)

Publications

By Eisler: books—

By EISLER: articles—

Film und Fernsehen (letters) (Berlin), no. 7, 1983.
Film und Fernsehen (letters) (Berlin), no. 4, 1985.

On EISLER: books—

On EISLER: articles—

Film und Fernsehen (Berlin), nos. 6 and 7, 1981.
Kinemathek (Berlin), June 1983.

Hanns Eisler was a well-known composer of orchestral and stage works (collaborating especially with Bertolt Brecht) before his first film compositions, and he was always a musical theoretician, stressing the revolutionary function of music: his “Solidaritätslied” appeared in the film Kuhle Wampe, and other “revolutionary” songs include the “Einheitsfrontlied” and the East German national anthem. About his work for the film Komsomol, he said: “In composing music to a revolutionary film the composer is faced with new and difficult problems, especially when the film deals with such an important theme as youth constructing socialism.” In that film, he used music based on recordings of the noise of blast furnaces as well as folk songs. His other early films also have music based on his firm ideas about the relation of music to film content. He disliked the use of leitmotifs, since he felt it led to a poverty of composition, and stressed “‘musical commentary’ as opposed to ‘illustration, mood-painting.’” For Das Lied vom Leben he used a ballad of the life awaiting a newborn child; for Niemandsland he showed the “‘stultifying and narcotic effect’” of military music. Often, in fact, he set music against the action of the film in order to encourage a thoughtful, rather than a sentimental, reaction to it—a lesson he might have learned from Brecht’s alienation effect. Kuhle Wampe is divided into episodes by the musical forms used, so any sentimental reaction to this film about unemployment is neutralized. In New Earth his compositions operate under the principle that machinery should be accompanied by natural sound and men by music: he used the usual instrumentation as well as banjo, accordion, and jazz-type percussion, with a blues tune used in the central section of men carrying heavy equipment. For White Flood, a documentary about glaciers, he used an invention, a scherzo, an etude (for a snow storm), and a sonata finale, while in Rain he utilized the 12-tone technique (“‘14 Ways of Describing Rain’”). His stay in Hollywood (which he detested) was not as productive as his early documentary period, though he received an Oscar nomination for Hangmen Also Die!

ELFMAN, Danny

Films as Composer:

1980  Forbidden Zone (+ arranger, ro as Satan)
1985  Pee Wee’s Big Adventure
1986  Back To School (+ ro as Oingo Boingo band member; Wisdom; The Texas Chainsaw Massacre 2 (song))
1987  Summer School
1988  Midnight Run; Scrooged; Hot to Trot; Big Top Pee Wee; Delores Claiborne
1989  Batman; Ghostbusters II
1990  Dick Tracy; Edward Scissorhands; Nightride; Darkman; Leatherface: Texas Chainsaw Massacre III (song); The Flash (main theme—for TV)
1991  Pure Luck (main theme)
1992  Batman Returns (+ music producer); Buffy the Vampire Slayer (song “We Close Our Eyes’’); Article 99
1993  Sommersby; Army of Darkness (Evil Dead 3); Nightmare Before Christmas (+ assoc pr, ro as Jack Skellington [singing])
1994  Black Beauty; Shrunken Heads (main theme); Darkman II: The Return of Durant (musical themes)
1995  Delores Claiborne (+ music producer); Dead Presidents (+ music producer); To Die For; Great People of the Bible and How They Lived (video)
1996  Extreme Measures (+ music producer); The Frighteners; Mars Attacks!; Mission Impossible; Bordello of Blood (theme); Freeway; Farewell: Live from the Universal Amphitheatre Halloween (video) (+ sc, exec pr, performer); Darkman III: Die Darkman Die (musical themes)
1997  Good Will Hunting (+ score producer); Flubber; Men in Black; Scream 2 (‘‘Cassandra’’ aria)
1998  A Simple Plan; Modern Vampires; A Civil Action (+ score producer)
1999  Anywhere But Here (+ songs); My Favorite Martian; Instinct; Sleepy Hollow

Films as Actor:

1977  Hot Tomorrows (as singer)
1981  Urgh! A Music War (as Oingo Boingo member)
1992  The Magical World of Chuck Jones (as himself)

Other Films:

1998  Psycho (music adaptor, producer, and supervisor)

Publications

On ELFMAN: articles—

Danny Elfman’s shadowy scores of exaggerated comic-book quality are most closely associated with the films of director Tim Burton: Batman, Batman Returns, Beetlejuice, Pee Wee’s Big Adventure, Edward Scissorhands, Nightmare Before Christmas, and Mars Attacks! Yet, his most catchy tune is perhaps the Jetson’s-like theme of the animated television series The Simpsons. Elfman is a self-taught musician who can (and does) play virtually every instrument. In an interview for Time, Elfman resisted the label “‘genius,’’” instead describing himself as “‘a good observer [who’s] very tenacious.’” During his youth, Elfman was exposed to symphonies and classical film scores. His favorite composers are highly imagistic Eastern European composers such as Bartok, Prokofiev, Shostokovich, and Stravinsky. Yet, he is the first to admit that his exposure to classical music has been filtered through film. Alfred Hitchcock’s composer Bernard Hermann (Psycho, Vertigo, The Man Who Knew Too Much) is Elfman’s all-time favorite, with Nino Rota (Fellini’s 8 1/2 and Coppola’s The Godfather) a close runner-up. His ongoing fascination with Hermann was one of the reasons Elfman joined up for the 1999 remake of Psycho, in which one can hear distinct homages that are reminiscent of the original score without being derivative. Elfman also credits Cab Calloway, Gilbert and Sullivan, Ravel, Camille Saint-Saens, Dr. Seuss, Max Steiner, and Franz Waxman as inspirations. The “‘dark cheeriness’’” of songs, lyrics, score, and vocals for main character that Elfman composed for Nightmare Before Christmas are reminiscent of Kurt Weill, the German cabaret composer.

Elfman started playing the violin in high school. In his first gig, he played conga drums while touring France and Belgium with an avant-garde troupe, Grand Magic Circus. When eighteen, he spent a year in West Africa, after which he joined up with his brother’s group, The Mystic Knights, otherwise known as the prequel to Oingo Boingo. Elfman taught himself composition by transcribing the jazz music of Duke Ellington. Elfman received his first taste of international stardom when Oingo Boingo’s theme song for the film Weird Science (1985) made Billboard’s Top 40. He remained active in the rock group until the band’s retirement in 1996.

Although Elfman’s first composition for film was the low-budget cult film made by his brother, Richard, Forbidden Zone (1980), Elfman entered the Hollywood scene in 1985 when Tim Burton approached Elfman to score Pee Wee’s Big Adventure based solely on Elfman’s work with Oingo Boingo. Elfman subsequently composed the music for all three Pee Wee sequels and the television series that resulted from the film’s popularity. Burton and Elfman have enjoyed a lucrative and creatively inspirational partnership ever since.
After winning a Grammy for the neo-gothic soundtrack for Burton’s Batman (1989), Elfman has had his pick of film projects. However, Elfman usually chooses to share his distinctive sound in films featuring alienated characters and macabre story-lines similar to Burton’s portraits of melancholy and misunderstood outsiders. His music intensifies the atmosphere of bizarre, mysterious, and haunting alienation that complement Burton’s highly stylized, moody films. In these films, music becomes part of a mosaic of poetic effects that turn the film into a composite of suspense. His quirky, gloomy musical style reflects the essential quality of the comic books that inspired some of films such as Batman, Darkman, and Dick Tracy, the latter leading to his second Grammy nomination. In Nightmare, for example, Elfman “‘wraps minor scales, dissonance, and witchy vocals into a child-accessible soundtrack,’” explains Alyssa Katz. Against Elfman’s elaborate musical backdrop, the spectator enters a different world in which Elfman’s music becomes part of the ethereal mood. Film critic Jonathan Hoberman sums up Elfman’s music for Nightmare before Christmas, Elfman’s personal favorite, as “a near perfect balance between nasty and cute.” Nightmare, a “‘funhouse of funereal glamour’” according to a film review in Time, balances a succession of funny, tragic, ironic characters in exaggeratedly dramatic situations.

In an interview, Elfman has said that “writing the melody is the easy part. Art comes from what you do with the melody.” His music is indeed artful: his haunting melodies match the rhythm of animated sequences, just as his changes in instrumental color highlight dramatic effect. His scores provide emotional support, accentuate the pacing of the films, and enhance the mood of the setting. Elfman creates a textured fabric that drapes over the narrative to magical effect. The music in Scissorhands, for example, emphasizes the character’s alienation and increasing uncertainty as he becomes a cultural cast-off.

As counterpart to his exaggerated portraits of lonely outsiders, Elfman’s interest in the gothic and creepy led to his participation in several horror films, including Delores Claiborne, Psycho, Tales from the Crypt, and Sleepy Hollow. Elfman has composed eerie music for many ghostly, otherworldly characters including those from Beetlejuice, Scrooged, My Favorite Martian, and Modern Vampires. Of the 300 films Elfman has been involved in, he readily admits to regretting at least a third of them. Moreover, his candid acknowledgement of the commercial enterprise of film composition, in which creative vision is frequently sacrificed for heightened sales, is part of Elfman’s appeal. He has proven his independence in thought, action, and music.

—Jill Gillespie

ELLENSHAW, Peter

Special Effects Technician. Nationality: British. Born: London, England, 24 May 1913. Military Service: Royal Air Force during World War II. Family: Married c. 1942, son: the special effects man Harrison Ellenshaw. Career: Worked as special effects man for Alexander Korda from mid-1930s; worked for Walt Disney from early 1950s, until 1953 in England, then in the United States: also worked on Disney television films and Disneyland rides; also a painter: regular exhibits at Hammer Gallery, New York. Awards: Academy Award, for Mary Poppins, 1964, and Bedknobs and Broomsticks, 1971.
1968  Blackbeard’s Ghost (Stevenson); Never a Dull Moment (Paris) (co)
1969  The Love Bug (Stevenson)
1971  Bedknobs and Broomsticks (Stevenson)
1973  The Island at the Top of the World (Stevenson)
1979  The Black Hole (Nelson)

Publications

By ELLENSHAW: books—

By ELLENSHAW: articles—

Films Illustrated (London), March 1980.
Film Review (London), April 1980.
Filme (Berlin), January-February 1981.

On ELLENSHAW: articles—

Movie Maker (Hemel Hempstead, Hertfordshire), March 1980.

* * *

Peter Ellenshaw made a career out of mixing fantasy with reality to make make-believe worlds come to life and also, conversely, mixing reality with fantasy to allow the real world to enter into animated or make-believe environments. He began his career in 1934 as a matte artist and was an assistant to W. Percy Day, an early advocate (and possibly the inventor) of matte painting in Europe. Ellenshaw worked for several British directors—including Michael Powell—painting fanciful backgrounds that would have been too expensive to build as sets. He provided the matte painting and the hanging miniature that represented the blue and pink city of Bagdad that hung on the walls. The ambience is friendly and inviting. For the interior of the Spaceship Cygnus, Ellenshaw achieved an edge of the volcano. Many critics again felt that the special effects were a feat only the Disney studio could accomplish.

While Ellenshaw continued to work on other well-known films such as Pollyanna, Swiss Family Robinson, and even the blockbuster, Spartacus, it is his work on Mary Poppins that is the best known. Filming Mary Poppins was a feat only the Disney studio could accomplish. First, the Disney creators were coming from the world of animation and they had a different slant on storytelling. Second, they had a history of successful special effects. For Mary Poppins, they incorporated wonderful adventures in flying or racing that defied logic and merged the worlds of dream and reality. Ellenshaw’s special effects became one of the great delights of the film.

Ellenshaw’s special effects are an intrinsic part of the Mary Poppins story. For the gravity-defying special effects, the flying effects used for The Absent-Minded Professor, a black-and-white movie, were adapted to color film. The flying effects enabled fantasy to enter the real world as Mary Poppins arrives from somewhere above with an umbrella keeping her aloft, as the wind blows hard and carries away all the other nannies; Ed Wynn floats to the ceiling every time he laughs; and pieces of paper float up the chimney. All seems effortless and real, indeed a mix between fantasy and reality. The real mixes with fantasy as Dick Van Dyke dances with cartoon penguins, and carousel horses come to life to run a race which, of course, Mary Poppins wins. The mattes used to create the rooftop scenes to the “Step in Time” sequence are breathtaking. For his work on this film, Ellenshaw won his first Academy Award.

Ellenshaw later won his second Academy Award as art director for Bedknobs and Broomsticks and was also nominated for another Academy Award as production designer on The Island at the Top of the World. Bedknobs and Broomsticks was filled with special effects and many critics felt that they were the redeeming factor of the movie. Many of the special effects were similar to those in Mary Poppins: a bedstead flies like a magic carpet, animation is nicely mixed with live action, and the characters ride into seven fantastic worlds.

The Island at the Top of the World is a story set in 1907. An Englishman commissions a spaceship to take him to a mythical, arctic Shangri-La. Ellenshaw produced splendid visual effects for the authentic looking Viking settlement and mysterious valley on the edge of the volcano. Many critics again felt that the special effects redeemed the movie.

For Disney’s super-production The Black Hole, Ellenshaw was asked to come out of retirement to be the production designer and special effects director. This was the largest project attempted up till that time by Disney. It was also important work for Ellenshaw who would later see his work on The Black Hole as part of an exhibit at the Museum of Modern Art. The sets are eye-catching, almost distracting. For the interior of the Spaceship Cygnus, Ellenshaw achieved a dated modern look by borrowing from Chagall and Mondrian. Inside, it is comfty, not austere. There are big picture windows replacing the usual small portholes. Bunks beds have space art hanging on the walls. The ambience is friendly and inviting.

Ellenshaw exclusively used mattes in The Black Hole—simple mattes as well as complex running mattes—and his son executed all 150 mattes, a world record. The special effects work on The Black Hole is considered to be technically superior to Star Wars, Star Trek, and Close Encounters of the Third Kind, although The Black Hole did not attract the same box-office attention. The design of the movie is considered to be a point of departure from Star Wars. The Black Hole was Peter Ellenshaw’s last movie and a fitting close for someone who was described as one of the screen’s masters of visual effects, and the film garnered him another Academy Award nomination, for best visual effects.

—Renee Ward

ENIEI, Yevgeni

Films as Art Director:

1925 Mishki protiv Youdenitsa (Mishka against Yudenich) (Kozinstev and Trauberg); V tylu u belych (Tchaikovsky and Rachmaninaova); Napoleon-Gaz (Timoshenko)
1926 Severnoe sianie (Mirage in the North) (Foregger); Katka bumaghyi ranet (Katka’s Reimette Apple) (Johanson and Ermler); Chyortovo koleso (The Devil’s Wheel) (Kozinstev and Trauberg); Shinel (The Cloak) (Kozinstev and Trauberg)
1927 S.V.D. (Sovaz Velikogo Dela; The Club of the Big Deed) (Kozinstev and Trauberg); Bratichka (Little Brother) (Kozinstev and Trauberg); Chizoi pidzak (Schipiss)
1928 Devushka s dalekoi reki (The Girl from the Distant River) (Chervyakov) (co); Dom v sugribakh (The House in the Snow-Drifts) (Ermler)
1929 Obilomok imperii (Fragment of an Empire) (Kozinstev and Trauberg); Novyi Vavilon (The New Babylon) (Kozinstev and Trauberg); Flag nazit (Flags of Nations) (Schmidgof) (co); Chornyi parus (The Black Sail) (Yutkevich)
1930 Dvadzatadva neshchastia (22 Misfortunes) (Gerasimov and Bartenev)
1931 Odna (Alone) (Kozinstev and Trauberg)
1932 Ich puti razoschchis (Federov); Snaiper (Timoshenko)
1935 Yunost Maksima (The Youth of Maxim) (Kozinstev and Trauberg)
1937 Vozyvraschenkiye Maksima (The Return of Maxim) (Kozinstev and Trauberg)
1939 Vyborgskaya Storona (The Vyborg Side) (Kozinstev and Trauberg)
1947 Pirogov (Kozinstev (co); Zhizn v tsitadel (Life in the Citadel) (Rappaport) (co)
1949 Academian Ivan Pavlov (Roshal) (co)
1952 Jambul (Dzigan) (co)
1955 Ovod (The Gadfly) (Fainzimmer)
1965 Prostiye lyudi (Simple People) (Kozinstev and Trauberg—produced 1945) (co)
1957 Don Cesar de Bazan (Shapiro); Don Quixote (Kozinstev)
1958 Den pervyi (The First Day) (Ermler)
1963 Hamlet (Kozinstev) (co)
1967 Katerina Izmailova (Shapiro)
1971 Karol Lear (King Lear) (Kozinstev)

Publications

On ENIEI: articles—

Soviet Film (Moscow), no. 10, 1970.

* * *

Yevgeni ENIEI’s career extended from the mid-1920s to 1971, and he combined in his work the delightful eccentricity and wonderment of the early filmmakers Kozinste and Trauberg with the later dedication to Soviet psychological realism of Ermler and the Kozinfte- Trauberg team in the 1930s. His brilliance was revealed in the striking sets for The New Babylon: the fantastic department store of the Paris Commune of 1870 perfectly matches Kozinstev and Trauberg’s extravagant political views. Working again with the cinematographer Andrei Moskvin on Kozinstev and Trauberg’s Alone, he used a variety of white tones in close collaboration with the cinematography.

Later in his career, he proved adept at providing rather solid biographical films, such as Pirogov. The New Yorker called Don Quixote one of the most beautiful color compositions ever assembled in a film. Enei maximized the potential and richness of color film while successfully avoiding a garishly unrestrained palette of hues. Shot in the Crimea under a scathing sun, the film enjoys a landscape of chalky white that serves as a perfect backdrop against which to silhouette the characters of the knight errant, his devoted companion, and those whom the two encounter. In the film, art direction provides Enei with a means of communicating character; for example, the stark black cloaks and stiff white ruffles perfectly frame the cold, arrogant faces of the aristocrats at the duke’s court, while costuming for the ragged don heightens both his tragedy and his absurdity.

Don Quixote is considered by most to be the best of the Soviet offerings in the State Department’s U.S.-U.S.S.R. Cultural Exchange Agreement of that year.

Enei shared excellent company in developing Hamlet. Grigori Kozinstev, not only a talented director but also a respected Shake- speare scholar, both directed and wrote the script, based on poet Boris Pasternak’s admired Russian translation. In addition, the film is supported by composer Dmitri Shostakovich’s turbulent, foreboding musical score. Visual spectacle supports the film’s epic tone and features impressive black-and-white tableaux that are nothing short of visual poetry. Exterior shots are of a funereal grayness with chiaroscuro reminiscent of Russian film patriarch Sergei Eisenstein. Interior scenes, by contrast, contain warm lighting amid labyrinthine stone corridors where courtiers adored with courteously robes, furs, and elegant raiment course a doomed path. Beyond the excellent costuming, settings contribute to the quality of the picture. Above a violent, storm-lashed sea is poised upon a cliff of forbidding rocks an ancient, turreted castle (a real castle located in Estonia). Visual imagery is carefully composed and powerfully displayed. For example, riders on horseback seem winged with the fluttering of capes and soldiers hurrying over the castle’s drawbridge provide potent spectacle.

Fortinbras’s troops replete with artillery—hundreds of cavalry and pikemen covering miles of bleak landscape—make their way toward the Baltic coastline. Period accuracy was ensured with the use of actual sixteenth- and seventeenth-century weapons and authentic armor lent to the film by Leningrad’s Hermitage. Enei’s attention to detail is evident throughout Hamlet, as is characteristic of his work in general. The portrait of the royal court is one teeming not only with royalty, courtiers, soldiers, and ladies but also with stable boys, cooks, fishmongers, and peasants—giving the film a social context generally absent from previous interpretations of the play. A final example of Enei’s meticulous art direction is evidenced in Polonius’s death scene. When Prince Hamlet kills the Lord Chamberlain in his mother’s bed chamber, the old man falls, tearing down a curtain to expose rows of mannequins draped in the queen’s finery. The film’s social consciousness continues to the final climactic scene. The choice to set Hamlet’s death beyond the walls of the brooding castle provides the film with an opportunity to reveal how the microcosm impacts the macrocosm, how the world of the king affects the lives of the people. Hundreds of peasants stood witness to the death of their prince.

Enei worked again with Koziinstev in producing another Shakespeare classic, King Lear. It is useful to contrast Koziinstev’s Lear with Britain’s Peter Brook’s version of the same play, filmed the same year. Indeed, the two directors corresponded and shared production notes. Brook’s version has been criticized as being visually dead, a nightmare vision of emptiness serving as a symbol for the meaninglessness and hopelessness of the universe. The play itself is certainly grim enough; however, Koziinstev and Enei manage not to lose themselves in morbidity and despair. As is his custom, Enei gives careful attention to the films accouterments, which are tactilely rich despite a stark, at times even sterile backdrop. Costumes and sets are appropriate both to the subject and to the emotional content of each scene.

Enei’s most famous works, however, are the two Maxim films he made for Koziinstev and Trauberg in the mid-1930s. This outstanding fictional sequence, so rooted in reality that millions of viewers in the Soviet Union believed it represented the life of a real man, had a precedent in Ermler’s silent Fragment of an Empire, described by Paul Rotha as “the epitome of the Soviet sociological propaganda film.” The Maxim films do more than put words and sounds to a silent sociological biography: the disparate images that Maxim encounters in his early life, the amazing views of the city, always from Maxim’s perspective, suggest the way a mind actually thinks and grows.

—Carrie D. O’Neill

EPSTEIN, Julius and Philip

Writers. Nationality: American. Born: New York City, 22 August 1909 (twins). Education: Attended public schools in New York; Pennsylvania State University, University Park. Julius graduated 1931, Philip graduated 1932. Family: Julius married 1) Frances Sage, 1936 (divorced 1945); 2) Ann Lazlo, 1949. Career: Philip worked as an actor, Julius as a press agent and boxer; 1933—moved to Hollywood: Julius’s first film as a writer, Living on Velvet, 1935, and Philip’s first film as writer, Love on a Bet, 1936; 1939—began collaborating on films; Julius continued writing alone after Philip’s death in 1952; TV work includes the mini-series The Pirate, 1978. Awards: Academy Award for Casablanca, 1943; Writers Guild Laurel Award, 1955. Address: (Julius) c/o ICM, 8899 Beverly Blvd., Los Angeles, California 90048, U.S.A. Died: Philip died 9 February 1952.

Films as Writer (Julius):

1935 Living on Velvet (Borzage); In Caliente (Bacon); Little Big Shot (Curtiz); I Live for Love (Berkeley); Stars Over Broadway (Keighley); Broadway Gondolier (Bacon)
1936 Sons o’ Guns (Bacon)
1937 Confession (May)
1938 Secrets of an Actress (Keighley); Four Daughters (Curtiz)
1954 Young at Heart (Douglas) (co)
1955 The Tender Trap (Walters)
1957 Kiss Them for Me (Donen)
1958 The Brothers Karamazov (Brooks) (co-adaptation only)
1959 Take a Giant Step (Leacock) (co, + pr)
1960 Tall Story (Logan)
1961 Fanny (Logan)
1962 The Light in the Piazza (Green)
1964 Send Me No Flowers (Jewison)
1965 Return from the Ashes (Thompson)
1966 Any Wednesday (Miller) (+ pr)
1972 Pete ‘n’ Tillie (Ritt) (+ co-pr)
1975 Once Is Not Enough (Green)
1978 House Calls (Ziett) (co-sc); Cross of Iron (Peckinpah) (co)
1983 Reuben, Reuben (Miller)
Films as Writer (Philip):

1936 Love on a Bet (Jason); The Bride Walks Out (Jason); Grand Jury (Rogell)
1937 New Faces of 1937 (Jason)
1938 The Mad Miss Manton (Jason); There’s That Woman Again (Hall)
1942 The Male Animal (Nugent)
1943 Casablanca (Curtiz)
1944 Mr. Skeffington (V. Sherman) (+ pr); Arsenic and Old Lace (Capra); One More Tomorrow (Godfrey) (additional dialogue only)
1948 Romance on the High Seas (Curtiz)
1949 Chicken Every Sunday (Seaton); My Foolish Heart (Robson)
1951 Take Care of My Little Girl (Negulesco)
1953 Forever Female (Rapper)
1954 The Last Time I Saw Paris (Brooks); The Brothers Karamazov (Brooks)

Films as Co-Writers:

1939 Daughters Courageous (Curtiz); Four Wives (Curtiz)
1940 Saturday’s Children (V. Sherman); No Time for Comedy (Keighley)
1941 Strawberry Blonde (Walsh); The Bride Came C.O.D. (Keighley); The Man Who Came to Dinner (Keighley); Honeymoon for Three (Bacon)
1942 Take Care of My Little Girl (Negulesco)
1943 Casablanca (Curtiz)
1944 Romance on the High Seas (Curtiz)
1948 Four Wives (Curtiz)
1949 Take Care of My Little Girl (Negulesco)
1953 Casablanca (Curtiz)
1954 The Last Time I Saw Paris (Brooks); The Brothers Karamazov (Brooks)

Publications

By Julius and Philip EPSTEIN: book—

By Julius EPSTEIN: articles—

Film en Televisie (Brussels), no. 392, January 1990.

On Julius and Philip EPSTEIN: articles—

Focus on Film (London), Spring 1973.
Written By... Journal: The Writers Guild of America, West (Los Angeles), March and August 1997.

If Casablanca represents the ultimate in the Hollywood studio film, then it is no surprise that the Epstein brothers rank among the best screenwriters to emerge from the Hollywood studio system. Their combined talents span almost 50 years of filmmaking, resulting in an impressive list of well-wrought screenplays.

The identical twins, Julius and Philip, both graduated from Pennsylvania State University, after which Philip took up acting and Julius became a professional boxer. Julius’s athletic career was shortlived, however, when he found work as a radio publicist, wrote a few one-act plays, and moved to California where he began his career in Hollywood as a ghostwriter. He quickly broke into more credible screenwriting when he sold an original story, Living on Velvet, to Warner Brothers in 1935. Sharing this first screen credit with another Warners writer, Jerry Wald (soon to become well known as a producer), Epstein signed a seven-year contract with the studio.

Julius collaborated with Wald on a series of pictures, and worked on a routine Kay Francis vehicle, Confession, before he got his big break writing with the veteran screenwriter Lenore Coffee on Four Daughters. The team was honored with the first of Epstein’s four Academy Award nominations.

While Julius was making inroads at Warners, Philip made his way to California. After collaborating with Julius on a play (And the Stars Remain), Philip worked with various writers on routine pictures, mostly comedies, for RKO, Paramount, and Columbia. In 1938, following the popularity of Four Daughters, he joined Julius at Warners and they became an indivisible writing team until Philip’s death from cancer in 1952.

Their first joint assignment to duplicate the success of Four Daughters represents typical studio logic. The same cast, plus the same basic storyline, equals another hit. So the Epsteins repeated the film’s blend of domestic conflict and romance in Daughters Courageous and in a sequel, Four Wives. These were followed by a decade-long, series of successes, many of which were adaptations of Broadway plays. The studio capitalized on the writers’ talents at sophisticated, often rapier-like, dialogue, depending on the pair to adapt the material faithfully when it was good and to improve on it when it wasn’t.

Beginning with a remake of Maxwell Anderson’s Saturday’s Children, the brothers became increasingly skilled at pace and comic timing. Whether delivered by Jimmy Stewart and Rosalind Russell (No Time for Comedy), Monty Woolley (The Man Who Came to Dinner), Henry Fonda (The Male Animal), or Cary Grant (Arsenic and Old Lace), the Epsteins’ dialogue was bright, pointed, and modern. Even a nostalgic period piece like Strawberry Blonde was enlivened by James Cagney’s smart remarks and the quick tongue of Olivia de Havilland’s forward-thinking suffragette.

With their names appearing on only one conspicuous failure, One More Tomorrow (based on Philip Barry’s Animal Kingdom), the Epsteins proved themselves virtually guaranteed box-office. Their resultant power enabled them to work at home (a rarity at Warner Bros.), not obligated to “‘punch in’” on the studio time clock.

Ironically, their biggest success, Casablanca, was the adaptation of a theatrical failure, Everybody Comes to Rick’s. Working with Howard Koch, the Epsteins turned it into an Academy Award-winning screenplay. In spite of the film’s classic stature, however, Julius Epstein still insists that it is the worst kind of Hollywood “junk.”

In 1944, the Epstein’s attempted their first film in the capacity of both writers and producers with Mr. Skeffington. Although the picture was a box-office success and won both Bette Davis and Claude Rains Oscar nominations, production problems made the film an unpleasant experience. They also tried writing for the stage (Chicken Every Sunday and That’s the Ticket) and briefly joined Frank Capra on *Why
We Fight, a government-made documentary series. None of these ventures proved satisfying, so, they returned to screenwriting. After leaving Warners in 1948, the Epsteins wrote five more screenplays together, two of which, The Last Time I Saw Paris and The Brothers Karamazov, were released after Philip’s death.

Julius continued to freelance throughout the 1950s, 1960s, and less frequently during the 1970s; his most successful scripts were still comedies. He preferred working alone to collaboration, and on several occasions, Take a Giant Step, Any Wednesday, and Pete ‘n’ Tillie, acted as producer/writer. In 1969, he attempted playwriting again with But Seriously—and in 1978 adapted Harold Robbins’s The Pirate for television.

Today, Julius Epstein describes himself as a cynic, despite the number of romantic films he and his brother wrote over the years. The tone of those pictures, he insists, was shaped by the times, the tastes of the audiences, the demands of the studio, and Hollywood’s prevailing censorship. He prefers honesty to sentiment and values adult entertainment over youth-oriented exploitation films. He names Reuben, Reuben as the type of film he would have rather written all along.

—Joanne L. Yeck

ESZTERHAS, Joe

Films as Screenwriter:

1978 F.I.S.T. (Jewison)
1983 Flashdance (Lyne)
1985 Jagged Edge (Marquand)
1987 Hearts of Fire (Marquand); Big Shots (Mandel)
1988 Betrayed (Costa-Gavras) (+ exec pr)
1989 Checking Out (Leland)
1990 Music Box (Costa-Gavras) (+ exec pr)
1992 Basic Instinct (Verhoeven)
1993 Nowhere to Run (Harmon); Sliver (Noyce) (+ exec pr)
1995 Showgirls (Verhoeven); Jade (Friedkin) (+ exec pr)
1997 An Alan Smithee Film: Burn Hollywood Burn (Smiteee, Hiller) (ro as Himself); One Night Stand (Figgis) [uncredited]; Original Sin; Telling Lies in America (Ferland)
1998 Male Pattern Baldness (Thomas)
2000 Blaze of Glory

Publications

By ESZTERHAS: books—

By ESZTERHAS: articles—

On ESZTERHAS: books—

On ESZTERHAS: articles—

American Film, 3 December 1989.
Esquire, 9 May 1978.
Film Comment, January–February 1990.
The phenomenal success in 1992 of his notorious Basic Instinct (the film earned a reported $365 million in initial release, not to mention lucrative video earnings) made Joe Eszterhas a celebrity and Hollywood’s best-paid screenwriter. Eszterhas has been in the public eye ever since, which is quite unusual in his profession. With its fearless, resigned misogyny, its unflattering portrayal of feminism as delightfully lewd and criminal-minded, and its equation of heterosexuality with deadly violence, Basic Instinct pushed the limits of what could be accommodated in an “R”-rated film. The film’s self-consciously sleazy transgressiveness, hyped by a skillful advertising campaign, found a deep resonance in an America finally coming to grips with the psychosexual consequences of the AIDS crisis. Distracted by its soft-core pornography (which hinted at what it showed), audiences were untroubled by a script that lacked dramatic intensity and development, but was riddled with implausibilities. Director Paul Verhoeven’s frantic pacing helped plaster over the structural problems that Eszterhas’s one-dimensional characters and shaky plot presented.

Nothing in Eszterhas’s earlier career would have predicted that he would either be involved in such a project or be able to carry it off successfully. Brought from his native Hungary to America as a child, he persevered in mastering a new language and culture, eventually graduating from Ohio State University. As a journalist, first for Cleveland’s Plain Dealer and then for Rolling Stone magazine, Eszterhas showed himself a talented, courageous, and energetic writer. He wrote a competent investigative history of the Kent State killings and then penned a novel that won a National Book Award. He established himself as a kind of proletarian intellectual. This background proved useful when he turned to screenwriting. His first project was F.I.S.T., an unusual Hollywood film in that it was devoted to the union movement in the trucking industry during the 1930s; it is thus a kind of pseudo-autobiography of Jimmy Hoffa. Unfortunately, the project became more of a Sylvester Stallone vehicle, and on these grounds proved useful when he turned to screenwriting. His first establishment as a kind of proletarian intellectual. This background proved useful when he turned to screenwriting. His first project was F.I.S.T., an unusual Hollywood film in that it was devoted to the union movement in the trucking industry during the 1930s; it is thus a kind of pseudo-autobiography of Jimmy Hoffa. Unfortunately, the project became more of a Sylvester Stallone vehicle, and on these grounds proved useful when he turned to screenwriting. His first project was F.I.S.T., an unusual Hollywood film in that it was devoted to the union movement in the trucking industry during the 1930s; it is thus a kind of pseudo-autobiography of Jimmy Hoffa. Unfortunately, the project became more of a Sylvester Stallone vehicle, and on these grounds proved useful when he turned to screenwriting. His first project was F.I.S.T., an unusual Hollywood film in that it was devoted to the union movement in the trucking industry during the 1930s; it is thus a kind of pseudo-autobiography of Jimmy Hoffa. Unfortunately, the project became more of a Sylvester Stallone vehicle, and on these grounds proved useful when he turned to screenwriting. His first project was F.I.S.T., an unusual Hollywood film in that it was devoted to the union movement in the trucking industry during the 1930s; it is thus a kind of pseudo-autobiography of Jimmy Hoffa. Unfortunately, the project became more of a Sylvester Stallone vehicle, and on these grounds proved useful when he turned to screenwriting. His first project was F.I.S.T., an unusual Hollywood film in that it was devoted to the union movement in the trucking industry during the 1930s; it is thus a kind of pseudo-autobiography of Jimmy Hoffa. Unfortunately, the project became more of a Sylvester Stallone vehicle, and on these collaboration with Jacques Saulnier); also stage designer, including works directed by Barrault, Rivette, and Hossein; 1961—one of many films for the director Jacques Demy.

Films as Art Director:

1952 La Danseuse nue (Louis) (asst); Douze heures de bonheur (Jupiter) (Grangier) (asst); On ne badine pas avec l’amour (Desailly) (+ costumes)
1957 Le Bel Indifférent (Demy—short)
1958 Les Amants (The Lovers) (Malle) (co)
1959 Les Quatre Cents Coups (The 400 Blows) (Truffaut); Les Cousins (The Cousins) (Chabrol) (co); A double tour (Web of Passion; Leda) (Chabrol) (co); La Sentence (Valère) (co); Les Jeux de l’amour (de Broca) (co)
1960 Les Scélérats (Hossein) (co); Zazie dans le métro (Zazie) (Malle); Les Grandes Personnes (Time Out for Love) (Valère)
1961 L’Amant cinq jours (The Five Day Lover) (de Broca); Lola (Demy) (+ costumes); Une Femme est une femme (A Woman Is a Woman) (Godard); Le Rendez-vous de minuit (Leenhardt); Cléo de cinq à sept (Cléo from 5 to 7) (Varda) (+ costumes); L’année dernière à Marienbad (Last Year at Marienbad) (Resnais) (costumes only)
1962 Vie privée (A Very Private Affair) (Malle); Cybéle, ou les dimanches de Ville d’Avray (Sundays and Cybèle) (Bourguignon); “La Luxure” (“Lust”) ep. of Les Sept Péchés capitaux (The Seven Capital Sins) (Demy); Le Combat dans l’île (Cavaliére); Le Jour et l’heure (The Day and the Hour) (Clément)
1963 La Baie des anges (Bay of the Angels) (Demy); Le Feu follet (The Fire Within) (Malle)
1964 Les Parapluies de Cherbourg (The Umbrellas of Cherbourg) (Demy); Aimez-vous des femmes (A Taste for Women) (Léon) (designs); L’Insoumis (Cavaliére); Comment épouser un premier ministre (Boisrond)
1965 Viva Maria! (Malle); Paris au mois d’août (Paris in the Month of August) (Granier-Defere)
1966 Qui êtes-vous, Polly Maggoo? (Klein)
1967 Les Demoiselles de Rochefort (The Young Girls of Rochefort) (Demy); Woman Times Seven (Sept Fois Femme) (De Sica); “Mademoiselle Fifi” ep. of Le Plus Vieux Métier du monde (The Oldest Profession) (de Broca)
1968 Adolphe, ou l’âge tendre (Roubaln-Michel)
1969 Sweet Hunters (Guerra)
1970 L’Aveu (The Confession) (Costa-Gavras)
1971 Le Bateau sur l’herbe (Brach)
1973 L’Événement le plus important depuis que l’homme a marché sur la lune (A Slightly Pregnant Man) (Demy); Le Grand Bazar (Zidji); Le Hasard et la violence (Labro)
1974 La Merveilleuse Visite (Carné) (designs)
1976 L’Alpagueur (Labro); Néa (Kaplan); Le Jouet (Veber)
1977 La Vie devant soi (Madame Rosa) (Mizrachi)
1978 Lady Oscar (Demy)
1979 Tous vedettes (Lang)
1981 Chère inconnue (I Sent a Letter to My Love) (Mizrachi); Une Merveilleuse Journée (Vital)
1982 Une Chambre en ville (A Room in Town) (Demy)
1984 Notre histoire (Our Story) (Blier)

1986 La Rumba (Hanin); Thérèse (Cavaliére)
1988 Trois places pour le 26 (Demy)

Publications

By EVEIN: articles—

Image et Son (Paris), April 1968.
Cinéma (Paris), July/August 1981.

On EVEIN: articles—

Film Français (Paris), 18 February 1977.
Film Français (Paris), 3 February 1978.
Film Français (Paris), 1 March 1982.
Positif (Paris), February 1990.

* * *

Until 1960, French production design specialized in elegant but often over-theatrical re-creations of urban life. Into this calm pond, the Nouvelle Vague, with its hit-and-run shooting style, minuscule budgets, and studied naturalism, threw a rock. When the ripples cleared, two designers dominated the remade French cinema. Between them, Jacques Saulnier and his collaborator Bernard Evein—both young, both graduates of the highly theoretical Institut des Hautes Études Cinématographiques—designed for most of the New Wave directors who had any need of (or money for) décor.

Except for Les Quatre Cents Coups, they never worked for the naturalistic Truffaut, nor for Godard, except on his sole atempt at a musical, Une femme est une femme. But Philippe de Broca, Claude Chabrol, Jacques Demy, and Louis Malle used them often, and when the partnership broke up in 1961 after Last Year at Marienbad (Saulnier sets/Evein costumes), Evein became an almost permanent member of Demy’s équipe.

Demy’s ebullience and Malle’s taste for erotic melodrama suited Evein equally well, since both invited forceful visual statements. He wove a colorful high-life cocoon around Brigitte Bardot in Vie privée, but no less skillfully established a mood of wintry despair for a suicidal Maurice Ronet in Le Feu follet and Corinne Marchand in Agnès Varda’s Cléo de cinq à sept. Evein’s designs of an old pavilion in a choked grove and an orphanage by a frozen lake for Serge Bourguignon’s Sundays and Cybèle, the fable of a war veteran’s obsession with a young girl, turned the Paris suburb of Ville d’Avray into a chill extension of the Freudian landscape.

Evein’s triumphs, however, remain Demy’s Lola, Les Parapluies de Cherbourg, and Les Demoiselles de Rochefort. Born near Nantes (where Demy lived as a student), Evein was sympathetic to the movement carrying the Nouvelle Vague away from Paris. The trilogy captures the atmosphere of France’s Atlantic coast port towns: cold, wet and empty in winter, but in summer blazing with sun, and filled with sailors and tourists.

Parapluies, and Demoiselles in particular, re-instilled in the New Wave some of its lost thirties theatricality. Both are so perfectly integrated by Demy that it is hard to separate design from lighting, costumes from character, music from story. For the former, Evein repainted the port city’s old plaster walls in vivid primaries. The green, rose, red, and purple complement Michel Legrand’s parlando operatic score, the photography of Jean Rabier (mainly known for Chabrol’s gaudier thrillers) and Demy’s sensual direction of the doomed love affair between Catherine Deneuve and Nino Castelnuovo.

Rochefort, in the warmer south, is equally well exploited in the sprightly _Demoiselles_. Evein stresses the honey-colored stone of the old town and its pastel shutters, the tones of which he picks up in interiors and costumes of white, pink, and blue—candy colors, just right for this sunny musical. Nothing Evein has done since matches the vividness and visual unity of these delightful films. Sadly, ill-health brought a premature end to Evein’s career in 1990.

—John Baxter
FIELDS, Verna

Films as Editor:

1944 Belle of the Yukon (Seiter) (asst); Casanova Brown (Wood) (asst); The Woman in the Window (F. Lang) (asst)
1945 Along Came Jones (Heisler) (asst)
1960 The Savage Eye (Maddow, Meyers, and Strick); Studs Lonigan (Lerner); The Sword and the Dragon (English-language version of Ilya Mouskouri) (Pushko)
1963 An Affair of the Skin (Maddow); Cry of Battle (Lerner) (supervisor)
1964 The Bus (Wexler) (co)
1966 Country Boy (Kane); Deathwatch (Morrow)
1967 The Legend of the Boy and the Eagle (Couffer) (co); Search for the Evil One (Kane); Track of Thunder (Kane)
1968 The Wild Racers (Haller) (co)
1969 Medium Cool (Wexler)
1971 Point of Terror (Nicol) (supervisor)
1972 What’s Up, Doc? (Bogdanovich)
1973 American Graffiti (Lucas) (co); Paper Moon (Bogdanovich)
1974 Daisy Miller (Bogdanovich); The Sugarland Express (Spielberg) (co)
1975 Jaws (Spielberg)

Other Films:

1956 While the City Sleeps (F. Lang) (sound ed)
1961 El Cid (A. Mann) (sound ed)
1963 The Balcony (Strick) (sound ed); A Face in the Rain (Kershner) (sound ed)
1967 Targets (Bogdanovich) (sound ed)
1968 Journey to the Pacific (d)
1969 It’s a Good Day (d)

Publications

By FIELDS: articles—

Mise-en-Scène (Cleveland, Ohio), Spring 1980.

On FIELDS: articles—

Film Comment (New York), March-April 1977.
Action (Los Angeles, California), January-February 1978.

Verna Fields became one of the American film industry’s most famous editors during the 1970s, and in the process was able to accumulate considerable power. Since she had helped with so many blockbusters of the decade, including Jaws and American Graffiti, Fields was promoted by a grateful Universal Pictures into the executive suite. She held that vice-presidency until her death in 1982.

Unfortunately all this fame and power at the end of her long career only served to remind close observers of the American film industry that like in other multi-billion dollar institutions, few women ever accumulated a measure of true power. However, since the beginnings of the film industry, film editing had been one of the few arenas open to women. Fields, like Margaret Booth before her (at MGM), used this opening to become a force at a major Hollywood studio.

Indeed during the heyday of the “Movie Brats” of the 1970s, many looked to Fields as a symbolic breakthrough. Here was a person who had worked on many a low-budget independent film being elevated into a real position of power. She was so “in” that in 1974 Newsweek featured an article on her—one of the few in a popular magazine about a film editor.

Verna Fields’ father helped her move into the film industry. Through him she met her husband Sam Fields, who was a film editor, in the 1940s. Sam died in 1954, leaving two sons to support. Verna returned to work that year and learned her craft on television fare such as The Lone Ranger, Wanted: Dead or Alive, Death Valley Days, and Sky King. She made her big splash in Hollywood as the sound editor for El Cid.

But her greatest impact came when she began to teach film editing to a generation of students at the University of Southern California.
She then operated on the fringes of the film business, for a time making documentaries for the Office of Economic Opportunity. The end of that Federal Agency pushed her back into mainstream Hollywood then being overrun by her former USC students.

Cutting What’s Up, Doc? for Peter Bogdanovich represented her return, but her real influence began when she helped a former USC student, George Lucas, persuade Universal to distribute American Graffiti. A grateful Lucas, the story goes, presented her with a brand new BMW automobile in return. Jaws for Steven Spielberg ‘made’ Fields’ career.

She was quoted in the 1970s, at the height of her influence, saying that she believed editing should be invisible. She sought to downplay her own influence, preferring to let the director dictate the terms. Thus she worked in a variety of projects equally well—from melodrama to comedy to classic genre films. Certainly that is precisely what the new young Hollywood generation liked about her. She was a great technician who was sympathetic to their projects and visions. She wanted to help them—unlike the rest of the Hollywood establishment of the day which fought their very entry into the system. It is for this support that Fields will long be remembered.

—Douglas Gomery

FIGUEROA, Gabriel

Cinematographer. Nationality: Mexican. Born: Mexico City, 24 April 1907. Education: Studied design and the violin at Academia de San Carlos and National Conservatory. Family: Married; one son and one daughter. Career: Worked in portrait photography studio; 1932—entered films as still photographer; 1935–36—studied cinematography as assistant to Gregg Toland in Hollywood, then worked in Mexican cinema; 1936—first film as cinematographer, Allá en el rancho grande. Awards: Venice Festival award, for La perla, 1947; La malquerida, 1949. Died: 27 April 1997, in Mexico City, Mexico, of a stroke following heart surgery.

Films as Cinematographer:

1934 El escándalo (Urueta)
1936 Allá en el rancho grande (de Fuentes); ¡Vámonos con Pancho Villa! (de Fuentes) (co); Cielito lindo (O’Quigley) (co)
1937 Jalisco nunca pierde (Urueta); Las mujeres mandan (de Fuentes); Bajo el cielo de México (de Fuentes)
1938 Canción del alma (Urueta); La Adelita (Gómez); Mi candidato (Urueta); Refugiados en Madrid (Galindo); Padre de más de cuatro (O’Quigley); Los millones de Chafán (Aguilar); Mientras México duerme (Galindo); La casa del ogro (de Fuentes)
1939 La bestia negra (Mi negra o su negra) (Soria); La noche de los mayas (Urueta); Papacito lindo (de Fuentes)
1940 Los de abajo (Con la División del Norte) (Urueta); ¡Que viene mi marido! (Urueta); Allá en el trópico (de Fuentes); La canción del milagro (Aguilar); El jefe Máximo (de Fuentes); Con su amable permiso (Soler); El monje loco (Galindo)
1941 Creo en Dios (de Fuentes); Ni sangre ni arena (Galindo); Mi viuda alegre (Delgado); El rápido de las 9.15 (Galindo); Ay, qué tiempos, señor don Simón! (Bracho); El gendarme desconocido (Delgado); La casa del rencor (Solares); La gallina clueva (de Fuentes)
1942 Cuando viajan las estrellas (Gout); Virgen de medianoche (Galindo); Los tres mosqueteros (Delgado); Historia de un gran amor (Bracho); El verdugo de Sevilla (Soler); La virgen que forjó una patria (Bracho)
1943 El circo (Delgado); Flor Silvestre (Fernández); El espectro de la novia (Cardona); Distinto amanecer (Bracho); María Candelaria (Xochimilco) (Fernández)
1944 La mujer sin cabeza (Cardona); El as negro (Cardona); El corsario negro (Urueta); Adiós, Mariquita linda (Gómez) (co); Las abandonadas (Fernández); Burgamilla (Fernández)
1945 Un día con el diablo (Delgado); Cantachico (Bracho); Más allá del amor (Bustamante); La perla (The Pearl) (Fernández)
1946 Su última aventura (Solares); Enamorada (Fernández)
1947 La casa colorada (Morayta); Río escondido (Hidden River) (Fernández); The Fugitive (Ford); Tarzan and the Mermaids (Florey) (co)
1948 María de la O (Bustamante); Maclovia (Fernández); Dueña y señora (Davison); Pueblerina (Fernández)
1949 Salón México (Fernández); Medianoche (Davison); Opio (Ladrona Maldita) (Peón); El embajador (Davison); La malquerida (Fernández); Un cuerpo de mujer (Davison); Duelo en las montañas (Fernández); Del odio nació el amor (The Torch; Beloved; The Bandit General) (Fernández)
1950 Prisión de suenos (Urruchua); Nuestras vidas (Peón); Una día de vida (Fernández); Los olvidados (The Young and the Damned) (Buñuel); El gavilan polvero (González); Victimas del pecado (Fernández); Islas Marias (Fernández); Siempre tuya (Fernández)
1951 Pecado (Amador); Los pobres van al cielo (Salvador); La bien amada (Fernández); El mar y tú (Fernández)
1952 Hay un niño en su futuro (Cortés); Ahí viene Martín Corona (Zacarías); Un gallo en corral ajeno (Soler); El bombero atómico (Delgado—produced 1950); El enamorado (El regreso de Martín Corona) (Zacarías); Ni pobres ni ricos (Cortés); El rebozo de Soledad (Soler); Reconstrucción (Fernández); Regreso de Martín Corona (Soler—produced 1952); La historia de un amor (Delgado); El señor fotografo (Delgado); Dos tipos de cuidado (Rodríguez); Ansiedad (Zacarías); El Buñuel
1953 Camelía (Galvándon); El niño y la niebla (Galvándon); La rosa blanca (Moments of the life of Marti) (Fernández); Llevame en tus brazos (Bracho)
1954 La Mujer X (Soler); La rebelión de los colgados (Crevenna); Estafa de amor (Delgado); El monstruo de la sombra (Urquiza); Pueblo, canto y esperanza (Gonzáles)
1955 Cautionary tale (Galvándon); La escondida (Gálvez); La Tierra del Fuego se apaga (Fernández); La doncella de piedra (Delgado); Historia de un amor (Galvándon)
1956 Una cita de amor (Fernández); El bolero de Raquel (Delgado); Canasta de cuentos mexicanos (Bracho); Suenos de oro (Zacarías); Mujer en condominio (González)
1957 Flor de mayo (Beyond All Limits; A Mexican Affair) (Galvándon); Maricruz (Zacarías); La sonrisa de la Virgen (Rodríguez); Aqui está Heraclio Bernal (Galvándon); La venganza de Heraclio Bernal (Galvándon); La rebelión de la sierra (Galvándon); Una golfa (Demicheli)
1958 La cucaracha (Rodríguez); Nazarin (Buñuel); El puño del amo (Fernández); Carabina 30–30 (Delgado); Impaciencia del corazón (Davison); Café Colón (Alaraki); Isla para dos (Davison)

1959 Macaro (Gavaldón); Sonatas (Bardem) (co); La fièvre monte à El Pao (Los Ambiciosos) (Buñuel)

1960 The Young Ones (La joven) (Buñuel); La muchacha (Zacarías); Juana Gallo (Zacarías)

1961 Los hermanos del hierro (Rodríguez); El tejedor de milagros (del Villar); Animas Trujano, el hombre importante (Rodríguez)

1962 El angel exterminador (The Exterminating Angel) (Buñuel); La bandida (Rodríguez); Días de otoño (Gavaldón)

1963 El hombre de papel (Rodríguez); Entrega inmediata (Delgado); En la mitad del mundo (Pereda)

1964 El gallo de oro (Gavaldón); The Night of the Iguana (Huston); Escuela para solteras (Zacarías); Los tres calaveras (Cortés); Los cuatro Juanes (Zacarías)

‘Las dos Elena’s’ and ‘Lola de mi vida’ eps. of Amor, amor, amor (José Ibáñez and Ponce); ‘Un alma pura’ ep. of Los bienamados (Juan Ibáñez); Simón del desierto (Buñuel); Cargamento prohibido (Delgado); ¡Viva Benito Canales! (Delgado)

1966 Pedro Páramo (Velo); El asesino se embarca (Delgado); El escaparulario (González); Domingo salvaje (del Villar); The Chinese Room (Zugsmith); Los angeles de Puebla (del Villar)

1967 Mariana (Guerrero); El jinete fantasma (Zugsmith)

1968 Corazón salvaje (Davison) (co); La puerta (Alcoriza); Pax? (Rilla—short)

1969 The Big Cube (Davison)

1970 Two Mules for Sister Sara (Siegel); Kelly’s Heroes (Hutton)

1971 Los hijos de Satanas (Baledón); Hijazo de mi vida (Baledón); María (Davison)

1972 La rosa blanca (Gavaldón—produced 1961); El señor de Osanto (Heremosillo); El monasterio de los buitres (del Villar)

1973 Interval (Daniel Mann); Once upon a Scoundrel (Schaefer); El amor tiene cara de mujer (Davison); Los perros de Dios (del Villar); Presagio (Alcoriza)

1974 El llanto de la tortuga (del Villar)

1975 Coronación (Olhovich); Maten al león (Estrada)

1976 La vida cambia (Torres); Balún Canán (Alasraki); Cananea (Violante); Los aztecas (Boudou)

1977 Divinas palabras (Juan Ibáñez); La casa del pelicano (Véjar)

1978 The Children of Sanchez (Bartlett); D.F. (González); Te quiero (Davison)

1980 El jugador de ajedrez (J. Buñuel); México mágico (Tavera, Zermeño, and Mandoki)

1981 México 2000 (González); El héroe desconocido (Pastor)

1983 El corazón de la noche (Hermosilla)

Under the Volcano (Huston)

Other Films:

1932 Revolución (Torres) (still ph)

1933 Almas encontradas (Sevilla) (still ph)

1935 El primo Basilio (Nájera) (cam); María Elena (Sevilla) (cam)

Publications

By FIGUEROA: articles—

American Cinematographer (Hollywood), February 1975.

Signore, December 1982.

Dicine, nos. 8 and 9, 1984.

Skrien (Amsterdam), no. 172, June/July 1990.

On FIGUEROA: books—

Isaac, Alberto, Conversaciones con Gabriel Figueroa, Mexico, Universidad de Guadalajara, 1993.

On FIGUEROA: articles—

Cinema (Rome), 1 October 1950.

Otro Cine (Barcelona), January/February 1959.

de la Colina, José, in Artes Visuales, Autumn 1977.

Heraldo del Cine (Buenos Aires), 20 July 1984.

Jump Cut, no. 50, March 1993.

Dey, Tom, ‘‘ASC Hails Career of Gabriel Figueroa,’’ in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), March 1995.

Obituary, in EPD Film (Frankfurt/Main), June 1997.

* * *

The outstanding cinematographer of Mexico, Gabriel Figueroa received some 19 international and more than 40 national awards. Figueroa conceived of photography as interpretive, likening it to an actor’s rendering of a script. He argued that though the camera ought to be essentially unobtrusive, it must establish a dialogue with the spectators through the vigor, force, and beauty it creates. This cameraman worked with almost all the important directors of Mexican cinema, and some international greats—John Ford, Luis Buñuel, John Huston, and Don Siegel. He is best known, however, for his role in forging the classical Mexican film style, which he brought into being along with director Emilio Fernández in their films of the 1940s: María Candelária, Flor Silvestre, Bugambilia, La perla, Enamorada, and Río escogido.

The classical Mexican film aesthetic is based on that country’s rural environment, particularly its sun and clouds. Figueroa believed that the single most important aspect of cinematography is illumination, and the light given off by the Mexican sun is dramatic and piercing. Thus he drew a distinction between filmmaking in, for example, London, where there is little natural light and Mexico, where the sun is one of the elements that creates the ambience, and therefore must be interpreted. The same can be said for the monumental masses of rolling clouds which mark the Mexican landscape. In Europe, cineastes have jokingly referred to “Figueroa’s clouds”; and there is a famous anecdote in which Buñuel (who detested expressive photography) held up shooting during Los olvidados until a cloud had disappeared. Nevertheless, these billowing cloud formations are a vital part of the Mexican panorama—though they were highlighted through Figueroa’s use of infrared filters. If the more picturesque human elements of this aesthetic—stony Indian faces set off by dark rebozos and white shirts, charros and their stallions galloping through majestic cactus, fishermen and their nets reflected in swirling ocean tides—have been rightly criticized for their historic immobility, Figueroa’s use of Mexico’s sun and clouds still provided a striking context for these films’ narratives.

The influences that were important in the creation of Figueroa’s style were manifold, as befits an international artist. Figueroa stated that Edward Tisse’s use of sunlight and composition of frames in Eisenstein’s never-finished Que Viva Mexico were an important example for him. A more direct influence was Gregg Toland, under whom Figueroa studied in Hollywood and whom he accompanied during the filming of The Best Years of Our Lives. Toland’s use of artificial light impressed Figueroa greatly, as did his own studies of classical artists such as Vermeer and Rembrandt. Nonetheless, Figueroa contended that the single most important inspiration for his work came from the Mexican muralists, particularly David Alfaro Siqueiros, whose perspective and analytical force were determinant for the cinematographer. If Figueroa achieved international recognition, it was finally due to the degree to which he immersed himself in his country’s natural beauty, its artists, and its culture.

—John Mraz

FISCHER, Gunnar

Cinematographer. Nationality: Swedish. Born: Ljungby, 18 November 1910. Education: Studied in Stockholm and Copenhagen. Family: Son: the cinematographer Peter Fischer. Career: Entered films as second cameraman in the 1930s; 1942—first film as cinematographer, It Is My Music; 1948—first of several films for Ingmar Bergman, Port of Call; TV work includes series Raskens, 1974; also illustrator of children’s books; 1975—retired.

Films as 2nd Cameraman:

1935 Smålånningsarp (People of Småland) (Rodin)
1936 Samvetsömnarna (Conscientious Adolph) (Wallen); Johan Ulfstjerna (Edgren); Hans, hon, och pengarna (He, She, and the Money) (Henrikson); Aventyret (Adventure) (Branner): 65, 66, och jag (Privates 65, 66, and I) (Henrikson) 1937 Klart till drabbning (Clear the Decks for Action) (Adolphson); Sara lär sig folkvett (Sara Learns Manners) (Molander); Pappas pojke (Rich Man’s Son) (Martin)
1938 Blixtn och dunder (Thunder and Lightning) (Henrikson); Goda vänner, trogna grannar (Good Friends and Faithful Neighbors) (Hildebrand)
1939 Valfångare (Whalers) (Henrikson); Emilie Höggqvist (Molander)
1941 Lärarinna på vift (Schoolmistress on the Spree) (Larsson); Dunungen (Downy Girl) (Hildebrand)
1942 Flickan i fönstret mitt emot (Girl in the Window Opposite) (Jerring); Jacobs stege (Jacob’s Ladder) (Molander)

Films as Cinematographer:

1942 Det är min musik (It Is My Music) (Larsson) 1943 Natt i hamn (Night in the Harbor) (Faustman) (+ co-sc) 1945 Två människor (Two People) (Dreyer); Blåjackor (Bluejackets) (Husberg); Tant Gran, Tant Brun, och Tant Greidelin (Aunt Green, Aunt Brown, and Aunt Lilac) (Lindstrom) 1947 Krigsmans erinran (Soldier’s Duties) (Faustman); Tappa inte sugen (Don’t Give Up) (Kjellgren)
1948 Hannastad (Port of Call) (Bergman); Soldat Bom (Private Bom) (Kjellgren)
1949 Törst (Thirst) (Bergman); Ports of Industrial Scandinavia: Sweden’s East Coast (Colleran—short) 1950 Till glädje (To Joy) (Bergman); Sätt händer inte här (High Tension) (Bergman)
1951 Sommarlek (Summer Interlude) (Bergman)
1952 Kvinnors väntan (Waiting Women) (Bergman); I dimma dold (Hidden in the Fog) (Kjellgren)
1953 Sommaren med Monika (Summer with Monika) (Bergman); Gycklarnas afton (The Naked Night; Saw dust and Tinsel) (Bergman) (co); Vi tre debutera (We Three Debutantes) (Ekman)
1954 Seger i mörker (Victory in the Dark) (Folke); Gabrielle (Ekman); Ballettens born (Ballet Girl) (A. Henning-Jensen—short)
1955 Stampen (Pawn Shop) (Lagerkvist); Egen ingång (Private Entrance) (Ekman); Sommarnatts leende (Smiles of a Summer Night) (Bergman); Den härda leken (The Tough Game) (Kjellgren)
1957 Det sjunde inseget (The Seventh Seal) (Bergman); Möten i skymningen (Twilight Meeting) (Kjellin); Smålströnslät (Wild Strawberries) (Bergman); Lek på regnbågen (Playing on the Rainbow) (Kjellgren); Batavarnas trohet (The Batavians’ Oath of Fidelity) (Derker—short) (co)
1958 Du är mitt äventyr (You Are My Adventure) (Olin); Ansiktet (The Magician; The Face) (Bergman)
1959 Det svänger på slottet (Swaying at the Castle) (Kjellin); Hans Brinker, or the Silver Skates (Foster)
1960 Djävulens öga (The Devil’s Eye) (Bergman); Ett glass vin (A Glass of Wine) (Werner—short)
1961 Pojken i trädet (The Boy in the Tree) (Asquith); Två living (Asquith); Een blandt mange (One among Many) (A. Henning-Jensen); Lustgärden (Pleasure Garden) (Kjellin) 1962 Siska (Kjellin); Korst är sommaren (Pan; Short Is the Summer) (B. Henning-Jensen); Vittnesbörd om henne (Testimonies) (Donner—short)
1963 Min bästa är en ros (My Love Is Like a Rose) (Ekman); Mamsell Josabeth (Miss Josabeth) (+ d—short); För vänkapskull (For Friendship) (Abramson)
1964 491 (Sjöman)
1965 Juminatt (June Night) (Liedholm); Ojoejoe eller sången om den eldröda hummern (Well Well Well) (Axelman); Väntande
vatten (Waiting Water) (Werner—short); Drottningholms slottsteater (The Drottningholm Palace Theatre) (+ d—short) 1966
Adamson i Sverige (I Need a Woman) (Ericsson) (co); Slut (The End) (Forsberg—short); Pianolektionen (The Piano Lesson) (Nordin—short) 1967
‘Han-Hon’ (‘He-She’), ‘Birgit Nilsson,’ and ‘Smycket’ (‘The Necklace’), eps. of Stimulantia (Donner, Arnblom, and Mølander); Djävulens Instrument (The Devil’s Instrument) (+ d—short); Ola och Julia (Ola and Julia) (Halldoff) (co); Ack, du är some en ros (Oh, You Are Like a Rose) (+ d, sc—short) 1968
Svarta palmkronor (Black Palm Trees) (Lindgren); Made in Sweden (Bergenstrahle) 1969
Miss and Mrs. Sweden (Gentele); Krakugelget (Fool’s Gold) (Krantz) 1970
Is (Ice) (Lindman) 1973
Din stund på jorden (Your Time on Earth) (Sjöstrand) 1976
Raskens (Sjöstrand—mini-series for TV)

Other Films:

1943 Stora Skrällen (Big Crash) (Jerring) (cam) 1951 Biffen och bananen (Biffen and the Banana) (Husberg) (cam) 1971 Beröringen (The Touch) (Bergman) (titles ph)

* * *
Gunmar Fischer was the director of photography on the films that first brought Ingmar Bergman worldwide renown. Like most Swedish cinematographers, he is a master of practical lighting and operates his own camera. His style is heavily influenced both by the facial landscapes of Carl Dreyer, for whom he worked, and by the psychological landscapes of Victor Sjöström, whom he knew. Fischer is thus in the mainstream of the Scandinavian tradition. His work features some of the closest and most intensely psychological close-ups and two-shots in film history. He favors a cold, bleak lighting that lends many of Bergman’s early films a sense of despair the director may not have intended. In Fischer’s films, one is constantly in a world governed by a changeable moral atmosphere which is signified by variations in light, from harshly overexposed noontimes to backlit twilights.

His early films for Bergman have a misleading flavor of Italian neorealism, not surprising given their period, but as the emphasis of Bergman’s films is on moral conflict so the cinematography’s harshness indicates a psychological or emotional rather than social barrenness. For example, the emotionally devastated clown at the end of Sawdust and Tinsel is photographed in growing isolation from the onlookers, and the film is overexposed to convey a spiritual nakedness which is outside of social criticism.

The pseudo-neorealist harshness of the 1940s gives way to the symbolic dreamscape of the 1950s in Wild Strawberries. Here the shift from past to present, from memory to actuality to dream, is signified largely by changes in light: a soft-focus, bright light for the past, a darker light for the present, an overexposed world or an intensely dark one filled with fearfully sharp contrasts and huge faces for dreams. In The Seventh Seal, the shift from one moral world to another is conveyed through lighting. A bright and soft natural light indicates characters at peace, while heavy filters and backlighting indicate moral doubt, and harsh contrasts in overexposed film indicate hollow spirituality. Although Fischer’s lighting effects on Bergman’s black-and-white films vary extraordinarily in technique, often within the same film, they nonetheless convey an aesthetic unity.

Fischer’s lighting is too extreme to be easily interpreted by others, but he is one of several European cinematographers responsible for the popular equation between harsh, black-and-white cinematography and art films in American culture in the 1950s and 1960s. Indirectly, he has influenced such Hollywood art films as Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf? Fischer and Bergman partied company after The Devil’s Eye. Bergman’s style was mellowing, and he was gaining more technical expertise and authority. When he could not persuade Fischer to soften his lighting techniques, Bergman switched to Sven Nykvist as his director of photography. Since Fischer’s retirement in 1975, he has lectured on film lighting at various Scandinavian universities.

—Patricia Ferrara

FISCHINGER, Oskar

Films as Animator/Director:

(some filmographies of Fischinger’s work discount the four early experimental Studien and number Studie Nr 5 [1929] as Nr 1)

1921–26 Wachsexperimente 1922–25 Studien I–4 1922–27 Orgelstäbe 1924–26 Münchener Bilderbogen (Pierrette I) 1926 Spiralen 1927 R-I, ein Formspiel von Oskar Fischinger; Seelische Konstruktionen (Spiral Constructions); Sintflut; München-Berlin Wanderung 1929 Studie Nr 5 1930 Studie Nr 6; Studie Nr 7; Studie Nr 8; Studie Nr 9; Studie Nr 10 1931 Studie Nr 11; Studie Nr 12 (unfinished); Studie Nr 13; Liebesspiel 1932 Studie Nr 14; Studie Nr 15; Studie Nr 16; Koloraturen
1933 Studie Nr 17; Studie Nr 18; Kreise
1934 Ein Spiel in Farben (colorized version of Studie Nr 15); Quadrate; Maratti greift ein (Maratti Marches On); Reise im Schweiz
1935 Komposition in Blau (Lichtkonzert Nr 1); Lichtkonzert Nr 2 (unfinished)
1936 Allegretto
1937 An Optical Poem
1941 American March
1942 Radio Dynamics
1947 Motion Painting No 1
1952 Stereo Film (pilot fragment)
1960 Motion Painting No 2 (unfinished)

Other Films:
1928 Dein Schicksal (Metzner) (animation sequences)
1929 Die Frau in Mond (F. Lang) (special effects)
1930 Das Hohelied der Kraft (Schongen) (special effects)
1936 Big Broadcast of 1937 (Leisen) (special effects, unused)
1939 Fantasia (Disney) (orig des)

Publications

By FISCHINGER: article—

On FISCHINGER: book—

Westbrook, Ingrid, Das Werbefilm, Hildesheim, 1983.

On FISCHINGER: articles—

Moritz, William, ‘‘The Films of Oskar Fischinger,’’ in Film Culture (New York), 1974.
Moritz, William, ‘‘Fischinger at Disney or, Oskar in the Mousetrap,’’ in Millimeter (New York), February 1977.
Canemaker, John, ‘‘On the Road with Mrs. Oskar Fischinger,’’ in Funnyworld (New York), Summer 1978.
Film a Doba (Prague), October 1990.
Film-Dienst (Cologne), 4 February 1992.
Moritz, W., ‘‘Gasparcolor: Perfect Hues for Animation,’’ in Animation Journal (Orange), no. 1, 1996.

Towards the end of his life, Oskar Fischinger prepared a short artistic credo under the title of ‘‘My Statements Are in My Work.’’ It is an uncompromising, even dogmatic document, dismissing as mere ‘‘mountain ranges of soap bubbles’’ virtually all the feature films ever made, and equally scathing about the work of most of his fellow animators (‘‘on a very low artistic level . . . a mass product of factory proportions’’). Only the solitary, dedicated creative artist, working in lonely purity, may hope to create true cinematic art. ‘‘The Creative Spirit shall be unobstructed through realities or anything that spoils his absolute pure creation . . . . The real artist should not care if he is understood or misunderstood by the masses. He should listen only to his Creative Spirit and satisfy his highest ideals.’’

It is only fair to note that these words were written after Fischinger had suffered long years of frustration and disappointment in Hollywood. But anyone who came across this article before seeing any of Fischinger’s films might well be led to expect a solemn, self-consciously elevated experience. Certainly it gives no hint of the wit, energy, and joie de vivre—in short, the sheer accessibility—of his work.

Fischinger’s earliest experiments in abstract animation (or, as he preferred to call it, ‘‘absolute film’’) sprang from the same post-World War I European artistic ferment that gave rise to surrealism, dadaism, expressionism, and the Bauhaus movement. The influence of such artists as Klee, Kandinsky, and Mondrian is evident on his work, along with his own professional background as an engineer. As early as 1921 he invented what might be seen as the most primitive ancestor of computer animation: a machine synchronizing a camera with a mechanism that sliced thin slivers off a prepared block of wax, so that the designs embedded in the wax would be gradually revealed and filmed as moving shapes. Walther Ruttmann, whose pioneering animation work greatly impressed Fischinger, made ingenious use of this machine in the ‘‘evil magic’’ sequence he contributed to Lotte Reiniger’s Die Abenteuer des Prinzen Achmed (1926).

Although other artists and filmmakers—Ruttmann, Hans Richter, Fernand Léger, Len Lye—explored abstract animation, Fischinger was exceptional in devoting almost his entire career to the genre. The long series of Studien forms the core of his black-and-white work. Like emanations of pure energy, they populate the screen with flashing, darting shapes: blips, dashes, curves, circles, explosions of light that zip and swoop and scurry as if propelled by unseen winds. Sometimes they suggest birds or fishes chasing each other in play, at other times sheets of paper, the notes on a plainsong stave or even signals in some unknown language. From 1930 onwards Fischinger’s films were accompanied by music, but he always emphasized that this was all that the music was—an accompaniment, aimed at helping the audience accept the abstract shapes. None of his films, he insisted, was intended to illustrate the music, and they could be viewed in silent form with no loss of effect.

While Fischinger’s black-and-white work is mainly two-dimensional in effect, he seized on the possibilities of color to lend depth and body to his designs. Komposition in Blau—which won a prize in Venice and brought him international fame—choreographs cubes, cylinders, and columns into an exuberant ballet that recalls the (almost equally abstract) patterns created by Busby Berkeley. The same irresistible high spirits bubble through Maratti greift ein (Maratti Marches On), Fischinger’s most famous advertising work—whole troupes of cigarettes strutting, marching, dancing and ice-skating in formation—and his first American film, Allegretto. Set to a jazzy, Gershwinian score, this exploits the potential of cel animation to deploy complex, overlapping patterns of shimmering shapes in what William Moritz called ‘‘California colors—the pinks and turquoises and browns of desert sky and sand, the orange of poppies and the green of avocados.’’ The influence on the early films of Norman McLaren, such as Boogie Doodle, is unmissable.

All too predictably, Fischinger’s hopes of pursuing his exploration of abstract animation within the context of the Hollywood studios were soon dashed. His most frustrating experience was working for Disney on Fantasia—all the more so because it was he who had first suggested the idea of the film, or at any rate of the Bach Toccata and Fugue section of it, to Leopold Stokowski. Although the released version was partly based on his original designs, he disowned it as a tasteless vulgarization. Disheartened by the lack of interest in his ideas, Fischinger’s output slowed, and during the last 25 years of his life he completed only one film, Motion Painting No 1, painted in oil on plexiglass. Intricate and imaginative, it bemused his patrons at the Guggenheim Foundation, who witheld further support.

Given the integrity of Fischinger’s resolve in sticking to his chosen field of animation, it may seem perverse to wish he had allowed himself more versatility. But a rare mature excursion into figurative animation, the Seelische Konstruktionen (Spiritual Constructions) of 1927, suggests uncommon—and largely undeveloped—aptitude for that field as well. Prefaced by the words ‘‘Mir ist so merkwürdig, als sei die Welt betrunken’’ (I have the strange feeling that the whole world is drunk), it depicts two boozy silhouettes who swell, distort, clash and devour each other. As well as strikingly revealing a flair for Rabelaisian mayhem that Fischinger could well have exploited alongside his ‘‘absolute’’ work—perhaps even to the benefit of both styles.

—Philip Kemp

FISHER, Gerry

Films as Cinematographer:

1966  Modesty Blaise (Losey)
1967  Casino Royale (Huston and others)

Films as Cameraman:

1957  The Bridge on the River Kwai (Lean)
1958  The Journey (Litvak)
1959  Tarzan’s Greatest Adventure (Guillermin); The Devil’s Disciple (Hamilton); Suddenly, Last Summer (Mankiewicz)
1960  The Millionairess (Asquith); The Sundowners (Zinnemann)
1961  The Road to Hong Kong (Panama)
1962  Guns of Darkness (Asquith); Live Now, Pay Later (Lewis); 55 Days at Peking (Ray)
1963  The V.I.P.s (Asquith); Night Must Fall (Reisz)
1964  Circus World (The Magnificent Showman) (Hathaway); Guns at Batasi (Guillermin); The Yellow Rolls-Royce (Asquith)
1965  Bunny Lake Is Missing (Preminger)

Publications

By FISHER: articles—

On The Island of Dr. Moreau in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), August 1977.
On FISHER: article—

Eyles, A., in Focus on Film (London), Summer 1975.

Gerry Fisher’s filmography encompasses such quintessentially Hollywood enterprises as Suddenly, Last Summer and The V.I.P.s as well as such routine jobs of work as Exorcist II. He has worked with major stars such as the Burtons and John Wayne and with such thoughtfully mainstream and contrasting directors as Billy Wilder (Fedora) and Sidney Lumet (The Seagull). A more telling thread begins perhaps with the studio work he performed for Jack Hildyard and takes in such definitively British films of their period as The Bridge on the River Kwai (on which David Lean promoted him to cameraman) and The Yellow Rolls-Royce. A self-avowedly “location sort of cameraman really,” however, his career is definitely linked to that of Joseph Losey’s with whom he collaborated on some of that director’s most assured, enigmatic and “English” work. The collaboration began with Accident, Fisher’s first film as a lighting cameraman. It was the first time he was free to read a script and consider how he would visualize the action. Despite the visibility of tracks in the final sequence, the result of the demands of the ratio and the constraints of a small budget which precluded reshooting the scene, the film boasts cinematography that perfectly meets the director’s needs in the creation of a very particularly English, and rather desultory, wasteland of the spirit and the emotions. On Secret Ceremony, a Borgesian fable set in an architecturally and decoratively distinctive mansion in London, Fisher allowed the colors and contours of the house itself to determine both the dominant colors of the film and also the wandering camera movements. The effect made the house something of a character in itself rather than merely, as happened in The Romantic Englishwoman, an expressive setting for the performers. With The Go-Between, again a decidedly English story, this time of cross-class and intergenerational conflict and passions played out through notions of manners and etiquette, Fisher drew on his own childhood memories—of the particular play of sunlight on wood for example. This brought to the film a tactile precision which productively undercut its inherent nostalgia.

On Don Giovanni, Losey’s film of Mozart’s opera, Fisher was able to make great play with the magical and grandiose aspects of the film’s Palladian setting. He was also faced with the difficulty of filming the singers in such a way that the effort of singing remained visible—and therefore convincing—but did not become so obvious as to distract from the narrative. While quite aware of the constraints placed on the cameraman by a performer’s limitations (the fact that Bogarde could not play tennis had necessitated inventive hand-held camera work on Accident), Fisher is also careful to acknowledge the catalyst that a certain performance can be for framing and the selection of camera angles. A project such as The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes’ Smarter Brother, Gene Wilder’s first attempt at directing, placed other demands on the cinematographer’s resourcefulness. While taking Fisher back into the studio, it also necessitated involvement in the project almost from inception. In photographing it Fisher tried to give weight to the serious and romantic elements of the story, while at the same time giving the project enough visual clarity for the sight gags.

On the whole, Fisher remains a cinematographer rather at the mercy of his material and directors. His work is never less than professional, but not always distinctive. Given, however, a director whose very personal vision he can share, and with whom he can fully collaborate he can produce work of matchless quality.

—Verina Glaessner

FLAIANO, Ennio, and Tullio PINELLI

Films as Writers:

1950 Luci del varietà (Variety Lights) (Fellini and Lattuada)
1952 Lo sceicco bianco (The White Sheik) (Fellini)
1953 I vitelloni (Fellini), Riscatto (Girolami)
1954 La strada (Fellini)
1955 Il bidone (The Swindle) (Fellini)
1956 Le notti di Cabiria (The Nights of Cabiria; Cabiria) (Fellini)
1957 Fortunella (De Filippo)
1960 La dolce vita (Fellini)
1962 “La tentazioni di Dottor Antonio” (“The Temptations of Dr. Antonio”) ep. of Boccaccio ’70 (Fellini)
1963 &½ (Otto e mezzo) (Fellini)
1965 Giulietta degli spiriti (Juliet of the Spirits) (Fellini)

Films as Writer—Fraiiano:

1942 La danza del fuoco (Simonelli); Pastor Angelicus (Marcellini)
1943 Inviati speciali (Marcellini); L’abito nero da sposa (Zampa)
1945 La freccia nel fianco (Lattuada)
1946 Roma città libera (La notte porta consiglio) (Pagliero); L’ultimo paradiso (Quilici)
1948 Fuga in Francia (Flight into France) (Soldati)
1949 Cintura di castità (Mastrocinque)
1950 Parigi è sempre Parigi (Emmet); Guardie e ladri (Cops and Robbers) (Steno)
1952 Fanciulle di lusso (Luxury Girls) (Vorhaus and Mussetta); “Elizabeth” (“Due donne”) ep. of Destini di donne (Daughters of Destiny) (Pagliero); Il mondo le condanna (Franciolini)
1953 Dov’è la libertà? (Rossellini); “Scene all’aperto” ep. of Tempi nostri (Blassetti); Canzoni, canzoni, canzoni (Paolella); Veste gli ignudi (Pagliero); Villa Borghese (It Happened in the Park) (Franciolini)
1954 La donna del fiurne (Soldati); Camilla (Emmer); Peccato che sia una canaglia (Too Bad She's Bad) (Blasetti); La romana (Woman of Rome) (Zampa); La vergine moderna (Pagliero)
1955 Totò e Carolina (Monicelli—produced 1953); Il segno di Venere (The Sign of Venus) (Risi); La fortuna di essere donna (Lucky to Be a Woman) (Blasetti)
1956 Calabuch (Berlanga); Terrore sulla città (Majano)
1958 Un ettoar di cielo (Casadio); Racconti d’estate (Love on the Riviera; Summer Tales) (Franciolini)
1960 La ragazza in vetrina (Emmer); Un amore a Roma (Love in Rome) (Risi); Fantasmi a Roma (Pietrangeli); La notte (The Night) (Antonioni)
1962 Hong Kong un addio (Polidoro)
1963 El verdugo (Not on Your Life) (Berlanga)
1964 Tonio Kroger (Thiele)
1965 Una moglie americana (Run for Your Wife) (Polidoro); La decima vittima (The 10th Victim) (Petri); Rapture (Guillermin)
1966 Io, io, io . . . e gli altri (Blasetti)
1967 ‘Ere préhistorique’ (“Prehistoric Era”) and “Nuits romaines” (“Roman Nights”) eps. of Le Plus Vieux Méthier du monde (The Oldest Profession) (Indovina and Bolognini); I protagonisti (Fondato)
1969 Vivi, o preferibilmente morti (Tessari); Colpe rovente (Zaffi); Red (Carle)
1972 La Cagna (Liza) (Ferreri)
1987 L’inchiesta (The Inquiry) (co)

Films as Writer—Pinelli:
1945 L’adultera (Coletti)
1946 Le misere del signor Travet (Soldati)
1947 La figlia del capitano (Camerini); Il passatore (Coletti)
1948 Senza pietà (Without Pity) (Lattuada); ‘Il miracolo’ (“The Miracle”) ep. of Amore (The Ways of Love) (Rossellini); Come persi la guerra (Baghossi)
1949 Il mulino del Po (The Mill on the Po) (Lattuada); In nome della legge (In the Name of the Law) (Germi)
1950 Il cammino della speranza (The Path of Hope) (Germi)
1951 La città si difende (Germi); Cameriera bella presenza offresi (Pastina)
1952 Wanda, la peccatrice (Coletti)
1953 ‘Un’ agenzia matrimoniale’ ep. of Amore in città (Love in the City) (Fellini); Piaeta per chi cade (Costa); Traviata ’53 (Cottafavi)
1954 Sinfonia d’amore—Schubert (Pellegrini); Gli amori di Manon Lescaut (Costa)
1960 Adua e le compagne (Love à la carte) (Petrangeli)
1961 Senilità (Bolognini)
1963 Le steppa (The Steppe) (Lattuada)
1965 ‘Il trattato di eugenetica’ (“Treatise in Eugenics”) ep. of Le bambole (Comencini)
1966 San Francesco (Cavani)
1967 L’immorale (The Climax) (Germi)
1968 Galileo (Cavani); Seraphino (Germi)
1970 Il giardino dei Finzi-Contini (The Garden of the Finzi-Contini) (De Sica)
1973 Alfredo, Alfredo (Germi)
1975 Amici miei (My Friends) (Germi and Monicelli)

1976 Per le antiche scale (Down the Ancient Stairs) (Bolognini)
1978 Viaggio con Anita (Travels with Anita) (Monicelli)
1980 Cristoforo Colombo (Lattuada)
1983 Amici miei atto II (Monicelli)
1984 Amici miei III (Loy)
1985 Speriamo che sia femmina (Monicelli)
1986 Ginger e Fred (Fellini)
1990 La voce della luna (The Voice of the Moon) (Fellini)

Publications
By FLAIANO and PINELLI: books—

With others, Juliet of the Spirits (script), New York, 1965.
Three Screenplays by Federico Fellini (includes Il bidone [The Swindle], The Temptations of Doctor Antonio, and I vitelloni), New York, 1970.

By FLAIANO: books—

La guerra spiegata ai poveri (play), Turin, 1946.
Diario notturno (novel), Milan, 1956.
La donna nell’armadio (play), Turin, 1957.
Una e una notte (novel), Milan, 1959.
Un marziano a Roma (play), Turin, 1960.

Il gioco e il massacro (novel), Milan, 1970.

By PINELLI: books—

Re Hassan (libretto), Milan, 1938.
La palce d’oro (libretto), Milan, 1940.
La croce deserta (libretto), Milan, 1950.

With Fellini, La strada (script), in Cinema Nuovo (Turin), September/October 1954.

With others, Otto e mezzo (script), edited by Camilla Cederna, Bologna, 1965.

Il giardino della sfingi e altri commedie, Turin, 1975.

By PINELLI: article—

On FLAIANO: book—

Bertelli, Gian Carlo, and Pier Marco de Santi, Omaggio a Flaiano, Pisa, 1986.

On FLAIANO: articles—

Cineforum (Bergamo, Italy), vol. 23, no. 221, January/February 1983.

On PINELLI: articles—

***

Ennio Flaiano and Tullio Pinelli, important Italian playwrights and screenwriters each in his own right, are known internationally as collaborators with Federico Fellini on all of his first nine features and two shorts (though only Pinelli worked on the first of the latter), from Luci del varietà (1950) through Giulietta degli spiriti (1965). Fellini met Pinelli in 1947 as a fellow scenarist; they worked together on at least seven films for other directors, notably Roberto Rossellini and Alberto Lattuada, between 1947 and 1951. Flaiano joined the team for Fellini’s first feature (co-directed by Lattuada). Both writers always received credit, listed after Fellini himself, for screenplay, and often one or the other for original story (again with Fellini) as well. Yet they never worked together on a film for any other director, with the exception of Eduardo De Filippo’s Fortunella (1957)—on which Fellini worked as well.

Critics have been fond of neatly contrasting Pinelli and Flaiano as reflecting opposing sides of the master: e.g., as “respectively the devout mystical side and the skeptical, ironic side” of Fellini (Times Literary Supplement, 1961); or as his “mystical” (again) and “comical or irreverent” sides (Edward Murray, Fellini the Artist, 1976); or Pinelli as “methodical, rational, well-balanced . . . serious, dramatic and full of enthusiasm” and Flaiano as “casual and skeptical, hating vagueness and over-emphasis, in fact he is anti-poetic. It is he who has always played the part of the devil’s advocate between Fellini and Pinelli, by avoiding excess lyricism and anchoring himself to reality. He suggests theories for social satire to Fellini” (Angelo Solmi, Fellini, 1962). Fellini himself, in a 1962 interview, while less neatly characterizing Pinelli as a “most serious” and “most fruitful” playwright and Flaiano “the subtle writer, the delicate humorist, the ardent chronicler of Italian life;” agreed that the two were “temporarily quite different but . . . basically complementary; that is, when they are working together, I feel that each is giving the best of himself.”

It appears impossible to separate out the exact contributions of each to the final films because of the trio’s informal working methods and Fellini’s changes at the shooting stage, though it is sometimes on record as to who contributed dialogue to which scenes. (These working methods, it should be added, are fairly typical for the Italian film industry.) According to the director, he would typically get an idea, then tell his scenarists about it “without dramatizing it at all, just as if I were telling a story.” At some point in this early stage one or more of the three would do “field research,” whether interviewing swindlers for Il bidone, strolling on the Via Veneto for La dolce vita, or visiting spas for 8½. At later meetings “we behave in such a way as to avoid the heavy, formal atmosphere of a working session . . . we chat around the subject, and develop it . . . Then, when the story begins to have a fairly precise thread in it, we often divide up the work. Pinelli takes some scenes, Flaiano others, and I take others myself, but we do all we can to give this creation . . . the greatest possible freedom . . . because I shouldn’t be able to work with a very carefully constructed screenplay. . . . I need to be given freedom within an extremely elastic screenplay, not in order to improvise, exactly, but so that I can enrich a character or a situation while the film is actually being made.’’

Angelo Solmi’s biography of Fellini provides glimpses of how the trio worked on two particular films. For La strada, Pinelli wandered on foot in the Turin region to observe gypsies at village fairs. The subsequent scenario he and Fellini devised was a “compromise between the carefree tone Fellini had in mind and Pinelli’s more dramatic one,” but still more “sober and legendary . . . magical” than the completed film was to be. Flaiano was then called in to “say derogatory things about La strada for three months. . . . I condemned a vagueness of atmosphere, certain affectations in the characters,” and insisted the story should “come down to earth” and the “symbolism should be integrated with the narrative.” Flaiano still gave Fellini the credit for balancing the neorealist and poetic elements of the film. For Le notti di Cabiria each wrote dialogue for different scenes. Flaiano successfully fought to keep the episode with the film star, which Fellini had been inclined to remove. The final scene of the film originated when Flaiano recalled an actual murder of a prostitute and Pinelli suggested it be the model for the end of the film and of Cabiria; Fellini and Flaiano insisted that Cabiria should live, but it was Pinelli, bowing to their demand, who all the same was the one to develop the scene in detail.

During the making of Giulietta degli spiriti, Pinelli and Flaiano became increasingly alienated from the director’s vision. By the time the film was completed Flaiano felt shabbily treated by Fellini and ceased to have any professional or social contact with him. Pinelli too, after nearly 20 years of working with Fellini, no longer collaborated with the director, who established a whole new team of artists and technicians for his later films, with the notable carryover of the composer Nino Rota. Yet 20 years after Giulietta, Fellini returned to Pinelli for assistance on the screenplay for Ginger e Fred and again for work on La voce della luna.

Recent biographies of Fellini (e.g., Hollis Alpert’s 1986 Fellini: A Life) and studies of his films (Peter Bondanella’s 1992 The Cinema of Federico Fellini) give more prominent attention to Pinelli than to Flaiano, if only because of the former’s longer working relationship with the director and his continuing availability for interviews. Yet it may be fairly said of both men that however much in the service of Fellini’s vision they worked, the two screenwriters made inestimable important contributions to an unbroken series of astonishingly fine, original, and varied films.

—Joseph Milicia
FLEISCHER, Max and Dave

Animators. Nationality: American. Born: Max in Vienna, 17 July 1883 (or 1885); Dave in New York City, 14 July 1894. Education: Max studied at New York Art Students League, Cooper Union, and Mechanics and Tradesmen’s School. Military Service: U.S. Army, 1917; edited live action training films, 1917–18. Career: 1887—Fleischer family moved to New York City; before 1912—Dave worked as theater usher and in engraving company; 1912—Dave a cutter for Pathé Films; before 1914—Max an errand boy for Brooklyn Daily Eagle and for Boston photoengraver; 1914—Max a commercial artist for Crouse-Hinds, and Popular Science Monthly art editor; 1915—Max invented Rotoscope, device for tracing live-action film for conversion to animation; 1916—employed by John Randolph Bray at Paramount, producing animation sequences for Bray Pictograph series; joined by Dave as assistant and Rotoscope model; 1917–18—Max made Army instructional films; 1919—brothers formed Out of the Inkwell, Inc. production company; 1925—distribution company Red Seal Pictures acquired; 1929—Fleischer Studios, Inc. formed, distributing through Paramount; 1936—produced medium-length Popeye the Sailor Meets Sinbad the Sailor; 1939—studio moved from New York to Miami; 1939—first full-length feature Gulliver’s Travels; 1941—second feature Mr. Bug Goes to Town, a financial failure; Paramount withdrew loans, shutting down studio; 1942—Dave became head of Columbia cartoon dept. Max produced instructional films for Jam-Handy company; 1944—Dave moved to Universal, held various positions until 1967 retirement; 1962—Max formed a new Out of the Inkwell, Inc.; 1963—Max retired. Died: Max Fleischer died in 1972; Dave Fleischer died in 1979.

Films as Director:

(Max Fleischer as Director):

1915 Out of the Inkwell (+ pr + sc + an, Dave asst d, Rotoscope model)
1918 How to Read an Army Map; How to Fire a Lewis Gun; How to Fire a Stokes Mortar

(Dave Fleischer as director, Max as producer of cartoon shorts, both collaborating on scripts):

1927 advertising cartoon: That Little Big Fellow
1930 Marriage Wows; Radio Riot; Hot Dog; Fire Bugs; Wise Flies; The Grand Up roar; Sky Scraping; Up to Mars
1931 advertising cartoons: Graduation Day in Bugland (for Listerine Co.); Suited to a T. (for India Tea Co.); Harry Doctor (for Texaco); In My Merry Oldsmobile (for Oldsmobile Co.); Texas in 1999 (for Texaco); A Jolt for General Germ (for Listerine Co.?); other cartoons: Ace of Spades; Teacher’s Pest; Tree Saps; The Cow’s Husband; The Male Man; Twenty Legs under the Sea; Step on It; The Herring Murder Case
1934 Poor Cinderella; Little Dutch Mill
1935 An Elephant Never Forgets; The Song of the Birds; The Kids in the Shoe; Dancing on the Moon; Time for Love; Musical Memories

1936 Somewhere in Dream Land; The Little Stranger; The Cobweb Hotel; Greedy Humpty Dumpty; Hawaiian Birds; Play Safe; Christmas Comes But Once a Year

1937 Bunny-mooning; Chicken à la King; A Car-Tune Portrait; Peeping Penguins; Educated Fish; Little Lamby

1938 Hold It; Hunky and Spunky; All’s Fair at the Fair; The Playful Polar Bears; The Tears of an Onion

1939 Always Kickin’; Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp (2-reeler); Small Fry; Barnyard Brat; The Fresh Vegetable Mystery (in 3-D)

1940 Little Lambkin; Ants in the Plants; Kick in Time; Snubbed by a Snob; You Can’t Shoe a Horsefly; The Dandy Lion; King for a Day; Sneak, Snoop and Snitch; The Constable; Mommy Loves Puppy; Bring Himself Back Alive

1941 All’s Well; Pop and Mom in Wild Oysters; Two for the Zoo; Zero, the Hound; Twinkletoes Gets the Bird; Raggedy Ann and Andy (2-reeler); Swing Cleaning; Sneak, Snoop and Snitch in Triple Trouble; Fire Cheese; Twinkletoes—Where He Goes Nobody Knows; Copy Cat; Gabby Goes Fishing; The Wizard of Arts; It’s a Hap-hap-happy Day; Vitamin Hay; Twinkletoes in Hat Stuff

Superman Series—

1941 Superman; Superman in The Mechanical Monsters
1942 Superman in Billion Dollar Limited; Superman in The Arctic Giant; Superman in The Bulleteers; The Raven (2-reeler); Superman in The Magnetic Telescope; Superman in Electric Earthquake; Superman in Volcano; Superman in Terror on the Midway

Out of the Inkwell Series—

1919 The Clown’s Pup; The Tantalizing Fly; Slides
1920 The Boxing Kangaroo; The Chinaman; The Circus; The Clown’s Little Brother; The Ouija Board; Perpetual Motion; Poker (The Card Game); The Restaurant

1921 The Automobile Ride; Cartoonland; The First Man to the Moon; Fishing; Invisible Ink; November; The Sparring Partner

1922 Birthday; Bubbles; The Challenge; The Dresden Doll; The Fish (possibly alternative title for Fishing, 1921); The Hypnotist; Jumping Beans; Mosquito; Pay Day; Reunion; The Show

1923 Balloons; The Battle; Bedtime; The Contest; False Alarm; Flies; The Fortune Teller; Fun from the Press (series of 3 inserts); Laundry; Modeling; The Puzzle; Shadows; Surprise; Trapped; The Einstein Theory of Relativity (d Max only; live action, in 2-reel version, and 4-reel with some cartoon sequences)

1924 The Cure; Ko-Ko in Toyland; Ko-Ko Celebrates the Fourth; Ko-Ko Eats; Ko-Ko in Toyland; Ko-Ko Nuts; Ko-Ko on the Run; Ko-Ko Packs ‘em; Ko-Ko Sees Spooks; Ko-Ko’s Thanksgiving; Ko-Ko the Barber; Ko-Ko Trains Animals; Mother Goose Land; The Storm
1926 Ko-Ko at the Circus; Ko-Ko Baffles the Bulls; Ko-Ko Gets Egg-cited; Ko-Ko Hot After It; Ko-Ko Kidnapped; Ko-Ko’s Paradise; Ko-Ko Steps Out; Ko-Ko the Convict; Toot! Toot!; The Fadeaway; It’s the Cat’s

Inklings (series of 18); East Side, West Side (Song Car-Tune’?); Ko-Ko Back Tracks; Ko-Ko Makes ‘em Laugh; Ko-Ko Plays Pool; Ko-Ko’s Kane; Ko-Ko the Knight; Ko-Ko Hops Off; Ko-Ko the Kop; Ko-Ko Explorers; Ko-Ko Chops Suey; Ko-Ko’s Clock; Ko-Ko Kicks; Ko-Ko’s Quest; Ko-Ko the Kid; Ko-Ko Needles the Boss

1927 Ko-Ko’s Kink; Ko-Ko’s Kozy Korner; Koko’s Germ Jam; Ko-Ko’s Bawh; Ko-Ko Smokes; Ko-Ko’s Tattoo; Ko-Ko’s Earth Control; Ko-Ko’s Hot Dog; Ko-Ko’s Haunted House; Ko-Ko Lamps Aladdin; Ko-Ko Squeals; Ko-Ko’s Field Daze; Ko-Ko Goes Over; Ko-Ko’s Catch; Ko-Ko’s War Dogs; Ko-Ko’s Chase; Ko-Ko Heaves-Ho; Ko-Ko’s Big Pull; Ko-Ko Cleans Up; Ko-Ko’s Parade; Ko-Ko’s Dog-Gone; Telefilm; Ko-Ko in the Rough; Ko-Ko’s Magic; Ko-Ko on the Track; Ko-Ko’s Act; Ko-Ko’s Courtship

1929 No Eyes Today; Noise Annoys Ko-Ko; Ko-Ko Beats Time; Ko-Ko’s Reward; Ko-Ko’s Hot Ink; Ko-Ko’s Crib; Ko-Ko’s Saxaphonies; Ko-Ko’s Knock-down; Ko-Ko’s Signals; Ko-Ko’s Focus; Ko-Ko’s Conquest; Ko-Ko’s Harem-Scarem; Ko-Ko’s Big Sale; Ko-Ko’s Hypnotism; Chemical Ko-Ko; Noah’s Lark (sound)

Song Car-Tune Series—

1924 Come Take a Trip in My Airship; Mother, Mother, Mother; Pin a Rose on Me; Oh, Mabel!; Old Folks at Home; Echo and Narcissus; The Proxy Lover: A Fable of the Future

1925 Daisy Bell; Dixie; Good-bye My Lady Love; I Love a Lassie; My Bonnie; Susanne River; Evolution (d Max only; part-live action feature)

1926 By the Light of the Silvery Moon; Comin’ through the Rye; Darling Dolly Gray; Has Anybody Here Seen Kelly?; In the Good Old Summertime; My Old Kentucky Home; Oh You Beautiful Doll; Old Black Joe; Pack Up Your Troubles; Sailing, Sailing over the Bounding Main; Sweet Adeline; Take a Trip; Ta-Ra-Ra-Boom-Der-A; Trail of the Lonesome Pine; Tramp, the Boys are Marching

Carrie of the Chorus Live-Action Series—

1926 Berth Mark; Another Bottle, Doctor (not released); Morning Judge

Screen Songs Series—

1929 The Sidewalks of New York; Yankee Doodle Boy; Old Black Joe; Ye Olde Melodies; Daisy Bell; Mother Pin a Rose on Me (remake of 1924 title); Chinatown My Chinatown; Dixie (remake of 1925 title); Good-bye My Lady Love (remake of 1925 title); My Pony Boy; Smiles; Oh You Beautiful Doll (remake of 1926 title); After the Ball; Put on Your Old Gray Bonnet; I’ve Got Rings on My Fingers

1930 Bedelia; In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree; I’m Afraid to Come Home in the Dark; La Paloma; Prisoner’s Song; I’m Forever Blowing Bubbles; Yes! We Have No Bananas; Come Take a Trip in My Airship (remake of 1924 title); In the Good Old Summer Time (remake of 1926 title); A Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight; The Glow Worm; The Stein Song; Strike Up the Band; My Gal Sal; Matrioch; On a Sunday Afternoon; Row, Row, Row

1931 By the Beautiful Sea; I Wonder Who’s Kissing Her Now; I’d Climbed the Highest Mountain; Somebody Stole My Gal; Any Little Girl That’s a Nice Little Girl; Alexander’s Ragtime Band; And the Green Grass Grew All Around; My Wife’s Gone to the Country; That Old Gang of Mine; Mr. Gallagher and Mr. Shean; You’re Driving Me Crazy; Little Annie Rooney; Kitty from Kansas City (also Betty Boop series); By the Light of the Silvery Moon (remake of 1926 title); My Baby Just Cares for Me; Russian Lullaby; Please Go ‘way and Let Me Sleep

1932 Sweet Jenny Lee; Show Me the Way to Go Home; When the Red Red Robin Comes Bob Bobbin’ Along; Wait Till the Sun Shines, Nellie!; Just One More Chance; Oh! How I Hate to Get Up in the Morning; Shine On Harvest Moon; I Ain’t Got Nobody; You Try Somebody Else; Rudy Vallee Melodies; Down among the Sugar Cane; Just a Gigolo; School Days; Sleepy Time Down South; Sing a Song; Time on My Hands

1933 Dinah; Ain’t She Sweet; Reaching for the Moon; Aloha Oe; Popular Melodies; The Peanut Vendor; Song Shopping; Bolesk; Sing, Sisters, Sing!; Down by the Old Mill Stream; Stoopnocracy; When Yuba Plays the Rumba on the Tubah; Boo, Boo, Theme Song; I Like Mountain Music; Sing, Babies, Sing

1934 Keeps Rainin’ All the Time; Let’s All Sing Like the Birdies Sing; Tune Up and Sing; Lazybones; This Little Piggie Went to Market; She Reminds Me of You; Love Thy Neighbor

1935 I Wished on the Moon; It’s Easy to Remember

1936 No Other One; I Feel Like a Feather in the Breeze; I Don’t Want to Make History; The Hills of Old Wyomin’; I Can’t Escape from You; Talking through My Heart

1937 Never Should Have Told You; Twilight on the Trail; Please Keep Me in Your Dreams; You Came to My Rescue; Whispers in the Dark; Magic on Broadway

1938 You Took the Words Right Out of My Heart; Thanks for the Memory; You Leave Me Breathless; Beside a Moonlit Stream

Betty Boop Series—

1930 Swing, You Sinner; Accordion Joe; Mysterious Mose; Dizzy Dishes; Barnacle Bill

1931 Silly Scandals; Bimbo’s Initiation; Bimbo’s Express; Minding the Baby; In the Shade of the Old Apple Sauce; Mask-a-Raid; Jack and the Beanstalk; Dizzy Red Riding Hood; Betty Co-ed; The Bum Bandit

1932 Minnie the Moocher; Swim or Sink; Crazy Town; The Dancing Fool; A-Hunting We Will Go; Chess-nuts; Let Me Call You Sweetheart (also Screen Song); Hide and Seek; Admission Free; The Betty Boop Limited; Stopping the Show; Betty Boop’s Bizzy Bee; Betty Boop M.D.; Betty Boop’s Bamboo Isle; Betty Boop’s Ups and Downs; Romantic Melodies (also Screen Song); Betty Boop for President; I’ll Be Glad
When You're Dead, You Rascal (also Screen Song); Betty Boop’s Museum; Any Rags; Boop-Oop-a-Doop; The Robot

Betty Boop’s Ker-choo; Betty Boop’s Crazy Inventions; Is My Palm Read; Betty Boop’s Penthouse; Snow White; Betty Boop’s Birthday Party; Betty Boop’s May Party; Betty Boop’s Big Boss; Mother Goose Land; The Old Man of the Mountain; I Heard; Morning, Noon, and Night; Betty Boop’s Hallowe’en Party; Parade of the Wooden Soldiers

Ha! Ha! Ha!; Betty in Blunderland; Betty Boop’s Rise to Fame (compilation of sequences from Stopping the Show, Betty Boop’s Bamboo Isle, and The Old Man of the Mountain, + new material); Betty Boop’s Life Guard; There’s Something about a Soldier; Betty Boop’s Little Pal; Betty Boop’s Prize Show; Keep in Style; When My Ship Comes In; She Wronged Him Right; Red Hot Mama

Baby Be Good; Taking the Blame; Stop That Noise; Sweat the Fly; No! No! A Thousand Times No!; A Little Soap and Water; A Language All My Own; Betty Boop and Grampy; Judge for a Day; Making Stars; Betty Boop with Henry the Funniest Living American; Little Nobody

Betty Boop and the Little King; Not Now; Betty Boop and Little Jimmy; We Did It; A Song a Day; More Pep; You’re Not Built That Way; Happy You and Merry Me; Training Pigeons; Grampy’s Indoor Outing; Be Human; Making Friends

House Cleaning Blues; Whoops! I’m a Cowboy; The Hot Air Salesman; Pudgy Takes a Bow-wow; Pudgy Picks a Fight; The Impractical Joker; Ding Dong Doggie; The Candid Candidate; Service with a Smile; The New Deal Show; The Foxy Hunter; Zula Hula

Riding the Rails; Be Up to Date; Honest Love and True; Out of the Inkwell; Swing School; Pudgy and the Lost Kitten; Buzzy Boop; Pudgy and the Watchman; Buzzy Boop at the Concert; Sally Swing; On with the New; Thrills and Chills

My Friend the Monkey; So Does an Automobile; Musical Mountaineers; The Scared Crows; Rhythm on the Reservation; Yip, Yip, Yippy

Popeye Series—

1933 I Yam What I Yam; Blow Me Down; I Eats My Spinach; Season’s Greetins; Wild Elephinks (all cartoons also Betty Boop series)

1934 Sock a Bye Baby; Let’s You and Him Fight; Can You Take It?; The Man on the Flying Trapeze; Shoerin’ Hosses; Strong to the Finish; Shiver Me Timbers!; Axe Me Another; A Dream Walking; The Two-Alarm Fire; The Dance Contest; We Aim to Please

1935 Be Kind to Animals; Pleased to Meet Cha; The Hyp-nut-tist; Choose Your Weppins; Beware of Barnacle Bill; For Better or Worse; Dizzy Divers; You Gotta Be a Football Hero; King of the Mardi Gras (also Betty Boop Series); Adventures of Popeye (compilation with sequences from I Eats My Spinach, Popeye the Sailor, and Axe Me Another); The Spinach Overture

1936 Vim, Vigor and Vitality; A Clean Shaven Man; Brotherly Love, I-ski Love-ski You-ski; Bridge Ahyo!; What No Spinach?; I Wanna Be a Life Guard; Let’s Get Movin’; Never Kick a Woman; Little Swee’ Pea; Hold the Wire; Popeye the Sailor Meets Sinbad the Sailor (2-reeler); The Spinach Roadster; I’m in the Army Now (compilation)

1937 The Paneless Window Washer; Organ Grinder’s Swing; My Artistical Temperature; Hospitaliky; The Twisker Pitcher; Morning, Noon, and Night Club; Lost and Foundry; I Never Changes My Altitude; I Like Babies and Injinks; The Football Toucher Downer; Protek the Weakerist; Popeye the Sailor Meets Ali Baba’s Forty Thieves (2-reeler); Fowl Play

1938 Let’s Celebrate; Learn Politeness; The House Builder-Upper; Big Chief Ugh-Augh-Ugh; I Yam Love Sick; Plumbing Is a Pipe; The Jeep; Bulldozing the Bull; Mutiny Ain’t Nice; Goonland; A Date to Skate; Cops Is Always Right

1939 Leave Well Enough Alone; Customers Wanted; Wotta Niitemare; Ghosts in the Bunk; Hello, How Am I?; It’s the Natural Thing to Do; Never Sock a Baby

1940 Shakespearian Spinach; Females Is Fickle; Stealin’ Ain’t Honest; My Feelin’s Is Hurt; Onion Pacific; Winmin Is a Mysterr; Nurse Mater; Fightin’ Pals; Doing Imposssible Stunts; Winmin Hadn’t oughta Drive; Puttin’ on the Act; Popeye Meets William Tell; My Pop; My Pop; Poopdeck Pappy; Eugene, the Jeep

1941 Problem Pappy; Quiet! Pleeze; Olive’s Sweepsake Ticket; Flies Ain’t Human; Popeye Meets Rip Van Winkle; Olive’s Boithday Presink; Child Psykolojiky; Pest Pilot; I’ll Never Crow Again; The Mighty Navy; Nix on Hypnotricks

1942 Kickin’ the Conga ‘round; Blunder Below; Fleets of Stren’th; Pip-eye, Pup-eye, Peep-eye and Peep-eye; Many Tanks; Olive Oyl and Water Don’t Mix; Baby Wants a Bottle-ship

Stone Age Cartoons Series—

1940 Way Back When a Triangle Had Its Points; Way Back When a Nag Only was a Horse; Way Back When a Night Club Was a Stick; Granite Hotel; The Foul Ball Player; The Ugly Dino; Wedding Belts; Way Back When a Razzberry Was a Fruit; The Fulla Bluff Man; Springtime in the Rockage; Pedagogical Institution (College to You); Way Back When Women Had Their Weigh

Other Films:

1923 Adventures in the Far North (Captain Kleinschmidt’s Adventures in the Far North) (Kleinschmidt) (co-pr and ed Max only; live action)

1929 Finding His Voice (co-d Max only; for Western Electric Co.)

Screen Gems Series—

1942 Song of Victory (Wickersham) (Dave pr); The Gullible Canary (Geiss) (Dave pr); The Dumbconscience Mind (Sommer and Hubley) (Dave pr); TiTo’s Guitar (Wickersham) (Dave pr); Malice in Slumberland (Geiss) (Dave pr); Toll Bridge Troubles (Wicker) (Dave pr); King Midos, Junior (Sommer and Hubley) (Dave pr); Cholly Polly (Geiss) (Dave pr)

1943 Slay It with Flowers (Wickersham) (Dave pr); The Vitamin G-Man (Sommer and Hubley) (Dave pr); There’s Something about a Soldier (Geiss) (Dave pr); Kindly Scram (Geiss) (Dave pr); Prof. Small and Mr. Tall (Sommer and Hubley) (Dave pr); Willoughby's Magic Hat (Wickersham) (Dave pr); Plenty Below Zero (Wickersham) (Dave pr); Duty and the Beast (Geiss) (Dave pr); Mass Meeting (Geiss) (Dave pr); Tree for Two (Wickersham) (Dave pr); He Can't Make It Stick (Sommer and Hubley) (Dave pr); The Fly in the Ointment (Sommer) (Dave pr); Dizzy Newsreel (Geiss) (Dave pr); A-Hunting We Won't Go (Wickersham) (Dave pr); The Rocky Road to Ruin (Sommer) (Dave pr); Room and Bored (Wickersham) (Dave pr); Imagination (Wickersham) (Dave pr); Nursery Crimes (Geiss) (Dave pr); The Cocky Bantam (Sommer) (Dave pr); Way Down Yonder in the Corn (Wickersham) (Dave pr); The Playful Pest (Sommer) (Dave pr); Polly Wants a Doctor (Swift) (Dave pr)

1944 Sadie Hawkins Day (Wickersham) (Dave pr); The Herring Murder Mystery (Roman) (Dave pr); Magic Strength (Wickersham) (Dave pr); Lionel Lion (Sommer) (Dave pr); Amoozin' But Confoozin' (Marcus) (Dave pr); Giddy-yapping (Swift) (Dave pr); The Dream Kids (Wickersham) (Dave pr); The Disillusioned Bluebird (Swift) (Dave pr); Tangled Travels (Geiss) (Dave pr); Trocadero (Nigh) (Dave pr, live action + d animated sequences + ro)

Sing and Be Happy Series, live action with cartoon inserts—

1946 Merrily We Sing (Moore) (Dave anim spvr); A Bit of Blarney (Moore) (Dave anim spvr); The Singing Barbers (Moore) (Dave anim spvr)

1947 Let's Sing a College Song (Moore) (Dave anim spvr); Let's Sing a Western Song (Moore) (Dave anim spvr); Kernels of Corn (Moore) (Dave anim spvr); Let's Go Latin (Moore) (Dave anim spvr); Manhattan Memories (Moore) (Dave anim spvr)

1948 Lamp Post Favorites (Moore) (Dave anim spvr); Singin' the Blues (Parker) (Dave anim spvr); Spotlight Serenade (Parker) (Dave anim spvr); Choo Choo Swing (Cowan) (Dave anim spvr); River Melodies (Parker) (Dave anim spvr); Clap Your Hands (Cowan) (Dave anim spvr); Hits of the Nineties (Parker) (Dave anim spvr); Let's Sing a Love Song (Parker) (Dave anim spvr); Sing While You Work (Parker) (Dave anim spvr); Songs of the Seasons (Parker) (Dave anim spvr); The Year Around (Cowan) (Dave anim spvr)

1949 Minstrel Mania (Cowan) (Dave anim spvr); Songs of Romance (Cowan) (Dave anim spvr); Sailing with a Song (Cowan) (Dave anim spvr); Singing Along (Cowan) (Dave anim spvr); Francis (Lubin) (Dave live action, storyboard only)

Cartoon Melody Series, live action with cartoon inserts—

1950 Brother John (Cowan) (Dave anim spvr); Lower the Boom (Cowan) (Dave anim spvr); Peggy, Peg and Polly (Cowan) (Dave anim spvr)

1951 Bedtime for Bonzo (de Cordova) (Dave, live action + d anim sequences for trailer); Babbles of Song (Cowan) (Dave anim spvr); Readin' 'ritin' and 'rithmetic (Cowan) (Dave anim spvr); Down the River (Cowan) (Dave anim spvr); Hilly Billy (Cowan) (David anim spvr); MacDonald's Farm (Cowan) (Dave anim spvr); Reuben, Reuben (Cowan) (Dave anim spvr); Uncle Sam's Songs (Cowan) (Dave anim spvr)

1952 Memory Song Book (Cowan) (Dave anim spvr); Songs That Live (Cowan) (Dave anim spvr); Toast of Song (Cowan) (Dave anim spvr)

Publications

By the FLEISCHERS: books—

Fleischer, Max, Betty Boop’s Sunday Best, Northampton, Massachusetts, 1995.

On the FLEISCHERS: books—

On the FLEISCHERS: articles—

de Bree, K., “Max Fleischer, de koning van de voorfilm,” in Skoop (Amsterdam), vol. 8, no. 5, 1972.
Moret, H., obituary for Dave, in Ecran (Paris), 20 October 1979.
Cahiers de la Cinématheque (Perpignan), Summer-Autumn 1980.

“The Perfect Film,” in Animation Journal (Orange), Fall 1992.

Max and Dave Fleischer were important innovators in American animation in the 1920s and 1930s. Their cartoon series, which included Out of the Inkwell, Betty Boop, Popeye, and Superman, relied on a flair for ingenuity and comic imagination that made their work stylistically distinctive. The best of the Fleischer brothers’ work features an unselfconscious surrealism and fluid imagery unparalleled in pre-Second World War animation.

Max Fleischer emigrated with his family in 1887 from Vienna to New York City, where his brother Dave was born seven years later. Max studied art at the Art Students League and Cooper Union in New York City. After his schooling, he became a staff artist on the Brooklyn Daily Eagle. There he met cartoonist John R. Bray, whose subsequent move into animation later furthered Fleischer’s own career. By 1915, Max was an art editor at Popular Science Monthly. His job heightened his interest in mechanics and inspired him to invent a machine that would enable an animator to trace over live-action film frame-by-frame. Fleischer was assisted by his brothers Joe and Dave in his new invention, the Rotoscope.

The Fleischers put the Rotoscope to use in a series of cartoons produced by Bray and called Out of the Inkwell. The series featured the “out-of-the-inkwell” appearances and adventures of a cartoon clown (later named Ko-Ko) in live-action settings. Max and Dave collaborated on the Out of the Inkwell series for Bray until 1921, when they established their own company. Max took over responsibility for managing the business and distributing the films. Dave, meanwhile, assumed creative directorship over all the company’s cartoons. The Fleischers released their cartoons from 1921 to 1927 through their own distribution company, Red Seal Pictures. After Red Seal collapsed in 1927, they distributed through Paramount pictures until they were forced out of business in 1942.

The brothers’ success increased in the late 1920s with Talkartoons, a series of sound cartoons. One of the Talkartoons’ characters became so popular that she got her own series. Betty Boop, modelled after the flapper actress Helen Kane and individualized by Mae Questel’s vocals, was the first sexualized cartoon character. Frequently likened to actress Mae West for her suggestive body language and natural insouciance, Betty Boop appealed to adults as well as to children. The best of the series capitalized on good-natured sexual innuendo, constantly metamorphosing images, and thinly veiled Freudian symbolism. But in 1934, Hollywood’s new Production Code called for so much revision that a sanitized and desexed Betty Boop destroyed the series’ imaginative flair, though it continued until 1939.

When Betty’s popularity waned, another Fleischer cartoon character became the studio’s main attraction. The Popeye series, based on the Elzie Segar comic strip character, featured new songs, comic twists, and a more ambitious graphic style that used perspective and a range of values. The peak of the series came in the late 1930s in three two-reel Popeyes (Popeye the Sailor Meets Sinbad the Sailor, Popeye the Sailor Meets Ali Baba’s Forty Thieves, and Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp). The three films featured Technicolor, and the first two used Max Fleischer’s Turntable Camera, a device for photographing animation cels in front of revolving miniature sets that created three-dimensional effects.

Soon after, the Fleischers attempted to compete with Walt Disney’s successful animated feature, Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs. They made two feature-length cartoons. Gulliver’s Travels and Mr. Bug Goes to Town. The financial failure of the latter prompted Paramount pictures to foreclose on the Fleischers’ company. Paramount took over the management, renamed the studio (Famous Studio), and fired the Fleischers. The two brothers, who had not been speaking to each other for some time, went their separate ways.

Dave worked at Columbia Pictures cartoon studio and Universal studios. He retired in 1969. Max worked on a series of industrial and educational projects, mechanical inventions, and television animation, but he never achieved his former success. He died in 1972 at the Motion Picture Country Home, where he had been a resident for almost ten years.

—Lauren Rabinovitz

FOREMAN, Carl

Carl Foreman (right) on the set of The Victors

Films as Writer:

1941 Spooks Run Wild (Rosen)
1942 Rhythm Parade (Brethren and Gould)
1945 Dakota (Kane) (story)
1948 So This Is New York (Fleischer); Let’s Go to the Movies (Gladden) (co-story)
1949 Champion (Robson); Home of the Brave (Robson); The Clay Pigeon (Fleischer)
1950 The Men (Zinnemann); Young Man with a Horn (Young Man of Music) (Curtiz); Cyrano de Bergerac (Gordon)
1952 High Noon (Zinnemann)
1955 The Sleeping Tiger (Losely) (co-sc as Derek Frey)
1957 The Bridge on the River Kwai (Lean) (co-sc, uncredited)

Films as Writer and Producer:

1958 The Key (Reed)
1961 The Guns of Navarone (Thompson)
1963 The Victors (+ d)
1969 Mackenna’s Gold (Thompson) (co-pr)
1972 Young Winston (Attenborough)
1978 Force 10 from Navarone (Hamilton) (story)
1981 When Time Ran Out (Earth’s Final Fury) (Goldstone)

Films as Producer/Executive Producer:

1959 The Mouse That Roared (Arnold)
1966 Born Free (Hill)
1969 Otley (Clement)
1970 The Virgin Soldiers (Dexter)
1971 Living Free (Couffer)
1979 The Golden Gate Murders (Grauman)

Publications

By FOREMAN: books—

Young Winston (script), New York, 1972.

By FOREMAN: articles—

Interview with Penelope Houston and Kenneth Cavander, in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1958.
Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1961.
Journal of the Producers of America, December 1968.
Interview with Bernard Tavernier, in Positif (Paris), February 1969.
Films and Filming (London), November 1969.
Chaplin (Stockholm), no. 7, 1972.
Film Making, March 1972.
Films and Filming (London), August 1972.
Take One (Montreal), May 1973.
American Film (Washington, D.C.), April 1979.

On FOREMAN: articles—

Films and Filming (London), June 1957.
Films and Filming (London), September 1963.
Show (New York), December 1972.

* * *

In 1982, talking about his planned writing and direction of Philip Hallie’s Last Innocent Blood Be Shed, Carl Foreman said that the book excited him because it is “about conquering fear and doing what you have to do.” Twenty years earlier, Foreman had been drawn into the challenge of making a film about the early life of Winston Churchill because “the central theme of alienation was... one that men and women everywhere would recognize and respond to.”

These themes—the struggle with fear within, maintaining self-respect in the context of the external world, and acknowledging the continuing alienation of the individual—recur in all of the films Foreman wrote and produced after 1949. During the making of High Noon, his personal experience and that of the screen character played by Gary Cooper intersected: Foreman, by refusing to “name names” before the House Un-American Activities Committee, and Cooper’s lawman, by refusing to flee when pursued by a trio of killers—both against the background of apathetic society—similarly found exile. Foreman’s exile began in 1952 when he was blacklisted and denied the producer’s credit on High Noon. By 1958, working with Columbia Pictures in Great Britain, his name could again appear in the credits of the films he wrote. But the shadow of the blacklist remained, and Foreman made most of his subsequent films in Europe. It was not until the day before he died that the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences officially acknowledged that Foreman (and Michael Wilson) were the Oscar-winning screenwriters for The Bridge on the River Kwai.

Born in Illinois to Russian immigrants, Foreman attended Northwestern University and the John Marshall Law School, but left to become a newspaper reporter, public relations man for theater actors, radio writer for Bob Hope and Eddie Cantor, and eventually a writer for marginal films in Hollywood. During the Second World War he was part of Frank Capra’s film unit and worked on Know Your Enemy: Japan with Joris Ivens. This experience, he said, transformed him. After the war ended Foreman, Stanley Kramer, and George Glass created an independent production company, Screen Plays, Inc., which released impressive low-budget films between 1948 and 1952 (when the company was purchased by Columbia). Foreman wrote Home of the Brave, The Men, Champion, and High Noon, for example. With the last film he became a producer so he could protect his creative contributions as a writer. As a writer-producer, he became the principal author of his films while working with experienced filmmakers like Carol Reed, J. Lee Thompson, and Richard Attenborough. Only with The Victors in 1963 did he actually direct, as well as write and produce. Acting as a producer only, he had at least two major successes, The Mouse That Roared in 1959 and Born Free in 1966.

As a writer Foreman took risks, from the flashbacks of Home of the Brave, to the “real time” of High Noon, to the “interview-camera” of Young Winston. Despair surfaced in The Key, one of his most affecting films (with major performances by Sophia Loren, William Holden, and Trevor Howard), but the impression most often left by his movies is that courage and conviction do make a difference, and that the nobility of the human spirit can endure.

—Robert A. Haller

FOX, William

Producer. Nationality: American. Born: Wilhelm Fried in Tulchva, Hungary, 1 January 1879; family moved to New York when Fox was nine months old. Career: Peddler in the garment industry; 1904—went into the penny arcade business; bought cinemas in New York; moved into distribution with the Greater New York Film Rental Co.; launched the Fox production studio in New York with the one-reeler Life’s Show Window; 1912—succeeded in bringing legal action against the Motion Picture Trust for restraint of trade; 1915—merged his production, distribution and exhibition interests; 1917—Fox Studio moved to Los Angeles; 1925—pioneered Moviestone Sound for newsreels, bought out Loew’s Inc. and its production wing, MGM; bought the Gaumont Theatre Chain in Britain; 1929—taken to court on the grounds that his purchase of Loew’s constituted restraint of trade; 1930—seriously injured in car crash; sold his interests in Fox, and retired from film production; 1942–43—imprisoned for bribing a judge in bankruptcy proceedings. Died: Of heart disease in New York, 8 May 1952.

Films as Producer:

1915  A Fool There Was (Powell)
1917  The Silent Lie (Walsh)

1919  Should a Husband Forgive? (Walsh)
1920  The Strongest (Walsh)
1921  Beyond Price (Dawley); The Big Punch (Ford); The Blushing Bride (Furthman); Bucking the Line (Harbaugh); The Cheater (Hyperion); Reformed (Dunlap); Children of the Night (Dillon); Cinderella of the Hills (Mitchell); A Connecticut Yankee at King Arthur’s Court (Flynn); Desert Blossoms (Rosson); Dynamite Allen (Henderson); Ever Since Eve (Mitchell); Footfalls (Brabin)
1922  Arabia (Reynolds); Arabian Love (Storm); The Boss of Camp Four (Van Dyke); The Broadway Peacock (Brabin); A California Romance (Storm); Calvert’s Valley (Dillon); Catch My Smoke (Beaudine); Chasing the Moon (Segdwick); The Crusader (Mitchell); Do and Dare (Segdwick); Elope If You Must (Wallace); The Fighting Streak (Rosson); A Fool There Was (Flynn); For Big Stakes (Reynolds); A Friendly Husband (Blystone); The Fast Mail (Durning)
1923  The Face on the Barroom Floor (Ford); The Footlight Ranger (Dunlap); Big Dan (Wellman); Blackstock (Dunlap); Brass Commandments (Reynolds); Bucking the Barrier (Campbell); The Buster (Campbell); Cameo Kirby (Ford); Capu’s Fireman (Wellman); The Custard Cup (Brenon); Does It Pay? (Horan); The Eleventh Hour (Durning); Eyes of the Forest (Hillyer)
1924  The Arizona Express (Buckingham); The Brass Bowl (Storm); Circus Cowboy (Wellman); Cyril (Elvey); Dante’s Inferno (Otto); Darwin Was Right (Seiler); Daughters of the Night (Clifton); The Deadwood Coach (Reynolds); The Desert Outlaw (Moritmer); Flames of Desire (Clift); The Folly of Vanity (Elvey)
1925  The Road to Glory (Hawks); East Lynne (Flynn); The Arizona Romeo (Moritmer); The Dancers (Flynn); The Desert’s Price (Van Dyke); Dick Turpin (Blystone); Durand of the Badlands (Reynolds); The Everlasting Whisper (Blystone); Every Man’s Wife (Elvey); The Fighting Heart (Ford); The Fool (Millarde)
1926  Bertha, the Sewing Machine Girl (Cummings); Black Paradise (Neill); The Blue Eagle (Ford); The Canyon of Light (Stoloff); The City (Neill); The Country Beyond (Cummings); The Cowboy and the Countess (Neill); Desert Valley (Dunlap); The Dixie Merchant (Borzage); The Silver Treasure (Lee); Early to Wed (Borzage); The Family Upstairs (Blystone); Fig Leaves (Hawks); The Fighting Buckaroo (Neill); The First Year (Borzage); The Flying Horseman (Dull)
1927  The Arizona Wildcat (Neill); The Auctioneer (Green); Black Jack (Dull); Blood Will Tell (Flynn); The Broncho Twister (Dull); Chain Lightning (Hillyer); The Circus Ace (Stoloff); Colleen O’Connor; Come to My House (Green); The Cradle Snatchers (Hawks); East Side, West Side (Dwan); The Gay Retreat (Stoloff)
1928  Fazil (Hawks); Blindfold (Klein); The Branded Sombrero (Hillyer); Chicken a la King (Lehrman); The Cowboy Kid (Carruth); Daredevil’s Reward (Forde); Don’t Marry (Tinling); Dressed to Kill (Cummings); Dry Martini (D’Arrast); The Farmer’s Daughter (Tuarog); Fleetwing (Hillyer); Four Sons (Ford); The Gateway of the Moon (Wray)
1929  The River (Borzage); Four Devils (Murnau); Behind That Curtain (Cummings); Big Time (Hawks); Black Magic
William Fox was one of the true pioneers of the American motion picture industry. From his base in New York City, he established a chain of early movie and vaudeville theaters. He stubbornly defied the takeover attempts of the Motion Picture Patents Company. Thereafter he prospered. During the 1910s Fox set up a film production unit to feed his growing number of theaters, eventually incorporating as the Fox Film Corporation.

On FOX: articles—

* * *

Publications

On FOX: books—

Sinclair, Upton, Upton Sinclair Presents William Fox, 1933.

On FOX: articles—

* * *

William Fox was one of the true pioneers of the American motion picture industry. From his base in New York City, he established a chain of early movie and vaudeville theaters. He stubbornly defied the takeover attempts of the Motion Picture Patents Company. Thereafter he prospered. During the 1910s Fox set up a film production unit to feed his growing number of theaters, eventually incorporating as the Fox Film Corporation.
In 1914 the Fox Company made its first film in Los Angeles; three years later it set up a permanent operation in California, eventually building a studio lot complex located at Sunset and Western. By 1920 the Fox company had offices for distribution throughout the world, and an ever expanding chain of movie palaces. Indeed, in the mid-1920s, Fox personally sought to create a set of the greatest movie palaces in the world, each bearing his name. Soon thousands each day sought movie fun at several thousand-seat Fox theaters in Brooklyn, Detroit, St. Louis, Philadelphia, San Francisco, and Atlanta. By the late 1920s, the Fox theater chain had movie houses in almost every major town west of the Rocky mountains.

But it was the coming of sound that established Fox as a major player in the American motion picture business. During the early days of talkies, from 1925 through 1928, William Fox and his assistants adapted a version of AT&T’s pioneering technology for recording and playing back sound-on-film. Others continued to use sound-on-disc, but by the early 1930s, the sound-on-film technology had become the world film industry standard.

In 1926, Fox signed to help pioneer sound because he felt such a technical change might improve his company’s newsreel business. Like the Warner Bros., at first Fox did not believe in a future for feature-length talkies, but reasoned that the public certainly might prefer newsreels with sound. Fox never made a better business decision. Skillfully Fox Film engineers labored to integrate sound-on-film with accepted silent newsreel techniques. On the final day of April 1927, five months before the opening of The Jazz Singer, Fox Film presentated its first sound newsreel at the ornate, 5000 seat Roxy Theater located at the crossroads of the entertainment world in Times Square. The process of innovation was off and running.

Less than a month later Fox stumbled across the publicity coup of the decade when he was able to tender the only footage with sound of the takeoff and triumphant return of aviator Charles Lindbergh. Fox’s newsreel camermen soon travelled all over the globe in search of stories “with a voice.” Theater owners queued up to wire their houses simply to be able to show Fox Movietone newsreels. To movie fans of the day Fox Movietone News offered as much an attraction as any feature-length talkie.

But the coming of the Great Depression did not prove kind to the fortunes of Fox. In 1925 Fox had gone so far as to borrow millions to temporarily take over Loew’s, Inc., and its noted filmmaking unit, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. But this investment, coupled with the existing mortgages on the Fox movie palaces and the financing he took on to innovate sound-on-film meant William Fox and his corporation owed millions. With the Depression came a decline in movie attendance, and Fox was not able to pay his loans back. Soon he lost his company; it was merged with 20th Century Pictures in 1935. Fox thereafter attempted to make a grand return to the film business, but a conviction on court tampering charges, time in jail, and advancing age prevented him from ever doing so.

—Douglas Gomery

FRADETAL, Marcel

Cinematographer. Nationality: French. Born: Villefranche-sur-Saône, 1908. Military Service: 1928–30. Career: 1928—grip, Billancourt Studios; 1931–39—assistant cameraman, then cinematographer after World War II; 1948—first of many films for Georges Franju, Le Sang des bêtes; 1952—directed the film Hommes d’aujourd’hui; also worked for TV, including the series Villages de Paris, 1962, Féminin singulier, 1964–65, and others.

Films as Assistant Cameraman:

1931 La Vaquemone (Bussi); Le Train des suicides (Gréville); Chassé-croisé (H. Diamant-Berger); Tout s’arrange (H. Diamant-Berger); Ma tante d’Honneur (M. Diamant-Berger); Prisonnier de mon coeur (Tarride); Le Coeur de Paris (Benoît-Lévy and Epstein)

1932 Vampyr (The Dream of Allan Gray) (Dreyer); L’Enfant du miracle (M. Diamant-Berger); La Bonne Aventure (H. Diamant-Berger); Clair de lune (H. Diamant-Berger); Les Trois Mouquetaires (H. Diamant-Berger—2 parts); L’Homme à la barbiche (Valray—short)

1933 La Maternelle (Benoît-Lévy and Epstein); Plein aux as (Houssein); Miettke et sa mère (H. and M. Diamant-Berger)

1934 Cartouche (Blondeau); Jeanne (Marret); Comédie Française (Perret—short); Les Deux Couverts (Perret—short); Trois cents à l’heure (Rozier)

1935 Fanfare d’aimour (Pottier); Paris, mes amours (Blondeau); Le Gagnant (Y. Allégre—short)

1936 Arsène Lupin, détective (H. Diamant-Berger); Vous n’avez rien à déclarer? (Joannon); Les Hommes nouveaux (L’Herbier)

1937 Double crime sur la ligne Maginot (Gandra); L’Affaire Lafarge (Chenal); L’Alibi (Chenal); La Fessée (Caron)

1938 Tempête sur l’Asie (Oswald); Ultimatum (Wiene and Siodmak); Gibraltar (Ozep); Conflit (Moguy)

1939 Entente cordiale (L’Herbier); Pièges (Personal Column) (Siodmak)

1947 Farrebique (Rouquier) (+ uncredited ph)

Films as Cinematographer:

(Shorts)

1946 L’Oeuvre scientifique de Pasteur (Pasteur) (Rouquier and Painlevé); Le Charcutier de Machonville (Yvenel); Jeux d’enfants (Painlevé)

1947 La Caravane de la lumière (Colson-Malleval); Les Doigts de lumière (Colson-Malleval); Le Oued, la ville aux mille coupoles (Colson-Malleval) (co)

1948 Le Sang des bêtes (Franju); Le Chaudronnier (Rouquier)

1950 Champions juniors (Blondy) (co); Le Sel de la terre (Rouquier); En passant par la Lorraine (Franju); A Votre santé! (Thévenard) (co); Le Barrage du Chatelot (Colson-Malleval) (co)

1951 Une Année se meurt (Loew); Le Fleuve; Le Tarn (Les Eaux vives) (Mitry); Au pays des grandes causses (Mitry); Hôtel des Invalides (Franju); Renaissance du Havre (Camus)

1952 L’Homme en marche (Lallier and Rivoalen); Aux confins d’une ville (Loew); Sécurité et hygiène du travail dans la fabrication du sucre et de l’alcool (Dumas); Le Lycée sur la colline (Rouquier)
1953  Recontres sur le Rhin (Bonnière); Monsieur et Madame Curie (Franju)
1954  La Moisson sera belle (Villet)
1956  Le Théâtre National Populaire (Franju); Sur le pont d’Avignon (Franju)
1957  Notre Dame, cathédrale de Paris (Franju); Le Bel Indifférent (Demy); Celle qui n’était plus (Gérard)
1958  Le Musée Grévin (Masson and Demy)
1959  Cités du ciel (See)
1960  Sahara, au IV (Gérard); Le Huitième Jour (Hanoun); Pleins feux sur l’assassin (Franju)
1961  La Chèvre (Grospierrre); Le Petit Chasseur (Grospierrre); Jardins de Paris (de Vaucorbeil)
1963  Voici des fleurs (de Vaucorbeil) (co); Houat (Magrou); La Machine à parler d’amour (Japrisot)
1967  Les Yeux d’elstir (Magrou)
1971  Jusqu’au feu exclusivement (Ginsey)

(Features)

1949  Faits divers à Paris (Kirsanoff)
1961  Vacances en enfer (Kerchbron); Le Temps du ghetto (Rossif)
1963  Judex (Franju)
1965  Thomas l’imposteur (Thomas the Imposter) (Franju)
1970  La Faute de l’Abbé Mouret (Franju)
1971  La Ligne d’ombre (Franju)
1974  Penelope, folle de son corps (Magrou)

Film as Director:

1952  Hommes d’aujourd’hui

* * *

Although Marcel Fradetal is most readily identified with the director Georges Franju, his career has evolved through association with several filmmakers. In the 1930s he worked under various leading cameramen, notably Rudolph Maté on Dreyer’s atmospheric Vampyr, Maurice Desfassieux on Henri Diamant-Berger’s Les Trois Mousquetaires, and Ted Pahle on L’Herbier’s Entente cordiale. Their influence is discernible in his work.

With the postwar interest in documentary film, often promoted by government agencies, Fradetal was engaged by diverse directors. Initially hired by Georges Rouquier and Jean Painlevé for L’Oeuvre scientifique de Pasteur, he then contributed to Rouquier’s celebrated filming of the farming year in Farrebique, his account of the coppersmith’s trade in Le Chaudronnier, and his documentary about irrigation schemes in the Camargue, Le Sel de la terre. Blending lyricism with factual detail Fradetal’s camera delicately captures the still unviolated peace and natural beauty of the marshes at daybreak.

He worked not only for established directors such as Painlevé, Perret, and Kirsanoff but also for relative newcomers. For the film critic Jacques Loew he made the reflective Une Année se meurt; for the film theorist Jean Mitry the nature studies Le Fleuve, Le Tarn and Au pays des grandes causses; for Jacques Demy Le Bel Indifférent, adapted from a Cocteau sketch; and for Marcel Camus, his first film, Renaissance du Havre, depicting the reconstruction of the war-damaged channel port. Travelogues also formed part of Fradetal’s repertoire with films for Marie-Anne Colson-Malleville, such as Le Oued, la ville aux mille coupoles. Both the range of subjects treated—science, sport, nature, history, travel—together with his widespread collaboration, confirms Fradetal’s reputation in the documentary field. The 1960s brought features and television documentaries. For Marcel Hanoun he filmed Le Huitième Jour, for Frédéric Rossif the moving account of a doomed Warsaw ghetto, Le Temps du ghetto, and after several successful television documentaries for Jean Kerchbron, his feature Vacances en enfer.

It is essentially his 30-year collaboration with Georges Franju, however, that has cemented Fradetal’s reputation. The association began in the 1940s with Le Sang des bêtes, and a series of documentaries, features, and eventually television films followed. Franju initially hired Fradetal because of his work with Maté whose insistence on lighting and composition corresponded to Franju’s own preoccupations.

Le Sang des bêtes opens gently with images of the Parisian outskirts and a surreal wasteland in which incongruous objects are isolated by the camera: an elegant table, an ornate lamp swinging from a tree, a Renoir painting, all trappings of civilization, but, divorced from their usual contexts, they invite reappraisal. Inside the abattoir the camera calmly records every aspect of the butcher’s trade unsensationally moving between medium shot and close-up to note the details. This apparently innocent eye is, however, deceptive. Startling images imprint themselves. Gray walls, an indifferent executioner, a white horse slaughtered, decapitated sheep with stumpy legs still kicking, an atmosphere thick and steamy with hot blood. Death and mutilation are again tellingly revealed in Hôtel des Invalides. The dark, cold metal of weaponry, the stunted trees and limbless victims of war expose the painful realities of the heroic ideal. Close-ups emphasize the ugly consequences of violence, oppressive lighting reinforces the far from triumphant mood, and the slow tracking shot reviewing the representation of heroically charging cavalrymen completes the subversive irony of the visual composition.

Traditional tourist images are undermined in Sur le pont d’Avignon and Notre Dame, cathédrale de Paris, for which both color and CinemaScope were used. Postcard views of Avignon emphasize the tourist’s limited perspective of the town while in Notre Dame aesthetic responses and religious indifference are juxtaposed through the beauty of the stained glass and rows of empty cathedral chairs. Similarly arresting images punctuate En passant par la Lorraine where the dark sky is lit by white hot metal pouring from enormous furnaces, set against nature in rich cornfields.

Fradetal’s camerawork is equally vital to Franju’s features. In Pleins feux sur l’assassin an eerie son-et-lumière sequence at a castle is created, and in contrast an accelerated funeral, à la Clair, irreverently conveys the joy of the dead man’s beneficiaries. In Judex, a homage to Feuillade and the early serial, Fradetal brilliantly reproduces the orthochromatic tonal qualities of the silent cinema to create a visual symphony of light and dark effects as good and evil join battle. The screen version of Cocteau’s Thomas l’imposteur exposing the heroic myth renders concrete the writer’s imagery, such as the horse with its mane ablaze, while beautifully composed luminous shots of Belgian beaches with sea mists rolling across the trenches combine to produce a hauntingly atmospheric film about the realities and the unreality of war. For Zola’s La Faute de l’Abbé Mouret Fradetal achieved powerful, almost surrealistic images such as the statue of the Virgin appearing to rise spontaneously from a packing case, but the essentially poetic quality of Zola’s work is often disappointingly labored in the visual transcription.
The quality of Fradetal’s camerawork ultimately resides in his experienced, sensitive, and appropriate response to his material. Where his camera is required to observe unobtrusively it does so, and where images of pristine clarity are expected then Fradetal provides them. Nevertheless, where a synthesizing image, or a telling close-up, or an atmospheric composition, or a specifically paced tracking shot is needed, he imaginatively satisfies his director’s wishes. A self-effacing professional, Fradetal has left his mark both on fictional as well as documentary cinema.

—R. F. Cousins

FRAKER, William A.

Films as Cameraman:
1964 Father Goose (Nelson); The Wild Seed (Fargo) (Hutton)
1965 Morituri (The Saboteur Code Name “Morituri”) (Wicki)
1966 The Professionals (R. Brooks)

Films as Cinematographer:
1959 The Young Guns (Band) (asst)
1961 Forbid Them Not (Kimble) (+ co-pr)
1967 Games (Harrington); The Fox (Rydell); Fade-In (Taylor); The President’s Analyst (Flicker)
1968 Rosemary’s Baby (Polanski); Bullitt (Yates)
1969 Paint Your Wagon (Logan)
1970 Dusty and Sweets McGee (Mutrux) (+ ro)
1973 The Day of the Dolphin (Nichols)
1974 Rancho Deluxe (Perry)
1975 Aloha Bobby and Rose (Mutrux); Coonskin (Bakshi) (co); One Flew over the Cuckoo’s Nest (Forman) (co); The Killer inside Me (Kennedy)
1976 Lipstick (L. Johnson) (co); Gator (B. Reynolds)
1977 Exorcist II: The Heretic (Boorman); Looking for Mr. Goodbar (R. Brooks); Close Encounters of the Third Kind (Spielberg) (co); American Hot Wax (Mutrux)
1978 Heaven Can Wait (Beatty and Henry)
1979 Old Boyfriends (Tewkesbury); 1941 (Spielberg)
1980 Divine Madness (Ritchie); Hollywood Knights (Mutrux)
1982 Sharkey’s Machine (B. Reynolds); The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas (Higgins)
1983 WarGames (Badham)
1984 Protocol (Ross); Irreconcilible Differences (Shyer)
1985 Murphy’s Romance (Ritt); Fever Pitch (R. Brooks)
1986 SpaceCamp (Winer)
1987 Baby Boom (Shyer); Burglar (Ogorodnikov)
1989 Chances Are (Ardolino); An Innocent Man (Yates)
1990 The Freshman (Andrew Bergman)
1992 Memoirs of an Invisible Man (Carpenter); Honeymoon in Vegas (Andrew Bergman)
1993 Tombstone (Cosmatos); There Goes My Baby (Mutrux)
1994 Street Fighter (De Souza)
1995 Death in Small Doses (Locke—for TV); Father of the Bride Part II (Shyer)
1996 The Island of Dr. Moreau (Frankenheimer)
1997 Vegas Vacation (Kessler)
2000 Town and Country (Chelsom); Rules of Engagement (Friedkin)

Films as Director:
1970 Monte Walsh
1971 A Reflection of Fear
1981 The Legend of the Lone Ranger
1990 The Flash (series for TV)
Publications

By FRAKER: articles—

American Cinematographer (Hollywood), June 1977.
Filmmakers Monthly (Ward Hill, Massachusetts), December 1979.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), September 1982.
In Masters of Light: Conversations with Contemporary Cinematographers, by Dennis Schaefer and Larry Salvato, Berkeley, California, 1984.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), April 1984.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), November 1985.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), November 1987.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), April 1989.

On FRAKER: articles—

Focus on Film (London), Winter 1970.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), May 1978.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), May 1979.
McCarthy, T., in Film Comment (New York), March/April 1984.
Turner, George, on WarGames in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), April 1984.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), April 1986.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), November 1986.
Skrien (Amsterdam), June/July 1993.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), September 1996.

* * *

By 1970 most of the older Hollywood cinematographers, those who established their careers during the height of the studio system, had retired, and a new, younger group seemed to fill the ranks almost immediately. Some of these new craftsmen had gone to film school, while many had gained experience and honed their craft as camera operators and directors of photography for television series. Among this new cadre were cinematographers now considered to be the best in Hollywood—Vilmos Zsigmond, Laszlo Kovacs, Nestor Almendros, and William A. Fraker. According to Todd McCarthy, Fraker was in many ways “the Dean” of these so-called New Breed cinematographers.

Fraker came from a family of photographers. His grandfather worked in photography and his father had been a noted Hollywood studio photographer during the 1920s. After World War II, Fraker’s grandmother encouraged him to pursue a profession in the photographic arts, so Fraker entered the University of Southern California’s School of Cinema on the G.I. Bill. After paying his dues as a camera operator, camera assistant, and director of photography on various television series, Fraker worked as a cinematographer on his first feature film in 1967. Games, an offbeat drama filmed in less than a month, received some attention at the time for Fraker’s interesting photography.

Since then he has worked on many major American films for a number of prominent directors, including Roman Polanski’s Rosemary’s Baby, Peter Yates’s Bullitt, Milos Forman’s One Flew over the Cuckoo’s Nest, Richard Brooks’s Looking for Mr. Goodbar, and Steven Spielberg’s Close Encounters of the Third Kind and 1941. Though he has never won an Academy Award, Fraker has been nominated several times, including twice for 1941—for both cinematography and special effects, the only time in the history of the Academy that this has occurred.

Though Fraker’s film career has consisted mostly of big-budget, mainstream Hollywood features (no experimental films, documentaries, or exploitation films, and very few low-budget, “small” features), he has worked in a number of genres. His filmography is fairly diverse in that respect, including everything from the musical Western Paint Your Wagon to the horror film Exorcist II: The Heretic to the romantic feminist comedy Baby Boom. Discerning a personal style or specialty is difficult in Fraker’s work because he believes that the cinematographer should make every film look different. The look of the film should be dictated by various aspects of the film itself, according to Fraker, who stated, “I don’t agree with a cinematographer putting his stamp on a picture.” There are many variables to creating that “look,” including the location, the sets, the actors, and, most importantly, the director’s interpretation of the material. Fraker’s approach to cinematography is to understand exactly what a director wants in terms of the visual interpretation of a scene and to use all of his experience and knowledge of lighting, cameras, lenses, cranes, and dollies to make real that vision.

Interestingly, Fraker has directed three films himself. The opportunity to direct arose from his relationship with Lee Marvin on the set of Paint Your Wagon. Marvin requested that Fraker direct his next film, Monte Walsh, a melancholy and gritty Western that emphasized the drudgery and hardships of Western life. Fraker also directed A Reflection of Fear, a moody but stylized murder mystery, and the financial and critical disaster The Legend of the Lone Ranger. According to Fraker, he finds directing an interesting challenge but only “an occasional exhilarating experience,” preferring to remain one of Hollywood’s prominent cinematographers.

In 1993 Fraker appeared before the camera for a 90-minute American Film Institute documentary, Visions of Light: The Art of Cinematography. Along with some of the other great cinematographers of today, Fraker outlines his overall approach to his craft, and illuminates some of his specific technical choices, most notably on Rosemary’s Baby.

—Susan Doll, updated by Denise Delorey

FRANCIS, Freddie

as clapper loader; then camera assistant at British and Dominions and at Pinewood; after military service, cameraman for London Films; 1956—first film as cinematographer, A Hill in Korea; 1962—first film as director, Two and Two Make Six; also TV director. Awards: Academy Award, for Sons and Lovers, 1960, and Glory, 1989. Agent: CCA Personal Management Ltd., 4 Court Lodge, 48 Sloane Square, London SW1W 8AT, England.

Films as Cameraman:

1947 The Macomber Affair (Z. Korda) (2nd unit); Mine Own Executioner (Kimmins); Night Beat (Huth)
1948 The Small Back Room (Powell and Pressburger)
1949 Golden Salamander (Neame)
1950 Gone to Earth (The Wild Heart) (Powell and Pressburger); The Elusive Pimpernel (Powell and Pressburger)
1951 The Tales of Hoffman (Powell and Pressburger); Outcast of the Islands (Reed); Angels One Five (O’Ferrall)
1952 24 Hours of a Woman’s Life (Affair in Monte Carlo) (Saville); Moulin Rouge (Huston)

1953 Rough Shoot (Shoot First) (Parrish); Twice upon a Time (Pressburger); Beat the Devil (Huston)
1954 Monsieur Ripois (Knave of Hearts; Lovers; Happy Lovers) (Clément); Beau Brummell (Bernhardt)
1955 The Sorcerer’s Apprentice (Powell—short)
1956 Moby Dick (Huston)

Films as Cinematographer:

1956 A Hill in Korea (Hell in Korea) (Aymes); Moby Dick (2nd unit); Dry Rot (Elbey) (2nd unit)
1957 Time without Pity (No Time for Pity) (Losey); The Scamp (Rilla)
1958 Next to No Time! (Cornelius); Virgin Island (Jackson); Room at the Top (Clayton)
1959 Battle of the Sexes (Crichton)
1960 Never Take Sweets from a Stranger (Never Take Candy from a Stranger) (Frankel); Sons and Lovers (Cardiff); Saturday Night and Sunday Morning (Reisz)
1961 The Innocents (Clayton); The Horsemasters (Fairchild)
1964 Night Must Fall (Reisz)
1980 The Elephant Man (Lynch)
1981 The French Lieutenant’s Woman (Reisz)
1984 Memed My Hawk (Ustinov); The Jigsaw Man (Young); Dune (Lynch)
1985 Code Name: Emerald (Sanger)
1988 Clara’s Heart (Mulligan)
1989 Brenda Starr (Miller) (co); Dark Tower (Barnett); Glory (Zwick); Her Alibi (Beresford)
1991 Cape Fear (Scorsese); The Man in the Moon (Mulligan)
1992 School Ties (Mandel)
1993 A Life in the Theater (Mosher—for TV)
1994 Princess Caraboo (Austin)
1995 Rainbow (Hoskins)
1999 The Straight Story (Lynch)

Films as Director:

1962 Two and Two Make Six (A Change of Heart; The Girl Swappers); Vengeance (The Brain); Paranoiac
1963 Nightmare
1964 The Evil of Frankenstein; Hysteria; Traitor’s Gate
1965 The Skull; The Psychopath; Dr. Terror’s House of Horrors
1966 The Deadly Bees
1967 They Came from beyond Space; Torture Garden
1968 Dracula Has Risen from the Grave; The Intrepid Mr. Twigg (short) 1969 Mummy, Nunny, Sonny, and Girly
1970 Trog
1971 Gebissen wird nur Nachts—Happening der Vampire (Vampire Happening)
1972 Tales from the Crypt; The Creeping Flesh
1973 Tales that Witness Madness; Crazed
1974 Son of Dracula (Count Downe)
1975 The Ghoul; Legend of the Werewolf
1977 Golden Rendezvous (co)
1985 The Doctor and the Devils
1987 Dark Tower
1989 Tales from the Crypt (series for TV)

Publications

By FRANCIS: articles—

Film (Hanover, New Hampshire), August 1968.
Filmmaking, August and September 1978.
On The Elephant Man in Millimeter (New York), March 1981.
Eyepiece (London), July/August 1982.
Classic Images (Muscatine), October 1992.

Sight & Sound (London), September 1994.

On FRANCIS: books—

On FRANCIS: articles—

Filmmaking, September 1971.
Film Review (London), August 1975.
Mandell, P., on Dune in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), December 1984.
On Glory in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), November 1990.

* * *

One of the world’s most accomplished cameramen, as well as an excellent director of gothic films, Freddie Francis brings a cameraman’s eye and his own uniquely despairing sensibility to his numerous cinematic assignments, and to the many horror films he has directed in his long career.

Francis started at 17 as a clapper boy, rapidly advancing to the position of camera assistant. After service during World War II in The Royal Army Kinematographic Unit, he returned to the industry as a full-fledged camera operator, working on a number of films for maverick British director Michael Powell (The Small Back Room, The Tales of Hoffman) and maverick American director John Huston, including Moulin Rouge, Moby Dick, and Beat the Devil. Francis says his experiences on Moby Dick were what finally convinced him that he had served a long enough apprenticeship as a camera operator. “We [Huston and I] got on very well — so well he wouldn’t let me advance.” Francis was also somewhat miffed that he did not receive the full credit due him on the film, for in addition to doing all the ‘live’ second-unit work for Moby Dick (which included shooting Portuguese fisherman in vulnerable longboats hunting whales with hand-hurled harpoons), he also supervised the special effects sequences in the studio; these involved constructing twenty mini-Mobys built to crunch whaling boat floors as well as bleed and roll dead out in the studio tank doubling for the ocean. “When I finished that film I said, ‘Right, that’s enough; now I want to do my own film as Director of Photography.’” That film was A Hill in Korea, a war picture with a cast that included Robert Shaw, Stephen Boyd, and a young Michael Caine. “The cast was fantastic,” he says. “They were all yet unknown. It would be hard to collect such an excellent group of players today.”

However, when A Hill in Korea came out, the Suez crisis was very much in the news and war seemed imminent; because of this the film did relatively little business at the box office. But, as Francis noted, his work as director of photography got noticed and landed him work on a number of important British films of the late 1950s and early 1960s. “I became a sort of darling of the British New Wave,” he says. During this period, he shot Room at the Top, Saturday Night and Sunday Morning, and The Innocents, establishing himself as one of the most active and innovative British cinematographers. In 1960 he won an Academy Award for his brilliant black-and-white work on Sons and Lovers. It was during this period that the critic Pauline Kael wrote, “I don’t know where this photographer Freddie Francis sprang from. You may recall that in the last year, just about every time a British movie is something to look at, it turns out to be his—in each case with a different director.” Although he received many offers to direct because of his enormous success, he turned them all down because “I was quite happy at that point photographing other people’s films—except that now and then there were some unexciting ones. I thought ‘If I direct, then I can’t stand around criticizing other people’s work. If it’s not exciting, it’ll be my fault.’”

Finally, in 1962, he took the plunge. He credits Michael Powell and John Huston as influencing his approach to directing. “They were both great adventurers, and once they started a film, they went off into the great unknown and enjoyed everything about it,” he says. “They had a cavalier attitude toward the whole thing. [Working with them] you never knew what was going to happen next. It was always a great adventure.” He directed some sequences added to the science-fiction thriller The Day of the Triffids for which he received no screen credit, then made his official bow as a director with the indifferent Two and Two Make Six. “I decided to do a film with a script I didn’t much like. Stupidly, I thought I could make a good movie anyway. But, of course, you can’t. The result was slightly disastrous. So it seemed to me I had to follow that film with a lot of other films very quickly, simply to establish myself as a director, rather than a Director of Photography.” The Brain, a British-German co-production, followed shortly thereafter (the film is yet another version of Donovon’s Brain, which nevertheless strongly benefits from an excellent performance by Bernard Lee and Francis’s atmospheric set-ups), and then Francis received an invitation which would forever change the course of his career. “Tony Hinds, who ran a studio called Hammer Films at that time, is a very close friend of mine, and he was going to do a psychological horror film called Paranoiac, starring a young Oliver Reed. So I did the film, and I loved making it. It was a very happy experience. And then that finished, and Tony said ‘Do another, and do another,’ and the next thing I knew, I was typecast. I had achieved my goal—I had directed a lot of films in a short period of time—but I was embroiled in that genre—the horror genre.” By his own admission, Francis has no particular affinity for gothic cinema, unlike Hammer’s house director, the gifted Terence Fisher, and he soon found he disliked being forced to work on horror films and nothing else.

Not that his films were aesthetically unsuccessful. Paranoiac, Nightmare, Dr. Terror’s House of Horrors, The Skull, and perhaps Torture Garden are all accomplished pieces of work, which Francis feels “visually transcended” their source material. In many ways, he is absolutely right. Francis’s horror films have been discussed at length in numerous books and magazines, the most incisive of which is undoubtedly David Pirie’s excellent book, Heritage of Horror. But Francis himself is reluctant to make claims for his work, or even discuss it at length. By the time of Trog, probably Francis’s worst film as director, he had clearly given up. What marked his early work was a fluid, continually dollying camera, deep compositions, and effective, low-keyed lighting. By Trog, everything is flatly lit, and routinely shot, and the film is obviously the work of a man who no longer cares about what he is doing. Tales from the Crypt (Francis’s most successful film commercially) is slightly better, but still relies on zooms where before Francis had once used the more participatory tracking camera style.

After making two films with his son, Kevin Francis, Francis simply quit directing films, and went back, after a rest, to being a director of photography on David Lynch’s The Elephant Man. Francis liked the script, and the lead, John Hurt (who Francis had worked with in The Ghouls in 1975), but the finished product has many shortcomings stylistically, due mostly to David Lynch’s rather static use of the camera. But it put Francis back in the industry’s eye as a director of photography. He won his second Oscar for his brilliant photography of the Civil War film Glory, which boasts some of the most breathtakingly colorful nighttime battle scenes ever brought to the screen. For director Martin Scorsese, he photographed the thriller Cape Fear (a remake of the 1962 film of the same title), and handled the second unit work in the film’s finale where (shades of Moby Dick) a model boat is convincingly tossed about in a storm created in a studio tank. Working again with David Lynch, he shot Dune and later The Straight Story in 1999.

As a result of the success of The Elephant Man, Francis returned to directing when Mel Brooks, the executive producer of that film, agreed to back The Doctor and the Devils by Dylan Thomas, a project Francis had long wanted to make. Filming began on 17 January 1985. Despite the film’s horrific content, Francis was quite determined to play the horror angle down. While acknowledging grudgingly that there was a similarity in the plot lines of the Thomas screenplay and the famous series of murders of Burke and Hare, he refused to take the matter any further.

Francis does little preplanning of shots before he gets on the set. He walks around the set with the head grip, the director of photography, and the camera operator, and “blocks” the camera setups out in a very informal manner. I was able to watch him doing this on the day before filming began, and it was impressive to watch him set up a complex dolly shot, one which introduces the set and several of the main characters, with more than 150 extras in the background, by coolly strolling about the set and saying, “Right! We start from here, to here, then turn, then end up here. Got it?” And everyone would nod yes, and that was it.

The Doctor and the Devils, unhappily, never received a very wide release, and Francis’s work as a “horror specialist” continues to mitigate against most serious appreciation of his work as a director. This is unfortunate, because at his best, even though Francis seemingly disdains much of his own directorial work, his cinematic sensibility is restrained, melancholic, and altogether believable. The brooding cynicism which pervades the world of his films The Skull, Paranoiac, Hysteria, Nightmare, and others, is uniquely Francis’s own, and by itself his work as a director would be a considerable achievement. But when one figures in his remarkable accomplishments as a director of photography, Francis emerges as a major figure in the history of cinema.

—Wheeler Winston Dixon, updated by John McCarty

FREED, Arthur

Producer and Lyricist. Nationality: American. Born: Arthur Grossman in Charleston, South Carolina, 9 September 1894. Military Service: 1917–19—served during World War I as sergeant. Career: Piano player for music publisher, Chicago; later appeared with the Marx Brothers and Gus Edwards in vaudeville; toured in vaudeville, and began writing songs and special material (first hit song, “I Cried for You,” 1923); 1924—opened The Orange Grove Theatre, Los Angeles, and presented straight and musical plays; 1929–39—lyricist for Two Girls on Broadway; 1936—served during World War I as sergeant. Films as Lyricist:

1929 The Broadway Melody (Beaumont); The Pagan (Van Dyke); Marianne (Leonard); The Hollywood Revue of 1929 (Reisner); Untamed (Conway)

1930 Lord Byron of Broadway (What Price Melody?) (Nigh and Beaumont); Montana Moon (St. Clair); Good News (Grinde); Those Three French Girls (Beaumont); A Lady’s Morals (The Soul Kiss; Jenny Lind) (Franklin)

1933 The Barbarian (A Night in Cairo) (Wood); Peg o’ My Heart (Leonard); Hold Your Man (Wood); Stage Mother (Brabin); College Coach (Football Coach) (Wellman); Going Hollywood (Walsh); Blondie of the Follies (Goulding); Riptide (Goulding); Sadie McKee (Brown); Hollywood Party; Hide-Out (Van Dyke); Student Tour (Reisner)

1935 China Seas (Garnett); A Night at the Opera (Wood); Broadway Melody of 1936 (Del Ruth)

1936 San Francisco (Van Dyke); The Devil Is a Sissy (The Devil Takes the Count) (Van Dyke); After the Thin Man (Van Dyke)

1937 Broadway Melody of 1938 (Del Ruth)

1939 The Ice Follies of 1939 (SchüNZEL)

1940 Two Girls on Broadway (Choose Your Partner) (Simon)

1943 Paranoiac (Nigh and Beaumont); Pagan Love (Beaumont); The Devil Takes the Count (Van Dyke); After the Thin Man (Van Dyke)

1944 The Broadway Melody of 1938 (Del Ruth)

1936 San Francisco (Van Dyke); The Devil Is a Sissy (The Devil Takes the Count) (Van Dyke); After the Thin Man (Van Dyke)

1939 Broadway Melody of 1938 (Del Ruth)

1939 The Ice Follies of 1939 (SchüNZEL)

1940 Two Girls on Broadway (Choose Your Partner) (Simon)

Films as Producer:

1939 The Wizard of Oz (Fleming) (assoc); Babes in Arms (Berkeley) (+ lyrics)

1940 Strike Up the Band (Berkeley) (+ lyrics); Little Nellie Kelly (Taurog) (+ lyrics)

1941 Lady Be Good (McLeod) (+ lyrics); Babes on Broadway (Berkeley)

1942 Panama Hattie (McLeod); For Me and My Gal (Berkeley)

1943 Du Barry Was a Lady (Del Ruth); Best Foot Forward (Buzzell); Girl Crazy (Taurog); Cabin in the Sky (Minnelli)

1944 Meet Me in St. Louis (Minnelli) (+ lyrics, dubbed Leon Ames)

1945 The Clock (Under the Clock) (Minnelli) (+ lyrics, bit ro); Yolanda and the Thief (Minnelli) (+ lyrics); The Harvey Girls (Sidney)

1946 Ziegfeld Follies (Minnelli—produced 1944) (+ lyrics); Till the Clouds Roll By (Whorff)

1947 Summer Holiday (Mamoulian); Good News (Walters) (+ lyrics)

1948 The Pirate (Minnelli); Easter Parade (Walters); Words and Music (Taurog); The Barkleys of Broadway (Walters); Take Me Out to the Ballgame (Everybody’s Cheering) (Berkeley)

1949 Any Number Can Play (LeRoy) (+ lyrics); On the Town (Donen and Kelly)

1950 Annie Get Your Gun (Sidney); Crisis (Brooks); Pagan Love Song (Alton) (+ lyrics); Royal Wedding (Wedding Bells) (Donen)

1951 Show Boat (Sidney); An American in Paris (Minnelli); The Belle of New York (Walters); Singin’ in the Rain (Donen and Kelly)

1953 The Band Wagon (Minnelli)

1954 Brigadoon (Minnelli)

1955 It’s Always Fair Weather (Donen and Kelly); Kismet (Minnelli)

1956 Invitation to the Dance (Kelly)

1957 Silk Stockings (Mamoulian)

1958 Gigi (Minnelli)
1960  Bells Are Ringing (Minnelli); The Subterraneans (MacDougall)
(+ lyrics)
1961  Light in the Piazza (Green)

Publications

On FREED: articles—

National Film Theatre booklet (London), May 1980.
Cinématographe (Paris), May 1984.

* * *

Few producers have been as closely associated with or as instrumental in the development of a specific film genre as Arthur Freed. Freed’s contributions to the Hollywood musical helped shape the look and style that dominated the genre in the 1940s, reaching a peak in the 1950s with such films as Singin’ in the Rain, The Band Wagon, and An American in Paris. Working at MGM with a group that included many of the best directors, performers, songwriters, and technicians of the day, he oversaw the production of films which have become classics of the form and his influence is felt in the image which persists of the American musical.

Freed’s own development as a producer grew naturally out of his early career as a lyricist. Together with his most frequent collaborator, the composer Nacio Herb Brown, Freed wrote dozens of popular songs, including such standards as “Broadway Rhythm,” “Singin’ in the Rain” and “You Are My Lucky Star,” and he continued his work as a songwriter intermittently throughout his years as a producer. It was as a lyricist that Freed had originally come to MGM, but by the late 1930s he had begun urging Louis B. Mayer to allow him to produce. Freed produced musicals which stretched the genre in other directions as well. In 1949 On the Town became the first musical ever shot on location, as the codirectors Gene Kelly and Stanley Donen staged the film’s production numbers on the streets of New York City.
The two films which best reflect the Freed Unit’s influence on the musical both appeared in the early 1950s—Singin’ in the Rain and An American in Paris. Although both star Gene Kelly, they are quite different in style and execution, each in its own way displaying the artistry and breadth of talent characteristic of the films Freed produced. Like On the Town, Singin’ in the Rain was co-directed by Kelly and Stanley Donen, and the film tells its behind-the-scenes Hollywood love story with a lively energy that can encompass the extravagant “Broadway Ballet” number, Donald O’Connor’s comical “Make ‘em Laugh,” and Kelly’s famous rendition of the film’s title song. Boisterous and colorful, Singin’ in the Rain is pure entertainment made in the best traditions of Hollywood movie-making.

An American in Paris, directed by Vincente Minnelli, cast the ballet-trained Leslie Caron opposite Kelly, and the film is a fusion of varying dance styles and elements of French and American culture. The “American in Paris” ballet takes place on a vast set which recalls the styles of several French Impressionist painters as Kelly and Caron mix classical dance with jazz and a touch of Broadway hoofing in one of the most ambitious musical numbers ever filmed. As its producer, Freed received the film’s Academy Award for Best Picture (he would receive his second Oscar for Gigi seven years later). An American in Paris remains an outstanding example of the scope of imagination and talent that marked the work of the Freed Unit.

The musicals produced by Arthur Freed reflect the collaboration of an extraordinary group of gifted individuals, all working under the guiding hand of a man whose instincts and taste set the standard for their achievements, and the films themselves are among the best the genre has to offer. Freed’s influence in shaping the style of the Hollywood musical during its Golden Age remains unsurpassed and the form continues to bear the stamp of his talents.

—Janet Lorenz

FREUND, Karl

Cinematographer and Director. Nationality: German. Born: Königinhof, Bohemia, 16 January 1890; grew up in Berlin. Military Service: 1914—served briefly in Austrian Army. Career: Apprenticed to rubber stamp manufacturer; then projectionist; 1907—first film as photographer, Der Hauptmann von Köpenick; 1908—worked as newsreel cameraman for Pathé; 1910—worked for Sascha-Film, Vienna, and then for Union Templehof Studio, 1912–14, and for Oskar Messtner in Berlin, 1914–19; 1919–26—operated film processing laboratory; 1926–28—production head of Fox-Europa; 1928—formed Movie Colour Ltd. in London; 1929—emigrated to the United States, and worked as cinematographer for Universal, 1930–35, MGM, 1935–47, and Warner Bros., 1947–50; 1932—first film as director, The Mummy; then worked as supervising photographer for Desilu Productions on their TV series I Love Lucy, Our Miss Brooks, December Bride, and other series, 1951–59; also head of Photo Research Corporation, Burbank, California (developed Norwich light meter and TV cameras). Awards: Academy Award for The Good Earth, 1937; Technical Academy Award, 1954. Died: In 1969.

Karl Freund

Films as Cinematographer:

1907  Der Hauptmann von Köpenick; Das Lied von der Glocke
1911  Der Liebling der Frauen; Nachtfalter (Gad); Heisses Blut (Gad) (co); Der fremde Vogel (Gad) (co)
1912  Die Firma heiratet (Wilhelm)
1913  Die Filmprimadonna (Gad); Englefin (Gad)
1914  Zapatas Bande (Gad) (co); Das Kind ruft (Gad) (co); Das Feuer (Gad) (co); Der Hund von Baskerville, part 1 (Meinert); Die ewige Nacht (Gad) (co); Engeleins Hochzeit (Gad) (co); Eine venezianische Nacht (Reinhart)
1915  Vordertreppe und Hintertreppe (Gad) (co); Frau Eva (Arme Eva) (Wiene)
1916  Abseits vom Blück (Biebrach); Gelöste Ketten (Biebrach); Der Mann im Spiegel (Wiene)
1917  Die Ehe der Luise Rohrbach (Biebrach); Die Prinzessin von Neutralien (Biebrach); Gefangene Seele (Biebrach); Bummelstudenten (Biebrach); Christa Hartungen (Biebrach)
1918  Das Geschlecht derer von Ringwall (Biebrach)
1919  Rausch (Lubitsch); Die Arche (Oswald); Die letzten Menschen (Oswald)
1920  Satanas (Murnau); Katharina die Grosse (Schünzel); Der Januskopf (Janus-Faced) (Murnau) (co); Der Golem, wie er in die Welt kam (Wegener) (co); Der Bucklige und die Tänzerin (Murnau); Der verlorene Schatten (Gliese)
1921  *Louise de Lavallière (Burghardt); Der Schwar des Peter Hertatz (Halm); Verlogene Moral (Brandherd; Totenklaus;
During a career that lasted nearly 50 years, cinematographer Karl Freund contributed his artfully innovative camerawork to more than 100 German and American films, including the classic _Metropolis_ and the solid _Key Largo_. Unfortunately, superlative examples of filmmaking are not the sole entries in Freund’s filmography. Numerous forgettable or already forgotten comedies, romances, and musicals are also present, a perhaps inevitable consequence of Freund’s long career. Symptomatic of his commitment to perfection was his refusal to discriminate a “programmer” from a masterpiece, which provided many of the films he lit and shot with their only noteworthy feature: excellent cinematography.

In 1905, when he was 15 years old, Freund quit his apprenticeship with a manufacturer of rubber stamps to work as an assistant projectionist for a Berlin film company. Displaying a prodigious technical inventiveness toward and understanding of lighting and the motion picture camera, Freund graduated within two years from projectionist to cameraman. As one of Germany’s motion picture pioneers, Freund spent his earliest years in film shooting an assortment of material, from shorts and newsreel footage to several of the pioneers, Freund spent his earliest years in film shooting an assortment of material, from shorts and newsreel footage to several of the

Other Films:

1926 _Madam wünscht keine Kinder (Madame Wants No Children)_ (Z. Korda) (pr spvr)

1927 _Berlin/Die Symphonie einer Grossstadt _ (Berlin—Symphony of a Great City) (Ruttman) (co-pr, co-sc); _Die Abenteuer eines Zehnamarksccheinen (Viertel) _ (pr spvr); _Der Sohn der Hagar (Wendhausen) _ (pr spvr)

Publications

By FREUND: articles—

Close-Up (London), January 1929.

Film (Hanover), no. 9, 1965.

Chaplin (Stockholm), no. 1, 1974.

Chaplin (Stockholm), no. 2, 1974.

On FREUND: articles—

Close-Up (London), March 1930.

Deschner, Donald, in Cinema (Beverly Hills, California), Fall 1969.

Luft, Herbert G., in Film Journal, Spring 1971.

Mundy, Robert, in Cinema (London), Summer 1971.

Film Comment (New York), Summer 1972.

Gerely, A., in Film and Ton (Munich), July 1977.

Filme (Berlin), May-June 1981.

American Cinematographer (Hollywood), April 1987.

* * *
actress Asta Nielsen’s films (Nachtfalter, Engelein) and the early efforts of, among others, directors F.W. Murnau (Satana) and Fritz Lang (Die Spinnen).

In the 1920s Freund worked at Ufa, Germany’s great government-supported film studio, where he collaborated with Murnau, Lang, and others on a number of the films that collectively created the golden age of the German cinema, films such as Murnau’s Der letzte Mann and E.A. Dupont’s Variety. For the revolutionary Der letzte Mann, the camera became both narrator and character, relating and interpreting the story of the demoted doorman so lucidly that title cards were superfluous. Freund and scriptwriter Carl Mayer enriched the simple plot of Murnau’s film with artistically purposeful camera movement and lighting that set the expressionistic sobriety of the film proper against the high-key clarity of its controversial epilogue.

Between 1926 and 1928 Freund served as production head of Fox-Europa and participated in creating the sole experimental film of his career, Walter Ruttmann’s Berlin—Symphony of a Great City, for which Freund developed a high-speed film stock that made shooting outside at night without artificial lighting as feasible as shooting during the daytime. In 1929, Freund’s experiments with a color process for 35mm film took him first to New York and then to Hollywood where, following the failure of the process, he joined Universal as a cinematographer.

One of Freund’s earliest assignments at Universal was to shoot Lewis Milestone’s All Quiet on the Western Front (whether Freund devised and executed the butterfly scene that ends the film remains an unsettled issue). Freund also shot two horror films for Universal, Tod Browning’s Dracula and Robert Florey’s Murders in the Rue Morgue, the perfect showcase for Freund’s abilities with chiaroscuro lighting. In 1933, Universal assigned Freund to direct his first motion picture, The Mummy. He would direct six more films at Universal before his contract ended in 1935.

Shortly after moving to MGM that same year, Freund directed his final picture, the macabre Mad Love, a remake of Robert Wiene’s Orlacs Hände. In 1937, Freund received an Academy Award for the exceptional camerawork and special effects of The Good Earth. Other projects that occupied him during his dozen years with MGM were Rouben Mamoulian’s Golden Boy, on which Freund collaborated with cinematographer Nicholas Musaraca; his first color film, Blossoms in the Dust; and a string of Spencer Tracy’s films (Tortilla Flat, A Guy Named Joe, The Painted Woman). While under contract to MGM, Freund also established the Photo Research Corporation in Burbank, where he developed a highly successful incident exposure meter.

Filming John Huston’s Key Largo was the highlight of Freund’s three years with Warner Bros. (1947–50). Although Freund is never named in James Agee’s essay on Huston, “‘Undirectable Director,’” Agee does comment on the rightness of the camerawork in Key Largo: “The lighting is stickily fungoid. The camera is sneakily ‘personal’; working close and in almost continuous motion, it enlarges the ambiguous suspensefulness of almost every human move.”

In the summer of 1951, Freund was directing his Photo Research Corporation when Lucille Ball, with whom he had worked at MGM, contacted him about the new television series that she and Desi Arnaz wanted to film live with three simultaneously operating 35mm motion picture cameras, a then relatively unprecedented and difficult approach. Freund joined the staff of the I Love Lucy show as director of photography, inventing an overhead lighting system that was responsible for the exceptional quality of the program’s images. Freund supervised the photography of more than 400 episodes of I Love Lucy before resigning from the series in 1956; he retired from television altogether three years later. In the final decade of his life, Freund presided over Photo Research, continuing his efforts to improve the machinery of his art.

—Nancy Jane Johnston

FRIEDHOFER, Hugo

Films as Orchestrator or Musical Director:

1929 Sunny Side Up (Butler); Happy Days (Stoloff); Seven Faces (Viertel)
1930 The Golden Calf (Webb); Scotland Yard (Howard); The Big Trail (Walsh); A Devil with Women (Cummings); The Dancers (Sprague); Just Imagine (Butler); The Princess and the Plumber (Korda); Men on Call (Blystone); The Man Who Came Back (Walsh)
1931 Always Goodbye (Menzies and MacKenna); Skyline (Taylor); Daddy Long Legs (Santell); Transatlantic (Howard); The Spider (Menzies and MacKenna); Heartbreak (Werker); The Yellow Ticket (Walsh)
1932 Devil’s Lottery (Taylor); Careless Lady (MacKenna); Amateur Daddy (Blystone); The Woman in Room 13 (H. King); The Trial of Vivienne Ware (Howard); Almost Married (Menzies); Mystery Ranch (Howard); Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm (Santell); A Passport to Hell (Lloyd); The First Year (Howard); The Painted Woman (Blystone); Sherlock Holmes (Howard); Second Hand Wife (MacFadden)
1933 The Face in the Sky (Lachman); Dangerously Yours (Tuttle); Broadway Bad (Lanfied); Bondage (Santell); Zoo in Budapest (Lee); It’s Great to Be Alive (Werker); My Lips Betray (Blystone); The Good Companions (Saville); As Husbands Go (MacFadden)
1934 Orient Express (Martin); Coming Out Party (Blystone); George White’s Scandals (Freeland); Now I’ll Tell (Burke); Change of Heart (Blystone); The World Moves On (Ford); Servant’s Entrance (Lloyd)
1935 The Little Colonel (Butler); Orchids to You (Seiter); George White’s 1935 Scandals (White); Curly Top (Cummings); Dante’s Inferno (Lachman); Here’s to Romance (Green); Way Down East (H. King); Last of the Pagans (Thorpe); Captain Blood (Curtiz)
1936
Rose of the Rancho (Gering); The Green Pastures (Connelly and Keighley); The Prisoner of Shark Island (Ford); The Trail of the Lonesome Pine (Hathaway); Sins of Man (Brower and Ratoff); White Fang (Butler) (co); The Great O'Malley (Dieterle); The Charge of the Light Brigade (Curtiz); God's Country and the Woman (Keighley)

1937
Green Light (Borzage); Kid Galahad (Curtiz); The Prince and the Pauper (Keighley) (co); The Life of Emile Zola (Dieterle); Another Dawn (Dieterle) (co); Swing Your Lady (Enright)

1938
The Adventures of Robin Hood (Curtiz and Keighley) (co); Gold Is Where You Find It (Curtiz); Jeezebel (Wyler); Crime School (Seiler) (co); Four Daughters (Curtiz); Racket Busters (Bacon); Valley of the Giants (Keighley); The Sisters (Litvak); Angels with Dirty Faces (Curtiz); The Dawn Patrol (Goulding)

1939
Made for Each Other (Cromwell); The Oklahoma Kid (Ba- con) (co); Dodge City (Curtiz); Dark Victory (Goulding); The Old Maid (Goulding); Juarez (Dieterle); You Can't Get Away with Murder (Seiler) (co); The Private Lives of Elizabeth and Essex (Curtiz) (co); Gone with the Wind (Fleming) (co)

1940
Dr. Ehrlich's Magic Bullet (Dieterle); All This, and Heaven Too (Litvak); Virginia City (Curtiz); The Fighting 69th (Keighley); City for Conquest (Litvak); The Sea Hawk (Curtiz) (co); The Mark of Zorro (Mamoulian); The Letter (Wyler); Santa Fe Trail (Curtiz)

1941
The Sea Wolf (Curtiz); The Bride Came C.O.D. (Keighley); Dive Bomber (Curtiz); Sergeant York (Curtiz); One Foot in Heaven (Rapper); The Gay Parisian (short)

1942
In This Our Life (Huston); Prelude to War (Capra)—doc; Desperate Journey (Walsh); Now, Voyager (Rapper); Kings Row (Wood)

1943
Casablanca (Curtiz); The Constant Nymph (Goulding); Wintertime (Brahm); Watch on the Rhine (Shumlin); The Gang's All Here (Berkley)

1944
The Woman in the Window (F. Lang); Four Jills in a Jeep (Seiter) (co); Arsenic and Old Lace (Capra); Between Two Worlds (Blett)

1945
Along Came Jones (Heisler); Mildred Pierce (Curtiz); Devotion (Bernhardt—produced 1943)

1946
Cock and Dagger (F. Lang); A Stolen Life (Bernhardt); Of Human Bondage (Goulding)

1947
A Song Is Born (Hawks); The Man I Love (Walsh); The Beast with Five Fingers (Florey); Cheyenne (Walsh); Escape Me Never (Godfrey)

1954
Deep in My Heart (Donen)

1955
The Greatest Story Ever Told (Stevens)

Films as Composer:

1938
The Adventures of Marco Polo (Mayo); Topper Takes a Trip (McLeod)

1943
China Girl (Hathaway); Chemnicks (L. King); They Came to Blow Up America (School for Sabotage) (Ludwig); Paris after Dark (Moguy)

1944
The Lodger (Brahm); Lifeboat (Hitchcock); Roger Tuohy, Gangster (Florey); Home in Indiana (Hathaway); Wing and a Prayer (Hathaway)

1945
The Corn Is Green (Rapper); Brewster's Millions (Dwan); Getting Gertie's Garter (Dwan)

1946
The Bandit of Sherwood Forest (G. Sherman and Levin); Gilda (Vidor) (co); So Dark the Night (Lewis); The Best Years of Our Lives (Wyler)

1947
Body and Soul (Rossen); Wild Harvest (Garnett); The Bishop's Wife (Koster); The Swordsman (Lewis)

1948
Adventures of Casanova (Gavaldon); Black Bart (G. Sherman) (co); Sealed Verdict (Allen); Joan of Arc (Fleming); Enchantment (Reis)

1949
Bride of Vengeance (Leisen); Roseanna McCoy (Reis) (co)

1950
Guilty of Treason (Feist); Three Came Home (Negulesco); Captain Carey, U.S.A. (After Midnight) (Leisen); No Man of Her Own (Leisen); Broken Arrow (Daves); Edge of Doom (Robson); Two Flats West (Wise); The Sound of Fury (Try and Get Me) (Endfield)

1951
Queen for a Day (Lubin); Ace in the Hole (The Big Carnival) (Wilder)

1952
The San Francisco Story (Parrish) (co); Rancho Notorious (F. Lang); The Marrying Kind (Cukor); The Outcasts of Poker Flat (Newman); Lydia Bailey (Negulesco); Just for You (Nugent); Above and Beyond (Frank and Panama); “The Secret Sharer” and “The Bride Comes to Yellow Sky” eps. of Face to Face (Brahm and Windust)

1953
Plunder of the Sun (Farrow) (co); Thunder in the East (C. Vidor); Island in the Sky (Wellman); Hondo (Farrow) (co)

1954
Vera Cruz (Aldrich)

1955
White Feather (Webb); Violent Saturday (Fleischer); Soldier of Fortune (Dmytryk); Seven Cities of Gold (Webb); The Rains of Ranchipur (Negulesco)

1956
The Harder They Fall (Robson); Between Heaven and Hell (Fleischer); The Revolt of Mamie Stover (Walsh)

1957
Oh, Men! Oh, Women! (Mockridge); Boy on a Dolphin (Negulesco); An Affair to Remember (McCary); The San Also Rises (H. King)

1958
The Young Lions (Dmytryk); The Bravados (H. King) (co); The Barbarian and the Geisha (Huston); In Love and War (Dunne)

1959
Woman Obsessed (Hathaway); This Earth Is Mine (H. King); The Blue Angel (Dmytryk); Never So Few (J. Sturges)

1960
One Eyed Jacks (Brando)

1961
Homicidal (Castle)

1962
Geronimo (Laven); Beauty and the Beast (Cahn)

1964
The Secret Invasion (Corman)

1969
The Over-the-Hill Gang (Harbrough)

1971
Von Richtofen and Brown (The Red Baron) (Corman)

1973
Private Parts (Bartel)

1975
A Walk in the Forest (Hood)—short

1977
The Companion (Hood)

Publications

By FRIEDHOFER: articles—

Interview with Elmer Bernstein, in Film Music Notebook (Calabasas, California), Fall 1974.
American Film (Washington, D.C.), June 1977.
In Film Score, edited by Tony Thomas, South Brunswick, New Jersey, 1979.
On FRIEDHOFER: books—

On FRIEDHOFER: articles—

Sternfield, Frederick W., in Musical Quarterly (London), October 1947.
Morton, Lawrence, in Quarterly of Film, Radio, and Television (Berkeley, California), Winter 1951.
Bertolina, Gian Carlo, in Rivista del Cinematografo (Rome), June-August 1982.

* * *

There was always a disparity between Hugo Friedhofer’s high regard among other film composers and his lack of public identity. With no interest in publicity or promotion, he was considered by his colleagues as the master of film composition and a man to whom they turned for advice. Friedhofer arrived in Hollywood in 1929 and became a witness, and participant, in the entire development of film scoring. He wrote more than 70 scores, but he was also a collaborator, adapter, arranger, orchestrator and utility composer on many others. Segments of scores, even main titles, of films attributed to other composers were actually written by Friedhofer. As an orchestrator he had few peers; in fact, he was so highly regarded in that capacity that it became necessary for him to end that aspect of his career in order to proceed as a composer. Fifteen of Erich Korngold’s scores were orchestrated by Friedhofer, as were more than 50 by Max Steiner.

Friedhofer was the son of a cellist, who encouraged Hugo to take up the instrument. He was employed as a cellist with small groups and hired for a two-year period with the People’s Orchestra of San Francisco. In 1925 he joined the orchestra of the Granada, a leading movie theatre, and gradually became more interested in making arrangements for film accompaniment than performing. The coming of sound caused him to lose this livelihood, but a violinist friend, George Lipscultz, had been contracted as a music director at the Fox Studios in Los Angeles and he offered Friedhofer a job as an arranger.

His first assignment was Sunny Side Up, followed by a continual stream of such movies. He also worked for Alfred Newman, who gave Friedhofer his first chance to write an original score, The Adventures of Marco Polo. It was not, however, until 1943 that he was able to break away from his constant chores as an orchestrator, when Newman hired him as a composer at 20th Century-Fox. Two years later he began freelancing, and in 1946 he won an Oscar for what is considered a landmark in American film music, The Best Years of Our Lives. His other nominated scores included The Woman in the Window, The Bishop’s Wife, Joan of Arc, Above and Beyond, Boy on a Dolphin, and The Young Lions. Others of his scores held in high regard are Broken Arrow, Vera Cruz, The Sun Also Rises, and One Eyed Jacks.

Of his craft, Friedhofer said, “It is not important for the audience to be aware of the technique by which music affects them, but affect them it must. Film music is absorbed, you might say, through the pores. But the listener should be aware, even subliminally, of continuity, of a certain binder that winds through the film experience. A score must relate, it must integrate.”

—Tony Thomas

FURTHMAN, Jules

Films as Writer (used pseudonym Stephen Fox, 1918–20):

1915 Steady Company (De Grasse—short) (story); Bound on the Wheel (De Grasse—short); Mountain Justice (De Grasse—short) (story); Chasing the Limited (McRae—short) (story); A Fiery Introduction (Giblyn—short) (story); Little Blonde in Black (Leonard—short) (story); Quits (De Grasse—short) (story)

1917 The Frame-Up (Sloman); Souls in Pawn (H. King)

1918 The Camouflage Kiss (Millarde); More Trouble (Warde); A Japanese Nightingale (Fitzmaurice); All the World to Nothing (H. King); The Mantle of Charity (Sloman); Hobbs in a Hurry (H. King); Wives and Other Wives (Ingraham); When A Man Rides Alone (H. King)

1919 Where the West Begins (H. King); Brass Buttons (H. King); Some Liars (H. King); A Sporting Chance (H. King) (story); This Hero Stuff (H. King) (story); Six Feet Four (H. King); Victory (Tournier); The Lincoln Highwayman (Flynn) (adaptation)

1920 The Valley of Tomorrow (Flynn) (story); Treasure Island (Tournier); Would You Forgive? (Dunlap); Leave It to Me (Flynn); The Twins of Suffering Creek (Dunlap); A Sister to Salome (LeSaint); The White Circle (Tournier) (co-adaptation); The Man Who Dared (Flynn); The Skywayman (Hogan); The Great Redeemer (Brown) (co-adaptation); The Texan (Reynolds); The Iron Rider (Dunlap); The Land of Jazz (co-story, + d)

1921 The Cheater Reformed (Dunlap); The Big Punch (Ford); High Gear Jeffrey (Sloman); Singing River (Giblyn); The Last Trail (Flynn); The Roof Tree (Dillon); The Blushing Bride (+ d); Colorado Pluck (Colorado Jim) (+ d)

1922 Gleam O’Dawn (Dillon); The Ragged Heiress (Beaumont); Arabian Love (Storm); The Yellow Stain (Dillon); Strange Idols (Durning); Calvert’s Valley (Calvert’s Folly) (Dillon); The Love Gambler (Franz); A California Romance (Storm) (story); Pawnee Ticker 210 (Dunlap)

1923 Lovebound (Otto); St. Elmo (St. Elmo Murray) (Storm); North of Hudson Bay (North of the Yukon) (Ford); The Acquittal (Brown); Condemned (Rosson)

1924 Try and Get It (Tate); Call of the Mate (Neitz)

1925 Sackcloth and Scarlet (H. King); Any Woman (H. King); Before Midnight (Adolfi); Big Pal (Adolfi)

1926 The Wise Guy (Into the Light) (Lloyd) (story); You’d Be Surprised (Rosson); Hotel Imperial (Stiller)

1927 Casey at the Bat (Brice); Fashions for Women (Arzner) (co-adaptation); The Way of All Flesh (Fleming); Barbed Wire (Lee); City Gone Wild (Craze); Underworld (von Sternberg)

1928 The Dragnet (von Sternberg); The Docks of New York (von Sternberg)

1929 Abie’s Irish Rose (Fleming); The Case of Lena Smith (von Sternberg); Thunderbolt (von Sternberg); New York Nights (Milestone)

1930 Common Clay (Fleming); Del mismo barro (Howard); Ladron de amor (Cuando el amor rie) (Howard and Scully); Renegades (Fleming); Morocco (von Sternberg)

1931 Body and Soul (Santell); Merely Mary Ann (H. King); The Yellow Ticket (The Yellow Passport) (Walsh); Over the Hill (H. King)

1932 Shanghai Express (von Sternberg); Blonde Venus (von Sternberg)

1933 The Girl in 419 (Sommes and Hall) (story); Bombshell (Blonde Bombshell) (Fleming)

1935 China Seas (Garnett); Mutiny on the Bounty (Lloyd)

1936 Come and Get It! (Hawks and Wyler)

1938 Spawn of the North (Hathaway)

1939 Only Angels Have Wings (Hawks)

1940 The Way of All Flesh (L. King) (co-story)

1941 The Shanghai Gesture (von Sternberg)

1943 The Outlaw (Hughes)

1944 To Have and Have Not (Hawks)

1946 The Big Sleep (Hawks)

1947 Moss Rose (Ratoff); Nightmare Alley (Goulding)

1950 Pretty Baby (Windust) (co-story)

1951 Peking Express (Dieterle) (adaptation)

1957 Jet Pilot (von Sternberg) (+ pr)

1958 Río Bravo (Hawks); Girl on the Subway (Rich) (co-story)

Publications

By FURTHMAN: books—

On FURTHMAN: articles—

National Film Theatre booklet (London), April 1984.

* * *

Jules Furthman’s output of film stories and scripts numbers something over one hundred projects, most of which were silent films that unfortunately no longer exist. Because so few of his early films are extant, Furthman’s reputation as a screenwriter is somewhat unfairly determined by his later work in sound movies. His reputation is further restricted by the fact that he wrote for two of Hollywood’s most famous directors, Howard Hawks and Josef von Sternberg, and their preeminence as moviemakers has greatly overshadowed Furthman’s contribution to their collective projects.

Furthman began writing for films in 1915, and for the next dozen years he supplied stories and screenplays and occasionally dialogue titles for scores of silent movies, most of them westerns and run-of-the-mill romances and adventure films. His first major break came when he and his brother were involved (without credit) in writing the script for Josef von Sternberg’s Underworld, a collaboration which continued on von Sternberg’s next movie, The Dragnet, and on Thunderbolt which was filmed in 1929. Jules also wrote solo two additional von Sternberg projects, The Docks of New York and The Case of Lena Smith. All of these early von Sternberg films deal with the lower classes, often criminals, who eke out an existence in the “underworld” of American society. They most often focus on men and women who have endured hard lives but remain capable of warmth and love.

The second half of Furthman’s collaboration with von Sternberg began after the filming of The Blue Angel in Germany when the director brought the star, Marlene Dietrich, back to America with him. Furthman was to script three of the six films von Sternberg and Dietrich made together in Hollywood: Morocco, Shanghai Express, and Blonde Venus. The first two were adventure films in which the character played by Dietrich, although used and abandoned by the central male character, followed him nevertheless into the dangers of the future. The third film also dealt with a self-sacrificing woman who falls from respectability to prostitution in order to finance an operation for her scientist husband, and after several plot twists is reintegrated back into the rather smug world of her family and husband. Although Dietrich became the focus of these films, as she was of von Sternberg’s obsession, the scripts Furthman wrote remain remarkably unified. All of the scripts involve the discrepancy between classes and how traditional notions of morality determine such differences. In all cases the good/bad woman proves to be worthy of admiration because of her self-sacrificing nature and because of the basic purity of heart which she has retained although her life has been subjected to extremes of poverty and vice.

By the early 1930s Furthman was working at MGM, where he remained throughout the decade except when he was loaned out for projects at other studios. He won his only Academy Award nomination during this period for his work on the adaptation of Mutiny on the Bounty in 1935. In 1936 Furthman coauthored a script of Edna Ferber’s Come and Get It! for Howard Hawks and William Wyler, which began the screenwriter’s most memorable collaboration with a director. In 1939 Furthman again worked for Hawks and wrote Only Angels Have Wings, the first of their three major collaborations. Only Angels Have Wings was based loosely on Hawks’s experience flying in South America and starred Jean Arthur and Cary Grant. It is one of the earliest of Hawks’s adventure films in which a newcomer is initiated into a smaller group of individuals who are facing some sort of danger. Furthman repeated the situation in To Have and Have Not, a film he cowrote with William Faulkner based on Ernest Hemingway’s novel. This plot format was repeated one more time by Furthman in his final script for Hawks, and as it turned out, of his career, when he wrote Rio Bravo, a western starring John Wayne, which also has an acknowledged relationship to the earlier von Sternberg film, Underworld.

In between working for Hawks, Furthman wrote one more film for von Sternberg, The Shanghai Gesture, a melodrama set in a brothel; and he also scripted Howard Hughes’s notorious film, The Outlaw. Furthman also adapted Raymond Chandler’s The Big Sleep for Hawks, a successful vehicle for Humphrey Bogart and Lauren Bacall who worked so well together in To Have and Have Not. In all of these projects Furthman proved himself an adaptable and professional craftsman.

Unlike some of his colleagues, Jules Furthman has proved a difficult artist to categorize. Some critics have characterized him as the perfect Hollywood writer, self-effacing and undistinctive, one who could grind out dialogue and scripts to order; adventures, melodrama, love stories, westerns, it did not make any difference, Furthman could do them with efficiency and speed. Other film scholars have isolated what they describe as Furthman’s distinctive talents which bridge various acting styles and directors to produce individual characterization and dialogue. It is too early for any sort of final judgment on Furthman’s place in the Hollywood pantheon, but the controversy over his worth as an artist has stirred a healthy debate about the place of the screenwriter in the collaborative effort of film.

—Charles L. P. Silet
GALEEN, Henrik

Writer. Nationality: Danish (or Belgian, Czech, or Dutch). Born: Denmark (Belgium, Czechoslovakia, and the Netherlands are also given in various sources), 1882; given name also spelled Henryk and Heinrich. Career: Journalist (?), then actor; 1906—assistant to Max Reinhardt at Deutsches Theater, Berlin; later acted in Switzerland, England, and France; film actor as early as 1910; 1914—first film as writer and codirector, Der Golem; 1933—emigrated to the United States, then disappeared from view. Died: In 1949.

Films as Writer:

1914 Der Golem (The Golem) (+ co-d, ro—short)
1919 Die beiden Gatten der Frau Ruth (Biebrach—short); Die rollende Kugel (Biebrach); Peter Schlemihl (Rye) (+ ro)
1920 Der Golem, wie er in die Welt kam (The Golem) (Wegener); Der verbotene Weg (+ d); Judith Trachtenberg (+ d)
1921 Die geliebte Roswolskys (Basch); Nosferatu: Eine Symphonie des Grauens (Nosferatu the Vampire) (Murnau)
1923 Stadt in Sicht (+ d)
1924 Die Liebesbriefe der Baronin von S. (+ d); Auf gefährlichen Spuren (Verwehte Spuren) (Piel) (+ ro); Das Wachsfigurenkabinett (Waxworks) (Leni)
1925 Das Fräulein vom Amt (Liebe und Telefon) (Schwarz); Zigano, der Brigant vom Monte Diavolo (Zigano) (Piel) (+ ro)
1926 Der Student von Prag (The Student of Prague); The Man Who Cheated Life (+ d); Achtung Harry! Augen auf! (Sechs Wochen unter den Apachen) (Piel)
1927 Alraune (Mandrake; Unholy Love; A Daughter of Destiny) (+ d); Sein grösster Bluff (Er oder ich) (Piel)
1928 Die Dame mit der Maske (Thiele)
1931 Schatten der Unterwelt (Piel)

Other Films:

1913 Der Student von Prag (Rye) (asst d)
1923 Das Haus ohne Lachen (ro)
1929 After the Verdict (d)
1933 Salon Dora Green (Die Falle) (d)

Publications

By GALEEN: books—

Das Wachsfigurenkabinett (Drehbuch von Henrik Galeen zu Paul Lenis Film von 1923), Munchen, 1994.

On GALEEN: article—

Filmkultur, no. 12, January 1993.

* * *

Henrik Galeen, who was possibly of Danish, Dutch or Czech origin, became an actor in the early German theatre and (from 1910) in the German cinema. He was very soon to widen his career in film and establish himself both as a screenwriter and director of some importance, especially in the development of the Expressionist movement during the 1920s. As Lotte Eisner, in her invaluable book on the German Expressionist film, The Haunted Screen, has pointed out, Expressionist stylization in the art direction for fantasy and horror subjects actually preceded by some years its notable popularization in The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari of 1919; it appeared for example in the earliest version of The Student of Prague, directed by Stellan Rye in 1913, in which the actor-director Paul Wegener starred. The following year Wegener made his early version of the mythological film, The Golem, also employing a pioneer form of the Expressionist style in order to establish the medieval form of magic of this strange Jewish legend. He was assisted by Galeen as both scriptwriter and director, and Galeen also acted in the film.

After this Galeen either directed, codirected, or wrote a number of silent films (Peter Schlemihl, Judith Trachtenberg), including coscripting another (1920) version of The Golem, directed by Wegener, who also played the title role. Among Galeen’s greatest contributions to German cinema was the script for Nosferatu the Vampire, directed by one of Germany’s most distinguished filmmakers, F.W. Murnau. Murnau’s working script survives, and is the subject of detailed comment and generous quotation by Lotte Eisner in her book Murnau. Galeen’s script was written in the Expressionist style much resembling blank verse established by Carl Mayer, who was in process of becoming Germany’s outstanding scriptwriter for silent film; and the talents of Galeen and Murnau fused in this, still one of the most effective of the period’s German ‘haunted’ films. Galeen went on to write and direct more routine films (Stadt in Sicht, Die Liebesbriefe der Baromin von S.) before scripting another influential film in the Expressionist style, Waxworks, which Paul Leni directed, and which Siegfried Kracauer points out in his book From Caligari to Hitler as developing further the theme of tyranny in all its varied forms which Galeen had originated in Nosferatu. The film is a three-part feature fantasizing the power-crazed ‘tyrants’ Harun-al-Raschid, Ivan the Terrible, and Jack the Ripper. In 1926 he directed and coscripted a later version of The Student of Prague starring Conrad Veidt and Werner Krauss, again one of the most effective of Germany’s silent ‘haunted’ films, with emphasis on the psychology of Baldwin (Veidt) in his struggle with his doppelgänger, or alter ego, revealed as a hidden aspect of his own, individual psyche, and displaying Galeen’s special skill in handling both fantasy and horror. Alraune (which Galeen coscripted and directed) followed, a study of a destructive femme fatale (Brigitte Helm), a woman created by artificial insemination as the child of a prostitute and a criminal who had been hanged.

Galeen bridged the silent and early sound film periods with less interesting work, coming to Britain for a short while, where he directed After the Verdict in 1929, a film scripted by Alma Reville, made during the difficult changeover from silent to sound film technique. He left Germany for the U.S. in 1933, when Hitler came to power, but made no films there. There are several references to his collaboration with Siegfried Kracauer on From Caligari to Hitler, but following this there appears to be no record of his activities.

—Roger Manvell

GARMES, Lee

Films as Cameraman:

1918 The Hope Chest (Clifton)
1919 Chicken à la King (short); I’ll Get Him Yet (Clifton); Nugget Nell (Clifton); Nobody Home (Clifton)
1921 Sweet Cookie (Schlank—short)
1928 The Pacemaker
1929 His Captive Woman
1930 Lillies of the Field
1931 The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come (Santell); The Yellow Lily (Z. Korda); The Barker (Fitzmaurice); Waterfront (Seiter)
1932 Shanghai Express (von Sternberg); Kiss Me Again (The Toast of the Legion) (Seiter) (co); City Streets (Mamoulian); An American Tragedy (von Sternberg); Confessions of a Co-ed (Her Dilemma) (Burton and Murphy)
1933 Shanghai Express (von Sternberg); Scarface (Hawks) (co); Smilin’ Through (Franklin); Strange Interlude (Strange Interval) (Leonard); Call Her Savage (Dillon)
1934 The Face in the Sky (Lachman); Zoo in Budapest (Lee); My Lips Betray (Blystone); Shanghai Madness (Blystone); I Am Suzanne (Lee)
1935 George White’s Scandals (White, Freeland, and Lachman); Crime without Passion (Hecht and MacArthur) (+ assoc d)
1936 Once in a Blue Moon (Hecht and MacArthur) (+ assoc d); The Scoundrel (Hecht and MacArthur) (+ assoc d)
1937 None Shall Escape (De Toth); Since You Went Away (Cromwell) (co); Guest in the House (Brahm)
1938 Paris Underground (Madame Pimpernel) (Ratoff); Love Letters (Dieterle)
1939 Spectre of the Rose (+ co-pr + co-d); Duel in the Sun (K. Vidor) (co); Young Widow (Marin); The Searching Wind (Dieterle)
1940 The Secret Life of Walter Mitty (McLeod); Nightmare Alley (Goulding); The Paradine Case (Hitchcock)
1941 Caught (Ophuls)
1942 Roseanna McCoy (Reis); The Fighting Kentuckian (Waggener); My Foolish Heart (Robson); Our Very Own (Miller)
1943 My Friend Irma Goes West (Walker)
1944 Actors and Sin (+ co-d); That’s My Boy (Walker); Detective Story (Wyler); Saturday’s Hero (Idols in the Dust) (Miller); Thunder in the East (C. Vidor)
1945 The Captive City (Wise); The Lusty Men (Ray)
1946 Outlaw Territory (Hannah Lee) (+ co-pr + co-d)
1947 Abdullah the Great (Abdullah’s Harem) (Ratoff)
1948 Land of the Pharaohs (Hawks) (co); The Desperate Hours (Wyler); Man with the Gun (The Trouble Shooter) (Wilson)
1949 The Bottom of the Bottle (Beyond the River) (Hathaway); D-Day, the Sixth of June (Koster); The Sharkfighters (Hopper); The Big Boodle (Night in Havana) (Wilson)
1950 Never Love a Stranger (Stevens)
1951 The Big Fisherman (Borzage); Happy Anniversary (Miller)
1952 Misty (Clark)
1953 Ernest Hemingway’s Adventures of a Young Man (Ritt); Ten Girls Ago (Daniels)
1954 Lady in a Cage (Grauman)
1955 A Big Hand for the Little Lady (Big Deal at Dodge City) (Cook)
1956 How to Save a Marriage and Ruin Your Life (Cook)
1957 Why? (Stoloff)

Other Films:

1934 The Nephew of Paris (d—short)
1937 The Sky’s the Limit (co-d); Dreaming Lips (co-d); The Lilac Domino (Zelnik) (assoc pr)
1940 Beyond Tomorrow (Sutherland) (pr)

Publications

By GARMES: articles—

Sight and Sound (London), Autumn 1967.
Lee Garmes admitted to having been strongly influenced by Rembrandt. Like the Dutch painter, the director used north light by lighting the set from an opening facing north. He desired to achieve a low-key light, with lots of deep shadows and a lack of strong headlamps. Critics have referred to his light as “painterly.” Most details are omitted; only significant elements of the scene and actors are highlighted. In The Garden of Allah Garmes draws upon the north-light effect, which had first been developed by John F. Seitz. In the courtroom scene in An American Tragedy most of the light comes from a window facing north.

These stylistic traits date from influences gained in Garmes’s silent-film work. From working with John Leezer, he learned to filter out unwanted detail by means of gauze over the lens. Near the end of the First World War, Garmes got a hack job filming slapstick comedies for Gale Henry. The films’ budgets were so low that the cameramen had no lights and used an open stage with reflectors that caught and directed the sunlight. In The Grand Duchess and the Waiter Garmes and the director Mal St. Clair sought to achieve a subtly varying grisaille effect by lighting and by creating sets painted in different shades of grey. In The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come Garmes completely replaced the arc with Mazda lights and lead-sheet reflectors. Morocco, Garmes’s first masterpiece, evoked North Africa with a torrid mix of sun and shadows, created by covering the “streets” with lattice-work and filming at high noon. Garmes filmed Marlene Dietrich with the north-light effect—his trademark, and hers from then on. He further added to the Dietrich image by lighting her in a low key and filming her in the misty atmosphere of Shanghai Express. In Zoo in Budapest Garmes created a verdant, parklike effect by placing lacy plants in front of the camera—they appear as a hazy blur.

Even when working with color, he always strove for a soft effect and a certain vagueness. He worked on the opening portions of Gone with the Wind, and sought a soft-toned color; however, David O. Selznick took Garmes off the film because the producer preferred harsh, picture-postcard colors. Garmes claims credit for planning the Atlanta railway-yard shot; but so do Val Lewton and others.

Of his later works, Garmes felt that his best work was The Big Fisherman, but perhaps a more interesting piece, cinematographically speaking, is his work on How to Save a Marriage, where he achieves a subtle form of expressionistic lighting varied to convey the moods of the protagonist.

—Rodney Farnsworth

GAUDIO, Tony

Cinematographer. Nationality: Italian. Born: Gaetano Antonio Gaudio in Cosenza, 1885. Education: Attended an art school, Rome. Family: Brother of the cinematographer Eugene Gaudio. Career: Assistant to his father and elder brother, portrait photographers; 1903–06—photographed hundreds of short subjects for Italian film companies.
(first title: Napoleon Crossing the Alps); 1906–08—made “song slides” for Al Simpson, New York; 1908—worked in Vitagraph laboratories, New York, then supervised construction of Laemmle laboratories, New York; 1910–12—chief of cinematographers at Laemmle’s Imp Company; then worked for Biograph and other companies; 1922—invented the Mitchell camera finder; also invented the camera focusing microscope; 1923–24—President, American Society of Cinematographers; 1930–43—at Warner Bros.

Award: Academy Award for Anthony Adverse, 1936. Died: In 1951.

Films as Cinematographer:

1903 Napoleon Crossing the Alps
1908 Madame Nicotine
1910 Submarine
1911 Pictureland; Their First Misunderstanding (T. Ince and Tucker); The Dream (T. Ince and Tucker); Maid or Man (T. Ince); At the Duke’s Command; The Mirror; While the Cat’s Away; Her Darkest Hours (T. Ince); Artful Kate (T. Ince); A Manly Man (T. Ince); The Message in the Bottle (T. Ince); The Fisher-Maid (T. Ince); In Old Madrid (T. Ince); Sweet Memories of Yesterday (T. Ince); The Stampede; Second Sight; The Fair Dentist; For Her Brother’s Sake (T. Ince and Tucker); Back to the Soil; In the Sultan’s Garden (T. Ince); The Master and the Man; The Lighthouse Keeper; For the Queen’s Honor (+ ro); A Gasoline Engagement; At a Quarter of Two; Science; The Skating Bug; The Call of the Song; The Toss of a Coin; The Sentinel Asleep; The Better Way; His Dress Shirt; The Nose’s Story; From the Bottom of the Sea
1914 Classmates (Kirkwood); Strongheart (Powell or Kirkwood); The Woman in Black (Marsten); The Cricket on the Hearth (Marsten)
1916 The Unpardonable Sin (O’Neill); The Masked Rider; Mister 44 (Otto); The River of Romance (Balshofer); Big Tremaine (Balshofer)
1917 Pidgin Island (Balshofer); The Promise (Balshofer); The Hidden Children (Apfel); The Haunted Pajamas (Balshofer); The Hidden Spring (Hopper); Under Handicap (Balshofer); Paradise Garden (Balshofer); The Square Deceiver (Balshofer); The Avenging Trail (F. Ford)
1918 Broadway Bill (Balshofer); The Landlubber (Irving); Lend Me Your Name (Balshofer); Pals First (Carewe)
1919 Man of Honor (Balshofer and Lockwood); In Wrong (Kirkwood); The Inferior Sex (Henabery)
1920 Fighting Shepherdess (José); Her Kingdom of Dreams (Neilan); The Mark of Zorro (Niblo); The Forbidden Thing (Dwan); Kismet (Gasier); Whispering Devils (Garson); In Old Kentucky (Neilan)
1921 The Other Woman (Sloman); The Ten Dollar Raise (Sloman); The Sin of Martha Qued (Sins of the Parents) (Dwan); Shattered Idols (Sloman); Pilgrims of the Nights (Sloman)
1922 The Woman He Loved (How a Man Loves) (Sloman); The Eternal Flame (Lloyd); East Is West (Franklin)
1923 The Voice from the Minaret (Lloyd) (co); Adam and Eva (Vignola) (co); Within the Law (Lloyd); Ashes of Vengeance (Lloyd); The Song of Love (Franklin and Marion)
1946  The Bandit of Sherwood Forest (G. Sherman and Levin) (co);
I've Always Loved You (Concerto) (Borzage); Swell Guy (Tuttle)

1947  That’s My Man (Will Tomorrow Ever Come?) (Borzage);
Love from a Stranger (A Stranger Walked In) (Whorf)

1949  The Red Pony (Milestone)

Publications

On GAUDIO: articles—

Film Comment (New York), Summer 1972.

* * *

Gaetano (Tony) Gaudio, along with Sol Polito, Barney McGill, and Sid Hickox, helped create the Warner Bros. photographic style of the 1930s, crisp and economic, with a strong influence of German Expressionism. Warners, unlike MGM and Paramount, did not demand pretty pictures, and these cameramen were able to light for mood and atmosphere. Gaudio was extremely versatile and able to handle all types of pictures, from big-budget extravaganzas to B-movies like the Torchy Blane series.

Gaudio was a pioneer cinematographer; as early as 1911 he was the chief cameraman for Carl Laemmle’s Universal Pictures. In the 1920s he photographed two Douglas Fairbanks adventures, The Mark of Zorro and The Gaucho, and worked with top directors like Marshal Neilan, Allan Dwan, and Frank Borzage. He contributed to some of the earliest Technicolor sequences (The Gaucho, On with the Show, General Crack), as well as the seminal war films All Quiet on the Western Front (second camera to Arthur Edeson) and Hell’s Angels, handling the dialogue scenes with Harry Perry on the aerial cinematography.

Gaudio hit his stride when he signed with Warner Bros. in 1930. He shot Mervyn LeRoy’s gangster classic Little Caesar in a harsh style befitting the gritty subject. Throughout the 1930s Gaudio handled Warners’ most prestigious films, such as LeRoy’s Oil for the Lamps of China and Anthony Adverse, and William Dieterle’s Story of Louis Pasteur and Life of Emile Zola. The LeRoy films were among the studio’s most ambitious projects and, with the Dieterle biographies, gave Warners unaccustomed Oscar status. Gaudio’s work met with critical acclaim, and he won an Academy Award for his impressive work on Anthony Adverse.

After shooting Warners’ first three-strip Technicolor film, God’s Country and the Woman, Gaudio was reteamed with that picture’s director William Keighley for The Adventures of Robin Hood, a color spectacle with Errol Flynn in the title role. Keighley and Gaudio started the picture on a difficult location and work went too slowly, prompting producer Hal Wallis to replace them with director Michael Curtiz and cameraman Sol Polito, although they all shared screen credit. Gaudio’s footage included the first meeting in the forest between Robin and Little John, portions of the archery tournament, the banquet in the woods, and the fight between Robin and Friar Tuck. Gaudio was director of photography on another Flynn picture, Edmund Goulding’s The Dawn Patrol, a remake of Howard Hawks’ 1930 World War I aviation story. Aerial scenes from the original were used in the Goulding version, and Gaudio was responsible for the claustrophobic interiors.

Gaudio was a regular cameraman for Bette Davis. For Ex-Lady, an early attempt to turn her into a sex symbol, Gaudio gave Davis the glamour treatment. By the time he shot Bordertown, the studio realized her histrionic talents, and Gaudio brought a stark realism to the seedy Mexican setting. Kid Galahad gave him the opportunity to contrast high-key Art Deco scenes with the smoky interiors of the boxing ring. Gaudio deglamorized Davis in two period films, Juarez and The Old Maid, gave the contemporaneous The Great Lie a shining look, and reached the zenith of his Warner days with William Wyler’s The Letter. One of Davis’ best remembered vehicles, The Letter is distinguished by Gaudio’s moody cinematography, especially the memorable opening shot, a slow track through a Malaysian rubber plantation that sets the tone for the whole picture.

Gaudio lit Raoul Walsh’s crime masterwork High Sierra in an ultrarealist, documentary-like fashion. Gaudio left Warners in 1943, and his subsequent work lacks the same consistency he had previously demonstrated, although he achieved some fine color cinematography on A Song to Remember and The Red Pony. Like many of the technicians during the Golden Age of Hollywood, Gaudio was at his best in the highly departmentalized confines of the studio system.

—John A. Gallagher

---

GAUMONT, Léon

Producer. Nationality: French. Born: Paris, 10 May 1864. Education: Attended College of Sainte-Barbe. Career: After military service, managed an incandescent lamp factory; 1895—formed the Gaumont Company to market cinema apparatus; marketed the Demeny Bioscope; 1896—produced the first actuality films; 1898—opened London office; 1899—first films made in England; 1903—introduced the Gaumont Chronophone and Chromemogaphone as a prelude to talking pictures; 1905—built the first great French movie studio and produced colour pictures with Chronochrome; 1912—showed popular “rural scenes” in colour; 1929—retired from movies. Award: Exhibition Prize of France for “having contributed in greatest measure to the progress of photography.” Died: In Sainte-Maxime, 10 August 1946.

Films as Producer (selected list):

1895–97  Une Caravane au Jardin d’Acclimatation; Les Grandes Eaux de Versailles; Le Déjeuner des oiseaux au Kursaal de Vielle; La Sortie des usines Panhard et Levensor; Défilé d’artillerie à la revue du 14 juillet 1896; L’Arrivée du Président de la République au pesage (Grand Prix de Paris 1896); Le Fardier; La Charmeuse de serpents
1898  La Vie du Christ
1899  Les Méfaits d’un tête de veau (Guy); Monnaie de lapin (Guy); Les Dangers de l’alcoolisme (Guy); Mauvaise soupe (Guy);
Mésaventure d'un charbonnier (Guy); Le Tonnelier (Guy); Chanteurs des cours (Guy); Angélus (Guy); La Bonne Absinthe (Guy)

1900  L'Ascension du Mont-Blanc; Cyrano de Bergerac; Précieuses ridicules

1901  Au bal de flore (Guy); Fredaines de Pierrette (Guy); Défilé de vaches laitières; Baignades dans le torrent; Pédiluve; Laboureur; Marché à la volaille; Récolte des betteraves; Sortie d’un vapeur du port du Havre; Bataille de boules de neige

1902  Sage-femme de première classe (La Fée aux choux) (Gallet)

1903  Illusioniste renversant; Modelage express

1904  L'Assassinat du courrier de Lyon (Gallet); Nos bons étudiants (Gallet); Paris la nuit (Guy); Volé par les bohemiens (Gallet); L'Assassinat de la rue du Temple (Gallet); Les Petits Coupeurs de bois verts (Gallet); Le Cake-Walk de la pendule (Guy); La Passion (Guy); Histoire d’un crime (Gallet)

1905  La Esmerelda (Jasset); Réhabilitation; Robert Macaire; Une Noceau Luc Saint-Fargeau

1906  Rêves d’un fumeur d’Opium (Jasset); La Vie du Christ (Jasset)

1907  The Mikado; Vive le sabotage!; Father Buys a Ladder; La Course des belles mères; Tower and the Tramp; L’Homme aimanté; Un Facteur trop ferré; Le Lecteur distraint; L’Aveugle; L’Ordonnance; La Bataille d’oreillers; Toto aéronaute; L’Apprenti; L’Arroseur arrosé; Le Plantion du colonel; Le Cocher de furet dormi; La Lecon de boxe comique; Zigomar serial

1908  Un Drame chez les fantoches

1909  Nick Carter serial (Jasset); Morgan le Pirate (Jasset); Le Vantour de la Sierra (Jasset); Meskal le contrabandier (Jasset)

1910  Morgan le pirate serial (Jasset); Hérodiade (Jasset)

1911  Dans la vie (Perret); Zigomar (Jasset); Nick Carter (Jasset); La Fin de Don Juan (Jasset)

1913  Bouquets de fleurs; Voyage à la Côte d’Azur; Carnaval à Nice; Majorca; Balao (Jasset); Zigomar peau d’anguille (Jasset); Protea I (Jasset); L’enfant de Paris (Perret); La Force de l’argent (Perret); Erreur tragique (Perret); Les Léonce (Perret)

1915  Un Drame au château d’Acre (Gance); L’Héroïsme de Paddy (Gance); Strass et cie (Gance); La Fleur des ruines (Gance);
Le Périscope (Gance); La Folie du Dr. Tube (Gance); La Fiancée du diable (Pernet); Les Mystères de l’ombre
1916 Le Droit à la vie (Gance); Les Gaz mortels (Gance); Le Bluff (Feyder); L’Homme de compagnie (Feyder); L’Instinct est maître (Feyder)
1917 Les Vieilles Femmes de l’hospice (Feyder); Le Ravin sans fond (Feyder); Mater dolorosa (Gance); Zone de mort (Gance); Barberousse (Gance)
1918 La Haine; La Dixième Symphonie (Gance)
1919 J’accuse (Gance); Rose France (L’Herbier); Phantasmes (L’Herbier); La Faute d’orthographie (Feyder); Ames d’orient (Poirier)
1920 L’Homme du large (L’Herbier)
1921 El Dorado (L’Herbier)

Films as Producer (directed by Feuillade):

1909 Judith et Holopherne; La Possession de l’enfant; La Légende des phares; Le Huguenot; La Mort; La Fille du cantonnier
1910 Les Sept Pechés capitaux; Le Pater; 1814; La Fille de Jéphéth; La Roï de Thulé; Bienvenutu Cellini; Esther; Chef-Lieu de Canton
1911 Aux lions les chrétiens; Les Vipères; Le Roi Lear au village; Le Poison; Le Trust; Les Souris blanches; En grève; La Tare
1912 Les Braves Gens; Le Nain; La Hantise; L’Oubliette; Le Proscrit
1913 L’Agonie de Byzance; S’affranchir; Série des bouts de Zari; Les Yeux ouverts; La Rose blanche; L’Angoisse; Fantômas; Juve contre Fantômas; Le Mort qui tue
1914 Fantômas contre Fantômas; La Vie drôle; Le Faux Magistrat
1915–16 Les Vampires serial (10 episodes)
1916 Judex serial (12 episodes)
1918 La Nouvelle Mission de Judex; Vendeminaire
1919 Tin-minh; L’Homme sans visage; L’Engrenage; Nocturne; Enigme

Publications

On GAUMONT: books—

On GAUMONT: articles—

La Technique cinématographique (Paris), no. 128, January 1953.
Film Français (Paris), no. 1755, 2 February 1979.

Turman, Suzanna, “‘Gaumont (Gaumont Film Company),’” in Films in Review (Denville), January-February 1994.
“‘100 Years of Cinema (Studio History) (Gaumont 100th Anniversary,’” in Variety (New York), 12 December 1994.
Les Cahiers de la Cinematheque (Perpignan), December 1995.
Positif (Paris), April 1996.

* * *

After 1895, and the success of the Lumière films, France was a hive of invention and film projects. Unlike his compatriot and rival, Charles Pathé, Léon Gaumont came from a comfortable background, running a well-established photographic and optical apparatus business. He was financially well-connected, and in 1895 was able to found the Léon Gaumont company with a capital of 200,000 francs. He acquired the rights to inventions by a man called Demeny, and with the help of his partner was able to give the illusion of living portraits by marketing the chronophotograph. It was only a short step to involvement with the newly fledged cinema, and he opened his film studio, soon to be known as “Cité Elgé” after his initials, at Buttes-Chaumont. This became one of the largest studios in Europe, managed by Gaumont’s secretary, Alice Guy, who was to become an important figure in American cinema and is often cited as the first woman director.

Gaumont’s first films were simple vaudeville sketches, comedies, moral tales, and, of course, imitations of other people’s film successes. As his enterprise expanded and developed, documentaries, newsreels, scientific and educational programmes were embarked upon.

His organisation now spread to other countries, and in England, for example, Colonel Bromhead opened the first Gaumont Cinema in 1901. The first British Gaumont production was The Life of Richard Wagner, and the Gaumont Graphic soon took its place among British newsreels. Documentaries included The Ascent of Mont Blanc and the National Pilgrimage to Lourdes of 1902. In 1913, Gaumont established his Vitorine Studios in Nice, which was to form the basis of Rex Ingram’s studio.

The sound-film was of special interest to Gaumont, and in 1903 he introduced the chronophone which he circulated worldwide. His technical section was constantly experimenting with improvements, and he introduced early wide-screen and elaborate amplification systems. Although talkies did not really come into their own until the end of the twenties, nevertheless Gaumont maintained his interest in the area and was associated with the first modern French sound film, Eau de nil.

Gaumont took a particular interest in the American cinema, and was a close friend of George Eastman, the raw-film manufacturer. He championed the independent filmmakers of Europe against the Edison Trust controls, but the First World War was a big blow to European cinema, particularly that of France. American films were encroaching, with technical innovation and big star names that were extremely popular with French audiences. Gaumont ruefully remarked, “We made munitions for war in our factories. They made movies, and they have conquered us.”

Gaumont attracted many talented people to his studios. After Guy left, he replaced her with Victorin Jasset, the maker of the famous Zigomar serial, and following him came perhaps the most famous name in the Gaumont team—Louis Feuillade. It was he who gave the films a particular colouring, with his famous serials Fantômas, Les Vampires, and Judex. The worldwide popularity of these films and their special visual richness make them today classics of a great period of French filmmaking.

As the French film developed visually and artistically, the Gaumont company found a home for such diverse and innovative talents as Léon Poirier (Jocelyn, La Brièvre), Marcel L’Herbier (Rose France, El Dorado), Jacques Feyder (La Faute d’orthographie), Léonce Perret (comedian, and director of L’enfant de Paris), and Abel Gance (actor, and director of La Folie du Dr. Tube).

By 1925, Gaumont had increased his capital by an arrangement with MGM, but by 1938 his financial structures began to crumble. Today, his name is still familiar, but the extent of his achievement is past history. There was little in the field of cinema that he did not tackle. He handled production and worldwide distribution, ran supercinemas, developed colour and sound, and made huge technical innovations. He was a harsh taskmaster, never less than frank if the work of one of his employees displeased him, and in the early days, so they say, this giant of the French cinema stood at the doors of his studio with watch in hand, checking the arrival of every one of his staff.

—Liam O’Leary

GÉGAUFF, Paul

Films as Writer:

1950 Journal d’un scélérat (Rohmer) (+ ro)
1959 Les Cousins (The Cousins) (Chabrol); Plein Soleil (Purple Noon) (Clément); A double tour (Leda; Web of Passion) (Chabrol); Le Signe du lion (The Sign of Leo) (Rohmer)
1960 Les Bonnes Femmes (Chabrol)
1961 Les Godelureaux (Chabrol)
1962 Les Reflux—L’Enfer au paradis (+ d); Un Chien dans un jeu de quilles (Collin)
1963 Ophélie (Chabrol) (as Martial Matthieu); Les Grands Chemins (Of Flesh and Blood) (Marquand)
1964 “L’Homme qui vendit la Tour Eiffel” ep. of Les Plus Belles Escroqueries du monde (The Beautiful Swindlers) (Chabrol); Le Gros Coup (Valère)
1967 Le Scandale (The Champagne Murders) (Chabrol); Diaboliquement vôtre (Diabolically Yours) (Duvivier)
1968 Les Biches (The Does) (Chabrol); Delphine (Le Hung); La Femme écarlate (The Scarlet Woman) (Valère)
1969 Que la bête meure (This Man Must Die; Killer!) (Chabrol); More (Schroeder)
1970 Les Novices (Casaril); Qui? (Keigel)

1972 La Decade prodigieuse (Ten Days’ Wonder) (Chabrol); Docteur Popaul (Scoundrel in White) (Chabrol); La Vallée (The Valley) (Schroeder)
1974 Une Invitation à la chasse (Chabrol)
1975 Une Partie de plaisir (A Piece of Pleasure; Love Match) (Chabrol) (+ ro); Les Magiciens (Chabrol)
1979 Brigade mondaine (La Secte de Marrakech) (Matalon); Historien om en moder (The Story of a Mother) (Weeks)
1981 Les Folies d’elodie (Naughty Blue Knickers) (Génoëvs)

Films as Actor:

1963 Le Vice et la vertu (Vice and Virtue) (Vadim)
1966 La Ligne de démarcation (Line of Demarcation) (Chabrol)
1967 Week-end (Weekend) (Godard)
1972 Hellé (Vadim)

Publications

By GÉGAUFF: books—

By GÉGAUFF: articles—

On GÉGAUFF: articles—

Chaplin (Stockholm), no. 2, 1970.
Dirigido por . . . (Barcelona), August 1977.

* * *

Paul Gégauff and Claude Chabrol first met in the early 1950s at the Ciné-Club du Quartier Latin. Gégauff at this time was already a published novelist; Chabrol was a university student. A few years later Chabrol was one of the leading directors of the French New Wave, and Gégauff was his screenwriter.
The nature of the Chabrol-Gégauff collaboration is difficult to pin down. Chabrol is a fine writer himself, and he often takes cowriting credit in his films with Gégauff. Also, Chabrol has certain “signature” traits—a murder mystery plot, a bourgeois milieu, a pervasive atmosphere of guilt and complicity—no matter who writes the script. However, the Chabrol-Gégauff films do seem to be both cruder and more complexly plotted than the films Chabrol has written on his own.

The first Chabrol-Gégauff film was Les Cousins, one of the key films of the early New Wave. Les Cousins tells the story of a naïve country cousin and a cynical city cousin, both students in contemporary Paris, and of the young woman to whom both are attracted. As in many Chabrol-Gégauff films, the characters are either repressed or decadent, with other, healthier possibilities almost entirely excluded.

With the commercial and critical success of Les Cousins, Chabrol and Gégauff were able to make more experimental narratives such as A double tour and Les Bonnes Femmes. The title of A double tour refers to a technique of scrambling chronology to show the same time period from more than one point of view. The murder mystery plot has Leda, a beautiful artist, killed by the son of her married lover. One interesting aspect of this film is its mixture of spontaneous, free characters and repressed, violent characters—both within the same family setting. Chabrol and Gégauff seem more adept at presenting the repressed characters, but they also try their hand at New Wave spontaneity à la Truffaut. Les Bonnes Femmes describes the lives and dreams of four Parisian shopgirls. Notably distanced and unsentimental, the film shows the young women as limited in imagination and self-knowledge.

Between 1967 and 1975 Chabrol and Gégauff collaborated on six feature films. Les Biches, the best known of them, returns to the triangular relationship of Les Cousins, but with greater rigor and intensity. The triangle here features two women (one inexperienced, one decadent) and one man; all possible relationships, including a lesbian affair, are worked out. The tangled motives and desires of the characters lead inevitably to a concluding murder. Les Biches is a subtle exploration of love and cruelty that marks the peak of the Chabrol-Gégauff collaboration.

Une Partie de plaisir, the last Chabrol-Gégauff film, is about the breakup of a marriage after the husband decides that he and his wife should take other lovers. The intimacies and cruelties of a relationship are here presented without the melodramatic touches (murders, hidden motives, surprises) of other Chabrol-Gégauff films. Curiously, Gégauff himself plays one lead in the film, his wife Danielle (they were separated at the time) the other. Nevertheless, Gégauff maintained that his script was only marginally autobiographical.

Gégauff’s films with Chabrol are generally austere, beautifully made explorations of characters with limited self-knowledge who exist in highly defined and often repressive social environments. In his work with Barbet Schroeder, Gégauff turns to looser, freer, more exotic subjects. Both More and The Valley are clearly films of the late 1960s-early 1970s “youth culture,” concerned with the sexual revolution, the use of drugs, the search for a new consciousness. But the cynical Gégauff does not suddenly turn sentimental in these films— the freedom of More is destroyed by heroin addiction; the freedom of The Valley may be an illusion.

Paul Gégauff also wrote four novels and one short-story collection. His literary work anticipates some themes of his scripts— cruelty, decadence, characters of limited self-understanding—and showcases a dark sense of humor. One story, set in Parisian film circles, satirizes the pretensions of film acting.

—Peter Lev

GHERARDI, Piero

Art Director. Nationality: Italian. Born: Poppi, Arezzo, 20 November 1909. Education: Mainly self-taught in art and architecture. Career: Practicing architect in the 1930s; then set decorator and art director after 1945 (also designed costumes); stage designer in Italy and Britain. Awards: Academy Award for La dolce vita, 1961, 8½, 1963. Died: In Rome, 8 June 1971.

Films as Art Director:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Director</th>
<th>Collaborators</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1946</td>
<td>Amanti senza amore</td>
<td>Franchioli</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>Senza pietà (Without Pity)</td>
<td>Lattuada</td>
<td>Proibito rubare (Guaglio)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Comencini; Fuga in Francia (Soldati)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>Campane a martello (Children of Change)</td>
<td>Zampa</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Napoli milionaria (de Filippo) (co)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>Cinema d’altri tempi</td>
<td>Steno</td>
<td>Her Favourite Husband</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(The Taming of Dorothy) (Soldati); Romanzo d’amore (Toselli) (Coletti); Camicie rosse (Alessandrini)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>Sensualità (Fracassi)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1953</td>
<td>Anni facili (Easy Years)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1954</td>
<td>Proibito (Monicelli) (co)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>Le notti di Cabiria (Nights of Cabiria)</td>
<td>Fellini</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1957</td>
<td>Padri e figli . . . (Fathers and Sons)</td>
<td>Monicelli</td>
<td>La grande strada azzurra (Pontecorvo) (co); Il medico e lo stregone (Monicelli) (co)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1958</td>
<td>I soliti ignoti (BigDeal on Madonna Street)</td>
<td>Monicelli</td>
<td>(co)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>La dolce vita (Fellini); Kapò (Pontecorvo); Risate di gioia (ThePassionate Thief) (Monicelli) (co); Sotto dieci bandiere (Under Ten Flats) (Coletti); Crimen (Camerini)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1961</td>
<td>Il carabiniere a cavallo (Lizzani); Il re di Poggioreale (Coletti)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1962</td>
<td>‘‘Renzo e Luciana’’ ep. of Boccaccio ’70</td>
<td>Monicelli</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>Otto e mezzo (8½) (Fellini) (co)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>La ragazza di Bube (Bebo’sGirl) (Comencini)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1964</td>
<td>‘‘Peccato nel Pomeriggio’’ ep. of Alta infedeltà (High Infidelity) (Petri); ‘‘Fatabene fratelli’’ ep. of Tre notti d’amore (Three Nights of Love) (Comencini) (co)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1965</td>
<td>Giulietta degli spiriti (Juliet of the Spirits) (Fellini) (co)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1966</td>
<td>‘‘Fata Armenia’’ ep. of Le fate (The Queens) (Monicelli)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1969</td>
<td>The Appointment (Lumet) (co)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Queimada! (Burn!) (Pontecorvo) (co)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Infanzia, vocatione, e prime esperienze di Giacomo Casanova, veneziano (Comencini) (co)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Other Films:

1945  Notte di tempesta (Franciolini) (set decorator)
1946  Eugenia Grandet (Soldati) (set decorator)
1951  Iolanda la figlia del corsaro nero (Soldati) (set decorator)
1956  War and Peace (K. Vidor) (set decorator)
1960  Il gobbo (The Hunchback of Rome) (Lizzani) (costumes)
1962  Violenza segreta (Moser) (costumes)
1964  “La telefonata” and “Il trattato di eugenetica” epis. of Le bambole (The Dolls) (Risi and Comencini) (costumes)
1966  Se tutte le donne del mondo... (Operazione Paradiso; Kiss the Girls and Make Them Die) (Levin and Mairu) (costumes)
1967  Diabolik (Danger: Diabolik) (Bava) (co-costumes)

Publications

By GHERARDI: article—

Sight and Sound (London), Winter 1969–70.

On GHERARDI: film—

* * *

Piero Gherardi collaborated with Federico Fellini on his major films of the late 1950s and early 1960s. The styles of these films show an infusion of new artistic qualities into the established practices of neorealist films of the late 1940s. In La dolce vita, 8½, and Juliet of the Spirits, there still was the use of some actual locations and some nonprofessional actors, characteristics of the neorealist movement. But Gherardi and Fellini brought certain surrealistic images into their films, such as the opening of La dolce vita, in which a statue of Christ with outstretched arms is suspended from a helicopter. Though such a situation is plausible the image is striking and memorable because it juxtaposes familiar objects with an unusual context.

The sets and costumes of 8½ and Juliet of the Spirits established the dreamlike quality of the films. The spa in 8½ is not a real location but a set, modeled not on an existing place but on the memories of one Gherardi had visited as a child. Similarly, the train station is a memory—all the viewer sees are a locomotive, a platform, and some steam. In Juliet of the Spirits the conservative heroine’s surroundings are mostly white, while the interiors of the house of her liberated friend Suzy are red, yellow, and violet. Juliet’s house, an environment of purity, is contrasted to Suzy’s, which has the atmosphere of circus and brothel. Gherardi considered a costume as more than a mere covering for a character; it reveals that character and defines the personality. Likewise, his sets did more than give documentary information about a place. Gherardi often mixed the ordinary with the simplified or the surrealistic. In so doing, he emphasized the artificial quality of films and helped to focus attention on characters and situations whose components were as complex as the visual elements.

—Floyd W. Martin

GIBBONS, Cedric

Art Director. Nationality: American. Born: New York, 23 March 1893. Family: Married the actress Dolores Del Rio, 1930 (divorced 1941). Military Service: U.S. Navy, 1916–17. Career: 1917–18—art director for Edison, then for Goldwyn, 1918–23, and for MGM from 1924–56; supervising art director for many years. Awards: Academy Award for The Bridge of San Luis Rey, 1928–29; The Merry Widow, 1934; Pride and Prejudice, 1940; Blossoms in the Dust, 1941; Gaslight, 1944; The Yearling, 1946; Little Women, 1949; An American in Paris, 1951; The Bad and the Beautiful, 1952; Julius Caesar, 1953; Somebody Up There Likes Me, 1956; Special Award, 1950. Died: In Westwood, California, 26 July 1960.

Films as Art Director (selected list):

1919  The World and Its Women (Lloyd)
1921  Beating the Game (Schertzingz); The Invisible Power (Lloyd); Made in Heaven (Schertzingz); An Unwilling Hero (Badger)
1922  Come on Over (Green); Remembrance (Hughes); Yellow Men and Gold (Willat)
1923  Broadway Gold (Dillon and Cooper); Gimme (Hughes); Jazzmanna (Leonard); Look Your Best (Hughes)
1924  Circe the Enchantress (Leonard); He Who Gets Slapped (Sjöström); His Hour (K. Vidor); The Snob (Bell); So This Is Marriage (Henley); Three Weeks (Crosland)
1925  Wife of the Centaur (K. Vidor); Ben-Hur (Niblo); The Big Parade (K. Vidor); Bright Lights (Leonard); Cheaper to Marry (Leonard); The Circle (Borzage); Confessions of a Queen (Sjöström); Daddy’s Gone a-Hunting (Borzage); The Denial (Henley); The Dixie Handicap (Barker); Exchange of Wives (Henley); Excuse Me (Goulding); Fine Clothes (Stahl); The Great Divide (Barkee); Greed (von Stroheim); His Secretary (Henley); Lady of the Night (Bell); Man and Maid (Schertzingz); The Mystic (Browning); The Masked Bride (von Sternberg and Cabanne); The Merry Widow (von Stroheim); The Only Thing (Conway); Sally, Irene, and Mary (Goulding); A Slave of Fashion (Henley); Soul Mates (Conway); The Sporting Venus (Neilan); The Tower of Lies (Sjöström); The Unholy Three (Conway); The Way of a Girl (Vignola)
1926  Bardelys the Magnificent (K. Vidor); Beverly of Graustark (Franklin); The Black Bird (Browning); Blarney (De Sano); La Boheme (K. Vidor); The Boob (Wellman); The Boy Friend (Bell); Brown of Harvard (Conway); Dance Madness (Leonard); Exit Smiling (Taylor); The Exquisite Sinner (von Sternberg and Rosen); The Fire Brigade (Nigh); The Flaming Forest (Barker); Flesh and the Devil (Brown); The Gay Deceiver (Stahl); Love’s Blindness (Dillon); Lovely Mary (Baggot); Memory Lane (Stahl); Money Talks (Mayo); Monte Carlo (Cabanne); Paris (Goulding); The Road to Mandalay (Browning); The Scarlet Letter (Sjöström); Tell It to the Marines (Hill); The Temptress (Stiller and Niblo); There You Are! (Sedgwick); Tin Hats (Sedgwick); The Torrent (Bell); Upstage (Bell); Valencia (Buchowitzki); The Waning Sex (Leonard)
1927 Adam and Evil (Leonard); After Midnight (Bell); Altars of Desire (Cabanne); Annie Laurie (Robertson); Becky (McCarthy); Body and Soul (Barker); The Bugle Call (Sedgwick); Buttons (Hill); The Callahans and the Murphys (Hill); Captain Salvation (Robertson); The Demi-Bride (Leonard); The Enemy (Niblo); The Fair Co-ed (Wood); Foreign Devils (Van Dyke); Frisco Sally Levy (Beaudine); Heaven on Earth (Rosen); In Old Kentucky (Stahl); A Little Journey (Leonard); London after Midnight (Browning); Love (Goulding); The Lovelorn (McCarthy); Lovers? (Stahl); Man, Woman, and Sin (Bell); Mr. Wu (Nigh); Mockery (Christensen); On ze Boulevard (Millarde); Quality Street (Franklin); The Red Mill (Goodrich, i.e. Arbuckle); The Road to Romance (Robertson); Rookies (Wood); The Show (Browning); Slide, Kelly, Slide (Sedgwick); Spring Fever (Sedgwick); The Student Prince in Old Heidelberg (Lubitsch); The Taxi Driver (Millarde); Tea for Three (Leonard); Tillie the Toiler (Henley); Twelve Miles Out (Conway); The Understanding Heart (Conway); The Unknown (Browning); Women Love Diamonds (Goulding); Anna Karenina (Buckowetzki—unfinished)

1928 Across to Singapore (Nigh); The Actress (Franklin); The Baby Cyclone (Sutherland); Baby Mine (Leonard); Beau Broadway (St. Clair); The Big City (Browning); Bringing Up Father (Conway); Brotherly Love (Reisner); The Cardboard Lover (Leonard); A Certain Young Man (Henley); Circus Rookies (Sedgwick); The Cossacks (Hill); The Crowd (K. Vidor); The Divine Woman (Sjöström); Dream of Love (Niblo); Excess Baggage (Cruze); Forbidden Hours (Beaumont); Four Walls (Nigh); Honeymoon (Golden); A Lady of Chance (Leonard); The Latest from Paris (Wood); Laugh, Clown, Laugh (Brenon); The Masks of the Devil (Sjöström); The Mysterious Lady (Niblo); Our Dancing Daughters (Beaumont); The Patsy (K. Vidor); Rose-Marie (Hubbard); Show People (K. Vidor); The Smart Set (Conway); Telling the World (Wood); West of Zanzibar (Browning); While the City Sleeps (Conway); Wickedness Preferred (Henley); The Wind (Sjöström); A Woman of Affairs (Brown)

1929 Alias Jimmy Valentine (Conway); All at Sea (Goulding); Bellamy Trial (Bell); The Bridge of San Luis Rey (Brabin); The Broadway Melody (Beaumont); China Bound (Reisner)
Desert Nights (Nigh); Devil-May-Care (Franklin); The Duke Steps Out (Cruze); Dynamite (De Mille); The Flying Fleet (Hill); The Girl in the Show (Selwyn); Hallelujah (K. Vidor); His Glorious Night (L. Barrymore); The Hollywood Revue of 1929 (Reisner); The Idle Rich (W. de Mille); It's a Great Life (Wood); The Kiss (Conway); The Last of Mrs. Cheyney (Franklin); Madame X (L. Barrymore); A Man's Man (Cruze); Marianne (Leonard); The Mysterious Island (Hubbard); Navy Blues (Brown); Our Modern Maidens (Conway); The Pagan (Van Dyke); A Single Man (Beaumont); The Single Standard (Robertson); So This Is College (Wood); Speedway (Beaumont); Spite Marriage (Sedgwick); Their Own Desire (Hopper); The Thirteenth Chair (Browning); Tide of Empire (Dwan); The Trial of '98 (Brown); The Trial of Mary Dugan (Veiller); The Unholy Night (L. Barrymore); Untamed (Conway); Voice of the City (Mack); Where East Is East (Browning); Wild Orchids (Franklin); Wise Girls (Hopper); Wonder of Women (Brown)

1930 Anna Christie (Brown); The Big House (Hill); Billy the Kid (K. Vidor); The Bishop Murder Case (Grinde); Call of the Flesh (Brablin); Caught Short (Reisner); Chasing Rainbows (Reisner); Children of Pleasure (Lloyd); The Divorcee (Leonard); Doughboys (Sedgwick); The Floradora Girl (Beaumont); Free and Easy (Sedgwick); The Girl Said No (Wood); Good News (Grinde); In Gay Madrid (Leonard); The Lady of Scandal (Franklin); A Lady to Love (Sjöström); A Lady's Morals (Franklin); Let Us Be Gay (Leonard); Lord Byron of Broadway (Nigh and Beaumont); Love in the Rough (Reisner); Madam Satan (De Mille); Men of the North (Roach); Min and Bill (Hill); Montana Moon (St. Clair); Not So Dumb (K. Vidor); Olympia (Feyder—German version of A Lady to Love; he also directed Si l'empereur savaïcat!, the French version); Our Blushing Brides (Beaumont); Paid (Wood); Passion Flower (W. de Mille); Redemption (Niblo); Remote Control (St. Clair and Grinde); The Rogue Song (L. Barrymore); Romance (Brown); The Sea Bat (Ruggles); The Ship from Shanghai (Brablin); Sins of the Children (Wood); Strictly Unconventional (Burton); They Learned about Women (Conway); This Mad World (W. de Mille); Those Three French Girls (Beaumont); The Unholy Three (Conway); Le Spectre vert (Feyder—French version of previous film); War Nurse (Selwyn); Way for a Sailor (Wood); Way Out West (Niblo); The Woman Racket (Ober and Kelly); Wu Li Chang (Grinde—Spanish version of Mr. Wu)

1931 Private Lives (Franklin); Susan Lenox, Her Fall and Rise (Leonard)
1932 Grand Hotel (Goulding); Freaks (Browning)
1933 Dinner at Eight (Cukor); Queen Christina (Mamoulian)
1934 Men in White (Boleslawsky); The Painted Veil (Boleslawsky); The Thin Man (Van Dyke); The Barretts of Wimpole Street (Franklin); David Copperfield (Cukor); Anna Karenina (Brown); The Merry Widow (Lubitsch)
1935 Mark of the Vampire (Browning); China Seas (Garnett); A Tale of Two Cities (Conway); Naughty Marietta (Van Dyke); Mutiny on the Bounty (Lloyd); Mad Love (Freund); Reckless (Fleming); A Night at the Opera (Wood)

1936 The Devil-Doll (Browning); The Great Ziegfeld (Leonard); The Gorgeous Hussy (Brown); Small Town Girl (Wellman); Wife vs. Secretary (Brown); Romeo and Juliet (Cukor); San Francisco (Van Dyke); Fury (F. Lang)
1937 The Good Earth (Franklin); Conquest (Brown); Big City (Borzage); A Day at the Races (Wood); Broadway Melody of 1936 (Del Ruth); The Emperor's Candlesticks (Fitzmaurice); The Firefly (Leonard); The Last of Mrs. Cheyney (Boleslawsky); Saratoga (Conway); Navy Blue and Gold (Wood); Captains Courageous (Fleming); Calliope (Cukor); Madame X (Wood)
1938 The Girl of the Golden West (Leonard); The Great Waltz (Duvivier); Lord Jeff (Wood); Three Comrades (Borzage); Arsene Lupin Returns (Fitzmaurice); Marie Antoinette (Van Dyke)
1939 Balalatka (Schünzel); The Wizard of Oz (Fleming); Another Thin Man (Van Dyke); Ninotchka (Lubitsch); Remember? (McLeod); Maisie (Marin)
1940 Boom Town (Conway); The Philadelphia Story (Cukor); Pride and Prejudice (Leonard)
1941 The Chocolate Soldier (Del Ruth); H. M. Pulham, Esq. (K. Vidor); Love Crazy (Conway); Honky Tonk (Conway); Unholy Partners (LeRoy); Barnacle Bill (Thorpe); Blossoms in the Dust (LeRoy)
1942 Mrs. Miniver (Wyler)
1943 Bataan (Garnett); A Guy Named Joe (Fleming); Cabin in the Sky (Minnelli); The Cross of Lorraine (Garnett); The Human Comedy (Brown); Lassie Come Home (Wilcox); Thousands Cheer (Sidney)
1944 Gaslight (Cukor); Kismet (Oriental Dream) (Dieterle); Madame Curie (LeRoy); The Seventh Cross (Zimmann); Thirty Seconds over Tokyo (LeRoy); Meet Me in St. Louis (Minnelli)
1945 The Picture of Dorian Grey (Lewin); Yolanda and the Thief (Minnelli)
1946 The Postman Always Rings Twice (Garnett); Ziegfeld Follies (Minnelli—produced 1944); The Green Years (Saville); The Yearling (Brown)
1947 Lady in the Lake (Montgomery); Song of Love (Brown)
1948 The Pirate (Minnelli); Command Decision (Wood); The Three Musketeers (Sidney)
1949 On the Town (Kelly and Donen); Madame Bovary (Minnelli); Battle Ground (Wellman); The Great Singer (Siodmak); Little Women (LeRoy); Adam's Rib (Cukor)
1950 Annie Get Your Gun (Sidney); The Asphalt Jungle (Huston)
1951 An American in Paris (Minnelli); Showboat (Sidney); Qo Vadis (LeRoy); The Tall Target (A. Mann)
1952 The Bad and the Beautiful (Minnelli); Singin' in the Rain (Kelly and Donen); Lovely to Look At (LeRoy)
1953 Scaramouche (Sidney); Julius Caesar (Mankiewicz); The Band Wagon (Minnelli); The Actress (Cukor)
1954 Executive Suite (Wise); Jupiter's Darling (Sidney); Bad Day at Black Rock (Sturges)
1955 Blackboard Jungle (Brooks); Kismet (Minnelli); Love Me or Leave Me (C. Vidor)
1956 Somebody Up There Likes Me (Wise); I'll Cry Tomorrow (D. Mann); The Swan (A. Mann); Lust for Life (Minnelli); High Society (Walters); Forbidden Planet (Wilcox)
Film as Director:

1934 Tarzan and His Mate

Publications

By GIBBONS: articles—

“Motion Picture Sets,” in The Theatre and Motion Pictures, edited by Warren E. Cox, Chicago, 1933.

On GIBBONS: articles—

Flint, Ralph, in Creative Art, October 1932.

Stuart, Betty Thornley, “Movie Set Up,” in Collier’s (New York), 30 September 1933.

* * *

The production designer Cedric Gibbons, though little-known to many filmgoers, strongly influenced many of Hollywood’s greatest films. Born in New York in the last decade of the 19th century, Gibbons, already educated in art and architecture, began his movie career just as the film industry started rolling. He obtained an assistant’s job at the Edison Studios and worked there from 1915 to 1917. Gibbons made a major mark on film design at this time when he insisted on the use of three-dimensional scenery rather than painted backdrops.

In 1918 Gibbons left Edison for a position as art director at Goldwyn’s in New York. Later he moved with Goldwyn and company to California. In 1924 came a significant turning point. MGM studios was formed, and Gibbons became its supervising art director.

It is not easy to determine which of the films in his very vast filmography can really be completely credited to Gibbons. Any film coming out of MGM would list Gibbons as art director. Gibbon’s greatest contributions would go to the “prestige” pictures, such as Marie Antoinette, Ben-Hur, or Camille. He collaborated on many of the other MGM movies and merely approved the rest. Those pictures produced after his heart attack in 1946 would have even less of his touch. But it is misleading to assume Gibbons blindly accepted the ideas of others, taking credit for their creations. Gibbons felt strongly about what was right and wrong for MGM and getting his approval was no easy task. Vincente Minnelli described the Gibbons reign as a “medieval fiefdom, its overlord accustomed to doing things in a certain way.”

As stifling as this might be to the creativities of other artists and directors at MGM, this attitude served its purpose. MGM films shared a distinctive “look.” This was achieved because all employees responsible in any way for the visual appearance of the film—from props to costumes to special effects—had to confer with Gibbons. He maintained MGM’s visual continuity and maintained this control through the decades.

Several qualities characterize the MGM picture during the Gibbons rule, particularly elegance and glamor in his films from the 1930s. It did not matter if the scene or the moment called for it; the floors would still be highly polished and the chandelier crystal. Luxury and the elaborate were encouraged. A Gibbons-approved set could be as active as one of the dancers during a production number, littered with booms and turntables.

Like the popular British and French interior designers between the wars, Gibbons preferred all-white rooms. The harsh contrast of shapes and shadows that one would find in the German expressionist-influenced studios such as Warner Brothers or Universal would never be found at MGM. Gibbons sets were the height of escapist fantasy, as light and witty as a Cole Porter tune.

Gibbons also preferred to have MGM sets sculptural, perhaps harking back to his days as an artist and architect. This penchant for the three-dimensional might have been part of the reason for Vincente Minelli’s animosity towards Gibbons, for Minnelli films such as An American in Paris require a two-dimension emphasis for artistic effect. Fortunately, in spite of the difficulties, An American in Paris managed to gain Gibbons’s dictatorial approval (and ironically enough won him an Oscar).

Gibbons retired in 1956 and died in 1960. He had been nominated for 37 Academy Awards in his career and had won 11. In addition, he is credited with designing the original Oscar statuette. This streamlined, planar sculpture is an appropriate homage to Gibbons’s oeuvre and serves as a reminder of the film industry’s more glorious and powerful past.

—Edith C. Lee

GILLESPIE, Arnold

Films as Art Director (selected list):

1922 Manslaughter (De Mille) (assst)
1923 Adam’s Rib (De Mille) (assst)
1926 Ben-Hur (Niblo); The Black Bird (Browning); Brown of Harvard (Conway); Lovey Mary (Baggot); The Road to Mandalay (Browning); Upstage (Bell); There You Are! (Sedgwick); Valencia (Buchowitzki); Tell It to the Marines (Hill); La Bohème (K. Vidor)
1927 Altars of Desire (Cabanne); Women Love Diamonds (Goulding); The Demi-Bride (Leonard); Heaven on Earth (Rosen); Body and Soul (Barker); The Fair Co-Ed (Wood); London after Midnight (Browning); Buttons (Hill)
1928 The Latest from Paris (Wood); The Divine Woman (Sjöström); The Crowd (Hill); Tarzan the Ape Man (Van Dyke)
1933 Turn Back the Clock (Selwyn); Tarzan and His Mate (Gibbons); Operator 13 (Boleslawsky); Laughing Roy (Van Dyke); The Girl from Missouri (Conway); Eskimo (Van Dyke)
1934 Fugitive Lovers (Boleslawsky)
1935 Mutiny on the Bounty (Lloyd); The Last of the Pagans (Thorpe); Exclusive Story (Seitz); Small Town Girl (Wellman); Speed (Marin)

Films as Special Effects Technician (selected list):

1936 San Francisco (Van Dyke)
1937 The Good Earth (Franklin); Captains Courageous (Fleming)
1938 Test Pilot (Fleming)
1939 The Wizard of Oz (Fleming)
1940 Waterloo Bridge (LeRoy); Boom Town (Conway); Comrade X (K. Vidor)
1941 Flight Command (Borzage)
1942 Mrs. Miniver (Wyler)
1943 Bataan (Garnett); The Heavenly Body (Hall)
1944 Thirty Seconds over Tokyo (LeRoy); The White Cliffs of Dover (Brown)
1945 The Clock (Minnelli); Yolanda and the Thief (Minnelli); Valley of Decision (Garnett)
1946 The Green Years (Saville)
1947 Green Dolphin Street (Saville); The Beginning of the End (Taura)
1948 Command Decision (Wood)
1949 The Secret Garden (Wilcox)
1951 Quo Vadis? (LeRoy)
1952 Plymouth Adventure (Brown)
1954 Green Fire (Marton); Seven Brides for Seven Brothers (Donen)
1956 Forbidden Planet (Wilcox)
1958 Torpedo Run (Pevney)
1959 Ben-Hur (Wyler); North by Northwest (Hitchcock)
1960 Cimarron (A. Mann)
1961 Atlantis, the Lost Continent (Pal)
1962 The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse (Minnelli); The Horizontal Lieutenant (Thorpe); Jumbo (Billy Rose’s Jumbo) (Walters); Mutiny on the Bounty (Reed and Milestone)

1963 How the West Was Won (Ford, Hathaway, and Marshall); The Prize (Robson); A Ticklish Affair (Sidney)
1964 The Unsinkable Molly Brown (Walters)
1965 The Greatest Story Ever Told (Stevens)

Publications

By GILLESPIE: articles—

The Velvet Light Trap (Madison, Wisconsin), Spring 1978.
Film Comment (New York), May-June 1978.

* * *

The complete filmography of Arnold Gillespie is one of the largest in Hollywood, reaching nearly 600 films and almost evenly divided between art direction and special visual effects. He worked on both versions of Ben-Hur and Mutiny on the Bounty, created the visceral quality of the 1906 San Francisco earthquake in San Francisco, the alien beauty of Forbidden Planet, and the maleficent nightmare of The Wizard of Oz. Gillespie’s work in The Wizard of Oz demonstrated the imagination, ingenuity, and patience that became his trademark. To produce the witch’s skywriting of “surrender Dorothy,” he used a mixture of sheep dip and nigrosine dye released through a stylus into milk in a glass tank. The attack of the flying monkeys required the hanging of 2,200 piano wires from the sound stage’s ceiling.

When Gillespie began special effects work for MGM, the studio was an efficient organization, all facets of production departmentalized. He was head of the Special Effects Department under the titular guidance of Cedric Gibbons’ Art Department and in charge of the crews who worked with miniatures, rear-screen projection, and full-scale mechanical effects. The other aspects of visual effects fell under two other main departments; the Optical Department (matte paintings and optical printing) and the Animation Department. Gillespie seemed particularly intrigued with miniatures (Circus Maximus in the original Ben-Hur, the sea battle in the 1959 remake, the tank chase in Comrade X, the ships in Torpedo Run, and the raft sequence in How the West Was Won) and full-scale mechanicals (Robbie the Robot in Forbidden Planet and the four Bountys used for the 1962 version of Mutiny on the Bounty). But his forte lay in designing solutions for odd effects never before photographed. As in the skywriting effect described above, he usually employed liquids in a glass tank. To create the plague of locusts in The Good Earth, Gillespie dumped coffee grounds into a water tank, filmed their dispersal upside-down, and then superimposed the image with shots of the crops. For the atomic explosion in The Beginning of the End, he visualized a mushroom cloud before photographs and information were declassified by the government. By releasing blood bags under water and superimposing the image with a background shot, Gillespie manufactured an effect so believable and accurate that government officials thought he had access to secret materials. The footage was later used by the United States Air Corps in their instructional films.

Gillespie had the talent and a studio system to make the remarkable, the unexperienced, the fantastic, and the cataclysmic very believable and authentic. As he described his profession in a Film
GLENNON, Bert

Films as Cinematographer:

1915 The Stingaree (Horne—serial)
1919 Lighting Bryce (Hurst—serial)
1920 The Man from Kangaroo (Lucas and Meredith) (+ asst d); Shadow of Lightning Ridge (Lucas) (+ asst d); The Jackaroo of Coolabong (The Fighting Breed) (Lucas) (+ asst d); Parted Curtains (Bracken); Kentucky Colonel (Seiter) (co); The Torrent (Paton) (co)
1921 The Dangerous Moment (De Sano); Cheated Love (Baggot); The Kiss (Conway); A Daughter of the Law (Conway); Moonlight Follies (Baggot); Nobody’s Fool (Baggot)
1922 Domestic Relations (Withey); The Woman Who Walked Alone (Melford); Ebb Tide (Melford); Burning Sands (The Dweller in the Desert) (Melford)
1923 Java Head (Melford); You Can’t Fool Your Wife (Melford); The Ten Commandments (DeMille) (co)
1924 Triumph (DeMille); Changing Husbands (Urson and Iribe); Open All Night (One Parisian “Knight”) (Bern); Worldly Goods (Bern)
1925 Tomorrow’s Love (Bern); The Dressmaker from Paris (Bern); Are Parents People? (St. Clair); Wild Horse Mesa (Seitz); Flower of Night (Bern); A Woman of the World (St. Clair)
1926 The Crown of Lies (Buchowitzki); Good and Naught (St. Clair); Hotel Imperial (Stiller)
1927 Barbed Wire (Lee); Underworld (Paying the Penalty) (von Sternberg); We’re All Gamblers (Cruze); The Woman on Trial (Stiller); The City Gone Wild (Cruze)
1928 The Last Command (von Sternberg); The Street of Sin (King of Soho) (Stiller); The Patriot (Lubitsch)
1932 Blonde Venus (von Sternberg); The Half Naked Truth (La Cava)
1933 So This Is Harris! (Sandrich—short); Christopher Strong (Arzner); Gabriel over the White House (La Cava); Melody Cruise (Sandrich); Morning Glory (L. Sherman); Alice in Wonderland (McLeod) (co)
1934 She Was a Lady (MacFadden); Grand Canary (Cummings); The Scarlet Empress (von Sternberg); Hell in the Heavens (Blystone)
1935 Lottery Lover (Thiele); Ginger (Seiler); Thunder in the Night (Archainbaud); Bad Boy (Blystone); Show Them No Mercy (Tainted Money) (Marshall)
1936 The Prisoner of Shark Island (Ford); Half Angel (Lanfield); Little Miss Nobody (Blystone); Dimples (Seiter); Can This Be Dixie? (Marshall) (co); Lloyd’s of London (H. King)
1937 The Hurricane (Ford); Adventures of Marco Polo (2nd unit)
1939 Stagecoach (Ford); Young Mr. Lincoln (Ford); Second Fiddle (Lanfield) (co); The Rains Came (Brown) (co); Drums along the Mohawk (Ford); Swannee River (Lanfield)
1940 Our Town (Wood); The Howards of Virginia (The Tree of Liberty) (Lloyd)
1941 Virginia (Griffith) (co); The Reluctant Dragon (Werker) (co); One Night in Lisbon (Griffith); Dive Bomber (Curtiz) (co); They Died with Their Boots On (Walsh)
1942 Julie Girl (Bernhardt); Desperate Journey (Walsh)
1943 Mission to Moscow (Curtiz); This Is the Army (Curtiz) (co); The Desert Song (Florey)
1944 Destination Tokyo (Daves); The Very Thought of You (Daves); Hollywood Canteen (Daves)
1945 San Antonio (Butler)
1946 One More Tomorrow (Godfrey); Shadow of a Woman (Santley)
1947 The Red House (Daves); Mr. District Attorney (Sinclair); Copacabana (Green)
1948 Ruthless (Ulmer)
1949 Ichabod and Mr. Toad (The Adventures of Ichabod and Mr. Toad) (Kinney, Algar, and Geronimi) (co); Red Light (Del Ruth)
1950 Wagonmaster (Ford); Rio Grande (Ford)
1951 Operation Pacific (Waggener); The Sea Hornet (Kane); About Face (Del Ruth); The Big Trees (Feist)
1952 The Man behind the Gun (Feist); Riding Shotgun (De Toth); Thunder over the Plains (de Toth)
1953 House of Wax (De Toth); The Moonlighter (Rowland)
1954 The Mad Magician (Brahm); Crime Wave (The City Is Dark) (De Toth)
1955 Davy Crockett and the River Pirates (Foster) (co)
1960 Sergeant Rutledge (Ford)
1961 Lad—A Dog (Avakian and Martinson)
1963 The Man from Galveston (Conrad)

Films as Director:

1928 The Perfect Crime; The Gang War (All Square)
1929 The Air Legion
1930 Girl of the Port; Around the Corner; Paradise Island
1931 In Line of Duty
1932 South of Santa Fe

Other Films:

1922 Moran of the Lady Letty (Melford) (cam)
1930 Second Wife (Mack) (co-sc)
Publications

On GLENNON: articles—

_Film Comment_ (New York), Summer 1972.

* * *

Bert Glennon was a visual stylist whose cinematography enhanced the best work of such disparate directors as John Ford and Josef von Sternberg. Glennon exemplifies the professional Hollywood crafts-person overshadowed by volatile, individualistic directors, his name rarely mentioned in film histories despite such credits as DeMille’s _The Ten Commandments_, von Sternberg’s _Underworld_ and _The Scarlet Empress_, and Ford’s epochal 1939 trio—_Stagecoach_, _Young Mr. Lincoln_, and _Drums Along the Mohawk._

There were two Glennon styles—the glossy soft-focus of his 1920s Paramounts, and the dramatic, often minimalist, realism he employed at 20th Century-Fox in the late 1930s and at Warners ten years later. Along with Victor Milner, Glennon helped define the corporate Paramount look, with assignments for such directors of sophisticated fare as DeMille ( _Triumph_, _Lubitsch (The Patriot),_ Malcolm St. Clair _[Are Parents People?], A Woman of the World_, _Good and Naughty_, Rowland V. Lee _[Barbed Wire],_ and Mauritz Stiller _[Hotel Imperial, The Street of Sin]_—co-photographed by Milner and Harry Fischbeck).

Glennon's two great silent triumphs were _The Ten Commandments_ and _Underworld_. The DeMille epic was the most spectacular production up to that time, with Glennon in charge of a crew steeped with photographic talent, including Edward S. Curtis, Archie Stout, J. Peverell Marley, and Donald Keyes. The contemporary story is well handled, but the film is most satisfying in the Biblical sequences, many shot in reverential tableaux, with sweeping camera movements on the action scenes. The most powerful moments include the Golden Calf sequence, Moses (Theodore Roberts) receiving the Commandments, and the famous parting of the Red Sea, all handled by Glennon in a documentary-like fashion. A prologue of the Israelites fleeing Egypt was cophotographed in two-strip Technicolor with Ray Rennahan.

_Underworld_ foreshadowed many later crime films, uniting elements of that genre which would become commonplace, including Glennon’s _chiaroscuro_ photography. There are many fine photographic touches—the underworld ball, the police car chase—rendered in a crisp, economic manner. _Underworld_ was a much more starkly lit work than was common at Paramount, but in his next film for von Sternberg, _The Last Command_, Glennon reverted to the softer studio style. His mobile camera makes both_ Underworld _and_ The Last Command_ among the most visually pleasing films of the late silent era.

Glennon directed eight programmers between 1928 and 1930, making the transition to sound on such inaccessible titles as _Gang War_ and _Syncopation_. If the films do exist, they would be interesting rediscovers, since Glennon had by then shot nearly 40 features. He returned to cinematography in 1932 with von Sternberg's _Blonde Venus_, shooting interiors (Paul Ivano handled the exteriors). Among the scenes Glennon worked on is the “Hot Voodoo” number, with icon Marlene Dietrich emerging from a gorilla suit. Glennon shot two striking films for Gregory La Cava ( _The Half Naked Truth_ and _Gabriel over the White House_), and two important films for the young Katharine Hepburn, Dorothy Arzner’s _Christopher Strong_ and Lowell Sherman’s _Morning Glory_. These were all contemporary films, slickly shot by Glennon, and helped reestablish him as a quality cinematographer.

Glennon reunited with von Sternberg on _The Scarlet Empress_, which cast Dietrich as Russia’s Catherine the Great. Glennon achieved an extraordinary Baroque look, with dazzling camera movement complemented by von Sternberg’s eccentric _mise en scène_ and lavish art direction by Hans Dreier, Peter Ballbusch, and Richard Kollorsz. Truly one of the most photographically stunning works in American cinema, _The Scarlet Empress_ was a Glennon masterwork, culminating his contributions to the von Sternberg canon. Typically, the director made no mention of Bert Glennon in his autobiography.

Glennon moved to Fox in 1934, and inexplicably toiled on _B_-movies, routine products except for George Marshall’s gritty antikidnapping film _Show Them No Mercy_. His fortunes improved when Darryl Zanuck merged his 20th Century Pictures with the failing Fox and assigned him to shoot _The Prisoner of Shark Island_, the first of eight John Ford films shot by Glennon. The story of Dr. Samuel Mudd, the man who treated John Wilkes Booth’s wound after the Lincoln assassination and found himself incarcerated as an unwitting accomplice, the film reveals Ford’s passion for the era, nicely realized by Glennon. The Shark Island prison sequences are dark and gloomy, contrasted with the juleps-and-magnolia South symbolized by Mudd’s family. Like much of Ford’s best work, there is a silent film-feel to the cinematography. When Goldwyn borrowed Ford to make _The Hurricane_, a high-budget romantic adventure highlighted by the titular spectacle, the director brought along Glennon, who this time counterpointed South Seas exotica with prison sequences reminiscent of _Prisoner of Shark Island_.

Glennon’s position as a master cinematographer was confirmed with the 1939 Ford films. _Stagecoach_ deserves its reputation as one of the great westerns. Picturesque Monument Valley vistas and expert action sequences were expertly captured by Glennon, making _Stagecoach_ one of the best looking black-and-white movies ever made. In a direct stylistic contrast to the von Sternberg films, there is little camera movement, and rare use of close-ups, the notable exception being the Indians on the bluff in a preattract sequence.

Smaller in scope, _Young Mr. Lincoln_ impeccably recreated Indiana and Illinois of the 1830s and 1840s, a simple, Griffithian style which appealed to both Glennon and Ford. While an uncredited Arthur Miller shot the riverside locations, Glennon was responsible for the bulk of the film’s classical look, with the fight in the clearing particularly well rendered. _Drums along the Mohawk_ was a much more difficult film. Forced by Zanuck’s release schedule to rush from _Lincoln to Drums_, the filmmakers were plagued by minimal preparation, an unpolished script, and a rugged location in Utah’s Wasatch Mountains. Summer storms played havoc with matching shots, and to compound problems, the film was shot in three-strip Technicolor, Ford’s first in color. Despite these rigors, _Drums Along the Mohawk_ is exquisitely photographed, as perfect an exercise in color as _Stagecoach_ was for black-and-white. There are many notable exteriors in this Revolutionaty War drama, such as Henry Fonda and Claudette Colbert travelling west by oxcart; John Carradine’s raid with the Mohawks upon the settlers; the siege of Fort Stanwix; and Henry Fonda’s run through the forest, chased by Mohawk warriors.

It was ten years before Glennon worked with Ford again, but the occasion and the project was a special one— _Wagonmaster_. Ford told Peter Bogdanovich that _Wagonmaster_ was one of the films that “came closest to being what I had wanted to achieve.” A western masterwork written largely by Ford, the film is graced by Glennon’s newsreel quality cinematography. Glennon also shot Ford’s Rio Grande in stark black-and-white, the third and last of the John Wayne cavalry trilogy, and in Sergeant Rutledge he balanced dramatic exteriors of the black “Buffalo Soldiers” of the western Indian Wars with the sparse sound stage dramatics of the trial sequence.

Glenon did superlative work for another strong director, Raoul Walsh, on They Died With Their Boots On, in which he photographed a spectacular recreation of Custer’s Last Stand; and Desperate Journey, a slam-bang Second World War adventure highlighted by an exhilarating car chase. Glenon had a chance to create a stylized, romantic look for Our Town, and a well-done film noir, Edgar Ulmer’s Ruthless, then closed his career at Warners with some of the best 3-D photography (House of Wax, The Moonlighter, The Mad Magician).

—John A. Gallagher

GODFREY, Bob

Animator. Nationality: British. Born: West Maitland, New South Wales, Australia, 1921; emigrated with his parents to the United Kingdom, 1927. Career: 1949—background artist, Larkins animation studio; then member of Grasshopper Group; 1954—cofounder, Biographic Cartoon Films for producing short animated films and advertisements; 1964—formed Bob Godfrey Films; television work includes series The Do-It-Yourself Film Animation Show (as writer and narrator), 1974, Roobarb, 1974, Noah and Nelly in . . . SkylArk, 1976, and Henry’s Cat, 1983–86. Awards: Academy Award for Great, 1975; MBE, 1986; Senior Fellow, Royal College of Art, 1989.

Films as Director (Live-Action):

1955 Bridge and Groom (Daborn and Potterton)
1966 Just Like a Woman (Fuest)
1968 The Bliss of Mrs. Blossom (McGrath)
1970 Today Mexico, Tomorrow . . . the World (Shillingford)
1975 I’m Not Feeling Myself Tonight (McGrath)
1977 Sensations (Shillingford and Grant)
1980 The Falls (Greenaway)
1982 Henry’s Cat (Godfrey)

Films as Actor:

1955 You Must Be Joking (Winner) (titles designs)
1967 Ouch! (Bryant) (titles designs)
1968 Twenty-Nine (Cummins) (graphics)
1971 And Now for Something Completely Different (Macnaughton) (animation ph)
1979 Dream Doll (Godfrey) (pr)
1993 Small Talk (pr)

Other Films:

1965 You Must Be Joking (Winner) (titles designs)
1967 Ouch! (Bryant) (titles designs)
1968 Twenty-Nine (Cummins) (graphics)
1971 And Now for Something Completely Different (Macnaughton) (animation ph)
1979 Dream Doll (Godfrey) (pr)
1993 Small Talk (pr)

Publications

By GODFREY: articles—

Cinema Papers (Melbourne), August-September 1980.

On GODFREY: articles—

Movie Maker (Hemel Hempstead, Hertfordshire), April 1967.
One way and another, Bob Godfrey’s films have attracted a good deal of attention, not all of it invariably favourable. Great won him an Oscar; but feminists have condemned much of his work for misogyny—an charge to which he himself is now inclined to plead guilty—and several Godfrey cartoons have had “X” certificates slapped on them by alarmed censorship boards. Kama Sutra Rides Again was the first cartoon to receive an “R” (adults only) rating in Australia, which did it no harm at all at the box office. It also gained a special award from Yugoslav film-buffs as “The Film Most Likely to be Understood All Over the World,” much to Godfrey’s delight. “I am completely communication-oriented. . . . If the art gets in the way—stamp it out, I say. I’m a plagiarist, I will desecrate, I will mutilate, I’ll do anything in order to get the message across.”

He first achieved wide recognition with The Do-It-Yourself Cartoon Kit, a spirited and irreverent send-up of animated-film conventions which Ralph Stephenson described as “one of the funniest cartoons ever made.” The film signalled what Michel Roadévitch called, in tangy French, Godfrey’s “‘penchants pour l’hétéroclite, le saugrenu, le coq-à-l’âne” (taste for the offbeat, preposterous and parodic), as well as locating him squarely in a British comic-surrealist tradition descending from Lewis Carroll via the Goons, and leading on to Monty Python. (Godfrey’s influence is clearly evident in the work of Terry Gilliam, the Pythons’ animator.)

Another fecund source of imagery was Donald McGill, maestro of the ribald seaside postcard. McGill’s vast, predatory women and nervously randy little men peopled the long series of bawdy comedies, from Polygamous Polonium through Henry 9 ’til 5 and Kama Sutra Rides Again to Instant Sex and Dream Doll, for which Godfrey is now best known. In these “sexual punch-ups” (his own term) he mocked his audiences, prodded impudently at the boundaries of censorship, and exposed the fears and anxieties haunting the male libido. Repeatedly, his anti-heroes take refuge in reassuringly manly surrogates (masturbation fantasies, inflatable life-size dolls, cans of “Instant Sex”), rather than confront the terrifying prospect of a real, live woman. If some feminists have berated Godfrey for misogyny, others have felt more inclined to thank him for providing them with so much first-rate ammunition.

As the series progressed, the mood underlying the broad knock-about of Godfrey’s sex comedies appeared to darken, the depiction of emotional inadequacy to grow more bleak. The frenetically varied couplings of Kama Sutra Rides Again suggest, as Tom Ryan observed, “nightmare rather than satisfaction.” Most sombre of all is Dream Doll, codirected with Zlatko Grgic of the Zagreb studios. Despite problems during the making—Godfrey summed up coproduction as “like directing a jellyfish”—he was proud of the final result, “which took on a kind of Croatian doom—a sort of comedy noir. . . . Some of my films are very patchy, but this one really flows.” The ending, in which the Chaplinesque little man is transported heavenwards by a whole flotilla of inflatable women, deliberately parodies Lamorisse’s Le Ballon rouge; when Dream Doll was premiered at Annecy, the French were not amused.

Godfrey’s most ambitious work to date is the Oscar-winning Great, a 30-minute musical treatment of the life of the Victorian inventor-engineer, Isambard Kingdom Brunel. Visually and verbally exuberant, it packs in all the notable events of Brunel’s stupendous career, along with a wealth of songs, jokes, and miscellaneous objects—including Union Jacks, exploding hats, and multiple appearances by Queen Victoria, who makes her entrance rising majestically out of a lavatory bowl. This gives fair notice of the overall level of humour, but it would take a jaundiced viewer to object, given the film’s abundant energy, high spirits, and evident affection for its subject. Even so, according to Godfrey, the Brunel Society did object: “They said it was full of historical inaccuracies and lewd innuendoes. And why not, I say.” In recent years Godfrey has made determined efforts to escape narrow typecasting as the maker of “male anxiety films.” (“I think Maggie [Thatcher] used up all my misogyny,” he commented in a 1993 television programme. “I haven’t got any left, I used up so much on her.”) But not even the award of an OBE—which arrived, much to Godfrey’s glee, while a hanged effigy of Mrs Thatcher was on public display outside his studio—has conferred respectability. There have been collaborations with the left-anarchist cartoonist Steve Bell, whose scabrous political wit meshed well with the vigour of Godfrey’s style of animation, and a loose ongoing series of portraits of European nations, unrepentantly rich in irreverence and crude stereotypes. Godfrey’s main current activity is in the field of children’s television, exercising his anarchic (and only slightly less lewd) humour in such series as Rooobarb, Henry’s Cat and The Bunbury Tails. He remains fascinated and excited by the unlimited potential of his medium—“You can do the impossible. We leave the possible to the TV news”—and as iconoclastic as ever. “One of the things I want to do is Hamlet. With robots. Get rid of the poetry and keep all the violence and the paranoia.”

—Philip Kemp

GOLAN, Menahem, and Yoram GLOBUS

GOLAN. Producer and Director. Nationality: Israeli. Born: Tiberias, Palestine (now Israeli), 31 May 1929. Education: Studied directing at the Old Vic School and the London Academy of Music and Drama, filmmaking at New York University. Military Service: Served as pilot in the Israeli Air Force during the war of independence. Family: Married; three children. Career: Apprenticed at Habimah Theatre, Tel Aviv; after stage studies, directed plays in Israel; after film studies, worked as assistant to Roger Corman; later became head of 21st Century Film Corporation. Address: 21st Century Film Corporation, 7000 West Third Street, Los Angeles, CA 90048, U.S.A.

Films as Producers/Executive Producers:

1963 The Young Racers (Corman) (Golan = prop master only); El Dorado (+ Golan = d)
1964 Sallah Shabati (Sallah) (Kishon)
1966 Mivtza Kahir (Trunk to Cairo) (+ Golan = d); La Fille de la mer morte (+ Golan = d)
1969 What’s Good for the Goose (Golan = d, + co-sc only)
1970 Margo (+ Golan = d); Lupo (+ Golan = d)
1971 Ani Ohev Otach Rosa (I Love You, Rosa) (Mizrahi); Queen of the Road (+ Golan = d, + sc)
1972 Escape to the Sun (+ Golan = d, + co-sc)
1973 The House on Chelouche Street (Mizrahi); Kazablan (+ Golan = d)
1974 Lepke (+ Golan = d)
1975 Diamonds (Tevye and His Seven Daughters) (+ Golan = d, + co-sc)
1976 The Passover Plot (Campus)
1977 Operation Thunderbolt (Entebbe) (+ Golan = d); The Uranium Conspiracy (+ Golan = d); Eskimo Limon (Lemon Popsicle) (Davidson)
1978 It’s a Funny, Funny World (Shessel)
1979 Der Magier (The Magician of Lublin) (+ Golan = d); Imi Hageneralit (My Mother the General) (Zilberg); Yotz ‘im Kavua (Going Steady) (Davidson)
1980 The Apple (Star Rock) (+ Golan = d)
1981 New Year’s Evil (Alston); Body and Soul (Browers); Enter the Ninja (Globus = pr, Golan = d, + co-sc)
1982 That Championship Season (Miller); Hospital Massacre (Davidson); Sapiches (Private Popsicle; Lemon Popsicle IV) (Davidson); Ahava Ilemeth (The Secret of Yolanda) (Silberg); The Last American Virgin (Davidson); Nana (Wolman); House of the Long Shadows (Walker)
1983 Ten to Midnight (Lee Thompson); One More Chance (Firstenberg); Hercules (Coates); Revenge of the Ninja (Firstenberg); The Ultimate Solution of Grace Quigley
(Harvey); Roman Zair (Baby Love; Lemon Popsicle V) (Wolman); The Wicked Lady (Winner)

1984 I’m Almost Not Crazy: John Cassavetes—the Man and His Work (Ventura—doc); Over the Brooklyn Bridge (Alby’s Delight) (+ Golan = d); The Seven Magnificent Gladiators (Mattel); Bolero (Derek); Missing in Action (Zito); Breakdance 2: Electric Boogaloo (Firstenberg); Exterminator I (Buntzman); Ninja III: The Domination (Firstenberg); Sword of the Valiant (Wecks); Love Streams (Cassavetes); Sahara (McLaglen); The Naked Face (Forbes); Agatha Christie’s Ordeal by Innocence (David); Mata Hari (Harrington); Déjà vu (Richmond); Hot Resort (Robins); Thunder Alley (Cardone); The Ambassador (Lee Thompson)

1985 King Solomon’s Mines (Lee Thompson); Runaway Train (Konchalovsky); Lifeforce (Hooper); Invasion U.S.A. (Zito); Rappin’ (Silberg); Eskimo Ohgen (Eskimo Limon 6; Up Your Anchor; Lemon Popsicle 6) (Wolman); The Berlin Affair (Cavani)

1986 The Delta Force (+ Golan = d, + co-sc); Cobra (Cosmatos); Invaders from Mars (Hooper); The Texas Chainsaw Massacre II (Hooper); Over the Top (+ Golan = d); Assassination (Hunt); 52 Pick-Up (Frankenheimer); America 3000 (Engelbach); Avenging Force (Firstenberg); Dangerously Close (Pyun); Duet for One (Konchalovsky); Dumb Dicks (Ottoni); Field of Honor (Scheersmaker); Firewalker (Lee Thompson); Hashigoan Hagadot (Alter); Journey to the Center of the Earth (Lemorande); K’Fafoth—Lightning—The White Stallion (Levey); Malkat Hakita; Murphy’s Law (Lee Thompson); The Naked Cage (Nicholas); Number One with a Bullet (Smight); Otello (Zeffirelli); POW—the Escape (Amir); Salome (d’Anna)

1987 Business as Usual (Barrett); Rumpelstiltskin (Irving); Allan Quatermain and the Lost City of Gold (Nelson); American Ninja II (Firstenberg); Assassination (Hunt): The Barbarians (Deodato); Barfly (Schroeder); Beauty and the Beast (Marrer); Dancers (Ross); Death Wish 4: The Crackdown (Lee Thompson); Down Twisted (Pyun); Dutch Treat (Davidson); The Emperor’s New Clothes (Irving); Going Bananas (Davidson); Gor (Kiersch); Hansel and Gretel (Talan); King Lear (Godard); The Kitchen Toto (Hook); Mascara (Conrad); Masters of the Universe (Goddard); Red Riding Hood (Adam Brooks); Shy People (Konchalovsky); Sleeping Beauty (Irving); Snow White (Berz); Street Smart (Schatzberg); Superman IV: The Quest for Peace (Furie); Surrender (Belson); Too Much (Rochat); Tough Guys Don’t Dance (Maier); Undercover (Stockwell)

1988 D. C. Follies; Hanna’s War (Innocent Heroes) (+ Golan = d); The Threepenny Opera (+ Golan = d); Alien from L.A. (Pyun); Appointment with Death (Winner); Bloodsport (Arnold); Braddock: Missing in Action III (Norris); A Cry in the Dark (Schepisi); Doin’ Time on Planet Earth (Matthau); Wall of Tyrrany (Freedom Fighter) (Davis); Haunted Summer (Passer); Hero and the Terror (Tannen); Manifesto (Makavejev); Messenger of Death (Lee Thompson); Powaqqatsi (Reggio); Pass in Boots (Matner); Salsa (Davidson); Cyborg (Pyun) Mack the Knife (+ Golan = d, + sc); Kenite (Lee Thompson); Rockula (Bercovici); Sinbad of the Seven Seas; Young Love: Lemon Popsicle VII

Films as Producer—Golan:

1987 Die Papierene Brucke (Beckermann); The Hanoi Hilton (Chetwynd)
1989 Captain America (Pyun); The Phantom of the Opera (Little); The Rose Garden (Rademakers); Bad Jim (Ware)
1990 Bullseye! (Winner) (co); The Fifth Monkey (Rochat); Captain America (Pyun); The Forbidden Dance (Clark); Night of the Living Dead (Savini); Street Hunter (Gallagher)
1991 Terror of Manhattan (Clark); Invader (Cook); Badlanders (Gazarian); Three Days to a Kill (Williamson) (co); Rage (Maharaj) (co); Mad Dog Coll (Killer Instinct) (Stein) (co)
1992 Dance Macabre (Clark); The Finest Hour (Desert Shield); S.E.A.L.S. (Dotan)
1993 Teenage Bonnie and Klepto Clyde (Sheppardh) (exec); Silent Victim (Golan—for TV)
1994 Dead Center (Carver)
1999 Delta Force One: The Lost Patrol (Zito); Cattle Call (Guigui) (exec)

Films as Producer—Globus:

1989 A Man Called Sarge (Gillard); Secret of the Ice Cave (Gabrea)
1990 Delta Force 2 (Stranglehold: Delta Force 2; Delta Force 2: The Columbian Connection) (Norris) (co)
1992 Tipat Mazal (A Bit of Luck); Lelakek Tatut (Licking the Raspberry) (Barbash)
1993 Tobe Hooper’s Night Terrors (Hooper) (exec); The Mummy Lives (O’Hara) (exec); Hellbound (Norris) (exec); Street Knight (Magnoli) (exec)
1995 Chain of Command (Worth) (exec)
1999 Delta Force One: The Lost Patrol (Zito)

Publications

By GOLAN and GLOBUS: articles—

American Premiere (Los Angeles, California), April 1982.
Screen International (London), May 1982.
Ecran Fantastique (Paris), December 1984.
EPD Film (Frankfurt), vol. 4, no. 9, September 1987.

On GOLAN and GLOBUS: book—

On GOLAN and GLOBUS: articles—

Screen International (London), 7 October 1978.
The Israeli film producers Menahem Golan—a patriot who changed his name after the taking of the Golan Heights and directed Operation Thunderbolt about the Entebbe rescue—and Yoram Globus are cousins who bought the Cannon Group, a floundering film company, in 1979 for a mere $350,000, soon turning it into Hollywood’s most prosperous independent film company, with revenues reaching $150 million in 1986. Cannon achieved this meteoric ascent by making exploitation films cheaply and quickly, and by adhering to a number of innovative though sometimes questionable business tactics.

The average Cannon film cost about $5 million to make, whereas a film from a major studio such as Paramount, Columbia, or Universal often costs two to three times that amount. Because studios allocate enormous budgets for talent, production crews, publicity, and the use of studio equipment, many productions must gross $20 million just to break even. As a result, a film thought to possess box-office potential is booked in as many theaters as possible in hopes of drawing huge audiences and profits. If the film is a flop, however, the loss to the studio can be astronomical. By working outside the Hollywood system and avoiding many of its expensive accouterments, an independent company such as Cannon could keep production costs down, although the savings frequently came at the expense of quality. Many independent companies are too small and financially insecure to distribute their own films and, ironically, rely on the stronger distribution arm of a major studio. Again, risk and costs are minimized, yet so is the chance of reaping huge profits.

As independent producers, Golan and Globus found additional ways to reduce costs, maximize profits, and at the same time attract name stars and directors. Cannon persuaded a number of stars to forfeit their million dollar-plus salaries in exchange for smaller salaries and profit sharing. To safeguard itself from bankruptcy, Cannon sold its films’ cable, home video, and overseas exhibition rights in advance of production, thereby guaranteeing a marketplace for even the poorest films. Impatient with Hollywood excess, Golan, the company’s chairman and chief artistic decision maker, rigorously kept films from going over schedule or budget. Golan also refused to read scripts, much to the consternation of agents and lawyers. Instead, he made fast decisions on what he felt to be promising story ideas. This brashness, combined with the production of exploitation films such as Bolero, Schizoid, Death Wish IV, and Invasion, U.S.A., earned Golan and Globus a sort of “bad boys’” reputation in Hollywood.

Indeed, Golan and Globus surprised the film community in 1982 with their production of Jason Miller’s Pulitzer Prize-winning drama That Championship Season. The film was a commercial failure but it did suggest that Cannon was interested in serious filmmaking. Commercial success also eluded its esoteric productions of Robert Altman’s Fool for Love and John Cassavetes’s Love Streams, which cost little to make. Interestingly enough, neither of these films would have been made by a major studio today, the audience for them being too limited. Responding to the artistic restrictions of a profit-motivated studio system, directors such as Roman Polanski, Bill Forsyth, Hector Babenco, John Huston, and Jean-Luc Godard turned to Cannon for help. And in their determination to upgrade their image, Golan and Globus afforded a generous amount of artistic freedom to those who could work within their budgetary constraints. Nevertheless, most of Cannon’s “prestige” projects—Anthony Harvey’s The Ultimate Solution of Grace Quigley, Andrei Konchalovsky’s Runaway Train—are as ill-judged, clodhopping, and embarrassing as their coattail-riding Charles Bronson vehicles (Assassination) or Israeli sex comedies (The Lemon Popsicle series).

As Cannon’s artistic ambitions expanded, so did its assets and financial burdens. In 1985 Cannon produced 23 films, more than any other film company in the United States. Its acquisition of Thorn EMI Screen Entertainment, a production and distribution company, and the Commonwealth Theaters, the sixth-largest theater chain in the country, proved Cannon a force to be reckoned with. This risky move, however, also resulted in high production costs and crippling debts. Though Golan and Globus managed to get in on the beginnings of certain exploitation fads (teenage sex, breakdance musicals, vigilante action, Chuck Norris), they showed a lack of Corman-style savvy by staying with them long after the market had passed on, and floundered badly by producing a slate of live-action fairy-tale adaptations that crucially missed the Disney market.

Among the films Golan himself chose to direct was the obvious commercial loser Over the Top, a Sylvester Stallone vehicle about arm-wrestling, for which Cannon unwisely laid out a star-level salary. Golan always had a knack of pulling mediocre properties from the Cannon list for his own directorial exercises and making stodgy embarrassments such as The Magician of Lublin, Over the Brooklyn Bridge, Hanna’s War, and The Threepenny Opera. In Cannon’s heyday, the trade press were thick with portfolios of ads for upcoming projects, many of which (Citizen Joe, Spider-Man) never came to pass.

After acquiring the ABC chain, Cannon had to be helped out by European financiers, and Golan and Globus took an unaccustomed back seat. In 1989, Golan declared a desire to produce “artier” works, dissolved the Cannon-Globus partnership, and established an independent production company, 21st Century which eventually specialized in direct-to-video offerings (Night Terrors, The Mummy Lives) from the likes of longtime hacks Tobe Hooper and Harry Alan Towers. Globus, meanwhile, although still involved with MGM-Pathé (previously Cannon), has his own production company, Melrose Entertainment, which makes action-adventure movies in the best Cannon tradition. After the collapse of his film career, Golan resuscitated himself by putting on a blockbusting stage production of The Sound of Music in Tel Aviv, controversial mostly because the Nazis in the play were speaking Hebrew.

—Heidi Gensch, updated by Kim Newman
GOLDMAN, William

Films as Writer:

1964 Masquerade (Dearden) (co)
1966 Harper (The Moving Target) (Smight)
1969 Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid (Hill)
1972 The Hot Rock (How to Steal a Diamond in Four Uneasy Lessons) (Yates)

Films Based on Goldman’s Writings:

1963 Soldier in the Rain (Nelson)
1968 No Way to Treat a Lady (Smight)

Publications

By GOLDMAN: fiction—

Your Turn to Curtsey, My Turn to Bow, New York, 1958.
The Thing of It Is . . . , New York, 1967.
Wigger (for children), New York, 1974.
Brothers, New York, 1986.

By GOLDMAN: other writings—

With James Goldman, Blood, Sweat and Stanley Poole (play), New York, 1962.
With James Goldman, A Family Affair (play), New York, 1962.
Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid (screenplay), New York, 1969.
The Great Waldo Pepper (screenplay), New York, 1975.

Hype and Glory (nonfiction), New York, 1990.

By GOLDMAN: articles—

Filmmakers Newsletter (Ward Hill, Massachusetts), October 1977.
‘‘Butch Cassidy and the Nazi Dentist,’’ no. 5, Esquire, 1994.
The Pig and the Hank, no. 8, New York, 1996.
‘‘Tracking The Ghost and the Darkness,’’ in Premiere (Boulder), November 1996.
‘‘From Brando to Paltrow,’’ in Premiere (Boulder), December 1996.
Film en Televisie + Video (Brussels), July 1997.
‘‘The Gray ’90s: Nobody Knows Anything,’’ in Premiere (Boulder), November 1999.

On GOLDMAN: book—

On GOLDMAN: articles—

American Film (Washington, D.C.), January/February 1976.
Cinéma (Paris), August/September 1977.
Cinéma (Paris), August/September 1978.
Stone, Botham, in American Screenwriters, 2nd series, edited by Randall Clark, Detroit, 1986.
Welkos, Robert W. “Profile: He Knows They Don’t Know,” in The Los Angeles Times, 2 April 2000.

* * *

William Goldman is a master craftsman of streamlined scripts with well-delineated characters and crisp dialogue. For Goldman, screenwriting is carpentry. “The single most important thing contributed by the screenwriter,” he once said, “is the structure.” Accordingly, Goldman’s scripts are fast-paced models of plot design.

Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid was an important screenplay even before it was produced. In 1967 it sold for the then unheard-of price of $400,000, setting an industrial precedent that helped American screenwriters gain recognition and clout. The film was extremely popular, but suffered critically in comparison with Peckinpah’s The Wild Bunch, released a few months earlier. Where The Wild Bunch was a gritty, intensely graphic revisionist Western, Butch Cassidy appeared lightweight, flip, and coy. And Butch Cassidy’s freeze-frame ending (which came directly from Goldman’s script) seemed tame and retrograde compared to The Wild Bunch’s apocalyptic bloodbath. But for all its cuteness, Butch Cassidy was revisionist too. Goldman’s heroes were imperfect (Sundance cannot swim, and Butch, notorious leader of the Hole in the Wall Gang, confesses he has never killed anyone) and drawn on a human rather than heroic scale (Butch and Sundance spend most of the film running away from the railroad agents, strenuously avoiding the obligatory Western confrontation). Goldman parodied train robberies, bank holdups, and tightly lipped face-offs. He made a joke of the gathering-of-the-posse scene (de rigueur since The Great Train Robbery) by writing one in which the local marshal fails to persuade the townsfolk to rush out after Butch and Sundance. (“It’s up to us to do something!” he exhorts the marshal. “What’s the point?” answers one uninterested citizen.) Perhaps most revisionist of all was Goldman’s arch, smart-alecky dialogue. Having his characters speak like witty urbanites was an experiment that might have failed, but it worked, and its originality was no small part of the film’s charm. If The Wild Bunch made us think about violence in Westerns, Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid made us question Western conventions.

Although Goldman has adapted other authors’ works as well as his own, he is not, by his own admission, ruthless enough when the source is his. This may account for the absence of Goldman’s usually hard-driving plotting in Marathon Man and Magic, both adapted from his best-selling novels. Szell’s torturing of Babe with a dental drill is unforgettable, but the main action in Marathon Man is muddled. Magic develops some keen moments of tension, but it fizzles where it should pop, and pales badly in comparison with its generic ancestor, Michael Redgrave’s ventriloquist sequence in Dead of Night. But in adapting others’ works for the screen Goldman is expert. Indeed, it seems the longer and more intricate the original, the better his final script. His adaptations for A Bridge Too Far and All the President’s Men, both based on nonfiction books about complex historical events, are clean and economical translations, especially considering the problems he faced.

In A Bridge Too Far Goldman was required to make commercially palatable what was essentially a noncommercial property. Cornelius Ryan’s book documented a crucial but (in the United States) little-known Allied operation that defies simple summarization (unless it would be “We lost”). Goldman cut through the book’s tangled historical web and provided an easily understood, straight-line narrative by making the film, as he says, “the ultimate cavalry-to-the-rescue story”: the Allies need to take a series of bridges and relieve 35,000 soldiers who have parachuted in behind enemy lines. But the loss suffered by the Allies when they came up one bridge short of their objective dictated a deflated ending, which no doubt had something to do with the film’s disappointing reception.

In All the President’s Men Goldman had to find a way to interest audiences in a talky political story, lacking in action and climactic confrontations, with an ending viewers already knew. Goldman’s solution was to model the film on late 1940s-early 1950s investigative reporter films noir (Goldman’s script preface specified that the film should have “a black-and-white feel”) and give it racehorse pacing (another prefatory script note: “This film is written to go like a streak”). He structured the film as a dramatic progression of clues uncovered by the giant-killing investigators, Woodward and Bernstein, and built a solid foundation for a gripping thriller.

Goldman is a pragmatic professional about his work and about the baroque process of going from script to screen. In Adventures in the Screen Trade Goldman looks at the movie business sans rose-colored glasses and comes up with screenwriting rules of thumb such as what he considers to be the key movie industry fact: “NOBODY KNOWS ANYTHING.” And there is this clear-eyed observation, which may explain why Goldman continues to describe himself as a novelist who writes screenplays rather than the other way around. This thoroughly professional screenwriter feels that in the final analysis screenwriting—because of built-in industrial limitations—will ruin a serious writer. “I truly believe,” Goldman writes, “that if all you do with your life is write screenplays, it ultimately has to denigrate the soul. . . . Because you will spend your always-decreasing days . . . writing Perfect Parts for Perfect People.’’

During the first half of the 1980s, Goldman went through a fallow period when none of his scripts were produced. However, these doldrums ended in 1986, when Goldman sold his screenplay of The Princess Bride (based on his 1973 novel of the same name). He remained busy throughout the decade of the 1990s (a period whose films Goldman has characterized as the most lackluster in the history of American cinema) and beyond. In the spring of 2000, he published two nonfiction books. Which Lie Did I Tell? More Adventures in the Screen Trade was a sequel to Goldman’s popular 1983 memoir, Adventures in the Screen Trade. The second book, The Big Picture: Who Killed Hollywood? And Other Essays collects short pieces that Goldman originally wrote for Premiere and other popular magazines.

—Charles Ramirez Berg, updated by John McCarty, further updated by Justin Guarini

GOLDSMITH, Jerry

Films as Composer:

1957 Black Patch (Miner)
1958 City of Fear (Lerner)

Jerry Goldsmith

1959 Face of a Fugitive (Wendkos)
1960 Studs Lonigan (Lerner)
1962 Lonely Are the Brave (Miller); The Spiral Road (Mulligan); Freud (Freud: The Secret Passion) (Huston); A Gathering of Eagles (Delbert Mann)
1963 The List of Adrian Messenger (Huston); The Stripper (Woman of Summer) (Schaffner); The Prize (Robson); Lilies of the Field (Nelson); Take Her, She’s Mine (Koster); Seven Days in May (Frankenheimer); Fate Is the Hunter (Nelson); Rio Conchos (Douglas)
1965 The Satan Bug (J. Sturges); In Harm’s Way (Preminger); Von Ryan’s Express (Robson); A Patch of Blue (Green); Morituri (The Saboteur Code Name ‘‘Morituri’’) (Wiicki); The Agony and the Ecstasy (Reed) (prologue only, d by Labella); Our Man Flint (Daniel Mann)
1966 The Trouble with Angels (Lupino); Stagecoach (Douglas); The Blue Max (Guillermin); Seconds (Frankenheimer); The Sand Pebbles (Wise); Warning Shot (Kulik)
1967 In Like Flint (Douglas); Hour of the Gun (J. Sturges); The Film-Flam Man (One Born Every Minute) (Kershner); Sebastian (Greene); Planet of the Apes (Schaffner)
1968 The Detective (Douglas); Bandolero! (Mclaglen); 100 Rifles (Gries); The Illustrated Man (Smight)
1969 The Most Dangerous Man in the World (The Chairman) (Lee Thompson); Justine (Cukor); Patton (Patton: Lust for Glory) (Schaffner)
1970 The Ballad of Cable Hogue (Peckinpah); The Magic Garden of Stanley Sweetheart (Horn) (song); Tora! Tora! Tora!
(Fleischer, Masuda, and Fukasaku); The Traveling Executioner (Smight); Rio Lobo (Hawks); The Mephisto Waltz (Wendkos); The Brotherhood of the Bell (Wendkos)

1971 Escape from the Planet of the Apes (Taylor); Wild Rovers (Edwards); The Last Run (Fleischer); A Step Out of Line (McEvey); The Homecoming (Cook); Do Not Fold, Spindle, or Mutilate (Post); The Cable Car Murder (Thorpe)

1972 The Culpepper Cattle Company (Richards) (co); The Other (Mulligan); Shamus (Kulik); Pursuit (Crichton); The Man (Sargent)

1973 The Red Pony (Totten); Ace Eli and Rodger of the Skies (Ermann); One Little Indian (McEvey); The Don Is Dead (Fleischer); Papillon (Schauffner); The Police Story (The Stake-Out) (Graham); Hawkins on Murder (Taylor)

1974 Chinatown (Polanski); Spys (Kershner) (U.S. version only); Ransom (The Terrorists) (Wrede); The Reincarnation of Peter Proud (Lee Thompson); Indict and Convict (Sagal); Winter Kill (Taylor); A Tree Grows in Brooklyn (Hardy)

1975 Breakout (Gries); The Wind and the Lion (Milius); Take a Hard Ride (Margheriti); Babe (Kulik); Breakheart Pass (Gries); A Girl Named Sooner (Delbert Mann)

1976 The Omen (Donner); Logan's Run (Anderson); High Velocity (R. Kramer); The Cassandra Crossing (Cosmatos); Islands in the Stream (Schauffner)

1977 Twilight's Last Gleaming (Aldrich); Coma (Crichton); MacArthur (Sargento); Damnation Alley (Smight); Capricorn One (Hyams); Contract on Cherry Street (Graham)

1978 Damien—Omen II (Taylor); The Swarm (I. Allen); The Boys from Brazil (Schauffner); Magic (Attenborough); The First Great Train Robbery (The Great Train Robbery) (Crichton)

1979 Alien (Scott); Players (Harvey); Cabo Blanco (Lee Thompson); Star Trek: The Motion Picture ( Wise)

1981 Raggedy Man (Fisk); Inchon (Young)

1982 Night Crossing (Delbert Mann); Poltergeist (Hooper); The Challenge (Frankenheimer); The House on Sorority Row (House of Evil) (Rosman) (co)

1983 Psycho II (Franklin); Twilight Zone—The Movie (Landis and others); The Salamander (Zimmer); Under Fire (Sprotsswoode)

1984 Supergirl (Szwarc); Gremlins (Dante); Runaway (Crichton); Baby—Secret of the Lost Legend (Norton); The Lonely Guy (Hiller)

1985 King Solomon's Mines (Lee Thompson); Legend (Scott); Rambo: First Blood, Part II (Crimson)

1986 Hoosiers (Anspaugh); Link (Franklin); Explorers (Dante); Poltergeist II (Gibson)

1987 Extreme Prejudice (Hill); Innerspace (Dante); Lionheart (Schauffner); Allan Quatermain and the Lost City of Gold (Nelson and Arnold)

1988 Criminal Law (Campbell); Rambo III (MacDonald); Rent-a-Cop (London)

1989 The Burbs (Dante); Leviathan (Cosmatos); Star Trek V: The Final Frontier (Shatner); Warlock (Mar Abel)

1990 The Russia House (Scheptisi); Gremlins 2: The New Batch (Dante); Total Recall (Verhoeven)

1991 Not without My Daughter (Gilbert); Sleeping with the Enemy (Ruben)

1992 Basic Instinct (Verhoeven); Forever Young (Miner); Love Field (Kaplan); Medicine Man (McTiernan); Mom and Dad Save the World (Beeman); Mr. Baseball (Scheptisi)

1993 Dennis the Menace (Castle); Malice (H. Becker); Matinee (Dante); Rudy (Anspaugh); Six Degrees of Separation (Scheptisi); The Vanishing (Sluizer)

1994 The River Wild (Hanson); IQ (Scheptisi); Gunmen (Sarafian); Angie (Coolidge); Bad Girls (Kaplan); Star Trek: The Next Generation—All Good Things (Kolbe—series for TV); The Shadow (Mulkah)

1995 Star Trek: Voyager—Caretaker (Kolbe—series for TV); Star Trek: Voyager (series for TV) (main title theme); Legend (Balaban and Bole—series for TV); Congo (Marshall); First Knight (Zucker); Powder (Salva)

1996 City Hall (Becker); Executive Decision (Critical Decision) (Baird); Chain Reaction (Davis); The Ghost and the Darkness (Hopkins); Star Trek: First Contact (Franke)

1997 Fierce Creatures (Scheptisi and Young); L.A. Confidential (Hanson); Air Force One (Petersen); The Edge (Tamahori); Alien: Resurrection (Jeunet)

1998 Deep Rising (Sommers); U.S. Marshals (Baird); Mulan (Bancroft and Cook—anim); Small Soldiers (Dante); Star Trek: Insurrection (Franke)

1999 The Mummy (Sommers); The 13th Warrior (McTiernan); The Haunting (de Bont)

2000 The Kid (Turteltaub); The Hollow Man (Verhoeven)

Film as Music Director:

1969 Joaquí Marieta (Bellamy)

Publications

By GOLDSMITH: articles—

On GOLDSMITH: articles—

The career of Jerry Goldsmith is difficult to classify, either in cinematic or musical terms. One of the most prolific contemporary film composers, Goldsmith has provided scores for works in all genres and drawn on a wide range of musical styles, from the Latin chants provided in The Omen to the atonal approach of Fried and Twilight's Last Gleaming to the Copland-ish Lonely Are the Brave and the avant-garde effects created for Planet of the Apes and Alien. Goldsmith has demonstrated an ability to find the correct sound for each film but his employment of a vast number of musical styles has been more often innovative rather than merely imitative.

As one of a new generation of composers that began to emerge in the 1950s, Goldsmith not surprisingly displayed in his early work for film and television a familiarity with jazz and other contemporary idioms. Nevertheless, he has also demonstrated that he is equally comfortable with a more traditional symphonic approach, and thus he serves as a vital link between the film scoring techniques of the past and the practices of his peers. Unlike composers who have emphasized either discipline, Goldsmith, similar to Bernard Herrmann, has preferred to let the film dictate the musical approach rather than imposing a specific musical style onto the film, and this concern with finding the right approach to complement the image makes him in some respects more indicative of what a film composer should be than many of his colleagues who have shown through their scores the development of a recognizable style regardless of the subject matter.

In addition to the employment of a number of different styles, Goldsmith has also relied on selective instrumentation and use of the score in finding the appropriate sound for a given film. The score for Seconds played off piano against organ to match both the futuristic and lyrically nostalgic aspects of the story, while a specific ensemble was devised for Chinatown which employed several pianos and a solo trumpet. Goldsmith was not the original choice to score Chinatown. He was called in at the last minute to compose a new score in record time when the first composer’s score was rejected. Goldsmith’s score is so perfectly suited to the film’s neo-noir mood, it is difficult to imagine the film scored any other way.

For Planet of the Apes Goldsmith chose to avoid the tendency in the science-fiction subjects toward electronic scoring by creating sound effects through avant-garde employment of a conventional orchestra augmented by percussion effects and devices such as the use of mixing bowls, and the result is an other-worldly sound reminiscent in places of the work of composers such as Bartok. Goldsmith has also been selective about where music is employed in films, providing a deliberately sparse (and consequently more effective) score for Patton and choosing not to provide music in Coma until halfway into the film.

The range of Goldsmith’s work can be seen even in his identification with a single filmmaker such as Franklin J. Schaffner. The composer has provided a diversity of musical styles to match Schaffner’s diverse number of subjects, from the aforementioned Planet of the Apes and the martial Patton score to the more lyrical Islands in the Stream and Papillon, the Viennese waltz for The Boys from Brazil to the elegant with a touch of strange Lionheart, Schaffner’s ill-fated last film which was barely released. Yet, despite this variety many of Goldsmith’s works contain trademark devices such as an employment of harsh glissandos during suspense scenes and driving passages founded on an abruptly syncopated style which are balanced off against melodic romantic themes. Although the latter tend at times, as in Coma, toward the maudlin. The latter themes are often recapitulated at the end of the film and many of the scores show a similarity of construction in this closing music with an abrupt punctuation of a few notes serving as the lead-in to the final swelling statement of the main thematic line.

While Goldsmith’s early work was often for war films or contemporary espionage dramas, his recent output has often been for science-fiction subjects, the most popular contemporary genre. For many of these he has avoided repeating the approach of the Apes score and has instead sought out different but equally unique approaches, such as the use of horns to create a sense of isolation in Alien. Yet his prolific output has at times resulted in a sameness of approach and it is possible to detect repetition even in works that are seemingly unrelated. For example, a theme in The Great Train Robbery sounds like a modification and reorchestration of the waltz theme in The Boys from Brazil adapted to a new musical idiom. Nevertheless, most of Goldsmith’s work reflects his dedication to the blending of sound and image and demonstrates the ability of film music to employ a variety of traditional approaches and even create some new ones.

Although he turned 70 in 1999, Jerry Goldsmith showed no signs of slowing down as the twenty-first century dawned. He scored two films (The Kid and The Hollow Man) scheduled for release in 2000, and then contracted for another (The Shipping News) due out in 2001.
In celebration of the composer’s seventieth birthday, the Los Angeles Philharmonic performed an entire program devoted to his film scores. The performance drew a packed house to the Hollywood Bowl, possibly because of the evening’s guest conductor — Jerry Goldsmith.

—Richard R. Ness, updated by John McCarty, further updated by Justin Gustainis

GOLDWYN, Samuel

Producer. Nationality: American. Born: Samuel Goldfish in Warsaw, Poland, 27 August 1884; emigrated to the United States, 1897; naturalized, 1902. Family: Married 1) Blanche Lasky, 1910 (divorced 1919); 2) Frances Howard, 1925; son: the producer Samuel Goldwyn, Jr. Career: 1895—stayed with relatives in England and worked as blacksmith’s helper; 1897—emigrated to the United States: worked as apprentice glovemaker, Gloversville, New York, and went to night school, then glove salesman; 1912—with his brother-in-law, Jesse L. Lasky, formed Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, with Cecil B. De Mille as director (Goldwyn was treasurer); 1916—merged with Zukor’s Famous Players (Goldwyn was chairman of the board); 1918—formed Goldwyn company with Edgar Selwyn; 1922—formed Samuel Goldwyn Productions, with no partners (his previous Selwyn company merged with Metro and Mayer companies to form Metro Goldwyn Mayer). Awards: Academy Award for The Best Years of Our Lives, 1946; Irving G. Thalberg Award, 1946; Jean Hersholt Humanitarian Award, 1957; U.S. Freedom Medal, 1971. Died: In Beverly Hills, California, 3 January 1974.

Films as Producer:
1923 Potash and Perlmutter (Badger)
1924 The Eternal City (Fitzmaurice); Cytherea (Fitzmaurice); Tarnish (Fitzmaurice); In Hollywood with Potash and Perlmutter (Green); Greed (von Stroheim) (co)
1925 A Thief in Paradise (Fitzmaurice); His Supreme Moment (Fitzmaurice); The Dark Angel (Fitzmaurice); Stella Dallas (H. King)
1926 Ben-Hur (Niblo) (co); The Winning of Barbara Worth (H. King); Partners Again (With Potash and Perlmutter) (H. King)
1927 The Night of Love (Fitzmaurice); The Magic Flame (H. King); The Devil Dancer (Niblo)
1928 Two Lovers (Niblo); The Awakening (Fleming)
1929 The Rescue (Brennon); Bulldog Drummond (Jones); This Is Heaven (Santell); Condemned (Ruggles)
1930 Raffles (D’Arrast and Fitzmaurice); Whoopee! (Freeland); The Devil to Pay (Fitzmaurice)
1931 Street Scene (K. Vidor); One Heavenly Night (Fitzmaurice); Palmy Days (Sutherland); The Unholy Garden (Fitzmaurice); Arrowsmith (Ford); Tonight or Never (LeRoy)
1932 The Greeks Had a Word for Them (V. Sherman); Cynara (K. Vidor); The Kid from Spain (McCarey)
1933 Roman Scandals (Tuttle); The Masquerader (Wallace)
1934 Nana (Arzner); We Live Again (Mamoulian); Kid Millions (Del Ruth)
1935 The Wedding Night (K. Vidor); The Dark Angel (Franklin); Barbary Coast (Hawks); Splendor (Nugent)
1936 Strike Me Pink (Taurog); Doddsworth (Wyler); Come and Get It (Hawks and Wyler); These Three (Wyler); Beloved Enemy (Potter)
1937 Dead End (Wyler); Woman Chases Man (Blystone); Stella Dallas (K. Vidor); The Hurricane (Ford and Heisler)
1938 The Goldwyn Follies (Marshall, and Potter uncredited); The Adventures of Marco Polo (Mayo, and Ford uncredited); The Cowboy and the Lady (Potter)
1939 The Real Glory (Hathaway); Wuthering Heights (Wyler); They Shall Have Music (Ragged Angels) (Mayo)
1940 The Westerner (Wyler); Raffles (Wood)
1941 The Little Foxes (Wyler); Ball of Fire (Hawks); The Pride of the Yankees (Wood)
1943 The North Star (Milestone); They Got Me Covered (Butler)
1944 Up in Arms (Nugent); The Princess and the Pirate (Butler)
1945 Wonder Man (Humberstone)
1946 The Kid from Brooklyn (McLeod); The Best Years of Our Lives (Wyler)
1947 The Secret Life of Walter Mitty (McLeod); The Bishop’s Wife (Koster)
1948 A Song Is Born (Hawks); Enchantment (Reis)
1949 Roseanna McCoy (Reis); My Foolish Heart (Robson)
1950 Edge of Doom (Robson); Our Very Own (Miller)
1952 Hans Christian Andersen (C. Vidor); I Want You (Robson)
1955 Guys and Dolls (Mankiewicz)
1959 Porgy and Bess (Preminger)
Publications

By GOLDWYN: book—

Behind the Screen, New York, 1923.

By GOLDWYN: articles—

Sight and Sound (London), April-June 1953.
Journal of Screen Producers Guild (Beverly Hills, California), December 1965.

On GOLDWYN: books—

On GOLDWYN: articles—

Film (New York), November-December 1953.
Films and Filming (London), October 1956.
Film History, vol. 2, no. 2, June-July 1988.
Sarris, Andrew, “ ‘We Are Dealing With Facts, Not Realities’,” in Film Comment (New York), March-April 1989.
Cousins, Russell, “ ‘Sanitizing Zola: Dorothy Arzner’s Problematic Nana’,” in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury), October 1996.

---

Samuel Goldwyn was one of the great independent producers during the heyday of the Hollywood studio system. Most of his films performed well at the box office, with critics, and at the Academy Awards.

Goldwyn’s success was due, in part, to his genius for promoting his films and manipulating publicity about them. Perhaps more important to his success was his insistence that his films be well-crafted and of high quality—included, that is, with what became known as the Goldwyn Touch. Goldwyn’s approach to moviemaking was to buy the best available scripts, successful plays, and novels, and hire the best available writers, directors, and crews to bring them to the screen. The script for These Three, for example, was Lillian Hellman’s adaptation of her Broadway hit play The Children’s Hour; the director was William Wyler (with whom Goldwyn eventually collaborated on seven films, including their most successful film, The Best Years of Our Lives, which won seven Oscars); and the cinematographer was Gregg Toland, whose credits include most of the Wyler-Goldwyn collaborations, John Ford’s The Grapes of Wrath, and Orson Welles’s Citizen Kane, the film that established Toland’s reputation as one of the greatest cinematographers in film history.

Goldwyn hated working with partners, so he usually financed his films himself, sparing no expense. For instance, Goldwyn paid Bette Davis $385,000—an exorbitant sum in 1940—to appear in The Little Foxes. And when halfway through the filming of Nana, Goldwyn decided that the rough cut lacked the Goldwyn Touch, he scrapped the whole production, throwing away the $411,000 that he had already spent on the film, and started all over with Dorothy Arzner replacing George Fitzmaurice as director.

Sam Goldwyn is remembered for his “Goldwynisms”—unintentionally humorous statements springing from Goldwyn’s unorthodox way of thinking, such as, “ ‘Include me out,’” or “ ‘A verbal contract isn’t worth the paper it’s written on.’” He is remembered for his fierce independence and his desire to control every aspect of the production and marketing of his films, often to the dismay of his directors, stars, writers, and especially his partners. Most of all, he is remembered for his films and the quality that he brought to them—the Goldwyn Touch.

—Clyde Kelly Dunagan

---

GOLOVNYA, Anatoli

Cinematographer. Nationality: Russian. Born: Anatoli Dimitreyevich Golovnya in Simferopol, Russia, 1900. Education: Attended the State Film School, Moscow, mid-1920s. Family: Married the photographer Tamara Lobova. Career: Entered films as camera assistant in mid-1920s; 1925—first film as cinematographer, Chess Fever; then worked almost exclusively on films of the director Vsevolod Pudovkin until 1950; 1934—began teaching at the Cinema Institute: became head of the camerawork department; also author of several books on photography. Award: People’s Artist, 1935. Died: In 1982.

Films as Cinematographer:

1925  Kirpichiki (Obolenski and Doller) (asst); Luch smerti (The Death Ray) (Kuleshov) (asst); Shakmatnaya goryachka (Chess Fever) (Pudovkin)
1926  Mechanika golovnovo mozga (Mechanics of the Brain) (Pudovkin); Mat (Mother) (Pudovkin)
1927  Konyets Sankt-Peterburge (The End of St. Petersburg) (Pudovkin)
1928  Potamok Chingis-khan (The Heir to Genghis Khan; Storm over Asia) (Pudovkin); Zhivotv trup (A Living Corpse) (Otsep)
1929  Chelovek iz restorana (The Man from the Restaurant) (Protazanov)
1933  Dezertir (Deserter) (Pudovkin) (co)
1938  Pobeda (Victory) (Pudovkin and Doller)
1939  Minin i Pozharsky (Pudovkin and Doller) (co)
1941  Suvorov (Pudovkin and Doller) (co); Pir v Girmunka (Feast at Zhirmunka) (Pudovkin and Doller—for series Fighting Film Albums ) (co)
1946  Amiral Nakhimov (Admiral Nakhimov) (Pudovkin) (co)
1950  Yukovsky (Pudovkin)

Publications

By GOLOVNYA: books—

Svet v iskusstve operatora [Light in the Cameraman’s Art]. Moscow, 1945.
The Screen Is My Palette (autobiography).

By GOLOVNYA: articles—

‘‘Fundamentals of Camerawork,’’ in Sovetsky Ekran (Moscow), 1 November 1927.
Soviet Film (Moscow), no. 12, 1968.

On GOLOVNYA: articles—

Sovetsky Ekran (Moscow), no. 12, 1959.
Filkutura (Budapest), no. 7, 1961.
Soviet Film (Moscow), no. 11, 1970.
Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), no. 2, 1975.
Soviet Film (Moscow), no. 2, 1975.
Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), January 1983.

* * *

The work of Anatoli Golovnya will always be associated with the films of Pudovkin, whose close collaborator he was and for whom he worked almost exclusively. Before he joined Pudovkin’s team he had worked for other directors or as assistant to the cameraman Levitsky. Golovnya photographed three great masterpieces of Pudovkin, Mother, The End of St. Petersburg, and Storm over Asia. His feeling for light and shade, the dramatic structure of the image, and his feeling for people made his contribution to these films a truly creative achievement. As Harry Alan Potamkin noted: “Golovnya’s work in The End of St. Petersburg adds his name to the lists of the heroic in camera creation.” He carried the plastic realism and the powerfully expressive vigour of painters like Surikov and Serov to the screen. In the Pudovkin films the style is essentially lyrical no matter how realistic the theme. His awareness of structure, his hypersensitive eye, and his acute intelligence gave shape and form to the imagery. Especially in Storm over Asia his virtuosity is particularly noticeable in the great and contrasting landscapes and in his portraits of both the actors and natural types that fill the film. From the first shots of the dissolving approach to the hut in the barren mountainside one’s imagination is captured and held by the richness of the image. In Yukovsky, Pudovkin’s last film, he had the opportunity to work in colour. He had a special interest in stereocinematography. As a writer on his special art he made a valuable contribution to the knowledge of film photography.

He upheld the cinema against the encroaches of theatricalism and literary impositions. “The main thing,” he said, “is that the cinema be looked upon and conceived as an art.” And of the camera: “the operator will certainly remain what he should be—the artist, the organiser of the visual material.”

—Liam O’Leary

GOODRICH, Frances, and Albert HACKETT

Both Goodrich and Hackett were actors: Goodrich made her stage debut in Massachusetts in 1913, and her Broadway debut in Come Out of the Kitchen, 1916; Hackett acted on stage and in films as a child;

Frances Goodrich and Albert Hackett both acted in a Denver stock company, 1927; then collaborated on plays; 1933–39—writers for MGM, and for Paramount, 1943–46, and MGM again after 1948. Awards: Writers Guild Award for Easter Parade, 1948; Father’s Little Dividend, 1951; Seven Brides for Seven Brothers, 1954; The Diary of Anne Frank, 1959; Pulitzer Prize (for drama) for The Diary of Anne Frank, 1956.

Films as Writers:

1933  The Secret of Madame Blanche (Brabin); Penthouse (Crooks in Clover) (Van Dyke)
1934  Fugitive Lovers (Boleslawsky) (co); The Thin Man (Van Dyke); Hide-Out (Van Dyke)
1935  Naughty Marietta (Van Dyke) (co); Ah, Wilderness! (Brown)
1936  Rose Marie (Van Dyke) (co); Small Town Girl (Wellman) (co); After the Thin Man (Van Dyke)
1937  The Firefly (Leonard)
1939  Another Thin Man (Van Dyke); Society Lawyer (Ludwig) (co)
1943  Doctors at War (Shumlin—short)
1944  Lady in the Dark (Leisen); The Hitler Gang (Farrow)
1946  The Virginian (Gilmore); It's a Wonderful Life (Minnelli) (co)
1948  The Pirate (Minnelli); Summer Holiday (Mamoulian); Easter Parade (Walters) (co)
1949  In the Good Old Summertime (Leonard) (co)
1950  Father of the Bride (Minnelli)
1951  Father's Little Dividend (Minnelli); Too Young to Kiss (Leonard)
1954  Give a Girl a Break (Donen); Seven Brides for Seven Brothers (Donen) (co); The Long, Long Trailer (Minnelli)
1956  Gaby (Bernhardt) (co)
1958  A Certain Smile (Negulesco)
1959  The Diary of Anne Frank (Stevens)
1962  Five Finger Exercise (Daniel Mann)
1980  The Diary of Anne Frank (Sagal)

Films as Actor (Hackett):

1919  Come Out of the Kitchen (Robertson); Anne of Green Gables (Taylo)
1921  Molly O' (Jones); The Good-Bad Wife (McCord)
1922  The Country Flapper (Jones); The Darling of the Rich (Adolfi); A Woman’s Woman (Giblyn)
1930  Whoopee! (Freeland)

Publications

By GOODRICH and HACKETT: plays—

Up Pops the Devil, New York, 1933.
The Great Big Doorstep, Chicago, 1943.
The Diary of Anne Frank, New York, 1958.

On GOODRICH and HACKETT: articles—

GOOSSON, Stephen

Films as Art Director:

1921 The Love Light; Little Lord Fauntleroy
1922 East Is West; The Eternal Flame; Oliver Twist
1923 The Hunchback of Notre Dame
1924 The Sea Hawk
1927 The Wreck of the Hesperus
1928 Skyscraper; Let ‘Er Go Gallagher; Man-Made Woman; Midnight Madness
1929 The Trespasser (E. Goulding); Evangeline (Carewe)
1930 Are You There? (MacFadden); Fox Movietone Follies of 1930 (Stoloff); Just Imagine (D. Butler); Oh, for a Man! (MacFadden); The Princess and the Plumber (A. Korda and Blystone); Such Men Are Dangerous (K. Hawks)
1933 Lady for a Day (Capra)
1934 It Happened One Night (Capra); One Night of Love (Schertzinger)
1935 The Black Room (Neill); She Couldn’t Take It (Woman Tamer) (Garnett); She Married Her Boss (La Cava); Crime and Punishment (von Sternberg)
1936 The King Steps Out (von Sternberg); Pennies from Heaven (McLeod); Mr. Deeds Goes to Town (Capra); Theodora Goes Wild (Boleslawski)
1937 Girls Can Play (Hillyer); I’ll Take Romance (E. Griffith); It’s All Yours (Nugent); Lost Horizon (Capra); Paid to Dance (Hard to Handle) (Coleman); The Shadow (Coleman); When You’re in Love (Riskin); The Awful Truth (McCarey)
1938 You Can’t Take It with You (Capra); Holiday (Free to Live) (Cukor); Girls’ School (Brahm); I Am the Law (Hall); Juvenile Court (Lederman); She Married an Artist (Gering); There’s Always a Woman (Hall); Who Killed Gail Preston? (Barsha)
1939 Homicide Bureau (Coleman)
1941 The Little Foxes (Wyler); Meet John Doe (Capra)
1943 Cry Havoc (Thorpe); Swing Fever (Whelan)
1944 See Here, Private Hargrove (Ruggles); Together Again (C. Vidor)
1945 Tonight and Every Night (Saville); Counter-Attack (One against Seven) (Z. Korda); The Fighting Guardsman (Levin); Kiss and Tell (Wallace); She Wouldn’t Say Yes (Hall); Snafu (Welcome Home) (Moss); A Thousand and One Nights (A. Green); Over 21 (C. Vidor)
1946 Gallant Journey (Wellman); Gilda (C. Vidor); The Jolson Story (A. Green); Meet Me on Broadway (Jason); Mr. District Attorney (Sinclair); One Way to Love (Enright); Perilous Holiday (E. Griffith); Renegades (G. Sherman); The Return of Monte Cristo (Levin); Tars and Spars (A. Green); The Thrill of Brazil (Simon); The Walls Came Tumbling Down (Mendes); The Bandit of Sherwood Forest (G. Sherman and Lewis)
1947 Dead Reckoning (Cromwell); Down to Earth (Hall); Framed (Paula) (Wallace); Her Husband’s Affairs (Simon); I Love Trouble (Simon); It Had to Be You (Hartman and Maté); Johnny O’Clock (Rossen); The Swordsman (J. Lewis); The Corpse Came C.O.D. (Levin); The Guilt of Janet Ames (Levin)
1948 The Lady from Shanghai (Welles); The Black Arrow (G. Douglas); The Loves of Carmen (C. Vidor); The Man from Colorado (Levin); The Mating of Millie (Levin); Relentless (G. Sherman); The Return of October (J. Lewis); The Sign of the Ram (J. Sturges); To the Ends of the Earth (Stevenson); The Fuller Brush Man (That Man Mr. Jones) (Simon); The Gallant Blade (Levin)

Stephen Goosson had a long and distinguished career as an art director in Hollywood. After graduating from Syracuse, Goosson was a practicing architect in Detroit when he entered the film business with David Selznick in 1919. Goosson worked for various studios during the silent era before finding a permanent home in 1930 at Columbia.

Goosson was supervising art director at Columbia when the small studio hit the jackpot in 1934 with It Happened One Night. Passed over by most major studios, the film bolstered Columbia’s reputation and helped to make the studio a major player in the film industry. It Happened One Night was a small, unheard of romantic comedy starring Clark Gable and Claudette Colbert which became a commercial and critical success. With very little advertising or company push It Happened One Night went on to sweep the Academy Awards and cement Columbia’s spot in the marketplace.

It Happened One Night firmly entrenched Goosson’s position as Columbia’s art director. He was associated with many of the studio’s finest works of the 1930s and 1940s. These were Hollywood’s “golden years” and Goosson was a busy man, working on 30 films in the years 1946 to 1948 alone. Goosson was an important figure at Columbia and worked with their top-notch directors of the era including Frank Capra and Orson Welles.

—Patrick J. Sauer

GREEN, Adolph

See COMDEN, Betty, and Adolph GREEN

GREEN, Johnny

Composer and Arranger. Nationality: American. Born: New York City, 10 October 1908; billed as John W. Green in early films. Education: Studied economics at Harvard University, Cambridge, Massachusetts, 1928. Family: Married 1) Betty Furness (divorced); 2) Bunny Waters, 1943; three daughters; 3) Bonnie (Green). Career: Bandleader and song writer; accompanist for Ethel Merman and Gertrude Lawrence; 1929—rehearsal pianist for Paramount; 1930—arranger and musical director; also composer for films; 1942—joined MGM as arranger/musical director; 1950–58—general music director, MGM; composer for TV, and concert hall conductor. Awards: Academy Award for Easter Parade, 1948; An American in Paris, Johnny Green

Films as Arranger:

1930 Leave It to Lester (Cambria and Cozine) (+ song); The Big Pond (Henley); Follow the Leader (Taurog) (co); Animal Crackers (Heerman); Heads Up (Schertzinger); Queen High (Newmeyer); The Sap from Syracuse (Sutherland) (songs)
1931 Secrets of a Secretary (Abbott); My Sin (Abbott); The Smiling Lieutenant (Lubitsch)
1932 Wayward (Sloman); The Wiser Sex (Viertel)
1937 Start Cheering (Rogell)
1943 Stage Door Canteen (Borzage)

Films as Composer or Arranger/Director:

1944 Broadway Rhythm (Del Ruth); Bathing Beauty (Sidney)
1945 Week-End at the Waldorf (Leonard); The Sailor Takes a Wife (Whorf)
1946 Easy to Wed (Buzzell)
1947 It Happened in Brooklyn (Whorf); Fiesta (Thorpe); Something in the Wind (Pichel)
1948 Easter Parade (Walters); Up in Central Park (Walters)
1949 The Inspector General (Koster)
1950 Toast of New Orleans (Taurog); Summer Stock (Walters)
1951 Royal Wedding (Donen); The Great Caruso (Thorpe); An American in Paris (Minnelli); Too Young to Kiss (Leonard)
1952 Because You’re Mine (Hall)
1954 Brigadoon (Minnelli); Rhapsody (C. Vidor)
1956 High Society (Walters)
1957 Raintree Country (Dmytryk)
1960 Pepe (Sidney)
1961 West Side Story (Wise)
1963 Twilight of Honor (Sagal); Bye Bye Birdie (Sidney)
1966 Alvarez Kelly (Dmytryk); Johnny Tiger (Wendkos)
1967 The Busy Body (Castle) (song)
1968 Oliver! (Reed)
1969 They Shoot Horses, Don’t They? (Pollack) (+ assoc pr)

Publications

By GREEN: articles—

Interview with Elmer Bernstein, in Film Music Notebook (Calabasas, California), vol. 2, no. 4, and vol. 3, no. 1, 1976–77.
Soundtrack! (Hollywood), vol. 9, no. 33, March 1990.

On GREEN: articles—

New Zealand Film Music Bulletin (Invercargill), November 1980.
Obituary in EPD Film (Frankfurt), vol. 6, no. 7, July 1989.

* * *

A man who always conducted with a carnation in his buttonhole, the stylish Johnny Green enjoyed success as a song writer, a dance band leader, a symphonic conductor, a film composer, and the head of a major studio’s music department. He won five Oscars as a music director and conductor, for Easter Parade, An American in Paris, West Side Story, Oliver!, and his MGM Concert Hall short-subject series.

Green graduated from Harvard University at the age of 19 with a degree in economics. At Harvard he was an arranger and conductor of the college band and dance orchestra, and it was at this time he wrote his first published song, “Coquette.” After graduation he dabbled with a career on Wall Street but gave it up when he was offered the job of Gertrude Lawrence’s piano accompanist in late 1929. Soon after he wrote the song “Body and Soul” for her, an immediate hit which was incorporated in the Broadway revue Three’s a Crowd, and his most famous composition. In 1930 Green started working as an arranger and conductor for Paramount at their Astoria, Long Island, studios, beginning with The Big Pond. He worked on a dozen films over the next two years, while at the same time taking jobs as an accompanist and song writer in the New York theater, including a stint as the conductor at Paramount’s Brooklyn Theatre. This led to his being offered a job as orchestrator by Victor Young, then music director for the Atwater-Kent radio series, which in turn led to other radio assignments. Green enjoyed success with other songs, notably “Out of Nowhere,” “I Cover the Waterfront,” and “You’re Mine, You,” and formed his own dance band. Some of his recordings, particularly those with Fred Astaire, would become collectors’ items.

In 1942, while conducting the Rodgers and Hart musical By Jupiter, he was offered a position as a staff composer-arranger-conductor by MGM and assumed his duties in November of that year. The heyday of the great musicals was underway, and Green became a part of it, with time out to direct the music for two Deanna Durbin musicals at Universal (Something in the Wind and Up in Central Park) and write the score for Danny Kaye’s The Inspector General at Warners. In 1950 he was signed by MGM as their general music director, which post he held for eight years, and during which time he wrote what he considered his magnum opus, the score for the epic Raintree County. During his lifetime he appeared with most of the major orchestras in the United States and Canada, and with conspicuous success at the Hollywood Bowl. Of all his musical activities, Green had a particular fondness for film scoring and conducting. On the value of film music, “I think if you were to see a major film whose score you liked, and then saw the film without the score, you would find one of the major elements—and by major I mean almost as important as the photography—missing.’’

—Tony Thomas

GRIMAULT, Paul

Films as Animator:

1937 Phénomènes électriques
1938 Le Messager de la lumière
1939 Gó chez les oiseaux (revised version, Les Passagers de la Grande Ourse, 1941)
1942 Le Marchand de notes
1943 L’Epouvantail
1944 Le Voleur de paratonnerres
1946 La Flute magique
1947 Le Petit Soldat
1952 Pierres oubliées
1955 Enrico cuisinier (co—live-action)

1958 La Faim du monde (re-edited version for children, Le Monde en raccourci, 1975)
1969 Le Diamant
1973 Le Chien Mélomane
1980 Le ROI et l’oiseau (The King and the Bird) (incorporates footage from repudiated film La Bergère et le ramoneur, 1952)

Films as Actor:

1934 L’Atalante (Vigo); L’Hôtel du libre échange (M. Allégret)
1936 Le Crime de Monsieur Lange (The Crime of Monsieur Lange) (Renoir)
1953 Les Vacances de M. Hulot (Mr. Hulot’s Holiday) (Tati)
1958 Paris mange son pain (P. Prévert); Mon oncle (Tati)

Other Films:

1961 Cuba Sil! (Marker) (special effects); Le Vrai Visage de Thérèse de Lisieux (Agostini—short) (special effects)
1962 Mourir à Madrid (Rossi) (special effects); Marcel, ta mère t’appelle (Colombat) (pr)
1963 La Foire aux cancrés (Daquin) (special effects); Le Côte d’Adam (Sengissen—short) (special effects); Jacques Copeau (Leenhardt—short) (special effects)
1964 Les Temps morts (Laloux) (pr)
1965 La Demoiselle et le violoncelliste (Laguionie) (pr)
1967 L’Arche de Noé (Laguionie) (pr)
1968 La Tartelette (Colombat) (pr)
1969 Une Bombe par hasard (Laguionie) (pr); Calveras (Colombat) (pr)
1973 La Tête (Bourget) (pr)
1974 Un, deux, trois . . . (Shaker) (pr)
1989 La Table tournante (d + co-sc + ro)

Publications

By GRIMAULT: articles—

Image et Son (Paris), December 1965.
Banc-Titre (Paris), March 1980.
CinémAction (Courbevoie), April 1989.

On GRIMAULT: book—

On GRIMAULT: articles—

“Grimault Issue” of Image et Son (Paris), April 1967.
Paul Grimault’s years of activity cover almost the whole period of French animation. He was fortunate to be associated, in his early days, with such outstanding artists as Marcel Carné, the abstractionist painter Max Ernst, and the famous French comedian Jacques Tati.

Grimault trained as a graphic designer, and in his early professional period he joined an advertising agency and was responsible for many short publicity films. He soon became a strong link between the glorious traditional French animation represented by Emil Cohl and previously by the magical cinematic touch of Georges Méliès. He was certainly the most outstanding representative of the early period of French animation and was responsible for a new approach with a new look. This new look had a much richer visual content and was nearer to the quality of graphical fine art rather than a caricatured comic strip concept. This school of French animation was established immediately after the Second World War with such films as Le Voleur de paratonnerres, La Flute magique, and an extremely charming short film in 1947, Le Petit Soldat, based on the Hans Andersen fairy tale. After doing a number of commercial films, in 1973 he made Le Chien Mélomane, a short philosophical film about (as is so usual with many contemporary animators) the atomic bomb. By this time his style was established, and maintained by a new generation of young French artists, including Jean François Laguionie, Jacques Colombat, and Emil Bourget. In their visual style they follow closely Grimault’s rich visualization of backgrounds and his conception of classical visual style.

Grimault’s most notable achievement was the feature film The King and the Bird, which he finished in 1980. It was an instant success and he received a major national award for it, the Dulac Prize. His close collaboration with the outstanding French writer Jacques Prévert gave The King and the Bird a depth of content not usually seen in animated cartoons.

—John Halas

GROT, Anton

Art Director. Nationality: Polish. Born: Antocz Frantiszek Groszewski in Kelbasin, 18 January 1884; emigrated to the United States, 1909. Education: Studied illustration and design, Krakow School of Art and Technical High School, Königsberg, Germany. Career: 1913–17—set designer for Lubin, Philadelphia; 1917–18—designer for Blaché; 1918–21—worked for Pathé; 1922—set designer for Fairbanks-Pickford unit at United Artists, Hollywood; 1922–27—set designer for Cecil B. DeMille; 1927–48—set designer at Warner Bros.; after retirement, worked as painter. Award: Special Academy Award, 1940. Died: In Stanton, California, 21 March 1974.

Films as Art Director/Production Designer:

1913  The Mouse and the Lion (Brooks)
1916  Arms and the Woman (Fitzmaurice)
1917  The Recoil (Fitzmaurice); The Iron Heart (Fitzmaurice); The Seven Pearls (Mackenzie—serial)
1918  The Naulahka (Fitzmaurice); Sylvia of the Secret Service (Fitzmaurice)
1919  Bound and Gagged (Seitz—serial)
1920  Pirate Gold (Seitz—serial); Velvet Fingers (Seitz—serial)
1922  Robin Hood (Dwan) (co); Tess of the Storm Country (Robertson)
1924  Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall (Neilan); The Thief of Bagdad (Walsh) (co); A Thief in Paradise (Fitzmaurice)
1925  Don Q, Son of Zorro (Crisp) (co); The Road to Yesterday (DeMille) (co)
1926  The Volga Boatman (DeMille) (co); Silence (Julian); Young April (Crisp)
1927  White Gold (Howard); Vanity (Crisp); The Little Adventuress (The Dover Road) (W. De Mille); The Country Doctor (Julian); The King of Kings (DeMille) (co)
1928  Stand and Deliver (Crisp); Hold 'em Yale (At Yale) (E. Griffith); The Blue Danube (Honour above All) (Sloane); Walking Back (Julian); A Ship Comes In (His Country) (Howard); The Godless Girl (DeMille) (co); The Barker (Fitzmaurice); Show Girl (Santell); Noah’s Ark (Curtiz)
1929  Why Be Good? (Seiter); Smiling Irish Eyes (Seiter); The Man and the Moment (Fitzmaurice); Her Private Life (A. Korda); Footlights and Fools (Seiter)
1930  Lilies of the Field (A. Korda); Playing Around (LeRoy); No, No, Nanette (Badger); A Notorious Affair (Bacon); Song of the Flame (Crosland); Bright Lights (Curtiz); Top Speed (LeRoy); Outward Bound (Milton); Little Caesar (LeRoy)
1931  Body and Soul (Santell); Svengali (Mayo); Heartbreak (Werkner); Honor of the Family (Bacon); The Mad Genius (Curtiz); Surrender (Howard); One Way Passage (Garnett); Big City Blues (LeRoy)
1932  The Hatchet Man (The Honourable Mr. Wong) (Wellman); Alias the Doctor (Curtiz); Two Seconds (LeRoy); Doctor X (Curtiz); The Match King (Brechton and Keighley); Scarlet Dawn (Dieterle); Lawyer Man (Dieterle); 20,000 Years in Sing Sing (Curtiz)
1933  Mystery of the Wax Museum (Curtiz); Grand Slam (Dieterle); The King's Vacation (Adolfi); Gold Diggers of 1933 (LeRoy); Baby Face (Green); Ever in My Heart (Mayo); From Headquarters (Dieterle); Footlight Parade (Bacon) (co); Son of a Sailor (Bacon); Easy to Love (Keighley)
1934  Mandalay (Curtiz); Gambling Lady (Mayo); Upperworld (Del Ruth); He Was Her Man (Bacon); Dr. Monica (Keighley); The Firebird (Dieterle); Side Streets (Woman in Her Thirties) (Green); British Agent (Curtiz); Six Day Bike Rider (Bacon); The Secret Bride (Concealment) (Dieterle); Gold Diggers of 1935 (Berkeley)
1935  Red Hot Tires (Racing Luck) (Lederman) (co); The Florentine Dagger (Florey); Traveling Saleslady (Enright); *The Case
GRUSIN WRITERS AND PRODUCTION ARTISTS, 4th EDITION of the Curious Bride (Curtiz); Stranded (Borzage); Broadway Gondolier (Bacon); Bright Lights (Funnyface) (Berkeley); Dr. Socrates (Dieterle); A Midsummer Night’s Dream (Reinhardt and Dieterle); Captain Blood (Curtiz)

1936 The Golden Arrow (Green); The White Angel (Dieterle); Anthony Adverse (LeRoy); Stolen Holiday (Curtiz); Sing Me a Love Song (Come Up Smiling) (Enright)

1937 The Life of Emile Zola (Dieterle); Tovarich (Litvak); Confession (May); The Great Garrick (Whale)

1938 Fools for Scandal (LeRoy); Hard to Get (Enright)

1939 They Made Me a Criminal (Berkeley); Juarez (Dieterle) (co); The Private Lives of Elizabeth and Essex (Curtiz)

1940 The Sea Hawk (Curtiz); A Dispatch from Reuters (This Man Reuter) (Dieterle)

1941 The Sea Wolf (Curtiz); Affectionately Yours (Bacon)

1943 Thank Your Lucky Stars (Butler) (co)

1944 The Conspirators (Negulesco)

1945 Rhapsody in Blue (Rapper) (co); Mildred Pierce (Curtiz)

1946 My Reputation (Bernhard); One More Tomorrow (Godfrey); Never Say Goodbye (Kern); Deception (Rapper)

1947 Nora Prentiss (V. Sherman); The Two Mrs. Carrolls (Godfrey); Possessed (Bernhard) (co); The Unsuspected (Curtiz)

1948 Romance on the High Seas (It’s Magic) (Curtiz); June Bride (Windust); One Sunday Afternoon (Walsh) (co); Backfire (Somewhere in the City) (V. Sherman)

Publications

On GROT: articles—

London Studio, December 1938.
Deschner, Donald, in The Velvet Light Trap (Madison, Wisconsin), Fall 1975.

* * *

Anton Grot’s special Academy Award in 1940 for his invention of a “ripple machine,” which created weather and light effects on water, perhaps symbolizes his particular interest in the expressive qualities of light in motion pictures. Of all the major designers working in Hollywood in the 1930s, Grot was among those whose work was most strongly affected by European modernism in films and painting. The angular shadows and strong light-and-dark contrast found in Little Caesar, for example, help to establish the underworld context of the film. In the pressbook for Doctor X (a Technicolor film), Grot explained how he used heavy construction, low arches, dark colors, and shadows to create a mood of mystery and melodrama: “We design a set that imitates as closely as possible a bird of prey about to swoop down upon its victim, trying to incorporate in the whole thing a sense of impending calamity, of overwhelming danger.” Similar expressive qualities are found, particularly in scenes of danger or terror, in the melodramatic swashbucklers Grot designed, such as Captain Blood, The Private Lives of Elizabeth and Essex, and The Sea Hawk. In his designs for “The Forgotten Man” production number in Gold Diggers of 1933, Grot cast jagged shadows on the women who singing of their forgotten men, and in the finale of the song, he silhouetted unemployed veterans marching ceaselessly over a machine-like series of curved bridges. Using traditional and natural forms freely in A Midsummer Night’s Dream, Grot created such memorable images as the entrance of Oberon, king of the fairies, crowned with a spiky headdress, and wearing a sparkling black cloak that sweeps for many yards behind the horse on which he is riding.

Grot’s use of stylistic qualities of 20th-century European art no doubt derived in part from his Polish background, yet this interest parallels that of contemporary American painters such as John Marin, Charles Burchfield, and Georgia O’Keeffe. Just as the abstract qualities found in the paintings of these artists is crucial to the success of their works, so, too, Grot’s film designs can be seen as combinations of realistic details built upon abstract formal qualities, particularly those of light and shadow.

—Floyd W. Martin

GRUSIN, Dave

Awards: Grammy Award (with Paul Simon), Best Album or Original Instrumental Score for a Motion Picture or Television Special, for The Graduate, 1968; Academy Award, Best Original Score, for The Graduate, 1968; Academy Award, Best Arrangement on an Instrumental, for “Suite from The Milagro Beanfield War” from Migration (album), 1989; Grammy Awards, Best Instrumental Accompanying Vocals, for “My Funny Valentine” from The Fabulous Baker Boys Motion Picture Soundtrack (album) and Best Album of Original Instrumental Background Score Written for a Motion Picture or Television, for The Fabulous Baker Boys Motion Picture Soundtrack, 1989; Hollywood Discovery Award for Outstanding Achievement in Music in Film, Hollywood Film Festival, 1998; also winner of many other music awards, including several additional Grammy Awards, and recipient of honorary doctorates from University of California, Berkeley, 1988, and University of Colorado, 1989. Office: GRP Records, Inc., 555 West 57th St., New York, NY 10019. Agent: Gorfaine-Schwartz Agency, 3301 Barham Blvd., Suite 201, Los Angeles, CA 90068–1477, U.S.A.

Films as Composer:

1967 Waterhole #3; Divorce American Style; The Graduate (additional music); The Scorpio Letters (for TV)
1968 The Heart Is a Lonely Hunter; Candy; Prescription: Murder (Columbo: Prescription Murder) (for TV); Where Were You When the Lights Went Out?
1969 Tell Them Willie Boy Is Here; The Mad Room; Generation (A Time for Caring; A Man Called Gannon; Winning
1970 Double Jeopardy (for TV) (theme); Halls of Anger; Adam at 6 A.M.; The Intruders (for TV)
1971 Deadly Dream (for TV); A Howling in the Woods (for TV); The Forgotten Man (for TV); The Gang That Couldn’t Shoot Straight; Sarge (The Badge or the Cross) (for TV); The Pursuit of Happiness; Shootout
1972 Fuzz; The Family Rico (for TV); The Great Northfield, Minnesota Raid
1973 The Friends of Eddie Coyle
1974 The Midnight Man; The Nickel Ride; The Death Squad (for TV)
1975 The Trial of Chaplain Jensen (for TV); W.W. and the Dixie Dancekings; The Yakaza (Brotherhood of the Yakaza; Three Days of the Condor; Eric (for TV)
1976 Murder by Death; The Front
1977 The Goodbye Girl; Bobby Deerfield; Fire Sale; Mr. Billion (The Windfall)
1978 Heaven Can Wait
1979 The Champ; The Electric Horseman; . . . And Justice for All
1980 My Bodyguard
1981 Absence of Malice; On Golden Pond
1982 Tootsie; Author! Author!
1984 Falling in Love; Scandalous; The Little Drummer Girl; Racing with the Moon; The Pope of Greenwich Village
1985 The Goonies
1986 Lucas
1987 Ishar
1988 The Milagro Beanfield War; Tequila Sunrise; Clara’s Heart; This Is America, Charlie Brown (for TV)
1989 The Fabulous Baker Boys; A Dry White Season
1990 Havana; The Bonfire of the Vanities
1991 For the Boys
1993 The Firm
1995 The Care
1996 Mulholland Falls
1997 In the Gloaming (for TV); Hope (for TV) (theme); Selena
1998 Hope Floats
1999 Random Hearts

Other Films:

1978 The Wiz (musician)
1984 Falling in Love (orchestrator)
1989 The Fabulous Baker Boys (musician)
1993 The Firm (performer)

Publications

By GRUSIN: articles—

On GRUSIN: articles—

* * *

Academy Award winner Dave Grusin has combined classical music training, jazz virtuosity, and a popular culture sensibility to become one of the most prolific composers of the late twentieth century. Educated at the University of Colorado, Grusin was a classical piano major who developed an affinity for jazz, and played with such visiting artists as Art Pepper and singer Anita O’Day.

After moving to New York to pursue an academic career, Grusin found a job touring behind Andy Williams as a pianist and arranger.
When he was asked to be Williams’ musical director, Grusin moved to Hollywood to work on The Andy Williams Show. In 1964, Grusin left the popular program to score his first film, Norman Lear and Bud Yorkin’s Divorce American Style. In 1967, Grusin was brought in to compose additional music for a film that became a hallmark of the 1960s, both musically and cinematically, The Graduate.

Grusin quickly rose to the ranks of one of Hollywood’s premier and most prolific composers. By the time he received his first Oscar nomination in 1978 for Heaven Can Wait, he had worked on thirty films. The best of those were the result of his collaboration with Robert Redford, including Tell Them Willie Boy is Here (1969) and Three Days of the Condor (1975). In the latter, Grusin’s jazz style shone through on the strength of Tom Scott’s brilliant tenor saxophone. One of Grusin’s personal favorites from this period was The Heart is a Lonely Hunter (1968), which featured an unforgettable love theme.

Grusin followed his 1978 Oscar nomination with another in 1979 for the tearjerker The Champ. During the 1980s, Grusin entered his most prolific period. He was nominated for three more Academy Awards for his scores for On Golden Pond (1981), The Fabulous Baker Boys (1989), and The Milagro Beanfield War (1988), for which he won the Oscar. Grusin was also nominated for Best Original Song for “It Might Be You” from Tootsie (1982). Other notable scores from this period include The Goodbye Girl (1977), Bobby Deerfield (1977), Reds (1981), and Racing with the Moon (1984). Grusin also continued his fruitful association with Redford, scoring most of the popular director’s films.

The diversity of these films is mirrored by the wide range of Grusin’s musical styles, tastes, and influences. In the jazzy score to The Fabulous Baker Boys, Grusin successfully mirrors the feel of the sexy standards performed by Michele Pfeiffer, while in The Milagro Beanfield War, Grusin’s minimal use of music is offset by his lushly evocative themes conducted by John Scott with the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra.

Grusin’s work from this period is also familiar to television audiences—he wrote the memorable theme songs for Good Times, Maude, Barettta, and St. Elsewhere.

During the 1990s, Grusin was nominated for two more Academy Awards for his scores for Havana and The Firm. And though his prolific output fell off somewhat, he continued to work on at least one film project a year throughout the decade.

Despite his cinematic successes, Grusin has remained true to his jazz roots. Highly respected in the jazz community, Grusin’s successful recording and performing career has spanned three decades. He has won ten Grammy Awards, and collaborated with most of the world’s major jazz talents.

Undoubtedly Grusin’s strength as a film composer is his belief that he is at heart a great accompanist. He thinks of himself as writing music to accompany the visual and dramatic action of a movie. His scores can be broken down into two major styles: those influenced by jazz and the more intimate and sensitive orchestral scores redolent with strings. In both styles, Grusin never loses his gift for melody.

Though the Oscar and Grammy winner is certainly one of the most prolific and successful composers of the late twentieth century, it is his status as one of music’s true Renaissance men that makes him unique among film composers, bringing with it the promise that each of his scores will take audiences into new areas of musical exploration.

—Victoria Price

GUERRA, Tonino

Films as Writer:

1956 Uomini e lupi (Men and Wolves) (De Santis)
1957 Un etarfo di cielo (Casadio)
1958 Cesta duga godinu dama (La strada lunga un’anno) (De Santis)
1959 L’avventura (Antonioni)
1960 Le signore (Vasile); La garçonnière (De Santis) La notte (The Night) (Antonioni); Il carro armato dell’otto settembre (Puccini)
1961 L’assassin (The Lady Killer of Rome) (Petti)
1962 I giorni contati (Petti); L’eclipse (Eclipse) (Antonioni)
1963 La noia (The Empty Canvas) (Damiani)
1964 Gli invincibili sette (The Secret Seven) (De Martino); Il Deserto rosso (The Red Desert) (Antonioni); “Una donna dolce dolce” ep. of La Donna è una cosa meravigliosa (Bolognini); Le ore nude (Vicario); Matrimonio all’italiana (Marriage, Italian Style) (De Sica); “Una donna d’affari” ep. of Controsesso (Castellani); Saul e David (Saul and David) (Baldi)
1965 Casanova ’70 (Moncelli); I grandi contoditatori (Baldi); La decima vittima (The Tenth Victim) (Petti)
1966 Blow-up (Antonioni); “Fata Armenia” ep. of Le fate (The Queens) (Moncelli)
1967 C’era una volta (More than a Miracle) (Rossi); Lo scatenato (Catch as Catch Can) (Indovina); L’occhio selvaggio (The Wild Eye) (Cavara)
1968 Un tranquillo posto di campagna (A Quiet Place in the Country) (Petti); Sissignore (Tognazzi); Amanti (A Place for Lovers) (De Sica)
1969 L’Invitata (De Seta); In Search of Gregory (Wood)
1970 I girasoli (Sunflower) (De Sica); Zabriskie Point (Antonioni); Tre nel mille (Indovina); Uomini contro (Rossi); Giochi particolari (Indovina)
1971 La superestimone (Giraldi)
1972 Il caso Mattei (The Mattei Affair) (Rossi); Gli ordini sono ordini (Giraldi); Bianco, rosso, e . . . (White Sister) (Lattuada)
1973 Lucky Luciano (Rossi)
1974 Amarcord (Fellini); Dites-le avec les fleurs (Grimbalt)
1975 Quaranta gradi all’ombra del lenzuolo (Martin)
1976 Cadaveri eccellenti (Illustrious Corpses) (Rossi); Caro Michele (Moncelli)
1976 Un Papillon sur l’épaule (Deray); Letti selvaggi (Zampa)
1979 Cristo si è fermato a Ebori (Christ Stopped at Eboli) (Rossi); Il mistero di Oberwald (The Oberwald Mystery) (Antonioni)
1981 La notte di San Lorenzo (The Night of San Lorenzo) (P. & V. Taviani); Tre fratelli (Rossi)
1982 Identificazione di una donna (Antonioni)
1983 E la nave va (And the Ship Sails On) (Fellini); Nostalgia (Tarkovsky)
1984 Carmen (Rossi); Kaos (Chaos) (P. & V. Taviani)
1985  Henry IV (Enrico IV) (Bellocchio); Taxidi sta kithira (Angelopoulos)
1986  Good Morning Babilonia (Hollywood Sunset; Good Morning Babylon) (P. and V. Taviani); Ginger e Fred (Fellini); O Melissokomos (The Beekeeper) (Angelopoulos)
1987  Cronaca di una morte annunciata (Chronicle of a Death Foretold) (Rosi)
1988  Topio stin omichli (Landscape in the Mist; Le Paysage dans le brouillard; Landschaft im Nebel) (Angelopoulos); Il frullo del passero (La femme de mes amours) (Mingozzi)
1989  Burro (Sanchez); Dimenticare Palermo (To Forget Palermo; Oublier Palerme; The Palermo Connection) (Rosi)
1990  Il sole anche di notte (Die Nachtsonne; The Sun Also Shines at Night; Nightsun; Il sole di notte) (P. and V. Taviani); Stanno tutti bene (Everybody’s Fine; Ils vont tous bien) (Tornatore)
1991  Viaggio d'amore (Journey of Love) (Fabbri); To meteoro vima to Pelargou (Suspended Step of the Stork; Le Pas suspendu de la cigogne; Meteoro vima tou Pelargou) (Angelopoulos); La Domenica specialmente (Especially on Sunday) (Tornatore)
1993  The Petrified Garden (Gitai)
1995  To vlemma tou odysssea (Lo sguardo di Ulisse; Le regard d’Ulysse) (Angelopoulos); Al di là delle nuvole (Beyond the clouds; Par delà les nuages) (Antonioni and Wenders)
1996  La Tregua (The Truce) (Rosi)
1997  Tajna Marchello (Marcello’s Secret) (Naumov); Porto Santo (Vicente Jorge Silva)
1999  Mia ainvioitha kai mia mera (Eternity and a Day) (Angelopoulos); Tierra del fuego (Littin)

Publications

By GUERRA: books—

L’uomo parallelo, Milan, 1969.
With Antonioni and Elio Bartolini, L’avventura (script), New York, 1969.
I bu (I buoi), Milan, 1972.
I cento uccelli, Milan, 1974.
E’ mel (Il miele), Rimini, 1981.
I guardatori della luna, Milan, 1981.
Il Leone dalla barba bianca, Milan, 1983.
La pioggia tiepida, Milan, 1984.
La capanna . . . poema d’amore in dialetto santarcangiolese, Rimini, 1985.

By GUERRA: articles—

Positif (Paris), October 1983.
Iskusstvo (Moscow), May 1985.
Positif (Paris), February 1986.
EPD Film (Frankfurt), vol. 7, no. 3, March 1990.
Kosmorama (Denmark), vol. 34, no. 206, 1993.
EPD Film (Frankfurt), vol. 10, no. 9, September 1993.
Avant-Scène Cinéma (Paris), February 1996.
Positif (Paris), February 1996.

On GUERRA: books—

Seminario popolare su Tonino Guerra e la poesia dialettale romagnola,
Ravenna, 1976.
Tonino Guerra, Rimini, 1985.

On GUERRA: articles—

Film Guia, May 1975.
Film Dope, no. 22, March 1981.
Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), May 1985.
Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), No. 8, 1994.
Positif (Paris), February 1996.

*  *  *

Tonino Guerra first became creatively involved in cinema when he collaborated with Elio Petri and Giuseppe De Santis on the script of the latter’s Uomini e lupi in 1956. Three years later he worked with Antonioni on L’avventura, beginning a remarkable partnership that was to stretch all the way through to Identificazione di una donna and Al di là delle nuvole. Before, however, one is tempted to read the bleakness and introversion of these films as a Guerra stylistic hallmark, it is worth noting that in 1967, with C’era una volta, he launched another series of incredibly fruitful collaborations, this time with Francesco Rosi, in such lucid works of “dramatic clarification” as Il caso Mattei, Lucky Luciano, and Cadaveri eccellenti. Before applying the label “political writer,” though, one should bear in mind Guerra’s remark that he considers the films of Fellini (with whom he worked on Amarcord, E la nave va, and Ginger e Fred) just as political as the seemingly more obvious examples. He has also enjoyed ongoing creative relationships with Elio Petri and the Taviani brothers, as well as working with Tarkovsky (Nostalgia), Angelopoulos (Taxidi sta kithira) and Bellocchio (Henry IV). Indeed, in terms of the Italian cinema at least, it might be easier to list the notable films on which he hasn’t worked!

Guerra has stated that “I am different from all the filmmakers I’ve worked with, and I think that I’ve a different face for each of them.” On the other hand this should not be taken as a denial of his own authorial role, and he is extremely critical of the low status customarily allotted to the writer in the Italian cinema. As he said in an interview: “in Italy, only the director counts. There are, of course, five or six author-directors who write their own scenarios, and what I’m saying here doesn’t apply to them. But if, on the other hand, you think of the 240 films which are made here every year then it’s absurd to talk only of their directors. . . . In my opinion, when it’s a matter of a true ‘auteur,’ then the author of the film is the director. But in the case of the 240 films produced here each year the author, in most instances is the scenarist.”

Of course, Guerra is fortunate enough to have worked with all the author-directors, but it is also interesting to note that he actually considers his poetry the most important of his numerous accomplishments. As he stated in Positif: “in my life I have attempted to be a poet. Being a scenarist is a secondary occupation. So every time a film project presents itself I look for a way of saying things through poetic suggestion. I try to suggest a poetic mode.” If, however, his scenarios are full of poetry, “everything I write—including the poems—is full of images. Writing is like the essence of the image. Everybody who reads invents their own images. But in cinema the director imposes his own choices; cinema is very possessive. I like films which succeed in making audiences work, films which, by appealing to their imaginations, give them the possibility to be creative. Books are a hundred thousand films at the same time, because each reader invents their own images.” Hence, of course, his predilection for directors who “always leave spaces open.” Antonioni immediately springs to mind here rather than Rosi, and indeed Guerra has remarked that “at the beginning there was a big difference between Rosi and me. He turned this limpid but sharp eye on reality. As I’ve always said, his shoes are so shiny they’re like two violins; mine are rather less so.” On the other hand, Tre fratelli is one of both director’s and writer’s most suggestive and resonant works, representing a particularly felicitous and productive director-writer match.

There’s also a particularly close link here with Guerra’s poetry, because, as he has pointed out “what interested me here is this feeling of farewell—one of the fundamental themes of my poetry—farewell to the peasant world, to the peasant civilisation, this feeling of a way of life which we are in the process of losing.” Guerra grew up in Sant’Arcangelo in Romagna (the region in which Amarcord is set) and his first publication was a book of poems in the local dialect, later followed by many others. It is possible to see a loose connection with Pasolini here, but there is none of the latter’s rather dubious idealization of the peasantry, rather, a haunting sense of transience and irrevocable change.

Guerra’s creative acts always communicate a sense of amazement, mystery, and fascination before the world. Nevertheless, his stories are rooted in Earth precisely because the peasant world has a common language that allows him to be at ease in environments as varied as Georgia, Greece, and Italy. These last years he has isolated himself in Pennabilli, a hill on the Adriatic side of the Appenines and he works with the last of those directors who continue to visit him. He has lately discovered the theater and writes short plays that he hopes some day to publish as a theatrical diary.

—Julian Petley, updated by Soon-Mi Peten

GUFFEY, Burnett

Cinematographer. Nationality: American. Born: Del Rio, Tennessee, 26 May 1905. Education: Attended school in Etowah, Tennessee. Family: Married; two daughters. Career: Worked as messenger boy in a bank then camera assistant for Fox in mid-1920s, and Famous Players-Lasky in late 1920s; 1944—first film as cinematographer, Sailor’s Holiday; 1944–66—worked for Columbia; then freelance.

Awards: Academy Award for From Here to Eternity, 1953, and Bonnie and Clyde, 1967. Died: In Goleta, California, 29 May 1983.

Films as Cameraman:

1935 Clive of India (Boleslawsky); The Informer (Ford)
1939 Framed (Schuster)
1940 Foreign Correspondent (Hitchcock)
1941 That Hamilton Woman (Lady Hamilton) (A. Korda)
1944 Cover Girl (C. Vidor)

Films as Cinematographer:

1944 Sailor’s Holiday (Berke); The Soul of a Monster (Jason); U-Boat Prisoner (Dangerous Mists) (Landers); Kansas City Kitty (Lord); The Unwritten Code (Rotsten); Tahiti Nights (Jason);
1945 Eadie Was a Lady (Dreifuss); I Love a Mystery (Levin); Eve Knew Her Apples (Jaswon); The Fighting Guardsman (Levin); Blonde from Brooklyn (Lord); The Gay Senator (Dreifuss); The Girl of the Limberlost (M. Ferrer); My Name Is Julia Ross (Levis)
1946 Meet Me on Broadway (Jason); The Notorious Lone Wolf (Lederman); A Close Call for Boston Blackie (Lady of Mystery) (Landers); Night Editor (The Trespasser) (Levin); Gallant Journey (Wellman); So Dark the Night (Levis)
1947 Johnny O’Clock (Rossen); Framed (Paula) (Wallace)
1948 To the Ends of the Earth (Stevenson); The Sign of the Ram (J. Sturges); The Gallant Blade (Levin) (co)
1949 Knock on Any Door (Ray); Undercover Man (Lewis); The Reckless Moment (Ophuls); And Baby Makes Three (Levin)
1950 All the King’s Men (Rossen); Father Is a Bachelor (Foster and Berlin); Convicted (Levin); In a Lonely Place (Ray); Emergency Wedding (Jealousy) (Buzzell)
1951 Sirocco (Bernhardt); Two of a Kind (Levin); The Family Secret (Levin); Scandal Sheet (The Dark Page) (Karlson); Boots Malone (Dieterle) (2nd unit)
1952 The Sniper (Dmytryk); Assignment Paris (Parrish) (co)
1953 From Here to Eternity (Zimmnann)
1954 Human Desire (F. Lang); Private Hell 36 (Siegel); The Bamboo Prison (Seiler); The Violent Men (Rough Company) (Mate)
1955 Tight Spot (Karlson); Count Three and Pray (G. Sherman); Three Stripes in the Sun (The Gentle Sergeant) (Murphy); Battle Stations (Seiler)
1956 The Harder They Fall (Robson); Storm Center (Taradash); Nightfall (Tourneur)
1957 The Strange One (End as a Man) (Garfein); The Brothers Rico (Karlson); Decision at Sundown (Boetticher); Not One Shall Die (Rich)
1958 The True Story of Lynn Stuart (Seiler); Screaming Mimi (Oswald); Me and the Colonel (Glenville)
1959 Gidget (Wendkos); They Came to Cordura (Seigel); Edge of Eternity (Karlson); Let No Man Write My Epitaph (Leacock)
1961 Cry for Happy (Marshall); Homicidal (Castle); Mr. Sardonicus (Castle)
1962 Birdman of Alcatraz (Frankenheimer); Kid Galahad (Karlson)
1963 Four for Texas (Aldrich) (2nd unit)
1964 Flight from Ashiya (Anderson) (co); Good Neighbor Sam (Swift)
1965 King Rat (Forbes)
1966 The Silencers (Karlson); How to Succeed in Business without Really Trying (Swift)
1967 Bonnie and Clyde (Penn); The Ambushers (Levin) (co)
1968 The Split (Fleming)
1969 Where It’s At (Kanin); The Learning Tree (Parks); Some Kind of a Nut (Kanin) (co); The Madwoman of Chaillot (Forbes) (co); Suppose They Gave a War and Nobody Came (Averback)
1970 Halls of Anger (Bogart); The Steagle (Sylbert); The Great White Hope (Ritt)

Publications

By GUFFEY: article—

‘‘The Photography of King Rat,” in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), December 1965.

On GUFFEY: articles—

Gavin, Arthur, on They Came to Cordura in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), March 1959.

Film Comment (New York), Summer 1972.

Obituary in Variety (New York), 8 June 1983.

Obituary in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), November 1983.

* * *

Burnett Guffey’s reputation and contributions to the art of cinematography rest not so much in what he did with the camera and lights, but in what he chose not to do. The major portion of Guffey’s career behind the camera was spent de glamorizing the Hollywood film, a task that takes on mammoth proportions when one realizes that he was most active in the 1940s and 1950s. In a period when Cinemascope, spectacle, and lurid color were the rule, Guffey continued to work in black-and-white, stripping the romance from the world’s most romantic form.

Although he was capable of achieving the slick commercial look of the more typical Hollywood film, Guffey’s personal style led him to work primarily on rugged action and mystery pictures. For these movies he developed what has been characterized as “flat” photography, a functional rebuttal to the elaborate deep-focus cinematography of Gregg Toland. Using a simple, often single source of light, little or no fill light, and a minimum of camera movement, Guffey provided directors with a naturalistic, gritty look to complement hardboiled stories of criminals, convicts, and men at war. Even for his Academy Award-winning cinematography on Bonnie and Clyde, Guffey succeeded in subduing color, relying on worn hues to produce a common, dreary effect.

Set in the seedy world of boxing, The Harder They Fall, for which Guffey received an Academy Award nomination, stands as a typical example of his flat style. Making use of minimal contrast, Guffey emphasizes gray. Blacks flow into grays which flow into whites, giving the film a truly monotonal effect. Guffey’s photography hides nothing, revealing the ugliness of the sport and the flaws of the people who cling to the edges of the ring. Much of the film takes place in the perpetual twilight of gyms and ill-lit hotel rooms and the glamor of professional sports is displaced with images that are harsh, often ugly. Though capable of depth, Guffey’s compositions tend to emphasize flatness by placing people against walls or planes of like tone. The grey, monotonal quality of Guffey’s work was ideally suited for stories that featured characters of ambiguous morality such as Bogart’s gunrunner in Sirocco, the mobsters aiming for respectability in Phil Karlson’s The Brothers Rico, and George Segal’s P.O.W. camp racketeer in King Rat.

Guffey’s tendency toward flat cinematography could be overridden by the potently baroque visuals of a director like Joseph H. Lewis in My Name Is Julia Ross and So Dark the Night. And there was always the danger of the flat cinematography being coupled with dull direction and the lackluster production design of a studio like Columbia to produce deadening visuals. Still, when combined with the proper story and strong direction, Burnett Guffey’s flat cinematography provided an alternative aesthetic to the standard studio product.

—Eric Schaefer

GUILLEMOT, Agnès

Films as Editor:

1953 La Faute des autres (Guez—short)
1955 Walk into Paradise (L’Odyssée du Capitaine Steve) (Robinson and Paglieri) (asst)
1958 Vous n’avez rien contre la jeunesse (Logereau—short); Voyage en Bosnie (Herman—short)
1959 Voiles à Val (Perol—short)
1960 Le Gaz de Lacq (Lanoe—short); Thaumetopoea (Enrico—short); Un Steak trop cuit (Moulet—short)
1961 La Quille (Herman—short); Une Femme est une femme (A Woman Is a Woman) (Godard)
By GUILLEMOT: articles—

Cinématographe (Paris), March 1985.
Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), November 1990.

On GUILLEMOT: articles—

Chaplin (Stockholm), December 1968.
Film Comment (New York), March/April 1977.

* * *

Agnès GUILLEMOT’s 45-year career places her as one of France’s most important, respected, and influential editors. She teaches editing at IDHEC in Paris, edits television series, documentaries, and narrative features, and through the 1960s, established the basic editing style of modernist filmmaking, contemporary television commercials, and music videos. She began cutting film during the Nouvelle Vague period and remains strongly associated with that era.

As Jean-Luc Godard’s favorite editor, GUILLEMOT edited all of his films from 1961 to 1969, with the exceptions of Pierrot le fou, Deux ou trois choses que je sais d’elle (both edited by one of her former assistants, Françoise Collin), and Le Gai Savoir. Collaborating with Godard on 13 features and four episodes of compilation films, and having an assistant edit two others, she must share responsibility for the deconstructive narrative techniques and reflexive visual style usually credited to Godard. Although the similarity of the editing strategies in Deux ou trois choses and Pierrot le fou to all Godard’s other films suggests the director’s overriding influence, GUILLEMOT herself admits that an editor must embrace the personal rhythm of each director and not impose her own, GUILLEMOT’s reification of Godard’s theories cannot be underestimated. By introducing a sense of musical rhythm and a disregard for spatial and temporal continuity, her work with Godard avoided the realist dictates of linear narrative and provided a locus for ideological analysis. This radicalizing of conventional editing eventually emerged as her most important legacy.

Within any one film, GUILLEMOT’s editing appears contradictory, or perhaps dialogic; in any case, her work seems, at first glance, an impossible melange of styles. She combines or juxtaposes the formal symmetry of long takes, the precise rigor of classical match-action editing and shot/reverse shot, the playfulness of reflexivity, and the spontaneity of jump cuts. These characteristics exactly demonstrate the musical and open narrative signature of the Nouvelle Vague. GUILLEMOT cites her strongest work as Une Femme est une femme, with its interplay of words and music as in an opera, and Les Carabiniers for the crescendo of the postcard sequence. In Alphaville, she reinforces Godard’s parody of American science fiction by employing standard editing techniques only to abandon them at moments of highest narrative expectation. In Le Mépris, she uses jump cuts sparingly as a metaphor for Camille’s confused mind, ironically embedding them in a fluid pattern of graceful tracking shots. In Masculin-féminin, she plays off the symmetrical tension of the title to visually explore the energy of romance; initially, fast-paced jump cutting represents a new love, slowing to long takes as the romance dissolves. In Weekend, she summarizes her collaboration with Godard by fully exhibiting her varied and “contradictory” style of editing, a style perfectly suited for encapsulating Godard’s “end of cinema.”

GUILLEMOT’s late career allowed her to adapt radical Nouvelle Vague modernism for more mainstream cinema; as New Wave stylistics became accepted and standardized, she expanded the confining logic and limitations of classic linear narrative. She edited films for François Truffaut (including two of the Antoine Doinel series), Jean-Charles Tacchella (including the Oscar-nominated Cousin cousine), and Richard Dembo (the Academy Award-winning La Diagonale du fou). By comparing these films to her Godard period, one can easily see Guillemot’s influence on contemporary film editing. Eschewing only the reflexivity of her Godard period, she employs the other techniques (especially visual and aural jump cuts) to stress spatial and temporal ellipses. Contained within classical match action and shot/reverse shot sequences and countered with long takes, these ellipses open up a narrative, regardless of how confining (La Diagonale du fou’s chess match) or how limited (Cousin cousine’s conventional love story) and offer the potential for social critique. Her editing on La Lumière du lac and Un Week-End sur deux accomplishes exactly this—expanding the parameters of linear narrative with humorous spontaneity, rhythmic pacing, and critical observations of modern society. She has also edited ten shorts and features by her husband Claude Guillemot, alternating between traditional documentary style and her Nouvelle Vague techniques.

Guillemot’s New Wave cutting also influenced most contemporary film and television editing. Even though the link between her editing during the 1960s and today’s television commercials and music videos loses its political edge, the continuation of her style in these formats seems incontrovertible (the 1989 Lee Jeans ads, particularly, acting as a direct homage). The formal symmetry of shot/reverse shot placed within long takes, invisible match-action editing alternating with jump cuts, a playful reflexivity, and loosely structured “nonnarratives” are now accepted as standard practice (almost every music video is edited this way). Like most historical avant-garde artists, her work seems much less radical today because of its wide appropriation. Nevertheless, Guillemot must be credited with modernizing editing during the 1960s, an accomplishment which continues to influence visual media today.

—Greg S. Faller
HACKETT, Albert
See GOODRICH, Frances, and Albert HACKETT

HAKIM, Raymond and Robert

Films as Producers (selected list):

1937 Pépé le Moko (Duvivier)
1938 La Bête Humaine (Renoir)
1939 Le Jour se lève (Carné)
1945 The Southerner (Renoir) (co)
1947 Her Husband’s Affairs (Simon); The Long Night (Litvak)
1949 Without Honor (Pichel)
1951 The Blue Veil (Bernhardt)
1952 Casque d’or (Becher)
1953 Thérèse Raquin (Carné)
1956 The Hunchback of Notre Dame (Notre Dame of Paris) (Delannoy)
1957 Pot-bouille (Duvivier)
1959 A double tour (Web of Passion; Leda) (Chabrol)
1960 Plein Soleil (Clément); Les Bonnes Femmes (Chabrol)
1962 L’éclipse (Antonioni); Eva (Eve) (Losey)
1963 Chair de poule (Highway Pickup) (Duvivier)
1964 Weekend à Zayucoote (Weekend at Dunkirk) (Verneuil); La Ronde (Vadim)
1967 Belle de jour (Buñuel); Isadora (Reisz)
1968 Heartbeat (Cavalier)
1969 The Loves of Isadora (Reisz)
1976 La Marge (Borowczyk)

Publications

On HAKIM: article—

* * *

After working for Paramount in Paris, the Egypt-born Hakim brothers became independent producers in 1934, financing Duvivier’s Pépé le Moko and Renoir’s La Bête Humaine. These sensational and discreetly salacious films by directors who, though well-established, were slightly out of the mainstream, established a strategy that would help the Hakims survive French cinema’s most disastrous decades.

In 1940, they joined many colleagues (including Julien Duvivier and Jean Renoir) in fleeing to California. During World War II, the Hakims produced only The Southerner, a lean picture of sharecropper life, co-produced with David Loew. Renoir’s film, which is unlike anything else the brothers ever backed, has all the marks of a project engineered by Hollywood to keep distinguished emigrés afloat.

The Hakims remained in America after the war but, of their three productions, only The Long Night, a remake of Marcel Carné’s 1939 Le Jour se lève, with Henry Fonda replacing Jean Gabin, is notable, while the limp comedy Heartbeat effectively ended the Hollywood career of Jean-Pierre Aumont. The youngest Hakim, Andre, remained in America, where he married into the Zanuck family and became a producer for 20th Century-Fox, but in 1950, Robert and Raymond returned to France.

They financed Duvivier’s Pot-bouille and the two films that launched Simone Signoret as a star, Becker’s Casque d’or and Carné’s Thérèse Raquin. However, intellectually out of sympathy with the nouvelle vague (and, moreover, committed to the cinéma du papa that most young directors reviled), the Hakims failed to imitate fellow independent producers Pierre Braunberger and Georges de Beauregard in backing the New Wave. Their only productions with the younger directors were Chabrol’s Les Bonnes Femmes and his upper-class whodunit, A double tour. The latter, also known as Web of Passion and advertised with the graphic of a keyhole framing Bernadette Lafont in bikini underwear, was among the New Wave’s first international commercial successes.

Throughout the 1960s, the Hakims seldom deviated from the style of film successful for them in the 1930s: star-driven melodramas with plenty of sex, and an international market built in. The recipe that launched Simone Signoret in Casque d’or proved equally serviceable for Alain Delon in René Clément’s Plein Soleil, Roger Vadim’s remake of La Ronde, Luis Buñuel’s Belle de jour and Karel Reisz’s Isadora. All shrewdly exploited the European cinema’s reputation for sophisticated sensuality without surrendering totally to the mass market.

The Hakims’s methods were not always popular. Attempting to make a BBC TV film on Isadora Duncan, Ken Russell found every available biography and memoir of the dancer bought up by the brothers to protect their 1969 production The Loves of Isadora. (Director Karel Reisz himself became disaffected when his film was shorn of 37 minutes for its U.S. release.) At the same time, François Truffaut, negotiating with the Hakims to film Cornell Woolrich’s Mississippi Mermaid, quickly became deadlocked with them over casting. Truffaut wanted Jean-Paul Belmondo opposite Catherine Deneuve, but the brothers preferred Alan Bates or Alain Delon. After breaking off the deal, Truffaut discovered that the story rights belonged, not to the Hakims at all, but to 20th Century-Fox, from whom he purchased them to make La Sirene du Mississippi, with Belmondo and Deneuve. Such charges, however, should be weighed alongside the Hakims's impressive record. By putting their skills to work on behalf of great directors, they managed to make high-quality, bankable films.

—John Baxter

HALAS, John, and Joy BATCHELOR

HALAS. Animator. Nationality: Hungarian. Born: Janos Halasz in Budapest, 16 April 1912. Family: Married Joy Batchelor in late 1930s. Career: 1928–31—apprentice to George Pal; early 1930s—spent 18 months in Paris, returned to Budapest and taught at Atelier, graphic design school; 1934—opened first animation studio, Halas, Macskasi and Kassowitz; 1936—moved to England; 1970—elected president of International Council of Graphic Design Associations (ICOGRADE); 1975—president of International Animated Film Association (ASIFA); also chairman of the Federation of Film Societies; and contributing editor and film/TV correspondent to Novum (Munich); 1982—produced the world’s first fully digitized film, Dilemma. Died: 21 January 1995.

BATCHELOR. Animator. Nationality: British. Born: Watford, Hertfordshire, England, 12 May 1914. Career: 1935—began working in films as artist; 1937—hired as designer and animator to work on The Music Man; 1973—retired but continued to act as adviser to animation students at International Film School, London. Died: 1991.

1940—Halas & Batchelor Cartoon Films formed; 1940–45—made numerous information and propaganda films for British government; 1951–54—produced only feature-length British cartoon, Animal Farm, based on George Orwell novel; 1968—Halas & Batchelor bought by Trident Television; Batchelor and Halas concentrated on individual projects working through their other company, Educational Film Centre; from 1968 to 1972 not responsible for films produced by Halas & Batchelor production company; 1974—Halas & Batchelor sold back to Halas after losing money for corporation.

Films as Directors:

1938 The Music Man (co-anim, Halas only d)
1940 Train Trouble (+ co-pr, anim); Carnival in the Clothes Cupboard (+ co-pr, co-d, co-anim)
1941 Filling the Gap (+ co-pr, co-sc, co-anim); Dustbin Parade (+ co-pr, co-sc, co-anim)
1942 Digging for Victory (+ co-pr, co-sc, co-anim; des: Batchelor)
1943 Jungle Warfare (+ co-pr, co-anim)
1944–45 Handling Ships (feature) (Halas only pr, co-d, des, anim)
1946 Modern Guide to Health (+ co-pr, co-anim; sc: Batchelor); Old Wives’ Tales (+ co-pr, co-anim; sc: Batchelor)
1947 First Line of Defence (+ co-pr, co-anim); This Is the Air Force (+ co-pr, co-sc); What’s Cooking? (+ co-pr, co-anim; sc: Batchelor); Dolly Put the Kettle On (+ co-pr, co-anim; sc: Batchelor)
1948 Oxo Parade (+ co-pr, co-des; sc: Batchelor); Magic Canvas (co-pr only; Halas: d, sc, co-des); Water for Firefighting (feature) (Halas only co-d); Heave Away My Johnny (+ co-pr, co-sc)
1949 The Shoemaker and the Hatter (+ co-pr, co-sc, co-des); Submarine Control (co-d with Privett and Crick; pr: Crick); Fly about the House (+ co-pr, co-des; sc: Batchelor)
1950 Earth in Labour (Halas only: d, co-pr, co-sc)
1951 Moving Spirit (Halas: co-d, co-pr; Batchelor: co-sc)
1952 The Owl and the Pussycat (stereoscopic) (Halas only: co-d, pr, co-sc); Linear Accelerator
1954 Animal Farm (feature, begun 1951) (+ co-pr, co-sc, co-des)
1956 The World of Little Ig (Halas: d, co-pr; Batchelor: sc, co-pr); The Candlemaker (Halas: co-d, pr; Batchelor: co-d, co-sc)
1957 History of the Cinema (Halas only: d, pr, co-sc, co-des); Midsummer Nightmare (only co-pr, co-sc; Halas: d, co-des)
1958 The First Ninety-Nine (co-pr only; Batchelor: d, co-sc); The Christmas Visitor (only co-pr, co-sc; Halas: d); Dam the Delta (Batchelor: sc); Early Days of Communication (Halas only: d, co-pr)
1959 Man in Silence (Halas only: co-d); All Lit Up (+ co-pr; Batchelor: sc); Piping Hot (+ co-pr; Batchelor: sc); For Better for Worse (+ co-pr; Batchelor: sc)
1960 Wonder of Wool (Halas only: d, pr)
1961 Hamilton the Musical Elephant (Halas only: d, pr, co-sc); Hamilton in the Musical Festival (Halas only: d, pr, co-sc)
1962 Barnaby—Father Dear Father (co-pr only; Halas: d, co-des); Barnaby—Overdue Dues Blues (co-pr only; Halas: d, co-des)
1963 Automania 2000 (only co-pr, co-sc; Halas: d); The Axe and the Lamp (Halas only: d, pr)
1964 Ruddigore (feature) (co-pr only; Batchelor: d, sc)
1966 ICOGRADE Congress (live-action) (Halas only: d, pr, co-sc); Dying for a Smoke (Halas: d, pr; Batchelor: co-sc)
1967 The Question (Halas only: d, pr, co-sc); The Colombo Plan (co-pr only; Batchelor: d, sc); The Commonwealth (co-pr only; Batchelor: d, sc)
1968 Bolly (co-pr only; Batchelor: d, sc)
1969 To Our Children’s Children (Halas only: d, pr, co-sc)
1970 Short Tall Story (co-pr only; Halas: d, co-sc); The Five (co-pr only; Batchelor: d, sc); Wot Dot (co-pr only; Batchelor: d, sc) Flurina (co-pr only; Halas: d, co-sc)
1971 Children and Cars (only co-pr, co-sc; Halas: d)
1973 Contact (+ Batchelor: co-sc; Halas: pr); The Glorious Musketeers (feature) (Halas only: d, pr, co-sc)
1974 The Ass and the Stick (Batchelor: d, co-sc; Halas: pr, co-sc); Christmas Feast (co-sc only; Halas: d, pr); Carry on Milkmaids (Batchelor: d, sc; Halas: pr)
1975 How Not to Succeed in Business (Halas only: d, pr, co-sc)
1976 Skyrider (Halas only: d, pr, co-sc)
1977 Making It Move (live-action) (Halas only: d, pr, co-sc)
1978 Max and Moritz (feature) (Halas only: d, pr, co-sc)
1979 Ten for Survival (Halas: d, co-pr; Batchelor: sc); Autobahn (Halas only: d, pr, co-sc)
1981 The Figurehead (+ pr; First Steps (Halas only: d)
1982 Dilemma (Halas only: d)
1983 Players (Halas only: d)
1984 A New Vision: The Life and Work of Botticelli (Halas only: d)
1985 Toulouse-Lautrec (Halas only: d); Leonardo da Vinci (Halas only: d)
1989 Light of the World (Halas only: d)
Charley Series—
1946–47 Charley in the New Towns; Charley in the New Schools; Charley in ‘Your Very Good Health’; Charley in the New Mines; Charley Junior’s Schooldays; Charley’s March of Time (+ co-pr, co-sc, co-des); Robinson Charley (+ co-pr, co-des)

Poet and Painter Series—
1951 Programme 1: Two Corbies; Spring and Winter; Programme 2: Winter Garden; Sailor’s Consolation; Check to Song; Programme 3: In Time of Pestilence; The Pythoness; Programme 4: John Gilpin (Halas only: d, pr)

Popeye Series—
1955 The Billionaire; Dog Done Dog Catcher; Matinee Idol; Model Muddle; Weight for Me; Potent Lotion; Which Is Witch? (Halas only: co-d, pr)

Hatabales Series—
1960 The Lion Tamer; Hairy Hercules; The Cultured Ape; The Insolent Matador; The Widow and the Pig; I Wanna Mink (Halas only: co-d, pr)

Snip and Snap Series—
1960 Bagpipes; Treasure of Ice Cake Island; Spring Song; Snakes and Ladders; In the Jungle; Lone World Sail; Thin Ice; Magic Book; Circus Star; Moonstruck; Snap and the Beanstalk; Goodwill to All Dogs; In the Cellar; The Grand Concert; The Beggar’s Uproar; The Birthday Cake; Snap Goes East; The Hungry Dog; Tog Dogs (Halas only: co-d, pr, co-sc)

The Tales of Hoffnung Series—
1964 Professor Ya-Ya’s Memoirs (Halas only: co-d, pr, co-sc); The Maestro (Halas only: co-d, pr, co-sc); Birds Bees and Storks (Halas only: d, pr, co-sc); The Music Academy (Halas only: co-d, pr, co-sc); The Palm Court Orchestra (Halas only: d, pr, co-sc)

The Carters of Greenwood English Language Teaching Series—
1964 12 films (Halas only: d, pr)

Martian in Moscow Russian Language Teaching Series—
1964 12 films (Halas only: d, pr)

Do Do Series—
1964 72 films (Halas only: d, pr)

Les Aventures de la famille Carré French Language Teaching Series—
1964 12 films (Halas only: co-d, pr)

Classic Fairy Tales Series—
1966 6 films (Batchelor: d, sc; Halas and Batchelor: co-pr)

Lone Ranger Series—
1966–67 37 episodes (Halas only: co-d, co-pr, co-sc)

Tomfoolery Series—
1970 17 films (Halas only: d, pr, co-sc)

Masters of Animation Series—
1986–87 (Halas only)

Other Films:
1950 As Old as the Hills (Halas only: co-pr)
1952 We’ve Come a Long Way (Halas: co-pr; Batchelor: co-sc)
1953 Power to Fly (Halas: co-pr; Batchelor: co-sc)
1954 Down a Long Way (Halas: co-pr; Batchelor: co-sc); The Sea (Halas only: pr, sc)
1955 Animal Vegetable Mineral (Halas: pr; Batchelor: co-sc)
1956 To Your Health (Halas: pr; Batchelor: co-sc)
1958 Speed the Plough (Halas: co-pr; Batchelor: co-sc)
1959 How to Be a Hostess (live action) (Halas: pr; Batchelor: sc); Energy Picture (Batchelor: sc; Halas & Batchelor: co-pr)
1960 History of Inventions (Halas only: co-pr, co-sc)
1961 The Monster of Highgate Pond (Halas: pr; Batchelor: sc); The Guns of Navarone (Foreman) (Halas only: des of excerpts)
1962 The Showing Up of Larry the Lamb (Halas only: pr)
1964 The Tale of the Magician (Halas only: pr); Paying Bay (Batchelor: co-sc; Halas & Batchelor: co-pr); Follow That Car (Batchelor: co-sc; Halas & Batchelor: co-pr)
1966 Matrices (Halas only: pr, co-sc); Deadlock (Halas only: pr, co-sc); Flow Diagram (Halas only: pr, co-sc); Linear Programming (Halas only: pr, co-sc)
1967 What Is a Computer (Halas only: co-pr, co-sc); Girls Growing Up (Halas only: pr, co-sc); Mothers and Fathers (Halas only: pr, co-sc)
1968 Functions and Relations (Halas only: pr, co-sc)
1969 Measure of Man (Halas only: pr, co-sc)
1970 This Love Thing (Halas only: pr, co-sc)
1971 Football Freaks (Halas only: pr, co-sc)
1973 Children Making Cartoons (live-action) (Halas only: pr, co-sc); Making Music Together (Halas only: pr, co-sc); The Twelve Tasks of Asterix (Watrin and Gruel) (animation in last reel only) (Halas only: pr, co-sc)
1974 Kitchen Think (Halas only: pr, co-sc); Butterfly Ball (Halas only: pr, co-sc)
1975 Life Insurance Training Film (excerpts) (Halas only: pr, co-sc)
1977 Noah’s Ark (Halas only: pr, co-sc)
1979  Bravo for Billy (Halas only: co-pr, co-sc); Dream Doll (Halas only: co-pr, co-sc)
1980  Bible Stories (Halas only: pr, co-sc)

Foo-Foo Series—
1960  The Scapegoat; The Gardener; The Birthday Treat; A Denture Adventure; A Misguided Tour; The Caddies; Burglar Catcher; The Art Lovers; The Three Mountaineers; Foo Foo’s New Hat; The Big Race; The Treasure Hunt; The Magician; The Spy Train; Insured for Life; Automation Blues; The Beggar’s Uproar; Sleeping Beauty; The Reward; The Dinner Date; Beauty Treatment; The Ski Resort; Lucky Street; The Stowaway; A Hunting We Will Go; The Pearl Divers; Foo Foo’s Sleepless Night; The Salesman; Art for Art’s Sake; The Dog Pound; The Hypnotist; Low Finance (Halas only: pr)

Concept Films Series—
1961–69  200 films in areas of “Biology,” “Science,” and “Maths” (Halas only: pr)

The Tales of Hoffnung Series—
1964  The Symphony Orchestra; The Vacuum Cleaner (Halas only: pr, co-sc)

Evolution of Life—
1964  8 films (Halas only: pr, co-sc)

The Condition of Man Series—
1971  Condition of Man; Quartet; Up; Let It Bleed; It Furthers One to Have Somewhere to Go; Xerography (Halas only: pr, co-sc)

The Addams Family Series—
1972  17 films (Halas only: pr, co-sc)

The Jackson Five Series—
1972  17 films (Halas only: pr, co-sc)

The Osmonds Series—
1973  17 films (Halas only: pr, co-sc)

Britain Series—
1973  Animals; Sports; Roads (Halas only: pr, co-sc—live-action)

Wilhelm Busch Album Series—
1978  13 films (Halas only: co-pr, co-sc)

Publishments

By HALAS and BATCHELOR: books—
Archibald the Great, illustrations by Halas, London, 1937.

Film Animation, Paris, 1976.

By HALAS and BATCHELOR: articles—

Animatrix, no. 1, December 1984.

On HALAS and BATCHELOR: book—

On HALAS and BATCHELOR: articles—

“Halas and Batchelor: Profile of a Partnership,” in Film (London), March 1955.
“Halas and Batchelor,” in Film (London), Spring 1966.
Cineforum (Bergamo, Italy), vol. 23, no. 230, December 1983.
Obituary for Halas, in Film-Dienst (Cologne), 31 January 1995.
Obituary for Halas, in Film International (Tehran), no. 3, 1995.

*  *  *

Halas and Batchelor, the distinguished animation studio, and film research and production center, was established in London in 1940. It was the result of the partnership (and subsequent marriage) of two artists, John Halas and Joy Batchelor. John Halas was educated in Budapest and Paris, and originally worked as an assistant to George Pal before establishing himself as an independent animator in 1934. In 1936 he came to England; while working on a cartoon film, The Music Man, he met Joy Batchelor, who entered films in 1935 as a commercial artist.

Their unit made its name during World War II for its imaginative and excellently designed government-sponsored cartoon propaganda and informational films, some 70 of which were produced between 1941 and 1945. They injected both wit and distinctive design into such forbidding subjects as saving scrap metal, turning them into a ballet of movement with the constant collaboration of two celebrated composers, Francis Chagrin and Matyas Seiber. Highly technical instructional films, for example, Handling Ships and the postwar Water for Firefighting and Submarine Control, extended their range and proved their capacity to match clarity of exposition with design in technological subjects. This was especially notable in the extensive series of informational films sponsored by British Petroleum on oil exploration and technology, such as Moving Spirit.

In the 1950s, Halas and Batchelor were able to expand their work yet further, producing films on purely artistic subjects, such as their Poet and Painter series (working with such artists as Henry Moore, Ronald Searle, and Mervyn Peake). The climax of this came with the feature cartoon version of George Orwell’s Animal Farm, Britain’s first full-length animated entertainment film. By now their London-based studio had become one of the largest in Western Europe, and the unit was capable of attracting international talent from Europe and America to supplement the work of such long-term resident animators as Harold Whitaker, Bob Privett, Digby Turpin, Vic Bevis, Tony Guy, and Brian Borthwick. The Canadian, Gerry Potterton, and the American, Philip Stapp, for example, directed their brilliant film on alcoholism, To Your Health, sponsored by the World Health Organization. Jack King supervised editing and sound, and supplemented the composition of innumerable original music scores by Chagrin, Seiber, and others with his own witty and tuneful compositions. The unit had from its start been distinguished for its sponsorship of fine scores; apart from Chagrin and Seiber (between them responsible for some 250 original compositions), contributing composers have included Benjamin Fraenkel, Tristram Cary, and John Dankworth.

Animal Farm, still perhaps the best-known internationally of Halas and Batchelor films, was sponsored in 1952 by the American producer, Louis de Rochemont; Orwell’s fatalistic fable had been published in 1945. In a period when almost all cartoon films featuring animal characters were cutely comic, Orwell’s novel demanded a serious approach to animal characterization. The 1,800 background drawings involved represented in somewhat stylized form a realistic farm setting, while the animals themselves were strongly developed as serious dramatic characters. Seiber wrote a powerful score, orchestrated for 36 instruments, and all the animals were voiced by a single, highly versatile actor, Maurice Denham. A controversial point was the provision of a somewhat uplifting end, in which it seemed the oppressed animals might be led to revolt against the police state established by the pigs, in place of Orwell’s wholly negative view of a society irrevocably lost to any hope of democratic revival.

The economics of animation have always been precarious, and Halas and Batchelor primarily supported their unit by the mass production of commercials for television, the production of sponsored public relations films, films made in association with other production companies, and by sponsored entertainment series undertaken for television, such as the Foo-Foo cartoon series and the Snip and Snap series. The latter introduced paper sculpture animals, and both series, made in association with ABC-TV, enjoyed worldwide distribution.

Experimental work as early as the 1950s included stereoscopy (work with Norman McLaren for the 1951 Festival of Britain, and The Owl and the Pussycat); and advanced forms of film puppetry, with Alan Crock, in The Figurehead; work in New York (1953–54) for the original three-projection form of Cinerama; cooperation with the Czech stage presentation, Living Screen, combining the multi-projection of film in close synchronization with the live player on the stage; and the production from 1960 of some 200 8mm cassettes to illustrate through brief animation loops points in scientific and technological instruction linked directly to the textbook. Other subjects the studio pioneered were the first animated film version of a Gilbert and Sullivan opera, Ruddigore, The Tales of Hoffnung, a series co-sponsored with BBC-TV, and two animated series of language teaching films in Russian and French.

John Halas’s interest in advanced forms of animation technology took him into computer animation in the early period of its development in the 1960s. The computer, once mastered as an ally, can cut costs as well as increase limitlessly the artistic propensities of the filmmaker. Halas’s first production using the computer was a series of films on mathematics made in 1967; he originated his own computer language: HALAB. His later interests have included the investigation of hologram and laser techniques.

Looking back over the studio’s 50 years’ existence and its wide variety of prize-winning productions exemplifying many styles, from hand-drawn animation to computerized graphics, certain titles among others stand out as examples of their kind in the period of their production. For education, propaganda, and public relations: Dustbin Parade, Fly about the House, As Old as the Hills, Down a Long Way, To Your Health, Wonder of Wool, and The Colombo Plan; and as artistic works for entertainment: Magic Canvas, the Poet and Painter series, The Owl and the Pussy-cat, The Figurehead, Animal Farm, History of the Cinema, the Snip and Snap series, Automania 2000 (the unit’s record prize-winner), The Tales of Hoffnung, Ruddigore, The Question, Butterfly Ball, Autobahn, and Dream Doll. John Halas and Joy Batchelor will inevitably be linked with the history of the fuller development of international animation.

—Roger Manvell

---

HALL, Conrad

Cinematographer. Nationality: American. Born: Papeete, Tahiti, 1926; son of the writer James Norman Hall. Education: Studied journalism and film (under Slavko Vorkapich), University of Southern California, Los Angeles, graduated 1949. Career: 1949—founder, with Jack C. Couffer and Marvin R. Weinstein, Canyon Films to make advertising films and documentaries; also marketed Arriflex cameras; co-founder, Association of Film Craftsmen; 1956—first film as cinematographer, Edge of Fury; TV work includes series Stoney Burke and The Outer Limits, 1963; mid-1970s—formed Wexler-Hall Inc., with Haskell Wexler, to make commercials. Awards:
Academy Award, for Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid, 1969; British Academy Award, for Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid, 1970; Outstanding Achievement Award, American Society of Cinematographers, for Tequila Sunrise, 1988; Cognac Festival du Film Policier (France), award for Best Cinematography for Jennifer 8, 1993; Lifetime Achievement Award, American Society of Cinematographers, 1994; Camerimage Bronze Frog Award for Searching for Bobby Fischer, 1994; Camerimage Lifetime Achievement Award, 1995; National Society of Film Critics Award for Best Cinematography, for American Beauty, 1999; Academy Award and British Academy Award for Best Cinematography, for American Beauty, 2000.

Films as Cameraman:

1949 Sea Theme (co, + co-d, co-sc, co-ed—short)
1956 Running Target (My Brother Down There) (Weinstein) (uncredited, + co-sc)
1960 The Adventure of Huckleberry Finn (Curtiz); Private Property (Stevens); The Gambler Wore a Gun (Cahn)
1962 Matiny on the Bounty (Milestone); Pressure Point (Cornfield)

Films as Cinematographer:

1956 Edge of Fury (Lerner and Gurney)
1965 Fargo (The Wild Seed) (Hutton); Morituri (Saboteur Code Name “Morituri”) (Wicki); Incubus (Stevens)
1966 Harper (The Moving Target) (Smight); The Professionals (R. Brooks)
1967 Rogue’s Gallery (Horn); Divorce American Style (Yorkin); Cool Hand Luke (Rosenberg); In Cold Blood (R. Brooks)
1968 Hell in the Pacific (Boorman)
1969 Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid (Hill); The Happy Ending (R. Brooks); Tell Them Willie Boy Is Here (Polonsky)
1972 Fat City (Huston)
1973 Electra Glide in Blue (Guercio); Catch My Soul (McGooohan)
1974 The Day of the Locust (Schlesinger); Smile (Ritchie)
1975 It Happened One Christmas (Wrye)
1976 Marathon Man (Schlesinger)
1979 The Rose (Rydell) (co)
1987 Black Widow (Rafelson)
1988 Tequila Sunrise (Towne)
1991 Class Action (Apted)
1992 Jennifer 8 (Robinson)
1993 Searching for Bobby Fischer (Indecent Moves) (Zaillian)
1994 Love Affair (Glenn Gordon Caron)
1998 Without Limits (Towne); A Civil Action (Zaillian)
1999 American Beauty (Mendes); Sleepy Hollow (Burton) (ph New York only)

Publications

By HALL: articles—

Film Quarterly (Berkeley, California), Spring 1971.
Millimeter (New York), July/August 1975.
Modern Photography (Cincinnati, Ohio), February and March 1976.

On HALL: articles—

Film Comment (New York), Summer 1972.
Ritchie, M., on Smile in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), October 1975.
Film Comment (New York), March/April 1987.

* * *

When Conrad Hall returned to features in 1987 with Rafelson’s Black Widow, after a self-imposed hiatus during which he established a production company with Haskell Wexler to make commercials, he was asked whether much had changed in the interim. “There are a few new time-saving innovations, but that’s about it,” he replied. “The real change is in the audience and the way the studios perceive it. Everything is geared toward people in their mid-twenties, and the prime ingredient in today’s movies is violence. That puts me on the outside. I believe in the power of film to do good in the broadest sense of what that implies.” The remark is particularly revealing, as is his citing of Boorman (Hell in the Pacific) and Richard Brooks (The Professionals, In Cold Blood, and The Happy Ending) as the directors with whom he has most enjoyed working.

Hall is clearly drawn towards directors with something to say—one might also cite Rosenberg (Cool Hand Luke), Polonsky (Tell Them Willie Boy Is Here), Huston (Fat City), Ritchie (Smile), and Schlesinger (The Day of the Locust and Marathon Man)—and it is altogether typical that the chief reason that he went into commercials was to buy himself time and freedom enough to be able to pursue screenwriting as a route into feature direction. In particular he hoped to be able to write and direct a film of Faulkner’s “The Wild Palms,” a long-cherished project still to see the light of day. As he himself put it “the sixties were very much alive, and I had given nothing to the new sensibilities and the new freedoms that were being staked out. I never threw a brick, I never marched, I never held a flower. I was getting better pictures, making more money, and having a wonderful time, while everyone else was struggling to change society. So, I thought, I’ll stop my instrument. I went into retirement to write and to find films to direct that would influence society in a positive way.”

This is surely a trifle over-modest. As David Engelbach points out in Millimeter, “in the two years following In Cold Blood, Hall shot Stuart Rosenberg’s best film Cool Hand Luke and John Boorman’s strangely stylized adventure Hell in the Pacific. It was a period of genuine creative growth for American films and Hall was in the center of it. New directors had come along anxious to make critical, imaginative statements and eager to use the medium more imaginatively. During this period, every other interesting movie seemed to be shot by Conrad Hall.”

For all his interest in using film as a social medium, Hall is not a cinematographer who tries to put a personal signature on all his films. As he once said “I don’t think I have a style. I know I don’t want one.” Somewhat self-effacingly, Hall chooses the style to suit the material, as Engelbach suggests: “from the slick romanticism of The Day of the Locust to the hard-bitten realism of John Huston’s Fat City, he has managed to portray and illuminate, through the visual atmosphere he imparts to a film, the psychological and emotional content of the material which often lies beneath the surface of the written script.” If one is looking for stylistic signatures it is certainly possible to detect a preference for widescreen formats, and a gradual move away from the saturated colors which distinguish, for example, The Professionals and Harper. Or there is the more critical line adopted by Take One in its 1979 survey of contemporary cinematographers, which argued that “his work can be too immaculate, and his calculated artiness has helped to embalm such pictures as In Cold Blood and Butch Cassidy. At worst, there is too much sharpness in his imagery, too much deliberation, not enough involvement.”

On the other hand, Hall’s films can be taken separately and admired for their individual beauties—the soft pastels of Smile, the flashlight murder in In Cold Blood, or the rich tones of Butch Cassidy, which have been described by one critic as “alternately lyrical and foreboding.” Equally sumptuous was Day of the Locust, which Hall describes as “a golden picture. I thought that this was a story that involved everything that was golden, not only the times but the money, the sunsets, the era and the idea of the moth drawn to the flame,” that is, the losers lured towards destruction by their romantic dreams of fame and fortune. Rather than concentrate on the meagerness of the characters’ actual lives Schlesinger and Hall decided that the look of the film should evoke their fantasies. As Hall himself explains: “Karen Black’s character, when she’s thinking about movies, always sees the glamorous aspect of it and always sees herself in it even though her life is nothing. So the visual approach was one that coincided with her dreams to make it more palatable for the audience. To me the best way to tell that story is to match the despair of it. But then again, if you did it that way, you’d have to somehow make despair palatable at the box office. I think that’s possible.”

However, Hall’s films have been criticized for their slickness and lack of grit. As Daly observes, “In most films directed during the sixties, Hall’s approach was to use the medium to tell a story, to use the medium to evoke the character’s fantasy, to use the medium to make the painting abrasive just as their lives were.” Hall deliberately goes for an anonymous look to match the anonymity of the characters’ lives, simply following the action as opposed to obviously adding anything to it. “If I could’ve hid the camera, it’s what I would have done,” adds Hall, a remarkable and revealing statement for one of Hollywood’s top cameramen.

The look that Hall managed to create in American Beauty is another example of this idea. In a film narrated by a dead man telling the story of the events leading up to his death, the camera is of necessity hidden behind the point of view of the narrator; the integrity of the narrative depends on the integrity of the images through which it is expressed. Hall captures the superficial lives of the protagonists, emphasizing the garishness of the decorations in unsold houses, for example, or the unreal cleanliness of the expensive fabric on a sofa. Such attention to surfaces is contrasted with the strange beauty captured in the grainy video image of a plastic bag swirling in the wind. Hall won an Oscar for the cinematography in American Beauty, but his experience behind the camera also proved invaluable to first-time film director, Sam Mendes, who with characteristic openness, regularly asked him for advice on the practicalities of shooting a particular scene.

Hall elaborates in the 90-minute American Film Institute documentary Visions of Light: The Art of Cinematography on how his... dogged pursuit of “the happy accident, the magic moment” has helped shape his 50-year career, and produced some of film history’s most memorable images. His status as a cinematographer was officially recognized in 1994 when the American Society of Cinematographers honored him with its Lifetime Achievement Award.

—Julian Petley, updated by Denise Delorey, further updated by Chris Routledge

HALLER, Ernest

Cinematographer. Nationality: American. Born: Los Angeles, California, 31 May 1896. Career: Worked as a bank clerk; 1914—actor for Biograph, then became cameraman in 1915; 1920—first film as cinematographer, Love Is Everything; 1925—51—worked mainly for First National (Warner Brothers), then freelance. Awards: Academy Award for Gone with the Wind, 1939. Died: In an automobile accident, 1970.

Films as Cinematographer:

-1920 Love Is Everything (Bennett); Neglected Wives (B. King); Yes or No (Neill); The Discarded Woman (B. King); Trumpet Island (Terriss); The Inner Voice (Neill); Dead Men Tell No Tales (Terriss); The Common Sin (For Your Daughter's Sake) (B. King)

-1921 The Gilded Lily (Leonard); Such a Little Queen (Fawcett); Salvation Nell (Webb); Wife against Wife (Bennett); The Road to Arcady (B. King); The Iron Trail (Neill)

-1923 The Ne'er-Do-Well (Green); Homeward Bound (R. Ince); Woman-Proof (Green)

-1924 Pied Piper Malone (Green); Rough Ridin’ (Thorpe); Empty Hearts (Santell); Three Keys (Le Saint); Parisian Nights (Santell)

-1925 Any Woman (H. King) (co); High and Handsome (Winning His Stripes) (Garson); The New Commandment (Higgin); Bluebeard's Seven Wives (Santell)

-1926 The Reckless Lady (Higgin); The Dancer of Paris (Santell); The Wilderness Woman (Higgin); Stacked Cards (Eddy); The Great Deception (Higgin); Hair Trigger Buster (Nelson); The Prince of Tempters (Mendes)

-1927 Convoy (Boyle); Broadway Nights (Boyle); Dance Music (Halperin); For the Love of Mike (Capra); French Dressing (Lessons for Wives) (Dwan)

-1928 The Whip Woman (Boyle); Mad Hour (Boyle); Harold Teen (LeRoy); Wheel of Chance (Santell); Out of the Ruins (Dillon); Naughty Baby (Reckless Rosie) (LeRoy)

-1929 Weary River (Lloyd); The House of Horror (Christensen); Drag (Parasites) (Lloyd); The Girl in the Glass Cage (Dawson); Dark Streets (Lloyd); Young Nowheres (Lloyd); Wedding Rings (Beaudine)

-1930 Son of the Gods (Lloyd); A Notorious Affair (Bacon); The Dawn Patrol (Hawks); One Night at Susie's (Dillon); Sunny (Seiter); The Lash (Adios) (Lloyd)

-1931 Millie (Dillon); Ten Cents a Dance (L. Barrymore); The Finger Points (Dillon); Chances (Dwan); I Like Your Nerve (McGann); Honor of the Family (Bacon); 24 Hours (The Hours Between) (Gering); Compromised (We Three) (Adolfi); Girls about Town (Cukor); Blonde Crazy (Larceny Lane) (Del Ruth)

-1932 The Woman from Monte Carlo (Curtiz); The Rich Are Always with Us (Green); Night after Night (Mayo); The Crash (Dieterle); Scarlet Dawn (Dieterle)

-1933 King of the Jungle (Marcin and Humberstone); International House (Sutherland); The Emperor Jones (Murphy); Murders in the Zoo (Sutherland); The House on 56th Street (Florey)

-1934 Easy to Love (Keighley); Journal of a Crime (Keighley); The Key (Curtiz); Merry Wives of Reno (Humberstone); Desirable (Mayo); British Agent (Curtiz); The Firebird (Dieterle)

-1935 Age of Indiscretion (Ludwig); Mary Jane's Pa (Wanderlust) (Keighley); Captain Blood (Curtiz); Dangerous (Green)

-1936 The Voice of Bugle Ann (Thorpe); Petite Coat Fever (Fitzmaurice); Public Enemy's Wife (G-Man's Wife) (Grinde); Mountain Justice (Curtiz); The Captain's Kid (Grinde); The Great O'Malley (Dieterle)

-1937 Call It a Day (Mayo); That Certain Woman (Goulding); The Great Garrick (Whale)

-1938 Jezebel (Wyler); Four's a Crowd (Curtiz); Four Daughters (Curtiz); Brother Rat (Keighley)

-1939 Dark Victory (Goulding); The Roaring Twenties (Walsh); Gone with the Wind (Fleming); Invisible Stripes (Bacon)

-1940 It All Came True (Seiler); All This, and Heaven Too (Litvak); No Time for Comedy (Keighley)

-1941 Honeymoon for Three (Bacon); Footsteps in the Dark (Bacon); Manpower (Walsh); The Bride Came C.O.D. (Keighley); Blues in the Night (Litvak); The Gay Parisian (Gaiete Parisienne) (Negulesco—short); Spanish Fiesta (Capriccio Espagnol) (Negulesco—short) (co)

-1942 In This Our Life (Huston); George Washington Slept Here (Keighley)

-1943 Princess O'Rourke (Krasna); A Present with a Future (V. Sherman—short)

-1944 Mrs. Skeffington (V. Sherman); The Doughgirls (Kern)

-1945 Rhapsody in Blue (Rapper) (co); Mildred Pierce (Curtiz); Saratoga Trunk (Wood)

-1946 Devotion (Bernhardt); A Stolen Life (Bernhardt); The Verdict (Siegel); Honeymooners (Negulesco); Deception (Rapper)

-1947 The Unfaithful (V. Sherman)

-1948 My Girl Tisa (Nugent); Winter Meeting (Windust)

-1949 My Dream Is Yours (Curtiz) (co); Always Leave Them Laughing (Del Ruth); Chain Lightning (Heisler)

-1950 The Flame and the Arrow (Tourneur); Dallas (Heisler)

-1951 Jim Thorpe—All American (Man of Bronze) (Curtiz); On Moonlight Bay (Del Ruth); Pictura: An Adventure in Art (Dupont and others—compilation) (linking ph)

-1952 Monsoon (Amateau); Jhansi ri-rani (The Tiger and the Flame) (Modi)

-1954 Carnival Story (Circus of Love) (Neumann)

-1955 Magic Fire (Dieterle); Rebel without a Cause (Ray)

-1956 The Come-On (Birdwell); Dakota Incident (Foster); The Cruel Tower (Landers)

-1957 Men in War (A. Mann); The Young Don't Cry (Werker); Plunder Road (Cornfield); Hill on Devil's Island (Nyby); Back from the Dead (Warren)

-1958 Hell's Five Hours (Copeland); God's Little Acre (A. Mann); Man of the West (A. Mann); Speed Crazy (Hole)
Ernest Haller

1959  The Miracle (Rapper); The Third Voice (Cornfield)
1960  Bob and the Pirates (Gordon); Why Must I Die? (Thirteen Steps to Death) (Del Ruth); Three Blondes in His Life (Chooluck)
1961  Chivato (Rebellion in Cuba) (Gannaway); Armored Command (Haskin); Married Too Young (I Married Too Young) (Moskov); Fear No More (Wiesen)
1962  Pressure Point (Cornfield); Whatever Happened to Baby Jane? (Aldrich)
1963  Lilies of the Field (Nelson)
1964  Dead Ringer (Dead Image) (Henreid)
1965  The Restless Ones (Ross)

Publications

By HALLER: article—

On HALLER: articles—

Film Comment (New York), Summer 1972.

* * *

The longtime Hollywood cameraman Ernest Haller is probably best known for his work on Gone with the Wind, for which he earned his only Oscar. But his five nominations in fact tell more about his reputation within Hollywood itself. Haller produced quality work for 45 years. He came into his own during the 1950s and was known within industry circles for his expert location shooting.

Haller’s roots in the film business went back to Hollywood’s origins. After leaving high school, he began in 1914 with Biograph as an actor, but switched to the camera department the following year. His first work behind the camera came with an early serial, The Hazards of Helen. He then moved his way up through the on-the-job training system which was then in force, and was credited for his first film as cinematographer in 1920. An Ernest Haller film would then appear every year until 1965.

At Warner Brothers during the early 1930s, work was fast and furious, and Haller helped grind films out at the rate of one every two months. Representative titles included Howard Hawks’s The Dawn Patrol and Frank Lloyd’s Weary River. But he worked on every possible genre, and did what he was told. By the late 1930s Ernest Haller had worked his way up to strictly A-budget feature films. He worked with all the major stars on the Warner lot, from Errol Flynn to Humphrey Bogart to James Cagney. If he had a specialty it was photographing the films of Bette Davis and Joan Crawford. Indeed he won an Oscar nomination for Davis’s Jezebel and Crawford’s Mildred Pierce. The latter film was one of the pioneering efforts in the early days of film noir.

With the coming of age of independent film production in the 1950s, Haller began to freelance like nearly all other cameramen. He formally left Warners in 1951 and worked on some poor films, and also on some of Hollywood’s best. In the latter category we certainly must include Rebel without a Cause, directed by Nicholas Ray and a pioneering effort in CinemaScope, and Man of the West directed by Anthony Mann, a great director of westerns.

Yet despite his long association with Warners and other distinguished work, Haller will always best be remembered for his work behind the camera for Gone with the Wind. He was not David O. Selznick’s original choice for cinematographer, and he started long after production was well underway, replacing Lee Garmes. Historians note that although Haller receives sole credit for the camerawork on the film (and received the film’s Oscar for camerawork), Lee Garmes was responsible for most of the first hour of the picture. Yet certainly the bulk of Gone with the Wind is Haller’s picture, and will always be noted as the most important color film made in Hollywood prior to the 1950s.

—Douglas Gomery

HAMBLING, Gerry

Editor. Nationality: British. Born: Gerald Hambling, 1926. Career: Began working as assistant to Ralph Kemplen; worked in late 1950s and 1960s on British comedies; worked eight years as editor in advertising, 1968–1976; Member of British Guild of Film Editors and American Cinema Editors Guild. Awards: British Academy of Film and Television Arts (BAFTA) Film Award for Best Editing, and British Guild of Editors Award for Midnight Express, 1979; British Guild of Editors Award for Fame, 1980; BAFTA Film Award for Best Editing, and American Cinema Editors Awards (A.C.E.) Award for Mississippi Burning, 1990; BAFTA Film Award for Best Editing for The Commitments, 1992; American Cinema Editors Career Achievement Award, 1998.

Films as Editor:

1956  Dry Rot (Elvey)
1958  The Whole Truth (Guillermin)
1960  The Bulldog Breed (Asher); The Poacher’s Daughter (Sally’s Irish Rogue) (Pollock)
1961  The Kitchen (Hill)
1962  She’ll Have to Go (Maid for Murder) (Asher)
1963  A Stitch in Time (Asher)
1965  The Early Bird (Asher); The Intelligence Men (Spylarks) (Asher)
1966  Press for Time (Asher); That Riviera Touch (Owen)
1967  The Magnificent Two (Owen)
1968  The Adding Machine (Epstein)
1976  Bugsy Malone (Parker)
1978  Midnight Express (Parker)
1980  Fame (Parker)
1981  Heartaches (Shebib)
1982  Pink Floyd The Wall (Parker); Shoot the Moon (Parker)
1984  Another Country (Kanievska); Birdy (Parker)
1985  Invitation to the Wedding (Brooks)
1986  Absolute Beginners (Temple)
1987  Angel Heart (Parker); Leonard Part 6 (Weiland)
1988  Mississippi Burning (Parker)
1990  Come See the Paradise (Parker)
1991  The Commitments (Parker)
1992  City of Joy (La Cité de la joie) (Joffé)
1993  In the Name of the Father (Sheridan)
1994  The Road to Wellville (Parker)
1996  Evita (Parker); White Squall (Scott)
1997  The Boxer (Sheridan)
1998  Talk of Angels (Hamm)
1999  Angela’s Ashes (Parker)

Other Films:

1961  Left Right and Center (Gilliat) (production designer)
1962  Freud (Freud: The Secret Passion) (Huston) (dubbing editor)
1963  The Servant (Losey) (sound editor)

Publications

On HAMBLING: articles—

Young, L.L., “Angela’s Ashes: The Novel, the Film, the Moviola,” in Cinemeditor (Los Angeles), Fall 1999.

* * *

The film editing career of Gerry Hambling divides into two distinct periods, separated by eight years in which he worked as an editor of television commercials. During the 1950s and 1960s he worked with directors such as Robert Asher, editing archetypal British comedies, and sound editing for such notables as John Huston and Joseph Losey. Since the mid-1970s he has worked extensively with Alan Parker, adding his dynamic style to Parker’s glossy visuals to create good-looking, high-impact movies such as Mississippi
Burning and The Name of the Father. But the real strength of their partnership has been in musical films such as Bugsy Malone and Evita, where their background in advertising is perhaps most evident.

Hambling began working as assistant to Ralph Kemplen, who eventually helped him through his first solo project in 1956, but it was working with Robert Asher that he had the first real successes of a career that has lasted more than fifty years. He worked with Asher on seven films, notably on the Norman Wisdom vehicles, The Bulldog Breed, and A Stitch in Time. The films had some success at the time, and are remembered, in the UK at least, with nostalgia for a gentler age, but their simple slapstick humour has limited appeal.

By the late 1960s, the British film industry was in crisis, and many filmmaking personnel, including Hambling, found themselves out of work. Hambling moved into advertising, where he edited commercials. The experience forced him to reconsider his approach to his craft, since commercials rely much more heavily on visual impact and editing to carry their message than film. It was through his work in advertising that Hambling met Alan Parker, with whom he began working in 1971, and whose first feature film, Bugsy Malone marks the beginning of the second phase in Hambling’s film career. Hambling has edited all of Parker’s films, and admires the director for his ability to produce just enough footage for the editor to cover a scene with very little going to waste.

The collaboration with Parker has ranged widely, from the musical Bugsy Malone, through the partly animated Pink Floyd The Wall, to the grim Angel Heart and the strange story of The Road to Welville. They have been particularly successful with musicals, Hambling’s talent for creating the illusion of movement proving useful where musical performances appear in films such as The Commitments, which Lawrence O’Toole called “a great swim for the eyeballs.” Perhaps because of their experience in advertising, Parker’s slick and striking images combine well with Hambling’s intuitive sense of pace and rhythm, for example in the otherwise problematic Fame, and in the much trailed, but poorly received Evita. Hambling’s work on Julian Temple’s Absolute Beginners is also indicative of his ability to find interest in what was little more than a feature length music video.

Hambling has worked with other directors than Parker, most notably with Jim Sheridan on In the Name of the Father and The Boxer. With both Parker and Sheridan he has been involved with projects that deal with the political and religious divisions of Northern Ireland, and his eye for narrative structures suits the demands of dark, tense films such as these and Mississippi Burning, Parker’s film about racism in America’s southern states. More recently, Hambling worked with Parker on his adaptation of Frank McCourt’s biography, Angela’s Ashes, a difficult film from a technical point of view in that it required three actors to play the different stages of McCourt’s childhood. But the close relationship between Hambling and Parker means that their films are now more like true collaborations than the usual understanding between director and editor.

An unassuming man, who shies away from publicity and self-promotion, Hambling still works on two old-fashioned Moviola editing machines rather than learning new digital techniques. As the human pace of Angela’s Ashes suggests, Hambling’s instinct for what audiences enjoy and understand in the visual structures of a film is practically infallible. In an industry increasingly obsessed with technology and special effects, Hambling, as L.L. Young points out, “is the finest [editing] system money can buy.”

—Chris Routledge

HAMLISCH, Marvin

Films as Composer:

1965 Ski Party (Rafkin) (song)
1968 The Swimmer (Perry)
1969 The April Fools (Simon); Take the Money and Run (W. Allen)
1970 Flap (The Last Warrior) (Reed); Move (Rosenberg)
1971 Bananas (W. Allen); Kotch (Lemmon); Something Big (McLaglen)
1972 The Special London Bridge Special (Winters); Fat City (Huston); The War Between Men and Women (Shavelson);
The World’s Greatest Athlete (Scheerer)
1973 Save the Tiger (Avidsen); The Sting (Hill); The Way We Were (Pollack)
1974 The Prisoner of Second Avenue (Simon)
1977 The Spy Who Loved Me (Gilbert)
1978 Ice Castles (Wrye); Same Time, Next Year (Mulligan)
1979 Chapter Two (Simon); Starting Over (Pakula)
1980 The Absent-Minded Waiter (Gottlieb); Ordinary People (Redford); Seems Like Old Times (Sandrich)

Marvin Hamlisch
HAMLISCH WRITERS AND PRODUCTION ARTISTS, 4th EDITION

1981 The Devil and Max Devlin (Stern); The Fan (Bianchi); I Ought to Be in Pictures (Ross); Pennies from Heaven (Ross)
1982 Sophie’s Choice (Pakula)
1983 Romantic Comedy (Hiller)
1985 A Chorus Line (Attenborough); D.A.R.Y.L. (Wincer)
1987 Shy People (Konchalovsky); Three Men and a Baby (Nimoy)
1988 Big (Penny Marshall); The January Man (O’Connor); Little Nikita (Benjamin)
1989 The Experts (Thomas); Shirley Valentine (Gilbert); Troop Beverly Hills (Kanew)
1991 Switched at Birth (Hussein); Frankie & Johnny (G. Marshall)
1994 Seasons of the Heart (Grant—for TV)
1996 Fairy Tales on Ice: Alice Through the Looking Glass (for video); Open Season (Wuhl); The Mirror Has Two Faces (Streisand)

Publications

By HAMLISCH: article—

Screen International (London), no. 81, April 1977.

On HAMLISCH: articles—

Films and Filming (London), vol. 20, no. 9, June 1974.
Photoplay (New York), vol. 31, no. 6, June 1980.
Soundtrack! (Mechelen), June 1996.

* * *

A child prodigy, trained rigorously in classical music, Marvin Hamlisch discovered in his teens that playing piano concerts was not for him. Live performance made him too nervous. Instead, his talent took him in another direction. Hamlisch developed a love for popular music, especially show tunes. A fine ear enabled him to duplicate whatever he heard. “I had no style of my own,” he later confessed, “Whatever I heard, I imitated.” With his knowledge of music theory (particularly concepts of orchestration) and an affection for popular lyrics, Hamlisch decided on a career in show business.

One could hardly imagine a musician more suited to the composition of film music, a unique craft that demands acquaintance with a wide variety of musical styles, the ability to create simple yet attractive melodies which can be expressed and resolved in short phrases, and a familiarity with the tonalities and colors of different instruments. Film musicians also must be able to compose quickly, drawing on a repertoire of stock themes. Hamlisch proved, in a rather interesting way, that he could do this. After writing songs for such performers as Lesley Gore and Liza Minnelli, he was introduced by the latter to Buster Davis, a vocal arranger who gave him work on a number of Broadway productions, including Funny Girl and Golden Rainbow. Between assignments Hamlisch worked as a rehearsal pianist for The Bell Telephone Hour on television. One evening at a party he met movie producer Sam Spiegel, who was looking for someone to do the music for The Swimmer (eventually directed by Frank Perry). Hamlisch went home, wrote the theme music in three days, and got the job. Though not a complicated score, this music shows Hamlisch at his flexible best; its mournful, vaguely modern yet expressive harmonies suit the failed antiromanticism of John Cheever’s deranged hero and his impossible quest to re-create the past.

In many ways, the scoring done for his next assignment, Woody Allen’s Take the Money and Run, is Hamlisch’s most impressive. This is because Allen’s postmodern pastiche offers a series of ironic and subversive comments on all aspects of cinematic traditionalism, including the emotional coloring and commentative functions of film music. Allen allows Hamlisch to foreground the presence of the scoring even as he asks him to poke fun at the traditional repertoire of musical colors. The result is a film that catalogs even as it makes fun of traditional method. To accompany the voice of God narrator, for example, Hamlisch composed an up-tempo, vaguely military theme, orchestrated with percussion, strings, and brass, which overshadows its own seriousness. Similarly, romantic motifs, utilizing harp and piano, are too sweet and help send up the film’s ironic concern with star-crossed lovers. Most interesting, perhaps, are the various ‘‘action’’ motifs Hamlisch creates, including one that’s vaguely Jewish, with mazurka rhythms as well as a prominent clarinet and strings playing in a minor key.

No subsequent project, not even Allen’s Bananas, has drawn on Hamlisch’s many talents so extensively and profitably. The rest of his film work, however, is certainly varied and interesting. For George Roy Hill’s The Sting, Hamlisch used a number of piano rag tunes by composer Scott Joplin to create a ‘‘period’’ musical atmosphere (actually the film is set during the Great Depression while Joplin’s rags belong to an earlier era, but this historical inaccuracy does not spoil the audience’s enjoyment). These compositions are somewhat complex harmonically, which meant that Hamlisch could not abstract short, flexible phrases to use as emotional color in dramatic scenes. Consequently, the Joplin rags are used almost exclusively during transitional passages and during action or montage sequences with no diegetic sound.

The Barbra Streisand/Robert Redford vehicle The Way We Were, though a very different project, also brought acclaim, awards, and financial success. The film’s schmaltzy title tune, with lyrics by Marilyn and Alan Bergman, was initially rejected by Streisand as too simple musically, but her recording made the charts and won an Oscar for both lyricists and composer. This film is scored in a very traditional fashion with the title theme expressing a romantic emotional coloring associated, first, with the Streisand character and, second, with the film’s overall nostalgic point of view. The theme assumes a number of different forms as it comments on moments of dramatic tension and emotion. As in the classic studio melodrama, the musical themes are an integral part of the drama, even though this is in no sense a musical film (Streisand does not ‘‘perform’’); hence the notion of a title theme subsequently accorded dramatic prominence is important. Hamlisch’s work for the James Bond project The Spy Who Loved Me is similar; here his title theme is integrated with the already famous Bond signature theme, but, because the romantic elements of this film are emphasized more than in others of the same series, the lush naughtiness of Hamlisch’s ‘‘Nobody Does It Better’’ is prominently featured as coloring in the many scenes between Roger Moore and Barbara Bach. Hamlisch’s action themes, boldly orchestrated in the Bond film tradition, are also noteworthy.

Most of the other films in which Hamlisch was involved offered him less opportunity for creativity and made slighter demands on his compositional talents. For Save the Tiger, he reorchestrated as non-diegetic commentative music a number of 1940s swing tunes, particularly two by Benny Goodman; the effect is interesting, for the reorchestrations inevitably seem richer than their originals, which play diegetically throughout the film. This contrast between the diegetic and the nondiegetic musically embodies the functioning of memory as an idealized reconstruction of bygone pleasures. Trapped by a past he cannot relive, the protagonist is tortured by a nostalgia evoked but not satisfied by his scratchy records. Disappointingly, however, the film’s nondiegetic themes play in only a limited number of scenes with no natural sound; hence the contrast between music as event and music as comment is never fully worked out. Employed on some Neil Simon vehicles (The April Fools, The Prisoner of Second Avenue, and Chapter Two), Hamlisch wrote effective “invisible” action scores without dominant themes or motifs. Other projects, such as Seems Like Old Times, required little more: a simple, dominant theme which could be orchestrated and colored for comic, action, and romantic scenes alike.

Hamlisch’s career declined in the eighties; this was a reflex of new methods of scoring (most particularly, using a medley of already existing popular tunes with ready-made cultural associations or creating such a medley with the object of subsequent recording sales, as in Stigwood’s Saturday Night Fever). Not all producers, however, have chosen music programs of this kind for their films. Hamlisch was thus able to create effectively unobtrusive background scoring for, among other similar projects, Shirley Valentine, Three Men and a Baby, and Big, three comedy dramas that traditionally benefit from this kind of musical treatment, where the themes are largely “unheard” but often contribute substantially to the creation of mood or meaning in a given scene. A Chorus Line offered Hamlisch the chance to adapt a Broadway musical for the screen; if the resulting film was less than successful, this could not be traced to his tasteful, if unflamboyant, rescoring. He has not worked much in the nineties, a period that has been dominated by big-budget action spectaculars briefly cel painter and inker at Fleischer Studios; 1934—draftsman and animator at Van Beuren Studios; 1936—animator and storyboard editor at Paul Terry Studios; 1937—animator and story editor at MGM.

1938—Hanna and Barbera began collaborating as an animation team at MGM; 1940—Puss Gets the Boot, their first venture, marked the debut of Tom and Jerry; 1955—co-heads of MGM’s cartoon unit, and producers of the Tom and Jerry series, until MGM closed the department in 1957; 1957—founded Hanna-Barbera Productions:
first TV cartoon series, The Ruff and Reddy Show; first cinematic cartoon series from Hanna-Barbera Productions, Loopy de Wolf; 1959–65—television work includes primetime animated series The Adventures of Jonny Quest, 1964–65; 1965—daytime cartoon shows; and live-action and animated series and specials; produced film and home video features in full animation, live action or combined; 1967—named copresidents and codirectors of operations for the studio after its sale to Taft Broadcasting Company; 1978—The Hanna-Barbera Happy Hour; 1989—studio sold to Great American Broadcasting Company; 1990—collaborated as a producer/director team for the last time on Jetsons: The Movie; 1991—named cochairmen and cofounders of Hanna-Barbera Productions after its sale to Turner Broadcasting Company; 1994—made their acting debuts in The Flintstones. Awards: Tom and Jerry cartoon short subjects which received the Academy Award: The Yankee Doodle Mouse, 1943,
Mouse Trouble, 1944, Quiet Please!, 1945, The Cat Concerto, 1947,
The Little Orphan, 1949, The Two Mouseketeers, 1952, and Johann
Mouse, 1953; Emmy Awards: The Huckleberry Hound Show, 1959; Jack and the Beanstalk, 1966; The Last of the Curlews, 1973; The and The Last Halloween, 1992; 1988—National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences’ Governors Award.

MGM Cartoon Shorts as Animation Directors/ Writers (all Tom and Jerry, except those noted by *; “comp” indicates footage from earlier Tom and Jerry shorts):

1940 Gallopin’ Gals*; Officer Pooch*; Puss Gets the Boot
1941 The Goose Goes South*; The Midnight Snack; The Night before Christmas
1942 The Bowling Alley-Cat; Dog Trouble; Fine Feathered Friend;
Fraidy Cat; Puss ‘n’ Toots
1943 Baby Puss; The Lonesome Mouse; Sufferin’ Cats!; The Yan-ekkee Doodle Mouse
1944 The Bodyguard; The Million Dollar Cat; Mouse Trouble;
Puttin’ on the Dog; The Zoot Cat
1945 Flirty Birdy; The Mouse Comes to Dinner; Mouse in Manhattan; Quiet Please!; Tea for Two 1946 The Milky Waif; Solid Serenade; Springtime for Thomas; Trap
Happy
1947 The Cat Concerto; Cat Fishin’; Dr. Jekyll And Mr. Mouse;
The Invisible Mouse, A Mouse in the House; Part Time Pal;
Salt Water Tabby
1948 Kitty Foiled; Mouse Cleaning; Old Rockin’ Chair Tom;
Professor Tom; The Truce Hurts
1949 The Cat and the Mermouse; Hatch Up Your Troubles; Heavily Puss; Jerry’s Diary (comp); The Little Orphan; Love
That Pup; Polka-Dot Puss; Tennis Champs

---

HANNA, William, and Joseph BARBERA

Mexico, 14 July, 1910. Education: Studied journalism at Compton Junior College in California. Career: Engineering/surveying assistant in California, 1929–1930; 1930—head of ink and paint department at Harmon-Ising Studio; 1933–1937—story editor, lyricist and director at Harmon-Ising, first animated film as director, To Spring, 1937; 1937—joined MGM’s new in-house cartoon unit as director and writer: first animated film as director at MGM: Blue Monday, 1938.

City, 1911. Education: Attended the American Institute of Banking and the Art Students League in New York City, and Pratt Institute in Brooklyn. Career: Tax accountant, Irving Trust Bank, 1928–34,
1950  Cueball Cat; The Framed Cat; Jerry and the Lion; Little Quacker; Safety Second; Saturday Evening Puss; Texas Tom; Tom and Jerry in the Hollywood Bowl
1951  Casanova Cat; Cat Napping; His Mouse Friday; Jerry and the Goldfish; Jerry’s Cousin; Nit-Witty Kitty; Sleepy-Time Tom; Slicked-Up Pup
1952  Cruise Cat (comp); The Dog House; The Duck Doctor; Fit to Be Tied; The Flying Cat; Little Runaway; Push-Button Kitty; Smitten Kitten (comp); Triplet Trouble; The Two Mouseketeers
1953  Jerry and Jumbo; Johann Mouse; Just Ducky; Life with Tom (comp); The Missing Mouse; That’s My Pup; Two Little Indians
1954  Baby Butch; Downhearted Duckling; Hic-Cup Pup; Little School Mouse; Mice Follies; Neapolitan Mouse; Pet Peeve; Posse Cat; Puppy Tale; Touché; Pussy Cat!
1955  Designs On Jerry; Good Will o Men* (CinemaScope remake of Hugh Harmon’s 1939 cartoon short, Peace on Earth); Mouse for Sale; Pecos Pest; Pup on a Picnic; Smarty Cat (comp); Southbound Duckling; That’s My Mommy; Tom And Chérie

1956  Barbeque Brawl; Blue Cat Blues; Busy Buddies; Downbeat Bear; The Egg And Jerry (CinemaScope remake of Hatch Up Your Troubles); The Flying Sorceress; Give And Take*; Muscle Beach Tom; Scat Cats*
1957  Feedin’ The Kiddie (CinemaScope remake of The Little Orphan); Mucho Mouse; One Droopy Knight*; Timid Tabby; Tom’s Photo Finish; Tops With Pops (CinemaScope remake of Love That Pup)
1958  Happy Go Ducky; Robin Hoodwinked; Royal Cat Nap; Tot Watchers; The Vanishing Duck

Other MGM Films:

1938  Blue Monday (cartoon short; d—Hanna); What a Lion! (cartoon short; d—Hanna)
1945  Anchors Aweigh (d—Sidney) (ds—animated sequences)
1946  Holiday in Mexico (d—Sidney) (ds—animated sequences)
1949  Neptune’s Daughter (d—Buzelle) (ds—animated sequences)
1952  Dangerous When Wet (d—Walters) (ds—animated sequences)
1956  Invitation to the Dance (d—Kelly) (ds—animated sequences)
Cartoon Shorts as Producers and Directors of Animation for Hanna-Barbera Productions (all featuring Loopy de Wolf):

1959  Little Bo Bopped; Wolf Hounded
1960  Creepy Time Pal; The Do-Good Wolf; Here; Kiddie; Life With Loopy; No Biz Like Shoe Biz; Snoopy Loopy; A Tale of a Wolf
1961  Catch Meow; Count Down Clown; Child Sock-Cology; Fee Fie Foes; Happy Go Loopy; Kooky Loopy; Loopy’s Hare-Do; This Is My Ducky Day; Two-Faced Wolf; Zoo Is Company
1962  Bearly Able; Beef for and Afer; Bungle Uncle; Bunnies Abundant; Chicken Fraca-See; Common Scents; Rancid Ransom; Slippery Slippers; Swash Buckled
1963  Bear Up!; Chicken-Hearted Wolf; Crook Who Cried Wolf; Drum-Sticked: A Fallible Fable; Habit Rabbit; Just a Wolf at Heart; Not in Nottingham; Sheep Stealers Anonymous; Whatcha Watchin’; Wolf in Sheep Dog’s Clothing
1964  Bear Hug; Bear Knuckles; Elephantastic; Habit Troubles; Raggedy Rug; Trouble Brain
1965  Big Mouse-Take; Crow’s Fete; Horse Shoo; Pork Chop Fooey

Feature-Length Theatrical Films:

1964  Hey There, It’s Yogi Bear
1966  A Man Called Flintstone
1968  Project X (Castle) (ds—animated sequences)
1972  Charlotte’s Grade School (Nichols and Takamoto) (prs)
1979  C.H.O.M.P.S. (Chaffey) (pr—Barbera; story—Barbera)
1982  Heidi’s Song (Taylor) (prs; co-sc—Barbera)
1986  GoBots: Battle of The Rock Lords (Patterson)
1990  Jetsons: The Movie
1992  Tom and Jerry: The Movie (co-sc and creative consultants)
1993  I Yabba-Dabba Do!: Hollyrock-a-Bye Baby
1994  The Flintstones (Levant) (exec prs; creative consultants and ros)
1995  Jonny Quest vs. the Cyber Insects (exec prs)

Publications

By BARBERA: book—

By HANNA and BARBERA: articles—

On HANNA and BARBERA: books—

On BARBERA: articles—

Anton, Glenn, “Joe Barbera Speaks His Mind,” in Animator (Springfield), Spring 1996.

* * *

The names of William Hanna and Joseph Barbera have become synonymous with television animation. From their earliest superstars, Huckleberry Hound and Yogi Bear, to the first prime-time cartoon series, The Flintstones, Hanna and Barbera are the biggest names in television animation, developing the largest cartoon mill in the world. The two men have come to represent the crank-em-out-as-fast-as-you-can theory of television animation. Yet to their credit, Hanna and Barbera’s creation of Tom and Jerry, the lovable cat and mouse, earned seven Academy Awards and 14 Oscar nominations. This was no small feat in the annals of theatrical animation.

Hanna and Barbera met at MGM, where both worked separately as animators before becoming involved on a project in 1938. Both men wanted to try their talents at directing, and were given the chance in 1940 on a cartoon about a cat and a mouse, Pass Gets the Boot. It was clear from this first cartoon that this was no ordinary cat and mouse, and the film was nominated for an Academy Award. Though the cat was named Jasper and the mouse’s working, yet unmentioned, name was Jinx, this cartoon began the careers of Tom and Jerry. The Tom and Jerry series was consistently formulaic in content: Tom—frustrated, irate or arrogant—tried to exert his power and superiority over Jerry. Tom, with his blue body, yellow eyes and heavy black eyebrows, was clearly the instigator of the mayhem. Jerry, on the other hand, had a cherubic face, a happy-go-lucky personality, but also a devilish ingenuity that would retaliate against Tom’s fury, giving the tabby his comeuppance in equal measure—and a dose more. While true adversaries by nature, Tom and Jerry also conveyed a sense that they needed and cared for one another, and this love-hate relationship endeared them to audiences.

As it worked out, the directing (Hanna) and writing (Barbera) became evenly divided between the two men. Because the series, unlike most cartoons, relied mainly on visual gags rather than witty dialog, it was much harder to keep up its consistency, and many of the early shorts were not always well timed; occasionally, too much effort was spent on ponderous pacing and setup of gags. By 1942, Tex Avery, with his surreal, frantic and irreverent style of humor, had joined MGM and, under his influence, the series achieved a refreshing and successfully artistic momentum, all within the same cat-and-mouse formula. Although Tom and Jerry never spoke a word of dialog (save for an utterance to punctuate a comic scene), their cartoons provided depth of character, valid story lines, brilliant gags, sprightly music, imaginative sound effects and exquisite animation. A great deal of time and thought went into developing personality traits and nuances for each animal. Their faces showed a wide range of expression and reaction to situations (it was Hanna who provided Tom’s vocal shrieks of fright or pain), and their bodies appeared to be in a perpetual state of motion. They were completely animated characters.

Hanna and Barbera also contributed to the 1945 film, Anchors Aweigh. Its star, Gene Kelly, wanted to perform a dance number with a cartoon character. When Walt Disney declined the offer to provide the animation with Mickey Mouse, the job went to Hanna and Barbera, and would showcase MGM’s mouse, Jerry (Tom appeared as a servant to Jerry.) To create the illusion of dancing with Jerry, Hanna and Barbera drew a detailed storyboard of the choreography Kelly devised. Kelly performed his part of the number alone, and his filmed dance was then rotoscoped, so Jerry’s routine could be animated and synchronized, frame by frame, to Kelly’s movements. Finally, the two images were matched within a single shot. The sequence remains a classic. Tom and Jerry were also featured in a 1952 musical, Dangerously When Wet, with its aquatic star, Esther Williams.

To keep Tom and Jerry fresh in the postwar era, new supporting characters were added. In The Milky Waif, Jerry’s impulsive cousin Nibbles (later renamed Tuffy) was introduced. In Little Quacker, a raspy-voiced duckling made its debut, and later achieved fame as Yakky Doodle on the Yogi Bear television show. Hanna and Barbera also introduced a bulldog and his son, Butch and Pup (renamed Spike and Tyke afterwards), in Love That Pup. They later had their own short-lived series, and were finally metamorphosed into the more successful television characters of Augie Doggy and Doggie Daddy.

Like all the other cartoon studios, by the mid-1950s MGM began to find the cost of creating animation prohibitive, though the final Tom and Jerry cartoons created by Hanna and Barbera in 1955–1956—That’s My Mommy and Muscle Beach Tom—were two of the very best. In 1957, after MGM shut down its cartoon unit, Hanna and Barbera joined the ranks of outstanding animators who went to television and founded Hanna-Barbera Productions. Their first series, The Ruff and Reddy Show, was only mildly successful, mainly because it was hindered by being integrated within a live show. In 1958, The Huckleberry Hound Show, their first totally animated series, was a huge hit with both adults and children, and it received the Emmy Award for Outstanding Children’s Program in 1959. Huckleberry Hound’s acclaim spawned other successes such as Yogi Bear, Quick Draw McGraw, and the first animated prime-time series, The Flintstones. No two men were better prepared to pioneer, revitalize and set the standards for television cartoon shows than Hanna and Barbera. Their adroit use of limited animation required far fewer individual drawings as a theatrical cartoon, and provided a more economical, less laborious yet very satisfying product. Hanna and Barbera also hired many of their old MGM colleagues and other seasoned professionals who were available after most Hollywood studios ceased making cartoons. And with their own impeccable filmmaking skills and business savvy, Hanna and Barbera dominated TV animation by delivering qualitative programs with audience appeal that were sought by networks and sponsors.

Throughout the 1960s, Hanna-Barbera Productions grew into an entertainment empire, reaping bonus revenues from merchandise licensing and product tie-ins, its own record label—and even its own theme park, Jellystone Park, in Ashland, New Hampshire. This expansion allowed them to experiment further, starting with full-length, animated features such as 1964’s Hey There, It’s Yogi Bear, and more ambitious television projects such as 1966’s Emmy-winning Jack and The Beanstalk, a dazzling display of animation and live action starring Gene Kelly. During the era of James Bond and the Space Age, Hanna-Barbera focused on animated action-adventure and science-fantasy series, starting with 1964’s The Adventures Of Jonny Quest, and reaching its zenith with The Space Ghost in 1966 and The Herculoids the year after, all of which had a comic-book-brought-to-life feel, and were immensely popular. Hanna-Barbera Productions was sold to Taft Broadcasting in 1967; Hanna and Barbera were retained as copresidents and codirectors of operations.

But at the end of the 1960s, Hanna-Barbera had become a victim of its own success. Increased demand by networks for programming, more grueling schedules, escalating production costs, restrictive budgets, the departure of veteran artists and writers, and the rapidly changing tastes of its TV audience were taking their toll on the animation giant. Hanna-Barbera inevitably turned into a factory where quantity ruled, and creativity and quality suffered: formulas were repeated and, at times, unbearable to watch; characters began to lose individuality; cartoon pace slackened; and the artwork appeared shoddier. Through this phase, Hanna-Barbera prevailed with some hits such as Scooby Doo, Where Are You? in 1969, beginning the comedy-mystery-music TV cartoon genre.

In the 1970s, Hanna and Barbera reaffirmed their reputation as gifted storytellers, with highly successful ventures such as the animated feature, Charlotte’s Web (1973), and Emmy-winning TV specials such as the Last Of The Curlews (1972) and the live-action yuletide tale, The Gathering (1977). Invariably, Hanna-Barbera was redefining itself as a producer of family entertainment. As for new cartoon shows, Hanna-Barbera not only created fresh characters, but also developed animated series adapted from live-action TV series, movies, comic strips and other sources, as well as reusing their tried-and-true stars in new vehicles. Capitalizing on current trends, and successfully reflecting them in its programs, was a key to Hanna-Barbera’s mastery over increasingly fickle viewership.

Throughout the 1970s and 1980s, Hanna-Barbera underwent an impressive global expansion in order to efficiently handle its new theatrical and television productions and their international distribution. Hanna and Barbera also uncovered the possibilities in the new medium of home video, and from 1986–90, they created a series of outstanding animated features for video, The Greatest Adventure: Stories from the Bible. After 30 years of significant achievements and contributions to the television arts, the prolific pair were bestowed with the prestigious Governors Award at the 1988 Emmy Ceremonies. In 1989, the studio was acquired by Great American Broadcasting and, in turn, was sold to Turner Broadcasting Company in 1991; Hanna and Barbera stayed as cochairmen and cofounders. In 1990, they collaborated as an animation team for the last time on Jetsons: The Movie. In 1994, Hanna and Barbera made their screen debut as cavemen in the film, The Flintstones, and served as its co-executive producers. That same year, the industrious duo were named to the board of directors of the Cartoon Network, and also were inducted into the Television Academy Hall of Fame.

The impact Hanna and Barbera have made on the film and broadcasting industries is incalculable. They are visionaries who take their place alongside Walt Disney for daring innovation and reinvention of technique and style that elevates animation to an art form, and elicits the full spectrum of laughter and emotion from audiences universally. But it is television where Hanna and Barbera had their greatest exposure and influence. Though the entertainment value was at times uneven, their successes far outweighed the letdowns. Their triumphs in and over television established a familial connection that spans three generations, where parents and grandparents can relive the fun of old and new Hanna-Barbera cartoon friends—while watching along with their children, who are delighting in them for the first time on television or home video. And the tradition continues.

—Martin A. Gostanian
HARLAN, Russell

Films as Cinematographer:

1937 North of the Rio Grande (Watt); Rustlers’ Valley (Watt); Hopalong Rides Again (Selander); Texas Trail (Selman)
1938 Partners of the Plains (Selander); The Frontiersman (Selander); Heart of Arizona (Selander); Pride of the West (Selander); In Old Mexico (Venturini); The Mysterious Rider (Selander)
1939 Sunset Trail (Selander); Law of the Pampas (Watt); Silver on the Sage (Selander); Heritage of the Desert (Selander); The Renegade Trail (Selander); The Llano Kid (Selander); Range War (Selander)
1940 Santa Fe Marshall (Selander); Knights of the Range (Selander); The Showdown (Bretherton); The Light of Western Stars (Selander); Hidden Gold (Selander); Stagecoach War (Selander); Cherokee Strip (Fighting Marshall) (Selander); Three Men from Texas (Selander)
1941 Twilight on the Trail (Bretherton); Riders of the Timberline (Selander); Outlaws of the Desert (Bretherton); Secret of the Wastelands (Abrahams); Stick to Your Guns (Selander); Doomed Caravan (Selander); In Old Colorado (Bretherton); Border Vigilantes (Abrahams); The Round-Up (Selander); Pirates on Horseback (Selander); The Parson of Panamint (McGann); Wide Open Town (Selander)
1942 Tombstone, the Town Too Tough to Die (McGann); Leather Burners (Henabery); Hoppy Serves a Writ (Archainbaud); Undercover Man (Selander); Border Patrol (Selander); Silver Queen (Bacon); American Empire (My Son Alone) (McGann); Lost Canyon (Selander)
1943 Colt Comrades (Selander); Buckskin Frontier (The Iron Road) (Selander); The Kansan (Archainbaud); Bar Twenty (Selander); False Colors (Archainbaud); Riders of the Deadline (Selander); Tarzan’s Desert Mystery (Thiele) (co); The Woman of the Town (Archainbaud); Texas Masquerade (Archainbaud)
1944 Lumberjack (Selander); Forty Thieves (Selander); Mystery Man (Archainbaud)
1945 A Walk in the Sun (Milestone)
1947 Ramrod (de Toth); Red River (Hawks)
1948 Four Faces West (They Passed This Way) (Green); Bad Men of Tombstone (Neumann)
1949 Gun Crazy (Deadly Is the Female) (Lewis)
1950 Guilty Bystander (Lerner); Tarzan and the Slave Girl (Sholom); The Kangaroo Kid (Selander); Southside 1-1000 (Forergy) (Ingster); The Man Who Cheated Himself (Feist)
1951 The Thing from Another World (The Thing) (Nyby)
1952 The Big Sky (Hawks); The Ring (Neumann); Ruby Gentry (Vidor)
1954 Riot in Cell Block 11 (Siegel)
1955 Blackboard Jungle (Brooks); The Last Hunt (Brooks); Land of the Pharaohs (Hawks)
1956 Last for Life (Minnelli) (co)

1957 Witness for the Prosecution (Wilder); This Could Be the Night (Wise); Something of Value (Brooks); King Creole (Curtiz)
1958 Rio Bravo (Hawks); Run Silent, Run Deep (Wise)
1959 Operation Petticoat (Edwards); Day of the Outlaw (de Toth)
1960 Pollyanna (Swift); Hatari! (Hawks); Sunrise at Campobello (Donheue)
1962 The Spiral Road (Mulligan); To Kill a Mockingbird (Mulligan)
1963 Man’s Favorite Sport? (Hawks); A Gathering of Eagles (Delbert Mann)
1964 Dear Heart (Delbert Mann); Quick, before It Melts (Delbert Mann)
1965 The Great Race (Edwards)
1966 Hawaii (Hill); Tobruk (Hiller)
1969 Darling Lily (Edwards)

Publications

On HARLAN: articles—

* * *

‘This is pretty high on the hog for me,’” actor Bruce Cabot once commented of his accommodations at the Ritz in London while filming Diamonds Are Forever. “Location shooting usually means sitting in a tent outside Tombstone eating a box lunch with Duke Wayne.’’ Likely to have been in the same tent, eating a similar meal, would be Russell Harlan, whose credentials in action cinema were as impeccable as those of Cabot and Wayne.

An ex-stuntman, Harlan began his cinematographic career with B-westerns, working often with veterans like Lloyd Bacon (on Silver Queen) and, on The Parson of Panamint and American Empire with William McGann, once Douglas Fairbanks’s cameraman. Few men more frequently photographed Vasquez Rocks and the other desert settings beloved of B-westerns. Harlan, perhaps in reaction, developed a flinty black-and-white photographic style, shadowless and stark, that Lewis Milestone found ideal for A Walk in the Sun, his calculatedly unemotional picture of an American platoon trying to survive the last days of the war in Italy.

Two years later, Howard Hawks selected Harlan to shoot the seminal Red River, which created a bleak and unromantic picture of the west that had hardly been seen since the days of Thomas Ince and William S. Hart. Hawks was never a director of vistas and, in this, Harlan precisely echoed his vision. The dense, harsh lighting style for Red River was carried forward intact into Hawks’s claustrophobic science fiction/horror film The Thing and then, almost immediately, into The Big Sky, a film that introduced a Hawksian intimacy into the spacious world of the pioneer fur trappers.

The Big Sky marked the high point of Harlan’s relationship with Hawks. He later shot Rio Bravo, but that film is not especially distinguished photographically. He also did some additional shooting on the risible Egyptian epic Land of the Pharaohs, and was one of the dozen cameramen and scriptwriters who worked on the African comedy/drama Hatari! during the five years Hawks took to finish it. Harlan’s best work at this time was with Richard Brooks. Blackboard Jungle exploited some of the hard-edged denseness of his work on
The Thing, and he imported the same edgy urban blackness into the color of The Last Hunt, a western which, like The Big Sky, reduced the drama and tragedy of westward expansion (in this case represented by two rival buffalo hunters) to the dimensions of personal conflict.

For many, Harlan’s masterpiece, however, remains Ruby Gentry. King Vidor’s feverish vision of the developing postwar South created a world where pillared mansions coexist with decaying swamps, raccoon hunting with Cadillacs, high fashion with dungarees. Even crawling through a mist-shrouded Edgar Allan Poe-like swamp to die in Charlton Heston’s arms, Jennifer Jones demanded the high-style close-ups to which she’d become accustomed while working for David Selznick. Yet a film that might have been a dime-store mixture of conflicting styles is coherent and consistent, a copybook exercise in screen lighting.

—John Baxter

HARRISON, Joan

Films as Writer:

1937 The Girl Was Young (Young and Innocent) (Hitchcock)
1939 Jamaica Inn (Hitchcock)
1940 Rebecca (Hitchcock); Foreign Correspondent (Hitchcock)
1941 Suspicion (Hitchcock)
1942 Saboteur (Hitchcock)
1944 Dark Waters (de Toth)

Films as Producer:

1944 Phantom Lady (Siodmak) (+ co-sc)
1945 Uncle Harry (The Strange Affair of Uncle Harry) (Siodmak)
1946 Nocturne (Marin)
1947 They Won’t Believe Me (Pichel); Ride the Pink Horse (Montgomery)
1949 Once More, My Darling (Montgomery)
1950 Your Witness (Eye Witness) (Montgomery); Circle of Danger (Tourneur)

Publications

By HARRISON: article—

Studio Review, November 1950.

On HARRISON: articles—

Chaplin (Stockholm), December 1968.
Obituary, in Classic Images (Muscatine), October 1994.

* * *

Those who think that there were no women producers in the old Hollywood studio system have perhaps never heard of the remarkable Joan Harrison. A wise woman who always made the most of her opportunities, the young Harrison took a job as secretary to Alfred Hitchcock, a reduction in salary and status from her former position in an advertising department of a London newspaper. (“I am probably the worst secretary Hitch ever had,” she once told Modern Screen magazine.) Working for Hitchcock in the British film industry, she took her opportunity to invade every department, and learned all aspects of the business, so that when her opportunity to become a Hollywood producer came along, she was more than prepared. In her eight years with Hitchcock, she collaborated with him on several of his best screenplays: Rebecca, Foreign Correspondent, Suspicion, and Saboteur among them. Ultimately she returned to work with him as the producer of his acclaimed TV series, Alfred Hitchcock Presents.

Harrison’s mark was made in various types of crime films, particularly those which featured a woman in jeopardy. She had always been interested in criminal cases, and had followed many of England’s more colorful examples through the courts of London. (She married the famous spy genre author Eric Ambler.) Her first film away from Hitchcock in Hollywood, as writer and associate producer, was Dark Waters, directed by Andre de Toth. It established the Harrison style in that it was a story about a young woman (Merle Oberon) caught in a gaslight situation, being driven mad by a group of false relatives. Harrison’s first feature as full producer was the much respected low-budget film noir Phantom Lady, directed by Robert Siodmak, starring Ella Raines as a fearless secretary bent on proving her boss did not actually murder his wife. These two excellent small pictures illustrate what would always be true of Harrison’s work: she was a totally competent producer capable of making stylish mystery films from the woman’s angle. They also illustrate a handicap she was never able to overcome in terms of critical acceptance. Having learned her lessons well from Hitchcock, she seemed forever destined to remain in his shadow. In addition, her solo productions are almost all directed by men like de Toth and Siodmak, who, like Hitchcock, are well-known for a personal vision. Thus, it was not only difficult to identify what might be her touch, but no one seemed willing to try to do so. Perhaps the outstanding thing that can be said for Harrison is that the films she produced were often complimented for “being in the Hitchcock tradition.” This meant that she had learned her lessons from the master well, and that she was capable of putting that stamp on her movies. All of Harrison’s films have these qualities in common: excellent women characters, who are frequently intrepid in their response to danger and death; a low-key, subtle suggestion of violence rather than overt blood and gore; and elegant production values, with handsome sets and modish costumes.

A thoughtful woman who always utilized what she had learned in her experience with Hitchcock, Harrison commented on what made an effective suspense thriller by saying, “There is a difference between violence and action. The two are not synonymous. This is a very important point to consider. Displayed violence, blow-by-blow account violence is irresponsible, unnecessary, and unworthy of creativity. Action, on the other hand, cannot be totally implied or merely suggested. For whodunits, no action is pretty bloody dull. Many persons equate in their minds action and violence. They speak of one when they mean the other. Each is an individual property, and suggested violence is much more interesting. I see no point in plunging a dagger in someone’s chest and the viewer watching this unfold. One should see the dagger in the hand of the manipulator and then shift—the horror that results! This way is suspenseful and the audience gets involved.”

Although her list of films is small, it displays subtle, tasteful suspense work in well-photographed, stylish films. It is also unique because few women achieved her status. Commenting on her unusual role as Hollywood’s top female producer in the 1940s, Harrison remarked, “We women have to work twice as hard to be recognized in our own fields. But today there is more recognition of women’s talents than ever before. Those women who want a career can certainly have one.” The most obvious thing to say about Harrison’s career is that what is remarkable about it is that it exists at all. Her work, however, is of a level of taste and intelligence that qualifies her as something more than an oddity or a footnote, and certainly has earned her the right to be seen separately from, if not equal to, Alfred Hitchcock.

—Jeanine Basinger

HARRYHAUSEN, Ray

Special Effects Technician and Director. Nationality: American. Born: Los Angeles, California, 19 June 1920. Education: Attended Los Angeles City College. Military Service: Served in the Signal Corps during World War II. Career: Animator for Puppetoons series for George Pal in early 1940s; 1953—first film as special effects technician, The Beast from 20,000 Fathoms; developed model animation process Dynamation; 1955—began partnership with Charles H. Schnee; 1980s—retired. Awards: Gordon E. Sawyer Award for Technical Achievement, 1992.

Films as Director and Producer:

(shorts)

1946 Mother Goose Presents Humpty Dumpty (Little Miss Muffet; Old Mother Hubbard; The Queen of Hearts; The Story Book Review)

1949 Story of Little Red Riding Hood; Mighty Joe Young (Schoedsack (ass))

1951 The Story of Hansel and Gretel (Rapunzel)

1953 The Story of King Midas

Films as Special Effects Technician:

1953 The Beast from 20,000 Fathoms (Lourié)

1955 It Came from beneath the Sea (Gordon; The Animal World (Allen))

1956 Earth vs. the Flying Saucers (Sears)

1957 20 Million Miles to Earth (Juran (+ co-sc))

1958 The Seventh Voyage of Sinbad (Juran (+ story))

1960 The Three Worlds of Gulliver (Sher)

1961 Mysterious Island (Endfield)

1963 Jason and the Argonauts (Chaffey) (+ assoc pr)

1964 First Men in the Moon (Juran)

1966 One Million Years B.C. (Chaffey)

1969 The Valley of Gwangi (O’Connolly) (+ assoc pr)

1973 The Golden Voyage of Sinbad (Hessler) (+ assoc pr)

1977 Sinbad and the Eye of the Tiger (Wanamaker) (+ assoc pr)

1981 Clash of the Titans (Davis) (+ co-pr)

1986 The Puppetoon Movie (Warren)

Film as Actor:

1985 Spies Like Us (Landis) (as Dr. Marston)

1994 Beverly Hills Cop III (Landis) (as Bar Patron)

1997 Flesh and Blood (Newson) (as himself)

1998 Mighty Joe Young (Underwood) (as Gentleman at the Party)
Publications

By HARRYHAUSEN: book—

Film Fantasy Scrapbook, South Brunswick, New Jersey, 3 vols., 1974–81.

By HARRYHAUSEN: articles—

L’Incroyable Cinéma (Salford, Warwickshire), Autumn 1971.
Film (London), October 1973.
Film Review (London), September 1975.
Horror Elite, September 1975.
Film Making, May 1976.
Filmmakers Newsletter (Ward Hill, Massachusetts), September 1977.
Cinefantastique (New York), Fall 1977.

On HARRYHAUSEN: articles—

Film Comment (New York), November/December 1977.
Ecran Fantastique (Paris), no. 20, 1981.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), June 1981.
American Film (Washington, D.C.), June 1981.
Cinefex (Riverside, California), July 1981.
Photoplay (London), October 1981.
Positif (Paris), December 1981.
Filmcritica (Rome), April 1982.
Cinema e Cinema (Bologna), January/March 1983.
Movie Maker (Hemel Hempstead, Hertfordshire), September 1983.
Filmfax (Evanston), September-October 1995.
From the 1950s until his retirement in the 1980s, Ray Harryhausen set the standards for stop-motion animation effects in film. Influenced as a child by Willis O'Brien's King Kong, Harryhausen contacted O'Brien in the late 1940s and worked with him on Mighty Joe Young, finally doing most of the animation for that production. He also worked with George Pal in the Puppetoons series of children's short films.

His big break came when he provided, for a minimal budget, the special effects for The Beast from 20,000 Fathoms. The rhedosaurus that attacked an amusement park was impressive, and it established Harryhausen's reputation. Three low-budget, black-and-white science-fiction films followed. In It Came from beneath the Sea Harryhausen created a giant octopus with five tentacles that attacked San Francisco and wrapped itself around the Golden Gate bridge; the fluid motion of the octopus and its integration with live-action shots made it a believable fantasy. This film was also Harryhausen's first collaboration with the producer Charles Schneer, a working relationship that lasted for a quarter of a century. Although the second of these films, Earth vs. the Flying Saucers, was made primarily to capitalize on the paranoia of the 1950s, Harryhausen's special effects brought some originality to what was otherwise a standard plot and mediocre characterization. In this film Harryhausen was challenged to make interesting an inanimate, virtually featureless, spaceship, and he succeeded in conveying menace while giving almost no views of the aliens. The opening sequence, when a flying saucer swoops down behind a car on a lonely desert highway is a classic example of alien paranoia. The most interesting of the three films is 20 Million Miles to Earth, in which a Venusian Ymir grows rapidly and menaces the Italian countryside. Like King Kong in many ways, the Ymir is Harryhausen's most sympathetic monster. These early black-and-white films, even with their low budgets, often have a more unified plot and adult point of view than the later family films, which were technically more advanced but episodic. In his last strictly science-fiction film, First Men in the Moon, Harryhausen tackled the challenges of widescreen and color to bring H. G. Wells's period novel successfully to the screen. Willis O'Brien had made The Lost World, and Harryhausen also created prehistoric creatures for his heroes to battle in Mysterious Island, One Million Years B.C., and The Valley of Gwangi. Gwangi failed to be the box-office success that its creators expected from its unique combination of cowboys and dinosaurs.

Harryhausen's most popular films have been the "voyage" productions with Gulliver and Sinbad. All of these are episodic narratives with interchangeable plots in which the hero sets sail to aid a beautiful girl, right a wrong, or achieve some personal goal; but each film has outstanding examples of animation—the skeleton fight in The Seventh Voyage of Sinbad, the six-armed Kali of The Golden Voyage of Sinbad, the Minotaur or troglodyte in Sinbad and the Eye of the Tiger. Harryhausen focused on Greek mythology in two films, although mythological elements and figures show up in a number of other productions. With Jason and the Argonauts he came closest to capturing the power of myth; in the creaking movements of the statue Talos, in the attack of the harpies, and in Jason’s fight with seven skeletons, he captures this sense of awful magic without reducing it to a child’s point of view.

No one who works in science-fiction or fantasy films can escape the influence of Ray Harryhausen, and works as diverse as Flesh Gordon and The Empire Strikes Back draw upon techniques he perfected. Yet Harryhausen, for a number of reasons, has often been seen as a technician rather than as an artist. First, he has worked exclusively in the science-fiction/fantasy genres, an area considered unimportant by many film critics and scholars. Further, his biggest box-office successes have been directed toward children and have avoided the darker sides of fantasy that can enrich and give depth to the genre. Last, episodic scripts, often with banal dialogue and uninspired acting, have detracted from his special effects work. Yet Harryhausen’s animation scenes are unique, and long after the weaker parts of the films have faded away, the best of them remain in the viewer’s mind to exemplify a special kind of cinema magic.

—Leonard G. Heldreth

HASKIN, Byron

Cinematographer, Director, and Special Effects Photographer. Nationality: American. Born: Portland, Oregon, 22 April 1899. Education: Attended University of California at Berkeley. Career: Worked in advertising, and as cartoonist for the San Francisco News; 1919—assistant cameraman to Louis J. Selznick; 1927—32—worked in Britain; 1932—returned to the States, joined Warners as special effects photographer; 1937—45—head of special effects department at Warners; television work (as director) includes Meet McGraw. Awards: Academy Technical Award. Died: In California, 16 April 1984.

Films as Cinematographer:

1922 Hurricane’s Pal (Holubar) (co); The World’s a Stage (Campbell) (co); Broken Chains (Holubar)
1923 Slander the Woman (Holubar)
1924 On Thin Ice (St. Clair); Bobbed Hair (Crosland)
1925 The Sea Beast (Webb); The Golden Cocoon (Webb); His Majesty, Bunker Bean (Beaumont); Where the Worst Begins (McDermott)
1926 Don Juan (Crosland); Across the Pacific (Del Ruth); Millionaires (Raymaker); When a Man Loves (Crosland)
1927 Wolf’s Clothing (Del Ruth)
1928 Caught in the Fog (Bretherton); On Trial (Mayo); The Singing Fool (Bacon)
1929 The Redeeming Sin (Bretherton); The Madonna of Avenue A (Curtiz); The Glad Rag Doll (Curtiz)
1930 Deadline (Hillyer)
1931 The Guilty Generation (Lee)
1934 As the Earth Turns (Green)
1935 Side Streets (Woman in Her Thirties); Black Fury (Curtiz); Personal Maid's Secret (Collins)
1936 Colleen (Green); I Married a Doctor (Mayo); Stage Struck (Berkeley); Green Light (Borzage)

Films as Special Effects Photographer:

1933 20,000 Years in Sing Sing (Curtiz)
1935 A Midsummer's Night's Dream (Reinhardt and Dieterle)
1937 The Perfect Specimen (Curtiz); Submarine D-1 (Bacon) (co)
1939 Dodge City (Curtiz) (co); Dust Be My Destiny (Seiler); The Roaring Twenties (Walsh) (co); The Private Lives of Elizabeth and Essex (Curtiz) (co); We Are Not Alone (Goulding) (co); Invisible Stripes (Bacon)
1940 The Fighting 69th (Keighley) (co); Brother Orchid (Bacon) (co); Castle on the Hudson (Years without Days) (Litvak) (co); It All Came True (Seiler) (co); 'Til We Meet Again (Goulding); Torrid Zone (Keighley) (co); Flight Angels (Seiler); All This and Heaven Too (Litvak) (co); They Drive by Night (The Road to Frisco) (Walsh) (co); City for Conquest (Litvak) (co); The Sea Hawk (Curtiz) (co); Santa Fe Trail (Curtiz) (co); Knute Rockne—All American (A Modern Hero); Virginia City (Curtiz)
1941 High Sierra (Walsh); Dive Bomber (Curtiz) (co); Manpower (Walsh) (co); The Sea Wolf (Curtiz) (co); The Wagons Roll at Night (Enright) (co); The Bride Came C.O.D. (Keighley) (co)
1942 Captains of the Clouds (Curtiz) (co); In This Our Life (Huston) (co); Wings for the Eagle (Bacon) (co); Across the Pacific (Huston) (co)
1943 Truck Busters (Eason); Arsenic and Old Lace (Capra) (co); Mission to Moscow (Curtiz); Action in the North Atlantic (Bacon)
1944 Air Force (Hawks)

Films as Director:

1927 Matinee Ladies; Irish Hearts; Ginsberg the Great (The Broadway Kid); The Siren
1947 I Walk Alone
1948 Man Eater of Kumaon
1949 Too Late for Tears
1950 Treasure Island; Warpath
1951 Tarzan and the Jungle Queen (Tarzan's Peril); Silver City (High Vermilion)
1952 War of the Worlds
1953 Hit Majesty O'Keefe; The Naked Jungle
1954 Long John Silver; Sword of Vengeance (for TV); Ship o' the Doom (for TV); Conquest of Space
1956 The Boss; The First Texan
1958 From the Earth to the Moon

1959 Jet Over the Atlantic; The Little Savage
1960 September Storm
1961 Armored Command
1962 Captain Sindbad
1964 Robinson Crusoe on Mars
1967 The Power

Publications

By HASKIN: book—

By HASKIN: article—

On HASKIN: articles—

American Cinematographer (Hollywood), vol. 65, no. 6, June 1984.
Cineforum (Bergamo), vol. 31, no. 304, May 1991.
Nosferatu (San Sebastian), February 1994.
Reid's Film Index (Wyong, New South Wales), no. 24, 1996.

* * *

Although probably best known as the director of War of the Worlds, Byron Haskin made his greatest contributions to cinema as head of the special effects department at Warner Bros. from 1937 to 1945. He had joined Warners in 1932 as a special effects process photographer after a varied early career which included a stint as a newsreel cameraman for Pathé, and working as an assistant cameraman for Louis J. Selznick; he then progressed through the Metro and Goldwyn studios to become a leading cameraman at Warners, where John Barrymore requested him to work on films such as Don Juan, The Sea Beast, and When a Man Loves. He made his directorial debut in 1927 with the comedy drama Matinee Ladies, and shortly thereafter left for London to work for Herbert Wilcox as a production executive; in particular Wilcox wanted his help in introducing multiple-camera sound. Haskin found himself working on unlikely material such as adaptations of Aldwych farces and his recollections of the period suggest that he found English filmmaking methods almost impossibly crude and backward. Not surprisingly, he returned to the United States and to Warners in 1932.

Prior to his 1937 appointment Haskin worked on the special effects for Curtiz's 20,000 Years in Sing Sing and the Reinhardt/Dieterle A Midsummer Night's Dream. As department head he supervised the special effects for virtually every Warner Bros. production for eight years, winning one technical Oscar and several nominations along the way. He worked on numerous films with Michael Curtiz, including Dodge City, The Private Lives of Elizabeth and Essex, Virginia City, The Sea Hawk, The Sea Wolf, and Mission to Moscow (in which he blended miniature trains, full-scale people, and glass shots in order to recreate Hamburg station), and also contributed to several films by Raoul Walsh, such as The Roaring Twenties, They Drive by Night, High Sierra, and Manpower. Other notable directors with whom he worked were Edmund Goulding (We Are Not Alone, Till We Meet Again), John Huston (In This Our Life, Across the Pacific), and Frank Capra (Arsenic and Old Lace). Ever the innovator, Haskin invented and built a triple background projector which enabled him to film against anything up to a 5.4m screen (as opposed to the usual 1.82m one); meanwhile in Hawks’s Air Force and Lloyd Bacon’s Action in the North Atlantic he moved up from the conventional miniatures built on a scale of 1/4 inch to a foot to a one inch scale, abandoning the studio tank and shooting instead in Santa Barbara harbor.

In 1945 Hal Wallis, who had been in charge of production since the early thirties at Warners, left to set up in independent production and Haskin went with him as his production assistant. In 1947 Haskin returned to directing after a 20-year gap with J Walk Alone, an atmospheric and moody thriller starring Kirk Douglas, Burt Lancaster, and Wendell Cory. It would be impossible (and unnecessary) to seek out common themes in the films directed by Haskin over the next 20 years, given that he is much more a “metteur en scène” than a fully blown “auteur.” However, without stretching a point, it is certainly possible to discern a markedly pictorial visual sense and a certain taste for the exotic—witness Man Eater of Kumaon, Tarzan and the Jungle Queen, Treasure Island, Long John Silver, His Majesty O’Keefe, September Storm (which tried to marry CinemaScope and 3-D), Captain Sinbad, and, of course, the famous The Naked Jungle, in which Charlton Heston’s plantation is destroyed by soldier ants before eventually being wiped out in an apocalyptic flood.

This taste for the bizarre and the out-of-the-ordinary finds its fullest expression in Haskin’s science-fiction films. In War of the Worlds (one of several very successful collaborations with George Pal) he consciously borrowed from Orson Welles’s adaptation and transposed the story to a modern American setting in order to make it more frightening to a contemporary American audience. As he put it, the original is set “in the 1890s, out in the country, with vicars and old British gardener characters. The threat to humanity is an antiquated machine looking like a water tank tottering around the country on creaky legs, blowing whiffs of smoke and frightening a cast directly out of Agatha Christie.” Unfortunately Haskin’s latterday Americans are themselves barely credible, but nonetheless the film does conjure the sense of a terrifying and all-pervasive threat to normal daily life, and for the scenes of complete destruction Haskin drew quite consciously on his childhood memories of the 1906 San Francisco earthquake. Conquest of Space contains a curiously Oedipal subtext, while Robinson Crusoe on Mars remains one of the finest versions of this particular myth, the only problem being the silly title (Haskin wanted to call it GPI Mars, GPI standing for “Gravity Pull One.”) The film, the director’s personal favourite, was shot on the upper slopes of Death Valley with the skies matted in an orange-red colour, and engenders a convincing feeling of loneliness and isolation in a dead and inhospitable landscape. Conquest of Space has some impressive special effects but overall it is not a patch on The Power, Haskin’s last feature film and one of his very best works which has a disturbing ability to communicate “the terror of a man who, step by inevitable step, has his own identity ripped from under him until finally he begins to doubt who the hell he is.” Like Hitchcock or Lang, Haskin succeeds in creating here a wholly malign environment where everything mysteriously conspires to threaten the central character. As an evocation of imminent danger and sanity-shattering anomic The Power takes some beating and the overall effect is greatly enhanced by Miklos Rozsa’s marvellous score which makes most atmospheric use of the cymbal.

Some of Haskin’s finest work in the science-fiction genre is to be found in his contributions to the TV series The Outer Limits. He directed six episodes in all, one of which, the Harlan Ellison-scripted Demon with a Glass Hand, is one of the high points of the whole series, although the other five are all noteworthy. He was also uncredited associate producer in charge of special effects for the series, and worked as an adviser on the pilot episode of Star Trek.

Byron Haskin’s contribution to the cinema is probably best summed up by the obituary which appeared in L’Ecran Fantastique which stated that “he was not an auteur but a brilliant illustrator with the skills of a peerless technician, one of those self made men who have lifted the American cinema to an incomparable peak of technical achievement which has enabled it to take on subjects which would seem at first sight unrealisable.”

—Julian Petley

HAVELOCK-ALLAN, (Sir) Anthony

Films as Producer:

1935 The Price of Wisdom (Denham); Key to Harmony (Walker);
The Village Squire (Denman); Gentleman’s Agreement (Pearson); School for Stars (Pedelty); Once a Thief (Pearson);
Jubilee Widow (Pearson); Cross Currents (Brunel); The Mad Hatter (Campbell); Lucky Days (Denham); Checkmate (Person); Expert’s Opinion (Campbell)

1936 Ticket of Leave (Hankinson); The Secret Voice (Pearson); The Belles of St. Clement’s (Campbell); Love at Sea (Brunel);
Two on a Doorstep (Huntingdon); Wednesday’s Luck (Pearson);
Playboy Adventure (Kellino); House Broken (Hankinson);
Murder By Rope (Pearson); Grand Finale (Campbell); Show Flat (Mainwaring); The Scarab Murder Case (Hankinson)

1937 Cross My Heart (Mainwaring); Holiday’s End (Carstairs);
The Cavalier of the Streets (French); Museum Mystery (Gulliver); The Fatal Hour (Pearson); Night Ride (Carstairs);
The Last Curtain (Macdonald); Mr. Smith Carries On
Anthony Havelock-Allan

(Laurance); Missing, Beloved Married (Carstairs); Lancashire Luck (Carstairs)

1938 Incident in Shanghai (Carstairs); A Spot of Bother (Macdonald);
    Lightning Conductor (Elvey); This Man Is News (Macdonald)

1939 The Lambeth Walk (de Courville); Stolen Life (Czinner); The Silent Battle (Continental Express) (Mason); This Man in Paris (Macdonald)

1941 From the Four Corners (+ d—doc)

1942 Unpublished Story (French) (+ co-sc); In Which We Serve (Coward and Lean)

1944 This Happy Breed (Lean) (co, + co-sc); Blithe Spirit (Lean) (+ co-sc)

1945 Brief Encounter (Lean) (co, + co-sc)

1946 Great Expectations (Lean) (co, + co-sc)

1947 Take My Life (Neame); Blanche Fury (M. Allegret)

1948 Oliver Twist (Lean) (co); The Small Voice (Hideout) (McDonell)

1949 The Interrupted Journey (Birt)

1950 Shadow of the Eagle (Salkow)

1952 Never Take No for an Answer (Cloche and Smart); Meet Me Tonight (Tonight at 8:30) (Pelissier)

1954 The Young Lovers (Chance Meeting) (Asquith)

1958 Orders to Kill (Asquith) (co)

1962 The Quare Fellow (Dreifuss)

1963 An Evening with the Royal Ballet (+ co-d)

1966 Othello (Burge) (co)

1967 The Mikado (Burge) (co)

1968 Up the Junction (Collinson) (co); Romeo and Juliet (Zeffirelli) (co)

1970 Ryan’s Daughter (Lean)

Publications

By HAVELOCK-ALLAN: book—

* * *

Anthony Havelock-Allan (like Anthony Asquith and John Knatchbull from titled families) decided not to follow the family tradition and pursue a career in the army, but instead with the Brunswick record company during the 1920s. His later job as the manager of cabaret entertainment at Ciro’s Club in London led naturally into his first film assignment, to establish Jack Buchanan, then the leading British film star, in the American market.

Once he joined British Paramount as casting director, and later producer, he was destined to become one of the outstanding film producers of the Golden Age of British films. Besides introducing to the public such future stars as George Sanders, Margaret Rutherford, Wendy Hiller, Alistair Sim, and Vivien Leigh, by the early 1940s, he had produced such successful films as This Man Is News, The Lambeth Walk, Unpublished Story, and This Man in Paris. His two Noël Coward films, In Which We Serve and This Happy Breed, resulted in his forming Cineguild with David Lean and Ronald Neame, and he produced several other important British films under its auspices, including two additional Coward works (Blithe Spirit and Brief Encounter), and two films based on Dickens novels, Great Expectations and Oliver Twist.

Havelock-Allan has contributed his skill and experience as a producer to international organizations, including MGM, for such films as Ryan’s Daughter, Orders to Kill, Othello, and Romeo and Juliet.

—John Halas

HAYASAKA, Fumio

Composer. Nationality: Japanese. Born: Sendai-City, 19 August 1914. Education: Attended Hokkai School; studied with Alexander Tcherepnin in Tokyo. Career: Organist at Yamahana Catholic Church, Sapporo; English teacher at Kosei and other schools; 1939—joined Toho company as composer; nonfilm music includes a piano concerto and Yukara suite; taught film scoring in a college: students include Masaru Sato and Toru Takemitsu. Died: Of tuberculosis, in Tokyo, 15 October 1955.

Films as Composer:

1939  Ribon o musubu fujin (A Lady with a Ribbon) (Yamamoto)
1940  Kaitun bakugekitai (The Naval Bomber Fleet) (Kimura); Nyan-nyan-nyan-hoi (Festival of Nyan-nyan-nyan) (Akutagawa); Ina-bushi (The Ina Song) (Kamei); Kikansha C-57 (Steam Locomotive C-57) (Imaizumi); Moyuru oozora (Flaming Sky) (Abe); Tabi yakusha (Traveling Actors) (Naruse)
1941  Shirasagi (Snowy Heron) (Shimizu); Gubijinso (Poppy) (Nakagawa); Shido monogatari (Instructive Story) (Kumagai); Wakai sensei (A Young Teacher) (Sato)
1942  Midori no daichi (The Green Earth) (Shimazu); Nankai no hanatabe (South Seas Bouquet) (Abe); Haba no chizu (Mother’s Map) (Shimazu); Koharu kyogen (Koharu’s Performance) (Aoyagi)
1944  Ano hata o ute (Fire the Flag!) (Abe)
1945  Nippon kengo-den (Great Swordsmen of Japan) (Takizawa); Kita no sanin (The Three Men of the North) (Saeki)
1946  Minsha no teki (An Enemy of the People) (Imai)

1947  Inochi aru kagiri (As Long as We Live) (Kusuda); Yottsu no koi no monogatari (Four Love Stories) (Toyoda and others); Chikagai 24-jikan (24 Hours in an Underground Market) (Imai); Kakedashi jidai (Tenderfoot Days) (Saeki); Ai yo honsho to tomomi (Love, Live with the Stars) (Abe); Koisuru tsuma (A Wife in Love) (Hagiwara); Joyu (Actress) (Kinugasa)
1948  Hana hiraku (A Flower Blooms) (Ichikawa); Yoidore tenshi (Drunken Angel) (Kurosawa); Waga ai wa yama no kanata ni (My Love Is beyond the Mountain) (Toyoda); Ama no yuiga (Evening Glory of Heaven) (Abe); Fuji sancho (The Summit of Mount Fuji) (Saeki); Ten no yuiga (Moonflower of Heaven) (Abe); Kiteiru gazo (Living Portrait) (Chiba); Ni jy o ikada shojo (A Virgin Who Embraces a Rainbow) (Saeki)
1949  Haru no tawamure (Spring Caprice) (Yamamoto); Nozomi naki ni arazu (Hope Is Not Dead Yet) (Saeki); Tobisuto bokedo ryoko (Tobisuto’s Adventures) (Nakagawa); Nora inu (Stray Dog) (Kurosawa)
1950  Akatsuki no dasso (Escape at Dawn) (Taniguchi); Shikko yuyo (Reprieve) (Saburi); Shubun (Scandal) (Kurosawa); Sasame-yuki (The Makioka Sisters) (Abe); Rashomon (Kurosawa); Tsuma to onna kisha (Wife and Woman Journalist) (Chiba); Yuki Fujin ezu (A Picture of Madame Yuki) (Mizoguchi); Jodai no chokoku (Comical Sculpture) (Mizuki—short)
1951  Hakuchi (The Idiot) (Kurosawa); Nessa no byakuran (White Orchid of the Heating Desert) (Kimura); Oyu-san (Miss Uyo) (Mizoguchi); Sono hito no na wa ienai (I Cannot Say That Person’s Name) (Sugie); Musashino Fujin (Lady Musashin) (Mizoguchi); Shi no dangai (Death Cliff) (Taniguchi); Meshi (Repast) (Naruse); Bakuro ichidai (Life of a Horse Dealer) (Kimura)
1952  Dokoku (Wail) (Saburi); Ikiru (Living) (Kurosawa); Jinsei gekijo (Theatre of Life) (Saburi)
1953  Ugetsu monogatari (Ugetsu) (Mizoguchi); Sakai (Meeting Again) (Kimura)
1954  Hanran (Rebellion) (Saburi); Sanso dayu (Sansho the Bailiff) (Mizoguchi); Shichinin no samurai (Seven Samurai) (Kurosawa); Kimu shintamau koto nakare (You Shouldn’t Die) (Maruyama); Sen-hime (Lady Sen) (Kimura); Chikatsumo monogatari (A Story from Chikatsumo: Cruciﬁed Lovers) (Mizoguchi); Mitsuyu-sen (Smuggling Ship) (Sugie)
1955  Yokichi (The Princess Yon Kwei-fei) (Mizoguchi); Shin heike monogatari (New Tales of the Taira Clan) (Mizoguchi); Asanaru monogatari (Growing Up) (Horikawa); Ikomono no kiroku (Record of a Living Being: I Live in Fear) (Kurosawa) (completed by Sato)

Publications

On HAYASAKA: article—

Chaplin (Stockholm), April-May 1965.

* * *

Fumio Hayasaka is among the most respected of Japanese composers. Beginning in the late 1930s he has worked for noted directors including Mikio Naruse, Yasujiro Shimazu, Tadashi Imai, Teinosuke Kinugasa, and Kon Ichikawa. However, he is most famous for his work for Kenji Mizoguchi and Akira Kurosawa.

Combining Japanese traditional instruments with Western instruments, Hayasaka wrote mysterious, stylized scores for Mizoguchi’s Ugetsu, Sansho the Bailiff, and A Story from Chikamatsu. Interested in a wide variety of styles, he nonetheless sought to create a uniquely Japanese style of film music.

His collaboration with Kurosawa began in the late 1940s with Drunken Angel, and the two artists soon found each other indispensable. Their association continued in a spirit of mutual appreciation and respect until Hayasaka’s death during the production of Record of a Living Being in 1955.

Kurosawa and Hayasaka both believed that film music should not always work to enhance the mood or the dramatic highlights of a scene, and that unexpected combinations of music and visual images would create more interesting effects. For instance, the lively spirit of the ‘‘Cuckoo Waltz’’ heard from a loudspeaker on a street in the black-market area starkly contrasts with the depressed psychological state of the hero of Drunken Angel. In Stray Dog the sound of a housewife practising piano is heard during the suspenseful confrontation of the criminal and the detective, and a children’s song is heard in the scene of the criminal’s arrest.

Hayasaka’s bolero music for Rashomon is also uniquely effective. This theme music is used as a leitmotif, associated with the appearance of certain characters, and contrasts with the styles used in other scenes. Similarly, in Seven Samurai Hayasaka created powerful and emotional theme music for the samurai themselves, with more lyrical music used for the scenes of lovers and ominously rhythmical music for the battle scenes. The composer planned each of his scores by meticulously analyzing the structure and the mood of each scene. His constant experimentation, and his search to create a unique effect in each scene, won him wide acclaim.

—Kyoko Hirano

HAYES, John Michael

Writer. Nationality: American. Born: Worcester, Massachusetts, 11 May 1919. Education: Attended Massachusetts State College. Family: Married Mildred Hicks. Career: Newspaper and radio comedy writer in late 1930s and early 1940s; wrote for Lucille Ball’s My Favorite Husband, Suspense, The Adventures of Sam Spade, and Sweeney and March; 1952—first film as writer, Red Ball Express; contract with Universal; 1954–57—writer for Alfred Hitchcock at Paramount: first film, Rear Window; 1957–64—writer at 20th Century-Fox, and after 1964 at Avco Embassy (several Harold Robbins adaptations). Agent: Ned Brown Agency, West Los Angeles, CA, U.S.A.

Films as Writer:

1952 Red Ball Express (Boetticher)
1953 Thunder Bay (A. Mann) (co); Torch Song (Walters) (co)
1954 War Arrow (Sherman); Rear Window (Hitchcock)
1955 To Catch a Thief (Hitchcock); It’s a Dog’s Life (Hoffman)

1956 The Trouble with Harry (Hitchcock); The Man Who Knew Too Much (Hitchcock) (co)
1957 Peyton Place (Robson)
1958 The Matchmaker (Anthony)
1959 But Not for Me (W. Lang)
1960 Butterfield 8 (Daniel Mann) (co)
1961 The Children’s Hour (Wyler)
1964 The Chalk Garden (Neame); The Carpetbaggers (Dmytryk); Where Love Has Gone (Dmytryk)
1965 Harlow (Douglas)
1966 Judith (Daniel Mann); Nevada Smith (Hathaway)
1975 Nevada Smith (Douglas)
1988 Pancho Barnes (Heffron—for TV)
1994 Iron Will (Haid) (co)

Publications

By HAYES: articles—

Scarlet Street (Glen Rock), vol. 21, Winter 1996.
Scarlet Street (Glen Rock), vol. 22, 1996.

On HAYES: articles—

* * *

Although John Michael Hayes will probably be best remembered for his association with Alfred Hitchcock in the middle 1950s, he also wrote a number of significant literary adaptations of such popular works as Peyton Place, The Matchmaker, Butterfield 8, The Children’s Hour, and The Carpetbaggers. Hayes’s total output has been small, but he has chosen his vehicles carefully and his work commands a healthy respect from the critical community as well as the professional film world.

After a brief stint as a radio dramatist on such shows as Suspense, The Adventures of Sam Spade, and the Lucille Ball comedy My Favorite Husband, Hayes broke into film writing in the early 1950s at Universal Studios scripting action films such as Anthony Mann’s Thunder Bay and Budd Boetticher’s Red Ball Express as well as star vehicles such as Torch Song for Joan Crawford and War Arrow for Jeff Chandler. Hayes’s big break, however, came in 1954 when he moved to Paramount and began his partnership with Alfred Hitchcock.

The first movie they worked on was an immediate success and has been hailed as the quintessential Hitchcock film. Rear Window was taken from a story by Cornell Woolrich which Hayes expanded much in the same way that Evan Hunter would later extensively enlarge the Daphne du Maurier story of “The Birds” into another Hitchcock thriller. Hayes developed a female character Lisa Fremont, played by Grace Kelly, with whom the central character, L. B. Jefferies, played by James Stewart, could spar, and he also added a great deal of verbal byplay among the secondary characters of the nurse and the policeman, also missing in the original short story. The subtle sexual dance between the central figures literally played out against a backdrop of murder and suspense and highlighted many of Hitchcock’s traditional themes in a contemporary, sophisticated setting. The multilayered screenplay which interweaves the tension of the murder plot with the indifferent personal relationship between the principals, and plays upon the voyeuristic preoccupations of the audience, is a tour de force of script writing and justly earned Hayes an Academy Award nomination.

Hayes created the same surface slickness, but with a more disarmingly romantic tone, in To Catch a Thief, his next film with Hitchcock. Partly because the star was Cary Grant rather than James Stewart, the film appears much lighter and more charming than Rear Window. Nevertheless, many of the same rather mordant attitudes towards relationships which darken the former film also shade the latter. In both cases the central female character, played to perfection by a stunningly beautiful Grace Kelly, proves to be not only a competent associate, full of pluck and daring, but also an alluring bait for a marriage entrapment the men appear to try to avoid. In both films murder, theft, marriage, and sex jockey for a proper arrangement, allowing the films to be too easily misread only as romantic comedies, the darker undertone carefully and safely hidden by the surface gloss and style. It is to the credit of the screenplay that Hayes was able to interrelate so carefully and skilfully the many tonal and stylistic layers which allow for multiple interpretations.

The next two Hitchcock/Hayes collaborations were neither as successful nor as interesting. The Trouble with Harry, a small-town murder/comedy, involved the constantly moving corpse of Harry as the various small-town figures tried to hide their own or others’ culpability in Harry’s demise. It is a one-joke idea, although still entertaining. The last film Hayes wrote for Hitchcock was a remake of The Man Who Knew Too Much, a film now best remembered for the wonderful and suspenseful set pieces, particularly the Albert Hall assassination attempt. In 1957 Hitchcock left Paramount and Hayes went to Twentieth Century-Fox where his only project was writing the script for Peyton Place. John Michael Hayes has been much praised for his adaptation of the Grace Metalious novel, bringing order and structure to what many felt was an unfilmable work. In retrospect, however, Hayes’s screenplay seems less impressive. The original novel, although far too explicit sexually to be filmed without alterations, especially during the late 1950s, nevertheless was not a formless incoherent mess as many in Hollywood declared. The screen treatment, which became the basis for most of the later Peyton Place properties, greatly weakened the power and bite of the initial novel. Most of Grace Metalious’s social commentary was smoothed out of recognition and the sharply feminist tone of the work was eliminated altogether. Hayes received another Academy Award nomination for the job, and the film marked him as a writer able to handle sensitive material, especially of a sexual nature, which may account for his assignments on Lillian Hellman’s The Children’s Hour, John O’Hara’s Butterfield 8, and Enid Bagnold’s The Chalk Garden.

In the middle 1960s Hayes became an executive at Avco Embassy Pictures and began a series of adaptations of Harold Robbins novels: The Carpetbaggers, Where Love Has Gone, and Nevada Smith. Since the early 1970s, Hayes has written more for television, most of his screen work having gone unrealized, and he has remained at Avco as an executive. Perhaps, as one critic has remarked, the new Hollywood film does not lean toward the stylish craftsmanship which characterizes Hayes’s best work. This may be so, but many observers feel that his screenplays had been declining in quality since sometime in the late 1950s with the breakup of the Hitchcock partnership. Perhaps John Michael Hayes was one of those collaborative artists who was destined to do his finest work with a single director in a particular period.

—Charles L. P. Silet

HEAD, Edith

Costume Designer. Nationality: American. Born: Edith Claire Posener in San Bernardino, California, 28 October 1897. Education: Attended elementary school in Redding, California to 1911; schools in Los Angeles; University of California, Berkeley; Stanford University; also attended classes at Otis Art Institute and Chouinard Art School, both in Los Angeles. Family: Married 1) Charles Head (divorced 1938); 2) the designer Wiard Ihnen, 1940 (died 1979). Career: French, Spanish, and art teacher at Bishop School for Girls, La Jolla, California, and at Hollywood School for Girls, 1923; 1924–27—sketch artist; 1927–38—assistant to Travis Banton; 1938–66—head of design, Paramount; then chief designer at Universal until her death; also designed for other studios, for stage shows, and for commercial companies; 1945–52—regular appearances on the radio show Art Linkletter’s House Party (and on TV, 1952–69); 1949–51—lecturer, University of Southern California, Los Angeles (also in 1973); 1978—designed for the TV mini-series Little Women. Awards:

!Edith Head (left)

Films as Costume Designer:

1924 Peter Pan (Brenon) (co)
1925 The Golden Bed (De Mille) (co); The Wanderer (Walsh) (co)
1926 Mantrap (Fleming)
1927 Wings (Wellman)
1929 The Saturday Night Kid (Sutherland) (co); The Virginian (Fleming); The Wolf Song (Fleming)
1930 Along Came Youth (Corrigan and McLeod); Follow the Leader (Taurog); Only the Brave (Tuttle); The Santa Fe Trail (Brower and Knopf)
1932 The Big Broadcast of 1932 (Tuttle); A Farewell to Arms (Borzage) (co); He Learned about Women (Corrigan); Hot Saturday (Seiter); Love Me Tonight (Mamoulian); The Sign of the Cross (Banton) (co); Two Kinds of Women (W. De Mille); Undercover Man (Flood); Wayward (Sloman)
1933 A Cradle Song (Leisen) (co); Crime of the Century (Beaudine) (co); Duck Soup (McCarey); Gambling Ship (Gasnier and Marcin); Hello, Everybody (Seiter); I'm No Angel (Ruggles) (co); She Done Him Wrong (L. Sherman); Sitting Pretty (H. Brown); Strictly Personal (Murphy); White Woman (Walker) (co)
1934 Ladies Should Listen (Tuttle); Little Miss Marker (Hall); Many Happy Returns (McLeod); The Notorious Sophie Lang (Murphy) (co); The Pursuit of Happiness (Hall); The Witching Hour (Hathaway); You Belong to Me (Werkner)
1935 The Big Broadcast of 1936 (Taurog); Car 99 (Barton); The Crusades (De Mille) (co); Father Brown, Detective (Sedgwick); Four Hours to Kill (Leisen); The Glass Key (Tuttle); Here Comes Cookie (McLeod); Hold 'em, Yale (Lanfield); The Last Outpost (Barton and Gasnier); The Lives of a Bengal Lancer (Hathaway) (co); Man on the Flying Trapeze (Bruckman); Men without Names (Murphy); Mississippi (Sutherland); People Will Talk (Santell); Peter Ibbetson (Hathaway); Ruggles of Red Gap (McCarey) (co); Stolen Harmony (Werkner); Two for Tonight (Tuttle); Wings in the Dark (Flood)
1936 The Accusing Finger (Hogan); The Big Broadcast of 1937 (Leisen); Border Flight (Overing); College Holiday (Tuttle); Collegiate (Murphy); Hollywood Boulevard (Florey); The Jungle Princess (Thiele); Lady Be Careful (Reed); The Milky Way (McCarey); Murder with Pictures (Barton); Pappy (Sutherland); The Return of Sophie Lang (Archainbaud); Rhythm on the Range (Taurog); Rose Bowl (Barton); The Texas Rangers (K. Vidor); Thirteen Hours by Air (Leisen); Three Cheers for Love (McCarey); Till We Meet Again (Florey); Too Many Parents (McGowan); Wedding Present (Wallace); Wives Never Know (Nugent) (co); Woman Trap (Young)
1937 Arizona Mahoney (Hogan); Artists and Models (Walsh) (co); The Barrier (Sutherland); Blonde Trouble (Archainbaud); Blossoms on Broadway (Wallace); Borderland (Watt); Born to the West (Barton); Bulldog Drummond Comes Back (L. King); Bulldog Drummond Escapes (Hogan); Bulldog Drummond’s Revenge (L. King); Clarence (Archainbaud); The Crime Nobody Saw (Barton); Daughter of Shanghai (Florey); A Doctor’s Diary (C. Vidor) (co); Double or Nothing (Reed); Easy Living (Leisen) (co); Ebb Tide (Hogan); Exclusive (Hall); Forlorn River (Barton); From Scotland Yard (Vignola); The Great Gambini (C. Vidor); Her Husband Lies (Ludwig) (co); Hideaway Girl (Archainbaud); Hills of Old Wyoming (Watt); Hold 'em, Navy (Neumann); Hopalong Rides Again (Sutherland); Hotel Haywire (Archainbaud); Interns Can’t Take Money (Santell); John Meade’s Woman (Wallace) (co); King of Gamblers (Florey); The Last Train from Madrid (Hogan); Let’s Make a Million (McCarey); Love on Toast (Dupont); Make Way for Tomorrow (McCarey); Midnight Madonna (Flood); Mind Your Own Business (McLeod); Mountain Music (Florey); Murder Goes to College (Riesner); Night Club Scandal (Murphy); Night of Mystery (Dupont); North of the Rio Grande (Watt); On Such a Night (Dupont); Outcast (Flore); Partners in Crime (Murphy); Partners of the Plains (Sutherland); Rustler’s Valley (Watt); She Asked for It (Kenton); She’s No Lady (C. Vidor); Sophie Lang Goes West (Riesner) (co); Souls at Sea (Hathaway); Texas Trail (Selman); This Way, Please (Florey); Thrill of a Lifetime (Archainbaud); Thunder Trail (Barton); True Confession (Ruggles) (co); Turn Off the Moon (Seiter); Waikiki Wedding (Tuttle); Wells Fargo (Lloyd); Wild Money (L. King)
1938 The Arkansas Traveler (Santell); Bar 20 Justice (Sutherland); Artists and Models Abroad (Leisen) (co); The Big Broadcast of 1938 (Leisen); Booloo (Elliott); The Buccaneer (De Mille); Bulldog Drummond in Africa (L. King); Campus Confections (Archainbaud); Bulldog Drummond’s Peril (Hogan); Cassidy of Bar 20 (Sutherland); Coconut Grove (Santell); College Swing (Walsh); Dangerous to Know (Florey); Doctor Rhythm (Tuttle) (co); The Frontiersman (Sutherland); Give Me a Sailor (Nugent); Heart of Arizona (Sutherland); Her Jungle Love (Archainbaud); Hunted Men (L. King); Illegal Traffic (L. King); In Old Mexico (Venturini); King of Alcatraz (Florey); Little Orphan Annie (Holmes); Men with Wings (Wellman); The Mysterious Rider (Sutherland); Pride of the West (Sutherland); Prison Farm (L. King); Professor Beware (Nugent); Ride a Crooked Mile (Green); Say It in French (Stone); Scandal Sheet (Hogan); Sing, You Sinners (Ruggles); Sons of the Legion (Hogan); Spawn of the North (Hathaway); Stolen Heaven (Stone); The Texans (Hogan); Thanks for the Memory (Archainbaud); Tip-Off Girls (L. King); Tom Sawyer, Detective (L. King); Touchdown Army (Neumann); Tropic Holiday (Reed); You and Me (F. Lang)
1939 All Women Have Secrets (Neumann); Arrêt Bulldog Drummond (Hogan); Back Door to Heaven (Howard); The Beachcomber (Pommer); Beau Geste (Wellman); Boy Trouble (Archainbaud); Bulldog Drummond’s Bride (Hogan); Café Society (E. Griffith); Bulldog Drummond’s Secret Police (Hogan); The Cat and the Canary (Nugent); Death of a Champion (Florey); Disbarred (Florey); Disputed Passage (Borzage); Geronimo (Sloane); The Gricie Allen Murder Case (Green); Grand Jury Secrets (Hogan); The Great Victor Herbert (Stone); Heritage of the Desert (Sutherland); Honeymoon in Bali (E. Griffith); Hotel Imperial (Florey); Invitation to Happiness (Ruggles); Island of Lost Men (Neumann); I’m from Missouri (Reed); King of Chinatown (Grinde); The Lady’s from Kentucky (Hall); Law of the Pampas (Watt); The Llano Kid (Venturini); The Magnificent Fraud (Florey); Man about Town (Sandrich); Man of Conquest (Nicholls) (co); Midnight (Leisen) (co); Million Dollar Legs (Grinde); Never Say Die (Nugent); The Night of Nights (Milestone); Night Work (Archainbaud); $1,000 a Touchdown (Hogan); Our Leading Citizen (Santell); Our Neighbors, the Carters (Murphy); Paris Honeymoon (Tuttle); Persons in Hiding (L. King); Range War (Selander); The Renegade Trail (Selander); Rulers of the Sea (Lloyd); Silver on the Sage (Selander); Some Like It Hot (Archainbaud); The Star Maker (Del Ruth); St. Louis Blues (Walsh); Sudden Money (Grinde); The Sunset Trail (Selander); Television Spy (Dmytryk); This Man Is News (McDonald); Undercover Doctor (L. King); Union Pacific (De Mille); Unmarried (Neumann); What a Life (Reed); Zaza (Cukor)

1940
Adventure in Diamonds (Fitzmaurice); Arise, My Love (Leisen) (co); The Biscuit Eater (Heisler); Buck Benny Rides Again (Sandrich); The Cherokee Strip (Selander); Christmas in July (P. Sturges); Comin’ round the Mountain (Archainbaud); Dancing on a Dime (Santell); Doctor Cyclops (Schoedsack); Emergency Squad (Dmytryk); The Farmer’s Daughter (Hogan); French without Tears (Asquith) (co); Golden Gloves (Dmytryk); The Ghost Breakers (Marshall); The Great McGinty (P. Sturges); Hidden Gold (Selander); I Want a Divorce (Murphy); Knights of the Range (Selander); Light of Western Stars (Selander); The Light That Failed (Wellman); Love Thy Neighbor (Sandrich); Moon over Burma (L. King); Mystery Sea Raider (Dmytryk); A Night at Earl Carroll’s (Neumann); Northwest Mounted Police (De Mille) (co); Opened by Mistake (Archainbaud); A Parole Fixer (Florey); The Quarterback (Humberstone); Queen of the Mob (Hogan); Rangers of Fortune (Wood); Remember the Night (Leisen); Rhythm on the River (Schertzinger); Road to Singapore (Schertzinger); Safari (E. Griffith); Santa Fe Marshall (Selander); Seventeen (L. King); The Showdown (Bretherton); Stagecoach War (Selander); Texas Rangers Ride Again (Hogan); Those Were the Days (Reed); Three Men from Texas (Selander); Typhoon (L. King); Untamed (Archainbaud); Victory (Cromwell); The Way of All Flesh (L. King); Women without Names (Florey); World in Flames (Richard)

1941
Aloma of the South Seas (Santell); Among the Living (Heisler); Bahama Passage (E. Griffith); Ball of Fire (Hawks); Birth of the Blues (Schertzinger); Border Vigilantes (Abrahams); Buy Me That Town (Forde); Caught in the Draft (Butler); Doomed Caravan (Selander); Flying Blind (McDonald); Forced Landing (Wiles); Glamour Boy (Tetzlaff); Henry Aldrich for President (Bennett); Here Comes Mr. Jordan (Hall); Hold Back the Dawn (Leisen); I Wanted Wings (Leisen); In Old Colorado (Bretherton); Kiss the Boys Goodbye (Schertzinger); The Lady Eve (P. Sturges); Las Vegas Nights (Murphy); Life with Henry (Reed); The Mad Doctor (Whelan); The Monster and the Girl (Heisler); New York Town (C. Vidor); The Night of January 16th (Clemens); Nothing But the Truth (Nugent); One Night in Lisbon (E. Griffith); The Parson of Panamint (McGann); Pirates on Horseback (Selander); Power Dive (Hogan); Reaching for the Sun (Wellman); Road to Zanzibar (Schertzinger); Roundup (Selander); Secret of the Wasteands (Abrahams); Shepherd of the Hills (Hathaway); Sky- lark (Sandrich) (co); Sullivan’s Travels (P. Sturges); Virginia (E. Griffith); There’s a Magic in the Music (Stone); West Point Widow (Siodmak); Wide-Open Town (Selander); World Premiere (Tetzlaff); You Belong to Me (Ruggles); You’re the One (Murphy)

1942

1943
China (Farrow); The Crystal Bell (Nugent); Five Graves to Cairo (Wilders); Flesh and Fantasy (Duvi Birch); For Whom the Bell Tolls (Wood); The Good Fellows (Graham); Happy Go Lucky (Bernhardt); Henry Aldrich Gets Glamour (Bennett); Hostages (Tuttle); Henry Aldrich Has a House (Bennett); Lady Bodyguard (Clemens); Lady of Burlesque (Wellman) (co); Let’s Face It (Lanfield); Night Plane from Chungking (Murphy); No Time for Love (Leisen) (co); Riding High (Marshall); Salute for Three (Murphy); Tender Comrade (Dmytryk) (co); They Got Me Covered (Butler) (co); True to Life (Marshall)

1944
And Now Tomorrow (Pichel); And the Angels Sing (Binyon); Double Indemnity (Wilders); Going My Way (McCary); The Great Moment (P. Sturges); Hail the Conquering Hero (P. Sturges); Henry Aldrich’s Little Secret (Bennett); The Hitler Gang (Farrow); Here Comes the Waves (Sandrich); The Hour before the Dawn (Tuttle); I Love a Soldier (Sandrich); I’ll Be Seeing You (Dieterle); Lady in the Dark (Leisen) (co); The Man in Half Moon Street (Murphy); Ministry of Fear (F. Lang); The Miracle of Morgan’s Creek (P. Sturges); National Barn Dance (Bennett); Rainbow Island (Murphy); Our Hearts Were Young and Gay (Allen); The Uninvited (Allen); Standing Room Only (Lanfield); Till We Meet Again (Borzage); You Can’t Ration Love (Fuller)

1945
The Affairs of Susan (Seiter); The Bells of St. Mary’s (McCary); Bring on the Girls (Lanfield); Christmas in Connecticut (Godfrey) (co); Duffy’s Tavern (Walker) (co); Hold That Blonde (Marshall); Incendiary Blonde (Marshall); The Last Weekend (Wilders); Love Letters (Dieterle); Masquerade in Mexico (Leisen); A Medal for Benny (Pichel); Miss Susie Slagle’s (Berry) (co); Murder He Says (Marshall); Out of This World (Walker); Road to Utopia (Walker); Salty O’Rourke (Walsh); The Stork Club (Walker); You Came Along (Farrow)

1946
The Blue Dahlia (Marshall); Blue Skies (Heisler) (co); The Bride Wore Boots (Pichel); Monsieur Beaucaire (Mar-
Marriage (Allen); The Strange Love of Martha Ivers (Milestone); To Each His Own (Leisen); The Virginian (Gilmore); The Well-Groomed Bride (Lanfield)

1947 Blaze of Noon (Farrow); Calcutta (Farrow); California (Farrow) (co); Cross My Heart (Berry); Cry Wolf (Godfrey) (co); Dear Ruth (Russell); Desert Fury (Allen); Easy Come, Easy Go (Farrow); I Walk Alone (Haskin); The Imperfect Wife (Allen) (co); My Favorite Brunette (Nugent); The Other Love (de Toth) (co); The Perils of Pauline (Marshall); Ramrod (de Toth); Road to Rio (McLeod); The Trouble with Women (Lanfield); The Two Mrs. Carrolls (Godfrey) (co); Variety Girl (Marshall) (co); Welcome Stranger (Nugent) (co); Where There’s Life (Lanfield); Wild Harvest (Garnett)

1948 The Accused (Dieterle); Arch of Triumph (Milestone) (co); Beyond Glory (Farrow); The Big Clock (Farrow); Dream Girl (Leisen); The Emperor Waltz (Wildert) (co); Enchantment (Reis) (co); A Foreign Affair (Wildert); Isn’t It Romantic? (McLeod); June Bride (Windsust) (co); Miss Tatlock’s Millions (Haydn); My Own True Love (Bennett); The Night Has a Thousand Eyes (Farrow); Saigon (Fenton); Rachel and the Stranger (Foster); The Sainted Sisters (Russell); The Sealed Verdict (Allen); So Evil My Love (Allen) (co); Sorry, Wrong Number (Litvak); Whispering Smith (Fenton) (co)

1949 The Great Gatsby (Nugent); Beyond the Forest (K. Vidor); The Great Lover (Hall); The Heiress (Wyler) (co); Malayu (Thorpe) (co); Manhandled (Foster); My Foolish Heart (Robson) (co); My Friend Irma (Marshall); Red, Hot, and Blue (Farrow); Rope of Sand (Dieterle); Samson and Delilah (De Mille) (co); Song of Surrender (Leisen)

1950 All about Eve (Mankiewicz) (co); Copper Canyon (Farrow) (co); The Dark City (Dieterle); Fancy Pants (Marshall); The File on Thelma Jordan (Siodmak); The Furies (A. Mann); Let’s Dance (McLeod); Mr. Music (Haydn); My Friend Irma Goes West (Walker); Paid in Full (Dieterle); No Man of Her Own (Leisen); Riding High (Capra); September Affair (Dieterle) (co); Sunset Boulevard (Wildert)

1951 The Big Carnival (Wildert); Branded (Maté); Crosswinds (Foster); Darling, How Could You? (Leisen); Dear Brut (Seiter); Detective Story (Wyler); Here Comes the Broom (Capra); Hong Kong (Foster); The Last Outpost (Foster); The Lemon Drop Kid (Lanfield); My Favorite Spy (McLeod); Payment on Demand (Bernhardt) (co); Peking Express (Dieterle); A Place in the Sun (Stevens); Rhubarb (Lubin); Silver City (Haskin); The Stooge (Taurog); Submarine Command (Farrow); That’s My Boy (Walker); When Worlds Collide (Maté)

1952 Aaron Slick from Punkin Crick (Binyon); Caribbean (Ludwig); Anything Can Happen (Seaton); Carrie (Wyler); Come Back, Little Sheba (Daniel Mann); Denver and Rio Grande (Haskin); The Greatest Show on Earth (De Mille) (co); Hurricane Smith (Hopper); Jumping Jacks (Taurog); Just for You (Nugent) (co); My Son John (McCary); Red Mountain (Dieterle); Road to Bali (Walker); Ruby Gentry (K. Vidor); Sailor Beware (Walker); The Savage (Marshall); Somebody Loves Me (Brecher); Something to Live For (Stevens); Son of Paleface (Tashlin); This Is Dynamite (Dieterle); The Turning Point (Dieterle)

1953 Arrowhead (Warren); The Caddy (Taurog); Forever Female (Rapper); Here Come the Girls (Binyon); Houdini (Marshall); Jamaica Run (Foster); Little Boy Lost (Seaton); Off Limits (Marshall); Pleasure Island (Hugh); Pony Express (Hopper); Roman Holiday (Wyler); Sangaree (Ludwig); Scared Stiff (Marshall); Shane (Stevens); Stalag 17 (Wildler); The Stars Are Singing (Taurog); Those Redheads from Seattle (Foster); Thunder in the East (C. Vidor); Tropic Zone (Foster); The Vanquished (Ludwig); War of the Worlds (Haskin)

1954 About Mrs. Leslie (Daniel Mann); Alaska Seas (Hopper); The Bridges at Toko-ri (Robson); The Country Girl (Seaton); Elephant Walk (Dieterle); Jivaro (Ludwig); Knock on Wood (Panama and Frank); Living It Up (Taurog); Money from Home (Marshall); Mr. Casanova (McLeod); The Naked Jungle (Haskin); Rear Window (Hitchcock); Red Garters (Marshall) (co); Sabrina (Wildler); Secret of the Incas (Hopper); Three-Ring Circus (Pevney); White Christmas (Curtiz)

1955 Artist and Models (Tashlin); Conquest of Space (Haskin); The Desperate Hours (Wyler); The Far Horizon (Maté); The Girl Rush (Pirosh); Hell’s Island (Karlson); Lucy Gallant (Parrish); The Rose Tattoo (Daniel Mann); Run for Cover (Ray); The Seven Little Fays (Shavelson); Strategic Air Command (A. Mann); To Catch a Thief (Hitchcock); The Trouble with Harry (Hitchcock); You’re Never Too Young (Taurog)

1956 Anything Goes (Lewis); The Birds and the Bees (Taurog); The Come-On (Birdwell); The Court Jester (Panama and Frank) (co); Hollywood or Bust (Tashlin); The Leather Saint (Ganzer); The Man Who Knew Too Much (Hitchcock); The Mountain (Dmytryk); Pardners (Taurog); The Proud and the Profane (Seaton); The Rainmaker (Anthony); The Scarlet Hour (Curtiz); The Search for Bridey Murphy (Langley); The Ten Commandments (De Mille) (co); That Certain Feeling (Panama and Frank); Three Violent People (Maté)

1957 Beau James (Shavelson); The Buster Keaton Story (Sheldon); The Delicate Delinquent (McGuire); The Devil’s Hairpin (Wilde); Fear Strikes Out (Mulligan); Funny Face (Donen) (co); Gunfight at the O.K. Corral (J. Sturges); Hear Me Good (McGuire); The Joker Is Wild (C. Vidor); The Lonely Man (Levin); Loving You (Kanter); The Sad Sack (Marshall); Short Cut to Hell (Cagney); The Tin Star (A. Mann); Wild Is the Wind (Cukor); Witness for the Prosecution (Wilder)

1958 As Young as You Are (Gerard); The Buccaneer (Quinn) (co); The Geisha Boy (Tashlin); Hot Spell (Daniel Mann); Houseboat (Shavelson); Maracaibo (Wilde); I Married a Monster from Outer Space (Fowler); King Creole (Curtiz); The Matchmaker (Anthony); Me and the Colonel (Glenville); The Party Crashers (Girard); Rock-a-Bye Baby (Tashlin); Separate Tables (Delbert Mann) (co); St. Louis Blues (Reiser); Teacher’s Pet (Seton); Vertigo (Hitchcock)

1959 Alias Jesse James (McLeod); The Black Orchid (Ritt); But Not for Me (W. Lang); Career (Anthony); The Hangman (Curtiz); Don’t Give Up the Ship (Taurog); The Five Pennies (Shavelson); A Hole in the Head (Capra), The Jayhawkers (Frank); Last Train from Gun Hill (J. Sturges); That Kind of Woman (Lumet); Too Young for Love (Girard); The Trap (Panama); The Young Captives (Kershner)
1960  The Bellboy (Lewis); A Breath of Scandal (Curtiz); Cinderella (Tashlin); The Facts of Life (Frank) (co); G.I. Blues (Taurog); Heller in Pink Tights (Cukor); It Started in Naples (Shavelson); Pepe (Sidney); The Rat Race (Mulligan); A Touch of Larceny (Hamilton); Visit to a Small Planet (Taurog)

1961  All in a Night’s Work (Anthony); Blue Hawaii (Taurog); Breakfast at Tiffany’s (Edwards) (co); The Errand Boy (Lewis); The Ladies’ Man (Lewis); Love in a Goldfish Bowl (Sher); Mantrap (O’Brien); On the Double (Shavelson); The Pleasure of His Company (Seaton); Pocketful of Miracles (Capra); Summer and Smoke (Glenville)

1962  The Counterfeit Traitor (Seaton); Escape from Zahrain (Neame); A Girl Named Tamiko (J. Sturges); Girls! Girls! Girls! (Taurog); Hatari! (Hawks); It’s Only Money (Tashlin); The Man Who Shot Liberty Va lance (Ford); My Geisha (Cardiff); The Pigeon That Took Rome (Shavelson); Too Late Blues (Cassavetes); Who’s Got the Action? (Daniel Mann)

1963  The Birds (Hitchcock); Come Blow Your Horn (Yorkin); Critic’s Choice (Weis); Donovan’s Reef (Ford); Fun in Acapulco (Thorp); Hud (Ritt); I Could Go On Singing (Neame); My Six Loves (Champion); Love with the Proper Stranger (Mulligan); A New Kind of Love (Shavelson) (co); The Nutty Professor (Lewis); Papa’s Delicate Condition (Marshall); Who’s Been Sleeping in My Bed? (Daniel Mann); Who’s Minding the Store? (Tashlin); Wives and Lovers (Rich)

1964  The Carpetbaggers (Dmytryk); The Disorderly Orderly (Tashlin); A House Is Not a Home (Rouse); Lady in a Cage (Grauman); Men’s Favorite Spot? (Hawks); Marnie (Hitchcock); The Patsy (Lewis); Roustabout (Rich); Sex and the Single Girl (Quine) (co); Thirty-Six Hours (Seaton); What a Way to Go (Lee Thompson) (co); Where Love Has Gone (Dmytryk)

1965  Boeing, Boeing (Rich); The Family Jewels (Lewis); The Great Race (Edwards) (co); The Hallelujah Trail (J. Sturges); Harlow (Douglas) (co); Inside Daisy Clover (Mulligan) (co); John Goldfarb, Please Come Home (Lee Thompson) (co); Love Has Many Faces (Singer); Red Line 7000 (Hawks); The Slender Thread (Pollack); The Sons of Katie Elder (Hathaway); Sylvia (Douglas); Who Has Seen the Wind? (Sidney); The Yellow Rolls-Royce (Asquith) (co)

1966  Assault on a Queen (Donohue); The Last of the Secret Agents (Abbott); Nevada Smith (Hathaway); Not with My Wife, You Don’t! (Panama); The Oscar (Rouse); Paradise, Hawaiian Style (Moore); Penelope (Hiller); The Swinger (Sidney); This Property Is Condemned (Pollack); Torn Curtain (Hitchcock); Waco (Springsteen)

1967  Barefoot in the Park (Saks); The Caper of the Golden Bulls (Rouse); Chuka (Douglas); Easy Come, Easy Go (Rich); Hotel (Quine) (co); Warning Shot (Kulik)

1968  In Enemy Country (Keller); Madigan (Siegel); The Pink Jungle (Delbert Mann); The Secret War of Harry Frigg (Smight); What’s So Bad about Feeling Good? (Seaton)

1969  Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid (Hill); Downhill Racer (Ritchie); Eye of the Cat (Rich); The Hellsfighters (McLaglen); House of Cards (Guillermina); The Lost Man (Arthur); Sweet Charity (Fosse); Tell Them Willie Boy Is Here (Polonsky); Topaz (Hitchcock); Winning (Goldstone)

1970  Airport (Seaton); Colossus: The Forbin Project (Sargent); Myra Breckinridge (Sarne) (co); Skidluggery (Douglas); Story of a Woman (Bercovici)

1971  Red Sky at Morning (Goldstone); Sometimes a Great Notion (Newman)

1972  Hammersmith Is Out (Ustinov); Pete ‘n’ Tillie (Ritt); The Screaming Woman (Smight)

1973  Ash Wednesday (Peerce); A Doll’s House (Losey) (co); Divorce His, Divorce Hers (Hussein); The Sting (Hill); The Don Is Dead (Fleischer); The Showdown (Seaton); The Life and Times of Judge Roy Bean (Huston) (co)

1974  Airport ’75 (Smight)

1975  The Great Waldo Pepper (Hill); Rooster Cogburn (Miller); The Man Who Would Be King (Huston)

1976  The Bluebird (Cukor); Family Plot (Hitchcock); Gable and Lombard (Furie); W. C. Fields and Me (Hiller); The Disappearance of Aimee (Harvey)

1977  Airport ’77 (Hiller); Sex and the Married Woman (Arnold); Sunshine Christmas (Jordan)

1978  The Big Fix (Kagen); Olly Olly Oxen Free (Colla); Sextette (Hughes)

1979  The Last Married Couple in America (Cates)

1982  Dead Men Don’t Wear Plaid (Reiner)

Publications

By HEAD: books—

With Jane Kesner Ardmore, The Dress Doctor, Boston, Massachusetts, 1959.

By HEAD: articles—

‘‘A Costume Problem: From Shop to Stage to Screen,’’ in Hollywood Quarterly, October 1946.

‘‘Honesty in Today’s Film Fashions,’’ in Show (New York), 6 August 1970.

Films Illustrated (London), September 1974.

Take One (Montreal), October 1976.

American Film (Washington, D.C.), May 1978.

On HEAD: books—

On HEAD: articles—

In Costume Design in the Movies, by Elizabeth Leese, New York, 1976.
In In a Glamorous Fashion, by W. Robert LaVine, New York, 1980.
Films (New York), May 1981.
The Velvet Light Trap (Madison, Wisconsin), no. 19, 1982.
Skrien (Amsterdam), October- November 1994.
Vanity Fair (New York), March 1998.

For many people, Edith Head and film costume design are synonymous. Other designers may have been more flamboyantly creative, or more consistently original, but no one did more to earn this art form popular recognition. Her guiding principle was that costume should support, rather than compete with, story and character development. Better than most, perhaps, she understood that clothing is not merely a matter of adornment, but a potent method of communication working in tandem with film’s sound and other visual elements. Her longevity, her productivity, her frequent touches of genius, and her talent for self-promotion secured her a celebrity status rare among Hollywood’s legions of production artists. Moviegoers have long remained oblivious to the identities of those who work in the shadow of the stars, but they seem to have found a place in their consciousness for this tiny, austere-looking woman who wove illusions out of beads and cloth.

Unlike most of her peers, Head entered film costuming without relevant training or experience. When Howard Greer, Paramount’s chief designer, hired her as a sketch artist in 1923, she was a high school teacher of French and art looking for a way to supplement her income. She learned quickly, however, honing her skills by observing the masters at work. From Greer, she learned the value of attention to detail. From Travis Banton, another outstanding member of Paramount’s design team, she learned how to fabricate the highest standards of glamour and elegance.

In her early years at the studio, Head mainly dressed minor characters and animals, and generated wardrobes for the countless B-pictures then in production. Gradually she progressed to creating costumes for stars with whom the senior designers lacked the time or inclination to work. Among her first major assignments were Clara Bow, Lupe Velez, and Mae West. Head became Paramount’s chief designer in 1938, when Banton, who replaced Greer as head designer in 1927, left to start a couture business. She remained at the studio for another three decades, working with most of Hollywood’s major actresses and some of its best-known actors. When Paramount was sold in 1967, she became chief designer at Universal, where she worked until her death.

During her career, which spanned nearly six decades, Head’s productivity achieved legendary proportions. In 1940 alone, she supervised costumes for 47 films. She is estimated to have contributed to more than 1,000 movies during her lifetime. In terms of formal recognition, her record is equally staggering. She received 34 Academy Award nominations, of which eight resulted in an Oscar. Costume design did not become an Academy Award category until 1948. For the first 19 years in which this honor was given, Head was nominated at least once every year. Had the award been introduced earlier, she would surely have earned additional nominations for such distinctive creations as Dorothy Lamour’s sarongs in The Jungle Princess or Barbara Stanwyck’s Latin-inspired garments for The Lady Eve.

Much of her best work was executed in the 1950s, when glamour and high-fashion were the keynotes of costume design. Among the enduring images her designs helped promote were Grace Kelly’s refined allure in Rear Window and To Catch a Thief, Elizabeth Taylor’s incandescent sensuality in A Place in the Sun, Audrey Hepburn’s chic individuality in Sabrina, Bette Davis’s mature sophistication in All about Eve, and Gloria Swanson’s anachronistic glamor in Sunset Boulevard. This was also an era in which Head’s public visibility reached its zenith. Already a fashion magazine editor, columnist, and regular contributor to Art Linkletter’s radio show House Party, Head now made frequent television appearances, acted as consultant for the Academy Awards show, and published her first book. The diversity of her activities helped to extend her influence well beyond the realm of motion pictures.

Perhaps her greatest asset was her adaptability. Entering the business when limitless spending permitted designers broad artistic license, she later had to adjust to the restrictions imposed by wartime shortages of luxury textiles and the government’s L-85 ruling on the amount of materials which could be used in clothing manufacture. Following the return to glamour and clothing-as-special-effects during the 1950s, Head made yet another successful transition when the 1960s ushered in a new emphasis on realism.

Head was also able to adjust to widely varying ideas about her role among the directors with whom she worked. Attitudes ranged from Alfred Hitchcock and George Roy Hill’s close involvement in design, to the laissez-faire approach of Joseph Mankiewicz. Describing herself on one occasion as “a better politician than costume designer,” Head was expert at handling star temperament, preferring to yield ground on a neckline or dress length than engage in a battle of wills. The conservative, neutral-colored suits she perennially wore symbolized her willingness to suppress her individuality in the interests of her craft. With the exception of a dispute over whether she or Givenchy deserved the credit for Audrey Hepburn’s famous bow-tied neckline in Sabrina, her career was unruflled by controversy.

Although she created a number of outstanding designs for period movies, most notably The Heiress and Samson and Delilah, she preferred to dress films with a contemporary theme, believing that they afforded more scope for originality. She also preferred to dress men rather than women, on the grounds that they were easier to deal with. One of her most effective wardrobes was the clothing worn by Robert Redford and Paul Newman in The Sting, in which her subtle use of accessories, especially hats, was brilliantly executed. Her designs, on occasion, set fashion trends, but she did not deliberately set out to influence what the public wore. She placed far more importance on enabling stars to assume their characters’ identities. She also believed it essential to create designs which would not cause a movie to date prematurely. This preference for a middle-of-the-road approach dates from 1947, when Dior’s “New Look” exploded onto the fashion scene, making Head’s streamlined designs seem instantly outmoded.

Head’s excellence as a designer was augmented by her keen understanding of the technical constraints within which she operated. She was acutely aware of the different requirements created by variations in lighting, sound, and color. She also believed in close collaboration with her fellow production artists. Although she worked in an industry in which honors and public recognition are focused on individual achievement, Head truly was a team player. She may have enjoyed the celebrity status earned by her television appearances and writing, but when it came to practicing her craft, aligning her skills with the needs of directors, cinematographers, art directors, and others is what mattered most. It was her capacity for partnership that helped her become one of Hollywood’s preeminent production artists.

—Fiona Valentine

HECHT, Ben

Writer, Producer, and Director. Nationality: American. Born: New York City, 28 February 1893. Education: Attended Racine High School, Wisconsin. Family: Married 1) Marie Armstrong, 1915 (divorced 1925), one daughter; 2) Rose Caylor, 1925; one daughter. Career: Child violin prodigy and circus acrobat; 1910–14—staff member, Chicago Journal; 1914–18—reporter, correspondent in Berlin, 1918–19, and columnist, 1919–23, Chicago Journal; wrote first play in the mid-1910s, and first novel in 1921; 1923–25—founding editor, Chicago Literary Times; 1927—first film as writer, Underworld; 1934—formed production company with Charles MacArthur to write, produce, and direct their own films; 1940—began collaboration with Charles Lederer; 1948–51—boycotted by British exhibitors to write, produce, and direct their own films; 1940—began collaboration with Charles Lederer; 1948–51—boycotted by British exhibitors for his criticism of British policy in Palestine. Awards: Academy Awards for Underworld, 1928; The Scoundrel, 1935; Writers Guild Laurel Award, 1980. Died: Of a heart attack, 18 April 1964.

Films as Writer:

- 1927 Underworld (Paying the Penalty) (von Sternberg)
- 1928 The Big Noise (Dwan)
- 1929 Unholy Night (L. Barrymore); Le Spectre vert (The Green Ghost) (Feyder)
- 1930 Roadhouse Nights (The River Inn) (Henley); The Great Gabbo (Craze)
- 1931 The Unholy Garden (Fitzmaurice)
- 1932 Scarface—The Shame of a Nation (Hawks)
- 1933 Hallelujah, I’m a Bum (Hallelujah, I’m a Tramp; Lazy Bones) (Milestone); Turn Back the Clock (Selwyn); Design for Living (Lubitsch)
- 1934 Upper World (Del Ruth); Twentieth Century (Hawks); Crime without Passion (+ co-d + co-pr); Viva Villa! (Conway)
- 1935 Once in a Blue Moon (+ co-d + co-pr); The Scoundrel (+ co-d + co-pr + ro); Barbary Coast (Hawks)
- 1936 Soak the Rich (+ co-d + co-pr + ro)
- 1938 Nothing Sacred (Wellman); Goldwyn Follies (Marshall)
- 1939 Let Freedom Ring (Song of the West) (Conway); It’s a Wonderful World (Van Dyke); Lady of the Tropics (Conway); Gunga Din (Stevens) (+ ro); Wuthering Heights (Wyler); Gone with the Wind (Fleming) (dialogue)
- 1940 Angels over Broadway (+ co-d + pr + ro); Comrade X (K. Vidor)
- 1941 Lydia (Duvivier)
- 1942 Tales of Manhattan (Duvivier); China Girl (Hathaway) (+ pr); The Black Swan (H. King)
- 1945 Spellbound (Hitchcock); Watchtower over Tomorrow (Cromwell—short)
- 1946 Specter of the Rose (+ co-d + pr); Notorious (Hitchcock)
- 1947 Her Husband’s Affairs (Simon); Kiss of Death (Hathaway); Ride the Pink Horse (Montgomery)
- 1948 The Miracle of the Bells (Pichel)
- 1950 Whirlpool (Preminger) (co-sc as Lester Bartow); Where the Sidewalk Ends (Preminger)
- 1952 Actors and Sin (+ co-d + pr + ro); Monkey Business (Hawks)
- 1954 Light’s Diamond Jubilee (K. Vidor, Wellman and Taurog)
- 1955 Ulisse (Ulysses) (Camerini); The Indian Fighter (de Toth)
- 1956 Miracle in the Rain (Mâle); The Iron Petticoat (Thomas)
- 1957 Legend of the Lost (Hathaway); A Farewell to Arms (C. Vidor)
- 1958 Queen of Outer Space (Berms)
- 1959 Hello Charlie (Lanfield)
- 1964 Circus World (The Magnificent Showman) (Hathaway)

Films based on Hecht’s writings:

- 1931 The Front Page (Milestone)
- 1934 Shoot the Works (Ruggles)
- 1935 The Florentine Dagger (Florey); Spring Tonic (Bruckman)
- 1939 Some Like It Hot (Archainbaud)
- 1940 His Girl Friday (Hawks)
- 1950 Perfect Strangers (Windust)
- 1959 Some Like It Hot (Wilders)
- 1969 Chicago, Chicago (Jewison)
- 1974 The Front Page (Wilders)
- 1986 Je hais les acteurs (Krawczyk)
- 1988 Switching Channels (Kotcheff)
Publications

By HECHT: plays—

Christmas Eve, New York, 1928.
With MacArthur, Twentieth Century, New York, 1932.
To Quito and Back, New York, 1937.
With MacArthur, Ladies and Gentlemen, New York, 1941.
With MacArthur, Fun to Be Free, New York, 1941.
We Will Never Die, New York, 1943.
A Flag Is Born, New York, 1946.
Hazel Flagg, New York, 1953.

By HECHT: fiction—

Erik Dorn, New York, 1921.
Fantazius Mallare, Chicago, 1922.
A Thousand and One Afternoons in Chicago, Chicago, 1922.
Gargoyles, New York, 1922.
The Florentine Dagger, New York, 1923.
Humpty Dumpty, New York, 1924.
The Kingdom of Evil, Chicago, 1924.
With Bodenheim, Cutie, A Warm Mamma, Chicago, 1924.
Broken Necks, Chicago, 1926.
Count Bruga, New York, 1926.
The Champion from Far Away, New York, 1931.
A Book of Miracles, New York, 1939.
1001 Afternoons in New York, New York, 1941.
Miracle in the Rain, New York, 1943.
I Hate Actors!, New York, 1944, as Hollywood Mystery!, 1946.
Concerning a Woman of Sin and Other Stories, New York, 1947.

By HECHT: other books—

By HECHT: article—

“My Testimonial to the Movies,” in Theatre, June 1929.

On HECHT: books—

On HECHT: articles—

Photoplay (New York), October 1934.
Rains, Claude, in Film Weekly (London), 22 February 1935.
Houston, Penelope, in Sight and Sound (London), September 1951.
Bluestone, George, on Wuthering Heights in Novels into Film, Baltimore, Maryland, 1957.
Cinéma (Paris), June 1964.
Focus on Film (London), March-April 1970.
Fuller, Stephen, in Film Comment (New York), Winter 1970–71.
National Film Theatre Booklet (London), April-May 1975.
Brown, Geoff, in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1975.
Fuller, Stephen, in Film Comment (New York), January-February 1978.
Skoop (Amsterdam), May-June 1981.
Brandlmeier, T., in EPD Film (Frankfurt), March 1993.

Ben Hecht is synonymous with the “Hollywood” film. He was one of the most prolific and sought-after screenwriters during the 1930s and 1940s, working in a variety of genres and with such notable directors as Howard Hawks, Alfred Hitchcock, and William Wyler.

Hecht first came into prominence as a screenwriter with his gangster story Underworld (directed by Josef von Sternberg). He further enhanced the development of the gangster genre with his script for the Howard Hawks classic Scarface—The Shame of a Nation. The material for these films and others, most strikingly The Front Page, can be traced back to his journalist days in Chicago. Hecht was only 16 when he began working as a reporter for the Chicago Journal. As a reporter, Hecht received a thorough education in the seamier side of human nature. He reported the foibles of the police, politicians, and gangsters in a colorful and cynical style—a style that would later emerge in his screenwriting.

During the early period in Chicago, Hecht was also developing his skills as a novelist and playwright. By 1922 he had published the first two of his many novels, Erik Dorn and Gargoyles. He was also involved in the bohemian life of the city. Charles MacArthur, a fellow reporter, and Hecht teamed up and worked in New York as successful playwrights. Their plays The Front Page and Twentieth Century were critical and financial successes and both were to become major motion pictures. There have been three screen versions of The Front Page. Lewis Milestone directed the first version in 1931.

Howard Hawks saw the film as a love story and changed the sex of the reporter, Hildy, from a man to a woman in His Girl Friday. The most recent version, directed by Billy Wilder in 1974, is the closest adaptation of the original play. Twentieth Century, also directed by Howard Hawks, became the prototype for the screwball comedy—a genre popular in the 1930s.

The collaborative efforts of Hecht and MacArthur were legendary in Hollywood, not only for their creative output (Soak the Rich, Wuthering Heights, and Barbaric Coast) but also for their nonstop antics. Due to their quick success as screenwriters, Paramount awarded Hecht and MacArthur a four-film contract which guaranteed them full control over their work. Between 1934 and 1936, Hecht and MacArthur took over the Paramount Studios in Astoria, Long Island, and co-produced, co-directed, and co-wrote their own feature films. Their inspiration was to produce films that could compete with the European art films. All of the four films were financial failures, quickly ending their experiment in artistic autonomy. Of the films, only Crime without Passion and The Scoundrel received critical acclaim. These films, along with Angels over Broadway, the only film Hecht directed, produced, and wrote originally for the screen, reflected his preoccupation with German Expressionistic ideas that had also informed his earlier literary efforts. Hecht continued to work independently and with other writing partners, Charles Lederer, I. A. L. Diamond, and Gene Fowler, on film ideas. Although he never felt truly comfortable in Hollywood, his reputation as a quick and skilled screenwriter kept him involved in numerous film projects. He still pursued his literary career and considered it to be his more serious work. Critical success in the literary field eluded him while the film ideas he tossed out at an incredibly rapid rate were by contrast consistently well received.

With the advent of World War II, Hecht devoted considerable energies to protest the German slaughter of his fellow Jews. He also became an ardent Zionist and aligned himself with the Irgun Movement. Because of his strong attacks on the British position in Palestine, his films, although not dealing directly with this issue, were banned in Britain from 1949 to 1952. During this time, Hecht found it difficult to obtain work in Hollywood because the producers feared they would lose the British market. Until his death, Hecht remained active in a variety of fields, still working on occasional screenplays, writing articles and books, and even hosting his own television talk show in 1958.

Hecht’s style at its best was a delicate balance between cynicism and sentimentalism. His heroes tended to embody his own anti-middle-class bias, preferring a life of rugged individualism over the bland comforts of conformity. His unique brand of rapid fire overlapping dialogue often served to unmask the quick-witted cynic as a surprisingly caring humanitarian. Film provided Hecht with a medium in which he could collaborate with like-minded individuals who shared his individualism, comradeship, and professionalism.

—Doreen Bartoni

HECKROTH, Hein

Films as Production Designer:

1946 Caesar and Cleopatra (Pascal)
1947 Black Narcissus (Powell and Pressburger) (+ costume design)
1948 The Red Shoes (Powell and Pressburger); The Small Back Room (Powell and Pressburger)
1950 The Elusive Pimpernel (The Fighting Pimpernel) (Powell and Pressburger); Gone to Earth (Powell and Pressburger)
1951 The Tales of Hoffman (Powell and Pressburger)
1953 The Story of Gilbert and Sullivan (Gilbert and Sullivan); The Great Gilbert and Sullivan (Gilliat) (+ costume design)
1954 Ludwig II—Glanz und Eland eines Königs (Kautner)
1955 The Sorceror’s Apprentice (Powell); Oh . . . Rosalinda! (Powell and Pressburger)
1957 Robinson soll nicht sterben (von Baky)
1964 Herzog Blaubart’s Burg (Bluebeard’s Castle) (Powell)
1966 Torn Curtain (Hitchcock)

Other Films:

1946 A Matter of Life and Death (Stairway to Heaven) (Powell and Pressburger) (costume design)
1956 The Battle of the River Plate (Pursuit of the Graf Spee) (Powell and Pressburger) (artistic adviser)
1962 Die Dreigroschenoper (The Threepenny Opera) (Staudte) (set and costume designer)

Publications

On HECKROTH: book—

Gibbon, Monk, Heckroth and His Brush, 1951.
On HECKROTH: articles—

Bianco e Nero (Rome), vol. 13, no. 2, December 1952.
Obituary, in Film and TV Technician, vol. 36, no. 304, September 1970.
Film Dope (Nottingham), March 1982.
EPD Film (Frankfurt), July 1991.

* * *

Hein Heckroth belongs with the designers of Caligari, with Walt Disney, and William Cameron Menzies, as an auteur in production design whose creativity was in his day rarely appreciated. Moreover, his genius for fantasy, or at least fantastication, emerged when film theorists were preoccupied with literary qualities and realism.

He became known in German theatre in the 1920s for his startlingly modern theatre and opera designs at Essen (including three productions of Tales of Hoffman). In 1924 he cofounded Kurt Jooss’s first ballet company, later designing Jooss’s biggest success, The Green Table (1932), a highly stylised piece about disarmament conferences. Its bold, simple design, with lightweight masks and stylised splashes of paint, provoked the exchange: “How could you get the chairs away so quickly from the table?” — “There were no chairs”; “How could you change the diagonal road so quickly?” — “There was no road.” The “sense of presence” came not through illusionism (the idiom was satirical-expressionist), but through the integration of Jooss’s nonclassical choreography with Heckroth’s characteristic style—colour-schemes intricate yet strong, forms suggestive of several things, sumptuous textures and cursive lines—a sort of theatrical fauvism. Nazism and the war dislocated Heckroth’s career, but after the war Powell’s usual art designer, Alfred Junge, set him designing the costumes for A Matter of Life and Death and Black Narcissus. At this time Powell’s interests were evolving away from Junge’s large, solid, heavy sets, and he recognised Heckroth as the ideal collaborator for the The Red Shoes ballet, with its “dream-kaleidoscope” of settings, styles, and soul states. As for Tales of Hoffman, its air of extravagant opulence came not from enormous expense but from swift assemblages of painted flats, drapes, objects as vivid as unsubstantial, and strong yet intricate clashing of hues and styles. The effect is of a fluid, chameleon-like romanticism, a joy in eclectic clash-and-splash, in spasm, sensuality, and parade; exploring extreme soul states, but with joyously sceptical excess. Just as the film half-fuses, half-juxtaposes, opera and ballet, filmed theatre and pure cinema, so the design concept conglomerates innumerable styles and motifs—the third tale alone calls on the Swiss Romantic painter Arnold Boecklin, Mélies, Caligari, and Nosferatu, to cite only the central references. Overall, the film’s salmagundi of Expressionism, Bavarian barococo, Festival of Britain cheeriness, early Romanticism, Gothickly, Baudelairean decadence, and even Bauhaus streamline, is as joyously artificial as Disney’s Fantasia.

Two more conventional films, The Small Back Room and Gone to Earth, owed less to some obviously “delirious” motifs—a gigantic whisky bottle, hobgoblinish rocks—than to Heckroth’s feverish heightening of everyday atmospheres. Heckroth, rather than Powell, was initiator and auteur of two short essays, for German TV, in “fantasticated theatre,” The Sorcerer’s Apprentice and Bluebeard’s Castle, the latter achieving a crystalline simplicity.

Though a man of the theatre, at home in 3-D design for human movement, Heckroth deeply delighted in film design as “paintings in motion.” He was one of the very few designers capable of following Powell’s interest in films as “visual music,” programmed, like cartoons, to preexisting musical scores. It’s arguable that from The Red Shoes until the failure of Oh, Rosalinda!, Heckroth succeeded Pressburger as Powell’s creative soulmate. The Red Shoes Ballet Sketches, which assembles Heckroth’s storyboard, under the music, into a film, was Powell’s tribute to his designer; as a film without motion, but richly suggestive of it, it precedes by 15 years Marker’s better-known La Jetée.

—Raymond Durgnat

HELLER, Otto

Films as Cinematographer:

1918 Československý ježíšek (Small Czechoslovak Icon) (Branald) (co)
1919 Alois vyhrál los (Alois Won a Prize) (Branald) (co); Víteký ženich (The Mad Bridegroom) (Lamač) (co); Probazené svedomí (Roman lásky a pomytny; The Awakened Conscience; Story of Love and Revenge) (Zdražhal); Palimpsest (Jencik); Záhadný případ (The Strange Case) (Marten); Krásavice Ka a (Beautiful Katy) (Binovec)
1920 Drtičtiček (The Little Tinker) (Šimek); Komediantka (The Comedienne) (Rovenšky); Odpalba (Retaliations) (Winter); Plameny života (Raj a ppeklo bohemy; The Flames of Life; Heaven and Hell of Bohemia) (Binovec) (co); Zpev zlaty (Song of Gold) (Kolar); Za svobodu národa (For the Freedom of the People) (Binovec) (co)

1921 Nad propastí (Above the Abyss) (Majer); Příchozí z temnot (Arrival from the Dark; Redivivus) (Kolar) (co); Otrávené svetlo (Poisoned Light) (Kolar); Trny a květy (Záhada Noci; Shadows; Mystery of the Night) (Pražský); Manželé paní Milény (Navrat mrtvého; Pyrrhov ho většíví; Madame Miléna’s Husbands; Dead Man’s Return; Pyrrhic Victory) (Majer)
1922 Harémou kouzla zbavené (Maharađža potešenie; Harem Devoid of Magic; The Maharajah’s Pleasures) (Anton) (+ ro); Jejich svatební noc (Their Bridal Night) (Leo-pold); Mrví žíji (The Dead Live) (Kolar); Poslední políbek (The Last Kiss) (Anton); Proudý (Proudem stržna; Streams; Carried Away by the Current) (Pistek); Koryatovič (Zacarovaný klíček karpatsky; A Spell on the Carpathian Key) (Rust-Rozvoda); Proč se nesmeješ (Why Aren’t You Laughing?) (Piała)
1923 Tu Ten Kámen (Tustankhamen; How to Have Love Flame on the Spot, even for the Deceased) (Anton); Muž bez srdce (Man without a Heart) (Horáhkl and Koebner); Únos bankéře Fuxe (The Kidnapping of Banker Fuxe) (Anton) (co); Za opunu smrtí (The Mitraculous Doctor) (Futurista)
1924 Bílý Raj (The White Paradise) (Lamač); Chynte ho! (Lupič neška; Catch Him!; The Clumsy Robber) (Lamač)
1925 Píseň života (Song of Life) (Křiňanský); Vdavy Nynanky Kulichovy (Marriage of Nynanky Kulicikova) (Křiňanský); Syn hor (Son of the Mountains) (Slavinsky) (+ ro); Lucerna (The Lantern) (co); Josef Kajetán Tyl (Innemann)

1926 Dobry voják Švejk (The Good Soldier Svejk) (Lamač); Hrabenka z Podskáli (Countess from Podskáli) (Lamač); Příbeh jednoho dne (Story of One Day) (Křiňanský); Falešná kocička (The False Kitten) (Innemann); Švejk na fronte (Švejk at the Front) (Lamač); Láska Kaňenky Strnadové (Loves of Kacenky Strnadova) (Innemann); Aniceko, vrate se! (Talík; Anicka, Come Back!, Vagabond) (Pistek)
1927 Pantáta Bezoušek (Old Man Bezouza) (Lamač); Loupezeníci na Chlumu (Robbers on the Hill) (Hajsky) (co); Kreutzerova sonáta (Kreutzer Sonata) (Machaty); Werther (Utrpení mladé lásky; Sorrows of Young Love) (Křiňanský); Květ ze Šumav (Flowers from the Sumava) (Lamač); Kilenky starého kriminalníka (Loves of an Old Criminal) (Innemann); Sladká Josefnka (Sweet Little Josefn) (Lamač); Saxophon-Susi (Lamač)
1928 Dcery Eviny (A Married Daughter; Eve’s Daughters) (Lamač); Evas Töchter (Lamač); Der erste Kuss (Lamač); Kedulubnový kavalír v ráji (A Gentleman in Paradise) (Bonyd)
1929 Známosti z ulice (Acquaintances of the Street) (Medeotti-Boháč); Frč (The Sin) (Lamač); Páter Vojtech (Father Vojtech) (Frič); Sündig und Süss (Lamač); Das Mädel mit der Peitsche (Lamač); Adjunkt Vrba (Kršanský); Die Kaviarprinzessin (Lamač)
1930 Starý hřích (The Old Sin) (Kršanský); Svatý Václav (Kolar) (co); Proudem stržna (The Cross by the Brook) (Kolar); Žabec (Orlicky and Kolar); Moderní Magdalena (Orlicky and Kolar); Kříž u potoka (Trny a kveti) (Kolar); Světlo a květy (Otrávené svetlo) (Kolar); Záhada Noci; Shadows; Mystery of the Night (Pražský); Manželé paní Milény (Navrat mrtvého; Pyrrhov ho většíví; Madame Miléna’s Husbands; Dead Man’s Return; Pyrrhic Victory) (Majer)
1938 Ducháček to zaridi (Duchacek Will See to It) (Lamač); Krok do my (A Step to Darkness) (Frič); Slávo, nejde se! (Slavka, Don't Give In!) (Lamač) (co); Tretí zvonení (The Third Bell) (Svíták); Vertig Jaren (Forty Years) (Greville)

1939 Le Grand Élan (Christian-Jaque) (co); L'Enfer des anges (Christian-Jaque) (co); Menaces (Greville) (co)

1940 De Mayerling à Sarajevo (Max Ophuls); L'Empreinte de Dieu (Moguy); Soyez les bienvenus (de Baroncelli); Vingt-quatre heures de perm' (Cloche)

1942 Alihi (Hurst); Tomorrow We Live (At Dawn We Die) (King); The Night Invader (Mason)

1943 The Dark Tower (Harlow); They Met in the Dark (Lamač); The Hundred Pound Window (Hurst); Candlelight in Algeria (King)

1944 One Exciting Night (You Can't Do without Love) (Forde); Mr. Emmanuel (French); Flight from Folly (Mason)

1945 I Live in Grosvenor Square (A Yankee in London) (Wilcox); Gaiety George (Showtime) (King); Night Boat to Dublin (Huntington)

1947 They Made Me a Fugitive (I Became a Criminal) (Cavalcanti); Temptation Harbour (Comfort)

1948 Bond Street (Parry); Noose (The Silk Noose) (Greville); The Queen of Spades (Dickinson); The Last Days of Dolwyn (Woman of Dolwyn) (Williams)

1950 Now Barabbas Was a Robber . . . (Now Barabbas) (Parry); Three Men and a Girl (Parry)

1950 The Woman with No Name (Her Panelled Door) (Vajda and O’Ferrall); I’ll Get You for This (Lucky Nick Cain) (Newman)

1953 Flesh and Blood (Kimmins); Never Take No for an Answer (Cloche and Smart)

1956 The Crimson Pirate (Siodmak); The Man Who Watched Trains Go By (The Paris Express) (French)

1957 The Square Ring (Dearden); His Majesty O’Keefe (Haskin)

1957 The Rainbow Jacket (Dearden); The Divided Heart (Crichton)

1958 The Ladykillers (Mackendrick); Richard III (Oliver)

1958 Who Done It? (Dearden); Child in the House (de Latour); Circus Friends (Thomas); The Passionate Stranger (A Novel Affair) (Muriel Box); Kings and Queens (Czinner)

1958 The Silent Enemy (Fairchild); The Truth about Women (Muriel Box); The Vicious Circle (The Circle) (Thomas); Manuela (Stowaway Girl) (Hamilton)

1958 The Duke Wore Jeans (Thomas); The Sheriff of Fractured Jaw (Walsh); Hello London (Smith)

1959 Ferry to Hong Kong (Gilbert); The Rough and the Smooth (Portrait of a Sinner) (Siodmak); A Dog of Flanders (Clark); Peeping Tom (Powell)

1960 The Singer Not the Song (Baker); An heiligen Wassern (Weidenmann)

1961 The Big Show (Clark); Victim (Dearden); Light in the Piazza (Gren)

1962 Tiara Tahiti (Kotcheff); Life for Ruth (Walk in the Shadow) (Dearden); We Joined the Navy (Toye)

1963 West 11 (Winner); What a Crazy World (Carreras)

1964 Woman of Straw (Dearden); The Curse of the Mummy’s Tomb (Carreras); A Gift for Love (de Latour); Masquerade (Dearden)

1965 The Ipcress File (Furie); Alfie (Gilbert)

1966 That Riviera Touch (Owen); Funeral in Berlin (Hamilton)

1967 The Naked Runner (Furie); I’ll Never Forget What’s is Name (Winner); Don’t Raise the Bridge, Lower the River (Paris)
1968  Duffy (Parrish)
1969  Can Heironymus Merkin Ever Forget Mercy Humppe and Find True Happiness? (Newley); Bloomfield (The Hero) (Harris); In Search of Gregory (Peter Wood)

Publications

On HELLER: articles—

Film a Doba (Prague), vol. 11, no. 769–771, 1959.
Film Dope (Nottingham), March 1982.

* * *

Otto Heller is one of the many distinguished cameramen to have come from the Czechoslovak region (others include Freund, Planer, Ondricek, Kucera, Stallich, and Vich). His output is extremely wide-ranging and prolific: credited with over 250 films, he worked in Czechoslovakia, Austria, Germany, Holland, France, and England.
Heller’s career began in earnest in 1918, after he filmed the triumphal entry into Prague of the founder President of Czechoslovakia, Thomas Garrigue Masaryk. He contributed to many of the most famous Czech films; Machatý’s Kreutzer Sonata, Inennmann’s Pred maturitou, and the films of Voscovec and Frič—Hej rup! and Svet patří nám. He was especially associated with the films of Anny Ondra and her husband Karl Lamač with whom he worked in many countries. Ironically, he was not appreciated as he should have been in his native country and was often teamed with another cameraman.
He extended his experience in Germany, and in the Berlin Film Lexicon of 1931 he is said to be esteemed for his technical knowledge and refined taste, and capable of producing striking effects for any subject. His exile to England in 1935 gave him the opportunity of filming a wide range of subjects by many different directors, but perhaps his greatest achievement was the exquisite work he did on Thorold Dickinson’s Queen of Spades, where Oliver Messel’s superb sets were seen at their best through Heller’s creative lens. In 1955, he filmed Mackendrick’s The Ladykillers and Olivier’s Richard III. His technical knowledge and expertise in colour extended his previous success in black-and-white photography.

—Liam O’Leary

HENRY, Buck

Films as Writer:

1964  The Troublemaker (Flicker) (+ ro)
1968  The Graduate (Nichols) (+ ro); Candy (Marquand)
1970  Catch-22 (Nichols) (+ ro); The Owl and the Pussycat (Ross)
1972  What’s Up, Doc? (Bogdanovich)
1973  The Day of the Dolphin (Nichols)
1980  First Family (+ d, ro)
1984  Protocol (Ross)
1995  To Die For (Van Sant) (+ ro)
2000  Town and Country (Chelsom) (co)

Films as Actor:

1971  Taking Off (Forman) (as Larry Tyne); Is There Sex after Death (J. & A. Abel)
1976  The Man Who Fell to Earth (Roeg) (as Oliver Farnsworth)
1978  Old Boyfriends (Tewkesbury) (as Art Kopple); Heaven Can Wait (Beatty) (as the Escort, + co-d)
1979 The Absent-Minded Waiter (Gottlieb—short)
1980 Gloria (Cassavetes) (as Jack Dawn)
1982 Eating Raoul (Bartel) (as Mr. Leech)
1987 Aria (Temple) (as Mr. Preston)
1989 Rude Awakening (Russo) (as Lloyd)
1990 Aunt Julia and the Scriptwriter (Tune in Tomorrow) (Amiel)
   (as Fr. Serafin)
1991 Defending Your Life (Albert Brooks) (as Dick Stanley)
1992 The Player (Altman); The Linguini Incident (R. Shepard)
   (as Cecil)
1993 Short Cuts (Altman) (as Gordon Johnson); Grumpy Old Men
   (Petrie) (as Elliott Snyder); Even Cowgirls Get the Blues
   (Van Sant)
1997 The Real Blonde (DiCillo) (as Dr. Leuter)
1998 The Story of X (doc for Video) (as Host); 1999 (Davis) (as Mr.
   Goldman); I'm Losing You (Wagner) (as Philip Dragom)
1999 Curtain Call (Yates) (as Charles Van Allsburg); Breakfast of Champions (Rudolph) (as Fred T. Barry)
2000 Famous (as himself)

Publications

By HENRY: articles—

Films Illustrated (London), May 1976.
Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1976.
Film Comment, September 1993.
Fade In (Beverly Hills), vol. 1, no. 2, 1995.
Scenario (Rockville), vol. 2, no. 2, Summer 1996.

On HENRY: articles—

Focus on Film (London), Summer 1972.
American Film (Washington, D.C.), December 1980.
Film Comment (New York), September-October 1993.

Buck Henry is probably better known as an actor and comedian than as a screenwriter. In his screenplays, Henry shows an intellectual and often biting satirical wit. He takes on the contemporary human condition and allows the viewer to see and often laugh at the incongruities of life. His characters, however silly they act at times, are vulnerable and therefore human.

Henry began his career writing for television, including The Steve Allen Show, That Was the Week That Was, and numerous television comedians. He and Mel Brooks created the popular comedy spy spoof Get Smart, which ran on television for five years. Henry was story editor and won an Emmy Award for the series. The hero, Maxwell Smart, was a bumbling spy who, although seemingly naive and unaware of the forces at work around him, battled the evil organization K.A.O.S. and triumphed. The idea of an innocent person gaining wisdom and triumphing over chaos—“getting smart”—is a frame of reference that can be applied to Buck Henry’s wildly satiric and often bittersweet screenplays. Many major film characters learn from their experiences, but in a Henry script the characters are often so unaware and confused that the gaining of insight is truly monumental.

His first film script, The Troublemaker, which he wrote with director Theodore Flicker, is about an honest country fellow who comes to New York to open a coffeehouse but first must pay off officials for licenses. The film stars actors from the improvisational group The Premise, which Henry joined in 1960. Although the satire is funny, the film lacks a tight structure due to the many improvisations.

Henry’s next script, based on the novel by Charles Webb, was The Graduate, which he wrote with Calder Willingham. This film was the first of three Henry would write for director Mike Nichols, who undoubtedly did the finest interpretations of Henry’s material. The Graduate is the story of Benjamin (Dustin Hoffman) who, although a whiz at college in both studies and athletics, appears zombielike to his parents and their friends, who have different values. Wonderfully satiric lines carry the innocent Benjamin through his affair with Mrs.
Robinson (Anne Bancroft) until he gains real knowledge and decides on his own set of values. Having fallen in love with Mrs. Robinson’s daughter Elaine (Katharine Ross), he overcomes all odds and rescues her at the church just before she weds a medical student. In the bittersweet ending, Benjamin and Elaine, finally together on a bus, say nothing to each other while Simon and Garfunkel’s “The Sound of Silence” is heard on the soundtrack. The implied question is whether Benjamin and Elaine can really escape becoming like their parents. Few American films have enjoyed the immediate financial and critical success of The Graduate. It was a watershed film for those young people who were concerned about the values of a materialistic, plastic society.

Henry’s next script was Candy, directed by Christian Marquand.
Again, loss of innocence is a theme. The heroine (Ewa Aulin) is a teenager who encounters various odd characters in her search for wisdom. The novel was a parody of pornographic novels, which sadly did not translate well to the screen.

His next screenplay, his second for director Mike Nichols, was an adaptation of Joseph Heller’s novel Catch-22. The innocent in this film is Yossarian (Alan Arkin), a bombardier in World War II, who perceives war and his military life as insane. The film becomes Yossarian’s dream (actually a series of dream sequences) during which, as in psychoanalysis, more and more is revealed. Yossarian eventually gains insight and is able to make a decision about what to do. The lines are wonderfully funny, yet behind the humor is also the revelation of the horror of war itself. The circular construction of the script is brilliant.

Henry’s next script, The Owl and the Pussycat, was adapted from a play by Bill Manhoff and directed by Herbert Ross. The film is about trying to get in touch with reality. An innocent aspiring writer-book salesman, Felix Sherman (George Segal) meets aspiring actresshooker (Barbra Streisand) and through a series of comic situations, both learn that it is important to be themselves, to be real. A similar structure can be found in Henry’s next work for director Peter Bogdanovich, What’s Up, Doc? Henry did the final rewrite on Robert Benton and David Newman’s screenplay, developed from a story by Bogdanovich. In this tribute to screwball comedies of the 1930s, unconventional student Judy Maxwell (Barbra Streisand) liberates conventional professor Dr. Howard Bannister (Ryan O’Neal) from a closed, boring life. The innocent professor, through a series of comic situations, comes to an understanding of both love and freedom.
In his third script for Mike Nichols, The Day of the Dolphin, Henry turns from comedy to drama. This time the innocents are two dolphins, Alpha and Beta, who are taught to speak English by marine biologist Dr. Jake Terrell (George C. Scott). Terrell himself is innocent too, as he does not consider all the implications of his work until the dolphins are stolen by men who plan to use them to blow up the yacht of the president of the United States. The dolphins escape and the attempted assassination is foiled. But the tremendously sad and difficult ending, where Terrell tells the dolphins to return to the sea and speak to no one again, and where he waits, wiser yet doomed, for the assassins to return to destroy him and all the evidence, made this film difficult for audiences who may have wanted a happy “Lassie”-type animal picture.

In 1978, Henry and Warren Beatty directed Heaven Can Wait, a remake of Here Comes Mr. Jordan (1941). Although Henry is not given writing credit, he probably contributed to the script by Beatty and Elaine May, which is about a football player, prematurely killed, who returns in a murdered millionaire’s body. The innocent football player, Joe Pendleton (Beatty), gains wisdom quickly enough, and in hilarious scenes runs the millionaire’s company ethically, harasses the murderers relentlessly, and finds true love.

Henry then wrote and directed First Family, about wacky U.S. President Manfred Link (Bob Newhart), his alcoholic wife (Madeline Kahn), nymphomaniac daughter (Gilda Radner), and various nutty staff members. President Link is trying to establish diplomatic relations (a link?) with the emerging African nation Upper Gorm, and this provides a showcase for many wild verbal and visual gags. In First Family, Henry satirizes high government officials of the United States and the mythical African country, but offers no solutions to their antics.

Henry does offer a solution in his next film, the second for director Herbert Ross, Protocol. Basing his script on a story by Charles Shyer, Nancy Meyers, and Harvey Miller, Henry makes the point that the people are responsible if their leaders are bunglers and that the people need to get involved in every phase of political life, from voting to holding elective office. The film satirizes not only politics but also contemporary media. It contains a positive message as well as being very funny. After Protocol, Henry continued to be very versatile. He acted in films and on the stage, wrote articles, and did other related work.

In 1995, he wrote the script for To Die For, based on the book by Joyce Maynard (a work of fiction suggested by a real murder) and directed by Gus Van Sant. In this complex, important, and satiric look at celebrity status, television, and contemporary society, there are many humorous moments, but underlying theme is true horror. The main character, Suzanne Stone (Nicole Kidman), like a “stone,” has no feelings for others. She is captivated by television and will do anything to promote her rising career as a television news star, including manipulating a high school student and his friends to murder her husband, Larry Maretto (Matt Dillon), whom she sees as standing in her way. The form of the film is appropriate for the content. The narrative is fused with television techniques and imagery, and scenes are often fragmented and not necessarily in order. For example, there are television-like interviews, including one with Larry’s sister Janice (Illeana Douglas) talking directly into the camera, with cuts to scenes illustrating her comments. And when Suzanne makes a videotape of her students, there are cuts from this to images on the tape itself. Continuing Henry’s theme of people losing innocence and gaining wisdom, most people around Suzanne do “wise up” to her. But for some, including, ironically, Suzanne herself, wisdom comes too late, or not at all.

Buck Henry remains one of America’s leading satirical screenwriters. Through his wit and insight, the viewer gains wisdom. He is an example of an “auteur” screenwriter, as his scripts all seem to be variations on a theme—his characters “get smart.”

—H. Wayne Schuth

HENSON, Jim

Animator, Puppeteer, Director, and Producer. Nationality: American. Born: James Maury Henson in Greenville, Mississippi, 24 September 1936. Education: Studied theater arts, University of Maryland. Family: Married partner in puppetry Jane Nebel, 1959, children: Lisa, Cheryl, Brian, John, and Heather. Career: 1954—while still attending high school in Washington, D.C. worked as puppeteer on local TV show; while in college, produced regular five-minute TV puppet show, Sam and Friends, whose characters evolved into the Muppets; 1960s—Muppets featured on Steve Allen Show, Ed Sullivan Show and other prime-time programs, becoming a cult; 1965—short film Timepiece nominated for Academy Award; 1969—Sesame Street launched on PBS network, subsequently shown in 80 countries, winning numerous Emmys and a Peabody Award; 1976—The Muppet Show launched with backing from UK TV mogul Lord Grade, winning three Emmys and seen in 100 countries by an estimated 235 million viewers; 1979—set up Jim Henson’s Creature Shop in London; made first feature film, The Muppet Movie; 1981—film-directing debut with The Great Muppet Caper; 1982—first all-animatronic feature, The Dark Crystal. Awards: Local Emmy, 1958. Died: Of streptococcal pneumonia, in New York City, 16 May 1990.

Films as Animator/Puppeteer:

- 1965 Timepiece (short) (+ d)
- 1968 Hey Cinderella (+ d)
- 1970 Number Twelve Rocks (short) (+ d)
- 1971 Frog Prince (+ d)
- 1979 The Muppet Movie (Frawley) (+ pr, ro)
- 1981 The Great Muppet Caper (+ d, pr, ro)
- 1982 The Dark Crystal (+ co-d with Oz, co-pr, co-sc)
- 1984 The Muppets Take Manhattan (Oz) (+ pr, ro)
- 1986 Labyrinth (+ d, co-sc)
Jim Henson

Other Films:

1985  Into the Night (Landis) (ro as man on phone); Dreamchild (Millar) (creature des)
1989  The Bear (Annaud) (creature des)
1990  Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles (Barron) (creature des); The Witches (Roeg) (creature des, co-pr)

Publications

By HENSON: article—

Interview in American Film (Washington, D.C.), November 1989.

On HENSON: books—

Finch, Christopher, Of Muppets and Men, New York, 1981.

Finch, Christopher, Jim Henson the Works: The Art, the Magic, the Imagination, New York, 1993.

On HENSON: articles—

Ecran Fantastique (Paris), June 1996.

Collins, James, “Jim Henson,” in Time, 8 June 1998.

“Jim Henson: A Gentle Genius Changed Forever the Way America

As a child, Jim Henson devised his first puppets by cutting bits of

It was this mix of simplicity and sophistication that fueled the

Like most acts originally conceived for television, the Muppets

Even more ambitious in terms of sheer technique were Henson's

Had Henson not died suddenly at age 53, he would almost certainly have found ways of reconciling sophistication with simplicity, of rendering his increasingly complex techniques unobtrusive and placing them at the service of a strong, clear story line. Five years after his death the company he founded, Jim Henson Productions, succceeded in producing just such a film, Babe—and reaped the reward both critically and at the box office. As Babe shows, Henson’s legacy is twofold: through Henson Productions, now headed by his son Brian and resurgent from the trauma of its founder’s death; and in wider terms through his achievement in advancing puppet-animation technique into areas of complexity undreamt of when he started out armed only with humor, ingenuity, and a green sock.

HERLTH, Robert

Art Director. Nationality: German. Born: Robert Paul Fritz Herlth in Wriezen an der Oder, 2 May 1893. Education: Attended High School for Fine Arts, Berlin, 1912–14; Staatliche Kunstgewerbeschule, Berlin, 1919–20. Military Service: 1914–18—served in the German army. Family: Brother of the designer Kurt Herlth. Career:
1916–18—first theatre designs for army theatre, Wilna, with Herman Warm; 1922–36—film designer, often with Walter Röhrig, for UFA; 1937–39—designed for Tobis; 1939–45—designed for Terra;
1946–47—designed for Ulenespieling; 1947–49—designed for Columbia,
Rome; 1949–50—designed for Kamera; 1950–62—freelance film and stage designer. Died: In Munich, 6 January 1962.

Films as Art Director:

1920 Das Lachende Grauen (Meinert); Das Geheimnis von Bombay (Holz); Die Toteninsel (Froelich); Irrende Seen (Froelich)

1921 Schloss Vogelöd (Murnau); Satansketten (Lasko); Der müde Tod (Between Two Worlds; Destiny) (Lang); Das Spiel mit dem Feuer (Wiene and Kroll); Die Intriguen der Madame de la Pommeraye (Wendhausen)

1922 Der Taugenichts (Froelich); Der Graf von Essex (Felner); Pariserinnen (Lasko); Fräulein Julie (Miss Julie) (Basch); Louise Millerin (Froelich)

1923 Der Schatz (The Treasure) (Pabst)

1924 Komödie des Herzens (Gliese); Der letzte Mann (The Last Laugh) (Murnau)

1925 Zur Chronik von Grieshuas (At the Grey House) (von Gerlach); Tartüff (Tartuffe) (Murnau)

1926 Faust (Murnau)

1927 Luther (Kyser)

1928 Looping the Loop (Robison); Rutschbahn (Eichberg)

1929 Die wunderbare Lüge der Nina Petrovna (The Wonderful Lie of Nina Petrovna) (Schwarz); Asphalt (May); Manolescu (Tourjansky); The Informer (Robison)

1930 Der unsterbliche Lump (Ucicky); Hokuspokus (Hocus pocus) (Ucicky); Rosenmontag (Steinhoff); Ein Burschenlied aus Heidelberg (Hartl); Das Flötenukonzert von Sanssouci (Ucicky); Der Mann, der seinen Mörder sucht (Siodmak)
1931 Der falsche Ehemann (Guter); Nie wieder Liebe (Litvak); Im Genheimdienst (Ucicky); Der kleine Seiten sprung (Schünzel); Der Kongress tanzt (The Congress Dances) (Charrell); Yorck (Ucicky)
1932 Die Gräfin von Monte Cristo (Hartl); Mensch ohne Namen (Man without a Name) (Ucicky); Der Schwarze Husar (The Black Hussar) (Lamprecht)
1933 Morgenrot (Ucicky); Ich und die Kaiserin (The Only Girl) (Hollaender); Saison in Kairo (Schünzel); Walzerkrieg (Waltz Time in Vienna) (Berger); Flüchtlinge (Ucicky)
1934 Die Csardasfürstin (Jacoby); Der junge Baron Neuhaus (Ucicky); Prinzessin Turandot (Lamprecht)
1935 Frischer Wind aus Kanada (Kenter and Holder); Barcarole (Lamprecht); Das Mädchen Johanna (Ucicky); Amphitryon (Schünzel) (Königswalder (Mäisch)
1936 Hans im Glück (+ d + se); Savoy-Hotel 217 (Ucicky); Unter heissem Himmel (Ucicky)
1937 Der Herrscher (The Ruler) (Harlan); Der zerbrochene Krug (Ucicky); Der Maulkorb (Engel)
1938 Olympia (Riefenstahl); Der Spieler (Lamprecht)
1939 Morgen werde ich verhaftet (Stroux); Maria Ilona (von Bolvary); Opernball (von Bolvary)
1940 Kleider machen Leute (Kütner); Rosen in Tirol (von Bolvary)
1941 Die schwedische Nachtigall (Brauer)
1942 Andreas Schlüter (Mäisch)
1943 Wenn die Sonne weider scheint (Barlog); Ein Mann mit Grundsätzen? (von Bolvary)
1944 Melusine (Steinhoff)
1946 Die Fledermaus (von Bolvary)
1947 Zwischen gestern und morgen (Braun); Film ohne Titel (Film without Title) (Jugert)
1949 La leggenda di Faust (Gallone); Verspieltes Leben (Meisel); Ich 1 der Ehe (Jugert); Geliebter Lügner (Schweikart)
1950 Kein Engel ist so rein (Weiss); Das Doppelt Lottchen (von Baky); Dämmerische Liebe (Der Tengel führt Regie) (Meisel)
1951 Dr. Holl (Hansen); Das weisse Abenteuer (Rabenalt)
1952 Herz der Welt (Braun); Hinter Kostermann (Reinl); Die Fürsterbstil (Rabenalt); Der grosse Zapfeinstreich (Hurdalek); Alraune (Rab enalt); Im weissen Rössl (Forst); Der Kaplan von San Lorenzo (Ucicky)
1953 Das Dorf unter Himmel (Häussler); Musik bei Nacht (Hoffmann); Die geschiedene Frau (Jacoby); Hochzeitglöckchen (Wildhagen)
1954 Sauerbruch—Das war mein Leben (Hansen); Das fliessende Klassenzimmer (Hoffman); Der letzte Sommer (Braun); Geliebte Feindin (Hansen)
1955 Solang es hübsche Mädchens gibt (Rabenalt); Hanussen (Fischer and Marischka); Der letzte Mann (Braun); Teufel in Seide (Devil in Silk) (Hansen); Regine (Braun)
1956 Magic Fire (Dieterle); Heute heiratet mein Mann (Hoffmann); Die Trapp-Familie (Liebeneiner); Heisse Ernte (König)
1957 Die Letzten werden die Ersten sein (Hansen); Bekenntnisse des Hochstaplers Felix Krull (The Confessions of Felix Krull) (Hoffmann); . . . und führte uns nicht in Versuchung (Hansen); Das Wirtschus im Spessart (The Spessart Inn) (Hoffmann)
1958 Taiga (Liebeneiner); Auferstehung (Resurrection) (Hansen); Die Trapp-Familie in Amerika (Liebeneiner) (condensed version of two Trapp Family films released as The Trapp Family, 1958); Ein gewisser Judas (Werner); Dorothea Angermann (Siodmak)
1959 Das schöne Abenteuer (Hoffmann); Baddenbrooks (Weidenmann—2 parts); Ein Tag, der nie zu Ende geht (Wirth)
1960 Eine Frau fürs ganze Leben (Liebeneiner); Gustav Adolfs Page (Hansen)
1961 Die Auster und die Perle (Schnell)
1962 Jack Mortimer (Kalmann)
1963 Herr und Hund (van den Berg); In einer Fremden Stadt (Hess); Zum Tee bei Dr. Borsig (Hess); Millionär für 3 Tage (Sedlmayer)

Publications

By HERLTH: book

Filmarchitektur, Munich, 1965.

By HERLTH: articles

On HERLTH: articles

* * *

If the pinnacle of German art direction occurred from the late 1910s through the early 1930s, then Robert Herlth, Walter Röhrig, and Hermann Warm represented that period’s preeminent set designers. They fully visualized the distorted Expressionist film style as well as the more naturalistic Kammerstil. Together they were responsible for the impressive UFA films by such important directors as Fritz Lang, Gustav Ucicky, Gerhard Lamprecht, Reinhold Schünzel, and F.W. Murnau.

Though he worked within the Expressionist mode, Herlth’s designs were not as severe as Röhrig’s and Warm’s, especially when compared to their extreme The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari. Herlth seemed more interested in exploiting the liberating romantic potentials of the movement’s visual Hellendunck than its claustrophobic psychoses. His collaboration with Murnau and Röhrig on Der lette Mann, Tartuffe and Faust demonstrates this direction. They modified Expressionism by pushing beyond its strict borders towards a naturalism that ironically permitted more fantasy and psychological investigation. As large baroque sets became simpler and sparser, camera stasis yielded to camera action. Instead of designing ‘‘expressive’’ spaces that limited action and camera movement and into which an actor was placed and frequently dwarfed, Herlth and Röhrig provided psychological impetus for movement based on locations suggested by an actor’s situation. Herlth said that they attempted to adapt the space to the actor; the set could function only when the actor filled and controlled the space. Under these circumstances, the “moving camera,” or Entfesselte Kamera as it was originally known, was born during the filming of Der letzte Mann. Karl Freund’s incessantly moving camera perfectly complemented the interior psychology and dreams of the film as expressed by the art direction and narrative.

Herlth, Rohrig, Murnau, and Freund continued this experimentation in Tartuffe, by suggesting a historical era through evocative yet partial sets, and in the definitive screen version of Faust (Freund was replaced by Carl Hoffmann), by adopting unusual point-of-view shots, for example, Mephisto soaring over an expansive miniature landscape.

Herlth and Rohrig settled down to much less adventurous careers after Murnau’s untimely death. Both worked during the period of the Third Reich, their Kammerspiel style giving way to social realism in the guise of propaganda. Herlth collaborated with Leni Riefenstahl for the visual strategies of the epic Olympia. After the war, Herlth was a prolific designer for routine studio productions and television until the early 1960s.

—Greg S. Faller

HERRERA, Jorge

Films as Cinematographer:

1966 La salación (Gómez); Manuela (Solás)
1968 Lucía (Solás)
1969 La primera carga al machete (The First Charge of the Machete) (Gómez)
1971 Las dias del agua (Gómez)
1975 Cantata de Chile (Solás)
1981 Alsino y el condor (Alsino and the Condor) (Littin)

Publications

By HERRERA: articles—

“‘Apuntes sobre la fotografía de La primera carga al machete,’” in Cine Cubano (Havana), May-August 1969.

On HERRERA: articles—

Littin, Miguel, “‘Recado a Jorge,’” in Cine Cubano (Havana), no. 102, 1982.

* * *

Best known for the expressive realism of his cinematography in Lucía and The First Charge of the Machete, Jorge Herrera was at one with the revolutionary cultural effervescence of the late 1960s in Cuba. An outstanding cameraman of the Cuban Film Institute (Instituto Cubano de Arte e Industria Cinematográfica)—and one of the most creative in Latin America—Herrera argued that the most important role of the camera was to make images live with their greatest intensity. Thus, he felt that cinematography should be expressive rather than naturalist, penetrating into reality to decipher it, rather than remaining at the surface of things, with a mere reflection of nature. He perceived the camera as a participant in film: not just watching, but inciting, stimulating, and propelling the action.

For Herrera, the hand-held camera was the means to achieve his cinematographic goals. He stated: “The hand-held camera is more human, more authentic, and more intimate. It implies freshness, spontaneity, and improvisation; it lives, feels, loves, and hates. It also provides the actors with greater liberty of action, helping them to feel themselves as human beings and not just actors.” Herrera felt that this technique led away from the artificial sense of films produced with enormously complicated apparatus for lighting, set decoration, and cameras, and moved toward a light, agile cinema more suited to Cuban reality and, obviously, greatly influenced by the Cuban tradition of documentary film.

However, if Herrera’s use of the hand-held camera was a step beyond the traditional cinematography of Hollywood, his style must also be differentiated from other forms which employ this technique. For example, in contrast to the casual, personal aesthetic of the French New Wave, where the hand-held camera emphasizes the fact of the auteur, Herrera’s style stressed collectivity and the reality of revolutionary struggle. Here, however, it is important to note that Herrera was not searching for a realist aesthetic, but attempting to convey a certain attitude toward reality. Thus, Herrera also goes beyond what might be described as the television news style of on-the-spot reportage. He accomplishes this, first of all, by having the camera participate in the action, demonstrating that everyone is involved, even those who attempt to remain calmly on the sidelines reporting on the occurrence.

Herrera’s most important contribution to world cinema, though, is the manner in which he demolishes the classic dichotomy of realism and expressionism in the battle sequence of The First Charge of the Machete. There, the hand-held camera initially appears to effect the characteristic form of modern realism, reproducing the sensation of television’s live coverage of events. However, as the sequence evolves and the battle heightens, Herrera’s camera begins to career wildly, taking on the frenzy of the hand-to-hand combat; combined with an extreme high-contrast film, this produces a screen image which at times is little more than a swirling mass of abstract patterns. The poles of realism and expressionism are joined in this paean to revolutionary struggle in the field and with the camera, resulting in the simultaneous distancing and sensuous identification for which the cinema of Cuba has been justifiably praised.

—John Mraz

HERRMANN, Bernard

Composer. Nationality: American. Born: New York City, 29 June 1911. Education: Attended DeWitt Clinton High School and New York University; studied with Philip James, Bernard Wagenaar, and Albert Stoessel at Juilliard Graduate School, New York. Family: Married the writer Lucille Fletcher, 1939 (divorced). Career: 1931—organized New Chamber Orchestra; 1934–59—worked for CBS, as conductor, and composer (including music for Welles’s Mercury Theater Playhouse), and, from 1940, chief conductor of the CBS Symphony Orchestra; also composer of orchestra and stage works; 1941—first score for film, Citizen Kane; also composer for TV. Awards: Academy Award, for All that Money Can Buy, 1941; British Academy Award, for Taxi Driver, 1976. Died: 24 December 1975.

Films as Composer:

1941 Citizen Kane (Welles); All that Money Can Buy (The Devil and Daniel Webster; Here Is a Man; Daniel and the Devil) (Dieterle)
1942 The Magnificent Ambersons (Welles) (co)
1943 Jane Eyre (Stevenson)
1945 Hangover Square (Brahm)
1946 Anna and the King of Siam (Cromwell)
1947 The Ghost and Mrs. Muir (Mankiewicz)
1948 Portrait of Jennie (Jennie) (Dieterle) (song)
1951 The Day the Earth Stood Still (Wise); On Dangerous Ground (Ray)
1952 Five Fingers (Mankiewicz); The Snows of Kilimanjaro (H. King)
1953 White Witch Doctor (Hathaway); Beneath the 12-Mile Reef (Webb); King of the Khyber Rifles (H. King)
1954 Garden of Evil (Hathaway); The Egyptian (Curtiz) (co); Prince of Players (Dunne); The Trouble with Harry (Hitchcock)
1955 The Kentuckian (Lancaster); The Man Who Knew Too Much (Hitchcock) (+ bit ro)
1956 The Man in the Gray Flannel Suit (Johnson); The Wrong Man (Hitchcock)
1957 A Hatful of Rain (Zinnemann); Williamsburg: The Story of a Patriot (Seaton—short)
1958 Vertigo (Hitchcock); The Naked and the Dead (Walsh); The Seventh Voyage of Sinbad (Juran)
1959 North by Northwest (Hitchcock); Blue Denim (Blue Jeans) (Dunne); Journey to the Center of the Earth (Levin)
1960 Psycho (Hitchcock); The Three Worlds of Gulliver (Sher)
1961 Mysterious Island (Endfield); Cape Fear (Lee Thompson); Tender Is the Night (H. King)
1963 Jason and the Argonauts (Chaffey); The Birds (Hitchcock) (consultant)
1964 Marnie (Hitchcock); Joy in the Morning (Segal)
1966 Fahrenheit 451 (Truffaut)
1967 La Mariée était en noir (The Bride Wore Black) (Truffaut)
1968 Twisted Nerve (R. Boulting); Companion in Nightmare (Lloyd); Bitka na Neretvi (Battle of Neretva) (Bulajic—English version)
1970 The Night Digger (The Road Builder) (Reid)
1972 Endless Night (Gilliat); Sisters (Blood Sisters) (De Palma)
1973 It’s Alive (Cohen)
1975 Obsession (De Palma)
1976 Taxi Driver (Scorsese)

Posthumous Films:

1978 It Lives Again (Cohen)
1987 It’s Alive III: Island of the Alive (Cohen)
1991 Cape Fear (Scorsese) (arranged by Elmer Bernstein)

Publications

By HERRMANN: articles—

In Knowing the Score, by Irwin Baselon, New York, 1975.
In Film Score, edited by Tony Thomas, South Brunswick, New Jersey, 1979.
In Sound and the Cinema, edited by Evan Cameron, Pleasantville, New York, 1980.

On HERRMANN: books—

Bruce, Graham, Bernard Herrmann: Film Music and Narrative, Ann Arbor, Michigan, 1985.
Brown, Royal S., Overtones and Undertones: Reading Film Music, Berkeley, California, 1994.

On HERRMANN: articles—

Film Music Notebook (Calabasas, California), vol. 3, no. 2, 1977.

Classic Film/Video Images, July 1980.

Soundtrack! (Hollywood), Spring 1981.

Filmcritica (Rome), June 1981.

Film Music (Leeds), 1982.

Soundtrack! (Hollywood), September 1985.

Soundtrack! (Hollywood), vol. 5, no. 18, June 1986.

Surely no film scores have inspired so many passionate admirers or so much detailed analysis as have those of Bernard Herrmann. Even the general public, asked to cite memorable “movie music,” may think not only of tunes such as the title theme of Gone with the Wind (Max Steiner) or Breakfast at Tiffany’s’ “Moon River” (Henry Mancini) but of the violin shrieks of Herrmann’s Psycho score (or turning to television, his Twilight Zone theme). Arriving on the film scene to score Orson Welles’s Citizen Kane, and reaching his greatest fame working for Alfred Hitchcock—a collaboration which produced in a row three of the director’s and the composer’s finest achievements, Vertigo, North by Northwest, and Psycho—the famously cantankerous Herrmann achieved little public recognition among his peers: he did receive an Oscar in 1941 but only two other nominations (in 1941 and 1946) until two more posthumous ones in 1976. Still, he was championed in his later years by a younger generation of major directors—François Truffaut, Brian De Palma, Martin Scorsese—and is now one of the few composers of film music to be the subject of full-length book treatments (a biography and a critical study of his work).

Herrmann’s first notes of music for the cinema—the portentous opening of Citizen Kane—already offer many characteristics of the Herrmann style: unusual orchestrations (e.g., low winds, vibraphone); unresolved chords that are not simply suspenseful in some melodramatic way but also create a brooding sense of time suspended; and melodic fragments (or what Graham Bruce calls cellular units rather than lengthier leitmotifs) that will later be developed. Herrmann worked closely with Welles on the project, rather than being brought in only on postproduction. Thus the two were able to achieve some virtuoso fusions of music and drama, as in the breakfast montage portraying the collapse of Kane’s first marriage, in which the editing is done to match Herrmann’s theme-and-variations, and in the opera-house scene, with Herrmann’s French aria à la Massenet providing music that Susan is ill-equipped to sing, as well as a grandiosity that seems to mock Kane’s ambitions.

A later 1940s score, one of Herrmann’s personal favorites, for The Ghost and Mrs. Muir, is superficially closer to standard Hollywood practice, but it too is suggestive of Herrmann’s qualities as a whole. Mrs. Muir’s first visit to the haunted cottage is scored with music that is, as one would expect, suspenseful, but again not crassly melodramatic or spooky: indeed, much of it is rather tender (befitting a wistful supernatural romance, as the film turns out to be), if not downright yearning. It is not melodic in the usual sense (such as, say, the tune for Laura), but its curious harmonic suspensions keep us in a state of suspension. The technique is essentially the same in Herrmann’s score a few years later for The Day the Earth Stood Still, except of course for the electronic instruments giving a greater eeriness to that science fiction film. And we are not far from the moody music for investigative scenes in The Man Who Knew Too Much and Vertigo.

Herrmann worked in fewer genres than the majority of Hollywood veterans: chiefly dramas of suspense (including no less than eight about demented killers, and as many again about haunted or driven men) and more boisterous action-adventure tales, including a fantasy series beginning with The Seventh Voyage of Sinbad. But there are consistencies in his style, beginning with a special attention to orchestration. Unlike most Hollywood composers (if one may use a term he detested), Herrmann always did his own orchestrations—one reason he was less prolific than many. There are characteristic Herrmann sounds and favorite instruments, e.g., clarinets in low register, French horns (nine used for the manhunt in On Dangerous Ground), and harps (again nine solo parts in Beneath the 12-Mile Reef). But equally characteristic is his experimentation with unusual sounds: the sonic palette reduced to strings for Psycho, no strings in Journey to the Center of the Earth, the contrabassoon-like serpent in White Witch Doctor. (For The Birds, he composed no music at all, but worked closely with Hitchcock to integrate electronic renditions of bird sounds into the drama.)

He is hardly the only composer, classical or popular, to use seventh chords extensively for a mood of suspense, tension, or irresolution; but few have used such unresolved chords as such a basic principle of musical organization, as studies of Herrmann’s Hitchcock scores have demonstrated. Passages in Herrmann scores certainly hark back to classical music: the scene in Vertigo of Scottie waiting to see Judy transformed back into his lost Madeleine virtually quotes from Wagner’s Tristan und Isolde, and echoes of Ravel, Elgar, even Tchaikovsky (the love theme of North by Northwest), and others are common enough. Yet his particular choices of melodic fragments, harmonies, and orchestrations, all combined, make Herrmann one of the most readily identifiable of all soundtrack composers.

If one were to single out a Herrmann score as the composer’s supreme achievement, a major contender would be the one for Vertigo. Unforgettably passionate and yearning, sometimes night-marish and other times coolly eerie, the music drenches the San Francisco Bay Area setting in varied moods and seems the very essence of the protagonist’s obsessive love. But one could make a case for several others, including the score for Psycho, alternately conveying frantic desperation and a state of being frozen in time, or even the exuberant, witty North by Northwest. Herrmann may not have been responsible for a measurable “40 percent” of the success of Hitchcock’s films, as the composer liked to boast, but his contributions to those films’ astonishing sense of seamless artistic wholeness are incalculable. Dismissed by Hitchcock in a disagreement over the soundtrack for Torn Curtain, Herrmann found himself less in demand in a world where pop or rock scores, with their lucrative soundtrack recording possibilities, were becoming the norm. One regrets that the composer did not live into an era, signaled by John Williams’s work for Steven Spielberg and George Lucas, when the orchestral score was again in high repute; but at least he did end his career with work for major films by De Palma and Scorsese. Perhaps the most fitting tribute to the composer, beyond the books devoted to him and his work, has been Scorsese’s splendidly prominent use of Herrmann’s 1961 score for Cape Fear in his 1991 remake.

—Joseph Milicia

HOCH, Winton C.

Films as Cinematographer (Shorts directed by Fitzpatrick):

1936 St. Helena and Its Man of Destiny; Colorful Islands—Madagas-car and Seychelles; Picturesque South Africa
1937 India on Parade; Colorful Bombay; Glimpses of Java and Ceylon; Serene Siam; Glimpses of Peru; Stockholm, Pride of Sweden; Chile, Land of Charm; Land of the Incas
1938 Glimpse of Austria; Glimpses of New Brunswick; Beautiful Budapest; Rural Sweden; Czechoslovakia on Parade
1939 Rural Hungary
1944 Over the Andes

Other Films as Cinematographer (Shorts):

1935 Beautiful Banff and Lake Louise (Sharpe)
1937 Rocky Mountain Grandeur (Smith)

Films as Cinematographer (Features):

1940 Dr. Cyclops (Schoedsack) (assoc)
1941 The Reluctant Dragon (Werker) (co); Memories of Europe (Fitzpatrick—compilation); Dive Bomber (Curtiz) (co)
1942 Captains of the Clouds (Curtiz) (co)
1947 Melody Time (Geronimi) (co); Tap Roots (Marshall) (co); So Dear to My Heart (Schuster) (co); Joan of Arc (Fleming) (co); Three Godfathers (Ford) (co); Tulsa (Heisler)
1949 She Wore a Yellow Ribbon (Ford); The Sundowners (Thunder in the Dust) (Templeton)
1951 Halls of Montezuma (Milestone) (co); Bird of Paradise (Daves)
1952 The Quiet Man (Ford); The Redhead from Wyoming (Sholem)
1953 Salome (Dieterle) (co); Return to Paradise (Robson)
1955 Mister Roberts (Ford and LeRoy)
1956 The Searchers (Ford)
1957 The Missouri Traveler (Hopper); Jet Pilot (von Sternberg—produced 1970); The Young Land (Tetzlaff) (co)
1959 Darby O’Gill and the Little People (Stevenson); The Big Circus (Newman)
1960 The Lost World (Allen)
1961 Voyage to the Bottom of the Sea (Allen)
1962  Sergeants Three (J. Sturges); Five Weeks in a Balloon (Allen)
1964  Robinson Crusoe on Mars (Haskin)
1968  The Green Berets (Wayne and Kellogg)
1972  Necromancy (Gordon)

Publications

By HOCH: article—

On HOCH: articles—

Black, Hilda, on Return to Paradise in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), April 1953.
Loring, Charles, on Robinson Crusoe on Mars in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), March 1964.
Film Comment (New York), Summer 1972.
Film Dope (Nottingham), March 1982.

* * *

In the written history of film thus far, John Ford has tended to get credit for most of Winton C. Hoch’s accomplishments. Articles and books are churned out that praise Ford’s “eye for color” and “visual sense.” These attributes he undoubtedly had, but it was Hoch’s “eye for color”—and his peerless technical expertise at putting that eye at the service of Ford’s pictorial and narrative concerns—that impart such rare visual beauty to She Wore a Yellow Ribbon, The Quiet Man, and The Searchers.

Hoch never shot a film in black-and-white. His years of experience as a technician in the Technicolor laboratories gave him a unique perspective in the uses and possibilities of color cinematography. He began his career as “co-cinematographer” (actually a Technicolor consultant) on films like Dr. Cyclops, Dive Bomber, Captains of the Clouds, and Joan of Arc. Though ace cinematographers such as Bert Glennon and Sol Polito were none too happy with Hoch’s co-credit on these films, (he shared an Oscar with Joseph Valentine and William Skall for Joan of Arc), Hoch quickly gained the experience needed to become a director of photography himself.

Hoch, throughout his thirty-year career, supplied sumptuous color images to films as diverse as the exotic Bird of Paradise, the delirious Dive Bomber, and the fanciful and imaginative Five Weeks in a Balloon and Robinson Crusoe on Mars. But his five pictures for John Ford remain the backbone of his work. In Three Godfathers, She Wore a Yellow Ribbon (for which he won his only solo Oscar), The Quiet Man, Mister Roberts, and The Searchers, Hoch provided the director with some of his most elegant and striking images. Mister Roberts boasts admirable use of the CinemaScope frame. The film also contains one of Hoch’s favorite shots: the dawn-lit panorama of the fleet which appears under the film’s title. Hoch later told an interviewer that the shot was “almost hypnotic.”

The Quiet Man is among the loveliest of Ford’s films. Hoch suffuses the screen with dewy, pastel greens. Of course, nature also had its hand in that striking visual quality; virtually the entire film was shot in an overcast—usually rainy—Irish countryside.

The three westerns were shot on Ford’s favorite location—Monument Valley, a spot which has proved unusually receptive to any number of visual approaches. Monument Valley is a poignant and mythic locale; Winton Hoch—perhaps more than any other cinematographer—was responsible for capturing its unworldly beauty in Technicolor that was by turns stark, luscious, symbolic, and rousing. Hoch’s seasoned eye saw the links between the red of blood and clay and the blue of sky and cavalry uniform. Monument Valley, through Hoch’s lens, could be flag, desert, hellish void, nourishing Eden.

In the 1960s, Hoch worked often with producer Irwin Allen and proved adept at visualizing the fantastic in The Lost World, Voyage to the Bottom of the Sea, Five Weeks in a Balloon, and Allen’s TV show The Time Tunnel. Hoch also worked on the much-reviled The Green Berets but even his formidable technique was unable to convince the viewer that Georgia was Vietnam.

It’s one of the peculiarities of our age that audiences “demand” color in films today yet apparently care nothing about the quality of that color. But no matter how prosaic today’s cinematographers become, no matter what harm is wrought with the horror of “colorization,” Hoch’s brilliant use of the medium should stand forever at the art’s highest plane.

—Frank Thompson

HOFFENSTEIN, Samuel

Films as Cowriter:

1931  An American Tragedy (von Sternberg); Once a Lady (McClintic)
1932  Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (Mamoulian); Love Me Tonight (Mamoulian); Sinners in the Sun (Hall)
1933  Song of Songs (Mamoulian); White Woman (Walker)
1934  All Men Are Enemies (Fitzmaurice); Change of Heart (Blystone); The Fountain (Cromwell); Wharf Angel (Menzies and Sommes); Marie Galante (H. King); The Gay Divorcee (Sardrich)

1935   Enchanted April (Beaumont); Paris in Spring (Milestone)

1936   Desire (Borzage); Voice of Bagni Ann (Thorpe); Piccadilly Jim (Leonard)

1937   Conquest (Brown)

1938   The Great Waltz (Duvivier)

1939   Bridal Suite (Thiele)

1941   Lydia (Duvivier)

1942   The Loves of Edgar Allan Poe (Lachman); Tales of Manhattan (Duvivier)

1943   Flesh and Fantasy (Duvivier); His Butler’s Sister (Borzage); The Phantom of the Opera (Lubin)

1944   Laura (Preminger)

1946   Cluny Brown (Lubitsch); Sentimental Journey (W. Lang)

1947   Carnival in Costa Rica (Ratoff)

1948   Give My Regards to Broadway (Bacon)

Publications

By HOFFENSTEIN: books—

On HOFFENSTEIN: articles—

* * *

The poet Samuel Hoffenstein took to screenwriting during the last 14 years of his life. His musical ability and sublime gift for working ethereal elements into a story line meshed well with the lavish film productions on which he worked during the 1930s and 1940s.

Hoffenstein and the director Ruben Mamoulian began an exemplary working relationship in the highly successful Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, which starred Fredric March. Regarded as the best screen version of the Robert Louis Stevenson novel, in which a doctor creates a potion that reflects the lower elements of his soul, this early talkie explored the use of sound effects and music to heighten tension. The musical background of both writer and director, and Mamoulian’s insistence on cinematic expression, resulted in a florid masterpiece.

Love Me Tonight incorporates the best of Hoffenstein’s talents in music, song, and storytelling. Mamoulian got Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart to create the songs first, and built them around a story idea he got from Leopold Marchand. After this stage, the screenwriters were engaged to bridge these musical sequences in a smooth, uninterrupted narrative flow. “Isn’t It Romantic?” introduces the tailor (Maurice Chevalier), the Count, the Viscount and all the main characters as each, by design, picks up a thread of the song until it reaches a chateau where it is given the crowning trill by a princess (Jeanette MacDonald). It gives the effect of a love song consummated by two people who are destined to meet.

Hoffenstein and Kenneth Webb did the musical adaptation to The Gay Divorcee, the first picture to star Astaire and Rogers. They did a number of variations on “The Continental,” changing the tempo to Latin, waltz time, and jazz. It was the first song to win an Academy Award.

The Phantom of the Opera, written with Erich Taylor, tried to recreate the success of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde and brought it off in some stretches. A stubborn attention to its singing star (Nelson Eddy) detracted from a splendid array of catacombs and a stylish, masterful performance by Claude Rains as the tortured Phantom.

With His Butler’s Sister, a Deanna Durbin vehicle, Hoffenstein began working with Betty Reinhardt and they established themselves as a writing team thereafter. Laura is an elegant film noir, based on the novel and play by Vera Caspary. The drama managed to encompass the darkest sides of its players in a sophisticated setting as a hired detective (Dana Andrews) comes on the scene to investigate a young woman’s murder. Laura (Gene Tierney), believed to be the victim, reappears and becomes a suspect. Laura was relegated to the B-picture unit at Fox, where the producer Otto Preminger and the writer Jay Dratler worked on the script. Preminger got supervisor Bryan Foy’s permission to hire Hoffenstein and Reinhardt to work on it. The revised script moved the picture up to A status, and Zanuck took over the supervision. The new treatment told the story from two viewpoints. Hoffenstein practically created the character of Waldo Lydecker, the acid-tongued columnist whose narration guides the first half of the picture. The second half was told from the viewpoint of the detective, who falls in love with Laura’s portrait, a haunting image of her mystery. The scene in which the detective dozes in a chair and suddenly the woman in the portrait appears before him is one of the most poetic images in movie history. Laura was to be directed by Rouben Mamoulian, but Preminger took over the shooting. One of the most enduring accomplishments of this film is the brittle wit and almost detached romance injected throughout, in an atmosphere where, as Vincent Price puts it, “I can afford a blemish on my character, but not on my clothes.”

Leslie Halliwell describes Sentimental Journey as “Hollywood’s most incredible three-handkerchief picture; nicely made, but who’d dare write it?” It was Hoffenstein and Reinhardt who adapted the Nelia Gardner White story about an orphan adopted by a dying actress. The actress dies of a heart condition, leaving the child to look after the widowed husband. In one scene, the child makes an almost detached romance injected throughout, in an atmosphere where, as Vincent Price puts it, “I can afford a blemish on my character, but not on my clothes.”

Leslie Halliwell describes Sentimental Journey as “Hollywood’s most incredible three-handkerchief picture; nicely made, but who’d dare write it?” It was Hoffenstein and Reinhardt who adapted the Nelia Gardner White story about an orphan adopted by a dying actress. The actress dies of a heart condition, leaving the child to look after the widowed husband. In one scene, the child makes an otherworldly contact with the actress to soothe the grieving husband.

“‘It’s the weeper of all weepers,’” declared Variety. Sentimental Journey was made into hash by critics, but pictures like this defy criticism. It was a phenomenal success at the box office.

Ernst Lubitsch supervised the production of the Marlene Dietrich-Gary Cooper comedy Desire, for which Hoffenstein provided material. The film Cluny Brown was a slight but very enjoyable tale about a stuffy English family who play host to a dreamy-souled plumber’s niece. The family prides itself on being better than others and is a bit too particular about speech and manners. Hoffenstein and Reinhardt fashion them as a close-knit and ultimately endearing lot, though not the kind of folks you’d want your niece to marry. Lubitsch, in the last film he completed as director got the best out of this largely British ensemble.

—Rob Pinsel

HOFFMANN, Carl

Cinematographer. Nationality: German. Born: Neisse an der Wobert, Germany (now Nysa, Poland), 9 June 1881. Family: Son: the director and producer Kurt Hoffmann. Career: 1908—entered films as cameraman with Decla (many early films are unknown); 1928—directed first film, Der geheimnisvolle Spiegel. Died: In 1947.

Films as Cinematographer:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1913</td>
<td>Fiesko</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1914</td>
<td>In the Grip of Passion (Hamburger)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1916</td>
<td>Friedrich Werders Sending (Rippert); Homunculus (Rippert—serial); Das Tagebuch des Dr. Harr (Leni)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1917</td>
<td>Das Buch der Lasters (Rippert); Das Defizit (Neuss); Die Fremde (Rippert); Die Konigstochter von Travankore (Rippert); Das Mädel von Nebenan (Rippert); Hilda Warren and der Tod (May) (co); Die Hochzeit in Eckentrik Klab (The Wedding in the Eccentric Club) (May)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1918</td>
<td>Die Krone des Lebens (Rippert); Das Lied der Mutter (Neuss); Der Weg, der zur Verdammmis führt (Rippert)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1919</td>
<td>Der Hirt von Maria Schnee (Raffay); Johannestraum (Justitz); Der Herr der Liebe (F. Lang); Der Knabe in Blau (The Boy in Blue) (Murnau); Prinz Kuckuck (Leni); Die Frau mit den Orchidien (The Woman with the Orchid) (Rippert); Unheimliche Geschichten (Oswald); Wahmsinn (Veidt); Hara-Kiri (F. Lang); Halblut (Half Caste) (F. Lang); Die Pest in Florenz (Rippert)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1920</td>
<td>Eine Frau mit Vergangenheit (Ziener); Der Graf von Cagliostro (Schünzel); Das Haus zum Mond (Martin); Das Herz von Hochland (Oberländer); Der Januskopf (Janus-Faced) (Murnau) (co); Kurfürstendamm (Oswald); Patience (Leni); Der Reigen (Oswald); Sehnsucht (Murnau); Störtebeker (Wendt); Uriel Acosta (Wendt); Von Morgens bis Mitternachts (Martin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Nachtgestalten (Oswald); Der Erbe der Van Diemen (Ziener); Der Flug in den Tod (Ziener); Der Herr der Bestien (Wendt); Die Intrigen der Madame de la Pommeraye (Wendhausen); Lady Hamilton (Oswald); Landstrasse und Gross-stadt (Wilhelm); Der Liebling der Frauen (Wilhelm); Die Tigerin (Wendt); Die Schreckenstuck in der Menagerie (Wendt); Unter Räubern und Bestien (Wendt); Fiesko (Die Verschwörung zu Genua) (Leni)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1922</td>
<td>Dr. Mabuse, der Spieler (Dr. Mabuse, the Gambler) (F. Lang—2 parts)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1923</td>
<td>Der steinerne Reiter (Wendhausen)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1924</td>
<td>Die Andere (Lamprecht); Die Nibelungen (F. Lang—2 parts) (co)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1925</td>
<td>Blitzzug der Liebe (Guter); Die Frau mit dem schlechten Ruf (Christensen)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1926</td>
<td>Faust (Murnau)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1927</td>
<td>Die Fraugasse von Algier (Hoffman-Harnisch); Jugendrausch (Asagaroff); Die sieben Töchter der Frau Gyurkovics (Hylten-Cavallius)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1928</td>
<td>Der geheimnisvolle Spiegel (+ co-d); Looping the Loop (Robison); Ungarische Rhapsodie (Hungarian Rhapsody) (Schwarz)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1929</td>
<td>Die wunderbare Lüge der Nina Petrovna (The Wonderful Lie of Nina Petrovna) (Schwarz); Manolescu (Tourjansky)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Ein Burschenlied aus Heidelberg (Hartl); Der Tiger (Meyer); Das Flötenkonzert von Sanssouci (Ucicky); Hokuspokus (Hokuspocus) (Ucicky); Der unsterbliche Lump (Ucicky)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>Der falsche Ehemann (Guter); In Geheimdienst (Ucicky); York (Ucicky); Der Kongress tanzt (The Congress Dances) (Charell)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>Mensch ohne Namen (Ucicky); Der weisse Dämon (Gerron); Wie sag ich meinem Mann (Schünzel)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>Inge und die Millionen (Engel); Morgenrot (Ucicky); Saison in Kairo (Schünzel); Der Tunnel (Bernhardt); Walzerkrieg (Waltz; War) (Berger)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>Die Zardasfünst (Jacob); Peer Gynt (Wendhausen)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>Befrietete Hände (Schweikart); Der Florentiner Hut (Liebeneiner); Gold in New Frisco (Verhoeven); Ich bin Sebastian Ott (Forst and Becker)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>Das Fräulein von Barnhelm (Schweikart); Golowin geht durch die Stadt (Stemmel); Das Mädchen von Fanö (Schweikart)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>Alarmstufe V (Lippl)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1942</td>
<td>Symphonie eines Lebens (Bertram) (co); Zwei in einder grosser Stadt (von Collande)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1945</td>
<td>Via Mala (von Baky)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Films as Director:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>Viktoria; Die lustigen Weiber</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Ab Mitternacht</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

By HOFFMANN: article—

On HOFFMANN: articles—

Filme (Berlin), May/June 1981.

* * *
Carl Hoffmann was one of the leading German cinematographers of the 1910s and 1920s, working for such directors as Leni, May, Murnau, Oswald, Veidt, Wilhelm, Fritz Lang, and Robison. Many of the films he worked on are masterpieces of the Expressionist movement, and Hoffmann became a master of the style—the control of light and dark, the odd juxtapositioning of objects and figures, the slightly out-of-kilter or dizzying effects. There is a marvelous use of these techniques in Murnau’s Faust, a story entirely appropriate to the expressionistic mood; he is most effective in arranging the dark-light contrasts as they change around the character of Mephistopheles, and in the soaring camera when Faust is shown the world he can gain by selling his soul. But his masterpiece is perhaps in Lang’s Dr. Mabuse, the Gambler, for which Hoffmann’s camerawork is generally recognized as perfect. Besides the obvious lighting and camera effects, Hoffmann uses chiaroscuro lighting, irising effects, and double, triple, and quadruple exposures; the film is full of wonderful moments such as the count wandering through his twilit mansion with a candle-labra. Hoffmann’s later works were more conventional, and he made comedies and musicals into the Nazi period.

HONEGGER, Arthur

Films as Composer of Accompaniment Music:

1923 La Roue (Gance); Faits divers (Autant-Lara—short)
1926 Napoléon (Gance)
1927 Maldone (Grémillon) (co)

Films as Composer:

1930 La Fin du monde (Gance) (co)
1934 L’Idée (Bartosch—short); Cessez le feu (de Baroncelli) (co); Les Misérables (Bernard—2 parts); Rapt (Kirsanoff) (co); Le ROI de Camargue (de Baroncelli) (co); Angèle (Pagnol)
1935 Crime et châtiment (Chenal); L’Equipeage (Litvak) (co); Der Dämon des Himalaya (Dyrehnurfurth)
1936 Anne-Marie (Bernard) (co); Mayerling (Litvak) (co); Les Mutinés de l’Elseneur (Chenal); Nitchevo (de Baroncelli) (co); Visages de France (Kirsanoff) (co)
1937 La Citadelle du silence (L’Herbier) (co); Liberté (Kemm) (co); Mademoiselle Docteur (Salonique, nid d’espions) (Pabst) (co); Marthe Richard au service de la France (Bernard); Miarka, la fille à l’ourse (Choux) (co); Passeurs d’hommes (Jayet) (co); Regain (Pagnol)
1938 Les Bâtisseurs (Epstein) (co); Pygmalion (Asquith and Howard)
1939 Cavalcade d’amour (Bernard); Le Déserteur (Je t’attendrai) (Moguy) (co); Farinet, oder das falsche Geld (L’Or dans la montagne; Farinet, ou la fausse monnaie; Faux monnayeurs) (Haufler); Les Musiciens du ciel (Lacombe) (co)
1942 Le Capitaine Fracasce (Gance); Huit hommes dans un château (Pottier) (co); Le Journal tombe à cinq heures (Lacombe)
1943 Mermoz (Cuny); Secrets (Blanchar); Un Seul Amour (Blanchar); La Boxe de la France (Ganier-Raymond); Les Antiquités de l’Asie orientale (Membrin—short); Callisto (Marty—short) (co)
1945 Les Démens de l’aigue (Y. Allégret) (co); Un Ami viendra ce soir (Bernard)
1946 Un Revenant (A Lover’s Return) (Christian-Jaque) (+ ro)
1947 Le Village perdu (Stengel)
1950 Bourdelle (Lucot—short)
1951 Paul Claudel (Gillet—short); La Tour de Babel (Rony) (co)

Publications

By HONEGGER: books—

Incantation aux fossiles, Lausanne, 1948.
On HONEGGER: books—

On HONEGGER: articles—

Cinéma (Rome), 15 March 1951.
Cinéma (Paris), December 1951.
Colpi, Henri, in Défense et illustration de la musique dans le film, Lyon, 1964.
Film Dope (Nottingham), November 1982.

Arthur Honegger first achieved fame as a member of “Les Six,” the group of composers impulsively yoked together in 1917 by Jean Cocteau to create anti-Romantic, “quintessentially French” music. But Honegger’s pensive, serious-minded outlook found little in common with the nose-thumbing frivolities of Poulenc and Milhaud, and he soon seceded from the group. In his film music, too, he always responded most intensely to subjects of a tragic or exalted stamp. Faced with lighter material his work, though never less than craftsmanlike, could become what he once dismissively described all film scores as, “music that one forgets.” At its best, though, Honegger’s film music is powerful, imaginatively scored, and anything but forgettable.

Like so much of the music composed for the silent cinema, Honegger’s earliest film scores have either been lost or survive only in fragmentary form. Of his first score, for Abel Gance’s railway melodrama La Roue, only the overture still exists. As well as providing—with its motoric rhythms—an early example of Honegger’s lifelong fascination with trains (his famous symphonic poem Pacific 231 would follow a year later), it shows him responding to the pulsating intensity of Gance’s conception. His score for Gance’s grandiose epic Napoléon, survives as no more than a few episodes in the composer’s autograph; Honegger himself stormed out before the premiere, infuriated by the director’s obsessive last-minute reediting. But one passage, depicting the swelling fervor of the revolution, anticipates a polyphonic device he favored in his symphonies: over a low, brooding theme on brass and low woodwind, two revolutionary sound-tracks. Their emergence on compact disc offers the opportunity to reevaluate his contribution to the genre, and to do it belated justice.

—Philip Kemp

HORNBECK, William

On HONEGGER: books—

On HONEGGER: articles—

Cinéma (Rome), 15 March 1951.
Cinéma (Paris), December 1951.
Colpi, Henri, in Défense et illustration de la musique dans le film, Lyon, 1964.
Film Dope (Nottingham), November 1982.

Arthur Honegger first achieved fame as a member of “Les Six,” the group of composers impulsively yoked together in 1917 by Jean Cocteau to create anti-Romantic, “quintessentially French” music. But Honegger’s pensive, serious-minded outlook found little in common with the nose-thumbing frivolities of Poulenc and Milhaud, and he soon seceded from the group. In his film music, too, he always responded most intensely to subjects of a tragic or exalted stamp. Faced with lighter material his work, though never less than craftsmanlike, could become what he once dismissively described all film scores as, “music that one forgets.” At its best, though, Honegger’s film music is powerful, imaginatively scored, and anything but forgettable.

Like so much of the music composed for the silent cinema, Honegger’s earliest film scores have either been lost or survive only in fragmentary form. Of his first score, for Abel Gance’s railway melodrama La Roue, only the overture still exists. As well as providing—with its motoric rhythms—an early example of Honegger’s lifelong fascination with trains (his famous symphonic poem Pacific 231 would follow a year later), it shows him responding to the pulsating intensity of Gance’s conception. His score for Gance’s grandiose epic Napoléon, survives as no more than a few episodes in the composer’s autograph; Honegger himself stormed out before the premiere, infuriated by the director’s obsessive last-minute reediting. But one passage, depicting the swelling fervor of the revolution, anticipates a polyphonic device he favored in his symphonies: over a low, brooding theme on brass and low woodwind, two revolutionary sound-tracks. Their emergence on compact disc offers the opportunity to reevaluate his contribution to the genre, and to do it belated justice.

—Philip Kemp

HORNBECK, William

1966, vice-president, Universal; 1976—retired. Award: Academy Award for A Place in the Sun, 1951. Died: In Ventura, California, 11 October 1983.

Films as Assistant Editor:

1921  A Small Town Idol (Kent); Molly O’ (Jones)
1922  The Crossroads of New York (For Love or Money) (Jones); Susanna (Jones)
1923  The Shriek of Araby (Jones)

Films as Editor (Features):

1921  Home Talent (Sennett) (co)
1923  The Extra Girl (Jones)
1927  His First Flame (Edwards)
1928  The Good-Bye Kiss (Sennett)
1930  Midnight Daddies (Sennett)
1932  Hypnotized (Sennett) (co)
1935  The Scarlet Pimpernel (Young)
1941  Lydia (Duviivier)
1946  It’s a Wonderful Life (Capra)
1947  Singapore (Brahm); Magic Town (Wellman) (montages)
1948  State of the Union (The World and His Wife) (Capra)
1949  The Heiress (Wyler)
1950  Riding High (Capra)
1951  A Place in the Sun (Stevens); Something to Live For (Stevens) (co)
1953  Shane (Stevens) (co); Act of Love (Litvak)
1954  The Barefoot Contessa (Mankiewicz)
1955  The Girl Rush (Pirosh)
1956  Giant (Stevens)
1957  The Quiet American (Mankiewicz)
1958  I Want to Live! (Wise)
1959  A Hole in the Head (Capra)

Films as Editor (Shorts):

1926  Saturday Afternoon (Edwards); Soldier Man (Edwards)
1928  Run, Girl, Run (Goulding); Love at First Flight (Cline); The Swim Princess (Goulding); Smith’s Army Life (Goulding); Smith’s Holiday (Goulding); Smith’s Farm Days (Whitman); Smith’s Restaurant (Whitman); His Unlucky Night (Edwards); Taxi for Two (Lord); Caught in the Kitchen (Whitman); A Dumb Waiter (Edwards); Motor Boat Mamas (Edwards); A Taxi Scandal (Lord); Hubby’s Latest Alibi (Whitman); A Jim Jam Janitor (Edwards); The Burglar (Whitman); Hubby’s Week End Trip (Edwards); Taxi Beauties (Lord); His New Stenographer (Whitman); Clanked on the Corner (Edwards); Smith’s Boy’s Birthday (Whitman)
1929  Uncle Tom (Whitman); Taxi Spooks (Lord); Button My Back (Whitman); Ladies Must Eat (Edwards); Foolish Husbands (Whitman); The Rodeo (Goulding); Matchmaking Mamma (Edwards); Taxi Dolls (Lord); Pink Pajamas (Whitman); The Night Watchman’s Mistake (Edwards); The New Aunt (Rodney); The Old Barn (Sennett); A Close Shave (Edwards); Motoring Mamas (Whitman); Don’t Get Jealous (Whitman); Caught in a Taxi (Lord)
1931  I Surrender Dear (Sennett); One More Chance (Sennett)
1932  Dream House (Lord); Billboard Girl (Pearce)

Films as Supervisor:

1935  Sanders of the River (Z. Korda); Moscow Nights (I Stand Condemned) (Asquith); The Ghost Goes West (Clair); Things to Come (Menzies)
1936  Forget-Me-Not (Forever Yours) (Z. Korda); The Man Who Could Work Miracles (Mendes); Rembrandt (A. Korda); Men Are Not Gods (Saville)
1937  Dark Journey (Saville); Elephant Boy (Flaherty and Z. Korda); Storm in a Teacup (Saville and Dalrymple); Knight without Armour (Feyder); The Return of the Scarlet Pimpernel (Schwarz); Paradise for Two (The Gaiety Girls) (Freeland); Over the Moon (Freeland); 21 Days (The First and the Last; 21 Days Together) (Dean)
1938  The Divorce of Lady X (Whelan); The Drum (Drums) (Z. Korda); Prison without Bars (Hurst)
1939  Q Planes (Clouds over Europe) (Whelan); The Revel Son (Brunel); The Spy in Black (U-Boat 29) (Powell); The Four Feathers (Z. Korda); The Lion Has Wings (Powell, Hurst, and Brunel)
1940  The Thief of Bagdad (Berger, Whelan, and Powell)
1941  That Hamilton Woman (Lady Hamilton) (A. Korda)
1942  Jungle Book (Rudyard Kipling’s Jungle Book) (Z. Korda); Prelude to War (Capra); The Nazis Strike (Capra and Litvak—short in Why We Fight series)
1943  Divide and Conquer (Capra and Litvak—short in Why We Fight series); The Battle of Britain (Veiller—short in Why We Fight series); Know Your Ally: Britain (Veiller); Tunisian Victory (Capra and R. Boulting)
1944  The Battle of Russia (Litvak) (co); The Battle of China (Capra and Litvak) (co)
1945  War Comes to America (Litvak); Two Down and One to Go! (Capra—short)

Film as Editorial Consultant:

1959  Suddenly, Last Summer (Mankiewicz)

Publications

By HORNBECK: articles—

The Velvet Light Trap (Madison, Wisconsin), Summer 1983.

American Cinematographer (Hollywood), Summer-Fall 1983.
On HORNBECK: articles—

Film Comment (New York), March-April 1977.
Film Dope (Nottingham), November 1982.
Obituary in Variety (New York), 19 October 1983.

Frank Capra called William Hornbeck ‘‘the greatest film editor in the history of motion pictures,’’ and in a 1977 poll 100 of his peers named Hornbeck the best editor in the film industry, two great compliments for a man relatively unknown to most filmgoers. In a tribute to Hornbeck after his death, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences distributed a program note that said, ‘‘If William Hornbeck had been anything other than a film editor, he would have been proclaimed by the world at large to be what his associates always knew him to be—a true Hollywood legend.’’ Although the general public is not familiar with his name and few film books refer to him, he was unquestionably one of the true pioneers of his chosen field of film editing.

Hornbeck’s career is remarkable for its influence and longevity. He began at the bottom as a winder of film when hardly more than a child, and worked up the ladder of the business slowly and thoroughly, learning every phase of film cutting. He became the head of the Mack Sennett department before he was even 20 years old, cutting 52 comedies a year. In the 1930s he was head editor for Alexander Korda in England, in charge of such famous films as The Scarlet Pimpernel, The Ghost Goes West, That Hamilton Woman, and The Thief of Bagdad. (His influence in those years comes not only from these classic films, but also from his teaching such men as David Lean the art of film cutting.) In the 1940s he assumed the responsibility for editing the famed Second World War Why We Fight series, and followed that decade with an Oscar-winning career editing such film classics as A Place in the Sun, Giant, The Heiress, It’s a Wonderful Life, The Barefoot Contessa, Shane, and I Want to Live! His final years were spent as an executive at Universal Pictures in the 1960s, where he remained until his retirement in 1976. Although he did not take screen credit, he polished and completed many successful Universal films during that period, among them Topaz, American Graffiti, and Earthquake.

Taken as a whole, Hornbeck’s career is like a miniature history of the motion picture. His remarkable range of experience on shorts, documentaries, and features of all types turned him into a consummate craftsman—a man who understood film and its communicative process perhaps better than anyone else.

The Hornbeck style was eclectic and flexible. (‘‘If you had rules for editing,’’ he said, ‘‘you could put it in a book and anyone could become an editor.’’) His editing technique is simple: it serves its story, and the intent of the director, according to what is most appropriate; it is superbly crafted; it is humanistic in tone. Two films Hornbeck cut for George Stevens, Shane and A Place in the Sun, illustrate these tendencies. In two films made within a short time span, Hornbeck used two entirely different styles. In Shane, during a lengthy fight in a saloon, the story presents the fascinated young boy (Brandon DeWilde) watching his hero, Alan Ladd, defeat the badmen. The action of the fight is cut so that the audience is returned several times to the sight of DeWilde watching the fight. Since the response of the boy to the gunfighter hero is one of the basic thematic concerns of the film, rapidly cutting him into the dynamic action of the saloon fight maintains the integrity of the fight but also grounds it firmly in the point of view of the child. Later in the same film, DeWilde ‘‘participates’’ in the final gunfight by warning the hero at a crucial moment. Hornbeck’s cutting on sound (the cry of the boy’s warning) again effectively illustrates the point of the boy’s desire not only to watch the hero, but to be the hero. A hard punch on a villain’s jaw by Alan Ladd is followed by a cut to the boy crunching down hard on a candy stick. The crack of the candy replaces the sound of the jaw punch, and again unites action to thematic purpose. (These masterful examples of Hornbeck’s work were chosen by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences to illustrate the technique of editing at one of their annual Oscar shows.)

On the other hand, Hornbeck’s Oscar-winning film A Place in the Sun shows a totally different approach, one appropriate to that film’s romantic and passionate nature. Instead of rapid cutting, Hornbeck uses slow dissolves, in which the intense close-ups of the very beautiful Elizabeth Taylor and Montgomery Clift attempt to express their love for one another. Eerie cries of loons overlap many images, as Hornbeck helped Stevens create a mannered but exquisitely emotional viewing experience.

A true pioneer and a major international influence on film editing, Hornbeck and his work should be remembered for its quality and influence, as well as for his contribution in terms of training a whole generation of young editors in both England and America.

—Jeanine Basinger

HORNER, Harry

Art Director. Nationality: American. Born: Holicz, Austria-Hungary, 24 July 1910; emigrated to the United States, 1935; naturalized, 1938. Education: Studied architecture, University of Vienna, graduated 1934; also studied at Max Reinhardt’s Seminary for Drama and Stage Direction, Vienna; studied costume design under Professor Roller. Military Service: Served in the United States Army Air Force, 1942–44. Family: Married 1) Betty Pfaelzer, 1938 (died 1950); 2) Joan Fraenkel, 1952; sons: James, Christopher, and Antony. Career: Actor and designer for Reinhardt’s Viennese company, 1934–35, and with Reinhardt in the United States, then art director, and film director, in Hollywood; also stage designer in Europe and the United States; also TV designer, and director of Reader’s Digest series, and episodes of other series. Awards: Academy Awards for The Heiress, 1949; The Hustler, 1961. Died: 7 December 1994.

Films as Art Director:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film</th>
<th>Role</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>Our Town (Wood)</td>
<td>(co)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>The Little Foxes (Wyler)</td>
<td>(co)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>Tarzan Triumphs (Thiele); Stage Door Canteen (Borzage)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
1944 Winged Victory (Cukor) (co); A Double Life (Cukor)
1949 The Heiress (Wyler)
1950 Tarzan and the Slave Girl (Sholeim); Outrage (Lupino); Born Yesterday (Cukor)
1951 He Ran All the Way (Berry)
1952 Androcles and the Lion (Erskine)
1958 Separate Tables (Delbert Mann) (+ 2nd unit d)
1959 The Wonderful Country (Parrish)
1961 The Hustler (Rossen)
1964 The Luck of Ginger Coffey (Kershner)
1969 They Shoot Horses, Don’t They? (Pollack)
1971 Who Is Harry Kellerman and Why Is He Saying Those Terrible Things about Me? (Grobard)
1972 Up the Sandbox (Kershner)
1975 The Black Bird (Gilet)
1976 Harry and Walter Go to New York (Rydell)
1977 Audrey Rose (Wise)
1978 The Driver (Hill); Moment by Moment (Wagner)
1979 Strangers: The Story of a Mother and Daughter (Katselas)
1980 The Jazz Singer (Fleischer and Furie)

Films as Director:

1952 Red Planet Mars; The Marrying Kind (Cukor) (2nd unit); Beware My Lovely 1953 Vicki; New Faces
1954 A Life in the Balance
1956 Man from Del Rio; The Wild Party

Publications

By HORNER: articles—

On HORNER: articles—

Film Dope (Nottingham), November 1982.
Obituary in EPD Film (Frankfurt), February 1995.

In 1935 Horner emigrated to the U.S., and became a leading designer of opera productions and Broadway plays. When he finally began his film career he was to work with some of Hollywood’s very best directors including William Wyler and George Cukor.

In his first film, Our Town, Horner apprenticed under the tutelage of that great Hollywood production designer William Cameron Menzies (best known to the American public for his extensive contributions to the movie Gone with the Wind). Horner created drawing after drawing illustrating the individual and detailed lives of the townspeople. It became a living Norman Rockwell illustration, an appropriate vision for this folksy Thornton Wilder tale of smalltown life.

Horner began his work on a picture by doing extensive research, concentrating on spatial necessities and those objects essential to the plot. Constant drawings and plans were made before the actual blueprints for construction will be drawn. Horner provided his director and cameraman with continuity sketches of the entire picture from start to finish, from the very first close-up to that last distant long shot. These were used as a visual script for the picture by the cameraman and director. Throughout shooting Horner stayed on the set to make sure the lighting of spaces and the shooting of the performances were harmoniously integrated with his designs.

Historical films such as The Heiress required intensive investigation of the different periods involved and for this picture Horner accumulated three notebooks full of photographs filled with historically accurate details. He used these only as a starting point. His own designs were created specifically to highlight certain dramatic elements present in the story. Even such contemporary films as The Hustler demanded hours of Horner’s research. He traveled from poolroom to poolroom searching for just the right touches for the story, and even toured college co-ed apartments to get a sense of how Eddie’s girlfriend might live. As a result, his sets gave the feel of real people, their habits and ways of life. Horner gave characters an unstated third dimension.

Horner expressed great interest in character development and uses this as a pre-condition in his design. In The Little Foxes, the sets were designed around Regina, a dominant and demonic character filled with greed and a lust for material pleasures. At one point she stands in front of a piece of furniture that actually gives her devil’s horns! That this was indeed Horner’s intent can be proved by referring to his still intact continuity sketches.

In The Heiress, the house shows both Dr. Sloper’s dominance over his daughter, Catherine, and his bitter grief over his wife’s death. Sloper was portrayed both as master of the house, in a position of kingly power, and as a dark figure shown in the shadows of his gothic study. Catherine was an awkward helpless prisoner. Horner vividly illustrates this when he encloses her in the cagelike staircase. Latticed wallpaper further reinforced the image. As her character later gained strength, her manner of presentation changes. Horner surrounded Morris, Catherine’s fortune-hunting suitor, with seductive details—highly polished mahogany, shimmering crystal, gleaming silverware. This represented Morris’s elusive dreams of material wealth.

In The Heiress Horner gave such a clear explanation of the house’s complex spaces (one even perceived a sense of four enclosing walls if one pays attention from scene to scene) that it can easily be reconstructed.

Horner expressed moments of emotional intensity with an expressionist style filled with high contrast lighting and extreme angles.
This is true in The Heiress and many of his other films. In A Double Life he used this style to indicate the character’s growing madness.

Horner worked on several comedies. His exaggerated, out-of-scale Baroque hotel room in Born Yesterday showed the bad taste in a humorous manner as the gangster awkwardly tries to express his wealth and power. Who Is Harry Kellerman and Why Is He Saying Those Terrible Things About Me? is a black comedy, and Horner’s use of cold, impersonal interiors express the anti-hero’s sense of loneliness and alienation. Horner’s use of the outrageous and surreal gives the film an existential absurdity.

Horner approached his films as a visual author, retelling a story through its images. He used every tool at his command, from studious researching of the past to personal odysseys into aspects of contemporary life. Horner applied the knowledge and techniques found in centuries of art history, the technical virtuosity of an architectural background, and his own insights on the human condition. Horner’s finest films revealed the motion picture as the powerful art form it can be.

—Edith C. Lee

HOUSEMAN, John

Films as Producer:

1945  First Tuesday in November (Berry—short); The Unseen (Allen) (assoc); The Blue Dahlia (Marshall)

1946  Miss Susie Slagle’s (Berry) (assoc)

1948  Letter from an Unknown Woman (Ophüls); They Live by Night (The Twisted Road; Your Red Wagon) (Ray)

1950  The Company She Keeps (Cromwell)

1951  On Dangerous Ground (Ray)

1952  Holiday for Sinners (Mayer); The Bad and the Beautiful (Minnelli)

1953  Julius Caesar (Mankiewicz); Executive Suite (Wise); Her Twelve Men (Leonard)

1955  Moonfleet (F. Lang); The Cobweb (Minnelli)

1956  Last for Life (Minnelli)

1962  All Fall Down (Frankenheimer); Two Weeks in Another Town (Minnelli)

1963  In the Cool of the Day (Stevens)

1964  Voyage to America (Jackson—short) (+ sc)

1966  This Property Is Condemned (Pollack)

1980  Gideon’s Trumpet (Collins) (exec, + ro)

1983  Choices of the Heart (Sargent) (co-exec)

Films as Actor:

1963  Seven Days in May (Frankenheimer)

1973  The Paper Chase (Bridges)
In terms of versatility, scope, and intensity of achievement, John Houseman’s was one of the most extraordinary careers in the history of American drama. Theatrical director and producer in New York (and later in Los Angeles and Stratford, Connecticut), motion picture and television producer in Hollywood, he gained popular fame near the end of his life as an actor in films, TV, and commercials and as the author of a best-selling three-volume autobiography comparable in its irony and cultural awareness to The Education of Henry Adams. Infused into these various intersecting activities were qualities of resolute zest and magisterial charm.

His French father died when he was 15. After leaving school, he found his mother’s finances in such poor shape that he turned down a prestigious scholarship at Trinity College, Oxford. He was then shipped off to Argentina, where a family friend trained him in grain marketing. He pursued this in England and the U.S. for eight years with increasing success, then was wiped out by the 1929 stock market crash. Responding to his own yearning for creative outlets, Houseman wrote and translated plays, but had indifferent luck until Virgil Thomson offered him in 1934 the chance to direct an experimental Gertrude Stein opera for which he had written the music, Four Saints in Three Acts. Houseman used black actors in the production, and when a Federal Theater for blacks was proposed as a WPA relief project, he was named head of it. By 1937, he and Orson Welles were running something called the Mercury Theatre, whose controversial and popular productions ranged from a modern-dress version of Julius Caesar to the shocking newscast-style radio version of H. G. Wells’ The War of the Worlds, which caused thousands of listeners to believe Martians had landed.

This scandal carried both of them to Hollywood. After various false starts at RKO, Welles persuaded Houseman to work with Herman Mankiewicz in developing a script which became Citizen Kane—a writing-editing feat that was long one of the best-kept secrets in Hollywood history. After Pearl Harbor, Houseman resigned from David O. Selznick Productions to work for the U.S. government as head of radio for the Office of War Information in New York City. Toward the end of the war he produced his first film, also for the OWI, a documentary on the voting booth called First Tuesday in November.

Soon after, he was back on the west coast, switching to the opposite side of the spectrum with a Raymond Chandler film noir, The Blue Dahlia. In 1952 he was able to carry off a movie about movie making; The Bad and the Beautiful won several Oscars and established him at MGM and in Hollywood as someone who knew the ropes. In this film, as in his other collaborations with Vincente Minnelli (The Cobweb, Lust for Life, Two Weeks in Another Town), Houseman’s taste and toughness were dominant. The black-and-white Julius Caesar drew on his Shakespearean expertise in a way Joseph Mankiewicz could not match. Executive Suite, one of the rare films actually dealing with American business practices, prompted an assessment by a Christian Science Monitor interviewer, which Houseman accepted, that he was deeply interested in the uses of power—in business, in Roman history, and in Hollywood.

He was unable to apply any of the levers of power at Metro, however, after the departure of former writer Dore Schary as head of production. Instead, Houseman turned his talents to television, producing (at CBS) a series called The Seven Lively Arts based on the Gilbert Seldes book and several 90-minute shows on that last great effort of TV drama, Playhouse 90.
Then, as before, he went back to the stage, as director or producer, on Broadway and in regional centers. In bewildering succession—and sometimes simultaneously—he ran the Shakespeare Festival in Connecticut and a professional theater at UCLA, and directed the first actors’ training program at the Juilliard School (1967–76), inventing the Acting Company for its graduates, which continues to tour the country.

Houseman also entered upon his final career as an actor, notably as the crusty law professor in The Paper Chase, a movie and a TV series. The role was not unlike the man, some associates felt, but perhaps this was his prerogative as a master of several languages, a wide-ranging reader and traveler, and one of the most cultivated men ever to bear the title of producer in Hollywood.

—Richard Dyer MacCann

HOWARD, Sidney

Writer. Nationality: American. Born: Sidney Coe Howard in Oakland, California, 26 June 1891. Education: Attended the University of California, Berkeley, B.A. 1915; studied with George Pierce Baker at Harvard University, Cambridge, Massachusetts, 1915–16. Family: Married 1) the actress Clare Jenness Eames, 1922 (divorced 1930); one daughter; 2) Leopoldine Blaine Damrosch, 1931; one daughter and one son. Career: Served in the American Ambulance Corps, and later in the Army Air Corps during World War I: Captain; 1919–22—member of the editorial staff, and literary editor, 1922, Life magazine; 1921—first play produced, Swords; 1929—first film as writer, Bulldog Drummond; 1938—founder, with S.N. Behrman and others, Playwrights Company. Awards: Pulitzer Prize for play They Knew What They Wanted, 1925; Academy Award for Gone with the Wind, 1939. Member: American Academy. Died: In a farm accident, in Tyringham, Massachusetts, 23 August 1939.

Films as Writer:

1929 Bulldog Drummond (Jones) (co); Condemned (Ruggles)
1930 Raffles (D’Arrast); One Heavenly Night (Fitzmaurice); A Lady to Love (Sjöström) (co)
1931 Arrowsmith (Ford) (co)
1932 The Greeks Had a Word for Them (L. Sherman) (co)
1936 Dodsworth (Wyler)
1939 Gone with the Wind (Fleming)
1940 Raffles (Wood) (co)

Publications

By HOWARD: plays—

Swords, New York, 1921.
Casanova, New York, 1924.
They Knew What They Wanted, New York, 1925.
Lucky Sam McCarver, New York, 1926.
Ned McCobb’s Daughter, New York, 1926.
The Silver Cord, New York, 1927.
Olympia, New York, 1928.
The Late Christopher Bean, New York, 1933.
Alien Corn, New York, 1933.
Dodsworth, New York, 1934.
Yellow Jack, New York, 1934.
One, Two, Three, New York, 1952.
Lute Song, Chicago, 1955.

By HOWARD: other books—

The Labor Spy (nonfiction), New York, 1921.
With John Hearley, Professional Patriots (nonfiction), New York, 1927.
Gone with the Wind (screenplay), edited by Richard Harwell, New York, 1980.
By HOWARD: article—

“‘The Story Gets a Treatment.’” in We Make the Movies, edited by Nancy Naumburg, New York, 1937.

On HOWARD: book—

On HOWARD: articles—

Theatre Arts (New York), February 1957.

* * *

If Sidney Howard had written only the screenplay for Gone with the Wind, he would have earned his place in film history. But in addition to writing America’s most popular movie, Howard’s talents helped bring prestige and dignity to some of the best films of the 1930s.

Born in California in 1891, Sidney Howard began writing at the age of nineteen when he was confined in a Swiss sanatorium for tuberculosis. He graduated from Berkeley, studied English literature at Harvard, served as an ambulance driver and flyer during the World War I, then went to work as a journalist, contributing to such magazines as Colliers, The New Republic, and Hearst’s International. His war experience had made a realist of Howard. This realism, combined with a strong social conscience, was reflected in his articles and eventually in his plays. In the mid-1920s, he gained national prominence as a dramatist with a series of Broadway successes, including the Pulitzer Prize-winning They Knew What They Wanted.

When the movies began to talk in 1927, Hollywood’s producers combed New York for playwrights interested in writing for the screen. Lured by the promise of riches and the challenge of a new form, Howard was one of the first wave of notable New York writers to head west. He went to work for Samuel Goldwyn, Hollywood’s most illustrious independent producer, who appreciated Howard’s refined sensibilities.

Howard recognized that early sound films had suffered from too much talk. He acknowledged the power of silence and respected the impact of visual movement. Unlike many screenwriters, who are married to their words, Howard believed that a screenwriter should provide the director with “rhythms and ideas.”

When Howard went to work for Goldwyn the producer’s top star was Ronald Colman. Goldwyn was eager to maintain Colman’s box office power and assigned Howard to the actor’s first three talking pictures, Bulldog Drummond, Condemned, and Raffles. Colman’s exquisite voice and Howard’s sophisticated dialogue turned out to be a winning team, both at the box office and with the critics. Bulldog Drummond was so successful that Goldwyn produced a sequel, Bulldog Drummond Strikes Back, and Paramount eventually serialized it in the late 1930s featuring John Barrymore as the highly articulate adventurer. Raffles, the gentleman thief, proved durable as well; Goldwyn remade the film in 1940 with David Niven. Howard is credited along with fellow playwright John Van Druten. In these three distinctly different scripts, Howard proved his versatility. He could provide an abundance of witty, staccato dialogue when it was called for and could be equally economical when action was required.

Howard’s comedic adaptations of Louis Bromfield’s One Heav- enly Night, which blended light satire with musical numbers, and Zoé Akins’s racy The Greeks Had a Word for It, retitled The Greeks Had a Word for Them, were less successful. Although his dialogue was aptly sophisticated, his strength lay in more realistic material.

Of the Goldwyn films, Howard’s adaptations of two Sinclair Lewis novels, Arrowsmith and Dodsworth, were his most notable works. Arrowsmith was hailed as one of the decade’s first serious message pictures, named by the New York Times as one of the “Ten Best of 1931,” and garnered four Academy Award nominations, including Best Picture and Best Screen Adaptation. Dodsworth, which he had successfully dramatized for the New York theater two years before, also remains highly regarded. It received eight Academy nominations; again, the screenwriter was honored. The following year Howard attempted a third Lewis property, It Can’t Happen Here (1935). The political content, however, was unacceptable to Hollywood’s censors; it went unproduced.

Howard wrote only two scripts which were not produced by Goldwyn. In 1930, he adapted his own play They Knew What They Wanted for MGM. Called A Lady to Love, it was the second screen version of his play. The silent film, retitled Secret Hour, starred vamp Pola Negri and Jean Hersholt as the lovable Italian vintner. In 1940, RKO made a third attempt to recreate the impact of Howard’s play, but was unable to retain its honest portrayal of adultery under the prevailing censorship.

Howard’s last screenplay, Gone with the Wind, was an outstanding achievement. His reduction of Margaret Mitchell’s 1,037 page epic of the old South to a manageable screenplay was a herculean task. His initial submission, though still over long, was faithful to the spirit of the book despite its extensive condensation of material. When Howard refused to leave New England to continue rewrites, producer David O. Selzniick replaced him with a series of writers including Ben Hecht, John Van Druten, F. Scott Fitzgerald, Oliver H.P. Garrett, and Charles MacArthur. Despite the multiplicity of contributors, the final script was remarkably close to Howard’s 1936 draft, resulting in a single credit and a posthumously awarded Oscar for Best Screenplay. Howard had died tragically a few months before the awards at the age of forty-eight, crushed by a tractor on his farm in Tyringham, Massachusetts.

In the published preface to his play Lucky Sam McCarver Howard wrote, “The novelists prefers writing to anything; the dramatist prefers acting to anything. The drama does not spring from a literary impulse but from a love of the brave, ephemeral, beautiful art of acting.” Howard’s respect for talking pictures combined with his sincere love of acting unquestionably advanced the art of filmmaking in the 1930s.

—Joanne L. Yeck
HOWE, James Wong

Films as Assistant Cameraman:

1919   Puppy Love (Neill); For Better, For Worse (W. De Mille); Told in the Hills (Melford); Male and Female (C. De Mille)
1921   Everything for Sale (O'Connor)
1922   The Woman Who Walked Alone (Melford); The Sired Call (Willat); Burning Sands (The Dweller in the Desert) (Melford)

Films as Cinematographer:

1922   Drums of Fate (Drums of Destiny) (Maigne)
1923   The Trail of the Lonesome Pine (Maigne); To the Last Man (Fleming)(co); The Woman with Four Faces (Brenon); The Spanish Dancer (Brenon); The Call of the Canyon (Fleming)
1924   The Breaking Point (Brenon); The Side Show of Life (Brenon); The Alaskan (Brenon); Peter Pan (Brenon)
1925   The Charmer (Olcott); Not So Long Ago (Olcott); The King on Main Street (Bell); The Best People (Olcott)
1926   The Song and Dance Man (Brenon); Sea Horses (Dwan); Padlocked (Dwan); Mantrap (Fleming)
1927   The Rough Riders (The Trumpet Call) (Fleming); Sorrell and Son (Brenon)
1928   Laugh, Clown, Laugh (Brenon); The Perfect Crime (Glennon); Four Walls (Nigh)
1929   Desert Nights (Thirst) (Nigh)
1930   Today (Nigh); The Criminal Code (Hawks)(co)
1931   Transatlantic (Howard); The Spider (McKenna and Menzies); The Yellow Ticket (The Yellow Passport) (Walsh); Surrender (Howard); Dance Team (Lanfield)
1932   After Tomorrow (Borzage); Amateur Daddy (Blystone); Man about Town (Dillon); Chanda the Magician (Varnel and Mensies)
1933   Hello, Sister! (Walking down Broadway) (von Stromheim and Walsh); The Power and the Glory (Power and Glory) (Howard); Beauty for Sale (Beauty) (Boleslawsky)
1934   The Show-Off (Reiser); Viva Villa! (Conway)(co); Manhattan Melodrama (Van Dyke); Hollywood Party (Dwan and others); TheThin Man (Van Dyke); Stamboul Quest (Wood); Have a Heart (Butler); Biography of a Bachelor Girl (Griffith)
1935   The Night Is Young (Murphy); Mark of the Vampire (Brown- ning); The Flame Within (Goulding); O'Shaughnessy's Boy (Boleslawsky); Whipsaw (Wood)

1936   Three Live Ghosts (Humberstone)(co); Fire over England (Howard)
1937   Farewell Again (Troopship) (Whelan); Under the Red Robe (Sjöström)(co); The Prisoner of Zenda (Cromwell)
1938   The Adventures of Tom Sawyer (Taurog)(co); Algiers (Cromwell); Comet over Broadway (Berkeley)
1939   They Made Me a Criminal (Berkeley); The Oklahoma Kid (Bacon); Daughters Courageous (Curtiz); Dust Be My Destiny (Seller); On Your Toes (Enright)
1940   Abe Lincoln in Illinois (Spirit of the People) (Cromwell); The Story of Dr. Ehrlich's Magic Bullet (Dr. Ehrlich's Magic Bullet) (Dieterle); Saturday's Children (V. Sherman); Torrid Zone (Keighley); City for Conquest (Litvak) (co); A Dispatch from Reuters (This Man Reuter) (Dieterle)
1941   The Strawberry Blonde (Walsh); Shining Victory (Rapper); Navy Blues (Bacon)(co); Out of the Fog (Litvak)
1942   Kings Row (Wood); Yankee Doodle Dandy (Curtiz)
1943   Air Force (Hawks); Hangmen Also Die! (F. Lang); The Hard Way (V. Sherman); The North Star (Milestone)
1944   Passage to Marseille (Curtiz)
1945   Objective Burma! (Walsh); Counter-Attack (One Against Seven) (Z. Korda); Confidential Agent (Shumlin); Danger Signal (Florey)
1946   My Reputation (Bernhardt)
1947   Nora Prentiss (V. Sherman); Pursued (Walsh); Body and Soul (Rosen)
1948   Mr. Blandings Builds His Dream House (Potter); The Time of Your Life (Potter)
1950   The Baron of Arizona (Fuller); The Eagle and the Hawk (Foster); Tripoli (Price)
1951   The Brave Bulls (Rosen)(co); He Ran All the Way (Berry); Behave Yourself (Beck); The Lady Says ‘No’ (Ross)
1952   The Fighter (Kline); Come Back, Little Sheba (Daniel Mann)
1953   Main Street to Broadway (Garnett); Jennifer (Newton)
1955   The Rose Tattoo (Daniel Mann); Picnic (Logan)
1956   Death of a Scoundrel (Martin)
1957   Drango (Bartlett and Bricken); The Sweet Smell of Success (Mackendrick)
1958   The Old Man and the Sea (J. Sturges); Bell, Book, and Candle (Quine)
1959   The Last Angry Man (Daniel Mann); The Story on Page One (Odets)
1960   Tess of the Storm Country (Guilfoyle); Song without End (C. Vidor and Cukor)(co)
1962   Hud (Ritt)
1964   The Outrage (Ritt)
1965   The Glory Guys (Laven)
1966   This Property Is Condemned (Pollack); Seconds (Frankenheimer); Hombre (Ritt)
1968   The Heart Is a Lonely Hunter (Miller)
1969   Blood Kin (The Last of the Mobile Hot-Shots) (Lumet); The Molly Maguires (Ritt)
1974   Funny Lady (Ross)

Films as Director:

1954   Go Man Go
1955   Dong Kingman (The World of Dong Kingman) (+ pr—short)
1958   Invisible Avenger (co)
James Wong Howe

Publications

By HOWE: articles—

‘‘Reactions on Making His First Color Productions,’’ in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), October 1937.
‘‘The Cameraman Talks Back,’’ in Screen Writer, October 1945.
Sight and Sound (London), Autumn 1967.
On Funny Lady, in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), September 1976.

On HOWE: book—

Rainsberger, Todd, James Wong Howe, Cinematographer, San Diego, California, 1981.

On HOWE: articles—

Crichton, K., in Collier’s (New York), 12 June 1937.
Lightman, Herb A., on The Outrage in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), April 1964.
eyman, W.S., in Take One (Montreal), March-April 1972.
Film Comment (New York), Summer 1972.
Lawrence, R., in Today’s Filmmaker (Hempstead, New York), no. 4, 1974.
Gillet, John, in Sight and Sound (London), Autumn 1976.
Parrish, Robert, in Focus on Film (London), November 1976.
Gerely, A., in Film und Ton (Munich), October 1977.

* * *

Despite the fact that the motion-picture camera is the mechanical means by which films actually come to be, the role of the cameraman, or director of photography, or cinematographer, is often overlooked in assessing a movie’s value. James Wong Howe is one of the few cinematographers to receive any individual recognition before the 1970s, two others being Billy Bitzer and Karl Freund. Howe’s lengthy career spans more than five decades. He earned a reputation as one of the most innovative cameramen, always eager to experiment, and one of the professional craftsmen who was responsible for the “look” of the Warner Brothers product with the 26 pictures he photographed at that studio between 1938 and 1947.

A Chinese immigrant interested in athletics and boxing, Howe landed a job as assistant to Alvin Wyckoff, Cecil B. De Mille’s photographer. He learned the rudiments of photography from Wyckoff, convinced Mary Miles Minter to allow him to take some publicity shots of her, and as a result she requested he photograph her in Drums of Fate and The Trail of the Lonesome Pine in 1922–23. His use of low-key lighting to emphasize fantasy in Betty Bronson’s Peter Pan enhanced his reputation, as did his realistic lighting for Laugh, Clown, Laugh, starring Lon Chaney. When the arrival of sound threw Hollywood studios into turmoil, Howe took time off to visit his homeland. Upon his return he had difficulty finding work because producers explained they needed photographers who understood sound.

Howard Hawks broke the ice by hiring him to shoot The Criminal Code, which earned him a two-year contract at Fox, where his best film was The Power and the Glory, directed by Preston Sturges and filmed in straightforward, newsreel style. Howe went to MGM in 1933 where his films included Viva Villa!, The Thin Man, and Whipsaw. He became bored at MGM, and, after shooting the color tests of Marlene Dietrich for The Garden of Allah for David O. Selznick, went to England where he photographed Fire over England, then returned to the US to do some of his finest work in Selznick’s Prisoner of Zenda. That film cast Ronald Colman in dual roles and is of Fate and The Trail of the Lonesome Pine* in 1922–23. His use of low-key lighting to emphasize fantasy in Betty Bronson’s Peter Pan enhanced his reputation, as did his realistic lighting for Laugh, Clown, Laugh, starring Lon Chaney. When the arrival of sound threw Hollywood studios into turmoil, Howe took time off to visit his homeland. Upon his return he had difficulty finding work because producers explained they needed photographers who understood sound.

Howard Hawks broke the ice by hiring him to shoot The Criminal Code, which earned him a two-year contract at Fox, where his best film was The Power and the Glory, directed by Preston Sturges and filmed in straightforward, newsreel style. Howe went to MGM in 1933 where his films included Viva Villa!, The Thin Man, and Whipsaw. He became bored at MGM, and, after shooting the color tests of Marlene Dietrich for The Garden of Allah for David O. Selznick, went to England where he photographed Fire over England, then returned to the US to do some of his finest work in Selznick’s Prisoner of Zenda. That film cast Ronald Colman in dual roles and is famous for the scene in which Colman shakes hands with himself. Howe explained, “Split screen was used, of course, but not the usual straight line split. I placed a three-by-four-foot optical glass three feet in front of the camera. Ronald Colman shook hands with a double. The double’s head and shoulders were matted out with masking tape on the glass. The scene was photographed, the camera shutter was closed, and the film was wound backward to the beginning of the scene. We then masked out everything but Colman’s head and shoulders and re-photographed the scene. This required great accuracy on the part of everyone involved, especially on Ronald Colman’s part as he spoke and reacted to himself. We did all this 14 times. The third try was the best.”

Following that success, he shot his first color film, also for Selznick, The Adventures of Tom Sawyer. “A splash of red or blue in the background of a color picture can distract audience attention in the same way a strong highlight does in monochrome,” explained Howe. “In The Adventures of Tom Sawyer I tried to subordinate background color and to confine the major coloring of any scene to the players. This is not as difficult as it sounds, and it worked out successfully.” Howe followed Sawyer with the atmospheric black-and-white Algers. Howe recalled that Hedy Lamarr, in her first US film, “was bewildered and possessed of all the physical defects the average girl has on her arrival at the film factories.” His success in transforming her into a glamor girl earned him a contract with Warner Brothers, where, in a ten-year period, he photographed 36 films. Howe’s realistic style was a perfect match for the hard-hitting Warner Brothers product. These films include a sepia-toned The Oklahoma Kid, Dr. Ehrlich’s Magic Bullet, Kings Row, Yankee Doodle Dandy, and Body and Soul.

During the 1950s and 1960s Howe freelanced, doing his most memorable work—Come Back, Little Sheba, Picnic, The Rose Tattoo (for which he received his first Oscar), The Sweet Smell of Success, and The Old Man and the Sea. His sense of dramatic realism was in full evidence in Hud, which earned him a second Oscar, and, to many, his best work was his innovative, distorting, wide-angle photography for John Frankenheimer’s Seconds.

—Ronald Bowers

HUBLEY, John

Animator. Nationality: American. Born: Marinette, Wisconsin, 21 May 1914. Education: Attended the Art Center, Los Angeles. Military Service: 1943–45—worked on training films for United States Air Force. Family: Married the editor Faith Elliot, 1955. Career: 1935–41—worked as assistant animator, Walt Disney; 1941–43—worked for Screen Gems unit of Columbia; 1946–52—animation director, United Productions of America (UPA); initiated TV series Dusty of the Circus; 1954—formed Storyboard Productions, and Hubley Studio, 1965: later television work includes credits designs, specials, and series including Sesame Street and Everybody Rides the Carousel. Awards: Academy Awards for Moonbird, 1959; The Hole, 1962; Herb Alpert and the Tijuana Brass Double Feature, 1966. Died: 23 February 1977.

Films as Director:

1940 Old Blackout Joe (co); The Dumbconscious Mind (co); King Midas, Junior (co)
1943 The Vitamin G-Man (co); Prof. Small and Mr. Tall (co); He Can’t Make It Stick (co)
1944 Position Firing (co); Operation of the K-13 Gunsite (co)
1945 Tuesday in November (Berry) (animation sequences)
1946 Flat Hatting
1947 Human Growth (Lerner) (animation sequences)
1948 Robin Hoodlum; The Magic Fluke
1949 Mr. Magoo; The Ragtime Bear; Punchy De Leon
1950 Spellbound Hound; Trouble Indemnity; Barefaced Flatfoot
1951 Fuddy Duddy Buddy; Rooty Toot Toot
1952 The Four Poster (Reis) (animation sequences)
1957 *The Adventures of *; Date with Dizzy
1958 The Tender Game; Harlem Wednesday
1959 Moonbird
1960 Children of the Sun
1961 Of Stars and Men
1962 The Hole; Horses and Their Ancestors; Man and His Tools
1964 The Hat
1966 Herb Alpert and the Tijuana Brass Double Feature; Urbanissimo; The Year of the Horse (Sunasky) (animation sequences)
John Hubley, a remarkable animator by any standards, is noted not only for creating a new and important image in the animated film, but also for being the basic influence on a whole new genre in world animation. Having studied at the Los Angeles Art Center, Hubley joined the Disney studio as assistant director, tracing and painting the backgrounds, and soon progressing to layouts on Disney’s first full-length cartoon, Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs. He was then promoted to full art director (or layout man) and worked on the “Earth Settling” segment from “The Rite of Spring” sequence and painting backgrounds for “The Sorcerer’s Apprentice” sequence in Fantasia.

In 1942 Hubley left Disney to work under the legendary Dave Fleischer at Columbia’s Screen Gems, where he co-directed a number of short cartoons with the animator Paul Sommer. These show the early roots of the Hubley influence through the use of crisp, sharp lines with bold, bright colors in the background as well as in the characters.

During the Second World War years, while Hubley was making training films in the Air Corps, a group of Disney drop-outs and refugees were forming their own company, United Productions of America, and had started producing sponsored cartoons. Hell-Bent for Election was the big turning point in many ways. This 16-minute short was made for the 1944 Roosevelt presidential campaign mostly by moonlighting animators, so dedicated to the cause that they made it for free. The graphic design and bright coloring were light years away from what cinema audiences were used to, and the film was to set the standard which other studios would try to match. Hubley was hired as UPA’s creative head, and when the producer Stephen Bosustow bought UPA outright from his original partners, Hubley joined him as studio boss. When a contract was signed with Columbia to make a series of theatrical entertainment cartoons, Hubley came into his element, and created his most popular character, a near-sighted old grouch who saw only what he wanted to see, Mister Magoo.

Hubley left UPA in 1952 and formed Storyboard Productions. It specialized in television commercials, though Hubley (and his wife Faith, now his partner) intended to make at least one serious film a year. The first was *The Adventures of *+, commissioned by the Guggenheim Museum. Since the film concerns the need by the old for the vision of the young, the style is that of the crayon drawings of a child, double-exposed over rendered backgrounds. The success of *The Adventures of *+ was phenomenal, and was followed by experiments with water color on wax, spraying cells, and many other techniques exploring the Hubley’s own artistry. The Hubley cartoons are not only intended to entertain, but often to make a serious point, be it about pollution, over-population, world peace, or the atomic bomb. They are always refreshing.

The final years of Hubley’s creative life were taken up with initiating the feature Watership Down. Although he was fired by the producer and all his work scrapped, the prologue looks decidedly Hubley-esque and more than a cut above the rest of the film. He was storyboarding a 26-minute TV special of Garry Trudeau’s comic strip Doonesbury when he died while undergoing heart surgery. His wife Faith completed it, and has been carrying on the good work ever since.

---

Graham Webb

---

HUNTE, Otto

Designer. Nationality: German. Career: 1910s—experimental artist based in Munich, designed sets for Lang and Von Harbou; 1930s—continued working in Germany during the War; 1945–60—remained in Germany. Died: In Berlin, 1960.
Films as Art Director/Production Designer (selected list):

1919  Das Kabinett des Dr. Caligari (The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari) (Wiene); Madame Dubarry (Lubitsch)
1920  Das Indische Grabmal (May); Die Herrin der Welt (May)
1922  Dr. Mabuse, der Spieler (Dr. Mabuse the Gambler) (Lang) (co)
1924  Die Nibelungen (The Nibelungen Saga) (Lang)
1926  Metropolis (Lang)
1927  Die Liebe der Jeanne Ney (Pabst)
1929  Frau im Mond (The Girl in the Moon) (Lang)
1930  Der blau Engel (The Blue Angel) (von Sternberg)
1933  Das Testament des Dr. Mabuse (Lang) (co)
1940  Jud Süss (Harlan)
1946  Die Mörder sind unter uns (Staudte)

Publications

On HUNTE: articles—

Codelli, L., in Griffithiana (Gemona, Italy), September 1996.
Marsilius, Hans Jörg, in Film-Dienst (Cologne), 22 October 1996.
Journal of Film Preservation (Brussels), November 1996.

* * *

After the monumental Italian spectacles of the early 20th century, and D.W. Griffith’s epics, a new film phenomenon appeared which carried cinema to new heights. The striking décors of The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari and Lubitsch’s Madame Dubarry, both made in 1919, helped the German cinema to break through the barrier of political prejudice built up against it by the Allied nations after the First World War. The technical and artistic superiority of German studio craftsmanship, as well as Expressionism, then a powerful force in German art, and the considerable influence of Reinhardt’s theatre, were ultimately to influence film production worldwide.

Otto Hunte, who began his career as an artist in a Munich experimental group, was certainly an outstanding contributor to the success of the German film industry in the 1920s. However, because the success of the Golden Age of German film relied on close cooperation between directors, designers, and cameramen, it becomes a little difficult to sort out the different functions of separate individuals. Where several artists worked together, as in the case of Hunte, Vollbrecht and others, records do not always reveal who did what. Hunte often shared credits with Jacoby-Boy, Kettelhut, Stahl Urach, and Emil Hasler.

It is clear, however, that Hunte was Lang’s major designer, bringing his experience as a painter to the director’s architectural background. He created the great landscapes of Die Nibelungen, the futuristic constructions of Metropolis and The Girl in the Moon, and the seedy coulisses of the Mabuse films. Often it was Hunte who interpreted the ideas of Lang and his scriptwriter wife Thea Von Harbou, leaving much of the actual construction to his assistant Vollbrecht, who then made his own personal contributions to the films—for example, in the dragon sequence of Die Nibelungen.

Hunte’s studio-based art was very much a characteristic of the German cinema. The forests of Siegfried, the first episode of Die Nibelungen, were studio forests, artificially created, and the set pieces of the cathedral steps and Gunthur’s castle were solid studio constructions. What made these films so outstanding was the perfect coordination of many diverse elements, fused together by the tyrannous energy of Lang.

The designer did not work solely for Lang. Von Harbou had associations with Robert Dineson, the Danish director working in Berlin, and Joe May. Hunte worked with them both, designing for the latter Das Indische Grabmal and Die Herrin der Welt. He showed a very different style from his work with Lang in Pabst’s Liebe der Jeanne Ney, and in 1930, he worked on Sternberg’s Der blau Engel.

After Lang’s escape to exile, Hunte remained in Germany, working with Von Harbou on many of her films and even designing the notoriously anti-semitic Jud Süss. After the war, however, he was equally amenable to working with Wolfgang Staudte on the impressive anti-Nazi film, Die Mörder sind unter uns for the East German DEFA company. He continued working until his death in 1960.

—Liam O’Leary

HUNTER, Ross

Producer. Nationality: American. Born: Martin Fuss in Cleveland, Ohio, 6 May 1916. Education: Attended Western Reserve University, Cleveland, M.A. Career: 1942–43—schoolteacher, Cleveland; 1944–47—actor, Columbia, then teacher and stage producer and director; 1951—associate producer, then producer for Universal,
Columbia, and Paramount; also producer of TV mini-series Arthur Hailey’s The Moneychangers, 1976, and The Best Place to Be, 1979. Died: Of lymphoma; in Century City, California, 10 March 1996.

Films as Associate Producer:

1951 Flame of Araby (Lamont)
1952 Steel Town (G. Sherman); Battle at Apache Pass (G. Sherman)

Films as Producer:

1953 Take Me to Town (Sirk); All I Desire (Sirk); Tumbleweeds (Juran); Taza, Son of Cochise (Sirk)
1954 Magnificent Obsession (Sirk); Naked Alibi (Hopper); The Yellow Mountain (Hibbs); One Desire (Hopper)
1955 The Spoilers (Hibbs); Captain Lightfoot (Sirk); There’s Always Tomorrow (Sirk)
1956 All That Heaven Allows (Sirk)
1957 Battle Hymn (Sirk); Tammy and the Bachelor (Tammy) (Pevney); My Man Godfrey (Koster); Interlude (Sirk)
1958 This Happy Feeling (Edwards); Stranger in My Arms (Käutner); The Restless Years (The Wonderful Years) (Käutner)
1959 Imitation of Life (Sirk); Pillow Talk (Gordon) (co)
1960 Portrait in Black (Gordon); Midnight Lace (Miller) (co)
1961 Back Street (Miller); Tammy Tell Me True (Keller); Flower Drum Song (Koster)
1962 If a Man Answers (Levin)
1963 The Thrill of It All (Jewison) (co); Tammy and the Doctor (Keller)
1964 The Chalk Garden (Neame); I’d Rather Be Rich (Smight)
1965 The Art of Love (Jewison)
1966 Madame X (Rich); The Pad . . . and How to Use It (Hutton)
1967 Rose (Rich) (exec); Thoroughly Modern Millie (Hill)
1970 Airport (Seaton and Hathaway)
1972 Lost Horizon (Jarrott)
1975 The Lives of Jenny Dolan (Jameson) (exec)
1978 Suddenly, Love (Margolin) (co); A Family Upside Down (Rich—for TV) (co)

Films as Actor:

1944 Louisiana Hayride (Barton) (as Gordon Pearson)
1945 A Guy, a Gal, and a Pal (Boetticher) (as Jimmy Jones)
1946 Hit the Hay (Lord) (as Ted Barton); Sweetheart of Sigma Chi (Bernhard) (as Ted Sloan)

Publications

By HUNTER: articles—

Greater Amusements, December 1967.
Show (New York), September 1973.
Obituary, in Classic Images (Muscatine), May 1996.

* * *

Ross Hunter’s career has certain parallels to that of George Cukor, who was often called a “woman’s director.” In Hunter’s case, he was (after an inauspicious acting career) a “woman’s producer”: the dramatic focus of many of his most successful films was a woman’s quest for romantic love. Additionally, his most typical films were soap operas and comedies (as opposed to nourish crime dramas, Westerns, or war films), genres always held by the critical establishment to be of special interest to women.

In many of Hunter’s best efforts as producer, the specifics of the scenario are transcended by sheer production values. Douglas Sirk has generally been given credit for the melodramas made with Hunter, but if it is the producer’s job to actually produce and assemble the variety of elements, Hunter must certainly be acknowledged for that particular confluence which appeared so significantly and expressively in Magnificent Obsession, All That Heaven Allows, Battle Hymn, and Imitation of Life (along with such similarly themed non-Sirk melodramas as Portrait in Black and Back Street). Indeed, it is not far-fetched to see in Hunter, with his preoccupation with style, the roots of Fassbinder’s brand of New German Cinema.

Some of the most successful of Hunter’s films starred his friend Rock Hudson. Perhaps Hunter’s most interesting non-Sirk film, also featuring Hudson, is Pillow Talk, a socially and politically schizophrenic comedy. On one hand, the film openly deals with sex and presents the kind of liberated career woman not to be found on screen since World War II. Yet at the same time, the scenario depicts a repressed sexuality and an almost anachronistic obsession with female virginity. Hunter’s association with Doris Day, Hudson’s Pillow Talk co-star, continued with the suspense melodrama Midnight Lace and the comedy The Thrill of It All. He also produced a series of comedies with Debbie Reynolds, including Tammy and the Bachelor, and a “Tammy” sequel, Tammy Tell Me True, starring Sandra Dee. Along with Day, these two actresses celebrated the type of idealized 1950s/early-1960s celluloid virginity which was then expected of “good” girls but which today is laughably outdated.

It must be pointed out as well the tremendous irony of Rock Hudson, whose homosexuality was to remain publicly closeted for most of his lifetime, appearing in Pillow Talk as a character whose pretended fear of homosexuality is a way of “getting girls.” Although a bright, sophisticated, and stylish comedy for its time, Pillow Talk thus becomes on another level an unusually vile and hypocritical work.

The commercial climax of Hunter’s career was undoubtedly Airport, based on the Arthur Hailey best-seller: an unashamedly old-fashioned (for 1970) thriller which combined Academy Award-winning actors with soap opera, suspense, and production values. The result was one of the most commercially successful films of its time, spawning a spate of sequels and other similar “disaster” spectacles.
Hunter’s sensibility, his interest in style, production values, and good taste, had the tendency to descend into kitsch or camp if not controlled by a strong director such as Sirk. The potential capstone of his career, the musical version of Lost Horizon, was a fiasco in almost all areas. It was deadened by the tasteful if dull casting of Liv Ullmann and Peter Finch, as well as by undistinguished music by Burt Bacharach. Its story, production values, and old-fashioned Hollywood sensibility doomed the film and—in the midst of the Vietnam War, the sexual revolution, and the increasingly youthful age of the typical moviegoer—made Hunter himself an anachronism. Even though he never officially retired, he remained mostly inactive during the almost two decades before his death in 1996.

—Charles Derry, updated by Rob Edelman
IBERT, Jacques

Films as Composer:

1931 S.O.S. Foch (Arroy—short); Les Cinq gentlemen maudits (Duvivier)
1933 Don Quichotte (Don Quixote) (Pabst); Les Deux Orphelines (M. Tourneur) (co)
1934 Maternité (Choux)
1935 Justin de Marseille (M. Tourneur) (co); Golgotha (Duvivier)
1936 Koenigsmark (Crimson Dynasty) (M. Tourneur); Le Couable (Bernard); L’Homme de nulle part (Chenal); Anne-Marie (Bernard) (co); Courrier sud (Bilton) (co); Branle-bas de combat (Lallier—short); Paris (Choux)
1937 Feu! (de Baroncelli)
1938 Le Patriote (M. Tourneur); La Maison du Malais (Chenal) (co); Le Héros de la Marne (Hugon); Thérèse Martin (de Canonge)
1939 La Charette fantôme (The Phantom Carriage) (Duvivier); Le Père Lebonnard (Papa Lebonnard) (de Limur); Angelica (Choux)
1940 La Comédie du bonheur (L’Herbier)
1942 Félicie Nanteuil (Histoire comique) (M. Allégret)
1943 Les Petites du Quai aux Fleurs (M. Allégret)
1945 Le Père Serge (Gasnier-Raymond)
1946 L’Affaire du collier de la reine (The Queen’s Necklace) (L’Herbier); Panique (Duvivier)
1947 Lyauty, bâtisseur d’empire (Lucot—short)
1948 Macbeth (Welles)
1952 Equilibre (Mansart); From Doric to Gothic (Gillet—short)
1954 ‘‘Circus’’ ep. of Invitation to the Dance (Kelly)
1955 Marianne de ma jeunesse (Duvivier)

Publications

On IBERT: books—

On IBERT: articles—

Colpi, Henri, in Défense et illustration de la musique dans le film, Lyon, 1964.
Film Dope (Nottingham), January 1983.

Jacques Ibert’s reputation as a lightweight composer of witty frivolities—a kind of ex officio member of “Les Six”—does him a lot less than justice. The ebullient high spirits of his best-known works such as the parodic “Divertissement,” though typical of one aspect of him, have come to eclipse the darker, more complex elements in his music. For Ibert was also the composer of the somber symphonic poem “Ballade de la geôle de Reading,” inspired by Oscar Wilde’s poem, and the nightmarish “Chant de folie.” And this “shadow side” of Ibert’s musical personality emerges too in his film music, as in the scores he wrote for Duvivier’s Golgotha and Welles’s Macbeth.

Like others of his generation, Ibert developed his love of cinema during the silent era, and for a time earned his living (as did Shostakovich) playing piano in movie houses. The “Divertissement,” composed as incidental music for a staging of the same Labiche farce, Un chapeau de paille d’Italie, that René Clair used as basis for his film, could well stand as a tribute to silent film comedy. The finale, with its frenetic percussion and massed police whistles, immediately evokes the world of Chaplin, Keaton, and the Keystone cops, and even allows the trumpet to mimic one of Chaplin’s skidding, one-legged about-turns. Indeed, though not written as a film score, Ibert’s music was subsequently used to accompany Clair’s film, an oblique acknowledgment of its essentially cinematic spirit.

Proudly eclectic, Ibert always disdained schools of composition. “All systems are valid,” he maintained, “‘so long as one derives music from them.’” In his film music, as in his concert and chamber works, he was happy to incorporate elements from whatever style or culture seemed appropriate to the job in hand. For his first feature film as composer, Duvivier’s Les Cinq gentlemen maudits, he matched the North African story line by working Moroccan chants and animal cries into the score. It was for another film directed by Duvivier, the biblical epic Golgotha, that Ibert composed one of his most expressive scores of the 1930s drawing on elements of Gregorian chant, Handelian chorales, sinuous oriental melodies and the traditional theme of the “Dies Irae.” For the climax, the crucifixion itself, he unleashed a tour de force of orchestral sonorities, with brass and rattling percussion vying for supremacy, culminating in a sepulchral march with the ondes martenot wailing desolately above it like a grief-stricken voice.

Expert at adapting his own characteristic tone to a wide range of idioms, Ibert was the ideal composer to provide evocative orchestral color for films set in exotic times or places—whether in the Sahara (Courrier sud), in dynastic Ruritanian Europe (Koenigsmark), or even in the other world (La Charrette fantôme). When the ailing Maurice Ravel was unable to meet the deadline, Ibert stepped in to craft elegant Spanish pastiche for Pabst’s Don Quichotte.

Hollywood never tempted Ibert, for whom the idea of entrusting his orchestration to some studio hack would have been anathema, and only twice did he stray outside French cinema. For the “Circus” episode of Gene Kelly’s Invitation to the Dance he provided a ballet score full of whirlwind rhythms and darting fantasy. But his finest and most original film music was inspired by Orson Welles’s idiosyncratic version of Macbeth, filmed amid the papier-mâché sets and dry ice of the cut-price Republic studios. In place of conventional Shakespearean grandeur, Ibert set out to evoke the play’s eerie atmosphere through grotesque, prowling dissonances, outlandish scoring—including celesta, tabor, and Chinese gongs—and such disquieting effects as a wordless ‘‘breathing chorus’’ like a host of unquiet spirits. An insidious march on high woodwind and snare drum acts as ominous leitmotiv (accompanied at one point by an ensemble of out-of-tune bagpipes), and Banquo’s ghost is heralded by a lurching bass-tuba backed by gurgles from the double-bassoon. Regrettably, much of the subtlety of Ibert’s score was lost in the murk of Republic’s garbled soundtrack; had it been better presented, it might well have put paid to the dismissive view of him as a skilled but conventional composer.

—Philip Kemp

INCE, Thomas H.

Producer and Director. Nationality: American. Born: Thomas Harper Ince in Newport, Rhode Island, 6 November 1882. Family: Son of the comedian John E. Ince; brother of the directors John and Ralph Ince; married Elzina Sherwood, 1907. Career: Child actor: stage debut at age 6, and toured in vaudeville and legitimate stage plays, and also acted in some films; 1910–11—director, Independent Motion Pictures (IMP); directed some films with Mary Pickford; 1911–15—producer and director, New York Motion Pictures: set up Hollywood studio, and hired directors Francis Ford, William S. Hart (also actor), Reginald Barker, Jack Conway, Fred Niblo, and Frank Borzage; 1915–17—Director-General of the consolidated company Triangle; 1918—formed his own production company, and in 1919 member of Associated Producers, Inc.: this merged with First National, 1922. Died: In Beverly Hills, California, 19 November 1924.

Films as Director (selected list):

1910 Little Nell’s Tobacco (+ sc); The Dream (co); Maid or Man; Her Darkest Hour; Artful Kate; A Manly Man; The Message in the Bottle; The Fisher-Maid; In Old Madrid; Sweet Memories of Yesterday; For Her Brother’s Sake (co); Behind the Stockade (co); In the Sultan’s Garden; The Aggressor (co); The New Cowboy; The Winning of Wonega

1911 Their First Misunderstanding (co); The Dream (co); Maid or Man; Her Darkest Hour; Artful Kate; A Manly Man; The Message in the Bottle; The Fisher-Maid; In Old Madrid; Sweet Memories of Yesterday; For Her Brother’s Sake (co); Behind the Stockade (co); In the Sultan’s Garden; The Aggressor (co); The New Cowboy; The Winning of Wonega

1912 The Crisis; Across the Plains (+ co-sc); The Indian Massacre; The Battle of the Red Men; The Deserter; Lieutenant’s Last

1913 The Mosaic Law; A Shadow of the Past; With Lee in Virginia; Bread Cast upon the Water; The Drummer of the Eighth; The Boomerang; The Battle of Gettysburg (co); The Seal of Silence; Days of ’49

1914 Love’s Sacrifice (co); A Relic of Old Japan; One of the Discard (co); The Golden Goose (co); The Last of the Line

Films as Producer:

1912 The Clod; His Nemesia; A Mexican Tragedy; For Freedom of Cuba; A Doctor’s Trouble (Balshofer); The Sergeant’s Boy (Barker); The Vengeance of Fate (Giblyn); The Massacre of Santa Fe Trail (Montgomery); Sundered Ties (F. Ford); His Better Self (Balshofer); An Indian Legend (Giblyn); The Sheriff’s Adopted Child (Morty); For the Honor of the 7th (Barker); Mary of the Mines (Morty and Balshofer); On Secret Service (Edwards); The Altar of Death (West); The Civilian (Balshofer); The Ball Player and the Bandit (F. Ford); His Squaw (Giblyn); Blood Will Tell (Edwards); His Sense of Duty (Barker); The Dead Pays (West); The Great Sacrifice (West)

1913 In the Ranks (F. Ford); A Blue Grass Romance (Giblyn); The Little Turncoat (Balshofer); The Favorite Son (F. Ford);
The Counterfeiter (West); The Sharpshooter (Giblyn); A Frontier Wife (F. Ford); The Iconoclast (West); The Pride of the South (King); Texas Kelly at Bay (F. Ford); The Grey Sentinel (King); A Southern Cinderella (King); A Slave’s Devotion (Giblyn); An Indian’s Gratitude (Morty); Banzaï (Giblyn); Old Mammy’s Secret Code (Giblyn); The House of Bondage (West); An Orphan of the War (F. Ford); The Flame in the Ashes (Morty); The Quakeress (West); The Green Shadow (Giblyn); The Land of Dead Things (Morty); The Greenhorn (Giblyn); The Witch of Salem (West); The Claim Jumper (Morty); The Maelstrom (Morty); The Belle of Yorktown (F. Ford); The Sign of the Snake (Giblyn); The Revelation (Balshofer); The Long Portage (Montgomery and Conway); Devotion (Clifford); Her Legacy (Balshofer); The Pitfall (Giblyn); Harvest of Sin (Edwards); A Military Judas (Hunt)

1914 The Ambassador’s Envoy; The Harp of Tara (West); Romance of Sunshine Alley (Miller); For Her Brother’s Sake (Hunt); A New England Idyll (Edwards); Divorce (West); O Mimi San (Miller); Repaid (Edwards); The Play’s the Thing (Sidney); The Courtship of O San (Miller); The Adventures of Shorty (F. Ford); The Bell of Austi (West); Desert Gold (Sidney); The Squire’s Son (West); The Geisha (West); Love vs. Duty (Edwards); Breed o’ the North (Edwards); The Embezzler (Osborn); The Wrath of Gods (The Destruction of Sakura Jim) (Barker and West); His Hour of Manhood (Barker or Chatterton); The Curse of Humanity (Sidney); The Final Reckoning (Edwards); The City (West); An Eleventh Hour Reformation (Edwards); The Gangsters and the Girl (Sidney); The Winning of Denise (Edwards); The Typhoon (Barker); The Worth of a Life (Sidney); Fortunes of War (Hunt); The Panther (Edwards); The Vigil (Osborn)

1915 On the Night Stage (Barker) (+ co-sc); The Alien (+ d); The Face on the Ceiling (Edwards); A Flower in the Desert (Miller); The Italian (Barker); Mother Hulda (West); The City of Darkness (Barker); The Iron Strain (Barker); The Coward (Barker); The Golden Claw (Barker); Matrimony (Sidney); The Winged Idol (Edwards ?); Aloha Oe (Hamilton ?); The Painted Soul (Sidney)

1916 Peggy (Giblyn); The Dividend (Edwards); Moral Fabric (West); The Deserter (Edwards); Civilization (West and others); Home (Miller); Plain Jane (Miller); Lieut. Danny, U.S.A. (Hamilton)

1917 Paddy O’Hara (West); Back of the Man (Barker); The Pinch Hitter (Schertzinger); Paws of the Bear (Willat); Happiness (Storm); Princess of the Dark (Niblo); The Dark Road (Geffron)

1918 Those Who Pay (West); Playing the Game (Schertzinger); The Vamp (Storm); When Do We Eat? (Hart); String Beans (Schertzinger); The Midnight Patrol (Willat); The Narrow Trail (Hillyer)

1919 The Sherriff’s Son (Schertzinger); The Homebreaker (Schertzinger); The Busher (Storm); Wagon Tracks (Hillyer); Behind the Door (Willat); The Woman in the Suitcase (Niblo); Alarm Clock Andy (Storm)

1920 Silk Hosiery (Niblo)

1921 Lying Lips (Wray); Beau Revel (Wray); Hail the Woman (Wray)

1922 Lorna Doone (Torneur)

1923 Human Wreckage (Wray); Anna Christie (Wray)

1924 Barbara Frietchie (Love of a Patriot) (Hillyer)

1925 Enticement (Archainbaud); Percy (Mother’s Boy) (Neill); Playing with Souls (R. Ince)

Films as Actor:

1906 Seven Ages of Man

1908 Richard III (Ranous); Macbeth

1909 The Cardinal’s Conspiracy (Griffith and Powell)

1910 The Englishman and the Girl; His New Lid (Powell)

Publications

By INCE: articles—

‘‘Drama and the Screen,’’ in Photoplay (New York), September 1916.

‘‘What Does the Public Want?,’’ in Photoplay (New York), January 1917.

‘‘The Undergraduate and the Scenario,’’ in Bookman, June 1918.

‘‘Your Opportunity in Motion Pictures,’’ in Opportunities in the Motion Picture Industry, Los Angeles, California, 1922.

On INCE: books—

On INCE: articles—

Milne, Peter, ‘‘The Method of Thomas H. Ince,’’ and ‘‘Directors Schooled by Ince,’’ in Motion Picture Directing, New York, 1922.

Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), February 1953.

Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), March 1953.

Image (Rochester, New York), May 1956.

Thomas H. Ince’s contribution to film history is perhaps easy to define but hard to evaluate. Much of the attention he has received in recent years has come from European critics who have given him credit for the direction of Ince productions. These were actually undertaken by others, but because of Ince’s showman instincts he put his name as director to all his productions through the mid-1910s, and today it is a far from easy task to assign credit. Critical praise for Ince has also come from left-wing historians anxious to find a suitable recipient for the praise which rightfully belongs to the politically unacceptable D. W. Griffith.

After a lengthy and successful stage career, Ince came to films initially as a director, and from all accounts, a not very good one (particularly if Mary Pickford is to be believed). After joining the New York Motion Picture Company, Ince embarked on a production career which was to keep him a prominent member of the film community until his death. He was a great organizer and entrepreneur, who understood the value of detailed shooting scripts and production schedules at a time when the industry was very undisciplined. Between 1911 and 1913, he produced some superb, realistic westerns, the most important of which is War on the Plains, starring Ethel Grandin and Francis Ford (who, with E. H. Allen, was probably responsible for most if not all of the direction of this and other Ince westerns). As William K. Everson has noted, “Ince was a showman, a routine director, and a mediocre editor,” but his early films had a popular and down-to-earth appeal, lacking in the work of many of his contemporaries.

Ince was also a sound recognizer of talent: witness his signing of cowboy star William S. Hart and bucolic actor Charles Ray, both of whom enjoyed long careers under contract to the producer. Ince deserves credit for making Frank Borzage a director, and for the production of a number of exquisite Japanese idylls starring Sessue Hayakawa and his wife Tsuru Aoki. Civilization was Ince’s last great production, a somewhat sorry allegorical plea for pacifism, and for the next eight years Ince seemed content to turn out program pictures starring the likes of Enid Markey, Enid Bennett, and William Desmond. He does, however, deserve credit for discovering popular romantic comedian Douglas McLean in the late 1910s and for producing the first screen version of a Eugene O’Neill play, Anna Christie, which was highly regarded in its day and contains one of the best performances by its star, Blanche Sweet.

Ince died shortly after being taken ill on board William Randolph Hearst’s yacht, and his death has been the subject of much innuendo and gossip. Indeed, sadly the “mysterious” circumstances surrounding Ince’s death seem to hold more interest for students and scholars than the man’s extraordinarily long and profitable career.

—Anthony Slide

Films as Costume Designer:

1932  The Animal Kingdom (Griffith) (co)
1933  Goldie Gets Along (St. Clair); Flying Down to Rio (Freeland) (co)
1936  The Unguarded Hour (Wood)
1937  Vogues of 1938 (Cummings) (co)
1938  Algiers (Cromwell); Merrily We Live (McLeod) (co); There Goes My Heart (McLeod); Trade Winds (Garnett) (co); Vivacious Lady (Stevens) (co); You Can’t Take It with You (Capra) (co); Blockade (Dieterle)
1939  Bachelor Mother (Kanin); Eternally Yours (Garnett); Intermezzo (Ratoff); Topper Takes a Trip (McLeod); Midnight (Leisen) (co); The Housekeeper’s Daughter (Roach)
1940  Arise My Love (Leisen) (co); Lucky Partners (Milestone) (co); Seven Sinners (Garnett) (co); The House Across the Bay (Mayo)
IRENE

1941 That Uncertain Feeling (Lubitsch); Skylark (Sandrich) (co); Sandown (Hathaway) (co); Escape to Glory (Submarine Zone) (Brahm); Bedtime Story (Hall)
1942 The Lady Is Willing (Leisen); The Palm Beach Story (P. Sturges); The Talk of the Town (Stevens); They All Kissed the Bride (Hall); To Be or Not to Be (Lubitsch) (co); Twin Beds (Whelan) (co); Take a Letter, Darling (The Green Eyed Woman) (Leisen) (co); Reunion in France (Mademoiselle France) (Dassin); You Were Never Lovelier (Seiter); Three Hearts for Julia (Thorpe)
1943 Song of Russia (Ratoff); The Heavenly Body (Hall); Cry Havoc (Thorpe); Lost Angel (Rowland); The Youngest Profession (Buzzell); Above Suspicion (Thorpe); Thousands Cheer (Sidney); Slightly Dangerous (Ruggles); The Human Comedy (Brown); The Man from Down Under (Leonard); Dr. Gillespie’s Criminal Case (Goldbeck); Whistling in Brooklyn (Simon); Cabin in the Sky (Minnelli) (co); Assignment in Brittany (Conway) (co); Du Barry Was a Lady (Del Ruth) (co); Swing Shift Maisie (The Girl in Overalls) (McLeod); Best Foot Forward (Buzzell) (co); Girl Crazy (Taurog) (co); Madame Curie (LeRoy) (co); No Time for Love (Leisen) (co); Broadway Rhythm (Del Ruth) (co)
1944 Between Two Women (Goldbeck); The Seventh Cross (Zinnemann); Two Girls and a Sailor (Thorpe); An American Romance (K. Vidor); Nothing but Trouble (Taylor); Andy Hardy’s Blonde Trouble (Seitz); A Guy Named Joe (Fleming); See Here, Private Hargrove (Ruggles); Maisie Goes to Reno (Beaumont); Kismet (Dieterle); Mrs. Parkington (Garnett) (co); The White Cliffs of Dover (Brown) (co); Meet the People (Riesner) (co); Two Girls and a Sailor (Thorpe) (co); Bathing Beauty (Sidney) (co); Gaslight (Murder in Thornton Square) (Cukor) (co); Three Men in White (Goldbeck); The Thin Man Goes Home (Thorpe) (co); Marriage Is a Private Affair (Leonard) (co); Meet Me in St. Louis (Minnelli) (co); Blonde Fever (Whorf); Thirty Seconds over Tokyo (LeRoy) (co); Music for Millions (Koster) (co)
1945 The Picture of Dorian Gray (Lewin) (co); Adventure (Fleming); The Sailor Takes a Wife (Whorf) (co); Weekend at the Waldorf (Leonard) (co); National Velvet (Brown) (co); This Man’s Navy (Wellman) (co); Keep Your Powder Dry (Buzzell) (co); Anchors Aweigh (Sidney) (co); The Clock (Under the Clock) (Minnelli) (co); Without Love (Bucquet) (co); Son of Lassie (Simon); Valley of Decision (Garnett) (co); Thrill of a Romance (Thorpe) (co); Twice Blessed (Beaumont) (co); The Hidden Eye (Whorf) (co); Our Vines Have Tender Grapes (Rowland) (co); Abbott and Costello in Hollywood (Simon) (co); Dangerous Partners (Cahn) (co); She Went to the Races (Goldbeck); Yolanda and the Thief (Minnelli) (co); What Next Corporal Hargrove? (Thorpe); Up Goes Maisie (Up She Goes) (Beaumont)
1946 Bad Bascomb (Simon) (co); Easy to Wed (Buzzell) (co); Holiday in Mexico (Sidney) (co); Undercurrent (Minnelli); Two Smart People (Dassin) (co); Courage of Lassie (Wilcox); Boys’ Ranch (Rowland); The Lady in the Lake (Montgomery); Love Laughs at Andy Hardy (Goldbeck); The Secret Heart (Leonard); No Leave No Love (Martin); The Green Years (Saville) (co); Faithful in My Fashion (Salkow) (co); The Postman Always Rings Twice (Garnett) (co); Little Mister Jim (Zinnemann) (co); Three Wise Fools (Buzzell) (co); The Dark Mirror (Sidmak); Undercurrent (Minnelli); My Brother Talks to Horses (Zinneman) (co); The Mighty McGurk (Waters) (co); Till the Clouds Roll By (Whorf) (co); The Yearling (Brown) (co); The Harvey Girls (Sidney)
1947 Summer Holiday (Mamoulian); Fiesta (Thorpe) (co); This Time for Keeps (Thorpe) (co); The Arnel Affair (Obeler); The Beginning of the End (Taurog); Undercover Maisie (Beaumont); Dark Delusion (Goldbeck); High Barbaree (Conway); Desire Me (Cukor and others—uncredited); The Hucksters (Conway); Cynthia (The Full Rich Life) (Leonard); Merton of the Movies (Alton) (co); Living in a Big Way (La Cava) (co); Song of Love (Franklin and Marion) (co); The Romance of Rosy Ridge (Rowland) (co); Song of the Thin Man (Buzzell) (co); The Unfinished Dance (Koster) (co); Green Dolphin Street (Saville) (co); 10th Avenue Angel (Rowland); If Winter Comes (Saville)
1948 Three Daring Daughters (Wilcox); State of the Union (Capra); Easter Parade (Walters) (co); Cass Timberlane (Sidney); Julia Misbehaves (Conway); On an Island with You (Thorpe); B.F.’s Daughter (Leonard)
1949 The Bride (Leonard); The Great Sinner (Sidmak) (co); Neptune’s Daughter (Buzzell); Malaya (Thorpe) (co); The Barkleys of Broadway (Walters); In the Good Old Summer-time (Leonard) (co); The Sun Comes Up (Thorpe); The Shadow on the Wall (Jackson); The Scene of the Crime (Rowland); Please Believe Me (Taurog)
1950 Key to the City (Sidney)
1960 Midnight Lace (Miller)
1962 Lover Come Back (Delbert Mann)
1963 A Gathering of Eagles (Delbert Mann)

Film as Actor:

1922 A Tailor Made Man (De Grasse)

Publications

On IRENE: articles—

LaVine, Robert, in In a Glamorous Fashion, New York, 1980.

* * *

Irene’s first work in Hollywood was as a movie extra, but after studying at the Wolfe School of Design, she opened a dress shop at U.C.L.A., which attracted the likes of Lupe Velez and Dolores Del Rio. The actresses loved Irene’s elegant evening gowns and gladly recommended her to their celebrity friends. Following a trip to Europe, where she studied the couturier collections in search of inspiration, Irene opened an even larger boutique, catering to scores of Hollywood starlets. Her reputation soon landed her a position as head of Bullock’s Wilshire Custom Salon, during which time she often received commissions to dress clients such as Ginger Rogers,
Myrna Loy, Rosalind Russell, Irene Dunne, and Claudette Colbert for their film roles. Her designs leant the actresses the level of taste and sophistication they sought to exude, both privately and on screen, and, in turn, the starlets were willing to champion Irene’s work in film. By 1942, Irene had signed a seven-year contract with MGM to be Adrian’s successor as executive designer.

Irene’s film specialty was an extension of her boutique work—the fabulous evening gown. Her soufflé gowns were soft and classic, draped elegantly, and clinging in such a way as to accentuate the flowing lines of the women she dressed. Those women were often likened to moving sculptures, and are best represented by Claudette Colbert in The Palm Beach Story and Rita Hayworth in You Were Never Lovelier. She was not limited to one style, though. Among her most famous works was Lana Turner’s midriff blouse/turban/hot pants ensemble from The Postman Always Rings Twice. Irene was one of the most prolific designers in the screwball comedy genre. She dressed the actresses in confident-yet-feminine outfits that the strong female characters in these films begged for, such as with Carole Lombard in Mr. and Mrs. Smith and Claudette Colbert in Midnight. In addition, Irene perfected the sensible career gal look, which she favored for herself. Her suits were worn with flair by Rosalind Russell in Take A Letter Darling and Joan Crawford in They All Kissed The Bride.

Unfortunately, Irene’s costumes had a reputation for being quite costly. A custom-tailored Irene gown sold for double what a Paris original of equal quality did, and her film designs were often just as extravagant. One failed outfit dress for Kiss Me had Marlene Dietrich wearing pants made entirely of hundreds of tiny gold chains, a creation that fell apart once Dietrich began performing in them. The mistake raised the ire of Irene’s boss, Louis B. Mayer, who felt his executive designer wasted too much money. Irene’s penchant for costly designs is very apparent in her period dresses. Because she was not comfortable with historical costumes, her designs were as indicative of the times Irene lived as of the times they were meant to depict. Meet Me In St. Louis, which took place in 1903, featured waltz length skirts, which were very popular in the 40s, and a striped dress which capitalized on a favored pattern of the decade. The Great Sinner, which took place in Germany in the 1800s, featured elegant gowns in popular 1940s soft fabrics, not the stiff silk used in the era. Period pictures dressed by Irene (such as the Oscar nominated Mrs. Parkington) were noted for their asymmetrical rayon crepe gowns draped with layered chiffon and other couture fabrics, resembling creations out of her own boutiques. But what Irene lacked in authenticity, she more than made up for in beauty. For The Pirate, because there were no records of dress styles in the West Indies in 1830, Irene created an original look based on European fashion of that time. While such films have created the negative notion of Irene’s “fashion pictures,” it is largely due to her sharp inventiveness in costuming, rather than a reliance on painstaking recreation.

Obviously suited for more personal and singular design work, and convinced her stint with MGM had been a mistake, Irene left the field of costume design almost completely in 1949, preferring to devote her full attentions to her boutiques, which she launched in 1947. She was lured back on a few occasions, most notably to dress Doris Day in a couple of films in the 1950s. In Midnight Lace, Irene created a very popular and memorable black lace negligee for Day to wear, which earned her an Academy Award nomination. In Lover Come Back, Irene furthered Day’s cheerleader chic image with more white hats, dresses, and gloves, as well as favorable use of furs. Her last film, Gathering Of Eagles, was completed shortly before her suicide in 1962. By the time Irene leapt from the Knickerbocker Hotel, the era of glamour which she had helped clothe so immaculately was long gone.

—John E. Mitchell

IVANOV-VANO, Ivan

Animator. Nationality: Russian. Born: Moscow, 8 February 1900. Career: Animator from 1923, and independent director from 1927. Died: March 1987.

Films as Animator:

1927  Senka the African
1934  The Czar Durandai
1938  The Three Musketeers
1947  The Little Humpbacked Horse
1952  The Snow Maiden
1953  The Tale of a Dead Princess
1955  The Brave Hare
1957  Once Upon a Time
1963  The Seasons
1964  The Mechanical Flea; The Left Hander
1966  Go to Nowhere
1968  Legend of a Cruel Giant
1971  Battle under the Walls of Kerchenetz (co)

Publications

By IVANOV-VANO: articles—

Soviet Film (Moscow), no. 5, 1977.
Film a Doba (Prague), vol. 33, no. 11, November 1987.

On IVANOV-VANO: articles—

Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), no. 2, 1975.
Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), April 1980.
Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), September 1985.
Film en Televisie + Video (Brussels), December 1986.
Obituary, in Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), July 1987.

* * *

Ivan Ivanov-Vano was one of the founders of Soviet animation, beginning his work in 1923, and his contribution to the totality of Russian animated art has been appreciated all over the world. His first effort as an independent director was in 1927, and from that time forward he was in the forefront of technical and artistic developments in the medium in Russia. At the start his style was perhaps too advanced, but the market caught up with him to such an extent that he was called the Russian Disney. The similarity may lie in the fact that he recognized that audience appeal is an essential element for success. He often changed his style, trying new ways to make films with new techniques to add interest. Most of his subjects were based on traditional Russian tales, using an extremely rich supply of local poetry, folk tales, embroideries, carvings, and architecture. Other similarities between him and Disney were in the scale of production. They were big, with no shortcuts, full of spectacular effects, and totally absorb the audience’s attention. But the parallel ended here. Disney stories, which as a rule were based on old German and British folk tales, were diluted to please a general audience. Although Ivanov-Vano did please his audience, he made fewer compromises and retained a purer sense of poetry and aesthetic concepts. One feels that he really satisfied himself before satisfying his audience.

Out of his wide range of subjects in over 50 years of animated film direction, The Tale of a Dead Princess, The Little Humpbacked Horse, The Snow Maiden (based on Ostrovsky’s play), and Once Upon a Time are perhaps the most distinguished. The Seasons, based on Tchaikovsky’s music, is an imaginative and colourful interpretation of the Russian landscape. But the most powerful and best-designed of his films is Battle under the Walls of Kerchennetz, based on Rimsky-Korsakov’s opera The Legend of the Invisible Town of Kitezh. The film is a fusion of old Russian icons, with their brilliant transparent colour and elegant design, and the rhythm of music, making excellent use of time and space and the dynamic aspects of film cutting. In contrast, after the battle, the peasants return home to revive their land, in a sequence which has a sense of lyricism which is quite outstanding in colour treatment and poetic mood. Yuri Norstein, a young filmmaker and disciple of Ivanov-Vano, codirected this film and has since made his way independently.

—John Halas

IWERSK

Films as Animator:

1928  The Gallopin’ Gaucho; Steamboat Willie
1929  Plane Crazy; The Barn Dance; The Opry House; When the Cat’s Away; The Skeleton Dance; The Barnyard Battle; The Plow Boy; The Karnival Kid; Mickey’s Follies; El Terrible Torreador; Mickey’s Choo-Choo; Springtime; The Jazz Foot; Hell’s Bells; Jungle Rhythm; The Haunted House
1930  Summer, Autumn
1931  Fiddlesticks; Flying Fists; The Village Barber; The Coocoo Murder Case; Puddle Pranks; Laughing Gas; Ragtime Romeo; Little Orphan Willie; The Village Smity; The Soup Song; Movie Mad; The New Car
1932  Jail Birds; Africa Squeaks; The Village Specialist; What a Life; The Milkman; Fire! Fire!; Spooks; Puppy Love; Stormy Seas; School Days; The Bully; The Office Boy; Room Runners; Circus; The Goal Rush; The Phony Express; The Toy Parade; The Music Lesson; Nurse Maid
1933  Funny Face; Technocracked; Bulloney; A Chinaman’s Chance; Pale-Face; The Soda Squirt; Play Ball; Jack and the Beanstalk; Spite Flight; Stratos-Fear
1934  Davy Jones’ Locker; Hell’s Fire (Vulcan Entertainers); The Little Red Hen; Robin Hood, Jr.; Insul’tin’ the Sultan; The Brave Tin Soldier; Reducing Creme; Rasslin’ Round; Puss in Boots; The Cave Man; The Queen of Hearts; Jungle Jitters; Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp; A Good Scout; Viva Willie; The Headless Horseman; The Valiant Tailor; Don Quixote; Jack Frost
1935  Little Black Sambo; Bremen Town Musicians; Old Mother Hubbard; Mary’s Little Lamb; Summertime; Sinbad the Sailor; The Three Bears; Ballooland (The Pincushion Man); Simple Simon; Humpty Dumpty; See How They Won
1936  Ali Baba; Tom Thumb; Dick Whittington’s Cat; Little Boy Blue; Happy Days; Leave It to John; Two Lazy Crows
1937  Skeleton Frolic; Merry Mannequins; The Foxy Pup; Porky and Gabby; Porky’s Super Service
1938  The Horse on the Merry-Go-Round; Snowtime; The Frog Pond; Midnight Frolics
1939  The Gorilla Hunt; Nell’s Yells; Crop Chasers
1940  Blackboard Revue; The Egg Hunt; Ye Olde Swap Shoppe; The Wise Owl
1941  Stop That Tank

Films as Special Effects Technician:

1941  The Reluctant Dragon (Werker and others)
1944  The Three Caballeros (Ferguson)
1946  Make Mine Music (Kinney and others); Song of the South (Foster)
1947  Fun and Fancy Free (Kinney and others)
1948  Melody Time (Luske and others)
1949  Ichabod and Mr. Toad (Kinney, Algar, and Geronimi); Cinderella (Jackson, Luske, and Geronimi)
1953  The Living Desert (Algar)
1954  The Vanishing Prairie (Algar); 20,000 Leagues under the Sea (Fleischer)
1955  Lady and the Tramp (Luske, Geronimi, and Jackson); The African Lion (Algar)
1956  Secrets of Life (Algar); Westward Ho the Wagons! (Beaudine)
1957  Lapland (Sharpesteen); Johnny Tremain (Stevenson); Perri (Kenworthy and Wright)
1958  White Wilderness (Algar); Sleeping Beauty (Geronimi)
1959  Toby Tyler, or Ten Weeks with a Circus (Barton); Jungle Cat (Algar)
1960  Pollyanna (Swift); Ten Who Dared (Beaudine); One Hundred and One Dalmations (Reitherman, Luske, and Geronimi)
1961  The Parent Trap (Swift)
1963  The Birds (Hitchcock); The Three Lives of Thomasina (Chaffey)
Publications

On IWERKS: book—

On IWERKS: articles—

Film Fan Monthly, January 1968.

The Velvet Light Trap (Madison, Wisconsin), Spring 1978.

Banc-Titre (Paris), September 1983.

Classic Images (Muscatine, Iowa), August 1984.

Griffithiana (Gemona, Italy), December 1986.

Reid, J.H., “‘Tom Thumb,’” in Reid’s Film Index (Wyong, New South Wales), no. 27, 1996.

* * *

Along with Tex Avery, Ub Iwerks is certainly one of the most neglected artists who worked in the field of classical animation. Long associated with the animator Walt Disney, Iwerks never received the public or critical acclaim which rightfully should have been his, simply because, unlike Disney, Iwerks was an animator first, and a businessman second.

Iwerks met up with Disney in Kansas City, Missouri, in 1919, while both were working at a small commercial art house. In 1920, Iwerks and Disney left that company to try their luck as an independent organization, but they met with little success. Disney struck out on his own, and soon had a prosperous studio in Los Angeles. In 1923 Disney asked Iwerks to rejoin him and assist in animating his early live action/cartoon series, Alice in Cartoonland. This led to the first Mickey Mouse cartoons, including the silent Plane Crazy and the ground-breaking Steamboat Willie (the first theatrical cartoon with a synchronized sound track). Iwerks was credited on these productions with a “Drawn by” logo, and indeed, Iwerks’s animation of these early Disney cartoons makes them fresh, imaginative, and funny, characteristics that Disney’s later assembly-line style would almost totally obliterate.

P.A. Powers, an independent producer, offered Iwerks the chance to set up his own shop, and, much to Disney’s chagrin, Iwerks accepted the offer. The move proved a milestone in Iwerks’s career: he was given the chance to create his own cartoons, which were far more sophisticated and faster-paced than the Mickey Mouse cartoons. But Powers simply lacked the financial base to adequately launch the Iwerks studio, and although Iwerks created a series of excellent cartoons in the Flip the Frog series (1931–33) and some good, if unremarkable, entries in the Willie Whopper series (1933–34), the public was clearly not ready for Iwerks’s advanced attempts at comic animation.

Flip the Frog, as he evolved into a mature character in such films as The Goal Rush, What a Life, The Phony Express, The Coocoo Murder Case, Technocracked, Movie Mad, and many others, displayed a cheerfully cynical, almost nihilistic attitude toward the world he inhabited. Iwerks packed the Flip cartoons with non-stop action, surrealistic sight gags, decidedly adult double entendre jokes (many with frankly sexual overtones), and episodes of unprovoked violence which Disney would never have tolerated. Flip was far from the cuddly world of Mickey Mouse, and he made no attempt to cater to mainstream sensibilities. In many ways, Flip was much like Chaplin’s tramp: abused, rejected, unlucky in love, triumphing only occasionally, and then usually through devious means. Many of the gags in the Flip cartoons still bring a gasp from contemporary audiences. In The Goal Rush, for example, a flute player in a marching band is summarily shot by the band-leader when he proves unable to play in key. In The Coocoo Murder Case, Iwerks displays his surrealist bent in a sequence near the end of the cartoon where Flip comes face to face with the Grim Reaper. Attempting to escape Death’s clutches, Flip runs frantically down a hallway, opening one door after another in blind panic, until the hallway finally ends in a black pit. After a split second’s hesitation, Flip dives into oblivion, and the cartoon ends in complete darkness. In all of the Flip cartoons, Iwerks’s protagonist emerges as a real and delightfully complex character, in sharp contrast to the one-dimensional “antics” of the Disney stable, or the early Harman-Ising cartoons, with their cuddly mice and singing squirrels. But the humor was simply over most people’s heads, and after a half-hearted attempt in the Willie Whopper series to play down to his presumably juvenile audience (the best Willie Whopper cartoon being Spite Flight), Iwerks went back to Disney, hat in hand. Disney took him back. He was too good a businessman to ignore Iwerks’s value as an animator, but on a personal level he apparently never forgave Iwerks for his abortive bid for creative independence.

Iwerks took over the function of animation special effects supervisor full time. He worked extensively on Disney’s multiplane camera, which lent a remarkable sense of depth to animated scenes (the camera was used spectacularly in the opening shot of Disney’s Pinocchio). In the early 1960s perfected a method of transferring pencil drawings used in animation directly to plastic transparencies, or “cels,” using a Xerox process. This advance eliminated the “inking” stage, where pencil drawings are traced in ink on the cels, and later gave such Disney features as One Hundred and One Dalmations a freshness and flexibility in characters’ movements that was hitherto unattainable. Iwerks also worked to improve the “blue matte” process, which Disney used to combine live action with animation in many of his 1960s films. Alfred Hitchcock borrowed Iwerks from Disney to supervise the special effects in his 1963 production of The Birds.

Iwerks won two Academy Awards, in 1959 and 1964, for his accomplishments as an animator, and for the many innovative techniques he brought to the art form. By all accounts, he was much liked and respected within the industry and generally regarded as the supreme technical innovator of his day in the animation field. However, his skill remained an industry secret, and when he died in 1971 the obituaries, except in Variety, were brief. Iwerks certainly deserved better than that, not only for his own remarkably wry sense of humor as displayed in the Flip films, but also as the man who really brought Mickey Mouse to life. Without Iwerks, the Disney story would probably be quite different.

—Wheeler Winston Dixon
JAENZON, Julius

Films as Cinematographer:

1907 Report from the United States on President Theodore Roosevelt
1908 Fiskelives favor
1910 Regina von Emmertz och Gustav II Adolf (Linden)
1911 Bröllopet på Ulfåsa (The Wedding at Ulfåsa); Järnbäraren (Iron-Carrier) (Linden); Opiumhulan (Opium Den) (+ d)
1912 Två svenska emigranters aventyr i Amerika (The Adventures of Two Swedish Emigrants in America) (+ d); Fabror Johannes ankomst till Stockholm (Uncle John’s Arrival in Stockholm) (+ d); Mor och dotter (Mother and Daughter) (Stiller); Laban Peterqvist tränar för Olympiska spelen (Laban Peterqvist Training for the Olympic Games); Samhällets dom (The Justice of Society) (+ d); Költingens galoscher (The Wagabond’s Galoshes) (+ co-d); De svarta makerna (The Black Masks) (Stiller); Vampyren (Vampire) (Stiller); Barnet (The Child) (Stiller); Branningar, eller Stulen lycka (Breakers, or Stolen Happiness) (+ d); Dettörna halshandet (The Green Necklace) (Magnusson); Trädgårdsmästaren (The Gardener) (Sjöström); I livets var, eller Forsta alskarinnan (In the Spring of Life, or His First Love) (Garbagny); Agaton och Fina (Agaton and Fina) (+ d)
1913 Aktienskapsbrydän (The Marriage Agency) (Sjöström); Livets konflikter (Conflicts of Life) (Stiller and Sjöström); Granfollken (The Border Feud) (Stiller); Ljögen och tårar (Ridicule and Tears) (Sjöström); När kärleken dödar (When Love Kills) (Stiller); När larmklockan ljuder (When the Alarm Bell Rings) (Stiller); Lady Marion’s Summer Flirt (Lady Marion’s Summer Flirt) (Sjöström); Manneköngen (The Model) (Stiller); Bloods roxt (Voice of the Blood) (Sjöström); På livets ödesvägar (The Smugglers) (Stiller); Bröderna (Brothers) (Stiller); Miraklet (The Miracle) (Sjöström)
1914 Prästen (The Priest) (Sjöström); Kammarjunkaren (The Chamberlain) (Stiller); Högfläjlets dotter (Daughter of the Mountains) (Sjöström); När konstnärer älska (When Artists Love) (Stiller); Det röda tornet (The Master) (Stiller); Stormfågeln (The Stormy Petrel) (Stiller); Skottet (The Shot) (Stiller); Kärlek starkare än hat (Love Stronger Than Hatred) (Sjöström)
1915 Hans hustrus förlustna (His Wife’s Past) (Stiller); Dolken (The Dagger) (Stiller); Strejken (Strike) (Sjöström); Högsta vinsten (The First Prize) (Stiller); Judaspengar (Judas Money) (Sjöström); Mästerjuven (The Son of Fate) (Stiller); Madame de Thèbes (Stiller)
1916 Kärlek och journalistik (Love and the Journalist) (Stiller); Vingarne (The Wings) (Stiller); Balettprimadonnan (Anjuta, the Dancer) (Stiller); Landshövdingens döttrar (The Governor’s Daughters) (Sjöström); Rosen på Tistelön (The Rose of Thistle Island) (Sjöström); Therese (Sjöström)
1917 Terje vigen (A Man There Was) (Sjöström); Alexander den Store (Alexander the Great) (Stiller); Dodskyssten (Kiss of Death) (Sjöström)
1918 Berg-Ejvind och hans hustrus (The Outlaw and His Wife) (Sjöström); Sången om den eldröda blomman (Song of the Scarlet Flower) (Stiller)
1919 Ingmarsöarna (Sons of Ingmar) (Sjöström)—2 parts; Herr Arnes pengar (Sir Arne’s Treasure) (Stiller)
1920 Danungen (The Downey Girl) (Hedqvist); Mästerman (Master Samuel) (Sjöström)
1921 Körkarden (The Phantom Carriage) (Sjöström)
1922 Vem dömer (Love’s Crucible) (Sjöström); Gunnar Hedes saga (Gunnar Hede’s Saga) (Stiller)
1923 Gösta Berlings saga (The Story of Gösta Berling) (Stiller); Karusellen (Buchowetzki); Eld ombord (The Tragic Ship) (Sjöström)
1924 Livet på landet (Life in the Country); Två konungar (Two Kings)
1925 Ingmarsarvet (The Ingmar Inheritance) (Molander); Till Osterland (To the Orient) (Molander)
1926 Hon den enda (She’s the Only One) (Molander); Hans engelska fru (His English Wife) (Molander)
1927 Försegglade läppar (Sealed Lips) (Molander)
1928 Parisiskor (Women of Paris) (Molander); Synd (Sin) (Molander)
1929 Hjärtats triumf (Triumph of the Heart) (Molander); Säg det i toner (Say It with Music) (+ co-d)
1930 Ulla, min Ulla (Ulla, My Ulla) (+ d); För hennes skull (For Her Sake); Charlotte Löwenskjöld (Molander); Fridas visor (Frida’s Songs) (Molander); Markurells i Wadköping (Sjöström); Svärnor kommer (Mother-in-Law Is Coming); Sten Stensson Steen from Eslov on nya äventyr (Sten Stensson Steen from Eslov on New Adventures)
1932 Kärlek och kassabrist (Love and Deficit) (Molander)
1933 Vad veta val männen? (What Do Men Know?) (Adolphson); Giftrasvuxnar döttrar (Marriageable Daughters) (Wallén); Tva man om en änka (Two Men and a Widow); Könliga Johansson (Royal Johansson)
1934 Sången om den eldröda blomman (Song of the Scarlet Flower) (Molander)
1935 Smålänningar (People of Småland) (Rodin); Brannigar (Ocean Breakers) (Johansson); Äktenskapsleken (The Marriage Game); Brölllopsresan (The Honeyymoon Trip) (Molander)

1936 Johan Ulfstjerna (Edgren); Samvettsamma Adolf (Conscientious Adolf) (Wallén); Aventyret (Adventure) (Branner)

1937 Sara lär sig folkvett (Henrikson); Valfångare (Whalers) (Henrikson) (co)

1938 Emilie Högqvist (Molander); Stora famnen (A Big Hug) (Henrikson); Vapnfärge (Whalers) (Henrikson) (co)

1939 Lojtnantshjärten (Hearts of Lieutenants) (Hildebrand)

1940 Den ljusnande frantis (Bright Prospects) (Molander); En, men ett lejon (One, But a Lion) (Molander)

1941 Göranssons pojke (Göransson’s Boy) (Hildebrand); Löjtnantshjärten (Hearts of Lieutenants) (Molander)

1943 Katrina (Edgren)

1945 Jolanta—den gäckande suggan (Jolanta—the Elusive Sow) (Molander)

1948 Life at Forsbyholm

Publications

On JAENZON: articles—

* *** *

The English film critic Caroline Lejeune, in an assessment of the early Swedish cinema, noted the sense of reality given by the feeling of texture in objects and clothing and the awareness of landscape. It is obvious that Sjöström and Stiller, the masters of this great period of Scandinavian cinema, owed much to the technical and artistic skills of their cameramen, the principal of whom was Julius Jaenzon.

Jaenzon had joined Svenska Biograf in 1910 and had photographed many films before he met Sjöström and Stiller. As Sjöström acted in many of his own films, he must have reaped a great deal from the collaboration of his cameraman. Jaenzon’s association with Sjöström goes back to 1912 when he filmed The Gardener, and he worked with Stiller on Mother and Daughter and The Black Masks in the same year. These proved to be fruitful collaborations. Jaenzon’s work on Sjöström’s A Man There Was and his The Outlaw and His Wife are characteristic of his work which created an identifiable Scandinavian film style, and won for it a universal appreciation in its time. The brilliant sequence of the capture of Terje by the British gunboat in the former, with its unforgettable image of the sinking rowboat, laden with grain for the starving people, and, in The Outlaw and His Wife, the stark landscapes, contrasting with the frozen clothing of the doomed lovers, are some of the screen’s great achievements. The sombre feeling of these films owed much to Jaenzon. In Stiller’s Sir Arne’s Treasure the primitive mediaeval ambience is superbly conveyed. The mercenary soldiers move through snowy landscapes, and one can almost feel their clothing touching the skin. The perception of the viewer is conditioned by the sensitive lens of a great cameraman. The visual virtuosity of Sjöström’s The Phantom Carriage represents Jaenzon’s most spectacular use of the camera with its ghostly images and superimpositions. In the same director’s Love’s Crucible, the pictorial quality of this mediaeval tale is very striking. Stiller used him to film his epic The Story of Gösta Berling, originally a two-part film. The range of Jaenzon’s work is remarkable. In the exciting sequence of the sled chased across the frozen lake by wolves, or the lovely visions of Garbo in her first great success, and the cavaliers of Ekby in their revels, the beauty of Jaenzon’s work is unmistakable. One remembers the blazing eyes of Lars Hanson as he denounces his parishioners from the pulpit or the two lonely figures of Margarita Samzelius and her old mother pushing the great wooden levers of the old mill while no words pass between them.

He continued to serve these two directors until their departure for Hollywood in the mid-1920s, thereby presenting an image of Sweden to the world. With the coming of sound, he was codirector with Edwin Adolphson of the first popular Swedish musical film Say It with Music. He was to film his old Master Sjöström in Markarell i Wadköping and photograph for Gustav Molander the second version of Song of the Scarlet Flower which he had already brilliantly filmed for Stiller in 1918.

—Liam O’Leary

JARRE, Maurice

Composer. Nationality: French. Born: Maurice Alexis Jarre in Lyon, 13 September 1924. Education: Attended University of Lyon and the Sorbonne, Paris, as engineering student; then studied under Honegger and Félix Passerone at Paris Conservatory. Military Service: French Army during World War II. Family: One son, the composer Jean-Michel Jarre, from first marriage; married 2) the actress Dany Saval, 1965 (divorced), one daughter; 3) Laura Devon, 1967; 4) Khong Fui Fong, 1984. Career: Timpanist in the navy band La Musique des Equipages de la Flotte, and with radio orchestras; percussionist with Renault-Barrault Theatre Company, under Pierre Boulez, 1940s, and musical director for the Théâtre National Populaire, 1950s, writing incidental music for many plays; 1951—first score for film, Hôtel des Invalides; has also composed orchestra music, and for TV, including the mini-series Jesus of Nazareth, 1977, Mourning Becomes Electra, 1978, and Shogun, 1980. Awards: Academy Award, for Lawrence of Arabia, 1962, Doctor Zhivago, 1965, and A Passage to India, 1984; British Academy Award, for Witness, 1985, and Dead Poets Society, 1989; Special César award, 1985.

Films as Composer:

1951 Hôtel des Invalides (Franju—short)
1953 Le Voyage d'Abdallah (Régnier—short)
1954 L'Universée d'Utrillo (Régnier—short)
1955 Le Grand Silence (Gout—short)
1956 Le Théâtre National Populaire (Franju—short); Sur le pont d'Avignon (Resnais—short); Toute la mémoire du monde (Resnais—short)
1957 Bravo Alpha (Venard—short); Le Bel Indifferent (Denny—short)
1958 La Génération du désert (Stéphane—short); Le Grand Oeuvre (Zuber—short); Donne-moi la main (Blanc—short); La Tête contre les murs (The Keepers) (Franju)
1959 Vous n'avez rien à déclarer? (Duhour); Chronique provinciale (Rappeneau—short); La Bête à l'affût (Chenal); Les Dragueurs (Mocky); Les Étoiles de Midi (Ichac); La Corde raide (Dudrumet); La Main chaude (Our)
1960 Vel’ d’hiv’ (Blanc and Rossif—short); Recours en grace (Benedek); Malrif, aigle royal (Hessens—short); Le Tapis volant (Mambouch and Stéphane—short); Les Yeux sans visage (The Horror Chamber of Dr. Faustus) (Franju); Crack in the Mirror (Fleischer); The Big Gamble (Fleischer); Le Puits aux trois vérités (Franju); Le Président (Verneuil)
1961 Le Soleil dans l’œil (Bourdon); Pleins feux sur l’assassin (Franju); Le Temps du ghetto (The Witnesses) (Rossif); Amours célèbres (Boisrond); Cybèle, ou les dimanches de Ville d’Avray (Sundays and Cybèle) (Bourguignon)
1962 The Longest Day (Annakin, Marton, and Wicki); Thérèse Desqueyroux (Thérèse) (Franju); Ton ombre est la mienne (Michel); L’Oiseau de paradis (Camus); Mourir à Madrid (To Die in Madrid) (Rossif); Lawrence of Arabia (Lean); Les Oliviers de la justice (The Olive Trees of Justice) (Blue); Présence d’Albert Camus (Régnier—short)
1963 Les Travestis du diable (de Bravura—short); Mort, où est ta victoire? (Bromberger); Les Animaux (Rossif); Judex (Franju); Pour l’Espagne (Rossif—short); Un Roi sans divertissement (Leterrier)
1964 Behold a Pale Horse (Zimmern); The Train (Frankenheimer); Week-end à Zaydecoote (Verneuil)
1965 The Collector (Wyler); Doctor Zhivago (Lean); Encore Paris (Rossif—short)
1966 Paris brûle-t-il? (Is Paris Burning?) (Clément); Gambit (Neame); Grand Prix (Frankenheimer); The Professionals (R. Brooks); The Night of the Generals (Litvak)
1967 Barbarella (Vadim)
1968 The Fixer (Frankenheimer); 5 Card Stud (Hathaway); Isadora (The Loves of Isadora) (Reisz); Villa Rides (Kulik); The Extraordinary Seaman (Frankenheimer)
1969 La caduta degli dei (The Damned) (Visconti); The Only Game in Town (Stevens); Topaz (Hitchcock); Broccoliane (Hacquard—short)
1970 El Condor (Guillermin); Ryan’s Daughter (Lean); Plaza Suite (Hiller)
1971 Une stazione all’inferno (N. Risi); Soleil rouge (Red Sun) (Young)
1972 The Effect of Gamma Rays on Man-in-the-Moon Marigolds (Newman); Pope Joan (Anderson); The Life and Times of Judge Roy Bean (Huston)
1973 Ash Wednesday (Peerce); The Mackintosh Man (Huston); The Island at the Top of the World (Stevenson); Airborne (short); Mrs. Usychuck (Quinn—short)
1974 Grandeur nature (Life Size) (Berlanga)
1975 Mandoing (Fleischer); Great Expectations (Hardy); The Man Who Would Be King (Huston); Posse (Douglas); Mr. Sycamore (Kohner); The Silence (Hardy)
1976 Mohammad, Messenger of God (Akkad); The Last Tycoon (Kazan); Shout at the Devil (Hunt)
1977 Lorenzaccio (Carrière); March or Die (Richards); The Prince and the Pauper (Crossed Swords) (Fleischer)
1978 Two Solitudes (Chetwynd); Mon royaume pour un cheval (Bourguignon); Der Magier (The Magician of Lublin) (Golan); The Users (Hardy); Isi, the Last of His Tribe (Miller)
1979 Winter Kills (Richert); Die Blechtrommel (The Tin Drum) (Schlöndorff); The American Success Company (Success; American Success) (Richert); The Black Marble (H. Becker)
1980 The Last Flight of Noah’s Ark (Jarrott); Lion of the Desert (Akkad); Resurrection (Petrie); Enola Gay; The Men, the Mission, the Atomic Bomb (Rich)
1981 Die Fälschung (Circle of Deceit) (Schlöndorff); Taps (H. Becker); Chu Chu and the Philly Flash (Rich)
1982 Don’t Cry, It’s Only Thunder (Werner); Coming Out of the Ice (Hussein); Firefox (Eastwood); Young Doctors in Love (G. Marshall); The Year of Living Dangerously (Weir)
1983 A Passage to India (Lean); Dreamscape (Ruben); The Sky’s No Limit (Rich); Top Secret! (Abrahams and D. & J. Zucker); Samson and Delilah (Philips)
1985 Witness (Weir); The Bride (Roddam); Mad Max: Beyond Thunderdome (Miller)
1986 The Mosquito Coast (Weir); Solarbabies (Johnson); Tai-Pan (Duke)
1987 Fatal Attraction (Lynne); Gaby—A True Story (Mandoki); Julia and Julia (Del Monte); No Way Out (Donaldson); Shoto Shoshitsu (Tokyo Blackout) (Masuda)
1988 Buster (Green); Distant Thunder (Rosenthal); Gorillas in the Mist (Apted); Moon over Parador (Mazursky); Le Palaquin des larins (Dormann)
1989 Chances Are (Ardolino); Dead Poets Society (Weir); Enemies, a Love Story (Mazursky); Prancer (Hancock)
1990 Jacob’s Ladder (Lynne); After Dark, My Sweet (Foley); Ghost (Zucker); Solar Crisis (Sarahan); Almost an Angel (Cornell)
1991 Fires Within (G. Armstrong); Only the Lonely (Columbus)
1992 Wildfire (Z. King—produced in 1986); School Ties (Mandell)
1993 Fearless (Weir); Mr. Jones (Figgis); Shadow of the Wolf (Agakuk) (Dormann)
1995  A Walk in the Clouds (Arau)
1996  The Sunchaser (Cimino)
1997  Le Jour et la nuit (Day and Night) (Lévy)
1999  Sunshine (Szabó)
2000  I Dreamed of Africa

Publications

By JARRE: articles—

Chaplin (Stockholm), no. 28, 1962.
Cinema (Los Angeles), July 1966.
Soundtrack! (Hollywood), April 1979.
Soundtrack! (Hollywood), December 1984.
Soundtrack! (Hollywood), March 1985.
Soundtrack! (Mechelen), December 1996.

On JARRE: articles—

Ecran (Paris), September 1975.
Score (Lelystad, Netherlands), February 1978.
Soundtrack! (Hollywood), Fall 1980.
Séquences (Montreal), January 1993.
EPD Film (Frunfart/Main), June 1993.
Soundtrack! (Mechelen), December 1996.

*** * * **

Maurice Jarre, who began scoring films during the 1950s, had studied under the composer Arthur Honegger, best known for his programmatic works—a train speeding along a track and a rugby game. Jarre inherited his teacher’s appreciation of the evocative and descriptive capacities of music, certainly a useful legacy for enhancing the filmic experience. Drawing upon an even deeper vein in the French musical tradition, Jarre shares with Bizet and Debussy the ability to adapt exotic elements from other cultures into his own musical fabric. His range of applying these traditions is equally wide. Jarre’s film scores fall into the two most contrastive groups possible: those where his music constantly impresses itself upon the ordinary members of the audience and those where the music is below their level of consciousness.

For the first group, Jarre pulls out all the stops in his orchestral, harmonic, and exotic borrowings. The most famous among these are his award-winning scores for David Lean’s spectacles. Overwrought music perfectly matches the overblown visuals—and yet, one cannot deny to the total effect a certain admiration. In Lawrence of Arabia, Jarre employs strings in tremolo and in wide-spaced voice lines to suggest the vast, open waste of the Arabian desert baking in the sun, and he tries to re-create the effects of Arabic music with heavy chromaticism. In Doctor Zhivago, he similarly employs open intervals to suggest the extensive steppes and wastes of Siberia. He exploits Russian Orthodox liturgical modes and derives inspiration from the great nineteenth-century Russian composers; however, sometimes he draws on their more saccharine violin style for his love scenes. His music for the Karel Reisz’s Isadora sounds disconcertingly like that for Doctor Zhivago, and—of particular danger when inspiration is lacking—it falls even more deeply than the Lean scores into those 1930s paradigms that Korngold, Steiner, and Herrmann created. Passage to India, on the other hand, succeeds. Perhaps, the inspiration of Indian music returned to him some of his former strength. Be that as it may, his still old-fashioned score fits this anachronistically shot epic—with outdoor night-scenes shot in the studio.

While continuing to draw on a wide musical background and resulting vocabulary, Jarre has moved in the direction of more austerity and down below the level of consciousness. He works in touches, rich and evocative, but still touches. Sometimes, natural or human sounds are either suggested or actually employed to such an extent that one is not able to determine where the composer’s contributions end and the sound-effects editor’s begin. When the music is assertive, it is the music of other composers chosen for the moment, or it derives from some local or exotic source—this last can lead into some fine inventive veins. In Taps, he not only uses the actual theme suggested in the title to great effect, but, for really highly charged moments, he has a brass choir playing fragments of the theme in a closely knit polyphonic texture, bearing an uncanny resemblance to Wagner’s “Rhine Journey” music for The Twilight of the Gods; however, the subtlety of applying the motif is Jarre’s and had nothing to do with the German’s heavy-handed reiterations. Mad Max: Beyond Thunderdome also has a few touches of conventional orchestra instruments that have a Wagnerian feel.

Jarre shows himself quite able to employ synthesized music in his score for Peter Weir’s The Year of Living Dangerously (supplemented by music in this vein by Vangelis). Jarre’s quiet eerie dissonance is apt accompaniment for the walk through the Jakarta (Manila) slums of Billy (Linda Hunt) and Guy (Mel Gibson). This music is created by muted percussive instruments and a sense of muted strings from a synthesizer, composed by Jarre and programmed by Andrew Thomas Wilson. The tonality for the music of this slum scene and other darker moments of the film seems to be based on a whole-tone scale, so much favored by Debussy; it is an amorphous, mysterious scale. Jarre, however, bases most of his film music on another scale loved by Debussy; it is, appropriate to the setting, a five-tone or pentatonic scale—that of most far-Eastern music.

As with Lean, Weir has discovered an ideal collaborator in Jarre—but the change from the one to the other offers a significant metamorphosis. As if to match the neocolonial aura that plays about Lean’s films, Jarre has given us exotic embellishments. However, for Weir’s truly postcolonial efforts, Jarre has made every effort to use real instruments. While his music for Lean often seems to be what Edward Said would label “Orientalism” or a sort of Westernized Eastern decorative pastiche, Jarre really dug into the Indonesian musical traditions. He went for what in 1982 were relatively untapped sources for inspiration: the ceremonial music of Java and the temple music of Bali. Weir has always advocated periodic dunkings of Westerners in alternative cultures. C. H. Koch, the author of the novel on which Dangerously is based, has repeated denied that Australians are Western, but really as much a part of Southeast Asia as Indonesia—at least, in potential and prospect. Further, Jarre uses the traditional Javanese gamelan, which translates as “orchestra” consisting of drums, gongs, and a stringed instrument. The actual gamelan players for the film were from the Department of Music of Sydney University. The sprightly, cheerful music that accompanies Billy and Guy’s first moments of journalistic camaraderie consists of a gamelan accompaniment that moves at the fast tempo most characteristic of the style. But for quieter moments—such as the symbolically important moments when Billy shows Guy the wayang puppets or Guy searches for his news story along a highway snaking through emerald rice paddies—Jarre has slowed down the tempo. Another sign of Jarre’s postcolonialism is that what is good for Indonesia is also good for the United States. In Dead Poets Society, Jarre uses the dulcimer to accompany shots of the Delaware countryside and bagpipes to fit the Anglo-Scotch pretensions of the Eastern prep-school where the film is set (St. Andrews); both instruments recur in the closing-credits music.

There is one outstanding aspect of the Jarre and Weir collaboration that, while it goes beyond the perimeters usually set for judging a film composer, is resonant in its capacity to reveal the psychology of the characters and touch that of the audience: the music chosen from the canonical or classic masterpieces. Their approach is a compromise between an original orchestral score employed throughout and the use of massive portions of the classics—the approach one usually associates with Stanley Kubrick. For Year of Living Dangerously, Jarre leaves the lushness of orchestration, as it were, up to Richard Strauss, whose “September” from his Four Last Songs plays—appearing diagnostically, as if Billy is playing a recording—at moments of great psychological tension for Guy and especially for Billy. The old-fashioned music of the autumnal glow in European culture and imperialism is juxtaposed with the vitality and freshness of the music of the Third World. Music from an album suite by Vangelis was chosen for the lovers’ dangerous post-curfew ride to a night of love. For Dead Poets Society, Beethoven—again introduced diagnostically, as if played on a phonograph by the teacher hero (Robin Williams)—matches the dynamic self-assertion that is advocated by this teacher. An almost nonexistent original score for Fearless is supplemented by fragments from music of Penderecki and culminated by an impressive selection from that of Gorecki.

—Rodney Farnsworth

JARRICO, Paul

Writer. Nationality: American. Born: Israel Shapiro in Los Angeles, 12 January 1915. Family: Married writer-editor Sylvia Gussin (divorced); married Lia Benedetti; son: Bill Jarrico. Education: A.B., University of Southern California, 1936. Military Service: Served in the United States Merchant Marine, 1943; served in the United States Navy, 1945–46. Career: Joined the National Student League and Young Communist League, 1930s; joined the Communist Party; began writing B-film scripts for Columbia Pictures, 1937; made his A-film breakthrough with his script for Tom, Dick and Harry, 1941; refused to testify before the House UnAmerican Activities Committee, and was blacklisted, 1952; produced Salt of the Earth, made with other Hollywood blacklistees, 1953; worked as a television writer on such series as The Phil Silvers Show and The Defenders, mid-1950s–early 1960s; left the United States for Europe, where he worked for the following two decades, 1958; returned to the United States and eventually wrote a play, Leonardo, and taught film at the University of California, Santa Barbara (where he was Regents Lecturer and visiting assistant professor of writing), 1977–87; served as executive story editor of the TV series Call to Glory and Fortune Dane, 1984–86. Awards: Academy Award nomination, Best Original Screenplay, for Tom, Dick and Harry, 1941; Lt. Robert Meltzer Award, 1999 (awarded posthumously). Died: In an auto accident, while driving from Beverly Hills to his home in Ojai, California, 28 October 1997.

Films as Screenwriter:

1938 Little Adventuress (Lederman) (co-story only); No Time to Marry (Lachman) (also story); I Am the Law (Hall) (contributed to script)
1939 Beauty for the Asking (Tryon) (co-sc)
1941 Tom, Dick and Harry (Kanin) (also story); The Face Behind the Mask (Florey) (co-sc); Men of the Timberland (Rawlins) (story only)
1943 Thousands Cheer (Sidney) (co-sc and story); Song of Russia (Rotoff) (co-sc)
1946 Little Giant (Seiter) (co-sc)
1948 The Search (Zimmermann) (co-sc)
1949 Not Wanted (Clifton, Lupino) (co-sc)
1950 The White Tower (Tetzlaff)
1952 The Las Vegas Story (Stevenson) (co-sc, originally uncredited)
1957 The Girl Most Likely (Leisen) (story and co-sc, originally uncredited)
1960 5 Branded Women (Ritt) (co-sc, originally uncredited)
1961 All Night Long (Dearden) (co-sc, billed as Peter Achilles)
1965 Treasure of the Aztecs (Siodmak) (uncredited)
1966 Wer Kennet Jonny R? (Who Killed Johnny Ringo) (Madrid) (co-sc; as Peter Achilles)
1968 Le Rouble a Deux Faces (The Day The Hot Line Got Hot) (Perier)
1975 Sarajevsky Atentat (The Day That Shook the World; Assassination at Sarajevo) (Bulajic) (co-sc)
1988 Messenger of Death (Thompson)
1992 Stalin (Passer—for TV) (uncredited rewrite)

Other Films:

1950 The Hollywood Ten (short) (doc) (pr)
1953 Salt of the Earth (Biberman) (pr)
1987 Legacy of the Hollywood Blacklist (Chaikin) (doc) (creative consultant)

Publications

By JARRICO: articles—

Paul Jarrico’s career is inextricably linked to the Hollywood blacklist—and to spirit and daring with which he responded to the post-World War II House UnAmerican Activities Committee (HUAC) witchhunt. Back in the early 1950s, when he was called to testify before HUAC, Jarrico took the Fifth Amendment. Not only did he recoil at naming names before the committee but challenged the very nature of HUAC when he declared, in his testimony, “I should be happy to help this committee uncover subversion, but one man’s subversion is another man’s patriotism. I consider the activities of this committee subversive of the American Constitution.” He added, “I believe this country was founded on the doctrine of freedom, the right of a man to advocate anything he wishes—advocate it, agitate for it, organize for it, attempt to win a majority for it. And I think that any committee that intimidates people, that makes it impossible for people to express their opinions freely, is subverting the basic doctrine of the United States and its constitution.”

Because of the blacklist, Jarrico’s work as a screenwriter is a footnote to his career. Yet even before he was exungped from Hollywood, his screen output was markedly uneven. His best film by far is Tom, Dick and Harry, a romantic comedy about a telephone operator who is determined to marry for money but ends up with the man she truly loves, an idealistic garage mechanic. After entering the industry and toiling on several B-film scripts, Tom, Dick and Harry brought Jarrico to the A-list forefront and earned him an Academy Award nomination. Otherwise his pre-blacklist credits are a hodgepodge of features, ranging from the Abbott and Costello comedy Little Giant and the Gene Kelly-Kathryn Grayson musical Thousands Cheer to Song of Russia, about an American orchestra conductor’s love affair with a Russian musician. He also co-scripted The Search, a penetrating drama about a young Czechoslovakian concentration camp survivor who is looked after by an American GI while his mother searches the prison camps for him. Jarrico’s work here is overshadowed by the contributions of others, and the controversy surrounding star Montgomery Clift’s rewriting and improvising his lines.

Jarrico admittedly was far-left-of-center; he was a member of the Communist Party, joining in 1937 and remaining on its rolls until the 1950s. According to film historian Larry Ceplair, in the late 1930s the “younger screenwriters—Richard Collins, Budd Schulberg, Ring Lardner, Jr., and Paul Jarrico, among others” formed “a special (party) branch, one in which they could explore how to communicate their radical political and social ideas in scripts and where they could discuss revolutionary theories and techniques of moviemaking. The men and women in this branch...fiercely debated their creative role within the Hollywood movie industry.” Yet it can be said that Jarrico’s politics subverted the content of his scripts, rendering a film like Song of Russia little more than sly communist propaganda? The film’s plot is “pro-Russia,” to be sure. In his “friendly” testimony before HUAC, Robert Taylor (who played the conductor) declared that he believed Song of Russia to be “distastefully Communist” and “favoring Russian ideologies, institutions, and ways of life.” On the other hand, is Song of Russia innocently supportive of Russia in the same way that Mrs. Miniver is pro-British? After all, the film was made when the United States and Russia were allies, struggling for survival against a common Axis enemy.

Similarly, is Tom, Dick and Harry an anti-capitalist diatribe because its heroine rejects Tom and Dick—the first an “ambitious capitalist” and the second a wealthy man—for Harry, a worker-of-the-world? Or is it simply a cleverly plotted romantic comedy in which the heroine opts for true love rather than materialistic comfort? Conspiracy theorists might find hidden meaning in Beauty for the Asking, one of Jarrico’s B-films, because it is the story of a money-hungry man who rejects a working woman but comes squirming back after she invents a beauty cream. Another Jarrico B film is The Face Behind the Mask, in which a law-abiding Hungarian immigrant turns to crime when he cannot find employment after being disfigured during a hotel fire. Is this film an innocent entertainment, or is it loaded with left-wing propaganda because it is the story of a man who is denied a livelihood because he is “different”? One can view The Face Behind the Mask, Beauty for the Asking, Song of Russia, and Tom, Dick and Harry decades after their release, and render an opinion.

In the 1940s, Jarrico and his colleague Richard Collins collaborated on the scripts for Thousands Cheer, Little Giant, and the notorious Song of Russia. By the early 1950s, now-former co-writers had become public enemies, denouncing and accusing one another in a highly politicized arena. In April 1952, Collins “named names” before HUAC, testifying that Jarrico and others—including Schulberg, Robert Rossen, Lardner, Jr., Frank Tuttle, Waldo Salt, Abraham Polonsky—were card-carrying Communists. The following month, Schulberg named Jarrico, Salt, Lardner, and others as Communist Party members. Yet unlike Collins and Schulberg, Jarrico valued moral principle over blowing with the shifting winds and refused to kowtow to the HUAC.

Even before his testimony, Jarrico reportedly knew he was going to be blacklisted. At the time, he was under contract to RKO, and found that he was barred from the lot on the morning he was served his HUAC subpoena. As reported in the 7 April 1952 New York Times, Howard Hughes, the studio’s principal stockholder and managing director, refused to give Jarrico “screen credit on a movie.” The film in question was The Las Vegas Story, and this development resulted in a breach of contract accusation against RKO, filed by the Screen Writers Guild. By contract, the Guild had the authority to determine the writing credits on a film. Yet at the time, Jarrico’s name was not restored to the film’s credits.

Jarrico was anything but passive in his response to his blacklisting. He was one of 23 film workers who in 1953 filed a $51,750,000 lawsuit in the California State Supreme Court, charging that they had been barred from working in Hollywood. The following year, it was ruled that the motion picture industry had the right to blacklist employees who had refused to testify before HUAC. Meanwhile,
Jarrico and fellow blackliettes Michael Wilson (who was his brother-in-law) and Herbert Biberman set out to make Salt of the Earth, the celebrated drama about striking Mexican-American zinc miners—and the only independent film made by blacklisted Hollywood talent. Salt of the Earth is an extraordinary film, a hard-hitting exploration of class and sexual struggle in the United States. The efforts to prevent Salt of the Earth from being produced and, then, distributed, are legendary.

In the late 1950s Jarrico moved to Europe, where he lived and worked for two decades. The first of the relatively few movie scripts he wrote were credited to a pseudonym, “Peter Achilles.” All, though, were artistically underwhelming. His final credit is 1988’s Messenger of Death, an unexceptional Charles Bronson mystery thriller. Jarrico’s later years are distinguished not by any script he authored, but by his remaining at the forefront of the battle to restore the screen credits of blacklisted artists. He even requested that his name be withheld from his work until all others had their credits restored.

On 27 October 1997, the Screen Actors Guild, the Directors Guild of America, the Writers Guild of America, and the American Federation of Television and Radio Artists produced “Hollywood Remembers the Blacklist,” an event commemorating the 50th anniversary of the citing of the Hollywood Ten for contempt of Congress for refusing to divulge their political associations during their HUAC testimony. The evening featured dramatic presentations recreating incidents from the era, with Kevin Spacey portraying Jarrico. The 82-year-old screenwriter was present and he and fellow blacklistee Ring Lardner, Jr., won standing ovations after recalling the toll of the times, and how the only independent film made by blacklisted Hollywood talent. The celebrated drama about striking Mexican-American zinc miners—a remake of Tom, Dick and Harry, 5 Branded Women, and All Night Long.

In July 1998, nine months after his death, the Writers Guild of America restored credit on four films Jarrico had scripted during his blacklist years: It’s in the Bag (Prévét—short); La Vie d’un fleuve: La Seine (Lods—short); Quatorze Juillet (Clair).

---

JAUBERT, Maurice

Composer. Nationality: French. Born: Nice, 3 January 1900. Education: Attended Lycée Masséna and Nice Conservatory; studied law at the Sorbonne, Paris; studied music with Albert Groz. Military Service: 1920–22; 1939—recalled into the army, and killed in action. Family: Maried the singer Marthe Bréga. Career: Practiced law briefly, then music director for Pleyela Records, 1925, and music director for Pathé-Natan Studios, 1930–35; also composed music for orchestra and for stage works. Died: In Azerailles, 19 June 1940.

Films as Composer:

1929 Die wunderbare Lüge der Nina Petrowna (Schwarz) (French accompaniment)

1930 Le Hyas (Painlevé—short); Le Petit Chaperon rouge (Cavalcanti); Caprelles et pantopodes (Painlevé—short) (co)

1931 Au pays du scalp (de Wavrin); Le Bernard-l’ermite (Painlevé—short); Ostende, reine de plages (Storck—short)

1932 L’Affaire est dans le sac (It’s in the Bag) (Prévét—short); La Vie d’un fleuve: La Seine (Lods—short); Quatorze Juillet (Clair)

1933 Zéro de conduite (Vigo—short); Trois vies et une corde (Storck—short); L’Atlante (Vigo)

1934 Obsession (L’Homme mystérieux) (M. Tourneur—short) (co); Le Dernier Milliardaire (Clair); En Crète sans les dieux (Leenhardt and Zuber—short)

1935 L’Île de Pâques (Fernhout—short) (+ narrator); Barbe-Bleue (Painlevé and Bertrand—short); Trois-mâts ‘‘Mercator’’ (Fernhout—short)

1936 Mayerling (Litvak) (co); Regards sur la Belgique ancienne (Storck—short)

1937 Un Carnet de bal (Duvivier); We Live in Two Worlds (Cavalcanti—short); Drôle de drame (Bizarre Bizarre) (Carné); Les Maisons de la misère (Storck—short)

1938 Les Filles du Rhône (Paulin); Le Quai des brumes (Port of Shadows) (Carné); L’Esclave blanche (Sorkin) (co); La Fin du jour (Duvivier)

1939 Le Jour se lève (Daybreak) (Carné)

1940 Viols d’Ingres (Brunius—short); Village dans Paris: Montmartre (Harts—short)

1945 Solutions françaises (Painlevé—short) (produced 1939)

Films as Music Director:

1932 Poil de carotte (Duvivier); Der Traumende Mund (Dreaming Lips) (Czinner) (+ ro); Mirages de Paris (Ozep)

1933 Le Petit Roi (Duvivier)

1934 Les Misérables (Bernard—3 parts); Sapho (Perret); Sans famille (M. Allégret); Les Nuits moscovites (Granowsky)

1935 La Vie parisienne (Siodmak); L’Equipage (Lütvak); Terre d’amour (Cloche—short)

1939 Nuit de décembre (Bernhardt) (+ ro)

Film as Consultant:

1937 Ces dames aux chapeaux verts (Cloche)

Films Using Precomposed Music by Jaubert:

1971 L’Histoire d’Adèle H. (Truffaut)

1976 L’Argent de poche (Truffaut)

1977 L’Homme qui aimait les femmes (Truffaut)

1978 La Chambre verte (Truffaut)

1985 Le Temps détruit: lettres d’une guerre 1939–40 (Beuchot)

Publications

By JAUBERT: article—

On JAUBERT: book—

On JAUBERT: articles—

Kosovsky, B., ‘‘Musique de films de Marcel Carné,’’ in Film Score Monthly (Los Angeles), April 1994.

Film en Télévision (Brussels), no. 458, January 1996.

* * *

Initially destined to become a partner in his father’s law firm, Maurice Jaubert rejected this conventional opening to pursue a less predictable career in music. After early studies at the Nice Conservatory, he pursued his musical education under Albert Groz in Paris and came into contact with future leading composers of his generation: Georges Auric and Arthur Honneger. In the course of the 1920s, as film moved from the silent to the sound era, Jaubert gained important experience both of the music industry and as a music critic and composer. As director of the perforated sheet music company Pleyela, he came to know Jean Grémillon and Maurice Ravel, whilst as music critic for Esprit, he began to formulate, under the pseudonym Maurice Gineste, an aesthetic of film music.

His initial experience with silent film was the selection of suitable music to accompany the images, notably for Renoir’s Nana (1926) and Grémillon’s Maldone (1927). Meanwhile, his own creative talents found expression in commissions for the theatre, Le Magicien Prodigeux (1925), Terminus (1928), and for Falconetti in the cabaret Attractions (1928). These excursions into other art forms further developed his conception of how music should eventually become part of film, not simply as a pleonastic accompaniment, but as an integral part of the film’s dynamics.

In the following decade, successive scores marked out his immense contribution to the now rapidly evolving sound cinema. After providing music for shorts by Jean Painlevé, notably Caprelles et pantopodes (1930) which drew on themes by Scarlatti, and Le Bernhard-l’hermite (1931) using themes by Bellini, Jaubert produced some of his finest original compositions for René Clair, Jean Vigo, and, in the darker late 1930s, for Marcel Carné.

The music for Clair’s films demonstrated the composer’s gift for underpinning the director’s message. In the bittersweet Quatorze Juillet (1932), the theme song “A Paris dans chaque faubourg” (composed by Grémillon, but developed by Jaubert) captured the poignancy of transient happiness and rapidly became a popular success, while for the heavily satirical Le Dernier Millionaire (1934), telling of the marriage of a megalomaniac financier to a bankrupt princess, the pomposity of the court is deflated by a clever burlesque of the national anthem.

With Vigo, Jaubert achieved a particularly fruitful partnership. His highly inventive score for Zéro de Conduite (1933) echoed in musical terms the subversive thrust of Vigo’s iconoclastic images. In the dream-like sequence of schoolboy rebellion, for example, Jaubert experimented by inverting his original score to achieve a suitably surrealistic soundtrack. Perhaps the more potent success of the partnership, however, came with L’Atalante (1933), where again Vigo experimented with dream sequences and the depiction of affective memory. In a highly evocative score characterized by simple themes and pulsating rhythms imitating the boat’s engine, Jaubert created a rare poetic lyricism to match Vigo’s erotic vision. Particularly powerful elements include Jules’s rendering of “Le Chant des marinsiers” on his accordion and the use of the composer’s preferred solo instrument, the alto saxophone, in scenes of tender intimacy.

Jaubert’s ability to conjure up atmosphere was again a key element in the success of Duvivier’s Un Carnet de bal (1937), where the haunting melancholy of the composer’s valse grise (inspired by Sibelius’ Valse triste), provided the all-pervading tone of nostalgia essential to the widow’s recollections. An elegiac, increasingly fatalistic mood is also central to Carné’s films at the close of the decade: Le Quai des brumes (1938), Hôtel du nord (1938), and Le jour se lève (1939). The celebrated poetic realism of these films is frequently defined in terms of visual style alone, thereby failing to give sufficient recognition to Jaubert’s music as a vital ingredient in the creation of the characteristic mood. The downbeat seediness permeating Hôtel du nord, the doom-laden atmosphere of Le Quai des brumes or the fatalistic mood of Le Jour se lève are all derived in no small degree from the suggestive scores composed to encapsulate precisely these values.

Reflecting on the role of the film composer in Footnotes to the Film, Jaubert was adamantly that music should not be used simply “to annotate the action.” For him, music should be used sparingly rather than as a continuous background accompaniment, and deployed to its maximum effect to suggest subjective states “when the image escapes from strict realism and calls for the poetic extension of music.” Resourceful and innovative, Jaubert preferred to develop scores around strong melodies with frequently unconventional harmonies. His intimate understanding of the film medium, with his sensitivity to the internal rhythms of the image structure, combined with a creative talent which is rare amongst film composers. In that sadly single decade of the 1930s, Jaubert achieved an outstanding position as a film composer, providing leading directors with some 38 scores, both for short- and feature-length productions. Neither did his involvement stop at composition, for as Director of Music at the Pathé-Nathan studios between 1930–35, he conducted several musical scores for the studios’ films and on two occasions actually appeared in the role of a conductor, in Mélo (1932) and Nuit de décembre (1939).

Although essentially a composer for the French cinema, Jaubert was tempted to work briefly in London, where he scored films for the celebrated GPO film unit, most notably Cavalcanti’s We Live in Two Worlds (1937).

The most fitting homage to Jaubert’s enduring qualities came from François Truffaut when, for four of his films (L’Histoire d’Adèle H. [1971], L’Argent de poche [1976], L’Homme qui aimait les femmes [1977], La Chambre verte [1978]), he chose to use the composer’s music, and compositions which had not initially been written for the screen. Thus in L’Histoire d’Adèle H., Truffaut draws on orchestral compositions (Suite française from 1932 and Sonata à due from 1936), as well as music originally composed for Giraudoux’s La Guerre de Troie n’aura pas lieu (1935). Few film composers can have advanced further the recognition of music as a discrete and integral component of film aesthetics, either by their compositions or by their theoretical writings, than Maurice Jaubert.

—R. F. Cousins

JEAKINS, Dorothy

Films as Costume Designer:

1948 Joan of Arc (Fleming) (co) 1949 Samson and Delilah (DeMille) (co) 1952 Belles on Their Toes (Levin); The Big Sky (Hawks); The Greatest Show on Earth (DeMille) (co); Les Misérables (Milestone); Lure of the Wilderness (Nuguesco); My Cousin Rachel (Koster); The Outcasts of Poker Flat (Newman); Stars andStripes Forever (Koster); Treasure of the Golden Condor (Daves) 1953 Beneath the Twelve Mile Reef (Webb); City of Bad Men (Jones); Inferno (Baker); The Kid from Left Field (Jones); Niagara (Hathaway); Titanic (Nuguesco); White Witch Doctor (Hathaway) 1954 Three Coins in the Fountain (Nuguesco) 1956 Friendly Persuasion (Wyler) 1957 The Ten Commandments (DeMille) (co) 1958 South Pacific (Logan) 1959 Green Mansions (M. Ferrer) 1960 Elmer Gantry (R. Brooks); Let’s Make Love (Cukor); The Unforgiven (Huston) 1961 The Children’s Hour (Wyler) 1962 All Fall Down (Frankenheimer); The Music Man (da Costa) 1964 The Best Man (Schaffner); Ensign Pulver (Logan); The Night of the Iguana (Huston) 1965 The Fool Killer (Gonzalez); The Sound of Music (Wise) 1966 Any Wednesday (Miller); Hawaii (Hill); Violent Journey 1967 The Flim-Flam Man (Kershner); Reflections in a Golden Eye (Huston) 1968 Finian’s Rainbow (Coppola); The Fixer (Frankenheimer); The Stalking Moon (Mulligan) 1969 True Grit (Hathaway) 1970 Little Big Man (Penn); The Molly Maguires (Ritt) 1972 Fat City (Huston); Fuzz (Colla) 1973 The Iceman Cometh (Frankenheimer) 1974 Young Frankenstein (M. Brooks) 1975 The Hindenburg (Wise) 1977 Audrey Rose (Wise) 1978 The Betsy (Petrie) 1981 The Postman Always Rings Twice (Rafelson); On Golden Pond (Rydell) 1987 The Dead (The Dubliners) (Huston)

Publications

On JEAKINS: articles—

* * *

Dorothy Jeakins was abandoned by her natural parents for unknown reasons, and she had an unhappy childhood. She lived with a foster mother who frequently whipped her and threatened to send her to reform school. Often left alone, she would roam the streets of Los Angeles as a young child and ask people for free food and clothes. She called it a “Dickensian existence.” She has described herself as “pathologically shy and neurotically modest,” but very secure in her sense of taste and style, with the “sensitive soul of an artist.” Perhaps as a result of her shyness, virtually nothing has been written about Jeakins or her impressive film credits.

At Fairfax High School she found plays to be a “sweet escape into fantasy.” Encouraged into drama by sympathetic teachers, she discovered her vocation when she visited a costume house and found a means of interpreting the plays she loved through costume. She attended Otis Art Institute on a scholarship and continued to frequent the public library to read and illustrate the characters of plays.

She worked for the WPA at the age of 19 during the Depression, and then moved on to Disney studios as an illustrator for $16 a week until a strike left her unemployed. She next became an illustrator of fashion layouts for I. Magnin’s advertising department. Eventually a studio art director saw her sketches and hired her as an assistant designer for Joan of Arc, her first major film for which she won her first Oscar. (She had also been an assistant to the designer Ernst Dryden for Dr. Rhythm, 1938.)

Jeakins has an impressive number of credits, almost equally divided between the theater and motion pictures. Some plays she designed for on Broadway, she later designed as films, including South Pacific and The Sound of Music.

Jeakins’s noted specialty is for ethnic and period costumes, as well as her use of color. With each film Jeakins considered how she could use costume in a new way, and when searching for inspiration for the color scheme considered such natural elements as “wet stones or peonies or pullet-eggs beige and white or Chinese-coolie blues.” The designer Edith Head once commented that Jeakins had a particularly good eye for color. On a separate occasion, Jeakins said candidly of Edith Head that “her work is extremely mediocre . . . but Edith deserves a lot of credit for hanging in there.” Jeakins was also budget-conscious when she worked on films and made elegant costumes with inexpensive muslin. As a designer, she said of herself, ‘I’m dependable, experienced, organized, aesthetic, creative.’

—Susan Perez Prichard

JEANSON, Henri

Died: In Honfleur, 6 November 1970.

Films as Writer:

1932 Le Jugement de minuit (Esway)
1933 Les Aventures du roi Pausole (Granowsky); La Dame de chez Maxim’s (A. Korda); Bach Millionnaire (Wulschleger); Mariage à responsabilité limitée (de Limut)
1934 Sidoine Panache (Wulschleger)
1935 Marchand d’amour (Gréville)
1936 Mister Flow (Compliments of Mr. Flow) (Siodmak); Le Chemin de Rio (Siodmak)
1937 Pépé le Moko (Duvivier); Un Carnet de bal (Duvivier); Le Mensonge de Nina Petrovna (The Lie of Nina Petrovna) (Tourjansky); Prison sans barreaux (Moguy); Les Rois du sport (Colombier)
1938 Entrée des artistes (The Curtain Rises) (M. Allégret); Le Patriote (The Mad Emperor) (Tourneur); Hôtel du nord (Carné); Le Drame de Shanghai (Pabst); Tarakanova (Ozep)
1942 La Nuit fantastique (L’Herbier)
1943 L’Honorable Catherine L’Herbier
1944 Florence est folle (Lacombe)
1945 Carmen (Christian-Jaque)—produced 1943); Boule de suif (Angel and Sinner) (Christian-Jaque); Farandole (Zwoboda); Le Jugement dernier (Chanas)
1946 Un Revenant (A Lover’s Return) (Christian-Jaque)
1947 Les Maudits (The Damned) (Clément); Carré de valets (Berthomieu); Copie conforme (Dréville); La Taverne du poisson couronné (Chanas)
1948 Les Amoureux sont seuls au monde (Monelle) (Decoin); La Vie en rose (Loves of Colette) (Faurez); Aux yeux du souvenant (Souvenir) (Delannoy); Scandale (Le Hénaff)
1949 Au royaume des cieux (The Sinners) (Duvivier); Entre onze heures et minuit (Decoin)
1950 Lady Paname (+ d); Souvenirs perdus (Christian-Jaque); Meurtres (Three Sinners) (Pottier)
1951 Le Garçon sauvage (Savage Triangle) (Delannoy); Fanfan la Tulipe (Fanfan the Tulip) (Christian-Jaque); Identité judiciaire (Bromberger); Barbe-Bleue (Christian-Jaque); L’Homme de ma vie (Lefranc)
1952 La Minute de verité (The Moment of Truth) (Delannoy); La Fête à Henriette (Holiday for Henrietta) (Duvivier)
1953 ‘Lysistrata’ ep. of Destinées (Daughters of Destiny) (Christian-Jaque)
1954 Madame Du Barry (Christian-Jaque)
1955 Nana (Christian-Jaque); Marguerite de la nuit (Autant-Lara)
1957 Pot-Bouille (Duvivier)
1958 Montparnasse 19 (Modigliani of Montparnasse) (Becker); Maxime (Verneuil); Marie-Octobre (Duvivier); Guingette (Delannoy)
1959 La Vache et le prisonnier (The Cow and I) (Verneuil)
1961 Vive Henri IV, vive l’amour (Autant-Lara); Le Puits aux trois verités (Three Faces of Sin) (Villiers); Madame Sans-Gêne (Madame) (Christian-Jaque)
1962 Le Crime ne paie pas (Crime Does Not Pay) (Oury); Le Diable et les dix commandements (The Devil and the Ten Commandments) (Duvivier)
1963 La Glaise et la balance (Two Are Guilty) (Cayatte); Les Bonnes Causes (Don’t Tempt the Devil) (Christian-Jaque)
1964 Le Repas des faves (Christian-Jaque)
1965 Le Majordôme (Delannoy)
1966 Paris au mois d’août (Paris in the Month of August) (Granier-Deferré)

Film as Dialogue Supervisor:

1938 Gargousse (Wulschleger)

Publications

By JEANSON: books—

With J. Galtier-Boissière, Scandales de la IVe (play), Paris, 1955.

With others, Pépé le Moko (script) in Avant-Scène (Paris), 1 June 1981.

By JEANSON: article—

Image et Son (Paris), March 1968.

On JEANSON: articles—

Cinémonde (Paris), 20 February 1953.
Cinémonde (Paris), 30 June 1959.
Skrien (Amsterdam), March 1979.
Positif (Paris), November 1993.
French Review, March 1996.
Positif (Paris), November 1996.
Sight and Sound (London), March 1999.
Henri Jeanson is the author of some of the most famous, most quoted dialogues of French cinema. It is he who wrote the unforgettable exchanges between Arletty and Louis Jouvet in Carné’s Hôtel du nord, concise and brilliantly witty, and those for Marc Allégret’s Entrée des artistes, equally humorous as delivered by Jouvet in his characteristically dry tone of understatement.

Indeed, Jeanson’s dialogues were most successful when specifically written for performers whom he knew well and whose talents he appreciated. This was how he preferred to work and was especially true for Louis Jouvet, for whom he wrote the dialogues for some 10 films (including Stiodmak’s Mister Flow, Duvivier’s Un Carnet de bal, and Christian-Jaque’s Un Revenant). But if the relationship of dialogue to the accent and presence of an actor or actress contributes to its success (one thinks not only of Jouvet, but of Arletty in Hôtel du nord squalling in her inimitable Parisian accent, “Atmosphère, atmosphère! Non, mais est-ce que j’ai une gueule d’atmosphère?”), it is also at the heart of the weakness of many of the films on which Jeanson worked. Entrée des artistes, for example, although studded with some brilliantly witty dialogue and an outstanding performance by Jouvet, lacks any real consistent depth, and the awkwardly presented and overstated moral conclusion shows the film up as little more than a vehicle for the talents of both Jouvet and Jeanson. Ultimately, Jeanson’s preoccupation with writing for performers meant that he often failed to write for characters. Behind the dazzling dialogues there is often neither substance nor development. Jeanson’s ability to tell a story falls short of his ability to be comic, and he is often guilty of allowing his taste for witty rhetoric to dominate the less ostentatious task of good narrative construction. Consequently, the films on which Jeanson worked are usually memorable for certain scenes or dialogues rather than any more profound moral or philosophical vision or poetry of the quality of the screenwriting of Jacques Prévert. In Entrée des artistes, for example, one remembers Jouvet’s visit to the laundry run by the parents of one of his pupils, and some of the exchanges with these characters. In Pépé le Moko, one remembers the death of the informer, Charpin, and the scene in which Jean Gabin and Mireille Balin reminisce and love each other through their memories of Paris. In Hôtel du nord, the shrill exasperation of Arletty rebounding against the placid resignation of Jouvet is one of the most quoted passages of French cinema of the 1930s. Jeanson’s writing is best suited to the deliberately fragmented narrative of Un Carnet de bal, a film composed of seven sketches united by one common character.

Considering the true author of a film to be the dialogue writer, Jeanson staunchly opposed both the notion of filmmaking as team work and the director as “auteur,” seeing the latter as little more than a functional artisan. This apparent lack of respect for directors (he once described Marcel Carné as just “one of Prévert’s thousand and one little inventions”) meant that Jeanson never established such long-lasting creative collaborations as those of Carné and Prévert or Autant-Lara with Aurecne and Bost. Rather, Jeanson worked for a variety of directors, often supplying the dialogues for scenarios written by other screenwriters. For Christian-Jaque, for example, Jeanson wrote the dialogues for Carmen for a scenario by Charles Spaak and Jacques Viot; those for Boule de siffl for a scenario by Louis d’Hée; and those for René Clément’s Les Maudits were written for a scenario by Jacques Companeez and Alexandroff. Having made something of a speciality out of supplying dialogues for scenarios prepared by others, Jeanson’s work lacks any real thematic coherence, and he worked on films as different as L’Herbieur’s burlesque comedy L’Honorale Catherine, Clément’s drama Les Maudits, and Duvivier’s melodramatic romance set in a girl’s boarding school, Au royaume des cieux. His best work, however, is for films in which he wrote the scenario himself, as in the case of Pépé le Moko and Un Revenant, or actively collaborated in its writing, as for Hôtel du nord (written with Jean Aurecne).

Apart from his writing for film, Jeanson wrote a number of plays and worked throughout his life as a journalist, writing polemical articles for newspapers such as Bonsoir, L’Oeuvre, L’Aurore, and Le Canard Enchaîné. Like many of his films, Jeanson’s journalism relied on his irrepressible wit, but its caustic irreverence often got him into trouble with those whom he delighted in attacking. He was an editor of the Ciné-Liberté journal in 1936 and worked alongside Jean Renoir on the fund-raising for La Marseillaise. He later considered Renoir to be guilty of political opportunism during the war and refers to him in his memoirs as “Jean Renoir, ou la grand désillusion.” Perhaps symptomatic of his ability to offend everyone, Jeanson was both imprisoned by the Germans during World War II and then accused at the Liberation of “favouring enemy plans.” After the war, his newspaper articles lost nothing of their ferocity. In the late 1950s and early 1960s, he regularly selected the New Wave critics and filmmakers for attack. François Truffaut’s own brand of iconoclastic yet incisive criticism made him a particularly frequent target for Jeanson. And it was precisely the generation of New Wave directors which revolted against and then swept aside the sort of dialogue-centered filmmaking which Jeanson had always advocated and had clearly shown in the one film that he directed himself, Lady Paname.

—Richard Alwyn

JENKINS, George

Films as Art Director:

1946 The Best Years of Our Lives (Wyler)
1947 The Secret Life of Walter Mitty (McLeod); The Bishop’s Wife (Koster)
1948 A Song Is Born (Hawks); Enchantment (Reis)
1949 Little Women (LeRoy) (uncredited); Roseanna McCoy (Reis)
During a 45-year career that began with the prestigious The Best Years of Our Lives, George Jenkins specialized in creating environments which define “realism.” This “realism” most obviously manifests itself in the numerous sets which reflect actual locations: Louisa May Alcott’s childhood home for Little Women, the fifth-floor newsroom of the Washington Post for All the President’s Men, and a Harvard law classroom for The Paper Chase. Less obviously, but just as convincingly, Jenkins could recreate a lost or fictional setting, resembling Helen Keller’s home in Georgia for The Miracle Worker, and condensing World War II concentration camp photographs into an interior reevaluation of his life. The film’s colors are not continually threatening to disappear into the dark and fog of a nightmare. Jenkins said it was an opportunity to do sets where there really weren’t any sets at all. Night Moves employed vivid primary colors to transform the apparently tedious detective work of the protagonist into an interior reevaluation of his life. The film’s colors are not necessarily symbolic, but their placement in an otherwise dreary environment generates a disturbing space of doubt and confusion. More recently, Presumed Innocent’s courtroom and law offices seem almost banal, but their darkness and heavy furnishings generate an ominous claustrophobia that perfectly reflects Rusty Savage’s predicament.

Jenkins prided himself on his thorough research, precision, and an exacting use of props and set decorations. For example, he shipped three months of news-desk paperwork from the Washington Post to Hollywood for All the President’s Men. This fastidious attention to detail rewarded him with an Oscar. Jenkins also firmly believed in filmmaking as a collaborative art, consulting with director, actor, and cinematographer before drafting a final design. This attitude explains why he designed ten films for Alan J. Pakula, a director known for cinematic “texture” (on all levels). In a similar (and typical) manner, Jenkins worked closely with Jane Fonda on Klute as she decided which props of her character’s apartment she would use. Acutely aware that his sets must pass through the eyes of the cinematographer, he designed with the cinematographer in mind. The first to construct sets of normal size and perspective, he removed some of the cinematographer’s bothersome responsibilities.

Jenkins worked with many first-level cinematographers: Gregg Toland (The Best Years of Our Lives), Charles Lang (Wait until Dark), Nestor Almendros (Sophie’s Choice), Ghislain Cloquet (Mickey One), and Sven Nykvist (Starting Over, The Postman Always Rings Twice, and Dream Lover). His six collaborations with Gordon Willis (Klute, The Paper Chase, The Parallax View, All the President’s Men, Comes a Horseman, and Presumed Innocent) proved to be amongst his (and Willis’s) finest works.

—Greg S. Faller

Films as Writer:

1934 We Live Again (Mamoulian) (uncredited)
1935 Mutiny on the Bounty (Lloyd)
1936 Romeo and Juliet (Cukor)
1937 The Good Earth (Franklin)
1938 Spawn of the North (Hathaway); Marie Antoinette (Van Dyke)
1939 Rulers of the Sea (Lloyd)
1940 Northwest Passage (K. Vidor); Edison the Man (Brown)
1941 So Ends Our Night (Cromwell)
1944 Frenchman’s Creek (Leisen)
1946 Anna and the King of Siam (Cromwell)
1950 The Black Rose (Hathaway)
1951 Across the Wide Missouri (Wellman)
1953 Knights of the Round Table (Thorpe)
1955 Escape to Burma (Dwan); Pearl of the South Pacific (Dwan); Untamed (H. King)
1957 Gunsight Ridge (Lyon)
1959 The Naked Maja (Koster)
1965 The Sons of Katie Elder (Hathaway)

Publications

By JENNINGS: books—

No More Frontier (play), New York, 1931.

The Light upon the Mountains, music by Hall McIntyre Macklin, Moscow, Idaho, 1939.

On JENNINGS: articles—

* * *

Talbot Jennings was one of Hollywood’s most intelligent screenwriters, a protégé of Irving Thalberg who enjoyed a profitable career on prestigious films. Jennings specialized in historical drama and worked on the screenplays for some of the best in the genre, such as Mutiny on the Bounty, Northwest Passage, and Rulers of the Sea. He was also skilled at adaptation, as witness Bounty, Romeo and Juliet, The Good Earth, and Anna and the King of Siam.

At MGM, Thalberg chose Jennings to script his personal productions, a heady debut for a 30-year-old playwright. Mutiny on the Bounty was designed as Metro’s roadshow epic for 1935, based on the Charles Nordhoff and Norman Hall novel inspired by the 1787 mutiny on board the H.M.S. Bounty. Carey Wilson and John Farrow had already written an unsatisfactory adaptation when Jennings was assigned to work with director Frank Lloyd on an acceptable draft.

The veteran screenwriter Jules Furthman was brought in to work with the neophyte Jennings and the pair was further aided by the humorist Allen Rivkin. The Oscar-nominated screenplay was ultimately credited on screen to Jennings, Furthman, and Wilson. The film won a Best Picture Oscar, and has become a perennial with its drama between Fletcher Christian (Clark Gable) and the martinet Captain Bligh (Charles Laughton), martial justice, and survival at sea, inspiring two remakes (in 1962 and 1984).

Thalberg loaned Jennings to Samuel Goldwyn for an uncredited polish of Preston Sturges’ adaptation of Tolstoy’s Resurrection (released as We Live Again), to be followed by a solo job of adapting Shakespeare’s Romeo and Juliet. It was a formidable task, but Jennings retained the best of the play’s narrative, and remained faithful to the dialogue. While Norma Shearer and Leslie Howard were much older than the playwright intended, George Cukor directed with great taste, and Jennings’s work is certainly the best adaptation of Shakespeare in Hollywood history.

Jennings also contributed to two of Thalberg’s last productions, The Good Earth, based on Pearl Buck’s novel, and Marie Antoinette. His primary chore on The Good Earth was on the script’s structure, while the predominant feminine focus on the material was provided by Tess Slesinger and Claudine West. He worked uncredited (along with F. Scott Fitzgerald) on Marie Antoinette, a sprawling showcase for Norma Shearer.

After Thalberg’s death, Jennings signed with Paramount at the behest of The Good Earth’s coproducer, Albert Lewin. He was reunited with Jules Furthman for Spawn of the North, an extravagant adventure set in Alaska detailing the salmon wars between Russians and Americans. Jennings coauthored an original, Rulers of the Sea, with Frank Cavett and Richard Collins, then scripted the film for Bounty director Frank Lloyd. The result was a superior drama about the first steamship to make the Atlantic crossing.

Jennings returned to Metro to write two of Spencer Tracy’s finest vehicles, King Vidor’s Northwest Passage (with Laurence Stallings) and Edison the Man (with Brubady Foote). Northwest Passage was based on the Kenneth Roberts novel about Roger’s Rangers, the intrepid scouts of the French and Indian War. The film is a model of historical adventure, with stunning action setpieces such as the raid on the Abenaki village, and the trek through the wilderness balanced with superb characterization and period flavor. Edison the Man is one of the best film biographies, a sincere drama that succeeded in humanizing the legendary inventor.

Jennings freelanced throughout the rest of his career. He adapted Erich Maria Remarque’s novel Flotsam, one of his few contemporary scripts. Filmed as So Ends Our Night, it was a powerful tale about refugees from Nazi Germany. Other adaptations during the mid-1940s included a nonmusical version of Margaret Landon’s book Anna and the King of Siam (later popularized as The King and I), and the lush romantic drama Frenchman’s Creek, from the Daphne du Maurier novel about the love between a Lady (Joan Fontaine) and a pirate (Arturo de Cordova). Jennings dealt with the middle ages in Henry Hathaway’s The Black Rose, based on Thomas Costain’s novel, and Knights of the Round Table (coscripted with Jan Lustig and Noel Langley), from Books VI and XI of Sir Thomas Malory’s epic poem Le Morte d’Arthur, directed by Richard Thorpe as a follow-up to Ivanhoe.

Jennings ended his career writing the stories for The Naked Maja, a disappointing account of the love affair between the Spanish painter Goya and the Duchess of Alba, and the rousing John Wayne western The Sons of Katie Elder, a revenge story directed by Hathaway with great vigor. Jennings was something of a rarity among Hollywood screenwriters in that his period pictures were much more realistic than most, his dialogue rarely florid or anachronistic. Throughout his career he adhered to a seasoned formula of integrating romance, action, and history, bound together by his unerring sense of narrative.

—John A. Gallagher

JHABVALA, Ruth Prawer

Writer. Nationality: American. Born: Cologne, Germany, of Polish parents, 7 May 1927; emigrated to England as a refugee, 1939; naturalized, 1948; became U.S. citizen, 1986. Education: Attended Hendon County School, London; Queen Mary College, University of London, M.A. in English literature 1951. Family: Married Cyrus Jhabvala, 1951, three daughters. Career: Lived in India, 1951–75; published her first novel, To Whom She Will, 1955; began her association with producer Ismail Merchant and director James Ivory, by scripting The Householder, 1963; moved to New York, 1975. Awards: Booker Prize, 1975; Best Adapted Screenplay British Academy Award, for Heat and Dust, 1983; Best Screenplay Based on Material from Another Medium Academy Award, Writers Guild of America Best Screenplay Based on Material from Another Medium, for A Room with a View, 1986; New York Film Critics Circle Best Screenplay, for Mr. and Mrs. Bridge, 1990; Best Screenplay Based on Material from Another Medium Academy Award, for Howards End, 1992; Writers Guild of America Laurel Award for Screenwriting Achievement, 1994; Writers Award Gotham Award, 1997. Address: 400 East 52nd Street, New York, NY 10022, U.S.A.

Films as Writer for Director James Ivory:

1963 The Householder
1965 Shakespeare Wallah
1968 The Guru
1970 Bombay Talkie
1975 Autobiography of a Princess (co)
1977 Roseland
1978 Hullabaloo over Georgie and Bonnie’s Pictures
1979 The Europeans
1980 Jane Austen in Manhattan
1981 Quartet
1983 Heat and Dust
1984 The Bostonians
1986 A Room with a View
1990 Mr. and Mrs. Bridge
1992 Howards End
1993 The Remains of the Day
1995 Jefferson in Paris
1996 Surviving Picasso
1998 A Soldier’s Daughter Never Cries (co-sc)
2000 The Golden Bowl

Other Films as Writer:

1982 The Courtesans of Bombay (Merchant) (doc)
1988 Madame Sousatska (Schlesinger) (co-sc)

Publications

By JHABVALA: fiction—

To Whom She Will, London, 1955, as Amrita, New York, 1956.
In Search of Love and Beauty, London, 1983.

By JHABVALA: other books—

By JHABVALA: articles—

Sight and Sound (London), Winter 1978–79.
Interview (New York), December 1983.

On JHABVALA: books—

On JHABVALA: articles—

“Quartet Issue” of Avant-Scène (Paris), 1 October 1981.
Film Dope (Nottingham), July 1983.
Since the 1960s, Ruth Prawer Jhabvala has enjoyed a unique position among screenwriters as one of the principal collaborators in Merchant Ivory Productions, the independent film company headed by the Indian producer Ismail Merchant and the American director James Ivory. Jhabvala has supplied the scripts for a majority of the company’s productions, in a happy blend of narrative styles and thematic concerns that has proven so seamless it is often difficult to tell where the writer’s influence ends and the filmmaker’s begins.

Jhabvala was born in Germany and emigrated with her parents to England in 1939. She later married the architect Cyrus Jhabvala and moved with him to India, where she lived for 24 years. (She eventually was to divide her time between India and New York City.) Her life in India became the source of many of her richest earliest works, and fostered within her a fascination with the country that she shares with Ivory. Beginning with The Householder, an adaptation of one of her own novels, Jhabvala wrote a series of films for Merchant Ivory Productions which helped establish both the company itself and James Ivory’s reputation as a director. All of these films are set in India and deal with cultural clashes of one kind or another, a theme that would become a hallmark of the company’s output. The best known of the group, Shakespeare Wallah, follows the fortunes of a British touring theatrical company, sadly out of place in modern India yet determined to hang on to their traditional way of life. Conflicts between East and West, tradition and change, or simply different strata of the same society recur throughout the Jhabvala-Ivory collaborations, with the stories’ characters trying—and often failing—to reconcile themselves to their differences in culture and class.

Ivory’s films are exquisite, leisurely portraits of minutely observed people and places, and Jhabvala’s screenplays lend themselves admirably to the director’s style. Subtle nuances of dialogue reveal shifts in a character’s thoughts or emotions, while the story is allowed to unfold through delicately sketched character interaction rather than dynamic physical activity. The themes that mark the team’s earliest films were applied on a more diverse scale in their collaborations. between the mid-1970s and mid-1980s, with The Europeans, adapted from Henry James’s novel, exploring the conflicts between British and American culture; The Bostonians, again adapted from James, examining the problematic interplay between men and women; and Roseland depicting the gulf between reality and imagination in its stories of the people who frequent an outmoded New York ballroom. Autobiography of a Princess and Heat and Dust find Jhabvala and Ivory returning again to the Anglo-Indian cultural conflict, with a particular emphasis on the differences between present-day India and the India of the British Raj.

Merchant-Ivory’s 1986 adaptation of E. M. Forster’s A Room with a View introduced new audiences to the style of filmmaking that had won them a hitherto select—but devoted—following. Its story of a young Englishwoman’s emotional and sexual awakening in the face of the beauty and passion of Florence was ideally suited to Ivory’s and Jhabvala’s long-standing concerns. The latter’s witty, literate script is alive with carefully shaded characterizations. The same can be said for Howards End, also based on Forster, which explores class distinctions in 1910 England (and is considered the penultimate Merchant-Ivory-Jhabvala collaboration); and The Remains of the Day, adapted from Kazuo Ishiguro’s novel, about an efficient, mindlessly selfless professional servant, in which most of the narrative occurs between the world wars. Less successful (but no less ambitious) were Mr. and Mrs. Bridge (about the manner in which the passage of time affects a Midwestern couple); Jefferson in Paris (chronicling Thomas Jefferson’s experiences while serving as the U.S. ambassador to France); and Surviving Picasso (the based-on-fact account of Francoise Gilot, a young artist who becomes the lover of an egotistical, womanizing Pablo Picasso). Jhabvala’s final Merchant-Ivory film of the 1990s, A Soldier’s Daughter Never Cries, is an improvement over their most recent collaborations. Based on the autobiographical novel by Kaylie (daughter of James) Jones, it is the heartfelt, though somewhat episodic, account of a famed expatriate novelist and his familial bonds. Despite its flaws, A Soldier’s Daughter Never Cries is a rarity in contemporary cinema in that it offers a portrait of a loving, non-dysfunctional family.

In the 1990s, the ever-thinning line between Hollywood and the world of independent cinema may be best symbolized by Merchant-Ivory’s inking a three-film pact with the Walt Disney Company. Nonetheless, despite their artistic lapses, Merchant-Ivory—and Jhabvala—have sustained the conviction that the tradition of the intelligent, thoughtful film, brimming with observations on the complexities of human nature—a conviction that seems so out of place in contemporary Hollywood—remains safe and alive in their hands.

—Janet Lorenz, updated by Rob Edelman

JOHNSON, Nunnally

Films as Writer:
1931 It Ought to Be a Crime (A. Ray—short); Mlle. Irene the Great (Cline—short)
1932 Twenty Horses (A. Ray—short)
1933 A Bedtime Story (Taurog); Mama Loves Papa (McLeod); The House of Rothschild (Werker)
1934 Moulin Rouge (Lanfield); Bulldog Drummond Strikes Back (Del Ruth)
1935 Baby Face Harrington (Walsh); Thanks a Million (Del Ruth)
1936 The Prisoner of Shark Island (Ford); Banjo on My Knee (Cromwell)
1941 Tobacco Road (Ford)
1944 The Keys of the Kingdom (Stahl) (co)
1945 Along Came Jones (Heisler)
1951 The Long Dark Hall (Bushell and Beck)
1952 ‘The Ransom of Red Chief’ ep. of O. Henry’s Full House (Full House) (Hawks)
1959 Flaming Star (Siegel) (co)
1962 Mr. Hobbs Takes a Vacation (Koster)
1963 Take Her, She’s Mine (Koster)
1964 The World of Henry Orient (Hill) (co)
1967 The Dirty Dozen (Aldrich) (co)

Films as Associate Producer:
1936 The Country Doctor (H. King); The Road to Glory (Hawks); Dimples (Seiter); Cardinal Richelieu (Lee)
1937 Nancy Steele Is Missing (Marshall); Cafe Metropole (E. Griffith); Slave Ship (Garnett); Love under Fire (Marshall)
1940 I Was an Adventuress (Ratoff)
1950 The Gunfighter (H. King)

Films as Producer and Writer:
1935 The Man Who Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo (Roberts) (assoc pr)
1939 Jesse James (H. King) (assoc pr); Wife, Husband, and Friend (Ratoff) (assoc pr); Rose of Washington Square (Ratoff) (assoc pr)
1940 The Grapes of Wrath (Ford) (assoc pr); Chad Hanna (H. King) (assoc pr)
1942 Roxie Hart (Wellman); The Pied Piper (Pichel); Life Begins at Eight-Thirty (The Light of Heart) (Pichel)
1943 The Moon Is Down (Pichel); Holy Matrimony (Stahl)
1944 Casanova Brown (Wood); The Woman in the Window (F. Lang)
1946 The Dark Mirror (Siodmak)
1947 The Senator Was Indiscreet (Mr. Ashton Was Indiscreet) (Kaufman)
1948 Mr. Peabody and the Mermaid (Pichel)
1949 Everybody Does It (Goulding)
1950 Three Came Home (Negulesco); The Mudlark (Negulesco)
1951 The Desert Fox (The Story of Rommel) (Hathaway)
1952 Phone Call from a Stranger (Negulesco); We’re Not Married (Goulding); My Cousin Rachel (Koster)
1953 How to Marry a Millionaire (Negulesco)

Films as Writer and Director:

1954 Night People; Black Widow (+ pr)
1955 How to Be Very, Very Popular (+ pr)
1956 The Man in the Gray Flannel Suit
1957 Oh, Men! Oh, Women! (+ pr); The Three Faces of Eve (+ pr)
1959 The Man Who Understood Women (+ pr)
1960 The Angel Wore Red

Publications

By JOHNSON: books—

There Ought to Be a Law, and Other Stories, New York, 1931.
The Grapes of Wrath (script), in Twenty Best Film Plays, edited by John Gassner and Dudley Nichols, New York, 1943.

By JOHNSON: article—

On JOHNSON: books—

On JOHNSON: articles—

Bluestone, George, on The Grapes of Wrath in Movies into Film, Baltimore, Maryland, 1957.
Kino Lehti (Helsinki), no. 1, 1969.

Like most writers, Nunnally Johnson desired complete control over his work. Unlike most writers in Hollywood, he got it. He accomplished this by producing and, later, by directing his own screenplays. Johnson’s true talent was in writing, however, and it was in this capacity that he made his greatest contribution to the cinema.

In his dramatic work, Johnson portrayed characters that were faced with obstacles which they had to overcome to survive. Some were imprisoned (The Prisoner of Shark Island, Three Came Home), others were threatened with death (Jesse James, The Grapes of Wrath, Flaming Star, The Desert Fox), and still others faced mid-life crises (Phone Call from a Stranger, The Man in the Gray Flannel Suit) or mental problems (The Three Faces of Eve, The Dark Mirror). On the lighter side, Johnson’s comedies involved characters, such as Roxie in Roxie Hart, facing imprisonment, the three women in How to Marry a Millionaire facing the dreaded single life with no money, the senator in The Senator Was Indiscreet threatened with scandal, and bored husbands flirting with adultery in The Woman in the Window and Mr. Peabody and the Mermaid.

The characters themselves were much more interesting than the traumas that they encountered, however, because Johnson was fascinated with good and evil and the ambiguities of life. Many of his “villains” were not entirely evil—they were doing jobs they felt were right, or that circumstances forced them to do. The “enemy” was a human being, whether Japanese (Three Came Home), Indian (Flaming Star), Russian (Night People), or Nazi (The Desert Fox). The trait that most of Johnson’s characters shared and which made them more human was their love of family, and particularly their adoration for their children. They judged themselves by their success or failure as parents. Colonel Suga, head of the brutal prison camp in Three Came Home, tenderly describes his children to Mrs. Keith, and General Rommel is heartbroken knowing that he is seeing his son for the last time at the end of The Desert Fox. Jesse James gives up robbery (which he is prodded into doing because of his mother’s murder) to take care of his beloved son, and Dr. Mudd, who set John Wilkes Booth’s leg by circumstance, is equally devoted to his family in The Prisoner of Shark Island.

Johnson’s fascination with good and evil traits was demonstrated further in The Dark Mirror with twins—one good and one evil. This duality was explored again in My Cousin Rachel (both films starred Olivia de Havilland) in which the main character at times seemed quite capable of murder and, at other times, was a kind, caring woman. One step beyond this premise was Eve in The Three Faces of Eve. Eve was inhabited by three personalities—the first, repressed and dowdy, the second, noisy and uninhibited, and the third, calm and stable.
Nunnally Johnson was, above all, an optimistic writer: he believed in the basic goodness of humanity despite its faults, and that eventually good would triumph over evil. Even his doomed characters, such as Rommel in The Desert Fox, Tom Joad in The Grapes of Wrath, Pacer Burton in Flashing Star, and Jesse in Jesse James, all leave behind a family who will carry on and attempt to achieve what they could not: to make a better world or, at least, gain an understanding and an acceptance of others, no matter how different from themselves.

—Alexa L. Foreman

JONES, Chuck

Films as Director at Warner Bros.:

1938 Night Watchman; Dog Gone Modern
1939 Robin Hood Makes Good; Presto Change-O; Daffy Duck and the Dinosaur, Naughty but Nice; Old Glory; Snowman’s Land; Little Brother Rat; Little Lion Hunter; The Good Egg; Sniffles and the Bookworm; Curious Puppy
1940 Mighty Hunters; Elmer’s Candid Camera; Sniffles Takes a Trip; Tom Thumb in Trouble; The Egg Collector; Ghost Wanted; Good Night Elmer; Bedtime for Sniffles; Sniffles Bells the Cat
1941 Toy Trouble; The Wacky Worm; Inki and the Lion; Snow Time for Comedy; Joe Glow the Firefly; Brave Little Bat; Saddle Silly; The Bird Came C.O.D.; Porky’s Ant; Conrad the Sailor; Porky’s Prize Pony; Dog Tired; The Draft Horse; Hold the Lion, Please; Porky’s Midnight Matinee
1942 The Squawkin’ Hawk; Fox Pop; My Favorite Duck; To Duck or Not to Duck; The Dober Boys; Case of the Missing Hare; Porky’s Cafe
1943 Flop Goes the Weasel; Super Rabbit; The Unbearable Bear; The Aristo Cat; Wackiki Wabbit; Fin ‘n Catty; Inki and the Mynah Bird
1944 Tom Turk and Daffy; Angel Pass; From Hand to Mouse; The Odor-able Kitty; Bugs Bunny and the Three Bears; The Weakly Reporter; Lost and Foundling
1945 Trap Happy Porky; Hare Conditioned; Hare Tonic; Hush My Mouse; Fresh Airedale; Quentin Quail; Hair Raising Hare; The Eager Beaver

1946 Roughly Squeaking; Scenti-Mental over You; Fair and Womb-er; A Feather in His Hare
1947 Little Orphan Airedale; What’s Brewin’ Brain; House Hunting Mice; Haredevil Hare; Inki at the Circus; A Pest in the House; Rabbit Punch
1948 You Were Never Duckier; Mississippi Hare; Mouse Wreckers; Scaredy Cat; My Bunny Lies over the Sea; Awful Orphan; The Bee-Deviled Bruin; Daffy Dilly; Long-Haired Hare
1949 Frigid Hare; Rabbit Hood; Often an Orphan; Fast and Furious; For Scent-imental Reasons; Bear Feast; Homeless Hare; So Much for So Little
1950 The Hypo-Chondri-Cat; Dog Gone South; The Scarlet Pamp-ernickel; Eight-Ball Bunny; The Ducksters; Rabbit of Seville; Caveman Inki
1951 Two’s a Crowd; A Hound for Trouble; Rabbit Fire; Chow Hound; The Wearing of the Grin; A Bear for Punishment; Bunny Hugged; Scent-imental Romeo; Cheese Chasers; Drip-Along Daffy
1952 Operation Rabbit; Water, Water Every Hare; The Hasty Hare; Mousewarming; Don’t Give Up the Ship; Feed the Kitty; Little Bea Pepe; Beep Beep; Going! Going! Gosh!; Terrier Stricken; Rabbit Seasoning; Kiss Me Cat
1953 Forward March Hare; Wild over You; Bully for Bugs; Duck Amuck; Much Ado about Nothing; Duck Dodgers in the 24 1/2th Century; Zipping Along; Feline Frame-Up
1954 Punch Trunk; From A to ZZZZ; Bewitched Bunny; Duck! Rabbit! Duck!; No Barking; Stop, Look, and Hasten!; Sheep Ahoy; My Little Duckaroo
1955 The Cat’s Bah; Claws for Alarm! Lumber Jack Rabbit (in 3-D); Ready, Set, Zoom!; Rabbit Rampage; Double or Muton; Baby Buggy Bunny; Beanstalk Bunny; Past Performance; Jumpin’ Jupiter; Guided Muscle; Knight-Mare Hare
1956 Two Scents’ Worth; One Froggy Evening; Bug’s Bonnets; Rocket Squad; Heaven Scent; Rocket-Bye Baby; Gee Whizzzz; Barby Coast Bunny
1957 Deduce You Say; There They Go-Go-Go!; Scrumbled Aches; Go Fly a Kit; Steal Wool; Zoom and Bored; To Hare Is Human; Ali Baba Bunny; Boyhood Daze; What’s Opera, Doc?; Touché and Go
1958 Daffy Duck’s Movie; Fantastic Island
1959 Porky Pig in Hollywood
1960 Merrie Melodies: Starring Bugs Bunny and Friends
1995 Another Froggy Evening (+ pr); That’s Warner Bros!
1996 From Hare to Eternity (+ pr); The Bugs n’ Daffy Show; Superior Duck

Films as Writer and Director at Warner Bros.:

1958 Hare-Way to the Stars; Hook, Line, and Stinker; Robin Hood Daffy; Whoa, Begone!; To Ich’t His Own
1959 Baton Bunny; Hot Rod and Reel; Cat Feud; Hip Hip—Hurray!; Really Scent
1960 Fastest with the Mostest; Who Scent You?; Rabbit’s Feat; Wild about Hurry
1961 High Note; Hopalong Casualty; The Abominable Snow Rabbit; Scent of the Matterhorn; Lickety Splat; Zip ‘n Snot; The Mouse on 57th Street; Compressed Hare
1962 Louvre Come Back to Me; Beep Prepared; A Sheep in the Deep; Nelly’s Folly; Zoom at the Top
Films as Director of Tom and Jerry Cartoons for MGM:

1963  Martian thru Georgia; Now Hear This; Hare-Breadth Hurry; I Was a Teenage Thumb; Woolen under Where 1964  Penthouse Mouse
1965  The Cat Above and the Mouse Below; Is There a Doctor in the Mouse; Much Ado about Mousing; Snowbody Loves Me; Unshrinkable Jerry Mouse
1966  Ah Sweet Mouse-Story of Life; Bad Day at Cat Rock; Brothers Carry Mouse Off; Haunted Mouse; I’m Just Wild about Jerry; Of Feline Bondage; Year of the Mouse; Cat’s Me-Ouch
1967  Duel Personality; Jerry Jerry Quite Contrary; Love Me, Love My Mouse (with Ben Washam)
1967  Cat and Duplicat

Other Films as Director:

1965  The Dot and the Line
1967  The Bear that Wasn’t
1970  How the Grinch Stole Christmas (for TV)
1971  The Phantom Toll Booth (with Livitow); Horton Hears a Who (for TV); The Pogo Special Birthday Special (for TV); The Cricket in Times Square (for TV); A Very Merry Cricket (for TV)
1974  Yankee Doodle Cricket
1975  Riki-Tiki-Tavv
1979  The Great American Bugs Bunny-Road Runner Chase (+ pr, sc)
1981  Uncensored Cartoons

Other Films:

1962  Gay Purr-ee (Levitow) (story)
1971  Christmas Carol (exec pr) (TV special)
1982  Bugs Bunny’s Third Movie (Detiege, Art Davis, and Perez) (animator)
1984  Gremlins (Dante) (animator)
1987  Innerspace (Dante) (animator)
1988  Daffy Duck’s Quackbusters (Ford) (sequenced); Who Framed Roger Rabbit (Zemeckis) (anim consultant)
1990  Gremlins 2: The New Batch (Dante) (animator)
1992  Stay Tuned (Hyams) (anim dir)
1993  Mrs. Doubtfire (Columbus) (anim dir)
1995  Four Rooms (Anders, Rockwell, Rodriguez, Tarantino) (creative consultant)
1999  Roughnecks: The Starship Troopers Chronicles (Berkeley, Caldwell, Hartman, Liu, Oliva, Paden, Song—series for TV) (character designer)

Publications

By JONES: books—

By JONES: articles—

Interview with M. Barrier, in Funnyworld (New York), Spring 1971.
Interview with G. Ford and R. Thompson, in Film Comment (New York), January/February 1975.
Interview with J. Rubin, in Classic Film Collector (Muscatine, Iowa), Summer 1976.

On JONES: books—

On JONES: articles—

CinémAction (Conde-sur-Noireau), April 1989.
Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), September 1990.
O’Brien, Ken, “Chuck Jones and MGM: Reevaluating Tom and Jerry,” in Animation Journal (Irvine), vol. 1, Fall 1996.

* * *

During a career of nearly 60 years (and still going strong) in cartoon animation, Chuck Jones has created more than 240 animated films. His most famous work was done at Warner Brothers where from 1938 to 1962 he directed such “stars” as Bugs Bunny, Daffy Duck, and Porky Pig. Although many different animators worked with these characters, Jones developed his own particular style of animation that set his cartoons apart from the others.

Part of that style has to do with the development of his characters, who have very strong personalities. For example, Pepe LePew is an ever-confident Casanova. No matter how many times he is pushed off the road to romance, he remains undaunted in his attempts to pursue his heart’s “true love.” Daffy Duck, on the other hand, is a self-centered egotist. He is always looking out for “number one”, and he must, above all, maintain his dignity. By using such strong characters in his films, Jones creates humor not out of what is happening to the character, but from how the character reacts to what is happening. For example, the Roadrunner series (one of Jones’s own creations) relies on character reaction throughout the story. Whenever Wile E. Coyote finds that he is about to go over the edge of a cliff, he remains mid-air, looks down, realizes his predicament, gulps, looks to the audience for sympathy, and then falls. The humor is not in his falling, but in the way Wile E. Coyote reacts to his situation.

Another characteristic found in many of Jones’s cartoons is his distinctive use of the medium. It is not uncommon to find references to the techniques of animation in his films. The most obvious example of Jones’s self-reflexivity in a cartoon is Duck Amuck. In this film Daffy Duck is plagued by the animator who, in a series of gags, erases Daffy, gives him the wrong voice, rolls the picture, collapses the frame line, and finally blows up Daffy by drawing in a bomb. Another of Jones’s cartoons that is filled with in-jokes is the Oscar-winning What’s Opera, Doc? In this cartoon (which can be viewed as a parody of Disney’s Fantasia), Bugs Bunny and Elmer Fudd continue to play their roles of the hunter and hunted, but as “actors” within the very formal structure of a Wagnerian opera. It is the only cartoon in which Bugs “dies,” but, as he says while the camera irises out, “What did you expect in an opera, a happy ending?” One Froggy Evening, a comic parable on the lure of fame and riches in which a man finds a singing frog and sees dollar signs but loses everything because the frog will perform only for him, is one of Jones’s most memorable creations.

Another distinctive trait that can be found in Jones’s cartoons is his sense of comic timing. Whereas some cartoon directors pile gag upon gag at a frantic pace, Jones often uses pauses within his gags. For example, when Wile E. Coyote fell from a cliff, the overhead point of view would show him getting smaller and smaller until he was invisible, and a few frames later a puff of smoke could be seen where he crashed. Jones knew exactly how many frames it would take to create the right amount of tension before Wile E. Coyote actually hit the ground. It was a piece of timing he had to teach all of his animators on the Roadrunner series.

With the closing of the studio cartoon departments, Jones moved his animation talents into television and feature-length production. His more recent work has proven to be very popular with audiences. Now viewed as the craft’s elder statesman, he has been paid homage to by a generation of admirers, including such as directors Steven Spielberg and Joe Dante, who not only acknowledge Jones’s influence on the slam-bang style of their own work, but frequently give him cameos in their films. He continues as well to lend his innovative hand to advances in the art of animation such as the groundbreaking Who Killed Roger Rabbit?, which seamlessly mixed live action with cartoon images. The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences honored Jones with a special life achievement award in 1995 for the enduring appeal of his work, which shows no signs of age.

—Linda Obalil, updated by John McCarty

JONES, Quincy

Films as Composer:

1960 Pojken i trädet (The Boy in the Tree) (Sucksdorff)
1964 The Pawnbroker (Lumet); Mirage (Dymtryk)
1965 Made in Paris (Sagal) (songs); The Slender Thread (Pollack)
1966 Walk Don’t Run (Walters); The Deadly Affair (Lumet); Enter Laughing (C. Reiner)
1967 Banning (Winston); In Cold Blood (R. Brooks); In the Heat of the Night (Jewison); Ironside (Goldstone—for TV)
1968 A Dandy in Aspic (A. Mann); Jigsaw (Goldstone); The Counterfeit Killer (Leytes); For Love of Ivy (Daniel Mann); The Split (Fleming); The Hell with Heroes (Sargent); Mackenna’s Gold (Lee Thompson); Split Second to an Epitaph (Horn)
1969 The Italian Job (Collinson); The Lost Man (Arthur); Bob and Carol and Ted and Alice (Mazursky); Cactus Flower (Saks); John and Mary (Yates); The Out-of-Towners (Hiller); Blood Kin (The Last of the Mobile Hot-Shots) (Lumet)
1970 They Call Me MISTER Tibbs! (Douglas); Eggs (Hubley—short); Of Men and Demons (J. & F. Hubley—short); Up Your Teddy Bear (The Toy Grabbers) (Joslyn); Brother John (Goldstone)
1971 The Anderson Tapes (Lumet); Honky (Graham); $ (The Heist) (R. Brooks)
1972 The Hot Rock (How to Steal a Diamond in Four Uneasy Lessons) (Yates); The New Centurions (Precinct 45 Los Angeles Police) (Fleischer); The Getaway (Peckinpah); Killer by Night (McEveety)
1976 Mother, Jugs, and Speed (Yates) (songs)
1985 Portrait of an Album (+ d); Fast Forward (Poitier); Lost in America (Albert Brooks) (song); The Slugger’s Wife (Ashby); The Color Purple (Spielberg) (+ co-pr)
1988 Heart and Soul (Pasquin) (+ co-exec pr)

Films as Music Director:

1971 Man and Boy (Swackhamer)
1972 Come Back Charleston Blue (Warren) (+ song)
1978 The Wiz (Lumet) (+ songs)
1985 The Slugger’s Wife (Ashby) (exec music pr); Fast Forward (exec mus pr)
Publications

By JONES: articles—

Vanity Fair (New York), July 1996.

On JONES: books—

On JONES: articles—

Dirigido por... (Barcelona), September 1974.

Ecran (Paris), September 1975.

Film Dope (Nottingham), no. 28, December 1983.

Film Score Monthly (Los Angeles), July 1996.

Variety (New York), 18 November 1996.

* * *

With the incorporation of jazz and pop styles into film music in the 1950s and 1960s, it was inevitable that composers from such backgrounds would be commissioned to compose film scores. Quincy Jones’s experience as an arranger, composer, and performer made him particularly adept at matching the disciplines of these styles to the demands of the medium.

Jones has brought to film music a range of influences from Latin stylings to American blues. Such influences are apparent in his first major score, for Sidney Lumet’s The Pawnbroker. The urban realism of Lumet’s film is balanced by equally authentic musical accompaniment, showing not only Jones’s facility with jazz, but also with Puerto Rican and other ethnic musical idioms. Jones’s handling of these elements led to his scoring a number of crime films and social dramas with contemporary urban settings. In many of these works, he combined modern rhythms with melodic pop themes reminiscent of the work of Henry Mancini.

This approach made Jones a natural choice for contemporary directors seeking a “new” sound. The score for Norman Jewison’s In the Heat of the Night employs bluegrass and blues elements appropriate to its Southern setting while Jones’s music for Richard Brooks’s In Cold Blood incorporates unusual percussive effects, throbbing bass lines, and even a use of bottles at one point. Jones has also continued to work on and off for Lumet, serving as arranger and conductor for the filmmaker’s production of The Wiz, adapted from William F. Brown and Charlie Smalls’s hit Broadway musical. Jones gained further recognition in the motion picture industry as one of the producers and the musical coordinator for Steven Spielberg’s The Color Purple. Assembling a team of composers, orchestrators, and musicians, Jones constructed a score that combines a broad spectrum of musical influences, from African rhythms to jazz and blues. The music also contains more traditional approaches to film scoring, as in a lyrical symphonic theme which bears in its principal woodwind line a resemblance to Georges Delerue’s main theme for Our Mother’s House. Above all, Jones’s work for The Color Purple demonstrates his ability not only to handle a variety of musical styles but also his influence as a producer.

The Color Purple aside, from the mid-1970s on Jones became less active in films, turning his attention more to arranging and conducting and, in particular, to his film and television production company, Quincy Jones Entertainment. He also established his own broadcasting company to acquire television and radio properties. And in recent years he has become an elder statesman among American (and even more specifically, African-American) composers/arrangers/music producers. In 1990, he was the subject of a documentary/homage, Listen Up: The Lives of Quincy Jones, a portrait in words, music, and images in which his “genius” is acknowledged by a diverse group of celebrities, from Dizzy Gillespie to Ice T, Miles Davis to Frank Sinatra, Barbra Streisand to Big Daddy Kane.

—Richard R. Ness, updated by Rob Edelman

JUNGE, Alfred

Art Director. Nationality: German. Born: Görlitz, 29 January 1886. Education: Studied in Germany and Italy. Career: Joined Görlitz City Theatre at age 18 as actor/factotum; then designed sets for Berlin State Opera and State Theatre; 1920—joined UFA as art director; 1928—worked for Dupont in England, and briefly in France; then settled in England; late 1940s—head of MGM British studios. Award: Academy Award for Black Narcissus, 1947. Died: In 1964.

Films as Art Director:

1921 Hintertreppe (Backstairs) (Jessner)
1923 Die grüne Manuela (The Green Manuela) (Dupont) (co); Das alte Gesetz (The Ancient Law; Baruch) (Dupont) (co)
1924 Das Wachsfigurenkabinett (Waxworks) (Leni) (uncredited); Mensch gegen Mensch (Steinhoff) (co); Der Mann um Mitternacht (Holger-Madsen) (co)
1925 Die Kleine aus der Kongektion (Gross-stadtkavaliere) (Neff); Athleten (Zehnik); Sündelbabel (David); Ein Lebenskinister (Holger-Madsen); Der vertauchte Braut (Wilhelm); Der Kampfgegen Berlin (Reichmann)
1926 Spitzen (Der Ei des Fürsten Ulrich) (Holger-Madsen); Brennende Grenze (Waschnick); Liebeshandel (Spreyer)
1927 Die Tragödie eines Verlorenen (Steinhoff); Da hält die Welt den Aten an (Maquillage) (Basch) (co); Mata Hari (Die rote Tanzerin) (Fehler); Regine, die Tragödie einer Frau (Waschnick)
1928 Die Carmen von St. Pauli (Waschnick); Moulin Rouge (Dupont); Piccadilly (Dupont)
1929 Der Günstling von Schönbrunn (Waschnick and Reichmann); Ich lebe für dich (Triumph des Lebens) (Dieterle); Die Drei um Edith (Waschnick)
1930 Two Worlds (Dupont); Cape Forlorn (The Love Storm) (Dupont)
1931 Salto mortale (The Circus of Sin) (Dupont); Marius (A. Korda); Die Nächte von Port Said (Mittler)
1932 Teilnehmer antwortet nicht (Katscher and Sokrin); Acht Mädels im Boot (Waschnick); After the Ball (Rosmer); *Service for Ladies (Reserved for Ladies) (A. Korda); The Midshipman (de Courville); Fanny (Allégret)
1933 The Good Companions (Saville); Sleeping Car (Litvak); Waltz Time (Thiele); Orders Is Orders (Forde); Britannia of Billingsgate (Hill); The Ghoul (Hunter); I Was a Spy (Saville); The Fire Raisers (Powell); Just Smith (Walls); Channel Crossing (Rosmer); A Cuckoo in the Nest (Walls); Friday the Thirteenth (Saville) (co); Turkey Time (Walls); Waltzes from Vienna (Strauss’s Great Waltz) (Hitchcock)
1934 Jack Ahoy! (Forde); Red Ensign (Strike!) (Powell); The Night of the Party (The Murder Party) (Powell); Evergreen (Saville); A Cup of Kindness (Walls); Wild Boy (de Courville); My Song for You (Elvey); Little Friend (Viertel); Evensong (Saville); Jew Süss (Power) (Mendes); Lady in Danger (Walls); Road House (Elvey); The Iron Duke (Saville); Dirty Work (Walls); The Man Who Knew Too Much (Hitchcock)
1935 Bulldog Jack (Forde); The Clairvoyant (Elvey); Brown on Revolution (Forever England; Born for Glory) (Forde); Me and Marbleborough (Saville); Car of Dreams (Cutts and Melford); The Guv’nor (Mister Hobo) (Rosmer)
1936 It’s Love Again (Saville); His Lordship (Mason); Everything Is Thunder (Rosmer); Cesar (Pagnol)
1937 Head over Heels (Hale); King Solomon’s Mines (Stevenson); Gangway (Hale); Young and Innocent (The Girl Was Young) (Hitchcock)
1938 Sailing Along (Hale); Climbing High (Reed); The Citadel (K. Vidor) (co)
1939 The Mind of Mr. Reeder (Raymond); Goodbye, Mr. Chips (Wood)
1940 Contraband (Powell) (co); Gaslight (Angel Street) (Dickinson) (supervisor); Busman’s Honeymoon (Haunted Honeymoon) (Walls)
1941 He Found a Star (Carstairs)
1942 The Life and Death of Colonel Blimp (Colonel Blimp) (Powell and Pressburger)
1943 The Silver Fleet (Sewell and Wellesley); The Volunteer (Powell and Pressburger—short)
1944 A Canterbury Tale (Powell and Pressburger)
1945 I Know Where I’m Going! (Powell and Pressburger)
1946 A Matter of Life and Death (Stairway to Heaven) (Powell and Pressburger)
1947 Black Narcissus (Powell and Pressburger)
1948 Edward, My Son (Cukor)
1949 Conspirator (Saville)
1950 The Miniver Story (Potter)
1951 Calling Bulldog Drummond (Saville); Ivanhoe (Thorpe)
1952 The Hour of 13 (French); Time Bomb (Terror on a Train) (Tetzlaff)
1953 Never Let Me Go (Daves); Mogambo (Ford); Knights of the Round Table (Thorpe) (co)
1954 The Flame and the Flesh (Brooks); Betrayed (Reinhardt); Seagulls over Sorrento (Crest of the Wave) (J. & R. Boulting); Beau Brummell (Bernhardt); Bedevilled (Leisen); Invitation to the Dance (Kelly) (co)
1955 That Lady (Young) (uncredited); The Adventures of Quentin Durward (Quentin Durward) (Thorpe)
1956 The Barretts of Wimpole Street (Franklin)
1957 A Farewell to Arms (C. Vidor)

Publications

By JUNGE: article—

‘‘The Art Director and His Work,’’ in Artist (London), May-June 1944.

On JUNGE: articles—

* * *

Before settling in England permanently in 1932, set designer Alfred Junge had established a reputation through his work in German cinema for superb technical skill. His background as a painter, costume designer, lighting technician, and set builder in theater and, later, as a designer for UFA and other German film companies had given him an excellent, broad background on which he based a wide interpretation of the importance and influence of design in film art. Junge’s vast output of work for various British film companies after 1932 and, in particular, his work for MGM rested on his considerable managerial skill in overseeing the many complex and interrelated aspects of the film’s appearance.

Junge’s personal artistic flair is apparent in his set design drawings, often done in wash, which show a draftsman’s sense of great delicacy and charm. His drawing style was fluid and immediate and yet had a sparseness of composition and an atmospheric lightness. This economy of means, using a few carefully selected details to convey an appropriate atmosphere, was translated directly to the screen in Junge’s best work, such as the staircase setting used in A Matter of Life and Death. Here, an essentially fantastic narrative is given credibility by a setting which is at once ephemeral in its spatial relations and highly concrete in its structure and detailing.

During the 1930s, Junge was in charge of all art direction for Michael Balcon at his Lime Grove Studios in Shepherds Bush. There, he became the first supervising art director in the British film industry. Junge worked on Hitchcock’s Young and Innocent, Waltzes from Vienna, and his first version of The Man Who Knew Too Much, but met with only mixed success. Junge’s greatest collaboration was with Michael Powell and Emeric Pressburger. Beginning with The Life and Death of Colonel Blimp, Junge’s work for Powell and Pressburger generated some of the most memorable images of England and Empire. In Goodbye, Mr. Chips, directed by Sam Wood, Junge used combinations of some of the largest sets built for a British film up to that time with glass shots to evoke what is still a standard view of English public school life. Junge’s versatility is apparent in Black Narcissus, which won an Academy Award for both Art Direction and Set Decoration. In this film Junge convincingly recreated the exotic interiors and exteriors of an Indian palace, all in the studio, and in the new medium of Technicolor.

Junge had worked with color since Colonel Blimp, the first British color film. But it was with A Matter of Life and Death that color became a mature tool in the exploration of the poetic potential of a narrative. Junge was required to produce sets in black-and-white for the hereafter sequences and color to describe the world of the living. Thus, design in color became an essential element in the fabric of the film.

From his early work under the direction of Dupont through his Hitchcock films, the collaboration with Powell and Pressburger, and, ultimately, his direction of MGM’s art department throughout the 1950s, Junge contributed substantially to establishing the importance of design in British cinema. Throughout his career, he strongly supported the recognition of set design as an artistic rather than a technical element of film.

—Gregory Votolato

JUSTIN, George

Films as Producer or Production Executive:

1954 On the Waterfront (Kazan) (pr manager)
1957 A Face in the Crowd (Kazan) (pr manager); 12 Angry Men (Lumet) (assoc pr)
1958 Wind Across the Everglades (Ray) (pr manager); The Goddess (Cromwell) (pr supervisor)
1959 The Fugitive Kind (Lumet) (assoc pr); Happy Anniversary (Miller) (assoc pr); Middle of the Night (Mann) (pr); The Defenders (Powell—for TV) (pr)
1961 The Young Doctors (Karlson) (pr manager); Something Wild (Garfein) (pr)
1962 Long Day’s Journey Into Night (Lumet) (pr manager)
1963 Espionage (Powell—13 films for TV) (pr)
1965 Inside Daisy Clover (Mulligan) (pr manager)
1967 Up the Down Staircase (Mulligan) (pr manager); The Graduate (Nichols) (pr supervisor); The Tiger Makes Out (Hiller) (pr)

1968 The Night They Raided Minsky’s (The Night They Invented Striptease) (Friedkin) (pr manager)
1970 The Owl and the Pussy Cat (Ross) (pr supervisor + assoc pr); The Possessed of Joel Delaney (Hussein) (pr supervisor)
1971 The Anderson Tapes (Lumet) (assoc pr + ro as waiter/double agent)
1976 Marathon Man (Schlesinger) (pr manager + assoc pr)
1977 The Deep (Yates) (pr manager + assoc pr)
1978 The Eyes of Laura Mars (Kershner) (pr exec)
1981 Rollover (Pakula) (pr exec); Wolfen (Wadleigh) (pr exec)
1984 No Small Affair (Schatzberg) (exec pr)
1985 Murphy’s Romance (Ritt—for TV) (assoc pr)
1986 Dreams of Gold: The Mel Fisher Story (Goldstone—for TV) (pr manager)
1987 Deadly Illusion (Love You to Death) (Cohen & Tannen) (pr manager)
1990 Incident at Lincoln Bluff (The Incident) (Sargent) (pr exec)
1994 Star Struck (Drake—for TV) (unit pr manager)

Other Films:

1974 Chinatown (ro as barber)
1975 Shampoo (ro as producer)

Publications

On JUSTIN: articles—

* * *

George Justin played a key role in the ferment that was New York based filmmaking in the 1950s and 1960s. Justin was one of a number of figures who emerged out of the industrial and documentary film background that WWII had fostered and into an era of new possibilities in the New York of the early 1950s, which could be defined by its differences from the industrial conditions of the Hollywood studios, whose empires were declining. When directors like Elia Kazan, at the peak of his prestige but estranged from Hollywood, and up-and-coming Sidney Lumet turned to New York City as a possible production base, they found an array of talent and enthusiasm among individuals who had learned their crafts abroad (cinematographers Boris Kaufman and Eugen Schüfftan, for example), in the field of documentary and news, in radio and theater, and in the open, inventive atmosphere of the new medium of television production.

As production manager, supervisor, associate producer, and producer, Justin corralled much of this talent into a so-called “first team”—crews that lent a spirit of independence, energy, and innovation to watershed films like On the Waterfront, 12 Angry Men, and
The Goddess. Justin developed a reputation for assembling crews of consummate professionals and keeping films on schedule and budget with good-spirited control. The soundstages on which productions he supervised were shot were hung with his banner, “Keep ‘em in the East,” rallying for the New York cause. His daily call sheets, “Letters to the Troops,” reflected his gift for management through a refined combination of discipline, organization, and humor. Many films for television were made in the same crucible as features during the “golden age of television.” Justin worked on a number of those productions, too, in New York (e.g. The Doctors, You Are There, The Defenders) and in Europe (Espionage), with prominent directors including Lumet and Michael Powell.

Justin’s reputation garnered him offers from Los Angeles and he became part of the so-called Hollywood Renaissance as Vice President for Production Management at Paramount. During Justin’s tenure there (1972–1975), Paramount released, among many other films, Francis Ford Coppola’s The Conversation and The Godfather, Robert Altman’s Nashville, Peter Bogdonavich’s Paper Moon, Woody Allen’s Play It Again, Sam, and Roman Polanski’s Chinatown, in the last of which Justin appeared as the gravelly voiced barber who tells an off-color joke to Jake Gittes (Jack Nicholson). One of Justin’s other notable appearances as an actor was rather a bit of type-casting: he played a producer in Shampoo (1975). From 1976 to 1978 Justin worked as associate producer on films in production and development at Columbia Pictures, then worked as Executive Production Manager at Orion Pictures, supervising worldwide productions. Justin’s last studio affiliation was with MGM, for which he served as Vice President, then was promoted to Senior Vice President, Production Management for worldwide production for MGM/UA.

Justin, who loved working on location and never tired of the creative energy of the movie set, left the desks of executive office buildings to resume, in 1983, freelance work in production management. Though not a household name, his will remain indelibly attached to the slew of powerful New York films that he “enabled” in the first two decades of his career.

—Susan Felleman
KAHN, Gus

