Lyricist. Nationality: Russian. Born: Koblenz, Germany, 6 November, 1886. Career: Vaudeville; Tin Pan Alley; Broadway; 1927–1930—served on the board of directors of ASCAP (American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers); 1933—began working in the film industry as lyricist. Award: Academy Award for One Night of Love, 1934. Died: Of a heart attack, in California, 8 October 1941.

Films as Lyricist:

1927  The Jazz Singer (Crosland)
1928  Hit of the Show
1930  Whoopee! (Freeland)
1932  Big City Blues (LeRoy)
1933  Flying Down to Rio (Freeland); Storm at Daybreak (Boleslawski)
1934  Bottoms Up (Butler); Caravan (Charrell); Hollywood Party; Kid Millions (Del Ruth); The Merry Widow (The Lady Dances) (Lubitsch); One Night of Love (Schertzinger); Singaree (Wellman)
1935  Escapade (Leonard); Love Me Forever (Schertzinger); Naughty Marietta (Van Dyke); Reckless (Fleming); Thanks a Million (Del Ruth)
1936  Let’s Sing Again; Rose Marie (Indian Love Call) (Van Dyke); San Francisco (Van Dyke); Three Smart Girls (Koster)
1937  Captains Courageous (Fleming); A Day at the Races (Wood); The Firefly (Leonard); Music for Madame (Blystone)
1938  Everybody Sing (Marin); The Girl of the Golden West (Leonard)
1939  Balalaika (Schunzel); Broadway Serenade (Leonard); Honolulu (Buzzell); Let Freedom Ring (Conway)
1940  Bitter Sweet (Van Dyke); Go West (Marx Brothers Go West) (Buzzell); Lillian Russell (Cumnings); Spring Parade (Koster)
1941  The Chocolate Soldier (Del Ruth); Ziegfeld Girl (Leonard)
1944  Broadway Rhythm (Del Ruth); Show Business (Marin)

* * *

When the film industry learned to talk, it was evident it would also have to sing. While technicians struggled with the technology of sound recording, recruiters turned frantically to Broadway for talent; Irving Berlin, Busby Berkeley, Al Jolson, Fanny Brice, the Gershwin’s, and many others were obtained to give voice and form to the musical motion picture. The frenzy that ensued has never been fully documented by film historians, and one such talent overlooked during the period was lyricist Gus Kahn. Working initially in Tin Pan Alley and later on Broadway, Kahn entered the industry in 1933. For eight years, until his death in 1941, he worked prolifically as lyricist for many of the major studios. Spanning the 1920s and 1930s, his work expressed both the capricious energy of the Jazz Age and the forlorn escapism of the Depression. Though he remained largely unknown to the public, his lyrics were linked to many of the great musical talents of the era, most notably Al Jolson, Eddie Cantor and Jeanette MacDonald.

A native of Koblenz, Germany, Gus Kahn emigrated to the United States with his family in 1890. His career as lyricist began in earnest with the success of “I Wish I Had a Girl,” written in 1908 with composer (and future wife) Grace LeBoy. In 1915, he wrote the hit song “Memories” with Egbert van Alstyne, and later in 1921, they provided “Pretty Baby,” for Al Jolson. Shortly afterwards, Kahn moved to New York and began a productive partnership with composer Walter Donaldson, releasing such hit songs as “Carolina in the Morning,” “Yes Sir, That’s My Baby,” and “My Sweetie Turned Me Down.” In 1927, in The Jazz Singer, Kahn’s lyrics to the peppy, effervescent “Toot, Toot Tootsie” (“Watch for the mail / I’ll never fail / If you don’t get a letter / Then you’ll know I’m in jail”) were given wonderful treatment by Al Jolson’s high-energy vocalizations.

In 1928 Kahn and Donaldson wrote Whoopee! their only score for Broadway. Produced by Flo Ziegfeld and starring comedian Eddie Cantor, the play was an immediate box office success. It ran for 379 performances and launched Cantor’s career. Most notable are Kahn’s lyrics to the title song: “The Choir sings ‘Here comes the Bride’ / Another victim is by her side / He’s lost his reason / Cause it’s the season / For makin’ whoopee”—a sly, witty little number made famous by Cantor’s dead-pan delivery. In 1930 MGM produced the film version with replacement songs from Kahn and Donaldson, including the memorable “My Baby Just Cares for Me.” Cantor repeated his role. The film’s music numbers were choreographed by Busby Berkeley (his first for Hollywood), and the entire project was shot in the early 2-color Technicolor process. A static and stilted film, the energy—what there is of it—is derived largely from the music.

Despite the growing relationship between Broadway and the film industry, Kahn, out of reticence, remained distant from Hollywood. However in the early 1930s a combination of financial need and ill health brought Kahn to California. And it was here, in 1933, that he undertook full-time employment in the industry. His first project was Flying Down to Rio (1933), notable for the first-ever pairing of Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers. Kahn provided lyrics for the title song, “Orchids in the Moonlight,” and the energetic “Carioca.”

He resumed his collaboration with Donaldson for the Eddie Cantor vehicle Kid Millions (1934), writing the suitably loud “An Earful of Music” for Ethel Merman and Cantor’s hopeful, anti-Depression hit “When My Ship Comes In.” Released at the height of the recession, “When My Ship Comes In” was indicative of Hollywood’s attempt to distract audiences with fancy: “I’ll buy out every ice-cream factory / So all the kids can come and get in free / And I’ll throw all the spinach in the sea / When my ship comes in.’’

During his stay in Hollywood, Kahn had many collaborators; he worked with such composers as Vincent Youmans, Bronislaw Kaper, Sigmund Romberg and Jerome Kern, and penned lyrics for the Marx Brothers, Maurice Chevalier, Nelson Eddy, Dick Powell and Jeanette McDonald. It was for McDonald (with Kaper as composer) that he wrote ‘‘San Francisco,’’ the title song to the 1936 film which has since become the unofficial anthem of the city.

Though many of Kahn’s lyrics are noted for their comic vibrancy, he was also a proficient writer of romantic operetta songs. In 1934, Kahn’s delicious, whimsical score for One Night of Love, a film for which he provided thematic music and title song, earned him his only Academy Award. He wrote the lovely lyrics to Jeanette McDonald’s ‘‘Tonight Will Teach Me to Forget’’ number from Lubitsch’s The Merry Widow and worked on several other MGM operettas, including Naughty Marietta (1935), Rose Marie (1936) and The Firefly (1937).

In 1941 Kahn died suddenly of a heart attack. A consummate lyricist, his death marked the end of one of the busiest and most productive careers in popular songwriting. In 1952 MGM produced I’ll See You in My Dreams, a biopic based on Kahn’s life, with Danny Thomas as Kahn, Doris Day as LeBoy, and Michael Curtiz directing. Featuring many of Kahn’s greatest songs, the film traced the inimitable success of a man who conveyed in popular, colloquial terms the simple (and oftentimes humorous) feelings of love, patriotism and the desire for something better.

—Peter Flynn

KAMINSKI, Janusz

Cinematographer. Nationality: Polish. Born: Ziembice, Poland, 27 June 1959; moved to U.S., 1981. Education: Columbia College, B.A., 1987; American Film Institute, Cinematography Fellow. Family: Married actress Holly Hunter, 1995. Career: Debut as cinematographer at AFI, Lisa, 1988; began association with Steven Spielberg when hired to work on Class of ‘61, TV movie, 1990; earned international acclaim for work on Schindler’s List, 1993; directorial debut, Lost Souls, 1999. Awards: Line Eagel Award, Illinois Film Festival, for Lisa, 1988; Academy Award for Best Cinematography, National Society of Film Critics Award for Best Cinematography, New York Film Critics Circle Award for Best Cinematography, Los Angeles Film Critics Award for Best Cinematography, BAFTA Award (UK) for Best Cinematography, British Society of Cinematographers Award for Best Cinematography, and Chicago Film Critics Association Award for Best Cinematography, all for Schindler’s List, 1993; Golden Satellite Award for Best Cinematography, for Amistad, 1997; Academy Award for Best Cinematography, Boston Society of Film Critics Award for Best Cinematography, Los Angeles Film Critics Award for Best Cinematography, and Florida Film Critics Circle Award for Best Cinematography, for Saving Private Ryan, 1998. Address: c/o American Society of Cinematographers, P.O. Box 2230, Hollywood, CA 90078, U.S.A.

Films as Cinematographer:

1990  The Rain Killer (Stein); The Terror Within II (Stevens)
1991  Pyrates (Stern); Cool As Ice (Kellogg); Wildflower (Keaton—for TV)
1992  Trouble Bound (Reiner); Killer Instinct (Clark and Stein); Class of ‘61 (Hoblit—for TV)
1993  Schindler’s List (Spielberg); Adventures of Huck Finn (Sommers)
1994  Tall Tale (Checkik); Little Giants (Dunham)
1995  How to Make an American Quilt (Moorhouse)
1996  Jerry Maguire (Crowe); Amistad (Spielberg)
1997  The Lost World: Jurassic Park II (Spielberg)
1998  Saving Private Ryan (Spielberg)
2001  A. I.; Memoirs of a Geisha

Other Films:

1990  Watchers II (Notz) (second ph)
1990  To Die Standing (Morneau) (second ph)
1991  One False Move (Franklin) (second ph)
Janusz Kaminski became an international sensation for his work on Steven Spielberg’s 1993 Nazi Holocaust tale, Schindler’s List. The film earned Kaminski seven awards for Best Cinematography, including his first Academy Award. The two men met in 1990, after Spielberg saw Kaminski’s work in Diane Keaton’s television movie Wildflower and hired him to shoot Class of ’61. Since that time, the successful collaboration between director Spielberg and cinematographer Kaminski has produced four major motion pictures, two highly honored.

A native of Poland, Kaminski moved to the United States in 1981 and began his education at Columbia College in Chicago, where he received his B.A. in film in 1987. His skills led him to Los Angeles, where he was granted a position as a Cinematography Fellow at the prestigious American Film Institute. From the beginning, Kaminski’s cinematography was lauded. His debut work, Lisa (1988), won the Line Eagel Award at the Illinois Film Festival. A year later, his association with Spielberg began.

While not new to the role of director of photography (having shot seven films by 1993), the experience garnered on Class of ’61 was obviously pivotal in Kaminski’s career. The following year, the enormously successful Schindler’s List was released. It was immediately acclaimed for its elegant black and white photography. Kaminski used a high speed film stock to create a look which was reminiscent of documentary work, thus enhancing the feeling of reality in the film. The cinematography in Schindler’s List was intensely fine-grained, had great detail, and seemed archival rather than concocted.

He worked on five more films before he collaborated again with Spielberg in 1997’s Amistad. This film, and the one that followed, Spielberg’s The Lost World: Jurassic Park II, were less successful, both critically and at the box office. When Spielberg turned again to the World War II era as a setting, he brought Kaminski into the project. Saving Private Ryan (1998) explored the invasion of Normandy in a way that no film had done before. The two men studied original film shot by the Army Signal Corps as well as combat photographs from the era to develop an accurate depiction of the 1944 battle. Kaminski used several experimental techniques which are rarely seen in narrative film.

To re-create the essence of the battle and the style of filmmaking done in combat situations, Kaminski first located some old lenses from the era. He had Panavision remove the coatings on them to replicate the way light was transmitted in the 1940s. This weathering of the lenses made light bounce around inside the barrels, causing flares and automatically diffusing the light. The result was images that seemed foggy rather than the clear transmission we are used to today. A combination of coated Ultraspeeds and these deteriorated lenses was used in the film. This technique, coupled with an aggressive use of a variety of frame rates to create slow and fast motion, brought the gritty look of battle to the images photographed.

In addition to these experiments, Kaminski also made use of the camera’s shutter to best capture the battle scenes. The crew frequently shot with the shutter set at 45 or 90 degrees to change the appearance of motion in the image. This meant that the explosions shot with a 45 degree shutter seemed hyper-realistic; individual grains of sand seem to fly at the lens and minute details are extremely apparent. Kaminski also employed an out-of sync shutter to create the strange effect of light streaks in the film in some scenes. The film earned Kaminski four major awards for best cinematography.

Kaminski is obviously a gifted artist with a great interest in using experimental techniques to create highly specialized concepts in his photography.

—Tammy Kinsey

KANIN, Garson

Films as Director:

1938 A Man to Remember; Next Time I Marry
1939 The Great Man Votes; Bachelor Mother (+ ro)
1940 My Favorite Wife; They Knew What They Wanted
1941 Tom, Dick, and Harry
1942 Night Shift (doc); Ring of Steel (doc); Fellow Americans (doc)
Films as Writer:

1943  German Manpower (doc)
1944  Night Stripes (doc); A Salute to France (co-d with Renoir—doc); Battle Stations (doc)
1945  The True Glory (co-d with Reed—doc)
1946  Salute to France (co-d with Renoir)

1946  From This Day Forward (Berry)
1947  A Double Life (Cukor) (with Ruth Gordon)
1949  Adam’s Rib (Cukor) (with Ruth Gordon)
1952  The Marrying Kind (Cukor) (with Ruth Gordon); Pat and Mike (Cukor) (with Ruth Gordon)
1953  It Should Happen to You (Cukor)
1956  Born Yesterday (+ co-d)
1960  The Rat Race (Mulligan); High Time (Edwards)
1964  An Eye on Emily (+ d)
1968  Where It’s At (+ d)
1969  Some Kind of Nut (+ d)

1980  Hardhat and Legs (Philips—for TV); The Year’s Blonde (Erman—for TV); The Scarlett O’Hara War (Erman—for TV); The Silent Lovers (Erman—for TV)
1993  Born Yesterday (Mandoki) (co-sc)

Films Based on Kanin’s Writings:

1956  The Girl Can’t Help It (Tashlin)
1961  The Right Approach (Butler)

Publications

By KANIN: plays—

Born Yesterday, New York, 1946.
Fledermaus, New York, 1950.
The Rat Race, New York, 1950.
The Live Wire, New York, 1951.

By KANIN: fiction—

Do Re Mi, New York, 1955.
The Rat Race, New York, 1960.
Where It’s At, New York, 1969.
One Hell of an Actor, New York, 1976.

By KANIN: other books—

Remembering Mr. Maugham, New York, 1966.
Tracy and Hepburn (nonfiction), New York, 1971.
With Ruth Gordon, Adam’s Rib (script), New York, 1972.

By KANIN: articles—

Interview with Penelope Houston and John Gillett, in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1972.
Focus on Film (London), Spring 1974.
Film Comment (New York), July/August 1978.

On KANIN: book—

On KANIN: articles—

Houston, Penelope, “Cukor and the Kanins,” in Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1955.
National Film Theatre Booklet (London), April/May 1972.
American Film (Washington, D.C.), March 1976.
Film Dope (Nottingham), March 1984.
Architectural Digest (Los Angeles), April 1990.
Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), May 1994.

* * *

Garson Kanin appears in this volume principally for his work as a screenwriter, but his contributions to American popular arts and letters, a number of them uncredited, were in a variety of genres and forums. He acted on the stage and in radio and wrote and directed for stage, screen, and television. He published novels, biographies, memoirs, and an extensive array of short fiction in magazines that run the gamut from Atlantic Monthly to Penthouse. As an actor in the 1930s, he appeared in several Broadway plays and in radio roles on programs ranging from the high-toned March of Time and Theatre Guild on the Air to the soap operatic Aunt Jennie’s Real Life Stories and The Goldbergs.

Influenced by his work as production assistant to the legendary Broadway director George Abbott, Kanin began to direct plays in New York, mostly road company versions of Abbott productions. He joined Samuel Goldwyn’s production staff in 1937, an inauspicious association that lasted only a year, but which led to a contract with RKO, where between 1938 and 1941 he directed seven pictures featuring such major stars as Ginger Rogers (Bachelor Mother and Tom, Dick, and Harry), Cary Grant and Irene Dunne (My Favorite Wife), and Carole Lombard and Charles Laughton (They Knew What They Wanted). Kanin also directed a group of films for the war effort after being drafted into the army. One of them, The True Glory, won an Oscar as best documentary for 1945.

Although he had made uncredited contributions to the screenplays for Bachelor Mother, which he directed, the Hepburn-Tracy Woman of the Year, and Jean Arthur’s The More the Merrier Kanin was known primarily as a director until he wrote (and also directed) the Broadway play Born Yesterday (1946)—and until he and his wife, actress-writer Ruth Gordon, collaborated on a series of four memorable screenplays. Those screenplays are certain to stand as the pair’s enduring legacy to American film. Two of them—Adam’s Rib and Pat and Mike—were written for Katharine Hepburn and Spencer Tracy, whose contrasting elegance and gruffness provide the comic center around which each script’s situations and dialogue sparkle. Both films (such as the two other Kanin-Gordon scripts, A Double Life and The Marrying Kind) were directed by George Cukor and in them Cukor, Kanin, Gordon, Tracy, and Hepburn Americanized the Restoration comedy of manners.

Kanin boasts that neither he nor his late wife was “ever employed as a screenwriter for so much as a day by any studio in Hollywood,” ever aware that a Hollywood contract “was the closest form of slavery in our time.” Their scripts were therefore written on speculation in the east, and then offered for sale. “Some, we sold.”

—Mark W. Estrin

KAPER, Bronislau

Films as Composer:

1930 Der Korvettenkapitän (Walther-Fein) (co); Alraune (Oswald)
1931 Die grosse Attraktion (Reichmann)
1932 Melodie der Liebe (Jacoby); Es wird schon wieder besser (Gerron); Ein toller Einfall (Gerron); Hochzeitsreise zu Dritt (Schmidt)
1933 Ein Lied für Dich (May); Heut’ kommt’s drauf an (Gerron); Madame wünscht keine Kinder (Steinhoff)
1934 On a volé un homme (Ophuls) (co)
1935 Escapade (Leonard) (co); The Perfect Gentleman (Whelan); Mutiny on the Bounty (Lloyd); The Last of the Pagans (Thorpe); A Night at the Opera (Wood) (songs); San Francisco (Van Dyke) (song)
1937 Three Smart Girls (Koster); A Day at the Races (Wood) (songs)
1938 Everybody Sing (Marin)
1940 Lilian Russell (Cummings) (songs); I Take This Woman (Van Dyke); The Mortal Storm (Borzage); The Captain Is a Lady (Sinclair); We Who Are Young (Bucquet); Dulcy (Simon); Comrade X (K. Vidor)
1941 Go West (Buzzell); Blonde Inspiration (Berkeley); Rage in Heaven (Van Dyke); I’ll Wait for You (Sinclair); Barnacle Bill (Thorpe); Whistling in the Dark (Simon); Dr. Kildare’s Wedding Day (Bucquet); When Ladies Meet (Leonard); The Chocolate Soldier (Del Ruth) (co); Johnny Eager (LeRoy); H.M. Pulham, Esquire (K. Vidor); A Woman’s Face (Cukor); Two-Faced Woman (Cukor)
1942 We Were Dancing (Leonard); Crossroads (Conway); Fingers at the Window (Lederer); The Affairs of Martha (Dassin); Somewhere I’ll Find You (Ruggles); A Yank at Eton (Taurog); White Cargo (Thorpe)
1943 Slightly Dangerous (Ruggles); Above Suspicion (Thorpe); Bataan (Garnett); The Cross of Lorraine (Garnett); The Heavenly Body (Hall); Keeper of the Flame (Cukor)
1944 Marriage Is a Private Affair (Leonard); Mrs. Parkington (Garnett); Gaslight (Cukor)
1945 Without Love (Bucquet); Bewitched (Oberoi); Our Vines Have Tender Grapes (Rowland)
1946 The Stranger (Wellles); Three Wise Fools (K. Vidor); Coward of Lassie (Wilcox); The Secret Heart (Leonard)
1947 Cynthia (The Rich Full Life) (Leonard); Green Dolphin Street (Saville); Song of Love (Brown)
1948 B.F.’s Daughter (Leonard); Homecoming (LeRoy); The Secret Land (doc); High Wall (Bernhardt); Act of Violence (Zinmennann)
1949 The Secret Garden (Wilcox); That Forsyte Woman (The Forsyte Saga) (Bennett); Malaya (Thorpe); Key to the City (Sidney); The Great Sinner (Siodmak)
1950 The Skipper Surprised His Wife (Nugen); To Please a Lady (Brown); Grounds for Marriage (Leonard); Three Guys Named Mike (Walters); Mr. Imperium (Hartman); A Life of Her Own (Cukor)
1951 Too Young to Kiss (Leonard); Shadow in the Sky (Wilcox); Invitation (Reinhardt); The Red Badge of Courage (Huston); It’s Big Country (Weis and others)
1952 The Wild North (Marton)
1953 The Actress (Cukor); Lili (Walters); The Naked Spar (A. Mann); Ride, Vaquero! (Farrow); Saadia (Lewin); Her Twelve Men (Leonard)
1954 Them! (Douglas)
1955 The Prodigal (Thorpe); Forever, Darling (Hall); Quentin Durward (The Adventures of Quentin Durward) (Thorpe); The Glass Slipper (Walters)
1956 The Swan (C. Vidor); The Power and the Prize (Koster); Somebody Up There Likes Me (Wise); The Barretts of Wimpole Street (Franklin)
1957 Jet Pilot (Von Sternberg—produced 1950); Don’t Go Near the Water (Walters)
1958 Auntie Mame (Da Costa); The Scapegoat (Hamer); The Brothers Karamazov (Brooks)
1959 Green Mansions (M. Ferrer); Home from the Hill (Minnelli)
1960 The Angel Wore Red (Johnson); Butterfield 8 (Daniel Mann)
1961 Ada (Daniel Mann); Two Loves (Walters)
1962 Mutiny on the Bounty (Milestone)
1964 Kisses for My President (Bernhardt)
1965 Lord Jim (Brooks)
1967 Tobruk (Hiller); The Way West (McLaglen)
1968 Counterpoint (Nelson); A Flea in Her Ear (Charon)

Publications

By KAPER: articles—

Film Music Notebook (Calabasas, California), vol. 4, no. 2, 1978.

In Film Score, edited by Tony Thomas, South Brunswick, New Jersey, 1979.

On KAPER: articles—

Rivista del Cinematografo (Rome), May 1980.

New Zealand Film Music Bulletin (Invercargill), August 1983.

* * *

MGM’s contribution to the history of film music is a large one, and the composer who spent more time with that studio than any other was Bronislau Kaper. His 26-year tenure began with the hit title song for San Francisco in 1936 and ended with the writing of his most ambitious score, for Mutiny on the Bounty, in 1962. In between came the writing of music for all manner of films but with a particular talent for deftly comedic, romantic scoring, of which his Oscar-winning Lili, The Glass Slipper, The Swan, and Auntie Mame are conspicuous examples.

Born in Warsaw in 1902, Kaper discovered an affinity with the piano at the age of seven. It was found that he could play even without instruction. Formal musical education followed and Kaper graduated from the Chopin Music School, having studied theory and composition as well as the piano. He went to Berlin to further his education and took jobs as a cabaret pianist in order to support himself. It was a time of burgeoning theatrical activity in Berlin, and Kaper became more and more a part of it as he discovered his facility for making arrangements and writing songs. With the arrival of sound on film he moved into the arranging of scores for musicals and established a solid reputation. In 1933 Kaper moved to Paris to do similar work for French film musicals. In the summer of 1935 Louis B. Mayer vacationed in Europe and heard the song on the radio everywhere. He traced the composer and invited him to his hotel in Paris. Kaper was thereupon offered an MGM contract and arrived in Los Angeles in early 1936.

For the first four years he was limited to the duties of a song writer and arranger of musicals, but his insistence on being given the opportunity to write dramatic underscoring resulted in I Take This Woman in 1940. It was followed by more than a hundred scores during the remainder of his years in film composition. Despite the association with romantic film fare, Kaper, again through his own insistence, proved his ability with darkly serious material, such as Gaslight, The Red Badge of Courage, Them!, and Lord Jim. Among his biggest commercial successes, in addition to Lili, were the themes from Green Dolphin Street, Invitation, and the title music for the long-running television series The F.B.I.

A man noted for his wit and charm, Kaper was active in the musical life of Los Angeles as a member of the board of the Philharmonic Orchestra. Although he never performed in public, his ability as a pianist, with music that ranged from his own to the sonatas of Clementi, was appreciated by the guests in his home. When asked if he felt that after writing film music for more than 40 years, everything had been said and done, he replied, ‘‘No. If you’re excited by something, you’ll come up with new ideas. How many women have you known in your life? Then along comes another and you love her. It’s the same with film. All you need are a few little things and off you go again. If I were bothered by the clichés of the past, I couldn’t live. Not just music. Life is also full of clichés. Don’t fall for them.’’

—Tony Thomas

KÄSTNER, Erich

Writer. Nationality: German. Born: Dresden, Saxony, Germany, 23 February 1899. Education: Attended Lehrerseminar (teacher training school) in Dresden; attended König-Georg-Gymnasium (grammar school) in Dresden after World War I; won a scholarship to Leipzig University; awarded a doctorate for a dissertation written in French on Frederick II and German literature, 1925. Military Service: Served in Army during World War I. Family: Partner, Luiselotte Enderle, from 1939. Career: Published poems in Dichtungen Leipziger Studenten (Poems by Leipzig Students), 1920; worked as a bookkeeper and wrote journalism and advertising copy in 1920s; wrote extensively for the journal Die Weltbühne; published several novels and collections of poetry during 1930s; refused to leave Nazi Germany during World War II, and witnessed the burning of his own books on 10 May 1933; twice arrested by Gestapo and questioned about his writing; books published in Switzerland from 1933; edited magazine section of Die neue Zeitung (Munich newspaper), 1945–47; founded Pinguin (children’s magazine); President of West German PEN Writers’ Organization, 1952–62; cultural adviser for Munich Olympics, 1972. Awards: Federal Film Prize (Germany), for Das Doppelte Lottchen, 1950. Died: In Munich, Germany, 29 July 1974.

Films as Writer:

1931 Dann schon lieber Lebertran (I’d Rather Have Cold Liver Oil) (Ophüls) (co-screenwriter and story); Emil und die Detektive (Emil and the Detectives) (Lamprecht) (novel, credited as Berthold Bürger); Die Koffer des Herrn O.F. (Build and Marry, The Thirteen Trunks of Mr. O.F., The Trunks of Mr. O.F.) (Granowsky) (lyricist)

1935 Emil und die Detektive (Rosmer) (novel, Emil und die Detective)

1936 Stackars miljonärer (Arvedon and Ibsen) (novel Drei Männer im Schnee)

1938 Paradise for Three (Romance for Three) (Buzzell) (novel Drei Männer im Schnee, credited as Erich Kaestner)

1943 Münchhausen (The Adventures of Baron Munchausen [USA], Baron Munchhausen, The Extraordinary Adventures of Baron Muenchhausen) (von Baky) (novel and screenplay, credited as Berthold Bürger); Der Kleine Grenzverkehr (Deppe) (novel)

1950 Das Doppelte Lottchen (Two Times Lotte [USA]) (von Baky) (novel, screenplay, and role as speaker)

1953 Pünktchen und Anton (Engel) (story); Twice Upon a Time (Pressburger) (novel Das Doppelte Lottchen)

1954 Das Fliegende Klassenzimmer (The Flying Classroom [USA]) (Hoffman) (novel and screenplay, credited as Berthold Bürger); Emil und die Detektive (Stemmle) (novel, credited as Berthold Bürger)

1955 Drei Männer im Schnee (Hoffman) (novel, credited as Berthold Bürger)

1957 Salzburger Geschichten (Hoffman) (novel and co-screenwriter)

1961 The Parent Trap (Swift) (novel Das Doppelte Lottchen, credited as Berthold Bürger)

1964 Emil und die Detektive (Tewkbury) (novel Emil und die Detektive, credited as Berthold Bürger)

1969 Konferenz der Tiere (Linda) (novel, credited as Berthold Bürger)

1973 Das Fliegende Klassenzimmer (Jacobs) (novel, credited as Berthold Bürger)

1980 Fabian (Gremm) (novel)

1989 Die Verschwundene Miniatur (Loebner—for TV) (novel); Parent Trap III (Parent Trap IV: Hawaiian Honeymoon) (Miller—for TV) (novel, Das Doppelte Lottchen)

1993 Charlie & Louise—Das Doppelte Lottchen (Vilismaier) (novel, Das Doppelt Lottchen)

1998 The Parent Trap (Meyers) (novel, Das Doppelte Lottchen)

1999 Pünktchen und Anton (Annalouise and Anton [USA]) (Link) (novel)

Publications:

By KÄSTNER: books—

Fabian, Die Geschichte eines Moralisten, Berlin, 1931 (as Fabian, the Tale of a Moralist, London, 1932).

KÄSTNER

Der kleine Grenzverkehr, Zurich, 1938.

On KÄSTNER: books—

Kästner, Erich, and Luiseotte Enderle, Erich Kästner, Life and Work (texts for an exhibition arranged by the Goethe-Institut, Munich), Munich, 1964.

On KÄSTNER: articles—

On KÄSTNER: film—

Das Große Erich Kästner Festival, 1999.

* * *

Best known as a writer of children’s fiction, Erich Kästner was also an acclaimed poet, journalist, and the editor of several newspapers and journals. His novels have been adapted many times for the cinema in Germany and the United States, but his contribution to filmmaking also extends to work as a screenwriter and lyricist. In 1950, he even performed as the narrator of an adaptation of his novel, Das Doppelte Lottchen. Kästner’s experiences at school and as a conscript during World War I left him antagonistic to authority and convention. His children’s stories, such as Emil und die Detektive, in which a child bypasses the police in order to apprehend a thief, reflect his suspicion that humanity is not well served by the law and the government.

Against the advice of his friends, many of whom fled the country when Adolf Hitler and his Nazi party came to power in 1933, Kästner chose to remain in Germany, where he witnessed the burning of his books along with the works of Brecht, Joyce, and Heinrich Mann. Kästner’s work was considered threatening to the Nazi cause because of its emphasis on common humanity over the artificial structures of state and government. He was twice apprehended by the Gestapo, but Kästner continued to work, publishing novels from Zurich, Switzerland, rather than Berlin. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer bought the film rights to several of his novels during this time. In 1942, he was even asked by Goebbels to write the script for a film, although the Nazi government refused to allow his name to appear on the credits. By way of commenting on this restriction, Kästner adopted the pseudonym of Berthold Bürger, a combination of the first name of dramatist Berthold Brecht, and the German word for “citizen.” Kästner apparently suggested the life of Baron Münchhausen as the film’s subject on the grounds that the “commission has come from the world’s greatest liar—why not do a film about his closest competitor.”

Münchhausen, directed by Josef Von Baky, was made in honor of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the famous German studio, UFA. It was filmed in Agfacolor, and contains elaborate special effects and trick photography. The luxurious banquet and street procession scenes seem all the more remarkable when it is remembered that the film was made during war-time. Kästner’s script tells the involved story of Baron Münchhausen and his various adventures, including being shot on a cannonball, numerous duels, and a balloon that travels to the moon. In its original length the film ran to almost two and a half hours, but was finally reduced by about an hour. Overall the film is a great technical achievement, although the color process now seems rather crude.

Although Münchhausen was a great success, Kästner was soon banned from writing altogether, and it is perhaps because of this enforced silence that his greatest contribution to film is through adaptations of his novels. In particular Emil und die Detektive and Das Doppelte Lottchen continue to be of interest to filmmakers, having been filmed four and six times respectively on both sides of the Atlantic. Disney in particular picked up on the charming simplicity of Kästner’s stories, producing The Parent Trap (based on Das Doppelte Lottchen) and Emil and the Detectives within a few years of each other in the early 1960s. More recently, in 1998, The Parent Trap was filmed again by Disney, and the result is if anything an improvement on the 1961 production, with a slick cast, including Dennis Quaid, Natasha Richardson, and Lindsay Lohan, carrying the breezy humour with ease. Emil und die Detektive has been less well served by later remakes, but Gerhard Lamprecht’s 1931 adaptation of the novel is perhaps the best of the many films adapted from Kästner’s work. With a script by a young Billy Wilder, this German film successfully transfers the innocent humour of the novel to the screen without seeming contrived.

Despite his reputation as a writer for children, Kästner also produced adult novels, including Fabian, which was adapted for the screen in 1980. Sometimes read as an archetypal existential novel, Fabian tells the story of a young man whose cynical view of German society leads him into a series of adulterous affairs and finally accidental death while trying to save a child from drowning. The novel’s cold tone presents special difficulties for the filmmaker, and despite high production values, Wolf Gremm’s adaptation is not a great success. Drei Männer im Schnee has similarly suffered, with its satirical edge blunted by the possibilities it offers for romantic comedy.

A prolific writer, Kästner had a practical approach to life, and seems not to have been concerned that his career as a scriptwriter should have been so quickly curtailed. The enduring success of his novels and stories in movies for adults and children is a testament to the power of his imaginative vision. It is disappointing that so many adaptations of his work have been inclined towards the sentimental, since Kästner’s fiction itself conspicuously avoids romanticising human relationships.

—Chris Routledge

KAUFMAN, Boris

Cinematographer. Nationality: Polish. Born: Bialystok, 24 August 1906; Education: Studied at the Sorbonne, Paris. Military Service: 1939–41—served in the French infantry. Family: Brother of the directors Dziga Vertov (born Denis Kaufman) and Mikhail Kaufman; married; one son. Career: Left Soviet Union in early 1920s; 1928—first film as cinematographer, Champs-Elysées; after the German occupation began, moved to New York; 1942–43—worked for National Film Board of Canada; worked for Office of War Information, New York; mid-1950s—first U.S. features as cinematographer. Award: Academy Award for On the Waterfront, 1954. Died: In New York City, 24 June 1980.

Films as Cinematographer (Shorts):

1928 Champs-Elysées (Lods); La Marche des machines (Deslaw); Vingt-quatre heures en trente minutes (Lods)
1929 Les Halles (Galitzine) (co)

Films as Cinematographer (Features):

1933 Le Chemin du bonheur (Mamy)
1934 L’Atalante (Vigo) (co); Le Père Lampion (Christian-Jaque); Zouzou (M. Allegret)
1935 Lucrèce Borgia (Gance) (co)
1936 L’Homme sans coeur (Joannon); Oeil-du-Lynx, détective (Ducis); On ne roule pas Antoinette (Madeux); Quand minuit sonnera (Joannon) (co)
1937 Cinderella (Caron); Etes-vous jalouse? (Chomette); Les Hommes sans nom (Vallée) (co)
1938 Fort-Dolorès (Le Hénaff); Les Gaités de l’exposition (Hajos)
1939 Sérénade (Boyer) (co); Le Veau gras (de Poligny) (co)
1952 Leonardo da Vinci (Emmer) (co)
1954 Garden of Eden (Nosseck); On the Waterfront (Kazan)
1956 Crowded Paradise (Pressburger); Baby Doll (Kazan); Twelve Angry Men (Lumet); Patterns of Power (Cook)
1959 That Kind of Woman (Lumet); The Fugitive Kind (Lumet)
1961 Splendor in the Grass (Kazan)
1962 Long Day’s Journey into Night (Lumet)
1963 All the Way Home (Segal); Gone Are the Days! (Purlie Victorious; The Man from C.O.T.T.O.N.) (Webster)
1964 The World of Henry Orient (Hill) (co); The Pawnbroker (Lumet)
1966 The Group (Lumet)
1967 Bye Bye Braverman (Lumet)
1968 Uptight (Dassin); The Brotherhood (Ritt)
1969 Tell Me That You Love Me, Junie Moon (Preminger)

Publications

By KAUFMAN: articles—

Film Culture (New York), Summer 1955.
On Twelve Angry Men in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), December 1956.
On Baby Doll in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), February 1957.

On KAUFMAN: articles—

Foster, Frederick, on The Fugitive Kind in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), June 1960.
Film Comment (New York), Summer 1972.
Film Dope (Nottingham), March 1984.

* * *

In his 45-year-long career, Boris Kaufman filmed newsreels, avant-garde films, documentaries, industrials, TV commercials, and feature films, winning an Academy Award for black-and-white cinematography in 1954 (On the Waterfront) and maintaining lengthy collaborations with three notable movie directors—Jean Vigo, Elia Kazan, and Sidney Lumet.

Kaufman was the youngest of three brothers who themselves are a noteworthy trio. Denis, the older, became world-famous as Dziga Vertov (Kino-Eye, Kino-Pravda, The Man with the Movie Camera); Mikhail, the middle brother, was chief cameraman on many of Denis’s films and on his own documentary films as well. While Denis and Mikhail remained in Moscow at the end of the First World War, Boris went on to Paris to study poetry and philosophy. Inspired by letters from Denis, who wrote that the camera was “the chief instrument of filmmaking” and that “only by discovering its secrets could one realize the full potential of the new art of cinema,” Boris attended a small technical school in Paris where he learned the rudiments of operating a motion picture camera. His first assignments were on reportage and documentary “pictures” (as he called them, using the Hollywood term—although he never worked in Hollywood).

In 1928 Kaufman filmed Eugene Deslav’s La Marche des machines, which began as a routine assignment covering a technological exposition but which led Kaufman into an abstract study of mechanical movements. The film was shown in a Paris art theater, without Kaufman’s credit, as he was violently opposed to its editing. This seems to have been the only time he refused credit on a film—even a nudist film he shot many years later in Florida had his name on it.

After filming other experimental films, Kaufman was invited by Jean Vigo to work with him on A propos de Nice, a short, shocking satire on upper- and middle-class lifestyles in that resort city. Kaufman used a Kinamo (one of the first hand-held 35mm cameras, which his brother Denis had brought him in 1927) “to get rid of the tripod, to be more flexible, and to avoid being noticed by the people we were filming.”

Their second film, Zéro de conduite, was shot in 16 1/2 days—seven in a Paris studio for the interiors, then nine-and-a-half in a school in suburban St. Cloud. The shooting ratio was two or three to one, which was all they could afford. For the sound shooting Kaufman used a Debry camera, and for more flexibility, the little Kinamo. Their final film, L’Atalante, was shot on a barge on the canals around Paris in late fall and winter, in bitter cold. Vigo’s frail health gave out completely, just as the filming was finished; his death soon afterwards, at age 29, ended their close personal friendship, as well as the avant-garde phase of Kaufman’s career. The Vigo-Kaufman collaboration lasted only five years, but was one of the most creative and memorable in film history, ranking perhaps with Griffith and Bitzer and Eisenstein and Tisse.

In the middle and late 1930s, Kaufman worked as staff cameraman at Paramount’s Paris studio, where he began learning English, and on numerous European features, little known today. In the Second World War he was drafted into the army as a French citizen, and, when France fell, escaped to the United States with his wife and their son. For the remaining war years, he worked at the National Film Board of Canada in Ottawa and at the Office of War Information in New York. As documentary assignments grew scarcer and less challenging, he began shooting industrial films—and those new one-minute oddities called TV commercials. He longed to return to feature dramatic films, but Hollywood was out of the question.

When Kaufman heard that Elia Kazan was going to shoot On the Waterfront in New Jersey, he wanted to show him L’Atalante, but could not find a print in the United States. He showed two of his American documentaries instead, and got the job anyway, beginning the second of his three important collaborations. After filming on the docks and rooftops, Kazan gave Kaufman the choice of filming the interiors in a studio or on location. Later, Kaufman said that while studio shooting would have been easier, especially in dead of winter, he preferred “the patina of reality” they found in waterfront bars and sixth-floor tenements. Kaufman won the 1954 Academy Award for black-and-white cinematography (the writer Budd Schulberg, the art director Richard Day, and Kazan also won Oscars). “I drew upon my experience, I developed ways to apply precise lighting on location, which is not easy. By precision lighting I mean lighting that has a meaning. Of course, the only meaning of lighting is to reveal the inner expression of the face or the mood of a place.” Baby Doll, filmed for Kazan under difficult conditions in Mississippi, brought Kaufman a 1955 Oscar nomination. Meanwhile, Kaufman was thought by some producers to be “slow.” Kazan may have had this in his mind when he wrote, after Boris’s death, for a tribute at the Museum of Modern Art: “Poetry, as everyone knows who’s tried it, takes a little longer. He didn’t hurry his pace, become careless, diminish his devotion.”

Kaufman’s third major collaboration was in 1956 with Twelve Angry Men, Sidney Lumet’s first film, based on a television play he had directed. They worked together off and on for some ten years. Lumet considers Long Day’s Journey into Night their “closest and most successful collaboration” (and at one time, called it his own favorite production). In later years, Kaufman worked with Jules Dassin, Martin Ritt, Otto Preminger and others. He retired in 1972.

It was Kaufman’s increasing burden, especially later in his career, that he often knew and cared more about the “pictures” he worked on than their directors did. Nothing, of course, could equal the first great collaboration with Vigo, when they were young. “I had no second thoughts about risks involved,” Kaufman later recalled. “When you carry a bigger responsibility in a larger picture, you have to be conscious of many things—and you discipline yourself just to survive. in available conditions. . . . This art form has to survive in very materialistic and utilitarian conditions, which is not easy.” No one ever accused Boris Kaufman of taking the easy way.

—Cecile Starr

KIDD, Michael

Films as Choreographer:

1952 Where’s Charley (Butler)
1953 The Band Wagon (Minnelli); Knock on Wood (Panama and Frank)
1954 Seven Brides for Seven Brothers (Donen)
1955 Guys and Dolls (Mankiewicz)
1958 Merry Andrew (+ d)
1968 Star! (Wise)
1969 Hello, Dolly! (Kelly)
1976 Peter Pan (Hemion)
1978 Movie Movie (Donen) (+ ro)

Other Films:

1955 It’s Always Fair Weather (Kelly and Donen) (ro)
1956 Your Key to the Future (d—short)
1974 Smile (Ritchie) (ro)
1978 Actor (Lloyd) (ro)
1989 Skin Deep (Edwards) (ro)
1997 The Making of Seven Brides for Seven Brothers (Benson—doc for TV) (ro)

Publications

By KIDD: articles—

Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), April 1957.

On KIDD: articles—

Film Dope (Nottingham), September 1984.

Throughout the 1950s, Michael Kidd ricocheted repeatedly between Broadway and Hollywood, enlivening the American musical with his fanciful and unabashedly energetic choreography. Yet, despite the conspicuous contributions that Kidd made to both the stage and screen musical during that decade, particularly at MGM, the tremendous success of his work on Broadway (Kidd received four of his five Tony Awards for productions he choreographed in the 1950s) has long overshadowed his role in revitalizing the Hollywood musical.

Although Kidd’s style of choreography—a heady blend of ballet, acrobatics, and folk, jazz, and modern dance—was undoubtedly influenced by the training he received in the late 1930s when the American dance, itself a powerful mixture of various dance forms, was born, his work has been too consistently singular to be considered a clever variation on some grand theme. With the 1945 premiere of his first choreographed piece, On Stage!, which he performed, Kidd established himself as a distinctive choreographer, one capable of creating inventive and visually arresting dances. Of even greater importance to Broadway and Hollywood, On Stage! revealed Kidd’s talent for using dance to communicate with and entertain an audience.

Nowhere is Kidd’s choreography for the motion picture better displayed than in a handsome trio of MGM musicals: Vincente Minnelli’s The Band Wagon, Stanley Donen’s Seven Brides for Seven Brothers, and Joseph L. Mankiewicz’s Guys and Dolls. The versatility of Kidd’s dance compositions is manifest in The Band Wagon, which boasts such disparate musical numbers as the thematic “That’s Entertainment,” with its music-hall exuberance, and “Girl Hunt,” the sleek and steamy satire that ends the picture. In Seven Brides for Seven Brothers, Kidd celebrated the dancer as artist and athlete through a broad and colorful palette of spectacular dance numbers, represented best by the unforgettable barn-raising ballet. By recreating the dance routines he composed for the 1950 stage production of Guys and Dolls, Kidd provided the film version of Damon Runyon’s story with its full-blown vitality and metropolitan rhythm.

During his association with MGM in the 1950s, Kidd also made his on-screen debut in Gene Kelly and Stanley Donen’s It’s Always Fair Weather. Describing Kidd’s performance as ex-soldier/hot-dog stand proprietor Angie Valentine for the New York Times, the critic Bosley Crowther noted the naturalness and agreeableness of Kidd’s acting, which was “somewhat in the style of Frank Sinatra,” adding “and—needless to say—he can dance.” Before leaving MGM and Hollywood near the end of the decade, Kidd, who had recently directed and co-produced Li’l Abner on Broadway, completed his sole directorial effort in film, Merry Andrew.

In the 1960s and 1970s Kidd concentrated on choreographing, directing, and occasionally co-producing a number of Broadway productions—Wildcat, Sky scraper, The Rothschilds—though not to the exclusion of working in film. Kidd rejoined director Gene Kelly in 1969 to choreograph Hello, Dolly!, whose excessive budget provoked Pauline Kael to decry in The New Yorker nearly everything about the movie, including its “asexual and unromantic” dancing, an assessment that was countered by several other film critics (Time’s critic, for example, thought Kidd’s dances “blithe and sumptuous”). In 1975 Kidd again performed on-screen in Michael Ritchie’s satirical Smile, playing with charm and a touch of irony a Hollywood choreographer hired to stage a small-town beauty pageant.

—Nancy Jane Johnston

KOCH, Howard W.

Films as Writer:

1940 The Sea Hawk (Curtiz); The Letter (Wyler); Virginia City (Curtiz) (uncredited)
1941 Shining Victory (Rapper); Sergeant York (Hawks)
1942 In This Our Life (Huston); Casablanca (Curtiz)
1943 Mission to Moscow (Curtiz)
1944 In Our Time (Sherman)
1945 Rhapsody in Blue (Rapper); Tuesday in November (Berry)—short)
1946 Three Strangers (Negulesco); The Best Years of Our Lives (Wyler) (uncredited)
1948 Letter from an Unknown Woman (Ophüls)
1950  No Sad Songs for Me (Maté)
1951  The Thirteenth Letter (Preminger)
1956  The Intimate Stranger (Finger of Guilt) (Losey) (as Peter Howard)
1961  The Greengage Summer (Loss of Innocence) (Gilbert)
1962  The War Lover (Leacock)
1964  633 Squadron (Grauman)
1967  The Fox (Rydell) (+ assoc pr)
1974  The Woman of Otowi Crossing (Daniel Mann)

Other Films:

1949  Border Incident (Mann) (asst d)
1955  Fort Yuma (Selander) (pr)
1962  The Manchurian Candidate (Frankenheimer) (exec pr)

Publications

By KOCH: books—

With John Huston, In Time to Come (play), New York, 1942.
The Panic Broadcast, Boston, Massachusetts, 1970.
As Time Goes By (autobiography), New York, 1978.

By KOCH: articles—

Film Comment (New York), July-August 1978.

On KOCH: book—

On KOCH: articles—

Film Comment (New York), May-June 1973.

Howard W. Koch

* * *

Although he was responsible for writing a number of distinguished film scripts for Warner Bros. in the 1940s and for Columbia in the 1950s and 1960s, Howard Koch will probably best be remembered for contributing the marvelous dialogue to Casablanca which he coscripted with Julius and Philip Epstein in 1943. It is to his credit that the dialogue for this relatively low-budget, war-time melodrama still resonates today with wit and charm. In part, of course, it is the quality of the cast which is responsible for such timelessness, an embarrassing number of fine character actors (as one critic has described it) deliver the lines with style and control: Bogart is perfect as Rick as is Bergman as Ilse and so on. But it was Howard Koch, still a relative newcomer to film writing, who crafted the movie into one of cinema’s rare and privileged films.

Koch himself arrived in Hollywood in the late 1930s in a privileged position as he followed Orson Welles to the coast on the heels of the Halloween broadcast, War of the Worlds, which he wrote for the Mercury Theatre. He was cautious in his choice of screen assignments, and produced, in the three short years before Casablanca, scripts of high literary and artistic merit. He wrote the swashbuckler The Sea Hawk, not as just another adventure film written to formula but as a thoughtful historical romance with thematic connections to the current events taking place in Europe with the rise of Adolph Hitler. He followed The Sea Hawk with a literary adaptation of Somerset Maugham’s play, The Letter, which under Koch’s tutelage became more than just a star vehicle for Bette Davis who was picked to act the role of Leslie Crosby, the neglected wife of the English planter. Although melodramatic, The Letter crackles with good dialogue and marked Koch as not only a fine adaptor but a fine screen craftsman as well. The next two films he wrote were also melodramas, Shining Victory, a play by A.J. Cronin which Koch adapted with Anne Froelich, and Ellen Glasgow’s In This Our Life which he cowrote with John Huston as an uncredited collaborator. He had worked once before with Huston on Sergeant York, a film about a pacifist farmer who overcomes his objections to killing and becomes the most decorated hero of the First World War. Although the assignment created political problems for Koch, he had an opportunity to work with Howard Hawks who directed the film. In spite of the film’s obviously propagandistic tone, Koch and Huston were nominated for an Academy Award.

Koch was brought in to work on his next project after it had been abandoned by the Epstein brothers. Casablanca was a film which took ample advantage of Koch’s idealism and political leanings and avoided the cloying patriotism of Sergeant York but nevertheless supplying a pro-war, pro-alley message. Casablanca retains the correct mixture of romanticism and cynicism to remain perennially fresh and contemporary. Koch’s handling of the film’s political contents earned him an assignment on Mission to Moscow, based on Ambassador Joseph Davies’s book and already begun by Erskine Caldwell. The film is now a political embarrassment because of its favorable portrait of Joseph Stalin, who comes across as a lovable Uncle Joe, and it also was one of the sources for Koch’s blacklist as the film was seen as subversive in a cold war perspective. Koch wrote three more films for Warner Bros.: In Our Time, with Ellis St. Joseph, Rhapsody in Blue, with Elliot Paul and later Clifford Odets, and Three Strangers, with John Huston. All three scripts show evidence of Koch’s skill with dialogue.

In 1947, in an appearance before the House Un-American Activities Committee, Jack Warner denied that any Warner films contained communist propaganda and mentioned Koch among others as a writer he had fired for his political leanings. Koch was called before the committee to deny Warner’s allegations, and, although he proved his point, he was “graylisted” for his support of the political left in Hollywood. Koch lost jobs because of his listing and wrote very little that was produced during the 1950s. One notable exception was Letter from an Unknown Woman, written for Max Ophüls. It is a fine film and captures the ambience of Vienna in the same way Casablanca did for the city of its title. Following The Thirteenth Letter, which Koch did for Otto Preminger, he was officially blacklisted and left Hollywood for Woodstock, New York, and later for Europe.

In 1961 Koch’s name was finally removed from the blacklist after a lengthy legal battle and he was allowed to work again. The writing he did on The Greengeag Summer, The War Lover, and 633 Squadron was undistinguished although workmanlike; in the case of 633 Squadron, written mostly by James Clavell, Koch was brought in as a script doctor and cannot be held responsible for the rather lackluster script.

Koch’s scripting job on The Fox, an adaptation of the D.H. Lawrence short novel, became distorted beyond recognition, so much so that Koch took the script to the Writers Guild for arbitration but lost. The final film owes little to Lawrence or to Howard Koch.

Koch’s career, like so many others’ disrupted by the era of blacklisting, never recovered from the period of enforced absence from motion-picture writing. Hollywood changed radically during the 1950s, and those who were kept out of the studios during that period seem not to have made a transition after the blacklisting was lifted. The case of Howard Koch is particularly saddening because his obvious talent as a screenwriter was thrown away for the sake of political expediency, and in the process the screen lost one of its most skilled artists.

—Charles L. P. Silet

KOLOWRAT-KRAKOWSKY, Count “Sascha” Alexander

Films as Producer:

For many early films the director is not known. Early attempts at filmmaking included short travelogues and documentaries: Die Gewinnung des Eisens am steirischen Erzberg (Mining on Erzberg), Burg Kreutzenstein (Castle Kreutzenstein); Die Dolomites (The Dolomites); Der Gardasee (Lake Garda); Der Stapellauf der Dreadnought Tegthoff (The Launch of the Battleship Tegthoff); Im Auto durch die österreichischen Alpen (By Car through the Austrian Alps).

Early attempts at comedies, which were never shown publicly: Pampulik hat Hunger (P. Is Hungry); Pampulik kriegt ein Kind (P. Is Pregnant); Pampulik als Affe (P. as a Monkey), all of them with Max Pallenberg.
1912 Onkel Cocl am Gänsehäufel (Uncle Cocl at the Gänsehäufel (Pool); Cocl als Säugling (Cocl as Baby); Kaiser Joseph II (Emperor Joseph II) (Kolowrat and J.H. Groß)

1913 Cocl geht zum Maskenball (Cocl Goes to the Masked Ball) (Zeitlinger); Die Feuerprobe (Test by Fire); Wie aus Cocl Asta Pilsen wurde (How Cocl Became Asta Pilsen); Der Millionenerben (The Millionaire Uncle) (Marischka)

1914 Augustin auf Brautschau (Augustin Looks for a Bride); Cocl als Haussherr (Cocl as the Master of the House); Onkel Cocl die Klassenlos (Uncle Cocl’s Lottery Ticket); Durch Verrat zum Sieg (Through Treason to Victory); Siegesruf durch Serbien (Victorious through Serbia) (exact year unknown)

1916 Wien im Krieg (Vienna at War); Sami der Seefahrer (Sami the Seafarer); Die Verteidigung der Karpaten (The Defense of the Carpathians)

1917 Der Nörgler (The Grumbler); Der Viererzug (Team of Four) (Hahn); Er muß sie haben (He Must Have Her) (Hahn); Das schwindende Herz (The Disappearing Heart); Der Brief einer Toten (Letter from a Dead Woman) (Freissler); Wenn die Liebe auf den Hund kommt (When Love Fades) (K. Wiene); Ein Weib (For a Woman) (Emst and Hubert Marischka); Licht und Finsternis (Light and Darkness) (Frank Boyers Diener (Frank Boyer’s Servant) (Wiene); Der Mann mit der Maske (The Man with the Mask); Der Diebstahl (The Theft) (R. Łoewenstein); Der gewonnene Prozeß (Victory in Court); Die goldene Wehr (The Golden Shield) (Stein); Die feldgrau Krone (The Gray Crown); Wir und die andern (We and the Others) (Rob); Der sichere Weg zum Frieden (The Sure Way to Peace) (Rob); Was die Liebe vermag (What Love Can Do) (Freissler); Er rächt seine Schwiegermutter (He Revenge His Mother-in-Law); Der Frieden entgegen (Towards Peace) (K. Wiene); Der Gewissenswurm (A Guilty Conscience) (Theyer); Herrn Zabladies seltsamer Traum (The Strange Dream of Mr. Zabladie), Das Nachtgläser von Mischli-Mischloch (The Camp of Mischli-Mischloch) (Freissler)

1918 Der Märtyrer seines Herzens (The Martyr of His Heart) (Jistitz); Das neue Leben (The New Life) (K. Wiene); Der Fluch, parts I and II (Emst Marischka); Das andere Ich (The Other Self) (Freissler); Don Juan’s letztes Abenteuer (Don Juan’s Last Adventure) (Ucicky); Der letzte Erbe von Lassa (The Last Heir of Lassa) (K. Wiene); Das Haus ohne Lachen (House without Laughter) (K. Wiene); Am Tor des Lebens (At the Gate of Life) (Wiene)

1919 Der Umweg zur Ehe (Detour to Marriage) (K. Wiene); Die Spinne (The Spider) (Wiene); Zwei Welten (Two Worlds) (Wiene); Der Einbrucher im Frack, parts I and II (The Thief in Tuxedo) (Ralph); In letzter Stunde (At the Last Minute) (Freissler); Ein gefährliches Spiel (A Dangerous Game) (Freissler); Die Dame mit den schwarzen Handschuhen (The Lady with the Black Gloves) (Kertész)

1920 Der Stern von Damaskus (Star of Damaskus) (Kertész); Die Gottesgeißel (God’s Punishment) (Kertész); Die Dame mit den Sonnenblumen (The Lady with the Sunflowers) (Kertész); Prinz und Bettelknable (The Prince and the Pauper) (Korda)

1921 Mrs. Tutti Frutti (Kertész); Cherchez la femme (Kertész); Dorothy’s Bekennnis (Dorothy’s Confession) (Kertész); Wege des Schreckens (Roads of Horror) (Kertész)

1922 Herren der Meere (Masters of the Sea) (Korda); Eine versunkene Welt (A Sunken World) (Korda); Der Ausflug in die Seligkeit (The Trip to Bliss) (Freissler); Zigennerliebe (Gypsy Love) (Walsh); Serge Panine (Maudru); Sodom und Gomorrha (Moon of Israel) (Kertész)

1923 Kinder der Revolution (Children of the Revolution) (Theyer); Die Lawine (The Avalanche) (Kertész); Das Rumpelstiltschen (Rumpelstiltskin) (Desider Kertész); Fräulein Frau (Miss Mrs.) (Theyer); Der junge Medardus (The Young Medardus) (Kertész); Namenlos (Without a Name) (Kertész)

1924 Harun al Raschid (Kertész); Wenn du noch eine Mutter hast (If You Still Have a Mother) (Desider Gardener-Kertész); Jedermanns Weib (Everyman’s Woman) (Korda); Die Sklavenkönigin (The Slave Queen) (Kertész)

1925 Salammbō (Maradon); Die Rache des Pharao (Pharaoh’s Revenge) (Theyer); Das Spielzeug von Paris (The Toy of Paris) (Kertész)

1926 Fiaker Nr. 13 (Kertész); Der goldene Schmetterling (The Golden Butterfly) (Kertész); Die Pratermizzi (Prater Girl) (Kolowrat and his staff)

1927 Tintel Tangel (Ucicky); Die Beichte des Feldkuraten (The Confession of a Military Priest) (Löwenstein); Café Electric (Ucicky)

During World War I, Kolowrat produced a newsreel: Österreichischer Kino-Wochenbericht vom nördlichen und südlichen Kriegsschauplatz (Austrian Weekly Newsreel from The Northern and Southern Battlefronts), later Sascha-Kriegswochenbericht (Sascha’s Weekly Report).

War documentaries include: Heldenkampf in Schnee und Eis (Heroic Battle in Snow and Ice); Die zehnte Isonzoschlacht (The Tenth Isonzo Battle).

Publications

On KOLOWRAT: books—

Porges, Friedrich, Schatten erobern die Welt, Basel, 1946.
Sascha-Film, ed., Dreißig Jahre Sascha-Film, Vienna, 1948.
Gesek, Ludwig, Gestalter der Filmkunst. Von Asta Nielsen bis Walt Disney, Vienna, 1948.
Festschrift der Sascha-Film Gesellschaft m.b.H. Wien, Vienna, 1957.
Guha, Wilhelm, Die Geschichte eines österreichischen Filmunternehmens: Von der Sascha-Film-Fabrik in Böhmen zur Wien-Film, unpublished manuscript, Filmarchiv Austria, Vienna, 1975.
Steiner, Gertraud, Traumfabrik Rosenhügel. Filmstadt Wien/Wien-Film/Tobis-Sascha/Vita-Film. Vienna, 1997.
On KOLOWRAT: articles—

* * *

The “film count,” one of the most flamboyant personalities ever to work in film, had been preceded by Anton and Louise Kolm as professional filmmakers in the Austro-Hungarian monarchy, but Alexander Kolowrat was the one to found the larger and lasting firm. ‘‘Sascha,’’ as his friends called him, was descended from old Bohemian aristocracy. With the fortune he inherited upon his father’s death in 1910, he was financially able to indulge his passion for the new art. His wealth and title also gave him useful high ranking contacts in his own country and abroad. He could travel at will on business and pleasure trips to Paris and New York to stay abreast of the newest developments in film technology and distribution.

Kolowrat was born in the United States in Glenridge, New York, where his father spent a few years in exile for killing Prince Auersperg in a duel of honor. The family soon returned to the monarchy. From early youth on Sascha was fascinated by technical matters, even working at the Laurin and Klement car factory. He was a daredevil, who won motorcycle races as a student and was a regular participant in the Semmering mountain race car competition. He was one of the earliest Austrian pilots and the first balloonist. His parties at the Viennese Sacher hotel were legendary, and in spite of his copulence the young count was a dashing and charming man with an eye for beautiful women.

Upon seeing his first film in 1909 at the Pathé Brothers in Paris, he knew he had found his mission in life. Film enabled him to combine all of his passions: technology, adventurous travel, and women. He especially indulged his appetite for beautiful women by regularly inviting them to his studio for screen tests.

In 1910 he founded the ‘‘Sascha-Filmfabrik in Příbram in Bohemia,’’ and after two years of experimenting he showed a film in 1912 about mining iron at Styrian Erzberg mountain. He produced a number of travelogues before he attempted feature films. In one of his castles, Gross-Meierhöfen near Příbram in Bohemia, he installed a makeshift workshop for film developing. When he found that he had to be closer to the market, he moved to a studio in Biberstrasse in the center of Vienna in 1912. In 1913 he achieved his first big success with Der Millionendonkel. This film featured the famous Alexander Girardi performing scenes from his most famous operetta roles.

Kolowrat hired a stellar professional team: Oskar Berka, the head of his laboratory; Karl Freund, later the famous cinematographer; and the cameraman Hans Theyer, who had learned his craft with Pathé in Paris. In 1916 Theyer helped Kolowrat set up the first free-standing film studio in Austria. Kolowrat had bought the iron structure of an airplane hangar in Germany and rebuilt it, covered with glass for maximum light, in the quaint, wine-growing Viennese suburb of Sievering.

The First World War marked the turning point of the business. The exclusion of competitors, mainly the French, propelled the Sascha company into a thriving business. Kolowrat’s influential contacts made possible his appointment as director of the film section of the military press service. As director, his authority enabled him to gather many of his trusted coworkers, among them Theyer, Karl Hartl, Gustav Ucicky, and Fritz Freissler. In October 1914 the Sascha company received permission to produce a weekly war newsreel, Sascha-Kriegswoche. An even bigger coup was his gaining the exclusive right to film the funeral of Emperor Franz Joseph in November 1916. By working around the clock, Kolowrat and his staff produced 255 copies within three days and nights, to be distributed to every corner of the monarchy. By the end of the war, the Sascha company had turned out approximately 300 films. The satirist Karl Kraus attacked Kolowrat in his monumental play Die letzten Tage der Menschheit as a war profiteer.

In 1916 the Sascha company formed a partnership with Messter-Film in Berlin. In 1918 the German UFA took over Messter-Film, thus becoming a shareholder in Sascha. In 1918 Sascha-Film merged with the Viennese distributing firm Philipp and Pressburger to form Sascha-Filmindustrie AG. The company established headquarters at Siebensterngasse 31 in the seventh district of Vienna, where it operated for many decades.

The end of the Austro-Hungarian monarchy in 1918 meant the loss of markets for Sascha. To seek new opportunities and learn the latest developments in the film business, Kolowrat made two trips to the United States in 1919 and 1920 as president of the company, accompanied on the second visit by Arnold Pressburger, Director General of Sascha-Film. They were able to engage the Herz Film Corporation as a distributor of Sascha Films in the United States. At the same time, they contracted to represent Paramount Pictures in Austria. Greatly impressed by D.W. Griffiths’ Intolerance (1916), Kolowrat produced costly spectacles for the world market: Sodom and Gomorrah in 1922, the bizarre climax of Austrian silent film, and Die Sklavenkönigin in 1924, both directed by Michael Kertész, a Hungarian who worked for Kolowrat for several years. In 1926, under the name Michael Curtiz, he began an extremely successful career in Hollywood, directing Casablanca in 1942.

Kolowrat also teamed up with other Hungarians in the early 1920s. Alexander Korda and his wife, the silent film star Maria Corda, who worked for him briefly before they moved to Berlin and later to Hollywood. Ultimately Korda found his niche as a major producer in England. He achieved Sascha-Film’s first international success with Prinz und Bettelknabe (The Prince and the Pauper) in 1920, a film based on Mark Twain’s novel.

The last costly production was Der junge Medardus, a film based on Arthur Schnitzler’s drama. The film, which was set in the Napoleonic wars in 1809 in Vienna, was also directed by Michael Kertesz. By the middle of the 1920s the economic crisis had put an end to lavish spectacles in Austria. A less expensive production, but a film depicting the effects of the depression and similar in style to G.W. Pabst’s Die freundlose Gasse (1925), was Café Elektric (1927), which introduced the future stars Willi Forst and Marlene Dietrich. Kolowrat became seriously ill during this production which proved to be his last film. He died of cancer on 4 December 1927 at the age of 42 in Vienna. With his energy, charisma, contacts, and money he had brought Austrian film to international recognition. In the years after his death, his film company fell on hard times, but the legacy of this remarkable film pioneer—with his 140 feature films of various lengths between 1911 and 1927—and his company have endured.

—Gertraud Steiner Daviau
KORDA, (Sir) Alexander

Producer and Director. Nationality: British. Born: Sándor László Kellner in Túrkeve, Hungary, 16 September 1893; became British Citizen 1936. Brother of the production designer Vincent Korda and the director Zoltan Korda. Education: Attended Jewish School in Túrkeve. Family: Married 1) the actress María Farkas (divorced 1930); 2) the actress Merle Oberon, 1939 (divorced 1945); 3) Alexandra Boycun, 1953. Career: Newspaper reporter in Budapest; secretary and assistant at Ungerleider Projectograph Distribution Company; 1914—exempted from military service on health grounds, directed educational films and others; 1917—bought Corvin Production Company and built studio in Budapest; 1919—escaped to Vienna after overthrow of the Béla Kun regime in Hungary, and began collaboration with Lajos Biro; formed Korda Productions with Maria Corda; 1927—signed contract with First National in Hollywood; 1930—contract with Fox cancelled after one film, went to Paris with Biro; 1931—signed contract with Paramount-British in London; 1932—formed London Film Productions, making “quota quickies”; The Private Life of Henry VIII brought international fame and long-term contract with United Artists; 1935—became partner in United Artists; 1939—established Alexander Korda Productions; 1940—went to U.S., formed production companies Romaine Film Productions and Gloria Pictures; 1944—left United Artists; 1946—took control of British Lion Distribution; took over Regina Productions in France with Marcel Carné, René Clair and Julien Duvivier; formed Tricolore Films to distribute films in the US; took over Shepperton Studios; 1949—withdraw from British Lion and announced the removal of his name from the credits on his productions; 1955—formed London Films Television Company, which was liquidated upon his death and before any programmes were made; 1943—knighted. Died: In 1956.

Films as Producer:

1917 A csikós (The Horseherder) (Pástory); A peleskei notárius (The Notary) (Pástory); Piros bugyelláris (The Crimson Notebook); A riporterkirály (The King of Reporters) (Pástory); A kettékasszony (The Woman in Two Minds) (Pástory)
1918 Károly Bakák (Z. Korda and Pástory); A testőr (The Guardsman) (Antalffy); A kis lord (The Little Lord) (Antalffy)
1932 Men of Tomorrow (Sagan and Z. Korda); That Night in London (Overnight) (Lee); Strange Evidence (Milton)
1933 Counsel’s Opinion (Dwan); Cash (For Love or Money) (Z. Korda)
1934 Catherine the Great (The Rise of Catherine the Great) (Czinner); The Private Life of the Gannets (Huxley)
1935 Sanders of the River (Bosambo) (Z. Korda); Wharves and Strays (Browne); Moscow Nights (I Stand Condemned) (Asquith); The Ghost Goes West (Clair); Things to Come (Menzies)
1936 Fire over England (Howard); The Man Who Could Work Miracles (Mendes); Men Are Not Gods (Reisch); Miss Breeze (For Her Duty) (Garmes); Forget-Me-Not (Ever Yours) (Z. Korda); Fox Hunt (Gross and Hoppin)
1937 Dark Journey (Saville); Elephant Boy (Flaherty and Z. Korda); Farewell Again (Troopship) (Whelan); Action for Slander (Whelan); Knight without Armour (Feyder); The Squeaker (Murder on Diamond Row) (Howard); The Return of the Scarlet Pimpernel (Schwartz); Paradise for Two (The Gaiety Girls) (Freeland); Over the Moon (Freeland); 21 Days (21 Days Together: The First and the Last) (Dean)
1938 Prison without Bars (Hurst); The Challenge (Rosmer); The Drum (Drums) (Z. Korda); South Riding (Saville); The Divorce of Lady X (Whelan)
1939 Q Planes (Clouds over Europe) (Whelan); The Rebel Son (Granovsky and Brunel); The Spy in Black (U-Boat 29) (Powell); The Four Feathers (Z. Korda); The Lion Has Wings (Powell, Hurst and Brunel)
1940 The Conquest of the Air (Z. Korda, Esway, Taylor, Shaw, Saunders and Menzies); The Thief of Baghdad (Berger, Powell and Whelan); Old Bill and Son (Dalrymple)
1941 Lydia (Duvivier); New Wine (Schunzel)
1942 To Be or Not To Be (Lubitsch); Jungle Book (Z. Korda)
1943 The Bitter Bit
1946 The Shop at Sly Corner (The Code of Scotland Yard) (King)
1947 A Man about the House (Arliss); Mine Own Executioner (Kimmins); Night Beat (Huth); Anna Karenina (Duvivier); Les Dessous des cartes (Cayatte)
1948 The Fallen Idol (Reed); The Winslow Boy (Asquith); Bonnie Prince Charlie (Kimmins); The Small Back Room (Powell and Pressburger); The Last Days of Dolwyn (Woman of Dolwyn) (Williams)
1949 Saints and Sinners (Arliss); That Dangerous Age (If This Be Sin) (Ratoff); Interrupted Journey (Birt); The Third Man (Reed); The Cure for Love (Donat); The Angel with the Trumpet (Bushell)
1950  State Secret (The Great Man Hunt) (Gilliat); The Happiest Days of Your Life (Lauder); My Daughter Joy (Operation X) (Ratoff); The Wooden Horse (Lee); Seven Days to Noon (Boulting); Gone to Earth (Powell and Pressburger); The Bridge of Time (Eady and Boothby); The Wonder Kid (Hartel)

1951  Flesh and Blood (Kimmins); The Tales of Hoffman (Powell and Pressburger); Lady Godiva Rides Again (Launder); Mr. Denning Drives North (Kimmins); Outcast of the Islands (Reed); Cry, the Beloved Country (African Fury) (Z. Korda)

1952  Home at Seven (Murder on Monday) (Richardson); Who Goes There! (The Passionate Century) (Kimmins); Edinburgh (Eady); The Road to Canterbury (Eady); The Sound Barrier (Breaking the Sound Barrier) (Lean); The Holly and the Ivy (O’Ferrall); The Lost Hours (The Big Frame) (Macdonald); Folly to Be Wise (Launder); The Ringer (Hamilton)

1953  Twice upon a Time (Pressburger); The Man Between (Reed); The Heart of the Matter (O’Ferrall); Hobson’s Choice (Lean); Three Cases of Murder (Toye, Eady, and O’Ferrall); The Captain’s Paradise (Kimmins); The Story of Gilbert and Sullivan (Gilbert and Sullivan; The Great Gilbert and Sullivan) (Gilliat)

1954  Devil Girl from Mars (Macdonald); The Green Scarf (O’Ferrall); A Kid for Two Farthings (Reed); The Constant Husband (Gilliat); The Man Who Loved Redheads (French); Aunt Clara (Kimmins); The Teckman Mystery (Toye); The Belles of St. Trinian’s (Launder)

1955  Raising a Riot (Toye); Summer Madness (Summertime) (Lean); The Deep Blue Sea (Litvak); Storm over the Nile (Z. Korda and Young); Richard III (Olivier); The Man Who Never Was (Neame); I Am a Camera (Cornelius)

1956  Smiley (Kimmins)

Films as Director:

1914  A becsapott újságíró (The Duplicated Journalist)

1915  Tuty és Totty (Tutya and Totty); Lyon Lea (Lea Lyon) (with Pásztor); A tiszti kardbotj (The Officer’s Swordnote) (+ sc)

1916  Mágnás Miska (Miska the Magnate); A nevő Szaszia (The Laughing Saskia); Versődő szívek (Struggling Hearts); Ciklámen (Cyclamen); Fehér éjszakák (White Nights; Fekdora) (+ sc); A nagymama (The Grandmother) (+ sc); Mesék az írógépröl (Tales of the Typewriter) (+ sc); A ketszívű férfi (The Man with Two Hearts); Az egymillió fontos bankó (The Million Pound Note)

1917  A golyókakilja (The Stork Caliph); Mágia (Magic); Harrison es Barrison (Harrison and Barrison); Faun

1918  Az aranyember (The Man with the Golden Touch); Mary Ann

1919  Ave Caesar!; Fehér Rosza (White Rose); Yamata; Se ki, se be (Neither in Nor Out); A 111-es (No. 111)

1920  Seine Majestat das Bettelkind (Prinz und Bettelknabe)

1922  Herren der Meere; Eine versunkene Welt (Die Tragödie eines verschollenen Fürstensohnes); Samson und Delila (Der Roman einer Opfersängerin) (+ co-sc)

1923  Das Unbekannte Morgen (+ co-sc)

1924  Jedermanns Frau (Jedermanns Weib); Tragodie im Haus Habsburg (Das Drama von Mayerling; Der Prinz der Legende)

1925  Der Tänzer Meiner Frau

1926  Eine Dubarry Von Heute

1927  The Stolen Bride; The Private Life of Helen of Troy

1928  The Yellow Lily; The Night Watch

1929  Love and the Devil; Her Private Life; The Squall

1930  Lilies of the Field; The Princess and the Plumber; Women Everywhere

1931  Rive Gauche; Marius (Zum Goldenen Anker)

1932  Service for Ladies (Reserved for Ladies)

1933  Wedding Rehearsal; The Private Life of Henry VIII; The Girl from Maxim’s

1934  The Private Life of Don Juan

1936  Rembrandt

1941  That Hamilton Woman (Lady Hamilton)

1945  Perfect Strangers (Vacation from Marriage)

1947  An Ideal Husband

Publications

By KORDA: articles—

Photoplay (New York), vol. 32, no. 6, November 1927.

Film Weekly, vol. 19, no. 456, 10 July 1937.

On KORDA: books—

On KORDA: articles—

Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1956.

Screen (London), vol. 13, no. 2, Summer 1972 + filmo.

National Film Theatre booker (London), February-March 1976.

Film Dope (London), no. 31, January 1985 + filmo.

Historical Journal Of Film, Radio and Television (Abingdon), vol. 6, no. 2, October 1986.

Sight and Sound (London), vol. 55, no. 2, Spring 1986.

* * *

After the last and greatest of the financial crises that punctuated his career, Alexander Korda was obliged to relinquish the chairmanship of his production company, British Lion. Rather tacitly, the government receiver asked him to recommend a suitable successor. Korda considered, but failed to come up with any suggestions. “You see,” he explained urbanely, “I don’t grow on trees.”

Irreplaceable Korda certainly was. When, in 1933, with the audacious and unexpected success of The Private Life of Henry VIII, he erupted on to the international scene, the staid British movie industry had never experienced anyone like him: a mogul on the grand scale, flamboyant, lavish, autocratic, and infinitely ambitious. Since his death in 1956, no other British producer has come within a mile of replacing him.

Cosmopolitan and cultured, Korda never took to the parochial world of Hollywood (“it was like Siberia”), but he readily absorbed the blockbuster mentality. “I can’t afford to make cheap pictures,” he observed once. Though in fact quite capable of making small-scale, intimate films (Rembrandt, Perfect Strangers), he instinctively gravitated towards grand themes, epic tales of history and heroism which were given the full spectacular treatment. At all times, even when money was short, he believed in thinking big. The finest and most expensive personnel were hired. Prestigious names such as Churchill and H.G. Wells were drafted in to write scripts. Denham, founded on the strength of Henry VIII, was the first British film studio built on a Hollywood scale.

Although Korda was also a director, his achievements in this field were rarely more than competent, and he often admitted to finding directing work dull. His real talent was as an impresario, inspiring others with his own glittering, slightly cockeyed vision. Teamwork was never his style (“you can work for Korda, but not with him,” a colleague noted), but he knew how to flatter. Actors, writers, and directors—including the prickly von Sternberg—were disarmed by his professional understanding of their problems. To Britain, his adopted country, he offered a shrewdly inflated version of the national myth, Kiplingesque sagas subtly leavened with sophisticated Hungarian irreverence. His pre-war “Empire trilogy” (Sanders of the River, The Drum, The Four Feathers) make embarrassing viewing today, but in the 1930s provided reassurance to an insecure nation—as did Fire over England, with its ringing patriotic defiance of potential invaders.

During the war Korda continued in heroic vein with Lady Hamilton—“propaganda with a very thick coating of sugar,” in his own estimation, but Churchill’s favourite film. As post-war tastes changed, his penchant for high period style betrayed him: both Bonnie Prince Charlie and Anna Karenina fell woefully flat. The greatest success of his later years was The Third Man—romanticism still, but of the dark, downbeat variety. Not that failure ever narrowed the scope of his ambition. Among his final projects were a remake of The Four Feathers (Storm over the Nile) and Laurence Olivier’s Richard III.

Korda’s greatest asset as a producer was his legendary charm. He was, recalled the actor Jack Hawkins, “a man to whom it was impossible to say no,” and hard-headed businessmen melted into compliance in his presence. The Prudential Assurance Company, belying its name, was beguiled into financing Denham, and watched helplessly as £2m (of pre-1939 money) vanished beyond recall. “His engaging personality and charm of manner must be resisted. His financial sense is non-existent and his promises (even when they are sincere) worthless,” reported a Prudential executive—but by then it was far too late. Yet even after this debacle, when Korda’s profligacy was public knowledge, he could coolly appropriate £1m from MGM to re-establish himself in London after the Second World War. Later still the British Government was persuaded to pour a further £2m into the ravenous jaws of British Lion.

It would be wrong to dismiss Korda as little more than a glorified con man. True, he could be accused of making rootless, international films lacking in any indigenous style, and of inducing delusions of grandeur among other British producers (most notably J. Arthur Rank). He was largely, if not entirely, responsible for making cinema such a suspect investment that the British movie industry has remained chronically underfunded to this day. On all these counts, the downfall of a company like Goldcrest can be traced directly back to Korda’s disastrous precedent.

But against that, he brought to British cinema qualities it badly needed: vitality, imagination, sophistication, and style. At their best, there is an ebullience of conception about Korda’s films for which he himself (always a great initiator of projects) deserves full credit. The generosity of his nature and the excitement engendered by his presence, inspired everyone who came into contact with him. Ralph Richardson spoke of the “gleam of light from the steel of his personality that gave one courage.” A prestigious array of actors—Richardson, Charles Laughton, Olivier, Leslie Howard, Vivien Leigh, Merle Oberon—owed their screen careers to his encouragement, and it was his flair for teaming that introduced Graham Greene to Carol Reed, and Michael Powell to Emeric Pressburger. Without Korda, the British film industry might well have been a more soundly-based structure, but it would have been a duller one, too.

—Philip Kemp

KORDA, Vincent

Art Director. Nationality: British. Born: Vincze Kellner in Pusztaturpaszto, Hungary, 1897; brother of the directors Alexander and Zoltan Korda; emigrated to Britain, 1932; naturalized 1938. Education: Attended schools in Türkiye, Kecskemét, and Budapest until 1909; studied at the College of Industrial Art, Budapest, 1910–12; also apprentice in an architect’s office, Budapest, 1910–12; studied painting and drawing under Bélya Avanyi Grunwald, Kecskemét art colony, 1912–15; also studied painting in Vienna, Florence, and Paris, 1919–25. Family: Married the actress Gertrude Musgrove, 1933 (divorced 1942); son: the writer Michael Korda. Career: 1916–18—served in Hungarian army; then painter in Hungary and Paris; 1932–45—art director, London Films, and later for British Lion Films, 1946–54. Awards: Academy Award for The Thief of Bagdad, 1940. Died: In London, 5 January 1979.
Vincent Korda, who took charge of the art department at Denham Film studios in the 1930s, brought to art direction there a quality far higher than that of the average designer in either theatre or film. His period as a painter in France made an imprint on both his personal set designs and those produced under his charge in the studio, while his strongly persuasive character and impatience dominated the work of those around him, from his fellow designers to carpenters and decorators who carried out the finished sets.

The ideal situation in set design is a cooperative, integrated effort between the film director, the cameraman, and the designer. In many instances, the role of the latter has been considered unimportant, but Korda never allowed this to happen. If anything, his art direction, with his strong personality, dominated the production. On the other hand, he insisted on emphasizing the director’s ideas and the cameraman’s artistic and technical potential. Consequently, the end result was almost always satisfactory, well above average. Even when the film itself failed to gain acceptance, the set design received acclaim.

Such was the case with the film Things to Come, one of the first science-fiction subjects brought to the screen by Denham Studios in 1935. The sets stunned with their functional, Bauhaus interiors and immensely distorted perspectives of exteriors. Korda pioneered the use of models for trick effects for this production, accentuating distances, and avoiding the flat, direct appearance of ordinary, dull reality.

Possibly his most memorable designs were the sets for the film Rembrandt, made in 1936. As a former painter, he found a remarkable sympathy with Rembrandt and succeeded in recreating the background and atmosphere of the subject. His knowledge of architecture, combined with his pictorial sense and attention to minute detail, as well as—for a change—the money lavished on this production, resulted in one of the most satisfying achievements in the history of set design.

Korda’s approach differed from Hollywood’s. Instead of lavishing money on sets which did not reflect their cost on the screen, he spent little but made the sets look expensive. He strove frequently to save money and, with it, valuable time. He made his team work throughout the night on the production of The Private Life of Henry VIII, re-using many props to turn a bedroom into a banquet hall ready for the cameras the following morning. The next night, he turned the same set back into a reception room. He even saved (as his son maintains) the reusable nails and pasteboard structures to be used in another production. The success of this film included comments to the effect that no other film resembled such classic “Englishness” as Henry VIII.

He succeeded in applying his sense of period style in other films such as the unfinished I, Claudius, That Hamilton Woman, and The Thief of Bagdad, although the latter also demanded huge sets which proved to be almost beyond the technical resources of the British film industry at that time. In spite of his personal dislike of the style of the production, it won him an Oscar for art direction. Another production of great distinction was The Drum, which once again gave proof of his unique sense of pictorial style, his talent for establishing the right atmosphere, and his technical perfection. Korda is one of the most imaginative art directors the film medium has had.

——John Halas

KORNGOLD, Erich Wolfgang

Films as Composer:

1936 Rose of the Rancho (Gering) (song); Give Us This Night (Hall); Anthony Adverse (LeRoy); Hearts Divided (Borzage) (co; uncredited)
1937 The Prince and the Pauper (Keighley); Another Dawn (Dieterle)
1938 The Adventures of Robin Hood (Curtiz and Keighley) (+ music for trailer)
1939 Juarez (Dieterle); The Private Lives of Elizabeth and Essex (Curtiz)
1940 The Sea Hawk (Curtiz)
1941 The Sea Wolf (Curtiz)
1942 Kings Row (Wood)
1943 The Constant Nymph (Goulding)
1944 Between Two Worlds (Blatt)
1946 Devotion (Bernardt—produced 1943) (+ bit ro); Of Human Bondage (Goulding)
1947 Deception (Rapper); Escape Me Never (Godfrey)
Films as Arranger:

1935  A Midsummer Night’s Dream (Reinhardt and Dieterle); Captain Blood (Curtiz)
1936  The Green Pastures (Connelly and Keighley) (co—uncredited)
1955  Magic Fire (Dieterle) (+ ro)

Publications

By KORNGOLD: article—

In Film Score, edited by Tony Thomas, South Brunswick, New Jersey, 1979.

On KORNGOLD: books—

Hoffmann, R. S., Erich Wolfgang Korngold, Vienna, 1922.
Duchen, Jessica, Erich Wolfgang Korngold, New York, 1996.

On KORNGOLD: articles—

Positif (Paris), November 1976.
24 Images (Longueuil, Quebec), September 1981.
Rivista del Cinematografo (Rome), November 1981.
Classic Images (Muscatine), March 1998.

* * *

Of the many Austrian and German talents who migrated to America because of the Nazi regime, Erich Wolfgang Korngold rates among the most important and influential. He was the first composer of international stature to sign a contract with a Hollywood studio. Born in Brno, Czechoslovakia, the son of Julius Korngold, one of the most powerful music critics of the time, the boy was a prodigy of astonishing talent, writing piano and chamber pieces while still a child and enjoying success with his pantomime-ballet Der Schneemann at the age of 11. A year later his piano trio received performances by top musicians, as did all the following works, with much comment on how a boy could write music of such complexity and maturity. Korngold was 18 when his two one-act operas, Der Ring des Polykrates and Violanta, were staged, and 23 when Die tote Stadt, one of the few greatly successful operas of the 20th century, had its first performance. He followed it with other works, including two more operas, but he never again matched the success of Die tote Stadt. In 1929 he began an association with the famous director and producer Max Reinhardt, for whom he rescored a number of operettas by Johann Strauss, Jr., Leo Fall, and Jacques Offenbach. Their biggest success was a restructured version of Die Fledermaus, titled Rosalinda.

In 1934 Reinhardt was signed by Warner Bros. to film his celebrated staging of Shakespeare’s A Midsummer Night’s Dream and he brought Korngold with him to arrange, expand, and conduct the music Mendelssohn had written in 1827. The film fared better with the critics than the public, but Korngold had made an impression on the film community. He was brought back from Vienna in 1936 to write, with lyricist Oscar Hammerstein II the score for Paramount’s quickly forgotten musical Give Us This Night, but while doing it he was asked by Warners to score their production of Captain Blood, starring the newcomer Errol Flynn. The film made a vivid impact, particularly the richly textured, lilting score. Korngold won an Oscar with his next score, Anthony Adverse, and another two years later with The Adventures of Robin Hood.

By now it was impossible to return to Vienna and he settled in the Toluca Lake district of North Hollywood, within walking distance of the Warners studios. Of his other scores, The Private Life of Elizabeth and Essex and The Sea Hawk were also nominated for Oscars. Korngold worked on only 20 films, and ceased scoring them in 1946 to return to absolute music. Being referred to as a film composer had become a little bothersome to him and he also felt the films being offered him were of lesser quality. At the beginning he felt excited by the possibilities of bringing music to vast audiences but with time he felt disillusioned. “A film composer’s immortality lasts from the recording stage to the dubbing room.” He died in 1957, believing that both his serious works and his film scores had been largely forgotten. Sadly he never lived to see the resurgence of interest in both, with recordings and performance of most of his best works, and the acknowledgment of his place in the history of film composition.

—Tony Thomas

KOSMA, Joseph

Award: Cannes Festival Prize for Juliette, ou la clé des songes, 1951.

Died: Paris, 7 August 1969.

Films as Composer:

1929 Elet, hal l, szerelem (Eternal Love) (Lázár)
1934 La Pêche à la baleine (Bunin—short)
1935 La Marche de la fain (Daniél—short); Le Crime de Monsieur Lange (The Crime of Monsieur Lange) (Renoir) (song)
1936 Jenny (Carné) (co, + ro)
1937 La Grande Illusion (Grand Illusion) (Renoir); Le Temps des cérises (Le Chanois)
1938 La Goualeuse (Rivers) (co); La Bête humaine (The Human Beast) (Renoir)
1940 Le Soleil a toujours raison (Billon) (song); Une Femme dans la nuit (Gréville)
1942 Les Visiteurs du soir (The Devil’s Envoy) (Carné) (songs)
1945 Adieu Leonard (P. Prévot)
1946 Messieurs Ludovic (Le Chanois); Pétrus (M. Allégret); Les Portes de la nuit (Gates of the Night) (Carné); Les Chouans (Calef); L’Arche de Noé (Jacques); L’Amour autour de la maison (de Herain); Voyage-surprise (P. Prévot); Auvillers (Lotar—short); L’Homme (Margariús—short); Une Partie de campagne (A Day in the Country) (Renoir—produced 1936)
1947 Bethsabée (Moguy); Le Petit Soldat (Grimaud—short); La Dame d’onze heures (Devaivre)
1948 Le Carrefour des passion (Giannini); D’homme à hommes (Man to Men) (Christian-Jaque); Bagarres (Calef); L’École buissonnière (Le Chanois); Les Amants de Vérona (The Lovers of Verona) (Cayatte); Le Paradis des pilotes perdus (Lampin); Hans le marin (Villiers); France, nouvelle patrie (Deleule—short); Le Sang des bêtes (Franiu—short)
1949 Les Eaux troubles (Calef); Au grand balcon (Decoin); La Ferme des sept péchés (Devaivre); La Marie du port (Carné); Le Jugement de Dieu (Bernard); La Belle que voilà (Le Chanois)
1950 Vendetta in Camargue (Devaivre); Trois télégrammes (Decoin); Souvenirs perdus (Christian-Jaque); OMBRE et lumière (Calef); Sans laisser d’adresse (Le Chanois); Black Jack (Duivivier); L’Inconnue de Montréal (Son Copain; Fugitive from Montreal) (Devaivre); Dans la vie tout s’arrange (Cravenne); Champions juniors (Blondy—short) (co); En passant par la Lorraine (Franiu—short)
1951 Juliette, ou la clé des songes (Carné); Un Grand Patron (Ciampi); Parigi è sempre Parigi (Emmer); Le Cap de l’Espérance (Bernard); Les Loups chassent la nuit (Borderie); Dupont-Barbès (Lepage); The Green Glove (Maté); Agence matrimoniale (Le Chanois); Les Anonymes du ciel (Devaivre—short); Le Canard aux cérises (de Robaux—short); La Commune de Paris (Menegoz—short); Isabelle (Gout—short); Festival acrobatique (Devaivre—short); Mon ami Pierre (Neurisse and Félix—short); Si toutes les villes du monde . . . (Freedland—short)
1952 La Bergère et le ramoneur (Grimault); Opération Magali (Kish); Le Rideau rouge (Barsacq); Torticola contra Frankensberg (Paviot—short)
1953 Innocents in Paris (Parry); Les Enfants de l’amour (Moguy); Alerte au sud (Devaivre); Les Fruits Sauvages (Bromberger); Le cigale et la fourmi (Image—short); Francois le rhinocéros (Alexandre—short); Le Loup et l’agneau (Image—short); Lumière et l’invention du cinématographe (Louis Lumière) (Paviot—short)
1954 Le Port du désir (Gréville); Huis clos (No Exit) (Audry); Fantaisie d’un jour (Cardinal); Les Evadés (Le Chanois); Pas de souris dans le bizness (Lepage); Les Chiffonniers d’Emmaüs (DarSne); A Paris . . . un jeudi (Gout—short); Le Village magique (Le Chanois); Ma Jeannette et mes copains (Gout—short)
1955 M’tier la Caille (Pergament); Cela s’appelle l’aurore (Buñuel); Pas de pitié pour les caves (Lepage); Gobbiah (DarSne); Des gens sans importance (Verneuil); Chagall (Hessens—short); L’Amant de Lady Chatterley (Lady Chatterley’s Lover) (M. Allégret); Maigret dirige l’enquête (Cordier); Le Devoir de Zouzou (Vidal—short); Un Grain de bon sens (Image—short); Guillaume Apollinaire (Je m’appellerai Guillaume Apollinaire) (Proutau—short); Le Sixième Jour (Huisman—short); Tindoux (Devaivre—short); La Tapisserie au Xxe siècle (Demain—short); Le Trésor d’Ostende (Stock—short); Zut, chien des rues (d’Artec—short)
1956 Calle Mayor (Bardem); Le Quai des illusions (Couzinet); Le long des trottoirs (Moguy); Soupçons (Billon); Eléna et les hommes (Paris Does Strange Things) (Renoir); Je reviendrai à Kandara (Vicas); Le Cas du Docteur Laurent (Le Chanois); L’Inspecteur aime la bagarre (Devaivre)
1957 Les Louves (Saslavsky); Trois jours à vivre (Grangier); Un Certain M. Jo (Jolivet); Tamango (Berry)
1958 La Chatte (The Cat) (Decoin); The Doctor’s Dilemma (Asquith); G.S.O. (Menegoz—short); Magie du diamant (Roos—short)
1959 Le Testament du Docteur Cordelier (Renoir); Le Déjeuner sur l’herbe (Picnic on the Grass) (Renoir); La Chatte sorte ses griffes (Decoin); La Cocotte d’azur (Varda—short)
1960 Katya (The Magnificent Sinner) (Siodmak); Le Huitième Jour (Hanoun); Crésus (Giono); “L’Enfance” ep. of La Francaise et l’amour (Devaivre); Le Grand Erg oriental (Jacques—short); Neuf étages tout acier (Wronecki—short) (co); Quand midi sonne par la France (Sirkis—short); Teiva, enfant des îles (Mazière—short)
1961 Le Pavé de Paris (Decoin); Snobs! (Mocky); Le Trésor des hommes bleus (Agabra); Accident (Daninos—short); Les Hommes veulent vivre (Moguy); Henri Matisse, ou le talent du bonheur (Marcel Ophüls—short)
1962 La Caporal épingle (The Elusive Corporal) (Renoir); Lenny pour les dames (Borderie); La Poupée (He, She, or It) (Baratier) (co); A fleur de peau (Bernard-Aubert); La Salamandre d’or (Regamy); In the French Style (Parrish)
1963 Un Dr’dle de paroissien (Thank Heaven for Small Favors) (Mocky); A l’aube du troisième jour (Les Moutons de Praxos) (Bernard-Aubert) (co)
1966 Un Soir à Tébériade (Bromberger); Fruits amers (Soledad) (Audry)
1970 “Le Circueuse électrique” ep. of Le Petit Théâtre de Jean Renoir (The Little Theatre of Jean Renoir) (Renoir)
Films as Co-Arranger:

1938  La Marseillaise (Renoir)
1939  La Règle du jeu (Rules of the Game) (Renoir)

Publications

By KOSMA: article—

Image et Son (Paris), December 1965.

On KOSMA: article—

Unifrance Film (Paris), November 1951.
Film Dope (Nottingham), January 1985.
Kosovsky, B., in Film Score Monthly (Los Angeles), April 1994.

* * *

If Joseph Kosma is generally remembered for his ‘‘literary’’ songs, written in collaboration with Jacques Prévert, he was also one of France’s finest composers of film music, working on over a hundred films. Throughout his career, whether setting to music the poetry of Jacques Prévert, Robert Desnos, Raymond Queneau, or Jean-Paul Sartre, or collaborating on the films of Jean Renoir, Pierre Prévert, Marcel Carné, or Paul Grimault, or composing ballet music or operas, Kosma wrote music identifiable by its popular accessibility. Rather than a commercial decision, the popular nature of Kosma’s work reflects an ideological stance which held music as a means of communication with the people. His oratorio communication with the people, he constantly succeeded in producing an ‘‘engaged’’ music that was free from potentially alienating intellectual forms.

Born in Hungary, Kosma first studied at the Budapest Academy of Music and, before accepting a scholarship to study in Berlin in 1929, he wrote his first score, for one of the earliest Hungarian sound films, Lajos Lázár’s Eternal Love. In Berlin he met, and was considerably influenced by, Bertolt Brecht, Kurt Weill, and Hanns Eisler, but in 1933 Hitler’s accession to power forced Kosma to leave for Paris where he settled and took French citizenship in 1949.

Despite this international background, Kosma soon became the favoured composer of Jean Renoir, thus contributing to some of the most quintessentially French of French films. Having composed the score for L.M. Daniel’s fictional appeal for worker solidarity, La Marche de la faim, in which the influence of Eisler and Weill is clear, he embarked on his collaboration with Renoir by composing the song, ‘‘Au jour le jour, à la nuit la nuit’’ for Le Crime de Monsieur Lange. There followed Carné’s first feature film, Jenny, in which Kosma also played the role of a pianist, scripted by his life-long friend and colleague Jacques Prévert. But while the high moments of the poetic realism of the films of Carné involved compositions by Maurice Jaubert, Kosma continued to work with Renoir on some of his most celebrated prewar films: La Grande Illusion, La Marseillaise, La Bête humaine, and La Règle du jeu. His vigorous opening ‘‘symphonie du rail’’ for La Bête humaine has been compared to that composed by Honegger for Abel Gance’s La Rose, and is in marked contrast to the gentle and melodic score for the unfinished Une Partie de campagne. But in both cases, the music perfectly complements the visual style of Renoir, demonstrating Kosma’s belief that the successful composition of film scores involves the discreet relationship of the music to both the subject of the film and the atmosphere created visually by the director. Hence he always preferred to compose his scores from the shot material rather than from the scenario.

During the war, working under the name Georges Mouqué, Kosma resumed his collaboration with Marcel Carné and Jacques Prévert (together with Alexandre Trauner, also working clandestinely). He wrote two songs for Les Visiteurs du soir and the mime sequence for Les Enfants du paradis which was so successful that it entered Jean-Louis Barrault’s own repertoire as the ballet Baptiste. Immediately after the war the same team produced Les Portes de la nuit, including the tenderly romantic song, ‘‘Les Enfants qui s’aîment.’’ Kosma’s postwar career is prolific and varied. He collaborated with ‘‘quality’’ directors such as André Cayatte (the grandiose oratorio at the end of Les Amants de Véronne) and Henri Decoin (the classical overture of Au grand balcon), but he also wrote music for the animated films of Paul Grimault and Jean Image, the documentaries of Eli Lotar, Georges Franju, and Robert Ménégoz, and the postwar French films of Renoir (including, for example, the ‘‘Air des Bohémiens’’ in Éléna et les hommes).

In 1951, Kosma was awarded the Cannes Film Festival’s prize for the best musical score for Juliette, ou la clé des songes, a somewhat mediocre fantasy directed by Carné. But Kosma’s music excels less in such a fantasy world as in the precise location of popular Paris, the working-class districts into which he injects a degree of poetic pathos—such as in the plaintive opening of Le Sang des bêtes or, with recourse to song, the gentle revolt of Prévert’s verse in Lotar’s Aubervilliers.

Towards the end of his life, Kosma concentrated less on film music than on opera and lyrical theatre, always as a means of communication with the people. His oratorio Les Canuts, inspired by the revolt of the oppressed silk weavers of Lyon in 1831, is typical of Kosma’s wish to apply his classical training to the service of the masses; in Les Canuts, there are no virtuoso solo parts, but a choral mass represents an impressive and powerful working class.

Although Kosma did compose purely instrumental pieces such as his ‘‘Suite languedocienne’’ and ‘‘Sonatine pour violon,’’ his music was at its best when in conjunction with images or verse. His name will remain associated not only with the films of Renoir and Carné but with the heyday of postwar Saint German-des-Prés and the voices of Juliette Greco and Yves Montand singing his settings for the poetry of Jacques Prévert: the supple melodies of the melancholic ‘‘Autumn Leaves’’ and ‘‘Les enfants qui s’aîment’’ and the lyrical realism of ‘‘Barbara’’ have ensured these songs a permanent place in French culture.

—Richard Alwyn

KOVACS, Laszlo

still photographer and in TV laboratory; first U.S. film credits in mid-1960s; freelance cinematographer for motion pictures and commercials; lecturer at various film schools; member of Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences; member of American Society of Cinematographers. Awards: Camerimage Lifetime Achievement Award, 1998; Hawaii International Film Festival Cinematography Award, for body of work, 1998; Worldfest Flagstaff Lifetime Achievement Award, 1999. Address: Mirisch Agency Ste 700, 10100 Santa Monica Boulevard, Los Angeles, CA 90067, U.S.A.

Films as Cinematographer:

1957 Hungary in Flammen (Revolt in Hungary) (Erdelyi—doc) (co)
1965 The Nasty Rabbit (Spies A-Go-Go) (James Landis) (asst, + ro); Mark of the Gun (Compo); The Notorious Fanny Hill (Stoettsberry)
1967 Hell’s Angels on Wheels (Rush); Mondo Mod (Perry) (co); A Man Called Dagger (Rush); Targets (Bogdanovich); Blood of Dracula’s Castle (Adamson); Rebel Rousers (Cohen)
1968 Single Room Furnished (Cimber); Psych-Out (Rush); The Savage Seven (Rush); Hell’s Blood Devils (Adamson—re-edited version: Smashing the Crime Syndicate); Mark of the Gun
1969 That Cold Day in the Park (Altman); Easy Rider (Hopper); A Day with the Boys (Gulager—short)
1970 Getting Straight (Rush); Five Easy Pieces (Rafelson); Alex in Wonderland (Mazursky); The Marriage of a Young Stockbroker (Turnman)
1971 The Last Movie (Hopper); Directed by John Ford (Bogdanovich—short); A Reflection of Fear (Fraker); The Last Picture Show (Bogdanovich)
1972 Pocket Money (Rosenberg); What’s Up, Doc? (Bogdanovich); The King of Marvin Gardens (Rafelson); Steelyard Blues (Myerson) (co)
1973 Slither (Zief); Paper Moon (Bogdanovich)
1974 Huckleberry Finn (Lee Thompson); For Pete’s Sake (Yates); Freebie and the Bean (Rush)
1975 Shampoo (Ashby); At Long Last Love (Bogdanovich)
1976 Baby Blue Marine (Hancock); Harry and Walter Go to New York (Rydell); Nickelodeon (Bogdanovich); Family (Rydell)
1977 New York, New York (Scorsese); Close Encounters of the Third Kind (Spierberg) (co)
1978 F.I.S.T. (Jewison); Paradise Alley (Stallone); The Last Waltz (Scorsese) (co)
1979 Butch and Sundance: The Early Days (Lester); The Runner Stumbles (Kramer); Heart Beat (Byrum); The Rose (Rydell) (co)
1980 Inside Moves (R. Donner)
1981 The Legend of the Lone Ranger (Fraker)
1982 Frances (Clifford); The Toy (R. Donner)
1984 Crackers (Malle); Ghostbusters (Reitman)
1985 Mask (Bogdanovich)
1986 Legal Eagles (Reitman)
1988 Little Nikita (Benjamin)
1989 Say Anything . . . (Crowe)
1991 Shattered (The Plastic Nightmare) (Petersen)
1992 Radio Flyer (R. Donner); Ruby Cairo (Deception) (Clifford)
1993 Sliver (Noyce) (co)
1994 The Next Karate Kid (Cain); The Scout (Ritchie)
1995 Copycat (Amiel); Free Willy 2: The Adventure Home (Little)
1996 Multiplicity (Ramis)
1997 My Best Friend’s Wedding (Hogan)
1998 Jack Frost (Miller)
2000 Return to Me (Hunt); Miss Congeniality

Other Films:

1964 The Time Travelers (Melchior) (cam)
1971 The American Dreamer (Carson and Schiller)
1992 Visions of Light (as Laszlo Kovacs)

Publications

By KOVACS: articles—

Dialogue on Film (Beverly Hills, California), October 1974.
Filmkultur (Budapest), vol. 25, no. 6, 1989.
“Multiple Keatons Add Up to a New Challenge for a DP of Many Faces,” in Lighting Dimensions (Los Angeles), 1 June 1996.

On KOVACS: articles—

Goodwin, M., in Moving Image (San Francisco), March/April 1982.
Patterson, R., on Frances in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), March 1983.
McCarthy, T., in Film Comment (New York), March/April 1984.

Born in Hungary, Laszlo Kovacs—sometimes billed early in his career as Leslie Kovacs or Art Radford—escaped to the West along with Vilmos Zsigmond, with whom he collaborated on a documentary about the 1956 Hungarian uprising and, later, Close Encounters of the Third Kind. It appears to have been a total coincidence that his name was used by Jean-Paul Belmondo as an alias in A Bout de Souffle, but this did give rise to the speculation—when he worked with movie buff Peter Bogdanovich on Targets and the documentary Directed by John Ford—that Bogdanovich was functioning as his own director of photography and assuming an in-joke pseudonym. Like Zsigmond, although to a lesser extent, Kovacs cut his teeth on marginal exploitation movies, such as The Notorious Fanny Hill. In his case, however, the transition from drive-in underground to the mainstream was fairly straightforward and represented no particular change of style. Kovacs’s first attention-getting credit was for Easy Rider, which was an obvious extension of his work on the late 1960s cycle of biker exploitation movies, especially The Savage Seven and Hell’s Angels on Wheels. These were directed by Richard Rush, with whom Kovacs also worked on Psych-Out, a freeform hippie odyssey with Jack Nicholson that prefigured many of the countercultural aspects of Dennis Hopper’s movie and also the kind of subculture seaminess Kovacs would explore with Nicholson and Bob Rafelson in Five Easy Pieces and The King of Marvin Gardens.

The most lasting associations of Kovacs’s career—with Rush, Bogdanovich, and Easy Rider associate Rafelson—come from this period, when a group of filmmakers loosely clustered around Roger Corman and American International Pictures, spun off the stuff of youth exploitation—bikes, drugs, drop-outs—into the 1970s “road movie” and the kinetic psychedelia of Hollywood’s flirtation with pop art. The photographic hallmarks of Kovacs’s work are images of rebel youths—Hopper, Nicholson, Peter Fonda—with their hair long and beards unshaven, perched on gleaming bikes and traveling through the dusty western roads that had replaced the trails ridden by Hopalong Cassidy or John Ford’s heroes. The psychedelic aspect led to various attempts to simulate drug-induced altered states of perception, and Kovacs shot, in Easy Rider and Psych-Out, more than his share of flashing lights, bleary wanderings, and cut-to-the-rhythm-of-the-rock-songtrack freak-outs. This specialty found him yoked to such commercially disastrous ventures as Robert Altman’s psycho-drama That Cold Day in the Park, Rush’s (not as embarrassing as most of its genre) “campus revolt” picture Getting Straight, Hopper’s willful The Last Movie, and Paul Mazursky’s cool-hippie Alex in Wonderland. It also allowed him to demonstrate a growing mastery of a visual technique that was at once loose enough to allow for the druggy improvisation of Hopper but formally neat enough to suggest the old Hollywood virtues Bogdanovich was aspiring to in Targets.

In the 1970s, Kovacs stuck by Bogdanovich, making the black-and-white images of The Last Picture Show and Paper Moon work, turning in a perfectly acceptable simulation of Ross Hunter gloss for What’s Up, Doc?, and filming black-and-white-in-color for the bizarre but increasingly impressive At Long Last Love. He was at a loss, however, with the prettified nostalgia of Nickelodeon and later failed to make Mask, with its bikers and deformed hero, look like anything as interesting as Hell’s Angels on Wheels. The association also spilled over into shooting dud imitations of the genre trifles Bogdanovich usually managed to pull off, resulting in such credits as For Pete’s Sake and Harry and Walter Go to New York.

Kovacs was becoming the photographic master of the roadside movie through his work for Rafelson, in Five Easy Pieces and The King of Marvin Gardens, which mix tatty observation with a wry romantic pessimism, and found that this experience, plus all those hog-straddling Hell’s Angel movies, equipped him for road movies as varied as Stuart Rosenberg’s modern Western Pocket Money, Howard Zieff’s seductive comic-caper Slither, Richard Rush’s car-crash cop comedy Freebie and the Bean, Hal Ashby’s Beverly Hills road movie Shampoo, and Spielberg’s magical American odyssey, Close Encounters. Cars and motorbikes crop up constantly, and Kovacs has become adept at shooting scenes in diners and lay-bys, frequently catching some unexpected slice of Americana in the background.

His affinity for the landscape of the west, demonstrated in Easy Rider, The Last Picture Show, Pocket Money, and Close Encounters, was disappointingly betrayed by his only real Western credit, the lamentable The Legend of the Lone Ranger. Throughout the 1970s, Kovacs was on-call for major Hollywood figures, following Martin Scorsese from the glittering, hard-edged 1940s feel of New York, New York to the aptly AIP-ish fuzziness of The Last Waltz. He even formed an association with Sylvester Stallone—like Scorsese, another Corman graduate—on the star’s ambitious but inconsistent post-Rocky attempts to be a blue-collar artist in F.I.S.T. and Paradise Alley. Kovacs later found himself involved with such self-consciously “sincere” works as The Runner Stumbles and Frances but, unlike the more prettifying Zsigmond, he has never really become “respectable” enough for Academy Award consideration. Like Rafelson, Bogdanovich, Rush, and Hopper, Kovacs is essentially a 1970s talent, and his major works are all clustered around the beginning of that decade. Despite his contribution to Close Encounters, he never quite got the knack for the large-scale fantasies which predominated in the 1980s, taking Hollywood away from the rough-edged observation in which he specialized. Considering his work on Ghostbusters, a mainly successful entertainment, one is struck by how drab the film looks, as if Kovacs had been ordered not to let his visual imagination swamp the special effects or the wisecracks, and it is notable that he was the only major contributor to this box-office hit who was not involved in he equally anonymous-looking Ghostbusters 2.

In the early 1990s, Kovacs was reduced to shaky assignments such as Ruby Cairo and The Next Karate Kid, while in the second half of the decade he fared a little better with lightweight comedies such as My Best Friend’s Wedding, Jack Frost, and Return to Me. Although Kovacs provided a steadying influence on these films, there are few signs in them of the cinematic quality and style with which he made his name in the 1970s. The current trend in Hollywood seems to be for movies with strong narratives, driven home with special effects. In such a climate, cinematographers like Kovacs, who excel at observational, descriptive filmmaking, have few opportunities to show off their skills. In the 1990s, only the flop Radio Flyer contained elements reminiscent of Kovacs’ great days.

—Kim Newman, updated by Chris Routledge

KRÄLY, Hanns

Films as Writer:

1912 Die Kinder des Generals (Gad)
1913 Engelein (Gad); Die Filmprimadonna (Gad)
Kräly and Lubitsch satirized the American nouveau riche in Die Austerprinzessin, made an adaptation of E. T. A. Hoffmann’s fable of an inventor’s daughter masquerading as a robot as Die Puppe, and filmed Sumurun, the Arabian Nights pantomime/ballet in which Max Reinhardt launched Pola Negri. In Die Augen der Mummie Mä, Emil Jannings played a religious visionary pursuing Negri around the world. Its success sparked the Negri/Jannings historical romances which made them Europe’s biggest stars.

Cleverly manipulating literature and history, Kräly turned Anne Boleyn, Dubarry, and Carmen into archetypal Negri women—trashy, treacherous, irresistible. Intrigued in particular by Passion, Lubitsch and Kräly’s version of the Dubarry story, Mary Pickford invited Lubitsch to America in 1922, and Kräly soon joined him. Asked to destroy forever Pickford’s coy image, the partners, with Edward Knoblock, adapted a nineteenth-century Spanish romance into the Negri-esque story of a street girl who catches a king’s eye. Tough Berlin humour fills Rosita. A scented handkerchief handed around her family is sniffed by everyone but a kid brother, who blows his nose on it, while, in a carnival scene, a girl whose lover has just been stabbed releases his corpse to embrace the killer with equal passion. Horrified, Pickford shelved Rosita, but Lubitsch and his team flourished.

Kräly wrote Negri’s first American film, Forbidden Paradise, and followed it up with a version of The Student Prince with Ramon Novarro and Norma Shearer. Both films sparked with the visual double entendres that Hollywood (with no resistance from the director) now called “Lubitsch Touches.” Kräly’s contribution was seldom mentioned, despite the evidence of his scripts for The Eagle, a Russian comedy romance with Valentino, and The Garden of Eden, a romp through Hapsburg high life and low morals with Corinne Griffith as an ambitious actress on the loose among the Austro-Hungarian aristocracy. Both are as witty and sophisticated as anything by Lubitsch, yet they were directed by Clarence Brown and Lewis Milestone, respectively. Kräly also wrote The Kiss and Wild Orchids for Garbo, but Hollywood continued to credit Lubitsch alone with real genius.

Inevitably, the partnership ended. Eternal Love, in 1929, was their last film together. To be “liquidated by Lubitsch,” as Josef von Sternberg put it, was no novelty, and it was Kräly’s turn in 1931. The two men had a famous fist fight over a real or fancied affair with Lubitsch’s wife, from which the writer emerged effectively blacklisted. Ernest Vajda and Samson Raphaelson supplanted him on Lubitsch’s sound films. Kräly went on to adapt Private Lives at MGM, and wrote the Deanna Durbin vehicle One Hundred Men and a Girl, but his credits dwindled. His last script, for a cheap horror film, was a squalid end to a distinguished, yet blighted career.

—John Baxter

KRASKER, Robert

Robert Krasker

Award: Academy Award for The Third Man, 1950.

Died: 16 August 1981.

Films as Cameraman:
- 1934 Catherine the Great (The Rise of Catherine the Great) (Czinner); The Private Life of Don Juan (A. Korda)
- 1935 Things to Come (Menzies)
- 1936 Forget-Me-Not (Forever Yours) (Z. Korda); Rembrandt (A. Korda); Men Are Not Gods (Reisch); The Man Who Could Work Miracles (Mendes)
- 1937 I, Claudius (von Sternberg—unfinished); The Squeaker (Murder on Diamond Row) (Howard)
- 1938 The Drum (Drums) (Z. Korda); The Challenge (Rosmer)
- 1939 The Four Feathers (Z. Korda)
- 1940 The Thief of Bagdad (Berger, Powell, and Whelan)
- 1941 Dangerous Moonlight (Suicide Squadron) (Hurst)
- 1942 Rose of Tralee (Burger); One of Our Aircraft Is Missing (Powell and Pressburger)

Films as Cinematographer:
- 1943 The Lamp Still Burns (Elvey); The Gentle Sex (Howard); The Saint Meets the Tiger (Stein)
- 1944 Henry V (Olivier)
- 1945 Brief Encounter (Lean); Caesar and Cleopatra (Pascal) (co)
- 1947 Odd Man Out (Reed); Uncle Silas (The Inheritance) (Frank)
- 1948 Bonnie Prince Charlie (Kimmings)
- 1949 The Third Man (Reed); The Angel with the Trumpet (Bushell)
- 1950 State Secret (The Great Manhunt) (Gilliat); The Wonder Kid (Hartl) (co)
- 1951 Cry, the Beloved Country (African Fury) (Z. Korda); Another Man’s Poison (Rapper)
- 1953 Never Let Me Go (Daves); Malta Story (Hurst)
- 1954 Romeo and Juliet (Castellani); Senso (The Wanton Countess) (Visconti)
- 1955 That Lady (Young); Alexander the Great (Rossen)
- 1956 Trapeze (Reed); The Rising of the Moon (Ford)
- 1957 The Story of Esther Costello (Miller)
- 1958 The Quiet American (Mankiewicz); Behind the Mask (Hurst); The Doctor’s Dilemma (Asquith)
1959 Libel (Asquith)
1960 The Criminal (The Concrete Jungle) (Losey); Romanoff and Juliet (Ustinov)
1961 El Cid (A. Mann)
1962 Guns of Darkness (Asquith); Billy Budd (Ustinov)
1963 The Running Man (Reed)
1964 The Fall of the Roman Empire (A. Mann)
1965 The Collector (Wyler) (co)
1966 The Trap (Hayers)
1976 Red (Frank—short)
1980 Cry Wolf (Burzynski—short)

Publications

On KRASKER: articles—

Monthly Film Bulletin (London), December 1972.
Obituary in Films & Filming, November 1981.
Filme (Berlin), November-December 1981.
Film Dope (Nottingham), March 1985.
Murray, S., in Cinema Papers (Fitzroy), April 1997.

* * *

Robert Krasker began his film career as a cameraman by serving an "apprenticeship" with Georges Périnal at London Films, where he worked on several films directed by Zoltan and Alexander Korda. His work on The Drum and The Four Feathers (the location shooting in the Sudan produced footage used in films made 20 years later) gave him the experience he would use in the later epic films El Cid and The Fall of the Roman Empire, both directed by Mann. Work on the abortive I, Claudius and Rembrandt also stood him in good stead for Olivier's Henry V, which expressionistically merges theatre and film in the opening sequence. Although he lacked experience in Technicolor, Krasker achieved some stunning shots, among them the scene before Agincourt, which critic James Agee described as a "crespuscular shot of the doomed and exhausted English as they withdraw along a sunset stream to encamp for the night." Krasker was equally adept at achieving claustrophobic effects, as in Brief Encounter and The Criminal, in which he used mirrors to double the size of the set.

Although he worked repeatedly with the same directors, Krasker's most productive collaboration seems to have been with Carol Reed. Robert Moss has written that Krasker was "one of the few men whose patient craftsmanship and innovative ideas matched Reed's." In The Third Man Krasker captured in black-and-white the gloomy, corrupt decadence of postwar Vienna, where everything was for sale. Using oblique camera angles, he suggested a distorted world in which buildings loom over characters who seem isolated and vulnerable within the frame. Using shadows he distorted size, as he did with the balloon man, and juxtaposed appearance and reality. The initial appearance of Harry Lime, his lighted face surrounded ominously by blackness, the maze-like sewer sequence mirroring the above-ground moral ambiguity and "waste," and the shot of Lime's fingers sticking up through the sewer drain—these shots were symbolic as well as representational. Even the concluding long take of Anna walking past the waiting Harry Martin comments not only on her rejection of him, but, in its focus on the seemingly endless and almost empty road, also commented on Martin's empty and isolated life.

Krasker's color cinematography for Mann's El Cid was remarkable not only for its fluid long takes, but also for pushing the barriers of color photography to their limits. He shot at dusk and dawn and achieved remarkable results. The most striking shot was the resplendent white image of the dead Cid whose armored brilliance cinematically transports him from history to legend as he emerges from the gates of the city. Not even Krasker's cinematography could salvage Mann's later epic, The Fall of the Roman Empire, a talky, ponderous film, but the film bears the Krasker signature: fluid camera work, long takes, interesting compositions (the Z-shaped procession which begins and ends the film), and the symbolic shot (the tracking camera moves from behind Aurelius's funeral pyre to the crowd and then to the storm clouds over the mountains, thereby linking cause and effect).

In Wyler’s The Collector and Visconti’s Senso, Krasker shared the credit but in each case the results were excellent. Visconti actually worked with three photographers, each of which had his own tonality, though all three were related to the styles of 19th-century painting. The film, which blends art, (in this case opera), with life, has been cited for Krasker’s tour de force opening sequence, which featured diffuse lighting. In The Collector Krasker shot the exterior shots on location, while Robert Surtees was responsible for the interior studio shooting, but the division of labor produces a visual balance between the exterior greens and blues of freedom and the interior yellows, browns, and oranges associated with captivity. Krasker also shot the stalking sequence in which the victim is caught in the “frame” of her pursuer’s rear-view mirror.

In both black-and-white and in color films Krasker was a daring innovator, a master of different cinematic styles, and an expert at lighting. Using the camera, he not only rendered reality, but interpreted it for the audience.

—Thomas L. Erskine

KRASNA, Norman

1934  The Richest Girl in the World (W. Lang)
1935  Romance in Manhattan (Roberts); Four Hours to Kill (Leisen); Hands across the Table (Leisen)
1936  Wife vs. Secretary (Brown); Fury (F. Lang)
1937  The King and the Chorus Girl (Romance Is Sacred) (LeRoy); As Good As Married (Buzzell); Big City (Borzage) (+ pr)
1938  The First Hundred Years (Thorpe) (+ pr); You and Me (F. Lang)
1939  Bachelor Mother (Kanin)
1940  It’s a Date (Seiter)
1941  Mr. and Mrs. Smith (Hitchcock); The Devil and Miss Jones (Wood); The Flame of New Orleans (Clair); It Started with Eve (Koster)
1943  Princess O’Rourke (+ d)
1944  Bride by Mistake (Wallace); Practically Yours (Leisen)
1949  The Big Hangover (+ d + pr)
1954  White Christmas (Curtiz)
1956  Bundle of Joy (Taurog); The Ambassador’s Daughter (+ d + pr)
1958  Indiscreet (Donoghue)
1959  Who Was That Lady? (Sidney) (+ pr)
1960  Let’s Make Love (Cukor)
1961  My Geisha (Cardiff)
1963  Sunday in New York (Tewksbury)
1964  I’d Rather Be Rich (Smight)

Films as Producer:
1938  Three Loves Has Nancy (Thorpe)
1951  Behave Yourself (Beck); The Blue Veil (Bernhardt)
1952  Clash By Night (F. Lang); The Lusty Men (Ray)

Films based on Krasna’s writings:
1947  Dear Ruth (Russell)
1949  John Loves Mary (Butler)
1950  Dear Wife (Haydn)
1951  Dear Brat (Seiter)

Publications
By KRASNA: plays—
Louder, Please, New York, 1932.
Small Miracle, New York, 1935.
Bachelor Mother (script), in The Best Pictures 1939–1940, New York, 1940.
Fury (script), in Twenty Best Film Plays, edited by John Gassner and Dudley Nichols, New York, 1943.
Dear Ruth, New York, 1945.
With Groucho Marx, Time for Elizabeth, New York, 1949.
Watch the Birdie!, New York, 1969.

By KRASNA: articles—

On KRASNA: articles—
Film Dope (Nottingham), March 1985.
“The Ambassador’s Daughter,” in Reid’s Film Index (Wyong, New South Wales), no. 25, 1996.

* * *

When Hollywood producers of the 1940s demanded “sophisticated Broadway comedy,” they usually meant Norman Krasna.
A New York film and drama critic whose screenwriting career paralleled his other as playwright, Krasna was well placed in the early 1930s to merchandise Broadway’s less louche plots to a film industry flirting with sophistication.

His specialty, the farce of misunderstanding and mistaken identity, imported from Europe a generation before and found, over decades, to be largely actor-proof, was a gift to Hollywood’s lighter comedians. Miriam Hopkins could hardly fail in The Richest Girl in the World, testing suitors by posing as her own secretary, nor could Ginger Rogers flop as the shopgirl who inherits a baby in Bachelor Mother.

Cecil Parker’s comment of Ingrid Bergman in Indiscreet, “There is no sincerity like a woman telling a lie,” captures perfectly Krasna’s relish for duplicity. His women pretend to be mothers (Bachelor Mother, It’s a Date—and the latter’s remake Nancy Goes to Rio) or elder sisters (Dear Ruth). A demimondaine pretends virtue in Flame of New Orleans, while a virginal Jane Fonda in Sunday in New York claims experience. Shirley MacLaine in My Geisha pretends to be Japanese. Millionaire store owner Charles Coburn in The Devil and Miss Jones pretends to be poor.

Marriage was a frequent Krasna playground. His men marry to win American citizenship for a friend’s girl (John Loves Mary) or, as in Mr. and Mrs. Smith, think they are married but find they are not. Cary Grant in Indiscreet invents a wife to avoid entanglements, and in Who Was That Lady?, Tony Curtis hides extramarital affairs by pretending to be a spy.

Intermittently active as both producer and director, Krasna never caught fire as either. His production company, Monovale, founded in 1950, made little splash, and his sole Academy Award, for Women Must Dress (Barker); Great God Gold (Lubin); Honeymoon Limited (Lubin); Hold’em Yale (Uniform Lovers) (Lanfield); Murder in the Fleet (Sedgwick); Cheers of the Crowd (Moore) (co); The Virginia Judge (Sedgwick); Forbidden Heaven (Barker); The Great Impersonation (Crosland)

1936 Arbor Day (Newmeyer—short); Laughing Irish Eyes (Santley) (co); Crash Donovan (Nigh); Yellowstone (Lubin); The Girl on the Front Page (Beaumont); Mister Cinderella (Sedgwick); Love Letters of a Star (Foster and Carruth); Mysterious Crossing (Lubin)

1937 She’s Dangerous (Foster and Carruth); We Have Our Moments (Werker); Oh, Doctor (McCarey); Love in a Bungalow (McCarey); The Devil Fights Back (Carruth); There Goes the Groom (Santley); A Girl with Ideas (Simon); Prescription for Romance (Simon)

1938 The Jury’s Secret (Sloman); Midnight Intruder (Lubin); The Crime of Dr. Hallett (Simon); The Nurse from Brooklyn (Simon); The Devil’s Party (McCready); The Missing Guest (Rawlins); The Storm (Young); Newsboys Home (Young)

1939 You Can’t Cheat an Honest Man (Marshall); The Family Next Door (Santley); The House of Fear (May); I Stole a Million (Tuttle); Missing Evidence (Rosen); Little Accident (Lamont); The Man from Montreal (Cabanne)

1940 The Invisible Man Returns (May); Oh, Johnny, How You Can Love! (Lamont); Zanzibar (Schuster); The House of the Seven Gables (May); Ski Patrol (Landers); Sandy Is a Lady (Lamont); Private Affairs (Rogell); Hired Wife (Seiter); Diamond Frontier (Schuster); The Bank Dick (The Bank Detective) (Cline); Trail of the Vigilantes (Dwan) (co); Beat Me Daddy, Eight to the Bar! (Ceballos—short)

1941 Buck Privates (Rookies) (Lubin); The Lady from Cheyenne (Lloyd); Too Many Blondes (Freeland); Bachelor Daddy (Young); This Woman Is Mine (Lloyd); Paris Calling (Marin)

1942 Swing Frolic (Ceballos—short); The Ghost of Frankenstein (Kenton) (co); A Gentleman after Dark (Marin); The Spoilers (Enright); Pardon My Sarong (Kenton); Men of Texas (Men of Destiny) (Enright); Arabian Nights (Rawlins) (co)

1943 Two Tickets to London (Marin); We’ve Never Been Licked (Texas to Tokyo) (Rawlins); The Mad Ghoul (Hogan); So’s Your Uncle (Yarborough) (co); Gung Ho! (Enright)

1944 Hat Check Honey (Cline); The Invisible Man’s Revenge (Beebe); The Woman in the Window (F. Lang)

—John Baxter

KRASNER, Milton

Films as Cinematographer:

1933 Strictly Personal (Murphy); I Love That Man (H. Brown); Golden Harvest (Murphy); Sitting Pretty (H. Brown)

1934 She Made Her Bed (Murphy); Private Scandal (Murphy); The Great Flirtation (Murphy); Paris Interlude (Marin); Death on the Diamond (Sedgwick)

1935 Women Must Dress (Barker); Great God Gold (Lubin); Honeymoon Limited (Lubin); Hold’em Yale (Uniform Lovers) (Lanfield); Murder in the Fleet (Sedgwick); Cheers of the Crowd (Moore) (co); The Virginia Judge (Sedgwick); Forbidden Heaven (Barker); The Great Impersonation (Crosland)

1936 Arbor Day (Newmeyer—short); Laughing Irish Eyes (Santley) (co); Crash Donovan (Nigh); Yellowstone (Lubin); The Girl on the Front Page (Beaumont); Mister Cinderella (Sedgwick); Love Letters of a Star (Foster and Carruth); Mysterious Crossing (Lubin)

1937 She’s Dangerous (Foster and Carruth); We Have Our Moments (Werker); Oh, Doctor (McCarey); Love in a Bungalow (McCready); The Devil Fights Back (Carruth); There Goes the Groom (Santley); A Girl with Ideas (Simon); Prescription for Romance (Simon)

1938 The Jury’s Secret (Sloman); Midnight Intruder (Lubin); The Crime of Dr. Hallett (Simon); The Nurse from Brooklyn (Simon); The Devil’s Party (McCready); The Missing Guest (Rawlins); The Storm (Young); Newsboys Home (Young)

1939 You Can’t Cheat an Honest Man (Marshall); The Family Next Door (Santley); The House of Fear (May); I Stole a Million (Tuttle); Missing Evidence (Rosen); Little Accident (Lamont); The Man from Montreal (Cabanne)

1940 The Invisible Man Returns (May); Oh, Johnny, How You Can Love! (Lamont); Zanzibar (Schuster); The House of the Seven Gables (May); Ski Patrol (Landers); Sandy Is a Lady (Lamont); Private Affairs (Rogell); Hired Wife (Seiter); Diamond Frontier (Schuster); The Bank Dick (The Bank Detective) (Cline); Trail of the Vigilantes (Dwan) (co); Beat Me Daddy, Eight to the Bar! (Ceballos—short)

1941 Buck Privates (Rookies) (Lubin); The Lady from Cheyenne (Lloyd); Too Many Blondes (Freeland); Bachelor Daddy (Young); This Woman Is Mine (Lloyd); Paris Calling (Marin)

1942 Swing Frolic (Ceballos—short); The Ghost of Frankenstein (Kenton) (co); A Gentleman after Dark (Marin); The Spoilers (Enright); Pardon My Sarong (Kenton); Men of Texas (Men of Destiny) (Enright); Arabian Nights (Rawlins) (co)

1943 Two Tickets to London (Marin); We’ve Never Been Licked (Texas to Tokyo) (Rawlins); The Mad Ghoul (Hogan); So’s Your Uncle (Yarborough) (co); Gung Ho! (Enright)

1944 Hat Check Honey (Cline); The Invisible Man’s Revenge (Beebe); The Woman in the Window (F. Lang)
1945 Delightfully Dangerous (Lubin); Along Came Jones (Heisler); Scarlet Street (F. Lang)
1946 Without Reservations (LeRoy); The Dark Mirror (Siodmak)
1947 The Farmer’s Daughter (Potter); The Egg and I (Erskine); Something in the Wind (Piché); A Double Life (Cukor)
1948 Up in Central Park (Seiter); The Saxon Charm (Binyon); The Accused (Dieterle)
1949 The Set-Up (Wise); House of Strangers (Mankiewicz); Holiday Affair (Hartman)
1950 Three Came Home (Negulesco); No Way Out (Mankiewicz); All about Eve (Mankiewicz); Rawhide (Hathaway)
1951 I Can Get It for You Wholesale (This Is My Affair) (Gordon); Half Angel (Sale); People Will Talk (Mankiewicz); The Model and the Marriage Broker (Cukor)
1952 Dreamboat (Binyon); Phone Call from a Stranger (Negulesco); Deadline U.S.A. (Deadline) (Brooks); “The Ransom of Red Chief” ep. of O. Henry’s Full House (Full House) (Hawks); Monkey Business (Hawks)
1953 Taxi (Ratoff); Dream Wife (Sheldon); Vicki (Horner)
1954 Roger Wagner Chorale
1955 The Seven Year Itch (Wilder); How to Be Very, Very Popular (Johnson); The Girl in the Red Velvet Swing (Fleischer); The Rains of Ranchipur (Negulesco)
1956 23 Paces to Baker Street (Hathaway); Bus Stop (Logan)
1957 Boy on a Dolphin (Negulesco); An Affair to Remember (McCarey); Kiss Them for Me (Donen)
1958 The Gift of Love (Negulesco); A Certain Smile (Negulesco)
1959 The Remarkable Mr. Pennypacker (Levin); Count Your Blessings (Negulesco) (co); The Man Who Understood Women (Johnson)
1960 Bells Are Ringing (Minnelli); Go Naked in the World (MacDougall); Home from the Hill (Minnelli)
1961 King of Kings (Ray) (co); Sweet Bird of Youth (Brooks)
1962 The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse (Minnelli); Two Weeks in Another Town (Minnelli); How the West Was Won (Hathaway, Marshall, and Ford) (co)
1963 The Courtship of Eddie’s Father (Minnelli); A Ticklish Affair (Sidney); Love with the Proper Stranger (Mulligan); Advance to the Rear (Company of Cowards) (Koster)
1964 Looking for Love (Weis); Fate Is the Hunter (Nelson); Goodbye Charlie (Minnelli)
1965 The Sandpiper (Minnelli); Red Line 7000 (Hawks); Made in Paris (Sagal); The Singing Nun (Koster)
1966 The Venetian Affair (J. Thorpe); Hurry Sandown (Preminger) (co)
1967 The Ballad of Josie (McLaglen); Don’t Just Stand There (Winston); The St. Valentine’s Day Massacre (Corman)
1968 The Sterile Cuckoo (Pookie) (Pakula); Beneath the Planet of the Apes (Post)

Films as Cameraman:

1932 A Woman Commands; Is My Face Red (Seiter); Ride Him Cowboy (The Hawk) (Allen); 70,000 Witnesses (Murphy)

Publications

By KRASNER: articles—

On KRASNER: articles—

Allen, Leigh, on All about Eve in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), January 1951.
Balter, Allan, in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), December 1955.
Rowan, Arthur, on Boy on a Dolphin in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), May 1957.
Film Comment (New York), Summer 1972.
Kimble, G., on How the West Was Won in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), October 1983.
Turner, George, in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), September 1986.
Obituary in EPD Film (Frankfurt), vol. 5, no. 10, October 1988.

* * *

Milton Krasner’s film career, spanning the years 1919 to 1975, illustrates two fundamental aspects of the life of a craftsman in Hollywood’s Golden Age. First, the long and arduous (some, wistfully, would say luxurious) apprenticeship of the young technician. Second, the extreme diversity possible even within a segregated crafts system. Krasner, as an example, worked in black-and-white and color, standard format and widescreen, in a variety of genres, for a multitude of directors, at all the major studios. Indeed, Krasner’s career is of such breadth that his development as a cinematographer in many ways parallels the maturation of the art itself, as well as the manner in which the studio system of production appropriated that art.

Krasner began his career in the lab (and for a brief stint, in the cutting room) at the Vitagraph Studios in Brooklyn. From that position, he graduated to assistant cameraman, loading and unloading magazines, working the slate, and carrying gear. Moving to California in the early 1920s, Krasner worked on Broncho Billy Anderson westerns, Johnny Hines comedies for First National, and, most significantly, with Sol Polito on Harry Carey westerns at Pathé. At Universal, beginning in 1927, he worked with the crack team of Polito and Ted McCord on Ken Maynard westerns for several years.

By the time of Krasner’s first credit as director of photography, he had worked at nearly every studio in Hollywood, major and minor, and had assisted such cinematographers as McCord, Polito, Billy Bitzer, Lee Garmes, Lucien Andriot, Hal Mohr, and Joseph Walker. If there is a difficulty in detecting a “Krasner style” in his later work,
Perhaps this is due to the multiplicity of influences bearing on him during his long apprenticeship.

By late 1935, Krasner was located at Universal Studios, and between 1937 and 1944, made 54 films. The budgets were low, but his competence and craftsmanship gained a name in the industry.

The 1940s were the breakthrough period for Krasner. His long apprenticeship ended, he could finally work at a slower pace on the black-and-white horror and crime features he was increasingly specializing in, as well as begin work in other genres. His most important assignment in this respect was the Technicolor Arabian Nights, an Ali Baba-esque epic for which he and his two co-cinematographers received an Academy Award nomination. But Krasner’s best work in this period, and the work which gained him the greatest notoriety, were the two films done under director Fritz Lang, The Woman in the Window and Scarlet Street. The films remain two of Krasner’s most dramatic creations, and feature some of the most characteristic imagery in the film noir canon. The Woman in the Window’s lush, modern apartment set, in which much of the film’s action takes place, is imbued with a rich range of gray tones by Krasner, giving the set an air of complexity and suspense. Krasner’s camera moves effortlessly from one set-up to another. Though not then noted for dramatic treatment of interior space, Krasner here shows an excellent story sense. The exterior of the apartment building, on the other hand, is a triumph, and the image of a rain-soaked street (shot in the Goldwyn lot), its deserted brownstone fronts receding in geometric regularity into deep space, has become an icon of the genre. Scarlet Street played to the cinematographer’s strength. The backlot street scene of this film (which in structure and plot is virtually identical to Woman in the Window), is expanded into an entire sequence. Krasner’s work, this time on the Universal backlot, has a rare (for him) expressionist flavor. Edward G. Robinson, a timid bank clerk, witnesses a mock fight between Joan Bennett and her scheming boyfriend, Dan Duryea. Characters in both films, moreover, move from interior to exterior space within the same sequences, and exterior space is constantly alluded to through open windows and doorways. Soundstage-shot, false exteriors and backlot streets give these films a Baroque style all their own. Lotte Eisner, writing about The Woman in the Window, noted the remarkable effect of noir stylistics combined with Krasner’s subtle exploration of cinematic space in the film’s most dramatic scene, the murder of an intruder: “As a new taxi drives up outside the apartment building, rain is pouring down. It is the kind of rain that produces an unnerving insecurity and hints at potential catastrophe. Horror and brutality are about to invade the cool, civilized interior of the luxury apartment.”

Increasingly lightweight, even hand-held cameras, faster film stocks, and improvements in set design (such as the use of “wild” walls, removable during a tracking motion) abetted Krasner’s natural abilities in the late 1940s. He was drawn more and more, as was the case with colleagues such as Franz Planer, to storyboarding sequences early in the production process. This sophistication was responsible for the look of one of Krasner’s great accomplishments, The Set-Up. This brilliant, low-budget fight film is played in real time, on sets whose spatial relationship to one another is an integral part of the story. Krasner used three cameras for the fight sequences, including a hand-held camera used in the ring. The director, Robert Wise, an experienced editor (he had cut both Citizen Kane and The Magnificent Ambersons), cut this sequence himself, and the combined efforts of Krasner and Wise make the extended sequence (it takes up roughly one sixth of the film) one of the best of its kind, in a genre (the fight film) noted for its remarkable camerawork. The rest of the film is a cameraman’s soliloquy. There are low-angle expressionist shots of distorted, screaming faces of bloodthirsty fans in extreme close-up, long, arching tracks-in across streets, multiple setups in tiny interior spaces. The film even throws in a bit of location footage, as well: in an emotive moment, the hero’s wife tears up a ticket to the fight and scatters it over trolley tracks. With this fillip, Krasner demonstrates facility with every major cinematographic device in one 72-minute, low-budget film.

Krasner’s other work at RKO in this period, notably Holiday Affair, also demonstrated an increased technical skill, particularly with miniatures. RKO’s special effects department was known as the best in the industry at this time, and Krasner’s exposure to RKO’s matte painters, lab technicians, and miniature builders might be said to constitute the last part of his lengthy, productive apprenticeship in the motion picture industry.

In 1949, Krasner began a fruitful relationship with the writer-director-producer Joseph Mankiewicz, and an even longer relationship with 20th Century-Fox. After working on two thrillers with Mankiewicz, House of Strangers and No Way Out, Krasner was chosen to photograph All about Eve, an extremely theatrical and carefully blocked story of shifting allegiances and loyalties in the world of the theater. Krasner literalized this motif through his use of exclusionary framing, staging within the frame, and subtle manipulation of the film’s basic shot scale, the medium shot. Krasner’s camera gently narrates All about Eve, operating in parallel but muted fashion to Mankiewicz’s shrill, talky screenplay.

The 1950s and 1960s saw Krasner, now among the upper ranks of Hollywood cinematographers, attain the role of full collaborator on major projects. As the industry changed, Krasner also changed with apparent ease. He adapted well to huge budgets, European locales, different color processes, and widescreen formats. Krasner shot the second film in CinemaScope, Demetrius and the Gladiators, and won an Academy Award for his color and location work on Three Coins in the Fountain. Krasner demonstrated a certain ability to work in the more expensive, cumbersome, widescreen processes, and he was a natural choice to serve with Charles Lang, William Daniels, and Joseph La Shelle on one of only two features fully produced in Cinerama, How the West Was Won. Krasner shot the entire last section of the film, “The Outlaws” (for which Henry Hathaway has claimed most of the directing credit) and many scenes in the rest of the film. The cinematographers found the Cinerama system daunting: because of the separate optical targets of the three-in-one camera format, three vanishing points could potentially appear on screen, and, though synchronized, the edges of each camera’s field had to be carefully “blended” through skillful placement of trees and other vertical set elements, while cameramen had to be equally careful not to let a horizontal element stray across the “blend line.” Moreover, cameras couldn’t be tilted or panned during a scene. In fact, to compensate for the distortion, actors at the edges of the Cinerama image had to stand behind actors near the center of the image in order to be seen on the same depth plane. Krasner’s section of the film is a cameraman’s soliloquy. There are low-angle expressionist shots of distorted, screaming faces of bloodthirsty fans in extreme close-up, long, arching tracks-in across streets, multiple setups in tiny interior spaces. The film even throws in a bit of location footage, as well: in an emotive moment, the hero’s wife tears up a ticket to the fight and scatters it over trolley tracks. With this fillip, Krasner demonstrates facility with every major cinematographic device in one 72-minute, low-budget film.

With The St. Valentine’s Day Massacre, Krasner came full circle. Shooting mostly on a backlot dressed to look like 1920s Chicago, Krasner found himself advising the young Roger Corman how to get the feel of classical black-and-white photography on color stock. Corman found Krasner’s ability to combine interior and exterior shooting in the same sequence especially important to the dramatic needs of the story. Parts of the film were shot in “documentary style,” and the entire film was done in a modified widescreen process (Panavision). The film was carefully storyboarded, but a sequence depicting an argument between two characters was improvised with hand-held work. Thus Krasner reviewed techniques and specific skills learned in 45 years of work.

485

Milton Krasner’s career in the movies is a testament to an ethic of patience, an industry’s willingness to nurture talent, and the extraordinary variety of ways that talent was allowed to express itself when finally it did come to fruition.

—Kevin Jack Hagopian

KUREISHI, Hanif

Films as Writer:

1985 My Beautiful Laundrette (Frears —originally for TV) (+ sc)
1987 Sammy and Rosie Get Laid (Frears) (+ sc)
1991 London Kills Me (+ d, sc)
1998 My Son the Fanatic (Prasad) (+ sc)
1999 Mauvaise passe (The Escort; The Wrong Blonde) (Blanc)
2000 Intimacy

Publications:

By KUREISHI: books—

By KUREISHI: articles—

On KUREISHI: books—

On KUREISHI: articles—

Mody, Anjali, “‘Hanif’s Story: Too Intimate for Words,’” in The Indian Express (Bombay), 11 May 1998.

* * *

A controversial novelist, playwright, and screenwriter, Hanif Kureishi is an outspoken commentator on multiculturalism in the United Kingdom. His fictional works explore in graphic terms the experiences of British Asians, and his work as a screenwriter and a novelist has been praised on both sides of the Atlantic, suggesting that the views of ethnic differences expressed in films such as My Beautiful Laundrette and Sammy and Rosie Get Laid, are recognisable beyond their London setting. Kureishi is known for his left-wing politics, sharp humour, and uncompromising views on literary production.

Kureishi had his first play produced professionally in 1976, but it is as a screenwriter and more recently a novelist that he has reached his widest audience. The plots of Kureishi’s films tend to revolve around the problems encountered when immigrant families find that their culture is at odds with the traditions and moral structures of their adopted country. His first screenplay, My Beautiful Laundrette, for which he received an Oscar nomination, and which became something of a cult movie in the gay community in Britain in the late 1980s, tells the story of two young men, one working-class white, one Pakistani, as they try to run a laundrette. While the relationship between the two seems at first not to be affected by the differences in their backgrounds, their expectations of the venture could not be more different. While Johnny sees the laundrette as a way of salvaging his life and regaining some self-respect, Omar finds himself attracted to Johnny, rebelling against his father’s demands that he marry an upper-class Pakistani girl, and looking on the business as his ticket to wealth and respectability.

Directed by Stephen Frears, My Beautiful Laundrette was a remarkable start to Kureishi’s movie career, and his second collaboration with the director, Sammy and Rosie Get Laid, is no less impressive. Also featuring a domineering and conservative father figure, the second film’s most inventive twist is having the father return from India lamenting the loss of the British culture he used to know. It has become a hallmark of Kureishi’s work to overturn conventional views of immigrant families, in this case showing the reactionary father to be more “British” than the British themselves.

After winning the Whitbread prize for his first novel, The Buddha of Suburbia, Kureishi returned to filmmaking with London Kills Me, his directorial debut. Set among the low-lifes and drug addicts on the streets of London, the film predates Trainspotting by five years, but is far less rewarding either as a voyeuristic spectacle, or as an insight into the lives of the characters. Unlike Trainspotting, which offers up heroin addiction as an existential choice of some magnitude, here the horrors of the streets are more easily escaped, and therefore seem more trivial.

While London Kills Me seemed rather an aimless movie, Kureishi’s adaptation of his novel The Buddha of Suburbia as a four-part TV mini-series was a welcome return to form. It was also a return to the themes of his earlier work for the big screen, being the story of the decline into drugs and delinquency of the son of a respectable Pakistani family in London. My Son the Fanatic, directed by Udayan Prasad failed to make such an impact on critics and award committees as Kureishi’s early films. Tending towards the sentimental in its portrayal of Parvez, a hard-working taxi driver who gradually transforms into a friendly pimp, My Son the Fanatic lacks the intensity and pace of My Beautiful Laundrette and Sammie and Rosie. Yet it is an engaging movie, reversing the stereotype to cast the older members of a British Asian family as liberal and open to new ideas, while the younger generation embrace religious fundamentalism.

Kureishi’s films and writing projects have often placed him in conflict with his family and with the British Asian community whose problems his work explores. Yet his stories have gone some way towards making that community more visible in the British media. Many of the inversions of stereotypes that made My Beautiful Laundrette so unusual in the 1980s, have become staples of British Asian humour in the year 2000, to the point that a hit British TV comedy show Goodness Gracious Me bases its sketches on the kinds of racial inversions that seemed shocking in 1985. Kureishi’s latest outing as a screenwriter, Maevaise passe, teams him up with director Michel Blanc, and French star Daniel Auteuil.

—Chris Routledge

KURI, Yoji

Films as Animator (selected list):

1960  Fashion
1961  Stamp Fantasia; Human Zoo; Here and There
1963  Locus; Love; The Chair; The Face; Discovery of Zero
1964  Man, Woman, and Dog; Aos
1965  The Man Next Door; Samurai; The Window
1966  Little Murmurs; Au Foul!
1967  The Room; The Flower
1968  Two Grilled Fish; Crazy World; Concerto in X Minor
1969  Imagination; Little Island
1970  The Bathroom; Pop
1972  Fantasy for Piano; The Midnight Parasites
1973  Imus
1977  Monga

1978  Vanish
1980  Love

Publications

By KURI: articles—

‘“Made in Japan,”’ in Annecy Festival catalogue, 1965.
Le Technicien du Film (Paris), July-August 1977.

On KURI: articles—

Film (London), Winter 1964.
Films and Filming (London), March 1966.
Image et Son (Paris), November 1967.
Film a Doba (Prague), no. 9, 1968.
Cinéma (Paris), January 1968.
Kinoisskusto (Sofia), vol. 39, no. 5, 1984.

*  *  *

The contemporary Japanese animator Yoji Kuri has enjoyed the most successful international career of all the many independent Japanese animators whose work stands in contradistinction to the more elaborate, more collaborative, and more commercial productions from such industrial giants as the Toei and Toho studios. As such, Kuri constitutes a fine example of the Japanese experimental film artist, being in a sense an Asian analogue to such animators as the American Robert Breer.

Kuri’s early years were spent as a cartoonist, but by 1960 he had established a small independent studio which centered upon a solitary 35mm animation camera. In the following year he completed Human Zoo, which won the Bronze Medal at the Venice Film Festival in 1962. As the film-scholar Millie Paul suggests, it was this award that truly launched his career. The brief animated work that followed—such as the erotic Aos, the abstract Locus, the educational Discovery of Zero—allowed him to develop his reputation and style. The 1967 film The Room (which grew out of one of Kuri’s flip-books) provides some insights into that style, and the structures which came to mark his acollaborative, independent animation through the 1960s and 1970s.

The Room is precisely five minutes long and is made up of 19 brief tableau units, each of which is largely confined to the rather surreal space of a stark and simple line drawing of an empty ‘room.’ Such simple, black-and-white line drawings are typical of Kuri’s style, not unlike that of the American cartoonist James Thurber. Further, while The Room was shot—frame by frame, in an admixture of animated cels and cut-outs—on color stock, rarely does color appear in the film (and only then to heighten an effect or to underscore a mood). Tableau One provides the film’s titles, which appear within the room’s simple space. What follows are 18 disparate tableaux with almost no narrative causality or continuity between them. Each tableau itself is distinctly marked by often bizarre metamorphic transformations.

In Tableau Two, for example, two feet emerge from the room’s right and left walls, then feet metamorphose into a bird which flies around the room. Such metamorphic transformations—where one figure seems almost to “melt” and then reform into a very different figure, linked to the first only by subtle topologic similarities—are one of Kuri’s stylistic and structural hallmarks. The Room is replete with them, having more than 40. In lieu of more traditional (and commercial) narrative linkings between images, these metamorphoses underscore far more associational (and thematic) unities which bond Kuri’s rapidly paced exchanges of mise en scène. The Room, like most of Kuri’s work, is for adult audiences, and such themes as the conflict between the sexes, the violence of war, and bureaucratic boredom, predominate. But perhaps even more predominant is Kuri’s artistic insistence upon graphic similarities: comparisons and contrasts of tones, lines, and forms which continue to reiterate the essential (etymological) meaning of our Western term “aesthetic” as “a study of sensation/perception.”

487

Not only for The Room but for all of Kuri’s extensive production (which likely exceeds 400 films, many unreleased, many others international prize winners), one must keep in mind Kuri’s total control as an independent artist. All funding, conception, scripting, graphics, shooting, sound, editing, and even distribution are—in the main—from his hand. As a result, Kuri’s films, such as The Room, are very personal, yet remarkably international, partly due to his penchant for soundtracks which avoid spoken language and which instead consist of an “international language” of sound effects and/or music.

Kuri’s total artistic production is very varied. He began his creative life as a cartoonist and continues such work today. He continues to fashion flip-books, kinetic sculptures, paintings and drawings, and cut-out compositions. He is probably the best-known Japanese independent both in his own country and throughout the world. His satire and sexuality, his caricature and metamorphoses, and (perhaps above all) his post-Hiroshima “black humor” all bond together with an experimental willingness to explore various animation media. The result is seriously funny adult fare, at once popular and yet “theoretical” enough for the connoisseur and magically international in its appeal. He is a consummate, exemplary independent artist who is constantly and consistently creative.

—Edward S. Small
LAEMMLE, Carl, Sr., and Carl, Jr.

CARL, SR. Producer. Nationality: American. Born: Laupheim, Germany, 17 January 1867, family emigrated to the United States in 1884. Education: Attended schools in Laupheim. Family: Married Recha Stern, 1898; two children including the producer Carl, Jr. Career: Newsboy, salesman and bookkeeper; 1906—opened Whitefront Theatre nickelodeon in Chicago; 1909—defied the Motion Picture Patents Trust and went into production with his Independent Moving Picture Company; 1912—formed Universal Productions; 1914—company moved to lot outside Hollywood. Died: In Beverly Hills, California, 24 September 1939.

CARL, JR. Producer. Nationality: American. Born: Chicago, Illinois, 28 April 1908. Education: Attended Clark School, Chicago. Career: Supervisor of short subjects at Universal while still in his teens; 1927—began supervising Universal’s feature films; 1928—associate producer; 1929—in charge of company’s total film production; 1936—Universal sold to outside investors and Laemmle, Jr. forced to resign; 1936–37—producer at MGM, but made no films. Award: Academy Award for All Quiet on the Western Front, 1930. Died: Of a stroke, in Los Angeles, California, in 1979.

Films as Producer (Carl, Sr.):

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Cheated Hearts (Henley); Colorado (Eason); The Conflict (Paton); Danger Ahead (Sturgeon); The Dangerous Moment (De Sano); Desperate Trails (Ford); False Kisses (Scardon); The Cat (Dawn)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1922</td>
<td>The Altar Stairs (Hillyer); Another Man’s Shoes (Conway); Broad Daylight (Cummings); Caught Bluffing (Hillyer); Confidence (Pollard); A Dangerous Game (Baggot); Don’t Get Personal (Badger); Don’t Shoot (Conway); The Flaming Hour (Sedgwick); The Flirt (Henley); Foolish Wives (von Stroheim); Forsaking All Others (Chautard)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1923</td>
<td>The Flame of Life (Henley); Burning Words (Paton); Crossed Wires (Baggot); Don Quickshot of the Rio Grande (Marshall); Double Dealing (Lehrman); Drifting (Browning); The First Degree (Sedgwick)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1924</td>
<td>Fools Highway (Cummings); Butterfly (Brown); Excitement (Hill); The Family Secret (Seiter); The Fast Worker (Seiter); The Fighting American (Forman); The Gaiety Girl (Baggot)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1925</td>
<td>Daring Days (O’Brien); The Demon (Smith); Fifth Avenue Models (Gade); Phantom of the Opera (Julian)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1926</td>
<td>The Buckaroo Kid (Reynolds); Bucking the Truth (Morante); Down the Stretch (Baggot); The Escape (Morante); The Fighting Peacemaker (Smith); Butterflies in the Rain (Sloman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1927</td>
<td>Back to God’s Country (Willat); Beware of Widows (Ruggles); Blazing Days (Wyler); The Border Cavalier (Wyler); The Broncho Buster (Ernst Laemmle); Call of the Heart (F. Ford); The Cat and the Canary (Leni); Cheating Cheaters (Edward Laemmle); The Cheerful Fraud (Seiter); The Chinese Parrot (Leni); The Claw (Olcott); The Denver Dude (Eason); Desert Dust (Wyler); Fangs of Destiny (Paton); Fast and Furious (Brown); The Fighting Three (Rogell); The Four-Footed Ranger (Paton); The Fourflusher (Ruggles); The Fourth Commandment (Johnson); Galloping Fury (Eason)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1928</td>
<td>Arizona Cyclone (Lewis); Buck Privates (M. Brown); The Clean-Up Man (Taylor); The Cohens and Kellys in Paris (Beaudine); The Count of Ten (Flood); The Fearless Rider (Lewis)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1929</td>
<td>Come Across (Taylor); Courtin’ Wildcats (Storm)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Captain of the Guard (Robertson); The Cat Creeps (Julian); The Climax (Hoffman); The Cohens and Kellys in Scotland (Craft); The Concentration’ Kid (Rosson); The Czar of Broadway (Craft); Dames Ahoy! (Craft); East is West</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Films as Producer (Carl, Jr.):

1923  The Love Brand (Paton)
1927  The Irresistible Lover (Beaudine)
1928  The Last Warning (Leni); We Americans (Sloman); Lonesome (Fejos)
1929  Broadway (Fejos); College Love (Ross); The Last Performance (Fejos)
1930  All Quiet on the Western Front (Milestone); The King of Jazz (Anderson); A Lady Surrenders (Stahl); The Boudoir Diplomat (St. Clair)
1931  The Spirit of Notre Dame (Mack); Dracula (Browning); Frankenstein (Whale); Waterloo Bridge (Whale); The Bad Sister (Henley)
1932  Back Street (Stahl); Murders in the Rue Morgue (Florey); Once in a Lifetime (Mack); Air Mail (Ford); The Old Dark House (Whale)
1933  Only Yesterday (Stahl); Out All Night (Taylor); The Invisible Man (Whale); Don't Bet on Love (Roth); The Mummy (Freund)
1934  Imitation of Life (Stahl); The Countess of Monte Cristo (Freund); By Candlelight (Whale); Glamour (Wyler); Little Man, What Now? (Borzage); One More River (Whale)
1935  The Good Fairy (Wyler); The Bride of Frankenstein (Whale); Night Life of the Gods (L. Sherman); Remember Last Night (Whale)
1936  Show Boat (Whale)

Publications

By LAEMMLE (Sr.): articles—

“This Business of Motion Pictures,” in Film History (Bristol), vol. 3, no. 1, 1989.

On LAEMMLE (Sr.): books—

On LAEMMLE (Sr.): articles—

Film Weekly, vol. 5, no. 137, 30 May 1931.
Film Weekly, vol. 12, no. 311, 28 September 1934.
Motion Picture Herald, vol. 136, no. 14, 30 September 1939.
Classic Images (Muscatine, Iowa), January 1983.

Simmons, Jerold, “Film and International Politics: the Banning of All Quiet on the Western Front in Germany and Austria, 1930–1931,” in Historian, November 1989.

Everschor, Franz, in Film-Dienst (Cologne), 4 August 1992.

* * * *

Carl Laemmle, Sr., founded one of the major Hollywood studios, Universal Pictures. His life was a true “rags to riches” tale. He had made his way to the United States from Germany three decades before the movie industry was created. In 1906, at age 39, he opened a nickelodeon in Chicago. Once he had fought off takeover attempts by the Motion Pictures Patents Trust, Laemmle, Sr. began to expand his operations into filmmaking. He moved to Hollywood and built Universal City Studios in 1915.

During the late 1910s and early 1920s Universal City Studios functioned as the largest, most modern moviemaking operation in the world. But while Famous Players-Lasky moved up to number one in the industry by signing top stars and expanding its feature film budgets, Laemmle maintained a conservative business posture. He continued doing what had worked so well in the past, making low-budget formula films. Indeed the studio became famous as a place for developing such talents as director John Ford and studio executive Irving Thalberg, and then losing them to the more prosperous Paramount Pictures and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

With the coming of the Great Depression and the attendant economy drives required, Universal was able only to play a marginal role during the lucrative Studio Era, producing low-budget films, including such horror classics as Dracula, The Mummy, The Invisible Man, and The Bride of Frankenstein. Universal Pictures never did obtain much power or prestige, but Laemmle, Sr., was able to set up his son in the business. Someone in Hollywood once noted that, contrary to what Ernest Hemingway wrote, in Lotus land it was “the son also rises.” That cynic must have had Carl Laemmle, Jr., in mind.

By 1929 Carl Laemmle, Jr., was in charge of all film production at a major Hollywood studio. His only line experience had been as a writer of a popular series of two-reel comedies, The Collegians, for Universal in the mid-1920s. Since his father owned and operated the company, Carl, Jr., in 1927, at age 19, was suddenly supervising feature films. One year later he was appointed an associate producer and in that capacity produced the flamboyant screen version of Broadway, a spectacle meant to outdo all talkie spectacles that had come before.

The Great Depression severely limited what Laemmle, Jr., could do. Still, despite the fact the company immediately went into the red and would be sold to outside investors seven years later, Laemmle never looked back. Indeed at first he did make a splash. He invested considerable resources in All Quiet on the Western Front, a daring pacifist tale told from the German point of view. The picture won the Oscar for best picture in 1930, and brought respectability to a studio best known for its low-budget dramas and B-westerns.

But Laemmle could not afford to spend more than one million dollars for every film, regardless of how much prestige it bought the family company. Gradually he moved Universal more and more into the red. Eventually, despite all Laemmle, Sr.’s efforts, he could not get out from under mounting debts and in March 1936 sold Universal to a group of rich eastern bankers. Laemmle, Jr., politely retired, just as his last major effort, a film version of Show Boat, was being released. Laemmle, Sr., retired to become an elder statesman of the film business; Laemmle, Jr., not yet 30, would live in quiet obscurity.
for four more decades, making no more contributions to the motion picture business.

—Douglas Gomery

LAI, Francis

Films as Composer:

1966
Un Homme et une femme (A Man and a Woman) (Lelouch); Masculin-Féminin (Masculine-Feminine) (Godard) (co)

1967
La Louve solitaire (Logereau); The Bobo (Parrish); Mon amour, mon amour (Trintignant); Le Soleil des voyous (Action Man; Leather and Nylon) (Delannoy); I’ll Never Forget What’s ‘is Name (Winner); Vivre pour vivre (Live for Life) (Lelouch)

1968
Mayerling (Young); Treize jours en France (Grenoble) (Lelouch and Reichenbach—doc)

1969
La Vie, l’amour, la mort (Life, Love, Death) (Lelouch); Three into Two Won’t Go (Hall); Hamnibal Brooks (Winner); House of Cards (Guillermin); La Modification (Worms); Un Homme qui me plaît (Love Is a Funny Thing) (Lelouch); Le Passager de la pluie (Rider on the Rain) (Clément)

1970
Du soleil plein les yeux (Boisrond); Madly (Kahane); Le Voyou (The Crook) (Lelouch); The Games (Winner); Dans la poussière du soleil (Balducci); Hello-Goodbye (Negulesco); Love Story (Hiller); Berlin Affair (Rich)

1971
Smic, Smac, Smoc (Lelouch) (+ ro); Le Petit Matin (Albicocco); L’Odeur des faunes (Balducci); Les Péroleuses (The Legend of Frenchie King; The Petroleum Girls) (Christian-Jaque)

1972
Le Petit Poucet (Boisrond); Les Hommes (Vigne); L’Aventure c’est l’aventure (Money Money Money) (Lelouch); La Course du lièvre à travers les champs (And Hope to Die) (Clément)

1973
Un Homme libre (A Free Man) ( Muller); La Bonne Année (Happy New Year) (Lelouch)

1974
Child under a Leaf (Broomfield); La Ronde (Le Baiser) (Schenk); The Sex Symbol (Rich) (co); Tourne une vie (And Now My Love; A Lifetime) (Lelouch); Par le sang des autres (With the Blood of Others) (Simonen); Un Amour de pluie (Loving in the Rain) (Brialy); A Visit to a Chief’s Son (Johnson); Emmanuelle (Jaeckin)

1975
Le Chat et la souris (Cat and Mouse) (Lelouch); Le Babysitter (Clément); Mariage (Lelouch); Emmanuelle II: L’Anti-vierge (Emmanuelle II: Joys of a Woman) (Giacobetti)

1976
Le Bon et les méchants (The Good and the Bad) (Lelouch); Si c’était à refaire (A Second Chance) (Lelouch); Le Corps de mon ennemi (The Body of My Enemy) (Verneuil)

1977
Anima persa (Risi); Bilits (Hamilton); Un Autre Homme, une autre chance (Another Man, Another Chance) (Lelouch); Nido di viudas (Widows’ Nest) (Navarro)

1978
International Velvet (Forbes); Robert et Robert (Lelouch); Oliver’s Story (Korty); Passion Flower Hotel (Farwagi); Les Ringards (The Small Timers) (Pouret)

1979
A nous deux (Us Two) (Lelouch)

1981
Les Uns et les autres (Bolero; Within Memory) (Lelouch); Madame Claude 2 (Intimate Moments) (Mimet); Beyond the Reef (Clarke)

1982
Salut la puce (Balducci)

1983
Edith et Marcel (Edith and Marcel) (Lelouch); Canicule (Dogsday) (Boisset)

1984
Les Ripoux (My New Partner; Le Cop) (Zidi); J’ai reconnu le Père Noel (Here Comes Santa Claus) (Gion)

1985
Marie (Donaldson)

1986
Association de malfaiteurs (Zidi); Un Homme et une femme: vingt ans déjà (A Man and a Woman: 20 Years Later) (Lelouch)

1987
Attention Bandits (Bandits) (Lelouch); Oci ciornie (Dark Eyes) (Mikhalkov)

1988
Bernadette (Delannoy); Itinéraire d’un enfant gâté (Lelouch); Les Pyramides bleues (Dombasle)

1989
Der Aten; Earth Girls Are Easy (Temple) (song); Trop belle pour toi (Too Beautiful for You) (Blier)

1990
Il y a des jours . . . et des lunes (There Were Days . . . and Moons) (Lelouch) (co); Provincial (Gion); Ripoux contre Ripoux (My New Partner II; Le Cop 2) (Zidi)

1991
Les Clés du paradis (DeBroca); La Belle Histoire (Lelouch)

1992
Tolgo il disturbo (Risi); L’inconnu dans la maison (Lautner)

1993
Tout ça pour ça (Lelouch)

1994
Le voleur et la menteuse (Boujenah)

1995
Les Misérables (Lelouch)

1996
Hommes, femmes, mode d’emploi (Men, Women: A User’s Manual)

1997
My Best Friend’s Wedding (Hogan)

2000
Une pour toutes (One 4 All) (Lelouch)

Publications

By LAI: article—

Film Français (Paris), 16 January 1981.
CinémAction (Conde-sur-Noireau), September 1990.

On LAI: articles—

Ecran (Paris), September 1975.
Film Français (Paris), 3 February 1978.
Film Français (Paris), 2 February 1979.
Score (Lelystad, Netherlands), December 1980.

Lelouch, Claude, in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1983.

* * *

Francis Lai’s first movie credits were for Masculine-Feminine and A Man and a Woman, both released in 1966. Lai’s participation in Masculine-Feminine went almost unnoticed, but his score for A Man and a Woman made him an internationally prominent film composer. A Man and a Woman brought honors and recognition to both the director Claude Lelouch (Grand Prize at Cannes, two Academy Awards) and composer Lai (gold record, many versions of the theme song).

The music of A Man and a Woman is simple, lyrical, and sentimental. Lai’s songs and Pierre Barouh’s lyrics are often charming. But the original aspect of this score lies in the combination of music and image. Music in A Man and a Woman often has an importance at least equal to the images. Music provides emotion, tempo, and movement, while Lelouch’s swooping camera and rapid montage add impressionistic details. This is especially true of the film’s last half hour, where Lelouch and Lai present several fine songs-with-montage and very few dialogue scenes. In contemporary terms, one could describe the concluding half hour as a suite of music videos. The integration of image and score in A Man and a Woman was widely copied in the 1960s and 1970s.

Lai and Lelouch collaborated on a number of films. Their working method was unusual. Lai would write the main themes for a film after discussions with the director, but before production. The music then served as a guide for filming and editing. Writing music before rather than after production makes the composer much more of a creative partner to the writer and director than is normally the case.

The Lai-Lelouch collaborations are surprisingly diverse. Live for Life and Love Is a Funny Thing have sentimental scores and montage sequences on the model of A Man and a Woman. Treize jours en France, a documentary of the Winter Olympics of 1968, has a lovely score of four interwoven songs which pulls together the sometimes scattered images. The score of The Crook consists mainly of one brash pop song fragmented and repeated in various ways. In Smic, Smac, Smoc, Lai appears on camera as a blind accordionist to play the film’s theme song, The Good and the Bad, set in the 1940s, has an interesting period score, with Lai quoting liberally from Glenn Miller. And Now My Love and Les Uns et les autres, both ambitious generational sagas, use music and image to evoke a number of historical periods. And Now My Love’s amalgam of Lai originals, Gilbert Bécaud vocals, and American and French pop tunes is more successful than the even more eclectic mix (“Bolero,” Beethoven, Glenn Miller, Francis Lai, Michel Legrand) of Les Uns et les autres.

Aside from his work with Lelouch, Lai is best-known for his Academy Award-winning score for Love Story. The sad, sentimental theme for that film has become a pop standard, and he went on to write... another strong theme for Oliver’s Story, the sequel. Lai’s other credits include the haunting music for Rider on the Rain and the very sentimental score for International Velvet. He has worked extensively in France, England, and the United States, and he has composed for everything from historical epics to soft-core pornography.

Lai’s great strength is his ability to shape a score to the needs of a particular film. Although he is one of Muzak’s favorite composers—half a dozen of his songs can be heard at the local supermarket or dentist’s office—he is also a competent craftsman of film music, with several fine scores to his credit.

—Peter Lev

LANCI, Giuseppe (“Beppe”)

Cinematographer. Nationality: Italian. Born: Rome, 1942. Education: Institute of Art, then Rome’s Centro Sperimentale di Cinematografia. Career: Mid-1960s—entered film industry as an apprentice cameraman; by the 1970s, had become one of Europe’s most noted cinematographers, working on films with a number of European luminaries.

Films as Cinematographer:

1978  Maternale
1980  Salto nel Vuoto (Leap into the Void) (Bellochio); Con fusione (Natali)
1982  Gli occhi, la bocca (The Eyes, the Mouth) (Bellochio); Piso Piselli (Swee’ Pea) (Delmonte)
1983  Nostalghia (Nostalgia) (Tarkovsky); Stelle emigranti (Mazzeni—for TV)
1984  Enrico IV (Henry IV) (Bellochio); Kaos (Chaos) (P. and V. Taviani)
1985  Un Complicato intrigo di Bonne vici e delitti (Camorra) (Wertmüller)
1986  Good Morning Babylon (Good Morning, Babylon) (P. and V. Taviani); Il Diavolo in Corpo (Devil in the Flesh) (Bellochio); La Venexiana (The Venetian Woman) (Bolognini); Every Time We Say Goodbye (Mizrahi)
1987  Havick (Weisz)
1988  Paure e Amore (Three Sisters; Love and Fear) (Von Trott); Zoo; La Visione del Sabbia (The Sabbath) (Bellochio)
1989  Francesco (St. Francis of Assisi) (Cavani); Il Prete bello (The Handsome Priest); Palombella rossa (Moretti)
1990  La-Baule-Les-Pins (C’est la Vie) (Kurys); Il Sole anche di notte (Night Sun) (P. and V. Taviani)
1991  Johnny Stecchino (Johnny Toothpick) (Benigni)
1992  Fiorile (Wild Flower) (P. and V. Taviani); La Villa del venerdì (Husbands and Lovers) (Bolognini); Tra due risvegli (Fago)
1994  The Conviction (Bellochio); Caro Diaro (Dear Diary) (Moretti); Con gli occhi chiusi (With Closed Eyes) (Archibugi)
1996  Compagna di viaggio (Del Monte); Le Affinità elettive (The Elective Affinities) (P. and V. Taviani)
1997  Santostefano (Pasquini); Il Principe di Homburg (The Prince of Homburg) (Bellochio)

1998  I Piccoli maestri (Little Teachers) (Luchetti); Oscar per due (Farina—for TV); April (Moretti); Tu ridi (You Laugh) (Paolo Taviani and Vittorio Taviani)
1999  La Balia (The Nanny; The Wet Nurse) (Ballocchio)

Publications

On LANCI: article—

‘‘Italian cinematographers: le nuove tendenze,’’ in Cineforum, July/August 1983.

———

Italian cinematographer Giuseppe Lanci’s gift with the camera has kept him in the esteemed company of such landmark European directors as Lina Wertmüller, Paolo and Vittorio Taviani, and most frequently with Marco Bellochio during a career that spans three decades. Whether it is the lush, romantic style his vision has brought to such Taviani films as Good Morning Babylon or the overheated visuals that suit the melodramas of Bellochio’s work, Lanci has proven to be an artist with the camera.

Lanci studied cinematography at Rome’s noted Centro Sperimentale, which Bellochio also attended. The two seem to have been meant for each other cinematically so aptly has Lanci’s work complemented Bellochio’s directing since Leap into the Void. Their Devil in the Flesh perhaps gained the most attention when it created international controversy due to a scene of oral sex. Nevertheless, its portrait of obsession leading to madness was far more noteworthy and greatly heightened by the cinematographer’s contribution.

Although a number of the films Lanci has worked on have gained both critical and popular acclaim, it seems a little ironic that Lanci gained his greatest commercial success with Johnny Stecchino—made with actor, director, and co-writer Roberto Benigni—a simple comedy of gangsters and mistaken identity; it went on to become the highest grossing film ever to play in Italy.

It is understandable that Lanci has been chosen as cinematographer by many of Europe’s noted and often most controversial directors, including Lina Wertmüller and Diane Kurys, given his fluid camera and provocative use of lighting and color to underline the mood of the scene. Lanci entered the 2000s as one of Europe’s leading cinematographers.

—Allen Grant Richards

LANG, Charles B.

Cinematographer. Nationality: American. Born: Charles Bryant Lang, Jr., in Bluff, Utah, 27 March 1902. Education: Attended Lincoln High School, Los Angeles; studied law briefly, University of Southern California, Los Angeles. Career: 1919–22—laboratory assistant, then assistant cameraman, Realart Studio; still photographer, Preferred Picture Corporation, then with Paramount from mid-1920s until 1951 (director of photography, 1929–51), then freelance.
Awards: Academy Award, for A Farewell to Arms, 1932–33; Life Achievement Award, Society of American Cinematographers, 1991.
Died: Of pneumonia, in Santa Monica, California, 3 April 1998.

Films as Cinematographer:

1927 Ritz (Rosson)
1928 The Shopworn Angel (Wallace)
1929 Innocents of Paris (Wallace); Half-Way to Heaven (Abbott) (co)
1930 Behind the Make-Up (Milton); Seven Days Leave (Medals) (Wallace); Street of Chance (Cromwell); Sarah and Son (Arzner); For the Defense (Cromwell); The Light of Western Stars (Brower and Knopf); Shadow of the Law (Gasnier); Anybody’s Woman (Arzner); Tom Sawyer (Cromwell); The Right to Love (Wallace)

1931 Unfaithful (Cromwell); The Vice Squad (Cromwell); Caught (Sloman); Forbidden Adventure (Newly Rich) (Taurog); The Magnificent Life (Viertel); Once a Lady (McClinic)
1932 No One Man (Corrigan); Tomorrow and Tomorrow (Wallace); Thunder Below (Wallace); Devil and the Deep (Gering); He Learned about Women (Corrigan); A Farewell to Arms (Borzage)
1933 She Done Him Wrong (L. Sherman); A Bedtime Story (Taurog); Gambling Ship (Gasnier and Marcin); The Way to Love (Taurog); Cradle Song (Leisen)
1934 Death Takes a Holiday (Leisen); We’re Not Dressing (Taurog); She Loves Me Not (Nugent); Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch (Taurog)
1935 The Lives of a Bengal Lancer (Hathaway); Mississippi (Sutherland); Peter Ibbetson (Hathaway)
1936 Desire (Borzage)
1937 Souls at Sea (Hathaway) (co); Angel (Lubitsch); Tovarich (Litvak)
1938 Doctor Rhythm (Tuttle); You and Me (F. Lang); Spawn of the North (Hathaway)
1939 Zaza (Cukor); Midnight (Leisen); The Gracie Allen Murder Case (Green); The Cat and the Canary (Nugent)
1940 Women without Names (Florey); Adventure in Diamonds (Fitzmaurice); Buck Benny Rides Again (Sandrich); Dancing on a Dime (Santley); The Ghost Breakers (Marshall); Arise, My Love (Leisen)
1941 The Shepherd of the Hills (Hathaway); Nothing but the Truth (Nugent); Sundown (Hathaway); Skylark (Sandrich); The Lady Has Plans (Langfield)
1942 Are Husbands Necessary? (Taurog); The Forest Rangers (Marshall) (co)
1943 So Proudly We Hail (Sandrich); True to Life (Marshall); The Uninvited (L. Allen); No Time for Love (Leisen)
1944 Standing Room Only (Langfield); I Love a Soldier (Sandrich); Practically Yours (Leisen); Here Comes the Waves (Sandrich)
1945 The Stork Club (Walker)
1946 Miss Susie Slagle’s (Berry); Blue Skies (Heisler) (co); Cross My Heart (Berry)
1947 Desert Fury (L. Allen) (co); The Ghost and Mrs. Muir (Mankiewicz); Where There’s Life (Langfield)
1948 A Foreign Affair (Wildler); Miss Tatlock’s Millions (Haydn); My Own True Love (Bennett)
1949 Rope of Sand (Dieterle); The Great Lover (Hall)

1950 Fancy Pants (Marshall); Copper Canyon (Farrow); Branded (Maté); September Affair (Dieterle); The Mating Season (Leisen)
1951 Ace in the Hole (The Big Carnival) (Wildler); Peking Express (Dieterle); Mr. Belvedere Rings the Bell (Koster) (co); Red Mountain (Dieterle); Aaron Slick from Punkin Crick (Marshmallow Moon) (Binyon)
1952 The Atomic City (Hopper); Sudden Fear (Miller)
1953 Salome (Dieterle); The Big Heat (F. Lang); It Should Happen to You (Cukor)
1954 Sabrina (Sabrina Fair) (Wildler); Piff! (Robson)
1955 The Man from Laramie (A. Mann); Female on the Beach (Pevney); Queen Bee (MacDougall)
1956 Autumn Leaves (Aldrich); The Solid Gold Cadillac (Quine); The Rainmaker (Anthony); Gunfight at the O.K. Corral (J. Sturges)
1957 Loving You (Kanter); Wild Is the Wind (Cukor) (co)
1958 The Matchmaker (Anthony); Separate Tables (Delbert Mann); Last Train from Gun Hill (J. Sturges)
1959 Some Like It Hot (Wildler)
1960 Strangers When We Meet (Quine); The Magnificent Seven (J. Sturges); The Facts of Life (Frank); One-Eyed Jacks (Brando)
1961 Blue Hawaii (Taurog); Summer and Smoke (Glennville)
1962 A Girl Named Tamiko (J. Sturges); How the West Was Won (Hathaway, Marshall, and Ford) (co)
1963 Critic’s Choice (Weiss); The Wheeler Dealers (Separate Beds) (Hiller); Charade (Donen); Paris When It Sizzles (Quine)
1964 Father Goose (Nelson); Sex and the Single Girl (Quine)
1965 Inside Daisy Clover (Mulligan)
1966 How to Steal a Million (Wyler); Not with My Wife, You Don’t! (Panama)
1967 Hotel (Quine); The film Flam Man (One Born Every Minute) (Kershner); Wait until Dark (Young)
1968 A Flea in Her Ear (Charon); The Walking Moon (Mulligan)
1969 How to Commit Marriage (Panama); Bob and Carol and Ted and Alice (Mazursky); Cactus Flower (Saks); A Walk in the Spring Rain (Green)
1970 Doctors’ Wives (Schaefer)
1971 The Love Machine (Haley)
1972 Butterflies Are Free (Katselas)
1973 Forty Carats (Katselas)

Other Films:

1923 Are You a Failure? (Forman) (asst); The Virginian (Forman) (asst)
1925 The Golden Princess (Badger) (asst)
1926 The Night Patrol (Smith) (2nd cam)
1992 Visions of Light: The Art of Cinematography (Glassman and McCarthy) (as himself)

Publications

By LANG: articles—

On LANG: articles—

Wayne, Palma, in Saturday Evening Post (Philadelphia), 22 July 1933.
Rowan, Arthur, on Gunfight at the O.K. Corral in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), July 1957.
Lightman, Herb A., on Last Train from Gun Hill in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), September 1959.
Film Comment (New York), Summer 1972.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), March 1974.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), August 1975.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), December 1990.

* * *

One of Hollywood’s most famous cinematographers, Charles B. Lang labored long and hard in the Golden Age of Hollywood, receiving credit on more than 150 feature films. When the roster of the great camera operators in Hollywood history is drawn up, Charles B. Lang will belong in the top ten. His style is most closely associated with his romantic black-and-white technique, awash with translucent light, which emerged in the 1930s with such films as A Farewell to Arms, Desire, and Angel. Yet, like all the cinematographers of his era, he worked on films from all genres, in all visual styles.

Cinematographers, like all Hollywood employees during the 1930s and 1940s, were signed to long-term, binding contracts. Thus the bulk of their work was associated with one studio. Charles B. Lang toiled for Paramount Pictures from 1929 to 1951, almost the complete length of the Golden Age of the Hollywood studio system. As such he fulfilled his promise as a cinematographer early on, since Paramount, then under the influence of Ernst Lubitsch and Josef von Sternberg, was the home of great photographers of black-and-white cinema.

But as required by changing studio personnel and dictates, Lang adapted to the harsher film noir style of the 1940s. The Big Heat, directed by Fritz Lang in 1953, remains one of the most important examples of the late film noir period. It creates a beauty in the American urbanscape and contrasts the jagged edges of the changing American urbanscape. The Big Heat represents an example of black-and-white cinematography at its best. The film would have been far poorer without Lang’s work. Finally there have been his color films. Here Lang moved outdoors to film such Westerns as Gunfight at the O.K. Corral and One-Eyed Jacks. Again he adapted to a changing Hollywood; he produced many beautiful color motion pictures.

The quality of Lang’s work was recognized by his peers. He was among the most honored of Hollywood’s cameramen. He won his first Academy Award for cinematography in 1933 with A Farewell to Arms, and was nominated no less than 16 times for films which included The Right to Love; Arise, My Love; So Proudly We Hail; The Ghost and Mrs. Muir; A Foreign Affair; Sudden Fear; and Some Like It Hot.

As part of the Hollywood system from 1922 to 1973, Lang worked on many a mediocre film. But his name on the credits of any film usually guaranteed an interesting visual effort. His greatest work created a complexity of visual delight that students of film will continue to appreciate far off into the future. This is especially true for his work with the directors Billy Wilder and Fritz Lang.

—Douglas Gomery

LANSING, Sherry

[Image of Sherry Lansing]
Address: c/o Paramount Pictures Corp., 5555 Melrose Avenue, Los Angeles, California 90038–3197 U.S.A.

Films as Producer/Co-Producer/Co-Executive Producer:

1984 Firstborn (Apted); Racing with the Moon (Benjamin)
1987 Fatal Attraction (Lyne); When the Time Comes (Ermann—for TV)
1988 The Accused (Kaplan)
1989 Black Rain (Scott)
1992 School Ties (Mandel)
1993 Indecent Proposal (Lyne)

Other Films:

1970 Loving (Kershner) (ro); Rio Lobo (Hawks) (ro)

Publications

By LANSING: articles—

“‘Actress’ Life Is a Bore; Lansing Now MGM V.P.,” interview in Variety (New York), 13 April 1977.

On LANSING: articles—

“Sherry Lansing Takes Post as Col. Production V-P,” in Box Office (Los Angeles), 7 November 1977.

“Chasman and Lansing New Col. Senior V-Ps,” in Box Office (Los Angeles), 21 August 1978.

“Woman First to Reach Studio President’s Rank,” in Box Office (Los Angeles), 7 January 1980.

Current Biography (New York), 1981.

“Lansing, Jaffe Form Own Feature Shop, 5-year Marriage to Par.,” in Variety (New York), 5 January 1983.

* * *

The career of Hollywood producer/executive Sherry Lansing, and her impact on the motion picture industry, is concisely summarized in a series of headlines of news articles chronicling her career:

1977: “Sherry Lansing Takes Post as Col. Production V-P”
1978: “Sherry Lansing Enjoys More Film Corp. Rank than Ever Given Woman”
1979: “Boone Ankles Fox; Lansing Quits Col”
1980: “Sherry Lansing New Prod. Chief at Fox; First Woman to Assume Job”
1982: “Sherry Lansing’s Fox Deal Extended for Indefinite Term”
1982: “Sherry Lansing Resigns as Fox Production Chief”
1983: “Lansing, Jaffe Form Own Feature Shop, 5-year Marriage to Par.”
1987: “Jaffe and Lansing Extend Par Pact.”
1992: “Sherry Lansing Is Named to Head Paramount”

Then there is the 1989 headline that offers insight into Lansing’s Hollywood staying power: “Producer Sherry Lansing: Class Act in a Nasty Business.”

Such headlines not only mirror Lansing’s rise among Hollywood’s power elite, but reflect on the chess-and-checkers nature of employment in the motion picture industry’s upper echelons. In Hollywood, nothing is forever; Monday’s hot story is Wednesday’s old news. One year, you make headlines for signing on at a studio and announcing big plans for future productions. The next year, you have already left (or, in Variety lingo, “anked”) that studio and have resurfaced elsewhere. In this regard, Lansing is no different from any one of a score of studio “suits.” What makes her stand out is her status as the first woman to earn and enjoy the power of a high-level motion picture industry decisionmaker.

Lansing’s career is analogous to that of Jackie Robinson, the Hall of Fame ballplayer who broke the major league baseball color line. Robinson’s signing by Branch Rickey to play for the Brooklyn Dodgers is an event that transcends sports. It is one of a number of occurrences—others include the integration of the American military and Brown vs. Board of Education—which signaled the stirrings of the civil rights movement. Had Robinson not been of exemplary character, and had he not shone on the ballfield, he might have indefinitely set back the cause of his race. Similarly, Lansing’s career path and accomplishments are outgrowths of another 20th-century social movement: late 1960s and early 1970s feminism. Her know-how as a decisionmaker and knack for surviving and thriving in the all-male club of Hollywood executives allowed her to open the door to future female powerbrokers.

Lansing entered the entertainment industry as a model and actress. After playing supporting roles in two films released in 1970—Loving, Irvin Kershner’s suburban-marriage-in-crisis drama, and Rio Lobo, a Howard Hawks-John Wayne Western—she abandoned performing for a career behind the camera. She steadily rose from story editor to production executive to studio president to independent producer to, finally, Paramount Pictures Chair and CEO. As an independent producer, Lansing’s most typical films spotlight contemporary sexual politics and manipulative, incendiary relationships between men and women. Among the characters in her films are a louche man who abuses a women (Firstborn); a psychotic woman who becomes unhinged when she thinks she has been exploited by a man (Fatal Attraction); a woman who is gang-raped, and demands her day in court (The Accused); and a wealthy man who offers a poor couple $1-million to spend one evening in the arms of the wife (Indecent Proposal). Even more significant, however, are the films made under Lansing’s aegis as a studio executive. These range from The China Syndrome and Kramer vs. Kramer, two of the most highly regarded Hollywood films of the late 1970s, produced when Lansing was at Columbia Pictures, through such 1990s Academy Award-winning Paramount Pictures mega-hits as Forrest Gump and Titanic. For years, Lansing regularly has been among the highest-ranking women listed on the various polls of “100 most powerful people in Hollywood.” Given the worldwide popularity of the American motion picture industry, Lansing’s authority is international in scope. In 1996, The Australian magazine ranked her Number 37 on its list of “100 Most Powerful Women in the World.”

—Rob Edelman

LANTZ, Walter

Merry Old Soul, 1933; Special Academy Award, 1978. Died: Of heart failure, in Burbank, California, 22 March 1994.

Films as Director of Animation:

1924 Col. Heezaliar’s Forbidden Fruit; African Jungle; Col. Heezaliar’s Ancestors; Sky Pilot; Col. Heezaliar’s Vacation; Col. Heezaliar’s Knighthood; Horse Play; The Magic Lamp; The Giant Killer; The Pied Piper

1925 Little Red Riding Hood; Lyin’ Tamer; The House That Dinky Built; Cinderella; Peter Pan Handled; Magic Carpet; Robinson Crusoe; Three Bears; Just Spooks; Dinky Doodle in the Circus (Dinky Doodle in the Restaurant)

1926 Dinky Doodle in Lost and Found (Dinky Doodle in Uncle Tom’s Cabin; Dinky Doodle in the Arctic; Dinky Doodle in Egypt; Dinky Doodle in the Wild West; Dinky Doodle and the Little Orphan; Dinky Doodle in the Army); The Pelican’s Bill; Dinky Doodle’s Bed Time Story; Cat’s Whiskers; The Male’s Disposition; The Pig’s Curly Tail; For the Love of Pete; Pete’s Haunted House (Party); The Tail of the Monkey

1927 Dog Gone It; Cat’s Nine Lives; Hyena’s Laugh; Puppy Express; Petering Out; S’matter, Pete?; Lunch Hound; Jingle Bells

1929 Ozzie of the Circus; Stage Stunt; Stripes and Stars; Wicked West; Nuts and Jolts; Ice Man’s Luck; Wear Willies; Jungle Jingles; Saucy Sausages; Race Riot; Oil’s Well; Permanent Wave; Cold Turkey; Amature Nite; Hurdyurdy; Nutty Notes

1930 Chile con Carmen; Kisses and Kurses; Broadway Folly; Bowery Bimbos; Bowling Bimbos; Tramping Tramps; The Hash Shop; The Prison Panic; Hot for Hollywood; Hell’s Heels; My Pal Paul; Not So Quiet; Spooks; Hen Fruit; Cold Feet; Snappy Salesman; The Singing Sap; The Detective; The Fowl Ball; The Navy; Mexico; Africa; Alaska; Mars

1931 China; College; Shipwrecked; The Farmer; The Fireman; Sunny South; The Country School; The Band Master; North Woods; The Stone Age; Radio Rhythm; Kentucky Bells; Hot Feet; The Hunter; Wonderland; The Hare Mail; The Fisherman; The Clown

1932 Mechanical Man; Grandma’s Pet; Wins Out; Beau and Arrows; Making Good; Let’s Eat; The Winged Horse; To the Rescue; Cat Nipped; A Wet Knight; A Jungle Jumble; Day Nurse; The Athlete; The Busy Barber; The Butcher Boy; Carnival Capers; The Crowded Snores; The Underdog; Wild and Woolly; Cats and Dogs; The Teacher’s Pests

1933 Merry Dog; The Plumber; The Terrible Troubadour; The Shriek; The Lumber Chumps; Going to Blazes; Beau Beste; Nature’s Workshop; Ham and Eggs; Pin Feathers; Confidence; Hot and Cold; King Klunk; Five and Dime; They Done Him Right; The Zoo; The Merry Old Soul; Parking Space

1934 Chicken Reel; The Candy House; The Country Fair; The Toy Shopper; Wolf! Wolf!; The Ginger Bread Boy; Annie Moved Away; Goldielocks and the Three Bears; The Wax Works; William Tell; Chris Columbus, Jr.; The Dizzy Dwarf; Ye Happy Pilgrims; Jolly Little Elves; The Sky Larks; Spring in the Park; Toyland Premiere

1935 Robinson Crusoe Isle; The Hillbilly; Two Little Lambs; Do a Good Deed; Candy Lamb; Elmer the Great Dane; Springtime Serenade; Towne Hall Follies; At Your Service; Three Lazy Mice; Bronco Buster; Amateur Broadcast; The Quail Hunt; The Fox and the Rabbit; Monkey Wrenches; The Case of the Lost Sheep; Doctor Oswald

1936 Soft Ball Game; Alaska Sweepstakes; Slumberland Express; Beauty Shoppe; Barnyard Five; Fun House; Farming Fools; Battle Royal; Music Hall Charms; Kiddie Review; Beach Combers; Night Life of the Bugs; The Puppet Show; Unpopular Mechanic; Turkey Dinner; Gopher Trouble; Knights for a Day

1937 The Golfers; House of Magic; Everybody Sings; The Big Race; Duck Hunt; Lumber Camp; The Birthday Party; Steel Workers; Trailer Thrills; The Stevedores; The Wily Weasel; Countr y Store; The Playful Pup; Fireman’s Picnic; Rest Resort; Ostrich Feathers; Air Express; Lovesick; The Keeper of the Lions; The Mechanical Handy Man; Football Fever; The Mysterious Jug; The Dumb Cluck

1938 Yokel Boy Makes Good

1940 Crazy House; Knock, Knock; Syncopated Sioux

1941 Fair Today; Scrub Me Mama with a Boogie Beat; Hysterical High Spots in American History; Dizzy Kitty; Salt Water Daffy; Woody Woodpecker; The Screwdriver; The Boogie Woogie Bugle Boy of Company B; Man’s Best Friend; Pantry Panic; $21.00 a Day Once a Month

1942 Hollywood Matador; The Hams That Couldn’t Be Cured; Mother Goose on the Loose; Goodbye Mr. Moh

1951 Wicket Wacky; Slingshot 67/8; Redwood Sap; Woody Woodpecker Polka; Destination Meatball

1952 Born to Peck; Stage Hoax; Woodpecker in the Rough; Scalp Treatment; The Great Who Dood It

1960 Bats in the Belfry (+ pt); Coca Cola Cartoons

1989 Poet and Peasant

Publications

By LANTZ: articles—

“Let’s Try Animation,” in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), September 1934.
Griffithiana (Gemona, Italy), December 1986.

“Woodpeckers, Rabbits and Pandas—Oh My!” an interview with Frank Cali, in Outré (Evanston), no. 6, 1996.

On LANTZ: book—

On LANTZ: articles—

Films and Filming (London), April 1971.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), Fall 1971.
Although his obituary in Variety called him one of the most successful and durable animation producers of all time, “Nice guys finish last” can truly be said about Walter Lantz. Lantz was the last major producer of theatrical cartoon shorts, closing shop in 1973 after 45 years in the business. Because of his pleasant personality Lantz never raided other cartoon studios for talent. And yet some of the biggest names in the business had worked for him. Tex Avery, Jack Hannah, and Hugh Harman were just three of the talents who had entered his studio over the years. Lantz was a sound businessman and produced cartoons on a budget, though he didn’t skimp on his cartoon production.

Lantz began his career as an animator, and got his big break at Universal Studios where he took over the Walt Disney creation of Oswald the Lucky Rabbit. He made history when he and his partner Bill Nolan completed the first Technicolor cartoon. The five-minute opening sequence of Universal’s multimillion dollar musical The King of Jazz was a jaunty musical number featuring Whiteman vocalist Bing Crosby. In 1935 Lantz went on to become an independent producer giving distribution rights to Universal. He was still using the character of Oswald the Rabbit, but realized that if his studio were to succeed he needed to introduce new characters. After a series of unsuccessful character creations, Lantz tried looking for animals that had never been used in cartoons before. One of Lantz’s studio personnel, Alex Lovy, had come up with Andy Panda, who was to become one of Lantz’s most successful characters. At first Andy starred with his thick-witted, lumbering father whom Andy always managed to get into trouble. As the series progressed Andy grew older, and the father/son story lines were dropped. In 1940 Ben “Bugs” Hardaway joined the studios. Hardaway had recently left Warner Bros. where he created such superstar notables as Daffy Duck and Bugs Bunny. His goal was to create a similar character for Lantz. He decided that the father/son pandas would provide the perfect introduction to Woody Woodpecker. Woody made his debut in Knock, Knock as a rascallion woodpecker. Andy and Pop make every effort to get rid of the annoying woodpecker, but like Daffy and Bugs he outsmarts them, at every turn getting the better of the situation. It was in this cartoon that Woody’s infamous laugh—“ha-ha-ha-HA-ha”—was heard for the first time. Initially Woody was a rather ugly, grotesque-looking character. Over the years that changed as Woody became more likeable and easygoing. But in those early years Woody was an extremely daffy lunatic. He was unlike other Lantz characters in almost every way, often violent and excessively active. Lantz directed most of the early Woody films in an almost frenetic pace. They can easily be differentiated from the evenly paced work of Alex Lovy, Lovy left the studio in 1942 and Lantz had to find someone to take his place. That person was James “Shamus” Culhane. He took on the Woody Woodpecker character and continued in the frantic manner of Lantz with his first Woody cartoon, The Barber of Seville. Culhane continued directing Woody Woodpecker cartoons with a similar brand of violent humor usually found in Tex Avery cartoons.

After the Second World War, Lantz and his studio went through some rather hard times and he had to close down for over a year. When he finally reopened, he had to be more cost-conscious than ever. To save money, Lantz went back to directing, produced only Woody Woodpecker cartoons, and hired his wife to become the voice of Woody Woodpecker. After producing several cartoons in 1951–52, Lantz was once again able to expand his operation and increase cartoon production. In 1954 Tex Avery returned to the Lantz studios and provided a needed shot in the arm. Despite the poor quality of animation, Avery’s first cartoon for Lantz, Crazy Mixed-Up Pup was nominated for an Academy Award. Avery went on to feature a new character originally created by Alex Lovy, Chilly Willy, a penguin who desired nothing more than a warm climate. In The Legend of Rockabye Point Avery earned another Academy Award nomination.

In 1957 Lantz began to eye television as a possible outlet for his cartoons. Jack Hannah joined the studio and began working on The Woody Woodpecker Show, which combined previous theatrical releases with newly animated sequences and live-action shots featuring Lantz himself. Woody would introduce him by saying, “Here’s my boss, Walter Lantz.” This segment of the show explained the process of how cartoons are created, first for television and cartoon animation. These early television programs helped Lantz to continue producing cartoons for theatrical release, although higher costs reduced the amount of animation—fewer cells per second. Chilly Willy and Woody Woodpecker remained his most popular cartoons. They lasted until Lantz retired, unable to recoup production costs quickly.

In 1979 the Motion Picture Academy honored Lantz and his contribution to the field of animation. Lantz responded by having Woody Woodpecker accept the award with him. Lantz may not be as revered as Disney but he produced satisfying cartoons, provided the world with one of the most interesting characters in Woody Woodpecker, and remained a most dedicated cartoon animator. If anyone truly loved his craft, it was Walter Lantz.

—Maryann Oshana, updated by Denise Delorey

LARDNER, Ring Jr.

499
Ring Lardner, Jr.

and used pseudonyms Oliver Skeyne and Philip Rush (credited as Ring Lardner only after 1965); 1964—co-author of the musical play Foxy. Awards: Academy Award, for Woman of the Year, 1942; Academy Award and Writers Guild Award, for *M*A*S*H,* 1970. Agent: Jim Preminger Agency, Los Angeles, California, U.S.A.

Films as Writer:

- 1940 Meet Dr. Christian (Vorhaus); The Courageous Dr. Christian (Vorhaus)
- 1941 Arkansas Judge (False Witness) (McDonald) (co)
- 1942 Woman of the Year (Stevens)
- 1943 The Cross of Lorraine (Garnett)
- 1944 Tomorrow the World (Fenton); Laura (Preminger) (uncredited)
- 1946 Cloak and Dagger (F. Lang); Brotherhood of Man (Cannon—short)
- 1947 Forever Amber (Preminger)
- 1948 The Forbidden Street (Britannia Mews) (Negulesco); Four Days Leave (Swiss Tour) (Lindberg) (co)
- 1950 The Hollywood Ten (Berry—short)
- 1951 The Big Night (Losey)
- 1958 Virgin Island (Jackson); A Breath of Scandal (Curtiz) (co)
- 1965 The Cincinnati Kid (Jewison)
- 1971 La mortadella (Lady Liberty) (Monicelli) (co)
- 1977 The Greatest (Gries)
- 1978 Semi-Tough (uncredited)

Film as Actor:

- 1988 My Name Is Bertolt Brecht—Exile in U.S.A. (Bunge)

Publications

By LARDNER: books—

By LARDNER: articles—

- Film Comment (New York), September/October 1988.

On LARDNER: articles—

* * *

Ring Lardner, Jr., had a spotty career as a writer for films. Richard Corliss described it as perhaps the most frustrating of any major screenwriter in Hollywood. He began his film work at Selznick International Pictures in 1936, where he wrote the ending of A Star Is Born with Budd Schulberg and married Selznick’s secretary Silvia Schulman. He soon moved to Warner Bros., however, because of the lack of other opportunities with Selznick. But here, too, he failed to establish himself as a screenwriter of notice, and in the fall of 1938 he moved again, this time to RKO where he finally received his first screen credits in 1940 for two run-of-the-mill film adaptations of Jean Hersholt’s Dr. Christian radio series.

Lardner’s big break finally came when, before being inducted into the army, Garson Kanin, who had been directing at RKO, turned over an idea for a Katharine Hepburn film to his brother, Michael, and Lardner. The two young screenwriters did a 90-page treatment for a film, later to be titled Woman of the Year, and sent it to Hepburn. She directed it to Louis B. Mayer and negotiated a contract for them. The movie became the first of the nine Tracy–Hepburn films and garnered an Academy Award for best screenplay. It proved to be the first of a run of successes for Lardner during the 1940s, including Tay Garnett’s The Cross of Lorraine, Fritz Lang’s Cloak and Dagger, Otto Preminger’s Forever Amber, and Jean Negulesco’s Forbidden Street.

But in 1947 Lardner’s career was suddenly halted when he was blacklisted for his leftist political activities. Until 1963, Lardner was reduced to writing anonymously for British and American television dramas with an occasional unsigned film script. He would later say of this time that it probably did him some good to be removed from the temptations of writing for the screen and southern California. During his years on the blacklist, Lardner wrote a novel, The Ecstasy of Owen Muir (1954). Nonetheless, his movie career was spectacularly resurrected in 1970 when he won both an Academy Award and the Writers Guild Award for his screenplay for Robert Altman’s M*A*S*H. But since that triumph Lardner has spent less time working on screenplays and more time on fiction and journalism.

Lardner and Kanin’s Woman of the Year proved the ideal Hepburn vehicle because it deals with sex roles and the difficulty of keeping private and professional lives separate. Tracy’s maleness and Hepburn’s femininity are both so assured that the reversal of roles is accomplished within the film as the two newspaper employees, a sports-writer and political correspondent, are able to put together a far-from-conventional marriage. Although the film finally comes down on the side of convention and Sam Craig (Tracy), it is clear that Tess Harding (Hepburn) will remain an independent woman, but one who can manage both career and home.

The screen work Lardner did between winning his Academy Award and his blacklisting reflected his leftist activities, which had begun as early as 1937 when he attended a Marxist study group with Budd and Virginia Schulberg. Lardner spent the middle 1940s scripting a number of politically committed films. After doing some uncredited rewriting on Otto Preminger’s Laura and Robert Z. Leonard’s Marriage Is a Private Affair, Lardner wrote The Cross of Lorraine which dealt with French capitulation to the Nazis but ended with a restatement of a commitment to fight for a free France, and Tomorrow the World, which was adapted from a Broadway play and traces the activities of a German youth who was brought to the Midwest by his father’s brother after his parents perish in a concentration camp. The boy believes fervently in the Nazi cause and tries to spread anti-Semitism and steal war documents from his uncle. Finally, Lardner worked with Fritz Lang on a melodramatic spy film about the character of a German youth who was brought to the Midwest by his father’s brother after his parents perish in a concentration camp. The boy believes fervently in the Nazi cause and tries to spread anti-Semitism and steal war documents from his uncle. Finally, Lardner worked with Fritz Lang on a melodramatic spy film about the OSS called Cloak and Dagger. Although the scripts for these films are far from distinguished, they do reflect Lardner’s political leanings.

Lardner’s last two films before his blacklisting were for Otto Preminger at Twentieth Century-Fox, and were both costume dramas. First, he was hired to work on Michael Dunn’s script for Forever Amber and then to adapt Margery Sharp’s Britannia Mews into the film The Forbidden Street, another melodrama depicting the clash between classes brought on by marriage between the upper and lower orders.

Summoned before the House Un-American Activities Committee (HUAC) in 1947, Lardner was questioned about his political values and uttered his famous retort that he could answer but that he would hate himself in the morning. He was jailed for contempt of Congress for his silent resistance and for refusing to name names and served nine months of a one-year sentence at the Federal Corrections Institution in Danbury, Connecticut. For the next ten years Lardner wrote uncredited material for television and the movies, often abroad, including work on Joseph Losey’s The Big Night (1951). In 1963 Sam Peckinpah hired Lardner to adapt Richard Jessup’s novel The Cincinnati Kid for the screen. Although both Peckinpah and Lardner were eventually fired from the project—Norman Jewison subsequently directed the film and Terry Southern rewrote it—Lardner was credited for the script when the movie was released in 1965, thereby breaking his long exile from the movies.

Lardner received his second Academy Award and revived his career as a screenwriter with his work on M*A*S*H, directed by Robert Altman. The script was only partially based on the novel by a former Army surgeon writing under the pseudonym of Richard Hooker. The film has been widely criticized for its violence and antifeminist tone, especially in handling the major female character, “Hot Lips” Houlihan. Much has also been made of the film’s antiwar message delivered via the violence and sadism of the central characters. The film’s message seemed to say the only way to remain sane during wartime is to go insane. The film and its attitude towards its characters and the war continue to create controversy, but it restored Lardner to a position of eminence in the film world. Nevertheless, it was a position which failed to inspire him to throw himself exclusively back into script writing.

Lardner’s career in the movies has been described as one of the most frustrating of any of the major screenwriting talents which came out of the Hollywood system. So, perhaps, it is understandable that in spite of his acclaimed fame he would remain leery of an industry which shut him out so completely during the years of his blacklisting. Now, although he still works on movie projects, he also continues to devote time to television and journalism as well.

—Charles L. P. Silet

LA SHELLE, Joseph

Cinematographer and cameraman. Nationality: American. Born: Los Angeles, California, 1905 (some sources say 1900); sometimes credited as Joseph W. La Shelle. Education: Trained as electrical engineer. Career: 1923—joined Lasky Studios as laboratory assistant, then superintendent of printing room at Paramount, and assistant cameraman: assistant to Charles G. Clarke in late 1920s, and to Arthur Miller at Pathé and Fox during 1930s; 1943—first film as cinematographer, Happy Land. Award: Academy Award for Laura, 1944. Died: In San Diego, California, 20 August 1989.

Films as Cinematographer:

1926 Rocking Moon (Melford); Whispering Smith (Melford); The Flame of the Yukon (Melford)
1929 The Pagan (Van Dyke)
1931 The Painted Desert (Higgin)
1934 The White Parade (Cummings)
1935 The Little Colonel (Butler); It’s a Small World (Cummings)
1938 The Baroness and the Butler (W. Lang)
1940 Brigham Young—Frontiersman (Hathaway)
1941 Tobacco Road (Ford); How Green Was My Valley (Ford)
1943 The Song of Bernadette (H. King)

Films as Cinematographer:

1943 Happy Land (Pichel)
1944 Bermuda Mystery (Stoloff); The Eve of St. Mark (Stahl); Take It or Leave It (Stoloff); Laura (Preminger)
1945 Hangover Square (Brahm); A Bell for Adano (H. King); Fallen Angel (Preminger)
1946 Doll Face (Come Back to Me) (Seiler); Cluny Brown (Lubitsch); Claudia and David (W. Lang)
1947 The Late George Apley (Mankiewicz); The Foxes of Harrow (Stahl)
1948 Deep Waters (H. King); The Luck of the Irish (Koster); Road House (Negulesco)
1949 The Fan (Lady Windermere’s Fan) (Preminger); Come to the Stable (Koster); Everybody Does It (Goulding)
1950 Mother Didn’t Tell Me (Binyon); Under My Skin (Negulesco); Where the Sidewalk Ends (Preminger); Mr. 880 (Goulding); The Jackpot (W. Lang)
1951 The Guy Who Came Back (Newman); The Thirteenth Letter (Preminger); Mr. Belvedere Rings the Bell (Koster) (co); Elopression (Koster)
1952 The Outcasts of Poker Flat (Newman); Les Miserables (Milestone); My Cousin Rachel (Koster); Something for the Birds (Hollywood), February 1953.
1953 Dangerous Crossing (Newman); Mister Scoutmaster (Levin)
1954 Tournament of Roses (O. Lang—short); River of No Return (Preminger); The First Piano Quartet (O. Lang—short); Movie Stunt Pilot (O. Lang—short); Piano Encores (O. Lang—short); Jet Carrier (O. Lang—short); Marty (Delbert Mann)
1955 Storm Fear (Wilde); The Conqueror (Powell) (co)
1956 Our Miss Brooks (Lewis); Run for the Sun (R. Boulting); Crime of Passion (Oswald); Fury at Showdown (Oswald); The Bachelor Party (Delbert Mann)
1957 I Was a Teenage Werewolf (Fowler); The Fuzzy Pink Nightgown (Taurog); The Abductors (Malglen); No Down Payment (Ritt)
1958 The Long Hot Summer (Ritt); The Naked and the Dead (Walsh)
1959 Career (Anthony)
1960 The Apartment (Wilder); All in a Night’s Work (Anthony)
1961 The Honeymoon Machine (Thorpe); The Outsider (Delbert Mann)
1962 A Child Is Waiting (Cassavetes); How the West Was Won (Hathaway, Marshall, and Ford) (co)
1963 Irma La Douce (Wilder); Wild and Wonderful (Anderson)
1964 Kiss Me, Stupid (Wilder)
1965 Seven Women (Ford); The Chase (Penn)
1966 The Fortune Cookie (Meet Whiplash Willie) (Wilder)
1967 Barefoot in the Park (Saks); Kona Coast (Johnson)
1969 U.M.C. (Operation Heartbeat) (Sagal); 80 Steps to Jonah (Oswald)

During a long career extending from 1924 through 1969, Joseph La Shelle earned a reputation as one of Hollywood’s foremost practitioners of stylistic and literate cinematography through his work on such milestones as Laura, My Cousin Rachel, The Naked and the Dead, and The Apartment. In particular, he excelled at the difficult art of successfully transferring works initially conceived for other media to the screen by experimenting with angles and lighting to imbue them with a fresh perspective.

In Laura, which was taken from the stage, he overcame a script that called for no exterior shots other than one or two designed exclusively for studio sets. Through sheer artistry, he managed to convey a world of café society, expensive restaurants, and ornate Park Avenue apartments with few viewers noticing the absence of city streets and country parks. For this achievement, he received an Academy Award. However, his achievement is equally apparent on such other adaptations from the stage as The Long Hot Summer and Barefoot in the Park.

La Shelle started in films as a lab assistant in 1923 following his graduation from high school. He worked his way up to become head of the film laboratory at Lasky’s by 1925 but deserted it for a job behind the camera a year later. After a variety of photographic assignments at the Metropolitan Studios and at the Cecil B. DeMille lot, he became a camera operator for the prominent cinematographer Arthur Miller, a position he held until 1943. During this period he achieved particular recognition for his work on John Ford’s How Green Was My Valley and Henry King’s The Song of Bernadette. After the latter film, he graduated to the rank of cinematographer and won the Academy Award for Laura a year later.

During a distinguished career, he was recognized as being equally adept in both black-and-white and color cinematography and was similarly “at home” with intimate comedy-dramas (The Apartment) or sprawling outdoor panoramas (How the West Was Won). He received 15 Academy Award nominations, making him one of the most critically acclaimed artists, regardless of category, in motion picture history.

—Stephen L. Hanson

LASKY, Jesse L.
Producer. Nationality: American. Born: Jesse Louis Lasky in San Jose, California, 13 September 1880. Education: Attended San Jose High School. Family: Married Bessie Ginsberg, 1909; sons: the writer Jesse L. Lasky, Jr., and William Raymond; daughter: Bessie Dorothy. Career: 1897–98—reporter, San Francisco Post; 1898–1900—cornetist in San Francisco theatre; 1900—joined Alaska gold rush, then cornet player in Honolulu; for the next 10 years in duo act with his sister Blanche in vaudeville, and promoter and impresario; produced Cecil B. DeMille’s operetta California, 1912; 1913—cofounder, with Samuel Goldfish (later Goldwyn; his brother-in-law) and DeMille, Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company: served as president: first film, the feature-length The Squaw Man, was big hit; 1916—merged with Adolph Zukor’s Famous Players to form Famous

Publications

By LA SHELLE: article—

On LA SHELLE: articles—

Film Comment (New York), Summer 1972.
Kimble, G., on How the West Was Won in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), October 1983.
Film Dope (Nottingham), November 1985.
Players-Lasky, eventually Paramount; 1932—ousted from his executive post, and became independent producer, for Fox, Warner Bros., and RKO; 1935—formed short-lived partnership with Mary Pickford, Pickford-Lasky Company; 1938–40—produced radio talent show Gateway to Hollywood; 1945—formed Jesse L. Lasky Productions; mid-1950s—returned to Paramount, but died before first production was begun. Died: In Beverly Hills, California, 13 January 1958.

Publications

By LASKY: book—

By LASKY: articles—

“‘Hearing Things in the Dark,’” in Collier’s (New York), 25 May 1929.

On LASKY: articles—

National Film Theatre booklet (London), September 1980.

Higashi, S., “Cecil B. DeMille and the Lasky Company,’” in Film & History, no. 4, 1990.

Berg, A. Scott. “‘Jesse Lasky,’” in Architectural Digest (Los Angeles), April 1996.

* * *

Jesse L. Lasky, along with Cecil B. DeMille and Samuel Goldwyn, was literally one of the three founding fathers of Hollywood. In the words of his son, Jesse, Jr., he was “‘a gentle man who was more interested in the creative than the commercial aspect of film.’” As first president of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, then first vice-president in charge of production of Famous Players-Lasky (the precursor of Paramount), Lasky was one of the movies’ preeminent moguls. His roller-coaster success story is synonymous with the history of Hollywood.

His first upstart company purchased the rights to Edwin Milton Royle’s play, The Squaw Man for $15,000 and hired the Broadway matinee idol Dustin Farnum to star. Rather than film the picture in nearby Fort Lee, New Jersey, they opted for the authenticity of the real west, and sent DeMille, Farnum, and the crew to Flagstaff, Arizona, because it sounded at once authentic and romantic. Upon arrival in Flagstaff, the green New Yorkers found the town in the midst of a cattlemen-sheepmen war. They traveled further west where DeMille shot off the following wire to Lasky: “Flagstaff no good for our purpose. Have proceeded to Hollywood. Want authority to rent barn in place called Hollywood for seventy-five dollars a month. Regards to Sam. Cecil.” And so in January 1914 the motion picture industry arrived in Hollywood with “‘one barn, one truck and one camera.’”

The Squaw Man, the first large-scale western, was a huge success, and the company moved its business west where Lasky prided himself in attracting writers to his company because he believed “‘the play was the thing.’” Economical vicissitudes forced the company to merge with Adolph Zukor’s Famous Players in 1915. Famous Players-Lasky had Zukor as president, Lasky as first vice-president in

Films as Producer (Selected List):

1923 The Covered Wagon (Cruze)
1927 Underworld (Von Sternberg)
1933 Berkeley Square (Lloyd); The Power and the Glory (Howard); Zoo in Budapest (Lee)
1934 As Husbands Go (MacFadden); Grand Canary (Cummings); Springtime for Henry (Tuttle); Coming Out Party (Blystone); The White Parade (Cummings); I Am Suzanne (Lee)
1935 Here’s to Romance (Green); Helldorado (Cruze); Redheads on Parade (McLeod); The Gay Deception (Wyler)
1936 One Rainy Afternoon (Lee); The Gay Desperado (Mamoulian)
1937 Music for Madame (Blystone); Hitting a New High (Walsh)
1941 Sergeant York (Hawks)
1944 The Adventures of Mark Twain (Rapper)
1945 Rhapsody in Blue (Rapper)
1946 Without Reservations (LeRoy)
1948 The Miracle of the Bells (Pichel)
charge of production, Goldwyn as chairman, and DeMille as director-general. Zukor believed in stars and that is the direction the new company pursued. Subsequent mergers eventually resulted in the creation of the Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation (1917) and the Paramount Publix Corporation (1930). These mergers helped Lasky amass a $12 million fortune and have his name listed as “presenter” of over 350 films. This prolific period saw Paramount present such talent as Valentino, Lubitsch, von Sternberg, Dietrich, Pickford, and Chevalier.

However, gradually it was Zukor’s name as presenter, and in 1932 the Depression brought what Lasky, Jr., describes as “a revolution of power” in which the senior Lasky was ousted by the obvious machinations of his personal assistant, “a ruthless little bastard named Manny Cohen.” Lasky suffered bankruptcy but managed to organize J.L. Lasky Productions via a distribution deal with Fox. These independent productions included Zoo in Budapest and Berkeley Square. In 1935, he created Pickford-Lasky Productions with Mary Pickford and supervised One Rainy Afternoon and The Gay Desperado. He joined RKO in 1937 and produced a radio show called Gateway to Hollywood, then moved over to Warners producing such films as Sergeant York, The Adventures of Mark Twain, and Rhapsody in Blue. The amiable and well-liked Lasky was never able to regain the prominent position he had once held. Heavily in debt to the IRS, he was in the midst of production plans with Goldwyn and DeMille for a film called The Big Brass Band when he died in 1958.

His son says, “When the success and fortune go, many people have nothing to turn to except suicide. Curiously, my father turned to metaphysical philosophy. I think he must have learned about it from my mother most likely by osmosis. She was attuned to that kind of sensitivity while he never appeared to be so.”

—Ronald Bowers

LASSALLY, Walter

Films as Cinematographer:

(shorts)

1950 Every Five Minutes (M. Anderson)
1951 From Plan into Action (Alexander) (co); Forward a Century (Napier-Bell) (co)
1952 Festival (York); At Whose Door? (Napier-Bell); We Who Are Young (Simmons); The Pleasure Garden (Broughton); Three Installations (L. Anderson); Wakefield Express (L. Anderson)
1953 Power Signal Lineman (M. Anderson); High Speed; Sunday by the Sea (Simmons); One Great Vision (Simmons); Thursday’s Children (L. Anderson and Brenton)

1954 Bow Bells (Simmons); Friend of the Family (Thomson)
1955 Green and Pleasant Land (L. Anderson); Henry (L. Anderson); Continuous Observation (Thomson); The Children Upstairs (L. Anderson); A Hundred Thousand Children (L. Anderson); Foot and Mouth (L. Anderson)
1956 Together (Mazzetti) (co); The Brighton Story (Wilcox); The Gentle Corsican (Simmons); Momma Don’t Allow (Reisz and Richardson); Return from the Sun (Casparius); Simon (Zadek); The Simpson and Godlee Story (Casparius); Children’s Corner (Day Nursing) (+ ed, co-d with Nadelmann)
1957 Every Day Except Christmas (L. Anderson); A River Speaks (Casparius); Ten Bridges (Luke); George Bernard Shaw (Shaw-Ashton); A Sculptor’s Landscape (Read)
1958 Blue Peter (Fernhout); A.B.C. (Aruba, Bonaire, Curazao) (Fernhout); Alone with the Monsters (Nour); A Song for Prince Charlie (O’Leary)
1959 Refuge England (Vas); Enquiry into General Practice (Dickson)
1960 Midsummer Music (Swift)
1961 Let My People Go (Krish); Why Bri? (Napier-Bell) (co); London University (Napier-Bell) (co)
1964 The Peaches (Gill); Lila (Raggett) (co); Dublin through Different Eyes (Carr)
1965 Mao le veut; Dan (+ pr, co-d with Campbell); The Greeks (+ pr, co-d with Campbell)
1967 Labyrinth (Kroiter, Low, and O’Connor)
1970 Henry Moore at the Tate Gallery (+ co-d with Sylvester)
1971 Can Horses Sing? (Sussex); Bilocation (Within Hail) (Cornu); Paris Restaurants (Sher)
1974 Carved in Ivory (Gill); W.S.P. (J. Anderson)
1976 Ernst Fuchs ( Jasny)

(features)

1954 The Passing Stranger (Arnold)
1955 To koritsi me ta mavra (A Girl in Black) (Cacoyannis); Another Sky (Lambert)
1957 To telefato pseuma (A Matter of Dignity) (Cacoyannis)
1958 We Are the Lambeth Boys (Reisz); Jago hua savera (Day Shall Dawn) (Kardar) (co)
1959 As Dark as the Night (Young)
1960 Beat Girl (Wild for Kicks) (Greville); Maddalena (Dimopoulos); Erotica (Our Last Spring) (Cacoyannis); Aliki sto nafitko (Aliki in the Navy) (Sakellarios)
1961 Electra (Cacoyannis); I Liza kai i alli (Liza and Her Double) (Dimopoulos); A Taste of Honey (Richardson)
1962 The Loneliness of the Long Distance Runner (Richardson)
1963 Tom Jones (Richardson)
1964 Psyche 63 (Singer); Zorba the Greek (Cacoyannis)
1966 Assignment Skybolt (Tallas)
1967 The Day the Fish Came Out (Cacoyannis); Oedipus the King (Saville)
1968 The Adding Machine (Epstein); Joanna (Sarne); Three into Two Won’t Go (Hall); Anichiti epistoli (Open Letter) (Stambolopoulos); Olimpiada en Mexico (The Olympics in Mexico) (Isaac); Battleship Potemkin Survivor (Montaldi—for TV)
1969 Twinky (Lola) (Donner)
1970 Something for Everyone (Black Flowers for the Bride) (Prince)
1971 To Kill a Clown (Bloombloom)
1972 Adventures of a Brown Man in Search of Civilisation (Ivory); Savages (Ivory); Gun before Butter (Zadek)
1973 “The Highest” ep. of Visions of Eight (Penn); Happy Mother’s Day . . . Love George (McGavin); The Seaweed Children (Malachi’s Cove) (Herbert)
1974 The Wild Party (Ivory); Après le vent des sables (The Web) (Zaccai); Henry Cotton: This Game of Golf (Raeburn); The World of Sam Smith (Zetterling)
1975 Autobiography of a Princess (Ivory); Ansichten eines Clowns (The Clown) (Jasny); Requiem for a Village (Gladwell) (co); In the Beginning (Gill)
1976 Pleasantville (Locker and Polon); Fluchtversuch (Ivo) (Jasny)
1977 Shenanigans (The Great Georgia Bank Hoax; The Great Bank Hoax) (Jacoby); Morgensterne; The Blood of Hussain (Dehlavi)
1978 Hullabaloo over Georgie and Bonnie’s Pictures (Ivory); Too Far to Go (Cook); Die Frau gegenüber (The Woman across the Way) (Noever)
1979 Something Short of Paradise (Helpern)
1980 The Pilot (Richardson); Der Preis fürs Überleben (The Price of Survival) (Noever); Life on the Mississippi (Hunt); Gauguin the Savage (Cook)
1981 Memoirs of a Survivor (Gladwell); Engel aus Eisen (The Iron Angel) (Brasch); The Private History of a Campaign that Failed (Hunt); The Mysterious Stranger (Hunt)
1982 Heat and Dust (Ivory); Tuxedo Warrior (Sinclair); Mystery at Fire Island (Fuest)
1983 Private School (Black); The Case of Marcel Duchamp (Rowan); Pudd’nhead Wilson (Bridges)
1984 The Bostonians (Ivory); Children in the Crossfire (Schaefer) (co); The Bengal Lancers (Weeks)
1985 Adventures of Huckleberry Finn (Hunt); Stone Pillow (Schaefer—for TV); Mrs. Delafield Wants to Marry (Schaefer—for TV)
1987 Indian Summer (Forder)
1988 The Perfect Murder (Hai); The Deceivers (Meyer)
1989 Fragments of Isabella (O’ Leary); Kamilla og tyven II
1991 The Ballad of the Sad Café (Callow)
1992 The Man Upstairs (Schaefer—for TV)
Other Films:

1946  Smith, Our Friend (co-d with York—short, + co-pr)
1947  Dancing with Crime (Carstairs—short) (asst ph); This Was a Woman (Whelan—short) (asst ph)
1948  What’s in a Number (Krish—short) (asst ph); Things Happen at Night (Searle—short) (asst ph)
1950  Night and the City (Dassin—short) (asst ph)
1953  House of Blackmail (Elvey) (asst ed)

Publications

By LASSALLY: book—

By LASSALLY: articles—

“Subjective Cinema: An Analysis of the MGM Film Lady in the Lake,” in Film Industry, April 1947.

Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1956.

Film (London), no. 37, 1963.

Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1965.

Film (London), no. 51, Spring 1968.

Journal of the University Film Association (Carbondale, Illinois), vol. 26, no. 4, 1974.

American Cinematographer (Hollywood), February 1975.

Deutsche Kameramann (Munich), April/May 1976.

Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1980.

Jeune Cinéma, no. 224, October 1993.

“Of Guilds and Unions and Long Hours,” in Eyepiece (Greenford), vol. 17, no. 1, 1996.

“Call For a New Standard Format,” in Eyepiece (Greenford), vol. 17, no. 2, 1996.

“Desert Island Flicks,” in Eyepiece (Greenford), vol. 17, no. 4, 1996.

On LASSALLY: articles—

Films and Filming (London), December 1954.

On Heat and Dust in Film (London), April/May 1984.

Film Dope (Nottingham), November 1985.

* * *

The evolution of Walter Lassally from clapperboy to lighting cameraman with a world reputation makes a fascinating story. His father was an industrial filmmaker in Berlin and his mother was of Polish origin. Fleeing from the Nazi menace in 1939, his father set up a one-man film unit in London, so film was in Lassally’s blood. Cutting short his science studies, he took up the job of clapperboy in the Riverside studios where he found that theory and practice did not run hand-in-hand. A young man with high ideals, his experience in the film industry fell short of these. When the studio went bankrupt he began freelancing. Around this time (1954), the Sequence magazine group was absorbed into the British Film Institute and there was a ferment of ideas in this quarter where the young Lassally met people such as Lindsay Anderson, Gavin Lambert, and Karel Reisz. It was among this group that the British Free Cinema Movement was born, and Lassally photographed many of their films. They tried to illuminate the life about them and break away from the stereotyped view of the commercial cinema. In 1954 he got his first major lighting camera job on a feature film, Gavin Lambert’s beautiful, if neglected, Another Sky, shot on location in Morocco. The young film buff now chose the more adventurous path of the independent, low-budget film, open to a personal and creative approach. As he said himself: “Atmospheric photography is still one of my criteria when I decide what projects to accept.” It has been for him a gratifying choice as he has worked with such directors as Karel Reisz, Tony Richardson, Lindsay Anderson, Michael Cacoyannis, James Ivory, and Arthur Penn. He has an international awareness of cinema and he deplores the narrow chauvinistic approach of many national film industries.

While his film style is straightforward, he has not hesitated to break the conventions on occasion, as in Tom Jones, directed by Tony Richardson, and in his mixture of color, sepia, and black and white in James Ivory’s Savages. Lassally is especially at home with natural settings, and shot the first British film to be filmed totally on location, A Taste of Honey, also directed by Richardson. Nearly 30 years later, Lassally’s filming of The Perfect Murder, shot on location in Bombay, received critical praise, as did his work on The Ballad of the Sad Café, in which he used filters to create stark Edward Hopper-like lighting effects.

In 1964 he won an Academy Award for his photography of Zorba the Greek directed by Cacoyannis, thereby setting a seal on a career that was further added to by the films he made for James Ivory, including Heat and Dust. Lassally, whose Itinerant Cameraman is an autobiography crammed with technical knowledge and observations about film, is a cinematographer who writes about his craft. His beliefs have led him to work primarily on quality intellectual films and adaptations, rather than on Hollywood blockbuster spectacles.

—Liam O’Leary, updated by Thomas L. Erskine

LASZLO, Ernest

Films as Cinematographer:

1928  The Pace That Kills (Parker); Linda (Mrs. Wallace Reid) (co)
1929  The White Outlaw (Horner); Street Corners (Birdwell)
1930  The Primrose Path (O’Connor) (co)
1944  The Hitter Gang (Farrow)
1946  Two Years Before the Mast (Farrow)
1947  Dear Ruth (Russell); Road to Rio (McLeod); A Miracle Can Happen (K. Vidor and Fenton) (co)
1948  Lulu Belle (Fenton); The Girl from Manhattan (Green); Let’s Live a Little (Wallace); Impact (Lubin)
1949  The Lucky Stiff (Foster); Cover-Up (Green); Manhandled (Foster); The Big Wheel (Ludwig); D.O.A. (Maté)
1950  Riding High (Capra) (co); The Jackie Robinson Story (Green); When I Grow Up (Kanin)
1951  M (Losey); The Well (Popkin and Rouse); Mutiny (Dmytryk)
1952  The First Time (Tashlin); The Trio: Rubenstein, Heifetz, and Piatigorsky (Dassin); Three for Bedroom “C” (Bren); The Lady in the Iron Mask (Murphy); The Star (Walker); Slagag 17 (Wilder); The Steel Trap (Stone)
1953  Scared Stiff (Marshall); The Moon Is Blue (Preminger); Houdini (Marshall); The Naked Jungle (Haskin)
1954  Apache (Aldrich); About Mrs. Leslie (Daniel Mann); Vera Cruz (Aldrich)
1955  Kiss Me Deadly (Aldrich); The Kentuckian (Lancaster); The Big Knife (Aldrich)
1956  While the City Sleeps (F. Lang); Bandido (Fleischer)
1957  Omar Khayyam (The Loves of Omar Khayyam) (Dieterle); Valerie (Oswald); Gansight Hope (Lyon)
1958  Attack of the Puppet People (Six Inches Tall) (Gordon); The Space Children (Gordon); The Restless Years (The Wonderful Years) (Kautner); Ten Seconds to Hell (Aldrich)
1960  Inherit the Wind (Kramer); Tormentor (Gordon)
1961  The Last Sunset (Aldrich); Judgment at Nuremberg (Kramer)
1963  It’s a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World (Kramer); Four for Texas (Aldrich); One Man’s Way (Sanders)
1964  Baby the Rain Must Fall (Mulligan)
1965  Ship of Fools (Kramer)
1966  Fantastic Voyage (Fleischer)
1967  Luv (Donner)
1968  Star (Wise); The First Time (You Don’t Need Pajamas at Rosie’s) (Neilson)
1969  Daddy’s Gone A-Hunting (Robson); Airport (Seaton)
1972  Showdown (Seaton)
1974  That’s Entertainment! (Haley) (co)
1976  Logan’s Run (Anderson); The Domino Principle (The Domino Killings) (Kramer) (co)

Films as Cameraman:

1927  Tongues of Scandal (Clements)
1931  Rich Man’s Folly (Cromwell)
1932  The Miracle Man (McLeod); The Phantom President (Taurig)
1935  The Case of the Curious Bride (Curtiz)
1941  Hold Back the Dawn (Leisen)
1942  The Major and the Minor (Wilder)

Publications

By LASZLO: articles—

“Speaking of Film,” in Business and Home TV Screen (New York), March 1978.

On LASZLO: articles—

Rowan, Arthur, on The Steel Trap in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), November 1952.
On It’s a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), December 1963.
Land, Kevin, on Star in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), March 1969.

Film Comment (New York), Summer 1972.
Film Dope (Nottingham), November 1985.

* * *

A superior craftsman and technician, Ernest Laszlo belonged to a generation of cameramen trained by the master cinematographers of the silent era. He became a director of photography towards the end of the traditional Hollywood studio system, and tended to work with strong directors who brought a new realism to the commercial American cinema. Robert Aldrich, Otto Preminger, Billy Wilder, Fritz Lang, and Stanley Kramer generally functioned as their own bosses, on the set if not in the final edit, and they dealt with reality in their films rather than Hollywood fantasy. Laszlo painted their naturalistic visions on celluloid with dramatic lighting and a detached eye. He possessed an almost Germanic style, influenced in part by the German cinema of the 1920s, and throughout his career was rarely required to shoot romantically pretty pictures.

Like William Clothier and Russel Harlan, Laszlo was an assistant cameraman on William Wellman’s aviation classic Wings, part of an army of cinematographers under the supervision of Harry Perry. Laszlo participated on the aerial photography, and also worked on the celebrated Folies Bergère tracking shot. He was an assistant on another aerial epic, Howard Hughes’s Hell’s Angels, along with such talented cameramen as Edward Snyder, Paul Ivano, and Henry Cronjager, with camera crew again headed by Harry Perry. Laszlo photographed a few low-budget B-movies, and some comedy shorts for Al Christie, then joined Paramount as a camera operator. He operated for cinematographers Karl Struss, David Abel, Charles Lang, and Leo Tover through the 1930s, and was finally promoted to director of photography by the director John Farrow on The Hitler Gang and Two Years Before the Mast. They are dark, brooding, atmospheric films, and earned Laszlo recognition for his mastery of low-key lighting. He introduced a new style of cinematography at Paramount. By eliminating most of the fill light, he achieved a more realistic look instead of the usual soft, glossy Paramount visuals.

Laszlo carried his style over to some of the most memorable films noirs. D.O.A., directed by the former cameraman Rudolph Maté, is a fine example, the seedy underworld perfectly captured by Laszlo’s chiaroscuro lighting and fluid camera. Joseph Losey’s M, a remake of the Fritz Lang classic, was also effectively photographed, following the outline of the original but updated to reflect the paranoia of the early 1950s through dark tones. Manhandled, directed by Lewis Foster, contains a fascinating expressionistic dream sequence that overshadows the mediocre film.

Billy Wilder’s Stalag 17 was treated in a realistic manner, its story of a German prison camp during the Second World War evoked with stark Laszlo cinematography. Again, the low-key lighting and the documentary style were uncommon in major studio Hollywood at the time, and the film’s success proved that movies did not have to be candy-coated to work with audiences. For Fritz Lang, Laszlo shot the thriller While the City Sleeps, and gave the lurid tale a more subtle lighting to downplay the seamy material.

Laszlo had a productive relationship with Robert Aldrich, photographing the westerns Apache, Vera Cruz, The Last Sunset, and Four for Texas, all in color, and the black-and-white dramas Kiss Me Deadly, The Big Knife, and Ten Seconds to Hell. Apache and Vera Cruz used beautiful locations and reveal a strong sense of landscape; The Last Sunset is equally effective although a modern-day western, but Four for Texas is disappointing Rat Pack hijinks. Kiss Me Deadly and The Big Knife are brilliantly photographed, cynical, latter-day noir. Laszlo cited Kiss Me Deadly as his best black-and-white work, with its reliance on actual locations.

Laszlo also contributed outstanding black-and-white photography to Stanley Kramer’s Inherit the Wind, Judgment at Nuremberg, and Ship of Fools. Each has a claustrophobic setting (courtrooms and an ocean liner), and Laszlo was called upon to make great use of close-ups to accentuate the drama. The Kramer films are presented in a documentary-like fashion, with Laszlo utilizing deep grays and blacks in keeping with the somber dramatics.

Ernest Laszlo helped bring realism to the American cinema through his naturalistic cinematography, breaking down the barriers imposed by the glamour-conscious studios of the 1940s. He was fortunate to work with directors willing to suspend the usual high-key lighting effects in order to create genuine settings, and fused a new and practical form of photography for motion pictures.

—John A. Gallagher

LATHROP, Philip H.

Films as Cinematographer:

1958 Wild Heritage (Haas); Perfect Furlough (Strictly for Pleasure) (Edwards); The Monster of Piedras Blancas (Berwick); Money, Women and Guns (Bartlett); Live Fast, Die Young (Henreid); Girls on the Loose (Henreid); The Saga of Hemp Brown (Carlson)
1959 Cry Tough (Stanley)
1961 The Private Lives of Adam and Eve (Rooney and Zugsmith)
1962 Experiment in Terror (The Grip of Fear) (Edwards); Days of Wine and Roses (Edwards); Lonely Are the Brave (Last Hero) (credited as Philip Lathrop) (Miller)
1963 The Pink Panther (credited as Philip Lathrop) (Edwards); Twilight of Honor (The Charge Is Murder) (credited as Philip Lathrop) (Sagal); Dime with a Halo (Sagal); Soldier in the Rain (Nelson)
1964 36 Hours (Seaton); The Americanization of Emily (Emily) (Hiller)
1965 Girl Happy (Sagal); Never Too Late (Yorkin); The Cincinnati Kid (Jewison)
1966 What Did You Do in the War, Daddy? (Edwards)
1967 Gunn (Edwards); The Happening (Silverstein); Point Blank (Boorman); Don’t Make Waves (Mackendrick)
1968 I Love You, Alice B. Toklas! (Kiss My Butterfly) (Averbach); Finian’s Rainbow (Coppola)
1969 The Gypsy Moths (credited as Philip Lathrop) (Frankenheimer); The Illustrated Man (Smight); They Shoot Horses, Don’t They? (Pollack)
1970 The Traveling Executioner (credited as Philip Lathrop) (Smight); Rabbit, Run (Smight); The Hawaiians (Master of the Islands) (Gries)
1971 Wild Rovers (credited as Philip Lathrop) (Edwards)
1972 Portnoy’s Complaint (credited as Philip Lathrop) (Lehman); Every Little Crook and Nanny (Howard)
1973 The Thief Who Came to Dinner (Yorkin); Lolly-Madonna XXX (The Lolly Madonna War) (Sarafian)
1974 Together Brothers (Graham); The Prisoner of Second Avenue (Frank); Mame (Saks); Airport 1975 (credited as Philip Lathrop) (Smight); Earthquake (Robson)
1975 Hard Times (The Stingfighter) (Hill); The Black Bird (Giles); The Killer Elite (Peckinpah) (credited as Philip Lathrop)
1976 Swashbuckler (Scarlet Buccaneer) (Goldstone)
1977 Captains Courageous (credited as Philip Lathrop) (Hart—for TV); Never Con a Killer (The Feather & Father Gang) (Kulik—for TV); Airport ’77 (credited as Philip Lathrop) (Jameson)
1978 The Driver (Hill); A Different Story (Aaron)
1979 Moment by Moment (Wagner); Foolin’ Around (Heffron); The Concorde: Airport ’79 (Airport ’79); Airport ’80: The Concorde; The Concorde Affair; The Concorde; S.O.S. Concorde (Rich)
1980 Little Miss Marker (Bernstein); A Change of Seasons (Lang); Loving Couples (Smight)
1981 All Night Long (Tramont)
1982 Jekyll & Hyde . . . Together Again (Belson); Hammett (Wenders); Class Reunion (National Lampoon’s Class Reunion) (Miller)
1985 Between the Darkness and the Dawn (Levin—for TV); Love on the Run (Trikonis—for TV); Malice in Wonderland
Trikonis—for TV); Picking Up the Pieces (Wendkos—for TV)
1986
Deadly Friend (Craven)
1987
Ray's Male Heterosexual Dance Hall (Gordon)
1988
Little Girl Lost (Miller—for TV)

Other Films:

1948
All My Sons (Reis) (camera operator)
1955
Touch of Evil (Welles) (camera operator)
1965
In Harm's Way (Preminger) (director of photography: second unit)
1992
Visions of Light (Visions of Light: The Art of Cinematography) (Glassman, McCarthy, Samuels) (committee member: ASC education, ro as Philip Lathrop)

Publications:

On LATHROP: articles—

On LATHROP: film—

* * *

Philip H. Lathrop began his career as camera operator on the Irving Reis film All My Sons, working with cinematographer Russell Metty as he did ten years later on Orson Welles’s A Touch of Evil. The two pictures, in particular the film which marked Welles’s return to Hollywood in 1958, proved a valuable training ground for Lathrop, whose own career as a director of photography took off in the same year. In his long career, Lathrop developed a reputation for his detailed approach to lighting and camera placement, and for his skill with widescreen technology in beautifully photographed films such as Blake Edwards’s The Pink Panther. Lathrop worked several times with Edwards, and the reliable, though not always very inspiring films on which they collaborated are notable for the quality of their photography.

With the exception of films such as The Driver, and Hammett, a stylized detective story loosely based on the life of writer Dashiell Hammett, Lathrop’s most impressive work as a cinematographer came in the 1960s. His particular visual style seemed to epitomize the times, giving a glossy, dense feel to tough films like John Boorman’s Point Blank, and a dreamy atmosphere to strange comic offerings like The Americanization of Emily, for which he received an Oscar nomination. The Cincinnati Kid, which stars Edward G. Robinson and Steve McQueen as opposing poker players “The Man,” and “The Kid,” displays Lathrop’s skills at their best, creating a shiny, disconcerting surface to the images that is not unlike the “Photorealist” paintings that became popular at the same time. Ten years later, Lathrop’s style gave an air of quality to films at the end of their era, such as Sam Peckinpah’s The Killer Elite. Lathrop went on to be involved in several well-regarded projects, such as the 1969 adaptation of Horace McCoy’s bleak existentialist novel, They Shoot Horses, Don’t They?, yet in the 1970s most of his work was on films that have since come to embody Hollywood’s shortcomings in that period. Commercial movies such as the Airport series of films, and disaster movies such as Earthquake (for which Lathrop received his second Oscar nomination) almost became parodies of themselves with their ever more improbable story lines and predictable dramatic twists. In Class Reunion, Lathrop’s photography helps sustain the viewer’s interest in an otherwise thin parody of high school horror movies.

Lathrop’s talent was largely stifled by the demands of the studios in the 1970s, and opportunities for outstanding photography became increasingly limited. Yet despite the overall weakness of the commercial projects he was involved with later in his career, Lathrop’s work remained of a high standard, often rescuing films with little else to recommend them. When German director Wim Wenders partially succeeded in resisting the influence of Francis Ford Coppola’s Zoetrope studio during the making of Hammett, Lathrop was allowed to shine: as a cinematographer he remained capable of producing extraordinary images. Although he ended his career with a series of limp TV movies, Lathrop will be remembered for his contribution to the “look” of Hollywood cinema in the 1960s.

—Chris Routledge

LEDERER, Charles

Writer. Nationality: American. Born: New York City, 31 December 1910; raised by his aunt, the actress Marion Davies. Education: Attended the University of California, Berkeley, graduated. Family: Married 1) Virginia Bell, 1940 (divorced); 2) the actress Anne Shirley, 1949. Career: Journalist; 1929—began association with Ben Hecht, and collaborated with him over the years; 1931—first film as writer, The Front Page; then writer for Paramount, and MGM; freelance writer after 1944; 1953—wrote and produced the musical Kismet. Died: 5 March 1976.

Films as Writer:

1931
The Front Page (Milestone)
1932
Cock of the Air (Buckingham)
1937
Double or Nothing (Reed); Mountain Music (Florey)
1939
Broadway Serenade (Leonard); Within the Law (Machary)
1940
His Girl Friday (Hawks); Comrade X (K. Vidor); I Love You Again (Van Dyke) 1941
Love Crazy (Conway)
1943
Slightly Dangerous (Ruggles); The Youngest Profession (Buzzel)
1947
Kiss of Death (Hathaway); Ride the Pink Horse (Montgomery); Her Husband’s Affairs (Simon) 1949
I Was a Male War Bride (Hawks); Red, Hot and Blue (Farrow)
1950
Wabash Avenue (Koster)
1951
The Thing (Nyby)
1952
Fearless Fagan (Donen); Monkey Business (Hawks)
1953
Gentlemen Prefer Blondes (Hawks)
1955
Kismet (Minnelli)
1956
Gaby (Bernhardt)
1957  The Spirit of St. Louis (Wilder); Tip on a Dead Jockey (Thorpe)
1959  Never Steal Anything Small (+ d); It Started with a Kiss (Marshall)
1960  Can-Can (W. Lang); Ocean’s 11 (Milestone)
1962  Follow That Dream (Douglas); Mutiny on the Bounty (Milestone)
1964  A Global Affair (Arnold)

Films as Director:

1942  Fingers at the Window
1951  On the Loose

Publications

By LEDERER: book—

With Luther Davis, Kismet (play), New York, 1954.

On LEDERER: articles—

Cinéma 72 (Paris), May 1976.
Films and Filming (London), June 1983.
Levine, Scott, in American Screenwriters, edited by Robert E.
Film Dope (Nottingham), March 1986.
‘‘On the Loose,’’ in Reid’s Film Index (Wyong), no. 9, 1992.
‘‘Never Steal Anything Small,’’ in Reid’s Film Index (Wyong), no. 12, 1993.

* * *

Charles Lederer is probably best known for his adaptations, especially of comic material, in collaboration with such notable Hollywood writers as Ben Hecht, I.A.L. Diamond, George Oppenheimer, and Albert Hackett. It was Ben Hecht who first introduced Lederer to screenwriting when he hired him as a young man to contribute uncredited material for the original screen version of the Hecht-Charles MacArthur play The Front Page. It was an experience Lederer would find valuable later when he worked on His Girl Friday for Howard Hawks, in which he recast the central characters of the play as ex-marrieds, husband and wife, thereby turning the earlier drama into a screwball comedy.

Although Lederer’s career spanned some 30 years in Hollywood, his employment was often sporadic. He went for periods without writing for the screen, and when he was working, his scripts were often uneven. His best efforts were done in collaboration with Hecht or under the tutelage of Hawks, who hired Lederer on a number of occasions. The Hecht-Lederer scripts include two films noirs, Kiss of Death directed by Henry Hathaway and Ride the Pink Horse directed by Robert Montgomery, and Howard Hawks’s Monkey Business, written with I.A.L. Diamond. These films possess a wit and style worthy of the best Hollywood writing. On his own, however, with the exception of the work with Hawks, Lederer’s scripts often only achieved the level of the work-a-day quality of studio assembly-line products. And after The Spirit of St. Louis, on which he labored unsuccessfully with Billy Wilder, Lederer did little more than turn out star vehicles for such celebrities as Frank Sinatra, Elvis Presley, and Bob Hope. Even the screen version of Lederer’s highly popular musical Kismet, which he coauthored with Luther Davis, failed to achieve much success as a film.

Lederer’s long-term association with Hawks produced notably different results and may well have provided the screenwriter with the best projects of his career. Certainly Lederer’s solo work on His Girl Friday, The Thing, and Gentlemen Prefer Blondes produced the best-remembered of his scripts and did much to establish his reputation after his early years in the business. The screenplays for these films reflect Lederer’s genuine talent for adapting non-film materials to the requirements of the screen. Given the right material and the right director, Lederer obviously was able to produce first-rate writing. That he did not do so more often speaks more to the requirements and limitations of the studio system than to any inherent deficiency on Lederer’s part.

—Charles L.P. Silet

LEGRAND, Michel

Films as Composer:

1955  Les Amants du Tage (Lovers’ Net) (Verneuil)
1957  Le Triporteur (Pinoteau); Raffles sur la ville (Chenal)
1958  Charmants garçons (Decoin)
1960  Chien de pique (Y. Allégret); Terrain vague (Carné); Les Portes claquent (Poitrenaud and Fermaud); L’Amérique insolite (L’Amérique vue par un français) (Reichenbach)
1961  Lola (Demy); Cause toujours mon lapin (Roitfeld); Le Cave se rebiffe (The Counterfeiters of Paris) (Grangier) (co); Une Femme est une femme (A Woman Is a Woman) (Godard); Me faire ça à moi (Grimblatt)
1962  Une Grosse Tête (de Givray); Cléo de 5 à 7 (Cleo from 5 to 7) (Varda) (co); “Envie” ep. of Les Sept Péchés capitaux

510
Michel Legrand

(Seven Capital Sins) (Molinaro); Vivre sa vie (My Life to Live) (Goddard); Eva (Losey); Le Coeur battant (The French Game) (Doniol-Valcroze); Comme un poisson dans l’eau (Michel); L’Empire de la nuit (Grimblat)

1963 Love Is a Ball (Swift); Les Amoureux du France (Gimblat); La Baie des anges (Bay of the Angels) (Demy); Le Gentleman d’Epsom (Grangier); Le Joli Mai (Marker)

1964 Les Parapluies de Cherbourg (The Umbrellas of Cherbourg) (Demy); Bande à part (Band of Outsiders) (Goddard); Une Ravissante Idote (Ravishing Idiot) (Molinaro)

1965 Monnaie de singe (Robert); L’Or et le plomb (Cuniot); Qui êtes vous, Polly Magoo (Klein); Quand passent les faissans (Molinaro)

1966 La Vie de château (A Matter of Resistance) (Rappeneau); Tendre voyou (Tender Scoundrel) (Jean Becker)

1967 Les Demoiselles de Rochefort (The Young Girls of Rochefort) (Demy); L’Homme à la Buick (Grangier); Pretty Polly (A Matter of Innocence) (Green); Le Plus Vieux Métier du monde (The Oldest Profession) (de Broca and others)

1968 How to Save a Marriage—and Ruin Your Life (Cook); Sweet November (Miller); Play Dirty (De Toth); The Thomas Crown Affair (Jewison); Ice Station Zebra (J. Sturges)

1969 Castle Keep (Pollack); The Happy Ending (R. Brooks); La Piscine (The Swimming Pool) (Deray)

1970 Pieces of Dreams (Haller); Wathering Heights (Fuest); The Lady in the Car with Glasses and a Gun (Litvak); The Plastic Dome of Norma Jean (Compton); Le Décharge (Deray); Les Mariés de l’an II (Rappeneau)

1971 Peau d’âne (Donkey Skin) (Demy); Summer of ’42 (Mulligan); Le Mans (Katzin); Brian’s Song (Kulik—for TV); The Go-Between (Losey); A Time for Loving (Miles); Un Peu de soleil dans l’eau froide (Deray); La Poudre d’escampette (French Leave) (de Broca)

1972 One Is a Lonely Number (Stuart); The Picasso Summer (Sallin); Barbe-Blue (Bluebeard) (Dmytryk); Portnoy’s Complaint (Lehman); Les Feux de la chandelle (Hearth Fire) (Korber); La Vieille Fille (The Old Maid) (Blanc); Lady Sings the Blues (Furie); Pas folle la guêpe (Delannoy)

1973 A Bequest to the Nation (The Nelson Affair) (Jones); Un Homme est mort (A Man Is Dead) (Deray); Impossible Object (Frankenheimer); A Doll’s House (Losey); L’Evenement le plus important depuis que l’homme a marché sur la lune (A Slightly Pregnant Man) (Demy); The Adventures of Don Quixote (Rakoff); 40 Carats (Katselas); Cops and Robbers (Avakian); Breezy (Eastwood); Le Gang des otages (Molinaro)

1974 The Three Musketeers (Lester); It’s Good to Be Alive (Landon—for TV); Our Time (Death of Her Innocence) (Hyams)

1975 F for Fake (Welles); La Sauvage (The Savage) (Rappeneau); Sheila Levine Is Dead and Living in New York (Furie)

1976 Gable and Lombard (Furie); Gulliver’s Travels (Hunt); La Flûte à six schtroumpfs (The Smurfs and the Magic Flute) (Peyo or Dutillieu); Jalouseie 1976 (Le Voyage de noces; The Honeymoon Trip) (Trintignant); Ode to Billy Joe (Baer)

1977 The Other Side of Midnight (Jarrott); Hinotori (Ichikawa)

1978 Les Routes du sud (Losey); Lady Oscar (Demy); On peut le dire sans se fâcher! (La Belle Ennemieuse; One Can Say It without Getting Angry; The Beautiful Nuisance) (Coggio); Mon premier amour (Chouraqui); Michel’s Mixed Up Bird (+ co-sc, d, ro)

1979 Blind Love (+ d); Je vous ferai aimer la vie (Korber); The Fabulous Adventures of the Legendary Baron Munchausen (Image)

1980 Falling in Love Again (Paul); The Hunter (Kulik); Melvin and Howard (Demme)

1981 Atlantic City (Malle)

1982 Le Cadeau (The Gift) (M. Lang); Best Friends (Jewison); Qu’est-ce qui fait courir David? (What Makes David Run?) (Chouraqui)

1983 Eine Liebe in Deutschland (A Love in Germany) (Wajda); Never Say Never Again (Kershner); Yentl (Streisand)

1984 Train d’enfer (Hannin); Paroles et musique (Chouraqui); Slapstick of Another Kind (Paul)

1985 Palace (Molinaro); Parking (Demy); Partir, revenir (Going and Coming Back) (Lelouch); Secret Places (Barron); Micki and Maude (Eastwood) (song)

1987 Club de rencontres (M. Lang); Spirale (Frank); The Jeweller’s Shop (La Boutique de l’Orfèvre; The Goldsmith’s Shop) (Anderson)

1988 Switching Channels (Kotcheff)

1989 Cinq jours en juin (Five Days in June) (+ d, sc); Grand Piano (Coulson) (+ ro); As Summer Dies (As Summers Die) (Tramont)

1990 Gaspard et Robinson (Gatifil); Eternity (Paul)

1991 Dingo (DeHeer)
1992  Fate (Paul)
1993  Les Demoiselles ont eu 25 Ans (The Young Girls Turn 25) (Varda); The Pickle (Mazursky)
1994  Ready to Wear (Prêt-à-Porter) (Altman)
1995  Les Enfants de lumière (Asseo and others); Les Misérables (Lelouch); Die Schelme von Schelm (Aaron’s Magic Village) (Benoisliio and Kaminski)
1996  Le Monde est un grand chien (Kaminski); The Ring (Armand Mastroianni—for TV)
1998  Madeline (von Scherler Mayer)
1999  Doggy Bag (Comtet); La Bâche (Season’s Beatings) (Thompson)
2000  La Bicyclette bleue (for TV)

Publications

By LEGRAND: articles—

Film Français (Paris), 16 January 1981.
Cinéma (Paris), July/August 1981.

On LEGRAND: articles—

Soundtrack! (Hollywood), December 1983.
Film Français (Paris), 1 March 1985.
Film Dope (Nottingham), March 1986.
Architectural Digest (Los Angeles), July 1997.

* * *

Michel Legrand’s ability to write melodic themes that could be successfully marketed beyond the films for which they were written made him a popular favorite of studios seeking “hit” songs. Although Legrand was in demand for contemporary subjects, he also began in the early 1970s to score lyrical period works. While many of his works showed a facility with jazz, the period pieces also demonstrated a background in a variety of musical styles.

Legrand scored a number of French films, including works by Jean-Luc Godard beginning in the mid-1950s, but he gained international attention with his scores for the ambitious homages to Hollywood musicals created by Jacques Demy. The Umbrellas of Cherbourg and The Young Girls of Rochefort provided Legrand with an opportunity to write extended scores based on recurring themes and showed his ability to create memorable light popular tunes. Although his association with Demy continued on subsequent films, they have not been on the same grand scale.

Legrand’s score for The Thomas Crown Affair began an association with the lyricists Alan and Marilyn Bergman, with whom the composer collaborated on a number of projects ranging from Wuthering Heights to more recent films such as Best Friends and the song score for Yentl. The use of a central theme song has at times led to a tendency toward monothematic scoring with the results being more redundancy than variation. Somewhat more varied have been the composer’s scores for period works such as The Three Musketeers in which Legrand has been able to apply his light flowing melodic approach to a greater variety of styles.

Legrand’s song writing skills have at times led to his being selected for projects for which his style is not wholly suited. Despite his background in jazz, his overly romantic approach did not always mesh well with the songs in the Billie Holiday biography, Lady Sings the Blues, particularly when the score swells lushly during a heroin-shooting scene. The 1960s-style Latin beat provided for scenes in Never Say Never Again may have been appropriate on some level to the nostalgic feeling the character of James Bond creates, but it did little to enhance the dramatic action of the film.

Legrand continues to be as prolific as ever. In 1989 he directed Five Days in June, an autobiographical story of the teenaged Legrand’s love affair with a woman twice his age. He composed the music for, and acted in the film The Young Girls Turn 25. In 1994, Legrand provided the score for Ready to Wear, a movie exposing what goes on behind the scenes at the Paris fashion shows. Since then, he has composed music for several other films: Les Misérables, Les Enfants de lumière, and Le Monde est un grand chien.

With the move toward more and more contemporary sounds in films as an attempt to keep up with changing musical styles, Legrand’s own brand of pop music, once very much in vogue, now seems somewhat outdated. Not surprisingly his most successful work of late has been for noncontemporary subjects which require a more gentle lyricism. As with many of his contemporaries who were in demand in the 1960s and early 1970s, Legrand has found it necessary to modify his approach, and ironically the move has been back toward the more traditional symphonic style for which artists such as himself were originally intended as an alternative. As the twentieth century became the twenty-first, Legrand was devoting most of his professional efforts to writing music for the stage and did very little composing for films.

—Richard R. Ness, updated by Justin Gustainis

LEHMANN, Ernest

The French Atlantic Affair; elected president of the Writers Guild of America, in the 1980s.

Films as Writer:

1954 Executive Suite (Wise); Sabrina (Wilder)
1956 Somebody Up There Likes Me (Wise); The King and I (W. Lang)
1957 Sweet Smell of Success (Mackendrick) (co-sc, story)
1959 North by Northwest (Hitchcock)
1960 From the Terrace (Robson)
1961 West Side Story (Wise)
1963 The Prize (Robson)
1965 The Sound of Music (Wise)
1966 Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf? (Nichols) (+ pr, ro as extra)
1969 Hello Dolly! (Kelly) (+ pr)
1972 Portnoy’s Complaint (+ d, pr)
1976 Family Plot (Hitchcock)
1977 Black Sunday (Frankenheimer) (co-sc)

1979 The French Atlantic Affair (Heyes—mini for TV) (co-sc)
1995 Sabrina (Pollack) (co-sc)

Other Films:

1948 The Inside Story (Dwan) (story)

Publications

By LEHMAN: books—

The Comedian and Other Stories (fiction), New York, 1957.
Sweet Smell of Success and Other Stories (fiction), New York, 1957.
Screening Sickness and Other Tales of Tinsel Town (collected articles), New York, 1982.
Farewell Performance (fiction), New York, 1982.
By LEHMAN: articles—

“Nobody Tries to Make a Bad Picture,” in American Film (Washington, D.C.), March 1978.

On LEHMAN: books—

Ernest Lehman: An American Film Institute Seminar on His Work, Glen Rock, New Jersey, 1977

On LEHMAN: articles—

* * *

Given that Ernest Lehman has scripted some of the most Oscar-laden films ever made, it comes as something of a surprise to realize that he has never won an Academy Award for Best Screenplay—several nominations, but no Oscar. Lehman himself might well, with a rueful shrug, adduce the fact as further evidence for the persistent undervaluing of the writer’s contribution to any movie, good or bad. “I’ve spent the best years of my life trying to convince movie critics . . . that if a film is any good, it was probably due to a bad screenplay, but I couldn’t even make a dent.”

Not that Lehman, intelligent and ironic, has ever been one to make grandiose claims. “I don’t take writing as seriously as some writers would, or should,” he says, and refuses to regard screenwriting as an “art”: “When it works it’s skill and craft and some unconscious ability.” Lehman’s own skill and craft have never been in doubt; the opening of his very first film as screenwriter, Executive Suite, could stand as a textbook model of classic exposition, lucid and economical. What is more disputable is whether that skill and craft—and ability—have been exploited to anywhere near their full potential.

Of Lehman’s relatively brief filmography as screenwriter only one, North by Northwest, is an original. All the rest are adaptations, from novels or the stage—although in some cases, such as The Prize, the script might almost qualify as an original, so thoroughly was the source material reworked. (In Sweet Smell of Success Lehman, was working from his own novella, and the plot structure is entirely his, but after he quit the production the dialogue was rewritten almost in toto by Clifford Odets.) Furthermore, four of his films were adaptations not just of plays, but of Broadway musicals (The King and I, West Side Story, The Sound of Music, and Hello Dolly!), a genre always liable to incite critical condescension.

In Talking Pictures Richard Corliss, mocking Lehman as “Curator-in-Chief of the Hollywood Museum of High-Priced Broadway Properties,” suggested that these “close adaptations . . . strike Lehman’s admirers as acts of treason against his considerable talent.” Lehman would dispute the closeness no less than the treason. In the case of Sound of Music, he points out that much of the film’s dramatic structure, including the famous airborne opening, was his creation alone. “I saw the Broadway show, and it consisted of lead-ins to the next number. No story.” Even with West Side Story, where the original had a far stronger plot, Lehman extensively restructured the play to bring out its social emphasis. “I rearranged it quite a bit to keep the dramatic line very clean, and I moved around musical numbers.”

When it comes to adapting novels, Lehman argues that the writer’s contribution to the finished movie is yet more crucial—and no less generally undervalued. “There are a million decisions made by the screenwriter. . . . He’s the one who looks at a sequence . . . and decides: It won’t work in the movie. We’ll have to forget it. Or change it from a ship to a plane. The director doesn’t say, ‘Let’s shoot the scene in a plane instead of a boat.’ No, it’s written. It’s written.” Corliss’s contemptuous phrase, “a mere service-station attendant of other writers’ vehicles,” seems singularly inapt in view of Lehman’s shrewdly gauged treatment of Albee’s Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf?, and his elegant transmutation of Victor Canning’s novel The Rainbird Pattern into Hitchcock’s final movie, Family Plot.

All the more puzzling, then, that a writer with such an evident instinct for screenwriting should number only one original screenplay among his credits—especially when that one is so outstanding. Lehman’s script for North by Northwest has a good claim to be the finest ever written for a Hitchcock film. Witty, literate, well-paced, and stylish, it deftly captures the sly mix of terror and teasing humor that typifies Hitchcock’s cinema at its best, while still lightly sketching in a serious subtext: the regeneration of an empty, selfish man. Yet for all its clear and satisfying structure, the writing of it caused Lehman continual agony. “I recall having tried to quit the picture a dozen times. . . . I never knew what the hell I was going to write next.” Rather than face that agony again, he preferred to divert into producing, and once even disastrously into directing (the ill-starred Portnoy’s Complaint), before quitting screenwriting for good. North by Northwest, regrettably, seems destined to remain unique in his output.

—Philip Kemp

LeMAIRE, Charles

Films as Costume Designer:

1925 Heart of a Siren (Rosen)
1929 The Cocoanuts (Santley and Florey)
1933 Take a Chance (Schwab, Brice, and De Sylva)
1934 George White’s Scandals (Freeland)
1935 Scandals (White)
1941 The Men in Her Life (Ratoff) (co)
1946 Strange Triangle (McC Carey); The Razor’s Edge (Goulding) (co); Boomerang (Kazan) (co)
1947 Captain from Castile (H. King); Kiss of Death (Hathaway); The Home Stretch (Humberstone) (co); Moss Rose (Ratoff) (co); Miracle on 34th Street (The Big Heart) (Seaton) (co); The Ghost and Mrs. Muir (Mankiewicz) (co); I Wonder Who’s Kissing Her Now (Bacon) (co); Thunder in the Valley (Bob, Son of Battle) (L. King) (co); Mother Wore Tights (W. Lang) (co); Nightmare Alley (Goulding) (co); The Foxes of Harrow (Stahl) (co); Forever Amber (Preminger) (co); Daisy Kenyon (Preminger); Gentleman’s Agreement (Kazan) (co); Call Northside 777 (Hathaway) (co); Sitting Pretty (W. Lang) (co)
1948 Escape (Mankiewicz); Deep Waters (H. King); Yellow Sky (Wellman); Scudda Hoo! Scudda Hay! (Summer Lightning) (Herbert) (co); Green Grass of Wyoming (L. King) (co); Deep Waters (H. King); Give My Regards (Bacon) (co); The Iron Curtain (Wellman) (co); Unfaithfully Yours (P. Sturges) (co); The Street with No Name (Keighley) (co); The Walls of Jericho (Stahl) (co); Cry of the City (Siodmak) (co); Apartment for Peggy (Seaton) (co); Road House (Negulesco) (co); The Luck of the Irish (Koster) (co); The Snake Pit (Litvak) (co); That Lady in Ermine (Lubitsch) (co); That Wonderful Urge (Sinclair) (co); Chicken Every Sunday (Seaton); When My Baby Smiles at Me (W. Lang) (co); You Were Meant for Me (Bacon) (co)
1949 Down to the Sea in Ships (Hathaway); House of Strangers (Mankiewicz); Pinky (Kazan); Come to the Stable (Koster); A Letter to Three Wives (Mankiewicz); The Fan (Lady Windermere’s Fan) (Preminger) (co); Mr. Belvedere Goes to College (Nugent) (co); It Happens Every Spring (Bacon) (co); You’re My Everything (W. Lang); Everybody Does It (Goulding) (co); Thieves’ Highway (Dassin) (co); Oh, You Beautiful Doll (Stahl); Dancing in the Dark (Reis) (co); Whirlpool (Preminger) (co)
1950 All about Eve (Mankiewicz) (co); For Heaven’s Sake (Seaton); My Blue Heaven (Koster); Three Came Home (Negulesco); Under My Skin (Negulesco); Wabash Avenue (Koster); Halls of Montezuma (Milestone); Mother Didn’t Tell Me (Binyon) (co); When Willie Comes Marching Home (Ford) (co); Cheaper By the Dozen (W. Lang) (co); The Gunfighter (H. King) (co); Ticket to Tomahawk (Sale) (co); Panic in the Streets (Kazan) (co); Stella (Binyon) (co); Where the Sidewalk Ends (Preminger) (co); Mr. 880 (Goulding) (co); No Way Out (Mankiewicz) (co); I’ll Get By (Sale) (co); Two Flags West (Wise) (co); The Jackpot (W. Lang) (co); Rawhide (Hathaway) (co); American Guerilla in the Philippines (I Shall Return) (F. Lang) (co); The Thirteenth Letter (Preminger) (co); I Can Get It for You Wholesale (This Is My Affair) (Gordon)
1951 Call Me Mister (Bacon); Elpement (Koster); The Frogmen (Bacon); Golden Girl (Bacon); People Will Talk (Mankiewicz); You’re in the Navy Now (Hathaway); Bird of Paradise (Daves) (co); I’d Climb the Highest Mountain (H. King) (co); Follow the Sun (Lanfield) (co); Fourteen Hours (Hathaway) (co); The House on Telegraph Hill (Wise) (co); On the Riviera (W. Lang) (co); The Guy Who Came Back (Newman) (co); Secret of Convict Lake (Gordon) (co); Take Care of My Little Girl (Negulesco) (co); Mr. Belvedere Rings the Bell (Koster) (co); Meet Me after the Show (Sale) (co); David and Bathsheba (H. King) (co); The Day the Earth Stood Still (Wise) (co); Love Nest (Newman) (co); Let’s Make It Legal (Sale) (co); Anne of the Indies (Tourneur) (co); Fixed Bayonet (Fuller); The Model and the Marriage Broker (Cukor) (co)
1952 The Bloodhounds of Broadway (Jones); Five Fingers (Mankiewicz); My Pal Gus (Parrish); My Wife’s Best Friend (Sale); The Snows of Kilimanjaro (H. King); With a Song in My Heart (W. Lang); As Young as You Feel (Jones) (co); Viva Zapata! (Kazan) (co); Red Skies of Montana (Newman) (co); Return of the Texan (Daves) (co); The Pride of St. Louis (Jones) (co); Deadline, U.S.A. (Deadline) (Brooks) (co); Belles on Their Toes (Levin) (co); Les Misérables (Milestone) (co); Outcasts of Poker Flat (Newman); Lydia Bailey (Negulesco) (co); Wait ’til the Sun Shines, Nellie (H. King) (co); The Girl Next Door (Sale) (co); We’re Not Married (Goulding) (co); Dreamboat (Binyon) (co); Don’t Bother to Knock (Baker) (co); What Price Glory (Ford) (co); Lure of the Wilderness (Negulesco) (co); O. Henry’s Full House (Full House) (Koster and others) (co); Monkey Business (Hawks) (co); Night without Sleep (Baker) (co); Something or the Birds (Wise) (co); Destination Gobi (Wise); Way of a Gaucho (Tourneur) (co); Stars and Stripes Forever (Marching Along) (Koster) (co); My Cousin Rachel (Koster) (co); The President’s Lady (Levin) (co); Down among the Sheltering Palms (Goulding) (co)
1953 A Blueprint for Murder (Stone); The Desert Rats (Wise); The Robe (Koster) (co); Taxi (Ratoff) (co); Niagara (Hathaway) (co); Treasure of the Golden Condor (Daves) (co); The Silver Whip (Jones) (co); Tonight We Sing (Leisen) (co); The Farmer Takes a Wife (Levin) (co); The Siege at Red River (Maté) (co); Titanic (Negulesco) (co); Man on a Tightrope (Kazan) (co); Powder River (L. King) (co); Pickup on South Street (Fuller) (co); City of Bad Men (Jones) (co); Gentlemen Prefer Blondes (Hawks) (co); White Witch Doctor (Hathaway) (co); Dangerous Crossing (Newman) (co); Inferno (Baker) (co); Mr. Scoutmaster (Levin) (co); The Kid from Left Field (Jones) (co); How to Marry a Millionaire (Negulesco); King of the Khyber Rifles (H. King) (co); Beneath the Twelve Mile Reef (Webb) (co); Three Young Texans (Levin) (co); Man in the Attic (Fregonese) (co)
1954 Demetrius and the Gladiators (Daves); The Egyptian (Curtiz); Prince Valiant (Hathaway); Woman’s World (Negulesco); Night People (Johnson) (co); Hell and High Water (Fuller) (co); River of No Return (Preminger) (co); Three Coins in the Fountain (Negulesco) (co); Broken Lance (Dmytryk)
(co); Garden of Evil (Negulesco) (co); The Black Widow (Johnson) (co); Desiree (Koster) (co); Prince of Players (Dunne) (co); There’s No Business Like Show Business (W. Lang) (co)

1955

The Girl in the Red Velvet Swing (Fleischer); Yacht on the High Seas (Post); Love Is a Many Splendored Thing (H. King) (co); Soldier of Fortune (Dmytryk); The View from Pompey’s Head (Dunne); Violent Saturday (Fleischer) (co); Daddy Long Legs (Negulesco) (co); The Seven Year Itch (Wilders) (co); The Virgin Queen (Koster) (co); House of Bamboo (Fuller); How to Be Very, Very Popular (Johnson) (co); The Left Hand of God (Dmytryk) (co); The Tall Men (Walsh) (co); Seven Cities of Gold (Webb) (co); The Rains of Ranchipur (Negulesco) (co); The Lieutenant Wore Skirts (Tashlin) (co)

1956

The Bottom of the Bottle (Beyond the River) (Hathaway) (co); On the Threshold of Space (Webb); The Revolt of Mamie Stover (Walsh) (co); The Best Things in Life Are Free (Curtiz); D-Day, the Sixth of June (Koster); The Girl Can’t Help It (Tashlin); Hilda Crane (Dunne); The Man in the Gray Flannel Suit (Johnson); Twenty Three Paces to Baker Street (Hathaway) (co); The Proud Ones (Webb) (co); Bus Stop (Logan) (co); Bigger Than Life (Ray) (co); The Last Wagon (Daves) (co); Between Heaven and Hell (Fleischer) (co); Teenage Rebel (Goulding) (co)

1957

An Affair to Remember (McCary); Kiss Them for Me (Donen); Oh Men! Oh Women! (Johnson); Stopover Tokyo (Breen); The Sun Also Rises (H. King) (co); Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter? (Tashlin); Top Secret Affair (Their Secret Affair) (Tashlin); Three Brave Men (Dunne) (co); The Way to the Gold (Webb) (co); The Wayward Bus (Vicas) (co); The Desk Set (His Other Woman) (W. Lang); A Hatful of Rain (Zinnemann) (co); Bernardine (Levin) (co); Three Faces of Eve (Johnson) (co); No Down Payment (Ritt) (co); Forty Guns (Fuller) (co); April Love (Levin) (co); The Enemy Below (Powell)

1958

The Barbarian and the Geisha (Huston); The Bravados (H. King); The Gift of Love (Negulesco); The Hunters (D. Powell); Mardi Gras (Goulding); A Nice Little Bank That Should Be Robbed (Levin); Ten North Frederick (Dunne); The Young Lions (Dmytryk) (co); The Long Hot Summer (Ritt) (co); The Fly (Neumann) (co); From Hell to Texas (Manhunt) (Hathaway) (co); In Love and War (Dunne) (co); These Thousand Hills (Fleischer); The Fiend Who Walked the West (Douglas) (co)

1959

Compulsion (Fleischer) (co); Thunder in the Sun (Rouse); Rally ’round the Flag, Boys (McCary); The Remarkable Mr. Pennypacker (Levin) (co); Warlock (Dmytryk); A Woman Obsessed (Hathaway); The Diary of Anne Frank (Stevens) (co); Say One for Me (Tashlin) (co)

1960

The Marriage-Go-Round (W. Lang)

1962

Walk on the Wild Side (Dmytryk)

Publications

On LeMAIRE: articles—

* * *

It is no surprise that Charles LeMaire was wardrobe director at 20th Century-Fox from 1943 to 1959, during the flamboyant years of the Technicolor musical. The studio, once referred to as “more hysterical than historical,” used an approach in their costumings which dealt more in stereotypes than research, a virtual burlesque of genuine styles. LeMaire’s background of showy theatrical flash suited the studio far better than a Chanel would.

LeMaire was born in Chicago, and started out as vaudeville actor and song pluggcr. In New York, after a year on the circuit, he became a shopper for the couture house of Antoinette Sherri. This sparked a new career direction for LeMaire. He began designing on- and off-stage costumes for many Broadway stars and in 1919 received his first major commission: to design for the Ziegfeld Follies. From 1919 to 1926, he designed for a string of Hammerstein operettas. He also worked for George White’s Scandals, Earl Carroll’s Vanities, and Irving Berlin’s Music Box Revue. He became head designer at Brooks Costume firm from 1924 to 1929. LeMaire continued to work freelance and in 1931 opened his own firm: LeMaire Studio Design. His many projects included a spectacular for John Ringling North’s circus.

After leaving the Army in 1943, LeMaire began at 20th Century-Fox, as executive designer and director of wardrobe, where he specialized in Betty Grable movies. His concepts for the star are mindlessly glamorous and visually stunning: Grable was decorated as baroque cheesecake, iced with sequins, and quivering with feathers. Designs for Grable were neither history nor fashion. They were basically showgirl costumes, created to emphasize Grable’s sexy legs. Her historical movies were nothing to assign to a social studies class (except, perhaps, one studying postwar Americana). They were mostly nightclub images of the past, and her costumes could serve as precursors to the “Vegas” look.

It must be emphasized, however, that as crass as these costumes seem they were appropriate to the image of the actress they featured. Grable was not a Joan Crawford, with Crawford’s innate sense of style, carving her way to the top. When Adrian dressed Crawford as economically disadvantaged in Dancing Lady and The Women, she still had more class than anyone in the audience. Nor had Grable the continental class and mystery of a Dietrich. Travis Banton’s interpretation of rags in Dietrich’s Blonde Venus was more aesthetic than a Clifford Still painting.

LeMaire teaming up with Grable was cinematically correct. Grable played the spunky, sexy, American-girl-next-door fantasy. Like a lot of her audience, she was probably from a lower-class immigrant-parent background with a fashion code which ruled that more was better. No doubt she had a multitude of fans who agreed.

LeMaire is credited with an enormous filmography. Dealing with his works is as difficult as trying to pin down the credits of MGM’s head art director Cedric Gibbons. Did LeMaire actually contribute to any of these projects? Did he merely approve them? In any case, because of his status at Fox, his credits are linked with such other artists as Rene Hubert, Kay Nelson, Bonnie Cashin, Travilla, Edith Head, Rene, Edward Stevenson, Orry-Kelly, Oleg Cassini, Dorothy Jeakins, Eleanor Behm, Perkins Bailey, Mario Vanarelli, Ursula Maes, Miles White, Mary Wills, Yvonne Wood, Helen Rose, Adele Palmer, Leah Rohen, and Adele Balkan.
Perhaps LeMaire’s greatest contribution to the history of American film (aside from his assistance in creating Grable as an ultimate American legend) was his help in establishing a category for the costumer among the many Academy Awards. It is hard to believe that before this time no such recognition was given. The Academy, in turn, was good to LeMaire, though there is some controversy amid his honors. He shared his Oscar for All about Eve with his good friend Edith Head. Head explained that because she really wanted to do Davis’s costumes for All about Eve and LeMaire was very busy with other projects, he agreed to this arrangement. Head stated that LeMaire had already done the other costumes for Anne Baxter, Celeste Holm, Thelma Ritter, Barbara Bates, and Marilyn Monroe. However, the only costumes one remembers are Head’s and some sources on the picture seem to question LeMaire’s authorship on the others. As for LeMaire’s award for Love Is a Many Splendored Thing, Head claimed that he really didn’t deserve his Oscar, that the costumes were “blah,” and could have been bought off the rack in Hong Kong. In addition to these dubious distinctions, LeMaire won an Academy Award jointly with Emile Santiago for the biblical extravaganza The Robe.

LeMaire left the studio in 1959 and worked freelance and in the wholesale dress business. He was among the many major designers leaving the industry as the age of the Hollywood costume designer rapidly faded to memory.

—Edith C. Lee

LENICA, Jan

Films as Director and Animator:

1957 Był sobie raz . . . (Once upon a Time . . .) (with Walerian Borowczyk); Nagrodzone uczucie (Love Required) (with Borowczyk); Strip-Tease (with Borowczyk)—under 3 min
1958 Dom (The House) (with Borowczyk); Szczarodłodzicy (Banner of Youth) (with Borowczyk)—under 3 min
1959 Monsieur Tête (Mr. Head) (with Borowczyk)
1960 Nowy „Janko” muzyczny (New Janko the Musician)
1961 Italia 61 (Italy 61) (with W. Zamecznik)—under 3 min, film lost 1962 Labirint (Labyrinth)

Films as Animator:

1961 Cul-de-sac (Polanski)
1972 Quatre Mouches de velours gris; César et Rosalie (Sautet)
1973 Le Petit Poucet (Boisrond)
1975 Das kleine Fernsehspiel

Publications

By LENICA: books—

Monsieur Tête, text by Eugène Ionesco, Munich, 1970.

By LENICA: article—

Animafilm, April/June 1980.

On LENICA: books—

On LENICA: articles—

“Jan Lenica,” in Film (London), Summer 1963.
“Artist and Animator,” in Film (London), Spring 1972.

* * *

Jan Lenica’s checkered career has encompassed excursions into music, architecture, poster-making, costume design, children’s book illustration, and all aspects of filmmaking. It is, however, for his animation that he is best known, particularly his collage and “cut-out” films, which have their roots in the art of Max Ernst and John Heartfield. The films have influenced the work of Jan Švankmajer and Terry Gilliam.

In the 1950s, his films with Walerian Borowczyk led an aesthetic revolution in Poland that sent reverberations all over the Eastern European animation scene. Before Lenica entered the scene, Polish animation consisted mainly of American-influenced character animation, over which the shadow of Walt Disney lugubriously hung, sometimes with vaguely political overtones on the fringe. Lenica and Borowczyk moved the avant-garde into the mainstream. They attempted to forge a new experimental cinema that would coalesce contemporary artistic practices such as abstraction, collage, and satirical surrealism without jettisoning commitment to the Marxist concepts of artistic integration of form and content and art for the masses. Often their films deal with alienation in a modern world, and the challenge of the detritus of history, figured in their use of old newspaper and postcards and the ironic confrontation with the “Great Masters” of painting which consume the protagonist of Overonce upon a Time . . .. In The House, a wide range of techniques illustrate a strange mechanical rite. The rough simplicity of their materials in these films conveys simultaneously the menace of an absurd disordered universe, and an affecting artlessness of execution.

The films Lenica made on his own, like Borowczyk’s later work, are even more preoccupied with the grotesque, though Lenica’s are more concerned with the confrontation of innocent Everymen and modern Candies, with a hellish world of threatening technology—violent, unpredictable, and self-referential. In this, they are reminiscent of the work of contemporaneous literary figures, such as Beckett, Ionesco, Jarry, and the newly rediscovered Kafka, and belied an interest in the Existentialism which was then all the rage in Paris, where Lenica moved in 1958. Monsieur Tête and Rhinoceroses are some of his most self-consciously literary works, though still in the style of The House, Labyrinth, with its butterfly-men and giant reptiles, depicts a nightmare world of misbegotten genetic experiments, yet the beauty of some of the surreal creations depicted in it suggest a visionary and fantastic view as much as that of a pessimistic dystopian. The triumph of the beleaguered office worker in Adam II (1969) pointed to a resurgent optimism in Lenica’s work. It can be read also as an allegory of the artist under communism, a theme more ambiguously rendered by the Estonian animator, Pritt Pjarn, in his masterful Hotel E (1991). One troubling aspect of Lenica’s work remains the presence of a certain latent misogyny, particularly evinced by Nature morte, that is somewhat reminiscent of his compatriot Roman Polanski, for whom he designed the British film posters for Repulsion and Cal-de-sac.

During the 1970s, Lenica’s animated output was considerably reduced as he became more interested in teaching and costume and theater design. Ubu Roi, his adaptation of Jarry’s play, marked a significant departure from the best-known work of his early career, with its hand-drawn images and more static quality. Jarry’s text, however, was attractive to Lenica due to its emphasis on the grotesque and the satirical, which complemented Lenica’s earliest interest in caricature. He said in an interview that, “The art of animation is stretched between two extremes. On the one side there is Walt Disney with his enormous popularity and resonance with viewers, and on the other there are quests, experiments, interesting as they are, but separated from audiences. I would like to bring these two extremes closer together, to find a golden mean for them, that is to win viewers on the one hand, while not losing anything of what is my own style. Ubu is precisely the outcome of this striving.” The reconciliation of extremes is a concern which pervades his work as a whole.

—Leila Felperin Sharman

LEVEN, Boris

Films as Art Director:

1938  Alexander’s Ragtime Band (H. King); Just around the Corner (Cummings)
1940  Second Chorus (Potter)
1941  The Shanghai Gesture (von Sternberg)
1942  Tales of Manhattan (Duvivier); Life Begins at 8:30 (Pichel)
1943  Hello, Frisco, Hello (Humberstone)
1945  Doll Face (Seiler)
1946  Home Sweet Homicide (Bacon); Shock (Werkner)
1947  The Shocking Miss Pilgrim (Seaton); I Wonder Who’s Kissing Her Now (Bacon); The Senator Was Indiscreet (Kaufman)
1948  Mr. Peabody and the Mermaid (Pichel)
1949  Criss Cross (Stodmak); The Lovable Cheat (Oswald); Search for Danger (Bernhard); House by the River (F. Lang)
1950  Woman on the Run (Foster); Quicksand (Pichel); Dakota Lil (Selander); Destination Murder (Cahn); Once a Thief (W. Wilder)
1951  The Second Woman (Kern); The Prowler (Losey); A Millionaire for Christie (Marshall); Two Dollar Bettor (Cahn); The Basketball Fix (Feist)
1952  Sudden Fear (Miller); Rose of Cimarron (Keller)
1953  The Star (Heisler); Invaders from Mars (Menzies); Donovan’s Brain (Fiest)
1954  The Long Wait (Saville)
1955  The Silver Chalice (Saville)
1956  Giant (Stevens)
1957  Courage of Black Beauty (Schuster); My Gun Is Quick (White and Victor); Zero Hour (Bartlett)
1959  Anatomy of a Murder (Preminger); Thunder in the Sun (Rouse)
1960  September Storm (Haskin)
1961  West Side Story (Wis)
1962  Two for the Seesaw (Wis)
1964  Strait-Jacket (Castle)
1965  The Sound of Music (Wis)
1966  The Sand Pebbles (Wis)
1968  Star! (Wis)
LEVIEN, Sonya

Films as Writer:

1919 Who Will Marry Me? (Powell)
1921 Cheated Love (Baggot); First Love (Campbell)
1922 The Top of New York (Taylor); Pink Gods (Stanlaws)
1923 The Snow Bride (Kolker); The Exciters (Campbell)
1925 Salome of the Tenements (Olcott)
1926 The Love Toy (Kenton); Christine of the Big Tops (Mayo)
1927 The Princess from Hoboken (Dale); The Heart Thief (Chrisander); A Harp in Hock (Hoffman)
1928 A Ship Comes In (Howard); The Power of the Press (Capra); Behind That Curtain (Cummings); The Younger Generation (Capra); Trial Marriage (Kenton); Lucky Star (Borzage); They Had to See Paris (Borzage); South Sea Rose (Dwan); Frozen Justice (Dwan)
1930 Song o’ My Heart (Borzage); So This Is London (Blystone); The Bet (Ford); Surrender (Howard)
1932 She Wanted a Millionaire (Blystone); After Tomorrow (Borzage)
1933 State Fair (H. King); Warrior’s Husband (W. Lang); Berkeley Square (Lloyd); Mr. Skitch (Cruze)
1934 Change of Heart (Blystone); The White Parade (Cummings)
1935 Here’s to Romance (Green); Navy Wife (Dwan)
1936 The Country Doctor (H. King); Reunion (Taurog)
1938 In Old Chicago (H. King); Kidnapped (Werker); Four Men and a Prayer (Ford)
1939 Drams Along the Mohawk (Ford); The Hunchback of Notre Dame (Dieterle)
1941 Ziegfeld Girl (Leonard)
1943 The Amazing Mrs. Holliday (Manning); Rhapsody in Blue (Rapper); State Fair (W. Lang)
1946 The Green Years (Saville); The Valley of Decision (Garnett); Ziegfeld Follies (Minnelli)
1947 Cass Timberlane (Sidney)
1948 Three Darling Daughters (Wilcox)
1951 The Great Caruso (Thorpe)
1952 The Merry Widow (Bernhardt)
1954 The Student Prince (Thorpe)
1955 Hit the Deck (Rowland); Interrupted Melody (Bernhardt); Oklahoma! (Zinnemann); Bhowani Junction (Cukor)
1957 Jeanne Eagels (Sidney)
1960 Pepe (Sidney)

Films as Cowriter with S. N. Behrman:

1930 Lightnin' (H. King); Liliom (Borzage)
1931 Delicious (Butler); Daddy Long Legs (Santell)
1932 Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm (Santell); Tess of the Storm Country (Santell)
1933 Cavalcade (Lloyd)
1934 As Husbands Go (MacFadden)
1935 Anna Karenina (Brown)
1938 The Cowboy and the Lady (Potter)
1951 Quo Vadis (LeRoy)

Publications

On LEVIE: book—

On LEVIE: articles—

* * *

Throughout the golden era of the Hollywood studio system, Sonya Levien wrote enough screenplays (sometimes as many as five per year) to qualify her as a guaranteed professional name, but on most of her films she shared the writing credit, so that identifying her personal trademarks becomes difficult. However, despite a minimum of biographical knowledge and no opportunity to examine the evolution of any single screenplay she worked on, it is still possible to assume three primary characteristics to her career: a strong tendency toward coauthorship, a talent for adaptation, and a flair for creating women characters who are intelligent, noble, and independent, but who are also searching to define their particular roles in life.

When Levien was paired with an established male author, it seems possible to assume she was hired to represent the feminine point of view, and to enhance the female characters. For instance, she was paired more than once with such different writers as S. N. Behrman, Lamar Trotti, and William Ludwig. As might be expected, the Behrman films are sophisticated comedies, the Trotti are prestige productions of an epic scale, and the Ludwig are musical adaptations. Since in all three cases she is working with an established writer with a personal style, her contribution is an enrichment of the leading female roles. The best example is probably the Trotti-Levien adaptation of Drams along the Mohawk, in which the central role of Lana, played by Claudette Colbert, is a classic example of the pioneer wife, feminine and attractive, but strong enough to survive the dangers and hardships presented in the story line.

Levien’s association with what were termed “‘quality’ projects led her to work on many adaptations of novels, plays, and musicals. One of her most successful solo efforts was her adaptation of Sinclair Lewis’s Cass Timberlane, in which the plot was restructured to reflect the postwar era in which it was released by including a character who sold faulty war materials for profit. Her skill at updating projects is also reflected in the three versions of State Fair she worked on, as well as in her refurbishing of such older musicals as The Merry Widow and The Student Prince. In all cases, she maintains the essential characters and overall ambience of the original, while removing outdated attitudes, particularly toward women and sex.

Given the number of collaborations Levien was involved in, it is difficult to identify exactly what she might have contributed to a specific characterization. Nevertheless, it is obvious that the assignments she was given—and took—are frequently stories about women. It must have been assumed that her name and her talent enhanced a project that would feature a leading actress. Thus, her work for Greer Garson in The Valley of Decision, and Eleanor Parker in Interrupted Melody, created strong roles for which both actresses were nominated for Oscars. In addition, such sex symbols as Lana Turner, Ava Gardner, and Kim Novak found parts which stretched their reputations and abilities in Cass Timberlane and Ziegfeld Follies, Bhowani Junction and Jeanne Eagels, respectively. The difficulty of untangling “who is responsible for what” in Sonya Levien’s prolific and successful career points to the problems of historical research, and illustrates how much is yet to be learned about many of Hollywood’s most influential writers.

—Jeanine Basinger

LEVINE, Joseph E.

Producer. Nationality: American. Born: Joseph Edward Levine in Boston, Massachusetts, 9 September 1905. Career: 1940s—exhibitor of foreign films; 1960s—moved into production. Died: In Greenwich, Connecticut, 21 July 1987.
Films as Producer/Executive Producer:

1955  Attila
1960  La ciociara (Two Women) (De Sica)
1963  The Carpetbaggers (Dmytryk); La Noia (The Empty Canvas) (Damiani); Otro e mezzo (8 1/2) (Fellini); Le Mépris (Contempt) (Godard)
1964  Where Love Has Gone (Dmytryk); Matrimonio all’Italiana (Marriage—Italian Style) (De Sica)
1965  Harlow (Douglas); Sands of the Kalahari (Endfield); Casanova 70 (Monicelli); The Oscar (Rouse); La decima vittima (Tenth Victim) (Petrie); Nevada Smith (Hathaway)
1966  The Idol (Petrie); The Spy with a Cold Nose (Petrie); The Caper of the Golden Bulls (Carnival of Thieves) (Rouse); A Man Called Adam (Penn)
1967  Robbery (Yates); Woman Times Seven (Sept fois femme) (De Sica); The Graduate (Nichols); The Producers (Brooks)
1968  The Lion in Winter (Harvey)
1969  I girasoli (De Sica); La Piscine (Deray); Stiletto (Kowalski)
1970  The Adventurers (Gilbert); The Ski Bum (Clark)
1971  Carnal Knowledge (Nichols)
1972  Rivals (Shah)
1973  Hurry Up, Or I’ll Be Thirty (Jacoby); Interval (Mann); The Day of the Dolphin (Nichols)
1975  Paper Tiger (Annakin)
1977  A Bridge Too Far (Attenborough)
1978  Magic (Attenborough)
1981  Tattoo (B. Brooks)

Publications

On LEVINE: articles—

Cinema (Hollywood), vol. 1, no. 3, Fall 1963.
Obituary in Classic Images (Muscatine, Iowa), no. 147, September 1987.

* * *

No Hollywood figure of the 1960s better represented the free-wheeling, independent motion picture producer than Joseph E. Levine. As the studio system of the 1930s and 1940s, with its complete domination of all phases of production, distribution, and exhibition, gave way to a system of independent producers feeding distributor studios, the Paramouts, Warners, and Columbias came to rely on entrepreneurs to feed their distribution needs. Joseph E. Levine was responsible for a number of high-grossing films of the 1960s including The Carpetbaggers, Harlow, The Oscar, The Producers, and The Graduate.

Levine began his career on the fringe of a film industry then dominated by Hollywood, as an exhibitor in New England during the 1930s. His first theatre was in New Haven, Connecticut. After the Second World War, he saw a gap in the system and began to import films for placement into the growing number of art theaters. His chief supply ground was Italy and its widely respected neorealist films. In time he would import such noted Italian films as Divorce—Italian Style, Two Women, and 8 1/2.

But fame and power for Joseph E. Levine came from an altogether different type of film. In 1959 he established Embassy Pictures Corporation, and in a notoriously extravagant publicity campaign, began to put spectacles such as Hercules, starring American muscleman Steve Reeves, into theaters desperate for a product for the new teenage audiences. The cost of Hercules was half the price of a Hollywood spectacle because it was made in Italy and then dubbed into English. As a result of matching audience, publicity, and lower costs, Hercules grossed more than $20 million on a cost of only a couple of million.

Levine was on a roll. He signed to work with Paramount, and in 1963, he produced The Carpetbaggers, starring George Peppard, Alan Ladd, and Carroll Baker. This was the studio with its biggest hit in a decade. Although, as with Hercules, newspaper reviewers found the film camp at best and trash at worst, The Carpetbaggers was only surpassed at the box office by two other films during 1964.

In the late 1960s Levine hit his peak. He formed his own company, Avco Embassy, and in 1967 turned out The Graduate, a film that cost less than $3 million to make, but grossed in excess of $100 million and set off the era of the youth-oriented blockbuster film. Levine had taken a big chance. Director Mike Nichols had only directed Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf?; Dustin Hoffman had only made low-budget films and TV advertisements. By the time all the dollars had been counted, The Graduate had finished as the top box-office attraction of 1967 and was then ranked third, to Gone with the Wind and The Sound of Music, on Variety’s list of all-time box-office champions.

But Levine could not sustain his success into the 1970s. In 1974 he ended his participation in Avco Embassy. Films such as Carnal Knowledge and The Day of the Dolphin did little to advance his career. A Bridge Too Far in 1977 was Levine’s swansong as a major producer. A new breed of independent producers, baby boom era movie brats such as Steven Spielberg and George Lucas, had captured the day.

—Douglas Gomery

LEWTON, Val

Producer. Nationality: American. Born: Vladimir Ivan Leventon in Yalta, Russia, 7 May 1904; emigrated to the United States at age seven. Education: Attended Columbia University, New York. Family: Nephew of the actress Alla Nazimova. Married Ruth (Lewton); one daughter, one son. Career: Writer: novels published under his own name and as Carlos Keith, Cosmo Forbes, and Herbert Kerkow; worked in MGM publicity department; 1933–42 —editorial assistant to David O. Selznick; also wrote radio scripts (The Luck of Joan Christopher, 1933); 1942—in charge of low-budget RKO production unit. Died: Of heart attack, in Hollywood, California, 14 March 1951.

Films as Producer:

1942 Cat People (J. Tourneur)
1943 I Walked with a Zombie (J. Tourneur); The Leopard Man (J. Tourneur); The Seventh Man (Robson); The Ghost Ship (Robson)
1944 Mademoiselle Fifi (Wise); Youth Runs Wild (Robson); The Curse of the Cat People (Wise and von Fritsch)
1945 The Body Snatcher (Wise); Isle of the Dead (Robson)
1946 Bedlam (Robson)
1949 My Own True Love (Bennett)
1950 Please Believe Me (Taurog)
1951 Apache Drums (Fregonese)

Publications

By LEWTON: fiction—

Improved Road, Edinburgh, 1925.
No Bed of Her Own, New York, 1932.
Yearly Lease, New York, 1932.
A Laughing Woman, New York, 1933.
This Fool, Passion, New York, 1934.

By LEWTON: other books—

Panther Skin and Grapes (verse), London, 1923.
The Green Flag of Jehad (nonfiction), New York, 1926.
The Rogue Song (novelization of screenplay), New York, 1930.
Rasputin and the Empress (novelization of screenplay), New York, 1933.

On LEWTON: books—

On LEWTON: articles—

Sight and Sound (London), May 1951.
Cinema (Los Angeles), March 1966.
Focus on Film (London), Winter 1972.

Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), vol. 10, no. 1, 1982.

Post Script (Jacksonville, Florida), Winter 1982.

American Classic Screen (Shawnee Mission, Kansas), May-June 1983.

Cinémagraphe (Paris), May 1984.

Brunas, M., “‘The Cat Behind the Door!’ in Scarlet Street (Glen Rock), Fall 1995.

Fischer, D., in Aspects of Fantasy (Forest Park), no. 6, 1996.

Ambrogio, A., “What if The Uninvited Had Haunted Universal or RKO?” in Midnight Marquee (Baltimore), Spring 1997.

* * *

A minor novelist and story editor for David O. Selznick, Val Lewton joined RKO Studios in 1942 to form a “horror” unit, producing low-budget films to compete with Universal’s successful monster series. Gathering him young but talented directors like Jacques Tourneur, Mark Robson, and Robert Wise, and writers like DeWitt Bodeen and Ardel Wray, Lewton put together a production group that turned out a string of critically acclaimed and financially successful films between 1942 and 1946. More than simply the producer for this group, Lewton served as a kind of creative center-piece, overseeing every project, and contributing his considerable skills as a writer and judge of what is cinematic.

While forced to work within a number of severe limitations, Lewton did find substantial room for creativity within the horror/fantasy format. The budgets for his films typically ran to $150,000 and the shooting schedules to approximately 28 days. Whenever possible, standing sets were used and RKO contract players employed. And since the films were slated for double bills, running time seldom exceeded 75 minutes. Given these conditions, along with studio-assigned, audience-tested titles, Lewton and his coworkers were generally free of front-office interference in the design and shooting of their films. Thus when faced with an assigned title like I Walked with a Zombie, they could essentially discard the original magazine piece on which the film was to be based and instead adapt Jane Eyre to a West Indies setting, or even create a thoughtful study of childhood anxiety and fantasy out of The Curse of the Cat People. That such creative developments were largely Lewton’s own doing is attested to by his coworkers on the horror unit. Not only did he often initiate specific projects, but, as his secretary notes, for each screenplay “the last draft was always his.”

What is probably most distinctive about the nine fantasy films and two melodramas Lewton produced between 1942 and 1946, though, is their visual style. While most horror films of the period, and especially the Universal series, emphasized horrific appearances—wolffmen and Frankenstein monsters in exotic locales—Lewton’s productions capitalized on limitation by employing suggestion, leaving portions of every shot in shadow and inviting viewers to populate the screen with whatever terrors they might imagine. As he described his guiding strategy, “If you make the screen dark enough, the mind’s eye will read anything into it you want! We’re great ones for dark patches.” Through the strategic placement of shadows and sharp editing, viewers could thus be primed to expect an attacking panther in Cat People, even though nothing more than a bus appears, or to interpret a tumbleweed as a leopard in The Leopard Man.

This emphasis on “dark patches” represents more than just a stylistic trait, though. It points to Lewton’s consistent concern with how we see and understand the world around us. Throughout the Lewton films, after all, there are characters who suffer, or cause suffering for others, because they have such a narrow perspective, one determined by their rational biases or, with Cat People’s protagonist, their superstitious beliefs—in effect, because of certain “dark patches” within their psyches. What Lewton apparently realized is that the greatest terrors are not necessarily in our environment, but in the mind, which in turn represses our fears or projects them onto others, thereby filling the surrounding world with horrors of our own devising. Thus the play of shadows, of light and dark in these films is not simply atmospheric. If monsters do show up in them, they take in their true shape from a basic human inability to dispel the darkness inside us, or from our failure to accept those ambiguities that characterize the human world. For this reason, the Lewton films often employ unlikely, even unconventional, threatening figures, such as an anthropologist in The Leopard Man and a doctor in The Body Snatcher. Such figures of authority gone mad underscore the very fragile nature of the world we construct for ourselves.

Removed from this fantasy formula and paired with less talented directors, Lewton was not as successful. After leaving RKO to work as an independent writer and producer, he turned out only three films, none of which earned the critical praise of his earlier movies. It is that early work, and particularly the fantasy films, that would influence filmmakers like Alfred Hitchcock and Brian De Palma, and would prompt James Agee to praise the “gentle, pleasing, resourceful kind of talent” that Lewton brought to the movie industry.

—J. P. Telotte

LHOMME, Pierre

Cinematographer. Nationality: French. Born: Boulogne-sur-Seine, 5 April 1930. Education: French public school through lycée; studied at the École Normale des Ponts et des Chaussées (technical school for civil engineering). Career: Worked as an assistant cameraman; 1961—works on Saint Tropez Blues; 1963—receives acclaim for his work on Le Joli mai; 1990—receives critical acclaim for his work on Cyrano de Bergerac. Awards: Cannes Film Festival, Technical Grand Prize, for Cyrano de Bergerac, 1990; French Academy of Film Arts Award, Best Cinematography, for Cyrano de Bergerac, 1991; British Society of Cinematographers, Best Cinematography Award, for Cyrano de Bergerac, 1992; British Academy of Film and Television Award, Best Cinematography, for Cyrano de Bergerac, 1992.
Films as Cinematographer:

1961 Saint Tropez Blues (Moussy); Le Combat dans l’île (Cavali-er, Malle)
1963 Le Joli mai (Marker)
1965 La Vie de château (Graciously Living) (Rappeneau); Le Mistral (Ivans)
1966 Le Roi de coeur (de Broca)
1967 Mise à sac (Cavaliér); Coplan sauve sa peau (Devil’s Garden) (Boisset); Le Plus vieux métier du monde (The Oldest Profession in the World) (Autant-Laro, Bolognini)
1968 À bientôt j’espère (Marker); Le Dernier homme (The Last Man) (Bitsch); La Chamade (Cavaliér)
1969 La Coqueluche (Arrighi); L’Armée des ombres (Army In the Shadows) (Melville); Mister Freedom (Klein)
1971 La Vieille file (Blance); Someone Behind the Door (Gessner); Quatre nuits d’un rêveur (Four Nights of a Dreamer) (Bresson)
1973 La Maman et la putain (The Mother and the Whore) (Eustache); Je sais rien mais je dirai tout (Richard); Le Sex Shop (Berri)
1974 Sweet Movie (Makavejev); La Solitude du chanteur de fond (The Loneliness of the Long Distance Singer) (Marker); La Chair de l’orchidée (Flesh of the Orchid) (Chéreau)
1975 Le Sauvage (The Savage) (Rappeneau); Die Große Ekstase (Berry)
1976 Une sale histoire (Eustache); Les Enfants du placard (Jacquot); Dites-lui que je l’aime (This Sweet Sickness) (Miller)
1977 L’État sauvage (The Savage State) (Gired); Judith Therpauve (Chéreau)
1979 Retour à la bien-aimée (Adam)
1981 Tout feu, tout flamme (All Fired Up) (Rappeneau); Qua-rtet (Ivory)
1983 Mortelle randonnée (Deadly Run) (Miller); Le Grand carnaval (Arcady)
1985 Urgence (Bhrat)
1986 My Little Girl (Kaisernan); Champagne amér (Secret Obsession) (Beli, Vart)
1987 Maurice (Ivory)
1988 Baptême (Feret); Camille Claudel (Nuytten)
1990 Cyrano de Bergerac (Rappeneau)
1991 Homo Faber (Voyager) (Schlöndorff)
1992 Promenades d’été (Summer Strolls) (Feret)
1993 Toxic Affair (Esposito)
1994 Dieu que les femmes sont amoureuses (Oh God, Women Are So Loving) (Clément)
1995 Jefferson in Paris (Ivory)
1996 Mon homme (My Man) (Blier); Anna Oz (Rochant)
1997 Les Palmes de M. Schutz (Pinoteau)
1998 Voleur de vie (Stolen Life) (Pinoteau)
1999 Cotton Mary (Merchant)

* * *

Although he remains virtually unknown and although he has escaped critical attention, cinematographer Pierre Lhomme has had a long and distinguished career, working with some of the most highly acclaimed directors and filmmakers of the modern era, including Jean-Pierre Melville, Robert Bresson, and Volker Schlöndorff. Lhomme worked on Saint Tropez Blues in 1961, but his first landmark film was Chris Marker’s Le Joli mai, filmed in 1963. This film, a presentation of Paris in the early 1960s, is a documentary which captures the pulse of an international capital in the throes of (post)modernization. Lhomme’s cinematography focuses on the people, the action, the movement of the time, and gives the film the high-realism necessary for such a socially real motion picture. The collaboration between Lhomme and Marker was such a success that the two worked together again on Marker’s 1968 film, À bientôt j’espère and his 1974 film, La Solitude du chanteur de fond (The Loneliness of the Long Distance Singer).

Apart from his early work with Marker, Lhomme has also cultivated two other long-standing collaborative relationships, the first with French filmmaker Jean-Paul Rappeneau, and the second with Ismaël Merchant and James Ivory. Lhomme first worked with Rappeneau in 1965 on the film La Vie de château (Graciously Living), a comedy set during the German occupation of France. Subsequently, the two collaborated on Le Sauvage (The Savage) in 1975, and Tout feu, tout flamme (All Fired Up) in 1981. By far the most well known and most acclaimed film produced by the team Rappeneau-Lhomme, however, was 1990s Cyrano de Bergerac, an adaption of Rostand’s play by the same name. With Cyrano, Lhomme reveals his expert ability to film historical drama. The camera in Cyrano captures all of the detail worked into the setting and costume of the film—the details of fabric, the dim, interior lighting, the grit and grime of battle. There is also a concentrated use of close-up, which serves to remind the viewer that this film was based upon a play. The closely framed shots of Cyrano, Roxanne, and others replicate the more intimate viewing experience of the theater, while the panoramics point to the specific possibilities of cinema. Lhomme’s work on Cyrano earned him several prestigious awards, including a César and a BAFTA award. To date, it remains his most critically acclaimed piece of work.

Lhomme’s work with Merchant and Ivory dates to his work on the 1981 film Quartet. This film also reveals Lhomme’s talent for historical drama. Here the setting is 1920s Paris, and the details of the period are richly captured in Lhomme’s shots of smoky nightclubs and upper middle class apartments. Lhomme has gone on to make three other films with Merchant and Ivory, including Maurice (1987), Jefferson in Paris (1995), and Cotton Mary (1999). All three, also historical dramas, illustrate Lhomme’s attention to detail in his filming of costume and setting, and his talent for recreating the ambiance of any particular country at any particular moment in time.

In addition to such collaborative endeavors, Lhomme has contributed to the work of other directors with whom he has worked only once. His cinematography in Robert Bresson’s 1971 film, Quatre nuits d’un rêveur (Four Nights of a Dreamer) for example, adequately captures the sober, ascetic, almost dream-like hyper-realism so characteristic of Bresson’s work. The film, based on a short story by Dostoyevsky, recounts four days in the life of a young man and his encounter with a young woman on a bridge. Bresson turns the story into a meditation on youth, and Lhomme contributes to this an elegant simplicity that focuses the spectator on the act of looking—looking at youth, looking at life.

Another particularly good example of Lhomme’s ability to capture light, emotion, and the feel of an age is his work on Bruno Nuytten’s Camille Claudel (1988). The film, based on the life of sculptor Camille Claudel, is striking for its whiteness, the white of plaster cast, of Parisian sunlight, of canvas, and Lhomme’s camera work emphasizes this whiteness without blinding the spectator. Furthermore, his presentation of Isabelle Adjani in the role of Camille works to show the torment and emotion of the volatile female artist, trapped in a man’s world.
Lhomme’s films span several eras of modern filmmaking, from the New Wave to the Postmodern, from documentary to comedy to drama. The fact that he has worked on so many films, and with so many renowned filmmakers is, perhaps, an even greater testament to his talent as a cinematographer than the awards he has received.

—Dayna Oscherwitz

LITTLETON, Carol

Films as Editor:

1977 Legacy (Arthur)
1978 The Mafu Cage (My Sister, My Love) (Arthur)
1979 French Postcards (Huyck)
1980 Roadie (Rudolph)
1981 Body Heat (Kasdan)
1982 E.T. — The Extraterrestrial (Spielberg)
1983 The Big Chill (Kasdan)
1984 Places in the Heart (Benton)
1985 Silverado (Kasdan)
1986 Brighton Beach Memoirs (Saks)
1987 Swimming to Cambodia (Demme)
1988 Vibes (Kwapis); The Accidental Tourist (Kasdan)
1990 White Palace (Mandoki)
1991 The Search for Signs of Intelligent Life in the Universe (Bailey); Grand Canyon (Kasdan)
1993 Benny & Joon (Chechik)
1994 China Moon (Bailey) (co); Wyatt Earp (Kasdan)
1996 Diabolique (Chechik)
1998 Twilight (Benton); Beloved (Jonathan Demme)
1999 Mumford (Kasdan); Tuesdays with Morrie (Mick Jackson—for TV)

Publications

On LITTLETON: books—

Oldham, Gabriella, First Cut: Conversations with Film Editors, 1992.

On LITTLETON: articles—

* * *

Editor Carol Littleton’s music training is evident in the lyrical images that open Places in the Heart. Pictures of people populating a dustbowl town during the Great Depression may epitomize her work, a gentle evocation of humanity undergoing some emotionally trying struggle of common rather than Herculean tests.

Her greatest achievements in structuring film images seem to fall into quiet, understated imagery. Even with the fantastical elements of E.T., for which she received an Academy Award nomination for her editing, Littleton emphasized the simple magic of the friendship between the boy, Elliott, and his alien visitor in a manner suitable to François Truffaut. While it may have been an unlikely approach to science-fiction fantasy, it surely had much to do with why audiences responded to the fable. Even hardened audiences warmed to this sentimental and charming story.

With frequent collaborator Lawrence Kasdan, Littleton has helped bring warmth to The Accidental Tourist and the entertaining The Big Chill, two of his successes. The stylish Body Heat, revisiting Hollywood’s film noir, brought imitation after imitation, perhaps including Littleton’s own collaboration with her husband, cinematographer John Bailey, in his foray as director with China Moon. Kasdan and Littleton also worked together on two Westerns, Silverado and Wyatt Earp, the former a superficial homage to childhood oaters and the latter windy, dry, and far too long.

Littleton has said that simplicity is the key and that, while many editors have great technical knowledge, those that “can make a film purely emotional at the same time’’ are rarer. And in fact Littleton’s best work seems simple on the surface but has an underlying emotional core that strikes a real note for audiences. Friendship could be said to be at the heart of E.T., Places in the Heart, and most of her work with director Kasdan and this is some of her most successful work artistically.

Even in the less-pleasing films Littleton has edited, such as Vibes, Brighton Beach Memoirs and the remake of Diabolique, critics take note of the assistance that she has given the work. The film may not be good, but Littleton as editor has helped make it a little better.

The editor’s role is unspecific and anonymous, according to Littleton; it is much like that of a symphony conductor who pulls diverse elements together in an attempt to make a cohesive whole. Her best work seems to emphasize affection and humanity that is clearly heartfelt.

—Allen Grant Richards

LOEW, Marcus

Executive. Nationality: American. Born: New York City, 7 May 1870. Education: Left school at age six to sell newspapers. Family: Married Caroline, 1894; twin sons: David and Arthur. Career: Worked as a salesman and a furrier; formed People’s Vaudeville Company to produce variety shows in New York City and environs, Marcus Loew

1904; founded Loew’s Theatrical Enterprises, New York City, 1910, which is reorganized as Loew’s, Inc., 1919; acquired Metro Pictures Corporation, Hollywood, 1919; opened 3500-seat flagship Loew’s State Theater in Times Square, New York City, 1921; acquired Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and Louis B. Mayer Productions, 1924, which are merged with Metro to create Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer (MGM); retired, 1926. Died: In Long Island, New York, 5 September 1927.

Publications

On LOEW: books—

Hay, Peter, with Woolsey Ackerman, MGM-When the Lion Roars, Atlanta, 1991.

Executive Marcus Loew was the founder of Loew’s, Inc., a huge entertainment company which grew from a New York City theater circuit presenting vaudeville and early moving pictures into one of Hollywood’s most successful integrated film corporations. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, the grandest of studios during Hollywood’s Golden Age, was in reality only the production arm of this powerful firm. Like all vintage Hollywood businesses, Loew’s, Inc. was an oligopoly which produced, distributed, and exhibited movies during what is now known as Hollywood’s studio era, a period running roughly from the silent era of the 1920s through the 1950s.

Like the other major film corporations of the era, Loew’s was also a bi-coastal enterprise in which the Hollywood production (or ‘creative’) branch was carefully monitored and financially controlled by the New York/east coast executive branch. As the president of Loew’s, Inc., Marcus Loew himself was never actively involved in the making of motion pictures, but instead hired and supervised film creators from the company’s corporate offices in New York City. At the same time, he built up a nationwide chain of theaters which were as essential a part of this interlocking system as the studio production unit. Loew never lived in Hollywood, preferring instead to reside in his palatial mansion by the sea in Glen Cove, Long Island.

Loew was born to emigrant parents on Manhattan’s Lower East Side in 1870. His father was a Viennese waiter, and his mother a German widow. Like many future moguls, Loew had an impoverished childhood, and quit school to work while still a young child. After a variety of unsuccessful pursuits, primarily in the garment industry, Loew developed a relationship with another future mogul, Adolph Zukor, whom he had met during an unsuccessful stint in the fur trade. Zukor, a Jewish emigrant from a small village in Hungary, would later build Paramount Pictures, and it was through him that Marcus Loew first became involved in the entertainment business, investing in several Zukor ventures, including several lucrative penny arcades in New York City.

With an actor friend, David Warfield, Loew formed his own People’s Vaudeville Company in 1904. People’s first venture was a Manhattan amusement arcade, and within months they opened four more in New York City, with a fifth in Cincinnati, Ohio. While in Cincinnati, Loew witnessed an early exhibition of moving pictures, and was impressed by the audiences it attracted. He installed a 110-seat theater above his Penny Hippodrome in Cincinnati, which opened to huge crowds. Loew soon converted all of his arcades into theaters which offered affordable variety shows of vaudeville and early moving pictures. Gradually expanding his business in New York and environs, Loew was finally established in the entertainment industry.

By 1910 Loew’s theatrical empire had expanded along the east coast, and Loew’s Consolidated Entertainment was incorporated with one of Loew’s early managers, Nicholas Schenck, as secretary-treasurer. With World War I, the focus of the American entertainment business shifted from vaudeville to movies. Loew’s Consolidated was still geared only for motion picture exhibition, and Loew only gradually realized that like the other integrated majors (such as Famous Players-Lassky and First National), he needed to expand into the production and distribution of films. In 1919 Loew purchased Metro Pictures Corporation, which had been formed in 1915 to produce and market the films of five small Hollywood production companies. The acquisition motivated the birth of the new and reorganized Loew’s, Inc., which moved Loew into the motion picture business in earnest. In 1921 Metro’s The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse, starring Rudolph Valentino, became a huge hit.
In 1924 Loew’s further expanded his Hollywood empire by acquiring the foundering Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and Louis B. Mayer Productions. This key deal included the large Goldwyn studios in Culver City, and a supervisory production team which included Mayer himself and the 24-year-old Hollywood production wonderboy, Irving G. Thalberg. Thus a new and major Loew’s subsidiary, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer (MGM), was created on May 17, 1924. With Goldwyn Pictures had come a small chain of theaters, including another Times Square property, the Capitol, but the prime incentive was the Goldwyn production facility itself. The Culver City studio had been built around 1915 as Triangle Pictures by pioneering film-maker Thomas Ince and included 45 acres of self-contained production facilities. As MGM this complex of soundstages and backlots would expand throughout the next two decades into one of the greatest and most lavish production units of the studio era.

But Loew would not live to see the great organization he created expand to its full potential. Loew died in 1927, a year after the release of the second of his company’s hits, the silent version of Ben Hur, and two years after MGM’s first major production, King Vidor’s The Big Parade, had grossed over $5 million. Loew was the first of the pioneering moguls to pass away, and one of the most respected and well-loved in this early phase of the industry. He left behind an estate estimated at over $30 million.

Loew’s, Inc., and MGM persisted as major players in the history of American film after Loew’s death. Nicholas Schenck succeeded Loew as president of the company from 1927 to 1955. A short-lived merger instigated by William Fox created Fox-Loew’s from 1928 until 1930, but the largest entertainment conglomerate up to that point in history was soon broken up by early government anti-trust action. In Hollywood, Mayer and Thalberg honed MGM into the most financially and artistically successful studio of the Great Depression, while Schenck and Mayer continued to supervise production into the 1950s. Loew’s son, Arthur, supervised the company’s extensive overseas expansion, and acted as president for one year in 1955 after Schenck’s retirement. After the monopolistic production/exhibition system was finally disbanded by government trust-busting in the late 1940s and most of Loew’s theaters were razed, MGM like the other troubled Hollywood studios survived into the 1960s with varying degrees of success. In 1969 Loew’s sold off its famous Culver City MGM backlots, and the artifacts of Loew’s most famous creation went on the auction block. What remains of the original MGM studio is now Sony Pictures, and Loew’s west coast flagship theater, Loew’s State, still stands on Broadway in the historic but now sadly decaying old downtown of Los Angeles.

—Ross Care

LOOS, Anita

Died: In New York City, 18 August 1981.

Films as Writer:

1912 The New York Hat (Griffith)
1913 The Power of the Camera; The Telephone Girl and the Lady (Griffith—short); A Horse on Bill (Powell); The Hicksville Epicure (Henderson); Highbrow Love (O’Sullivan); Pa Says (Powell); The Widow’s Kids (Powell); The Lady in Black; His Hoodoo (Powell); A Fallen Hero (Powell); A Cure for Suffragettes (Kirkwood); The Suicide Pact (Powell); Bink’s Vacation (Bink Runs Away); How the Day Was Saved (Powell); The Wedding Gown (Powell); Gentleman or Thief; For Her Father’s Sins (O’Brien); A Narrow Escape; The Mother; The Lady and the Mouse (short); The Mistake (short)
1914 Hickville’s Finest; His Awful Vengeance; The Saving Grace (Cabanne); A Bunch of Flowers; When a Woman Guides; The Road to Plaindale; The Saving Presence; The Meal Ticket; The Suffering of Susan; Nearly a Barglar’s Bride; Some Bull’s Daughter; The Fatal Dress Suit; The Girl in the Shack; The Stolen Masterpiece (Pollard); A Corner in Hats;
The Million Dollar Bride; A Flurry in Art; Billy’s Rival (Izzy and His Rival) (Taylor—short); The Last Drink of Whiskey (Dillon); Nell’s Eugenic Wedding; The White Slave Catchers; The Deceiver (Dillon); How to Keep a Husband; The Gangsters of New York (short); The Hunchback; A Lesson in Mechanics

1915 The Deacon’s Whiskers (Dillon); The Tear on the Page; Pennington’s Choice (Lund); Sympathy Sal; Mixed Values (Dillon); The Fatal Finger Prints (Dillon); Lord Chamley; The Sisters (short); A Ten-Cent Adventure (short); When the Road Parts (short); Double Trouble; The Lost House

1916 The Little Liar (Ingraham); A Corner in Cotton (Balshofer); Intolerance (Griffith); Macbeth (Emerson); Stranded (Ingraham); Wild Girl of the Sierras (Powell); A Calico Vampire; Laundry Liz; The French Milliner; The Wharf Rat (Withey); The Half-Breed (Dwan); American Aristocracy (Ingraham); A Daughter of the Poor

1917 Wild and Woolly (Emerson); Down to Earth (Emerson); The Deadly Glass of Beer

1926 The Whole Town’s Talking (Edward Laemmle)

1927 Stranded (Rosen); Publicity Madness (Ray)

1929 The Struggle (Griffith)

1931 Ex-Bad Boy (Moore)

1934 The Social Register (Neill)

1938 Gentlemen Prefer Blondes (Hawks)

1945 Gentlemen Marry Brunettes (Sale)

1931 The Struggle (Griffith)

1934 The Girl from Missouri (Conway)

Publications

By LOOS: fiction—

Gentlemen Prefer Blondes, New York, 1925 (play version, with John Emerson, New York, 1926).

A Mouse Is Born, New York, 1951.

By LOOS: other books—

With John Emerson, How to Write Photoplays (includes script The Love Expert), New York, 1920.

With John Emerson, Breaking into the Movies (includes script Red Hot Romance), New York, 1921.

With John Emerson, The Whole Town’s Talking (play), New York, 1925.

Happy Birthday (play), New York, 1947.

Gigi (play), New York, 1952.

A Girl Like I (autobiography), New York, 1966.

The King’s Mare (play), London, 1967.

By LOOS: articles—

Close Up (London), April 1928.

InterView (New York), July 1972.

On LOOS: book—

On LOOS: articles—

Schmidt, Karl, “The Handwriting on the Screen,” in Everybody’s (New York), May 1917.

Film Dope (Nottingham), February 1987.

* * *

At the early age of 16, Anita Loos began her career in films by scripting over 100 scenarios for D.W. Griffith’s Biograph Company. She is credited with writing the subtitles for D.W. Griffith’s Biograph Company. She was also proficient in slapstick comedy and wrote with the opportunity to let loose with her wise-cracks that teased the everyday events. Indeed, her original use of intertitles provided her with the opportunity to let loose with her wise-cracks that teased the picture. She was also proficient in slapstick comedy and wrote a number of half-reels featuring the Keystone Kops.

It was Loos, with her husband the director John Emerson (who assumed much of the credit for her creative endeavors) who first realized that Douglas Fairbanks’s acrobatics were an extension of his effervescent personality. Loos, Emerson, and Fairbanks worked as a unit in Griffith’s company and parlayed Fairbanks’s natural athletic ability into swashbuckling adventure roles. Never missing a chance for satire, Loos (the “‘O’Henrietta of the Screen’”) parodied not only the nouveau riche American industrialist but also Fairbanks’s own star persona in American Aristocracy. The scenario for the film is typical of Loos’s humor: Fairbanks foils a buccaneer who is sending powder to Mexico in the guise of malted milk and as the result of his adventurous exploits wins the heart of a hatpin king’s daughter. In pursuit of the villain, Fairbanks vaults a dozen walls and fences. He readies himself to leap at a window ten feet above the ground when he suddenly decides to take the easy way out and opens a basement window, climbing in the building like an ordinary mortal. Loos wrote other humorous films which firmly established Fairbanks as a major leading man of the American screen. Americans’ love of publicity was ridiculed in His Picture in the Papers and pacifism was satirized in In Again, Out Again.

Loos left the Griffith studio in 1925 and moved east with her husband. During her brief “retirement” from the film colony, she wrote the durable story of Lorelei Lee, Gentlemen Prefer Blondes. The story was quite successful as a novel, broadway musical, and film. Loos and Herman J. Mankiewicz cowrote the intertitles for the original silent film version directed by Mal St. Clair in 1928. Howard Hawks’s Gentlemen Prefer Blondes (1953) was an adaptation of the stage play and featured Marilyn Monroe as Lorelei and Jane Russell as her dark-haired girlfriend. Through the perils of Lorelei, the amoral and dim-witted young blond from Little Rock, Loos poked fun at male-female relationships. The blonde’s flirtations and the gullible millionaires who surrounded her provided Loos with rich material gleefully to expose the merchandising of sexuality.

Loos returned to Hollywood and worked for MGM during the Irving Thalberg reign. She took over the writing duties from F. Scott Fitzgerald on the Harlow vehicle Red-Headed Woman. She also wrote Hold Your Man starring Harlow and Clark Gable. Gable, Jeanette MacDonald, and Spencer Tracy were featured in the Loos script for San Francisco. This large-scale Hollywood soap opera evolved around San Francisco at the time of the great earthquake. Loos and the veteran MGM scriptwriter Jane Murfin adapted Clare Booth Luce’s venomous comedy The Women to the screen; it featured an all-woman cast including Norma Shearer, Rosalind Russell, Paullette Goddard, and Joan Crawford.

—Doreen Barton

LOQUASTO, Santo

Production Designer and Costume Designer. Nationality: American. Born: Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, 26 July 1944. Education: Received B.A. from King’s College in Pennsylvania; attended Yale School of Drama, majoring in design, 1969. Career: Worked in regional theater, late 1960s; worked as set designer for Broadway and off-Broadway productions, 1970 to the present; worked as set designer for opera, including the San Diego Opera, Opera Society of Washington, and San Francisco Spring Opera, 1970s; worked as costume and set designer for contemporary choreographers such as Mark Morris, Twyla Tharp, and Paul Taylor, 1970s-80s; began working as a costume designer and production designer for films, 1975. Awards: Tony Award for Costume Design, for The Cherry Orchard, 1977; Best Production Design British Academy Award, for Radio Days, 1987; Tony Award for Costume Design, for Grand Hotel, 1990.

Films as Costume Designer:

1978 Sammy Stops the World (Shapiro)
1980 Simon (Brickman); Stardust Memories (W. Allen)
1982 A Midsummer’s Night Sex Comedy (W. Allen)
1983 Zelig (W. Allen)
1985 Desperately Seeking Susan (Seidelman)

Films as Production Designer:

1975 Rancho Deluxe (Perry)
1981 The Fan (Bianchi); So Fine (A. Bergman)
1984 Falling in Love (Grosbard)
1985 Desperately Seeking Susan (S. Seidelman) (+ costume designer)
1987 Radio Days (W. Allen); September (W. Allen)
1988 Big (P. Marshall); Bright Lights, Big City (J. Bridges); Another Woman (W. Allen)
1989 “Oedipus Wrecks” ep. of New York Stories (W. Allen); She-Devil (S. Seidelman); Crimes and Misdemeanors (W. Allen)
1990 Alice (W. Allen)
1992 Shadows and Fog (W. Allen); Husbands and Wives (W. Allen)
1993 Manhattan Murder Mystery (W. Allen)
1994 Bullets over Broadway (W. Allen)
1995 Mighty Aphrodite (W. Allen)
1996 Everyone Says I Love You (W. Allen)
1997 Deconstructing Harry (W. Allen)
1998 Celebrity (W. Allen)
1999 Sweet and Lowdown (W. Allen)
2000 Small Time Crooks (W. Allen)

Publications

On LOQUASTO: articles—

Santo Loquasto is one of the most imaginative and sought-after production designers for stage and screen. The hallmark of his work is his attention to all details no matter how large or how small and his ability to capture the mood of a script by the establishment of a physical context.

What has come to be recognized as “The Loquasto Style” was introduced to Hollywood in 1980 when Loquasto served as costume designer on the Marshall Brickman film Simon. But it is with his work with director Woody Allen that he began to take on the challenge of making the physical elements of a film operate on the same level as the emotional ones. Starting as a costume designer on Allen’s early work, culminating in Zelig for which he received an Academy Award nomination, he graduated to the role of production designer on Allen’s 1987 Radio Days. According to Allen, “What distinguishes Santo is his degree of inspiration.” Unlike other designers, he does not simply do the job but brings an exceptional level of creativity to it. Loquasto interprets his role of a production designer as being responsible for everything that the camera sees other than the actors. He credits his primary influences as being the films of Hollywood’s classic years, particularly the films of Fred Astaire. He feels that these films incorporate such vital elements as pattern, sculpture, and illusion into a very definite sense of style. Another influence on Loquasto is the work of cinematographer Gordon Willis with whom he collaborated on the film Bright Lights, Big City. For this film Willis took the “hip” personal style of the main character and reinforced it through the physical and visual elements of the setting. Through this experience, Loquasto developed the belief that scenery can subtly convey real stature and emotion, without intruding on the story itself.

The diverse group of films Woody Allen has directed in the 1980s and 1990s has provided an opportunity for Loquasto to display his own creative talents in a multiplicity of settings. His sets have embodied the periods from the 1920s to the 1990s, yet they share one unifying characteristic: all display the many faces of New York City. Loquasto has used various aspects of New York to create a World War II ambiance for Radio Days; an FAO Schwarz fantasyland for director Penny Marshall’s Big; a yuppiefied Manhattan for James Bridges’ Bright Lights, Big City; silk-stocking and net-stocking Manhattan for Mighty Aphrodite; a period literary vision for Bullets Over Broadway; contemporary literary Manhattan and attractive suburbia for Deconstructing Harry; upper East Side upper-middle-class Manhattan for Manhattan Murder Mystery; gentrified Manhattan for Everyone Says I Love You; a more funky, freewheeling downtown for Susan Seidelman’s Desperately Seeking Susan; and an array of New York uptown and downtown environs and outer-borough ambience for Celebrity. But Loquasto is equally adept at designing a non-New York film. Sweet and Lowdown, set in the 1930s, may be the rare Woody Allen feature with an outside-the-city storyline, yet Loquasto richly evokes a believably authentic time and place.

In preparing for a film, Loquasto compiles background information on all the principal characters. He then creates environments that would be compatible with the personality of each and imbues them with a sense of complete reality. As a production designer, he works to create a mood for the film but he instinctively understands the truly collaborative nature of film work. In his view, the power of the film is ultimately in the hands of the director and cinematographer. Yet, Loquasto believes that he can give the cinematographer the raw materials—tonality, visual character information, and the physical composition of the settings even though the final decisions are not in his hands. Nonetheless, because he has collaborated over and over with Woody Allen and Carlo Di Palma (the cinematographer of the majority of Allen’s films he has designed), Loquasto has a sense of their design requirements and can almost instinctively provide them with the “look” they need.

Loquasto considers his forte to be period stories and particularly enjoys the opportunity to go into what he terms “real spaces.” For example, in Radio Days, he found a small Hebrew school on New York’s Attorney Street which had a crumbling brick facade that worked perfectly to convey an old-world feeling. For the Diane Weis character in Bullets over Broadway, an apartment setting was needed that did not include views of the Empire State Building or the Chrysler Building—no small requirement when the financial status of the character and the available buildings in its price range were taken into consideration. As a result of his never-ending travels around the city, Loquasto found an ideal apartment in lower Manhattan that both reflected the character’s personality and status and maintained the “period” feel of the rest of the film. What is interesting about using actual locations, Loquasto reflects, “is how much further visually many of the places are decorated than I would have taken them, the sort of thing you would never do yourself because you think, ‘well, this is too much.’”

530
On his period films, Allen prefers to employ a brighter color palette than on his contemporary works. For Radio Days which portrays New York in the 1940s, Loquasto designed vibrant greens, yellows, and oranges mixed with bold period patterns. In Bullets over Broadway, he switched to bright reds and yellows to vividly depict a literary world of the city a decade earlier, populated by gangsters, molls, and pretentious theater types. Both films were bathed in a golden hue because Allen and Di Palma insist that this type of lighting works best for period pieces and provides added texture to the characters who inhabit this world.

Loquasto admits that working on Allen’s films requires a great deal of spontaneity and ‘‘on the spot’’ creativity because the scripts are not always completely fleshed out. A significant example is the 1992 Shadows and Fog. The script, which recounts the story of a night-stalking strangler who terrifies a city, provided no description of the various locations. As Loquasto began to prepare for the film, there were only two pieces of information that the production designer could count on. The first was that the story took place around the general time of World War I in an imaginary Eastern European city, and the second was that Allen wanted a place that was full of anxiety and paranoia.

Loquasto began with a scaled-down model of what he thought the city would resemble but Allen was not happy with it. Finally, the designer put together a full-scale city complete with a flowing river and crumbling Gothic church. The finished product consisted of winding streets, jagged rooftops, and leaning facades to give physical form to the disorientation of the main character.

A second challenge was the fact that the film was to be shot in black and white, which raised issues of color and contrast. If the actual colors of the sets were too close in value, they would wipe each other out. The sets, props, and costumes were tested both individually and in relation to each other to ensure that the proper contrasts were achieved in the finished film.

In the final analysis, Loquasto’s strength is his close attention to the small details of setting and decor which, while only a small aspect of what the camera sees, can make or break a film in terms of mood and character development. In Shadows and Fog, these details consisted of worn stone stoops, wrought-iron grills, and appropriately weathered signs. For Bright Lights, Big City, the details consisted of such things as old school notebooks and a Dartmouth sweatshirt lying on the floor. Although there is every chance that these items might not be picked up in the camera sweep, Loquasto must create total reality for every period that he is asked to re-create. Because he is able to think small, his collaborators such as Allen and Di Palma can weave their grand designs.

—Sandra Garcia-Myers, updated by Rob Edelman

LOUIS, Jean

Costume Designer. Nationality: French. Born: Jean Louis Berthault in Paris, France, 5 October 1907. Family: Married 1) Loretta Young, 1993. Career: Studied Decorative Arts, Paris; moved to New York in early 1930s; worked for Hattie Carnegie’s fashion for seven years; named head designer of Columbia Pictures in Hollywood in 1943; moved to Universal in 1958; in 1961, became free-lance designer for films and began ready-to-wear fashion business. Award: Academy

Films as Costume Designer

1944 Together Again (Vidor)
1945 Kiss and Tell (Wallace); Over 21 (Hall); Tonight and Every Night (Saville); Thousand and One Nights (Green)
1946 Gilda (Vidor); Mr. District Attorney (Morgan); One Way to Love (Enright); The Thrill of Brazil (Sylvan Simon); Tomorrow is Forever (Pichel); The Jolson Story (Green)
1947 Down to Earth (Hall); Dead Reckoning (Cromwell); Johnny O’Clock (Rosen)
1948 The Lady from Shanghai (Welles); The Loves of Carmen (Vidor); Ladies of the Chorus (Karlson)
1949 Johnny Allegro (Tetzlaff); Jolson Sings Again (Levin); Knock on Any Door (Ray); Shockproof (Sirk); Miss Grant Takes Richmond (Bacon); Tokyo Joe (Heisler)
1950 In a Lonely Place (Ray); The Walking Hills (Sturges); We Were Strangers (Huston); A Woman of Distinction (Buzzell)
1951 Born Yesterday (Cukor)
1952 The Marrying Kind (Cukor); Affair in Trinidad (Sherman); Scandal Sheet (Karlson)
1953 The Big Heat (Lang); Miss Sadie Thompson (Bernhardt); From Here to Eternity (Zinneman); Salome (Dieterle)
1954 Piff! (Robson); It Should Happen to You (Cukor); A Star is Born (Cukor)

Jean Louis

Award for The Solid Gold Cadillac. Died: In Palm Springs, California, 20 April 1997.
Jean Louis is most often associated with the famous black satin gown he designed for Rita Hayworth in Gilda. Indeed, Louis will be forever linked with the glamour of Hayworth, as he designed most of her gowns and costumes when she was at the peak of her career. While it is Hayworth who is most associated with Louis, his career break came from Irene Dunne, who was responsible for his contract at Columbia Pictures. Dunne first noticed Louis at Hattie Carnegie's fashion house in New York. She was so impressed with his work that she asked Columbia Studio head Harry Cohn to recruit Louis for her next movie, Together Again, thus beginning Louis' 13-year association with Columbia Pictures.

He moved to Universal Studios in 1958 and worked with Ross Hunter on a number of films. He later free-lanced while building a ready-to-wear fashion business. He was nominated for ten Academy Awards, winning one for The Solid Gold Cadillac. Although later in his career Louis would lament that Columbia had no big stars except Hayworth, he could count Doris Day, Joan Crawford, Kim Novak, Claudette Colbert, Lana Turner, Deborah Kerr, Elizabeth Taylor and Marilyn Monroe among the stars for whom he designed. Louis was also able to design costumes for a wide range of stories. There were westerns like Walking Hills and period pieces like Salome and Thoroughly Modern Millie, but the majority of the films were modern.

Contemporary films were a special challenge, since movie costumes influenced fashion trends. Consequently, the designs had to be in the front line of fashion and the strapless gown is a good example of this. While the strapless gown was used by designer Travis Banton two years before, it did not catch the imagination of the public until Louis designed it. Using the portrait of Mrs. X by John Singer Sargent as inspiration, Louis sheathed Hayworth in black satin. He not only created the look that would make Rita Hayworth a star and the dream girl of men all over the world, but also launched the strapless gown as a fashion statement that would last for decades. The strapless gown became the trademark of the Louis-Hayworth association, and Louis would use the same design idea in later films.

The Gilda gown was not only a design marvel, but something of a technical feat as well. It had to be built to stay put while Hayworth sang and danced and its construction demonstrates Louis' ability to engineer costumes as well as design them. He would later engineer the costume for Hayworth's Salome dance as well as the famous “see thru” gown that Marlene Dietrich used for her Las Vegas show. Louis constructed the Gilda gown by creating a harness. Plastic was molded around the top of the dress and three stays were used under the bust, one in the center and one on each side. For Salome’s strip tease, Louis designed an innovative plastic body stocking, so that Hayworth could appear to be nude under the multicolored semitransparent veils. The body suit would also be used under the Dietrich gown. Dietrich wanted a gown that appeared to be transparent with strategically placed beads. Jean Louis made the dress in thin chiffon; the skin-tight body suit was the secret to the “see through” look.

In contrast to these engineered costumes, Louis also designed clothes that would move with the body. While his designs would begin with the role, he would also incorporate his impressions of the body and the personality of the star he was designing for as well. For example, he felt that suits would not go well on Hayworth. For Rosalind Russell, suits were an ideal choice. For Doris Day in Pillow Talk, he successfully gauged her character, her figure and her personality to create costumes that would change her image of virginal heroine by revealing her sexuality.

While Louis endeavored to incorporate his design philosophy into all of his work, the studio would sometimes demand certain trends. and looks. When the busty look was popular during the forties, Louis was obliged to use corsets and pads for his less-endowed actresses although he felt that designs of this sort were very constricting for the actresses. Following trends could also cause problems when the fashion scene influenced movie costumes, because films were often released a year or more after filming. Louis cites a bad experience when Joan Fontaine wanted to use a Christian Dior look for her costumes. When the movie was released a year later, the look was no longer in fashion and Louis felt the costumes were a catastrophe. But trends when used well could enhance the development of character. In Thoroughly Modern Millie, Louis used the fashions of the 1920s flapper girl to show an evolution in Julie Andrews' character. She begins by arriving in New York dressed as a provincial country girl. As she walks by the city's fashionable shops, she notices the straight flapper dresses and the long beads that the mannequins are wearing. Comparing the clothes she is wearing to these, Andrews enters a store trends when used well could enhance the development of character. In

—Renee Ward

LOURIÉ, Eugène

Films as Assistant Art Director:

1927 Napoléon (Gance)
1931 Un Coup de téléphone (Lacombe)
1933 Madame Bovary (Renoir)

Films as Art Director:

1934 La Porteuse de pain (Sü); Le Bossu (Sü); Joanne (Tourjansky)
1935 Les Yeux Noirs (Tourjansky); Quand la vie était belle (Sü); La Petite Sauvage (de Limur); Le Bébé de l’escadron (Sü); Crime et châtiment (Chenal)
1936 Sous les yeux d’occident (Razumov) (M. Allégret); Baccara (Mirande); Les Hommes nouveaux (L’Herbier); Le Grand

Other Films:

1953 The Beast from 20,000 Fathoms (d)
1954 Napoléon (Guity) (2nd unit d)
1955 Si Paris nous était conté (Guity) (2nd unit d)
1957 The Colossus of New York (d)
1958 The Giant Behemoth (d)
1961 Gorgo (d); Back Street (Miller) (2nd unit d)
1962 That Touch of Mink (Delbert Mann) (2nd unit d)
1980 A Whale for the Killing (consultant)
1983 Breathless (McBride) (ro)
Publications

By LOURIÉ: book—

By LOURIÉ: articles—

Film Comment (New York), May-June 1978.

On LOURIÉ: articles—

Film Dope (Nottingham), February 1987.

* * *

While best known as one of Jean Renoir’s main collaborators—he was production designer on eight of the director’s films—Eugène Lourié’s credits include production design for TV and stage, second unit direction for film, and special effects direction for both TV and film, as well as the direction of four feature films and three TV projects. While his undisputed masterpieces are his designs for Renoir’s Grand Illusion and The Rules of the Game, many of his other achievements are of note.

An avid cinema fan since his childhood days in czarist Russia, Lourié began his career in the cinema as a red guard drunk with power in an anti-communist film entitled Black Crows. Later, after escaping to Turkey with his family, Lourié worked as an illustrator of movie posters before arriving in his ultimate destination—Paris—where he began as a scenery painter on Ivan Mozhukin’s Le Brasier ardent. Then, after working briefly as a costume designer, Lourié abandoned his plans to study painting and became a full-time production designer for film.

Lourié’s association with Renoir began early in his career, when Alexander Kamenka, the head of Albatross Pictures—originally a Russian company—began planning a film of Maxim Gorky’s famous stage play The Lower Depths. From a list of prospective directors, Lourié recommended Renoir. Their shared notion of elevating the Russian play to reflect a universality began a collaboration which flourished while Renoir moved from France to Hollywood and then to India.

In his autobiography, My Work in Films, Lourié discussed his work on six of the eight Renoir films. Early in his discussion of Grand Illusion, he states that “Renoir preferred shooting under the controlled conditions of a stage. He was convinced, as was I, that studio sets could be more dramatically expressive and fit the story better than some actual locations.” Throughout the book, he confirmed the positive benefits of working with Renoir, particularly the collaborative spirit which Renoir developed with all members of his cast and crew: “Renoir knew how important his collaborators were to his work, and being a truly great director, he did not deny their influence but tried to assimilate it to reinforce his own point of view.’’

That collaborative spirit influenced Lourié’s work aesthetic: the plans for the Grand Illusion set occupied by Erich von Stroheim’s character were worked out in collaboration with the actor. When von Stroheim was planning The Iron Crown—his unrealized film of the fall of the Austrian empire—he asked Lourié to design it.

Renoir’s allowance for collaborative freedom found its greatest result in The Rules of the Game. On that film, Lourié created the perfect atmosphere to reflect Renoir’s vision of a society dancing on the edge of a volcano. In typical style, Renoir’s final vision of character action was developed after seeing Lourié’s finished sets. In designing the set, Lourié adhered to an aesthetic sensibility he shared with Renoir: uncluttered, light-colored sets which provide perfect backgrounds for the silhouetted movement of actors. Like Renoir, Lourié preferred not to obscure the movement of performers, but to heighten them.

Among Lourié’s other outstanding production designs are the sets for Max Ophüls’s Werther and Charlie Chaplin’s Limelight. On the former, Lourié claimed he developed an appreciation for the close affinity between production design and musical expression. On Limelight, Lourié’s approach was that of his work with Renoir: he designed sets which allowed for the foregrounding of the players’ actions.

In the 1950s Lourié began designing and directing films with more expansive settings, notably science fiction and war films which involved a foregrounding of set design and the use of miniatures. Among his most impressive contributions to 1960s cinema was his set for Sam Fuller’s Shock Corridor, a stark set which perfectly reflects the growing psychological tension and deterioration of the hospital inmates.

Lourié was still active into the 1980s. In 1980 he served as production designer on Clint Eastwood’s Bronco Billy, while in 1983 he returned to the other side of the cameras as Dr. Boudreaux in Jim McBride’s remake of Jean-Luc Godard’s Breathless.

—Doug Tomlinson

LUNDGREN, P. A.

Art Director and Production Designer. Nationality: Swedish. Born: Per Axel Lundgren in Vastra Harg, Sweden, 1911. Career: Worked with Swedish directors, mainly Ingmar Bergman.

Films as Art Director and Production Designer:

1944 A Day Shall Dawn
1946 It Rains On Our Love
1948 Musik i mörker (Music in Darkness; Night Is My Future) (Bergman)
1949 Fängelse (Prison; The Devils Wanton) (Bergman)
1953 Sommaren med Monika (Monika; Summer with Monika) (Bergman)
1954 En lektion i kärlek (A Lesson in Love) (Bergman)
1955 Sommarannens leende (Smiles of a Summer Night) (Bergman)
1956 Song of the Scarlet Flower; Det sjunde inseget (The Seventh Seal) (Bergman)
1958 Ansiktet (The Magician) (Bergman)
1959 Jungfrukällen (The Virgin Spring) (Bergman); Djävalens öga (The Devil’s Eye) (Bergman)
1961 Såsom i en spegel (Through a Glass Darkly) (Bergman); Pleasure Garden
1962 The Swedish Mistress
1963 Nattvardsgästerna (Winter Light) (Bergman); Tystnaden (The Silence) (Bergman)
1964 491; För att inte tala om alla dessa kvinnor (All These Women; Now about These Women) (Bergman)
1966 Syskonbädd 1782 (My Sister My Love)
1967 Hagbard and Signe/The Red Mantle; Stimulantia (co)
1968 Skammen (Shame) (Bergman)
1969 En Passion (The Passion of Anna) (Bergman)
1971 The Emigrants (Troell)
1973 The New Land
1974 Jorden runt med Fanny Hill
1975 Smutsiga fingrar
1976 Lockfågeln
1977 Bröderna Lejonhjärta
1978 The American Dream (Abrahamsen) (+ co pr)
1979 Barna från Blåsjöllet (Sima)

Films as Production Designer:

1944 Excellensen; Flickan och djävulen; Mitt folk är icke ditt; Vi behöver varann
1946 Odemarksprästen
1947 Skepp till India land (Frustration); Livet i Finnskogarna
1948 Främmande hinn; Hammarforsens brus; Lars Hård; Marknadsafalan
1949 Bohus bataljon; Lång-Lasse in Delsbo; Havets son (Son of the Sea); Gatan; Hin och småläningen
1950 När kärleken kom till byn
1951 Poker; Spöke på semester; Motorkavaljerer
1952 När syrenera blomma
1953 Glasberget (Unmarried)
1954 Ljuset från Lund; Enhörningen (The Unicorn); Våld
1955 Den Härda leken; Ratataua (The Staffan Stolle Story); Sjunde himlen
1956 Sommarnöje sökes; Far till sol och vår
1958 Flottans överman
1959 Himmel och pannkaka
1960 På en bänk i en park; Kärlekens decimaler; Bara en kypare (Only a Waiter)
1961 Briggen Tre Liljor; Stöten
1962 Chans (Just Once More)
1964 Svenska bilder
1965 . . . för vänskaps skull. . .
1967 Människor möts och ljus musik uppstår i hjärtat (People Meet and Sweet Music Fills the Air)
1969 Römmnad (Dog Days); The Night Visitor (Salem Come to Supper)
1970 Lockfågeln (The Decoy); Beröringen (The Touch)
1973 Smutsliga fingrar (Dirty Fingers)
1974 Jorden runt med Fanny Hill (Around the World with Fanny Hill); En Handfull kärlek (A Handful of Love)
1976 Mina drömmars stad
1977 Bröderna Lejonhjärta (mini-series—for TV)
1979 Den Åttonde dagen

Though often overlooked, art directors bring much to a film’s look and overall feel. Lundgren’s sets are almost as much a part of a film as the actors; his carefully chosen locations add a valuable component to the story.

Throughout Lundgren’s career, he has been most often been recognized for his work with Swedish director Ingmar Bergman. The two have collaborated on many films, including Smiles of a Summer Night, The Seventh Seal, The Magician, The Virgin Spring, The Devil’s Eye, Through a Glass Darkly, Winter Light, The Silence and Shame. While Bergman’s films are often microscopic views of dramatic relationships, the background plays a crucial role in telling his stories. In The Seventh Seal, Lundgren provided Bergman with the perfect setting to tell the story of a 14th-century knight playing chess with Death. The opening shot of waves lapping the rocky beach as the knight, Max Von Sydow, lies beaten on the shore sets the mood for the entire film. Lundgren’s stark, bare visuals allow us to understand the bleakness of life and the challenge of a game with Death when there is nothing left to lose. As the film continues, the man is left alone with nature, where he must fend for himself. Bergman’s wide shots coupled with Lundgren’s scenery make The Seventh Seal what Roger Ebert refers to as ‘one of Bergman’s most visual films.’

While Lundgren did not work exclusively with Bergman, he did work mainly with Swedish directors. In 1977 he coproduced The American Dream while acting as production designer.

—Robert Dixter

LYE, Len

Films as Director, Writer and Animator (Shorts):

1921 Untitled handmade films, Australia
1929 Tusalava (begun 1927)
1933 Experimental Animation: Peanut Vendor (not completed)
1935 A Color Box (Colour Box); Kaleidoscope
1936 The Birth of a Robot (puppet animation); Rainbow Dance
1937 Trade Tattoo (In Time with Industry)
1938 N or NW (N. or N.W. North or North West) (live action); Colour Flight
1939 Swinging the Lambeth Walk
1940 Musical Poster No.1; Profile of Britain (March of Time Series) (live action)
1941  When the Pie Was Opened (live action); Newspaper Train (live action)
1942  Work Party (live action); Kill or Be Killed (live action); German Calling (live action)
1943  Planned Crops (live action)
1944  Cameramen at War (live action)
1944–51  March of Time (Series: 7 films)
1952  Fox Chase (live action)
1953  Color Cry (handmade); Rhythm (handmade)
1957  Free Radicals (handmade)
1961–66  Particles in Space (handmade)
1980  Tal Farlow (handmade)

Publications

By LYE: books—

No Trouble, Majorca, 1930.
Figures of Motion, Auckland, New Zealand, 1982.

By LYE: articles—

‘‘Colour and the Box Office,’’ in Life and Letters Today, September 1935.
‘‘Experiment in Colour,’’ in World Film News, December 1936.
‘‘Television: New Axes to Grind,’’ in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1939.
‘‘The Man Who Was Colour Blind,’’ in Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1940.
‘‘On the End of Audiences,’’ in Film Culture (New York), Summer 1961.
‘‘Is Film Art?,’’ in Film Culture (New York), no. 29, 1963.
‘‘Len Lye Speaks at the Film Makers Cinematheque,’’ in Film Culture (New York), Spring 1967.
‘‘Len Lye—Composer of Motion,’’ interview with J. Kennedy, in Millimeter (New York), February 1977.
Cinemanews (San Francisco), no. 2–4, 1979.

On LYE: book—

On LYE: articles—

‘‘Timehenge,’’ in Newsweek (New York), 22 March 1965.

Curnow, W., ‘‘Len Lye and Tusalava,’’ in Cantrill’s Filmnotes (Melbourne), February 1979.
Horrocks, R., ‘‘Len Lye’s Figures of Motion,’’ in Cantrill’s Filmnotes (Melbourne), November 1979.

*   *   *

Until fairly recently, it was no exaggeration to state that Len Lye was all that New Zealand had contributed to international cinema. An artist—equally at home with painting or sculpture—Lye was the progenitor of experimental cinema, yet, at the same time, was willing to work within a more mainstream cinema unlike so many of his successors. Lye’s closest equivalent in contemporary cinema was Norman McLaren, who continued the technique of drawing directly on film which was created by Lye in the early 1930s.

Lye came to London in the 1920s and there made his first attempt at experimental filmmaking with Tusalava, which tried to merge elements of European modern art with the primitive art which he had experienced in the South Sea Islands. It was not until 1935 that Lye was able to complete another film, and that was his revolutionary Colour Box, for which he painted directly on the film. John Grierson’s G.P.O. Film Unit sponsored the production, and Grierson hired Lye to work for his organization. Here Lye experimented with the use of color—in this instance, Gasparcolor—and with puppet animation, creating the highly praised The Birth of a Robot. What is perhaps most extraordinary about Lye’s work at this time is that he took mundane subjects handed to him by the Unit, which was established to create short propaganda films for the British mail service, and transformed them into surrealist exercises. Nowhere is this more apparent than in N. or N.W., which warns its audience of the danger in incorrectly addressing envelopes through a series of bizarre close-ups and superimpositions.

During the Second World War, Lye’s films were more realistic in content, as he worked for the British Ministry of Information. Most were live action, although in When the Pie Was Opened, he combines live action and animation to present a wartime recipe for vegetable pie. All those films support Cavalcanti’s claim that ‘‘Len Lye could be described in the history of British cinema by one word—Experiment.’’

Coming to the United States in 1944, Lye put his experimental filmmaking behind him and settled down to creating live-action documentaries, initially for March of Time. He returned briefly to experimental filmmaking in the 1950s with Color Cry, based on a method of ‘‘shadow casting’’ created by Man Ray, and Free Radicals and Particles in Space, in both of which the images were scratched on the film. Lye eventually seemed to lose interest in film, becoming more involved in movable and kinetic sculpture. In the New York Times, Grace Glueck described him thus, ‘‘Bald as an egg, with a pointed goatee, Len Lye was a sprightly man who, despite his fascination with technology, referred to himself as ‘an old-brain guy who can’t even drive a car.’’”
The most important period in Len Lye’s filmmaking career was when he worked in Britain for the G.P.O. and the Ministry of Information. As Dave Curtis has written in Experimental Cinema, “Len Lye is one of the few significant figures in British cinema between the wars. He is as important to personal (informal) animation as Griffith is to the traditional narrative film.”

—Anthony Slide
MacARTHUR, Charles

Films as Writer:

1930 The Girl Said No (Wood); The King of Jazz (Anderson); Billy the Kid (K. Vidor); Way for a Sailor (Wood)
1931 Paid (Wood); The Unholy Garden (Fitzmaurice); The Sin of Madeleon Claudet (The Lullaby) (Selwyn); The New Adventures of Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford (Wood)
1932 Rasputin and the Empress (Boleslawsky)
1940 I Take This Woman (Van Dyke)
1947 The Senator Was Indiscreet (Kaufman)
1948 Lulu Belle (Fenton)

Films as Cowriter with Ben Hecht:

1934 Twentieth Century (Hawks); Crime without Passion (+ co-d + co-pr)
1935 Once in a Blue Moon (+ co-d + co-pr); The Scoundrel (+ co-d + co-pr)
1936 Soak the Rich (+ co-d + co-pr)
1939 Gunga Din (Stevens); Wuthering Heights (Wyler)

Publications

By MacARTHUR: plays—

My Lulu Belle, New York, 1925.
With Hecht, Twentieth Century, New York, 1932.
With Hecht, Jumbo, New York, 1935.
With Hecht, Fun to Be Free, New York, 1941.

By MacARTHUR: other books—

A Bug’s-Eye View of the War (nonfiction), Oak Park, Illinois, 1919.
War Bugs (nonfiction), New York, 1929

On MacARTHUR: books—

On MacARTHUR: articles—

Film Comment (New York), Winter 1970–71.
National Film Theatre booklet (London), April-May 1975.
* Sight and Sound* (London), Summer 1975.
* Film Dope* (Nottingham), June 1987.
‘‘The Scoundrel,’’ in Reid’s Film Index, no. 3, 1989.
‘‘Crime Without Passion,’’ in Reid’s Film Index, no. 6, 1991.

Charles MacArthur is best known for his collaborations with Ben Hecht, yet his contributions to the Hollywood era proved him an exemplary crafter of what Howard Hawks referred to as ‘‘three cushion dialogue.’’ He created sophisticated banter which could bounce gaily about a ticklish subject yet pocket a message usually left to cruder forms of innuendo. He participated in the artistic cross-fertilization of the movie-mills and the New York theatrical dynasty, bringing to each a sensibility of impertinent perfectionism.

After his immensely successful collaboration with Hecht, The Front Page, left a permanent mark on Broadway, MacArthur went to work for MGM as a dialogue writer on such early talkies as Way for a Sailor and Billy the Kid. His first complete script, The Sin of Madelon Claudet, provided his wife Helen Hayes with her first film role and an Academy Award for best actress.

Samuel Goldwyn, always in search of a great script, bought the Hecht/MacArthur team for the first of their eventual nine film collaborations. The result was The Unholy Garden, which failed critically and financially in spite of much witty dialogue and the magnetic presence of the stars Ronald Colman and Fay Wray. In the mid-1930s Paramount financed MacArthur and Hecht to produce and direct four feature films, most notably The Scoundrel. This film won an Academy Award for best original story and discovered an audience hungry for their Baroque style of dark humor and crisp naturalism.

While MacArthur’s second billing to Hecht was originally determined (according to Hecht) by a flip of a coin, he nonetheless played the sidekick role well, acting as model, muse, and editor for Hecht’s wildly erratic genius. Much of the sparkling repartee found in their films was but a replay of conversations between these old friends.

The occasional sentimentality of MacArthur’s own scripts reveals a central ambiguity of his personality: he was a reverent iconoclast. In Hecht’s words, ‘‘He believed in all the conventions he flouted. He broke laws but he never took sides against them.’’ At the same time MacArthur brought his own personal charm and his objectivity toward human folly and pomposity to all his best work.

—Rick Broussard

MacGOWAN, Kenneth

Producer. Nationality: American. Born: Winthrop, Massachusetts, 30 November 1888. Education: Attended Harvard University, Cambridge, Massachusetts, graduated 1911. Career: 1910–25—drama critic; stage producer with Eugene O’Neill’s Provincetown Playhouse, New York; story editor for RKO, then producer for RKO, 1932–35, Fox, 1935–44, and for other studios until 1947; then head of Department of Theater Arts, University of California, Los Angeles. Died: In Los Angeles, California, 27 April 1963.

Films as Producer/Associate Producer:

1932 The Penguin Pool Murder (Archainbald)
1933 Topaze (D’Arrast); Double Harness (Cromwell); Little Women (Cukor); The Great Jasper (Ruben); Rafter Romance (Seiter); If I Were Free (Nugent)
1934 La Cucaracha (Corrigan—short); Anne of Green Gables (Nicholls); Murder on the Blackboard (Archainbald); Long Lost Father (Schoedsack); Finishing School (Tuchock and Nicholls); Hat, Coat, and Glove (Miner); Wednesday’s Child (Robertson)
1935 Becky Sharp (Mamoulian); King of Burlesque (Lanfield); Jalna (Cromwell); The Return of Peter Grimm (Nicholls); Half Angel (Lanfield); Murder on a Honeymoon (Corrigan); Enchanted April (Beaumont)
1936 Lloyds of London (H. King); To Mary—with Love (Cromwell); Sins of Man (Brower and Ratoff)
1937 This Is My Affair (Seiter); Wake Up and Live (Lanfield); Love and Hisses (Lanfield)
1938 Four Men and a Prayer (Ford); In Old Chicago (H. King); Kentucky Moonshine (Butler); Kidnapped (Werker); I’ll Give a Million (W. Lang)
1939 Young Mr. Lincoln (Ford); Stanley and Livingstone (H. King); Swanee River (Lanfield); The Return of the Cisco Kid (Leeds); The Story of Alexander Graham Bell (Cummings); Susannah of the Moun tains (Seiter)
1940 Brigham Young—Frontiersman (Hathaway); Star Dust (W. Lang); The Return of Frank James (F. Lang); Tin Pan Alley (W. Lang)
1941 Hudson’s Bay (Pichel); Man Hunt (F. Lang); The Great American Broadcast (Mayo); Belle Starr (Cummings)
1943 Happy Land (Pichel)
1944 Lifeboat (Hitchcock); Jane Eyre (Stevenson)
1947 Easy Come, Easy Go (Farrow)

Publications

By MacGOWAN: books—

The Theater of Tomorrow, New York, 1921.
Footlights across America, New York, 1929.

By MacGOWAN: articles—

‘‘Seeing the News by Film,’’ in Collier’s (New York), 1 April 1916.
‘‘Beyond the Screen,’’ in Seven Arts (New York), December 1916.
‘‘Cross-Roads of Screen and Stage,’’ in Seven Arts (New York), April 1917.
Kenneth MacGowan was a creative motion picture producer, film scholar, and teacher. The 50 films for which he was responsible include two milestones in the use of three-color Technicolor, and his ten years at 20th Century-Fox resulted in his being regarded as an expert in historical biographies.

A New Englander and Harvard graduate, MacGowan was the entertainment editor of the Philadelphia Evening Ledger, publicity director for Goldwyn Pictures, and drama critic for the New York Globe. More importantly, in 1924 he was named director of the revamped Provincetown Playhouse, the two associate directors being the playwright Eugene O’Neill and the scenic designer Robert Edmund Jones. That trio’s productions of O’Neill’s All God’s Chillun Got Wings, Desire under the Elms, and The Emperor Jones were revolutionary in theater history. By 1926 financial setbacks forced MacGowan into play production outside Provincetown Playhouse, and he was eventually hired by David O. Selznick—at the suggestion of director Irving Pichel—as story editor at RKO. He went from story editor to producer, his first important production being the charming Topaz starring John Barrymore and Myrna Loy, followed by the highly successful and enduring Little Women. He then produced La Cucaracha, the first live-action film in three-color Technicolor for which he hired Robert Edmund Jones to “design Light.” That led to his technically innovative Technicolor production of Becky Sharp, directed by Rouben Mamoulian.

Following disagreements with RKO, MacGowan joined the newly formed 20th Century-Fox in 1935 where his assignments ran the gamut of Fox’s output from musicals to basic programmers. With the success of Lloyds of London in 1936, he was handed many of Fox’s biographical features, including In Old Chicago. Darryl F. Zanuck suggested that story as a result of MGM’s success with San Francisco. The film’s famous Chicago fire sequence remains a landmark in special effects. Subsequently, MacGowan produced The Story of Alexander Graham Bell, Stanley and Livingstone, Brigham Young—Frontiersman, and Tin Pan Alley. MacGowan’s favorite film was Happy Land, a piece of Americana about “the effects of World War II on a typical American Family.” He was instrumental in arranging for John Steinbeck to flesh out Alfred Hitchcock’s nucleus of an idea for Lifeboat, one of the director’s more unusual and interesting films. MacGowan ended his association with Fox in 1944 with Jane Eyre, but was one of numerous producers on that project.

After producing Easy Come, Easy Go for Paramount in 1947, he left the motion picture business to join UCLA, where he was responsible for organizing one of the best university theater departments in the country. That university’s theater building is now named after him, and shortly before his death he completed work on his unique and lasting book, Behind the Screen: The History and Techniques of the Motion Picture.

—Ronald Bowers

MACPHERSON, Jeanie

Writer, Director, and Actress. Nationality: American. Born: Boston, Massachusetts, in 1884. Education: Attended Mademoiselle DeJacque’s School, Paris. Career: 1907–14—stage and film actress; member of the chorus, Chicago Opera House, film debut in Mr. Jones at the Ball, 1908, and in road companies of Cleopatra and Strongheart and on Broadway in Havana; 1912—directed and appeared in new version of lost film, The Tarantula; 1915—began long association with Cecil B. De Mille. Died: Of cancer, 26 August 1946.

Films as Writer for Cecil B. De Mille:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1915</td>
<td>The Unafraid; The Captive (+ ro); Chimmie Fadden Out West; The Golden Chance</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1916</td>
<td>Maria Rosa; Temptation; The Trail of the Lonesome Pine; The Heart of Nora Flynn; The Dream Girl</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1917</td>
<td>Joan the Woman; A Romance of the Redwoods; The Little American; The Woman God Forgot; The Devil Stone</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1918</td>
<td>The Whispering Chorus; Old Wives for New</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1919</td>
<td>Don’t Change Your Husband; For Better, for Worse; Male and Female</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1920</td>
<td>Something to Think About</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Forbidden Fruit; The Affairs of Anatol</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1922</td>
<td>Saturday Night; Manslaughter</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1923</td>
<td>Adam’s Rib; The Ten Commandments</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1924</td>
<td>Triumph</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1925</td>
<td>The Golden Bed; The Road to Yesterday</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1927</td>
<td>The King of Kings</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1929</td>
<td>The Godless Girl; Dynamite</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Madam Satan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>The Crusades</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>The Plainsman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>The Buccaneer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>Land of Liberty (doc); Union Pacific</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>North West Mounted Police</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1944</td>
<td>The Story of Dr. Wassel</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Other Films as Writer:

1912  The Tarantula (+ d + ro)
1914  The Ghost Breaker (+ d)
1926  Red Dice (Howard); Young April (Crisp)
1933  Fra Diavolo (The Devil’s Brother) (Roach)

Films as Actress for D.W. Griffith:

1908  Mr. Jones at the Ball
1909  Mrs. Jones Entertains; A Corner in Wheat
1910  Winning Back His Love
1911  The Spanish Gypsy; Fisher Folks; Enoch Arden
1914  The Desert’s Sting (d unknown)

Films as Actress for Cecil B. De Mille:

1914  Rose of the Rancho
1915  The Girl of the Golden West; Carmen

Publications

By MACPHERSON: articles—

‘‘Development of Photodramatic Writing,’’ in Moving Picture World, 21 July 1917.

‘‘Functions of the Continuity Writer,’’ in Opportunities in the Motion Picture Industry, Los Angeles, 1922.

‘‘The Subtitle: Friend and Foe,’’ in Motion Picture Director (Hollywood), November 1926.

On MACPHERSON: articles—

Kino (Sophia), no. 4, 1995.

* * *

Jeanie Macpherson was not a screenwriter when she was introduced to Cecil B. De Mille. She had been a director at Universal at one time, but when she met De Mille she was concentrating on acting. Due to her dark features, however, she was being typecast as either a gypsy or a Spaniard. Macpherson was cast by De Mille to act in a few of his features (Rose of the Rancho, The Girl of the Golden West, Carmen, and The Captive—the last of which she also wrote) before she decided to turn exclusively to screenwriting. There was mutual attraction between Macpherson and De Mille from the start: she loved the challenge of working with a hard-driving perfectionist; he was drawn to her spirit and courage. It was a partnership that would last over 25 years.

Macpherson and De Mille held a common belief that would be the basis for every screenplay on which they collaborated: they despised weakness in men and women. In Macpherson’s scripts, weak men were taken advantage of and degraded, and weak women were shallow, gold-digging, and destructive creatures who went from one rich man to the next. The screenwriter believed that men and women could learn from experience, however, and change weak or evil ways, and she demonstrated this in her early social dramas. Both Macpherson and De Mille celebrated the hero and the heroine—biblical, historical, or fictional—and praised their courage and perseverance.

Macpherson’s strength was writing historical dramas. When she began her work for De Mille, she assisted the director in writing features for Geraldine Farrar, the operatic star, including Maria Rosa, Temptation, and Joan the Woman. This last was based on the life of Joan of Arc. While De Mille created the huge frame around the French girl’s life with his grandiose settings and hundreds of extras, Macpherson fashioned a human drama with which the audience could identify. Thus, while Joan was part of a spectacular event, upon a closer look she was seen as a frightened young girl driven by her spiritual beliefs. The title, Macpherson’s idea, emphasized the view of Joan as a human being rather than an indestructible saint. This same viewpoint was used in the De Mille epic The King of Kings. Based on the life of Jesus Christ, the film portrayed Mary Magdalene as a woman who was not evil but misguided, and Jesus as a virile and strong man.

By the Roaring Twenties, Macpherson had begun writing contemporary drama rather than historical projects. The liberal moral climate gave rise to the flapper, the sexually aware young woman who rejected conventional mores. Some of the best films De Mille and Macpherson created were responses to America’s change in mood and fashion: Old Wives for New, Don’t Change Your Husband, Male and Female, The Affairs of Anatol, Manslaughter, and Adam’s Rib, Male and Female, an update of the play The Admirable Crichton, introduced a new element into Macpherson’s screenplays: the blending together of past and present stories. Macpherson interwove episodes from history and the Bible into modern dramas to demonstrate moral lessons. These lessons warned audiences of the excesses of the 1920s and what the future would hold if the warnings were not heeded. Flashbacks were used as lessons, such as the prologue to The Ten Commandments which concerned Moses and the story of the commandments (this version of Ten Commandments had a modern-day plot). Male and Female contained a flashback to Babylon; Manslaughter to ancient Rome; Adam’s Rib to prehistoric times; Triumph to Romeo and Juliet; and The Road to Yesterday to 17th-century England. These screenplays offered audiences not only an admonishment for their money, but also the attraction of seeing stars in the period costumes that each flashback required.

In 1933, while De Mille was busy with other projects, Macpherson wrote the screenplay for Fra Diavolo for Laurel and Hardy, before rejoining the director for several films celebrating heroes: King Richard the Lionhearted in The Crusades, Wild Bill Hickok in The Plainsman, Jean Lafitte in The Buccaneer, the men who started the transcontinental railroad in Union Pacific, Canadian Mounties in North West Mounted Police, and Dr. Corydon E. Wassell in The Story of Dr. Wassell. In 1939, she coauthored and narrated the De Mille film Land of Liberty, a historical look at America for the New York World’s Fair. These last research and writing projects were done mostly without credit. Before she could finish her research work on Unconquered for De Mille, Macpherson died of cancer in 1946. Her screenplays had gone full circle from the early escapist and historical films to realistic and social dramas and back to escapist and historical pictures again.

—Alexa L. Foreman

MADDOW, Ben

Writer and director and producer. Pseudonyms: Used pseudonyms David Wolff and David Forrest in early documentary films. Nationality: American. Born: Passaic, New Jersey, 1909; Education: Attended Columbia University, New York, graduated 1930. Military Service: 1945–47—served in the United States Army Air Corps motion picture unit. Career: 1930–35—worked as hospital orderly and social worker; also a writer; 1935—first film as writer, the documentary Harbor Scenes; 1935–42—cofounding writer, Nykino (later Frontier Films); wrote commentary for the newsreel series The World Today; 1947—first fiction film as writer, Framed; 1952–60—blacklisted because of his leftist background, worked (uncredited) on several screenplays, often with Philip Yordan; 1960—codirected The Savage Eye; 1980s—TV work included scripts for The Untouchables.

 Died: October 1992.

Films as Writer (Documentaries):

1935 Harbor Scenes (Steiner)
1937 Heart of Spain (Klein and Karpathi); China Strikes Back (Dunham); People of the Cumberland (Meyers)
1938 Return to Life (Kline and Cartier-Bresson)
1939 The History and Romance of Transportation (Meyers and Berman)
1940 United Action (Berman); White Flood (Meyers and Berman); Tall Tales (Van Dyke); Valley Town (Van Dyke)
1941 A Place to Live (Bobker); Here Is Tomorrow (Kerkow)
1942 Native Land (Hurwitz and Strand); The Bridge (Van Dyke) (+co-d); Pacific Northwest (Van Dyke)
1948 The Photographer (Van Dyke)
1951 The Steps of Age (+d)
1953 The Stairs (+d)

Films as Writer (Features):

1947 Framed (Paula) (Wallace)
1948 Kiss the Blood Off My Hands (Blood on My Hands) (Foster); The Man from Colorado (Levin)
1949 Intruder in the Dust (Brown)
1950 The Asphalt Jungle (Huston)
1952 Shadow in the Sky (Wilcox)
1954 Johnny Guitar (Ray) (uncredited); The Naked Jungle (Haskin) (uncredited)
1957 Men in War (A. Mann) (uncredited)
1958 God’s Little Acre (A. Mann)
1960 The Savage Eye (+ co-pr + co-d); The Unforgiven (Huston)
1961 Two Loves (Walters)

1963 The Balcony (Strick); An Affair of the Skin (+d—reedited version, as Love As Disorder; 1971)
1967 The Man from Colorado (uncredited)
1969 The Chairman (Thompson); The Secret of Santa Vittoria (Kramer)
1970 Storm of Strangers (+pr +d)
1971 The Mephisto Waltz (Wendkos)

Publications

By MADDOW: books—

44 Gravel Street (novel), Boston, Massachusetts, 1952.
The Great Right Horn of the Ram (play), New York, 1967.

The Photography of Max Yavno, Berkeley, California, 1981.

By MADDOW: articles—

‘‘Film into Poem,’’ in New Theatre, November 1936.

‘‘The Writer’s Function in Documentary Film,’’ in Proceedings of the Writers’ Congress, Los Angeles, 1943, Berkeley, California, 1944.

‘‘Eisenstein and the Historical Film,’’ in Hollywood Quarterly, October 1945.

Action (Los Angeles), January-February 1975.

Film Comment (New York), March-April 1980.

On MADDOW: books—

On MADDOW: articles—

Film Dope (Nottingham), December 1987.

Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1989.

Ben Maddow spent much of his screenwriting career working without credit or under a pseudonym, and on commercial projects over which he maintained little control. Despite this, he gained a reputation in both independent and popular cinema as a socially concerned artist. Maddow’s involvement with film began in 1935 when he answered an advertisement placed by the celebrated still photographer Ralph Steiner who was seeking a poet to write narration for his film Harbor Scenes. Maddow, who had begun to have his poetry published in small literary journals, found that his words came to life when combined with the film’s images. Through Steiner, he met a number of photographers and developed the aesthetic concern with photography which would play a large role in much of his later film work.

Maddow joined Steiner and other leftist artists to form Nykino, an informal organization devoted to making films that promoted social awareness and the interests of the working class. Nykino was succeeded by Frontier Films which Maddow participated in as a writer of narration and commentary under the pseudonym David Wolff. (Pseudonyms were used by a number of artists at this time since their government-subsidized jobs prohibited their taking on outside employment.) The members of Frontier Films were influenced by the popular March of Time series which combined staged scenes and documentary footage. At the same time, they wished to deal with social problems in a more politically and stylistically radical fashion by presenting stories about individuals which would provide a configuration and illumination of the class struggle in American society. As Maddow expressed it, the documentary director, writer, and cameraman should work as a team, with the writer looking “constantly for ideas in their specific personal forms” but linked by “a hard, invariable core of essential truth.” He felt that any method—individual stories, animation, reenactment, candid material—could be utilized in expressing these ideas.

Maddow admired The March of Time’s use of offscreen narration and thought that this procedure might be used further to achieve a new form of cinema, the “cine-poem,” in which a continuous voice would serve as a “sort of ground-bass to the images on screen.” Freed from any fixed temporal continuity, a film could “encompass modern events, their violent compressions and simultaneities,” by selecting and presenting actions which, when linked, would delineate larger social issues. As an alternative to The March of Time’s practice of writing the narration first and then fitting the image to it, Maddow proposed that the writer finish a few minutes of narration, then read it aloud and watch the film on the movieola, going back over it repeatedly—experimenting with how words could be arranged to correspond to the movement of the image on screen and with how they could be used to accentuate or conceal a detail, retard or increase the tempo. He felt, however, that the result must always be the same: to combine words and images to form a single indivisible impression.

When Frontier Films disbanded, Maddow went to South America to work on The Bridge, a documentary about trade problems faced by that continent. Upon his return to the United States, he was drafted and served in the Army Air Force’s Hollywood Motion Picture Bureau. During this period, he wrote a screen treatment titled Death and Mathematics which, while never filmed, reflects the concerns raised in Maddow’s previous writings on film and anticipates the complex, eclectic style of many of the later films over which he maintained control. Death and Mathematics concerns a science teacher who returned wounded from the war and is scheduled to teach a university course in nuclear physics, but is uncertain whether to mention atomic energy’s destructive possibilities. His voice is heard intermittently on the soundtrack over screen images which are at times seen from his viewpoint and at other times from a sort of omniscient perspective. Close-ups, commentary, photographs, animation, stock footage, and staged scenes are all used to fuse the personal and educational aspects of the film.

After leaving the Army, Maddow wrote screenplays for several Hollywood studios. Intruder in the Dust, his adaptation of William Faulkner’s novel about racial prejudice, was his first major achievement as a Hollywood screenwriter. The complexity of Faulkner’s plot and the movement of the narrative back and forth in time led Maddow to simplify story details and to reorganize the narrative’s temporal structure. After this, he worked with John Huston on the screenplay of The Asphalt Jungle, a study of the criminal mind. Maddow’s script for Shadow in the Sky dealt with difficulties faced by a war veteran upon his release from a mental hospital, The Steps of Age and The Stairs, two documentaries made by Maddow outside the studio system, concerned the issues of aging and mental health. During the Hollywood blacklist, Maddow worked without credit on several scripts. He went on to write for a number of television drama series and resumed screenwriting under his name with Huston’s The Unforgiven, a study of racial strife in Texas shortly after the American Civil War.

Maddow’s next film was The Savage Eye, on which he worked intimately with Joseph Strick and Sidney Meyers. It concerned a recently divorced woman, adrift and traveling alone through Los Angeles. As she converses offscreen with what seems to be an inner voice guiding her through the agony of realization, a series of disparate images is seen. Maddow has claimed that The Savage Eye was imitated widely by American and European filmmakers. One can see how, in its study of a woman whose marital problems have estranged her from the world, it anticipated, if not influenced, such films as The Misfits, Red Desert, and Juliet of the Spirits. Maddow and Strick again worked together on a film of Jean Genet’s The Balcony, with the play’s “house of illusions” setting changed from a brothel to a converted movie soundstage.

Certain motifs recur in Maddow’s work whether it be independent or commissioned, original or an adaptation. In his screenplay for Two Loves, derived from Sylvia Ashton-Warner’s novel Spinster, the themes of emotional inhibition, postwar trauma, and cultural clashes are again addressed. In An Affair of the Skin, written and directed by Maddow, a woman spurns, yet yearns for, affection. Maddow felt that this story of romantic entanglements as seen through the eyes of a black woman photographer had been rushed for financial reasons. Ten years later, he reedited and released it again under the title Love As Disorder. An offscreen narration by the photographer was added to establish her as an observer: a participant in the action but also a caustic chronicler of it. As much of Maddow’s work, inner disorder is seen against a background of social unrest as described in a highly imagistic manner by a person who has both emotional involvement and critical detachment.

In The Chairman, the United States and the Soviet Union are forced into an uneasy alliance against Red China which has discovered an enzyme which makes great agricultural development possible. A parallel is drawn in the film between the American General...
Shelby, willing to sacrifice his and others’ lives for the sake of his country, and the Chinese Chairman who believes that an individual’s fate is unimportant in the struggle for the progress of the masses. The fanatical Shelby resembles the men warped by war in earlier Maddow films. His glasses, with one lens tinted black, recall the black eye patch worn by the war veteran in Death and Mathematics. In both instances, the dark eye covering serves to suggest a psychological as well as physical injury. Like Death and Mathematics, which made the point that Fascism’s worst crime was that it forced democracy to pervert science for wartime purposes, The Chairman holds up to criticism two opposing ideologies. Again in Maddow’s work, social deficiencies are seen in microcosm in the individual’s search for emotional fulfillment. The General, who shows no interest in the death of a scientist’s wife, and the Chairman, who believes that individual love is less important than love of the masses, are contrasted with the scientist, whose wish to use the enzyme for the international alleviation of poverty coincides with his search for personal happiness.

Maddow’s most notable film in the 1970s was his independent production Storm of Strangers which depicts how, for turn-of-the-century immigrants living in New York’s Lower East Side slums, “It was better to be an uptown horse than a downtown Jew.” For the film, Maddow devised a new, less expensive method of scanning photographs to approximate the way the eye scans an image, so that the camera movement would be as personalized as the first-person narration. Here too one finds Maddow combining precise visual imagery with ornate offscreen language in a purely cinematic attempt to deal with individual lives and the larger social issues which they delineate.

—John Hagan

MAGNUSSON, Charles

Films as Producer:

1909 Varmlanningarne (Engdahl) (+ sc); Spiskroksvalsen (+ d); Sjöövaren (+ d); Fiskarval från Bohuslän (+ d); När jag var Prins Usav Arkadien (+ d); Nattmarschen i Sankt Eriks Gränd (+ d); Minnen från Bostonklubben (Memories from the Boston Club) (+ d + sc); Broklopet på Ulfasa (Engdahl) (+ sc); Fannrik Stals Sagner (Engdahl) (+ sc)

1910 Faderulla, ur Göteborgssystemet I . . . (+ d); Pick Me Up, ur Flickorna Jackson (+ d); Nu gar jag till Maxim (+ d); Entres angen, ur Delloprinsessan (+ d); Urfeus i underjorden (Orpheus in the Underworld) (+ d + sc)

1911 Järnbärcarren (Iron-Carrier) (Linden); Sjömansdansen (+ d); Amulettan (The Talisman) (+ d)

1912 Det gröna halsbandet (The Green Necklace) (+ d); Samhallets dom (The Justice of Society) (Jaenzon) (+ sc); Kolingens galoscher (Jaenzon) (+ sc); Tva Svenska emigranters aventyr i Amerika (The Adventures of Two Swedish Emigrants in America) (Jaenzon) (+ sc); Branning, eller Stulen lycka (Jaenzon) (+ sc); De svarta maskerna (The Black Masks) (Stiller); Dodshoppet fann circkuskupolen (af Klercker); Mor och dotter (Mother and Daughter) (Stiller); Trädgardsmästaren (The Gardener) (Sjöström); Ett hemligt giftmål (A Secret Marriage) (Sjöström); I livets vår, eller Forsta alskarinnan (In the Spring of Life, or His First Love) (Garbagny); Den tryanniske fästmannen (The Tyrannical Fiancée) (Stiller); Skandalen (Scandal) (af Klercker); Vampyren (Vampire) (Stiller); En sommar saga (A Summer Tale) (Sjöström); Barnet (The Child) (Stiller)

1913 Lökjen och tårar (Ridicule and Tears) (Sjöström); När kärleken dödar (When Love Kills) (Stiller); Lady Marions sommarflirt (Lady Marions Summer Flirtation) (Sjöström); Ingeborg Holm (Give Us This Day) (Sjöström); Gränsposten (The Border Neighbors) (Stiller); Miralet (The Miracle) (Sjöström); Halvblod (Halfbreed) (Sjöström)

1914 Prästen (The Priest) (Sjöström); Streiken (Strike) (Sjöström); Stormflågeln (The Stormy Petrel) (Stiller); Gatans barn (Children of the Street) (Sjöström); Det roda tornet (The Master) (Stiller); Hägrijuldet dotter (Daughter of the Mountains) (Sjöström)

1915 Madame de Thèbes (Stiller); Hans bröllopsnatt (His Wedding Night) (Stiller)

1916 Rösen på Tistelön (The Rose of Thistle Island) (Sjöström); Karlek och journalistik (Love and the Journalist) (Stiller); Vingarna (The Wings) (Stiller); Therese (Sjöström); Den levande numien (The Living Mummy) (F. Magnusson); Vem Skot? (Tallroth); Balettprimadonnan (Anjuta, the Dancer) (Stiller)

1917 Terje vigen (A Man There Was) (Sjöström); Thomas Graals bästa film (Thomas Graal’s Best Picture) (Stiller)

1918 Täskör från stormyttertorpet (The Lass from the Stormy Croft) (Sjöström); Berg-Ejvind och hans hustra (The Outlaw and His Wife) (Sjöström); Thomas Graals bästa barn (Thomas Graal’s Best Child) (Stiller); Sängen om den eldröda blomman (Song of the Scarlet Flower) (Stiller)

1919 Ingmarssonerna (Sons of Ingmar) (Stiller)—2 parts; Dunungen (The Downey Girl) (Hedqvist); Herr Arnes pengar (Sir Arne’s Treasure) (Stiller); Hans náds testament (The Will of His Grace) (Sjöström); Fiskebyn (The Fishing Village) (Stiller)

1920 Klosters et sendomir (The Monastery of Sendomir) (Sjöström); Karin Ingmarsdotter (Karin, Daughter of Ingmar) (Sjöström); Mästern (Master Samuel) (Sjöström); Präststänkan (The Parson’s Widow) (Dreyer); Guvrikoscarnna (Brunius); Familjens traditioner (Carlstén); Carolina Rediviva (Hedqvist); Erotikon (Stiller); Johan (Stiller)

1921 Körkarlen (The Phantom Charriot) (Sjöström); Vallfarten till Kevlar (Pilgrimage to Kevlar) (Hedqvist); Kvarnen (Brunius); Hogre andamal (Carlstén); De landsflyktiga (The Exiles) (Stiller); En vildfagel (Brunius)

1922 Vem dömer? (Love’s Crucible) (Sjöström); Det omrigade huset (The Surrounded House) (Sjöström); Gunnar Hedes Saga (Gunnar Hede’s Saga) (Stiller)
The Swedish cinema and its early silent masterpieces were largely due to the vision and talent of Charles Magnusson. His knowledge of the technical side of filmmaking (he was a newsreel cameraman) as well as the aesthetics of recording images and controlling performances (he was also a director) made him an ideal producer. His artistic ambitions consciously strove to lend cultural respectability to the movies. Believing that the short farces which dominated the early cinema only exploited the film medium for financial gain, he encouraged his directors to attempt themes of complexity and sophistication. During the period he served as director of Svenska Biografteatern, Magnusson led Sweden to the forefront of world cinema.

One of the many striking characteristics of Swedish silent films is their spectacular use of outdoor settings. Magnusson eschewed the use of studio sets, voicing an opinion that natural locations induced other qualities. His films embody a lyricism previously untapped by the cinema and create a drama between the characters and nature which evolves into a mystical relationship. Taking the actors out of the studio also resulted in another important development: a restraint and realism of performance. Magnusson laid the foundations of a non-theatrical style, in which nature, history, and reality were an essential part, that still influences cinema today. He also initiated the development of longer narrative films based on fine literature and epic folk tales. By obtaining the rights to all of Selma Lagerlöf’s work (the greatest of Swedish storytellers) and adapting many of Henrik Ibsen’s plays, he provided a source of rich material for the studio to use, material which echoed his interest in nature and Swedish history.

Magnusson firmly centered himself as controlling force of the Swedish film industry, yet he was not dictatorial. He allowed his directors a freedom uncommon for that period. He once commented that “the film producer must be supreme ruler. He alone decides . . . but after he has given the starting signal, he should leave the director in peace. If the director is unworthy of this confidence, he is not fit to be director.” The films of Mauritz Stiller and Victor Sjöström, which represent many milestones in the history of cinema, justified Magnusson’s faith in them.

Besides his work as a producer, Magnusson was active in many other related fields. He experimented with a stereoscopic film process and instigated the reorganization of the film censorship board. As a social reformer, he used his films to make viewers aware of society’s inadequacies and injustices. These films were rarely didactic because he realized the importance of interest and the role of identification. Magnusson said that “the action is the picture’s Alpha and Omega. It should . . . give opportunities for intensely exciting and interesting situations.” His productions during the golden age of Swedish cinema make this tenet crystal clear.

—Greg S. Faller

MAINWARING, Daniel

Films as Writer:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>Secrets of the Underground (Morgan)</td>
<td>(co-sc, as Geoffrey Homes)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1944</td>
<td>Dangerous Passage (Berke)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1945</td>
<td>Scared Stiff (McDonald)</td>
<td>(co-sc); They Made Me a Killer (Thomas) (co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1946</td>
<td>Swamp Fire (Pine)</td>
<td>(+ story); Hot Cargo (Landers); Tokyo Rose (Landers)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>Big Town (Thomas)</td>
<td>(as Geoffrey Homes, also radio program)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1948</td>
<td>Out of the Past (Tourneur)</td>
<td>(as Geoffrey Homes, also novel)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>Big Town Scandal (Thomas)</td>
<td>(co-sc, as Geoffrey Homes, also radio program)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>Roughshod (Robson)</td>
<td>(co-sc); The Big Steal (Siegel) (co-sc, as Geoffrey Homes)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>The Lawless (Loyce)</td>
<td>(as Geoffrey Homes, also novel); The Eagle and the Hawk (Foster) (co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>This Woman Is Dangerous (Feist)</td>
<td>(co-sc, as Geoffrey Homes); Bugles in the Afternoon (Rowland) (co-sc, as Geoffrey Homes)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1953</td>
<td>Powder River (King)</td>
<td>(co-sc, as Geoffrey Homes); The Hitch-Hiker (Lupino) (co-sc, uncredited); Those Redheads from Seattle (Foster)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1954</td>
<td>The Desperado (Carr)</td>
<td>(as Geoffrey Homes); Black Horse Canyon (Hibbs); Southwest Passage (Nazarro) (co-sc); Alaska Seas (Hopper) (co-sc, as Geoffrey Homes)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1955</td>
<td>Tormenta (Acebal/Guillermin)</td>
<td>(co-sc + story, as Geoffrey Homes); The Phenix City Story (Karlson) (co-sc); A Bullet for Joey (Allen) (co-sc, as Geoffrey Homes); An Annapolis Story (Siegel) (co-sc, as Geoffrey Homes)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>Invasion of the Body Snatchers (Siegel)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1957</td>
<td>Baby Face Nelson (Siegel)</td>
<td>(co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1958</td>
<td>Space Master X-7 (Bernds)</td>
<td>(co-sc); The Gun Runners (Siegel); Cole Younger, Gunfighter (Springsteen)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>Walk Like a Dragon (Clavelli)</td>
<td>(co-sc)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
1961  The Minotaur (Amadio (co-sc); The George Raft Story (Newman) (co-sc); Atlantis, The Lost Continent (Pal); The Revolt of the Slaves (Malasomma) (co-sc)
1964  The Woman Who Wouldn’t Die (Hessler)
1965  Convict Stage (Selander)

Other Films:

1941  No Hands on the Clock (McDonald) (novel)
1944  Crime by Night (Clemens) (novel)
1947  Big Town after Dark (Thomas) (radio program)
1951  The Tall Target (Mann) (story, as Geoffrey Homes); Roadblock (Daniels) (story, as Geoffrey Homes)
1984  Against All Odds (Hackford) (novel)

* * *

Considering that the film noir masterpiece Out of the Past and the prototypical close encounter of the third kind science-fiction thriller Invasion of the Body Snatchers continue to cast giant shadows over their respective genres and influence filmmakers to this day, it is ironic that the name of their screenwriter is all but forgotten. This may be because the former was written under a pseudonym and the latter under the writer’s given name. This gives the impression that these works were scribed by different individuals. As a result, in most discussions of screenwriters who have left their mark on cinema history, Daniel Mainwaring—who left his mark on cinema history, Daniel Mainwaring—who left his mark with not just one but two seminal films—seldom comes up.

Mainwaring began his writing career as a newspaper reporter for the San Francisco Chronicle, where he drew upon previous experience as a private detective to cover the city’s crime and other beats for almost a decade before shifting to detective fiction during the golden age of the pulps. Influenced by the hard-boiled school of writers like Dashiell Hammett (who’d also used firsthand experience as a private eye to give his thrillers a sense of authenticity), Mainwaring published his first crime novel, One Against the Earth, in 1933 under his real name. Thereafter, the prolific author used the pseudonym Geoffrey Homes on all of his novels and most of his screenplays as well.

He produced a series of crime novels—boasting such pulpish titles The Doctor Died at Dusk, The Man Who Didn’t Exist, and Then There Were Three—which featured the recurring character of reporter-turned-private eye Robin Bishop. Mainwaring set Bishop apart from other fictional sleuths of the time by making him less hard-boiled and less susceptible to the charms of every femme fatale who comes because he has a wife. The author retired Bishop after five books to launch a new, more hard-boiled detective hero, Humphrey Campbell, in 1938. Campbell appeared in four books before being phased out by a final series character, the Mexican Indian sleuth Jose Manuel Madero, who debuted in The Street of the Crying Woman, then disappeared after one more outing.

Mainwaring also turned out several thrillers with no recurring character. The most notable of them was also his biggest bestseller and final book, Build My Gallows High. Published in 1946, it became, under the direction of Jacques Tourneur, the definitive film noir a year later as Out of the Past. It was remade in 1984 as Against All Odds. Despite the popularity they enjoyed in their day, none of Mainwaring’s Geoffrey Homes books are currently in print, and thus ripe for rediscovery.

A stint as a publicist at Warner Brothers (where he met an aspiring director named Don Siegel who was then working as an editor in Warners montage department) gave Mainwaring an insider’s look at the movies. He used his knowledge of Hollywood as background for his 1943 thriller The Hill of the Terriﬁed Monk. Mainwaring’s studio work as a publicist also opened doors for him as a screenwriter. He adapted his novel Forty Whacks to the screen for Warner Brothers as Crime by Night in 1944, but it was his crackling adaptation of Build My Gallows High into Out of the Past for RKO that enabled him to turn his back on novels and pursue a screenwriting career full time.

Mainwaring hooked up with his old pal Don Siegel (by then a director) on The Big Steal, a chase melodrama set in Mexico that was made by RKO to capitalize on the success of Out of the Past by re-teaming its two stars, Robert Mitchum and Jane Greer with the same writer. Mainwaring and Siegel collaborated four more times. Their biggest success together was Invasion of the Body Snatchers, a science-fiction parable about desensitization and loss of identity that made the word “pod” part of the American vocabulary. The archetypal alien invasion ﬂick, it has been remade twice and ripped oﬀ countless times.

They also had a notable success as a team a year later with Baby Face Nelson, a top-notch period gangster ﬁlm that earned Mickey Rooney the French equivalent of the Oscar for his incendiary performance in the title role. Of this now largely forgotten but also influential Siegel/Mainwaring collaboration, Siegel biographer Stuart M. Kaminsky writes, “It started a genre of psychological gangster ﬁlms culminating in . . . Arthur Penn’s Bonnie and Clyde.”

—John McCarty

MAMET, David

David Mamet with Rebecca Pidgeon directors, New York University, New York City; associate director, New Theatre Company, Chicago, beginning in 1985; associate professor of film, Columbia University, New York City, 1988; Dinglefest Theatre, Kansas State University, Manhattan, Kansas, founder (with others).

Awards: Golden Osella, Venice Film Festival, best original screenplay, and Pasinetti Award, Venice Film Festival, best film, for House of Games, 1987; also winner of numerous theatre and literary awards.

Agent: Howard Rosenstone, Rosenstone/Wender, 3 East 48th Street, New York, NY 10017, U.S.A.

Films as Writer:

1979 A Life in the Theater (Browning, Gutierrez—for TV)
1981 The Postman Always Rings Twice (Rafelson)
1986 About Last Night... (Zwick) (from his play Sexual Perversity in Chicago)
1987 The Untouchables (De Palma); House of Games (+ d)
1988 Things Change (+ d)
1989 We’re No Angels (Jordan)
1991 Uncle Vanya (Mosher—for TV) (translation); Homicide (+ d)
1992 Glengarry Glen Ross (Foley); Hoffa (DeVito) (+ assoc pr); The Water Engine (Schachter—for TV) (+ ro)
1993 Rising Sun (Kaufman) (uncredited); A Life in the Theater (Mosher—for TV) (+ exec pr)
1994 Texan (Williams—for TV); Oleanna (+ d); Vanya on 42nd Street (Malle)
1996 American Buffalo (Corrente)
1997 The Spanish Prisoner (+ d); Wag the Dog (Levinson); The Edge (Tamahori)
1998 Ronin (Frankenheimer) (as Richard Weisz)
1999 Lansky (McNaughton) (for TV) (+ exec pr); The Winslow Boy (+ d)
2000 Lakeboat (Mantegna); Whistle (Lumet); State and Main (+ d)

Films as Actor:

1984 Sanford Meisner: The American Theatre’s Best Kept Secret (Doob) (as Himself)
1986 Black Widow (Rafelson) (as Herb)
Publications

By MAMET: books (nonfiction)—

By MAMET: articles—

“I Lost It at the Movies,” interview with P. Biskind, in American Film (Farmingdale, New York), vol. 12, no. 8, June 1987.
Interview in Sight and Sound (London), vol. 8, no. 10, October 1998.
Interview in Interview (New York), April 1998.

On MAMET: books—

On MAMET: articles—

* * *

From stage playwright to screenwriter is a common enough jump, but relatively few playwrights have gone on to become directors. And none, with the exception of Marcel Pagnol, has done so as successfully as David Mamet. Like Pagnol, Mamet has been able to use his theatrical prestige to resist crass commercial pressures. His films as writer-director are unmistakably personal, made without interference or compromise. The same hasn’t always been true of his scripts for other directors, as he readily acknowledges in On Directing Films: “Working as a screenwriter-for-hire, one is in the employ not of the eventual consumers (the audience, whose interests the honest writer must have at heart), but of speculators, whose ambition . . . is not to please the eventual consumer, but to extort from him as much money as possible.”

Nonetheless, clear thematic preoccupations run through all his film work, whether as writer or as director. The characters that fascinate him are those on the precarious margins of society: conmen, salesmen and hucksters, cops and petty criminals. He is concerned with the codes these fringe people live by, and those they break. Matters of trust and betrayal, illusion and deception, confidence bestowed and confidence betrayed, loom large in his work. Along with these codes goes the jargon: in his films as in his plays, Mamet is famous for the speed and ferocity of his dialogue, the obsessive, almost ritualistic repetitions of words and phrases. Underlying all this is a despairing sense of the corruption of the American Dream, the busted illusion of the pursuit of happiness that haunts a sour, wounded society. In his own typically eloquent words, “My characters are trapped in the destructive folds of the public myths on my country.”

According to Mamet’s own account, he “saw the craft of directing as the joyful extension of screenwriting.” But he also followed a well-established tradition of eminent writer-directors (Billy Wilder, Preston Sturges, Joseph Mankiewicz, et al), in taking up direction partly in order to protect his own writing. His directorial debut, House of Games, followed closely on the travesty of his play Sexual Perversion in Chicago being filmed (not to his script) as About Last Night (1986). In that same writer-director tradition, Mamet tends to be matter-of-fact to the point of dismissiveness about his own cinematic technique, disclaiming any pretensions to being an auteur. The director’s job, he maintains, “is the work of constructing the shot list from the screenplay. The work on the set is nothing. All you have to do on the set is stay awake, follow your plans, help the actors be simple, and keep your sense of humour. The film is directed in the making of the shot list. . . . It is the plan that makes the movie.”

“The plan” in more senses than one. In Mamet’s films—many of those he has directed, and several that he has written—the action is often set up to deceive the audience, a visual sleight of hand paralleling the scam that’s being worked on the characters. In House of Games and The Spanish Prisoner (itself named after a classic con routine), the rug is repeatedly pulled out from under us; just as we think we know what is going on, Mamet reveals a further layer of deception. In Homicide we are led to believe that Joe Mantegna’s cop is uncovering a vast anti-Semitic conspiracy, until a supposed Nazi slogan proves to be a brand of pigeon-feed and the whole miasma of suspicion dissolves into nothingness. (Or maybe not, since the film leaves it possible that this revelation is itself just another trick.) Sometimes Mamet enjoys letting us in on the act, as in Things Change, or in his tour de force political satire Wag the Dog where—as if in ironic homage to Baudrillard—a whole war is faked up to hoax the public. Though even here, when we have watched the entire scam being devised, the denouement reveals other dimensions that we were not aware of. Referring to The Spanish Prisoner Mamet observed: “I don’t feel like I created this script—I feel like I’ve solved it. It’s like a magic trick. You have to give people information, but in such a way that they don’t realise it is information.”

Adapting his own stage work for the screen (as in Oleanna, which he directed, or American Buffalo and Glengarry Glen Ross, which he didn’t), Mamet simplifies it without losing its pungent flavour, cutting down on the repetitions and truculent non-sequiturs of the original. “You’re basically trying to make up pictures and you only resort to dialogue when you can’t make up the perfect picture. . . . The main message is being carried to the audience not by what people say or by how they say it, but by what the camera is doing.” Not that the camera, in his view, should do very much: he believes in “[let[ing] the cut tell the story,” and adds that “fantastic cinematography has been the death of American film.” He may well have been thinking of The Untouchables, where Brian De Palma’s showy direction jarred with Mamet’s taut dialogue. Despite his own outspoken distaste for Hollywood (“Hell with valet parking”) and the movie industry, Mamet seems increasingly at ease with filmmaking. In recent years he has shown himself ever more inclined to direct his own scripts—and to adapt and direct the work of other playwrights he admires, such as Terence Rattigan and Samuel Beckett. In the register of Mamet’s career his status as screenwriter and director may never rival his towering acclaim as a playwright, but it looks set to run it a very respectable second.

—Philip Kemp

MANCINI, Henry

Films as Composer:

1954 Creature from the Black Lagoon (Arnold); Six Bridges to Cross (Pevney) (song); Four Guns to the Border (Carlson)
1955 The Private War of Major Benson (Hopper); Tarantula (Arnold); This Island Earth (J. Newman)
1956 The Creature Walks among Us (Sherwood); Congo Crossing (Pevney); Rock, Pretty Baby (Bartlett)
1957 Man Afraid (Keller); The Big Beat (Cowan)
1958 Damn Citizen (Gordon); Flood Tide (Biberman); Summer Love (Haas); Touch of Evil (Welles); Voice in the Mirror (Keller)
1960 High Time (Edwards)
1976
W. C. Fields and Me (Hiller); Alex and the Gypsy (Korty);
Silver Streak (Hiller); The Pink Panther Strikes Again
(Edwards)

1978
House Calls (Zief); Revenge of the Pink Panther (Edwards);
Who Is Killing the Great Chefs of Europe? (Too Many Chefs) (Kotcheff); A Family Upside Down (Rich)

1979
Nightwing (Hiller); The Great Event (Zief); The Prisoner of Zenda (Quine); 10 (Edwards)

1980
Little Miss Marker (Bernstein)

1981
S.O.B. (Edwards); Condomancer (Jarrott); The Shadow Box
(P. Newman); Back Roads (Ritt); Mommie Dearest (Perry)

1982
Trail of the Pink Panther (Edwards); Victor/Victoria (Edwards)

1983
Curse of the Pink Panther (Edwards); Second Thoughts (Turman); Better Late than Never (Forbes); The Man Who Loved Women (Edwards)

1984
Angela (Sagal); Harry & Son (P. Newman)

1985
That’s Dancing! (Haley); Lifeforce (Hooper); Santa Claus:
The Movie (Szwarz)

1986
The Great Mouse Detective (Musher and others); A Fine Mess
(Edwards); That’s Life! (Edwards)

1987
Blind Date (Edwards); The Glass Menagerie (P. Newman); Heaven (D. Keaton) (songs); No Man’s Land (Werner) (song)

1988
Heavy Petting (Benz); Permanent Record (M. Silver) (song);
Physical Evidence (M. Crichton); The Presidio (Hyams)
(song); Sunset (Edwards); Without a Clue (Eberhardt)

1989
Fear (O’Bannon—for TV); Born on the Fourth of July (O.
Stone) (song); Mother, Mother (short) (song); Welcome
Home (Schaffner); Days of Thunder (T. Scott)

1990
Tom and Jerry: The Movie (Roman) (co); Ghost Dad (Poitier)

1991
Switch (Edwards); Never Forget (Sargent—for TV)

1993
Married to It (Hiller); Son of the Pink Panther (Edwards)

Other Films:

1954
The Glenn Miller Story (A. Mann) (mus d)

1956
The Benny Goodman Story (Davies) (arranger)

1974
The Sex Symbol (Rich) (mus d)

Publications

By MANCINI: books—

By MANCINI: articles—

Cinema (Los Angeles), July 1966.
Action (Los Angeles), November/December 1971.
Dialogue on Film (Beverly Hills, California), January 1974.
Soundtrack! (Hollywood), May 1977.
Interview with Elmer Bernstein, in Film Music Notebook (Calabasas,
In Film Score, edited by Tony Thomas, South Brunswick, New Photoplay (London), May 1983.

On MANCINI: articles—

Focus on Film (London), March/April 1970.
Thomas, Tony, in Music for the Movies, South Brunswick, New Dirigido por . . . (Barcelona), January 1974.
Ecran (Paris), September 1975.
Caps, John, in Film Music Notebook (Calabasas, California), vol. 3, 24 Images (Longueuil, Quebec), September/October 1980.
Fistful of Soundtracks (London), May 1981.
Soundtrack! (Hollywood), March 1982.
Soundtrack! (Hollywood), vol. 9, no. 34, June 1990.
Obituary in Current Biography, August 1994.
Scheurer, Timothy E., “Henry Mancini: An Appreciation and Appraisal,” in Journal of Popular Film and Television (Washington, D.C.), Spring 1996.
McKone, G., “Henry Mancini,” in Film Score Monthly (Los Ange-

* * *

The composer who made the most important stylistic change in American film music in the late 1950s was Henry Mancini. Using the more modern techniques of the recording industry rather than the by-then outmoded ones of the film studios, and with smaller orchestras and different instrumental groupings, Mancini brought a new awareness to scoring, particularly in the case of the television series Peter Gunn.

Mancini was the son of Italian immigrants and grew up in West Aliquippa, Pennslyvania, where his steelworker father was a member of the town band, The Sons of Italy. The boy was started on the piccolo at the age of eight and sent to teachers, of whom the most important was Max Adkins, the conductor of the Stanley Theater in Pittsburgh. Through Adkins, Mancini went straight from high school graduation in 1942 to the Juilliard School of Music in New York.
After one year of study he was called to military service, returning to civilian life in 1946, when he was hired as a pianist and arranger with Tex Beneke’s newly formed Glenn Miller Orchestra.

In 1952 Mancini was asked to arrange the music for a short subject at Universal. Head of music, Joseph Gershenson, then hired him to do some arrangements for Abbott and Costello’s Lost in Africa. A contract followed and Mancini spent the next six years adapting library music, orchestrating, and scoring all manner of movies. His dance-bond background proved invaluable in being assigned The Glenn Miller Story and The Benny Goodman Story. Among the many people impressed by Mancini’s score for the Orson Welles classic Touch of Evil was Blake Edwards, who hired him to write the ground breaking, jazz-influenced score for Peter Gunn. Its success began an association with Edwards that resulted in the scores for Breakfast at Tiffany’s, which included the song “Moon River” (written with lyricist Johnny Mercer), with Oscars for both the score and the song; Days of Wine and Roses (also working with Mercer and winning another best song Oscar); The Pink Panther and its sequels; The Great Race; 10; S.O.B.; and Victor/Victoria, which brought him an Oscar for best original song score. Mancini’s film composing ran the gamut of genres. His scary music for Experiment in Terror (another Edwards-directed feature) and Wait until Dark, the poignant The Moly Magazines, and the chilling, unsettling music for The White Dawn are as much Mancini as the amusing music for Hatari! and The Great Waldo Pepper.

Additionally, he was able to employ the lighter and serious sides of his composing talents with equal effectiveness as a popular recording and performing artist, in the process winning a far greater public identity than most of his colleagues. He recorded more than 90 record albums, ranging in scope from jazz to classical-pop to big band, and each year averaged 50 concert performance dates.

Mancini was a much-loved, much-honored figure who won a total of 18 Oscar nominations (beginning in 1954, for The Glenn Miller Story) and an astounding 72 Grammy Award nominations (including 20 wins, beginning in 1958 with an “album of the year” prize for Peter Gunn). His final credit, prior to his death in 1994: composing for the Broadway musical version of Victor/Victoria, directed by Blake Edwards and starring Julie Andrews.

On the art of scoring Mancini said, “One thing I have learned is that good music can improve a fine film but it can never make a bad film good. Another is to recognize those parts of a film which are better off without music. We composers are not magicians. We write music. We are one of the elements that go into the making of a final piece of work. When it works and when we feel we’ve made a contribution, it’s a great source of satisfaction.”

—Tony Thomas, updated by Rob Edelman

MANDEL, Johnny

Composer. Nationality: American. Born: New York, New York, 23 November 1925. Education: Studied symphonic music at Manhattan School of Music and Julliard School of Music. Career: Discovered he had perfect pitch when he was five; began writing big band arrangements at age 12; played in swing bands at age 16; after graduation worked with violinist Joe Venuti; arranged, wrote, and performed (generally on trombone and trumpet) with Alvino Rey, Artie Shaw, Jimmy Dorsey, Buddy Rich, Elliott Lawrence, and the Henry Jerome Orchestra, 1940s and 1950s; radio and television work, including Your Show of Shows. Joined Count Basie Orchestra; session work with Frank Sinatra, Tony Bennett, Chet Baker, Peggy Lee, Anita O’Day, Maynard Ferguson, Mel Torme, and Andy Williams, Los Angeles; turned from playing to composing music, late 1950s; began scoring films with I Want to Live, 1958; composed music for the TV series Banyon, 1972, M*A*S*H, 1972, “One for the Road” episode of Amazing Stories, 1985. Awards: Academy Award, Best Song, for “The Shadow of Your Smile,” and Grammy Award, Best Original Score Written for a Motion Picture or Television Show, for The Sandpiper, 1966; ASCAP Henry Mancini Award, 1997.

Films as Composer:

1958  I Want to Live (Thomas) (billed as John Mandel)
1960  The Third Voice (Cornfield); The Lawbreakers (Newman)
1963  Drums of Africa (Clark)
1964  The Americanization of Emily (Emily) (Hiller)
1965  The Sandpiper (Minnelli)
1966  An American Dream (See You in Hell, Darling) (Gist); Harper (Smight); The Russians Are Coming, The Russians Are Coming (Jewison)
1967  Code Name: Heraclitus (Goldstone—for TV); Point Blank (Boorman)
1968  Pretty Poison (Black)
1969  That Cold Day in the Park (Altman); Some Kind of Nut (Kanin); Heaven with a Gun (Katzin)
1970  The Man Who Had Power Over Women (Krish); M*A*S*H (Altman)
1971  The Trackers (No Trumpets, No Drums) (Bellamy—for TV)
1972  Molly and Lawless John (Nelson); Journey Through Rosebud (Gries)
1973  Summer Wishes, Winter Dreams (Cates); The Last Detail (Ashby)
1974  W (I Want Her Dead) (Quine)
1975  Escape to Witch Mountain (Hough); The Turning Point of Jim Malloy (Gibbsville: The Turning Point of Jim Malloy) (Gilroy—for TV)
1976  The Sailor Who Fell from Grace with the Sea (Carlino)
1977  Freaky Friday (Nelson)
1979  Being There (Chance) (Ashby); Agatha (Apted)
1980  Baltimore Bullet (Ellis Miller); Caddyshack (Ramis)
1981  Evita Peron (Chomsky—for TV)
1982  The Verdict (Lumet); Soup for One (Kaufman) (additional music); Deathtrap (Lumet); Lookin’ to Get Out (Ashby)
1983  Staying Alive (Stallone) (additional music)
1985  A Letter to Three Wives (Eliakann—for TV)
1987  Foxfire (Taylor—for TV); Assault and Matrimony (Frawley—for TV)
1989  Brenda Starr (Ellis Miller); Single Women, Married Men (Havinga—for TV)
1990  Kaleidoscope (Taylor—for TV)

Other Films:

1994  A Great Day in Harlem (Bach) (music consultant)

Publications:

By MANDEL: articles—

On MANDEL: articles—

* * *

Composer/arranger/instrumentalist Johnny Mandel came into film scoring and Hollywood songwriting after a long and successful career playing and arranging jazz and big band music. Like Henry Mancini, Mandel was one of Hollywood’s last true links to the classic American pop era of big band, swing, and bebop.

Mandel’s musical education began at age 5 when his musical family discovered he had perfect pitch. Piano lessons followed but the young Mandel soon found his true calling in the brass family of instruments: first on trumpet and later trombone. By age 12 he was writing big band arrangements, and by 16 was performing in bands in Catskill Mountain resorts.

During the prime big band era, Mandel got the kind of thorough working musical education impossible to achieve today. “A lot of the people I came up with—Stan Getz, Zoot Sims, Miles Davis—were out on the road from when we were 16 and 17 years old. I did it for ten years, one-nighters all down the line. You can’t learn this, you have to live it. We were very lucky because we had bands to play in. That’s how you learn,” Mandel remembered in an ASCAP interview.

Mandel’s road work included performing with Alvino Rey, Artie Shaw, and Count Basie, among many others. With the decline of the big bands, Mandel began writing for radio and television in 1949, and by 1954 had settled in Los Angeles, doing session recording work, and concentrating on writing and arranging. His first film work was as an uncredited arranger for the 1955 Martin/Lewis film, You’re Never Too Young. Mandel’s career in actual film scoring commenced in 1958 with an innovative jazz score for I Want To Live, Robert Wise’s grimly realistic crime drama about playgirl/convicted murderess Barbara Graham and her eventual execution in the San Quentin gas chamber. Mandel commented: “I felt totally at home doing movies because I’d done everything else first. I’d worked Vegas shows and in television with Sid Caesar’s Your Show of Shows where you had to write visual cues, where you were catching dance accents and marrying music to sight cues. And I’d done some radio drama in the late ‘40s and early ‘50s, so I’d learned to write to the second hand. Movies combine all of those things, so I realized—very late!—that I already knew how to do it.”

Fortunately, Mandel broke into film scoring in a cinematic era that was ideally suited to his talents. The old order studio system, with its wall-to-wall symphonic orchestral scores, had crumbled by the late 1950s, and a new mode of film music, based on pop and jazz idioms, was quickly emerging.

Though jazz had been fused with orchestral scoring in several previous Hollywood films—most notably Alex North’s landmark 1951 score for A Streetcar Named Desire, and Elmer Bernstein’s The Man With the Golden Arm in 1955—I Want To Live was the first film to be completely scored in an authentic jazz mode. The real life Graham had been a fan of saxophonist Gerry Mulligan, who was at the height of his popularity in the late 1950s. Mulligan and his combo appear in the opening club scene, and perform all the source music in the film.

The underscoring was also based on 1950s jazz styles, utilizing unusual instruments and conventional ones employed in extreme ranges such as the piccolo heard in an uncharacteristic low register in the execution cue. Mandel placed an emphasis on jazz drumming and exotic percussion for the suspense cues, sometimes employing several jazz percussionists. Two original soundtracks albums were released by United Artists Records at the time of the film’s release, one featuring the source music played by Mulligan’s combo, and the other including the more expansive, big band influenced underscoring.

In the digital era, both albums were combined on a Rykodisc CD which included extensive liner notes on both the film and Mandel’s unique score.

By the late 1950s, pop/jazz scores such as I Want To Live and Henry Mancini’s Touch of Evil and Breakfast At Tiffany’s were increasingly in demand. They were commercially successful, often producing both lucrative popular songs and soundtrack LPs, which meant both royalties and free promotion for the film. Mandel himself had several pop song successes, and a string of original soundtracks albums during the late 1950s and early 1960s.

After three small features, Mandel scored two major films, both of which produced successful theme songs. The Americanization of Emily, an off-beat comedy-drama about a less than heroic American soldier in World War II England, produced the hit “Emily,” with lyrics by Johnny Mercer. Even more successful was a tune written for The Sandpiper, a project chiefly motivated by the then-much publicized coupling of Elizabeth Taylor and Richard Burton. Today the film is primarily remembered for Mandel’s ballad, “The Shadow Of Your Smile.” With lyrics by Paul Frances Webster, the lyrical melody with a contemporary bossa nova beat became one of the most recorded film songs of the decade, and won an Academy Award for Best Song in 1965.

Mandel followed Sandpiper with An American Dream, a watered-down version of the Norman Mailer novel, which nonetheless introduced another sensitive jazz ballad, “A Time for Love.” (“A Time For Love” was again nominated for an Academy Award, but lost to “Born Free.”) These popular successes led to Mandel scoring a number of 1960s “New Hollywood” classics, among them Harper, Point Blank, Pretty Poison, and That Cold Day in the Park. In 1970 he hit commercial gold again with his score for Robert Altman’s M*A*S*H, which produced the hit “Suicide Is Painless” (also known as “Theme from M*A*S*H”). Mandel also scored the TV series based on the film.

Along with The LastDetail in 1973, M*A*S*H was the last film of consequence that Mandel scored, moving on as he did to Disney live-action features (Escape to Witch Mountain, Freaky Friday), and a mixed bag of comedies (Caddyshack), TV movies, and the occasional major feature (Deathtrap, Brenda Starr). Mandel’s last score was for a TV movie of Danielle Steel’s Kaleidoscope in 1990.

In spite of his prolific film work, Mandel considered himself primarily a jazz musician, and during the 1990s, he returned to his arranging roots with arrangements for a variety of major recording artists, including Michael Jackson, Quincy Jones, and Barbra Streisand, as well as producing his own solo albums. In addition to his Academy Award and two nominations, Mandel has won four Grammys, and in 1997 was awarded ASCAP’s prestigious Henry Mancini Award.

—Ross Care

553
MANDELL, Daniel

Films as Editor:

1921 The Match Breaker (Fitzgerald); Foolish Wives (von Stroheim)
1923 Lady of Quality (Henley)
1924 The Turmoil (Henley)
1925 California Straight Ahead (Pollard)
1927 Uncle Tom’s Cabin (Pollard) (co)
1928 Love Me and the World Is Mine (Dupont) (co)
1929 Man, Woman, and Wife (E. Laemmle); Melody Lane (Hill); Show Boat (Pollard) (co); Silks and Saddles (Hill); Tonight at Twelve (Pollard)
1930 Holiday (E. Griffith); Sin Takes a Holiday (Stein); Swing High (Santley); Undertow (Pollard)
1931 Beyond Victory (Robertson); Devotion (Milton); Rebound (E. Griffith)
1932 The Animal Kingdom (E. Griffith); A Woman Commands (Stein)
1932–33 Six comedy shorts
1933 Counsellor-at-Law (Wyler); Emergency Call (Cahn)
1934 Embarrassing Moments (E. Laemmle); I’ll Tell the World (Sedgwick); Love Birds (Seiter); Wake Up and Dream (Neumann)
1935 Diamond Jim (Sutherland); The Good Fairy (Wyler); His Night Out (Nigh); King Solomon of Broadway (Crosland)
1936 Dodsworth (Wyler); These Three (Wyler)
1937 Dead End (Wyler); Woman Chases Man (Blystone); You Only Live Once (F. Lang)
1939 The Real Glory (Hathaway); Wuthering Heights (Wyler)
1940 The Westerner (Wyler)
1941 Ball of Fire (Hawks); The Little Foxes (Wyler); Meet John Doe (Capra)
1942 The Pride of the Yankees (Wood); They Got Me Covered (Butler)
1943 The North Star (Milestone)
1944 Arsenic and Old Lace (Capra) (co); The Princess and the Pirate (Butler); Up in Arms (Nugent)
1945 Wonder Man (Humberstone)
1946 The Best Years of Our Lives (Wyler); The Kid from Brooklyn (McLeod)
1948 Enchantment (Reis); A Song Is Born (Hawks)
1949 My Foolish Heart (Robson); Roseanna McCoy (Reis)
1950 Edge of Doom (Robson)
1951 I Want You (Robson); A Millionaire for Christy (Marshall); Valentino (Allen)
1952 Hans Christian Andersen (C. Vidor)
1953 Return to Paradise (Robson)
1955 Guys and Dolls (Mankiewicz)
1956 The Sharkfighters (Hopper)
1957 Witness for the Prosecution (Wilder)
1959 Porgy and Bess (Preminger)
1960 The Apartment (Wilder)
1961 One, Two, Three (Wilder)
1963 Irma La Douce (Wilder)
1964 Kiss Me, Stupid (Wilder)
1966 The Fortune Cookie (Wilder)

Publications

On MANDELL: articles—

Film Comment (New York), March-April 1977.

* * *

The greatest accomplishment of a good editor is, ironically, that the audience is totally unaware of his or her work. Unlike actors, art directors, or cinematographers, whose work is placed before the viewer on a platter, the editor must interpret, dissect, and anticipate the product to make the average filmgoer completely oblivious to his or her efforts on the picture.

This was perhaps more evident in the days before quick action and special effects were so lavish on the screen and is characteristic of the work of the veteran editor Daniel Mandell. Mandell, who flourished within the studio system of the 1930s and 1940s, had the ability to anticipate what would look good to an audience and cull that product out of the mass of scenes, shots, and directives given to him. According to interviews with Mandell, his early training in vaudeville made him very sensitive to timing and the ways in which audiences react.

His editing career began with assistant ‘‘cutter’’ jobs at Metro, then, during the 1920s and early 1930s, he went from studio to studio working on some noteworthy films, including Erich von Stroheim’s Foolish Wives, until he settled in at the Samuel Goldwyn studios. There he worked until well into the 1950s and was head editor of a number of the high-budget Goldwyn productions.

His specialty was the serious film such as These Three, Dodsworth, and Wuthering Heights in which his sensitive editing helped to pace the strong stories. Mandell won an Oscar for his editing of The Pride of the Yankees, an adept combination of action, intimate drama, and montage which, though somewhat maudlin, nevertheless is touching and well paced. His second Oscar, again for Goldwyn, was for the magnificent work he did on The Best Years of Our Lives. Although the film was an almost actionless drama, the superb editing of the climactic sequence at the deserted airfield was an outstanding achievement. It still stands up well against the more modern, technologically advanced work of films like the Terminator series in which technique dominates artistry.

Perhaps Mandell’s greatest asset was his subtlety. This was evident again in 1960 when he won his third award for Billy Wilder’s The Apartment, a small, black-and-white drama which proved that, after a number of years of the Oscar going to lavish color productions like Ben-Hur, sensitivity could still count. It was, in fact, one of only two films (the other being Z), that was neither color nor large-budget spectacular to win the best editing Oscar in the last 45 years.

—Patricia King Hanson

MANKIEWICZ, Herman

Writer and Producer. Nationality: American. Born: Herman Jacob Mankiewicz in New York City, 7 November 1897; brother of the writer and director Joseph Mankiewicz. Education: Attended Columbia University, New York, graduated; University of Berlin. Family: Married Shulamith Sara Aronson, 1920; one son, the writer Don M. Mankiewicz. Career: 1918—served in the United States Marine Corps; then worked in Europe for the Red Cross Press Service, as publicity manager for Isadora Duncan, and Berlin correspondent for the Chicago Tribune; 1922–26—assistant drama editor, New York Times; 1926—first film as writer, The Road to Mandalay, followed in the next dozen years by many films as writer, often as title writer (through the end of the silent period) and script doctor (often uncredited); 1930–32—produced four films, including two Marx Brothers comedies; 1939—began association with the director Orson Welles. Awards: Academy Award for Citizen Kane, 1941. Died: 5 March 1953.

Films as Writer:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1926</td>
<td>The Road to Mandalay (Browning); Stranded in Paris (Rosson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1927</td>
<td>Fashions for Women (Arzner); A Gentleman of Paris (D’Arrast); Figures Don’t Lie (Sutherland); The Spotlight (Tuttle); The City Gone Wild (Cruze); The Gay Defender (La Cava); Honeymoon Hate (Reed)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1928</td>
<td>Two Flaming Youths (Waters); Gentlemen Prefer Blondes (St. Clair); The Last Command (von Sternberg); Something Always Happens (Tuttle); His Tiger Lady (Henley); The Drag Net (von Sternberg); The Magnificent Flirt (D’Arrast); The Big Killing (Jones); The Water Hole (Jones); The Matinée Call (Cruze); Avalanche (Brower); The Barker (Fitzmaurice); Three Weekends (Badger); What a Night! (Sutherland)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1929</td>
<td>Marquis Preferred (Tuttle); The Canary Murder Case (St. Clair); The Dummy (Milton); The Man I Love (Wellman); Thunderbolt (von Sternberg)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Men Are Like That (Tuttle); The Love Doctor (Brown); The Mighty (Cromwell); Honey (Ruggles); Ladies Love Brutes (Lee); Love among the Millionaires (Tuttle); The Vagabond King (Berger); True to the Navy (Tuttle)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>The Royal Family of Broadway (Cukor and Gardner); Man of the World (Wallace); Ladies’ Man (Mendes)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>The Lost Squadron (Archainbaud); Dancers in the Dark (Burton); Girl Crazy (Seiter)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>Another Language (E. Griffith); Dinner at Eight (Cukor); Meet the Baron (W. Lang)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>The Show-Off (Reisner); Stamboul Quest (Wood)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>After Office Hours (Leonard); Escapade (Leonard)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>John Meade’s Woman (Wallace); My Dear Miss Aldrich (Seitz)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>It’s a Wonderful World (Van Dyke)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>Keeping Company (Simon); Citizen Kane (Welsh); Rise and Shine (Dwan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1942</td>
<td>Pride of the Yankees (Wood)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>Stand By for Action (Leonard)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1944</td>
<td>Christmas Holiday (Siodmak)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1945</td>
<td>The Enchanted Cottage (Cromwell); The Spanish Main (Borzage)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>A Woman’s Secret (Ray)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>The Pride of St. Louis (Jones)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Films as Producer:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Laughter (D’Arrast)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>Monkey Business (McLeod)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>Horse Feathers (McLeod); Million Dollar Legs (Cline)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>Duck Soup (McCarey)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

By MANKIEWICZ: book—

On MANKIEWICZ: books—

On MANKIEWICZ: articles—

Ciment, Michel, “‘Ouragans autour de Kane,’” in Positif (Paris), March 1975.
Film Comment (New York), July-August 1984.
Film Dope (Nottingham), December 1987.

Lillian Gish once exclaimed, “Yes, Orson Welles is a genius, a genius at self-promotion.” That genius for self-promotion, his many talents notwithstanding, was largely responsible for Welles receiving and accepting all credit for the screenplay to Citizen Kane. Despite Welles’s statement that “the writer should have the first and last word in filmmaking, the only better alternatives being the writer-director, but with the stress on the first word,” he perpetuated the myth that he was solely responsible for the creation of Kane, with utter disregard for the fact that he shared screen credit and the Academy Award with Herman Mankiewicz. Critics and film historians went along with this injustice until 1971 when Pauline Kael exploded the misconception with her controversial essay “Raising Kane,” wherein she set the record straight as to Mankiewicz being the primary contributor to the screenplay. Offensive as this premise was to the auteurists and possibly to Welles, Mankiewicz’s contribution to Kane is now an accepted fact, so much so that writers like Richard Corliss can confidently state that “Herman Mankiewicz wrote Citizen Kane with only nominal assistance from Orson Welles.”

Why had Mankiewicz’s contribution been so ignored for three decades? The two chief reasons were the ego of Orson Welles and the ego of Herman Mankiewicz. Welles’s complicity is easy to understand, but who was Herman Mankiewicz? This elder brother of Joseph was a bright, acerbic, hard-drinking bon vivant who began his writing career as a Berlin correspondent for the Chicago Tribune and went on to become a second-string drama editor for the New York Times and a frequent contributor to the New Yorker. He was a familiar face to the Algonquin Round Table set, and Ben Hecht dubbed him “The Central Park West Voltaire.” When he went to Hollywood in 1926, he was accused of selling out, but the money was alluring and Mankiewicz had a strong self-destructive and undisciplined streak in him. Screenwriting enhanced his lifestyle, and if one looks at the forty-odd films to which he contributed, there are few clues to foreshadow the excellence of Citizen Kane. A number of his screenplays did carry the reporter/newspaper theme—a milieu he knew very well—and a number of others revealed the wit for which he was well known. The best film for which he received credit was Dinner at Eight, which he wrote in collaboration with Frances Marion. His best writing seems to be for those films on which he was executive producer and for which he took no writing credit—Laughter, Monkey Business, Horse Feathers, Million Dollar Legs, and Duck Soup.

Mankiewicz was a friend of both William Randolph Hearst and Marion Davies, and his depiction of them in the Kane script was considered the betrayal of friendship by an alcoholic loser. But personal vendetta aside, Mankiewicz’s script is a masterful dissection of power and the fall from grace, and his contribution cannot be overlooked. With that balance in mind, it is fair to concede that while Mankiewicz did write the script, it was Welles’s sense of the baroque, his irony, and his entrepreneurial audacity which makes Citizen Kane a great cinema.

Mankiewicz’s own assessment of screenwriting (circa 1935), while somewhat flippant, is probably closer to the truth than most practitioners would like to admit: “You don’t really need to be a writer, in the accepted sense of the word, to write for pictures. Some of the best scenario writers in Hollywood can’t write at all. They simply have a flair for ideas, for situations; these, in turn, suggest bits of business; then they tie dialogue onto the business, or hire someone to do it for them. . . . In the movies, for the most part, there is no such thing as individual creation. No one person makes a picture. It is the blend of the work from five to fifteen people—each one of whom is boss of his particular field, each one of whom has to be satisfied. And if it takes ten writers to satisfy the real bosses, what difference does it make, as long as the picture is good.” A far cry from Welles, who once pompously opined: “Theatre is a collective experience; cinema is the work of one single person.”

—Ronald Bowers

MARION, Frances

Writer, director, and actress and editor. Nationality: American. Born: Frances Marion Owens in San Francisco, California, 18 November 1890. Education: Attended Hamilton Grammar School; St. Margaret’s Hall; University of California, Berkeley. Family: Married 1) Wesley De Lappé, 1907 (divorced 1909); 2) Robert Pike, 1910; 3) Fred Thomson (died 1928); two sons; 4) George William Hill, 1930 (divorced 1931). Career: 1909—reporter, San Francisco Examiner; then commercial artist, advertising designer, model, and poster painter for Oliver Morosco’s Theatre; 1914—assistant to Lois Weber; 1915–17—writer for World Company Films (association with Mary Pickford), and Paramount; 1918–19—war correspondent in France; after 1920, wrote for Hearst’s Cosmopolitan Studios, MGM, and Columbia; 1925—first novel published; 1940—retired from screenwriting; taught scriptwriting at the University of Southern California, Los Angeles. Awards: Academy Award for The Big House, 1930 and The Champ, 1932. Died: 12 May 1973.
Frances Marion

Films as Writer, Actress, and Editor/Assistant Editor to Lois Weber:

1914 False Colors; Hypocrites; It’s No Laughing Matter; Like Most Wives; Traitor
1915 Sunshine Molly

Films as Writer:

1915 Camille (Capellani); Twas Ever Thus (Janis) (+ ro); Nearly a Lady (Janis) (+ ro)
1916 The Foundling (O’Brien); The Yellow Passport (August); Then I’ll Come Back to You (Irving); The Social Highwayman (August); The Feast of Life (Capellani); Tangled Fates (Vale); La Vie de Bohème (Capellani); The Crucial Test (J. Ince and Thornby); A Woman’s Way (O’Neil); The Summer Girl (August); Friday, the 13th (Chautard); The Revolt (O’Neil); The Hidden Scar (O’Neil); The Gilded Cage (Knoles); Bought and Paid For (Knoles); All Man (Chautard); The Rise of Susan (S.E. Taylor); On Dangerous Ground (Thornby)
1917 A Woman Alone (Davenport); Tillie Wakes Up (Davenport); The Hungry Heart (Chautard); A Square Deal (Knoles); A Girl’s Folly (Tourneur); The Web of Desire (Chautard); A Poor Little Rich Girl (Tourneur); As Man Made Her (Archainbaud); The Social Leper (Knoles); Forget-Me-Not (Chautard); Darkest Russia (Vale); The Crimson Dove (Fielding); The Stolen Paradise (Knoles); The Divorce Game (Vale); The Beloved Adventuress (Brady and Cowl); The Amazons (Kaufman); Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm (Neilan); A Little Princess (Neilan)
1918 Stella Maris (Neilan); Amarilly of Clothes-Line Alley (Neilan); M’Liss (Neilan); How Could You, Jean? (W. Taylor); The City of Dim Faces (Melford); Johanna Enlists (W. Taylor); He Comes Up Smiling (Dwan); The Temple of Dusk (Young); The Goat (Crisp)
1919 Captain Kidd, Jr. (W. Taylor); The Misleading Widow (Robertson); Anne of Green Gables (W. Taylor); A Regular Girl (Young)
The Cinema Murder (Baker); Pollyanna (Powell); Humoresque (Borzage); The Flapper (Crosland); The Restless Sex (Leonard and d’Usseau); The World and His Wife (Vignola)

Just around the Corner (+ d); The Love Light (+ d); Straight Is the Way (Vignola)

Back Pay (Borzage); The Primitive Lover (Franklin); Sonny (King); East Is West (Franklin); Minnie (Nielan and Urson)

The Voice from the Minaret (Lloyd); The Famous Mrs. Fair (Niblo); The Nit’Commandment (Borzage) (+ artistic supervisor); Within the Law (Lloyd); The Love Piker (Hopper); Potash and Perlmutter (Badger); The French Doll (Leonard)

The Song of Love (Franklin) (+ co-ed); Through the Dark (Hill); Abraham Lincoln (Rosen); Secrets (Borzage); Cytherea (Fitzmaurice); Tarnish (Fitzmaurice); In Hollywood with Potash and Perlmutter (Green); Sundown (Trimble and Hoyt)

A Thief in Paradise (Fitzmaurice); The Lady (Borzage); The Flaming Forties (Forman); His Supreme Moment (Fitzmaurice); Zander the Great (Hill); Lightnin’ (Ford); Graustark (Buchowetzki); The Dark Angel (Fitzmaurice); Lazy Bones (Borzage); Thank You (Ford); Simon the Jester (Melford) (+ pr); Stella Dallas (H. King)

The First Year (Borzage); Partners Again (H. King); Paris at Midnight (Hopper) (+ pr); The Son of the Sheik (Fitzmaurice); The Scarlet Letter (Sjöström); The Winning of Barbara Worth (H. King)

The Red Mill (Goodrich); The Callahans and the Murphys (Hill); Madame Pompadour (Wilcox); Love (Goulding)

Bringing Up Father (Conway); The Cossacks (Hill); Excess Baggage (Cruze); The Wind (Sjöström); The Awakening (Fleming); The Masks of the Devil (Sjöström)

Their Own Desire (Hopper and Forbes)

Anna Christie (Brown); The Rogue Song (L. Barrymore); The Big House (Hill); Let Us Be Gay (Leonard); Good News (Grinde and MacGregor); Min and Bill (Hill); Wu Li Chang (Grinde)

The Secret Six (Hill); The Champ (Vidor)

Emma (Brown); Blondie of the Follies (Goulding); Cynara (Vidor)

Secrets (Borzage); Peg o’ My Heart (Leonard); Dinner at Eight (Cukor); The Prizefighter and the Lady (Van Dyke); Going Hollywood (Walsh)

Riffraff (Ruben)

Camille (Cukor); Love from a Stranger (Lee); Knight without Armour (Feyder)

Green Hell (Whale)

Publications

By MARION: books—

Minnie Flynn (novel), New York, 1925.

The Scarlet Letter (script) in Motion Picture Continuities, by Frances Patterson, New York, 1929.

The Secret Six (novel), New York, 1931.

Valley People (novel), New York, 1935.

How to Write and Sell Film Stories (nonfiction), New York, 1937.

Molly, Bless Her (novel), New York, 1937.

Westward the Dream (novel), New York, 1948.

The Powder Keg (novel), Boston, Massachusetts, 1954.

Off with Their Heads! (autobiography), New York, 1972.

By MARION: articles—

Film Weekly (London), 10 November 1935.

On MARION: articles—

Tully, Jim, in Vanity Fair (New York), January 1927.

* * *

Generally ranked with the leading screenwriters of all time, Frances Marion had more than 130 screen credits during her 25-year career, spanning the years 1915 to 1940, from the rise of the star-laden silent features to the height of the Golden Age of talkies. Her work encompasses such diversities as the 1915 Camille starring Clara Kimball Young and the 1937 Garbo version, A Poor Little Rich Girl with Mary Pickford in 1917 and Riffraff with Jean Harlow in 1935; but she was best known for her “four-handkerchief” pictures (Stella Marion arrived in Los Angeles from San Francisco in 1913 at age 23, twice married and divorced, talented and ambitious, having already worked as a journalist, artist’s and photographer’s model, commercial artist/illustrator, and writer of published stories and verse. She got into film work under a system that today would be called “networking,” when her close friend Adela Rogers St. Johns introduced her to director-producer-writer Lois Weber, who took Marion into Bosworth studios as her protégée, doing a little bit of everything—acting, writing, cutting, publicity. There Marion met actor Owen Moore who introduced her to his wife, Mary Pickford. Marion and Pickford became and remained the best of friends, and frequent colleagues, for life.

If that sounds like the start of a heartwarming movie script, one could add other similar episodes. Friendship was one of Marion’s special talents, so when Lois Weber died penniless and forgotten after a significant career, it was Marion who, at the peak of her own fame and fortune, arranged and paid for Weber’s funeral. When Marie Dressler, another old friend, couldn’t get work on stage or screen, Marion revitalized her career with lively hand-tailored scripts—and helped get her cast as Marthy in Anna Christie which Marion had also scripted. After that, there was no stopping Dressler, who consulted Marion at every turn. Among other close friends for whom Marion wrote scripts were Alice Brady, Elsie Janis, Billie Burke, and Marion Davies. She also wrote vehicles for Ronald Coleman, Rudolph Valentino, John Gilbert, and Wallace Beery, and helped discover Gary Cooper and Clark Gable.

Although by tradition Hollywood writers usually travel in their own circles, Marion also had many good friends among producers: William A. Brady, who gave her a writing contract at $200 a week in 1917; William Randolph Hearst, who let her direct her first film, Just around the Corner, in 1921; Joe Kennedy, who encouraged her third husband, the ex-chaplain and college athlete Fred Thomson, to star in westerns; Samuel Goldwyn, her favorite producer, who called her his favorite scriptwriter; Irving Thalberg, who over several years sought her advice on production problems and on other writers’ scripts.

What distinguished Marion’s scripts, according to DeWitt Bodeen (who researched and interviewed Marion in her later life), were her original characters with their dramatic but genuinely human conflicts, and her eye-minded stories, written always with the camera in mind. Her screenplays moved, and could be acted, Bodeen wrote. As one of the few scriptwriters who made a successful transition from silent films to talkies, Marion often wrote sequences without any dialogue, relying on pantomime (and the especially expressive faces of Garbo, Beery, and Dressler) to reach audiences more effectively than words could.

Soon after Marion started a long-term $3,500-a-week contract at MGM, as one of Hollywood’s highest paid scriptwriters, tragedy came into her life: her husband died suddenly of tetanus, leaving their two young sons for her to raise alone. A later short-lived marriage to George W. Hill, a director-friend, was followed by his suicide a few years after their divorce. Already feeling vulnerable, as screenwriting was being handled more and more on an assembly-line basis, Marion decided that she would have to be a writer-director or writer-producer to maintain the integrity of her scripts.

She had already tried directing and it seemed to go nowhere. Following her first effort for Hearst in 1921, Marion had directed Mary Pickford in The Love Light. A few years later, when the film’s director was too ill to work, Marion had finished directing her own script for The Song of Love, a Norma Talmadge production. But her efforts to produce her own scripts in the late 1930s and 1940s never got off the ground. She turned instead to magazine stories and serials. Her book How to Write and Sell Film Stories emphasizes visual over verbal communication, stresses simplicity and detail, colorful personalities, and everyday emotions. Her later book of reminiscences, Off with Their Heads!, tells more about her friends than about herself. She mentions merely in passing that she directed three films but writes nothing about her experiences or why she stopped.

—Cecile Starr

MARSHALL, Frank

Producer and Director. Nationality: American. Born: Los Angeles, 13 September 1946. Education: Attended University of California, Los Angeles, as political science major. Family: Married the producer Kathleen Kennedy. Career: Protégé of Peter Bogdanovich, working on his production crew and serving as an assistant on Targets, 1968, location manager on The Last Picture Show, 1971, and What’s Up, Doc?, 1972; line producer on Orson Welles’s The Other Side of the Wind (unreleased); 1981—began collaboration with Steven Spielberg as a producer for Raiders of the Lost Ark; 1982—with Spielberg and Kathleen Kennedy, formed production company.
Amblin Entertainment. Awards: ShoWest Award, Producer of the Year, 1982. Address: Kennedy-Marshall Co., 1351 4th Street, 4th Floor, Santa Monica, California 90401–1337, U.S.A.

Films as Producer:

1973 Paper Moon (Bogdanovich) (asst)
1974 Daisy Miller (Bogdanovich) (asst)
1975 At Long Last Love (Bogdanovich) (asst)
1976 Nickelodeon (Bogdanovich) (asst)
1978 The Last Waltz (Scorsese—doc) (line pr); The Driver (W. Hill)
1979 The Warriors (W. Hill) (exec)
1981 Raiders of the Lost Ark (Spielberg) (+ ro as pilot)
1982 Poltergeist (Hooper) (co)
1983 Twilight Zone—The Movie (Landis, Spielberg, and Dante) (exec)
1984 Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom (Spielberg) (co-exec); Gremlins (Dante) (co-exec)
1985 Fandango (K. Reynolds) (co-exec); The Goonies (R. Donner) (co-exec); Back to the Future (Zemeckis) (co-exec); Young Sherlock Holmes (Levinson) (co-exec); The Color Purple (Spielberg) (co)
1986 An American Tail (Bluth—animation) (co-exec); The Money Pit (Benjamin) (co)
1987 Innerspace (Dante) (co-exec); batteries not included (M. Robbins) (co-exec); Empire of the Sun (Spielberg) (co)
1988 Who Framed Roger Rabbit? (Zemeckis) (co); The Land Before Time (Bluth—animation) (co-exec)
1989 Indiana Jones & the Last Crusade (Spielberg) (co-exec); Dad (Goldberg) (co-exec); Back to the Future Part II (Zemeckis) (co-exec); Always (Spielberg) (co)
1990 Back to the Future Part III (Zemeckis) (co-exec); Gremlins II (Dante) (co-exec); Joe Versus the Volcano (Shanley) (co-exec)
1991 Cape Fear (Scorsese) (co-exec); Hook (Spielberg) (co); An American Tail: Fievel Goes West (Nibblenub and Wells—animation) (co-exec)
1992 Noises Off (Bogdanovich)
1993 Swing Kids (Carter) (co-exec); A Far Off Place (Salomon) (co-exec); We’re Back! A Dinosaur’s Story (D. & R. Zondag, Nibblenub, and Wells—animation) (co-exec)
1994 Milk Money (Benjamin) (co)
1995 The Indian in the Cupboard (Oz) (co)
1999 Olympic Glory (Merrill) (co-prod); The Sixth Sense (Shyamalan); Snow Falling on Cedars (Hicks) (+ 2nd unit director); A Map of the World (Elliott); Sports Pages (series)

Films as Director:

1990 Arachnophobia (+ co-exec pr); Tummy Trouble (live-action only, short); Rollercoaster Rabbit (live-action only, short)
1993 Alive
1995 Congo (+ co-exec pr)

Publications

On MARSHALL: articles—

* * *

Frank Marshall is one of the most respected filmmakers working in the film industry today. Though perhaps best known for his hugely successful collaborations with producer Kathleen Kennedy and director Steven Spielberg, Marshall started out as a protégé of Peter Bogdanovich and gained valuable experience through collaborations with such legends as Orson Welles, Martin Scorsese, and George Lucas.

All of these directors were unbashed film buffs who imbued Marshall with a certain sentimentality for things past and a desire to entertain audiences the same way that they had been entertained by the great films of yesteryear. These traits show clearly in his own initial directorial efforts, particularly Arachnophobia and Congo, which hearken back to such great sci-fi classics as Tarantula (1955) and King Kong (1933) and feature strong story lines at a rudimentary level and depend on technical craftsmanship and strong special effects to captivate the audience.

Marshall’s career appears to reflect three significant turning points in an evolution from apprentice to producer and ultimately to producer/director. As a political science student at the University of California, Los Angeles, in the late 1960s, he had a chance introduction to the film historian Peter Bogdanovich who was about to make his directorial-debut film Targets, financed by Roger Corman. The minuscule budget meant Marshall was involved in all aspects of making the film. He later said this experience was the best introduction to the film industry.

Working with the always cash-poor Bogdanovich gave Marshall insights into the difficulties inherent in the film business and allowed him to develop a sense of what he saw as his primary function as a producer. To Marshall, the producer is the person who serves as a direct line to the director and his needs, and it is the producer’s job to fulfill those needs. In this view, the finished film should reflect the creative vision of the director and not the producer.

The Bogdanovich-Marshall pairing included some of the director’s most successful films including The Last Picture Show, *Paper
Moon, and What’s Up Doc?, but it was the producer’s work on the less successful Daisy Miller that led to another turning point in Marshall’s professional development. Steven Spielberg was in Europe promoting his film Duel and dropped by the studio to have lunch with Bogdanovich when Marshall came in to ask his director about a problem on the set. Marshall later learned that Spielberg was impressed with the way that he handled himself and was the type of person Spielberg wanted working with him. He wanted a producer who could “take care of things on the set.” Five years later, when George Lucas asked Spielberg who he wanted as producer for Raiders of the Lost Ark, Spielberg’s response was: “See if that guy Frank Marshall is available.” Marshall was and a long association with one of the most successful directors in the history of film was begun.

The producer and director, joined by Marshall’s future wife Kathleen Kennedy, formed Amblin Entertainment Company in 1982. According to Marshall, the main criteria behind the films “green-lighted” into production for Amblin was story content. The most important factor to him was that the film tell a good story—one that he would like to see himself. Just as he would come to emphasize in his directorial efforts, he looked for films that reminded him of the matinee films of his youth. Such films as Back to the Future, Poltergeist, E.T.—The Extra-Terrestrial, and Hook have timeless themes and are demographically perfect for capturing the widest possible audience—the 13-to-25 age group. Nevertheless, a number of Marshall’s productions, including The Color Purple, Empire of the Sun, and Always, while less successful financially than other Amblin films, reflected strong story lines aimed at adult audiences. Marshall and Spielberg were not afraid to deal with less-commercial material if solid story content was there.

Although Amblin has become identified in the popular mind as being virtually synonymous with Steven Spielberg, Marshall and his co-producer Kennedy exercised considerable influence on the director’s choice of projects and exercised control over the broad range of corporate output. Within the company, if Spielberg was directing, Marshall and Kennedy were always the producers. If other directors were doing Amblin projects, the two would either co-produce or executive produce depending on the work load within the company. This versatility allowed Amblin to produce a phenomenal output in its relatively short existence.

The association with Spielberg provided a third turning point in Marshall’s evolution as a producer and director. First, working on ‘‘A’’ projects with some of the most talented people in the business gave the producer an opportunity to hone his skills at the highest level. His strength lies in the day-to-day details of production. As Spielberg has noted, Marshall is an ‘‘on the set’’ producer who employs a hands-on approach and likes to keep his crews as small as possible. He also prefers to work with the same group of people again and again because he considers communication behind the camera to be the most important aspect of making things run smoothly. His people are now so familiar with his style that they can anticipate many of his techniques to support his director.

Second, while keeping up with his production duties in the late 1980s, Marshall took advantage of his association with Spielberg to learn the craft of directing. As a second-unit director on the famous director’s recent films, he prepared himself for a 1990 directorial debut on Arachnophobia. Although the light horror film may not have been the aspiring director’s first choice, it was a green-lighted project, ready to go, and he jumped at it. The project was unique in that it allowed Marshall to utilize both his producer and directorial skills. Having been a producer, Marshall understood the importance of combining the creative with the business aspects of making a film. Indeed, from a producer’s point of view, a film about killer spiders terrorizing the Midwest was a tough sell. The original draft of the screenplay was stark horror with no lepup. At least in Spielberg’s Jaws (1973), audiences knew that the danger only lurked in the water. On land, you were safe. Here, there was no shelter; spiders could be lurking anywhere, even in your popcorn.

As a director who knew that his audience was composed of people with conflicting views of spiders, Marshall was able to leaven the terror through the device of a comic exterminator played by John Goodman who broke the tension in some of the story’s climactic scenes. This provided a “word of mouth” that would intrigue both horror fans and John Goodman fans. This combination of producer and directorial psychologies has contributed to the success of Marshall’s subsequent directorial efforts Alive and Congo.

The year 1999 was busy for Marshall, with four projects coming to completion and release. The Bruce Willis vehicle The Sixth Sense turned out to be the most successful of these, continuing Marshall’s involvement with projects reminiscent of cinema past: the child Cole Sear’s troubling declaration that “I see dead people” might easily have come from The Exorcist, for example. Other films of that year, such as Snow Falling on Cedars and A Map of the World, deal with the more adult themes of love and loss. Olympic Glory is a well-meaning but overly sentimental documentary, filmed in the large IMAX format, about the 1998 Winter Olympics in Nagano, Japan. Olympic Glory nevertheless deserves a look if only to experience the ski-jump projected on the IMAX screen.

Marshall, having the choice of either directing or producing films, has the responsibility of having to make the decisions on all of the creative aspects of, a film he is directing while in the producer role, he likes being the support system for the film and keeping the momentum going on the set. For example, early in his producing career, to keep spirits up on one particularly difficult shoot, Marshall put on a magic show starring himself as Dr. Fantasy. This magic show has now become a tradition on all Marshall productions. This is indicative of the producer/director’s philosophy of filmmaking. For him, making films is like putting on one big expensive magic show and he plans to keep on pulling films out of his hat for a long time to come.

—Sandra Garcia-Myers, updated by Chris Routledge

MATÉ, Rudolph

Cinematographer and Director and Producer. Nationality: Hungarian. Born: Rudolf Mathe in Cracow, Poland, 21 January 1898. Education: Attended University of Budapest. Career: Assistant cameraman for Alexander Korda in Budapest; then worked in Vienna and Berlin (apprentice to Karl Freund, assistant to Erich Pommer), and in France; 1935—emigrated to Hollywood; 1948—directed first film; TV work includes The Loretta Young Show. Died: 27 October 1964.

Films as Cinematographer:

1923 Der Kaufmann von Venedig (Felner)
1924 Michael (Dreyer) (co)
1926 Die Hochstaplerin
1928 La Passion de Jeanne d’Arc (The Passion of Joan of Arc) (Dreyer)
1929 Le Manque de mémoire (Chomette)
1930 Prix de beauté (Genina)
1931 La Couturière de Linevile (Lachman); Le Monsieur de minuit (Lachman); Le Roi de Camembert (Mourre)
1932 La Belle Marinière (Lachman); Monsieur Albert (Anton); Vampyr (The Dream of Allan Gray) (Dreyer)
1933 Paprika (de Limur); Les Aventures du Roi Pansole (Granowsky); La Mille-et-Deuxième Nuit (Wolkoff); Une Femme au volant (Gerron and Billon); Dans les rues (Trivas)
1934 Le Dernier Milliardaire (Clair); Liliom (Lang)
1935 Dante’s Inferno (Lachman); Dressed to Thrill (Lachman); Metropolitan (Boleslawsky); Beauty’s Daughter (Dwan) (co); Professional Soldier (Garnett)
1936 Charlie Chan’s Secret (Wiles); Message to Garcia (Marshall); Our Relations (Lachman); Dodsworth (Wyler); Come and Get It (Wyler and Hawks) (co)
1937 Outcast (Florey); Stella Dallas (K. Vidor); The Adventures of Marco Polo (Mayo)
1938 Blockade (Dieterle); Youth Takes a Fling (Mayo); Tradewinds (Garnett)
1939 Love Affair (McCary); The Real Glory (Hathaway)
1940 My Favorite Wife (McCary); Foreign Correspondent (Hitchcock); Seven Sinners (Garnett)
1941 Lady Hamilton (That Hamilton Woman) (A. Korda); Flame of New Orleans (Clair)
1942 To Be or Not to Be (Lubitsch); It Started with Eve (Koster); The Pride of the Yankees (Wood)
1943 They Got Me Covered (Butler); Sahara (Z. Korda)
1944 Address Unknown (Menzies); Cover Girl (C. Vidor) (co)
1945 Tonight and Every Night (C. Vidor)
1946 Gilda (C. Vidor)
1947 Down to Earth (Hall); It Had to Be You (+ co-d)

Films as Director:

1948 The Dark Past
1950 D.O.A.; Branded; No Sad Songs for Me; Union Station
1951 The Prince Who Was a Thief; When Worlds Collide
1952 The Green Glove; Paula; Sally and Saint Anne; Mississippi Gambler
1953 Second Chance; Forbidden; The Siege of Red River
1954 The Black Shield of Falworth
1955 The Violent Men; The Far Horizons
1956 Miracle in the Rain; Rawhide Years; Port Africa; Three Violent People
1958 The Deep Six; Serenade einer grossen Liebe (For the First Time)
1960 Revak, lo schiavo di Cartagine (The Barbarians) (+ pr); The Immaculate Road; Il dominatore dei sette mari (Seven Seas to Calais) (co-d)
1961 The Lion of Sparta (The Three Hundred Spartans) (+ pr)
1962 Aliki (Aliki, My Love) (+ co-pr)

Film as Producer:

1948 The Return of October (Lewis)

Publications

By MATÉ: articles—

On MATÉ: articles—

Film Ideal (Madrid), 1 July 1965.
Film Comment (New York), Summer 1972.
Film Dope (Nottingham), March 1989.
“The Dark Past,” in Reid’s Film Index (Wyong), no. 15, 1995.

* * *

Rudolph Maté was a great cameraman whose film career divided neatly into three parts. In the first, he worked in Europe on major films such as Carl Theodor Dreyer’s The Passion of Joan of Arc and René Clair’s Le Dernier Milliardaire. He then came to Hollywood in 1935 and worked as a cameraman, earning five consecutive Academy Award nominations between 1940 and 1944. In the third phase, Maté switched to directing, principally of B-films in Hollywood, from 1947 until his death in 1964. Thus most historians see his as a career continually in decline, from the heights of the European art film of the 1920s to the schlock B-film of Hollywood in the 1950s.

In 1919 Maté set off on a remarkable 15-year career as a cinematographer in Europe. Alexander Korda gave him the needed break; Carl Theodor Dreyer guaranteed him a place in film history by having him photograph The Passion of Joan of Arc and Vampyr. It is not clear, however, how much Maté contributed to those films other than following Dreyer’s orders. The remainder of his career would indicate that Dreyer offered the vision and Maté executed the orders.

In 1935 Maté left Nazi Germany for the United States. William Wyler gave him his break in Hollywood by hiring him to photograph Dodsworth and Come and Get It in 1936. It took Maté little time to reach the list of top Hollywood cinematographers. In 1940 he reached his peak by working as the director of photography for Hitchcock’s Foreign Correspondent. For this fine film Maté earned an Oscar nomination for cinematography in black-and-white. He then earned nominations for That Hamilton Woman, The Pride of the Yankees, Sahara, and Cover Girl.

After the Second World War, Maté got the itch to work on his own films and began to direct, at times even produce, features. In 1947 he entered this third phase of his career with his directorial debut: It Had to Be You, completed when Maté was 49 years old. He worked for a number of Hollywood studios until 1958, and then tried his luck... with several European productions such as The 300 Spartans, released by 20th Century-Fox. He also directed 20 episodes of The Loretta Young Show TV series in the late 1950s.

There were some gems in the 29 feature films Maté directed. D.O.A., starring Edmund O’Brien, would seem to be Maté’s finest directorial effort, a classic film noir. When Worlds Collide succeeds on the level of spectacular effects. But except for those two, critics seem to agree that Maté’s directorial career is dotted with third-rate westerns and dramas. It is his career as a cinematographer for others which has secured Rudolph Maté’s place in the history of film.

—Douglas Gomery

MATHIESON, Muir

Music Director and actor. Nationality: British. Born: Stirling, Scotland, 24 January 1911. Education: Attended Stirling High School (conductor of the boys orchestra at age 13); Royal College of Music, London. Career: 1931—music director for Korda’s London Films; introduced leading UK composers to film music writing (e.g., Bliss, Vaughan-Williams, Bax, Walton, Ireland); 1940–45—music director for government film units; after the war, music director for Rank Organisation; also orchestra conductor, and for opera and ballet. Died: In Oxford, 2 August 1975.

Films as Music Director (selected list):

- 1934 The Private Life of Don Juan (A. Korda); Catherine the Great (Czinner)
- 1935 The Scarlet Pimpernel (Young); The Ghost Goes West (Clair)
- 1936 Things to Come (Menzies)
- 1937 Q Planes (Clouds over Europe) (Whelan)
- 1940 Contraband (Blackett) (Powell); The Thief of Baghdad (Powell, Berger, and Whelan)
- 1941 Dangerous Moonlight (Hurst); 49th Parallel (Powell)
- 1942 The First of the Few (Howard)
- 1943 Fires Were Started (I Was a Fireman) (Jennings)
- 1944 The Way Ahead (Reed)
- 1945 The Rake’s Progress (Gilliat); Brief Encounter (Lean); Henry V (Olivier); A Diary for Timothy (Jennings) (conductor)
- 1946 The Seventh Veil (Bennett); Caesar and Cleopatra (Pascal); Instruments of the Orchestra (+ d)
- 1947 Odd Man Out (Reed); The Woman in the Hall (Lee); Green for Danger (Gilliat); Dear Murderer (Crabtree)
- 1948 Oliver Twist (Lean); Hamlet (Olivier)
- 1949 Christopher Columbus (MacDonald)
- 1950 Waterfront (Waterfront Women) (Anderson); The Miniver Story (Potter); The Black Rose (Hathaway)
- 1952 Who Goes There (The Passionate Sentry) (Kimmins); The Crimson Pirate (Sidmak)
- 1953 Sailor of the King (R. Boulting)
- 1954 The Sea Shall Not Have Them (Gilbert); Three Cases of Murder (Toye); Father Brown (Hamer)
- 1955 I Am a Camera (Cornelius); The Intruder (Hamilton)
- 1956 The Man Who Never Was (Neame)
- 1957 After the Ball (Bennett)
- 1958 Vertigo (Hitchcock); Sea of Sand (Desert Patrol) (Green)

1959 Ferry to Hong Kong (Gilbert); The Rough and the Smooth (Portrait of a Sinner) (Sidmak); The Savage Innocents (Ray)

1960 Macbeth (Schaefer); Circus of Horrors (Hayers)

1961 The Naked Edge (Anderson); The Canadians (Kennedy)

1962 H.M.S. Defiant (Dumb the Defiant!) (Gilbert); The Devil Never Sleeps (Satan Never Sleeps) (McCarey); Only Two Can Play (Gilliat); The L-Shaped Room (Forbes); Waltz of the Toreadors (The Amorous General) (Guillermin); The War Lover (Leacock)

1963 The Running Man (Reed); The Mind Benders (Dearden)

1964 Becket (Glenville); Woman of Straw (Dearden)

1965 Lord Jim (Brooks); Genghis Khan (Levin)

1968 Shalako (Dmytryk)

1970 You Can’t Win ‘em All (Collinson)

Film as Actor:

1951 The Magic Box (J. Boulting)

Publications

By MATHIESON: articles—

‘‘Aspects of Film Music,’’ in Tempo (London), no. 9, 1944.

Cinema and Theatre Construction, September 1947.

On MATHIESON: article—

Picturegoer (London), 8 October 1947.

* * *

Muir Mathieson, as music director and conductor of British film scores for both feature films and documentaries, became the single most influential name in British film music. His career began as early as 1931, when, aged 20, he became assistant director of music at Alexander Korda’s Denham Studios, and extended into the 1970s. He received his first credit as music director for Korda’s The Private Life of Don Juan, scored by Mischa Spoliansky. After the Second World War, he became music director for the Rank Organisation.

Mathieson was to initiate and conduct some thousand film scores, and introduce such eminent composers as Arthur Bliss, Vaughan Williams, Arnold Bax, William Walton, and Malcolm Arnold to the composition of orchestral scores for films. He had studied conducting and composition at the Royal College of Music, and conducted while still a teenager. Throughout his career in films he also conducted in concert halls in Britain and overseas, and pioneered the presentation of film music as BBC broadcasts. He established that British films at their best should have music of the highest quality, specially commissioned and composed as an integral part of a film’s creative process. This was early evident in Bliss’s distinguished score for Korda’s production of H.G. Wells’s film Things to Come in the mid-1930s.
“The music is a part of the constructive scheme of the film,” Wells had written. “Sound sequences and picture sequences were closely interwoven. This Bliss music . . . is part of the design.” Bliss’s impressionistic score was subsequently developed as an orchestral suite for the concert hall, and issued on a set of gramophone recordings.

In this way, as in so many others, Mathieson proved an indefatigable, extrovert, and enthusiastic pioneer. This enthusiasm spread to the composers themselves, inspiring Vaughan Williams to claim in his seventies that he believed “the film contains potentialities for the combination of all the arts such as Wagner never dreamed of.” He held working for films to be a splendid discipline in which he was, in effect, being trained by Mathieson, like many other distinguished composers.

At the same time, Mathieson regarded American studio composers and musicians as technically more advanced than the British. Writing in 1947 he acknowledged, “the American composer has turned himself more thoroughly into a music dramatist than the British.” He instanced Bernard Herrmann’s brilliantly integrated score for Orson Welles’s Citizen Kane. Among the many notable earlier scores Mathieson was to commission and conduct (usually with the London Symphony Orchestra) were those by Arnold Bax for David Lean’s Oliver Twist and by William Walton for Laurence Olivier’s Henry V. During the war years and subsequently, Mathieson originated and conducted many scores for documentary, and he himself directed the film of Benjamin Britten’s composition Instruments of the Orchestra, which featured the London Symphony Orchestra conducted by Malcolm Sargent.

A list of Mathieson’s credits as music director reads like a history of the British films from the 1930s to the 1960s. His views are fully recorded in John Huntley’s pioneer book, British Film Music (1947), and elaborated further in Roger Manvell and John Huntley’s The Technique of Film Music (1957, revised and enlarged along with Richard Arnell and Peter Day in 1975), of which Mathieson was one of the advisory editors. In this he states: “All that remains is for it to be unreservedly recognized that music, having a form of its own, has ways of doing its appointed task in films with distinction, judged purely as music, and with subtlety, judged as a part of a whole film. It must be accepted not as a decoration or a filler of gaps in the plaster, but as a part of the architecture.”

—Roger Manvell
MATHIS, June

Films as Writer:

1918 To Hell with the Kaiser (Irving); An Eye for an Eye (Capellani)
1919 Out of the Fog (Capellani); The Red Lantern (Capellani); The Brat (Blaché)
1920 Old Lady 31 (J. Ince); Hearts Are Trumps; Polly with a Past (De Cordova)
1921 The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse (Ingram); The Conquering Power (Ingram); A Trip to Paradise (Karger); Camille (Smallwood); The Idle Rich (Karger)
1922 Turn to the Right (Ingram); Kisses (Karger); Hate (Karger); Blood and Sand (Niblo); The Young Rajah (Rosen)
1923 Three Wise Fools (K. Vidor); The Spanish Dancer (Brenon); In the Palace of the King (Flynn); Greed (von Stroheim) (re-write, re-edit)
1925 Sally (Green); The Desert Flower (Cummings); Classified (Santell); We Moderns (Dillon)
1926 Ben-Hur (Niblo); Irene (Green); The Greater Glory (Rehfeld); The Masked Woman (Balboni); The Magic Flame (H. King)

Publications

By MATHIS: book—

By MATHIS: article—

On MATHIS: articles—

Photoplay (New York), October 1926.
Slater, Thomas J., “June Mathis’s Classified: One Woman’s Response to Modernism,” in Journal of Film and Video (Atlanta), Summer 1998.

* * *
became in effect head, or one of the heads, of the Metro and Samuel Goldwyn units, and joined with other youthful women writers (such as Anita Loos and Bess Meredyth) in establishing the importance of the basic screenplay scenario in silent American film. It was she who was in good measure responsible for persuading Metro-Goldwyn to agree to sponsor Erich von Stroheim’s celebrated film Greed. She became notorious among film devotees, who see the company she represented as “betraying” one of the greatest artists of silent cinema, and all but destroying one of its potentially greatest films. Greed, as initially shot and assembled by Stroheim, ran to 42 reels (ten hours), following every detail of Frank Norris’s novel McTeague. Stroheim himself reduced this to 24 reels (six hours), hoping the film could then be screened with intermissions in two successive evenings. But Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer (as the company had now become) demanded more drastic cutting. At Stroheim’s request, his close friend Rex Ingram reduced it to 18 reels (4.5 hours). But Mathis was instructed to reduce the film without consultation with Stroheim to ten reels (2.5 hours), which she undertook with the aid of a routine cutter, Joseph W. Farnham, “on whose mind was nothing but a hat,” as Stroheim put it. The exact nature of this drastic cutting of an overlong masterpiece of realistic, psychological cinema is detailed by Joel W. Finler in his edition of Stroheim’s full-scale original script Greed.

Mathis went on to script and supervise the adaptation of the epic Ben-Hur for Goldwyn, finally after much trouble directed by Fred Niblo and starring Francis X. Bushman and Ramon Novarro. Mathis, however, was withdrawn from the film by MGM while on location in Italy, but in any case she disowned what had initially been shot by the film’s first director, Charles Brabin, whom she had chosen. Her final films included Irene for Colleen Moore and The Magic Flame with Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky. She died suddenly in 1927.

—Roger Manvell

MATRAS, Christian

Cinematographer and Director. Nationality: French. Born: Valence, 29 December 1903. Career: Newsreel photographer; late 1920s—worked on short films as photographer and director; from early 1930s—cinematographer on feature films. Died: 4 May 1977.

Films as Cinematographer:

1926 De Babord à Tribord (+ d)
1927 Maldone (Grémillon)
1930 Eperon d’or (+ d)
1931 Sous la terre (+ d)
1932 Au fil de l’eau (+ d); Le Billet de mille (Didier)
1933 La Chatelaine du Liban (Epstein); Le Paqueboat Tenacity (Duvivier); L’Or des mers (Epstein)
1934 L’Affaire Coquett (Gourguet); La Maison dans la dune (Billon); Le Scandale (L’Herbier)
1935 Maternité (Choux)
1936 L’Argent (Billon); Les Mutinés de l’Île Sourire (Chenal); Les Réprouvés (Severac)
1937 Le Chanteur de minuit (Joannon); La Grande Illusion (Grand Illusion) (Renoin); Prison sans barreaux (Moguy)

1938 Café de Paris (Mirande and Lacombe); La fin du jour (The End of Day) (Duvivier); Entrée des artistes (The Curtain Rises) (M. Allègre); Je chanter (Stengel); Légions d’honneur (Gleize); La Piste du sud (Billon)
1939 Le Dernier Tournant (Chenal); Le Duel (Fresnay); Paradise perdu (Gance)
1940 La Nuit merveilleuse (Paulin)
1941 Le Briseur de chaînes (Daniel-Norman); La Duchesse de Langeais (de Baroncelli); Paradise en sept nuits (M. Allègre); Romance de Paris (Boyer)
1942 Pontcarral, Colonel d’empire (Delannoy); La Loi du printemps (Daniel-Norman); Mahlia la métisse (Kapps); Secrets (Blanchard)
1943 L’Escalier sans fin (Lacombe); Lucrèce (Joannon); Un Seul Amour (Blanchar); Le Voyageur sans bagages (Anouilh)
1944 Le Bossu (Delannoy); Mademoiselle X (Billon)
1945 Boule de suif (Angel and Sinner) (Christian-Jaque); L’Idiot (The Idiot) (Lampin); Tant que je vivrai (de Baroncelli)
1946 Il suffit d’une fois (Felix)
1947 Le Beau Voyage (Cuny); Eternel conflit (Lampin); L’Aigle à deux têtes (The Eagle with Two Heads) (Cocteau); La Révoltée (Stolen Affections) (L’Herbier); Les Jeux sont faits (The Chips Are Down) (Delannoy)
1948 D’homme à hommes (Man to Men) (Christian-Jaque); Tous les chemins mènent à Rome (Boyer)
1949 Singoala (The Wind Is My Lover) (Christian-Jaque)
1950 La Valse de Paris (The Paris Waltz) (Achard); La Ronde (Ophuls); Souvenirs perdu (Christian-Jaque)
1951 Barbe-Blonde (Bluebeard) (Christian-Jaque); Olivia (Audry); Fanfan la Tulipe (Fanfan the Tulip) (Christian-Jaque)
1952 Adorables créatures (Adorable Creatures) (Christian-Jaque); Violett impériale (Pottier); Destinées (Daughters of Destiny) (Christian-Jaque); Lucrèce Borgias (Sins of the Borgias) (Christian-Jaque); Le Plaisir (Ophuls) (co)
1953 Madame de . . . (The Earrings of Madame de . . .) (Ophuls); Secrets d’alcove (Delannoy)
1954 Madame Du Barry (Christian-Jaque); Nana (Christian-Jaque)
1955 Lola Montès (Lola) (Ophuls); Les Espions (Clouzot)
1956 Die Abenteuer des Till Eulenspiegel (The Adventures of Till Eulenspiegel) (Philipe and Ivens); Oeil pour oeil (An Eye for an Eye) (Cayatte); Renade à Paris (Lampin)
1957 Les Carnets du Major Thompson (The French, They Are a Funny Race) (P. Sturges); Une Manche et la belle (Verneuil)
1958 Christine (Gaspard-Huit); Montparnasse 19 (Modigliani of Montparnasse) (Becker); Maxime (Verneuil)
1959 La Belle et l’empereur (von Ambesser); La Bête a l’affût (Chenal); Le Chemin des écoliers (Boisrond); Pourquoi vous tu si tard? (Decoin); Vers l’extase (Wheeler)
1960 Les Magiciennes (Double Deception) (Friedman); Ma femme est une panthère (Bailly)
1961 Paris Blues (Ritt); Le Jeu de la verité (Hossein); Les Lions sont lâchés (Verneuil)
1962 Le Crime ne paie pas (Crime Does Not Pay) (Oury); Le Cœur Battant (The French Game) (Doniol-Valcroze); Thérèse Desqueyroux (Thérèse) (Franju); Cartouche (de Broca); Coup de bambou (Boyer); Virginie (Boyer)
1963 Shéhérazade (Sheherazade) (Gaspard-Huit) (co)
1964 Les Amitiés.particulières (This Special Friendship) (Delannoy)
1965 Les Fêtes galantes (Clair)
1967  Sept fois femme (Woman Times Seven) (De Sica); Más allá de las montañas (The Desperate Ones; Beyond the Mountains) (Ramati)
1968  Les Oiseaux vont mourir au Perou (Birds in Peru) (Gary)
1969  La Voie lactée (The Milky Way) (Buñuel)
1970  Le Bal du Comte d’Orgel (M. Allégret)
1971  Variétés (Bardem)
1972  Pas folle la guepe (Delannoy)

Publications

On MATRAS: articles—

Cinéma (Paris), December 1972.
Le Technicien du Film (Paris), May-June 1977.
Film Français (Paris), 10 June 1977.
Cinéma (Paris), August-September 1977.
Film Dope (Nottingham), March 1989.

* * *

At the beginning of his career, Christian Matras quickly established a reputation as a solid technician and an expert in creating decorative and psychological ambiances which testify to his range of taste. During his career, he adapted to developing techniques, as well as to the demands of varied directors. In more than 80 films, he worked with the biggest names in French cinema: Jean Renoir, Jean Cocteau, Jacques Becker and, most significantly, Max Ophüls.

Using his early training as a newsreel photographer, Matras successfully applied the technique of plain observation to feature films in the ‘30s. His documentary style was put to good use in Renoir’s La Grande Illusion, a study of war. Renoir chose to tell his story of the dry rot of inaction, not on the battlefield, but behind the lines in a prison camp. It is a story of complex themes often revealed through camera movements.

This technique would typify Matras’ work prior to World War II. During this period, it was careful, painstakingly detailed, and intelligent, almost to the point of coldness. After World War II, his documentary style gave way to dazzling, flowing camera movements. Matras adapted well to color filming; his Barbe Bleu was considered the first successful French film in color.

However, it is his work with Max Ophüls for which Matras is best known. Ophüls’ films demanded complex camera work—long elaborate takes with flowing camera movements. Brilliant camera use became the director’s trademark; without the fluid, impressionistic skill of Matras, Ophüls would not be as highly regarded as he is. In La Ronde, Matras’ first collaboration with Ophüls, Matras used sweeping camera work that would develop into the camera choreography used in Lola Montes. This film was the most expensive European production ever made at that time, and one of the first to use Cinemascope. Ophüls disliked Cinemascope, which he felt made proportions crushingly flat. He altered perspectives by affixing black velvet masks to the camera.

The filming of Lola Montes is the epitome of Matras’ craftsmanship and technique. For example, in the circus scenes, Ophüls was more interested in the audience than the main action. For this, Matras uses 360 degree camera shots. Some scenes were conceived and written to constitute dynamic walkthroughs, and the camera stays with the characters, persistent and unshakeable as it stalks and prows with them. Matras’ virtuoso camera movement makes the landscape and architecture seem to move.

The Earrings of Madame . . . also contained fabulous photography. The story would be tedious if not for Matras’ fluid camera, which juxtaposes intimate and dramatic shots to reveal theme and character. Lean camera work balances against the lush setting in which events unfold. Ophüls relied on continuous flow as opposed to collisions between shots for his storytelling, and long tracks are used not only to convey action, but to convey shifts of mood, the evolution of time, and plot development. At the heart of the film is the ball scene. The couple dances round and round through one elegant ballroom after another, and the camera stays with them recording their changing feelings as the mood of frivolity recedes. A long continuous take follows the servant as he moves from light to light, extinguishing each until he finally blankets the scene in darkness when he covers the harp.

Matras’ last collaboration with Ophüls was Le Plaisir made in 1955. Matras continued to work in films until the 1970s, although this later work would not attract the same critical attention as his films with Ophüls.

—Renee Ward

MAYER, Carl

Films as Writer:

1920 Das Kabinett des Dr. Caligari (The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari) (Wiene); Johannes Goth (Gerhardt); Der Bucklige und die Tänzerin (The Hunchback and the Dancer) (Murnau); Genuine: Die Tragödie eines seltsamen Hauses (Wiene); Der Dummkopf (The Idiot) (Pick)
1921 Verlogene Moral (Brandherd) (Kobe); Der Gang in die Nacht (Journey into the Night) (Murnau); Schloss Vogelöd (The Haunted Castle) (Murnau); Scherben (Shattered) (Pick); Grausige Nächte (Pick); Die Hintertreppe (Backstairs) (Jessner and Leni)
1922 Vanina (von Gerlach)
1923 Erdgeist (Jessner); Der Puppenmacher von Kiang-Ning (Wiene); Sylvester: Tragödie einer Nacht (New Year’s Eve) (Pick)
1924 Der Letzte Mann (The Last Laugh) (Murnau)
1926 Tartüff (Tartuffe) (Murnau)
1927 Berlin—die Symphonie einer Grossstadt (Berlin—Symphony of a Big City) (Ruttman); Sunrise (Murnau)
1929 Four Devils (Murnau)
1931 Ariane (Czinner)
1932 Der Träumende Munde (Dreaming Lips) (Czinner)
1937 Dreaming Lips (Czinner) (English language remake)
1938 Pygmalion (Berger)
1940 Major Barbara (Pascal); The Fourth Estate (Rothe)
1942 World of Plenty (Rothe)

Publications

By MAYER: books—

(Editor) Innsbrucker Theater-Almanach, Innsbruck, 1914.
Sylvester: Ein Lichtspiel, Potsdam, 1924.
Sonnenaufgang (script of Sunrise), Wiesbaden, 1971.

By MAYER: articles—

World Film News, September 1938.

On MAYER: books—

Tribute to Carl Mayer (pamphlet), 1947.

On MAYER: articles—

Wilhelm, Wolfgang, in Sight and Sound (London), July 1944.
Revue du Cinéma (Morges, Switzerland), Spring 1947.
Daugherty, Frank, in Films in Review (New York), March 1953.
Film Culture (New York), Summer 1965.
Bianco e Nero (Rome), July–August 1968.
Film Journal (Evanston, Illinois), Fall 1968.
Lutf, Herbert G., “Carl Mayer, Screen Author,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley, California), Fall 1968.
Bianco e Nero (Rome), September–October 1968.
Bianco e Nero (Rome), November–December 1968.
Film Dope (Nottingham), March 1989.
Kosmorama (Copenhagen), Spring 1995.

* * *

An Austrian Jewish screenwriter of great imagination, Carl Mayer was thrown out on the streets at an early age along with his younger brothers by their father, an inveterate gambler who was on the point of killing himself. This began a period of adolescent stress and deprivation that was deeply to colour Mayer’s outlook and darken the nature of the subject matter he chose for his outstanding work for the German silent cinema. He had to undergo psychiatric treatment for a while when his mind was considered unbalanced. At first an actor and painter during the First World War, Mayer turned to writing when he collaborated with a young Czech ex-army officer, Hans Janowitz, on the basic script for the German Expressionist film The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari—the full story behind this collaboration being revealed first by Siegfried Kracauer in his book From Caligari to Hitler. The anti-authoritarian theme of the film (as intended by these young pacifist writers) was entirely discarded as the subject passed through Erich Pommer’s studio. It became rather a psychological melodrama, much discussed internationally for its Expressionist settings and remarkable stylized acting by Werner Krauss and Conrad Veidt. Mayer’s name was established as a promising screenwriter and he was commissioned to write Robert Wiene’s subsequent film, Genuine (the name of a seductive Oriental princess who avenges herself on the male sex which ill-uses her), a film made in a similar, Expressionistic manner but with less lasting success.

Mayer, however, put his creative roots down in film. He realized that the darkened world of the cinema with its black-and-white photographic values and its potential intimacy of approach to concentrated, emotionalized characterization offered a new form of wholly visual, psychological drama that appealed to his deepening awareness. While working with great artistic success for Arthur von Gerlach on Vanina and for Lupu Pick on Shattered, a dark and symbolic psychological film made without the verbal intrusion of captions representing either narrative or dialogue, and on Sylvester, which Mayer called a “light-play” (ein Lichtspiel), alluding not only to its black-and-white images, but to the light and shadow it revealed in a man’s soul, Mayer was discovering a branch of intimate, haunted drama for film that became known as the Kammerspiel (chamber-drama), a term originating from the great theatre director Max Reinhardt’s promotion of intimate live theatre. Mayer was to discover his closest interpreter of this genre in F.W. Murnau, most notably in their later films, the German The Last Laugh and the American Sunrise.

Mayer’s great gift to cinema was to conceive the written script as closely as possible in detailed visual terms, the result often of an advance collaboration with director and cameraman alike (notably Murnau and Karl Freund), writing in an abrupt, expressionist style of poetic prose. Many of Mayer’s scripts (especially for Murnau) survive and can be found quoted by Lotte Eisner in her invaluable books Murnau and The Haunted Screen. Mayer was always deeply concerned with the camera and its potential movements, whereas Murnau (for all his strength in handling actors) rarely looked through the viewfinder. For Mayer the camera was like another actor participating directly in the action. As we have seen, he also resented the intrusive captioning between shots characteristic of the conventional silent film. The narrative continuity rested entirely on the images, on mimed action, and on facial and bodily expression.

However, after Battleship Potemkin came to Berlin astonishing audiences and filmmakers alike, Mayer’s intense preoccupation with the psychological unbalance of his characters began to accommodate the much more naturalistic approach to subject matter represented by the new Soviet directors. Mayer, with his already marked social-sociological interests, was among those ready to be influenced, and
The Last Laugh (with its theme of a hotel hall-porter obsessed by the class distinction given him by his grand uniform) shows a definite socially realistic interest.

When Murnau left for Hollywood in 1926, Mayer refused to go with him, preferring to write for him in Germany. Murnau’s first American film, Sunrise, was adapted by Mayer from one of Sudermann’s stories, The Journey to Tilsit. Robert Sherwood considered the result at the time, “the most important picture in the history of the movies.” Mayer’s last script for Murnau was to be Four Devils, a psychological study of acrobats in a circus setting but with a happy ending imposed by Hollywood. Mayer, still in Berlin, and preoccupied now with new concepts of realism, began to work on a documentary study of life in Berlin. This was to become Walter Ruttmann’s city-symphony film Berlin, which Mayer disowned because his basic idea—the rhythm of human life in a great city—was sacrificed in order to feature the purely plastic visual rhythms of movement observed by the camera and developed through the fluidity of skilled editing.

With the coming of sound, Mayer’s next continuous association was with Paul Czinner and his wife, Elizabeth Bergner, who played the lead in both films Mayer initially scripted for her husband—Ariane and Dreaming Lips. The latter was remade by the three of them in England in 1937.

Faced with the rise of Nazism in Germany, Mayer emigrated to England in 1932, where he established a close relationship with Paul Rotha, the rising young documentary director and film historian. In England Mayer acted as script consultant to Czinner (who was also in London) and many others, including Rotha, though the only credits he appears to have received were for two of Rotha’s films.

Mayer died in London of cancer in 1944; his plans for films of his own (including one on the city of London, to be what Berlin should have been, in his view) never realized. Although several of his scripts, as we have seen, survive, only two have been published. Mayer published no literary work. Yet he remains one of the great creative names in early cinema.

—Roger Manvell

MAYER, Louis B.

Producer. Nationality: American. Born: Eliezer Mayer in Minsk, Russia, 4 July 1885; family emigrated to New Brunswick, Canada, 1888. Family: Married 1) Margaret Schenberg, 1904 (marriage dissolved), two daughters; 2) Lorena Danker, 1948. Career: Helped in father’s scrap business; 1904—moved to Boston, Massachusetts, to set up his own scrap business; became nickelodeon manager; 1915—moved into distribution; 1917—formed the independent Mayer Production Company in New York; 1920—opened studios in Hollywood; 1923—hired Irving Thalberg as vice president and production assistant; 1924—vice president in charge of production and general manager of the newly formed Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Productions with Loew and Sam Goldwyn; Thalberg became supervisor of individual film production, Mayer took charge of the west coast operation; 1931—36—president of the Motion Pictures Producers Association; 1951—left MGM. Awards: Special Academy Award, for “distinguished service to the Motion Picture industry,” 1950. Died: In Hollywood, California, 29 October 1957.

1924 Greed (von Stroheim); Bread (Schertzinger); Sinners in Silk (Henley); The Arab (Ingram); He Who Gets Slapped (Sjöström); His Hour (K. Vidor); The Navigator (Keaton and Crisp); Sherlock, Jr. (Keaton)

1925 Ben-Hur (Niblo); Cheaper to Marry (Leonard); Confessions of a Queen (Sjöström); Daddy’s Gone A-Hunting (Borzage); The Denial (The Square Peg) (Henley); The Dixie Handicap (Barker); Excuse Me (Goulding); Fine Clothes (Fashions for Men) (Stahl); The Great Divide (Barker); Mare Nostrum (Ingram); The Big Parade (K. Vidor); The Merry Widow (von Stroheim); The Snob; Sally, Irene and Mary (Goulding); The Torrent (Bell); The Temptress (Stiller and Niblo); Brown of Harvard (Conway); La Bohème (K. Vidor); Go West (Keaton); Seven Chances (Keaton); The Tower of Lies (Sjöström); The Monster (West); The Unholy Three (Conway); The Masked Bride (Cabanne)

1926 Flesh and the Devil (Brown); The Magician (Ingram); The Scarlet Letter (Sjöström); The Enemy (Niblo); Blarney (de Sano); Valencia (Buchowetski); Twelve Miles Out (Conway); The Road to Mandalay (Browning); The Waning Sex (Leonard); Paris (Goulding); The Barrier (Hill); Bardeley’s the Magnificent (K. Vidor); Upstage (Bell); The Black Bird (Browning)

1927 The Garden of Allah (Ingram); Tess of the D’Urbervilles (Neilan); This Sporting Genius (Neilan); The Great Love (Neilan); White Shadows in the South Seas (Van Dyke);
The Crowd (K. Vidor); The Student Prince (Lubitsch); Mr. Wu (Nigh); London After Midnight (The Hypnotist) (Browning); Mockery (Christensen); The Taxi Dancer (Millarde); Love (Goulding); The Unknown (Browning)

1928 The Wind (Sjöström); Our Dancing Daughters (Beaumont); Voice of the City (Mack); The Divorcee (Leonard); Let Us Be Gay (Leonard); The Kiss (Feyder); Broadway Melody (Beaumont); The Trial of Mary Dugan (Veiller); Wickedness Preferred (Henley); The Mysterious Lady (Niblo); A Lady of Chance (Leonard); Across to Singapore (Nigh); The Cameraman (Sedgwick); The Actress (Cukor); A Woman of Affairs (Brown); The Divine Woman (Sjöström)

1929 Anna Christie (Brown); The Big House (Hill); His Glorious Night (Barrymore); Redemption (Niblo); Hallelujah (K. Vidor); The Mysterious Island (Tourneur and Hubbard); Hollywood Revue of 1929 (Reisner); Alias Jimmy Valentine (Conway); The Trail of '98 (Brown); Our Modern Maidens (Conway); Thunder (Nigh); Untamed (Conway); Dynamite (DeMille)

1930 Min and Bill (Hill); Paid (Wood); A Free Soul (Brown); The Easiest Way (Conway); Way for a Sailor (Wood); Those Three French Girls (Beaumont); A Lady's Morals (Franklin); Susan Lenox, Her Fall and Rise (Leonard); Men of the North (Roach); Billy the Kid (K. Vidor); Madam Satan (DeMille); The Sin of Madelon Claudet (Selwyn); Trader Horn (Van Dyke); Romance (Brown); Paid (Wood); The Unholy Three (Conway); The Rogue Song (Barrmore); Good News (Grinde)

1931 The Champ (K. Vidor); Possessed (Brown); As You Desire Me (Fitzmaurice); The Guardsman (Franklin); Private Lives (Franklin); Red-Headed Woman (Conway); Freaks (Browning); Tarzan the Ape Man (Van Dyke); The Wet Parade (Fleming); Come Clean (Horne); Inspiration (Brown); Mata Hari (Fitzmaurice); A Free Soul (Brown); The Squaw Man (DeMille); The Man in Possession (Wood); Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (Mamoulian); New Moon (Leonard); The Secret Six (Hill)

1932 Rasputin and the Empress (Boleslawsky); Red Dust (Fleming); Grand Hotel (Goulding); Gabriel over the White House (La Cava); Strange Interlude (Leonard); Smilin' Through (Franklin); The Music Box (Parrott)

1933 Tugboat Annie (LeRoy); Treasure Island (Fleming); Manhattan Melodrama (Van Dyke); The Thin Man (Van Dyke); Queen Christina (Mamoulian); Dancing Lady (Leonard); Night Flight (Brown); Dinner at Eight (Cukor); Eskimo (Van Dyke); When Ladies Meet (Beaumont); The Barbarian (A Night in Cairo) (Wood); Hold Your Man (Wood); Bombshell (Fleming)

1934 David Copperfield (Cukor); Merry Widow (Lubitsch); Mutiny on the Bounty (Lloyd); The Barretts of Wimpole Street (Franklin); A Wicked Woman (Brabin); The Show-Off (Riesner); Sadie McKee (Brown); Chained (Brown); The Painted Veil (Boleslawsky); Tarzan and His Mate (Gibbons); Riptide (Goulding); Viva Villa! (Conway)

1935 China Seas (Garnett); A Tale of Two Cities (Conway); San Francisco (Van Dyke); Anna Karenina (Brown); A Night at the Opera (Wood); Libeled Lady (Conway); Rendezvous (Howard); Whipsaw (Wood); No More Ladies (E. Griffith and Cukor); Ah Wilderness (Brown)

1936 The Great Ziegfeld (Leonard); Romeo and Juliet (Cukor); The Good Earth (Franklin); The Broadway Melody of 1936 (Del Ruth); Naughty Marietta (Van Dyke); Born to Dance (Del Ruth); Rose Marie (Van Dyke); Fury (Lang); After the Thin Man (Van Dyke); Tarzan Escapes (Thorpe)

1937 Camille (Cukor); Captains Courageous (Fleming); Night Must Fall (Thorpe); A Family Affair (Seitz); The Last of Mrs. Cheyney (Boleslawsky); Parnell (Stahl); The Broadway Melody of 1938 (Del Ruth); Thoroughbreds Don’t Cry (Green); Rosalie (Van Dyke); Maytime (Leonard); The Firefly (Leonard); A Day at the Races (Wood)

1938 Sweethearts (Van Dyke); Young Doctor Kildare (Bucquet); Boys Town (Taurog); Mannequin (Borzage); Test Pilot (Fleming); Three Comrades (Borzage); The Crowd Roars (Thorpe); A Yank at Oxford (Conway); The Citadel (K. Vidor); Marie Antoinette (Van Dyke)

1939 Goodbye, Mr. Chips (Ross); Ninotchka (Lubitsch); The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn (Thorpe); The Wizard of Oz (Fleming); Gone with the Wind (Fleming); The Women (Cukor)

1940 Strike Up the Band (Berkeley); Pride and Prejudice (Leonard); Little Nellie Kelly (Taurog); The Broadway Melody of 1940 (Taurog); Northwest Passage (K. Vidor); Edison the Man (Brown); Boom Town (Conway); Waterloo Bridge (LeRoy); The Philadelphia Story (Cukor); Comrade X (K. Vidor); Strange Cargo (Borzage); I Love You Again (Van Dyke); Escape (LeRoy)

1941 Billy the Kid (Miller); Two Faced Woman (Cukor); A Woman’s Face (Cukor); Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (Fleming); Blossoms in the Dust (LeRoy); Smilin’ Through (Borzage); The Chocolate Soldier (Del Ruth); Babes on Broadway (Berkeley); Lady Be Good (McLeod); Ziegfeld Girl (Leonard)

1942 Mrs. Miniver (Wyler); Woman of the Year (Stevens); Keeper of the Flame (Cukor); Her Cardboard Lover (Cukor); I Married an Angel (Van Dyke); Tarzan’s New York Adventure (Thorpe); White Cargo (Thorpe); Johnny Eager (LeRoy); Me and My Gal (Pier 13) (Walsh); Random Harvest (LeRoy)

1943 Above Suspicion (Thorpe); Madame Curie (LeRoy); Bataan (Garnett); Stand by for Action (Cargo of Innocents) (Leonard); A Guy Named Joe (Fleming); Lassie Come Home (Wilcox); The Heavenly Body (Hall); Cabin in the Sky (Minnelli); Girl Crazy (When the Girls Meet the Boys) (Taurog); Thousands Cheer (Sidney)

1944 Meet Me in St. Louis (Minnelli); Broadway Rhythm (Del Ruth); Bathing Beauty (Sidney); The Seventh Cross (Zinnemann); Thirty Seconds over Tokyo (LeRoy); The White Cliffs of Dover (Brown); Mrs. Parkington (Garnett)

1945 Anchors Aweigh (Sidney); The Valley of Decision (Garnett); Adventure (Fleming); The Clock (Under the Clock) (Minnelli); National Velvet (Brown); Son of Lassie (Simon); They Were Expendable (Ford); The Picture of Dorian Gray (Lewin)

1946 The Yearling (Brown); The Harvey Girls (Sidney); Till the Clouds Roll By (Whorf); Ziegfeld Follies (Minnelli); The Postman Always Rings Twice (Garnett); Lady in the Lake (Montgomery)
Merton of the Movies (Alton); Green Dolphin Street (Saville); Fiesta (Thorpe); The Unfinished Dance (Koster); Cynthia (The Rich Full Life) (Leonard)

1948

Easter Parade (Walters); The Pirate (Minnelli); Words and Music (Taurog); Summer Holiday (Manouelian); On an Island with You (Thorpe); Luxury Liner (Whorf); Command Decision (Wood); State of the Union (Capra); The Search (Zinnemann)

1949

On the Town (Donen and Kelly); Take Me Out to the Ball Game (Everybody's Changing) (Berkeley); The Barkleys of Broadway (Walters); Intruder in the Dust (Brown); Adam's Rib (Cukor); Neptune's Daughter (Buzzell); That Midnight Kiss (Taurog); Any Number Can Play (LeRoy); Little Women (LeRoy)

1950

Father of the Bride (Minnelli); Annie Get Your Gun (Sidney); Three Little Words (Thorpe); Summer Stock (If You Feel Like Singing); The Toast of New Orleans (Taurog); Two Weeks with Love (Rowland); Duchess of Idaho (Leonard); King Solomon's Mines (Bennett); To Please a Lady (Brown); The Miniver Story (Potter); A Life of Her Own (Cukor); Devil's Doorway (A. Mann); The Asphalt Jungle (Huston); Crisis (R. Brooks); Mystery Street (J. Sturges); Right Cross (J. Sturges); The Next Voice You Hear (Wellman)

Other Films as Producer:

1917 The Great Secret (Cabanne—serial)
1919 Human Desire (North); Virtuous Wives; In Old Kentucky (Neilan); Midnight Romance; Mary Regan
1920 Harriet and the Piper (Bracken); The Inferior Sex
1921 The Child Thou Gavest Me (Retribution) (Stahl); Her Mad Bargain (Carewe); The Invisible Fear (Carewe); Playthings of Destiny (Carewe); Sowing the Wind (Carewe)
1922 The Dangerous Age (Stahl); One Clear Call (Stahl); The Song of Life (Stahl); Her Kingdom of Desire (Neilan)
1923 The Famous Mrs. Fair (Niblo); The Eternal Struggle (The Man Thou Gavest Me; The Master of Woman) (Barker); Hearts Aflame (Barker); Pleasure Mad (Barker); Strangers of the Night (Niblo); The Wanters (Stahl)
1924 Thy Name is Woman (Niblo)

Publications

On MAYER: books—

On MAYER: articles—

Photoplay (New York), vol. 44, no. 3, August 1933.
Theater Arts, vol. 35, no. 9, September 1951.
Sight and Sound (London), vol. 22, no. 4, AprilJune 1953.
Obituary in Times (London), 30 October 1957.
Obituary in Motion Picture Herald, vol. 209, no. 5, 2 November 1957.
Time (New York), 4 April 1960.
Berg, A. Scott, ‘‘Louis B. Mayer: MGM’s Archetypal Studio Head at Home,’’ in Architectural Digest (Los Angeles), April 1990.
Film and TV Technician, no. 544, February 1991.
Gordon, Alex, ‘‘J for Jewish: Motion Pictures with Jewish Connections,’’ in Sight and Sound (London), March 1997.

* * *

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, with its internationally famous symbol of a roaring ‘‘Leo the Lion,’’ surely represented the most famous of the Hollywood studios of the 1930s and 1940s. The studio executive in charge of the 52 feature films and hundreds of short subjects that emerged annually from that filmmaking empire was Louis B. Mayer. During those glorious years MGM had a complete movie factory with 27 sound stages on a 168-acre Culver City, California lot. MGM’s laboratories could process 150,000 feet of film each day, and its property rooms contained more than 15,000 items to be used in movie after movie. It fed the films produced directly to Loew’s theaters, its parent company.

MGM’s method of film production reflected Mayer’s conservative business philosophy. During the Great Depression, the studio publicly projected an image as the Tiffany of studios: a high class, elegant operation. Greta Garbo and Norma Shearer headlined in a series of high-gloss, sophisticated melodramas, guaranteed to project positively with even the most jaded movie fan.

But Mayer covered all his bets, making a wide variety of feature films, many of which we would hardly classify as ‘‘high class.’’ Consider that in MGM’s best years, the early 1930s, the studio’s star who most often was ranked highest in popularity polls was none other than 61-year-old, gruff Marie Dressler. Dressler played an older woman with a heart of gold in Min and Bill and Tugboat Annie, two hits of the period, and brought MGM far more money than Garbo or Shearer.

Indeed Mayer’s MGM studio-factory employed a vast array of stars. In the 1930s, he set up a series of Tarzan jungle adventures with Johnny Weissmuller, slapstick comedies with Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy, and the satire and burlesque of the Marx Brothers in A Night at the Opera and A Day at the Races. Year-in, year-out through the two decades of the Golden Age of Hollywood, Clark Gable and Spencer Tracy represented Mayer’s most long-lived stars, two rugged males essaying roles which many took to define the ideal American male.

During the 1940s, Mayer went on to sponsor a certain glossy brand of Technicolor musical. Meet Me in St. Louis (1944) with Judy Garland (and directed by her then husband Vincente Minnelli), Easter Parade with Garland and Fred Astaire, and the innovative On the Town, starring Gene Kelly and co-directed by Kelly and Stanley Donen, offered widely engaging films, and attracted large audiences. But Technicolor musicals cost a great deal, and thus never did make much in the way of pure profit. In the 1940s Mayer contributed more to the Loew’s bottom line with the low-budget B Dr. Kildare and Hardy family series. Our Gang comedy shorts also made millions for Loew’s. In the 1940s the studio also developed the popular Tom and Jerry cartoon series.

Mayer prospered during the 1930s and into 1940s. Nonetheless, while larger than life to the moviegoing public on a daily basis and from a purely business perspective, he always knew he worked for a division of a larger multinational corporate enterprise, Loew’s, Inc. Loew’s management, led by Nicholas M. Schenck who was based in New York City, had hired Mayer as part of the 1924 merger that had created Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Indeed, prior to the merger, Mayer had produced his own films, a corpus now long forgotten.

Schenck kept Mayer as MGM studio chief as long as Mayer did well. But with the arid days of the late 1940s and into the television era of the 1950s, MGM began a financial slide downhill. Mayer was blamed for the red ink, and as an employee, not top executive, was blamed for the debacle and summarily kicked out. Mayer thus did not end his career at MGM but working for a rival, helping Cinerama crack the widescreen movie market during the 1950s.

—Douglas Gomery

McALPINE, Donald

Cinematographer. Nationality: Australian. Born: 1934. Career: Nominated for Australian Film Institute Awards for Best Achievement in Cinematography for Wu ting, 1981 and The Fringe Dwellers, 1986; nominated for Golden Satellite Award for Outstanding Cinematography and British Academy Award (BAFTA) for Best Cinematography for Romeo + Juliette. Awards: Australian Film Institute, Awards for Best Achievement in Cinematography for My Brilliant Career, 1979, and Breaker Morant, 1980; Australian Cinematographers Society, Cinematographer of the Year, 1981, Award of Distinction, 1997.

Films as Cinematographer:

1972  The Adventures of Barry McKenzie (Beresford)
1974  Barry MacKenzie Holds His Own (Beresford)
1976  Don’s Party (Beresford) (as Don McAlpine)
1977  The Getting of Wisdom (Beresford)
1978  Patrick (Franklin)

1979  The Journalist (Thornhill); Money Movers (Beresford); The Odd Angry Shot (Jeffrey); My Brilliant Career (Armstrong)
1980  The Earthing (Collinson) (as Don McAlpine); Breaker Morant (Beresford); The Club (Players) (Beresford)
1981  Papert Blues (Beresford)
1982  Tempete (Mazursky); Don’t Cry, It’s Only Thunder (Werner)
1983  Now and Forever (Carr); Blue Skies Again (Michaels)
1984  Moscow on the Hudson (Mazursky); Harry and Son (Newman)
1985  My Man Adam (Simon); King David (Beresford)
1986  The Fringe Dwellers (Beresford); Down and Out in Beverly Hills (Mazursky)
1987  Orphans (Mullan); Predator (McTiernan)
1988  Moon Over Parador (Mazursky)
1989  See You in the Morning (Pakula); Parenthood (Howard)
1990  Stanley & Iris (Ritt)
1991  Career Opportunities (One Wild Night) (Gordon); The Hard Way (Badham)
1992  Medicine Man (McTiernan); Patriot Games (Noyce) (as Donald M. McAlpine)
1993  Mrs. Doubtfire (Columbus); The Man without a Face (Gibson) (as Donald M. McAlpine)
1994  Clear and Present Danger (Noyce)
1995  Nine Months (Columbus)
1996  Romeo+Juliet (Romeo and Juliet; William Shakespeare’s Romeo+Juliet) (Luhrman) (as Donald M. McAlpine)
1997  The Edge (Tamahori) (as Donald M. McAlpine) (A.S.C.) (+sc)
1998  Stepmom (Columbus) (as Donald M. McAlpine)

Publications:

By McALPINE: articles—

On McALPINE: books—

* * *

An important figure in the development of the new Australian cinema in the late 1970s, Donald McAlpine has gone on to become an influential figure in Hollywood. He worked as cinematographer on some of the most successful films of the 1990s. His collaboration with Australian director Bruce Beresford began in the early 1970s with the slapstick ‘‘Barry MacKenzie’’ films, but went on to create some of the key films in which Australian filmmakers began to explore Australia’s emergence as a nation (roughly between 1890 and 1920). His more recent Hollywood output has been less consequential, but McAlpine works to a consistently high standard, whether it is on a gritty thriller, such as Clear and Present Danger, or a comic romp like Mrs. Doubtfire. The beginning of McAlpine’s career coincided with a revival in Australian cinema from which emerged some of the most talented filmmakers of their generation. The cinematographer has worked with several of the key directors of this revival, including Gillian Armstrong, but his collaboration with Beresford, with whom he has worked on many film projects, has proved the most productive. Films such as Breaker Morant, which dramatizes an episode in the Boer war in which Australian officers were court-martialled for killing prisoners take a polemical approach to British imperialism. Brian McFarlane argues that although detailed, the film’s approach to historical fact is heavily influenced by contemporary Australian attitudes to the influence of British authority. Nevertheless, McFarlane praises McAlpine’s use of the camera to “underline the drama.”

The same may also be said of an earlier film, The Getting of Wisdom, which, in common with many Australian films of the time, is based on work by a notable Australian writer, Ethel Lindsay Richardson. More successfully, the Armstrong/McAlpine partnership was responsible for My Brilliant Career, another adaptation of a work by Australian woman writer. While both films are impressive in their recreation of the period, McFarlane points out that Armstrong’s film is more successful in using the 1890s setting to make points about 1970s feminism and Australian nationalism. Both films tell the stories of young women emerging as artists in their own right but, helped by McAlpine’s camerawork, the later film is altogether more confident about presenting Sybylla Melvyn’s rebellious struggle for autonomy as analogous to Australia’s growing confidence in itself as a nation.

Since the mid-1980s, McAlpine’s career has centred on Hollywood. Some of his most impressive work has been on tough thrillers, such as Patriot Games and its sequel Clear and Present Danger, (both of which were directed by Australian director Phillip Noyce), in which McAlpine’s skill with positioning the camera enhance the sense of narrowing possibilities. It was on these films that McAlpine became involved with the development of computer generated images (CGI), and many of the skills that enhance these films are on show in John Badham’s comedy The Hard Way, in which an actor joins a cop in the hunt for a serial killer.

The hit of 1996, Romeo+Juliet set Shakespeare’s play in “Verona Beach,” California, and has been praised for the tongue-in-cheek inventiveness of its updating of the text (for example, handguns made by the “Sword” gun company). The film features rapid editing and swooping tracking shots that create a tension and sense of space that is all but impossible to achieve in the live theatre. McAlpine’s ability to use camera positioning to capture not only the action but also the context for the action is undoubtedly one of the many reasons for the film’s success.

Yet despite being so well suited to the demands of the thriller, perhaps McAlpine’s most productive Hollywood collaboration has been with director Chris Columbus, famous for romantic comedies and sentimental dramas. Their first project together was on the Robin Williams vehicle, Mrs. Doubtfire, is reminiscent in many ways of McAlpine’s earlier film, Parenthood, in which three generations of sons and fathers try to understand their relationships to one another. The small-scale settings for these films allow characters to dominate scenes with often hilarious results, and are ideal for Williams’s slapstick style in the later film. In Mrs. Doubtfire McAlpine photographs the manly frame of Williams posing as a female housekeeper in such a way as to keep the audience in on the joke while leaving the impersonation convincing enough in the context of the film. More recent and less successful collaborations with Columbus have produced the flop Nine Months and Stepmom, a mediocre family drama which overuses the sentimental possibilities of terminal illness.

McAlpine’s beginnings in the revival in Australian cinema at the end of the 1970s are now largely eclipsed by his success with more popular Hollywood offerings. Yet it was in the earlier period that McAlpine both developed his perceptive style and produced most of his best work. With the exceptions of the Patriot Games films, and Romeo+Juliet, a virtuoso piece of camerawork, McAlpine has rarely had the opportunity to show off the extent of his abilities in the 1990s. While his work on a succession of Hollywood comedies and dramas has always been slick and proficient, it is for his work in Australia that his career will be most favourably assessed.

—Chris Routledge

McCAY, Winsor

Animator. Nationality: American. Born: Winsor Zenis McCay in Spring Lake, Michigan, 26 September 1871. Education: Attended Ypsilanti Normal School, Michigan. Family: Married Maud Defere, 1891; children: Robert and Marion. Career: Before 1889—worked for poster firm, Chicago; 1891—scenic artist, Vine Street Dime Museum, Cincinnati, Ohio; 1898—reporter for Cincinnati Commercial Tribune, and later for Enquirer; 1903—drawings in strip form parodying Kipling’s Just So Stories attracted attention of James Gordon Bennett, Jr., of New York Herald; hired to draw for New York Evening Telegram; created strip Dreams of a Rarebit Fiend using pseudonym “Silas”; began comic strips for Herald; 1905—created Little Nemo in Sumberland; 1906—began giving chalk talks on vaudeville circuit; 1908—successful Broadway musical based on Little Nemo; 1909—introduced to cartoon animation by J. Stuart Blackton; began work on Little Nemo, first cartoon; 1911—premiered Little Nemo in vaudeville act; 1914—used Gertie the Dinosaur as part of vaudeville act; 1918—premiere of The Sinking of the Lusitania, probably first cartoon feature. Died: In 1934.

Films as Director, Writer and Animator:

1909 Little Nemo (short)
1911 Winsor McCoy
1912 How a Mosquito Operates (The Story of a Mosquito) (short)
1914 Gertie the Dinosaur (Gertie the Trained Dinosaur) (short)
1916 Winsor McCoy and His Jersey Skelters
1918 The Sinking of the Lusitania
1918–21 The Centaurs (short); Flip’s Circus (short); Gertie on Tour (short)
1921 Dreams of a Rarebit Fiend Series; The Pet; Bug Vaudeville; Flying House (shorts) (co-d with son Robert McCoy)

Publications

On McCAY: book—

On McCAY: articles—

Winsor McCay (right)

Filmvilag (Budapest), no. 8, 1996.

***

Winsor McCay is generally regarded as the first American auteur of animation. Although not the first to experiment with animated films, McCay achieved artistic and technical heights that established animation as a viable form and that set ground rules for a style of pictorial illusionism and closed figurative forms in American animated cartoons.

McCay studied art and worked as an illustrator and sign painter before settling down in 1889 as a newspaper cartoonist in Cincinnati. His success as a cartoonist led him to move in 1903 to the New York Evening Telegram. There he worked as a staff illustrator and developed the comic strips that brought him international fame.

During the next several years, McCay created such comic strips as Hungry Henrietta, Little Sammy Sneeze, Dream of the Rarebit Fiend, Pilgrim’s Progress, and his most famous work, Little Nemo in Slumberland. Little Nemo, which ran from 1905 to 1911, is the pinnacle of comic strip art in the first decade of the 20th century. It displays an unparalleled application of Art Nouveau graphic style, translating sinewy, irregular forms and rhythms into a delightfully decorative comic strip design. The strips related the fantastic adventures which befell the child Little Nemo, who always woke up in the last panel of the comic strip.

Sometime about 1909, McCay set to work on making an animated film of Little Nemo in Slumberland. (He credits his son’s interest in flip books as the source of inspiration for his cinematic experiment.) After drawing and hand-coloring more than 4,000 detailed images on rice paper, McCay employed his animated film in his vaudeville act while Vitagraph, the company that shot and produced the film, simultaneously announced its release of Little Nemo. The animation did not employ a story but rather showed the characters of the comic strip continuously moving, stretching, flipping, and metamorphosing.
McCay used foreshortening and exact perspective to create depth and an illusionistic sense of space even without the aid of any background. The animation sequence is framed by a live-action story in which McCay’s friends scoff at the idea that he can make moving pictures and then congratulate him when he succeeds.

The advertisements and the prologue for the film stressed the monumental amount of labor and time required to do the drawings. McCay promoted and flaunted not only his role as an artist but the animator’s “trade secrets.” Throughout his career, McCay emphasized the revelation of the mechanics and process of animation, a self-reflexive approach that grew naturally out of the way he self-consciously undermined conventions of comic strip art and constantly called attention to the form itself.

McCay made his second animated cartoon in 1911–12. How a Mosquito Operates relies on a simpler, less intricately graphic style in order to tell the story of a large mosquito’s encounter with a sleeping victim. Two years later, McCay completed the animated film for which he is most famous, Gertie the Dinosaur. Like his previous two films, McCay incorporated the cartoon into his vaudeville act and, like Little Nemo, Gertie’s animation is framed by a live-action sequence. But in Gertie, McCay combined the lessons of his earlier two films in order to create a character who is animation’s first cartoon personality.

After Gertie the Dinosaur, McCay continued doing other animated cartoons but began utilizing celluloid (instead of rice paper) and stationary backgrounds that did not have to be redrawn for every frame. He also devised a system of attaching pre-punched sheets to pegs so that he could eliminate the slight shifting that occurred from drawing to drawing. His discovery represents the first instance of peg registration, a technique commonly employed in modern animation.

Although McCay’s later cartoons were popular and praised for their naturalness (Centaurs and Sinking of the Lusitania), McCay’s elaborate full animation proved too time-consuming and costly to inspire others, more concerned with production, to adhere to his high standards. Neither a full-time animator nor part of a movie studio, McCay was free to pursue his own ends. His success is due to his ability to translate graphic style to animation as well as to his gregarious showmanship.

McCay stopped making animated films in 1921, and by the time he died of a cerebral hemorrhage in 1934, his contribution as an animator was almost forgotten. Only in the 1960s was McCay rediscovered as an American artist. In 1966, New York’s Metropolitan Museum sponsored an exhibit of his work.

—Lauren Rabinovitz

Films as Cinematographer:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Sacred and Profane Love</td>
<td>(Taylor)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1924</td>
<td>Flirting with Love</td>
<td>(Dillon);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>For Sale</td>
<td>(Archarbaum);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>So Big</td>
<td>(Brabin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1925</td>
<td>The Pace That Thrills</td>
<td>(Campbell);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The Desert Flower</td>
<td>(Cummings);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Sally</td>
<td>(Green);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>We Moderns</td>
<td>(Dillon)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1926</td>
<td>Irene</td>
<td>(Green)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1927</td>
<td>The Valley of the Giants</td>
<td>(Brabin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1928</td>
<td>The Code of the Scarlet</td>
<td>(H. Brown);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The Crash</td>
<td>(Cline);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The Upland Rider</td>
<td>(Rogell);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The Canyon of Adventure</td>
<td>(Rogell);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The Phantom City</td>
<td>(Rogell)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1929</td>
<td>The Wagon Master</td>
<td>(H. Brown);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The Royal Rider</td>
<td>(H. Brown);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Senior Americano</td>
<td>(H. Brown)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>The Fighting Legion</td>
<td>(H. Brown);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The Dawn Trail</td>
<td>(Caban);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The Lone Rider</td>
<td>(L. King);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mountain Justice</td>
<td>(H. Brown);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Sons of the Saddle</td>
<td>(H. Brown);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lucky Larkin</td>
<td>(H. Brown);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Parade of the West</td>
<td>(H. Brown);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Song of the Caballero</td>
<td>(H. Brown);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Men without Law</td>
<td>(L. King);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Shadow Ranch</td>
<td>(L. King)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>Desert Vengeance</td>
<td>(L. King);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Freighters of Destiny</td>
<td>(Allen);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Sundown Trail</td>
<td>(Hill)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>Carnival Boat</td>
<td>(Rogell);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The Big Stampede</td>
<td>(Wright);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Beyond the Rockies</td>
<td>(Allen);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The Saddle Buster</td>
<td>(Allen);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Hell-Fire Austin</td>
<td>(Sheldon);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Ride Him, Cowboy!</td>
<td>(Allen);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>False Faces</td>
<td>(L. Sherman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>The Man from Monterey</td>
<td>(Wright);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Fiddling ’Backaroon</td>
<td>(Maynard);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Somewhere in Sonora</td>
<td>(Wright);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The Telegraph Trail</td>
<td>(Wright);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>King of the Arena</td>
<td>(James);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Strawberry Roan</td>
<td>(James)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>Gun Justice</td>
<td>(James);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The Trail Drive</td>
<td>(James);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Wheels of Destiny</td>
<td>(James);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Fugitive Road</td>
<td>(Strayer);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Smoking Guns</td>
<td>(James);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Rocky Rhodes</td>
<td>(Raboch);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>When a Man Sees Red</td>
<td>(James)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>The Rainmakers</td>
<td>(Guioi);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Stone of River Creek</td>
<td>(Grinde)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>Feud of the West</td>
<td>(Fraser);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Trainin’ West</td>
<td>(Smith)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>Fugitive in the Sky</td>
<td>(Grinde);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Guns of the Pecos</td>
<td>(Smith)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Sergeant Murphy</td>
<td>(Eason);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The Daredevil Drivers</td>
<td>(Eason)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>Secret Service of the Air</td>
<td>(Smith);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Code of the Secret Service</td>
<td>(Smith);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Pride of Bluegrass</td>
<td>(McGann);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Cowboy Quarterback</td>
<td>(Smith)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>Ladies Must Live</td>
<td>(Smith);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Calling All Husbands</td>
<td>(Smith)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Murder in the Air</td>
<td>(Seiler);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Father Is a Prince</td>
<td>(Smith)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>The Case of the Black Parrot</td>
<td>(Smith);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Nine Lives Are Not Enough</td>
<td>(Sutherland);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>She Couldn’t Say No</td>
<td>(Clemens);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Singapore Woman</td>
<td>(Negulesco);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Knockout</td>
<td>(Clemens);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Highway West</td>
<td>(McGann);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Bullets for O’Hara</td>
<td>(Howard)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1942</td>
<td>Wild Bill Hickok Rides</td>
<td>(Enright);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Murder in the Big House</td>
<td>(Eason);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Bullet Scars</td>
<td>(Lederman);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>I Was Framed</td>
<td>(Lederman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>Action in the North Atlantic</td>
<td>(Bacon)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>Deep Valley</td>
<td>(Negulesco);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>That Way with Women</td>
<td>(de Cordova)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1948</td>
<td>The Treasure of the Sierra Madre</td>
<td>(Huston);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Johnny Belinda</td>
<td>(Negulesco);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>June Bride</td>
<td>(Windust);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Smart Girls Don’t Talk</td>
<td>(Bare)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>Flamingo Road</td>
<td>(Curtiz);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The Lady Takes a Sailor</td>
<td>(Curtiz)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>The Damned Don’t Cry</td>
<td>(V. Sherman);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Young Man with a Horn</td>
<td>(Curtiz);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The Breaking Point</td>
<td>(Curtiz);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Rocky Mountain</td>
<td>(Keighley)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>Goodbye My Fancy</td>
<td>(V. Sherman);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Force of Arms</td>
<td>(Curtiz);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>I’ll See You in My Dreams</td>
<td>(Curtiz);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Starlift</td>
<td>(Del Ruth)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
1952  This Woman Is Dangerous (Feist); Operation Secret (Seiler); Cattle Town (Smith); Stop, You’re Killing Me! (Del Ruth)
1953  South Sea Woman (Lubin)
1954  Young at Heart (Douglas)
1955  East of Eden (Kazan); I Died a Thousand Times (Heisler)
1956  The Girl He Left Behind (Butler); The Burning Hills (Heisler)
1957  The Helen Morgan Story (Curtiz)
1958  The Proud Rebel (Curtiz)
1959  The Hanging Tree (Daves)
1960  The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn (Curtiz); Private Property (L. Stevens)
1962  Hero’s Island (L. Stevens); Two for the Seesaw (Wise); War Hunt (Sanders)
1965  The Sound of Music (Wise)
1966  A Fine Madness (Kershner)

Publications

On McCORD: articles—

* * *

The veteran cinematographer Ted McCord worked in the American film industry for a remarkable six decades, from the 1910s through the 1960s. As such he toiled on many a big-budget silent film such as First National’s Sally and was behind the camera for the major blockbuster of the 1960s, 20th Century-Fox’s The Sound of Music. But remarkably he never won an Academy Award, though he received three nominations for Johnny Belinda, Two for the Seesaw, and The Sound of Music. McCord was considered a good craftsman, not a great artist.

He was most praised for his complex use of lighting. McCord attributed his use of deep shadows to his interest in the paintings of Rembrandt and the cinematography of the great Greg Toland. This was particularly apparent in such sequences as the “Climb Every Mountain” number in The Sound of Music and the brothel hallway footage in East of Eden.

Like many who entered the industry in the 1910s, McCord had no formal training in photography or aesthetics. Rather he learned on the job. He began in a film laboratory and took his training under James Van Trees at the old Hobart Bosworth Studio. He then moved on to film dozens of B-westerns. He was able to move to a major studio only as the Second World War sent many a younger cinematographer to battle and thus opened up positions in Hollywood.

Many of the great cameramen of the studio era took long tenures at one studio. For McCord that was Warner Bros. He worked on many of the studio’s most famous and profitable films of the 1940s, including The Treasure of the Sierra Madre, Action in the North Atlantic, and Flamingo Road. Few of these are remembered as classics, but all were interesting visual artifacts. This is the portion of his career for which McCord will probably be most remembered.

He was also a generous benefactor to younger cameramen. Conrad Hall, cinematographer on such films as Cool Hand Luke, tells all interviewers that it was McCord who opened up the system for him and other aspiring cinematographers of the 1960s. McCord was a self-confident “old pro.” He was not set in his ways, but willing to help a new generation learn from the great craftsmen of the past.

—Douglas Gomery

McKISSON, Robert

Films as Director of Animation (selected list):

1946  Daffy Doodles; Hollywood Canine Canteen; Acrobatty Bunny; Walky Talky Hawky; The Mouseremized Cat; One Meat Brawl
1947  Birth of a Nation; Hobo Bobo; Crowing Pains; Horsefly Fleas
1948  Daffy Duck Slept Here; Hop, Look, and Listen; Easter Yeggs; Gorilla My Dreams; The Shell-Shocked Egg; The Upstanding Sitter; The Foghorn Leghorn; Hot-Cross Bunny; A Lad in His Lamp; Hurdy Gurdy Hare
1949  Paying the Piper; Daffy Duck Hunt; Rebel Rabbit; The Greyhounded Hare; The Windblown Hare; Swallow the Leader; A Ham in a Role; Boobs in the Woods
1950  Strife with Father; The Leghorn Blows at Midnight; An Egg Scramble; What’s Up Doc?; It's Hummer Time; Hillbilly Hare; A Fractured Leghorn; Pop ‘im Pop; The Bushy Hare; Dog Collared
1951  A Fox in a Fix; Corn Plastered; Early to Bet; French Rarebit; Leghorn Swoggled; Lovelorn Leghorn; Sleepytime Possum; Big Top Bunny; The Prize Pest; Here We Go
1952  Who’s Kitten Who?; Thumb Fun; Kiddin’ the Kitten; Sock-a-Doodle Do; The Turn-Tail Wolf; The Oily Hare; Hoppy Go Lucky; The Egg-cited Rooster; The Super Snooper; Rabbit’s Kin; Fool Coverage
1953  Upswept Hare; A Peck o’ Trouble; Muscle Tussle; There Auto Be a Law; Plop Goes the Weasel; Cat-Tails for Two; Easy Peckin’s; Of Rice and Hen; Cats A-Weigh 1954  Wild Wife; Design for Leaving; Bell Hoppy; No Parking Hare; Little Boy Boo; Devil May Hare; The Oily American; Gone Batty; Quack Shot
1955  Feather Dusted; All Fowled Up; Lighthouse Mouse; The Hole Ideal Dime to Retire
1956  Too Hop to Handle; Weasel Stop; The High and the Flighty; Mixed Master; The Unexpected Pest; Stupor Duck; Half-Fare Hare; Raw! Raw! Rooster; The Slap-Happy Mouse; Wideo Wabbit; The Honeylovers
1957  Bedevilled Rabbit; Cheese It, the Cat!; Fox Terror; Boston Quackie; Ducking the Devil; Mouse-taken Identity; Rabbit Romeo
1958  Don’t Axe Me; Tortilla Flaps; Feather Bluster; Now Have This; Dog Tales; Weasel While You Work; Pre-hysterical Hare; Gopher Broke
1959  Mouse-placed Kitten; China Jones; The Mouse That Jack Built; A Mutt in a Rat; Backwoods Bunny; Bonanza Bunny; A Broken Leghorn; People Are Bunny
1960  West of the Pesos; Wild, Wild World; Crockett Doodle-Do; Mice Follies; The Dixie Fryer; Doggone People 1961  Cannery Woe; Hoppy Daze; Strangled Eggs; Birds of a Father; Daffy’s Inn Trouble; What’s My Lion?
1962  Wet Hare; Fish ’n Slips; Bill of Hare; The Slick Chick; Mother Was a Rooster; Good Noose
1963  Fast Back Duck; The Million-hare; Banty Raids; Aqua Duck; Claws in the Lease; A Message to Gracias
1964  The Incredible Mr. Limpet (Lubin) (animation sequences); Bartholomew vs. the Wheel; Freudy Cat; Dr. Devil and Mr. Hare; False Hare
1965  Moby Duck; Assault and Peppered; Well Worn Daffy; Suppressed Duck; Rushing Roulette; Tease for Two; Chili con Corny; Go Go Amigo
1966  The Astroduck; Mucho Locos; Mexican Mousepiece; Daffy Rents; A-Haunting We Will Go; Snow Excuse; A Squeak in the Deep; Feather Finger; Swing Ding Amigo; Sugar and Spies; A Taste of Cattip; Cock-a-Doodle Deaux Deaux
1967  Daffy’s Dinner; Sacré Bleu Cross; Le Quiet Squad
1968  Bunny and Claude; The Fistic Mystic
1969  The Great Carrot Train Robbery; Rabbit Stew and Rabbits Too; Shamrock and Roll; Bugged by a Bee; Injun Trouble
1973  Fowl Play
1975  Pink Davinci; It’s Pink But Is It Mink?
1976  Mystic Pink; The Pink Pro; Sherlock Pink

Publications

On McKimson: articles—

“The Dixie Fryer,” in Reid’s Film Index, no. 27, 1996.
“Feather Duster,” in Reid’s Film Index, no. 27, 1996.
“French Rarebit,” in Reid’s Film Index, no. 27, 1996.
“A Mutt in a Rat,” in Reid’s Film Index, no. 27, 1996.
“One Meat Brawl,” in Reid’s Film Index, no. 27, 1996.
“Pop ’Im Pop!” in Reid’s Film Index, no. 27, 1996.

* * *

The cartoon director Robert McKimson is best known for his successful contributions to animation history by creating the mindlessly destructive beast known as The Tasmanian Devil and the volatile rooster, Foghorn Leghorn.

In the early 1930s, individual animator’s work, such as McKimson’s, was almost indistinguishable, although most animators see this period as a great training ground for their later careers. Hugh Harman and Rudolf Ising’s main character was Bosko, who had as many adventures as his counterpart Mickey Mouse. The humor was as broad as the artwork, and, when Harman and Ising sold out to Leon Schlesinger, McKimson found himself animating on a new, but similar, character named Buddy. During these early years, McKimson animated for some of the best directors: Jack King, Friz Freleng, Chuck Jones, Tex Avery, Frank Tashlin, and finally Bob Clampett, a very good foundation for any director. Some of his most notable animation occurs in many of Clampett’s works, in particular Bugs Bunny appearing as a ballerina in A Corny Concerto or Bugs’s death scene in The Old Grey Hare. Although a great deal of the characterization of Bugs Bunny must go to Tex Avery, McKimson did design and draw the first model sheets while with Avery’s unit. McKimson, who had shunned being promoted to director for seven years for the simple reason that he was “still learning,” made his first film as animation director in 1946. The third cartoon he made featured his most popular character, the bombastic, blowhard rooster, Foghorn Leghorn, based on two radio characters; one, the hard-of-hearing Sheriff from Blue Monday Jawbone; the other, Kenny Delmar’s overbearing creation Senator Cloghorn from the Fred Allen Show. Raucous, noisy, and a total pain-in-the-neck, Leghorn would spend entire cartoons reliving the boredom down on the farm by irritating all and sundry, especially the luckless watchdog, with his ceaseless talking, tricks, and gadgets to upset many an applecart. Occasionally he would join forces with a weasel to help him catch the chicks that the dog was guarding.

Often criticized for using too much dialogue and not enough action, McKimson soon rectified matters by creating the fast-paced speed demon, Speedy Gonzales, and a bizarre horned, whirling-dervish of a beast who tore through mountains as though they were lumps of cake, eating everything in sight—the Tasmanian Devil. The producer Eddie Selzer disliked the character so much that he ordered McKimson to put a stop to it. He was mercifully overridden by his boss, Jack Warner, who wanted to see more of the unsightly beast. McKimson’s style is very much his own, more restrained than his contemporaries Clampett and Avery, and very much attuned to radio and television parodies. Apart from his own characters, he worked best with characters he knew and had helped develop. Bugs Bunny teamed with Daffy Duck worked extremely well, as did Sylvester and his prig of a son. The culmination of his passion for radio and TV came when Jack Benny and his cast agreed to appear in McKimson’s parody The Mouse That Jack Built for just the cost of a print of the cartoon.

When Warners finally closed its doors on cartoons, McKimson floundered around until he rejoined his former associate Friz Freleng, who had formed his own company, DePatie-Freleng Enterprises, and was making a series of new cartoons for none other than Warners. This was the beginning of the unfortunate era of cheap and quick cartoons. McKimson was never happy with what he was given to do at DFE, but tried to do his best on a shoestring budget in the quickest possible time. His final years with DFE were spent toying with commercials and TV episodes, so that, ironically, the medium he had enjoyed ribbing so mercilessly in the 1950s had now got its revenge and had the last laugh.

—Graham Webb

McLAREN, Norman

Education: Attended Stirling public schools; Glasgow School of Art.
Career: 1934—while a student at Glasgow School of Art made antiwar film with animated sequence which won first prize, Scottish Film Festival; 1936—after graduation hired by John Grierson at General Post Office Film Unit; 1936–38—worked on live-action documentaries; 1938—made first professional animated film Love on the Wing; first example of his drawing-directly-on-film technique; 1939–41—worked in New York independently, and for company producing publicity shorts and Museum of Non-Objective Art; 1941—hired by Grierson at Canada’s National Film Board to set up animation department; 1949—began long collaboration with Evelyn Lambert on Begone Dull Care; 1952—for antiwar film Neighbours developed process of animating film of live actors called “pixillation.” Award: Academy Award for Neighbours, 1952. Died: 1987.

Films as Director:

1934–35 Hand Painted Abstraction; Seven Till Five; Camera Makes Woopee; Colour Cocktail

1936–37 Hell Unlimited; The Defense of Madrid

1937–39 (For GPO Film Unit, London) Book Bargain; News for the Navy; Many a Pickle; Love on the Wing

1939 (For Film Center, London) The Obedient Flame

1939–41 (For Museum of Non-Objective Art, New York) Dots; Scherzo; Loops; Rumba (lost); Stars and Stripes; Boogie Doodle (*)

(For National Film Board of Canada)

1941 Mail Early; V for Victory

1942 Five for Four; Hen Hop (*)

1943 Dollar Dance

1944 C’est l’aviron; Keep Your Mouth Shut

1945 La Haut sur ces montagnes

1946 A Little Phantasy; Hoppity Pop (*)

1947 Fiddle-de-dee; Poulette grise

1948–52 A Phantasy

1949 Begone Dull Care (*)

1950–51 Around Is Around; Now Is the Time

1952 *Neighbors (Les Voisins) (+ mus); *Two Bagatelles (+ mus)

1954–55 Blinkity Blank (*)

1956 Rythmetic (+ mus)

1957 *A Chairy Tale (Il était une chaise)
1958 Le Merle
1959 Serenali*; Short and Suite*; Mail Early for Christmas; The Wonderful World of Jack Paar (for TV) (credit sequence only)
1960 Lignes verticales (Lines-Vertical)*; Opening Speech (Discours de bienvenue de McLaren)
1961 New York Lightboard
1962 Lignes horizontales (Lines-Horizontal)*
1963 Caprice de Noël (Christmas Crackers) (credit sequence and intertitles only)
1964 Canon
1965 Mosaic (Mosaïque)* (+ mus)
1967 Pas de deux (live action)
1969 Sphères (Spheres)
1971 Synchrony
1972 Ballet adagio
1973 L’Écran d’épingles (co-d with Alexeieff and Parker) (documentary)
1976–78 Le Mouvement image par image (series of 5 animation instruction films)
1981–83 Narcissus (live action)

* films without camera (direct drawing, engraving, or painting on film)

 ‘‘pixillation’’

Publications

By McLAREN: books—
The Drawings of Norman McLaren, Montreal, 1975.

By McLAREN: articles—
‘‘Notes on Animated Sound,’’ in Quarterly of Film, Radio, and Television (Berkeley, California), Spring 1953.
‘‘L’Écran et le pinceau,’’ in Séquences (Montreal), December 1955.
‘‘Making Films on Small Budgets,’’ in Film (London), December 1955.
Interview, in special animation issue of Cinéma (Paris), January 1957.
Séquences (Montreal), October 1965.
Film Library Quarterly (New York), Spring 1970.
‘‘A Dictionary of Movement,’’ interview with M. Magistros and G. Munro, in Wide Angle (Athens, Ohio), v. 3, no. 4, 1980.

On McLAREN: books—
Forsyth, Hardy, Dots and Loops: The Story of a Scottish Film Cartoonist, Edinburgh, 1951.
Collins, Maynard, Norman McLaren, Canadian Film Institute, 1975.

On McLAREN: articles—
‘‘Hen Tracks on Sound Tracks,’’ in Popular Mechanics, April 1949.
‘‘Movies without a Camera, Music without Instruments,’’ in Theatre Arts (New York), October 1952.
Jordan, William, ‘‘Norman McLaren: His Career and Techniques,’’ in Quarterly of Film, Radio and Television (Berkeley, California), Fall 1953.
Special animation issue of Cinéma (Paris), January 1957.
Mekas, Adolfas, ‘‘The Second Story—Honoring the Only Canadian Artist,’’ in Film Culture (New York), Summer 1962.
Weinberg, Gretchen, ‘‘Mc et Moi,’’ in Film Culture (New York), Summer 1962.
‘‘The Craft of Norman McLaren,’’ in Film Quarterly (Berkeley, California), Winter 1962–63.
Egly, Max, ‘‘Klee, Steinberg, McLaren,’’ in Image et Son (Paris), March 1965.
Cutler, May, ‘‘The Unique Genius of Norman McLaren,’’ in Canadian Art, May-June 1965.
Vinet, Pierre, ‘‘Multi-McLaren,’’ in Take One (Montreal), September-October 1966.
Burns, Dan, ‘‘Pixillation,’’ in Film Quarterly (Berkeley, California), Fall 1968.
Revue de la Cinémathèque (Montreal), February-April 1990.
Werner, L., ‘‘Spontaneous Frames of Movement,’’ in Americas, September-October 1993.
Chevassu, F., ‘‘Hommage à Norman McLaren,’’ in Mensuel, no. 11, November 1993.

* * *

Norman McLaren was one of the great polymaths of animation and filmmaking. Although many independent and experimental animators can, and do, work with a range of different techniques, few have explored the breadth of possibilities with such thoroughness and expertise as McLaren. Cel animation, animation with paper cutouts, pastels, paint, three-dimensional objects, ‘‘pixillated’’ human beings, the light board at Times Square, and even ‘‘animation without a camera’’ are just some of the methods he used in his nearly fifty-year-long career. In addition, he also painted and drew, wrote extensively about animation, collaborated with and inspired many other artists (including John Grierson, Benny Goodman, Oscar Peterson, Evelyn Lambert, Rene Jodoin, George Dunning, Alexander Alexieff and Claire Parker, and Ravi Shankar, to name but a few), developed sophisticated optical printing techniques for live-action film, and is said to have invented the ‘‘travelling zoom’’ shot which inspired the ‘‘portal’’ sequence in Stanley Kubrick’s 2001: A Space Odyssey. Nonetheless, though his technical accomplishments and aesthetic achievements have profoundly influenced animators all over the world, he often maintained that his films’ primary function was to convey his own feelings and to elicit an emotional response in his viewers. Towards the end of his life he said, ‘‘I just would like to be remembered for having made some films which have touched people greatly or melted them or moved them in some way or excited them.’’

Although the body of his work is heterogeneous, eclectic, and resistant to totalizing characterization, its single, unifying concern is the representation of movement. Indeed, he is said to have described animation itself as not the art of moving drawings, but of drawing movement. His later interest in dance, and ballet especially, is thus not an aberration from his animated work, but contiguous with it, as Pas de deux (1967) demonstrates. In an interview with Maynard Collins, McLaren revealingly notes that even when listening to music, which is so integral to his work, ‘‘I see movement, rather than specific images. . . Movement is my basic language.’’

The most intriguing films in which McLaren articulates this ‘‘language’’ of movement are the ‘‘camerless’’ and abstract ones he made while working independently and for the National Film Board of Canada where he headed their animation department. Some of these depict recognizable figures and imagery, like Dollar Dance (1943) and Hen Hop (1942) (of the latter, Picasso is said to have proclaimed ‘‘At last, something new in the art of drawing!’’). Others veer in the direction of total abstraction and consist of flickering patterns of colour, line, and form, like Begone Dull Care (1949). This last is probably one of his best known camerless films, made with Evelyn Lambert, his longtime collaborator, and scored by Oscar Peterson. It consists of a rich jumble of jingling squiggles and blobs rendered by washes of dyes that were etched, scratched and variously textured by a number of materials, including Lambert’s fortuitous and accidental discovery of dust. Some of McLaren’s abstract films consist of elaborations on a single geometrical theme or figure taken to their furthest logical extreme, like Lines-Vertical (1960), Lines-Horizontal (1962), Dots and Loops (1940), and Mosaic (1965). This aspect of his oeuvre owes a considerable artistic debt to Oscar Fischinger.

McLaren’s reputation as a sort of abstract expressionist of film has tended to occlude recognition of the overtly political films he made throughout his life. It was, after all, the powerful antiwar film he made as an art student at Glasgow’s School of Art, Hell Unlimited (1936), that launched his professional career and gained him entry to the G.P.O. Film Unit in the 1930s, leading to his work on The Defense of Madrid (1937) with Ivor Montague. Some of the ‘‘propaganda’’ films—Stars and Stripes (1941), Mail Early (1941), and V for Victory (1941)—he made in America during the Second World War may seem facile now, and perhaps mere excuses for formalist experiment, but Neighbors (1952) an allegory of war with two ‘‘pixillated’’ men fighting to the death over a flower, manages to synthesize emotive content with technical innovation. Neighbors eschews intellectual proselytizing and makes its pacifist point with admirable economy of expression. Its clarity has won it a place in many a school film library, an appropriate place for a man who was as much an educator, literally and figuratively, as he was an animated film maker.

—Leslie Felperin Sharman

MEERSON, Lazare

Films as Art Director:

1925 Feu Mathias Pascal (The Late Mathias Pascal) (L’Herbier) (asst); La Nègre blanc (Rimsky and Wulschleger); Gribiche (Mother of Mine) (Feyder); Les Aventures de Robert Macaire (Epstein)
1926 Carmen (Feyder); La Proie du vent (Clair) (co)
1927 Un Chapeau de paille d’Italie (An Italian Straw Hat) (Clair); Le Chasseur de chez Maxims (Rimsky and Lion)
1928 Cagliostro (Oswald); Les Deux Timides (Clair); L’Argent (L’Herbier) (co); Souris d’hôtel (Millar); Les Nouveaux Messieurs (The New Gentlemen) (Feyder); La Comtesse Maria (Perojo)
1929 Le Requin (Chomette)
1930 L’Etrangère (Ravel); Jean de la Lune (Choux); David Golder (Duviévier); Sous les toits de Paris (Under the Roofs of Paris) (Clair); Le Mystère de la chambre jaune (L’Herbier)
1931 La Fin du monde (Gance); Le Million (Clair); Les Cinq Gentlemen maudits (Duviévier); Le Monseigneur de minuit (Lac hman); Der Ball (Thiele); A nous la liberté (Tarride); Un Coup de téléphone (Lacombe) (co); Le parfum de la dame en soie (L’Herbier)
1932 La Femme en homme (Geninà); Conduisez-moi madame (Selpin); La Femme nue (Paulin); Le Quatorze juillet (Clair); Il a été perdu une mariée (Joannon)
1933 Ciboulette (Autant-Lara); La Femme invisible (Lacombe); L’Ange gardien (Choux); Primrose (Guissart); Anok (Ozep)
1934 Lac-aux-Dames (M. Allégret); Le Grand Jeu (Feyder); La Banque Nemo (Viel and Choux); Poliche (Gance); L’Hôtel du libre-échange (M. Allégret); Zozou (M. Allégret)
1935  Pension Mimosas (Feyder); Justin de Marseille (Tourneur); Princesse Tam-Tam (Gréville) (co); Les Beaux Jours (M. Allégret); La Kermesse héroïque (Carnival in Flanders) (Feyder)

1936  As You Like It (Czinner); Fire over England (Howard)

1937  Knight without Armour (Feyder); The Scarlet Pimpernel (Schwartz); South Riding (Saville); The Divorce of Lady X (Whelan); Break the News (Clair)

1938  The Citadel (K. Vidor)

Publications

On MEERSON: articles—

* Sight and Sound* (London), Summer 1938.

Bandini, B., in Cinema (Rome), no. 130, 1941.

Film Dope (Nottingham), March 1989.

* * *

A gifted artist and student of architecture, Lazare Meerson left Russia after the October Revolution to work first in Germany before settling in France. Influenced both by Russian constructivist theory and the Expressionist movement of the Berlin studios, he brought to Paris creative talent, experience, and artistic skills which were to make him the most influential set designer of his generation. His association with Alexander Kamenka, a fellow Russian emigre and director of the Société des Films Albatros at the Montreuil Studios, resulted in a successful collaboration with several leading directors, notably Jacques Feyder, Marcel L’Herbier, and René Clair. Already the group of expatriate Russian filmmakers at Montreuil had encouraged the rejection of conventional theatrical trompe l’œil painted scenery in favour of more substantial architecturally conceived sets built from natural materials in order to create greater authenticity. Their achievements led to a new perception of the designer’s role in the production of mood and meaning in film, and henceforth they were invited to work more closely with the director to express in plastic terms the essential tenor of the film narrative. In this conducive environment, Meerson’s talents flourished and his influence grew, but he modestly argued that his sets were there simply to discretely serve a film’s action and not to impose upon it: subject matter, the quality of the acting, and mise en scène should remain the prime considerations. The value of set design, he maintained, lay in the atmosphere it could generate to inspire actors and director alike as they worked towards their artistic statement.

Meerson’s long association with Feyder began in the mid-1920s with Gribiche, for which he created spacious, yet deliberately uninviting sets to epitomize a wealthy American’s luxurious modern apartment. A studied attention to detail and mood soon became his trademark. For Carmen he evoked the character of the lovers’ café in Seville with meticulously observed architectural features; for Les Nouveaux Messieurs a spectacularly detailed studio reconstruction of the Chamber of Deputies was undertaken, and for Le Grand Jeu the representation of the colonial garrison and its mess was similarly impressive in its authentic feel. The powerfully realist decors of Pension Mimosas with an atmospheric rendering of low gambling dives and the eponymous boarding house confirmed Meerson’s adherence to poetic realism. However, it was with La Kermesse héroïque, perhaps France’s most successful historical film, that Meerson’s work with Feyder achieved new heights. The studio reconstruction of a 17th-century Flemish town, complete with canals and natural vegetation, brilliantly recreates the tone and perspectives of Dutch and Flemish paintings of the period.

For L’Herbier, Meerson initially worked as an assistant to Cavalcanti on the decors for Feu Mathias Pascal. Here memorable cluttered sets conveyed the closed and claustrophobic world of French provincial society, while a dramatically counterpointed Rome apartment building characterized by large, unadorned rooms signalled a new mood of liberation. The hallmark of his designs for L’Herbier’s version of Zola’s L’Argent was a series of spectacularly grandiose sets. Working in collaboration with Léon Barsacq, he constructed a magnificent bank interior, a huge banqueting hall, a restaurant, and opulent private chambers which included a circular room representing the globe. All were to serve as visual metaphors for money’s power and universal influence.

Meerson’s association with René Clair began when he worked with Brunì on the imaginative sets for the mysterious castle in La Proie du vent. His subsequent designs mirror the director’s concern with social issues or social satire. For Un Chapeau de paille d’Italie he reproduced in consummate ironical detail the decorative Henri II style of furnishing so favoured by the French middle classes of the Belle Époque, while for Les Deux Timides the life-style of two lawyers is differentiated through objects which acquire narrative significance such as an old sewing machine or a collection of less than comforting chairs. The authenticity of the central Court Room scenes derives from minutely observed detail carefully reproduced in the studio sets. With the advent of sound, Meerson accompanied Clair to the Tobis studios where, for the next four films he collaborated successfully with the cameraman Georges Périnal. For Clair’s first sound film, Sous les toits de Paris, both exteriors and interiors were studio-built, with Meerson ingeniously using parts of the Tobis buildings themselves for his sets. The stylized decors, realist in mode but imbued with an air of romantic nostalgia, conferred on his representation of the working-class districts of the city a poetic quality which initially confounded audiences accustomed to the authenticity of location shooting. However, the carefully crafted sets with their evocative rooftops, chimneys, narrow streets, and cafés were soon to be critically acclaimed. Similar stylizations were employed for both Le Quatorze juillet with its flag-decked streets and its false perspectives, notably the magnificent flight of steps, and Le Million, a comedy about a lost lottery ticket, which involves a chase across the rooftops of the city, once again immediately identifiable as Paris, but a Paris charmed by the air of joyous fantasy which characterizes the film’s mood. The dreamlike quality was in part achieved through an innovative use of tulle in the set construction. For A nous la liberté, a left-wing satire of big business and mass production methods, comparisons are established between factory and prison. Here the cold, futuristic sets with parodic allusions to Art Deco, express through their disturbing proportions the dehumanizing nature of the factory process and the pursuit of profit.
Tempted by Alexander Korda to join his London Film Productions at the superbly appointed Denham studios, Meerson moved to England, where he worked until his sadly premature death. Although a number of worthy films resulted, none matched the quality of his French productions. Among the more memorable sets of this period were an impressive castle complete with black mirror floors for Czinner’s As You Like It, the deserted Russian station for Feyder’s Knight without Armour, and, working for the only time for a film in colour, the London barrister’s flat which is at the centre of Whelan’s comedy The Divorce of Lady X.

Meerson’s contribution to the evolution of film set design can hardly be overstated. His personal style, shaped out of his own artistic talent and the influences of his Russian formation and the experience of Berlin, encouraged several developments in the cinema including that of poetic realism. His use of natural materials in set construction, his meticulous studio recreations and finely worked false perspectives, reinforced by his exacting personal supervision of the work at every stage, ensured new standards for the art of film decor. His stylized evocations of the poorer quarters of Paris broke new ground, while his frequently enormous sets opened up new opportunities for cameramen and experiments in the evocative play of lighting. The work of many designers, particularly that of Trauner, Douy, and Wakhévitch, testifies to his seminal influence.

—R. F. Cousins

MENGES, Chris

Films as Camera Operator:

1959 No Place to Hide (Forbes and Knight) (camera assistant)
1962 The Saturday Men (Fletcher) (camera assistant)
1967 Poor Cow (Loach)
1968 If... (L. Anderson)

Films as Cinematographer:

1962 The War Game (Zetterling) (co)
1964 The Opium Trail (Cowell—for TV)
1967 In Search of Opportunity (Hassan)
1968 Beyond the Tropopause (Hassan); Abel Gance, the Charm of Dynamite (Brownlow—for TV)
1969 Wild and Free—Twice Daily (+ d—for TV); Solo (Misha Donat); Kes (Loach)

1970 Loving Memory (Scott); The Tribe that Hides from Man (Cowell—for TV) (co)
1971 After a Lifetime (Loach—for TV); Talk about Work (Loach); Gunshee (Frears); Black Beauty (Hill)
1974 The Opium Warlords (Cowell—for TV)
1975 To Be Seven in Belfast (Sheppard—for TV); Chicago Streets (Cokliss—for TV)
1976 Busker (Pearce—for TV)
1979 Auditions (Loach—for TV); Bloody Kids (Frears—for TV); Black Jack (Loach); Before the Monsoon (Grigsby—for TV)
1980 The Gamekeeper (Loach—for TV) (co); The Empire Strikes Back (Kershner) (2nd unit cinematographer); Babylon (Rosso)
1981 A Sense of Freedom (Mackenzie—for TV); East 103rd Street (+ d, pr); Couples and Robbers (Peploe); Battletruck (Cokliss); Looks and Smiles (Loach)
1982 Angel (Jordan); Made in Britain (Clarke—for TV); Walter (Frears—for TV)
1983 Local Hero (Forsyth); Rhino (Howell—for TV); Walter and June (Frears—for TV)
1984 The Killing Fields (Joffé); Comfort and Joy (Forsyth); Winter Flight (Battersby—for TV)
1985 Marie (Donaldson); Which Side Are You On? (Loach—for TV)
1986 Fatherland—Singing the Blues in Red (Loach); High Season (Peploe); The Mission (Joffé)
1987 Shy People (Konchalovsky); High Season (Peploe)
1996 Michael Collins (Jordan)
1997 The Boxer (Sheridan)
2000 The Pledge

Films as Director:

1971 A Completely Different Way of Life (for TV)
1973 Radical Lawyer (for TV)
1975 A Family Doctor (for TV)
1978 Fly on the Wall (for TV)
1987 A World Apart
1990 CrissCross
1994 Second Best
1999 The Lost Son

Publications

By MENGES: articles—

Stills (London), no. 6, May/June 1983.
In Camera (Hemel Hempstead, Hertfordshire), Spring 1988.

On MENGES: articles—

In the 1980s, Chris Menges became well-known as the Oscar-winning cinematographer of The Killing Fields and The Mission, and the director of A World Apart. But like so many British cinema “names” of the decade, Menges had enjoyed a long and distinguished career in television in the 1960s and 1970s. He built up a considerable and consistent body of work with two key directors in particular: Kenneth Loach and Stephen Frears. He also shot numerous editions of the trailblazing Granada documentary series World in Action, in which he found himself working under perilous conditions in some of the world’s worst trouble spots. And he was the cameraman on such major contributions to the documentary genre as Mike Grigsby’s Before the Monsoon and three remarkable films by Adrian Cowell: The Opium Trail, The Opium Warlords, and The Tribe that Hides from Man. In the cinema, Menges started as a camera operator on Lindsay Anderson’s If... and Loach’s Poor Cow. Since then he has made features with both Frears and Loach, and worked on such notable British films as Radio On, Babylon, Angel, and Local Hero.

Clearly, variety is one of Menges’s hallmarks. As Michael Goldfarb wrote in The Guardian, “He has a sensitive eye for capturing a setting, whether it is the lingering, silver-blue light of a summer evening in Scotland’s Western Isles, as in Local Hero, the tropical pastel salmons and greens of The Killing Fields and The Mission, or the sooty, fog-encrusted light of our own latitude in Fatherland.”

This stylistic variety is a crucial ingredient of Menges’s working philosophy. As he put it in a revealing interview with John Wyver in Stills, “My personality is not ever to fight for a style. My feeling about all work is, it’s not about style, but about what it’s trying to say, what it’s worth. The actual style should be an integrated part of the whole... What are you interested in? What do you care about? That’s the only message.” In the same interview, he traced a continuity in the work of those with whom he had most enjoyed collaborating: “The idea that life is a real joy, but that the world we live in is a real struggle; that over the centuries man has learnt to be very unjust, and that it’s just not good enough any more. So I’ve worked with people... who tried to encompass a feeling and understanding about what life could and should be about.’’

One of Menges’s earliest experiences was working with the American independent filmmaker Alan Forbes on a film about London’s buskers. From Forbes, and from seeing the hugely influential work of Dennis Mitchell, Menges came to realize the importance of simply letting people speak on film. Indeed, what counts above all else for him is people and what they have to say. But equally importantly, he also took the advice of Canadian documentarist Alan King, who told him that “it doesn’t matter if the person you’re filming is not talking. Sometimes the person listening is more interesting than the person talking.’’

Ken Loach, with whom Menges first worked as a feature cameraman, is still the director whom he most admires. It is hardly difficult to see why this should have been such a successful and fruitful partnership, since both men care passionately about their subjects, and both share similarly democratic attitudes to the people they film, be they actors or the subjects of a documentary. Menges played a crucial role in achieving the remarkable feeling of spontaneity in Loach’s films. As Loach himself declared to Stephen Peet, in an article in Eyeiece, ‘‘His feeling for light is related to his feeling for people. Because he has a warm appreciation of people he then finds a light that is sympathetic to them and doesn’t intrude on them.’’ In one of his earliest interviews, Menges described his way of working in a fashion which recalls Loach: ‘‘I like it when the circumstances dictate what I as a cameraman focus on. I go into a room and sit there and think about it and listen and talk and feel it all. When obviously the moment’s come, I pick up the camera and let everybody there dictate, to some extent, how it’s going to be done. They get on with their own business.’’

While working on The Killing Fields with director Roland Joffé, Menges hoped to capture the very feeling of authentic war conditions, ‘‘the instinct of how the actual physical locations felt,’’ and decided to go for a ‘‘crudgy, grainy, ill-mannered and vital’’ look. Joffé chose him for the job mainly on the strength of his work on The Opium Warlords. After seeing The Killing Fields, it comes as absolutely no surprise to discover that the photographer Cartier-Bresson has been an enormous influence on Menges, for the work of both men is characterized by those all-revealing ‘‘decisive moments’’ seized from the flux of action, moments which are also found in the early films of Raoul Coutard, another cinematographer much admired by Menges.

The Killing Fields is a film that effectively counterpoints expansive and often extremely beautiful landscapes with the claustrophobic inner dramas taking place within them. If anything, The Mission (for which Menges also worked as Joffé’s cinematographer) is packed with even more contrasts, from intimate close-ups to vast vistas, interior and exterior sets, and locations and battles on both land and water, making it a considerable challenge for director and cinematographer alike. The feel is far less documentary than in The Killing Fields, and Menges himself has described it as ‘‘operatic,’’ a means of telling the story that ‘‘encompassed its grandness and also its simplicity.’’ Menges and Joffé looked at Spanish paintings from the eighteenth century, the time in which the film is set, to glean a feeling of what it was like to live during this period, and in particular to see what kind of light was shed by the oil-wick lamps of the time. They also devised a scheme in which certain scenes were coded in particular colors according to the emotional feel of the scene and its place in the overall narrative. But however complex the filming, Menges and Joffé still manage to give the actors the freedom and space they need. Witness the fight scene between Robert De Niro and Aidan Quinn, where the camera never intrudes or causes complications, thus never detracting from the power of the scene itself.

Given the combination of Menges’s empathy and tremendous concern for subject matter, it comes as no surprise that he should have chosen such a weighty subject as South Africa for his first feature film as director, A World Apart. It is a humanistic, deeply personal, and politically savvy drama about Molly Roth (Jodhi May), a girlish 13 year old whose parents are virulent antiapartheid activists. Her father, Gus, is wanted by the authorities and has gone into hiding. Her mother, Diana (Barbara Hershey), is so passionately committed to the cause that she disregards her family and neglects to directly communicate with Molly. In this regard, A World Apart is as much an intimate family drama as it is a portrait of the apartheid regime. As Menges has said about the excellent performances in the film, ‘‘The directing was knowing when to shut up and keeping the technical side to a minimum.’’

Of course, the film’s feeling for its characters’ plight under apartheid is a crucial aspect of its politics. Significantly, A World Apart is set in 1963, the year in which Menges first worked on World in Action. At that time, he even visited South Africa to cover the events surrounding the arrest of the leaders of the African National Congress and the imposition of the infamous 90-day detention act—which, within the scenario of A World Apart, is employed to incarcerate Diana Roth.

Menges’s follow-up feature, CrissCross, was less successful dramatically, but involves a similar theme to that in A World Apart: the manner in which a child is affected by a parent whose priorities are dictated by events outside the family circle. Here, he tells the story of an alienated 12-year-old boy whose Vietnam veteran father had abandoned the family years before. Ironically, in Second Best, his next feature, Menges tells the story of an adult eager to embrace the responsibilities of parenthood: a reserved, unmarried fortysomething Welsh postmaster who becomes determined to adopt an intensely troubled ten-year-old boy.

In 1985, Menges gave an interview, published in American Cinematographer, in which he summarized his personal, political and creative philosophies: ‘‘You do things that make you grow and make you learn, and I’ve always been interested in things that teach me something. That’s where the politics comes in—[it’s all about] learning and caring.’’

—Julian Petley, updated by Rob Edelman

MENKEN, Alan

Composer. Nationality: American. Born: New Rochelle, New York, 22 July 1949. Education: New York University; Lehman Engel Musical Theatre Workshop. Family: Married to Janis, two children. Career: Contemplated a medical career before following his earliest ambition to be a musician and composer; performed in local clubs, as well as composing and writing advertising jingles during the mid Alan Menken

Films as Composer:

1986 Little Shop of Horrors (Oz)
1989 The Little Mermaid (Musker/Clements)
1990 Rocky V (song only—Avildsen)
1991 Beauty and the Beast (Trousdale/Wise)
1992 Newsies (Ortega); Aladdin (Musker/Clements); Home Alone 2 (song only—Columbus)
1993 Life with Mikey (Lapine)
1995 Pocahontas (Gabrie/Goldberg)
1996 The Hunchback of Notre Dame (Trousdale/Wise)
1997 Hercules (Trousdale and Wise)

Publications

On MENKEN: articles—

Sountrack (London), March 1996.

---

A graduate of the New York musical theatre, Alan Menken has benefited from a financially and creatively fruitful association with the Walt Disney Studios. Reaching a peak of creativity at a time when the studio’s lumbering animation division finally kicked into life again, Menken has composed some memorable music for films that are essentially the last musical outpost of modern Hollywood.

In a well-worn route to musical success, Menken performed in clubs and even contributed advertising jingles before he met his first significant collaborator, lyricist Howard Ashman. With Ashman Menken wrote God Bless You, Mr. Rosewater, which met with some success when it opened off-Broadway. He remained devoted to the New York stage, providing music for theatre workshops, from the rock musical Battle of the Giants (Atina: Evil Queen of the Galaxy), to the more traditional Real Life Funnies, as well as countless reviews.

Teammed with Ashman once again, Menken achieved his first feature film success on Little Shop of Horrors, providing vibrant and larger-than-life music for Ashman’s aggressively witty lyrics. For their efforts Menken and Ashman received several awards, as well as an Oscar nomination for the song “Mean Green Mother from Outer Space.”

Further forays into the theatre, such as The Apprenticeship of Daddy Kravitz, were truncated by the beginning of his association with Disney. Hired to write the songs for The Little Mermaid, based on a Hans Christian Andersen story, Menken and Ashman came up with a selection that brought the film alive and carried the drama instead of simply interrupting it.

Inspired by the calypso tradition, the songs allowed for Ashman’s aggressively witty lyrics. For their efforts Menken and Ashman received several awards, as well as an Oscar nomination for the song “Mean Green Mother from Outer Space.”

Further forays into the theatre, such as The Apprenticeship of Daddy Kravitz, were truncated by the beginning of his association with Disney. Hired to write the songs for The Little Mermaid, based on a Hans Christian Andersen story, Menken and Ashman came up with a selection that brought the film alive and carried the drama instead of simply interrupting it.

Inspired by the calypso tradition, the songs allowed for Ashman’s typically witty and irreverent verbal gymnastics and became an integral part of the film’s success, returning Disney to the forefront of musical films at a time when the genre was redundant. Menken and Ashman had succeeded where others had failed by finding a fine balance of catchy, amusing songs that offered insight into the characters’ innermost thoughts. Other films had simply treated characters like marketing opportunities for the spin-off album.

Modern cinema audiences had proved wary of musicals, unwilling or unable to suspend their disbelief long enough for a song break within a comedy or a drama. Disbelief is so much more easily suspended when applied to an animated film where reality is stylised. Menken and Ashman consolidated their success with Beauty and the Beast, writing a collection of folksy, funny, traditional-sounding ballads—songs reminiscent of the contemporary American musical theatre.

Menken’s working relationship with Howard Ashman was by no means exclusive; indeed, he recharged his creative batteries by working with many other lyricists, notably Jack Feldman on the schmaltzy “My Christmas Tree” in Home Alone 2 and on the ill-judged but brave live-action musical Newsies. Unfazed by occasional disappointments, Menken worked on scoring television miniseries and contributing a song to Rocky V in collaboration with Elton John. He returned to Disney to work on Aladdin, and with Ashman wrote some of the most memorable songs of his career, in spite of Ashman’s failing health and eventual death during production. Hurriedly teamed with Tim Rice, a British lyricist from a similarly theatrical tradition, Menken was sensitive to his new collaborator and his very different way of working. Together they came up with the remainder of the songs, including the Oscar-winning number “A Whole New World.”

Such was the success of Disney’s animated output that the studio decided the musicals should play on Broadway. Menken was the man responsible for adding songs, tweaking existing numbers and ensuring everything was in order musically. Beauty and the Beast subsequently opened to great acclaim.

Menken’s niche at Disney has proved every bit as comfortable and familiar as the podium from which he annually collects his Academy Award. His precocious talents and prodigious output have dominated the Best Song category for several years.

Menken has continued to produce varied, good quality music with whomever he has been assigned to work. Broadway lyricist Stephen Schwartz worked with him on Pocahontas and The Hunchback of Notre Dame, while David Zippel was his collaborator on Hercules. Menken is happiest being involved in the collaborative process, which at Disney means that the songwriters are amongst the various talents involved in the earliest stages of story discussions. With the exhaustive 3-to-5-year production schedule that an animated film typically requires, this also allows more time for the songwriter and lyricist to produce exactly the right songs for the plot as it unfolds.

Given the contrasting nature of the projects, and Menken’s own ability to mimic so many musical traditions and styles, there hardly seems a repeated note in his work. He admits that the challenge to produce something different invigorates him, and that is certainly the case with the relentlessly pounding beat of “Savages” in Pocahontas, and the over-the-top genie number “‘You Ain’t Never Had a Friend Like Me’” in Aladdin. Because of the scale of the success of Disney’s output in the 1980s and 1990s, Menken’s music has become familiar to audiences beyond cinema. An indication of his wider success is the popularity of ice-dance adaptations of Disney movies such as Beauty and the Beast and Aladdin. In these live concerts, several of which have been recorded for TV and video, Menken’s music is the backdrop for ice skating displays. Most recently, the skater Michelle Kwan starred in a performance entitled Michelle Kwan Skates to Disney’s Greatest Hits, in which many of the musical numbers were composed by Menken. For Hercules, Disney’s animated epic of 1997, Menken’s music had to match the scale of the movie and its subject. True to form, he managed to come up with spectacular tunes to match the images on the screen.

These numbers and the hundreds of others like them are typically memorable, typically successful, and, by their impact and individualism, typically Menken.

—Anwar Brett, updated by Chris Routledge

MENZIES, William Cameron

Art Director and Director. Nationality: American. Born: William Howe Cameron Menzies in New Haven, Connecticut, 29 July 1896. Education: Attended Yale University, New Haven, Connecticut; University of Edinburgh; Art Students League, New York. Military Service: Served in the United States Army during World War I. Family: Married Mignon (Menzies); daughters: Jane and Suzanne.
Career: 1920–22—worked in special effects and design, Famous Players-Lasky, London and New York; from 1923—art director for independent and major studios, and director from 1931. Awards: Academy Awards for The Dove and The Tempest (one award), 1928, and Gone with the Wind, 1939; Special Academy Award, 1939. Died: In Hollywood, California, 5 March 1957.

Films as Art Director:

1918 The Naulakha (Fitzmaurice) (co); Innocent (Fitzmaurice)
1919 The Witness for the Defense (Fitzmaurice); A Society Exile (Fitzmaurice)
1920 The Deep Purple (Walsh)
1921 The Oath (Walsh); Serenade (Walsh); The Three Musketeers (Nibo) (co)
1922 Kindred of the Dust (Walsh); Robin Hood (Dwan) (co)
1923 Rosita (Lubitsch)
1924 The Thief of Bagdad (Walsh) (co)
1925 The Lady (Borzage); Her Sister from Paris (Franklin); The Eagle (Brown); Cobra (Henabery); What Price Beauty (Buckingham); Graustark (Buchowitzki); The Dark Angel (Fitzmaurice);
1926 The Wanderer (Walsh) (co); Kiki (Brown); The Bat (West); The Son of the Sheik (Fitzmaurice); Fig Leaves (Hawks)
1927 The Beloved Rogue (Crosland); Camille (Nibo); Two Arabian Knights (Milestone); Sorrell and Son (Brenon) (co); The Dove (Walsh)
1928 Sadie Thompson (Walsh); Drums of Love (Griffith); The Garden of Eden (Milestone); The Tempest (Taylor); The Woman Disputed (H. King and Taylor); The Loves of Zero (Florey); The Awakening (Fleming)
1929 The Iron Mask (Dwan) (co); The Rescue (Brenon); Lady of the Pavements (Griffith); Alibi (West); Coquette (Taylor); Three Live Ghosts (Freeland); The Locked Door (Fitzmaurice); Bulldog Drummond (Jones); Condemned (Ruggles); The Taming of the Shrew (Taylor) (co); New York Nights (Milestone)
1930 Abraham Lincoln (Griffith) (co); The Bad One (Fitzmaurice) (co); Be Yourself (Freeland) (co); The Lottery Bride (Stein) (co); Dubarry, Woman of Passion (Taylor) (co); Lummox (Brenon) (co); One Romantic Night (Stein) (co); Puttin’ on the Ritz (Sloeman) (co); Raffles (D’Arrast and Fitzmaurice) (co)
1931 Reaching for the Moon (Goulding); Always Goodbye (+ co-d)
1933 Trick for Trick (McFadden); Alice in Wonderland (McLeod) (co, + co-sc); Calvadache (Lloyd) (co)
1936 Things to Come (co, + d)
1938 The Adventures of Tom Sawyer (Taurag) (co); The Young in Heart (Wallace) (co); Intermezzo (Ratoff) (co); Made for Each Other (Cromwell) (co)
1939 Gone with the Wind (Fleming) (co)
1940 Foreign Correspondent (Hitchcock) (co); Our Town (Wood) (co); The Thief of Bagdad (Berger, Powell, and Whelan) (co)
1941 Kings Row (Wood) (co); So Ends Our Night (Cromwell) (co); The Devil and Miss Jones (Wood) (co)
1942 The Pride of the Yankees (Wood) (co)
1943 Mr. Lucky (Poter) (co); The North Star (Milestone) (co); For Whom the Bell Tolls (Wood) (co)
1944 Address Unknown (+ pr + d)
1947 Ivy (+ co-pr)
1948 Arch of Triumph (Milestone)
1951 Drums in the Deep South (+ d); The Whip Hand (+ d)
1953 Invader from Mars (co, + d); The Maze (co, + d)

Other Films:

1931 Almost Married (co-d); Chanda the Magician (co-d)
1933 I Loved You Wednesday (co-d)
1934 Wharf Angel (co-d)
1937 The Green Cockato (Four Dark Hours; Race Gang) (d)
1940 Conquest of the Air (co-d)
1946 Duel in the Sun (K. Vidor) (uncredited co-d)
1949 Reign of Terror (The Black Book) (A. Mann) (pr)
1956 Around the World in 80 Days (Anderson) (assoc pr)

Publications

By MENZIES: articles—

‘‘Cinema Design,’’ in Theatre Arts (New York), September 1929.
Film Weekly (London), 5 April 1935.

On MENZIES: articles—

‘‘Layout for Bulldog Drummond,’’ in Creative Art (New York), October 1929.
Picturegoer (London), 16 September 1939.
Film Dope (Nottingham), October 1989.
Nosferatu (San Sebastian), February 1994.

If there is one person who did more than any other to show the importance of art direction in filmmaking, it was William Cameron Menzies. For Gone with the Wind, David Selznick wanted Menzies to be involved early in the preparatory stages because he knew Menzies would plan the whole film on paper. He also wanted the art director to prepare continuity sketches showing lighting and camera angles and to handle the montage sequences. For undertaking these tasks, Menzies was then given the title “production designer,” while Lyle Wheeler, who handled the more traditional aspects of set and costume design, was called “art director.” Menzies also directed about ten percent of Gone with the Wind, including the Atlanta fire scene, and thus was one of four directors who ultimately directed parts of the film. That the film was a success despite having had so many directors must be attributed in large part to the unity provided by Menzies’s design program.

Menzies typically used jagged shapes on railings or fences during scenes of tension or heightened, negative emotions. He was, however, eclectic in his style, drawing inspiration from a variety of sources. Illustrations of fantasy, such as those by Maxfield Parrish or Kay Nielsen, inspired the designs for Douglas Fairbanks’s The Thief of Bagdad, while German Expressionist films inspired the appearance of The Beloved Rogue. Menzies was also aware of the tradition of careful film design in Hollywood itself, notably in the films of D.W. Griffith. In an article written in 1929, Menzies said that movies required built sets with a simplified design, for the eye could see any one scene for only a short time. He believed the designer’s job was to create a broad design of lines and values to which was then applied the realism of architecture, figures, and properties. By expressing this relationship between details and an underlying structure, Menzies’s art can be seen to parallel American paintings of the period, specifically those by artists such as Charles Sheeler or Edward Hopper who apply some realistic details to a carefully organized composition. Menzies undoubtedly was an important figure in solidifying the position of the art director or production designer in Hollywood. His influence is found in many films that display designs with carefully controlled atmosphere, texture, color, and composition.

—Floyd W. Martin

MERCER, Johnny

Films as Lyricist:

1933 College Coach (Wellman); The Good Companions (Saville) (co)
1935 Old Man Rhythm (Ludwig) (+ ro); To Beat the Band (Stoloff)
1936 Rhythm on the Range (Taurog)
1937 Varsity Show (Keighley); Ready, Willing, and Able (Enright); The Singing Marine (Enright); Hollywood Hotel (Berkeley)
1938 Gold Diggers in Paris (Enright); Going Places (Enright); Hard to Get (Enright); Cowboy from Brooklyn (Bacon); Garden of the Moon (Berkeley)
1939 Naughty But Nice (Enright); Wings of the Navy (Bacon)
1940 You’ll Find Out (Butler)
1941 Second Chorus (Potter); Blues in the Night (Litvak); Let’s Make Music (Goodwins); You’re the One (Murphy); Navy Blues (Bacon); Birth of the Blues (Schertzinger)
1942 The Fleet’s In (Schertzinger); Star Spangled Rhythm (Marshall); You Were Never Lovelier (Seiter); All through the Night (Sherman); Captains of the Clouds (Curtiz); They Got Me Covered (Butler)
1943 The Sky’s the Limit (Griffith); True to Life (Marshall)
1944 Here Come the Waves (Sandrich); To Have and Have Not (Hawks)
1945 Out of This World (Walker); Her Highness and the Bellboy (Thorpe)
1946 The Harvey Girls (Sidney); Centennial Summer (Preminger)
1947 Dear Ruth (Russell)
1948 Mr. Peabody and the Mermaid (Pichel)
1949 Make Believe Ballroom (Santley); Always Leave Them Laughing (Del Ruth)
1950 The Petty Girl (Levin)
1951 Here Comes the Groom (Capra); My Favorite Spy (McLeod); The Belle of New York (Walters)
1953 Dangerous When Wet (Walters); Everything I Have Is Yours (Leonard); Those Redheads from Seattle (Foster); Seven Brides for Seven Brothers (Donen)
1954 Timberjack (Kane)
1955 Daddy Long Legs (Negulesco) (+ composer); I'll Cry Tomorrow (Daniel Mann)
1956 You Can't Run Away from It (Powell); Spring Reunion (Pirosh)
1957 Bernardine (Levin) (+ composer); Missouri Traveler (Hopper)
1958 Merry Andrew (Kidd); Love in the Afternoon (Wild)
1959 Li'l Abner (Frank)
1960 Facts of Life (Frank)
1961 Breakfast at Tiffany's (Edwards); Hatari! (Hawks)
1962 Days of Wine and Roses (Edwards); Mr. Hobbs Takes a Vacation (Koster)
1963 Charade (Donen); Love with the Proper Stranger (Mulligan); How the West Was Won (Ford, Marshall, and Hathaway)
1964 The Americanization of Emily (Hiller); The Pink Panther (Edwards); Man's Favorite Sport? (Hawks)
1965 The Great Race (Edwards); Johnny Tiger (Wendkos)
1966 Not with My Wife, You Don't! (Panama); Alvarez Kelly (Dmytryk); Moment to Moment (LeRoy); A Big Hand for the Little Lady (Cook)
1967 Barefoot in the Park (Saks); Rosie (Rich)
1970 Darling Lili (Edwards)
1973 Robin Hood (Reitherman); The Long Goodbye (Altman)

Publications

On MERCER: book—

On MERCER: articles—

* * *

When the American film business converted to sound movies in the late twenties, an important motive for this sweeping technological and institutional change was economic. Though films had been silent, theaters had not; an important element in the attractiveness of the “picture palaces” built in the first two decades of the studio period was that they had not just screens, but stages, orchestra pits, and elaborate organs, all of which produced music to please the paying customers. Sound film not only enabled the films themselves to talk; it allowed them to make music as well, replacing the expensive live musicians who had previously provided it.

It was this change that permitted a number of experienced lyricists and composers to leave Broadway for California, lured by the promise of large salaries and steady work. The list of Broadway notables who began film work in the early thirties includes Ralph Rainger, Dorothy Fields, Jimmy McHugh, Mack Gordon, Richard Whiting, and Al Dubin. And there was also Johnny Mercer, a lyricist who had worked on stage productions with such notables as Jerome Kern and had written songs for Paul Whiteman’s band. Taking advantage of the boom in film music work, he was able to launch a Hollywood career that would endure for four decades. In the thirties and forties, Mercer’s talents were in demand to write songs not only for those films in which vocal performance was of predominant importance (the genre that would, on the analogy of similar productions on Broadway, be known as “musicals”), but also to write numerous songs for films that featured one or at most several vocal performances that provided moments of musical entertainment that interrupted what was otherwise a dramatic or comedic narrative. Though they often led to the sale of lyric sheets, the majority of these songs achieved no enduring popularity outside the films in which they were performed, and these were largely forgettable themselves: not prestige productions but ordinary films that were a part of Hollywood’s vast output during the decade. For Varsity Show, for example, Mercer penned no fewer than ten songs, including “On with the Dance,” “Little Fraternity Pin,” and “We’re Working Our Way through College.” The work was varied and steady. Occasionally, Mercer got the opportunity to do title-song work for prestige productions; a good example is his “Jezebel” for the Warners’ Civil War epic of the same name. These songs were often more recognized, notably the title song for Blues in the Night, which received an Oscar nomination.

In fact, during the forties it became more common to market a film through its title song. Mercer wrote the title theme for Laura, for example, after the movie was released; the nondiegetic music in the film itself is wordless. Mercer also did important title work for I’ll Cry Tomorrow, Love in the Afternoon, Bernardine, Days of Wine and Roses, and, of course, most famously, Breakfast at Tiffany’s, whose “Moon River” became his signature song. In the fifties and sixties, demand for film lyrics lessened as Hollywood began to depend more exclusively on already successful Broadway productions as source material for film musicals. At the same time, dramatic films and comedies of the period depended less on the “performance moments” that required the lyric inventiveness of a commercial composer such as Mercer. Because he was never much of a success on Broadway, despite several attempts, and because he never formed a long-term partnership with a music composer, Mercer has undoubtedly received less than a fair share of credit for contributions to American popular music, especially of the Hollywood variety. His many songs, however, some of which have become standards, decisively shaped the character of the American cinema during the studio period, which without him would have lacked the joyful humor of “The Square of the Hypoteneuse” (Merry Andrew) and the poignant romanticism of “Moment to Moment” (from the film of the same name), among many other examples.

—R. Barton Palmer

MERCHANT, Ismail

Films as Producer

(all directed by James Ivory unless otherwise noted)

1960  The Creation of Woman (Schwep) (short)
1963  Gharbar (The Householder)

1965  Shakespeare Wallah (+ ro as theater manager)
1968  The Guru (+ ro as compere)
1970  Bombay Talkie (+ ro as film producer)
1971  Adventures of a Brown Man in Search of Civilisation (doc)
1972  Savages
1973  Helen, Queen of the Nautch Girls (Korner) (doc short)
1974  Mahatma and the Mad Boy (+ d) (doc short); The Wild Party
1975  Autobiography of a Princess
1976  Sweet Sounds (Robbins) (doc short)
1977  Roseland
1979  Hullabaloo over Georgie and Bonnie’s Pictures (+ ro as extra); The Europeans
1980  Jane Austen in Manhattan
1981  Quartet
1983  Heat and Dust (+ ro as peasant); The Courtesans of Bombay (doc) (+ d, co-sc)
1984  The Bostonians
1985  A Room with a View
1986  My Little Girl (Kaiserman)
1987  Maurice
1988  The Deceivers (Meyer); The Perfect Murder (Hai)
1989  Slaves of New York (+ ro as extra)
1990  Mr. and Mrs. Bridge
1991  The Ballad of the Sad Café (Callow); Second Daughter (Kaiserman)
1992  Howards End
1993  The Remains of the Day; In Custody (+ d)
1994  Street Musicians of Bombay (Robbins)
1995  Jefferson in Paris (+ ro as Tipoo Sultan’s Ambassador); The Feast of July (Menaul); Lumière et compagnie (Moon)
1996  Surviving Picasso; Propriétaire (The Proprietor) (+ dir)
1997  Side Streets (Gerber) (exec)
1998  A Soldier’s Daughter Never Cries
1999  Cotton Mary (+ dir)
2000  The Golden Mary (La Coupe d’Or)

Publications

By MERCHANT: books—

Ismail Merchant’s Indian Cuisine (cookbook), New York, 1986.

By MERCHANT: articles—

Interview with Jaz Mohan, Basu Chatterji, and Arun Kaul, in Close-Up (Bombay), October/December 1968.
Interview with Amena Meer, in Interview (New York), April 1994.

On MERCHANT: books—

On MERCHANT: articles—

Callow, Simon, “Pair Excellence,” in Architectural Digest (Los Angeles), April 1996.

* * *

The 35-year producer-director partnership of Ismail Merchant and James Ivory is now officially enshrined in the Guinness Book of Records as the longest collaboration in the history of cinema. To their two names should be added that of the novelist Ruth Prawer Jhabvala, scriptwriter on most of their films. The reason for the partnership’s endurance, it is generally agreed, lies in an exceptionally happy balance of similarities and contrasts between its members. All three, despite their very different backgrounds, share cultured, cosmopolitan sensibilities; but while Ivory and Jhabvala are quiet and self-effacing, with nothing of the huckster about them, Merchant is outgoing, energetic, charming, and irresistibly persuasive.

It was not until their 15th feature together, A Room with a View, that Merchant-Ivory went securely into profit, but that never deterred Merchant in his tireless quest for finance. “If you have enthusiasm, and a sincere belief in what you are doing,” he declares, “money is no problem.” A colleague of his (quoted by Robert Emmet Long) describes him as “like an elephant outside the financier’s door. You can see him through the glass, you cannot shift him, he won’t go away, he is very patient, and there is always the chance that he will come crashing in.”

To be an independent producer, Merchant has observed, “you have to be a master of survival.” If Merchant-Ivory has not only survived, but remained staunchly independent, it is due largely to Merchant’s negotiating acumen and business training. Few producers are as well qualified to see through the industry’s notoriously baroque accounting practices. “Strange charges are applied to your film’s earnings,” he notes. “Executives buy suits from Armani and charge them to your quarterly report. You have to have an eagle’s-eye watch on them all the time.” He keeps an equally close eye on the company’s own accounts: Merchant-Ivory productions are famous for their tight budgeting and for looking a lot more expensive than they are. Major stars are cajoled into working for well below their normal asking rate, and valuable props are borrowed rather than bought—often for free.

Thanks to these shrewd financial tactics, Merchant-Ivory has maintained an independence of operation rare for a company of such modest size. Remarkably few projects have had to be aborted for want of finance, and almost all—especially since the worldwide success of A Room with a View—have enjoyed wide international release through major distribution networks. Yet the company has kept Hollywood safely at arm’s-length, retaining control over subject, script, casting, and final cut. Pressures to go down-market, to embark on more crowd-pleasing ventures, have been resisted. All these achievements can be credited almost entirely to Merchant.

Still, those who criticize Merchant-Ivory for making (in the director Alan Parker’s dismissive phrase) “Laura Ashley films” might well retort that an excursion or two down-market might not be a bad thing. Certainly the company has increasingly tended to concentrate on literature-based “heritage cinema,” partly no doubt because audience response to their occasional forays into more robust territory—Savages, The Wild Party, Slaves of New York—has been less than enthusiastic. But while even Merchant-Ivory’s strongest admirers have detected something slightly airless about such latter-day offerings as Jefferson in Paris, there is no evidence that this tendency has stemmed from specifically financial pressure being brought to bear by Merchant.

It may be a sign of restlessness that in recent years Merchant has begun to branch out: into directing on his own account, and into producing films directed by people other than Ivory. As yet, he has not ranged too far afield. The other directors have mainly been members of the Merchant-Ivory team such as Connie Kaiser, associate producer on many of their productions, and regular actors in their films such as Simon Callow. Merchant’s own directorial efforts, clearly much influenced by Ivory, have aroused little excitement. The partnership with Ivory and Jhabvala seems likely to remain his chief commitment; understandably so, providing as it does the ideal vehicle for bringing to bear his shrewd financial tactics. Merchant-Ivory has, in the words of its producer-director, “bought—often for free.”

Thanks to these shrewd financial tactics, Merchant-Ivory has maintained an independence of operation rare for a company of such modest size. Remarkably few projects have had to be aborted for want of finance, and almost all—especially since the worldwide success of A Room with a View—have enjoyed wide international release through major distribution networks. Yet the company has kept Hollywood safely at arm’s-length, retaining control over subject, script, casting, and final cut. Pressures to go down-market, to embark on more crowd-pleasing ventures, have been resisted. These achievements can be credited almost entirely to Merchant.

Still, those who criticize Merchant-Ivory for making (in the director Alan Parker’s dismissive phrase) “Laura Ashley films” might well retort that an excursion or two down-market might not be a bad thing. Certainly the company has increasingly tended to concentrate on literature-based “heritage cinema,” partly no doubt because audience response to their occasional forays into more robust territory—Savages, The Wild Party, Slaves of New York—has been less than enthusiastic. But while even Merchant-Ivory’s strongest admirers have detected something slightly airless about such latter-day offerings as Jefferson in Paris, there is no evidence that this tendency has stemmed from specifically financial pressure being brought to bear by Merchant.

It may be a sign of restlessness that in recent years Merchant has begun to branch out: into directing on his own account, and into producing films directed by people other than Ivory. As yet, he has not ranged too far afield. The other directors have mainly been members of the Merchant-Ivory team such as Connie Kaiser, associate producer on many of their productions, and regular actors in their films such as Simon Callow. Merchant’s own directorial efforts, clearly much influenced by Ivory, have aroused little excitement. The partnership with Ivory and Jhabvala seems likely to remain his chief commitment; understandably so, providing as it does the ideal vehicle to fulfill his lifelong passion “to make movies, and movies of substance and quality.” At the end of the ’90s, his most noteworthy production, once again teamed with Ivory and Jhabvala, has been A Soldier’s Daughter Never Cries. This finely detailed character study of an unusual multicultural family consisting of a writer, his glamorous wife, and their two children, one of whom is adopted, depends on carefully modulated performances and excellent dialogue. Abjuring plot, in the tradition of Merchant/Ivory/Jhabvala classics such as Heat and Dust, the film offers a string of finely observed moments, the undramatic crises and recognitions that reveal the inner workings of the two children, one of whom is adopted, and their two parents. The critical, if not box office success of the film demonstrates that Merchant continues to offer meaningful high-culture alternatives to the limited formulas, conventions, and erotic appeals of Hollywood cinema.

—Philip Kemp, updated by R. Barton Palmer
MESSMER, Otto

Films as Animator (selected list):

1915 Motor Mat (unreleased); The Travels of Teddy 1916 Felix Gets It Wrong; Felix on the Job
1917 Them Were the Happy Days
1919 Feline Follies; Musical Mews
1922 Felix Saves the Day; Felix at the Fair; Felix Makes Good; Felix All at Sea; Felix in Love; Felix in the Swim; Felix Finds a Way; Felix Gets Revenge; Felix Wakes Up; Felix Minds the Kid; Felix Turns the Tide; Felix on the Trail; Felix Lends a Hand; Felix Gets Left; Felix in the Bone Age
1923 Felix the Ghost Breaker; Felix Wins Out; Felix Tries for Treasure; Felix Revolts; Felix Calms His Conscience; Felix the Globe Trotter; Felix Gets Broadcasted; Felix Strikes It Rich; Felix in Hollywood; Felix in Fairyland; Felix Laughs Last; Felix Fills a Shortage; Felix the Goat Getter; Felix Goes A-Hunting
1924 Felix Loses Out; Felix Hits the Hippo; Felix Crosses the Crooks; Felix Tries to Rest; Felix Punches the Pole; Felix Puts It Over; Felix, Friend in Need; Felix Baffled By Banjos; Felix All Balled Up; Felix Goes West; Felix Finds Out; Felix Brings Home the Bacon; Felix Finishes First; Felix Goes Hungry; Felix Out of Luck; Felix Gets the Can; Felix Dopes It Out
1925 Felix Wins and Loses; Felix All Puzzled; Felix Follows the Swallows; Felix Rests in Peace; Felix the Cat Buys into Business; Felix the Cat Trips Through Toyland; Felix Trips with Time; Felix the Cat on the Farm; Felix the Cat on the Job; Felix the Cat in the Cold; Felix the Cat in Eats Are West; Felix the Cat Tries the Trades; Felix the Cat in At the Rainbows End; Felix the Cat Kept Walking
1926 Felix the Cat Spots the Spooks; Felix the Cat Flirts with Fate; Felix the Cat in Blunderland; Felix Fans the Flames; Felix the Cat Laughs It Off; Felix the Cat Weathers the Weather; Felix the Cat Uses His Head; Felix the Cat Misses the Cue; Felix the Cat Braves the Briny; Felix the Cat in A Tale of Two Kitties; Felix Scoots through Scotland; Felix the Cat Rings the Ringer; Felix the Cat in School Daze; Felix the Cat Seeks Solitude; Felix the Cat Misses His Swiss; Felix the Cat in Gym Gems; Felix the Cat in Two Lips Time; Felix the Cat in Scrambled Eggs; Felix the Cat Shatters the Sheik; Felix the Cat Hunts the Hunter; Felix the Cat in Land O’Fancy; Felix the Cat Busts a Bubble; Felix the Cat in Reverse English; Felix the Cat Trumps the Ace; Felix the Cat Collars the Button; Felix the Cat in Zoo Logic
1927 Felix the Cat Dines and Pines; Felix the Cat in Pedigreedy; Felix the Cat in Icy Eyes; Felix the Cat in Stars and Stripes; Felix the Cat Sees ‘Em in Season; Felix the Cat in Barn Yarns; Felix the Cat in Germ Mania; Felix the Cat in Sax Appeal; Felix the Cat in Eye Jinks; Felix the Cat as Romeeow; Felix the Cat Ducks His Duty; Felix the Cat in Dough-Nutty; Felix the Cat in ‘Loco’ Motive; Felix the Cat in Art for Hearts Sake; Felix the Cat in the Travel-Hog; Felix the Cat, Jack of All Trades; Felix the Cat in The Non-Stop Fright; Felix the Cat in Wise Gaze; Felix the Cat in Film Flam Films; Felix the Cat Switches Witches; Felix the Cat in No Fuelin’; Felix the Cat in Daze and Knights; Felix the Cat in Uncle Tom’s Crabbin’; Felix the Cat in Whys and Otherwhys; Felix the Cat Hits the Deck; Felix the Cat Behind in Front
1928 Felix the Cat in the Smoke Scream; Felix the Cat in Draggin’ the Dragon; Felix the Cat in the Oily Bird; Felix the Cat in Ohm Sweet Ohm; Felix the Cat in Japanicky; Felix the Cat in Polly-tics; Felix the Cat in Comicalamities; Felix the Cat in Sure-Locked Homes; Felix the Cat in Exkimoitve; Felix the Cat in Arabianitics; Felix the Cat in In and Out-Laws; Felix the Cat in Outdoor Indore; Felix the Cat in Futurity; Felix the Cat in Astronomomeow; Felix the Cat in Jungle Bungles; Felix the Cat in the Last Life
1930 Felix the Cat in False Vases; Felix the Cat Woos Whoopee; Felix the Cat in April Maze; Felix the Cat in Oceanamics; Felix the Cat in Skulls and Sculls; Felix the Cat in Forty Winks; Felix the Cat in Tee-Time; Hootchy Kootchy Parlais Vous; Felix in Love
1936 Felix the Cat and the Goose That Laid the Golden Egg; Neptune Nonsense; Bold King Cole

Publications

By MESSMER: article—

Segnocinema (Vicenza), vol. 5, no. 18, May 1985.

On MESSMER: book—

On MESSMER: articles—

Millimeter (New York), vol. 4, no. 9, September 1976.

Obituary in Film Français (Paris), 11 November 1983.

Tom, Patricia Vettel, “‘Felix the Cat as Modern Trickster,’” in American Art, Spring 1996.

On MESSMER: film—

* * *

Animation’s history, is peopled by innumerable men and women whose labors have been effaced by prominently displayed names, like Walt Disney or Leon Schlesinger, producers who may have contributed in varying degrees to the overall direction and management of cartoons, but who in fact usually had little to do with the actual work of animation. Such is the case with animation’s first international “star,” Felix the Cat, for whom the credit was stolen by the producer and cartoonist Pat Sullivan from the famous feline’s director and real progenitor, Otto Messmer. Sullivan also reaped most of the profits and neglected to leave Messmer the rights to the character in his will, as promised before he died. Now, due to the efforts of film scholars, Messmer is recognized as one of the most talented screen cartoonists of the silent era, acclaimed especially for his inventive and influential gags, his expressive handling of form, and his contribution to the overall craft of character animation.

Born and bred in New Jersey from immigrant German-Catholic stock, Messmer was fascinated from an early age by films, then only an evolving art form, and drawn cartoons. He took an art correspondence course, attended the Thomas School of Art in New York City, and published several cartoons in the New York World's Sunday supplement Fun that are of note for their dynamic sense of movement and use of visualized puns, a staple element of the filmic cartoon. After viewing the works of Winsor McCay, Emile Cohl, and other early animators, Messmer was inspired to produce his own film, Motor Mat (c. 1915, never released) on a homemade animation drawing board built for him by his father. Motor Mat, a motoring fanatic, shared with the later Felix a convenient aptitude for transforming objects around him, like smoke rings into tires. Unaware of either Bray’s cel system or Barre’s peg system, Messmer made this test film on cumbersome cardboard and photographed it on hired equipment at the Universal studio. Hy Mayer, then a well-known cartoonist, offered Messmer work on The Travels of Teddy, an animated cartoon based on Teddy Roosevelt, and from this experience he learned the shortcuts and techniques for production. He was next hired by Sullivan to work in his small animation studio, and collaborated on two series, one based on Sullivan’s Sammy Johnson strip, and one based on Charlie Chaplin. Messmer gradually assumed more responsibility for production with Sullivan concentrating on the financial management and promotional part of the business. Relations were briefly suspended for three years while Messmer served on the French Front and Sullivan served time in gaol for the rape of a minor. Reunited with Sullivan in 1919, Messmer designed Feline Follies for Paramount Screen Magazine, starring a Felix prototype called Mater Tom, and from that, spurred by increasing popularity, evolved Felix, named so in the third film after the suggestion of Mr. King of Paramount, deriving its etymological roots from “feline” and “felicity,” equalling “good luck cat.” Felix’s reputation for good luck inspired the apocryphal story that a stuffed effigy of him accompanied Lindbergh on his solo Atlantic flight. He did, however, bring Messmer and Sullivan a substantial portion of luck until his demise with the advent of sound films in the late 1920s.

As the series’ popularity grew, a litter of false felines and pretenders of other species populated the cartoon world, but only the Fleischer’s Out of the Inkwell series and Paul Terry’s Aesop’s Fables could compete in popularity. Despite Sullivan’s self-promotion in the press, many in the animation industry knew that Messmer was the real pen behind the camera. Just after the release of Steamboat Willie, Walt Disney offered him a job at his new studio, but Messmer, attached to his east coast roots, declined, mistakenly assuming that Felix would run forever.

The rejection bears a certain symbolic dimension; for while Disney’s works moved towards greater mimetic realism, through the use of various technologies—sound, technicolor, the multiplane camera—the silent, black-and-white, plainer Felix cartoons have an austere, almost abstract quality that make them in some ways more striking than Disney’s dated pyrotechnics. In its graphic simplicity, Messmer’s work could be usefully compared with Norman McLaren’s, in which the fluid rendering of movement rather than figurative verisimilitude is favored. Above all, Messmer’s true gift was for characterization. Felix’s gestures, expressions, his famous walk, and even his intertitled speech patterns, modelled on Messmer’s own, were distinctive and endearing. Unlike his creator, Felix led a far more exciting and adventurous life, his personality adapting subtly to suit the situation, be it falling in love, travelling through the Arctic, or Fairyland, or Time, playing the devoted father or the denizen of the speakeasy, or, like Messmer, fighting on the warfront. Felix’s plasticity, his ability to eschew the laws of physics and exploit to the fullest his cartoonal powers, had a profound effect on the medium which, with the exceptions of Cohl and McCay, had hitherto tended to cling to the raft of realism and model itself on the slapstick of live-action cinema, rather than realizing its own potential for excess, for making the impossible corporeal.

After Sullivan died, Messmer remained on the east coast, illustrating the Felix comics, occasionally contributing to animated cartoons for Famous Studios, and doing the animation for the well-known electric billboards on Times Square which eminently suited his talent for working with black-and-white silhouettes, which he also put to use for the first animated commercials on television for Botany Mills Ties. Although an obscure figure until scholars like Crafton, Canemaker, and Cohen uncovered material about him in the late 1970s and 1980s, Messmer died at the age of 91 with his reputation rightly restored. Felix, of course lived on, in several new films, and on a thousand t-shirts and coffee mugs.

—Leslie Felperin Sharman

MESSTER, Oskar

Producer and Director. Nationality: German. Born: Oskar Eduard Messter in Berlin, 22 November 1866. Family: Married Antonie (Messter). Career: Worked in his father’s optical plant, later a director; 1896—formed film company, and produced many short films from 1897, and a weekly newsreel (Messter-Woche) from 1914; over the years developed various motion picture processes and appliances (Germans claim he invented the Maltese Cross—a mechanism to allow individual frames to be quickly projected); also credited with the close-up as early as 1897; manufactured film equipment; 1917—his company absorbed by UFA. Died: In Leitenbauerhof, 6 December 1943.
Films as Producer:

1897? Die Sone
1897 Rapunzel; Gestärtes Rendez-vous (+ d)
1898 Gemütlich beim Kaffee (+ d)
1900 Rückkehr der Truppen von der Frühlingsparade (+ d)
1902 Salome (+ d)
1903 Auf der Radrennbahn (+ d)
1906 Apachentanz (Porten); Fra Diavolo
1907 Lohengrin; Meissner Porzellan (Porten)
1908 Desdenona; Tief in Böhmerwald; Wiegenlied (Porten)
1909 Andreas Hofer (Biebrach); Das Liebesglück einer Blinden (The Love of the Blind Girl) (Biebrach)
1910 Verkannt (+ d); Der Kinderarzt (Stark)
1911 Mütter, verzagen nicht! (Gärtner); Adressatin verstorben (Stark); Die Blinde (Stark); Der Eindringling (Stark); Das gefährliche Alter (Stark); Die Magd (Stark); Ein Schwere Opfer (Stark); Zwei Frauen (Stark); Zu spät (Froelich)
1911 Die Rache ist mein; Des Pfarrers Töchterlein (Biebrach); Richard Wagner (Froelich); Feenhände (Stark); Gefangene Seelen (Stark); Der Kuss des Fürsten (Stark); Die Nacht des Grauens (Stark); Schatten des Meeres (Stark)
1913 Ungarische Rhapsodie (Hungarian Rhapsody) (Biebrach); Evita (Stark); Gräfin Küchenfee (Biebrach); Die grosse Sünderin (Biebrach); Heroismus einer Französin (Biebrach); Schuldig (Stark); Sünderin (Biebrach); Problematische Naturen (Stark); Zwei Frauen (Stark); Täta der Königin (Wiene); Der Mann im Spiegel (Froelich)
1914 Abseits vom Glück (Biebrach); Alexandra (Biebrach); Das Ende vom Lied (Biebrach); Norlandrose (Biebrach); Tirol in Waffen (Biebrach) (Froelich)
1915 Frau Eva (Arme Eva) (Wiene); Auf der Aihn da gibt’s ka Sünd (Biebrach); Claudi vom Geisterhof (Biebrach); Der Schirm mit dem Schwan (Froelich); Ein Euberfall in Feindesland (Biebrach)
1916 Die Ehe der Luise Rohrbach (Biebrach); Der Liebesbrief der Königin (Wiene); Der Mann im Spiegel (Wiene); Problematische Naturen (Oberländer); Der Sekretär der Königin (Wiene); Das Wandernde Licht (Wiene)
1917 Die Dame, der Teufel, und die Probiermamsell (Biebrach); Die Faust des Riesen (Biebrach) (Biebrach); Die Nacht des (Biebrach) (Biebrach)
1918 Die blaue Laterne (Biebrach); Maskenfest der Liebe (Biebrach); Odysseus’ Heimkehr (Biebrach); Der Mann mit den sieben Masken (Larsen)
1919 Die rollende Kugel (Biebrach)
1920 Anna Bolyn (Deception) (Lubitsch); Die goldene Krone (Halm); Die Tarantel (Biebrach)
1921 Der Stier von Olivera (Buchowetzki)
1923 Tatjana (Dineson)
1924 Gehetzte Menschen (Schönfelder)

Publications

By MESSTER: book—

Mein Weg mit dem Film, Berlin, 1936.

On MESSTER: book—

On MESSTER: article—

Baer, Volker, “Ein Mann der ersten Stunde,” in Film-Dienst (Cologne), 20 December 1994.

Remembered today both as the inventor of the Maltese Cross (a small device still in use which allows film to move intermittently through a projector) and as the pioneering patriarch of German cinema, Oskar Messter exerted more influence on the early German film industry than any other individual before the First World War. Although the hundreds of films he produced, directed, scripted, shot, cast, and exhibited had little artistic impact on either his contemporaries or Expressionist successors, Messter’s constant attempts at innovation and experimentation in film manufacture, production, and exhibition refined the medium itself and enabled Germany to develop a full-fledged film industry and studio system.

From the earliest days in his father’s optical plant and throughout his career, Messter demonstrated a fascination and keen facility for the technical processes of motion pictures. His constant invention, refinement, and subsequent marketing of new projection systems, film stocks, movie cameras, and processors laid the foundation for the German film equipment industry, and made both film production and exhibition more practical.

Not content merely to design and manufacture motion picture apparatus, Messter began to produce and show his own short films almost as quickly as the technology was available to him. The earliest Messter films varied greatly in content, but a typical program consisted of a series of short actualities, sports footage, street scenes, comic sketches, cabaret acts, and an occasional squib of animation. The quality of these turn-of-the-century works was primitive, though apparently an improvement on the technically crude, often pornographic, German films being exhibited at tent shows and nickleodeons. By building his own studio (the first in Germany) and becoming the first filmmaker ever to use artificial lighting, Messter was able to produce a remarkable number and variety of films while the medium itself was still in its infancy. His actuality and documentary pictures were demanded internationally and eventually were consolidated into a newsreel program, Messter-Week, that continued in production for many years (although government interests were so closely served that often staged propaganda pieces replaced authentic footage). In the area of entertainment films, Messter tended to produce rather wooden costume dramas and static adaptations of literary, theatrical, and historical works. Many of Germany’s leading stage talents appeared in these productions at some point, but under Messter none reached the artistic levels they realized in the employ of his rival company, Paul Davidson’s Projection-A.G. Union. Messter’s dramas, comedies, thrillers, and serials were popular in their day, but none matched the achievement of Davidson’s productions with Max...
Reinhardt, Ernst Lubitsch, and other talents who would rise to international fame in the 1920s.

But, although his films never developed a memorable style or artistic power, Messter’s efforts in the film world remained noteworthy and popular because of his penchant for innovation and experimentation. Often his technical experiments yielded film techniques that benefited the scientific community, if not the movie-going public. His demonstrations of slow motion, microscopic, and time lapse photography, for example, offered the world new ways of seeing, while they also were applied to the production of diverting little “trick films.” Later in his career, Messter was called upon to make much more serious use of his film skills as he developed a number of technical military applications for the motion picture in the service of the German armed services. (Messter’s allegiance to the fatherland continued into the Nazi period—he is ideological association no doubt accounts for his being left behind by Germany’s artistic avant garde, most of whom dissociated themselves from the government during both World Wars.)

Other technical innovations by Messter led to more popular successes in his film production. Most notably, his attempts to design a reliable sound system for motion pictures created interest in his company’s work and spurred on sound experimenters abroad. Using his crudely synchronized “biophon” system, Messter produced operettas, short films starring music-hall performers, and dramatic pieces. By 1904 (after his popular demonstration of English language talkies at the St. Louis World’s Fair), his company offered 120 sound films, and by 1913, some 500 theaters were equipped with Biophon. The system ultimately proved inadequate, but Messter’s films whetted the public’s appetite for sound. His later experiments with sound-on-disc talkies proved less innovative and became obsolete with the invention of sound-on-film systems. Other Messter experiments also sought color and three-dimensional processes film. But patents were not forthcoming, and such color and dimensional films as he was able to produce remained nothing more than minor novelties.

However, not all of Messter’s contributions to the film industry were purely technical. Just as he was among the earliest producers of newsreels, scientific films, and sound films, Messter also began producing longer narratives and eventually feature-length movies before such became standard fare for the film industry. Even more importantly, Messter the studio executive realized the value of the movie star as early as anyone in the industry. With the debut of his film The Love of the Blind Girl, the unknown “Messter Girl” in the title role became enormously popular among moviegoers. Messter recognized the mass appeal that the girl, Henny Porten, possessed and so presented her name and face to the public with a large publicity campaign. Because Henny Porten rose to fame at the same time as Denmark’s Asta Nielsen and America’s Florence Lawrence, Messter must be given credit for helping to invent the star system as we know it today.

Finally, other attempts by Messter to utilize film—such as his circa 1897 home sales catalogue of movies and equipment, and his production of “conductor films” (photographing noted maestros so that orchestras could later be led by a filmed baton)—which stand today as mere cinematic curios, added to the overall strength of the pioneering producer’s work. Certainly no single film from his multitude of productions stands out for its historic or artistic achievement, and in fact most Messter films, even though they represent the best of the early German cinema, pale in comparison to the lively works of other primitive era filmmakers such as Lumière, Méliès, Edison, or Porter. But the cumulative effect of Messter’s films was to create and enliven both a film audience and a filmmaking community in Germany, while the contribution of technical achievement was to help refine the medium itself.

—Dan Streible

METTY, Russell

Cinematographer. Nationality: American. Born: Los Angeles, California, in 1906. Career: 1925—worked in camera department of Paramount Studios; 1929—joined RKO, where became Director of Photography. Television work during the 1970s includes episodes of The Waltons, Columbo, and Rich Man, Poor Man. Award: Academy Award for Spartacus, 1960. Died: In 1978.

Films as Cinematographer:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>West of the Pecos</td>
<td>Rosen</td>
<td>(Rosen)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>Night Waitress</td>
<td>Landers</td>
<td>(Landers)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>They Wanted to Marry</td>
<td>Landers</td>
<td>(Landers); Behind the Headlines (Rosen); Edgar and Goliath (Goodwins); Forty Naughty Girls (Cline); You Can’t Beat Love (Cabanne); Annapolis Salute (Salute to Romance) (Cabanne)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>The Dummy Owner</td>
<td>Yarborough</td>
<td>(Yarborough); Ears of Experience (Goodwins); Bringing Up Baby (Hawks); Mr. Doodle Kicks Off (Goodwins); Annabel Takes a Tour (Landers); Stage Fright (Roberts); The Affairs of Annabel (Stoloff); Next Time I Marry (Kanin); The Sunset Selander (Selander)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>The Great Man Votes</td>
<td>Kanin</td>
<td>(Kanin); The Girl and the Gambler (Landers); The Spellbinder (Hively); Three Sons (Hively); That’s Right, You’re Wrong (Butler); Everything’s on Ice (Kenton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>Scrappily Married</td>
<td>Ripley</td>
<td>(Ripley); Irene (Wilcox); Curtain Call (Woodruff); Dance, Girl, Dance (Arzner); No, No, Nanette (Wilcox); Sink By the Census (D’Arcy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>A Girl, a Guy and a Gob</td>
<td>Wallace</td>
<td>(Wallace); Sunny (Wilcox); Weekend for Three (Reis); Four Jacks and a Jill (Hively)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1942</td>
<td>Joan of Paris</td>
<td>Stevenson</td>
<td>(Stevenson); Dear! Deer! (Holmes); Army Surgeon (Sutherland); The Falcon’s Brother (Logan); The Big Street (Reis); Mexican Spitfire Sees a Ghost (Goodwins); Framing Father (Roberts)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>Hitler’s Children</td>
<td>Dmytryk</td>
<td>(Dmytryk); Double Up (Holmes); Forever and a Day (Clair); Goulding, Hardwicke, Lloyd, Saville, Stephenson, and Wilcox; Behind the Rising Sun (Dmytryk); Tender Comrade (Dmytryk); Around the World (Dwan); Not on My Account (Roberts); The Sky’s the Limit (E. Griffith)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1944</td>
<td>Seven Days Ashore</td>
<td>Auer</td>
<td>(Auer); Music in Manhattan (Auer); Triple Trouble (D’Arcy); The Master Race (Bibberman); It’s in the Bag (Wallace)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1945</td>
<td>Betrayal from the East</td>
<td>Berke</td>
<td>(Berke); The Story of GI Joe (Wellman); Pardon My Past (Fenton); Breakfast in Hollywood (The Madhatter) (Schuster)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1946</td>
<td>The Stranger</td>
<td>Welles</td>
<td>(Welles); The Perfect Marriage (Allen); The Private Affairs of Bel Ami (Lewin); Whistle Stop (Moguy)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
1947 Ivy (Wood); Ride the Pink Horse (Montgomery); A Woman’s Vengeance (Zoltan Korda); Arch of Triumph (Milestone)

1948 All My Sons (Reis); Mr. Peabody and the Mermaid (Pichel); Kiss the Blood Off My Hands (Blood on My Hands) (Foster); You Gotta Stay Happy (Potter)

1949 The Lady Gambles (Gordon); Bagdad (Lamont); Curtain Call at Cactus Creek (Lamont); We Were Strangers (Huston)

1950 Buccaneer’s Girl (de Cordova); Sierra (Green); Peggy (de Cordova); The Desert Hawk (de Cordova); Wyoming Mail (Le Borg); Katie Did It (de Cordova)

1951 Uptown (Hall); Little Eygpt (Chicago Masquerade) (de Cordova); The Treasure of Lost Canyon (Tetzlaff); The Golden Horde (Sherman); The Raging Tide (Sherman); Flame of Araby (Lamont)

1952 Scarlet Angel (Salkow); The World in His Arms (Walsh); Against All Flags (Sherman); Because of You (Pevney); Yankee Buccaneer (de Cordova)

1953 The Bond between Us (Cowen); Seminole (Boetticher); It Happens Every Thursday (Pevney); The Man from the Alamo (Boetticher); Take Me to Town (Sirk); Tumbleweed (Juran)

1954 Magnificent Obsession (Sirk); Naked Alibi (Hopper); Four Guns to the Border (Carlson); Sign of the Pagan (Sirk)

1955 Crashout (Foster); Man without a Star (King Vidor); Cult of the Cobra (Lyon); There’s Always Tomorrow (Sirk); All That Heaven Allows (Sirk); The Man from Bitteridge (Arnold); Miracle in the Rain (Mate)

1956 Congo Crossing; Written on the Wind (Sirk)

1957 Battle Hymn (Sirk); Mr. Cory (Edwards); Man Afraid (Keller); The Midnight Story (Appointment with a Shadow) (Pevney); The Female Animal (Keller)

1958 Touch of Evil (Welles); The Thing That Couldn’t Die (Cohen); A Time to Love and a Time to Die (Sirk); Step Down to Terror (The Silent Stranger) (Keller); Monster on the Campus (Arnold)

1959 Imitation of Life (Sirk); This Earth Is Mine (King) (co); Platinum High School (Rich, Young and Deadly) (Haas)

1960 Portrait in Black (Gordon); Spartacus (Kubrick); Midnight Lace (Miller)

1961 The Misfits (Huston); Flower Drum Song (Koster); By Love Possessed (Sturges)

1962 If a Man Answers (Levin); The Interns (Swift); That Touch of Mink (Mann)

1963 The Thrill of It All (Jewison); Tammy and the Doctor (Keller); Captain Newman (Miller)

1964 I’d Rather Be Rich (Smight)

1965 The Warlord (Schaffner); The Art of Love (Jewinson); Bus Riley’s Back in Town (Hart); Madam X (Rich)

1966 Texas across the River (Gordon)

1967 Thoroughly Modern Millie (Hill); The Secret War of Harry Frigg (Smight); Counterpoint (Nelson); Rough Night in Jericho (Laven)

1968 The Pink Jungle (Delbert Mann); Madigan (Siegel)

1969 Eye of the Cat (Rich) (co); Change of Habit (Graham)

1970 How Do I Love Thee? (Gordon); Tribes (The Soldier Who Declared Peace) (Sargent—for TV)

1971 The Omega Man (Sagal)

1972 Ben (Karlson); Cancel My Reservation (Bogart)

1974 That’s Entertainment! (Haley) (co)

Publications

On METTY: articles—

Film Comment (New York), vol. 8, no.2, Summer 1972.
Focus on Film (London), Special Cinematography Issue, no. 13, 1973.
Film Dope (London), no. 42, October 1989 + filmo.

* * *

Despite Russell Metty’s outstanding black-and-white photography for films like The Stranger, Ivy, Touch of Evil, and The Misfits, it is with the glistening color of his work for Douglas Sirk at Universal-International that his name remains principally identified. When he and Sirk teamed up for the first time to make Take Me to Town, it was the fruit of a determined effort on Sirk’s part to get him: “He was very expensive, and very much in demand, but I finally succeeded. We always agreed about everything: we had just the same way of seeing things, and we had a great time working together.” Equally impressed was Charlton Heston, who later described Metty as “unquestionably one of the great cameramen. He is nearly the only one of them who is also fast. Most of the time you hear things like ‘Do you want it fast, or do you want it good?’ With Russ you got both.” To a relatively humble outfit like Universal, Metty was an especially valuable asset, since the box-office potential of their carefully budgeted little pictures usually owed more to their visual qualities than to their plots, and perhaps even their stars. Sirk himself said that he felt color “very essential to this type of picture to give it the necessary warmth and glow and commercially, to add box-office power to their rather second-rate star value.”

Ironically, prior to his arrival at Universal during the mid-forties, Metty’s sole contact with Technicolor seems to have consisted of the “Alice Blue Gown” sequence in Irene; but he was soon to be set to work on a sizable proportion of the stream of inexpensive action and adventure films in Technicolor with which the studio was attempting, by the early fifties, to free itself of its financial dependence upon its Abbott & Costello, Ma and Pa Kettle, and Francis the Mule comedies. By the end of the decade, when permitted the sort of resources lavished upon the $12,000,000 Spartacus (Universal’s most expensive picture to date), Metty’s Technirama photography had little difficulty in collecting the 1960 Academy Award for color photography.

But his work in color was only half the story. Metty would take whatever Universal pushed his way, moving swiftly from genre to genre, from high to low budgets, from color to black and white, from widescreen to standard, and back again. For example, 1958 saw Metty’s name on five Universal releases. In addition to the latest collaboration with Sirk (A Time to Love and a Time to Die), in CinemaScope and Eastmancolor, there were four black-and-white programmers intended for double bills: Step Down to Terror, which was a quickie remake of Shadow of a Doubt; The Thing That Couldn’t Die, and Monster on the Campus, titles that speak for themselves; and Touch of Evil. During his European exile, Orson Welles had sorely missed the superior facilities and technicians which only Hollywood could provide, and reunited with Metty he marked the occasion by opening Touch of Evil with one of the most spectacular crane shots ever filmed (copied in Absolute Beginners and various pop videos).

The film abounds in classic film noir set pieces, but equally impressive are less showy moments, such as the glacial deep-focus of the brief scene in the hall of records, or the dusty, sun-bleached exteriors for which Venice, California, masqueraded as the dismal little Mexican border town of Los Robles. During a later location shoot, in Nevada for The Misfits (for which Metzy had been loaned to United Artists), John Huston must have been grateful indeed for Metzy’s level-headed professionalism as Huston grappled with that film’s painful gestation.

During the 1960s Metzy’s assignments continued to veer between cheerful trivia like Tammy and the Doctor and genuine challenges like The Warlord, but his behavior during the making of Madigan suggests that he no longer felt the same involvement in his work; Don Siegel was to recall that he “did not seem particularly interested in the movie” and had needed prodding to perform reluctantly as basic a task as shining additional light through a window on which the blind had just been raised. Logically enough he was now to become increasingly busy with Universal TV series such as Columbo (where his directors included a fledgling Steven Spielberg), still a valuable asset to his employers, no doubt, but probably more for his speed than for his imagination.

—Richard Chatten

METZNER, Ernö

Art Director and Director. Nationality: Hungarian. Born: 25 February 1892. Education: Attended the Academy of Fine Arts, Budapest. Family: Married the actress Grace Chiang. Career: Art director on films in Germany from 1920: first film as art director, Sumurun; 1927–29—directed and designed several films; 1933—left Germany with the rise of the Nazis, and worked in the United Kingdom and the United States. Died: In 1953.

Films as Art Director:

1920 Sumurun (One Arabian Night) (Lubitsch)
1921 Das Weib des Pharao (The Loves of Pharaoh) (Lubitsch)
1921–23 Fridericus Rex (von Cserépy—4 parts)
1922 Fra Diavolo (Lange); Don Juan (Heine and Land); Salome (Wiene) (+ co-d)
1923 Alt-Heidelberg (Behrendt); I.N.R.I. (Wiene)
1924 Arabella (Grüne); Ein Sommernachtstraum (A Midsummer Night’s Dream) (Neumann)
1926 Geheimnisse einer Seele (Secrets of a Soul) (Pabst)
1927 Man steigt nach (+ d + co-sc)
1928 Überfall (Accident) (+ d, ph); Hotel Geheimnisse (Feger); Mikosch rückt ein (Randolf); Freie Fahrt (+ d); Dein Schicksal (Lohnmann); In Angst war das Wort (+ d)
1929 Das Tagebuch einer Verlorenen (Diary of a Lost Girl) (Pabst); Die weisse Hölle von Piz Palü (The White Hell of Piz Palü) (Pabst and Fanck)
1930 Westfront 1918 (Comrades of 1918) (Pabst); Zwei Kravatten (Bach-Weichert); Die Firma heiratet (Wilhelm); Fra Diavolo (Bonnard)
1931 Kameradschaft (Comradeship) (Pabst); Eine Nacht im Grandhotel (Neufeld); Der unbekannte Gast (Emo)
1932 L’Atlantide (Die Herrin von Atlantis) (Pabst); Ein bisschen Liebe für dich (Neufeld); Skandal in der Parkstrasse (Wenzler); Zigeuner der Nacht (Schwarz)
1933 Das Meer ruft (Hinrich); Der Läufer von Marathon (The Marathon Runner) (Dupont)
1934 Du haut en bas (Pabst); Princess Charming (Elvey); Chu-Chin-Chow (Forde)
1935 The Tunnel (Elvey); The Robber Symphony (Fehér)
1936 Seven Sinners (de Courville); Strangers on Honeymoon (de Courville)
1937 Take My Tip (Mason)
1944 It Happened Tomorrow (Clair)
1947 The Macomber Affair (Z. Korda)

Other Films:

1921 Stier von Olivera (Buchowetzki) (costumes); Fiesco (Die Verschwörung zu Genua) (Leni) (costumes)
1922 Sein ist das Gericht (Lange) (costumes)
1923 Schlagende Wetter (Gruné) (costumes)
1925 Der Leibgardist (Der Gardeoffizier) (Wiene) (costumes)
1929 Achtung! Liebe-Lebensgefährt! (d—revised sound version, Rivalen im Weltrrekord, 1930)
1930 Revolte im Erziehungshaus (co-d)

Publications

By METZNER: articles—

On METZNER: articles—

Film Dope (Nottingham), October 1989.

* * *

The contribution of Hungary to world cinema has been considerable—writers, actors, cameramen, and critics. Ernö Metzner is a Hungarian whose best work was done outside his homeland. In Germany, from 1920 to his enforced exile in 1933, he achieved distinction as a film designer as well as a director of films of great originality, experimental in spirit and strongly imbued with social comment.

He worked for Lubitsch on the spectacular Sumurun and designed some of the costumes for Das Weib des Pharao. For von Cserépy’s mammoth four-part epic Fridericus Rex, he was codesigner. While he had wide experience with the films of Paul Leni, Karl Grune, Robert Milhaud, Darius

Films as Composer:

1923  L’Inhumaine (L’Herbier)
1929  La Petite Lillé (Cavalcanti)
1933  Hallo Everybody (Richter)
1934  Madame Bovary ( Renoir); L’Hippocampe (Painlevé); Tartarin de Tarascon (Bernard)
1935  Voix d’enfants (Reynaud)
1936  The Beloved Vagabond (Bernhardt)
1937  Vom Blitz zum Fernsehbild (La Conquête du ciel) (Richter); La Citadelle du silence (L’Herbier); Mollenard (Capitaine Corsaire) (Siodmak)
1938  La Tragédie impériale (L’Herbier)
1939  Les Otages (Bernard); The Islanders (Harvey); L’Espoir (Sierra de Teruel) (Malraux); Cavalcade d’amour (Bernard) (co); Gulf Stream (Alexeiff)
1946  The Private Affairs of Bel-Ami (Lewin); ‘‘Ruth, Roses and Revolver’’ ep. of Dreams That Money Can Buy (Richter)
1949  Paul Gauguin (Resnais)
1950  La Vie commence demain (Védrès)
1954  Ils étaient tous des volontaires (Villiers); Un Monde perdu (Lorenzi—for TV) (co)
1959  Rentrée des classes (Rozier)

Wiene, Hans Behrendt, and Friedrich Feher, it was with G.W. Pabst that he realised his best work. He designed the fantastic and complex settings for Geheimnisse einer Seele, a psychoanalytical drama supervised by Dr. Hans Sachs, a colleague of Freud. The distorted images of mental breakdown required a special type of setting specially related to camera effects.

From 1927 to 1929, he took up directing, which also included design and camerawork. The most famous of the films from this period was Uberfall, the adventures of a man who finds a gold coin in the street and is pursued by thugs who beat him up. This was virtuoso filming, using all the creative devices of the camera lens, including distortion effects. The film became a cause célèbre when the German censor banned it on the grounds of brutality, a decision that seemed rather ridiculous even in its time. He also made Freie Fahrt for the Social Democratic Party, a film very much influenced by the Russian films then popular in Berlin. In these films he featured his wife, Grace Chiang, and the famous still photographer Hans Casparius.

Again he worked for Pabst on Das Tagebuch einer Verlorenen which featured Louise Brooks and on Die weisse Hölle von Piz Palü in which Pabst shared direction with Dr. Arnold Fanck.

With the coming of the sound film and its inhibiting effect on the visuals and camera work, Metzner magnificently overcame these problems in three films for Pabst. In Westfront 1918 he designed for the moving camera in the war scenes, while in Kameradschaft, his studio construction of a mine was completely functional, allowing mobility of camera in a narrow space and achieving the most extreme realism in the visual action. The collapse of the mine tunnels during an explosion, the claustrophobic feeling of being trapped, the texture and tactile image of the mine guaranteed a unique involvement of the spectator. On the other hand, his design for Die Herrin von Atlantis embraced pure fantasy, and Metzner carefully selected material which would reinforce the illusion of an underground city in the desert. His sensitive awareness of the needs of the movie camera was remarkable, derived perhaps from his experience as a total filmmaker. His feeling for abstraction changed to accommodate the realism of his work for Pabst. He was to work on one more film for Pabst—Du haut en bas—when he was an exile in France, a refugee from the Nazi persecution of the Jews.

In England he worked on a series of minor films, but in 1935 he designed Friedrich Feher’s delightful fantasy The Robber Symphony. (He had worked with Feher previously in Berlin on Hotel Geheimnisse.) Visually The Robber Symphony was a delight to watch and provided Metzner with the opportunity for his imaginative skills. In the early 1940s, he found himself in Hollywood where he does not seem to have had much success, although he worked with both René Clair and Zoltan Korda.

—Liam O’Leary
1963 Peintres françaises d’aujourd’hui—Édouard Pignon (Bourniquel and Suzuki)
1969 Vézelay (Vitaly); Dieu a choisi Paris (Prouteau and Arthuys)
1973 Les Mariés de la Tour Eiffel (Averty—for TV)

Publications

By MILHAUD: books—

Notes sans musique (autobiography), Paris, 1949.

On MILHAUD: book—

On MILHAUD: articles—

Theatre Arts, vol. 31, no. 9, September 1947.
Film Dope (London), no. 43, January 1990.
Thiel, Wolfgang, in Film-Dienst (Cologne), 18 August 1992.

On MILHAUD: film—

A Visit with Darius Milhaud, 1955.

* * *

Darius Milhaud was one of the most prolific composers of the century, with a final tally of well over 400 opus numbers taking in every major musical form. It is not surprising that, along with everything else, he composed a good deal of film music. Indeed it would have been more surprising if he had not, given his lifelong love of the cinema. His first major success, the 1919 Surrealist ballet Le Boeuf sur le toit, was originally subtitled a Cinéma-symphonie, “suitable for an accompaniment to one of Charlie Chaplin’s films.”

Milhaud supplied music for some 25 films, starting out in the silent era with a score to accompany Marcel L’Herbier’s avant-garde melodrama L’Inhumaïne. The music is lost, but it is reputed to have matched the film’s abrupt, expressionist rhythm, climaxing—for a scene where the hero resurrects his dead love in a futuristic laboratory—in a bravura cadenza scored solely for percussion instruments.

Audacious and (at least in his younger years) impudently iconoclastic, Milhaud relished experimentation for its own sake. He was one of the first to co-opt cinema into opera; his Christophe Colombe uses a backdrop movie screen to convey the thoughts of his characters, or to extend the action “into an inner universe opening out from our own.” Even when his stance had become less outrageous, he retained a penchant for the avant-garde, and provided some suitably spiky music for the Man Ray section of Hans Richter’s self-consciously Surrealist Dreams That Money Can Buy.

Milhaud’s own musical idiom was nothing if not eclectic. He admired Debussy and Mussorgsky (and detested Wagner), but happily threw in elements of whatever took his fancy—jazz, Brazilian dance rhythms, the medieval troubadour songs of his native Provence. Rather than cast his music in a predetermined style, he preferred to adopt whatever forms and materials seemed appropriate to the given task. This adaptability, together with his fluency (he once defined inspiration as “the amount of ink in my pen”), should have made him an ideal film composer. But his relationship with the movie industry remained oddly uneasy. He believed that his “symphonic” style aroused mistrust among filmmakers, recalling in his memoirs a “rather inquisitorial visit” from Renoir while he was composing the score for Madame Bovary.

This, coupled with a perhaps inadvertent tendency to write down to movie audiences—he felt that film music must “remain modest... be extremely simple”—may explain why Milhaud’s film scores are mostly less distinguished than might be expected from a composer of his stature. He was at his best with straightforward, light-hearted subjects such as Raymond Bernard’s Cavalcade d’amour, a look at love during three periods of history. Each section of the film used a different composer: Milhaud chose the Middle Ages, and produced a fresh, transparent score, whose chamber-music textures breathed Mediterranean sunshine. He later adapted it into a suite for wind quintet, entitled La Cheminée du Roi René.

If offered a subject which genuinely engaged his emotions, Milhaud could still come up with film music that belied his reputation for elegant frivolity. André Malraux’s only film, the stark Spanish Civil War drama L’Espoir, has no music until the final reel, when a long procession of villagers winds down a mountainside carrying the bodies of dead Republican airmen. For this wordless sequence, Milhaud supplied an 11-minute passage of sustained and sombre nobility. This too was adapted for concert use, as the Cortège funèbre.

Although Milhaud spent much of his later life in America, he was loath to work in Hollywood, disliking the system of handing over the composer’s short score to professional orchestrators “who churn out on a commercial scale musical pathos à la Wagner or Tchaikovsky.” The one Hollywood assignment he did accept was The Private Affairs of Bel-Ami, scripted (after Maupassant) and directed by Albert Lewin—“a highly cultured man,” Milhaud noted, “and what is even rarer in those circles, genuinely modest.” Lewin allowed Milhaud not only to orchestrate his own music, but to conduct it and sit in on the mixing sessions. The result was a score that vividly evoked the Paris of the Belle Époque, but without the usual wash of romantic nostalgia. This, Milhaud’s strutting themes and jaunty brass writing suggested, was a society whose glittering facade concealed callousness and rampant ambition—a vision entirely in keeping with Maupassant’s cynical tale of a cad on the make.

—Philip Kemp
MILLER, Arthur C.

Cinematographer. Nationality: American. Born: Roslyn, New York, 8 July 1895. Career: Bit player and camera assistant from age 13; then assistant cameraman and laboratory technician for Edwin S. Porter (cameraman on The Perils of Pauline, 1914); 1915–25—worked almost exclusively with the director George Fitzmaurice; then later worked with 20th Century-Fox; 1951—retired; then President, American Society of Cinematographers. Awards: Academy Award for How Green Was My Valley, 1941; The Song of Bernadette, 1943; Anna and the King of Siam, 1946. Died: In 1970.

Films as Cinematographer for Fitzmaurice:

1915 At Bay
1916 New York; Fifth Avenue; Big Jim Garrity; Arms and the Woman; Romantic Journey
1917 Hunting of the Hawk; Recoil; The Iron Heart; The Mark of Cain; Sylvia of the Secret Service
1918 The Hillcrest Mystery; The Naulahka; A Japanese Nightingale; The Narrow Path
1919 Counterfeit; Common Clay; The Cry of the Weak; The Profiteers; Witness for the Defense; Avalanche; Our Better Selves; A Society Exile
1920 On with the Dance; The Right to Love; Idols of Clay
1921 Paving the Piper; Experience; Forever
1922 Kick In; The Man from Home; Three Live Ghosts; To Have and to Hold 1923 Bella Donna; The Cheat; The Eternal City
1924 Cytherea; Tarnish (co)
1925 A Thief in Paradise; His Supreme Moment

Other Films as Cinematographer:

1914 The Perils of Pauline (Gasnier—serial) (cam)
1917 Vengeance Is Mine (Crane); Stranded in Arcady (Crane)
1918 Convict 993 (Parke)
1920 His House in Order (H. Ford); Lady Rose’s Daughter (H. King)
1921 In Hollywood with Potash and Perlmutter (Green) (co)
1925 The Coming of Amos (Sloane)
1926 Made for Love (Sloane); The Clinging Vine (Sloane); Eve’s Leaves (Sloane); For Alimony Only (W. De Mille); The Volga Boatman (C. DeMille) (co)
1927 The Angel of Broadway (Weber); The Fighting Eagle (Crisp); Nobody’s Widow (Crisp); Vanity (Crisp)
1928 Annapolis (Cabanee); Blue Danube (Sloane); The Cop (Crisp); Hold ‘em Yale (Griffith); The Spieler (Garnett)
1929 Bellamy Trial (Bell); Big News (La Cava); The Flying Fool (Garnett); His First Command (La Cava) (co); Oh, Yeah! (Garnett); Sailor’s Holiday (Newmeyer); Strange Cargo (Glazer and Gregory)
1930 The Lady of Scandal (Franklin) (co); Officer O’Brian (Garnett); See American Thirst (Craft) (co); The Truth about Youth (Seiter); Behind the Make-Up (Bell); Father’s Son (Beaudine)
1931 Bad Company (Garnett)

Publications

By MILLER: books—

By MILLER: articles—

“‘Natural’ Lighting for Interior Sets,” in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), September 1966.

Arthur C. Miller prided himself on hard, brittle images, with deep shadows and brilliant highlights. To achieve these highlights, Miller went to great lengths, even to the point of oiling the furniture and other woodwork. He was more than a realist—he was a superrealist. His desire to achieve high glossiness and intense coloration resembles the approach of the painter Richard Estes.

Miller began working in films when the industry was in New York. Most of the films he made during the 1920s were done with George Fitmaurice, who allowed Miller some experimental leeway. The cinematographer filmed a scene in the early morning fog, for example, for Peter Ibbetson. He had a rather stormy confrontation, however, in making The Volga Boatman with Cecil B. DeMille; Miller expected a free hand in the lighting and photographing.

During the 1930s, Miller became Shirley Temple’s cameraman—in the way that William Daniels was Greta Garbo’s and Lee Garmes was Marlene Dietrich’s. As did these cameramen, he developed the most effective lighting for his star, backlighting Temple’s golden hair so as to create an aureole. Sometimes, he hit her in high key for one shot and lit the actor to whom she was talking in low key. In 1943 Miller used similar quasimystical effects in The Song of Bernadette.

While filming Temple in Wee Willie Winkie, Miller had a chance to work with the man who was to become his favorite director, John Ford. The cameraman found a director who was highly professional at his job and did not bother Miller in his: Ford left the details of cinematography up to the cameraman. In 1941 Miller and Ford joined forces on Tobacco Road and How Green Was My Valley. Miller never did a western with Ford; however, his photography for Wellman’s The Ox-Bow Incident is interesting because it was a western that was filmed entirely in the studio. The lighting gives the impression of its taking place in the course of one day—from sunset to sunrise.

—Rodney Farnsworth

MILLER, Seton I.

Writer and Producer. Nationality: American. Born: Chehalis, Washington, 2 May 1902. Education: Attended Yale University, New Haven, Connecticut, graduated. Family: Married 1) Bonita-Jessie Nichols, 1927; children: one son and one daughter; 2) Ann Marie White, 1944; children: one daughter. Career: 1926—technical adviser and actor, MGM; 1927—first film as writer, Paid to Love, first of several films for Howard Hawks; 1945—first film as producer, Ministry of Fear. Award: Academy Award for Here Comes Mr. Jordan, 1941. Died: 29 May 1974.

Films as Writer:

1927 Paid to Love (Hawks); Two Girls Wanted (Green); High School Hero (Butler); Wolf Fangs (Seiler)
1928 A Girl in Every Port (Hawks); Fazil (Hawks); The Cowboy Kid (Carruth); The Girl-Shy Cowboy (Hough); The Air Circus (Hawks, Seiler, and Judels)
1929 The Far Call (Dwan)
1930 The Lone Star Ranger (Erickson and Van Buren); Harmony at Home (MacFadden); The Dawn Patrol (Hawks); Today (Nigh)
1931 The Criminal Code (Hawks)
1932 Scarface (Hawks); The Crowd Roars (Hawks); If I Had a Million (Cruze and others); The Last Mile (Bischoff)
1933 Eagle and the Hawk (Walker)
1934 Charlie Chan’s Courage (Hadden)
1935 G-Men (Keighley); Frisco Kid (Bacon); It Happened in New York (Crosland)
1936 The Leathernecks Have Landed (Bretherton); Bullets or Bal-lots (Keighley); Back in Circulation (Enright)
1938 The Adventures of Robin Hood (Keighley and Curtiz); Penitentiary (Brahm); Valley of the Giants (Keighley); The Dawn Patrol (Goulding)
1940 Castle on the Hudson (Litvak); The Sea Hawk (Curtiz)
1941 Here Comes Mr. Jordan (Hall); This Woman Is Mine (Lloyd)
1942 The Black Swan (H. King); My Gal Sal (Cummings)
1947 Singapore (Brahm)
1953 The Mississippi Gambler (Maté)
1954 The Shanghai Story (Lloyd); Bengal Brigade (Benedek)
1957 Istanbul (Pevney)
1959 The Last Mile (Koch)

Films as Producer and Writer:

1945 Ministry of Fear (F. Lang)
1946 Two Years Before the Mast (Farrow)
1947 Calcutta (Farrow)
1948 Fighter Squadron (Walsh)
1951 Queen for a Day (Lubin) (co-pr)

Film as Producer:

1947 California (Farrow)

Publications

On MILLER: articles—

* * *
Seton I. Miller was one of Hollywood’s finest action writers, with a flair for taut dialogue, well-drawn characters, and solid construction. As Howard Hawks’s screenwriter on seven of the director’s early efforts, Miller collaborated on the formation of the Hawksian cinema, yet like that of many of Hollywood’s unsung craftsmen, Miller’s reputation has been obscured by the high critical profile of the auteur director. A Girl in Every Port, The Dawn Patrol, and Scarface are among Hawks’s most accomplished achievements; Miller’s name is scarcely mentioned in the many volumes on Hawks. At Warners in the 1930s, Miller was responsible for scripting one of the best Cagney movies, G-Men, and a superior Edward G. Robinson vehicle, Bullets or Ballots, and, similarly, coauthored such Errol Flynn films as The Adventures of Robin Hood, The Dawn Patrol remake, and The Sea Hawk. Miller was plagued by the vagaries of the studio system, corporate policies that saw multiple writers reworking each other’s material, and debates over proper screen credit; ultimately, he became a producer to protect his work.

Miller had a curious entry into pictures. A Yale graduate, he was transported to MGM as an actor and technical advisor on the collegiate tale Brown of Harvard. He did not find histrionics to his liking, and made the move from thespian to author with the help of a bright young Fox director, Howard Hawks. The pair became close friends, and Miller stayed in Hollywood as Hawks’s scenarist. Their first picture together, Paid to Love, was a contractual obligation for Hawks, and the clichéd story of a prince and a nightclub entertainer, c�scripted by William Conselman, was not fondly recalled by the director. The same is true of Fazil, adapted by Miller and Philip Klein from a play by Pierre Fresneda about a Frenchwoman and an Arab sheik.

A Girl in Every Port is one of the triumphs of the late silent era, written by Miller from a Hawks idea. A raucous, delightful comedy, the film is blessed with Louise Brooks’s inimitable presence as the object of Victor McLaglen and Robert Armstrong’s rowdy affections. Hawks called The Hawks and Miller partnership flowered with the Warner Bros. production of The Dawn Patrol. John Monk Saunders provided the story, “Flight Commander,” which, like Wings, was based on his own experiences as a First World War aviator. Hawks shared screenwriting credit with Miller and Dan Totheroh, and injected the picture with a creative use of dialogue that would become a trademark. Hawks did not really come into his own until the advent of the studio system, corporate policies that saw multiple writers reworking each other’s material, and debates over proper screen credit; ultimately, he became a producer to protect his work.

Warners rewarded Miller with an assignment on their epic The Adventures of Robin Hood with Errol Flynn. Norman Reilly Raine had completed a draft and revision before Miller was brought in to collaborate. The result is a model screenplay, directed by Curtiz and Keighley, blending dashing adventure, humor, believable dialogue, and even a plea against intolerance. A follow-up Flynn vehicle, The Sea Hawk, hastened Miller’s departure from Warner Bros. The writer completed a total revamping of the Rafael Sabatini novel, calling it Beggars of the Sea; Warners assured him he would complete the job, then called in first Milton Krims, then Howard Koch, to rewrite Miller. The experience, quite common at the time, rankled Miller, and he left to freelance his services.

Miller went to Columbia, where he and Sidney Buchman won an Oscar for their adaptation of Harry Segall’s play Here Comes Mr.
Jordan, a mirthful comedy fantasy about a punch-drunk prizefighter (Robert Montgomery) who is killed and sent back to earth. The screenwriters expanded the confines of the original play, and Alexander Hall directed the wonderful material with great skill. Miller collaborated with Ben Hecht on a Tyrone Power swashbuckler at 20th Century-Fox, The Black Swan; the writers played up the tongue-in-cheek humor of the Sabatini pirate story, discarding most of the novel’s florid dialogue.

Fulfilling a long-standing ambition, Miller signed a producing contract at Paramount in 1943. His first and best film as writer-producer was Fritz Lang’s Ministry of Fear, adapted from Graham Greene’s spy thriller. It has some nice moments of suspense, but is a lesser Lang film; he and Miller disagreed on the script, and theirs was not a happy relationship. Miller had a more pleasant association with John Farrow on Two Years before the Mast, California, and Calcutta; unfortunately the pictures are routine. Raoul Walsh’s Fighter Squadron, a Second World War drama produced by Miller and cowritten with Martin Rackin, contained action sequences worthy of Miller’s previous work.

Miller’s career as a producer was rather anticlimax to his years as a major screenwriter. Paradoxically, Miller seemed to create his best work under strong filmmakers like Howard Hawks and Warners production head Hal Wallis. His place in American film history is secure with contributions on A Girl in Every Port and Here Comes Mr. Jordan, which reflect his subtle comedic talent, and his more characteristic action pictures like The Dawn Patrol, Scarface, G-Men, and The Adventures of Robin Hood.

—John A. Gallagher

MILLER, Virgil

Cinematographer. Nationality: American. Born: Coffeen, Illinois, 20 December 1887. Education: Studied electrical engineering at Kansas State University, Manhattan, B.S. Career: Teacher; 1913–15—gaffer, then cameraman, 1915–26, Universal; then worked for Warner Bros., Paramount, seven years, David O. Selznick, and 20th Century-Fox; mid-1940s—photographed 62 of James Fitzpatrick’s Travel Talks documentary series; TV work includes You Bet Your Life and Do You Trust Your Wife series, 1950s. Died: 5 October 1974.

Films as Cinematographer:

1921 The Big Adventure (Eason); Cheated Hearts (Henley); Colorado (Eason); Luring Lips (Baggot); Red Courage (Eason); Sure Fire (Ford)
1922 The Black Bag (Paton); Don’t Shoot (Conway); The Lone Hand (Eason); The Man under Cover (Browning); Ridin’ Wild (Ross); The Scrapper (Henley); The Trap (Thornby)
1923 Blinky (Sedgwick); The Flame of Life (Henley); The Gentleman from America (Sedgwick); Kindled Courage (Worthington); Nobody’s Bridge (H. Blanche); Out of Luck (Sedgwick); The Ramblin’ Kid (Sedgwick); The Scarlet Car (Paton); Shootin’ for Love (Sedgwick); Single Handed (Sedgwick); The Thrill Chaser (Sedgwick)
1924 Broadway or Bust (Sedgwick); 40-Horse Hawkins (Sedgwick); Hit and Run (Sedgwick); Hook and Ladder (Sedgwick); Ride for Your Life (Sedgwick); The Ridin’ Kid from Powder River (Sedgwick); The Sawdust Trail (Sedgwick)
1925 The Hurricane Kid (Sedgwick); Let ‘er Buck (Sedgwick); Lorraine of the Lions (Sedgwick); The Phantom of the Opera (Julian); Ridin’ Wild (De La Mothe); The Saddle Hawk (Sedgwick)
1926 Broken Hearts of Hollywood (Bacon); The Flaming Frontier (Sedgwick); Private Izzy Murphy (Bacon); The Runaway Express (Bacon); Under Western Skies (Bacon)
1927 Finger Prints (Bacon); The Gay Old Bird (Raymaker); Irish Hearts (Haskin)
1928 Alex the Great (Murphy); Captain Careless (Storm); The Count of Ten (Flood); Finders Keepers (Ruggles); Gang War (Glennon); Guardians of the Wild (MacRae); Headin’ for Danger (Bradbury); Sally’s Shoulders (Shores); Stores and Blondes (Murphy); The Two Outlaws (MacRae); Young Whirlwind (L. King)
1929 The Amazing Vagabond (Fox); Come and Get It (Fox); Laughing at Death (Fox); The Little Savage (L. King); Pals of the Prairie (L. King); The Vagabond Club (L. King); The Woman I Love (Melford)
1935 Drift Fence (Lovingery)
1936 The Garden of Allah (Boleslawsky); Little Lord Fauntleroy (Cromwell)
1937 Find the Witness (Selman); Charlie Chan at the Olympics (Humberstone); The Slave Ship (Garnett); Danger, Love at Work (Preminger); Thank You, Mr. Moto (Foster)
1938 Walking down Broadway (Foster); Mr. Moto Takes a Chance (Foster); Time Out for Murder (Humberstone); Inside Story (Cortez)
1939 Mr. Moto’s Last Warning (Foster); Chasing Danger (Cortez); Charlie Chan in Reno (Foster); Charlie Chan at Treasure Island (Foster); Charlie Chan in the City of Darkness (Leeds); The Honeymoon’s Over (Forde)
1940 The Man Who Wouldn’t Talk (Burton); Charlie Chan in Panama (Foster); Charlie Chan’s Murder Cruise (Forde); Pier 13 (Forde); Manhattan Heartbeat (Burton); Charlie Chan at the Wax Museum (Shores); Murder over New York (Lachman)
1941 Ride, Kelly, Ride (Foster); Scotland Yard (Foster); Man at Large (Forde); My Life with Caroline (Milestone); Private Nurse (Burton); Small Town Deb (Schuster)
1942 Who Is Hope Schuyler? (Loring); Castle in the Desert (Lachman); Right to the Heart (Forde); Berlin Correspondent (Forde); Dr. Renault’s Secret (Lachman)
1943 Calling Dr. Death (Le Borg)
1944 Weird Woman (Le Borg); The Pearl of Death (Neill)
1945 The House of Fear (Neill); The Woman in Green (Neill); The Falcon in San Francisco (Lewis)
1946 The Michigan Kid (Taylor)
1947 The Big Fix (Flood); The Red Stallion (Selander); The Vigilante’s Return (Taylor)
1948 Street Corner (Kelley)
1952 Navajo (Bartlett)
1953 Murder without Tears (Beaudine); Crazy Legs (Lyon); Miss Robinson Crusoe (Frenke)
1955 Unchained (Bartlett)
Virgil Miller, a pioneer in the film industry in lighting and cinematography, began his long career at Universal around 1913. He was hired by Universal head Carl Laemmle to establish an electrical lighting department because the studio was considering the use of artificial light to supplement the natural sunshine the industry had depended on since it moved to California. Neither Laemmle nor Miller realized the ultimate impact such a decision would have on filmmaking, for with the introduction of artificial lighting came the means to create a specific atmosphere and the ability to manipulate the look, and therefore the meaning, of a scene.

Miller began the new department by assembling small lighting packages of spots and small packages of bods, which produce a large area of soft, diffused light. He was then put in charge of teaching the other photographers about electrical lighting. Miller also became Universal’s powder and explosives expert, a job which entailed small effects such as a glass exploding in a character’s hand as though it had been shot out.

Miller’s interests also extended to cinematography, and in 1915 he was put in charge of the camera department. Constantly experimenting with both lighting and photography, Miller soon gained a reputation for his “tricks.” For example, he perfected a process shot where a dancer seemed to cavort in and around a champagne glass. In another film, a western, he was able to match a shot of three covered wagons to make it look as though there were twelve covered wagons. The director Elmer Clifton was so impressed with the tricks that he insisted Miller to be his cinematographer. Miller was also Lon Chaney, Sr.’s favorite cameraman.

Eventually, this talented cinematographer was employed by almost all of the major studios. In 1926, he began working at Warner Brothers. Soon after, he joined Paramount, where he was in charge of their camera department for over seven years. He also worked for David O. Selznick’s studios, where he enjoyed the position of “superintendent of photography,” which meant he was consulted about the cinematography on every picture.

With his work as a cinematographer on some of the Charlie Chan and Mr. Moto mysteries, Miller became associated with a particular atmospheric style. The use of heavy, dark shadows and the sharp contrasts of light and dark helped to create a sinister or eerie effect, which has always been a code for mystery and horror films. When director Roy William Neill of Universal began the Sherlock Holmes film The Pearl of Death, he requested the services of Miller to create this moody effect. Miller found himself again employed at Universal.

Miller’s final long-standing job was as the head cinematographer on Groucho Marx’s television game show, You Bet Your Life. Though perhaps not as creative or significant as his film work, the job still had its interesting problems. Marx had poor eyesight and was sensitive to the large amount of light necessary for a television program. Miller had to adjust the light so as not to hurt Marx’s eyes, yet still have enough to light the set. In addition, Miller had to find the exact spot for the camera so that light was not reflected in Marx’s glasses. After six years with You Bet Your Life, Miller retired.

In 1953 Miller was nominated for an Academy Award for Navajo, which had an all-Indian cast. Though Miller was quite proud of Navajo and his nomination, the film, like its cinematographer, remains relatively unknown. Miller’s filmography does not include many prestigious projects, yet he is an important historical figure for his pioneering work at Universal in setting up one of the first electrical lighting departments in Hollywood, and for his experiments in lighting effects and trick photography.

—Susan Doll

MINDADZE, Aleksandr

Writer. Nationality: Russian-Georgian. Born: Moscow, Soviet Union (now Russia), 28 April 1949. Education: Studied screenwriting at VGIK in Moscow. Awards: President of the Italian Senate’s Gold Medal, Venice Film Festival, for Plyumbum, ili opasnaya igra, 1987; Alfred Bauer Award, Berlin International Film Festival, for Sluga, 1989; Silver Berlin Bear, Berlin International Film Festival, for Pyesa dlya passazhira, 1995; Nika Award for Best Script, for Vremya tantsora, 1998; Swissair/Crossair Special Prize, Locarno International Film Festival, for Vremya tantsora, 1998.

Films as Writer:

1976 Vesyonniy prizyv (Spring Call) (Pavel Lyubimov); Slovo dla zashchity (A Speech for the Defence) (Vadim Abrashitov)
1978 Povorot (The Turning Point) (Abrashitov)
1980 Okhota na lis (A Fox Hunt) (Abrashitov)
1982 Ostanovilsya poyezd (The Train Stopped) (Abrashitov)
1984 Parad planet (Parade of the Planets) (Abrashitov)
1986 Plyumbum, ili opasnaya igra (Plumbum, or Dangerous Game) (Abrashitov)
1988 Sluga (The Servant) (Abrashitov)
1991 Armavir (Abrashitov)
1995 Pyesa dlya passazhira (A Play for a Passenger) (Abrashitov)
1998 Vremya tantsora (Time of the Dancer) (Abrashitov)

Publications:

On MINDADZE: books—

uncovering displeasing and ominous features of social behavior. His work is the exact opposite of entertainment filmmaking, as he has cast aside any idealist illusions about human nature. He is particularly skilled in developing cerebral plots and unpleasant characters. It is for these features of his work that he enjoys the specific position of a highly respected maverick in Russian filmmaking.

With only one exception, the comedy Vesennyi prizyv (1976), which he scripted for director Pavel Lyubimov, Mindadze’s work is closely connected with director Vadim Abdrahshitov. It is a screenwriter-director partnership which mirrors other established creative teams such as Eldar Ryzanov and Edvard Braginski in Russia, and Krzysztof Kieslowski and Krzysztof Piesiewicz in Poland.

Mindadze comes from a film family: his father was well-established scriptwriter Anatoli Grebnev. He studied screenwriting at VGIK and met Vadim Abdrahshitov in the mid-1970s. Abdrahshitov had also studied at VGIK in Mikhail Romm’s director’s class. Since that meeting, Mindadze and Abdrahshitov have worked exclusively with each other, forming a team which collaborates so closely that it is not possible to determine what precisely is their individual input, although the scripts to Abdrahshitov’s films are regularly credited solely to Mindadze. According to film scholar Nicholas Galichenko, Mindadze and Abdrahshitov have established themselves as “leading exponents of the rationalist trend in Soviet cinema, specializing in pictures that provoke viewers by exposing public and social problems.” They have displayed a preference for simple plot-lines which evolve around subtle ethical conundrums, often exposing social sores and moral transgressions rarely approached by other filmmakers.

It is notable that Abdrahshitov and Mindadze began their work at a time when the “cinema of moral anxiety” developed as a leading East European trend, and their early work can be described as a Russian extension of this otherwise more East Central European direction. Moral problems are in the center of their first collaboration, Slovo dla zashchity (1976). In Povorot (1978), a husband and wife representing an ordinary Soviet couple knock down an old woman by accident while making a turn. The film focuses on the aftermath of the incident, showing the couple’s apprehensive reaction. Unprepared to face the consequences, they try to bribe witnesses, and as a result grow estranged from each other. Fantasy and magical realist elements have often been used by Mindadze and Abdrahshitov, most notably Okhota na lis (1980) and Parade of Planets (1984). In the first film, some of the characters wear futuristic headsets and engage in an elaborate ritualistic game; in the latter the protagonists are drawn in symbolic maneuvers and fantastic journeys through time and space. The selective use of sci-fi elements is a device which enables Mindadze and Abdrahshitov to appeal to the intellect rather than to the emotions of the audience.

The moral investigations of Abdrahshitov and Mindadze preceded perestroika by several years. In the early 1980s they were already making films in the spirit of perestroika—strongly critical of serious moral and social problems. An example is Ostanovilsya poyezd (1982). The plot evolves around an investigator and a journalist, both investigating the same train crash, their inquiries impeded by the sluggishly indolent authorities and the meandering evasiveness of the locals, resulting in diverging interpretations of what really happened. The film is a unique investigation of epistemological riddles revealed in the dialectical relationship of categories like truth, conformity, and expostulation. It is a commentary on the existential reluctance of people to admit and therefore face unwanted realities.

The features which Abdrahshitov and Mindadze made during perestroika proper (the second part of the 1980s) focused on issues of conformity and twisted morals. Their Plyumbum (1986), a film which depicted a reprehensibly amoral adolescent protagonist, caused a controversy, as critics read the portrayal of this allegorical “test-tube monster” as a sweeping generalization of the troubled status of Soviet society. The corrupt morals of the younger generation were also the subject matter of Abdrahshitov and Mindadze’s other perestroika film, Sluga (1988).

Abdrashitov is a Tatar by ethnic background, and Mindadze is half-Georgian. This may partially explain the team’s interest in the traditional mores of the South of Russia and the former Soviet republics of the Caucasus. Their Armavir (1991) was set in the South of Russia. So was Vremya Tantsora (1998), the action of which takes place in an unnamed region in the South, with the clearly visible snowy peaks of the Caucasus in the background. The setting is contemporary but the story evolves around interpersonal rivalries, raising questions about the essence of cruelty, and juxtaposing ritualistic dancing to ritualistic violence, all this making the film yet another existential allegory.

—Dina Iordanova

MIRISCH, Walter

MIRISCH: articles—

Films and Filming (London), March 1972.

On MIRISCH: articles—

Film Daily, 28 October 1952.
Film Daily, 19 April 1968.

* * *

The enterprise and enthusiasm of Walter Mirisch carried his company, The Mirisch Corporation (which he formed with his brothers, Harold and Marvin), through an unprecedented commercial and critical success from its inception in 1957 throughout its heyday in the 1960s and early 1970s. His record as an independent producer is outstanding both as an Oscar winner and as a box-office champion.

Mirisch’s background is an excellent illustration of the experience needed to become a successful producer. His entry into the motion-picture business came at the bottom level—as an usher in a New Jersey movie house. To this he added a solid education at the Harvard Business School and six years as one of the youngest men in film history ever to become an executive producer at an important studio (Allied Artists). Mirisch consistently and thoroughly learned the business from the ground up. When he ultimately formed his own company, he had been either a consumer, exhibitor, distributor, or producer of motion pictures nearly all his life.

Mirisch’s career is of particular historical interest in that he represents both the old and new Hollywood. Although he began independent production just when the old studio system began its final decline and Hollywood was facing its more difficult days, his company succeeded. His level of education and independent production status are those associated with the days that followed the final collapse of the old system, but his ability to spot films that would appeal to a wide audience links him to the common touch associated with the old moguls of the 1930s and 1940s.

With Walter as chief of production, the Mirisch brothers demonstrated the qualities that made Hollywood what it was in its golden years: courage, independence, taste, and just enough craziness to put it all together and sell it. In order to do this, Mirisch aggressively courted the very best film directors (Ford, Wilder, Edwards, and Wise) and gave them well-written scripts and a first-rate production team. Then he left them alone to do what they did best—make good movies. The Mirisch Company was a well-organized group. It handled all behind-the-scenes business matters with skill, allowing the filmmakers to concentrate on only the film itself. In short, Mirisch accomplished what many today dream of: he ran his business with the efficiency of the old studios, but with the flexibility and daring of an independent unit. The company took the risk, and took it in a wide range of types of films. “We try to make movies that have mass appeal, yet are first-rate artistically and state a meaningful theme,” said Mirisch.

The hallmark of the films made under the Mirisch banner is the ability to combine high-quality projects (which could win Oscars) with audience appeal. His work is a bright spot for American moviemaking during the 1960s, as his taste, imagination, and good business sense brought out a remarkable string of respected classics:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>Fall Guy (Le Borg)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1948</td>
<td>I Wouldn’t Be in Your Shoes (Nigh)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>Bomba the Jungle Boy (Beebe)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>The Hidden City (Bomba and the Hidden City)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>Flight to Mars (Seldender); Cavalry Scout (Seldender); Elephant Stampede (Bomba and the Elephant Stampede) (Beebe); Rodeo (Beaudine); Fort Osage (Seldender)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Hsiwatha (Neumann); Wild Stallion (Collins); The Lion Hunters (Bomba and the Lion Hunters) (Beebe); Flat Top (Seldender); Bomba and the Jungle Girl (Beebe); African Treasure (Bomba and the African Treasure) (Beebe)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1953</td>
<td>The Maze (Menzies) (exec)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1955</td>
<td>An Annapolis Story (The Blue and the Gold) (Siegel); The Dark Avengers (The Warriors) (Levin); Wichita (J. Tourneur)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>The First Texan (Haskin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1957</td>
<td>The Oklahoman (Lyon); The Tall Stranger (Carr)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1958</td>
<td>Man of the West (A. Mann); Fort Massacre (Newman); The Man in the Net (Curtiz); The Gunfight at Dodge City (Newman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1959</td>
<td>The Horse Soldiers (Ford); Cast a Long Shadow (Carr); Some Like It Hot (Wilder)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>The Magnificent Seven (J. Sturges); The Apartment (Wilder)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1961</td>
<td>West Side Story (Wise and Robbins) (exec); By Love Possessed (J. Sturges); One, Two, Three (Wilder)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1962</td>
<td>Two for the Seesaw (Wise); The Great Escape (Sturges)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>Toys in the Attic (Hill); The Pink Panther (Edwards)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1964</td>
<td>Hawaii (Hill)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1967</td>
<td>In the Heat of the Night (Jewison); Fitzwilly (Delbert Mann)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1969</td>
<td>Sinful Davy (Huston) (exec); Some Kind of Nut (Kanin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1970</td>
<td>Halls of Anger (Bogart) (exec); The Hawaiitians (Gries); They Call Me MISTER Tibbs! (Douglas) (exec)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1971</td>
<td>The Organization (Medford)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1972</td>
<td>Scorpio (Winner)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1974</td>
<td>The Spikes Gang (Fleischer); Mr. Majestyk (Fleischer)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1976</td>
<td>Midway (Smight)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1978</td>
<td>Gray Lady Down (Greene)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1979</td>
<td>Same Time Next Year (Mulligan); The Prisoner of Zenda (Quine); Dracula (Badham) (co)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1983</td>
<td>Romantic Comedy (Hiller) (co)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1993</td>
<td>Trouble Shooters: Trapped Beneath the Earth (May—for TV) (exec)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1996</td>
<td>A Case for Life (Laneuville—for TV)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Billy Wilder’s Some Like It Hot; The Apartment; One, Two, Three (and more); Robert Wise’s West Side Story; Blake Edwards’s The Pink Panther; Norman Jewison’s In the Heat of the Night (for which he won the Oscar); and John Sturges’s The Great Escape. Mirisch did not follow trends. He made unique projects that were themselves trendsetters, such as The Pink Panther, or were too unusual to be imitated, such as his remarkable string of productions from his long association with Wilder.

Mirisch is an example of a type that is more often associated with the late 1970s and early 1980s—the lifelong movie fan who enters the business. Nevertheless, instead of raving old movies for plots and remaking the classics, Mirisch signed up the people he had long admired and gave them the opportunity to make films. ‘‘To me, good taste means good taste in terms of writing, directing, acting, scoring, editing, and all the other phases of the picture business,’’ said Mirisch, who saw the producer’s role as helping the collaborative process to work smoothly. In private life Mirisch is known as a man who is dedicated to worthwhile charities and projects which further the appreciation of American movies. He has received the Irving Thalberg Award and Producer of the Year Award, among many others, and has served as a trustee of the American Film Institute, Filmax, and the Motion Picture Academy. He also as served four terms as president of the latter. Mirisch sums up his outstanding career as an independent producer by saying: ‘‘Since my early boyhood, I have been having a love affair with films, and it has been my great good fortune to spend most of my adult life in active pursuit of that affair. My ardor has never cooled, and I trust it never will.’’

—Jeanine Basinger

MITRA, Subrata

Cinematographer. Nationality: Indian. Born: Calcutta, 12 October 1930. Education: Trained in science. Career: 1950—assisted Jean Renoir on film The River; 1955—first film as cinematographer, Pather Panchali, first of several films for Satyajit Ray; 1963—first of several films for James Ivory, The Householder; visiting professor, Film and Television Institute. Awards: Padma Shri (awarded by the President of India), 1985.

Films as Cinematographer:

1955 Pather Panchali (Father Panchali) (Ray)
1956 Aparajito (The Unvanquished) (Ray)
1957 Parash Pathar (Ray)
1958 Jalsaghar (The Music Room) (Ray)
1959 Apur Sansar (The World of Apu) (Ray)
1960 Devi (The Goddess) (Ray)
1962 Kanchaganga (Ray)
1963 Mahanagar (The Big City) (Ray); The Householder (Ivory)
1964 Charulata (The Lonely Wife) (Ray)
1965 Akash Kusum (Up in the Clouds) (M. Sen); Shakespeare Wallah (Ivy)
1966 Nayak (The Hero) (Ray)
1968 The Guru (Ivy)
1970 Bombay Talkie (Ivy)
1986 New Delhi Times (Sharma)

Publications

By MITRA: article—

Montage, July 1966.

On MITRA: article—

Owen, Derek, ‘‘1159 Subrata Mitra,’’ in Film Dope (Nottingham), March 1990.

---

Subrata Mitra is usually associated with Satyajit Ray’s films, of which he worked as cinematographer on as many as ten from Pather Panchali to Nayak, spanning about 14 years. They parted ways in 1967, probably due to Ray’s desire to control all aspects of filmmaking. Mitra has since directed photography on four outstanding Indo-American films, James Ivory’s The Householder, Shakespeare Wallah, Bombay Talkie, and The Guru. But it was Ray who elevated him from an amateur still photographer to an ace director of photography in Pather Panchali, which remains the most lyrical of his works. To help create an illusion of reality by naturalistic illumination, he introduced ‘‘bounced’’ lighting in Ray’s Aparajito by such a simple and inexpensive device as a white stretched cloth, which achieved a soft shadowless diffusion. In the early 1960s, while shooting Ray’s Devi and Kanchaganga he dispensed with bounced lighting and developed instead a soft light system in Charulata to achieve the same quality. In Ray’s films of the 1950s, he developed the Arriflex-Nagra combination, for image and sound, respectively, which later became the standard film equipment in India. He also pioneered the use of halogen lights for shooting The Guru.

Mitra does not believe, however, that the excellence of a film is ‘‘terribly dependent’’ on its technical quality, because ‘‘it is not the lens in the camera that really matters but the eye at the other side of it.’’ This faith in the supremacy of the artist over his artefact has been borne out amply in many of his films. His use of dolly shots, e.g., in the sequence of Durga’s death in a stormy night (Pather Panchali), of varying cinema angles with limited number of cameras, e.g., in photographing the ghats of Varanasi in Aparajito, and the jerky camera movement in New Delhi Times, will remain examples of excellent cinematography by any standard. Official recognition came very late to this self-taught wizard of Indian cinematography. Additionally, his competence in playing the sitar was used by Renoir in a solo piece for the title music of The River, and by Ray for composing additional sitar pieces in Pather Panchali.

—Bibekananda Ray

MIYAGAWA, Kazuo

Cinematographer. Nationality: Japanese. Born: Kyoto City, 25 February 1908. Education: Studied Japanese ink painting. Career: 1926–30—worked in Nikkatsu Kyoto Studio laboratory; 1930—became assistant cameraman in same studio; 1935—first film as cinematographer, Ochiyo’s Umbrella; taught at Osaka Art College.

Films as Cinematographer:

1935 Ochiyo-gasa (Ochiyo’s Umbrella) (Ozaki); Komoriata Bushudako (Lullaby Bushu’s Kite) (Miyata); Senjin (Battle Dust) (Ogata)
1936 Ittouryu shinan (The Teaching of the Itou Style) (Ishibashi); Gokuraku hanayome-juku (The Paradise Bride’s School) (Ogata); Onshu kanreia (Pilgrimage Song of Grace and Grudge) (Kunita)
1937 Ochiyo toshigoro (The Prime of Ochiyo’s Life) (Suganuma); Hiyuh no ken (Sword of Flying Dragon) (Inagaki)
1938 Muhoumono Ginpei (Ginpei the Outlaw) (Inagaki); Kurama Tengu: Kakabei-jishi no maki (Kurama Tengu: The Book of Kakabei’s Lion Club) (Makim and Matsuda); Shussai Taikouki (Toyotomi’s Record of Promotion) (Inagaki); Yami no Kageboushi (Shadow of Darkness) (Inagaki); Jigoku no mushi (Hell’s Worm) (Inagaki); Mazou (Magic Statue) (Inagaki)
1939 Ibaragi Ukon (Inagaki); Kesa to Moritou (Kesa and Moritou) (Makino); Sonnou sonjuka (Village School of Emperor Supporters) (Inagaki); Rougoka no hanayome (Prison Bride) (Arai) (2 parts); Gouzu utagassen (The Geese and Ducks’ Singing Contest) (Makino)
1940 Miyamoto Musashi (Inagawa—3 parts); Shinrei Jakouneko (Arai—2 parts)
1941 Kurama Tengu: Satsuma no misshi (Kurama Tengu: Secret Agent from Satsuma) (Suganuma)
1942 Mampon hattenshi: Umi no gozouka (The Development History of the Southern Sea: Tribes of the Ocean) (Arai)
1943 Muhoumono no issho (The Rickshaw Man; The Life of Reckless Matsu) (Inagaki)
1944 Dohyou matsuri (Sumo Festival) (Marune); Kodachi o tsukaan onna (A Woman Using a Small Sword) (Marune); Kakute kamikaze wa fuku (Thus the Divine Wind Arrives) (Matsuda and Tateoka)
1945 Touki Saiko-den (Touki’s Saiko Story) (Ito); Siago no joushi (Touki’s Party of Chaunvisists) (Inagaki)
1946 Tobira o hiraku onna (The Woman Opening the Door) (Kimura); Tebukuro o nugasu otoko (The Man Taking Off His Gloves) (Mori); Yari-odori goju-san-tsuugi (Spear Dance of 53 Stations) (Mori); Soushi gekijou (Political Theatre) (Inagaki)
1947 Akuma no kanpai (Devil’s Toast) (Marune)
1948 Te o tsunami kora (Children Hand in Hand) (Inagaki); Koushokou gomin onna (Saikaku’s Five Women) (Nobuchi); Otoko o sabaku onna (A Woman Who Convicts Men) (Sasaki); Sonoyo no bouken (That Night Adventure) (Yasada); Karuon kaidou (A Line of Black Clouds) (Matsuda and Mori)
1949 Nizuma kaigi (New Wives’ Conference) (Chiba); Yuhrei ressha (Ghost Train) (Nobuchi); Onna goroshi abura jigoku (Oil Hell of Killing Women) (Nobuchi)
1949–50 Hibiime douuchuh (Princess Snake’s Travels) (Kimura and Marine—2 parts)

1950 Ai no sanga (Mountain and River of Love) (Koisii); Jougasaki no ame (Jougasaki’s Rain) (Tanaka); Rashomon (Kurosawa) 1951 Kenran taru satsujin (Brilliant Murderer) (Kado); Oyu-sama (Miss Oyu) (Mizoguchi); Omagatsu no koto (Omagatsu’s Duet) (Mori)
1952 Nishijin no shihi (Sisters of Nishijin) (Yoshimura); Taki no shiraito (Water Magician, or The White Thread of the Waterfall) (Nobuchi); Satobi kago (Express Sedan) (Makino)
1953 Senba-zuru (A Thousand Cranes) (Yoshimura); Ugetsu monogatari (Ugetsu; Tales of a Pale and Mysterious Moon after the Rain) (Mizoguchi); Yukubo (Desire) (Yoshimura); Gion basayashi (Gion Festival Music) (Mizoguchi)
1954 Sansho dayu (Sansho the Bailiff) (Mizoguchi); Uwasa no onna (The Woman of the Rumor) (Mizoguchi); Chikamatsu monogatari (A Story from Chikamatsu) (Mizoguchi)
1955 Jinanbou garasu (Second Son Crow) (Hirotsu); Tenko o neraru bishounen (Handsome Boy Trying to Rule the World) (Arai); Shin Heike monogatari (New Tales of the Taira Clan) (Mizoguchi); Baku wa Toukichi (I Am Tokichiro) (Mori)
1956 Akasen chitai (Street of Shame) (Mizoguchi); Yoru no kawa (Night River) (Yoshimura); Shin Heike monogatari (Shizuka to Yoshitsune) (New Tale of Genji; Shizuka and Yoshitsune)
1957 Suzaka-mon (Suzaka Gate) (Mori); Yoru no cho (Night Butterflies) (Yoshimura); Meido no kaoyaku (Hell’s Boss) (Murayama)
1958 Tsukihime keizu (The Origin of Princess Moon) (Watanabe); Akadou Suzunosuke (Mori); Enjo (Confagration) (Ichikawa); Benten kozou (Benten Boy) (Ito)
1959 Onna to kazokudo (Woman and Pirates) (Ito); Kagi (Odd Obsession) (Ichikawa); Uikugasa (Floating Weeds; The Duckweed Story; Drifting Weeds) (Ozu)
1960 ‘‘Koi o wasureta onna’’ (‘‘The Woman Who Forgot Love’’) ep. of Jokei (Women’s Scroll) (Yoshimura); Bonchi (Young Lord) (Ichikawa); Kirare Yosaburo (Slashed Yosaburo) (Ito); Ototo (Her Brother) (Ichikawa); Yojimbo (The Bodyguard) (Kurosawa)
1961 Konki (Marriage Time) (Yoshimura); Katsukake Tokojiro (Tokojiro of Katsukake) (Ikehiro); Akumyo (Bad Names) (Tanaka—2 parts)
1962 Hakai (The Outcast) (Ichikawa)
1963 Daisan no Akumyo (The Third Bad Name) (Tanaka); Jokei kazoku (Women Family) (Misumi); Zouhei monogatari (Low-Rank Soldiers) (Ikehiro); Ecitizen take ningyo (Bamboo Doll of Ecitizen) (Yoshimura)
1964 Zatouchi senryo kubi (Zatoichi: A Thousand Dollar Price on His Head) (Ikehiro); Zenin no odorii (The Money Dance) (Ichikawa); Suruga yuhkou-den: Yabure takka (Gambler’s Story of Saruge: Broken Iron Fire) (Tanaka)
1965 Akai shuriken (Invincible Bad Names) (Tanaka)
1966 Akai shuriken (Invincible Bad Names) (Tanaka); Tokyo Oirinpikku (Tokyo Olympiad) (Ichikawa and others); Akumyo niwaka (Suddenly Bad Name) (Tanaka); Akumyo buteki (Invincible Bad Names) (Tanaka)
1966 Irezumi (Tattoo) (Masumura); Akumyo zakura (Bad Names’ Cherry Blossoms) (Tanaka); Zatouchi no uta ga kikoeru (Zatouchi’s Song Is Heard) (Tanaka)
1967 Chisana toboshia (The Little Runaway) (Kinugasa and Bocharov); Ama koroshyia (A Murderer) (Masumura); Zatouchi rouryabari (Zatouchi Breaking Out of Prison)
By MIYAGAWA: articles—

Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1979.

On MIYAGAWA: articles—

American Cinematographer (Hollywood), May 1981.

Film Dope (Nottingham), March 1990.

* * *

Kazuo Miyagawa was, quite simply, Japan’s preeminent cinematographer. Commencing in the 1930s, he worked with some of his country’s foremost directors, including Kenji Mizoguchi, Yasujiro Ozu, Akira Kurosawa, Kon Ichikawa, Daisuke Ito, Hiroshi Inagaki, and Masahiro Shinoda, and his credits include some of the all time greatest Japanese films, including Rashomon, Ugetsu, Sansho the Bailiff, Street of Shame, Yojimbo, Floating Weeds, Odd Obsession, and Kagemusha.

Beginning his study of cinematography in 1926, after several years as an art student, Miyagawa was particularly impressed by the high-contrast lighting used in the German expressionist films of the era. Starting as a focus puller and assistant cameraman at the Nikkatsu Kyoto Studio laboratory, Miyagawa utilized his knowledge of film chemistry to experiment with the composition of film stock and the degree of exposure before shooting. Thus, he was able to determine the optimum exposure despite the varied physical conditions of location shooting; in fact, he did not even work with a light meter until Rashomon, in 1950.

Between 1935 and 1943, Miyagawa was in charge of second-unit photography and special effects at the Nikkatsu Studio. His first great success as chief cinematographer came in 1943, with his work on Hiroshi Inagaki’s The Rickshaw Man, in which his ambitious camerawork captures the vivid images of the life of a rough but straightforward rickshaw man in a small city, using montage to recreate the flow of time. While he has attributed his success to the traditionally high standards of the studio’s cinematographers and camera mechanics—‘‘Working in the film lab taught me the basics, the fundamental part of making pictures,’’ he once explained—he also noted, ‘‘It was my training in [Japanese] ink painting that really taught me how to see.’’

Indeed, it was Miyagawa’s early study of this art form that gave him the understanding of subtle shadings which was evident in his black-and-white films. His fluid camera movements, particularly the long takes in Mizoguchi’s films, demonstrate his knowledge of the Japanese traditional enakimono scroll painting style. In order to satisfy Mizoguchi’s demand to draw out the tense moments of highly dramatic performances, Miyagawa conceived the technique of suspenseful long takes, which capture highly dramatic performances without interruptions. He used many crane shots to create the mysterious atmosphere of Ugetsu and the romantic escape scenes of A Story from Chikamatsu. Long and complicated pannings such as those of the garden scene and the last scene of Ugetsu and the ending of Sansho the Bailiff are breathtakingly inventive. Further, in the latter film, he experimented with shooting the entire film in counter-light, to create the cold image suggested by the subject of slavery.

Miyagawa also contributed his dynamic camera style to Kurosawa’s work. Utilizing the light reflecting directly on a mirror, he captured in bright summer daylight the surging emotions of the characters of Rashomon. The image of sunlight flickering behind the trees became legendary. In Yojimbo Miyagawa used telephoto lenses to successfully convey the powerful images of swordplay in the swirling dust. He also used telephoto lenses effectively in Ichikawa’s Tokyo Olympiad to capture the poetic moments of physical movement, often in combination with slow motion. Miyagawa’s bold use of the CinemaScope screen is evident in other successful films of Ichikawa. Particularly important was Miyagawa’s technique of inventing the “silver tone” in the chemical process to create a greenish-gray tone, appropriate for the turn-of-the-century atmosphere of Her Brother.

Miyagawa’s sensitive and ingenious approach to the specific tones of each of his color films is evident in his work for Ozu, Ito, Shinoda, Kouzaburo Yoshimura, Masuzo Yasumura, and others. He studied each type of film stock for specific color effects according to the subject. For Floating Weeds, the only Ozu film on which Miyagawa worked, he used a light color scheme to recreate the atmosphere of a town in southern Japan. The tension of the scene of a hard rainstorm under which a couple quarrels from opposite sides of a street was accentuated by Miyagawa’s usage of a large light source with the dripping water captured in counter-light. The combination of bold colors and lyrical night scenes of Kyoto in Yoshimura’s Night River, the recreation of the world of Kabuki and the bright-colored woodprints... in Ito’s Benten Boy and Masumura’s Tattoo, the magnificent landscape colors in Shinoda’s Silence and Banished Orin, and the dazzling color spectacle of Kurosawa’s Kagemusha are other highly acclaimed examples of Miyagawa’s skill.

The cinematographer was employed by the same studio between 1926 and 1971, working elsewhere only twice: on Yojimbo, shot at the Toho Studio; and Tokyo Olympiad, produced independently. Before his death, his more notable credits were Kagemusha, and Shinoda’s Gonza the Spearman and MacArthur’s Children. He remained professionally active into his eighties. “A director and cameraman are like husband and wife,” Miyagawa once declared. “Even though they may fight, all their films are their offspring.” He added, proudly, “I am a cinematographer. I’ve never had any ambition to become a director. A film is not one individual’s method of personal expression but a matter of teamwork, a cooperative venture.”

—Kyoko Hirano, updated by Rob Edelman

MNOUCHKINE, Alexandre

Films as Producer or Coproducer:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Director</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Alerten Méditerranée (S.O.S. Mediterranean) (Joannon)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>L’Emigrante (Joannon)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1945</td>
<td>Tant que je vivrai (de Baroncelli)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1946</td>
<td>Le Destin s’amuse (Reinert)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>Non coupable (Décon); Les Condamnés (Lacombe)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1948</td>
<td>L’Aigle a deux têtes (Eagle with Two Heads) (Cocteau); Bal Cupidon (Sauvajon)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>Les Parents terribles (The Storm Within) (Jean Cocteau); Julie de Carneilhan (Manuel); Mon ami Sainfoin (Sauvajon)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>L’Homme de joie (Grangier); L’Amant de paille (Grangier)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>Le Cap de l’Expérience (Bernard)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Fanfan la Tulipe (Fearless Little Soldier) (Christian-Jaque)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1953</td>
<td>Lucrèce Borgia (Lucrezia Borgia) (Christian-Jaque); Viaggio in Italia (L’Amour est le plus fort; Journey to Italy) (Rossellini)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1954</td>
<td>Madame du Barry (Christian-Jaque)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1955</td>
<td>La Madelon (Boyer)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>Le Retour de Don Camillo (Duvivier); Si tous les gars du monde (Race for Life) (Christian-Jaque)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1957</td>
<td>Une Parisienne (Michel Boisron); Les Aventures de Till l’Espègle (The Bold Adventure) (Philippe); Club de femmes (Habib)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1958</td>
<td>La Loi, c’est la loi (Christian-Jaque)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1959</td>
<td>Babette s’en va-t-en guerre (Babette Goes to War) (Christian-Jaque); Rue des prairies (de la Patellière)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>I Defini (Maselli); Fantasma a Roma (Les Joyaux Fantômes) (Pietrangeli)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1961</td>
<td>L’Amant de cinq jours (The Five-Day Lover) (de Broca); Cartouche (Swords of Blood) (de Broca); Jessica (La Sage femme, le curé et le bon Dieu) (Negulesco); Arrivano i Titani (Les Titans) (Tessari)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>Mare Matto (Castellani)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1964</td>
<td>L’Homme de Rio (L’Uomo di Rio; The Man from Rio) (de Broca); The Train (Frankenheimer)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1965</td>
<td>Les Tribulations d’un Chinois en Chine (Up to His Ears) (de Broca)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1967</td>
<td>Vivre pour Vivre (Live for Life) (Lelouch); Mise à sac (Pillaged) (Alain Cavalier)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1968</td>
<td>La Vie, l’amour, la mort (Love, Life, Death) (Lelouch); Les Gauloises bleues (Coumont); La Chamade (Heartbeat) (Cavelier); Une Infinie tendresse (Jallaud)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1969</td>
<td>L’Américain (Bozzufili); Un Homme qui me plaît (Love Is a Funny Thing) (Lelouch)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1970</td>
<td>Le Voyou (The Crook); Storia di una Canaglia (Lelouch); La Poudre d’escampette (Touch and Go) (de Broca)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1972</td>
<td>Chère Louise (Louise) (de Broca); L’Aventure, c’est l’aventure (Lelouch)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1973</td>
<td>Le Magnifique (How to Destroy the Reputation of the Greatest Secret Agent) (de Broca); 1789 (Ariane Mnouchkine); L’Emmerdeur (The Pain in the Neck) (Molinaro)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1974</td>
<td>Stavisky (Resnais); Vous ne l’emporterez pas au paradis (Dupont-Midy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1975</td>
<td>L’Incorrigible (de Broca); Monsieur Albert (Renard); Adieu Poulet (So Long Copper) (Granier-Derferre)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1976</td>
<td>Tendre Poulet (Dear Detective) (de Broca); Un Autre homme et une autre chance (Simon et Sarah) (Lelouch)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1978</td>
<td>Préparez vos mouchoirs (Get out Your Handkerchiefs) (Blier); Le Cavauleur (The Skirt Chaser) (de Broca); L’Homme en colère (Pinoteau)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1979</td>
<td>On a volé la cuisse de Jupiter (de Broca); Cappotto di astrakan (The Persian Lamb Coat) (Vicario)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1981</td>
<td>Le Professionnel (Launier); Psy (de Broca); Garde à vue (Under Suspicion) (Miller); T’empêchez tout le monde de dormir (Lauzier)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1982</td>
<td>La Balance (The Nark) (Swaim); Pauline à la plage (Rohmer)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1983</td>
<td>Le Marginal (The Outsider) (Deray); La Vie est un roman (Life Is a Bed of Roses) (Resnais)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1984</td>
<td>L’Amour à mort (Resnais); Les Nuits de pleine lune (Full Moon in Paris) (Rohmer); Staline (Aurel)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1985</td>
<td>Hold-up (Arcady); Tranches de vie (Leterrier)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1986</td>
<td>Der Name der Rose (The Name of the Rose) (Annaud); Ginger and Fred (Fellini); Rue du départ (Gatilf)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1987</td>
<td>Cronaca di una morte annunciata (Chronicle of a Death Foretold) (Rossi) (+ role as Pattos); Dernier Eté à Tanger (Acardy); Exploits d’un jeune Don Juan (Mingozza); Famiglia (Etore Scola); Flag (Santù); Les Fous de Bassan (In the Shadow of the Wind) (Yves Simoneau); Giono Prima (Control) (Montaldo); Ennemis intimes (Amar); Oeil au beurre noir (Meynard)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
1989  Nuovo cinema paradiso (Cinema Paradiso) (Tornatore); La Revolution française: Les années lumiere (co; Enrico and Heffron); L’Ami retrouvé (Schatzberg); Vanille Francaise (Oury); Ague di Primavera (Torrents of Spring) (Skolimowski)
1990  Au Bonheur des chien (Tessori)
1991  Afraid of the Dark (Peploe); Rue Saint Sulpice (Lewin); Impromptu (Lapine)
1992  Becoming Colette (Huston); Rey Pasmado (The King Struck Dumb) (Uribe); Map of the Human Heart (Ward); Sarafina! (Roodt)
1993  Nuit Sacrée (Klotz); A l’Heure ou les grandes fausses vont boire (When the Jungle Cats Go to Drink) (Jolivet); Ruptures (Citti); Una Pura Formalita (Une simple formalité; A Simple Formality) (Tornatore)
1994  Prince of Jutland (Axel); Le Colonel Chabert (Angelo); La Prédiction (Ryazanov)

Publications

By MNOUCHKINE: articles—

On MNOUCHKINE: articles—

Cinéma, no. 293, May, 1983.
Screen International, no. 904, April 1993.
Studio Magazine, no. 73, May 1993.

* * *

After fleeing to Paris from Stalinist Russia, Alexandre Mnouchkine took French citizenship and found work as a props man with René Clair. By 1932, his boundless enthusiasm for filmmaking and organizational skills saw him installed as administrator at Majestic films, and by 1938, he had gained his first production credits for Léo Joannon’s action-packed sea drama, Alerte en Méditerranée. With the relaunch of French filmmaking after the Occupation, Mnouchkine joined with fellow émigré Georges Dancigers and Francis Cosne to create Les Films Ariane which remained an influential force in French film production for over forty years.

As chief executive of Ariane, Mnouchkine has been identified with over one hundred films, though his individual production credits are considerably fewer. In practice he and Dancigers worked closely together, and although occasionally one or the other took sole responsibility for a given film, they were more often than not coproducers. As a relatively small company, Ariane was frequently involved in coproductions, largely in France and in Italy, but also in Canada, notably for Claude Pinoteau’s L’Homme en colère (1978), Alexandre Arcady’s Hold-up (1985) and Yves Simoneau’s Les Fous de Bassan (1987). In those instances where Ariane was the moving force, Mnouchkine and Dancigers committed themselves completely to the production, from the script to the publicity launch.

Although recognizing the undoubted value of stars to a film’s success, their prime consideration was always a quality scenario. Rather than deal with ready-made scripts, they invited treatment of a given subject and were prepared not only to invest considerable sums in these commissions, but also to abandon a film at the shooting stage if they were unhappy. Though there were failures, the impressive list of successes reflects their shrewd judgment of public taste, their instinct for a good script, and their insistence that quality should never be compromised. Over the years an array of directors and stars enhanced their own careers in films either produced, coproduced or in part financed by the Ariane Company: the names of Jean Cocteau, Philippe de Broca, Julien Duvivier, Claude Lelouch, Claude Miller, Bob Swain, Alain Resnais, Eric Rohmer, Edouard Molinaro or Bertrand Blier testify to the rich diversity amongst directors, while an equally impressive roll-call of stars includes Gérard Philipe, Fernandel, Jean Gabin, Gérard Depardieu, Jean-Paul Belmondo, Michel Piccoli, Philine Noiret, Michel Simon, Lina Ventura, Brigitte Bardot, Annie Girardot, Catherine Deneuve, Gina Lolobrigida and Martine Carol.

The early link with Cocteau was a fortunate beginning: Dancigers produced L’Aigle à deux têtes (1948) and Mnouchkine and Cosne, Les Parents terribles (1949). The fifties brought comedies with Gilles Grangier (L’Homme de joie, 1950, and L’Amant de paille, 1950) and Julien Duvivier (Le Retour de Don Camillo, 1956), while Gérard Philipe was given the opportunity to direct himself as the swashbuckling hero of Les Aventures de Till l’Espiguè (1957). However, the most fruitful association in this decade came with Christian-Jaque for whom Mnouchkine and Dancigers produced a series of popular romantic adventures. The first was the hugely successful Fanfan la Tulipe (1952), which brought together Gérard Philipe and Gina Lolobrigida in the first of many Franco-Italian coproductions. Equally colourful period costume dramas followed in which Jaque displayed his wife Martine Carol as the lead inLucrèce Borgia (1953) and Madame du Barry (1954). After Si Tous les gars du monde (1956), a dramatic story scripted by Henri Clouzot about a stricken fishing boat, Jaque returned to more typical territory with lightweight vehicles for Fernandel (La Loi, c’est la loi, 1958) and Brigitte Bardot (Babette s’en va-t-en guerre, 1959).

The cost-cutting production methods of the New Wave movement left Mnouchkine and Dancigers unimpressed. In the sixties and seventies their instincts proved correct with box-office successes directed by Philippe de Broca and Claude Lelouch. They kept faith with de Broca after the failed romantic comedy L’Amant de cinq jours (1961) and went on to produce a series of highly popular, often tongue-in-cheek, action films set in exotic locations, in which Jean-Paul Belmondo teamed up with attractive female co-stars: Claudia Cardinale in Cartouche (1961); Françoise Dorléac in L’Homme de Rio (1964); Ursula Andress in Les Tribulations d’un Chinois en Chine (1965) and in 1975 with Geneviève Bujold for L’Incorrigible. Under the Ariane umbrella, de Broca also directed the desert war drama, La Poudre d’escampette (1970) with Michel Piccoli; the sentimental Chère Louise (1972) with Jeanne Moreau; and romantic comedies starring...
Annie Girardot and Philippe Noiret: Tendre Poulet (1977) and On a volé la cuisse de Jupiter (1979), while in Le Cavaleur (1978) Girardot was joined by Danielle Darrieux. The final de Broca/Ariane production was a gentle satire on group psychotherapy, Psy (1981).

The association with Lelouch brought romantic dramas which were essentially thematic variations on Un homme et une femme, largely differentiated by their locations and leading players. In Vivre pour vivre (1967), political and emotional involvement tested Yves Montand and Annie Girardot; in Un Homme qui me plait (1969), Girardot and Belmondo enjoyed a chance encounter in America; in Un Autre homme, une autre chance (1977), James Caan and Genevieve Bujold starred in a virtual remake of Un Homme et une femme given an American setting. Other films included the portrait of a murderer (La Vie, l’amour, la mort, 1968); a gangster film with Lino Ventura (L’Aventure, c’est l’aventure, 1972) and Jean-Louis Trintignant as a crooked lawyer in Le Voyou (1977). The decade also saw the production of Resnais’ political drama Stavisky (1974), Blier’s Oscar-winning comedy Préparez vos mouchoirs (1978) with Gérard Depardieu as the husband seeking ways to dispel his wife’s depression, and a filmed performance of Ariane Mnouchkine’s documentary play 1789.

Among the more notable films in the eighties, were Claude Miller’s taut psychological thriller Garde à vue (1981), Bob Swain’s award-winning Parisian gangster story, La Balance (1982), and Jacques Deray’s Le Marginal (1983) with Belmondo as the tough detective investigating drug dealers.

Although largely associated with popular entertainment films, Ariane’s support for more highbrow productions is evidenced by the company’s backing for Alain Resnais’ Stavisky (1974), La Vie est un roman (1983) and L’Amour à mort (1984), and for Eric Rohmer’s Pauline à la plage (1982) and Les Nuits de pleine lune (1984).

After suffering a serious heart attack in 1981, Mnouchkine resigned as head of Ariane, but continued as a producer and production adviser. His final credits included Jean-Jacque Annaud’s fourteenth-signed as head of Ariane, but continued as a producer and production company’s backing for Alain Resnais’ “Sania,” as Alexandre Mnouchkine was affectionately known, suffered his fatal illness. His life-long partner, Georges Dancigers, survived him by barely seven months, but their joint Ariane legacy leaves a lasting monument of well-produced films.

—R. F. Cousins

---

MOHR, Hal

Cinematographer. Nationality: American. Born: San Francisco, California, 2 August 1894. Military Service: 1917–18—in photography section of US Army. Family: Married the actress Evelyn Venable, 1934. Career: Part-time film inspector and winder while still at school; 1909—freelance cameraman and photographer’s assistant; 1913—filmed newsreels for the California Motion Picture Corporation; 1915—film cutter at Universal Studios; 1920s—documentary filmmaker in Hollywood. Television work from the mid-1950s includes episodes of Life with Father, The Barbara Stanwyck Show, and That’s My Boy. Awards: Academy Award for A Midsummer Night’s Dream, 1955; The Phantom of the Opera, 1943.

Died: In 1974.

Films as Cinematographer:

1914 Salomy Jane (Henderson); Money (Keane) (+ co-ed)
1918 Restitution (God’s Tomorrow; By Super Strategy; The Conquering Christ) (Gaye) (co); The Big Idea (+ d—short)
1920 The Golden Trail (Hersholt and Moomaw) (co); The Deceiver (Hersholt and Moomaw)
1921 The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse (Ingram); The Unfolding (Kern and MacQuarrie) (co)
1922 Watch Him Step (Nelson)
1923 Bag and Baggage (Fox)
1924 A Woman Who Sinced (Fox) (co); Vanity’s Price (This House of Vanity) (Neill)
1925 Little Annie Rooney (Beaudine) (co); Playing with Souls (Ince); The Monster (West); He Who Laughs Last (Nelson)
1926 Sparrows (Human Sparrows) (Beaudine) (co); The Marriage Clause (Weber); The High Hand (Maloney); The Third Degree (Curtiz)
1927 The Girl from Chicago (Enright); The Jazz Singer (Crosland); Slightly Used (Mayo); Bitter Apples (Hoyt); Old San Francisco (Crosland); A Million Bid (Curtiz); The Heart of Maryland (Bacon)
1928 Tenderloin (Curtiz); Glorious Betsy (Crosland); The Wedding March (von Stroheim) (co); Noah’s Ark (Curtiz) (co); The Last Warning (Leni)
1929 Broadway (Fejos); Shanghai Lady (The Girl from China) (Robertson); Last Performance (The Last Call) (Fejos)
1930 Captain of the Guard Robertson) (co); The Cohens and Kellys in Africa (Moore); Outward Bound (Milton); The Cat Creeps (Julian) (co); Big Boy (Crosland); King of Jazz (Anderson) (co); The Czar of Broadway (Craft)
1931 The Common Law (Stein); A Woman of Experience (Harry Joe Brown); Devotion (Milton); The Big Gamble (Niblo)
1932 A Woman Commands (Stein); Lady with a Past (Reputation) (Edward H. Griffith); Weekends Only (Crosland); The First Year (Howard); Tuss of the Storm Country (Santell)
1933 State Fair (King); The Warrior’s Husband (Walter Lang); I Loved You Wednesday (King); The Worst Woman in Paris (Bell); As Husbands Go (MacFadden); The Devil’s in Love (Dieterle)
1934 Carolina (The House of Connelly) (King); David Harum (Cruze); Change of Heart (Blystone); Charlie Chan’s Courage (Hadden); Servants’ Entrance (Lloyd)
1935 The County Chairman (Blystone); Under Pressure (Walsh); A Midsummer Night’s Dream (Dieterle and Reinhardt); Captain Blood (Curtiz)
1936 The Walking Dead (Curtiz); Bullets or Balloons (Keighley); The Green Pastures (Keighley and Connelly); Ladies in Love (Edward H. Griffith)
1938 I Met My Love Again (Logan and Ripley)
1939 Back Door to Heaven (Howard) (co); The Under-Pup (Wallace); Rio (Brahm); Destiny Rides Again (Marshall)
1940  Where the Daltons Rode (Marshall); Pot o' Gold (The Golden Hour) (Marshall); International Lady (Whelan)
1941  Cheers for Mrs. Bishop (Garnett)
1942  Lady in a Jam (La Cava); Twin Beds (Whelan)
1943  Watch on the Rhine (Shumlin) (co); Top Man (Lamont); The Phantom of the Opera (Lubin) (co); This Is the Life (Feist)
1944  Ladies Courageous (Rawlins); San Diego, I Love You (Le Borg); The Climax (Wagner); My Gal Loves Music (Lilley); Enter Arsene Lupin (Beebe); Prices Unlimited (Kenton)
1945  Because of Him (Wallace); Shady Lady (Waggner); Salome, Where She Danced (Lamont) (co); Her Lucky Night (Lilley)
1946  Night in Paradise (Lubin); I'll Be Yours (Seiter)
1947  Song of Scheherazade (Reisch); Pirates of Monterey (Werker); The Lost Moment (Gabel)
1948  Another Part of the Forest (Gordon); An Act of Murder (Live Today for Tomorrow; The Case Against Calvin Cooke) (Gordon)
1949  Johnny Holiday (Goldbeck)
1950  Of Men and Music (Reis); The Second Woman (Ellen) (Kern); Woman on the Run (Foster)
1951  The Big Night (Losey)
1952  Rancho Notorious (Lang); The Four Poster (Reis)
1953  The Member of the Wedding (Zinnemann); The Wild One (Benedek)
1956  The Boss (Haskin)
1957  Baby Face Nelson (Siegel)
1958  The Line-Up (Siegel); The Gun Runners (Siegel); Imagination in Motion (Lyford)
1960  The Last Voyage (Stone); Underworld U.S.A. (Fuller)
1962  Creation of the Humanoids (Barry)
1963  The Man from the Diners' Club (Tashlin)
1967  Jack and the Beanstalk (Kelly—for TV)
1968  The Bamboo Saucer (Collision Course) (Telford)

By MOHR: articles—

Cinematographer Hal Mohr was an expert at serving the director by creating whatever look or visual effect that director required for his film. He was one of Hollywood’s outstanding innovators with regard to photographic technique, and he is the only person ever to earn an Academy Award on a write-in vote (for 1935’s A Midsummer Night’s Dream; he also won an Oscar in 1943 for The Phantom of the Opera).

In an era when most film people remained employed by one studio, Mohr jumped from backlot to backlot; from the 1950s on, he worked mainly in television. A majority of the scores of films he shot during his 50-odd years as a director of photography were made during the sound era, beginning symbolically with The Jazz Singer in 1927. Even though the movies had learned to talk, Mohr showed how they need not stop moving. Particularly in Broadway, there is startling use of the moving camera: Mohr pioneered the extensive usage of boom and dolly shots, resulting in complicated, dazzling visuals that are among the most stunning examples of early Hollywood expressionism. It also was around this time that he designed a camera crane that remained in use for years. According to the New York Evening Journal, 10 April 1937, “Last week it was rising up, rearing back, pirouetting and generally behaving like a cross between a drunken ballerina and a ferris wheel, garnering in wild shots of rioting in German streets after the Armistice for (Universal’s) super-production of The Road Back.”

By the 1940s and 1950s, Mohr had become a master of creating just the right visuals to mirror a film’s mood, whether that mood be eerie (in The Phantom of the Opera), solemn (Watch on the Rhine), or stark and cool (The Wild One). The 1930s, however, was the cinematographer’s most innovative decade. In Captain Blood, miniatures (including 18-foot-long ships) are flawlessly combined with process shots, and there is effective integration between shots made on the backlot and on location. Even more significantly, Mohr experimented with deep-focus photography in Bullets or Ballots and The Green Pastures, predating Gregg Toland’s work on Citizen Kane.

Whatever artistic success A Midsummer Night’s Dream achieved—the film, to this day, has its admirers and detractors—is due as much to Mohr’s creativity as the direction of Max Reinhardt and William Dieterle and the decidedly offbeat casting of James Cagney (playing Bottom), Mickey Rooney (as Puck), Joe E. Brown (as Flute), and other Warners’ contract players as Shakespeare’s characters. In the scenario, sprites and fairies mix in the same shots with human beings; sequences filmed in real settings are intertwined with those filmed on obviously painted sets. Mohr’s cinematography perfectly mirrors this combination of reality and fantasy via his utilization of soft photography and lighting to create an effect that is shimmering—at once magical and romantic. In his pan of Reinhardt’s “lavish and fanciful rather than imaginative” approach to the material, Graham Greene, writing in the 18 October 1935 edition of The Spectator, nonetheless noted that, “in (Reinhardt’s) treatment of the Athenian woodland, the silver birches, thick moss, deep mists and pools, there are sequences of great beauty. . . .” Writing in the November 1935 National Board of Review Magazine, John Alfred Thomas opined that, “as Shakespeare, the production is almost photographically accurate. . . .” (Typically, Mohr’s name cannot be found in either reviews, or in most analyses of the films to which he contributed.) In accepting his Oscar, the cinematographer observed that while working on A Midsummer Night’s Dream, he had the opportunity to “explore a few of the possibilities of our marvelous art-science,” adding that “we must constantly seek new ways of picturing old stories, or we cease to progress.”

In addition to Mohr’s willingness to let his imagination roam free as he experimented with then-unheard-of techniques, his career is a testimony to the fact that filmmaking is a collaborative art form. While working on Sparrows, he and art director Harry Oliver united to create an impressive-looking boat-chase sequence in a swamp, utilizing miniatures that were pulled through a tray of flaxseed and dry aluminum powder. Mohr lit the setting with high lights and crosstights. This, and other effects in the film, were accomplished by what Mohr described in an interview late in his life as “the combined efforts of a group of exquisite craftsmen.”

“I get hundreds of letters from boys wanting to know how to become studio cameramen,” he explained, in an interview published in the 17 May 1936 New York Herald-Tribune. “… Begin at home as an amateur camera man. Practice with your friends with your home camera. Learn all you can about trick photography, lighting effects, enlarging and finishing.”

Years before in San Francisco, this is precisely how Mohr pursued his youthful interest in cinematography. It was, of course, a time when film schools did not exist; while still in high school, Mohr exhibited the resourcefulness that was to typify his career by converting a toy movie projector into a motion-picture camera. The projector’s take-up arm ran the take-up magazine, with the projector’s lens becoming the picture-taking lens. Soon, Mohr began photographing local events; he developed his own negative, and struck his own prints. “I sold some of these to our motion picture theater,” Mohr told the New York Herald-Tribune, “and they were instantly popular. This beginning finally led to Hollywood. . . .”

—Rob Edelman

MORRICONE, Ennio

Composer. Nationality: Italian. Born: Rome, 10 November 1928. Education: Studied with Goffredo Petrassi; Santa Cecilia Conservatory, Rome, diploma in composition, in trombone, and in orchestra direction. Career: Composer of symphonic and chamber works, and for theater, radio, and television; also songwriter and arranger; 1961—first film score, for Il federeale; 1970—music for TV mini-series Moses lo Leggiver, and for Marco Polo, 1982. Awards: British Academy Anthony Asquith Award for Film Music, for Days of Heaven; British Academy Awards, for Days of Heaven, 1980, Once upon a Time in America, 1985, The Mission, 1987, and The Untouchables, 1988; Cinema Paradiso, 1991; Golden Globe awards, for The Mission, 1987, La Leggenda del pianista sull’oceano, 2000; Italian National Syndicate of Film Journalists Silver Ribbon Awards. for Best Score for Per un pugno do dollari, 1965, Metti una sera a cena, 1970, Sacco e Vanzetti, 1972, Once Upon a Time in America, 1985, The Untouchables, 1988, Special Silver Ribbon for research for La Leggenda del pianista sull’oceano, 1999, Los Angeles Film Critics Association Award for Once Upon a Time in America, 1984; Grammy Award for Best Album of Original Background Score Written for a Motion Picture or Television for The Untouchables, 1988; Locarno International Film Festival, Leopard of Honour, 1989; Venice Film Festival Career Goldn Lion, 1995; David di Donatello 1988; Locarno International Film Festival, Leopard of Honour, 1989; Italian Critics Association Award for La Leggenda del pianista sull’oceano, 1988, Special Silver Ribbon for research for Le ore dell’amore (Faenza); La monaca di Monza (Sollima); La ragazza e il generale (Ferreri); Faccia a faccia (Sollima); I crudeli (Corbucci) (credited as Leo Nichols)

1969

Gli intoccabili (Machine Gun McCain) (Montaldo); Metti, una sera a cena (Patroni Griffi); Una breve stagione (Brief Season) (Castellani); Le Clan des Siciliens (The Sicilian Clan) (Verneuil); Un esercito di cinque uomini (The Dirty Angels) (Severino); Teorema (Pasolini); L’alibi (Lucignani, Gassman, and Celi); La resa dei conti (The Big Gundown) (Sollima); L’Harem (Ferreri); Faccia a faccia (Sollima); I crudeli (Corbucci) (credited as Leo Nichols)

1970

Hornets’ Nest (Karlson); Due Mules for Sister Sara (Siegel); I cannibali (Cavani); Indagine su un cittadino al di sopra di ogni sospetto (Investigation of a Citizen above Suspicion) (Petri); La califfa (Bevilacqua); Gott mit uns (Montaldo); Maddalena (Kawalerowicz); La moglie più bella (Damiani); Città violenta (Sollima): Quando le donne avevano la coda (Festa Campanile); Uccidete il vitello grasso ed arrostitelo (Bertolucci) (credited as Leo Nichols)

Films as Composer:

1961 Il federale (The Fascist) (Salce)
1962 Diciottienni al sole (Eighteen in the Sun) (Mastrocinque); La voglia matta (Crazy Desire) (Salce); La cucagna (Salce)
1963 Il successo (The Success) (Morassi and Risi); Le monachine (The Little Nuns) (Salce); I basilisci (The Lizards) (Wertmüller); Le ore dell’amore
1964 Per un pugno di dollari (A Fistful of Dollars) (Leone) (credited as Leo Nichols); I malamondo (Malamondo) (Cavara); Prima della rivoluzione (Before the Revolution) (Bertolucci) (co)
1965 Amani d’oltretombo (Nightmare Castle) (Caiano); I pugni in tasca (Fist in His Pocket) (Bertolucci); Una pistola per Ringo (A Pistol for Ringo) (Tessari); El Greco (Salce); Il trionfo di Ringo (Tessari); Per qualche dollaro in più (For a Few Dollars More) (Leone)

1966 Sette pistole per i MacGregor (Seven Guns for the MacGregors) (Giraldi); Uccelacci e uccellini (The Hawks and the Sparrows) (Pasolini); Il buono, il brutto, il cattivo (The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly) (Leone); La battaglia di Algeri (The Battle of Algiers) (Ponte corvo); Un uomo a metà (De Seta); Un fume di dollari (The Hills Run Red) (Lizzani); Svegliati e uccidi (Wake Up and Die) (Lizzani); Un dollaro a testa (Navajo Joe) (Corbucci) (credited as Leo Nichols); Sette donne per i MacGregor (Up the MacGregors) (Giraldi); Matchless (Lattuada)

1967 Le streghe (The Witches) (Visconti and others) (co); Il giardino delle delizie (Agosti); La Cina è vicina (China Is Near) (Belloccchio); La ragazza e il generale (Festa Campanile); Ad ogni costo (Grand Slam) (Montaldo); Da uomo a uomo (Death Rides a Horse) (Petroni); O.K. Connery (Operation Kid Brother) (De Martino) (co); Arabella (Bolognini); La Bataille de San Sebastian (Guns for San Sebastian) (Verneuil); La resa dei conti (The Big Gundown) (Sollima); L’Harem (Ferreri); Faccia a faccia (Sollima); I crudeli (Corbucci) (credited as Leo Nichols)

1968 Dalle Ardenne all’inferno (Dirty Heroes) (De Martino) (co); Galileo (Cavani); Escalation (Faenza); Teorema (Theorem) (Pasolini); Diabolik (Danger: Diabolik) (Bava); Partner (Bertolucci); Grazia, zia (Come Play with Me) (Sampaieri); Ruba al prossimo tuo (A Fine Fair) (Maselli); C’era una volta il west (Once upon a Time in the West) (Leone); Scusi, facciamo l’amore? (Listen, Let’s Make Love) (Capi roli); Un tranquillo posto di campagna (A Quiet Place in the Country) (Petti); Un bellissimo novembre (That Splendid November) (Bolognini); Il mercenario (The Mercenary) (Corbucci); Fräulein Doktor (Lattuada); Vergogna schifosi (The Dirty Angels) (Séverin); La monaca di Monza (The Lady of Monza) (E. Visconti); Comandamenti per un gangster (Caltabiano); Il grande silenzio (Corbucci); Roma come Chicago (Banditi a Roma) (De Martino) (co); H. 2 S. (Faenza); L’alibi (Lucignani, Gassman, and Celi); Et per tutto un cielo di stelle (Petroni); Corri uomo corri (Sollima)

1969 Gli intoccabili (Machine Gun McCain) (Montaldo); Metti, una sera a cena (Patroni Griffi); Una breve stagione (Brief Season) (Castellani); Le Clan des Siciliens (The Sicilian Clan) (Verneuil); Un esercito di cinque uomini (The Dirty Angels) (Severino); Teorema (Pasolini); L’alibi (Lucignani, Gassman, and Celi); Et per tutto un cielo di stelle (Petroni); Corri uomo corri (Sollima)

1970 Hornets’ Nest (Karlson); Due Mules for Sister Sara (Siegel); I cannibali (Cavani); Indagine su un cittadino al di sopra di ogni sospetto (Investigation of a Citizen above Suspicion) (Petri); La califfa (Bevilacqua); Gott mit uns (Montaldo); Maddalena (Kawalerowicz); La moglie più bella (Damiani); Città violenta (Sollima): Quando le donne avevano la coda (Festa Campanile); Uccidete il vitello grasso ed arrostitelo (Bertolucci) (credited as Leo Nichols)
(Samperi); Vamos a matar, companeros (Corbucci); Giocchi particolari (Indovina)

1971
Krassnaya palata (La tenda rossa; The Red Tent) (Kalatazov); Sacco e Vanzetti (Montaldo); L’istruttoria è chiara, dimentichi! (Damiani); Le Casse (The Burglars) (Verneuil); La classe operaia va in paradiso (The Working Class Goes to Heaven; Lulu the Tool) (Petrì); Forza G (Tassari); Oceano (Quilici); Quattro mosche di vellato grigio (Argento); La tarantola dal ventro nero (Cavara); Veruschka—Poesia di una donna (Rubartelli); Addio fratello credele (Patroni Griffi); Incontro (Schivazappa); Una lucertola con la pelle di donna (Fulci); Tre nel mille (Indovina) (co); Il gatto a nove code (Argento); Gli occhi freddi della paura (Castellari); Le foto proibite di una signora per bene (Ercoli); Il Decameron (The Decameron) (Pasolini) (co); La corta notte della bambola di vetro (Lado); Lui per lei (Rispoli)

1972
Il diavolo nel cervello (Devil in the Brain) (Sollima); Sans mobile apparent (Without Apparent Motive) (Labro); Già la testa (Duck, You Sucker!?) (Leone); Barbe-Blonde (Bluebeard) (Dmytryk); L’Attentat (The French Conspiracy) (Boisset); Le Serpent (The Serpent) (Verneuil); Anche se volessi lavorare che faccio? (Mogherini); Il Maestro e Margherita (Petrovic); Correva l’anno di grazia 1870... (Gianetti); Questa specie d’amore (Bevilacqua); Violenza: quintò potere (Vancioni); Quando le donne persero la coda (Festa Campanile); Cosa avete fatto a Solange (Dallamano); Les Deux Saisons de la vie (Pavel); Giornata nera per l’Ariete (Bazzoni); Mio caro assassino (Valeri); La banda J & S (Cronaca criminale del Far West; Far West Story) (Corbucci); La vita, a volta è molto dura, vero Provvidenza (Petroni); I bambini chiedono perché (Zanchin); D’amore si muore (Carunchio); I racconti di Canterbury (The Canterbury Tales) (Pasolini) (co); Chi l’ha vista morire? (Lado); Quando l’amore è sensualità (De Sisti); L’ultimo uomo di Sara (Onorato); Il ritorno di Clint il solitario (Martin)

1973
Un uomo di rispettare (Hearts and Minds) (Lupo); La proprietà non è più un faro (Petrì); Rappresaglia (Massacre in Rome) (Cosmatos); Giordano Bruno (Montaldo); La cosa buffa (Lado); Libera amore mio (Bolognini); Il mio nome e nessuno (Valeri); Sepolta viva (Lado); Crescete e moltiplicatevi (Petroni); Revolver (Sollima); Spogliati, protesta, uccidi? (De Sisti); Che entreremo noi con la rivoluzione? (Corbucci); Ci risiamo, vero Provvidenza? (De Martino); Fiorina la vacca (De Sisti)

1974
Le Trio infernal (Girard); Alonsonfam (P. and V. Taviani); Le Secret (Enrico); Mussolini: Ultimo Atto (Lizzani); Fatti di gente perbene (La Grande Bourgeoise; The Murri Affair; Drama of the Rich) (Bolognini); Il sorriso del grande tentatore (The Devil Is a Woman) (Damiani); Peur sur la ville (Night Caller) (Verneuil); Il fiore delle mille e una notta (A Thousand and One Nights) (Pasolini); L’anticristo (De Martino); Il giro del mondo degli immorati di Paynet (Perfetto) (co); Macchie solari (Crispino); Space 1999 (Katzin, Austin, and Tomlin—from TV eps.); Sesso in confessionale (De Sisti); La cagna (Lado); Spasmo (Lenzi); Milano odi a: la polizia no puo sparare (Lenzi)

1975
Der Richter und sein Henker (The End of the Game) (Schell); Salò, o le 120 giornate di Sodoma (Salò—the 120 Days of Sodom) (Pasolini); La donna della domenica (The Sunday Woman) (Comencini); Divina creatura (Patroni Griffi); Un genio, due comprari, un pollo (Damiani); La faulle (La smagliature) (Fleischmann); Storie di vita e malavita (Lizzani); Attenti al buffone (Bevilacqua); Leonor (J. L. Buñuel); Human Factor (Dmytryk); L’ultimo treno della notte (Lado); Gente di rispetto (Zampa)

1976
Novecento (1900) (Bertolucci); L’eredità Ferramonti (The Inheritance) (Bolognini); René la Canne (Girard); Per le antiche scale (Down the Ancient Stairs) (Bolognini); Labbra di lardo blu (Petroni); San Babila ore 20: un delitto inutile (Lizzani); Per amore (Giarda); Todo modo (Petrì)

1977
Le désert des Tartares (Il deserto dei tartari; The Desert of the Tartars) (Zarlini); L’Agnese va a morire (Montaldo); Exorcist II: The Heretic (Boorman); Il prefetto di ferro (Squitteri); La orca (Orca—Killer Whale) (M. Anderson); Pedro Peramo (Velo); Holocaust 2000 (De Martin); Il gatto (Comencini); Una vita venduta (Florio); Stato interessante (Nasca); Il mostro (Zampa); Apostro rosso sangue (Festa Campanile)

1978
Le mani sporche (Petrì); La Cage aux Folles (Molinaro); Days of Heaven (Malick); Corleone (Squitteri); Viaggio con Anita (Travels with Anita) (Monicelli); Forza Italia! (Faenza); 122 rue de Provence (Gion); Così come sei (Lattuada); “Saro tuto per te” epis. of Doe viva in vacanza? (Bolognini); L’imoralità (Piiri)

1979
Bloodline (Young); Il prato (The Meadow) (P. and V. Taviani); I... comme Icare (Verneuil); La luna (Bertolucci); Ogro (Operation Ogre) (Pontercorvo); Le buone notizie (Petrì); Un sacco bello (Verdone); Il ladrone (The Thief) (Festa Campanile); Il giocattolo (Montaldo); L’umanoido (Lado and Lewis); Dedicato al mare Eglo (Ikeda); Windows (Willis)

1980
La Cage aux Folles II (Molinaro); The Island (Ritchie); So Fine (A. Bergman); La vera storia della signora della camelie (The True Story of Camille) (Festa Campanile); Uomini e no (Orsini); Stark System (Balducci); Si salvi chi vuole (Faenza); Professione Figlio (Buzie Bianche) (Rolla)

1981
La tragedia di un uomo ridicolo (The Tragedy of a Ridiculous Man) (Bertolucci); Le Professionnel (Lautner); Bianco, rosso, e verdone (Cerdone); Espion, lève-toi (Boisset); Occhio alla penne (Lupo); La disubbidienza (Lado)

1982
La Thing (Carpenter); Nana (Wolman); Butterfly (Cimber); Le Raffitan (Giovanni)

1983
Hundra (Cimber); The Scarlet and the Black (London); La chiave (The Key) (Brass); Order of Death (Cop Killer) (Faenza); A Time to Die (Cimber) (co); Treasure of the Four Crowns (Baldi)

1984
Once upon a Time in America (Leone); The Seven Magnificent Gladiators (Mattei); Sahara (McLaglen)

1985
La gabbia (The Trap) (Griffi); La Cage aux folles III (Elles se marient) (Lautner); Kommando Leopard (Commando Leopard) (Dawson) (co); Il pentito (Squitteri); Die Einsteiger (Götz); Via mala (Toelle); Le due vite di Mattia Pascal (The Two Lives of Mattia Pascal) (Monicelli); Die Forstenbuben; The Link (De Martin); La messe e finita; Il pentito (Squitteri); Red Sonja (Fleischer)

1986
Il cammorista; Ginger e Fred (Fellini); Good Morning Babylon (P. and T. Taviani); The Mission (Joffé); Pourvue que ce soit une fille (Let’s Hope It’s a Girl) (Monicelli); La Venexiana (Bolognini)

1987
Il giorno prima (The Day Before; Control) (Montaldo); Mosca addio (Bolognini); Quartieri (Agostì); Rampage (Friedkin); The Untouchables (De Palma); Frantic (Polanski); Les Exploits d’un jeune Don Juan (Mingozzi); Intervista (The Interview) (Fellini); Gli occhiati d’oro (Montaldo); La sposa era bellissima (Gábor); Strana la vita (Bertolucci)

1988
A Time of Destiny (Nava); Cinema Paradiso (Tornatore); I cammelli (Bertolucci); Domani accadra (Luchetti); Drole d’endroit pour une rencontre (A Strange Place to Meet) (Dupeyron) (song); Manifesto (Makevejev); La soule (Sibra); Strange Life!; Young Einstein (Roach) (song)

1989
Gli indifferente (A Time of Indifference) (Bolognini—for TV); Casualties of War (De Palma); Fat Man and Little Boy (Shadow Makers) (Joffé); I promessi sposi (The Betrothed) (Nocita—for TV); ¡Atame! (Tie Me Up! Tie Me Down!) (Almodovar); Tempo di uccidere (The Short Cut; Time to Kill) (Montaldo); Voyage of Terror: The Achille Lauro Affair (Negrin—for TV); The Endless Game (Forbes—for TV); Dimenticare Palermo (To Forget Palermo; Oublier Palerne; The Palermo Connection) (Rosi); L’appassionata (Mingozzi); Australia (Andrien); La cintura (Gamba); Disamisstate: O Re (Magni); Palombella Rossa (Moretti)

1990
Stanno tutti bene (Everybody’s Fine) (Tornatore); State of Grace (Joan); Tre colonne in cronaca (Vanzi); Mio caro Dr. Grässler (Dear Dr. Grässler; The Bachelor) (Faenza); The Big Man (Crossing the Line) (Leland); Il principe del deserto (Lion in the Desert; The Law of the Desert) (Tessari—for TV); Hamlet (Zeffirelli); Il male oscuro (Obscure Evil) (Monicelli); Il sole anche di notte (The Sun Also Shines at Night) (Taviani); Tracce di una vita amorosa (Del Monte); Le voce della luna (Voices of the Moon) (Fellini)

1991
La Domenica specialmente (Especially on Sunday) (Tornatore, Tognazzi, Guiseppe Bertolucci, Barilli, and Giordana); Money (Stern); Deutsches Mann Geil! Die Geschichte von Ilona und Kurti (Schwabenitzky); Bugsy (Levinson); La Villa del Venerdì (Husbands and Lovers) (Bolognini)

1992
City of Joy (Joffé); Beyond Justice (Tessari); Rampage (Friedkin)

1993
In the Line of Fire (Petersen)

1994
Disclosure (Levinson); Love Affair (Caron); La Scotta (The Escort) (Tognazzi); White Dog (Fuller); Wolf (Nichols); The Long Silence (Von Trott)

1995
Joseph (Young—for TV); Pasolini, un delitto italiano (Who Killed Pasolini) (Marco Tullio Giordana); L’Uomo delle stelle (The Star Maker) (Tornatore)

1996
Ninfa plebeia (The Nymph) (Wertmüller); Marianna Ucría (Faenza); I Magi randagi (We Free Kings) (Citti); Afirma Pereira (According to Pereira) (Faenza); Nostromo (Reid—for TV); La Sindrome di Stendhal (Stendhal’s Syndrome) (Argento); Moses (Young—for TV) (title music); Vite strozzate (Strangled Lives) (Tognazzi); La Lupa (Lavia); Sanson and Delilah (Roeg—for TV)

1997
Naisance des stéarooscopages (Marty); In fondo al cuore (Perelli—for TV); David (Markowitz—for TV); Con rabbia e con amore (Angeli); La Casa bruciata (Spanò—for TV); Cartoni animati (Franco Citti and Sergio Citti); U Turn (Stone); Lolita (Lyne); Solomon (Young—for TV)

1998
Ultimo (Real—for TV); Il Fantasmat dell’opera (The Phantom of the Opera) (Argento); Bulworth (Beatty); La Leggenda del pianista sull’oceano (The Legend of 1900) (Tornatore)

1999
Esther

2000
Vatel; Mission to Mars; Canone verso (Tognazzi); La Tour Secrète (for TV)

Films as Musical Director:

1965
Centomila dollari per Ringo (De Martino)

1966
Quien sabe? (A Bullet for the General) (Damiani)

1967
Gentleman Joe . . . uccidi (Finley)

1972
Già la testa (A Fistful of Dynamite) (Leone and Santi)

1975
Per le antiche scale (Down the Ancient Stairs) (Bolognini)

Publications:

By MORRICONE: articles—

Soundtrack! (Hollywood), March 1978.

Soundtrack! (Hollywood), June 1978.

Positif (Paris), April 1983.

Cinefantastique (New York), April/May 1983.

Cinema Papers (Melbourne), December 1984.

Film and Fernsehen (Potsdam), January 1990.

Soundtrack! (Mechelen), June 1990.

Interview with Gianni Bergamino and Dmitri Riccio in Soundtrack, 1 December 1992.

On MORRICONE: books—

Miceli, Sergio, La Musica nel Film: Arte e Artigianato, Florence, 1982.

Lhassa, Anne and Jean Lhassa, Ennio Morricone, Lausanne, 1989.

Miceli, Sergio, Morricone, la Musica, il Cinema, Modena, 1994.

On MORRICONE: articles—

Image et Son (Paris), March 1974.

Ecran (Paris), September 1974.

Film Review (London), September 1976.

Soundtrack! (Hollywood), October 1976.

Skoop (Amsterdam), March 1978.

Skoop (Amsterdam), May 1978.

Film Français (Paris), 2 February 1979.

Film Français (Paris), 16 January 1981.

Filmusic (Leeds), 1982.

Film Français (Paris), 4 May 1984.

Soundtrack! (Hollywood), June 1990.

Ennio Morricone ranks among the most prolific and imaginative composers of film scores currently working in the field. Born and educated in Rome and initially a composer of traditional classical music, Morricone began scoring Italian motion pictures in the early 1960s. He has since worked internationally as well, with more than 175 films to his credit.

Morricone once referred to film scoring as “one art applied to another,” and he effectively uses music as a sort of aural paint to create the proper blend of sound and vision. At his best, he ignores the limits of conventionality; his scores mix-and-match rock, jazz, blues, pop, folk, and classical music with innovative instrumentation and an apt gift for melody. He also makes adventurous use of percussion, brass, vocal/choral, and other sound effects—whips, gunshots, animal and bird calls, and particularly the human whistle.

Often the results are remarkable. Morricone has long and most effectively been associated with Italian director Sergio Leone, headmaster of the “spaghetti Western” school of filmmaking. Morricone’s rousing and memorable work for the Leone/Clint Eastwood “Man with No Name” trilogy brought him early prominence. The scores—A Fistful of Dollars, For a Few Dollars More, and The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly—match ideally the violence, emotion, and black humor inherent in the genre.

His masterpiece, the score for Once upon a Time in the West, is a beautiful complement to Leone’s best film. Morricone provides a powerful emotional accompaniment with his accurate, gut-level renderings of the spectacle and myth of the Old West. Also particularly evocative among his credits is the pastorale score for Terrence Malick’s Days of Heaven (a portrait of farm-workers set in 1916 Texas), which has as its centerpiece a short theme borrowed from the nineteenth-century French romantic composer Saint-Saëns.

Occasionally the eclecticism yields less-than-unified, if still interesting, efforts (such as My Name Is Nobody). Morricone’s inevitable weakness, naturally, is his prolificacy, which leads at times to listless scores and a certain repetition of the most facile ingredients of his distinctive style. Some of his more recent aims at the pop mainstream—Bloodline, So Fine, Butterfly, The Thing—miss the mark, serviceable but strictly unmemorable movie soundtracks. Once upon a Time in America teamed him once again with Leone in rather familiar musical territory, which won the composer his second British Academy Award. In the late 1990s Morricone has shown no sign of reducing his musical output, continuing to turn out a prodigious quantity of scores, including La Leggenda del pianista sull’oceano, which has won several awards, including a Golden Globe, and Bulworth. La Leggenda tells the story of a man born in 1900 who never leaves the boat on which he lives, learning about the world from what people tell him. The score is central to the story: inspired by jazz and ragtime, Morricone has been commended for his careful historical research and painstaking attention to detail.

Morricone’s versatile talent has served him well. He has composed for Westerns, romances, epics, thrillers, comedies, dramas. That his best music remains listenable independent of the films for which it was written is a worthy and enduring legacy.

—Richard Sater, updated by Christopher John Stephens and Chris Routledge

MORRIS, Oswald

Films as Cameraman:
1946 Green for Danger (Gilliat)
1947 Captain Boycott (Lauder)
1948 Oliver Twist (Lean); Blanche Fury (Allegret)
1949 Passionate Friends (Lean)

Films as Cinematographer:
1950 Golden Salamander (Neame); Cairo Road (MacDonald)
1951 Circle of Danger (Tourneur); The Adventurers (Fortune in Diamonds) (MacDonald)
1952 The Card (The Promoter) (Neame); Saturday Island (Island of Desire) (Heisler); So Little Time (Bennett)
1953 Moulin Rouge (Huston); South of Algiers (The Golden Mask) (Lee); Stazione Termini (Indiscretion of an American Wife) (De Sica) (co)
1954 Beat the Devil (Huston); Beau Brummell (Bernhardt); Monsieur Ripois (Knave of Hearts; Lovers, Happy Lovers) (Clément)
1956 The Man Who Never Was (Neame); Moby Dick (Huston)
1957 Heaven Knows, Mr. Allison (Neame); A Farewell to Arms (C. Vidor) (co)
1958 The Key (Reed); The Roots of Heaven (Huston)
1959 Look Back in Anger (Richardson); Our Man in Havana (Reed)
1960 The Entertainer (Richardson)
1961 The Guns of Navarone (Lee Thompson)
1962 Satan Never Sleeps (The Devil Never Sleeps) (McCready); Lolita (Kubrick); Term of Trial (Glenville)
1963 Come Fly with Me (Levin); The Ceremony (Harvey)
1964 Of Human Bondage (Hughes); The Pumpkin Eater (Clayton); The Battle of the Villa Fiorita (Affair at the Villa Fiorita) (Daves)
1965 Mister Moses (Neame); The Hill (Lumet)
1966 The Spy Who Came In from the Cold (Ritt); Life at the Top (Kotchell); Stop the World—I Want to Get Off (Saville); The Winter’s Tale (Dunlop)
1967 The Taming of the Shrew (Zeffirelli); Great Catherine (Fleming)
1968 Reflections in a Golden Eye (Huston); Oliver! (Reed)
1969 Goodbye Mr. Chips (Ross)
1970 Scrooge (Neame); Fragment of Fear (Sarafian)
1971 Fiddler on the Roof (Jewison)
1972 Lady Caroline Lamb (Bolt); Sleuth (Mankiewicz)
1973 The Mackintosh Man (Huston); Dracula (Curtis) (TV, UK cinema)
1974 The Odessa File (Neame); The Man with the Golden Gun (Hamilton) (studio only)
1975 The Man Who Would Be King (Huston)
1976 The Seven-Per-Cent Solution (Ross)
1977 Equus (Lumet)
1978 The Wiz (Lumet)
1980 Just Tell Me What You Want (Lumet)
1981 The Great Muppet Caper (Henson)
1982 The Dark Crystal (Henson and Oz)

Publications

By MORRIS: articles—

Focus on Film (London), December 1971.
Film Heritage (Dayton, Ohio), no. 3, 1977.

On MORRIS: articles—

Hill, Derek, on Moby Dick in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), September 1966.
Screen International (London), 22 November 1975.
Film Dope, September 1990.

Following in that fine British tradition of being in the right place at the right time, Oswald “Ossie” Morris entered the film industry as an unpaid projectionist whilst still at school, and through good fortune and perseverance managed to secure his first paid post as clapper boy and factotum at the small Wembley Studios during the early 1930s.

His early film education included spells working with such luminaries as Michael Powell on the production line “quota quickies” which were made for a pound per foot of film. Morris’s progress from camera assistant to camera operator was interrupted by the outbreak of World War II, in which he served as a bomber pilot. He returned to the business in 1946, working for Ronald Neame at Pinewood Studios as camera operator on a series of low-key, but solidly made, British films. Green For Danger was the first, to be followed by Captain Boycott, Oliver Twist and Passionate Friends—the latter two for David Lean—during which time he began to apply the lessons he had learned.

Morris’s career blossomed during a golden era in British cinematography. The likes of Jack Cardiff, Freddie Young, Geoffrey Unsworth, Freddie Francis and Morris’s acknowledged mentor Guy Green were variously photographing, assisting and focus pulling during this time and he finally made his debut as cinematographer on Ronald Neame’s Golden Salamander. Unable to keep working in the top job under contract, Morris took the bold decision to go freelance and never looked back. He continued to ply his trade on small-scale British films, only two of which were shot in Technicolor, before John Huston invited him to photograph Moulin Rouge, the big-budget story of artist Toulouse Lautrec. Always a keen innovator, Morris was given a free rein by Huston and devised many stylish lighting effects. for the film. Using fog on the set together with bold colour choices and a combination of diffused and filtered light, Morris created stunning effects.

Certainly Technicolor executives were stunned. They practically disowned the film when they saw it, but supported by his director, Morris weathered the storm and was amused to receive a congratulatory letter from the same executives when the film opened to positive reviews with particular praise for its photography. Up until that time the saturated, override Technicolor look was all, but Morris and Huston broke up the line, muted the colour and challenged the accepted wisdom of day.

His triumph on the Technicolor, used for only a couple of his early films and a day or two shooting second unit on John Boulting’s The Magic Box. Following this early triumph Morris worked with John Huston on seven other pictures. But the next of them, Beat the Devil, was notable mainly for the in-jokes and happy reunion of several favourite Huston actors. It was not until their next association that the Huston-Morris partnership was to challenge the accepted use of Technicolor once more.

For Moby Dick Huston demanded a new look, and Morris together with the now cooperative Technicolor boffins worked to produce a bleak, washed out effect for the screen. The starkness of the pictures they shot perfectly complimented the steely, ethereal quality of so many of the characters; the effect was achieved by printing a negative overlaid onto another negative of the same shot. When lit by a revolving light, the effect produced a sublime outline to the characters which echoed the biblical sense of doom that pervaded Ahab’s obsession with the great white whale.

Morris maintained his status as a cinematographer-for-hire when a lesser man might have settled for a staff job. His overwhelming talent seems to have been his ability to work with some of the more demanding directors of the period. Matched with his professional competence and adaptability, his solid and unostentatious work lent demandng directors of the period. Matched with his professional talent seems to have been his ability to work with some of the more a lesser man might have settled for a staff job. His overwhelming career, and this clearly was one factor in his remarkable adaptability and longevity. By his own standards, the 1970s signalled a period of winding down, highlighted by a brush with Bond—completing studio shooting on The Man with the Golden Gun—his last professional encounter with Huston on The Man Who Would Be King, and the gloriously left-field The Wiz, which gave Morris his one and only experience of working on location in the United States. He made the most of it, lighting the New York Trade Center with thousands of multicoloured bulbs for one sequence.

Having collaborated with some of the greats on a selection of good, bad and forgettable movies made in the last forty years, his easygoing approach has served him well, the product of a unique quality that seemed thoroughly appropriate for the downbeat Cold War itself. The result is a very British, very unassuming, very satisfying success story.

—Anwar Brett

MOSKVIN, Andrei

Films as Cinematographer:

1926 Deviatoe yanvaria (Ninth of January) (Viskovsky) (co); Shinel (The Cloak) (Kozintsev and Trauberg); Katka bumanzyri ranet (Katka’s Reimette Apples) (Johanson and Ermler) (co); Chyortovo koleso (The Devil’s Wheel) (Kozintsev and Trauberg)

1927 Bratichka (Little Brother) (Kozintsev and Trauberg); S.V.D. (Soyuz Velikogo Dela; The Club of the Big Deed) (Kozintsev and Trauberg); Turbina nr. 3 (Turbine no. 3) (Timoshenko) (co); Pobediteli nachi (Victory of the Night) (Timoshenko) (co); Lektro (Electra) (Timoshenko) (co); Soikina lyubov (Soikina’s Love) (Timoshenko) (co); Chuzhoy pidzhak (Ships) (co)

1929 Novyi Vavilon (The New Babylon) (Kozintsev and Trauberg) (co)
1931 Odna ( Alone) (Kozintsev and Trauberg); Gopak (Chakanovsky—short)
1932 Hayl-Moskau (Schmidtgo) (co)
1935 Yunost Maximka (The Youth of Maxim) (Kozintsev and Trauberg)
1937 Vozryashcheniye Maximka (The Return of Maxim) (Kozintsev and Trauberg)
1939 Vyborgskaya storaona (New Horizons; The Vyborg Side) (Kozintsev and Trauberg) (co)
1943 Aktrisa (The Actress) (Trauberg)
1944 Ivan Grozny (Ivan the Terrible, Part I) (Eisenstein) (co)
1947 Pirogov (Kozintsev) (co)
1953 Belinsky (Kozintsev); Nad Nemanom rassvet (Fainzinner)
1955 Ovod (The Gadfly) (Fainzinner)
1956 Prostitye lyadi (Simple People) (Kozintsev and Traubert—produced in 1946) (co)
1957 Don Quixote (Kozintsev) (co); Rasskazi o Lenine (Stories about Lenin) (Yutkevich)
1958 Ivan Grozny II: Boyarskii Zagovor (Ivan the Terrible, Part II: The Boyars’ Plot) (Eisenstein—produced in 1946)
1960 Dama s sobachkoy (The Lady with the Dog) (Heifitz) (co)
1963 Hamlet (Kozintsev) (co)

Publications

On MOSKVIN: articles—

Focus on Film, no. 13, 1973.
Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), August 1996.

* * *

Andrei Moskvin was one of the most gifted of Soviet cinematographers. A few years younger than Edward Tisse, he did not have Tisse’s background in newsreel photography, but he was fortunate in being able to work with the leading Soviet directors and, for the Kozintsev films, with the art director Yevgeni Enei, who was a perfect collaborator. Most of Moskvin’s films were directed by Kozintsev and Trauberg, but even as early as 1927 he was a master of light and dark contrasts and highlighting in The Club of the Big Deal. Using Enei’s fantastic sets in The New Babylon, his studio photography glittered to match the sardonic mood of the film, and in Alone he experimented with a narrow range of white tones. The Maxim trilogy (The Youth of Maxim, The Return of Maxim, and The Vyborg Side) made in the late 1930s is possibly the best work he did with Kozintsev and Trauberg. The careful selection of images as seen through Maxim’s eyes (particularly in the first film) avoid virtuosity or artiness, but the films nevertheless take on a complete reality and mood of growing awareness and growth. But inevitably Moskvin is probably most famous for his work on Eisenstein’s Ivan the Terrible, Part I and Part II. The ornate pictorial compositions of Part I are masterful, and the climax, the “true coronation” by the people of Ivan, brilliantly fits Eisenstein’s thematic movement. Part II, for which Tisse himself filmed the exteriors, works boldly with a mixture of black-and-white interiors and color exterior sequences, culminating in the cathedral climax. Moskvin’s last completed film was the masterpiece The Lady with the Dog, revealing his complete authoriy and control. He died while filming Kozintsev’s Hamlet.

MÜLLER, Robby

Films as Cinematographer:

1963 Megapolis I (de la Parra) (+ ro; Vogel (Bird) (Sebestik)
1964 De Lengte van een Ster (The Length of a Star) (van Doorn) (co)
1966 Eiland (Island) (Terpstra) (co)
1967 Bacher (Tholen); Norwegian Wood (Meter); Toets (Touch) (Tholen) (co)
1968 Objectief gezien (Objective Seen) (van Doorn); Don’t Miss Miss Pizz (Kotheys); Der Fall Lena Christ (Geissendörfer—for TV)
1969 She Is Like a Rainbow (Kotheys) (co); Jonathan (Geissendörfer); Alabama: 2000 Light Years (Wenders) (co)
1970 Frankenstein cum Cannabis (Paupe) (co); Eine Rose für Jane (Geissendörfer—for TV); Pakho (Koch—for TV)
1971 Het bezoek (The Visit) (van de Staal); Summer in the City (Wenders); Carlos (Geissendörfer—for TV)
1972 Can (Przygoddka) (co); Die Starchlachroate Buchstabe (Wenders); Die Angst des Tormans beim Elfneter (Wenders)
1973 Die Reise nach Wien (Reitz); Jonathan (Geissendörfer)
1974 Alice in den Städten (Alice in the Cities) (Wenders) (co); Ein bisschen Liebe (von Furstenberg); Falsche Bewegung (The Wrong Move) (Wenders)
1975 Nathalie (von Weitershausen); Im Lauf der Zeit (Wenders) (co)
1976 Ex herrscht Ruhe im Land (Lillenthal) (co); Die Wildeite (Geissendörfer); Im Lauf der Zeit (Kings of the Road) (Wenders)
1977 Der amerikansche Freund (The American Friend) (Wenders); Avatar, the Return of the Wolf (Zelliemaker); Die linkshändige Frau (The Left-handed Woman) (Handke)
1978 Mysteries (de Lussanet); Die gläserne Zelle (Geissendörfer)
1979 Opname (In for Treatment) (van Zuylten and Kok); Saint Jack (Bogdanovich)
1980 Honeysuckle Rose (On the Road Again) (Schatzberg)
1981 They All Laughed (Bogdanovich); Die Gläserne Zelle (The Glass Cell) (Geissendörfer)
1982 Een zwoele zomeravond (A Sultry Summer Evening) (Weisz and Strooker)
1983 Les îles (Azimi) (co); Un Dimanche de flics (Vianey); Les Tricheurs (Schoedler) (+ ro); Klassenfeind (Stein)
1984 Repo Man (Cox); Paris, Texas (Wenders); Body Rock (Eps-stein); Der Klassenfeind (Class Enemy) (Stein); Finnegan Begin Again (Joan Micklin Silver—for TV)
1985 The Longshot (Bartel); To Live and Die in L.A. (Friedkin)
1986 Down by Law (Jarmusch)
1987 Barfly (Schroeder); The Believers (Schlesinger)
1988 Il piccolo diavolo (The Little Devil) (Benigni)
1989 Coffee and Cigarettes II (Jarmusch—short); Mystery Train (Jarmusch); Aufzeichnungen zu Kleidern und Städten (Wenders) (co)
1990 Korczak (Wajda)
1991 A Notebook on Cities and Clothes (Wenders—doc) (co); Bis ans Ende der Welt (Until the End of the World; Jusqu’au bout du monde) (Wenders)
1993 Mad Dog and Glory (McNaughton)
1995 Dead Man (Jarmusch); Par-delà les nuages (Beyond the Clouds) (Wenders)
1996 Breaking the Waves (von Trier)
1997 The Tango Lesson (Potter)
1998 Shattered Image (Ruiz)
1999 Buena Vista Social Club (Wenders); Ghost Dog: The Way of the Samurai (Jarmusch)
2000 Dancer in the Dark

Film as Actor:

1983 Tricheurs (Youthful Sinners) (Schroeder)
1990 Motion and Emotion (Joyce)
1993 De Domeinen Ditvoorst (The Ditvoorst Domains) (Hoffman)
1999 Foot on the Moon (Pijman)

Publications

By MÜLLER: articles—

Skrien (Amsterdam), Winter 1986–87.

On MÜLLER: articles—

Film Comment (New York), vol. 25, no. 5, September/October 1989.
Film Dope (Nottingham), March 1991.

Described by Cinema Today—perhaps a little fancifully—as “the greatest Dutchman with light since Vermeer,” Robby Müller has worked on both sides of the Atlantic, photographing movies for directors with widely varying visions. He first sprang to prominence as Wim Wenders’ camera magician, as the lensman behind such classics of the New German Cinema as Kings of the Road, The American Friend, and Alice in the Cities. Not all of Müller and Wenders’ collaborations have had happy results: Until the End of the World, for instance, is an unfocused epic shot in more than a dozen countries. Nonetheless, Müller is arguably as important to the filmmaker as Nykvist was to Bergman.

By complete contrast to his “road” movies with Wenders, Müller has also shot intimate pictures, firmly rooted to place: there was his photography of Barfly for Barbet Schroeder, where he caught the bleary-eyed, slightly surreal Bukowski underground of late-night drinking dens, of alcoholic brawls and love affairs. Then there was his work on Jarmusch’s Down by Law, in moody black and white, and his superb evocation of the sprawling, seething city in Friedkin’s To Live and Die in L.A. Perhaps his most celebrated picture, again with Wenders, is Paris, Texas. Here, he depicts several different sides of American culture and myth: first, there is Ford’s legendary West, familiar from The Searchers, a rugged terrain of deserts, eagles, and mountains; next, there are the antiseptic Californian suburbs, the haunt of affluent, middle-class families; and, finally, there are the grim, impersonal facades of Houston, a businessman’s city whose skyscrapers, endless towers of glass and steel, are the antithesis of the great outdoors shown at the outset.

In the same year, 1984, he helped English director Alex Cox make a remarkably assured debut with the cultish Repo Man, which takes the same elements used elegiacally for Wenders on Paris, Texas—the long roads, sand, sky, cars—and recasts them in a comic vein. Müller has distinct ideas on how to light for laughs and how to set the visual tone for heavier drama. As he told the Hollywood Reporter, “Filming a comedy is different from (shooting) a dramatic film with documentary elements that are sometimes dark. Comedy needs another type of lighting, more light, more clarity.”

Unlike Michael Ballhaus, another European cinematographer to carve out a substantial niche in 1980s Hollywood, Müller has not worked on blockbusters or overtly mainstream movies. He has tended to choose offbeat projects with innovative directors who will allow him the license to experiment: Jim Jarmusch, Joel and Ethan Coen, Peter Bogdanovich, and Paul Bartel are names which spring to mind. Like one of those endlessly peripatetic characters with which Wenders fills his movies, Müller likes to travel, to change directions, to push back boundaries. Apart from America, Germany, and his native Holland, he has worked in the Far East, on Bogdanovich’s underrated Saint Jack, and in Italy. (Wenders, of course, has dragged him all over the globe.)

Nevertheless, despite his versatility, Robby Müller is not in the top rank of cinematographers working today. He has not shot a great, stylized studio-based picture along the lines of a Dick Tracy (a triumph for the camera operator if not for the director) or anything of the grandeur of 1990 or The Last Emperor. Paris, Texas apart, there are few of his films that are uniquely, distinctly his, and that would have been beyond the ken of any other cinematographer. Perhaps Müller does not yet match up to the standards set by Gordon Willis or Vittorio Storaro, those two acknowledged “masters of light.” Still, Müller is an endlessly resourceful lensman whose oeuvre marks a consistently fascinating clash between European and Hollywood aesthetics. In his European movies of the 1970s, particularly projects such as The American Friend, the Hollywood influence is manifest. By contrast, in his American pictures—particularly Barfly and his work with Jarmusch—he seems to strive for a looser, more fluid “European” feel. Storaro may have observed that “the emphasis in the average Hollywood film is on acting and story structure, and cinematographers are confined to recording performances.” One thing is for sure, however: on whichever side of the Atlantic Müller chooses to work, he will never be confined merely to recording performance.

—Geoffrey Macnab, updated by Rob Edelman
MURAKI, Yoshiro

Films as Art Director:

1954 Renai tokkyua (Love Express) (Suzuki and Sugie) (asst)
1955 Tenka taihei (The World Is Peaceful) (Sugie—2 parts) (asst); Ikomon no kiroku (Record of a Living Being; I Live in Fear) (Kurosawa)
1956 Kuroobi sangoku-shi (Black Belt History of Three Countries) (Taniguchi); Chiemi no hathiru (Chiemi’s High Heeled Shoes) (Suzuki); Aoi me (Blue Bud) (Suzuki)
1957 Kumonosu-jo (The Throne of Blood) (Kurosawa); Bibou no miyako (Beauty Capital) (Matsubayashi); Donzoko (The Lower Depths) (Kurosawa)
1958 Shachou sandai-ki (The Record of Three Generations of Presidents) (Matsubayashi—2 parts); Kakushi toride no sanakanin (The Hidden Fortress) (Kurosawa)
1959 Daigaku no oneichan (Young Girl at the University) (Sugie); Watashi iwa kai ni naritai (I Want to Be a Shellfish) (Hashimoto); Aruhi watashi wa (One Day, I . . .) (Okamoto); Uwayaku shitayaku goyounaku (Seniors, Juniors, Colleagues) (Honda); Oneichan makari touru (Young Girl Dares to Pass) (Sugie)
1960 Otoko tai otoko (Man vs. Man) (Taniguchi); Warui yatsu hodo yoku nemuru (The Bad Sleep Well) (Kurosawa); Sarariman Chushingura (Salaried Men’s Loyal Ronin Story) (Sugie—2 parts)
1961 Minami no kaze to namii (South Wind and Waves) (Hashimoto); Yojimbo (The Bodyguard) (Kurosawa); Toiretto buchou (Toilet Section Chief) (Kakei)
1962 Sanjuro (Kurosawa); Shachou koukou-ko (The Story of the Company President’s Overseas Travels) (Sugie—2 parts); Koukousei to onna kyoushi: hijou no seishun (High School Student and Woman Teacher: Merciless Youth) (Onchi)
1963 Tengoku to jigoku (High and Low) (Kurosawa); Goju man-nin no isan (The Legacy of the 500,000) (Mifune); Nippon ichi no iro-otoko (The Best Playboy in Japan) (Furusawa)
1965 Akahige (Red Beard) (Kurosawa); Tanuki no taishou (Badger General) (Yamamoto); Kemonomichi (The Way of the Beast) (Sugawa)
1966 Onna wa ikuman artiotemo (Although There Are Millions of Women) (Sugie); Jajauma narashi (The Taming of the Shrew) (Sugie); Sanbiki no tanuki (Three Badgers) (Suzuki); Tanuki no kyoujitsu (Badger’s Holiday) (Yamamoto)
1967 Jouiuchi (Rebellion) (Kobayashi)
1968 Toshigoro (The Prime of Life) (Deme)
1969 Dankon (Ballet Wound) (Moritani)

1970 Tora! Tora! Tora! (Fleischer, Masuda, and Fukasaku); Dodesukaden (Dodeskaden) (Kurosawa)
1971 Dare no tame ni aisaruka (For Whom Do We Love?) (Deme)
1972 Kaigun tokubetsu nenshouhei (Navy’s Special Boy Sailors) (Imai)
1973 Ningen kakumai (Human Revolution) (Masuda and Nakano); Nippon chiuibotsu (The Sinking of Japan; Tidal Wave) (Moritani and Nakano)
1974 Nosutoradamu no daiyogen (Nostradamus’ Great Prophecy) (Masuda, Nakano, and Sakano)
1975 Seishun no mon (The Gate of Youth) (Urayama); Tokyo-wan enjou (Tokyo Bay on Fire) (Ishida and Nakano)
1976 Suri Lanka no ai to wakare (Love and Separation in Sri Lanka) (Kinoshita); Zoku ningen kakumai (Human Revolution; Sequel) (Masadu)
1977 Seishun no mon: Jiritsu hen (The Gate of Youth: Independence) (Urayama)
1978 Seishoku no ishique (The Foundation of Ordination) (Moritani)
1980 Kagemusha (The Shadow Warrior; The Double) (Kurosawa)
1982 Maboroshi no mizuumi (Lake of Illusion) (Hashimoto); Kaikyou (Strait) (Moritani)
1983 Shousetsu Yoshida gakkou (Novel: Yoshida School) (Moritani); Izakaya Chouji (Chouji the Bar Owner) (Kouhata)
1985 Ran (Kurosawa) (co)
1990 Dreams (Kurosawa) (co)
1991 Rhapsody in August (Kurosawa)
1999 Ame agaru (After the Rain) (Koizumi)

* * *

Although Yoshiro Muraki has worked on more than 60 films since the mid-1950s, he is most famous for his collaboration with Akira Kurosawa. He and his colleague and future wife Shinobu were nominally assistant art directors for Kurosawa’s Stray Dog, but in fact were primarily responsible for the difficult job of constructing many sets under time and budget pressures.

He was promoted to art director in 1955, and his first work as art director for Kurosawa was in Record of a Living Being. Since that film, he has worked on all of the master director’s films except Dersu Uzala. Kurosawa’s extremely high standards challenged Muraki to create memorable production designs for each of his films. For example, the dark shining floors and audaciously simple interior sets of the castle of The Throne of Blood are an ideal backdrop for the intrigues of its occupants. Other memorable sets include the houses and restaurants along a road where gusts of wind swirl the dust in Yojimbo, the spacious hilltop mansion and the overheated hovel of the slum in High and Low, and the erratic shapes of the living spaces in the slum in Dodeskaden.

As the scale and expense of Kurosawa’s productions grew (limiting his filmmaking opportunities), Muraki’s work came to symbolize the uncompromising standard of craftsmanship which Kurosawa demands from his crew. For Kagemusha and Ran, Muraki recreated the castles and battlefields of the sixteenth-century Japanese civil war period with meticulous care, choosing authentic furniture and construction materials in order to create the proper setting for the drama. His work is based on his own thorough historical research, as well as on his ingenuity in varying the scale of the sets and props to create the images which will work most effectively on film.
At Toho Studio, Muraki had worked on many other film genres, including white-collar office comedies, melodramas, youth romances, and action films. Since establishing his own design company in 1970, he has collaborated on many big-budget war films and disaster films.

—Kyoko Hirano

MURCH, Walter

Film Editor, Re-recording Engineer, Writer and Director. Nationality: American. Education: Attended Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore; graduate work at University of Southern California, Los Angeles. Career: 1969—first collaboration with the director Francis Ford Coppola, The Rain People; 1985—co-wrote and directed the film Return to Oz. Awards: British Academy (BAFTA) Film Awards for Best Film Editing and Best Sound Track, for The Conversation, 1974 (editing and sound); Academy Award for Best Sound, for Apocalypse Now, 1979; Lifetime Achievement Award, Cinema Audio Society, 1994; Academy Awards for Best Film Editing and Best Sound, American Cinema Editors Eddie Award for Best Edited Feature Film, BAFTA Film Award for Best Editing, for The English Patient, 1997; Maverick Tribute Award, Cinequest San Jose Film Festival, 1998.

Films as Supervising Sound Editor/Re-recording Engineer:

- 1969 The Rain People (Coppola)
- 1971 THX 1138 (Lucas) (+ co-wr)
- 1972 The Godfather (Coppola)
- 1973 American Graffiti (Lucas)
- 1974 The Godfather, Part II (Coppola)
- 1979 Apocalypse Now (Coppola) (+ ed)
- 1981 Dragonslayer (M. Robbins)
- 1990 Ghost (Zucker) (+ ed); The Godfather, Part III (Coppola) (+ ed)
- 1993 House of Cards (Lessac) (+ ed)
- 1994 Romeo Is Bleeding (Medak) (+ ed); Crumb (Zweigoff)
- 1995 First Knight (Zucker) (+ ed)

Films as Editor:

- 1974 The Conversation (Coppola)
- 1977 Julia (Zinnemann)
- 1986 Captain Eo (Coppola)
- 1988 The Unbearable Lightness of Being (Kaufman)
- 1996 The English Patient (Minghella)
- 1999 The Talented Mr. Ripley (Minghella); Dunbarton Bridge (Koppelman) (consulting editor)

Film as Director and Co-Writer:

- 1970 THX 1138 (co-sc only)
- 1985 Return to Oz

Publications

By MURCH: book—

In the Blink of an Eye, Sydney, 1992.

By MURCH: articles—

“From Here to Eternity,” in DGA Magazine (Los Angeles), May-June 1997.

On MURCH: articles—

Filmmakers Newsletter (Ward Hill, Massachusetts), December 1974.

Cinefax, December 1980.

Journal of the University Film and Video Association, Vol. 33, No. 4, Fall 1981.
“Sound Mixing and Apocalypse Now,” in Film Sound: Theory and Practice, edited by Elisabeth Weis and John Belton, New York, 1985.

Cinefax, June 1985.

Jones, Alan, on Return to Oz in Cinefantastique (New York), July 1985.

* * *

Walter Murch calls himself a sound designer, disdaining the traditional title sound editor, and refers to his work as a sound montage, not a sound track. To some degree, these changes reflect the growing accommodation of moviemaking craft to the cultural area of art. Long associated with Francis Coppola and George Lucas, Murch is very much identified with the movement now termed retrospectively as the “Hollywood Renaissance,” a period of American filmmaking that manifested, in part, a rejection of commercial approaches and a flourishing of European-derived ideas of cinema art. To term the sound track a montage, of course, is nothing new; film theorists from Eisenstein to the semioticians have recognized the complex ways in which sounds themselves may be layered and the resulting “mix” juxtaposed with the succession of images. Murch expresses this traditional view when he says: “Out of the juxtaposition of what the sound is telling you and what the picture is telling you, you (the audience) come up with a third idea which is composed of both picture and sound and resolves their superficial differences.”

Yet Murch’s description of his activity as sound designer does reflect a significant change within the industry, a change Murch himself has been somewhat responsible for. For even as various techniques have enabled a richer, more powerful, and layered sound track to be produced, so have films become more aural (if not less visible), with sound contributing much more than in the past to the total cinematic experience.

Murch’s work on Coppola’s The Conversation is both exemplary and instructive in this regard. The film concerns the morally dubious activities of a professional eavesdropper, a technician who is the film’s self-reflexive image of its own preoccupations with the sound mix. Murch’s effects are complicated here and take full advantage of the fact that sound, unlike image, can be “located” both within the story world and outside it, in the realm of narrative comment. The film’s initial bravura sequence, justly celebrated, features a gradual zoom in to a crowed city park where the actions and conversation of a “target” couple are to be recorded. While the camera has no trouble providing a more or less unproblematic series of images, the sound track is filled with audio bleeps, distorting noises, gaps, and inadequate levels. The spectator is disoriented by the montage of clear image track and unclear sound, but this disorientation is soon revealed as “motivated,” that is, we are seeing and hearing with the surveillers. Both image and sound are provided by diegetic narrators, and the limitations of both are reproduced by the film’s narrator. The subsequent editing of the recorded conversation is depicted and eventually leads to the revelation that the eavesdropper has been used by his employers as part of a murder scheme. The sound images of this conversation (and occasionally the visual ones as well) also figure subjectively in the film, as part of the main character’s consciousness and memory. Though the film has nondiegetic music (mainly a simple piano melody which plays expressively, in the traditional way, over certain diegetic sound silent sequences), it has no music director.

Murch is responsible, as sound designer, for the integration of music and sound. In fact, nondiegetic noise often performs the traditional function of musical phrases. As the eavesdropper examines the motel toit which, he thinks, may reveal the traces of the murder for which he is partly responsible, we hear, louder than normal, the sound of the toilet valve on the sound track. Gradually, this diegetic sound is merged with audio bleeps reminding us of the recorded conversation, and this sound in turn is transformed into a very loud and grating nondiegetic synthesized noise (which resembles very squeaky train brakes). Though nondiegetic, this sound expresses the horror and becomes the narrational correlative of the eavesdropper’s discovery: as he flushes the toilet, it spills over with blood and bandages, revealing his fears to be justified. Murch here appears to be developing further the use of “shrieking violins” in Psycho. He also anticipates much contemporary sound design where the distinction between music (“organized noise”) and other expressive nondiegetic sounds has been problematized.

Murch’s other work is similarly interesting, if less foregrounded by the dramatic elements of the films in question. In THX 1138, a modernist science-fiction film scripted by George Lucas and Murch (with Coppola as executive producer), Murch demonstrates how much our sense of reality depends on the myriad of sounds we constantly hear. The horrifying vision of a future world inhabited by exploited workers forced by the government to take mind-altering drugs is completed by an alternate reality of unpleasant, disorienting sounds which are constantly difficult to “read.” THX 1138 is a rare, perhaps unique production in which the sound designer is also responsible in part for the script (an interesting reversal of the more ordinary case in which the director, whose province is largely the image, is also the film’s writer). Not a commercial success, the film is nonetheless a minor masterpiece of the genre because it demonstrates the centrality of sound and hearing in our relationship to the real.

Apocalypse Now offered Murch a different kind of challenge: not creating an alternate reality, but forging a hyperreality, an intersection between a dense world of aural experience and the subjectivity of those trapped within it. The most notable and typical sound image in this film is thus the aural equivalent of a fade out/fade in. As he lies in a Saigon hotel room in a drunken, drugged stupor, the film’s protagonist dreams of a nightmare jungle, engulfed by flames, traversed by ghastly helicopters, their rotors beating a surreal, otherworldly “whoosh.” He wakes and the whoosh “bleeds” into the whirr of the overhead fan. This is indeed an effect aptly termed a montage, and it demonstrates the incredible talent of Murch and the importance of his contributions to the art cinema of the Hollywood Renaissance.

During the last decade and a half, Murch has continued to find steady employment in a very different kind of Hollywood, one unfortunately devoted to the kinds of special effects—those that produce violent spectacle and visual fantasy—in which he has less interest. Nevertheless he has been able to work on projects outside the mainstream action film. Return to Oz allowed Murch to revisit a favored childhood story; the result is a rather ordinary, if quite competent, film substantially aided by his direction and screenwriting contributions. The Godfather, Part III, with its epic sweep and several complex sequences, challenged his sound editing and rerecording skills, as did Ghost, with its need for otherworldly visual and sound images; the success of both films is to be credited in part to Murch’s abilities. Even Murch’s artistry could not save the dismal production of First Knight from failure; yet it is undeniable that his effects create the proper aural ambience for an Arthurian fantasy. The neo-noirness of Romeo Is Bleeding unfortunately did not offer Murch a chance to recreate his stunning effects from The Conversation; even Murch’s considerable skills as an editor were not up to the task of rescuing director Medak’s confusingly told story from tedium and, frequently, inconsequence. Murch was more successful in editing The Unbearable Lightness of Being, based on the complex and often obscure Milan Kundera novel; here Murch is able to articulate the intimate connection between erotic and political events through judicious cutting, though he proved unable to reduce the film to a manageable commercial length (it runs almost three hours).

Murch’s most notable recent project, editing the film adaptation of surrealistic Michael Ondradgie novel The English Patient, offered Murch even better opportunities to create meaning through the editing process, a task whose joys and discontents are experienced by his closest fictional reflex, the harried private detective and sound engineer of The Conversation. The novel’s confusingly implausible, even absurd plot was expertly trimmed by scenarist/director Anthony Minghella, yielding a still complex story of bizarrely intertwined fates; Murch’s contribution was to make sure the plot’s intricately connected segments of present action and flashback made sense and did not appear to be simply disconcerting fragments. Despite the considerable challenge, Murch was extremely successful, making the most of Mighella’s fine direction of a talented cast and John Seale’s lushly poetic cinematography.

—R. Barton Palmer

MUREN, Dennis

Visual Effects Director. Nationality: American. Born: Glendale, California, 1 November 1946. Education: Pasadena City College, California, 1966–68; studied business at California State University, Los Angeles. Family: Married Zara Pinfold, 1981. Career: 1968–75—Freelance special effects expert (specializing in stop motion and miniature photography); 1975–76—camera operator for Cascade of California, Hollywood; 1976—recruited for the Industrial Light and Magic company; 1980—promoted to ILM visual effects director, pioneering work in computer animation; currently senior special effects supervisor at ILM. Television work: 1978, Battlestar Galactica; 1984, Caravan of Courage (The Ewok Adventure). Awards: Academy Awards for effects (shared) for The Empire Strikes Back, E.T., Return of the Jedi, Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom, Innerspace, The Abyss, Terminator 2: Judgement Day, Jurassic Park, and Star Wars: Episode I—The Phantom Menace; Special Academy Scientific/Technical Award for the development of a Motion Picture Figure Mover for animation photography, 1981; British Academy of Film and Television Awards (shared) for Return of the Jedi, Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom, Terminator 2: Judgement Day, and Jurassic Park; Emmy Award for Caravan of Courage; Star on the Walk of Fame; Academy of Science Fiction, Horror, and Fantasy Films Saturn Award for Star Wars: Episode I—The Phantom Menace, 2000. Member: American Society of Cinematographers; Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

Films (all special effects credits in collaboration):

1971 Equinox (J. Woods)
1974 Flesh Gordon (Ziehm, Benveniste) (miniatures; rear projection)
1977 Star Wars (Lucas) (animation sequence); Close Encounters of the Third Kind (Spielberg)
1980 The Empire Strikes Back (Kershner)
1981 Dragonslayer (M. Robbins) (miniatures; opticals)
1982 E.T. (Spielberg) (visual sfx supervisor)
1983 Return of the Jedi (R. Marquand)
1984 Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom (Spielberg)
1985 Young Sherlock Holmes (Levinson)
1986 Captain EO (Coppola) (short)
1987 Innerspace (Dante); Empire of the Sun (Spielberg)
1988 Willow (R. Howard)
1989 Ghostbusters II (Reitman); The Abyss (Cameron)
1991 Terminator 2: Judgement Day (Cameron)
1993 Jurassic Park (Spielberg) (full motion dinosaurs)
1995 Casper (B. Silberling); Jumanji (J. Johnston)
1996 Twister (de Bont)
1997 The Lost World: Jurassic Park (Spielberg); Deconstructing Harry (Allen)
1999 Star Wars: Episode I—The Phantom Menace (Lucas)

* * *

From the endearingly arthritic monsters of Equinox to the eye-popping big-as-life dinosaurs of Jurassic Park and its sequels, the career of special effects artist Dennis Muren offers a virtual step-by-step guide to the evolution of cinema wizardry over the past three decades. Associated with George Lucas’ groundbreaking effects house Industrial Light & Magic since its precarious beginnings in 1975, Muren’s work in the ever-expanding field of computer animation has (somewhat ironically) supplanted the now outmoded stop motion techniques that attracted him to the industry in the first place. Muren is a multiple Academy Award winner from The Empire Strikes Back onwards. His regular collaborations with fantasy giants Lucas and Steven Spielberg illustrate all too clearly the double-edged nature of state-of-the-art effects technology: the more marvels there are available at the touch of a keyboard button, the less room there is for individual flair and imagination (not to mention restraint). The Jurassic Park dinosaurs may be flawless in digital execution and jaw-dropping on screen, yet they remain oddly anonymous when compared with the best work of stop motion specialists Willis O’Brien and Ray Harryhausen. Similarly, the menagerie of CGI space creatures in Phantom Menace seems to have strayed into the film from some ultra high-tech arcade game, existing only to be blasted into oblivion for maximum points. Muren and colleagues can guarantee a special effects roller coaster ride; what they can no longer promise is a monster to remember.

Begun when its creator was still a teenager, Muren’s debut effort Equinox (1966–69) should be viewed charitably. Working as producer, co-director, co-photographer and co-special effects man, he enlisted the assistance of fellow animation fan Dave Allen, with a little professional help from Academy Award nominee Jim Danforth. If the amateur 16mm production did not quite do justice to the intriguing story of a missing professor (a cameo from fantasy writer Fritz Leiber), an occult bible and monsters from an infernal dimension, there was at least a show of promise, though the “professional” version released in 1971 by producer Jack E. Harris (with new footage) didn’t set the world on fire. Muren’s first real professional feature film work, handling some of the miniature and rear projection shots for the watered-down porno parody Flesh Gordon, was still on the very fringes of mainstream filmmaking but, combined with his work on television commercials, it got him noticed by George Lucas.

Founded to handle the unprecedented number of effects shots needed for Star Wars (363), Industrial Light & Magic (ILM) consisted of over 70 employees. While others worked on the revolutionary computerised motion-control scenes (which permitted the camera and model spacecraft movements to be synchronised in a preplanned sequence), Muren handled the brief scene featuring animated chess figures. Though almost a throwaway in the finished film, the miniature monsters stick in the mind, each given just enough hint of bizarre personality. Having become acquainted with Spielberg on Close Encounters of the Third Kind, Muren came into his own with The Empire Strikes Back, which made striking use of stop motion animation, most notably the Evil Empire’s giant four-legged attack machines.

Promoted to visual effects supervisor on E.T., Muren contributed impressive work but not the one special effect everyone remembered: E.T. itself (a mechanical device designed by Carlo Rambaldi). Overseeing the climactic space battle in Return of the Jedi, he freely admitted to both a visible error in a multispacecraft crossover shot and the occasional feeling that the end results never quite lived up to expectations. With the unlovely Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom, Muren went back to stop motion work, ingeniously adapting a standard 35mm stills camera to take shots of a model mine car and its occupants. Edited into a chase sequence, the resulting footage didn’t quite work, the animation jarring with the live action. Clearly a case of room for improvement. Young Sherlock Holmes showcased some of ILM’s first work with computer animation, bringing a stained-glass knight to impressive life. Basically the computer manipulation of digitally stored images (either scanned or computer generated), the process was further refined in Willow, an amiable (if violent) reworking of Star Wars in a sword and sorcery milieu. Alongside a two-headed, troll-chomping monster (unkindly compared by some to Flesh Gordon’s penisaurus), the film introduced audiences to the technomiracle of morphing, the computerised transformation of one digitally stored image into another. Thus enchanted enchantress Patricia Hayes could be seamlessly metamorphosed into a goat, an ostrich, a tiger and finally herself. Terminator II gave the technique a sinister slant, with its “liquid metal” cyborg assassin.

With Jurassic Park, Muren and his collaborators finally convinced audiences that dinosaurs do indeed walk the earth. What neither he nor Spielberg could achieve was a sequence to match the Giant Gorilla-Allosaurus fight in the original King Kong or the cave-man-dinosaur set-to devised by Harryhausen for One Million Years BC. Revisiting Jurassic territory for the disappointing Lost
World sequel, Muren threw in a whole family of human-chomping
Tyrannosaurus Rex yet couldn’t escape the law of diminishing returns
(not helped by Spielberg’s blatant lack of interest in the proceedings).
Spectacle and shocks are fine but the effect is transitory. Phantom Menace, which reduces the once fresh and inventive Star Wars formula to a series of dull, merchandise-oriented set-pieces, lacks even the most superficial thrills. Hamstrung by poor storytelling and non-existent characterisation, ILM couldn’t achieve an engaging or believable alien universe. Muren’s most interesting effect of recent years is Robin Williams’ permanently out-of-focus actor in Deconstructing Harry, a relatively small-scale piece of trickery that enhances rather than overwhelms the accompanying storyline. This aside, it remains to be seen if Muren can still impose the kind of imagination that fired Equinox on the vast bank of digital marvels at his disposal.

—Daniel O’Brien

MUSURACA, Nicholas

Cinematographer. Nationality: Italian. Born: 1892; sometimes billed as Nick Musuraca in the 1920s. Career: 1913—projectionist, editor, and assistant director, Vitagraph, New York; from 1918 camerman; joined Robertson-Cole, and stayed with its successor companies, FBO and RKO, until 1954; then freelance, often for TV. Died:
In 1975.

Films as Cinematographer:

1923 On the Banks of the Wabash (Blackton)
1926 Hell Bent for Heaven (Blackton); The Passionate Quest (Blackton); The Gilded Highway (Blackton); Bride of the Storm (Blackton); Shameful Behavior? (Kelley); His New York Wife (Kelley)
1927 The Sonora Kid (De Lacey); The Cherokee Kid (De Lacey);
South Sea Love (R. Ince); Lightning Lariats (De Lacey); Cyclone of the Range (De Lacey); Splitting the Breeze (De Lacey); Tom’s Gang (De Lacey)
1928 Last Lap (Mitchell); Orphan of the Sage (L. King); Rough
Ridin’ Red (L. King); Red Riders of Canada (De Lacey); Tropic Madness (Vignola); Tyrant of Red Gulch (De Lacey);
When the Law Rides (De Lacey); The Avenging Rider
(Fox); Terrors (L. King); The Charge of the Gaucho
(Kelley); Dog Justice (Storm)
1929 The Freckled Rascal (L. King); Gun Law (De Lacey or Burch); Idaho Red (De Lacey); The Pride of Pawnee (De
Lacey); Side Street (St. Clair); The Red Sword (Vignola);
The Trail of the Horse Thieves (De Lacey) 1930 The Cuckoos (Sloane); Inside the Line (Pomeroy); The Conspiracy (Cabanne); Half Shot at Sunset (Sloane); Hook, Line, and Sinker (Cline)
1950 Born to Be Bad (Ray); The Woman on Pier 13 (I Married a Communist) (Stevenson); Riders from Tucson (Selander); Dynamite Pass (Landers); Where Danger Lives (Farrow); The Company She Keeps (Cromwell); Hunt the Man Down (Archainbaud)

1951 Hot Lead (Gilmore); Roadblock (Daniels); The Whip Hand (Menzies)

1952 Clash By Night (F. Lang); A Girl in Every Port (Erskine); Trail Guide (Selander)

1953 Split Second (Powell); Susan Slept Here (Tashlin); The Blue Gardenia (F. Lang); Devil’s Canyon (Werker); The Hitch-Hiker (Lupino)

1957 The Story of Mankind (Allen); Man on the Prowl (Napoleon)

1958 Too Much Too Soon (Napoleon) (co)

Publications

On MUSURACA: article—

Film Dope (Nottingham), March 1991.

* * *

Nicholas Musuraca’s name remains unjustly obscure among the ranks of cinematographers from Hollywood’s golden age. In his prime years at RKO during the 1940s, Musuraca shuttled back and forth between A- and B-films, prestige pictures, and genre potboilers. For this reason, and because many of the motion pictures photographed by Musuraca have attained a classic or landmark status only recently, he remains a neglected master.

Along with Gregg Toland’s work on Citizen Kane, Musuraca’s cinematography for The Stranger on the Third Floor defined the visual conventions for the film noir and codified the RKO look for the 1940s. Musuraca’s photography begins and ends with shadows, owing a major debt to German Expressionism, and can be seen as the leading factor in the resurrection of the style in Hollywood in the 1940s. The dominant tone in his work is black, a stylized bias that lent itself to the film noir and the moody horror films of Val Lewton. But even within the confines of the studio system Musuraca succeeded in transposing his style to other genres. The western Blood on the Moon and George Stevens’s nostalgic family drama I Remember Mama are both infused with the same shadowy visuals that Musuraca brought to the horror film in Cat People and the film noir in The Locket. Through the conventions of varying genres and the differing requirements of numerous directors, Musuraca maintained a uniform personal aesthetic.

The whole of Musuraca’s readily identifiable style can be broken down into five consistent fragments: the use of the complete tonal range of black and white; the low placement of lighting sources; narrow beams of high-key light within a dark frame; a silhouetting technique with an emphasis on lighting for contour; and a penchant for abstraction. The first of these stylistic signatures is the use of the full tonal range of black and white. Best exemplified by the outdoor sequences in Out of the Past, Musuraca created the moving equivalent of Ansel Adams’s “Zone System” of photography in which deep blacks, smooth grays, and sharp whites coexist within the frame. The motion pictures which Musuraca photographed possess a richness and variety of tone that give even the low-budget films an opulent texture. His second rule provided a naturalistic means to achieve an expressionistic result. The low placement of light sources—often in the guise of table lamps, but also fireplaces and campfires—netted a highly expressionistic look as the illuminated subject was trapped by his or her own shadow looming on the walls and ceiling above. The creation of claustrophobia within the frame provided visual collusion for the onerousness of film noir narratives. The third Musuraca trait called for tightly defined high-key light focused on objects, most often faces, in the black void. The technique simultaneously directs the eye to the primary point of interest within the frame while emphasizing the surrounding darkness leading to a tension as the conflicting tones attempt to dominate. Musuraca’s fourth and most readily identifiable trademark is a skimming-silhouetting technique. Figures or faces in the foreground are lit from the side or rear, emphasizing contour while leaving the front largely dark. The resulting highlighted contour of the silhouetted object separates it from the background adding depth to the frame. It is this individual trait that accounts for much of the “archetypal” noir look of The Locket and Out of the Past.

A strong reliance on tonal tension featuring large areas of black led Musuraca to the verge of abstraction in many cases. This fifth trait is evident in a number of the films he photographed as the frame is shattered into geometric patterns of light and shadow. In The Seventh Victim a cosmetics factory at night becomes little more than a collection of rectangular shapes of varying tone. Similarly, many shots of nocturnal San Francisco in Out of the Past suggest that the city is constructed of black quadrangles and white squares of light rather than brick and mortar. In Cat People threat is conveyed by the changing density of the reflected patterns of rippling water on the walls and ceiling surrounding an indoor pool. Musuraca formulated a personal style in a more pronounced way than many other cinematographers working within the studio system, a style that dictated that any place could be threatening at any time. The shadows with which he spoke were just as ominous in the warm kitchen of a turn-of-the-century home as they were in a contemporary landscape or an 18th-century insane asylum. With darkness and light as his instruments, Musuraca charted the topography of menace with unparalleled consistency and artistry.

—Eric Schaefer
NEAME, Ronald

Cinematographer and director. Nationality: British. Born: London, 23 April 1911; father, Elwin Neame, director of silent films, mother Ivy Close, actress. Education: University College School and Hurstpierpoint College. Family: Married 1) Beryl Heanly 15 October 1933; one son, Christopher Elwin; 2) Dona Friedberg 12 September 1993. Career: Became messenger and tea boy at British International Film Studios, 1925; clapper boy and camera assistant on Hitchcock’s Blackmail, 1929; became director of photography, 1934; became producer at Cineguild with Noel Coward, David Lean and Anthony Havelock-Allen (company made Great Expectations (1946), Oliver Twist (1947), and The Passionate Friends (1948); as director of photography became known for the quality of colour filming; turned to directing in 1947; teacher of direction at University of California, Los Angeles from 1992; member of Directors’ Guild of America, American Film Institute, Academy of Motion Pictures, Arts and Sciences (Governor, 1977–79), British Academy of Film and Television Arts (London and Los Angeles), Savile Club (London). Awards: Commander of the British Empire (CBE), 1996. Address: 2317 Kimridge Road, Beverly Hills, CA 90210, U.S.A.

Films as Cinematographer:

1933  Happy (Zelnik)
1934  Give Her a Ring (Giving You the Stars) (Woods); Girls Will Be Boys (Varnel)
1935  A Star Fell From Heaven (Merzbach); Weekend Millionaire (Woods); Music Hath Charms (Bentley, Esway, Summers and Woods); Joy Ride (Hughes); Invitation to the Waltz (Reinhardt); Honours Easy (Brenon); Drake of England (Drake the Pirate, Elizabeth of England) (Woods)
1936  Once in a Million (Woods); The Improper Duchess (Hughes); The Crimes of Stephen Hawke (King); Cafe Colette (Danger in Paris) (Stein)
1937  Keep Fit (Kimmins); Feather Your Nest (Beaudine); Brief Ecstasy (Dangerous Secrets) (Bréville); Against the Tide (Bryce)
1938  Who Goes Next? (Elvey); The Ware Case (Stevenson); Second Thoughts (The Crime of Peter Frame) (Parker); Penny Paradise (Reed); It’s in the Air (George Takes the Air) (Kimmins); I See Ice (Kimmins); The Gaunt Stranger (The Phantom Strikes) (Forde)
1939  Young Man’s Fancy (Stevenson); Trouble Brewing (Kimmins); Let’s Be Famous (Forde); The Four Just Men (The Secret Four) (Forde); Come on George (Kimmins); Cheer Boys Cheer (Forde)
1940  Saloon Bar (Forde); Return to Yesterday (Stevenson); Let George Do It (Varnel)
1941  Major Barbara (Pascal, French and Lean)
1942  One of Our Aircraft Is Missing (Powell and Pressburger); In Which We Serve (Coward and Lean)
1944  This Happy Breed (Lean) (+ sc)
1945  Blihe Spirit (Lean) (+ sc)

Films as Director:

1947  Take My Life
1950  The Golden Salamander (+ co-pr, co-sc)
1952  The Card (The Promoter)
1953  The Million Pound Note (Man with a Million)
1956  The Man Who Never Was 1957  The Seventh Sin
1958  Windom’s Way; The Horse’s Mouth (+ pr)
1960  Tunes of Glory
1962  Escape from Zahrain (+ pr)
1963  I Could Go on Singing
1964  The Chalk Garden
1965  Mister Moses
1966  A Man Could Get Killed; Gambit
1968  Prudence and the Pill
1969  The Prime of Miss Jean Brodie
1970  Scrooge
1972  The Poseidon Adventure
1974  The Odessa File (Die Akte Odessa, Der Fall Odessa)
1979  Meteor (+ ro as British Representative)
1980  Hopscotch
1981  First Monday in October
1986  Foreign Body
1990  Foreign Body
1999  Hitchcock: Shadow of a Genius

Other Films:

1929  Blackmail (Hitchcock) (asst ph)
1946  Brief Encounter (Lean) (co-pr, co-sc); Great Expectations (Lean) (co-pr, sc)
1948  Oliver Twist (Lean) (pr)
1949  The Passionate Friends (One Woman’s Story) (Lean) (pr)
1951  The Magic Box (Boultling) (pr)
1999  Hitchcock: Shadow of a Genius (Dial H Hitchcock: The Genius Behind the Showman, Dial H for Hitchcock) (Haimes—for TV) (ro as himself)

Publications

By NEAME: articles—

“Return of the Native,” interview with G. Fuller, in Stills, no. 25, March 1986.

On NEAME: books—

On NEAME: articles—

On NEAME: film—

A key figure in the British film industry in the mid-twentieth century Ronald (sometimes known as Ronnie) Neame has been involved in some capacity in over some seventy feature films. Besides his work as a cinematographer, he has had success as a producer, a screenwriter, and, since 1947, as a director. Although he continued to work into the 1990s, he will best be remembered as director of the 1970 disaster movie, The Poseidon Adventure, and of comedies such as The Million Pound Note and The Card. As a cinematographer Neame made his most important contributions through his use of Technicolor on the David Lean films This Happy Breed and Blithe Spirit. Given that he was born in 1911, it is perhaps surprising that Neame was the second generation of his family to be involved in filmmaking. Even though his father, Elwin Neame, was a director of silent films in which his mother starred, Ronald Neame did not begin his career with any privileges. But within seven years, he did work his way up from tea boy to director of photography at British International Film Studios. It is interesting, given his father’s profession, that Neame’s most significant contribution before he became director of photography was as assistant to cinematographer Clyde de Vinna on Alfred Hitchcock’s thriller, Blackmail. Hitchcock’s eleventh feature was released in both silent and sound versions, placing the beginning of Neame’s career at the very start of British sound film. Blackmail is also important from the point of view of cinematography because it was one of the earliest films to have been made using cameras mounted on wheels, anticipating modern “dollies” by several years.

It was in his collaboration with Noël Coward, David Lean, and Anthony Havelock-Allen, however, that Neame produced his best work as a cinematographer. Together they formed Cineguild, establishing David Lean as among the best British directors, and Ronald Neame as his equal in colour cinematography. Neame was one of only four cinematographers used by Lean in his fifty year career. In This Happy Breed and Blithe Spirit, for which Neame also wrote the screenplays, he set new standards in the use of the Technicolor process. Both films are noted for the warmth of their colour photography and the effectiveness with which the camera catches the quality of light.

Neame’s enthusiasm for filmmaking, and for colour photography in particular, led him to producing and finally directing by the late 1940s. Take My Life, his directorial debut, is a strong thriller, which builds the tension through a series of small-scale set pieces, and is helped along by the photography of Guy Green, another of Lean’s favoured cinematographers. Such attention to detail would seem to be a consequence of his career behind the camera, for it became a hallmark of Neame’s direction. His ability to place the camera became ever more assured, and in the 1950s he was at the forefront of colour film direction.

Neame’s detailed visual style has proved successful for a range of film types, from thrillers to melodramas. But it is in gentle comedies, such as The Million Pound Note, an adaptation of a Mark Twain story in which Gregory Peck struggles to spend the large denomination banknote of the title, that his direction seems most comfortable. At his best, he also drew excellent performances from his leading actors. Alec Guinness in the title role of The Card and Gene Hackman as the troubled but heroic priest in The Poseidon Adventure both give of their best, while Maggie Smith is impressive in the entertaining but otherwise thin adaptation, The Prime of Miss Jean Brodie. Neame has been nominated for Oscars as a writer, producer, director, and for special effects. Probably his best film, Tunes of Glory, a tense army melodrama, was nominated for a BAFTA in 1961. Although his technical accomplishments in the 1930s and 1940s undoubtedly helped when it came to directing, his films, good-looking though most of them are, lack the broad insight of a master such as Lean. Nevertheless, Neame’s output has consistently scored at the box office if not with the critics.

From his beginnings running errands, to his retirement with a knighthood as a grand old man of British cinema, Ronald Neame has played a part in most aspects of the filmmaking process. With a history that spans a century of cinema, the Neame family business continues with his son, Christopher, who works as a film producer.

—Chris Routledge

NEWMAN, Alfred

Composer. Nationality: American. Born: New Haven, Connecticut, 17 March 1901. Education: Studied piano with Rubin Goldmark and George Wedge; also studied with Schoenberg. Career: Pianist in vaudeville and on Broadway; studied conducting with William Daly: George Wedge; also studied with Schoenberg. 17 March 1901.

Films as Composer:

1931 The Devil to Pay (Fitzmaurice); Reaching for the Moon (Goulding); Kiki (Taylor); Indiscreet (McCarey); Street Scene (K. Vidor); The Unholy Garden (Fitzmaurice); The Age for Love (Lloyd); Corsair (West); Around the World in Eighty Minutes with Douglas Fairbanks (Fleming)

1932 Arrowsmith (Ford); Cock of the Air (Buckingham); The Greeks Had a Word for Them (L. Sherman); Sky Devils (Sutherland); Rain (Milestone); Cynara (K. Vidor); Mr. Robinson Crusoe (Sutherland)

1933 Secrets (Borzage); I Cover the Waterfront (Cruze); The Bowery (Walsh); Blood Money (Brown); Advice to the Lovelorn (Werker); The Masquerader (Wallace); Gallant Lady (La Cava); The House of Rothschild (Werker)

1934 Looking for Trouble (Wellman); Nana (Lady of the Boulevards) (Arzner); Born to Be Bad (L. Sherman); The Affairs of Cellini (La Cava); The Last Gentleman (Lanfield); Bulldog Drummond Strikes Back (Del Ruth); The Cat’s Paw (Taylor); Our Daily Bread (K. Vidor); Transatlantic Merry-Go-Round (Stoloff); We Live Again (Mamoulian);

1935 Clive of India (Boleslawsky); The Wedding Night (K. Vidor); Les Miserables (Boleslawsky); Cardinal Richelieu (Lee); The Call of the Wild (Wellman); Barbary Coast (Hawks); She (Pichel and Holden); Splendor (Nugent); Metropolitan (Boleslawsky)

1936 These Three (Wyler); Dodsworth (Wyler); Come and Get It (Wyler and Hawks)

1937 Beloved Enemy (Potter); You Only Live Once (F. Lang); History Is Made at Night (Borzage); Woman Chases Man (Blystone); Slave Ship (Garnett); Wee Willie Winkie (Gord); Stella Dallas (K. Vidor); Dead End (Wyler); The Prisoner of Zenda (Cromwell)

1938 The Hurricane (Ford); The Cowboy and the Lady (Potter); Trade Winds (Garnett)

1939 Gunga Din (Steevens); Wuthering Heights (Wyler); Young Mr. Lincoln (Ford); Beau Geste (Wellman); The Rains Came (Brown); The Real Glory (Hathaway); Drums Along the Mohawk (Ford); The Hunchback of Notre Dame (Dieterle); Stanley and Livingstone (H. King); Vigil in the Night (Stevens)

1940 The Blue Bird (W. Lang); The Grapes of Wrath (Ford); Little Old New York (H. King); Earthbound (Pichel); Foreign Correspondent (Hitchcock); Brigham Young—Frontiersman (Hathaway); They Knew What They Wanted (Kalin); The Mark of Zorro (Mamoulian)

1941 Hudson’s Bay (Pichel); Belle Starr (Cummins); Charley’s Aunt (Charley’s American Aunt) (Mayo); Man Hunt (F. Lang); Wild Goose Calling (Brahm); Ball of Fire (Hawks); Son of Fury (Cromwell); Remember the Day (H. King); How Green Was My Valley (Ford)

1942 The Battle of Midway (Ford); To the Shores of Tripoli (Humberstone); Ten Gentlemen from West Point (Hathaway); This above All (Litvak); The Pied Piper (Pichel); Girl Trouble (Schuster); The Black Swan (H. King); Life Begins at 8:30 (Pichel)

1943 December 7th (Toland and Ford); The Moon Is Down (Pichel); My Friend Flicka (Schuster); Heaven Can Wait (Lubitsch); Claudia (Goulding); The Song of Bernadette (H. King); Prelude to War (Capra) (in Why We Fight series)

1944 The Purple Heart (Milestone); Wilson (H. King); Sunday Dinner for a Soldier (Bacon); The Fighting Lady (doc); The Keys of the Kingdom (Stahl)

1945 A Tree Grows in Brooklyn (Kazan); A Royal Scandal (Carrin) (Preminger); A Bell for Adano (H. King)

1946 Leave Her to Heaven (Stahl); Drangonwyck (Mankiewicz); The Razor’s Edge (Goulding); 13 Rue Madeleine (Hathaway)

1947 Captain from Castille (H. King); Gentleman’s Agreement (Kazan)

1948 Call Northside 777 (Hathaway); Sitting Pretty (W. Lang); The Walls of Jericho (Stahl); Cry of the City (Siodmak); Yellow Sky (Wellman)

1949 Come to the Stable (Koster) (song); Chicken Every Sunday (Seaton); A Letter to Three Wives (Mankiewicz); Mother Is a Freshman (Bacon); Down to the Sea in Ships (Hathaway); Mr. Belvedere Goes to College (Nugent); Pinky (Kazan); Prince of Foxes (H. King); Twelve O’Clock High (H. King); Thieves’ Highway (Dassin)
1950 When Willie Comes Marching Home (Ford); The Big Life (Seaton); The Gunfighter (H. King); Panic in the Streets (Kazan); No Way Out (Mankiewicz); All about Eve (Mankiewicz); For Heaven’s Sake (Seaton)

1951 The Guest (Forest—short); Fourteen Hours (Hathaway); Take Care of My Little Girl (Negulesco); David and Bathsheba (H. King)

1952 Wait till the Sun Shines, Nellie (H. King); What Price Glory? (Ford); The Snows of Kilimanjaro (H. King) (song); Way of a Gaucho (Tourneur) (co, uncredited); The Prisoner of Zenda (Thorpe); Night without Sleep (Baker) (co); The President’s Lady (Levin)

1953 The Robe (Koster)
1954 Desire (Koster) (song); Hell and High Water (Fuller); The Egyptian (Curtiz) (co)

1955 A Man Called Peter (Koster); The Seven Year Itch (Wilders); Love Is A Many-Splendored Thing (H. King)

1956 Bus Stop (Logan) (co); Anastasia (Litvak)

1958 A Certain Smile (Negulesco); The Bravados (H. King) (co)

1959 The Diary of Anne Frank (Seaton); The Best of Everything (Negulesco)

1961 The Pleasure of His Company (Seaton); The Counterfeit Traitor (Seaton)

1962 How the West Was Won (Hathaway, Ford, and Marshall); The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance (Ford) (theme from Young Mr. Lincoln)

1965 The Greatest Story Ever Told (Stevens)

1966 Nevada Smith (Hathaway)

1967 Firecreek (McEveety)

1970 Airport (Seaton)

Films as Musical Director:

1930 Whoopee! (Freeland)
1931 Campus Sweetheart (Fitzmaurice—short); City Lights (Chaplin) (orchestration); Palmy Days (Sutherland); Tonight or Never (LeRoy)

1932 The Kid from Spain (McCary)

1933 Hallelujah, I’m a Bum (Milestone); Broadway Thru a Keyhole (L. Sherman); Roman Scandals (Tuttle)

1934 Moulin Rouge (Lanfield); One Night of Love (Schertzinger); Kid Millions (Del Ruth)

1935 Folies Bergere (The Man from the Folies Bergere) (Del Ruth); The Dark Angel (Franklin); Broadway Melody of 1936 (Del Ruth); The Melody Lingers On (Burton)

1936 Strike Me Pink (Taurog); One Rainy Afternoon (Lee); Dancing Pirate (Corrigan); Modern Times (Chaplin) (orchestration); Ramona (H. King); The Gay Desperado (Mamoulian); Born to Dance (Del Ruth)

1937 When You’re in Love (For You Alone) (Riskin); 52nd Street (Young)

1938 The Goldwyn Follies (Marshall); The Adventures of Marco Polo (Mayo); Alexander’s Ragtime Band (H. King)

1939 The Star Maker (Del Ruth); Barricade (Ratoff); They Shall Have Music (Melody of Youth) (Mayo)

1940 Lillian Russell (Cummings); Maryland (H. King); Young People (Dwan); Tin Pan Alley (W. Lang); Broadway Melody of 1940 (Taurog); Public Debt No. 1 (Ratoff); The Westerner (Wyler)

1941 That Night in Rio (Cummings); The Great American Broadcast (Mayo); Blood and Sand (Mamoulian); Tobacco Road (Ford); A Yank in the R.A.F. (H. King); Weekend in Havana (W. Lang); Moon over Miami (W. Lang)

1942 Song of the Islands (W. Lang); Orchestra Wives (Mayo); Rings on Her Fingers (Mamoulian); Prelude to War (Capra); My Gal Sal (Cummings); Springtime in the Rockies (Cummings); Moonstruck (Mayo); China Girl (Hathaway)

1943 Coney Island (W. Lang); Immortal Sergeant (Stahl); Wintertime (Brahm); The Gang’s All Here (The Girl He Left Behind) (Berkeley)

1944 Irish Eyes Are Smiling (Ratoff) (co); The Sullivans (The Fighting Sullivans) (Bacon)

1945 Billy Rose’s Diamond Horseshoe (Seaton) (co); State Fair (W. Lang) (co); The Dolly Sisters (Cummings)

1946 Centennial Summer (Preminger); Three Little Girls in Blue (Humberstone); Margie (H. King); My Darling Clementine (Ford)

1947 Boomerang! (Kazan); The Shocking Miss Pilgrim (Seaton) (co); The Foxes of Harrow (Stahl); Mother Wore Tights (W. Lang); I Wonder Who’s Kissing Her Now (Bacon); The Late George Apley (Mankiewicz); Moss Rose (Ratoff); Miracle on 34th Street (Seaton)

1948 Fury at Furnace Creek (Humberstone); That Lady in Ermine (Lubitsch) (co); That Wonderful Urge (Sinclair); Unfaithfully Yours (P. Sturges); The Iron Curtain (Wellman); When My Baby Smiles at Me (W. Lang); The Snake Pit (Litvak)

1949 Dancing in the Dark (Reis); You’re My Everything (W. Lang); Oh, You Beautiful Doll (Stahl); Everybody Does It (Goulding)

1950 Broken Arrow (Daves); Whirlpool (Preminger); Two Flags West (Wise); My Blue Heaven (Koster)

1951 On the Riviera (W. Lang); Call Me Mister (Bacon); Half Angel (Sale) (+ song); House on Telegraph Hill (Wise); People Will Talk (Mankiewicz)

1952 With a Song in My Heart (W. Lang); Viva Zapata! (Kazan); O. Henry’s Full House (Hathaway and others); Les Miserables (Milestone); Kangaroo (Milestone); Pony Soldier (Newman); Stars and Stripes Forever (Koster); Destination Gobi (Wise)

1953 The Desert Rats (Wise); Tonight We Sing (Leisen); Call Me Madam (W. Lang); The Treasure of the Golden Condor (Daves); How to Marry a Millionaire (Negulesco) (co)

1954 There’s No Business Like Show Business (W. Lang) (co)

1955 Daddy Long Legs (Negulesco)

1956 Carousel (H. King); The King and I (W. Lang) (co)

1957 April Love (Levin) (co-adaptation)

1958 South Pacific (Logan) (co)

1962 Flower Drum Song (Koster); State Fair (J. Ferrer)

1967 Camelot (Logan)

Publications

By NEWMAN: articles—

In Film Score, edited by Tony Thomas, South Brunswick, New Jersey, 1979.

Soundtrack! (Hollywood), December 1990.
On NEWMAN: articles—

Film (London), April 1974.
Darby, Ken, in Film Music Notebook (Calabasas, California), vol. 2, no. 2, 1976.
Dirigido por . . . (Barcelona), September and October 1982.

* * *

Even allowing for the hyperbole associated with Hollywood there is little risk in claiming Alfred Newman as a titan in the art, craft, and business of supplying films with music. In addition to being an imaginative and inventive composer and possibly the best conductor in film history, he was also the head of a major music department. From 1940 to 1960 Newman was in command of music for 20th Century-Fox and assembled a stable of top arrangers, composers, and musicians. Always keenly aware of sound, he said, “In the recording of music for motion pictures it is possible to achieve total perfection of performance. Don’t settle for anything less.”

Newman was a pianistic prodigy. He was also the eldest of ten children in a poor family and the opportunities for his musical education were few. Friends brought about the winning of a scholarship and he was placed with Sigismond Stojowski in New York. He studied composition as well as the piano but by the age of 14 it was necessary for him to find work to help support his family. He was hired by the Strand Theatre on Broadway as a boy-wonder pianist, which led to offers in vaudeville and opportunities in the musical theatre. Feeling limited as a pianist, Newman found bigger challenges as a conductor and by the age of 17 was thus engaged. With George White’s Scandals of 1920 his career began in earnest and he was busy as a theatre conductor all through that decade.

In 1930 Irving Berlin contracted Newman as the music director for his film Reaching for the Moon and with that success Newman was thereafter a man of the movies. The Berlin film was made at the Goldwyn Studios and its owner asked Newman to be his music director. In 1933 Darryl F. Zanuck set up his 20th Century Films at the Goldwyn Studios and made a similar request, which Newman was able to accept, in addition to his Goldwyn duties. Once clear of his Goldwyn contract he joined Zanuck in 1940 as his music director. No film musician received more honors than Newman. Of 45 Oscar nominations, he won on nine occasions, although he readily pointed out that these wins were as a music director and involved the work of other men. The Oscar for which he was most proud was for The Song of Bernadette. Among the other original dramatic scores nominated: How Green Was My Valley, Captain from Castile, All about Eve, David and Bathsheba, Anastasia, The Diary of Anne Frank, and, his final film, Airport. In all he worked on more than 250 films, always claiming that he much preferred the gregarious job of the conductor to the loneliness of the composer. Newman wrote no music other than for film and claimed no interest in any other form of composition. Of his business he said, “The music must always be inspired by the picture of which it is a part, not by the desire of the composer to express himself. The effect of music in films is largely one of association, the important thing being to evoke the proper mood and spirit. If you can’t accept these terms—stay away from films.”

—Tony Thomas

NEWMAN, Thomas

Films as Composer

1984 Reckless (Foley); Revenge of the Nerds (Kanew); Grandview U.S.A. (Kleiser); The Seduction of Gine (Another High Roller) (Freedman)
1985 Real Genius (Coolidge) The Man With One Red Shoe (Dragoti); Desperately Seeking Susan (Seidelman); Girls Just Want to Have Fun (Metter)
1986 Jumpin’ Jack Flash (Marshall); Gung Ho (Working Class Man) (Howard)
1987 The Lost Boys (Schumacher); Light of Day (Schrade); Less Than Zero (Kanevskya)
1988 The Prince of Pennsylvania (Nyswaner); The Great Outdoors (Deutch)
1989 Cookie (Seidelman)
1990 Welcome Home, Roxy Carmichael (Abrahams); Naked Tango (Schrade); Men Don’t Leave (Brickman); Heat Wave — for TV (Hooks)
1991 Deceived (Harris); Career Opportunities (One Wild Night) (Gordon); The Rapture (Tolkien); The Linguini Incident (Shepard); Fried Green Tomatoes (Fried Green Tomatoes at the Whistle Stop Cafe) (Avnet)
1992 Whispers in the Dark (Crowe); Scent of a Woman (Brest/Smithee); Those Secrets — for TV (Manson); The Player (Altman); Citizen Cohn — for TV (Pierson)
1993 Josh and S. A. M (Weber); Flesh and Bone (Kloves)
1994 The War (Avnet); Threesome (Fleming); The Shawshank Redemption (Darabont); Little Women (Armstrong); The Favor (Petrie); Corrina, Corrina (themes) (Nelson)
1995 Unstrung Heroes (Keaton); How to Make an American Quilt (Moorhouse)
1996 Up Close & Personal (Dansie); Phenomenon (Turteltaub); American Buffalo (Corrente); The People vs. Larry Flint (Forman)
1997 Mad City (Costa-Gavras); Red Corner (Avnet); Oscar and Lucinda (Armstrong)
1998 The Horse Whisperer (Redford); Meet Joe Black (Brest/Smithee)
1999 American Beauty (Mendes); The Three Kings (Russell); The Green Mile (Stephen King’s The Green Mile) (Darabont)
2000 Erin Brokovich; My Khmer Heart

Publications

By NEWMAN: articles—

“Thomas Newman Continues to Be Interesting and Good,” an interview with Doug Adams, in Film Score Monthly, no. 162, Winter 1996.

On NEWMAN: articles—

Thomas Newman was born into that outstanding cinemusical dynasty, the Newmans of Hollywood, on 20 October 1955. His father was Alfred Newman, the legendary composer, conductor, and musical director of 20th Century-Fox studios, and one of the key figures in the development and refinement of film music during the studio era. His uncles were Lionel and Emile Newman, also both prominent composers and conductors at Fox during the same period.

Newman attended college for two years at the University of Southern California, before graduating with a Masters in Music from Yale University. After graduation Newman garnered experience in both performing and in writing for musical theater. For several years he played the keyboard in a rock band, The Innocents, and with an improvisational group, Tokyo 77. During this same period, and under the championship of musical theater legend, Stephen Sondheim, Newman made a musical theater piece, Three Mean Fairy Tales, produced as a workshop production by the Stuart Ostrow Foundation.

Newman reports that his indoctrination into film music was occasioned by his relationship with his uncle, Lionel Newman: “Because my uncle Lionel was head of music at Fox during my high school and college years, I went down there a lot and watched John Williams conduct some of his early Irwin Allen movies like The Towering Inferno and The Poseidon Adventure. I think because of my uncle Lionel’s relationship with John Williams, one of my first gigs in Hollywood was orchestrating one of the cues from Return of the Jedi (1983), when Darth Vader dies at the end. John’s sketch was so complete that it was more of an exercise and a bone-toss, though it was a very nice bone-toss!” The first film Newman scored on his own was Reckless in 1984, but the young composer’s breakthrough-movie was the Madonna vehicle Desperately Seeking Susan in 1985. His rhythmic, ethnic flavored score was prominently featured and drew much attention.

Like many contemporary film scores Newman’s works are often a fusion of orchestral and electronic techniques, such as his early scores for The Lost Boys and Less Than Zero. Newman comments that he is fascinated by both orchestral and electronic techniques. “I hate the notion that electronics are a cheesy way of doing things and that orchestra is the ‘only’ true approach to scoring. But you can understand those critics, because electronics allow you to make easy choices, Anyone can do it. But while synthesizers are things you hide behind sounds, they can also be put in places you’d never expect. I’ve always wanted these boundaries to be amorphous.”

Another attention getter for Newman was his score for The Rapture, a controversial film about a hedonistic young woman who converts to super-Fundamentalism and, at the film’s bizarre climax, literally ascend into heaven during the “end times.” For this unusual and extremely specialized feature Newman fused a chamber-sized ensemble of acoustic instruments with ambient electronic sounds and colors. He continued his fusion experiments with his next film, Men Don’t Leave, and later commented: “I learned on those scores by trial and error.”

Newman’s first mainstream Hollywood film was Scent of a Woman in 1992. The composer’s experimental sound crystallized with this and ensuing major scores, and it was soon to earn him numerous awards and nominations. His critically acclaimed scores for Little Women and The Shawshank Redemption were both nominated for Academy Award in the same year, and he was also nominated for Unstrung Heroes in 1995.

A 1995 Entertainment Weekly review of the Sony Classical CD release of Newman’s score for Little Women commented: “Pastiche-Copland often sounds tired, but Thomas Newman’s glowing score to the latest version of Little Women proves that it can also, occasionally, be inspired. If Newman’s score works so miraculously well, it may be because he seems to have peppered the Coplandisms with canny seasonings from Charles Ives, the mad genius of Danbury, Connecticut.” The following year the same publication commented on the CD. from The People vs. Larry Flint: “This elegant and austere orchestral score by Thomas Newman becomes progressively more abstract and brooding, absorbing the country, gospel, and pop songs studding the album.”

However, in a New Republic review of Meet Joe Black, Stanley Kauffmann complained that “Thomas Newman’s music should not pass without a protest: it’s the noisiest compilation of bangs and surges in several weeks.” It might also be noted that the complaints of elder critic Kauffmann were not dissimilar to certain grumblings voiced against another young genius of modern film music, Elmer Bernstein, in the early 1950s.

Contemporary film music has changed radically from the days when Newman’s father, Alfred, created his legendary symphonic scores for 20th Century-Fox, and today’s Hollywood composers often find themselves providing supplementary instrumental scoring for a collection of chart-hopeful pop-music chart tracks. While Newman does not possess the readily recognizable style of his father and other classic Golden Age musicians, he is an amazingly versatile musician with the uncanny gift for creating a new and utterly appropriate sound for each new film he scores. In addition to his AA nominations Newman has received five BMI Music Awards, and several Grammy and Golden Globe nominations. Newman was again nominated for an Oscar for his score for American Beauty, the film which won for Best Picture in 2000.

—Ross Care

NICHLDS, Dudley

Writer. Nationality: American. Born: Wapakoneta, Ohio, 6 April 1895. Education: Attended the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor. Family: Married Esta Vacez Gooch-Collins, 1924. Career: 1913—Ship’s radio operator on Great Lakes; 1918–19—served in the United States Navy (devised electronic device to protect mine-sweepers); 1920–29—journalist for New York States Navy; 1930—first film as writer, Men without Women; 1938–39—President, Screenwriters Guild; 1943—first film as director, Government Girl. Awards: Venice Festival Prize and Academy Award for The Informer, 1935; Writers Guild Laurel Award, 1953. Died: 4 January 1960.

Films as Writer:

1930 Men without Women (Ford); On the Level (Cummings); Born Reckless (Ford); One Mad Kiss (Silver); A Devil with Women (Cummings); El Precio de un beso

1931 Seas Beneath (Ford); Hush Money (Lanfield); Not Exactly Gentlemen (Stoloff); Skyline (Taylor)

1932 This Sporting Age (Bennison and Erickson); Robber's Roost (King)

1933 Pilgrimage (Ford); Hot Pepper (Blystone); The Man Who Dared (MacFadden)

1934 You Can't Buy Everything (Reisner); Hold That Girl (MacFadden); Wild Gold (Marshall); Call It Luck (Tinling); Judge Priest (Ford); The Lost Patrol (Ford)

1935 Steamboat 'round the Bend (Ford); Mystery Woman (Forde); The Informer (Ford); The Arizonian (C. Vidor); The Crusades (DeMille) (co); The Three Musketeers (Lee)

1936 Mary of Scotland (Ford); The Plough and the Stars (Ford)

1937 The Toast of New York (Lee); The Hurricane (Ford and Heisler)

1938 Bringing Up Baby (Hawks); Carefree (Sandrich)

1939 Stagecoach (Ford); The 400 Million (Ivens and Ferno)

1940 The Long Voyage Home (Ford)

1941 Man Hunt (F. Lang); Swamp Water (Renoir)

1943 This Land Is Mine (Renoir); Air Force (Hawks); For Whom the Bell Tolls (Wood); Government Girl (+ d)

1944 It Happened Tomorrow (Clair); The Sign of the Cross (DeMille) (prologue)

1945 And Then There Were None (Clair); The Bells of St. Mary’s (McCarey)

1946 Scarlet Street (F. Lang); Sister Kenny (+ d)

1947 Mourning Becomes Electra (+ d)

1948 The Fugitive (Ford)

1949 Pinky (Kazan)

1951 Rawhide (Hathaway)

1952 Return of the Texan (Daves); The Big Sky (Hawks)

1954 Prince Valiant (Hathaway)

1956 Run for the Sun (R. Boulting)

1957 The Tin Star (A. Mann)

1959 The Hangman (Curtil)

1960 Heller in Pink Tights (Cukor)

Publications

By NICHLDS: books—

The Informer (script) in Modern British Drama, edited by Harlan Thatcher, New York, 1941.

With Jean Renoir, Stagecoach (script) and This Land Is Mine (script) in Twenty Best Film Plays, edited by Nichols and John Gassner, New York, 1943.

By NICHLDS: articles—

On NICHLDS: articles—

Kino Lehti (Helsinki), no. 6, 1970.

* * *

Dudley Nichols started his Hollywood career in 1930, and collaborated with John Ford on his films of the 1930s and early 1940s. While these films are somewhat dated, they are still highly valued. Nichols did other scripts, but the ones he wrote for Ford constitute the real contributions to cinema. The single possible exception would be the screwball comedy he wrote with Hagar Wilde—Howard Hawks’s Bringing Up Baby. It is significant that the script for this comedy lacks the sentimentality that often flaws Nichols’s scripts for Ford. It may be, then, that Nichols was above all a collaborator. Concerning his work with Ford, Nichols was self-deprecating. In a letter dated 24 February 1941 (in the Lilly Library collection) he wrote to the director that screenwriting “is not a creative act like directing.”

Men without Women and Born Reckless, both made in 1930, were the first films Nichols and Ford worked on and contain some of the themes and settings that the two were to handle so successfully in the coming decade. Born Reckless certainly offers one important characteristic of the best of Nichols’s screenplays—a brooding urban underworld of lights and shadows. In this scenario, Nichols demonstrates a careful attention to dialects and street idioms. There is also the element of maternal/filial affection between Ma Beretti and her son. Men without Women (also in the Lilly collection) opens with a characteristic chiaroscuro street-scene, carefully described in the “stage” descriptions. This scene is set in front of an American bar in Shanghai; it ends with the redemption of a traitor, like that in The Informer, Nichols constructs The Informer as a labyrinthine journey through misty streets. Men without Women also contains a noble self-sacrifice, as does The Long Voyage Home. The latter film culminates in the paternal sacrifice of an older sailor’s life so a young sailor can experience what all sailors dream of, but often fail to achieve—a voyage home. By directing the several O’Neill plays towards this spiritual culmination, Nichols ably gives the material a dramatic unity not in the original.

With a characteristic expansive, exuberant humanity, Nichols poured out 146 pages of a densely packed rough-draft script for Stagecoach (the released dialogue-continuity is 40 sparsely covered pages). In the process of realizing the script on film, Ford had severely pared down Nichols’s script. Nichols’s screenplay shows a real sense of cinematic techniques; yet the masterstrokes of Ford—like the tracking shot up to Ringo’s (John Wayne’s) face—had to be added in the film. All in all Nichols’s script seems to have been a rich and varied grab-bag of ideas from which Ford could pick and choose.

—Rodney Farnsworth

NIHALANI, Govind

Films as Cinematographer (Selected List):

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Cast</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1970</td>
<td>Shantata, Court Chula Ahe</td>
<td>Karnad</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1974</td>
<td>Ankur (The Seedling)</td>
<td>Benegal</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1975</td>
<td>Nishant (Night’s End)</td>
<td>Benegal; Charandas Chor (Charandas the Thief)</td>
<td>Benegal</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1976</td>
<td>Manthan (The Churning)</td>
<td>Benegal</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1977</td>
<td>Bhumika (The Role)</td>
<td>Benegal; Konundra (The Boom)</td>
<td>Benegal</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1978</td>
<td>Janoon (The Obsession)</td>
<td>Benegal</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1979</td>
<td>Womb of Power (doc); A Fine Tolerance (doc)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1980</td>
<td>Hari Hondal Burgadar (Share Cropper)</td>
<td>Benegal</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1981</td>
<td>Kalyug (The Machine Age)</td>
<td>Benegal; Akrosh (+ d); Gandhi</td>
<td>Attenborough</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1982</td>
<td>Satyajit Ray—Film Maker</td>
<td>Benegal</td>
<td>doc</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1983</td>
<td>Vijeta (+ d); Ardha Satya (+ d)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1984</td>
<td>Party (+ d)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1985</td>
<td>Aaghat (+ d)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1987</td>
<td>Tamas (Darkness) (+ d; sc—for TV)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1991</td>
<td>Drishit (+ d; sc—for TV)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1998</td>
<td>Hazaarr Chaurasi Ki Maa (Mother of 1084) (+ d, pr)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1999</td>
<td>Thakshak (+ d)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

By NIHALANI: article—

Film a Doba (Prague), vol. 33, no. 8, August 1987.

On NIHALANI: book—

Habibullah, Shama, Govind Nihalani, 1981.

On NIHALANI: articles—

* * *

Govind Nihalani is more a master craftsman than an artist. His directorial talent is an outcome of his skill and experience as a cinematographer. Having learned all aspects of cinematography at the S. J. Polytechnic in Bangalore, and assisted V. K. Murthy for ten years thereafter, Nihalani was already a respected cameraman when he came to be associated with Shyam Benegal and Girish Karnad. His association with Shyam Benegal, however, chiselled his cinematographic sense and ability. In Benegal’s films, art and commerce meet. The features that Nihalani shot for Benegal are among the best of his works. This vast experience also made him an established filmmaker in his own right. And in the excellent films that he has made so far, it is difficult to separate the able director from the ace cinematographer.

While working in texture films, Nihalani also filmed documentaries and advertisements. This trained him to extract and encapsulate the required information into a small time-frame. It was during these 12 years that Nihalani worked hard, experimented and matured as a cameraman. His vision was enriched by documentary observations and a keen sense of the theatrical. The latter probably came from Nihalani’s close association with the well-known Marathi playwright Vijay Tendulkar, who scripted his Akrosh and Ardha Satya. His debut as a cinematographer was made in 1970 in a Marathi film, based on a Tendulkar play. The undercurrent of anger and violence that runs through the play also characterizes Nihalani’s films, which explore the roots of violence and anger in society. Junoon, for example, by Benegal, set against the turbulent Sepoy Mutiny of 1857, was to Nihalani an ideal camera subject, and won him an award for best colour cinematography.

Nihalani, however, does not, like Subrata Mitra, recapture moods, the finesse of reflexes and reactions, or introspection on celluloid. Action, movement, and aggression attract him more, both as director and cinematographer. This perhaps made Richard Attenborough employ him as head of the second unit of the most ambitious film to be produced in India, Gandhi.

—Shohini Ghosh

NITZSCHE, Jack

Composer. Nationality: American. Born: Bernard Nitzsche in Chicago, Illinois, 1937. Education: Attended Howard City Elementary and High School, Michigan, 1943–55; studied at West Lake College of Music, 1956–57. Family: Married to the singer Buffy St. Marie. Career: Worked as musical copyist for Specialty Records; 1962—worked as arranger for Phil Spector; worked on Rolling Stones first American tour and on nine of their albums; arranged and produced Neil Young’s first solo album and joined Neil Young’s backing band Crazy Horse; 1972—composition “St. Giles Cripplegate” recorded with London Symphony Orchestra, conductor David Measham; composer of numerous film scores since 1970. Awards: Academy Award for “Up Where We Belong,” from An Officer and a Gentleman, 1982.

Films as Composer:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1965</td>
<td>Village of the Giants (Gordon)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1970</td>
<td>Performance (Cammell and Roeg)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1972</td>
<td>Greaser’s Palace (Downey)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1973</td>
<td>The Exorcist (Friedkin) (additional music)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1975</td>
<td>One Flew over the Cuckoo’s Nest (Forman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1977</td>
<td>Heroes (Kagan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1978</td>
<td>Blue Collar (Schrader)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1979</td>
<td>Where You Comin’ Back, Red Rider? (Katselas); Heart Beat (Byrum); Hardcore (The Hardcore Life) (Schrader)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1980</td>
<td>Cruising (Friedkin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1981</td>
<td>Cutter’s Way (Cutter and Bone) (Passer)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

On NITZSCHE: articles—

Screen International, 20 June 1981.
Film Dope (London), December 1991.

* * *

Before Jack Nitzsche started on a career as one of Hollywood’s more inventive and individual composers for film, he was already a veteran of the Los Angeles rock scene, cutting his teeth as an arranger for Phil Spector and having worked with a wide range of performers, from Doris Day and Frankie Laine to The Rolling Stones and Neil Young. Though some of his most characteristic scores for such films as Performance, Blue Collar, and The Hot Spot reflect this background in rock and roll and rhythm and blues, his work also draws on classical music, jazz, and the European avant-garde.

Nitzsche has been involved in films since the sixties. He was the musical director on The TAMI Show (1964), a concert film that included performances by the Rolling Stones and the Beach Boys, and he provided music for Village of the Giants, a low-budget teenage sci-fi spoof. His career as a film composer, however, effectively began in 1970 when he was called in to do the music for Performance, Donald Cammell and Nicolas Roeg’s mesmerizing game of shifting identities, played out between a burnt-out rock star (Mick Jagger) and a sadistic East End gangster (James Fox). Jagger and Keith Richard were originally scheduled to do the music, but tensions surrounding the filming had caused a temporary rift in their writing partnership. Nitzsche assembled an eclectic group of musicians, including Ry Cooder, Randy Newman, Merry Clayton, Buffy St. Marie, and Stevie Winwood. The resulting score, with its echoes of Robert Johnson and Ligeti, is, by turns, sinister and exhilarating. Ghostly synthesizers, Cooder’s stinging bottleneck guitar and Clayton’s chanted vocals provide an eerie complement to the film’s hallucinatory picture of London at the end of the sixties.

Nitzsche soon demonstrated another facet of his musical sophistication. In 1972 he recorded “St. Giles Cripplegate” an accomplished neoclassical piece performed by the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by David Measham. Though the album was not a commercial success, Nitzsche described it as a useful calling card. “It helped me tell people that I could write for a 110 piece orchestra in a classical kind of way.” Milos Forman heard the record and was impressed enough to commission Nitzsche to write the music for One Flew over the Cuckoo’s Nest, the film based on Ken Kesey’s authoritarian fable set in a microcosmic mental institution. The score proved highly successful, yielding a best-selling album and an Academy Award nomination. The music is elegiac (the film’s main theme), and occasionally ironic (the waltz that accompanies the ritual of medication for the hospital’s inmates). Nitzsche also employed unconventional instrumentation—musical saw and crystal glass—to add a haunting dimension to the score.

Although he has been involved in a number of high-profile mainstream films—including An Officer and a Gentleman, its featured ballad, “Up Where We Belong,” earning an Oscar for best song, and Jewel of the Nile—some of Nitzsche’s most memorable work has been for less commercial, more personal films. Notable among these is the sound track for Paul Schrader’s debut as director, Blue Collar. This hard-edged thriller, set among the unions on the automobile assembly lines of Detroit, is given a driving industrial rhythm-and-blues score, featuring Cooder. The film’s remarkable credit sequence has a hypnotic sleighhammer beat and growled vocals from Captain Beefheart pounding over gritty stop-motion images from the factory floor. In John Byrum’s Heart Beat, a soft-centered account of a triangular relationship between Jack Kerouac, Neal Cassady, and Carolyn Cassady, the music moves fluidly between a plangent main theme, pastiche Eisenhower-era pop songs, and a memorable jazz sequence orchestrated by Shorty Rogers and featuring luminaries of the west coast jazz scene, including Art Pepper, Bud Shank, Bob Cooper, and Shelly Manne. In Ivan Passer’s post-Vietnam film noir, Cutter and Bone, Nitzsche develops the “glass harmonica” sound featured in One Flew over the Cuckoo’s Nest to create a sparse, haunted theme. For Dennis Hopper’s sultry thriller The Hot Spot he uses the inspired pairing of John Lee Hooker and Miles Davis to provide a tense blues-drenched score, Hooker vocalizing wordlessly over Davis’s shimmering trumpet.

Despite working in an industry that encourages self-promotion, Jack Nitzsche has kept a low public profile. In a rare 1981 interview for Screen International, when discussing the difficulty he had experienced working with a particular director, he offered this downbeat assessment of his work “I don’t think I could ever be like Henry Mancini or Lalo Schifrin. I can’t just sit back and give them what they want.” Schrader, in discussing Nitzsche’s work on Blue Collar and Hard Core, offered an oblique reflection of Nitzsche’s influence on film music since the seventies: “I’ve tried to find a music that has a life of its own, which meant going into a music that wasn’t yet in the vernacular of films. For the first two I used Jack Nitzsche who had just come out of rock and roll, working with Phil Spector and the Rolling Stones, but by the time [American] Gigolo came along that sound was already in the mainstream.’’

—Dominic Power

NORSTEIN, Yuri

Films as Animator:

1968 25 October, First Day (co)
1971 Battle under the Walls of Kerchenetz (with Ivan Ivanov-Vano)
1973 The Vixen and the Hare
1975 The Heron and the Crane
1976 Hedgehog in the Mist
1980 The Tale of Tales

Publications

By NORSTEIN: articles—

Banc-Titre (Paris), September 1982.
Positif (Paris), November 1985.
Filmkultura (Budapest), November 1986.
Film a Doba (Prague), vol. 33, no. 4, April 1987.
Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), April 1989.
Kino (Moscow), March 1997.
On NORSTEIN: articles—

_Sightlines_, Fall/Winter 1982–83.
_Soviet Film_ (Moscow), July 1986.
_Film a Doba_ (Prague), November 1986.
24 _Images_ (Montreal), no. 43, Summer 1989.
_Kino_ (Warsaw), July 1990.
_Kino_ (Warsaw), September 1990.
_Filmkultura_ (Budapest), July 1994.
_Kino_ (Warsaw), June 1995.

On NORSTEIN: film—

* * *

Yuri Norstein, who has been working for years under the veteran Russian animator Ivan Ivanov-Vano, has emerged as one of the world’s leading animators. His film, _The Tale of Tales_, was considered the most artistic production to come out of Eastern Europe in years. The success of this film, as well as others such as _Hedgehog in the Mist_, _The Vixen and the Hare_, and _The Hare and the Crane_, is due to his unique style of multidimensional figures and backgrounds that have depth, roundness, and shading, giving a visual quality to his scenes seldom seen in other films. His humor is full of human observation, contrasting emotion over a broad scale from gaiety and laughter to sadness and disappointment. The fact that these moods are happening to animals and birds with their own particular environment provides an element of magic, and once again proves that the art of animation can bridge the biological barrier between human and animal worlds.

Norstein considers animation to be a new field of art, but underestimated, its artistic plasticity and social significance not having been explored so far. According to him its principles are taken from life, avoiding a documentary approach in describing a social situation. Aristotle said, “art, above all teachers, allows people to enjoy life.” This principle still holds. Norstein takes his own material from an ordinary situation and develops it in his own particular way. His material consists of human emotions: joy, tears, love, and all levels of emotion within the experiences of life. Norstein, apart from being a filmmaker, is also a good painter and brilliant illustrator, which explains the high visual quality of his backgrounds and the expressions of his characters. He has a close relationship with his young children and closely considers their reactions before making a film. He thinks that only those who understand children’s psychology should make a film for them. If one has sympathy with them and can play with them, one is able to look at the world through their minds and eyes.

On the question of visual quality, he thinks that animated film directors should be interested in fine arts, especially painting, since films have a dual objective: the creation of a new and original setting and a defined dramatic action within the setting. The spectator should be able to adapt to such a background and participate in the film on the terms present in the subject. Norstein recognizes that a film is composed of various elements. It contains myth, fantasy, cosmographic ideas, sound, absolute realism, and naturalism. The combined quality of these elements could be of great value, lifting animation above all other media, but so far he has not seen any film, short or long, able to make full use of such total potentialities. He holds that a feature-length film should not only tell a story but present the richness of human life, make full use of the specific properties of animation, and look for its own way of development.

—John Halas

---

NORTH, Alex

Films as Composer:

1937 _Heart of Spain_ (doc); _People of the Cumberland_ (Meyers and Hill)—doc
1945 _A Better Tomorrow_ (Hackenschmeid)—doc
1951 _A Streetcar Named Desire_ (Kazan); _The Thirteenth Letter_ (Preminger); _Death of a Salesman_ (Benedek)
1952 _Viva Zapata!_ (Kazan); _Les Miserables_ (Milestone); _Pony Soldier_ (Newman)
1953 _The Member of the Wedding_ (Zinnemann)
1954 _Go, Man, Go_ (Hill)—doc
1955 _Desiree_ (Koster); _The American Road_ (Stoney)—doc
1956 _The Racers_ (Bartlett); _The Rose Tattoo_ (Daniel Mann); _Man with the Gun_ (Wilson)
1957 _I’ll Cry Tomorrow_ (Daniel Mann); _The Bad Seed_ (LeRoy); _The Rainmaker_ (Anthony); _Four Girls in Town_ (Sher); _The King and Four Queens_ (Walsh)
1957 _The Bachelor Party_ (Delbert Mann)
1958 _The Long Hot Summer_ (Ritt); _Stage Struck_ (Lumet); _Hot Spell_ (Daniel Mann); _South Seas Adventure_ (Thompson and others)
1959 _The Sound and the Fury_ (Ritt); _The Wonderful Country_ (Parrish)
1960 _Spartacus_ (Kubrick)
1961 _The Children’s Hour_ (Wyler); _Sanctuary_ (Ritt); _The Misfits_ (Huston)
1962 _All Fall Down_ (Frankheimer)
1963 _Cleopatra_ (Mankiewicz)
1964 _The Outrage_ (Ritt)
1965 _Cheyenne Autumn_ (Ford); _The Agony and the Ecstasy_ (Reed)
1966 Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf? (Nichols)
1967 Africa (doc)
1968 The Devil’s Brigade (McLaglen); The Shoes of the Fisherman (Anderson)
1969 A Dream of Kings (Daniel Mann); Hard Contract (Pogostin)
1971 Willard (Daniel Mann)
1972 Pocket Money (Rosenberg)
1973 Once Upon a Scoundrel (Schaefer)
1974 Shanks (Castle); Lost in the Stars (Daniel Mann)
1975 Bite the Bullet (Brooks); Journey into Fear (Daniel Mann)
1976 The Passover Plot (Campus)
1978 Somebody Killed Her Husband (Johnson)
1979 Wise Blood (Huston)
1980 Carny (Kaylor)
1981 Dragonslayer (Robbins)
1982 Sister, Sister (Berry)
1984 Under the Volcano (Huston)
1985 Prizzi’s Honor (Huston)
1987 The Dead (The Dubliners) (Huston); Good Morning Vietnam (Levinson); John Huston and the Dubliners (Sievernich)
1988 The Penitent (Osmond)
1990 Ghost (Zucker) (song)
1991 Le Dernier Papillon

Publications

By NORTH: articles—

Cinema (Los Angeles), Fall 1969.
In Knowing the Score, by Irwin Bazelon, New York, 1975.
Soundtrack! (Hollywood), March 1985.

On NORTH: articles—

Cinestudio (Madrid), June 1972.
Ecran (Paris), September 1975.
Palmer, Christopher, in Film Music Notebook (Calabasas, California), vol. 3, no. 1, 1977.
Pro Musica Sana (New York), Summer 1982.
Soundtrack! (Hollywood), December 1982.
Soundtrack! (Hollywood), March 1983.
Obituary in Séquences (Haute-Ville), November 1991.
Film Dope (Nottingham), July 1992.

Johnson, Victoria E., “The Art of Film Music: Special Emphasis on Hugo Friedhofer, Alex North, David Raskin and Leonard Rosenman,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Fall 1995.

* * *

In 1986, Alex North became the first composer to be voted an honorary Academy Award. The honor was overdue; he had never won despite 15 nominations between 1951 and 1984.

North came to films with a background in documentary and ballet music under the sponsorship of Elia Kazan. Kazan had a difficult time convincing Warner Bros.’ music department to accept New Yorker North as composer for A Streetcar Named Desire, but Kazan persisted and the resulting score caused a reconceptualization of the role of music in films. The symphonic film score—rich, lushy orchestrated—had been a staple of the medium since the 1930s. In Streetcar, North wrote music that was heavily influenced by jazz and the blues yet preserved the structure of the classical film score. Cat-house blues piano and mournful trumpet wails functioned to evoke character, be it Stanley Kowalski’s coarseness or Blanche DuBois’s fragility. And it fit.

North’s score for Viva Zapata! enabled him to use musical experience gained during a two-year stay in Mexico. It also gave him further opportunities to display a flair for unorthodox orchestration, but with a purpose: a sequence depicting peasants clicking stones together as a gesture of solidarity for the captured Zapata rises in volume, and as the scene progresses North adds an underlay of bongos, timbales, flutes, guitars, and plucked strings. The orchestra has added its rhythmic voice to the protest of the peasants’ primitive percussion, extending in music the dramatic essence of the sequence.

Scoring against conventional expectations in Mike Nichols’s volatile adaptation of Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf?, North toyed with and abandoned jazz and twelve-tone approaches to the project and produced a quasi-Baroque score: a tranquil guitar theme played together as a gesture of solidarity for the captured Zapata rises in volume, and as the scene progresses North adds an underlay of bongos, timbales, flutes, guitars, and plucked strings. The orchestra has added its rhythmic voice to the protest of the peasants’ primitive percussion, extending in music the dramatic essence of the sequence.

Although North preferred intimate and personal subjects, his mammoth scores for Kubrick’s Spartacus and Mankiewicz’s Cleopatra are among his most celebrated works. On both he was afforded a luxury rarely given the film composer: a year to work preparing each project, collaborating in both cases at every stage of the production with musically sensitive directors. For Spartacus, North attempted to ‘‘capture the feeling of pre-Christian Rome using contemporary musical techniques.’’ To this end, he researched music of the period and unearthed unorthodox instruments such as the dulcimer and the ondioline in a quest for exotic tone color. Inspired by Prokofiev’s score for Alexander Nevsky, North utilized a large brass section to evoke the barbaric quality of the times. He withheld the violins’ appearance until the film’s love story blossomed, at that point proving himself more than equal to the lyrical efflorescence of the ‘‘traditional’’ film scores of the past. It is a tragedy that in their only subsequent collaboration, Kubrick decided to jettison the 40 minutes of original music North wrote for 2001: A Space Odyssey; the director fell in love with his classical “temporary” track and decided to retain it.

In the 1980s, Dragonslayer’s gothic, stentorian strains and Carny’s expressionist grotesquerie displayed North’s flair for the fantastic and the surreal. Under the Volcano marked his third teaming with John Huston and was a return to the Mexican inspiration of his youth. North’s mischievous streak was showcased in his witty orchestral adaptation of Italian arias that wryly comment on the black comedy of Huston’s Prizi’s Honor.

In all, North’s achievement was to realize what he saw as the function of film scoring: “to extend the characters on screen by writing music that penetrates the soul of the individual.” He was an innovator and experimenter who never lost sight of his considerable lyric gifts.

—Lee Tsiantis

NUGEN, Frank S.

Films as Writer:

1948 Fort Apache (Ford); Three Godfathers (Ford)
1949 Tulsa (Heisler); She Wore a Yellow Ribbon (Ford)
1950 Wagonmaster (Ford); Two Flags West (Wise)
1952 The Quiet Man (Ford)
1953 Angel Face (Preminger)
1954 The Paradotrooper (Young); Trouble in the Glen (Wilcox); They Rode West (Carlson)
1955 Mister Roberts (Ford and LeRoy); The Tall Men (Walsh)
1956 The Searchers (Ford)
1957 The Rising of the Moon (Ford)
1958 Gunman’s Walk (Carlson); The Last Hurrah (Ford)
1960 Flame over India (Lee Thompson)
1961 Two Rode Together (Ford)
1963 Donovan’s Reef (Ford)
1966 Incident at Phantom Hill (Bellamy)

Publications

On NUGENT: articles—

Film Comment (New York), Summer 1972.
Film Dope, no. 48, July 1992.

Frank S. Nugent, who worked as a Hollywood screenwriter for nearly 20 years, started as a news reporter at the New York Times, and moved to the film department as an assistant, then top reviewer. In the latter capacity Nugent sang high praise for some of the biggest hits of Hollywood’s waning Golden Age (Modern Times, Stagecoach, Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs, A Star Is Born, Gone with the Wind), as well as the growing number of imports that were to help internationalize filmmaking in the postwar years (Grand Illusion, Pygmalion, The Lady Vanishes).

Among the movies Nugent panned were those starring such romantic leads as Robert Taylor and Tyrone Power. Nugent’s review of The Story of Alexander Graham Bell praised the film for not including Power in its cast, and resulted in a serious reduction of 20th Century-Fox’s advertising in the New York Times for nearly a year. Then, after Nugent’s effulgent re-review of that studio’s The Grapes of Wrath, he received an offer from Darryl F. Zanuck to work there as a script doctor. (Zanuck’s maneuver was privately called “a tacit exercise of the theory that if you can’t fire ‘em, hire ‘em,” the Times obituary of Frank Nugent stated 25 years later.)

At 20th Century-Fox, Nugent worked on scores of scripts, and there was talk of his becoming a producer there. However, that didn’t materialize, and he returned to journalism, writing freelance movie articles for such magazines as Colliers, Saturday Evening Post, Good Housekeeping, and the New York Times Magazine. One such assignment for the latter took Nugent to Mexico where John Ford was directing The Fugitive. Nugent later reported that Ford “knocked me right off my seat by asking how I’d like to write for him.... He gave me a list of about 50 books to read. ... Later he sent me down into the Old Apache country to nose around.” Ford also asked Nugent to write complete biographies of every character in the film, from childhood to the moment he or she entered the screenplay. It was a practice that Nugent continued throughout his screenwriting career.

Eleven of the 21 scripts Nugent wrote were for Ford films, including She Wore a Yellow Ribbon, Wagonmaster, The Quiet Man, and The Searchers. The story of the Nugent-Ford association is somewhat befogged by the report, which has been published in numerous sources, that Nugent was married to John Ford’s daughter, Barbara, the same year that Ford asked him to write his first script, Fort Apache. But the obituaries of both Barbara Ford and Frank Nugent mention two marriages each, but not to one another.

Nugent had been an ardent Ford fan since his days as the New York Times film critic, writing in his review of Stagecoach for example, that Ford had “swept aside the years of artifice and talkie compromise and .... made a motion picture that sings a song of camera .... a movie of the grand old school, a genuine rib-thumper and a beautiful sight to see.” That Nugent and Ford should eventually meet and work together seems as predestined as the meeting and collaboration of James Agee and John Huston, a few years later.

Richard Corliss, in his chapter on Nugent in Talking Pictures, writes that Nugent’s work “culminated in his brilliant and self-effacing script for The Searchers—that rare Hollywood film that can be called indisputably ineffable cinema.” Corliss points out that The Searchers is the “ultimate ‘door’ movie, with more than a score of shots in which doors describe or extend the psychological milieu.”
The film also helped create a new persona for the aging John Wayne, as Ethan Edwards, the outsider who thinks and feels on an essentially inner psychological terrain before he acts.

—Cecile Starr

NUYTTEN, Bruno

Films as Cinematographer:

1968  Joseph ou comment petit-on être Vosgien? (Béraud—short)
1969  Marie Perrault (Dion—short)
1970  L'Espace vital (Leconte—short); La Loi du coeur (Baudry); Une Regression exemplaire (Béraud—short)
1971  La Quille, bon dieu (Zingg—short); Alice Babar et les 40 nénuphars (Berthomier), La Poule (Béraud—short); La Mort de Janis Joplin (Kane—short); Les Machines de l'existence (Dion—short)
1972  L'Audition (Dion—short); Fleurs de Jones (Berthomier—short); Nichna (Charlin—short); Le Maire (Béraud—short)
1973  Tristan et Iseult (Legrange—short); L'Attente (Legrange—short); Ce que savait Morgan (Béraud—short); Music on the streets (Combe—short); Le Jeu des preuves (Béraud—short)
1974  Les Valseuses (Going Places) (Blier); La Femme du Gange (Duras); Le Photographe Lassine (Marconnier—short); Fantaisie blanche (co, Parrain—short)
1975  India Song (Duras); Souvenirs d’en France (Téchiné); Les Vécés étaient fermés de l’intérieur (Leconte); L’Assassin musicien (Jacquot); Mon Coeur est rouge (Rosier)
1976  Barocco (Téchiné); La Meilleure Façon de marcher (The Best Way to Get Along) (Miller); Son nom de Vénise dans Calcutta désert (Duras)
1977  Le Camion (Duras); La Nuit tous les chats vent gris (Zingg); L’Exercice du pouvoir (Galland)
1978  La Tortue sur le dos (Béraud); Zoo Zero (A. Fleischer); Les Soeurs Bronte (Téchiné)
1979  French Postcards (Huyck)
1980  Brubaker (Rosenberg); Un Assassin qui passe (A Passing Killer) (Vianey)
1981  Possession (Zulawski); Garde à vue (Miller); Hôtel des Amériques (Téchiné)
1982  L’Invitation au voyage (Del Monte); Retour d’Allemagne (Berthomier)
1983  La Vie est un roman (Life is a Bed of Roses) (Resnais); Tchao Pantin (Berri)
1984  Fort Saganne (Alain Corneau); La Pirate (Doillon); Les Enfants (Duras)
1985  Détective (Godard)
1986  Jean de Florette (Berri); Manon des sources (Manon of the Spring) (Berri)

Films as Director:

1989  Camille Claudel (+ co-sc)
1992  Albert Souffre (+ sc)
2000  Passionnément (Passionately) (+ sc)

Publications

By NUYTTEN: articles—

Technicien du Film, no. 324, April 1984.
Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Summer 1996.

On NUYTTEN: articles—

Cinéma no. 212, 1976.
Télérama, no. 1570, February 1980.
Film Dope, no. 48, July 1992.
Mensuel du Cinéma, April 1993.
Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), April 1996.
Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury), April 1998.

* * *

After studying cinematography under Ghislain Cloquet at the Belgian film school INSAS, Bruno Nuytten gained valuable experience as assistant to Ricardo Aronovitch and Claude Leconte, but his most influential mentor was Cloquet who introduced him into the world of Marguerite Duras with Jaune le soleil (1971) and Nathalie Granger (1972). In the early seventies he also made short films with the rising generation of filmmakers, notably Luc Béraud (La Poule, 1971), and Yvan Lagrange for whom he provided the lyrical images of Tristan et Iseult (1973). A brief spell in publicity films conditioned him against elaborate preparation and pleonastic camera work.

From the mid-seventies Nuytten worked with successive directors whose methods and budgets varied considerably, from the spare style of Duras or Jacquot to the lavish wide-screen productions of Berri or Corneau, or the expressionist excesses of Zulawski (Possession, 1981). He served established directors like Godard and Resnais, and collaborated in the experimental approaches of Alain Fleischer (Zoo zero, 1978) and Peter Del Monte (L’Invitation au voyage, 1982). In the late seventies his association with Andre Téchiné saw continued experimentation with various styles, while a period in America brought Willard Huyck’s French Postcards (1979) and Rosenberg’s disturbingly graphic exposure of prison brutality in Brubaker (1980).
His work for Duras represented an unusual challenge in that the director privileged sound over image, using the temporal disjunction of voice and image to explore perception and memory. After La Femme du Gange (1974), characterized by long fixed takes, India Song (1975) deploys slow tracking shots in a series of languid tableaux, but achieves striking emphasis through the juxtaposition of colourful gardens and arresting close-ups of remembered objects: a bicycle; a bouquet of fading roses; joss sticks on a piano. The spare, contemplative visual style is further extended in Son nom de Vénus dans Calcutta désert (1976) with long fixed takes and slow pan shots exploring abandoned rooms in half-light before focusing on memory-charged details. Le Camion (1977) takes the minimalism much further. Duras and Depardieu are filmed reading the script of the potential film with intercut shots of the eponymous heavy lorry crossing ugly industrial suburbs.

In complete contrast are lavish eighties super productions, particularly for Alain Corneau and Claude Berri. For Corneau’s epic adventure story, Fort Saganne (1984) with locations in France, Tunisia and Mauritania, Nuytten overcame the problems of filming in the desert to produce superb wide-screen colour cinematography. After his brilliantly created tonality of evil in Berri’s darkly atmospheric murder investigation, Tchao Pantin (1983) with its dimly lit streets and shadowy passageways, he then provided the director with luxuriant colour images for Jean de Florette and Manon des sources (1986). Once more overcoming difficulties of filming in harsh natural light, Nuytten used his highly mobile camera to produce stunning cinemascope images of bone-dry Provence under the August sun.

His work for Téchiné also enjoyed high production values. After the non-naturalist sets and lighting of Souvenirs d’en France (1975), which explores subjectivity and the march of history, came the highly referential Barroco (1976). Nuytten’s interest in German expressionist lighting is apparent in his oneiric Amsterdam rendered in gray-blue tones through long travelling shots. In the painterly Les Soeurs Bronte (1978), which exploits colour thematically, claustrophobic interiors are set against bare, desolate landscapes registered through slow forward travelling shots, while Hôtel des Amériques (1981), with its cars and rain-soaked streets is shot effectively in film noir style.

Nuytten’s flexibility and willingness to experiment was recognized by Resnais and Godard. For La Vie est un roman (1983) Resnais required predominantly very flat lighting except for emotionally charged moments, and to achieve this contrast, Nuytten experimented with various film emulsions. The differently textured images, some resplendent with colour, create the surreal qualities Resnais sought in his complex tripartite narrative set in a castle at different historical moments. In Détective (1985), Godard’s constant reshaping of Sarde’s script about murderous events in a hotel created problems particularly in lighting continuity, but Nuytten nevertheless achieved some telling compositions, notably the close-ups of dead white mice and pamphlets on a breakfast tray.

For Claude Miller there were contrastive undertakings. If La Meilleure façon de marcher (1976) required location shooting in the Auvergne as well as theatrical interiors for the costume ball, Garde à vue (1981), set largely in the interrogation room of a police station required a different approach. Although presented with a storyboard, Nuytten visually ignored it as symptomatic of the overpreparation he abhorred.

In two quite different films Nuytten’s use of searching close-ups is particularly marked. In Béraud’s début feature, La Tortue sur le dos (1978), the romanticised vision of the tortured writer is exposed in a head-on shooting style in which the protagonist seems imprisoned within the frame, while in Doillon’s intimate study of a female relationship, La Pirate (1984), Nuytten used frequent zooms to capture the faces of the two protagonists. Shot in black and white, the film also conveys both the dull grayness of the hotel and the translucent beauty of the North sea.

In 1988, with the encouragement of Isabelle Adjani, Nuytten made a remarkable directorial debut with Camille Claudel. In a hand-some period production, telling the turbulent life-story of the vulnerable sculptress, Nuytten conveys with a fresh immediacy the triumphs and tribulations of artistic creation. His second film, Albert Souffre (1992), most notable for a strident sound track, focuses on the frenetic activities of the emotionally demanding protagonist.

In his association with directors whether established or emerging, Nuytten involved himself in every aspect of the cinematography from framing and lighting to choice of film stock. Each film, whether notable for an idiosyncratic use of zooms, close-ups, mobile camera work or expressionist lighting, represents no more than a formative stage in a continuously evolving cinematic style. Nuytten’s incarnation as a director deprives other filmmakers of a talented, innovative cinematographer but opens up exciting prospects for French filmmaking in the nineties.

—R. F. Cousins

NYKVIST, Sven

Cinematographer and Director. Nationality: Swedish. Born: Moheeda, 3 December 1922. Family: Father of the director-writer Carl-Gustav Nykvist. Career: Assistant cameraman from early 1940s; 1945—first film as cinematographer; 1953—first of many films for Ingmar Bergman, The Naked Night; 1956—co-directed first film, Gorilla; 1996—cinematographer for TV mini-series Enskilda samtal. Awards: Best Cinematography Academy Award and National Society of Film Critics Best Cinematography Award, for Cries and Whispers, 1972; Jury Special Prize Guldbagge Award, 1973; Best Cinematography Cesar Award, for Black Moon, 1975; Best Cinematography Academy Award, Best Cinematography British Academy Award, Best Cinematography British Society of Cinematographers, Los Angeles Film Critics Association Best Cinematography, for Fanny and Alexander, 1982; Cannes Film Festival Best Artistic Contribution, for The Sacrifice, 1986; Best Cinematography Independent Spirit Award, for The Unbearable Lightness of Being, 1988; Camerimage Lifetime Achievement Award, 1993; American Society of Cinematographers Lifetime Achievement Award, 1996; Camerimage Special Award (shared with Ingmar Bergman), 1998.

Films as Cinematographer:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>The Poor Millionaire</td>
<td>(asst)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1945</td>
<td>Barnen från Frostmojfjället</td>
<td>(Husberg) (asst); Goromron Bill (Falk-Winner); Treton stolar (Thirteen Chairs) (Larsson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1946</td>
<td>Saltstänk och krutgubbar</td>
<td>(Bauman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>Maj på Malö</td>
<td>(Bauman); Lata Lena och blåögda Per (Wallén)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>Lång-Lasse i Delbo</td>
<td>(Johansson); Hin och småläningen (co); Bohus bataljon (Cederstrand-Spjuth); Sjösalavår (Spring at Sjösalu) (Wallén)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
1950  Loffe blir polis (Ahrle) (co)
1951  Rågens rike (Johansson)
1952  Under Södra Korset (Under the Southern Cross) (+ co-d, co-sc—doc); Nar syrenerna blommar (When Lilacs Blossom) (Johansson)
1953  Barabbas (Sjöberg) (co); Vägen till Kolekrike (Skoglund); Gycklarnas aften (The Naked Night; Sawdust and Tinsel) (Bergman) (co)
1954  Salka Valka (Mattsson); Karin Mansdotter (Sjöberg); Storm over Tjurö (Mattsson)
1955  Sista ringen (Skoglund); Den underbara lögnen (Road)
1956  Gorilla (+ co-d); Nattbarn (Children of the Night) (Hellström); Flickan i frack (Girl in a Dressing Gown) (Mattsson); Blänande hav (Skoglund); Alskling på vägen (Bauman) (co); Ett kungligt äventyr (Birt); Den tappre soldaten (Jönsson) (Bergström)
1957  En drömmares vandring (A Dreamer’s Walk) (Lindgren); Gäst i eget hus (Olin); Synnöve Solbakken (Hellström)
1958  Damen i svart (Lady in Black) (Mattsson); Laila—Liebe unter der Mitternachtssonne (Make Way for Lila) (Husberg)
1959  Får jag låna din fra? (Mattsson)
1960  Jungfrukällan (The Virgin Spring) (Bergman); Domaren (The Judge) (Sjöberg); De sista stegen (A Matter of Morals) (Cromwell)
1961  Sasom i en spegel (Through a Glass Darkly) (Bergman)
1963  Nattsvardsgästerna (Winter Light; The Communicants) (Bergman); Tystnaden (The Silence) (Bergman)
1964  För att inte tala om all dessa kvinnor (All These Women; Now about All These Women) (Bergman); Att älska (To Love) (J. Donner); Alskande par (Loving Couples) (Zetterling)
1965  Lianbron (The Vine Bridge) (+ d)
1966  Persona (Bergman)
1968  Vargtimmen (Hour of the Wolf) (Bergman); Skammen (The Shame) (Bergman)
1969  Riten (The Ritual; The Rite) (Bergman); En passion (The Passion of Anna; Passion) (Bergman)
1970  Erste Liebe (First Love) (Schell)
1971  Beröringen (The Touch) (Bergman); The Last Run (Fleischer); One Day in the Life of Ivan Denisovich (Wrede)
1972  Viskningar och rop (Cries and Whispers) (Bergman); Siddhartha (Roeks)
1973  Scener ur ett äktenskap (Scenes from a Marriage) (Bergman)
1974 The Dove (Jarrott); Ransom (The Terrorists) (Wrede); Trollflöjten (The Magic Flute) (Bergman)
1975 Black Moon (Malle)
1976 Ansikte not ansikte (Face to Face) (Bergman); Le Locataire
(The Tenant) (Polanski)
1977 Das Schlangenei (The Serpent’s Egg) (Bergman)
1978 En och en (One Plus One) (+ co-d); Pretty Baby (Malle); King of the Gypsies (Pierson); Herbstsonate (Autumn Sonata)
(Bergman)
1979 Hurricane (Trell); Starting Over (Pakula)
1980 Willy and Phil (Mazursky); Aus dem Leben der Marionetten
(From the Life of the Marionettes) (Bergman)
1981 The Postman Always Rings Twice (Rafelson)
1982 Fanny och Alexander (Fanny and Alexander) (Bergman);
Cannery Row (Ward)
1983 Un Amour de Swann (Swann in Love) (Schlondorff); La
Tragédie de Carmen (The Tragedy of Carmen) (Brook);
Star 80 (Fosse)
1984 Efter Repetitioner (After the Rehearsal) (Bergman)
1985 Agnes of God (Jewison)
1986 Offret (The Sacrifice) (Tarkovsky)
1988 The Unbearable Lightness of Being (Kaufman); Another Woman (W. Allen); Katinka (Vid Vgen; Ved Vejen)
(von Sydow)
1989 Crimes and Misdemeanors (W. Allen); ‘‘Oedipus Wrecks’’
ep. of New York Stories (W. Allen)
1991 Buster’s Bedroom (Horn)
1992 Chaplin (Attenborough)
1993 What’s Eating Gilbert Grape (Hallstrom); Sleepless in Seattle
(N. Ephron)
1994 With Honors (Keshishian); Only You (Jewison); Mixed Nuts
(N. Ephron)
1995 Something to Talk About (Hallstrom); Kristin Lavransdotter
(Ullmann)
1996 Enskilda samtal (Private Conversation) (Ullmann—mint for TV)
1998 Celebrity (Allen)
1999 Curtain Call (Yates)

Other Films:
1977 A Look at Liv (Kaplan) (doc) (ro as Himself)
1992 The Ox (d, sc)
1992 Visions of Light: The Art of the Cinematographer (Glassman, McCathy, Samuels) (doc) (ro as Interviewee)
1995 Lumiere et compagnie (Lumiere and Company) (various) (ro)
1997 Liv Ullmann scener fra et liv (Hambro) (doc) (ro as Interviewee)
2000 Ljuset haller mig sallskap (Light Keeps Me Company) (Carl-Gustav Nykvist) (doc) (ro as Interviewee)

Publications

By NYKVIST: articles—

‘‘Photographing the Films of Ingmar Bergman,’’ in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), October 1962.

‘‘A Passion for Light,’’ in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), April 1972.

Deutsche Kameramann (Munich), September 1974.

On The Magic Flute in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), August 1975.

On Face to Face in Filmmakers Newsletter (Ward Hill, Massachusetts), May 1976.

Filmkritik (Munich), May 1976.

Millimeter (New York), July/August 1976.

On Cannery Row in American Cinematographer (Hollywood),
April 1981.

Millimeter (New York), May 1981.

On Location (Hollywood), November 1983.

American Film (Washington, D.C.), March 1984.

Eyepiece (London), July/August 1984.

Positif (Paris), May 1986.

American Cinematographer (Hollywood), March 1989.

Film Comment (New York), September/October 1989.

On NYKVIST: articles—

Filmwoche, 8 July 1961.

Chaplin (Stockholm), December 1965.

Film in Sweden, no. 1, 1968.

Film World (Bombay), October/December 1968.

On From the Life of the Marionettes in Film (London), 15 November 1982.

Block, Bruce A., in American Cinematographer (Hollywood),
April 1984.

Film Dope (Nottingham), July 1992.

Chaplin (Stockholm), vol. 34, no. 6, 1992/1993.

Filmkultura (Budapest), July 1993.

Edmunds, M., ‘‘A master lenser looks back,’’ in Variety (New York),

* * *

Sven Nykvist’s color cinematography on the films of the director Ingmar Bergman has won him praise, awards—and endless imitators. Nykvist was the director of photography on all of Bergman’s films and most of his television productions from The Virgin Spring through Fanny and Alexander and After the Rehearsal. So well does Nykvist’s cinematography fit Bergman’s later films that it is difficult to untangle their mutual influence on each other’s work.

When he was part of Bergman’s tightly knit 18-person crew, Nykvist’s responsibilities included lighting and actually working the camera, as well as designing the cinematography for the production. This may account for the decline in quality (from superb down to excellent) when Nykvist works on American films, and must delegate part of his duties among the crew. Nevertheless, there is also clearly a symbiotic matching of tastes and temperaments between himself and Bergman that Nykvist has not shared with other directors. Both Swedes are the sons of pastors, both had difficult childhoods (Nykvist’s parents were African missionaries, and left him at home in Sweden for much of his childhood), and both fondly recall an early fascination with the power of film and light over the imagination.

Nykvist’s pioneering with natural light sources complements Bergman’s penchant for location shooting and minimalist shot compositions (“two faces and a teacup”). While Nykvist builds upon the Swedish tradition of filmmaking in his style, he has brought the national tradition of stark psychological landscape into international favor with color cinematography that achieves iconographical beauty by eschewing the distracting prettiness generally associated with color film. Initially, Nykvist was reluctant to move from black and white to color because color’s tendency to prettify subjects and emphasize detail made it difficult to show something as convincingly “ugly.” When color became a commercial necessity, Nykvist and Bergman got off to a false start in Now about All These Woman, released in 1964, which made them run for cover back to black and white until they shot Passion in 1969. By ignoring much of the conventional wisdom about using color film, Nykvist finally managed to bring an iconographical style to Cries and Whispers, his fourth color film for Bergman.

Nykvist emphasizes that he strives for realism, but his use of the term is misleading. He portrays psychological truth rather than social realism, and his heavy reliance on natural light and geometrically precise shot composition gives his work the convincing quality of a dream, not a documentary. Nykvist explains that light is the key to his cinematography, and that light is a character in Bergman’s films. The significance of an actor’s actions often is determined by subtle differences in lighting. This fascination with light is probably linked to both men’s experience of Sweden’s sunless winters and unblinking summer sun. On Cries and Whispers the two men spent weeks simply gauging the natural light at different times of day inside the house which served as the main interior for the film. This careful preproduction work in terms of light is typical of their style.

Although each of Nykvist’s films for Bergman has its own unique look, Nykvist typically favors a soft bounce lighting. Careful positioning of highlights prevents the usual flattening effect of such lighting, and gives actors a rounded, three-dimensional look which is flattering. He uses a minimum of color saturation, and sets and costumes are usually chosen in muted tones. In his Hollywood films, the demands of directors and time schedules has sometimes forced him to experiment with technical gimmicks. He steered away from in Bergman films, however, relying instead on a dogged determination to wait until the natural light was right to shoot. One exception to this is Bergman’s fantasy The Magic Flute, shot in a studio, in which Nykvist used a good many colored filler and key lights and a strong backlight rather than his usual bounce lighting; yet he still preferred to manipulate the light rather than use extensive lab work or distorting lenses and filters. More typical of his style is his bravura camerawork on Scenes from a Marriage, which included ten-minute takes with as many as 20 zooms per take, plus complex camera movements. His ability to track an actor precisely and sensitively during a long take is phenomenal, and most of Scenes from a Marriage was shot with only one camera, held, of course, by Nykvist. Despite his technical mastery and careful preplanning, he relies heavily on instinct and a feel for shots, and approaches his work more as an artist than a technician.

For decades, foreign cinematographers had little chance of working in American films. The easing of union regulations in the 1970s, however, allowed European directors of photography an increasing visibility in the American film industry. Since then, Nykvist has photographed a variety of American films, from Agnes of God to What’s Eating Gilbert Grape. And over the years, he has worked for other filmmakers, including Louis Malle, Roman Polanski, Andrei Tarkovsky, Volker Schlöndorff, Philip Kaufman, Lasse Hallstrom, Nora Ephron, Liv Ullmann (in which he maintained his Bergman connection), and Woody Allen, and directed his own films. Particularly notable is his work with Allen on Another Woman, Crimes and Misdemeanors, Celebrity, and the “Oedipus Wrecks” episode of New York Stories. But Nykvist still remains synonymous with Ingmar Bergman, with their collaboration producing the cinematographer’s most innovative, influential, and renowned work. In Light Keeps Me Company, a documentary directed by Nykvist’s son, Carl-Gustav, Bergman noted, “Sven and I saw things alike, thought things alike; our feeling for light was the same. We had the same basic moral positions about camera placement.”

—Patricia Ferrara, updated by Rob Edelman
O’BRIEN, Willis H.

Special Effects Technician. Nationality: American. Born: Oakland, California, 2 March 1886. Family: Married 1) Hazel Ruth Collette, 1917 (died 1934); two sons; 2) Darlyne Preneett, 1934. Career: Cartoonist for San Francisco Daily News; commercial sculptor (work exhibited at San Francisco World’s Fair, 1913); 1914—began experimenting with special effects in short films; from mid-1920s—worked on special effects for feature films. Died: 8 November 1962.

Films as Director, Writer, Photographer, and Special Effects Technician (Shorts):

- 1914 The Dinosaur and the Missing Link
- 1916 The Birth of a Fivver
- 1917 R.F.D. 10,000 B.C.; Prehistoric Poultry; Curious Pets of Our Ancestors; Mickey’s Naughty Nightmares; Morphius Mike; In the Villain’s Power; Mickey and His Goat; Sam Lloyd’s Famous Puzzles; Nippy’s Nightmare
- 1918 The Ghost of Slumber Mountain

Films as Special Effects Technician (Features):

- 1925 The Lost World (Hoyt)
- 1933 King Kong (Cooper and Schoedsack); Son of Kong (Schoedsack)
- 1935 The Last Days of Pompeii (Schoedsack)
- 1936 The Dancing Pirate (Corrigan)
- 1949 Mighty Joe Young (Schoedsack)
- 1952 This Is Cinerama (Thompson and others) (uncredited)
- 1955 This Animal World (Allen)
- 1957 The Black Scorpion (Ludwig)
- 1959 The Giant Behemoth (Behemoth, the Sea Monster) (Lourie)
- 1960 The Lost World (Allen) (uncredited)
- 1962 It’s a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World (Kramer) (uncredited)

Film as Writer:

- 1956 The Beast of Hollow Mountain (Nassour)

Publications

By O’BRIEN: book—

On O’BRIEN: books—

On O’BRIEN: articles—

Classic Film Collector (Indiana, Pennsylvania), Summer 1974.

Vampir (Nuremberg), March 1977.

“‘O’Brien Issue’” of Cinefex (Riverside, California), January 1982.

Film Dope, no. 48, July 1992.

Boxoffice (Chicago), June 1997.

---

While screen monsters will always be with us, it seems likely that the days of the animated monster are gone. The amount of time (and therefore money) tied up in producing a well-crafted live-action feature employing this special effects process has limited its use almost from the beginning. The career of Willis H. O’Brien, the man who pioneered the use of model animation, reflects only too well the inherent problems associated with the technique; yet he is without doubt a major figure, not only in the history of special effects but in the history of the cinema as a whole.

Any discussion of O’Brien’s work must centre around King Kong. His major project, the film is probably still the most successful of this particular subgenre. The effects are not allowed to dominate the overall film to its detriment (as has sometimes been the case in the work of O’Brien’s successor, Ray Harryhausen), but are properly integrated into the skillfully worked out “beauty and the beast” storyline. Most importantly, Kong is a character rather than an impersonal instrument of destruction. As many critics have pointed out, he expresses emotions (such as his affection for Ann Darrow [Fay Wray], his anger when he loses her, a childlike curiosity as he examines the bodies of creatures he has just vanquished) and motivation. O’Brien’s achievement is to make us regard Kong as a living being, not just as a piece of clever effects work. King Kong may have been improved on technically, but never on the level of characterization.
O’Brien’s career after King Kong was, unfortunately, very patchy. Despite the film’s commercial success, it did not become any easier to launch animation projects. Son of Kong, while impressive in the effects area, falls flat in all other departments. Several titles, such as War Eagle and Gwangi were put into preproduction in the 1930s and 1940s but then abandoned. The films made in the 1950s suffered from low budgets. Some, such as The Black Scorpion, contain good special effects sequences, but O’Brien’s involvement with them was to a lesser degree than his earlier work (he supervised the animation for The Giant Behemoth and merely provided the original story for The Beast of Hollow Mountain, and the original plot for Mighty Joe Young). The one major animation project O’Brien worked on following King Kong was Mighty Joe Young, produced by the same team, Merian C. Cooper and Ernest B. Shoedsack, for RKO. Joe Young lacks Kong’s grandeur but like him comes across as a character and not just a creature. In the most memorable scenes he accidentally demolishes a nightclub while drunk and, at the climax, rescues children from a burning orphanage. Unlike Kong, who ends up riddled with bullets, Joe’s act of heroism earns him forgiveness (the police were sent to destroy him after the nightclub episode) and he returns home to Africa. Aided by a team of assistants that included Marcel Delgado (who built the models for many of the films) and, later, Ray Harryhausen, O’Brien demonstrated with King Kong and Mighty Joe Young how effectively model animation can be employed in live-action films. It is certain that neither of the films could have worked so well had some other method been used (compare the original King Kong with the 1976 remake). Even the relatively crude models employed in The Lost World are infinitely preferable to the genuine reptiles used as dinosaurs in the 1960 version of the same story. Whatever the disappointments of O’Brien’s career, he was responsible for some of the best-known images in cinema history.

—Daniel O’Brien

ONDŘÍČEK, Miroslav

Cinematographer. Nationality: Czech. Born: Prague, 4 November 1934. Education: 1957–59—attended Film Academy (FAMU), Prague. Career: Worked in amateur theatre, and as focus puller, grip, and laboratory technician; 1953–56—assistant at documentary film studio; 1963—photographed the first of many films for Milos Forman, Talent Competition; worked on films for Lindsay Anderson in England, 1967–68, and on international films after 1972. Award: British Academy Award for Amadeus, 1985.

Films as Cinematographer:

- 1957 Snadný život (Makovec) (asst); Váhavý střelec (Toman) (asst)
- 1958 Cesta zpátky (Krška) (asst); Dnes naposled (Today for the Last Time) (Frič); Zde jsou lvi (Krška) (asst)
- 1960 Holubice (Vlčil) (asst); Kouzelný den (Valášek) (asst)
- 1961 Králíči ve vysoké trávě (Gajer)
- 1962 Deštivý den (Rainy Day) (Bělka) (asst)
- 1963 Až přijde kocour (The Cat) (Jasný); Konkurs (Talent Competition) (Forman); Křík (The Cry) (Jireš)
- 1964 Démanty noci (Diamonds of the Night) (Němec)
- 1965 Intimní osvětlení (Intimate Lighting) (Passer) (co); Lásky jedné pta vovlásky (Loves of a Blonde) (Forman); “Perlicky na dne” ep. of Podvodení (Němec)
- 1967 Hoří, má penenka (The Firemen’s Ball) (Forman); Prag Legende (Lahola) (TV)
- 1968 Co nikdy nepochopím... (Rohác) (TV)
- 1969 If . . . (Anderson); Télo Diany (Richard)
- 1970 Slaughterhouse-Five (Hill) (exterior); Taking Off (Forman)
- 1972 Homolka a tobolka (Papousek)
- 1973 O Lucky Man! (Anderson)
- 1974 Drahé tety a já (Podskalsky); Televis v Bublicch aneb Bublice v televizi (Papousek)
- 1975 Dvojí svět hotelu Pacifík (Majewski); Hřiště (Skalsky)
- 1976 Jakub (Koval); Konečně si rozumíme (Papousek); Slovácká suita (TV)
- 1978 Antonín Dvořák: Symfonie č. 9 e moll, op. 95 “Z Nového světa” (TV); Příběh lásky a cti (Vávra)
- 1978 Nechci nic slyšet (Koval)
- 1979 Božská Ema (The Divine Emma) (Krejčík); Hair (Forman)
- 1980 Ragtime (Forman); Tenné slunce (Vávra)
- 1982 The World According to Garp (Hill)
- 1982 Silkwood (Nichols)
- 1983 Amadeus (Forman)
- 1984 The River (Rydell)
- 1985 F/X (Mandell); Heaven Help Us (Dinner)
- 1986 Distant Harmony (Sage)
- 1987 Big Shots (Mandell)
- 1988 Hashigaon Hagadon (Funny Farm) (Alter)
- 1989 Valmont (Forman)
- 1990 Awakenings (P. Marshall)
- 1992 A League of Their Own (P. Marshall)
- 1995 Let It Be Me (Bergstein)
- 1996 The Preacher’s Wife (Marshall)

Publications

By ONDŘÍČEK: articles—

On ONDŘÍČEK: articles—

- Kino (Prague), no. 10, 1967
- Film Dope (Nottingham), June 1993.

* * *

The international career of Miroslav Ondříček began in the 1960s through his work with such directors of the Czechoslovak New Wave as Jan Němec, Ivan Passer, and especially Milos Forman. As their films received prestigious awards at international festivals, Ondříček’s photography was recognized as a chief factor determining the movement’s style and form. His camera work in such films as Loves of a Blonde, Intimate Lighting, and The Firemen’s Ball shows his skill in social documentary and satire. The mixture of the unobtrusive, predominantly medium shots and telling close-ups registering multitudes of momentary human reactions and feelings, created the unique style of the New Wave and demonstrated Ondříček’s sensitivity to the film medium. Ondříček’s talent for satire comes through especially in Forman’s The Firemen’s Ball, where his alert and often merciless camera catches the comic in the common and everyday. Without Ondříček’s masterful cinematography, Forman’s film would have lost much of its continuous, snowballing humor.

The success of Forman’s films abroad led to Ondříček’s first job outside Czechoslovakia. In 1966, although he did not know any English, Ondříček was invited by Lindsay Anderson to photograph The White Bus. Anderson liked his work so much that he employed him again for his two most well-known films, If . . . and O Lucky Man! Photographing each of them was a new challenge for Ondříček. In If . . . following Anderson’s directions, he successfully undercut a straightforward and realistic story with surrealistic portions giving the picture its ambiguous mixture of fantasy and reality, its quality of ‘assumed’ reality. In O Lucky Man!, Ondříček’s photography marvelously interplayed with Alan Price’s songs and abruptly changed settings to portrait the episodic adventures of its modern picaro.

Ondříček’s high professional reputation today rests on his 30-year-long association with his compatriot, Milos Forman who, forced to remain in the West after the Soviet invasion of his homeland, established himself as one of the most successful contemporary Hollywood filmmakers. Ondříček shot all but two of Forman’s films, creating photography for such hits as Hair, Ragtime, and Amadeus. Shooting each of these films was a completely different experience. After all, each was a creative adaptation of a different genre (musical, novel, and play, respectively), and each dealt with a radically different period of time. In Hair Ondříček’s dynamic camera work helped give the film a coherent and fluent story line naturally highlighted by choreography and popular songs.

Ondříček’s lighting and predominantly medium shots created the film’s nostalgic and romanticized portrayal of the radical 1960s, Ragtime, for which Ondříček received an Oscar nomination, required a meticulous recreation of early 20th-century New York. Following the photographic style of the time, Ondříček depended on the natural outside light for interior sequences, avoided shots of human profiles, and positioned the camera usually at lower angles. Most of Amadeus was shot in historic Prague, Ondříček’s home city, which was easily transformed into 18th-century Vienna. Many opera sequences were photographed in the old Tyl Theater where Mozart conducted his Don Giovanni.

Although the limited indoor space greatly reduced the freedom of his camera movement, all his interior scenes look dynamic and lively. Moreover, the candlelight and Chinese lanterns housing color-sprayed 250-watt bulbs gave his interior photography a realistic, warm 18th-century look. Amadeus, Ondříček’s most lavish and challenging production so far, demonstrated the full scope of his remarkable talent. His photography gave the film its narrative flow, dynamism and splendor in the group sequences, and the intimacy of Mozart’s personal life—all dramatically punctuated with the composer’s enchanting music. For the first time in his career, Ondříček photographed a film that combined his love of filmmaking, music, and his hometown, Prague.

Ondříček’s work with Forman gave him opportunities to work with other American directors, notably George Roy Hill and Mike Nichols. In Hill’s Slaughterhouse-Five, a rather dull, humorless adaptation of Kurt Vonnegut’s famous novel, his photography effectively conveyed the film’s intricate narrative structure and its abruptly shifting time levels. A large part of that film was shot in Czechoslovakia. In Nichols’s Silkwood Ondříček’s photography subtly contrasted Karen’s private and professional lives. To emphasize the characters’ radioactive contamination, Ondříček used special make-up and fluorescent light for the sequences inside the plutonium plant. For scenes in Karen’s house, on the other hand, he used only natural outside light from the windows.

Ondříček’s photography does not exhibit any consistent stylistic or formal features. It simply demonstrates versatile technical professionalism, discipline, and artistic intuition which has always given him that rare ability to translate the director’s vision into convincing visual images. After all, in an interview for American Cinematographer (May 1982), Ondříček plainly admitted, “Give me the right story and director, and I believe that I can find any cinematographic style that is needed.”

—Tomasz Warchol

ORRYY-KELLY

Films as Costume Designer:

1932 The Rich Are Always with Us (Green) (co); So Big (Wellman); You Said a Mouthful (Bacon); I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang (LeRoy); The Crash (Dieterle); The Match King (Bretherton and Keighley); One Way Passage (Garnett); Week-End Marriage (Frelend); Winner Takes All (Del Ruth); Crooner (Bacon); Tiger Shark (Hawks); Two against the World (Mayo) (co); Cabin in the Cotton (Curtiz); Three on a Match (LeRoy); Scarlet Dawn (Dieterle); Lawyer Man (Dieterle); Employees Entrance (Del Ruth); Frisco Jenny (Wellman); Twenty Thousand Years in Sing Sing (Curtiz); Ladies They Talk About (Bretherton)

1933 Captured (Del Ruth); Central Airport (Wellman); Convention City (Mayo); Ex-Lady (Florey); Female (Curtiz); 42nd Street (Bacon) (co); Hard to Handle (LeRoy); The House on 56th Street (Florey) (co); The Narrow Corner (Green); The Picture Snatcher (Bacon); Private Detective 62 (Curtiz); The Working Man (Adolfi); The Mystery of the Wax Museum
(Curtiz); Voltaire (Adolfi); The Little Giant (Del Ruth); The Mind Reader (Del Ruth); The King’s Vacation (Adolfi); Parachute Jumper (Green); Grand Slam (Dieterle); Blondie Johnson (Enright); Gold Diggers of 1933 (LeRoy); Baby Face (Green); The Life of Jimmy Dolan (The Kid’s Last Fight) (Mayo); Lilly Turner (Wellman); Heroes for Sale (Wellman); The Mayor of Hell (Mayo); The Silk Express (Enright); Mary Stevens M.D. (Bacon); The Kennel Murder Case (Curtiz); She Had to Say Yes (Berkeley and Amy); College Coach (Wellman); The World Changes (LeRoy); Son of a Sailor (Bacon); Massacre (Crosland); Journal of a Crime (Keighley); Harold Teen (The Dancing Foot) (Roth)

As the Earth Turns (Green); British Agent (Curtiz); The Circus Clown (Enright); Dames (Enright); Dark Hazard (Green); Desirable (Mayo); Dr. Monica (Keighley); The Dragon Murder Case (Humberstone); Easy to Love (Keighley); Fashions of 1934 (Dieterle); The Firebird (Dieterle); Flirtation Walk (Borzage); Happiness Ahead (LeRoy); Hi, Nellie (LeRoy); Housewife (Green); I Am a Thief (Florey); Kansas City Princess (Keighley); The Key (Curtiz); Madame Du Barry (Dieterle); The Merry Frinks (Green); Merry Wives of Reno (Humberstone); Midnight Alibi (Crosland); Murder in the Clouds (Lederman); The Personality Kid (Crosland); Return of the Terror (Bretherton); Wonder Bar (Bacon); Babbitt (Keighley); I’ve Got Your Number (Enright); Gambling Lady (Mayo); Heat Lightning (LeRoy); Jimmy the Gent (Curtiz); Bedside (Frey); A Modern Hero (Pabst); Twenty Million Sweethearts (Enright); Smarty (Hit Me Again) (Florey); He Was Her Man (Bacon); Underworld (Del Ruth); A Very Honorable Guy (Bacon); Fog over Frisco (Dieterle); Here Comes the Navy (Bacon); Registered Nurse (Florey); Friends of Mr. Sweeney (Ludwig); Side Street (Green); The Case of the Howling Dog (Crosland); A Lost Lady (Green); Big Hearted Herbert (Keighley); Gentlemen Are Born (Green); The St. Louis Kid (A Perfect Weekend) (Enright); I Sell Anything (Florey); Maybe It’s Love (McG ann); The Secret Bride (Concealment) (Dieterle); Gold Diggers of 1935 (Berkeley)

Bordertown (Mayo); Broadway Gondolier (Bacon); Broadway Hostess (McDonald); Dangerous (Green); The Frisco Kid (Bacon); G-Men (Keighley); I Found Stella Parish
(LeRoy); In Caliente (Bacon); Living on Velvet (Borzage); Miss Pacific Fleet (Enright); Page Miss Glory (LeRoy) (co); The Payoff (Florey); Shiptmates Forever (Borzage); Stars over Broadway (Keighley); Sweet Adeline (LeRoy); The Widow from Monte Carlo (Collins); The Woman in Red (Florey); Front Page Woman (Curtiz); The Goose and the Gander (Green); Special Agent (Keighley); Stranded (Borzage); The Petrified Forest (Mayo); The Case of the Curious Bride (Curtiz); The Florentine Dagger (Florey); Going Highbrow (Florey); The Girl from Tenth Avenue (Men on Her Mind) (Green); Bright Lights (Funny Face) (Keiley); The Irish in Us (Bacon); I Live for Love (I Live for You) (Berkley); Little Big Shot (Curtiz); Ceiling Zero (Hawks); Freshman Love (Rhythm on the River) (McGann)

1936 China Clipper (Enright); Colleen (Green); Gold Diggers of 1937 (Bacon); The Golden Arrow (Green); Hearts Divided (Borzage); I Married a Doctor (Mayo); Isle of Fury (McDonald); Jailbreak (Grinde); The Law in Her Hands (Clems); Murder by an Aristocrat (McDonald); Polo Joe (McCann); Satan Met a Lady (Dieterle); The Singing Kid (Keighley); Snowed Under (Enright); Stage Struck (Berkley); Stolen Holiday (Curtiz); Times Square Playboy (McGann); The White Angel (Dieterle); Cain and Mabel (Bacon); The Walking Dead (Curtiz); Three Men on a Horse (LeRoy); Jailbreak (Murder in the Big House) (Grinde); Give Me Your Heart (Sweet Aloes) (Mayo); Here Comes Carter (Voice of Scandal) (Clems)

1937 Another Dawn (Dieterle); Call It a Day (Mayo); First Lady (Hogan); The Go-Getter (Berkley); Green Light (Borzage); Hollywood Hotel (Berkley); It’s Love I’m After (Mayo); Kid Galahad (Curtiz); Marked Woman (Bacon); That Certain Woman (Goulding); Ever Since Eve (Bacon); The King and the Chorus Girl (Romance Is Sacred) (LeRoy); The Singing Marine (Enright); Tovarich (Litvak) (co)

1938 Confession (May); Angels with Dirty Faces (Curtiz); Four Daughters (Curtiz) (co); Four’s a Crowd (Curtiz); Jezabel (Wyler); My Bill (Farrow); Secrets of an Actress (Keighley); The Sisters (Litvak); Comet over Broadway (Berkley); Women Are Like That (Logan)

1939 Dark Victory (Goulding); Juarez (Dieterle); King of the Underworld (Seiler); The Oklahoma Kid (Bacon); The Old Maid (Goulding); Women in the Wind (Farrow); The Private Lives of Elizabeth and Essex (Curtiz); On Your Toes (Enright); Wings of the Navy (Bacon); When Tomorrow Comes (Stahl); Indianapolis Speedway (Devil on Wheels) (Bacon)

1940 All This, and Heaven Too (Litvak); The Letter (Wyler); The Sea Hawk (Curtiz); ’Til We Meet Again (Goulding); My Love Comes Back (Bernhard); A Dispatch from Reuters (This Man Reuter) (Dieterle); No Time for Comedy (Keighley)

1941 The Bride Came C.O.D. (Keighley); The Great Lie (Goulding); Kings Row (Wood); The Little Foxes (Wyler); The Maltese Falcon (Huston); The Man Who Came to Dinner (Keighley); The Strawberry Blonde (Walsh); Affectionately Yours (Bacon); Million Dollar Baby (Bernhard); They Died with Their Boots On (Walsh)

1942 Casablanca (Curtiz); In This Our Life (Huston); Now, Voyager (Rapper); The Hard Way (V. Sherman); George Washington Slept Here (Keighley) of grays. His fabrics were of as high quality as Travis Banton’s, but he disdained the Paramount “shimmer.” Nonetheless, costumes by Orry-Kelly were never dull. He cut with style and enhanced with intricate details. Tiny pleats and piping created subtle surface shadows, as did the textured embroideries, open work, crocheted lace, and trapunto. Appreciating skilled handiwork, he even included handpainted fabrics for some of his designs. As more daring decoration, he might add polka dots or punctuate with rows of buttons.

However, decoration was not his aim when working with Bette Davis. As a former actor, he understood the necessity of depicting a character’s depth. Davis demanded that each role have a life of its own, with costumes playing a significant part in defining each character’s image. At times, Orry-Kelly virtually resculpted her body to achieve a desired effect, and their successes included Jezebel, Dark Victory, The Little Foxes, Now, Voyager, and many others. One of Davis’s earliest and least favorite films, Fashions of 1934, which stars some of Orry-Kelly’s more imaginative creations, stands out as a delightful spoof of the fashion world.

Orry-Kelly’s unpretentious style well served Warner Bros. He peopled its gritty gangster features with many a well-heeled moll. He’d take the kind of girl that “a man’s man” could “go for,” and wrap her in wools as beautiful as chinchilla. His costumes for The Maltese Falcon and Casablanca spoke with the rich spareness of Hemingway.

But the Orry-Kelly style hardly suited everyone. The studio delegated Busby Berkeley production numbers to Milo Anderson, who also designed most of the Olivia de Havilland pictures. And when Orry-Kelly worked at Fox in the 1940s, he was never quite comfortable with those glitzy Betty Grable extravaganzas.

Freelancing in the 1950s widened Orry-Kelly’s range. He put Katharine Hepburn in sportswear for Pat and Mike, Shirley Jones in gingham for Oklahoma!; Rosalind Russell in everything for Auntie Mame, and Marilyn Monroe in barely anything for Some Like It Hot. The early 1960s assigned Orry-Kelly to several adult dramas, including Sweet Bird of Youth and Five Finger Exercise.

—Edith C. Lee

O’STEEEN, Sam

Editor. Nationality: American. Born: 6 March 1923. Career: 1956—assistant editor, became full editor in mid-1960s; 1976—directed first theatrical feature film, Sparkle.

Films as Editor:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1964</td>
<td>Kisses for My President (Bernhardt)</td>
<td>(Bernhardt)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1965</td>
<td>Robin and the Seven Hoods (G. Douglas)</td>
<td>(Daves)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1965</td>
<td>Marriage on the Rocks (Donohue)</td>
<td>(Sinatra)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1966</td>
<td>Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf? (Nichols)</td>
<td>(Sinatra)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1967</td>
<td>The Graduate (Nichols); Hotel (Quine); Cool Hand Luke (Rosenberg)</td>
<td>(Nichols)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1968</td>
<td>Rosemary’s Baby (Polanski)</td>
<td>(Polanski)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1969</td>
<td>The Sterile Cuckoo (Pakula)</td>
<td>(Pakula)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1970</td>
<td>Catch-22 (Nichols)</td>
<td>(Nichols)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1971</td>
<td>Carnal Knowledge (Nichols)</td>
<td>(Nichols)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1972 Portnoy’s Complaint (Lehman)

1973 The Day of the Dolphin (Nichols)

1974 Chinatown (Polanski)

1978 Straight Time (Grosbard)

1979 Hurricane (Troell)

1982 Amityville II: The Possession (Damiani)

1983 Silkwood (Nichols)

1986 Heartburn (Nichols)

1987 Nadine (Benton)

1988 Frantic (Polanski); Biloxi Blues (Nichols); Working Girl (Nichols)

1989 A Dry White Season (Palcy)

1990 Postcards from the Edge (Nichols)

1991 Regarding Henry (Nichols)

1992 Consenting Adults (Pakula)

1994 Wolf (Nichols)

1997 Night Falls on Manhattan (Lumet)

Films as Director:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1973</td>
<td>A Brand New Life (for TV)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1974</td>
<td>I Love You, Goodbye (for TV)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1975</td>
<td>Queen of the Stardust Ballroom (for TV)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1976</td>
<td>Sparkle; Look What’s Happened to Rosemary’s Baby (for TV), High Risk (for TV)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1981</td>
<td>The Best Little Girl in the World (for TV)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1985</td>
<td>Kids Don’t Tell (for TV)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

On O’STEEEN: articles—

Film Dope (Nottingham), June 1993.

* * *

Sam O’Steen has been at the heart of some of the most important and award-winning films of the last 30 years. O’Steen began his career in the mid-1950s as an assistant editor and rapidly rose up to a full editor in the early 1960s on such films as Robin and the Seven Hoods and Youngblood Hawke.

In 1966 O’Steen teamed up with a young director named Mike Nichols on the acclaimed Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf? Known for his creative editing style, O’Steen and the director forged a relationship which has lasted the better part of three decades. O’Steen received an Academy Award nomination for Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf? O’Steen and Nichols’s partnership produced some of the most respected films of the late 1960s and early 1970s. Nowhere are O’Steen’s skills more apparent than in Dustin Hoffman’s classic debut film, The Graduate. O’Steen gives the audience time to study the performer’s face before cutting the scene. O’Steen allows for long, personal looks at Hoffman’s facial expressions to give the viewers an idea of what the character is thinking instead of the “quick-cutting” seen so often in modern films.
Hoffman’s expressions at the party scene are as important to the character as any bit of dialogue and O’Steen does not cut the scene short.

O’Steen also worked with renowned director Roman Polanski on _Rosemary’s Baby_ and _Chinatown_, which garnered O’Steen’s second Academy Award nomination. _Chinatown_ is one of the best films of the 1970s and O’Steen’s seamless editing keeps the film from slowing down. _Chinatown_ is shot almost entirely in close-ups of the characters talking, yet it feels as though the action never stops. As Jack Nicholson solves the mystery, the audience solves the mystery so every scene is invaluable. Each scene is edited so that once a piece of information is revealed, it ends. One of the interesting things about _Chinatown_ is information is discovered as much through Nicholson’s facial expressions as it is through actual clues, so O’Steen’s editing had to hold the scenes long enough for the audience to keep up with the story. Faye Dunaway’s famous revelation scene near the end of _Chinatown_ shows O’Steen’s skill as an editor. The scene lasts long enough for Nicholson (and the audience) to comprehend the magnitude of John Huston’s incestuous relationship with Dunaway without lingering into overkill.

In 1976 O’Steen took a shot at directing feature films with the unremarkable _Sparkle_, a story about the rise of a black singing group. He has also directed a number of made-for-television movies.

Sam O’Steen has been a part of many of the most memorable movies of the last 30 years. He tends to be surrounded by quality directors and performers. In addition to Hoffman and Nichols, Polanski and Nicholson, he has worked with such heavyweights as Paul Newman in _Cool Hand Luke_, Harrison Ford in _Regarding Henry_, and Meryl Streep in the 1983 film _Silkwood_, for which he received his third Academy Award nomination.

In the end, Sam O’Steen will be forever linked with old pro Mike Nichols. In 1988 they worked together with Harrison Ford and Melanie Griffith on _Working Girl_, and teamed up with an old friend from the _Carnal Knowledge_ days, Jack Nicholson, for the 1994 film _Wolf_. Sam O’Steen continues to be one of the most respected film editors in the business.

—Patrick J. Sauer
PAL, George

Films as Director of Puppetoons at Paramount:

1941 Western Daze; Dipsy Gypsy; Hoola Boola; The Gay Knighties; Rhythm in the Ranks
1942 Jasper and the Watermelons; The Sky Princess; Mr. Strauss Takes a Waltz; Tulips Shall Grow; The Little Broadcast; Jasper’s Haunted House
1943 Jasper and the Choo-Choo; Bravo, Mr. Strauss; The 500 Hats of Bartholomew Cubbins; Jasper’s Music Lesson; The Track That Flew; Jasper Goes Fishing; Good Night, Rusty
1944 A Package for Jasper; Say Ah Jasper; And to Think I Saw It on Mulberry Street; Jasper Goes Hunting; Jasper’s Paradise; 2 Gun Rusty
1945 Hotlips Jasper; Jasper Tell; Hatful of Dreams; Jasper’s Minstrels; Jasper’s Booby Traps; Jasper’s Close Shave; Jasper and the Beanstalk; My Man Jasper
1946 Olio for Jasper; Together in the Weather; Jasper’s Derby; John Henry and the Inky Poo; Jasper in a Jam; Shoe Shine Jasper 1947 Wilbur the Lion; Tubby the Tuba; A Date with Duke; Rhapsody in Wood Films as Producer, Director, and Special Effects Designer:

1951 When Worlds Collide (Maté)
1953 War of the Worlds (Haskin); Houdini (Marshall)
1954 The Naked Jungle (Haskin)
1955 The Conquest of Space (Haskin)

Films as Producer and Special Effects Designer (Features):

1949 The Great Rupert (Pichel)
1950 Destination Moon (Pichel)

Films as Producer:

1968 The Power (Haskin)
1975 Doc Savage, the Man of Bronze (Anderson)
Publications

By PAL: articles—

SPFX (El Paso, Texas), January 1977.

On PAL: book—

On PAL: articles—

Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1936.
Cinefantastique (Oak Park, Illinois), Fall 1971.
Starlog (New York), December 1977.
Starlog (New York), May 1978.
Cinefantastique (Oak Park, Illinois), Summer 1979.
RBCC (San Diego), September 1979.
Fantastic Films (Chicago), October 1979.
Starlog (New York), September 1980.
Cinefex (Riverside, California), no. 25, February 1986.
Literature-Film Quarterly (Salisbury), July 1989.
Scarlet Street, no. 6, Spring 1992.
Nosferatu (San Sebastian), February 1994.
Film Dope (Nottingham), April 1994.

* * *

George Pal’s motion picture career can be divided into two different phases. He first achieved worldwide recognition as the creator of the Puppetoons. Pal was originally an illustrator and animator, but he felt that the two-dimensional cel cartoons were too flat. He preferred the three-dimensional look of puppets, which he brought to life in his studio through the process of stop-motion animation. The “actors” in the Puppetoons were quite complex characters, being sculpted in wood and constructed with wire limbs that enabled them to be easily posed. In addition, these puppets were designed to use replacement parts, particularly the heads. By replacing heads with different expressions, the puppets could talk and indicate emotions. Central characters in the Puppetoons could have as many as 100–200 different replacement heads.

The 42 Puppetoons which Pal made for Paramount (Pal estimated that he created over 200 such short films in Europe) are not your typical “catch-phrase-mouse” cartoons. Even within these short eight-minute films, Pal tried to construct a meaningful story and, perhaps, a lesson. For example, he created at least two anti-Nazi propaganda films: Tulips Shall Grow and Bravo, Mr. Strauss. Both films emphasized man’s struggle for individual freedom against the oppression of a mindless army. The theme of John Henry and the Inky Poo was the conflict between man and machine, proving man’s will to dominate, rather than be dominated by machines. The Puppetoons remained extremely popular with the public through the 1940s, and in 1943 George Pal was awarded an Academy Award for the further “development of animation techniques.” In 1948 the Puppetoons finally succumbed to skyrocketing production costs and Pal’s studio at Paramount was closed. However, the end of the Puppetoons was also the beginning of George Pal’s feature film career.

As a feature film producer Pal carried with him an immense enthusiasm for fantasy plus a wide knowledge of special effects techniques. (In fact, five of his features won Academy Awards for special effects.) This combination paved the way for some of the classics of the science-fiction genre, such as Destination Moon, War of the Worlds, and The Time Machine. Although these and other films can be categorized as science-fiction, Pal’s films mainly emphasize the human quality of the story. Whereas most science-fiction films are dark, pessimistic visions of the future, Pal’s films hold forth hope for mankind. For example, the time traveler of The Time Machine is searching for a world without war; Dr. Lao in The Seven Faces of Dr. Lao shows us that there is good in everybody; and the theme of When Worlds Collide is self-sacrifice amidst a struggle for survival.

Although Pal was never given the opportunity to work with a large budget (most of his films were produced for between $500,000 and $1,000,000), his enthusiasm for his work produced the best possible product for the money, and the majority of his films were great financial successes. Today many of George Pal’s feature films and Puppetoons continue to be revived in both theaters and on television. However, some of his Puppetoons, particularly those featuring a little black boy named Jasper, have met with criticism for being racist. Such criticism both surprised and saddened Pal who, in his innocence, was not aware of such possible interpretations when he made the films. In fact, it is this “innocent” quality in Pal’s films that gives them much of the charm that other producer/directors find difficult to express in their work.

—Linda Obalil

PAN, Hermes

Films as Choreographer:

1933 Flying Down to Rio (Freeland)
1934 The Gay Divorcee (The Gay Divorce) (Sandrich)
Hermes Pan with Lana Turner

1935 Roberta (Seiter); Top Hat (Sandrich); Old Man Rhythm (Ludwig); I Dream Too Much (Cromwell); In Person (Seiter)

1936 Follow the Fleet (Sandrich); Swing Time (Stevens)

1937 Shall We Dance (Sandrich); A Damsel in Distress (Stevens)

1938 Carefree (Sandrich); Radio City Revels (Stoloff)

1939 The Story of Vernon and Irene Castle (Porter)

1941 Second Chorus (Potter); That Night in Rio (Cummings); Moon over Miami (W. Lang) (+ ro as dancer); San Valley Serenade (Humberstone); Rise and Shine (Dwan); Weekend in Havana (W. Lang)

1942 Song of the Islands (W. Lang); Footlight Serenade (Ratoff); My Gal Sal (Cummings) (+ ro as dancer); Springtime in the Rockies (Cummings)

1943 Coney Island (W. Lang); Sweet Rosie O’Grady (Cummings)

1944 Pin Up Girl (Humberstone) (+ ro as dancer); Irish Eyes Are Smiling (Ratoff)

1945 Billy Rose’s Diamond Horseshoe (Seaton); All-Star Musical Revue (short) (co)

1946 Blue Skies (Heisler)

1947 I Wonder Who’s Kissing Her Now (Bacon)

1948 That Lady in Ermine (Lubitsch)

1949 The Barkleys of Broadway (Walters)

1950 Let’s Dance (McLeod); Three Little Words (Thorpe); A Life of Her Own (Cukor) (+ ro as dancer)

1951 Texas Carnival (Walters); Excuse My Dust (Rowland)

1952 Lovely to Look At (LeRoy)

1953 Kiss Me Kate (Sidney); Sombrero (Foster)

1954 The Student Prince Thorpe); Hit the Deck (Rowland)

1955 Jupiter’s Darling (Sidney)

1956 Meet Me in Las Vegas (Rowland)

1957 Silk Stockings (Mamoulian); Pal Joey (Sidney)

1959 Porgy and Bess (Preminger)

1960 Can-Can (W. Lang)

1961 The Pleasure of His Company (Seaton) (co); Flower Drum Song (Koster)

1963 Cleopatra (Mankiewicz)

1965 The Great Race (Edwards)

1968 Finian’s Rainbow (Coppola)

1970 Darling Lili (Edwards)

1972 Lost Horizon (Jarrott)

Publications

By PAN: articles—

Cineaste (New York), vol 12, no. 4, 1983.

American Classic Screen (Shawnee Mission, Kansas), May-June 1983.

Inter/View (New York), September 1985.

On PAN: articles—

Classic Images (Indiana, Pennsylvania), January 1983.

Film Dope (Nottingham), April 1994.

* * *

Hermes Pan began his career as a Broadway dancer and stayed in New York for three years. During this time, he met Ginger Rogers when they danced together in the show Top Speed. Both dancers soon moved to Hollywood. Pan first met Fred Astaire on the set of Flying Down to Rio in 1933 at a time when dancing pictures hardly existed. The two men bore an uncanny physical resemblance to each other, not only facially but in their slim physiques, elegant personal style, professional modesty and professionalism. Astaire once told Pan that he was the only person who could dance the way Astaire did. They became very close friends as well as collaborators and it is reported that their artistic relationship even extended to Pan sometimes doubling as Astaire in long shots as well as taking the woman’s role opposite Astaire in preliminary rehearsals. “We thought so much alike about music and rhythms. The minute I saw him dance I said ‘Oh, this is the kind of dancing I love.’ He seemed to be able to do everything I felt inside and wanted to do.’”

Pan became dance director on all of Astaire’s films and choreographed nine of the 10 films pairing Astaire with Ginger Rogers—Roberta, Top Hat, Follow the Fleet, The Barkleys of Broadway are amongst the best remembered.

In the 1950s Pan choreographed a series of slick musicals transposed from stage to screen including Kiss Me Kate with Kathryn Grayson, Howard Keel and Ann Miller, Flower Drum Song, Silk Stockings, Pal Joey, The Student Prince, Finian's Rainbow and Can-Can. The sleekest of all was My Fair Lady, and he also designed the non-dancing but nevertheless spectacular staging of Cleopatra in 1963 starring Elizabeth Taylor.

Occasionally, he would appear on screen performing his own dance steps—in Moon over Miami, My Girl Sal, and with Lana Turner and Ray Milland, in A Life of Her Own. He also was able to choreograph off the dance floor onto ice for Sonja Heine and in water for Esther Williams. All in all, Hermes Pan provided the routines for 55 films, and other notable dancers who appeared in his films included Juliet Prowse, Cyd Charisse, and Betty Grable.

Together with Astaire, Hermes Pan changed the face of the screen musical, dispensing with the accepted practice of frequent cutting during numbers, and creating routines so meticulously for the camera that the dances give an impression of being filmed in a continuous take. Their collaboration resulted in dance scenes of wit, mastery, elegance, and spontaneity. Pan will always be remembered as one of the great names of the Hollywood musical along with Busby Berkeley, Robert Alton and the Kelly-Donen team.

—Sylvia Paskin

PARK, Nick

Animator, Writer, and Director. Nationality: British. Born: Nicholas W. Park in Preston, Lancashire, 1958. Education: Took communication arts course at Sheffield Art School; studied animation at National Film and Television School, Beaconsfield, 1980–83. Career: Drew cartoons as a child, began experimenting with animation at age 13; 1975—early film, Archie’s Concrete Nightmare, shown on BBC TV; started work on A Grand Day Out as graduation piece; 1983—joined Aardman Animation Studios, Bristol; 1989—completed A Grand Day Out (nominated for an Oscar). Awards: British Academy Award, for A Grand Day Out, 1989; Academy Award, for Creature Comforts, 1989, The Wrong Trousers, 1991, and A Close Shave, 1995; Honorary Doctor of Arts degree from Bath University, England, 1996; Commander of the Order of the British Empire, 1997. Address: Aardman Animation, Gas Ferry Road, Bristol BS1 6UN, England.

Films as Animator and Director:

1975  Archie’s Concrete Nightmare
1978  Jack and the Beanstalk
1986  Sledgehammer (pop promo, animation only)
1989  A Grand Day Out (+ co-sc); Creature Comforts; War Story (animation only)
1991  The Wrong Trousers (+ sc)
1995  A Close Shave (+ sc)
1996  Wallace & Gromit: The Best of Aardman Animation; Wallace & Gromit: The Aardman Collection 2
2000  Chicken Run (+ sc)

Publications

By PARK: articles—

On PARK: articles—

Sight & Sound (London), May 1996.

Nick Park with Wallace and Gromit

* * *

If Academy Awards are any indication, Nick Park is the greatest animator in the history of the cinema. With just four films (apart from juvenilia) under his belt he has scored three Best Animated Film Awards and a nomination; the one that failed to win the Oscar picked up a BAFTA Award. Not even Disney ever had such a record. But perhaps yet more impressive than the Oscar bandwagon is the universality of his films’ appeal. His ultra-English, even ultra-provincial characters, Wallace the eccentric inventor and his quick-thinking dog Gromit, have convulsed audiences in every country where they have been seen—which includes most of the world. It is a triumph for flat-voiced, faux-naïf Lancashire humor unparalleled since the heyday of George Formby.

Animated films, of course, have always crossed frontiers with an ease that live-action movies, since the advent of sound, can rarely rival, and cartoon icons from Mickey Mouse to the Simpsons have found international acceptance. What is unusual about Park’s characters is the unanimous affection they inspire—an affection that clearly reflects the warmth he himself puts into his creations. Wallace’s quirky inventiveness draws on memories of Park’s own father, and though the increasing complexity of his films has obliged him to hand over elements of the animation to his colleagues, he admits to finding it “very, very difficult to trust anybody with Wallace and Gromit,” whom he thinks of as real people.

This emotional involvement with his films also comes out in Park’s scrupulous attention to detail, another key element in his success. His chosen medium, stop-frame plasticine animation, is by its nature a painstaking and labor-intensive process, where computers can be of only marginal assistance, and in Park’s films no corners are cut: Wallace and Gromit are always framed and lit like live actors, and indeed perform like them. Park selects his fellow-animators as though auditioning actors: “You have to give a performance through the plasticine.” Every frame of his films—especially of the two most recent Wallace and Gromit vehicles, The Wrong Trousers and A Close Shave—is packed with incidental details and jokes that repay multiple viewing. Among the reading matter favored by Gromit, a canine intellectual, are Pluto’s Republic and—during his wrongful imprisonment—Crime and Punishment by Dostoyevsky.

This love of intricacy—several of Wallace’s inventions show the strong influence of another celebrator of English eccentricity, the illustrator William Heath Robinson—is often combined with remarkable economy of means when it comes to characterization. Gromit has no mouth and an inexpressive blob of a nose: his emotions are vividly conveyed via his eyes, eyebrows, and ears. The villain of The Wrong Trousers, a sinister penguin, has no facial features at all save an immobile beak and boot-button eyes, yet he radiates malignity; by way of disguise he pulls an orange rubber glove on his head, thus (it seems) convincing everyone he is a chicken.

The very idea of choosing a penguin, that lovable buffoon of the animal kingdom, as his villain, typifies the unpredictability of Park’s offbeat humor. What he lacks—unusually among animators, notoriously a sadistic lot—is a true sense of malice. Even his darkest character yet, the Terminator-style robot bulldog of A Close Shave, is redeemed in the final reel. It is impossible to imagine Park indulging in the slash-and-burn mayhem of Tom & Jerry or the brutalities of Svankmajer, let alone subjecting Gromit to the indignities visited upon Daffy Duck by Chuck Jones in Duck Amuck. Right from the first work that brought him to fame, the vox pop animals of Creature Comforts, Park’s films have conveyed an innate gentleness and good humor. In the long run, this may prove a limitation. But for the time being it is these same qualities that have helped gain his films the approval of Academy Award voters and worldwide audiences alike.

—Philip Kemp

PARKER, Claire

See ALEXEIEFF, Alexander, and Claire PARKER

PARRISH, Robert

Director, Editor, and Actor. Nationality: American. Born: Columbus, Georgia. 4 January 1916. Family: Brother of the actress Helen Parrish. Career: 1920s—began career as a child actor in such films as...
Mother Machree, City Lights, and Our Gang comedies; 1930s—became assistant editor, then sound editor; 1940s—served with John Ford as cameraman and editor on documentaries during World War II; 1947—won Academy Award for co-editing Robert Rossen’s Body and Soul, his first feature after the war; 1948—nominated for second Academy Award for co-editing All the King’s Men, again for Rossen; 1951—directorial debut with Cry Danger; 1976—published first book of memoirs, Growing Up in Hollywood; 1988—second memo-last film, Mississippi Blues, a documentary made with Bertrand Tavernier. Awards: Academy Award for Body and Soul, 1947. Died:
In Southampton, New York, 4 December 1995.

Films as Actor:

1928 Mother Machree; Four Sons (Ford)
1929 The Iron Mask (Dwan)
1930 Men without Women (Ford); All Quiet on the Western Front
(Milestone); Up the River (Ford); The Right to Love (Wallace)
1931 City Lights (Chaplin)
1933 Dr. Bull (Ford)
1934 Judge Priest (Ford)
1935 The Whole Town’s Talking (Ford); The Informer (Ford)
1936 The Prisoner of Shark Island (Ford)

Films as Sound Editor:

1939 Young Mr. Lincoln (Ford); Drums along the Mohawk (Ford)
1940 The Grapes of Wrath (Ford); The Long Voyage Home (Ford)
1941 Tobacco Road (Ford)

Films as Editor:

1936 Mary of Scotland (Ford) (asst)
1942 The Battle of Midway (doc, short)
1943 December 7th (doc, short)
1947 Body and Soul (Rossen) (co)
1948 A Double Life (Cukor); No Minor Vices (Milestone)
1949 All the King’s Men (Rossen) (co); Caught (Ophüls)
1950 Of Men and Music (concert feature) (co)

Films as Director:

1951 Cry Danger; The Mob
1952 The San Francisco Story; Assignment-Paris; My Pal Gus
1953 Rough Shoot (Shoot First)
1954 The Purple Plain
1955 Lucy Gallant
1957 Fire Down Below
1958 Saddle the Wind
1959 The Wonderful Country
1963 In the French Style (À la française) (+ co-pr)
1965 Up from the Beach
1967 Casino Royale (co-d with several others); The Bobo
1968 Duffy
1969 Doppelganger (Journey to the Far Side of the Sun)
1971 A Town Called Bastard (A Town Called Hell)
1974 The Marseille Contract (The Destrokers)
1983 Pays d’Octobre (Mississippi Blues) (co-d with Bertrand Tavernier—doc)

Publications

By PARRISH: books—

By PARRISH: articles—

American Film (Washington, D.C.), April 1986.
On The Paper Chase, in American Film (Washington, D.C.), “University of Southern California Film School,” in Positif (Paris),
June 1994.
“O.K. Freddie,” in Audience (Simi Valley), August/September 1996.

On PARRISH: article—

Film Comment (New York), March/April 1977.
Film Dope (Nottingham), April 1994.
Obituary in Classic Images (Muscatine), January 1996.
Obituary in Audience (Simi Valley), February/March 1996.

A lifetime spent in the film world ended when director/editor/actor Robert Parrish died in December of 1995. He was clearly a man who loved the movies. In his lifetime working with such directing greats as John Ford and Robert Rossen, he edited powerful dramas and shot and edited World War II documentaries then unequaled for authenticity.

He began his career as a child actor, working with Charlie Chaplin in City Lights as well as in Ford productions and Our Gang comedies.
He continued with Ford, first as an assistant editor, then as editor and cameraman with Ford’s O.S.S. department during World War II, making landmark documentaries of the U.S. war efforts.

He received his only Academy Award for co-editing duties on Rossen’s Body and Soul and a follow-up nomination for co-editing Rossen’s All the King’s Men. Initial critical response was enthusiastic to his directorial debut, Cry Danger, an action drama that was generic but exciting. Throughout his career, he would receive the best critical response to other genre films, such as the military drama, The Purple Plain, and the Western, Saddle the Wind. With writer Irwin Shaw,
Parrish co-produced In the French Style, a lightweight drama that enthused Parrish but failed to excite critics. Leaving the United States for Europe, Parrish found most of his sixties and seventies work “second rate and getting second rater,” in his own words. Neither critics nor audiences would argue with his assessment as he churned out dull thrillers, comedies, and even an Italian Western.

His final film, completed upon his return to the United States, was a documentary that touched on civil rights, Mississippi Blues, co-directed with an old friend, Bertrand Tavernier. The film, while received little attention. Other than his excellent editing work and considered heartfelt, was also found to be somewhat listless and received little attention. Other than his excellent editing work and early directing, Parrish may be most remembered as storyteller from his two books of Hollywood memoirs.

—Allen Grant Richards

PASTERNAK, Joe

Producer. Nationality: American. Born: Szilagy-Somlyo, Romania (now Hungary), 19 September 1901; emigrated to the United States, 1921; naturalized, 1927. Education: School in Szilagy-Somlyo. Married: (second marriage) Dorothy Darrel, 1942; three sons. Career: Worked as busboy and waiter in Paramount studios in early 1920s, and worked as assistant director (especially for Allan Dwan); 1928–35—manager of Universal’s operations in Berlin—also producer in Berlin; 1935–40—producer for Universal in Hollywood; then worked for MGM after 1942. Retired in 1968. Died: In Los Angeles, California, 13 September 1991.

Films as Producer:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1929</td>
<td>Das Schweigen im Walde (Dieterle)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Zwei Menschen (Waschneck); Die Grosse Sehnsucht (Sekely)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>Die unsichtbare Front (Eichberg); Unter falscher Flagge (Meyer); Paprika (Boese)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>Skandal in Budapest (Sekely and von Bolvary); Früchten (Csibi, der Fratz) (Eichberg and Neufeld)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>Grüss and kiss Veronika (Boese); Frühjahrsparade (von Bolvary and Wratschko)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>Kleine Mutter; Katharina, die Letzte (Kosterlitz)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>Three Smart Girls (Koster)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>100 Men and a Girl (Koster)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Mad about Music (Taurog); That Certain Age (Ludwig); Youth Takes a Fling (Connolly)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>Three Smart Girls Grow Up (Koster); The Under-Pup (Wallace); First Love (Koster); Destry Rides Again (Marshall)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>It’s a Date (Seiter); Spring Parade (Koster); A Little Bit of Heaven (Marton); Seven Sinners (Garnett)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>Nice Girl? (Seiter); The Flame of New Orleans (Clair); It Started with Eve (Koster)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1942</td>
<td>Seven Sweethearts (Borzage)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>Presenting Lily Mars (Taurog); Thousands Cheer (Sidney)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1944</td>
<td>Song of Russia (Ratoff); Two Girls and a Sailor (Thorpe)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1945</td>
<td>Music for Millions (Koster); Thrill of a Romance (Thorpe); Anchors Aweigh (Sidney); Her Highness and the Bellboy (Thorpe)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1946</td>
<td>Two Sisters from Boston (Koster); Holiday in Mexico (Sidney); No Leave, No Love (Martin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>The Unfinished Dance (Koster); This Time for Keeps (Thorpe)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1948</td>
<td>Three Daring Daughters (Wilcox); Big City (Taurog); On an Island with You (Thorpe); A Date with Judy (Thorpe); Luxury Liner (Whorf); The Kissing Bandit (Benedek)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>In the Good Old Summertime (Leonard); That Midnight Kiss (Taurog)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>Nancy Goes to Rio (Leonard); The Duchess of Idaho (Leonard); Summer Stock (Walters); The Toast of New Orleans (Taurog)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>The Great Caruso (Thorpe); Rich, Young, and Pretty (Taurog); The Strip (Kardos)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Skirts Ahoy! (Lanfield); The Merry Widow (Bernhardt); Because You’re Mine (Hall)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1953</td>
<td>Small Town Girl (Kardos); Latin Lovers (LeRoy); Easy to Love (Walters)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1954</td>
<td>The Flame and the Flesh (Brooks); The Student Prince (Thorpe); Athena (Thorpe)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1955</td>
<td>Hit the Deck (Rowland); Love Me or Leave Me (C. Vicor)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>Meet Me in Las Vegas (Rowland); The Opposite Sex (Miller)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1957</td>
<td>Ten Thousand Bedrooms (Thorpe); This Could Be the Night (Wise)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1958</td>
<td>Party Girl (Ray)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1959</td>
<td>Ask Any Girl (Walters)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>Please Don’t Eat the Daisies (Walters); Where the Boys Are (LeRoy)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
1962 The Horizontal Lieutenant (Thorpe); Jumbo (Billy Rose’s Jumbo) (Walters) (co)
1963 The Courtship of Eddie’s Father (Minnelli); A Ticklish Affair (Sidney)
1965 Girl Happy (Sagal)
1966 Penelope (Hiller) (exec); Made in Paris (Sagal); Spinout (Taurog)
1968 The Sweet Ride (Hart)

Film as Director:

1972 The Casting

Publications

By PASTERNAK: book—

On PASTERNAK: articles—

Picturegoer (London), 23 September 1939.
Film Daily, 5 February 1953.
Obituary in Filmvilag (Budapest), no. 2, 1992.

* * *

Joe Pasternak was a Hungarian immigrant whose successful career as a motion picture producer was marked by three distinct achievements. He was responsible for developing the career of the singer actress Deanna Durbin, whose money-making films for Universal literally saved that studio from bankruptcy. He almost single-handedly revived the faltering career of “box-office poison” Marlene Dietrich with three films at Universal, most notably Destry Rides Again. And during the 1940s and 1950s, he was the second string producer, after Arthur Freed, of a series of light musical entertainments for MGM.

Pasternak arrived in the States while still in his teens and after working at Paramount as both a busboy and waiter in the studio commissary, then as a second assistant director, he joined Universal as manager of that studio’s Berlin office. He produced four popular films starring Franciska Gaal: Paprika, Skandal in Budapest, Früihjahrsparade and Katharina die Letzte. With the rise of Nazism, Pasternak implored his studio for a post in Hollywood. Universal offered him a production job for himself and two of his fellow Hungarians, the director Henry Kosterlitz (Koster) and the writer Felix Jaochimson (Jackson). Later Pasternak imported his brother-in-law, S. Z. “Cuddles” Sakall, who became one of the most endearing character actors of the 1940s, and the composer Nicholas Brodsky.

Pasternak’s first assignment for Universal was luckily Three Smart Girls, a musical built around a new singing sensation, Deanna Durbin. Pasternak produced and Koster directed, and they struck upon a formula which would make Durbin one of Hollywood’s top money-making stars—they cast her in a series of fairy-tale plots which used her keen sense of humor, her instinctive charm, and her beautiful singing voice for both popular and classical songs. Pasternak went on to produce a string of ten such successes, alternating director Koster with Norman Taurog and Norman Krasna, and literally put Universal’s slumping ledgers back into the black. While at Universal, Pasternak initiated three projects for Marlene Dietrich which took her down from the pedestal created by Josef von Sternberg, capitalized upon her tempestuous personality, and overcame her “box-office poison” label. The films—Destry Rides Again, Seven Sinners, and The Flame of New Orleans—helped create a larger audience for her newly found flesh-and-blood image.

In 1942, Pasternak moved over to the more prestigious MGM and continued his successful formula of light-hearted musicals which frequently combined popular and classical music. At that studio, Arthur Freed rated the first-class assignments, but nonetheless Pasternak was able to produce dozens of successful musicals such as Presenting Lily Marks, Anchors Aweigh, In the Good Old Summertime, The Great Caruso, The Merry Widow, and Love Me or Leave Me using the services of MGM’s wonderful stock company of stars—Judy Garland, Frank Sinatra, Kathryn Grayson, Mario Lanza, Jane Powell, and Cyd Charisse.

—Ronald Bowers

PATHÉ, Charles

Films as Producer (Selected List):

1896 L’Arrivée d’un train de Vincennes
1897 Execution capitale à Berlin; Coucher d’Yvette et Pierreuse; Le déshabillé du modèl; Le Pompier et la servante; Sainte-Antoine de Padoue
1898 Cambriolage sur les toits
1899 L’Affaire Dreyfus; Les Dernières Cartouches; La Belle et le béte; Le Muet Mélorane
1900 Aladin; Le Petit poucet; La Guerre du Transvaal; Mariage de raison
1901 Histoire d’un crime; Quo Vadis; L’Enfant prodigue; Les Sept Chateaux du diable; La Conquête de l’air; Assassinat de Mac Kinley; Tempête dans une chambre à coucher; Idylle sous un tunnel
Charles Pathé

1902  La Passion; Les Victimes de l'alcoolisme; La Poule merveilleuse; Catastrophe de la Martinique; Assassinat du Duc de Guise; L'Amou à tous les étages; Samson et Delila

1903  La Vie d’un joueur; Suite de la passion; Don Quichotte, le chat botté; Guillaume Tell; Massacre de la famille royale de Serbie; Films comiques

1904  Roman d’amour; La Guerre Russo-Japonais; La Règne de Louis XIV; La Grève; Peau d’âne; Christoph Colomb; Les Metamorphoses du Roi de Pique

1905  Les Apaches de Paris; Dix Femmes pour un mari; Première sortie; Au pays noir; Suite de la passion; Au bagne; Vendetta; L’Alcoolisme engendre la tuberculose; L’Incendiaire; Les Petits Vagabonds; Toto-Gâte-Sauce; Vot’permis; Viens l’chercher; Le Voleur de bicyclette; Le Petit Poucet; La Poule aux œufs d’or; Rêve à la lune; Potemkine

1906  New version of La Passion; Le Tour du monde d’un policiер; Voyage autour d’un étoile; Le Billet de faveur; Le déserteur; Les Chiens contrebandiers; La Fille du sonneur; La Loi du pardon; Le Fils du biable; J’ai perdu mon lorgnon; Les Invisibles; Drame à Venise; Aladin; Un Monsieur qui suit les femmes; Boireau déménage; Le Pendu; Le Nihiliste

1907  Les Débuts d’un patineur; Les Apprentissages de Boireau; La Légende de Polichinelle; Faust; Monsieur et Madame veulent une bonne; Le Roman d’un malheureux

1908  L’Homme aux gants blancs; Les Affichés animés; Socialisme et nihilisme

1909  Les Misérables; Nick Carter; L’Assommoir

1910  Re Lear (Lo Savio)

1911  Il Mercante di Venezia (The Merchant of Venice) (Lo Savio); Max et le quinquina

1912  Les Misérables

Publications

On PATHÉ: books—

De Pathé Frères à Pathé Cinéma, Lyon, 1970.

On PATHÉ: articles—

Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1958.

Aferimage (London), vol. 3, no. 8–9, April 1981.

Classic Images (Muscatine, Iowa), September 1986.

Like many of the moguls of the cinema, Charles Pathé began as a promoter of Edison’s phonograph which he introduced in the early 1890s to the popular entertainment of the fairgrounds in Vincennes. He soon opened a shop selling phonographs, and also a recording studio where he made cylinders of famous theatre artists of the time. An association with Henry Joly got him interested in moving pictures and the purchase of an Edison Kinetoscope took him back to the fairgrounds. He also acquired a camera. In 1896, with the help of his brothers, he founded the firm of Pathé Frères and opened an establishment at 98 rue de Richelieu, Paris. He was convinced that “the cinema would be the theatre, the newspaper and the school of the future.”

Attracting an infusion of 100,000 francs into his business through his association with an electrical manufacturer, Grivolas, in 1898 he founded the Compagnie Generale, marketing phonographs, cinematographs and precision instruments. He employed Ferdinand Zecca, who came from a theatrical family, to supervise the making of films. The great Paris Exhibition of 1900 provided a suitable showcase for the new invention and very soon, the establishment of a film studio at Joinville-le Pont became a necessity. Pathé was making 500 films a year. His company was expanding rapidly, with branches in Great Britain, Germany, Italy, Spain, Russia, the United States, and India. Pathé was now head of a great industrial empire.

His early films were plagiarisms of the successes of other people’s films, as copyright did not exist at the time. But his director Zecca was making a name for himself with films such as Histoire d’un crime and Les Victimes de l’alcoolisme. The range of the Pathé output was considerable. His band of comics was to include Max Linder, the precursor of Chaplin, and others like Andre Deed, Rigadin, and Jean Durand. His Pathé color system was seen to good effect in many historical dramas and of course he launched the Pathé Journal, one of the finest newsreels to adorn the cinema screens. He was also associated with the more ambitious Film d’Art, and S.C.A.G.L., an organization of literary patrons of the cinema.

He spent some years in America from 1914, developing the Pathé Exchange there. On his return he found his empire beginning to crumble. The First World War had affected his distribution and the cost of filmmaking had increased enormously. America had taken over the programming of cinemas with its elaborate publicity and star system and super-productions like Griffith’s Birth of a Nation and Intolerance. The French public had been weaned off the Pathé product.

Gradually, in the ensuing years Pathé lost many of his most valuable assets. Filmmaking in France no longer seemed to be profitable, with no chance of breaking into the American market. He shed his associations with S.C.A.G.L. and Film d’Art. He lost his Pathé Exchange in 1920. In 1926 Kodak took over his film-stock factory. Eventually Pathé ceded his organization to Bernard Natan, a one-time pornographic filmmaker but now a powerful figure on the French film scene. Under Natan, the organization retained the prestigious Pathé name, but only lasted a few years, from 1930 to 1934. Natan ended up in prison in both France and Germany.

Pathé was above all else a businessman but with a passionate interest in the cinema. His early life had been tough and the world of the film pioneer was beset by imitators and hostile competition. But he carried on the great tradition of Méliès and Lumière and placed French filmmaking in the spotlight in those early days. It might also be recalled that he introduced the Pathé Baby camera and projector to encourage home movies. He made it possible to see—even in very edited versions—great films of the past which no doubt inspired many a young cinéaste who went on to professional work in later years.

—Liam O’Leary

PAXTON, John

Films as Writer:

1944 My Pal, Wolf (Werker)
1945 Murder, My Sweet (Farewell, My Lovely) (Dmytryk)
1946 Cornered (Dmytryk); Crack-Up (Reis)
1947 Crossfire (Dmytryk); So Well Remembered (Dmytryk)
1949 Rope of Sand (Dieterle)
1950 Of Men and Mice (Reis)
1951 Fourteen Hours (Hathaway)
1953 The Wild One (Benedek)
1955 Prize of Gold (Robson)

1956 The Cobweb (Minelli); Interpol (Pickup Alley) (Gilling)
1959 How to Murder a Rich Uncle (Patrick) (+ pr); On the Beach (Kramer)
1971 Kotch (Lemmon)
1973 The Great Man’s Whiskers (Leacock)

Publications

By PAXTON: articles—

On PAXTON: articles—

Focus on Film (London), Spring 1972.
Weaver, John D., in UCLA Librarian (Los Angeles), July-August 1978.
Weaver, John D., in Los Angeles Times, 10 March 1985.

* * *

Perhaps the most amazing achievement in John Paxton’s career as a screenwriter in Hollywood was that he remained untouched by the blacklist. The third member of the RKO team that made Murder, My Sweet, Cornered, and Crossfire, Paxton escaped the wrath of the witch-hunters while his colleagues, the producer Adrian Scott and the director Edward Dmytryk, were to become charter members of the ‘‘Hollywood Ten.’’ But those three important examples of film noir represent Paxton’s best work, particularly Crossfire, which attracted the special attention of the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

The initial Paxton screenplay for the Scott-Dmytryk team was an adaptation of Raymond Chandler’s Farewell, My Lovely. Retitled Murder, My Sweet for the screen, it was the first incarnation of Philip Marlowe in motion pictures, and successfully transformed Dick Powell’s image of boyish crooner into that of hard-boiled hero. Paxton was forced to simplify Chandler’s complex narrative to fit into a 90-minute package while maintaining the spirit of the novelist’s mean streets. Much of the Chandler tone was perpetuated through Marlowe’s first-person narration, the device justified by the framework of a police interrogation of the detective. Rather than using the narration to advance the story, Paxton fashioned it to function as a vehicle for Chandler’s similes and wisecracks as Marlowe comments on the action. Along with Chandler’s own screenplay for Double Indemnity in the same year, Paxton’s script for Murder, My Sweet established cynical first-person narration as a convention of the film noir, particularly in its detective movie form. Cornered solidified Powell’s tough-guy image and was one of the earliest films to place the returning soldier in the role of a vengeful hunter utilizing his skill at combat to settle a personal score.
Crossfire remains one of Paxton’s most accomplished screenplays and one of the best films of the 1940s. Richard Brooks’s didactic Second World War novel about unbridled prejudice and the murder of a homosexual by a soldier was reshaped by Paxton into a “message picture.” To meet production-code restrictions, the victim was changed from a homosexual to a Jew and the film became an attack on anti-Semitism wedged into the genre framework of a murder mystery. Yet of far more interest than the “message” aspect of the film is Paxton’s updating of the novel by several years to place it squarely in the postwar milieu and his shift of the novel’s emphasis on the accusing murderer to the collective of demobilized soldiers in Washington, D.C. The group of soldiers works together to ferret out the real murderer within their ranks, a narrative scheme which resulted in accusations of socialism in some quarters. Politics aside, the move to a story without a clearly defined protagonist yielded a film with a diffuse point-of-view, serving to dramatize the aimlessness of the soldiers and the country after the war. Paxton was able to take the character of “The Man,” a pathological liar and pimp in the novel, and, by placing him within the new context, create a disillusioned everyman. “The Man” became the spiritual center of the film, emblematic of not only the soldiers, but the country as a whole, as he searches for direction and purpose within his own conflicting stores of identity. The murder victim’s monologue about the nation’s desultory state and residual wartime hate was a clear summation on the atmosphere which led to theHUAC hearings.

Paxton’s screenplay for Crossfire went beyond the problem of anti-Semitism to accent other social issues, notably the decaying family and the culture’s obsession with material goods. The emphasis on the collective, national ennui and a variety of social problems made Crossfire a central target of the House Committee on Un-American Activities. But it is that combination of factors which, couched within a genre mold, makes the film the most concise and revealing portrait of the confused national psyche following the Second World War.

With the Scott-Dmytryk team silenced byHUAC, the assignments Paxton received became fewer and more sporadic. The success of the RKO team and Paxton’s place in it was not to be repeated on the same sustained level. His last major contribution was his screenplay for The Wild One which in many respects operates as a continuation of the themes of a decaying society presented in Crossfire, but without the saving grace of cooperation within a collective. Buoyed by be-bop dialogue, The Wild One displayed both the motorcycle gang and the community as groups gone amok, with little hope offered for a stable society. The reply Marlon Brando gives to the question “What’re you rebelling against, Johnny?”—“What’ve you got?”—was not only the canonizing agent that made him into the patron saint of the youth culture, but was a rallying cry of the disaffected and disillusioned for the next 20 years. Indeed, the aimless soldiers of Crossfire seemed to find their logical extension as the wandering band of bikers in The Wild One.

—Eric Schaefer

PEPLOE, Clare

Films as Writer:

1970 Zabriskie Point (Antonioni) (co) 1979 La Luna (Bertolucci) (co) 1988 High Season (+d) 1995 Rough Magic (+d) 1998 Besieged (Bertolucci—for TV) (+ assoc pr) 2001 The Triumph of Love

Other Films:

1975 Novecento (1900) (Bertolucci) (asst d)

Publications

By PEPLOE: articles—
 Interview with Jonathan Demme, in Interview (New York), May 1988.

On PEPLOE: articles—

* * *

In many ways, Clare Peploe had the perfect upbringing for a writer of movies. Both filmmakers and writers must have the ability to view their subjects with a certain detachment, even if the subject is themselves. Born in Africa to British parents who were both longtime ex-patriots, Peploe divided her youth among two continents and five countries. She still commutes between Italy and London, feeding an enduring longing for both the vibrant urban energy and the sensual Mediterranean sun. This life of contradictions has given Peploe an intimate knowledge of the fish-out-of-water experience that is often at the center of any dramatic production. The paradoxical search for both an individual identity and a place of belonging has become the focus of much of Peploe’s own work.

Peploe’s parents never owned a television, and, as a girl, she shied away from visual arts, citing her grandfather’s fame in Scotland as a painter. But when she was a teenager in London, friends at Oxford introduced her to film. Her fascination with the cinema remained with her during her own multi-national college career, and when she met director Michaelangelo Antonioni in the late 1960s, she was open to the opportunity to be part of a film’s production.
The spirit of rebellious questioning that characterized the times both contributed to Peploe’s vision and provided her with her opportunity to develop her craft. “Getting into film wasn’t so much about professional training then,” she told Salon interviewer Michael Sragow, “Films were much more personal, and had more of a personal signature.” Her collaborative work with Antonioni and, later, with her husband, Italian director Bernardo Bertolucci, helped her develop her own personal style.

Though panned by some critics for its stilted dialog and surrealistic approach, Zabriskie Point was a dream-like look at youthful rebellion. Co-written by an Italian and a pan-European British woman, the film necessarily embodies the outsider’s view of very American cultural events. In La Luna, her first co-writing effort with Bertolucci, Peploe continues to explore the consciousness of the outsider, detailing the struggles of a boy to reconnect with his own heritage by finding his birth father, while floundering through drug use and a semi-incestuous relationship with his mother.

If her partnership with the famous Italian directors had resulted in weighty, even pretentious films, Peploe’s own movies were much more lighthearted affairs, as if still rooted in the outsider’s search for home and self. Using adventure, mystery, and even screwball comedy, Peploe shows a sure hand as a director, weaving the many complex concepts of her story into films that offer viewers a rousing good time.

Set in a tiny village on the island of Rhodes, High Season, released in 1988, is a comic mystery that draws upon Peploe’s own ex-patriot background. A madcap romance largely overlooked by critics, it is nonetheless mightily entertaining and a successful film in terms of its own goals—to expose the contradictions inherent in both ex-patriotism, patriotism, and tourism—as well as revealing Peploe’s gentle affection for the exotic lands in which she grew up.

Rough Magic, set in the jungles of Mexico in the 1950s, is a road movie and a lively blend of adventure and spirituality. A dark comedy, which some uneasy critics labeled “harsh” and “strange,” the film exhibits Peploe’s sharp eye for a literary work which will adapt successfully to the screen. Originally a James Hadley Chase story called “Miss Shumway Waves a Wand,” Rough Magic tells the story of a young woman’s search for a Mexican shaman and for magic, which she ultimately finds both within herself and in hilarious reality. Peploe films the story with such quirky fun that her poke at cultural imperialism passes almost unnoticed.

Peploe continues to collaborate with her husband, and she has taken both her skill at adaptation and her finely tuned sense of irony and humor back to Bertolucci. Their 1999 release, The Besieged, received critical accolades. Adapted from James Lesdun’s The Siege, the film recounts the unlikely romance between a British classical musician and his African housekeeper, both living in Italy. Because she is so completely a cinematic rather than a theatrical writer, Peploe has kept her script spare, allowing facial expression and music to drive the movie as clearly as dialog. Critics have praised the gentler, more romantic Bertolucci that is evident in this film.

Peploe has a gift for finding the stories her life has given her a passion to tell, and her point of view is informed by many different cultural perspectives. This multicultural outlook, coupled with an acute sense of mischief, has enabled her to make incisive films that never lose sight of one of cinema’s most important functions—to entertain.

—Tina Gianoulis

---

PEREIRA, Hal

Art Designer, Supervising Studio Art Director. Nationality: American. Born: Chicago, Illinois, 1905 or 1910 (sources vary). Education: University of Illinois. Career: 1933–40—worked as theatrical designer in Chicago; 1942—joined Paramount as unit art director; 1947—promoted to executive position on the staff for domestic and international companies; 1950—became supervising art director for the studio; 1968—retired from filmmaking to work as a design consultant at the architectural firm of his brother, William L. Pereira. Award: Academy Award, for The Rose Tattoo, 1955. Died: In Los Angeles, California, 17 December 1983.

Films as Art Designer:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1944</td>
<td>Double Indemnity; The Ministry of Fear</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>Detective Story</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Son of a Paleface</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1953</td>
<td>The War of the Worlds</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1957</td>
<td>The Tin Star</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Films as Collaborating Art Designer:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>Ace in the Hole; The Lemon Drop Kid; Peking Express; Here Comes the Groom; When Worlds Collide; Red Mountain</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>My Son John; The Greatest Show on Earth; Carrie; Caribbean; The Turning Point</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1953</td>
<td>Come Back; Little Sheba; Shane; Stalag 17; Houdini; Sangaree; Roman Holiday; Botany Bay</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1954</td>
<td>Knock on Wood; The Naked Jungle; Elephant Walk; Jivaro; Rear Window; Sabrina; White Christmas</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1955</td>
<td>Conquest of Space; Run for Cover; Strategic Air Command; The Far Horizons; The 7 Little Foyos; To Catch a Thief; The Desperate Hours; The Trouble with Harry; The Rose Tattoo; Artists and Models</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>The Court Jester; The Man Who Knew Too Much; The Proud and the Profane; That Certain Feeling; The Vagabond King; The Mountain; The Ten Commandments</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1957</td>
<td>Three Violent People; Fear Strikes Out; Funny Face; Lonely Man; The Gunfight at the OK Corral</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1958</td>
<td>Teacher’s Pet; Vertigo; Hot Spell; The Space Children; Houseboat; The Buccaneer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1959</td>
<td>The Five Pennies; That Kind of Woman; L’il Abner</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>The Bellboy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1961</td>
<td>One-Eyed Jacks; The Ladies’ Man; Breakfast at Tiffany’s; Pocketful of Miracles; The Errand Boy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1962</td>
<td>Hell is for Heroes; Hatus!</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>Hud; The Nutty Professor; Come Blow Your Horn; Donovan’s Reef; McLintock!; Who’s Minding the Store; Love with the Proper Stranger</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1964</td>
<td>Robinson Crusoe on Mars; The Patsy; The Disorderly Orderly</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1965</td>
<td>Sylvia; The Family Jewels; Harlow; The Sons of Katie Elder</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1966</td>
<td>Red Line 7000; The Night of the Grizzly; Nevada Smith; This Property is Condemned; Waco; The Swinger</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1967</td>
<td>Warning Shot; Chuka; The Caper of the Golden Bulls; El Dorado; The Spirit is Willing; The President’s Analyst</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1968</td>
<td>No Way to Treat a Lady</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Publications

On PEREIRA: articles—

* * *

Trained by a number of steady and profitable years of theatrical work, Hal Pereira began work in 1942 as a unit art designer for Paramount, the studio most noted for its sumptuous use of mise-en-scène to create entertaining films. Pereira rose rapidly through the ranks, becoming supervising art director in 1950 and thus responsible for art design in the studio’s production as a whole, though he continued to work, usually with others, on individual projects.

Like all studio technicians of this era, Pereira was required to be flexible and work on many different kinds of films. He created interesting design effects from the Wellsian scientific apocalypse War of the Worlds, one of the most terrifying of the many early fifties entries in this genre, perfecting ideas he had used in an earlier coproduction, When Worlds Collide. Called upon to summon up appropriate images of the biblical past, Pereira helped design convincing sets for the epic story of The Ten Commandments; he was at least competent in other period pictures as well, notably Botany Bay, The Proud and the Profane, and The Buccaneer. At least two of the westerns he worked on, Nevada Smith and Shane, required well-designed interiors—uncharacteristic of the genre—and Pereira was up to the task, creating sets that allowed dramatic interior scenes equivalent to the exteriors, which benefitted much from natural scenery in each case. Pereira also did excellent work for a number of comedies, especially Jerry Lewis films such as The Disorderly Orderly and The Bellboy, which required appropriate sets for complicated interior sequences. He also worked on nearly all the Alfred Hitchcock color films of the fifties, imparting a richness and, sometimes, glamour that perfectly suited the director’s interests at the time in offering exciting, adult drama with a fair amount of visual stylization.

Interestingly, though he worked for a studio that for much of its corporate life specialized in more or less elaborate forms of escapism, Pereira was obviously most at home in designing urban interiors and exteriors. It is significant that his first major project for Paramount, Billy Wilder’s Double Indemnity, was very much a departure for the studio. One of the earliest films noirs, Double Indemnity notably transforms the ambiance of James M. Cain’s gritty story of adultery and murder for profit; Raymond Chandler’s screenplay firmly locates the drama in a somewhat pretentious upper middle class California milieu, perfectly expressed by Pereira’s design for the Dietrichson house—with an interior that is not as rich or well-appointed as expected, the ideal setting for a debunking of bourgeois claims to respectability. His work for Wilder on this project is firmly rooted in the naturalism of both Cain’s and Chandler’s vision of the American character; there is no trace in the film of the more abstract kind of design, of German Expressionist origin, that is also a notable aspect of film noir. In his next project, however, for Fritz Lang’s version of Graham Greene’s The Ministry of Fear, Pereira designed a patently unreal wartime England, defined by threatening wastescapes and impossibly entrapting interiors, that is the precise correlate of the protagonist’s paranoia and helplessness. Here Pereira cooperates successfully with Lang’s stylistic interests, creating one of the most stylized and expressionistic of film noirs.

What most distinguishes Pereira’s interior design for gritty urban dramas, however, is not stylistic versatility, the art director’s competence with both realistic and more abstract conceptions. It is, instead, his ability to indicate the moral and economic values of an interior environment with a series of well-chosen effects. His design of the police station in Detective Story deliberately de glamorizes this agency of the law through a certain tattiness and careless disorder that suit precisely this story of moral failure and self-destructive redemption. For Ace in the Hole Pereira captures perfectly the dusty desperation of small-town rural American life, once again the setting for a drama of moral failure and entrapment (the set for the mine cave-in usefully epitomizes how the characters relate to but can never touch one another). Claustrophobic interior effects are also important thematically for Rear Window, which shares with Ace in the Hole a noir concern with dead-ends and confinement. For The Desperate Hours Pereira designed not just an effective playspace for complex interior action sequences (the film was based on a stage play), but an upper middle class environment in which everything finds its tastefully designed place and from which the very possibility of evil or disorder is banished until it comes knocking on the front door. Hud offers a perfect re-creation of small-town southwestern ranch and town life, a setting that, with its simplicity and barrenness, nicely defines this drama of elemental character conflict and maturation. Pereira’s last film, No Way to Treat a Lady, the story of a psychopath who, with a variety of disguises, murders a number of older women living alone, offered him a final opportunity to create a series of interior sets with just the right class and social value, here lower middle class. His designs form the perfect backdrop for Rod Steiger’s scenery chewing performance as the madman, adding the right touch of realism to a story that, had it not been so grounded, could easily have deteriorated from the dramatic to the ridiculous.

Because most of his films were collaborations, and because the Hollywood film in general is an intensely collaborative effort, it is difficult to determine precisely what contributions Pereira made to a substantial body of commercially successful and, often, artistically noteworthy films. However there is no doubt that he was not only one of the top designers in the business during his twenty-five year career, but an important influence on the way Hollywood films in general developed a more substantial, more detailed, more expressive approach to art design, especially as this was influenced during the postwar period by greater demands for realism. The triumph of Pereira’s contribution is probably The Rose Tattoo, a difficult production, based on the earthy but intellectually schematic Tennessee Williams play, in which Pereira and others at Paramount were able to design a series of interiors and exteriors that both evoked small-town life on the Gulf coast and expressed the natural law that all human beings must embrace the earthy, the physical, the sexual. Here the abstract and the actual merge, providing the perfect correlative for the art director’s job, which is to surmount the paradox of designing the real.

R. Barton Palmer

PÉRINAL, Georges

Cinematographer. Nationality: French. Born: Paris, 1897. Career: in French films from 1913, working on documentaries and short films; 1933—persuaded by Alexander Korda to join London Films, and later worked in the United States. Award: Academy Award for The Thief of Bagdad, 1940.  Died: In London, 23 April 1965.

Films as Cinematographer:

1923 Chartres (Grémillon)
1924 La Bière (Grémillon)
1925 L’Auvergne (Grémillon); La Justicière (Gleize and de Marsan)
1926 Au pays de George Sand (Epstein)
1927 Maldone (Grémillon); Six et demi onze (Epstein); Gratuités (Grémillon)
1928 Les Nouveaux Messieurs (Feyder) (co); La Zone (Lacombe); La Tour (Clair) (co)
1929 Ces dames aux chapeaux verts (Berthomieu); Gardiens de phare (Grémillon)
1930 David Golder (Duvivier); Mon ami Victor (Berthomieu); Le Sang d’un poète (The Blood of a Poet) (Coeque); Sous les toits de Paris (Under the Roofs of Paris) (Clair)
1931 Dainoh la metisse (Grémillon); A nous la liberté (Clair); Le Million (Clair); Le Parfum de la dame en nois (L’Herbier); Jean de la Lune (Choux)
1932 The Girl from Maxim’s (Z. Korda); La Femme en homme (Genina); Hotel des étudiants (Tourjansky); Le Picador (Jaquelux); La Petite Chocolatière (M. Allegret); Femme d’amour (Dreville); Quatorze juillet (Clair)
1933 The Private Life of Henry VIII (Z. Korda)
1934 Catherine the Great (Czinner); The Private Life of Don Juan (Z. Korda); Maria Chapdelaine (The Naked Heart) (Duvivier)
1935 Escape Me Never (Czinner); Sanders of the River (Z. Korda); Things to Come (Menzies)
1936 Rembrandt (A. Korda)
1937 Dark Journey (Saville); The Squeaker (W. Howard); Under the Red Robe (Sjöström); I, Claudius (von Sternberg—unfinished)
1938 The Challenge (Rosmer); The Drum (Drums) (Z. Korda); Prison without Bars (Hurst)
1939 The Four Feathers (Z. Korda)
1940 The Thief of Bagdad (Berger, Powell, and Whelan); Old Bill and Son (Dalrymple)
1942 The First of the Few (L. Howard); The Jungle Book (Z. Korda)
1943 The Life and Death of Colonel Blimp (Powell and Pressburger)
1945 Perfect Strangers (Vacation from Marriage) (A. Korda)
1946 A Man about the House (Arliss)
1947 An Ideal Husband (Z. Korda); The Life and Adventures of Nicholas Nickleby (Cavalcanti)
1948 The Fallen Idol (Reed)
1949 The Forbidden Street (Britannia Mews) (Negulesco)
1950 My Daughter Joy (Ratoff); That Dangerous Age (Ratoff); The Mudlark (Negulesco)
1951 I’ll Never Forget You (Baker); No Highway (No Highway in the Sky) (Koster)
1955 L’Amant de Lady Chatterley (Lady Chatterley’s Lover) (M. Allegret); The Man Who Loved Redheads (French); Three Cases of Murder (O’Ferrall)
1956 Loser Takes All (Annakin); Satellite in the Sky (Dickson)
1957 A King in New York (Chaplin); Saint Joan (Preminger)
1958 Bonjour Tristesse (Preminger); Tom Thumb (Pal)
1959 Serious Charge (Immoral Charge; A Touch of Hell) (Young)

Publications

By PÉRINAL: article—

Film Weekly (London), 4 May 1934.

On PÉRINAL: articles—

Cine Technician (London), April-June 1942.

Hill, Derek, in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), August 1958.

Clair, René, in Film and TV Technician (London), May 1965.

* * *

One of the most influential cinematographers in the history of the cinema, Georges Périnal had a career extending from his early work in the French silent cinema (Chartres, L’Auvergne, and other films), to films for Jean Cocteau (The Blood of a Poet), the Kordas (The Private Life of Henry VIII, I, Claudius, and his Academy Award-winning Technicolor photography on The Thief of Bagdad), then on to assignments for Charlie Chaplin (A King in New York), and Otto Preminger (Saint Joan). He retired in 1960 after the production of Oscar Wilde, and died shortly thereafter.

Périnal’s work is a curiously continental hybrid of a delicately gallic lighting style modified by the various directional sensibilities he labored under. For Cocteau, he gave The Blood of a Poet a dreamlike, ethereal quality, shooting on silver nitrate black-and-white stock through a variety of filters and gauzes to achieve a fluid, phantasmagorical look, ideally suited to Cocteau’s vision of “a realistic documentary of unreal events.” Périnal received the assignment from Cocteau when the director sent out postcards to all cameramen working in Paris at that time, asking each one to come to Cocteau’s flat for an interview the following morning. Périnal was the first to arrive, and Cocteau was immediately taken with him. The film proved an international triumph, and a classic of the avant-garde, still frequently revived today. During that same year, for the director René Clair, Périnal also photographed Sous les toits de Paris, which was a great success; and in 1931, he shot A nous la liberté, also for Clair, which many consider to be the director’s masterpiece. All three of these early films showed an imaginative flair for combining music and image in a variety of complimentary ways, usually by closely synchronizing the movements of the actors and/or props with a quirky, effervescent mood.

After this initial success, Périnal began a long association with Alexander Korda, starting with The Private Life of Henry VIII which starred Charles Laughton. Although this film was in every way a more conventional project than the films Périnal had previously been associated with, he nevertheless collaborated effectively on the project, giving his images a sense of light and shadow consistent with Laughton’s hearty performance, and prefiguring in many ways his moody, atmospheric work on Rembrandt, which also starred Laughton. On Rembrandt, Périnal purposely designed each shot as though it

1960 Once More, with Feeling! (Donen); Oscar Wilde (Ratoff);

The Day They Robbed the Bank of England (Guillermin)

1961 The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse (Minnelli) were a painting by the great artist, with light shafting in through the windows of the sets in sharp contrast to the Stygian gloom of the interiors. Yet these films, and Things to Come (which he shot for Korda under the stylistically astute direction of art-director-turned-film-director William Cameron Menzies), show that Périnal was interested in being commercially successful as well as artistically innovative. Things to Come is a particular disappointment: although the film is undeniably spectacular, and uses the considerable talents of such excellent actors as Sir Cedric Hardwicke and Raymond Massey, Périnal’s lighting of Menzies’s gigantic sets is too often flat and perfunctory. Perhaps this was intentional, as the appropriate manner in which to light and photograph the world of the futuristic, totalitarian “science-state” in Things to Come, but Périnal’s lighting here falls into the category of one strategy, perfunctorily extended and seldom modified. One could say the same of his work in Rembrandt and even The Jungle Book, which is so lushly lit and shot that its sumptuousness borders, at times, on the suffocating. Nevertheless, Périnal’s work in these productions set the style for a generation of British cameramen, and he continued working in the British cinema for most of the balance of his career.

Certainly, Périnal’s is an intensely romantic style, full of pronounced lighting contrasts and glossy, hard-edged key lighting. Yet one misses the airy, gentle lyricism he brought to his photography of the two Clair films and Blood of a Poet. Ironically, some of Périnal’s best work during this “middle period” can be found in his work on the unfinished I, Claudius, directed by Josef von Sternberg. The film was abandoned after only a few days’ shooting, principally because of Laughton’s inability to get along with the strong-willed director or to “come to grips” with the role of Claudius. The few tantalizingly brief scenes that survive, which were woven into an excellent documentary by Bill Duncalf (The Epic That Never Was) on the making of I, Claudius, show that the film might have been Korda’s supreme achievement. In addition to von Sternberg’s direction and the performances of Laughton and Oberon, Emlyn Williams appears effectively in the incomplete footage as a debauched, languidly corrupt Caligula, and William Cameron Menzies designed the appropriately grandiose sets. Périnal’s work on the film is at once seductive and sinuous; working with von Sternberg, an excellent cinematographer in his own right, Périnal blends bold, stark lighting patterns in the wide shots with gently, “cooked” close-ups of the protagonists, making the world of I, Claudius somewhat of an extension of von Sternberg’s cinematographic vision in Morocco or Shanghai Express.

Perhaps Périnal’s last truly realized work is his photography of Nicholas Nickleby in 1947, although one could make a strong case for his exquisite black-and-white photography on Graham Greene’s The Fallen Idol, which starred Ralph Richardson, in 1948. Thereafter, Périnal’s work, though not diminishing in quantity, went into a period of stasis. The Mudlark, No Highway in the Sky, and Saint Joan are all journeyman assignments, and Périnal apparently walked through them with little enthusiasm or interest. The same could certainly be said of his contributions to Tom Thumb and Once More, with Feeling! Yet, even in the midst of these frankly commercial productions, Périnal was capable of creditable work on Preminger’s Bonjour Tristesse, one of the director’s most affecting works, and A King in New York, although Chaplin’s visual sense in this film is distinctly utilitarian, and gives Périnal little space to work in.

Despite, then, a certain adventurousness in Périnal’s work as evidenced by his rapid assimilation into the Korda movie machine, the cinematographer emerges as a formidable commercial stylist, whose work between 1930–31 set the foundation for much of what was to come in both classic and New Wave French cinema, through his expressive use of naturalistic techniques and a gracefully fluid moving camera. In his second phase, from 1933–46, Périnal became the architect of one of the great classical British styles of cinematography: brooding and dramatic, reveling in off-angled close-ups, and inextricably tied to the use of studio facilities. Certainly, Périnal is a major figure in the history of motion-picture cinematography, and his influence continues to be felt in both British and French studio work to the present day.

—Wheeler Winston Dixon

PIERCE, Jack P.

Makeup Artist. Nationality: American. Born: New York City, 1889. Career: 1910—projectionist; then theater manager, stage actor, film stuntman and actor, assistant director; 1914—cameraman for Universal; then became makeup man in late 1920s: at Universal until late 1940s; then freelance makeup work in films and on TV: worked on Fireside Theatre and You Are There series. Died: In 1968.

Films as Makeup Artist (selected list):

1926 Buffalo Bill on the U.P. Trail (Mattison); Davy Crockett at the Fall of the Alamo (Bradbury)
1927 The Monkey Talks (Walsh)
1931 Dracula (Browning); Frankenstein (Whale)
1932 The Mummy (Freund); The Old Dark House (Whale)
1933 The Invisible Man (Whale)
1935 The Bride of Frankenstein (Whale); The Werewolf of London (Walker); The Raven (Landers); The Black Cat (House of Doom) (Ulmer)
1939 Son of Frankenstein (Lee)
1941 The Wolf Man (Wagner)
1942 The Mummy’s Tomb (Young); The Ghost of Frankenstein (Kenton); Frankenstein Meets the Wolf Man (Neill)
1943 The Mummy’s Ghost (Le Borg); Captive Wild Women (Dmytryk)
1944 The Mummy’s Curse (Goodwins); The House of Frankenstein (Kenton)
1945 House of Dracula (Kenton)
1947 Abbott and Costello Meet Frankenstein (Barton)
1959 Beyond the Time Barrier (Ulmer); The Amazing Transparent Man (Ulmer)
1961 The Devil’s Hand (Live to Love) (Hole)
1962 The Creation of the Humanoids (Barry)
1963 Beauty and the Beast (Cahn)

Other Films:

1922 The Man Who Waited (Luddy) (ro)
1923 Desert Rider (Bradbury) (asst d)
1925 The Speed Demon (Bradbury) (ro)
1929 Masquerade (Birdwell) (ro)
Publications

By PIERCE: article—

“'The Monstrous Genius of Jack Pierce,'” an interview with Chuck Crisafulli, in Filmfax (Evanston), October-November 1992.

On PIERCE: articles—

Film Comment (New York), November-December 1978.
Scarlet Street, no. 9, Winter 1993.

*  *  *

With the death of Lon Chaney in 1930, Universal began its search for a new “Man of a Thousand Faces.” In spite of the studio’s later publicity which placed the Chaney mantle on Boris Karloff’s square shoulders, the rightful successor to the title was a meticulous, soft-spoken makeup man. Jack Pierce spent some 20 years at Universal creating the monsters that have populated nightmares since the early 1930s.

After a career in semi-pro baseball, Pierce drifted to Hollywood, entering production as an actor and assistant cameraman. Eventually finding his niche as a makeup artist, causing an early sensation with his ape makeup for the 1927 Fox production The Monkey Talks. But it was his transformation of Boris Karloff into Frankenstein’s monster in 1931 that made Pierce the movies’ premier creator of gruesome and fantastic creatures for a generation. Like Dr. Frankenstein’s monster, Pierce’s creature was made up of pieces—pieces of information from books on anatomy, surgery, criminology, and burial custom shaped a thing with veracity to physiological fact and constructed with the help of volatile collodion and greasewood. The monster’s pot-lid head, abnormally long arms, and distorted features not only gave it a nightmarishly plausible appearance, but also were representative of its inner suffering. The greatest achievement in Pierce’s design was that it left Karloff’s gaunt features free enough to express a range of emotions that gave the monster its pathos and humanity. The vulnerable quality which emanated from beneath the creature’s frightening visage has made the monster, fashioned by Pierce and Karloff, the most enduring icon of Hollywood horror. The makeup was so distinctive that Universal copyrighted it, later receiving huge royalties (of which Pierce saw none) from the licensing of toys and masks.

Unlike the monsters created by today’s special effects wizards, Pierce’s designs focused on the human face. Pierce, like Chaney before him, possessed the innate knowledge that it is in the face where the cruelty and pain which dwell in a soul become manifest. The Frankenstein monster was only the first in a long series of horrors Pierce shaped for Universal. The same time and attention to detail that went into Frankenstein extended to The Mummy, in which Karloff was subjected to two makeups. For the role of the 3000-year-old mummy, Im-Ho-Tep, Pierce swathed the actor in beauty clay and desiccated into a tight expression, evoking centuries of bitterness. Edgar G. Ulmer’s Bauhaus poem to necrophilia and spiritual anguish, The Black Cat, featured one of Pierce’s subtlest and most effective makeups. The makeup man sculpted Karloff’s hairline into a sharp widow’s peak, cropping the hair on top into a plateau and thinning it at the sides. The angular effect transformed the actor’s benign face into a permanent scowl touched with satanic glamour which blended perfectly with the geometric sets and costumes of the production. Equally effective was Pierce’s contribution to the visible portion of Claude Rains in The Invisible Man. The ragged wrappings about the head, outcrops of thatchy hair and socket-like goggles contrived to suggest the madness in the mind beneath the bandages. Even for those not in starring roles Pierce devised intricate treatments. Bela Lugosi’s best performance, the supporting role of the shepherd Ygor in Son of Frankenstein, came from under heavy makeup. The shaggy hair, hooked teeth, and twisted neck submerged the actor’s matinee idol looks, and permitted him a great range of expression and depth of character than earlier roles had allowed.

Because of his heavy reliance on the face, Pierce’s artistry could be constrained by the canvas on which he was forced to work. Universal’s two forays into lycanthropy featured two very different designs, dictated by two very different actors. The Wolf Man, in which Lon Chaney, Jr. became the beast by the light of the full moon, was endowed with a more complete mythology, as well as a better script and direction. Yet Pierce’s makeup for Chaney was limited by the actor’s own round, jowly features and was ultimately a far less ferocious creation than the earlier monster in The Werewolf of London. The star, Henry Hull, refused to cooperate with Pierce’s original makeup plans for the earlier werewolf movie; the heavy yak hair design eventually became Chaney’s “baby” in the 1940s. For Hull, Pierce developed a lean creature, pared of excess hair, a makeup that fully exploiting the severe lines and high forehead of the actor’s face. The lupine viciousness of Hull’s werewolf could not be equalled by the more elaborate Chaney creature.

By 1947 Universal’s monsters were left with only B-budgets and plotlines buckling under the weight of their own clichés. The simple shudders created by Frankenstein’s monster and the Wolfman were no match for the horrors of the Second World War and the dawning atomic age. And Pierce’s painstaking process of makeup application was giving way to foam rubber and other quicker, less expensive techniques. Pierce found himself unceremoniously dumped from the studio payroll and freelancing for other studios and for television. But the monsters he created have become permanent fixtures in our national mythology.

—Eric Schaefer

PINELLI, Tullio

See FLAIANO, Ennio, and Tullio PINELLI

PINTER, Harold

Harold Pinter

Films as Writer:
1963 The Servant (Losey) (+ ro as society man); The Caretaker (The Guest) (Donner)
1964 The Pumpkin Eater (Clayton)
1966 The Quiller Memorandum (Anderson)
1967 The Accident (Losey) (+ ro as Bell)
1968 The Birthday Party (Friedkin)
1971 The Go-Between (Losey)
1973 The Homecoming (Hall)
1976 The Last Tycoon (Kazan)
1981 The French Lieutenant's Woman (Reisz)
1983 Betrayal (D. Jones)
1985 Turtle Diary (Irvin) (+ ro as man in bookshop)
1987 The Room (Altman) (adapter); The Dumb Waiter (Altman); The Birthday Party (Ives—for TV) (+ ro)
1988 Mountain Language (+ d—for TV)
1989 L'amit retrouve (Reunion; Der Wiedergefundene Freund) (Schatzberg); The Heat of the Day (Morahan—for TV)
1990 The Handmaid's Tale (Schlöndorff)
1991 The Comfort of Strangers (Schrader); The Lover (Kemp-Welch)
1993 The Trial (D. Jones)
1999 Bez pogovora (Jovanovic—for TV)
2000 The Pickwick Papers

Films as Director:
1973 Butley
1979 Rear Column
1981 The Hothouse

Films as Actor:
1970 The Rise and Rise of Michael Rimmer (Billington) (as Steven Hench)
1973 The Tamarind Seed (Edwards)
1982 Doll's Eye (Worth)
1996 Breaking the Code (Wise—for TV) (as John Smith)
1997 Mojo (Butterworth) (as Sam Ross)
1998 Ritratto di Harold Pinter (Andò) (as himself)
1999 Mansfield Park (Rozema) (as Sir Thomas Bertram)
2000 Catastrophe (for TV)

Publications

By PINTER: plays—

The Collection, and The Lover, 1963.

By PINTER: other books—

Mac (nonfiction), 1968.
I Know the Place (poetry), London, 1979.
The Dwarfs (fiction), London, 1990.
I Know the Place, New York, 1990.
One Hundred Poems by One Hundred Poets, New York, 1995.

By PINTER: articles—

Sight and Sound (London), Autumn 1966.
Positif (Paris), July/August 1985.
Film Comment (New York), May/June 1989.

On PINTER: books—

Sykes, Arlene, Harold Pinter, Brisbane, Queensland, 1970.
Burkman, Katherine H., The Dramatic World of Harold Pinter, Columbus, Ohio, 1971.
Klein, Joanne, Making Pictures: The Pinter Screenplay, Columbus, Ohio, 1985.
Knowles, Ronald, Understanding Harold Pinter, Columbia, South Carolina, 1995.

Gussow, Mel, Conversations with Pinter, New York, 1996.

On PINTER: articles—

Cinema Nuovo (Turin), July/August 1967.
Imagen y Sonido, September 1967.
Roud, Richard, in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1971.
Jones, Edward T., on The Go-Between in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), April 1973.
Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), vol. 10, no. 1, 1982.
Skoop (Amsterdam), vol. 22, 4 June 1986.
Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), April and July 1988.
Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), vol. 21, no. 1, 1993.
Tucker, Stephanie, “Despair Not, Neither to Presume,” in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), vol. 24, no. 1, January 1996.
Dodson, Mary Lynn, “The French Lieutenant’s Woman: Pinter and Reisz’s Adaptation of John Fowles’s Adaptation,” in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), vol. 26, no. 4, October 1998.

* * *

Harold Pinter began his professional career as an actor, touring the provinces with English and Irish repertory companies before achieving success as a major playwright and screenwriter. Although he has made subsequent acting appearances, generally in small roles in his own films (among them The Servant and Accident), and has acquired a strong reputation as a director of plays for the British stage, Pinter’s fame owes much to his complex, nuance-charged writing for stage and screen.

In his early play The Birthday Party, filmed in 1968, two mysterious men terrorize a third named Stanley as he cowards in a tawdry English rooming house. The three enact a series of ritual games in an atmosphere of mounting menace, culminating in the utterly broken Stanley’s removal to an unspecified destination—presumably an asylum. In post-absurdist fashion, Pinter denies his audience virtually all clarification of his characters’ histories and likely futures, prompting one frustrated viewer to write: “I would be obliged if you would kindly explain to me the meaning of your play. These are the points which I do not understand: 1. Who are the two men? 2. Where did Stanley come from? 3. Were they all supposed to be normal? You will appreciate that without the answers to my questions, I cannot fully understand your play.'" Pinter replied: "Dear Madam: I would be obliged if you would kindly explain to me the meaning of your letter. These are the points which I do not understand: 1. Who are you? 2. Where do you come from? 3. Are you supposed to be normal? You will understand that without the answers to my questions, I cannot fully understand your letter." This interchange helps to define the characteristically elusive Pinter style and attitude. Both are based on familiarity with life's perpetual uncertainty. The little dramas we observe in life, sometimes as unwilling participants, tend to occur without benefit of sequential beginning, middle, or end. People say one thing and mean another. Strangers, casual acquaintances, close family members deny us information they prefer to withhold. Bizarre events unfold without preparation. Moods change with mercurial suddenness. To live is to be continually perplexed by others.

Pinter's dramatic methods seek to reenforce such a view of life. He rejects traditional story telling structures in favor of fractured chronology and elliptical dialogue. "The desire for verification on the part of all of us, with regard to our own experience and the experience of others, is understandable but cannot always be satisfied," he once wrote. "We are also faced with the immense difficulty, if not the impossibility of verifying the past. I don't mean merely years ago, but yesterday, this morning."

Time and memory thus serve as central Pinter subjects, functioning both technically and thematically to deny the audience the verification it instinctively desires. In Betrayal, for example, Pinter examines the romantic triangle that has developed among a married couple and the husband's best friend by reversing chronology and moving steadily backward in time, concluding the drama when the adulterous relationship first began, nine years before the start of the film. The backward telling of the tale radically alters the viewer's response and shifts attention from plot outcome to narrative point of view. The audience is mesmerized by its uncertainty, forced repeatedly to question who knew what about the relationship and when. Whose memory portrays events most accurately? The answer of course is no one's: "We all interpret a common experience quite differently," Pinter has said. "There's a common ground all right, but it's more like quicksand."

Time also figures prominently in Pinter's adaptation of three difficult novels whose narrative ambiguity he reinterprets in filmic terms. In The Go-Between (from L. P. Hartley's novel), the past is remembered as "a foreign country; they do things differently there." Here, the shifting narrative between past and present enables Pinter to emphasize the effects of cruelty so endemic to the British class system, a subject also explored in his adaptation of John Fowles's The French Lieutenant's Woman, a novel whose dazzling narrative pyrotechnics would appear to have rendered it undramatizable. Pinter's controversial solution rests on an alternation between Fowles's Victorian England and the enactment of that world in a film being shot in contemporary London. Actors acting in a film within the film thus become an appropriate Pinter metaphor for the invisible line between illusion and reality, with one story implicitly commenting on the other.

Pinter's characters say less than they mean as a thin veneer of civilized restraint keeps threatening to erupt into violence. In Accident, Homecoming, Betrayal, and other screenplays, sexual power struggles are obliquely fought in language that mocks the comedy of manners. His dialogue reads as if it were meant to be spewed, not spoken, to be articulated in tones of innuendo and menace that suggest meaning underived from the words alone. In that respect, Pinter's experience as actor and director has made a substantial if unrecognized contribution to the dynamics of his language.

Pinter also wrote the screen adaptations of novels for several films which were released in the early 1990s, including Margaret Atwood's The Handmaid's Tale, a feminist, Orwellian classic about a woman's ordeal under the authoritarian rule of the extreme right. He also wrote the screenplay for Ian McEwan's The Comfort of Strangers, the story of a young couple whose vacation in Venice evolves into a nightmare of sadomasochistic torture and murder.

Undoubtedly Pinter's greatest screenwriting challenge of the early 1990s was the offer to write the screenplay of Franz Kafka's The Trial. Pinter stated in 1992, that when he was first asked to adapt The Trial, "I immediately said yes, since I have, more or less, been waiting for this opportunity for 45 years." That Pinter was greatly inspired by Kafka would seem self-evident to anyone who had studied Pinter's early works. The Birthday Party in particular, has often been directly compared to The Trial by Pinter's critics. The Trial is, of course, the story of Joseph K., the senior bank clerk who awakens on his 30th birthday to find himself arrested by an unknown court, for an unknown crime, from which he can never be exonerated.

The Trial was released in 1993 by Angelika Films. It was filmed in Prague and was directed by David Jones who also directed the film version of Pinter's play Betrayal. Overall, Pinter's adaptation is quite faithful to the novel. The novel's famous chapter "The Cathedral" is noticeably abridged, but this is obviously necessary due to the time constraints of the filmic form.

The colorful and beautiful backdrop created for Joseph K.'s nightmarish world is a sharp contrast to Orson Welles's 1962, futuristic black-and-white adaptation of The Trial. Pinter explained in an interview that the film was intended to be "very plain without grotesqueries," unlike Welles's version which he described as being a "phantasmagoria."

The use of surreal special effects and lighting in The Trial would certainly have only detracted from this ultimate marriage of Kafka and Pinter. For Pinter is a dramatist and screenwriter whose gift it has been to make nightmarish worlds unfold by disrupting the ordinary, through the powers of language and silence.

—Mark W. Estrin, updated by Áine Doyle

---

PLANER, Franz

Cinematographer. Nationality: Czech. Born: Karlsbad (now Karlovy Vary), 29 March 1894; used the name Frank Planer in Hollywood. Education: Trained as photographer in Vienna. Career: 1910s—newsreel and still photographer, in Vienna and Paris; 1920s and 1930s—worked in German films for Emelka Company, Munich; after 1937—in Hollywood. Died: 10 January 1963.

Films as Cinematographer:

1912 Der Todesritt in Riesenrad
1920 Der Klosterjäger (Osten?); Der Ochsenkrieg (Osten)
1921 Der Brunnen des Wahnsinns (Ostertmayr); Die Nacht der Einbrecher (Krafft); Die Trommeln Asiens (Krafft); Die Trutz von Trutzberg (Ostertmayr)
WRITERS AND PRODUCTION ARTISTS, 4th EDITION

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1922</td>
<td>Der Favorit der Königin (Seitz); Um Liebe und Thron (Osten); Das schwarze Gesicht (Osten)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1924</td>
<td>Die Finanzen des Grossherzogs (The Grand Duke’s Finances) (Murnau) (co); Geheime Menschen (Schönfelder); Schicksal (Bach)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1925</td>
<td>Finale der Liebe (Bach); Der Mann seiner Frau (Bach)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1926</td>
<td>Funfűrűtere zserin (Morel-Molander); Der Sohn des Hannibal (Bach)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1927</td>
<td>Die Achtzehnjährigen (Noa); Die Ausgestossenen (Berger); Einbruch (Osten); Das Frauenhaus von Rio (Steinhoff); Glanz und Elend der Kurtisannen (Noa); Der grosse Unbekannte (Noa); Die Pflicht zu schweigen (William); Wie heirat ich meinen Chef (Schall); Alraune (Mandrake); Unholy Love: A Daughter of Destiny (Galeen)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1928</td>
<td>Heat’ spielt der Strauss (Wiene); Die Rothausgasse (Oswald); Weib in Flammen (Reichmann); Wolga-Wolga! (Toujansky)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1929</td>
<td>Die Flucht vor der Liebe (Behrendt); Frauen am Abgrund (Jacob); Die Brüder die Rott Wasschneck); Der Narr seiner Liebe (Tschechowa); Stud. Chem. Helene Willfjüer (Sauer)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Die Drei von der Tankstelle (Thiele); Hans in allen Gassen (Froelich); Heute Nacht—Eventuell (Emo); Der Herr der weissen Berge (Bonnard); Zapfenstreich am Rhein (Speyer); Le Chemin du paradis (de Vaucorbeil—French version of Thiele’s Die Drei von der Tankstelle); La Folle Aventure (Antoine—French version of Froelich’s Hans in allen Gassen)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>Der Herr Bürovorsteher (Behrendt); Der Herzog von Reichstadt (Tourjansky); Ihre Durchlaucht, die Achtzehnjährigen (Seitz); Nie wieder Liebe (Litvak); Sein Scheidungsgrund (Zeisler); L’Aiglon (Tourjansky); Der Storch streik (Emo); Calais-Douvre (Boyer—French version of Litvak’s Nie wieder Liebe)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>Der Prinz von Arkadien (Hartl); Das erste Recht des Kindes (Wendhausen); Die Gräfin von Monte Cristo (Hartl); Der schwarze Haar (Lamprecht); Teilnehmer antwortet nicht (Katscher and Sorkin); Eine Stadt steht Kopf (Gründgens); Le Chant du marin (Gallone)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>Der Choral von Leuthen (Froelich); Ihre Durchlaucht, die Verkäuferin (Hartl); Liebelei (Ophüls); Leise jehen meine Lieder (Unfinished Symphony) (Forst); Caprice de Princesse (Clouzot—French version of Hartl’s Ihre Durchlaucht, die Verkäuferin); La Garrison amoureuse (de Vaucorbeil)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>Maskerade (Masquerade in Vienna) (Forst); So endet eine Liebe (Hartl); Les Nuits moscovites (Moscow Nights) (Granowsky); The Dictator (The Love Affair of a Dictator); Loves of a Dictator (Saville); Dactylo se marie (Pujol and May)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>Casta Diva (The Divine Spark) (Gallone)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>Tarass Boulba (Granowsky); The Beloved Vagabond (Barnhardt); Im Sonnenschein (Operrnring; Thank You Madame) (Gallone); Premiere (De Bolvary); Ave Maria (Ophüls—short); La Valse brillante (Ophüls—short)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>Capriolen (Gründgens)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Holiday (Cukor); Girl’s School (Brahm); Adventure in Sahara (Lederman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>Glamour for Sale (Lederman); Escape to Glory (Brahm)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>The Face behind the Mask (Florey); Meet Boston Blackie (Florey); They Dare Not Love (Whale); Time Out for Rhythm (Salkow); Our Wife (Stahl); Sweetheart of the Campus (Dmytryk); Three Girls about Town (Jason)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

On PLANER: articles—

Lawton, Ralph, on Champion in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), June 1949.

American Cinematographer (Hollywood), April 1951.

Lightman, Herb A., on Decision before Dawn in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), February 1952.

Rowan, Arthur, on The 5000 Fingers of Dr. T. in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), January 1953.

On Not As a Stranger in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), July 1955.

Film Comment (New York), Summer 1972.

* * *

Franz Planer has never achieved the critical stature of fellow European emigré cinematographers such as Karl Freund, in spite of the fact that no less a critic than Lotte Eisner placed him, along with Freund, Eugen Schüfftan, and Fritz Arno Wagner, among the greatest directors of photography in Weimar Germany. Planer’s work in America is demonstrably significant and creative. Even his colleagues were unsure of what to make of the man who buried his origins under the anglicized credit title “Photographed by Frank Planer” yet whose images had a frankly expressionist tinge redolent of his experience in Germany. Certain of Planer’s projects, such as Decision before Dawn and The 5000 Fingers of Dr. T, were as genuinely experimental as anything in the commercial cinema of the postwar era, while others found such favor among industry insiders that he was nominated for five Academy Awards for cinematography. Yet even American Cinematographer bemusedly referred to the enigmatic Planer as “a conscientious little man” in April 1951. The answer to the mystery of Franz Planer is in fact easily solved by viewing his biography with an eye to the way he successfully fused German and American photographic traditions into a personal style.

After newssreal and still photography work, Planer became chief cameraman of the Emelka Company in Munich; it was from this base that he developed his reputation in the world of European commercial filmmaking. Yet in spite of almost constant activity, Planer worked on none of the great films of the German Expressionist canon, and this is undoubtedly a partial explanation for his critical obscurity. He did, however, shoot secondary works of Murnau and Galeen. Planer also shot some of the most popular films of the period, including Die Drei von der Tankstelle. With the coming of the Nazis to power, Planer, like others, found his German career ending.

Planer’s early career in Hollywood was a strange one. Like many other European cinematographers, he was enraptured by the scale and technical sophistication of Hollywood production. It is a myth that photographers such as Planer remained glum and homesick during their stays in Hollywood, longing for European artistry in the face of American commercial concerns. Yet, it is true that Planer and his compatriots missed the tradition of the “Regiesitzung,” or preproduction planning meeting, at which director, cinematographer, writers, designers, and even actors would debate the conceptualization of the upcoming film. Hollywood’s hyperdepartmentalization defeated this slower, more democratic method, and throughout his career Planer sought other avenues for asserting preproduction input on his assignments, as well as ways of gaining greater-than-usual control over the shoot itself.

Hired by Columbia Pictures, Planer, like many of the studio’s photographers, was called upon to shoot in all genres, budgets, and even structural formats. His first film in the U.S. was Holiday, but thereafter he spent a number of years working strictly on B-films and low-budget A-productions at Columbia. Yet even as early as Holiday, a Planer style is in evidence. Utilizing characteristic long or extremely long takes, Planer’s camera moves easily through Stephen Goosens’s glistening white settings of cavernous ballrooms and apartments with complex floorplans, becoming an intimate part of the drama. It follows crucial scenes up and down staircases, and comments on the action through exclusionary framing and staging of actors. Planer’s camera, as much as Cukor’s direction, is responsible for the transformation of Holiday from its theatrical glitziness to a sophisticated comedy of class interest.

But the opportunity to do Holiday turned out to have been an aberration for Planer at the studio during this period, and his career reached a temporary nadir in 1945 with Leave It to Blonde, which restricted him to stock sets, low budgets, and series formula. Planer thus seized on his next assignment, The Chase, with its higher budget and flashback structure, to create the first of his film noir set pieces, a pursuit through a Latin American city during carnival time. Following The Chase, Planer was recognized as a top-line freelance cinematographer, and helped to create some of the finest work produced by Hollywood’s Germanic emigrés, working with Max Ophüls, Robert Siodmak, Edgar Ulmer, Curtis Bernhardt, and Anatole Litvak. In this period, several films stand out, but Ophüls’s Letter from an Unknown Woman is especially rich. Planer’s trademark of shooting dialogue scenes in dynamic fashion, with a moving camera often taking the place of shot-reverse shot patterning, had been in place as early as Holiday, and thus much of the credit for the extravagant use of these devices in the film must be assigned to Planer rather than to Ophüls, as is common in criticism about the film.

In the same period, Planer’s work began to take on a poetic realist tone, influenced by the readiness of studios to permit increased location shooting. Beginning with Ciss Cross, with its exteriors of the run-down Bunker Hill section of Los Angeles, and running through The Nun’s Story, Planer used practical interiors and location shooting for a documentary feel, and eagerly sought out films without “superstar” actors, specifically to avoid being typed as a “glamour cinematographer.” For several of his films, he also took on the task of location scouting—a further way of guaranteeing a personalized look. Champion and 711 Ocean Drive were both influential arguments in their time for the aesthetics of location shooting.

This increasingly hard-edged realism, inflected with a growing use of visual irony, is an important component of Planer’s work in the 1950s. However, Planer also had opportunities to reformulate an expressionist aesthetic around Hollywood conventions through his work in two fantasy films. Brought in early for the production of The 5000 Fingers of Dr. T, Planer brought a unique imagination to this nightmarish fantasy of a nine-year-old boy tyrannized by his piano teacher, from a scenario by Dr. Seuss. Entirely studio-shot, the film at one time utilized every soundstage on the Columbia lot for its mammoth sets. Planer devised radically new techniques, coloring his sets with light instead of paint, and utilizing experimental lighting instruments for his first film in Technicolor. His work on 20,000 Leagues under the Sea was less spectacular but better integrated into a more standard vision of the fantasy genre. Sacrificing spectacle, using as few of the characteristically awkward Disney mattes as possible, Planer’s camera focuses on the interior of the Nautilus, the story’s prototype submarine. The craft appears cramped and cloistered; spiny-looking cast-iron decks and bulkheads are in view, space is clearly contiguous, and dark colors and grotesque Victorian bric-a-brac give the ship a jarring, unsettling appearance.

The Caine Mutiny fully naturalizes Planer’s colorizing within a realistic genre, using light to give an explicitly ironic tint to several scenes. Planer clearly felt comfortable in new formats; from 1954 onwards, most of his work was in color, widescreen, or both. Breakfast at Tiffany’s shows how efficiently he incorporated colorization into an ironic mode. The credit sequences of the film are shot in an unsaturated black-and-white-in-color style, while the interiors of Holly Golightly’s and Paul Varjak’s Manhattan apartments are done in strange, icy blues and grays, with garish red accents. These sets have an uncomfortable feel to them, accentuated by Planer’s complex camera movements in closely defined and contiguous spaces. Planer also constantly interposes colored objects such as bead curtains between camera and subject in order to comment on the action, then just as suddenly removes them. Much of the action is shot from slightly too-high or too-low angles, with Holly’s breakdown scene shot from a bizarre overhead perspective.
The film demonstrates that Planer’s style depended as much on graphic schemes as on color, and, in fact, his style was called “black-and-white-in-color” long before such an appellation had come into general usage. Indeed, Planer returned periodically to black-and-white films, and found in the Kramer unit a suitable and hospitable home for his talents, for the company prided itself on the realism of its subjects and a lofty, high-art approach to its stories. Of his work there, Not As A Stranger is the clearest melding of these two aims. The film, a medical story, was shot in black and white, unusual for melodramas in this period. Kramer took realism to preposterous heights, forcing Planer to film an actual operation. This meant that standard, high wattage lamps could not be used as the heat generated would damage the tender flesh around open incisions. Planer was forced to rely on low-intensity lamps and bounced light off the reflective walls. Planer, unvanquished, used extremely fast Tri-X Pan stock to capture unusual visual, slow tracking movements in the operating room, making these sequences harrowing in their avoidance of traditional editing patterning in favor of suspenseful, fluid action. The rest of the film rewrites convention as well, favoring low-key lighting for the melodramatic sections, as against the glaring high-key style of the more well-known 1950s melodramas of Sirk and Minnelli.

Yet Planer’s masterpiece is surely Decision before Dawn. Entirely location-shot, the film gave Planer his favorite ingredients in one mix: a “no-name” cast of excellent performers, months of preparation, a director (Litvak) whose visual imagination was in synch with his own, and a film with a significant moral dimension to its story line. The result is the only genuine example of an American neorealist style in the 1940s. Its photography is so striking that nearly 40 years later Francis Coppola had the film screened as an example for his cinematographer and cameramen to follow during production of Rumblefish.

The film was an extraordinary logistical undertaking, utilizing footage shot in 16 cities in war-ravaged Europe, including the ruins of Mannheim and Nuremberg. Completely eschewing the use of stock, process, and miniature work, Planer painstakingly supervised the pushing of the exposed footage in processing to achieve a remarkable clarity of image. “It was our aim to make a picture with all the blunt realism of a U.S. Army Signal Corps documentary,” said Planer at the time, yet this claim is disingenuous, for the film has a fictional sense of irony and trompe l’oeil as profound as any in American film. The interiors are images of sheer devastation; no building, it seems, has been untouched by Allied bombs. Planer’s camera relentlessly probes ruined castles, hospitals and inns, going up stairways, through doorways, down hallways, and into the rooms themselves, capturing a weird architecture of lavish period decor, now dilapidated, overlaid with odd trappings of military occupation. Outside, the landscape is composed of masterfully organized crowd scenes; refugees stone-facedly inhabit blasted streets, shattered bridges, and sluggish, endless truck convoys. This depiction of a society broken in spirit is a succession of set pieces, each unique in the problems confronting the cinematographer, and each a triumph for Planer.

Accounts differ, but it is likely the location-scouting trips to Europe were Planer’s first visits to Germany since he had left in the mid-1930s. He had fully adopted American working methods by this time, and been fully adopted by the American industry, yet the cool detachment of the film’s images suggests an artist caught between two worlds and a meditation on them both. Decision before Dawn is relentlessly analytical without being judgmental, nostalgic without being sentimental. It poses a moral problem through a visual lexicon, and is thus one of the great philosophical and rhetorical achievements of the American cinema.

—Kevin Jack Hagopian

PLUNKETT, Walter

Costume Designer. Nationality: American. Born: Oakland, California, 5 June 1902. Education: Attended the University of California, Berkeley. Career: Vaudeville and stock actor; designed costumes for touring vaudeville chorus; 1926–40—designer for FBO (later RKO); 1940–47—freelance designer; 1947–66—designer for MGM; also designer for Broadway shows and Metropolitan Opera productions. Award: Academy Award for An American in Paris, 1951. Died: 8 March 1982.

Films as Costume Designer:

- 1926 Ain’t Love Funny? (Andrews); One Minute to Play (Wood); Red Hot Hoofs (Delacy); A Regular Scout (Kirkland)
- 1927 Boy Rider (L. King); Clancy’s Kosher Wedding (Gillstrom); The Gingham Girl (Kirkland); Her Summer Hero (Dugan); Legionnaires in Paris (Gillstrom); Lightning Lariat (Delacy); The Magic Garden (Meehan); Shanghaied (R. Ince); Hard-Boiled Haggerty (Brabin); The Bandit’s Son (Fox)
- 1928 Sinners in Love (Melford); Bantam Cowboy (L. King); Captain Careless (Storm); Chicago after Midnight (R. Ince); Circus Kid (Seitz); Headin’ for Danger (Bradbury); Hey Rube! (Seitz); Hit of the Show (R. Ince); Phantom of the Range (Dugan); Sally of the Scandals (Shores); Son of the Golden West (Forde); Tropic Madness (Vignola); Wallflowers (Meehan); When the Law Rides (Delacy); Wizard of the Saddle (Clark); Stolen Love (Shores); Stocks and Blondes (Murphy)
- 1929 The Red Sword (Vignola); Love in the Desert (Melford); Air Legion (Glennon); Amazing Vagabond (Fox); The Big Diamond Robbery (Forde); Come and Get It (Fox); Dance Hall (M. Brown); Delightful Rogue (Shores); Freckled Rascal (L. King); Gun Law (Delacy or Burch); Half Marriage (Cowen); Hardboiled (R. Ince); The Jazz Age (Shores); Laughing at Death (Fox); The Little Savage (L. King); Night Parade (St. Clair); Outlawed (Fogwell); The Pride of Pavnee (Delacy); Seven Keys to Baldpate (Barker); Street Girl (Ruggles); Syncopation (Glennon); Tanned Legs (Neilan); Vagabond Lover (Neilan); The Very Idea (Rosson); Voice of the Storm (Shores); Queen Kelly (Von Stroheim); The Woman I Love (Melford)
- 1930 The Case of Sergeant Grischa (Brenon); The Cuckoos (Sloane); Dixiana (Reed); The Fall Guy (Pearce); Half Shot at Sunrise (Sloane); Lawful Larceny (Sherman); Leathernecking (Cline); Love Comes Along (Julian); Midnight Mystery (Seitz); Second Wife (Mack)
- 1931 Cimarron (Ruggles)
- 1932 Night after Night (Mayo); The Conquerors (Wellman); The Phantom of Crestwood (Ruben); Secrets of the French Police (Sutherland)
1933  The Past of Mary Holmes (Thompson); Double Harness (Cromwell); Morning Glory (Sherman); The Right to Romance (Santell); Ace of Aces (Ruben); Aggie Appley, Maker of Men (Sandrich); Ann Vickers (Cromwell) (co); Blind Adventure (Schoedsack); Chance at Heaven (Seiter); Christopher Strong (Arzner) (co); Cross Fire (Brower); Emergency Call (Cahn); The Great Jasper (Ruben); Lucky Devils (R. Ince); Melody Cruise (Sandrich); Midshipman Jack (Cabanne); No Marriage Ties (Ruben); No Other Woman (Ruben); One Man’s Journey (Robertson); Professional Sweetheart (Seiter); Rafter Romance (Seiter); Scarlet River (Brower); The Silver Cord (Cromwell); Sweepings (Cromwell); Tomorrow at Eight (Enright); Little Women (Cukor); Flying Down to Rio (Freeland) (co); King Kong (Cooper and Schoedsack)

1934  The Little Minister (Wallace); Spitfire (Cromwell); Finishing School (Tuchock and Nicholls); Sing and Like It (Seiter); Where Sinners Meet (Ruben); Stingaree (Wellman); The Life of Vergie Winters (Santell); Bachelor Bait (Stevens); Cockeyed Cavaliers (Sandrich); Strictly Dynamite (Nugent); The Age of Innocence (Moeller); The Fountain (Cromwell); His Greatest Gamble (Robertson); We’re Rich Again (Seiter); Down to Their Last Yacht (Hawaiian Nights) (Sloane); The Gay Divorcee (The Gay Divorcee) (Sandrich); Anne of Green Gables (Nicholls); Kentucky Kernels (Stevens); The Silver Streak (Atkins); Wednesday’s Child (Robertson); By Your Leave (Cruickshank); Dangerous Corner (Rosen); Lightning Strikes Twice (Holmes); The Crime Doctor (Robertson); Gridiron Flash (Tyron); A Hat, a Coat, and a Glove (Mack); Keep ’em Rolling (Archinbald); Long Lost Father (Schoedsack); Man of Two Worlds (Ruben); Meanest Gal in Town (Mack); Of Human Bondage (Cromwell); Romance in Manhattan (Roberts); Success at Any Price (Ruben); Their Big Moment (Cruze); This Man Is Mine (Cromwell); Woman in the Dark (Rosen)

1935  Mary of Scotland (Ford); Hooray for Love (W. Lang); The Informer (Ford); The Arizonian (C. Vidor); Jalna (Cromwell); Alice Adams (Stevens); Hot Tip (McCary and Gleason); Freckles (Killy and Hamilton); His Family Tree (C. Vidor); The Three Musketeers (Lee); The Rainmakers (Guilo); To Beat the Band (Stoloff); Hi, Gaucho! (Atkins); The Return of Peter Grimm (Nicholls); Annie Oakley
Plunkett worked especially well with Katharine Hepburn at RKO because both artists aimed for veracity in character and era. Because Plunkett worked to make his name virtually synonymous with the ''period'' picture. Originally an actor, Plunkett prepared as if trained by Stanislavsky. Walter Plunkett lacked the knack of high couture. He could not compete in the world of super-rich chic with Paris-trained Adrian or Travis Banton. Instead, Plunkett excelled in designing glorious garments of days gone by. With the fervor of a 19th-century archeologist, Plunkett worked to make his name virtually synonymous with the "period" picture. By PLUNKETT: article—The Velvet Light Trap (Madison, Wisconsin), Spring 1978.

Walter Plunkett lacked the knack of high couture. He could not compete in the world of super-rich chic with Paris-trained Adrian or Travis Banton. Instead, Plunkett excelled in designing glorious garments of days gone by. With the fervor of a 19th-century archeologist, Plunkett worked to make his name virtually synonymous with the "period" picture. Originally an actor, Plunkett prepared as if trained by Stanislavsky. Endowing his costumes with presence and character, even the humblest handmade, as seen in Little Women, was seamed with integrity. Plunkett worked especially well with Katharine Hepburn at RKO because both artists aimed for veracity in character and era. Because Plunkett’s dresses were assuredly accurate even in the way in which they were made, Hepburn rehearsed in costume to achieve proper movement. She insisted on learning how to maneuver hoops and how to turn her head in stiffly starched ruffs as if such movements were natural to her in order to insure that costume and characterization became one. Plunkett also was responsible for the Fred Astaire-Ginger Rogers look. Their dance attire, integral to that “carefree” image, depended on Plunkett’s elegant lines, as they nominated or released areas of mobility. Astaire, of course, insisted on comfort and optimum freedom. Rogers preferred glamour and eye-catching gimmicks.

For David Selznick’s Gone with the Wind, Plunkett chronicled the fall and rebirth of the Deep South through Scarlett O’Hara’s well-researched wardrobe, which marked her passage from selfish innocence to hardened maturity. For example, the famous “dining-room curtains” dress, ornamented with jaunty tassels and a smart, one-shoulder cape, illustrated Scarlett’s spunky calculation in the face of adversity. As one of the first technicolor movies, Gone with the Wind dazzled with picture-postcard color. Plunkett had already worked within the limited range of the two-color process at RKO, but now he filled the screen with sapphire, dusty rose, antique blue, claret red, and infinite shades of green. Still remembered today, the gowns of this film reflected an emerging post-Depression fashion trend. However, the Second World War aborted the cinch waist and wide, fabric-consuming skirt symbolic of prosperity and the romantic ideal of womanhood; only after the war were they resurrected in Dior’s postwar “New Look.”

Plunkett’s later pictures echoed some interesting modern trends. His American in Paris sequence depicted the artists’ ball in abstract blacks and whites, more like the flamboyant visions of Adrian than traditional Plunkett. They splashed the screen abstractly as if flung from Jackson Pollock’s paint brush.

Throughout the 1950s, Plunkett continued his successful “period” creations. At the same time, he began to mimic the very popular blacks and whites, more like the flamboyant visions of Adrian than traditional Plunkett. They splashed the screen abstractly as if flung from Jackson Pollock’s paint brush.

—Edith C. Lee

POLGLASE, Van Nest

Art Director. Nationality: American. Born: Brooklyn, New York, 25 August 1898. Education: Studied architecture, Beaux Arts, New York. Career: Architect with Berg and Orchard, New York; 1919—followed his architectural colleague Wiard Ihnen to Famous Players-Lasky; 1927–32—worked for Paramount; 1932–42—at RKO; also worked for Columbia. Died: 20 December 1968.

Films as Art Director:

1925 A Kiss in the Dark (Tuttle); Lovers in Quarantine (Tuttle); Stage Struck (Dwan)
1928 The Magnificent Flirt (D’Arrast)
1929 Untamed (Conway)
1933 Bed of Roses (LaCava); Little Women (Cukor); Morning Glory (L. Sherman); Ann Vickers (Cromwell); Flying Down to Rio (Freeland); The Past of Mary Holmes (Thompson and Vorkapich); Melody Cruise (Sandrich); Emergency Call (Cahn); No Marriage Ties (Ruben); One Man’s Journey (Robertson); Midshipman Jack (Cabanne); Ace of Aces (Ruben); Chance at Heaven (Seiter); After Tonight (Archainbaud); Professional Sweetheart (Seiter); Christopher Strong (Arzner); Headline Shooter (Brower); If I Were Free (Nugent); King Kong (Cooper and Schoedsack)

1934 Romance in Manhattan (Roberts); Finishing School (Tuchuck and Nicholls); Rafter Romance (Seiter); This Man Is Mine (Cromwell); Of Human Bondage (Cromwell); The Lost Patrol (Ford); Spyfire (Cromwell); The Gay Divorcee (The Gay Divorcee (Sandrich); The Fountain (Cromwell); Bachelor Bait (Stevens); Long Lost Father (Schoedsack); The Little Minister (Wallace)

1935 Roberta (Seiter); Village Tale (Cromwell); Jalna (Cromwell); The Last Days of Pompeii (Schoedsack and Cooper); I Dream Too Much (Cromwell); In Person (Seiter); Star of Midnight (Roberts); Break of Hearts (Moeller); The Informer (Ford); The Return of Peter Grimm (Nicholls); Sylvia Scarlett (Cukor); Ladle (Stevens); The Nitwits (Stevens); Top Hat (Sandrich); Alice Adams (Stevens); Annie Oakley (Stevens); She (Pichel and Holden); The Three Musketeers (Lee); Seven Keys to Baldpate (Hamilton and Killy)

1936 Winterset (Santell); Mary of Scotland (Ford); Swing Time (Stevens); The Plough and the Stars (Ford); Follow the Fleet (Sandrich); Mummy’s Boys (Guiol); Mass’em up (C. Vidor); The Ex-Mrs. Bradford (Roberts); The Lady Convents (Roberts); A Woman Rebels (Sandrich); The Big Game (Nicholls and Killy)

1937 Hideaway (Rosson); The Big Shot (Kilty); Fight for Your Lady (Stoloff); Forty Naughty Girls (Cline); Living on Love (Landers); Meet the Missus (Santley); Music for Madame (Blystone); New Faces of 1937 (Jason); On Again—Off Again (Cline); Sea Devils (Stoloff); Shall We Dance (Sandrich); Stage Door (LaCava); Super Sleuth (Stoloff); The Toast of New York (Lee); Too Many Wives (Holmes); The Woman I Love (Litvak); Hitting a New High (Walsh); A Damsel in Distress (Stevens)

1938 Affairs of Annabel (Stoloff); Carefree (Sandrich); I’m from the City (Holmes); The Law West of Tombstone (Tryon); A Man to Remember (Kanin); Room Service (Seiter); The Saint in New York (Holmes); Tarnished Angel (Goodwins); Vivacious Lady (Stevens); Condemned Women (Landers); Having a Wonderful Time (Santell); Bringing Up Baby (Hawks)

1939 In Name Only (Cromwell); Love Affair (McCarey); The Story of Vernon and Irene Castle (Potter); Bachelor Mother (Kanin); Fifth Avenue Girl (La Cava); Allegheny Uprising (Seiter); Five Came Back (Farrow); The Girl from Mexico (Goodwins); The Great Man Votes (Kanin); Gunga Din (Stevens); Mexican Spitfire (Goodwins); The Hunchback of Notre Dame (Dieterle); Reno (Farrow); Panama Lady (Hively); That’s Right—You’re Wrong (Butler)

1940 Abe Lincoln in Illinois (Cromwell); Primrose Path (La Cava); They Knew What They Wanted (Kanin); Vigil in the Night (Seiter); Curtain Call (Woodruff); Dance, Girl, Dance (Arzner); I’m Still Alive (Reis); Kitty Foyle (Wood); Laddie (Hively); Let’s Make Music (Goodwins); Lucky Partners (Milestone); Married and in Love (Farrow); Mexican Spitfire Our West (Goodwins); My Favorite Wife (Kanin); Millionaire Playboy (Goodwins); Millionaires in Prison
(McCary); One Crowded Night (Reis); Pop Always Pays (Goodwins); The Stranger on the Third Floor (Ingster); Sued for Libel (Goodwins); Tom Brown’s School Days (Stevenson); Too Many Girls (Abbott); Wagon Train (Killy); You Can’t Fool Your Wife (McCary); You’ll Find Out (Butler)

1941 All That Money Can Buy (Dieterle); The Bandit Trail (Killy); Citizen Kane (Welles); Cyclone on Horseback (Killy); The Gay Falcon (Reis); Look Who’s Laughing (Dwan); Mr. and Mrs. Smith (Hitchcock); Suspicion (Hitchcock); Tom, Dick, and Harry (Kanin)

1943 What a Woman! (Cummings); The Fallen Sparrow (Wallace)

1944 Together Again (C. Vidor); Kiss and Tell (Wallace); She Wouldn’t Say Yes (Hall)

1946 Gilda (C. Vidor); The Thrill of Brazil (Simon)

1949 The Crooked Way (Florey)

1950 The Admiral Was a Lady (Rogell); The Fireball (Garnett); The Man Who Cheated Himself (Feist); Johnny One-Eye (Florey); Never Fear (The Young Lovers) (Lupino)

1954 Silver Lode (Florey); Passion (Dwan); Cattle Queen of Montana (Dwan)

1955 Escape to Burma (Dwan); Pearl of the South Pacific (Dwan); Tennessee’s Partner (Dwan)

1956 Slightly Scarlet (Dwan)

1957 The River’s Edge (Dwan)

Publications

By POLGLASE: article—

On POLGLASE: articles—

* * *

Along with Cedric Gibbons at MGM, Van Nest Polglase was Hollywood’s most influential supervising art director, responsible for the look of RKO’s product from 1932 to 1942. Disputes linger over the precise nature and extent of Polglase’s contribution to those films on which he received credit for art direction since they were most often collaborations, though it is generally conceded that he had the first and last say on all designs. However, little doubt remains that it was Polglase, with his scrupulous attention to detail, who was responsible for the eclectic look of the RKO product, a look which continued for some time after his departure. Whether it was one of the vast glossy spaces of an Astaire-Rogers musical, the moody streets of a thriller, or a stone and shingle structure for a historical drama, the RKO films under Polglase were redolent with that most sought after but elusive quality in production design—atmosphere.

Polglase practiced a perfectionism that gave his historical sets an accuracy which extended beyond the creations of other studios. The RKO-built stone and thatch Paris for The Hunchback of Notre Dame exemplifies Polglase’s attention to detail and his proclivity for designing sets around large open spaces, as evidenced by the cathedral’s interior and the public square in front of the structure. Polglase also held a latent inclination for expressionism, a predisposition which surfaced in his foggy, angular Dublin for The Informer, as well as in The Stranger on the Third Floor and Citizen Kane.

Polglase’s best-known and most visually exciting designs were those for RKO’s series of Fred Astaire-Ginger Rogers musicals. Along with his associate Carroll Clark, Polglase supervised the creation of a series of sets that were, and continue to be, the hallmark of cosmopolitan design for the 1930s. The Big White Set, or BWS, became the centerpiece for these films, a massive space of elegant white that could accommodate both the practical concerns of the dance and the public’s demand for fantasy. Over the course of the series Polglase’s vision swept from the fantastic but functional to the abstract, and eventually touched down on the wholly realistic. The growing love affair between man and machine found its artistic outlet in the Art Deco movement and, in Deco, Polglase found the ideal counterpart to the choreography of Astaire and Hermes Pan and the lightweight scripts. The choices of material, including glass, chrome, and compounds like celluloid and bakelite met themes of mechanics and speed to produce generally smooth geometric forms. Polglase’s use of Deco coupled with the free-flowing moves of the dance team gave the films a seamless, streamlined quality.

Beginning with Flying Down to Rio Polglase established the tenor of the series by employing motifs of movement and flight in the production design. Airplanes, butterflies, and even a bandstand in the form of a hot air balloon transmit the concept of motion and are reinforced by the sweeping rails and staircases that abound on the sets. Curved chromium rails, consisting of double or triple parallel lines, served Polglase with a consistent metaphor for movement through most of the film of the series. In The Gay Divorcee Polglase employs two variations of Deco. The first is the neo-classicism evidenced by the Greco-Roman busts, urns, and multi-square patterns. The second variation is the strictly abstract use of curvilinear form such as the walls along the esplanade, bisected by a set of dual horizontal lines which in turn are interrupted by a series of circular windows set in square frames. Refining and expanding the neo-classical Deco for Top Hat, Polglase removed the complexity from classical forms such as the scroll and the arch and then expanded them to a gigantic scope for the creation of the fantastic Venice set. Like the plot of the film, the set bore no resemblance to reality, and pushed the level of abstraction beyond that of the earlier movies. The same gigantism infected the Polglase-supervised sets for Xanadu in Citizen Kane.

In Shall We Dance Polglase reached the ultimate level of abstraction culminating in sets that were both outlandish and the epitome of Art Deco. For the engine room of the S.S. Queen Anne where Astaire performs “Slap That Bass,” all relation to reality was dismissed. The vast space was turned into a sea of stylized white and chrome cylinders, mechanical fittings and pumping arms. The mechanisms were spread over a reflective bakelite floor and multiple levels were joined by sweeping gangways topped with razor-sharp silver rails.

After attaining the peak of abstraction the only direction left was realism. Carefree carried Astaire and Rogers through sets that were, for the first time, based largely on reality and which made use more of natural materials like wood and stone with a few Deco motives added for flair. The last film in the RKO series, The Story of Vernon and Irene Castle, returned the team firmly to earth with its pre-war setting and basis in biographical fact.
Polglase utilized the Deco concept of “total design” through the Astaire-Rogers series. Design motifs carried over into all phases of the production, such as the repetition of line in one of Alice Brady’s dresses in The Gay Divorcee, which echoed a feature used throughout the film. Several of Polglase’s favorite motifs return in film after film.

Increasing problems with alcoholism led to Polglase’s dismissal from RKO in 1942 and to a series of freelance positions. He served as production designer for a number of notable films, including a series of eight Allan Dwan movies in the 1950s. Even though he never again had the money or the resources at his disposal that he controlled during his tenure at RKO, Polglase continued to develop worthy designs, and his influence on RKO resonated throughout the 1940s.

—Eric Schaefer

POLITO, Sol

Cinematographer. Nationality: American. Born: Palermo, Sicily, 1892; emigrated to New York at an early age. Education: Attended schools in New York. Career: Still photographer, then laboratory and camera assistant; 1917—first film as cinematographer, Queen X; worked for several studios, then for Warner Brothers in 1930s and 1940s. Died: In 1960.

Films as Cinematographer:

1914 Rip Van Winkle (ast)
1916 The Sins of Society (ast); The World against Him (Crane) (ast)
1917 Queen X (O’Brien); Her Second Husband (Henderson)
1918 The Imposter (Henderson); Who Loved Him Best (O’Brien); Her Husband’s Honor (B. King); Ruling Passions (Schomer); Treason (B. King)
1919 What Love Forgives (Vekroff); The Love Defender (Johnson); Are You Legally Married? (Thorby); Bill Apperson’s Boy (Kirkwood); Burglar by Proxy (Dillon); Soldiers of Fortune (Dwan); Should a Woman Tell? (J. Ince)
1920 Alias Jimmy Valentine (Karger); Price of Redemption (Fitzgerald)
1921 The Roof Tree (Dillon); Misleading Lady (Irving)
1922 Trimmed (Pollard); The Loaded Door (Pollard); Strength of the Pines (Lewis) (co)
1923 Mighty Lak’a Rose (Carewe); The Girl of the Golden West (Carewe) (co); The Badman (Carewe); Bishop of the Ozarks (Fox)
1924 Why Men Leave Home (Stahl); The Lightning Rider (Ingramah); Roaring Rails (Forman); The Siren of Seville (Stromberg and Storm); A Café in Cairo (Withney); The Flaming Forties (Forman)
1925 Beyond the Border (Dunlap); Soft Shoes (Ingramah); The People vs. Nancy Preston (Forman); The Crimson Runner (Forman); Silent Sanderson (Dunlap); The Bad Lands (Henderson); Paint and Powder (Stromberg)
1926 Driftin’ Thru (Dunlap); The Seventh Bandit (Dunlap); Senor Daredevil (Rogell); The Frontier Trail (Dunlap); Satan Town (Mortimer); The Unknown Cavalier (Rogell)
1927 The Overland Trail (Dunlap); Somewhere in Sonora (Rogell); The Land beyond the Law (H. Brown); Lonesome Ladies (Henabery); Hard Boiled Haggerty (Czahin); Gun Gospel (H. Brown)
1928 The Shepherd of the Hills (Rogell); Burning Daylight (Brabin); The Hawk’s Nest (Christensen); Heart to Heart (Beaudine); Show Girl (Santell); Burning Bridges (Hogan); The Border Patrol (Hogan); The Haunted House (Christensen)
1929 Scarlet Seas (Dillon); Seven Footprints to Satan (Christensen); House of Horror (Christensen) (co); Broadway Babies (LeRoy); The Man and the Moment (Fitzmaurice); Twin Beds (Santell); The Isle of Lost Ships (Willat); Paris (Badger)
1930 Girl of the Golden West (Dillon); Playing Around (LeRoy); No, No Nanette (Badger); Show Girl in Hollywood (LeRoy); Numbered Men (LeRoy); The Widow from Chicago (Cline); Madonna of the Streets (Robertson)
1931 Going Wild (Seiter); The Hot Heiress (Badger); Woman Hungry (Badger) (co); Upper Underworld (Lee); Big Business Girl (Seiter); The Bargain (Milton); Five Star Final (LeRoy); The Ruling Voice (Lee); Local Boy Makes Good (LeRoy); Suicide Fleet (Rogell)
1932 Union Depot (Green); Fireman, Save My Child (Bacon); It’s Tough to Be Famous (Green); Two Seconds (LeRoy); Dark Horse (Green); Blessed Event (Del Ruth); Three on a Match (LeRoy); I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang (LeRoy)
1933 42nd Street (Bacon); The Picture Snatcher (Gering); Mind Reader (Del Ruth); Gold Diggers of 1933 (LeRoy)
1934 Hi, Nellie (LeRoy); Dark Hazard (Green); Wonder Bar (Bacon); Dr. Monica (Keighley); Madame DuBarry (Dieterle); Filtration Walk (Borzage) (co)
1935 Sweet Adeline (LeRoy); Go into Your Dance (Mayo) (co); The Woman in Red (Florey); The G-Men (Keighley); In Caliente (Bacon) (co); Shipmates Forever (Borzage); Frisco Kid (Bacon)
1936 The Petrified Forest (Mayo); Colleen (Green) (co); Sons o’ Guns (Bacon); The Charge of the Light Brigade (Curtiz) (co); Three Men on a Horse (LeRoy)
1937 Ready, Willing, and Able (Enright); The Prince and the Pauper (Keighley); Varsity Show (Keighley)
1938 Gold Is Where You Find It (Curtiz); The Adventures of Robin Hood (Curtiz and Keighley) (co); Gold Diggers in Paris (Enright) (co); Boy Meets Girl (Bacon); Angels with Dirty Faces (Curtiz); Valley of the Giants (Keighley) (co)
1939 Dodge City (Curtiz); You Can’t Get Away with Murder (Seiler); The Private Lives of Elizabeth and Essex (Curtiz) (co); Four Wives (Curtiz); Confessions of a Nazi Spy (Litvak)
1940 Virginia City (Curtiz); The Sea Hawk (Curtiz); City for Conquest (Litvak) (co); Sante Fe Trail (Curtiz)
1941 Navy Blues (Bacon) (co); The Sea Wolf (Curtiz); Sergeant York (Hawks) (co)
1942 Captains of the Clouds (Curtiz) (co); The Gay Sisters (Rapper); Now, Voyager (Rapper)
1943 This Is the Army (Curtiz) (co); Old Acquaintance (V. Sherman)
1944 The Adventures of Mark Twain (Rapper); Arsenic and Old Lace (Capra)
1945 The Corn Is Green (Rapper); Rhapsody in Blue (Rapper) (co)
1946 Cinderella Jones (Berkley); A Stolen Life (Bernhardt) (co); Cloak and Dagger (F. Lang)
1947  The Long Night (Litvak); Escape Me Never (Godfrey); Voice of the Turtle (Rapper)
1948  Sorry, Wrong Number (Litvak)
1949  Anna Lucasta (Rapper)

Publications

On POLITO: book—

On POLITO: articles—

Film Comment (New York), Summer 1972.

Reid, J.H., and G. Aachen, ‘‘Captains of the Clouds,’’ in Reid’s Film Index (Wyong, New South Wales), no. 24, 1996.

* * *

Like most of the technicians who created collectively, if unself-consciously, what is now known as the ‘‘classic Hollywood style,’’ Sol Polito received little formal training in his craft, but instead learned the intricacies of cinematography on the job, first as an assistant during a three-year apprenticeship and then as head cameraman. If Polito was hardly an artist whose innovations inspired others, even as he broke with established practices, he was something much more valuable in the factory system of film production that emerged with the vertical integration of the studios in the twenties and the incredible expansion of the medium: a craftsman with a deep and abiding interest in a job well-done who was eager to create the best possible product by following industry guidelines even as he perfected their application.

The studio system in general suited Polito’s temperament and work ethic; it is no accident that he thrived in the rather authoritarian setting of Warner Brothers, where studio head Jack Warner was notorious for demanding efficiency, competence, and fiscal responsibility (meaning, of course, no extra expense that did not justify itself in the finished product). As a studio technician, Polito found it necessary to work on a wide variety of projects in the different genres Warners then specialized in, most particularly what may be best described as the crime melodrama—gritty, hard-hitting pictures often based on events taken directly from yesterday’s headlines. For these films, Polito and the other chief cinematographer at Warners, Tony Gaudio, devised an unglamorized look, not softened by flattering lighting effects, that made much use of the chiaroscuro contrasts between dark and light that were a heritage of German Expressionism. This style is the ancestor of the film noir cinematography that emerged to popularity in the late forties, an evolution based to some degree on technical advances (e.g., faster film stock and deep focus techniques) and a more thoroughgoing interest in realism promoted by wartime filmmaking and postwar developments abroad. Polito’s work for the classic Warners crime melodrama I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang, however, bears comparison with that later style in its outstanding, expressive effects—most memorably, an overall somberness to which director Mervyn LeRoy’s effective staging certainly contributed. Interestingly, though film noir evolved during the last decade of Polito’s work at Warners and the studio was itself in the forefront of this thematic and stylistic innovation (the 1941 Warners version of The Maltese Falcon is often regarded as the most important early noir film), Polito was not centrally involved, as other cinematographers of his generation, such as John Alton, were. Nevertheless, he created for Anatole Litvak’s classic noir melodrama Sorry, Wrong Number a washed-out, hazy look that fails to define clearly much of what is in the frame, a perfect correlative for this story of moral ambivalence, failure of character, infantile preoccupations, and anomie. In this film, Polito’s lighting and exposure values deprive the upscale home of the invalid main character of any sense of richness or security. How different an inflection he gives to the same tonality of grays by making the lighting scheme more glamorizing, emphasizing soft focus in close-ups of star Bette Davis, in Now, Voyager, the classic forties melodrama in which the world of the rich is offered as exquisitely textured, the realm for the setting of the purest romantic fantasy. Neither film makes use of the hard contrast between white and black for which Warners became famous in the thirties, and thus each exemplifies the flexibility within a dominant studio style.

Polito, however, like any studio technician, did not enjoy the luxury of working simply in one genre and perfecting his handling of nuance within overall expressive requirements. His action photography for the studio’s specialist in swashbuckling epics, Michael Curtiz, is excellent in another way. The Adventures of Robin Hood, in particular, shows how Polito could impart a highly effective glow to a Technicolor film, a medium then rather difficult to handle well. Polito’s lighting and exposure values create a depth and crispness that are entirely appropriate to the story. Working with the studio’s new tank and fog machines in the similar project The Sea Hawk, Polito is able to inflect this tale of maritime adventure with the appropriate atmospherics, a misty, often smoky look pervades the action sequences in a story that is darker and more brooding than the moral simplicity of the children’s tale of the defeat of the evil King John by Robin Hood. Polito’s other black-and-white work for Curtiz is exemplary, particularly in The Charge of the Light Brigade where his clear images and unusual setups perfectly complement the director’s fascination with exciting action.

—R. Barton Palmer

***

POMMER, Erich

oversee the restoration of the German film industry; 1956—returned to Hollywood. Died: In Hollywood, California, 8 May 1966.

Films as Producer:

1917 Die verschleierte Dame (Oswald); Und Wandern sollst du ruhelos (Oswald)

1919 Die Pest von Florenz (Rippert); Die Frau mit den Orchiden (Rippert); Der Herr der Liebe (Lang); Das Kabinett des Dr. Caligari (The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari) (Wiene); Halbblut (Lang)

1919–20 Die Spinnen (The Spider) (Lang—2 parts)

1920–21 Das indische Grabmal (The Indian Tomb) (May—2 parts)

1921 Der müde Tod (Between Worlds; Destiny) (Lang); Schloss Vogelöd (Haunted Castle) (Murnau)

1922 Ein Glas Wasser (Berger); Vanina (von Gerlach); Luise Millerin—Kabale und Liebe (Froelich); Dr. Mabuse der Spieler (Dr. Mabuse the Gambler) (Lang); Phantom (Murnau); Der brennende Acker (Burning Soil) (Murnau)

1923 Der verlorene Schuh (Berger); Nora (Viertel); Der steinerne Reiter (Wendhausen); Austreibung—Die Macht der zweiter Frau (Murnau); Der Evangelimann (Holger-Madsen); Tatjana (Dinesen); Der Wetterwart (Froelich); Seine Frau, die Unbekannte (Christensen)

1924 Dekameron-Nächte (Wilcox—German version of Decameron Nights); Der Turm des schweigens (Bertram); Die Nibelungen (Lang—2 parts); Der Letzte Mann (The Last Laugh) (Murnau); Michael (Dreyer); Die Finanzen des Grossherzogs (The Grand Duke’s Finances) (Murnau)

1925 Pietro, der Korsar (Robison); Wege zu Kraft und Schönheit (Prager); Liebe macht blind (Mendes); Tartüff (Tartuffe) (Murnau); Ein Walzertraum (The Waltz Dream) (Berger); Der Geiger von Florenz (Czinner); Variété (Variety) (Dupont)

1926 Metropolis (Lang); Manon Lescaut (Robison); Faust (Murnau)

1927 Hotel Imperial (Stiller) (+ co-sc); Barbed Wire (Lee)

1928 Spione (Spies) (Lang); Ungarische Rhapsodie (Hungarian Rhapsody) (Schwarz); Heimkehr (Homecoming) (May)

1929 Melodie des Herzens (Melody of the Heart) (Schwarz); Die unterbare Lüge der Nina Poetrowna (The Wonderful Lies of Nina Petrovna) (Schwarz); Die Frau im Mond (The Woman in the Moon) (Lang); Asphalt (May) 1930 Liebeswalzer (Thiele); Die Drei von der Tankstelle (Thiele); Die blau [blue] Engel (The Blue Angel) (von Sternberg); The Temporary Widow (Ucicky—English version of Hoksposkurs); Einbrecher (Schwarz)
1931 Ihre Hoheit befehlt (Schwarz); Voruntersuchung (Inquest) (Siodmak); Bomben auf Monte Carlo (Monte Carlo Madness) (Charell); Der Kongress tanz (The Congress Dances) (Charell); Stürme der Leidenschaft (Storms of Passion) (Siodmak)
1932 F.P. I. antwortet nicht (F.P.I Does Not Answer) (Hartl); Ein blonder Traum (A Blonde Dream) (Martin); Ich bei Tag und Du bei Nacht (Early to Bed) (Berger); Quick (Siodmak); Happy Ever After (Martin and Stevenson)
1933 The Only Girl (Heart Song) (Hollaender); On a volé un homme (Ophüls); Lilion (Lang)
1934 Music in the Air (May)
1937 Farewell Again (Troopship) (Whefan); Fire over England (Howard)
1938 Vessel of Wrath (The Beachcomber) (+ d); St. Martin’s Lane (The Sidewalks of London) (Whefan)
1939 Jamaica Inn (Hitchcock); The Hunchback of Notre Dame (Dieterle)
1940 Dance, Girl, Dance (Arzner); They Knew What They Wanted (Kanin)
1941 Zwischen Gestern und Morgen (Braun); . . . und über uns der Himmel (von Baky)
1948 Lang ist der Weg (Ferdesdrof and Goldstein); Morituri (York)
1952 Illusion in Moll (Jugert); Nachts auf den Strassen (Jugert)
1954 Ein Liebesgeschichte (Jugert)
1955 Kinder, Mütter, und ein General (Benedek)

Publications

By POMMER: articles—

‘Film parlant, film muet,’” in La Revue des Savants (Paris), no. 10, 1931.
Film Weekly (London), 27 February 1937.
Film Weekly (London), 10 December 1938.

On POMMER: book—

On POMMER: articles—

Sight and Sound (London), April-June 1952.
Filmblätter, no. 13, 1959.
Film Français (Paris), 20 May 1966.
EPD Film (Frankfurt), March 1989.
EPD Film (Frankfurt), March 1989.
Film und Fernsehen (Berlin), November 1990.

* * *

Erich Pommer was not only Germany’s greatest film producer but one of the most versatile of international showmen. His career chronicles the history of European cinema, and while a great many of the films he supervised appropriately fall into the category of motion picture entertainment, he was responsible for having shaped the artistic professionalism of the German cinema during the 1920s and 1930s and for closely supervising the creation of numerous cinematic masterpieces such as The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari, The Last Laugh, Metropolis, Variety, and The Blue Angel. Pommer was extremely knowledgeable about all aspects of the motion picture industry; however, his most outstanding talents were his keen sense of story values and his ability to nurture young, creative, and frequently temperamental talents like Fritz Lang, Josef von Sternberg, Emil Jannings, Carl Mayer, Marlene Dietrich, and Charles Laughton.

The debonair, charming young Pommer began his career in films in the sales department of the Berlin branch of Gaumont in 1909. After being wounded in the German army in the First World War, Pommer founded his own production company, Decla, which turned out a series of Sherlock Holmes films starring Albin Neuss. Among the new talent Pommer nurtured at Decla were Fritz Lang, who directed Die Spinnen, and Carl Mayer, who co-scripted The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari. Pommer had a shrewd sense of what the public would accept, and it was at his insistence, over the objections of the writers, that the framing story was added to Caligari. This device explained that the machinations of the evil hypnotist and his somnambulist were a “madman’s delusions.” Pommer’s demand for this change resulted in this landmark Expressionistic film reaching a far wider audience. By 1921, Pommer merged his Decla company with UFA, and it was here he produced his greatest German films and helped develop that studio into Europe’s finest and most efficient production center. His output is impressive, and includes a series of landmark films: Phantom (Murnau); Dr. Mabuse der Spieler (Lang), Die Nibelungen (Lang), Michael (Dreyer), The Last Laugh (Murnau), for which Pommer insisted upon a happy ending, Metropolis (Lang), Tartuffe (Murnau), The Blue Angel (von Sternberg), and Variety (Dupont) and The Waltz Dream (Berger), his two biggest commercial successes.

On 31 January 1933, the day that Hitler became chancellor of the Third Reich, Pommer resigned from UFA and joined Fox-Europa in Paris, where his first production was Max Ophüls’s On a volé un homme. He then hired Lang to direct Lilion, which introduced him to a young composer named Franz Wachsman (Pommer later brought him to the U.S. as Franz Waxman). In 1934, Fox’s Sidney Kent brought Pommer to America and set him up with his own production unit, where he produced Music in the Air starring Gloria Swanson and directed by Joe May. When Fox merged with 20th Century a year later Pommer was out of a job, so he went to England where he signed to produce two films for Alexander Korda.

Fire over England starred the young Laurence Olivier and Vivien Leigh and was directed by William K. Howard; Troopship starred Leslie Howard and was directed by Tim Whelan.

Pommer next formed another company called Mayflower Pictures in association with Charles Laughton and had a releasing deal through United Artists. Laughton’s four films for Mayflower contain some of his most interesting work: The Beachcomber, The Sidewalks of London, Jamaica Inn, and The Hunchback of Notre Dame. For Jamaica Inn, Pommer discovered a 16-year-old lass named Maureen O’Hara and signed her to a personal 7-year contract. He used her again in Hunchback and after dissolving his company he sold her contract to RKO. Also for RKO, he produced They Knew What They Wanted, starring Laughton and directed by Garson Kanin. Poor health took its toll on Pommer’s career during the early 1940s and he retired. In 1946, he returned to Germany under the auspices of the U.S. government to help restore the war-torn German film industry. He produced several films there in the 1950s, but none was of the caliber of his earlier successes.

Pommer was a stern, Teutonic disciplinarian but he knew the question every exceptional producer must ask—‘‘What will the public accept?’’ He angered many of his creative artists by insisting upon a tight production rein, yet most of his colleagues recognized his success. Carl Dreyer recalled: ‘‘For the conscientious film director, Pommer was the ideal producer. Once a decision was made on the major problems, such as script, casting, sets, etc., he would not interfere with the director’s work.’’

—Ronald Bowers

PONTI, Carlo

Films as Producer:

1941 Sissignora (Poppoli); Piccolo mondo antico (Old-Fashioned World) (Soldati)
1942 Giacoma l’idealista (Lattuada)
1944 Due lettere anonime (Camerini)
1945 La freccia nel fianco (Lattuada)
1946 Un Americano in vacanza (A Yank in Rome) (Zampa); Vivere in Peace (To Live in Peace) (Zampa); La primula bianca (Bragaglia)
1947 I miserabili (Freda); Gioventù perduta (Lost Youth) (Germi)
1948 Senza pietà (Without Pity) (Lattuada)
1949 Il malino del Po (The Mill on the Po) (Lattuada); Fuga in Francia (Soldati); Campane a martello (Children of Change) (Zampa); Quel bandito sono io! (Soldati); L’imperatore di Capri (Comencini)
1950 Cuori senza fontiere (The White Line) (Zampa); Toti’ cerca casa (Toto Wants a Home) (Steno and Monicelli); Vita di cani (Steno and Monicelli); E arrivato il cavaliere (Steno and Monicelli); Il brigante Musolini (Camerini)
1951 Sensualità (Fracassi)
1952 Europa ’51 (Rossellini); Anna (Lattuada)
1953 Anni facili (Easy Years) (Zampa)
1954 Un giorno in preitura (A Day in Court) (Steno) (co-exec); Un Americano a Roma (Steno); La strada (Fellini); Ulisse (Ulysses) (Camerini)
1955 Attila flagello di dio (Attila the Hun) (Francisci); Ragazze d’oggi (Zampa); L’ultimo amante (De Benedetti); Mambo (Rossen); L’oro di Napoli (Gold of Naples) (De Sica); La donna del fiume (Soldati); La bella mugnaia (The Miller’s Beautiful Daughter) (Camerini)
1956 War and Peace (K. Vidor); La risaia (Rice Girl) (Matarazzo); Il ferriero (The Railroad Man) (Germi); La diciottenni (Mattioli); Peccato di castità (Franciolini); Guendalina (Lattuada); Le notti di Cabiria (Cabiria) (Fellini)
1957 Nata di marzo (Pietrangeli); Susanna tutta panna (Steno); Femmine tre volte (Steno); Marisa la civetta (Bolognini); Camping (Zeffirelli)
1959 The Black Orchid (Ritt); That Kind of Woman (Lumet)
1960 Heller in Pink Tights (Cukor); Lettere di una novizia (Rita) (Lattuada); La cociara (Two Women) (De Sica); A Breath of Scandal (Olympia) (Curtiz)
1961 Lola (Demy); Une Femme est une femme (A Woman Is a Woman) (Godard)
1962 L’isola di Arturo (Arturo’s Island) (Damiani); Cleo de 5 a 7 (Cleo from 5 to 7) (Varda) (co-exec); L’Oeil du malin (The Third Lover) (Chabrol); Boccaccio ’79 (Fellini and others); I sequestrati di Altona (The Condemned of Altona) (De Sica)
1963 Landru (Bluebeard) (Chabrol); Le Doulos (Doulos—the Finger Man) (Melville); Le Mépris (Contempt) (Godard);
La noia (The Empty Canvas) (Damiani); Ieri, oggi, e domani (Yesterday, Today, and Tomorrow) (De Sica); Les Carabinitiers (Goderd)

1964 Matrimonio all’italiana (Marriage Italian Style) (De Sica); La donna scimmia (The Ape Woman) (Ferreri)

1965 Operation Crossbow (Anderson); Casanova ‘70 (Monicelli); Doctor Zhivago (Lean); La decima vittima (The Tenth Victim) (Petri); Lady L (Ustinov); Oggi, domani, e dopodomani (De Filippo—English-language version Kiss the Other Sheik, additional scenes directed by Salce; section directed by Ferreri released as The Man with the Balloons)

1966 Blow-Up (Antonioni); Ostre sledované vlaky (Closely Watched Trains) (Menzel)

1967 La ragazza e il generale (The Girl and the General) (Festa Campanile); C’era una volta (More than a Miracle) (Rossi); Smashing Time (Davis); Questi fantasmi (Ghost—Italian Style) (Castellani); La Vingt-cinquième Heure (The 25th Hour; La 25e Heure) (Verneuil); A Countess from Hong Kong (Chaplin)

1968 Gli amanti (A Place for Lovers) (De Sica); O Slavnosti a hostech (A Report on the Party and the Guests) (Nemec)

1969 I girasoli (Sunflower) (De Sica)

1970 Zabriskie Point (Antonioni)

1971 La moglie del prete (The Priest’s Wife) (Risi); La mortadella (Lady Liberty) (Monicelli)

1972 Che? (What?) (Polanski); Rappresaglia (Massacre in Rome) (Cosmatos)

1973 Bianco, rosso, e . . . . (White Sister) (Lattuada); I corpi presentano tracce di violenza carnale (Torso) (Martino); Il viaggio (The Voyage) (De Sica)

1974 Le Testament (Jury of One; The Verdict) (Cayatte); Brief Encounter (Bridges); Poopsie (Gun Moll) (Capitanii); Carne per Frankenstein (Andy Warhol’s Frankenstein) (Morrissey); Dracula cerca sangue di vergine e . . . mori di sete!!! (Andy Warhol’s Dracula) (Morrisey and Dawson)

1975 L’infermiera (The Nurse; I Will If You Will) (Rossatì); Professione: Reporter (The Passenger) (Antonioni); Le Baby-Sitter (Wanted: Babysitter) (Clément)

1976 Bratti, sporchi, cattivi (Down and Dirty) (Scola)

1977 The Cassandra Crossing (Cosmatos); Una giornata particolare (A Special Day) (Scola)

1989 Running Away; Sabato, Domenica e Lunedì (Saturday, Sunday and Monday) (Wertmüller)

1991 Oscar (Landis)

1998 Liv (Edoardo Ponti)

Publications

By PONTI: articles—

On PONTI: article—

* * *

Although he produced some light comedies in the early 1940s, Carlo Ponti’s reputation as a producer fortuitously coincided with the rise of Italian neorealism from 1943 to 1950. He produced serious films by Germi, Lattuada, and Zampa, including A Tank in Rome, which established the latter as a major director. In 1950 he joined with Dino De Laurentiis to form a partnership that lasted until 1957, when both men went on to produce films independently. While partners, they produced important films by directors who would achieve international reputations—Roberto Rossellini’s Europa ’51, Federico Fellini’s La strada, and his Cabiria—as well as the critically acclaimed War and Peace by veteran director King Vidor, and Mambo by Robert Rossen. Following the breakup of the partnership, Ponti became more of an international producer. American directors George Cukor, Sidney Lumet, Martin Ritt, and Michael Curtiz had films produced by Ponti during the 1960s; each film starred Sophia Loren, Ponti’s wife since 1957.

Although Ponti had encouraged other Italian film actresses, among them Gina Lollobrigida, Ponti’s career after 1957 was, for the most part, tied closely to Sophia Loren. She had a bit part in Anna, a Ponti-De Laurentiis production, and subsequently appeared regularly in Ponti productions, although her best film was Vittorio De Sica’s Two Women, which won Loren an Oscar in an uncharacteristic performance. Loren, who by her own admission, had played in “confectionery parts” during her “English-speaking film odyssey,” was induced by De Sica to play the role of the mother after Anna Magnani not only refused it, but sarcastically suggested that Loren, then aged 26, should play the mother rather than her intended role as the daughter. Loren has suggested that before the film she was a “performer,” but the film made her an “actress.” Unfortunately for Loren, her post-Two Women career under Ponti’s guidance was, with the exception of A Countess from Hong Kong and A Special Day, mostly comprised of less-than-memorable Italian sex comedies and ponderous Mann epics.

Many of Ponti’s films made without Loren after 1960 were Franco-Italian films which were noted for big stars, large budgets, lush settings, and romantic sentimentality, but he also produced some remarkable films by major directors: Godard’s political films and Antonioni’s Blow-Up, Zabriskie Point, and The Passenger. In addition, there were films by Agnès Varda, Claude Chabrol, De Sica, and Polanski—there were few major directors who did not work with Ponti. During this period he also produced David Lean’s Doctor Zhivago, a popular award-winning film ideally suited to Ponti’s sensibility. After 1970 Ponti produced few quality films, with the notable exception of The Passenger, and the careers of Ponti and Loren were in decline. His work included a film for television, Paul Morrissey’s films about Andy Warhol’s Frankenstein and Dracula, and some unsuccessful attempts in 1977 to produce some Brazilian films. At about the same time he and Loren came under investigation about currency transfers in Italy. Ponti left Italy but was convicted; Loren was acquitted of the charges.

In 1981 Italy dropped his arrest warrant but left some charges pending. His legal problems occupied much of his time, and between 1977 and 1988, he did not produce any films. Of the three works he produced between 1988 and 1991, only one—directed by Lina Wertmüller, herself past her filmmaking peak—is noteworthy. During his lifetime, however, he produced major films by major directors, helped bring Italian and French films international recognition, and guided the career of a prolific film performer. His career essentially has reflected the rise of neorealism and the French New Wave—in fact, he helped develop both movements. His influence as a producer... of Italian films was second only to that of De Laurentiis, and his is a lasting contribution to international cinema.

—Thomas L. Erskine

POPESCU-GOPO, Ion

Films as Director (Animation):

1950  The Naughty Duck; The Bee and the Dove
1952  Two Little Rabbits; The Mischievous Hedgehog
1954  Marinica
1955  Marinica’s Bodkin
1957  A Short History
1958  The Seven Arts
1960  Homo Sapiens
1962  Allo! Hallo! Alo!
1966–67  Pill (2 parts)
1969  The Kiss
1972  The Hour Glass
1974  Intermezzo
1975  One Two Three
1976  Study Opus I—Man
1977  Infinity
1979  Three Apples
1983  Quo Vadis Homo Sapiens
1985  Ramasagul; The Sorcerer’s Apprentice

Films as Director (Live-Action):

1953  Fetita mincinoasa (The Little Liar)
1954  O musca cu bani (A Fly with Money)
1961  S-a furat o bomba (A Bomb Was Stolen)
1963  Pasi spre lune (Steps to the Moon)
1965  De-as fi Harap Alb (The White Moor)
1967  Orasul meu (My City)
1968  Sancta Simplicitas

Publications

By POPESCU-GOPO: book—

Filme Filme Filme, Bucharest, 1963, as All about Film, Bucharest, 1963.

By POPESCU-GOPU: articles—

Revista del Cinematografo (Rome), August 1964.
Cinema International (London), no. 18, 1968.
Cinema (Bucharest), April 1983.

On POPESCU-GOPO: articles—

Deutsche Filmkunst, no. 9, 1960.
Film Rutan, no. 3, 1963.
Romanian Film (Bucharest), 1968.
Cinema (Bucharest), July 1976.
Film a Doba (Prague), July 1985.

* * *

Ion Popescu-Gopo made witty animated films, all of which have a dual philosophical content. His main character, Homo Sapiens, figured in most of his films, and was a reflection of himself, almost a self-portrait. On the surface, Homo Sapiens appears to be a lost creature, an innocent party, not knowing how and why he came about. But as the plot develops he adjusts his outlook and attains the upperhand. Along the way, the oddity and the drollness of existence is emphasized. It was enterprising and quite unusual, at the time, to employ only one main character in European animation as Popescu-Gopo did for 25 years, with his Homo Sapiens character. This was at a time when such trends only existed in TV series mass-produced by the Japanese and the Hollywood type of animated cartoons. For his treatment, as well as for his simple graphic style, he became an internationally known artist whose films were regularly chosen for international festivals.

Eventually, after several live-action movies to his credit, it emerged that he was not as entirely comfortable handling live actors and human situations as he was with animated cartoons. He returned to animation but the experience gained in live-action production had enriched and expanded his skills as a filmmaker even further. The Sorcerer’s Apprentice, using the combined technique of live action and puppet animation, shows evidence of his early experiences as a sculptor. The location is Popescu-Gopo’s own studio. The live character is Popescu-Gopo himself, watched by his alter-ego, the wooden puppet. While Popescu-Gopo is away from the studio having tea, the puppet comes to life and takes over the studio activities, but without any coordination or sense of order. By the time Popescu-Gopo returns everything is chaos and the studio is ruined. The situation is handled beautifully and the film could be considered as a small masterpiece.

When asked what was his most precious wish for the future, Popescu-Gopo’s reply was: “That the Martians should see my film Homo Sapiens.”

—John Halas

---

By POPESCU-GOPO: articles—

Revista del Cinematografo (Rome), August 1964.
Cinema International (London), no. 18, 1968.
Cinema (Bucharest), April 1983.

On POPESCU-GOPO: articles—

Deutsche Filmkunst, no. 9, 1960.
Film Rutan, no. 3, 1963.
Romanian Film (Bucharest), 1968.
Cinema (Bucharest), July 1976.
Film a Doba (Prague), July 1985.

* * *

Ion Popescu-Gopo made witty animated films, all of which have a dual philosophical content. His main character, Homo Sapiens, figured in most of his films, and was a reflection of himself, almost a self-portrait. On the surface, Homo Sapiens appears to be a lost creature, an innocent party, not knowing how and why he came about. But as the plot develops he adjusts his outlook and attains the upperhand. Along the way, the oddity and the drollness of existence is emphasized. It was enterprising and quite unusual, at the time, to employ only one main character in European animation as Popescu-Gopo did for 25 years, with his Homo Sapiens character. This was at a time when such trends only existed in TV series mass-produced by the Japanese and the Hollywood type of animated cartoons. For his treatment, as well as for his simple graphic style, he became an internationally known artist whose films were regularly chosen for international festivals.

Eventually, after several live-action movies to his credit, it emerged that he was not as entirely comfortable handling live actors and human situations as he was with animated cartoons. He returned to animation but the experience gained in live-action production had enriched and expanded his skills as a filmmaker even further. The Sorcerer’s Apprentice, using the combined technique of live action and puppet animation, shows evidence of his early experiences as a sculptor. The location is Popescu-Gopo’s own studio. The live character is Popescu-Gopo himself, watched by his alter-ego, the wooden puppet. While Popescu-Gopo is away from the studio having tea, the puppet comes to life and takes over the studio activities, but without any coordination or sense of order. By the time Popescu-Gopo returns everything is chaos and the studio is ruined. The situation is handled beautifully and the film could be considered as a small masterpiece.

When asked what was his most precious wish for the future, Popescu-Gopo’s reply was: “That the Martians should see my film Homo Sapiens.”

—John Halas
PORTER, Cole

Films as Composer and Lyricist:

1929 The Battle of Paris (Florey) (songs)
1936 Born to Dance (Del Ruth)
1937 Rosalie (Van Dyke)
1940 Broadway Melody of 1940 (Taurog)
1941 You’ll Never Get Rich (Lanfield)
1943 Something to Shout About (Ratoff)

1948 The Pirate (Minnelli)
1957 High Society (Walters); Les Girls (Cukor); Silk Stockings (Mamoulian)
1958 Aladdin (Nelson)

Publications

By PORTER: books—

On PORTER: books—

Cuellar, Carol, editor, Porter on Broadway, Miami, 1995.
Kimball, Robert, You’re Sensational: Cole Porter in the 20s, 40s & 50s, Bloomington, 1999.

On PORTER: articles—

* * *

Cole Porter
Urbane, witty, incisive, and, sometimes, sentimental, Cole Porter’s music brought a true sophistication to the Hollywood movie musical. Versatile as well as stylish, he provided tailor-made material for a wide range of talents, from Fred Astaire to Ethel Merman to Bing Crosby.

Porter was born on a farm near the town of Peru, Indiana. Heir to a large fortune, he studied at Yale and entered Harvard Law School which he soon abandoned for music. Porter was equally talented as a composer and a lyricist, allowing him to work alone. He struggled to establish himself in the New York theater during the 1920s, finally breaking through in 1929 with his score for Fifty Million Frenchmen. The 1930s followed with an indefatigable series of distinctive scores and hit tunes.

His first few adaptations on film were less remarkable. His songs “They All Fall in Love” and “Here Comes the Bandwagon” were included in an early talking picture, The Battle of Paris; Warners’ screen version of Fifty Million Frenchmen did not use Porter’s lyrics, and his music was reduced to background instruments. Porter’s score for The Gay Divorcee, retitled The Gay Divorcee, did not fare much better; only “Night and Day” survived from the original.

It was not until Porter actually moved to Hollywood in 1935 to write a complete score for Born to Dance that he became significantly involved in writing for motion pictures. From then until his death in 1964, Porter continued to divide his time between New York and Los Angeles, spending four to six months each year on the west coast.

Porter began his Hollywood career in earnest at MGM, and although he worked for several important studios, MGM’s lavish budgets and tasteful pictures gave Porter’s music and lyrics their proper setting. Likewise, Louis B. Mayer provided Porter with budgets and tasteful pictures gave Porter’s music and lyrics their proper setting. Likewise, Louis B. Mayer provided Porter with a working relationship which respected the composer’s talent and sensibilities.

Some of the films containing Porter’s songs have faded in relative obscurity, such as Born to Dance or Rosalie, but the melodies in them (“I’ve Got You under My Skin” and “In the Still of the Night”) continue to be as fresh and provocative as when they first appeared. And while the censorship which prevailed in Hollywood during Porter’s lifetime frequently forced changes in his original lyrics, they seemed to survive the limitations, to emerge equally biting and remarkably clever.

Porter’s cinematic successes and failures proved unpredictable. “Don’t Fence Me In,” an unpretentious cowboy song which was introduced by Roy Rogers in Hollywood Canteen, sold millions of copies, while the film version of Kiss Me Kate, Porter’s longest-running Broadway show, was a disappointment at the box office.

Porter’s music also inspired several classic dance sequences—particularly, Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers’ “Night and Day” (The Gay Divorcee); Astaire and Eleanor Powell in “Begin the Beguine” (Broadway Melody of 1940); and Gene Kelly’s ‘tou de force’ “The Pirate Ballet” (The Pirate).

Throughout his life, Porter promoted entertaining stories of his heroic days in the French Foreign Legion and of his carefree life on the Riviera, which were as much fiction as fact. So, in 1945 when Warner Bros. produced a film biography of Porter’s life which indulged in more than the usual literary license, Porter could hardly complain. Censorship prevented the studio from addressing his homosexuality, so it compensated by overly romanticizing his marriage to the society beauty Linda Lee. The casting of Cary Grant as Porter and the inclusion of an impressive collection of 14 of his already famous songs helped make the film a box-office success. Originally, the producer intended to cast various celebrities performing the numbers they made famous, but, in the end, only Monty Woolley (Porter’s close friend) and Mary Martin, recreating “My Heart Belongs to Daddy,” were engaged to play themselves.

The composer projected two distinct images to the public—Cole Porter the glamorous, naughty bon vivant, and Cole Porter the diligent, prolific worker. Whatever engaged him, Porter seemed to attack it with an unquenchable zest for living. In the fall of 1937, however, his life dramatically changed when a fall from a horse crushed both legs, resulting in over thirty operations, and the eventual amputation of his right leg. Although his career was fully resumed by the end of 1938, Porter suffered intense pain the remainder of his life. Bouts of depression became so severe that he underwent electroshock therapy. Still, his music continued to express unmistakable vitality and vigor.

—Joanne L. Yerrick

PREISNER, Zbigniew

Composer. Nationality: Polish. Born: Bielsko-Biała, Poland, 20 May, 1955. Education: Studied history and philosophy in Krakow, private music studies. Career: Sometimes credited as Van den Budemayer. Composed music for Dekalog (The Decalogue), TV series, 1986–88. Awards: Silver Berlin Bear, for the music to The Island on Bird Street, Berlin International Film Festival, 1997; Best Music, for Elisa, César Awards, 1996; Best Music, for Trois couleurs: Rouge, César Awards, 1995; Best Music, for Olivier, Olivier, The Secret Garden, and Trois couleurs: Bleu, Los Angeles Film Critics Association Awards, 1993; Best Music, for Damage, Los Angeles Film Critics Association Awards, 1992; Best Music, for Europa, Europa, Double Life of Véronique, and At Play in the Fields of the Lord, Los Angeles Film Critics Association Awards, 1991; Award for outstanding achievement in the presentation of Polish Culture abroad, Minister of Foreign Affairs, Poland, 1992; Honorary member of the French Film Academy, since 1994.

Films as Composer:

1981 Prognoza pogody (The Weather Forecast) (Krauze)
1985 Bez konca (No End) (Kieslowski); Przez dotyk (By Touch) (Lazarkiewicz)
1986 Ucieczka (Escape) (Szadkowski)
1987 Kocham Kino (I Love Cinema) (Lazarkiewicz); The Lullabye (Sevella)
1988 Zabic ksiedza (To Kill a Priest) (Holland); Krótki film o zabijaniu (A Short Film About Killing) (Kieslowski); Krótki film o milosci (A Short Film About Love) (Kieslowski)
1989 Ostatni dzwonek (The Last Schoolbell) (Lazarkiewicz)
1990 Hitlerjunge Salomon (Europa Europa) (Holland)
1991 La Double vie de Véronique (The Double Life of Véronique) (Podwóje zycie Weroniki) (Kieslowski); At Play in the Fields of the Lord (Babenco); Eminent Domain (Irvin)
1992 Olivier, Olivier (Holland); Zwolnieni z zycia (Dismissed from Life) (Krzyzstek)
1993 O Fio do Horizonte (The Line of the Horizon) (Lopes); Trois couleurs: Bleu (Three Colors: Blue; Trzy kolory: Niebieski)
Zbigniew Preisner is Poland’s foremost film music composer and one of the leading film music figures worldwide. Largely self-taught in music, he credits as his major influences Paganini and Sibelius, along with the members of the Polish Romantic Movement in music. Preisner’s style is easily recognized as he tends to employ a range of classical Baroque elements in a post-modern blend of sounds that emphasizes melody and polyphony.

Along with screenwriter Krzysztof Piesiewicz, Preisner was the closest collaborator of famous Polish director Krzysztof Kieslowski for almost a decade. The two met in 1981, at the time when Preisner was making his debut as a composer working on the Polish satire Weather Forecast (directed by Antony Krauze). Their meeting resulted in an extensive collaboration over the next fifteen years. Preisner wrote the scores for Kieslowski’s No End (1984), for the acclaimed TV series The Decalogue (1986–1988, as well as for the film spin-offs of series number 5 and 6, the award-winning A Short Film about Killing and A Short Film about Love), for the award-winning The Double Life of Veronique (1991), and for the trilogy Three Colors: Blue (1993), White (1994) and Red (1994). Preisner also wrote the score for Krzysztof Wierzbicki’s biographical documentary Krzysztof Kieslowski: I’m So-So... (1995).

Preisner is a proponent of the auteurist view of the film composer. He is known for working on the score closely with the director. He takes part in the development of the project as early as scripting and storyboarding, as well as in post-production. To him, the composer, along with the cinematographer and the screenwriter, is one of the most important collaborators of the director and has a decisive impact on the overall aesthetic of the final product. This conviction is revealed in his long lasting commitment to cultivating the tasteful and memorable musical scores of Kieslowski’s films, best revealed in The Double Life of Veronique, a film which, even though mostly financed by France, was a major international success for the Polish school of filmmaking. For Veronique Preisner wrote a concerto, which he mystified and presented as the work of Dutch composer Van den Budemayer, hence the alias he continues using occasionally. The Three Colors films, which won numerous international awards, brought the next major success for Kieslowski and his team of collaborators, including Preisner. Even though after the Three Colors trilogy Kieslowski declared an official retirement from cinema in 1995, he was planning a return. His next project was supposed to be a trilogy tentatively called Heaven, Hell, and Purgatory, and Preisner was to work on the musical score. These plans were abruptly interrupted by the director’s death on 13 March 1996.

In the early 1990s, Kieslowski and Preisner, along with screenwriter Krzysztof Piesiewicz, had also discussed a stage project, which was supposed to be a multi-media performance, combining operatic singing and a mystery play. The intention had been to premiere the event on the Acropolis in Athens, and to eventually develop a further series of performances to be scheduled in selected locations around the world. The untimely death of Kieslowski, however, put an end to these plans as well. Nonetheless, Preisner continued working on the music he had started writing for the project, and it developed into a unique musical opus, combining singing and instrumental music. Requiem for My Friend (1998), the first part of which is dedicated to Kieslowski’s memory, featured the singing of remarkable Polish soprano Elzbieta Towarnicka, whose voice had been a highlight of Preisner’s scores in Veronique, Blue, and Red. The Requiem was recorded with the Warsaw Symphony Orchestra and Warsaw’s Chamber Choir and premiered in 1998.

Besides his close collaboration with Kieslowski, Preisner also worked with Agnieszka Holland, an internationally acclaimed director of Polish background. He wrote the scores for her To Kill a Priest, Europa, Europa, Olivier, Olivier, and The Secret Garden. He maintains long-standing working relationship with Polish feminist director Magdalena Lazarkiewicz for whom he worked on Przec dotyk (By Touch) and Ostatni dzwonek (The Last Schoolbell). More and more frequently, as his fame grows, Preisner works internationally. He has written music for directors worldwide, such as French-American Louis Malle’s Fatal (Damage), British Charles Sturridge’s Fairy Tale: A True Story, and Brazilian Hector Babenco’s At Play in the Fields of the Lord and Corazón iluminado (Foolish Heart). Preisner continues working on musical scores for international directors and in Poland.

—Dina Iordanova

PRÉVERT, Jacques

Dienne, 1925; 2) Janine Tricotet, 1947. Career: 1915–20—worked in Bon Marché and other stores in Paris; worked for Argus de la Presse, 1921, and for the publicity agency Damour, 1930; author of plays, verse, songs, and, from 1932, film scripts; 1936—began ten-year collaboration with the director Marcel Carné. Died: In Omonville-la-Petite, 11 April 1977.

Films as Writer:

1932 L’Affaire est dans le sac (It’s in the Bag) (P. Prévert) (+ ro); Ténèriffre (Y. Allégret—short)
1933 Ciboulette (Autant-Lara); Comme une carpe (Heyman—short)
1934 L’Hôtel du libre échange (M. Allégret)
1935 Un Oiseau rare (Pottier)
1936 My Partner Mr. Davis (The Mysterious Mr. Davis) (Autant-Lara); Jeunesse d’abord (Stelli); Jenny (Carné); Mantonnet (Sti); Le Crime de Monsieur Lange (Pottier)
1937 Drôle de drame (Bizarre Bizarre) (Carné)
1938 Quai des brumes (Port of Shadows) (Carné); Ernest le rebelle (C’était moi) (Christian-Jaque)
1939 Le Jour se lève (Daybreak) (Carné)
1940 Remorques (Stormy Waters) (Grémillon); Le Soleil a toujours raison (Billon)
1941 Les Visiteurs du soir (The Devil’s Envoys) (Carné)
1942 Lumière d’été (Grémillon); Adieu Leonard (P. Prévert)
1944 Sortilèges (The Bellman) (Christian-Jaque)
1945 Les Enfants du paradis (Children of Paradise) (Carné)
1946 Les Portes de la nuit (Gates of the Night) (Carné); Aubervilliers (Lotar—short); Voyage-Surprise (P. Prévert); Une Partie de campagne (Renoir)
1947 L’Arche de Noé (Jacques)
1948 Le Petit Soldat (Grimault—anim)
1949 Les Amants de Véronne (The Lovers of Verona) (Cayatte)
1951 Bim, le petit âne (Lamorisse—short) (commentary)
1956 Notre-Dame de Paris (The Hunchback of Notre Dame) (DeLannoy)
1958 La Faim du monde (Grimault—anim); Paris mange son pain (P. Prévert—short)
1959 Paris la belle (P. Prévert—revised version of short produced 1928)
1960 Les Primitifs du XIII (Bilbeaud—short)
1964 Les Amours célèbres (Boisrond)
1966 A la belle étoile (P. Prévert)
1980 Le Roi et l’oiseau (The King and the Bird) (Grimault—incorporates footage from repudiated film La Bergère et le ramoneur, 1952)

Publications

By PRÉVERT: poetry—

C’est à Saint-Paul-de-Vence, Paris, 1949.

By PRÉVERT: other books—

Enfants, 1945.
Le Rendez-vous (ballet), 1945.
Le Petit Lion (ballet), 1947.
L’Opéra de la lune, Paris, 1952.
Bim, le petit âne, Paris, 1951, as Bim, the Little Donkey, London, 1957.
Arbres, 1976.
Le Quai des brumes (script) in Avant-Scène (Paris), 15 October 1979.

On PRÉVERT: books—
Amengual, Barthélémy, Prévert, du cinéma, Algiers, 1952.
Greet, Anne Hyde, Jacques Prévert’s Word Games, 1968.

On PRÉVERT: articles—
Leenhardt, Roger, in Fontaine (Paris), May 1945.
Sight and Sound (London), Winter 1946–47.
Queveil, Jean, in Mercure de France (Paris), 1 June 1949.
Cinémonde (Paris), 7 August 1953.
Film Comment (New York), November-December 1981.
“Prévert Issue” of Filmkritik (Munich), August 1983.
Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1988.
Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Summer 1991.
Télérama (Paris), 21 February 1996.

* * *

For convinced auteurists, Jacques Prévert comes as something of a stumbling block. With Prévert as screenwriter, Marcel Carné directed several supreme classics of French cinema; when the two split up, Carné sank into obscure mediocrity. A bas Carné, then, cold and formal craftsman helplessly limited by his material, and vive Prévert, true begetter of Le Jour se lève and Les Enfants du paradis? And yet—if Prévert scripted Carné’s greatest successes, he also wrote Les Portes de la nuit, the disastrous postwar flop from which neither of their careers ever recovered. And if Carné minus Prévert looks flat and uninspired, Prévert’s scripts for other directors—with one or two exceptions—rarely attained the level of his best work with Carné.

Barthélémy Amengual split Prévert the scriptwriter into three periods: there was Prévert rosse (a tough word to translate—“offensive” or “bloody-minded” might get near it), Prévert noir, and Prévert rosse. Prévert rosse was the subversive, tossing surrealistic firecrackers under the wheels of bourgeois ceremonial. Prévert noir was the poet of melancholy, the fatalistic whose doomed lovers succumbed to the machinations of Destiny. And Prévert rose purveyed charming, sentimental fables in which oppression is overthrown by the forces of love and good-hearted innocence. The Carné films were evidently the work of Prévert noir—with the exception of Drôle de drame, seen by Amengual as the last fling of Prévert rosse.

Prévert’s roots were deep in the interwar leftist avant-garde. He was a member of the Surrealist group—until expelled by Breton for irreverence—and of the agit-prop theatre Groupe Octobre. His Marxism, though, owed nearly as much to Groucho as to Karl. The same delight in puns and wordplay, in jokes and fantasy deployed in the early films—Drôle de drame, far more Prévert than Carné, and L’Affaire est dans le sac, first of the three directed by his brother Pierre, and Prévert’s own favourite of all his films.

For his only completed feature with Renoir, Prévert rechanneled his exuberance into a more controlled political stance. Le Crime de Monsieur Lange, witty, touching, and bright with the new-found hope of the Front Populaire, shows both Renoir and Prévert operating near the top of their form, and arouses regret that two men with so much in common worked together so little. Too much in common, perhaps. “It’s wonderful, but it’s left me nothing to do,” commented Renoir on Prévert’s script for Une Partie de campagne—which therefore remained the most perfect of all incomplete movies.
The necessary creative tension seems to have been more fruitfully present in the relationship between Prévert and Carné, spurred them both into producing their finest work. In Quai des brumes, Le Jour se lève, Les Visiteurs du soir and Les Enfants du paradis, the smoky, shimmering malaise and colloquial lyricism of Prévert’s scripts meld with Carné’s cool technique and superb handling of actors into some of the richest masterpieces of romantic cinema. Their bittersweet fatalism, distillation of the political mood of the period, has sometimes been seen as imposed on Prévert by Carné’s pessimism. “Carné never really believed in happiness,” Ivo Jarosy asserted; “Prévert believed in nothing else.” An oversimplification, perhaps. But certainly the outcome of the Prévertian eternal triangle—a man, a woman, and Fate—tended to be less invariably doom-laden in the hands of other directors, as for example Grémillon (Remorques, Lumière d’été).

Even at his darkest, though, Prévert never indulged in the unrelied, misanthropic pessimism that often distorted the work of Duvivier or Clouzot. For him the power of friendship, of art, above all of love could always transcend the forces of oppression, and even ultimately death. This Tristan-and-Isolde view of love as transfigurating, eternal, and self-justifying can slide at times perilously close to mush, as in Visiteurs du soir’s closing image of the entwined statues whose hearts still beat, or in Baptiste’s statement (Les Enfants du paradis), “If all the people who live together loved each other, the earth would shine like the sun.” It can also lead into some fairly questionable morality. “Everything is allowed to those who love each other”—a sentiment that Penn’s Bonnie and Clyde (“‘They’re young, they’re in love, and they kill people’) would have wholeheartedly applauded.

Prévert’s greatest achievement as a scriptwriter lies in his transmutation of ordinary, banal speech into a lyrical street poetry, reinvesting clichés with their original emotional truth. His characters speak, not perhaps as the ordinary people of Paris ever do speak, but how they might wish to at their most eloquent. Through subtleties of rhythm, wordplay, and repetition, commonplace acquire unsuspected resonance. Quotation is problematic, since so much depends on inflection and context, and translation tends to flatten the lines back into banality; but something of the fury of the beleaguered Gabin haranguing the crowd below his window in Le Jour se lève still comes through: “Mais oui, je suis un assassin! Mais les assassins, ça courent les rues! Il y en a partout! Partout! Tout le monde tue! Tout le monde tue un petit peu, seulement on tue à douceur, alors ça ne se voit pas!” [That’s right, I’m a murderer! But the streets are running with murderers! They’re everywhere! Everybody kills—only quietly, bit by bit, so it doesn’t show!] Or, from the same film, Arletty describing Jules Berry: “C’est formidable ce qu’il cause bien, cet homme-là. Il a un façon de remuer les mains en parlant—souvent les mots, vous croiriez qu’ils les sort de ses manches.” [It’s wonderful how he can talk, that man. He’s got a way of moving his hands—you’d think he had the words hidden up his sleeves.] And immediately the image comes of Berry (whom we have just met on stage putting trained dogs through their paces) as a conjuror, or a card sharp, fluently dealing out words like marked cards off a crooked deck.

For some ten years, from 1935 to 1945, Prévert was probably the greatest single influence on French cinema. Not everyone has thought it an influence for good. Claude Mauriac referred disparagingly to “le virus Prévert,” and Truffaut, in his famous Cahiers onslaught on the “tradition de qualité,” wrote “one takes to regretting Prévert’s scenarios. He believed in the Devil, thus in God. . . .” Prévert can—be—and has been—faulted for an overschematic morality, for characters neatly divided into executioners or victims, for reflex ant-clericalism and a sentimental idealization of the working class, for theatricality, for the moments when the streetwise poetics of his dialogue topple into pretension or bathos. None of these charges is without substance. Yet they diminish when set against his qualities: the dramatic vigour, the richness of narrative texture, the warmth and compassion of his characterisation, the brilliance and humour of his dialogue, lyricism flowering from the disregarded rubbish-tips of everyday speech. Few screenwriters have served their actors better; to have furnished Gabin, Arletty, Barrault, and Jules Berry with their finest screen roles is a formidable achievement. If it is true, as Jacques Bruinus attested, that Prévert’s greatest scenarios remained unfilmed, “imprisoned in drawers,” the loss is considerable.

—Philip Kemp

PREVIN, André

Composer and Music Director. Nationality: American. Born: Andreas Ludwig Previn in Berlin, Germany, 6 April 1929; son of the musician Charles Previn; emigrated to the United States, 1939; naturalized citizen, 1943. Education: Studied at conservatories in Berlin and Paris; also studied with Pierre Monteux, Joseph Achron, and Castelnuovo-Tedesco; attended Beverly Hills High School. Family: Married 1) the singer Betsy Bennett (divorced), two daughters; 2) the singer and composer Dory Langan (i.e., Dory Previn), 1959 (divorced).

Films as Composer:

1948 The Sun Comes Up (Thorpe)
1949 Border Incident (A. Mann); Tension (Berry); Scene of the Crime (Rowland); Challenge to Lassie (Thorpe)
1950 Dial 1119 (The Violent Hour) (Mayer); Kim (Saville); The Great Sinner (Siodmak); The Outrider (Rowland)
1951 Cause for Alarm (Garnett)
1952 The Girl Who Had Everything (Thorpe)
1954 Bad Day at Black Rock (J. Sturges)
1955 Kiss Me (Minnelli)
1956 Invitation to the Dance (Kelly); The Fastest Gun Alive (Rouse); The Catered Affair (Brooks)
1957 Hot Summer Night (Friedkin); House of Numbers (Rouse); Designing Woman (Minnelli); Silk Stockings (Mamoulian)
1960 Elmer Gantry (Brooks); Who Was That Lady? (Sidney)
1961 All in a Night’s Work (Anthony); One, Two, Three (Wilder)
1962 Long Day’s Journey into Night (Lumet); Two for the Seesaw (Wise) (song); The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse (Minnelli)
1963 Irma La Douce (Wilder)
1964 Goodbye Charlie (Minnelli); Kiss Me Stupid (Wilder); Dead Ringer (Henreid)
1965 Inside Daisy Clover (Mulligan)
1966 Harper (The Moving Target) (Smight) (song); The Fortune Cookie (Wilder); The Swinger (Sidney) (song)
1967 Valley of the Dolls (Robson) (songs)
1969 Paint Your Wagon (Logan) (songs)
1970 The Music Lovers (Rowland)
1971 Mrs. Pollifax—Spy (Martinson)
1975 Rollerball (Jewison)
1980 The Elephant Man (Lynch)
1982 Six Weeks (Bill)
1990 Romeo and Juliet (Acosta)
1998 Streetcar Named Desire (Graham)

Films as Musical Director:

1946 Undercurrent (Minnelli) (supervisor)
1950 Three Little Words (Thorpe)
1953 Small Town Girl (Kardos); Kiss Me Kate (Sidney); Give a Girl a Break (Donen)
1955 It’s Always Fair Weather (Donen and Kelly)
1958 Gigi (Minnelli)
1959 Porgy and Bess (Preminger)
1960 Bells Are Ringing (Minnelli)

1964 My Fair Lady (Cukor)
1967 Thoroughly Modern Millie (Hill) (co); The Way West (McLaglen)
1973 Jesus Christ Superstar (Jewison)

Publications

By PREVIN: books—

On PREVIN: books—

On PREVIN: articles—

Films and Filming (London), May 1968.

* * *

André Previn was born in Berlin and began piano studies at the Berlin Conservatory at the age of six. The family moved to Paris in 1938 and the next year to Los Angeles, where Previn continued his studies with the composers Joseph Achron and Mario Castelnuovo-Tedesco. At 16 Previn was hired on a part-time basis as an arranger and pianist, and two years later became a full-time employee. In 1948 he was given his first assignment as the composer of a complete, original score, The Sun Comes Up, followed by a stream of other films, both as a composer and the music director for musicals, and it is in the latter capacity that most of his Oscar nominations have been given. Previn won Oscars for his work arranging and conducting the scores of Porgy and Bess and for his original music for Irma La Douce, and as the music director of My Fair Lady. He was also nominated for the song he wrote for Two for the Seesaw and for his music direction of Three Little Words, Kiss Me Kate, Bells Are Ringing, Thoroughly Modern Millie, and Jesus Christ Superstar. Of his serious film scores Elmer Gantry and The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse are considered his finest, and of the more comedic scores One, Two, Three, and The Fortune Cookie are notable.

Despite this enviable record of success in films and the popularity of his many record albums as a stylish jazz pianist, Previn put it all behind him when he accepted the position of conductor of the Houston Symphony Orchestra in 1967. The following year he was... contracted as the principal conductor of the London Symphony Orchestra and held the position until 1975, establishing a solid reputation and becoming a popular figure in England with his many concerts, recordings and appearances on television. He accepted the post of conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra in 1976 and held it until his appointment in Los Angeles, which allowed for him to appear as a guest conductor internationally. In addition to piano and chamber works, Previn has written a symphony for strings, concertos for cello, violin and guitar, and with lyricist Tom Stoppard the choral work Every Good Boy Deserves a Favor. For the theater, Previn has written the scores for Coco (1969) and The Good Companions (1971). In looking back on his career in films, Previn is emphatic that it is long gone and finished, and appears to hold only one grudge. This concerns the attitude of American music critics. “They might forgive you for having been the Boston Strangler but never for having written a movie score. You don’t have this in Europe.”

—Tony Thomas

PROKOFIEV, Sergei

Films as Composer:

1934  Poruchik Kizhe (Lieutenant Kizhe) (Fainzimmer)
1938  Alexander Nevsky (Eisenstein)
1941  Lermontov (Gendelstein)
1942  Kotovsky (Fainzimmer); Partizani v stepyah Ukrainy (The Partisans in the Ukrainian Steppes) (Savchenko)
1944  Ivan Grozny (Ivan the Terrible, Part I) (Eisenstein)
1958  Ivan Grozny II: Boyarskii Zagovor (Ivan the Terrible, Part II: The Boyars’ Plot) (Eisenstein—produced 1946)

Publications

By PROKOFIEV: books—

Soviet Diary, 1927 & Other Writings, Boston, 1992.

On PROKOFIEV: books—

On PROKOFIEV: articles—

Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), May 1953.

Soviet Film (Moscow), November 1964.
Trolle, Borge, in Kosmorama (Copenhagen), December 1966, translated in Cinema TV Digest, Fall 1967.

Eisenstein, Sergei, Soviet Film (Moscow), April 1971.

Studies in Comparative Communism (Los Angeles, California), Fall-Winter 1984–85.
Unlike his Soviet colleague Shostakovich, Prokofiev wrote relatively little film music—only six scores, barring a couple of unrealised projects and some filmed adaptations of his stage ballets. But those six include probably the best-known film music ever written, and two of the greatest collaborations between composer and director in the history of the cinema.

In the case of Lieutenant Kizhe, the popularity of the music (or rather, of the suite the composer drew from it) has far outstripped that of the film. With good reason—anybody who searches out Alexander Fainzimner’s comedy expecting to see the wit of Prokofiev’s score reflected on screen will be sadly disappointed. Where the film’s humour is ponderous and overemphatic, Prokofiev’s contribution—“lightly serious, or seriously light,” as he described it—satirises the czarist court with playful pastiche that hints, in its melodic flow, at the world of Tchaikovsky. In his music for the “death scene” he even creates the equivalent of a cinematic montage, with brief flashbacks to earlier motifs from the life of the nonexistent lieutenant.

In Eisenstein Prokofiev met a talent to match his own. The two men developed great mutual regard. Prokofiev admired Eisenstein not only as a brilliant director, but as “a man of fine musical understanding.” For his part, Eisenstein felt that in Prokofiev he and Eduard Tissé, his cinematographer, had “found the third companion in our crusade for the kind of sound cinema we had been dreaming of.” In working on Alexander Nevsky and Ivan the Terrible, the composer displayed an intuitive grasp of the cinematic process. “I have always wondered,” Eisenstein wrote, “how Prokofiev, knowing only the number of seconds allotted to him and having seen the rushes two or three times at most, can have the music ready on the very next day—music which corresponds unerringly and precisely in all its caesuras and accents not only with the general rhythm of the entire episode, but with all the subtlest nuances of the montage development.”

For Nevsky Prokofiev rejected Eisenstein’s initial suggestion of using authentic 13th-century Russian material, reasoning that this would merely seem quaint and remote to the audience. Instead, he devised a 13th-century music “not as it really sounded at the time, but as we would imagine it sounding today.” Since the main action of the film concerns the clash between the Teutonic Crusaders and the Russian people, Prokofiev constructs his score around vivid toal contrasts. For the Germans, he uses complex polytonal themes, heavy, inexorable rhythms, harsh harmonies and strident instrumentation. The Russians are given clear, folk-based diatonic melodies, exultant or poignant according to mood, and transparently scored.

Recognising the limitations of the sound equipment of the period, Prokofiev turned them to advantage. He had the horns heralding the arrival of the Crusaders blown directly into the microphone; the resulting distortion, he explained, evoked the terror the sound would have aroused among the Russian populace. The score shared in the success of the film, which was widely acclaimed. Jean Mitry hailed it as “the first masterpiece of a new art: the audio-visual art.” Prokofiev later reworked his music into a cantata for concert performance.

On Ivan the Terrible composer and director worked together even more closely. Sometimes Prokofiev would provide music, in the normal way, for Eisenstein’s footage; but often they reversed the order, with Eisenstein shooting material to fit passages Prokofiev had already written. Even when Prokofiev followed the standard procedure, Eisenstein noted, his music was “incredibly plastic; it never becomes mere illustration. It shows in an amazing way the inward progress of events, their dynamic structure in which emotion and the sense of what is happening take definite form.”

In keeping with Eisenstein’s approach, Prokofiev’s music for the two parts of Ivan is less overtly dramatic than his score for Nevsky, more operatic and psychological in concept. Nevsky, with its straightforward heroic dualism, scarcely called for much in the way of character analysis, but in Ivan Prokofiev uses thematic patterns to comment on the development of character. Thus the material associated with Ivan himself gradually darkens, taking on brutal overtones from the bumptious songs of his bodyguards, the Oprichniki, as the Czar, soured by suspicion and bereavement, turns increasingly tyrannical.

The other movies on which Prokofiev worked are rarely shown outside Russia, and their music has never been available on disc. (He apparently regarded the scores as mere wartime propaganda stuff, written to order.) His reputation as a film composer rests on Lieutenant Kizhe, Alexander Nevsky, and Ivan the Terrible. But these three films would, by themselves, be enough to justify Eisenstein’s description of him as “the perfect composer for the screen.”

—Philip Kemp

PTUSHKO, Alexander

Films as Director:

1928 Chto delat’ (What to Do); Shifrovanny Document (Document in Cipher)
1929 Kniga v derevne (Book in the Country); Sluchi na stadione (Event in the Stadium); Stet priklyuchenni (100 Adventures)
1930 Kino v derevne (Cinema in the Country); Krepi oboronu
The ‘actors’ in Alexander Ptushko’s most important movies are neither flesh-and-blood professionals nor amateurs, but puppets—three-dimensional modelled figures. Ptushko expanded the art-form initiated by Władysław Starewicz, who first produced stop-motion films in Russia prior to the Revolution. Starewicz’s works were ingeniously animated, and it is to his credit that three-dimensional figure animation is thought of as a native Russian art. However, Ptushko added sound to the images, as well as more complex plotlines and feature-length running times.

Ptushko began his career as a cartoonist, one of the most sardonic of the 1920s. His first short sound films, also employing puppets, were only adequate, but he perfected his technique from year to year and project to project. His most famous film is his first full-length movie, Novy Gulliver (The New Gulliver), based on Jonathan Swift’s Gulliver’s Travels—easily the best of all Soviet animated films, and the world’s first feature starring puppets.

Unlike Dave Fleischer’s 1939 animated cartoon, the scenario does not remain faithful to Swift. Instead, The New Gulliver is Gulliver’s Travels with a twist. It is framed by a reading in a camp of Young Pioneers: Gulliver arrives in a Lilliput under the control of a dimwitted king and his secret police, and assists the oppressed during a workers’ revolt. One human performer does appear: a boy (V. Konstantinov), who falls asleep and dreams himself into the story as Gulliver.

The New Gulliver took three years to produce, and was made before Walt Disney released his first animated feature, Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs. It is the first Soviet sound film to utilize extended multiplication and reproduction from models: the puppets—which are actually dolls—are not moved like marionettes but photographed motionless, in innumerable positions, a process similar to that in animation. They are modelled in clay, and there are no hidden mechanisms. Each has between two and 300 separate heads (or, if you will, masks), all interchangeable and featuring a wide array of gestures and expressions. These puppets feel and think, love and hate—in short, they become human: one contemporary reviewer predicted that they could successfully compete with Clark Gable and Joan Crawford in the Academy Awards competition. In its own modest way, The New Gulliver ranks with Battleship Potemkin in innovation. The film was Ptushko’s first to be widely distributed outside the Soviet union. Portions were screened at the second film festival of Venice in 1934.

‘I have striven (in my films),’ Ptushko wrote, ‘to portray the theme I love best—mankind’s dream of a better life, of happiness for people in general.’ This is fulfilled in The New Gulliver—though within a ‘party line’ framework—as the populace liberates itself from its crazed ruler. This spirit was also carried into Ptushko’s later career, when he directed live-action features adapted from Russian folk stories.

Myths and legends are Ptushko’s most prevalent subject matter, whether his films feature puppets or actors. But those starring small figures cast in the likeness of the human form are regarded with special preference and affection.

—Rob Edelman

PUTTNAM, (Sir) David

Films as Producer/Executive Producer:

1970 S.W.A.L.K. (Melody) (Hussein)
1972 The Pied Piper (Demy)
1973 Mahler (Russell); Swastika (Mora); That’ll Be the Day (Whatham)
1974 Brother, Can You Spare a Dime? (Mora); Stardust (Apted)
1975 James Dean, the First American Teenager (Connolly); Liztomania (Russell)
1976 Bugsy Malone (Parker)
1977 The Duellists (Scott)
1978 Midnight Express (Parker)
1980 Foxes (Lynne)
1981 Chariots of Fire (Hudson)
1982 Experience Preferred But Not Essential (Duffell—for TV); P’ang Yang Kipperbang (Apted—for TV); Secrets
1983 Arthur’s Hallowed Ground (Young—for TV); Local Hero (Forsyth); Red Monarch (Gold); Sharma and Beyond
In Vincente Minnelli's 1952 film, The Bad and the Beautiful, Kirk Douglas gives a bravura performance as a Hollywood tycoon who manages to be both venal and visionary, a cultured philistine: he is at once a wheeler/dealer, with the nous to shimmy all the way to the top of the greasy pole, and an ardent cinephile, whose determination to make challenging and popular films is unwavering. He will go to extraordinary lengths to help his loved ones, but will betray a lifelong friend at the drop of a hat if it is to the advantage of the movie on the lot. This great ball of contradictions may have been based on MGM's wonderboy of the 1930s, Irving Thalberg, but his foibles and qualities are precisely those which characterize Britain's most prominent producer of recent years, David Puttnam.

A former advertising executive, Puttnam broke into the film business in the early 1970s, when Goodtimes, the company he formed with ex-agent Sandy Lieberson, backed the whimsical, somewhat saccharine Melody, which charted a schoolboy's love affair. To add a little lustre to this gooey teen romance, Puttnam filled the film with Bee Gees songs, and cast Mark Lester, who had recently starred as Oliver, in the leading role. It may not have seemed a particularly auspicious way to start, but Melody at least proved Puttnam could get a project off the ground. It was followed by two trenchant satires on the British rock and roll myth, That’ll Be the Day and Stardust. These managed to combine posturing adolescent male rebellion à la James Dean with a canny, ironic portrait of British provincial life in the 1960s; to reconcile “swinging sixties” glamour with an irredeemable 1970s seediness. In the early days, Puttnam’s single greatest contribution as a producer was recognizing and harnessing the pool of filmmaking talent which lay untapped in British advertising. Alan Parker, Ridley Scott, who cut his teeth on The Duellists, Hugh Hudson, who directed Puttnam’s greatest success of all, Chariots of Fire, and Adrian Lyne all made more or less successful transitions from TV commercials to the big screen under Puttnam’s auspices. Puttnam proved far less adept in dealing with established cinema names. His collaboration with the French director Jacques Demy yielded a mediocre Donovan vehicle, The Pied Piper, his brief alliance with Ken Russell threatened to bankrupt him when Lisztomania rocketed over budget. Worst of all, his documentary with Marcel Ophuls, A Memory of Justice, a movie later lauded by the New York critics, ended in recrimination as he tried to elbow the French filmmaker off the project. Such heavy handed behaviour didn’t become a producer ostensibly committed to nurturing and protecting creative talent. Puttnam’s chutzpah and energy were undeniable, but his choice of material was sometimes questionable, and his facility for making enemies of anybody who stood up to or crossed him did him no favours at all. After the 1982 success of Chariots of Fire—a success more closely identified with Puttnam than with the picture’s director, Hugh Hudson, its stars, and even its Oscar-winning scriptwriter, Colin Welland—there was a predictable backlash against the bearded marvel: critics scoffed at Puttnam, decrying his resolutely middle-brow aesthetic vision. He in turn lambasted the critics, suggesting they bore much of the responsibility for the parlous state of the British film industry. Too many filmmakers, he suggested, were hamstrung by these critics, and ended up neglecting the needs and wants of the wider audience by making introspective, obscure films which never had a chance of success at the box office, however favourable their notices. Still, there is no denying that Puttnam, along with Jane Eberts, the former banker who founded Goldcrest, were circumstantial about the projects they backed. Generally, they plumped for tales of male heroism, rousing stories with a historical foundation and a rattling landscape and political tension as a backdrop, he addresses the conflict experienced between children and adults, particularly when the former imitate the latter in the horrors of war. While many films have portrayed children as savage by nature, easily as corrupt as adults, Puttnam’s young characters in The War of the Buttons affirm the innocence and purity of children. Puttnam is a contradictory figure, difficult to warm to and easy to attack. But, whatever his detractors might say, he remains one of the few figures left with the gumption to get pictures made in Britain. At home in both the artistic and financial halls of the motion picture industry, Puttnam often emphasizes the educational potential of motion pictures. Denying that his pictures are didactically message oriented, however, Puttnam argues that his films strive for a balance. between social and political issues and human relationships, providing an audience not only with entertainment but also with enlightenment. Perhaps Puttnam’s passion for learning was inspired by his father’s work as a journalist; indeed, journalists and the quest for knowledge and understanding feature prominently in many of his films. Puttnam insists that the British must lead the way in integrating education and media. Not only as a film producer, but as a Governor of the National Film School, a lobbyist for British film interests, and as a teacher, his contribution to British film culture in general has been immense.

—Geoffrey Macnab, updated by Carrie O’Neill
RABIER, Jean

Films as Cinematographer:

(shorts)

1951 L’Eveil d’un monde (Dupont); Okomé (Dupont); Voilà vous (Dupont); Palmes (Dupont); Trains sans fumée (Cantagrel)
1952 La Grande Case (Dupont)
1955 Les Araignées rouges (Tadié and Lacoste); Les Puçérons (Tadié and Lacoste); Le Carcopsace des pommes (Tadié and Lacoste); La Tavelure du pomnier et du poirier (Tadié and Lacoste); Le Débrouillage chimique (Tadié and Lacoste); La Tordeuse orientale (Tadié and Lacoste); La Banque (Vilardebo); Les Vers de la grappe (Tadié and Lacoste); La Vie du moyen age (Vilardebo); Le Cercle enchanté (de Gastyne); L’Homme, notre ami (de Gastyne)
1956 Israel . . . terre retrouvée (de Gastyne); Propre à rien (de Gastyne)
1957 Robinson (de Gastyne)
1958 Le Château du passé (de Gastyne)
1960 Mille villages (Vilardebo); Soleils (Vilardebo)
1961 Orchestre et diamants (Rancy)
1962 La Dormeuse (Pons)
1969 Autresville d’art (de Gastyne)

(features)

1955 Crève-Coeur (Dupont)
1958 Le Beau Serge (Bitter Reunion) (Chabrol) (cam)
1959 Les Cousins (The Cousins) (Chabrol); A double tour (Web of Passion; Leda) (Chabrol)
1961 Cléo de 5 à 7 (Cléo from 5 to 7) (Varda); “‘L’Avarice’” ep. of Les Sept Péchés capitaux (The Seven Deadly Sins) (Chabrol); Les Godelureaux (Chabrol)
1962 Ophélie (Chabrol); “Il lobatezza” ep. of Rogopag (Rossellini)
1963 Landra (Bluebeard) (Chabrol); La Baie des anges (Bay of the Angels) (Demy); Peau de banane (Banana Peel) (Marcel Ophuls)
1964 Les Parapluies de Cherbourg (The Umbrellas of Cherbourg) (Demy); “‘L’Homme qui vendit la Tour Eiffel’” ep. of Les Plus Belles Escroqueries du monde (The Beautiful Swindlers) (Chabrol); Le Tigre aime la chair fraîche (The Tiger Likes Fresh Blood) (Chabrol)
1965 Le Bonheur (Varda); Les Iles enchantées (Vilardebo); Marie-Chantal contre le Docteur Kha (Chabrol); “‘La Muette’” ep. of Paris vu par . . . (Six in Paris) (Chabrol); Le Tigre se parfume à la dynamite (An Orchid for the Tiger) (Chabrol)
1966 La Ligne de démarcation (Chabrol)
1967 Le Scandale (The Champagne Murders) (Chabrol); Un Idiot à Paris (Korber); La Petite Vertu (Korber); La Route de Corinthe (Who’s Got the Black Box?) (Chabrol)
1968 Les Biches (The Does) (Chabrol)
1969 La Femme infidèle (Unfaithful Wife) (Chabrol); L’Homme orchestre (Korber); Que la bête meure (This Man Must Die!) (Chabrol); Le Boucher (The Butcher) (Chabrol)
1970 La Rupture (The Breakup) (Chabrol)
1971 Juste avant la nuit (Just Before Nightfall) (Chabrol); La Décade prodigieuse (Ten Days’ Wonder) (Chabrol)
1972 Docteur Popaul (Chabrol)
1973 Les Noces rouges (Wedding in Blood) (Chabrol)
1974 Nada (The Nada Gang) (Chabrol)
1975 Les Innocents aux mains sales (Dirty Hands) (Chabrol); Une Partie de plaisir (Pleasure Party) (Chabrol); Les Magiciens (Chabrol)
1976 Folies bourgeois (The Twist) (Chabrol)
1977 Alice, ou la dernière fugue (Alice, or the Last Escapade) (Chabrol); Swingmen in Europe (Maizés)
1978 Les Liens de sang (Blood Relatives) (Chabrol); Violette Nozière (Violette) (Chabrol)
1980 Le Cheval d’orgueil (Chabrol)
1982 Les Fantômes du Chapelier (Chabrol)
1986 Inspector Lavardin (Chabrol)
1987 Le Cri du Hibou (Chabrol); Masques (Chabrol)
1988 A notre regrettable époux (Pertitudes); Une Affaire de femmes (Chabrol); En toute innocence (Jessua)
1990 Dr. M (Club Extinction) (Chabrol); Jours tranquilles à Clichy (Quiet Days at Clichy) (Chabrol)
1991 Madame Bovary (Chabrol)

Publications

By RABIER: articles—

Cinéma (Paris), December 1964.
Image et Son (Paris), November 1970.
Film Reader, January 1977.
Jean Rabier, the distinguished cinematographer of the French New Wave, has been most consistently and significantly associated with the films of Claude Chabrol. Although Rabier has worked in black-and-white, providing nicely atmospheric images in films such as Le Beau Serge and Ophédia, his most integrated work is undoubtedly in Chabrol’s color films. Rabier’s cinematography is distinguished at once by its incredible beauty and expressiveness, as well as by its lack of the kind of boring picture-postcard prettiness which is all too often associated with color cinematography. His first color film for Chabrol, A double tour, is almost deliriously colorful in its imagery.

In Rabier’s best work for Chabrol, the cinematography is totally at the service of the director’s theme: thus, in La Femme infidèle, in which Chabrol depicts the violence and passion hidden within the apparently civilized bourgeoisie, Rabier emphasizes the beautiful patina of that bourgeoisie: the sheen of crystal, the impressionistic soft-focus prettiness of flower arrangements and manicured yard, and particularly the extraordinarily photographed face of Stéphane Audran, who is turned into an exquisite bourgeois goddess.

In Le Boucher, Rabier’s cinematography of the small-town landscape resembles nothing so much as a Cézanne painting; some of the film’s final images, in which Rabier purposely drains his palette to photograph Audran’s eyes as pools of light surrounded by darkness, reveal the influence of American film noir and never fail to move. As in A double tour and Ten Days’ Wonder, an explosion of color is present also in the climax of La Rupture, in which Audran’s gradual movement to blue and transcendence is captured visually by Rabier with the use of an increasingly longer lens, and, ultimately, a liberating rupture of laboratory-processed color which is one of the most memorable displays of virtuosity in all New Wave cinema. And yet this mastery of color expressiveness is achieved alongside a sense of improvisation and of natural light.

Finally, one must note as well the mobility of Rabier’s camera, which—undoubtedly as a result of his collaboration with Chabrol and the requirements of the mise-en-scène—uses a wide variety of angles and perspectives and often constructs whole scenes around incredibly fluid and expressive camera movements. One immediately thinks of the final tracking shot of La Femme infidèle, or the moving camera expressing the father’s grief in Que la bête meure, or the very impressive tracking shot of several minutes’ duration in the beginning of Le Boucher which effortlessly reveals the layout of the town. Perhaps the signature image of Rabier and Chabrol is the expressive lateral camera movement into or away from dark trees, which, generally surrounded by beautiful color images, works to convey visually the epigraph of La Rupture and the theme implicit in all Chabrol’s work: “What an utter darkness suddenly surrounds me!”—the darkness of the soul blotting out the color and beauty of the world.

—Charles Derry

Films as Composer:

1936 Dancing Pirate (Corrigan) (co)
1937 San Quentin (Bacon) (co); 52nd Street (Young) (co); Wings over Honolulu (Potter) (co); Marked Woman (Bacon) (co); Marry the Girl (McGann) (co); Let Them Live! (The Stones Cry Out) (Young) (co); As Good as Married (Buzzell); Midnight Court (McDonald) (co); The Kid Comes Back (Don’t Pull Your Punches) (Eason) (co); She’s Dangerous (Foster and Carruth) (co); The Mighty Treve (Collins) (co)
1938 Suez (Dwan)
1939 Hollywood Cavalcade (Cummings) (co); Stanley and Livingstone (H. King) (co); Mr. Moto’s Last Warning (Foster) (co); Frontier Marshal (Dwan) (co); The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes (Sherlock Holmes) (Weker) (co)
1941 The Men in Her Life (Ratoff) (co); Dead Men Tell (Lachman) (co); Ride On, Vaquero (Leeds) (co)
1942 The Magnificent Dope (W. Lang) (co); Dr. Renault’s Secret (Lachman) (co); Manila Calling (Leeds) (co); The Man Who Wouldn’t Die (Leeds) (co); Whispering Ghosts (Weker) (co); Just Off Broadway (Leeds) (co); Thru’ Different Eyes (Loring) (co); The Postman Didn’t Ring (Schuster) (co); Who Is Hope Schuyler? (Loring) (co)
1943 City without Men (Salkow) (co); The Gang’s All Here (Berkeley) (co); The Undying Monster (The Hammond Mystery) (Brahm) (co)
1944 Tampico (Mendes); Laura (Preminger)
1945 Billy Rose’s Diamond Horseshoe (Seaton); Attack in the Pacific (doc); Don Juan Quilligan (Tuttle); Where Do We Go from Here? (Ratoff); Fallen Angel (Preminger)
1946 Smoky (L. King); The Shocking Miss Pilgrim (Seaton)
1947 The Homestretch (Humberstone); Forever Amber (Preminger); Daisy Kenyon (Preminger); The Secret Life of Walter Mitty (McLeod)
1948 Fury at Furnace Creek (Humberstone); Apartment for Peggy (Seaton)
1949 Force of Evil (Polonsky)
1950 Whirlpool (Preminger); Grounds for Marriage (Leonard); The Next Voice You Hear (Wellman); Giddypap (cartoon); Right Cross (J. Sturges); The Magnificent Yankee (J. Sturges); The Reformer and the Redhead (Pamana and Frank)
1951 Kind Lady (J. Sturges); The Man with a Cloak (Markle); Across the Wide Missouri (Wellman)
1952 Sloppy Jalopy (cartoon); The Girl in White (J. Sturges); Pat and Mike (Cukor); Madeline (cartoon); The Bad and the Beautiful (Minnelli); Carrie (Wyler); It’s a Big Country (Weis and others); Just for You (Nugent)

1953 The Unicorn in the Garden (cartoon)

1954 Suddenly (Lewis); Apache (Aldrich)

1955 The Big Combo (Lewis)

1956 Seven Wonders of the World (Tetzlaff and others); Jubal (Daves); Hilda Crane (Dunne); Bigger than Life (Ray)

1957 Man on Fire (MacDougall); Gaslight (Lyon); The Vintage (Hayden); Until They Sail (Wise)

1958 Twilight for the Gods (Pevney); Separate Tables (Delbert Mann)

1959 Al Capone (Wilson)

1960 Pay or Die (Wilson)

1961 Night Tide (Harrington); Too Late Blues (Cassavetes)

1962 Two Weeks in Another Town (Minnelli)

1963 The Patsy (Lewis); Sylvia (Douglas); Invitation to a Gunfighter (Wilson)

1965 Love Has Many Faces (Singer)

1966 A Big Hand for the Little Lady (Cook); The Redeemer (Breen)

1968 Will Penny (Gries)

1970 Glass Houses (Singer); The Over-the-Hill Gang Rides Again (McGowan—for TV)

1971 What’s the Matter with Helen? (Harrington)

1978 The Ghost of Flight 401 (Stern—for TV)

1979 The Suicide’s Wife (Newland—for TV)

1983 The Day After (Meyer—for TV)

1989 Lady in the Corner (Levin—for TV)

Film as Arranger:

1936 Modern Times (Chaplin)

Publications

By RAKSIN: articles—

“Raksin on Film Music,” in Journal of University Film Association (Carbondale, Illinois), vol. 26, no. 4, 1974.

“Whatever Became of Movie Music?,” in Film Music Notebook (Calabasas, California), Fall 1974.

In Knowing the Score, by Irwin Bazelon, New York, 1975.

Interview with Elmer Bernstein in Film Music Notebook (Calabasas, California), vol. 2, nos. 2 and 3, 1976.

With Charles Berg, “‘Music Composed by Charlie Chaplin’: Auteur or Collaborator?,” in Journal of University Film Association (Carbondale, Illinois), Winter 1979.

On RAKSIN: articles—

Morton, Lawrence, in Quarterly of Film, Radio, and Television (Berkeley, California), Winter 1951.

Film Music Notebook (Calabasas, California), Fall 1974.

Score, no. 90, March 1994.

Cue Sheet (Hollywood), vol. 12, no. 1, January 1996.

Arriving in Hollywood in 1935, David Raksin was perhaps the first American film composer to set out with the idea of being one. At that time, most of the men employed in film scoring had come from the theater or the concert halls. The idea of music in films had fascinated the young Raksin, whose father conducted accompaniment to silent films in Philadelphia. Raksin Sr. also operated a music store, in which Raksin worked while attending Central High School. He studied piano and with the aid of his clarinetist father mastered that instrument. At the University of Pennsylvania, Raksin studied composition with Harl McDonald and earned his tuition playing in dance bands and the orchestra of the CBS radio station in Philadelphia. At 21 he was in New York, playing in, and arranging for, a number of dance bands, which led to a position as arranger on the staff of the music publishing house of Harms, Inc. After a year with Harms, two Hollywood orchestrators, Eddie Powell and Herbert Spencer, recommended Raksin to Alfred Newman, who needed someone to work with Charlie Chaplin on the score the comedian wanted to devise for Modern Times. Although he had a keen sense of the use of music in films and could invent melodies, Chaplin could neither play the piano nor write music.

The success of the score bolstered Raksin’s belief that this was the area of composition in which he wanted to be active. Over the next six years, he was engaged in arranging, adapting, and writing music for a large number of features, shorts, cartoons, and documentaries. He received wide attention in 1944 with his score for Laura, the main theme of which would become a song standard, with lyrics by Johnny Mercer, and one of the most often recorded of all melodies. The score is regarded as a textbook example of the effective use of music in film.

Speaking with a voice very much his own, Raksin’s scores tended to be more modernistic than the average and stylistically ahead of their time. He was nominated for an Oscar for Forever Amber and Separate Tables. Other of his scores highly regarded by students of film composition include Force of Evil, The Bad and the Beautiful, Carrie, Too Late Blues, Will Penny, and What’s the Matter with Helen? In 1958 Raksin began his association with the University of California, Los Angeles, conducting classes in film music theory and technique. Since 1968 he has also taught urban ecology. One of the most recounted of film music anecdotes is attributable to Raksin. When Alfred Hitchcock was making Lifeboat at Twentieth Century-Fox in 1944, Raksin, then on staff, let it be known he would be interested in writing the score. An intermediary informed the composer, “Mr. Hitchcock feels that since the entire action of the film takes place in a lifeboat in the middle of the ocean, where would the music come from?” Replied Raksin, “Ask Mr. Hitchcock to explain...”
where the cameras come from and I'll tell him where the music comes from.”

—Tony Thomas

RALSTON, Ken

Films as Cameraman:

1977 Star Wars (Lucas)
1980 The Empire Strikes Back (Kershner)
1981 Dragonslayer (Robbins)

Films as Visual-Effects Supervisor:

1982 Star Trek II: The Wrath of Khan (Meyer)
1983 Return of the Jedi (Marquand) (co-effects supervisor)
1984 Star Trek III: The Search for Spock (Nimoy)
1985 Cocoon (Petrie); Out of Africa (Pollock) (train at beginning of film); Back to the Future (Zemeckis)
1986 Star Trek IV: The Voyage Home (Nimoy); The Golden Child (Ritchie)
1988 Who Framed Roger Rabbit? (Zemeckis)
1989 Cocoon: The Return (Petrie); Back to the Future Part II (Zemeckis)
1990 Back to the Future Part III (Zemeckis); Akira Kurosawa’s Dreams ( Dreams) (Kurosawa)
1991 The Rocketeer (Johnston) (+ 2nd-unit d)
1992 Death Becomes Her (Zemeckis) (+ 2nd-unit d)
1994 Forrest Gump (Zemeckis)
1995 Jumanji (Johnston); The American President (R. Reiner); Sabrina (Pollock)
1996 Phenomenon (Turteltaub) (special effects); Michael (Ephron) (senior visual effects supervisor)
1997 Contact (Zemeckis) (senior visual effects supervisor)

Films as Director:

2000 Jumanji 2

Publications

By RALSTON: article—

On RALSTON: articles—

On Contact, in Cinefex (Riverside), September 1997.

* * *

Ken Ralston is a leading member of a generation of special-effects wizards who came of age during the seventies, swept the eighties film world and, in the nineties, sit as the designated heads of mainstream Hollywood, as cinema all but gave itself over to the otherworldly visuals available through computer-enhanced imagery.

Ralston spent his childhood “making movies in my garage, using claymation and a crummy Kodak 8mm camera.” His obsession with filmic images led to an apprenticeship at a special-effects house, working on such ads as those featuring the Pillsbury Doughboy and the Green Giant.

After joining George Lucas’s Industrial Light & Magic as a cameraman on the original Star Wars film, Ralston made ILM his home for the next 18 years. While effects are unquestionably a team effort, it was Ralston’s drive to perfect the visual techniques that quickly found him earning the title visual-effects supervisor for the first time on Star Trek II: The Wrath of Khan.

Onboard for two other Star Trek feature-film voyages, Ralston brought an added magic that made the films visually intriguing and technically vastly superior to the series’ television namesake. Audiences flocked to them and critics were more-often-than-not gentle to the films. But Ralston found the boundaries of imagery acceptable to Star Trek’s loyal fans confining and moved on to other challenges. While he has been instrumental in taking audiences literally and figuratively to new frontiers, Ralston and his special-effects team nearly overwhelmed the unpleasant comedy, Death Becomes Her, and the misguided family film, Jumanji.

Career highlights of Ralston’s would have to include the groundbreaking smash, Who Framed Roger Rabbit?, which merged live action with animation in a farcical plot. Equally, the visuals on Forrest Gump, which at one point allowed Gump to convincingly shake hands with the late President Kennedy, satisfied the audience of this whimsical allegory of an extremely simple man in complex times, helping to make it one of the all-time box-office hits.

After years spent challenging the cinema’s visual limitations with otherworldly tales, 1993 found Ralston bringing his film magic to two down-to-earth romantic fairy tales, The American President and the less enchanting Sabrina. It was the year that also found Ralston breaking away from his career home of 18 years at ILM to become president of Sony Pictures Imageworks.

—Allen Grant Richards

RANK, J. Arthur (Lord)

Producer. Nationality: British. Born: Joseph Arthur Rank in Hull, Yorkshire, 22 December 1888. Family: Married Laura Ellan Marshall; two daughters. Career: Mill apprentice; inherited father’s flour milling fortune but made a loss on the business; Methodist Sunday School teacher; 1930—formed the Religious Film Society as a means to promote his beliefs; owned Pinewood, Islington, and Denham Studios; 1941—chairman of the board, Gaumont British and Odeon cinema chains; 1945—owned 60% of the British film industry; expanded into Hollywood; 1950s—production slowed down; 1962—retired. Award: Peerage, 1957. Died: In 1972.

Films as Executive Producer:

1931 A Night in Montmartre (Hiscott)
1932 Jack’s the Boy (Forde); Love on Wheels (Saville); Man of Aran (Flaherty)
1933 Aunt Sally (Whelan); Channel Crossing (Rosmer); The Fire Raisers (Powell); It’s a Boy (Whelan); Just Smith (Walls); The Lucky Number (Asquith); Red Ensign (Powell); Turkey Time (Walls)
1934 The Camels Are Coming (Whelan); Chu Chin Chow (Forde); Cup of Kindness (Walls); Dirty Work (Walls); Evensong (Saville); Jack Ahoy (Forde); Lady in Danger (Walls); Little Friend (Viertel); My Old Dutch (Hill); Oh Daddy! (Cutts and Melford); Princess Charming (Elvey); Road House (Elvey); Things Are Looking Up (de Courville); Wild Boy (de Courville)
1935 Boys Will Be Boys (Beaudine); Bulldog Jack (Forde); Car of Dreams (Cutts and Melford); The Clairvoyant (Elvey); Fighting Stock (Walls); Fly Away Peter (Saunders); Foreign Affairs (Walls); The Guv’nor (Rosme); Heat Wave (Elvey); The Iron Duke (Saville); Me and Marlborough (Saville); Pot Luck (Walls); R.A.F. (Betts); Stormy Weather (Walls); The Turn of the Tide (Walker)
1936 East Meets West (Mason); Everybody Dance (Reisner); Everything Is Thunder (Rosmer); It’s Love Again (Saville); King of the Damned (Forde); The Man Who Changed His Mind (Stevenson); Seven Sinners (de Courville); Where There’s a Will (Beaudine)
1937 Alf’s Button Afloat (Varnel); Non-Stop New York (Stevenson); O.H.M.S. (Boren for Glory; You’re in the Army Now) (Walsh); Oh, Mr. Porter! (Varnel)
1938 Bank Holiday (Reed); Convict 99 (Varnel); Crackerjack (de Courville); Hey! Hey! U.S.A. (King Kelly of the U.S.A.) (Varnel); Love in Waiting (Pierce); Penny and the Pownall Case (Hand); A Piece of Cake (Irwin)
1939 The Arsenal Stadium Mystery (Dickinson); Climbing High (Reed); The Frozen Limits (Varnel); Neutral Port (Varnel); Band Waggion (Varnel)
1940 Freedom Radio (Voice in the Night) (Asquith); Gasbags (Varnel)
1941 Cottage to Let (Asquith); The Ghost Train (Forde); I Thank You (Varnel); Hi, Gang! (Varnel)
1942 Back Room Boy (Mason); The Day Will Dawn (The Avengers) (French); The Great Mr. Handel (Walker); In Which We Serve (Coward and Lean); King Arthur Was a Gentleman (Varnel); Secret Mission (French); Unpublished Story (French)
1943 The Demi-Paradise (Adventure for Two) (Asquith); The Flemish Farm (Dell); The Gentle Sex (Howard); It’s That Man Again (Forde); The Life and Death of Colonel Blimp (Powell and Pressburger); The Man in Grey (Arlliss); Millions Like Us (Laundier and Gilliat); Miss London Ltd. (Guest); The Silver Fleet (Sewell and Wellesley); They Met in the Dark (Lamac); We Dive at Dawn (Asquith)
1944 Bees in Paradise (Guest); A Canterbury Tale (Powell and Pressburger); Don’t Take It to Heart (Dell); English without Tears (French); Fanny By Gaslight (Man of Evil) (Asquith); Give Us the Moon (Guest); Love Story (A Lady Surrenders) (Arlliss); Madonna of the Seven Moons (Crabtree); Mr. Emmanuel (French); Tawny Pipit (Miles); Time Flies (Forde); 2,000 Women (Laundier); The Way Ahead (Reed)
1945 Brief Encounter (Leam); Henry V (Oliver); I Know Where I’m Going (Powell and Pressburger); I’ll Be Your Sweetheart (Guest); A Place of One’s Own (Knowles); The Rake’s Progress (The Notorious Gentleman) (Gilliat); The Seventh Veil (Bennett); They Knew Mr. Knight (Walker); They Were Sisters (Crabtree); Waterloo Road (Gilliat); The Way to the Stars (Asquith)
1946 Beware of Pity (Elvey); Caravan (Crabtree); Carnival (Haynes); Dear Murderer (Crabtree); Great Expectations (Lean); Green for Danger (Gilliat); I See a Dark Stranger (The Adventurers) (Laundier); London Town (My Heart Goes Crazy) (Ruggles); A Matter of Life and Death (Stairway to Heaven) (Powell and Pressburger); Men of Two Worlds (Kissenga, Man of Africa) (Dickinson); The Overlanders (Watt); School for Secrets (The Secret Flight) (Ustinov); There Is the Glory (Hurst—doc); The Way We Live (Craigie—doc); The Wicked Lady (Arlliss); Caesar and Cleopatra (Pascal)
1947 Black Narcissus (Powell and Pressburger); The Brothers (MacDonald); Bush Christmas (Smart); Captain Boycott (Laundier); The Captive Heart (Dearden); Easy Money (Knowles); End of the River (Twist); Fame Is the Spur (Boulling); Frieda (Dearden); Holiday Camp (Annakin); Hungry Hill (Hurst); Johnny Frenchman (Fred); The Magic Bow (Knowles); The Mark of Cain (Hurst); The Master of Bankdiam (Forde); Old Man Out (Reed); *Root of All Evil (Williams); So Well Remembered (Dmytryk); Take My Life (Neame); This Happy Breed (Lean); Uncle Silas
(Frank); The Upturned Glass (Huntington); Vice Versa
(Ustinov); When the Bough Breaks (Huntington); The Woman in the Hall (Lee)

1948 Against the Wind (Crichton); The Bad Lord Byron (MacDonald);
Blanche Fury (Allegret); Blind Goddess (French); Broken
Journey (Annakin); Calendar (Crabtree); Corridor of Mirrors
(Young); Daybreak (Bennett); Diamond City
(MacDonald); Double Pursuit; Dulcimer Street (London Belongs to Me) (Gilliat); Esther Waters (Dalrymple); Good-
Time Girl (MacDonald); Hamlet (Olivier); Helter Skelter
(Thomas); Here Come the Huggetts (Annakin); High Pavement;
It Always Rains on Sunday (Hamer); It's Hard to Be Good (Dell); Jassy (Knowles); The Lamp Still Burns
(Elvey); Miranda (Annakin); Mr. Perrin and Mr. Traill
(Huntington); My Brother's Keeper (Roome); Nicholas
Nickelby (Cavalcanti); The October Man (Baker); Oliver Twist (Lean); Once a Jolly Swagman (Lee); Once upon a Dream (Thomas); One Night with You (Young); The Passionate Friends (One Woman's Story) (Lean); Portrait from Life (The Girl in the Painting) (Fisher); Quartet
(Annakin, Crabtree, French, and Smart); The Red Shoes
(Powell and Pressburger); Saraband for Dead Lovers
(Saraband) (Dearden and Relph); Scott of the Antarctic
(Frend); The Smugglers (The Man Within) (Knowles);
Snowbound (MacDonald); Third Time Lucky (Parry); Trotty
True (The Gay Lady) (Hurst); Trouble in the Air (Saunders);
The Weaker Sex (Baker); The White Unicorn (Knowles); Woman Hater (Young)

1949 Adam and Evalyn (French); All over the Town (Twist);
The Blue Lagoon (Launder); A Boy, a Girl and a Bike
(Smart); Boys in Brown (Tully); Cardboard Cavalier (Forde);
The Chiltern Hundreds (The Amazing Mr. Beecham)
(Carstairs); Christopher Columbus (MacDonald); Dear
Mr. Prohack (Freeland); Don't Ever Leave Me (Crabtree);
Eureka Stockade (Watt); Floodtide (Wilson); Fools Rush
In (Carstairs); The History of Mr. Polly (Pelissier); The Huggetts Abroad (Annakin); It's Not Cricket (Roome); The Lost People (Knowles); Madeleine (The Strange Case of Madeleine) (Lean); Madness of the Heart (Bennett); Marry
Me (Fisher); Morning Departure (Operation Disaster)
(Baker); The Perfect Woman (Knowles); Poet's Pub (Wilson); The Rocking-Horse Winner (Pelissier); Sleeping Car to Trieste (Carstairs); The Spider and the Fly (Hamer); Sto-Press Girl (Barry); Traveler's Joy (Thomas); Vote for Huggett (Annakin); Warning to Wantons (Wilson)

1950 The Astonished Heart (Fisher and Darnborough); The Dark Man (Dell); The Golden Salamander (Neame); Highly Dangerous (Baker); Prelude to Fame (McDonnell); So Long at the Fair (Fisher and Darnborough); They Were Not Divided (Young); Trio (Annakin and French)

1951 Appointment with Venus (Island Rescue) (Thomas); The Browning Version (Asquith); Encore (Jackson, Pelissier, and French); High Treason (Boulting); Night without Stars (Pelissier); Secret People (Dickinson)

1952 Curtain Up (Smart); Hunted (The Stranger in Between) (Crichton); The Importance of Being Earnest (Asquith); It Started in Paradise (Bennett); The Long Memory (Hamer); Made in Heaven (Carstairs); Meet Me Tonight (Tonight at 8.30) (Pelissier); The Penny Princess (Guest); Planter's Wife (Outpost in Malaya) (Annakin); Something Money Can't Buy (Jackson); Top of the Form (Carstairs); Venetian Bird (The Assassin) (Thomas)

1953 Always a Bride (Smart); The Desperate Moment (Bennett); Genevieve (Cornelius); Gentlemen, the Queen: John Wesley (Walker); The Kidnappers (The Little Kidnappers) (Leacock); Lady Godiva Rides Again (Laundier); The Malta Story (Hurst); The Net (Project M. 7) (Asquith); Never Let Me Go (Davies); A Personal Affair (Pelissier); A Queen Is Crowned (doc); Street Corner (Both Sides of the Law) (Box); Trouble in Store (Carstairs); Turn the Key Softly (Lee); You Know What Sailors Are (Annakin)

1954 The Beachcomber (Box); Doctor in the House (Thomas); Fast and Loose (Parry); Forbidden Cargo (French); Mad about Men (Thomas); The Million Pound Note (Man with a Million) (Neame); One Good Turn (Carstairs); The Purple Plain (Parrish); The Queen's Royal Tour (Hugham—doc); Romeo and Juliet (Castellani); The Seekers (Land of Fury) (Annakin); The Teckman Mystery (Tey); To Paris with Love (Hamer); Up to His Neck (Carstairs); The Young Lovers (Chance Meeting) (Asquith)

1955 All for Mary (Tey); An Alligator Named Daisy (Lee Thompson); As Long as They're Happy (Lee Thompson); Doctor at Sea (Thomas); Jumping for Joy (Carstairs); Lost (Green); Man of the Moment (Carstairs); One Way Out (Searle); Passage Home (Baker); Simba (Hurst); Simon and Laura (Box); Who Done It? (Relph and Dearden); A Woman for Joe (O'Ferrall)

1956 The Battle of the River Plate (Pursuit of the Graf Spee) (Powell and Pressburger); Black Tent (Hurst); Breakaway (Cass); Eyewitness (Peril in the Night) (Box); The Feminine Touch (Jackson); House of Secrets (Triple Deception) (Green); Jacqueline (Baker); Long Arm (Frend); Reach for the Sky (Gilbert); The Secret Place (Donner); The Spanish Gardener (Leacock); Tiger in the Smoke (Baker); True as a Turtle (Plain Sailing) (Tey); Up in the World (Carstairs)

1957 Across the Bridge (Annakin); Above Us the Waves (Thomas); Campbell's Kingdom (Thomas); Checkpoint (Thomas); Dangerous Exile (Hurst); Doctor at Large (Thomas); Hell Drivers (Endfield); High Tide at Noon (Leacock); Ill Met by Moonlight (Night Ambush) (Powell and Pressburger); It Happened in Rome (Pietrangeli); Just My Luck (Carstairs); Miracle in Soho (Amyes); The Naked Truth (Zampi); The One That Got Away (Baker); Passionate Summer (Brabanti); Robbery Under Arms (Lee); Seven Thunders (Fregonese); Tears for Simon (Green); A Town Like Alice (The Rape of Malaya) (Lee); Value for Money (Annakin); Windom's Way (Neame)

1958 Bachelor of Hearts (Rilla); Big Money (Carstairs); Curlew on a Banner (The Last Dawn) (Gilbert); Floods of Fear (Crichton); The Gypsy and the Gentleman (Losey); Heart of a Child (Donner); Innocent Sinners (Leacock); The Long Knife (Tully); Man with a Gun (Tully); A Night to Remember (Baker); Nor Moon By Night (Elephant Gun) (Annakin); Rockets Galore (Mad Little Island) (Relph); Rooney (Polllock); Sea of Sand (Green); A Tale of Two Cities (Thomas); Violent Playground (Dearden); The Wind Cannot Read (Thomas)

1959 The Captain's Table (Lee); Ferry to Hong Kong (Gilbert); Follow a Star (Asher); Heart of a Man (Wilcox); Hidden Hospitality (Young); Northwest Frontier (Flame over India) (Lee Thompson); Operation Amsterdam (McCarthy); Saphire (Dearden); Sea Fury (Endfield); The Square Peg (Carstairs); The Thirty-Nine Steps (Thomas); Tiger Bay (Lee Thompson); Too Many Crooks (Zampi); Upstairs and Downstairs (Thomas); Whirlpool (Allen)

1960 Bulldog Breed (Asher); Conspiracy of Hearts (Thomas); Doctor in Love (Thomas); League of Gentlemen (Dearden); Let's Get Married (Scott); Make Mine Mink (Asher); Man in the Moon (Dearden); The Royal Ballet (Czinner)

1961 Flame in the Streets (Baker); In the Doghouse (Conyers); No Love for Johnnie (Thomas); No, My Darling Daughter (Thomas); The Singer Not the Song (Baker); Very Important Person (A Coming-Out Party) (Annakin); Victim (Dearden); Whistle Down the Wind (Forbes)

1962 All Night Long (Dearden); Life for Ruth (Condemned to Life) (Dearden); On the Beat (Asher); A Pair of Briefs (Thomas); Tiara Tahiti (Kitcheff); Waltz of the Toreadors (Guillermín); The Wild and the Willing (Young and Willing) (Thomas)

Publications

On RANK: books—

Balcon, Michael, A Lifetime in Films, 1969.

On RANK: articles—

Sight and Sound (London), October–December 1952.
Obituary in Ecran, no. 5, May 1972.
Cinema and TV Today, 8 April 1982.
Sight and Sound (London), vol. 51, no. 4, Autumn 1982.
Economist, 1 May 1993.
Though the Rank Organisation all but dominated British film production between the early 1940s and the late 1960s, its founder, J. Arthur Rank, born into the Yorkshire flour-milling business, was nearly 40 before his proprietorship of the Methodist Times led, indirectly, to film. Dissatisfied with existing films for church purposes, he sponsored his own, through producer John Corfield, and in 1933 moved into mainstream cinema, establishing British National with another idealistic millionaire, Lady Yule. Together they produced The Turn of the Tide, a realistic yarn of a Yorkshire fishing family. It won third prize at the Venice Film Festival, only to be shunned by British distributors. Legend long had it that this rejection sparked his determination to rescue the film business from vulgar minds. In 1937 Rank acquired the brand-new Pinewood studios and C. M. Woolf’s General Film Distributors (with its familiar gong trademark), and in 1939 bought into Oscar Deutch’s Odeon cinema circuit (smallest, newest, but most glamorous of the three chains dominating the market), thus becoming a “vertically integrated combine.” In 1940 he acquired Gaumont-British cinemas, with their 89 subsidiary companies, and by 1943 he controlled about two-thirds of the British movie business, including newsreels, laboratories, and optical technology. Though the Rank “Empire” was little larger than one of the Hollywood Big Five, he enjoyed the strategic advantage of sharing a duopoly (with Associated British Cinemas) over British exhibition. In 1945 his principal production companies were Two Cities (under Del Giudice), Gainsborough (under the Ostrers and Ted Black), and Independent Producers, Rank’s own set-up, which offered unprecedented artistic freedom to The Archers (Powell and Pressburger), Cineguild (Lean, Neame, and Havelock-Allan), Individual (Lauder and Gilliat), Wessex (Ian Dalrymple), and the notoriously extravagant Gabriel Pascal; Ealing (Balcon) was, loosely, associated. Rank’s high-minded loss-makers ranged from This Modern Age, an English counter to Time-Life’s March of Time, to special children’s films, in order, in his words, “to break Hollywood’s grip on the child’s mind.” His drive to get good British films into the jealously guarded American mass market, often through Eagle-Lion, GFD’s international complement, was spearheaded by expensive spectacles, notably Olivier’s Henry V, Pascal’s Cleopatra, and Powell and Pressburger’s A Matter of Life and Death, while less lavish efforts, like Brief Encounter, and the Ealing comedies, did much to develop the American arthouse audience, disdained by Hollywood. However, Rank’s high-risk internationalism, including the establishment of 200 Odeon cinemas in Canada, ran into enormous problems. His “combine” was an unduly aggregation of units; the deaths of Woolf and Deutsch deprived him of guiding advice from veteran showmen, and Pascal and others produced some costly and spectacular flops. During 1947–48 the Labour government’s erratic rationalisation, under John Davis’ tough accountant’s mind, driving most of Rank’s prestigious filmmakers to his rival, Korda. Davis became chair on Rank’s retirement, with the organisation diversified into other fields, notably, Rank-Xerox. By 1980 film production was minimal, though exhibition, distribution, and Southern Television, are still prominent.

Rank’s predominance was inevitably controversial, especially given the convulsions and changes of 1946–48. His combination of a Christian sense of mission, financial acumen, and the low necklines in films like Gainsborough’s The Wicked Lady, attracted many scathing comments from the critics, while socialists cast him as the demon semimonopolist. But the power of his “nonconformist conscience” was well attested, by his financial probity (and his continuing devotion to teaching home-town Sunday School classes). Alan Wood’s account plausibly suggests that Rank, far from setting out to monopolise British film, felt drawn, by a chain of opportunities (the 1936–37 production crisis, wartime upheavals, existing corporate interlocks, and industry’s aversion to Hollywood grabbing the last British bulwark, exhibition) to stabilise, save, and assert a key sector of national and moral culture. Writers often contrast Rank, the provincial, religious, puritan, businessman, with Korda the cosmopolitan, “‘cavalier,’” and artwise impresario. Rank’s own tastes are suggested by various Norman Walker films; the religious and moral tendencies discernible in Rank’s features of the 1950s may well owe something to his sense of mission. The pros and cons and ifs and buts of industry history are interminably debatable, but history may well regard him with a warmth which will startle his detractors.

—Raymond Durgnat

RAPHAELSON, Samson

Writer. Nationality: American. Born: New York City, 30 March 1896. Education: Attended Lewis Institute, Chicago; University of Illinois, Urbana, B.A., 1917. Family: Married 1) Raina (Raphaelson), 1918 (divorced); 2) Dorothy Wegman, 1927; one son and one daughter. Career: 1917–18—reporter, City News Service, Chicago; 1918–20—publisher’s assistant; 1920–21—teaching assistant, University of Illinois; 1921–22—police reporter, New York Times; 1925—first play produced, The Jazz Singer; 1929–30—contracts with RKO, then with Paramount; began association with Ernst Lubitsch; 1931—first film as writer, The Smiling Lieutenant; alternated between screenwriting and stage work until early 1950s, then retired to study photography; early 1970s—involved in the Israeli film industry as adviser; 1976–83—adjunct professor of cinema, Columbia University, New York. Award: Writers Guild Laurel Award, 1976. Died: In New York City, 16 July 1983.

Films as Writer:

- 1931 The Smiling Lieutenant (Lubitsch); Magnificent Lie (Viertel)
- 1932 One Hour with You (Lubitsch and Cukor); Broken Lullaby (The Man I Killed) (Lubitsch); Trouble in Paradise (Lubitsch)
- 1934 The Merry Widow (Lubitsch); Caravan (Charrell); Servants’ Entrance (Lloyd); The Queen’s Affair (Runaway Queen) (Wilcox)
1935  Ladies Love Danger (Humberstone); Dressed to Thrill (Lachman)
1937  The Last of Mrs. Cheyney (Boleslawsky); Angel (Lubitsch)
1940  The Shop around the Corner (Lubitsch)
1941  Suspicion (Hitchcock)
1943  Heaven Can Wait (Lubitsch)
1946  The Harvey Girls (Sidney); Ziegfeld Follies (Minnelli)
1947  Green Dolphin Street (Saville)
1948  That Lady in Ermine (Lubitsch and Preminger)
1953  Main Street to Broadway (Garnett)

Publications

By RAPHAELSON: plays—

The Jazz Singer, New York, 1925.
Young Love, New York, 1928.
Skylark, New York, 1939, also novelization, 1939.
Jason, New York, 1942.
Hilda Crane, New York, 1951.

By RAPHAELSON: articles—

Film Comment (New York), May-June 1976.
Film Comment (New York), September-October 1979.

On RAPHAELSON: articles—

Film Comment (New York), May-June 1978.
Film Comment (New York), September-October 1983.
Cineforum (Bergamo), July-August 1993.

Samson Raphaelson’s great talent was in making true love seem so much more than a boy-meets-girl plot device, while at the same time cherishing the delicate patterns and structures of that device. Music and camerawork celebrate the artifice in One Hour with You and are elaborate in design; the revelation of an affair is given in soliloquy.

Trouble in Paradise is about the attraction of two calculating thieves in Venice. Their initial flirtation is a tricky blend of teasing, charm, and a veiled threat to betray the other to the police. Gaston declares his love for Lily, and also the fact that she stole a gentleman’s wallet that was in his possession. With a flourish, he tenderly returns a diamond brooch he lifted from her. Lily, poise intact, asks him the time. Gaston discovers his watch is missing and Lily, smiling triumphantly, hands it back to him. “It was five minutes slow, but I regulated it for you.”

Amid the garbage, gondolas, and glittering evening dress, a state of romantic pandemonium revolves around Gaston’s moonlit passion for his “mark,” Mariette. Money means nothing to Mariette and everything to Lily, but causes Gaston, seeking more carnal conquest, reason for pause. Social conventions, male pride, and feminine curiosity add to the problem; but true love for Lily, in the end, weaves an even lovelier picture. The director Ernst Lubitsch regarded Trouble in Paradise as the favorite of his own films.

The Shop around the Corner is an excellent work that shows Raphaelson’s strict adherence to structure and craft. In this tale set in a tidy Hungarian shop, two lonelyhearts seek love and find their ideals through letters. Personally, Klara and Kralik lock horns in petty rivalry as clerks. Kralik finds her out first and, having the upper hand, makes a shrewd game of playing the smug Klara against the woman of his dreams—who is one and the same person. Passion and conflict find expression in oblique and indirect ways throughout. The plot mechanics mesh like the gears of a music box, fittings perfect.

Raphaelson collaborated with Ernst Lubitsch in nine pictures. Their first collaboration was The Smiling Lieutenant. The next, The Man I Killed, was an artistically important tragedy about a French soldier’s lone odyssey for conscience and solace in Germany during the First World War. It was Lubitsch’s only sound drama.

They worked most often with a Hungarian play as a springboard and finished with something entirely different, save for the bare bones of the original plot. Raphaelson himself tended to dismiss “writing in the Lubitsch vein,” as his theatrical and literary concerns were most important to him, but the two of them (and let us not exclude Ernest Vajda) inspired another one “past all sanity.”

Raphaelson’s The Jazz Singer was produced as a play in 1925. It was, he reflected, “heartfelt, corny and dramatic. It hurtled me into a lifetime dedicated to never again being so shamelessly effective.” This solid star vehicle has been filmed three times to date, as was his 1934 play Accent on Youth. The story of a middle-aged Broadway playwright (a songwriter in the Crosby picture, a producer in the Gable picture) who is found attractive by his much younger secretary hadn’t lost its spark in its numerous adaptations.

Raphaelson considered Suspicion, for Alfred Hitchcock, “in many ways my best screenplay.” The heroine’s role was tailored to the talent of Joan Fontaine, who won an Oscar. All the situations and dialogue led indirectly and cumulatively to Cary Grant trying to murder her. However, the ending insisted on by the studio made Grant innocent and the rewritten ending was unconvincing. Although meticulous from a technical point of view, Suspicion does not really match the best work Raphaelson did with Lubitsch.

—Rob Pinsel

RAPPENEAU, Jean-Paul

Writer and Director. Nationality: French. Born: Auxerre, 8 April 1932. Education: Attended Lycée Jacques-Amyot, Auxerre; Law Faculty, Paris. Family: Married Claude-Lise Cornély, 1971; two sons. Career: 1953–55—assistant director; 1955–57—production manager of short films; 1957—script writer; 1958—began directing films. Awards: Prix Louis Delluc for La Vie de château, 1966; Special Jury Prize at the Karlovy-Vary Festival, 1966. Member: President of ADRC (Agence pour le Développement Régional du Cinéma), 1991. Address: 24 rue Henri Barbusse, 75005 Paris, France.

Films as Writer:

1957 Entre la terre et le ciel (Vilardebo—short)
1958 Chronique provinciale (+ d—short); Signé Arsène Lupin (Robert)
1960 Zazie dans le métro (Zazie) (Malle); “Le Mariage” ep. of La Française et l’amour (Love and the Frenchwoman) (Clair)
1962 La Vie privée (A Very Private Affair) (Malle); Le Combat dans l’île (Cavalier)
1964 L’Homme de Rio (That Man from Rio) (de Broca)
1965 La Fabuleuse Aventure de Marco Polo (Marco the Magnificent) (de la Patellière, Howard, and Christian-Jaque)
1966 La Vie de château (A Matter of Resistance) (+ d)
1970 Les Mariés de l’an II (+ d)
1975 Le Sauvage (+ d)
1982 Tout feu, tout flamme (+ d)
1990 Cyrano de Bergerac (+ d)
1995 Le Hussard sur le toit (The Horseman on the Roof) (+ d)

Publications

By RAPPENEAU: articles—

Film Français (Paris), 23 May 1978.
Unifrance Film (Paris), February 1982.
Film Français (Paris), no. 2285, February 1990.
Séquences (Montreal), September 1990.
Studio Magazine, no. 103, October 1995.

On RAPPENEAU: articles—

Empire, no. 19, January 1991; no. 80, February 1996.
Film Français (Paris), no. 2340, March; no. 2347, April; nos. 2348/9, May 1991.

Jean-Paul Rappeneau entered films in a traditional way, as a second assistant to Jean Dréville on Suspects, as collaborator on Vilardebo’s short film Entre la terre et le ciel, and as the director of the short Chronique provinciale. During the next few years he concentrated on writing, and acquired a solid reputation with scripts for Signé Arsène Lupin, two films by Louis Malle, Zazie dans le métro and La Vie privée, and a short film by René Clair in La Française et l’amour. The commercially successful L’Homme de Rio, directed by Philippe de Broca and starring Jean-Paul Belmondo, was followed by an international co-production, La Fabuleuse Aventure de Marco Polo.

These films had crystallized his own tastes and ambitions, and in 1966 he directed his first long film, La Vie de château, a brilliant comedy situated in Normandy on the eve of the invasion by the allies during the Second World War. This film, showing a maturity unusual in a first work, is far from being a simple or banal entertainment. Using a humorous framework, Rappeneau describes a France that is both egotistical and on the sidelines, constructing its own happiness away from the world. Using a minutely planned scenario prepared with the collaboration of Claude Sautet and Alain Cavalier (with dialogue by Daniel Boulanger), the film is revealed as the work of an elegant filmmaker who is also sensible to the playing of the actors, particularly Catherine Deneuve, Pierre Brasseur, and Philippe Noiret.

His next film, Les Mariés de l’an II, a comedy where heroism is mixed with romance and burlesque with tragedy, is set during the French Revolution, and belongs to the genre of Christian-Jaque’s Fanfan la tulipe and Clair’s Fêtes galantes. Other of his films confirm his professional qualities. If the social and psychological analysis in Tout feu, tout flamme does not always ring true, the action is vivid, the images (shot by Pierre L’Homme) and the charm of Yves Montand and Isabelle Adjani are memorable, and the result is a successful attempt to make a commercial film of quality.

After working previously with his own original scripts, Rappeneau turned his attention to adaptation, and to works he deemed initially to be unfilmable: Edmond Rostand’s Cyrano de Bergerac and Jean Giono’s Le Hussard sur le toit. With Gérard Depardieu cast as the larger-than-life, swashbuckling romantic hero, Cyrano deservedly brought Rappeneau international attention. His version, co-adapted with Jean-Claude Carrière, retains the play’s verse form and remains close to the original, with the seventeenth-century setting convincingly reproduced. The director’s meticulous preparation is evident from the opening sequence in the theatre, the carefully choreographed sword fights and the impressively orchestrated battle scenes involving over 2000 extras. If Rappeneau was largely faithful to Rostand, in the case of Giono’s Le Hussard sur le toit changes were necessary. Character motivation has been clarified and the narrative more tightly focused, but the essential story of unrequited love set against the beautiful Provence landscape remains intact. Careful attention to period detail once more characterizes the director’s approach in his beautifully crafted evocation of 1830s France. Both films, along with productions such as Berri’s Jean de Florette, Manon des Sources, or Germinal, are indicative of a particular trend in French filmmaking (not so far removed from post-war literary cinema) in which classic texts are transformed through film to become a new cultural phenomenon: heritage cinema.

—Karel Tabery, updated by R. F. Cousins

RATTIGAN, (Sir) Terence

Films as Writer:

1939 French without Tears (Asquith)
1942 Quiet Wedding (Asquith) (co); The Day Will Dawn (The Avengers) (French) (co); Uncensored (Asquith) (co)
1943 English without Tears (French) (co)
1945 Journey Together (Boulting) (co); The Way to the Stars (Asquith)
1946 While the Sun Shines (Asquith)
1948 Bond Street (Parry) (co); The Winslow Boy (Asquith)
1951 The Browning Version (Asquith)
1952 The Sound Barrier (Breaking the Sound Barrier) (Lean)
1953 The Final Test (Asquith)
1954 The Man Who Loved Redheads (French)
1955 The Deep Blue Sea (Litvak)
1957 The Prince and the Showgirl (The Sleeping Prince) (Olivier)
1958 Separate Tables (Delbert Mann) (co)
1963 The V.I.P.s (International Hotel) (Asquith)
1964 The Yellow Rolls-Royce (Asquith)
1969 Goodbye Mr. Chips (Wood)
1973 Bequest to the Nation (The Nelson Affair) (Cellan Jones)
1976 In Praise of Love (Rakoff)

Publications

On RATTIGAN: books—

On RATTIGAN: articles—

Obituary in International Film Collector, no. 21, March 1978.
Modern Drama, September 1990.

* * *

Terence Rattigan’s screenplays belong to the long and not altogether successful—cinematically speaking—British tradition of filming adaptations of established novels and plays. Rattigan contributed to over 20 screenplays, seven based on his own plays, but he only ever really regarded cinema as a financial safety net. He advised screenwriters “to throw off the shackles of the director” and remember that the modern cinema is “the child not only of its mother, the silent film, but also of its father, the drama.”

Rattigan began his professional career in the writers’ room at the old Teddington Studios, an experience he hated. His first ever screenplay was torn up in front of his eyes but he freely admitted in later years that this early experience had been invaluable in that it taught him the most ruthless economy of technique. His marvellous grasp of film craft is evident in his adaptations of his stage successes like The Browning Version, French without Tears, Separate Tables, The Winslow Boy, The Deep Blue Sea, and The Man Who Loved Redheads. His best work consists of polished dramas with a strong sense of social justice and he had a very assured touch with regard to audience involvement and emotional satisfaction. He also wrote original screenplays, notably The V.I.P.s and The Yellow Rolls-Royce where the gaiety of the jokes drowns out the deep moan of human discontent and unhappiness, but only superficially. Even in these polished comedies it is evident that Rattigan’s outlook is essentially tragic. French without Tears, for example, is ostensibly a simple comedy centred around the romantic entanglements of a group of young Englishmen in a French crammer. However, Rattigan manages to reveal much of the underlying mood of the wealthy younger generation of the 1930s, hinting at the deeper conflicts in their political and sexual attitudes.

Rattigan contributed incalculably to Anthony Asquith’s The Way to the Stars and Journey Together. The Way to the Stars is a classic evocation of wartime Britain which concentrates on the relationships of groups of British and American airmen. Originally commissioned to create a propaganda exercise to promote Allied understanding, Asquith and Rattigan managed to craft a film of great emotional depth and power.

Terence Rattigan

The best of Rattigan’s writing exemplified on the surface the cool, orderly gentlemanly code of English playwriting (rather in the style of Noël Coward with whom he is often compared both dramatically and cinematically), but the subtext was always a remorseless attack on the British fear of emotion and its relentless repression. He made moving pleas in his work for affection, kindness, and understanding as well as forgiveness. His masterpiece is The Browning Version, expanded by the author from his one-act play into Asquith’s most satisfying film. It is a minutely observed study of a sickly schoolmaster, in which the playwright orchestrates a series of petty humiliations and minor crises which lead to a final emotional climax of great force. The film’s philosophical implications go well beyond the story’s naturalistic setting, and gave Michael Redgrave, as the schoolmaster, arguably the finest part in his distinguished career.

—Sylvia Paskin

REINIGER, Lotte

Career: 1916—created silhouettes for intertitles of Paul Wegener’s Rübezahls Hochzeit; 1918—introduced by Wegener to film group associated with Dr. Hans Cürli; 1919—Cürli’s newly founded Institut für Kulturforschung, Berlin, sponsored Reiniger’s first film; mid-1930s—with Koch moved to Britain, worked with G.P.O. Film Unit with Len Lye and Norman McLaren; 1936—made The King’s Breakfast, first film in England; 1946—worked with Märchentheater of city of Berlin at Theater am Schiffbauerdamm; beginning 1950—lived and worked mainly for TV, in England; 1950s and 1960s—created sets and figures for English puppet and shadow theater Hoghart’s Puppets; 1953—Primrose Productions set up, sponsored by Fritz Kreisler, Vienna 1932)

Films as Animator:

1919 Das Ornament des verliebten Herzens (The Ornament of the Loving Heart)
1920 Amor und das standhafte Liebespaar
1921 Der fliegende Koffer; Der Stern von Bethlehem
1922 Aschenputtel; Dornröschen
1923–26 Die Geschichte des Prinzen Achmed (Die Abenteuer des Prinzen Achmed; Wok-Wok, ein Märzenzauber; The Adventures of Prince Achmed)
1928 Der scheintote Chinese (originally part of Die Geschichte des Prinzen Achmed); Doktor Dolittle und seine Tiere (The Adventures of Dr. Dolittle) (in 3 parts: Abenteuer: Die Reise nach Afrika; Abenteuer: Die Affenbrücke; Abenteuer: Die Affenkrankheit)
1930 Zehn Minuten Mozart
1931 Harlekin
1932 Sissi (intended as interlude for premiere of operetta Sissi by Fritz Kreisler, Vienna 1932)
1933 Carmen
1934 Das rollende Rad; Der Graf von Carabas; Das gestohlene Herz (The Stolen Heart)
1935 Der kleine Schornsteinfeigere (The Little Chimney Sweep); Galatea; Papageno 1936 The King’s Breakfast
1937 Tocher
1939 Dream Circus (not completed); L’elisir d’amore (not released)
1944 Die goldene Gans (not completed)
1951 Mary’s Birthday
1953 Aladdin (for U.S. TV); The Magic Horse (for U.S. TV); Snow White and Rose Red (for U.S. TV)
1954 The Three Wishes (for U.S. TV); The Grasshopper and the Ant (for U.S. TV); The Frog Prince (for U.S. TV); The Gallant Little Tailor (for U.S. TV); The Sleeping Beauty (for U.S. TV); Caliph Storch (for U.S. TV)
1955 Hansel and Gretel (for U.S. TV); Thumbelina (for U.S. TV); Jack and the Beanstalk (for U.S. TV)
1956 The Star of Bethlehem (theatrical film)
1957 Helen la Belle (theatrical film)
1958 The Seraglio (theatrical film)
1960  The Pied Piper of Hamelin (interlude for theatrical performance)
1961  The Frog Prince (interlude for theatrical performance)
1962  Wee Sandy (interlude for theatrical performance)
1963  Cinderella (interlude for theatrical performance)
1974  The Lost Son (interlude for theatrical performance)
1976  Aucassin et Nicolette (interlude for theatrical performance)
1979  The Rose and the Ring (interlude for theatrical performance)

Other Films:

1916  Rübezahls Hochzeit (Wegener) (silhouettes for intertitles; Die Schöne Prinzessin von China (Gliese) (set decoration, props, and costumes)
1918  Apokalypse (Gliese) (silhouettes for intertitles; Der Rattenfänger von Hameln (The Pied Piper of Hamelin) (Wegener) (silhouettes for intertitles)
1920  Der verlorene Schatten (Gliese) (silhouette sequence)
1923  Die Nibelungen (Lang) (silhouette sequence, not used)
1929–30  Die Jagd nach dem Glück (Running after Luck) (Gliese) (co-story + co-sc + co-sound)
1933  Don Quijotte (Pabst) (opening silhouette sequence)
1937  La Marseillaise (Renoir) (created shadow theater seen in film)

Publications

By REINIGER: books—

(Illustrator) Das Loch im Vorhang, Berlin, 1919.
Venus in Seide, Berlin, 1919.
Der böse Gathsherr und die guten Tiere, Berlin, 1930.
Wander Birds, Bristol, 1934.
Der ewige Esel, Zurich/Fribourg, 1949.
King Arthur and His Knights of the Round Table, London, 1952.
Das gestohlene Herz, Tübingen, 1972.

By REINIGER: articles—

On REINIGER: books—

On REINIGER: articles—

Weaver, Randolph, “‘Prince Achmed’ and Other Animated Silhouettes,” in Theatre Arts (New York), June 1931.
“‘She Made First Cartoon Feature,’” in Films and Filming (London), December 1955.
Hurst, H., “Zum Tode Lotte Reiniger,” in Frauen und Film (Berlin), September 1981.
Film a Doba (Prague), vol. 36, no. 1, January 1990.
EPD Film (Frankfurt), October 1994.
Film-Dienst (Cologne), 13 September 1994.

Lotte Reiniger’s career as an independent filmmaker is among the longest and most singular in film history, spanning some 60 years (1919–79) of actively creating silhouette animation films. Her The Adventures of Prince Achmed is the world’s first feature-length animation film, made when she was in her mid-twenties and winning considerable acclaim.

Silhouette animation existed before 1919, but Reiniger was its preeminent practitioner, transforming a technically and esthetically bland genre to a recognized art form. Since childhood she had excelled at freehand cut-outs and shadow theaters. As a teenager at Max Reinhardt’s acting studio, she was invited by actor-director Paul Wegener to make silhouette decorations for the credits and intertitles of The Pied Piper of Hamelin (1918); she also helped animate the film’s wooden rats, when live guinea pigs proved unmanageable. The rest of Reiniger’s professional life was wholeheartedly devoted to silhouette animation, with an occasional retreat to shadow plays or book illustrations when money was not available for films.

Prominent among Reiniger’s talents was her transcension of the inherent flatness and awkwardness of silhouette animation through her dramatic mise en scène and her balletic movements. Her female characters are especially lively and original, displaying wit, sensuousness, and self-awareness rarely found in animated cartoons (from whose creative ranks women animators were virtually excluded until the 1970s). Few real-life actresses could match the expressiveness with which Reiniger inspired the gestures of her lead-jointed figures as she moved and filmed them fraction by fraction, frame by frame.

For over four decades, Reiniger shared her professional life with her husband, Carl Koch, who designed her animation studio and, until his death in 1963, served as her producer and camera operator. “There was nothing about what is called film-technique that he did not know,” Jean Renoir wrote in his autobiography. (In the late 1930s, Koch collaborated on the scripts and production of Renoir’s celebrated Grand Illusion and Rules of the Game, and on La Marseillaise for which Reinger created a shadow-play sequence.)

Aside from The Adventures of Prince Achmed, Reinger ventured into feature filmmaking only once, in Running after Luck, the story of a wandering showman, part animation and part live-action, which she codirected with Rochus Gliese. It was a critical and financial failure, perhaps because of its imperfect sound system. The rest of her films were shorts, mainly one or two reels in length.

Reinger worked outside commercial channels, with minimal support. She said she never felt discrimination because she was a woman, but she did admit resenting that great sums were spent on films of little or no imagination while so little was available for the films she wanted to make. In the 1970s she was coaxed from her retirement to make two films in Canada; she also toured much of Europe, Canada, and the United States under the auspices of the Goethe House cultural centers of the West German government, showing her films and demonstrating her cut-out animation technique.

Hans Richter, who knew Reinger in the early Berlin years, later wrote that she “belonged to the avant-garde as far as independent production and courage were concerned,” but that the spirit of her work seemed Victorian. Renoir placed her even further back in time, as “a visual expression of Mozart’s music.” It is more likely that, like the fables and myths and fairy tales on which many of her films are based, her work transcends time and fashion.

—Cecile Starr

REISCH, Walter

Films as Writer:

1921 Miss Hobbs (Los vom Mann; Die Tolle Mise) (Kreisler) (titles)
1925 Der Fluch (Land); Frauen aus der Wiener Vorstadt (15 Jahre schweren Kerker) (Hanus); Ein Walzer von Strauss (Neufeld and Kreisler)

1926 Küssen ist keine Sünd (Die letzte Einquartierung) (Walther-Fein); Schützenhüs (Walther-Fein)
1927 Der Bettestudent (J. and L. Fleck); Die Dollarprinzessin und ihre sechs Freier (Basch); Die elf Teufel (Z. Korda); Faschingzauber (Walther-Fein); Das Heiratsnest (Walther-Fein); Die indiskrete Frau (Boese); Ein Mädel aus dem Volke (J. and L. Fleck); Pratermizzi (+ co-d); Ein rheinisches Mädchen beim rheinischen Wein (Guter); Seine Hoheit, der Eintänzer (Das entfesselte Wein) (Leiter); Tingel-Tangel (Ucicky); Trommelfeuer der Liebe (Hartl)
1928 Dragonerliebchen (Walther-Fein); Der Faschingsprinz (Walther-Fein)
1929 Fräulein Fähnrich (Sauer); Die Frau, die jeder liebt, bist du! (Froelich); Der Held aller Mädchenträume (Land); Der lustige Winzer (Land); Der schwarze Domino (Janson); Schwarzwaldmädchen (Janson); Die Nacht gehört uns (Froelich); Dich hab’ ich geliebt (Because I Loved You) (Walther-Fein)
1930 Donauwalzer (Janson); Brand in der Oper (Barcarole) (Froelich); Das Flötenkonzert von Sanssouci (The Flute Concert at Sanssouci) (Ucicky); Mach’ mir die Wely zum Paradies (Merzbach); Das Lied ist aus (von Bolvary); Der Herr auf Bestellung (von Bolvary); Hokuspokus (Hocuspocus) (Ucicky); Wie werde ich reich und glücklich? (Reichmann); Ein Tango für dich (von Bolvary); Va banque (Waschneck); Zwei Herzen im 3/4 Takt (von Bolvary)
1931 Im Geheimdienst (Ucicky); Die lustigen Weiber von Wein (von Bolvary); Der Raub der Mona Lisa (The Theft of the Mona Lisa) (von Bolvary)
1932 Ein blonder Traum (The Blonde Dream) (Martin); Der Prinz von Arkadien (Hartl); F.P. 1 Does Not Answer (Hartl); Die Gräfin von Monte Cristo (Hartl)
1933 Ich und die kaiserin (Heart Song) (Holländer); Leise fliehen meine Lieder (Schuberts unvollendete Symphonie; Unfinished Symphony) (Forst); Saison in Kairo (Schünzel)
1934 Maskerade (Masquerade in Vienna) (Forst)
1935 Episode (+ d); Escapade (Leonard)
1936 Silhouettes (+ d)
1937 Men Are Not Gods (+ d)
1938 The Great Waltz (Duvivier); Gateway (Werk)
1939 Ninotchka (Lubitsch)
1940 My Love Came Back (Bernhardt); Comrade X (K. Vidor)
1941 That Hamilton Woman (Lady Hamilton) (A. Korda); That Uncertain Feeling (Lubitsch)
1942 Seven Sweethearts (Borzage); Somewhere I’ll Find You (Ruggles)
1943 The Heavenly Body (Hall)
1944 Gaslight (Cukor)
1946 Song of Scheherazade (+ d)
1948 The Countess of Monte Cristo (de Cordova)
1949 The Fan (Lady Windermere’s Fan) (Preminger)
1951 The Model and the Marriage Broker (Cukor); The Mating Season (Leisen)
1953 Niagara (Hallaway); Titanic (Negulesco)
1954 Die Mucke (+ d)
1955 Der Cordon (+ d); The Girl in the Red Velvet Swing (Fleischer)
1956 Teenage Rebel (Goulding)
1957 Stopover Tokyo (Breen); Journey to the Center of the Earth (Levin); The Remarkable Mr. Pennypacker (Levin)

Publications

By REISCH: book—

With Charles Brackett and Billy Wilder, Ninotchka (script), New York, 1966.

On REISCH: article—

Cameron, Evan William, in American Screenwriters, 2nd series, edited by Randall Clark, Detroit, Michigan, 1986.

The noted Hollywood screenwriter Walter Reisch really had a two-part career. In the first half he functioned as one of the most important screenwriters of late silent and early sound films in Germany. Like many others he fled the Nazi regime and eventually made his way to Hollywood. From the late 1930s through the 1950s Walter Reisch functioned as a ‘‘writer’s writer’’ in the Golden Age of the Hollywood studio system.

Reisch entered the Austrian film industry as an extra in 1918. But the movie capital of Europe after the First World War was Berlin. Once he terminated his education Reisch moved to Berlin to make his mark in the new art form. He did everything, learning filmmaking from all sides. He translated title cards for silent films, worked as an assistant camera operator for features and newsreels, and helped as an assistant director.

But just as sound was coming in, Reisch saw that the industry would need more screenwriters and permanently moved into that niche of motion picture production. Quickly he rose to become one of the top writers at UFA, then Germany’s largest studio and one of the more powerful movie corporations outside Hollywood. The seizure of power by Adolph Hitler changed everything and eventually forced Reisch to emigrate to the United States.

Although he wrote his first Hollywood screenplay for United Artists he made his way to MGM and settled at that studio from 1938–48. And the hits began to flow at once. The Great Waltz, the fictionalized biography of Johann Strauss, earned millions. In 1939 Reisch wrote the script for Ninotchka with another expatriot, Billy Wilder, and Charles Brackett. Yet another emigré, Ernst Lubitsch, directed. Swedish-born Greta Garbo starred. The film was a major hit and earned the writers an Academy Award nomination.

Reisch’s career at MGM then settled into a routine. It was not until Reisch moved to 20th Century-Fox that he was again united with Charles Brackett to do more of his best work. Their collaborations did well at the box office and stand up well on repeated showings: The Model and the Marriage Broker, The Mating Season, Niagara, and Titanic.

Reisch’s career then closed with a series of mediocre films. He retired gracefully and freelanced as uncredited ‘‘script doctor’’ and lectured widely at universities throughout the world. He provided many a student with tales of what it had been like to work at MGM during the Golden Days of the studio system.

—Douglas Gomery

RENAHAN, Ray

Films as Cophotographer (Technicolor):

1923 Blood Test (dir ph); The Ten Commandments (De Mille) (color sequences only)
1929 Gold Diggers of Broadway (del Ruth)
1930 The King of Jazz (Murray Anderson); The Vagabond King; Whoopee! (Freeland)
1932 Doctor X (Curtiz); Ebb Tide
1933 Mystery of the Wax Museum (Curtiz) (dir ph)
1935 Becky Sharp (Mamoulian) (dir ph)
1937 Wings of the Morning (Schuster) (dir ph)
1938 Her Jungle Love (Archainbaud) (dir ph)
1939 Drums along the Mohawk (Ford) (dir ph); Gone with the Wind (Fleming)
1940 The Blue Bird (Lang); Chad Hanna (King); Down Argentine Way (Cummings); Maryland (King)
1941 Belle Starr (Cummings); Blood and Sand (Mamoulian); Louisiana Purchase (Cummings); That Night in Rio (Cummings)

Films as Cinematographer:

1943 For Whom the Bell Tolls (Wood)
1944 Lady In The Dark (Leisen); Up in Arms (Nugent)
1945 Incendiary Blonde (Marshall); A Thousand and One Nights (Green)
1946 California (Farrow); A Duel in the Sun (Vidor)
1947 The Perils of Pauline (Marshall); Unconquered (De Mille)
1948 The Paleface (McLeod); Whispering Smith (Fenton)
1949 A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur’s Court (Garnett); Streets of Laredo (Fenton)
1950 The Great Missouri Raid (Douglas)
1951 Flaming Feather (Enright); Silver City (Haskin); Warpath (Haskin)
1952 The Denver and Rio Grande (Haskin); Hurricane Smith (Hopper)
1953 Arrowhead (Marquis Warren)
1953 Pony Express (Hopper)
1955 A Lawless Street (Lewis)
1956 Seventh Cavalry (Lewis)
1957 The Guns of Fort Petticoat (Marshall); The Halliday Brand (Lewis)
1958 Terror in a Texas Town (Lewis)

Publications

On RENNAHAN: articles—

Focus on Film, no. 13, 1973.

* * *

As one of the premier Technicolor photographers in Hollywood, Ray Rennahan was a prominent figure in the industry’s transition to color. During the experimental period of the 1920s and 1930s, Rennahan was responsible for supervising such early Technicolor endeavors as Gold Diggers of Broadway (1929), The King of Jazz (1930), and Whoopee! (1930). As Technicolor’s rendering grew more proficient, Rennahan’s reputation grew. By the early 1940s he was one of the busiest photographers in Hollywood, supervising many of the industry’s great Technicolor films. Though his career during the 1950s lacked the impact of his earlier years, Rennahan’s commitment to the Technicolor image remained unchanged—after over fifty years in the industry, his name, more than that of any other, has become synonymous with the art and history of color photography.

When Rennahan entered the industry in 1917 to work with Technicolor, the concept of color film was not yet a viable option. Tinting, toning and hand coloring were commonly practiced, but the actual technology of recording color was still very much in its infancy. Operating as a service firm, Technicolor had established itself to develop and promote a feasible system of recording the natural spectrum. With its own cameras and developing laboratories, it would lease its service to a particular studio and oversee the filming of an assigned project. As company photographer, Rennahan found himself working with various studios as supervisor/assistant to the studio cameramen.

The company’s earliest experiments were novel but not successful. For example, in Whoopee!, an Eddie Cantor vehicle shot at MGM, Rennahan’s photography lacks clarity, while the colors, garish and unreal, are ill defined and muddy. Though the film was reasonably successful in its initial weeks at the box office, attendance soon died down. Returns were not sufficient to warrant the high costs of the process, and the industry deemed it impractical.

In the mid-1930s Technicolor introduced the three-color system. Though the same in principle as the two-color system (it used three negatives—red, green, and blue—instead of two), it offered a wider range of spectrum and a clearer, crisper picture. The first feature to be shot with the system was Becky Sharp (1935), Rouben Mamoulian’s rather stagy version of Thackery’s Vanity Fair. However, as photographer Rennahan gave the picture a radiance and fidelity never before seen. One sequence, in which a ball in Brussels is interrupted by the cannon fire of Napoleon’s army, brilliantly conveys the ensuing panic through a movement from the subtle greys and blues of the ballroom to the violent reds of the soldier’s uniforms. In retrospect, however, the film seems a little too in awe of its own capabilities, with color at times oversused, often to the point of distraction. Nevertheless, the film proved that color could entrance both audience and critics alike. When the picture was released, The Post declared it a dramatic indication of hitherto unrealized possibilities in the art of the motion picture.

Rennahan’s work for Technicolor continued. He went to England in 1937 to shoot the country’s first Technicolor film, Wings of the Morning. While there he proved a considerable influence on British cinematographer Jack Cardiff, with whom he worked. (Cardiff would later work on such Powell/Pressburger films as Black Narcissus [1946] and The Red Shoes [1948].) Rennahan returned to the U.S. the following year to add a colorful touch to Her Jungle Love (1938) and Drums along the Mohawk (1939). In 1939 began work on Gone with the Wind. Working closely with Ernest Haller the cophotographer, and production designer/codirector William Cameron Menzies, Rennahan helped create an intimacy and grandeur through the film’s ground-breaking, superlative use of low-key photography. Made just four years after the advent of three-color production, the film remains the most extravagant and breathtaking example of the use of the technology. Though many talents contributed to the look of the film, Rennahan’s efforts remained significant enough for him to collect his first Academy Award, shared with Haller.

Technicolor at this stage had mastered the industry. Rennahan continued, under his contract with Technicolor, to move from one studio to the next, and in 1941 he shot what is perhaps his greatest achievement. Blood and Sand, a remake of the Valentino silent concerning the rise and fall of a Spanish bullfighter, was directed by Mamoulian, with Tyrone Power in the starring role. Influenced by the styles of various Spanish painters, Rennahan and Mamoulian used the vivid and striking hues of Goya for the film’s dramatic bullfight scenes, while the solemn hues of El Greco were employed for many of the film’s quieter, more reflective moments. In short, the color not only aided the tone of the action—the bullfight scenes owe more to the actual photography than either the editing (which never fails to hide the use of a double) or the acting (Power is unsuitably timid in his role)—but also helped to articulate the theme. Rennahan’s use of shadow and gloom perfectly captures the film’s foreshadowing of, and preoccupation with, death.

In 1943, with the epic, somber-toned For Whom the Bell Tolls, Rennahan left Technicolor and began a career as an independent director of photography. His subsequent films ranged from colorful musicals (Up in Arms [1944]), to exotic fantasies (A Thousand and One Nights [1945]), and lavish westerns (A Duel in the Sun [1946]). Much of his later career was identified with rather formulaic westerns, and in the late 1950s he retired from the motion picture industry and worked for a period in television. His work there was associated with such shows as Wells Fargo, Suspicion, and Laramie. At various times he served as president and secretary of the American Society of Cinematographers. In 1980, after a long, productive career, he died at the age of eighty-four.

—Peter Flynn
RENOIR, Claude

Films as General Assistant and Cameraman:

1932 La Nuit du carrefour (Night at the Crossroads) (J. Renoir); Bondu sauvée des eaux (J. Renoir)
1936 La Vie est à nous (The People of France) (J. Renoir)
1937 Le Chanteur de minuit (Joannon); La Grande Illusion (Grand Illusion) (J. Renoir) (+ asst d)
1938 La Bête humaine (The Human Beast) (J. Renoir) (+ asst d); La Marseillaise (J. Renoir); Légions d’honneur (Gleize); Lumières de Paris (Pottier); La Piste de sud (Billon); Les Rois de la flotte (Pujol)
1939 Le Dernier Tournant (Chenal); L’Enfer des anges (Christian-Jaque); Sérénade (Boyer)

Films as Cinematographer:

1935 Toni (J. Renoir)
1936 Prison sans barreaux (Moguy) (co)
1942 Opéra-Musette (co-d)
1943 Bonsoir mesdames, bonsoir messieurs (Tual); L’Aventure est au coin de la rue (Daniel-Norman)
1945 Le Couple idéal (Roland); L’Extravagante Mission (Calef); Jéricho (Calef)
1946 Les Chouans (Calef); La Mission sous la mer (Calef); Le Père tranquille (Mr. Orchid) (Clément and Noël-Noël); Une Partie de campagne (A Day in the Country) (J. Renoir—produced 1936)
1947 Monseigneur Vincent (Cloche); La Grande Violeire (Péchet)
1948 L’Impasse des deux anges (Tournier); Docteur Lânnac (Cloche); Alice au pays des merveilles (Alice in Wonderland) (Bunin and others) (co); Pyrénées, terre de légendes (Lods—short) (co)
1949 Rendez-vous de juillet (Becker); Prélude à la gloire (Lacombe); Images gothiques (Cloche—short); Sculptures au moyen-âge (Cloche—short)
1950 Né de père inconnu (Cloche); Knock (Lefranc); Clara de Montargis (Decoin)
1951 The River (J. Renoir); Monsieur Fabre (Diamant-Berger); The Green Glove (Maté)
1953 Le Carrosse d’or (The Golden Coach) (J. Renoir); Puccini (Gallone); Maddalena (Genina)
1954 India favolosa (Macchi)
1955 Madame Butterfly (Gallone); Un Missionnaire (Cloche); Le Mystère Picasso (Clouzot)
1956 Eléna et les hommes (Paris Does Strange Things) (J. Renoir); Crime et châtiment (Lampin); Les Sorcières de Salem (Rouleau)

1957 Une Vie (Astruc)
1958 Délit de fuite (Borderie); Les Tricheurs (The Cheaters) (Carné)
1959 La Valse du gorille (Borderie); Sergent X (Borderie)
1960 Et mourir de plaisir (Blood and Roses) (Vadim); Terrain vague (Carné)
1961 Les Amants de Tersul (Rouleau); Lafayette (Drévillet)
1962 Symphonie pour un massacre (Deray)
1963 Cleopatra (Mankiewicz) (2nd unit)
1964 Circus World (The Magnificent Showman) (Hathaway) (2nd unit); L’Insoumis (Cavalier)
1965 Paris au mois d’aout (Granier-Deferré)
1966 La Curée (The Game Is Over) (Vadim); La Grande Vadrouille (Oury)
1968 Barbarella (Vadim); Histoires extraordinaires (Spirits of the Dead) (Fellini, Malle, and Vadim)
1969 Mademoiselle de Chaillot (Forbes) (co)
1970 The Lady in a Car with Glasses and a Gun (Litvak); The Adventurers (Gilbert); The Horsemen (Frankenheimer)
1971 Le Casse (Verneuil); Les Mariés de l’an deux (Rappeneau)
1972 Hellé (Vadim); Le Tueur (de la Patellière); Le Serpent (Verneuil)
1973 L’Impossible Objet (Impossible Object) (Frankenheimer); Paul and Michelle (Gilbert)
1974 La Traque (Leroy)
1975 Docteur Françoise Gaillard (Bertuccelli); French Connection II (Frankenheimer)
1976 L’Aile, ou la cuisse (Zidi); Attention les enfants regardent (Leroy); The Spy Who Loved Me (Gilbert)
1978 La Zazzanie (Zidi)
1979 La Toubib (Granier-Deferré)

Film as Producer:

1939 Règle du jeu (Rules of the Game) (J. Renoir)

Publications

By RENOIR: articles—

Ciné France Mensuel, January 1965.
Cinématographe (Paris), April 1979.

On RENOIR: articles—

Film Français (Paris), no. 2346, April 1991; no. 2472, September 1993.
In a distinguished career tragically foreshortened by failing eyesight, Claude Renoir demonstrated his versatility and technical ingenuity in over eighty films and, though principally associated with luxuriant color photography, he also achieved notable successes with monochrome. His early mentors included Jean Bachelet, Maurice Lucien, and Joseph Louis Mundwiller, although the cinematographers who most marked his development were Christian Matras and Boris Kaufman. His formative years were almost inevitably associated with the work of his pre-eminently famous uncle, Jean Renoir, and in the prewar period he gained invaluable experience of filmmaking both as his general assistant and cameraman. In the latter role he showed considerable physical courage to produce airborne shots in La Grande Illusion (1937), and to capture the dangerous high-speed train sequences for La Bête humaine (1938) when, strapped to a platform on the side of the engine, he almost lost his life as the train entered a narrower-then-expected tunnel.

In terms of his uncle’s monochrome films, Renoir’s sensitivity to light and composition are perhaps most in evidence in Toni (1935) and Une Partie de campagne (1946). In Toni, relying only on natural light for the exteriors, his deep, fluid camerawork delicately framed the protagonists in their romantic country setting, while in the dramatic switch of mood in the murder sequence, he achieved memorable tension through tightly framed close-ups. The observant, unobtrusive camera work tracing the characters through their natural setting anticipates in style a key determinant of postwar Italian neorealism. The exploitation of light is again intrinsic to the creation of the more lyrical mood of Une Partie de campagne which is steeped in the vibrant atmosphere of Auguste Renoir’s Impressionist canvases. Of particular interest is the lyrical swing sequence, seemingly inspired by the painter’s La balançoire, in which a mobile camera moves in harmony with the swing’s oscillations, thus bringing the audience to share directly in the sensation of motion. The cinematographer’s most celebrated monochrome achievement, however, came with Monsieur Vincent (1947) directed by Maurice Cloche, in which the unemphatic beauty of his compositions were integral to the depiction of the self-denying subject, the sixteenth-century priest, Vincent de Paul.

Renoir’s first tentative excursion into color photography was at the instigation of Jean Renoir who had decided to experiment with the color format for his film The River (1951), filmed on location in India. Unimpressed by Hollywood’s eye-catching use of color, the director sought more muted tones and these the photographer achieved with such success that previously dismissive attitudes in France towards color were changed fundamentally. Thereafter color photography could be taken seriously and in successive films during the fifties, Renoir exploited to the full the potential of polychromatic film. For Renoir’s high-spirited, theatrical story Le Carrosse d’or (1953), with its exotic Peruvian setting and magnificent costumes, he deployed color to bring a warm, carefree glamour, while in Eleanor et les hommes (1956), he presented Paris of the 1880s as a series of color prints, often working closely within a striking range of contrastive reds and blues. In much darker vein, in his only feature film for Alexandre Astruc, Une Vie (1957), he created deeply resonant images of the damp, green Normandy landscape to translate the pessimistic mood of Maupassant’s tragic romance.

The sixties brought an association with the former fashion photographer Roger Vadim who, now, as film director, sought to bring a visual sensuality to the cinema. Renoir readily espoused this aesthetic and in turn provided the elegantly modulated tones of Et Mourir de plaisir (1960) with its striking dream sequence composed in black, white and red, the suggestive color compositions of La Curée (1966), which includes visual references to Antonioni’s color experiments in Il Deserto rosso (1964) and the lurid, psychedelic registers of the futuristic Barbarella (1968). For Oury in La Grande Vadrouille (1966), Renoir excelled in capturing the beauty of the Meursault locations, while his misty sequence in a Turkish bath produced images of captivating delicacy. The decade also brought work with American filmmakers, though initially only as second unit for Mankiewicz’s Cleopatra (1963), and Hathaway’s Circus World (1964). For Frankenheimer, using super panavison, he captured the rugged wilds of Afghanistan for The Horseman (1970) and after this director’s scenic action film French Connection II (1975), Claude Renoir again showed his ability to distill the essence of exotic locations in Gilbert’s The Spy Who Loved Me (1976), while also drawing on his accumulated experience of lighting to make the most, in dramatic terms, of the huge Pinewood set.

No account of Renoir’s film career would be complete without reference to his documentary work. After Monsieur Vincent, he continued his association with Maurice Cloche and brought his skills as a lighting cameraman to studies of the plastic arts in Images gothiques (1949) and Sculptures au moyen-âge (1949). Renoir’s most interesting achievement in this domain, however, was Le Mystère, Picasso (1955) for Henri Clouzot. Using specially prepared transparent “canvases,” he was able to film the painter at work and thus produce a unique record of artistic creation.

Throughout his four decades as a cinematographer, Renoir adapted readily to the requirements of successive directors and was equally at home with documentaries, delicately observed romances, discreetly narrated stories of self-effacing characters or rumbustious, all-action movies. Acknowledged by his peers as an articulate commentator on the craft of the cinematographer, he contributed articles to professional journals on color photography and technical innovation. His eye for color and composition frequently redeemed otherwise indiferent films and his intelligent contribution both to the theory and practice of cinematography was entirely worthy of the illustrious Renoir name.

—R. F. Cousins

REVILLE, Alma

Films as Cowriter for Alfred Hitchcock:

1927  The Ring
1929  Juno and the Paycock
1930  Murder
1931  The Skin Game; Rich and Strange (East of Shanghai)
1932  Number Seventeen
1934  Waltzes from Vienna (Strauss’ Great Waltz)
1935  The 39 Steps
1936  The Secret Agent; Sabotage (A Woman Alone)
1937  Young and Innocent (The Girl Was Young)
1938  The Lady Vanishes
1939  Jamaica Inn
1941  Suspicion
1944  Shadow of a Doubt
1947  The Paradine Case
1950  Stage Fright
1953  I Confess (uncredited)

Other Films as Cowriter:

1928  The Constant Nymph (Brunel); The First Born (Mander)
1929  After the Verdict (Galeen)
1931  The Outsider (Lachman); Sally in Our Alley (Elvey)
1932  The Water Gipsies (Elvey); Nine till Six (Dean)
1934  Forbidden Country (Rosen)
1935  The Passing of the Third Floor Back (Viertel)
1945  It’s in the Bag (Wallace)

Film as Editor:

1923  Woman to Woman (Cutts)

Publications

By REVILLE: articles—

Sight and Sound (London), Autumn 1976.

On REVILLE: articles—

Obituary, in Cinématographe, no. 82, October 1982.

Alma Reville’s career is difficult to assess, since during most of it she worked exclusively on the films of her husband, director Alfred Hitchcock. Her contribution to his work fluctuated during the course of their 50-year marriage. It was sometimes that of a professional screenwriter or consultant, more often that of a supportive and knowledgeable wife.

Reville entered the British film industry even earlier than her husband, whose career spanned both the silent and sound eras. From the age of 16, Reville worked as a cutter (editor), first at the London Film Company, then at Famous Players-Lasky’s English branch at Islington. Hitchcock’s courtship of her began at the latter studio when he invited her to work as a cutter on Woman to Woman, an independent production which he was assistant directing under Graham Cutts at Islington; thus from the beginning, the couple’s relationship was based on a combination of personal and professional interests. She shared her first screenwriting credit with Hitchcock as cowriter of his boxing melodrama The Ring in 1927, while continuing to work with other directors as scriptwriter, continuity girl, and assistant director.

Ambitious and talented, Reville sought to move into the director’s chair herself. But the birth of a daughter, Patricia Alma, in 1928 and the family’s subsequent move to America altered her ambitions. Joan Harrison, whom Hitchcock hired as a secretary in 1935, quickly took over many of the routine production duties which had previously been Reville’s responsibility, while Reville focused exclusively on preparation of her husband’s scripts. Harrison eventually became involved in this capacity too, often sharing screen credit with Reville. When the Hitchcocks moved to America in 1939 so that Hitchcock could work under personal contract to David O. Selznick, Harrison went along.

The scripts Reville worked on for Hitchcock in Hollywood were Suspicion, a troubled project which was nearly not released; The Paradine Case, on which producer Selznick was more exasperating in his interference with Hitchcock than usual; Stage Fright; and I Confess, which was made on Reville’s initiative, but proved to be a box office failure. Three of these films concern a man who betrays a woman. Reville was partly responsible for this pattern, which probably reflected her attitude toward her husband, whose interest in her waxed and waned; the couple’s marriage was reportedly celibate after the birth of their daughter as Hitchcock’s romantic fancy attached itself silently and unreciprocally to the various glamorous blondes in his films.

In the mid-1950s, at the peak of Hitchcock’s confidence and power, Reville retreated firmly into the background and stayed there. He still sought and respected his wife’s judgment on potential projects and relied on her keen eye for detail during the editing process. A famous story about Psycho has it that Reville saved its most famous sequence from being marred by a significant blemish that no one else had caught during months of editing. As the final cut was being prepared for release, Hitchcock showed it to her. She alone spotted a single blink of Janet Leigh’s eye as the actress lay “dead” following the notorious shower murder scene. The gaffe was replaced with a cutaway shot, and Psycho went out to theaters, the sequence shocking audiences around the world and making film history.

—Patricia Ferrara, updated by John McCarty

REYNOLDS, William H.

Films as Assistant Editor:

1935  The Farmer Takes a Wife (Fleming); The Gay Deception (Wyler)
1936  Big Brown Eyes (Walsh); Her Master’s Voice (Santley); Palm Springs (Scotto); Spendthrift (Walsh); John Meade’s Woman (E. Griffith)
1939  Honeymoon in Bali (E. Griffith)
1940  A Night at Earl Carroll’s (Neumann); Typhoon (L. King)

Films as Editor:

1937  52nd Street (Young)
1938  Algiers (Cromwell)
1941  So Ends Our Night (Cromwell)
1942  Moonlight (Mayo)
1947  Carnival in Costa Rica (Ratoff)
1948  Give My Regards to Broadway (Bacon); The Street with No Name (Keighley); You Were Meant for Me (Bacon)
1949  Come to the Stable (Koster); Mother Is a Freshman (Bacon)
1950  The Big Lift (Seaton) (co); Halls of Montezuma (Milestone)
1951  The Day the Earth Stood Still (Wise); The Frogmen (Bacon); Take Care of My Little Girl (Negulesco)
1952  The Outcasts of Poker Flat (Newman); Red Skies of Montana (Newman)
1953  Beneath the 12-Mile Reef (Webb); Dangerous Crossing (Newman); The Kid from Left Field (Jones)
1954  Desiree (Koster); Three Coins in the Fountain (Negulesco)
1955  Daddy Long Legs (Negulesco); Good Morning, Miss Dove (Koster); Love Is a Many-Splendored Thing (H. King)
1956  Bus Stop (Logan); Carousel (H. King)
1958  In Love and War (Dunne); South Pacific (Logan) (co)
1959  Beloved Infidel (H. King); Blue Denim (Dunne); Compulsion (Fleischer)
1960  Wild River (Kazan); Fanny (Logan)
1962  Taras Bulba (Lee Thompson) (co); Tender Is the Night (H. King)
1963  Kings of the Sun (Lee Thompson)
1964  Ensign Pulver (Logan)
1965  The Sound of Music (Wise)
1966  Our Man Flint (Daniel Mann); The Sand Pebbles (Wise)
1968  Star! (Wise)
1969  Hello, Dolly! (Kelly)
1970  The Great White Hope (Ritt)
1971  What’s the Matter with Helen? (Harrington)
1972  The Godfather (Coppola) (co)
1973  The Sting (Hill); Two People (Wise)
1975  The Great Waldo Pepper (Hill); The Master Gunfighter (Laughlin) (co)
1976  The Entertainer (Wrye) (co); The Seven-Per-Cent Solution (Ross) (supervising ed)
1977  The Turning Point (Ross)
1979  A Little Romance (Hill)
1980  Heaven’s Gate (Cimino)
1982  Making Love (Hiller); Author! Author! (Hiller)
1983  Yellowbeard (Damski)
1984  The Lonely Guy (Hiller) (co); The Little Drummer Girl (Hill)
1986  Pirates (Polanski) (co)
1987  Dancers (Ross); Ishtar (E. May)
1988  A New Life (Alda)
1989  rooftops (Wise)
1990  Taking Care of Business (Hiller)
1992  Newsies (Ortega)
1993  Gypsy (Ardolino—for TV)
1996  Carpool (Hiller)

Publications

By REYNOLDS: articles—

American Cinemeditor (Los Angeles), Summer/Fall 1981.
American Cinemeditor (Los Angeles), Winter 1984/Spring 1985.

On REYNOLDS: article—

Film Comment (New York), March/April 1977.

* * *

William H. Reynolds is a consummate film editor who takes a straightforward approach to his craft, relying on seamless editing which never calls attention to itself. In nearly six decades as an editor he has cut some of the most popular commercial American movies, including The Sting, The Godfather (with Peter Zinner), Algiers, The Sound of Music, and South Pacific. Reynolds has been fortunate to work with strong directors appreciative of the editing process, such as Robert Wise, George Roy Hill, Elia Kazan, and Francis Ford Coppola.

Reynolds started at Fox in 1934 as a laborer on the swing gang, moving props around the studio. He had a chance to observe firsthand the workings of the studio system assembly line, and quickly focused on editing. He learned his trade from editor Robert Simpson, who took him along to Paramount in 1936 as his assistant. Paramount was the only studio with a policy of keeping the editor on the set, enabling the assistant editor to assemble the first cut, in addition to the usual assistant chores of logging, syncing, and maintaining the edit trims and paperwork. This was an invaluable training ground, and while at Paramount Reynolds also assisted such old-line editors as Stuart Gilmore, Eda Warren, and Alma MacCrorie.

After only two years as an assistant, Reynolds quickly became an editor when editor-turned-director Harold Young asked him to cut the musical 52nd Street for the Walter Wanger organization. Wanger was pleased enough with young Reynolds’s work to ask him to edit his important production of Algiers, an American remake of the French Pépé le Moko. Charles Boyer and Hedy Lamarr played the star-crossed lovers in the exotic romantic drama directed by John Cromwell. A scene-by-scene re-creation of the Duvivier original, Algiers was a commercial success and established Reynolds’s reputation. His greatest challenge on the film was making Lamarr’s inadequate performance work. Reynolds also cut So Ends Our Night, an intelligent World War II drama, for Cromwell.

In 1942 Reynolds signed as a staff editor with Twentieth Century-Fox. Studio chief Darryl F. Zanuck was himself a brilliant editor and maintained the best editorial department in Hollywood. Zanuck was extremely involved in postproduction, and Reynolds refined his editing skills under Zanuck’s auspices, working with such veteran directors as Henry King, Lewis Milestone, Archie Mayo, Lloyd Bacon, and William Keighley. During his 20 years at Fox, Reynolds emerged as a top editor.
Musicals were a staple at the studio, and Reynolds was entrusted with cutting Give My Regards to Broadway, Daddy Long Legs, Carousel, South Pacific, and The Sound of Music, subtly blending musical sequences with the narrative. Reynolds credits Zanuck’s expertise as a creative producer, and has noted that Zanuck would excise an expensive number if he felt it did not work within the context of the completed picture. Reynolds also handled the editing chores on such slick romantic dramas as Desiree, Three Coins in the Fountain, and Love Is a Many-Splendored Thing. Fox was the home of CinemaScope, and these titles were shot in the process. Reynolds helped bring montage to CinemaScope, since the early 'Scope films tended to play as much action as possible in a single shot, with minimal cutting.

At Fox, Reynolds was teamed with two directors with whom he did some of his best work, Robert Wise and Joshua Logan. Wise, a former editor (Citizen Kane), called Reynolds one of his favorite editors, and they worked together on the science-fiction classic The Day the Earth Stood Still, as well as The Sound of Music, The Sand Pebbles, Star!, and Two People. The Wise films reflect a great diversity of style and content, from the high-budget adventure of The Sand Pebbles to the intimate character study of Two People. The Sound of Music was unique in its integration of the traditional musical form with a highly dramatic story; an attempt to equal its success with Star!, a biography of Gertrude Lawrence, failed at the box office. The Day the Earth Stood Still and The Sand Pebbles are the best of the Wise-Reynolds collaborations, both impeccably paced and edited in an engrossing manner with an emphasis on drama and suspense.

Reynolds has also had a productive relationship with Joshua Logan on Bus Stop, South Pacific (co-edited with Robert Simpson), Fanny, and Ensign Pulver. Reynolds was present on the set for these pictures to assist the theater director Logan in his transition to screen directing. Bus Stop gave Marilyn Monroe one of her best vehicles; South Pacific was an enormously successful musical adapted from the Broadway hit; and Ensign Pulver a competent sequel to Mister Roberts. Fanny is an underrated work, a poignant romance that Reynolds and Logan managed to keep moving despite a 133-minute running time. In the midst of these entertainments, Reynolds edited two powerful dramas, Richard Fleischer’s Compulsion and Elia Kazan’s Wild River, atypical Hollywood fare.

In the 1970s and 1980s, Reynolds was very much in demand by some of the industry’s top directorial talent. Most notably, his work included the blockbusters The Godfather and The Sting, and two ambitious failures, Heaven’s Gate and Pirates. On The Godfather, he shared editing chores with Peter Zinner, alternating scenes during the film’s New York production. During the postproduction period in San Francisco, director Coppola assigned Reynolds the first half of the gangster epic, and Zinner the second portion. Reynolds’s work includes the lengthy wedding sequence up to and including the murder of Sollozzo in the restaurant. Reynolds has commented that his main challenge on The Godfather was coordinating the multitude of characterization and action in the wedding scene.

For Hill’s The Sting, Reynolds emulated the editing stylistics of the 1930s, in keeping with the period flavor of the Paul Newman-Robert Redford con story. Reynolds’s other films for Hill include The Great Waldo Pepper, about the daredevil barnstorming pilots of the Roaring Twenties, marked by inspired aerial sequences; the charming A Little Romance; and The Little Drummer Girl, adapted from John le Carré’s best-seller about terrorism. Reynolds worked on two interesting commercial failures, Polanski’s long-awaited but ultimately disappointing Pirates, and Michael Cimino’s epic Heaven’s Gate.

Reynolds cut the prologue (set in Oxford) and the epilogue (set in Newport) on Heaven’s Gate, then stayed with the picture through the disastrous opening.

For more than 50 years, on about 70 movies, William Reynolds has invested his work with “invisible” editing that serves to move the narrative forward with a minimum of editing tricks. In an interview with this writer, he stated that his job is to “try to make the best possible version of what you as editor take to be the director’s idea of the film.” Reynolds has won two Oscars for editing (on The Sting and The Sound of Music) and earned an additional five nominations (Fanny, The Sand Pebbles, Hello, Dolly!, The Godfather, The Turning Point), but perhaps his greatest accolade came in 1977, when in a Film Comment poll of his colleagues, Reynolds was named one of the three top film editors, along with William Hornbeck and Dede Allen.

—John A. Gallagher

RISKIN, Robert

New York, 1926–30; 1931—first film as writer, Men in Her Life: contract at Columbia, often working with Frank Capra; 1941—adviser to British government on film as propaganda; then worked with the Office of War Information: created the Overseas Motion Picture Bureau, and served as its chief, 1942–45; 1945—formed Robert Riskin Productions; 1950—stroke ended his writing career.

Films as Writer:

1931 Men in Her Life (Beaudine); Platinum Blonde (Capra); Three Wise Girls (Beaudine)
1932 The Big Timer (Buzzell); American Madness (Capra); Night Club Lady (Cummings); Virtue (Buzzell); Shopworn (Grinde)
1933 Ann Carver’s Profession (Buzzell); Lady for a Day (Capra); Ex-Lady (Florey)
1934 It Happened One Night (Capra); Broadway Bill (Capra)
1935 Carnival (W. Lang); The Whole Town’s Talking (Ford)
1936 Mr. Deeds Goes to Town (Capra)
1937 When You’re in Love (+ d); Lost Horizon (Capra)
1938 You Can’t Take It with You (Capra)
1941 Meet John Doe (Capra)
1944 The Thin Man Goes Home (Thorpe) (+ pr)
1947 Magic Town (Wellman) (+ pr)
1950 Mister 880 (Goulding)
1951 Half Angel (Sale); Here Comes the Groom (Capra)

Films as Associate Producer:

1939 They Shall Have Music (Mayo); The Real Glory (Hathaway)

Publications

By RISKIN: books—

Lady for a Day and It Happened One Night (scripts) in Four-Star Scripts, edited by Lorraine Noble, New York, 1936.
Mr. Smith Goes to Washington (script) in Twenty Best Film Plays, edited by John Gassner and Dudley Nichols, New York, 1943.

On RISKIN: articles—

Films and Filming (London), March 1972.

“Whey You’re In Love,” in Reid’s Film Index (New South Wales), no. 20, 1996.

* * *

A writer of sophisticated stage plays in the late 1920s and early 1930s, Robert Riskin had over 20 screen credits in a career which lasted two-and-a-half decades. More than half of his work was with Frank Capra—a creative union which culminated in some of Riskin’s best screenplays. Among these works are American Madness, Lady for a Day, It Happened One Night, Mr. Deeds Goes to Town, Lost Horizon, and Meet John Doe. Of these only Lost Horizon is an adaptation—and it is a solid translation of the novel that became a successful film that won popular and critical acclaim.

The collaboration of Capra and Riskin evidently became a vital force in creating a body of some of the best Capra films. While it is difficult to judge how much Riskin added to a Capra film, a close reading of the director’s work indicates that his favorite writer probably influenced some of the satirical and sophisticated tone of the films—not necessarily changing Capra’s overall vision, but polishing many of the aspects of his creation. Since Riskin was schooled in the sophisticated stage comedy he was well able to provide Claudette Colbert, the rich man’s daughter in It Happened One Night, with plausible and sparkling dialogue. Working for other directors in the early 1930s, Riskin handled urbane characters in such works as Men in Her Life, Night Club Lady, and Virtue. Even in these minor works critics lauded the characterization and the wisecracks as they had praised his dialogue and comedy characters for the stage dramas Bless You, Sister and Many a Slip. Riskin added insight and effective dialogue for the protagonist bank president and his high-society friends in Capra’s American Madness. The director, although also a writer, was not noted for handling this type of material in his 1920s films.

Some of the Riskin touch is evident in even his most atypical work, the adaptation of Lost Horizon. Two characters, played by Edward Everett Horton and Thomas Mitchell, were given comic characteristics that did not exist in the novel. In the 1940s Riskin became a producer-writer on his own and created the fifth in the series of “thin man” pictures, The Thin Man Goes Home, plus a film called Magic Town, a work that had many of the characteristics of a Capra picture. But the magic in Riskin’s dialogue began to fade and he would never equal his best work of the past, when he had a marvelous symbiotic relationship with Frank Capra.

—Donald W. McCaffrey

ROACH, Hal

Hal Roach (right) with Oliver Hardy and Stan Laurel

Films as Producer (Shorts):

1914 Willie (Campbell); Willie’s Haircut (MacGregor); Willie Goes to Sea (Campbell)
1920 Number Please (Newmeyer)
1921 Now or Never (Newmeyer); Among Those Present (Newmeyer); Never Weaken (Newmeyer)
1922 The Timber Queen (Jackman—serial); The Ropin’ Fool (Badger); Fruits of the Faith (Badger); Our Gang (McGowan); Young Sherlocks (McGowan and McNamara)
1923 Her Dangerous Path (Clements—serial); Get Your Man (Jeske); The Smile Wins (Jeske); Boys to Board (McNamara); Good Riddance (Jeske); Jus’ Passin’ Through (Parrott); Hustlin’ Hawk (Pembroke); Uncensored Movies (Clements); Two Wagons. Both Covered (Wagner)
1924 Short Kilts (Jeske); Smithy (Jeske); Postage Due (Jeske); Zeb vs. Paprika (Cedar); Near Dublin (Cedar); Brothers under the Chin (Cedar); The Cowboy Shiek (Howe); The Cake Eater (Howe); Big Moments from Little Pictures (Howe); High Brow Stuff (Wagner); Going to Congress (Wagner); Rupert of Cole Slaw (Rupert of Hee-Haw) (Pembroke);

Wide Open Spaces (Jeske); Our Congressman (Wagner); A Truthful Liar (Del Ruth); Gee Whiz Genevieve! (Howe); Don’t Park There! (Guiol); Jubilo, Jr. (McGowan)

1925 Is Marriage the Bunk (McCarey); Isn’t Life Terrible? (McCarey); Yes, Yes, Nanette (Laurel and Hennecke); Wandering Papas (Laurel)
1926 Madame Mystery (Laurel and Wallace); Long Live the King (McCarey); Thundering Fleas (McCagowan); Along Came Auntie (Guiol); Crazy Like a Fox (McCagrey); Be Your Age (McCagrey); The Nickel Hopper (Jones); Should Men Walk Home? (McCagrey); Should Tall Men Marry (Bruckman)
1927 Why Girls Say No (McCagrey); Slipping Wives (Guiol); The Honorable Mr. Buggs (Jackman); Flirting Hearts (Parrott); Love ‘em and Weep (Guiol); Why Girls Love Sailors (Guiol); With Love and Hisses (Guiol); Sailors Beware (Guiol); Hats Off (Yates); Love ‘em and Feed ‘em (Bruckman); Do Detectives Think? (Guiol); Call of the Cuckoo (Bruckman); Assistant Wives (Parrott); Flying Elephants (Butler); Galloping Ghosts (Parrott); Putting Pants on Philip (Bruckman); The Lighter That Failed (Parrott)
1928 The Boy Friend (Guiol); Speck-Spoofing (McGowan); Rainy Days (Mack); The Finishing Touch (Bruckman); The Family Group (Guiol); Dumb Daddies (Yates); Edison, Marconi, & Co. (Mack); Spooking (McGowan); Aching Youth (Guiol); From Soup to Nuts (Kennedy); Came the Dawn (Heath); Barnum and Ringling, Inc. (McGowan); Blow By Blow (Parrott); You’re Darn Tootin’ (Kennedy); Limousine Love (Guiol); Tell It to the Judge (Guiol and Yates); The Fight Pest (Guiol); Fair and Muddy (O’Oe); Should Women Drive? (Yates); Crazy House (McGowan); That Night (Heath); School Begins (Mack); The Ol’ Gray Hoss (McGowan); Early to Bed (Flynn); Imagine My Embarrassment (Yates); Is Everybody Happy? (Yates); Should Married Men Go Home? (Parrott); The Battle of the Century (Bruckman); The Booster (Yates); Do Gentlemen Snore? (Heath); Growing Pains (Mack); A Pair of Tights (Yates); Their Purple Moment (Parrott); Habeas Corpus (Parrott)
1929 Bacon Grabbers (Foster); Doofy Whoopee (Foster); Hotter Than Hot (Foster); Men o’ War (Foster); Railroadin’ (McGowan); Crazy Feet (Doane); Lazy Days (McGowan); Boxing Gloves (Mack); Little Mother (McGowan); Wiggle Your Ears (McGowan); Loud Soup (Foster); The Holy Terror (Mack); Dog Heaven (Mack); Berth Marks (Foster); Big Business (Horne); The Hoose-Gow (Parrott); The Big Squawk (Doane); Cat, Dog, & Co. (Mack); Bouncing Babies (McGowan); Shivering Shakespeare (Mack); The Real McCoy (Doane); Noisy Noises (McGowan); Movie Nights (Foster); Snappy Sneeker (Doane); The Perfect Day (Parrott); Sky Boy (Rogers); They Go Boom (Parrott); Thin Twins (Horne); Leaping Love (Doane); That’s My Wife (French); Angora Love (Foster); Feed ‘em and Weep (Guiol); The Head Guy (Guiol); Rainy Days (Mack); Skirt Shy (Rogers); Stepping Out (Foster); Unaccustomed as We Are (Foster); Saturday’s Lesson (McGowan)
1930 Pups Is Pups (McGowan); Below Zero (Parrott); Blotto (Parrott); The King (Horne and Rogers); When the Wind Blows (Horne); The Big Kick (Doane); Fast Work (Horne); Night Owls (Parrott); The Brats (Parrott); A Tough Winter (McGowan); The Laurel and Hardy Murder Case (Parrott)
The Fighting Parson (Rogers and Guiol); The Shrimp (Rogers); The First Seven Years (McGowan); All Tied Up (Kennedy)

1931 Call a Cop! (Stevens); Shiver My Timbers (McGowan); High Gear (Stevens); Catch-as-Catch-Can (Neilan); Dogs Is Dogs (McGowan); One Good Turn (Horne); Come Clean (Horne); The Kick-Off! (Stevens); One of the Smurfs (Parrott); The Panic Is On (Parrott); Helpmates (Parrott); Beau Hunks (Parrott); Beau Chumps (Horne); Big Ears (McGowan); Hasty Marriage (Pratt); Readin’ and Writin’ (McGowan); Skip the Maloos (Parrott); War Mamas (Neilan); What a Bozo (Parrott)

1932 Wild Babies (Mack and French); Free Eats (McCary); Hook and Ladder (McGowan); The Old Bull (Marshall); First in War (Doane); Love Pains (Horne); The Nickel Nurse (Doane); Free Wheeling (McGowan); The Pooch (McGowan); Scram (McCary); A Lad an a Lamp (McGowan); Spanky (McGowan); You’re Telling Me! (French and Mack); The Soilers (Marshall); Their First Mistake (Marshall); Strictly Unreliable (Marshall); Alum and Eve (Marshall); Girl Grief (Parrott); Hot Spot (Lord); Show Business (White); Too Many Women (Mack and French); What Price Taxi (Lord); Young Ironsides (Parrott); The Chimp (Parrott); Choo-Choo (McGowan); County Hospital (Parrott); In Walked Charley (Doane); The Knockout (Mack and French); The Music Box (Parrott); Red Noses (Horne)

1933 Sons of the Desert (Seiter); Busy Bodies (French); Wild Poses (McGowan); Asleep in the Feet (Meins); One Truck Minds (Meins); Bedtime Worries (McGowan); Lunchen at Twelve (Parrott); Crook’s Tour (McGowan); The Rummy (Lord); Thundering Taxis (Lord); Mudsummer Munch (Parrott); The Cracked Ice Man (Parrott); Beauty and the Bus (Meins); Dirty Work (French); Sherman Said It (Parrott); Twin Screws (Parrott); Rhapsody in Brew (Gilbert); Mash and Milk (McGowan); Forgotten Babies (McGowan); The Kid from Borneo (McGowan); Maids à la Mode (Meins); Taxi Barons (Meins); Wreckety Wreaks (Lord); Air Fright (Meins); Backs to Nature (Meins); Fallen Arches (Meins); The Bargain of the Century (Parrott); Twice Two (Parrott); The Midnight Patrol (French)

1934 Opened By Mistake (Parrott); The Live Ghost (Rogers); The Caretaker’s Daughter (French); For Pete’s Sake (Meins); Going Bye-Bye! (Rogers); A Duke for a Day (Parrott); The First Round-Up (Meins); I’ll Take Vanilla (Parrott and Dunn); Four Parts (Parrott and Dunn); Fate’s Fathead (Parrott); Washoe Irene (Parrott); Next Week-End (Dunn); Them Thar Hills (Rogers); Movie Daze (Meins); Another Wild Idea (Parrott and Dunn); Apples to You! (Jason); Babes in the Goods (Meins); Bum Voyage (Girde); Hi Neighbor! (Meins); Honky-Donkey (Meins); I’ll Be Singing You (Meins); Maid in Hollywood (Meins); Mike Fright (Meins); Mrs. Barnacle Bill (French); Mixed Nuts (Parrott); Nosed Out (Yates); The Private Life of Oliver the Eighth (French); Something Simple (Parrott and Weems); Soup and Fish (Meins); Speaking of Relations (Yates); Three Chumps Ahead (Meins); You Bring the Ducks (Yates); You Said a Hatful! (Parrott); One Horse Farmers (Meins); Benny from Panama (Parrott); Music in Your Hair (Parrott); Roamin’ Vandals (Jason and Yates); Done in Oil (Meins)

1935 Hot Money (Horne); The Four Star Boarder (Parrott); The Tin Man (Parrott); Twin Triplets (Terhune); Nurse to You (Parrott); Treasure Blues (Parrott); Shrimps for a Day (Meins); Anniversary Trouble (Meins); The Chases of Pimple Street (Parrott); The Fixer-Uppers (Rogers); The Infernal Triangle (Douglas); Little Papa (Meins); Little Sinner (Meins); Lucky Beginners (Douglas); Mama’s Little Pirate (Meins); Manhattan Monkey Business (Parrott and Law); The Misses Stooge (Parrott); Our Gang Follies of 1936 (Meins); Poker at Eight (Parrott); Public Ghost No. 1 (Parrott and Law); Sing, Sister, Sing (Parrott); Slightly Static (Terhune); Southern Exposure (Parrott); Sprucin’ Up (Meins); Teacher’s Beau (Meins); Thicker Than Water (Horne); Hit for Tat (Rogers); Top Flat (Terhune and Jevne); Life Hesitates at Forty (Parrott and Law); Pay As You Exit (Douglas); Divot Diggers (McGowan); Vamp till Ready (Parrott and Law); Neighborhood House (Parrott and Law); The Pinch Singer (Newmeyer); Second Childhood (Meins); The Count Takes the Count (Parrott and Law); An All American Toothache (Meins); Arbor Day (Newmeyer); At Sea Ashore (Terhune); Hill Tillys (Meins); On the Wrong Trek (Parrott and Law); Pan Handlers (Terhune); Spooky Hooky (Douglas); Two Too Young (Douglas); Bored of Education (Douglas)

1937 Nobody’s Baby (Meins); Pick a Star (Sedgwick); Night ‘n Gales (Douglas); Rushin’ Ballet (Douglas); Roamin’ Holiday (Douglas); Our Gang Follies of 1938 (Douglas); Fishy Tales (Douglas); Framing Youth (Douglas); Glove Taps (Douglas); Mail and Female (Newmeyer); Reunion in Rhythm (Douglas); Hearts Are Thumps (Douglas); Three Smart Boys (Douglas)

1938 Came the Brawn (Douglas); Party Fever (Sidney); Mein in Fright (Sidney); Hide and Shriek (Douglas); Football Romeo (Sidney); Practical Jokers (Sidney); Canned Fishing (Douglas); Feed ‘em and Weep (Douglas); Three Men in a Tub (Watt)

1939 Dog Daze (Sidney); Joy Scouts (Cahn); Auto Antics (Cahn); Clown Princes (Sidney); Cousin Wilbur (Sidney)

Films as Producer and Director (Shorts):

1914 Just Nuts; Lonesome Lake; Once Every Ten Minutes; Spit Ball Sadie; Fresh from the Farm; Soaking the Clothes; Pressing His Suit; Terribly Stuck Up; A Mix-Up for Maiste; Some Baby; Giving Them Fits; Bughouse Bell Hops; Ragtime Snapshots; Great While It Lasted; Tinkering with Trouble; A Fooloo at a Tea Party; Peculiar Patients’ Pranks; Social Gangster; Ruses, Rhymes, Roughnecks

1917

1918
The Movie Dummy; The Big Idea; The Lamb; Hello Teacher; Hit Him Again; A One Night Stand; Beat It; A Gasoline Wedding; Look Pleasant Please; Here Come the Girls; Let's Go; On the Jump; Follow the Crowd; Pipe the Whiskers; It's a Wild Life; Hey There!; His Busy Day; Kidded Out; The Non-Stop Kid; Two-Gun Guskie; The Junkman; Fireman, Save My Child; The City Slicker; Sic ‘em Towser; Somewhere in Turkey; Cleopatsy; Are Crooks Dishonest?; The Furniture Movers; Bees in His Bonnet; Step Lively; An Ozark Romance; Fire the Cook; Kicking the Germ Out of Germany; Beach Nuts; That’s Him; Do Husbands Deceive?; Bride and Groom; Nipped in the Bud; Two Scrambled; The Dippy Daughter; The Great Water Peril; Swing Your Partners; No Place Like Jail; Why Pick on Me?; An Enemy of Soap; Just Rambling Along; Hear ‘em Rave; Nothing But Trouble; Take a Chance; Check Your Baggage; She Loves Me Not; Wanted $5,000! Going! Going! Gone!; Ask Father; On the Fire; Look Out Below; Next Aisle Over

1919
Do You Love Your Wife?; Love’s Young Scream; Hustling for Health; Toto’s Troubles; Hoot Man; I’m on My Way; The Dutiful Dub; A Sammy in Siberia; Just Dropped In; Crack Your Heels; Ring Up the Curtain; Young Mr. Jazz; Si Senor; Before Breakfast; The Marathon; Back to the Woods; Pistols for Breakfast; Swat the Crook; Off the Trolley; Spring Fever; Billy Blazes, Esq.; Just Neighbors; At the Old Stage Door; Never Touched Me; A Jazzed Honeymoon; Count Your Change; Chop Suey & Co.; Heap Big Chief; Don’t Shove; Be My Wife; The Rajah; He Leads, Others Follow; Soft Money; All at Sea; Call for Mr. Caveman; Giving the Bride Away; It’s a Hard Life; From Hand to Mouth; His Only Father; Pay Your Dues; Bumping into Broadway; Captain Kidd’s Kids; His Royal Slynx

1920
Order in the Court; How Dry I Am; Red Hot Hotentots; Why Go Home?; Slippery Slickers; The Dippy Dentist; Looking for Trouble; Tough Luck; The Floor Below; All Lit Up; Getting His Goat; Waltz Me Around; Raise the Rent; Find the Girl; Fresh Paint; Flat Broke; Cut the Cards; The Dinner Hour; Speed to Spare; Don’t Weaken; Shoot on Sight; The Eastern Westerner; Haunted Spooks; Drink Hearty; Trotting Through Turkey; Merely a Maid; All Dressed Up; Grab the Ghost; You’re Pinched; Start the Show; High and Dry; All in a Day; Any Old Port; Don’t Rock the Boat; Hello Uncle; The Home Stretch; Call a Taxi; Little Miss Jazz; A Regular Pal; Go As You Please; Rock-a-bye Baby; Money to Burn; Doing Time; Fellow Citizens; Alias Aladdin; Mamma’s Boy; The Sandman; When the Wind Blows; Insulting the Sultan; Queens Up; The Dear Departed; Park Your Car; Cracked Wedding Bells; A London Bobby; June Madness; Live and Learn

1921
The Sleepy Head; Greek Meets Greek; The Morning After; Pinning It On; Burglars Bold; Open Another Bottle; Prince Pistachio; Cash Customers; A Straight Crook; Big Game; Save Your Money; I Do (co-d); Bubbling Over; Catching a Coon; Fellow Romans; Fifteen Minutes; His Best Girl; Hobgoblins; Hurry West; The Kiljoes; The Love Lesson; Make It Snappy; On Location; Paint and Powder; No Children; Oh, Promise Me; Penny-in-the-Slot; Rush Orders; Running Wild; Where’s the Fire?; Own Your Home; The High Rollers; You’re Next; The Bike Bug; At the Ringside; What a Whopper; No Stop-Over; Teaching the Teacher; Spot Cash; Name the Day; Stop Kidding; The Jail Bird; On Their Way; Late Lodgers; The Chink; Rough Seas; Gone to the Country; The Lucky Number; Sweet By and By; A Zero Hour; Dodge your Debts; Law and Order; Late Hours; Trolley Troubles; The Joy Rider; The Hustler; The Pickaninnny; Sink or Swim; Shake ‘em Up; The Corner Pocket; Try; Try Again; Lose No Time; Loose Change; Call the Witness

1922
Years to Come; Blow ‘em Up; Stage Struck; Rich Man, Poor Man; Down and Out; Pardon Me; The Bow Wow; High Tide; Hot Off the Press; The Anvil Chorus; Jump Your Job; Stand Pat; Full o’ Pep; Kill the Nerve; Days of Old; Light Showers; Do Me a Favor; The Movie, Punch the Clock; Strictly Modern; Hale and Hearty; Many Happy Returns; Some Baby; Friday the 13th; Fair Week; The Man Haters; A Bed of Roses; The Late Lamented; The Dumb-Bells; The Sleuth; The Bride-to-Be; Busy Bees; Take Next Car; The Stone Age; Touch All the Bases; The Truth Juggler; Rough on Romeo; Wet Weather; One Terrible Day; 365 Days; The Landlubber; Bone Dry; Soak the Sheik; Face the Camera; The Upercut; The Fire Fighters; The Old Sea Dog; Out on Bail; Shiver and Shake; Shine ‘em Up; Hook, Line, andinker; Washed Ashore; The Flivver; Blaze Away; The Golf Bug; Saturday Morning; Between Meals; Pay the Cashier; Dig Up; Paste and Paper; The Green Cat; The Only Son; The Champeen; Before the Public; Good Morning, Judge; Hired and Fired; I’ll Take Vanilla; Leave It to Me; Fire the Fireman; Newly Rich; The Non-Skid Kid; A Quiet Street; The Roustabout; A Tough Winter; Watch Your Wife; A White Blacksmith

1923
Don’t Say Die; Harvest Hands; Mr. Hyppo; Once Over; Jailed and Bailed; A Loose Tightwad; The Cobbler; Tight Shoes; The Big Show; Shoot Straight; Do Your Stuff; For Safe Keeping; A Pleasant Journey; Bowled Over; Where Am I? Sunny Spain; Speed the Swede; California or Bust; The Noon Whistle; White Wings; Giants vs. Yanks; Don’t Flirt; Sold at Auction; For Art’s Sake; Back Stage; Under Two Jags; The Watch Dog; Fresh Eggs; Pick and Shovel; Courtship of Miles Sandwich; Dogs of War; Collars and Cuffs; The Uncovered Wagon; Kill or Cure; Jack Frost; For Guests Only; Lodge Night; Gas and Air; Oranges and Lemons; Post No Bills; The Mystery Man; Be Honest; Live Wires; July Days; Short Orders; Take the Air; The Walkout; Let’s Build; A Man about Town; No Noise; Finger Prints; Roughest Africa; Stepping Out; No Pets; Frozen Hearts; Winner Take All; Stage Fright; Heavy Seas; It’s a Gift; Derby Day; Save the Ship; Go West; The Soilers; Sunday Calm; Fully Insured; Scorching Sands; The Great Outdoors; Join the Circus; Mother’s Joy; Lovey Dovey; It’s a Boy; The Darkest Hour; One of the Family; At First Sight; Tire Troubles; The Big Idea; Bowled Over; The Knockout; Once Over

The White Sheep (+ sc); The Bar Fly; Help One Another; Just a Minute; Big Business; Powder and Smoke; The Man Pays; Political Pull; Hard Knocks; Love’s Detour; The Buccaneers; Love’s Reward; Hunters Bold; Don’t Forget; The Fraidy Cat; Seein’ Things; Friend Husband; Our Little Nell; Hit the High Spots; One at a Time; Get Busy; Commencement Day; Publicity Pays; North of 50–50; April Fool; Bottle Babies; Position Wanted; Cradle Robbers; Up and at ’em; Fast Black; Suffering Shakespeare; Jeffries, Jr.; Why Husbands Go Mad; Radio Mad; A Ten Minute Egg; Seeing Nellie Home; It’s a Bear; A Hard-Boiled Tenderfoot; Sweet Daddy; High Society; Why Men Work; South o’ the North Pole; Outdoor Pajamas; The Sun Down Limited; Sittin’ Pretty; Should Landlords Live?; The Lost Dog; Too Many Munams; The Goofy Age; Every Man for Himself; Bungalow Boys; The Sky Plumber; Hot Stuff; Accidental Accidents; Hot Heels; Fast Company; All Wet; Are Blond Men Bashful?; Deaf, Dumb, and Daffy; The Poor Fish; Meet the Missus; The Mysterious Mystery; The Royal Razz; Just a Good Guy; The Rubberneck; The Wages of Sin; The Rat’s Knuckles; The Big Town; Hello Baby; Laugh That Off; The Family Entrance; Fighting Fluid; A Perfect Lady; Stole Goods; Young Oldfield

All Wool; Are Husbands Human?; Are Parents Pickles?; Ask Grandma; Bad Boy; Better Movies; The Big Kid; Big Red Riding Hood; Black Hand Blues; The Bouncer; Boys Will Be Joys; The Caretaker’s Daughter; Change the Needle; Chasing the Chaser; Circus Fever; Cuckoo Love; Daddy Goes a-Granting; Dog Days; Excuse My Glove; Flaming Flappers; The Fox Hunt; Grief in Bagdad; Hard Boiled; The Haunted Honeymoon; His Wooden Wedding; Hold My Baby; In the Grease!; Innocent Husbands; Laughing Ladies; Looking for Sally; The Love Bug; Madame Sans Jane; Mary, Queen of Tots; Moonlight and Noses; No Father to Guide Him; Official Officers; One Wild Ride; Papa, Be Good!; Plain and Fancy Girls; A Punch in the Nose; Riders of the Kitchen Range; The Royal Four Flush; A Sailor Papa; Sherlock Sleuth; Shootin’ Injuns; Should Husbands Be Watched?; Should Sailors Marry?; Solid Ivory; Somewhere in Somewhere; Starvation Blues; Sure-Mike; Tame Men and Wild Women; Tell It to a Policeman; There Goes the Bride; Thundering Landlords; The Uneasy Three; Unfriendly Enemies; What Price Goofy?; Wild Papa; Your Own Back Yard

To’table Romeo; Hold Everything; Good Cheer; What’s the World Coming To?; Charley My Boy; Long Pants; Your Husband’s Past; Buried Treasure; The Hug Bug; Mam, Behave; Monkey Business; Dizzy Daddies; Wife Tamers; Do Your Duty; Ukelele Sheiks; Baby Clothes; Scared Stiff; Mam’s the Word; Don Key, Son of Burro; Say It with Babies; Uncle Tom’s Uncle; He Forgot to Remember; Never Too Old; Cow’s Kimono; Mighty Like a Moose; Merry Widower; Shivering Spooks; Fourth Alarm; Bromo and Juliet; Wise Guys Prefer Brunettes; Tell ’em Nothing; Get ’em Young; On the Front Page; War Feathers; There Ain’t No Santa Claus; 45 Minutes from Hollywood; Telling Whoppers; Many Scappy Returns

1924

Bring Home the Turkey; Are Brunettes Safe?; Duck Soup; Ten Years Old; Forgotten Sweeties; Love My Dog; Jewish Prudence; Bigger and Better Blondes; Tired Business Men; Eve’s Love Letters; Don’t Tell Everything; Glorious Fourth; What Women Did for Me; Olympic Games; Should Husbands Come First?; The Way of All Pants; What Every Iceman Knows; A One-Mama Man; Now I’ll Tell One; Chicken Feed, Fighting Fathers; The Smile Wins

1925

The White Sheep; The Bar Fly; Help One Another; Just a Minute; Big Business; Powder and Smoke; The Man Pays; Political Pull; Hard Knocks; Love’s Detour; The Buccaneers; Love’s Reward; Hunters Bold; Don’t Forget; The Fraidy Cat; Seein’ Things; Friend Husband; Our Little Nell; Hit the High Spots; One at a Time; Get Busy; Commencement Day; Publicity Pays; North of 50–50; April Fool; Bottle Babies; Position Wanted; Cradle Robbers; Up and at ’em; Fast Black; Suffering Shakespeare; Jeffries, Jr.; Why Husbands Go Mad; Radio Mad; A Ten Minute Egg; Seeing Nellie Home; It’s a Bear; A Hard-Boiled Tenderfoot; Sweet Daddy; High Society; Why Men Work; South o’ the North Pole; Outdoor Pajamas; The Sun Down Limited; Sittin’ Pretty; Should Landlords Live?; The Lost Dog; Too Many Munams; The Goofy Age; Every Man for Himself; Bungalow Boys; The Sky Plumber; Hot Stuff; Accidental Accidents; Hot Heels; Fast Company; All Wet; Are Blond Men Bashful?; Deaf, Dumb, and Daffy; The Poor Fish; Meet the Missus; The Mysterious Mystery; The Royal Razz; Just a Good Guy; The Rubberneck; The Wages of Sin; The Rat’s Knuckles; The Big Town; Hello Baby; Laugh That Off; The Family Entrance; Fighting Fluid; A Perfect Lady; Stole Goods; Young Oldfield

All Wool; Are Husbands Human?; Are Parents Pickles?; Ask Grandma; Bad Boy; Better Movies; The Big Kid; Big Red Riding Hood; Black Hand Blues; The Bouncer; Boys Will Be Joys; The Caretaker’s Daughter; Change the Needle; Chasing the Chaser; Circus Fever; Cuckoo Love; Daddy Goes a-Granting; Dog Days; Excuse My Glove; Flaming Flappers; The Fox Hunt; Grief in Bagdad; Hard Boiled; The Haunted Honeymoon; His Wooden Wedding; Hold My Baby; In the Grease!; Innocent Husbands; Laughing Ladies; Looking for Sally; The Love Bug; Madame Sans Jane; Mary, Queen of Tots; Moonlight and Noses; No Father to Guide Him; Official Officers; One Wild Ride; Papa, Be Good!; Plain and Fancy Girls; A Punch in the Nose; Riders of the Kitchen Range; The Royal Four Flush; A Sailor Papa; Sherlock Sleuth; Shootin’ Injuns; Should Husbands Be Watched?; Should Sailors Marry?; Solid Ivory; Somewhere in Somewhere; Starvation Blues; Sure-Mike; Tame Men and Wild Women; Tell It to a Policeman; There Goes the Bride; Thundering Landlords; The Uneasy Three; Unfriendly Enemies; What Price Goofy?; Wild Papa; Your Own Back Yard

To’table Romeo; Hold Everything; Good Cheer; What’s the World Coming To?; Charley My Boy; Long Pants; Your Husband’s Past; Buried Treasure; The Hug Bug; Mam, Behave; Monkey Business; Dizzy Daddies; Wife Tamers; Do Your Duty; Ukelele Sheiks; Baby Clothes; Scared Stiff; Mam’s the Word; Don Key, Son of Burro; Say It with Babies; Uncle Tom’s Uncle; He Forgot to Remember; Never Too Old; Cow’s Kimono; Mighty Like a Moose; Merry Widower; Shivering Spooks; Fourth Alarm; Bromo and Juliet; Wise Guys Prefer Brunettes; Tell ’em Nothing; Get ’em Young; On the Front Page; War Feathers; There Ain’t No Santa Claus; 45 Minutes from Hollywood; Telling Whoppers; Many Scappy Returns

FIlms as Producer (Features):

1925

Black Cyclone (Jackman) (+ sc)

1924

A Sailor Made Man (Newmeyer) (+ co-sc)

1923

Grandma’s Boy (Newmeyer) (+ co-sc); Dr. Jack (Newmeyer) (+ co-sc)

1922

Safety Last (Newmeyer and Taylor) (+ co-sc); Why Worry? (Newmeyer and Taylor); The Call of the Wild (Jackman)

1921

A Sailor Made Man (Newmeyer) (+ co-sc)

1920

Pack Up Your Troubles (Marshall and Carey)

1919

Babes in Toyland (Rogers and Meins)

1918

Vagabond Lady (Taylor); Bonnie Scotland (Horne)

1917

The Bohemian Girl (Horne and Rogers); Kelly the Second (Meins); Mister Cinderella (Sedgwick); Our Relations (Lachman)

1916

Way Out West (Horne)

1915

Merrily We Live (McLeod); Swiss Miss (Blystone); Block-Heads (Blystone); There Goes My Heart (McLeod)

1914

Topper Takes a Trip (McLeod); Zenobia (Douglas)

1913

Of Mice and Men (Milestone); A Chump at Oxford (Goulding); Saps at Sea (Douglas); Captain Caution (Wallace)

1912

Broadway Limited (Douglas); Tanks a Million (Guilol); All American Co-Ed (Prinz and H. Roach, Jr.); Niagara Falls (Douglas); Miss Polly (Guilol); Fiesta (Prinz); Hay Foot (Guilol); Topper Returns (Del Ruth)

1911

Dudes Are Pretty People (H. Roach, Jr.); Brooklyn Orchid (Neumann); About Face (Neumann); Calaboose (H. Roach, Jr.); Fall In (Neumann); Flying with Music (Archamnaud); The McGuirens from Brooklyn (Neumann); Nazi Nuisance (Tryon); Prairie Chickens (H. Roach, Jr.); Taxi, Mister (Neumann); Yanks Ahoy (Neumann); The Devil with Hitler (Douglas)
1947  The Fabulous Joe (Foster) (exec); Curley (Carr) (exec)
1948  Here Comes Troubles (Guiol) (exec); Who Killed Doc Robbin
       (Carr) (exec)
1966  One Million Years B.C. (Chaffey) (co)

Films as Producer and Director (Features):

1924  Girl Shy
1926  The Devil Horse
1930  Men of the North
1933  Fra Diavolo (The Devil’s Brother) (co-d)
1936  General Spanky
1939  Captain Fury; The Housekeeper’s Daughter
1940  One Million B.C. (co); Turnabout
1941  Road Show
1967  The Crazy World of Laurel and Hardy (compilation)

Publications

By ROACH: articles—

The Silent Picture (London), Spring 1970.

On ROACH: book—

On ROACH: articles—

Sight and Sound (London), Autumn 1964.
Classic Images (Indiana, Pennsylvania), July 1983.
“10 Years Ago,” in Forbes, 10 February 1997.

* * *

Hal Roach was a producer and motion picture executive best remembered for two things. First, he helped create one of the great comedy factories of all time. In the 1920s his studio launched the careers of Laurel and Hardy, and fostered the talents of Harold Lloyd, one of the serious rivals to Charlie Chaplin, and Buster Keaton. The Roach comedy factory produced many of the best-remembered short subjects of the 1930s, including the Our Gang comedies which continue to grind away on television some 60 years after their creation.

By the 1920s Hal Roach had become an established producer, and his comedies had begun to rival the then “King of Comedy,” Mack Sennett. Roach smoothly survived the transition to sound, but Sennett did not. Thus, by the mid-1930s it was Roach, distributing through the then dominant major studio, MGM, who could properly be labeled the “King of Comedy.” The Our Gang series, the teaming of Laurel and Hardy, and the comedies of Charlie Chase made Roach into a powerful, respected producer of comedy shorts. But Roach did not neglect the talent behind the camera. Indeed his studio helped foster the careers of George Stevens and Leo McCarey, both of whom would move on to become major directors.

The Great Depression served as the Golden Age for the Roach comedy factory. Unfortunately the studio could not develop any stars to rival “Our Gang” and Laurel and Hardy. By 1935 the Roach studio was on the decline as the major studios squeezed them out by creating more and more double features and less and less non-animated shorts subjects. In 1938 Roach sold “Our Gang” to MGM and moved on to try independent feature filmmaking with United Artists.

Roach did as well as any producer at United Artists in the late 1930s and 1940s. It was hard to lose money during the Second World War boom era. Between 1938 and 1941 Roach tendered 14 films through United Artists, including Topper Takes a Trip starring Constance Bennett and Billie Burke, Of Men and Women starring Lon Chaney, Jr. and Burgess Meredith, and Saps at Sea starring an aging Laurel and Hardy. But a military career creating training films ended what success he had with these low-budget films.

In a less well-known, but equally important contribution, Roach pushed the film industry into the television production business. For example, he set up an early series called Screen Director’s Playhouse on which such talents as Leo McCarey, John Ford, and Tay Garnett worked. Unfortunately little came of its efforts in long-term monetary gain. Thus though Fireside Theatre was turned out in quickie fashion at Roach studio for NBC in the late 1940s and early 1950s, the Roaches, Senior and Junior, could not create a permanent relationship with the network. Their greatest success came with a comedy show Roach Junior did with Gale Storm called My Little Margie which aired from 1952 to 1955 and many more years in syndication. Hal Roach, Sr. pioneered with television but not well enough to prevent his studio from going bankrupt in 1959 and providing him with an ungraceful retirement.

—Douglas Gomery

ROBBE-GRILLET, Alain

Writer and Director. Nationality: French. Born: Brest, 18 August 1922. Education: Attended Lycée de Brest; lycées Buffon and St. Louis, Paris; National Institute of Agronomy, Paris, diploma 1944. Family: Married Catherine Rstakian, 1957. Career: Sent to work in German tank factory during World War II; 1945–49—engineer, National Statistical Institute, Paris; 1949–51—engineer, Institute of
Alain Robbe-Grillet

Colonial Fruits and Crops, Morocco, French Guyana, and Martinique; then full-time writer; since 1955—literary consultant, Editions de Minuit, Paris; 1961—script for first film, L’Année dernière à Marienbad; 1963—directed first film, L’Immortelle. Awards: Officer, Order of Merit; Chevalier, Legion of Honor. Address: 18, Boulevard Maillot, 92200 Neuilly-sur-Seine, France.

Films as Writer:

1961 L’Année dernière à Marienbad (Last Year at Marienbad) (Resnais)
1988 Taxandria (Servais) (co)

Films as Writer and Director:

1963 L’Immortelle
1966 Trans-Europ-Express
1968 L’Homme qui ment (The Man Who Lies)
1971 L’Eden et après (and TV version N’a pris les dés)
1974 Les Glissements progressifs du plaisir; Le Jeu avec le feu
1983 La Belle Captive (The Beautiful Prisoner)
1995 Un Bruit qui rend fou (The Blue Villa) (co-d with De Clercq)

Publications

By ROBBE-GRILLET: fiction—

Taxandria (screenplay), 1996.

By ROBBE-GRILLET: other books—

Pour un nouveau roman, Paris, 1963, as Towards a New Novel, with Rêves de jeunes filles (photographs by David Hamilton), Paris, 1971, as Les Demoiselles d’Hamilton (photographs by David Hamilton), Paris,
The Erotic Dream Machine: Interviews with Alain Robbe-Grillet on His Films, with Anthony G. Fragola, Carbondale, 1995.

By ROBBE-GRILLET: articles—

Cinéma (Paris), February 1963.
Art et Essai (Paris), no. 6, 1965.
In Film Makers on Filmmaking, edited by Harry M. Geduld, Bloominton, Indiana, 1967.
Cinématographe (Paris), April/May 1974.
Filmmakers Newsletter (Ward Hill, Massachusetts), July 1976.
Cinéma (Paris), July/August 1980.
Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), April 1989.

On ROBBE-GRILLET: books—

Parnell, Martin, editor, Alain Robbe-Grillet, Nottingham, 1968.
Gardies, André, Approche du recit filmique: sur L’Homme qui ment

Leki, Ilona, Alain Robbe-Grillet, Boston, Massachusetts, 1983.
Morrisette, Bruce, Novel and Film, Chicago, 1985.
Harger-Grinling, Virginia, and Chadwick, Tony, editors, Robbe-
Hellermstein, Marjorie H., Inventing the Real World: The Art of Alain

On ROBBE-GRILLET: articles—

Huston, Penelope, in Sight and Sound (London), Autumn 1961.
Brunius, Jacques, in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1962.
Ashmore, Jerome, in University Review (Kansas City, Missouri),
Spring 1964.
Art et Essai (Paris), February 1967.
Filmcritica (Rome), November/December 1967.
Ward, John, in Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1968.
Avant-Scène (Paris), June 1968.
‘‘Robbe-Grillet Issue’’ of Kinema (London), June 1968.
Chaplin (Stockholm), no. 12, 1970.
Cinéma (Paris), September/October 1970.
Film Comment (New York), May/June 1973.
Journal of Film and Video (Boston, Massachusetts), Fall 1990.
Creative Screenwriting (Washington), vol. 3, no. 1, Summer 1996.
Filmihullu (Helsinki), vol. 3, 1997.

* * *

Alain Robbe-Grillet had already published four novels before he came to the cinema as screenwriter of one of the most controversial and innovative films of the early 1960s, Alain Resnais’s L’Année dernière à Marienbad. Subsequently his work as a novelist has continued alongside his filmmaking activity, often pursuing its own distinctive paths though undoubtedly influenced by the preparation for publication, as ciné-romans, of three of his scripts. L’Année dernière à Marienbad is a complex work in which the diverging contributions of its two very different authors can now be seen more clearly than in 1961, when discussion of the film tended to be based on the self-proclaimed myth of their perfect collaboration.

Robbe-Grillet’s own work as a writer-director has followed paths very different from Resnais’s and falls into two periods of very unequal value, with La Belle Captive coming as something of a coda in 1983. Between 1963 and 1968 Robbe-Grillet made the three black-and-white feature films on which his reputation as a filmmaker largely rests. L’Immortelle, set in Turkey and dealing with a trio of characters designated in the published screenplay as simply L, M, and N, is strikingly original in its handling of narrative. In effect it constitutes a set of variations and distortions on the themes and stylistic devices set out in its 22-shot prologue. Trans-Europ-Express, Robbe-Grillet’s most approachable film, combines its play with reality and imagination with a humor hitherto absent from his work. Full of mirror images, disguises, distortions of reality, impossible happenings, and duplications, the film makes no pretense of having a conventional narrative. Rather the plot invents itself as it proceeds, creating and ignoring problems, inconsistencies, and downright impossibilities. Robbe-Grillet’s major work as a director, L’Homme qui ment, carries these formal experiments through to their logical conclusion. Shot on location in Czecho-Slovakia and set in an old chateau amid the forests, it is the story of a man who invents his own character, past, and emotions as he goes along. But the words which create his reality are eventually turned against him and he is driven back to limbo in the forest. Though lacking a coherent plot in the conventional sense, L’Homme qui ment offers many of the same aspects of the film image—its unique present tense quality and its potentiality for an inextricable mixture of reality and falsehood—Robbe-Grillet has fashioned a film which is both approachable and highly innovative.

Robbe-Grillet’s color films of the early 1970s—L’Eden et après, Les Glissements progressifs du plaisir, and Le Jeu avec le feu—are equally novel but far less successful. On a thematic level they are undermined by a blatant and self-indulgent eroticism that never achieves the distance which would allow the obsessive subject matter to acquire an aesthetic impact. For this reason these films, which experiment with overelaborate and virtually unreadable serial structures, come to resemble all too closely the drab and dispiriting commercial exploitation movies whose stereotyped formulas Robbe-Grillet claims to be parodying.

Robbe-Grillet’s status within French cinema is controversial and his situation is not helped by his own taste for both oversimplifying and mystifying his work. Many of the conventional critics and historians of French cinema ignore his work—like that of Marguerite Duras—altogether. But Robbe-Grillet’s work, particularly the masterly L’Homme qui ment, has enormous theoretical interest and its impact on a whole generation of young French critics and theorists has been both profound and fruitful.

—Roy Armes, updated by David Levine

Films as Art Director/Production Designer:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Credits</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1919</td>
<td>Das Kabinett des Dr. Caligari (The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari)</td>
<td>(Wiene); Die Pest von Florenz (Rippert)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1920</td>
<td>Der Golem (The Golem)</td>
<td>(Wegener); Irende Seelen (Froelich); Masken (Wauer); Das Geheimnis von Bombay (Holz); Der Menschheit anwalt (Rippert)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Toteninsel (Froelich); Der Müde Tod (Between Two Worlds)</td>
<td>(Lang); Satansketten (Lasko); Das Spiel mit dem Feuer (Wiene and Kroll); Parisierinnen (Lasko); Die Intriguen der Madame de la Pommeraye (Wendhausen)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1922</td>
<td>Luise Millerin (Froelich); Fräulein Julie (Miss Julie) (Basch)</td>
<td>Der Graf von Essex (Felner); (+ costumes)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1923</td>
<td>Der Schatz (The Treasure) (Pabst)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1924</td>
<td>Komödie des Herzens (Gliese); Der letzte Mann (The Last Laugh)</td>
<td>(Murnau)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1925</td>
<td>Zur Chronik von Grieshaus (At the Grey House) (von Gerlach);</td>
<td>Tartuff (Tartuffe) (Murnau)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1926</td>
<td>Faust (Murnau) (+ costumes)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1927</td>
<td>Luther (Kysy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1928</td>
<td>Looping the Loop (Robison); Rutschbahn (Eichberg)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1929</td>
<td>Asphalt (May); The Informer (Robison); Die wunderbare Lüge</td>
<td>(Schwarz); Manolessa (Tourjansky)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Der anstrebliche Lump (Ucicky); Hokusokus (Hokusocus) (Ucicky);</td>
<td>Das Flötenkonzert von Sanssouci (Ucicky); Rosenmontag (Steinhoff);</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Auch ein Kindheitskind (Steinhoff); Ein Burschenlied aus Heidelberg (Hartl); Der Mann, der seinen Mörder sucht (Siodmak)</td>
<td>Ein Burschenlied aus Heidelberg (Hartl); Der Mann, der seinen Mörder sucht (Siodmak)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>Der Kongress tanzt (The Congress Dances) (Charell); Der falsche Ehemann (Guter); Nie wieder Liebe (Litvak); Im Geheimdienst (Ucicky); Der kleine Seitenzünglein (Schünzel); Yorck (Ucicky)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>Die Gräfin von Monte Cristo (Hartl); Mensch ohne Namen (Ucicky); Der schwarze Husar (The Black Hussar) (Lamprecht)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>Walzerkrieg (Waltz: Time in Vienna) (Berger); Fluchtlinge (Ucicky); Saison in Kairo (Schünzel); Morgenrot (Ucicky); Ich und die Kaiserin (The Only Girl) (Hollander)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>Die Csarsasfürstin (Jacoby); Ich bin du (Hoffmann); Der junge Baron Neuhaus (Ucicky); Prinzessin Turandot (Lamprecht)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>Das Mädchen Johanna (Ucicky); Frischer Wind aus Kanada (Kenter and Holder); Barcarole (Lamprecht); Amphitryon (Schünzel); Königswalzer (Maisch)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>Hans im Glück (Herlith); Savoy-Hotel 217 (Ucicky); Unter heissem Himmel (Ucicky); Verräter (Ritter)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>Urlaub und Ehrenwort (Ritter); Patrioten (Ritter); Mein Sohn, der Herr Minster (Harlan); Unternehmer Michael (Ritter); Brillanten (von Bosardy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Capriccio (Ritter); Pour le Mérite (Ritter)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>Die Hochzeit der Figaro (Ritter)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>Bal paré (Ritter); Des Herz des Königin (Froelich)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>Heimkehr (Ucicky); Über Alles in der Welt (Ritter); Kadetten (Ritter)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1942</td>
<td>G.P.U. (Ritter); Rembrandt (Steinhoff)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>Gefährlicher Frühling (Deppe); Liebesgeschichte (Tourjansky);</td>
<td>Der kleine Grenzverkehr (Deppe)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Die Hohezeit der Figaro (Ritter)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

RÖHRIG, Walter

Art Director. Nationality: German. Born: Berlin, 13 April 1897 (some sources give 1892 and 1893). Career: Painter, associated with Der Sturm Expressionists in 1910s; stage designer, then film designer: 1919—first film, Das Kabinett des Dr. Caligari; often collaborated with Robert Herlith. Died: In Potsdam, 1945.
Publications

On RÖHRIG: articles—

The German painter and, initially, stage-set designer Walter Röhrig was closely associated with the Berlin Sturm group, and so a practitioner in the so-called Expressionist movement in the fine arts. Hermann Warm, another designer in the group, claimed in reaction against naturalism that “films must be drawings brought to life,” and both Warm and Röhrig, along with Walter Reimann, another Expressionist, came to the fore as film designers in the Expressionist style with the celebrated film The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari in 1919, directed by Robert Wiene immediately after Germany’s defeat in the First World War. With the lowest of budgets, the film’s three designers were instructed to create, out of stretched-canvas flats, simple backdrops, and minimal furnishing worthy of a small provincial repertory theatre, sets which would give the impression of a medieval town (fairground, civic offices, houses, both interior and exterior, roofs, bridges) all in a distorted form revealing the warped vision of the young madman who is the hero of this romantic horror film. Their success in scene after scene combined Expressionist distortion of actuality with a haunted beauty; psychological realism gives way to sets painted over with spectacular curves and whorls, rostra interset at cunning angles, doors, windows, and roofs melodramatically askew, but all combined to achieve an extraordinary pictorial effect when lit and photographed. [The artistry of Caligari is very fully discussed by Paul Rotha—a former student of fine art—in his book The Film till Now.]

Both Röhrig and Warm had highly creative careers in the silent cinema, supported by the inspired visual taste of many of Germany’s leading directors. Röhrig in particular worked with another partner, Robert Herlth, on four key films made by F.W. Murnau, partly in the Expressionist manner [excellently described by Lotte Eisner in her books The Haunted Screen and Murnau], but also widened to achieve greater psychological intensity and fantasy than Expressionism proper allowed within its bounds. Inevitably Expressionism and Baroque fantasy merged in film after film by Murnau and others as a result of the atmospheric needs of each individual film. The films by Murnau on which Röhrig worked along with Herlth were The Last Laugh, Tartuffe (with its beautiful and meticulously executed period settings), and Faust, as well as the initial drawings for Murnau’s American film The Four Devils. Röhrig also worked for Fritz Lang, Murnau’s great rival among Germany’s leading directors, on Destiny and on Arthur von Gerlach’s legendary Bohemian film Zur Chronik von Grieshaus.

Like Herlth, Röhrig served as art director on many merely routine but decorative German sound films before and during the period of the Third Reich, the more notable being The Congress Dances, Amphitryon, the anti-Polish Nazi film, Heimkehr, and Rembrandt, the effects of Expressionism long since gone. A fine example of Röhrig’s sketch work for Faust can be seen in Eisner’s Murnau, and the general atmosphere of collaboration between director, screenwriter, set designers, and the director of cinematography is admirably described by Robert Herlth for Eisner in the same book.

—Roger Manvell

ROSE, Helen

Costume Designer. Nationality: American. Born: c. 1904. Education: Attended Chicago Academy of Fine Arts. Career: Worked for Lester Costume Company and Ernie Young’s costume house, Chicago; designer for Fanchon and Marco’s Ice Follies, 14 years; 1942—costume designer for MGM until her retirement, 1966. Awards: Academy Award for The Bad and the Beautiful, 1952; I’ll Cry Tomorrow, 1955. Died: In Palm Springs, California, 9 November 1985.

Films as Costume Designer:

1943 Coney Island (W. Lang) (co); Hello Frisco, Hello (Humberstone) (co); Stormy Weather (Stone)
1946 The Harvey Girls (Sidney) (co); Two Sisters from Boston (Koster) (co); Ziegfeld Follies (Minnelli) (co); Till the Clouds Roll By (Whorf) (co)
1947 Good News (Walters) (co); Merton of the Movies (Alton) (co); The Unfinished Dance (Koster)

Helen Rose
1948 Act of Violence (Zinnemann); A Date with Judy (Thorpe); Homecoming (LeRoy); Words and Music (Taurog) (co); Luxury Liner (Whorf) (co); The Bride Goes Wild (Taurog)
1949 On the Town (Kelly and Donen); The Red Danube (Sidney); The Stratton Story (Wood); Take Me Out to the Ball Game (Berkeley) (co); East Side, West Side (LeRoy)
1950 A Life of Her Own (Cukor); Nancy Goes to Rio (Leonard); Pagan Love Song (Alton); Summer Stock (Walters) (co); Three Little Words (Thorpe); To Please a Lady (Brown); The Toast of New Orleans (Taurog) (co); The Reformer and the Redhead (Panama and Frank); Annie Get Your Gun (Sidney) (co); Father of the Bride (Minnelli) (co); The Duchess of Idaho (Leonard); The Big Hangover (Minnelli); Grounds for Marriage (Leonard)
1951 Father’s Little Dividend (Minnelli); The Great Caruso (Thorpe) (co); The Light Touch (Brooks); Texas Carnival (Walters); The Unknown Man (Thorpe); Excuse My Dust (Rowland) (co); No Questions Asked (Kress); Strictly Dishonorable (Panama and Frank); The Strip (Kardos); Too Young to Kiss (Leonard); Callaway Went Thataway (Frank and Panama); The People Against O’Hara (J. Sturges) (co); Love Is Better Than Ever (Donen)
1952 The Girl in White (J. Sturges) (co); Because You’re Mine (Hall); Above and Beyond (Panama and Frank); Glory Alley (Walsh); The Bad and the Beautiful (Minnelli); Invitation (Bernhardt); Holiday for Sinners (Mayer); The Merry Widow (Bernhardt) (co); Million Dollar Mermaid (LeRoy) (co); Skirts Ahoy! (Lanfield); The Belle of New York (Walters) (co); Washington Story (Pirosh)
1953 Dangerous When Wet (Walters); Dream Wife (Sheldon) (co); Jeopardy (J. Sturges); Latin Lovers (LeRoy) (co); Mogambo (Ford); Sombrero (Poster); The Story of Three Loves (Reinhardt and Minnelli); Torch Song (Walters); I Love Melvin (Weis); Small Town Girl (Kardos); Remains to Be Seen (Weis); Easy to Love (Walters)
1954 Athena (Thorpe) (co); Executive Suite (Wise); Green Fire (Marton); Her Twelve Men (Leonard); The Last Time I Saw Paris (Brooks); Rhapsody (C. Vidor); The Long, Long Trailer (Minnelli); Rogue Cop (Rowland); Rose Marie (LeRoy) (co); The Student Prince (Thorpe) (co); The Glass Slipper (Walters) (co)
1955 Bedevilled (Leisen) (co); Deep in My Heart (Donen) (co); Hit the Deck (Rowland); I’ll Cry Tomorrow (Daniel Mann); Interrupted Melody (Bernhardt); It’s Always Fair Weather (Kelly and Donen); Jupiter’s Darling (Sidney) (co); Love Me or Leave Me (C. Vidor); The Rains of Ranchipur (Negulesco) (co); The Tender Trap (Walters)
1956 Forbidden Planet (Wilcox) (co); Gaby (Beaumont); High Society (Beaudine); Meet Me in Las Vegas (Rowland); The Opposite Sex (Miller); The Power and the Prize (Koster); Ransom! (Segal); The Swan (C. Vidor); Tea and Sympathy (Minnelli); These Wilderness Years (Rowland)
1957 Designing Woman (Minnelli); Don’t Go Near the Water (Walters); The Seventh Sin (Neame); Silk Stockings (Mamoulian); Something of Value (Brooks); Tip on a Dead Jockey (Thorpe); Ten Thousand Bedrooms (Thorpe)
1958 Cei on a Hot Tin Roof (Brooks); Party Girl (Ray); The High Cost of Loving (J. Ferrer); Saddle the Wind (Parish); The Reluctant Debutante (Minnelli) (co); The Tunnel of Love (Kelly)
1959 Ask Any Girl (Walters); Count Your Blessings (Negulesco); It Started with a Kiss (Marshall); The Mating Game (Marshall)
1960 All the Fine Young Cannibals (Anderson); Butterfield 8 (Daniel Mann); The Gazebo (Marshall); Never So Few (J. Sturges)
1961 Ada (Daniel Mann); Bachelor in Paradise (Arnold); Go Naked in the World (MacDougall); The Honeymoon Machine (Thorpe)
1963 The Courtship of Eddie’s Father (Minnelli)
1964 Goodbye Charlie (Minnelli)
1966 Made in Paris (Sagal), Mister Buddwing (Delbert Mann); How Sweet It Is! (Paris)

Publications

On ROSE: articles—

* * *

Helen Rose was born on Chicago’s south side on a yet undetermined date. (Rose came from an era when women felt compelled not to reveal their true age.) Dates vary from 1904 to 1918. Because of this, she often appears as precocious as Mozart with her list of early achievements. However, it is most likely that Rose started her career in her late teens.

She began studies at Chicago Academy of Fine Arts. While still in school she got a job at the Lester Costume Company creating “girlie” costumes for vaudeville and night club extravaganzas. She developed tremendous versatility turning chorus girls into, amongst other things, dancing cupcakes. She then worked at Ernie Young’s costume house for three years gaining more experience and earning a highly regarded reputation as a theatrical designer. She expanded creatively and technically working for Young and at other companies, and learned the difficult art of chiffon design, a skill that she would later find useful in Hollywood. Continuing in the costume business, Rose moved to Los Angeles in 1929 to a company that supplied wardrobes for film studios. For several months she worked at 20th Century-Fox until a political upheaval in their costume department put an end to that assignment. She then became designer for the Ice Follies and stayed with them for 14 years. She was content with this work until MGM gave her a financial offer she could not refuse. The studio was staying with them for 14 years. She was content with this work until MGM gave her a financial offer she could not refuse. The studio was still searching for a replacement for Adrian and did not feel confident that any of their current designers had taken his place. Irene was working at MGM at the time and Rose was assigned to design clothes only for the younger stars. However, while the two designers were jointly doing a film for director Joe Pasternak, he so openly preferred Rose that Irene angrily left the studio.

Pasternak was not the only one who favored Rose. Even in their private lives, stars would ask for Helen. She created wedding gowns for Liz Taylor, Ann Blyth, Jane Powell, Pier Angeli, and Debbie Reynolds. It greatly upset Edith Head when Head’s good friend Grace Kelly requested a Helen Rose gown for her marriage to the Prince of Monaco. Rose was also a favorite of Louis B. Mayer, who referred to her as “my sweetheart Rose.” In general she was well-liked at the studio and dressed almost every major actress for MGM. Others who wore her costumes in addition to those mentioned above were Ava Gardner, Deborah Kerr, Cyd Charisse, Jane Powell, and Lena Horne.

Rose’s designs were well structured with a strong emphasis on the silhouette. She kept her use of decoration simple and subdued. Her designs were elegant and understated, yet innovative, looking natural in spite of their theatrical nature. Like her rival at Paramount, Edith Head, Rose used designs that suited the new demands of the 1950s. They were more practical than fanciful; the sort of clothes a nice upper-middle-class suburbanite might wear. These clothes were also a goal to which less affluent members of the audience could aspire. However, Rose was not limited to the contemporary look and could equally design excellent and accurate period costuming, as in The Swan.

Clothing manufacturers were not blind to the fact that Rose’s designs were popular with the public. Her wedding dress for Father of the Bride was extensively copied by New York fashion designers. Her inventive bathing suits for the Esther Williams pictures, made of light new fabrics, influenced bathing suit manufacturers such as Catalina, Jantzen, and Rose Marie Reid. In 1958 in Cat on a Hot Tin Roof Liz Taylor’s white chiffon gown with the revealing décolletage caused a sensation. The star asked for a copy for her personal wardrobe and Rose received so many additional requests for copies that she decided to enter the wholesale garment business. Her expensive ready-to-wear was sold under franchise to exclusive department stores and speciality shops across the country. In making this move Rose may have reasoned that she could express herself more creatively and make a better living as a ready-to-wear designer. However, she might have also suspected that the time of the great studio costume designers was coming to an end.

By the time she left the studio in 1966, Rose had designed over 200 pictures and had received two Academy Awards for The Bad and the Beautiful and I’ll Cry Tomorrow.

—Edith C. Lee

ROSENBLUM, Ralph

Films as Editor:

1948 Louisiana Story (Flaherty) (asst)
1950 Coney Island (Sherry—short)
1958 Country Music Holiday (Ganz)
1960 Pretty Boy Floyd (Leder); Murder, Inc. (Balaban and Rosenberg)
1961 Mad Dog Coll (Balaban)
1962 Jacktown (Martin); Long Day’s Journey into Night (Lumet); Two Tickets to Paris (Garrison)
1963 Gone Are the Days! (Webster)
1964 Fail Safe (Lumet)
1965 The Fool Killer (Gonzalez) (supervising ed); The Pawnbroker (Lumet); A Thousand Clowns (Coe)
1966 The Group (Lumet); Terror in the City (Baron); The Love Song of Barney Kempinski (Praeger)
1967 Bach to Bach (Leaf—short); A Great Big Thing (Till); The Producers (Brooks)
1968 The Night They Raided Minsky’s (Friedkin); Bye Bye Braverman (Lumet) (co)
1969 Don’t Drink the Water (Morris); Goodbye Columbus (Peerce); Take the Money and Run (Allen) (supervising ed); Trilogy (Perry) (co)
1970 Something for Everyone (Prince)
1971 Bananas (Allen); Born to Win (Passer)
1972 Bad Company (Benton) (co)
1973 Sleeper (Allen)
1975 Love and Death (Allen)
1976 Bernice Bobs Her Hair (Silver)
1977 Remember Those Poker Playing Monkeys (Jacoby); Annie Hall (Allen)
1978 Interiors (Allen)
1981 Summer Solstice (+ d)
1983 Stuck on You! (Herz)

Other Films:

1972 Turner (d)
1977 The President’s Women (Avildsen) (consultant)
1981 By Design (Jutra) (consultant)
1982 Any Friend of Nicholas Nickleby Is a Friend of Mine (d); America (Harvey) (consultant)
1983 Marvin and Tige (Weston) (consultant)
1986 Amy and the Angel (d—for TV); Forever Lulu (Kolke) (consultant)

Publications

By ROSENBLUM: book—

With Robert Karen, When the Shooting Stops . . . the Cutting Begins: A Film Editor’s Story, New York, 1979.

By ROSENBLUM: articles—

American Cinematographer (Hollywood), Autumn 1972.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), Winter 1972–73.
Millimeter (New York), March 1977.
On ROSENBLUM: articles—

Film Comment (New York), March-April 1977.
American Jewish History, December 1996.

* * *

Ralph Rosenblum did a service to editors everywhere with the 1979 publication of his memoir When the Shooting Stops . . . the Cutting Begins, a popular volume which gave the first insider’s explanation of what really goes into film editing. Rosenblum traced the evolution of editing from Griffith through Eisenstein, and recounted the peculiar manipulations of material that resulted in such films as The Producers, Annie Hall, Goodbye Columbus, and The Pawnbroker. For years audiences have been blind to the intricacies of the cutting room, and critics only a little less so, giving credit to directors for a particularly brilliant piece of editing. In the book Rosenblum revealed that he had saved several films by creatively reshaping the footage, such as William Friedkin’s The Night They Raided Minsky’s and Woody Allen’s first major film as a director, Take the Money and Run. Rosenblum’s revelations helped bring credit to the film editing profession, and forced scholars to reconsider editorial contributions.

Rosenblum began his career in New York during the First World War as an apprentice in the Office of War Information, working on propaganda documentaries. His experience there led him to work with documentary editors Sidney Meyers and Helen Van Dongen, and after the war he became Van Dongen’s assistant on Robert Flaherty’s Louisiana Story. Rosenblum’s documentary training was invaluable, teaching him how best to turn dailies into a cohesive, unified film. He had his earliest opportunities to cut on commercials and industrials. After cutting a short-lived TV series, The Search, Rosenblum and Sid Katz set up their own editorial service, and were joined by veteran editor Gene Milford, for years the chief editor at Columbia Pictures. Their company, MKR films, became quite successful cutting spots, promotionals, industrials and corporate films, TV pilots, and the acclaimed TV series Omnibus and the popular Guy Lombardo Show. It was truly a wonderful training ground, and Rosenblum was frequently called upon to transform a shapeless mass of footage into a coherent whole.

He moved into features cutting three low-budget New York gangster movies, Pretty Boy Floyd, Murder, Inc., and Mad Dog Coll, before establishing a relationship with Sidney Lumet. Their films together—Long Day’s Journey into Night, Fail Safe, The Pawnbroker, The Group—are some of the most serious American movies of the decade. Long Day’s Journey and The Group were somewhat straightforward in presentation, but Fail Safe and The Pawnbroker demonstrated Rosenblum’s editorial finesse. The montage ending of Fail Safe, depicting the last few moments of life on earth, and the use of concentration camp flashbacks in The Pawnbroker, brought Rosenblum his first industry recognition.

Oddly, most of Rosenblum’s subsequent editing jobs have been comedies. A Thousand Clowns, directed by Fred Coe and an uncredited Herb Gardner from Gardner’s play, was the first of a series of pictures which called upon Rosenblum to mold difficult material into a hit movie. Lengthy and constant re-editing were required to save A Thousand Clowns, and a similar situation prevailed with Mel Brooks’s The Producers and William Friedkin’s The Night They Raided Minsky’s. The difficulties of working with Brooks and Friedkin are discussed in agonizing detail in Rosenblum’s book; both pictures ironically stand up as superior comedies.

Working with Rosenblum’s editorial collaboration, Woody Allen came into his own with such pictures as Take the Money and Run, Bananas, Sleeper, Love and Death, and Annie Hall. Rosenblum was an integral part of Allen’s filmmaking process; Take the Money and Run and Annie Hall went through major restructuring in post-production. From the early slapdash style of Take the Money and Run and Bananas, through the increasing comic sophistication of Sleeper and Love and Death, to the Oscar-winning brilliance of Annie Hall, the Allen-Rosenblum association is marked by a strong sense of rhythm and tempo, with a reliance on short, concise scenes. This style of editing continued with Woody Allen’s Bergman-like drama Interiors.

——John A. Gallagher

ROSENMAN, Leonard

Films as Composer:

1954 East of Eden (Kazan)
1955 The Cobweb (Minnelli); Rebel without a Cause (N. Ray)
1956 Edge of the City (Ritt)
1957 The Young Stranger (Frankenheimer); Bombers B-52 (Douglas)
1958 The Hidden World (Snyder—doc); Lafayette Escadrille (Wellman)
1959 Pork Chop Hill (Milestone); The Bramble Bush (Petric); The Savage Eye (Strick, Maddow, and Meyers)
1960 The Crowded Sky (Pevney); The Plunderers (Pevney); The Rise and Fall of Legs Diamond (Boetticher)
1961 The Outsider (Delbert Mann)
1962 Convicts 4 (Repprieve) (Kaufman); Hell Is for Heroes (Siegel); The Chapman Report (Cukor)
1966 Fantastic Voyage (Fleischer)
1967 A Covenant with Death (Johnson)
1968 Countdown (Altman); Hellsfighters (McLaglen)
Leonard Rosenman

1969  This Savage Land (McEveety—from TV segments)
1970  A Man Called Horse (Silverstein); Beneath the Planet of the Apes (Post)
1971  The Todd Killings (Skipper) (Shear)
1972  Prophecy (Frankenheimer)
1973  Battle for the Planet of the Apes (Lee Thompson)
1975  Barry Lyndon (Kubrick); Race with the Devil (Starrett); Rooster Cogburn (Millar)
1976  Bound for Glory (Ashby); Birch Interval (Delbert Mann); The Return of a Man Called Horse (Kershner)
1977  September 30, 1955 (9/30/55) (Bridges); The Car (Silverstein); An Enemy of the People (Schaefer)
1978  Lord of the Rings (Bakshi)
1979  Promises in the Dark (Hellman); Prophecy (Frankenheimer)
1980  City in Fear (Smithee); Hide in Plain Sight (Caan); The Jazz Singer (Fleischer)
1982  The Wall (Markowitz); Making Love (Hiller)
1984  The Return of Marcus Welby M.D. (Singer—for TV); Celebrity (Wendkos—for TV); Sylvia (Firth); Heart of the Stag (Firth)
1986  Star Trek IV: The Voyage Home (Nimoy)

1990  Where Pigeons Go to Die (Landon—for TV); Ambition (Goldstein); Robocop II (Kershner)
1991  Aftermath: A Test of Love (G. Jordan—for TV)
1992  Keeper of the City (Roth—for TV)
1994  The Color of Evening (Stafford)
1995  The Face on the Milk Carton (Hussein—for TV); Mrs. Munck (Diane Ladd)
1997  Levitation (Goldstein)

Publications

By ROSENMAN: articles—

“Notes from a Sub-Culture,” in Perspectives of New Music (Yardley, Pennsylvania), vol. 7, no. 1, 1968.
In Knowing the Score, by Irwin Bazelon, New York, 1975.
In Film Score, edited by Tony Thomas, South Brunswick, New Jersey, 1979.
Leonard Rosenman is one of a handful of film composers who have successfully incorporated contemporary compositional techniques into conventional film scoring. Rosenman’s use of Arnold Schoenberg’s 12-tone technique set a standard for the use of various avant-garde, atonal, and serial effects. The composer has also demonstrated an ability to employ authentic period music in a number of films dealing with historical subject matter.

Brought to the attention of director Elia Kazan by one of his piano students, James Dean, Rosenman collaborated with the actor and director on East of Eden and Rebel without a Cause. For the former Rosenman opted for selective instrumentation at many points in the score rather than the large orchestral sound common in films of the time, and also provided an extended musical passage at the end of the film, running several minutes in length and giving the composer an opportunity to develop and combine themes heard throughout the film.

The use of the 12-tone technique for The Cobweb demonstrated the potential for such techniques in film scoring and led to the utilization by composers of more contemporary sounds, both in similar psychological dramas and later in other types of films. While Rosenman himself has continued to experiment in such sounds (as in Fantastic Voyage), he has refused to become typed as a “modern” composer. Rosenman has also shown an ability to adapt more traditional musical forms to his scores, ranging from the use of an ancient Chinese tune in Pork Chop Hill to the incorporation of authentic Native American music into the score for A Man Called Horse. His Academy Awards have been for arranging rather than original compositions. Rosenman received awards for his adaptation of Woody Guthrie songs in Bound for Glory and for the arrangements of classical pieces in Kubrick’s Barry Lyndon, although Rosenman has expressed dissatisfaction with the final result and Kubrick’s overuse of one particular theme at the expense of many of the composer’s other variations.

The multiple facets of Rosenman’s work are reflected in his extensive score for Lord of the Rings, which combines richly textured chordal structures and unusual tonalities with more lyrical passages and a unifying march motif. In recent years Rosenman has turned to more intimate personal dramas requiring less experimental approaches. In addition to his film work Rosenman has remained active in composing concert music and has worked extensively in television, although he referred to the latter in an interview for the American Film Institute as “the quintessential schlock medium,” adding that much of the music for the medium had a generic quality and was little more than “‘wallpaper.’”

—Richard R. Ness

ROSHER, Charles

Cinematographer. Nationality: British. Born: England, 1885. Family: Children: the actress Joan Marsh and the photographer Charles (Chuck) Rosher, Jr. Career: Lived in the United States after 1908, and in Hollywood after 1911; 1912—first film as photographer, Early Days Out West; worked on several Mary Pickford films, and later for MGM and other studios; made numerous technical innovations; 1918—founding member, American Society of Cinematographers. Awards: Academy Award for Sunrise, 1927–28; The Yearling, 1946. Died: In 1974.

Films as Cinematographer:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1912</td>
<td>Early Days Out West (Turner)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1914</td>
<td>With General Pancho Villa in Mexico; In Bermuda (Dawley); The Oath of a Viking (Gordon); The Next in Command (Gordon); The Mystery of the Poisoned Pool (Gordon)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1915</td>
<td>Gene of the Northland (Clarke); The Smugglers' Lass (Clarke); The Mad Maid of the Forest (Clarke)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1916</td>
<td>The Dumb Girl of Portici (Smalley and Weber); Blackbirds (McGowan); Voice in the Fog (McGowan); Pudd'head Wilson (Reicher); The Sowers (W. De Mille); The Blacklist (W. De Mille); Anton the Terrible (W. De Mille); The Plow Girl (Leonard); The Clown (W. De Mille); Common Ground (W. De Mille)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1917</td>
<td>On Record (Leonard); At First Sight (Leonard); Hashimura Togo (W. De Mille); The Primrose Ring (Leonard); Secret Game (W. De Mille); Mormon Main (Leonard); A Little Princess (Neilan) (co)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1918</td>
<td>Too Many Millions (Cruze); The Dub (Cruze); Till I Come Back to You (C. DeMille) (co); Widow's Might (W. De Mille); One More American (W. De Mille); Honor of His House (W. De Mille); How Could You, Jean? (Taylor); White Man's Law (Young); Johanna Enlists (Taylor); Captain Kidd, Jr. (Taylor)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1919</td>
<td>The Hoodlum (Franklin); Daddy Long Legs (Neilan); Heart o' the Hills (Franklin)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1920</td>
<td>Polyanna (Powell); Suds (Dillon)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1921</td>
<td>The Love Light (Marion); Through the Back Door (Green); Little Lord Fauntleroy (Green and J. Pickford); Saint Ilario (Kolker)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1922</td>
<td>Smilin' Through (Franklin); Tess of the Storm Country (Robertson)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1923</td>
<td>Tiger Rose (Franklin); Rosita (Lubitsch)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1924</td>
<td>Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall (Neilan)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Charles Rosher

1925  Little Annie Rooney (Beaudine) (co)
1926  Sparrows (Beaudine) (co)
1927  Sunrise (Murnau) (co); My Best Girl (Taylor)
1928  Tempest (Taylor)
1929  Atlantic (Dupont); The Vagabond Queen (von Bolvary)
1930  La Route est belle (Wolfe and Florey); Two Worlds (Dupont);
      Knowing Men (Glyn); War Nurse (Selwyn); Paid (Wood)
1931  Dance, Fool, Dance (Milton); This Modern Age (Grinde);
      Laughing Sinners (Beaumont); Silence (Gasnier and Marcin);
      Beloved Bachelor (Corrigan)
1932  Two against the World (Mayo); What Price Hollywood? (Cukor);
      Rockabye (Cukor)
1933  Bed of Roses (La Cava); After Tonight (Archainbaud); Our Betters (Cukor); The Past of Mary Holmes (Thompson and Vorkapich); Silver Cord (Cromwell)
1934  Flaming Gold (R. Ince); What Every Woman Knows (La Cava); Outcast Lady (Leonard); Moulin Rouge (Hanfield);
      The Affairs of Cellini (La Cava); After Office Hours (Leonard);
      The Call of the Wild (Wellman)
1935  Broadway Melody of 1936 (Del Ruth)
1936  Small Town Girl (Wellman); Little Lord Fauntleroy (Cromwell)

1937  Men Are Not Gods (Reisch); The Woman I Love (Litvak); The Perfect Specimen (Curtiz); Hollywood Hotel (Berkeley) (co)
1938  Hard to Get (Enright); White Banners (Goulding)
1939  Espionage Agent (Bacon); Hell’s Kitchen (Seiler and Dupont);
      Off the Record (Flood); Yes, My Darling Daughter (Keighley)
1940  A Child Is Born (Bacon); My Love Came Back (Bernhardt);
      Three Cheers for the Irish (Bacon); Brother Rat and a Baby
      (Enright)
1941  Four Mothers (Keighley); Million Dollar Baby (Bernhardt);
      One Foot in Heaven (Rapper)
1942  Stand By for Action (Leonard); Mokey (Root); Pierre of the Plains (Seitz)
1943  Swing Fever (Whelan); Assignment in Brittany (Conway)
1944  Kismet (Dieterle)
1945  Yolanda and the Thief (Minnelli)
1946  The Yearling (Brown) (co); Ziegfeld Follies (Minnelli) (co)
1947  Fiesta (Thorpe) (co); Song of the Thin Man (Buzzell); Dark Delusion (Goldbeck)
1948  On an Island with You (Thorpe); Words and Music (Taurog) (co)
1949  Neptune’s Daughter (Buzzell); The Red Danube (Sidney);
      East Side, West Side (LeRoy)
1950  Pagan Love Song (Alton); Annie Get Your Gun (Sidney)
1951  Show Boat (Sidney)
1952  Scaramouche (Sidney)
1953  The Story of Three Loves (Reinhardt and Minnelli) (co); Young Bess (Sidney); Kiss Me Kate (Sidney)
1955  Jupiter’s Darling (Sidney) (co)

Publications

By ROSHER: article—

American Cinematographer (Hollywood), February 1982.

On ROSHER: articles—

Sidney, George, on Show Boat in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), August 1951.
Film Comment (New York), Summer 1972.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), March 1974.

Charles Rosher first worked as a photographer of portraits, then he began filming westerns. It is therefore no surprise that when in 1913 the notorious Pancho Villa signed a film contract with Mutual Film Corporation, Rosher was chosen to do the filming.

Great Hollywood directors often have one actress who seems to bring out the best in them; for Lee Garmes it was Dietrich; for William Daniels, Garbo; for Rosher, Mary Pickford. The 1921 version of Little Lord Fauntleroy, starring Pickford, called forth considerable inventive genius on Rosher’s part to achieve some intricate moving-camera shots.

His collaboration with Karl Struss on the cinematography of Sunrise led to a tour de force in photographing people against a landscape of lights. They photograph, in the country scenes, water reflecting light and, in the city scenes, glass. Sunrise visually bears comparison with the great French Impressionists and Post-Impressionists, presenting a world which is realistic, and yet also inviting the viewer into the romantic world of the young lovers. This film’s successful mixture of realism with romanticism is all the more miraculous when one considers that it was adapted from a novel of dismal and unrelieved naturalism. The film’s superior qualities are in great part due to the cameramen. Except for Murnau’s demands for a moving camera and his interest in reflected light, he allowed the cinematographers a free hand with the visuals. In order to achieve a shimmering effect, Rosher and Struss shot towards the sun. They sought twilight effects of light coming out of the doors of the village houses.

Rosher photographed the 1936 version of Little Lord Fauntleroy. Later in his career, he filmed musicals—Show Boat and Kiss Me Kate—in the Christmas-card technicolor that predominated then. Rosher’s real talent, however, was working in black and white, during the silent era. Although many of Rosher’s contributions to cinematography were made before there were Academy Awards, he did win Oscars for Sunrise and The Yearling.

—Rodney Farnsworth

ROSSON, Hal

Films as Cinematographer:

1915  David Harum (Dwan) (cam)
1917  Panthea (Dwan) (co)
1919  The Cinema Murder (Baker)
1920  Polly of the Storm Country (Baker)
1921  Heliotrope (Baker); Buried Treasure (Webb); Everything for Sale (O’Connor)
1922  A Homespun Vamp (O’Connor); A Virginia Courtship (O’Connor); The Cradle (Powell); For the Defense (Powell); Through a Glass Window (Campbell)
1923  Quicksands (Conway) (co); Lawful Larceny (Dwan); Garri- son’s Finish (A. Rosson); Dark Secrets (Fleming); The Glimpses of the Moon (Dwan); Zaza (Dwan)
1924  Manhattan (Burnside); A Society Scandal (Dwan); Manhandled (Dwan); The Story without a Name (Willat)
1925  A Man Must Live (Sloane); Too Many Kisses (Sloane); The Little French Girl (Brenon); The Street of Forgotten Men (Brenon); Classified (Santell)
1926  Infatuation (Cummings); Up in Mabel’s Room (Hopper); For Wives Only (Heerman); Say It Again (La Cava); Almost a Lady (Hopper); Man Bait (Crisp)
1927  Rough House Rosie (Strayer) (co); Jim the Conqueror (Seitz); Getting Gertie’s Garter (Hopper); Evening Clothes (Reed); Service for Ladies (D’Arrast); A Gentleman of Paris (D’Arrast); Open Range (Smith)
1928  The Docks of New York (von Sternberg); Gentlemen Prefer Blondes (St. Clair); The Savadin Paradusce (Reed); Three Week Ends (Badger); The Drag Net (von Sternberg); Abie’s Irish Rose (Fleming)
1929  The Far Call (Dwan); Trent’s Last Case (Hawks); Frozen Justice (Dwan); South Sea Rose (Dwan); The Case of Lena Smith (von Sternberg)
1930  Hello Sister (W. Lang); This Mad World (C. DeMille) (co); Madame Satan (C. DeMille); Passion Flower (W. De Mille)
1931  Men Call It Love (Selwyn); The Prodigal (Pollard); The Squaw Man (C. DeMille); Son of India (Feyder); Sporting Blood (Brabin); The Cuban Love Song (Van Dyke)
1932  Red Headed Woman (Conway); Red Dust (Fleming); Tarzan, the Ape Man (Van Dyke); When a Feller Needs a Friend
(Pollard); Are You Listening? (Beaumont); Downstairs (Bell); Kongo (Cowan)
1933 Hold Your Man (Wood); Bombshell (Fleming); Hell Below (Conway); The Barbarian (Wood); Turn Back the Clock (Selwyn); Penthouse (Van Dyke) (co)
1934 The Cat and the Fiddle (Howard) (co); This Side of Heaven (Howard); Treasure Island (Fleming) (co)
1935 The Scarlet Pimpernel (Young)
1936 As You Like It (Czinner); The Ghost Goes West (Clair); The Man Who Could Work Miracles (Mendes); The Devil Is a Sissy (Van Dyke) (co); The Garden of Allah (Boleslawsky) (co)
1937 Captains Courageous (Fleming); They Gave Him a Gun (Van Dyke); The Emperor's Candlesticks (Fitzmaurice)
1938 Too Hot to Handle (Conway); A Yank at Oxford (Conway)
1939 Gone with the Wind (Fleming) (co); The Wizard of Oz (Fleming)
1940 Boom Town (Conway); I Take This Woman (Van Dyke); Flight Command (Borzage); Edison the Man (Brown); Dr. Kildare Goes Home (Bucquet)
1941 The Penalty (Bucquet); Men of Boys Town (Taurog); Washington Melodrama (Simon); Honky Tonk (Conway); Johnny Eager (LeRoy)
1942 Somewhere I'll Find You (Ruggles); Tennessee Johnson (Dieterle)
1943 Slightly Dangerous (Ruggles)
1944 Thirty Seconds over Tokyo (LeRoy) (co); An American Romance (K. Vidor); Between Two Women (Goldbeck)
1946 Three Wise Fools (Buzzell); No Leave, No Love (Martin) (co); My Brother Talks to Horses (Zinnemann)
1947 The Hucksters (Conway); Living in a Big Way (La Cava); Duel in the Sun (K. Vidor) (co)
1948 Command Decision (Wood); Homecoming (LeRoy)
1949 On the Town (Kelly and Donen); Any Number Can Play (LeRoy); The Stratton Story (Wood)
1950 To Please a Lady (Brown); Key to the City (Sidney); The Asphalt Jungle (Huston)
1951 The Red Badge of Courage (Huston)
1952 The Lone Star (V. Sherman); Love Is Better Than Ever (Donen); Singin' in the Rain (Kelly and Donen)
1953 The Actress (Cukor); I Love Melvin (Weis); The Story of Three Loves (Reinhardt and Minnelli) (co); Dangerous When Wet (Walters)
1954 Mambo (Rosen); Ulisse (Ulysses) (Camerini)
1955 Strange Lady in Town (LeRoy); Pete Kelly's Blues (Webb)
1956 The Bad Seed (LeRoy); Toward the Unknown (LeRoy)
1957 The Enemy Below (Powell)
1958 No Time for Sergeants (LeRoy); Onionhead (Taurog)
1967 El Dorado (Hawks)

Publications

By ROSSON: article—

On ROSSON: articles—

Wayne, Palma, in Saturday Evening Post (Philadelphia), 22 July 1933.
Film Comment (New York), Summer 1972.

* * *

Louis B. Mayer once said to the cinematographer Hal Rosson: ‘‘If it’s an MGM film, it has to look like an MGM film.’’ Rosson, one of the pioneers in motion picture photography—his career spanned the years 1915 to 1967—spent 23 of those years at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and is one of the photographers who helped create and maintain the ‘‘polished look’’ that was so integral a part of the studio’s films.

Rosson was an actor with Vitagraph as early as 1908 and became a camera operator in 1915. By 1920 he was a full-fledged cinematographer at Paramount where he enjoyed close working relationships with such directors as Allan Dwan, Harry D’Arrast, Mal St. Clair, and Josef von Sternberg, working on such films as Manhandled, A Gentleman of Paris, Gentlemen Prefer Blondes, and The Docks of New York. Rosson recalled that during those days one experimented, listened, and watched to learn and develop one’s craft. Technical difficulties were approached and surmounted as they occurred, with no pretensions to ‘‘art.’’ In doing so, Rosson became one of the finest exponents of his craft.

He joined MGM in 1930 and it was there that he perfected his own skills and aided that studio in developing the glossy patina which would become an MGM trademark. One beautifully photographed film was Red Dust, starring Jean Harlow (whom he married). MGM loaned him to Selznick International for The Garden of Allah in 1936, and Rosson recalled that while he knew nothing about color film at the time, he decided ‘‘to control color, to eliminate color unless it could be used dramatically. I didn’t want color to control me.’’ For his efforts, he and cophotographer W. Howard Greene, received special Academy Award plaques. His most outstanding achievement with color was for MGM’s The Wizard of Oz, though again he modestly described his work as simply a matter of ‘‘controlling color.’’ He received Academy Award nominations for his MGM work on such black-and-white films as Boom Town, Thirty Seconds over Tokyo, and The Asphalt Jungle, and ended his MGM years with excellent color work on Singin’ in the Rain and The Story of Three Loves. After 1955 he worked at various studios, and received an Oscar nomination for The Bad Seed at Warner Bros. His last film was Howard Hawks’s El Dorado for Paramount. Rosson was proud of his years at MGM, and fondly recalled its esprit de corps: ‘‘The spirit was such that we were proud to be at MGM.’’

—Ronald Bowers
ROTA, Nino

Composer. Nationality: Italian. Born: Nini Rinaldi in Milan, 31 December 1911. Education: Attended St. Cecilia Academy, Rome, diploma, 1930; Curtis Institute, Philadelphia; also studied with Giacomo Orefice and others. Career: Child prodigy: composer of oratorios, operas, incidental music for stage plays; 1933—first film score, for Treno popolare; 1937–38—taught at Liceo Musicale, Taranto; 1939—taught at Bari Conservatory, and director, 1950–78. Awards: British Academy Award for The Condemned of Altona (De Sica); Il mafioso (Lattuada) (co); The Reluctant Saint (Dmytryk) (co); The Godfather, Part II

Died: In Rome, 10 April 1979.

Films as Composer:

1933 Treno popolare (Matarazzo)
1943 Zazà (Castellani); Il birichino di papa (Matarazzo)
1945 Le freccia nel fianco (Lattuada); Un Americano in vacanza (A Yank in Rome) (Zampa)
1946 Le miserie del Signor Travet (Soldati); Roma città libera (Paglieri); Vivere in pace (To Live in Peace) (Zampa); Mio figlio professore (Castellani)
1947 Daniele Cortis (Soldati); Come persi la guerra (Borghesio); Il delitto di Giovanni Episcopo (Flesh Will Surrender) (Lattuada); Albergo Luna, Camera 34 (Bragaglia)
1948 Amanti senza amore (Frangiolini); Arrivederci Papà (Mastrocinque); I pirati di Capri (Ulmer and Scotese);

Senza pietà (Without Pity) (Lattuada); Fuga in Francia (Soldati); In nome della legge (Germi); Molti sogno per le strade (Camerini); The Glass Mountain (Cass); Prohibito rubare (Guaglio) (Comencini); E primavera (Castellani)

1949 Obsession (The Hidden Room) (Dmytryk); Campana a martello (Children of Change) (Zampa)
1950 Napoli milionaria (de Filippo); Vita da cani (Steno and Monicelli); Donne e briganti (Soldati); E più facile che un camello (His Last Twelve Hours) (Zampa)
1951 Due mogli sono troppe (Camerini); Anna (Lattuada); Filum ena Marturano (de Filippo); Due soldi di speranza (Castellani); Era lui . . . stà! stà! (Metz, Marchesi, and Girolami); Peppino e Violetta (Cleone); Valley of Eagles (Young)
1952 Marito e moglie (de Filippo); The Venetian Bird (The Assassin) (Thomas); Something Money Can’t Buy (Jackson); Le sceicco bianco (The White Sheikh) (Fellini); Le meravigliose avventure di Guerrin Meschino (Francisci); La Regina di Saba (Francisci); I sette dell’orsa maggiore (Coletti); Totò e i re di Roma (Steno and Monicelli)
1953 L’Ennemi public no. 1 (The Most Wanted Man) (Verneuil) (co); Gli uomini che mascolzioni (Pellegrini); I vitelloni (Fellini); Anni facili (Easy Years) (Zampa); Fanciulle di lusso (Vorhaus); Non due sole (Metz, Marchesi, and Girolami); Scampolo ’53 (Bianchi); Star of India (Lubin); La mano della straniero (The Stranger’s Hand) (Soldati)
1954 La strada (Fellini); Prohibito (Monicelli); Mambo (Rossen); Musodoro (Bennati); Senso (Visconti); La grande speranza (Coletti); La domenica della buona gente (Majano); Via Padova 46 (Bianchi); Le due orfanelle (Gentilomo)
1955 Il bidone (Fellini); Un eroe dei nostri tempi (Monicelli); Amici per la pelle (Friends for Life) (Rossi); La bella di Roma (Comencini)
1956 War and Peace (K. Vidor); Le notti di Cabiria (Cabiria. Nights of Cabiria) (Fellini)
1957 Le note bianche (White Nights) (Visconti); Fortunella (de Filippo); Londra chiama Polo Nord (Coletti); El medico e lo stregone (Monicelli); Il momento più bello (Emmer); Italia piccola (Soldati)
1958 Barrage contre le Pacifique (This Angry Age; The Sea Wall) (Clément); Città di notte (Trieste); Un ettar di cielo (Casadio); La Loi . . . c’est la loi (The Law Is the Law) (Christian-Jaque); Giovanni mariti (Bolognini); Gli Italiani sono matti (Coletti)
1959 La grande guerra (The Great War) (Monicelli); Sons and Lovers (Cardiff); Never Take No for an Answer (Cloche and Smart)
1960 La dolce vita (Fellini); Plein soleil (Purple Noon) (Clément); Sotto dieci bandiere (Under Ten Flags) (Coletti and Narizzano); Rocco e i suoi fratelli (Rocco and His Brothers) (Visconti)
1961 The Best of Enemies (Hamilton); Il brigante (Castellani); Fantasmi a Roma (Pietrangeli)
1962 Boccaccio 70 (Fellini and Visconti episodes); L’isola di Arturo (Arturo’s Island) (Damiani); I sequestrati di Altona (The Condemned of Altona) (De Sica); Il mafioso (Mafioso) (Lattuada) (co); The Reluctant Saint (Dmytryk)
1963 Mare matto (Castellani); Otto e mezzo (81/2) (Fellini); Il gattopardo (The Leopard) (Visconti); Il maestro di Vigevano (Peri)

1965 Giulietta degli spiriti (Juliet of the Spirits) (Fellini)

1966 Spara forte, più forte, non capisco (Shout Loud, Louder . . . I Don’t Understand) (de Filippo)

1967 The Taming of the Shrew (Zeffirelli)

1968 “Tre passi nel delirio” ep. of Histoires extraordinaires (Spirits of the Dead) (Fellini); Romeo and Juliet (Zeffirelli)

1969 Satyricon (Fellini)

1970 I clowns (The Clowns) (Fellini); Waterloo (Bondarchuk)

1972 The Godfather (Coppola); Roma (Fellini)

1973 Film d’amore e d’anarchia (Love and Anarchy) (Wertmüller); Amarcord (Fellini); Sunset, Sunrise (Kurohara)

1974 The Abdication (Harvey); The Godfather, Part II (Coppola)

1976 Caro Michele (Monicelli); Casanova (Fellini); Ragazzo di borgata (Slum Boy) (Paradisi) (co)

1978 Death on the Nile (Guillermin)

1979 Prova d’orchestra (Orchestra Rehearsal) (Fellini); Hurricane (Troell)

1986 I Soliti ignoti . . . vent’anni dopo

1987 Federico Fellini’s Intervista (Fellini)

1990 The Godfather, Part III (Coppola)

Publications

By ROTA: article—

On ROTA: books—

De Santi, Pier Marco, La musica di Nino Rota, Bari, 1983.

Latorre, José María, Nino Rota: La Imagen de la música, Barcelona, 1989.

On ROTA: articles—

Dirigido por . . . (Barcelona), December 1973.

Film Quarterly (Berkeley, California), Winter 1974–75.

Ecran (Paris), September 1975.

Soundtrack! (Hollywood), March 1978.

Take One (Montreal), May 1979.

Bianco e Nero (Rome), July-August 1979.

Image et Son (Paris), September 1979.

Cinema Nuovo (Turin), December 1981.

Score (Lelystad, Netherlands), January 1983.

Soundtrack! (Hollywood), March and June 1987.

Mannino, F., “‘Nino Rota neorealista,’” in Revista del Cinematografo, no. 63, April 1993.

Deutsch, D.C., “‘Film Music,’” in Soundtrack! (Hollywood), December 1996.

* * *

Nino Rota is best known for his unique 28-year-long association with Federico Fellini and his popular and prolific musical work (he composed 143 scores) for film and television.

Almost all of the music used in Fellini’s films from 1951 until 1979, were written or chosen by Rota. Simple, melodicious, stanziac, and, almost always, diatonic formulation characterizes the orchestration of many of his scores for Fellini. Due to Fellini’s fragmentary style, Rota’s compositions became the unifying force which gave continuity to Fellini’s films. For Fellini, Rota never wrote a pure accompaniment to the action nor did his music only represent a few underlying emotional or dramatic moments. His music always contributed to the classification of the structure, of the characters, of the similarities between various situations, of the bond (often not explicit) between the facts and the action. It maintained an undisputed autonomy that paralleled the role and the value of the scenic action and narration. Fellini, because of his limited knowledge of music and because of his appreciation for Rota’s talent, gave the composer creative control of the musical scores. To acquire a certain rhythm and to create a certain atmosphere for a scene, Fellini often filmed to Rota’s music or to the music he had chosen. The director would simply suggest a sentiment or situation to Rota and Rota would spontaneously compose something which reflected and clarified the director’s intent.

Rota, a child prodigy, was classically trained in composition and piano and composed his first oratorio, The Childhood of John the Baptist, at age 11. Toscanini and D’Anunzio admired his work and became his patrons. He studied under Ildebrando Pizzetti and Alfredo Cassela, and at the Milan Conservatory, the Academy of Santa Cecilia in Rome, and from 1930–32, the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia. There he studied composition under Rosaria Scalero. Through her, he became familiar with the historic development of various styles and musical forms. This knowledge later enabled Rota to write for almost any period or in any style of music and contributed to his success as a composer for film. While at the Curtis Institute, he met and became friends with Aaron Copland, who inspired Rota’s interest in film. He warned Rota not to assume the prejudice and the snobbish attitude that music written for film was not to be taken seriously and was simply silly enjoyment. He also became familiar with American music and musicians like Cole Porter, Irving Berlin, and George Gershwin. Rota’s citation, in Amarcord, of the song “Stormy Weather” reflects American music’s influence on him.

In 1931 he composed his first film score for Treno popolare, directed by Raffaello Matarazzo. This was the only score he wrote in the 1930s. The film was a critical failure and Rota did not want to be associated with it. He feared his career in film was finished, and decided to establish himself as a “serious” composer. From 1934 until 1937, he wrote mainly chamber music and his college thesis, and he taught music in a high school in Taranto. In 1939, he began teaching composition at the Bari Conservatory.

During the 1940s and 1950s he was the principal composer for Lux Films and was often forced to collaborate on “shoddy” films; however, it was during this time that he began subtly combining leitmotif with symphonic structure to comment, in a melodious way, on characters and situations. He achieved fame as a composer for epoch films, and also gained recognition for his operas.

From 1951 until his death, his work with directors like Fellini, Franco Zeffirelli, Luchino Visconti, and Francis Ford Coppola brought him additional fame. Rota once said he felt it unfortunate that a film score was, usually, only a "secondary" element of a film, "subservient" to the visual images, "a mere tool, used to recall and give credence to the images and the emotions those images try to evoke.

Rota’s critics often called him unoriginal, "a mimic" with a facility musically to reproduce a mood or ambience of a specific period. Many critics called him too melodious to be taken seriously. In reference to these criticisms, Rota responded: "Originality can not necessarily be found in a new syntax or new musical grammar. If something is said to be melodic, who fears that it relates to a theme or a period in history? Simple melody brings up easy immediacy. If something is said to be melodic, who fears that it relates to a theme or a period in history? Simple melody brings up easy relationship to a theme or a period in history? Simple melody brings up easy immediacy.

Actually, originality of music is in its substance, in the message it conveys. A melodic key note is, usually, only a "secondary" element of a film, "subservient" to the visual images, "a mere tool, used to recall and give credence to the images and the emotions those images try to evoke.

In 1972 he was nominated for an Oscar for his score for The Godfather; however, someone unjustly accused him of plagiarism. He protested this accusation and the charges were dropped because it was during this time that he began subtly combining leitmotif with symphonic structure to comment, in a melodious way, on characters and situations. He achieved fame as a composer for epoch films, and also gained recognition for his operas.
Cinema Nuovo (Bari), May-June 1986.
Cinema Nuovo (Bari), November-December 1993.

On ROTUNNO: articles—

Focus on Film (London), special cinematography issue, no. 13, 1973 + filmo.
Film Comment (New York), vol. 25, no. 5, September-October 1989 + filmo.

* * *

From Kramer’s On The Beach to Fellini’s Satyricon, Visconti’s The Leopard to Fosse’s All That Jazz, Zurlini’s Cronica familiare to Altman’s Popeye, Giuseppe Rotunno, more than almost any other European lighting cameraman, has explored every corner of filmmaking. Despite his popularity with American directors, his best work has been in Italy, especially with Visconti, whose operator he was on Senso and who later used him on nearly all his films, including The Leopard, the glorious sun-struck Sicilian exteriors of which suggest that Rotunno, in slightly different circumstances, might have been one of the cinema’s great photographers of vistas.

Rotunno is essentially a cameraman of colour. While Gianni di Venanzo, on films like La notte, L’eclisse and Salvatore Giuliano, was refining a style of matte blacks and blisteringly white whites, Rotunno plunged into a sensual Goyaesque darkness (of which there is only a hint, sadly, in his shooting of Henry Koster’s murky Goya bio-pic The Naked Maja). The prevailing sense in Rotunno’s photography became one of rich colour, thickened and diluted with black.

Before Gordon Willis won the title, he was surely cinema’s reigning “Prince of Darkness,” a fact which makes doubly odd Visconti’s decision to use Pasqualino de Santis on The Damned, the most penumbral of all his films.

In Mario Monicelli’s The Organiser and Valerio Zurlini’s underrated Cronica familiare, Rotunno showed he could adapt his style to working-class reality, but he truly established himself as a master with Visconti’s episode “The Job” for the omnibus film Boccaccio ’70, where a wealthy wife suggests, out of boredom and perversity, that she replace, for money, her husband’s latest mistress. His lighting of them. Often working for directors with reputations as mavericks or martinets (Altman on Popeye, Mike Nichols on Carnal Knowledge and Regarding Henry, Alan Pakula on Rollover, Bob Fosse on All That Jazz), he has had a bumpy Hollywood career, not helped by the fact that all his films, including even the staid Five Days One Summer with Fred Zinnemann, have almost uniformly flopped. But from the man who photographed The Leopard, much may yet be expected.

—John Baxter

ROUSSELOT, Philippe

Cinematographer. Nationality: French. Born: Meurthe et Moselle, France, 4 September 1945; moved from Paris to New York. Education: Attended “Vaugirard,” Ecole Louis Lumiere Film School in Paris, 1964–66. Family: Married 1981; one daughter. Career: Early work on documentaries; worked as loader for Nestor Almedros on Ma Nuit Chez Maud (My Night at Maud’s), 1969; worked in commercials and still photography with Sara Moon; camera assistant on Eric Rohmer films; directorial debut, The Serpent’s Kiss, 1996. Awards: Prix Jean Vigo, for Paradiso, 1972; Prix Special, Cannes, for La Drolesse, 1978; National Society of Film Critics Award (USA) for Best Cinematography, and Cesar Award (France) for Best Cinematography, for Diva, 1982; Cesar Award for Best Cinematography, for Theresa, 1987; National Society of Film Critics Award for Best Cinematography, and British Society of Cinematographers Award for Best Cinematography, for Hope and Glory, 1987; Academy Award for Best Cinematography, for A River Runs Through It, 1993; British Society of Cinematographers Award for Best Cinematography, and BAFTA (UK) Award for Best Cinematography, for Interview With the Vampire: The Vampire Chronicles, 1994; Cesar Award for Best Cinematography, for La Reine Margot (Queen Margot), 1995. Agent: David Gersh, Gersh Agency, 232 N. Canon Drive, Beverly Hills, CA 90210, U.S.A.

Films as Cinematographer:

1970 Clair de Terre (Gilles)
1971 Absences Repetees (Gilles)
1972 Paradiso (Bricout); L’Affiche Rouge (The Red Poster) (Cassenti); Pour Clemence (Belmont)
1973 La Raison du Plus Fou (Reichenbach); Il Pleut Toujours (Simon)
1975 Couple Temoin (Klein)
1977 Diabolo Menthe (Peppermint Soda) (Kurys); Adam (Benamou)
1978 La Drolesse (Doillon); La Vie de Jean-Jacques Rousseau (Goretta)
1979 Cocktail Molotov (Kurys)
1980 La Provinciae (The Girl From Lorraine) (Goretta)
1981 Diva (Beineix); La Gueule du Loup (Leviant); Guy de Maupassant (Drach)
1982 La Lune dans le Caniveau (Moon in the Gutter) (Beineix); Les Voleurs de la Nuit (Fuller)
1983 Nemo (Selignac)
1984 Emerald Forest (Boorman); Night Magic (Furey)
1985 Therese (Cavaliere)
1986
Hope and Glory (Boorman)
1987
L’ours (Annaud)
1988
Dangerous Liaisons (Frears); Trop belle pour toi (Blier)
1989
Henry and June (Kaufman); We’re No Angels (Jordan)
1990
The Miracle (Jordan); Merci la vie (Blier)
1991
A River Runs Through It (Redford)
1992
Sommersby (Amiel); Flesh and Bone (Kloves)
1993
La Reine Margot (Queen Margot) (Chereau)
1994
Interview With the Vampire: The Vampire Chronicles (Jordan); Mary Riley (Frears) 1996
The People vs. Larry Flint (Forman)
1998
Instinct (Turteltaub)
1999
Random Hearts (Pollack)
2000
Remember the Titans; The Tailor of Panama

Films as Camera Assistant:

1969
Ma Nuit Chez Maud (My Night at Maud’s) (Rohmer)
1970
Le Genou de Claire (Claire’s Knee) (Rohmer)
1972
L’Amour l’apres-midi (Chloe in the Afternoon) (Rohmer)

Other Films:

1997
The Serpent’s Kiss (d)

Publications

On ROUSSELOT: articles—

Philippe Rousselot first caught the attention of Hollywood with his work as cinematographer on the John Boorman film Hope and Glory in 1986, but he had been celebrated throughout Europe and in his native France for many years prior. His work on the 1982 Diva won the Cesar (the French equivalent of the Academy Award) for Best Cinematography and propelled his career to new levels. He received another Cesar for Therese, a 1985 work which chronicled the life of a fiercely faithful Carmelite nun. Rousselot’s work is lyrical, passionate, and subtle in its execution. His films never suffer from apparent technique, but reveal an appreciation for the sublime qualities of light and color.

Rousselot began his career as a camera assistant on several Eric Rohmer films. The first was Ma Nuit Chez Maud (1969), where he worked beside esteemed cinematographer Nestor Almendros as a camera loader. This apprenticeship was apparently instrumental in Rousselot’s development. Rousselot credits this experience as a profound influence, along with his work in commercials with still photographer Sara Moon. Before this, though, there was Jean Cocteau. Rousselot was a child of eleven when he first saw the French avant-garde filmmaker’s work, and he found them “so moving, emotionally, visually, and intellectually. They were complete magic to me.”

Rousselot embraced the masters from an early age, and he undoubtedly learned a great deal from all this study. By 1970 he was working as the Director of Photography on the French film Clair de Terre, and found such success that he performed in the same capacity in nearly two films per year in the first decade of his career. This prolific pace continued, with quality never suffering as Rousselot shaped important works by such directors as Phillip Kaufman (Henry and June), Neil Jordan (We’re No Angels, Interview With the Vampire), Robert Redford, Sidney Pollack, Milos Forman, and many others.

Rousselot’s work has won much praise from his peers. In 1993, he won the Academy Award for Best Cinematography for Redford’s fly-fishing film A River Runs Through It. It was his third nomination for the award. Honor has also come from the French Cesar Awards, where he has claimed the title of Best Cinematographer three times, for Beineix’ Diva, Cavaliere’s Therese, and Chereau’s La Reine Margot (Queen Margot). Rousselot received the BAFTA, similar to the Cesar and the Academy Awards, for his work in Jordan’s 1994 film Interview With the Vampire: The Vampire Chronicles, based on the best-selling book by Anne Rice.

Rousselot’s work is highly praised in part because of his delicate lighting design. He uses such devises as Chinese lanterns to soften spectral light and shape his elegant compositions. He works to complement film content and tone with tailored illumination. This is especially evident in such films as Therese, where the lighting shifts to enhance the feeling of holiness within this tale of a young, remarkably passionate nun. His Henry and June shows a loving replication of tonal qualities seen in the still photographs of Brassai, a peripheral character in the film. One wonders where Rousselot’s fine artistic sensibilities will lead him next, as he continues to work on an astonishing number of films from the most important directors of our time.

—Tammy Kinsey

ROZSA, Miklos

Composer. Nationality: American. Born: Nicholas Rozsa in Budapest, Hungary, 18 April 1907. Education: Studied the violin under Lajos Berkovits, and the viola and piano; attended secondary schools in Budapest; studied under Hermann Grabner and Theodor Kroyer at the Conservatory and University in Leipzig, diplomas 1929. Career: Composer from 1915; composer of orchestra works; 1932–35—lived in Paris, and in London, 1935–40; 1937—first film score, for Knight without Armour; 1940—settled in Hollywood; contracts with Paramount and MGM; 1945—Professor of Composition, University of Southern California, Los Angeles. Awards: Academy Awards for Spellbound, 1945; A Double Life, 1947; Ben-Hur, 1959; César award for Providence, 1977. Died: 27 July 1995.
Miklos Rozsa

Films as Composer:

1937 Knight without Armour (Feyder); Thunder in the City (Gering); The Squeaker (Murder on Diamond Row) (Howard)
1938 The Divorce of Lady X (Whelan)
1939 The Four Feathers (Z. Korda); Ten Days in Paris (Missing Ten Days; Spy in the Pantry) (Whelan); The Spy in Black (U-Boot 29) (Powell); On the Night of the Fire (The Fugitive) (Hurst)
1940 Four Dark Hours (The Green Cockerel; Race Gang) (Menzies); The Thief of Bagdad (Powell, Berger, and Whelan)
1941 That Hamilton Woman (Lady Hamilton) (A. Korda); Lydia (Duvivier); Sundown (Hathaway)
1942 Rudyard Kipling’s Jungle Book (The Jungle Book) (A. Korda); J’accure (Jacare—Killer of the Amazon) (C. Ford)
1943 Five Graves to Cairo (Wilders); So Proudly We Hail (Sandrich); Sahara (Z. Korda); The Woman of the Town (Archambaud)
1944 The Hour Before Dawn (Tuttle); Double Indemnity (Wilders); Dark Waters (de Toth); The Man in Half Moon Street (Murphy)
1945 A Song to Remember (C. Vidor); Blood on the Sun (Lloyd); Lady on a Train (David); The Lost Weekend (Wilders); Spellbound (Hitchcock)
1946 Because of Him (Wallace); The Killers (Siodmak); The Strange Love of Martha Ivers (Milestone)
1947 The Red House (Daves); Song of Scheherazade (Reisch); The Macomber Affair (Z. Korda); The Other Love (Z. Korda); Time Out of Mind (Illusions) (Siodmak); Desert Fury (Allen); Brute Force (Dassin); A Double Life (Cukor)
1948 The Secret Behind the Door (F. Lang); A Woman’s Vengeance (The Giaconda Smile) (Z. Korda); The Naked City (Dassin); Criss Cross (Siodmak); Kiss the Blood Off My Hands (Blood on My Hands) (Foster)
1949 Command Decision (Wood); The Bribe (Leonard); Madame Bovary (Minnelli); The Red Danube (Sidney); Adam’s Rib (Cukor); East Side, West Side (LeRoy)
1950 The Asphalt Jungle (Huston); Crisis (Brooks); The Miniver Story (Potter)
1951 Quo Vadis (LeRoy); The Light Touch (Brooks)
1952 Ivanhoe (Thorpe); Plymouth Adventure (Brown)
1953 Julius Caesar (Mankiewicz); Young Bess (Sidney); “Made-moiselle” ep. of The Story of Three Loves (Minnelli); All the Brothers Were Valiant (Thorpe); Knights of the Round Table (Thorpe)
1954 Men of the Fighting Lady (Panther Squadron) (Marton); Valley of the Kings (Pirosh); Green Fire (Marton), Seagulls over Sorrento (Crest of the Wave) (J. & R. Boulting)
1955 Moonfleet (F. Lang); The King’s Thief (Leonard); Diane (Miller)
1956 Tribute to a Badman (Wise); Bhowani Junction (Cukor); Lust for Life (Minnelli)
1957 Something of Value (Brooks); The Seventh Sin (Neame); Tip on a Dead Jockey (Thorpe)
1958 A Time to Love and a Time to Die (Sirk)
1959 The World, the Flesh, and the Devil (MacDougall); Ben-Hur (Wyler)
1960 King of Kings (Ray); El Cid (A. Mann)
1961 Sodom and Gomorrah (Aldrich)
1962 The V.I.P.s (Asquith)
1963 The Power (Haskin); The Green Berets (Wayne and Kellogg)
1970 The Private Life of Sherlock Holmes (Wilder)
1971 The Golden Voyage of Sinbad (Hesseler)
1977 Providence (Resnais)
1978 The Private Files of J. Edgar Hoover (Cohen); Fedora (Wilder)
1979 The Last Embrace (Demme); Time after Time (Meyer)
1980 Eye of the Needle (Marquand)
1981 Dead Men Don’t Wear Plaid (Reiner)
1985 Dragnet (T. Mankiewicz) (song)
1987 Gesucht: Monika Ertl (Baudissin)

Publications

By ROZSA: book—

Double Life (autobiography), New York, 1982.

By ROZSA: articles—

“Quo Vadis,” in Film/TV Music, November-December 1951.
“Julius Caesar,” in Film/TV Music, September-October 1953.
Film Music Notebook (Calabasas, California), vol. 2, no. 4, 1976.
Films and Filming (London), May and June 1977.
Ecran (Paris), November 1978.
In Film Score, edited by Tony Thomas, South Brunswick, New National Film Theatre booklet (London), March 1980.
Première (Paris), March 1980.
Photoplay (London), June 1980.
Cinéma (Paris), June 1980.
Ecran Fantastique (Paris), no. 18, 1981.
24 Images (Longueuil, Quebec), April 1982.
Soundtrack! (Hollywood), September 1982.
New Zealand Film Music Bulletin (Invercargill), November 1982.
Soundtrack! (Hollywood), December 1982.
Cinemasessante (Rome), January-February 1983.

On ROZSA: book—
Palmer, Christopher, Miklos Rozsa: A Sketch of His Life and Work,

On ROZSA: articles—
Sternfeld, Frederick W., “The Strange Music of Martha Ivers,” in Palmer, Christopher, in Performing Right (London), May 1971.
Thomas, Tony, in Music for the Movies, South Brunswick, New
Ecran (Paris), September 1975.
Caps, John, in Film Music Notebook (Calabasas, California), vol. 2, no. 1, 1976.
Positif (Paris), November 1976.
Dirigido por . . . (Barcelona), February 1978.
Palmer, Christopher, in Monthly Film Bulletin (London), March 1978.
“Rozsa Supplement” in Score (Leystad, Netherlands), April 1979.
Soundtrack! (Hollywood), April 1980.
Positif (Paris), July-August 1981.
Filmusic (Leeds), 1982.
National Film Theatre booklet (London), June 1982.
New Zealand Film Music Bulletin (Invercargill), May 1983.
New Zealand Film Music Bulletin (Invercargill), November 1984.
New Zealand Film Music Bulletin (Invercargill), February 1985.
New Zealand Film Music Bulletin (Invercargill), May 1985.
Horton, R., “Music man,” in Film Comment, November/December 1995.
David, Peter, “Symphonic Cinema: Emigré Composers in Holly-
Eder, Bruce, in Films in Review (New York), March-April 1996.
Obituary in Cue Sheet (Hollywood), April 1996.
Teachout, Terry, “I Heard it at the Movies,” in Commentary,
November 1996.

The extensive composing career of Miklos Rozsa can be divided into a number of distinct periods based on associations with particular styles or genres. Yet despite the diversity of his work Rozsa’s scores have a readily identifiable style and consistency. The composer’s later scores in a number of different genres have a similar structure and texture and are marked by characteristic techniques Rozsa has developed and modified throughout his career.

Rozsa’s first period began with his association with the Korda brothers, for whom he scored a number of opulent period and fantasy productions. These scores are distinguished by a richness of texture and variety of instrumentation ranging from a sweeping romanticism to orchestration in the fantasy films reminiscent of Rimsky-Korsakov.
In addition to an opportunity for dynamic effects and oriental stylings, the scores for films such as The Thief of Bagdad and The Jungle Book allowed Rozsa to include lyrical operatic song melodies which reappeared in variations throughout the scores. The Jungle Book score was founded on a series of motifs which were later presented in a concert suite with narration designed largely as a children’s piece, one of the many points at which his film and concert work (referred to in his autobiography as his “double life”) would converge.

The work with Korda resulted in Rozsa’s migration to Hollywood, where a contract with Paramount led to an association with Billy Wilder. Rozsa’s score for Wilder’s Five Graves to Cairo served to bridge the gap between his work in films centered around exotic locales and his move into more serious psychological melodramas.
Rozsa became a prominent contributor to the rising film noir style with his work for Wilder’s Double Indemnity and The Lost Weekend, and the music was characterized by brooding and unsentimentalized themes, driving rhythms which give way abruptly to jolting chords and a use of strings as much for disturbing as for romantic effect.
The Lost Weekend also introduced the theremin to provide a wailing accompaniment for the alcoholic protagonist’s delirium states and the instrument became a favorite for psychological subjects, employed by Rozsa himself for The Red House and in one of his best-remembered scores, for Hitchcock’s Spellbound. Such works demonstrated that film music could be serious and contemporary while still remaining within the symphonic tradition, and further evidence was provided by Rozsa’s association with the producer Mark Hellinger.
The scores for The Killers, The Naked City, and Brute Force contain a raw urban power that perfectly complements the realistic visual emphasis of film noir.

The emotionalism and power evident in such works was also apparent in a series of scores that in many other respects are the opposite of Rozsa’s contemporary psychological period. The composer’s contract with MGM in the late 1940s led to his work in historical and religious pictures which would continue for over a decade. Rather than being regarded as a step back to the Korda period, Rozsa’s scores for the MGM epics can be seen as a kind of progression into a recognizable style, combining the exoticism of the Korda scores with the strong emotional drive of the film noir period.

The scores also provided Rozsa with an opportunity to delve into musical antiquity, striving for realism in works like Quo Vadis, Ivanhoe, and El Cid. Consequently, the scores are characterized by an array of fanfares, marches, and dance pieces woven into a richly textured orchestral tapestry. Rozsa’s work for these epics often included ascending choral passages combined with orchestra for strong emotional impact. Despite Rozsa’s typecasting as a composer of such scores, the MGM period also provided opportunities for lighter, more contemporary subjects as well as chances for experimentation, as in the combination of romanticism and impressionism provided for Lust for Life.

With a greater emphasis given to popular modern styles in the 1960s, Rozsa became less active in films and turned his attention more and more to concert works. His famous Violin Concerto, commissioned by Jascha Heifetz in 1953, served as the inspiration for Billy Wilder’s The Private Life of Sherlock Holmes and led to Rozsa’s reunion with the director. For the Holmes film Rozsa rearranged and varied principal themes of the concerto as well as providing new material, and the deliberately nostalgic style of both film and score were repeated in Fedora, with Wilder’s reflection on the passing of Hollywood’s Golden Age matched by Rozsa’s overtly symphonic accompaniment.

Rozsa’s most recent period in film scoring was characterized not by identification with a specific studio or genre but by a distinct musical style which has been applied to a broad range of subjects. The Power, for example, contains a hard-driving theme played on a cimbalom which is later modified for more conventional presentation by strings, including a florid “gypsy” arrangement for solo violin. The dynamic percussive passages and soaring love theme are characteristic of many later scores by Rozsa, which juxtapose driving rhythms against lyrical, often waltz-like passages. Many of these works represent deliberate modifications of Rozsa’s past achievements. Time after Time draws on the erotic orchestrations of previous fantasy works in places, while a straightforward presentation of the film noir style is provided for the Steve Martin comedy Dead Men Don’t Wear Plaid. Collectively, Rozsa’s last works represent not redundancy or repetition but rather a consistency which marks a distinctive personal musical approach. Despite association with a number of directors and studios and in a variety of genres Rozsa was an individual stylist in both his film and concert works and was one of a small group of composers to gain recognition and respect in both capacities.

—Richard R. Ness

RUTTENBERG, Joseph

Cinematographer. Nationality: American. Born: St. Petersburg, Russia, 4 July 1889; emigrated to Boston aged four years. Family: Married Rose (Ruttenberg); daughter: Virginia. Career: Newsboy, then reporter and news photographer, Boston; 1914—formed his own newsreel production company; 1915—joined Fox as photographer; 1917—first film as cinematographer, A Painted Madonna; 1935–68—worked for MGM. Awards: Academy Award for The Great Waltz, 1938; Mrs. Miniver, 1942; Somebody Up There Likes Me, 1956; Gigi, 1958. Died: In Los Angeles, California, 1 May 1983.

Films as Cinematographer:

1917 A Painted Madonna (Lund); Thou Shalt Not Steal (Seurat)
1918 Doing Their Bit (Buel); The Debt of Honor (Lund); The Woman Who Gave (Buel); Women, Women
1919 The Fallen Idol (Buel); My Little Sister (Buel)
1920 Tiger’s Club (Giblyn); From Now On (Walsh); The Shark (Henderson)
1921 Beyond Price (Dawley); Know Your Men (Giblyn); The Mountain Woman (Giblyn); A Virgin Paradise (Dawley)
1922 Who Are My Parents? (Dawley); The Town That Forgot God (Millarde); Over the Hill (Millarde); My Friend the Devil (Millarde)
1923 If Winter Comes (Millarde); Does It Pay (Horan)
1925 School for Wives (Halperin); The Fool (Millarde)
1926 Summer Bachelors (Dwan)
1929 Applause (Mamoulian) (uncredited); The Cocosanuts (Florey and Santley) (uncredited); The Battle of Paris (The Gay Lady) (Florey) (uncredited)
1931 The Struggle (Griffith); The Smiling Lieutenant (Lubitsch) (uncredited)
1933 Gigolette (Lamont); Frankie and Johnnie (Auer); People’s Enemy (Wilbur); Man Hunt (Clements)
1936 Three Godfathers (Boleslawsky); Fury (F. Lang); Piccadilly Jim (Leonard); Mad Holiday (Seitz)
1937 A Day at the Races (Wood); The Big Day (Borzage)
1938 The Great Waltz (Duvivier); The First Hundred Years (Thorpe); Everybody Sing (Marin); Three Comrades (Borzage); The Shopworn Angel (Potter); Spring Madness (Simon); Ice Follies of 1939 (Schünzel) (co
1939 Tell No Tales (Fenton); On Borrowed Time (Bucquet); The Women (Cukor) (co); Balalaika (Schünzel)
1940 Broadway Melody of 1940 (Taurog) (co); Waterloo Bridge (LeRoy); The Philadelphia Story (Cukor); Comrade X (K. Vidor)
1941 Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (Fleming); Two Faced Woman (Cukor)
1942 Woman of the Year (Stevens); Mrs. Miniver (Wyler); Crossroads (Conway); Random Harvest (LeRoy)
1944 Gaslight (Cukor); Mrs. Parkington (Garnett)
1945 Valley of Decision (Garnett); Adventure (Fleming)
1947 Desire Me (Cukor); Killer McCoy (Rowland)
1948 Julia Misbehaves (Conway); B.F.’s Daughter (Leonard)
1949 The Bribe (Leonard); Side Street (A. Mann); That Forsyte Woman (Bennett)
1950 The Miniver Story (Potter); The Magnificent Yankee (J. Sturges)
1951 The Great Caruso (Thorpe); Cause for Alarm (Garnett); Kind Lady (J. Sturges); Too Young to Kiss (Leonard)
1952 Because You’re Mine (Hall); The Prisoner of Zenda (Thorpe); Young Man with Ideas (Leisen)
1953 Julius Caesar (Mankiewicz); Small Town Girl (Kardos); Latin Lovers (LeRoy); The Great Diamond Robbery (Leonard)
The Last Time I Saw Paris (Brooks); Her Twelve Men
(Leonard); Brigadoon (Minnelli)

The Swan (C. Vidor) (co); Somebody Up There Likes Me
(Wise); Invitation to the Dance (Kelly) (co)

The Vintage (Hayden); Man on Fire (MacDougall); Until They Sail (Wise)

Gigi (Minnelli); The Reluctant Debutante (Minnelli)

Green Mansions (M. Ferrer); Wreck of the Mary Deare
(Anderson)

The Subterraneans (MacDougall); Butterfield 8 (Daniel Mann) (co)

Two Loves (Walters); Ada (Daniel Mann); Bachelor in Paradise (Arnold)

Who’s Got the Action? (Daniel Mann)

The Hook (Seaton); It Happened at the World’s Fair (Taurog);
Who’s Been Sleeping in My Bed? (Daniel Mann)

A Global Affair (Arnold)

Sylvia (Douglas); Harlow (Douglas); Love Has Many Faces (Singer)

The Oscar (Rouse)

Speedway (Taurog)

Film as Cameraman:

1939 Gone with the Wind (Fleming)

Publications

By RUTTENBERG: articles—

‘‘Overhead Lighting for Overall Set Illumination,’’ in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), December 1952.

‘‘Photographing Pre-Production Tests,’’ in American Cinematographer
(Hollywood), January 1956.

‘‘Sound-Stage Sea Saga,’’ in American Cinematographer (Hollywood),
April 1960.

Positif (Paris), September 1972.

Seminar in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), July 1975.

Focus on Film (London), Spring 1976.

In Dance in the Hollywood Musical, by Jerome Delamater, Ann Arbor, Michigan, 1981.

Eyman, Scott, in Five American Cinematographers, Metuchen, New

On RUTTENBERG: articles—

Lawton, Ralph, ‘‘Tyro in Technicolor,’’ in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), September 1949.

Gavin, Arthur, on Gigi in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), July 1958.

Film Comment (New York), Summer 1972.

Revue du Cinéma (Morges, Switzerland), July-August 1983.

* * *

‘‘The old pro’’ to studio executives, actors, and film directors,
Joseph Ruttenberg was a cinematographer whose technical mastery was matched by a visual artistry that enriched the films of directors more concerned with drama and acting than visual style. When he worked with directors who did care about lighting and composition, the films they made often were nominated for Academy Awards.
Ruttenberg earned ten nominations, and won Oscars four times. In all he filmed about 110 movies between 1917 and 1968.

Born in Russia, Ruttenberg was brought to the United States as a very young boy. His first job was as a copy boy on the Boston American (where he was also an occasional personal messenger for William Randolph Hearst). At the American Ruttenberg discovered photography. First as a runner who hand delivered news film to the laboratory, then as a darkroom technician, then as a press photographer, Ruttenberg learned how to make pictures with speed and under adverse conditions. One night, for example, when he couldn’t use his own flash equipment, he opened the shutter on his camera and waited for the flashes of other photographers. To photograph theatrical sets he used different colored lights to register the appropriate contrasts of color in his black-and-white images. This combination of expertise and invention won him a commission to photograph European stage sets for the Boston Opera. There, in Paris, on the eve of the First World War, he fell under the spell of the moving picture.

In America in 1914, the movies were chiefly regarded as an amusement. But in Europe they were perceived as a graphic art, as an educational tool, as an historical record, and as a dramatic medium.
One of the notions current in Europe in 1914 was that film could be an archive of the images of people and events of historical importance.
Ruttenberg developed a variation of this while he was in Paris. When the approach of war sent him and the other Americans of his party back to the United States, Ruttenberg returned with an ambitious proposal to assemble a visual encyclopedia on motion-picture film.

This idea, so extraordinary for an American in 1914, reveals how profoundly Ruttenberg had been affected by European concepts of the potential of film. Though he was unable to find backing for his encyclopedia in Boston, Ruttenberg chose not to return to his previous work in still photography. Instead he formed a partnership with a Yale friend—who had money and mechanical ability. They purchased a hand-cranked movie camera, built a film processing unit in a Boston loft, and for nearly six months produced a weekly newsreel for the local Loews theaters. Minimal profits and a demanding schedule led the two to eventually abandon the enterprise, but the experience was to be useful when Ruttenberg moved to New York City and employment with William Fox in 1916.

Again Ruttenberg rose through the ranks, from slate-holder and still photographer (at $18 a week) to assistant cameraman and then cinematographer (when he left Fox in 1926 he was making $175 a week). Using Pathé and Bell and Howell cameras, Ruttenberg shot at least 26 films between A Painted Madonna (his first as cinematographer) in 1917, and The Struggle for D.W. Griffith in 1931. A complete filmography for Ruttenberg remains to be assembled because in these years Ruttenberg often collaborated on films but received no on-screen credit. Rohben Mamoulian’s Applause is one of these; Lubitsch’s The Smiling Lieutenant is another—both were credited to George Folsey, one of Ruttenberg’s closest friends. Though they worked 50/50, only Folsey got credit for legal reasons.

Lighting, camera movement, and location filming were inhibited in the first years of sound movies. There can be little doubt that Ruttenberg was wary about moving west in such circumstances. So when the Fox production company moved to Hollywood in 1926, Ruttenberg chose to remain in New York, where he soon was making screen tests with sound for MGM, RKO, and Universal. (Some of the actors he tested with the new sound systems were the Marx Brothers, Helen Hayes, Fred Astaire, Walter Huston, and Claudette Colbert.)

In the mid-1920s, Ruttenberg actually wanted to return to Europe, to work with the German directors Fritz Lang and F.W. Murnau. Ironically, though Ruttenberg finally did get to work with Lang on Fury, it was not until 1950 when he photographed Side Street for Anthony Mann that he was able to work in the conventions of a style (film noir) that was rooted in German Expressionism.

Though D.W. Griffith chose Ruttenberg to film The Struggle because he liked his camera tests made for the film, Ruttenberg also wanted to work with Griffith who was always (Ruttenberg recalled) “experimenting. He went into a foundry to [record] pretty good sound, . . . and would say ‘We’ll try these things’.” Ruttenberg embraced challenges; when CinemaScope was introduced in the 1950s Ruttenberg enthusiastically wrote to Louis B. Mayer that “it was the best thing since sound.”

In 1935 Ruttenberg finally made the move to Hollywood, briefly working at Warner Bros., and then shifting to MGM; by this time the traumatic period of the transition to sound was over, and Ruttenberg’s talent as a lighting cinematographer could be used with the same freedom as in the 1920s.

Ruttenberg’s camerawork was distinctive for three reasons. First, he composed the film image on two planes. The primary subject of interest, one or more actors, would appear in sharp focus, and the background would be softer, slightly out of focus. In consequence, actors would “project” out of the screen, acquiring an almost three-dimensional weight. Ruttenberg considered the “deep focus” technique used by Gregg Toland for William Wyler and Orson Welles to be a mistake, the loss of an opportunity to direct the eye of the spectator. (Nevertheless, in Somebody Up There Likes Me, Ruttenberg and the director Robert Wise did use deep focus for several sequences, including a wonderful allusion to the breakfast sequence of Citizen Kane; in the film, Everett Sloane, who played Bernstein in Kane, is seen on the floor with Paul Newman’s children in deep focus, echoing the nursery visit Kane insists Bernstein may want to make—but does not—to see Kane’s children in Citizen Kane.)

The second reason was his lighting. While many cinematographers delegate lighting to assistants, Ruttenberg believed lighting was central to cinematography. With it he could mould and change what was in front of the camera. Often he would defy union rules to handle the lights himself. (And it was not until he moved to Hollywood that he used a light meter; his years of experience in still photography, as well as in the movies, gave him a sure sense of exposure.) Katharine Hepburn, like scores of other actresses, wanted Ruttenberg to shoot her films because his lighting flattered her (Hepburn liked shadows on her neck).

The importance of lighting in films like Gaslight, Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, and Waterloo Bridge, where shadows are atmosphere, does not need to be pointed out. Less obvious is the lighting used for a film like A Day at the Races. Filming the Marx Brothers, Ruttenberg often noted, was an adventure because they never did the same thing twice, especially on retakes. Multiple cameras, and an even, relatively shadowless lighting scheme was necessary if separate shots were to be cut together smoothly when the film was completed. Three Comrades, shot in 1938 for Frank Borzage, is one of Ruttenberg’s masterpieces of lighting. The “spirituality” of Borzage’s characters is given tangible substance in this film: Margaret Sullivan, at times, is almost luminous.

Ruttenberg’s camerawork was also distinctive in a third way. Given the opportunity, and at times on his own initiative, he would seek to film whole sequences in a single take. As early as the 1920s, when he was working at the Astoria Studio without screen credit, Ruttenberg constructed dolly mechanisms, camera cranes, even rolling bridges so that shots of 30 or more seconds could be made. Some of his shots defy understanding: in Gigi he films in a room full of mirrors, but the camera and lights are not seen, and in Brigadoon his camera sweeps around dancers on a hilltop, hovering and flying, floating in a space that seems free of gravity.

—Robert A. Haller
SARDE, Philippe

Composer. Nationality: French. Born: Neuilly-sur-Seine, 21 June 1945. Education: Attended the Paris Conservatoire; also studied with Noël Gallon. Career: 1970—first of several films for Sautet, Les Choses de la vie. Award: César awards for Barocco and Le Juge et l’assassin, 1976.

Films as Composer:

1970 Les Choses de la vie (The Things of Life) (Sautet); La Liberté en crouse (Molinaro); Sortie de secours (Kahane)
1971 Max et les ferrailleurs (Sautet); Le Chat (Granier-Defere)
1972 Le Fils (Granier-Defere); Liza (Ferreri); Le Droit à aimer (The Right to Love) (Le Hung)
1973 Les Corps célestes (Carle); Charlie et ses deux nénettes (Séria); La Grande Bouffe (La Grande Abbuffata; Blow-Out) (Ferreri); Le Train (The Train) (Granier-Defere)
1974 Le Mariage à la mode (Mardore); La Valise (Lautner); Touche pas à la femme blanche (Ferreri); L’Horloger de Saint-Paul (The Clockmaker) (Tavernier); César et Rosalie (Sautet); Dorothea (Fleischman); Les Seins de glace (Lautner); Souvenirs d’en France (Téchiné); Lancelot du Lac (Lancelot of the Lake) (Bresson); Vincent, François, Paul . . . et l’autres (Vincent, François, Paul . . . and the Others) (Sautet)
1975 Un Divorce heureux (A Happy Divorce) (Carlisen); Folle à tuer (Boisset); Un Sac de billes (Doillon); Deux hommes dans la ville (Giovanni); La Cage (Granier-Defere); Pas de problèmes (Laurent); Les Galettes de Pont Aven (Séria)
1976 Barocco (Téchiné); Juge Fayard dit le sheriff (Boisset); Le Juge et l’assassin (The Judge and the Assassin) (Tavernier); L’ultima donna (The Last Woman) (Ferreri); On aura tout vu! (The Bottom Line) (Laurent); La Race des ‘‘Seigneurs’’ (The ‘‘Elite’’ Group) (Granier-Defere); Adieu poulpe (Granier-Defere); Sept morts par ordonnance (Rouffio); Mado (Sautet); Marie poupée (Marie the Doll) (Séria); Le Locataire (The Tenant) (Polanski)
1977 Le Diable, probablement (The Devil, Probably) (Bresson); Des enfants gâtés (Spoiled Children) (Tavernier); La Vie devant soi (Madame Rosa) (Mizrahi); Le Crab de Tamberg (Schöndörfer); Un Taxi mauve (The Purple Taxi) (Boisset); Mort d’un pourri (Laurent); Violette et François (Violette and François) (Rouffio)
1978 Morte di un operatore (The Death of a Corrupt Man) (Rosati); Rêve de singe (Ferreri); Une Histoire simple (Sautet); Ciao maschio (Bye Bye Monkey) (Ferreri); La Clef sur la porte (The Key Is in the Door) (Boisset); Passe-Montagne (Mountain Pass) (Stevenin); Le Sucre (The Sugar) (Rouffio); Les Soeurs Brontë (The Brontë Sisters) (Téchiné)
1979 Tess (Polanski); Flic ou voyou (Cop or Hood) (Laurent); Le Toubib (The Medecin) (Granier-Defere); Chiedo asilo (My Asylum) (Ferreri); L’Adolescente (The Adolescent Girl) (Moreau)
1981 Il faut tuer Birgitt Haas (Birgitt Haas Must Be Killed) (Heynemann); Ghost Story (Irvin); Cher inconnu (I Sent a Letter to My Love) (Mizrahi); Beaupère (Blier); La Guerre du feu (The Quest for Fire) (Annaud); Coup de touchon (Clean Slate) (Tavernier); Storia di ordinaria follia (Tales of Ordinary Madness) (Ferreri); Chois des armes (Choice of Arms) (Corneau)
1982 L’Etoile du nord (Granier-Defere)
1983 Garçon! (Sautet); My Other ‘‘Husband’’ (Laurent); Lovesick (Brickman); J’ai épousé une ombre (I Married a Shadow) (Davis)
1985 Le Cowboy; Devil in the Flesh; Harem (A. Joffé); Joshua Then and Now (Kotchiff); L’Homme aux yeux d’argent (Granier-Defere); Hors-la-loi (Davis); Mon beau-frère a tué ma sœur; Rendezvous; La Tentation d’Isabelle (Doillon)
1986 Cours privé (Granier-Defere); L’Etat de grace (Rouffio); Every Time We Say Goodbye (Mizrahi); Le Lieu du crime (Scene of the Crime) (Téchiné); The Manhattan Project (Brickman); Pirates (Polanski); Sincerely Charlotte (C. Huppert); La Puritaine (Doillon)
1987 Comédie! (Comedy!) (Doillon); De guerre lasse; Les Deux Crocodiles (Seria); Emmenis intimes (Amar); Funny Boy (Le Hemonet); Les Innocents (Téchiné); L’Étêt dernier à Tangier (Arcady); La Maison assassinée (Laurent); Les Mois d’avril sont meurtriers (Heynemann); Noyade interdite (Granier-Defere); Poker (Corsini)
1988 La Cellule du vent (Granier-Defere); La Maison de jade (N. Trintignant); Mangeclous (Mizrahi); L’Ours (The Bear) (Annaud); Quelques jours avec moi (Sautet); La Travestie (Boisset)
1989 Chambre à part (Cukier); Hiver 54, l’abbé Pierre (Amar); L’Invité surprise (Laurent); Lost Angels (Hudson); Music Box (Costa-Gavras); Reunion (Schatzberg)
1990 Lang Ta—les cavaliers du vent (Ponchevil le) (co); Le Petit Criminel (Doillon); La Baule les pins (Kurys); Faux et usage de faux (Heynemann); Lord of the Flies (Hook)
1991 La Tribu (The Tribe) (Boisset); Eve of Destruction (Gibbins); La Vieille qui marchait dans la mer (The Old Lady Who Walked in the Sea) (Heynemann); L’Amérique en otage (Iran: Days of Crisis) (Connor); J’embrasse pas (I Don’t Kiss) (Téchiné)
1992 Room Service (Laurent); L.627 (Tavernier); La Voix (The Voice) (Granier-Defere); Max et Jérémie (Max and Jeremy) 1993 La Petite apocalypse (The Little Apocalypse) (Costa-Gavras); Le Jeune Werther (Young Werther) (Doillon); *Ma saison
SARGENT, Alvin

Writer. Nationality: American. Career: Writer for television; 1966—first film as writer, Gambit. Awards: Writers Guild of America WGA Screen Award—Best Comedy Adapted from Another Medium, for Paper Moon, 1973; Best Screenplay Based on Material from Another Medium Academy Award, Best Screenplay British Academy Award, Writers Guild of America WGA Screen Award—Best Drama Adapted

SARGENT, Alvin

SARGENT WRITERS AND PRODUCTION ARTISTS, 4th EDITION

préférée (My Favorite Season) (Téchiné); Poisson lune (Sunfish) (Van Effenterre); Taxi de nuit (Night Taxi) (Leroy)

1994 Uncovered (McBride); La Fille de d’Artagnan (Revenge of the Musketeers) (Tavernier); Le Fils préféré (The Favorite Son) (Garcia)

1995 Dis-moi oui (Arcady); Nelly & Monsieur Arnaud (Sautet)

1996 Les Voleurs (The Child of the Night) (Téchiné); Ponette (Doillon); L’Insoumise (Trintignant—for TV)

1997 Le Rouge et le noir (Verhaeghe—mini for TV); Lucie Aubrac (Berri); K (Arcady); Un frère (Brother) (Verheyde); Mad City (Costa-Gavras); Le Bossu (On Guard) (de Broca)

1998 Alice et Martin (Téchiné); Je suis vivante et je vous aime (I’m Alive and I Love You) (Kahane)

2000 Là-bas . . . mon pays (Return to Algiers); Princesses

Publications

By SARDE: articles—

Film Français (Paris), 16 January 1981.
Soundtrack! (Hollywood), September 1985.
Film en Télévisie + Video (Brussels), April 1994.

On SARDE: articles—

Ecran (Paris), September 1975.
Soundtrack! (Hollywood), November 1977.
Film Français (Paris), 2 February 1979.
Score (Lelystad, Netherlands), June 1980.

* * * *

Philippe Sarde describes himself as a “man of the cinema.” He is the first French musician to dedicate himself exclusively to composing film music. Since beginning his career in the late 1960s, he has been linked to a whole generation of directors (Sautet, Tavernier, Granier-Deferre) and has become one of France’s most prolific screen composers. In 1980, he was nominated for an Academy Award for Polanski’s Tess and has won Césars.

Sarde has composed music of an astonishingly wide range and at an amazing rate. Some critics find his body of work devoid of an overall style or personal imprint, but that is Sarde’s intent. For Sarde, the music evolves from the film, from the director’s idea of the film and his directorial style. Consequently, his musical compositions are as diverse as the films he scores.

Once he decided to devote his career to film music, Sarde spent ten years on film sets. He wanted to learn how the camera is used, how a lens will affect a shot, how 35- or 70-mm film will affect close-ups. He now feels that he has the necessary training to understand the technical aspects of filming and no longer needs to be on the film set to compose the music. He prefers to start work as early as possible in the film’s production and uses the director’s style and vision as a point of departure in his musical process.

Collaboration with the director is of the utmost importance in Sarde’s musical process. Sarde wants to know what ideas the director has about the film. If the director wants certain musical instruments or if there is a particular sound he wants to hear, Sarde will incorporate these ideas in the music. He also wants to know how the director plans to film the movie; how he intends to use such techniques as close-ups, sequences and deep focus as each technique will call for different music. How the camera is used and techniques such as zoom, tracking, or panorama will also influence the music. Sarde says he needs to imagine the whole scene to compose music that will compliment it.

Sarde combines the director’s style and vision of the movie with elements of the story. If the film is set in a particular country, Sarde will incorporate local ethnic themes into the music. Sarde compares his work to that of Ravel who never wrote an original theme but readapted folklore motifs to make a completely new work. Tess is a good example of this. Sarde used old English ballads and readapted the themes into full-blooded orchestrations. Once when the music of Music Box was considered to be like the music of Goldsmith, Sarde rebutted that it was essentially folkloric. However, Sarde avoids music that comes with a built-in rhetoric and emotionalism such as the music of Bruckner or Mahler. His musical world is that of Debussy, Milhaud, Poulenc and, of course, Ravel.

Sarde is able to incorporate musical forms with visual elements. For Fort Saganne, he felt that the script called for a concerto and he wrote one for cello and orchestra. Musically representing the desert was a problem since the director of the movie did not want to use synthetic musical effects. Sarde solved the problem by incorporating an organ into the concerto. His use of the organ evoked images of mirages and shimmering sun. In using the concerto musical form, he was able to place the organ in between the cello and the orchestra which added a valuable element to the desert scenes.

Musical themes are incorporated in films to emphasize the emotional impact of the story. In Ghost Story, Sarde employed a ghost theme, terror theme, and love theme. In The Quest for Fire, he used a love theme, action theme, and a choral chant. For The Tenant, the music was atonal and he included a dirge-like song. In Les Seins des Glace, Sarde wanted the music to cause fear and composed music that was atonal with a strange character giving a feeling of malaise.

Sarde is the quintessential film composer. For Sarde, film music must always serve the film and he has proven himself able to incorporate classical musical forms, ethnic and folkloric themes and a director’s vision into music that compliments and enhances a visual story.

—Renee Ward
from Another Medium, for Julia, 1977; Best Screenplay Based on Material from Another Medium Academy Award, Writers Guild of America WGA Screen Award—Best Drama Adapted from Another Medium, for Ordinary People, 1980; Writers Guild of America Laurel Award for Screen Writing Achievement, 1991.

Films as Writer:

1966 Gambit (Neame)
1968 The Stalking Moon (Mulligan)
1969 The Sterile Cuckoo (Pookie) (Pakula)
1970 I Walk the Line (Frankenheimer)
1972 The Effects of Gamma Rays on Man-in-the-Moon Marigolds (Newman); Love and Pain and the Whole Damn Thing (Pakula)
1973 Paper Moon (Bogdanovich)
1977 Bobby Deerfield (Pollack); Julia (Zinnemann)
1978 Straight Time (Grosbard)
1979 The Electric Horseman (Pollack)
1980 Ordinary People (Redford)
1987 Nuts (Ritt)
1988 Dominick and Eugene (Nicky and Gino) (Young)
1990 White Palace (Mandoki)
1991 What about Bob (Oz) (co-story only); Other People’s Money (Jewison)
1992 Hero (Frears) (co)
1996 Bogus (Jewison)
1999 Anywhere But Here (Wang) (co)
2001 Unfaithful

Other Films:

1953 From Here to Eternity (Zinnemann) (ro as Nair, uncredited)

Publications

On SARGENT: article—

* * *

Alvin Sargent’s aesthetic is firmly rooted in the best dramatic tradition of the early years of American television, the medium in which he honed his talent prior to commencing his screenwriting career in the mid-1960s. While that aesthetic cannot be labeled radical, it most certainly is progressive, intellectual, enlightened, committed—and, finally, humanist.

Sargent’s works have dealt with political and societal themes: capitalist greed in Other People’s Money, for example, or media manipulation in Hero (whose story he co-wrote) and judicial-system abuse in Straight Time. Nonetheless, he has most consistently been concerned with the effect of contemporary society on the individual. One of Sargent’s dominant interests has been the structure of, and interrelationships within, the suburban American family. This is explored most notably in Ordinary People, the story of a controlled, controlling upper-class clan whose material comfort belies its members’ spiritual barrenness and inability to communicate meaningfully. There is the son (Timothy Hutton), withdrawn, unhappy, and fresh from a suicide attempt after the accidental drowning of his older brother; the father (Donald Sutherland), passive, solicitous, and self-deluded; and the mother (Mary Tyler Moore), an all-American beauty who, beneath her cheerfulness, is icy-cold and unforgiving.

Nuts is the story of Claudia Faith Draper (Barbra Streisand), a woman with upper-class roots who is victimized by a less-than-ideal childhood. As a result, she has become a $100-an-hour hooker; and because she has not done what “good white girls” are supposed to, she is labeled by her mother, stepfather, and family lawyer as insane and irresponsible for her actions. Ultimately, her role within the scenario is that of speaker of truth in a world of everyday lies and hypocrisies.

A number of Sargent’s screenplays focus on complex male characters: Dustin Hoffman’s ex-con in Straight Time; the young intern (Ray Liotta) and his childlike twin brother (Tom Hulce) in Dominick and Eugene; and Timothy Hutton’s teenager in Ordinary People. But his scripts (most of which are adaptations) more consistently feature complicated, interesting female characters of all ages and classes. Joining Nuts is Julia (based on the controversial Lillian Hellman memoir Pentimento), the story of a pair of women of action: Hellman (Jane Fonda), who was unconventional for her time in that she funneled her creative instincts into a career as a successful dramatist and carried on a long-term romantic relationship with Dashiell Hammett (Jason Robards); and the title character (Vanessa Redgrave), Hellman’s wealthy childhood friend, who becomes a political activist in Europe and involves Hellman in a scheme to smuggle bribe money into Nazi Germany.

In Other People’s Money, a watered-down (but still-biting) version of Jerry Sterner’s play, Danny DeVito’s Wall Street corporate raider is contrasted to Penelope Ann Miller’s equally cagey young attorney, who sets out to outmaneuver him when he becomes determined to devour a family-owned company.

Then there is Paper Moon, a fairytale in which a nine-year-old (Tatum O’Neal) unites with a con man (Ryan O’Neal) in Depression-era Kansas. This character is no sweet Shirley Temple, but rather a headstrong, tough-talking, cigarette-smoking scamp who loves to mug, and is determined to be corrupted. The Sterile Cuckoo is the coming-of-age story of Pookie (rhymes with kookie) Adams (Liza Minnelli), a brash, insecure college student. Here is one Sargent whose story he co-wrote) and judicial-system abuse in Straight Time. Nonetheless, he has most consistently been concerned with the effect of contemporary society on the individual. One of Sargent’s dominant interests has been the structure of, and interrelationships within, the suburban American family. This is explored most notably in Ordinary People, the story of a controlled, controlling upper-class clan whose material comfort belies its members’ spiritual barrenness and inability to communicate meaningfully. There is the son (Timothy Hutton), withdrawn, unhappy, and fresh from a suicide attempt after the accidental drowning of his older brother; the father (Donald Sutherland), passive, solicitous, and self-deluded; and the mother (Mary Tyler Moore), an all-American beauty who, beneath her cheerfulness, is icy-cold and unforgiving.

Nuts is the story of Claudia Faith Draper (Barbra Streisand), a woman with upper-class roots who is victimized by a less-than-ideal childhood. As a result, she has become a $100-an-hour hooker; and because she has not done what “good white girls” are supposed to, she is labeled by her mother, stepfather, and family lawyer as insane and irresponsible for her actions. Ultimately, her role within the scenario is that of speaker of truth in a world of everyday lies and hypocrisies.

A number of Sargent’s screenplays focus on complex male characters: Dustin Hoffman’s ex-con in Straight Time; the young intern (Ray Liotta) and his childlike twin brother (Tom Hulce) in Dominick and Eugene; and Timothy Hutton’s teenager in Ordinary People. But his scripts (most of which are adaptations) more consistently feature complicated, interesting female characters of all ages and classes. Joining Nuts is Julia (based on the controversial Lillian Hellman memoir Pentimento), the story of a pair of women of action: Hellman (Jane Fonda), who was unconventional for her time in that she funneled her creative instincts into a career as a successful dramatist and carried on a long-term romantic relationship with Dashiell Hammett (Jason Robards); and the title character (Vanessa Redgrave), Hellman’s wealthy childhood friend, who becomes a political activist in Europe and involves Hellman in a scheme to smuggle bribe money into Nazi Germany.

In Other People’s Money, a watered-down (but still-biting) version of Jerry Sterner’s play, Danny DeVito’s Wall Street corporate raider is contrasted to Penelope Ann Miller’s equally cagey young attorney, who sets out to outmaneuver him when he becomes determined to devour a family-owned company.

Then there is Paper Moon, a fairytale in which a nine-year-old (Tatum O’Neal) unites with a con man (Ryan O’Neal) in Depression-era Kansas. This character is no sweet Shirley Temple, but rather a headstrong, tough-talking, cigarette-smoking scamp who loves to mug, and is determined to be corrupted. The Sterile Cuckoo is the coming-of-age story of Pookie (rhymes with kookie) Adams (Liza Minnelli), a brash, insecure college student. Here is one Sargent heroine who is not strong; still, she (rather than the boy with whom she falls in love) is the focus of the scenario.

Anywhere But Here is another coming-of-age tale, with the spotlight on a child and parent: Ann August (Natalie Portman), a young teenager, and her mother Adele (Susan Sarandon), who move from Wisconsin to Beverly Hills where they struggle to adapt to a new life—and clash with each other. The young characters in Ordinary People and The Sterile Cuckoo are troubled; here, the opposite is the case. Ann is settled and happy in the Midwest, and resents being there, perforce, twin brother (Tom Hulce) in Dominick and Eugene; and Timothy Hutton’s teenager in Ordinary People. But his scripts (most of which are adaptations) more consistently feature complicated, interesting female characters of all ages and classes. Joining Nuts is Julia (based on the controversial Lillian Hellman memoir Pentimento), the story of a pair of women of action: Hellman (Jane Fonda), who was unconventional for her time in that she funneled her creative instincts into a career as a successful dramatist and carried on a long-term romantic relationship with Dashiell Hammett (Jason Robards); and the title character (Vanessa Redgrave), Hellman’s wealthy childhood friend, who becomes a political activist in Europe and involves Hellman in a scheme to smuggle bribe money into Nazi Germany.

In Other People’s Money, a watered-down (but still-biting) version of Jerry Sterner’s play, Danny DeVito’s Wall Street corporate raider is contrasted to Penelope Ann Miller’s equally cagey young attorney, who sets out to outmaneuver him when he becomes determined to devour a family-owned company.

Then there is Paper Moon, a fairytale in which a nine-year-old (Tatum O’Neal) unites with a con man (Ryan O’Neal) in Depression-era Kansas. This character is no sweet Shirley Temple, but rather a headstrong, tough-talking, cigarette-smoking scamp who loves to mug, and is determined to be corrupted. The Sterile Cuckoo is the coming-of-age story of Pookie (rhymes with kookie) Adams (Liza Minnelli), a brash, insecure college student. Here is one Sargent heroine who is not strong; still, she (rather than the boy with whom she falls in love) is the focus of the scenario.

Anywhere But Here is another coming-of-age tale, with the spotlight on a child and parent: Ann August (Natalie Portman), a young teenager, and her mother Adele (Susan Sarandon), who move from Wisconsin to Beverly Hills where they struggle to adapt to a new life—and clash with each other. The young characters in Ordinary People and The Sterile Cuckoo are troubled; here, the opposite is the case. Ann is settled and happy in the Midwest, and resents being needlessly uprooted by the restless, flirty Adele. In Anywhere But Here, the child takes on the role of the adult, while the mother acts more like the child.

Most intriguing of all is the heroine in White Palace, which chronicles the romantic relationship between Max Baron (James Spader), a twensomething advertising executive with a fine education and an upper-class, liberal-elite background, and Nora Baker (Susan Sarandon), a fortysomething waitress with limited education and a grim family history. Even though she would not know Gloria Steinem from Gloria Jean, Nora’s integrity transforms her into a feminist heroine. She has lived in the world, and she knows what she likes and wants. She, rather than he, initiates their meeting, and their first sexual activity; even though Nora falls for Max, she will not be intimidated by his background, his income, or his family. (Here again is a scenario in which the “family” stifles the individual, who must assert him or herself and break away to ensure his or her happiness.) Max may be a regal “baron” to Nora’s lowly “baker,” but it is he who will have to accommodate her if their relationship is to survive.

That relationship is one of instinct versus intellect, and Sargent clearly prefers that the former prevail. Even in Julia, whose characters are by nature intellectual, it is the passion of the creative act that sparks the communication between Hellman and Hammett; in her political activity, Julia is a creature of emotion and zeal; and Hellman’s choice to act, and risk her life, on behalf of her friend is instinctual rather than rational.

This is not to say that Sargent is anti-intellectual. Rather, he is anti-intellectual hypocrisy or pomposity. Whatever their sex or class, the best Sargent characters are those who transcend the barriers of intellectual passivity and become people who act, who take stands rather than rational.

---Rob Edelman

SAULNIER, Jacques

Films as Assistant Art Director:
1954 Le Rouge et le noir (Autant-Lara)
1955 Land of the Pharaohs (Hawks); Marguerite de la nuit (Autant-Lara); Les Mauvaises Rencontres
1956 Eléna et les hommes (Paris Does Strange Things) (Renoir); La Traversée de Paris; He Who Must Die; Sait-on jamais
1958 The Vikings (Fleischer); En cas de malheur (Love Is My Profession) (Autant-Lara)

Films as Art Director:
1957 V. Proudech (Liberté surveillée) (Vloock and Asnier)
1958 Les Amants (The Lovers) (Malle) (co)
1959 A Double Tour (Web of Passion; Leda) (Chabrol) (co); Les Cousins (Chabrol) (co); La Sentence (Valère) (co)
1960 La Proie pour l’ombre (Shadow of Adultery) (Astruc); Les Jeux d’amour (Suzanne et les roses; Playing at Love) (de Broca) (co); Le Farcceur (The Joker) (de Broca); Les Scélérats (Torment) (Hossein) (co)
1961 L’Année dernière à Marienbad (Last Year at Marienbad) (Resnais); Vu de Pont (View from the Bridge) (Lumet); La Morte-Saison des amours (The Season for Love) (Kast); L’Education sentimentale (Astruc); La Gamberge (Carbonnaux); Le Petit Garçon (Granier-Defere); Germinal (Carné)
1962 Landru (Bluebeard) (Chabrol); Du mouroir pour les petits oiseaux (Carné)
1963 Muriel, ou le temps d’un retour (Muriel) (Resnais); La Bonne Soupe (How to Make a French Dish) (Thomas); Les Aventures de Salavin (Granier-Defere); La Confession de minuit (Granier-Defere)
1964 La Fabuleuse Aventure de Marco Polo (Marco the Magnificent) (de la Patellière, Howard, and Christian-Jaque); L’Echivoier de dieu (de la Patellière)
1965 What’s New, PussyCat? (Donner); La Vie de château (A Matter of Resistance) (Rappeneau); La Metamorphose des cloportes (Granier-Defere)
1966 La Guerre est finie (The War Is Over; Adventures in History) (Resnais); Mademoiselle (Un, deux, trois, quatre’!) (Richardson); Le Voleur (Malle); Caroline Cherie (Aurel)
1967 Tante Zita (Enrico)
1968 La Prisonnière (Clouzot); Ho! (Enrico)
1969 Le Clan des siciliens (Verneuil); La Horze (Granier-Defere)
1970 Le Chat (Granier-Defere)
1971 La Veuve Coudere (Granier-Defere); Le Casse (The Burglars) (Verneuil)
1972 Le Fils (Granier-Defere)
1973 Le Train (Granier-Defere); Le Serpent (The Serpent) (Verneuil)
1974 Stavisky (Resnais)
1975 French Connection II (Frankenheimer); La Cage (Granier-Defere)
1977 Providence (Resnais)
1980 Mon oncle d’Amerique (My American Uncle) (Resnais)
1983 La Vie est un roman (Life Is a Bed of Roses) (Resnais)
1984 Swann in Love (Un Amour de Swann) (Schlondorff); Les Morfulos (Verneuil); L’Amour à mort (Resnais); Le Jumeau (Robert)
1986 Mélo (Resnais)
1987 Les Exploits d’un jeune Don Juan (Mingozi)
1989 L’Autrichienne (Granier-Defere); I Want to Go Home (Je veux rentrer à la maison) (Resnais)
1992 Archipelago (Granier-Defere); La Voix (The Voice) (Granier-Defere)
1993 Smoking/No Smoking (Resnais)
1997 On connaît la chanson (Same Old Song) (Resnais)

Publications

By SAULNIER: articles—

On SAULNIER: articles—

Film Français (Paris), no. 2131, 6 March 1987.
Film Bulletinin (Winterthur), vol. 36, no. 6, 1994.

* * *

The museum of the Cinémathèque Française in Paris displays two models in its foyer as examples of contemporary film decor. That by Bernard Evein from Jacques Demy’s 1988 musical Trois places pour le 26 is a diaphanous abstraction of wires and coloured panels, typical of a designer who is less an architect than a painter. By contrast, Jacques Saulnier’s design for Mon oncle d’Amérique, one of many Alain Resnais films he designed, is solid as a brick, a meticulous rendering of a bourgeois French apartment of the 1970s, right down to the Dubuffet art and designer rugs.

The contrast reveals the differences in style between two men who dominated French film design in the period following the Nouvelle Vague. Saulnier and Evein (like Resnais) graduated from the highly theoretical Institut des Hautes Études Cinématographiques. Saulnier however went on to the Ecole des Beaux Arts, giving his talent a formal gloss it never lost, and then entered movies as assistant to Max Douy and Alexandre Trauner. Despite the striking variation in their styles, between 1958 and 1960 Saulnier and Evein worked as a team. The château of Louis Malle’s Les Amants and the Paris interiors of Chabrol’s Les Cousins seem mostly Saulnier’s work, but Chabrol’s A double tour, their first film in colour, includes a Japa-ess-style pavilion for Antonella Lualdi that may be their first true collaboration.

The team broke up with L’Année dernière à Marienbad, for which Evein takes the costume credit and Saulnier that for set design. Saulnier meticulously copied 18th-century decorated plaster ceilings and mirrored interiors for the film so that the hotel in some un-named resort is perfectly integrated with the raked and barbered gardens where Resnais shot his exteriors. Some found the effect claustrophobic but without this strict formal consistency Marienbad is unlikely to have achieved its subsequent international success. Resnais and Saulnier had created a world which fitted only these characters and this story.

Established now as a master of authentic design, Saulnier did the New York slum sets for Sidney Lumet’s European production of Arthur Miller’s View from the Bridge, then Astruc’s adaptation of L’Education Sentimentale. Claude Chabrol’s sinister Landra on the other hand showed the humour that was to figure occasionally in Saulnier’s work during the 1970s. In telling the story of France’s mass murderer of women during the First World War, Chabrol aimed for an almost playful artificiality, interwoven with reminders (via newsreel footage) of the trench war taking place just over the horizon. Saulnier responded with gaudy interiors in dense purples, greens and roses (colours Evein used around the same time in Les Parapluies de Cherbourg, an echo of their shared history). He interspersed these with reminders of Landra’s trade, notably in the laboratory-like kitchen with its bare green/white walls, big stove, and coal-scuttlets brimming in anticipation of the next victim. When Chabrol wanted crowd and railway station scenes beyond the scope of the budget, Saulnier also fabricated a train from puffs of smoke and suggested a busy street with a partly curtained shop window outside which a procession of ladies’ hats circulated on a conveyor belt.

This subversive contrast between formal perfection and wit runs through Saulnier’s career. He continued his collaboration with Resnais on films as stylistically various as Muriel, La Guerre est finie, the discreet but perfectly realised art deco Stavisky, the studiedly artificial Providence with its stiff interiors and blatant use of painted backdrops, La Vie est un roman, which amusingly integrated comic book panels into the action, Mon oncle d’Amérique, and Resnais’ adaptations of two plays by British writer Alan Ayckbourn, Smoking and No Smoking. At the same time, he created rowdy Edwardian interiors for Malle’s Le Voleur and plunged into art nouveau and whorehouse baroque for the Peter O’Toole/Peter Sellers comedy What’s New Pussycat?. The film was a nightmare for Saulnier, with rival egos employing the decor as a battlefield, private apartments and houses being desperately co-opted, and sets rebuilt overnight when, for instance, a distraught Paula Prentiss rejected a bathroom design because she could not stand to look at herself; it thus became the world’s only bathroom without mirrors. Even so, Saulnier’s use of his favourite hot purples, reds, and yellows created an effect of opulence and Parisian playfulness which producers would struggle for the next decade to match.

Saulnier’s meticulousness has created problems for directors and especially cameramen. “Saulnier frequently uses sombre colours,” Leon Barsacq says, “which some cameramen have been reluctant to photograph because of lighting difficulties.” Such reservations did not stop producers from hiring Saulnier to bring a reassuring realism and “Hollywood Look” to such films as Le Clan des siciliens, Le Chat, The Burglars, The Serpent, and French Connection II. In them, Barsacq has said admiringly, “his rooms, ingeniously adjusted in relation to one another, are of normal dimensions, but he always manages to give them an airiness by using openings and passages.” These CinemaScope thrillers set in Antibes villas and Paris apartments, interspersed with parking garages and airport lounges, sit oddly with Saulnier’s work for Resnais, though there is a consistency in their realistic effect. Like his teacher Trauner, Saulnier can make an interior created under totally theatrical constraints appear as if it has been in place for centuries.

—John Baxter

SAUNDERS, John Monk

Writer. Nationality: American. Born: Huckley, Minnesota, 22 November 1897. Education: Attended the University of Minnesota, St. Paul, B.A.; Oxford University (Rhodes scholar), M.A. 1923. Military Service: 1914–18—served in the United States Flying Corps. Family: Married 1) Avis Hughes, 1922 (divorced 1927); 2) the actress Fay Wray, 1927 (divorced 1939); one daughter. Career: Journalist with Los Angeles Times, 1922, New York Tribune, 1923; associate editor, American Magazine, 1924, and regular contributor to Cosmopolitan and Liberty; 1925—first film as writer, Too Many Kisses. Award: Academy Award for The Dawn Patrol, 1930–31. Died: (Suicide) in Fort Meyers, Florida, 10 March 1940.
Films as Writer:

1925 Too Many Kisses (Sloane); The Shock Punch (Sloane)
1927 Wings (Wellman)
1928 The Legion of the Condemned (Wellman); The Docks of New York (von Sternberg)
1929 She Goes to War (H. King)
1930 The Dawn Patrol (Hawks)
1931 The Finger Points (Dillon); The Last Flight (Dieterle); Dirigible (Capra) (uncredited)
1933 The Eagle and the Hawk (Walker); Ace of Aces (Ruben)
1935 West Point of the Air (Rosson); Devil Dogs of the Air (Bacon and Keighley); I Found Stella Parrish (LeRoy)
1938 The Dawn Patrol (Goulding); A Yank at Oxford (Conway) (story idea); Star of the Circus (Hidden Menace) (de Courville)
1939 The Four Feathers (Z. Korda) (uncredited)

Publications

By SAUNDERS: books—

With George Palmer, Brain Tests, New York, 1925.
Wings (novelization of script), New York, 1927.
Single Lady, New York, 1930.
Nikki (play), New York, 1931.

On SAUNDERS: articles—

The best known of John Monk Saunders’s contributions to the cinema is the original story for the first Academy Award winner for Best Picture, Wings. This drama of comradeship between two members of the Aviation Section of the Signal Reserve Corps during the First World War is a film which both glorifies war and also depicts its horror. It is a pacifist film which is not overtly pacifist. As Wings very clearly and skillfully illustrates, Saunders never—thankfully—lived up to his claim that “Action is the thing” in screenwriting. Certainly there is plenty of the latter, but Wings also examines the emotional relationship between two men. Both love the same woman, but, ultimately, they love each other more.

Wings is the quintessential John Monk Saunders story, based on an unpublished novel of his, and it led to the writer’s creating a succession of dramas dealing with flying and the First World War, none of which had quite the same intensity as Wings (The Legion of the Condemned, The Dawn Patrol, West Point of the Air, and Devil Dogs of the Air)

The later lives of First World War pilots was the basis for Saunders’s most highly personal film project, The Last Flight. It is based on a series of short stories by Saunders which appeared in Liberty magazine, and deals with a disillusioned group of flyers failing to come to grips with their lives in postwar Paris. The central character is an eccentric and wealthy American girl, Nikki, whose favorite expression is “I’ll take vanilla,” and who makes ridiculous statements, such as claiming that she can walk faster in red shoes. The Nikki character is obviously based on Saunders’s second wife, the actress Fay Wray, and, indeed, she starred in a short-lived stage musical based on the stories, titled Nikki and produced in 1931.

Aside from reflecting some of the disillusionment which Saunders must have felt with his own life, The Last Flight illustrates his deep affection for Wray (she starred in one of his films, The Legion of the Condemned, and in two films to which he made uncredited contributions, The Four Feathers and Dirigible). The break-up of the couple’s marriage obviously had such a profound effect on Saunders that eventually he committed suicide.

Despite the overwhelming theme of flying in Saunders’s screenplays, it should not be overlooked that he contributed the original story for Josef von Sternberg’s first major film, The Docks of New York, and utilized knowledge of his early career as a journalist in the Finger Points, and of Oxford University, from which he graduated, in A Yank at Oxford.

SAVINI, Tom

Films as Makeup Artist and/or Makeup Effects Designer Actor:

1972 Deathdream (Dead of Night) (Clark)
1973 Deranged (Gillen/Ormsby)
1976 Martin (Romero) (+ role as Arthur)
1978 Effects (Nelson) (+ role as Nicky); Dawn of the Dead (Romero) (+ role as Motorcycle Rider)
1980 Maniac (Lustig) (+ role as Disco Boy); The Awakening (Russo); Friday the Thirteenth (Cunningham); The Burning (Maylam)
1981 Eyes of a Stranger (Wiedornhorn); Prowler (Zito); Friday the Thirteenth, Part II (Minter); Midnight (Russo); Nightmare (Scavolini)
1982 Creepshow (Romero) (+ role as Garbage Man #2); Alone in the Dark (Sholder)
1984 Maria’s Lovers (Konchalovsky); Friday the Thirteenth: The Final Chapter (Zito)
1985 Day of the Dead (Romero); Invasion USA (Zito)
1986 The Texas Chainsaw Massacre Part 2 (Hooper)
1987 Creepshow II (Gormick) (+ role as The Creep)
1988 Monkey Shines (Romero)
1989  Red Scorpion (Zito)
1990  Due occhi diabolici (Two Evil Eyes; The Facts in the Case of M; Valdemar; The Black Cat; Edgar Allan Poe) (Romero, Argento)
1991  Bloodsucking Pharoahs in Pittsburgh (Smithee/Tschetter)
1993  Trauma (Argento); Heartstopper (Russo)
1994  Killing Zoe (Avary); Necronomicon (Gans/Kaneko)
1995  The Stitch (Avary—for TV)
1996  The Assassination File (Harrison—for TV) (+ role as Chemical Weapons Engineer)
1998  Cutting Moments (Buck); Claustrophobia (+ d, role)
1999  Cold Hearts (Mascianantonio)

Publications

By SAVINI: books—

By SAVINI: articles—

Segnocinema (Vicenza), March 1982.

On SAVINI: books—

On SAVINI: articles—

Film Comment (New York), vol. 17, no. 4, July-August 1981.
Cinéfantastique (New York), vol. 21, no. 3, December 1990.

Tom Savini, a makeup artist who specializes in special effects scenes of bodily disfigurement and mutilation, has (for better or worse) played a major role in the development of the modern horror film. It was his innovative work in prosthetics and latex, alongside that of other makeup effects designers such as Rick Baker and Rob Bottin, which at the end of the 1970s assisted at the unholy birth of what has come to be known in critical circles and the fan press as the "splatter movie." This is a form of horror film which brushes aside the Manichean struggles between Good and Evil which had characterized earlier horror films, offering instead a fascination with the impact of violence on the human body. In splatter movies, objects of violence which were usually hidden from view—most notably, the internal organs—are displayed to the film audience in graphic and unforgiving detail.

Savini worked for three years as a combat photographer in Vietnam, and it was there that he first encountered the scenes of violent death which he would later recreate on film. "[In Vietnam], I almost stepped on an arm once," he says. "A Viet Cong was shot by a buddy of mine and when he fell, a grenade he’d had primed under his armpit went off and just blew him to smithereens. I saw a lot of grisly stuff all right, and my stuff in films has been pretty grisly. If I’ve got anything of a reputation at all, I’m probably notorious for how grimy stuff." He’s known for a short while before following in the footsteps of his idol, the silent screen star and makeup master Lon Chaney, and moved into the area of effects makeup for the stage, then the screen. He quickly made a name for himself through his involvement with a number of major (and quite a few minor) horror films, including Friday the 13th and, perhaps most significantly, a series of films for director George Romero—Martin, Dawn of the Dead, Creepshow, Day of the Dead, Monkey Shines.

It can be argued that Savini, through his effects work, offers us a distinctly modern view of an alienated human existence. The assaulted bodies he creates are all flesh, and no spirit. They function as mere containers of organs and liquid substances, as sites upon which various makeup skills and techniques can be unleashed. Like Rick Baker and Rob Bottin, Savini has acquired a substantial cult following, most notably in the pages of Fangoria magazine, but also through books and videotapes detailing his work.

Savini’s signature effect is the exploding head: shotgun-to-the-cranium gimmicks feature in Maniac, The Prowler, and Day of the Dead. But the importance of Romero’s input to Savini’s oeuvre can be gauged by comparing the uninspired decapitations and stabbings of such grimly misanthropic items as Maniac or Friday the 13th with the outrageous, transgressive “splatstick” of Romero’s zombie movies—which offer a ghoul losing the top of his head to a helicopter blade like a breakfast egg, a severed head used as a bowling ball with eye-socket fingerholes, or a villain snarling “’choke on ‘em” to the zombies gobbling his entrails. Recently, his collaboration with Romero has been eclipsed by work for the Italian visionary Dario Argento, who produced Dawn of the Dead, directed (with Romero) the two-part Two Evil Eyes (for which Savini recreated Poe horrors like the naked woman bisected by a pendulum and the exhumed corpse with all its teeth plucked) and the drab decapitation-saga Trauma (featuring a handy noose gadget that automatically guillotines with as much resonance as an electric can-opener). His fame can be seen as part of the shift in the nature of horror to which he himself has contributed. Within this the increasing foregrounding of and fascination with special effects techniques, both in films and in horror fanzines, has made him as much a star of the genre as any actor or director. "Yes, I think the effects people are becoming the stars of the films," he says. "What the critics say about films like Friday the 13th—that they don’t have much plot or characterization and are an exercise in one death after another—is absolutely true. The special effects are the stars of those movies. I can’t say that [this] bothers me. But I will say that there was a magic alive in a lot of the older movies—the horror films, the swashbucklers, whatever—that we don’t see today. I personally feel that it’s a lot smarter to leave things to a person’s imagination, let him fill things in for himself. When your mind completes something, it’s much more valuable to you, I think."

Part of Savini’s familiarity with audiences may also boil down to the fact that he has in fact worked as an actor—taking major supporting roles for Romero in Martin and Knightriders, enjoying himself as a monster-fighting biker dude in Dawn of the Dead and Robert Rodriguez’s From Dusk Till Dawn, and playing Jack the Ripper in the made-for-video The Ripper—and branched into direction, with a few installments of Tales from the Darkside on TV and a Romero-scripted remake of Romero’s seminal Night of the Living Dead, which surprisingly holds back on the gory make-up effects as it plays clever variations on the original film.

—Peter Hutchings, updated by Kim Newman and John McCarty

SCHAMUS, James

Films as Producer:

1990 The Golden Boat (Ruiz)
1991 Ambition (Hartley); Thank You and Good Night (Oxenberg); Poison (Haynes) (exec)
1992  Tui shou (Pushing Hands) (Lee) (+ sc); Warrior: The Life of Leonard Peltier (Baer) (exec); Swoon (Kalin) (exec); In the Soup (Rockwell) (assoc); I Was on Mars (Levy) (line)

1993  Hsi yen (The Wedding Banquet) (Lee) (+ sc); Dottie Gets Spanked (Haynes—for TV) (coordinating)

1994  Roy Cohn/Jack Smith (Godmilow); Yin shi nan nu (Eat Drink Man Woman) (Lee) (assoc + sc); What Happened Was... (Noonan) (exec)

1995  Sense and Sensibility (Lee) (co-pr); The Brothers McMullen (Burns) (exec); Safe (Haynes) (exec)

1996  She's the One (Burns); Walking and Talking (Holofcener)

1997  Arresting Gena (Weyer) (exec); Love God (Grow) (exec); The Myth of Fingerprints (Freundlich) (exec); Office Killer (Sherman) (exec); The Ice Storm (Lee) (+ sc)

1998  Happiness (Solondz) (exec)

1999  The Lifestyle (Schisgall) (exec); Lola and Bilidikid (Lola and Billy the Kid) (Ataman) (exec); Ride with the Devil (Lee) (+ sc)

2000  Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon (Lee) (exec + sc)

Films as Writer:

2000  X-Men (Singer) [uncredited]

Publications

On SCHAMUS: articles—

* * *

As an associate professor of film at Columbia University, James Schamus has taught everything from film theory, to the films of Carl Theodor Dreyer, to popular genres like film noir and the Western. The diversity of his interests in the world of cinema is equally apparent in the work he has done within the industry. Although Schamus has become a leading figure in the world of independent film, he has also worked steadfastly to bring such independent film to a larger audience, often working with major studios and distributors to get small, and at times markedly experimental independents to as many screens as possible. And as both a producer and a writer, Schamus has helped to prove the commercial and popular viability of independent film.

In 1991, James Schamus began the production company Good Machine with Ted Hope, with whom he had worked with as a freelance script reader for New Line Cinema. Among the company’s first productions was Ang Lee’s Tui shou (Pushing Hands) which failed to gain U.S. distribution. But when Lee’s next picture, His yen (The Wedding Banquet), grossed $7.5 million in the United States and more than four times that in foreign revenues, Schamus and Hope learned the importance of the foreign market, especially the marketing of independent film. Since then, Good Machine, Intl., has become a significant force in international sales and marketing of films, even becoming October Film’s agent for foreign sales. The revenue from these sales has allowed Schamus and Good Machine to make further inroads into Hollywood filmmaking, and has given them the clout to back adventurous and sometimes controversial pictures like Todd Haynes’ Poison, Tom Kalinn’s Swoon, and Todd Solondz’s Happiness. As much success as earlier productions may have had, Ang Lee’s 1995 film version of Sense and Sensibility was a watershed for Good Machine and co-producer Schamus, garnering seven Academy Awards nominations (including a win for Emma Thompson’s screenplay adaptation of the Jane Austen novel) and a greater commercial viability for the production company. The door was now open for Schamus and Good Machine to produce major studio films like The Ice Storm and Ride with the Devil, which while unquestionably Hollywood films, still maintain an element of the independent spirit by which Schamus made his name.

As a writer, Schamus has collaborated extensively with Ang Lee in creating uncommonly quiet films. In an industry wherein flamboyance often seems the norm, Schamus’s films demonstrate a striking understatement. His first three writing credits, which he shares with Lee, were the “Taiwanese trilogy” consisting of Tui shou (Pushing Hands), His yen (The Wedding Banquet), and Yinshi nan nu (Eat Drink Man Woman). Each of these films explores the breakdown of communications that occurs between both generations and cultures. Consequently the scripts are spare, letting silence speak as much as any words might. Schamus continued with a variation on this theme with his next screenplay, an adaptation of Rick Moody’s novel The Ice Storm which likewise deals with intergenerational alienation, this time in the 1970s in New Canaan, Connecticut. In this, Schamus and Lee’s first American collaboration, however, the taciturn characters are replaced by characters who generally speak incessantly, but without saying much of substance. Still, Schamus skillfully uses silence. The last fifteen minutes of the film are, in fact, virtually silent, and it is only when this silence becomes paramount to the rhetoric of politics and pop psychology that the familial bonds of the movie’s characters are reaffirmed.

Schamus followed up The Ice Storm with two more Lee directed scripts, the Civil War epic Ride with the Devil, based on Daniel Woodrell’s novel Woe to Live On, and the martial arts period piece Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon. These films mark a departure for both Schamus and Lee, demonstrating an action aesthetic unhinted at in their earlier collaborations. But in Ride with the Devil, impressive as the action scenes may be, it is their contrast with the quieter moments of interpersonal communication, written in striking period-accurate dialect, which truly drive the emotional impact of the film. Ultimately, the mixture of tones in the picture might well be reflective of the entirety of James Schamus’s work in film, which seeks to balance the world of independent film with the business of Hollywood.

—Marc Oxoby

SCHARY, Dore

Dore Schary

Films as Producer (Personally Supervised):
1941 The Penalty (Bucquet)
1942 Joe Smith, American (Thorpe); Nazi Agent (Dassin); Grand Central Murder (Simon); Northwest Rangers (Newman); Kid Glove Killer (Zinnemann); Sunday Punch (Miller); The War Against Mrs. Hadley (Bucquet); A Yank on the Burma Road (Seitz); Fingers at the Window (Lederer); The Omaha Trail (Buzzell); Journey for Margaret (Van Dyke); Eyes in the Night (Zinnemann); The Affairs of Martha (Dassin); Apache Trail (Thorpe)
1943 Harrigan’s Kid (Reisner); Lassie Come Home (Wilcox); Pilot No. 5 (Sidney); Bataan (Garnett); A Stranger in Town (Rowland); Lost Angel (Rowland); Young Ideas (Dassin)
1944 The Youngest Profession (Buzzell)
1945 I’ll Be Seeing You (Dieterle)
1946 The Spiral Staircase (Siodmak); Till the End of Time (Dmytryk)
1947 The Bachelor and the Bobby-Soxer (Reis); The Farmer’s Daughter (Potter); Crossfire (Dmytryk)
1948 They Live By Night (Ray); The Boy with the Green Hair (Losey); Mr. Blandings Builds His Dream House (Potter)
1949 Battleground (Wellman)
1950 Walk Softly Stranger (Stevenson); The Next Voice You Hear (Wellman); Go for Broke (Pirosh)
1951 Westward the Women (Wellman)
1952 Plymouth Adventure (Brown); Washington Story (Pirosh)
1953 Take the High Ground (Brooks); Dream Wife (Sheldon)
1955 Trial (Robson); Bad Day at Black Rock (J. Sturges)
1956 The Last Hunt (Brooks); The Swan (C. Vidor); Battle of Gettysburg (doc) (+ sc)
1957 Designing Woman (Minnelli)
1959 Lonelyhearts (Donehue) (+ sc)
1960 Sunrise at Campobello (Donehue) (+ sc)
1963 Act One (+ d + sc)

Publications
By SCHARY: books—

With Charles Palmer, Case History of a Movie, New York, 1950.
Sunrise at Campobello (play), New York, 1958.
The Highest Tree (play), New York, 1961.
For Special Occasions (autobiography), New York, 1962.
With Sinclair Lewis, Storm in the West (script), New York, 1963.

By SCHARY: article—
American Film (Washington, D.C.), October and November 1979.

On SCHARY: book—

On SCHARY: articles—

Lambert, Gavin, in Sight and Sound (London), March 1951.

Take One (Montreal), July 1979.

Cinématographe (Paris), May 1984.

* * *

Dore Schary was the head of production at MGM from 1948 until 1956. As such he was ultimately responsible for such famous films as Singin’ in the Rain, On the Town, Adam’s Rib, Father of the Bride, The Asphalt Jungle, Ivanhoe, The Band Wagon, Kiss Me Kate, and Seven Brides for Seven Brothers. While this may not have been MGM’s Golden Age in terms of making money, if for nothing else Schary will be remembered as the head of the studio at which Arthur Freed’s wonderful musicals were created. Schary let Freed loose to work with Stanley Donen and Gene Kelly to create some of the greatest film musicals Hollywood has ever known.

But that is not to say the Schary-led MGM did not keep an eye on the box office. Indeed in the early 1950s, the beginning of his tenure, MGM seemed to do just fine. While Schary was in charge MGM produced the second biggest money maker of 1950, Battleground, the second biggest money maker of 1951, Showboat, and the second biggest box-office hit of 1952, Quo Vadis. Unfortunately after that the totals were not as good. Schary was fired in November 1956.

The problem was that Schary was never fully in charge and thus did not get the credit he deserved. Louis B. Mayer fought Schary’s projects until he was let go in 1951. Nicholas M. Schenck, long-time boss in New York, failed to help Schary with the conversion to wide-screen technology in the 1950s. Schenck retired in 1956. MGM would not adapt, and thus never was able to return to the glory days of the 1930s. Unfortunately for Schary he had to captain a ship that was sinking.

In retrospect it always seemed odd that Schary, a former screenwriter and self-professed liberal supporter of message movies, ever got as far as he did. Indeed, his initial success in Hollywood came at MGM as far as he did. He helped write Boys Town, starring Spencer Tracy and Mickey Rooney, and Young Tom Edison, with Rooney reaching the peak of his popularity.

These films earned Schary his spurs as a producer. He did some B-films for MGM, and helped David O. Selznick with The Spiral Staircase starring Rhonda Fleming and George Brent and The Farmer’s Daughter starring Loretta Young. He also helped run RKO for Howard Hughes for a short time.

Once the MGM experience was over Schary returned to what he did best, the creation of certain pet projects. To many he will always be best known for Sunrise at Campobello in both its play and movie form. He not only produced both versions, he also wrote the play. Yet surprisingly, considering all his experience in Hollywood, Schary himself never supervised a movie of lasting importance. He will always best be remembered for his tenure at RKO and MGM when many an interesting film came from those working for him.

—Douglas Gomery

SCHENCK, Joseph and Nicholas

After Joseph worked his way up from being an errand boy, the brothers acquired drug stores in New York; 1908—opened amusement park, Fort George, New York; 1912—bought Palisades Amusement Park, Fort Lee, New Jersey; partnered Marcus Loew in movie theater chain (to become MGM).

Films as Producer and Executive Producer—Joseph:

1917 Butcher Boy; Panthea
1918 The Forbidden City (Franklin); Salome (Edwards)
1919 The Way of a Woman (Leonard)
1920 The Right of Way (Dillon)
1921 The Passion Flower (Brenon); Lessons in Love (Withey); The Sign on the Door (Brenon); Mama’s Affair (Fleming); Wedding Bells (Withey); The Wonderful Thing (Brenon); Woman’s Place (Fleming); Love’s Redemption (Parker)
1922 Polly of the Follies (Emerson); Smilin’ Through (Franklin); The Primitive Lover (Franklin); The Eternal Flame (Lloyd); East Is West (Franklin); Cops (Keaton)
1923 Within the Law (Lloyd); Our Hospitality (Keaton and Blystone); Ashes of Vengeance (Lloyd); The Dangerous Maid (Heerman); Three Ages (Keaton and Clise); The Voice from the Minaret (Franklin); The Song of Love (Franklin and Marion)
1924 The Goldfish (Storm); The Only Woman (Olcott); Secrets (Borzage); Sherlock, Jr. (Keaton); The Navigator (Crisp and Keaton); Her Night of Romance (Franklin)
1925 The Lady (Borzage); Learning to Love (Franklin); Seven Chances (Keaton); Graustark (Buchowetzki); Her Sister from Paris (Franklin); Go West (Keaton)
1926 Kiki (Brown); Battling Butler (Keaton); The Duchess of Buffalo (Franklin)
Nicholas Schenck (right) with Franklin Delano Roosevelt and Basil O’Connor

1927  The General (Keaton and Bruckman); Venus of Venice (Neelan); Breakfast at Sunrise (St. Clair); Camille (Niblo); College (Horne); Sorrell and Son (Brenon); The Dove (West)

1928  Steamboat Bill, Jr. (Reisner); The Woman Disputed (H. King and Taylor); The Battle of the Sexes (Griffith)

1929  Lady of the Pavements (Griffith); Alibi (West); Eternal Love (Lubitsch); New York Nights (Milestone)

1930  Be Yourself! (Freeland); The Bad One (Fitzmaurice); One Romantic Night (Stein); The Lottery Bride (Stein); Puttin’ on the Ritz (Sloman); Lummox (Brenon); Abraham Lincoln (Griffith); Du Barry—Woman of Passion (Taylor); The Bat Whispers (West)

1936  As You Like It (Czinner) (co)

Publications

On SCHENCK (Joseph): articles—

On SCHENCK (Nicholas): articles—

* * *

No two siblings ever acquired more power in the American film industry than the brothers Schenck. One might make the case for the brothers Warner, but in their heyday Joseph Schenck functioned as the chief operating officer of Twentieth Century-Fox while his younger brother Nicholas lorded over the Loew’s, Inc. empire, that had as one subsidiary, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, the most famous moviemaking operation in the world. The Warners may have had a mighty empire, but the Schencks ran two.

Joseph Schenck was the more famous of the two, as the mentor of noted movie stars from Buster Keaton to Marilyn Monroe. He first entered independent film production in the 1910s, from a base in the vaudeville industry. (Indeed, both Schenck brothers began as assistants to Marcus Loew.) By the early 1920s Joseph began to manage the careers and produce the films of Roscoe “Fatty” Arbuckle, Buster Keaton, and the Talmadge sisters, one of whom he married. Since United Artists was the company through which many of these stars distributed their films, Joseph Schenck became the head of the then floundering company in the mid-1920s and therefore one of the more powerful studio heads based in Hollywood.

Joseph was known widely to the general public as spokesman and co-founder of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. But for pure economic power, in the 1920s, his brother, Nicholas, had much, much more economic might. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, with its internationally famous symbol of a roaring “Leo the Lion,” stood for a more famous studio than United Artists. But in a business sense MGM simply functioned as one successful unit in a larger enterprise, Loew’s Inc., a fully integrated movie company, controlling not only a movie studio, but also a network for international distribution, and a highly profitable theater chain.

Nicholas Schenck ran a tight corporate empire from his office high atop the Loew’s State Theater building in the heart of Times Square in New York City. Known as “the General,” Nicholas Schenck took over from founder Marcus Loew in the days just before the coming of sound. A trusted team of assistants, many of whom remained loyal to “the General” for almost 30 years, executed his every order. Louis B. Mayer, head of production at the Hollywood lot, may have been more famous to the public at large, but he did not execute any more than the most trivial decision without first checking with “the General” in New York.

Loew’s Inc.’s longtime fiscally conservative business practices provided the company with few costly mortgages during the Great Depression, and thus Loew’s Inc. never experienced any of the red ink its competitors did during that economic calamity. During the early 1930s Loew’s Inc. stood at the top of the world’s movie business. Indeed MGM’s very method of film production reflected Schenck’s conservative business philosophy. Schenck played it close to the vest. During the early 1930s the studio created only top-drawer feature films as well as distributing high-class series from the Hal Roach studio (short subjects), and the Hearst enterprises (newsreels).

One Schenck brother always sought to help the other. In the early 1930s Joseph Schenck grew tired of bickering with the founding partners of United Artists, and created his own production company Twentieth Century Pictures, with partner Darryl F. Zanuck. This he did with the financial backing of Loew’s Inc. In 1935 the ailing Fox film company sought out new management, and merged with Twentieth Century Pictures to bring Joseph Schenck and Zanuck on board. To help brother Joseph take over Fox, Nicholas Schenck put up monies from Loew’s and his own personal fortune.

Thereafter, as Zanuck handled the chief of production chores at the new Twentieth Century-Fox, Joseph Schenck took up the role his brother had long established at Loew’s, operating as chief executive officer, always from behind the scenes, hidden from public view. Joseph Schenck coordinated production with distribution and ran Twentieth Century-Fox’s chain of theaters.

The two Schencks would have remained beloved figures had they retired in the late 1940s. Instead, both hung on in the movie business until the changing economic climate of the 1950s made the methods that they had employed for nearly 30 years obsolete. With new audiences and television as a serious competitor, the Schencks lost their positions of power. Joseph never gave up and during the 1950s plunged again into independent production with Todd-AO business. Nicholas Schenck was forced to retire in 1956 after a bitter proxy battle for the very corporation many considered his brainchild. It is unfortunate that with their ignominious endings, neither is granted the praise for helping build Hollywood into the most powerful film business in the world during the 1930s and 1940s.

—Douglas Gomery

SCHIFRIN, Lalo

Address: 710 North Hillcrest Road, Beverly Hills, California 90210, U.S.A.

Films as Composer:

1964 Rhino! (Tors); See How They Run (Rich); Les Félins (The Love Cage; Joy House) (Clement)
1965 Once a Thief (Nelson); The Cincinnati Kid (Jewison); The Liquidator (Cardiff); Dark Intruder (Hart)
1966 I Deal in Danger (Grauman); Blindfold (Dunne); Way . . . Way Out (Douglas); Murderers' Row (Levin); The Doomsday Flight (Graham)
1967 The Venetian Affair (Thorpe); Sullivan’s Empire (Hart and Carr); Who’s Minding the Mint? (Morris); Cool Hand Luke (Rosenberg); The President’s Analyst (Flicker); How I Spent My Summer Vacation (Hale)
1968 The Fox (Rydell); Sol Madrid (Hutton); Where Angels Go . . . Trouble Follows! (Nelson); The Brotherhood (Ritt); Bullitt (Yates); Coogan’s Bluff (Siegel); Hell in the Pacific (Boorman); Deadly Roullette (Hale); The Rise and Fall of the Third Reich (Kauffman); Mission Impossible versus the Mob (Stanley)
1969 Che! (Fleischer); Eye of the Cat (Rich); The Young Lawyers (Hart)
1970 Kelly’s Heroes (Hutton); Imago (Bosnick); Pussycat, Pussycat, I Love You (Amateau); WUSA (Rosenberg); I Love My Wife (Stuart); The Mask of Sheba (Rich); The Aquarians (MacDougall)
1971 THX 1138 (Lucas); Pretty Maids All in a Row (Vadim); The Beguiled (Siegel); Escape (Moxey); Earth II (Gries)
1972 The Neptune Factor (The Neptune Disaster) (Petrie); Dirty Harry (Siegel); The Wrath of God (Nelson); Prime Cut (Ritchie); Welcome Home, Johnny Bristol (McGowan); Joe Kidd (J. Sturges)
1973 Rage (Scott); Magnum Force (Post); Enter the Dragon (Clouse); Charley Varrick (Siegel); St. Ives (Lee Thompson); Hunter (Horn); Hit (Furie); Harry in Your Pocket (Geller)
1974 Night Games (Taylor); Golden Needles (Clouse)
1975 Delancey Street: The Crisis Within (Frawley); Starsky and Hutch (Shear); The Four Musketeers (Lester); Foster and Laurie (Moxey); Guilty or Innocent: The Sam Sheppard Murder Case (Lewis); The Master Gunfighter (Laughlin)
1976 Man on a Swing (Perry); The Eagle Has Landed (J. Sturges); Sky Riders (Hickox); Special Delivery (Wendkos); Voyage of the Damned (Rosenberg); Brenda Starr (Stuart); Day of the Animals (Girdler)
1977 Rollercoaster (Goldstone); Good Against Evil (Wendkos)
1978 Love and Bullets (Rosenberg); Telefon (Siegel); The Manitou (Girdler); The Return from Witch Mountain (Hough); The President’s Mistress (Moxey); The Nativity (Kowalski); The Cat from Outer Space (Tokar); Nunzio (Williams)
1979 Escape to Athena (Cosmatos); The Amityville Horror (Rosenberg); Institute for Revenge (Annakin); Boulevard Nights (Pressman); The Concorde—Airport 79 (Airport ’80—The Concorde) (Rich)
1980 Loophole (Quested); Brubaker (Rosenberg); Serial (Persky); The Big Brawl (Clouse); The Nude Bomb (Donner); The Competition (Oliansky)

1981 Buddy Buddy (Wilder); Caveman (Gottlieb); When Time Ran Out (Earth’s Final Fury) (Goldstone); La pelle (The Skin) (Cavani); Las viernes de la eternidad (The Fridays of Eternity) (Oliansky); Chicago Story (London)
1982 The Seduction (Schmoeller); A Stranger Is Watching (Cunningham); Class of 1984 (Lester); Amityville II: The Possession (Daniian); Victims (Freedman); Fast-Walking (Harris); Falcon’s Gold (Robbers of the Sacred Mountain) (Schulz)
1983 Starflight One: The Plane That Couldn’t Land (Jameson); The Sting II (Kagan); Doctor Detroit (Pressman); The Osterman Weekend (Peckinpah); Rita Hayworth, the Love Goddess (Goldstone); Sudden Impact (Eastwood)
1984 Tank (Chomskey); The Mean Season (Borsos); Spragge (Elikann)
1985 Bad Medicine (Miller); The New Kids (Cunningham)
1986 Black Moon Rising (Cokliss); Beverly Hills Madam (Hart—for TV); The Ladies Club (A. Allen)
1987 The Fourth Protocol (Mackenzie); The Silence at Bethany (Oliansky)
1988 Berlin Blues (Pilaco); The Dead Pool (Van Horn); Little Sweetheart (Simmons—for TV); Return From the River Kwai (McLaglen)
1989 Return to the River Kwai (McLaglen)
1990 Naked Tango (Schrader); Face to Face (Antonio)
1991 FX2: The Deadly Art of Illusion (Franklin)
1993 The Beverly Hillbillies (Speeris)
1996 Mission: Impossible (Bay) (theme); Manhattan Merengue! (Vasquez-video)
1997 Money Talks (Patner)
1998 Something to Believe In (Hough); Tango (Saura); Rush Hour (Patner)
2000 Mission: Impossible II (Woo) (theme); Jack of All Trades

Publications

By SCHIFRIN: articles—

On SCHIFRIN: articles—

Films and Filming (London), August 1968.
Ecran (Paris), September 1975.
Score (Lelystad, Netherlands), September 1979.
New Zealand Film Music Bulletin (Invercargill), February 1983.
Soundtrack! (Hollywood), June 1983.
Soundtrack! (Hollywood), September 1983.

* * *
Because he has bridged so successfully the worlds of traditional and film music, Lalo Schifrin is undoubtedly the most important film composer of the post-Mancini and post Psycho era. During the height of the Hollywood studio period, film underscoring was heavily indebted to Romantic, basically symphonic sources, with a pronounced emphasis on melodramatic principles, that is, the music was meant to key the emotionality of the scene (and was thus more prominent in genres, like the woman’s picture, where emotionality was more at issue). Though these were “unheard melodies,” to borrow Claudia Gorbman’s phrase, there was no doubt that the underscoring composed and orchestrated by the Franz Waxmans and Max Steiners of the period (with often a substantial debt to Tchaikovsky or Chopin) was in fact music in the obvious, accepted sense of that term. In the fifties and sixties, however, the nature of underscoring changed as its “musical” elements became increasingly assimilated to other aspects of sound design. Henry Mancini’s jazz scorings are an early example of the trend, while Bernard Herrmann’s shrieking violins for the shower sequence in Psycho problematize the separation of music—organized sound—from other types of expressive sound effects. What is interesting, of course, is that art music of the same period was moving in more or less an identical direction, away from traditional harmonic forms of organization toward aleatory and serial approaches to the design of music.

Schifrin, the son of a concertmaster, rebelled at an early age from his father’s rigid tastes (no Wagner or even Debussy allowed) and went to France to study (having won a scholarship to the prestigious Paris Conservatoire), but really in order to learn more about jazz. There Schifrin played with prominent jazz musicians such as Chet Baker, but developed eclectic tastes in modern, especially popular music. Returning to Argentina, he put together a “big band” a la Count Basie and became hugely successful. At the same time, he indulged his interests for more traditional music, writing chamber music, compositions for ballet, and even symphonies. Schifrin represented Argentina in the Third International Jazz Festival, and soon after, in 1958, moved to New York at the invitation of Dizzy Gillespie, who had heard his band during a South American tour. Schifrin played with Gillespie for three years before accepting the offer of MGM Records to begin a Hollywood career. While short, he had become the most prominent and productive member of a new generation of film composers.

One of the factors contributing to his success, which is witnessed in his huge number of film credits, is that Schifrin has always accepted the subsidiary role of music within the mixed, multi-track construction of the medium. This is not to say that his musical effects, almost always an eclectic mix of techniques, genres, and modes, have not been noteworthy in themselves. In The Hellstrom Chronicles, for example, a pseudo-scientific jeremiad that predicts how insects will take over the earth, Schifrin used a very avant-garde mix of aleatory, electronic, and serial techniques to create music that was expressive both of the film’s main characters—the unstoppable hordes of raving insects—and the film’s strident, uncomfortable message. No one who has seen and listened to the film could forget the terrifying effect created by Schifrin’s loud electronic sounds, synchronized piano effects, and unpredictable moments of loud percussion. But is this music or sound effects? Schifrin and sound designers such as Walter Murch, in any event, share much in common. For Hell in the Pacific, an arty, “psychological” war film, Schifrin designed a sequence where the Japanese soldier marooned on a Pacific Island hears loud cicadas, which then blend into “music” (two high-pitched, very loud piccolos) that segues into more traditional scoring. Similarly, for Bullitt Schifrin scored the famous car chase sequence by using music—a hard-driving jazz theme—which subtly fades into more traditional sound effects—screeching tires, squealing breaks. Compare the similar uses of expressive noise employed by Murch in the sequence in The Conversation where the snooping detective finds the bloody traces of a murder in a hotel bathroom. The two masters of modern sound design, Murch and Schifrin, even had a chance to collaborate, on George Lucas’s science fiction film THX 1138, which has perhaps the most complex and expressive sound of any film during the seventies.

Of course, Schifrin is also expert at less subtle kinds of scoring, particularly at composing what are now known as “action themes.” His action theme scoring for the TV show Mission: Impossible is probably one of the most recognizable on the contemporary music scene (recently recycled for the feature film remake of the series) and it is built on a very simple theme with a prominent rhythmic structure and unusual instrumentation (very prominent bongo drums, a kind of tribute to Mancini-esque fifties jazz scorings). Though more traditional symphonic underscorers still find work in Hollywood—John Williams is by far the most successful—the kind of expressive underscoring perfected by Schifrin has defined what film music has largely become in the post-studio era. If his career has declined somewhat in the nineties, his pervasive influence on the presence of sound and music in the commercial film has not.

—R. Barton Palmer

SCHLESINGER, Leon

Producer. Nationality: American. Born: Philadelphia, 1884. Education: Attended local schools in Philadelphia. Career: Worked as an usher in Philadelphia, then in the box office of a Chicago theater, and was later appointed as its cashier; also held jobs as a press agent, agent for opera libretti, manager for road and vaudeville shows, as salesman for Metro Pictures, and various positions in the import/export aspect of the film business; 1923—came to Hollywood as west coast manager for AGFA Films; 1925—founded the Pacific Title and Art Studio, a business in which he later sold his interest; 1930—entered the cartoon business at the suggestion of Jack Warner with whom he became associated; 1934—44—produced cartoons for Warner Bros. and Vitaphone; 1944—sold out to Warner Bros.; worked briefly as a producer for Columbia Pictures. Died: In Los Angeles, 26 December 1949.

Publications

ON SCHLESINGER: articles—

* * *
Leon Schlesinger was an important member of that group of east coast promoters, businessmen, and hustlers who transformed the American film business into a well-established, respectable, and profitable industry, with the American middle-class as its paying customers. After a number of different jobs at the margins of the industry, he found himself at the beginning of the sound era working in a field—title design—which was likely to be less lucrative now that a different kind of film was beginning to be produced. Fortunately for him, Schlesinger took friend Jack Warner’s advice and became involved in animation, then a relatively new field just beginning to establish its wares—first and most important the musical cartoon—as an essential item on the theatrical bill.

Schlesinger himself was a somewhat rough customer. A devotee of racetracks and an ardent gambler, he was also interested in sports, particularly deep-sea angling, at which he excelled. Though Disney had established the popularity of animation and pioneered the methods by which a successful animation studio could be run, Schlesinger was anything but an imitator of either the Disney style, with its often saccharine appeal, or management technique; he ran his studio in a loose, good-natured, and flexible style that nurtured the talents of artists who probably would not have been happy under Disney’s authoritarian rule. The Looney Tunes and Merrie Melodies cartoons he produced for Warner Bros. and others were distinctly more adult in flavor than those done by Disney. The wisecracking, often sophisticated humor of Bugs Bunny and Daffy Duck, two series which began under his direction, owe much to Schlesinger’s personal style and taste. Even if he was seldom involved directly in the production of cartoons, unlike Disney, who exercised a firmer hand, Schlesinger was smart to hire and nurture the careers of artists who were able to tap into the national popular taste for almost twenty years. These included Hugh Harman, Rudolph Ising, Fritz Freling, Bob Clampett, Robert McKimson, Tex Avery, Frank Tashlin, and Chuck Jones, all of whom were greatly influential on the development of animation in America (Tashlin even went on to become a director of note in “live” productions). Not all his projects enjoyed the success of the Looney Tunes and Merrie Melodies series; the Buddy’s Show Boat series for Vitaphone was less popular.

But, even though he was never quite the creative equal of Disney, who molded his productions much more in the image of his own taste and obsessions and pushed for prestige projects such as Fantasia, Schlesinger must be credited with having exercised an important and formative influence on screen animated comedy.

—R. Barton Palmer

SCHNEE, Charles

Films as Writer:

1947 I Walk Alone (Haskin); Cross My Heart (Berry)
1948 They Live by Night (The Twisted Road) (Ray); Red River (Hawks) (co)
1949 Scene of the Crime (Rowland); Easy Living (Tourneur)
1950 Paid in Full (Dieterle) (co); The Next Voice You Hear (Wellman); The Furies (A. Mann); Right Cross (J. Sturges); Born to Be Bad (Ray)
1951 Bannerline (Weis); Westward the Women (Wellman)
1952 When in Rome (Brown) (co); The Bad and the Beautiful (Minnelli)
1960 Butterfield 8 (Daniel Mann); The Crowded Sky (Pevney)
1962 Two Weeks in Another Town (Minnelli)

Films as Producer:

1953 Torch Song (Walters); Jeopardy (J. Sturges)
1955 The Prodigal (Thorpe); Trial (Robson)
1956 Somebody up There Likes Me (Wise)
1957 The Wings of Eagles (Ford); House of Numbers (Rouse); Until They Sail (Wise)

Publications

On SCHNEE: articles—

Film Comment (New York), January-February 1981.

* * *

Charles Schnee’s early death (at the age of 47) prevented him from becoming one of Hollywood’s most famous names, although his abilities as screenwriter (an Oscar-winner for The Bad and the Beautiful) and producer (Somebody Up There Likes Me, The Wings of Eagles) had already been proved. His relatively small list of films is distinguished enough to make a thorough analysis of his work worthwhile, but since he had only just established himself as a producer when he died, it is as a screenwriter he is best remembered.

Most of Schnee’s films seem to be unselfconscious updatings of old genres, presenting the values and concerns of the postwar world. However, his scripts, by his own definition, stressed character rather than genre. Although he wrote three successful westerns (Red River, The Furies, and Westward the Women), his work is perhaps best grouped under the general definition of “stories about people under the stress of transition.” This transition might be social, physical, political, economic, or emotional, as Schnee, originally trained as a lawyer, could bring his remarkable attention to detail and keen powers of observation to many different kinds of settings. For instance, Schnee’s first screenplay, I Walk Alone, is a look at gangsters in the nightclub business. Instead of the typical rough bootleggers of the 1930s, these hoods are big businessmen, and when one of their former group (Burt Lancaster) gets out of prison, he is clearly anachronistic in the new, more polished world of crime. He must make a transition from his old ways to the new, or die. They Live by Night presents a young outlaw, in love and on the run from the law in the tradition of Fritz Lang’s You Only Live Once, but his problem becomes more psychological than social as he falls in love and faces a transition point in his life. In Easy Living, one of Jacques Tourneur’s lesser-known but excellent films, Victor Mature plays an aging professional football player, a man in transition between his former fame and the need to retire and take up a simpler life. The Next Voice You Hear is a 1950s movie in which the postatomic world contemplates the meaning of it all as God broadcasts to the little people to warn them about their new ability to destroy all of mankind. (These people are in the biggest transition of them all.)

Schnee’s best work tends to be melodrama, and even his westerns reflect that tendency. Setting aside Red River, which was largely written by Borden Chase, the other two Schnee westerns are films in which women are central to the story: The Furies and Westward the Women. Both are superior, underrated films with strong stories and performances, well directed by Anthony Mann and William Wellman, respectively. In the former, Barbara Stanwyck struggles to take control of her life and her inheritance, attempting to wrestle it from her more backward looking father. In the latter, a motley group of women, the downtrodden and the outcast, set out on a wagon trek west to find new homes, new lives, and new husbands. Although both films contain conventions of the western genre, and The Furies is also a film noir and Westward the Women a women’s film, both are clearly melodramas.

Schnee’s most famous screenplay is his Oscar-winner, The Bad and the Beautiful. Impeccably directed by Vincente Minnelli, its story is a perfectly balanced presentation on the Hollywood collaborative force. Three artists—director, writer, and star—are carefully manipulated and controlled by a producer, who orchestrates the transitional moment in each of their lives in order to further his own career. As the film begins, he is in his own crisis of transition, and each of the three stories is told in flashback, in an attempt to convince each that the manipulation had actually been to their own advantage. Like all Minnelli films, it tends to be about art and the act of creating art, and it is unquestionably Minnelli’s film. However, Schnee’s contribution to both this and Minnelli’s companion piece, Two Weeks in Another Town, cannot be discounted.

Schnee’s collection of screenplays taken together seem to present the postwar world—more corporate, less individualistic, less mythic, less reassuring, and with its values all in question. Thus his stories of people in various forms of transition mark him as an important postwar talent whose best contributions may well have been ahead of him at the time of his death.

—Joanne Yeck

SCHOONMAKER, Thelma

Editor. Nationality: American. Born: 3 January 1940 in North Africa. Education: Attended Cornell University, New York University. Family: Married Michael Powell (1984; died 1990). Career: Met Martin Scorsese while both were students at New York University; cut Scorsese’s debut feature, Who’s That Knocking at My Door?, 1969. Awards: Best Film Editing Academy Award, Best Editing British Academy Award, Best Edited Feature Film American Cinema Editors Eddie, for Raging Bull, 1980; Best Editing British Academy Award, for GoodFellas, 1990.

Films as Editor:

1965  Pages From James Joyce’s Finnegan’s Wake
1968  The Virgin President (co)
1969  Who’s That Knocking at My Door? (Scorsese)
1970  Street Scenes (Scorsese) (co) Woodstock (Wadleigh) (chief ed) (+ asst d)
1979  The Kids Are Alright (1979) (special consultant)
1980  Raging Bull (Scorsese)
1983  The King of Comedy (Scorsese) (+ production supervisor)
1985  After Hours (Scorsese)
1986  The Color of Money (Scorsese)
1988  The Last Temptation of Christ (Scorsese)
1989  “Life Lessons” ep. of New York Stories (Scorsese)
1990  GoodFellas (Scorsese)
1991  Cape Fear (Scorsese)
1993  The Age of Innocence (Scorsese)
1995  Casino (Scorsese)
1996  Grace of My Heart (Anders)
1997  Kundun (Scorsese)
1999  Bringing Out the Dead (Scorsese)
2000  Gangs of New York (Scorsese)

Other Films:

1998  In Search of Kundun with Martin Scorsese (Wilson) (doc) (editorial consultant)

Publications

By SCHOONMAAKER: articles—

“Why Thelma Loves Marty... and Michael,” interview with J. Sherlock, in Cinema Papers (Fitzroy, Victoria, Australia), December 1996.

On SCHOONMAKER: articles—

* * *

An axiom of Hollywood post-production holds that the best editing maintains a seamless invisibility; that the best editors don’t draw attention to their work. Thelma Schoonmaker simultaneously embodies and shatters that axiom. On one hand, she is certainly one of Hollywood’s most self-effacing editors, perhaps understandably so working as Martin Scorsese’s editor. Editing all his films from Raging Bull on, she always claims the credit goes to Scorsese since he shoots for and edits with her. On the other hand, her contributions to Scorsese’s films are far from insignificant; although her editing functions within classical Hollywood parameters, it draws attention to itself as a fully realized art form and provides a compendium of what contemporary editing can accomplish. As Jeffrey Ressner says, “Raging Bull, GoodFellas, and Casino have pushed the editing craft into a postmodern, almost hallucinogenic art. They are what films can be.”

Schoonmaker’s “postmodern” editing synthesizes a number of different influences, approaches, and devices: Nouvelle Vague, music videos, classical continuity editing (particularly shot/reverse shot dialogue editing), long takes and insequence cutting, montage, freeze frames, dissolves, jump cuts, temporal ellipses, extreme closeups, and irises. One might expect to see all these devices in a TV commercial or a music video, yet Schoonmaker’s successfully employs them in narrative features. She established this “hallucinatory” battery of techniques in her first commercial narrative, Raging Bull, which according to Stephan Talty, “is one of the most obsessively crafted and exhaustively edited films in American cinema.”

The techniques Schoonmaker initiated with Raging Bull won her an Oscar for best editing and she continued to use and expand them as her career progressed. Since 1980, her editing has become so innovative, complex, and continually evolving that addressing all aspects of it in a short essay is as unfair as it is impossible. Nonetheless, certain characteristics that help describe her editorial signature may be singled out.
Raging Bull appears documentary-like: shot in black and white, using subtitles to specify time and place, and telling the biography of Jake La Motta. Schoonmaker contributes to this appearance by utilizing long takes and intercutting “home movies” of La Motta and his friends and family. She also employs the naturalism associated with classical Hollywood editing by structuring much of the film around traditional shot/reverse shot dialogue sequences. But any sense of realism or naturalism these techniques may suggest shrinks behind the style she gives to the rest of the film. Most obviously, the eight fight sequences allow Schoonmaker to do anything she wants. She puts each sequence together in a different way with a different tempo, but all rely on montage and sound manipulation. Extreme close-ups are cut next to long shots; low angle shots are cut next to high angle shots; normal speed shots are cut next to slow and fast motion shots; long camera takes are cut next to split-second shots of camera flashes; the boxers and audience are cut next to objects (round cards, the bell, water buckets); freeze frames are cut next to Steadicam shots; sound intensifies, drops out, becomes subjective, becomes abstract. All of this makes each fight literally “explosive,” especially when compared to the slower pacing of rest of the film. Schoonmaker explains that while working on “Round 13” of the third Sugar Ray Robinson fight, she first edited for narrative structure and then reworked the scene for movement, lighting, and effects—exactly the concerns which push her editing to the foreground.

Outside the fight sequences Schoonmaker employs subtler, but just as untraditional, editing techniques. Perhaps her most influential innovations occurred in this area: expanding the accepted boundary of the temporal ellipse and challenging the limitations of match action editing. All editors eliminate unimportant information that a viewer can infer. For example, an editor will not bother showing a character getting into a car, driving to a new location, and then getting out of the car. Typically, we would see the character get into the car, drive out of the frame, and then exit the car at the new location. The viewer understands that the car was driven between two points without needing to see it. Schoonmaker pushes this in a number of ways, but most interestingly by using this technique when we do not expect to see it. For example, while standing at a poolside soda stand, La Motta first sees Vicki. Then a cut shows us Vicki in close-up (from La Motta’s point of view). When another cut returns us to La Motta he is sitting down at a table. We don’t see him move from the soda stand to the table, but we know he did. Later, during La Motta’s courtship of Vicki, she accompanies him to his apartment. As he closes the refrigerator door, a cut shows him sitting down at a table across the room. Again, unorthodox but fully comprehensible.

Traditional match action editing requires two things to make the cut “invisible”: (1) cutting at the point of strongest action and (2) maintaining exact screen position and direction. Failure to follow these two conventions produces “bad editing” or “jump cuts.” By traditional standards, Schoonmaker’s editing borders on the “bad.” But under contemporary editing aesthetics (heavily influenced by TV and music videos) her editing delivers an excitement impossible under the strict parameters of match action editing. Points of strongest action and exact screen position are replaced by jump cuts which produce a rhythmic pacing, an emphasis on character and dialogue (and actors’ performances), and narrative intensification. In the many shot/reverse shot dialogue sequences, the street vernacular the characters speak, with its staccato tempo, perfectly complements and supports these editorial decisions and produces the edgy tension associated with Scorsese’s films.

Schoonmaker also demonstrates a deft hand at intrasequence cutting. Brian Henderson defines intrasequence cutting as the linking of long takes to emphasize the rhythm and movement within a long duration shot. Each cut breaks that rhythm or movement but then replaces it with a different rhythm or movement of the next shot. Scorsese employs long takes usually with elaborate camera movements made possible by the Stedicam. In the Marcel Cerdan fight, the camera follows La Motta out of his dressing room, down a number of hallways, through the crowded arena, and into the ring as the camera (now on a crane) moves into a high angle shot. Schoonmaker uses such long takes in combination with her montage inspired editing to break and establish different editing temps.

Immediately before or after a montage sequence, cutting together long takes provides a needed respite from a taxing emotional or intensely physical scene. Combining long takes with shot/reverse shot editing allows characters to develop more naturally. The bookending sequences of La Motta in his dressing room set up the narrative and structure of the film with an efficiency no other editing technique could accomplish.

In The King of Comedy, she pushed the temporal ellipse to include a spatial aspect. Straight cutting on dialogue in a typical shot/reverse shot pattern we move freely between Rupert’s basement and his (fantasized) luncheon at Sardi’s with Jerry Langford. Rupert’s first conversation with Rita at a bar does the same thing: on a line of continuous dialogue over a shot/reverse shot cut we relocate from a restaurant. Schoonmaker and Scorsese indulge in a bit of Nouvelle Vague reflexivity here. In the long takes and intrasequence cutting which structures this scene, a patron behind Rupert gazes at the camera and mocks Rupert’s gestures and facial expressions. In a film which questions the thin line between reality and fantasy, this scene in particular demonstrates the impossibility of film to ever be real.

The opening title sequence of The King of Comedy superimposes credits over a freeze frame of Marsha’s clawing hands. Schoonmaker develops the freeze frame until it becomes one of her signature devices. She uses the freeze frame extensively in GoodFellas. Whenever Henry Hill’s voice over makes an important point, Schoonmaker freezes the image. In GoodFellas, she also employs long takes (especially in the famous track back/zoom in shot at the diner), intrasequence cutting (Karen and Henry and the Copacabana and the Saturday May 11 sequence), spatial and temporal ellipses (all of the violence and the gifts of money at the wedding reception), and jump cuts (Karen at the beauty parlor and at Janet Rossi’s apartment).

In The Color of Money, Schoonmaker uses extreme close-ups of cue chalk, billiard balls, cigarettes, and money as a visual leitmotif to stress the theme of the film. She balances long takes with montage sequences; Vincent’s “Werewolves of London” pool cue performance juxtaposed to the increased speed, overhead jump cuts, and extreme close-ups for a series of pool games. She plays much cutting on moving camera against a precise visual symmetry (the left/right balance of Vincent and Eddie’s grudge match). In Vincent’s game with Grady, Schoonmaker employs dissolves and superimpositions to convey the various deceits and facades of the two players.

Schoonmaker also develops the dissolve until it becomes another of her signature devices. She uses the dissolve extensively in The Age of Innocence and Casino. Whereas her earlier films used the dissolve traditionally (to indicate simultaneity or a passage of time), her later films use it to disorient. In The Age of Innocence, the opera sequence which opens the film immediately undercut the period setting. Dissolves link shots which traditionally would be joined in one long take or through match action. Combining this unsettling technique with jump cuts (during the pan of the theatre) and abandoned eye-line matches (an audience member looks up across the theatre, yet the next shot is down to a performer on the stage) provides a commentary on the hidden meanings of exterior actions. Schoonmaker takes advantage of the period setting to employ irises. A silent film device before editing used close-ups, an iris focused the viewer’s attention on a specific part of the screen. Here Schoonmaker uses translucent irises as another visual metaphor for disguised appearances.

In Casino, Schoonmaker uses both devices but for different reasons. The dissolves work as point of view commentary (especially since the film is narrated in voice over). For example, as Sam explains how he eliminated professional cheaters from the Tropicana we see him determine how two men have won $140,000 in blackjack. Schoonmaker presents this to us through dissolves that link Sam to the two tables involved in the scam. When Nicky and Jennifer first meet Ginger, we see her through Nicky’s eyes in a three shot dissolve which augments her approach. In Casino, the iris functions to suggest blindness. Sam is so obsessed with Ginger he cannot see the destruction their relationship will cause; an iris leads us to his head and then an extreme close-up of a flash bulb exploding. Both films also make extensive use of intrasequence cutting, temporal ellipses, cutting on moving camera, and montage.

These techniques also work well in the context of a suspense film. In Cape Fear, Schoonmaker melded her editing techniques with the action cutting demanded of a genre film. The result was a film that frightened, and exhibited an innovative twist on an old format. She used negative imagery to comment on the lack of clear difference between guilt and innocence. Her jump cutting and temporal ellipses added a new edge of terror and excitement to the final houseboat sequence (involving miniatures and special effects) as well as Sam Bowden’s first sighting of Max Cady in town (three jump cuts from long shot to medium shot to close up on passing cars). Cady’s seduction of Danielle on the school stage expertly demonstrates intrasequence cutting. Scorsese shot the improvised scene in one continuous, nine minute take with two cameras. Schoonmaker seamlessly melded the two takes so it looks like a typical shot/reverse shot sequence even though she is linking long takes.

The approaches mentioned above outline the unique style of Schoonmaker’s editing technique. Perhaps more than any other contemporary Hollywood editor, her distinct editorial signature positions her as an auteur. Working almost exclusively with Scorsese certainly supports this claim and demonstrates not only that editing must be viewed as an art but that film can function as a collaborative act of creativity.

And indeed, as each new Scorsese project is initiated, you can be sure that he again will be working with Schoonmaker. Such was the case with Kundun, the undertaking of which was a special challenge for the editor. Schoonmaker has described the film as “a visual poem” and, indeed, Kundun is a banquet of resplendent images; it also is unlike Scorsese’s other works in that it features non-professional actors and less of a concern with character and dialogue. The film consists of episodes in the life of its subject, the Dalai Lama, which are dazzlingly photographed (by Roger Deakins) and fluidly superlatively edited.

Schoonmaker’s affiliation with Scorsese even extends beyond the films he directs. One of her rare non-Scorsese projects was Allison Anders’s Grace of My Heart; however, Scorsese was the film’s executive producer.

—Greg S. Faller, updated by Rob Edelman

SCHÜFFTAN, Eugen

Cinematographer. Nationality: American. Born: in Breslau (now Wroclaw), Germany; emigrated to the United States, 1940; naturalized, 1947; used the name Eugene Shuftan in the United States. Education: Studied fine arts in Breslau. Career: Painter, sculptor, designer, and architect; worked in German films in the 1920s as a photographic effects specialist: invented the Schüfftan process (using miniature backgrounds with action foregrounds); cinematographer from 1929; 1933—40—worked in France after the rise of the Nazis; worked in the United States after 1940, and internationally in the 1950s and 1960s. Awards: Academy Award for The Hustler, 1961; Billy Bitzer Award, 1975. Died: 6 September 1977.

Films as Special Effects Photographer:

1924 Die Nibelungen (Lang—2 parts)
1925 Ein Walzertraum (Berger); Variété (Variety) (Dupont); Eifersucht (Grune)
1926 Dagfin (May)
1927 Metropolis (Lang); Königin Luise (Queen Louise) (Grune)
1929 Narkose (Abel)

Films as Cinematographer:

1929 Menschen am Sonntag (People on Sunday) (Siodmak and Ulmer)
1930 Abscheid (Siodmak); Das gestohlene Gesicht (Schmidt and Mayring); Dann Schon lieber Lebertran (Ophüls)
1931 Gassenbauer (Pick); Meine Frau, die Hochstaplerin (Gerron); Das Ekel (co, + co-d)
1932 L’Atlantide (Pabst) (co); Zigeuner der nacht (Schwarz)
1933 Der Läufer von Marathon (The Marathon Runner) (Dupont); Du haut en bas (High and Low) (Pabst); Les Requins du pétrole (Decoin); La Voix sans visage (Mittler); Unsichtbare Gegner (Katscher)

1934 Ademai aviatore (Tarride); La Crise est finie (The Slump Is Over) (Siodmak); Le Scandale (L’Herbier)
1935 La Tendre Ennemi (The Tender Enemy) (Ophüls); The Invader (Brunel)
1936 Mademoiselle Docteur (Pabst); La Symphonie des brigands (Féher)
1937 Forfaiture (L’Herbier); Yoshiwara (Ophüls); Drôle de drame (Bizarre Bizarre) (Carné)
1938 Mollenard (Hatred) (Siodmak); Les Trois Valses (Berger); Le Drame de Shanghai (The Shanghai Drama) (Pabst) (co); Quai des brumes (Port of Shadows) (Carné)
1939 Les Musiciens du ciel (Lacombe)
1940 L’Emigrante (Joannon); Sans lendemain (Ophüls)
1944 Summer Storm (Sirk)
1947 Carnegie Hall (Ulmer)
1950 Les Joyeux Pèlerins (Pasquali); Le Traqué (Gunman in the Streets) (Lewin and Tuttle)
1952 Le Banquet des fraudeurs (Dans Bankett der Schmugger) (Storc); La P... respectueuse (The Respectable Prostitute) (Paglierio and Brabant); Le Chemin de Damas (Glass); Nina de Vanghel (Clavel and Barry)
1953 Le Rideau cramoisi (The Crimson Curtain) (Astruc)
1954 Une parigina a Roma (Begegnung in Rom) (Kobler and Tlonay)
1955 Marianne de ma jeunesse (Duviyer)
1958 La Tête contre les murs (Franju)
1959 The Bloody Brood (Roffman); Les Yeux sans visage (The Horror Chamber of Dr. Faustus) (Franju)
1960 Un Couple (Mocky)
1961 The Hustler (Rossen); Something Wild (Garfein)
1962 Les Vièrges (Mocky)
1963 Captain Sinbad (Haskin) (co)
1964 La Grande Frousse (Mocky); Lilith (Rossen)
1965 Trois chambres à Manhattan (Carné)
1966 Angeklagt nach N.218 (The Doctor Says) (A. Ford)

Other Films:

1943 It Happened Tomorrow (Clair) (technical d)
1946 The Dark Mirror (Siodmak) (technical supervisor)
1955 Ulisse (Ulysses) (Camerini) (special ph)
1967 Chappaqua (Rooks) (consultant)

Publications

On SCHÜFFTAN: articles—

Brandlmeier, A., in Film und Ton (Munich), October 1974.
Gerely, A., in Film und Ton (Munich), December 1977.
Filme (Berlin), May-June 1981.
Prümm, K., in Archives: Institut Jean Vigo (Perpignan), December 1997.

When Eugen Schüfftan was nominated for the 1961 Academy Award for The Hustler, American Cinematographer magazine was unable to provide much background in their customary profile; when Schüfftan’s name was announced as the winner on Oscar night, Howard Keel blithely accepted the award, declaring, “I don’t know where he is.” Clearly, Schüfftan’s work on The Hustler, rather than an obvious accumulation of Hollywood credits or an enormous popularity within the industry, was responsible for the award. His credits, however, are extensive, both as a cameraman and an inventor.

His most acclaimed contribution to cinema technology is his invention of the Schüfftan process. Originally designed for the unrealized German production of Gulliver’s Travels, it was first employed by Fritz Lang on Metropolis and subsequently by many other directors, including Alfred Hitchcock and Fred Zinnemann. This process—one of the many trick photographic effects Schüfftan pioneered at UFA—involved placing a semitransparent mirror at a 45-degree angle in front of the camera lens, reflecting the image of a scale model or actual location onto the visual field. Blending credibly with the live-action being photographed, this process allows architectural figures of all dimensions to be mapped onto the image, thus reducing the enormous costs of monumental set construction or overcoming the difficulties of shooting in certain locations. In Metropolis Lang effectively used this process to depict his futuristic vision; Hitchcock employed it in Blackmail for the climactic chase around the roof of the British Museum.

As a cameraman, Schüfftan is now best known for his work in France, particularly the atmospheric black-and-white images of doom and despair created for Marcel Carné in the 1930s—most notably Quai des brumes—and for Georges Franju in the 1950s—notably Les Yeux sans visage. For Schüfftan, an effective ambience created by lighting is the key to cinematography: he preferred to establish mood by lighting the action rather than the performer.

During the 1940s Schüfftan worked in Hollywood as a “supervisor” (a Guild title) on projects by the European implants Douglas Sirk, Edgar G. Ulmer, Robert Siodmak, and René Clair; disenchanted, he returned to Europe after three years and eight projects. Schüfftan’s return to the United States ten years later was facilitated by Jack Garfein who sought him for his second feature, Something Wild, a New York film about a rape victim who contemplates suicide. (Garfein had difficulty convincing the New York Cinematographers Guild to allow Schüfftan—only an Honorary member—work papers.) Then during production, Garfein fortuitously introduced Schüfftan to Robert Rossen who was seeking a strong black-and-white cinematographer for The Hustler, his gritty tale of a New York pool player. Following the success of that film, Schüfftan remained in New York to shoot Rossen’s final film, Lilith, before returning to Europe. He shot only a few additional projects before retiring, among them the final film for his old collaborator Marcel Carné, Trois chambres à Manhattan.

—Doug Tomlinson

SCHWARTZ, Stephen

Composer and lyricist. Nationality: American. Born: Stephen Michael Schwartz, New York City, 6 March 1948. Education: Studied piano and composition at Julliard School of Music while still in high school; Carnegie Mellon University, B.F.A. in drama, 1968. Career: Worked briefly as a producer for RCA Records, 1968; composer of music and lyrics for theatre, since 1969, and for film, since 1973; wrote title song for the Broadway play Butterflies Are Free, 1969; first major commercial and critical success with Off Broadway musical Godspell, 1972; recorded albums Stephen Michael Schwartz, RCA, 1974, Godspell, Jay 1997, and Reluctant Pilgrim, Midder, 1997; appeared on numerous albums, from 1974. Awards: Academy Awards for Best Music, Original Musical or Comedy Score (with Allen Menken), and Best Music, Song (“Colors of the Wind”; with Menken), Golden Globe Award for Best Original Song-Motion Picture (“Colors of the Wind”; with Menken), and Grammy Award for Best Song Written Specifically for a Motion Picture (“Colors of the Wind”; with Menken), for Pocahontas, 1996; Academy Award for Best Music, Song (“When You Believe”), 1999, and ASCAP Film and Television Music Award for Most Performed Songs from Motion Pictures (“When You Believe”; with Kenneth “Babyface” Edmonds), 2000, for The Prince of Egypt. Agent: Gorfaine & Schwartz Agency, 13245 Riverside, Suite 405, Sherman Oaks, CA 91423, U.S.A.

Films as Composer/Lyricist:

1973
Godspell (Greene)

1981
Pippin (Fosse—for TV)

1982
Working (Marshall—for TV) (with others)

1983
Echoes (Seidelman) (with Gerard Bernard Cohen); The Magic Show (Campbell—for TV)

1995
Pocahontas (Gabriel and Goldberg) (lyrics with Alan Menken)

1996
The Hunchback of Notre Dame (Trousdale and Wise) (lyrics with Alan Menken)

1998
The Prince of Egypt (Chapman, Hickner, and Wells) (songs only)

2000
Geppetto (Moore—for TV)

Other Films:

1975
Sweet Hostage (Philips—for TV) (singer)

Publications

By SCHWARTZ: articles—

On SCHWARTZ: articles—

* * *

The steady demise of the original American Broadway musical, combined with the rather surprising rise in mass popularity of the Broadway-style animated movie musical, revived the careers of a select number of Broadway composers and lyricists in the last decade of the 20th century. One of the most welcome career revivals occasioned by this animation renaissance was that of composer/lyricist Stephen Schwartz. Born in 1948 in New York City, before the age of 25 Schwartz had composed the songs for Godspell and Pippin, two popular stage hits which also became two of the last late Broadway properties to enter the standard musical theater repertory. Schwartz studied piano and composition at the Juilliard School of Music while still in high school, and graduated from Carnegie Mellon University in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, with a B.F.A. in Drama. While still in college the multi-talented Schwartz did summer stock, playing the multiple roles of director, musical director, and choreographer. Upon graduation he worked as a producer for RCA Victor Records, and shortly thereafter commenced a career in Broadway theater.

Schwartz’s first Broadway credit was the title song for the 1969 comedy, Butterflies Are Free, but his greatest success came in 1971, when he composed the songs for the Off-Broadway rock musical Godspell, a modern version of the story of Christ as enacted by 1960s-style hippies. The score included a popular hit, “Day by Day,” and that same year Schwartz was selected to contribute the English lyrics to Leonard Bernstein’s controversial concert work, “Mass,” which opened at the Kennedy Center in Washington. In 1973 Godspell was filmed on location in New York City, but failed to gain the acclaim or commercial success it had earned on stage.

In 1972 Schwartz had his second major success (and his first on Broadway) with the big musical, Pippin, a contemporary and fanciful retelling of the story of the son of Charlemagne, and directed by Bob Fosse. After these two theatrical successes the young composer’s career flagged, a falling off at least partially due to the confused state of live Broadway theater from the 1970s on. Schwartz composed several scores for a review showcasing magician Doug Henning, The Magic Show, in 1974, and the score for a 1976 musical entitled The Baker’s Wife. Though the latter closed before reaching Broadway, its original cast album achieved cult status and led to several revivals, including one by Trevor Nunn in London in 1988. In 1986 Schwartz provided the lyrics for composer Charles Strouse’s music for Rags which, after an unsuccessful Broadway run, went on to a number of well-received revival productions. On his long creative gap between the Pippin in 1972 and Rags in 1986, Schwartz commented in an ASCAP interview: “Basically I just burned out and stopped working. I hid out—I don’t know any other way to put it.”

Schwartz’s last Broadway project of the 1970s was his unusual 1978 musical adaptation of Studs Terkel’s book, Working. He both adapted and directed, but contributed only four songs to a pastiche score featuring numbers by a variety of contemporary pop and theater songwriters (including James Taylor and Dorothy Rodgers). Working was filmed for public television’s “American Playhouse” series in 1982, and a revised version (featuring new material) eventually opened at the Signature Theater in Washington, D.C. Pippin was also filmed for television in 1981, directed by Fosse and starring William Katt, Martha Ray, and Chita Rivera. The Magic Show was filmed for TV in 1983, with Henning and Didi Conn.

Rags was Schwartz’s last contribution to the increasingly risky and British (i.e., Andrew Lloyd Webber) dominated Broadway scene. With the death of lyricist Howard Ashman, Schwartz joined forces with Alan Menken and the Walt Disney Studio. The team of Menken and Ashman had of course created the popular Off-Broadway success, The Little Shop of Horrors, and went on to much greater fame (and fortune) with their work for the Disney animated musicals, The Little Mermaid and Beauty and the Beast. When Ashman died of AIDS in 1991, Schwartz collaborated on songs for the 1994 Disney film Life with Mikey with Alan Menken (though he was not credited).

The films that placed Schwartz squarely back in the public eye, if only for his lyrics, were Pocahontas in 1995 and The Hunchback of Notre Dame in 1996. Both scores were nominated for Academy Awards, and Schwartz shared an Oscar with composer Menken for Best Song for “Colors of the Wind” from Pocahontas. Following these two career-reviving scores Schwartz was assigned to write both the music and lyrics for the big DreamWorks-SKG animated musical spectacle Prince of Egypt in 1998. His song, “When You Believe,” earned another Oscar in 1999, and Schwartz also shared a nomination for Best Music, Original Musical or Comedy with orchestral score composer, Hans Zimmer. Schwartz returned to Disney in 2000 to compose the songs for a live action television version of Disney’s classic Pinocchio, now entitled Geppetto. The revival of Schwartz’s career also resulted in his first solo album, Reluctant Pilgrim, and in his joining forces with Disney and ASCAP to oversee their Musical Theater Workshop.

When Broadway music, like all American popular music, changed radically with the extreme cultural and social shifts of the 1960s, Schwartz was one of the few theater composers willing and able to change with it, and to make the transition with any degree of artistic and commercial success. Schwartz’s transition from Broadway to animated movie musicals is certainly a welcome one. Songs like “Day by Day” (from Godspell) and “Corner of the World” (from Pippin) are among the best the late-period American musical theater has to offer, and this tradition of quality has now extended into 2000 with his Schwartz’s score for Geppetto. Schwartz’s songs have always been noted for their witty, well-crafted lyrics, and for their alternatingly exhilarating and moving music. Schwartz’s score for Geppetto ranges from droll operatic parodies and operetta-like ensembles to a lyrical and potentially commercial ballad, “Since I Gave My Heart Away,” this latter one of the songwriter’s best tunes since “Corner of the World.”

—Ross Care

ŚCIBOR-RYLSKI, Aleksander

Writer and Director. Nationality: Polish. Born: Grudziadz, 16 March 1928. Education: Attended the University of Warsaw, graduated 1950. Career: Writer; 1951—first film script, for Sailors; 1963—directed first film, Everyday; 1972–78—director of the film group Pryzmat; 1977—author of TV series Lalka. Died: In Warsaw, 3 April 1983.

Films as Writer:

1951 Matrosowcy (Sailors) (Banach—short)
1952 Wesola II (Wesiewicz—short)
1956 Cierń (The Shadow) (Kawalerowicz)
1958 Pigulki dla Aurelii (Pills for Aurelia) (Lenartowicz); Ostatni strzal (The Last Shot) (Rybkowski)
1959 Ocalenie (Kluba—short)
1960 Rok pierwszy (The First Years) (Lesiewicz); Dotknęcie nocy (The Touch of Night) (Bareja)
1961 Komedianty (The Comedians) (Kaniewska) was as a scriptwriter, to which he devoted himself from 1951 until his death. Like Jerzy Stefan Stawinsky and Tadeusz Konwicki, he was especially sensitive towards social and moral conflicts stemming from the Second World War, and from the difficulties in the founding and stabilizing of the people’s government of Poland. Pills for Aurelia, directed by Stanislaw Lenartowicz, captured the experiences of its characters during the occupation with unusual violence and cruelty. Witold Lesiewicz’s The First Years portrays postwar difficulties, showing with what drastic force political opinions can divide honest people.

His work in film, however, is highly diverse. He did not specialize in any theme or genre, and worked with a relatively wide circle of directors. Among his most important works are his scripts for Andrzej Wajda’s films, the historical epic Ashes and the drama Man of Marble; the script for Jerzy Kawalerowicz’s film The Shadow—three stories from the period of the occupation about a faceless man who is provocateur, traitor, and saboteur; the script for Andrzej Trzósł-Rastawiecki’s Leprosy about gangs and hooliganism; and the script for Jan Rybkowski’s The Nest, a historical drama about the origins of the Polish state. His scripts are noted for their courageous view of events, dynamism, convincing characterizations, and logical structure.

After the “revolt of the scriptwriters” in the early 1960s, which he led together with Stawinsky, he, too, began to direct films. Except for the chamber stories Everyday and Late Afternoon, noted for the “little realism” with which he told ordinary stories of ordinary people, and his attempt at a Polish western, Wolf Echoes, about the struggle of a soldier with a postwar terrorist gang, his stints as a director have not been highly regarded. His main contribution to Polish cinema remains his scriptwriting.

—B. Urgošková

SEALE, John

Films as Cinematographer:

1976  Deathcheaters (Smith)
1980  Fatty Finn (Murphy)
1981  The Survivor (Hemmings); Doctors & Nurses (Murphy)
1982  Fighting Back (Caulfield); Ginger Meggs (Dawson)
1983  Goodbye Paradise (Schultz); Careful, He Might Hear You (Schultz); BMX Bandits (Trenchard-Smith)
1984  Silver City (Haskin)
1985  Top Kid (Schultz); Witness (Weir); The Empty Beach (Thomson)
1986  The Mosquito Coast (Weir); The Hitcher (Harmon); Children of a Lesser God (Haines)
1987  Stakeout (Badham)
1988  Rain Man (Levinson); Gorillas in the Mist (Apted)
1989  Dead Poets Society (Weir)
1990  The Doctor (Haines)
1991  Lorenzo’s Oil (Miller)
1992  The Firm (Pollack)
1993  The Paper (Howard)
1995  Beyond Rangoon (Boorman) (also camera operator); The American President (Reiner)
1996  The English Patient (Minghella); Ghosts of Mississippi (Ghosts From the Past) (Reiner)
1998  City of Angels (Silberling)
1999  At First Sight (Winkler); The Talented Mr. Ripley (Minghella)
2000  The Perfect Storm (Petersen)
2001  Cold Mountain

Other Films:

1973  Alvin Purple (Burstall) (camera operator)
1975  Picnic at Hanging Rock (Weir) (camera operator)
1976  Mad Dog Morgan (Mora) (camera operator); Caddie (Crombie) (camera operator)
1977  The Last Wave (Weir) (camera operator); Break of Day (Weir) (camera operator)
1978  The Irishman (Crombie) (camera operator); Weekend of Shadows (Jeffrey) (camera operator)
1979  Born to Run (Chaffey—for TV) (camera operator)
1981  Gallipoli (Weir) (camera operator)
1982  The Year of Living Dangerously (Weir) (photographer: second unit)
1990  Till There Was You (director)
1992  Visions of Light (Visions of Light: The Art of Cinematography) (Glassman, McCarthy, Samuels)
1997  Underworld (Christian) (first assistant camera: “c” camera)

On SEALE: articles—

* * *

Straight-talking Australian cinematographer John Seale has worked on many of the most influential Hollywood movies of the 1980s and 1990s, and is noted for his collaborations with director Peter Weir, whom he met while working with cinematographer Russell Boyd on Picnic at Hanging Rock. The greatest moment of his career so far came in 1997 when he won the Best Cinematography Oscar for The English Patient, but he has received awards and nominations for his work from film institutions around the world, including Oscar nominations for Rain Man and Witness. Seale is praised in particular for his realistic use of light, and his most impressive work tends to be in the photographing of large-scale landscapes and brightly lit outdoor locations.

After learning his craft as a camera operator during the 1970s Seale began working as a cinematographer in a cinematic tradition that seemed intent on exploring Australia’s landscape and past. Goodbye Paradise, Carl Schultz’s clever parody of the private eye movie genre, which comments on the migratory habits of Australia’s senior citizens, is also notable for its images of Queensland, while Careful, He Might Hear You sets the individual’s struggle for self-definition against an Australian past of struggle and adversity. In both these very different films, the landscape encroaches on the narrative, and it is perhaps because of these early projects that Seale’s best work, such as The English Patient, and Gorillas in the Mist, tends to be on films that explore the relationship between people and their surroundings.

Seale moved to Hollywood with Weir to make the thriller Witness, and has been a regular collaborator with the director on films as diverse as The Mosquito Coast and Dead Poets Society. Although Seale remains committed to the development of Australian cinema, his output since the late 1980s has largely originated, even if it has not always been filmed, in America. Dead Poets Society in particular is vividly American in its attachment to Romantic individualism, and its fascination with the verdant grounds of the New England school in which the film is set. Other films, like Rain Man, and The Firm (both Tom Cruise vehicles) are resolutely Hollywood in their look and story lines.

Like many Australian filmmakers who work outside the Australian film industry, Seale seems happy to travel widely to film on location, and work in other countries. Many of his most successful films have been filmed in remote locations, such as the rain forests of South America (The Mosquito Coast), Burma (Beyond Rangoon), or Africa (Gorillas in the Mist). Capturing landscapes successfully on film is among the most difficult tasks for the cinematographer, yet Seale manages to convey the vastness of these settings without overwhelming the smaller scale human action on which the film narratives depend. His most recent successful collaborations with British filmmaker Anthony Minghella, The English Patient and The Talented Mr Ripley, both exploit Seale’s talent for filming real places in a convincing and realistic way. In the case of The Talented Mr
Ripley, Seale preferred to film the tale of Tom Ripley’s dark subconscious in glorious sunshine, the beauty of Italy contrasting jaggedly with the horror of the human story played out there.

Seale has so far made only one foray into directing, making his own first feature as director, Till There Was You in Australia. The film fits in with the themes of movies he has worked on as cinematographer; namely, the urge to define personal identity in a landscape and tradition that seems overwhelming and mysterious. Although he has travelled widely, Seale prefers to be at home, recently exploiting film’s increasing digitization to do the post-production work on The Perfect Storm by satellite from his home in Sydney.

—Chris Routledge

SEITZ, John F.

Died: In Woodland Hills, California, 27 February 1979.

Films as Cinematographer:

1913 Ranger of Lonesome Gulf; The Quagmire
1915 Edged Tools
1917 Souls in Pawn (H. King); Whose Wife? (Sturgeon)
1918 Beauty and the Rogue (H. King); Powers That Prey (H. King)
1919 The Westerners (Sloman)
1920 The Sagebrusher (Sloman); Hearts Are Trumps (Ingram); Shore Acres (Ingram)
1921 The Conquering Power (Ingram); The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse (Ingram); Uncharted Seas (Ruggles)
1922 The Prisoner of Zenda (Ingram); Trifling Women (Ingram); Turn to the Right (Ingram)
1923 Scaramouche (Ingram); Where the Pavement Ends (Ingram)
1924 The Price of a Party (Giblyn); The Arab (Ingram); Classmates (Robertson) (co)
1926 The Magician (Ingram); Mare Nostrum (Ingram)
1927 The Fair Co-ed (Wood)
1928 Across to Singapore (Nigh); Adoration (Lloyd); Outcast (Seiter); The Patsy (K. Vidor)
1929 The Divine Lady (Lloyd); Careers (Dillon); Hard to Get (Beaudine); Her Private Life (A. Korda); A Most Immoral Lady (Wray); The Painted Angel (Webb); Saturday’s Children (La Cava); The Squall (A. Korda); The Trail of ’98 (Brown)
1930 Back Pay (Seiter); The Bad Man (Badger); In the Next Room (Clene); Kismet (Dillon); Murder Will Out (Badger); Road to Paradise (Beaudine); Sweethearts and Wives (Badger); Misbehaving Ladies (Beaudine)

1931 East Lynne (Lloyd); Young Sinners (Blystone); Hush Money (Lanfield); Men of the Sky (Green); Merely Mary Ann (H. King); Age for Love (Lloyd) (co); Over the Hill (H. King)
1932 She Wanted a Millionaire (Blystone); Careless Lady (MacKenna); Woman in Room 13 (H. King); Passport to Hell (Lloyd); Six Hours to Live (Dieterle)
1933 Dangerously Yours (Tuttle); Ladies They Talk About (Bretherton and Keighley); Adorable (Keighley); Paddy, the Next Best Thing (Lachman); Mr. Skitch (Cruze)
1934 Coming Out Party (Blystone); All Men Are Enemies (Fitzmaurice); Springtime for Henry (Tuttle); Marie Galante (H. King)
1935 Heldonado (Cruze); One More Spring (H. King); Our Little Girl (Robertson); Curly Top (Cummings); Beauty’s Daughter (Dwan) (co); The Littlest Rebel (Butler)
1936 The Country Doctor (H. King) (co); Captain January (Butler); Poor Little Rich Girl (Cummings); Fifteen Maiden Lane (Dwan)
1937 Between Two Women (G. Seitz); Madame X (Wood); Navy Blue and Gold (Wood)
1938 Love Is a Headache (Thorpe); Lord Jeff (Wood); Young Dr. Kildare (Bucquet); Stablemates (Wood); The Crowd Roars (Thorpe)
1939 Huckleberry Finn (Thorpe); Sergeant Madden (von Stechemberg); Six Thousand Enemies (G. Seitz); Thunder Afloat (G. Seitz); Bad Little Angel (Thiele)
1940 Dr. Kildare’s Strange Case (Bucquet); A Little Bit of Heaven (Marton); Dr. Kildare’s Crisis (Bucquet)
1941 Sullivan’s Travels (P. Sturges)
1942 Fly By Night (Siodmak); This Gun for Hire (Tuttle); The Moon and Sixpence (Lewin); Lucky Jordon (Tuttle)
1943 Five Graves to Cairo (Wildor)
1944 The Miracle of Morgan’s Creek (P. Sturges); Hour Before Dawn (Tuttle); Double Indemnity (Wildor); Hail the Conquering Hero (P. Sturges); Casanova Brown (Wood)
1945 The Unseen (Allen); The Last Weekend (Wildor)
1946 The Well Groomed Bride (Lanfield); Home Sweet Homicide (Bacon); Wild Harvest (Garnett)
1947 The Imperfect Lady (Allen); Calcutta (Farrow)
1948 Saigon (Fenton); The Big Clock (Farrow); A Miracle Can Happen (On Our Merry Way) (Fenton and K. Vidor) (co); Beyond Glory (Farrow); The Night Has a Thousand Eyes (Farrow)
1949 The Great Gatsby (Nugent); Chicago Deadline (Allen)
1950 Captain Carey, U.S.A. (Leisen); Sunset Boulevard (Wildor); The Goldbergs (Hart)
1951 Dear Brat (Seiter); Appointment with Danger (Allen); When Worlds Collide (Maté) (co)
1952 The San Francisco Story (Parrish); The Savage (Marshall); The Iron Mistress (Douglas)
1953 Desert Legion (Peveney); Invaders from Mars (Menzies); Botany Bay (Farrow)
1954 Saskatchewan (Walsh); Rocket Man (Rudolph); Rogue Cop (Rowland)
1955 Many Rivers to Cross (Rowland); The McConnell Story (Tiger in the Sky) (Douglas); Hell on Frisco Bay (Tuttle)
1956 Santiago (Douglas); A Cry in the Night (Tuttle)
1957 The Big Land (Douglas)
1958 The Deep Six (Maté); The Badlanders (Daves)
1959  Island of Lost Women (Tuttle); The Man in the Net (Curtiz)
1960  Guns of the Timberland (Webb)

Publications

On SEITZ: articles—

Film Comment (New York), Summer 1972.

* * *

The development of the photographic artistry of John F. Seitz is virtually synonymous with the evolution of cinematography itself into the sophisticated form of expression it is today. At the time of his death in 1979, he held as many as 18 patents for different photographic processes and the technology to implement them. Although he was best known for the invention of the matte shot and the use of intense low-key lighting, he was instrumental in creating a distinctive visual style for a variety of landmark films spanning both the silent and sound eras.

His career began in 1909 with the St. Louis Motion Picture Company but, in 1916, he moved to Hollywood to join Metro Pictures. There, he collaborated with the director Rex Ingram in filming such classics as The Conquering Power, The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse, The Prisoner of Zenda, Where the Pavement Ends, and Mare Nostrum.

It was during his collaboration with Ingram that Seitz invented the matte process. In this procedure, a mask was employed to expose just one area of the film frame in a particular pattern. When the film was subsequently rewound and used to photograph live action, a unique artistic effect was achieved. Although employed at first for relatively simple maneuvers such as shots through keyholes and binocular views, the process quickly developed the ability to produce spectacular effects by combining live action with photographic images, backgrounds, and physical objects.

He is probably best known for his work during the 1940s when he collaborated principally as a lighting cameraman with such directors as Billy Wilder and Preston Sturges. His most famous works include Sullivan’s Travels, The Miracle of Morgan’s Creek, and Hail the Conquering Hero for Sturges as well as Double Indemnity and Sunset Boulevard for Billy Wilder.

—Stephen L. Hanson

SELG, William N.

Producer. Nationality: American. Born: William Nicholas Selig in Chicago, Illinois, 14 March 1864. Career: Magician, then ran a minstrel show; 1896—after duplicating the Lumière Cinematographe in workshop, developed the Selig Standard Camera and the Selig Polyscope (a projector); opened loft in Chicago, and began producing films as Selig Polyscope Company; 1909—produced Hunting Big Game in Africa (based on Theodore Roosevelt’s lion-hunting trip to Africa), and made other "jungle" films; set up studio in Hollywood (the first producer to do so); also had studio in New Orleans; produced the news series * Hearst-Selig News Pictorial*, then the Selig Tribune; produced the first serial in the United States; introduced Tom Mix; 1918—the Polyscope Company closed; 1922—retired. Award: Special Academy Award, 1947. Died: Hollywood, 16 July 1948.

Films as Producer (selected list):

1896  The Trump and the Dog
1905  Trapped By Bloodhounds, or The Lynching at Cripple Creek; The Tomboys
1906  The Tramp and the Dog; The Female Highwayman; Who’s Who; Lights of a Great City
1907  Western Justice (Anderson); Dolly’s Papa
1908  The Count of Monte Cristo (Boggs); Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde
1909  Hunting Big Game in Africa (Boggs); In the Sultan’s Power (Boggs); On the Little Big Horn, or Custer’s Last Stand (Boggs); Up San Juan Hill (Boggs); On the Border (Boggs)
1910  The Merry Wives of Windsor (Boggs?); Davy Crockett (Boggs); Wizard of Oz (Turner)
1911  Zulu-Land; The Two Orphans (Turner); Cinderella (Campbell); Lost in the Jungle (Boggs)
1912  The Coming of Columbus (Campbell); Kings of the Forest (Campbell); Sergeant Byrne of the N.W.M.P. (Campbell)
1913  The Three Wise Men; Roses of Yesterday (Kirkland); Alone in the Jungle (Campbell); Seligettes (series of animated designs); Seeds of Silver (Huntley)
1914  The Adventures of Kathlyn (Grandon—serial); The Spoilers (Campbell); The Royal Box (Eagle); Rosemary, That’s for Remembrance (Grandon); Abyss (Santschi); Dawn (Le Saint); The Fifth Man (Grandon)
1915  Pals in Blue (Mix); The House of a Thousand Candles (Heffron)
1916  The Ne’er-Do-Well (Campbell); The Black Orchid (Heffron); The Garden of Allah (Campbell)
1917  A Brother’s Sacrifice (Grandon); Brass Monkey (Richmond)
1918  A Hoosier Romance (Campbell)
1921  The Hunger of the Blood (Watt); The Last Chance (Cullison); The Mask (Bracken); Kazan (Bracken); The Fighting Stranger (Cullison)
1922  The Rosary (Storm) (co)

Publications

By SELIG: article—

* * *

William N. Selig was an important film producer in the early days of the motion picture industry. A Chicago-born magician, he began his film career in 1895 after he saw a Dallas vaudeville hall demonstration of Thomas Edison’s Kinetoscope while he was running a travelling minstrel show. Returning to Chicago, he had a projector devised by dissembling and duplicating the Lumière Cinematographe. Working with a machinist, he patented the Selig Standard Camera and the Selig Polyscope, and incorporated his equipment business, a motion-picture studio and a film processing plant as the Selig Polyscope Company in 1896.

Within a few years, Selig’s Chicago-based company became the largest filmmaking plant in the United States. At his studio on the city’s outskirts, he produced westerns, adventure films, and melodramas utilizing both indoor and outdoor filmmaking. Among the people he trained was G. M. (‘‘Broncho Billy’’) Anderson, who worked as an actor and director for Selig from 1905 to 1907 and then formed a rival company (Essanay) with Chicago businessman George Spoor.

Selig was among the first movie producers who considered Los Angeles as a versatile moviemaking location. After sending crews there for two years, he opened a permanent Los Angeles studio in 1909. The studio became particularly important for his business when, in 1909, President Theodore Roosevelt would not allow a Selig cameraman to accompany his big game expedition to Africa. So Selig bought an aging lion from a Los Angeles zoo and staged his own tropical jungle hunt with a lead character named ‘‘Teddy.’’ When the newspaper wire services announced that Roosevelt had ‘‘bagged’’ a lion, Selig released his fictional film entitled Hunting Big Game in Africa and scored a smash hit. The film was so successful that Selig bought an entire zoo for his Los Angeles studio and began making jungle adventure films.

Selig’s company often capitalized on topical newspaper headlines, deliberately blurring the distinction between documentary and fiction. Like the Edison Company, Selig sent camera crews all over the country to shoot newsworthy events and to film background locations for fiction films. He maintained full travelling companies in both Florida and Colorado, where he shot the first movie serials. The Adventures of Kathlyn (1914) featured the now familiar clichés of perilous, ‘‘cliffhanger’’ adventures befalling a spunky but sweet heroine. Colorado’s treacherous rivers and sheer mountainous drops provided both a breathtaking and realistic background for the series. The series itself, however, ended when the leading actress—executing her own stunts—drowned during the shooting of a river rapids scene.

Selig also played an important role in the industry-wide consolidation that occurred with the Motion Picture Patents Company in 1909. The 1907 outcome of an Edison Company patents infringement case against American Biograph and Mutoscope validated Edison’s claim for patents ownership but did not apply the claim to Biograph’s film or equipment. Stymied in its efforts to control the film industry, Edison Company instead filed suit against Selig Polyscope as an alternate means to begin an industry-wide takeover. Even before Edison vs. Selig was resolved in a Chicago Circuit Court in 1908, Selig and many Chicago film exchanges (or distributors) joined with Edison in a licensing and distribution agreement that gave Edison a lion’s share of the profits while the Chicago companies retained regulatory control. The power of this association and Selig’s allegiance were important weapons when Edison subsequently fought George Kleine and Biograph for control of the entire industry, a battle which resulted in the monopolistic Motion Picture Patents Company (1909).

Following the outcome of a 1915 antitrust suit, the Motion Picture Patents Company dissolved, and the fortunes of Selig’s company declined. By 1918, he had been forced to close both the Chicago and Los Angeles studios, and in 1922 he retired.

—Lauren Rabinovitz

SELZNICK, David O.

Films as Producer:

1923 Will He Conquer Dempsey? (short); Rudolph Valentino and His 88 American Beauties (short)

1924 Roulette (Taylor)

David O. Selznick
1927  Spoilers of the West (Van Dyke)
1928  Forgotten Faces (Schoedsack); Wyoming (Van Dyke)
1929  The Four Feathers (Cooper, Schoedsack, and Mendes); Chinatowns Nights (Wellman); The Man I Love (Wellman); The Dance of Life (Cromwell and Sutherland); Fast Company (Sutherland)
1930  Street of Chance (Cromwell); Sarah and Son (Arzner)
1932  A Bill of Divorcement (Cukor); Symphony of Six Million (La Cava); What Price Hollywood? (Cukor); State’s Attorney (Archibald); Bird of Paradise (K. Vidor); Westward Passage (Milton); The Lost Squadron (Archibald); Roar of the Dragon (Ruggles); The Animal Kingdom (The Woman in His House) (Griffith); The Conqueror (Pioneer Builders) (Wellman); The Age of Consent (La Cava); Rockabye (Cukor); The Half-Naked Truth (La Cava)
1933  King Kong (Cooper and Schoedsack); Our Betters (Cukor); Topaz (D’Arrast); The Great Jasper (Ruben); Dinner at Eight (Cukor); Christopher Strong (Arzner); Dancing Lady (Leonard); Night Flight (Brown); Sweepings (Cromwell); The Monkey’s Paw (Ruggles); Meet the Baron (W. Lang); Little Women (Cukor)
1934  Viva Villa! (Conway); Manhattan Melodrama (Van Dyke)
1935  David Copperfield (Cukor); Restless (Fleming); Vanessa—Her Love Story (Howard); Anna Karenina (Brown); A Tale of Two Cities (Conway)
1936  Little Lord Fauntleroy (Cromwell); The Garden of Allah (Boleslawsky)
1937  A Star Is Born (Wellman); Nothing Sacred (Wellman); The Prisoner of Zenda (Cromwell)
1938  The Adventures of Tom Sawyer (Taurog); The Young in Heart (Wallace)
1939  Made for Each Other (Cromwell); Intermezzo (Ratoff); Gone with the Wind (Fleming)
1940  Rebecca (Hitchcock)
1944  Since You Went Away (Cromwell) (+ sc); Reward Unlimited (short)
1945  Spellbound (Hitchcock)
1946  Duel in the Sun (K. Vidor) (+ sc)
1948  The Paradine Case (Hitchcock) (+ sc); Portrait of Jennie (Dieterle)
1949  The Third Man (Reed) (co)
1950  Gone to Earth (Hitchcock) (De Sica)
1953  Stazione Termini (Indiscretion of an American Wife) (De Sica)
1957  A Farewell to Arms (C. Vidor)

On SELZNICK: books—

On SELZNICK: articles—

Journal of Screen Producers Guild (Beverly Hills, California), December 1972.
Journal of Film and Video (Boston, Massachusetts), vol. 41, no. 1, Spring 1989.
Light, Alison, “Rebecca,” in Sight & Sound (London), May 1996.

* * *

David O. Selznick will always be remembered as the producer who created the most popular feature film made during the Golden Age of Hollywood, Gone with the Wind. As such Selznick has long signified in the mind of the filmgoing public the typical movie producer of Hollywood’s greatest era. Yet Selznick was not representative at all. He worked on his own, avowedly seeking to throw off the restrictions and confines of laboring for a studio. He labored long and hard to be his own boss, and because of his success “working outside the studio system” he should be remembered as one of the Hollywood’s greatest independent filmmakers. This made him a pioneer, one who showed the way to the Hollywood of the latter half of the twentieth century when independents became the norm. Gone with the Wind... with The Wind was an exception to Hollywood practice of the 1930s, not a classic example of the studio rule.

In short David O. Selznick was always struggling to be independent and thus never came to any position of power with any degree of ease. The lone exception was his first job. This came easy for him because his father, Lewis J. Selznick, was a film industry pioneer and the head of his own production company in the late 1910s when son David began to desire to enter filmmaking himself. His father’s New York City-based Selznick Pictures eventually went bankrupt, but not before his son had been tutored in all phases of industry practice. As an apprentice, David edited the company magazine, and then moved up to head of newsreel and short subjects production.

In the early 1920s David O. Selznick moved to Hollywood and through his father’s connections took a job as an assistant producer at MGM. From 1928 to 1936 he moved to other studios and tried various jobs, all with little success. He simply chaffed at laboring in a studio. Yet his experience from 1928 to 1936 would prove invaluable as he learned the craft of producing feature films at three different studios. At Paramount, from 1928 to 1931, he supervised a number of significant films including The Four Feathers and The Man I Love. He then moved to RKO where from 1931 to 1933 he could not have picked a worse time to try his hand at the weakest of the major studios. Yet Selznick’s experience at RKO enabled him to first gain a reputation as a producer who could produce first-rate features under severe and often straining conditions. At RKO Selznick finally moved out of the shadow of this father with films that included What Price Hollywood?, directed by George Cukor and starring Constance Bennett, A Bill of Divorcement, also directed by Cukor and starring John Barrymore and Katherine Hepburn, and one of the features most associated with RKO of the 1930s, King Kong. But Selznick knew he was headed nowhere at RKO and so moved on to the studio headed by his then father-in-law, Louis B. Mayer. At MGM Selznick helped create Dinner at Eight, directed again by Cukor and starring Jean Harlow and Marie Dressler, David Copperfield, starring W.C. Fields, and A Tale of Two Cities with Ronald Colman. No one was surprised that Selznick did not last long under the glaring eye of the domineering Mayer. In 1936 Selznick left the plush confines of MGM to form his own company to distribute films through United Artists. Contrary to the myth, the hits did not come instantly. But with the blockbuster Gone with the Wind Selznick was set for life.

Or was he? Sadly Selznick spent the rest of his career searching for a follow up to Gone with the Wind. Only Duel in the Sun, starring Jennifer Jones and directed by King Vidor, ever matched its box-office clout. Money became harder and harder to find and so gradually Selznick productions emerged at a slower and slower rate. During the 1950s he fashioned but two features, ending a career that seemed so promising but a decade earlier. At the end of his life he was a celebrated “has-been,” living off the wealth of his wife, actress Jennifer Jones. It was a tragic close to a career which peaked at age 37 and the single most famous Hollywood film of its day.

—Douglas Gomery

SEMPRUN, Jorge

Films as Screenwriter:

1966 Objectif 500 millions (Schoendoerffer) (co-sc); La Guerre est finie (The War Is Over) (Resnais) (+ ro as Narrator)
1969 Z (Costa-Gavras)
1970 L’Aveu (The Confession) (Costa-Gavras)
1972 L’Attentat (The French Conspiracy) (Boisset) (co-sc)
1973 Les Deux memoires (The Two Memories) (+ d)
1974 Stavisky... (Resnais)
1975 Section speciale (Special Section) (Costa-Gavras) (co-sc)
1976 Une femme a sa fenetre (A Woman at Her Window) (Granier-Deferre) (co-sc, dialogue)
1978 Les Routes du sud (Roads to the South) (Losey)
1986  Les Trottoirs de saturne (Santiago)
1994  L’Affaire Dreyfus (Boisset—for TV) (co-sc)
1997  K (Arcady) (co-sc)

Other Films:

1966  Je t’aime, je t’aime (Resnais) (ro, uncredited)
1991  Netchaiev est de retour (Netchaiev Is Back) (Deray) (based on novel)

Publications

By SEMPRUN: books—

La Deuxieme mort de Ramon Mercader, Paris, 1969.
Montand, la vie continue, Paris, 1983.
Federico Sanchez se despide de ustedes, Barcelona, 1993.

By SEMPRUN: articles—

Interview in Amis du Film et de la Television (Brussels), July/August 1974.
Semprun, Jorge, and P. Kjaeruff-Schmidt, “‘En form for politisk film,” in Chaplin (Stockholm), no. 3, 1976 Interview in Cinema 80 (Paris), July/August 1980.

On SEMPRUN: books—

On SEMPRUN: articles—

* * *

Jorge Semprun’s filmography is sparse. Since earning his first screenwriting credit in 1966, he has worked on barely over a dozen features. Most of his significant celluloid contributions came early in his career, on films directed by Costa-Gavras (Z, L’Aveu, and Section speciale) and Alain Resnais (La Guerre est finie and Stavisky, . . .). His most characteristic films are explorations of time and memory, and evolve directly out of his life experience. They are overtly political in nature, and feature thinly veiled recollections of his early idealism and struggles, with his status as an exile and his political disillusionment often reverberating throughout.

For Semprun, film primarily is a political tool, a medium with which to express his left-of-center concerns. His screenplays often spotlight characters who are leftists, and explore the nature of their political commitment, their personal struggles, and how their views directly impact on their lives. Nonetheless, it must be stressed that Semprun is no dogmatic armchair radical, a theorist who spouts rhetoric while ignoring everyday practicality. Nor will he lambaste the excesses of right wing dictatorships while justifying those of communist governments. In his heart he is a humanist, and he would be quick to acknowledge that oppression exists on all sides of the political spectrum. He would condemn a political leader or regime that trounces on human rights, whether that government was left- or right-leaning.

While still in his teens, Semprun became a member of the Spanish Communist Party and fought against Franco in the Spanish Civil War. Eventually, he wound up in Paris as an exile—and almost a quarter-century later he scripted La Guerre est finie, one of his most personal works. La Guerre est finie is a biting portrait of a character who easily might be Semprun’s alter ego: an aging, weary Spanish communist (played by Yves Montand), long exiled in Paris. He may be fiercely committed to his political beliefs, yet despite his years of resistance his efforts to foster change have been futile. Another Semprun credit, Les Routes du sud, directed by Joseph Losey, is an extension of La Guerre est finie. It also explores Franco-ruled Spain, only here the year is 1975 and the head of state has ruled for decades. Semprun’s hero (also played by Montand) is another veteran political activist who has long-opposed Franco, and long been banished to France; he remains consumed by memory as he mourns lost political struggles—and, in case there be any ambiguity, Semprun even makes the character a screenwriter. His past is endlessly impacting on his present, with his fixation on yesteryear resulting in a strained relationship with his son—and then his wife, and fellow activist, is killed in a car accident while on a mission to Spain. At their core, La Guerre est finie and Les Routes du sud are ruminations on the personal price one pays for political commitment.

Semprun’s scripts are elegantly written, yet terse and to the point. For example, in Les Routes du sud, the writer’s son accuses him of living in “a paradise of memory.” “You know,” he tells his father, “usually paradise is for tomorrow. Yours was yesterday. A paradise of memory. The day Franco really goes . . . when the real problems begin, you’ll lose interest.” The writer defends himself by retorting, “You must know the past to dominate the future.” His son responds with a telling question: “What do you dominate?” The writer’s failures are further mirrored when the details of his wife’s death are described while a celebration of Franco’s 39th anniversary in power plays on a television set. Later on, a news report informs the world that Franco has passed away. “He died in bed,” the writer notes. “We didn’t overthrow him.”

“In Spain, we have a long history of knowing how to die,” is a line from Stavisky. . . . Set during the early 1930s, Stavisky. . . . is the story of the real-life title character, a penny-ante con man, palm greaser, and informer whose charisma allows him to maneuver his way into the upper echelons of French politics and industry. Yet clearly, it was a morally dissolute character like Stavisky who helped to weaken France during the pre-World War II years; he is contrasted to Leon Trotsky, who at the outset is granted asylum in France and, at the finale, is deported.

Semprun’s scripts, Stavisky. . . included, are filled with exiled characters. In addition to Trotsky, there is a Jewish-German actress who exiled herself to Paris upon Hitler’s coming to power. Then there is the line that, perhaps more than any other, helps to define Semprun: “Exile is never happy!” Another significant Semprun credit is Les Deux memoires, which he directed as well as scripted. Les Deux memoires includes interviews with those who, like Semprun, were exiled from Spain; their recollections are compared to footage of the real events of the Spanish Civil War, and remarks by those on the other side of the political spectrum. Given the period in which Semprun himself went into exile in Paris, it is not surprising that his life there was anything but placid. First he fought in the French Underground, and then was imprisoned for two years in Buchenwald. His script for Section Speciale—the story of a German naval officer who is assassinated by French communists, and the Vichy government’s placating the Nazis by ordering the execution of six essentially harmless French prisoners—is a stinging portrait of the abuse of power and misappropriation of justice in Occupied France.

Semprun’s scripts expose right-wing political corruption, and offer sharp-eyed portraits of blundering fascists/military bureaucrats. His scenario for Z, the film that solidified Costa-Gavras’ international reputation, involves the aftermath of the assassination of a charismatic political leader who clearly is based on Greek humanist-pacifist-leftist Gregorios Lambrakis. Conversely, L’Aveu—which, like Z is a based-on-fact account—explores the excesses of communists in power. It is the story of a loyal Czech communist and government official who finds himself arrested, thrown into solitary confinement, and coerced into admitting imaginary treasonous activity. In Les Routes du sud, Semprun’s screenwriter/alter ego has just penned a script about a communist who is a soldier in the army of the Third Reich. The night before Hitler is set to attack the USSR, the soldier deserts and warns the Russians. Not only does Stalin refuse to believe him, but has him executed as a provocateur. Indeed, Stalin is for Semprun an ever-present villain. In Stavisky. . . , it is casually noted that, according to Trotsky, Stalin betrayed the Revolution—but, sadly, the Party followed Stalin. Semprun emphasizes that it was just such miscalculations that resulted in the failure of communism.

As the decades passed, Semprun became disillusioned by communism—and, in Les Routes du sud, the son might as well be describing Semprun when he characterizes his father as an “ex-resistance fighter . . . ex-fighter for communism . . . 20 years devoted to the cult of Stalin . . . then 20 years wondering ‘why’ . . . .” He continues, “Ex-fighter for the avant-garde novel . . . ex-fighter for the political film . . . And the day death was really there around the corner . . . you let [your wife] take your place.” Here, as is so often the case, Semprun is being pointedly introspective and self-critical.

It is customary for a filmmaker to automatically receive credit for the content of a film; the screenwriter’s contribution often is downplayed, if not altogether ignored. Granted that the sensibilities of those who directed Semprun’s scripts are linked to their content; Costa-Gavras was a Greek expatriate when he made Z, and Losey still was an exile from the Hollywood blacklist when he directed Les Routes du sud. Nonetheless, both these films—and, in fact, all the films on which he worked, no matter the director—bear the unmistakable stamp of Semprun.

—Rob Edelman

SERANDREI, Mario

Editor. Pseudonyms: Mark Sirandrews; Mark Suran. Nationality: Italian. Born: Naples, 23 May 1907. Career: 1942—began editing career with Luchino Visconti’s Ossessione (based on James M. Cain’s The Postman Always Rings Twice); coined the term “neorealism,” first used to describe Ossessione and later Italian films of the 1950s and 1960s. Awards: Received acclaim in special Italian cinema awards for Ossessione, Rocco and his Brothers, and The Battle of Algiers. Died: 17 April 1966.

Films as Editor:

1942 Ossessione (Visconti)
1948 La Terra Trema (The Earth Trembles) (Visconti)
1951 Bellissima (Visconti)
1954 Senso (Wanton Contessa) (Visconti)
1955 Il Bidone (The Swindle) (Fellini)
1957 Le Notti Bianche (White Nights) (Visconti)
1960 La Ragazza con la Valigia (Girl with a Suitcase) (Zurtlini); Rocco e i suoi fratelli (Rocco and His Brothers; Rocco et ses freres) (Visconti)
1961 Estate violenta (Violent Summer) (Boisrond)
1962 Boccaccio ’70 (Visconti, De Sica, and Fellini); Salvatore Giuliano (Visconti)
1963 Il Gattopardo (The Leopard) (Visconti)
1964 La Donna Scimmia (The Ape Woman); Le grande Olimpiade (The Grand Olympics) (doc)
1965 La Battaglia Di Algeri (The Battle of Algiers) (Pontecorvo); Italiano Brava Gente (Attack) (De Santis)
1968 “The Witch Burned Alive” ep. of Le Streghe (The Witches) (Visconti)
Publications

On SERANDREI: articles—

“Neorealism and Style,” in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), May 1972.
“Ossessione and Neorealism,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1985.

* * * *

When we hear the word “neorealism,” we associate it with the movement in Italian cinema when film was evolving into a phase of extreme reality, in which moviemaking was attempting to replicate everyday life. This era began in 1942 with Luchino Visconti’s Ossessione— an Italian masterwork based on James M. Cain’s The Postman Always Rings Twice. This film marked the quintessential debut for budding film editor Mario Serandrei, who incidentally was the one who coined the term “neorealism.”

Throughout the course of cinema history, the film director has been credited with being an “auteur,” but essentially it is the genius of the editor in postproduction who allows the director’s voice to resonate. Along these lines, it can be said that Serandrei, along with the unique formal contributions of Visconti and other directors, is one of the “fathers” of neorealism.

In the same way film theoreticians and critics were able to detect specific stylistic and thematic motifs present in a director’s oeuvre (such as the French writers of Cahiers du Cinéma), the same can be accomplished with the works of the film editor. Perhaps one of the reasons that it was Serandrei who recognized this new phase of neorealism is that he himself had his own vision of film form. Unlike the earlier films of Sergei Eisenstein (Battleship Potemkin and Strike) which practiced the rapid juxtaposition of shots known as montage—Serandrei’s style is quite different; essentially, it can be deduced that Serandrei—quite aware of technique—was taking an anti-montage approach with his editing.

Beginning as early as Ossessione, Serandrei appeared to have a critical eye for depicting reality on the screen. This film—along with Visconti’s Bellissima and Rocco and his Brothers—as well as Federico Fellini’s The Swindle became critical neorealist movies. Serandrei’s meticulous editing took on new conventions as he practiced this anti-montage style. These films—which had a number of long shots and parallel camera movements—were replete with limited cuts; this preserved the continuity of the form and story lines. The benefits of these infrequent cuts allowed the directors’ shots to be studied at greater lengths, and consequently the films could be viewed as true illusions of reality.

Unlike contemporary film editor Thelma Schoonmaker (Martin Scorsese’s editor for such films as Taxi Driver, Raging Bull, and Goodfellas) who argues that continuous editing is overrated, Serandrei is more interested in bringing the concept of “real time” to the silver screen. This concept is supported by film scholar André Bazin who wrote extensively on Visconti, De Sica, and other neorealist directors of the time in Cahiers du Cinéma. Although these writings focused on the directors, the work of Serandrei and his contributions to neorealism certainly cannot be overlooked.

After Ossessione, Serandrei entered the post-World War II years. His first films after the war included La Terra Trema—a less recognized work—along with Visconti’s Bellissima, Senso, and White Nights. In 1960 he edited two rather prominent neorealist films—Visconti’s Rocco and his Brothers and Girl with a Suitcase, directed by Valerio Zurlini; once again, Serandrei’s editing reflected this postwar realism. After the war, cinema took a drastic turn internationally; many movies were commenting on society, pop culture, and politics. Serandrei worked within the norms of technical cinema to show that film was attempting to be more raw and candid in attempting to display real events in a real society.

In 1964, he edited his first documentary, The Grand Olympics. Within the realm of this very different style of filmmaking, Serandrei continued to practice his neorealist techniques to create a sense of reality. Although not considered a major work in the neorealist movement, editing this documentary allowed him to get as close to the truth of reality as possible.

By practically inventing the term “neorealism,” it is apparent that Serandrei was more or less an auteur of sorts; he was able to analyze the different signatures of Visconti, Fellini and even De Sica. In 1962 Serandrei edited Boccaccio ’70—a trilogy of stories directed by these three great directors (perhaps the film was the precursor to the American New York Stories). The three episodes that made up the film were De Sica’s “The Raffle,” Visconti’s “The Job,” and Fellini’s “The Temptation of Dr. Antonio.” Nearing the twilight of his career, this film explores Serandrei’s technical wizardry. As an editor, it was essential for him to depict the neorealist styles of Visconti and De Sica as well as the peculiar and surreal form of Fellini. In this film, it appears that Serandrei combines his editing skills in an advanced manner; he utilizes anti-montage in the Visconti and De Sica films—but is challenged to do quite the opposite with Fellini. The juxtaposition of shots in Fellini’s film are entirely dream-oriented, and thus the style of editing is purposely fragmented and discontinuous: reality versus nonreality.

Serandrei seemed to retire in 1968 after he edited a short Visconti episode in The Witches. He is a man who made his mark in cinema history; he will always be remembered and studied as not only a talented technical artist—but as the man who started the entire Italian Neorealism revolution.

—David Gonthier, Jr.

SHAMROY, Leon

Films as Cinematographer:

1927 Catch As Catch Can (Hutchinson); Land of the Lawless (Buckingham); Hidden Acres (Mitchell); Pirates of the Sky (Andrews); Tongues of Scandal (Clements); The Trunk Mystery (Crank)
1928 Bitter Sweets (Hutchinson); The Last Moment (Fejos); Out with the Tide (Hutchinson); The Tell-Tale Heart (Klein—short)
1930 Alma de Gaucho (Otto)
1931 Women Men Marry (Hutchinson)
1932 Stowaway (Whitman); A Strange Adventure (Whitman and Del Ruth)
1933 Jennie Gerhardt (Gering); Her Bodyguard (Beaudine) (co); Three Cornered Moon (Nugent)
1934 Good Dame (Gering); Thirty Day Princess (Gering); Kiss and Make Up (Thompson); Ready for Love (Gering); Behold My Wife (Leisen)
1935 Private Worlds (Cava); She Married Her Boss (Cava); Accent on Youth (Ruggles); She Couldn't Take It (Garnett); Fugitive (Howard)
1936 Soak the Rich (Hecht and MacArthur); Fatal Lady (Ludwig); Spendthrift (Walch); Wedding Present (Wallace)
1937 You Only Live Once (F. Lang); Her Husband Lies (Ludwig); The Great Gambini (Cummings) (co); I Was an Adventuress (Mayo)
1938 Young in Heart (Wallace)
1939 Made for Each Other (Cromwell); The Story of Alexander Graham Bell (Cummings); The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes (Werker)
1940 Little Old New York (H. King); I Was an Adventuress (Ratoff) (co); Lillian Russell (Cummings); Four Sons (Macy); Down Argentine Way (Cummings) (co); Tin Pan Alley (W. Lang)
1941 That Night in Rio (Cummings) (co); The Great American Broadcast (Macy) (co); Moon over Miami (W. Lang) (co); A Yank in the RAF (H. King); Confirm or Deny (Macy)
1942 Roxie Hart (Wellman); Ten Gentlemen from West Point (Hathaway); The Black Swan (H. King)
1943 Crash Dive (Macy); Stormy Weather (Stone); Claudia (Goulding)
1944 Buffalo Bill (Wellman); Greenwich Village (W. Lang) (co); Wilson (H. King)
1945 A Tree Grows in Brooklyn (Kazan); Where Do We Go from Here? (Ratoff); State Fair (W. Lang); The Shocking Miss Pilgrim (Seaton); Leave Her to Heaven (Stahl)
1947 Forever Amber (Preminger); Daisy Kenyon (Preminger)
1948 That Lady in Ermine (Lubitsch and Preminger)
1949 Prince of Foxes (H. King); Twelve O'Clock High (H. King)
1950 Cheaper by the Dozen (W. Lang); Two Flags West (Hathaway)
1951 On the Riviera (W. Lang); David and Bathsheba (H. King)
1952 With a Song in My Heart (W. Lang); Wait 'til the Sun Shines, Nellie (H. King); Down among the Sheltering Palms (Goulding); The Snows of Kilimanjaro (H. King)
1953 Tonight We Sing (Leisen); Call Me Madame (W. Lang); The Girl Next Door (Sale); White Witch Doctor (Hathaway); The Robe (H. King); King of the Khyber Rifles (H. King)
1954 The Egyptian (Curtiz); There's No Business Like Show Business (W. Lang)
1955 Daddy Long Legs (Negulesco); Love Is a Many Splendored Thing (H. King); Good Morning Miss Dove (Koster)
1956 The King and I (W. Lang); The Best Things in Life Are Free (Curtiz); The Girl Can't Help It (Tashlin)
1957 The Desk Set (W. Lang)
1958 South Pacific (Logan) (co); The Bravados (H. King); Rally 'round the Flag, Boys (McCary)
1959 Porgy and Bess (Preminger); The Blue Angel (Dmytryk); Beloved Infidel (H. King)
1960 Wake Me When It's Over (LeRoy); North to Alaska (Hathaway)
1961 Snow White and The Three Stooges (W. Lang)
1962 Tender Is the Night (H. King)
1963 Cleopatra (Mankiewicz); The Cardinal (Preminger)
1964 What a Way to Go (Lee Thompson)
1965 John Goldfarb, Please Come Home (Lee Thompson); The Agony and the Ecstasy (Reed); Do Not Disturb (Levy)
1966 The Glass Bottom Boat (Tashlin)
1967 Caprice (Tashlin)
1968 Planet of the Apes (Schaffner); The Secret Life of an American Wife (Axelrod)
1969 Skidoo (Preminger); Justine (Cukor)

Publications

By SHAMROY: articles—

“Filming the Big Dimension,” in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), May 1953.

On SHAMROY: articles—

Gavin, Arthur, on South Pacific in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), May 1958.
Gavin, Arthur, on Porgy and Bess in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), August 1959.
Lightman, Herb A., on Planet of the Apes in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), April 1968.

* * *

Leon Shamroy’s films of the 1950s demonstrate a mastery of Technicolor. He is a colorist, and he only achieved his best work with the advent of color in the cinema. If another Hollywood cameraman,
Lee Garmes, resembles Rembrandt, as many critics feel, then it can be said that Shamroy is the cinema’s equivalent to Peter Paul Rubens.

Shamroy’s black-and-white films still have some interest because of their strong independent strains. In the late 1920s he participated in the making of experimental films. The Last Moment, which he worked on with Paul Fejos, was the first silent film made without intertitles and filmed entirely with subjective, point-of-view shots. Shamroy worked for a while with Robert Flaherty, which may have developed the cameraman’s realistic side. During 1930 he did extensive documentary work more for his own enjoyment than for anything else. Reality had its own intrinsic interest for Shamroy. In forwarding his desire to make the medium of film better able to render real objects in actual space, Shamroy employed lighting in such a way as to achieve high-contrast with lots of shadows.

Nevertheless, for all his realism, he drew heavily on the artifice of film. In Private Worlds Shamroy was among the first to employ zoom lenses. Further, his realism was not the sort that concentrated on the slightest detail, but rather more resembles the later form of realism created by the French Impressionists; he strove for a sense of the actual world captured through light, in a glance. During the 1930s Shamroy began his association with Charles MacArthur and Ben Hecht; also, at 20th Century-Fox, Shamroy’s experimental spirit was allowed to blossom under the light and nourishing control of Darryl F. Zanuck.

In the 1940s Shamroy got his great chance to work in Technicolor. It was then too that he earned three Academy Awards—in 1942 for The Black Swan, in 1944 for Wilson, and in 1945 for Leave Her to Heaven. He continued to perfect his color techniques. He evocatively employed studio light to suggest the natural light of Africa in The Snows of Kilimanjaro and The Egyptian—two neglected pieces of cinematic virtuosity. In Justine, Shamroy used one major light, with two secondary bulbs, to suggest dawn light. Shamroy was very much at home in the studio.

The peculiar balance of Shamroy’s cinematography between actuality and artifice becomes clearest in South Pacific, where Shamroy had to use color-filter effects against his will. The shots containing these expressionistic effects, forced on him by the director Joshua Logan, are poorly integrated into the impressionistic reality of the film, done for the most part on location in the South Pacific. Shamroy was a painstaking craftsman when Hollywood was offering its strange studio blend of reality and artistry. He was much more in his element when filming the studio sets of The King and I, and this film is a rich and shimmering feast for the eye—one of the finest among the filmed musicals.

—Rodney Farnsworth

SHANKAR, Ravi

Composer. Nationality: Indian. Born: Benares, 7 April 1920. Education: Attended a French Catholic school, Paris, 1930–32; studied Kathak and Kathakali styles of classical Indian dance, Calcutta. Family: Married Annapurna Akbar, children: one son. Career: Musician and dancer with Uday Shankar Company of Hindu Dancers and Musicians in Paris, early 1930s, composer and performer on the sitar from 1939; 1945—first film as composer, Dharti Ke Lal; 1945–46—music director of communist party cultural group IPTA, Bombay; 1946–47—co-founder, Indian Renaissance Artists musical group; 1949—director of music, All India Radio External Services Division (with Home Service Division, 1952); 1954—beginning of international career: toured in U.S.S.R., and later tours in the United States and Europe; 1967—opened school of Indian classical music, Los Angeles; later opened school at Varanasi.

Films as Composer:

1945  Dharti Ke Lal (Abbas); Neecha Nagar (Anand)
1955  Pather Panchali (Father Panchali) (S. Ray)
1956  Aparajito (The Unvanquished) (S. Ray); Chairy Tale
1957  Parash Pathar (Ray); En djungelsaga (The Flute and the Arrow) (Sucksdorff)
1959  Apar Sansar (The World of Apu) (S. Ray)
1960  Anuradha (Mukherjee)
1961  Kabuliwala (Sinha); Megh (U. Dutt)
1962  Godan
1964  Ghum Bhaangar Gaan (U. Dutt)
1965  Chappaqua (Rooks)
1968  Charly (Nelson)
1972  Alice’s Adventures in Wonderland (Miller)
1977  Mira (Gulzar)
1982  Gandhi (Attenborough)
1986  Génésis (Sen)
Although Ravi Shankar composed small pieces on the sitar (a seven-stringed Indian instrument which he has made world-famous) as background scores for some commercial Hindi films, and composed complete scores for two offbeat Hindi films in the mid-1940s, he did not come to be known as a film composer until Satyajit Ray’s Pather Panchali made a world sensation in 1955. Shankar composed the music after seeing only a few sequences at the request of Ray, a family friend, and recorded it in one session of 11 hours.

Although Shankar is a profound practitioner of Indian classical music on many types of instruments, his style is more fluid and innovative than most great Indian sitarists, such as Ustad Bilayet Khan who composed the score of Ray’s musical film Jalsaghar. This is evident from his soul-stirring scores for the Apu trilogy, Gandhi, and Anuradha. In Pather Panchali, which remains his best film score, the sequence of the improvident father’s return home with a sari for the dead daughter and the mother’s breakdown in tears would not have been half as moving if it were not enhanced by a little-known string instrument, tar sanai. Similarly, the pathos of the sequence of Gandhi’s offer of a cloth to an ill-clad woman bathing in Ganges would not have been so cathartic if accompanied by a rigid classical raga on any other instrument.

Shankar never took his film scores too seriously; they were mostly concessions to friends and admirers. Nor are his scores dramatic or cinematic enough to bring home a situation or a dialogue in a lighter vein. He is too sublime to condescend to ‘‘ridiculous’’ moments in a film, one of the reasons Ray did not use him beyond the Apu trilogy. Nevertheless, the fluidity of his style and improvisations had a free play on the soundtrack of the trilogy. According to him, Indian classical music can convey the entire gamut of human emotions and feelings in films if it is played with an admixture of folk music, ‘‘or each by itself.’’ ‘‘It is wrong to say that Indian classical music cannot convey emotion.’’ He is himself pleased with his scores for the trilogy and for two of Utpal Dutt’s films. The ‘‘pure gold’’ in Ravi Shankar which, according to Yehudi Menuhin, drew American youth to him, also shone in his film scores, because in these casual playful pieces ‘‘there was a synthesis of the immediacy of expression, the spontaneity, truth, and integrity of action suited to the moment that is a form of honesty characteristic of both the innocent child and the great artist.’’

—Bibekananda Ray

---

SHARAFF, Irene

 Films as Costume Designer:

1943 Girl Crazy (Taurog); I Dood It (Minnelli) (co); Madame Curie (LeRoy) (co); Broadway Rhythm (Del Ruth)
1944 Meet Me in St. Louis (Minnelli); Bathing Beauty (Sidney)
1945 Yolanda and the Thief (Minnelli) (co)
1946 The Best Years of Our Lives (Wyler); The Dark Mirror (Siodmak); Ziegfeld Follies (Minnelli) (co)
1947 The Bishop’s Wife (Koster); The Secret Life of Walter Mitty (McLeod); A Song Is Born (Hawks)
1948 Every Girl Should Be Married (Hartman)
1951 An American in Paris (Minnelli)
1953 Call Me Madam (W. Lang)
1954  A Star Is Born (Cukor) (co); Brigadoon (Minnelli)
1955  Guys and Dolls (Mankiewicz)
1956  The King and I (W. Lang)
1959  Porgy and Bess (Preminger)
1960  Can-Can (W. Lang)
1961  Flower Drum Song (Koster); West Side Story (Wise and Robbins)
1963  Cleopatra (Mankiewicz) (co)
1965  The Sandpiper (Minnelli)
1966  Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? (Nichols)
1967  The Taming of the Shrew (Zeffirelli) (co)
1968  Funny Girl (Ross)
1969  Hello, Dolly!; Justine (Cukor)
1970  The Great White Hope (Ritt)
1974  The Way We Were (Pollack) (co)
1981  Mommie Dearest (Perry)

Publications

By SHARAFF: book—

By SHARAFF: article—

On SHARAFF: articles—

Theatre Arts (New York), November 1949.

Dance Magazine, November 1993.

Current Biography, March 1997.

* * *

Making motion pictures often demands more from an artist than the duties suggested by an official title. Had “costume designer” Irene Sharaff merely sketched pretty dresses for stunning starlets, prestigious MGM studios would have slammed shut the pages of her drawing pad. But Sharaff’s talent included a strong intellect, a fine eye, intuitive insights, and ingenious ability for original adaptation, and an integrating mind that united all into workable designs.

Sharaff succeeded quickly as a New York stage designer. She showed a clever use of color in her costumes for Irving Berlin’s Easter Parade. For this stage revue, various shades of browns, tans, and other neutrals mimicked the pages of the New York Times rotogravure. Sharaff’s designs for Alice in Wonderland won acclaim as reconstructions of the original Tenniel illustrations. These successes caught the attention of MGM filmmakers who hoped to translate Sharaff’s theatrical skills into bankable Hollywood ventures. Specifically, they sought a suitable designer to deal with the new technicolor process. Sharaff did not disappoint them after she joined the staff in 1942.

MGM designated Sharaff’s skills to the Freed unit, which made some of the world’s most memorable musicals. Almost immediately, her touch turned projects into screen gold. Meet Me in St. Louis, for instance, was a nostalgic valentine of lace, swiss dots, and ruffles. But the An American in Paris ballet sequence proved the costume designer’s finest hour, as it utilized a multitude of her various talents. For this ballet, Sharaff based her visuals on a number of famous French painters. Paying homage to the Impressionists and several Post-Impressionists, she translated the colors and techniques of individual artists to set design and costume, even as she facilitated Gene Kelly’s dances with garments constructed specifically for movement. Even the fabrics flowed with harmonizing rhythms.

Sharaff’s career displayed considerable variety. The King and I sparked with exotic ethnic dress. Can-Can offered an imaginative “Adam and Eve” ballet complete with guises from animal to insect. West Side Story glorified the uniforms of working-class New York toughs. A few years later, the Sandpiper peopleed the beaches of Big Sur with contemporary bohemians. Sharaff often dressed Elizabeth Taylor, be it as Egyptian queen (Cleopatra), a brilliant but testy Renaissance jewel (The Taming of the Shrew), or an overweight, aging slob (Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf?). Late in her career, her designs for Mommie Dearest amplified the lurid lustre of Hollywood glamour in the ’40s and ’50s.

Throughout her remarkable 50-year career, Sharaff translated her visions from stage to screen, using all the artistry of the world as inspiration. Understanding the natures of film, the stage, and ballet, she recognized their similarities and differences. Starting with this knowledge, she splashed it with just the right colors and elevated each creation to optimum advantage. Sharaff will best be remembered for taking the superficial show out of show business and replacing it with the depth of fine art.

—Edith C. Lee, updated by Denise Delorey

SHEARER, Douglas

Sound Technician. Nationality: Canadian. Born: Westmont, Quebec, 17 November 1899. Family: Brother of the actress Norma Shearer. Married Avice (Shearer); two sons. Career: 1917—worked for Northern Electric Company; 1918–20—machinist and traveling representative for an industrial power plant firm; 1920—partner in Ford automobile dealership, Montreal; 1925—worked in MGM publicity department; 1925–28—prop man at Warner Bros. and assistant cameraman at MGM; 1927–28—head of MGM Sound department (and director of Technical Research Department, 1955–68); made many technical innovations, including devising MGM’s Camera 65. Awards: Academy Award for The Big House, 1929–30; Naughty Marietta, 1935; San Francisco, 1936; Strike Up the Band, 1940; Thirty Seconds over Tokyo, 1944; Green Dolphin Street, 1947; The Great Caruso, 1951; Academy Technical Award, 1936, 1937, 1941, 1955, 1959, 1963. Died: In Culver City, California, 5 January 1971.
Films as Sound Technician (selected list):

1929  The Broadway Melody (Beaumont); Devil-May-Care (Franklin); Dynamite (DeMille); Hallelujah (K. Vidor); The Trial of Mary Dugan (Veiller); Voice of the City (Mack)

1930  Anna Christie (Brown); The Big House (Hill); Call of the Flesh (Brabin); Let Us Be Gay (Leonard); Lord Byron of Broadway (Nigh and Beaumont); Madam Satan (DeMille); Min and Bill (Hill); The Rogue Song (L. Barrymore); The Sea Bat (Ruggles); The Unholy Three (Conway); Way Out West (Niblo)

1934  The Thin Man (Van Dyke)

1935  Naughty Marietta (Van Dyke); A Night at the Opera (Wood)

1936  San Francisco (Van Dyke); Romeo and Juliet (Cukor)

1939  Balalaika (Schünzel); Ninotchka (Lubitsch); The Wizard of Oz (Fleming)

1940  Strike Up the Band (Berkeley); The Philadelphia Story (Cukor)

1944  Thirty Seconds over Tokyo (LeRoy)

1947  Green Dolphin Street (Saville)

1950  The Asphalt Jungle (Huston)

1951  The Great Caruso (Thorpe)

1952  Singin' in the Rain (Kelly and Donen)

Publications

By SHEARER: articles—

‘“The ABC of Sound,”’ in Cinema Arts, September 1937.

On SHEARER: articles—

Film Weekly (London), 10 May 1935.

* * *

Douglas Shearer represented an anomaly within the film industry during the introduction of sound: whereas the embryonic sound departments of studios like Warner Bros. and RKO were initially ruled by the college-educated technicians provided by the manufacturers of their systems, Western Electric and RCA, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer placed technical responsibility for its sound film production with Shearer, a 28-year-old Canadian high school dropout. Despite the lack of academic training, Shearer nevertheless headed both MGM’s Sound Department and Technical Research Department for 41 years, winning many Oscars and holding patents ranging from studio dubbing processes to radio navigation systems for aircraft, and became perhaps one of Hollywood’s most visible technicians.

In contrast to most of his counterparts at other studios, Shearer harkened back to the bricoleur era within the motion picture’s technological evolution, when self-trained tinkerers like Francis Jenkins and Thomas Armat represented the cutting edge of technical progress. Born near Montreal in 1899, Shearer left school before graduation to pursue a number of jobs, including a relatively long stint as a traveling representative for an industrial power plant firm which, according to Shearer, provided him with the broad background in matters mechanical and electrical that formed the technical foundation for his later pursuits in Hollywood. After visiting his sister Norma in Hollywood, Shearer decided to stay in the United States, securing various jobs at both Warner Bros. and MGM. While working in the MGM camera department in 1927, Shearer was appointed to create the studio’s sound department despite his lack of specific training in the field. However, his appointment was perhaps not that unusual. Obviously, with his sister one of the studio’s biggest stars and his brother-in-law being Irving Thalberg, MGM’s powerful production chief, Shearer had studio contacts far beyond those of other middle echelon production employees. However, Shearer had also demonstrated prodigious technical proficiency at MGM before his assumption of sound duties, being involved in projects ranging from constructing optical printers to experimenting with early zoom lenses. Most important, perhaps, upon his arrival in Hollywood in 1925 Shearer engineered an early prompter system by which MGM publicity films shown in local theaters could be synchronized with the stars’ voices broadcast over KPO radio, an audacious and early attempt at synchronized talking pictures. Also, Shearer, an attractive and athletic aviator, provided the studio with an ideal personality for publicizing the basically un glamorized technical aspect of sound film production.

During his tenure at MGM, Shearer was involved in virtually every aspect of the motion picture’s technical evolution following the coming of sound; with John Arnold of the studio’s Camera Department, Shearer established MGM at the forefront of studio-originated research into motion-picture technology. While disc systems were the industry standard, Shearer advocated the use of sound-on-film for production and subsequent transfer to disc, allowing far more efficient recording control and editing; later during the early days of sound, Shearer’s department participated in the development of improved traveling microphones, blimped cameras, and mixing processes, and later new antiflutter mechanisms and biased push-pull recording systems. As a result, Shearer’s department received early recognition, winning the first Oscar for sound recording in 1930, and consistently received Oscars throughout the years. During the remainder of his career, Shearer’s accomplishments were not limited to sound. His other work included investigations of new color and projection processes, including MGM’s Camera 65 widescreen process (for which he won an Oscar in 1953). Additionally, he served as a government consultant in the development of radar. By 1955, as the studio’s technical research director, Shearer oversaw all aspects of the studio’s technical concerns until retiring in 1968.

As the brother of one of the studio’s major stars, MGM’s publicity seized upon Shearer as a means of personalizing the studio’s implementation of sound, promoting him as the originator of a number of technical innovations. As his patents and Oscars indicate, Shearer did possess a precocious technical mind. However, some of his technological accomplishments, like push-pull recording, undisputedly had their origins in the mammoth research laboratories of RCA and Bell Labs. Nevertheless, Shearer made a profound contribution to all aspects of motion picture technology, establishing MGM as a center of technical research while, more importantly, serving as the implementer into motion-picture practice of the technical amelioration effected by the nation’s major electronic research laboratories at RCA and Bell.

—William Lafferty
SHEPARD, Sam

Films as Writer:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Credits</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1968</td>
<td>Me and My Brother</td>
<td>(Frank) (co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1970</td>
<td>Zabriskie Point</td>
<td>(Antonioni) (co)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1971</td>
<td>Ringaleevio; Oh! Calcutta!</td>
<td>(Levy) (co)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1978</td>
<td>Renaldo and Clara</td>
<td>(Dylan) (co)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1984</td>
<td>Paris, Texas</td>
<td>(Wenders)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Films as Actor:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Credits</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1969</td>
<td>Bronco Bullfrog</td>
<td>(Platts-Mill) (as Jo)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1970</td>
<td>Brand X</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1978</td>
<td>Days of Heaven</td>
<td>(Malick) (as the Farmer)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1980</td>
<td>Resurrection</td>
<td>(Daniel Petrie) (as Cal Carpenter)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1981</td>
<td>Raggedy Man</td>
<td>(Fisk) (as Bailey)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1982</td>
<td>Frances</td>
<td>(Clifford) (as Harry York)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1983</td>
<td>Joe Chaikin Going On</td>
<td>(Gomer); The Right Stuff (Kaufman) (as Chuck Yeager)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1984</td>
<td>Country</td>
<td>(Pearce) (as Gil Ivy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1986</td>
<td>Crimes of the Heart</td>
<td>(Beresford) (as Doc Porter)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1987</td>
<td>Baby Boom</td>
<td>(Shyer) (as Dr. Jeff Cooper)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1988</td>
<td>Steel Magnolias</td>
<td>(Ross) (as Spud Jones)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1991</td>
<td>Defenceless</td>
<td>(Martin Campbell) (as George Beutel); Voyager (Homo Faber) (Schlöndorff) (as Walter Faber); Bright Angel (Fields) (as Jack Russell)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1992</td>
<td>Thunderheart</td>
<td>(Apted) (as Frank Coutelle)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1993</td>
<td>The Pelican Brief</td>
<td>(Thomas Callahan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1994</td>
<td>Safe Passage</td>
<td>(Ackerman) (as Patrick Singer)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1995</td>
<td>The Good Old Boys</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1996</td>
<td>Lily Dale</td>
<td>(Masterson—for TV) (as Peter Davenport)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1998</td>
<td>The Only Thrill</td>
<td>(Masterson) (as Reece McHenry)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1999</td>
<td>One Kill; Curtain Call (Yates) (as Will Dodge); Purgatory (Edel—for TV) (as Sheriff Forrest/Wild Bill Hickok); Dash and Lilly (as Dashiell Hammett); Snow Falling on Cedars (Hicks) (as Arthur Chambers)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2000</td>
<td>Hamlet (as Ghost); One Kill (for TV—as Major Nelson Gray); Texas; The Pledge; All the Pretty Horses (as Banker)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2001</td>
<td>Wild Geese</td>
<td>(as Caleb Gare); Just to Be Together</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

By SHEPARD: plays—

Buried Child and Other Plays (includes Suicide in B Flat, Seduced), New York, 1979.

Seven Plays (includes Buried Child, Curse of the Starving Class, The Tooth of Crime, La Turista, True West, Tongues, Savage/Love), New York, 1981.

Chicago and Other Plays, 1982.

Fool for Love and Other Plays (includes Angel City, Cowboy Mouth, Suicide in B Flat, Seduced, Geography of a Horse Dreamer, Melodrama Play), New York, 1984.

The Unseen Hand and the Other Plays, New York, 1996.

By SHEPARD: other books—

Cruising Paradise: Tales, New York, 1996.

By SHEPARD: articles—

Interview (New York), vol. 18, no. 9, September 1988.

On SHEPARD: books—

Benet, Carol, Sam Shepard on the German Stage: Critics, Politics, Myths, New York, 1993.

Callens, Johan, Sam Shepard: Between the Margin & the Center I & 2, Newark, 1998.

On SHEPARD: articles—

Film Comment (New York), vol. 19, no. 6, November/December 1983.

* * *

Sam Shepard has worked as a playwright, musician, director, actor, and screenwriter. As the last, Shepard gained early recognition as a co-scripter of Antonioni’s Zabriskie Point. Earlier he wrote the little-seen Me and My Brother, a harsh semidocumentary treatment of mental illness and the homeless. In the 1970s he contributed to a trio of films with similarly troubled distribution histories: Ringaleevio, Oh! Calculitta!, and Bob Dylan’s Renaldo and Clara. After this line of quirky and mainly obscure films, Shepard vaulted into prominence as a film writer in the mid-1980s with the release of Paris, Texas, a film which has the resonance of his best stage plays and which takes up some of their concerns. Avoiding the facile regeneration-of-the-nuclear-family plots that have traditionally meant good box office, Shepard has closely examined some of the same questions, rejecting the reassurances about the family for which mainstream Hollywood is well known (his film actor-only roles, by contrast, often fit more comfortably into the Hollywood mold, as in The Right Stuff and Baby Boom).

Paris, Texas revolves around a father and son attempting reconciliation, often a primary thematic concern of Shepard’s plays. The story also offers some symptomatic dualities: both sprawling and tightly organized, both dreamy and wonderfully concrete. As such it seems a worthy companion piece to Shepard’s mature stage work, which also seeks to push the conventions of contemporary drama to their limits. The film is formally organized by the wanderings of Travis (Harry Dean Stanton), which describe a rambling circuit of the American Southwest—Shepard territory for sure. Motifs of fire and water figure importantly and help pull together the enigmatic narrative. Travis is obsessed with water in the early parts of the film: carrying a water jug, eating ice, leaving a shower running, playing with a faucet. At first this obsession seems related to his physical burning in the desert, perhaps a symptom of madness; later it is revealed that he has an emotional fire he cannot quite put out. In a more isolated instance, there is a doom-shouter whom Travis encounters on an overpass. At first the prophet’s words are dissociated, free-floating, apparently nondiegetic. When Travis passes by the shouter, the abstract becomes concrete again, and the scene has a wonderful formal power. While some of the credit for this work must also go to L. M. Kit Carson, who wrote the adaptation from Shepard’s story, Shepard’s later film work shows increasing control on his part.

Fool for Love is his first and, so far, only film adaptation of one of his own plays. Director Robert Altman and Shepard open up the story visually and make some interesting choices, particularly in the intermingling of past and present, of thought and action. Again, figures of forbidden love and problematic fatherhood appear prominently. Eddie (Sam Shepard) and May (Kim Basinger) share a passion that they cannot quite consummate and cannot quite contain. Here, fire imagery builds and becomes literal at the climax. The Old Man (Harry Dean Stanton), an incredibly divisive father figure, is at the root of all this trouble. Rootlessness, on the other hand, is also a main concern. For instance, Eddie’s journey to May, stated as one of thousands of miles contained in a relatively smaller geographic area, suggests a circuitous route, and the description of it melds with the serpentine workings of the plot. Also, Eddie and the Old Man take an apparently aimless walk, similar to wanderings in both Paris, Texas and Far North.

Shepard wrote the original screenplay for Far North, which was also his directorial debut. Shepard took advantage of this amount of control to film his most satisfying, and most completely personal, screenplay yet. The film examines “a notable lack of menfolk” regarding one family in particular and contemporary society in general, in a shading on the concerns central to both Paris, Texas and Fool for Love. Shepard’s wordplay with Midwestern vernacular in Far North helps make the “personal idea of justice” speech by Bertram (Charles Durning) and the “teaching/learning” monologue by Kate (Jessica Lange) rate with his best. Together, these speeches highlight the basically incompatible spheres of influence the sexes occupy in Shepard’s world view: while men are out doing destructive things, women take the time for family, for nurturing. Men act this way out of personal concern. Women think more of group welfare. Attempts made by one group to teach the other will be ignored, or at least not learned. An organizing device in Far North has men and women doing similar things, first drinking and later taking a journey through the woods, to dissimilar effect in each case: violent men drift apart, and nurturing women come together. Throughout his work this pattern remains consistent. In just these three films Shepard’s voice has been powerful enough to create an important countercurrent to the Hollywood mainstream.

Although Shepard has frequently directed and written for the screen, since the 1980s he has worked most often as a actor. With a cleft chin and lanky physique contributing to his rugged good looks, Shepard has habitually played leading men in films and received an Academy Award nomination in 1983 for his portrayal of astronaut Chuck Yeager in The Right Stuff.

—Mark Walker, updated by David Levine

SHERRIFF, R. C.

Films as Writer:

1930 Journey’s End (Whale)
1932 The Old Dark House (Whale) (dialogue)
1933 The Invisible Man (Whale)
1934 One More River (Over the River) (Whale)
1937 The Road Back (Kenyon)
1938 Three Comrades (Borzage) (uncredited)
1939 The Four Feathers (Z. Korda); Goodbye Mr. Chips (Wood)
1941 Lady Hamilton (That Hamilton Woman) (A. Korda)
1942 This above All (Litvak); Mrs. Miniver (Wyler) (uncredited)
1943 Forever and a Day (Clair)
1947 Odd Man Out (Reed)
1948 Quartet (Crabtree)
1950 Trio (Annakin)
1951 No Highway (Koster)

R. C. Sherriff
1952  Home at Seven (Richardson)
1955  Storm over the Nile (Young); The Dam Busters (Anderson);
      The Night My Number Came Up (Norman)

Publications

By SHERRIFF: book—

No Leading Lady (autobiography), 1969.

On SHERRIFF: article—

* * *

R. C. Sherriff's career as a writer began with the play Journey's End, a bleak study of life in the trenches during the First World War. Sherriff, a veteran of the war, was an insurance clerk when he wrote the play for his local amateur dramatics society. Favourable notices brought Journey's End to the attention of an aspiring actor, Laurence Olivier, and the director James Whale, both of whom were instrumental in arranging a West End production of the play. Despite the fact that Journey's End carried an antiwar message and had "no leading lady" (the title of Sherriff's autobiography), it was an enormous success and established the insurance clerk as an esteemed author virtually overnight.

When subsequent success in the West End eluded him, Sherriff joined James Whale at Universal Studios in Hollywood in 1931, where he adapted J. B. Priestley's The Old Dark House and H. G. Wells' The Invisible Man. These were very successful and are now regarded as classic horror films. Sherriff did not return to the horror genre, but found himself in demand as a writer of films concerning the First World War (The Road Back, Three Comrades) and as a faithful adaptor of British novels. In the late 1930s these adaptations had developed a patriotic flavour. Goodbye Mr. Chips, for example, is a nostalgic celebration of British traditions, while The Four Feathers wholeheartedly endorses British rule over the Empire.

Goodbye Mr. Chips set the tone for Hollywood’s many tributes to British war; and Sherriff, along with expatriate writers James Hilton, Arthur Wimperis and Claudine West became one of the leading writers of this genre. Lady Hamilton, a costume melodrama that told the story of the adulterous love affair of Lady Hamilton and Lord Nelson, was also the story of Nelson’s triumph over Napoleon, and the contemporary parallels to Hitler were broadly drawn. It was one of Sherriff’s few original screenplays, and was reportedly Winston Churchill’s favourite film. This above All, an adaptation of a novel by Eric Knight, was a more typical example of Hollywood’s wartime “British” melodramas. The usual British stereotypes—the haughty aristocrats and the quaint Cockneys—are portrayed as working together for the common wartime cause.

It was Mrs. Miniver, though, that made the most impact. The story of an “average” British housewife facing the blitz won six Oscars and was MGM’s top grossing film of the 1940s. Although Sherriff did not receive a screen credit, he wrote two key scenes for Mrs. Miniver:

- the opening scene, in which a frivolous prewar Mrs. Miniver shops for hats; and the scene in the bomb shelter that shows Mrs. Miniver reading Alice in Wonderland to her family during an air raid. The latter scene was almost identical to scenes in Journey’s End and Goodbye Mr. Chips, in which we witness the same example of the British stiff-upper-lip in action. In Journey’s End, however, the reading scene has an ironic edge, as the men’s bravery leads to their death. In the later films the irony has been removed, and the bravery of Mr. Chips and Mrs. Miniver is presented in the spirit of “Britain can take it.” Patriotic propaganda was the order of the day, and the author of the “antiwar” Journey’s End proved to be particularly adept at providing it.

In Britain after the war, Sherriff’s thematic concerns continued to centre on the archetypal, understated Englishman and how he responds to war. The Dam Busters, for example, shows an English intellectual applying his genius to defeat the Germans; and the plot of Home at Seven hinges upon the aftereffects of war on a suburban gentleman. In the late 1950s, with the “kitchen sink” in vogue in British theatre and cinema, Sherriff found his patriotic themes and middle-class characters out of date, and he retired. Despite his long career and impressive filmography, his usual epitaph states that he never quite lived up to the standard set by Journey’s End.

—H. M. Glancy

SHERWOOD, Robert E.

Films as Writer:

1924  The Hunchback of Notre Dame (Worsley)
1926  The Lucky Lady (Walsh)
1931  The Age for Love (Lloyd); Around the World in Eighty Minutes with Douglas Fairbanks (Fleming)
1932  Cock of the Air (Buckingham)
1933  Roman Scandals (Tuttle)
1935  The Scarlet Pimpernel (Young)
Robert E. Sherwood

1936  The Ghost Goes West (Clair)
1937  Thunder in the City (Gering)
1938  The Adventures of Marco Polo (Mayo); The Divorce of Lady X (Whelan)
1939  Idiot’s Delight (Brown)
1940  Abe Lincoln in Illinois (Cromwell); Rebecca (Hitchcock)
1946  The Best Years of Our Lives (Wyler)
1947  The Bishop’s Wife (Koster)
1953  Man on a Tightrope (Kazan); Main Street to Broadway (Garnett)

Publications

By SHERWOOD: plays—

The Road to Rome, New York, 1927.
The Queen’s Husband, New York, 1928.
Waterloo Bridge, New York, 1930.
This Is New York, New York, 1931.
Reunion in Vienna, New York, 1932.
The Petrified Forest, New York, 1935.
Idiot’s Delight, New York, 1936.
Tovarich, New York, 1937.
Abe Lincoln in Illinois, New York, 1939.
There Shall Be No Night, New York, 1940.
Miss Liberty, New York, 1948.

By SHERWOOD: other books—

(Editor), The Best Moving Pictures of 1922–23, Boston, Massachusetts, 1923.
The Virtuous Knight (novel), New York, 1931, as The Unending Crusade, London, 1932.
The Adventures of Marco Polo (script) in How to Write and Sell Film Stories, by Frances Marion, New York, 1937.
With Joan Harrison, Rebecca (script) in Twenty Best Film Plays, edited by John Gassner and Dudley Nichols, New York, 1943.

By SHERWOOD: articles—

Picturegoer (London), 11 August 1934.
Film Weekly (London), 2 July 1938.

On SHERWOOD: books—

On SHERWOOD: articles—

Film Comment (New York), September-October 1972.

* * *

Robert E. Sherwood probably is best known for his plays (Waterloo Bridge, The Petrified Forest, Idiot’s Delight, and Abe Lincoln in Illinois) and his book on President Franklin D. Roosevelt (Roosevelt and Hopkins). But it should not be forgotten that he had a long and distinguished association with the movies.

Sherwood began his association with the movies as a film critic for the humor magazine Life. His film criticism gave him an entree to Hollywood, and his first film work came in 1924 when he was paid the handsome sum of $2,500 to rewrite subtitles for the classic silent version of The Hunchback of Notre Dame.

Sherwood probably did his best screenwriting for the producer Sam Goldwyn. In 1933 Robert Sherwood and George S. Kaufman turned George Bernard Shaw's Androcles and the Lion into Goldwyn's Roman Scandals, starring Eddie Cantor. But surely Sherwood's greatest effort in the movies came with Goldwyn's award-winning The Best Years of Our Lives. This classic film not only pleased the critics of its day but its reputation has remained high, as it is recognized as the best of Hollywood's many looks at the American soldier's reentry into society after the Second World War. The Best Years of Our Lives swept the Academy Awards of its day and continues to be regularly shown in revival houses, on the late show, and now on video cassette. Much of the credit for the film's touching dialogue belongs to Sherwood. It is also reported that Sherwood tendered many of the suggestions for the final cut, along with the director Wyler and Goldwyn. The Best Years of Our Lives stands as a great example of Hollywood filmmaking at its peak.

Sherwood also turned Daphne du Maurier's best-selling novel Rebecca into an equally popular film starring Laurence Olivier and Joan Fontaine. Today Rebecca is remembered as Alfred Hitchcock's first Hollywood film. The writer also spent considerable time adapting his popular plays into movies. This series of adaptations reached a peak in the years immediately preceding the Second World War. Idiot's Delight, based on his 1936 Pulitzer Prize-winning play, was the first of his plays he adapted for the screen. Starring Norma Shearer and Clark Gable, the film was one of Hollywood's rare antiwar movies. Also adopted from a Sherwood Pulitzer Prize-winning play was Abe Lincoln in Illinois, in which Raymond Massey recreated an image of Lincoln which would stand paramount for a generation.

—Douglas Gomery

SHOSTAKOVICH, Dmitri

Composer. Nationality: Russian. Born: Dmitri Dimitriyevich Shostakovich in St. Petersburg, 25 September 1906. Education: Studied under Nikolayev, Steinberg, and Glazunov at the Leningrad Conservatory, 1919–25. Career: Important compositions performed in mid-1920s; 1929—first film score, for The New Babylon; composer of orchestra and stage works. Died: In Moscow, 9 August 1975.

Films as Composer:

1929 Novyi Vavilon (The New Babylon) (Kozintsev and Trauberg)
1931 Odna (Alone) (Kozintsev and Trauberg); Zlaty gori (Golden Hills) (Yutkevich)
1932 Vstrechnyi (Counterplan) (Yutkevich and Ermler)
1935 Yunost Maxima (The Youth of Maxim) (Kozintsev and Trauberg); Podrugyi (Girl Friends) (Arnstam)
1937 Vozvrashcheniye Maxima (The Return of Maxim) (Kozintsev and Trauberg); Volotchayevskie dni (The Days of Volotchayev) (G. and S. Vasiliev)
1938 Chelovek s ruzhyom (The Man with a Gun) (Yutkevich)
1938–39 Velikiy grazhdanin (A Great Citizen) (Ermler—2 parts)
1939 Vyborgskaya storaona (New Horizons; The Vyborg Side) (Kozintsev and Trauberg)
1944 Zoya (Arnstam)
1947 Molodaya gyvardya (Young Guard) (Gerasimov); Pirogov (Kozintsev)
1948 Michurin (Dovzhenko)
1949 Vstrechna Elbe (Encounter at the Elbe) (Alexandrov); Padieniye Berlina (The Fall of Berlin) (Chiaureli)
1952 Nezabyvayemyi 1919-god (The Unforgettable Year 1919) (Chiaureli)
1953 Belinsky (Kozintsev)
1954 Das Lied der Ströme (Songs of the Rivers) (Ivens)
1955 Ovod (The Gadfly) (Fainzimmer)
1956 Promyshlenniki (Simple People) (Kozintsev and Trauberg—produced 1945); Pervye eshelon (The First Echelon) (Kalatazov)
1959 Khovanshchina (Stroyeva)
1960 Pyat dnei—pyat nocchei (Five Days—Five Nights) (Arnstam)
1962 I sequestrati di Altona (The Condemned of Altona) (De Sica)
1963 Cheryomushki (Song over Moscow) (Rappaport); Hamlet (Kozintsev)
1967 Katerina Izmailova (Shapiro) (+ sc); Oktyabr (October) (Eisenstein) (new version); Sofiya Perovskaya (Arnstam)
1971 Korol Lir (King Lear) (Kozintsev)

Publications

By SHOSTAKOVICH: books—

Dmitry Shostakovich: About Himself and His Times, edited by L. Grigoryev and Yakov Platek, Moscow, 1981.
Pisma k drugoi: Dimitrii Shostakovich [Correspondence. Selections], with commentary by I. D. Glikmana, Moscow, DSCH, 1993.

On SHOSTAKOVICH: books—

On SHOSTAKOVICH: articles—

Soviet Film (Moscow), May 1964.
Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), July 1967.
Soviet Film (Moscow), August 1967.
Soviet Film (Moscow), September 1976.
Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), December 1981.
No other major composer devoted more of his career to film music than Dmitri Shostakovich. Altogether he composed scores for 36 films, from The New Babylon in 1929 to King Lear in 1971. (He also started work on a further project, The Envoys of Eternity, but the film was never realised.) Movies provided an invaluable source of income for Shostakovich at those times when he fell into official disfavour, but he also had a genuine love of cinema. One of his earliest jobs was providing piano accompaniment in a movie house; he was sacked for laughing so much at a Hollywood comedy that he forgot to play.

Since he was sensitive to the specific demands of the medium, Shostakovich’s film music tends to be written in a more accessible idiom than most of his orchestral or chamber works. But there was never anything careless or slipshod about it. He brought to the task unfailingly scrupulous craftsmanship, and once when asked about the subject quoted a remark of Gogol’s about writing for children: “The same as for adults, only better.” And in his film scores, no less than in the symphonies and string quartets, can be seen every aspect of his complex and often paradoxical musical personality.

His first score, to accompany Kozintsev and Trauberg’s silent New Babylon, is full of the parodistic, nose-thumbing humour that characterises so much of his early work. Scenes of the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian War are accompanied, not by the expected martial rhythms, but by oompah circus tunes and pratfalls from the percussion. Irreverent quotation figures strongly, with Offenbach’s Orpheus can-can at one point interwoven with the Marseillaise. Shostakovich’s approach perfectly matched the film’s sardonic expressionism, but the score aroused widespread hostility and many cinemas refused to use it.

Undeterred, he followed similar principles in his first sound film, Alone, also for Kozintsev and Trauberg. Shostakovich established a lifelong rapport with Kozintsev, scoring all his sound films except Don Quixote. The two were in complete agreement on the essential function of film music: not to illustrate the action but to add an entirely new dimension, often running in counterpoint to the visuals or even undercutting them.

Shostakovich’s keen dramatic sense, and his mercurial skill in juxtaposing frivolity with despair—often using one to suggest the other—served him particularly well in his film music. To say that much of it is trivial is no condemnation: he valued trivial music, granting it a legitimate role in even his most serious symphonic compositions. Few composers could have been better suited to animated films, and it is a great shame that Mikhail Tskhovankovsky’s feature-length “cartoon comic-opera,” The Tale of the Priest and His Servant Balda, was never completed (and the footage subsequently lost). Luckily, Shostakovich’s exuberant score survives, so vivid that one can almost see the visuals it accompanied.

For the patriotic films of the 1940s and 1950s Shostakovich supplied more conventional material, although an undercurrent of scepticism and personal anguish, as in the 7th and 8th Symphonies, prevented him falling back on bombastic Soviet cliché. His score for Five Days—Five Nights creates a poignant vision of the shattered city of Dresden, with pity for war’s victims (of whatever nationality) and hope for the future expressed in a passionate orchestral climax built around a theme from Beethoven’s Choral Symphony.

Shostakovich’s film music also gave vent to the romantic side of his character—though tempered, once again, by a pervasive sense of irony. For The Unforgettable Year 1919 he devised a single-movement piano concerto that rivals Addinsell’s Warsaw Concerto in its lush Rachmaninovian pastiche. The Gadfly, a period swashbuckler set in Austrian-occupied Italy, inspired one of his most tuneful and lush Rachmaninovian pastiche.

The sparse textures and sombre tones of Shostakovich’s late style colour his scores for Kozintsev’s two powerful Shakespeare films, Hamlet and King Lear. Hamlet is full of obsessive, driving rhythms, punctuated by fierce outbursts of percussion, while passages of high skittering woodwind suggest mental disturbance. The music for Lear is even darker, with slow rumbling brass chorales reflecting the inexorable disaster overtaking king and country alike. Both scores do full justice to Kozintsev’s epic conception of the plays, and bring Shostakovich’s career as a film composer to an impressive conclusion.

—Philip Kemp

SIODMAK, Curt

Writer and Director. Nationality: American. Born: Kurt Siodmak in Dresden, Germany, 10 August 1902; brother of the director Robert Siodmak. Education: Attended the University of Zurich, Ph.D. 1927. Family: Married Henrietta de Perrot, 1931, one son. Career: Reporter, freelance writer, and railway engineer; 1929—first film as writer, People on Sunday; 1930—first novel published; 1934–37—writer for Gaumont-British; 1937—moved to the United States, and writer for Paramount, 1938–40, and Universal, 1940–46; 1951—first film as director, Bride of the Gorilla; 1952—formed production company with Ivan Tors.

Films as Writer:

1929 Menschen am Sonntag (People on Sunday) (R. Siodmak and Ulmer—doc)
1931 Der Mann, der seinen Mörder sucht (Looking for His Murderer) (R. Siodmak); Le Bal (Thiele)
1932 F.P.1 antwortet nicht (F.P.1; F.P.1 Does Not Answer; F.P.1 Does Not Reply) (Hartl)
1934 La Crise est finie (The Slump Is Over) (R. Siodmak); Girls Will Be Boys (Varnel)
1935 Transatlantic Tunnel (The Tunnel) (Elvey); It’s a Bet (Esway)
1936 I Give My Heart (The Loves of Madame Du Barry) (Varnel)
1937 Non-Stop New York (Stevenson)
1938 Her Jungle Love (Archainbaud)
1940 The Invisible Man Returns (May); Black Friday (Lubin); The Ape (Nigh)
1941 Pacific Blackout (Murphy); The Invisible Woman (Sutherland); Aloma of the South Seas (Santell); Midnight Angel (Murphy)
1942 Invisible Agent (Marin); London Black-Out Murders (Secret Motive) (G. Sherman); The Wolf Man (Waggener)
1943 Son of Dracula (R. Siodmak); Frankenstein Meets the Wolf Man (Neill); I Walked with a Zombie (J. Tourneur); The Purple V (G. Sherman); The Mantrap (G. Sherman); False Faces (G. Sherman)
1944 House of Frankenstein (Kenton); The Climax (Waggener)
1945 Shady Lady (Waggener); Frisco Sai (Waggener)
1946 The Return of Monte Cristo (Levin)
1947 The Beast with Five Fingers (Florey)
1948 Berlin Express (J. Tourneur)
1949 Tarzan’s Magic Fountain (Sholem); Four Days’ Leave (Swiss Tour) (Lindtberg)
1953 Riders to the Stars (Carlson)
1955 Creature with the Atom Brain (Cahn)
1956 Earth vs. Flying Saucers (Sear)
1962 Sherlock Holmes und das Halsband des Todes (Sherlock Holmes and the Deadly Necklace) (Fisher)
1970 Hauser’s Memory (Sagal—for TV)

Films as Writer and Director:

1951 Bride of the Gorilla
1953 The Magnetic Monster
1956 Curucu, Beast of the Amazon
1957 Love Slaves of the Amazon (+ pr)
1962 The Devil’s Messenger (Strock) (co-d)
1967 Liebespiel im Schnee (Kenton)
1968 Custer of the West

Publications

By Siodmak: fiction—

Schluss in Tonfilmatelier (Berlin, 1930).
F.P.1 antwortet nicht, Berlin, 1931, as F.P.1 Does Not Reply, Boston, Massachusetts, 1933, as F.P.1 Fails to Reply, London, 1933.
By SIODMAK: articles—

Films and Filming (London), November 1968.
American Film (Washington, D.C.), August 1990.
Filmfax (Evanston), March-April 1996.

On SIODMAK: articles—

Kino Lehti (Helsinki), no. 4, 1972.
Cinéma (Paris), October 1978.
Ecran Fantastique (Paris), April, May, and June 1983.
Mace, Kevin, in American Screenwriters, 2nd series, edited by Randall Clark, Detroit, Michigan, 1986.
Segnocinema (Vicenza), January 1988.
EPD Film (Frankfurt/Main), October 1996.
Filmbulletin (Winterthur), January 1998.

* * *

Curt Siodmak was almost single-handedly responsible for the flowering of the second horror-film cycle. He wrote the best of Universal’s 1940s horror films and influenced all the others. While by no means a great writer, Siodmak is a gifted, sometimes inspired hack, who, in the course of a prolific career, has created many striking and enduring characters and concepts. He has described himself as an idea man, and he has certainly come up with ideas on which he and others have rung variations, time and again.

One of Siodmak’s first horror-film scripts was Black Friday, a story about a gangster’s brain tissue being injected into a normal man, causing criminal tendencies in the recipient. The idea was like The Hands of Orlac, only more “cerebral.” It probably inspired Siodmak’s own Donovan’s Brain (published two years later and filmed three times since), whose plot concerns an industrialist’s disembodied brain exerting influence over the scientist who keeps it alive. Siodmak returned to the theme in Hauser’s Memory, his later, semi-sequel to Donovan’s Brain and his last screen credit, filmed as a television movie, in which a scientist injects himself with a colleague’s brain fluid and relives the man’s World War II experiences. (In between, Siodmak scripted another “head” film, Creature with the Atom Brain, adding a contemporary nuclear touch to his frequent subject.)

Siodmak began screenwriting as a practitioner of the fantastic mundane. His early science-fiction work in Germany is patterned after Fritz Lang’s pedestrian Frau im Mond rather than Lang’s more fabulous Metropolis; Siodmak took one futuristic or fantastic idea (a floating air strip, a subterranean link between Europe and America, a supersonic flight across the Atlantic) and wove an ordinary melodrama around it. This approach served him well when he began writing in the United States, where for a long time audiences seemed to resist outright fantasy and wanted it couched in “reality.” So Siodmak used invisibility as the gimmick in his story of a wronged man proving his innocence in The Invisible Man Returns. He then used invisibility in a war film (Invisible Agent) and a comedy (The Invisible Woman). Universal’s subsequent Invisible Man films (The Invisible Man’s Revenge, Abbott and Costello Meet the Invisible Man), though not written by Siodmak, followed the pattern he had established.

Siodmak’s most effective realization of the fantastic mundane (and also his best picture as director) is the science-fiction film The Magnetic Monster, about a radioactive isotope that implodes every 11 hours, increasing in size as it does. His heroes are a couple of workmanlike, Dragnet-style scientists, yet—despite the nondramatic nature of his “monster” and the drab personalities of his protagonists—he manages to generate quite a bit of suspense and to make skillful use in the film’s exciting climax of the laboratory sequence from a 1934 fantastic mundane German film, Gold.

Siodmak was one of numerous science-fiction film practitioners in the 1950s, but in the 1940s he was the horror-film practitioner. He gave new life to all of Universal’s famous monsters. His story for Son of Dracula gave a film noir twist to the vampire legend. It was a sort of supernatural Double Indemnity, featuring a superbly icy femme fatale who manipulates, for her own devices, both the man and monster who love her. Despite its title, the film was about a true daughter of Dracula, and head and shoulders above the anemic Dracula’s Daughter made nine years earlier.

Siodmak’s greatest creation during this period was The Wolf Man, a movie that exhibits a purity and economy of structure and a unity of action, time, and place similar to Greek tragedy. The script abounds with subtle nuances: Larry Talbot comes on like a wolf to Gwenn Conliff, then becomes an actual wolf, attacking her at the picture’s end; Larry’s brother, John, has died in a hunting accident—perhaps at the hands of their father, Sir John, who favored John and whose wrongheaded, strained attempts to get close to his second son ultimately lead to wolf man Larry’s death in another “hunting accident” at the hands of Sir John. Most of what is today considered standard werewolf lore actually originated with Siodmak in this picture and its two sequels. He invented the famous four-line verse (“Even a man who is pure in heart’’ and the business about silver bullets and full moons, and provided Lon Chaney, Jr., with his second-best (after Lennie) and most enduring film role.

Siodmak continued to develop the personality of the unfortunate lycanthrope in the sequel, Frankenstein Meets the Wolf Man, which began the practice of teaming Universal’s monsters (a practice initiated because of a chance remark Siodmak jokingly made to Universal producer George Waggner). Under Roy William Neill’s direction, the first half of the film is atmospheric and exciting, but the second half is less successful because of meddling by the studio. Siodmak had followed the continuity from the earlier Ghost of Frankenstein, which had left the monster blind, with the brain (and voice) of Ygor (Bela Lugosi). Universal cut the monster’s (Lugosi’s) dialogue and all references to the creature’s blindness, rendering his actions incomprehensible, and destroying the effect of a moment near the end where the monster is recharged, opens his eyes, and smiles malevolently: he can see again.
House of Frankenstein, based on Siodmak’s story “The Devil’s Brood,” adds Dracula to the group, and takes Larry Talbot to his romantic-tragic end: as the wolf man, he is killed by a silver bullet, shot from the hand of “one who loves enough to understand”—his Gypsy girlfriend. Once again, Universal’s subsequent films in this series, House of Dracula and Abbott and Costello Meet Frankenstein, though not written by Siodmak, followed the pattern he had established.

When Siodmak turned to directing (usually his own scripts), the overall quality of his writing suffered, as the titles of those films, from Bride of the Gorilla to Ski Fever, indicate. And his direction (except for Magnetic Monster) was weak. But (even discounting his work on two films which some critics rate highly: I Walked with a Zombie—a voodoo Jane Eyre, one of Val Lewton’s pseudo-horror follow-ups to Cat People—and The Beast with Five Fingers, a hoax horror picture—the disembodied Hand of Orlok), he had already left a rich genre-film legacy that makes up for a dozen films such as Curucu, Beast of the Amazon and Love Slaves of the Amazon.

—Anthony Ambrogio

SLOCOMBE, Douglas

Films as Cinematographer:

1945 Dead of Night (Crichton, Dearden, and Hamer)
1946 The Captive Heart (Dearden)
1947 Hue and Cry (Crichton) (co); The Loves of Joanna Godden (Frend); It Always Rains on Sunday (Hamer)
1948 Saraband for Dead Lovers (Saraband) (Dearden and Relph); Another Shore (Crichton)
1949 Kind Hearts and Coronets (Hamer); A Run for Your Money (Frend)
1950 Dance Hall (Crichton); Cage of Gold (Dearden)
1951 The Lavender Hill Mob (Crichton); The Man in the White Suit (Mackendrick); His Excellency (Hamer)
1952 Mandy (The Story of Mandy; Crash of Silence) (Mackendrick)
1953 The Titfield Thunderbolt (Crichton); The Love Lottery (Crichton)
1954 Lease of Life (Frend); Ludwig II (Käntner)
1955 Touch and Go (The Light Touch) (Truman)
1956 Sailor Beware! (Barry); The Man in the Sky (Crichton); Heaven and Earth (Brook)
1957 The Smallest Show on Earth (Big Time Operators) (Dearden); Davy (Relph); Barnacle Bill (Frend)
1958 Tread Softly Stranger (Barry)
1960 Circus of Horrors (Hayes); The Boy Who Stole a Million (Crichton)
1961 The Mark (Green); Taste of Fear (Scream of Fear) (Holt); The Young Ones (Wonderful to Be Young) (Furie)
1962 Freud: The Secret Passion (Huston); The L-Shaped Room (Forbes)
1963 The Servant (Losey); The Third Secret (Crichton)
1964 Guns at Batasi (Guillermin); A High Wind in Jamaica (Mackendrick)
1965 Promise Her Anything (Hiller)
1966 The Blue Max (Guillermin)
1967 Dance of the Vampires (The Fearless Vampire Killers) (Polanski)
1968 Boom (Losey); The Lion in Winter (Harvey)
1969 The Italian Job (Collinson)
1970 The Buttercup Chain (Miller)
1971 The Music Lovers (Russell); Murphy’s War (Yates)
1972 Travels with My Aunt (Cukor)
1973 Jesus Christ Superstar (Jewison)
1974 The Great Gatsby (Clayton); The Marseille Contract (The Destructors) (Parrish)
1975 Rollerball (Jewison); Love among the Ruins (Cukor); The Maids (Miles); Hedda (Nunn)
1976 The Sailor Who Fell from Grace with the Sea (Carlino); Nasty Habits (Lindsay-Hogg)
1977 Julia (Zinnemann); Close Encounters of the Third Kind (Spielberg) (co)
1978 Caravans (Fargo)
1979 Lost and Found (Frank); The Lady Vanishes (Page); The Corn Is Green (Cukor)
1980 Nijinsky (Ross)
1981 Raiders of the Lost Ark (Spielberg)
1983 The Pirates of Penzance (Leach); Never Say Never Again (Kershner)
1984 Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom (Spielberg)
1985 Water (Clement)
1986 Lady Jane (Nunn)
1989 Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade (Spielberg)

Publications

By SLOCOMBE: articles—

Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1940.
Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1965.
Image et Son (Paris), May 1969.
Film Making (London), June 1976.
Positif (Paris), September 1981.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), November 1981.

On SLOCOMBE: articles—

Screen International (London), 17 January 1976.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), May 1978.

* * *

Douglas Slocombe’s career remains indelibly associated with his work at Ealing Studios and especially with its most radical and enduringly relevant films. It is impossible to think of Kind Hearts and Coronets, or Man in the White Suit, or Mandy aside from their particular look, the precision and integrity of their black-and-white cinematography, the ‘real blacks and pure whites’ that Slocombe mentions in interview, the subtlety of their shading, all are as much part of their meaning as the performances or direction.

His career falls into three periods: Ealing, to 1959; a free-lance period dominated by work with Losey, John Huston, Mackendrick and Polanski, through the sixties and early seventies; and a final period of work with Steven Spielberg from 1977. In between were a variety of varyingly successful international productions which have left him with a certain scepticism concerning large budgets and bankable names. He works best with directors who have a very intense and personal vision.

Slocombe’s early experiences as a news cameraman thrust into the action during the early years of the war in Europe with nothing more than a camera and an instinct for catching the essence of an event, have remained seminal to his mode of work, his enjoyment of cinema and his scepticism concerning received wisdom. It was Cavalcanti, Ealing’s ‘creative catalyst,’ who invited him to join the studio, after his war footage had been used in several documentaries. He shot exteriors for Crichton’s For Those in Peril, and had the briefest initiation to studio work as camera operator on Champagne Charlie, before starting work, without any formal training, as cinematographer. Knowing from his newsreel experience how to shoot in natural light, he now had to learn, on his feet, how to simulate that effect. Even now, he has said, called on to shoot a courtroom scene he thinks not of how such scenes are usually shot but of the very particular needs and opportunities offered by the project in hand. Ealing remains for him a memory of passionate debate and fervent exploration. With Mackendrick, Hamer and Crichton he found directors who in their different ways were similarly working ‘on the edge’ and to an extent against the grain. It is typical that he should solve the technical problem of Alec Guinness’s multiple characters in Kind Hearts and Coronets in the camera itself, a solution that demanded absolute preclusion (the camera was nailed to the floor and no one but Slocombe was permitted to rewind the film). Likewise, never having seen anyone shoot a night scene in the studio, he had to improvise from observation and early experience as a photographer.

With Saraband for Dead Lovers, his first colour film, he was determined to bring to it the same scale of contrast as he had used with black-and-white film, rather than follow the rules for shooting with Technicolour, a decision not welcomed at the time. The final effect was romantic and expressive, and despite the film’s lack of success, he looks back with affection on the technical complexity of the Technicolour process (it necessitated over printing the separate colours) and relishes the fact that printing from Technicolour negatives remains pure and accurate despite the passage of time. He wrestled with the short-lived Todd-AO, much hyped at the time, and welcomed Eastmancolour’s increased subtlety of tone and greater resolution. On Cage of Gold he began working with Chic Waterson, who remained his operator for some twenty-five years. What Slocombe lost in the physicality of handling the camera he made up in accurate awareness of detail in shot.

Both The Servant, a dark look at class and power in sixties Britain, and John Huston’s Freud, offered him opportunities to continue and develop explorations in black-and-white cinematography which he had begun at Ealing. Losey required a new intricacy of camera movement and atmospheric lighting, while Huston required the creation of five very different visual styles to signal, narrative, flash-back, dream, nightmare and memory. On both films Slocombe exploited negative overexposure in order to emphasise contrast. Elsewhere work for Polanski (The Fearless Vampire Killers) and Mackendrick (A High Wind in Jamaica) offered opportunities for varyingly ironic and romantic use of colour.

Nothing could be further from the claustrophobia of Losey’s The Servant than the expansive world of the Indiana Jones films. After shooting the India footage on Spielberg’s earlier Close Encounters of the Third Kind, Slocombe was rehired for Raiders of the Lost Ark and moved from films which might require some 300 setups to ones which could involve some 2,000. Working with a director who was fully conversant with both cinema aesthetics and technical detail offered opportunity for discussion and manoeuvre. Characteristically Slocombe looked for the simplest solutions. Two shots might be filmed as one. A different lens would obviate the need for a zoom. The key, he has said, is to look for the essential, ‘for what would catch the imagination,’ for the simplest way to tell a story, for what would most forcefully embody the drama and carry greatest impact. With all the technical sophistication at hand, that was sometimes simply the face of the actor Harrison Ford itself. Arguably the recourse to these close and medium shots underscores the adventure stories’ human scale and deepens their romanticism.

Slocombe’s long career has not been free from duds, but in common with the very greatest cinematographers, his best work derives its integrity and precision from its absolute faithfulness to the particular nature of the project in hand, and to the basic physical interaction of camera, light and film.

—Verina Glaessner

SMITH, Dick

Makeup Artist. Nationality: American. Born: Larchmont, New York, 26 June 1922. Education: Attended Yale University, New Haven, Connecticut, graduated 1943. Military Service: During World War II. Career: Worked in theater groups; 1945—joined NBC as staff artist, then founded and head of makeup department for NBC-TV until 1959, and responsible for all shows, including The Last War, 1946, A Christmas Carol, 1948, Cyrano, 1949; Macbeth, 1954, Alice in Wonderland, 1955, Victoria Regina, 1957, The Alligator People, 1959, The Moon and Sixpence, 1959, Way Out, Dark Shadow, and The Picture of Dorian Gray; later TV work includes The Power and the Glory, 1961, and Mark Twain Tonight!, 1967; 1962—first makeup film design, for Requiem for a Heavyweight. Awards: Academy Award and British Academy Award, for Amadeus, 1984.

Films as Makeup Artist and Special Effects Makeup Artist:

1962 Requiem for a Heavyweight (Nelson); All the Way Home (Segal); It’s a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World (Kramer) (co)
1963 The Cardinal (Preminger) (co)
1964 What a Way to Go! (Lee Thompson) (co); Marco the Magnificent (de la Patelliere); The World of Henry Orient (Hill)
1965 Harvey Middelman, Fireman (Pintoff)
1969 Me, Natalie (Coe); Midnight Cowboy (Schlesinger) (consultant)
1970 House of Dark Shadows (Curtis); Little Big Man (Penn) (co)
1971 Who Is Harry Kellerman and Why Is He Saying Those Terrible Things about Me? (Grosbard)
1972 The Godfather (Coppola)
1973 The Exorcist (Friedkin)
1974 The Godfather, Part II (Coppola)
1975 The Sunshine Boys (Ross); The Stepford Wives (Forbes)
1976 Burnt Offerings (Curtis); Taxi Driver (Scorsese)
1977 Marathon Man (Schlesinger); The Sentinel (Winner); Exorcist II: The Heretic (Boorman)
1978 The Fury (De Palma) (uncredited); The Deer Hunter (Scorsese)
1980 Altered States (Russell)
1981 Ghost Story (Irvin); Nighthawks (Malmuth); Dogs of War (Irvin); Scanners (Cronenberg); The Fan (Bianchi)
1982 Tootsie (Pollack)
1983 The Hunger (Scott) (co)
1984 Amadeus (Forman)
1988 Poltergeist III (Sherman); Everybody’s All American (Hackford)
1989 Suto Honu (Sweet Home) (Kiyoshi Kurosawa)
1990 Tales from the Darkside: The Movie (Harrison)

Publications

By SMITH: articles—

Cinefantastique (New York), April/May 1985.
Cinefex (Riverside), June 1995.

On SMITH: articles—

Film Comment (New York), November/December 1978.
Cinefantastique (New York), Summer 1981.
TCI, May 1993.

* * *

After years of lobbying for attention, the makeup artists of Hollywood finally won recognition with the establishment of a permanent makeup Academy Award category in 1981. It is unfortunate that it took the grotesqueries of the modern horror film to garner such recognition, for much extremely creative work has been done in the makeup field throughout the history of the cinema, from the obvious brilliance of Karloff’s Frankenstein and Welles’s Kane to the more subtle changes that made Marilyn Monroe the most remarkable face of the 1950s.

Among the artists long overdue recognition is Dick Smith. While he shared the 1984 Oscar with Paul Le Blanc for Amadeus, his remarkable career began in the 1930s when he was a student doing makeup for the Yale drama group. Unquestionably the first important makeup artist of television—he was the first staff makeup artist at NBC and was director of their makeup department for 14 years—he worked on such plays as Way Out, Dark Shadow, the “live” presentation of Victoria Regina in which Claire Bloom aged from 28 to 80 during the hour-long presentation, and David Susskind’s production of The Picture of Dorian Gray. His many developments and inventions during that tenure include makeup for color television and foam-latex masks flexible enough to allow for the performer’s own facial expressions.

In the 1960s Smith began to work in feature films. Throughout the 1970s and 1980s he created an impressive gallery of remarkable faces: Dustin Hoffman as the 121-year-old Jack Crabbe in Little Big Man; Marlon Brando as the aging Mafia boss Don Corleone in The Godfather; Linda Blair as the levitating, venom-spitting Regan, object of aged Max von Sydow’s priestly ministrations, in The Exorcist; Robert De Niro as the increasingly manic Travis Bickle in Taxi Driver; William Hurt as Eddie Jessup metamorphosed into a Neanderthal man in Altered States; David Bowie’s transformations from 18 through 190 in The Hunger.

Much of Smith’s work took a considerable length of time and the patience of the performer involved. For Little Big Man Smith made 12 appliances which, linked together, covered Hoffman’s head, a process which took five hours a day to apply. Nevertheless, when necessary Smith was able to adapt to the performer’s demands: when Marlon Brando preferred not to undergo extensive daily makeup preparations for The Godfather, Smith used his university training in dentistry, implanting a dental plunger which pushed out the skin at the jowls. Many of Smith’s most ingenious effects evolved from his extensive knowledge of his materials: for the “HELP ME” which appeared like welts on Linda Blair’s stomach in The Exorcist, Smith painted the words on her latex bodysuit with a cleaning fluid which puffed up through a chemical reaction.

His work in makeup also involved the invention of other visual effects. While abhorring excessive violence, he cleverly invented several horrifying effects for 1970s cinema, notably the realistic depiction of bullet hits: in a 1982 interview with the Los Angeles Herald-Examiner, Smith explained the effect achieved for Sterling Hayden’s assassination in The Godfather: “I made a precise hole by putting a thin metal disk on Sterling Hayden’s forehead to protect it; sticking a little explosive squib on the disk; running the wires back through his hair; applying an entire foam-rubber forehead over the disk, leaving an unglued pocket around the squib; injecting ‘blood’ into the pocket. When the squib was detonated, it blew a hole in the skin—and the ‘blood’ came leaking out.”

While inspiring a new generation of makeup artists—among his protégés the Oscar-winner Rick Baker—Smith remained low-key, working out of his studio in Larchmont, New York. Among his other accomplishments: Monster Makeup and Horror Makeup Kits, mass-marketed in 1976. Having indulged in horror fantasies as a college student by terrorizing Yale students with various incarnations, he thus made available the tools of such fantasies to a new generation of would-be makeup artists.

—Doug Tomlinson

SMITH, Jack Martin

Art Director. Nationality: American. Education: Studied architecture, University of Southern California, Los Angeles. Career: 1938–53—sketch artist and designer, MGM; then designer, 1953–61, and supervising art director, 1961–75, 20th Century-Fox. Awards: Academy Award, for Cleopatra, 1963, Fantastic Voyage, 1966, and Hello, Dolly!, 1969.

Films as Art Director:

- 1939 The Wizard of Oz (Fleming)
- 1944 Meet Me in St. Louis (Minnelli)
- 1945 Yolanda and the Thief (Minnelli)
- 1946 Holiday in Mexico (Sidney); Ziegfeld Follies (Minnelli)
- 1948 The Pirate (Minnelli); Summer Holiday (Mamoulian); Easter Parade (Walters); Words and Music (Taurag)
- 1949 Madame Bovary (Minnelli); On the Town (Kelly and Donen)
- 1950 Nancy Goes to Rio (Leonard); Summer Stock (Walters)
- 1951 Royal Wedding (Donen); Show Boat (Sidney); An American in Paris (Minnelli) (uncredited)
- 1952 The Belle of New York (Walters); Million Dollar Mermaid (LeRoy)
- 1953 I Love Melvin (Weis); Dangerous When Wet (Walters); Easy to Love (Walters)
- 1954 Valley of the Kings (Pirosh)
- 1955 White Feather (Webb); Soldier of Fortune (Dmytryk); Seven Cities of Gold (Webb)
- 1956 Carousel (H. King); The Man in the Gray Flannel Suit (Johnson); Bigger than Life (N. Ray); Bandido (Fleischer); Teenage Rebel (E. Goulding)
- 1957 Boy on a Dolphin (Negulesco); An Affair to Remember (McC Carey); Peyton Place (Robson)
- 1958 The Barbarian and the Geisha (Huston)
- 1959 Woman Obsessed (Hathaway); The Best of Everything (Negulesco)
- 1960 Can-Can (W. Lang); North to Alaska (Hathaway)
- 1961 All Hands on Deck (Taurag); The Comancheros! (Curtiz); Marines, Let’s Go! (Walsh); Pirates of Tortuga (Webb); Return to Peyton Place (J. Ferrer); Sanctuary (Richardson); The Second Time Around (V. Sherman); Snow White and the Three Stooges (W. Lang); Voyage to the Bottom of the Sea (I. Allen); Wild in the Country (Dunne)
- 1962 Bachelor Flat (Tashlin); Five Weeks in a Balloon (I. Allen); Hemingway’s Adventures of a Young Man (Ritt); Mr. Hobbs Takes a Vacation (Koster); State Fair (J. Ferrer); * Tender Is the Night* (H. King)
- 1963 Cleopatra (Mankiewicz); Move Over, Darling (Gordon); The Stripper (Schaffner); Take Her, She’s Mine (Koster)
- 1964 Fate Is the Hunter (Nelson); Goodbye Charlie (Minnelli); The Pleasure Seekers (Negulesco); Rio Concho (Douglas); Shock Treatment (Sanders); What a Way to Go! (Lee Thompson)
- 1965 The Agony and the Ecstasy (Reed); Dear Brigitte (Koster); Do Not Disturb (Levy); John Goldfarb, Please Come Home! (Lee Thompson); Mortuari (Wicki); The Reward (Bourguignon); Von Ryan’s Express (Robson)
- 1966 Batman (Martinson); Fantastic Voyage (Fleischer); I Deal in Danger (Grauman); Our Man Flint (Daniel Mann); Smoky (G. Sherman); Stagecoach (Douglas); Way . . . Way Out (Douglas)
- 1967 Caprice (Tashlin); Doctor Dolittle (Fleischer); A Guide for the Married Man (Kelly); Hombre (Ritt); In Like Flint (Douglas); Tony Rome (Douglas); The St. Valentine’s Day Massacre (Corman); Valley of the Dolls (Robson); The Thin-Flat Man (Kershner)
- 1968 Banderol! (McLaglen); The Boston Strangler (Fleischer); The Detective (Douglas); Planet of the Apes (Schaffner); Pretty Poison (Black); The Sweet Ride (Hart); The Secret Life of an American Wife (Axelrod)
- 1969 Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid (Hill); Che! (Fleischer); Hello, Dolly! (Kelly); Justine (Cukor); Daughter of the Mind (Grauman—for TV)
1970  Beneath the Planet of the Apes (Post); Beyond the Valley of the Dolls (Meyer); Cover Me, Babe (Black); M*A*S*H (Altman); Move (Rosenberg); Myra Breckenridge (Sarne); Tora! Tora! Tora! (Fleischer, Masuda, and Fukushima); The Challenge (Smith); Tribes (The Soldier Who Declared Peace) (Sargent)
1971  Escape from the Planet of the Apes (Taylor); Powderkeg (Heyes)
1972  Fireball Forward (Chomsky); The Culpepper Cattle Company (Richards)
1973  Ace Eli and Rodger of the Skies
1974  Il sospetto (Maselli)
1977  Gussow, Mel, On SMITH: books—

Publications

By SMITH: articles—

Film Comment (New York), May/June, 1978.

On SMITH: books—

Barsacq, Leon, Caligari’s Cabinet and Other Grand Illusions, Boston, 1976.

On SMITH: articles—

Classic Images (Muscatine), April 1994.

Jack Martin Smith symbolizes the master Hollywood art director. In a 40-year career he worked on the greatest of studio films, and the finest of location efforts. He probably reached his peak of public fame in the 1960s, beginning with the spectacle of Cleopatra and ending with the impressive work in Tora! Tora! Tora!. He won the Oscar (with others) for Cleopatra and an Academy Award nomination for Tora! Tora! Tora!. In between he also earned Academy Awards for Fantastic Voyage and Hello, Dolly! All these films were made for Twentieth Century-Fox during the final years of the reign of Darryl F. Zanuck. All established a style of the spectacular which Hollywood would abandon in the 1970s, and which we probably will not see again. Smith was among the best at plying the trade of the art director during an era when non-science-fiction, non-computer-generated images mattered.

But Smith’s career had another equally significant phase. During his first 15 years in the business he labored as a member of the Freed unit on some of the greatest films ever made at MGM, including many of the famous musicals: Meet Me in St. Louis, Yolanda and the Thief, Easter Parade, and An American in Paris (the last uncredited). As such Smith and others built up the fantasy world which Arthur Freed, Gene Kelly, Vincente Minnelli, Judy Garland, and Fred Astaire set to music and dance.

Just consider the case of Meet Me in St. Louis. This film set a vision of St. Louis at the turn of the century which many film fans think perfectly represented that era. Surely it was a vision of American family life to which all aspired, but few actually achieved. Yet Minnelli and his skillful crew never ventured outside MGM’s Culver City backlot. It was Smith, and others, who created the mythical “St. Louis” which thousands have grown to love.

In the 1950s, with the collapse of the MGM factory, Smith moved to Twentieth Century-Fox. There he became the supervisor of art directors, and participated in little actual day-to-day designing. During this period filming moved more and more on location, and Cleopatra was made in Italy rather than Hollywood. But still the flair of the art director was required. Smith moved easily from genre to genre. In Fantastic Voyage his design team created the inside of a human; for Hello, Dolly! he had to “best” the sets of a Broadway musical almost everyone had seen. These opportunities provided Smith with the conditions to project some of his greatest designs.

—Douglas Gomery

SOLINAS, Franco

Films as Writer:

1951 Persiane chiuse (Behind Closed Shutters) (Comencini)
1952 Gli eroi della domenica (Camerini)
1955 La donna più bella del mondo (Leonard)
1956 I difianzati della morte (Marcellini)
1957 “Giovanna” ep. of Die Windrose (The Wind Rose) (Pontecorvo); La grande strada azzurra (The Long Blue Road) (Pontecorvo)
1960 Kapò (Pontecorvo); Les Dents du diable (The Savage Innocents) (Ray)
1961 Madame Sans-Gêne (Madame) (Christian-Jaque); Salvatore Giuliano (Rosi); Vanina Vanini (The Betrayer) (Rossellini)
1965 Le soldatesse (The Camp Followers) (Zurlini); La vita violenta (Heusch and Rondi)
1966 La battaglia di Algeri (The Battle of Algiers) (Pontecorvo)
1967 Quien sabe? (A Bullet for the General) (Damiani)
1968 Il mercenario (The Mercenary) (Corbucci); La resa dei conti (The Big Gundown) (Sollima)
1969 Tepepa (Petroni); Queimada! (Burn!) (Pontecorvo) (co)
1972 Etat de siège (State of Siege) (Costa-Gavras)
1974 Il sospetto (Maselli)
1977  Mr. Klein (Losey)
1983  Hanna K (Costa-Gavras)

Publications

By SOLINAS: books—

On SOLINAS: book—

Cosulich, Callisto, Scrivere il cinema: Franco Solinas, Rimini, 1984 + filmo.

On SOLINAS: articles—

* * *

One of the most politically committed of European screenwriters, Franco Solinas joined the French Resistance at age 16 and after the Second World War became a member of the Italian Communist Party. He also worked for its daily paper, L’Unità, and for Paese Sera.

As a screenwriter Solinas’ name is inextricably linked with that of the director Gillo Pontecorvo. They first worked together when Pontecorvo directed Solinas’ Giovanna, a characteristic story about a woman coming to political consciousness, and an episode in the Joris Ivens project Die Windrose, a compendium film about the political commitment of women on an international scale. In 1957 Solinas published his novel Squarciò, which concerned a fisherman fighting oppressive and corrupt forces in the fishing industry. He adapted this for the cinema as La grande strada azzurra, and Pontecorvo, who directed it, described the film as the work of his apprenticeship. His other films with Pontecorvo were Kapò, set in the Nazi death camps, The Battle of Algiers, a remarkably detailed film about the war in Algeria which distinguished itself both by its tremendous dramatic energy and its refusal to caricature the colonialist forces while nonetheless firmly taking the side of the freedom fighters, and Queimada!, an extremely subtle analysis of colonialism, starring Marlon Brando, which was clearly influenced by the writings of Frantz Fanon. His work with Costa-Gavras was slightly less successful; in particular State of Siege, though undeniably a powerful film on the emotional level, lacks the political complexities and subtleties of his work with Pontecorvo.

Solinas has always been drawn to violent confrontations at politically significant moments of history. Following the Rossellinian principle of broadly didactic filmmaking (he worked, significantly, on the script of Rossellini’s Vittoria) he has, as John Michalczyk put it in Cineaste, always “walked the tightrope between politicized fiction and fictionalized politics,” writing not documentary scripts but extremely carefully documented ones. His films are notable for their awareness of and adequacy to political complexity and contradiction, and their avoidance of facile analyses and solutions.

Although Solinas is probably best known for his films with Pontecorvo and Costa-Gavras, he also made a notable contribution to several interesting “spaghetti westerns.” Again, his decision to work within a popular genre was a characteristically political act. As he himself explained: “movies have an accessory and not a decisive usefulness in the various events and elements that contribute to the transformation of society. It is naive to believe that you can start a revolution with a movie and even more naive to theorize about doing so. Political films are useful on the one hand if they contain a correct analysis of reality, and on the other if they are made in such a way as to have that analysis reach the largest possible audience.”* Solinas wrote the dialogue for Damiani’s A Bullet for the General, the story of Sollima’s The Big Gundown, and with Giorgio Arlorio, with whom he had worked on Queimada!, the story of Corbucci’s A Professional Gun. As Christopher Frayling has pointed out in his book Spaghetti Westerns, the central relationship between Sir William Walker and José Dolores in Queimada! finds various distinct echoes in these films, all of which “share a loose allegiance to Fanonism, which means that the targets they attack are at least underpinned by a coherent social and political analysis.” A Bullet for the General even includes a critique of the politics of Kazan’s Viva Zapata! and a possible reference to Eisenstein’s Que Viva Mexico, as well as discussions of guerrilla tactics and the problems of the consolidation of power.

How the politically astute Solinas would have reacted to changing political circumstances will, unfortunately, never be known. He died on the eve of departing for the United States, where he was going to write a film for the director Martin Scorsese.

—Julian Petley

SOUTHERN, Terry

Films as Writer:

1964  Dr. Strangelove (Kubrick) (co-sc)
1965  The Cincinnati Kid (Jewison) (co-sc); The Loved One (T. Richardson) (co-sc)
1967  Eye of the Devil (Lee Thompson) (co-sc, uncredited); Casino Royale (J. Huston, V. Guest, Parrish, McGrath, K. Hughes, Talmadge) (co-sc, uncredited)
1968  Barbarella (Vadim) (co-sc); Candy (C. Marquand) (original novel only)
1969 Easy Rider (D. Hopper) (co-sc); The Magic Christian (McGrath) (co-sc, from orig novel)
1970 End of the Road (Avakian) (co-sc)
1988 The Telephone (Torn) (co-sc)

Publications

By SOUTHERN: articles—

‘‘Now dig this,’’ an interview with Mike Golden, in Creative Screenwriting (Washington, D.C.), Winter 1996.

By SOUTHERN: novels—

Flash and Filigree, 1958.
As ‘‘Maxwell Kenton,’’ with Mason Hoffenberg, Candy, 1964.
Blue Movie, 1970.
Texas Summer, 1992.

On SOUTHERN: articles—

Obituary in EPD Film (Frankfurt), December 1995.
Grand Street, Spring 1996.
Obituary in Sewanee Review, Summer 1996.
New Yorker, 22 June 1998.

* * *

Terry Southern’s place in the sixties counterculture pantheon rests on decidedly slim ground when it comes to the movies, despite working on two of the decade’s most influential films. His cowriting credit on the hit apocalyptic black comedy Dr. Strangelove appeared to herald a long and lucrative sojourn in the cinema, yet of his seven subsequent films only Easy Rider enjoyed anything approaching the same impact. When the sixties ceased to swing, so did Southern’s career, his belated one-off comeback proving a barely-seen disaster. A specialist in off-the-wall black humour, Southern could undoubtedly score points off satire’s favourite targets (politics, militarism, racism, corporate and individual greed, sexual hypocrisy, dehumanising science) but appears to have spent any genuine ire on Strangelove, obliging later work to settle for jaded leftovers.

A cult success since the late 1950s, Southern found himself heading into the mainstream in 1963 when Magic Christian fans Stanley Kubrick and Peter Sellers invited him on board for Dr. Strangelove. Though working from a ‘‘straight’’ original, Peter George’s novel Red Alert, Kubrick found himself drawn to the terrible absurdity of imminent nuclear annihilation, an approach ideally suited for Southern. While most cold-war dramas now appear wearily dated, the nightmare comedy of Strangelove remains compelling, if overly mannered, the idea that the world could be ended by a middle-aged general driven insane by his impotence (which he blames on the Russians) both amusing and awful. As with most multi-authored scripts, Southern’s exact contribution to the film is difficult to determine. The childishly obscene/absurd character names (Strangelove, Merkin Muffley, Buck Turgidson, Bat Guano) have a Southern ring, as does George C. Scott’s oft quoted ‘‘I don’t say we wouldn’t get our hair mussed, but I do say no more than ten to twenty million people killed.’’ Coupled with the mainstream publication of Candy, Southern’s then scandalous reworking of Candide, Strangelove turned him into a hot film property. The MGM-affiliated outfit Filmways was first in line, though two of the projects on offer called for rewrites rather than original inspiration. For The Cincinnati Kid, Southern did an efficient, if straightforward job of shaping up the story of poker-hustlers assembling for the game of the decade (the best Southern touch is the throwaway moment where slutish femme fatale Ann-Margaret cuts up a piece of jigsaw puzzle to make it fit where she wants it to fit). Injecting some Strangelovian touches into Christopher Isherwood’s screenplay for The Loved One, Southern fumbled the satirical ball, contributing to an ungainly, uneven charade of ‘‘daring’’ bad taste as various whacked-out characters do their thing in a world of funeral parlours and thwarted lust. Filmways let Southern in on Eye of the Devil more or less at the start, but the weird period tale of ritual pagan sacrifice in a noble French family proved alien territory for a talent happier with more contemporary oddities.

Recruited for the ‘‘adult’’ comic strip movie Barbarella, Roger Vadim’s dubious attempt to transform then-wife Jane Fonda into the thinking man’s fantasy sex doll, Southern had the chance to develop a Candy-like narrative of decadent corruption defeated by honest sexual passion, yet the perils of scriptwriting by committee took their toll. Cobbled together by Southern, Vadim, original creator Jean Claude Forest and at least five others, Barbarella amounts to little more than a loosely structured series of demurely kinky sexual encounters spiced with a little campy sadism (such as the infamous snapping dolls). Southern had some say in the casting, selecting fashionable friend Anita Pallenberg for the role of the Black Queen (voice courtesy of Fenella Fielding), and contributed at least one decent line (‘‘A lot of dramatic situations begin with screaming’’) only to find his efforts passed over in the general critical derision. Ironically, Candy itself made it to the big screen in the same year, as a coy, smug cop-out sex romp assembled with no input from either Southern or coauthor Mason Hoffenberg (it flopped).

Following a fruitless stint working on Kubrick’s screen version of A Clockwork Orange, Southern finally got a much needed break with the ultimate ‘‘sleeper’’ project Easy Rider, a vaguely antiestablishment mix of sex, drugs, bikes, and rock and roll devised by Peter Fonda and Dennis Hopper. Hired mainly to add some structure and narrative drive to the existing outline (also to lend big-name distinction to a generally sneered on project), Southern developed the borderline-normal character of small-town lawyer George Hanson (a career-making role for Jack Nicholson) and came up with the title, slang for a whore’s old man. Effective satire requires a recognisable target, however (clipped gun-toting rednecks hardly count), and Easy Rider fails to deliver. Southern dropped out early on, later complaining that Hopper and Fonda denied him proper credit for his work.
Having failed to get back with Kubrick, Southern agreed to a reteaming with Peter Sellers on an adaptation of his own The Magic Christian. Heavily reworked from the original, mostly by uncredited Pythons John Cleese and Graham Chapman, the film lacks the book’s drive and aggression, with only the various star turn attractions (notably drag artist Yul Brynner) holding much curiosity value. The infamous finale, with besuited businessmen symbolically diving for cash in a vat of excrement, repulsed both the film’s backers (obliging Sellers and friends to raise their own completion money) and audiences. The cult hit that launched Southern’s movie career became his first credited flop. The appropriately titled End of the Road, directed and cowritten by fellow Paris veteran Aram Avakian, offered more substance (and better acting) but the conventionally absurd madness-is-the-only-true-sanity theme now seemed both old hat and smug. After nearly two decades in the unproduced screenplay wilderness, Southern’s collaboration with Rip Torn (director) and Harry Nilsson (cowriter) on The Telephone proved a disastrous “comeback,” its story of an out-of-work actress experiencing mental problems provoked no audience interest at all (star Whoopi Goldberg attempted to sue the producers to stop the film’s release.) It is fair to say (as Southern readily confessed) that the looming shadow of Dr. Strangelove was just too big to escape.

—Daniel O’Brien

SPAAK, Charles

Writer. Nationality: Belgian. Born: Brussels, 25 May 1903; brother of the statesman Paul-Henri Spaak. Family: Married Janine (Spaak), daughters: the actresses Agnès Spaak and Catherine Spaak. Career: Secretary to the director Jacques Feyder; 1928—first screenplay, La Torture par l’espérance; 1949—directed the film Le Mystère Barton; 1953—author of the play Musique pour sourds. Died: In Nice, 4 February 1975.

Films as Writer:

1928 La Torture par l’espérance (Modot—short)
1929 Les Nouveaux Messieurs (Feyder)
1930 La Petite Lise (Grémillon); Accusée, levez-vous! (M. Tourneur)
1931 Un Coup de téléphone (Lacombe); Daïnah la métoîse (Grémillon—short); Pan! Pan! (Lacombe—short)
1932 Ce conchon de Morin (Lacombe); Affaire classée (Vanel—short); Le Martyre de l’obèse (Chenal); Il a été perdu une mariée (Joannon)
1933 L’Abbé Constantin (Paulin); La Maison dans la dune (Billon)
1934 Le Grand Jeu (Feyder); Aux portes de Paris (Barrois); Le Voyage imprévu (de Limur)
1935 Pension Mimosas (Feyder); Veille d’armes (L’Herbier); Les Gaietés de la finance (Forrester); Sous la griffe (Christian-Jaque); Les Epoux scandaux (Lacombe); La Bandera (Duvivier); Les Beaux Jours (M. Allégret); La Kermesse héroïque (Feyder); La Terre qui meurt (Vallée); Adémaî au moyen age (de Marguenat)
1936 Le Secret de Polichinelle (Berthomieu); La Belle Equipe (Duvivier); Les Loups entre eux (Mathot); Le Mioche (Moguy); L’Homme du jour (The Man of the Hour) (Duvivier); La Porte du large (L’Herbier); Les Bas-fonds (The Lower Depths) (Renoir)
1937 Une Femme sans importance (Choux); Mollenak (Siodmak); Aloha, le chant des îles (Mathot); Gueule d’amour (Grémillon); Orage (M. Allégret); La Grande Illusion (Grand Illusion) (Renoir)
1938 L’Étrange Monseigneur Victor (Grémillon); L’Entraineuse (Valentin); Le Récit de corail (Gleize); La Fin du jour (The End of the Day) (Duvivier); Le Dernier Tournant (Chenal)
1940 Remorques (Grémillon); L’Empreinte du Dieu (Moguy); Un tel Père et Fils (The Heart of a Nation) (Duvivier)
1941 L’Assassinat du Père Noël (Christian-Jaque); Pêchés de jeunesse (M. Tourneur); Premier bal (Christian-Jaque); La Maison des sept jeunes filles (Valentin)
1942 Le Lit à colonnes (Tual); À la belle frégeat (Valentin); Le Comte de Monte Cristo (Vernay)
1943 Carmen (Christian-Jaque); L’Escalier sans fin (Lacombe); Le Ciel est à vous (Grémillon); La Vie de plaisir (Valentin)
1944 Les Caves du Majestic (Pottier); Le Père Goriot (Vernay)
1945 Jéricho (Calef); Patrie (Daquin); La Part de l’ombre (Dellanoy)
1946 L’Affaire du collier de la reine (The Queen’s Necklace) (L’Herbier); L’Idiot (The Idiot) (Lapin); Panique (Duvivier); L’Homme au chapeau rond (Billon); Les Chouans (Calef); La Revanche de Roger-la-Honte (Cayatte)
1947 Une Belle Garce (Daroy); Eternal confit (Lapin); Route sans issue (Stelli)
1948 D’homme à hommes (Man to Man) (Christian-Jaque); Le Dessous des cartes (Cayatte); Retour à la vie (Cayatte, Lampin, and Dréville); Combats sans haine (Michel—doc)
1949 Le Mystère Barton (+ d); Black Jack (Duvivier); Portrait d’un assassin (Roland)
1950 Justice est faite (Justice Is Done) (Cayatte); Albert Ier, Roi des Belges (Gaspard-Huit—doc)
1951 Le Banquet des fraudeurs (Storck); La Nuit est mon royaume (Lacombe)
1952 Nous sommes tous des assassins (Cayatte); Les Sept Péchés capitaux (The Seven Capital Sins) (De Filippo); Adorables Créatures (Adorable Creatures) (Christian-Jaque)
1953 La Pensionnaire (Lattuada); Jeunes Mariés (Grangier); Opinioni pubblica (Corgnati); Avant le déluge (Cayatte)
1954 Le Grand Jeu (Flesh and Women) (Siodmak); Thérèse Raquin (Carné); Scuola elementare (Lattuada)
1955 Vestire gli ignudi (Paglieri); Recontre à Paris (Lapin); Le Dossier noir (Cayatte)
1956 Paris-Palace-Hôtel (Verneuil); Crime et châtiment (Lapin)
1957 Charmants garçons (Decoin); Quand la femme s’en mêle (Y. Allégret)
1958 Christine (Gaspard-Huit); Les Tricheurs (The Cheaters) (Carné)
1959 Normandie-Niemen (Dréville); Vers l’estase (Wheeler)
1960 Katia (Magnificent Sinner) (Siodmak); “Le Divorce” ep. of La Française et l’amour (Love and the Frenchwoman) (Christian-Jaque)
1962 Le Caporal épinglé (Renoir); Mathias Sandorf (Lapin); La Chambre ardente (The Burning Court) (Duvivier); Cartouche (de Broca)
1963 La Glaive et la balance (Two Are Guilty) (Cayatte); Germinal (Y. Allégret); Blague dans le coin (Labro)
1965  Un Milliard dans un billard (Gessner)
1973  La Main à couper (Perier)

Publications

By SPAAK: books—

With others, La Kermesse héroïque (script) in Avant-Scène (Paris), May 1963.
With Jean Renoir, Grande Illusion (script), New York, 1968.

By SPAAK: articles—

Eventail (Paris), 11 January 1925–14 February 1926.
“Gaston Modot,” in Cinéa-Ciné pour tous, no. 80, 1927.
“A propos du Capitaine Fracasse (Alberto Cavalcanti),” in Cinegraph, no. 5, 1929.
“Cagliostro (Richard Oswald),” in Cinegraph, no. 4, 1929.
“Trop tard . . . ,” in L’Écran français, no. 8, 1945.
Film Culture (New York), December 1957.

On SPAAK: books—

On SPAAK: articles—

Unifrance Film (Paris), August 1950.

Film Culture, vol. 3, no. 5, December 1957.
Film Français (Paris), no. 1571, March 1975.
Technicien du Film (Paris), no. 224, March 1975.
Ecran (Paris), no. 35, April 1975.
Film Français (Paris), no. 2511, June 1994.

* * *

In a career that embraced both the silent era and the New Wave, Charles Spaak was a mainstay of the French cinema for some 40 years, providing more than 100 scripts for more than 40 directors. If he lacked the enviable originality of Prévert or Jeanson’s brilliance for dialogue, Spaak outstripped his two contemporaries as a sure-footed, prolific writer of neatly crafted scenarios noted for clear structures and well-delineated character parts. For Spaak filmmaking was a symbiotic undertaking between scriptwriter and director and, for the partnership to work, shared moral, political, and philosophical attitudes were essential. The most fruitful exchange of creative energy came with Feyder, Renoir, Grémillon and Cayatte, though few would discount his collaborations with Duvivier, Christian-Jaque, or Carné.

Spaak’s early career was fostered by his fellow Belgian, Jacques Feyder, initially as his secretary then as co-adapter of Les Nouveaux Messieurs. Original scenarios followed in the mid-thirties, with indications of Spaak’s abiding themes and concern for tightly woven narratives. In Le Grand Jeu, set in a Moroccan cabaret, the themes of fate and self-destructive passion are explored through a legionnaire’s obsession for a Parisian vamp, while in Pension Mimosas, the owner of a Nice guest house is consumed by a secret passion for her wayward godson. The same year saw the triumph of La Kermesse héroïque which, through a deftly constructed narrative replete with dramatic set-pieces, tells how resourceful Flemish women, abandoned by their cowardly husbands, handled to their own satisfaction, invading Spaniards.

The thirties also saw important associations begin with Duvivier and Renoir. Spaak’s work with Duvivier included five original scenarios and three adaptations, namely La Bandera, Panique, and La Chambre ardente. If all testify to Spaak’s skill in distilling workable scenarios with attractive main roles, La Bandera is particularly significant as the film which established Jean Gabin as the sympathetic male destroyed by a treacherous woman. The collaborative chemistry, so essential to Spaak, was occasionally lacking with Duvivier, but in their two undoubted successes the writer’s abiding concern with community is evident. In La Belle Equipe—frequently taken to embody the collectivist ideology of the Popular Front—a group of unemployed men wins the lottery and opens a restaurant, only to find their unity of purpose threatened by another of Spaak’s alluring vamps. Collective commitment is again central to La Fin du jour where a heterogeneous group of actors, often disputing between themselves, defend their retirement home against closure. Both films derive dramatic intensity from Spaak’s typically tight focus on place and action.

Spaak’s limited work with Renoir was also amongst his finest. After the contentious free rendering of Gorky’s Les Bas-Fonds came collaboration on an original scenario: La Grande Illusion. Here, in an expression of the humanistic values dear to both men, fraternity and collective endeavor are tested in a World War I prison camp setting. The simple narrative allows a marvelous array of emblematic characters, all clearly differentiated through Spaak’s dialogue. In the senseless world of conflict, honorable foes display their common humanity and seek to mitigate the evil in which they are haplessly embroiled.

Spaak’s third major partner in the thirties and early forties was Jean Grémillon. After the melodramatic tale of self-sacrifice in La Petite Lise, their most notable collaborations were a psychological study of a man prepared to see his neighbor condemned for his own crime, L’Étrange Monsieur Victor; the uplifting account of individual endeavor in Le Ciel est à vous where a determined garage-owner’s wife learns to fly; and two films featuring Jean Gabin: Gueule d’amour and Remorques. In the first, Gabin is the eponymous gueule d’amour, the handsome playboy driven to kill a flirtatious woman he cannot control, while in the second he plays a happily married tugboat captain tragically besotted with a woman he rescues. Both films extended Gabin’s screen image as the attractive male ensnared by sexually dangerous women.

Spaak’s postwar portfolio is largely characterized by his association with André Cayatte, but significant films with several other directors confirm the writer’s admirable range. He co-wrote Calef’s Jéricho exposing myths about French heroism during the Occupation; co-wrote Christian-Jaque’s film about a fashion designer’s memories in Adorables Créatures; worked with Carné on a free adaptation of Zola’s Thérèse Raquin; and provided the original scenario for Storck’s Le Banquet des fraudeurs. His association with Cayatte came to fruition in the fifties with films concerned with fundamental moral issues. Justice est faite explores euthanasia through the trial of a woman who kills her terminally ill lover; in Nous sommes tous des assassins, capital punishment is brought into question through the exposure of a criminal’s social circumstances; while in Avant le déluge the problem of delinquency is investigated when youths kill a security guard. The cycle is completed by Le Dossier noir, highlighting deficiencies in the judicial system, and Le Glaive et la balance, where natural justice becomes an issue as a lynch mob take revenge on acquitted kidnappers.

In the course of his long career Spaak adapted numerous literary classics, though he never articulated a theory of adaptation. For Yves Allégret he scripted a scaled-down version of Zola’s Germinal; with Carné he updated and transposed the action of Thérèse Raquin to 1950s Lyons and with Lamplin he relocated Crime et châtiment to modern-day Paris, while reworkings of L’Idiot and Les Bas-fonds also espoused the tradition of artistic freedom. Common to all Spaak’s adaptations is the practiced screenwriter’s awareness of what is filmically viable.

Although Spaak worked closely with many different directors, his personal, morally conservative, often misogynistic, but steadfastly humanistic vision emerges from his original scenarios and the emphasis achieved in adaptation. Despite a belief in human solidarity, a pessimism permeates his scenarios with their characteristically unhappy endings. Well-intentioned individuals are overcome by forces outside their control, decent males are led astray by treacherous females. Spaak’s practice led to solid, well-oiled plot mechanisms, often shaped through flashback, with richly satisfying parts differentiated through convincing, character-specific, dialogue. Though applauding the technical innovations of the New Wave, Spaak was unhappy with the cult of amoral individualism and immediacy, while as a conscientious, painstaking craftsman, the emphasis on creative spontaneity and unscripted dialogue was an anathema. His high-quality scenarios for successive generations of directors constituted an enduring benchmark for other writers: few, however, could emulate his colossal achievement either in quality or quantity.

—R. F. Cousins

SPENCER, Dorothy

Films as Editor:

1929 Married in Hollywood; Nix on Dames
1934 As Husbands Go (McFadden); Coming Out Party; She Was a Lady
1936 The Case against Mrs. Ames (Seiter); The Luckiest Girl in the World (Buzzell)
1937 Stand-In (Garnett); Vogues (Vogues of 1938) (Cummings)
1938 Blockade (Dieterle); Trade Winds (Garnett)
1939 Eternally Yours (Garnett); Stagecoach (Ford); Winter Carnival (Riesner)
1940 Foreign Correspondent (Hitchcock); The House across the Bay (Mayo); Slightly Honorable (Garnett)
1941 Sundown (Garnett)
1942 To Be or Not To Be (Lubitsch)
1943 Happy Land (Pichel); Heaven Can Wait (Lubitsch)
1944 Lifeboat (Hitchcock); Sweet and Low-Down (Mayo)
1945 A Royal Scandal (Lubitsch); A Tree Grows in Brooklyn (Kazan)
1946 Cluny Brown (Lubitsch); Dragonwyck (Mankiewicz); My Darling Clementine (Ford)
1947 The Ghost and Mrs. Muir (Mankiewicz)
1948 The Snake Pit (Litvak); That Lady in Ermine (Lubitsch)
1949 Down to the Sea in Ships (Hathaway)
1950 Three Came Home (Hathaway); Under My Skin (Negulesco)
1951 Fourteen Hours (Hathaway)
1952 Decision before Dawn (Litvak); Lydia Bailey (Negulesco); What Price Glory? (Ford)
1953 Man on a Tightrope (Kazan); Tonight We Sing (Leisen)
1954 Black Widow (Johnson); Demetrius and the Gladiators (Daves); Night People (Johnson)
1955 The Left Hand Of God (Dmytryk); Prince of Players (Dunne); The Rains of Ranchipur (Negulesco); Soldier of Fortune (Dmytryk)
1956 The Best Things in Life are Free (Curtiz); The Man in the Gray Flannel Suit (Johnson)
1957 A Hatful of Rain (Zinnemann)
1958 The Young Lions (Dmytryk)
1959 The Journey (Litvak); A Private’s Affair (Walsh)
1960 From the Terrace (Robson); North to Alaska (Hathaway); Seven Thieves (Hathaway)
1961 Wild in the Country (Dunne)
1963 Cleopatra (Mankiewicz)
1964 Circus World (Hathaway)
1965 Von Ryan’s Express (Robson)
1966 Lost Command (Robson)
1967  A Guide for the Married Man (Kelly); Valley of the Dolls (Robson)
1969  Daddy's Gone A-Hunting (Robson)
1971  Happy Birthday, Wanda June (Robson)
1972  Limbo (Women in Limbo) (Robson)
1974  Earthquake (Robson)
1979  The Concorde—Airport ’79 (Lowell Rich)

Publications

On SPENCER: articles—

***

Dorothy Spencer’s career as film editor spanned five decades in the industry. Beginning at the dawn of talking pictures, her work continued through the glory days of the Hollywood studio system to the widescreen extravagance of the 1950s and 1960s, working under such directors as John Ford, Alfred Hitchcock, Ernest Lubitsch, Henry Hathaway and Mark Robson. Though her early days are affiliated with independent producer Walter Wanger, she involved herself exclusively with Twentieth Century-Fox from the late 1940s until her retirement in 1979. Despite a distinguished and varied career, she was nominated for an Oscar only four times, losing out on each occasion.

Beginning her career at the age of twenty, Spencer worked as cutter on many of Wanger’s Thirties productions, including The Case against Mrs. Ames (1936) and Winter Carnival (1939). She also found herself working with director Tay Garnett on Stand In (1937), Trade Winds (1938) and Eternally Yours (1939). Her career with Wanger reached its peak with John Ford’s seminal western, Stagecoach (1939) and Hitchcock’s Foreign Correspondent (1940). In Stagecoach the editing principals of the Russian Formalists were deftly employed to convey suspense and pace. Most apparent is the chase sequence—in which the stagecoach is pursued by hostile Comanches—where the cutting is deliberately disorienting to convey the consternation of the passengers, while the crosscutting (alternating between the passengers’ point of view and shots of the besetting Indians) increases the scene’s tempo. The film was to earn Spencer her first Academy Award nomination.

In the early 1940s she began to work with Ernst Lubitsch, editing To Be or Not to Be (1942), Heaven Can Wait (1943), A Royal Scandal (1944) and Clown Brown (1946). She also completed work on her second (and final) Hitchcock film, the propagandist wartime drama, Lifeboat (1944). Notable for its expert use of limited space (the entire film is set on a lone lifeboat in the middle of the Atlantic), the film is by and large muted. However, two scenes do stand out—the harrowing build-up to a necessary amputation and the lynching of a German U-boat commander—both of which build to their climax through a methodical use of montage. A Tree Grows in Brooklyn (1945), directed by Elia Kazan, marked her first film for Twentieth Century-Fox. Among her early projects for the corporation were Dragonwyck (1946), The Ghost and Mrs. Muir (1947), and John Ford’s broodingly low-key western, My Darling Clementine (1946). Lacking significant mood music, Clementine achieved its suspense—most spectacularly in the famous O.K. Corral gunfight sequence—in its editing, a tight, pared-down construction in which only the barest (and most pertinent) of information is conveyed.

In 1948, Spencer began the first of her two assignments under producer/director Anatole Litvak; the acclaimed The Snake Pit was followed by Decision before Dawn (1952), a suspenseful espionage thriller which afforded Spencer her second Oscar nomination. It was her success in the latter that gave rise to Spencer’s long association with big-budget actioners, an association which would direct the rest of her career. In the same year as Decision before Dawn, she edited Lydia Bailey and What Price Glory?, and shortly thereafter embarked upon a long list of the Fox-patented Cinemascope pictures, beginning with Black Widow in 1954.

Though the widescreen format brought an initial rethinking of the medium’s form—traditional framing was reformulated for the wider format and the duration of scenes increased to allow audiences time to register the spectacle—such modifications were limited. By and large the editor’s task remained unaltered and Spencer’s work, from the mid-1950s onward, shows no apparent change in technique. She worked on a variety of pictures, from large-scale Biblical epics (Demetrius and the Gladiators [1954]) to Cold War anticommutist pictures (Night People [1954]) to war movies (The Young Lions [1958]). Her career in editing widescreen blockbusters reached its peak with Joseph L. Mankiewicz’s labored epic Cleopatra (1963). Taking more than four years to produce, with countless writers and a $40 million budget, the film provided Spencer with more than 70,000 feet (120 miles) of film to reduce to the final print’s 22,000 feet. A gargantuan task on every level, the film won four Academy Awards with Spencer receiving her third nomination.

Many of Spencer’s later efforts were under the direction of Mark Robson. In total they worked together on seven pictures, including Von Ryan’s Express (1965), Valley of the Dolls (1967) and Earthquake (1967). Expressing many of the concerns of the industry at the time, being big, expensive, and destructive, Earthquake marked the crowning achievement of Spencer’s work in the 1970s. A huge success, the film managed to enthral audiences with the scale and magnitude of its destruction, much of which depended on Spencer’s competent skills as editor. In between her collaborations with Robson, Spencer worked with directors Gene Kelly on A Guide for the Married Man (1967), Henry Hathaway on Circus World (1964) and with David Lowell Rich on her final picture, The Concorde—Airport 79 (1979).

After fifty years in the industry Dorothy Spencer retired. A consummate studio craftsman, her work traced the rise and fall of the Hollywood system. Rejecting the reactionist editing styles that emerged in the late 1960s, such as Dede Allen’s work on Bonnie and Clyde (1967) and Sam O’Stein’s on The Graduate (1967), she continued to employ the classical style formulated in the mid-teens. As with all editors however, her impact on the films she edited is difficult to gauge. Since the editor’s role is secondary to that of the director’s, and subservient to the nature and style of the film itself, a critical analysis of her own individual input is difficult to realize. Some of her best work was under such auteurs as John Ford, Alfred Hitchcock and Ernst Lubitsch, all of whom would have assumed complete responsibility for the style of the cutting employed. However, despite the lack of any auteurist evidence, her competence in the field, her success within the industry, and her devotion to her craft remain uncontested.

—Peter Flynn
SPIEGEL, Sam

Producer. Nationality: Austrian. Born: Samuel Spiegelglass in Jaroslau, (now Jaroslaw, Poland), 11 November 1903; used the name S. P. Eagle in 1940–54. Education: Attended schools in Poland. Family: Married 1) Rachel Agronovich, c. 1922 (divorced c. 1926); children: one daughter; 2) the actress Lynn Baggett, 1948 (divorced 1953); 3) Betty Benson, 1957. Also one son by Ann Pennington. Career: 1926–27—cotton broker and stock promoter in Europe; special adviser to Paul Bern at MGM on European plays; transferred to Universal; served five months in California jail for passing a bad cheque; 1930—deported to Poland; 1930–33—worked in Berlin producing French and German versions of Universal films; 1933–35—independent producer in Vienna; 1936—jailed in London for bad cheques; deported to France; then to Mexico; 1939—entered US illegally as S.P. Eagle; 1947—given legal residence; worked as independent producer. Awards: Academy Awards for On the Waterfront, 1954; The Bridge on the River Kwai (Lean), 1959; Lawrence of Arabia (Lean) (co) 1966; The Prowler (Losey) 1951; When I Grow Up (M. Kanin) 1952; The African Queen (Huston) 1953; Melba (Milestone) 1954; On the Waterfront (Kazan) 1957; The Strange One (End As a Man) (Garfein); The Bridge on the River Kwai (Lean), 1959; Suddenly Last Summer (Mankiewicz) 1962; Lawrence of Arabia (Lean) (co) 1966; The Chase (Penn) 1967; The Happening (Silverstein); The Night of the Generals (Litvak) 1971; Nicholas and Alexandra (Schaffner) 1976; The Last Tycoon (Kazan) 1982; Betrayed (Jones) 1988. Died: St. Martin, Antilles, 31 December 1985.

Films as Producer:

1933 Unsichtbare Gegner (Katscher); Les Requins du pétrole (Katscher and Decoin); Mariage à responsabilité limitée (de Limur)
1936 The Invader (An Old Spanish Custom) (Brunel) (co)

Publications

By SPIEGEL: article—

Film Index (Mosman Bay, New South Wales), no. 11, 1971.

On SPIEGEL: book—

On SPIEGEL: articles—

Jacobson, Harlan, in Film Comment (New York), March-April 1983.
Variety (New York), 8 January 1996.
Cineaste (New York), Spring 1996.

* * *

Sam Spiegel was the producer of a number of Oscar-winning films of the 1950s and 1960s including The African Queen, On the Waterfront, The Bridge on the River Kwai, and Lawrence of Arabia. Indeed he defined the image of the independent producer of his era. Prior to Spiegel, producers worked directly for one studio, following the orders of the top mogul. In the 1950s, with the collapse of the studio system, producers became independent entrepreneurs. This required a daring vision because the producer now had to rise or fall on the virtues of a single film.

Spiegel seemed to thrive in the new Hollywood of the 1950s, the very prototype of the successful packager of the color blockbuster film which was Hollywood’s mainstay in the difficult years of the 1950s. Spiegel did this by developing a limited number of projects and then hiring top directors (David Lean, Orson Welles, Elia Kazan, Joseph Losey) and first-rate screenwriters (Tennessee Williams, Gore Vidal, Budd Schulberg, Lillian Hellman). United Artists, then a firm on the verge of bankruptcy, prospered by offering independent producers a chance to bring together the elements for a single film. Spiegel achieved his first success with The African Queen in 1952, starring Humphrey Bogart and Katharine Hepburn and directed by John Huston. From then on he became identified with big-scale productions made at sizable intervals from each other. This pattern would be adopted by all big name producers from the 1950s to the present day. In time he became to represent the Old Hollywood, the one which young turks like George Lucas and Steven Spielberg turned upside down in the 1970s.

The peak of his power came between 1957 and 1962. The Bridge on the River Kwai, made for $2.7 million, grossed more than $30 million and won the Academy Award for Best Picture in 1957. Lawrence of Arabia, starring the then-unknown Peter O’Toole, was an even bigger hit at the box office, and earned yet another Best Picture Oscar, this time in 1962. Both were directed by David Lean, making that unknown British director one of the highest paid of his profession in Hollywood. Although after Lawrence of Arabia Spiegel would never have another such blockbuster, he continued regularly to turn out films, including The Chase, Nicholas and Alexandra, and his long-cherished, but highly unsuccessful project, The Last Tycoon.

—Douglas Gomery

---

STALLICH, Jan

Cinematographer. Nationality: Czech. Born: Prague; 19 March 1907. Career: 1924–27—worked in A-B film laboratory; 1927—head of Kavalirka film laboratory; first film as cinematographer; also long-cherished, but highly unsuccessful project, Dobrý voják švejk.

Died: In Prague; 14 June 1973.

Films as Cinematographer:

- 1927 Kašpárek kouzelníkem (Punch the Magician) (Kokeisl); Perníková chaloupka (Babes in the Wood) (Kokeisl); Provaž z oheňence (The Rope from the Hanged Man) (Spelina)
- 1928 Pramen lásky (The Source of Love) (Kokeisl); Stín ve svetle (Shadow in Light) (Kokeisl); U sv. Mateje (By St. Matthias) (Kokeisl); V blouznení (In a Fantastic Vision) (Kokeisl)
- 1929 Horské volání SOS (SOS in the Mountains) (Marten and Studecky); Chudá holka (Poor Girl) (Neviňáka); The Innocents (Innemann); Stváty Václav (St. Wenceslas) (Kollár) (co); Z českých mlýnu (From the Czech Mills) (Innemann and Seidl)
- 1930 Za rodnou hroudou (For Native Soil) (Kmínek) (co); Opětěná stíny (Fledged Shadows) (Marten); Černý plamen (The Black Flame) (Krnanský)
- 1931 Dobry voják švejk (The Good Soldier Schweik) (Fric); Kariera Pavla Čamédy (Pavel Camrda’s Career) (Kmnaský); Obrácení Ferdýše Pišťory (The Conversion of Ferdys Pistora) (Kodiček) (co); Poslední bohém (The Last Bohemian) (Innemann); Skalní ševci (The Die-Hard Shoemakers) (Lonegen); Spěchovské filmové opožení (The Film Elation of Spejbl) (Skupa); Tříti rota (The Third Squad) (Innemann)
- 1932 Devěták, neříkej ne! (Little Girl, Don’t Say No!) (Medeotti-Bahac); Boaře nad Tatrami (Storm in Tatra) (co); Funebrak (Lamac) (co); Lelíček ve službách Sherlocka Holmese (Lelíček in Sherlock Holmes’ Service) (Lemac); Pepina Rejholcová (Binovec) (co); Právo na hřích (The Title for the Sin) (Slavínský) (co); Ružové kombiné (The Pink Slip) (Marten); Vesen no Bezdeze (The Prisoner on Bezdez) (Vladimirov); Zlaté ptáče (The Little Gold Bird) (Kmnínek); Extase (Ecstasy) (Machaty)
- 1933 Diagnoza X (The X-Diagnosis) (Marten); Dum no předmestí (The Suburban House) (Cikán) (co); Jeji lékař (Her Doctor) (Slavínský); Jsem devče s čertem v tele (I Am a Girl with the Devil in My Body) (Anton) (co); Madla z cihelny (Madla from the Brick-Kiln) (Slavínský); Na sluneční strane (On the Sunnyside) (Vancura) (co); Okéňko (Little Window) (Slavínský); Revisor (The Inspector) (Fric); Reka (The River) (Rovenský); Srdce za písničku (The Heart for a Song) (Hašler) (co); Strýček z Ameriky (Uncle from America) (Vladimirov); Svítání (Dawn) (Kubásek); Stvátní (Outcasts) (Fehér and Svitá) (co); Záhada modrého pokoje (The Mystery of the Blue Room) (Cikán)
- 1934 Pán na rozhraní (Very Busy Gentlemen) (Cikán); Z bláta do louže (Out of the Frying Pan into the Fire) (Innemann); Žena, která ví co chce (A Woman Who Knows What She Wants) (Binovec) (co); Štvaní (Machatý) (co); Dum no předmestí (The Suburban House) (Cikán) (co); Jeji lékař (Her Doctor) (Slavínský); Jsem devče s čertem v tele (I Am a Girl with the Devil in My Body) (Anton) (co); Madla z cihelny (Madla from the Brick-Kiln) (Slavínský); Na sluneční strane (On the Sunnyside) (Vancura) (co); Okéňko (Little Window) (Slavínský); Revisor (The Inspector) (Fric); Reka (The River) (Rovenský); Srdce za písničku (The Heart for a Song) (Hašler) (co); Strýček z Ameriky (Uncle from America) (Vladimirov); Svítání (Dawn) (Kubásek); Stvátní (Outcasts) (Fehér and Svitá) (co); Záhada modrého pokoje (The Mystery of the Blue Room) (Cikán)
- 1935 A život jde dal (Life Continues) (Junghans); At žije nebožžik (Long Lives the Deceased) (Fric); Jedna z milonu (One in a Million) (Slavínský); Koho jsem včera líbal (Who I Kissed Yesterday) (Svoboda) (co); The Silent Passenger (Denham)
- 1936 Whom the Gods Love (Mozart) (Dean); Golem (Duvivier); The Lonely Road (Scotland Yard Commands) (Dean); Guilty Melody (Potter)
- 1937 Moonlight Sonata (The Charmer) (Mendes); The Show Goes On (Dean); The First and the Last (21 Days; 21 Days Together) (Dean)
- 1938 Ideál Septiny (Septima’s Ideal) (Kubásek); Klapzubova jednáctka (Klabzub’s Eleven) (Brom); A Forbidden Place (Safe Home) (Krmanský); Stříbrná oblast (Silver Skies) (Slegl); Svítání (School, the Basis of Life) (Fric)
- 1939 Dedecem protil sví valí (Grandpa Involuntarily) (Slavínský); Men without Honour (Newman); Carmen fra i rossi (Jiný vzduch) (Another Air) (Fric); Kdybych byl tátou (If I Was a Duddy) (Cikán); Osmnáctiletá (Eighteen-Year Old Girl) (Cikán); U pokladně stál (Standing by the Treasury) (Lamac)
- 1940 Abbandano (Mattioli); Caravaggio (Alessandrini); Captain Fracassa (Coletti); L’assedio dell’Alcazar (Genina); La figura del corsaro verde (Guazzoni)
- 1941 Beatrice Cenci (Brignone); Il fauce nr. 13 ; La maschera di Ore nove lezione di chimica (Davoudi); I pini di Roma (Ridi, pagliaccio! (Mastrocinque)
- 1942 Wiener Blut (Forst); I due orfanelle (Gallone)
- 1943 Frauen sind keine Engel (Forst); Germanin (Kmnínek)
1944
Ein Blick zurück (Menzel); Glück bei Frauen (Brauer); Hundstage (von Czifra)

1945
Wiener Mädeln (Forst); Vlast vůta (Welcome Home) (Holman and Vavra); Cesta ka barikádám (The Road to the Barricades) (Váš—doc); Miži bez křídél (Men without Wings)
(Cáp); Trijnáctý revír (Beat 13) (Fric and Holman)

1947
Jan Roháč z děb (Warriors of Faith) (Borský); Předtucha
(Presentiment) (Váš)

1948
O ševci Matoušovi (Matous the Shoemaker) (Cikán); Zelená knížka (The Green Book) (Mach)

1949
Léto (Summer) (Walló); Revolučný rok 1848 (The Revolu-tory Year 1848) (Krska)

1950
Temno (Darkness) (Stekly)

1951 Císařův pekař a pekařův císař (The Emperor’s Baker and the Baker’s Emperor) (Fric)

1952
Dovolená s andelem (Vacation with an Angel) (Zeman)

1953
Tajemstvě krve (The Secret of Blood) (Fric); A nyní hraje dechovka (short); Akrobat na hrazde (short); Harmonikář (short); Jmenuji se Fífka (short); Lev a krotitel (short);
Spějbl a Hurvinek (short—2 parts); Tamburaši u Spejbla a Hurvínka (short); Včorná výchova (short)

1954
Krejčovská povídka (The Tailor’s Story); Setkání v Bukureštì
(The Meeting in Bucharest); Večery s Jindřichem Plachtou (Evenings with Jindrich Plachta) (Duba and Zelenda—doc); Psíhlači (The Dog-Heads) (Fric)

1955
Rudá záře nad Kladnem (Red Glow over Kladno) (Vlček)

1956
Hrásky s četrem (Playing with the Devil) (Mach); Kudy kam (Whence and Where To) (Borský); Mladé dny (The Young Days) (Stekly); Spartakida (Spartakiad) (Fric—doc)

1957
Florence 13.30 (The Bus Terminal) (Mach)

1958
Páté kolo u vozu (Gunny Takes Over) (Zeman)

1959
Mstitel (The Avenger) (Stekly); Slečna od vody (The Young Lady from the Riverside) (Zeman)

1960
Otmar Korbelař (doc); Případ Lupínek (The Lupinve Case)
(Vorlíček)

1961
Tažní ptáci (Birds of Passage) (Mach)

1962
Hoffmannovy povídky (The Tales of Hoffman) (Kaslík); Rasalka (Kaslík); Objec na šípaté hurce (Discovery on the Shaggy Mountain) (Stekly)

1963
Starci na chmelu (The Hop Pickers) (Rychman)

1964
Lidé z maringotek (Life on Wheels)

1965
Když má svátek Dominika (Dominika’s Name Day);
Liebesspiele im Schnee (Ski Fever) (Siodmak)

1966
Naše bláznivá rodina (Our Crazy Family)

1967
Così fan tutte (Kaslík)

1971
Pinocchiova dobrodružství (The Adventures of Pinocchio)

Jan Stallich was the youngest of the trio of famous Czech cameramen (with Heller and Vich). Like the other two, he achieved international acclaim but, unlike them, after 1945 he resumed his work for Czechoslovak cinematography to which he dedicated nearly half a century. His exceptionally fast entry into the sphere of filmmaking was made possible by his father, Julius Stallich, who belonged among the pioneers of Czech cinematography. He served his apprenticeship in the film laboratories of the studio A-B and graduated from a graphic school after attending evening classes. By 1924, he was already working in the laboratories of the Kavalirka studio which he took charge of at a later date. As a cameraman, he began with news and film advertisements. There, for the first time, he was able to apply
his perfect technical knowledge which he later proved many times over raised to the level of artistic design. During the silent era, he shot
12 fairly insignificant films. More notable was his contribution to Kollár’s historical epic St. Wenceslas.

However, in 1934 at the Venice festival, four Czech films were awarded the City of Venice Cup: Ecstasy, The River,
The Earth Sings, and Storm in Tatra. Two of these, The River and Ecstasy, Stallich shot alone, and on Storm in Tatra he worked with V. Vich. It was his unusual camerawork in the short film Storm in Tatra which led Machatý to entrust him with the camera work in Ecstasy.
Stallich succeeded like Vich in Eroten to elevate the camera into becoming the leading form of expression in film. In harmony with the director’s vision, he took advantage of many innovative and photographically effective (e.g., the glass bottom of a barrel) and emotionally evocative (fixing the camera on the workman’s pick-axe, shooting the husband’s mad driving with a hand-held camera, etc.) ideas.
On several other occasions, he demonstrated his taste for functional effect and utilization of technical finesse, for example, in a postwar historical comedy set in the reign of Rudolf II, The Emperor’s Baker and the Baker’s Emperor. The success of The River, with its poetic mood,
and, for his day, the daring Ecstasy, brought Stallich to the attention of such directors as Basil Dean and Carol Reed in Great Britain, Mattoli and Genina in Italy, and Willy Forst in Austria and Germany.
With Forst he made his first colour film, Wiener Mädeln. Most outstanding is his collaboration on the films of Martin Fric.
In Rovensky’s The River he also demonstrated his poetic vision of nature as a way of expressing the action rather than just the setting for he action. In The River, as in Ecstasy, he used several innovations:
for example, shooting the struggle of the young hero with a giant pike through the glass wall of the swimming pool, giving it exceptional dramatic power. Alongside the overall shots he enriched the portrayal of nature with detailed shots of various animals in movement.

After the liberation, he worked in Czechoslovakia, initially on documentary films and later on several historical dramas, including Warriors of Faith. He also shot a biographical film dedicated to the famous Czech haematologist J. Janský, The Secret of Blood. After a series of not very successful comedies, he had a further opportunity to utilize all the various styles of his highly individual craft in J. Rychman’s musical The Hop Pickers. He combines the poetry of summer evenings with dramatic shots of dance scenes, and through resourceful placing of the camera he celebrates human labour in the hop garden. He also executed exceptionally demanding camera work in film adaptations of two operatic works:
Offenbach’s The Tales of Hoffman, shot for Laterna Magica, and Rusalka. The perfect knowledge of various camera techniques and styles as well as his knowledge

---

Publications

By STALICH: book—

Kamera umeleckeho filmu, Prague, 1955.

On STALICH: articles—

Film a Doba (Prague), no. 4, 1957.

Film a Doba (Prague), no. 8–9, 1959.

* * *
of laboratory processes, together with many years of practical experience, brought him both a place at the forefront of his profession and a teaching role in Prague’s FAMU.

—Milos Votrub

STALLING, Carl

Composer. Nationality: American. Career: 1920s—accompanist for silent films; 1928—musical director at Walt Disney’s studios; 1931–36—employed by Ub Iwerks’s studio; 1936–57—musical director for Warner Bros. cartoons. Died: 29 November 1972.

Films as Musical Director:

1928 Steamboat Willie (Disney)

1929 The Merry Dwarfs (Disney); When the Cat’s Away

1936 Gold Diggers of ’49 (Clampett and Jones); Porky’s Poultry Plant (Williams and White); Toytown Hall (McKimson and Walker); Milk and Money (Jones); Porky’s Moving Day (Smith); Boulevardier from the Bronx (Smith); Don’t Look Now (Clampett); Little Beau Porky (Tashlin); The Village Smithy (Avery); Coo-Coo Nut Grove (Freleng); Porky of the Northwoods (Tashlin)

1937 He Was Her Man (Freleng); Porky the Wrestler (Avery); Pigs Is Pigs (Freleng); Porky’s Road Race (Tashlin); I Only Have Eyes for You (Avery); Picador Porky (Avery); The Fella with the Fiddle (Freleng); She Was an Acrobat’s Daughter (Freleng); Porky’s Romance (Tashlin); Porky’s Duck Hunt (Avery); * Ain’t We Got Fun* (Avery); Porky and Gabby (Iwerks); Clean Pastures (Freleng); Porky’s Building (Tashlin); Steamlined Greta Green (Freleng); Sweet Sioux (Freleng); Porky’s Super Service (Iwerks); Uncle Tom’s Bungalow (Avery); Egghead Rides Again (Avery); Porky’s Batmobile Story (Clampett); Plenty of Money and You (Freleng); Porky’s Railroad (Tashlin); A Sunbonnet Blue (Avery); Get Rich Quick Porky (Clampett); Speaking of the Weather (Tashlin); Porky’s Garden (Avery); Dog Daze (Freleng); I Wanna Be a Sailor (Avery); Rover’s Rival (Clampett); The Lyin’ Mouse (Freleng); The Case of the Stuttering Pig (Tashlin); Little Red Walking Hood (Avery); Porky’s Double Trouble (Tashlin); The Woods Are Full of Cuckoos (Tashlin); Porky’s Hero Agency (Clampett); September in the Rain (Freleng)

1938 Daffy Duck and Egghead (Avery); Porky’s Poppa (Clampett); Porky at the Crocodile (Tashlin); What Price Porky (Clampett); Porky’s Phone Express (Dalton and Howard); Porky’s Five and Ten (Clampett); Porky’s Hare Hunt (Hardaway and Dalton); Injun Trouble (Clampett); Porky the Fireman (Tashlin); Porky’s Party (Clampett); Porky’s Spring Planting (Tashlin); Porky and Daffy (Clampett); Wholly Smoke (Tashlin); Porky in Wackyland (Clampett); Porky’s Naughty Nephew (Clampett); Porky in Egypt (Clampett); The Daffy Doc (Clampett); Daffy Duck in Hollywood (Avery); Porky’s Gob (Hardaway and Dalton)

1939 The Lone Stranger and Porky (Clampett); It’s an Ill Wind (Hardaway and Dalton); Porky’s Tire Trouble (Clampett); Porky’s Movie Mystery (Clampett); Prest-O Change-O (Jones); Chicken Jitters (Clampett); Porky and Teabiscuit (Dalton and Hardaway); Kristopher Kolumbus, Jr. (Clampett); Polar Pals (Clampett); Scalp Trouble (Clampett); Old Glory; Porky’s Picnic (Clampett); Wise Quacks (Clampett); Hare-Um Scare-Um (Hardaway and Dalton); Porky’s Hotel (Clampett); Jeepers Creepers (Clampett); Naughty Neighbors (Clampett); Pied Piper Porky (Clampett); Porky the Giant Killer (Freleng); The Film Fan (Clampett)

1940 Porky’s Last Stand (Clampett); The Early Worm Gets the Bird (Avery); Africa Squawks (Clampett); Mighty Hunters (Jones); Ali Baba Bound (Clampett); Busy Bakers (Hardaway and Dalton); Elmer’s Candid Camera (Jones); Pilgrim Porky (Clampett); Cross Country Doctors (Avery); Confederate Honey (Freleng); Slap Happy Pappy (Clampett); The Bear’s Tale (Avery); The Hardship of Miles Standish (Freleng); Porky’s Poor Fish (Clampett); Sniffles Takes a Trip (Jones); You Ought to Be in Pictures (Freleng); A Gander at Mother Goose (Avery); The Chewin’ Brain (Clampett); Tom Thumb in Trouble (Jones); Circus Today (Avery); Porky’s Baseball Broadcast (Freleng); Little Blabbermouse (Freleng); The Egg Collector (Jones); A Wild Hare (Avery); Ghost Wanted (Jones); Patient Porky (Clampett); Ceiling Hero (Avery); Malibu Beach Party (Freleng); Calling Dr. Porky (Freleng); Stage Fright (Jones); Prehistoric Porky (Clampett); Holiday Highlights (Avery); Good Night Elmer (Jones); The Sour Pass (Clampett); Wacky Wildlife (Avery); Bedtime for Sniffles (Jones); Porky’s Hired Hand (Freleng); Of Fox and Hounds (Avery); The Timid Toreador (McCabe and Clampett); Shop, Look and Listen (Freleng)

1941 Elmer’s Pet Rabbit (Jones); Porky’s Snooze Reel (McCabe and Clampett); The Fighting 691/2th (Freleng); Sniffles Bells the Cat (Jones); The Haunted Mousie (Avery); The Crackpot Quail (Avery); The Cat’s Tale (Freleng); Joe Glow the Firefly (Jones); Tortoise Beats Hare (Avery); Porky’s Bear Facts (Freleng); Goofy Groceries (Clampett); Toy Trouble (Jones); Porky’s Preview (Avery); The Trial of Mr. Wolf (Freleng); Porky’s Ant (Jones); Hollywood Steps Out (Avery); A Coy Decoy (Clampett); Hiawatha’s Rabbit Hunt (Freleng); Porky’s Prize Pony (Jones); The Wacky Worm (Freleng); Meet John Doughboy (Clampett); The Heckling Hare (Avery); Inki and the Lion (Jones); Aviation Vacation (Avery); We, the Animals, Squeak (Clampett); Sport Champions (Freleng); The Henpecked Duck (Clampett); All This and Rabbit Stew (Avery); Notes to You (Freleng); The Brave Little Bat (Jones); The Bug Parade (Avery); Robinson Crusoe, Jr. (McCabe); Rookey Revue (Freleng); The Cagey Canary (Avery); Porky’s Midnight Maytime (Jones); Rhapsody in Rivets (Freleng); Wabbit Twouble (Clampett); Porky’s Pooch (Clampett)

1942 The Bird Came C.O.D. (Jones); Aloha Hooey (Avery); Who’s Who in the Zoo (McCabe); Porky’s Cafe (Jones); Conrad the Sailor (Jones); Crazy Cruise (Avery); The Wabbit Who Came to Supper (Freleng); Saps in Chaps (Freleng); Dog Tired (Jones); Daffy’s Southern Exposure (McCabe); The Wacky Wabbit (Clampett); The Draft Horse (Jones); Buttry News (Clampett); Lights Fantastic (Freleng); Hold the Lion, Please (Jones); Gopher Goofy (McCabe); Double Chaser (Freleng); Wacky Blackouts (Clampett); Bugs Bunny Gets the Boid (Clampett); Foney Fables (Freleng); *The Ducktails (McCabe); Eatin’ on the Cuff (Clampett); Fresh Hare (Freleng); The Impatient Patient (McCabe); The Doover Boys (Jones); The Hep Cat (Clampett); The Daffy Duckaroo (McCabe); The Hare-Brained Hypnotist (Freleng); A Tale of Two Kitties (Clampett); My Favorite Duck (Jones); Ding Dog Duddy (Freleng); Case of the Missing Hare (Jones)

1943 Coal Black and de Sebben Dwarfs (Clampett); Confessions of a Nutzy Spy (McCabe); Pigs in a Polka (Freleng); Tortoise Wins by a Hare (Clampett); Fifth Column Mouse (Freleng); To Duck or Not to Duck (Jones); Flop Goes the Weasel (Jones); Hop and Go (McCabe); Super Rabbit (Jones); The Unbearable Bear (Jones); The Wise Quacking Duck (Clampett); Greetings Bait (Freleng); Tokio Jokio (McCabe); Jack-Wabbit and the Beanstalk (Freleng); The Aristo-Cat (Jones); Yankee Doodle Daffy (Freleng); Wackiki Wabbit (Jones); Tin Pan Alley Cats (Clampett); Porky Pig’s Feat (Tashlin); Scrap Happy Daffy (Tashlin); Hiss and Make Up (Freleng); A Corey Concerto (Clampett); Fin ‘n’ Catty (Jones); Falling Hare (Clampett); Inki and the Minah Bird (Jones); Daffy the Commando (Freleng); Puss ‘n’ Booty (Clampett)

1944 Little Red Riding Rabbit (Freleng); What’s Cookin’, Doc? (Clampett); Meatless Flyday (Freleng); Tom Turk an’ Daffy (Jones); Bugs Bunny and the Three Bears (Jones); I Got Plenty of Mutton (Tashlin); The Weakly Reporter (Jones); Tick Tock Tuckered (Clampett); Bugs Bunny Nips the Nips (Freleng); The Swooner Crooner (Tashlin); Russian Rhapsody (Clampett); Duck Soup to Nuts (Freleng); Angel Pass (Jones); Slightly Daffy (Freleng); Hare Ribbin’ (Clampett); Brother Brat (Tashlin); Hare Force (Freleng); From Hand to Mouse (Jones); Birdy and the Beast (Clampett); Buckaroo Bugs (Clampett); Goldilocks and the Jivin’ Bears (Freleng); Plane Daffy (Tashlin); Lost and Foundling (Jones); Booby Hatched (Tashlin); The Old Grey Hare (Clampett); Stage Door Cartoon (Freleng)

1945 Odor-able Kitty (Jones); Herr Meets Hare (Freleng); Draftee Daffy (Clampett); The Unruly Hare (Tashlin); Trap Happy Porky (Jones); Life with Feathers (Freleng); Behind the Meat Ball (Tashlin); Hare Trigger (Freleng); Ain’t That Ducky (Freleng); A Gruesome Towsome (Clampett); A Tale of Two Mice (Tashlin); Wagon Heels (Clampett); Hare Conditioned (Jones); Fresh Airedale (Jones); The Bashful Buzzard (Clampett); Peck Up Your Troubles (Freleng); Hare Tonic (Jones); Nasty Quacks (Tashlin)

1946 Book Revue (Clampett); Baseball Bugs (Freleng); Holiday for Shoestrings (Freleng); Quentin Quail (Jones); Baby Bottle-neck (Clampett); Hare Remover (Tashlin); Daffy Doodles (McKimson); Hollywood Canon Canteen (McKimson); Hush My Mouse (Jones); Hair-Raising Hare (Jones); Kitty Konmered (Clampett); Hollywood Daffy (Freleng); Acrobatty Bunny (McKimson); The Great Piggy Bank Robbery (Clampett); Baccal to Arms (Clampett); Walky Talky Hanyky (McKimson); Racketeer Rabbit (Freleng); Fair and Wormer (Jones); The Big Snooze (Clampett); The Mouse-merized Cat (McKimson); Rhapsody Rabbit (Freleng)

1947 The Gay Antics (Freleng); A Hare Grows in Manhattan (Freleng); Rabbit Transit (Freleng); Easter Yeggs (McKimson); Crowning Pains (McKimson); A Pest in the House (Jones); Little Orphan Airedale (Jones); Slick Hare (Freleng); Mexican Joyride (Davis); Catch As Cats Can (Davis)

1948 Gorilla My Dreams (McKimson); Two Gophers from Texas (Davis); What Makes Daffy Duck (Davis); What’s Brewin’, Brain? (Jones); Daffy Duck Slept Here (McKimson); A Hick, a Slick and a Chick (Davis); Back Alley Opooar (Freleng); I Taw a Putty Tat (Freleng); Rabbit Punch (Jones); Nothing But the Tooth (Davis); Buccaneer Bunny (Freleng); Bugs Bunny Rides Again (Freleng); The Rattled Rooster (Davis); The Shell Shocked Egg (McKimson); Haredevil Hare (Jones); You Were Never Duckier (Jones); Dough Ray Me-ow (Davis); Hot Cross Bunny (McKimson); The Pest That Came to Dinner (Davis); Hare Splitter (Freleng); Odor of the Day (Davis); The Foghorn Leghorn (McKimson); A Lad in His Lamp (McKimson); Daffy Dilly (Jones); Kit for Kat (Freleng); The Stupor Salesman (Davis); Riff Raffy Daffy (Davis); My Bunny Lies over the Sea (Jones); Scaredy Cat (Jones)

1949 Wise Quackers (Freleng); Hare Do (Freleng); Holiday for Drumsticks (Davis); The Awful Orphan (Jones); Porky Chops (Davis); Daffy Duck Hunt (McKimson); Rebel Rabbit (McKimson); Mouse Wreckers (Jones); High Diving Hare (Freleng); The Bee-devilled Brain (Jones); Curtain Razor (Freleng); Bowery Bugs (Davis); Mouse Mazeruk (Freleng); Long-Haired Hare (Jones); Henhouse Henry (McKimson); Knights Must Fall (Freleng); Bad Ol’ Putty Tat (Freleng); The Greyhounded Hare (McKimson); The Windblown Hare (McKimson); Dough for the Do-Do (Freleng); Fast and Furry-ous (Jones); Each Dawn I Crow (Freleng); Frigid Hare (Jones); Swallow the Leader (McKimson); Bye Bye Bluebeard (Davis); For Scent-imental Reasons (Jones); Hippity Hopper (McKimson); Which Is Witch? (Freleng); Bear Beat (Jones); Rabbit Hood (Jones); A Ham in a Role (McKimson)

1950 Home Tweet Home (Freleng); Hurdy Gurdy Hare (McKimson); Boobs in the Woods (McKimson); Mutiny on the Bunny (Freleng); The Lion’s Busy (Freleng); The Scarlet Pumpeerrickel (Jones); Homeless Hare (Jones); Strife with Father (McKimson); The Hypochondri-Cat (Jones); Big House Bunny (Freleng); The Leghorn Blows at Midnight (McKimson); His Bitter Half (Freleng); An Egg Scramble (McKimson); What’s Up, Doc? (McKimson); All Abirr-rd (Freleng); 8 Ball Bunny (Jones); It’s Hummer Time (McKimson); Golden Yeggs (Freleng); Hillbilly Hare (McKimson); Dog Gone South (Jones); The Ducksters (Jones); A Fractured Leghorn (McKimson); Bunker Hill Bunny (Freleng); Canary Row (Freleng); Stooge for a Mouse (Freleng); Pop ‘im Pop (McKimson); Bushy Hare (McKimson); Caveman Inki (Jones); Dog Collared (McKimson); Rabbit of Seville (Jones); Two’s a Crowd (Jones)

1951 Hare We Go (McKimson); A Fox in a Fix (McKimson); Canned Feud (Freleng); Rabbit Every Monday (Freleng); Putty Tat Trouble (Freleng); Corn Plastered (McKimson); Bunny Hugged (Jones); Scentimental Romeo (Jones); A Bone for a Bone (Freleng); Fair-haired Hare (Freleng); A Hound for Trouble (Jones); Early to Bed (McKimson); Rabbit Fire (Jones); Chow Hound (Jones); His Hare Raising Tale (Freleng); Cheese Chasers (Jones); Lovelorn Leghorn (McKimson); Tweety’s S.O.S. (Freleng); Ballot
Box Bunny (Freleng); A Bear for Punishment (Jones);
Sleepy Time Possum (McKimson); Drip-Along Daffy (Jones);
Big Top Bunny (McKimson); Tweet, Tweet, Tweety (Freleng);
The Prize Pest (McKimson)

1952
Who’s Kitten Who? (McKimson); Operation: Rabbit (Jones);
Feed the Kitty (Jones); Gift Wrapped (Freleng); Foxy by Proxy (Freleng);
Thumb Fun (McKimson); 14 Carrot Rabbit (Freleng);
Little Beau Pepe (Jones); Kiddin’ the Kitten (McKimson);
Water, Water Every Hare (Jones); Little Red Rodent Hood (Freleng);
Sock a Doodle Doo (McKimson); Beep, Beep (Jones);
Hasty Hare (Jones); Ain’t She Tweet (Freleng);
The Turn-Tale Wolf (McKimson); Cracked Quack (Freleng);
Oily Hare (McKimson); Hoppy Go Lucky (McKimson);
Going! Going! Gosh! (Jones); Bird in a GUILTY Cage (Freleng);
Mouse Warming (Jones); Rabbit Seasoning (Jones);
The Egg-cited Rooster (McKimson); Tree for Two (Freleng);
The Super Snooper (McKimson); Rabbit’s Kin (McKimson);
Terrier Stricken (Jones); Fool Coverage (McKimson);
Hare Lift (Freleng)

1953
Don’t Give Up the Sheep (Jones); Snow Business (Freleng);
A Mouse Divided (Freleng); Forward March Hare (Jones);
Kiss Me Cat (Jones); Duck Amuck (Jones); Upswept Hare
(McKimson); A Peek o’ Trouble (McKimson); Fowl Weather
(Freleng); Muscle Tuttle (McKimson); Southern Fried Rabbit
(Freleng); Ant Pasted (McKelman); Much Ado about Nutting (Jones); There Auto Be a Law (McKimson);
Hare Trimmed (Freleng); Tom-Tom Tomcat (McKimson);
Wild over You (Jones); Duck Dodgers in the 24th Century
(Jones); Bally for Bugs (Jones); Plop Goes the Weasel
(McKimson); Cat-Tails for Two (McKimson); A Waller Cat Named
Sylvester (Freleng); Zipping Along (Jones); Duck! Rabbit!
Duck (Jones); Easy Peckin’s (McKimson); Catty Cornered
(McKelman); Of Rice and Hen (McKimson); Cats A-weigh (McKimson); Robot Rabbit (Freleng); Punch Trunk (Jones)

1954
Dog Pounded (Freleng); Captain Harblower (Freleng);
Feline Frame-Up (Jones); Wild Wife (McKimson);
No Bark ing (Jones); The Cat’s Bah (Jones); Design for Leaving (McKimson); Bell Happy (McKimson); No Parking Hare (McKimson); Doctor Jerky’s Hide (Freleng); Claws for Alarm (Jones); Little Boy Boo (McKimson); Devil May Hare (McKimson); Muzzle Tough (Freleng); The Oily
American (McKimson); Bewitched Bunny (Jones);
Satana’s Waitin’ (Freleng); Stop, Look and Hasten! (Jones);
Gone Batty (McKimson); Goo Goo Goliath (Freleng);
From A to Z-Z-Z (Jones); Quack Shot (McKimson);
Lumber Jack Rabbit (Jones); Sheep Ahoy (Jones)

1955
Beanstalk Bunny (Jones); All Fowled Up (McKimson);
Sandy Claws (Freleng); Jumpin’ Jupiter (Jones);
Hyde and Hare (Freleng); Speedy Gonzales (Freleng);
Guided Muscle (Jones); Pappy’s Puppy (Freleng)

1956
The High and the Flifty (McKimson); The Unexpected Pest (McKimson); Suppor Duck (McKimson); Barbary Coast
Bunny (Jones); Half-Flare Hare (McKimson); Raw! Raw!
Rooster (McKimson); Slap-Happy Mouse (McKimson);
Wideo Wabbit (McKimson); There They Go-Go-Go (Jones)

1957
Scrambled Aches (Jones) (co); Ali Baba Bunny (Jones) (co);
Cheese It, the Cat (McKimson) (co); Fox Terror (McKimson)
(co); Pip’s Peak (Freleng) (co); Tabasco Road (McKimson)
(co); Bugsy and Mussy (Freleng) (co); Zoom and Bored

Publications

By STALLING: article—

Velvet Light Trap (Madison, Wisconsin), no. 15, Fall 1975.

On STALLING: articles—

Funnyworld, no. 13, Spring 1971.
Filmfax, no. 34, August-September 1992.
Film Score Monthly (Los Angeles), May 1995.

* * *

‘‘I love music,’’ said Warners’ animator Friz Freleng. ‘‘Music inspires my visual thinking. I time my cartoons to music . . . everything is done rhythmically.’’

Musical director Carl Stalling was one of the unsung ‘‘back-room boys’’ of the Golden Age of the Hollywood cartoon from around 1930–60, working in a medium where even the directors and animators (and Stalling, especially at Warner Bros., worked with the best) have only recently begun to receive the acclaim their brilliant creations deserve.

Stalling broke into the movie business in the 1920s in time-honoured fashion accompanying silent movies and conducting theatre orchestras, principally in Kansas City. It was here that he met Walt Disney, who hired him as musical director in 1928 as the age of sound was about to dawn.

The importance of Carl Stalling’s musical contribution to the success of the Mickey Mouse cartoons and other early Disney work should not be underestimated. Animation and music fused in these cartoons, the visual rhythm of movement and the punchlines of gags dancing to the beats of the soundtrack. Without music, reaction to the earliest Mickey Mouse cartoons (Plane Crazy and Gallopin’ Gaucho) had been disappointing but the introduction of Stalling’s music to the third cartoon, Steamboat Willie, transformed the situation. It was Stalling, also, who proposed the idea for the 1929 classic Skeleton
Dance and launched the ‘‘Silly Symphonies’’ series for Disney.

A period in the early 1930s working for animator Ub Iwerks (who poached Stalling from Disney when he left to form his own studio) produced little opportunity for Stalling to shine (Iwerks’ own cartoons were not outstanding) but this changed when Stalling joined Warners in 1936 after the failure of Iwerks’ studio.

At Warner Bros., Stalling not only had brilliant cartoons to work on but also, thanks to the studio’s ownership of several music publishers, access to a catalogue of hundreds of popular tunes. His grounding in the work of the masters of the clever tune/apt lyric brigade gave his arrangements an incredible diversity—light, graceful and witty—which complemented the on-screen action without ever distracting from it. He was helped considerably by an incredible recall which allowed him to select titles suited to the action or image, a facility which Chuck Jones referred to as ‘‘his computer.’’ This helped Stalling in keeping up with the pace of work imposed at Warners where, as the principal person scoring for each of the cartoon ‘‘teams,’’ he would often have to come up with an entire six-minute cartoon score every week. Along with the sound-effects of Treg Brown, Stalling’s scores became an integral part of the output.

The reflex selection of music according to a title related to what was on-screen did, however, run the risk of descending into cliché. ‘‘Sometimes it worked and sometimes it didn’t,’’ said Jones, before adding that ‘‘it didn’t mean anything because nobody knew the damn songs even then.’’ This is only partly true, since even if Warner Bros. fans didn’t know the titles, Stalling’s method meant they came to recognize the tunes! The swingtime of ‘‘Powerhouse’’ became the hallmark for any mechanical activity, ‘‘California, Here I Come’’ accompanied trains going anywhere, and all games became jazzed up contests played out to ‘‘Freddie the Freshman.’’

Stalling had a particular soft spot for the catchy, energetic work of Raymond Scott (who wrote ‘‘Powerhouse,’’ as well as such cartoony titles as ‘‘Reckless Night on Board an Ocean Liner’’ and ‘‘Dinner Music for a Pack of Hungry Cannibals’’?) though he would lotch onto anything with a crazy title, clearing the rights to songs such as ‘‘They Gotta Quit Kickin’ My Dog Around.’’ ‘‘Honey Bunny Boo,’’ ‘‘Huckleberry Duck,’’ ‘‘The Girl-Friend of the Whirling Dervish’’ and ‘‘Go Get the A.x.’’

The logic Stalling applied in his selection of music often, in fact, mirrored the remorseless extensions of logic which underlay the cartoon mayhem on screen which would take things and stretch them or put them in an oddball context. Stalling’s efforts even earned the praise of the famous writer and critic James Agee for his pastiche of Lizst in the 1946 cartoon Rhapsody Rabbit: ‘‘A good musician must have worked on this . . . I have never seen anything done from so deep inside the ham.’’

If Stalling’s musical eclecticism (ragtime, swing, the classics and just about any kind of popular ditty) let him down, it was only with the faster jazz of the late 1940s and 1950s, when occasionally directors would bring in an outsider for a soundtrack (e.g. in Mouse Mazurka (1949) Friz Freleng turned to jazzman Shorty Rogers for music).

The pressure under which he had to work may have dictated his reliance on borrowing and playing with the work of others—as did the desire to pasteich everything which hung in the air on the Warners’ cartoon lot—but Stalling was also a consummate musician, well able to compose his own themes or songs when the opportunity arose. Bugs’ theme song, ‘‘What’s Up, Doc?’’ was composed by Stalling in to compose his own themes or songs when the opportunity arose.

cartoon score every week. Along with the sound-effects of Treg Brown, Stalling’s scores became an integral part of the output. The pressure under which he had to work may have dictated his reliance on borrowing and playing with the work of others—as did the desire to pasteich everything which hung in the air on the Warners’ cartoon lot—but Stalling was also a consummate musician, well able to compose his own themes or songs when the opportunity arose. Bugs’ theme song, ‘‘What’s Up, Doc?’’ was composed by Stalling in 1949 and saw the light of day to marvelous effect in the great rabbit’s 1950 spoof bio-pic of the same name. Footage of this number, with Bugs doing terrible things to a deadpan Elmer, later appeared in Peter Bogdanovich’s 1972 feature film What’s Up, Doc?.

If Stalling’s contribution in his 20 years at Warners’ was a back-drop to the on-screen pyrotechnics it was an important one. An actor needs a platform to act up and Stalling’s music provided part of that platform. He was brilliant at adapting a staggering range of musical material to back up the cartoons’ comic pace, mimicking the referential gifts of the animators with his own musical one. Chuck Jones has called Stalling ‘‘probably the most inventive musician who ever worked in animation,’’ but perhaps he was only obeying the rarely heeded advice of producer Leon Schlesinger: ‘‘Hit ‘em with the fast music.’’

—Norman Miller

STAREWICZ, Ladislaw

Films as Director and Animator:

(all shorts unless otherwise noted)

1910 Valka zukov rogachi (Battle of the Stag Beetles) (doc, animation)
1911 Prekrasnya Lukanida (Beautiful Lukanida); Myest kinematografichyeskovo operator (The Cameraman’s Revenge); Aviatsionnaya nyedelya nasykomich (The Insects’ Aviation Week); Rozhdeystvo obitatiel lyesa (The Insects’ Christmas; The Birth of the Host of the Forest); Stryekosa i muravey (The Ant and the Grasshopper)
1912 Novogodnaya szutka (The Newborn Insect); Pyegaz i pyetuch (Pegasus and the Cock); Pyegazhystviye na luna (Voyage to the Moon)
1913 Chetirye chorta (Four Devils)
1914 Vsyak na Russi i tango tantzyet (Everyone’s Dancing the Tango in Russia); Pasinok Marsa (Mars’s Stepson)
1915 Lilya Belgii (The Lily from Belgium)
1920 Dans les griffes de l’araignée
1921 Le mariage de Babylas; L’épouvantail
1922 Les grenouilles qui demandait un roi
1923 La voix du rossignol; Amour noir et amour blanc
1924 La petite chanteuse des rues; Les yeux du dragon
1926 Le rat des villes et le rat des champs
1927 La cigale et le fourmi; La reine des papillons
1928 L’horloge magique
1930 La petite parade
1932 Le lion et le moucheron; Le lion devenu vieux
1933 Fetiche-mascotte
1934 Fetiche prestidigitateur
1935 Fetiche se marie
1936 Fetiche en voyage de noces
1937 Fetiche chez les sirenes
1941 Le roman de Renard (The Tale of the Fox) (feature; co-d and co-sc with Irene Starewicz; German version released in 1936)
1947 Zanzabelle à Paris (co-anim Sonika Bo)
1949 Fleur de fougeré
1953 Gazouilly petit oiseau (co-anim Sonika Bo)
1954 Gaeule de bois
1955 Un dimanche de Gazouilly (co-anim Sonika Bo)
1956 Le nez au vent
1958 Caroussel boréal
1965 Come chien et chat (unfinished)
Live-Action Films as Director:

1909 Nad Nyemen (Beyond the River Nyemen) (doc, short); Zhichiye vazki (Life of the Dragonfly) (doc, short); Skarabyoz (Beetles) (doc, short)

1912 Pyeresmyesznik (ep. of serial)

1913 Strashnaya myest (The Terrible Vengeance); Noch pyeryed rozhdyestvo (The Night before Christmas); Snyegurochka (Girl of the Snows); Ruslan i Ludmila; Kogda zvuchat strunnii svedza (For the Love of a Singer) (+ ro)

1914 Skazka pro nyemyetskovo groznoy voyakou Goguel Moguel i pro chortya Balbyeskou (The Great Captain Goguel Moguel and the Devil Balbeskou) (short)

1915 Byez zhen (Without a Wife) (+ ro); Smyatiye tsveyeti (Faded Flowers); O chem shyetabo morye (The Murmuring Sea) (doc, short); I posledniye chorti (The Last of the Devils) (short) (+ ro); Portrait (The Portrait); Eros i Psyche (unfinished); Kak nyemyets obyzyanov vidumal (How the German Invented the Ape) (short, part-anim); Zhitelyi nyeobitayemovo ostrava (The Inhabitants of a Desert Island; Favn) (+ ro)

1916 Nochnye priklucheniye darivat nam naslazhdeniye (Nocturnal Adventure); Zhenchini kurorata nye boyatsa dachhe chorta (The Island Women Aren’t Afraid of the Devil); Taman; Na Varsaskom trakxye (On the Warsaw Highway); Pan Tvardovsky (Mr Tvardovsky) (part-anim)

1917 Pan Tvardovsky v Rimye (Mr Tvardovsky in Rome) (part-anim); Maleknavia aktirisa (The Little Actress); Pyesn Taiga (Song of the Taiga); Sachka nayezdilnik (Little Sasha, Jockey); Laya Lifshits; Eto tseybe prinadlezit (It’s Fine for You); Doye vstrychci (Two Meetings); Glupichkiye znamenayestya sportom (The Idiot Sportsman) (short); Tyennaya sila (Dark Strength); K narodnoi vlasti (The Popular Official)

1918 Kaliostro; Yola; Vij; Sorochinskaya yamarka (Sorochinsky Fair); Maiskaya noch (May Night); Stella Maris; Kobila Lord Morton (Lord Morton’s Twin); Lyubov odna lyubov (One Love or the Other)

Other Films:

1913 Domik v kolomne (Chardynin) (sc)
1920 Aursculs du couvent (Uralsky) (ph); Pour une nuit d’amour (Protazanov) (ph); L’angoissante aventure (Protazanov) (ph)
1934 Crainquebille (de Baroncelli) (puppet seq)

Publications

On STAREWICZ: books—

Skotak, R., “‘Red Star Rising: the Lost Years of Fantastika in the Soviet Union,’” in Outre (Evanston), no. 6, 1996.

“...”

On STAREWICZ: articles—

“...”

“The film you are about to see,” announces a title at the start of Ladislaw Starewicz’s Le roman de Renard, “is not an animated cartoon. It is a revolution in the history of the cinema.” The note of arrogance can be forgiven. Starewicz’s film, the first-ever stop-action puppet-animation feature film, would be an impressive enough achievement had it emanated from a well-staffed studio, aided by all the modern technology of animatronics and computers. In fact it was created almost entirely (barring the actors’ voices and the music score) by two people: Starewicz and his daughter Irene, who made all the puppets, costumes, and props, designed and built the sets, devised the lighting, operated the camera and executed all the millions of infinitely subtle movements and changes of expression needed to tell the story. “Millions” is no exaggeration: one three-minute sequence alone, during the final siege of the Fox’s castle of Malpertuis by the forces of King Lion, required 273,000 different movements.

Although he was a talented cartoonist whose work appeared in newspapers, Starewicz never set out to be an animator. His first films were documentaries, stemming from his interest in landscape and natural history. Only when he tried to make a film about the mating battles of stag beetles did he stumble by chance into stop-action. The beetles proved uncooperative and one of them died, from which Starewicz realized that he could wire up the corpse and, by moving it one frame at a time, make it “perform” as he wanted. From this it was a short step to his first masterpiece, The Cameraman’s Revenge, in which a comic melodrama of jealousy and adultery is played out by insects.

Insects feature strongly in Starewicz’s work; their jagged, scuttling vitality clearly appealed to his spiky imagination. In Beautiful Lukashite beetles play out a parody of the Helen of Troy legend, and in other early films, he creates an entire world in which insects dance at weddings, ride bicycles, or celebrate Christmas. But this is never Disney-style anthropomorphism (nothing very mouselike about Mickey, after all); Starewicz’s creatures, though parodying human activities, remain unnervingly insectish in their movements. What he does tend to do (as B. Ruby Rich points out in the anthology edited by Jayne Pilling) is assign specific temperaments to particular species: “The grasshoppers are generally disagreeable: vengeful rival, foppish painter . . . , etc. The frogs are usually comic relief, fatuous and also bad-tempered.” Even once Starewicz had moved on to featuring mammals as his main players, insects often show up in supporting roles, typically dancing or playing musical instruments.

As Rich’s remarks also hint, there is little that is lovable, let alone sugary, about Starewicz’s work at its best. (His late films, made after 1945, do sometimes succumb to cuteness.) Violence, of an alarmingly graphic sort, crops up a lot in his films, never softened by the pretense that mangled bodies will simply (as in Tom & Jerry) resuscitate unharmed in the next frame. Starewicz’s world is cruel, even sadistic. Sharp things slice and sever; limbs are lopped off; creatures are eaten alive, struggling desperately. In his first French film, Dans les griffes de l’araignée, an empty-headed young fly, flouncing carelessly off to the big city, is seduced and gobbled up by the city-slicker spider. Two whole armies of insects attack each other without quarter in La reine des papillons. In Fétiche-mascotte toys struggle to escape from a speeding car: a white-costumed clown jumps clear, only for the wheels of another car to sever his neck. The head rolls into the gutter; the body twitches a couple of times, then lies still.

But though often bizarre and not infrequently unsettling, Starewicz’s work is exhilarating in its energy, inventiveness, and sardonic humor. The influence of Gogol, some of whose stories Starewicz used for his work is exhilarating in its energy, inventiveness, and sardonic humor. He often drew on folktales and fables, lending them a sardonic slant. Le rat des villes et le rat des champs catapults La Fontaine into the jazz age, complete with decadent scenes of ratish debauchery (sexy flapper-rats in scanty costumes) and some blatantly phallic imagery involving severed tails. Amour noir et amour blanc mixes its mythologies still more deliriously, with Chaplin, Tom Mix and Lillian Gish interacting with a pair of cupids (one black, one white), a dog-powered truck, a randy demon-faced camera and a moon borrowed from Méliès. The pot-bellied puppy hero of Fétiche-mascotte finds himself in a grotesque Bosch-like night-world populated by mobile garbage (fish-skeletons, rotting vegetables, and the like), malignant Parisian apaches, a balloon that plays saxophone, and a beanpole-limbed devil. Such is the richness of Starewicz’s imagination that his films often seem to burst at the seams with ideas, and much of the time there is far more going on in the frame than can be taken in at a single viewing.

While taking endless pains to create the illusion of realism (some of the puppets in Renard had as many as 150 different heads to convey changes of expression), Starewicz loved to point up the manipulation behind his work. The whole action of Renard is presented as a film shown, in the prologue, by a monkey projectionist (this film-within-a-film device was anticipated as early as The Cameraman’s Revenge), and the pseudo-medieval setting is mocked by providing the combat between fox and wolf with a radio commentator. This play with illusion and reality lies at the heart of Starewicz’s fantastic art; the sheer abundance of detail, nominally at the service of the story, becomes an end in itself and redirects our attention to the artifice of what we are seeing. (The contrast with the work of George Pal, the other great pioneer of stop-action, could not be more total; Pal’s stick-figure minimalism and primary-colored sets scorn any attempt at realism, leaving his story line clear and uncluttered.) Gothic and romantic, primitive and ultra-sophisticated, Starewicz’s work thrives on its double-edged contradictions; his vision is obsessive and intriguingly unique.

—Philip Kemp

STARK, Ray

Producer. Nationality: American. Born: c. 1914. Education: Attended Rutgers University, New Brunswick, New Jersey. Family: Married Frances Brice; two children. Career: Newsman and publicity writer; after World War II, radio writer representative, then literary agent and talent agent for Famous Players; 1957—cofounder, with Eliot Hyman, Seven Arts Productions; produced the stage musical Funny Girl, 1964; 1966—left the company to pursue independent film projects (including Barbara Streisand films); formed Rastar Company. Award: Irving G. Thalberg Award, 1979. Address: c/o Rastar Films, Sony Studios, Hepburn West, 10202 W. Washington, Culver City, California 90232, U.S.A.

Films as Producer:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>The World of Suzie Wong (Quine)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1964</td>
<td>The Night of the Iguana (Huston)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1967</td>
<td>Oh, Dad, Poor Dad, Mama’s Hung You in the Closet and I’m Feelin’ So Sad (Quine)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1968</td>
<td>Funny Girl (Wyler)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1970</td>
<td>The Owl and the Pussycat (Ross)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1972</td>
<td>Fat City (Huston)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1973</td>
<td>The Way We Were (Pollack)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1975</td>
<td>Funny Lady (Ross); The Sunshine Boys (Ross)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1976</td>
<td>Murder By Death (Moore)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1977</td>
<td>The Goodbye Girl (Ross)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1978</td>
<td>Casey’s Shadow (Ritt); The Cheap Detective (Moore); California Suite (Ross)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1979</td>
<td>The Electric Horseman (Pollack); Chapter Two (Moore)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1980</td>
<td>Seems Like Old Times (Sandrich); The Hunter (Kulik)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1982</td>
<td>Annie (Huston)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1985</td>
<td>The Slugger’s Wife (Ashby)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1986</td>
<td>Brighton Beach Memoirs (Saks)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1988</td>
<td>Biloxi Blues (Nichols)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1989</td>
<td>Steel Magnolias (Ross)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1992</td>
<td>Revenge (Scott)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1993</td>
<td>Barbarians at the Gate (Jordan); Lost in Yonkers (Coolidge)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

On STARK: articles—

Ray Stark should be remembered as the archetypal movie producer of the television age. This ultimate Hollywood hustler turned agent turned producer created deal after deal in the 1960s, 1970s, and 1980s that more often than not became very popular feature films. Few ever became mega-blockbusters; fewer still lost money. The studio bosses of the era loved Stark, because when he brought them a project they almost certainly had a ‘‘sure thing.’’

819
Stark made his reputation utilizing the talents of two very popular entertainers. First came the fabulously successful Barbra Streisand films: Funny Girl, The Owl and the Pussycat, The Way We Were, and Funny Lady, the sequel to Funny Girl. In their years of release these films finished second, fifth, eleventh, and tenth on Variety’s ranking of money earning power. Stark had long sought to produce the story of the life of noted vaudeville comic Fanny Brice, his mother-in-law. He started on Broadway fashioning Funny Girl into a Broadway smash. Hollywood success easily followed.

In the 1970s Stark turned to a second consistent source of making money, transforming the plays of Neil Simon into movie hits. Thus audiences came to adore The Sunshine Boys, Murder By Death, The Goodbye Girl, and California Suite. All ranked high in Variety’s yearly list of top money making films for their respective year of release.

But while Stark was basking in the glow of Hollywood’s praise, forces were changing the industry. George Lucas and Steven Spielberg transformed the movie business of the 1970s with their films for young people, while Stark stuck with proven adult fare. Stark continued to package hits in his proven way and continued to make money, but his greatest success was behind him.

Stark then ascended into myth. He showcased his enormous wealth, estimated to be well in excess of $100 million. He hid his origins, telling all who would listen of his “rags to riches” life story. So, despite his considerable fame, we do not know when he was born; origins, telling all who would listen of his “rags to riches” life story. Despite his considerable fame, we do not know when he was born; we think includes brief careers as a college student, a journalist, a movie publicist, a literary agent, and a talent agent. He only lets us in on what he deems the highlights: writing “Red Ryder” scripts for radio, representing such authors as Ben Hecht and Raymond Chanter, his own independent production company. In 1979 he did win executive vice president and head of production of Seven Arts to form Variety’s ranking of money earning power. Stark had long sought to produce the story of the life of noted vaudeville comic Fanny Brice, his mother-in-law. He started on Broadway fashioning Funny Girl into a Broadway smash. Hollywood success easily followed.

In the 1970s Stark turned to a second consistent source of making money, transforming the plays of Neil Simon into movie hits. Thus audiences came to adore The Sunshine Boys, Murder By Death, The Goodbye Girl, and California Suite. All ranked high in Variety’s yearly list of top money making films for their respective year of release.

But while Stark was basking in the glow of Hollywood’s praise, forces were changing the industry. George Lucas and Steven Spielberg transformed the movie business of the 1970s with their films for young people, while Stark stuck with proven adult fare. Stark continued to package hits in his proven way and continued to make money, but his greatest success was behind him.

Stark then ascended into myth. He showcased his enormous wealth, estimated to be well in excess of $100 million. He hid his origins, telling all who would listen of his “rags to riches” life story. So, despite his considerable fame, we do not know when he was born; origins, telling all who would listen of his “rags to riches” life story. Despite his considerable fame, we do not know when he was born; we think includes brief careers as a college student, a journalist, a movie publicist, a literary agent, and a talent agent. He only lets us in on what he deems the highlights: writing “Red Ryder” scripts for radio, representing such authors as Ben Hecht and Raymond Chandler, serving as a talent agent for Marilyn Monroe, Richard Burton, and Kirk Douglas.

Some details are firm. In 1957 he did form Seven Arts Productions (with Eliot Hyman). In 1960 he did produce his first independent feature film, The World of Suzie Wong. In 1968 he resigned as executive vice president and head of production of Seven Arts to form Rastar, his own independent production company. In 1979 he did win Oscar’s Irving G. Thalberg Award. But it is the legend that he would like us to focus on, a career that combined serious, ambitious projects with regular commercial success.

—Douglas Gomery

STAWIŃSKI, Jerzy Stefan

Writer. Nationality: Polish. Born: Zakret, 1 July 1921. Education: Attended law school, graduated. Career: Novelist; 1956—first film as writer, Man on the Track; 1963—first film as director, No More Divorces; television work includes the series Wielka miłoś Balzaka (Balzac’s Great Loves).

Films as Writer:

1956 Czobnik na torze (Man on the Track) (Munk) (co)
1957 Kanał (The Loved Life) (Wajda); Eroica (Munk)

1958 Deserter (The Deserter) (Lesiewicz); Zamach (Answer to Violence) (Passendorfer)
1960 Zeżowate szczęście (Bad Luck) (Munk); Krążac (The Teutonic Knights) (Ford) (co)
1961 Historia współczesna (A Contemporary Story) (Jakubowska)
1962 “Warszawa” ep. of L’Amour à vingt ans (Love at Twenty) (Wajda)
1963 Rozwodów nie bedzie (No More Divorces) (+ d)
1964 Pingwin (The Penguin) (+ d)
1965 Przedwiewczecie wieczór (Christmas Eve) (+ co-d); Andremo in città (N. Risi)
1967 Zabijaka (Lenartowicz-for TV); Pocznists (Lenartowicz)
1968 Adolphe (Toublanc-Michel + Moal)
1970 Pogon za Adamem (Chase After Adam) (Zarzycki)
1971 Kto wierzy w bocianny (Who Believe in the Stork) (+ co-d)
1973 Godzina szczycu (+ d); Fortuna (Good Luck) (Amiradzib-for TV); Wielka miłoś Balzaka (Balzac’s Great Love) (Salarz—TV series) (co)
1974 Urodziny Matyldy (+ d)
1977 Akcja pod Arsenałem (Action under Arsenal) (Lommnicki)
1978 Bilet powrotny (E. & C. Petelscy)
1979 Godzina W (Morgenstern—TV)
1980 Urodziny modego warszawiaka (Birthday of the Young Inhabitants of Warsaw) (E. & C. Petelscy); Ojciec królowej (Salarz)
1981 Do oszalalem dla niej (I Became Mad for Her Sake)
1984 Piec dni z cypla emeryta (Five Days from the life of a Pensioner)
1988 Obywatel Piszczek (Citizen Piszczek) (Kotkowski) (co)
1995 Plukownik Kwiatkowski (Colonel Kwiatkowski) (Kutz)

Publications

By STAWIŃSKI: books—

Sztatte w mgle, 1952.

Herkulesy, 1953.

Katarzyna, 1955.

Godzina W Wegrzy Kana, 1956.

Ujciezka: Casalarga, 1958.

Szeń wieleń Jana Piszczek, 1959.

Ojciec królowej (play), 1961.

Pogon za Adamem, 1963.

Wiecźr przedwiewczetauczny, 1965.

Godzina szczycu, 1968.

Dziewja dawia dla niej (I Became Mad for Her Sake)

Piec dni z cypla emeryta (Five Days from the life of a Pensioner)

Obywatel Piszczek (Citizen Piszczek) (Kotkowski) (co)

By STAWIŃSKI: articles—

Film (Warsaw), 3 August 1980.

Film (Warsaw), no. 8, 1985.

Kino (Warsaw), August 1985.

On STAWIŃSKI: articles—

Film Polski (Warsaw), January 1964.
Kino (Warsaw), April 1974.
Filmowy Serwis Prasowy (Warsaw), 16–30 June 1981.

* * *

Jerzy Stefan Stawiński has three artistic professions: writer, scriptwriter, and film director. From a historical viewpoint, the most important for Polish culture is his scriptwriting, stemming from his literary works which distinctly helped to determine the appearance of “the Polish film school.” He started as a writer but the content and themes of his stories and novels resonated with the movement of young new filmmakers, so in 1956 Andrzej Munk filmed Man on the Track from his script on the deformation of contemporary life affected by the personality cult. Later Stawiński cooperated with Munk on two other films, Erotica and Bad Luck. His short story “Kanal,” about the trial of a group of freedom-fighters from the Warsaw uprising of 1944, became the basis of the script of the famous film by Andrzej Wajda.

From the beginning of his work in films, Stawiński showed himself to be a brilliant scriptwriter with a special sense for the specifics of film. His scripts have literary value, but to some extent they are left open-ended, therefore leaving space for the director’s imagination. As a result he was able to work successfully with directors of completely different artistic signatures, the sober, analytical, rational and ironic Munk or the emotional Wajda. At the same time, he was able to realise through their work his own ideas and communicate his own views.

The point of departure for Stawiński’s artistic work was his personal experience of war. An active soldier in the national army, he was a participant in the defeated Warsaw uprising, during which he and his comrades sought the safety of the underground sewers in the same way as the heroes of Kanal. Having exhausted this source to some extent, he moved temporarily on to other projects: for example, he wrote the script based on the historical novel The Teutonic Knights for Aleksander Ford. He enquired into themes of contemporary life, and also several times cooperated on films abroad. He was again reminded of the war towards the end of his artistic career: for example, in the films Action under Arsenal and Birthday of the Young Inhabitants of Warsaw. However, he never appeared in the films he himself directed.

In 1963 Stawiński directed his first film, the comedy No More Divorces. This debut, together with the debut of another writer, Aleksander Ścibor-Rylski, was preceded by the stormy and dramatic discussion which history designated the “revolt of scriptwriters.” Both brought out a manifesto in which they criticised the relationship between directors and scriptwriters and expressed their dissatisfaction with the way that texts were treated. They decided as authors to direct their own scripts. It was not the most fortunate of decisions. Stawiński’s direction showed a good mastery of craft but brought nothing strikingly new or original. Years later, he revised his views on scriptwriting, directing, and many other things in his two-volume memoirs.

Stawiński has written few scripts during the last fifteen years. In 1988 his script for the film Citizen Piszczyk was filmed. He based this tale of an unlucky person who commands both laughter and compassion on the film Bad Luck directed by Andrzej Munk. Citizen Piszczyk, directed by Andrzej Kotkowski, is less humorous than the original. Loosely filmed from Stawiński’s excellent script, it depicts an aging hero unwillingly involved in a conflict with state power.

—B. Urgošíková

STEINER, Max

Max Steiner (right)
Films as Composer, Arranger and/or Music Director:

1929  The Bondman (Wilcox); Rio Rita (Reed)
1930  Dixiana (Reed); Half Shot at Sunrise (Sloane); Check and Double Check (Brown); Beau Ideal (Brenon); Cimarron (Ruggles)
1931  Kept Husbands (Bacon); Cracked Nuts (Cline); Young Donovan’s Kid (Niblo); Transgression (Brenon); Friends and Lovers (Schartzinger) (co); The Public Defender (Ruben); Traveling Husbands (Sloane); The Runaround (Craft); The Gay Diplomat (Boleslawsky); Way Back Home (Seiter); Fanny Foley Herself (Brown); Secret Service (Ruben); Consolation Marriage (Sloane); Are These Our Children? (Ruggles)

1932  Men of Chance (Archainbaud); Girl of the Rio (Brenon); Ladies of the Jury (L. Sherman); Young Bride (Seiter); The Lost Squadron (Archainbaud); State’s Attorney (Archainbaud); Symphony of Six Million (Melody of Life) (La Cava); Westward Passage (Milton); Is My Face Red? (Seiter); What Price Hollywood? (Cukor); Roar of the Dragon (Ruggles); Bird of Paradise (K. Vidor); The Phantom of Crestwood (Ruben); The Most Dangerous Game (Schoedsack and Pichel); A Bill of Divorcement (Cukor); Little Orphan Annie (Roberson); Thirteen Women (Archainbaud); Renegades of the West (Robinson); The Conquerors (Pioneer Builders) (Wellman); The Sport Parade (Murphy); Rockabye (Cukor); The Half Naked Truth (La Cava); Penguin Pool Murder (Archainbaud); The Animal Kingdom (The Woman in His House) (Griffith); The Monkey’s Paw (Ruggles); Lady with a Past (Reputation) (Griffith); Secrets of the French Police (Sutherland)

1933  No Other Woman (Ruben); The Cheyenne Kid (Hill); Lucky Devils (R. Ince); The Great Jaspers (Ruben); King Kong (Schoedsack and Cooper); Our Betters (Cukor); Topaze (D’Arast); Christopher Strong (Arzner); Sweepings (Cromwell); Diplomaniacs (Seiter); The Silver Cord (Cromwell); Son of the Border (Nosler); Emergency Call (Cahn); Professional Sweetheart (Seiter); Flying Devils (Birdwell); Melody Cruise (Sandrich); Bed of Roses (La Cava); Double Harness (Cromwell); Headline Shooter (Brower); Before Dawn (Pichel); No Marriage Ties (Ruben); Morning Glory (L. Sherman); Blind Adventure (Schoedsack); One Man’s Journey (Robertson); Rafter Romance (Seiter); Midshipman Jack (Cabanee); Ann Vickers (Cromwell); Ace of Aces (Ruben); Chance at Heaven (Seiter); After Tonight (Archainbaud); Little Women (Cukor); The Right to Romance (Santell); Aggie Appleby; Maker of Man (Sandrich); If I Were Free ( Nugent); Flying Down to Rio (Freeland); Son of Kong (Schoedsack) (co)

1934  Man of Two Worlds (Ruben); Long Lost Father (Schoedsack); The Meanest Girl in Town (Mack); Two Alone (Nugent); Hips, Hips, Hoory! (Sandrich); The Lost Patrol (Ford); Keep ‘em Rolling (Archainbaud); Spitfire (Cromwell); Sing and Like It (Seiter); Success at Any Price (Ruben); This Man Is Mine (Cromwell); The Crime Doctor (Robertson); Finishing School (Tuchock and Nichols); Strictly Dynamite (Nugent); Where Sinners Meet (Ruben); Stingaree (Wellman); The Life of Vergie Winters (Santell); Murder on the Blackboard (Archainbaud); Let’s Try Again (Miner); Of Human Bondage (Cromwell); We’re Rich Again (Seiter); His Greatest Gamble (Robertson); Hat, Coat, and Glove (Miner); Bachelor Bait (Stevens); Their Big Moment (Cruze); Down to Their Last Yacht (Sloane); The Fountain (Cromwell); The Age of Innocence (Moeller); The Richest Girl in the World (Seiter); The Gay Divorcee (The Gay Divorcee (Sandrich); Dangerous Corner (Rosen); Gridiron Flash (Tyrone); Wednesday’s Child (Robertson); Kentucky Kernels (Stevens); By Your Leave (Conigan); Anne of Green Gables (Nicholls); The Little Minister (Wallace); The World Moves On (Ford)
1935  Romance in Manhattan (Roberts); Enchanted April (Beaumont); Roberta (Seiter); Laddie (Stevens); Star of Midnight (Robert); The Informer (Ford); Break of Hearts (Moeller); Becky Sharp (Manouilhan); She (Pichel and Holden); Alice Adams (Stevens); Top Hat (Sandrich); The Three Musketeers (Lee); I Dream Too Much (Cromwell)

1936  Little Lord Fauntleroy (Cromwell); The Charge of the Light Brigade (Curtiz); The Garden of Allah (Boleslawsky); Winterset (Santell); God’s Country and the Woman (Keighley); Follow the Fleet (Sandrich); Two in Revolt (Tyrone); M’Liss (Nicholls)

1937  Green Light (Borzage); Slim (Enright); Kid Galahad (Curtiz) (co); A Star Is Born (Wellman); The Life of Emile Zola (Dieterle); That Certain Woman (Goulding); First Lady (Logan); Submarine D-I (Bacon); Tovarich (Litvak)

1938  Gold Is Where You Find It (Curtiz); Jezabel (Wyler); The Adventures of Tom Sawyer (Taurog); Crime School (Seiler); White Banners (Goulding); The Amazing Dr. Clitterhouse (Litvak); Four Daughters (Curtiz); The Sisters (Litvak); Angels with Dirty Faces (Curtiz); The Dawn Patrol (Goulding)

1939  They Made Me a Criminal (Berkely); Dodge City (Curtiz); The Oklahoma Kid (Bacon); Dark Victory (Goulding); Confessions of a Nazi Spy (Litvak); Each Dawn I Die (Keighley); Daughters Courageous (Curtiz); The Old Maid (Goulding); Dust Be My Destiny (Seiler); Intermezzo: A Love Story (Ratoff); We Are Not Alone (Goulding); Gone with the Wind (Fleming)

1940  Four Wives (Curtiz); Dr. Ehrlich’s Magic Bullet (Dieterle); Virginia City (Curtiz); All This, and Heaven Too (Litvak); City for Conquest (Litvak); A Dispatch from Reuter’s (Dieterle); The Letter (Wyler); Santa Fe Trail (Curtiz); The Great Lie (Goulding); Shining Victory (Rapper); The Bride Came C.O.D. (Keighley); Dive Bomber (Curtiz); Sergeant York (Curtiz); One Foot in Heaven (Rapper)

1942  They Died with Their Boots On (Walsh); In This Our Life (Huston); Captains of the Clouds (Curtiz); The Gay Sisters (Rapper); Desperate Journey (Walsh); Now, Voyager (Rapper)

1943  Casablanca (Curtiz); Mission to Moscow (Curtiz); Watch on the Rhine (Shumlin); This Is the Army (Curtiz)

1944  Passage to Marseille (Curtiz); The Conspirators (Negulesco); The Adventures of Mark Twain (Rapper); Since You Went Away (Cromwell); Arsenic and Old Lace (Capra)

1945  Roughly Speaking (Curtiz); The Corn Is Green (Rapper); Rhapsody in Blue (Rapper); Mildred Pierce (Curtiz); Tomorrow Is Forever (Pichel)

1946  San Antonio (Butler and Walsh); My Reputation (Bernhardt); Saratoga Trunk (Wood); One More Tomorrow (Godfrey)
A Stolen Life (Bernhardt); The Big Sleep (Hawks); Cloak and Dagger (F. Lang), Night and Day (Curtiz)

1947 The Man I Love (Walsh); The Beast with Five Fingers (Florey); Pursued (Walsh); Love and Learn (De Cordova); Cheyenne (Walsh); The Unfaithful (V. Sherman); Deep Valley (Negulesco); Life with Father (Curtiz); The Voice of the Turtle (Rapper); My Wild Irish Rose (Butler) (co)

1948 The Treasure of the Sierra Madre (Huston); My Girl Tisa (N��ent); Winter Meeting (Windust); The Woman in White (Godfrey); Silver River (Walsh); Key Largo (Huston); Johnny Belinda (Negulesco); Fighter Squadron (Walsh); The Decision of Christopher Blake (Godfrey); A Kiss in the Dark (Daves)

1949 The Adventures of Don Juan (The New Adventures of Don Juan) (V. Sherman); South of St. Louis (Enright); Flamingo Road (Curtiz); The Fountainhead (K. Vidor); Without Honor (Pichel); Beyond the Forest (K. Vidor); White Heat (Walsh); Mrs. Mike (L. King); The Lady Takes a Sailor (Curtiz), Oh You Beautiful Doll (Stahl)

1950 Caged (Cromwell); The Flame and the Arrow (Tourneur); The Glass Menagerie (Rapper); Rocky Mountain (Keighley); Sugarfoot (Swirl of Glory) (Marin); Dallas (Heisler)

1951 Operation Pacific (Wagner); Lightning Strikes Twice (K. Vidor); Raton Pass (Marin); I Was a Communist for the FBI (Douglas); On Moonlight Bay (Del Ruth); Jim Thorpe, All-American (Curtiz); Force of Arms (Curtiz); Close to My Heart (Keighley); Distant Drums (Walsh); Come Fill the Cup (Douglas)

1952 Room for One More (Taurog); The Lion and the Horse (L. King); Mara Maru (Douglas); Springfield Rifle (De Toth); The Miracle of Our Lady of Fatima (Brahm); The Iron Mistress (Douglas)

1953 The Jazz Singer (Curtiz); This Is Cinerama (Cooper and others); Trouble Along the Way (Curtiz); By the Light of the Silvery Moon (Butler); The Desert Song (Humberstone); So Big (Wise); The Charge at Feather River (Douglas); So This Is Love (The Grace Moore Story) (Douglas)

1954 The Boy from Oklahoma (Curtiz); The Caine Mutiny (Dmytryk); King Richard and the Crusaders (Butler); The Violent Man (Maté)

1955 Battle Cry (Walsh); The Last Command (Lloyd); The McConnell Story (Tiger in the Sky) (Douglas); Illegal (Allen); Come Next Spring (Springsteen)

1956 Hell on Frisco Bay (Tuttle); Helen of Troy (Wise); The Searchers (Ford); BandIDO! (Fleischer); All Mine to Give (The Day They Gave Babies Away) (Reisner); Death of a Scoundrel (Martin)

1957 Band of Angels (Walsh); Escape in Japan (Lubin), China Gate (Fuller)

1958 Fort Dobbs (Douglas); Marjorie Morningstar (Rapper); Darby’s Raiders (The Young Invaders) (Wellman)

1959 The Hanging Tree (Daves); John Paul Jones (Farrow); The FBI Story (LeRoy); A Summer Place (Daves)

1960 Cash McCall (Pevney); Ice Palace (V. Sherman); The Dark at the Top of the Stairs (Delbert Mann)

1961 The Sins of Rachel Cade (Douglas); Parrish (Daves); Portrait of a Mobster (Pevney); Susan Slade (Daves); A Majority of One (LeRoy)

1962 Lovers Must Learn (Rome Adventure) (Daves)

1963 Spencer’s Mountain (Daves)

1964 A Distant Trumpet (Walsh); FBI Code 98 (Martinson); Youngblood Hawke (Daves)

1965 Those Calloways (Tokar); Two on a Guillotine (Conrad)

Publications

By STEINER: articles—

“Scoring the Film,” in We Make the Movies, edited by Nancy Naumberg, New York, 1937.

In Film Score, edited by Tony Thomas, South Brunswick, New Jersey, 1979.

On STEINER: books—

On STEINER: articles—

Cineforum (Bergamo), October-November 1971.

Montage (London), no. 21, 1972.

Classic Film Collector (Indiana, Pennsylvania), Spring 1972.

Ecran (Paris), March 1972.

International Film Collector, August 1972.

Bender, Albert K., in Film Music Notebook (Calabasas, California), Fall 1974.

Positif (Paris), November 1976.

Fiedel, Robert, in American Film (Washington, D.C.), March 1977.

Dirigido por . . . (Barcelona), nos. 66 and 67, 1979.

Filmcritica (Rome), August 1979.

24 Images (Longueuil, Quebec), May-June 1981.

Rivista del Cinematografo (Rome), December 1981.

Walsh, J.S., “The Ten Most Influential Film Composers,” in Film Score Monthly (Los Angeles), January/February/March 1996.

The jungle drums of King Kong, the soaring theme from Gone With the Wind, the brooding dramatic music for Mildred Pierce and The Big Sleep: all come from the pen of Max Steiner, one of the most influential of all Hollywood film composers. Though criticized by some for sentimentality, excessive scoring and “mickeymousing,” Steiner is widely acknowledged as one of the first to use an extended original background score for a motion picture, and to work with click tracks to aid in the synchronization of music to film action. Steiner was also one of the most prolific of all film composers, famed for going with extremely little sleep while completing major projects, including the three hours and twenty minutes of music for Gone With the Wind. Though most of his RKO films required only opening and closing music, or arrangements of preexisting music for musicals, he began in 1932 to compose full scores, and created the music for most of Warner Brothers’ biggest films from the late 1930s through the 1940s.

While films of the silent era normally had a continuous musical accompaniment (usually pastiches of classical, popular and folk tunes), early talkies normally included no background music at all, except for opening and closing credits, and for music that was diegetic, i.e., part of the film’s story world. This absence had to do with both the lack of available technology for postdubbing and an assumption that talkie audiences would always want to see the source of the music it was hearing (a party in the next room, perhaps). But in 1932 Steiner began writing nondiegetic music to heighten the drama in selected scenes throughout such films as Symphony of Six Million, Bird of Paradise, and The Most Dangerous Game, and in the following year contributed importantly to the success of King Kong. In the latter film Steiner used no background music, after the opening credits, until the arrival at Skull Island, a quarter of the way into the picture; but then, beginning with harp and strings on the soundtrack to suggest the island in the mist, followed by skillfully blended diegetic and nondiegetic “‘primitive’ music for the natives, Steiner’s music takes us from the mundane world of the Depression and a sea voyage into the fantastic realm of Kong.

At least three prominent characteristics of Steiner’s film music style have always been singled out. One is his skillful blending of original music with popular or folk tunes. Prominent examples are found in his Oscar-winning scores for The Informer, with its Irish melodies (establishing a musical pattern for other composers to follow in John Ford films, a tradition Steiner himself continued years later in his mixing of original and traditional Western tunes in The Searchers), and for Gone With the Wind (“Dixie” and Stephen Foster songs). For Casablanca Steiner worked many permutations upon the song “As Time Goes By,” and made great use of “La Marseillaise” as well: e.g., when it is heard in a minor key as Captain Renault contemptuously looks down at a bottle of Vichy water.

Another common Steiner practice was his use of the Wagnerian leitmotif: not merely labelling a character or object with a musical theme, but transforming that theme to reflect changes in the drama. Mildred Pierce provides especially good examples. Mildred’s theme, heard in the opening credits, is in a major key, but its first three notes are soon restated with tragic force in a minor key as Mildred contemplates suicide, and near the end of the film the theme is harmonized in a way to suggest resignation as Mildred tells the police the true story. Another theme, jaunty and innocent-sounding, accompanies the first shot of her daughter Veda, but is heard in quite distorted form when Veda reveals the full extent of her wickedness in the final flashback.

The third characteristic is one for which Steiner has most often been criticized: his mickeymousing, i.e., writing musical cues that very closely mirror (or ape, if one disapproves) onscreen actions. The name comes from the practice common in cartoons ever since Disney’s first talkie, Steamboat Willie, but examples can be found much earlier in operatic music (even if such cues are pointedly ignored by modern stage directors), most notably in Richard Wagner, as in the sword-forging scene in Siegfried. In The Informer, for example, music precisely imitates a wanted poster blowing against the informer-to-be’s leg, and later mimics the arc of coins tossed onto a table. In Steiner’s defense, one might note that the musical emphasis most often simply accompanies visual emphasis through close-ups and other strategies; whether such emphasis should be considered redundancy or effective reinforcement may be debated.

During the 1950s Steiner’s style of musicmaking began to seem old-fashioned, as the pop score (featuring a marketable title song, as in Three Coins in the Fountain) and the occasional jazz score (e.g., The Man with the Golden Arm) became more favored. Yet Steiner continued to write scores for Warner Brothers, most often romantic melodramas, until the mid-1960s, and retired reluctantly. In retrospect, his prominent place in the history of music in motion pictures seems very secure.

—Joseph Milicia

---

STEWART, Donald Ogden

Writer. Nationality: American. Born: Columbus, Ohio, 30 November 1894. Education: Attended Phillips Exeter Academy, New Hampshire; Yale University, New Haven, Connecticut, B.A. 1916. Military Service: Served in the United States Navy during World War I. Family: Married 1) Beatrice Ames, 1926 (divorced 1938); children: one daughter and one son; 2) Ella Winter, 1939. Career: 1919–20—clerk for AT&T, Minneapolis; then a freelance writer: first book published in 1921, regular contributor to Vanity Fair; 1926—first film as writer, Brown of Harvard; 1930—his play Rebound produced; 1949—investigated by the House Un-American Activities Committee, and eventually blacklisted: moved to London, and did occasional film writing. Award: Academy Award for The Philadelphia Story, 1940. Died: In London, 2 August 1980.

Films as Writer:

1926 Brown of Harvard (Conway)
1930 Laughter (D’Arrast)
1931 Tarnished Lady (Cukor)
Screenwriters who specialize in adapting for the screen the work of others are somewhat difficult to pigeonhole as creative forces. Donald Ogden Stewart, one of the most prominent of such screenwriters, is probably best described as one of the supreme play doctors of the 1930s and 1940s. For the most part, his career rests on the seven films he worked on for the director George Cukor, the best of these being Holiday and The Philadelphia Story (for which he received the Academy Award). While remaining true to playwright Philip Barry's original plays for these two films, Stewart was expert at tightening up loose ends and at knowing precisely what was cinematic about an original piece, and his satirical wit is very much evident in these two fast-moving, sparkling comedies.

Born in Columbus, Ohio, and educated at Yale, Stewart moved to New York in the early 1920s and began writing satiric novels, then very much in fashion. Philip Barry based the character of Nick Potter in Holiday on Stewart, and the producer Arthur Hopkins cast Stewart in the role on Broadway in 1928. The experience inspired him to write his own light comedy, Rebound, the main character of which was an extension of Barry's Nick Potter. After a second play, Fine and...
Dandy, Stewart migrated to Hollywood, and although he acted in three films—Not So Dumb, Devotion, Cynara—his purpose in going west was to write for the movies.

His second job, Laughter, remains one of his best. Stewart supplied the sassy dialogue for Harry D’Arrast’s script (about a chorus girl who marries a millionaire) and earned an Oscar nomination. His original story for Tarnished Lady, starring Tallulah Bankhead, was a flop, but initiated his seven-picture association with George Cukor. Stewart’s collaboration with that director was as important to Cukor in the 1930s and 1940s as his later collaborative efforts with Ruth Gordon and Garson Kanin would be in the 1940s and 1950s. Stewart’s second effort with Cukor, Dinner at Eight, was outstanding, and remains one of the best comedies of the era. The original granted script was by two sharp professionals—Herman J. Mankiewicz and Frances Marion—with Stewart called in to “doctor” the dialogue. Holiday, directed by Cukor from Barry’s play, is definitely a Stewart script; Cukor took great pains to state that Stewart was the sole author, though studio politics added Sidney Buchman’s name as co-author. Holiday was also Stewart’s first effort to insert his political beliefs into his work. In this film he adds to Barry’s play a discernible dislike for the rich. As well as these assignments for Cukor, Stewart worked into his work. In this film he adds to Barry’s play a discernible dislike for the rich. As well as these assignments for Cukor, Stewart worked on The Barretts of Wimpole Street, Marie Antoinette, and Kitty Foyle, then on Katharine Hepburn’s favorite vehicle, The Philadelphia Story, again from a Barry play directed by Cukor. He worked again with Cukor on A Woman’s Face, Keeper of the Flame—which he accepted because “he felt it could be a contribution to this war against Hitler”—and Edward, My Son a much underrated Spencer Tracy vehicle.

Stewart’s involvement with the Hollywood Anti-Nazi League resulted in MGM’s demanding he “answer questions” before the HUAC. Stewart refused and he was blacklisted. With the help of Ruth Gordon and Garson Kanin he tried out his play The Kidder in Cambridge, Massachusetts, in 1951, but found no Broadway takers. The following year he moved to London with his wife, Ella Winter, the politically committed widow of Lincoln Steffens. In 1955, he wrote the script to Escapade, starring John Mills and Alastair Sim under the pseudonym Gilbert Holland, and in 1960 co-authored the script for Malaga, but he was never able to revive his screenwriting career. He published his autobiography, By a Stroke of Luck!, in 1975. The book carried an opening note from his friend and colleague, Katharine Hepburn, in which she described him as a “man who is willing to pay the price of his own passionate beliefs,” “one of the great wits of the late 20s, 30s and 40s,” and “my friend.”

—Ronald Bowers

STORARO, Vittorio

Cinematographer. Nationality: Italian. Born: Rome, 24 June 1940. Education: Attended Duca D’Aosta photography school from age 11; Italian Cinemagraphic Training Center; degree, age 18; Centro Sperimentale di Cinematografia. Career: Apprenticed to a photographic studio; assistant to photographers Aldo Scavarda and Marco Scarpetta; made short films during the 1960s; 1969—first feature film as cinematographer, Giovinezza, giovinezza; first of several films for Bertolucci, The Spider’s Strategem. Awards: Academy Award, for Apocalypse Now, 1979, Reds, 1981, and The Last Emperor, 1987; British Academy Award, for The Sheltering Sky, 1991; British Society of Cinematographers, Best Cinematography Award, for The Last Emperor, 1998. Address: Via Divino Amorez, 00040 Frattocchie (Rome) Italy.

Films as Cinematographer:

(Shorts)

1961 Etruscologia (Profanatori de tombe) (Romitelli)
1965 L’urlo (Bazzoni)
1966 Sortilegio (Bazzoni): Il laborinto (Maestranzi); Sirtaki (Bazzoni)
1967 Rapporto segreto (Bazzoni)
1968 Sed Lodge
1973 I Grandi naif jugoslavi (Bazzoni)
1986 Captain Eo

(Features)

1969 Giovinezza, giovinezza (Rossi); Delitto al circolo del tennis (Rosetti); La strategia del ragno (The Spider’s Strategem) (Bertolucci); L’accello dalle piume di cristallo (The Bird with the Crystal Plume) (Argento)
1970 Il conformista (The Conformist) (Bertolucci); L’Eneide (Rossi)
1971  Addio fratello crudele (Patroni Griffi); Giornata nera per l’ariete (Bazzoni); Corpo d’amore (Carpi)
1972  Orlando furioso (Ronconi); Last Tango in Paris (L’ultimo tango a Parigi; Le dernier tango a Paris) (Bertolucci); Bleu gang . . . (Bazzoni)
1973  Malizia (Samperi); Giordano Bruno (Montaldo); Identikit (Patroni Griffi)
1974  Le orme (Bazzoni)
1975  Scandalo (Samperi)
1976  Novecento (1900) (Bertolucci)
1979  La luna (Bertolucci); Agatha (Apted); Apocalypse Now (Coppola) (co)
1981  Reds (Beatty)
1982  One from the Heart (Coppola) (co)
1983  Wagner (Palmer)
1985  Ladyhawke (Donner)
1987  Ishtar (E. May); The Last Emperor (Bertolucci)
1988  Tucker: The Man and His Dream (Coppola)
1988–94  Roma: Imago Urbis (L. Bazzoni)
1989  ‘‘Life without Zoe’’ ep. of New York Stories (Coppola)
1990  The Sheltering Sky (Bertolucci); Dick Tracy (Beatty)
1992  Little Buddha (Bertolucci)
1993  Tosca (G. Patroni Griffi)
1994  Flamenco (C. Saura)
1995  Taxi (C. Saura)
1998  Bulworth (Beatty); Tango (C. Saura)
1999  Mirka (Benhadj); Goya en Burdeos (Goya in Bordeaux)
2000  Picking Up the Pieces; La Traviata (for TV); Dune (for TV—mini-series)

Publications

By STORARO: articles—

Chaplin (Stockholm), no. 4, 1978.
Positif (Paris), September 1979.
Cinema e Cinema (Bologna), July/September 1980.
Segnocinema (Vicenza), March 1983.
Cinema Nuovo (Turin), August/October 1983.
Cinemasessanta (Rome), September/October and November/December 1983.
In Masters of Light: Conversations with Contemporary Cinematographers, by Dennis Schaefer and Larry Salvato, Berkeley, California, 1984.
Cineforum (Bergamo), January/February 1984.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), March 1989.
Film Comment (New York), September/October 1989.
Griffithiana (Gemona), no. 37, December 1989.
Kino (Sofia), 9–10, 1991.
Cinema Nuovo (Bari), May-June 1991.

On STORARO: articles—

Filme (Berlin), no. 6, 1980.
Film and TV Kameramann (Munich), June 1982.
In Camera (Hemel Hempstead, Hertfordshire), Autumn 1988.
Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), no. 8, 1995.
Positif (Paris), March 1996.
Sight & Sound (London), May 1996.

* * *

Among many other things, Apocalypse Now by Francis Ford Coppola shows the conflict between two opposing civilizations. This battle finds expression through two visual emblems with distinctive sources of light and energy, the jungle and the spectacle. Kurtz (Marlon Brando) discovers in the jungle, and in the civilization which covers it, a primitive and vital energy, and it is this flux which fascinates him, and allows him to rediscover his own self.

In the character of Kurtz, Vittorio Storaro’s art could not have found a better metaphor. His photography always tries to reach the spectator placed in the center of a conflict between antagonistic sources of energy, either natural or artificial. Storaro himself has defined his work: ‘‘Conflicts between night and day, shadows and light, white and black, technology and energy are things always recognized in me and my work.’’ This conflict appeared already outlined in Giovinezza, giovinezza, his first film, through his treatment of light, as if Storaro wished to affirm the history of its use in a pictorial culture going back to the Renaissance, aligning himself in this way in the artistic tradition of Italian cinematography, along with Giuseppe Rotunno and Pasquale De Santis.

In the first phase of his work, up to Apocalypse Now, this conflict between opposing sources of energy appears essentially through his treatment of light, gaining true aesthetic definition after his meeting with Bernardo Bertolucci. In The Spider’s Strategem, the first film they made together, Storaro explores all the possibilities of natural light, evoking, in the opinion of several European critics, the visual fascination of Visconti. By contrast, The Conformist seems to be an exercise in shadow and light, as if to transmit to the spectator the idea, central to history, of claustrophobia. In an interview in Film Quarterly, Storaro added: ‘‘The Conformist is almost a black-and-white picture in the beginning. But in the last half in Paris, you see differently. You see the light going into the shadows. It’s like two sections that are united once more.’’

It is this same dualism and equilibrium between contraries that dominate Last Tango in Paris. Here Storaro attempts to reproduce winter light in Parisian exteriors, artificial light in the interiors, and mixes this with hot tones, especially the color orange, to reproduce the passion of the characters.
His photography of the Bertolucci films, which attained its most lyrical expression in Novecento, attracted the attention of Coppola, and Apocalypse Now crowns this first phase of his career. Hyperrealistic sequences such as the napalm bombardment, the Playboy-bunny show, and the nocturnal firing on Do Lung bridge, contrast with the natural jungle light. This contrast can be summed up perhaps in the comparison of the olive-oil lamp and the searchlight.

The second phase of Storaro’s career also begins with Bertolucci, but attains its major splendor with both Bertolucci and Coppola. In La luna and Reds, Storaro claims to have established a color symbolism that had, unconsciously, emerged in The Conformist and Last Tango in Paris. In One from the Heart, Storaro’s continued search for a system of color symbols, using opposing colors to identify his protagonists and a subtle correspondence between chromatic shades and characters’ emotions, produces a beautiful contrast between the realism of action and the hyperrealism of photography. This exploration continues in The Last Emperor, which, arguably, ranks with Apocalypse Now as Storaro’s greatest achievement. In recording the visuals that accompany the story of Pu Yi, the last emperor of China, Storaro evokes the many moods of a story which expands across the decades, as China evolves from feudalism to revolution. Especially memorable is the spectacle of the expansive, medieval Forbidden City (where Storaro shot on location). It also must be noted, however, that even such lesser Bertolucci works as The Sheltering Sky and Little Buddha benefit from Storaro’s presence behind the camera as a true master of light.

To divide the career of Storaro into two phases is somewhat arbitrary. In fact, few cinematographers have maintained such a stylistic unity, based on a theoretical awareness and a historical consciousness of a pictorial tradition going back to Piero della Francesca and Caravaggio. Let us give Storaro himself the last word: “Since the first graffiti was scratched on the walls of caves, since the first Egyptian drawings, since Piero della Francesca, we have had ways to express emotional stories and emotional figures in a particular style. There is no question that when you make a design, shoot a picture, or photograph a movie, it is the representation of all two thousand years of history, whether you are conscious of it or not.”

—M. S. Fonseca, updated by Rob Edelman

STOTHART, Herbert

Composer and Music Director. Nationality: American. Born: Milwaukee, Wisconsin, 11 September 1885. Education: Attended the University of Wisconsin, Madison; also studied in Europe. Career: Teacher; then composer and conductor on Broadway in 1920s; composer of musicals (including Rose Marie with Friehl) and orchestral music (including Heart Attack: A Symphonic Poem, 1947); 1928—composer for films: became general music director at MGM. Award: Academy Award for The Wizard of Oz, 1939. Died: Of cancer, in Los Angeles, California, 1 February 1949.

Films as Composer or Supervisor:

1928 Konyets Sankta-Peterburga (The End of St. Petersburg) (Pudovkin)
1929 Dynamite (DeMille); Devil-May-Care (Franklin)
On STOTHART: articles—

Films (New York), Winter 1940.

Herbert Stothart’s place in the history of film music is clearly marked. It spanned the 20 years between 1929 and 1949, and it was a period spent entirely at MGM. It is further marked by the fact that it was Stothart who scored most of the MGM films derived from classic literature, such as Treasure Island, The Barretts of Wimpole Street, David Copperfield, Anna Karenina, A Tale of Two Cities, Camille, and Romeo and Juliet, in addition to the music direction of the studio’s operettas. Almost all the MGM films of Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy, whether together or separately, were supervised and conducted by Stothart. It was a period in which the studio had a definite musical sound, a somewhat softer and less assertive style than the others, the orchestration often favoring the strings, and it was a sound very much devised by this composer. Stothart’s first contact with music was as a choirboy, and during his school years he developed a strong interest in composing and conducting. He chose a career as a teacher, but his involvement in staging amateur theatrical productions gradually took up more of his time and interest. The success of Manicure Shop in Chicago, a musical he had written for the University of Wisconsin, spurred him to take up the theatre professionally and he proceeded to study composition in Europe. In 1914 Stothart was hired by producer Arthur Hammerstein as the conductor of the touring company of the Rudolf Friml musical High Jinks. After five years with touring companies he was brought by Hammerstein to New York and then spent all of the 1920s as a conductor of musicals on Broadway, including those written by Friml, Youmans, and Gershwin. In many instances Stothart contributed songs of his own to these productions; two of the songs in Rose Marie, for example (“‘Hard Boiled Herman’” and “‘Why Shouldn’t We?’”), are his.

With the coming of sound on film in 1929, he was invited to MGM by Louis B. Mayer and from then until his death from cancer in 1949 Stothart worked constantly as an arranger, conductor, and composer on a total of 130 films. In style and substance he was very much a musician of Hollywood’s Golden Years, and no retrospective of MGM in those years can overlook his contributions. Asked about his technique he said: “The composer, through experience, learns what elements generate certain moods. Anger can be generated by what I call red tones, which slightly clash in orchestrations, and so, mentally irritate. A tranquil mood can be inspired by quiet, gently flowing melody. Alarm can be created by clashing harmonies; unrest by monotonous beat of tomtoms and by effects strange in musical principle, and hence, played to unaccustomed ears. Sonorous bells and deep tones of the organ inspire reverence. These are all matters of

Other Films:

1933  The Cat and the Fiddle (Howard) (mus d)
1934  Viva Villa (Conway) (arranger)
1936  Rose Marie (Van Dyke) (mus d); San Francisco (Van Dyke) (mus d)
1937  Maytime (Leonard) (mus d); Conquest (Brown) (mus d)
1938  Sweethearts (Van Dyke) (mus d)
1939  The Wizard of Oz (Fleming) (mus d)
1941  Cairo (Van Dyke) (mus d)
1944  Thousands Cheer (Sidney) (mus d)
1945  Son of Lassie (Simon) (arranger)
1946  Undercurrent (Minnelli) (mus d); The Yearling (Brown) (arranger)
1947  The Unfinished Dance (Koster) (mus d); Sea of Grass (Kazan) (arranger)

Publications

By STOTHART: article—elemental psychology. By deciding to what extent to use them, one gets the shades in between the basic classifications."

—Tony Thomas

STRADLING, Harry

Films as Cinematographer:

1921 Jim the Penman (Blackwell); The Devil's Garden (Blackwell); The Great Adventure (Blackwell)
1922 His Wife's Husband (Webb); Fair Lady (Webb); How Women Love (Webb); Secrets of Paris (Webb)
1925 The Substitute Wife (May); Wandering Fires (Campbell)
1927 Burnt Fingers (Campbell); The Nest (Nigh)
1929 Mother's Boy (Parker) (co); Lucky in Love (Webb) (co)
1930 Le Réquisitoire (Buchowetski—French version of Manslaughter)
1931 Die Männer um Lucie (A. Korda—and French version, Rive Gauche); Il est charmant (Mercanton); Mistigri (Lachman)
1933 Rund um eine Million (Neufeld); Le Maître des forges (Rivers)
1934 Le Grand Jeu (Feyder); Compartiment de dames seules (Christian-Jaque); Le Bonheur (L'Herbier); Jeanne (Tourjansky); Nous ne sommes plus des enfants (Genina); Jeunesse (Lacombe); La Dame aux camélias (Gance); Poliche (Gance); La Porteuse de pain (Sti)
1935 Quelle drôle de gosse! (Joannon); Arènes joyeuses (Anton); La Kermesse héro (Feyder); Episode (Reisch)
1936 Ungekussot soll man nicht schlaten geh'n (Emo); Le Grand Refrain (Mirande)
1937 Knight without Armour (Feyder); Action for Slander (Whelan)
1938 The Divorce of Lady X (Whelan); The Citadel (K. Vidor); South Riding (Savil le); Pygmalion (Asquith and Howard)
1939 Over the Moon (Freeland); Jamaica Inn (Hitchcock); Q Planes (Clouds over Europe) (Whelan); The Lion Has Wings (Hurst)
1940 My Son, My Son (C. Vidor)
1941 They Knew What They Wanted (Kanin); Suspicion (Hitchcock); Mr. and Mrs. Smith (Hitchcock); The Devil and Miss Jones (Wood); The Men in Her Life (Ratoff); Mr. and Mrs. North (Sinclair); The Corsican Brothers (Ratoff)
1942 Fingers at the Window (Lederer) (co); Nazi Agent (Dassin); Her Cardboard Lover (Cukor) (co); Maisie Gets Her Man (Del Ruth); White Cargo (Thorpe)
1943 The Human Comedy (Brown); Swing Shift Maise (McLeod)
1944 Song of Russia (Ratoff); Bathing Beauty (Sidney)
1945 The Picture of Dorian Gray (Lewin); Thrill of a Romance (Thorpe); Her Highness and the Bellboy (Thorpe)
1946 Holiday in Mexico (Sidney); Easy to Wed (Buzzell); Till the Clouds Roll By (Whorf) (co)
1947 Song of Love (Brown); Sea of Grass (Kazan)
1948 The Pirate (Minnelli); Easter Parade (Walters); Words and Music (Taurog) (co)
1949 In the Good Old Summertime (Leonard); The Barkleys of Broadway (Walters); Tension (Berry)
1950 The Edge of Doom (Robson); The Yellow Cab Man (Donohue)
1951 Valentino (Allen); A Streetcar Named Desire (Kazan); A Millionaire for Christy (Marshall); I Want You (Robson)
1952 My Son John (McCarey); Androcles and the Lion (Erskine); Hans Christian Andersen (C. Vidor)
1953 Angel Face (Preminger); A Lion Is in the Streets (Walsh); Forever Female (Rapper)
1954 Johnny Guitar (Ray)
1955 Guys and Dolls (Mankiewicz); Helen of Troy (Wise)
1956 The Eddie Duchin Story (Sidney)
1957 A Face in the Crowd (Kazan); The Pajama Game (Abbott and Donen)
1958 Marjorie Morningstar (Rapper); Auntie Mame (Da Costa)
1959 The Young Philadelphians (V. Sherman); A Summer Place (Daves)
1960 Who Was That Lady? (Sidney); The Dark at the Top of the Stairs (Delbert Mann); The Crowded Sky (Pevney)
1961 Parrish (Daves); On the Double (Shavelson)
1962 A Majority of One (LeRoy); Five Finger Exercise (Daniel Mann); Gypsy (LeRoy)
1963 Island of Love (Da Costa); Mary, Mary (LeRoy)
1964 My Fair Lady (Cukor)
1965 How to Murder Your Wife (Quine); Synanon (Quine)
1966 Moment to Moment (LeRoy); Walk, Don’t Run (Walters);
Penelope (Hille); Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf? (Nichols)
1968 Funny Girl (Wyler); With Six You Get Eggroll (Morriss)
1969 Hello, Dolly! (Kelly); The Good Guys and the Bad Guys (Kennedy)
1970 On a Clear Day You Can See Forever (Minnelli); The Owl and the Pussy Cat (co)

Publications

By STRADLING: article—

On Walk, Don’t Run in American Cinematographer (Hollywood),
October 1957.

On STRADLING: articles—

Lightman, Herb A., in American Cinematographer (Hollywood),
October 1951.

Lightman, Herb A., on Parrish in American Cinematographer (Hollywood),
May 1961.

Gavin, Arthur, on My Fair Lady in American Cinematographer (Hollywood),
November 1964.

Film Comment (New York), Summer 1972.

* * *

The veteran cinematographer Harry Stradling was one of the great camera talents in the history of Hollywood. He worked in every film genre and for many good and bad directors. His peers recognized his abilities and nominated him for 13 Oscars. His career represents a scope and quality matched by few cameramen.

Like many of his contemporaries who entered the American film industry during the 1920s, Stradling spent more than a decade learning his craft filming minor works. His uncle, Walter Stradling, who for many years was Mary Pickford’s cameraman, got him his initial job. (His son, Harry Stradling, Jr., continues the family tradition behind the camera.) During his on-the-job training Stradling spent the 1920s on unimportant films, even working on shorts for the minor studio Pathé. At this point his career took an uncommon turn. Stradling journeyed to Europe to establish his reputation. Thus he spent the 1920s on unimportant films, even working on shorts for the minor studio Pathé. At this point his career took an uncommon turn. Stradling journeyed to Europe to establish his reputation. Thus he worked on a fine 1930s French film, Carnival in Flanders. In this film Stradling and director Jacques Feyder successfully captured the image of Flemish paintings, and offered up a distinctive, highly successful art film of its day.

For this effort Alexander Korda hired Stradling to photograph the fine British film Knight without Armour, starring Marlene Dietrich and Robert Donat. Besides the low-key impressionistic backgrounds representing Moscow, the film placed Stradling in a line of famous cameramen who boosted the career of Dietrich. This led to a series of major assignments in the United Kingdom (Pygmalion, The Citadel, and Jamaica Inn). From these successes Stradling was able to make his way back to Hollywood to work with Hitchcock on Mr. and Mrs. Smith and Suspicion. He soon moved to the top rung of Hollywood camerographers.

Possibly because of his experience in Europe, Stradling was willing to experiment. This was extremely rare in conservative Hollywood of the 1940s. A famous film for its special effects was The Corsican Brothers, in which Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., played twin brothers. Critics praised the scenes in which the two brothers appeared as amazingly real.

Like most ace camerographers of his day, Stradling never stuck to one genre, but he did build up a reputation for a style which emphasized glamour and Technicolor. For example, Stradling was the man behind the camera for such MGM musicals as Till the Clouds Roll By and The Barkleys of Broadway. Later he would work on Guys and Dolls, Auntie Mame, and Gypsy. All these films earned him nominations for Academy Awards.

The final flare of Harry Stradling’s long, distinguished career came with Funny Girl. Barbra Streisand thanked “dear Harry Stradling” in her acceptance speech for her Oscar. They later worked together on On a Clear Day You Can See Forever and Hello, Dolly!, and he died while working on yet another Streisand vehicle, The Owl and the Pussy Cat. Ironically he passed away the very day after he had been nominated for his final Academy Award, for Hello, Dolly!

—Douglas Gomery

STROMBERG, Hunt

Films as Producer:

1921 The Foolish Age (Seiter) (+ co-sc)
1922 Boy Crazy (Seiter); A Ladies’ Man (+ d)
1923 Breaking into Society (+ d + sc); Rob ’em Good (+ d); Snowed Under (+ d); Two Twins (+ d)
1924 The Night Hawk (Paton); Roaring Rails (Forman); The Fire Patrol (+ d); The Flaming Forties (Forman); The Siren of Seville (+ co-d); The Lightning Rider (Inghram); A Cafe in Cairo (Withey); Tiger Thompson (Eason)
1925 Soft Shoes (Inghram) (+ co-sc); Beyond the Border (Dunlap); The Bad Lands (Henderson); The Crimson Runner (Forman); Paint and Powder (+ d); The Man from Red Gulch (Mortimer); Off the Highway (Forman); Silent Sanderson (Dunlap); The People vs. Nancy Preston (Forman)
1926 The Torrent (Bell)
1928 Our Dancing Daughters (Beaumont); White Shadows in the South Seas (Van Dyke)
1929 Thunder (Nigh); The Bridge of San Luis Rey (Brabin)
Hunt Stromberg was one of a handful of supervisory producers who helped create the great MGM films of the 1930s. As a protégé of Irving Thalberg, the boy-genius executive producer at MGM until his death in 1936, Stromberg helped bring together such classics as The Thin Man, Naughty Marietta, and Marie Antoinette. His The Great Ziegfeld earned the Academy Award for Best Picture in 1936.

In the MGM system under Thalberg, a handful of supervisory producers handled the day-to-day operations of the creation of the 52 feature films. Producers developed genre specialties, usually associated with the careers of certain stars. Stromberg achieved remarkable success in the 1930s by first formulating films for Jean Harlow and Joan Crawford, and later with the Jeanette McDonald-Nelson Eddy cycle of musicals and the “Thin Man” series. In short over the decade of the 1930s, including the Great Depression, Stromberg was a money maker of the top rank in Hollywood.

But with Thalberg’s death in September 1936, Stromberg began to chafe under a new regime dominated by Louis B. Mayer. (Many other producers also did and the studio slowly went downhill.) Flush with the success associated with the Second World War era, the greatest relative movie-going period in Hollywood history, Mayer permitted Stromberg to leave for a career as an independent producer at United Artists. Mayer refused to meet Stromberg’s demands for setting up independent production through MGM, so Stromberg sacrificed guaranteed millions at MGM for the power to run his own shop.

He should have stayed at MGM. He never did as well at United Artists as he had during his salad days under Thalberg. His United Artists debut, Lady of Burlesque, starring Barbara Stanwyck, was a smash, but that can not be said for what followed: The Young Widow, The Strange Woman, and Dishonored Lady. One of the problems was budget constraint. At MGM Thalberg never permitted Stromberg to exceed certain financial limitations. At United Artists Stromberg had no such master and spent millions too much to create box-office failures which could not be written off against other successful studio efforts.
Yet Stromberg never lacked for wealth. This independent minded producer had made himself a rich man through shrewd investments outside the movies. He was an avid horseman and made millions by investing in the Santa Anita and Hollywood racetracks. Thus gradually with failure after failure at United Artists, Stromberg seemed to lose interest in the movie business. He retired, a rich man, to play the role of the Hollywood elder statesman.

—Douglas Gomery

STRUSS, Karl

Cinematographer. Nationality: American. Born: Karl Fischer Struss in New York City, 30 November 1886. Education: Attended night classes in photography with Clarence Bull, Columbia University, New York, 1908–12. Family: Married Ethel Wall, 1921. Career: 1903–14—worked in his father’s bonnet-wire factory; 1914–17—studio photographer, New York; 1916—cofounder, Pictorial Photographers of America; 1917–19—served in World War I: did experiments on infrared photography; 1919–22—still photographer, then cameraman, for Cecil B. DeMille at Famous Players-Lasky, Holly-wood, then worked for B.P. Schulberg, 1922–24, other companies, D.W. Griffith, 1927–30, and for Paramount after 1931; TV work includes the series Broken Arrow, 1950, and My Friend Flicka, 1957; exhibited his still photographs throughout his career. Award: Academy Award for Sunrise, 1928–29. Died: 16 December 1981.

Films as Cinematographer:

1920 Something to Think About (C. DeMille)
1921 The Affairs of Anatol (C. DeMille); Foot’s Paradise (C. DeMille) (co); The Law and the Woman (Stanlaws)
1922 Fools First (Neilan) (co); Minnie (Neilan) (co); Rich Men’s Wives (Gasnier); Saturday Night (C. DeMille) (co); Thorns and Orange Blossoms (Gasnier)
1923 Daughters of the Rich (Gasnier); The Hero (Gasnier); Maytime (Gasnier); Mothers-in-Law (Gasnier); Poor Men’s Wives (Gasnier)
1924 Idle Tongues (Hillyer); The Legend of Hollywood (Hoffman); Poisoned Paradise: The Forbidden Story of Monte Carlo (Gasnier); White Man (Gasnier)
1925 The Winding Stair (Wray)
1926 Ben-Hur (Niblo) (co); Forever After (Weight); Hell’s 400 (Wray); Meet the Prince (Habeney); Sparrows (Beaudine) (co)
1927 Babe Comes Home (Wilde); Sunrise (Murnau) (co)
1928 The Battle of the Sexes (Griffith) (co); Drums of Love (Griffith) (co); The Night Watch (A. Korda)
1929 Coquette (Taylor); Lady of the Pavements (Griffith); Taming of the Shrew (Taylor)
1930 Abraham Lincoln (Griffith); The Bad One (Fitzmaurice); Be Yourself (Freeland) (co); Danger Lights (Seitz) (co); Lamnnox (Brenon); One Romantic Night (The Swamp) (Stein)
1931 Kiki (Taylor); Skippy (Turog); Up Pops the Devil (Sutherland); Women Love Once (Goodman); Murder by the Clock (Sloman); The Road to Reno (Wallace)

1932 Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (Mamoulian); Two Kinds of Women (W. De Mille); Dancers in the Dark (Burton); The World and the Flesh (Cromwell); Forgotten Commandments (Gasnier and Schorr); The Man from Yesterday (Viertel); Guilty As Hell (Kenton); The Sign of the Cross (C. DeMille); Island of Lost Souls (Kenton)
1933 The Girl in 419 (Identity Unknown) (Hall and Sommes); Tonight Is Ours (Walker); The Woman Accused (Slone); The Story of Temple Drake (Roberts); Disgraced (Kenton); Torch Singer (Hall and Sommes)
1934 Four Frightened People (C. DeMille); Belle of the Nineties (McCarey); The Pursuit of Happiness (Hall); Here Is My Heart (Tuttle)
1935 Goin’ to Town (Hall); Two for Tonight (Tuttle)
1936 Anything Goes (Milestone); The Preview Murder Mystery (Florey); Too Many Parents (McGowan); Rhythm of the Range (Taurog); Hollywood Boulevard (Florey); Go West, Young Man (Hathaway); Let’s Make a Million (McCarey)
1937 Wiakiki Wedding (Tuttle); Mountain Music (Florey); Double or Nothing (Reed); Thunder Trail (Barton)
1938 Every Day’s a Holiday (Sutherland); Thanks for the Memory (Archainbaud); Sing, You Sinners (Ruggles)
1939 Paris Honeymoon (Tuttle); Zenobia (Douglas); Some Like It Hot (Archainbaud); Island of Lost Men (Neumann); The Star Maker (Del Ruth)
1940 The Great Dictator (Chaplin) (co)
1941 Caught in the Draft (Butler); Aloma of the South Seas (Santell) (co)
1943 Happy Go Lucky (Bernhardt) (co); Journey into Fear (Foster); Riding High (Marshall) (co)
1944 And the Angels Sing (Marshall); Rainbow Island (Murphy); For Whom the Bell Tolls (Wood) (2nd unit)
1945 Bring on the Girls (Lanfield); Tarzan and the Leopard Woman (Neumann)
1946 Suspense (Tuttle); Mister Ace (Marin)
1947 The Macomber Affair (Z. Korda) (co); Heaven Only Knows (Rogell)
1948 The Dude Goes West (Neumann); Siren of Atlantis (Ripley and Tallas); Tarzan’s Magic Fountain (Sholem)
1949 Bad Boy (Neumann)
1950 Rocket Ship X-M (Neumann); It’s a Small World (Castle); The Return of Jesse James (Hilton); The Texan Meets Calamity Jane (Lamb); Father’s Wild Game (Leeds)
1951 Tarzan’s Peril (Haskin)
1952 Rose of Cimarron (Keller); Tarzan’s Savage Fury (Endfield); Limelight (Chaplin); Lady Possessed (Spier and Kellino); Mesa of Lost Women (Tevos and Ormond)
1953 Tarzan and the She Devil (Neumann); Il più comico spettacolo del mondo (Mattoli) (co); Il Turco napoletano (Mattoli) (co); Cavalleria rusticana (Gallone) (co); “The Secret Shame” ep. of Face to Face (Brahm)
1954 Attila (Francisci) (co); Due notte con Cleopatra (Mattoli) (co)
1955 Mohawk (Neumann)
1957 She Devil (Neumann); Kronos (Neumann); The Deerslayer (Neumann)
1958 The Rawhide Trail (Gordon); The Fly (Neumann); Machete (Neumann); The Hot Angel (Parker)
1959 Here Come the Jets (Fowler); The Sad Horse (Clark); The Rebel Set (Fowler); The Alligator People (Del Ruth); Counterplot (Neumann)
Publications
By STRUSS: book—

Pictured with the Struss Pictorial Lens (catalogue), New York, 1915.

By STRUSS: articles—

“Color Photography,” in American Photography, August 1917.
‘Photographic Modernism and the Cinematographer,’’ in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), November 1934.

Journal of Popular Film (Bowling Green, Ohio), vol. 4, no. 4, 1975.

On STRUSS: books—

Harvith, Susan, and John, Karl Struss: Man with a Camera, Ann Arbor, Michigan, 1976.

On STRUSS: articles—

Fritz, James L., in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), February 1935.
Blanchard, Walter, in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), June 1941.

Film Comment (New York), Summer 1972.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), March 1977.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), February 1982.

* * *

Karl Struss has been accurately described as “by temperament a pictorialist, by instinct an illusionist, and by accomplishment one of the great cameramen in the floridly creative quarter-century of filmmaking that followed The Birth of a Nation,” and is probably best-known as the winner (along with Charles Rosher) of the first Academy Award for cinematography, for his work on Murnau’s Sunrise. However, his undoubted triumphs as a cinematographer in Hollywood’s golden age have somewhat eclipsed his earlier achievements as a still photographer, and it was not until a few years before his death, thanks to a pioneering exhibition at the University of Michigan Museum of Art, that his photographs received any kind of critical recognition at all.

Fleeing his father’s manufacturing business, Struss enrolled in art photography classes at Columbia University in 1909. These were under the direction of the renowned photographer Clarence H. White, making him one of the youngest members of Alfred Stieglitz’s Photo-Secession and a contributor to the seminal journal Camera Work. In 1914 he set up his own studio and began doing pictorial photography—mostly illustrations for stories—for Vogue, Vanity Fair and Harpers Bazaar, much of it drawn from material gathered on a long photographic vacation in Europe in 1909. He also photographed New York, and did portraits of the stars of the Metropolitan Opera Company for publicity purposes. According to the New York Times photography critic Gene Thornton, “Struss was one of the great photographers of New York. Some of his Whistleresque impressions of the city at twilight rank with anything in that mode by Stieglitz and Steichen.”

It was no accident, then, that Struss started off in Hollywood as a still photographer—with Cecil B. DeMille on St. Patrick’s Day, 1919. After a month or so he became a third cameraman, and was shortly thereafter put under contract. He still did the occasional portraits (of DeMille, Gloria Swanson, Bebe Daniels, and Sunrise star George O’Brien, for example), and there exist some fascinating studies done on the set of Sunrise, but his main career from then on was as a cinematographer, working with directors such as Griffith, Mamoulian, Welles, Chaplin, and stars of the calibre of Mary Pickford, Mae West, Charles Laughton, Fredric March, Cary Grant, and Bing Crosby. Amongst his best known films are Ben-Hur (of which he reckons to have shot around 60 percent of the finished picture, although René Guissart received the main credit for the cinematography), Abraham Lincoln, Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, The Sign of the Cross, Island of Lost Souls, Belle of the Nineties, The Great Dictator and Linelight.

Struss left the operation of the camera to his operator, concentrating himself on lighting, camera angles, sets and other production work. When once asked whether he considered directors a hindrance or a help, he replied “they were usually a help. Every picture was something different; I tried not to use the same formula. It depended on the story. The way I look at it is this: the director is the captain of the ship; I’m the first lieutenant, and the rest of the crew worked directly under me. The director shouldn’t care a whoop about anything else; he’s got his own problems. I’m his interpreter and I have to give him what I think is good for that story.” Of Griffith he remarked that “the photography was independent of the direction. He never bothered you about the lighting. He was mainly concerned with the actors,” while on Sunrise “Murnau left the whole visual side of the picture to us; he concentrated entirely on the actors. Of course, he’d see what size the image was, and he was interested in the permanently moving camera . . . he was the first director I ever worked with who really knew what was going on when he started to move the camera. He not only knew when to move but how long to move.” Is there, then, such a thing as a Struss “look?” Some clue may be found in the technical innovations which he developed, such as a soft-focus lens which nevertheless provided the foundation of an essentially sharp image, the Lupe reflector which became extremely popular in face lighting, the graduated red-green filter which, used in conjunction with certain makeup facilitated the smooth transformation scenes in Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde and the healing of the lepers in Ben-Hur, and the graduated gauze filters which facilitated the characteristic changing lighting effects in Sunrise. Struss’ trademarks, then, at the height of his career, are a myriad of grey tonalities avoiding grittiness or harsh contrasts, a gauzed, romantic approach to the image (witness especially The Sign of the Cross, which was filmed entirely through bright red gauze “to give a feeling of a world remembered”), and, in general, all those qualities one associates with classical photography. and the Hollywood studio system at their respective peaks. It is significant, for example, that what he most admired about the director Louis Gasnier was his “European sense of composition—lovely tableaux,” that in the opening scene of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde he used an oval gauze with soft edges “to make every shot of every student look like a portrait,” and that of his work on Sunrise he remarked that “today it’s all mechanised; then we were artists.”

By the time his contract with Paramount expired in the early 1940s, Struss already had his finest work behind him, although Journey Into Fear and Limelight are both notable films. However, he still continued to experiment (with 3-D, for example, and with special lenses and filters on Rocketship X-M), and to display his customary versatility by working in television on series such as My Friend Flicka and Broken Arrow. Never typecast, and always adaptable, he made the very best of changed circumstances and styles, though it is hard to avoid the conclusion that his was a talent that gave of its best in the conditions of traditional Hollywood in its heyday.

—Julian Petley

SULLIVAN, C. Gardner

Writer and Producer. Nationality: American. Born: Charles Gardner Sullivan in Stillwater, Minnesota, 18 September 1886. Education: Attended the University of Minnesota, St. Paul. Family: Married; four children. Career: 1907—journalist, St. Paul Daily News, and for papers in other cities during the next few years; 1912—first film based on a screenstory, Her Polished Family; 1914—hired by Thomas Ince: wrote films for William S. Hart; 1915–17—head of the scenario department of the recently merged New York Motion Picture Company and Triangle; 1917–19—under contract with Paramount; freelance writer, but associated with Cecil B. DeMille after 1926, and worked as script supervisor for Universal, 1930–31, and for MGM, 1931–33; 1940—retired. Died: 5 September 1965.

Films as Writer:

1912 Her Polished Family; The Altar of Death (West); The Army Surgeon (F. Ford); The Invaders (F. Ford and T. Ince)
1913 A Shadow of the Past (T. Ince); Days of ’49 (T. Ince); The Witch of Salem (West)
1914 The Battle of Gettysburg (T. Ince); One of the Discard (+ co-d); The Bargain (Barker); The Passing of Two-Gun Hicks (Hart)
1915 The Italian (Barker); Satan McAllister’s Heir; The Last of the Line (T. Ince); The Roughneck (Hart and Smith); The Ruse (Hart and Smith); Pinto Ben (Hart); On the Night Stage (Barker); The Cup of Life (West); The Painted Soul (Sidney); The Iron Strain (Barker); The Coward (Barker); Matrimony (Sidney); The Winged Idol (Edwards ?); The Golden Claw (Barker); The Edge of the Abyss (West ?)
1916 The Beckoning Flame (Edwards ?); The Conqueror (Barker); The Green Swamp (Sidney); Honor’s Altar (West ?); Peggy (Giblyn); Hell’s Hinges (Hart and Swickard); The Moral Fabric (West ?); The Stepping Stone (Barker); The Aryan (Hart and Smith); Civilization’s Child (Giblyn); The No-Good Guy (Edwards); The Beggar of Cawnpore (Swickard); Not My Sister (Giblyn); The Market of Vain Desire (Barker); The Bugle Call (Barker); Civilization (T. Ince and others); The Eye of the Night (Edwards); The Payment (West); Shell ’43 (Barker); Home (Miller); The Thoroughbred (Bartlett); The Wolf Woman (Willard or Edwards); A Corner in Colleens (Miller); The Dawn Maker (Hart); Plain Jane (Miller); The Return of ‘Draw’ (Egan); The Criminal (Barker)
1917 The Iced Bullet (Barker); The Pinchhitter (Schartzinger—reedited version, 1925); Happiness (Barker)
1918 Those Who Pay (Wells); Love Me (Neill); Naughty, Naughty! (Storm); Selfish Yates (Hart); Shark Monroe (Hart); The Vamp (Storm); The Border Wireless (Hart); Branding Broadway (Hart)
1919 Happy though Married (Niblo); The Poppie Girl’s Husband (Hart and Hillyer); The Haunted Bedroom (Niblo); Other Men’s Wives (Schartzinger); The Virtuous Thief (Niblo); Wagon Tracks (Hillyer); Stepping Out (Niblo); The Market of Souls (De Grasse); John Petticoats (Hillyer); Saara Rosson (Rosson); Dangerous Hours (Niblo)
1920 Sex (Niblo); The False Road (Niblo); Hairpins (Niblo); Love Madness (Henabery)
1921 Mother o’ Mine (Niblo); Greater than Love (Niblo); Good Women (Gasnier); Hail the Woman (Wray)
1922 White Hands (Hillyer)
1923 Human Wreckage (Wray); Soul of the Beast (Wray); Dulcy (S. Franklin); Strangers of the Night (Niblo); The Dangerous Maid (Heerman); Long Live the King (Schartzinger)
1924 The Goldfish (Storm); The Marriage Cheat (Wray); Wandering Husbands (Beaudine); Dynamite Smith (R. Ince); The House of Wrath (R. Ince); The Only Woman (Olcott); Cheap Kisses (R. Ince and Tate); Idle Tongues (Hillyer); The Mirage (Archainbaud)
1925 The Monster (West); Playing with Souls (R. Ince); Wild Justice (C. Franklin); If Marriage Fails (J. Ince); Tumbleweeds (Baggot)
1926 Three Faces East (Julian); Bachelor Brides (Howard); Sparks (Beaudine)
1927 The Bugle Call (Sedgwick)
1928 Sadie Thompson (Walsh) (+ pr); Tempest (Taylor); The Woman Disputed (H. King and Taylor)
1929 Alibi (West); The Locked Door (Fitzmaurice)
1931 The Cuban Love Song (Van Dyke)
1932 Huddle (Wood); Strange Interlude (Strange Interval) (Leonard); Skyscraper Souls (Selwyn)
1933 Men Must Fight (Selwyn)
1934 Father Brown, Detective (Sedgwick)
1935 Car 99 (Barton)
1936 Three Live Ghosts (Humberstone)
1938 The Buccaneer (DeMille)
1939 Union Pacific (DeMille)
1940 Northwest Mounted Police (DeMille)
1942 Jackass Mail (McLeod)

Films as Producer:

1926 Corporal Kate (Sloane); Her Man o’ War (Urson); Gigolo (Howard); The Clinging Vine (Sloane)
1927 The Fighting Eagle (Crisp); White Gold (Howard); Turkish Delight (Sloane); Vanity (Crissp); Yankee Clipper (Julian)
Publications

By SULLIVAN: article—

New York Telegraph, 1 October 1916.

On SULLIVAN: articles—

Though the claim is probably fraudulent, it is both interesting and revealing that D. W. Griffith boasted he needed no scenario to film his three-hour epic The Birth of a Nation, relying instead upon handwritten notes, often penned the night before, that he kept in his pocket while the production unfolded. During the silent period, the scenario, such as it was, was often composed by the director prior to shooting; in fact, a clear division between the two roles was never made even during the later studio period as directors often collaborated, sometimes substantially with the writers on a production. If films were to be identified as having a creative source, an artist responsible for their final form, that responsibility was awarded to the director. The influential French politique des auteurs, often translated as the “auteur theory,” suggests, in fact, more or less following industry practice and custom, that the film’s “author” is its director, thereby eliding the obvious contributions of whoever composed the scenario. Though the American cinema has hardly recognized the contribution of screenwriters, creating a plan for the film (even before sound cinema required the devising of substantial dialogue) has been of crucial importance since the invention of feature-length narrative around 1903. The career of C. Gardner Sullivan, often termed the “dean of American screenwriters,” usefully exemplifies that importance.

Like many who would enter this emerging profession, Sullivan developed his writing skills as a journalist, a line of work that at the time required considerable narrative talent as “stories” were an important element of journalistic fare. Writing for the Evening Journal in New York, Sullivan tried his hand at composing some sketches for vaudeville and soon afterward attempted to interest area film producers in scenarios. His first sale was to Edison: Her Polished Family, a lighthearted satire on the foibles of recent college graduates. After this success, he continued as a freelancer, selling a number of short treatments—for one-reelers—to Lubin and Edison; many of these were based on the adventure melodramas then popular and with which D. W. Griffith was making a substantial reputation. In 1913 Sullivan sold the first of several “Indian-military thrillers” to Thomas W. Ince’s New York Motion Picture company. Soon Ince had made Sullivan the offer of a regular job: he was to join the California production end of the same company, the western location where Ince and others filmed this kind of story. This was an important event within the New York-based industry. Sullivan had acquired quite a reputation, and his hiring by Ince was something that the filmmaker boasted about in the trade papers. If the public were unaware of the importance of screenwriters, those within the business were not. Reluctant to leave New York, Sullivan was persuaded by a handsome financial offer, one that attests to the importance that producers such as Ince, who were committed to the quick production of quality story films, placed on having a scenario writer who could produce shootable scripts under deadline pressure.

Ince taught Sullivan that the scripts he wanted should include not only a clear story line, but should offer short “biographies” of the characters, notes on location and set design, even suggestions for the shooting process (camera angles, framing, art design, etc.). If the scripts Sullivan produced for Ince do not follow the modern model precisely in offering numbered sequences of shots with full instructions for framing, they represented a significant advance in the scenario writer’s responsibilities; Sullivan was now called upon to provide a coherent plan or recipe for each production, not just an outline of the story that would inspire the director to devise framings, locations, and narrative coherence. Sullivan drew upon his journalistic experience in writing human interest stories to devise under deadline pressure what were for the time elaborate scenarios for Ince’s productions.

The change to full-feature production after 1915 did not severely test Sullivan’s talents. He continued to turn out well-done scripts that Ince transformed into successful films. These were in a number of different genres, including big-budget melodrama—Civilization’s Child—Westerns for Ince star William S. Hart—Hell’s Hinges, The Passing of Two-Gun Hicks—and social problem melodramas—The Moral Fabric, The Market of Vain Desire. Sullivan had perhaps the most personal interest in this last film type. An adherent of Social Darwinism like many Progressive-era intellectuals, he had a deep, abiding concern for what he saw as social ills capable of remediation through Christian loving-kindness and benevolent government regulation; his scripts often touched on prostitution, drug addiction, adultery, and marital breakup, issues that the very straitlaced screenwriter, who was strongly religious, approached always from a moralistic and not an exploitative angle. As Ince developed a stock company of talented performers such as Hart, Charles Ray, H. B. Warner, Louise Glaum, and Dorothy Dalton, as well as a stable of skilled directors with their own peculiar talents such as Raymond West and Reginald Barker, Sullivan learned to write for his fellow Ince employees, producing what we would now term “vehicles.”

After Ince’s merger with Triangle, Sullivan was entrusted with a further responsibility, overseeing the scenario department, which then was responsible for both features and the numerous short subjects that filled out the weekly programs. Soon administrative duties were so onerous that Sullivan found himself writing little. In 1917, Ince left Triangle for Adolph Zukor’s Paramount; Sullivan moved with him, but Ince’s next shift within a rapidly altering business—to Associated Producers—did not appeal to Sullivan, and he became a freelancer once again. In the twenties, he was able to expand to Broadway plays, mostly working as an adaptor, and successfully adapted himself to the new tastes of a different era. The screenwriter who had written such religiously fervent melodramas of social reform came to produce the scenarios for titillating sex comedies such as Wandering Husbands and Cheap Kisses, which he even produced himself. Disclaiming an association with the studios who now cornered the market on filmmaking, Sullivan spent most of the twenties in association with the last of the major independents, Cecil B. DeMille, for whom he concocted a number of exotic/adventure scenarios—such as Yankee Clipper and Turkish Delight as well as sexy melodramas, notably Gigolo. Reinventing himself once again, in a sound era that required extensive dialogue but rather static setups, he worked on one of the most prestigious “modern literature” projects of that era, an adaptation of Eugene O’Neill’s Strange Interlude.

Like most of the technicians of the silent and early studio eras, Sullivan was only able intermittently to impose his own personality and interests on the work he did for a bewildering variety of projects. Writer of nearly 400 scenarios in about three decades, Sullivan was primarily notable for his flexibility and bottomless inspiration, the virtues of a top journalist that he made the basis for a successful career in a new medium.

—R. Barton Palmer

SURTEES, Robert L.

Cinematographer. Nationality: American. Born: Covington, Kentucky, 8 September 1906. Family: Married Maydell (Surtees); children: two daughters and two sons, including the photographer Bruce Surtees. Career: Photographer and retoucher in a portrait studio, Cincinnati; camera assistant Universal, from mid-1920s; assisted Gregg Toland, Joseph Ruttenberg, Hal Mohr, Stanley Cortez, and others for the next 15 years; 1942—first film as cinematographer, This Precious Freedom; then worked for MGM, and freelance. Awards: Academy Award for King Solomon’s Mines, 1950; The Bad and the Beautiful, 1959. Died: In Carmel, California, 5 January 1985.

Films as Cinematographer:

- 1942
  This Precious Freedom (Oboler)
- 1943
  Lost Angel (Rowland)
- 1944
  Meet the People (Reisner); Music for Millions (Koster); Thirty Seconds over Tokyo (LeRoy) (co); Two Girls and a Sailor (Thorpe)
- 1945
  Our Vines Have Tender Grapes (Rowland)
- 1946
  No Leave, No Love (Martin) (co); Two Sisters from Boston (Koster)
- 1947
  Unfinished Dance (Koster)
- 1948
  The Big City (Taurog); Tenth Avenue (Rowland); The Kissing Bandit (Benedek); A Date with Judy (Thorpe); Act of Violence (Zinnemann)
- 1949
  Big Jack (Thorpe); Intruder in the Dust (Brown); That Midnight Kiss (Taurog)
- 1950
  King Solomon’s Mines (Bennett)
- 1951
  The Light Touch (Brooks); The Strip (Kardos); Quo Vadis (LeRoy) (co)
- 1952
  The Wild North (Marton); The Merry Widow (Bernhardt); The Bad and the Beautiful (Minnelli)
- 1953
  Ride Vaquero (Farrow); Mogambo (Ford) (co); Escape from Fort Bravo (J. Sturges)
- 1954
  The Long, Long Trailer (Minnelli); Valley of the Kings (Pirosh)
- 1955
  The Mark (Robson); Oklahoma! (Zinnemann)
- 1956
  The Swan (C. Vidor) (co); Tribute to a Bad Man (Wise)
- 1957
  Les Girls (Cukor); Raintree Country (Dmytryk)
- 1958
  Merry Andrew (Kidd); The Law and Jake Wade (J. Sturges)
- 1959
  Ben-Hur (Wyler)
- 1960
  It Started in Naples (Shavelson)
- 1961
  Cimarron (A. Mann)
- 1962
  Mutiny on the Bounty (Milestone)
- 1963
  PT-109 (Martinson)
- 1964
  Kisses for My President (Bernhardt)
- 1965
  The Satan Bug (J. Sturges); The Hallelujah Trail (J. Sturges); The Collector (Wyler) (co); The Third Day (Smight)
- 1966
  The Lost Command (Robson)
- 1967
  The Graduate (Nichols); Dr. Dolittle (Fleischer)
- 1968
  Sweet Charity (Fosse)
- 1969
  The Arrangement (Kazan)
- 1970
  The Liberation of L.B. Jones (Wyler)
- 1971
  Summer of ’42 (Mulligan); The Last Picture Show (Bogdanovich); The Cowboys (Rydell); The Other (Mulligan)
- 1972
  Lost Horizon (Jarrott); Oklahoma Crude (Kramer)
- 1973
  The Sting (Hill)
- 1975
  The Great Waldo Pepper (Hill); The Hindenburg (Kramer)
- 1976
  A Star Is Born (Pierson)
- 1977
  The Turning Point (Ross)
- 1978
  Same Time, Next Year (Mulligan); Blood Brothers (Mulligan)

Publications

By SURTEES: articles—

On Quo Vadis in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), October 1951.

On SURTEES: articles—

Robert L. Surtees’s career as a cameraman spanned almost 50 years—from camera assistant in the late 1920s to cinematographer on his last film in 1978, from the silent era to the new Hollywood. A significant part of that career was as a cinematographer in the classic Hollywood style, that “invisible” style of filmmaking that dominated American films from the introduction of sound well into the 1960s.

Analyzing such a long career is similar to taking a survey course in the history of American cinema. As a young cameraman, Surtees was an assistant to such influential cinematographers as Gregg Toland and Joseph Ruttenberg, whose work helped set the technical standard in the industry for several decades. As a studio cinematographer for MGM for almost 20 years, Surtees photographed films in almost every popular genre, from small comedies such as Lost Angel to westerns such as Escape from Fort Bravo to blockbuster musicals like Oklahoma! When he began working for MGM in the early 1940s, the studio system was in its heyday and the classic Hollywood style—characterized by an even, balanced lighting, match cutting, and linear narratives—was the norm. During that era, the producers and the studio exerted creative control, not the directors. Thus, each studio developed its own “look.” At MGM, this look was one of opulence, which was revealed through the use of high-key lighting. Surtees’s work at MGM at this time was indicative of that studio’s style. During the 1950s, when the studio system began to crumble partly from the competition of television, films became grander in scale and larger in scope. Widescreen films and spectacular Technicolor epics were popular successes, and Surtees’s filmography from this decade—which includes Quo Vadis, Raintree County, and Ben-Hur—reflects this trend. The decade of the 1960s was one of transition in the industry when the old studio system finally gave way to the rise of independent producers and the importance of the director as the creative force. Surtees’s tenure at MGM ended in 1962 and he became a freelance cinematographer working for such stalwarts as William Wyler (The Collector) as well as for up-and-coming directors like Mike Nichols (The Graduate). Surtees continued working into the 1970s, by this time for the “new Hollywood,” characterized by independent producers and directors whose personal vision shaped the style of a film, sometimes in a rather self-conscious manner. It is fitting that Surtees was chosen by Peter Bogdanovich as the cinematographer for The Last Picture Show, for the film subtly alludes to the end of the old Hollywood studio system—a system that Surtees saw rise and fall. It is a tribute to Surtees’s talent and adaptability that he could succeed from one era through the next.

Searching for one type of film or a particular style that Surtees specialized in is difficult. However, after analyzing his filmography and studying reviews of his films, it can be said that Surtees was adept at lush Technicolor cinematography, particularly that found in such big-budget A-films as King Solomon’s Mines (for which he won an Oscar), Quo Vadis, Mogambo, Oklahoma!, Raintree County, Ben-Hur (for which he won his third Oscar), Mutiny on the Bounty, and Dr. Dolittle. So influential was his work on King Solomon’s Mines, for example, that the excess footage was used in other jungle films, most notably Watusi. Analyses or critiques of these films do not fail to mention the excellent or beautiful cinematography. As one critic so eloquently stated, “Each frame of celluloid is like a painting.”

—Susan Doll

 ŠVANKMAJER, Jan **

Animator and Director. Nationality: Czech. Born: Prague, 4 September 1934. Education: Attended the Arts and Crafts School, Prague, 1950–54; Theatre Faculty of the Academy of Music and Dramatic Art (DAMU), Prague, 1954–58. Family: Married Eva Kostelec. Career: Graphic artist and painter; 1958–64—worked in puppet theatre, in Liberec, and then formed his own Theatre of Masks in Prague; also associated with Laterna Magica and Black Theatre; 1964—first film as director, The Last Trick; member of surrealist group in Prague; 1974—began experimentation with “touch objects.” Award: Golden Bear award, Berlin Film Festival, for Mozenosti dialogu, 1982; Karlovy-Vary Festival, Special Jury Prize, for Lekce Faust, 1994.

Films as Writer and Director:

1964 Poslední trik pana Schwarzwalda a pana Edgara (The Last Trick of Mr. Schwarzwald and Mr. Edgar) (+ prod design)
1965 J.S. Bach: Fantasia G-Moll (J.S. Bach: Fantasy in G Minor) (short) (+ prod design); Spiel mit Steinen (A Game with Stones) (short) (+ prod design)
1966  Rakvickárna (Punch and Judy) (short) (+ prod design); Et cetera (short) (+ prod design)
1967  Historia naturae (short) (+ prod design)
1968  Zahradka (The Garden) (short); Byt (The Flat) (short); Picnic mit Weismann (Picnic with Weismann) (short) (+ prod design)
1969  Tichý týden v dome (A Quiet Week in a House) (short) (+ prod design)
1970  Kostnice (The Ossuary) (short) (+ prod design); Don Sajn (Don Juan) (+ prod design)
1971  Jabberwocky (short) (+ prod design)
1972  Leonardv deník (Leonardo’s Diary) (short)
1973–79  Otrantský zámek (The Castle of Otranto) (short) (+ prod design)
1980  Zanik domu Usheru (The Fall of the House of Usher) (short) (+ prod design)
1982  Mozenosti dialogu (Dimensions of Dialogue) (short) (+ prod design); Do pivnice (Down to the Cellar) (short)
1983  Kyvadlo, jáma, a nadeje (The Pit, the Pendulum, and Hope) (+ prod design)
1984  Alice
1988  Mazné Hry (Virile Games) (short) (+ prod design); Another Kind of Love (short) (+ prod design); Autoportrét (Self-Portraits) (short)
1989  Zamilované maso (Meat in Love) (short); Tma-svetlo-tma (Darkness-Light-Darkness) (short) (+ prod design); Flora (short) (+ prod design)
1990  Konec stalinismu v Čechách (The Death of Stalinism in Bohemia) (short) (+ prod design)
1992  Jídlo (Food) (short) (+ prod design)
1994  Lekce Faust (+ prod design)
1996  Spikelenci slasti
2000  Otesánek (+ prod design)

Other Films:
1958  Faust (Radok) (puppeteer)
1966  Céilice (Ciphers) (Prochážka) (art d)
1977  Adéla ještě nevecerela (Adela Hasn’t Had Her Supper Yet) (Lipsky) (co-art d; animator)
1979  Hodinářova svatébní cesta korálovým morem (Svoboda)
1980  Bláznivé noviny (Fools, Water Sprites, and Imposters) (Svoboda)
1981  Tajemství hrady v Karpatech (The Mysterious Castle in the Carpathians) (Lipsky) (co-art d; animator); Monstrum z galaxie Arkana (Monsters from the Arcane Galaxy) (Vukotic) (designer of monster)
1984  Barrandovské nocturno aneb Jak film tancil a zpíval (Barrandov Nocturne, or How Films Dance and Sing) (Sís) (animator) (short)
1985  Skalpel, prosím (Scalpel, Please) (Svoboda) (co-art d)

Publications

By ŠVANKMAJER: books—

Hmat a imaginace (Prague, 1995).
Editor, Otevřená hra (surrealist anthology) (Prague, n.d. Opak zrcadla (surrealist anthology) (Prague, n.d.)

Transmutace smyslu [Transmutation of the Senses], Prague, n.d.

By ŠVANKMAJER: articles—

Film a Doba (Prague), no. 5, 1982.

On ŠVANKMAJER: articles—

Film a Doba (Prague), no. 10, 1966.
Poseová, Katereina, in Film a Doba (Prague), no. 7, 1968.
Film a Doba (Prague), no. 9, 1969.
Horejseí, Jan, in Magazín Kina (Prague), 1969–70.
Effenberger, Vratislav, in Film a Doba (Prague), no. 3, 1972.
Positif (Paris), November 1979.
Svab, Ludvik, in Film a Doba (Prague), no. 10, 1984.
Zvoníček, Petr, in Film a Divadlo (Bratislava), no. 19, 1984.
O’Pray, Mike, “In the Capital of Magic,” in Monthly Film Bulletin (London), July 1986 + filmo.
Special Švankmajer Section, in Afterimage, no. 13, Autumn 1987.
O’Pray, Michael, in Het Ludicatief Principe: Jan Švankmajer, Antwerpe Film Stichtung, n.d.
Film a doba (Prague), no. 3, 1994 + filmo.
Lidové noviny (Prague), 30 September 1994.

* * *

Ever since Jan Švankmajer’s 12-minute short, Mozenosti dialogu (Dimensions of Dialogue), won a Golden Bear at the Berlin Film Festival in 1982 which resulted in his “discovery” by the West, this director of enigmatic animated films has become one of the world’s best known contemporary Czechoslovakian artists, rivaled in renown only by Miloš Forman, Milan Kundera, and Václav Havel. As a whole, his work draws from a distinctive matrix of influences and qualities, precariously synthesized as if by a magical dialectic, balancing indigenous Czechoslovakian surrealism on the one hand, with international literary sources on the other (Lewis Carroll and Edgar Allan Poe in particular). His films play off highly personal imagery and concerns against veiled political and social critique, juxtaposing violence and tenderness, humour and pathos. He and his team of collaborators (including his wife, Eva Švankmajerova), are recognized as some of the most technically accomplished animators, especially of object animation, in the business. His belated fame, after 20 years of filmmaking in relative obscurity, has had a twofold influence: inspiring a generation of independent animators working both in the commercial market and the more rarefied field of the festival circuit, while also helping to build a greater audience for a medium seen, hitherto, primarily as one only suitable for children.

Ironically, while his films are often characterized by others as “adult” animation, Švankmajer himself insists that, “I’m interested, in the first instance, in a dialogue with my own childhood. Childhood is my alter ego. . . . Animation can bring the imagery of childhood back to life and give it back its credibility. The animation of objects upholds the truth of our childhood.” (Italics his.) Thus, all of Švankmajer’s works, even the most abstract, like Johann Sebastian Bach: Fantasia G-Moll (1965) and Spiel mit Steinen (1965), function in part as an act of reparation for the lost or repressed animistic beliefs of childhood. Many of his films feature children—Do pivnice (1983), Alice (1988)—exploring a menacing landscape of animated objets trouvés, responding alternately with fear, bravery, and retributive aggression to an incomprehensible and threatening world. One of his finest early works, Jabberwocky (1971), evokes children all the more strongly by their virtual absence, as a nursery comes to life and performs a sinister cabaret, starring dolls born from the stuffing of a larger doll, a dancing penknife that kills itself, and a sailor suit which acts as host to their performances. The spanning which opens this film is characteristic of the sadism and cruelty which pervades his work, and is especially notable in his other adaptation of Lewis Carroll, Alice, his only feature film to date. There the heroine is tempted by jars of marmalade that contain hidden drawing pins and threatened by a scissors-wielding rabbit. Like Freud, whom he greatly admires, Švankmajer is interested in exploring the obscure sexuality of childhood, the polymorphous perversity which has not yet learned to separate the animate from the inanimate as a source of pleasure, which discovers sensual delight in the materiality of objects, no matter how decrepit and tawdry. His representation of the body as a plastic site of aggression to an incomprehensible and threatening world. One of his films feature children—Do pivnice (1983), Alice (1988)—exploring a menacing landscape of animated objets trouvés, responding alternately with fear, bravery, and retributive aggression to an incomprehensible and threatening world. One of his finest early works, Jabberwocky (1971), evokes children all the more strongly by their virtual absence, as a nursery comes to life and performs a sinister cabaret, starring dolls born from the stuffing of a larger doll, a dancing penknife that kills itself, and a sailor suit which acts as host to their performances. The spanning which opens this film is characteristic of the sadism and cruelty which pervades his work, and is especially notable in his other adaptation of Lewis Carroll, Alice, his only feature film to date. There the heroine is tempted by jars of marmalade that contain hidden drawing pins and threatened by a scissors-wielding rabbit. Like Freud, whom he greatly admires, Švankmajer is interested in exploring the obscure sexuality of childhood, the polymorphous perversity which has not yet learned to separate the animate from the inanimate as a source of pleasure, which discovers sensual delight in the materiality of objects, no matter how decrepit and tawdry. His representation of the body as a plastic site of Švankmajer’s Mannerist mannerisms have been aped by many aspirant animators and his figures duplicated for beer commercials and pop videos, but one of the most important aspects of his work, his oblique political commentary, has proved less transferable. Like many artists living under politically repressive states, Švankmajer has had to mask his critique in ambiguous symbols, such as the menacing and senseless regime of the flat in The Flat (1968), the tea party in Alice, or the intercut shots of daily life in Leonardo’s Diary (1973). The latter film so angered the authorities, Švankmajer was forbidden from doing any filmmaking for eight years. The self-confessed “work of agit-prop,” The Death of Stalinism in Bohemia (1990), made after the fall of Communism, formed a kind of animated revenge on his past oppressors, and seemed to mark a departure for his work into a new transparency of meaning, disparaged by some critics. Yet, its final images, which fade to black before it is revealed what has been “born” from the erstwhile “free” Czechoslovak state, begs more questions than the film cares to answer, a strategy reminiscent of Švankmajer’s quizzical oeuvre as a whole.

—Leslie Felperin Sharman

---

SWERLING, Jo

Films as Writer:

1930 Ladies of Leisure (Capra); Melody Lane (based on his unpublished play “The Understader”); Sisters (Flood); Ruin or Shine (Capra); Hell’s Island (Slooman)

1931 The Last Parade (Kenton); Dirigible (Capra); Ten Cents a Dance (L. Barrymore); The Miracle Woman (Capra); Platinum Blonde (Capra)

1932 Forbidden (Capra); Behind the Mask (Dillon); War Correspondent (Sloane); Washington Merry-Go-Round (Craze)

1933 Below the Sea (Rogell); Man’s Castle (Borzage)

1934 No Greater Glory (Borzage); The Defense Rests (Hillyer); Lady by Choice (Burton)

1935 The Whole Town’s Talking (Ford); Love Me Forever (Schertzinger)

1936 The Music Goes ‘round (Schertzinger); Pennies from Heaven (McLeod)

1937 Double Wedding (Thorpe)

1938 I Am the Law (Hall); Doctor Rhythm (Tuttle)

1939 Made for Each Other (Cromwell); The Real Glory (Hathaway); Gone with the Wind (Fleming)

1940 The Westerner (Wyler)

1941 Blood and Sand (Mamoulian); New York Town (C. Vidor); Confirm or Deny (Mayo)

1942 Pride of the Yankees (Wood)

1943 Crash Dive (Mayo); A Lady Takes a Chance (Seiter)

1944 Lifeboat (Hitchcock)

1945 Leave Her to Heaven (Stahl)

1946 It’s a Wonderful Life (Capra)

1953 Thunder in the East (C. Vidor)

1956 The Lord Don’t Play Favorites (co-written with Hal Stanley for NBC’s Producers’ Showcase)

1961 King of the Roaring Twenties (The Big Bankroll) (J. Newman)
Publications

By SWERLING: books—

Typo Tales and Verses, Chicago, 1915.
Kibitzer (play), New York, 1929.

On SWERLING: articles—

* * *

The conversion to sound in the late twenties meant that the American film industry needed to hire a different kind of screenwriter, one used to creating effective dialogue rather than simply outlining a workable scenario and devising title materials. Hollywood found such writers in the top ranks of journalists and successful playwrights. Swerling is perhaps the only of these to have achieved outstanding success in both fields. After selling papers as a youngster, he moved up to join the staff of the Chicago Herald and Examiner, where he excelled in a number of roles, most memorably as the author of the popular comic strip “Gallagher and Shean,” then a well-known vaudeville act. The Marx brothers admired his writing, and Swerling was subsequently invited to write a musical comedy for them that, unfortunately, was not successful. Convinced, however, that his future lay in playwriting, Swerling returned to his hometown New York and wrote four comedy dramas, most with a New York Jewish flavor, that were produced with some success; the most notable of these is perhaps Kibitzer, in which Swerling persuaded Edward G. Robinson to star.

The opportunity to make what was then a huge amount of money writing for the sound pictures proved impossible to resist despite a thriving Broadway career, and Swerling moved to the west coast where he spent six years under contract to Columbia, collaborating most importantly with Frank Capra, whose optimistic vision of the American common man and distrust for the wealthy establishment Swerling very much shared. After establishing himself in Hollywood, Swerling made a comfortable living freelancing until his retirement in 1964. Like Capra, in the early thirties Swerling had little interest in probing the limits of public taste with titillating or erotic drama, then much in vogue. Swerling’s characters, in contrast, display that Horatio Algerism that is very much associated with Capra, a kind of optimistic faith in the national institutions and down-home decency that is often derided as “Capra-Corn.” His early films often feature women who have made early, but not disastrous, mistakes in their lives; by the end of the final reel of The Defense Rests and Ladies of Leisure, the heroine has faced up to her error, made the best of the strong virtues she inherently possesses, and embarked upon a life devoted to decency and respectability.

An important reason for Swerling’s success with such films is that his vision of American life was very much in harmony with what conservative moral forces in the country, particularly the Catholic Legion of Decency, were demanding that the studios provide. The adoption of the Production Code in 1934 institutionalized the Victorian version of moral uplift that Swerling saw as the essence of the American experience: a rejection of modern temptation (especially of the big-city variety) in favor of time-tested traditional values. If Swerling’s heroes are eager to achieve material success in a world that seems inhospitable to such aims (an accurate reflection of Depression era sentiments), they are never served well by political (read “communist” or “socialist”) solutions, always in the end holding fast to republican ideals of self-reliance and community service. The main characters are often petite bourgeoisie, such as the owners of a small circus in a Capra collaboration, Rain or Shine, whose livelihood is threatened by an employee strike; or the struggling young couple in Made for Each Other, whose love for each other is nearly destroyed by dire economic straits. The threat to happiness, however, may just as easily come from above as from below. In another Capra film, the heroine in Ladies of Leisure finally recognizes that her successful efforts at self-advancement have made her a kind of prostitute; she then forsakes material comfort for a life of romantic bliss with a poor but honest “Mr. Right”; in Platinum Blonde, also for Capra, Swerling explores the gender difficulties faced by a giddy newspaper reporter who marries a wealthy woman, and therefore abandons the traditional American-male role of breadwinner.

The limitations and glories of Swerling’s vision of American life can be seen in his two most famous scripts, for Pride of the Yankees, co-written with Herman J. Mankiewicz, the life story of the most sentimentalized American hero of the early forties, Lou Gehrig; and It’s a Wonderful Life, a project that whose 11th-hour script difficulties Swerling was called upon to solve by a desperate Capra. Pride of the Yankees is vintage Swerling, an emotionally affecting paean of praise of the most cherished elements of the national character: hard work, selflessness, devotion to family, patient acceptance of adversity, and endurance. Like his main character, Swerling possessed incredible stamina; seemingly supplied with endless inspiration, he carved out a secure living in a business where a writer was only as good as his or her last picture. The darker aspects of Gehrig’s experience, especially the inevitable rivalry with teammate Babe Ruth, whose showmanship and flashiness garnered him more notoriety and a higher salary, are elided in Swerling’s treatment; the screenplay never even hints at the contrast between the free-living Ruth and his conservative teammate, at their achievement of very different kinds of fame. In other words, Gehrig is provided with no alternative way of life, a source of temptation that is avoided only through moral diligence and innate strength of character. The film, lacking a central struggle, fails to be interestingly dramatic, though it is a tribute to Swerling’s ability to keep the narrative flowing that Pride of the Yankees is never boring. It is typical of Swerling that the script’s most interesting moments are provided by expertly evoked sentiment, especially in the closing sequences where Gehrig tries to hide the disease that is soon to kill him from his wife, who already knows but is desperate to maintain the illusion in which his pride and considerateness are so invested.

In contrast, It’s a Wonderful Life is structured around the most basic of life’s struggles, against a despair born of hostile and unrewarding circumstance that can rob even the strongest and most virtuous of the will to live. Completely beyond the experience of Swerling’s Lou Gehrig is the urge for self-annihilation to which George Bailey is reduced by the apparent victory of pure chance and malevolence over his self-sacrificing efforts to serve others. At the film’s center is the heavenly effort, directed by one of the Hollywood screen’s most charming angels, to convince George that he must go on living. This psychological task is not achieved by holding out an alternative vision of the life George might subsequently lead, but by a kind of moral subtraction, the reduction of George to an identity-less being who must experience the horror of the world as it would have been had he never lived, a nightmare vision of what would have been his life. happened had George not been there to prevent it. Like Swerling’s protagonists in The Defense Rests and The Miracle Woman, George undergoes a moral rehabilitation that is essentially self-generated, the product not of changed circumstances, but of a transformed sensibility. The film ends in classic Horatio Alger fashion, with George’s moral virtue rewarded by benefaction, in this case the generous gifts of money that allow George to avoid going to jail for bank fraud. This touch seems pure Swerling.

What Capra undoubtedly was responsible for, in contrast, was the presentation of the hero in extremis (shades of the filibuster in Mr. Smith Goes to Washington, on which Swerling did not collaborate); for Capra, the fight for virtue is always barely won, the product of an immense suffering that wins the day (e.g., the moral collapse of the crooked senator in Mr. Smith who cannot stand the agony of watching his youthful protégé endure the unendurable). For Swerling, however, the victory of virtue is always, already assured by the protagonist’s moral righteousness, a quality that will ensure that he or she does the right thing once the proper kind of self-recognition has been achieved. Even more so than Capra’s patriotic populism, such a belief in the innate invincibility of good people made Swerling the ideal voice for a Hollywood dedicated from 1934 until the mid-sixties to the making of films where good inevitably triumphs over evil, where virtue is always more attractive than vice, where the simple faith of simple people is to be preferred to the dangerous sophistication, the idle self-indulgence of the rich. As Hollywood turned to different forms of entertainment in the fifties and sixties, Swerling became much less in demand. In Thunder in the East, Swerling demonstrates the enduring power of the old swashbuckler formula; in this effective recycling of Casablanca, an immoral gunslinger operating in the Far East is persuaded to support the cause of democracy and freedom by a beautiful blind woman. Less successful was King of the Roaring Twenties, a screen biography of gangster Arnold Rothstein, most famous for fixing the 1919 World Series; Swerling’s heart was obviously not in this late noir portrayal of decadence and the criminal demimonde, which forms a kind of reverse image to Pride of the Yankees. In 1964 Swerling retired from a quite different Hollywood than the one he contributed so much to in the thirties and forties.

—R. Barton Palmer

SYLBERT, Richard

Art Director. Nationality: American. Born: Brooklyn, New York, 1928; twin brother of the designer Paul Sylbert. Education: Attended Tyler School of Art, Philadelphia. Career: 1951–53—TV art director (including the series Inner Sanctum); film designer from mid-1950s; 1975–78—head of production, Paramount. Awards: Academy Award, for Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf?, 1966; Academy Award, Best Art Direction and Set Direction, for Dick Tracy, 1991; British Academy Award, Best Production Design, for Dick Tracy, 1991; Lifetime Achievement Award, Society of Motion Picture and Television Art Directors, 2000.

Films as Art Director/Production Designer:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>Crowded Paradise (Pressburger); Baby Doll (Kazan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1957</td>
<td>A Face in the Crowd (Kazan); Edge of the City (Ritt)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

By SYLBERT: articles—

Film Heritage (Dayton, Ohio), Fall 1975.
Film Comment (New York), January/February 1982.

On SYLBERT: article—

Though the importance of Richard Sylbert’s contribution to art direction in the American cinema is undeniable, it is legitimate to ask if the abandonment of the great studios, continuing in Hollywood during the 1960s and 1970s, limited the complete expression of his talent. Nevertheless, Sylbert is one of the principal links, if not the principal, in the history of the classic art department, maintaining a tradition of design which has undergone a considerable renewal since the 1980s.

In his twenties, Sylbert worked with William Cameron Menzies, perhaps the major American film designer, claiming: “Menzies taught me about getting hold of the whole thing, about making the connections and keeping control of it and making rules.” If Sylbert, through Menzies, is heir to the idea of “structural rules,” to Elia Kazan, Sylbert owes the notion of the independence of the creative process. Sylbert says: “Kazan taught me a wonderful thing. Here was this man who was one of the greatest directors we ever had. I would sometimes go up to him and say, ‘Gadge, what do you think we ought to do here?’ And he would look at me and say, ‘What would you do if I were dead?’ I treat all directors as if they’re dead.”

A fidelity to these two influences allowed Sylbert to bring to the design of his films an individual vision, stressing the scripts’ most central ideas. He has said, for instance, that the design for Chinatown follows the basic orientation of the film: it can be summed up, in his opinion, as “Find the girl.” Sylbert uses color, space, and architecture to effect a “visual rewriting” of the script. In general, a color emerges as the deepest unifying factor of his design: in Chinatown a rediscovery of film noir leads to a utilization of “open” colors which tend toward luminous and hot whites; in Reds neutral browns dominate, contrasting only with the sequence of lively colors worn by Louise Bryant; in The Cotton Club, in which Sylbert is again involved in “reinventing a genre,” a profusion of brilliants and reflections dominate the look of the film, reinforcing the illusion of spectacle and the mythology of gangsters.

Some of Sylbert’s sets are both realistic and full of atmosphere, like the second floor of the house in Baby Doll, his first film with Kazan, and Martha’s house in Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf?, one of the five films he made for Mike Nichols. Both examples show the same line of unity: the sets carry a large psychological freight, with few decorative details (a studied disarrangement) and a confining space. The empty walls of Carnal Knowledge (“it’s really about memory,” the designer says) and the claustrophobic apartment of Rosemary’s Baby also show this psychological vision of space.

The art of Richard Sylbert is a long search for the correspondences between the psychology of the characters and the appearances of his sets. A Sylbert design possesses a liberty and an abstraction that approaches those of music. As he himself has said: “There’s no question, if you look at Reds, it’s a romantic symphony. You look at a picture like Chinatown, and it’s a concerto for instant brass. The idea in Cotton Club is that there’s no classical type structure. Jazz is not written down. Cotton Club is a syncopated movie.”

—M. S. Fonesca
TAKEMITSU, Toru

Composer. Nationality: Japanese. Born: Tokyo, 8 October 1930; grew up in Manchuria. Education: Studied with Kasuji Kyôse. Career: Member of the avant-garde group Jikken Kobo; entered films as assistant to Fumio Hayasaka; 1955—first film score, for Ginrin; has composed orchestra works; 1975—taught at Yale University, New Haven, Connecticut. Awards: Japanese Academy Award and Los Angeles Film Critics Award, for Ran, 1985. Died: 16 February 1996.

Films as Composer:

- 1955 Ginrin (Silver Circle) (Matsumoto) (co); Kinegraphy (Ohtsuji)
- 1956 Kurutta kaîjû (Crazed Fruit) (Nakahira); Sha to midori (Red and Green) (Nakamura); Tsuyu no atosaki (Toward the Rainy Season) (Nakamura)
- 1957 Doshaburi (Hard Rain) (Nakamura); Kaoyaku (The Boss) (Nakamura)
- 1959 Hanu o matsu hitobito (Those Who Wait for Spring) (Nakamura); Kiyen ryoko (Dangerous Voyage) (Nakamura); Asu e no seiso (Tomorrow’s Costume) (Nakamura); Itazura (The Joke) (Nakamura)
- 1960 José Torres (Teshigahara—short); Kawaita mizuumi (Youth in Fury) (Shinoda)
- 1961 Mozu (Shibuya); Furyo shonen (Bad Boys) (Hani); Hanjo (Nakamura); Mitasareta seikatsu (A Full Life) (Hani)
- 1962 Karama-ai (Heritage) (Kobayashi); Otooshiana (Pitfall) (Teshigahara); Namida o shishi no tategami no (Teshigahara—short); Seppuku (Hakusaku); ‘Japan’ ep. of L’Amour à vingt ans (Love at Twenty) (Ichikawa); Ratai (The Body) (Narusawa)
- 1963 Kawaita hana (Pale Flower) (Shinoda); Subarashii akuyo (Wonderful Bad Woman) (Onchi); Miren (Regrets) (Chiba); Taiheiyo hitoribotchi (My Enemy, the Sea; Alone on the Pacific) (Ichikawa) (co); Shiro to kuro (Pressure of Guilt) (Horikawa); Koto (Twin Sisters of Kyoto) (Nakamura); Sunna no onna (Woman in the Dunes) (Teshigahara); Kanojo to kare (She and He) (Hani)
- 1964 Nijisusa no chichi (A Father at 21) (Nakamura); ‘Ako’ ep. of La Fleur de l’age (The Adolescents) (Teshigahara); Ansatsu (Assassination) (Shinoda); Nihon dashutsu (Escape from Japan) (Yoshida); Te o tsunagu ko-ra (Children Hand in Hand) (Hani); Jidoshi doroba (Car Thief) (Wada); Kaidan (Kwaidan) (Kobayashi); Shirô o sa (White Morning) (Teshigahara—short); Jotai (The Call of Flesh) (Onchi); Le Mystère Kômiko (The Kômiko Mystery) (Marker)
- 1965 Utsukushita to kashashimi to (With Beauty and Sorrow) (Shinoda); Saigo no shîpan (The Last Judgment) (Horikawa); Ibun Sarutobi sasuke (Samurai Spy) (Shinoda); Kemonomichi (Beast Alley) (Sugawa); José Torres, Part II (Teshigahara—doc); Yotsuya kaidan (Illusion of Blood) (Toyoda); Buwana Toshi no uta (Bwana Toshi) (Hani)
- 1966 Shokei no shina (Punishment Island) (Shinoda); Monokurokumu no gaka (Yves Kline (Monochrome Painter Yves Kline) (Noda); Ki no kawa (Ki River) (Nakamura); Tanin no kao (The Face of Another) (Teshigahara); Akogare (Once a Rainy Day) (Onchi)
- 1967 Akanegumo (Clouds at Sunset) (Shinoda); Joi-Uchi (Rebellion) (Kobayashi); Izo no odoriko (Onchi); Midaregumo (Two in the Shadow) (Naruse)
- 1968 Meguriai (The Meeting) (Onchi); Moetikuta chizu (The Man without a Map) (Teshigahara); Nihon no seishun (Japanese Youth) (Kobayashi); Kyo (Kyoto) (Ichikawa); Hatsukoi jigokuhen (Nanami: Inferno of First Love) (Hani)
- 1969 Dankon (Bullet Wound) (Moritani); Shinju ten no atamia (Double Suicide) (Shinoda)
- 1970 Tairyo no kuryudo (Hunter of the Sun) (Onchi); Dodesukaden (Dodeskaden) (Kurosawa); Yomigaaru daichi (The Rebirth of the Soil) (Nakamura); Tokyo senso sengo hwa (He Died after the War) (Oshima); Inochi bonifuro (Inn of Evil) (Kobayashi)
- 1971 Gishiki (The Ceremony) (Oshima); Chinmoko (Silence) (Shinoda)
- 1972 Natsu no imoto (Dear Summer Sister) (Oshima); Wonder World (Fukakoshi); Summer Soldiers (Teshigahara); Seigenki (Time without Memory) (Narushima)
- 1973 Kaseki no mori (The Petrified Forest) (Shinoda)
- 1974 Himiko (Shinoda); Shiawase (Happiness) (Onchi)
- 1975 Sakuru no mori no manaki no shita (Under the Cherry Blossoms) (Shinoda); Kaseki (Fossils) (Kobayashi)
- 1976 Nihontou: Miyai Kouhe no waza (Japanese Swords: The Work of Kouhei Miyai) (Yamauchi)
- 1977 Sabita honoo (Rusty Flame) (Sadanaga); Hanare goze Orin (The Ballad of Orin) (Shinoda)
- 1978 Ai no borei (Empire of Passion) (Oshima); Moeru aki (Burning Autumn) (Kobayashi); Gazoku (This World) (Kawamoto)
- 1979 Le Musée du Louvre (The Louvre Museum) (Urata); Katakata (This World) (Kawamoto)
- 1980 Tenpyou no iraka (Slates of the Tenpyo Period) (Kumai)
- 1982 Yogen (Prophecy) (Hani)
- 1983 Tokyo saiban (The Tokyo Trial) (Kobayashi—doc)
- 1984 Himatsuri (Fire Festival) (Yanagimachi)
- 1985 Antonio Gaudi (Teshigahara); Ran (Kurosawa); Shokutaku no nai te (Family without a Dinner Table) (Kobayashi); Yari no Gonza (Gonza the Spearman) (Shinoda)
- 1990 Kuroi Ame (Black Rain) (Imamura)
- 1991 Rikyu (Teshigahara)
- 1993 Rising Sun (Kaufman)
- 1994 Music for the Movies: Toru Takemitsu (Zwerin—doc) (+ ro as interviewee)
Publications

By TAKEMITSU: book—

By TAKEMITSU: article—

Cinejap (Paris), September 1978.

On TAKEMITSU: book—

On TAKEMITSU: articles—

Chaplin (Stockholm), April-May 1965.
Focus on Film (London), March-April 1970.
Ecran (Paris), September 1975.
Obituary in Cue Sheet (Hollywood), January 1996.

* * *

Toru Takemitsu was not only one of the greatest contemporary Japanese composers and theoreticians of experimental music, but he was also a cinema fanatic who wrote music for more than 80 films. His film career began in the mid-1950s after he studied with the master composer Fumio Hayasaka. His first feature film was Kou Nakahira’s Crazed Fruit, a popular film about sensational bourgeois youth, which also attracted critical attention for its refreshing sensibility.

After working on a number of films by Noboru Nakamura, a successful Shochiku Studio melodrama director, Takemitsu began to work for the most ambitious young directors of his generation such as Masahiro Shinoda, Susumu Hani, Hiroshi Teshigahara, Nagisa Oshima, and Yosshishige Yoshida, as well as master directors including Masaki Kobayashi, Kon Ichikawa and Akira Kurosawa.

Takemitsu’s modern and unconventional style has greatly advanced Japanese film music. He responded to the highly experimental and stylized visual images created by Shinoda, Hani, Teshigahara, Oshima, and Yoshida with equally bold, often dissonant and avant-garde sounds. His scores compel the audience to perceive a film as a montage of visual and auditory images.

Takemitsu experimented with Japanese traditional instruments and musical concepts, as evidenced in Kobayashi’s Kwaidan and Kurosawa’s Ran. His use of silence and his sense of taste and timing were particularly effective in conveying suspense.

—Kyoko Hirano

TARADASH, Daniel

Films as Writer:

1939 Golden Boy (Mamoulian); For Love or Money (Rogell)
1940 A Little Bit of Heaven (Marton)
1948 The Noose Hangs High (Barton)
1949 Knock on Any Door (Ray)
1952 Rancho Notorious (F. Lang); Don’t Bother to Knock (Baker)
1953 From Here to Eternity (Zinnemann)
1954 Desiree (Koster)
1955 Picnic (Logan)
1956 Storm Center (+ d)
1958 Bell, Book, and Candle (Quine)
1965 Saboteur: Code Name Morituri (Morituri) (Wicki)
1966 Hawaii (Hill)
1969 Castle Keep (Pollack)
1971 Doctors’ Wives (Schaeffer)
1977 The Other Side of Midnight (Jarrott)
1980 Bogie (V. Sherman—for TV)

Publications

By TARADASH: articles—

American Film (Washington, D.C.), May 1979.
Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), vol. 29, no. 1, January 1991.

On TARADASH: articles—

American Film (Washington, D.C.), August 1990.
Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury), vol. 19, no. 1, January 1991.
The Journal: Writers Guild of America, West, (Los Angeles), April 1996.

* * *

Daniel Taradash’s career more often suggests the lawyer he was intended to become before he started writing, than the high-priced screenwriting technician he later became. Yet the law was the ambition of his father rather than of Taradash himself, and after graduating Taradash bargained a year in New York out of him before taking up the bar. Rouben Mamoulian, looking for someone to rewrite Clifford Odets’ Golden Boy, picked Taradash and Lewis Maltzer out of the same playwriting course, and Taradash found himself at Columbia. After war service, he went back to become one of the few screenwriters to endure and tame the autocratic Harry Cohn.

Knock on Any Door for Bogart under Nicholas Ray’s quirky direction helped build Taradash’s reputation for soothing tempers and getting on with the unruly—he same skills that would make him sought after for countless committees of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences and the Writers’ Guild. He tried his skills with Broadway producer Jed Harris, but though his play Red Gloves ran more than 100 performances, Taradash could never endure the tyrannical producer (“I loathed Jed Harris. He was a terrible sadist”), and fled back to Hollywood and the equally feared Fritz Lang. However Rancho Notorious, a high baroque Western with Dietrich’s Altar Keene queering it in tight trousers over the outlaw hideout Chuckaluck until she succumbs to the improbable charms of a young Arthur Kennedy, became a backdoor success. Also Langian in tone, Don’t Bother to Knock, the high-point of British director Roy Ward Baker’s brief Hollywood career, with Marilyn Monroe as a homicidal babysitter, won Taradash praise.

Taradash’s triumph was turning From Here to Eternity into an acceptable screenplay. Having paid $85,000 for James Jones’s erotic and profane novel of Pearl Harbour, Cohn was convinced he’d wasted his money. When Taradash asked if he could work on the adaptation at home, Cohn snapped, “With this book, you can write it in a whorehouse.” But Taradash managed to find a censor-proof story in the bestseller without doing too much violence to its text. After seeing the film, which won the screenwriter an Oscar, Jones told the producer, “Please tell Dan Taradash how much I liked it.”

Thereafter, Taradash mostly occupied himself condensing fat bestsellers and “opening up” hit Broadway plays. He admitted wintry Manhattan light and air into John van Druten’s witchcraft comedy Bell, Book and Candle, toned down the rural eroticism of William Inge’s Picnic (as well as inserting the picnic which didn’t appear in the original) and, in Desirée, reduced Annemarie Selinko’s epic of Napoleon’s love life to manageable proportions for Marlon Brando. Noël Coward had planned to direct. Instead journeyman Henry Koster took over, and Brando, piqued that he was not the centre of the story, sulked his way through his lines.

In 1956, Taradash belatedly pinned his liberal heart to his sleeve when he made a failed stab at direction with Storm Center, a moral fable about a smalltown librarian defying local book-bumers and having the library torched for her trouble. The script had been kicking around for years. Mary Pickford had intended to star after decades of nonactivity, but dropped out. So did Irene Dunne, and Bette Davis took the part. Four years after High Noon, the lesson was no longer topical, and even those critics inclined to give Taradash the benefit of the doubt on the basis of his work with Lang and Ray were unimpressed. He spent 1960 and 1961 trying to adapt James Michener’s sprawling Hawaii. His solution was to make not one film of the book but two, and sell tickets by the pair, but director Fred Zinnemann could never find funds for such a giant project. The script passed to Dalton Trumbo, the direction to George Roy Hill, and Hawaii, as one film, flopped.

Taradash’s later credits were mostly European. Brando persuaded him to write The Saboteur: Codename Morituri, a rambling story of a World War II German blockade runner being chased all over the ocean by the allies with Brando as an undercover anti-Nazi on board. Bernhard Wicki’s direction snuffed out what quality Brando’s re-writes and improvisations left in the script. Castle Keep, a fable of Americans who stumble into the medieval atmosphere of a remote French castle, was a cheap small picture inflated to an $8 million dud when Burt Lancaster became involved.

Taradash did repair work on Edward Dmytryk’s western Alvarez Kelly. He was fired from Sidney Sheldon’s The Other Side of Midnight, though his signature remains on a script which one French critic praised as “délirant,” perhaps out of loyalty to a film that tried, without success, to launch Marie-France Pisier as an international star. Taradash’s great disappointment is that he failed to see his adaptation of Andersonville produced. Mackinlay Kantor’s novel of the Civil War prison camp where 15,000 troops died seemed to offer the combination of epic scope and liberal politics which brought out the best in him, but no Hollywood studio would touch it. He remains a screenwriter never given his due by the film factory system he supported so vigorously.

—John Baxter

TAVOULARIS, Dean

Art Director. Nationality: American. Born: Lowell, Massachusetts, 1932. Education: Studied architecture at Otis Art Institute, Los Angeles. Career: Worked in animation department, then in live production, Walt Disney studios, before becoming art director. Awards: Academy Award, for The Godfather, Part II, 1974; British Academy Award, for Tucker: The Man and His Dream, 1988. Address: c/o Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, 8949 Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills, CA 90211, U.S.A.

Film as Assistant Art Director:

- 1965 Ship of Fools (Kramer); Inside Daisy Clover (Mulligan)

Films as Art Director/Production Designer:

- 1967 Bonnie and Clyde (Penn)
- 1968 Candy (Marquand); Petulia (Lester)
- 1970 Zabriskie Point (Antonioni); Little Big Man (Penn)
- 1972 The Godfather (Coppola)
- 1974 The Conversation (Coppola); The Godfather, Part II (Coppola)
- 1975 Farewell, My Lovely (Richards)
- 1978 Apocalypse Now (Coppola); The Brink’s Job (Friedkin)
- 1982 One from the Heart (Coppola); The Escape Artist (Deschanel); Hammett (Wenders)
- 1983 The Outsiders (Coppola); Rumble Fish (Coppola); Testament (Littman)
- 1986 Peggy Sue Got Married (Coppola)
- 1987 Gardens of Stone (Coppola); Heat (Richards); Un Homme amoureux (A Man in Love) (Kurys)
- 1988 Tucker: The Man and His Dream (Coppola)
- 1989 “Life without Zoe” ep. of New York Stories (Scorsese, Coppola and Allen)
- 1990 The Godfather, Part III (Coppola)
- 1992 Final Analysis (Joanou)
- 1993 Rising Sun (Kaufman)
- 1994 I Love Trouble (Shyer)

847
Dean Tavoularis (left)

1996  Jack (Coppola)
1998  Bulworth (Beatty); The Parent Trap (N. Meyers)
1999  The Ninth Gate (Polanski)
2001  Angel Eyes

Publications

By TAVOULARIS: article—

* * *

Since the mid-1960s, the production designs of Dean Tavoularis have been particularly noteworthy of his brilliant handling of twentieth-century period settings. Tavoularis trained as an architect at the Otis Art Institute and later worked as an animator for the Disney Studios before beginning his career as an art director and, ultimately, production designer.

His most notable work has appeared in films directed by Coppola and Antonioni. In addition, Tavoularis has developed a particular working relationship with the art director Angelo Graham. Tavoularis defines the production designer as the person who “should be involved in all visual aspects of the film,” as opposed to the art director, who is primarily involved in the technical aspects of settings. Graham and Tavoularis worked together throughout the 1970s on films including The Godfather, Part II; Farewell, My Lovely; and Apocalypse Now.

Among his early work, Tavoularis was assistant set designer on Inside Daisy Clover, which makes conspicuous use of abstract set designs reflecting a nostalgia for the artifice of early 1930s Hollywood musicals. These sets recall the work of designers such as Van Nest Polglase and Anton Grot, but their style is more minimal, revealing an affinity with their own time. Likewise, as art director on Bonnie and Clyde, Tavoularis conceived an image of the Depression era so heavily glamorized as to sacrifice all but the barest traces of historical accuracy. This romantic image was conveyed through costumes, settings, and the highly artificial rosy and golden coloring used throughout the film. Nevertheless, his sets contain something of the spirit of the age they depict, and, although the film has not worn particularly well, the look of Bonnie and Clyde exerted a strong and lasting influence on fashion in both dress and décor.

Set in the contemporary American west, Antonioni’s Zabriskie Point contrasted harsh reality with nostalgic escapism—the heroine drives a 20-year-old Buick—both of which were finely represented. by the exactness of details of setting, properties, and costume, all under the supervision of Tavoularis. His background in animation may have lent authenticity to the “explosion” sequence towards the end of the film in which the contents of a well-appointed modern American residence are blasted into the atmosphere in slow motion. This minute examination of domestic consumerism encapsulates the attitudes of the film towards bourgeois materialism in a time of political unrest.

Tavoularis’s work moved from the somewhat naive historicism of Bonnie and Clyde to the more archaeologically accurate portrayal of twentieth-century styles in Coppola’s The Godfather (both parts) in which the panoramic history of the Corleone family is set against insightful and precise backgrounds relating not only to the particular historical moment but also to the changing moods and the ethnic qualities of the narrative. Farewell, My Lovely continued the archaeological approach even more ambitiously as Tavoularis designed the revival, in color, of a classic 1940s film noir. His masterful handling of a subdued color range and his sophisticated use of the telling detail supported Tavoularis’s position at the top of his profession.

—Gregory Votolato

TERRY, Paul

Animator and Producer. Nationality: American. Born: Paul Houlton Terry in San Mateo, California, 19 February 1887. Career: News photographer, then syndicated cartoonist for Hearst newspaper chain; 1915—joined Bray Studios as animator; 1919—formed own studio, photographer, then syndicated cartoonist for Hearst newspaper chain; Terry in San Mateo, California, 19 February 1887. 1930—founded Terrytoons: collaborated with Frank Moser until 1936; after 1936, individual directors were assigned to the films; cartoon series include Farmer Al Falfa, Peg Leg Pete, Puddy the Pup, Kiko the Kangaroo, Gandy Goose, Dinky Duck, Mighty Mouse, Heckle and Jeckle, Little Roquefort, and Casper the Ghost; 1955—sold studio and films to Paul Houlton Terry (Davis and Gordon); Ozzie Ostrich Comes to Town (Davis and Gordon); Play Ball (Davis); The Mechanical Films as Animator and Producer with Frank Moser:

1930 Caviar; Pretzels; Spanish Onions; Indian Pudding; Roman Punch; Hot Turkey; Hawaiian Pineapple; Swiss Cheese; Codfish Bally; Hungarian Goulash; Bully Beef; Kangaroo Steak; Monkey Meat; Chop Suey; French Fried; Dutch Treat; Irish Stew; Fried Chicken; Jumping Beans; Scotch Highball; Salt Water Taffy; Golf Nuts; Pigskin Capers

1931 Popcorn; Club Sandwich; Razzberries; Go West, Big Boy; Quack Quack; The Explorers; Clowning; Sing Sing Prison; The Fireman’s Bride; The Sultan’s Cat: A Day to Live; 2000 B.C.; Blues; By the Sea; Her First Egg; Jazz Mad; Canadian Capers; Jesse and James; The Champ; Around the World; Jingle Bells; The Black Spider; China; The Lorelei; Summertime; Aladdin’s Lamp

1932 The Villain’s Curse; Noah’s Oating; The Spider Talks; Peg Leg Pete; Play Ball; Ye Olde Songs; Bullero; Radio Girl; Woodland; Romance; Bluebeard’s Brother; Farmer Alalfa’s Bedtime Story; The Mad King; Cockey Cockroach; Spring Is Here; Farmer Alalfa’s Ape Girl; Sherman Was Right; Burlesque; Southern Rhythm; Farmer Alalfa’s Birthday Party; College Spirit; Hook and Ladder Number One; The Forty Thieves; Tosland; Hollywood Diet; Ireland or Bust

1933 Jealous Lover; Robin Hood; Hansel and Gretel; Tale of a Shirt; Down on the Levee, Who Killed Cock Robin?; Oh Susanna; Romeo and Juliet; Pirate Ship; Tropical Fish; Cinderella; King Zilch; The Banker’s Daughter; The Oil Can Mystery; Fanny in the Lion’s Den; Hypnotic Eyes; Grand Uproar; Pick-Necking; Fanny’s Wedding Day; A Gypsy Fiddler; Beanstalk Jack; The Village Blacksmith; Robinson Crusoe; Little Boy Blue; In Venice; The Sunny South

1934 Holland Days; The Three Bears; Rip Van Winkle; The Last Straw; The Owl and the Pussycat; A Mad House; Joe’s Lunch Wagon; Just a Clown; The King’s Daughter; The Lion’s Friend; Pandora; Slow but Sure; See the World; My Lady’s Garden; Irish Sweepstakes; Busted Blossoms; Mice in Council; Why Mules Leave Home; Jail Birds; The Black Sheep; The Magic Fish; Hot Sands; Tom, Tom the Piper’s Son; Jack’s Shack; South Pole or Bust; The Dog Show

1935 The First Snow; What a Night; The Bullfight; Fireman Save My Child; The Moth and the Spider; Old Dog Tray; Flying Oil; Peg Leg Pete the Pirate; A Modern Red Riding Hood; Five Puplets; Opera Night; King Looney XIV; Moan and Groans; Amateur Night; The Foxy-Fox; Chain Letters; Birdland; Circus Days; Hey Diddle Diddle; Foiled Again; Football; A June Bride; Aladdin’s Lamp; Southern Horsecity; Ye Olde Toy Shop; The Mayflower

1936 The Feud; The 19th Hole Club; The Alpine Yodeler; Barnyard Amateurs; Off to China; The Western Trail; A Wolf in Cheap Clothing; Rolling Stones; The Runt; The Busy Bee; The Sailor’s Home; A Tough Egg; Puddy the Pup and the Gypsies; Farmer Alalfa’s Prize Package

Other Films as Animator and Producer:

1916 Cat-astrophé; Wolfhound
1921 The Country Mouse and the City Mouse; The Fox and the Grapes; The Frog That Wanted a King
1922 The Spendthrift; The Eternal Triangle; The Model Diary
1923 Cat’s Whiskers
1927 Carnival Week
1936 The Hot Spell (Davis and Gordon); Kiko and the Honey Bears (Davis and Gordon); The Health Farm (Davis and Gordon); A Bully Frog (Davis and Gordon); Kiko Foils a Fox (Davis and Gordon); Sunken Treasure (Davis and Gordon); A Battle Royal (Davis and Gordon); Robin Hood in an Arrow Escape (Davis and Gordon); Farmer Alalfa’s Twentieth Anniversary (Davis and Gordon); Cats in the Bag (Davis and Gordon); Slanted Again (Davis and Gordon)
1937 Salty McQuire (Davis and Gordon); The Tin Can Tourist (Davis and Gordon); The Book Shop (Davis and Gordon); The Big Game Hunt (Davis and Gordon); Red Hot Music (Davis and Gordon); Flying South (Davis and Gordon); The Hay Ride (Davis and Gordon); Bug Carnival (Davis and Gordon); School Birds (Davis and Gordon); Puddy’s Coronation (Davis and Gordon); Ozzie Ostrich Comes to Town (Davis and Gordon); Play Ball (Davis); The Mechanical Cow (Zander); Pink Elephants (Gordon); The Homeless Pup (Gordon); The Paper Hangers (Davis); Trailer Life; The Villain Still Pursued Her; Kiko’s Cleaning Day (Gordon); A Close Shave (Davis); The Dancing Bear; The Saw Mill Mystery (Rasinski); The Dog and the Bone (Gordon); The Timid Rabbit (Davis); The Billy Goat Whiskers (Foster); The Barnyard Boss (Rasinski)

1938 The Lion Hunt (Davis); Bugs Beetle and His Orchestra (Foster); His Off Day (Rasinski); Just Ask Jupiter (Davis); Gandy the Goose (Foster); Happy and Lucky (Rasinski); A Mountain Romance (Davis); Robinson Crusoe’s Broadcast (Foster); Maid in China (Rasinski); The Big Top (Davis); Devil of the Deep (Foster); Here’s to Good Old Jail (Donnelly); The Last Indian (Rasinski); Milk for Baby (Davis); Mrs. O’Leary’s Cow (Donnelly); Eliza Runs Again (Rasinski); Chris Columbo (Donnelly); String Bean Jack (Foster); Goose Flies High (Foster); Wolf’s Side of the Story (Rasinski); The Glass Slipper (Davis); The Newcomer (Davis); The Stranger Rides Again (Davis); Housewife Herman (Donnelly); Village Blacksmith (Davis); Doomsday (Rasinski); The Frame-Up (Rasinski)

1939 The Owl and the Pussy Cat (Donnelly); One Gun Garry in Nick of Time (Donnelly); The Three Bears (Davis); Frozen Feet (Rasinski); G-Man Jitters (Donnelly); The Nutty Network (Davis); The Cuckoo Bird (Davis); Barnyard Eggcitement (Rasinski); Nick’s Coffee Pot (Rasinski); The Prize Guest (Davis); A Bully Romance (Donnelly); Africa Squawks (Rasinski); Barnyard Baseball (Davis); Old Fire Horse (Donnelly); Two Headed Giant (Rasinski); The Golden West (Davis); Sheep in the Meadow (Davis); Hook, Line, and Sinker (Donnelly); The Orphan Duck (Rasinski); The Watchdog (Donnelly); One Mouse in a Million (Rasinski); A Wicky-Wacky Romance (Davis); The Hitchhiker (Donnelly); The Ice Pond (Davis); The First Robin (Rasinski)

1940 A Dog in a Mansion (Donnelly); Edgar Runs Again (Davis); Harvest Time (Rasinski); The Hare and the Hounds (Donnelly); All’s Well That Ends Well (Davis); Much Ado about Nothing (Rasinski); It Must Be Love (Rasinski); Just a Little Bull (Donnelly); Wot’s All th’ Shootin, Fer (White); Swiss Ski Yodelers (Donnelly); Camip Capers (Davis); Professor Offkeysy (Rasinski); Rover’s Rescue (White); Rupert the Hunt (Davis); Love in a Cottage (White); Billy Mouse’s Akwakade (Donnelly); Club Life in Stone Age (Davis); The Lucky Duck (Rasinski); Touchdown Demons (White); How Wet Was My Ocean (Donnelly); Happy Haunting Grounds; Landing of the Pilgrims (Rasinski); The Magic Pencil (White); Plane Goofy (Donnelly); Snowman (Davis); Temperamental Lion (Rasinski); The Mouse of Tomorrow (Donnelly)

1941 What a Little Sneese Will Do (Donnelly); Hairless Hector (White); Mississippi Swing (Rasinski); Fishing Made Easy (Donnelly); The Home Guard (Davis); When Knights Were Bold (White); The Baby Seal (Rasinski); Uncle Joey (Davis); The Dog’s Dream (Donnelly); The Magic Shell (Davis); What Happens at Night (Rasinski); Horse Fly Opera (Donnelly); Good Old Irish Tunes (Rasinski); Bringing Home the Bacon (Davis); Twelve O’Clock and All Ain’t Well (Donnelly); The Old Oaken Bucket (Rasinski); The Ice Carnival (Donnelly); The One Man Navy (Davis); Uncle Joey Comes to Town (Davis); Welcome Little Stranger (Rasinski); The Frozen North (Rasinski); Slap Happy Hunters (Donnelly); Back to the Soil (Donnelly); The Bird Tower (Davis); A Yarn about Yarn (Rasinski); Flying Fever (Davis)

1942 The Torrid Toreador (Donnelly); Happy Circus Days (Rasinski); Funny Bunny Business (Donnelly); Cat Meets Mouse (Davis); Eat Me, Kitty, Eight to the Bar (Davis); Sham Battle Shenanigans (Rasinski); Oh Gentle Spring (Rasinski); Lights Out (Donnelly); Tricky Business (Donnelly); Neck and Neck (Davis); The Stork’s Mistake (Donnelly); All about Dogs (Rasinski); Willifil Willie (Rasinski); The Outpost (Davis); Tide Trouble (Donnelly); All Out for “V” (Davis); Life with Fido (Rasinski); The Big Build-Up (Davis); School Daze; Night Life in the Army (Davis); Doing Their Bit; Ickle Meets Pickle (Rasinski); Frankensteins Cat (Davis); Barnyard WAAC (Donnelly); Somewhere in the Pacific (Davis)

1943 Scrap for Victory (Rasinski); He Dood It Again (Donnelly); Barnyard Blackout (Davis); Shipyard Symphony (Donnelly); Patriotic Pooches (Rasinski); The Last Round-Up (Davis); Pandora’s Box (Rasinski); Mopping Up (Donnelly); Keep ‘em Growing (Davis); Super Mouse Rides Again (Mighty Mouse Rides Again) (Davis); Camouflage (Donnelly); Somewhere in Egypt (Davis); Down with Cats (Rasinski); Aladdin’s Lamp (Donnelly); Lion and the Mouse (Davis); Yokel Duck Makes Good (Donnelly); The Hopeful Donkey (Davis)

1944 The Butcher of Seville (Donnelly); The Helicopter (Donnelly); Wreck of the Hesperus (Davis); A Day in June (Donnelly); The Champion of Justice (Davis); The Frog and the Princess (Donnelly); Mighty Mouse Meets Jekyll and Hyde Cat (Davis); My Boy Johnny (Donnelly); Eliza on the Ice (Rasinski); Wolf! Wolf! (Davis); The Green Line (Donnelly); Carmen’s Veranda (Davis); The Cat Came Back (Rasinski); The Two Barbers (Donnelly); The Ghost Town (Davis); Sultan’s Birthday (Tyle); A Wolf’s Tale (Rasinski); At the Circus (Donnelly); Gandy’s Dream Girl (Davis); Dear Old Switzerland (Donnelly)

1945 Mighty Mouse and the Pirates (Rasinski); Port of Missing Mice (Donnelly); Ants in Your Pantry (Davis); Raiding the Raiders (Rasinski); Post War Inventions (Rasinski); Fisherman’s Luck (Donnelly); Mighty Mouse and the Kilkenny Cats (Davis); Mother Goose Nightmare (Rasinski); Smokey Joe (Rasinski); The Silver Streak (Donnelly); Aesop’s Fable: The Mosquito (Davis); Mighty Mouse and the Wolf (Donnelly); Gypsy Life (Rasinski); The Fox and the Duck (Davis); Swooming the Swooners (Rasinski); The Watch Dog (Donnelly); Who’s Who in the Jungle (Donnelly); Mighty Mouse Meets Bad Bill Bunion (Davis); The Exterminator (Donnelly); Mighty Mouse in Krakatoa (Rasinski)

1946 The Talking Magnies (Davis); Svengali’s Car (Donnelly); The Fortune Hunters (Rasinski); The Wicked Wolf (Davis); My Old Kentucky Home (Donnelly); It’s All in the Stars (Rasinski); Throwing the Bull (Rasinski); The Golden Hen (Davis); Dinky Finds a Home (Donnelly); The Johnstown Flood (Rasinski); Peace-Time Football (Davis); The Trojan Horse (Davis); The Tortoise Wins Again (Rasinski); Winning the West (Donnelly); The Electronic Mouse Trap (Davis); The Jail Break (Donnelly); The Snow Man (Rasinski); The Housing Problem (Davis); The Crackpot
King (Donnelly); The Uninvited Pests (Rasinski); The Hepecat (Davis); Beanstalk Jack (Donnelly)

1947 Crying Wolf (Rasinski); McDougall’s Rest Farm (Davis); Deadend Cats (Donnelly); Happy Go Lucky (Rasinski); Mexican Baseball (Davis); Aladdin’s Lamp (Donnelly); Cat Trouble (Rasinski); The Sky Is Falling (Davis); The Intruders (Donnelly); Mighty Mouse Meets Deadeye Dick (Rasinski); Flying South (Davis); Date for Dinner (Donnelly); Fishing by the Sea (Rasinski); The First Snow (Davis); One Note Tony (Rasinski); Super Salesman (Donnelly); A Fight to the Finish (Rasinski); The Wolf’s Pardon (Donnelly); Hitch Hikers (Rasinski); Swiss Cheeze Family Robinson (Davis); Lazy Little Beaver (Donnelly)

1948 Felix the Fox (Davis); Taming the Cat (Rasinski); Mighty Mouse and the Magician (Donnelly); Gandy Goose and the Chipper Chipmunk (Davis); Hounding the Hares (Donnelly); The Feeding Hillbillies (Rasinski); Mystery in the Moonlight (Donnelly); Seeing Ghosts (Davis); Sleepless Night (Rasinski); The Witch’s Cat (Davis); Magpie Madness (Donnelly); Love’s Labor Won (Davis); The Hard Boiled Egg (Rasinski); The Mysterious Stranger (Donnelly); Triple Trouble (Donnelly); Out Again, in Again (Rasinski); Free Enterprise (Davis); Magic Slipper (Davis); Gooney Golfers (Rasinski)

1949 The Wooden Indian (Rasinski); Power of Thought (Donnelly); Racket Buster (Davis); Dingbat Land; Lion Hunt (Donnelly); Stowaways (Rasinski); Cold Romance (Davis); The Kitten Sitter (Donnelly); Happy Landing; The Catnip Gang (Donnelly); Hula Hula Land (Davis); The Lyn’ Lion (Rasinski); Mrs. Jones’ Rest Farm (Donnelly); The Covered Pushcart (Donnelly); A Truckload of Trouble (Rasinski); Perils of Pearl Pureheart (Donnelly); Dancing Shoes (Davis); Flying Cups and Saucers (Rasinski); Paint Pot Symphony (Rasinski); Stop, Look, and Listen (Donnelly)

1950 Comic Book Land (Davis); Fox Hunt (Rasinski); Better Late Than Never (Donnelly); Anti-Cats (Davis); Aesop’s Fable; Foiling the Fox (Rasinski); The Beauty Shop (Donnelly); Merry Chase (Davis); Dream Walking (Rasinski); Law and Order (Donnelly); The Red Headed Monkey (Davis); All This and Rabbit Stew (Rasinski); The Dog Show (Donnelly); King Tut’s Tomb (Davis); Cat Happy (Rasinski); If Cats Could Sing (Donnelly); Mouse and Garden (Davis); Beauty on the Beach (Rasinski); Wide Open Spaces (Donnelly); Sour Grapes (Davis); Mother Goose’s Birthday Party (Rasinski)

1951 Rival Romeos (Donnelly); Squirrel Crazy (Davis); Three Is a Crowd (Rasinski); Woodman Spare That Tree (Donnelly); Stage Struck (Davis); Sunny Italy (Rasinski); Songs of Erin (Rasinski); Bulldozing the Ball (Donnelly); Spring Fever (Davis); Goons from the Moon (Rasinski); Musical Madness (Donnelly); The Elephant Mouse (Davis); The Rain Makers (Rasinski); Injun Trouble (Donnelly); Seashack Sailors (Davis); Tall Timber Tale (Rasinski); Aesop’s Fable; Golden Egg Goose (Donnelly); A Swiss Miss (Davis); Steeple Jacks (Rasinski); Little Problems (Donnelly); Party Panic (Davis); The Helpful Genie (Rasinski); Sno Fun (Donnelly); A Cat’s Tale (Davis); Beaver Trouble (Rasinski); The Haunted Cat (Donnelly)

1952 Papa’s Little Helpers (Davis); Movie Madness (Rasinski); Mechanical Bird (Donnelly); Seaside Adventure (Davis); City Slicker (Davis); Prehistoric Perils (Rasinski); Papa’s Day of Rest (Davis); Flat Foot Fledgling (Davis); Time Gallops On (Davis); Off to the Opera (Rasinski); The Happy Cobbler (Davis); Hypnotized (Davis); Hansel and Gretel (Rasinski); Flipper Frolics (Rasinski); Little Anglers (Rasinski); Foolish Duckling (Davis); House Busters (Rasinski); Mysterious Cowboy (Davis); Happy Valley (Donnelly); Good Mouse Keeping (Davis); Nice Doggy (Donnelly); Happy Holland (Donnelly); Moose on the Loose (Davis); Sink or Swim (Rasinski); Flop Secret (Donnelly); Picnic with Papa (Davis)

1953 Soapy Opera (Rasinski); Thrifty Cabs (Davis); Hair Cut-Ups (Donnelly); Wise Quacks (Davis); Mouse Meets Bird (Rasinski); Snappy Snap Shots (Donnelly); Hero for a Day (Davis); Pill Peddlars (Rasinski); Featherweight Champ (Donnelly); Playful Puss (Davis); Plumber’s Helpers (Rasinski); Hot Rods (Donnelly); Ten Pin Terrors (Rasinski); The Orphan Egg (Donnelly); Friday the 13th (Davis); When Mousehood Was in Flower (Rasinski); Open House (Donnelly); Bargain Daze (Davis); Sparky the Firefly (Rasinski); Mouse Menace (Donnelly); The Reluctant Pup (Davis); How to Keep Cool (Rasinski); Log Rollers (Davis); Growing Pains (Donnelly)

1954 Spare the Rod (Rasinski); Runaway Mouse (Davis); How to Relax (Rasinski); Blind Date (Donnelly); Nonsense Newsreel (Davis); Helpless Hippo (Rasinski); Pet Problems (Donnelly); Prescription for Percy (Davis); Satisfied Customers (Rasinski); Tall Tale Teller (Rasinski); Arctic Rivals (Davis); Howling Success (Rasinski); Pride of the Yard (Donnelly); Cat’s Revenge (Davis); Reformed Wolf (Rasinski); Blue Plate Symphony (Rasinski)

1955 Barnyard Actor (Rasinski); A Yokohama Yankee (Rasinski); Duck Fever (Rasinski); The First Flying Fish (Rasinski); No Sleep for Percy (Rasinski); An Igloo for Two (Rasinski); Good Deed Daily (Rasinski); Bird Symphony (Rasinski); Phoney News Flashes (Rasinski); Foxed by a Fox (Rasinski); Last Mouse of Hamlin (Rasinski); Little Red Hen (Rasinski)

Publications

On TERRY: articles—

The Cartoonist, August 1967.
Classic Film/Video Images (Muscatine, Iowa), July 1979.
Griffithiana (Gemona), no. 28, December 1986.
Times Literary Supplement, 16 August 1996.

* * *

Paul Terry was the Kmart producer of theatrical cartoons. He was strictly a businessman and cartoons were his business. His goal was to make cartoons as inexpensively as possible. Because his cartoons were simplistic, they were produced faster, allowing Terrytoons to have more cartoons showing in the theaters. Terrytoons were cheap and uninspired. Terry ruled his kingdom with an iron hand, with ultimate control over all stories and characters. He preferred to make one-shot cartoons instead of using continuing characters like Disney and others. Outstanding creative talents were stifled at the studio, and animators of high caliber went on to greener creative pastures. Regardless of this, some memorable cartoon characters were eventually created by the Terrytoon Studios.

In 1940 Isidore Klein proposed a parody of the popular Superman series by having a fly with similar superhuman powers. Terry rejected this idea only to come back a few weeks later and propose a mouse with these superhuman powers. Thus Mighty Mouse (originally known as Super Mouse) was born in The Mouse of Tomorrow and Terrytoons had created its first superstar. The Mouse of Tomorrow told the story of a mouse who escapes from terrorizing cats. He hides out in a supermarket where he washes in Super Soap, eats Super Soup, Super Celery, and Super Cheese, and turns into Super Mouse. Then he returns to save the rest of micedom and throttle the cats. Several films were produced with the Super Mouse character until a conflict of interest developed between the cartoon and a Super Mouse comic book. So Terry changed the mouse’s name to Mighty Mouse. To enhance the one-dimensional character of Mighty Mouse musical spoofs of opera were used with Mighty Mouse singing his dialogue. All of the successful formulas were used to death by Terry but the longevity of the series indicates its popularity.

In the meantime Terry had created another successful series, Heckle and Jeckle. Terry’s idea was to use the look-a-like concept in a new cartoon. This was an innovative idea, never used before. Heckle and Jeckle were mischievous magpies who talked with accents, one British, the other New York, and the two were never distinguishable from one another. Heckle and Jeckle was a very self-reflexive cartoon, and the magpies often referred to their animated status. The Power of Thought was an entire cartoon focusing on animation of the characters. As with all of Terry’s cartoons, the formula was used repeatedly. But the characters of Heckle and Jeckle were so strong that they survived repetition better than the rest.

With the success of Heckle and Jeckle and Mighty Mouse, Terry began to change his attitude about continuing characters. The studio began creating other continuing characters, some meeting with success, others failing after one or two episodes. In 1952 Terrytoons was the first studio to sell its cartoons to television. In 1955 he sold out completely to CBS, thus ending his involvement in the production of Terrytoons. Terrytoons were always simple, pleasant, and non-violent (with the possible exception of Heckle and Jeckle). They worked very well on television because although limited in the quality of animation they were considerably better than average. Terrytoons owes a great debt to television and the endurance that these cartoons have found in the medium.

—Maryann Oshana

THALBERG, Irving G.

Producer. Nationality: American. Born: Irving Grant Thalberg in Brooklyn, New York, 30 May 1899. Family: Married the actress Norma Shearer, 1927. Career: Secretary; 1918—worked as Cari Laemmle’s assistant in New York office of Universal, and sent to Hollywood as troubleshooter; 1923—Vice president and head of production for Louis B. Mayer: with merger into MGM, became vice president and supervisor of production: over the next decade helped make MGM the leading film studio; mid-1930s—ill health reduced his control; 1937—Motion Picture Academy instituted the Irving G. Thalberg Memorial Award. Awards: Academy Awards for Grand Hotel, 1931–32; Mutiny on the Bounty, 1935. Died: Of pneumonia in Hollywood, 14 September 1936.

Films as Producer:

1921 Foolish Wives (von Stroheim)
1923 Merry-Go-Round (Julian); The Hunchback of Notre Dame (Worsley)
1924 He Who Gets Slapped (Sjöström)
1925 The Merry Widow (von Stroheim); The Big Parade (K. Vidor); The Great Divide (Barker)
1926 Ben-Hur (Niblo)
1927 Flesh and the Devil (Brown)
1928 The Crowd (K. Vidor)
1929 Hallelujah (K. Vidor)
1930 Anna Christie (Brown); The Big House (Hill)
1931 Private Lives (Franklin); Grand Hotel (Goulding)
1932 Freaks (Browning); Strange Interlude (Leonard)
1933 The Merry Widow (Lubitsch); The Barretts of Wimpole Street (Franklin)
1935 Mutiny on the Bounty (Lloyd); China Seas (Garnett); A Night at the Opera (Wood); Biography of a Bachelor Girl (R. Griffith)
1936 Romeo and Juliet (Cukor)
1937 Camille (Cukor); The Good Earth (Franklin)
Publications

By THALBERG: articles—

On THALBERG: books—

On THALBERG: articles—

Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1976.
Cinématographe (Paris), May 1984.
Architectural Digest (Los Angeles), April 1990.

Thalberg himself:

produced near the end of his career does any one now associate with and Jeanette McDonald, Mutiny on the Bounty, starring Clark Gable and Charles Laughton, The Good Earth, starring Louise Rainer, and Camille, starring Greta Garbo in what may have been her finest role.

In the end the long term impact of Irving Thalberg is difficult to appraise. Since he is the subject of F. Scott Fitzgerald’s novel The Last Tycoon, Thalberg is surely the most famous movie mogul of Hollywood’s Golden Age, and because of his early death one of the most nostalgically remembered. He surely ranked in the Hollywood elite as best seen in his creation of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Science, and its celebrated Oscars. (Thalberg provided the name for the award given to “creative producers whose body of work reflects a consistently high quality of motion picture production.”)

But as the head of production for MGM for a dozen years he reported to studio chief, Louis B. Mayer, and to corporate head, Nicholas M. Schenck. Mayer and Schenck protected Thalberg and enabled him to “simply produce.” Thalberg did his best work mentoring fabled stars, line producers, mediocre directors, and tal-eted writers. Perhaps he is so fondly remembered because he alone seemed to take talent seriously, and thus represented the lone sensitive, mannered head of production in a Hollywood filled with ruthless, cut throat executives.

—Douglas Gomery

THEODORAKIS, Mikis

Composer. Nationality: Greek. Born: Chios Island, 29 July 1925. Education: Attended the Conservatory of Patras; Athens Conservatory; studied with Messiaen in Paris. Family: Married Myrto Alinoglou, 1953, children: one son and one daughter. Career:
Arrested as a student, and deported during the Greek civil war, 1947–52; lived in Europe during most of the 1950s: first film as composer, Barefoot Battalion, 1953; 1961—returned to Greece, and elected to Parliament, 1963, but imprisoned by the military junta, 1967–70, and again in exile; 1974—returned to Greece again, and served as member of Parliament, 1981–85; composer of works for the theater, as well as songs and orchestral works. Awards: British Academy Award, for Z, 1969. Address: 111 rue Notre-Dame-des-Champs, 75006 Paris France.

Films as Composer:

1953 Barefoot Battalion (Tallas); Eva (Plyta)
1957 Ill Met by Moonlight (Night Ambush) (Powell and Pressburger)
1959 Luna de miel (Honeymoon) (Powell)
1960 Faces in the Dark (Eady)
1961 The Shadow of the Cat (Gilling)
1962 Manolis (Crosfield); Electra (Cacoyannis); Phaedra (Dassin);
Le Couteau dans la plaie (Five Miles to Midnight) (Litvak);
Les Amants de Teruel (The Lovers of Teruel) (Rouleau) (co)
1964 Bloko (The Blockade) (Kyras)
1965 Une Balle au coeur (Pollet); Zorba the Greek (Cacoyannis)
1967 The Day the Fish Came Out (Cacoyannis)
1968 Falak (Kovačs)
1969 Z (Costa-Gavras)
1971 État de Siège (State of Siege) (Costa-Gavras); The Trojan Women (Cacoyannis)
1973 Satieja (Delic); Serpico (Lumet)
1974 Partizani (Hell River) (Jankovic); The Story of Jacob and Joseph (Cacoyannis)
1975 Der Geheimnisträger (Gottlieb)
1976 Actas de Merusia (Litvin); Iphigenia (Cacoyannis)
1979 Asymvivatos (Easy Road) (Thomopoulos); Hell River Bad Company (Paulou); Kostas
1980 O Anthropos me to garyfallos; Nela (Fischer)
1981 Belladonna (Rex); The Savage Hunt (Scavolini) (song)
1983 Mod att leva (Romare)
1986 Les Clowns de dieu (Schmidt)
1989 Sis (The Mist) (Livaneli)
1998 Barluschke
2000 Fovou tous Ellines . . . (Beware of Greeks Bearing Arms; Beware of Greeks Bearing Guns)

Publications

By THEODORAKIS: books—

Gia ten Hellenike mousike (on Greek music), Athens, 1961.
Mousike gia tis mazes (on Greek music), Athens, 1972.

On THEODORAKIS: books—

Phelessas, Giannes, Hodoiporiko me to Mike Theodorake, Aigokeros, 1994.

On THEODORAKIS: articles—

Focus on Film (London), Spring 1974, additions in Spring 1977.
Ecran (Paris), September 1975.
Film Score Monthly (Los Angeles), November 1993.

* * * *

Although he has become recognized as much for his political involvements as for his compositions, Mikis Theodorakis has had a significant role in the development of contemporary Greek music, not only for films but in other fields as well. His film work, especially for Michael Cacoyannis and Constantin Costa-Gavras, has gained him an international reputation. Theodorakis’s music combines folk-oriented pieces and traditional instrumentation with contemporary musical approaches emphasizing rhythmic dancelike pieces, and consequently he has been most often associated with films concerning contemporary ethnic subjects.

Deported in the early 1950s because of his political convictions, Theodorakis moved to Paris where he began composing concert works as well as scores for ballet, theater, and films (primarily in England). He returned to Greece in 1961 and began his association with Cacoyannis, providing an appropriate mixture of modern musical styles and traditional Greek instrumentation to the director’s updating of Greek tragedies. The score for Electra shows a tendency toward jazz and rock influences, while the music for Zorba the Greek, one of the composer’s most famous scores, contains rhythmic dance pieces that capture of the spirit of the title character’s more philosophical nature. The Day the Fish Came Out further demonstrates the composer’s familiarity with rock and more experimental musical approaches which nevertheless reflect in their orchestration a nationalist tradition.

Following his imprisonment in 1967 both his assignments and the music itself became more politically oriented. While the composer maintained his association with Cacoyannis on the film version of The Trojan Women and later, following Theodorakis’s return to Greece, on Iphigenia, he also began collaborating with Costa-Gavras. Much of the score for Z was written while the composer was in exile and compiled from previously written material, and lends a decided specificity to the unidentified locale of the film. This, coupled with the awareness of the composer’s own political activities, makes the musical messages as significant as those inherent in the script.

While Z made Theodorakis a logical choice for further politically oriented films, the distinct Greek inflections in his scores have not always been appropriate to the subject matter. The score for Serpico contains restrained passages recalling the quieter moments of Zorba, combined with jazzlike themes to provide a contemporary urban sound. The music tries to capture some of the main character’s Italian background but much of it still maintains an atmosphere reflecting the composer’s own traditions. The score for Costa-Gavras’s State of Siege aims for an authentic folk flavor performed by South American musicians, and is particularly effective in its driving percussive passages. While such scores show only marginal ability to break away from his instant identification with a “Greek sound,” Theodorakis’s body of work for films as a whole serves as a reflection of that country’s rich heritage, from its traditional styles to its contemporary musical development.

—Richard R. Ness

THOMSON, Virgil

Films as Composer:

1936 The Plow That Broke the Plains (Lorentz)
1937 The River (Lorentz); The Spanish Earth (Ivens)
1945 Tuesday in November (Houseman)
1948 Louisiana Story (Flaherty)
1957 The Goddess (Cromwell)
1958 Power among Men (Hackenschmied)
1964 Voyage to America (Jackson—short)

Publications

By THOMSON: books—

Music Right and Left, New York, 1951.
Everbest Ever: Virgil Thomson's Correspondence with Bay Area Friends, Lanham, 1996.

On THOMSON: book—

Virgil Thomson’s reputation as a composer of film music is out of all proportion to his output. He wrote scores for only eight movies, six of them documentaries. Yet these scores—and two of them in particular—exerted a lasting influence on the development of 20th-century American music, not only for films but in the concert hall as well.

Born in Missouri, Thomson studied during the 1920s with Nadia Boulanger in Paris, reveling in the musical and artistic ferment of the era. Invited in 1936 to provide a score for Pare Lorentz’s documentary, The Plow That Broke the Plains, he responded with music that treated indigenous American folk themes with a wit, litheness and affectionate irony learnt from Satie and the composers of Les Six, creating an engaging blend of naivety and sophistication.

Lorentz’s film, commissioned by the US Department of Agriculture, dealt with the Dustbowl disaster of the American Midwest, when thousands were driven off the land by economic and ecological breakdown. Working closely with Lorentz—and virtually for nothing, since the director had long since overspent his minuscule budget—Thomson wove further strands of association around the film’s evocative images. For the arrival of cattle on the high plains, banjo and guitar pick out the plangent melancholy of cowboy songs like “Streets of Laredo,” while scenes of rampant financial speculation are treated to a raunchy, sardonic blues, vibrant with saxophones, that recalls the Weill of Dreigroschenoper.

To Aaron Copland, Thomson’s score for The River provided “a lesson in how to treat Americana.” Its influence can be heard in...
Copland’s own ballet scores—Rodeo, Billy the Kid, Appalachian Spring—as well as in the work of associated composers such as Roy Harris and Walter Piston. But in the specific field of film music Thomson’s two scores for Lorenz established an alternative mode to the lush Germanic romanticism then prevalent in Hollywood movies. Not only through Copland’s own film scores (and via Copland, those of his followers such as Bernard Herrmann and Alex North) but for American film music in general Thomson set out options of concision and spareness, of a clean, sharply-etched idiom rather than an overall impressionistic haze.

‘The movie,’ Thomson once wrote, ‘is a true musical form, as truly a musical form as the opera, though without the opera’s inseparable marriage of music to words.’ Nowhere was his theory better demonstrated than in his score for Flaherty’s Louisiana Story. The film, financed by Standard Oil, showed the coming of oil to the eyes of a native Cajun boy. Drawing this time on an anthology of Cajun folk song, Thomson clothed the haunting melodic lines in a rich variety of instrumental texture, combining them as before with rhythmic freedom appropriate to its basic material and to Flaherty’s lyrical images.

Thomson’s score for Louisiana Story won him a Pulitzer Prize, the first Pulitzer award ever granted to a film score. Once again he adapted the music for concert use, deriving from it two separate original passages of his own. Though employing complex formal devices—a twelve-tone chorale, a passacaglia, a chromatic double fugue—the music never seems academic, nor loses the simplicity and devices—a twelve-tone chorale, a passacaglia, a chromatic double fugue—the music never seems academic, nor loses the simplicity and rhythmic freedom appropriate to its basic material and to Flaherty’s lyrical images.

Thomson’s score for Louisiana Story won him a Pulitzer Prize, the first Pulitzer award ever granted to a film score. Once again he adapted the music for concert use, deriving from it two separate orchestral suites and a ballet, The Bayou.

The only feature film Thomson scored was The Goddess, the rise to fame of a Monroe-esque Hollywood star directed by John Cromwell from a script by Paddy Chayefsky. Less distinctive than his documentary work, the music suggests that Thomson felt hampered by composing for fiction film, with its limited scope for elongated lines and symphonic development. Even so, The Goddess allowed him to exercise his talent for spot-on pastiche. At various points in the film (which covers the years 1928–58) a radio is turned on and jazz emerges, each time perfectly in period in its style and instrumentation. Yet all of it is Thomson’s original work—further evidence of his exact and appreciative ear for indigenous American music of every kind.

—Philip Kemp

TIOMKIN, Dmitri

Composer. Nationality: American. Born: St. Petersburg, Russia, 10 May 1899; emigrated to the United States, 1925; naturalized citizen, 1937. Education: Attended St. Petersburg Conservatory and St. Petersburg University; studied with Glazunov and Blumenthal in St. Petersburg and with Petri, Zadora, and Busoni in Berlin. Family: Married 1) the ballerina and choreographer Albertina Rasch, 1925 (died 1967); 2) Olivia Cynthia Patch, 1972. Career: Composer and pianist in Berlin and Paris during the 1920s (played European premier of Gershwin’s Concerto, 1928); 1929–68—lived in Hollywood; music director, Signal Corps films during World War II; 1968—settled in London. Awards: Academy Award, for High Noon and the song “High Noon,” 1951, The High and the Mighty, 1954, and The Old Man and the Sea, 1958. Chevalier, Legion of Honor. Died: London, 12 November 1979.

Films as Composer:

- 1929 Devil May Care (Franklin) (co)
- 1930 Our Blushing Brides (Beaumont); The Rogue Song (L. Barrymore) (co); Lord Byron of Broadway (Nigh and Beaumont) (co)
- 1931 Resurrection (Carewe)
- 1933 Broadway to Hollywood (Mack) (co); Alice in Wonderland (McLeod)
- 1934 Roast-Beef and Movies (Bearwitz—short)
- 1935 Naughty Marietta (Van Dyke) (co); The Casino Murder Case (Marin); I Live My Life (Van Dyke); Mad Love (The Hands of Orlac) (Freund)
- 1936 Mr. Deeds Goes to Town (Capra)
- 1937 Lost Horizon (Capra); The Road Back (Whale)
- 1938 Spawn of the North (Hathaway); The Great Waltz (Duvivier);
  You Can’t Take It with You (Capra)
- 1939 Only Angels Have Wings (Hawks); Mr. Smith Goes to Washington (Capra)
- 1940 Lucky Partners (Milestone); The Westerner (Wyler)
- 1941 Meet John Doe (Capra); Forced Landing (Wiles); The Corsican Brothers (Ratoff); Scattergood Meets Broadway (Blonde Menace) (Cabanne); Flying Blind (McDonald)
- 1942 A Gentleman after Dark (Marin); Twin Beds (Whelan); The Moon and Sixpence (Lewin); Shadow of a Doubt (Hitchcock)
- 1942–45 Why We Fight series (Capra and Litvak)
- 1943 Unknown Guest (Neumann)
- 1944 The Imposter (Duvivier); The Bridge of San Luis Rey (Lee); Ladies Courageous (Rawlins); When Strangers Marry (Breytedy) (Castle); The Battle of San Pietro (Huston); Forever Yours (Nigh)
- 1945 Dillinger (Nosseck); China’s Little Devils (Bell); Pardon My Past (Fenton)
- 1946 Whistle Stop (Moguy); Black Beauty (Nosseck); Angel on My Shoulder (Mayo); The Dark Mirror (Siodmak); Duel in the Sun (K. Vidor); It’s a Wonderful Life (Capra)
- 1947 The Long Night (Litvak)
- 1948 Tarzan and the Mermaids (Florey); The Dude Goes West (Neumann); So This Is New York (Fleischer); Red River (Hawks); Portrait of Jennie (Dieterle)
- 1949 Canadian Pacific (Marin); Champion (Robson); Home of the Brave (Robson); Red Light (Del Ruth)
- 1950 Dakota Lil (Sandel); Gaily Bystander (Lerner); Cham-pagne for Caesar (Whorf); D.O.A. (Mate); The Men (Zinnemann); Mr. Universe (Lerner); Cyrano de Bergerac (Gordon)
- 1951 The Thing (The Thing from Another World) (Nyby); Strangers on a Train (Hitchcock); Peking Express (Dieterle); The Well (Popkin and Rouse); Drums in the Deep South (Menzies); Bugsle in the Afternoon (Rowland); High Noon (Zinnemann)
- 1952 Mutiny (Dmytryk); My Six Convicts (Fregene); Lady in the Iron Mask (Murphy); The Happy Time (Fleischer); The Big Sky (Hawks); The Four Poster (Reis); The Steel Trap (Stone); Angel Face (Preminger); I Confess (Hitchcock);
Return to Paradise (Robson); Jeopardy (J. Sturges); Blowing Wild (Fregonese)

1953 Take the High Ground (Brooks); Cease Fire! (Crump); Dial M for Murder (Hitchcock)

1954 His Majesty O'Keefe (Haskin); The Command (Butler); The High and the Mighty (Wellman); A Bullet Is Waiting (Farrow); The Adventures of Hajji Baba (Weiss); Strange Lady in Town (LeRoy)

1955 Land of the Pharaohs (Hawks); The Court-Martial of Billy Mitchell (Preminger)

1956 Giant (Stevens); Friendly Persuasion (Wyler); Tension at Table Rock (Warren)

1957 Gunfight at the O.K. Corral (J. Sturges); Night Passage (Nielson); Search for Paradise (O. Lang); The Young Land (Tetzlaff); Wild Is the Wind (Cukor)

1958 The Old Man and the Sea (J. Sturges)

1959 Rio Bravo (Hawks); Last Train from Gun Hill (J. Sturges)

1960 The Unforgiven (Huston); The Alamo (Wayne); The Sundowners (Zinnemann)

1961 The Guns of Navarone (Lee Thompson); Town without Pity (Reinhardt); Without Each Other (Swimmer)

1963 55 Days at Peking (N. Ray)

1964 The Fall of the Roman Empire (A. Mann); Circus World (Hathaway)

1965 36 Hours (Seaton)

1967 The War Wagon (Kennedy)

1968 Great Catherine (Fleming); Tchaikovsky (+ d, exec pr)

Film as Co-Producer:

1969 Mackenna's Gold (Lee Thompson)

Publications

By TIOMKIN: book—

With P. Buraneli, Please Don't Hate Me (autobiography). New York, 1959.

By TIOMKIN: articles—

Etude (Philadelphia), February 1953.

Cinema (Los Angeles), July 1966.

In Film Score, edited by Tony Thomas, South Brunswick, New Jersey, 1979.

On TIOMKIN: books—

On TIOMKIN: articles—

Performing Right (London), May 1970.

Film (London), Spring 1972.

Film Music Notebook (Calabasas, California), vol. 4, no. 2, 1978.

Rivista del Cinematografo (Rome), May 1980.

Fistful of Soundtracks (London), November 1981.

Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1986.

Soundtrack! (Hollywood), March 1986.

Soundtrack! (Hollywood), March 1996.

Film Score Monthly (Los Angeles), June 1996.

* * *

On receiving an Academy Award in 1955 for The High and the Mighty, Dimitri Tiomkin began his acceptance speech by saying "I would like to thank Beethoven, Brahms, Wagner, Strauss, Rimsky-Korsakov." That the audience greeted this as a joke and roared with laughter accordingly is not surprising, for Tiomkin, his pronounced Russian accent untouched by years in America, enjoyed a reputation as a flamboyant, larger-than-life character. Nor is it surprising that Tiomkin should protest that he was, in fact, deadly serious, for though he was the consummate Hollywood professional, his roots, like so many Hollywood composers of his generation, belonged in the European classical tradition.

Tiomkin was trained in Tsarist Russia, studying under Alexander Glazunov at the St. Petersburg Conservatory. He had his first brush with the movies at this time, working in a cinema playing the piano to accompany silent films. After the revolution he studied under Busoni in Berlin. Subsequently he moved between Paris (where he gave the first European concert performance of Gershwin's Concerto in F) and America, where he eventually settled. The first film for which he was solely responsible for the music was Norman Z. McLeod's Alice in Wonderland, but his first major break came when Frank Capra asked him to compose the music for Lost Horizon, the film based on James Hilton's Utopian fantasy about the lost kingdom of Shangri-La. Tiomkin's lush, oriental pastiche, with its clustered woodwinds and angelic choirs, was enormously successful at the time, but opinion has been divided as to its merits. Irving Bazelon, in his book Knowing the Score, notes that though the film is set in Tibet "not one note of Tibetan music appears on the soundtrack," while William H. Rosar, in an essay analyzing Tiomkin's work for the film argues that the score "contributed much to the film's faraway mood and enchantment." Capra expressed no reservations: "Tiomkin's music not only captured the mood, it damn near captured the film." Tiomkin became Capra’s favored composer, and worked with him on Mr. Smith Goes to Washington, Meet John Doe, You Can’t Take It With You, and It’s a Wonderful Life, as well as more than 20 wartime documentaries, supervised by Capra and directed by Capra, John Huston, Anatole Litvak, and Joris Ivens.

In his four decades as a composer for Hollywood, Tiomkin covered the entire spectrum of film music, from film noir to comedy, from Western to melodrama. He freely incorporated elements from the romantic European tradition and from American folk music. While something of a musical conservative ("For mass appeal, melody is the important thing . . . To hell with musical intellectuals. Who cares about them?") he could be adventurous when adapting to the requirements of the film. He showed a surprising affinity for the Western, scoring films by Howard Hawks, John Sturges, King Vidor’s Duel in the Sun, William Wyler’s Friendly Persuasion, and winning two Oscars for Fred Zinnemann’s High Noon. When asked how a Russian could write for a Western, Tiomkin’s characteristic response was “Did our producer on Red River know how to lasso a steer?” High Noon perhaps shows Tiomkin at his most effective—a simple score featuring harmonica—building tension through repetition. The ballad, with lyrics by Ned Washington, which runs through the film, comments on the story, as if the events taking place on the screen have already passed into oral history. The song became a hit in its own right, which, in turn, helped boost the film commercially. Tiomkin continued to develop the ballad form in subsequent films, using it even more ambitiously in John Sturges’s Gunfight at the O.K. Corral. He also provided the score for Rio Bravo, Howard Hawks’s answer to the implied pacifism of High Noon. The featured ballad, sung during the film by Rick Nelson, is an echo of Tiomkin’s earlier score for Hawks’s Red River.

Tiomkin was philosophical about the loss of his earlier aspirations as a concert composer. He immersed himself in the new art of creating music for the cinema, apparently at ease with the imposed commercial criteria. In his genial autobiography Please Don’t Hate Me, Tiomkin offers this sober assessment of his talent, “I could never have been a Beethoven, Chopin, or Wagner . . . had I devoted myself to composition in the concert field I think I might have been as good as Rachmaninov . . . I’ve gone over to the technology of motion pictures, music for the masses, music for the machine in an age of machines.”

Tiomkin’s long and prolific career, embracing myriad musical styles for a wide variety of films, defies easy assessment. He could create rousing Western scores for films such as Red River and The Big Sky, or bring out simple touches of Americana, as in Friendly Persuasion. He provided effective scores for Alfred Hitchcock, notably with a series of sinister variations on the “Merry Widow Waltz” for Shadow of a Doubt. He could also lapse into moments of vulgarity—his powerful score for Rudolph Mate’s doom-laden film noir, D.O.A., is marred by the bizarre intrusion of the sliding woodwind wolf whistle that marks the appearance of a pretty woman. His relations with directors were not always trouble-free; Fred Zinnemann was upset by what he considered an intrusive, inappropriate score for The Men, the story of crippled World War II veterans, and Howard Hawks apparently dropped Tiomkin from Hatari! because he refused to use authentic African instruments.

In addition to the two Oscars (for score and song) for High Noon, Tiomkin received Academy Awards for The High and the Mighty and The Old Man and the Sea. In his autobiography he offered this unsentimental description of his work for the movies: “I followed the changes in progressive jazz. When calypso came along I wrote in the West Indian vein. I could write rock and roll if necessary. In Hollywood vernacular, I could write commercial.’’

—Dominic Power

TISSE, Edward

Cinematographer. Nationality: Russian. Born: Edward Kazimirovich Tisse in Lithuania, 13 April 1897. Career: Newsreel cameraman; 1918—photographer on the “agit-trains” during the Russian Revolution (footage used by both Esther Shub and Dziga Vertov); photographed the first Soviet film, Signal; worked with Sergei Eisenstein during his entire career, and accompanied him to Western Europe and the United States, photographed documentary or chronicle films Warm Company, Kino-Pravda no. 21 (Cine-Truth about Lenin), The Kremlin Past and Present, Face the Village, From Ore to Rail, Poisonous Gases, and Roman Karman’s film on the Kara-Kum expedition. Died: In Moscow 18 November 1961.

Films as Cinematographer:

1918  Signal (Arkatov) (co)
1921  Serp i molet (Sickle and Hammer) (Gardin); Golod . . . golod . . . golod (Hunger . . . Hunger . . . Hunger) (Pudovkin and Gardin)
Edward Tisse is best known for his work with director Sergei Eisenstein. Tisse was, however, among the pioneers of the Soviet cinema, working with such people as Vertov and Pudovkin before his long, successful partnership with Eisenstein began. His early career as a newsreel cameraman on World War and Russian Civil War fronts earned him a reputation as both a skilled and fearless technician. He participated in newsreel and feature film projects which would later be viewed as the beginnings of a new Russian cinema.

Tisse headed the film crew of the first “agit-train,” a train staffed and equipped to produce printed materials, plays, and films specifically for the moral support of the Red Army troops. In addition, he photographed what is sometimes referred to as the first “Soviet” feature film—director Alexander Arkatov’s Signal. The film was the first feature produced by the Moscow branch of the Cinema Committee, the first Soviet Russia film organization. Tisse’s demonstrated skill with both newsreel footage and features, his bold personality, and his enthusiasm for experimentation led to a collaboration which spanned almost a quarter of a century. In 1923, Tisse was selected to photograph Eisenstein’s first film, Strike.

The realization of Strike was due to a great extent to Tisse. He not only possessed the technical knowledge which Eisenstein lacked at the time, but also understood and agreed with the director’s “montage of attractions.” The partnership continued to develop with the shooting of Eisenstein’s second feature, Battleship Potemkin. The two artists complemented each other. Tisse was inspired to further experimentation with the technology at his disposal to make Eisenstein’s artistic vision a filmic reality. For the Odessa Steps sequence, Tisse set up a camera trolley the length of the steps, creating one of the first dolly shots in Russian film history. The origins of what would become conventions of documentary film technique are also visible in scenes like the one shot in an actual ship’s engine room.

Tisse continued to work with Eisenstein on Old and New (The General Line) and October. Eisenstein’s detailed planning of each film coupled with the fact that director and cameraman understood each other so well made it possible for Tisse to shoot scenes with the eventual juxtaposition of images in mind. This facilitated editing of every montage sequence but was particularly beneficial in the production of October, with its numerous and complex intellectual montage sequences.

During the early 1930s Tisse left Russia to travel with Eisenstein through Europe, America, and Mexico. The official reason for the trip was the study of sound film techniques in other countries. In addition to this pursuit, other projects were undertaken. Much time was devoted to researching and filming Eisenstein’s never completed Que Viva Mexico! Also during this period, Tisse directed a feature-length film on abortion while in Switzerland.

Upon returning to Russia, Tisse resumed his experimentation with tone and emotional tension begun in earlier films. He had previously used shades of light and darkness and different degrees of soft focus to create emotional tension. He perfected these techniques during Eisenstein’s sound film period. Tisse’s mastery of tonal composition is best demonstrated in Alexander Nevsky. In one exemplary sequence the choice of lenses and the use of a special filter transformed the atmosphere of a hot July day into the “Battle on the Ice.” In this particular scene Tisse also slowed down the hand-cranked camera to control the rhythm and the tension of the battle. He utilized similar methods in photographing the exterior scenes for both parts of Ivan the Terrible, Eisenstein’s final films.

—Marie Saeli

TODA, Jusho

Art Director. Nationality: Japanese. Born: Tokyo, 1928. Education: Studied painting and sculpture at Junior High School of Aoyama Gakuin University; studied industrial design in the army. Military Service: Served in the Japanese army during World War II. Career: 1945–46—engineer for Hokkaido University; then a painter and sculptor, and architect and industrial designer; 1953—assistant art director: worked with Hiroshi Mizutani and Kisaku Ito; 1962—first

Films as Art Director:

1962 Karami-ai (The Entanglement) (Kobayashi); Sanga ari (There Are Mountains and Rivers) (Matsuyami); Seppuku (Harakiri) (Kobayashi)

1963 Kawaita hana (Pale Flower) (Shinoda)

1964 Kaidan (Kwaidan) (Kobayashi)

1966 Shokei no shima (Punishment Island) (Shinoda); Hakachu no torima (Violence at Noon) (Oshima)

1967 Akanegumo (Clouds at Sunset) (Shinoda); Nippon shunka-ko (A Treatise on Japanese Rowdy Songs) (Oshima); Mure-shinju: Nippon no natsu (Japanese Summer: Double Suicide) (Oshima)

1968 Koshikei (Death By Hanging) (Oshima); Kaettekita yopparai (Three Resurrected Drunkards) (Oshima)

1969 Shinjuku dorobo niki (Diary of a Shinjuku Thief) (Oshima); Shonen (Boy) (Oshima)

1970 Buraikan (The Scandalous Adventures of Buraikan) (Shinoda); Tokyo senso sengo hiwa (The Man Who Left His Will on Film) (Oshima)

1971 Gishiki (The Ceremony) (Oshima)

1972 Nasu no imoto (Summer Sister) (Oshima)

1974 Ranru no hata (Ragged Flag) (Yoshimura)

1976 Ai no corrida (In the Realm of the Senses) (Oshima)

1978 Ai no borei (Empire of Passion) (Oshima)

1983 Senjo no merii kurisumasu (Merry Christmas, Mr. Lawrence) (Oshima)

1985 Shokatakunonaiie (The Family without a Dinner Table) (Kobayashi)

Publications

On TODA: article—

* * *

Jusho Toda was one of the most imaginative production designers in Japan. He was first acclaimed for the ambitious set design of Masaki Kobayashi’s Seppuku, for which he created appropriately striking black-and-white backgrounds to highlight the powerful story of a struggle between samurai. The Daliesque images he created for Kobayashi’s Kwaidan, such as a pair of eyes in an orange-yellow sky and a palace floating over the smoke on colorful waters, were particularly noted for the audacious quality they gave to this anthology of ghost stories.

Nagisa Oshima invited the eccentric art director to join his filmmaking group, and their collaboration has continued for two decades, from Violence at Noon to Merry Christmas, Mr. Lawrence. Challenged by the budgetary limitations of Oshima’s independent productions, Toda created ingenious settings for the spontaneous and radical ideas of this ideologically conscious director. Parts of the sets in Death By Hanging were made out of newspapers; similarly, many sets in other Oshima films use abstract plastic shapes to emphasize theatricality. The altars he often used in both interior and exterior scenes were similar to those of the Shinto religion, and gave a ritualistic quality. One of the most idiosyncratic of the images he created for Oshima is the Japanese national flag whose “Rising Sun” in the center is painted in black, a symbol of the dark side of authority.

The sets Toda designed for Oshima’s In the Realm of the Senses, Empire of Passion, and Merry Christmas, Mr. Lawrence, are comparatively realistic but nonetheless help create the powerful atmosphere of passionate love, violence, and abstract eroticism.

Toda was also responsible for the simple yet striking black-and-white interior settings for the gambling scenes of Masahiro Shinoda’s Pale Flower, as well as for the elaborate color schemes of the director’s The Scandalous Adventures of Buraikan. Toda was also acclaimed for the solemn interiors he created for Kobayashi’s serious family drama, The Family without a Dinner Table.

—Kyoko Hirano

TOLAND, Gregg

Cinematographer. Nationality: American. Born: Charleston, Illinois, 29 May 1904. Military Service: 1941–45—photographer and camera designer for Navy Photographic Unit and Office of Strategic Services. Family: Married the actress Virginia Thorpe, 1945. Career: Messenger boy, then camera assistant to Al St. John at William Fox Studio; later, assistant to Arthur Edeson; 1926—began

Gregg Toland
long-term association with Goldwyn Studio; 1929—first film as co-cinematographer (with George Barnes), This Is Heaven; he and Barnes designed ‘‘blimp’’ to replace the immobile sound-proof camera booth. Awards: Academy Awards for Wuthering Heights, 1939; December 7th (documentary), 1943. Died: Of heart attack in West Hollywood, 28 September 1948.

Films as Co-Cinematographer with George Barnes:

1929  This Is Heaven (Santell); Bulldog Drummond (Jones); Condemned (Ruggles); The Trespasser (Goulding)

1930  Whoopee! (Freeland) (co); Raffles (D’Arrast); One Heavenly Night (Fitzmaurice)

Films as Cinematographer:

1931  The Devil to Pay (Fitzmaurice); The Unholy Garden (Fitzmaurice); Indiscreet (McCarey) (co); Tonight or Never (LeRoy); Palm Days (Sutherland)

1932  Playgirl (Enright); Man Wanted (Dieterle); The Tenderfoot (Enright); The Washington Masquerade (Brabin); The Kid from Spain (McCarey)

1933  The Nuisance (Conway); Tugboat Annie (LeRoy); The Masquerader (Wallace); Roman Scandals (Tuttle)

1934  Jazz River (Seitz); Forsaking All Others (Van Dyke) (co); Nana (Arzner); We Live Again (Mamoulian)

1935  The Wedding Night (Vidor); Public Hero No. 1 (Ruben); Les Miserables (Boleslawsky); Mad Love (Freund) (co); The Dark Angel (Franklin); Splendor (Nugent)

1936  Strike Me Pink (Taurog) (co); These Three (Wyler); Come and Get It (Hawks and Wyler) (co); The Road to Glory (Hawks); Beloved Enemy (Potter)

1937  History Is Made at Night (Borzage); Woman Chases Man (Blystone); Dead End (Wyler)

1938  The Goldwyn Follies (Marshall); Kidnapped (Werker); The Cowboy and the Lady (Potter)

1939  Wuthering Heights (Wyler); They Shall Have Music (Mayo); Intermezzo: A Love Story (Ratoff)

1940  Raffles (Wood); The Grapes of Wrath (Ford); The Westerner (Wyler); The Long Voyage Home (Ford)

1941  Citizen Kane (Welles); The Little Foxes (Wyler); Ball of Fire (Hawks)

1943  December 7th (+ co-d); The Outlaw (Hughes)

1946  The Kid from Brooklyn (McLeod); Song of the South (Foster and Jackson); The Best Years of Our Lives (Wyler)

1947  The Bishop’s Wife (Koster); A Song Is Born (Hawks)

1948  Enchantment (Reis)

Publications

By TOLAND: articles—

On Citizen Kane in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), February 1941.

On Citizen Kane in Popular Photoplay (New York), June 1941.

“Motion Picture Cameraman,” in Theatre Arts (New York), September 1941.

Screenwriter (London), December 1947.

On TOLAND: articles—

Slocombe, Douglas, and William Wyler, in Sequence (London), Summer 1949, also letter in Autumn 1949.

Film (New York), September 1953.

Filmmaker’s Newsletter (Ward Hill, Massachusetts), May 1971.

Film Comment (New York), Summer 1972.

Filme (Berlin), no. 6, 1980.

Film Psychology Review (Salem, New York), Summer-Fall 1980.

Allen, R., in Framework (Norwich, Norfolk), Summer 1983.

*  *  *

Gregg Toland was one of the greatest cinematographers of the Hollywood studio era—if not the greatest. Much more than a competent technician, Toland was a visual stylist and an innovator. He often supervised the set construction on his films, and he always worked closely with his directors to plan lighting and camerawork that would go beyond the technical requirements of filmmaking to create the proper mood for a scene.

Toland’s most productive association with a director was his six-film collaboration with William Wyler. It was on the Wyler films of the late 1930s that the cinematographer began experimenting with the composition-in-depth and deep-focus photography for which he is best known. Composition-in-depth is the arrangement of characters and action on several planes within the frame at once. The different planes need not all be in focus simultaneously for composition-in-depth to be effective; if, however, foreground, middleground, and background are all in sharp focus at the same time, this effect is called deep-focus photography.

Wyler liked to use long takes, long shots, and composition-in-depth: he preferred to create dramatic tension by spreading his actors out across the frame and on different planes within the frame, rather than by cutting back and forth between them. In The Little Foxes, for example, the death of Horace involves a very lengthy shot and two planes of action. In the shot the focus stays on Regina, who sits motionless in the foreground, while the paralyzed Horace struggles and then dies of a heart attack—out of focus—on the stairs in the background.

Toland experimented with composition-in-depth and deep focus on other films—John Ford’s The Long Voyage Home, for example—and then perfected the deep-focus technique on Orson Welles’s masterpiece, Citizen Kane. Toland’s use of high-intensity arc lamps and the newly available light sensitive Eastman Super XX film stock allowed him to close down the aperture of his 24mm lens to f8 or less; the combination of the wide-angle lens and narrow aperture gave Toland sharp focus on objects from five to 50 feet or more away from the camera.

Welles and Toland used deep focus extensively in Citizen Kane—sometimes as a functional alternative to shot-reaction shot editing, and sometimes expressively, to create a mood or a visual metaphor. In one shot early in the film, Charlie Kane’s mother and a banker, in the foreground, sign an agreement that will allow young Charlie to be taken away from his parents and later inherit a fortune; Charlie’s father, uncertain about the agreement, paces back and forth in the middleground; Charlie, seen through a window, plays unsuspectingly in the snow in the background. Thus, one of the film’s themes—Kane’s alienation from the others—is established visually in this early scene.

After Citizen Kane—his crowning achievement—Toland continued his fine work on films such as Wyler’s The Best Years of Our Lives, until his distinguished career was cut short by his premature death in 1948.

—Clyde Kelly Dunagan

TOLL, John

Cinematographer. Nationality: American. Born: Cleveland, Ohio. Education: Attended school in Ohio before moving to Los Angeles at the age of 19 to attend college. Family: Married Lois Burwell (a makeup artist). Career: Production assistant, Wolper Productions, 1970s; served as an assistant on feature films before working as assistant camera operator for cinematographers John Alonzo, Jordan Cronenweth, Allen Daviau, Conrad Hall, and Robbie Greenberg; television credits include cinematography for A China Odyssey, Citizen Kane, The Young Riders (ABC, 1989), and Good Night, Sweet Wife: A Murder in Boston (CBS, 1990); shot hundreds of television commercials since 1988. Awards: Academy Award, Best Cinematography, for Legends of the Fall, 1994; Camerimage Golden Frog (Poland), for Legends of the Fall, 1995; Academy Award, Best Cinematography, American Society of Cinematographers (ASC) Award, Outstanding Achievement in Cinematography in Theatrical Releases, both 1995, and British Academy Award, Best Cinematography, 1996, for Braveheart, New York Film Critics Circle Award, National Society of Film Critics Award, Best Cinematography, both 1998, ASC Award, Outstanding Achievement in Cinematography in Theatrical Releases, Berlin International Film Festival Honorable Mention for Outstanding Camerawork, Chicago Film Critics Association Award, Best Cinematography, and Golden Satellite Award, Best Motion Picture Cinematography, all 1999, all for The Thin Red Line. Agent: Judy Marks Agency, 119 N. Larchmont Boulevard, Los Angeles, CA 90004–3704, U.S.A.

Films as Cinematographer:

1971 The Young Graduates (Anderson)
1972 The Hoax (Anderson)
1987 A China Odyssey: Steven Spielberg’s ‘‘Empire of the Sun’’ (for TV) (doc)
1989 The Kid, pilot for The Young Riders series (for TV)
1990 Good Night, Sweet Wife: A Murder in Boston (Freedman—for TV)
1992 Wind (Ballard)
1994 Legends of the Fall (Zwick)
1995 Braveheart (Gibson)
1996 Jack (Coppola)
1997 The Rainmaker (Coppola)
1998 The Thin Red Line (Malick)
1999 Simpatico (Warchus)
2000 Almost Famous (Crowe)
2001 Captain Corelli’s Mandolin

Other Films:

1979 Tom Horn (Wiard) (camera operator); Norma Rae (Ritt) (camera operator)
1980 The Boy Who Drank Too Much (Freedman—for TV) (camera operator)
1981 Zorro, the Gay Blade (Medak) (camera operator)
1983 Scarsface (De Palma) (camera operator)
1984 The Falcon and the Snowman (Schlesinger) (camera operator)
1986 Peggy Sue Got Married (Coppola) (camera operator); Black Widow (Rafelson) (camera operator)
1988 Tequila Sunrise (Towne) (ph: second unit); The Milagro Beanfield War (Redford) (camera operator)
1989 Blaze (Shelton) (ph: second unit); Always (Spielberg) (additional ph: Montana unit)

Publications

By TOLL: articles—

On TOLL: articles—

Heuring, David, “Cinematographers Honor Their Own,” in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), May 1990.

American Cinematographer (Hollywood), February 1999.

* * *

In a 1991 interview on the Newport, Rhode Island, location of Carroll Ballard’s Wind, John Toll divulged that he did not have an individual style. After almost ten years of working his way up through the ranks from assistant camera operator to camera operator—under the tutelage of such distinguished cinematographers as John Alonzo and Jordan Cronenweth—he had landed his first job as director of photography on this theatrical feature. Within a decade, the fledgling cinematographer who proclaimed “I don’t really have a visual definition of myself” would develop a signature look.

Toll belongs to the school that believes the cinematographer’s art is one of illusion. He prefers an unobtrusive, uncluttered style in which the hand of the director of photography is almost invisible. The Ohio native favors images captured in natural light—or at least those that appear that way. He had little choice while shooting the America’s Cup sailing adventure Wind on a twelve-meter boat in the open seas. The cramped quarters and difficult circumstances forced him to work with existing daylight conditions. Although Edward Zwick’s Legends of the Fall (1994) offered plenty of wide-open space on location in western Canada, the shoot was plagued by rainstorns and floods, requiring Toll to make constant technical adjustments. Matching shots posed a particular difficulty, as cloud cover alternated with brilliant sunlight. Despite these challenges, Toll remained committed to his naturalistic aesthetic of making “the lighting feel natural, and not manipulated.” His striking widescreen cinematography captured breathtaking vistas in the “big sky” tradition of classic Westerns and earned him an Oscar for Best Cinematography in 1994.

Toll’s experience with shifting, unpredictable weather patterns and his flexibility in dealing with change proved invaluable on his next project, Mel Gibson’s Braveheart (1995). Shot in Ireland and Scotland, where the climate seemingly cycled through four seasons in a single day, the historical epic was a difficult shoot. He achieved a “very rough, raw, stark, dark and graphic—almost primitive” feel suitable for the uncivilized Middle Ages in which the story of Scottish freedom fighter William Wallace takes place. Similar to Legends of the Fall, the subject matter called for realism and a degree of visual stylization to elevate the heroic protagonist to mythic stature. In both films, Toll linked characters to the surroundings that shaped them in wide shots of bold composition. The imagery recalls John Ford’s Western films, especially those set in Monument Valley, and David Lean’s Lawrence of Arabia—influences that Toll has cited. His backlighting gave the characters a romantic quality, adding golden highlights to the long tresses of the adventuresome Tristan (Brad Pitt) in Legends of the Fall and the valiant Wallace (Mel Gibson) in Braveheart. Although executed with existing light sources, the stylized photography marked a new direction in the cinematographer’s work.

The strength of Toll’s action-sequence photography lies in his ability to plunge the spectator into the midst of a scene. Using handheld cameras aboard the racing yachts in Wind, he simulated the visceral experience of being ravaged by the forces of nature. Shots of sea water splashing against the camera lens make viewers feel as though they are being hit in the face by a wave. Handheld cameras were also used to shoot the sweeping battle sequences of Braveheart. “We wanted to create a sense of immediacy and make the audience feel as if they were participants, that they were witnessing the battle from close range,” Toll was quoted by Chris Probst in American Cinematographer. He used longer focal-length lenses to fill the frame with close-ups of the combatants. The unsteady images and moving camera created visual chaos, capturing the confusion of the fighting. Toll’s creative and logistical accomplishments earned him a second Best Cinematography Oscar for Braveheart in 1995, making him the first cinematographer in almost fifty years to win back-to-back Academy Awards.

Collaborating with Terrence Malick on The Thin Red Line in 1998, Toll elevated his artistry to a new level. The screen became his canvas, and he transformed images into poetry. Based on James Jones’s 1962 novel about the 1942–43 battle for Guadalcanal, The Thin Red Line unfolds like an impressionist mood piece. Instead of using traditional master shots and coverage, Toll’s camera drifts from soldier to soldier, following the emotional thread of each scene as the scared men question why they are there and ponder the meaning of life. The spontaneous camera work and high-contrast images mimic the unpredictability of combat and contribute to the feeling that things are out of control. The wide-screen format situates the Americans within the Pacific paradise, an environment violated and scarred by the war. Nature becomes the most powerful character. Shots of vegetation and wildlife—grasslands undulating in the wind, a leaf riddled with bullet-like holes, a crocodile easing into shimmering water, a cluster of bats—are intercut with the drama. Putting the viewer into the action, Toll’s moving camera stalks American soldiers through waist-high grass as they try to overtake a Japanese hilltop bunker. When red blood splatters a blade of grass, the effect is jolting. Not only has life been lost, but nature has been defiled. Toll’s stunning, lyrical work earned him a third Academy Award nomination for Best Cinematography in 1999, although the Oscar went to Janusz Kaminski for another war film, Saving Private Ryan. John Toll has teamed with visual directors ranging from Carroll Ballard to Francis Coppola to Terrence Malick. He became their eyes and turned their visions into photographic reality. Even when shots were technically difficult to achieve, he favored a naturalistic approach of working within existing set conditions. In less than a decade, Toll evolved from a craftsman of no distinguishable style to an internationally acclaimed cinematographer with a style all his own.

—Susan Tavernetti
TOWNE, Robert

Writer. Nationality: American. Born: Los Angeles, 23 November 1935. Education: Attended Pomona State College, California; studied acting with Jeff Corey. Family: Two daughters. Military Service: U.S. Army. Career: Sold real estate and worked as a commercial fisherman; 1960—first film as writer, The Last Woman on Earth; then worked as script doctor and for TV; 1970–71—negotiator between San Pedro tuna fishermen and environmentalists. Awards: Academy Award and Writers Guild Award, for Chinatown, 1974; British Academy Award, for Chinatown and The Last Detail, 1974; Writers Guild Award, for Shampoo, 1975. Agent: Contemporary Artists Agency, 9830 Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Writer:

1960 The Last Woman on Earth (Corman) (+ ro)
1965 The Tomb of Ligeia (Corman)
1967 Bonnie and Clyde (Penn) (consultant)
1968 Villa Rides (Kulik) (co)
1973 The Last Detail (Ashby)
1974 Chinatown (Polanski)
1975 Shampoo (Ashby) (co); The Yakuza (Pollack) (co)
1982 Personal Best (+ d)
1984 Greystoke: The Legend of Tarzan, Lord of the Apes (Hudson) (credited as P. H. Vazak)
1988 Tequila Sunrise (+ d)
1990 Days of Thunder (T. Scott); The Two Jakes (Nicholson) (from original characters)
1993 The Firm (co) (Pollack)
1994 Love Affair (co) (Caron)
1996 Mission: Impossible (co) (De Palma)
1998 Without Limits (+ d); Armageddon (Bay) (additional writing [uncredited])
1999 Mission: Impossible II (Woo)

Film as Producer:

1987 The Bedroom Window (Hanson) (exec pr)

Film as Actor:

1987 The Pick-Up Artist (Toback) (as Stan)

Publications

By TOWNE: articles—

On TOWNE: articles—

Sragow, Michael, “Ghost Writers Unraveling the Enigma of Movie Authorship,” in Film Comment (New York), March-April 1983.

Film Comment (New York), November/December 1990.

* * *

The main characters in Robert Towne’s technically impeccable scripts are outsiders flirting with coming in from the cold. Jack Nicholson’s J. J. Gittes in Chinatown; Warren Beatty’s George in Shampoo; Mariel Hemingway’s Chris, the novice athlete, and Patrice Donnelly’s Tory, the veteran, in Personal Best; the two petty officers, Otis Young’s Mulhall and Jack Nicholson’s unruly Buddusky, and their childlike prisoner, Meadows (Randy Quaid), in The Last Detail; Christopher Lambert’s Tarzan in Greystoke; Robert Mitchum’s American hero and his Japanese cohort (Ken Takakura) in The Yakuza—these are characters living on the fringe. Towne’s misfit protagonists are caught at society’s margins, and his screenplays find them at the moment when they confront the mainstream. The overarching sadness at the end of Towne’s scripts has to do with their remaining on the outside, having realized that is where they belong. As with Tarzan in Greystoke, their inability to be integrated into the system only underscores their dignity and the hollowness of society. All the characters above, as well as Bonnie and Clyde, Vito Corleone in his twilight days in The Godfather, and Michael Corleone contemplating vengeance, are all figures as alien to “civilization” as Tarzan.

One of the major changes Towne made in adapting Darryl Ponicsan’s novel The Last Detail for the screen concerned stripping away Budksky’s eccentricities, eliminating his closet intellectualism and his beautiful wife. Shaped in the mold of a typical Towne protagonist, Budksky could not get off Towne’s existential hook: he could not, as the book’s character could, retreat into ideas, nor take any comfort from the fact that waiting at the end of this detail was a pretty wife. And Towne’s decision to alter the ending so that Budksky does not die makes him a lonely survivor rather than a martyr. Like J. J. Gittes, he ends up wrapped in solitude. Towne’s heroes are characters for whom neat dramatic resolutions do not exist. Tarzan remains a “wild man.” George, the notorious ladies’ man, is the odd man out at the conclusion of Shampoo. Tory, who got Chris a place on the track team and gave her support, love, and consolation, is left far behind at the end of Personal Best.

Towne gained fame in Hollywood as a consummate “script doctor,” a writer who could fix ailing scripts of films already in production. Among his most noted house calls is an on-the-set revision of Bonnie and Clyde. But his most famous doctoring is the patio scene he wrote for The Godfather. The scene, between the retired Don Vito Corleone (Marlon Brando) and his son Michael (Al Pacino), who has taken over the family business, is a key one in the film. Technically, it was a difficult scene to write (there was no comparable scene in the book) because it had to do two things at once. As an exposition scene, it had to provide the audience with crucial information about an upcoming betrayal and attempt on Michael’s life. Moreover, director Francis Ford Coppola wanted a scene where, as he put it, father and son “say they love each other.” Towne’s solution was brilliant. He placed the scene’s hard information—who the Corleones’ enemies were, how and when they would try to assassinate Michael—at the beginning and end. In between he wrote a tender encounter between father and son, as touching as it was universal. It subtly showed the transfer of power and hinted at the Don’s senility and Michael’s self-doubt. Moreover, it gave Don Corleone the opportunity to speak about his failed dreams. As powerful as he is, Don Corleone is a father who like many fathers has regrets about how his children’s lives turned out. “There wasn’t enough time, Michael,” Don Corleone says, thinking of things that will never be and expressing feelings any parent could sympathize with, “there just wasn’t enough time.”
Robert Towne (right) with Mel Gibson

In Robert Towne’s screenwriting career, The Godfather’s patio scene is one in a series of telling, bittersweet moments. Towne’s is a dark, uncaring world, but one of the things that makes his vision so penetrating is that it is so complete. In the Towne universe, life may be mostly hopeless, but not completely so. The scenes that stand out in relief amidst the bleakness are those in which a glimmer of hope shines through, where one character shows another some warmth and kindness. In The Last Detail it is the glance exchanged by Buddusky and Mulhall when they almost let Meadows escape. In Personal Best it is Chris’s encouragement of Tory at the climactic Olympic trials. In Chinatown it is Mrs. Mulwray’s attempt to get her sister-daughter out of the clutches of her father and Gittes’s fumbling attempts to help. In Shampoo it is Jack Warden’s puffed-up character of Lester forgiving, accepting, and proposing to his mistress (Julie Christie). And it is George’s awkward but moving explanation of his philandering to Jill (Goldie Hawn) when he says, “I go into an elevator or walk down the street and see a pretty girl, and that’s it: It makes my day. I can’t help it. I feel like I’m gonna live forever. Maybe it means I don’t love them, and maybe it means I don’t love you, but nobody’s gonna tell me I don’t like them very much.” In Greystoke it is Tarzan’s grandfather (Ralph Richardson) embracing his long-lost heir.

Towne’s outsiders are not allowed in, but, ultimately, they never really wanted in—they adhere to a code society will not honor. That the outsider-insider gulf cannot be bridged, that person-to-person goodness is so rare, is not the result of evil in Towne’s screenplays; it is the very root of evil. But along the way his characters do encounter some goodness, and the fact that it is present at all is considerable consolation. Towne’s characters exist to bear witness to the ongoing—but all too fleeting—presence of goodness.

—Charles Ramirez Berg

TRAUNER, Alexandre

Films as Assistant Art Director:

1930 Sous les toits de Paris (Under the Roofs of Paris) (Clair); David Golder (Duvivier)
1931 Jean de la Lane (Choux); A nous la liberté (Clair)
1932 L’Affaire est dans le sac (It’s in the Bag) (P. Prévert); Quatorze juillet (Clair); Danton (Roubaud)
1933 Ciboulette (Autant-Lara); Amok (Ozep); Faut réparer Sophie (Ryder)

Films as Art Director/Production Designer:

1934 L’Hôtel du libre-échange (M. Allégret) (co); Sans famille (M. Allégret) (co)
1935 La Kermesse herouïque (Carnival in Flanders) (Feyder) (co)
1937 Gribouille (M. Allégret); La Dame de Malacca (M. Allégret) (co); Drôle de drame (Bizarre Bizarre) (Carné); Mollenard (Siodmak)
1938 Quai des Brumes (Port of Shadows) (Carné); Entrée des artistes (The Curtain Rises) (M. Allégret) (co); Hôtel du Nord (Carné)
1939 Le Jour se lève (Daybreak) (Carné)
1940 Soyez les bienvenus (de Baroncelli)
1941 Remorques (Stormy Weather) (Grémillon); Le Soleil a toujours raison (Billon) (co)
1942 Les Visiteurs du soir (The Devil’s Envoys) (Carné) (co)
1943 Lumière d’été (Grémillon) (co)
1945 Les Enfants du paradis (Children of Paradise) (Carné) (co); Les Malheurs de Sophie (Audry)
1946 Les Portes de la nuit (Gates of the Night) (Carné); Rêves d’amour (Stengel) (co); Voyage surprise (P. Prévert) (co)
1947 La Fleur de l’âge (Carné—unfinished)
1949 La Marie du port (Carné) (co)
1950 Manèges (The Cheat) (Y. Allégret); Les Miracles n’ont lieu qu’une fois (Y. Allégret)

1951 Juliette, ou la clé des songes (Carné); The Green Glove (Maté)
1952 Othello (Welles); Les Sept Péchés capitaux (The Seven Deadly Sins) (Y. Allégret); La Jeune Folle (Y. Allégret)
1953 Un Acte d’amour (Act of Love) (Litvak)
1954 Land of the Pharoahs (Hawks)
1955 Du Rififi chez les hommes (Rififi) (Dassin) (co); L’Amant de Lady Chatterley (Lady Chatterley’s Lover) (M. Allégret)
1956 The Happy Road (Kelly); En effaçant la Marguerite (Manzelle Striptease) (M. Allégret)
1957 Love in the Afternoon (Wildor)
1958 Witness for the Prosecution (Wildor); The Nun’s Story (Zinnemann)
1959 Le Secret du Chevalier d’eon (Audry)
1960 Once More with Feeling (Donen); The Apartment (Wildor)
1961 Romanoff and Juliet (Ustinov); Paris Blues (Ritt); Aimez-vous Brahms (Goodbye Again) (Litvak); One, Two, Three (Wildor)
1962 Le Couteau dans la plaie (Five Miles to Midnight) (Litvak)
1963 Irma La Douce (Wildor); Behold a Pale Horse (Zinnemann)
1964 Kiss Me, Stupid (Wildor)
1966 How to Steal a Million (Wyler)
1967 The Night of the Generals (Litvak); La Puce à l’oreille (A Flea in Her Ear) (Charon)
1968 Uptight (Dassin)
1970 The Private Life of Sherlock Holmes (Wilder); Les Mariés de l’an II (Rappeneau)
1971 La Promesse de l’aube (Promise at Dawn) (Dassin)
1972 L’Impossible Objet (The Impossible Object) (Frankenheimer); Grandeur nature (Berlanga)
1975 The Man Who Would Be King (Huston)
1976 La Première Fois (Berri)
1977 Mr. Klein (Losey); Les Routes du sud (Losey)
1978 Fedora (Wildor)
1979 Don Giovanni (Losey); The Fiendish Plot of Dr. Fu Manchu (Haggard)
1981 Coup de torchon (Clean Slate) (Tavernier)
1982 The Trout (Losey)
1983 Tchao Pantin (Berri)
1984 Vive les femmes! (Confortes)
1985 Harem (A. Joffé); Subway (Bresson)
1986 Round Midnight (Autour de minuit) (Tavernier)
1987 Le Moustachu (Chaussois)
1988 La Nuit bengali (Klotz)
1989 Comédie d’amour (Gobbi); Réunion (Schatzberg) (+ ro)

Publications

By TRAUNER: articles—

Image et Son (Paris), December 1965.
Film Comment (New York), January-February 1982.
Cinématographe (Paris), March 1982.
Film Français (Paris), 13 August 1984.
Cinéma (Paris), September-October 1985.
On TRAUNER: books—

On TRAUNER: articles—

Unifrance (Paris), November 1951.
Film Français (Paris), 18 February 1977.
 Cinéma Français (Paris), April 1980.
Film Français (Paris), 30 October 1981.
Film Français (Paris), 2 March 1984.
 Télérama, no. 1894, April 1986.
 Cinéma (Paris), 7 May 1986.
 Film Français, no. 2077, February 1986 and no. 2087, May 1986.
 Sight and Sound (London), Autumn 1986.
 Filmkultura (Budapest), March 1987.
 Film en televisie (Brussels), no. 368, January 1988.
 Postif, no. 352, June 1990.
 Film Français, no. 2848, December 1993.
 Studio Magazine, no. 82, April 1994.

* * *

Alexandre Trauner’s vast career is mentioned and analyzed in all books about production design, but he remained modest and disliked to talk about his skills. “I work in the shadow of the authors, and it’s just as well,’’ he said. ‘‘A designer is a manipulator, he makes believe . . . and makes audiences believe. And as a magician, he should not reveal too much of his tricks!’’

What kind of tricks has Trauner used, for instance, to build houses, towns, atmospheres that have become for millions of people throughout the world, the houses, the towns, the atmospheres of Paris, London, or the Pharaohs’ Egypt? Even those who do not precisely remember the docks in Quai des Brumes or the boulevard in Children of Paradise imagine them just as Trauner has designed them.

‘‘What makes my job most interesting,’’ said Trauner, ‘‘is that there are no two identical films, even though producers would like to repeat indefinitely the same success. Every time I start working on a movie, I try to forget all that I have experienced.’’

He claimed that invention is the one and only acceptable rule. That is trick number one. Another of his tricks might be called friendship. The best of his work was done with people who were his friends: poet and screenwriter Jacques Prévert; directors Billy Wilder, Orson Welles, Joseph Losey, composer Maurice Jaubert, designers Ray and Charles Eames, actors Jean Gabin, Yves Montand, Jack Lemmon, and others.

‘‘Shooting a film is collective work,’’ said Trauner, and something he enjoyed. ‘‘Each member of the team contributes, everything is important, but what’s decisive for me is to have an adventure in common!’’

Trauner’s sets are immediately recognizable. During the Second World War, when France was occupied and he worked undercover, everyone in the profession felt his touch and knew that he had designed Grémillon’s Lumière d’été and Carné’s Les Visiteurs du soir, for his style is unmistakable. The basic trick was simplicity. He banished the picturesque and loathes the decorative. ‘‘It’s useless,’’ he said, ‘‘to fill the screen with superfluous things. Come to think about it, what a designer refrains from doing is almost more important than what he actually does. He’s like a sculptor who eliminates material from the marble block. He cannot show everything; he chooses the significant elements, the unexpected ones, and these must look true, they must sound right.’’

That was how Trauner achieved the sturdiest, the most meaningful and imaginative of sets. He created the Paris that many people have in their minds, but he believed that movies become interesting when they do not stick to reality. Showing reality was not enough: the picture must be new and surprising. Only then does it become real. ‘‘It’s a question of point of view, just as painting is a question of vision, and from Far Eastern to European painting, there are many different visions!’’ said Trauner.

Painting, since his beginnings at the Fine Arts School of Budapest, remained essential for him. He was the best known of production designers, the most ignored of painters. Only his close friends, Prévert or Picasso, knew about it, as he was always too modest or careless to do or let do anything about it; his set designs turn out to be fascinating pieces of painting. They were made with paint and a brush, just as the sets were made of plaster, wood, and sunlight. They were made by a person whose trick, all said and done, was to have no tricks—only an incisive eye, a keen understanding of people and places, and talent, as they say.

With Trauner’s death in 1993, the cinema lost one of its truly international art directors. In a career spanning five decades, he served leading directors in Europe and America, winning an Oscar and three Césars for his production designs. He saw his role as helping ‘‘the mise en scène so that the spectator has an immediate grasp of the characters’ psychology,’’ and with over eighty films to his credit, there is ample evidence of his wide-ranging achievement. Comparing himself more readily to a painter than to an architect, he acknowledged the influence of Cubism and Impressionism, though it was Lazare Meerson who shaped his initial predilection for non-naturalistic designs. If in France his early career was synonymous with those of Carné and Grémillon, he was equally at home in later years with Tavernier or the hi-tech world of Besson. Outside France, his associations with Wilder and Losey were particularly creative, whether designing the huge, Kafkaesque office for The Apartment or exploiting the natural locations of Palladio to exquisite effect in Don Giovanni. From the monumental to the intimate, from fantasy 15th-century castles to 19th-century French boulevards or the London of Sherlock Holmes, from seedy hotels and working class tenements in France to exotic locations in West Africa or India, Trauner excelled in creating the necessary framework for the director’s narrative to unfold. In 1986 his achievements were marked in Paris by retrospectives of his films at the Cinémathèque and of his set designs at the Ecole des Beaux Arts.

—André Pozner, updated by R. F. Cousins

TRNKA, Jiří

Animator. Nationality: Czech. Born: Pilsen, 24 February 1912. Education: Attended Arts and Crafts School (UMPRUM), Prague, 1928–35. Family: Married Ružena Trnková. Career: 1923—began making puppets; 1926—shop assistant, designer in modern puppet theater of Josef Skupa; 1928–35—while student at UMPRUM, newspaper cartoonist; 1936—founded puppet theater “Dřevěné divadlo” (Wooden Theatre); late 1930s—graphic artist, painter, and book illustrator; 1937—Wooden Theatre fails; 1941–44—scenic artist at (Wooden Theatre); late 1945—began working in animation at invitation of members of studio that becomes “Břatři v triku” Studio; 1946—began making puppet films. Awards: National Artist; Order of Labor. Died: In Prague, 30 December 1969.

Films as Animator, Writer, and Art Director:

1945 Zasadil dědek řepu (Grandpa Planted a Beet) (cartoon)
1946 Zvěřátko a Petrovští (The Animals and the Brigands) (cartoon); Dárék (The Gift) (cartoon); Pěrák a SS (The Springer and SS-Men) (cartoon)
1948 Ciseňov slavík (The Emperor’s Nightingale) (puppet film)
1949 Román s basou (Novel with a Contrabass) (puppet film); Arie prérie (The Song of the Prairie) (puppet film)
1950 Certav mlýn (The Devil’s Mill) (puppet film); Bajója (Bayaya) (puppet film); Veselý cirkus (The Merry Circus) (puppet film) (+ paper-cut animation)
1951 O zlaté rybce (The Golden Fish) (cartoon)
1953 Staré pověsti ceské (Old Czech Legends) (puppet film); Jak starševců měnil až vyměnil (How Grandpa Changed Till Nothing Was Left) (cartoon)
1954 Dva mráčci (Two Frosts) (puppet film); Kutásek a Katila, jak ráno vstávali (Kutásek and Katila) (puppet film)
1955 “Z Hatvanu do Halice” (From Putin to Putin), “Svéjkovy nehody ve vlaku” (Schweik’s Difficulties on the Train), and “Svéjkova budějovická anabase” (Schweik and Cognac) eps. of Osudy dobrého vojáka Svejkova (The Good Soldier Schweik) (puppet film); Cirkus Hurnívek (Hurnívek’s Circus) (puppet film)
1958 Proč UNESCO? (Why UNESCO?) (cartoon)
1959 Sen noci svatojánské (A Midsummer Night’s Dream) (puppet film)
1961 Vášen (Passion) (puppet film)
1962 Kybernetická babička (Cybernetic Granny) (puppet film)
1964 Archandél Gabriel a paní Husa (Archangel Gabriel and Mistress Goose) (puppet film)
1965 Maxplatten, Maxplatten (puppet film); Ruka (The Hand) (puppet film)

Other Films:

1947 Capkovy povídky (Tales By Capek) (art d); Liska a džbán (The Fox and the Jug) (Látal) (art d + co-sc)
1951 Perníková chaloupka (Gingerbread Hut) (Pojar, puppet film) (art d); Císařov pekař—Pekařov cisař (The Emperor’s Baker and the Baker’s Emperor) (Fric) (art d)
1953 O skleničká víc (One Glass Too Much) (Pojar, puppet film) (art d)
1954 Byl jednou jeden král (Once Upon a Time There Was a King) (Božík Zeman) (art d); Jan Hus (Vávra) (art d)
1955 Spejbl na stopě (Spejbl on the Trail) (Pojar, puppet film) (art d); Jan Zížka (A Hussite Warrior) (Vávra) (co-costume des)
1957 Protiv venn (Against All) (Vávra) (co-costume des); Parapličko (The Brolly) (Pojar, puppet film) (des “magic grandpa” puppet)
1959 Bombomanie (Bombomania) (Pojar, puppet film) (art d)
1960 Pulnoční příhoda (The Midnight Event) (Pojar, puppet film) (art d)
1966 Blaho lásky (The Bliss of Love) (Břečka, cartoon) (art d)

Publications

By TRNKA: articles—

“‘The Puppet Film as an Art,’” interview with Jaroslav Brož, in Film Culture (New York), no. 5–6, 1955.
“‘An Interview with the Puppet-Film Director, Jiří Trnka,’” with Jaroslav Brož, in Film (London), January–February 1956.
“‘20 let Cs.filmu—vypovídá Jiří Trnka,’” interview with Jaroslav Brož, in Film a Doba (Prague), no. 6, 1965.

On TRNKA: books—

Benešová, Marie, Of Spalíčka ke Snů noci svatojánské, Prague, 1961.
Boček, Jaroslav, Jiří Trnka, Artist and Puppet Master, Prague, 1963.
Hoffmeister, Adolf, Cas se nevračí!, Prague, 1965.
Benešová, Marie, Jiří Trnka, brochure, Prague, 1970.
Trnková, Ružena, and Helena Chvojková, Maj syn, Prague, 1972.

On TRNKA: articles—

Polt, Harriet, “The Czechoslovak Animated Film,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley, California), Spring 1964.
Boček, Jaroslav, “Trnkovské postskriptum,” in Film a Doba (Prague), no. 3, 1966.
A puppeteer at heart, a skilled painter and renowned illustrator, Jiří Trnka was 33 years old in 1945 when associates at the animated film studio (later the ‘‘Bratři v triku’’ Studio) asked him to collaborate with them.

In only one year he created four animated films in rapid succession, making a strong impact on the development of the genre. With their naive charm and an artistic conception based on unfettered drawing and a new method of film narration that was well received by the international moviegoing public, these works demonstrated huge innovations in animation, and broke the monopoly in this area of art previously enjoyed by Walt Disney. However, Trnka did not find the international moviegoing public, these works demonstrated huge drawing and a new method of film narration that was well received by vision, making a strong impact on the development of the genre. With them.

In only one year he created four animated films in rapid succession, making a strong impact on the development of the genre. With their naive charm and an artistic conception based on unfettered drawing and a new method of film narration that was well received by the international moviegoing public, these works demonstrated huge innovations in animation, and broke the monopoly in this area of art previously enjoyed by Walt Disney. However, Trnka did not find the international moviegoing public, these works demonstrated huge drawing and a new method of film narration that was well received by vision, making a strong impact on the development of the genre. With them.

Along the pathway of the puppet film Trnka would create his own world, but he would also show that the expressive possibilities of the puppet film are boundless. He depicts ancient times in legends and myths, visions of the future, and the worlds of fairy tales and of modern times. He switches genres from comedy through parody, satire, and pantomime to drama and parable. He translates into cinematic form the works of Andersen [Císařův slavík (The Emperor’s Nightingale)], Chekhov [Román s basou (Novel with a Contrabass)], Němcová [Bajaja (Bayaya)], Hasček [Osudy dobrého vojáka Svejkova (The Good Soldier Schvetik)], Shakespeare [Sen noci svatojánské (A Midsummer Night’s Dream)], and Boccaccio [Archanděl Gabriel a pani Husa (Archangel Gabriel and Mistress Goose)]. He recognizes the encroachment of technology into human life as one of the greatest threats to mankind [Císařův slavík (The Emperor’s Nightingale)] and returns to this theme again in the film Vášerí (Passion) and in the science-fiction film Kybernetická babička (Cybernetic Granny). In his last work, the philosophical study Ruka (The Hand), Trnka creates a timeless parable about man and the detrimental effects of power.

Until the end of his life, however, he continued to devote himself to illustrating, woodcarving, sculpture, and painting, in order, as he put it, “to capture a story, but in a single phrase.” He was awarded the Andersen Prize in memoriam for his illustration work.

Trnka was an extraordinarily talented and hard-working individual. He painted and wrote and was a woodcutter, a sculptor, and an illustrator. In all his films he was not only a writer and graphic artist but also an editor, a designer and builder of puppets, and a designer of puppet costumes. Often misunderstood and attacked by the critics, he never bent to any pressures.

The work he produced was well-rounded, full of human warmth, tenderness, wisdom, humor, and grace. He succeeded in bringing the puppet film out of the periphery and into mature prominence. He brought the masterworks of literature into the purview of the puppet film and expressed philosophical ideas and emotions with such urgency that his films have become not only a landmark but also a yardstick for puppet films yet to be made.

Truly a unique genius of Czech culture in the second half of the twentieth century, Trnka demonstrated by his work that the animated film can convey all the conditions of the human spirit.

—Vladimír Opěla

TROTTI, Lamar

Films as Writer:

1933 The Man Who Dared (MacFadden)
1934 You Can’t Buy Everything (Reisner); Hold That Girl (MacFadden); Wild Gold (Marshall); Call It Luck (Tinling); Judge Priest (Ford); Bachelor of Arts (L. King)
1935 Steamboat ’round the Bend (Ford); Life Begins at 40 (Marshall); This Is the Life (Neilan)
1936 The Country Beyond (Forde); The First Baby (Seiler); Ramona (H. King); Pepper (Tinling); Career Woman (Seiler); Can This Be Dixie? (Marshall)
1937 Slave Ship (Garnett); This Is My Affair (His Affair) (Seiter); Wife, Doctor, and Nurse (W. Lang)
1938 In Old Chicago (H. King); The Baroness and the Butler (W. Lang); Alexander’s Ragtime Band (H. King); Kentucky Butler (Butler); Gateway (Werker)
1939 The Story of Alexander Graham Bell (The Modern Miracle) (Cummings); Young Mr. Lincoln (Ford); Drums along the Mohawk (Ford)
1940 Brigham Young—Frontiersman (Hathaway); Hudson’s Bay (Pichel)
1941 Belle Starr (Cummings)
1942 To the Shores of Tripoli (Humberstone); Tales of Manhattan (Duvivier)
1943 Guadalcanal Diary (Seiler)
1944 Wilson (H. King)
1946 The Razor’s Edge (Goulding)
1952 “The Cop and the Anthem” ep. of O. Henry’s Full House (Koster)
1954 There’s No Business Like Show Business (W. Lang) (story)

Films as Writer and Producer:

1942 Thunderbirds (Wellman)
1943 The Immortal Sergeant (Stahl); The Ox-Bow Incident (Strange Incident) (Wellman)
1945 A Bell for Adano (H. King) (co)
1947 Captain from Castile (H. King); Mother Wore Tights (W. Lang)
1948 The Walls of Jericho (Stahl); When My Baby Smiles at Me (W. Lang); Yellow Sky (Wellman)
1949 You’re My Everything (W. Lang) (co-sc)
1950 Cheaper by the Dozen (W. Lang); My Blue Heaven (Koster) (co-sc); American Guerilla in the Philippines (I Shall Return) (F. Lang); I’d Climb the Highest Mountain (H. King)
1952 With a Song in My Heart (W. Lang); Stars and Stripes Forever (Marching Along) (Koster)

Film as Producer:

1946 Colonel Effingham’s Raid (Man of the Hour) (Pichel)

Publications

By TROTTI: screenplays—

On TROTTI: articles—

* * *

With the exception of one screenplay for MGM in 1934, You Can’t Buy Everything, Lamar Trotti worked exclusively for 20th Century-Fox from 1933 until his death in 1952. This identification with a single studio (and its stable of stars and craftsmen), coupled with his growing power within that company, gives Trotti’s work an uncommon consistency. His 50-odd films cover a variety of styles and genres: westerns (The Ox-Bow Incident, Yellow Sky), musicals (Mother Wore Tights, My Blue Heaven), war films (Guadalcanal Diary, American Guerilla in the Philippines), and biographies (Stars and Stripes Forever, The Story of Alexander Graham Bell, Young Mr. Lincoln and Wilson). Directors as diverse as Ford, Wellman, King, and Koster brought his words to the screen. But Trotti’s body of work is bound together by his amiable, low-key style, his historian’s eye and ear, his casual gravity.

The typical Trotti screenplay is imbued with an earnest feeling for the American past and is characterized by an easy pace, nearly plotless structure, and a concentration on human values as opposed to spectacle or melodrama. “‘Americana’ is what Trotti did best. Films as diverse as Young Mr. Lincoln and Cheaper By The Dozen share a graceful—yet never sugar-coated—view of the American landscape, an appreciation of rustic character, a respect for the principles and attitudes of earlier, ‘simpler’ times.

Trotti was born in Georgia at the turn of the century; both the land and the era of his origins were to influence his work enormously. I’d Climb the Highest Mountain and Colonel Effingham’s Raid are set in Georgia; many others of his films take place in the South; only a handful are set in the present. That Trotti’s father allegedly fought in the American Civil War might help to explain Trotti’s lifelong obsession with that conflict (though, certainly, such an obsession is not rare in the South). The shadow of that war falls across much of Trotti’s work: Judge Priest celebrates the camaraderie of a group of aging Confederate veterans; Young Mr. Lincoln is imbued with a prescience of the upcoming conflict and of Lincoln’s fateful role in it; The Ox-Bow Incident, Yellow Sky, and Belle Starr take place in the period after the war when disillusion and despair have turned its soldiers into ruthless martinet or cynical outlaws.

Trotti’s insistent return to the theme of the American Civil War and to more general “Southern” stories is no coincidence; it speaks of a deliberation and interest that transcends the simple typecasting which was (and is) so rampant in Hollywood. Trotti subtly bent the demands and conventions of the popular film to his own ends.

There is a strong streak of sentiment in Trotti’s films which can sometimes impede appreciation of his enormous skill and integrity as a screenwriter by “modern” viewers. But true warmth and honest sentiment are as rare in the cinema as deep thought or original ideas. A writer can sometimes fake having brains; he can never fake having a heart.

Henry Fonda once called Trotti “one of the very few people in the film industry for whom I have any respect.” The sincere and unpretentious character which inspired such a comment translated itself with uncommon purity into Trotti’s screenplays. His work, when taken as a whole, makes up something very much like an autobiography.

—Frank Thompson

TRUMBO, Dalton

1960—resumed writing under his own name; 1971—directed his own script, Johnny Got His Gun. Awards: Academy Award for The Brave One, 1956 (awarded in 1975 because of the blacklisting); Writers Guild Laurel Award, 1969. Died: 10 September 1976.

Films as Writer:

1936 Love Begins at Twenty (McDonald); Tugboat Princess (Selman); Road Gang (L. King)
1937 Devil’s Playground (Kenton); That Man’s Here Again (L. King)
1938 A Man to Remember (Kanin); Fugitive for a Night (Goodwins)
1939 Sorority House (Farrow); Career (Jason); The Flying Irishman (Jason); Five Came Back (Farrow); The Kid from Kokomo (Seiler)
1940 Heaven with a Barbed Wire Fence (Cortez); A Bill of Divorcement (Farrow); Curtain Call (Woodruff); Half a Sinner (Christie); The Lone Wolf Strikes (Salkow); We Who Are Young (Bucquet); Kitty Foyle (Minnelli)
1941 Accent on Love (McCary); You Belong to Me (Ruggles)
1942 The Remarkable Andrew (Heisler)
1943 Tender Comrade (Dmytryk); A Guy Named Joe (Fleming)
1944 Thirty Seconds over Tokyo (LeRoy)
1945 Our Vines Have Tender Grapes (Preminger); He Ran All the Way (Machaty)
1946 Jealousy (Machaty)
1949 Gun Crazy (Lewis) (credited to Millard Kaufman); The Beautiful Blonde from Bashful Bend (P. Sturges) (credited to Earl Felton)
1950 He Ran All the Way (Berry) (credited to Hugh Butler); The Prowler (Losey) (credited to Hugh Butler); The Brave Bulls (Rossen) (credited to John Bright)
1951 Roman Holiday (Wyler) (credited to Ian Hunter)
1952 Carnival Story (Neumann) (uncredited)
1954 The Brave One (Rapper) (story, as Robert Rich); The Boss (Haskin) (credited to Ben Perry)
1957 Wild Is the Wind (Cukor) (as Arnold Schulman); The Green-Eyed Blonde (Girard) (as Sally Stubblefield); The Abominable Snowman (Guest) (credited to Nigel Kneale)
1958 Cowboy (Daves) (credited to Edmund North)
1959 Last Train from Gun Hill (J. Sturges) (as Les Crutchfield)
1960 Exodus (Preminger); Spartacus (Kubrick)
1961 Town without Pity (Reinhardt) (uncredited); The Last Sunset (Aldrich)
1962 Lonely Are the Brave (Miller)
1965 The Sandpiper (Minnelli)
1966 Hawaii (Hill)
1968 The Fixer (Frankenheimer)
1971 Johnny Got His Gun (+ d); The Horsemen (Frankenheimer)
1972 F.T.A. (Foxtrot Tango Alpha; Free the Army; Fuck the Army) (Parker) (co)
1973 Papillon (Schaffner) (+ ro); Executive Action (Miller)
1978 Ishi, the Last of His Tribe (Miller)

Publications

By TRUMBO: fiction—

Johnny Got His Gun, Philadelphia, 1939.
The Remarkable Andrew, Philadelphia, 1941.

By TRUMBO: other books—

Harry Bridges (nonfiction), New York, 1941.
An Appeal to the People (nonfiction), Los Angeles, 1942.
The Biggest Thief in Town (play), New York, 1949.
The Devil in the Book (nonfiction), Los Angeles, 1956.

By TRUMBO: articles—

Cinema Canada, September-October 1969.
“‘The Blacklist Was a Time of Evil,’” in Film Culture (New York), Fall-Winter 1971.
Écran (Paris), April 1972.

On TRUMBO: book—

On TRUMBO: articles—

Zimmern, Jerry, in Esquire (New York), March 1971.
Madsen, Axel, in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1971.
Rivista del Cinematografo (Rome), August-September 1975.
American Film (Washington, DC), October 1975.
Dalton Trumbo’s life is perhaps more exciting than any of the films he wrote. He was a successful screenwriter in the 1940s, one of the highest paid in Hollywood. He has been compared to Wilde and Shaw in his capacity as a witty man of letters. He wrote magnificent letters (collected in Additional Dialogue) as well as one of the most stirring antiwar novels ever written, Johnny Got His Gun, a story written from the point of view of a quadriplegic. Then, as the House Un-American Activities Committee searched for Communists in Hollywood, he joined the ranks of the infamous Hollywood Ten.

Trumbo was forced into exile but this did not stop the spunky writer from working under a multitude of pseudonyms. He won Hollywood’s highest honors while using the names of others. Finally, after 13 years in limbo and a change in the climate of the country, Trumbo returned a hero. The world finally acknowledged his previously uncredited pictures and he served as a director for the film version of his controversial masterpiece, Johnny Got His Gun.

Unfortunately for the history of cinema, Trumbo’s life was more gripping than any of his film creations. His achievements include Spartacus, Exodus, The Sandpiper, and Hawaii. These films deal with important issues but are painted in such broad, melodramatic tones that they trivialize the very points they try to make. They are Hollywood “message” films, reflecting the conventions of a genre more than serious social reality. That is not to say that they cannot have moving moments. In Spartacus, when his men are asked to turn in their leader (Kirk Douglas), and Tony Curtis, and one by one each of the others, declares “I am Spartacus,” it is a very poignant moment (in spite of Curtis’s inappropriate Brooklyn accent which was hardly Trumbo’s fault). Then there is the memorable scene in Lonely Are the Brave when Kirk Douglas, as the last cowboy, gets run over by a truck. Dalton’s films are capable of great drama and poetic ironies. They can make great entertainment. However, these films never really make the significant social impact on the filmgoer that Trumbo would have liked. He had intended “to use art as a weapon for the future of mankind, rather than as an adornment for the vanity of aesthetes and poseurs.” The book Johnny Got His Gun is capable of changing an opinion for life. The Trumbo films, however, only make great trivia questions for film buffs.

Trumbo’s movies lacked sophistication. They hit you over the head with a sledgehammer. They tended to be preachy and “more liberal than thou.” On the other hand, Trumbo’s superpatriot war films, created shortly after he wrote Johnny Got His Gun, are even more astounding. In A Guy Named Joe, a highly chauvinistic screenplay written to propagandize the Second World War, he has his good-guy hero die and then return to earth to help teach other guys named Joe the art of better bombing.

The film critic Richard Corliss suggests several reasons for the disparity between Trumbo’s literary efforts and his film works. It could have been the fault of the film industry, with Trumbo trying to conform in order to sneak through the important ideas he wanted to get across. It could have been Trumbo’s attempt to reach as large an audience as possible by relying on the tried and true Hollywood dramatic conventions. In any case, the legend of Trumbo’s life is a far more important statement to be remembered than any of his films, and no doubt will be.

—Edith C. Lee

TRUMBULL, Douglas

Films as Special Effects Technician:

1964 To the Moon and Beyond (+ d—short)
1968 Candy (Marquand) (co); 2001: A Space Odyssey (Kubrick) (co)
1971 The Andromeda Strain (Wise) (co)
1973 The Borrowers (Miller)
1977 Close Encounters of the Third Kind (Spielberg)
1979 Star Trek: The Motion Picture (Meyer)
1982 Blade Runner (R. Scott)
Films as Director:

1971 Silent Running
1983 Brainstorm (+ pr)
1984 New Magic (+ pr)
1989 Leonardo’s Dream
1990 To Dream of Roses
1991 Back to the Future—; The Ride
1993 In Search of the Obelisk (+ pr)

Publications

By TRUMBULL: articles—

With Jon Bloom and David Graham, on The Andromeda Strain, in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), May 1971.
Action (Los Angeles), May/June 1972.
Filmmakers Newsletter (Ward Hill, Massachusetts), December 1977.
Cinefantastique (New York), Spring 1978.
Take One (Montreal), May 1978.
Ecran Fantastique (Paris), no. 18, 1981.
Film Comment (New York), September/October 1983.
Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1985.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), August 1993.

On TRUMBULL: articles—

American Cinematographer (Hollywood), February 1979.
Image et Son/Ecran (Paris), September 1981.
Duncan, Pamela, in Cinefex (Riverside, California), April 1982.
American Film (Washington, D.C.), May 1984.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), vol. 73, August 1992.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), vol. 74, August 1993.
Sight & Sound (London), May 1995.

* * *

From the late 1960s through the mid-1980s, Douglas Trumbull symbolized the new Hollywood special-effects wizards. He showed that blockbusters could be built around more than a good story and a top cast of stars. Inventor/cameraman/special-effects masters such as himself could make such films as 2001: A Space Odyssey, The Andromeda Strain, Close Encounters of a Third Kind, Star Trek: The Motion Picture, and Blade Runner big hits. A cult of film fans began to worship his creative efforts which turned a motion picture into a complete new world. Directors Steven Spielberg, Stanley Kubrick, and Ridley Scott skillfully took advantage of Trumbull’s considerable talents to create a handful of the most important science-fiction films in Hollywood history. And for a time even official Hollywood recognized him with Oscar nominations.

Yet however successful he was Douglas Trumbull possessed a strong independent spirit and chaffed working for others. As a consequence it was not surprising that in the early 1980s he turned to his own projects, wanting to present his world view on his own films. But total control proved harder than he had anticipated. For example, he tried his hand at the film Brainstorm which had been begun by others. In the process of filming, Natalie Wood, the film’s star, died in a controversial boating accident; Trumbull took over a film no one else wanted and tried, through his technological magic, to turn it into a blockbuster. He failed. The released film lost millions of dollars.

New Magic and Leonardo’s Dream did not do any better. Trumbull then tried to pioneer new cinema technology and unveiled Showscan. Shot at 60 frames per second (versus 24 frames per second for traditional 35mm film), Trumbull sought to bombard the viewer with 150 percent more visual information. By using a larger screen, set closer to the audience, plus a powerful, state-of-the-art stereo sound system, plus 70mm film stock, Trumbull wanted to make the ticket buyer unaware she or he was even watching a motion picture.

Trumbull’s dream never passed the experimental stage. He and his backers were unable to persuade the public to want this “super realism.” Ironically, during the very period Trumbull sought to develop Showscan, film fans were turning more and more to the inferior images found on home video. Trumbull gave up and turned his considerable talents to making rides for theme parks, most notably the “Back to the Future” attraction at the Universal Studios theme park.

——Douglas Gomery

TSUBURAYA, Eiji

Films as Cameraman (selected list):
1924 Enmeitō no semushi-tokoto (Hunchback of Enmein)
1925 Kurutta I pejii (Kinugasa) (asst)
1927 Chigo no kenpo (Sword of the Child) (Otsuka); Rangun (Otsuka); Komori-zoshi (Yamazaki); Gekka no kyoba (Kinugasa); Tenko hiken roku
1928 Fununjo shi; Ashibi; Shirai gonpachi; Ose no hangoro; Kaito Sayamaro(Savamaro the Great Thief); Oedo no saigon; Rozeki mono
1929 Meiran (Brightness and Darkness); Chimatsuri (Carnival of Blood); Yoma Kidan (Tales of Monsters)
1930 Nogitsune sanjû; Shiobara tasuke; Chohichiro matsudaira (+ special effects)
1931 Benikmorí (Red Bat)
1933 Tenka no igagoe
1935 Kaguyahimi

Films as Special Effects Technician (selected list):
1935 Koutareki; Atarashiki tsuchi (New Earth) (Frank and Itami)
1938 Ah! Nango shosa (+ d + ph)
1940 Kodo nippon; Kaigai bakugekitai (Navy Bombers) (+ doc; doc; Sengo (2 parts)
1941 Hachiyahachinenme no taisyo; Sanyai no tsuki
1942 Shiroyakeda; Nankai no hanatabe; Suiyoden; Hawaii marei oki haisen (Battle of Hawaii) (Yamamoto)
1944 Garaida (+ ph—to; Aken senso (+ ph); Hyoraku yume monogatari (+ ph); Hikoki wa naze toobaka (+ ph—doc); Kessen no orosae (+ ph); Syonen hyoryuki (+ ph)
1944 Anohata oute; Kato kaya-busa sento tai; Ikari no umi; Raigenki tai shitsusudo
1950 Sasaki kajiro
1951 Anatahan (Saga of Anatahan) (von Sternberg); Taiheizo no washi (Eagle of the Pacific)
1954 Saraba raibaru; Totei ningen (The Invisible Man) (Oda); Gojira (Godzilla) (Honda)
1955 Gojira no gyakushu (Revenge of Godzilla; Gigantis the Fire Monster) (Oda); Jajin Kuki-Otoko (The Abominable Snowman) (Honda)
1956 Hakushinji no yoren (Mysterious Love of Mrs. White) (Toyeda); Sorano Daikaijyū Rodan (Rodan) (Honda)
1957 Chikyu boeigun (The Mysterious) (Honda)
1958 Daikaiju Baran (Varan the Unbelievable) (Baerwitz); Biju to ekitai ningen (The H-Man) (Honda)
1959 Songokut; Sensuikai T-57; Kofuku seiz; Nippon tanjo (The Three Treasures) (Inagaki); Uchu daisensu (Battle in Outer Space) (Honda)
1960 Taiheiyō no arashi (I Bombed Pearl Harbor; The Storm of the Pacific) (Matsubayashi); Denso ningen (Secret of the Telegian) (Fukuda); Gasu ningen daichigoto (The Human Vapor) (Honda)
1961 Osaka-jo monogatari (Daredevil in the Castle) (Inagaki); Mosura (Mothra) (Honda); Gen to Fudo-myёh (The Youth and His Amulet) (Inagaki); Sekai dai senso (The Last War) (Matsubayashi)
1962 King Kong tai Gojira (King Kong vs. Godzilla) (Honda); Yosei Gorath (Yosei Gorasu; Gorath) (Honda)
1963 Taiheiyō no tsusabi; Chintao yosai bakageki merrei (Siege of Fort Bismark) (Furusawa); Mantoango (Mantoango—Fungus of Terror) (Honda); Daitozoku
1964 Kaitō gunkan (Atroagon) (Honda); Gojira tai Mosura (Godzilla vs. The Thing) (Honda); Daitozoku (Samurai Pirate; The Lost World of Sinbad) (Taniguchi); Uchu daikaiju Dogora (Dogora—The Space Monster) (Honda); Dai tatsu-maki (Whirlwind) (Inagaki)
1965 Kisuka; Daiboken; Sandai kaiju chikyu soidai no ke-sen (Ghidra, the Three-Headed Monster; The Biggest Fight on Earth; The Greatest Battle on Earth) (Honda); None but the Brave (Sinatra); Taiheiyō Kiseki no sakusen Kisuka (Retreat from Kiska) (Maruyama)
1966 Furankenshutain tai Barogon (Frankenstein Conquers the World; Frankenstein vs. the Giant Devilfish) (Honda); Dai kusen (Zero Fighter) (Moritani); Nankai no daiktetto (Ebirah—Terror of the Deep) (Fukuda); Furankenshutain no kaiju—Sanda tai Gailah (Sanda tai Gailha; The War of the Gargantuas) (Honda); Kaiju daisenso (Monster Zero; Invasion of the Astro-Monsters; Battle of the Astron; Invasion of the Astros) (Honda)
1967 Kingu Kongu no gyakushu (King Kong Escapes) (Honda); Ultraman (Hajime); Gojira no musuko (Son of Godzilla) (Fukuda)
1968 Yamamoto Isoroku (Admiral Yamamoto) (Maruyama); Kaiju sosho-geki (Destroy All Monsters) (Honda)
1969 Ido Zero daisakusen (Lattitude Zero) (Honda); Nihonkai daikaisen (Battle of the Japan Sea) (Maruyama)

Publications
On TSUBURAYA: book—

On TSUBURAYA: articles—
Famous Monsters of Filmland, September 1964.
Image et Son (Paris), April 1970.

* * *

The 1950s are known in science-fiction circles as the decade of classic atomic-bomb monster movies. Fantasy films of this era explored what might happen to nature and mankind when the unknown power of nuclear devices was unleashed. Typically an explosion caused rapid mutation and accelerated growth resulting in gigantic creatures. Although films with building-size insects (Them!, The Black Scorpion, The Deadly Mantis) and human abnormalities (The Amazing Colossal Man, The Incredible Shrinking Man, Attack of the 50-Foot Woman) ranked high in number, the most popular sub-genre was prehistoric or “prehistoric-like” creatures, usually reptiles. No one capitalized on this fascination with enormous reptilian monsters better than Eiji Tsuburaya. Starting with Godzilla in 1954, he created a menagerie of over 50 creatures for film and television.
His best-known beings, Godzilla (reportedly the nickname of a tough looking fellow who worked on the Toho lot), Mothra, Rodan, Ghidrah, and Ultraman, always conducted battles in Tokyo, levelling the city to ruins. To facilitate the numerous battles and speed production, Toho built a standing miniature set of Tokyo upon which Tsuburaya wrought his wholesale destruction. The popularity of Godzilla and his companions resulted in many sequels which cast them against one another. Eventually they changed into folk heroes and teamed together to protect the citizenry from the latest monster threatening Tokyo.

Tsuburaya not only constructed and photographed these creatures, but also dreamt them up, wrote stories around them, and occasionally functioned as producer to bring them to the screen. His giants were not animated models like those used by Willis O’Brien or Ray Harryhausen, but either actors in costume or mechanized miniatures. Compared to their work, Tsuburaya’s effects were less convincing and, many felt, laughable. But given the studio system in Japan and its need for quantity of film product, Tsuburaya’s economical methods (multiple cameras simultaneously filming long shots and close-ups) allowed for reasonable effects. Perhaps the best that can be said about his monster pictures is that they achieve an impression of scale and solidity, created by the detailed miniatures his crews built and high speed filming. Frequently shot at 240 frames-per-second, the monster would move normally when projected at the standard speed of 24 frames-per-second.

While his specialty was weird creatures, Tsuburaya was also responsible for all the miniature and special effects work needed by any Toho film in production. His water effects and sea battles easily bettered his monster work in execution if not popularity, from his first major assignment, Battle of Hawaii, to his last, Battle of the Japan Sea. One of his most curious collaborations was with Josef von Sternberg in 1953 on Saga of Anatahan, a film which explored the relationships among a group of men shipwrecked on an island with one woman. Anatahan required no ostensible special effects, but took production design to a realm of experimental surrealism never again attempted.

Tsuburaya’s legacy continues as old monsters make comebacks (Godzilla 1985) and new ones appear on Japanese children’s television and in films. A recent creature that might have made Tsuburaya smile because of its humorous implausibility is Gamera—an eighty-ton, jet-propelled, prehistoric turtle. Today, Tsuburaya’s simple techniques fail to compete with the sophisticated technology now available in the field of special effects, but during the 1950s and 1960s they offered an inexpensive way to visualize the fantastic and entertain millions.

—Greg S. Faller
UNSWORTH, Geoffrey

Cinematographer. Nationality: British. Born: London, 1914. Career: 1932—camera assistant, then camera operator from 1937; 1942—made the documentary Teeth of Steel, followed by others in the mid-1940s, then feature films and international productions; collaborated on several technical innovations, including a special front-projection technique. Awards: British Academy Award for Becket, 1964; 2001: A Space Odyssey (Kubrick); Cabaret (Liberace); The Three Sisters (Olivier); The Three Amigos! (Allen). Died: In Brittany, France, 29 October 1978.

Films as Cameraman:

1937 The Drum (Drums) (Z. Korda)
1939 The Four Feathers (Z. Korda)
1940 The Thief of Bagdad (Berger, Powell, and Whelan)
1942 The Great Mr. Handel (Walker); Teeth of Steel (doc); Gardens of England (doc); World Gardens (doc)
1943 The Life and Death of Colonel Blimp (Colonel Blimp) (Powell and Pressburger); The People’s Land (doc); Power on the Land (doc)
1944 Men of Science (doc)
1945 Make Fruitful the Land (doc)
1946 A Matter of Life and Death (Stairway to Heaven) (Powell and Pressburger); Meet the Navy (doc)

Films as Cinematographer:

1947 Jassy (Knowles); Paris on the Seine (doc); The Man Within (The Smugglers) (Knowles)
1948 Blanche Fury (M. Allégret) (co)
1949 The Blue Lagoon (Launder); Fools Rush In (Carstairs); Scott of the Antarctic (Frend); The Spider and the Fly (Hamer)
1950 Trio (French); The Clouded Yellow (Thomas); Double Confession (Annakin)
1952 The Planter’s Wife (Outpost in Malaya) (Annakin); Made in Heaven (Carstairs); The Story of Robin Hood and His Merrie Men (Annakin); Penny Princess (Guest)
1953 The Sword and the Rose (Annakin); Turn the Key Softly (Lee); The Million Pound Note (Man with a Million) (Neame)
1954 The Purple Plain (Parrish); The Seekers (Land of Fury) (Annakin)
1955 Simba (Hurst); Value for Money (Annakin)
1956 A Town Like Alice (The Rape of Malaya) (Lee); Jacqueline (Baker)
1957 Eric Winstone’s Coach (short); Hell Drivers (Endfield); Dangerous Exile (Hurst)
1958 A Night to Remember (Baker); Bachelor of Hearts (Rilla)
1959 North West Frontier (Flame over India) (Lee Thompson); Whirlpool (Allen)
1960 The World of Suzie Wong (Quine)
1961 On the Double (Shavelson); Don’t Bother to Knock (Why Bother to Knock) (Frankel); The Lion of Sparta (The Three Hundred Spartans) (Maté)
1962 The Main Attraction (Petric); The Playboy of the Western World (Hurst)
1963 An Evening with the Royal Ballet (Havelock-Allan and Asquith); Tamahine (Leacock)
1964 Becket (Glenville)
1965 Genghish Khan (Levin); Pop Gear (Go Go Mania) (Goode); You Must Be Joking! (Winner)
1966 Othello (Burge)
1967 Oh Dad, Poor Dad, Mamma’s Hung You in the Closet and I’m Feelin’ So Sad (Quine)
1968 Half a Sixpence (Sidney); The Bliss of Mrs. Blossom (McGrath); 2001: A Space Odyssey (Kubrick); The Dance of Death (Giles)
1969 The Assassination Bureau (Dearden)
1970 Cromwell (Hughes); Goodbye, Gemini (Gibson); The Magic Christian (McGrath); The Three Sisters (Olivier)
1971 Unman, Wittering, and Zigo (MacKenzie)
1972 Cabaret (Fosse); Alice’s Adventures in Wonderland (Sterling)
1973 Baxter (Jeffries); Love and Pain and the Whole Darn Thing (Pakula); Zardoz (Boorman)
1974 The Internecine Project (Hughes); The Abdication (Harvey); Murder on the Orient Express (Lumet)
1975 The Return of the Pink Panther (Edwards); Royal Flash (Lester); Lucky Lady (Donen)
1976 A Matter of Time (Minnelli)
1977 A Bridge Too Far (Attenborough)
1978 Superman (Donner)
1979 Tess (Polanski) (co)
1981 Superman II (Lester) (co)

Publications

By UNSWORTH: articles—

‘The Director of Photography,’ in Films and Filming (London), April 1957.
On UNSWORTH: articles—

Film and TV Technician (London), December 1978.

MacDonald, Peter, on Superman in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), January 1979.

American Cinematographer (Hollywood), May 1981.

* * *

When Geoffrey Unsworth died in 1978, the film industry lost one of its best-loved and most accomplished cinematographers. Although his work was renowned for its lush qualities, it was his versatility and craftsmanship, rather than any distinctive personal style, which elevated him to the top ranks of his profession. Unsworth was an artistic chameleon, capable of adapting to a wide range of directors, genres, and environmental conditions, and of evoking radically different cinematic moods. Ambitious, expensively budgeted costume dramas such as Cromwell, and intimate, modestly financed films such as The Three Sisters, might pose different technical and aesthetic challenges, but variations in scale had no bearing on the amount of professionalism and enthusiasm which Unsworth invested. He enjoyed making period films such as Becket because they provided him with opportunities to use cinematography’s basic grammar to establish ambience and verisimilitude. Yet he was equally adept at creating visual moods appropriate to films set in our own time, such as The Return of the Pink Panther. Although he learned his craft in the artificial and malleable context of studio production, he proved capable of superior work in the intractable and unpredictable conditions of location filmmaking, as A Bridge Too Far amply demonstrated.

Unsworth’s career began in 1932 when he joined Gaumont British as a camera apprentice. In time he was promoted to camera operator, and, after moving to Technicolor, worked with such luminaries as Georges Périnal on The Drum, The Four Feathers, and The Chief of Bagdad, and Jack Cardiff on Colonel Blimp and A Matter of Life and Death (Stairway to Heaven). He joined the Rank Organization in 1946, and remained there as a director of photography for 13 years, working frequently with the directors Ken Annakin and Roy Baker. His reputation established, Unsworth turned freelance in 1959, and soon became a highly sought-after director both in his native England and in America.

His best work was realized in the 1960s and 1970s. The frosty magnificence of 2001: A Space Odyssey, the elegance of Murder on the Orient Express, the chimerical aura of Zardoz, the ethereal and comic-book elements of Superman, and grandeur of Becket and Cromwell, and the softened representation of war in A Bridge Too Far, all owe a great deal to Unsworth’s work. His finest accomplishment, however, was undoubtedly Cabaret. The grotesquerie of the Kit Kat Klub, and the decaying fabric of pre-Second World War Germany are impeccably rendered by Unsworth’s expressionistic camerawork. The effort to draw the cinema audience into the mood of the nightclub by aligning its visual perspective with that of the clientele is highly successful. One of the most interesting aspects of Unsworth’s work on Cabaret is that it proved he had no lack of imagination when it came to translating theatre into cinema. Not too many years earlier, he had been castigated by the critics for excessive deference to theatrical conventions in his photography of plays performed by Britain’s National Theatre (Othello, The Three Sisters, and The Dance of Death). Cabaret, however, with its fluid camera movements, varied angles, and stunning lighting effects, was one of the most successful attempts ever to adapt a theatrical work for the film medium.

Cabaret earned Unsworth his first Academy Award. His second was for Tess, a movie which failed to satisfy Hardy purists but whose visual poetry seemed to strike a chord among cinema audiences. Unsworth died during the making of Tess; principal photography was completed by Ghislain Cloquet, who shared the Oscar.

Unsworth enjoyed a harmonious and unusually long partnership with his camera assistant and operator Peter MacDonald. Their association spanned two decades and about 30 features. MacDonald describes Unsworth as an “impressionist,” and has said that he was an intuitive, as opposed to a technical, cameraman who preferred to be guided by his instincts rather than by elaborate advance planning in the selection of lighting, angles, and composition. He was not renowned as an innovator, but he was always willing to experiment. If called upon to execute a particularly difficult shot, he would respond by searching for a solution rather than by dismissing the idea as technically impossible. Indeed, as director of photography on 2001: A Space Odyssey, he was a key member of the team which applied advanced technology towards the realization of the director Stanley Kubrick’s highly complex vision of the future. Unsworth’s cinematography, coupled with Douglas Trumbull’s pioneering special effects, helped to create the film’s documentary feel as well as its exceptional visual clarity.

Unsworth was committed to the principle that the cameraman’s input should be unobtrusive. He believed that cinematography should not call attention to itself but support directorial intent and the flow of the action. Yet, even though he believed that his contribution should be imperceptible, there is little doubt that his craftsmanship and artistry have left an indelible impression on modern cinema.

---Fiona Valentine

---

URUSEVSKY, Sergei

Films as Cinematographer:

1945 Poyedinok (Duel) (Legoshin)
1947 Selskaya uchitelnitsa (The Village Teacher) (Donskoy)
1949 Alitet ukhidit v gory (Alitet Leaves for the Hills) (Donskoy)
1952 Vozvrashcheniye Vasilii Bortnikova (The Return of Vasilii Bortnikov) (Pudovkin)
Films as Director:

1969  Proshschaj, Gjulsary! (The Ambler’s Race)
1971  Poy pesnya, poet! (Sing Your Song, Poet)

Publications

By URUSEVSKY: articles—

“About the Form,” in Izkusstvo kino (Moscow), no. 2, 1966.

On URUSEVSKY: articles—

* * *

Sergei Urusesvky will be remembered as one of the most innovative and resourceful figures in the history of cinematography, a progenitor of a filmmaking in which a subjective camera narrates the film. He advocated a camera technique that would edit the film with its own movement and make montage obsolete. Urusesvky was influenced by the other main figure of Soviet cinematography, Eisenstein’s cameraman Eduard Tisse. While celebrated internationally, at home he was often blamed for his obsession with form.

Urusesvky studied under graphic artist Vladimir Favorovsky and other Russian constructivists in Moscow. In the 1930s he worked as a graphic designer and photographer. He was a Picasso admirer, and was particularly proud that he visited with Picasso once and received some ceramic pieces from the painter. During the war he was mobilized and worked as a combat cameraman. He became a DP only later, and worked with directors Mark Donskoy and Yuli Raizman, as well as on the last picture of veteran Vsevolod Pudovkin. Little of Urusesvky’s formalist philosophy is to be seen in his earlier work. His best-known film from that period is Grigoriy Chukhrai’s Sorok pery (1956), a conventionally shot studio-set adaptation of a popular short story by Boris Lavrenyev, recounting a doomed love affair unraveling in the background of Russia’s civil war.

Urusesvky’s interest in cinematic form found its adequate expression only after he began working with director Mikhail Kalatozov. Their first collaboration was the war-time romance drama Pervyi eshelon (1955, but it was not until the triumph of Letyat zhuravli (1957) that Urusesvky’s innovative approach to film narration was recognized. Besides receiving the top award at Cannes, the film marked a decisive turn in Soviet war cinema: for the first time the experience of war was discussed through the utterly personal anxieties of the protagonists. Hand-held camera shots were used as often as technology allowed. There was even a scene where the protagonist, Veronica, runs away in a moment of trauma, surrounded by a shaky background of trees and buildings, reflecting her state of mind. For this subjective shot Urusesvky is said to have asked actress Tatiana Samoilova to hold the camera herself while running.

Kalatozov and Urusesvky then collaborated on Neotpravlennoye pismo (The Letter Never Sent, 1959), a romantic story of geologists facing a hostile nature. Elements of the cinematography of this film are believed to have influenced some scenes in Francis Ford Coppola’s Apocalypse Now. Urusesvky’s masterpiece remains his last picture as cinematographer, Ya Kuba (I Am Cuba, 1965). It was an important and lavishly financed joint project of the Soviet Union and newly socialist Cuba, meant to further the iconography and mythology of the revolutionary aesthetic, and to become the cinematic cornerstone of the “Cuban craze” that characterized the Soviet Union in the mid-1960s.

The film runs close to three hours and consists of four unrelated stories, recounting the fates of ordinary Cubans involved in situations of class confrontation that in the end lead them all into revolution. Otherwise an ordinary propaganda feature, I Am Cuba is outstanding for its extraordinary cinematography and design influenced by the work of Cuban painter Jose Portocarrero. Urusesvky chose to make the film in lush black and white, as he believed that the powerful emotional impact of contrasting shadows was crucial in cinema. For I Am Cuba, he used special infrared stock to achieve a fairy effect of the white island and palms on the dark background of sea and sky. Most of the film was shot with a 9.8 lens that slightly distorts the proportions and gives the images a dizzy, engulfing feel.

The shots in I Am Cuba are long and elaborately composed; many consist of a single take that runs over two minutes. In order to secure the changes in angles and the twists in the point of view the camera had not only been hand-held most of the time, but at times had to be handled by two operators. The nearly three-minute-long complex single-take opening scene on the hotel roof had to be shot 17 times; it involves vertical and horizontal movement of the camera operator, a combination of panoramic shots and extreme close ups, as well as the coordination of more than 100 extras.

The innovative cinematography of I Am Cuba was also influenced by the presence of young and inventive camera operator Aleksander Calzatti on the set. Calzatti, who eventually emigrated to Israel and the United States, had spent long hours discussing the film with Urusesvky and Kalatozov. He had seen Hitchcock’s Psycho, and described to them its opening shot where the camera moves from a panoramic view of the city to a close-up of the window behind which the action of the film begins to unravel. Urusesvky was impressed by this description, and planned some of the long takes in I Am Cuba around the concept of combination of far and near. In the famous funeral scene, in one unbroken take the camera moves over a street overlooking a funeral procession, then enters a room through. a window, travels over the heads of the workers in a third floor cigar factory, then goes out of the window again and continues wandering over the top of the procession. The shot was made possible with a system of cranes and an elaborate cable system.

Upon its release, I Am Cuba was accused of formalism. In an extensive discussion organized by Iskusstvo Kino in 1965 various filmmakers and critics shared their admiration for its experimentation with cinematic form, but noted that excessive attention to form had led to neglected character development and psychological complexity of the protagonists. The overtly aesthetic approach was considered inappropriate since it had subjected content to form. The filmmakers were accused of misleading viewers into enjoying the beauty of the images instead of sympathizing with the sorrows of the disinherit protagonists. It seemed that the cameraman had taken over directing, and was rather preoccupied with demonstrating the means of expression he had at his disposal while forgetting the goal these means were supposed to serve.

Urusevsky defended himself: “There cannot be art beyond form,” he insisted, alluding to Eisenstein. “It has never interested me, as cameraman, to just register what is going on in front of the camera.” On the contrary, Urusevsky claimed that his goal had always been to “make the image very active.”

I Am Cuba was rediscovered at the Telluride Film Festival in 1992, and screened to a standing ovation at the 1993 San Francisco International Film Festival. It was then restored, released in the United States as a presentation of Martin Scorsese and Francis Coppola, and enjoyed enthusiastic reviews and acclaim in the art house circuit.

Toward the end of his life, Urusevsky turned to directing. In 1969 he adapted for the screen the popular short novel by Kirghiz writer Chingiz Aitmatov Farewell, Gulsary!, and in 1971 he worked on a film based on the works of Russian poet Sergei Yesenin, who committed suicide in 1925. After Urusevsky’s death, an exhibition of his paintings was organized in Moscow.

—Dina Iordanova
VACHON, Christine

Films as Producer:

1989  He Was Once (Hestand)
1990  Oreo's with Attitude (Carty)

1991  Poison (Haynes) (+ first asst d)
1992  Swoon (Kalin)
1993  Dottie Gets Spanked (Haynes—for TV)
1994  Postcards from America (McLean); Go Fish (Troche) (exec)
1995  Stonewall (Finch); Kids (Clark) (co-pr); Safe (Haynes)
1996  Plain Pleasures (Kalin); I Shot Andy Warhol (Harron)
1997  Office Killer (Sherman); Kiss Me Guido (Vitale)
1998  I'm Losing You (Wagner); Velvet Goldmine (Haynes); Happiness (Solondz)
1999  Wild Flowers (Painter) (exec); Boys Don't Cry (Peirce)
2000  The Fluffer (Glatzer and Westmoreland) (exec); Women in Film (Wagner); Crime and Punishment in Suburbia (Schmidt)

Other Films:

1987  Magic Sticks (Keglevic) (third asst d); My Demon Lover (Loventhal) (prod co-ord)
1990  The Laserman (Wang) (second unit asst d)

Publications:

By VACHON: book—

On VACHON: articles—

Premiere (Boulder), October 1998.

* * *

Independent producer Christine Vachon has been described as fearless, relentless, radical, and determined. Director Todd Haynes said of the woman who raised the bar in independent filmmaking, “She is the kind of producer who will lay down in front of a train” to get a film made. She is a risk-taker who has bucked the establishment by bringing subjects to the screen that were once considered untouchable. Dubbed the “Godmother of Independent Films,” Vachon makes intelligent art pictures that have become commercially as well as critically successful.
Vachon began making movies in 1987 when she formed a production company with fellow Brown University alums Todd Haynes. As Vachon later noted, “Our mandate was to make movies by young filmmakers just starting out.” Their first effort was Haynes’ Superstar: The Karen Carpenter Story, starring a Barbie Doll as the anorexic Karen. The Sundance Film Festival fan favorite was blocked from release when the Carpenter family filed suit against the project. Even unreleased, the film became a cult hit and brought Haynes and Vachon the clout to finance their next project, Poison. Inspired by the writings of Jean Genet, Poison skillfully interweaves three stories to create what Leonard Maltin called a “jarring, disturbing film about what it means to be different, to be alienated from the mainstream.”

A difficult film, Poison found its audience in a gay community so unrecognized and underserved by mainstream filmmakers that it flocked to see the film because it contained some gay content.

Vachon next produced Swoon (1992), Tom Kalin’s surrealistic vision of the Leopold-Loeb murders. Unlike previous film interpretations of the famous 1920s thrill killing of a young Chicago boy, Swoon did not shy away from the homosexuality of the two murderers. Shot in black and white, with what Roger Ebert called “the look of modern men’s fashion photography,” Swoon was immediately touted as the epitome of the new queer cinema, even as it was roundly criticized for depicting homosexuals as murderers. Vachon, however, was quick to note that, for her, filmmaking was about telling stories, not presenting a unified front of gay identity. And in her other gay-themed films, Vachon has presented gay life from a wide range of angles and experiences.

In Rose Troche’s Go Fish (1994), Vachon brought a witty and innovative lesbian love story to the screen—this one played by a largely non-professional cast. And Todd Haynes’ Velvet Goldmine used a Citizen Kane flashback approach to chronicle London’s glam rock era, a time in which sexual experimentation with androgyny and bisexuality stemmed from a spirit of rebellion, optimism, and hero worship.

Though she was dubbed “the Queen of Queer Cinema,” Vachon detested the appellation and certainly never limited herself to producing gay-themed films. Larry Clark’s Kids (1995) took on the uncomfortable subject of HIV-infected teenagers in a world of streetwise kids whose hellish lives revolve around sexual conquest and drugs. That same year Vachon teamed with Todd Haynes to make Safe, a film about a woman who is allergic to her environment. As Roger Ebert noted, “The movie starts out dealing with one problem (environmental poisoning) and ends up attacking another (a blissed-out cult that charges big dollars from suffering people, who pay to hear the leader blame them for their troubles).” But it moves to another level when it suggests that, in fact, Moore’s character may be responsible for much of her own illness. In a directorial style characterized by Ebert as “sneaky and insidious,” Haynes never blames anyone, leaving the audience to work through its own discomfort.

The film that catapulted Vachon to popular acclaim was the gay-themed Boys Don’t Cry, director Kimberly Pierce’s docudrama about the Brandon Teena story. A film lauded by many critics as one of the best of the year, Boys Don’t Cry avoided cliché by letting superb actors, led by Academy Award and Golden Globe winner Hilary Swank and Academy Award nominee Chloe Sevigny, and pure, forceful filmmaking tell a powerful and distressing true story of sexual identity and confusion in Middle America.

Although the groundbreaking film brought Vachon widespread recognition and praise, she has made it clear that she has no intention of abandoning her independent filmmaking ethos. But one can only look forward to the inevitable merging of the mainstream money and attention bound to come Vachon’s way with her relentless belief in the puissant voice and vision of the independent filmmaker.

—Victoria Price

VAJDA, Ernest

Films as Writer:

1926 The Crown of Lies (Buchowitzki); The Cat’s Pajamas (Wellman); You Never Know Women (Wellman)
1927 Service for Ladies (D’Arrast); Serenade (D’Arrast)
1928 A Night of Mystery (Mendes); His Tiger Lady (Henley); Loves of an Actress (Lee); Manhattan Cowboy (McGowan); His Private Life (Tuttle); Manhattan Cocktail (Arzner)
1929 Innocents of Paris (Wallace); The Love Parade (Lubitsch); Marquis Preferred (Tuttle)
1930 Such Men Are Dangerous (Hawks and Burke); Monte Carlo (Lubitsch)
1931 The Smiling Lieutenant (Lubitsch); Tonight or Never (Le-Roy); Son of India (Feyder); The Guardsman (Franklin)
1932 Smilin’ Through (Franklin); Payment Deferred (Mendes); Service for Ladies (Reserved for Ladies) (A. Korda); Broken Lullaby (The Man I Killed) (Lubitsch)
1933 Reunion in Vienna (Franklin)
1934 The Barretts of Wimpole Street (Franklin); The Merry Widow (Lubitsch)
1936 A Woman Rebels (Sandrich)
1937 Personal Property (Van Dyke); The Great Garrick (Whale)
1938 Marie Antoinette (Van Dyke); Dramatic School (Sinclair)
1940 He Stayed for Breakfast (Hell)
1941 They Dare Not Love (Whale)

Publications

By VAJDA: plays—

Rozmarin Neni [Aunt Rose Marie], Budapest, 1909.
Mister Bobby, Budapest, 1912.
A váratlan vendég [The Unexpected Guest], Budapest, 1915.
Szerelem Vására, Budapest, 1920.
Délibáb, Budapest, 1922, as Fata Morgana, New York, 1924.
The Harem, New York, 1924.

By VAJDA: book—
The Monkey Man and the Man Monkey (fiction), Budapest, 1916.

On VAJDA: article—

* * *

Ernest Vajda was one of the hundreds of talented Europeans lured to Hollywood during the 1920s. Vajda had constructed a major career as a playwright in Budapest prior to his coming to America. Although writing popular plays offered a first-rate career, Hollywood dangled its lures in front of many Europeans who were caught up in an era of high inflation and political chaos.

Vajda’s career in Hollywood can be divided into two distinct periods. In the first, Vajda made his way through the complicated transition to talkies. At Paramount he became associated with witty comedies starring Adolph Menjou. Although these have not made their way into the pantheon of American movie classics of the late silent era, they did make money for what was then Hollywood’s most powerful movie company. Service for Ladies may have been the best of these, in part because it was directed by a first-rate talent, Harry D’Arrast.

There is no question that Vajda’s career peaked at Paramount once he commenced his association with the noted director and fellow emigré Ernst Lubitsch. The Berlin-born Lubitsch and Vajda could exchange their ideas for comedies from the continent in German and English. And some of Hollywood’s best early sound films came about as a result. Their initial collaboration, The Love Parade, is now considered a classic of the early sound era. Jeanette MacDonald and Maurice Chevalier represented a new style of comedy actor for movie-goers, and box-office results indicated fans throughout the world loved their films. Before he left for MGM Vajda collaborated with Lubitsch on three more films. None were as good as The Love Parade, but all stood among the better products of that early era of talkies: Monte Carlo, The Smiling Lieutenant, and The Man I Killed.

At this point Ernest Vajda moved to MGM where he remained until 1938. As might be expected, during his first three years there the studio tried to use him to create Lubitsch-like comedies. The results were acceptable at the box office, but will be remembered by few today. Only when Lubitsch was lured to MGM to direct The Merry Widow, again with MacDonald and Chevalier, did a fine movie result.

In the mid-1930s the genre of the European light musical comedy faded, replaced by other forms of comedy. With it Vajda’s career also came to a close. MGM dropped him in 1939, and after a few efforts elsewhere, he retired. Vajda helped write many a great film, but only in a genre which lasted from the late 1920s through the mid-1930s.

—Douglas Gomery

VAN DONGEN, Helen

Editor. Nationality: Dutch. Born: Amstterdam, 5 January 1909. Family: Married Kenneth Durant, 1950. Career: 1928—assisted Joris Ivens on The Bridge, and later works; 1930—studied sound-track recording and editing, Tobis Klangfilm Studios, and also studied at UFA, Berlin; 1934—assistant and observer at Joinville Studios, Paris, studied at the Academy of Cinematography, Moscow, under Eisenstein, Pudovkin, and Vertov, 1934–36, and observer in Hollywood studios, 1936; late 1930s—worked as producer on education films; abortive job as editor on film project of Nelson Rockefeller, the co-ordinator of Inter-American Affairs, during World War II; another abortive project as deputy commissioner for the Netherlands East Indies (Ivens was to serve as Commissioner); 1950—retired upon marriage.

Films as Editor:

1928 De brug (The Bridge) (Ivens) (asst)
1929 Regen (Rain) (Ivens) (asst); Wy brouwen (We Are Building) (Ivens) (asst)
1931 Philips-Radio (Industrial Symphony) (Ivens); Zuiderzee Dike (doc); Nieuwe polders (doc); Creosoot (Creosote) (Ivens) (asst)
1933 Zuydersee (Ivens)
1934 Nieuwe Gronden (New Earth) (Ivens); Misère au Borinage (Borinage) (Ivens)
1935 Borza (The Struggle) (von Wagenheim)
1936 Spain in Flames (+ pr)
1937 The Spanish Earth (Ivens)
1938 You Can Draw (+ d, ph)
1939 The 400 Million (China’s 400 Million) (Ivens); Pete Roleum and His Cousins (Losey)
1940 Power and the Land (Ivens)
1942 The Land (Flaherty); Russians at War (compilation)
1943 Netherlands America (+ d); Peoples of Indonesia (+ d)
1945 News Review No. 2 (compilation)
1946 Gift of Green (+ co-d—16 mm)
1948 Louisiana Story (Flaherty) (+ co-pr)
1950 Of Human Rights (+ d)

Publications

By VAN DONGEN: books—

By VAN DONGEN: articles—

On VAN DONGEN: articles—

Scoop (Amsterdam), November 1978.

* * *

There is a famous story recounted by Time magazine’s Richard Corliss in a 1980 essay on Robert Flaherty. Helen Van Dongen, working as the editor of the filmmaker’s The Land, showed him a sequence she had cut together and he fervently disapproved. A few days later she screened the same sequence for him and he said “Now you’ve got it.” Van Dongen proved ably up to the task of working with Flaherty, transmuting the director’s seemingly random and chaotic footage into, as Corliss writes, “a brilliant ‘as told to’ autobiography. If [Flaherty’s] spirit informed their project, then [Van Dongen’s] will gave its final form.”

In the truest spirit of the title, Van Dongen was an editor whose techniques, honed by early work with Joris Ivens, extended beyond mere physical assemblage and continuity supervision to thoughtful documentary theory and to complex and creative sound work. In Flaherty’s Louisiana Story, in which she served as editor and as associate producer, she worked closely with composer Virgil Thompson in creating specific themes for characters and sequences, and manipulated the sound track by disassembling sounds and then reconfiguring them: a scene on a bridge at night may contain up to 20 separate sounds (some of which were not endemic to the location) or a human scream could be a fusing of a dozen voices. Her exhaustive analysis of the film can be found in The Technique of Film Editing and is a fascinating look not only at how sequences were structured and sound was used, but also the reasons why—both the pragmatic and the dramatic.

Though her two World War II compilation documentaries, Russians at War and News Review No. 2 were well received, having been compared favorably with the World at War series by Frank Capra, her two films with Flaherty have proven her most enduring works. Her extensive diaries of the production histories of The Land and Louisiana Story provide a telling memoir of working on location and in the editing room with the often opaque and stubborn Flaherty (he referred to her as his “Dutch mule”), while also revealing a uniquely productive and successful collaboration. Though certainly a tempestuous relationship, it was never overtly adversarial; in fact when Van Dongen had to trick Flaherty into providing the narration for The Land because no narrator could capture his intonations (she earlier had corralled Ernest Hemingway into reciting his own written words on Ivens’s The Spanish Earth), he was by all accounts incensed, but later conceded Van Dongen was right because it benefited the film. While their goals were the same, Van Dongen admitted her greatest challenge was in having to continually interpret and reinterpret Flaherty’s admittedly elusive vision (which often led to gross continuity gaps and over- and undershooting) and then shape it into a cohesive and viewable motion picture. When she first began to work with Flaherty, she said she was “completely baffled by his method” and wrote to Ivens for help in understanding. Ivens’s reply was equally cryptic: “Observe, look and listen and you’ll find what he wants.” Only when she was able to view the footage through Flaherty’s realm of understanding, she said, and then decipher Flaherty’s reaction while watching footage could she gauge the direction—and ultimately, the success—of the film. She wrote, “Had I myself gone to direct Flaherty’s story, it would have looked quite different. But working with already filmed material, filmed under the influence of Flaherty . . . essentially my editing would have resulted in approximately the same story and form. This would have been inevitable because, to use the random material to full value, the editor has to discover not only the inherent qualities of each shot but also must know the how’s and why’s, the director’s reasoning behind each shot, or must know that no one else but Flaherty would have shot such a scene.” Her ability to read the director in this way no doubt made her the best editor for Flaherty, but more importantly, made Flaherty’s films better.

Though both The Land and Louisiana Story are prime examples of Flaherty’s filmmaking sensibility, much of the beauty and emotional gravity of the films is owed to Van Dongen’s delicately focused sound and film editing. They move beyond what film history regards as documentary (and perhaps to a degree beyond what fiction can do as well), and into something ultimately more lyrical. In an interview with Ben Achtenberg, Van Dongen herself resisted the label of documentary: “To me Flaherty is not a documentarian; he makes it all up. He does use the documentary style and background but, except for The Land, they are all, to a degree, stories . . . . They are part of our history of filmmaking, but I do hesitate to call them documentaries. They are Flaherty-films, and worthwhile enjoying.”

—Jon Lupo

VANGELIS

Films as Composer:

1970 Sex Power (Chapier)
1973 Amour (Chapier); L’Apocalypse des animaux (Rossif)
1974 Entends-tu les chiens aboyer? (Reichenbach)
1975 Le Fête sauvage (Rossif)
1978 Chariots of Fire (Hudson)
1982 Missing (Costa Gavras); Blade Runner (Scott)
1984 Sauvage et beau (Rossif); The Bounty (Donaldson)
1985 Nosferatu a venezia; Someone to Watch Over Me (Scott) (song)
1988 Francesco (Franciskas) (Cavani); Le Diner des bustes (Matouk)
1989 Russicum (Squitieri) (song)
1992 1492: The Conquest of Paradise (Scott); Bitter Moon; Starwatcher
1996 Cavafy (Smarakis)
Vangelis’ forte has been composing music for films in which characters seek to transcend their limitations in achieving some great goal or quest. Indeed, Vangelis became well-known for his musical score for Chariots of Fire, where he enveloped scenes of Olympic victory with that particularly exalting music of triumph he creates with such perfection. It was certainly a feat to weld music consisting in great part of synthesized or mechanically processed sounds to essentially realistic visuals. It is certainly true that many of the film’s more impressive shots have been transformed by slow motion; yet the completely fantastic visuals of horror or futuristic films have been the traditional forum for what is generally considered to be experimental music. Vangelis’ music, however, is not just synthetic. The composer prides himself on using echo chamber and other effects to blur the distinction between synthesized sounds and traditional instruments, as well as choir. Indeed, Vangelis’ mixed-media arrangement of the Anglican hymn “Jerusalem” perfectly matches the patriarchal vision of this rather reactionary film glorifying God and Empire, and it is a phrase from this hymn that provides the film its title.

Beginning the 1982, Vangelis had the chance of providing music for two directors whose talents equaled his—first for Peter Weir. A portion from Vangelis’ suite for synthesizer Opera Sauvage somewhat upstages Maurice Jarre’s reticent score for Peter Weir’s The Year of Living Dangerously. Vangelis’ music underscores the exhilarating curfew ride of Guy (Mel Gibson) and Jill (Sigourney Weaver)—their moment of living very dangerously and of driving to their first night of love. The same is true of the scene where Jill makes the decision to tell Guy top secret information to save his life—a trust he betrays. In 1982, the composer wrote the full score for the first of two very interesting works by Ridley Scott whose misty lights and velvety darks find perfect counterparts in Vangelis’ nuanced, but wide-ranging harmonies and timbres.

Publications

On VANGELIS: articles—

Score (Lelystad, Netherlands), no. 89, December 1993.

* * *

Vangelis
Vangelis accompanies the titles of Scott’s _Blade Runner_ with percussive sounds played under a tentative statement of the film’s main theme. The opening establishing shot showing Los Angeles, in 2019, is accompanied by the percussive sounds which seem to be real explosions of burn-off from huge refinery towers, while the main theme is given a full statement with simulated brass and strings. Vangelis enjoys this playing with diegetic sounds (sounds that fit something in the plot) and extra-diagnostic music (mere accompaniment): are we hearing explosions that sound like percussive instruments or the opposite? It may very well be the ambiguity of this synthesized music that makes it fit so well with both the high-tech bleeps of the futuristic world and the mysterious twists of the plot.

And yet, again, Vangelis demonstrates his readiness to move beyond electronically fabricated sound to that of traditional instruments at precisely those moments when meaning and expression demand it. The love theme—a melancholy jazz melody—for the love scenes or quieter moments is done with real instruments, piano and saxophone, as if to emphasize the fact that we finally are witnessing something human, something transcendent of the fact that one of the couple is an android. Here again, Vangelis plays with diegetic EXTRA-diagnostic music by having the two (played by Harrison Ford and Sean Young) each pick out fragments of the melody on a piano. The final credit music is a magnificent toccata with a driving bass. His ability to find just the right synthetic sounds to underscore psychological intensity but rather greatly increased by Vangelis’ having undertaken to evoke the music of Juan dal Encina and other composers of the court of Ferdinand and Isabella. Since he is dealing with a period piece set in the earlier efforts. He has composed a score to be compared, in its music by having the two (played by Harrison Ford and Sean Young) each pick out fragments of the melody on a piano. The final credit music is a magnificent toccata with a driving bass. His ability to find just the right synthetic sounds to underscore psychological intensity but rather greatly increased by Vangelis’ having undertaken to evoke the music of Juan dal Encina and other composers of the court of Ferdinand and Isabella. Since he is dealing with a period piece set in the earlier efforts. He has composed a score to be compared, in its

...with traditional instruments. When there is need, Vangelis appeals again to that side of his talent that created the euphoric, exultant texture of _Chariots of Fire_: for the departure of the ships of Columbus on their first voyage; for the royal celebration in church upon his return; for the hoisting of the giant church bell for the first settlement in the New World. And when hurricanes, white-colonial greed, Native-American uprisings, and enemies in Spain ruin Columbus’ Utopian vision, Vangelis draws on his deeper, richer, darker tone poetico.

—Rodney Farnsworth

---

VAN HEUSEN, James

Songwriter. Nationality: American. Born: Edward Chester Babcock in Syracuse, New York, 26 January 1913. Education: Attended Syracuse University. Family: Married Mrs. William Perlberg. Career: 1928—radio announcer for WSYR; 1933—composed songs for Cotton Club revue; 1933–38—staff pianist at various Tin Pan Alley music publishers, including Santly Brothers and Remick’s; 1939—composer for Broadway musical _Swingin’ on a Dream_, songwriter for popular bands; 1940–74—songwriter for films. Awards: Academy Award, for “Swinging on a Star,” from _Going My Way_, 1944, “All the Way,” from _The Joker Is Wild_, 1957, “High Hopes,” from _A Hole in the Head_, 1959, and “Call Me Irresponsible,” from _Papa’s Delicate Condition_, 1963; Emmy Award, for “Love And Marriage,” “Our Town,” and other songs from _Our Town_, 1955. Died: February 1990.

Films as Songwriter:

1940 _Love Thy Neighbor_ (Sandrich)
1941 _The Road to Zanzibar_ (Schildtzinger); _Playmates_ (Butler)
1942 _My Favorite Spy_ (Garnett); _The Road to Morocco_ (Butler)
1943 _Dixie_ (A. Sutherland)
1944 _Lady in the Dark_ (Leisen); _Take It Big_ (McDonald); _And the Angels Sing_ (Binyon); _Going My Way_ (McCary); _The Road to Utopia_ (Walker); _The Belle of the Yukon_ (Seiter)
1945 _Daffy’s Tavern_ (Walker); _The Bells of Saint Mary’s_ (McCary); _The Great John L._ (Tuttle)
1946 _Cross My Heart_ (Berry); _My Heart Goes Crazy_ (Ruggles)
1947 _Welcome Stranger_ (Nugent); _Variety Girl_ (Marshall); _Magic Town_ (Wellman); _The Road to Rio_ (McLeod)
1948 _The Emperor Waltz_ (Wildor); _Mystery in Mexico_ (Wise)
1949 _A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur’s Court_ (Garnett); _Top O’ the Morning_ (Miller)
1950 _Riding High_ (Capra); _Mr. Music_ (Haydn)
1951 _The Road to Bali_ (Walker); _Little Boy Lost_ (Seaton)
1954 _Young at Heart_ (Douglas)
1955 _The Tender Trap_ (Walters); _Not as a Stranger_ (Kramer); _Our Town_ (Bettis for—TV)
1956 _Anything Goes_ (Lewis); _Pardners_ (Taurog)
1957 _The Joker Is Wild_ (C. Vidor)
1958 _Some Came Running_ (Minnelli); _Indiscreet_ (Donen); _Paris Holiday_ (Oswald)
1959 _Hole in the Head_ (Capra); _They Came to Cordura_ (Rosen); _Say One for Me_ (Tashlin); _Career (Anthony); This Earth Is Mine_ (H. King); _Night of the Quarter Moon_ (Haas); _Holiday for Lovers_ (Levin)
1960 _High Time_ (Edwards); _Wake Me When It’s Over_ (LeRoy for—TV); _Who Was That Lady?_ (Sidney); _The World of Suzie Wong_ (Quine); _Let’s Make Love_ (Cukor); _Ocean’s Eleven_ (Milestone)
1961 _A Pocketful of Miracles_ (Capra)
1962 _Boys Night Out_ (Gordon); _The Road to Hong Kong_ (Panama)
1963 _Papa’s Delicate Condition_ (Marshall); _Come Blow Your Horn_ (Yorkin); _Under the Yum Yum Tree_ (Swift); _Four for Texas_ (Aldrich); _My Six Loves_ (Champion); _Johnny Cool_ (Asher); _Come Fly with Me_ (Levin)
1964 _Robin and the Seven Hoods_ (Douglas); _Where Love Has Gone_ (Dmytryk); _The Pleasure Seekers_ (Negulesco); _Honeymoon Hotel_ (Levin)
1965 _The Second Best Secret Agent in the Whole Wide World_ (Shonette)
1967 _Thoroughly Modern Millie_ (Hill)
1968 _Star!_ (Wise)
1969  The Great Bank Robbery (Averback)
1974  Journey Back to Oz (H. Sutherland—animation)

Publications

On VAN HEUSEN: articles—

Cahn, Sammy, in I Should Care, New York, 1974.
White, Mark, in You Must Remember This, New York, 1985.
Obituary in Classic Images (Muscatine), March 1990.
Obituary in Current Biography, April 1990.

* * *

Well-respected by his peers and popular with the ladies, James Van Heusen was as multifaceted as the music he wrote. Privately a role model for Frank Sinatra, among others, he was both loud and sublime, qualities which would manifest themselves in his most popular works.

Before being summoned by Hollywood, Van Heusen was a fledgling composer who used his photographic musical memory to transcribe songs for a radio orchestra long before any sheet music was available. His special talent allowed him to dissect hit songs and understand them. In his ten-year career through radio, nightclubs, and Tin Pan Alley, he peppered the Hit Parade with his own stylish hits until “Imagination” caught the ear of Hollywood and he was called upon to compose songs for the Jack Benny vehicle Love Thy Neighbor.

It was Van Heusen’s next assignment which would cement his position in Hollywood by giving him an important mouthpiece for his music. Beginning with The Road to Zanzibar, Van Heusen would compose songs for about 20 Bing Crosby movies. Songs from Crosby and Hope’s Road pictures, such as “Road to Morocco,” “Moonlight Becomes You,” and “Personality” became national favorites. Crosby’s easygoing, relaxed style was amiably buoyed by Van Heusen’s smooth compositions, and this is nowhere more apparent than in Going My Way. Van Heusen and lyricist Johnny Burke were instructed to write the Ten Commandments as a rhythm song. They came up with “Swing on a Star,” an enduring and charming number which is still a favorite for children.

After his longtime lyricist Burke fell ill, Van Heusen fell into a partnership with Sammy Cahn, the lyricist behind the popular song “Bei Mir Bis Du Schoen” and the Oscar-winning “Three Coins in the Fountain.” Together, they formed a powerhouse of a songwriting team, with Cahn’s goofy lyrics playing well with Van Heusen’s sweeping compositions. They became Hollywood’s “Kings of the Title Songs” and also the unofficial official songwriters for Van Heusen’s old friend, Frank Sinatra, who was reemerging in his career. This three-way partnership would literally redefine all their careers and create a body of work for which all three men are primarily identified.

Van Heusen’s work for Crosby could never project the good-time, playboy image that he had personally, but with Sinatra as his new musical face, that attitude took precedence. Their first collaboration as a threesome was the title track to the film The Tender Trap, a hard-hitting and vibrant number with lyrics espousing the evils of marriage and music representing the beauties of bachelorhood. They followed this up with songs for a television production of Thornton Wilder’s Our Town, featuring “Love and Marriage,” the antithesis to “Tender Trap” in which Cahn’s optimistic and naïve lyrics are bounced around by Van Heusen’s melodramatic circus waltz, which seems to illustrate the ups and downs of marriage that Cahn’s lyrics overlook.

Van Heusen also had a strength for using his ballads, which are considered overlooked and deserving of the same praise as Jerome Kern’s, to reveal the other side of a rather coarse character. In Papa’s Delicate Condition, “Call Me Irresponsible” creates some sympathetic pathetic for an alcoholic, played by Jackie Gleason, and is generally considered to be the only good thing about the movie. In the superb The Joker Is Wild, Frank Sinatra plays an unlikely singer who has his throat cut. The song “All the Way” was specifically written by Van Heusen, note by note, for the character to have some difficulty singing it once his throat is cut. Cahn’s double-entendre lyrics glide over Van Heusen’s sentimental and sweeping music to create a remarkable soliloquy for a snake.

Van Heusen’s lesser work was of a playful nature. If there was not an “All the Way” for every picture, there was at least a “Career,” an easygoing lament from the film of the same name, sung by Dean Martin. Highlights of Van Heusen’s secondary work include “Young at Heart,” from the movie of the same name, a sentimental and sweet number; “High Hopes” from A Hole in the Head, a playful children’s song; “Ain’t that a Kick in the Head,” from Ocean’s 11, a rollicking tour de force performed by Dean Martin; “My Kind of Town” from Robin and the Seven Hoods, an equally rollicking paean to Chicago which has become one of Sinatra’s most beloved standards; and “Come Fly with Me,” sung by Frankie Avalon for the film of the same name, has also become a beloved Sinatra standard, a testament to the lifestyle that singer and songwriter both held as their preferred one.

As the sixties wore on, musicals fell out of the vogue, as did songs in Van Heusen’s style. While there were attempts at musicals, such as Thoroughly Modern Millie, they often fell flat, and Cahn and Van Heusen were left to write title songs for such films as The Second Best Secret Agent in the Whole Wide World. Twenty-five years later the world turned around and Van Heusen compositions have been given a new life. “Love and Marriage” was used as the theme to the popular television sitcom Married... With Children, though now Sinatra’s version sounds even more sarcastic and doom-saying than ever before. “Young at Heart,” as performed by Sinatra, was featured in the 1994 film It Could Happen to You. The revived popularity of crooners such as Dean Martin and Frank Sinatra has meant that songs such as “Ain’t that a Kick in the Head” and “Come Fly with Me” have been reissued on CDs now being marketed to college-age music lovers. Van Heusen’s music has come full circle.

—John E. Mitchell

VAN RUNKLE, Theodora

Films as Costume Designer:

- 1966 Hawaii (Hill) (sketch artist)
- 1967 Bonnie and Clyde (Penn)
- 1968 Bullitt (Yates); The Thomas Crown Affair (Jewison) (co); I Love You, Alice B. Toklas! (Averback); Amanti (A Place for Lovers) (De Sica) (co)
- 1969 The Reivers (Rydell); The Arrangement (Kazan)
- 1970 Myra Breckenridge (Same)
- 1971 Johnny Got His Gun (Trumbo)
- 1973 Kid Blue (Frawley)
- 1974 Mame (Saks); The Godfather, Part II (Coppola)
- 1978 Heaven Can Wait (Beatty and Henry) (co); New York, New York (Scorsese)
- 1979 The Jerk (C. Reiner)
- 1980 S.O.B. (Edwards); Heartbeeps (Arkush) (co)
- 1982 The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas (Higgins)
- 1984 Rhinestone (Clark)
- 1986 Native Son (Freedman); Peggy Sue Got Married (Coppola)
- 1988 Everybody’s All-American (Hackford); Widefire (Z. King)
- 1989 Troop Beverly Hills (Kanew)
- 1990 Stella (Erman)
- 1991 The Butcher’s Wife (Hughes)
- 1992 Leap of Faith (Pearce)
- 1995 Kiss of Death (Schoeder); White Dwarf (Markle—for TV)
- 1997 The Last Don (Clifford—mini for TV)
- 1998 I’m Losing You (Wagner)
- 1999 Goodbye Lover (Joffé); The Championship Season (Paul Sorvino—for TV)

Publications

By VAN RUNKLE: article—

On VAN RUNKLE: article—

American Film, vol. 16, no. 9, September-October 1991.

* * *

In 1967 miniskirts maintained their hold on the world’s fashions. With the release of Bonnie and Clyde, however, hemlines began to fall as fashion magazines featured the midi-look Theodora Van Runkle revived for that film. And while women were wearing midi-skirts with silk blouses, men began sporting wide laped, double-breasted suits.

Prior to Bonnie and Clyde, Van Runkle had worked as an ad illustrator before making her film debut as a sketch artist for Dorothy Jeakins on Hawaii. When Jeakins had to turn down Bonnie and Clyde due to a prior commitment, she recommended Van Runkle: it was a golden opportunity for the young designer with an admitted passion for 1930s clothing design. With her debut as a designer, Van Runkle was thrust into the spotlight: an Oscar nomination (she lost to John Truscott for Cameolet), a Golden Tiberius from the Italian design industry, and numerous offers for more film work.

Bonnie and Clyde catapulted not only Van Runkle to fame, but Faye Dunaway as well; over the next few years, the star used Van Runkle to design her clothes both offscreen and on, establishing her fashion image as one based on soft silks which both reveal and disguise. In discussing her approach to dressing Dunaway for The Thomas Crown Affair, Van Runkle noted her use of accessories to counterpoint the outfit: Dunaway’s passion is signified by her clothing, her control by her jewelry.

While Van Runkle has done a wide variety of period pieces, from the sock-hop styles of the 1950s in Peggy Sue Got Married to the hippie atrocities of I Love You, Alice B. Toklas! she claims her favorite period is that from the beginning of World War I to the end of World War II. With Mame Van Runkle re-created a fashion obsession with hats that prompted the Millinery Institute of America to award her their Golden Crown, while with New York, New York, she redefined Liza Minnelli’s fashion image by dressing her in tailored outfits. With The Godfather, Part II Van Runkle was able to cover much of the period between the wars, outfitting the mob in an exquisite array of tailored suits.

That tailored look remains one of her two favorites, the other being what she calls her “romantic” style: sensual satins, furs, lace, and velvet. With The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas, she was allowed to indulge that latter penchant to great effect, director Colin Higgins agreeing with her that costumes are an effective shorthand to character. In that film Dolly Parton was never more appropriately, nor more lavishly attired: one costume, dubbed “Miss Mona Aflame with Passion,” cost $7,000.

—Doug Tomlinson

VEILLER, Anthony

Writer and Producer. Nationality: American. Born: New York City, 23 June 1903. Education: Attended Antioch College, Ohio; Union College, New York. Family: Son of the writer and director Bayard Veiller. Married; two children and one step-child. Career: 1925–30—reporter, publicist, and theater manager; 1932—first film as writer, Break of Promise; then writer for RKO and other studios; 1942–45—writer for the Why We Fight series for the Office of War Information; 1949–52—worked mainly as producer. Award: Academy Award for Stage Door, 1937. Died: Of cancer, 27 June 1965.

Films as Writer:

- 1932 Break of Promise (Stein)
- 1934 The Notorious Sophie Lang (Murphy)
- 1935 Jalna (Cromwell); Break of Hearts (Moeller); Star of Midnight (Roberts); Seven Keys to Baldpate (Hamilton and Killy)
- 1936 The Lady Consents (Roberts); A Woman Rebels (Sandrich); The Ex-Mrs. Bradford (Roberts); Winterset (Santell)
- 1937 The Soldier and the Lady (Nichols); Stage Door (La Cava); The Woman I Love (Litvak)
- 1938 Radio City Revels (Stoloff)
- 1939 Let Us Live (Brahm); Disputed Passage (Borzage); Barricade (Ratoff)
- 1942 Her Cardboard Lover (Cukor); Prelude to War (Why We Fight series) (Capra—doc)
- 1943 Assignment in Brittany (Conway); The Nazis Strike (Why We Fight series) (Capra and Litvak—doc) (+ co-narration);
Divide and Conquer (Why We Fight series) (Capra and Litvak—doc); The Battle of Britain (Why We Fight series) (+ doc); The Battle of Russia (Why We Fight series) (Litvak—doc) (+ co-narration); The Battle of China (Why We Fight series) (Litvak and Capra—doc) (+ co-narration); Tunisian Victory (Capra—doc)

1944 The Battle of Russia (Why We Fight series) (Litvak—doc) (+ co-narration); The Battle of China (Why We Fight series) (Litvak and Capra—doc) (+ co-narration); Tunisian Victory (Capra—doc)

1945 Adventure (Fleming); War Comes to America (Why We Fight series) (Litvak—doc) (+ co-narration)

1946 The Killers (Siodmak); The Stranger (Welles)

1947 Beware of Pity (Elvey)

1948 State of the Union (Capra)

1953 Moulin Rouge (Huston)

1955 That Lady (Young)

1956 Safari (Young)

1957 Monkey on My Back (de Toth)

1959 Timbuktu (Tourneur); Solomon and Sheba (K. Vidor)

1963 The List of Adrian Messenger (Huston)

1964 The Night of the Iguana (Huston)

Films as Producer:

1940 Victory (Cromwell)

1949 Colorado Territory (Walsh); Backfire (Sherman)

1950 Chain Lightning (Heisler); Along the Great Divide (Walsh)

1951 Dallas (Heisler); Force of Arms (Curtiz)

1952 Red Planet Mars (Homer) (+ co-sc)

Publications

On VEILLER: book—

Bohn, Theodore Thomas, An Historical and Descriptive Analysis of the “Why We Fight” Series, New York, 1977.

On VEILLER: article—

Slater, Thomas, in American Screenwriters, 2nd series, edited by Randall Clark, Detroit, Michigan, 1986.

* * *

The screenwriting career of Anthony Veiller reached its peak near the end of his career. Indeed, his final two screenplays, both for the director John Huston, probably represent his best known and best crafted: The List of Adrian Messenger and The Night of the Iguana. But Veiller did have a long and fruitful career prior to these two successes, one which spanned the Golden Age of the Hollywood studio system.

Unlike many of his generation, Veiller was born into the movie business. His father, Bayard, was a modestly successful director and screenwriter in the silent era. Once his father settled in Hollywood in the early 1930s, he brought his son in on several projects for Paramount and MGM. Having completed his brief apprenticeship, the son moved to Poverty Row with RKO, writing two or three screenplays per year. Few would care to remember the titles, save two which starred Katharine Hepburn in the early part of her career, Break of Hearts and A Woman Rebels.

During the Second World War, Veiller joined Frank Capra’s documentary unit and he worked on several of the Why We Fight series. This work must have helped Veiller deal with the Hollywood studio system, for after the war he had the first of his two successful creative periods. The Stranger is now considered one of Orson Welles’s minor classics. The Killers, a film noir starring Burt Lancaster and Ava Gardner, was directed by Robert Siodmak and earned Veiller an Academy Award nomination. In 1948 Veiller turned to work with his buddy from the Why We Fight series, Frank Capra. State of the Union was not Capra’s best, but it did well enough at the box office. Veiller then worked as a producer, and returned to writing only in 1952, but his films of the 1950s lack the power or impact of the three efforts which came after the Second World War. It took an alliance during the 1960s with John Huston to revitalize Veiller’s writing career. It was a shame that he died in 1965, for Huston and he had just begun The Man Who Would Be King.

—Douglas Gomery

VETCHINSKY, Alex

Art Director. Nationality: British. Career: 1930s—draughtsman at Gainsborough Studios; set designer at Gainsborough and Gaumont British until 1970s; 1977—retired from films. Died: In 1980.

Films as Art Director/Production Designer:

1931 Michael and Mary (Saville); Sunshine Susie (Saville); Faithful Heart (Saville)

1932 Love on Wheels (Saville); Jack’s the Boy (Forde)

1933 The Lucky Number (Asquith); It’s a Boy (Whelan); Falling for You (Stevenson and Hulbert); Friday the Thirteenth (Saville) (co); Aunt Sally (Whelan)

1935 The Phantom Light (Powell); Stormy Weather (Walls); Boys Will Be Boys (Beaudine); Foreign Affairs (Walls)

1936 Jack of All Trades (Stevenson and Hulbert); Tudor Rose (Stevenson); The Man Who Changed His Mind (Stevenson); Where There’s a Will (Beaudine); Everybody Dance (Reiner); All In (Varnel); Windbag the Sailor (Beaudine) (co)

1937 Good Morning, Boys (Varnel); OK for Sound (Varnel); Said O’Reilly to McNab (Beaudine); Dr. Syn (Neill); Oh Mr. Porter! (Varnel); Bank Holiday (Reed)

1938 The Lady Vanishes (Hitchcock) (co); Owd Bob (Stevenson); Old Homes of the River (Vernal); Hey, Hey, USA (Varnel); Convict 99 (Varnel); Alf’s Button Afloat (Varnel)

1939 A Girl Must Live (Reed)

1940 Night Train to Munich (Reed)

1941 The Young Mr. Pitt (Reed); Charley’s Aunt (Forde); The Ghost Train (Forde); Kipps (Reed); Cottage to Let (Asquith); I Thank You (Varnel)

1942 Uncensored (Asquith); The Flemish Farm (Dell)

1943 The Lamp Still Burns (Elvey); Towny Pipit (Miles and Saunders)

1944 Don’t Take It to Heart (Dell); Waterloo Road (Gilliat)

1946 Beware of Pity (Elvey)

1947 Hungry Hill (Hurst); The October Man (Baker)
1948  The Mark of Cain (Hurst); Escape (Mankiewicz)
1949  Give Us This Day (Dmytryk)
1950  Morning Departure (Baker); Highly Dangerous (Baker)
1951  High Treason (Bouling); Hunted (Crichton)
1952  Something Money Can’t Buy (Jackson); The Long Memory (Hamer); Single-Handed (Bouling)
1953  Trouble in Store (Carstairs); Hell below Zero (Robson); The Black Knight (Garnett)
1954  The Colditz Story (Hamilton); Up to His Neck (Carstairs)
1955  Value for Money (Annakin); Passage Home (Baker)
1956  House of Secrets (Green); Ill Met by Moonlight (Powell); A Town Like Alice (Lee)
1957  Robbery under Arms (Lee)
1958  A Night to Remember (Baker); Carry on Sergeant (G. Thomas)
1959  Carry on Nurse (G. Thomas); Operation Amsterdam (McCarthy); Carry on Teacher (G. Thomas); North West Frontier (Lee Thompson)
1960  Conspiracy of Hearts (R. Thomas)
1961  Victim (Deardeen); The Singer Not the Song (Baker)
1962  Life for Ruth (Deardeen); Tiara Tahiti (Kotchey)
1963  Doctor in Distress (R. Thomas)
1964  Carry on Spying (G. Thomas)
1965  The Amorous Adventures of Moll Flanders (Young)
1966  Deadlier Than the Male (R. Thomas); Rotten to the Core (Bouling)
1967  The Long Duel (Annakin)
1968  Carry On up the Khyber (G. Thomas)
1969  David Copperfield (Mann)
1970  Jane Eyre (Mann)
1972  Kidnapped (Mann)
1974  Gold (Hunt)

Publications

On VETCHINSKY: articles—

* * *

Alfred Hitchcock’s return to Britain in 1971 to direct Frenzy was marked by a banquet at Pinewood studios. Seated next to the director was his set designer from The Lady Vanishes (as “a reminder of old times,” publicists claimed). To Alex Vetchinsky the honour must have seemed ambiguous. Even though his employer Michael Balcon produced most of Hitchcock’s films of the 1930s, he had assigned Vetchinsky to none of them. While the more flamboyant Alfred Junge worked with innovators like Hitchcock and Michael Powell, Vetchinsky remained at Balcon’s low-budget Gainsborough studios, mostly ignored.

Balcon launched Gainsborough Films in 1924 on the cramped Famous Players lot in inner London’s Islington. Driven to keep up a supply of comedies, musicals and crime stories, many of them (under a deal with UFA’s Erich Pommer) copied from German or French originals but aimed at the American market, he recruited a directorial team which, while it included Victor Saville and Carol Reed, more often fell back on such minor talents as Marcel Varnel and failing American pros like William Beaudine who had learned to work quickly and cheaply in Depression Hollywood. It was a cheerless milieu. “Mickey Balcon had a Programme,” commented Michael Powell, “and when as a filmmaker you have a Programme, you have lost your soul.”

Vetchinsky joined Gainsborough at the age of 23 and within a year was designing sets. He did little else for the next two decades. A vital cog in the Balcon “Programme,” he provided at the rate of three or four a year the country mansions, Swiss finishing schools, Riviera casinos, London Art Deco nightclubs, trans-Atlantic liners and innumerable trains and stations demanded by the standard Gainsborough films. These were often comedy musicals (Sunshine Susie, Love on Wheels, Falling for You, Jack of All Trades) or farces featuring the vaudeville Crazy Gang and Will Hay, for whose most popular films, Good Morning, Boys and Oh Mr. Porter!, Vetchinsky provided the minimal sets.

The Lady Vanishes had already been started by American director Roy William Neill but cancelled after problems during Yugoslav location shooting. Needing to direct a film, to complete a two-picture contract, Hitchcock took over not only the script but also the available Gainsborough talent including Vetchinsky, who could by then have provided designs for the film’s trains, stations and snowbound Ruritanian hotel from stock. Nobody, least of all Vetchinsky, seems to have imagined the film would become the most successful of Hitchcock’s British career. Having designed the period smuggling melodrama Dr. Syn before The Lady Vanishes, Vetchinsky (who shared the art direction credit with Maurice Carter and Albert Jullion) moved on immediately afterwards to two Will Hays films, two Crazy Gang films, and Owd Bob, the lachrymose tale of a Scots shepherd and his dog.

All the same, Vetchinsky’s 1930s work does show ability and imagination. His sets for Tudor Rose, Robert Stevenson’s 1936 version of the life of Lady Jane Grey, were widely applauded, though his true style, more modern and naturalistic, is apparent in the shadowy lighthouse interiors of Michael Powell’s The Phantom Light. Powell made research expeditions to the Eddystone Light but Vetchinsky amplified reality with the cluttered, almost claustrophobic interiors of which he had become a master.

As his reputation increased Vetchinsky created authentically seedy seaside settings for Carol Reed’s Bank Holiday and an expressionistic attic dormitory for the apprentices in the same director’s Kipps, with a ceiling of slanting planes and bizarre angles that is among his finest work. For the next three decades he worked mainly on the big-budget films produced in Britain by American studios, especially 20th Century-Fox, for whom he designed Reed’s Napoléonic The Young Mr. Pitt. After the Second World War, however, he seldom collaborated with directors of Reed’s calibre.

North West Frontier and the Titanic story A Night to Remember were Edwardian dramas which submerged his talent for realism in the fussy period detail that signified in Hollywood’s eyes “a British Film.”

The Vetchinsky signature is more apparent in The October Man, a contemporary thriller with John Mills set mostly in a London suburban boarding house surrounded by a fog-shrouded park skillfully hinted at but never actually seen. Ironically Vetchinsky’s one film of this time with a major artist was Michael Powell’s Ill Met By Moonlight which takes place almost totally on Cretan hillsides. After Carry on Nurse in 1959, a farce which must have recalled the bad old Gainsborough days, his reputation revived with the 1974 thriller Gold. Set largely in the depths of a South African gold mine which, for the climax, is also flooded, Gold offered the sort of challenge to which someone trained in the hard school of Gainsborough could respond perfectly.

—John Baxter

VIERNY, Sacha

Cinematographer. Nationality: French. Born: Bois-le-Roi, 10 August 1919. Education: Attended IDHEC, 1946. Career: 1948—assistant director to André Berthomieu and Louis Daquin; also photographer on several documentaries in the 1950s; 1959—first film as cinematographer, Le Bel-âge; first of several films for Resnais, Hiroshima, mon amour. Awards: Catalanian International Film Festival Award, Best Cinematography, for The Cook, the Thief, His Wife and Her Lover, 1989; Catalanian International Film Festival Award, Best Cinematography, for The Baby of Macon, 1993; Catalanian International Film Festival Award, Best Cinematography, Best Film Festival Award, Best Cinematography, Art Film Festival Award, Best Cinematography, for The Pillow Book, 1996.

Films as Cinematographer (Features):

1959  Le Bel-âge (Kast);  Hiroshima, mon amour (Resnais);  Natercia (Kast)
1961  L'Année dernière à Marienbad (Last Year at Marienbad) (Resnais);  La Mortaise Saison des amours (Kast)
1962  Climats (Lorenzi)
1963  Muriel, ou le temps d'un retour (Resnais)
1964  Aimez-vous les femmes? (Léon)
1966  Belle de jour (Buñuel);  The Dance of the Heron (Rademaker);  La Guerre est finie (The War Is Over) (Resnais);  La Musica (Duras and Seban);  De Dans van de Reiger
1967  Caroline chérie (de la Patellière)
1968  Le Tatoué (Faraldo);  La Nuit des Balgares (Mitrani);  L’Anatomie d’un livre
1970  Bof! (Faraldo);  La Nuit des Balgares (Mitrani);  L’Anatomie d’un livre
1972  Les Granges brûlées (Chapot);  Le Moine (Kyroui)
1973  La Sainte Famille (Marchou)
1974  Stavisky (Resnais)
1975  Je suis Pierre Rivière (Lipinska)
1976  Le Diable dans la boîte (Lary)
1977  Baxter, Vera Baxter (Duras);  La Vocation suspendue (Suspended Vocation) (Ruiz);  Eclipse sur un ancien chemin vers Compostelle (Férié)
1978  Les Aventures de Holly and Wood (Pansard-Besson);  Le Fils puni (Collin);  L'Hypothèse du tableau volé (The Hypothesis of the Stolen Painting) (Ruiz);  La Bravade legendaire
1979  Le Chemin perdu (Moraz)
1980  Mon oncle d’Amérique (My American Uncle) (Resnais)
1981  Beau-Père (Blier)
1982  Letter from Siberia (Marker);  Les Trois Couronnes du matelot (The Sailor’s Three Crowns) (Ruiz)
1984  L’Avenir d’Emilie (The Future of Emily) (Sanders-Brahms);  L’Amour à mort (Love unto Death) (Resnais);  Clash (Delpard);  La Femme publique (Zalawski);  Flugel und Fellein
1986  A Zed and Two Noughts (Greenaway)
1987  The Belly of an Architect (Greenaway)
1988  Drowning By Numbers (Greenaway)
1989  The Cook, the Thief, His Wife and Her Lover (Greenaway)
1991  Prospero’s Books (Greenaway);  M Is for Man, Music, Mozart (Greenaway—for TV)
1992  Rosa (Greenaway)
1993  The Baby of Macon (Greenaway)
1996  The Pillow Book (Greenaway)
1998  Dormez, je le veux (Jouannet)
1999  8 1/2 Women (Greenaway)

Publications

By VIERNY: articles—

On VIERNY: articles—

Film Français (Paris), 22 April 1977.
Film Français (Paris), 1 March 1985.

* * *

France in the 1960s became the cradle of innovative cinematography as faster film stocks, lighter cameras, and a directorial community unafraid to bend or occasionally discard forever the old rules, leveled the Hollywood formalism that ruled post-war film. Among the great French lighting cameraman of that generation, Sacha Vierny has cut his own path. Never in sympathy with the shoot-and-see guerilla tactics of Raoul Coutard, unwilling to follow Jean Rabier into his world of gaudy primaries, more adventurous than the formal Henri Decaë, Vierny has worked so closely with directors, notably Alain Resnais and Peter Greenaway, that he is less a technician than their collaborator, replicating famous pre-war relationships between cameraman and director such as that of Boris Kaufmann and Jean Vigo.

Born in 1919, Vierny was in the 1946 class at the Institut des Haute Etudes Cinématographiques. In the 1950s, with French cinema closed to new talent, Vierny, Resnais, and their colleagues made documentaries under the government grant scheme. Vierny first worked for Resnais in 1956 as assistant to Ghislain Cloquet on the concentration camp documentary Nuit et brouillard. The following year he lit Resnais’s last short, Le Chant du styrene, a sponsored film about plastics manufacture turned on its head by Vierny’s dazzling visuals and a Raymond Queneau commentary written in alexandrines.

Vierny shot Chris Marker’s Lettre de Siberie, then Pierre Kast’s La Bel-âge, his first feature. Resnais had meanwhile found funding to film Marguerite Duras’s script of Hiroshima, mon amour, of which Vierny shot the French sections (the Japanese component is by Mishio Takahashi). Vierny’s style is already apparent in this film, with its painterly taste for darkness and texture, wide ranges of contrast between scenes, and considerable courage in working with low light sources. At first viewing, the film seemed to many critics disorganised, lacking formal photographic style, even carelessly underlit. Only later did its unifying intelligence become clear.

The film won the Palme d’Or at Cannes in 1959, establishing Resnais’s career along with that of Vierny and Duras and launching the Nouvelle Vague. Vierny went on to shoot L’Année dernière à Marienbad in 1961. The photography was no less chancy than on Hiroshima, but Vierny is philosophical about its technical drawbacks. “The fact that there are diffused images, that we sometimes shot on sound stock, that we are not really satisfied, that we think it’s a little hasty, a little botched; is that important?” Resnais had showed the cameraman old newspapers and silent films as examples of the effects he was aiming at. “That the whites flared and the blacks were limpid,” said Vierny. “That’s what Resnais asked of me.”

For the next two decades, Vierny shot every Resnais film except Je t’aime and Providence, establishing a rapport that Resnais found invaluable. Vierny is so quick, Resnais has commented, that simply the way the director looks through his viewfinder tells Vierny and his operator Philippe Brun which lens and framing he has chosen. Vierny also lit Belle de jour for Buñuel, Baxter, Vera Baxter for Marguerite Duras, and a variety of low-budget films, including The Hypothesis of the Stolen Painting and others for Paris-based Chilean Raúl Ruiz, which suggest his continuing interest in maverick filmmaking. Many of these, especially the Ruiz productions with their discontinuous narratives and use of colour effects and filters, have been sporadically brilliant, but they lack the intensity of Vierny’s best work. He did not enter into another long-term relationship with any director until his films with Peter Greenaway.

Fascinated with painting and anxious to instill some of the same values into his films as he finds in artists like Vermeer, Greenaway is a challenging collaborator for any lighting cameraman, particularly one like Vierny who shares his taste for saturated colours and low light. Their work together on films like Drowning By Numbers and The Cook, the Thief, His Wife and Her Lover, most of which are shot at night and involve intricate tracking shots through semidarkness, is rich and distinctive. At the same time, Vierny adapted with relative ease to the baroque extravagance of Greenaway’s Prospero’s Books, a flamboyant adaptation of Shakespeare’s The Tempest, which employed the new technology of digital manipulation to render the cinema image as a page of illuminated manuscript in constant and inventive change. Indeed, throughout the 1990s Vierny more than ably served as Greenaway’s house cinematographer. (His lone non-Greenaway credit from 1986’s A Zed and Two Noughts through to the end of the century is Irene Jouannet’s Dormez, je le veux.). His images in The Baby of Macon and The Pillow Book are especially resplendent; viewing the latter (the story of a young Japanese woman who develops an appetite for having her body painted) is equal to watching a moving canvas.

Vierny, however, rejects photographic richness for its own sake. “My satisfaction is that the photography is not remarked on too much for itself,” he has said. To underline his preference for atmosphere over formal perfection Vierny boasts that he uses neither viewfinder nor light meter. The light meter, he says, is “an instrument that measures essentially the quantities of light, and that doesn’t correspond to the feelings I have about my work. What is the use of measuring? The meter will only verify that it’s right.” Such confidence would be arrogant in any lighting cameraman who had not proved, as Vierny has, his absolute mastery of the art.

—John Baxter, updated by Rob Edelman

VINTON, Will

Animator. Nationality: American. Born: 1947 (some sources say 1948); McMinville, Oregon. Career: 1974—first film, Closed Mondays, using clay-animation; the Will Vinton Studios has also done commercials and special effects projects for live-action films. Awards: Academy Award for Closed Mondays, 1974.

Films as Animator:

1974 Closed Mondays
1976 Mountain Music; Martin the Cobbler
1978 Rip Van Winkle; Claymation (doc)
1979 Legacy; The Little Prince
1980 Dinosaur; A Christmas Gift
1981 The Diary
1982 The Creation; The Great Cognito
1985 Return to Oz (Murch) (special effects)
1986 The Adventures of Mark Twain
1987 Festival of Claymation; Claymation Christmas Celebration
1988 Meet the Raisins; The Story of the California Raisins (Bruce)
1990 Raisins Sold Out!
1991 Claymation Comedy of Horrors Show (Bruce) (exec pr)
1999 The PJs (Gustafson—series for TV) (+ exec pr)

Publications

By VINTON: articles—

On VINTON: articles—

Funnyworld (Hollywood), Spring 1983.
Banc-Titre (Paris), September 1983.
CinémAction (Conde-sur-Noireau), no. 51, April 1989.
Cinefantastique (New York), vol. 27, no. 7, 1996.

* * *

Traditionally, the earliest successful use of the medium of clay for animation-cinematography is credited to the American Eliot Noyes whose 1964 work Clay constitutes a rough sketch for the type of animation which Will Vinton was to make famous just a decade later with his award-winning short Closed Mondays. A contrast of the two films provides excellent insight into Vinton’s styles and structures.

Whereas Noyes’s Clay is best classified as “experimental animation,” being the total production of Noyes himself and consisting of a series of rough-hewn representational clay shapes (animals and abstract geometric forms) which metamorphose one-to-another without regard to any narrative or “story,” Vinton’s production—though likely influenced by Noyes’s experiments—is far more open to popular appreciation. Closed Mondays is at once more collaborative than Clay and more realistic, more highly representational in its sculpting of the various elements which mark its mobile mise-en-scénes. For while Closed Mondays echoes Clay in its employ of elaborate metamorphoses, its traditional narrative also emphasizes the classical continuity which became the hallmark of Disney’s realistic cel-animation. Within Closed Mondays’s narrative regard for cinematic scenes (with retained axis-lines, matched action, and clear presentation of diegetic time) are clay constructions which depict human beings, buildings, furniture, and the like in a manner that is charming in its realism. When a bust of the physicist Einstein appears, for example, it is doubtless Einstein, complete with old sweater, mustache, and long unkempt hair. Comaprably, Vinton’s movements are realistic—with the exception of the intrinsically surreal metamorphoses.

The story of Closed Mondays depicts a drunk who wanders into a museum to enjoy a solitary, sarcastic appreciation of various paintings and sculptures. The drunk’s walk, gestures, movements, and speech rest upon an aesthetic of extraordinary verisimilitude. Only his seemingly hallucinatory regards of paintings which “come to life,” or sculptures which transform from shape-to-shape by means of clay’s wonderful plastic resource for metamorphic meltings and reformations, stand in contradistinction to this same highly representational base.

Closed Mondays was Vinton’s first film, and proved so successful (winning an Academy Award) that it came to launch a unique company of clay animators who work under Vinton’s direction. They produced: Mountain Music which depicts rock musicians in conflict with natural environments and which culminates in a metamorphic transformation; Rip Van Winkle, based upon the original Washington Irving story; The Creation, a revision of the biblical Genesis; and The Great Cognito. An excellent insight into Vinton’s small company and realistic clay construction during this period is provided by the 17-minute documentary Claymation, produced at the Will Vinton Studios.

Through this “early period,” Vinton’s work tended toward short subjects (including some television public service announcements), but he began to enter the realm of features with his award-winning (special effects) work on Disney’s Return to Oz. This same transition led to the 1986 release of Vinton’s first feature, The Adventures of Mark Twain, designed—as is all of Vinton’s work—for both children and adult audiences. Using the actor James Whitmore’s voice for the character of Twain, the 90-minute feature retells both Twain’s life and a number of Twain’s classic tales, such as “The Celebrated Jumping Frog of Calaveras County.”

Finally, Vinton has realized equal success with popular television commercials as well as music videos. All these productions—from Twain through the commercials and Fogerty’s “Vanz Kant Danz”—are marked by Vinton’s careful realism-cum-magical metamorphoses.

—Edward S. Small

von BRANDENSTEIN, Patrizia

Films as Costume Designer:

1977 Between the Lines (J. Silver); Saturday Night Fever (Badham)
1982 A Little Sex (Paltrow)

Films as Production Designer:

1978 Girlfriends (Weill)
1979 Breaking Away (Yates)
1980 Tell Me a Riddle (L. Grant)
1981 Heartland (Pearce)
1983 Silkwood (Nichols); Touched (Flynn)
1984 Amadeus (Forman); Beat Street (Lathan)
1985 A Chorus Line (Attenborough)
1986 The Money Pit (Benjamin); No Mercy (Pearce)
1987 The Untouchables (De Palma)
1988 Betrayed (Costa-Gavras); Working Girl (Nichols)
1990 The Lemon Sisters (Chopra); Postcards from the Edge (Nichols); State of Grace (Joanou)
1991 Billy Bathgate (Benton)
1992 Leap of Faith (Pearce); Sneakers (Robinson)
1993 Six Degrees of Separation (Scenepsi)
1995 Just Cause (Glimcher); The Quick and the Dead (Raimi)
1996 The People vs. Larry Flint (Forman)
1998 Mercury Rising (Becker); A Simple Plan (S. Raimi)
1999 Witness Protection (Pearce—for TV); Man on the Moon (Forman)
2000 Shaft

Other Films:

1972 The Candidate (Ritchie) (set designer)
1975 Hester Street (J. Silver) (art d)
1981 Ragtime (Forman) (art d)

Publications

On VON BRANDENSTEIN: articles—

Film Comment (New York), March/April 1986.
Patrizia von Brandenstein made history in 1985 by becoming the first woman ever to win an Oscar for production design, for Milos Forman’s ornate, pictorial Amadeus. But even if she had never won an Oscar, or never worked on Amadeus, her versatility alone would rank her at the top of her profession. Her credits show an astonishing range of subjects, styles, and periods: what does the low-budget, breakdancing musical Beat Street have in common with the expensive plutonium-plant melodrama Silkwood, besides von Brandenstein? Believing that a production designer can become as typecast as actors and actresses, and despite receiving Academy recognition only for her big-budgeted period pieces (Ragtime, Amadeus, and The Untouchables), von Brandenstein makes a concerted effort to avoid repeating herself or latching onto familiar subjects. This openness to challenge and diversity complicates any analysis of von Brandenstein’s designing “style,” for she has worked in so many genres her achievements resist categorization. Although not every film she worked on was a success—critically or financially—the enthusiasm she brings to such disparate pictures as A Chorus Line and The Quick and the Dead is always visible: these films, however flawed, catch the eye.

Von Brandenstein won some instant notoriety in 1977 as costume designer on Saturday Night Fever: the white disco-dance outfit she created for John Travolta appeared on the cover of Newsweek, sparking a fad. But it was her association with Stuart Wurtzel, her production design mentor (and future husband) that established ties with director Milos Forman. As Wurtzel’s assistant on Hair, von Brandenstein worked well with Forman, and later served as art director on Ragtime, supervising construction of a nickelodeon and a lush rooftop garden that captured the film’s nostalgic tone: they are relics of a bygone era, still glowing and functional, as if dropped from a lush rooftop garden that captured the film’s nostalgic tone: they are relics of a bygone era, still glowing and functional, as if dropped from a time capsule. Her ability to establish historical verisimilitude dominates Ragtime and later films such as Amadeus, The Untouchables, and Billy Bathgate, where the visual design is so vivid and evocative the story and characters seem less interesting. For example, von Brandenstein and Forman scouted castles and palaces in Czechoslovakia to select appropriate sets for Amadeus, and even gained access to Prague’s Tyl Theatre, where Mozart conducted the premiere of Don Giovanni in 1787. With all this rich architecture as background scenery, the dynamics of Peter Shaffer’s stage play are somewhat stifled; the viewer is too busy gawking at the sets to concentrate on the vicious envy of F. Murray Abraham’s mediocre composer. Less problematic are The Untouchables and The Quick and the Dead, period films by flamboyant directors uninterested in the psychological dimensions of their characters: here, von Brandenstein’s bold re-creation of 1920s Chicago, and her hilarious rendering of a rotting, ramshackle western town match the films’ comic-book plots and directorial flourishes.

Some of her best work, however, is not pure re-creation. Films with contemporary settings can challenge von Brandenstein even more than period pieces. She believes that for every picture, a production designer’s main goal is to orchestrate visual material to establish the director’s idea of the story’s characters and central ideas, whatever the setting. Two films directed by Mike Nichols show her labors: In Silkwood, she conveys Karen Silkwood’s paranoia and feelings of entrapment by designing her home in the same featureless, pale-green hue as the plutonium plant where she works; only Drew, Karen’s free-wheeling lover, brings life to the place with his American flags and bright-red hot rod. In Postcards from the Edge, von Brandenstein plays illusion/reality games meant to represent the Hollywood heroine’s disorientation: a tree-lined background proves to be a set painting when a stagehand walks right through it; a building shifts behind Dennis Quaid as Meryl Streep drives away, but it is the building that is on wheels; and, most famously, Streep hangs off a ledge over moving traffic, an illusion broken when Streep lifts her hands and does not fall—both the ledge and the traffic are fake. The viewer reads these images subconsciously, hardly aware that von Brandenstein is building emotion with colors and giant props. The sets are an outgrowth of the characters’ personalities and conflicts, as in The Money Pit, where a crumbling mansion is a comic metaphor for a crumbling marriage.

Von Brandenstein also enjoys tricking an audience with realistic sets that, in terms of the plot and the characters, become absurd and unsettling. The first half of Costa-Gavras’s race-hate picture Betrayed depicts an underground network of para-military bigots as deceptively simple country boys fond of beer, horses, and barbecues, an extended conceit tailored to the subjective view of outsiders like ourselves. (As soon as the country boys are exposed as out-and-out racists, though, the picture loses tension and belabors the obvious Klan rallies and right-wing militia training exercises.) The eclectic Six Degrees of Separation extends the visual trickery to knock down social barriers: vastly different New York environments (penthouse, hovel, bookstore, police station) are inhabited by the same characters at various points, making everyone look slightly out of place. A dirt-poor young actress, for instance, barges into a high-priced apartment complex to meet a rich art dealer, who has to come downstairs to a grubby little boiler room—it is a double clash of cultures. The production design in Six Degrees achieves total authenticity, unlike the broad, expressionist Silkwood; but it is the authenticity of the locations that parodies the characters in their bizarre explorations. The art dealer would not be laughable if the boiler room did not look real.

A film designed by von Brandenstein is guaranteed to be visually interesting, and von Brandenstein herself continues to expand her territory. The Quick and the Dead is her first Western after 20 years of movie work, and her memorable, dilapidated designs for that film prove both her virtuosity and her readiness to take a risk.

—Ken Provencher

von DASSANOWSKY, Elfi

Nationality: Austrian/American. Born: Elfriede Maria Elisabeth Charlotte von Dassanowsky in Vienna, Austria, 2 February 1924; became citizen of the United States, 1962; now holds dual citizenship. Education: A child prodigy in piano, she was the youngest female student to be admitted to Vienna’s Hochschule für Musik und darstellende Kunst (Academy of Music and Performing Arts); studied piano with German concert pianist Emil von Sauer, voice with Paula Mark-Neusser, and acting with Eduard Volters. Family: Married L. Harris de Czonkas, 1953 (divorced); children: two sons (one deceased), one daughter. Career: Piano coach for actor Curd Jürgens... and director Karl Hartl, 1942; offered star contract by UFA Studios Berlin, 1944; opera debut as Susanna in Mozart’s The Marriage of Figaro, St. Pölten, Austria, 1946; co-founded Belvedere Film Studios, Vienna, 1946; guest appearances in opera and operetta, as concert singer, pianist, and actress in Austria and West Germany; broadcast announcer for Allied Forces Broadcasting and BBC, Vienna; creator and performer of musical recitals for Allied High Command, Vienna, 1947–49; administrator and casting director, Phoebus International Films, Hamburg, 1951–53; master classes in piano and voice in Europe and United States; Hollywood vocal coach and businesswoman, from 1962; reestablished Belvedere Film Productions, Los Angeles/Vienna, 1999. Awards: Order of Merit in Gold, Austria, 1991; Gold Medal of the City of Vienna, 1996; 2 February 1996 named Elfi von Dassanowsky Day by California Senate; honored by city of Los Angeles, 1996; UNESCO Mozart Medal, 1997; Austrian Film Archive Lifetime Achievement Medal, 1998; honorary title of professor granted by Austrian President, 1998; Women’s International Center Living Legacy Award, 2000. Address: c/o Belvedere Film Prod., 13052 Moorpark Street, Suite 203, Studio City, CA 91604, U.S.A.

Films as Producer:

1946 Symphonie in Salzburg (Diglas)
1947 Kunstschütze des Klosterneuburger Stiftes (Hanus); Die Glücksühle (The Mill of Good Fortune) (Hanus) (+ ro); Wer käst mit? (Glück muft Du haben auf dieser Welt) (Friese)
1948 Der Leberfleck (The Freckle) (Carl) (+ ro)
1949 Dr. Rosin (de Glahs); Märchen vom Glück (Traum vom Glück; Kiss Me Casanova) (de Glahs)

Other Films:

1942 Wen die Götter lieben (Mozart) (Hartl) (mus asst)
1943 Frauen sind keine Engel (Forst) (mus asst)
1948 The Mozart Story (Hartl) (mus asst)
1952 Walzer von Strauss (Waltz by Strauss) (Silbermann) (ro as narrator)
1998 Porträt von Elfi von Dassanowsky (Wessely—for TV) (ro)

Publications

By von DASSANOWSKY: articles—

“Märchen vom Glück am Bauermarkt—Erinnerungen an die Belvedere-Filme,” in Wiener Zeitung, 10 September 1999.

On von DASSANOWSKY: articles—

Whitesell, Heidi, “Woman in the Arts,” in German Life, April/May 1996.

Gertraud Steiner suggests in her 1996 interview with Elfi von Dassanowsky that she has been a multi-talent—film producer, opera singer, pianist, theater actress, cultural diplomat—not only because she could be but also because she had to be. Reinvention and innovation was the only road to creative power for the women of her generation. Von Dassanowsky has also maintained that it was precisely the lack of men and the sociocultural rupture in postwar Central Europe that allowed her to slip into a leadership role in film at age 23—as Austria’s second major female producer/studio head and as one of the handful in international cinema history to that time. Her background and her career show a distinct maverick spirit and a creative prowess that often ran counter to expectations and showed a strong sociopolitical conscience. Despite her classical beauty and dramatic voice which Nazi, Soviet, and Hollywood interests all attempted and failed to utilize, von Dassanowsky preferred to remain behind the camera and create on her own terms.

A musical prodigy in piano, von Dassanowsky entered Vienna’s famed Academy of Music at age fifteen in 1939, one year after the annexation of Austria by Nazi Germany. Her accomplishments allowed her to teach as a student and in 1942 she was hired by director Karl Hartl to instruct rising star Curd Jürgens in piano so he could perform on camera in the Mozart-biopic, Wen die Götter lieben. Although Jürgens ultimately switched instruments for the role, von Dassanowsky continued to coach him for his next film and she would again be his vocal trainer in Hollywood during the 1960s. Von Dassanowsky refused to join any Nazi youth or arts organizations and subsequently her early operatic and piano careers were halted for two years of intense labor service. In 1944 UFA Studios in Berlin offered her a film contract, hoping to create another glamorous musical star along the lines of Zarah Leander, who had fallen into political disfavor. Despite prompting from the Propaganda Ministry, von Dassanowsky rejected the offer but escaped repercussions because of the collapse of the Reich.

With the Allied occupation of Austria, von Dassanowsky launched her opera career, performed a wide range of roles in the theater, had a stint at radio broadcasting, and directed and performed in musical entertainment at the behest of the Allied High Command. She turned down a Soviet offer of ‘stardom’ and narrowly escaped a kidnapping attempt by Stalin’s forces. Her desire to help rebuild Austrian cinema—which was harpooned by Soviet control of the major studios—led her to join August Diglas and silent-film director Emmerich Hanus in founding Belvedere Film in Vienna in 1946. Not simply one of the many production companies that sprang up in Austria and West Germany in the era, Belvedere was conceived as a traditional studio, which despite its early limited space and lack of material support, discovered and cultivated technical and performance talent. Although the studio made only seven films, it was instrumental, as John Walker puts it in Halliwell’s Who’s Who in Movies (13th Ed.), in ‘kick starting’ postwar German-language film.

As producer responsible for creative decisions, von Dassanowsky attempted a re-vision of the Heimatfilm and the Viennese musical genres that had been tainted by Nazism. The early films, in which she also made appearances, were popular and but escaped critical attention. The last two productions, however, transcend the norms of the period. Dr. Rosin, the story of a gifted Viennese physician who is lost to the opium trade during the First World War, manages to evoke a half-dozen exotic locales in its back-lot production and predicts the on-location sweep of a David Lean epic. Märchen von Glück, the most ambitious of the studio’s productions, gave first roles to future European cinema and television stars Nadja Tiller, Gunther Philipp, and Evelyn Künneke, and fostered the comebacks of film icons O.W. Fischer and Maria Holst. The film, a satirical romance/musical in a fictional country, echoes Duck Soup and American screwball comedy, but its iconoclastic political and gender-role subtext was provocative, and the kaleidoscopic style points towards the all-star Anglo-American satire extravaganzas of the mid-1960s.

Von Dassanowsky claims that both Dr. Rosin and Märchen von Glück were actually directed by her co-producers, Emmerich Hanus and August Diglas, under the pseudonym Arthur de Glahs. During this period, von Dassanowsky also convinced young theater star Oskar Werner of his future in film, but before she could find him a suitable project, her former employer, Karl Hartl, cast him in Der Engel mit der Posaune (Angel with a Trumpet), which made Werner an international star. Although von Dassanowsky was responsible for the creative growth of the studio and encouraged experimentation, her warnings against over-expenditure went unheeded and ultimately Märchen von Glück’s star salaries and escalating budget ended Belvedere’s run. She joined a fledgling German film company in Hamburg in 1951, where she worked as an administrator, casting director, and finally star—of the company’s only documentary feature, now lost. She also brought together various contacts in the Allied Command in Vienna that helped pave the way for the international co-productions in German-language cinema.

By 1955, von Dassanowsky had settled in New York, and by 1962, she had reached Hollywood. Unfortunately, she could not find the leadership opportunities there that she had in Austria and West Germany in the 1940s and 1950s. Producer/director Otto Preminger, one of the interwar Austrian cinema exiles, encouraged her to go the starlet route. Frustrated by the sexism of the times, she instead returned to her musical talents as a vocal coach to film actors, and later became a businesswoman and promoter of Austrian-American cultural exchange. Her pioneering career attained international recognition in the 1990s, during which time became a writer and re-established Belvedere Films as a production company.

—Robert von Dassanowsky

VON HARBOU, Thea

Writer. Nationality: German. Born: Tauperlitz, 27 December 1888. Family: Married 1) the actor Rudolf Klein-Rogge (divorced); 2) the director Fritz Lang, 1924 (divorced 1934). Career: actress in Dusseldorf, 1906, Weimar, 1908–10, Chemnitz, 1911–12, and Aachen, 1913–14; novelist; 1920—first film script, Die heilige Simplizie; also wrote several scripts with Lang; joined Nazi party in the 1930s, and appointed official scriptwriter; directed two films in the 1930s. Died: In Berlin, 1 July 1954.

Films as Writer:

- 1920 Die heilige Simplizie (May); Das wandernde Bild (Wandernder Held) (Lang)
- 1921 Die Frauen von Gnadenstein (Dinesen); Kämpfende Herzen (Lang); Das indische Grabmal (The Indian Tomb) (May); Der müde Tod (Between Two Worlds; Beyond the Wall) (Lang); Der Leidensweg der Inge Krafft (May)
- 1922 Der brennende Acker ( Burning Soil) (Murnau); Dr. Mabuse, der Spieler (Dr. Mabuse, the Gambler) (Lang); Phantom (Murnau)
- 1923 Die Austreibung (Driven from Home) (Murnau); Die Prinzessin Sawarin (Guter)
- 1924 Die Finanzen des Grossherzogs (The Grand Duke’s Finances) (Murnau); Michael (Dreyer); Die Nibelungen (Lang—2 parts)
- 1925 Zur Chronik von Grieshusa (At the Grey House) (von Gerlach)
- 1927 Metropolis (Lang)
- 1928 Spione (Spies) (Lang)
- 1929 Die Frau im Mond (By Rocket to the Moon; The Woman in the Moon) (Lang)
- 1931 M (Lang)
- 1932 Das erste Recht des Kindes (Aus dem Tagebuch einer Frauenärztin) (Wendhausen)
- 1933 Das Testament des Dr. Mabuse (The Testament of Dr. Mabuse) (Lang); Der Läufer von Marathon (Dupont)
- 1934 Hanneles Himmelfahrt (+ d); Prinzessin Tourandot (Lamprecht); Was bin ich ohne Dich? (Rabenalt)
- 1935 Der alte und der junge König (Steinhoff); Ein idealer Gaute (Selpin); Ich war Jack Mortimer (Froelich); Der Mann mit der Pranke (van der Noss)
- 1936 Eine Frau ohne Bedeutung (A Woman of No Importance) (Steinhoff); Eskapade (Seine offizielle Frau) (Waschneck); Die unmögliche Frau (Meyer)
- 1937 Der Herrscher (The Ruler) (Harlan); Versprich mir nichts! (Liebeneiner); Mutterlied (Gallone); Der zerbrochene Krug (The Broken Jug) (Ucicky)
- 1938 Jugend (Youth) (Harlan); Verwachte Spuren (Harlan); Die Frau am Scheidewege (von Baky)
- 1939 Hurra! Ich bin Papa! (Hoffmann)
- 1940 Lauter Liebe (Rühmann); Wie konntest du, Veronika? (Habich)
- 1941 Annelie (Die Geschichte eines Lebens) (von Baky); Am Abend auf der Heide (von Alten)
- 1942 Mit den Augen einer Frau (Külb)
1943 Die Gattin (Jacoby); Gefährten meines Sommers (Buch)
1944 Eine Frau für drei Tage (Kirchhoff)
1948 Fahrt ins Glück (Engel—produced 1945); Via Mala (Die Strasse des Bösen) (von Baky—produced 1944)
1950 Es kommt ein Tag (Jugert); Erzfechter gesucht (Erfurth—produced 1944)
1951 Dr. Holl (Hansen)
1953 Dein Herz ist meine Heimat (Häussler)

Film as Director:
1934 Elisabeth und der Narr

Publications

By VON HARBOU: fiction—

Die nach uns kommen, Stuttgart, 1910.
Von Engeln und Teufelchen, Stuttgart, 1913.
Der Krieg and Die Frauen, Stuttgart, 1913.
Die Masken des Todes, Stuttgart, 1915.
Der unsterbliche Acker, Stuttgart, 1915.
Aus Abend und Morgen ein neuer Tag, Heilbronn, 1916.
Gold in Feuer, Stuttgart, 1916.
Das Mondscheinprinzesschen, Stuttgart, 1916.
Der belagerte Tempel, Berlin, 1917.
Das indische Grabmal, Berlin, 1917.
Adrian Drost und sein Land, Berlin, 1918.
Sonderbare Heilige, Berlin, 1919.
Das Nibelungenbuch, Munich, 1923.
Mann zwischen Frauen, Leipzig, 1927.
Die Insel der Unsterbliehen, Berlin, 1928.
Spione, Berlin, 1928, as The Spy, London, 1928.
Rocket to the Moon, New York, 1930.
Du bist unmöglich Jo, Berlin, 1931.
Aufblühender Lotos, Berlin, 1941.
Gartenstrasse 64, Berlin, 1952.

By VON HARBOU: other books—

Deutsche Frauen, Leipzig, 1914.
Die junge Wacht am Rhein, Stuttgart, 1915.
Die unheiletige Freifaltigkeit, Heilbronn, 1920.
Liebesbriefe aus St. Florin, Leipzig, 1935.

With Fritz Lang, Metropolis (script) in Avant-Scène (Paris), 1 December 1977.

On VON HARBOU: book—

On VON HARBOU: articles—

Mein Film (Vienna), 29 August 1952.
Filmblätter, 8 January 1954.
Chaplin (Stockholm), December 1968.

* * *

Thea Von Harbou worked as Fritz Lang’s principal scenarist from 1924 to 1932, when she split with Lang on political matters, and enthusiastically joined the Nazi Party. If we are to believe Fritz Lang’s later statements, made in the 1960s in America, it was Von Harbou who turned Lang in to Joseph Goebbels, the head of the Reich Propaganda Ministry.

Von Harbou’s work as a scenarist for Lang includes her scripts for Metropolis, By Rocket to the Moon, Dr. Mabuse, the Gambler, and Spies. She also worked with Murnau, Dreyer and Joe May. After writing the screenplay of Lang’s most anti-Nazi film, The Testament of Dr. Mabuse (in which Hitler’s words are put in the mouth of Dr. Mabuse, a criminal madman), Von Harbou made a fatal decision, deciding for the nihilistic vision of the Nazis over the humanistic if sometimes brooding realism of the best of Lang’s works. She worked continually up to her death on screen fare of decreasing distinction, ending her career with the screenplay for the mediocre film Dein Herz ist meine Heimat.

In all of Von Harbou’s screenplays, one can easily detect the strident notes of propaganda. Her work with Lang is the most restrained and fleshed-out of her long career, but, Lang later claimed that Von Harbou was, at her best, merely a journeyman screenwriter who lacked the ability to get inside the motivations of her characters. Because Von Harbou supported a regime which took a dim view of individualism or artistry without state direction, it is to be expected that her work under the Hitler regime, such as the screenplay for Jugend, a study of the Hitler Youth Movement, would fail as both propaganda and cinematic art.

Between 1945 and 1951 Von Harbou was prevented from working in the German cinema by order of the Nuremberg Tribunal, but clearly her major work, for better or worse, was long behind her. She also directed two films under the Nazis, Elisabeth und der Narr and Hannelies Himmelfahrt. Neither was a commercial or critical success. The same must be said of her work as a screenwriter between 1933 and 1945. That her resultant efforts were quickly forgotten by both the public and the critics seems an inescapable by-product of Von Harbou’s ardent espousal of the Nazi cause. For the researcher, prints of Von Harbou’s work during the Second World War are available for screening at the National Archive in Washington, D.C. Although Von Harbou was undoubtedly one of the key figures in the Expressionist movement of the 1920s, her work from 1937 to 1945, founded as it inevitably was on a doctrine of racial hatred, simply has no place in a thoughtful or caring society.

—Wheeler Winston Dixon
VORKAPICH, Slavko

Special Effects Technician and Director. Nationality: Yugoslav. Born: Slavko Vorkapic in Dobrna, 17 March 1895. Education: Belgrade, Budapest, and Paris. Military Service: Served in a student regiment during World War I. Career: 1920—settled in the United States; 1922—first film work as actor in Rex Ingram films; 1927—codirector of The Life and Death of a Hollywood Extra; then worked in providing montage sequences for RKO and, from 1933 to 1939, for MGM; 1949–51—head of film department, University of Southern California, Los Angeles; lectured in Europe in the 1950s, and artistic adviser, Avala Film Studios, Belgrade, and teacher, Belgrade Academy of Art; 1959–60—editor of TV series John Gunther’s High Road. Died: Of diabetes in Mijas, Spain, 20 October 1976.

Films as Director of Montage Sequences:

- 1930 Safety in Numbers (Scherzinger)
- 1931 Girls about Town (Cukor); I Take This Woman (co)
- 1933 No Other Woman (Ruben); Christopher Strong (Arzner); Turn Back the Clock (Selwyn); Dancing Lady (Leonard); The Last Gangster (Ludwig)
- 1934 Viva Villa! (Conway); Manhattan Melodrama (Van Dyke); Crime without Passion (Hecht and MacArthur); The President Vanishes (Strange Conspiracy) (Wellman)
- 1935 David Copperfield (Cukor)
- 1936 Romeo and Juliet (Cukor)
- 1937 The Good Earth (Franklin); Maytime (Leonard); The Firefly (Leonard); The Broadway Melody of 1938 (Del Ruth); The Last Gangster (Ludwig)
- 1938 Test Pilot (Fleming); Yellow Jack (Seitz); Three Comrades (Borzage); The Showshop Angel (Potter); Marie Antoinette (Van Dyke); Port of Seven Seas (Whale); Sweethearts (Van Dyke); Of Human Hearts (Brown); The Girl of the Golden West (Leonard)
- 1939 Idiot’s Delight (Brown); Mr. Smith Goes to Washington (Capra); Air Waves (short)
- 1940 The Howards of Virginia (The Tree of Liberty) (Lloyd)
- 1941 Meet John Doe (Capra)
- 1942 Moscow Strikes Back (Varlamov and Kopalin) (ed. of US version of Razgrom nemetzkih voisk pod Moskvoi)
- 1945 A Song to Remember (C. Vidor)

Films as Director (shorts):

- 1942 Private Smith of the U.S.A.; Conquer by the Clock; Moods of the Sea (co)
- 1943 Lieutenant Smith; Sailors All
- 1944 Mail Call
- 1945 New Americans; T.V.A.
- 1946 Fingal’s Cave
- 1947 Forest Murmurs

Films as Actor:

- 1922 The Prisoner of Zenda (Ingram); Trifling Woman (Black Orchid) (Ingram)
- 1923 Scaramouche (Ingram)

Other Films:

- 1948 Joan of Arc (Fleming—full-length) (assoc d)
- 1955 Hanka (d + co-sc, ed—full-length)
- 1961 The Mask (The Eyes of Hell) (Roffman—full-length) (co-sc)

Publications

By VORKAPICH: articles—

- Film Culture (New York), Fall 1965.

On VORKAPICH: books—

On VORKAPICH: articles—

- Farber, Stephen, in Film Comment (New York), September 1972.

* * *

To today’s audiences, brought up on high-speed editing and slick narrative elisions, the pace of classic 1930s Hollywood cinema can sometimes seem ponderous. Events are too explained, too paced-out—except when, about mid-way through certain films, the action abruptly slips into a montage sequence like a sedately-flowing stream suddenly diving into a narrow canyon. Adagio turns to presto: whole pages of dull exposition are eliminated as, in a cascade of images often lasting less than a minute, months or years hurtle past, thousands of miles are traversed by road or rail, the fortunes of the hero (or of whole empires) rise or fall. The inventor and master of this telescoping technique was Slavko Vorkapich, cinema’s first-ever montage editor.

After studying to be a painter, Vorkapich began his film career acting in minor roles (and working on dissolves) for Rex Ingram, whose rhapsodic imagery may have influenced the young extra. But the chief influences on the work that brought him to fame, the experimental short The Life and Death of 9413, a Hollywood Extra, were those of German expressionism and the Russian school of montage. Reputedly made on a kitchen table for $96, in collaboration with Robert Florey and Gregg Toland, this was the first experimental film to gain wide distribution in the USA and Vorkapich, who had edited it as well as codirecting, found himself in demand in Hollywood as a master of the latest in editing techniques.

Hired by Paramount, and later by RKO and MGM, to construct what were initially called ‘‘transition sequences’’ in feature films, Vorkapich rapidly developed a technique of his own that owed little to the classic theories of the Soviet filmmakers. Where Eisenstein set out to create a dialectic through contrasted images, and Pudovkin’s ‘‘linkages’’ aimed at guiding the thoughts and emotions of the viewer, Vorkapich’s ‘‘symphonies of visual movement,’’ as he called them, were chiefly designed to advance the story as rapidly and vividly as possible. These sequences, with their headlong, seemingly unstoppable pace, were especially well suited to depicting cataclysms both natural and man-made: the collapse of Wall Street in an unstoppable pace, were especially well suited to depicting cataclysms both natural and man-made: the collapse of Wall Street in 1929, the outbreak of the Mexican Revolution in 1910, the invasions of New York to seize at random upon their victims; when they emerged from a drop of her blood as it falls in slow-motion and wheel vengefully out into the night, feasting their eyes on the violence of the city.

Much of the time, though, Vorkapich’s work found itself incongruously spliced into films with which, in terms of style and mood, it had little or nothing in common. His montages feature in four films as Animator:

VUKOTIĆ

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>A Big Rally (co)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>How Kico Was Born</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>The Enchanted Castle in Dudinci</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>The Playful Robot (The Disobedient Robot); The Magic Catalogue</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1957</td>
<td>Cowboy Jimmie; Carobni zvuci (The Magic Sounds)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1958</td>
<td>Abracadabra; Osvetni (Revenger); Veliki strah (The Great Fear); Koncert za masinsku pusku (Concerto for Sub-Machine Gun)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1959</td>
<td>Krava na mjescu (The Cow on the Moon); My Tail’s My Ticket; All the Drawings of the Town</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>Piccolo; 1001 Drawings</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1961</td>
<td>Ersatz; The Lion Tamer; A Doll</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1962</td>
<td>Play</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>Astronauts</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1964</td>
<td>A Visit from Space; Put oko svijeta (Trip around the World) (Jovanovic) (animation sequences)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1966</td>
<td>Sedmi kontinent (The Seventh Continent) (+ co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1967</td>
<td>Man and His World; Time</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1968</td>
<td>A Stain on the Conscience; Opera Cordis; Gorilla’s Dance</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1969</td>
<td>OTC</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1970</td>
<td>Ars Gratia Artis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1971</td>
<td>Flight 54321; Maternity Hospital</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1974</td>
<td>Gabecziana</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Remember. Thereafter he withdrew into academia, taking up a teaching post at the University of Southern California. In the 1950s, he returned for a while to his native Yugoslavia, where he taught at the Belgrade Academy, acted as artistic adviser at the Avala Film Studios and directed his sole feature film, Hanca. Towards the end of his life, Vorkapich gave a series of public lectures expounding his theory of film as an autonomous visual language. They attracted large and prestigious audiences, not least for Vorkapich’s iconoclastic readiness to lambaste some of the most revered names of cinema (Eisenstein, Ford, Bergman) for what he saw as technical incompetence. For a while, he was considered one of the great film theoreticians, though since his death his reputation has faded. But his influence remains strong on mainstream Hollywood editing and narrative techniques, both directly via his montage-editor successors like Peter Ballbusch and Don Siegel, and more widely on editors and cinematographers in general. To a large extent, those same slick, well-oiled narrative conventions that today’s audience take so much for granted can be traced back to Vorkapich’s trailblazing work.

—Philip Kemp

VUKOTIĆ, Dušan

Animator. Nationality: Yugoslav. Born: Bileca, 1927. Education: Studied architecture in Zagreb. Career: Cartoonist for Kerempuh magazine; 1950—first animated film, A Big Rally; 1951–52—worked at Duga Film until its collapse; formed animation company with several colleagues that became Zagreb Film, 1956. Awards: Academy Award for Ersatz, 1961. Died: 8 July 1998, in Zagreb, Croatia, of natural causes.
Dušan Vukotić is an important animator and co-founder of the widely acclaimed Zagreb Film Studio. Known throughout the world as the “Zagreb School,” the Yugoslavian animation company achieved fame in the 1960s for its political satire expressed through visual experimentation. Vukotić played a significant role in establishing the structure and aesthetic direction of the Zagreb Studio styles.

Vukotić began his animation career shortly after World War II when he collaborated with other artists on an animated cartoon commemorating Yugoslavia’s break from the Soviet bloc, A Big Rally. The artists involved in this project had all met working on the satirical magazine Kerempuh, a popular publication which employed young writers and artists (Vukotić himself had been trained as an architect). Using old American cartoons as a guide, the group was so successful in their first effort that they were able to start an animation studio, Duga Film.

The Duga Film studio employed a staff of approximately 100 young artists in four animation units modeled after the Walt Disney studio as well as the Disney aesthetic. Between 1951 and 1952, Vukotić worked at Duga and developed a highly individualistic style of animation. Within the company, he led a rival movement away from anthropomorphic imitation, naturalistic movement, and costly full-animation processes. When, in 1952, Duga closed the studio because it was not economically efficient, Vukotić and others (including Nikola Kostelac, Zlatko Bourek, Aleksandar Marks, and Boris Kolar) left to form an animation company for advertising films.

The success of the new company relied upon the importance of reduced animation. Requiring far fewer animation cells—or drawn frames—for each cartoon, reduced animation was less expensive, quicker, and aesthetically more radical than the full-animation technique of drawing or painting every individual frame in order to achieve the illusion of smooth, naturalistic movement. Influenced by Jiří Trnka’s films for their nationalist character as well as by the United Productions of America cartoons that employed streamlined graphics and reduced animation, Vukotić developed a style dependent on minimalized, abstract graphics and upbeat tempos. Freed from anthropomorphic limitations and realistic imitation, the films that Vukotić directed had both a contemporary look and topical subject matter.

Between 1955 and 1958, the new animation company took shape both legally and aesthetically as the Zagreb Film Studio. In 1956 Vukotić directed the studio’s first attempt at story animation (The Playful Robot), and in 1958 the company received important international recognition at the Oberhausen, Cannes, and Venice festivals. Vukotić continued the practice that he learned at Kerempuh of employing young writers, architects, sculptors, and painters so that the films assumed important influences from the graphic arts and maintained a vanguard aesthetic quality.

Vukotić’s own oeuvre is highly eclectic. His earliest Zagreb cartoons were highly successful satires of American movie genres: Cowboy Jimmie, The Great Fear, and Concerto for Sub-Machine Gun. Piccolo, which Vukotić directed, designed, and animated himself, was among the first in a wave of Zagreb cartoons that reflected Vukotić’s strongly held belief in auteurism and individual style. In the late 1960s Vukotić experimented with live-action combined with animation in such films as Ars Gratia Artis, a satire on contemporary art and on general relationships between an individual and the masses. In addition to winning many international animation awards, Vukotić was the first artist to receive an Academy Award for a cartoon produced outside the United States, Ersatz.

—Lauren Rabinovitz
WAGNER, Fritz Arno

Films as Cinematographer:

1919  Der Galeerensträfling (co)
1920  Arme Violetta (The Red Peacock) (Stein); Die Geschlossene Kette (Stein); Das Martyrium (Stein); Das Skelett des Herrn Markutius (Janson)
1921  Der müde Tod (Between Two Worlds) (Lang) (co); Schloss Vogelöld (The Haunted Castle) (Murnau) (co); Nachbesuch in der Northernbank (Grune); Pariserinnen (Lasko); Das Spiel mit dem Feuer (Wiene and Kroll)
1922  Der brennende Acker ( Burning Soil) (Murnau) (co); Nosferatu (Nosferatu the Vampire) (Murnau) (co); Schatten (Warning Shadows) (Robison); Bardame (Guter); Der Graf von Essex (Ferner); Das hohe Lied der Liebe (Schall); Lebensunger (Guter); Der Ruf des Schicksals (Guter)
1923  Der Grossindustrielle (Kaufman); Die Magyarenfürstin (Funck); Zwischen Abends und Morgens (Robison)
1924  Der Sprung ins Leben (Guter)
1925  Zur Chronik von Grieshuus (At the Grey House) (von Gerlach) (co); Das Fräulein vom Amt (Schwarz); Pietro der Korsar (Peter the Pirate) (Robison)
1926  Die drei Kuckucksuhen (Mendes); Liebeshandel (Speyer); Vater werden ist nicht schwer... (Schönfelder)
1927  Am Rande der Welt (Grune); Eine DuBarry von Heute (A Modern DuBarry) (Z. Korda); Der Liebe der Jeanne Ney (The Love of Jeanne Ney) (Pabst) (co)
1928  Das letzte Fort (Bernaldi); Marquis d’Eon, der Spion der Pompadour (Grune); Waterloo (Grune); Spione (Spies) (Lang)
1929  Napoleon à Sainte-Hélène (Pick); Wenn du einmal dein Herz verschenkenst (Guter)
1930  Brand in der Oper (Froelich); Dolly macht Karriere (Litvak); Die Jagd nach dem Glück (Running after Luck) (Gliese and Koch); Skandal um Eva (Scandalous Eva) (Pabst); Westfront 1918 (Comrades of 1918) (Pabst) (co)
1931  M (Mörder unter uns) (Lang); Ronny (Schünzel); Kameradschaft (Comradeship) (Pabst) (co); Die Dreigroschenoper (The Threepenny Opera; The Beggar’s Opera) (Pabst)
1932  Es wird schon wieder besser (Gerron); Das Lied einer Nacht (Litvak); Das schöne Abenteuer (Schünzel)
1933  Das Testament des Dr. Mabuse (The Testament of Dr. Mabuse) (Lang) (co); Flüchtlinge (Ucicky); Die Nacht der grossen Liebe (von Bolvary); Das Schloss im Süden (von Boluntary); Spione am Werk (Lamprecht)
1934  Liebe, Tod, und Teufel (Hilpert and Steinbicker); Ein Mann will nach Deutschland (Wegener); Prinzessin Turandot (Lamprecht); Spiel mit dem Feuer (Robert)
1935  Amphitryon (Schünzel); Schwarze Rosen (Martin)
1936  Savoy-Hotel 217 (Ucicky); Unter heissem Himmel (Ucicky)
1937  Der Mann, der Sherlock Holmes war (Hartl); Tango notturno (Kirchhoff); Der zerbrochene Krug (Ucicky)
1938  Das Mädchen mit dem guten Ruf (Schweikart); Schatten über St. Pauli (Kirchhoff)
1939  Ein hoffungsloser Fall (Engel); Der Vierte kommt nicht (Kimmich); Robert Koch, der Bekämpfer des Todes (Steinhoff)
1940  Aus erster Ehe (Verhoeven); Feinde (Touriansky); Friedrich Schiller (Maisch); Der Fuchs von Glenarvon (Kimmich)
1941  Ohm Krüger (Steinhoff); Was geschah in dieser Nacht (Lingen)
1942  Die Entlassung (Liebeneiner); Der Fall Rainer (Verhoeven)
1943  Altes Herz wird wieder Jung (Engel); Ein glücklicher Mensch (Verhoeven); Herr Sanders lebt gefährlich (Stemmle); Lache Bajazzo (Hainsch); Ich werde dich auf Händen tragen (Hoffmann)
1945  Das kleine Hofkonzert (Verhoeven); Meine Herren Söhne (Stemmle)
1949  Die Brücke (The Bridge) (Pohl); Mädchen hinter gittern (Braun)
1950  Frauenarzt Dr. Prätorius (Goetz and Gillmann)
1952  I April 2000 (Liebeneiner)
1954  Heideschulmeister Uwe Karsten (Deppe)
1955  Hotel Adlon (von Baky)
1956  Hochzeit auf Immenhof (von Collande)
1957  Ferien auf Immenhof (Leitner)
1958  Das Czardas-König (Philipp)

Publications

By WAGNER: articles—

Film Art (London), Summer 1934.
“I Believe in the Sound Film,” in Film Art (London), vol. 3, no. 8, 1936.
WAKHÉVITCH

On WAGNER: articles—

Kosmorama (Copenhagen), no. 39, 1958.
Filme (Berlin), May-June 1981.

* * *

Fritz Arno Wagner is responsible for photographing some of the most iconographic images in German cinema from 1919 to 1933: Max Schreck’s Nosferatu looming over a ship’s hold, talons extended; Peter Lorre’s child murderer in M, cowering in a storeroom; Rudolf Forster’s Mackie Messer in Die Dreigroschenoper, surrounded by prostitutes and observed by a fin-de-siècle statue of a negress. Except for Karl Freund, no other cameraman of the period achieved Wagner’s level of versatility and technical expertise. His collaborations with G.W. Pabst, Fritz Lang and F.W. Murnau are a virtual catalog of the expressive potential of the cinematographer’s art, from Expressionist Stimmung to documentary realism. Stimmung is the operative word Lotte Eisner coined to describe the mood or atmosphere evoked by many films of the German silent era—brooding and introspective in tone, illuminated by pools or shafts of light, the total effect reflecting the characters’ states of mind. Wagner’s most extreme contribution to this genre was Robinson’s Warning Shadows, in which a conjurer releases the repressed unconscious desires of the protagonists, who act out their fantasies in silhouette, shadow, or double exposure.

Ironically, the most obtrusive of Wagner’s photographic contributions to Murnau’s celebrated Nosferatu are what have made portions of the film date badly: undercranking the camera provides an absurd effect when Nosferatu is loading his coffins, and the use of negative with no other illumination in M, which is marked as in the ray of Nosferatu’s presence through naturalistic means, as in the sweepingly atmospheric natural vistas during the monster’s voyage to Bremen by raft and ship. There is no denying the quasi-Expressionist treatment of the film’s early sequences (the visit to Nosferatu’s castle, with its alternating light and dark arches) and its climax (the vampire’s shadow advancing up the wall of the stairwell). Yet it is surprising how little noted it is that Nosferatu is as much a film of daytime and nature (and its perversion) as it is of darkness.

Despite his reputation as a cinematographer of Stimmung, it could be argued that the naturalistic or documentary aspect of Wagner’s work is more interesting when viewed today. In Pabst’s The Love of Jeanne Ney, Wagner photographed Paris as if the camera was discovering it for the first time, tracking through the city, reveling in the details of train stations and busy streets. Yet, in the same film, Pabst could call on Wagner to diffuse the image with the facility of a portrait photographer when the hero and heroine enter a church. Lang’s M permitted Wagner a synthesis of styles: on one hand, an objective study of police procedure, the camera sniffing out clues along with the protagonists; on the other hand, a shadowy emanation of the murderer’s state of mind as he is progressively cornered like a rat, in one shot circumscribed in both the camera frame and a garden trellis.

Pabst’s ‘‘Social Trilogy’’—Westfront 1918, Kameradschaft, and Die Dreigroschenoper—represent the pinnacles of Wagner’s art. His major achievement in these films is the expressive use of camera movement, so often difficult to facilitate during the early sound period. Wagner was lucky to work with collaborators who were equal to the formidable technical challenges Pabst posed in each film. The set designer Ernő Metzner worked closely with Wagner in devising apparatus to mask the movement of the camera in Pabst’s astonishing evocation of a mining disaster, Kameradschaft. The horror of fire and collapsing shafts in the claustrophobic confines of the mine were recreated with painstaking verisimilitude. Wagner’s camera seems to be everywhere, tracking in front of a fleeing worker or receding from a trio searching for survivors, the retreat gradually revealing more and more of Metzner’s artfully designed chaos. Similarly, Wagner’s camera evokes the horror of war in Westfront 1918, tracking alongside soldiers as they make their way from crater to crater. Ironically, Pabst’s controversial adaptation of Die Dreigroschenoper marked a return for Wagner to the techniques of Stimmung, André Andrejew’s stylized studio sets photographed in a manner recalling the gloomy visions of the 1920s. Camera movement seems less organic to this film, Pabst here more concerned with character than spectacle.

Wagner continued to work in Germany, producing competent, craftsmanlike work throughout the Second World War and up to his death in an automobile accident in 1958, but with the export or suppression of talent after 1933, opportunities became infrequent for the kind of visual experimentation that made his early work so innovative.

—Lee Tsiantis

WAKHÉVITCH, Georges

Films as Art Director:

1930 Tarakanova (Bernard) (asst)
1931 Baroud (Love in Morocco) (Ingram); Le Chanteur inconnu (Tourjansky)
1932 Les Bleus de l’amour (de Marguenat) (co); Plaisirs de Paris (Gréville); La Tête d’un homme (Duvivier)
1933 Ce cochon de Morin (Lacombe); Don Quichotte (Pabst) (co); L’Homme à l’Hispano (Epstein); L’Agoine des aigles (Richelle) (co); Quelqu’un a tué (Forrester) (co); Le Voyage de Mr. Perrichon (Tarride) (co)
1934 Madame Bovary (Renoir) (co); Les Filles de la concierge (J. Tourneur) (co); Un Tour de cochon (Tzipine) (co)
1935 La Kermesse héroïque (Carnival in Flanders) (Feyder) (co)
1936 Nitchevo (de Baroncelli) (co); A nous deux, Madame la vie (Mirande and Guissart)
1937
Feu! (de Baroncelli); Nostalgie (Tourjansky) (co); Le Temps des cerises (Le Chanois); Le Chanteur de minuit (Joannon); La Grande Illusion (Grand Illusion) (Renoir) (asst)

1938
La Marseillaise (Renoir) (co); Prison sans barreaux (Prison without Bars) (Moguy); La Maison du Malais (Chenal); La Belle Etoile (de Baroncelli) (co); Gibraltar (Ozez)

1939
Conflicts (Moguy); Louise (Gance); Le Dernier Tournant (Chenal); Pièges (Personal Column) (Sidomak); Sérénade (Boyer)

1940
Faut ce qu’il faut (Monsieur Bibi) (Pujol) (co)

1941
Le Club des soupirents (Glize); Le Soleil a toujours raison (Billon) (co); Mélodie pour toi (Rozier) (co)

1942
Les Visiteurs du soir (The Devil’s Envoys) (Carné) (co)

1943
La Vie de Bohême (L’Herbier); L’Eternel Retour (The Eternal Return) (Delannoy); Le Mort ne reçoit plus (Tarride); Béatrice devant le désir (de Marguenat); La Boîte aux rêves (Choux et Y. Allégret)

1944
Mademoiselle X (Billon)

1945
Vingt-quatre heures de perm’ (Cloche—produced 1940); L’Invité de l’île (Cloche)

1946
Sérénade aux nuages (Cayatte); Les Démons de l’aube (Y. Allégret); L’Homme au chapeau rond (Billon); Martin Roumagnac (Lacombe); La Danse de mort (Cravene) (co); Miroir (Lamy) (co)

1947
Ruy Blas (Billon); L’Aigle à deux têtes (The Eagle with Two Heads) (Cocuteau)

1948
Dédée d’Anvers (Dédée) (Y. Allégret); Now Barrabas (Now Barrabas Was a Robber . . . ) (Parry)

1949
Miquette et sa mère (Miquette) (Clouzet)

1950
L’Aigle rouge (Reinert)

1951
Barbe-Bleue (Bluebeard) (Christian-Jaque); Les Sept Péchés capitaux (The Seven Deadly Sins) (Rimi); The Medium (Menotti)

1952
Nez de cuir (Y. Allégret)

1953
The Beggar’s Opera (Brook); Mam’zelle Nitouche (Y. Allégret); Innocents in Paris (Parry); Le Chef et le diable (Josipovici)

1954
Ali Baba et les 40 voleurs (Ali Baba) (Jacques Becker)

1955
Don Juan (Berry)

1956
Si le roi savait ça (Canaille)

1957
Escapade (Habib); Tamango (Barry); Clar a et les méchants (André); Me and the Colonel (Glenville)

1958
Paris Holiday (Oswald); La Femme et le pantin (Duvivier); Jeux dangereux (Chenal) (co)

1959
Marie Octobre (Secret Meeting) (Duvivier); L’Ambitieuse (Y. Allégret)

1960
Les Collants noirs (Black Tights) (Young)

1961
King of Kings (Ray); Les Amours Célèbres (Boisrond)

1962
Le Crime ne paie pas (Crime Does Not Pay) (Oury)

1963
Shéhérazade (Gaspard-Huit); Peau de banane (Bana Peel) (Marcel Ophuls); Le Journal d’une femme de chambre (Diary of a Chambermaid) (Buñuel)

1964
Echappement libre (Backfire) (Jean Becker); Par un beau matin d’été (Deray)

1965
Les Fêtes galantes (Clair); Monnaie de singe (Jean Becker)

1966
Tendre voyou (Tender Scoundrel) (Jean Becker)

1967
Toutes folles du lui (Carbonnaux); Oscar (Molinaro); Carmen (von Karajan)

1968
Mayerling (Young)

1970
King Lear (Brook); I pagliacci (von Karajan)

1971
La Folie des grandeurs (Oury)

1978
Meetings with Remarkable Men (Brook)

1983
La Tragédie de Carmen (The Tragedy of Carmen) (Brook)

Films as Designer:

1932
Les Trois Mousquetaires (Diamant-Berger)

1955
Marianne de ma jeunesse (Duvivier)

Publications

By WAKHÉVITCH: book—

L’Envers des décors, Paris, 1977

By WAKHÉVITCH: articles—

Cinématographe (Paris), March 1982.

Positif (Paris), May 1982.

On Cocteau in Cinéma (Paris), March 1983

On WAKHÉVITCH: book—

On WAKHÉVITCH: articles—

Film Français (Paris), 4 February 1977.

Obituary in Cinématographe, no. 98, March 1984.

* * *

Before he entered films in the late 1920s, Georges Wakhévitch studied painting and the decorative arts, a training he put to good use as he designed costumes and sets for many stage, opera, and ballet productions, as well as important films. He would be as comfortable with gritty realism as with the fanciful, period studies for which he is best known. Combining design with solid constructions, he would design realistic sets creating illusions of reality that few others could accomplish. The 60 films he worked on are the mark of his refined personality and his taste for the baroque. His most characteristic films are Les Visiteurs du soir, L’Eternal Retour, Ruy Blas, L’Aigle à deux têtes, and Dédée d’Anvers.

Wakhévitch started his career as the assistant of Lazare Meerson and Serge Pimenoff, participating in such films as Le Chantier Inconnu (1931), L’Homme à l’Hispano (1933), and Ce Cochon de Morin (1933). His real debut, however, was Madame Bovary in 1934. He also worked with Jean Renoir on La Grande Illusion and La Marseillaise. Renoir’s La Grande Illusion was filmed in a documentary style and called for a look as realistic as possible. Wakhévitch was able to achieve perfect illusions of reality in this story of World War I prisoners caught in the dry rot of inaction. The film noir, Dédée d’Anvers, is another example of Wakhévitch’s use of realism. The tawdry streets and café bialudy of the Antwerp waterfront establish the film’s melancholy mood.

In contrast to these films are the French historical superproductions and period fantasies with which Wakhévitch is most associated. He applied his taste for the theatrical to make memorable contributions to such films as Pierre Chenal’s La Maison du Malais, Marcel L’Herbier’s La Vie de Bohème, Abel Gance’s Louise, and Marcel Carne’s Les Visiteurs du soir. Les Visiteurs du soir was set in the Middle Ages, and for this film, Wakhévitich, much to the horror of some critics, designed a new, white medieval castle. Louise was a film adaptation of the French opera set in springtime Paris.

Wakhévitich was often solicited by foreign directors. He designed The Beggar’s Opera and King Lear for Peter Brook, Mayerling for Terence Young, and King of Kings for Nicholas Ray. Mayerling, a 19th-century period piece set in Austria, called for the colorful dresses, furniture, and settings for which Wakhévitich is known. The Beggar’s Opera is another marriage between film and opera. In this film, Wakhévitich used impressive backgrounds and a restrained use of color. It included scenes of high and low life in London: Newgate Prison’s sordidness; gay and boisterous mobs in the streets; and flashing dance scenes in a tavern, sumptuous surroundings where the rich gambled. In short, it provided a kaleidoscope of colorful views of London. In Peter Brook’s King Lear, Wakhévitich used black-and-white film, which Brook thought would add to the overall theme of the story. To compliment the gray tones of the sand dunes and the stormy Danish seas, the interiors were shot with deep shadows that wrap the images in darkness.

Wakhévitich was active in films until the 1980s, finishing his career with two more Peter Brooks films, Meetings with Remarkable Men and La Tragédie de Carmen.

—Renee Ward

WALAS, Chris

Special Effects and Creature Makeup Artist. Nationality: American. Born: Chicago. Education: William Paterson College, New Jersey; Los Angeles City College. Career: 1978—began with Roger Corman producing and effects on such low-budget films as Piranha and Humanoids from the Deep; 1981—graduated to first-class productions with Raiders of the Lost Ark; 1984—first major credit on a major studio film with Gremlins; 1989—directorial debut with The Fly II; TV work: directed two episodes of Tales from the Crypt series. Awards: Academy Award, Best Makeup, for The Fly, 1986.

Films as Makeup/Creature-Effects Artist:

1978 Piranha (Dante); Screamers (The Island of the Fish Men); L’isola degli uomini Pesci (Martino and Miller)

1980 Humanoids from the Deep (Peeters); Galaxina (Sachs); Dragonslayer (Robbins)

1981 Scanners (Cronenberg); Raiders of the Lost Ark (Spielberg); Caveman (Gottlieb)

1983 Return of the Jedi (Marquand)

1984 Gremlins (Dante); Romancing the Stone (Zemeckis)

1985 Enemy Mine (Petersen)

1986 The Fly (Cronenberg)

1987 House II: The Second Story (Wiley)

1988 The Kiss (Densham); Child’s Play (Holland)

1990 Arachnophobia (F. Marshall); Look Who’s Talking Too (Heckerling)

1991 Naked Lunch (Cronenberg)

1995 Jade (Friedkin); Virtuosity (Leonard)

Films as Director:

1989 The Fly II

1992 The Vagrant

Publications

On WALAS: book—

On WALAS: articles—

* * *

Chris Walas’s work as special effects and makeup artist saw him move into feature filmmaking at a time when the visuals became both more innovative and more graphic, often even grisly. He has said that when he started his attitude was to “think of something nobody’s ever thought of before” and then do it.

Even as he did this, he attempted to take an organic approach, to make the makeup and effects logical to the situation. For instance, on his Academy Award-winning work on David Cronenberg’s The Fly, he sought to figure out just why the creature, played by actor Jeff Goldblum, would evolve physically in a certain manner—then try to create it with the makeup. The result in that case, while hardly for the weak of heart, clearly won over its audience and the award committee.

Beginning his creature work at a Halloween mask-making company in California in the late 1970s, Walas was able to work on the feature films that came to the company for makeup assistance. When he went out on his own, he found himself in the employ of ultra-low-budget icon Roger Corman, creating fish, severed limbs, and cuts.

Walas made his leap to major productions with Raiders of the Lost Ark. But he did not feel he had reached his potential until Gremlins blossomed from an independent film to a studio work during preproduction, making him responsible for an endless array of good and evil puppet creatures.

By the time it came time to make the sequel to The Fly, Walas was eager to branch out into direction. Unfortunately, the result—The Fly II—was poorly received by both critics and audiences. Critics often cited the makeup as seeming to take precedence over the story. Walas’s second stab at directing, The Vagrant, was a troubled production from the start, seeing a seemingly endless turnover in crew during shooting then barely receiving a release. The critics again savaged it and again pointed out that the special effects seemed much stronger than the story line.

At this juncture in his career, Walas has won accolades for the makeup effects he has created, bringing the whole art to a new level.
Nevertheless, he has stated a determination to find work as a film director, a role at which he has not yet found equal success.

—Allen Grant Richards

WALD, Jerry

Films as Producer:

- 1941
  - Navy Blues (Bacon) (+ co-sc); The Man Who Came to Dinner (Keighley)
- 1942
  - All through the Night (V. Sherman); Larceny, Inc. (Bacon); Jake Girl (Bernhardt); Across the Pacific (Huston); Desperate Journey (Walsh); George Washington Slept Here (Keighley)
- 1943
  - The Hard Way (V. Sherman) (+ co-sc); Action in the North Atlantic (Bacon) (+ co-sc); Background to Danger (Walsh)
- 1944
  - Destination Tokyo (Daves) (+ co-sc); In Our Time (V. Sherman) (+ co-sc); The Very Thought of You (Daves) (+ co-sc)
- 1945
  - Objective, Burma! (Walsh) (+ co-sc); Pride of the Marines (Daves); Mildred Pierce (Curtiz)
- 1946
  - Humoresque (Negulesco)
- 1947
  - Possessed (Bernhardt); The Unfaithful (V. Sherman) (+ co-sc); Dark Passage (Daves)
- 1948
  - To the Victor (Daves) (+ co-sc); Key Largo (Huston); Johnny Belinda (Negulesco)
- 1949
  - One Sunday Afternoon (Walsh); The Adventures of Don Juan (The New Adventures of Don Juan) (V. Sherman); John Loves Mary (Butler); Flamingo Road (Curtiz); Task Force (Daves) (+ co-sc); Always Leave Them Laughing (Del Ruth); The Inspector General (Koster)
- 1950
  - Young Man with a Horn (Curtiz); Perfect Strangers (Windust); The Damned Don’t Cry (V. Sherman) (+ co-sc); Caged (Cromwell) (+ co-sc); The Breaking Point (Curtiz); The Glass Menagerie (Rapper)
- 1951
  - Storm Warning (Heisler) (+ co-sc); Behave Yourself (Beck); The Blue Veil (Bernhardt)
- 1952
  - Clash by Night (F. Lang); The Luxy Men (Ray)
- 1954
  - Miss Sadie Thompson (Bernhardt)
- 1955
  - The Queen Bee (MacDougall)
- 1956
  - The Eddie Duchin Story (Sidney)
- 1957
  - An Affair to Remember (McCary); No Down Payment (Ritt); Peyton Place (Robson); Kiss Them for Me (Donen)
- 1958
  - The Long Hot Summer (Ritt); In Love and War (Dunne); Mardi Gras (Goulding); The Sound and the Fury (Ritt); The Best of Everything (Negulesco); Hound-Dog Man (Siegel); Beloved Infidel (H. King)
- 1960
  - The Story on Page One (Odets); Sons and Lovers (Cardiff); Let’s Make Love (Cukor)

Films as Writer:

- 1934
  - Twenty Million Sweethearts (Enright); Gift of Gab (Freund)
- 1935
  - Sweet Music (Green); Maybe It’s Love (McGann); Living on Velvet (Borzage); In Caliente (Bacon); Broadway Gondolier (Bacon); I Live for Love (Berkeley); Little Big Shot (Curtiz); Stars over Broadway (Keighley)
- 1936
  - Sons o’ Guns (Bacon); Sing Me a Love Song (Enright)
- 1937
  - Ready, Willing, and Able (Enright); Varsity Show (Keighley); Hollywood Hotel (Berkeley)
- 1938
  - Gold Diggers in Paris (Enright); Garden of the Moon (Berkeley); Brother Rat (Keighley); Hard to Get (Enright); Going Places (Enright)
- 1939
  - The Kid from Kokomo (Seiler); Naughty but Nice (Enright); On Your Toes (Enright); The Roaring Twenties (Walsh)
- 1940
  - Brother Rat and a Baby (Enright); Three Cheers for the Irish (Bacon); Flight Angels (Seiler); Torrid Zone (Keighley); They Drive by Night (Walsh)
- 1941
  - Million Dollar Baby (Bernhardt); Out of the Fog (Litvak); Manpower (Walsh)
- 1943
  - Air Force (Hawks) (co)
- 1944
  - Shine On, Harvest Moon (Butler) (co)

Jerry Wald
WALD WRITERS AND PRODUCTION ARTISTS, 4th EDITION

1961 Return to Peyton Place (J. Ferrer); Wild in the Country (Dunne); Hemingway’s Adventures of a Young Man (Ritt)
1962 Mr. Hobbs Takes a Vacation (Koster)
1963 The Stripper (Schaffner)

Films as Executive Producer:

1953 From Here to Eternity (Zinnemann); The Big Heat (F. Lang); Gun Fury (Walsh)
1954 Bad for Each Other (Rapper); It Should Happen to You (Cukor); Pushover (Quine); The Caine Mutiny (Dmytryk); Human Desire (F. Lang); Phffft! (Robson); They Rode West (Karlson)
1955 The Violent Men (Maté); Three for the Show (Potter); Cell 2455, Death Row (Sears); Tight Spot (Karlson); Five against the House (Karlson); The Long Gray Line (Ford); My Sister Eileen (Quine)
1956 The Last Frontier (A. Mann); Picnic (Logan); The Harder They Fall (Robson); Jubal (Daves); The Solid Gold Cadillac (Quine); You Can’t Run Away from It (Powell)

Publications

By WALD: book—

By WALD: article—

Films and Filming (London), September 1958.

On WALD: articles—

Jerry Wald’s ambition, his often unbridled creative drive, and his desire to make every picture in town—all at once—characterized this highly energetic writer-producer from his arrival in Hollywood in 1933 until his untimely death in 1962.

Born in Brooklyn, Wald began his writing career at the age of 19 by creating a radio column for the New York Graphic while studying journalism at New York University. He quickly advanced and soon persuaded Warner Bros. to produce a series of short subjects featuring radio stars called ‘‘Rambling ‘round Radio Row.’’ But it was a biographical article he ghostwrote for the crooner Russ Columbo that gave Wald his break in motion pictures. Warners bought the story, and signed Wald to collaborate on Twenty Million Sweethearts, featuring their rising musical star Dick Powell. Between 1934 and 1941, Wald worked in some capacity on some 30 pictures and was credited with several original stories. His most frequent cowriters were Julius Epstein (who later gained fame collaborating with his brother Philip) and the ex-magazine writer Richard Macaulay. During these early years, Wald’s films were primarily formula musicals (In Caliente, Ready, Willing, and Able, Hollywood Hotel) and light-weight comedies (Sons o’ Guns, Hard to Get, Brother Rat).

Despite Wald’s status as a writer, he desperately wanted to function as a producer. Even in the mid-1930s he was acting as an ‘‘idea’’ man—generating original story ideas or suggesting plot blendings or remakes—and depended on dedicated writers like Epstein or Macaulay to develop and execute the concepts. Towards the end of the decade, Wald’s pictures incorporated more dramatic material. Associations with the writer-producer Mark Hellinger led to credits on The Roaring Twenties, Torrid Zone, They Drive By Night, and Manpower, and steered Wald in the direction which would characterize many of his productions of the 1940s: Realism. Hellinger also provided Wald with his step up to associate producer on Navy Blues when in the middle of the picture Hellinger fell out with Jack Warner, left the studio, and Wald took over, finishing the production.

Once promoted to associate producer, Wald established himself with gritty dramas like The Hard Way and a series of popular war pictures, Across the Pacific, Action in the North Atlantic, Destination Tokyo, and Objective, Burma!. He was personally responsible for resurrecting Joan Crawford’s career after her dismissal from MGM by casting her in her Academy Award-winning role in Mildred Pierce; he sustained her comeback with a series of starring roles in Humoresque, Possessed, Flamingo Road, and The Damned Don’t Cry. He believed there was ‘‘no such thing as a washed-up star, only washed-up stories,’’ and proved it not only with Crawford but with Jane Wyman (Johnny Belinda), Claire Trevor (Key Largo), and Lana Turner (Peyton Place).

In contrast to a methodical, detail-oriented producer like David Selznick, Wald’s industrious, enterprising nature drove him to move quickly from one project to the next. Typically, he would initiate an idea, find the appropriate writer, director, and cast, switch to another project (or two) and then only become seriously involved again to promote the finished project. He was a voracious reader and never gave up his New York connections for fresh stories and new writers. He kept massive files with picture ideas and notebooks jammed with partially developed future projects, most of which he knew would never be realized. He ended his astonishingly prolific and long association with Warner Bros. in 1950, having produced an impressive list of critical and box office successes. In eight years, he had produced 30 more pictures, 12 of them based on his own stories, and prepared at least ten additional properties which were eventually turned over to other producers on the lot. He considered his pinnacle at Warners to be Johnny Belinda, a story of a deaf-mute girl which Jack Warner believed was too obscure to have box-office appeal. The film, however, not only won an Academy Award for Best Actress for Jane Wyman but also earned Wald the prestigious Irving G. Thalberg Award.

At RKO Wald ran an independent production company with his partner, the writer Norman Krasna, under studio-head Howard Hughes. After only two years, he moved again to become Harry Cohn’s vice president in charge of production at Columbia Pictures. He enjoyed another profitable tenure, this time at 20th Century-Fox where he formed Jerry Wald Productions, and produced another string of hits, beginning in 1957 with the blockbuster Peyton Place. Unlike his films at Warners, his Fox productions were lavish, often in CinemaScope and/or Technicolor. They covered everything from serious social topics (No Down Payment) to glossy biographies (Beloved Infidel) to escapist romance (An Affair to Remember).

Although Hollywood legend has it that Jerry Wald provided the model for Budd Schulberg’s famous character Sammy Glick in What Makes Sammy Run?, Wald’s body of work clearly indicates that he was more than just an ambitious showman who capitalized on the talents of others. A more accurate evaluation of the producer’s contribution is perhaps the sentiment attributed to Darryl F. Zanuck, “If it were possible, I’d have ten Jerry Walds working at the studio!”

—Joanne L. Yeck

WALKER, Joseph B.

Cinematographer. Nationality: American. Born: Denver, Colorado, 22 August 1892. Career: Worked as wireless telephone engineer and inventor; then film cameraman in middle 1910s; aerial cinematographer, and photographer of Red Cross documentaries during World War I; 1920—first feature film as cinematographer, Back to God’s Country; 1925–52—photographer for Columbia; involved in technical aspects of photography: invented the Double Exposure System, c. 1917, several zoom lenses (the earliest in 1929), Duomar Lens for motion picture cameras, 1931 (and for television cameras in the 1940s), the Variable Diffusion Device, 1931, and the Facial Make-Up Meter, 1941, as well as lightweight camera blimps and optical diffusion techniques. Award: Gordon Sawyer Award, 1980. Died: In Las Vegas, Nevada, 1 August 1985.

Films as Cinematographer:

1920 | Back to God’s Country (Shipman)
1921 | The Girl from God’s Country (Shipman and van Tuyle)
1923 | Danger (Elfelt); The Grub Stake (van Tuyle); Richard the Lion Hearted (Withy)
1924 | The Girl on the Stairs (Worthington); The Wise Virgin (Ingraham); No More Women (Ingraham); What Shall I Do? (Woods); Chalk Marks (Adolfi)
1925 | Let Women Alone (Powell); Clash of the Wolves (Smith); My Neighbor’s Wife (Geldert); Fighting Courage (Elfelt); The Pleasure Buyers (Withy); The North Star (Powell)
1926 | The Dixie Flyer (Hunt); Flying Fury (Hogan); Tentacles of the North (Chaudet)
1927 | Tarzan and the Golden Lion (McGowan); The Outlaw Dog (McGowan); The Baited Trap (Paton); Temporary Sheriff (Hatton); Great Mail Robbery (Seitz); Fire and Steel (Bracken) (co); Isle of Forgotten Women (Seitz); The Warning (Seitz); Death Valley (Powell); Shanghaied (R. Ince); The Flying U Ranch (de Lacy); College Hero (W. Lang); Aflame in the Sky (McGowan); The Tigress (Seitz); Stage Kisses (Kelly)
1928 | That Certain Thing (Capra); Modern Mothers (Rosen); After the Storm (Seitz); Virgin Lips (Clifton); Ransom (Seitz); Lady Raffles (Neill); Say It with Sables (Capra); Beware of Blondes (Seitz); Submarine (Capra); Court Martial (Seitz); Street of Illusion (Kenton); Driftwood (Cabanee); Nothing to Wear (Kenton); Restless Youth (Cabanee); Side Show (Kenton)
1929 | Object Alimony (Dunlap); Eternal Woman (McCarthy); Trial Marriage (Kenton); The Quiter (Henabery); Flight (Capra); Song of Love (Kenton)
1930 | Murder on the Roof (Seitz); Dirigible (Capra); Broadway Hoofers (Archambaud); Ladies of Leisure (Capra); Around the Corner (Glennon); Midnight Mystery (Seitz); Rain or Shine (Capra); Ladies Must Play (Cannon)
1931 | Subway Express (Newmeyer); The Miracle Woman (Capra); Fifty Fathoms Deep (Neill); Platinum Blonde (Capra)
1932 | Forbidden (Capra); Shopworn (Grinde); By Whose Hand? (Stoloff); American Madness (Capra); Virtue (Buzzell)
1933 | The Bitter Tea of General Yen (Capra); Air Hostess (Rogell); Below the Sea (Rogell); Lady for a Day (Capra)
1934 | It Happened One Night (Capra); The Lady Is Willing (Miller); One Night of Love (Schertzinger); Broadway Bill (Capra)
1935 | The Best Man Wins (Kenton); Let’s Live Tonight (Schertzinger); Eight Bells (Neill); Love Me Forever (Schertzinger); The Girl Friend (Buzzell); A Feather in Her Hat (Santell)
1936 | The Music Goes Around (Schertzinger); Mr. Deeds Goes to Town (Capra); Theodora Goes Wild (Boleslawsky)
1937 | When You’re in Love (Riskin); Lost Horizon (Capra); There Goes My Girl (Holmes); It Happened in Hollywood (Lachman); The Awful Truth (McCary)
1938 | The Joy of Living (Garnett); Start Cheering (Rogell); There’s That Woman Again (Hall); You Can’t Take It with You (Capra)
1939 | Only Angels Have Wings (Hawks); Mr. Smith Goes to Washington (Capra)
1940 | His Girl Friday (Hawks); Too Many Husbands (My Two Husbands) (Ruggles); He Stayed for Breakfast (Hall); Arizona (Ruggles) (co)
1941 This Thing Called Love (Hall); Penny Serenade (Stevens);
   Here Comes Mr. Jordan (Hall); You Belong to Me (Ruggles);
   Bedtime Story (Hall)
1942 They All Kissed the Bride (Hall); Tales of Manhattan (Duvivier);
   My Sister Eileen (Hall)
1943 A Night to Remember (Wallace); What’s Buzzin Cousin?
   (Barton); First Comes Courage (Arzner); What a Woman
   (Cummings)
1944 The Impatient Years (Cummings); Mr. Winkle Goes to War
   (Green); Together Again (C. Vidor)
1945 Roughly Speaking (Curtiz); She Wouldn’t Say Yes (Hall) 1946 Tars and Spurs (Green); The Jolson Story (Green); It’s a Wonderful Life (Capra)
1947 The Guilt of Janet Ames (Levin); The Velvet Touch (Gage)
1948 The Mating of Millie (Levin); The Dark Past (Maté)
1949 Mr. Soft Touch (Levin); Tell It to the Judge (Foster)
1950 Harriet Craig (V. Sherman); A Woman of Distinction (Buzzell);
   No Sad Songs for Me (Maté); Born Yesterday (Cukor);
   Never a Dull Moment (Marshall)
1951 The Mob (Parrish)
1952 The Marrying Kind (Cukor); Affair in Trinidad (V. Sherman)

Publications

By WALKER: articles—

‘‘Danger in God’s Country,’’ in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), May 1985.

By WALKER: book—

On WALKER: articles—

American Cinematographer (Hollywood), March 1982.

* * *

Joseph B. Walker’s career could have flourished in any of a number of directions. His pioneering work in the development of the wireless transmitter with Dr. Lee DeForest gave him a head start in the new world of radio broadcasting. His lifelong fascination with the workings of motion-picture cameras led him to put his name to an impressive list of inventions: the first zoom lens patent, a comparator exposure meter, a panoramic television camera, and many others. But it was as cinematographer on some 160 feature films that Walker made his mark.

After some years of freelancing as a newsreel photographer
Walker shot his first feature, Back to God’s Country, in 1919 on a formidable location near the Arctic Circle. For the next seven years he worked steadily at a variety of minor studios, occasionally with good directors like W. S. Van Dyke, Francis Ford, and George B.
Seitz. More often Walker photographed low-budget programmers.
His huge collection of camera lenses (and his intimate knowledge of their possibilities) made him invaluable to the directors of these quickies. Walker could, by changing lenses, shoot a close, medium, or long shot without moving the camera, thus saving precious time in shooting westerns like Fighting Courage or serials like Officer 444.

In 1927 Walker photographed The Warning, directed by Seitz, his first film at Columbia. Walker was to remain almost exclusively with this studio until his retirement in 1952. At the time, Columbia was the least of the majors; Walker, through his long association with Frank Capra, would help to change that.

Walker found Capra a most congenial collaborator, a director who could at once keep a tight rein on his artistic vision while allowing Walker remarkable experimental leeway. Though Walker was a master at composition and elaborate camera movement, his most memorable images come from his brilliant mastery of lighting: Barbara Stanwyck and David Manners by the fireside in The Miracle Woman; the delicate mists of the moonlit haystack scene in It Happened One Night; the shimmering, Baroque visions of The Bitter Tea of General
Yen; the stunning torchlight funeral in Lost Horizon.

Though Walker’s best work was with Capra, the cinematographer also had occasion to work with directors as diverse as Hawks (Only Angels Have Wings, His Girl Friday), Garnett (The Joy of Living), McCary (The Awful Truth) and Schertzinger (Love Me Forever, Let’s Live Tonight), George Stevens (Penny Serenade) and Alexander Hall (Here Comes Mr. Jordan). It’s difficult, in fact, to come up with many first-rate Columbia films of the era on which Walker did not work.

In his amiable and informative autobiography, The Light On Her Face, Walker quotes Columbia head Harry Cohn: ‘‘Y’know, there’s one thing that’s always made me curious about you. Practically every money-making picture we’ve had at Columbia, you’ve worked on it.
How do you account for that? And don’t tell me it’s the photography!
Photography doesn’t sell pictures!’’ Maybe not. But those silvery images stay in the mind long after the movies’ plots have faded from memory. The elegance of Walker’s cinematography even survives the indignities of being shrunk down and contrasted out for television, though the delicacy of his lighting suffers on video. Walker, like many another of his gifted peers who worked predominantly in black-and-white, seem sadly relegated to a medium for which their work was not designed and which does not have the sensitivity properly to display the beautiful and precious images it chews up as so much fodder. But should the viewer have the willingness and the opportunity to return to Walker’s films as they were originally intended—on 35 mm film—he or she will find that there were few more gifted practitioners of the art of cinematography.

—Frank Thompson

WALLIS, Hal B.

Chicago, Illinois, 14 September 1899. Family: Married 1) the actress
Louise Fazenda, 1927 (divorced); son: the producer Hal B. Wallis, Jr.;
Hal B. Wallis (right) with Dean Martin and Lizabeth Scott

2) the actress Martha Hyer. Career: Left school at 14, and worked as office boy and salesman for electric heating company; 1922—manager of Garrick film theatre, Los Angeles; 1923—joined Warner Bros. as assistant to head of publicity, then became head of publicity; 1928—made studio manager; 1928–31—production executive 1933–42—executive producer in charge of production; 1942—formed Hal Wallis Productions, releasing through Paramount and, after 1969, through Universal. Awards: Irving G. Thalberg Award, 1938, 1943; Academy Award for Casablanca, 1943. Died: In Rancho Mirage, California, 5 October 1986.

Films as Producer:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>The Dawn Patrol (Hawks); Sally (Dillon); Little Caesar (LeRoy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>Five Star Final (LeRoy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang (LeRoy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>Mystery of the Wax Museum (Curtiz); The World Changes (LeRoy); Gold Diggers of 1933 (LeRoy); Footlight Parade (Bacon); 42nd Street (Bacon)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>Flirtation Walk (Borzage)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>‘G’ Men (Keighley); Sweet Adeline (LeRoy); A Midsummer Night’s Dream (Reinhardt and Dieterle); Captain Blood (Curtiz)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>The Story of Louis Pasteur (Dieterle); Anthony Adverse (LeRoy); Green Pastures (Connelly and Keighley); Green Light (Borzage); The Charge of the Light Brigade (Curtiz); Stolen Holiday (Curtiz); God’s Country and the Woman (Keighley)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>Marked Woman (Bacon); Kid Galahad (Curtiz); The Life of Emile Zola (Dieterle); First Lady (Logan); That Certain Feeling (Goulding); Back in Circulation (Enright); It’s Love I’m After (Mayo); Confession (May); Call It a Day (Mayo); The Go Getter (Berkeley); The Prince and the Pauper (Keighley); Slim (Enright); Marry the Girl (McGann); The Perfect Specimen (Curtiz); Tovarich (Litvak) (co); Hollywood Hotel (Berkeley)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
| 1938 | A Slight Case of Murder (Bacon); Jezebel (Wyler) (co); The Adventures of Robin Hood (Curtiz and Keighley); Boy Meets Girl (Bacon); Four Daughters (Curtiz); The Sisters (Litvak); Brother Rat (Keighley); Swing Your Baby (Enright);
Love, Honor, and Behave (Logan); Gold Is Where You Find It (Curtiz); White Banners (Goulding); Gold Diggers in Paris (Enright); Cowboy from Brooklyn (Bacon); Hard to Get (Enright); Dawn Patrol (Goulding); Going Places (Enright)

1939
Dark Victory (Goulding); Juarez (Dieterle) (co); The Old Maid (Goulding) (co); The Roaring Twenties (Walsh) (co); Daughters Courageous (Curtiz); The Private Lives of Elizabeth and Essex (Curtiz) (co); They Made Me a Criminal (Berkeley); Wings of the Navy (Bacon); The Kid from Kokomo (Seiler) (co); Yes, My Darling Daughter (Keighley); We Are Not Alone (Goulding); A Child Is Born (Bacon)

1940
Dr. Ehrlich's Magic Bullet (Dieterle); Brother Orchid (Bacon) (co); Torrid Zone (Keighley); They Drive By Night (Walsh) (co); The Sea Hawk (Curtiz); A Dispatch from Reuters (Dieterle); The Letter (Wyler) (co); Four Wives (Curtiz); The Fighting 69th (Keighley); Brother Rat and a Baby (Enright) (co); Invisible Stripes (Bacon); Three Cheers for the Irish (Bacon); Virginia City (Curtiz); It All Came True (Seiler) (co); 'Til We Meet Again (Goulding); Saturday's Children (V. Sherman); All This, and Heaven Too (Litvak) (co); My Love Came Back (Bernhardt); No Time for Comedy (Keighley); City for Conquest (Litvak); Knute Rockne—All American (Bacon); Santa Fe Trail (Curtiz)

1941
High Sierra (Walsh) (co); The Sea Wolf (Curtiz); The Great Lie (Goulding) (co); Sergeant York (Hawks); The Maltese Falcon (Huston) (co); Out of the Fog (Litvak); Footsteps in the Dark (Bacon); The Wagon's Roll at Night (Enright); Affectionately Yours (Bacon); Shining Victory (Rapper); Million Dollar Baby (Barnhardt); Underground (V. Sherman); The Bride Came C.O.D. (Keighley); Manpower (Walsh) (co); Navy Blues (Bacon) (co); Dive Bomber (Curtiz); One Foot in Heaven (Rapper) (co); The Strawberry Blonde (Walsh); They Died With Their Boots On (Walsh)

1942
The Man Who Came to Dinner (Keighley) (co); Kings Row (Wood); Yankee Doodle Dandy (Curtiz); Now, Voyager (Rapper); Captains of the Clouds (Curtiz); Brother Orchid (Bacon); The Male Animal (Nugent); Larceny, Inc. (Bacon); Julie Girl (Bernhardt); In This Our Life (Huston); Desperate Journey (Walsh)

1943
Casablanca (Curtiz); Air Force (Hawks); Watch on the Rhine (Shumlin); Princess O'Rourke (Krasna); This Is the Army (Curtiz)

1944
Passage to Marseille (Curtiz)

1945
Love Letters (Dieterle); The Affairs of Susan (Seiter); You Came Along (Farrow); Saratoga Trunk (Wood)

1946
The Strange Love of Martha Ivers (Milestone); The Searching Wind (Dieterle); The Perfect Marriage (Allen)

1947
I Walk Alone (Haskin); Desert Fury (Allen)

1948
So Evil My Love (Allen); Sorry, Wrong Number (Litvak); The Accused (Dieterle)

1949
Rope of Sand (Dieterle); My Friend Irma (G. Marshall); File on Thelma Jordan (Siodmak)

1950
Paid in Full (Dieterle); The Furies (A. Mann); Dark City (Dieterle); My Friend Irma Goes West (Walker)

1951
September Affair (Dieterle); That's My Boy (Walker); Peking Express (Dieterle); Red Mountain (Dieterle); Sailor Beware (Walker); The Stoooge (Tashlin)

1952
Come Back Little Sheba (D. Mann); Jumping Jacks (Tashlin); Scared Stiff (Marshall)

1953
Cease Fire! (Crump); Money from Home (Marshall)

1954
About Mrs. Leslie (D. Mann); Three Ring Circus (Pevney)

1955
The Rose Tattoo (D. Mann)

1956
Artists and Models (Tashlin); The Rainmaker (Anthony); Hollywood or Bust (Tashlin)

1957
Gunfight at the O.K. Corral (J. Sturges); Loving You (Kanter); The Sad Sack (Marshall); Wild Is the Wind (Cukor)

1958
King Creole (Curtiz); Hot Spell (Daniel Mann)

1959
Last Train from Gun Hill (J. Sturges); Career (Anthony); Don't Give Up the Ship (Tashlin)

1960
G.I. Blues (Tashlin)

1961
All in a Night's Work (Anthony); Blue Hawaii (Tashlin); Summer and Smoke (Glenville)

1962
A Girl Named Tamiko (J. Sturges); Girls! Girls! Girls! (Tashlin)

1963
Wives and Lovers (Rich); Fun in Acapulco (Thorpe)

1964
Becket (Glenville); Roustabout (Rich)

1965
The Sons of Katie Elder (Hathaway); Boeing Boeing (Rich)

1966
Paradise—Hawaiian Style (Moore)

1967
Easy Come, Easy Go (Rich); Barefoot in the Park (Saks)

1968
5 Card Stud (Hathaway)

1969
True Grit (Hathaway); Anne of the Thousand Days (Jarrott)

1970
Norwood (Haley)

1971
Red Sky at Morning (Goldstone)

1972
Shoot Out (Hathaway); Mary, Queen of Scots (Jarrott); Follow Me (The Public Eye) (Reed)

1973
A Bequest to the Nation (The Nelson Affair) (Jones); The Don Is Dead (Fleis cher)

1975
Rooster Cogburn (Millar)

Publications

By WALLIS: articles—

Films and Filming (London), December 1969.
Cinéma (Paris), November 1970.
Still (London), May-June 1983.

On WALLIS: book—

On WALLIS: articles—

‘Wallis Issue’ of Dialogue on Film (Beverly Hills, California), March 1975.
Cinémagraphe (Paris), May 1984.
Obituary in Films and Filming (London), December 1986.
Film Comment (New York), July-August 1989.
Corliss, Richard, “14-Karat Oomph,” in Film Comment (New York),
Woodcock, J.M., “The Name Dropper,” in American Cinemeditor
(Encino), no. 1, 1990.
Edwards, Anne, “Hal Wallis: The Producer’s ‘Valley Farm,’” in Dolven, F., “Hal B. Wallis: The golden-arm producer,” in *Classic

* * *

Hal B. Wallis was one of the most important movie producers from the Golden Age of Hollywood filmmaking of the 1930s and 1940s. On one classic Warner Bros. movie after another Hal B. Wallis’ name is listed under the title: Warner’s studio boss, Jack L. Warner, was the brother in charge of the west coast studio, but surely his right-hand man, Hal Wallis, did most of the day to day work producing.

In the 1930s Wallis produced many of the classic genre films. Little Caesar, ‘G Men, and The Roaring Twenties defined the gangster form. There were few more honored films of the decade than
I Am a Fugitive from the Chain Gang, Anthony Adverse, and Jezebel.
Gold Diggers of 1933, Footlight Parade, 42nd Street, and Gold Diggers in Paris swung with music and dance. Captain Blood, The Charge of the Light Brigade, and The Adventures of Robin Hood defined what an adventure film should be.

Although film scholars have traditionally associated Wallis with his classic Warner period of the 1930s, he reached his creative peak at the studio in the early 1940s. Wallis produced a remarkable string of classic films: Sergeant York, The Maltese Falcon, High Sierra, The Bride Came C.O.D., The Strawberry Blond, Now, Voyager, Yankee Doodle Dandy, and Casablanca. But Wallis’ career was hardly over when he left Warner Bros. in 1944. He would remain a key force in the Hollywood film industry until 1975, when he produced his final film,
Rooster Cogburn, starring John Wayne in a sequel to yet another Wallis hit, the 1969 True Grit. In 1944 Wallis sought greater independence as a producer. Understandably he chaffed under the yoke provided by Jack L. Warner. He weighed several offers and went with Paramount. At Paramount Wallis’ career fell into four phases. In the first he continued producing genre films, in this case thrillers in the late 1940s and westerns during the early 1950s. But his career changed dramatically in 1956 with the release of Artists and Models, setting in motion a string of Jerry Lewis and Dean Martin comedies.
A third phase began in 1958 when Wallis began producing the predictable, but high-grossing films starring Elvis Presley. Few find these Elvis formula movies complex or sophisticated cinema, but they made money, lots of money. Indeed Blue Hawaii finished as the eleventh highest grossing film of all of 1962 according to Variety’s figures.

Wallis’ final period of filmmaking followed Elvis and lasted from 1964 to 1975. He is probably best remembered for making two very different types of films in this period. The first were westerns starring John Wayne including the aforementioned True Grit and Rooster Cogburn, as well as The Sons of Katie Elder. Far different were the tales of royalty, costume dramas which Wallis called in his autobiography his “royal histories.” These included the very successful
Becket, Anne of a Thousand Days, and Mary, Queen of Scots. Wallis was a consummate producer, taking project after project that both interested him and seemed destined to make a great deal of money. He skillfully flowed with the times, and in the process helped several major eras of Hollywood history. In nearly a half century he produced, coproduced, and/or supervised more than 400 films. Few individuals have been as successful as Hollywood producers; few have made a greater stamp in defining how Hollywood operated as a business.

—Douglas Gomery

WALTON, William

Composer. Nationality: British. Born: William Turner Walton in Oldham, Lancashire, 29 March 1902. Education: Attended Cathedral Choir School, Christ Church College, Oxford, sent down; lived with the Sitwell family for fifteen years. Family: Married Susana Gil Passo, 1946. Career: 1923—composed Facade, to poems by Edith Sitwell, other works include The Viola Concerto, 1929, Belshazzar’s Feast oratorio, 1931, coronation marches for King George VI and Queen Elizabeth II; 1935—composed first symphony; first film score, Escape Me Never. Died: On the island of Ischia, 8 March 1983.

Films as Composer/Musical Director:

1935  Escape Me Never (Czinner)
1936  As You Like It (Czinner)

William Walton
1941 Major Barbara (Pascal)
1942 The First of the Few (Howard); The Foreman Went to France (Frend); Next of Kin (Dickinson); Went the Day Well? (Cavalcanti)
1944 Henry V (Olivier)
1948 Hamlet (Olivier)
1955 Richard III (Olivier)
1969 “Battle in the Air” sequence of Battle of Britain (Hamilton)
1970 Three Sisters (Olivier)

Publications

On WALTON: books—

On WALTON: articles—

National Film Theatre booklet (London), July 1982.
Obituary in Variety (New York), 16 March 1983.
Séquences (Montreal), no. 112, April 1983.
Score (Lelystad, Netherlands), no. 75, June 1990 + filmo.
Segnocinema (Vicenza), May-June 1995.
Cineforum (Bergamo), October 1996.

* * *

William Walton was born in Oldham, Lancashire. His father was a choir-master and singing teacher and his mother had a fine contralto voice. By the age of 12 he was already composing music of his own and attended Christ Church Cathedral School in Oxford. He quickly made his name as a composer during the glittering 1920s and was friend and confidante of Siegfried Sassoon, Constant Lambert, George Gershwin, Sir Thomas Beecham and Diaghilev. All in all he composed the music to 14 films beginning in 1935 with a score for Escape Me Never, but he did not capture attention for his film work until the 1942 film The First of the Few with its famous “Prelude and Fugue for Spitfire.” What marked him out for special attention and acclaim were the scores he wrote for three of Laurence Olivier’s films, the most illustrious of which was for Henry V. It has been highly praised by music critics both as film music and as a concert suite in its own right. When the film was released in 1944, many music critics published detailed reviews of the score and extracts of it were presented at the Promenade concerts in 1945. Olivier’s enchanting and spectacular historical pageant version of Shakespeare’s patriotic epic is as memorable for Walton’s sumptuous and rousing music as it is for its magnificent acting, directing, photography, sets and costumes, and most especially for the stirring music for the French cavalry charge at Agincourt.

Walton’s second collaboration with Olivier on a Shakespeare adaptation—Hamlet—was once again completely interlocked with the director’s perception of it. The mime within a mime scene has the soundtrack devoted to Walton’s music. The third film with Olivier, Richard III, was remembered by Walton as “the fruit of mutual confidence and esteem.” His final collaboration with Olivier came in 1970 when he wrote the score for Three Sisters where the music has a distinctly mellow, autumnal and muted feel to it in keeping with the tragic dimensions of the play. The year before, Walton had written the music for the film Battle of Britain but the score was not considered commercial enough and in the end only a small part of the original score was used—the “Battle in the Air” sequence—and for many years United Artists refused to release the original score for performance in spite of anguished letters from Walton’s fans.

Walton is one of this century’s most celebrated British composers—he said of his contribution to cinema; “The value to a film of its musical score rests chiefly in the creation of mood, atmosphere, and the sense of period.” No other British composer has given greater value to the films he worked on.

—Sylvia Paskin

WANGER, Walter

Producer. Nationality: American. Born: Walter Feuchtwanger in San Francisco, California, 11 July 1894 (some sources give 16 October). Education: Attended Dartmouth College, Hanover, New Hampshire. Military Service: Served in Army Intelligence during World War I, and on President Wilson’s staff at Paris Peace Conference. Family: Married the actress Joan Bennett (second marriage), Wanger Writers and Production Artists, 4th Edition

WALTER WANGER 1941 Major Barbara (Pascal)
1942 The First of the Few (Howard); The Foreman Went to France (Frend); Next of Kin (Dickinson); Went the Day Well? (Cavalcanti)
1944 Henry V (Olivier)
1948 Hamlet (Olivier)
1955 Richard III (Olivier)
1969 “Battle in the Air” sequence of Battle of Britain (Hamilton)
1970 Three Sisters (Olivier)

Publications

On WALTON: books—

On WALTON: articles—

National Film Theatre booklet (London), July 1982.
Obituary in Variety (New York), 16 March 1983.
Séquences (Montreal), no. 112, April 1983.
Score (Lelystad, Netherlands), no. 75, June 1990 + filmo.
Segnocinema (Vicenza), May-June 1995.
Cineforum (Bergamo), October 1996.

* * *

William Walton was born in Oldham, Lancashire. His father was a choir-master and singing teacher and his mother had a fine contralto voice. By the age of 12 he was already composing music of his own and attended Christ Church Cathedral School in Oxford. He quickly made his name as a composer during the glittering 1920s and was friend and confidante of Siegfried Sassoon, Constant Lambert, George Gershwin, Sir Thomas Beecham and Diaghilev. All in all he composed the music to 14 films beginning in 1935 with a score for Escape Me Never, but he did not capture attention for his film work until the 1942 film The First of the Few with its famous “Prelude and Fugue for Spitfire.” What marked him out for special attention and acclaim were the scores he wrote for three of Laurence Olivier’s films, the most illustrious of which was for Henry V. It has been highly praised by music critics both as film music and as a concert suite in its own right. When the film was released in 1944, many music critics published detailed reviews of the score and extracts of it were presented at the Promenade concerts in 1945. Olivier’s enchanting and spectacular historical pageant version of Shakespeare’s patriotic epic is as memorable for Walton’s sumptuous and rousing music as it is for its magnificent acting, directing, photography, sets and costumes, and most especially for the stirring music for the French cavalry charge at Agincourt.

Walton’s second collaboration with Olivier on a Shakespeare adaptation—Hamlet—was once again completely interlocked with the director’s perception of it. The mime within a mime scene has the soundtrack devoted to Walton’s music. The third film with Olivier, Richard III, was remembered by Walton as “the fruit of mutual confidence and esteem.” His final collaboration with Olivier came in 1970 when he wrote the score for Three Sisters where the music has a distinctly mellow, autumnal and muted feel to it in keeping with the tragic dimensions of the play. The year before, Walton had written the music for the film Battle of Britain but the score was not considered commercial enough and in the end only a small part of the original score was used—the “Battle in the Air” sequence—and for many years United Artists refused to release the original score for performance in spite of anguished letters from Walton’s fans.

Walton is one of this century’s most celebrated British composers—he said of his contribution to cinema; “The value to a film of its musical score rests chiefly in the creation of mood, atmosphere, and the sense of period.” No other British composer has given greater value to the films he worked on.

—Sylvia Paskin

WANGER, Walter

Producer. Nationality: American. Born: Walter Feuchtwanger in San Francisco, California, 11 July 1894 (some sources give 16 October). Education: Attended Dartmouth College, Hanover, New Hampshire. Military Service: Served in Army Intelligence during World War I, and on President Wilson’s staff at Paris Peace Conference. Family: Married the actress Joan Bennett (second marriage), Wanger Writers and Production Artists, 4th Edition

Films as Producer:

1929 The Cocoanuts (Santley and Florey); Applause (Mamoulian) (co)
1932 The Bitter Tea of General Yen (Capra); Washington Merry-Go-Round (Cruze)
1933 Another Language (Griffith) (production associate); Going Hollywood (Walsh); Queen Christina (Mamoulian); Gabriel over the White House (La Cava)
1934 The President Vanishes (Wellman); Stamboul Quest (Wood)
1935 Private Worlds (La Cava); Mary Burns, Fugitive (Howard); Shanghai (Flood); Every Night at Eight (Walsh); Smart Girl (Scotto)
1936 Big Brown Eyes (Walsh); Spendthrift (Walsh); The Moon’s Our Home (Seiter); Fatal Lady (Ludwig); The Case Against Mrs. Ames (Seiter); Palm Springs (Scotto); Her Master’s Voice (Santley); Sabotage (Hitchcock); The Trail of the Lonesome Pine (Hathaway)
1937 You Only Live Once (F. Lang); Stand-In (Garnett); 52nd Street (Young); Vogues of 1938 (Walter Wanger’s Vogues of 1938) (Cummings)
1938 I Met My Love Again (Ripley and Logan); Blockade (Dieterle); Algiers (Cromwell); Trade Winds (Garnett)
1939 Winter Carnival (Reisner); Stagecoach (Ford) (exec); Eternally Yours (Garnett)
1940 The Long Voyage Home (Ford); Slightly Honorable (Garnett); The House Across the Bay (Mayo); Foreign Correspondent (Hitchcock)
1941 Sundown (Hathaway)
1942 Eagle Squadron (Lubin); Arabian Nights (Rawlins)
1943 We’ve Never Been Licked (Rawlins); Gung Ho! (Enright)
1944 Ladies Courageous (Rawlins)
1945 Salome, Where She Danced (Lamont); Scarlet Street (F. Lang) (exec)
1946 Canyon Passage (Turner); A Night in Paradise (Lubin)
1947 The Lost Moment (Gabel); Smash-Up: The Story of a Woman (A Woman Destroyed) (Heisler)
1948 The Secret beyond the Door (F. Lang); Joan of Arc (Fleming); Tap Roots (Marshall)
1949 Tulsa (Heisler); The Reckless Moment (Ophulés); Reign of Terror (The Black Book) (A. Mann)
1952 Aladdin and His Lamp (Landers); Battle Zone (Selander); Lady in the Iron Mask (Murphy) (co)
1953 Kansas Pacific (Nazarro); Fort Vengeance (Selander)
1954 Riot in Cell Block 11 (Siegel); The Adventures of Hajji Baba (Weis)
1956 Invasion of the Body Snatchers (Siegel); Navy Wife (Bermd)
1958 I Want to Live! (Wise)
1963 Cleopatra (Mankiewicz) (replaced by Zanuck)

Leaving aside the headline-grabbing incidents that blighted the last decade of his career, Walter Wanger stands as the epitome of the inspirational Hollywood producer, committed to artistry as much as profit, provocation as much as pleasure. Renowned and respected for his hands-off approach, entrusting his collaborators with creative freedom, contributing his ideas as suggestions rather than dictates, Wanger enjoyed fruitful partnerships with the likes of Fritz Lang, John Ford, Alfred Hitchcock and Don Siegel. Working in a wide variety of genres and styles, the biggest constant in his career is an enduring concern with the blind, dehumanising force of legal/social retribution and the way a decent person can be hounded to the grave by one minor indiscretion or unlucky break. Cannily trading off his ‘serious’ efforts (Scarlet Street) with pure box-office hokum (Salome Where She Danced), Wanger’s instincts were skewed only by a tendency towards literary aye (placing troubled talents F. Scott Fitzgerald and Dorothy Parker under contract despite a demonstrable lack of screenwriting ability). It says something about his ability that Wanger’s avowed dislike of being second best in anything comes across not as typical front-office arrogance but a simple statement of fact.

Employed by most of the big studios at one time or another, Wanger first came to prominence at Paramount, facilitating the Marx Brothers’ big screen debut in The Cocoanuts and director Rouben Mamoulian’s striking first film, the location-shot vaudeville star- losts love-of-daughter melodrama Applause. A two-film stint at Columbia included Frank Capra’s still enticng megacreation fantasy The Bitter Tea of General Yen. Pausing at MGM long enough to endorse Franklin Roosevelt’s New Deal (in Gabriel over the White House) and produce the definitive Greta Garbo vehicle, Mamoulian’s Queen Christina, Wanger settled at Paramount in the mid-1930s, becoming acquainted with wife-to-be Joan Bennett (costar of the medical drama Private Worlds). The same year he brought out his first miscarriage-of-justice melodrama, Mary Burns, Fugitive, with Sylvia Sidney as the former gangster’s moll undone by circumstance.

Publications

By WANGER: book—

On WANGER: book—

On WANGER: articles—

Films and Filming (London), December 1960.
Brownlow, Kevin, in Film (London), no. 39, 1964.
Cinématographe (Paris), May 1984.
Velvet Light Trap (Madison, Wisconsin), no. 28, Fall 1991.

* * *
and prejudice. Having teamed Sidney with Henry Fonda on the technicolour hillbilly drama Trail of the Lonesome Pine, Wanger reunited the stars, regular writer Graham Baker and regular cameraman Leon Shamroy for the independently produced You Only Live Once. Under Fritz Lang’s unflinching eye, the story of a petty crook framed for murder on a tragic dimension, the gripping victimised-love-on-the-run plot undermined only by the sentimental Hays Office friendly conclusion. Confident on home ground, Wanger’s ambitions fell flat the following year with Blockade, a bland, laughably apotolic Spanish Civil War adventure which managed to mention neither Franco nor the Fascists as simple farmer Henry Fonda turns fighter in defense of his land.

Running with a winning streak at the end of the decade, notably the John Ford-John Wayne-Dudley Nichols team-ups Stagecoach and The Long Voyage Home (the former relocating its producer’s usual outsider-prejudice theme to the Old West), Wanger found more effective anti-fascist propaganda in Hitchcock’s Foreign Correspondent, which even Joseph Goebbels had to admire. Signing on with Universal shortly after, he alternated further fighting-spirit efforts (Sundown, Gung Ho!) with escapism (Arabian Nights). The end of hostilities brought Scarlet Street, a moody noir reunited Lang, Bennett, Edward G. Robinson, and Dan Duryea from the previous year’s hit The Woman in the Window, a lighter non-Wanger thriller.

Remarkable at the time for showing a murderer go officially unpunished (downtrodden clerk Robinson kills deceitful prostitute mistress Bennett; sleazy pimp Duryea goes to the chair), the film suggests that state sanctioned execution is preferable to the inner torments suffered by the now vagrant Robinson at the conclusion (in a turnaround on the usual Wanger take, no one will believe that the pathetic man is guilty).

Over the next few years, Wanger lost form, the special “moral stature” Academy Award handed out for the notorious dud Joan of Arc fooling no-one. The trash melodrama The Reckless Moment, a Columbia-backed vehicle for Bennett and James Mason, won a few European admirers, largely thanks to Max Ophüls’ ultra stylish handling. There were fewer takers for the dreary Bennett-Lang psycho-melodrama The Secret beyond the Door. Already associating with downmarket outfits such as Eagle Lion, Wanger’s industry standing took a rapid downward turn in 1952 when he shot Joan Bennett’s agent-turned-lover in the groin. Serving his four month jail sentence in a relatively easy-going honour camp, Wanger nevertheless emerged with a burning desire to expose the corruption and injustices of the penal system and also to relaunch his career. Teaming up with poverty row exploitation specialists Allied Artists (formerly Monogram), Wanger was fortunate to be joined on Riot in Cell Block 11 by director Don Siegel, an expert in alienated, violent outsiders (here inside), and ferocious leading man Neville Brand. Riot hit home and Wanger reunited with Siegel for Invasion of the Body Snatchers, an unsurpassed nightmare fantasy on the loss of individuality. Back in demand, Wanger made a shaky return to the capital punishment debate with the based-on-fact I Want to Live!, an awkward (if award winning) vehicle for frequent collaborator Susan Hayward. In the same year he started work on a modestly budgeted historical tale, Cleopatra, a Fox-backed project for minor contract star Joan Collins. The rest is dismal history: five years worth of cast changes, director changes (Mamoulian making way for Joseph Mankiewicz), location changes, mounting costs, general chaos and financial disaster, all centred around chronically unhealthy million-dollar-star Elizabeth Taylor. Fired by Darryl Zanuck towards the end of production, Wanger and assorted Fox personnel attempted to sue each other into the ground. For a man who once remarked that nothing was as cheap as a hit, no matter how much it cost, this career finale marked a particularly sad end.

—Daniel O’Brien

WARM, Hermann

Art Director. Nationality: German. Born: Berlin, 5 May 1889. Education: Studied design at Kunstgewerbeschule, Berlin, c. 1905–07; trained in stage design at the Széngyö, Berlin, c. 1908–09, and the Schauspielhaus, Dusseldorf, c. 1910–11. Career: Painter, associated with Der Sturm Expressionists, Berlin; 1912—entered German films as set designer for Vitakopf, then for Union, Decla, Decla-Bioskop, and Greenbaum; also freelance architect and set designer in Hungary, France, and England, 1924–33, and in Switzerland, 1941–44; worked in Germany, 1947–60. Died: In Berlin, 1976.

Films as Art Director:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1913</td>
<td>Der Shylock von Krakau (Wilhelm); Menschen und Masken (Piel); Der letzte Tag (Mack); Wo ist Coletti? (Mack); Der König (Mack); Die blonde Maus (Mack); Der Andere (Mack)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1914</td>
<td>Die Geschichte der stillen Mähle (Oswald); Pauline (Etiévant); Der Hund von Baskerville (Oswald—2 parts); Das Spion (Schmidt-Häsel); Die beiden Rivalen (Etiévant); Die Millionenspinne (Piel)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1919</td>
<td>Totentanz (Rippert); Der Volontär (Neuss); Die Pest von Florenz (Rippert) (co); Der Tunnel (Meinert and Wauer); Die Spinnen, Part 1: Der goldene See (The Spiders, Part 1: The Golden Lake) (F. Lang)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1920</td>
<td>Die Spinnen, Part 2: Das Brillantenschiff (The Spiders, Part 2: The Diamond Ship) (F. Lang); Das Kabinett des Dr. Caligari (The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari) (Wiene); Die Toteninsel (Froelich) (co); Masken (Wauer); Das Blut der Ahnen (Gerhardt); Das Haupt des Juarez (Guter); Der Richter von Zalamea (Berger); Kämpfende Herzen (Der Vier um die Frau; Four around a Woman) (F. Lang) (co)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Der müde Tod: Ein Deutsches Volkslied im Sechs Versen (The Weary Death; Between Two Worlds; Beyond the Wall; Destiny) (F. Lang) (co); Der ewige Fluch (Wendhausen); Die fliegenden Briganten (Felmy); Die Jagd nach dem Tode (Gerhardt); Schloss Vogelöde (Haunted Castle) (Murnau); Zirkus des Lebens (Guter)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1922</td>
<td>Phantom (Murnau) (co)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1923</td>
<td>Das Spiel der Königin (Ein Glas Wasser) (Berger) (co); Der Kaufmann von Venedig (Flener); Quarantäne (Mack)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1924</td>
<td>Gräfin Donelli (Countess Donelli) (Pabst); Rosenmontag (Eine Offizierstragödie; Rose Monday) (Meinert) (co); Königskleben (Schall) (co)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1925</td>
<td>Mädels von heute (Liebesgeschichten) (Friesler); Die rote Maus (Meinert); Soll man heiraten? (Intermezzo einer Ehe in sieben Tagen) (Noa)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
| 1926 | Das süsse Mädel (Noa) (co); Der Student von Prag (The Student of Prague; The Man Who Cheated Life) (Galeen); Fräulein Josette, meine Frau (Mademoiselle Josette, ma femme) (Ravel); Die Frau ohne Namen (Jacoby) (co); *Die ...
Flucht in die Nacht (Pelermi); Die Frauen von Folies Bergères (Obal); Die Insel der verbotenen Küsse (Jacoby) (co); Liebe (Die Herzogin von Langeais) (Crümm) (co); Parikettes 47 (Le Fauteuil 47) (Ravel)

1927 Die Liebe der Jeanne Ney (The Love of Jeanne Ney) (Pabst) (co); Die Jagd nach der Braut (Jacoby) (co); Colonialskandal (Liebe im Rausch) (Jacoby); Millionenauftrag im Rivieraexpress (Delmont)

1928 La Passion de Jeanne d’Arc (The Passion of Joan of Arc) (Dreyer); Eine Nacht in London (A Night in London) (Pick); Priscillas fahrt ins Glück (Asquith)

1929 Die weissen Rosen von Ravensberg (Meinert); Masken (Meinert); Fundvogel (Hoffmann-Harnisch); Das Erlebnis einer Nacht (Brignone); Freiheit im Fesseln (Weolff); Verratsucht Gesichter (Randolf)

1930 Dreyfus (Oswald); Es kommt alle Tage vor . . . (Natge)

1931 Der Mann, der den Mord beging (Nächte am Bosporus; The Man Who Murdered) (Bernhardt); Der Herr Finanz-direktor (Friedmann-Frederich)

1932 Vampyr (The Dream of Allan Gray) (Dreyer); Friederike (Friedmann-Frederich); Gehetzte Menschen (Fehner)

1933 Hochzeit am Wolfgangsee (Behrendt); Wenn am Sonntagabend die Dorfmusik spielt (Schündler)

1934 Peer Gynt (Wendhausen); Wenn ich König wär! (Hübler-Kahla); Musik im Blut (Waschneck); Peter, Paul, und Nanette (Engels); Pippi (Rabenalt); Zigeunerblut (Ungarmädel) (Klein)

1935 Der Student von Prag (The Student of Prague) (Robison); Mazurka (Forst); Ich liebe alle Frauen (Lamac); Krach im Innerhaus (Harlan)

1936 Ein Hochzeitstraum (Engel); Mädchenjahre einer Königin (Engel); Die Nacht mit dem Kaiser (Engel)

1937 Geächtliches Spiel (Engel); Ein Volksfeind (Steinhoff); Die Warschauer Zaudelle (Buch)

1938 Jugend (Harlan); Verwelte Spuren (Harlan)

1939 Das unsterbliche Herz (Harlan)

1940 Die Geierwally (Martin)

1941 Le Corbeau (The Raven) (Clouzot)

1942 Wozzeck (Klenz) (co); Vors uns liegt das Leben (Die Fünf von Titan) (Ribau) (co)

1943 Tragödie einer Leidenschaft (Meisel) (co)

1944 Königskinder (Kätner); Sehnsucht des Herzens (Martin)

1945 Das ewige Spiel (Cap) (co)

1946 Herz der Welt (Braun) (co); Casa Cabana (Buch) (co)

1947 Die Privateskrentirin (Private Secretary) (Martin) (co); Hokusposkus (Hoffmann) (co)

1948 Der Raub der Sabine-innen (Hoffmann) (co)

1949 Verrat an Deutschland (Harlan) (co); Hamusse Hanussen (Fischer) (co); Königswalser (Tourransky) (co)

1950 Dany, bitte schreiben sie! (von Borsody) (co)

1951 Helden (Arms and the Man) (Wirth) (co); Die Nackte und der Satan (The Head) (Trivas) (co); Die Wahrheit über Rosemarie (Love Now, Pay Later) (Jugert)

1960 Die Botschafterin (Braun)

Film as Actor:

1960 Männer sind zum Lieben da (Schmidt)

Publications

By WARM: articles—

Meine Arbeit,’ in Filmkunst (Vienna), no. 43, 1965.
Film (Hanover), July 1965.
Kosmorama (Copenhagen), October 1965.

On WARM: articles—

Kosmorama (Copenhagen), no. 90, 1969.
Kosmorama (Copenhagen), Summer 1993.

Trained as a stage designer and a painter by avocation, Hermann Warm was perfectly suited to become a leading figure in a Weimar cinema that would be dominated in part by a merging of the artistic and cinematic, a freeing of films from various forms of recapturing the real from naive realism to impressionism. Such filmmaking was to challenge the truism that the essence of the new medium was the photographic process, which, for many at the time, seemed to be defined by a mechanical reproduction of what exists.

Warm was already engaged on a substantial project, Fritz Lang’s The Spiders—to become an important film of this newly emerging film style—when he was offered to chance to work on what would be the defining text of the movement: The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari. Authors Carl Mayer and Hans Janowitz had originally thought that Alfred Kubin, a designer much interested in chiaroscuro effects, should do the art work, but producer Erich Pommer thought otherwise. It is not certain whether it was actually Pommer or Rudolf Meinert, whose involvement in the project is disputed, who actually hired Warm to design the sets, but the decision was crucial to the eventual look of the film. Instead of a Goyaesque horror landscape of light and shadow, probably the treatment Kubin would have advocated, Caligari became an experiment in eccentricity, with its sets made out of painted canvas, an artificial look that was duplicated in nonnaturalistic makeup and stage props (for the most part). The distorted world of Caligari, which turns out to be not “real” but a madman’s vision of the truth, is not created by any special photographic effects (compare the use of anamorphic lenses in Abel Gance’s La Folie du Docteur Tube) to evoke insanity but entirely by set design.

The principle of Warm’s conception is the Expressionist notion of Ballung, that crystallization of the inner reality of objects, concepts, and people through an artistic expression that cuts through and discards a false exterior. Warm’s sets for the film correspondingly evoke the twists and turnings of a small German medieval town, but in a patently unrealistic fashion (e.g., streets cut across one another at impossible angles and paths are improbably steep). The roofs that Cesare the somnambulist crosses during his nighttime depredations rise at unlikely angles to one another, yet still afford him passage so that he can reach his victims. In other words, the world of Caligari remains “real” in the sense that it is not offered as an alternative one to what actually exists. On the contrary, Warm’s design is meant to evoke the essence of German social life, offering a penetrating critique of semiofficial authority (the psychiatrist) that is softened by the addition of a framing story. As a practicing artist with a deep commitment to the political and intellectual program of Expressionism, Warm was the ideal technician to do the art design for the film, which bears out Warm's famous manifesto that "the cinema image must become an engraving."

One of a number of art designers with similar training and commitments (e.g., Walter Röhrig, Otto Hunte, and Robert Herlth), Warm proved able to create many different kinds of effects, as indeed his more standard work for less extraordinary commercial projects during the war had shown. For Fritz Lang's Destiny, for example, he created sumptuous period stylizations that provide appropriate backdrop in the Venetian and Arabian sequences. The emphasis on elaborate decoration that is simultaneously accurate and expressive recalls the similar staging effects of Max Reinhardt's Deutsches Theater productions (Reinhardt rejected the scrupulous naturalism of the previous generation for more startling visual effects, to be achieved mainly by innovative lighting and costuming). For Heinrich Galeen's The Student of Prague, Warm appropriately reconstructed an authentic nineteenth-century ambiance, whose only distortions can be traced to the romantic sensibilities of the story.

More in line with the abstractive Ballung of Caligari is Warm's design for Dreyer's The Passion of Joan of Arc, which involved the re-creation of much of a medieval town. Working with Jean Hugo, Warm abstracted from medieval paintings a certain fundamental medievality that he made the basis of an architecture that is somewhat unrealistic with its smooth, neutral walls. Unfortunately for Warm, director Dreyer decided to shoot this film largely in close-up so that set design figures as only a scarcely seen backdrop to what is essentially a drama played out in facial expressions and camerawork. Though he would enjoy a long and productive career in the film business, the end of the Weimar cinema in the early 1930s meant that Warm would subsequently work on projects that depended less on the genius and artistic inventiveness of the art designer.

—R. Barton Palmer

WARNER, Jack L.

Producer. Nationality: American. Born: Jack Leonard Warner in London, Ontario, 2 August 1892. Education: Attended schools in Ohio. Family: Married 1) Irma (Warner) (divorced 1935); 2) Ann Boyar; one son and one daughter. Career: Worked in brother Harry's shoe repair store in Baltimore; 1905—sang illustrated song slides in nickelodeons; with brothers opened Le Bijou nickelodeon in Pittsburgh; 1906—formed the Duquesne Amusement Supply Company; opened production studios in St. Louis and Santa Paula, California; 1917—My Four Years in Germany established Jack as a major producer; 1918—took sole charge of Warner Bros. Hollywood operation; controlled the studio until 1967, then independent producer. Awards: Academy Awards for The Life of Emile Zola, 1937; Casablanca, 1943, and My Fair Lady, 1964; Irving Thalberg Award, 1958; US Medal of Merit; Order of British Empire. Died: Of heart disease in Los Angeles, California, 9 September 1978.

Films as Producer/Executive Producer (Selected List):

1917 My Four Years in Germany
1922 Dangerous Adventure (+ co d with Sam Warner)

1926 Don Juan (Crosland)
1927 The Jazz Singer (Crosland)
1928 The Lights of New York (Foy); The Singing Fool (Bacon)
1929 Disraeli (Green)
1930 Little Caesar (LeRoy)
1931 The Public Enemy (Wellman); The Secret Six (Hill)
1932 I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang (LeRoy)
1933 42nd Street (Bacon); Gold Diggers of 1933 (LeRoy); Footlight Parade (Bacon); Wild Boys of the Road (Dangerous Days) (Wellman)
1935 Captain Blood (Curtiz); Gold Diggers of 1935 (Berkeley)
1936 The Story of Louis Pasteur (Dieterle); Anthony Adverse (LeRoy)
1937 They Won't Forget (LeRoy); The Life of Emile Zola (Dieterle); Gold Diggers of 1937 (Bacon)
1938 The Amazing Dr. Clitterhouse (Litvak); Gold Diggers in Paris (The Gay Imposters) (Enright)
1939 Confessions of a Nazi Spy (Litvak)
1941 The Bride Came C.O.D. (Keighley)
1943 Action in the North Atlantic (Bacon); Air Force (Hawks); Casablanca (Curtiz); Mission to Moscow (Curtiz); Watch on the Rhine (Shumlin); Destination Tokyo (Daves)
1944 Journey to Marseille (Curtiz); Objective Burma (Walsh)
1945 Christmas in Connecticut (Indiscretion) (Godfrey)
1946 Night and Day (Curtiz)
1947 Life with Father (Curtiz)
1948 Treasure of the Sierra Madre (Huston); Johnny Belinda (Negulesco)
1949 Montana (Enright)
1951  A Streetcar Named Desire  (Kazan)
1953  House of Wax  (De Toth)
1955  East of Eden  (Kazan); Rebel without a Cause  (Ray)
1956  Moby Dick  (Huston); Giant  (Stevens)
1957  The Prince and the Showgirl  (Olivier); Chase a Crooked Shadow  (Anderson)
1958  Auntie Mame  (da Costa)
1959  The Nun’s Story  (Zinnemann)
1960  The Sundowners  (Zinnemann)
1962  PT-109  (Martinson)
1964  My Fair Lady  (Cukor)
1965  The Great Race  (Edwards)
1966  Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf?  (Nichols)
1967  Camelot  (Logan); Bonnie and Clyde  (Penn)
1972  1776  (Hunt); Dirty Little Billy  (Dragoti)

Publications

By WARNER: book—

On WARNER: books—

On WARNER: articles—

Film Comment (New York), vol. 25, no. 4, July-August 1989.

* * * *

During the Golden Age of Hollywood Warner Bros. (never Brothers unless referring to the four men themselves) represented the only true family run studio operation. Eldest brother Harry functioned as company president, making all key decisions from the New York office. Next youngest brother Abe supervised distribution, also from New York City. “Baby” Jack headed the studio filmmaking operation in California, churning out hundreds of feature films, animated short subjects, and newsreels. (Their brother Sam, who pioneered the coming of sound, died in 1927.)

Like most newcomers to the movie business, the brothers Warner began as nickelodeon operators, in this case in western Pennsylvania and eastern Ohio. They struggled on the margins of the industry until the early 1920s; in 1922, on the verge of expansion, the Warner company was but one hundredth of the size of industry leader, Famous Players-Lasky. Harry Warner and his brothers realized they needed to grow or face extinction. So they gambled and copied the strategies that were working so well for Adolph Zukor and Famous Players-Lasky by producing expensive feature films, setting up world-wide distribution, and buying theaters, all backed by the Wall Street banking house of Goldman Sachs.

During this initial phase of corporate growth, Sam Warner learned of AT&T’s inventions for recording and reproducing sounds electronically. He and Harry Warner devised a means by which to use sound to make their company grow. Warner Bros. would not rock the boat, rather, the company would make recordings of popular vaudeville acts, and offer them as novelties to exhibitors along with Warner Bros. feature length (silent) films. Jack Warner helped supervise these early forays into “talking pictures.” Abe Warner’s sales pitch stressed that these so-called “vaudeville” sound shorts could substitute for the then omnipresent stage shows offered by picture palaces around the country. Thus, the very first “talkers” were conceived as short recordings of the acts of top musical, comic, and variety talent then touring the United States.

This strategy worked. In August, 1926 Warners premiered the Vitaphone with a package of shorts accompanying Jack Warner’s latest silent film spectacular, Don Juan, with music on a sound track replacing the usual live orchestra for the feature film. As Warner Bros. developed more “packages of sound movies” (a silent feature film with orchestral music on disc plus “vaudeville” short), the brothers Warner quickly realized the movie-going public preferred recordings of popular musical acts to opera stars. Logically and systematically, Warner Bros. inserted “vaudeville” numbers into its features, the first being Al Jolson as The Jazz Singer, premiering in October 1927. (Jack Warner would make his greatest contribution as a line producer in these pioneering days.) The three brothers Warner knew they had made it into Hollywood’s pantheon based on the overwhelming response to A Jazz Singer sequel, The Singing Fool, also starring Al Jolson, released in September 1928.

The Singing Fool established box-office records that lasted a decade and took Gone with the Wind to shatter. By the early 1930s Jack Warner had ceased working on individual projects and settled into running thriving sets of studios (in Hollywood and Burbank, California) and hiring and firing talented filmmakers, scriptwriters, and other filmmaking personnel. Because of his distance from actual productions, historians debate Jack Warner’s day-to-day impact, but he surely set the direction for studio production.

The 1930s and 1940s proved a heyday for Warners. We now properly celebrate the studio for its social expose films (I Was a Fugitive on the Chain Gang and Wild Boys of the Road), innovative gangster films (Public Enemy and The Secret Six), and backstage musicals (The Gold Diggers of 1933 and Footlight Parade). Jack Warner took proper credit for the 1937 Academy Award winner, The Life of Emile Zola. But he also never produced regular profits until World War II brought the film industry out of the Great Depression. From a box-office point of view Warner’s films of the early 1930s only helped the company lose more than $30 million. Steady profits only commenced in the 1940s with the release of such popular fare as the Bette Davis and James Cagney comedy The Bride Came C.O.D.; the romantic Christmas in Connecticut, starring Barbara Stanwyck and Dennis Morgan; a film biography of Cole Porter Night and Day, starring Cary Grant and Alexis Smith; the Broadway hit Life With Father, starring Irene Dunne and William Powell; and Jane Wyman’s Oscar winning performance in Johnny Belinda. By the late 1940s there was no one in Hollywood with more power than Jack Warner.

The brothers’ dynasty began to fall apart with the coming of television. Although the company pioneered in TV production (with such early hits as 77 Sunset Strip and Maverick) corporate profits began to fall. Harry and Abe Warner had made their fortunes and sold their stakes in the company in the mid-1950s. Jack Warner would stay on to run Warner Bros. for another decade, but worked for other corporate owners. He could not simply appeal to his older brothers and thus never again possessed the power he had from the late 1920s through the early 1950s. He became just another independent filmmaker, occasionally turning out hits such as My Fair Lady and The Great Race. These would prove the swan song for the final remaining member of one of Hollywood’s most important families.

—Douglas Gomery

WASSERMAN, Lew

Film, Recording, and Talent Agency Executive. Nationality: American. Born: Cleveland, Ohio, 1913. Career: 1936–38—national director, advertising and publicity, Music Corporation of America; 1939—vice president, Music Corporation of America; 1940—vice president in charge of motion picture division; 1973–1996—chairman, chief executive officer, director, member, executive committee, Music Corporation of America; also chairman of the board, chief executive officer, director, subsidiary corporations; 1996—director, Seagrams Corp. Award: Jean Hersholt Humanitarian Award, Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, 1973. Member: Chairman Emeritus, Association of Motion Picture and TV producers; president, Hollywood Canteen Foundation.

Publications

By WASSERMAN: article—

On WASSERMAN: articles—

* * *

Although Lew Wasserman might legitimately be considered the last great Hollywood mogul, he does not fit the stereotype. In an industry built on hyperbole and showmanship, his style is characterized by discipline and restraint. Yet, he reigns as the entertainment industry’s deal maker supreme.

During a 59 year career with the talent agency MCA, he reshaped the entertainment business by shifting the focus of programming from motion pictures to television and from producers to onscreen talent. Indeed, Wasserman virtually invented most of what has now come to be standard business practice for the film and television industries.

Wasserman began his show business career at the very bottom as an usher in a Cleveland theater in 1933. This job was quickly followed by a stint as a promoter for a small-time nightclub called the Mayfair Casino. During the latter job, he was spotted by Jules Stein, a Chicago eye doctor turned band booker who hired him in 1936 for his fledgling talent agency, Music Corporation of America (MCA).

In 1938, the agency packed him off to Los Angeles to operate a branch office for motion picture talent. Within ten years, he had assembled a roster of talent headed by such stars as Betty Grable, Bette Davis, Billy Wilder, Gene Kelly, Alfred Hitchcock, Joan Crawford, Jimmy Stewart, and Ronald Reagan, and had ascended to the agency presidency. Through it all, Wasserman managed to keep a low profile and asked that his staff do the same. “I’ve always felt,” he said, “that, in the agency business, publicity is for the client. Our responsibility is to do our job.”

With all of this talent on hand and competition for radio and film jobs heating up, Wasserman converted MCA into a programming entity by inventing the concept of “packaging.” Instead of merely booking talent on existing radio shows, for example, the agency head put his staff to work creating programs and projects which would feature predominately MCA talent. This strategy would eventually be transferred to motion pictures and ultimately to the newer medium of television where it would become standard practice by the 1960s.

Television presented Wasserman with a unique problem when it began to take hold in the late 1940s and early 1950s. As the major studios lost their monopolies on production, exhibition and exploitation of talent in the years following World War II, they unanimously turned their backs on this new medium, reasoning that it would be suicidal to allow their major stars to appear on television since American audiences could see them for free in their living rooms, no one would go to the movies.

When MCA moved to fill the void with its own television production entity, Revue Productions, it was barred from using two members of the Screen Actors Guild (SAG) on live TV broadcasts. However, Wasserman found a loophole. With the sponsorship of Coca-Cola, he began to produce series shot totally on film and was thus able to negotiate a waiver from SAG allowing him to employ “big screen” names such as Alfred Hitchcock as long as the shows were shot entirely on film. By the end of the 1960s almost all shows were either produced on film or videotape, and MCA and the William Morris Agency controlled 80 percent of the talent appearing on TV.

Yet, the MCA head viewed “talent” as a diminishing asset. Although he had negotiated the first million-dollar contract in 1946 tying Ronald Reagan to Warner Bros. for seven years and followed it with another precedent a decade later by creating the first “percentage” profit sharing package for Jimmy Stewart for starring in Universal’s Winchester 73, he realized that his bargaining power would cease if the actor walked out the door and went with another agency. “What I did wasn’t such a big deal,” he emphasized. “Ronald Coleman got a percentage of his pictures in the 1920s.”

Yet, Wasserman’s gamble in trading Stewart’s $250,000 salary for a percentage of the film’s net gross which ultimately amounted to several million dollars for the actor, actually put the “onscreen talent” in the position of virtually dictating which projects could be made by the studios. “Wasserman and Stein built the first real powerhouse agency,” attested Samuel Goldwyn, Jr., chairman of the Samuel Goldwyn Co., in 1995. “They really created the concept of stars producing pictures long before ICM and Creative Artists Agency came along.”

But, Wasserman, pragmatist that he was, knew that his agency had to acquire other firmer, more tangible assets that investors could count on. Accordingly, in 1958, he obtained Paramount Picture’s pre-1948 film library for the then unheard of sum of $10 million. (By contrast, Ted Turner paid almost $1.5 billion for the MGM library three decades later.) Although Paramount executives crowed that the sale generated more revenues than would several years of actually making and exhibiting films, MCA had the last laugh by obtaining more than $30 million from TV stations for broadcast rights to the films within the first month.

Four years later, Wasserman took an even larger gamble by purchasing Universal Studios and its parent company Decca Records. It was his intention to transform his new company into Hollywood’s first vertically integrated entertainment corporation which would ultimately grow to encompass film, television, music production, theatrical exhibition, home entertainment and theme parks. However, the MCA chief’s initial steps were viewed as a potential monopoly by the Justice Department which stepped in and forced MCA to divest itself of its talent business. At the height of his most ambitious reach, his fear of diminishing assets had seemingly come true.

Yet, the merged company with its sizable assets weathered the crisis and the regulatory setback, if anything, actually forced Wasserman to become even more creative in his deal making. He went from an apolitical stance at the opening of the 1960s to active political involvement in the ensuing decades courting Presidents Lyndon Johnson and Jimmy Carter (both of whom offered him cabinet positions) and eventually reteamed with his old client Ronald Reagan.

By 1973, when Jules Stein retired naming Wasserman his successor as MCA chairman, the company was valued at $160 million. Twelve years later, the younger man had turned it into an empire with a net worth $3.6 million including 420 acres in Los Angeles; two hotels; office buildings; an open-air amphitheater; the Universal Studio Tour (the third ranked tourist attraction in the U.S.); and half interest in the Cineplex Odeon theater chain. Much of this was aided by the relaxed attitude of the Reagan Justice Department toward antitrust issues.

The secret of Wasserman’s success during this period was that although MCA continued to expand and diversify, it never strayed from its core business which was entertainment. However, within those basic boundaries, experimentation was conducted at an extremely high level. For example, the company pioneered longform television movies during the 1980s which allowed Universal to keep a full slate of producers, directors and writers at work around the clock while spreading the company’s overhead over a full 365 days instead of the usual less than 200 for its competitors. Also, at least one third of these long-form movies wound up becoming weekly series, including such major hits as The Rockford Files and Columbo among their number. Wasserman thus achieved the best of all worlds—low overhead and a launching pad for high revenue continuing programming with incredible long-term syndication potential.

During the 1980s MCA became one of the largest suppliers of longform programming to the T.V. networks with such hits as Kojak, Columbo, Miami Vice, and Murder She Wrote. At the same time, the motion picture division of Universal, long known for relatively low-brow entertainment began to ride the crest of such acclaimed films as the Academy Award-winning The Deer Hunter and Out of Africa. But, it was another Wasserman gamble made in 1975 that really produced dividends in the ensuing decades. He agreed to finance a film version of the best-selling novel Jaws as a vehicle for his protege Steven Spielberg, who would go on to give Universal three of the biggest money winners of all time, including the box office champ E.T.—The Extra-Terrestrial. In 1990, Wasserman pulled his biggest deal of all, selling MCA to the giant Japanese electronics firm Matsushita. In addition to keeping his chairmanship at an annual salary of $3 million, he exchanged his common shares of stock for preferred shares carrying a value of $327 million. But, the free wheeling dealer was finally reigned in by the financial conservativism of his new partners, and MCA began to decline until it was again sold in 1995 to Seagram’s Distillers, which effectively ended Wasserman’s involvement in the day-to-day operations of the company.

His only regret, he said at the end, was that the possibilities of the industry that he pioneered “seem endless. I just wish I could be around to see all the changes to come.” However, if show business’s past is any indicator, its future will still bear the Wasserman imprint.

—Steve Hanson

WATKIN, David

March 1925. Career: Messenger boy with a documentary film unit, then cameraman; 1965—first film as cinematographer, The Knack—and How to Get It, first of several films for Richard Lester; supervised development of “Wendy Light”; 1977—cinematographer for TV mini-series Jesus of Nazareth. Awards: Academy Awards, and British Academy Award, for Out of Africa, 1985.

Films as Cinematographer:

1965 The Knack—and How to Get It (Lester); Help! (Lester)
1967 Marat/Sade (Brook); How I Won the War (Lester)
1968 The Charge of the Light Brigade (Richardson)
1969 The Bed-Sitting Room (Lester)
1970 Catch-22 (Nichols)
1971 The Devils (Russell); The Boy Friend (Russell)
1973 The Homecoming (Hall); A Delicate Balance (Richardson)
1974 The Three Musketeers (Lester)
1975 The Four Musketeers (Lester); Mahogany (Gordy)
1976 To the Devil a Daughter (Sykes); Robin and Marian (Lester)
1977 Joseph Andrews (Richardson)
1979 Hanover Street (Hyams)
1981 Endless Love (Zeffirelli); Chariots of Fire (Hudson)
1983 Yentl (Streisand)
1984 The Hotel New Hampshire (Richardson)
1985 Return to Oz (Murch); Out of Africa (Pollack); White Nights
(Hackford)
1986 Journey to the Center of the Earth (Lemorande); Sky Bandits
(Perisic)
1987 Moonstruck (Jewison)
1988 The Good Mother (Nimoy); Last Rites (Bellisario); Masquerade
(Swaim)
1990 Hamlet (Zeffirelli); The Cabinet of Dr. Ramirez (Sellars);
Memphis Belle (Caton-Jones)
1991 The Object of Beauty (Lindsay-Hogg)
1992 Hallo Mister God, This Is Anna (Fairfax); Used People
(Kidron)
1993 This Boy’s Life (Caton-Jones); Bopha! (Freeman)
1994 Milk Money (Benjamin)

1996 Jane Eyre (Zeffirelli); Bogus (Jewison)
1997 Night Falls on Manhattan (Lumet); Obsession (Sehr); Critical Care (Lumet)
1999 Gloria (Lumet); Tea with Mussolini (Zeffirelli)

Publications

By WATKIN: articles—

American Cinematographer (Hollywood), May 1985.
Eye piece (Middlesex, Great Britain), vol. 13, no. 5, 1992.

On WATKIN: articles—

Chase, Donald, in American Cinematographer (Hollywood),
March 1984.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), February and April 1986.
McCarthy, T., in Film Comment (New York), vol. 25, September/
October 1989.

* * *

David Watkin stands out as a maverick even in a field renowned for individualism. One of Britain’s most gifted cinematographers, Watkin has always spurned the conventional in the pursuit of his art.
His love of experimentation, whether in lighting, composition, or use of film stock, has earned him a reputation as a true innovator. His originality has been brought to bear on such diverse subjects as the Beatles, Jesus of Nazareth, the Four Musketeers, Robin Hood, and the inhabitants of Oz. Watkin’s work has displayed a variety of texture, ranging from the crisp, high-contrast photography of The Knack to the muted visual narrative of Yentl.

Although Watkin believes in matching his style to directorial intent, he favors naturalism. Working with director Caton-Jones, he photographed This Boy’s Life, the cinematic adaptation of Tobias Wolf’s memoir, a disturbing childhood portrait of boredom and violence. Watkin’s naturalistic cinematography in This Boy’s Life has been praised as among the most remarkable features of the film.
Concrete, Washington, is rendered as visually dreary as its name suggests. In the film, images of the mundane, of the brutal in Concrete, are juxtaposed with the state’s more majestic landscapes—the resulting photographic contrast reinforcing the central character’s sense of entrapment in a dull world and an abusive situation.

Few cinematographers are better at using light to echo the experiences of real life. Yet despite the breadth and quality of his achievements, Watkin has not earned the recognition enjoyed by many of his contemporaries. It was only when he earned the 1985 Academy Award for Out of Africa that Watkin stepped out of the shadows and shared the spotlight with the top names in cinematography.

Watkin’s early career was spent in documentaries. Starting out as a messenger boy, he worked his way up through the industry, making his debut as a cameraman on Holiday in 1955. He switched to features in 1965. At that time, a crop of young directors was struggling to help the British film industry break free from the constraints of studio production and was developing a fresh, more natural visual language.
Cameramen such as Watkin, with backgrounds in the more adventurous fields of commercials and documentaries, were eagerly sought out by these directors. Watkin was chosen by American-born director Richard Lester to film The Knack, a witty statement on the changing moral climate of 1960s London. Watkin’s giddy camerawork intensified the film’s mood of spontaneity, and his sharp, monochromatic photography underscored its thematic emphasis on opposing viewpoints. Watkin and Lester have since worked together on more than a half-dozen films—the director’s eclecticism in subject matter having been equally matched by the cinematographer’s stylistic diversity. Their collaboration includes Help!, a vividly colored Beatles romp; How I Won the War, an antiwar movie in which alternating use of colored, monochromatic, and tinted footage functions as a Brechtian alienating device; and The Three Musketeers and The Four Musketeers, for which Watkin harnessed the dazzling light of the Spanish locations to create exceptionally rich tableaux.

Watkin is nothing if not unconventional. When filming Out of Africa, he reversed traditional applications of film stock, using fast film for night and interior shots (situations in which slow film would normally be used) and slow film for exterior shots. The intention was to give the film a soft quality, appropriate to its lush, romantic mood. For The Charge of the Light Brigade, Watkin used Ross Express lenses, equipment which had long since passed out of favor with most cinematographers because of its unpredictable effects, but which Watkin drenched certain scenes in a single, dramatic color—in one case a lustrous red, in another an electric blue. Stark coloration of this kind is typically shunned by filmmakers because of its highly stylized effects, but for Watkin it was a way of signposting the film’s shifting emotional currents. Although Watkin is now very much part of mainstream cinema, in his early career he was associated with directors who were themselves considered unconventional—Ken Russell, Peter Brook, Tony Richardson, and Lester.

Watkin’s ingenuity is best exemplified by the “Wendy Light,” a lighting unit whose development he supervised. The “Wendy Light” consists of some 200 bulbs and is mounted on a crane at heights of up to 150 feet. It functions as a single, powerful light source capable of producing natural effects in both exterior and interior conditions. The unit creates the type of shadows and degree of smoothness found in the real world.

Watkin brings a painterly quality to his work. Like the Dutch artist Vermeer, he often illuminates his subjects with light passing through windows. Yentl, The Hotel New Hampshire, White Nights, and The Four Musketeers all contain striking examples of his use of this technique. His work is full of arresting images—a decaying apple in Robin and Marian, a huddle of athletes running across the sand in Chariots of Fire, an eviscerated serviceman in Catch-22, and the majestic Kenyan plains in Out of Africa. Yet while there are certain Watkin trademarks, it is incorrect to describe him as having a fixed style. He has always varied his techniques to fit narrative logic and to facilitate the director’s aims. One needs only compare Marat/Sade’s dizzy camera movements and unpredictable changes of focus (designed to simulate the feel of live theater) with the stately images of Out of Africa to appreciate the range of his professional vocabulary. Although his opinions on certain matters are unshakable—the superiority of Zeiss lenses over all their competitors, for example—after nearly 30 years in features, Watkin is still striving to attempt something new.

—Fiona Valentine, updated by Carrie O’Neill

WAXMAN, Franz

Composer. Nationality: Polish. Born: Franz Wachsmann in Königshütte, Germany (now Chorzow, Poland), 24 December 1906. Education: Studied at the Dresden Music Academy and the Berlin Conservatory. Career: Piano player in cafes, and with the Weintraub Syncopaters group; 1930—arranged and conducted Hollaender’s score for Der blaue Engel; 1933—original score for Lang’s Liliom; 1934–35—lived in Paris; 1935–36—worked for Paramount, then for MGM, 1936–43, Warner Bros., 1943–48, then freelance; 1947—founding director, Los Angeles Musical Festival; conducted widely in the US and Europe. Awards: Academy Awards for Sunset Boulevard, 1950 and A Place in the Sun, 1951. Died: In Los Angeles, California, 24 February 1967.

Films as Composer:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Das Kabinett des Dr. Larchefant</td>
<td>(Wohlmuth) (co)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>La Petite de Montparnasse</td>
<td>(Schwarz)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>Ich und die Kaiserin</td>
<td>(Hollaender) (co)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>Liliom (F. Lang)</td>
<td>(Boese); The Only Girl (Heart Song) (Hollaender)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>The Bride of Frankenstein</td>
<td>(Whale); Diamond Jim (Sutherland); The Affair of Susan (Neumann); His Night Out (Nigh); Three Kids and a Queen (Ludwig); East of Java</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Franz Waxman
(Melford); Remember Last Night? (Whale); The Great Impersonation (Crosland); Magnificent Obsession (Stahl)

1936 The Invisible Ray (Hillyer); Next Time We Love (Griffith); Don't Get Personal (Nigh); Love Before Breakfast (W. Lang); Satter's Gold (Cruze); Absolute Quiet (Seitz); Trouble for Two (The Suicide Club) (Roberts); Fury (F. Lang); The Devil Doll (Browning); His Brother's Wife (Browning); Love on the Run (Van Dyke)

1937 Personal Property (Van Dyke); A Day at the Races (Wood); Captains Courageous (Fleming); The Emperor's Candlesticks (Fitzmaurice); The Bride Wore Red (Arzner); Man-Proof (Thorpe)

1938 Arsène Lupin Returns (Fitzmaurice); Test Pilot (Fleming); Port of Seven Seas (Whale); Three Comrades (Borzage); Too Hot to Handle (Conway); The Shining Hour (Borzage); The Young in Heart (Wallace); Dramatic School (Sinclair); A Christmas Carol (Marin)

1939 At the Circus (Buzzell); Honolulu (Buzzell); The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn (Thorpe) (co); On Borrowed Time (Bucquet); Lady of the Tropics (Borzage)

1940 Strange Cargo (Borzage); Florian (Marin); Rebecca (Hitchcock); Sporting Blood (Simon); Boom Town (Conway); Escape (When the Door Opened) (LeRoy); Flight Command (Borzage); The Philadelphia Story (Cukor)

1941 The Bad Man (Two Gun Cupid) (Thorpe); Kathleen (Bucquet); Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (Fleming); Unfinished Business (La Cava); The Feminine Touch (Van Dyke); Henky Tonk (Conway); Suspicion (Hitchcock); Design for Scandal (Taurog)

1942 Seven Sweethearts (Borzage); Woman of the Year (Stevens); Her Cardboard Lover (Cukor); Journey for Margaret (Van Dyke); Reunion in France (Dassin)

1943 Air Force (Hawks); Edge of Darkness (Milestone); Old Acquaintance (V. Sherman)

1944 Destination Tokyo (Daves); In Our Time (V. Sherman); Mr. Skeffington (V. Sherman); The Very Thought of You (Daves)

1945 Objective, Burma! (Walsh); To Have and Have Not (Hawks); Hotel Berlin (Godfrey); God Is My Co-Pilot (Floryce); The Horn Blows at Midnight (Walsh); Pride of the Marines (Daves); Confidential Agent (Shumlin)

1946 Her Kind of Man (De Cordova)

1947 Nora Prentiss (V. Sherman); The Two Mrs. Carrolls (Godfrey); Possessed (Bernhardt); Cry Wolf (Godfrey); Dark Passage (Daves); The Unsuspected (Curtiz); That Hagen Girl (Godfrey); The Paradine Case (Hitchcock)

1948 Sorry, Wrong Number (Litvak); No Minor Vices (Milestone)

1949 Whiplash (Seiler); Rope of Sand (Dieterle); Alias Nick Beal (The Contact Man) (Farrow); Night unto Night (Siegel); Task Force (Daves)

1950 Johnny Holiday (Goldbeck); Night and the City (Dassin); The Furies (A. Mann); Sunset Boulevard (Wild); Dark City (Dieterle)

1951 Only the Valiant (Douglas); He Ran All the Way (Berry); A Place in the Sun (Stevens); Anne of the Indies (Tourneur); The Blue Veil (Bernhardt); Red Mountain (Dieterle); Decision Before Dawn (Litvak)

1952 Phone Call from a Stranger (Negulesco); My Cousin Rachel (Koster); Lure of the Wilderness (Negulesco)

1953 Come Back, Little Sheba (Daniel Mann); I, the Jury (Essex); Man on a Tightrope (Kazan); Stalag 17 (Wilder); A Lion Is in the Streets (Walsh); Botany Bay (Farrow)

1954 Prince Valiant (Hathaway); Elephant Walk (Dieterle); Demetrius and the Gladiators (Daves); Rear Window (Hitchcock); This Is My Love (Heisler); Miracle in the Rain (Maté)

1955 The Silver Chalice (Saville); Untamed (H. King); Mister Roberts (Ford and LeRoy); The Virgin Queen (Koster); The Indian Fighter (De Toth)

1956 Crime in the Streets (Siegel); Back from Eternity (Farrow)

1957 The Spirit of St. Louis (Wilder); Peyton Place (Robson); Sayonara (Logan)

1958 Run Silent, Run Deep (Wise); Home Before Dark (LeRoy)

1959 Count Your Blessings (Negulesco); The Nun's Story (Zinnemann); Career (Anthony); Beloved Infidel (H. King)

1960 The Story of Ruth (Koster); Cimarron (A. Mann); Sunrise at Campobello (Donohue)

1961 Return to Peyton Place (J. Ferrer); My Geisha (Cardiff); King of the Roaring Twenties—The Story of Arnold Rothstein (Newman)

1962 Hemingway's Adventures of a Young Man (Ritt); Taras Bulba (Lee Thompson)

1966 Lost Command (Robson)

1967 The Longest Hundred Miles (Weis)

Films as Musical Director:

1930 Der blaue Engel (von Sternberg)

1934 Music in the Air (May)

1939 The Ice Follies of 1939 (Conway) (co)

1940 I Love You Again (Van Dyke)

1942 I Married a Witch (Clair)

1945 Roughly Speaking (Curtiz); San Antonio (Butler and Walsh)

1947 Humoresque (Negulesco)

1957 Love in the Afternoon (Wild)

1958 Dino (Carr)

Publications

By WAXMAN: articles—

In Film Score, edited by Tony Thomas, South Brunswick, New Jersey, 1979.
Soundtrack! (Hollywood), vol. 6, no. 21, March 1987.

On WAXMAN: articles—

Frankenstein, Alfred, in Film Music Notebook (Calabasas, California), Spring 1975.
Rivista del Cinematografo (Rome), April 1982.

* * *

Part of the ironic benefit bestowed on the American film industry by the Nazi regime, Franz Waxman was the most prominent of the German musicians who advanced the craft of film scoring in Hollywood. Aside from his distinguished work in films, Waxman was a fine conductor, and invested much of his time in creating and guiding the Los Angeles Music Festival, which began in 1947 and lasted until his death 20 years later. He won Oscars for guiding the Los Angeles Music Festival, which began in 1947 and lasted until his death 20 years later. He won Oscars for

There are still too many who look down their noses at anything written for films. This is a very silly attitude, and it does not exist in Europe, where critics have not condemned composers because they write for the screen.”

—Tony Thomas

THE WESTMORE FAMILY

Makeup artists. George: Born in Newport, Isle of Wight, England, 27 June 1879. Mont: Born Montague George Westmore in Newport, Isle of Wight, 22 July 1902. Perc: Born Percival Harry Westmore in Canterbury, Kent, 1904 (twin of Ern). Ern: Born Ernest Henry Westmore in Canterbury, Kent, 1904 (twin of Perc). Wally: Born Walter James Westmore in Canterbury, Kent, 1906. Bud: Born Hamilton Adolph Westmore in Los Angeles, California, 1918. Frank: Born in Maywood, California, 13 April 1923. Education: George and his four oldest sons left school as youths to begin work as wigmakers or hairdressers; Bud and Frank attended various military and other schools; Frank graduated from Hollywood High School, 1938. Military Service: George: served in the British Army during Boer War. Frank: 1943–45—served in US Coast Guard: makeup artist for Coast Guard touring show Tars and Spars. Family: George: married 1) Ada Savage, 1901; 19 children, including the six sons listed above, a daughter Dorothy, and others who died young; 2) Anita Salazar, 1925; daughter: Patricia. Mont: married 1) Edith McCarrier (divorced); sons: Mont, Jr., Marvin, and Michael; 2) Cora Williams; 3) remarried Edith McCarrier, 1934. Perc: married 1) Virginia Thomas, 1924 (divorced 1936); daughters: Norma and Virginia; 2) the actress Gloria Dickson, 1938 (divorced 1940); 3) Julietta Novis, 1941; 4) Margaret Donovan, 1942; 5) Ola Carroll, 1951. Ern: married 1) Venida Snyder, 1922 (divorced 1929); daughter: Muriel; 2) Ethelene Claire, 1930; daughter: Lynn; 3) Peggy Kent, 1940 (divorced 1940); 4) Betty Harron, 1941. Wally: married Edwina Shelton; son: James; daughter: Ann. Bud: married 1) the actress Martha Raye, 1937 (divorced 1937); 2) the actress Rosemary Lane, 1941 (divorced 1954); daughter: Bridget; 3) Jeanne Shores, 1955; sons: Robert, Timothy, and Charles; daughter: Melinda. Frank: married 1) Fran Shore, 1950 (divorced 1951); 2) Johnnie Ray Rector, 1955 (divorced 1955); 3) Gloria Christian, 1968. Career: George: 1901—opened hair dressing salon, Newport, then worked in Canterbury, Kent, until after 1906; in Montreal, Toronto, and Quebec, Canada, and Pittsburgh, San Antonio, New Orleans, Buffalo, St. Louis, and Washington, D.C.; 1913—added makeup to his repertory, Cleveland; began teaching Perc and Ern the art of wigmaking when they were nine; 1917—worked at Maison Cesare, Los Angeles, then for Selig Studio (opening the first film studio makeup department), Triangle, and other studios: responsible for Mary Pickford’s curls in the late 1910s. Mont: worked in lumberyard, then as busboy at Famous Players-Lasky studio; valet, then makeup artist for Rudolph Valentino (created the clean Latin look); and freelance artist for Gloria Swanson, Clara Bow, and Sonia Henie; worked for Selznick International Studios in late 1930s. Perc: worked at Maison Cesare from age 16, then worked on individual actors’ hair and makeup; 1923–50—established and headed makeup department at First National (later...
Bud Westmore

Warner Bros.; 1950s—regular guest on Art Linkletter’s House Party show (radio and TV), and special makeup artist on Queen for a Day for 11 years; then worked at Universal for two years, and again at Warner Bros.; did the TV series The Munsters and The Bill Cosby Show. Ern: 1924–28—worked at Warner Bros., then at RKO, 1929–31, 20th Century-Fox, 1935–39, then freelance; 1950s—did Hollywood Glamour Show on TV; cosmetic salesman in New York. Wally: worked as mechanic, then at Brunton studio and Warner Bros.; 1926–69—head of makeup department, Paramount. 1935–65—Mont, Perc, Ern, and Wally set up House of Westmore beauty salon, run in later years mainly by Perc (Ern sold his share, 1939). Bud: apprentice to Perc at Warner Bros. at age 15, then worked at 20th Century-Fox and as head of makeup department at Eagle-Lion Studio; 1946–70—head of makeup department, Universal. Frank: worked at House of Westmore from age 15, then apprentice at Paramount, 1942; worked at Paramount after the war, then freelance, including the TV series Bonanza, It Takes a Thief, The Jimmy Stewart Show, Planet of the Apes, and Kung Fu. Award: Ern: Special Academy Award for Cimarron, 1930. Died: George died (suicide) 12 July 1931; Mont died of a heart attack in Hollywood, April 1940; Ern died of a heart attack in New York City, 1 February 1968; Perc died of a heart attack in Hollywood, 30 September 1970; Wally died 3 July 1973; Frank died 14 May 1985.

Films as Hairdresser or Makeup Artist (selected list):

George:

1922 Smilin’ Through (Franklin)
1924 Secrets (Borzage)

Mont:

1922 Blood and Sand (Niblo)
1923 Monsieur Beaucaire (Olcott)
1924 A Sainted Devil (Henabery)
1925 Cobra (Henabery); The Eagle (Brown)
1926 Son of the Sheik (Fitzmaurice); The King of Kings (DeMille)
1929 Mexicali Rose (Kenton)
1932 Scarface (Hawks)
1934 The House of Rothschild (Werker)
1935 Mutiny on the Bounty (Lloyd)
1939 Intermezzo (Ratoff); Gone with the Wind (Fleming)
1940 Rebecca (Hitchcock)

Perc:

1925 Stella Dallas (H. King); The Lost World (Hoyt)
1934 Bordertown (Mayo)
1935 Captain Blood (Curtiz); A Midsummer Night’s Dream (Reinhardt and Dieterle)
1936 Cain and Mabel (Bacon); The Story of Louis Pasteur (Dieterle); The Walking Dead (Curtiz)
1937 The Life of Emile Zola (Dieterle); Dead End (Wyler)
1939 The Private Lives of Elizabeth and Essex (Curtiz); The Return of Dr. X (V. Sherman); Juarez (Dieterle); The Hunchback of Notre Dame (Dieterle)
1941 Kings Row (Wood)
1942 Casablanca (Curtiz)
1951 The Blue Veil (Bernhardt)
1956 The Catered Affair (Brooks)
1966 Munster, Go Home! (Bellamy)
1969 The Arrangement (Kazan)
1970 There Was a Crooked Man . . . (Mankiewicz)

Ern:

1926 The Sea Beast (Webb)
1930 Cimarron (Ruggles)
1931 Way Back Home (Old Greatheart) (Seiter)
1932 A Bill of Divorcement (Cukor)
1937 Lost Horizon (Capra)

Wally:

1931 Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (Manouelian); Island of Lost Souls (Kenton)
1933 Alice in Wonderland (McLeod)
1936 The General Died at Dawn (Mielstone)
1938 Spawn of the North (Hathaway); Professor Beware (Nugent)
1942 The Great Man’s Lady (Wellman)
1961 Breakfast at Tiffany’s (Edwards); One-Eyed Jacks (Brando)
1962 The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance (Ford)
1963 Hud (Ritt)
1964 The Carpetbaggers (Dmytryk); Lady in a Cage (Grauman); Robinson Crusoe on Mars (Haskin)
1965 Harlow (Douglas)
1966 The Oscar (Rouse); This Property Is Condemned (Pollack)
1967 Barefoot in the Park (Saks)
1968 The Odd Couple (Saks); Will Penny (Gries)
1970 The Molly Maguires (Ritt); There Was a Crooked Man . . . (Mankiewicz)

Bud:

1948 Mr. Peabody and the Mermaid (Pichel)
1954 The Creature from the Black Lagoon (Arnold)
1955 Tarantula (Arnold); This Island Earth (Newman)
1956 Creature Walks among Us (Sherwood); The Mole People (Vogel)
1957 Deadly Mantis (Juran); Land Unknown (Vogel); Man of a Thousand Faces (Pevney)
1961 Flower Drum Song (Koster); Lover Come Back (Delbert Mann)
1962 Lonely Are the Brave (Miller); That Touch of Mink (Delbert Mann); To Kill a Mockingbird (Mulligan)
1963 The List of Adrian Messenger ( Huston); Captain Newman, M.D. (Miller)
1965 I Saw What You Did (Castle); The War Lord (Schaffner)
1966 Madame X (Rich); The Plainsman (Rich)
1967 Thoroughly Modern Millie (Mill); The War Wagon (Kennedy)
1968 Madigan (Siegel)
1969 Death of a Gunfighter (Smither); Sweet Charity (Russo); Tell Them Willie Boy Is Here (Polonsky)
1970 Airport (Seaton); The Forbin Project (Sargent)
1973 Soylent Green (Fleischer)

Frank:

1942 Beyond the Blue Horizon (Santell)
1946 Taras and Spars (Green)
1947 Unconquered (DeMille)
1948 Let’s Live a Little (Wallace)
1950 Storm Warning (Heisler)
1952 Rancho Notorious (F. Lang)
1953 All I Desire (Sirk)
1954 Abbott and Costello Meet Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (Lamont)
1956 The Mountain (Dmytryk); The Ten Commandments (DeMille)
1957 The Joker is Wild (C. Vidor); The Buster Keaton Story (Sheldon)
1958 Hot Spell (Daniel Mann); Houseboat (Shavelson); The Matchmaker (Anthony); The Buccaneer (Quinn)
1960 The Rat Race (Mulligan)
1962 My Geisha (Cardiff); Two for the Seesaw (Wise)
1963 Irma La Douce (Wilder)
1964 What a Way to Go! (Lee Thompson)
1965 The Flight of the Phoenix (Aldrich)
1970 Two Mules for Sister Sara (Siegel)
1971 Fool’s Paradise (McLaglen); The Beguiled (Siegel)
1972 Kong Fu (Thorpe)
1974 The Towering Inferno (Guillermin and Allen); Mr. Ricco (Bogart)
1975 Farewell, My Lovely (Richards)

Publications

By WESTMORE family: book—

By WESTMORE family: articles—

On WESTMORE family: articles—

Essman, S., “Behind the Masks,” in Cinefex (Riverside), December 1996.

***

A family of makeup artists all working in Hollywood would deserve a place in film history on this basis alone. However, while the six sons of George Westmore (himself best known for restyling Rudolph Valentino’s hair) may not have all achieved the same degree of prominence, their careers offer more than mere curiosity value. Employed at different studios, most of their work was of the kind that does not attract attention to itself. The best known of the brothers, Bud and Wally, gained their fame through work in the horror/fantasy field where the makeup artist has the most scope for the creation of spectacular effects.

Bud Westmore had the best opportunities to make a name for himself, in that from the mid-1940s until 1970 he was head of makeup at Universal Studios (he took over from Jack Pierce, the man responsible for Boris Karloff’s monster makeup in Frankenstein [1931]). The studio’s move from horror to science-fiction brought about the need for bizarre new creations. Of these, the monster in The Creature from the Black Lagoon, co-created with Jack Kevan, is Bud Westmore’s most famous work. Though obviously a man (Ricou Browning) in a rubber suit, the design is striking, and some of the eerie underwater scenes are well enough staged to make audiences suspend their disbelief. Less well known, but almost as impressive, is the Mutilana Mutant from This Island Earth, with bulging eyes, visible brains and pincers. Perhaps the most ambitious assignment on which he worked was one outside the fantasy genre, the 1957 bio-pic of Lon Chaney, Man of a Thousand Faces. If ultimately he failed to recreate the latter’s makeup designs for James Cagney, it is no reflection on his skill. No one but Chaney would be willing to endure the extremely painful devices he employed to distort his face for the required grotesque effect.

The lurid designs created by Bud Westmore for 1950s science-fiction sagas work well within the context of the overall films. Wally Westmore’s work in fantasy films, while exhibiting talent, does on occasion go over the top. His makeup for the 1932 version of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, which helped Fredric March win an Oscar, is hopelessly overdone, making the embodiment of the doctor’s perverse desires look like a comical ape-man. The ugly ‘’’manimals’’ in Island of Lost Souls are far more effective.

Perc Westmore seems by and large to have pursued a more mainstream career in the makeup field. His most notable departure into the outlandish was Charles Laughton’s makeup in the 1939 remake of The Hunchback of Notre Dame. Aided by George Bau, Westmore created an image of extreme ugliness (to the extent of having one of Quasimodo’s eyes lower than the other) which, in conjunction with Laughton’s acting, is at the same time very touching.

It may seem unfair to acclaim work that by its very nature must draw audience attention to itself while more subtle effects go unappreciated. There might be a case for arguing that The Creature from the Black Lagoon required no more skill than Frank Westmore’s transformation of Shirley Maclaine into a Japanese girl for My Geisha. Had none of the brothers ever ventured into the realms of the monstrous or bizarre, however, it is unlikely that they would be so well remembered, whatever their talent. Not even membership in a Hollywood family dynasty can compare with bringing to life an archetypal screen monster.

—Daniel O’Brien

WEXLER, Haskell

Films as Cinematographer:

1955 The Living City (+ d—short); Picnic (Logan) (2nd unit)
1959 Five Bold Women (Lopez-Portillo)
1960 The Savage Eye (Maddow, Meyers, and Strick); Studs Lonigan (Lerner)
1961 The Hoodlum Priest (Kershner); Angel Baby (Wendkos) (co); Jangadero (Guggenheim)
1962 T for Tumbleweed (short)
1963 A Face in the Rain (Kershner); America, America (Kazan)
1964 The Best Man (Schaffner)
1965 The Loved One (Richardson) (+ co-pr); The Bus (+ d, pr, sc)
1966 Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf? (Nichols)
1967 In the Heat of the Night (Jewison)
1968 The Thomas Crown Affair (Jewison)
1969 Medium Cool (+ d, co-pr, sc)
1970 Interviews with My Lai Veterans (Strick—short) (co); Gimme Shelter (D. & A. Mayes) (co)
1971 Brazil: A Report on Torture (+ co-d, co-pr); Interview with President Allende (+ co-d, co-pr)
1972 Trial of the Catonsville Nine (Davidson)
1973 American Graffiti (Lucas) (consultant)
1974 Introduction to the Enemy (+ co-d, co-pr, co-sc)
1975 One Flew over the Cuckoo’s Nest (Forman) (co)
1976 Underground (+ co-d, co-pr, co-sc); Bound for Glory (Ashby)
1978 Coming Home (Ashby); Days of Heaven (Malick)
1980 No Nukes (Schlossberg, Goldberg, and Potenza)
1981 Second Hand Hearts (Ashby)
1982 Lookin’ to Get Out (Ashby); The Kid from Nowhere (Bridges) (special ph); Richard Pryor Live on the Sunset Strip (Layton)
1983 The Man Who Loved Women (Edwards); Bus II (co-d only)
1985 Latino (+ d)
1987 Matewan (Sayles)
1988 Colors (Hopper)
1989 Three Fugitives (Veber); Blaze (Shelton)
WEXLER

WRITERS AND PRODUCTION ARTISTS, 4th EDITION

Haskell Wexler (center)

1990  Other People’s Money (Jewison); The Babe (Hiller); Through the Wire (Rosenblum—for TV); To the Moon, Alice (Nelson—short)
1991  Other People’s Money (Jewison)
1992  The Babe (Hiller)
1994  The Secret of Roan Inish (Sayles); Canadian Bacon (Moore)
1996  Mulholland Falls (Tamahari); The Bishop, the Warrior and Rebellion in Chiapas (Landau—doc-in-progress) (co-pr); The Rich Man’s Wife (A. H. Jones)
1999  Limbo (Sayles); Bus Rider’s Union

Publications

By WEXLER: articles—

Film Quarterly (Berkeley, California), Spring 1968.
Cinéma (Paris), May 1970.
Kosmorama (Copenhagen), September 1970.

Take One (Montreal), no. 3, 1972.
Sight and Sound (London), Winter 1975.
“How to Convert a 16mm Zoom Lens into a 35mm Zoom Lens,” in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), January 1975.
Film Français (Paris), 23 April 1976.
Seminar in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), June and July 1977.
Filmmakers Newsletter (Ward Hill, Massachusetts), March 1978.
Cinémagraphe (Paris), March 1979.
On One Flew over the Cuckoo’s Nest in American Film (Washington, D.C.), September 1979.
Filme (Berlin), no. 6, 1980.
In Masters of Light: Conversations with Contemporary Cinematographers, by Dennis Schaefer and Larry Salvato, Berkeley, California, 1984.
Haskell Wexler has worked alternately and successfully inside and outside the commercial film industry throughout his career. He has a reputation as a radical documentary filmmaker, yet he is also an Academy Award-winning Hollywood cameraman. Wexler’s cinematography credits include documentaries, Hollywood features, and television commercials. The element which these various works share is Wexler’s camera technique. He consciously brings his experience in documentary film to every project in which he is involved.

During the 1950s Wexler learned his craft working in the American cinéma vérité style of documentary film. His first feature was an uncredited work on Irvin Kershner’s Stakeout on Dope Street. Kershner also came from a documentary background. The two experimented, mixing cinéma vérité and fiction narrative conventions. The film was shot on location rather than in a studio, and hand-held cameras were used. Wexler continued to incorporate the visual techniques of documentary film into features, including two more with Kershner in subsequent years. The harsh, realistic style of such films as The Savage Eye, America, America, and The Loved One is characteristic of his early work in features.

Realism is still emphasized in Wexler’s later cinematic style, although the documentary elements vary in degree from film to film. He uses nonfiction film techniques creatively to heighten the tension and mood of a narrative film. In Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf?, a work about intensely personal emotions, Wexler effectively uses a hand-held camera more forcefully to project the tension in some scenes. His camera work gives a gritty reality to the dust storms and shanty towns in Bound for Glory. The documentary-style interview scenes with Vietnam veterans in Coming Home remind viewers that the fictional drama represents actual issues. The realistic portrayal of the violence-ridden streets of East Los Angeles in Colors is too powerful for some viewers and even some critics.

Wexler’s documentary experience is also evident in films that have a more traditional cinematic look. In Other People’s Money, Wexler captures the visual reality and personality of a small New England town and its resident wire and cable company. Both are so stable and old-fashioned that the company becomes too static to deal with a Wall Street takeover. In The Babe, he visually conveys a behind-the-scenes look at baseball’s dark, seedy side.

While Wexler has worked in feature films since the 1950s, he has never stopped making documentaries. The subject matter of these films has often been politically controversial—the Vietnam War, torture practices of governments, nuclear power. Because of their theater circulation, Interviews with My Lai Veterans and No Nukes are probably the best-known documentaries that Wexler has photographed. His most recent project to date is The Bishop, the Warrior and Rebellion in Chiapas, a documentary-in-progress on the current Zapatista rebellion in Mexico, directed by Saul Landau.

The two feature films that Wexler directed, Medium Cool and Latino, received extremely limited promotion and distribution because of their political content. Medium Cool is an examination of responsibility and accountability in the television news industry and in government set, in Chicago during the 1968 Democratic Convention. The film’s form complements its themes. Wexler uses many of the conventions of reportage-style documentary film for this feature. His more recent work Latino presents a strong political position on American foreign policy in Nicaragua in the mid-80s. Wexler uses a more conventional narrative form than in Medium Cool. Documentarly technique is used, as in previous features, for effect in certain scenes. Wexler decided to use a more conventional form for Latino because he felt it would appeal to contemporary audiences more than a documentary format.

—Marie Saeli
1941 That Hamilton Woman (Lady Hamilton) (A. Korda); Keeper of the Flame (Cukor); The Jungle Book (Rudyard Kipling’s Jungle Book) (Z. Korda); Cairo (Van Dyke)
1942 Bataan (Garnett);
1943 Laura (Preminger); Dragon Seed (Conway and Bucquet);
1944 Thirty Seconds over Tokyo (LeRoy); Winged Victory (Cukor); Wing and a Prayer (Hathaway)
1945 Hangover Square (Brahm); Leave Her to Heaven (Stahl); A Tree Grows in Brooklyn (Kazan); The Dolly Sisters (Cummings) (co); The House on 92nd Street (Hathaway);
1946 Fallen Angel (Preminger)
1947 Anna and the King of Siam (Cromwell); Cluny Brown (Lubitsch); My Darling Clementine (Ford); Centennial Summer (Preminger);
1948 Wake Up and Dream (Bacon);
1949 Thieves’ Highway (Dassin); Whirlpool (Preminger); Pinkys (Kazan); Chicken Every Sunday (Seaton); Twelve O’Clock High (H. King); Mother Is a Freshman (Bacon); Slattery’s Hurricane (De Toth); I Was a Male War Bride (Hawks);
1950 Panic in the Streets (Kazan); Cheaper by the Dozen (W. Lang); All about Eve (Mankiewicz); Broken Arrow (Daves);
1951 Fourteen Hours (Hathaway); Bird of Paradise (Daves); The House on Telegraph Hill (Wise); David and Bathsheba (H. King); Halls of Montezuma (Milestone); Fixed Bayonets (Preminger);
1952 Deadline—U.S.A. (Brooks); My Cousin Rachel (Koster); Viva Zapata! (Kazan); The President’s Lady (Levin); The Snows of Kilimanjaro (H. King); Five Fingers (Mankiewicz); Monkey Business (Hawks); Return of the Texan (Daves); The Model and the Marriage Broker (Cukor); Red Skies of Montana (Newman); Diplomatic Courier (Hathaway);
1953 The Robe (Koster); Call Me Madam (W. Lang); Titanic! (Negulesco); Gentlemen Prefer Blondes (Hawks); The Farmer Takes a Wife (Levin); Man in the Attic (Fregonese); Treasure of the Golden Condor (Daves); Dangerous Crossing (Newman); How to Marry a Millionaire (Negulesco); Pickup on South Street (Fuller); White Witch Doctor (Hathaway); The I Don’t Care Girl (Bacon); Niagara (Hathaway); King of the Khyber Rifles (H. King)
1954 River of No Return (Preminger); Three Coins in the Fountain (Negulesco); Garden of Evil (Hathaway); The Egyptian (Curtiz); Desiree (Koster); Hell and High Water (Fuller); The Siege at Red River (Mate); Demetrius and the Gladiators (Daves);
1955 Love Is a Many-Splendored Thing (H. King); The Racers (Hathaway); The Girl in the Red Velvet Swing (Fleischer);
1956 Bus Stop (Logan); Teenage Rebel (Goulding); The King and I (W. Lang); The Bottom of the Bottle (Hathaway); Carrousel (H. King); The Lieutenant Wore Skirts (Tashlin); The Man in the Gray Flannel Suit (Johnson); The Revolt of Mamie Stover (Walsh); Bigger Than Life (Ray); The Lazy Wagon (Daves);
1957 The Sun Also Rises (H. King); A Hatful of Rain (Zinnemann);
1958 South Pacific (Logan); A Certain Smile (Negulesco); The Young Lions (Dmytryk); From Hell to Texas (Hathaway);
1959 Compulsion (Fleischer); Blue Denim (Dunne); Journey to the Center of the Earth (Levin); A Farewell to Arms (C. Vidor); The Diary of Anne Frank (Stevens); The Sound and the Fury (Ritt); Woman Obsessed (Hathaway); Say One for Me (Tashlin);
1960 From the Terrace (Robson); Wild River (Kazan); Wake Me When It’s Over (LeRoy); Seven Thieves (Preminger); Can-Can (W. Lang)
1961 Advertise and Consent (Preminger)
1962 The Cardinal (Preminger)
1963 The Best Man (Schaffner)
1964 In Harm’s Way (Preminger)
1965 The Big Mouth (Lewis)
1966 The Swimmer (Perry); Where Angels Go . . . Trouble Follows! (Neilson)
1967 Marooned (J. Sturges)
1968 Tell Me That You Love Me, Junie Moon (Preminger)
1969 The Love Machine (Haley); Doctors’ Wives (Schaefer)
1970 Bless the Beasts and Children (Kramer); Stand Up and Be Counted (Cooper)
1975 Posse (K. Douglas)
Lyle Wheeler began his career in art direction on a high note, precociously winning an Academy Award for Gone with the Wind. His role was to execute the sets which were painstakingly sketched by William Cameron Menzies, the production designer. Wheeler’s talent for creating historically accurate sets is not only evident in this epic but is also seen in his later films, such as That Hamilton Woman (with Vincent Korda), about the lives of Lord Nelson and Lady Hamilton, and The Robe.

Wheeler’s black-and-white films are characterized by a sharp, clean look. In the contemporary psychological thrillers Rebecca and Laura, the sharp shadows cast on and around the characters became more overbearing during tense moments. Though Wheeler’s black-and-white films are much admired, he regretted that some of them could not have been made in color. The Academy Award-winning Anna and the King of Siam was made in black-and-white because of a painters’ strike. To compensate for the lack of color, Wheeler built the sets of plaster treated to appear in varying values. The result is a monochrome film so vivid that it almost convinces the audience that it was shot in color.

Wheeler’s color films are as beautiful as his black-and-white. He was able to design the Anna and the King story in bold, stunning colors when he worked on the musical version, The King and I. Wheeler even made the unusual decision to shoot one of the noir films, Leave Her to Heaven, in color. Instead of the dark, rain-soaked streets typical of that genre, this tale of deception is set effectively against bright country lawns and sunny skies.

From 1944 to 1960, Wheeler was supervising art director at 20th Century-Fox. As such, he oversaw the visual aspects of each film from its inception, as he worked with the writer, scouted locations with the art director assigned to each film, and approved all sketches.

During his career as an art director, Wheeler was in on the ground floor of many advances in film technology. He experimented with Technicolor as early as 1936 when he worked on The Garden of Allah with producer David O. Selznick. He led 20th Century-Fox through the transition from black-and-white to color production and from the standard shot-size to CinemaScope.

—Lois Miklas

Publications

By WHEELER: article—

Film Comment (New York), May-June 1978.

On WHEELER: article—

Obituary in Classic Images (Muscatine), March 1990.

---

Albert Whitlock

Awards: Academy Award for Earthquake, 1974; Special Achievement Award, 1975. Died: 17 October 1982.

Films as Special Effects Technician:

1955 The Man Who Knew Too Much (Hitchcock)
1961 Greyfriars Bobby (Chaffey)
1963 Captain Newman, M.D. (Miller)
1964 I’d Rather Be Rich (Smight); Island of the Blue Dolphins (Clark)
1965 Mirage (Dmytryk); Shenandoah (McLaglen); Ship of Fools (Kramer); That Funny Feeling (Thorpe); The War Lord (Schaffner)
1966 Beau Geste (Heyes); Blindfold (Dunne); Munster, Go Home! (Bellamy); The Rare Breed (McLaglen)
1967 The King’s Pirate (Weis); The Reluctant Astronaut (Montagne); Rough Night in Jericho (Laven); Tobruk (Hiller); Thoroughly Modern Millie (Hill); The War Wagon (Kennedy)
1968 The Ballad of Josie (McLaglen); Counterpoint (Nelson); Hellsfighters (McLaglen); In Enemy Country (Keller); P.J. (Guillermin); The Shatiest Gun in the West (Rafkin)
1969 The Learning Tree (Parks); Topaz (Hitchcock)
1970 Catch-22 (Nichols); The Forbin Project (Sargent); Skullduggery (Douglas and Wilson)
1971 Diamonds Are Forever (Hamilton) (co)

---

WHITLOCK, Albert

Special Effects Technician. Nationality: British. Born: London, England, 1915. Family: Married; two sons. Career: 1930s—worked at a variety of jobs in British film industry; then painted backdrops...
1972  Short Walk to Daylight (Shear)
1973  The Sting (Hill)
1974  Day of the Locust (Schlesinger); The Hindenburg (Wise); The Man Who Would Be King (Huston)
1975  Bound for Glory (Ashby)
1977  The Car (Silverstein); MacArthur (Sargent); High Anxiety (Brooks); Airport '77 (Jameson); Exorcist II: The Heretic (Boorman)
1979  Dracula (Badham); The Prisoner of Zenda (Quine); The Wiz (Lumet)
1980  Cheech and Chong's Next Movie (High Encounters of the Ultimate Kind) (Chong); The Blues Brothers (Landis)
1981  Ghost Story (Irvin); Heartbeeps (Arkush); History of the World, Part I (Brooks)
1982  Missing (Costa Gavras); The Thing (Carpenter); Cat People (Schrader); The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas (Higgins)
1983  Psycho II (Franklin)
1984  The Lonely Guy (Hiller); Dune (Lynch); Greystoke: The Legend of Tarzan (Hudson)
1985  Red Sonja (Fleischer)

Other Films:

1963  The Birds (Hitchcock) (design)
1964  Marnie (Hitchcock) (design)
1966  Torn Curtain (Hitchcock) (design)
1985  Red Sonja (Fleischer)

Publications

By WHITLOCK: articles—

On WHITLOCK: articles—

As one of Hollywood’s leading special effects artists, Albert Whitlock was in the unusual position of being most successful when he was least recognized. He was a master of matte painting, and often his work is on the screen for only a few seconds. Through his art, he was able to create for the screen images that are impossible to achieve realistically, whether they be from periods of the past, such as 1930s Chicago (The Sting) or Los Angeles (Day of the Locust), or disasters, such as two for which his illusions won Academy Awards, Earthquake and The Hindenburg.

The space and science-fiction films of the late 1970s and 1980s focused attention on special effects artists in Hollywood. Generally, these effects were obvious ones, involving other planets, prehistoric times, fantastic robots, or organic creatures. These kind of effects did not interest Whitlock, whose idea of a great effect was one that the public does not recognize as one. Whitlock’s art furthers the illusion that what is seen on the screen is “real” and causes the thrill that often accompanies such illusionism. Whitlock was an artist of the natural world, creating images of things that cannot be filmed realistically because of their violent nature, such as an earthquake or a dust-storm (Bound for Glory), or because of their cost to build, such as an entire castle (Dracula and The Prisoner of Zenda) or a mountaintop city (The Man Who Would Be King).

Whitlock’s art made movies cheaper to produce. His was a world of matte paintings, models, and filming at different speeds. In his emphasis on illusionism, Whitlock can be seen as part of an artistic tradition going back to the Italian Renaissance and the invention of perspective to make two-dimensional pictures appear to be windows on the world. In his painting style, however, he considered himself closer to Impressionism, than to academic painting because he was more interested in the study of phenomena and the effects of light than in objects themselves.

In the late 1950s, Whitlock was influenced by working under Peter Ellenshaw, an effects supervisor for Disney studios. He was associated with Universal from 1963 and worked with a number of art directors, including Robert Boyle (The Birds). Though his work may go unrecognized because it is so convincing, Whitlock’s artistry with special effects is important in understanding three concepts: the collaboration necessary in movie-making, the need to use effects for budgetary reasons, and the fact that film is a two-dimensional illusionistic medium.

—Floyd W. Martin

WILCOX, Herbert

Films as Producer:

1922  The Wonderful Story (Cutts); Flames of Passion (Cutts)
1923  Paddy-the-Next-Best-Thing (Cutts); Chu Chin Chow (+ d)
Herbert Wilcox

1924  Southern Love (+ d); Decameron Nights (+ d)
1925  The Only Way (+ d)
1926  Nell Gwyn (+ d, sc); London (Limehouse) (+ d, sc)
1927  Tiptoes (+ d, sc); Madame Pompadour (+ d); Mumtie (+ d);
The Luck of the Navy (Paul) (co-pr)
1928  Dawn (+ d); The Bondman (+ d);
1929  The Woman in White (+ d); Splinters (Raymond)
1930  Rookery Nook (Walls); The Loves of Robert Burns (+ d);
Wolves (Wanted Men) (de Courville); Canaries Sometimes Sing (Walls);
Plunder (Walls); Tons of Money (Walls)
1931  Chance of a Night-Time (co-d, Lynn); Carnival (+ d); Almost a Divorce (Varney); The Speckled Band (Raymond); Up for the Cup (Raymond); Mischief (Raymond)
1932  Thark (Walls); The Flag Lieutenant (Edwards); Say It with Music (Raymond); The Love Contract (Selpin); The Blue
Danube (+ d); Goodnight Vienna (Magic Night); Mayor's Next (Rogers); Money Means Nothing (Templeman); Leap Year (Walls)
1933  Yes Mr. Brown (+ d); The King’s Cup (+ d); Bitter Sweet (+ d);
Sorrell and Son (Raymond); The Little Damozel (+ d);
Just My Luck (Raymond); Up for the Derby (Rogers);
The Blarney Stone (Walls); Night of the Garter (Raymond);
Summer Lightning (Rogers); Up to the Neck (Raymond);
That’s a Good Girl (Buchanan); Trouble (Rogers)
1934  The Queen’s Affair (+ d); Nell Gwyn (+ d); The King of Paris
(Raymond); It’s a Cop (Raymond); Girls Please! (Raymond)
1935  Brewer’s Millions (Freeland); Escape Me Never (Czanner); Peg of Old Drury (+ d); Where’s George? (The Hope of His Side) (Raymond and Young); Come out of the Pantry
(Raymond)
1936  Limelight (+ d); The Three Maxims (+ d); This’ll Make You
Whistle (+ d); Fame (Hiscott); Millions (Hiscott)
1937  The Gang Show (Goulding); The Frog (Raymond); The Rat
(Goulding); Sunset in Vienna (Suicide Legion) (Walker);
London Melody (Girl in the Street) (+ d); Our Fighting
Navy (Torpedoed) (+ d); Victoria the Great (+ d);
Splinters in the Air (Goulding)
1938  Blondes for Danger (Raymond); Sixty Glorious Years (+ d);
Return of the Frog (Elvey)
1939  Nurse Edith Cavell (+ d)
1940  Irene (+ d); No, No Nanette (+ d)
1941  Sunny (+ d)
1942  They Flew Alone (Wings and the Woman) (+ d); Queen Victoria (recedited amalgamation of Victoria the Great and Sixty Glorious Years) (+ d)
1943  Forever and a Day (co-pr,+ co-d); The Yellow Canary (+ d)
1945  I Live in Grosvenor Square (A Yank in London) (+ d)
1946  Piccadilly Incident (+ d)
1947  The Courtneys of Curzon Street (Kathy’s Love Affair) (+ d)
1948  Spring in Park Lane (+ d); Elizabeth of Ladymead (+ d)
1949  Maytime in Mayfair (+ d)
1950  Odette (+ d); Into the Blue (co-pr, + d)
1951  The Lady with the Lamp (+ d)
1952  Derby Day (+ d)
1953  Trent’s Last Case (+ d); The Beggar’s Opera (Brook) (co-pr);
Laughing Anne (+ d)
1954  Trouble in the Glen (+ d); Lilacs in the Spring (Let’s Make Up) (+ d)
1955  King’s Rhapsody (+ d)
1956  My Teenage Daughter (+ d)
1957  Yangtze Incident (Battle Hell) (Anderson)
1958  The Man Who Wouldn’t Talk (+ d)
1959  The Lady Is a Square (+ d); The Navy Lark (Parry)

Films as Director Only:

1957  These Dangerous Years (Dangerous Youth)
1958  Wonderful Things
1959  The Heart of a Man

Publications

By WILCOX: book—

On WILCOX: books—

Low, Rachael, The History of the British Film 1918–1929, London, 1971.
Low, Rachael, The History of the British Film 1929–1939: Film
On WILCOX: articles—

* * *

The function of the film producer is so imprecise that most producers are perhaps best defined in terms of some other role. Of the three leading British producers between the wars, Michael Balcon was a studio boss; Alexander Korda was a mogul; and Herbert Wilcox was, above all, a showman.

Like most showmen, Wilcox regarded truth as a flexible commodity, and many of the claims he made for himself in his floridly entitled autobiography, 25,000 Sunsets, need to be treated with care. (Even his romantic Irish origins now seem doubtful; more recent research suggests he may have been born, not in County Cork as he gave out, but more prosaically in the south London suburb of Norwood.) But what is not disputed is that Wilcox was a key figure, along with Balcon, in establishing the British cinema on a reasonably sound financial basis during the crucial period of the twenties when it seemed in danger of going under to the Hollywood invaders.

Even before Balcon, Wilcox devised the survival strategy of importing American stars and German technical know-how to boost his films’ appeal and production values. Each of his productions was exploited to the hilt. “His plans,” Rachael Low noted (in her 1920s volume), “were always on a grand scale. Each film was a major property, not a little commodity.” When sound arrived, Wilcox lost no time in setting up his own British and Dominion Studios at Elstree, fully equipped with Western Electric Sound. The early thirties were his most prolific period as a producer. Gathering around him a stable of solid, journeyman directors, he oversaw a steady string of decently crafted movies, often featuring established theatrical stars like Jack Buchanan and Tom Walls, most of which did well at the box office.

If anything, he was too prolific. His partner, Richard Norton (quoted by Low in her thirties volume), described him as “the quickest man to start making pictures you ever saw; if you took your eyes off him for a moment two or three more would be on the way, and of course . . . you used up all your working capital.” After a financial crisis or two Wilcox was gradually persuaded to cut back and concentrate on a few big pictures each year—many of them, by this stage, starring Anna Neagle. He always had a flair for rooting out acting talent—Clive Brook and Madeleine Carroll were among those he brought to the screen—but it was his discovery of Neagle, and subsequent long partnership with her (both professional and personal) that shaped the rest of his filmmaking career.

Neagle was to star in almost all the films for which Wilcox is now best remembered. Before the war there were the grand historical pageants, with Neagle impersonating Nell Gwyn, Peg Woffington and, most famously, Queen Victoria. After the war came the string of escapist light comedies set in a high-society never-neverland—Spring in Park Lane, Maytime in Mayfair and the like. Neither cycle much impressed the critics—“Both the director and the star seem to labour under the impression that they are producing something important,” noted Graham Greene of Sixty Glorious Years—but for a while at least the public responded with enthusiasm.

In many ways Wilcox, though a far less pompous and more likable figure, had a good deal in common with Cecil B. DeMille. Both men prided themselves on having their fingers on (or, as Joe Mankiewicz suggested in DeMille’s case, up) the pulse of the public; both succeeded for much of their careers in operating as a virtually autonomous force within the industry. Both, quite early on, hit on a fairly simple audience-pleasing formula and stuck with it; and both, having started out as innovators known for making daring and even mildly scandalous films, saw public taste evolve past them while they stood still, so that they became outdated, almost ludicrous figures.

The main difference, of course, is that DeMille, the shrewder operator of the two, ended up outdated but rich, while Wilcox wound up outdated and broke, unable to adapt and blaming audiences for rejecting his offerings. “The public wants horror and sadism,” he complained after his bankruptcy in 1964. “I make pleasant films about pleasant people.”

“Pleasant”—in that revealing word may lie the reason why Wilcox now seems, when set beside Balcon, Korda, or Del Giudice, a marginal figure in the history of British cinema. Both as producer and director he set out to please his audiences, and very often succeeded. But the idea that he might try to challenge them, to overturn or subvert their assumptions—in short, that the cinema should aim to be anything beyond a medium of entertainment—never seems to have occurred to him. (Or if it did, he promptly dismissed the idea.) Herbert Wilcox’s success as a filmmaker was his ability, during the greater part of his career, to gauge just what the public wanted and give it to them. But in the long run, that was also his failure.

—Philip Kemp

WILLIAMS, John

Films as Composer:

1960 I Passed for White (Wilcox); Because They’re Young (Wendkos)
1961 The Secret Ways (Karlson)
1962 Bachelor Flat (Tashlin)
1963 Stark Fear (Hockman) (co); Gidget Goes to Rome (Wendkos); Diamond Head (Green)
1964 The Killers (Siegel)
1965 None but the Brave (Sinatra); John Goldfarb, Please Come Home! (Lee Thompson)

1966 Penelope (Hiller); How to Steal a Million (Wyler); Not with My Wife, You Don’t! (Panama); The Rare Breed (McLaglen); The Plainsman (Rich)

1967 A Guide for the Married Man (Kelly); Fitzwilly (Delbert Mann); Valley of the Dolls (Robson)

1968 Storia di una donna (Story of a Woman) (Bercovici); Sergeant Ryker (Kulik)

1969 The Reivers (Rydell)

1970 Jane Eyre (Delbert Mann—for TV); Daddy’s Gone a-Hunting (Robson)

1971 The Cowboys (Rydell)

1972 The Screaming Woman (Smight); Images (Altman); The Poseidon Adventure (Neame); Pete ‘n’ Tillie (Ritt)

1973 The Long Goodbye (Altman); The Man Who Loved Cat Dancing (Sarafian); Cinderella Liberty (Rydell); The Paper Chase (Bridges)

1974 Sugarland Express (Spielberg); Conrack (Ritt)

1975 The Towering Inferno (Guillermin); Earthquake (Robson); Jaws (Spielberg); The Eiger Sanction (Eastwood)

1976 Family Plot (Hitchcock); The Missouri Breaks (Penn); Black Sunday (Frankenheimer); Midway (The Battle of Midway) (Smight)

1977 Star Wars (Lucas); Close Encounters of the Third Kind (Spielberg)

1978 Jaws II (Szwarc); Superman (Donner); The End (Reynolds); The Fury (De Palma); The Deer Hunter (Cimino)

1979 Dracula (Badham)

1980 1941 (Spielberg); The Empire Strikes Back (Kershner)

1981 Raiders of the Lost Ark (Spielberg); Heartbeeps (Arkush)

1982 Yes, Giorgio (Schaffner); Monsignor (Perry); E.T.—The Extra-Terrestrial (Spielberg)

1983 Return of the Jedi (Marquand)

1984 The River (Rydell); Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom (Spielberg)

1985 SpaceCamp (Winer)

1986 The Witches of Eastwick (Miller); Empire of the Sun (Spielberg); Jaws: The Revenge (Sargent); Superman IV: The Quest for Peace (Nimoy)

1987 The Accidental Tourist (Kasdan)

1988 Born on the Fourth of July (Stone); Always (Spielberg); Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade (Spielberg)

1989 Home Alone (Columbus); Presumed Innocent (Pakula); Stanley and Iris (Ritt)

1990 JFK (Stone); Hook (Spielberg)

1991 Far and Away (R. Howard); Home Alone 2: Lost in New York (Columbus)

1992 Jurassic Park (Spielberg); Schindler’s List (Spielberg)

1993 Sabrina (Pollack); Nixon (Stone)

1994 Sleepers (Levinson)

1995 Rosewood (Singleton); The Lost World: Jurassic Park (Spielberg); Seven Years in Tibet (Annaud); Amistad (Spielberg)

1996 Saving Private Ryan (Spielberg); Stepmom (Columbus)

1997 Star Wars: Episode I—The Phantom Menace (Lucas); Angela’s Ashes (Parker)

2000 The Patriot (Emmerich)

Other Films:

1959 Gidget (Wendkos) (arranger)

1970 Goodbye, Mr. Chips (Ross) (mus d)

1971 Fiddler on the Roof (Jewison) (mus d)

1973 Tom Sawyer (Taylor) (mus d)

Publications

By WILLIAMS: articles—

In Knowing the Score, by Irwin Bazelon, New York, 1975.

Soundtrack! (Hollywood), March 1982.

Cue Sheet (Hollywood), vol. 8, no. 1, March 1991.

Soundtrack! (Hollywood), September 1993.

Film Score Monthly (Los Angeles), December 1995.

Soundtrack! (Hollywood), March 1996.

On WILLIAMS: articles—

Films Illustrated (London), May 1972.

Focus on Film (London), Summer 1972.
The success of John Williams as a film composer can easily be understood by the mere listing of his number of awarded Oscars and Oscar nominations. His first Oscar was as the music director of Fiddler on the Roof; the others are for original compositions: Jaws, Star Wars, E.T., and Schindler’s List. Also nominated were Valley of the Dolls, The Reivers, The Poseidon Adventure, Cinderella Liberty, The Towering Inferno, Close Encounters of the Third Kind, Superman, The Empire Strikes Back, Raiders of the Lost Ark, Return of the Jedi, Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom, and The River.

Williams began his musical education at the University of California, Los Angeles, studying composition with Mario Castelnuovo-Tedesco. Following military service, he studied piano with Rosina Lhevinne at the Juilliard School of Music in New York, with the object—like many successful film score composers before him—of pursuing a musical career on the concert stage not the sound stage. In Williams’ case, he wanted to be a concert pianist. As Williams was also adept at jazz piano, he was able to find work and support himself doing recording sessions. This experience helped him to gain employment as a studio pianist when he returned to Los Angeles in the early 1950s. By the mid-1950s, he had drifted into arranging then doing recording sessions. This experience enabled him to gain further demonstrated his versatility on such diverse projects as the dinosaur-thrillers Jurassic Park and The Lost World: Jurassic Park, and the historical dramas Schindler’s List and Amistad (all four films made by Spielberg as a demonstration, perhaps, of his own versatility); Oliver Stone’s controversial speculation-cum-historical docudramas JFK and Nixon; and the World War II epic Saving Private Ryan (again for Spielberg). After an almost two decade hiatus since the last Star Wars adventure (Return of the Jedi), the Star Wars franchise geared up again in 1999 with The Phantom Menace—the maiden voyage of a new trilogy of Star Wars films from producer-director George Lucas. Williams again provided the rousing score, which he will undoubtedly do for the next two episodes in the trilogy as well.

—Tony Thomas, updated by John McCarty

WILLIAMS, Richard

Animator. Nationality: Canadian. Born: Montreal, 19 March 1933; emigrated to the United Kingdom, 1955. Career: Worked for Disney and United Productions of America (UPA) in early 1950s; 1955—moved to England: first animated film, The Little Island, 1958; his own studio produced animated films, commercials, and special effects and titles for live-action films; 1992—forced to close studio. Awards: Academy Award, for A Christmas Carol, 1971; Special Achievement Award and Visual Effects Academy Award, and two British Academy Awards, for Who Framed Roger Rabbit?, 1988.
Films as Animator:

1958  The Little Island; The Story of the Motorcar Engine
1961  A Lecture on Man
1962  Love Me, Love Me, Love Me
1964  Circus Drawings
1965  Diary of a Madman (not completed); The Dermis Probe; What’s New Pussycat? (Donner) (animated sequences)
1966  Pubs and Beaches; The Liquidator (Cardiff) (animated sequences); The Spy with a Cold Nose (Petrie) (animated sequences); A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum (Lester) (animated sequences)
1967  Casino Royale (Huston and others) (animated sequences); I Vor Pittfalks (not completed); The Sailor and the Devil
1968  Prudence and the Pill (Cook) (animated sequences); The Charge of the Light Brigade (Richardson) (animated sequences)
1969  Don’t Drink the Water (Morris) (animated sequences)
1971  A Christmas Carol
1977  Raggedy Ann and Andy
1982  Ziggy’s Gift
1988  Who Framed Roger Rabbit? (Zemeckis) (+ ro as voice of Droopy)
1995  Arabian Knight (The Thief and the Cobbler) (+ sc)

Publications

By WILLIAMS: articles—

Contrast, Spring 1963.
Funnyworld, Fall 1978.
Funnyworld, Summer 1979.
Starburst (London), September 1985.

On WILLIAMS: articles—

Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1963.
Stills (London), May/June 1983.
Film Comment (New York), July/August 1988.
Times (London), 1 September 1989.
Duncan, Celia, in Screen International (London), 22 March 1996.
Animato! (Springfield), no. 35, Summer 1996.

* * * *

By general informed consensus, Richard Williams is probably the finest animator alive—in Chuck Jones’s words, “the only ‘genius’ genius to come along in animation in years.” His style—fluid, dynamic, assured, painstakingly detailed—consciously harks back to the golden age of full animation, when the Disney studio was at its creative peak: the years of Fantasia, Pinocchio, and Dumbo. Williams himself, though heartily sick of being dubbed “the new Disney,” readily acknowledges his indebtedness. “Nobody has ever surpassed Disney. . . . He did everything. We have to go back and study him.” No other contemporary animator is more constantly aware of the tradition he inherits—though it may be that this awareness has served to inhibit as much as to inspire him.

“An animator,” Williams has said, “should be able to draw like Degas.” He has never been shy of invoking the highest possible standards, both for himself and for those who work with him: not only Disney, Jones, and Max Fleischer, but the weightiest names in the whole field of human art. “I don’t think in terms of animation. . . . My standards come from music, painting, and literature. . . . I’m in the same business as Goya and Rembrandt. I may be rotten at it with nothing of the same quality and talent, but that’s my business.” Not surprisingly, his view of the cheap, limited-animation material prevalent on television is dismissive. “It’s like the three-chord trick in music. It’s quick, easy, and you don’t need any real training to do it. . . . But don’t call it animation.”

Williams’s first film gained him immediate and worldwide renown. The Little Island, which took three years to make (and is said to be the longest film ever drawn and animated single-handedly), is a half-hour philosophical allegory; Roger Manvell called it “at once absurd and violent, madly serious and wildly funny.” Three small, pear-shaped people land on a desert island. They personify, respectively, Goodness, Beauty, and Truth. Goodness and Beauty, dangerous monomaniacs, soon clash, piling increasingly grandiose structures on their rival concepts, until they metamorphose into ferocious monsters whose vast collision shudders the globe. Truth, meanwhile, bemused and conscientious, keeps score on a blackboard which takes on the shape of a nuclear bomb. The film uses no words; the most complex abstract ideas are brilliantly conveyed in purely visual terms. The Little Island picked up a stack of awards, and Williams—who founded his London studio on its success—was hailed as an animator of infinite promise.

More than 30 years on, that promise still awaits fulfillment. The films that Williams has completed on his own account—Love Me, Love Me, Love Me; The Dermis Probe; The Sailor and the Devil—though accomplished, are relatively banal in content, lacking the dazzling originality, the sense of ideas in full spate, that fueled The Little Island. They suggest a major talent coasting at half-throttle. A Christmas Carol, commissioned by ABC TV, displayed impressive technique, for which it well deserved its Oscar, although Williams’s imagination was constrained by fidelity to the Dickens text. His only feature-length film to date, Raggedy Ann and Andy, was also an American commission, and one which he thoroughly regretted accepting. “The lesson I learned was the Golden Rule: ‘Whoever has the gold makes the rules.’”

Much of his finest work, from a technical standpoint, has been seen in commercials, and in title sequences for live-action features. Far from regarding advertising as a demeaning chore, to be undertaken with disdain, Williams always welcomed the chance to extend his team’s range, comparing commercials to calisthenics: “You try new things, you get all this extra technique.” His studio, turning out over 100 ads a year in a staggering variety of styles, was reckoned probably the best, and certainly the most versatile, commercial animation house in the world. Several of Williams’s commercials became classics, while his titles often outclassed the films they adorned. In Tony Richardson’s The Charge of the Light Brigade, his superb linking passages, based on Victorian political cartoons, were widely admired; the rest of the film flopped. “It’s a pity,” Pauline Kael remarked acidly, “that Richardson didn’t leave the Charge itself to Williams.”

Yet after all the years of limbering up, all the flexing of creative muscle and development of technique, the Big Event is still to come. From time to time tantalizing fragments—storyboards, sketches, even sections of film—have surfaced: I Vor Pittfalks; the rise of a demagogue; Circus Drawings, based on sketches Williams made in Spain; a treatment of Gogol’s Diary of a Madman; all, to date, unfinished.

And for more than 25 years there was the great Asian epic, “banana-skin Ali Baba or slapstick 1,001 Nights,” that grew out of illustrations for a book about the legendary wise fool, Mullah Nasrudin. Started in 1967, the project changed titles a dozen times (though The Thief and the Cobbler was the longest-running favorite) and was repeatedly announced as “nearing completion.” Williams promised that when it eventually appeared, it would “change the face of animation.”

For a while, it seemed the arrival of this long-awaited magnum opus might be speeded by the success of Who Framed Roger Rabbit?, which integrated live-action and animation at an unprecedented level of technical complexity. It was Steven Spielberg, producing the film in tandem with Disney’s Touchstone Studios, who persuaded Williams to provide Rabbit’s animated element. Technically dazzling and packed with in-jokes for animation buffs, the film triumphed at the box office and gained Williams a Special Achievement Oscar—the first animator to win one since Disney himself.

This international acclaim, Williams hoped, would help him raise funding; he could pull out of commercial work and concentrate on finishing The Thief. But potential investors feared that the release of Disney’s Aladdin might spoil the market, and in 1992, Williams’s studio, overwhelmed by debts, laid off all its staff and ceased operations. Taken out of his hands by a Los Angeles completion bond company, his film was radically altered against his wishes and finally released (as Arabian Knight) in 1995. It flopped dismally at the U.S. box office.

Williams has plans to return to production with two animated features “based on ancient stories.” But for the time being, doubts must still remain whether Richard Williams is not so much the new Disney? as the Orson Welles of animation—a prodigious talent foundering amid a mass of incomplete projects.

—Philip Kemp

WILLINGHAM, Calder

Films as Writer:

1957 The Strange One (Garfein)
1957 Paths of Glory (Kubrick) (co with Jim Thompson and Kubrick)
1958 The Vikings (R. Fleischer)
1961 One-Eyed Jacks (Marlon Brando) (co with Guy Trosper)
1967 The Graduate (Nichols) (co with Buck Henry)
1970 Little Big Man (Penn)
1974 Thieves Like Us (Altman)
1978 Thou Shalt Not Commit Adultery (co with Del Reisman—TV)

Publications

By WILLINGHAM: books—

End as a Man, New York, 1947
Geraldine Bradshaw, New York, 1950
The Gates of Hell, New York, 1951
Reach to the Stars, New York, 1951
Natural Child, New York, 1952
To Eat a Peach, New York, 1955
Eternal Fire, New York, 1963
Providence Island, New York, 1969
Rambling Rose, New York, 1972

The Big Nickel, New York, 1975
The Building of Venus Four, New York, 1977

On WILLINGHAM: articles—

Obituary in Classic Images (Muscatine), April 1995.

* * *

Calder Willingham’s first novel, End as a Man, proved a success with critics and readers alike, who appreciated the novelist’s finely detailed study of military school life (based on Willingham’s own years at The Citadel) and his exploration of male codes of conduct. A sudden shift of representational modes, to an expressionistic black humor, probably doomed his next book to a disappointing reception. Four novels published in quick succession likewise failed to make the favorable impression of Willingham’s initial effort, and with a growing family to support he was happy to be hired by Columbia to adapt End as a Man for the screen; the story was retitled The Strange One for a marketing campaign that emphasized the bizarrely charismatic but cruel behavior of the main character, played with Method angst and power by Ben Gazzara. With its strong support of institutional convention and traditional pieties, the film was conservative in a late fifties, Cold War sense, offering no challenge to the military status quo despite the focus on an exceptional loner who tellingly probes the weaknesses of “the system” from the inside and reveals the limitations of following the rules. The film bears interesting comparison to From Here to Eternity (Fred Zinnemann, 1953), which treats, with quite different conclusions, a similar encounter between an exceptional individual and the military system that cannot accommodate his individuality.

The Strange One proved Willingham’s ability to write tight and effective screenplays, a rare ability in novelists, who often find the restrictions of the form overwhelming. What Willingham’s first effort showed in particular was a flair for staging in brief dramatic scenes what the novelist needed quite different narrative techniques to express. Willingham, in essence, showed how he could create bold and arresting character with an economy of effort, an important skill in adapting novels, the film versions of which must always be summaries in some sense. Though he despised film work and never took it seriously, Willingham stayed in Hollywood in order to support his growing family. His work for The Strange One had caught the eye of Stanley Kubrick, then a young director working on the margins of the industry, who engaged Willingham to, first, attempt an adaptation of Stefan Zweig’s story “The Burning Secret,” a project that was never realized. Instead, Willingham soon set to work, along with pulp writer Jim Thompson and director Stanley Kubrick, on adapting Humphrey Cobb’s novel about the French army mutiny of 1917, Paths of Glory. The resulting film is an interesting and effective mixture of authorial interests. Paths of Glory exemplifies Kubrick’s fascination with the interaction between men and environment, Jim Thompson’s obsession with elemental differences in character and ethics, and Willingham’s concern with the struggle against, but ultimately necessary accommodation to a flawed institution. In particular, Willingham’s influence on the film’s literate, highly dramatic script—unusual for what is in essence an “action” picture—is most clearly seen in the character of Colonel Dax, a man of conscience who protests against suicidally stupid orders and venal, self-serving general officers, but who willingly shares the undeserved brutality of the men under his command, finding some consolation in the basic human quality—a desire for comradeship and love—that binds them. With its art house black and white photography, self-conscious stylization, and political tendentiousness (the film was banned from the screen in France), Paths of Glory was a prestige project that offered Willingham a suitable opportunity for his considerable talents, despite his reluctance about film work in general.

Willingham’s ability to create complex, interesting character was tested more severely in his next project, which was to write a screenplay from Dale Wasserman’s ‘treatment’ of Edison Marshall’s The Viking. The film that eventually emerged as The Vikings was not intended for art house exhibition or to please a literate film audience; it was instead a big-budget, star-studded, action-packed, wide-screen, full-color epic in the proven fifties mold of historical recreations. And yet Willingham, though unable to reproduce the novel’s interesting complexities of setting and custom, does a more than credible job of re-imaging it in terms of brotherly ties and loyalty to a shared code of masculine conduct; what distinguished the finished film from other structures of a society they cannot improve. Perhaps this change was due to alterations within the industry as a whole, where angry youth with an acerbic look at contemporary American society, whose adult establishment is populated by plastics salesmen out to make a killing, horny housewives, pathetically indulgent parents, and mindlessly materialistic adolescents. The film’s anti-establishmentarianism perfectly caught the mood of the late sixties (though the more obvious social and political issues of that period rate nary a mention).

More engagé was Willingham’s next project, the adaptation of Thomas Berger’s anti-western, Little Big Man, also starring Hoffman, who effectively recycles the naive righteousness of Benjamin Braddock. His Jack Crabb is a picaresque figure whom Willingham, following Berger closely, utilizes as a narrative entrée into various aspects of Western life, whose conventional meanings are debunked as the white settlers are shown to be venal and stupid, while the Indians the helplessly innocent victims of an overpowering social change. Usually presented as a tragic hero, Willingham’s George Custer is a bloodthirsty savage, demented by his hatred of the Indians and his own delusions of grandeur. The story was episodic even in its original form, and Willingham’s Little Big Man appears too much the summary of a larger, more coherent work. Yet the film works largely because of the writer’s skillful imagining of dramatic encounters and the virtuoso performance of Hoffman, who portrays effectively nearly eighty years in Jack Crabb’s life.

Little Big Man represents a thematic departure for Willingham, whose characters previously had chosen to live within the flawed structures of a society they cannot improve. Perhaps this change was due to alterations within the industry as a whole, where angry youth pictures became the rage after the success of Easy Rider (Dennis Hopper, 1969), a maturation story that took its rebellious heroes to a very different political and personal destination than Benjamin Braddock discovers at the end of The Graduate. But it may be that Willingham himself had begun to take a more jaundiced view of the American establishment. That this is the case is certainly suggested by his next and final Hollywood project, an adaptation of Edward Anderson’s forties novel Thieves Like Us, a social realist examination of class structure and criminality in American life, previously filmed by Nicholas Ray in 1949 as They Live by Night. Anderson’s novel examines what happens to an essentially moral if underprivileged country boy named Bowie who finds himself convicted of a murder that was likely simple self-defense. Escaping from jail, he forms a criminal gang of the similarly dispossessed, only to fall in love with a good woman, Keechie. Willingham’s version not surprisingly emphasizes the ethical dilemma that Bowie finds himself in: yearning for a better life with Keechie, Bowie cannot escape from his life of crime to working class respectability because of his loyalty to his criminal comrades. Unlike Benjamin Braddock, Bowie cannot break cleanly with the criminal past because it holds real value for him, an authenticity that proper society had denied him.
Though he always deprecated his film work, seeing it simply as a way of paying the bills, Willingham must be counted one of the postwar era’s most successful screenwriters. Because he was talented and reliable, he more readily made a name and reputation for himself in screenwriting. Working steadily and profitably during the late sixties and early seventies, that period of American commercial film art usually termed the “Hollywood Renaissance,” Willingham gave important literary value to the films of several noted directors. Ironically he was denied the same kind of success from novel readers and reviewers. The American cinema was impoverished by his decision in 1974 to resume a novel writing career full time, but, in any event, the turn of the American cinema away from character-driven drama to various forms of sexual and violent spectacle would have likely left him underemployed in Reaganite Hollywood.

—R. Barton Palmer

WILLIS, Gordon

Films as Cinematographer:

1969 End of the Road (Avakian)
1970 Loving (Kershner); The Landlord (Ashby); The People Next Door (Greene)
1971 Little Murders (Arkin); Klute (Pakula)
1972 The Godfather (Coppola); Bad Company (Benton); Up the Sandbox (Kershner)
1973 The Paper Chase (Bridges)
1974 The Parallax View (Pakula); The Godfather, Part II (Coppola)
1975 The Drowning Pool (Rosenberg)
1976 All the President’s Men (Pakula)
1977 Annie Hall (Allen); September 30, 1955 (9/30/55) (Bridges)
1978 Interiors (Allen); Comes a Horseman (Pakula)
1979 Manhattan (Allen)
1980 Stardust Memories (Allen); Windows (+ d)
1981 Pennies from Heaven (Ross)
1982 A Midsummer Night’s Sex Comedy (Allen)
1983 Zelig (Allen)
1984 Broadway Danny Rose (Allen)
1985 The Purple Rose of Cairo (Allen); Perfect (Bridges); The Money Pit (Benjamin)
1987 The Pick-Up Artist (Toback)
1988 Bright Lights, Big City (Bridges)
1990 The Godfather, Part III (Coppola); Presumed Innocent (Pakula)
1993 Malice (H. Becker)
1997 The Devil’s Own (Pakula)

Publications

By WILLIS: articles—

American Cinematographer (Hollywood), September and October 1978.
Seminar in Cinema Canada (Montreal), September 1983.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), April 1984.

On WILLIS: articles—

Stevenson, J., in New Yorker, 16 October 1978.
Filme (Berlin), no. 6, 1980.
Goodhill, D., on Manhattan in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), November 1982.
Maslin, Janet, in New York Times, 1 August 1983.
Film Comment (New York), March/April 1984.
McDonough, Tom, in American Film (Washington, D.C.), April 1986.
American Film (Washington, D.C.), May 1986.

* * *

At a time in film history when cinematographers are receiving an unprecedented amount of attention and credit for their contributions to the art of filmmaking, Gordon Willis has emerged as one of the screen’s most gifted and creative cameramen. Working closely with his directors, Willis manages in film after film to create a visual style that is uniquely suited to the story’s thematic intentions. His work on such widely varied films as The Godfather, Annie Hall, All the President’s Men, and Zelig has helped establish him as a cinematographer able to translate a director’s vision into a physical reality while still planting his own particular stamp on a film’s visual style.

The son of a Hollywood makeup man, Willis initially considered a career as an actor before an early interest in photography and the theater led him into behind-the-scenes jobs involving scenery and stage lighting. After a brief stint working on documentaries and television commercials, Willis began his career as a cinematographer on feature films with End of the Road, and was soon earning critical acclaim for his work on such films as Klute, All the President’s Men and the first two Godfather films. In each of these pictures, the photography takes its cue from the mood of the story.

Klute, a hard-edged psychological thriller, has a chilly, dark, claustrophobic style, while All the President’s Men shifts between the bright fluorescent lights of the Washington Post newsroom to the shadowy settings of Woodward and Bernstein’s meetings with the informant known as “Deep Throat.” The Godfather films make use of muted colors, richly photographed and darkly lit, to evoke the secretive, somber atmosphere of the criminal underworld. The Godfather, Part II contrasts this style with the sunny scenes of Vito Corleone’s childhood in Sicily and the golden and sepia tones of his days as a young immigrant in New York City. Both of the Godfather films received Best Picture Oscars (as did Annie Hall in 1977) and All the President’s Men was a Best Picture nominee, yet Willis himself was not nominated for a cinematography Oscar until Zelig in 1983. It is an oversight that has been a source of great controversy, with Willis’s admirers maintaining that his resolutely east coast-based career has led the Hollywood establishment to snub him as an outsider.

Annie Hall began Willis’s long and mutually profitable collaboration with Woody Allen, who has utilized the cinematographer’s talents on eight films so far. Annie Hall contrasts the warm, glowing scenes of Annie and Alvy’s New York romance with the slightly overexposed glare of the film’s California scenes, while Manhattan is a richly textured black-and-white paean to the beauty and diversity of the city itself. In Interiors and Stardust Memories, Willis creates echoes of Ingmar Bergman and Federico Fellini, using stark whites in the former to convey the emotional sterility of the troubled Bergmanesque family that is the focus of the film, and a harsh, almost surrealistic black and white in the latter, which many critics have labeled Allen’s 8? The hazy golds and browns of A Midsummer Night’s Sex Comedy capture the bucolic quality of the film’s witty merry-go-round of romances, while the wisecracking show-business fairy tale of Broadway Danny Rose is enhanced by Willis’s gritty blacks and whites. The Purple Rose of Cairo’s Depression-era setting is conveyed in the film’s subdued, washed-out tones, a look which also comments on the bleak reality of the heroine’s life. The pair’s most remarkable collaborative achievement, however, is Zelig; Allen’s fictional mock-documentary. Imitating the style and tone of early newsreels, Allen and Willis ‘aged’ their own film stock by scratching and marking its surface, matching their footage seamlessly with actual newsreels from the 1920s and 1930s. In several astonishing shots, Willis superimposes Allen’s character, Leonard Zelig, onto the older footage, creating the impression that Zelig is actually a part of the newsreels and is conversing with well-known historical figures.

Willis has directed a film of his own, Windows, which drew mixed notices, but his true talents lie in his ability to translate a director’s concepts into precise and compelling visual terms. He has stated that his job is to ‘make movies with directors . . . ultimately it’s their idea that I’m executing.’ In Willis’s case, however, the execution is often one of the most creative aspects of the film itself.

In 1993, the critically acclaimed film Visions of Light examined 26 leading directors of photography, one of whom was Gordon Willis.

—Janet Lorenz, updated by David Levine

WILSON, Michael

Films as Writer:

1941 The Men in Her Life (Ratoff)
1943 Border Patrol (Selander); Colt Comrades (Selander); Bar 20 (Selander)
1944 Forty Thieves (Selander)
1951 A Place in the Sun (Stevens)
1952 Five Fingers (Mankiewicz)
1954 Salt of the Earth (Biberman)
1956 Friendly Persuasion (Wyler) (uncredited)
1957 The Bridge on the River Kwai (Lean) (uncredited)
1958 La tempesta (Tempest) (Lattuada)
1960 Jovanka e l’altri (Five Branded Women) (Ritt)
1962 Lawrence of Arabia (Lean) (co)
1965 The Sandpiper (Minnelli)
1968 Planet of the Apes (Schaffner)
1969 Che! (Fleischer)
Publications

By WILSON: book—

Salt of the Earth (script) in Salt of the Earth: The Story of a Film, by Herbert J. Biberman, Boston, Massachusetts, 1965.

By WILSON: articles—

On WILSON: articles—

Ecran (Paris), October 1976.
Tuchman, Michael, in Take One (Montreal), September 1978.

* * *

After being identified by the House Committee on Un-American Activities as “a Communist, past or present,” Michael Wilson was denied work by the same industry which had given him an Oscar for A Place in the Sun, the screen adaptation he wrote with Harry Carr of Theodore Dreiser’s An American Tragedy, and his films after the time of his “blacklisting” seem to reflect this. They are much less charitable toward human nature than his earlier work, often about sudden, drastic changes in one’s fate. But they are also about more than that.

Wilson is at his best when he is exploring the dynamics of the group, and it is surely here that his greatest contribution as a writer is to be found. His chief weakness is his dialogue. The best one can say about a conversation written by Wilson is that it is passable movie dialogue. Never does it ring to the ear like a conversation between two individuals. But then neither does Wilson really offer us individuals. Rather, his characters take their definition from a larger body of people, alternately trying to accommodate that group, lead it, understand it, rebel against it, or find their place within it.

This is true of films as otherwise diverse as Salt of the Earth, The Bridge on the River Kwai, Lawrence of Arabia, Planet of the Apes, and Che!. In each case the group is depicted as a delicate balance of conflicting interests. Perhaps influenced by what he learned from McCarthyism, the group, in Wilson’s scripts, is always corruptible, and always in danger of being weakened from within.

Wilson made a point of his penchant for working alone, even when the screen credits would suggest that he was worked with a partner, “In every case save one (The Sandpiper),” he has said, “there was no collaboration. I either preceded or followed another writer.” That’s true, but it is also misleading, for it was his willingness to collaborate that made him attractive to so many directors.

It is no accident that Wilson’s name has become identified with “big money” projects, productions involving extraordinarily large casts, extensive location work, or unusually costly support functions, for he was known as a writer who worked closely with directors. At once able and willing to adjust continuity, plot, and characterization without compromising the integrity of the story, he enjoyed the reputation of a seasoned professional who understands—perhaps only too well—the possibilities and limitations which movie making can provide.

—Jay Boyer

WINKLER, Irwin

Films as Producer with Robert Chartoff:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1966</td>
<td>Double Trouble (Taurog)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1967</td>
<td>Point Blank (Boorman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1968</td>
<td>Blue (Narrazzino); The Split (Flemyng)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1969</td>
<td>Leo the Last (Boorman); They Shoot Horses, Don’t They? (Pollack); The Strawberry Statement (Hagmann)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1971</td>
<td>Believe in Me (Hagmann); The Gang That Couldn’t Shoot Straight (Goldstone)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1972</td>
<td>The Mechanic (Killer of Killers) (Winner); The New Centurions (Precinct 45: Los Angeles Police) (Fleischer); Thumb Tripping (Masters); Up the Sandbox (Kershner)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1973</td>
<td>Busting (Hyams)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1974</td>
<td>The Gambler (Reisz); Spies</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1975</td>
<td>Breakout (Gries); Peep (Hyams)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1976</td>
<td>Nickelodeon (Bogdanovich); Rocky (Avildsen)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1977</td>
<td>New York, New York (Scorsese); Valentino (Russell)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1978</td>
<td>Comes a Horseman (Pakula); Uncle Joe Shannon</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1979</td>
<td>Rocky II (Stallone)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1980</td>
<td>Raging Bull (Scorsese)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1981</td>
<td>True Confessions (Gosford)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1982</td>
<td>Author! Author! (Hiller); Rocky III (Stallone)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1983</td>
<td>The Right Stuff (Kaufman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1985</td>
<td>Revolution (Hudson)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Other Films as Producer:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1985</td>
<td>Rocky IV (Stallone)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1986</td>
<td>Round Midnight (Autour de minuit) (Tavernier)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Irwin Winkler

1988  Betrayed (Costa-Gavras)
1989  Music Box (Costa-Gavras)
1990  Rocky V (Avildsen) (co); GoodFellas (Scorsese)
1991  Guilty by Suspicion (+ d + sc); Night and the City (+ d)
1992  Basic Instinct (Verhoeven) (orig pr)
1995  The Net (+ d)
1999  At First Sight (+ d)
2000  The Shipping News

Publications

By WINKLER: book—

By WINKLER: articles—

On WINKLER: articles—

Segnocinema, no. 61, May/June 1993.
DGA (Los Angeles), September-October 1996.

The career of producer Irwin Winkler is so involved with that of his long-time partner Robert Chartoff—in 1983 screenwriter William Goldman described them as “best friends forever, and partners for damn near as long”—that though the business relationship ended in the 1980s, it is still difficult to consider them separately.
Chartoff and Winkler left New York for California in the early 1960s. They shared with fellow east coast emigrés Mike Nichols, Sidney Lumet, and Arthur Penn a taste for liberal themes, but in attempting to turn this preoccupation into profitable films the producers singularly failed. Two edgy intellectual thrillers with English directors, John Boorman’s Point Blank and Gordon Flemyng’s The Split, puzzled the American audience, as did Boorman’s eccentric Leo the Last, while Stuart Hagmann’s Believe in Me and The Strawberry Statement, the former an anti-drug story, the latter one of many miserable attempts of the time to transmute student revolt into salable cinema, also founndered. However, Sidney Pollack’s version of Horace McCoy’s They Shoot Horses, Don’t They? with Jane Fonda and Gig Young did briefly gain Chartoff and Winkler the critical respect they craved.

From 1970 the team affiliated with United Artists, supplying films of medium budget and low risk to this studio without production facilities. The Gang That Couldn’t Shoot Straight and The New Centurions, crime stories from best-selling books by Jimmy Breslin and Joseph Wambaugh, were modest successes as were Busting and Peeper, better-than-average comedy thrillers by Peter Hyams. Even Michael Winner and Charles Bronson were coaxed to lift their game with an everyday tale of assassinating folk, The Mechanic. Less successful was The Gambler, by Karel Reisz after Dostoyevsky, though the team did at least refresh their social conscience credentials with Up the Sandbox, a Barbara Streisand vehicle about the trials of a young New York mother.

In 1976, against UA’s advice, Chartoff and Winkler championed a $1 million boxing picture starring and written by a minor actor, Sylvester Stallone. To the surprise of even its producers Rocky earned more than $100 million worldwide and an Academy Award for Best Picture. In addition, since the partners had attached themselves to the project, the production company could make no sequels without their involvement. Rocky’s I to IV made Chartoff and Winkler rich and powerful. They relocated to luxury offices and enjoyed fees from UA labeled by one insider as “astronomical.” Success also made them in the words of then-UA vice-president Steven Bach “proud and difficult to argue with. Sooner or later Rocky Balboa’s boxing glove . . . would settle any argument. In their minds at least.”

The team’s budgets rose with prosperity but not their success rate. Nickelodeon, Peter Bogdanovich’s tribute to the silent cinema, flopped, as did Ken Russell’s Valentino. More intent on critical success than ever, they funded a stark 1940s western by Alan Pakula, Comes a Horseman, and bought The Right Stuff, Tom Wolfe’s sprawling “fraction” best-seller about the Apollo astronauts.

Having financed Martin Scorsese’s ill-fated musical New York, New York the partners now also took on his most controversial project, a violent biography of the boxer Jake LaMotta, Raging Bull. Winkler is generally credited with negotiating the deal between UA, Scorsese, and Robert De Niro, a feat which, according to Steven Bach, involved an uncredited rewrite of the script by director and star. Chartoff and Winkler then shepherded Raging Bull to production and saw it become one of the most highly regarded Hollywood films of all time.

Raging Bull was the team’s greatest achievement, and its last. When William Goldman delivered the screenplay for The Right Stuff, for which UA had paid the largest fee in its history, and which portrayed the astronauts as symbols of a braver, better America, he learned that director Phil Kaufman now preferred to emphasise the character of test pilot Chuck Yaeger, conceived by Goldman and Wolfe as the loser in the race for space. Goldman has claimed since that Chartoff sided with Kaufman in the resulting dispute and Winkler with the writer. Finally Goldman resigned, his screenplay was shelved and Kaufman wrote his own. Chartoff and Winkler subsequently dissolved their partnership—over, Goldman implies, this disagreement.

As an independent, Winkler has produced Costa-Gavras’s anti-Fascist Music Box. He also made his debut as director in 1991 with Guilty by Suspicion. Robert De Niro played a 1950s filmmaker hounded for communist sympathies. Blacklist veterans were cast in minor roles and Winkler used the sets from the covertly anti-McCarthy High Noon for the cheap western De Niro is forced to direct. Most critics found the film heavy-handed, and writer/director Abraham Polonsky further soured the reaction by claiming it cribbed elements from his life.

Neither of Winkler’s subsequent outings as director convinces one that he’s capable of better. His 1992 remake of Jules Dassin’s Night and the City, with de Niro in Richard Widmark’s old role as a desperate hustler trying to set up a wrestling match (altered by Winkler to boxing), and running foul of harder men in the process, was long on decor but short on impact. In The Net, Sandra Bullock is wasted as the computer nerd who stumbles on a secret in her job as free-lance programmer, and is harried by unseen enemies who cancel her credit cards, invalidate her driver’s licence, sell her house, and all but erase her identity, replacing it with that of a dope-dealing prostitute. A potentially apt film which might have commented incisively on the growing power of those who process electronic information is invalidated by the writers’ and director’s resort to all the clichés of 1960s girl-on-the-run movies. Winkler learned the lessons of paranoia taught by the McCarthy era, but has so far proved incapable of extending his knowledge beyond simple didacticism. Liberal and intellectual legitimacy seem as far from his grasp now as when he produced The Strawberry Statement.

—John Baxter

WINSTON, Stan

Films as Director:

1988 Pumpkinhead
1991 Adventures of a Gnome Named Gnorm
1996 T2 3-D: Battle Across Time
1997 Ghosts
Films as Makeup and Special Effects Artist:

1972  Gargoyles (television)
1974  Masquerade (television); The Autobiography of Miss Jane Pittman (television)
1975  The Man in the Glass Booth
1976  Pinocchio (television); W. C. Fields and Me
1977  An Evening with Diana Ross (television); Roots (television)
1978  The Wiz
1980  The Exterminator
1981  Dead and Buried; Heartbeeps; The Hand
1982  The Thing; Parasite
1983  Something Wicked This Way Comes
1984  The Terminator; Starman
1985  The Vindicator
1986  Aliens; Invaders from Mars
1987  Monster Squad; Predator
1988  Alien Nation
1989  Leviathan
1990  Edward Scissorhands; Predator 2
1991  Terminator 2: Judgement Day
1992  Batman Returns
1993  Jurassic Park
1994  Interview with the Vampire
1995  Tank Girl; Congo
1996  The Island of Dr. Moreau
1999  Instinct; Lake Placid; Inspector Gadget; End of Days; Galaxy Quest

Publications

On WINSTON: articles—

Duncan, Jody, “Moreau’s Menagerie,” in Cinefex (Riverside), December 1996.

Stan Winston, has, at various points in his career, been typecast as a makeup artist, a special effects whiz, a computer animator, and a puppeteer. Yet, while all of these terms are accurate, they do little to either define the man or his unique art. He is perhaps most accurately described as a storyteller and a creator of characters. In fact, his resume includes creating memorable persona in some of the biggest grossing films in the world including Aliens, Terminator 2, Batman Returns, and Jurassic Park. He has even directed two creature-based films, Pumpkinhead and Adventures of a Gnome Named Gnorm.

As a result of an early fascination with the acting profession, focused in particular on those roles that involved bizarre characters such as werewolves or Jekyll and Hyde transformations, Winston discovered that it could be more fulfilling to go beyond human actors playing parts and to actually create artificial characters that could act. As a result, he now bases his creations, whether puppets, computer images or prosthetic makeup effects, within the context of the performances being given by live actors in a well-told story. Audiences, he believes, do not walk out of a movie theater remembering makeup or creature effects. They will remember them only if they are a realistic part of a ground-breaking story or paired with an actor’s powerful performance.

He points to 1986’s Aliens as a case in point. Although, he constructed 15 warrior aliens for the film, it was his full scale 14-foot tall Queen Alien who came to life and slugged it out with the film’s star Sigourney Weaver “live on the set” and helped her to achieve an Academy Award nominated performance. Although the Queen rig was operated by a two man crew assisted by a cable rig and a team of cable controllers, in Winston’s view, his technicians were actors giving a performance in creating the alien character who would take part on an equal basis with any other performer in the film. In the finished film, the Queen emerges as an actual character. According to Winston, she comes across as elegant in her form, feminine but nasty—definitely a woman you do not want to mess with.

What makes Winston unique in a profession that thrives on labeling its practitioners and forcing them into pigeonholes is that he is constantly reinventing himself and his craft. Early in his career, he carved out a reputation as a makeup artist who specialized primarily in realistic facial prosthetics. However, building on his childhood experiences with puppetry, he graduated to the more specialized field of makeup effects and was soon designing characters with animated faces that were controlled and operated externally. He then extended the external animation to the entire creature, pioneering the new art form of animatronics and robotic design which was to reach its high point through his collaborations with director James Cameron on Terminator 2 and Steven Spielberg on Jurassic Park. At the Stan Winston Studio which he founded in 1978, Winston’s staff routinely works with images of virtually every creature existing in nature including man. The characteristics of these creatures are then excerpted and incorporated in designs of beings that have no existence outside of the imagination. Yet, the reality of these new creatures is heightened by the fact that they reflect expressions, gestures, and movements that build on the audiences’ own memories and experiences. Regardless of how exotic the creature is, whether alien or Terminator, something about it is strangely familiar to the viewer. The bottom line, Winston emphasizes, is to do what has never been done before—to take the writer’s wildest ideas and somehow turn them into cinematic reality—on a daily basis.

* * *

Winston’s art was expanded in 1993 when he teamed with Industrial Light and Magic designer Scott Ross and director James Cameron to form Digital Domain, a firm focusing on digital and other ‘‘high tech’’ special effects for motion pictures. D.D.’s first project was the fall 1994 release Interview with the Vampire which Winston considered to be a major turning point in his career.

Although he had started out successfully as a makeup artist, he had become typecast as a ‘‘creature maker’’ as a result of the phenomenal success of Jurassic Park. He had to literally do some fast talking to get the job. ‘‘I realized that there were still things that I wanted to try with subtle nuances of makeup but nobody would give me the chance because I was the guy who does dinosaurs,’’ he stated in 1995. ‘‘That job was very important to me.’’

Winston’s reason for selecting Vampire was his profound interest in creating characters. Director Neil Jordan’s film called for a more subtle, elegant, almost spiritual type of effect than did a film dealing with 20-ton dinosaurs. The merger of makeup and small scale mechanical effects with the computer’s potential for creating and cloning realistic images extended Winston’s range in a remarkable way. Winston’s studio took care of the prosthetics, makeup and the mechanical effects—one of which was a crawling robotic Tom Cruise in Lestat’s near death scene—while Digital Domain provided computer-generated imagery, miniatures and digital compositing.

From an artistic point of view, the blending of puppetry with computer animation, usually results in the computer getting the credit. For example, out of 16 minutes of dinosaur footage in Jurassic Park, 60 percent was actually Winston’s full-size creatures and not electronic images. Similarly, in Interview With the Vampire, the prosthetic and mechanical touches were seamlessly interwoven with the computer-generated effects. Yet, most viewers credited the work to Industrial Light and Magic’s computers in the former and to Digital Domain in the latter, because the effects were simply too realistic to be puppets.

However, Winston sees this as vindication of his approach to creature building. He views the computer and other technological innovations as simply new tools to help with the creation of characters in order to create an undetectable blend between what is alive and what’s on computer. In Winston’s view, if he has done his job correctly, the mechanical characters and the computer-generated images are no less real than the human actors appearing in the finished product. The bottom line is that all three have to be able to act and to make the viewer believe in them. ‘‘If you look at a film that I have contributed to,’’ he says, ‘‘and my work is apparent, I have failed. But, if it is instead identifiable as a Tim Burton, a James Cameron, or Steven Spielberg film, that’s a pat on the back to me.’’

—Steve Hanson
YODA, Yoshikata

Writer. Nationality: Japanese. Born: Kyoto City, 1909. Education: Attended Kyoto Second Commercial High School. Career: 1927–29—worked for Sumitomo Bank, Kyoto; left after being arrested for political activities; 1930—joined Nikkatsu’s Kyoto Studio to study screenwriting; first film as writer, A Port without a Sea, 1931; 1936—first of many films for Kenji Mizoguchi: wrote for him until 1955; taught screenwriting, Osaka Art College. Awards: Several Japanese film prizes.

Films as Writer:

1931 Umiko no nai minato (A Port without a Sea) (Murata); Shiroi ane (White Elder Sister) (Murata—2 parts)
1932 Kyonba to nyoubou (Horse-Race and Wife) (Tokunaga); Youki no seidayo (It’s Because of Good Weather) (Takehisa); Tokaku onna to iu mono wa (Women Tend to . . .) (Kurata); Minato no jojushi (Lyric of a Port) (Saegusa)
1933 Haha yo ko yo (Mother and Child) (Taguchi); Seishun no koro (Time of Youth) (Kurata); Bokura no otouto (Our Younger Brother) (Kumagai and Sunohara)
1934 Judo senshu no koi (Love of a Judo Player) (Chiba); Yume no naka no ojousan (Young Lady in a Dream) (Ohtani); Gurentai no uta (Gangster’s Song) (Taguchi)
1936 Naniwa ereji (Osaka Elegy) (Mizoguchi); Gion no shimai (Sisters of the Gion) (Mizoguchi); Aida hizakurige (Walking Trip of Revenge) (Mori)
1937 Otsura junreika (Otsura’s Pilgrim Song) (Oshimoto); Samurai ondo (Samurai Song) (Kimura); Aienkyo (The Struts of Love and Hate) (Mizoguchi)
1938 Ishin no uta (The Song of Restoration) (Inuzuka); Tenryuu shibuki (Splash of Tenryu) (Iwata); Aa furusato (Ah, My Home Town) (Mizoguchi); Ai no musume (Daughter of Asia) (Tanaka and Numamani); Ninjutsu Sekigahara Sarutobi Sasuke (Ninja Sasuke Sarutobi of Sekigahara) (Mori); Akatsuki no hatakaze (Flag Wind of Dawn) (Hoshi)
1939 Kyouenrouku (Record of Manhood and Eros) (Tanaka and Suyama); Ote mairi (Pilgrimage to Ise) (Mori); Bunbuku chagama (Badger’s Tea Pot) (Mokudou); Zankiku monogatari (The Story of the Last Chrysanthemums) (Mizoguchi); Tsukiyas garasu (Crow on a Moonlit Night) (Inoue—2 parts); Umi o yuku bushi (The Warrior Who Crosses the Sea) (Inoue); Ukiyo kouji (Alley of the World) (Makino)
1940 Hataoka junsa (Policeman Hataoka) (Ushihara); Naniwa onna (Osaka Woman) (Mizoguchi); Harekodose (Formal Kimono) (Ushihara)
1941 Geidou ichidai otoko (The Life of an Actor) (Mizoguchi); Meoto daiko (A Couple’s Drum) (Mori); Musume tabigeinen (Troubador Girl) (Mokudou); Iga Kottou guurry (Iga Kottou Military Style) (Nishina)
1941–42 Genroku chushingura (The Loyal 47 Ronin) (Mizoguchi—2 parts)
1942 Ninin sugata (Two Together) (Ohba)
1943 Kikuchi senbonyari (Kikuchi’s Thouand Spears) (Ikeda and Shirai)
1944 Takadanobaba (Matsuda—2 parts); Kodachi o tsukau onna (A Woman Using a Small Sword) (Marune)
1945 Hanamuko Taiheiki (Bridegroom’s Taiheiki) (Marune); Sennichimae fukan (Around Sennichimae) (Makino)
1946 Tobira o hiraku onna (Woman Opening a Door) (Kimura); Utamaro no meguru gonin no onna (Utamaro and His Five Women) (Mizoguchi)
1947 Tenka no goikenban o Ikensuru otoko (The Adviser of the World’s Advisers) (Kimura); Moderu to wakatono (The Model and the Young Lord) (Takeno); Joyu Sumako no koi (The Love of Sumako the Actress) (Mizoguchi)
1948 Yamaneko renjou (Miss Wildcat) (Mori); Yogoreta hanazono (Spoiled Garden) (Kosaka); Yoru no onnatachi (Women of the Night) (Mizoguchi); Gonin no mokugekisha (Five Witnesses) (Matsuda); Busou keikantai (Armed Police Force) (Ohsono)
1949 Waga koi wa moenu (My Love Burns) (Mizoguchi); Watashi no na wa joufu (My Name Is Mistress) (Mori)

1949–50 Hebihme douchuh (The Travels of Princess Snake) (Kimura and Marune—2 parts)

1950 Haruka narishi haha no kuni (Mother’s Country Is Far) (Ito); Aru fujinkai no kokuhaku (Confessions of Gynecologist) (Mori); Sengoku dawara (Rice Packages) (Makino); Fukkatsu (Resurrection) (Nobuchi); Minami no bara (Roses of the South) (Mori); Yuki Fujin eza (A Picture of Madame Yuki) (Mizoguchi); Shimau-boshi (Sister Stars) (Nobuchi)

1951 Oboro kyo (Sedan Chair in the Mist) (Ito); Otsuya gorosh (Murder of Otsuya) (Makino); Shunen (Spring Gfriend) (Kosugi); Oya-sama (Miss Oyu) (Mizoguchi); Musashino Fujin (Lady Musashino) (Mizoguchi); Aizen-bashi (Bridge of Love) (Nobuchi); Oh-Edo gonon otoko (Five Men of Great Edo) (Ito)

1952 Saikaku ichidai onna (The Life of Oharu) (Mizoguchi); Takino shiraito (Water Magician; The White Thread of the Waterfall) (Nobuchi); Koikaze gojusan-tsugi (35 Stations of the Wind of Love) (Nakagawa)

1953 Kettou gofun-mar (Five Minutes to the Duel) (Adachi); Ugetsu monogatari (Ugetsu; Tales of a Pale and Mysterious Moon after the Rain) (Mizoguchi); Gion bayashi (Gion Festival Music) (Mizoguchi)
YODA

Writers and Production Artists, 4th Edition

1954 Sansho dayu (Sansho the Bailiff) (Mizoguchi); Chushingura (47 Loyal Ronins) (Ohsone); Uwawa no onna (The Woman of the Rumor) (Mizoguchi); Chikamatsu monogatari (A Story from Chikamatsu) (Mizoguchi)

1955 Toujin Okichi (The Foreigner’s Okichi) (Wakasugi); Yoidore bayashi (Orkanen Music) (Takiuchi); Maiko sanjushiki (The Three Musketeers of the Apprentice Geishas) (Amano); Tojuro no koi (The Love of Tojuro) (Mori); Yokichi (The Princess Yang Kwei-Fei) (Mizoguchi); Shin Heike monogatari (New Tale of the Taira Clan) (Mizoguchi)

1956 Tanuki (Badger) (Hagiyama); Zangiku monogatari (The Story of the Last Chrysantheums) (Shima); Chichiko-daka (Father-Son Falcons) (Matsuda); Ninjutsu senshaken jiai (Title Match of Magic) (Yasuda); Gion no shimai (Sisters of Gion) (Nomura); Kiri no oto (Sound of Fog) (Shimizu); Haha shirayuki (Mother’s White Snow) (Yasuda)

1957 Aburenbou kaido (Wild Main Line) (Uchida); Osaka monogatari (An Osaka Story) (Yoshimura); Adauchi Sazenjinobaba (Revenge of Sazenjinobaba) (Makino); Ibo koudai (Step-Brothers) (Ieki)

1958 Niguruma no uta (The Song of the Cart) (Yamamoto); Aijou dudou (Immortal Love) (Saeki); Chiyoda-jo enjo (Chiyoda Castle on Fire) (Yasuda); Todoke haka no uta (Reach, Mother’s Song) (Fukuda); Kakureta ninkimono (Secret Popular Character) (Sakai)

1960 Abarenbou taisou (Wild Boss) (Kimura); Hana no Yoshivara hyakunin-giri (One Hundred Killings of Flowery Yoshivara) (Uchida); Buki naki tatakai (Battle without Weapons) (Yamamoto)

1961 Harekodose (Formal Kimono) (Yasuda); Kodachi o tsukau onna (A Woman Using a Small Sword) (Ikehiro); Shin akumyo (New Bad Names) (Mori and Tanaka—2 parts); Akumyo (Bad Names) (Tanaka—2 parts)

1962 Fukenzajutsu (Women’s Origin) (Misumi); Aru Osaka no onna (Ayako) (Seigawa); Koi ya koinasuna koi (Love, Not Loving Love) (Uchida)

1963 Daisan no akumyo (The Third Bad Name) (Tanaka); Bashidou zanku monogatari (Cruel Story of the Samurai Code) (Imai); Akumyo hatoba (The Port of Bad Names) (Mori); Akumyo ichiba (The Market of Bad Names) (Mori); Jokei kazoka (Family of Women) (Misumi)

1965 Chouchou Yuji no meoto zenpai (The Nice Couple, Chouchou and Yumi) (Makino); Akumyo nivaka (Suddenly Bad Names) (Tanaka); Akumyo muteki (Invincible Bad Names) (Tanaka)

1966 Akumyo zakura (Bad Names’ Cherry Blossoms) (Tanaka)

1967 Akumyo ichidai (Lives of Bad Names) (Yasuda); Namida-Gawa (The River of Tears) (Misumi)

1968 Akumyo juhachi-ban (Bad Names’ Best Trick) (Mori); Botab dourou (Peony Lantern) (Yamamoto)

1969 Nemuri Kyoshiro no manji-giri (Kyoshiro Nemuri’s Swasti-Slash) (Ikehiro)

1974 Akumyo awabari arashi (Bad Names’ Breaking of Territories) (Masumura)

1978 Ogin sama (Miss Ogin) (Kumai)

1979 Tenpyo no iraka (Slates of the Tenpyo Period) (Kumai)

1989 Sen no rikyu (Death of a Teamaster) (Kumai)

Publications

On YODA: articles—

Martin, Marcel, “‘Recontre avec Yoshihata Yoda,’” in Image et Son, October 1982.

* * *

The screenwriter Yoshikata Yoda is best known for his long-time association with the director Kenji Mizoguchi. Their collaboration began with Osaka Elegy and lasted for two decades, until the director’s death. This 1936 film made history with its effective use of the Osaka dialect. Critics hailed this device as the force behind “Mizoguchi realism” which flourished in the new medium of talking films. It is fundamental to the harshly authentic portrayal of the strong-willed heroine who tries to exploit men using her youth and beauty, but in the end is herself exploited, betrayed, and rejected by her family and her lovers alike. Mizoguchi told the writer Yoda to adapt the plot from a short story in a magazine, and then demanded that he rewrite the script more than 20 times, so that it would best express the character’s tenacious scheming to survive. Thoroughly trained by this difficult task, Yoda emerged as one of the most promising young screenplay writers, and became indispensable to the work of the master director.

Yoda’s next screenplay for Mizoguchi was Sisters of the Gion, which emphasizes the contrasts between two sisters who are lower-class geisha. One is traditional, the other modern, but both end up betrayed by men and enslaved by what they must do to earn money. The director, who always insisted those involved in his projects do first-hand research on their subjects, demanded that the writer become fully acquainted with the world of the geisha. Yoda carried out this task by sitting in the kitchen of a geisha house in his native Kyoto, taking notes on everything. He conveyed his experiences through the story and characterizations of this film, which was another great success due to its realistic unsentimentality and avoidance of an easy solution to the heroines’ problems.

Mizoguchi and Yoda are most highly acclaimed for their portrayals of lower-class women in feudal and capitalist societies. Their men are usually weak and are dependent on either materialistically or psychologically. Therefore, it is the heroines who are forced not only to be financially independent but also to help their selfish and foolishly ambitious men. Often forced into prostitution to do so, they are exploited by men and by the social system, but retain both their inner strength and their gentleness despite all. Mizoguchi and Yoda tried to expose the injustices of the system, with mercy for none except for the women themselves. The director and writer conveyed this almost Buddhist image of gracious women with profound reverence, in characters such as Otoku in The Story of the Last Chrysanthemums and Miyaki in Ugetsu.

Yoda continued to work prolifically after Mizoguchi’s death, producing a number of excellent screenplays for other directors. His deep sympathy for those exploited by society has been well expressed in the films of leftist directors such as Satsuo Yamamoto, Tadashi Imai, and Miyoji Teki. His talent for writing high-quality entertainment-oriented scripts is evident in the 12 scripts he has written for the enormously popular Bad Name action-comedy series featuring Shintaro...
Katsu of Zatoichi fame. Yoda has also written many period films, historical epics, and adaptations of literary works.

—Kyoko Hirano

YOUNG, Freddie

Films as Cinematographer:

1926  The Flag Lieutenant (Edwards) (co)
1930  The W Plan (Saville) (co)
1931  The Speckled Band (Raymond)
1932  The Little Damozel (Wilcox); The Blue Danube (Wilcox)
1933  Bitter Sweet (Wilcox)
1934  Nell Gwynn (Wilcox); The Queen’s Affair (Wilcox)
1935  The Runaway Queen (Wilcox); Peg of Old Drury (Wilcox)
1936  When Knights Were Bold (Raymond)
1937  Victoria the Great (Wilcox) (co); The Rat (Raymond)
1938  Sixty Glorious Years (Queen of Destiny) (Wilcox)
1939  Nurse Edith Cavell (Wilcox); Goodbye, Mr. Chips (Wood)
1940  Contraband (Powell); Busman’s Holiday (Haunted Hobymoon) (Woods)
1941  49th Parallel (The Invaders) (Powell)
1942  The Young Mr. Pit (Reed)
1946  Caesar and Cleopatra (Pascal) (co); Bedelia (Comfort)
1947  So Well Remembered (Dmytryk)
1948  The Winslow Boy (Asquith); Escape (Mankiewicz)
1949  Edward, My Son (Cukor); The Conspirator (Saville)
1950  Treasure Island (Haskin)
1952  Time Bomb (Tetzlaff); Ivanhoe (Thorpe)
1953  Mogambo (Ford) (co)
1954  Knights of the Round Table (Thorpe)
1956  Lust for Life (Minnelli) (co); Bhowani Junction (Cukor); Invitation to the Dance (Kelly)
1957  The Barretts of Wimpole Street (Franklin); Island in the Sun (Rosen); Gideon of Scotland Yard (Gideon’s Day) (Ford)
1958  The Inn of the Sixth Happiness (Robson); Indiscreet (Donen)
1959  Solomon and Sheba (K. Vidor); The Wreck of the Mary Deare (Anderson)
1960  Macbeth (Schaefer)
1961  The Greengage Summer (Gilbert)
1962  Lawrence of Arabia (Lean)
1964  The Seventh Dawn (Gilbert)
1965  Lord Jim (R. Brooks); Rotten to the Core (J. Boultling); Doctor Zhivago (Lean)
1967  The Deadly Affair (Lumet); You Only Live Twice (Gilbert)
1968  Elfrida and the Pig (+ d)
1969  Battle of Britain (Hamilton); Sinful Davey (Huston)
1970  Ryan’s Daughter (Lean)
1972  Nicholas and Alexandra (Schaffner)
1974  Luther (Green); The Tamarind Seed (Edwards); Great Expectations (Hardy)
1975  Permission to Kill (Frankel)
1976  The Blue Bird (Cukor) (co)
1977  The Man in the Iron Mask (Newell)
1978  Stevie (Enders)
1979  Bloodline (T. Young)
1980  Rough Cut (Siegel)
1981  Richard’s Things (Harvey)
1983  Invitation to the Wedding (J. Brooks); Sword of the Valiant: The Legend of Gawain and the Green Knight (Weeks) (co)
1985  Invitation to the Wedding (J. Brooks)

Film as Director:

1985  Arthur’s Hallowed Ground

Publications

By YOUNG: book—

By YOUNG: articles—

Screen International (London), 13 March 1976.

On YOUNG: articles—

Hill, Derek, on Indiscreet in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), April 1958.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), July 1968.
Skoop (Amsterdam), March 1969.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), June 1971.
Films Illustrated (London), May 1972.
Freddie Young stands as one of contemporary cinema’s most creative cinematographers. As such he represents an era of filmmaking in which production has truly taken on an international flavor, for Young has achieved fame and fortune and not moved to Hollywood. One of Britain’s most noted cinematographers, once Young took over as David Lean’s cameraman he began regularly to earn Oscars. In a remarkably short time in the 1960s, he won three, for Lawrence of Arabia, Doctor Zhivago, and Ryan’s Daughter.

Like many great cinematographers, Young spent decades learning his craft before he received any awards. (He was 60 before he won his first Oscar.) His career began in Great Britain in the old glass-topped Gaumont Studios in Lime Grove, London. At first he did a bit of everything from taking stills, developing and printing exposed movie film, editing shorts and features, and operating the camera under the direction of an experienced cinematographer. Young’s first credit as cinematographer came in 1926.

During the 1930s he toiled as a cinematographer. He was under contract to British impresario Herbert Wilcox and photographed several of Anna Neagle’s films. But during the 1930s the British film industry suffered from the impact of Hollywood. Young adapted and thus worked for several Hollywood films shot in Britain, including Goodbye, Mr. Chips. At the outbreak of World War II, Young was actually in Hollywood, about to begin a career in the movie capital of the world. He immediately returned to the United Kingdom to serve as chief cameraman for the British Army’s Kinematographic Unit. After the war, Young worked on many of MGM’s British-based productions, with such directors as George Cukor, Gene Kelly, and Richard Thorpe. Young earned his first Oscar nomination for one of these productions, Ivanhoe in 1953. During this period, he also worked on two second-rate John Ford films. Yet the experience impressed him: “John Ford struck me as something special.” Ford was willing to try effects conventional Hollywood directors would avoid, though few would rank Mogambo and Gideon’s Day among his best works.
Then came the break: Young’s association with David Lean. The remarkably successful Lawrence of Arabia came first. Personally Young liked Doctor Zhivago the best of his three Oscar winners because it gave him the greatest chance to try a variety of techniques.

—Douglas Gomery

YOUNG, Victor

Films as Arranger and Musical Director:
1936 Anything Goes (Top Is the Limit) (Milestone); Klondike Annie (Walsh); Frankie and Johnnie (Auer); Fatal Lady (Ludwig) (co); Rhythm on the Range (Taura); Three Cheers for Love (McCary); Big Broadcast of 1937 (Leisen); Hideaway Girl (Archainbaud); College Holiday (Tuttle)
1937 Waitiki Wedding (Tuttle); Make Way for Tomorrow (McCary); Turn Off the Moon (Seiler); Mountain Music (Florey); Artists and Models (Walsh); Double or Nothing (Reed); Walter Wanger’s Vogues of 1938 (Cummings)

Films as Composer:
1937 Champagne Waltz (Sutherland) (co); Maid of Salem (Lloyd); Swing High, Swing Low (Leisen) (co); Ebb Tide (Hogan); Wells Fargo (Lloyd)
1939 Man of Conquest (Nicholls); Heritage of the Desert (Selander); Golden Boy (Mamoulian); Range War (Selander); Our Neighbors, the Carters (Murphy); The Night of Nights (Milestone); The Llano Kid (Venturini); Gulliver’s Travels (Fleischer); The Light That Failed (Wellman)
1940 Raffles (Wood); The Way of All Flesh (L. King); Dark Command (Walsh); Buck Benny Rides Again (Sandrich); Three Faces West (Borhaus); Untamed (Archainbaud); I Want a Divorce (Murphy); Moon over Burma (L. King); Arise My Love (Leisen); Three Men from Texas (Selander); North West Mounted Police (DeMille); Arizona (Ruggles); The Mad Doctor (A Date with Destiny) (Whelan)
1941 Virginia (Griffith); I Wanted Wings (Leisen); Reaching for the Sun (Wellman); Caught in the Draft (Butler); Aloma of the South Seas (Santell); Hold Back the Dawn (Leisen); Skylark (Sandrich)
1942 The Remarkable Andrew (Heisler); Reap the Wild Wind (DeMille); The Great Man’s Lady (Wellman); Beyond the Blue Horizon (Santell); Take a Letter, Darling (Leisen); The Forest Rangers (Marshall); Flying Tigers (Miller); Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch (Murphy); The Glass Key (Heisler); Young and Willing (Griffith); The Palm Beach Story (P. Sturges); The Crystal Ball (Nugent); Silver Queen (Bacon)
1943 The Outlaw (Hughes and Hawks—produced 1941); Salute for Three (Murphy); Buckskin Frontier (Selander); Riding High (Holiday Inn) (Marshall); China (Farrow); For Whom the Bell Tolls (Wood); Hostages (Tuttle); True to Life (Marshall); No Time for Love (Leisen)
1944 The Uninvited (Allen); The Story of Dr. Wassell (DeMille); The Great Moment (P. Sturges); Frenchman’s Creek (Leisen); Ministry of Fear (F. Lang); Practically Yours (Leisen); And Now Tomorrow (Pichel)
1945 Kitty (Leisen); A Medal for Benny (Pichel); You Came Along (Farrow); The Great John L. (A Man Called Sullivan) (Tuttle); Love Letters (Dieterle); Hold That Blonde! (Marshall)
1946 The Blue Dahlia (Marshall); The Searching Wind (Dieterle); Our Hearts Were Growing Up (Russell); To Each His Own (Leisen); Two Years before the Mast (Farrow)
1947 Suddenly It’s Spring (Leisen); California (Farrow); The Imperfect Lady (Mrs. Loring’s Secret) (Allen); Calcutta (Farrow); The Trouble with Women (Lanfield) (co); I Walk Alone (Haskin); Unconquered (DeMille); Golden Earrings (Leisen)
1948 State of the Union (Capra); The Big Clock (Farrow); The Emperor Waltz (Wildor); Dream Girl (Leisen); So Evil My Love (Allen) (co); Miss Tatlock’s Millions (Haydn); The Night Has a Thousand Eyes (Farrow); The Paleface (McLeod)
1949 The Accused (Dieterle); Streets of Laredo (Fenton); A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur’s Court (Garnett); Samson and Delilah (DeMille); Sands of Iwo Jima (Dwan); Song of Surrender (Leisen); Chicago Deadline (Allen); Deadly Is the Female (Gun Crazy) (Lewis); Our Very Own (Miller); My Foolish Heart (Robson)
1950 Thelma Jordan (The File on Thelma Jordan) (Siodmak); The Fireball (Garnett); Paid in Full (Dieterle); Bright Leaf (Curtiz); Rio Grande (Ford)
1951 September Affair (Dieterle); Belle Le Grand (Dwan); Payment on Demand (Bernhardt); The Lemon Drop Kid (Lanfield); The Bullfighter and the Lady (Boetticher); Honeychile (Springsteen); Appointment with Danger (United States Mail) (Allen); A Millionaire for Christie (Marshall); My Favorite Spy (McLeod); The Wild Blue Yonder (Thunder across the Pacific; Bombs over Japan) (Dwan)
1952 The Quiet Man (Ford); Anything Can Happen (Seaton); Something to Live For (Stevens); Scaramouche (Sidney); The Greatest Show on Earth (DeMille); One Minute to Zero (Garnett); The Star (Heisler); Thunderbirds (Auer); Blackbeard the Pirate (Walsh)
1953 The Stars Are Singing (Taurog); Fair Wind to Java (Kane); A Perilous Journey (Springsteen); The Sun Shines Bright (Ford); Shane (Stevens); Flight Nurse (Dwan); Little Boy Lost (Seaton); Forever Female (Rappler)
1954 Jubilee Tree (Kane); Johnny Guitar (Ray); Three Coins in the Fountain (Negulesco); Trouble in the Glen (Wilcox); About Mrs. Leslie (Daniel Mann); Drum Beat (Daves); The Country Girl (Seaton); Timberjack (Kane)
1955 Strategic Air Command (A. Mann); Son of Sinbad (Tetzlaff); A Man Alone (Milland); The Left Hand of God (Dmytryk); The Tall Men (Walsh); The Conqueror (Powell)

1956 The Maverick Queen (Kane); The Proud and the Profane (Seaton); Around the World in Eighty Days (Anderson)

1957 The Brave One (Rapper); The Buster Keaton Story (Sheldon); Run of the Arrow (Fuller); Omar Khayyam (Dieterle); Istanbul (Pevney); China Gate (Fuller) (completed by Max Steiner)

Films as Musical Director:

1938 Army Girl (Nicholls); Thrill of a Lifetime (Archteinbaud); Breaking the Ice (Cline); The Gladiator (Sedgwick); Peak’s Bad Boy with the Circus (Cline); Flirting with Fate (McDonald)

1939 Fisherman’s Wharf (Vorhaus); Man about Town (Sandrich); Way Down South (Vorhaus); Escape to Paradise (Kenton)

1940 Road to Singapore (Schertzinger); Those Were the Days (Reed); Rhythm on the River (Schertzinger); Dancing on a Dime (Sanctley); Love thy Neighbor (Sandrich)

1941 Las Vegas Nights (Murphy); Road to Zanzibar (Schertzinger); Kiss the Boys Goodbye (Schertzinger); Glamour Boy (Murphy)

1942 Sweater Girl (Clemens); True to the Army (Rogell); The Fleet’s In (Schertzinger) (co); Priorities on Parade (Rogell); Road to Morocco (Butler)

1944 And the Angels Sing (Marshall and Binyon)

1945 Out of This World (Walker); Masquerade in Mexico (Leisen)

1950 High (Capra)

1952 The Story of Will Rogers (Curtiz)

1954 Knock on Wood (Panama)

1956 The Vagabond King (Curtiz)

Publications

By YOUNG: article—

On YOUNG: articles—

Bertolina, Gian Carlo, in Rivista del Cinematografo (Rome), January 1981.

DeMary, T., “Shane: A Tribute to Victor Young,” in Film Score Monthly (Los Angeles), November 1996.

“Shane: A Tribute to Victor Young,” in Score (Lelystad), December 1996.

Bennett, R., “Sometimes They Do Make Them Like They Used To,” in Home Theater, no. 11, 1997.

* * *

It was said of Victor Young that he needed only to sit at the piano for the melodies to fall out of his sleeves. Certainly his productivity was incredible. He arrived in Hollywood in 1936 and by the time he died 20 years later he had either arranged or composed, and conducted or supervised the music for more than 300 films. That, however, was only part of his musical life; at the same time he also wrote and conducted music for many of the top radio programs of the time, while also working as a recording artist for Decca Records. No film composer of the period made more recordings, or had more hit songs drawn from his scores: ‘‘Love Letters,’’ ‘‘Stella by Starlight,’’ ‘‘My Foolish Heart,’’ ‘‘Golden Earrings,’’ ‘‘When I Fall in Love,’’ and ‘‘Around the World in Eighty Days,’’ among others.

Young began playing the violin at the age of six. Four years later the family returned to Poland and the boy was enrolled in the Imperial Conservatory of Warsaw, after which he was engaged as a soloist with various orchestras. Returning to America in 1920, he accepted the position of concertmaster with the Central Park Theater in Chicago, the anchor theatre in the Balaban and Katz chain of movie theaters. By the mid-1920s Young was a music director for the chain and writing accompaniments to silent films. In 1931 he signed with Brunswick Records and over the next four years became the best-known music director in radio and a leading conductor in the record business.

Paramount offered him a contract in 1935 and the majority of his scores through his film years were for that studio. Most of Young’s early assignments were for light entertainments but his score for the epic Wells Fargo caused producers to regard him more seriously. Cecil B. DeMille was so taken with his score for North West Mounted Police that he would consider no other composer thereafter. Young was preparing to score The Ten Commandments at the time of his death, after which Elmer Bernstein was hired to write a ‘‘Young-like’’ score. A man of extraordinary facility, Young wrote with apparent ease, albeit in a conventional form, and of his vast number of scores the one for which he seemed to have the most regard was For Whom the Bell Tolls. That and nine others were nominated for Oscars but he did not live to receive his one Academy Award. Young died in 1956; the following March he was awarded a posthumous Oscar for Around the World in Eighty Days.

Young could never explain why he became a film composer, it was simply something that happened to him. He said, ‘‘Why, indeed, would any trained musician let himself in for a career that calls for the exactitude of an Einstein, the diplomacy of Churchill, and the patience of a martyr. Yet I can think of no other medium that offers this challenge and excitement, provided that your interest in the universe is unflagging and your knowledge of musical forms is gargantuan.’’

—Tony Thomas
ZANUCK, Darryl F.

Films as Writer:

1924 Find Your Man (St. Clair); Lighthouse By the Sea (St. Clair)
1925 On Thin Ice (St. Clair); The Limited Mail (Hill); Red Hot Tires (Kenton); Hogan’s Alley (Del Ruth)
1926 The Little Irish Girl (Del Ruth); The Social Highwayman (Beaudine); Footloose Widows (Del Ruth); Across the Pacific (Del Ruth); The Better ‘ole (Reisner); Oh! What a Nurse! (Reisner)
1927 Tracked by the Police (Enright); The Missing Link (Reisner); Irish Hearts (Haskin); Old San Francisco (Crosland); The First Auto (Del Ruth); The Black Diamond Express (Bretherton); State Street Sadie (Mayo); The Desired Woman (Curtiz)
1928 Tenderloin (Curtiz); The Midnight Taxi (Adolfi); My Man (Mayo)
1929 Noah’s Ark (Curtiz); Say It with Songs (Bacon); Madonna of Avenue A (Curtiz)
1930 The Life of the Party (Del Ruth)
1931 The Jazz Singer (Crosland)
1932 The Office Wife (Bacon) (+ co-sc); The Doorway to Hell (Mayo)
1933 Little Caesar (LeRoy) (+co-sc); Illicit (Mayo); The Public Enemy (Wellman); Smart Money (Green); Five Start Final (LeRoy)
1934 The Crowd Roars (Hawks); The Mouthpiece (Flood and Nugent) (+ co-sc); The Dark Horse (Green) (+ co-sc); I am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang (LeRoy) (+co-sc)
1935 42nd Street (Bacon); The Bowery (Walsh) (+ sc); Broadway Thru’ a Keyhole (L. Sherman) (+ sc); Blood Money (Brown) (+ sc); Advice to the Lovelorn (Werker)
1936 Gallant Lady (LaCava) (+ co-sc); Moulin Rouge (Lanfield); The House of Rothschild (Werker); Looking for Trouble (Wellman); Born to Be Bad (L. Sherman) (+ co-sc); Bull-dog Drummond Strikes Back (Del Ruth); The Affairs of Cellini (La Cava); The Last Gentleman (Lanfield) (+ co-sc); The Mighty Barnum (W. Lang) (+ co-sc)
1937 Clive of India (Boleslawsky); Folies Bergere (Del Ruth); Cardinal Richelieu (Lee); Les Miserables (Boleslawsky);
Call of the Wild (Wellman); Metropolitan (Boleslawsky);
Thanks a Million (Del Ruth); The Man Who Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo (Roberts); Show Them No Mercy (Marshall)

King of Burlesque (Lanfield); The Prisoner of Shark Island
(Ford); Professional Soldier (Garnett); It Had to Happen
(Del Ruth); The Country Doctor (H. King); A Message to Garcia (Marshall); Captain January (Butler); Under Two Flags (Lloyd); Half Angel (Lanfield); White Fang (Butler);
Sins of Man (Brower and Ratoff); The Road to Glory
(Hawks); Sing Baby, Sing (Lanfield); Lloyds of London
(H. King); Pigskin Parade (Butler)

In Old Chicago (H. King); Happy Landing (Del Ruth);
Kidnapped (Werkner) (+ co-sc); Little Miss Broadway
(Cummings) (+ co-sc); I’ll Give a Million (W. Lang);
Alexander’s Ragtime Band (H. King) (+ co-sc); Josette
(Dwan); Three Blind Mice (Seiter); Hold That Co-Ed
(Marshall); Sue; (Dwan); Submarine Patrol (Ford); Straight, Place and Show (Butler); Just Around the Corner
(Cummings); Thanks for Everything (Seiter);
Kentucky (Butler)

Jesse James (H. King); Tail Spin (Del Ruth); The Little Princess (W. Lang); The Story of Alexander Graham Bell
(Cummings) (+ co-sc); Young Mr. Lincoln (Ford); Susannah of the Mounties (Seiter); The Gorilla (Dwan); Second Fiddle (Lanfield); Wife, Husband, and Friend (Ratoff);
Stanley and Livingstone (H. King); Hotel for Women (Ratoff);
Hollywood Cavalcade (Cummings) (+ co-sc); Drums along theMohawk (Ford); Daytime Wife (Ratoff); The Return of the Cisco Kid (Leeds); Rose of Washington Square (Ratoff);
The Rains Came (Brown)

Swanee River (Lanfield); The Blue Bird (W. Lang); Little Old
New York (H. King); The Grapes of Wrath (Ford); Chad
Hanna (H. King); Johnny Apollo (Hathaway); He Married
His Wife (Del Ruth); Star Dust (W. Lang); I Was an Adventuress (Ratoff); Lilian Russell (Cummings); Four Sons (Mayo); Maryland (H. King); The Man I Married (Pichel); Public Debt No. 1 (Ratoff) (+ co-sc); The Return of Frank James (F. Lang); Brigham Young—Frontiersman (Hathaway); Down Argentine Way (Cummings) (+co-sc);
The Great Profile (W. Lang)

Tobacco Road (Ford); Blood and Sand (Mamoulian); A Yank
in the R.A.F. (H. King); How Green Was My Valley (Ford)

Son of Fury (Cromwell); To the Shores of Tripoli (Humberstone); This above All (Litvak); The Pied Piper (Pichel)

At the Front (doc)

Lifeboat (Hitchcock) (co); The Song of Bernadette (H. King);
The Purple Heart (Milestone); Wilson (H. King); Laura (Preminger); Winged Victory (Cukor)

Dragontwcyck (Mankiewicz); The Razor’s Edge (Goulding);
My Darling Clementine (Ford)

Gentleman’s Agreement (Kazan)

Pinky (Kazan)

Twelve O’Clock High (H. King)

David and Bathsheba (H. King); People Will Talk (Mankiewicz)

Viva Zapata! (Kazan); The Snows of Kilimanjaro (H. King)

The Egyptian (Curtiz); The Man in the Gray Flannel Suit
(Johnson)

Island in the Sun (Rossen); The Sun Also Rises (H. King)

Crack in the Mirror (Fleischer)

The Big Gamble (Fleischer)

The Longest Day (Annakin, Marton, and Wicki)

Cleopatra (Mankiewicz) (replaced Wanger)

Those Magnificent Men in Their Flying Machines (Annakin)

Hello and Goodbye (Negulesco) (+ sc, as Canfield)

Films as Executive Producer:

1943 Coney Island (W. Lang)

1945 A Tree Grows in Brooklyn (Kazan); The House on 92nd Street
(Hathaway); Diamond Horseshoe (Seaton)

1947 13 Rue Madeleine (Hathaway); Boomerang (Kazan); Miracle on 34th Street (Seaton); Kiss of Death (Hathaway); Mother Wore Tights (W. Lang)

1948 The Snake Pit (Litvak); Unfaithfully Yours (P. Sturges); Call Northside 777 (Hathaway); Sitting Pretty (W. Lang); When My Baby Smiles at Me (W. Lang)

1949 A Letter to Three Wives (Mankiewicz); Yellow Sky (Wellman)

1950 The Gunfighter (H. King); No Way Out (Mankiewicz); All about Eve (Mankiewicz); Mister 880 (Goulding)

1952 Five Fingers (Mankiewicz); The Robe (Koster)

1970 Tora! Tora! Tora! (Fleischer)

Publications

By ZANUCK: articles—

June 1961.

“A Blank Cheque for the Real Thing,” in Films and Filming
(London), November 1962.

“The Future of the Film Industry,” with David Levin in Today’s Cinema, 8 October 1969.

Film Francais (Paris), October 1970.

On ZANUCK: books—

Gussow, Mel, Don’t Say Yes Until I Finish Talking: A Biography of

Mosley, Leonard, Zanuck: The Rise and Fall of Hollywood’s Last Tycoon, Boston, Massachusetts, 1984.

Silverman, Stephen M., The Fox That Got Away, Secaucus, New

Solomon, Aubrey, Twentieth Century-Fox: A Corporate and Finan-

On ZANUCK: articles—

Bielecki, Stanley, in Films and Filming (London), August 1969.

Quarterly Review of Film Studies (Pleasantville, New York), Winter 1978.
Darryl F. Zanuck ranks as one of the most famous, long-lived of Hollywood’s movie moguls, earning the Thalberg Award a record three times. He is properly celebrated for helping revive and create Twentieth Century-Fox, and functioned as its chief of production from the mid-1930s until the mid-1950s, and then again, after a stint as an independent producer, through much of the 1960s. With the exception of the years during the Second World War, when he served as a lieutenant colonel in charge of a documentary filmmaking unit, no studio executive’s power exceeded Zanuck’s.

Zanuck took a rare and strange route to Hollywood power. He began as a writer, and during the confusion caused by the coming of sound at his then employer Warner Bros. found himself in charge of production—at age 27! But Zanuck quickly chaffed under the scrutiny of brother Jack L. Warner who had all final decision power, and in a celebrated huff left and fashioned his own company—with partner Joseph M. Schenck. Two years later Schenck and Zanuck merged their Twentieth Century Pictures into a near bankrupt Fox Film company.

Zanuck took over as production chief at the ailing Fox studio during the summer of 1935. He inherited only two important stars (Shirley Temple and Janet Gaynor) while bringing along three from Twentieth Century Pictures (Frederic March, Ronald Colman, and Loretta Young). Zanuck then developed an extraordinary set of stars who pulled the new Twentieth Century-Fox from the depths of the industry to it apex.

The first of these new talents was skater Sonja Henie whose first film, One in a Million (1936), proved to be an unexpected smash hit. Henie remained a major star until she left Fox in 1943. Alice Faye and Tyrone Power came next. For In Old Chicago (1938), they teamed the pair who would bring in millions into Fox’s coffers. But it was Betty Grable, filmed in Technicolor, which made Twentieth Century-Fox a true power house studio operation, a Hollywood colossus second to none. Too long unappreciated these Zanuck-produced Grable spectacles should rank among the most popular films of the Golden Age of Hollywood, in particular Coney Island, Diamond Horseshoe, and Mother Wore Tights. After serving his country in the Second World War, Zanuck moved Twentieth Century-Fox in a far different direction that the Technicolor fluff of Betty Grable and company. Based on his war experience, he authorized a series of films dealing with important social themes, from racism in America to the cruelty of mental hospitals. And they made money, all of them, including the much celebrated and honored Gentlemen’s Agreement, Pinky, and The Snake Pit. But like many of the moguls from the Golden Age of the 1930s and 1940s, Zanuck had little success in dealing with television. It was new corporate boss at Fox, Spyros Skouras, not Zanuck, who moved the studio into CinemaScope as the corporate technological savior. In 1956 Zanuck left Fox after two decades, and entered independent production. The Sun Also Rises, The Roots of Heaven, and Crack in the Mirror made him little money. He did not hit the jackpot until 1962 with his The Longest Day. The early 1960s nearly proved the unmaking of the Fox studio, and so the board of directors kicked out Skouras and his management team, and brought back Zanuck. Zanuck his son, Richard (age 28), in charge of day-to-day production and together the Zanucks did well for a time, principally on the strength of a single mega-hit, The Sound of Music. But Hollywood was changing and based on excess spending and declining attendance, the board that hired Zanuck, kicked him out. An era had ended at one of Hollywood’s major studios.

—Douglas Gomery

ZANUCK, Richard D.

Producer, Production Executive. Nationality: American. Born: Los Angeles, 13 December 1934, the son of studio executive Darryl F. Zanuck. Family: Married 1) Lili Gentle (divorced), daughters Virginia and Janet; 2) Linda Harrison (divorced), sons Harrison and Dean; 3) producer/director Lili Fini. Education: Stanford University. Career: Worked in the story department of 20th Century Fox, his father’s studio, while a college student; 1956—became vice president in charge of U.S. operations of Darryl F. Zanuck Productions, his father’s newly formed independent production company; 1962—when Darryl regained control of 20th Century Fox, was appointed vice president in charge of production; briefly became company president, but was removed after a proxy fight, 1971–72—served as senior executive vice president; 1972—formed his own production company in partnership with David Brown with release though Universal; produced with Brown two of the biggest grossing films of the seventies, The Sting (1973) and Jaws (1975). Awards: Academy Awards for The Sting, 1974 and Driving Miss Daisy, 1990. Address: 202 North Canon Drive, Beverly Hills, California 90210, U.S.A.

Films as Producer:

1959 Compulsion
1961 Sanctuary
1962 The Chapman Report

With David Brown:

1973 SSSSSSS; Willie Dynamite
1974 The Sugarland Express; The Black Windmill; The Girl from Petrovka
1975 The Eiger Sanction; Jaws
1977 MacArthur
1978 Jaws 2
1980 The Island
Films as Assistant to the Producer:

1956  The Sun Also Rises
1957  Island in the Sun
1962  The Longest Day

Films as Executive Producer:

1973  The Sting
1987  Barrington (for TV)
1996  Chain Reaction

Publications

By ZANUCK: articles—

Films & Filming, April 1983.
Stills, October 1985.
American Film, July 1990.

On ZANUCK: articles—

American Film, October 1975.
Perhaps because the producer’s contribution to the film that actually screens is difficult to measure, Richard D. Zanuck’s contributions to filmmaking in the last twenty years, like those of his collaborators David Brown and Lili F. Zanuck, have gone largely unrecognized by the movie-going public. Zanuck may take some consolation in the fact that the film industry has seen fit to reward him for his efforts (but this may be due somewhat to the peculiarity of the Academy Award system in deciding upon a “best picture,” for which the award goes to the producers, who may or may not have contributed to a quality effort).

If the producer is as invisible to the public as the director once was (but is no more), that does not mean that his influence on filmmaking is negligible, confined only to a kind of glorified accountancy and financial deal making. Zanuck was brought up in the film business, where his father Darryl was first a studio executive and then later an independent producer, a man who very forcefully put his mark on the films made under his auspices. Zanuck, in fact, worked as assistant producer made on the project—The Longest Day, an epic tribute to the Normandy invasion—that most obviously belonged to his father. Darryl Zanuck fought for the film’s length, its expensive production values, its cast of many notable stars, and its vignettest realism, in stark contrast to the usual Hollywood procedure for making war films. Just as his career is modeled in other ways on that of his father, so Zanuck’s choice of film projects, and the way in which these were produced, had not a little to do with his own vision of what a good entertainment film should be, a vision that is discernible often in the final product despite the contributions of others, most notably the directors in each case and his coproducers, often David Brown and Lili F. Zanuck, strong personalities in their own right.

Like his father, Zanuck worked successfully for a time within the confines of the Hollywood system. It was a very volatile industry in the late 1960s and early 1970s, one faced by continual financial crisis, rapid changes in public taste, and uncertain conditions of exhibition. Zanuck was employed first by Darryl F. Zanuck Productions when a college student, but then, when his father once again took a position inside the studio system, he followed him there: initially as vice president in charge of production (in effect, his father’s right hand man) and later, while Darryl Zanuck became in a bitter proxy fight for control, as president. When Darryl Zanuck lost the struggle for control, Zanuck stayed on briefly as senior executive vice president, but, like his father before him, yearned for more control of production and founded his own company in partnership with David Brown in 1972.

The early 1970s were a time of great marketing uncertainty for the industry, which had lost much of its original audience base, but had as potential customers a huge population of the young who already had an enthusiasm for movie going. Zanuck and Brown began operations by producing a number of more or less alternative youth films that attempted to cater to this taste. Some of these were very forgettable (Willie Dynamite), others more successful, most notably Sugarland Express, where Zanuck and Brown worked closely with a new director—Steven Spielberg—on a modern remake of Bonnie and Clyde. What Zanuck had in common with his director was a desire to emphasize the sympathetic character of the protagonists—a desperate young mother and a kidnapped policeman—and thus impart a very strong melodramatic quality to a narrative that was handled during this period quite differently by other directors (compare Altman’s Thieves Like Us and Hopper’s Easy Rider). These same elements—an adventure narrative energized by interesting character relationships—were recycled by Spielberg and Zanuck/Brown in one of the most successful films of that period, Jaws, a monster hit that helped re-establish filmgoing as an essential American pastime. The various remakes of that film have failed to match the original’s riveting approach to storytelling, but Jaws 2, done by Zanuck/Brown but without Spielberg, shows the same interest in character relationships. Perhaps attempting to recycle his father’s success with a World War II subject, Zanuck/Brown produced MacArthur, a biography of the noted general; the film was a Patton wannabe, but simply lacked the strengths of Coppola’s script and George C. Scott’s performance for that earlier film. However, once again we can glimpse Zanuck’s interest in compelling character, in dramatic conflicts and interests that motivate the audience’s fascination with well-orchestrated spectacle. Of more purely dramatic interest is one of Zanuck/Brown’s most notable other films, The Verdict, notable for providing Paul Newman with one of his best opportunities for character portrayal.

Much the same may be said about the extremely popular productions Cocoon and Driving Miss Daisy that Zanuck worked on with director/producer wife Lili. Here melodrama of a sentimental but not saccharine kind (one particularly associated with aging Americans) predominates over spectacle, proving that, sometimes at least, an industry trend can be resisted. In general, however, the kinds of films that Zanuck has been interested in making are no longer as popular as they once were, a fact that may account for his gradual marginalization within the industry during the 1990s. Mulholland Falls is a disastrously disjointed attempt to recapture the magic of The Sting; the 1990s were no longer an era interested in the subtle dramatics of male relationships, the magic made not only The Sting but also Jaws a success with audiences. In this case, Zanuck lacked not only the dynamic casting of Robert Redford and Paul Newman, he also did not base his film around a good, solid script, a fundamental mistake he would probably never have made earlier in his career. True Crime, in contrast, is what Zanuck’s father might have termed a solid programmer; this Clint Eastwood vehicle is an expertly produced slick entertainment vehicle. Much the same could be said for Deep Impact, which is far and away the best entry in the recently revived disaster film genre, far superior to either Independence Day or Armageddon. Working once again with David Brown, Zanuck made the most of the well-constructed screenplay by Michael Tolkin and Bruce Joel Rubin, assembling a stellar international cast (shades of The Longest Day) that includes Robert Duvall, Morgan Freeman, and Vanessa Redgrave, and ably supervising a very complicated production. Here is good solid Hollywood entertainment, with tragedy and melodramatic triumph enough for an audience of all ages, that is unencumbered by profound thoughts of any kind. Deep Impact is precisely the kind of film that many years ago Darryl Zanuck taught his son to make, and fortunately for him it still can claim a profitable niche in today’s international market.

—R. Barton Palmer

ZAVATTINI, Cesare

Films as Writer:

1935  Darò un milione (Camerini)
1936  La danza delle lancette (Baffico)
1938  I’ll Give a Million (W. Lang)
1939  Bionda sottochiave (Mastrocinque)
1938  Una famiglia impossibile (Bragaglia); Senza cielo (Guarini); Capitan Fracassa (Coletti); San Giovanni Decollato (Palermi)
1941  È caduta una donna (Guarini); Teresa Venerdi (De Sica); La scuola del timidi (Bragaglia)
1942  C’è sempre un ma! (Zampa); Don Cesare di Bazan (Freda); Quattro passi fra le nuvole (Four Steps in the Clouds) (Blasetti); I setti peccati (Kish); Quarta pagina (Manzari and Gambino)
1943  Gian Burrasca (Tofano); Silenzio: si gira! (Campogalliani); L’ippocampo (Rosmino); I nostri sogni (Cottafavi); Il birichino di Papà (Matarazzo)
1944  Romanzo a passo di danzo (Capelli); I bambini ci guardano (De Sica)
1945  La freccia nel fianco (Lattuada); Canto ma sottovoce (Brignone); Il mondo vuole così (Bianchi)
1946  Il testimone (Germi); Il marito povero (Amato); Un giorno nella vita (Blasetti); L’angelo il diavolo (Camerini); Sciuscià (Shoeshine) (De Sica); La porta del cielo (De Sica)
1947  Sperduti nel buio (Mastrocinque); Caccia tragica (The Tragic Pursuit) (De Santis); Lo sconosciuto di San Marino (Waszynski, Cottafavi and De Sica); La grande aurora (Scotes and Waszynski)
1948  Roma città libera (Pagliero); Ladri di biciclette (The Bicycle Thief) (De Sica); Guerra alle guerra (Marcellini and Simonelli)
1949  Fabiola (Blasetti); Au-delà des grilles (The Walls of Malapaga) (Clément); Miracolo a loreto (Moccheggiani—short); La sposa non può attendere (Franciolini)
1950  Vent’anni (Bianchi); La roccia incantata (Morelli); Domenica d’agosto (Emmer); Il cielo è rosso (The Sky Is Red) (Gora); Prima comunione (Blasetti); E primavera (It’s Forever Springtime) (Castellani); È più facile che un cammello; Miracolo a Milano (Miracle in Milan) (De Sica)
1951  Bellissima (Visconti); Mamma Mia, che impressione! (Savarese and De Sica)

1952  Roma ore 11 (Rome, Eleven O’Clock) (De Santis); Il cappotto (The Overcoat) (Lattuada); Umberto D (De Sica); Buon giorno elefante! (Hello Elephant!) (Franciotti); Cinque poveri in automobile (The Lucky Five) (Maltoli)

1953  Lettere di condannati a morte della resistenza italiana (Fornari—short); La voce de silenzo (Pabst); Amore in città (Antonioni and others); Siamo donne (Rossellini and others); Un marito per Anna Zaccheo (De Santis); Donne proibite (Amato); La passeggiata (Rascio); Piovuto dal cielo (De Miti); Stazione Termini (Indiscretion of an American Wife) (De Sica)

1954  San Miniato, luglio 1944 (Orsini and P. & V. Taviani—short); L’oro di Napoli (The Gold of Naples) (De Sica); Ali Baba e le 40 veleure (Becker)

1955  Il segno di Venere (Risi)

1956  Il tetto (The Roof) (De Sica); La cavallina stornia (Morelli); Suor Letizia (The Awakening) Camerini; Era di venerdì 17 (Soldati)

1959  Nel bhu dipinto di bhu (Tellini)

1960  Il rossetto (Lipstick) (Damiani); Rat (Bulajic); La ciociara (Two Women) (De Sica); La lunga calza verde Gaviooli); Chi legge? (Viaggio lungo il Tirreno) (Soldati); Arriva el campesino (Gallo—short)

1961  Un quarto d’Italia (Tosi); El joven rebelde (Espinosa); Il sicario (Damiani); Il giudizio universale (The Last Judgment) (De Sica); Le Italiane e l’amore (Mazzetti and others); L’oro di Roma (Lizzanni)

1962  I sequestrati di Altona (The Condemned of Altona) (De Sica); ‘La Riffa’ ep. of Boccaccio ’70 (De Sica); L’isola di Arturo (Arthur’s Island) (Damiani)

1963  Cinegiornale della pace (+co—short); Il boom (De Sica); I misteri di Roma (Bizzari and others); Ieri, oggi, domani (De Sica)

1964  ‘Cocaina di comenica’ ep. of Controcesello (Rossi)

1965  Con il cuore fermo, Sicilia (Mingozi—short); Ein Arbeitsstag (Nelli)

1966  Andremo in città (Risi); Caccia alla volpe (After the Fox) (De Sica); Un mondo nuovo (A Young World) (De Sica)

1967  ‘La strega bruciata viva’ and ‘Una sera come le altre’ eps. of Le streghes (The Witches) (Visconti and De Sica); Sette volte donna (Woman Times Seven) (De Sica)

1968  ‘La gelosia’ ep. of Capriccio all’ italiana (Bolognini); I sette fratelli Cervi (Puccini); Amani (A Place for Lovers) (De Sica); Parliamo tanto di me (Carpi)

1970  I girasoli (Sunflower) (DeSica); ‘Il leone’ ep. of Le coppie (De Sica)

1971  Cesare Zavattini e il “Campos de grano de corvi” de Van Gogh (Emmer—short); Lo chiameremo Andrea (De Sica)

1973  Una breve vacanza (A Brief Vacation) (De Sica)

1977  Un cuore semplice (Ferrara)

1978  The Children of Sanchez (Bartlett); Ligabue (Nocita)

1982  La verité (+ d); La “follia” de Zavattini (Giannarelli)

1983  César Zavattini: I milione, I milione di idee (Gambetti and Di Laura—for TV)

Publications

By ZAVATTINI: books—

Parliamo tanto di me, Milan, 1931.

Io sono il diavolo, Milan, 1942.

Toiò il buono, Milan, 1943.

With De Sica, Umberto D (script), Milan, 1953.

Un paese, Turin, 1955.

By ZAVATTINI: articles—

Filmselezione (Bologna), December 1961.

Bianco e Nero (Rome), June 1963.

On ZAVATTINI: books—

On ZAVATTINI: articles—

***

Cesare Zavattini’s contribution to the development of cinema can easily be compared with that of Griffith and Eisenstein. Within two decades of the invention of sound for celluloid film, Zavattini brought about a revolution in the scripting of feature films in Italy and ushered in the neorealist movement through his collaboration with Rossellini, De Sica, and Fellini. The movement sought to bring film closer to daily life and influenced many filmmakers in the major filmmaking cities of Europe and the U.S.A., and even as far away as India and Japan. His script for De Sica’s The Bicycle Thief, for example, influenced India’s Satyajit Ray to make Pather Panchali in 1955. His influence and neorealist credo persisted into the 1970s, although the cinéma vérité which he tried rather unsuccessfully, in Amore in città and I misteri di Roma, had little following in Europe or elsewhere.

The greatness of Zavattini lay in freeing cinema from Hollywood conventions and capitalist elitism. In his enthusiasm, he also understandably overstated his aims. Beginning with the narrative tradition of Italian cinema, he came to discard ‘‘story’’ altogether, as it was to him ‘‘simply a technique of superimposing dead formulas over living social facts.’’ He used the Irish novelist James Joyce’s ‘‘stream of consciousness’’ as a technique to recapture on celluloid the Heraclitean flux of life. ‘‘Life is not what is invented in stories; life is another matter. To understand it involves a minute and patient search.’’ He also favored doing away with professional actors, because ‘‘to want one person to play another implies a calculated plot.’’ He would even do away with technical paraphernalia which tended to distance reality.

His other feverish crusade was against capitalistic elitism in cinema. ‘‘The cinema’s capitalist structure has a tremendous influence over its true function.’’ Neorealist films, he thought, had, ipso facto, to depict poverty because ‘‘it is one of the most vital realities of our time and I challenge anyone to prove the contrary. . . . The theme of poverty, of rich and poor, is something one can dedicate one’s life to.’’ This social concern in cinema abided throughout his restless career in Italian new wave cinema of more than four decades of scriptwriting and collaboration.

ZEMAN, Karel

Films as Animator, Writer and Art Director:

1946 Vánočni (The Christmas Dream) (co-d + sc only; comb. puppet and feature film); Podkova pro štěstí (A Hosheshoe for Luck) (Puppet film); Křeček (The Hamster) (Puppet film)

1947 Pan prokouk ůraďuje (Mr. Prokouk in the Office) (puppet film); Pan Prokouk v pokušení (Mr. Prokouk in Temptation) (puppet film); Brigady (Mr. Prokouk Leaves for Volunteer Work) (puppet film)

1948 Pan Prokouk filmuje (Mr. Prokouk Is Filming) (puppet film); Pan Prokouk vynálezem (Mr. Prokouk, the Inventor) (puppet film)
Publications

By ZEMAN: articles—

“Comment j’ai tourné Une Invention diabolique,’’ in Image et Son (Paris), November 1959.

On ZEMAN: books—

Benešová, Marie, Karel Zeman, Prague, 1968.
Karel Zeman (in French), Ceskoslovensky Filmexport, Prague, 1968.
Hořejší, J., Karel Zeman, Prague, 1970.
Asenin, Sergei, Fantastičeskij kinomir Karela Zemana, Moscow, 1979.

On ZEMAN: articles—

Polt, Harriet, “The Czechoslovak Animated Film,’’ in Film Quarterly (Berkeley, California), Spring 1964.
Hrbas, J., “Karel Zeman—Puvab chlapecké romantiky,’’ in 3 parts, in Film a Doba (Prague), January, February, and March 1974.
Kliment, J., “Odpovědnost umělce—odpovědnost k umělci,’’ in Film a Doba (Prague), October 1974.
Benešová, M., “Zápas o tvar,’’ in Film a Doba (Prague), December 1980.
Film a Doba (Prague), November 1985.
Obituary in EPD Film (Frankfurt), vol. 6, no. 5, May 1989.
Film a Doba (Prague), July 1989.
Film a Doba (Prague), August 1989.
Monsterscene (Lombard), Summer/Fall 1995.

After 1945 Karel Zeman, Hermínia Týlová’s assistant, began independent work with a piece promoting recycling, Podkova Pro štěstí (A Horseshoe for Luck). Everyone in the studio was surprised at the positive response. The main animated character in the film, Mr. Prokouk, a sort of indifferent citizen with petty bourgeois traits, enjoyed tremendous popularity. Thus there emerged over the course of two years a series of five cartoons that responded to the needs of the time: nimble, tendentious grotesques with rapid-fire gags and Mr. Prokouk in the leading role. Zeman conceived the theme and wrote the script, and worked as graphic artist, animator, and director. In complete contrast to these cartoons, he then hastily produced a remarkable piece, a cinematic poem devoted to the work of Czech glass-makers in which he brought to life the fragile beauty of figures of blown glass. Inspiration possesses the beauty of a perfect work of art and is one of the pinnacles of his career. Here, Zeman demonstrated great technical resourcefulness and an ability to experiment. The folk tale Pokladi Ptačího ostrova (The Treasure of Bird Island), an evening-long animated film with a combination of flat and three-dimensional figures and an artistic form inspired by Persian miniatures, was intended for children. Also made for children was his next film, Cesta do pravěku (A Journey into Primeval Times). This is the story of four boys sailing against the current of time and encountering on their journey the natural world of past geological eras. The film’s creative form gives it a special place: it is a popular science film, a scientific fantasy film, and combines animation, special effects, and live-action. Here again, Zeman showed his abilities as an experimenter.

While in Cesta do pravěku Zeman attempted to reconstruct a world that once existed, in his work Vynález zkázy (An Invention for Destruction), based on Jules Verne’s novel Face au drapeau, he created a new world inspired by the illustrations that accompanied the first editions of Verne’s novels. With considerable grace, Zeman attained in this film the magic of the old Verne stories, “that enchantment from naiveté, poetry, and geniality of Verne’s novels that anticipated technical discoveries at the end of the century” (M. Benešová). In a perfect form he joined the techniques of the cartoon, animated, and live-action film and created a film in which actor, cartoon figure, structure, and scenery are a part of the graphic style. With this work Zeman revived and refined the forgotten Mélès mode of filmmaking and created his own style—that of the graphic special-effects film. Encouraged by the film’s worldwide success, Zeman made another in the same style. This time he chose Bürger’s novel Baron Prášil (Baron Münchhausen). Here, too, the graphic design is based on the original illustrations for the novel. Unlike its predecessor, however, this film was devoted more to the acting, while the graphic aspect was enriched through the emotive use of color. In subsequent films of this tendency the live-action component began to predominate.

In the 1970s he returned to the animated film and experimented with three-dimensional technique. He filmed folk tales for children. Along with Jiří Trnka and Hermína Týlová, Karel Zeman was the co-creator of the Czech animated film. The outstanding features of his talent were technical ingenuity and an experimental searching, which led him to the graphic special-effects film. His supreme work Vynález zkázy (An Invention for Destruction) was a unique landmark of world cinematography, which revived and refined the forgotten Mélès tradition.

—Vladimír Opěla

ZIMMER, Hans

Composer. Nationality: German. Born: Hans Florian Zimmer in Frankfurt, Germany, 12 September 1957; moved to London, 1971. Education: Attended high school in London; no formal music education. Family: Married to Suzanne Zimmer; two children. Career: Composed advertising jingles, 1973–75; wrote songs for rock bands The Buggles, Tangerine Dream, and Ultravox; rock musician and composer, 1970s and 1980s; first film soundtrack, 1982; worked as assistant to and established Lillic Yard Studio with Stanley Myers, 1982; first solo film score, 1988; scored several television series, including Millennium, 1992, Space Rangers, 1993, The Critic, 1994, and High Incident, 1996; established Media Ventures, 1992; head of the music department at DreamWorks SKG, 1997. Awards: Academy Award for Best Music, Original Score, Grammy Award for Best Instrumental Arrangement with Accompanying Vocals, and Golden Globe for Best Original Score-Motion Picture, for The Lion King, 1994; Tony Award for Best Original Score for Broadway, for The Lion King, 1995; Grammy Award for Best Instrumental Composition Written for a Motion Picture or for Television, for Crimson Tide, 1996; BMI Award for lifetime achievement, 1996; Glaubber Award for Best Original Score-Comedy or Musical (Brazil), for As Good As It Gets, 1998; Golden Satellite Award for Best Motion Picture Score, for The Thin Red Line, 1999. Agent: Gorlaine-Schwartz Agency, 3301 Barham Blvd., Suite 301, Los Angeles, CA 90068, U.S.A.

Films as Composer:

1982 Moonlighting (Skolimowski) (with Stanley Myers)
1984 Histoire d’O: Chapitre 2 (Story of O, Part II) (Rochat) (with Myers); Success Is the Best Revenge (Skolimowski) (with Myers)
1985  Insignificance (Roeg) (with Myers); Wild Horses (Lowry—for TV) (with Myers)

1986  Separate Vacations (Anderson) (with Myers)

1987  Comeback (Ambrose—for TV); Terminal Exposure (Mastorakis); The Wind (Mastorakis)

1988  A World Apart (Menges); Twister (Almereyda); Burning Secret (Birkin); The Fruit Machine (Wonderland) (Saville); Nature of the Beast (with Myers); Paperhouse (Rose); Rain Man (Levinson) (+ musical score); Spies Inc. (Thomas); Taffin (Megahy)

1989  Black Rain (Scott); Dark Obsession (Diamond Skulls) (Broomfield); Driving Miss Daisy (Beresford); Prisoners of Rio (Wizien Rio) (Majewski); First Born (miniseries—for TV)

1990  Bird on a Wire (Badham); Chicago Joe and the Showgirl (Rose); Days of Thunder (Scott); Fools of Fortune (O’Connor); Green Card (Weir); Pacific Heights (Schlesinger); To the Moon, Alice (Nelson—for TV) (as Hans Florian Zimmer); Nightmare at Noon (Mastorakis)

1991  Regarding Henry (Nichols); Backdraft (Howard); K2 (European version) (Roddam); Thelma & Louise (Scott)

1992  A League of Their Own (Marshall); Power of One (Avildsen); Radio Flyer (Donner); Where Sleeping Dogs Lie (Finch); Toys (Levinson)

1993  Calendar Girl (Whitesell); Point of No Return (Badham); Cool Runnings (Turteltaub); True Romance (Scott); The House of the Spirits (August); Younger and Younger (Adlon)

1994  Renaissance Man (Marshall); I’ll Do Anything (Brooks); Drop Zone (Badham); The Lion King (Allers and Minkoff); Africa: The Serengeti (Casey)

1995  Beyond Rangoon (Boorman); Crimson Tide (Scott); Nine Months (Columbus); Something to Talk About (Hallstrom); Two Deaths (Roe); The Preacher’s Wife (Marshall)

1996  The Whole Wide World (Ireland); The Fan (Scott); Broken Arrow (Woo); The Rock (Bay) (+ score arranger); Muppet Treasure Island (Henson)

1997  The Peacemaker (Leder); Scream 2 (Craven); Fräulein Smillas Gespür für Schnee (Smilla’s Sense of Snow) (August); As Good As It Gets (Brooks) (+ music arranger and song producer [uncredited])

1998  The Last Days (Moll); The Prince of Egypt (Chapman, Hickman, others) (+ lyricist); The Thin Red Line (Malick)

1999  El Candidato (for TV); Chill Factor (Johnson)

2000  The Road to El Dorado (Bergeron, Finn, others); Gladiator (Scott); Mission Impossible 2 (Woo)

2001  Hannibal; Pearl Harbor

Other Films:

1982  Eureka (Roeg) (additional composer)

1985  My Beautiful Laundrette (Frears) (music producer)

1987  The Last Emperor (Bertolucci) (score producer)

1991  White Fang (Kleiser) (additional music)

1993  Sniper (Llosa) (additional music)

1994  Monkey Trouble (Amurri) (additional music)

1996  White Squall (Scott) (music producer)

1997  The Borrowers (Hewitt) (score producer); Fame L.A. (Green, Miller, others—for TV) (score producer); Face/Off (Woo) (score producer)

1998  Endurance (Greenspan and Woodhead) (music producer); With Friends Like These... (music producer); Antz (Darnell, Gutterman, others) (executive music producer)

Publications

On ZIMMER: books——

On ZIMMER: articles——

* * *

Hans Zimmer is a pioneer in computer technology, digital synthesizers, and electronic keyboards. His successful integration of digital electronics with traditional orchestral music can be heard in over 65 popular, successful, and critically acclaimed films and television shows. Despite his lack of formal training, Zimmer currently ranks among the highest paid and most fiercely sought-after Hollywood composers. His scores range from quiet and sentimental to loud and pulse-raising. In Film Score Monthly, Zimmer described himself as a “loose cannon—all over the place. I can do action movies and romantic comedies. And I’m a good collaborator—which means I’m cantankerous and opinionated. I compose from a point of view. Point of view is the most important thing to have, and it doesn’t necessarily have to be the director’s point of view.” Zimmer’s versatile sampling style and emotional attunement to the film themes contribute to his ongoing success and market appeal. His mixing of genres extends to his music education, which he describes as growing up with classical music, but reaching adolescence in rock and roll.

Zimmer has been playing piano since the age of three. By the time he was six, he knew he wanted to be a composer. His family moved all over Europe until he was 14, when they settled in London. He began his musical career in London during his late teens, composing advertising jingles. In the 1970s, he stepped onto the rock music scene and reached success with the hit song, “Video Killed the Radio Star” (1979); he also made an album entitled _The Age of Plastic_ for the band The Buggles and promoted the use of computers live on stage with the groups Tangerine Dream and Ultravox before turning to film scores.

Zimmer went solo with his haunting tribal anthems for an epic, groundbreaking film about the historic struggle in South Africa, _A World Apart_ (1988). His music quickly caught Hollywood’s attention: within the next year, he received Oscar nominations for the scores of _Rain Man_ (1988) and _Driving Miss Daisy_ (1989). Zimmer credits his break into Hollywood to Barry Levinson: “When you are European wanting to break into the Hollywood film business you don’t stand a chance. But Barry Levinson gave me a shot in _Rain Man_, and that was very gracious and courageous.”

The African-inspired rhythms of Disney’s blockbuster, _The Lion King_ (1994), for which he was music supervisor, song arranger, and producer, earned Zimmer his only Academy Award to date. It took him about three and a half weeks to compose the music. _The Lion King_ also won the Golden Globe, Chicago Film Critics Award, two Grammys, American Music Award for Best Album of the Year, and a Tony nomination for Best Original Score for _The Lion King on Broadway_. He received a Grammy for his _Crimson Tide_ (1995) soundtrack, which features a majestic symphonic score and a large choir, as well as powerful 3-D sound effects that enhance the on-screen action and suspense. In the early 1990s, Zimmer also worked on compelling and invigorating music/scores for _Bird on a Wire_, John Schlesinger’s suspenseful _Pacific Heights_, and _Days of Thunder_, starring Tom Cruise. His synthesizing can be heard in the background of _Regarding Henry_ and _Peter Weir’s Green Card_. Zimmer’s dreamy, evocative, and emotional music enhances Ridley Scott’s _Thelma and Louise_ (1991) and Richard Donner’s poignant _Radio Flyer_ (1992). Penny Marshall’s _A League of Their Own_, a film about the first female baseball league, starring Geena Davis, Tom Hanks, and Madonna also features a score by Zimmer. Zimmer has also ventured into the light and emotional, penning the infectious score for Barry Levinson’s _Toys_ (1992) starring Robin Williams, and _Muppet Treasure Island_ (1996).

Zimmer has also placed his mark on films outside of Hollywood. Zimmer composed the score for his second South African film, _The Power of One_, directed by John Avildsen in 1992. He has worked with director Percy Adlon on _Younger and Younger_ (1993), and with Billie August on _Smilla’s Sense of Snow_ (1997).

Zimmer has been frequently recognized for his scores, earning Oscar nominations for _The Preacher’s Wife_ (1996) and _As Good As It Gets_ (1997). For the latter he lost out to the soundtrack for the blockbuster adventure _Titanic_. Zimmer was twice nominated in 1999 for Best Score Oscars for Terrence Malick’s _The Thin Red Line_ (1998) and Disney’s animated telling of the Ten Commandments, _The Prince of Egypt_ (1998), for which he also received a Golden Globe nomination. The elegiac, lyrical music in _Thin Red Line_ combines simple American hymns, indigenous music from the Solomon Islands, orchestral compositions with rich bass and cello lines, and a complete absence of the usual militaristic flourishes of brass, marching rhythms, and fanfares to create a tone poem that works magic with Malick’s somber portrayal of the losses and anguish of war.

In 1997 Zimmer became head of the music department at DreamWorks SKG. Of the music he has composed, Zimmer claims to be proudest of _A World Apart, Driving Miss Daisy_ and _Crimson Tide._

__—Jill Gillespie__

---

ZSIGMOND, Vilmos

Films as Cinematographer:

1957 _Hungarn in Flammen (Revolt in Hungary)_ (Erdelyi)—doc (co)
1963 _The Sadist (Profile of Terror)_ (James Landis); _Living between Two Worlds_ (Johnson)
1964 _What’s up Front_ (Wehling); _The Time Travelers_ (Melchior); _The Incredibly Strange Creatures Who Stopped Living and Became Crazy Mixed-Up Zombies?!_ (Steckler) (co)
1965 _Fat Fink (My Soul Runs Naked)_ (James Landis); _The Nasty Rabbit (Spies A-Go-Go)_ (James Landis); _Deadwood ‘76_ (James Landis); _Tales of a Salesman_ (Russell); _A Hot Summer Game_ (Bruner); _Psycho A-Go-Go!_ (Adamson—revised version, _The Fiend with the Electronic Brain_)
1966 _Road to Nashville_ (Zens)
1967 _Mondo Mod_ (Perry)—doc (co)
1968  The Name of the Game Is Kill! (The Female Trap) (Hellstrom); Jennie, Wife/Child (James Landis and Cohen)
1969  The Monitors (Shea); Hot Rod Action (McCabe); Five Bloody Graves (Gun Riders) (Adamson); Futz! (O’Horgan); The Picasso Summer (Bourguignon)
1970  Horror of the Blood Monsters (Vampire Men of the Lost Planet) (Adamson) (co)
1971  Red Sky at Morning (Goldstone); The Ski Bum (Clark); McCabe and Mrs. Miller (Altman); The Hired Hand (Fonda)
1972  Images (Altman); Deliverance (Boorman)
1973  The Long Goodbye (Altman); Scarecrow (Schatzberg); Cinderella Liberty (Rydell)
1974  The Sugarland Express (Spielberg); The Girl from Petrovka (Miller)
1976  Sweet Revenge (Schatzberg); Obsession (De Palma)
1977  Close Encounters of the Third Kind (Spielberg) (co)
1978  The Last Waltz (Scorsese) (co); The Rose (Rydell); The Deer Hunter (Cimino)
1979  Winter Kills (Richert)
1980  Heaven’s Gate (Cimino)
1981  Blow Out (De Palma)

1982  Jinxed (Siegel); The Border (Richardson) (co)
1983  Table for Five (Lieberman)
1984  The River (Rydell); No Small Affair (Schatzberg)
1985  Real Genius (Coolidge)
1987  The Witches of Eastwick (Miller)
1988  Journey to Spirit Island (L. Pal)
1989  Fat Man and Little Boy (Joffé)
1990  The Two Jakes (Nicholson); The Bonfire of the Vanities (De Palma)
1993  Sliver (Noyce)
1994  Maverick (R. Donner); Intersection (Rydell)
1995  The Crossing Guard (S. Penn); Assassins (R. Donner)
1996  The Ghost and the Darkness (Hopkins)
1998  Illegal Music (Zidel); Playing by Heart (Carroll)
1999  The Argument (Cammell)

Films as Director:

1992  The Long Shadow
Publications

By ZSIGMOND: articles—

Dialogue on Film (Beverly Hills, California), July 1974.
Dialogue on Film (Beverly Hills, California), October 1974.
Film Heritage (Dayton, Ohio), Spring 1977.
American Film (Washington, D.C.), June 1979.
On Heaven’s Gate in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), November 1980.
On Heaven’s Gate in Millimeter (New York), January 1981.
Films and Filming (London), September 1982.
In Masters of Light: Conversations with Contemporary Cinematographers, by Dennis Schauf and Larry Savato, Berkeley, California, 1984.
Filmmkulture (Budapest), vol. 25, no. 6, 1989.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), November 1989.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), April 1990.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), November 1990.
American Film (Washington, D.C.), November 1990.

On ZSIGMOND: articles—

American Cinematographer (Hollywood), May 1978.
American Cinematographer (Hollywood), May 1979.
Films and Filming (London), May 1980.
McCarthy, T., in Film Comment (New York), March/April 1984.
Patterson, Richard, in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), November 1984.
Lueker, Rob, “At the Master’s Feet,” in American Cinematographer (Hollywood), February 1996.

* * *

Arriving in the United States in 1956 after escaping from Hungary with fellow cameraman and sometime collaborator Laszlo Kovacs, Vilmos Zsigmond toiled in the low-budget exploitation field throughout the 1960s, and then emerged as a major director of photography in the 1970s and 1980s, working with the directors Steven Spielberg, Brian De Palma, Martin Scorcese, Michael Cimino, Jerry Schatzberg, John Boorman, Mark Rydell and, most often, Robert Altman. Like Kovacs, Zsigmond established himself with a few intriguing lower-case credits, making his debut—credited as William Zsigmond—as a cinematographer on The Sadist, a high-energy black-and-white psycho picture based on the incident that inspired Badlands. Zsigmond went on to work with the incredibly strange Ray Dennis Steckler on The Incredibly Strange Creatures Who Stopped Living and Became Crazy Mixed-Up Zombies!! which has moments so awful they could pass for surreal. After such oddities as the documentary Mondo Mod, the psychotic desert picture The Name of the Game Is Kill!, the improvisational science-fiction comedy The Monitors, and the off-Broadway adaption Futz!, Zsigmond fell in with Al Adamson—a poverty-stricken auteur who made Ray Dennis Steckler look talented—for Five Bloody Graves and Horror of the Blood Monsters, the former a horror Western narrated by Death, the latter a patchwork of tinted Filipino science-fiction footage with John Cassadine explaining the plot.

Something about the deserts of The Sadist, The Name of the Game Is Kill!, and Five Bloody Graves must have registered, for Zsigmond’s breakthrough from the blood monsters and psycho-a-go-go girls came with a series of Western or Western-flavored movies in 1970, commencing with James Goldstone’s coming-of-age drama set in New Mexico during World War II, Red Sky at Morning and taking in Peter Fonda’s rugged, ragged “acid Western” The Hired Hand. The most important of these films was Altman’s McCabe and Mrs. Miller, in which Zsigmond captured the magic of the muddly small town and caught Altman’s stranded characters in the uncharacteristic snowy wastes of the film’s western Canada setting. For Altman, Zsigmond then tackled the seductive but hollow post-Chandler Los Angeles of The Long Goodbye, which also includes a side-trip to a lushly corrupt Mexico; the pristine Scots autumn backdrop to Susannah York’s nervous breakdown in Images; and the teeming canvas of the over-populated but glowing A Wedding. Meanwhile, he also established relationships with Steven Spielberg, transferring from the Altmanesque road movieness of The Sugarland Express to the Oscar-winning lightshow of Close Encounters of the Third Kind; Jerry Schatzberg, also on the road in Scarecrow and homing in for the miscalculated Sweet Revenge and No Small Affair; Mark Rydell, from the grubby Cinderella Liberty through the showbiz sleaze of The Rose to the nouveau Western of The River; Brian De Palma, at his iciest and most intriguingly Hitchcock-cum-Antonioni-esque in Obsession and Blow Out (prompting Zsigmond to far more whirling effects than Spielberg’s aliens did); and Michael Cimino, stepping from the un-Altmanesque ethnic marriages and rat-trap horrors of The Deer Hunter to the expansive western crowds and massacres of Heaven’s Gate. That a career could encompass Five Bloody Graves and Heaven’s Gate is bizarre enough, but even stranger is the continuity between the cheap disaster and the super-produced disaster, both of which are marked by Zsigmond’s daring look. Daring, because it can sometimes seem pretty—pretty enough to win an Oscar—but more often gets accused of being muddy, fuzzy, foggy, and indistinct, even ugly. It could be argued, however, that Zsigmond’s contribution to the Western and the western-set road movie—including, besides the films cited above, Tony Richardson’s draggy The Border and John Boorman’s backwoods Deliverance—was crucial to the evolution, even the death, of the form in the 1970s and 1980s, imposing a countercultural hairiness on the straight-arrow Americanism of the genre. Certainly, as a Hungarian, Zsigmond has been involved in a succession of almost archetypal American movies—the Eastern European heritage touched... on only in The Deer Hunter and The Girl from Petrovka—that have taken him into the most prized American genre forms—horror, Western, private eye, family weepie (Table for Five), rock ‘n’ roll concert (The Last Waltz)—and even, in Winter Kills, near the White House. He has a sometimes-exercised gift for fantasy that dates back to the Incredibly Strange Creatures days and is undaunted by the special effects of Close Encounters or The Witches of Eastwick. He has been somewhat in eclipse in the late 1980s and 1990s, but he is well-established enough as a proficient craftsman as well as an unimpeachable artist, to still land the plum assignments. His penchant for being attached to famous disasters persists with The Bonfire of the Vanities, for which De Palma steered Zsigmond through a memorably redundant tour-de-force opening shot. He has turned out a few entirely anonymous but slick jobs (Sliver, Maverick, and Assassins) between ambitious oddments (Fat Man and Little Boy and The Crossing Guard). In the late 1990s, Zsigmond continued to turn in creditable efforts. The pleasant clarity of his images and lighting in Playing by Heart provide a warm and reassuring setting for the light melodrama and comedy of this updated woman’s picture. The Ghost and the Darkness called for a substantially different approach. This true story of man-eating African lions demanded just the combination of National Geographic photographic painting and expressionistic stylization that Zsigmond employs. As in an unfortunately large number of the projects he has worked on in his career, his cinematography is the most successfully conceived and executed element in an otherwise very ordinary and forgettable production.

—Kim Newman, updated by R. Barton Palmer

ZUKOR, Adolph

Producer. Nationality: Hungarian-American. Born: Riske, Hungary, 7 January 1873; emigrated to the United States, 1889. Family: Married Lottie Kaufman. Career: Furrier in Chicago; 1903—opened a string of penny arcades with partner Marcus Loew; 1905—treasurer of extensive Loew’s theatre chain; 1912—director of European productions; formed own production and distribution company, Famous Players; 1916—joined with the Jesse Lasky Feature Play Company; president; the company renamed Paramount; 1936—replaced by Barney Balaban; remained as chairman of the board until his death. Award: Special Academy Award, 1948. Died: In Los Angeles, California, 10 June 1976.

Films as Producer/Executive Producer:

1912 Queen Elizabeth (Desfontaines); The Count of Monte Cristo (Porter)
1913 A Good Little Devil (Porter); The Man from Mexico; Charlie Fadden; The Prisoner of Zenda (Porter)
1914 The Squaw Man (DeMille)
1915 Peer Gynt (Apfel); Zaza (Ford); The Cheat (DeMille); Carmen (DeMille); Madame Butterfly (Olcott)
1916 Miss George Washington (Dawley); Oliver Twist (Twist)
1917 Seventeen; Great Expectations (Vignola); Tom Sawyer (Taylor); A Modern Musketeer (Dwan); The Bluebird (Tourneur); Barbary Sheep (Tourneur)

1918 The Doll’s House (Tourneur); Uncle Tom’s Cabin (Dawley); Battling Jane (Clifton); Old Wives for New (DeMille); The Greatest Thing in Life (Griffith); Come on In 1919 My Cousin (José); String Beans (Schertzinger); Petrigrew’s Girl (Melford); The Knickerbocker Buckaroo (Parker); Valley of the Giants (Cruse); The Miracle Man (Tucker); 231/2 Hours Leave (King); The Admirable Crichton (Male and Female) (DeMille); The Misleading Widow (Roberson)
1920 Remodelling Her Husband; Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (Robertson); Humoresque (Borzage); Deception (Anna Bolesyn) (Lubitsch); Miss Lulu Bett (W. De Mille); Broadway Jones Der Silberkoenig (The Silver King)
1921 The Gilded Lily (Leonard); The Great Moment (Wood); The Affairs of Anatol (DeMille); Fool’s Paradise (DeMille)
1922 The Old Homestead (Cruze); The Sheik (Melford); Three Live Ghosts (Fitzmaurice); The Young Rajah (Rosen); Manslaughter (DeMille); Belladonna
1923 The Covered Wagon (Cruze); Why Worry? (Taylor); Safety Last (Taylor)
1924 Forbidden Paradise (Lubitsch); Peter Pan (Brenon); Mon-sieur Beaucaire (Olcott); Girl Shy (Newmeyer); Manhandled (Dwan); Wanderer of the Wasteland (Willat); Grass (Schdosaack); The Ten Commandments (DeMille); Hot Water (Newmeyer and Taylor); A Sainted Devil (Henabery)
1925 Madame Sans-Gáne (Perret); The Freshman (Newmeyer); Cobra (Henabery)
1926 Beau Geste (Brenon); The Kid Brother (Wilde); *Aloma of the South Seas"
1927 For Heaven's Sake (Taylor); Underworld (von Sternberg)

1928 The Last Command (von Sternberg); The Vanishing Race (Seitz); Gentlemen Prefer Blondes (St. Clair); Speedy (Wilde); Way of All Flesh (Fleming); Chang (Cooper); Gentlemen of the Press (Webb); Beau Sabreur (Waters); The Patriot (Lubitsch)

1929 College Days (Wood); The Wedding March (von Stromho); Innocents of Paris (Wallace); Wings (Wellman); The Cocoanuts (Florey and Santley); The Mysterious Dr. Fu Manchu (Lee); Legion of the Condemned (Wellman)

1930 Welcome Danger (Bruckman); Love Parade (Lubitsch); The Mighty (Cromwell); The Four Feathers (Mendes); The Vagabond King (Berger); The Virginian (Fleming); The Big Pond (Henley); Monte Carlo (Lubitsch); Morocco (von Sternberg); Playboy of Paris (Berger)

1931 The Royal Family of Broadway (Theatre Royal) (Cukor); Sarah and Son (Arzner); Feet First (Bruckman); The Texan (Cromwell); Dishonoured (von Sternberg); Fighting Caravans (Brower and Burton); City Streets (Mamoulian); Skippy (Taurog); Tarnished Lady (Cukor); Paramount on Parade (Arzner, Brower, Goulding, Heerman, Knopf, Lee, Lubitsch, Mendes, Schertzinger, Sutherland, and Tuttle); Anybody's Woman (Arzner); The Smiling Lieutenant (Lubitsch); Grumpy (Cukor and Gardner)

1932 Huckleberry Finn (Taurog); Secrets of a Secretary (Abbott); Tomorrow and Tomorrow (Wallace); Service for Ladies (Reserved for Ladies) (A. Korda); Once a Lady (McClintic); I Take This Woman (Gering and Vorkapich); Ladies of the Big House (Gering); Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (Mamoulian); Ladies' Man (Mendes); Devil and the Deep (Gering); Shanghai Express (von Sternberg); The Miracle Man (McLeod); Merrily We Go to Hell (Arzner); Dancers in the Dark (Burton); The Strange Case of Clara Dean (Gasnier and Marcin);

1933 One Hour with You (Cukor and Lubitsch); Forgotten Commandments (Gasnier and Schoor); Sinners in the Sun (Hall); The Man from Yesterday (Viertel); Blonde Venus (von Sternberg); Horse Feathers (McLeod); The Night of June 13 (Roberts); Love Me Tonight (Mamoulian); Trouble in Paradise (Lubitsch); Night after Night (Mamou); If I Had a Million (Lubitsch, Taurog, Roberts, McLeod, Cruze, Seiter and Humberstone); Madame Butterfly (Gering); Tonight Is Ours (Walker); She Done Him Wrong (Sherman); No Man of Her Own (Ruggles); The Sign of the Cross (DeMille); A Farewell to Arms (Vidor); Jennie Gerhardt (Gering); Alice in Wonderland (McLeod)

1934 Song of Songs (Mamoulian); This Day and Age (DeMille); One Sunday Afternoon (Roberts); The Way to Love (Taurog); Three Cornered Moon (Nugen); I'm No Angel (Ruggles); Tillie and Gus (Martin); White Woman (Walker); Duck Soup (McCary); Design for Living (Lubitsch); Six of a Kind (McCary); Four Frightened People (DeMille); Search for Beauty (Kenton); Bolero (Ruggles); The Scarlet Empress (von Sternberg); Death Takes a Holiday (Leisen); Murder at the Vanities (Leisen); Cleopatra (DeMille)

1935 Belle of the Nineties (McCary); Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch (Taurog); The Old-Fashioned Way (Beaudine); Crime without Passion (Hecht and MacArthur); Now and Forever (Hathaway); Limehouse Blues (East End Chant) (Hall); It's a Gift (McLeod); The Pursuit of Happiness (Hall); Behold My Wife (Leisen); Father Brown—Detective (Hamer); Here Is My Heart (Tuttle); The Lives of a Bengal Lancer (Hathaway); The Gilded Lily (Ruggles); The Milky Way (McCary); Wings in the Dark (Floody); Rumba (Gering); Ruggles of Red Gap (McCary); Mississippi (Sutherland); Four Hours to Kill (Leisen); The Devil Is a Woman (von Sternberg); The Scoundrel (Hecht and MacArthur); Goin' to Town (Hall)

Publications

By ZUKOR: book—

The Public Is Never Wrong, 1953.

On ZUKOR: books—

On ZUKOR: articles—

Motion Picture Herald, vol. 193, no. 1, 3 October 1953.

* * *

By 1920 Hollywood had risen to define the cinema in the United States as well as throughout the world. Stars like Charlie Chaplin and Mary Pickford were among the most famous people of their era. The American cinema dominated world filmmaking and distribution as no other popular cultural force had ever done. And no executive was more responsible for the creation of Hollywood than Adolph Zukor.

Hollywood commenced with the failure of the Motion Picture Patents Company Trust. A number of independent production companies rose to challenge the Trust, but quickly Adolph Zukor and his company, “Famous Players in Famous Plays,” led the way by transforming basic business practices.

He differentiated his company’s products. Gone were the days when film was sold by the foot; for Zukor each “playoff” became a unique product, heavily advertised by emphasizing popular stories and then developing movie stars to act in them. Zukor had his studio develop a system by which to regularly and efficiently manufacture feature-length films. Soon this method became known as the Hollywood system of production.

This transformation began in 1912 when Zukor and his partners began to produce feature films including The Count of Monte Cristo starring James O’Neill, father of the famous playwright, The Prisoner of Zenda starring James Hackett, Queen Elizabeth starring Sarah Berhardt, and Tess of the D'Urbervilles starring Minnie Maddern Fiske. These early stars were drawn from the stage, but soon Zukor realized that he would have to create his own stars. He reached the ultimate early on with Mary Pickford, a Canadian-born vaudeville performer. We can best see “Little Mary’s” rise to fame through her salary ascendance: $1000 a week in 1914, $2000 per week in 1915, $10,000 per week in 1916, and a million dollars a year in 1917. Zukor willingly anted up such fabulous amounts because he knew the vast audiences Pickford drew at the box office.

It was Adolph Zukor and his Famous Players’ Company which taught the world how to fully exploit the features of Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Gloria Swanson, Pauline Frederick, Blanche Sweet, and Norma and Constance Talmadge. He accomplished this through merger and acquisitions. In 1916 alone Zukor took over 12 smaller producers and formed Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Partner Jesse Lasky became his studio boss. By 1921 Zukor had turned Famous Players-Lasky into the largest film production company in the world.

Zukor learned how to squeeze theater owners because he alone could deliver the biggest stars in Hollywood. Zukor’s principle means of exploitation became “block booking.” That is if a theater owner wanted to show the films of Pickford, he or she had to take motion pictures with less well known, up-and-coming Famous Players-Lasky stars. In turn, Famous Players-Lasky used these guaranteed bookings to test and develop new stars.

Soon enough theater owners caught on, and formed their own “booking cooperatives.” In turn Zukor reacted, and in 1919 began to purchase theaters. He could not finance such a large set of takeovers simply with cash on hand and so became the first movie company to approach Wall Street bankers. Famous Players-Lasky borrowed $10 million through Wall Street’s Kuhn, Loeb and became the first motion picture company listed on the New York Stock Exchange. Zukor, who had come to the United States penniless 30 years earlier, had hit the big time.

Nothing stopped him. By the mid-point of 1921 he owned 300 theaters. Four years later, he merged his theaters with Balaban & Katz, the most important and innovative theater chain in the United States, and renamed the enterprise Paramount, which up to then had been the name of his distribution arm. By 1931 Paramount’s Publix theater circuit had become the largest in the world, double the size of its nearest competitor. Paramount Pictures produced many of the most popular films of the silent film era, from The Covered Wagon to The Ten Commandments, from Beau Geste to Wings. Zukor innovated a third major change in movie industry practice. It was not enough that the Hollywood companies simply control all the movie stars and studios. Their long-run economic security depended on the construction and maintenance of networks for national and international distribution. Once a feature film was made, the majority of its cost had been accumulated. It then cost relatively little to market it throughout the world. If somehow the producer could expand the territory to include greater and greater portions of the planet, the additional revenues overwhelmed any extra costs.

In 1914 Zukor began his assault on national distribution. W. W. Hodkinson had merged eleven regional distributors to create the Paramount distribution network. But Hodkinson had no steady supply of feature films, and thus sold out to Zukor. Quickly Zukor took over other national distributors and soon had a strangle hold on the marketplace for film distribution throughout the United States. Zukor then turned his attentions to world distribution. The First World War had curtailed distribution powers of rival European movie makers, and into that gap stepped Zukor. By the end of hostilities, he had Paramount distributing Famous Players-Lasky films around the world. During the 1920s, prior to the coming of sound, only the Soviet Union, with a Marxist government, Germany with its rise of nationalism and then fascism, and Japan, with a strong nationalist economy and film industry of its own, were able to keep Zukor and his films at bay.

It took something outside Zukor’s control to do him in — the Great Depression. Business declined, theaters were sold, and Paramount teetered on the brink of bankruptcy. By 1936 Barney Balaban had replaced Zukor atop the Paramount chain of command, but for 40 more years Zukor offered the company he had created his wise counsel. He was still regularly going into the office until only a few years before his death at age 103.

—Douglas Gomery
The editors wish to thank the copyright holders of the photographs included in this volume and the permissions managers of many book and magazine publishing companies for assisting us in securing reproduction rights. We are also grateful to the staffs of the Detroit Public Library, the Library of Congress, the University of Detroit Mercy Library, Wayne State University Purdy/Kresge Library Complex, and the University of Michigan Libraries for making their resources available to us. Every effort has been made to trace copyright, but if omissions have been made, please bring them to the attention of the editors. The following is a list of the copyright holders who have granted us permission to reproduce material in the International Dictionary of Films and Filmmakers as well as from where said resources were received:

Dede Allen. Dede Allen.

AP/Wide World Photos. Rick Baker; Barney Balaban; Lucien Ballard; Walter Bernstein; Mel Blanc; Margaret Booth; Charles Brackett; Albert R. Broccoli; Bill Conti; Sir Noel Coward; Louis De Rochemont; Jim Henson; David Alam Mamet; Alan Menken; Nick Park; Harold Pinter; Andre Previn; Sir Terence Rattigan; Ravi Shankar; Robert Emmet Sherwood; Vangelis.

Archive Photos, Inc. Hoagy Carmichael; Danny Elfman, photograph by Scott Harrison; Jerry Goldsmith, photograph by Nosta Alexander; Samuel Goldwyn; Arthur Honegger/Limot; Maurice Jarre, photograph by Frank Edwards; Sherry Lansing; Val Lewton; Anita Loos/American Stock; Henry Mancini; Louis B. Mayer; Ismail Merchant, photograph by Frank Capri; Ennio Morricone, photograph by Jean-marie De Craene/Reuters; Cole Porter; Sergei Prokofiev; Alain Robbe-Grillet; Sam Shepard; Max Steiner; Sir William Turner Walton; Franz Waxman; John Williams, photograph by David Strick.

Jerry Bauer. Marquerite Duras.

CORBIS. Ken Adam; Malcolm Arnold; Burt Bacharach/UPI; Michael Ballhaus; Travis Banton; Richard Rodney Bennett/Hulton-Deutsch Collection; Lajos Biro; Enos Edward Canutt; Jean-Claude Carriere; Ernest Dickerson, photograph by Jim Spellman; Hanns Eisler; Julius and Philip Epstein; Leon Gaumont; William Goldman; Frances Goodrich and Albert Hackett; Dave Grusin; Tony Havelock-Allan; Sidney Cote Howard; Chuck Jones; Janusz Kaminski; Marcus Loew/Bettmann; Herman Mankiewicz; Winsor McCay/Bettmann-UPI; Johnny Mercer; Jerry Wald.

Film Music Associates. Angelo Badalamenti, photograph by L. Wong. Copyright © 1990 Capital Cities/ABC, Inc.

All remaining images were provided courtesy of the Kobal Collection.
NOTES ON ADVISERS AND CONTRIBUTORS

BERG, Charles Ramírez. Essayist. Instructor in film, University of Texas, Austin. Essays: Alcoriza; Almendros; Goldman; Towne.

BERGAN, Ronald. Adviser. Regular contributor, The Guardian (London); consultant and writer for several TV documentaries; lectured on literature, theatre, and film during ten years in France; author of numerous books on the cinema, including biographies of the Coen Brothers, Sergei Eisenstein, Jean Renoir, Anthony Perkins, and Dustin Hoffman, as well as The United Artists Story and The Great Theatres of London.

Brito, Rui Santana. Adviser. Film historian, Cinemateca Portuguesa, Lisbon.

COUSINS, R. F. Essayist. Senior lecturer in French studies, University of Birmingham, England. Author of Zola’s Thérèse Raquin, 1991; and contributor to University Vision, Literature/Film Quarterly, Francophonie, and Excavatio. Formerly executive member of British Universities Film and Video Council. Forthcoming books include, Zola and the Cinema and Introduction to French Film Studies. Essays: Alekan; Aurenche and Bost; Coutard; D’Eaubonne; Décaë; Fradelat; Jaubert; Meerson; Mnouchkine; Nuytten; Rappeneau; Renoir; Spak; Trauner.

CROWDUS, Gary. Adviser. Founder and editor-in-chief, Cineaste magazine; editor of A Political Companion to American Film.

DASSANOWSKY, Robert von. Adviser and essayist. Associate professor of languages and cultures, director of film studies, and head of German studies, University of Colorado, Colorado Springs; vice president, Austrian American Film Association; actor, television writer and independent film producer; author of *Phantom ...

EDelman, Rob. Essayist. Author of Great Baseball Films, 1994; and Baseball on the Web, 1998. Co-author of Angela Lansbury: A Life on Stage and Screen, 1996; The John Travolta Scrapbook, 1997; and Meet the Mertzes, 1999. Contributing editor of Leonard Maltin’s Movie & Video Guide; Leonard Maltin’s Movie Encyclopedia; and Leonard Maltin’s Family Film Guide. Director of programming of Home Film Festival. Contributor to The Political Companion to American Film; Women Filmmakers & Their Films; Total Baseball; The Whole Film Sourcebook. Film critic/commentator, WAMC (Northeast) Public Radio. Lecturer, University at Albany. Former film critic/columnist, New Haven Register and Gazette Newspapers. Former adjunct instructor, The School of Visual Arts, Iona College, Sacred Heart University. Essays: Almendros; Ballhaus; Bass; E. Bernstein; N. Brown; Burel; Carrière; Conti; Disney; Hunter; Jarrico; Jhabvala; Q. Jones; Lansing; Loquasto; Mancini; Menges; Miyagawa; Mohr; Müller; Nykvist; Puško; Sargent; Schoonmaker; Semprun; Storaro; Vierny.

ErsKine, Thomas L. Essayist. Professor of English, Salisbury State University, Maryland. Founder, Literature/Film Quarterly. Formerly chairman, film division of the Modern Language Association. Essays: Bitzer; Krasker; Lassally; Ponti.

Faller, Greg S. Essayist. Professor, Department of Electronic Media & Film, Towson University, Towson, Maryland, since 1986; Assistant/associate editor of The International Dictionary of Films & Filmmakers, first edition, vols. 3, 4, and 5, and Journal of Film & Video, 1985–87; adviser, The International Dictionary of Films & Filmmakers, second and third editions. Essays: D. Allen; Baker; Carré; Edouart; Guillelmet; Herlth; Jenkins; Magnusson; Schoonmaker; Tsuburaya.

FarNsworTH, Rodney. Essayist. Associate professor of comparative studies, Indiana University-Purdue University, Fort Wayne. Has published in numerous international scholarly publications including, most recently, Literature/Film Quarterly. Essays: Cooper; Cortez; Daniels; Garmes; Jarre; A. Miller; Nichols; Rosher; Shamroy; Vangelis.

FERRARA, Patricia. Essayist. Member of the faculty, Georgia State University, Atlanta; contributor to New Orleans Review. Essays: Fischer; Nykvist; Reville.

FLYNN, Peter. Essayist. Freelance writer. Essays: Edens; Kahn; Rennahan; Spencer.

FONSECA, M. S. Essayist. Researcher, Programming Department, Cinemateca Portuguesa, Lisbon, since 1981. Film critic for Expreso newspaper, Lisbon. Author or coauthor of Cinema Americano anos 60/70, 1981; Panorama do Cinema Dinamarquês, 1983; Helma Sanders, 1984; Michelangelo Antonioni, 1985; and Cinema Novo Português, 1985. Essays: Branco; de Almeida; Edeson; Storaro; Sylbert.

GOMERY, Douglas. Adviser and essayist. Professor of media history, University of Maryland; author of ten books including Media in America, 1998; and Shared Pleasures: A History of Movie Presentation in the United States, 1992. Essays: Alonzo; Ballard; Berman; Blanke; Booth; Cahn; Deutsch; Fields; Fox; Haller; Carl Laemmle, Sr. and Carl Laemmle, Jr.; Lang; Levine; Maté; L. Mayer; McCord; Reisch; Roach; Schary; Joseph and Nicholas Schenck; Selznick; Sherwood; J. Smith; Spiegel; Stark; Stradling; Stromberg; Thalberg; Trumbull; Vajda; Veiller; Wallis; Warner; F. Young; Zanuck; Zukor.

GUSTAINIS, Justin. Essayist. Professor of communication at Plattsburgh State University, Plattsburgh, New York. Essays: Goldman; Goldsmith; Legrand.

HALAS, John. Essayist. See entry on Halas and Batchelor. Essays: Bozzetto; Dinov; Driessen; Grimault; Havelock-Allan; Ivanov-Vano; V. Korda; Norstein; Popescu-Gopo.

HELDRETH, Leonard G. Essayist. Professor of English, Northern Michigan University, Marquette, since 1970. Head of film and TV.

HESS, Mary. Essayist. Film reviewer, Magill’s Cinema Annual and 6Degrees magazine; Ph.D. student, American History, Michigan State University; lecturer, State University of New York, Geneseo; teaches courses on film and history; frequent contributor, Rochester Magazine. Essays: Biziou; Dawson.

IORDANOVA, Dina. Essayist. Contributing editor, BFI’s Companion to Eastern European and Russian Cinema; works in the field of Balkan cinema and transnational film. Essays: Mindadze; Preisner; Urusevskii.

KEMP, Philip. Adviser and essayist. London-based freelance reviewer and film historian; contributor to Sight and Sound, Variety, and Film Comment; author of Lethal Innocence: The Cinema of Alexander Mackendrick, 1991; and of a forthcoming biography of Michael Balcon. Essays: Alton; Balcon; Bass; Carreras; Carrière; T. Clarke; Daring; Fischinger; Godfrey; Henson; Honegger; Ibert; A. Korda; Lehman; Mamet; Merchant; Milhaud; Park; Prévost; Prokofiev; Shostakovich; Starewicz; Thomson; Vorkapich; Wilcox; R. Williams.

KINSEY, Tammy. Essayist. Assistant professor of film, University of Toledo, Ohio, since 1997; made her first film at the age of eight; M.F.A. in Filmmaking, Virginia Commonwealth University, 1996. Essays: Kaminski; Rousselot.

LAFFERTY, William. Essayist. Associate professor of theatre arts, Wright State University, Dayton, Ohio, since 1981. Essays: de Rochemont; Shearer.

LARSEN, Susan K. Adviser. Assistant professor of Russian literature, University of California, San Diego; author of Reading and Writing Girlhood in Late Imperial Russia (forthcoming) and many articles on Russian film and popular culture; former chair of the Working Group on Cinema and Television in Eastern Europe and the Former Soviet Union.

LEE, Edith C. Essayist. Staff member, Synthesis Concepts, Chicago. Editor, META Magazine. Worked in video division, Columbia Pictures, 1981–82. Essays: Adam; Adrian; Ames; Andrejew; Banton; Day; Dillon; Donati; Dreier; Gibbons; Horner; LeMaire; Orry-Kelly; Plunkett; Rose; Sharaff; Trumbo.

LEV, Peter. Essayist. Assistant professor of mass communication, Towson State University, Baltimore, since 1983. Author of Claude Lelouch, Film Director, 1983. Essays: Gégauff; Lai.

MARTIN, Floyd W. Essayist. Professor of art history, University of Arkansas, Little Rock, since 1982. Essays: Beaton; K. Brown; Gherardi; Grot; Menzies; Whitlock.

MILICIA, Joseph. Essayist. Professor of English, University of Wisconsin, Sheboygan; writes about film and literature for such periodicals as Multicultural Review and The New York Review of Science Fiction. Essays: Badalamenti; Burwell; Dickerson; Flaiiano and Pinelli; Herrmann; Steiner.

NASTA, Dominique. Essayist. Assistant professor, Department of Film Studies, Université Libre de Bruxelles, Belgium, since 1990. Author of Moaning in Film: Relevant Structures in Soundtrack and Narrative; and of articles on film music, melodrama, Michelangelo Antonioni, André Delvaux, Andrei Tarkovsky, and Jaco Van Dormael. Editor of Jacques Ledoux issue of Revue Beige du Cinéma, 1995. Essays: Age and Scarpelli; Croquet.

NESS, Richard R. Essayist. Freelance writer. Essays: Donaggio; Goldsmith; Q. Jones; Legrand; Rosenman; Rosza; Theodoraakis.

NEWMAN, Kim. Essayist. Freelance writer and broadcaster. Author of Nightmare Movies, 1988; and Wild West Movies, 1990. Contributor to Sight and Sound, Empire, New Musical Express, and other periodicals. Also a fiction writer. Essays: Berlin; Blanc; Cardiff; Golan and Globus; Kovacs; Savin; Zsigmond.

OBALIL, Linda. Essayist. Assistant, Special Effects Unit, Dreamscape, Bruce Cohn Curtis Productions/Bella Productions, since 1983. Essays: Averys; Cohl; C. Jones; Pal.

O’BRIEN, Daniel. Essayist. Contributor to The Hutchinson Encyclopedia and Dark Side magazine; publications include Robert Altman: Hollywood Survivor, 1995; Clint Eastwood: Film Maker, 1996; and The Frank Sinatra Film Guide, 1998. Essays: Biddle; Chailis; Muren; O’Brien; Southern; Wanger; The Westmore Family.

O’NEILL, Carrie. Essayist. Freelance writer and editor. Assistant, Danielewski Professional Writers/Actors/Directors Workshops, 1982–83; graduate instructor, Department of Theatre, Speech, and Cinema, Brigham Young University, 1986–88; tutorial instructor, Department of Theatre Studies, University of New South Wales, 1988–89; dramaturg, Australia’s National Institute for Dramatic Art, 1989–90; assistant professor of English composition and literature, Arkansas State University, 1990–95; assistant to creative director, Righel, Inc., 1995–96. Author of “‘The Translation to Stage and Screen of an Original Script,’” Forbidden Colors, and “Analysis of the Processes Involved in Workingshopping a Text for Two Unique Media’”; “‘The Australian Male as Myth: A Subject of the Subject of Masculinity in the Contemporary Drama of Australia.’” Productions include, Games Played Darkly, 1989; Forbidden Colors, 1988; Confederate Air Force, 1987; and Half in Love with Easeful Death, 1983. Essays: Enei; Puttnam; Watkin.

OPĚLA, Vladimir. Essayist. Film historian, Czechoslovakian Film Archives, Prague. Essays: Brděčka; Trnka; Zeman.

PALMER, R. Barton. Essayist. Calhoun Lemon Professor of Literature and Director of the South Carolina Film Institute, Clemson University; books include Hollywood’s Dark Cinema, Perspectives on Film Noir, and Joseph Mankiewicz: A Bibliographical and Critical Study. Essays: Balaban; Barker; Broccoli; Esztherhas; Hamlish; Mercer; Merchant; Murch; Pereira; Polito; Schifrin; Schlesinger; Sullivan; Swerling; Warm; Willingham; R. Zanuck; Zsigmond.

PETLEY, Julian. Adviser and essayist. Lecturer in communications, Brunel University. Contributor to Index on Censorship, Vertigo, New Statesman and Society. Essays: Guerra; Hall; Haskin; Hoffmann; Menges; Solinas; Struss.

PILLING, Jayne. Adviser. Animation festival director, British Film Institute.

POLAN, Dana. Adviser. Professor of critical studies, School of Cinema-TV, University of Southern California. Author of Pulp Fiction (BFI Modern Classics); In a Lonely Place (BFI Film Classics); two other books, and numerous essays on film and cultural studies; former president of the Society for Cinema Studies.

RICHARDS, Allen Grant. Essayist. Freelance writer. Essays: Lanci; Littleton; Parrish;Ralston; Walas.

ROUTLEDGE, Chris. Essayist. Freelance writer and lecturer in literature and film; published essays on detective fiction, popular culture, and poetics; co-editor of Mystery in Children’s Literature (2001). Essays: Adam; Bryan; Bumstead; Hall; Hambling; Kästner; Kovacs; Kureishi; Lathrop; Marshall; McAlpine; Menken; Morricone; Neame; Seale.

SCHAEFER, Eric. Essayist. Film critic. Essays: D’Agostino; Guffey; Musuraca; Paxton; Pierce; Polglase.

SHARMAN, Leslie Felperin. Essayist. Doctoral candidate in animation, University of Kent at Canterbury. Freelance writer; and lecturer, Goldsmiths College, University of London. Contributor to Screen and Sight and Sound. Essays: Bray; Lenica; McLaren; Messmer; Svankmajer.

SMALL, Edward S. Essayist. Associate professor of communication, and chairman of the Interdisciplinary Program in Film Studies, University of Missouri, Columbia, since 1983. Essays: Kuri; Vinton.

TABERY, Karel. Essayist. Film researcher, archivist, and historian, France, Czech Republic. Historian/archivist, Czechoslovakian Film Archives, Prague, 1974–82; Centre National de la Cinématographie, Paris, 1991–92; and National Film Archive, Prague, 1993–96. Essays: Alekan; Colpi; Rappeneau.

TSIANTIS, Lee. Essayist. Former lecturer in film, now publicist for 20th Century-Fox, Atlanta, Georgia. Essays: North; Wagner.

URGOŠÍKOVÁ, B. Adviser and essayist. Film historian, Czechoslovakian Film Archives, Prague. Author (in Czech) of Famous Era of the Swedish Film, 1970; SF—From Méliès to Tarkovsky, 1974; Remakes, 1981; and Science Fiction Films, 1983. Essays: Ścibor-Rylski; Stawiński.

VALENTINE, Fiona. Essayist. Member of faculty, School of Speech, Northwestern University, Evanston, Illinois. Essays: Barry; Head; Unsworth; Watkin.

WARD, Renée. Essayist. Freelance writer. Essays: Boyle; Ellenshaw; Louis; Matras; Sarde; Wakhévitch.

YECK, Joanne L. Essayist. Lecturer on humanities and film, Art Center College of Design, Pasadena, California, since 1983. Essays: Diamond; Julius and Philip Epstein; Howard; Porter; Schnee; Wald.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>American</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Adrian</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dede Allen</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jay Presson Allen</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John A. Alonzo</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Preston Ames</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Joseph H. August</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tex Avery</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Joseph Barbera</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Burt Bacharach</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Angelo Badalamenti</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rick Baker</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barney Balaban</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lucien Ballard</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Travis Banton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>George S. Barnes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ronald Bass</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saul Bass</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Irving Berlin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pandro S. Berman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elmer Bernstein</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Walter Bernstein</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Joseph Biroc</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Billy Bitzer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mel Blanc</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Margaret Booth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robert Boyle</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charles Brackett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Leigh Brackett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>J. R. Bray</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robert Breer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Albert R. Broccoli</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Karl Brown</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nacio Herb Brown</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Clyde Bruckman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sidney Buchman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wilfred Buckland</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Henry Bumstead</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ben Burtt</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carter Burwell</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sammy Cahn</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Yakima Canutt</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hoagy Carmichael</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Borden Chase</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bob Clampett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charles G. Clarke</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William H. Clothier</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Harry Cohn</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jack Cole</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Betty Comden</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bill Conti</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Merian C. Cooper</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Stanley Cortez</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Edward Cronjager</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Floyd Crosby</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mason Daring</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Richard Day</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Louis De Rochemont</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Adolph Deutsch</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I. A. L. Diamond</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ernest Dickerson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Walt Disney</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>George Duning</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Linwood Dunn</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Philip Dunne</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Dykstra</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roger Edens</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Arthur Edeson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Richard Edlund</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Facciott Edouart</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Danny Elfman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Julius Epstein</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Philip Epstein</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Joe Eszterhas</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Verna Fields</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dave Fleischer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Max Fleischer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carl Foreman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Fox</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William A. Fraker</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Arthur Freed</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hugo Friedhofer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jules Furthman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lee Garces</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cedric Gibbons</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Arnold Gillespie</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bert Glennon</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Goldman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jerry Goldsmith</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Samuel Goldwyn</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frances Goodrich</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Stephen Goossen</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Adolph Green</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dave Grusin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Burnett Guffey</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Albert Hackett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Conrad Hall</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ernest Haller</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marvin Hamlisch</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Hanna</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Russell Harlan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ray Harryhausen</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Byron Haskin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Michael Hayes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Edith Head</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ben Hecht</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Buck Henry</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jim Henson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bernard Herrmann</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Winton C. Hoch</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Samuel Hoffenstein</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Hornbeck</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Harry Horner</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Houseman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sidney Howard</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>James Wong Howe</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Hubley</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ross Hunter</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas H. Ince</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Irene</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ub Iwerks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paul Jarrico</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dorothy Jeakins</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>George Jenkins</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Talbot Jennings</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ruth Prawer Jhabvala</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nunnally Johnson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chuck Jones</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Quincy Jones</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>George Justin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Garson Kanin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Michael Kidd</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Howard W. Koch</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Erich Wolfgang Korngold</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Norman Krasna</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Milton Krasner</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Joseph La Shelle</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carl Laemmle, Jr.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carl Laemmle, Sr.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charles B. Lang</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sherry Lansing</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Walter Lantz</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ring Lardner, Jr.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jesse L. Lasky</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Philip H. Lathrop</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charles Lederer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charles Lemaire</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boris Leven</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sonya Levien</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Joseph E. Levine</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Val Lewton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carol Littleton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marcus Loew</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anita Loos</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Santo Loquasto</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charles MacArthur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kenneth MacGowan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jeanie MacPherson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ben Maddow</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Daniel Mainwaring</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>David Mamet</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Henry Mancini</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Johnny Mandel</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Daniel Mandell</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Herman Mankiewicz</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frances Marion</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frank Marshall</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>June Mathis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Louis B. Mayer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Winsor McCay</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ted McDowell</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robert McKimson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Cameron Menzies</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Johnny Mercer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Otto Messmer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Russell Metty</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Arthur C. Miller</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Seton I. Miller</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Virgil Miller</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Walter Mirisch</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Hal Mohr
Walter Murch
Dennis Muren
Alfred Newman
Thomas Newman
Dudley Nichols
Jack Nitzsche
Alex North
Frank S. Nugent
Willis H. O’Brien
Sam O’Steen
Orry-Kelly
George Pal
Hermes Pan
Claire Parker
Robert Parrish
Joe Pasternak
John Paxton
Hal Pereira
Jack P. Pierce
Walter Plunkett
Van Nest Polglase
Sol Polito
Cole Porter
André Previn
David Rakson
Samson Raphaelson
Ray Rennahan
William H. Reynolds
Robert Riskin
Hal Roach
Helen Rose
Ralph Rosenblum
Leonard Rosenman
Hal Rosson
Miklos Rozsa
Joseph Ruttenberg
John Monk Saunders
Tom Savini
James Schamus
Dore Schary
Joseph Schenck
Nicholas Schenck
Leon Schlesinger
Charles Schnee
Thelma Schoonmaker
Stephen Schwartz
John F. Seitz
William N. Selig
David O. Selznick
Leon Shamroy
Irene Sharaff
Sam Shepard
Robert E. Sherwood
Curt Siodmak
Dick Smith
Jack Martin Smith
Terry Southern
Dorothy Spencer
Carl Stalling
Ray Stark
Donald Ogden Stewart
Herbert Stothart
Harry Stradling
Hunt Stromberg
Karl Struss
C. Gardner Sullivan
Robert L. Surtees
Jo Swerling
Richard Sylbert
Daniel Taradash
Dean Tavoularis
Paul Terry
Irving G. Thalberg
Virgil Thomson
Dimitri Tiomkin
Gregg Toland
John Toll
Robert Towne
Lamar Trotti
Dalton Trumbo
Douglas Trumbull
Christine Vachon
James Van Heusen
Anthony Veiller
Will Vinton
Patrizia von Brandenstein
Chris Walas
Jerry Wald
Joseph B. Walker
Hal B. Wallis
Walter Wanger
Jack L. Warner
Lew Wasserman
Haskell Wexler
Lyle Wheeler
John Williams
Calder Willingham
Gordon Willis
Michael Wilson
Irwin Winkler
Stan Winston
Victor Young
Darryl F. Zanuck
Richard D. Zanuck
Argentinian
Lalo Schifrin
Belgian
Ghislain Cloquet
Charles Spaak
British
Ken Adam
Richard Addinsell
John Alcott
William Alwyn
Malcolm Arnold
Michael Balcon
William George Barker
John Barry
James Basevi
Joy Batchelor
Cecil Beaton
Richard Rodney Bennett
James Bernard
Adrian Biddle
Peter Bizou
John Bryan
Jack Cardiff
James Carreras
Christopher Challis
T. E. B. Clarke
Noël Coward
Beatrice Dawson
Basil Dean
Carmen Dillon
Peter Ellenshaw
Gerry Fisher
Freddie Francis
Bob Godfrey
John Halas
Gerry Hambling
Joan Harrison
Anthony Havelock-Allan
Otto Heller
Alexander Korda
Vincent Korda
Hanif Kureishi
Muir Mathieson
Chris Menges
Oswald Morris
Ronald Neame
Nick Park
Clare Peploe
Harold Pinter
David Puttnam
J. Arthur Rank
Terence Rattigan
Lotte Reiniger
Alma Reville
Charles Rosher
R. C. Sherriff
Douglas Slocombe
Geoffrey Unsworth
Alex Vetchinsky
William Walton
David Watkin
Albert Whitlock
Australian
Russell Boyd
Robert Krasker
Donald McAlpine
John Seale
Austrian
Alexander Kolowrat-Krakowsky
Carl Mayer
Walter Reisch
Sam Spiegel
Max Steiner
Argentinian
Lalo Schifrin
Belgian
Ghislain Cloquet
Charles Spaak
British
Ken Adam
Richard Addinsell
John Alcott
William Alwyn
Malcolm Arnold
Michael Balcon
William George Barker
John Barry
James Basevi
Joy Batchelor
Cecil Beaton
Richard Rodney Bennett
James Bernard
Adrian Biddle
Peter Bizou
John Bryan
Jack Cardiff
James Carreras
Christopher Challis
T. E. B. Clarke
Noël Coward
Beatrice Dawson
Basil Dean
Carmen Dillon
Peter Ellenshaw
Gerry Fisher
Freddie Francis
Bob Godfrey
John Halas
Gerry Hambling
Joan Harrison
Anthony Havelock-Allan
Otto Heller
Alexander Korda
Vincent Korda
Hanif Kureishi
Muir Mathieson
Chris Menges
Oswald Morris
Ronald Neame
Nick Park
Clare Peploe
Harold Pinter
David Puttnam
J. Arthur Rank
Terence Rattigan
Lotte Reiniger
Alma Reville
Charles Rosher
R. C. Sherriff
Douglas Slocombe
Geoffrey Unsworth
Alex Vetchinsky
William Walton
David Watkin
Albert Whitlock
Australian
Russell Boyd
Robert Krasker
Donald McAlpine
John Seale
Austrian
Alexander Kolowrat-Krakowsky
Carl Mayer
Walter Reisch
Sam Spiegel
Max Steiner
Argentinian
Lalo Schifrin
Belgian
Ghislain Cloquet
Charles Spaak
British
Ken Adam
Richard Addinsell
John Alcott
William Alwyn
Malcolm Arnold
Michael Balcon
William George Barker
John Barry
James Basevi
Joy Batchelor
Cecil Beaton
Richard Rodney Bennett
James Bernard
Adrian Biddle
Peter Bizou
John Bryan
Jack Cardiff
James Carreras
Christopher Challis
T. E. B. Clarke
Noël Coward
Beatrice Dawson
Basil Dean
Carmen Dillon
Peter Ellenshaw
Gerry Fisher
Freddie Francis
Bob Godfrey
John Halas
Gerry Hambling
Joan Harrison
Anthony Havelock-Allan
Otto Heller
Alexander Korda
Vincent Korda
Hanif Kureishi
Muir Mathieson
Chris Menges
Oswald Morris
Ronald Neame
Nick Park
Clare Peploe
Harold Pinter
David Puttnam
J. Arthur Rank
Terence Rattigan
Lotte Reiniger
Alma Reville
Charles Rosher
R. C. Sherriff
Douglas Slocombe
Geoffrey Unsworth
Alex Vetchinsky
William Walton
David Watkin
Albert Whitlock
Herbert Wilcox
Freddie Young

Bulgarian
Todor Dinov

Canadian
Stephen Bosustow
George Dunning
Douglas Shearer
Richard Williams

Cuban
Jorge Herrera

Czech
Jiří Brdečka
Miroslav Ondříček
Franz Planer
Jan Stallich
Jan Švankmajer
Jiří Trnka
Karel Zeman

Dutch
Paul Driessen
Robby Müller
Helen Van Dongen

Egyptian
Raymond Hakim
Robert Hakim

French
Henri Alekan
Jean Aurencche
Georges Auric
Pierre Bost
Pierre Braunberger
Léonce-Henry Burel
Ben Carré
Jean-Claude Carrière
Emile Cohl
Raoul Coutard
Georges De Beauregard
Henri Decaë
Jean D’Eaubonne
Marguerite Duras
Bernard Evein
Marcel Fradetal
Léon Gaumont
Paul Gégauff
Paul Grimault
Agnès Guillelmet
Jacques Ibert
Maurice Jarre
Maurice Jaubert
Henri Jeanson
Joseph Kosma
Francis Lai
Michel Legrand
Jan Lenica
Pierre Lhomme
Jean Louis
Christian Matras
Darius Milhaud
Bruno Nuytten
Charles Pathé
Georges Périnal
Carlo Ponti
Jacques Prévert
Jean Rabier
Jean-Paul Rappeneau
Claude Renoir
Alain Robbe-Grillet
Philippe Sarde
Jacques Saulnier
Alexandre Trauner
Sacha Vierny
Georges Wakhévitch

German
Michael Ballhaus
Henry Blanke
Curt Courant
Hans Dreier
Hanns Eisler
Oskar Fischinger
Karl Freund
Hein Heckroth
Robert Herlth
Carl Hoffmann
Otto Hunte
Alfred Junge
Erich Kästner
Hanns Kräly
Walter Lassally
Oskar Messter
Erich Pommer
Walter Röhrig
Thea von Harbou
Fritz Arno Wagner
Hermann Warm
Hans Zimmer

Greek
Mikis Theodorakis
Vangelis

Hungarian
John Alton
Joy Batchelor
Lajos Biro
Yevgeni Enei
John Halas
Ernest Laszlo
Rudolph Maté
Ernő Metzner
Ernest Vajda
Vilmos Zsigmond

Indian
K. A. Abbas
Anil Biswas
S. D. Burman
Bansi Chandragupta
Dulal Dutta
Ismail Merchant
Subrata Mitra
Govind Nihalani
Ravi Shankar

Israeli
Yoram Globus
Menahem Golan

Italian
Age
G. R. Aldo
Sergio Amidei
Bruno Bozzetto
Suso Cecchi D’Amico
Francesco Cristaldi
Dino De Laurentiis
Tonino Delli Colli
Gianni Di Venanzo
Pino Donaggio
Ennio Flaiano
Tony Gaudio
Piero Gherardi
Tonino Guerra
Giuseppe Lanci
Ennio Morricone
Nicholas Musuraca
Tullio Pinelli
Nino Rota
Giuseppe Rotunno
Scarpelli
Mario Serandrei
Francesco Solinas
Vittorio Storaro
Cesare Zavattini

Japanese
Fumio Hayasaka
Yoji Kuri
Kazuo Miyagawa
Toshio Muraki
Toru Takemitsu
Jusho Toda
Eiji Tsuburaya
Yoshikata Yoda

Mexican
Luis Alcoriza
Gabriel Figueroa

New Zealander
Len Lye

Polish
Janusz Kaminski
Bronislaw Kaper
Boris Kaufman
Aleksander Ścibor-Rylski
Ladislav Starewicz
Jerzy Stefan Stawiński
Franz Waxman
Portuguese
    Paulo Branco
    Acácio De Almeida

Romanian
    Ion Popescu-Gopo

Russian
    Alexander Alexeieff
    André Andrejew
    Georges Annenkov
    Léon Barsacq
    Anatole De Grunwald
    Anatoli Golovnya
    Ivan Ivanov-Vano
    Gus Kahn
    Eugène Lourié
    Lazare Meerson
    Andrei Moskvin
    Yuri Norstein
    Sergei Prokofiev
    Alexander Ptushko
    Dmitri Shostakovich
    Edward Tisse
    Sergei Urusevsky

Russian and French
    Alexandre Mnouchkine

Russian-Georgian
    Aleksandr Mindadze

Scottish
    Norman McLaren

Spanish
    Nestor Almendros
    Jorge Semprun

Swedish
    Gunnar Fischer
    Julius Jaenzon
    P. A. Lundgren
    Charles Magnusson
    Sven Nykvist

Swiss
    Henri Colpi
    Arthur Honegger

Yugoslav
    Slavko Vorkapich
    Dušan Vukotić